POETRY.

NEARER, MY GOD, TO THEE.

I LONG for a nearer view of my God.
Is it sinful for me thus to say,
That I long for a nearer view of my Lord,
Yes, a nearer view for to-day?
O! if from mine eyes the scales would fall,
Which render my sight now so dim,
I know I should walk with a firmer step,
For then I'd be nearer to him.

I WONDER WHY.

WHY doth my life from year to year
A useless, aimless thing appear?
Why do my daily actions prove
The lack of faith, the lack of love?
And still for graces of the mind
The more I seek the less I find;
And often to myself I sigh,
I wonder why? I wonder why?
The friends I love, the true and brave,
Are called to share an early grave;
And those the dearest to my heart,
Who live, will soon, alas! depart.
Why am I spared amid the strife?
What is the object of my life?
Why live I on, while others die?
I cannot tell; I wonder why.

And yet there must some reason be
Why life was granted unto me.
When I my duty can fulfill
With ready hand and yielding will;
When I the daily cross can bear,
And learn the easy yoke to wear;
When I can thus myself deny,
I shall not need to wonder why.

GRACE.

'Tis grace that first the work begins
To quicken sinners dead in sins;
By grace they still hold on their way,
Nor can they from its power stray.
By grace they live, and move, and talk;
'Tis grace inspires a gospel walk;
By grace affections rise above;
By grace they pray, and hope, and love.
When grace is not in exercise
What wild, tempestuous scenes arise!
Self-will, self-love, rebellious pride,
Combine to turn their steps aside.
Self-righteousness will soon step in;
They feel no lively dread of sin;
To heavenly things they cannot rise,
But earthward only turn their eyes.
Thou into exercise must bring
Each grace, sweet Spirit of heaven's King;
By him to all things we attain,
And they lead up to him again.
O for a soul-refreshing shower,
Sweet Spirit, of thy heavenly power!
That from me faith, and hope, and love,
May rise to him enthroned above.

I am a barren wilderness
Without thy sweet, enlivening grace!
O may I, every day and hour,
Experience its transporting power!

CORRESPONDENCE.

SOUTHAMPTON, Pa., Dec. 8, 1892.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—
Brother Vail has sent several letters of late that were very good for publication in the SIGNS, but has been very careful that his own sentences should be very short and few. Now I will send one written by him, and if he does not like it, I know that a good many others will. I am not afraid that it will keep him from writing more letters for fear they will be published, for he will not write any at all unless compelled to; or rather, as he cannot help it, no credit is due to him.

As I read his clear and strong description of his feelings of self-loathing I could not help asking myself, "Who is this who sees this badness, this abominable vileness, and hates it?" How clearly I could see in every word of brother Marvin's letter that there must be a pure and holy principle within him, a divine life, or how could he recognize this wretched sinfulness of his carnal nature, and hate it? Evil cannot hate evil. It seems so clear when I read such things from another, or hear them spoken, that it must be a good man who thus sincerely hates and denounces a bad man. Both these men are in one person, but they are clearly distinguished from each other by their characteristics. But what a comfort it is that while the evil nature is a strong man, and seems to break over all bounds and restraint at times, yet the good man is stronger; for he compels the tongue to speak against itself, the hand to write the abhorrence he feels for the evil it has done; yea, brings even the powers of the mind into captivity, causing them to put in form and give expression to this hatred of its own deceitfulness. Why cannot I see as clearly that there is a holy principle, a new man, in me, when I find these things that brother Marvin speaks of himself just what I would say of myself? I read such expressions with wonder that another should feel as I do; and cannot help feeling a comfort or a measure of release from sorrow when I hear such things, that one I am sure is a child of God tells my own sense of sinfulness and self-abhorrence. Yet when I am compelled to speak of the depths of depravity I see in myself, and to acknowledge my vileness, the fact of my uttering it does not assure me of a holy principle within, while the expression of it by another not only gives me assurance for him, but seems to reflect that comforting assurance upon myself. It is looking in a glass. I see myself in him. I see the name in his forehead, and thereby am made to know that the same name is upon my own forehead.

"Remember Lot's wife." That was a most remarkable experience. At one time that portion was much upon my mind, and his experience confirms the understanding of it that I thought was given me. The Savior speaks of the end of the legal dispensation. When that time comes the things that are in that legal house are no more to be regarded by those who are called by grace, whether food or clothing, or money. Wherever they are, whether on the house top or in the field, when they are called, they are to look directly away from that house, and not follow the fleshly inclinations to return for any of those legal things. To thus look back after those things is to "walk after the flesh;" and death is the result. "If ye live after the flesh ye shall die." To turn from the holy commandment given unto one, is to look back. No one can turn from a commandment which was not given him, and the commands of Jesus are given only to his people. One who forsakes the assembly of the saints; one who walks contrary to the order of the church; one who turns in any sense from the truth, whether a minister or not; one who has been called to preach and is led away by pride, or flattery, or any fleshly weakness, to preach error, or who, under a sense of his inability, determines (as brother Marvin did) that he will not preach, because he is unfit and unable. All these things are looking back, or would do so if the Lord did not keep them from it by some such word as, "Remember Lot's wife." If such do look back so as to die, they are still salt. "Ye are the salt of the earth." Lot's wife is a pillar to be looked to by the saints to the end of time as a warning. She could never go on again. It was a literal death. But the saint who has experienced that death to the fellowship of the church, and to the enjoyment of spiritual life, may again be restored to those comforts and privileges. "Restore such an one in the spirit of meekness."—Gal. vi. 1. "Sufficient unto such an one is this punishment." "Wherefore I beseech you that ye would confirm your love toward him."—2 Cor. ii. 6, 8. This is the one who had been "delivered unto Satan for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit might be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus."—1 Cor. v. 5; 1 Tim. i. 20. "It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God." The saints only can so fall into his hands; and they by transgression. The punishment is sore and fearful to those who esteem the Lord's favor above life itself. But his strokes are effectual to restore the wandering soul; and how unspeakably sweet are the tokens of love when the chastisement has done its work. How precious is the restoring grace and healing mercy. How good and restful beyond all former experience seems the house of God, and how infinitely beyond all price the love and fellowship of the saints. How loving and faithful the dear Savior is to constantly give timely warning that the erroneous way may be seen and avoided. "Remember Lot's wife." But I have said more than I intended to, and yet have not begun to express what I felt in reading this letter which I now send you.

Your brother in hope of the gospel,

SILAS H. DURAND.

WAVERLY, Pa., Nov. 24, 1892.

ELDER S. H. DURAND—DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST:—Your letter was received in due time, and I assure you we were very glad to hear from you and family once more. I have you in my mind very often, and would love to hear from you often. But you know I am an extremely poor correspondent at best, and you ought not wait for me to write. It has always been more or less of a task or cross for me to write; so much so that I have often said in my mind, I will never write another letter. What is the use? I am so ignorant and vile, surely no one can be benefited by my scribbling. If it were not that I wished to hear from others, I would never take my pen again. I am sure that if the dear saints only knew what a poor, miserable, vile worm of the dust I am, they would have no desire to see me or to hear from me. I tell you, brother Silas, I am bad. There is nothing mean, low, devilish and abominable but what is in my nature. I cannot think of you, nor any other saint, as being in the awful condition that I am in. No; it seems impossible. How can you call me brother? Could you know my true character (inwardly, I mean), you would shun me as you would a viper. Would to God I were a different man. I loath, abhor, yea, hate myself, and many bitter tears I have shed because of my condition. I have often wished I had never united with the church of Jesus Christ, although I had no desire to go to Babylon; for I have been of no benefit to the saints. I love them, and desire no other society. And here to me is a great mystery, that I should desire the company of those I know to be the children of God, when I am so unlike them. And then to think that I am an ordained minister among them! It is horrible to think of. I often quake and tremble when I think of the position I occupy in the church. May God have mercy upon my poor soul for deceiving his people, if I have deceived them; and I have great fears at times that I have. How many, many times the past year I have felt to be without hope and without God in the world, with no evidence that I was born again. Yet I had no fears of hell beyond. In fact, the only comfort I would have would be in thinking of death. I would find myself saying, "I will die sometime." How glad I have felt that death will come. I fear you do not understand me, I am so strange. But with all my strange thoughts and peculiar feelings I have felt perfectly settled in regard to the wonderful, glorious and God-honoring plan of salvation; not a shadow of doubt about the safety of Zion; and in my darkest hours I have found myself musing upon the protecting care of Almighty God over his people.

I will now relate another very peculiar experience that I have had since I came down here. I bought two acres of land covered with trees, mostly small, but standing very thick on the ground. There was a house started; about one-third of the work done. Nothing had been done by way of grading, so I had plenty of work. First I hired carpenters and finished up the wood-work; then I hired masons and did the plastering, and built a large cistern in the meantime. We moved into the house the last of May, and I went to work chopping wood. As I was working I began to think of what a useless life I was living, gadding about the country, imposing upon good people, and no one benefited by it. I was obliged to neglect my work, and duty did not call two ways at the same time. The more I pondered it over in my mind, the more thoroughly I became convinced that it was not my duty to go from home any more. In my mind I began to take up my appointments, until all were taken up; but about the time I had decided fully what I would do these words came into my mind, "Remember Lot's wife." I stopped chopping for a few moments, but finally decided that I knew nothing about it, and so went on with my work, thinking of my plans. Again it came. I wondered why those words should come to me, "Remember Lot's wife." I could see nothing in them for myself, nor for any one else. I thought, I will pay no attention to them, and have nothing to do with Lot's wife. I went on again with my chopping. Finally they came the third time. I began to feel very much disturbed. I thought, What does this mean? I can see nothing in it. Why should it haunt me so? But I could not shake it off. Now it was pouring through my mind, so that I had no rest day nor night scarcely. Finally the thought came, What are you about? Whom are you serving? My past life came up before me. I saw what a merciful God I had in caring for, providing for, and protecting me all my days, while I had been so wicked and so ungrateful to him. Yes, and he had, as I hoped, delivered me from the power of darkness, and translated me into the kingdom of his Son; had revealed his Son in me, my hope of glory; had made me willing to go forth, though in great weakness, to speak in his name; and now I was planning with all my powers to stand still; was looking back to see if I could find any good reason for believing I was called to preach; and I could find no evidence that I was, but all to the contrary. I was made willing again, through trouble of mind, to continue on, though with no cheering prospect before me, but conflict and sorrow. I thought how many had been delivered out of Sodom, and were looking back over their past life to find evidence that they were born of God; forgetting for the time that the evidence of a heavenly birth was love, and that they were at that very time in love and sweet fellowship with the saints, but standing still year after year, and some all their lifetime.

Now, brother Silas, you can have a little glimpse at least into my wretched life from the thoughts that I have written; but I have just hinted at them. If I were with you perhaps I could tell you more; but you must be wearied with my doleful, woeful tale, so I will close. While I have been in this terrible condition I have written but very little, for I could not; and the way I now feel I would put up my pen and never take it again, only upon matters of business, if the brethren would continue to write to me, and would not feel hurt with me. I hope if I should keep silence my brethren would not take it as an evidence of lack of love and fellowship for them, but for lack of fellowship for myself; for I have none for myself.

We like it here very much. The neighbors are very kind and very plain, and that suits us, you know. Love to all. Write again.

Your very worst brother, if one at all,

D. M. VAIL.

DECEMBER, 1892.

DEAR BRETHREN:—My name has not appeared in the SIGNS for some time, but no one has lost by it, for it has been well filled with words of comfort to the poor and afflicted pilgrims journeying through this wilderness to the promised land of sweet Canaan above, where we hope to enter by and by, and be forever at rest from all the toils, cares, doubts and fears, temptations and sorrows, of this life.

The SIGNS still maintains the doctrine of predestination, as pledged in the prospectus sixty years ago. If there were no other witness such would be enough to condemn the report that it is a new doctrine, and that such a thing was not heard of till five or six years ago. Those who are engaged in trying to invent or gather up new cudgels, such as "fatality," "fatalism," &c., to throw at the doctrine, are just a little behind in reading old Baptist literature. Long before some of these enemies were born, the old order of Baptists were singing of their God,

"Chain'd to his throne a volume lies,
With all the fates of men;
With every angel's form and size,
Drawn by the eternal pen."

"My God, I would not long to see
My fate with curious eyes,
What gloomy lines are writ for me,
Or what bright scenes may rise."

This doctrine has stood against all the battering rams of the enemy through all the so-called dark ages, and every rusty, rough and knotty club that has been thrown at it by its enemies inside and outside the pales of the militant church, are worn slick, and they have not made a single dent in it down to the present day; and it will be here, and be proclaimed by some of the servants of the Lord, as long as the world stands.

The doctrine of vital unity is also maintained. This doctrine has its opponents, but it is a truth too plainly revealed in the Scriptures to suffer death by an enemy. It is by reason of our natural unity with the first head, Adam, that we are partakers of the transgression of the law, and we thereby become sinners; and it was by reason of our (the saints) spiritual unity with Christ that we were with him in the obedience of the law, and in his death and resurrection from the tomb, and also represented in the presence of the Father, and we have his righteousness imputed unto us. The holy Father has made us acceptable in his beloved Son, "according as he hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world." Upon no other basis can any sinner hope for salvation through the redemption that is in the Lord Jesus Christ.

The new birth is also maintained in the SIGNS. This doctrine also has opponents; but the truth of God still stand revealed in the Scriptures, "Ye must be born again." "Except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God." "Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ, is born of God." "Being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth forever." "Now are we the sons of God." "Heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ." I understand that it is the same man that sinned and fell under the law, and was redeemed by the blood of Christ, that is embraced in the above quotations. I know the question has often been asked, "What part of the Adam man is born again?" Some have stated that it is the spirit of man born of the Spirit of God; and some have stated that it is the soul of man born of the Spirit; but we see that Paul prayed for the preservation of the man, "soul, body and spirit." It seems to me that it takes the whole man to make a child. The whole man, dead in trespasses and in sin, was embraced in the love of God, and the whole man was redeemed from under the curse of the law. He is begotten of God the Father, conceived in wisdom, and brought forth in time by the new birth. "In hope of eternal life, which God, that cannot lie, promised before the world began." We have to be born of the flesh first, to manifest the life and nature of our earthly parents; and we have to be born of the Spirit, to manifest the life and nature of our heavenly Parent. Those who are born twice have two lives and two natures. In our earthly or carnal nature we are wont to ask, "How can these things be?" but in our heavenly nature we are satisfied with what is revealed in our experience and in the word of God. No better explanation will ever be found.

The resurrection is still set forth in the SIGNS, according to the Scriptures. This doctrine, too, has been disputed by some for two thousand years and more, but it is still cherished by saints. Death and the resurrection is the door or gate through which they hope to enter into that full fruition of joy, in the presence of their heavenly King, in the upper and better kingdom. We read of him, "In thy presence is fullness of joy; at thy right hand there are pleasures for evermore." Neither the first or second birth makes any change in our material bodies or carnal nature; This is reserved till the resurrection. Then, we are assured, these vile bodies shall be changed, and fashioned like the glorious body of him who is holy, harmless, undefiled, and separate from sinners. "It is sown [buried] a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body." The last trump shall sound, "and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed," and be received up into glory. I am the chief of sinners, but such is my hope.

P. J. POWELL.

OZARK, Ala., Dec., 1892.

DEAR BRETHREN:—Time's wheels are rolling swiftly by, and many upon the right and upon the left have crossed the cold river of death, having fallen asleep in the sweet arms of Jesus, and are now basking in the sweet presence of their dear Redeemer, until he bids the sleeping dust awake in his likeness. Another year with its cares and disappointments will soon be numbered with the past, and not one moment of it can ever be recalled and lived over again. This reminds us of the shortness of our lives, and how soon that we, as the years, will be numbered with the past. We cannot recall any of the past. I have seen the time when I wanted to go back and live my life over again; but I do not now. I am glad that every day is behind me that is. Tribulation weans us from earth, and teaches us that we have no abiding city here. Many hearts have been bereaved of dear and affectionate ones. Others have been sorely tried in various ways. My poor heart has been made sad many times, and I have been ready to almost give up. The afflictions of my dear wife and children have been more than ever before. My helpless mother has given me much trouble and concern. Through a portion of the winter, spring and summer I did not think I could possibly live, suffering so much with my heart and lungs. I have labored under much embarrassment and losses financially, which caused me to almost give up in despair. Sometimes I have cried out in deep agony of soul, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" Besides the troubled heart over my financial matters and afflictions, I have had the care of four churches, and mourned my unworthiness and great inability to be a faithful pastor to them. My indifference is very great, and many times I go to meeting when the Bible is a sealed book to me. I feel that I cannot speak; and if I say anything, it seems so dry and lifeless that no one can be comforted. But amid the dark and dismal scenes I have had some refreshing showers. My sorrows have been mixed with joy. I have had the privilege of baptizing between thirty and forty since last March, and of attending some precious meetings. I have had some happy meetings with precious ones whom I never met before. I have taken several tours and traveled between eight and ten thousand miles. The brethren seemed to be very nearly a unit in faith and practice where I have been. There have been fewer hobbies used, and less foolish jestings among brethren, and fewer anecdotes from the sacred stand, than I ever heard before. The brethren have preached Jesus in faithfulness, solemnity and humility wherever I have been. I have heard of many additions to churches, and many quite young members are coming to us, who seem to rejoice in the precious doctrine of salvation by grace. I have met some quite young members who are invalids, and are likely to remain so through life, but who possess a calm and quiet spirit of resignation to the will of God.

A few years ago, when I first saw the SIGNS, that dear man of God, Elder Gilbert Beebe, was living, and also many able contributors, all of whom are sleeping in the arms of Jesus. Elder Beebe's writings were about the first I saw after I obtained a hope, and O how I did love him for the truth's sake. I was told that when Elder G. Beebe and a few others passed away the Old Baptist would die out. Bless the Lord, there are many yet living and contending for the same blessed truth that dear brother Beebe contended for, while he and many others are now sleeping in their tombs till the resurrection morn. God is still raising up young ministers, who are not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, and are willing to spend and be spent in the cause of their Master. Many times we are very despondent, and feel that the Lord's mercy is clean gone, and that he has forgotten to be gracious; but then he revives our drooping hearts, and we can feel for a short time that "he is mine, and I am his."

"A few more days on earth to spend, Then all our toils and cares shall end." Yes, if we are his we shall only have a few more trials and conflicts here. I often feel, while suffering so intensely with my heart, that my sojourn here is quite short. My greatest desire while I live is that I may not so act as to sin myself out of the affections of my brethren, and that I may be resigned to God's blessed will. Many have been the afflictions of God's people through this year, but the Lord delivers them out of them all. How many that are now enjoying the blessings of life will, ere the close of another year, be asleep in Jesus. May the Lord give us of his Spirit, that we may have that christian deportment that is becoming to the saints, and that love may glow in our hearts. May we possess that charity which suffereth long, beareth all things, endureth all things, and hides a multitude of faults. May we not be Baptists simply in name, but in faith and practice. May the Lord bless the dear editors and contributors of the SIGNS, that they may long be spared to wield "The sword of the Lord and of Gideon," in meekness and fear, trusting in him who has delivered, and will continue to deliver, amid the chequered scenes of life.

From a poor complainer in tribulation,

LEE HANCKS.

KNOB NOSTER, Mo., Dec. 1, 1892.

My DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—Whether the desire is of the flesh, for notoriety, or for the good of the cause of Zion, I know not; but frequently for the past two years I have had a strong desire to write something for publication. I have often greatly desired to tell of my travels on that wonderful highway, from nature to grace, through the columns of your paper, but have resisted the impression till now. I do not know how much longer I can do so. To-night I wish to drop a few lines in regard to the goodness and mercy of God. I can resist the desire to do so no longer. It seems that he has been especially good to me for the past four days. This is Thursday, and our meeting was last Saturday and Sunday. It was only last week that I was so low down in the valley that I was almost ready to give up my hope in despair, and say that the Lord had forsaken me, or rather that he had never known me. I doubted very much that there is such a thing as a holy Spirit that works in the hearts of his people both to will and to do of his good pleasure. Is there any one else professing to be a child of God who is so ungrateful and rebellious as to doubt like this, the moment the blessed Master hides his face? One moment I am away up in the mountain tops, feeding on green pastures, out of reach of the wolves; and the next I am down in the canyon, unable to find my way out, with ravenous beasts of all descriptions threatening to devour me. I grope my way about, trying to escape, and in my weakness to fight off the beasts, till I fall utterly exhausted, having used all my supply of strength. It is then that the Lord takes me by the hand and leads me forth out upon his royal highway. Nothing is so sweet as the smiles of the dear Savior, when we have learned to appreciate them by a night spent in the dungeon. A bud may have a bitter taste; but when sprinkled with the dews from on high, and warmed by the rays of the sun, it will break forth into a flower of the sweetest perfume. Then why should we complain if the Savior but for a moment hides his face? Have we not learned by the past that he will surely come again? And are not a few moments of the blissful peace experienced, when supported by his Spirit, worth months of suffering from darkness? When I am enjoying peace of mind like I have the past few days, I am ashamed that I am so prone to doubt. I think that I will never do so again; that I will remember how good he has been to me, and patiently trust in him, awaiting the return of his smiles. But alas! how short lived and worthless are all my promises. It seems that I never made one except to break it. Sometimes when I am lifted up so high I wonder how I will get down. I fear that the fall will be so sudden and great that I will be dashed to pieces by it. Sister Jones, of Argentine, Kansas, spoke of a feeling similar to this in her letter published in the last number of the SIGNS. She has a wonderful conception of the matchless works of the Lord. Her description of Niagara Falls, and the spiritual application of them, was simply grand.

I have not written all that I intended when I took up my pen, but I have succeeded in scribbling more than I should ask your to publish. If I only knew the source of the desire to write, I would be better satisfied. I fear that it is carnal, yet I hope that it is not. If I have written from fleshly motives, I hope the Lord will make it plain to me, that I may avoid such a blunder in the future. If I could write as sister Jones, and scores of others whose names are familiar to readers of the SIGNS, it would be a pleasure to me to write often; but as I cannot, perhaps it would have been best had I kept silent. I will submit this to your good judgment. I did not hope to comfort any one but myself; but if perchance I do, give God the glory. To him all praise belongs.

Yours in a precious hope,
S. W. THOMAS.

ELDON, Iowa, Aug. 25, 1892.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—I appreciate with a grateful heart the continuation of your paper addressed to me, regardless of my arrearage on subscription. Now in the eighty-fifth year of my life, and having been a constant reader of the SIGNS from its first issue to the present, the sacred Bible alone stands in preference to its presence. The firm advocacy of God's holy word in its purity, the sweet communication of thought upon his grace and love, and the admonitions and affections from God's children in the columns of your paper, fills the poor heart with calm resignation and love; for that world we are so soon to enter, we long to enter, rather than dread the dark river before us. We know that our God is omnipotent, and that none whom he has made heirs and joint heirs with Christ ever will or can be snatched from him by the hand of Satan. The strength and power by which he can save all that he has committed into the hands of our loving Redeemer, is demonstrated by the fathomless immensity of all creation, to an extent that should make the most skeptical hide his head in shame. In the mighty hand of such a Creator and Father, what have his children to fear? That love is never withdrawn, although oft he may chasten. He will do all his will in the armies of heaven and among the inhabitants of the earth. How can his chosen do aught but love and adore him? Where have they aught to fear from the sting of death? That only ushers them into an eternal life of unspeakable joy, and an eternal life and home with such a glorious Father to love and praise forever.

INTRODUCTORY TO VOLUME LXI.

To none of our readers can it be more wonderful than to the editors and publishers of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES to contemplate all the way through which the Lord has been pleased to lead us in the past years of our publication. In reviewing annually the mercies bestowed upon us, and the unmeasured goodness of the Lord to usward, well might we adopt the language of the psalmist as expressive of our grateful adoration. But no words can adequately tell of such amazing riches of grace as has been displayed in our behalf. "O that men would praise the Lord for his goodness, and for his wonderful works to the children of men!" It is the hope in this infinite love and mercy by which his saints have been saved in all their distresses; and their preservation in the midst of the fires of adversity has loudly proclaimed the praise of the glory of divine grace. In no other revelation which is given does the majesty of that heavenly glory so fully appear as in the manifestation of the way of life in Christ Jesus, whereby God is just and has salvation for his chosen people. This is that "mystery which hath been hid from ages and from generations, but now is made manifest to his saints."—Col. i. 26. Therefore, having this standard of truth revealed in their own experience, the saints are competent to receive the witness of the Spirit; and however all the evidence of reason may oppose their confidence in God, they still know by living faith that there is no other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved, but the name of Jesus Christ the Savior of his people from their sins.

This doctrine of God our Savior does not depend upon its believers for its maintenance; on the contrary, it sustains them in all their afflictions and distresses. In no other way can the success of the publication of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES be accounted for but in consideration of the omnipotence of that truth to which it has been devoted. Therefore it is our high privilege to ascribe thanksgiving and praise to the Lord for all the signal favor bestowed upon us during these three score years of our publication. Well may we acknowledge, "Hitherto hath the Lord helped us!"—1 Sam. vii. 12.

Perhaps there has been no period since the publication of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES was started, when there was more need of such a medium of correspondence between the lovers of gospel truth than the present; yet in the consideration of the things which are seen there is much to discourage those who have stood together in the past as believers of the doctrine of salvation by the grace of God exclusively. Reason would not suggest that the fact of the saints being strangers and foreigners in the world should forbid their engaging in strife and contention among themselves. Knowing that the vanities of this world must all perish with the using, they should be able to see that none of these things can be worthy to be compared with the riches of glory to which they are chosen in Christ; and therefore the love of Christ should be the only motive by which their conduct and conversation should be guided. There can be no question but that the desire of every subject of saving grace is to be found walking in the path of obedience to the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus. Yet the law of sin, which is in the members of each one of them, constantly opposes itself against this holy aspiration, so that they cannot do the things which they so earnestly desire to do. For this cause it has ever been the pleasure of the Lord to give his followers the desire to commune together in their pilgrimage through the wilderness of earth, and their conversation has been in heaven while they compared their trials and conflicts, and comforted one another with the description of their mutual temptations and the delivering grace of God manifested in their behalf. This has been the resort of this peculiar people from the earliest record which is given of them: So the last prophet sent to the nation of Israel tells of the gloomy time of rebellion, and says, "Then they that feared the Lord spake often one to another; and the Lord hearkened, and heard it, and a book of remembrance was written before him for them that feared the Lord and that thought upon his name. And they shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels; and I will spare them, as a man spareth his own son that serveth him. Then shall ye return, and discern between the righteous and the wicked, between him that serveth God and him that serveth him not."—Mal. iii. 16-18. This characteristic speaking was not confined to the utterance of words with the tongue, for such words must have ceased with the natural life of the speakers. It is recorded of Abel, that by the offering of faith "he being dead yet speaketh;" and this witness of his faith brings him manifestly into the fellowship of the saints in all subsequent ages. It is in this written word that the entire family of the redeemed are present with those who are now passing through the tribulations of time. Throughout the whole period since the day of Abel, even since the inspired volume was closed, the saints have left their testimony on record; and it has been blessed of the Lord to the comfort and encouragement of their brethren in subsequent times. Especially has the publication of the word of the Lord been abundantly fruitful in strengthening the faith of the fainting pilgrims who are sojourning in this dark valley, since they have been favored with the use of the art of printing. This has brought into correspondence many who must otherwise have remained strangers to each other. By this blessing of the Lord the saints have now for more than three score years been favored to "speak often one to another" through the columns of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, notwithstanding the storm of malice and ridicule which sought to defeat the publication when it was proposed. Up to that time the votaries of the doctrines and commandments of men had monopolized the printing press; and it seemed preposterous that an illiterate man, without money or influence, should attempt to oppose the popular tide of worldly religion. Yet it pleased the Lord to give his children this medium of communication; and to him alone must be ascribed the ability which sustained the publication from its incipency.

There has been no occasion to depart from the living principles of gospel truth which were announced in the original prospectus of the paper. The world had already a supply of publications devoted to the propagation of their various errors, before our paper was issued. As it was in Bethlehem when the embodiment of truth was born, there was no room for him in the inn, so there was no religious periodical at that time which had room for the plain truth of the doctrine of God our Savior. The scattered saints were unaware of the address of each other. With what joy did they learn, through the rage of their adversaries, that there were others like themselves scattered throughout the earth! Thus brought into acquaintance by the publication of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, many thousands of Baptists have been enabled to establish and perpetuate a profitable and delightful correspondence. For this spiritual blessing they have to give thanks to that God of all grace, by whose appointment they have enjoyed such manifest favor.

In entering upon the new year, it is fitting that we should look back over the way by which we have been brought. While it must be confessed that we find much to deplore in our own weakness and insufficiency, and much for which we have to thank our patrons in bearing with our infirmities, it is with quiet assurance of the continued mercy of God that we claim to have maintained the principles of the doctrine to which the paper was pledged in the beginning of its publication. Fully conscious of our failure to attain that perfection of which the doctrine is worthy, we desire with such ability as God shall give, to still devote our columns to the defense of the same doctrine and order of the church of Christ to which they have heretofore been pledged. In the future, as in the past, we must crave the forbearance of our patrons.

To our correspondents, to whose contributions the usefulness of our paper in the past has been largely due, we return most sincere thanks. While it is not in our power to reward them financially, they must have a rich reward in the consciousness of comforting the disciples of their Lord, and thus ministering to him. May the love of Christ still constrain his saints to enrich our pages with their correspondence, so that each issue of the paper shall bring profitable and comforting assurances to some of the afflicted and poor people whose only hope is in the salvation of God as it is revealed in Christ Jesus. So long as this purpose is accomplished the labor of the publishers is not in vain. When it shall be no further serviceable to this end it will be time to discontinue the publication. Earnestly soliciting the aid of every lover of the doctrine of God our Savior, to which our paper is devoted, and with trembling trust in the continued blessing of our God, we hope to maintain through the opening year the same glorious truth which has been our refuge and strength in the past. And with the wish that each of our readers may experience the present help of the Lord in all times of need, we greet each with the fraternal love which is peculiar to those who are led by the Spirit of God.

KEEP YOUR SUPPLEMENT.

A SHORT time ago we sent out a Supplement to the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, the contents of which seems to be such a surprise to those who received it that many of them cannot believe they rightly understand it, and are writing us to know if it is possible that we mean what it seems to imply. Yes, we mean just what we say in that Supplement, and you will all please keep it for future reference, as we shall likely refer to it frequently in the SIGNS.

PLEASE STOP MY PAPER.

AT least nine out of every ten writing us to discontinue their paper add that it is not on account of their objection to anything the paper contains, but that they are not financially able to continue it. We would ask all such if they have taken into consideration the amount they have economized by stopping their paper. It is about half-a-cent a day.

EXTRA COPIES.

AS WE are anticipating a large addition to our subscription list within the next few weeks, we have run several hundred extra copies of this edition, as we expect to do with subsequent numbers; and until further notice we shall be able to supply new subscribers sent in early with the back numbers.

THE POWER OF GRACE.

EXEMPLIFIED IN THE LIFE OF MR. S. G. GAINES, OF LOUISVILLE, KY.

A Funeral Discourse delivered by Elder H. M. Curry, in the Old School Baptist Church, Bullitsville, Ky., August, 1891, and reported by Mr. Myer, United States Court Stenographer, of Covington, Ky.

"WHOM he did foreknow he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son."—Romans viii. 29.

To conform men to the image of Jesus is God's eternal purpose, which he hath purposed in himself. Both the process of the conformation, and the individual to be conformed, have been determined. Whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son. Thus we see that foreknowledge and predestination are the ground of the whole affair. Man in nature belongs to the natural kingdom. He is born of the flesh, and is flesh; and all flesh is as grass, and all the glory thereof is as the flower of grass. In nature's kingdom, man is a sinner, corrupt, depraved, mortal, dead, alienated from the life of God, and is as completely shut out of the spiritual kingdom as is the inorganic shut out of the organic. So completely is his separation from the spiritual, that no other word will express his condition but the word death. This condition is what the old theologians tried to denote by the term total depravity; but most of them fell far short of the real truth of the matter, and always left some way for the man to make his escape. Now, to be conformed to the image of Christ, is to be taken out of this state and translated into another; to be taken out of the image of Adam, and changed into the image of Christ. Now, if we have a proper conception of the difference between sin and holiness, darkness and light, corruption and incorruption, mortality and immortality, natural and spiritual, death and life, Adam and Christ, we are prepared to understand something of this wonderful conformation, and the power required to accomplish it. Man is dead! How, say some, is man dead, when we see that he is alive? How can he be dead, and at the same time able to read the Scriptures, talk of God, and in the name of Jesus do many wonderful works? When we say man is dead, we do not mean that he is dead in his own order. There are different orders of life. Take the vegetable and animal kingdoms as an illustration. The stately tree, clothed in its robe of green, and the little bird that sings among its branches, are both endowed with life; but the tree is dead to the voice and presence of the bird. They belong to different orders of life, different kingdoms, each living in its own environments; each alive in its own order, but dead to each other. So man is alive in his order, living in a natural environment, but dead to the order above him. Now, in order that he reach the kingdom above him, he must be conformed to the type of it; and the type of this kingdom is Jesus Christ. Now, how is this conformation to take place, and what agent accomplishes it? What builds of the dust of the ground a natural man? The answer is plain, life does it. That is, life as a mysterious architect lays hold upon the dead particles of inorganic matter, and through its wonderful power builds up an organic body. Vegetable life builds up the vegetable world; animal life builds up the animal world; each life conforming its workmanship to its own type; one life building up a man, another a horse, another a dog, and yet another a tree. Spiritual life then must build up the spiritual world. The Savior began at the bottom of the process when he said, "Except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God." There is only one passage from the natural to the spiritual, and that passage is a birth. To be born again is to receive the life of Christ, a new life, a new spirit, of an entirely different order from the natural life; this being the very life of Christ, the life of God, through its mysterious power the man receiving it, in process of time, is conformed to the image of Christ. This conformation is a process of growth, and is attended by certain visible evidences, the whole of which is called christian experience. Now, to trace these evidences in the life and character of our dear brother Gaines, is the object of this discourse.

On the morning of April 13, 1819, the news went out from an old log house in Boone County, Ky., that a man child was born. That child was S. G. Gaines. He was nourished by a loving mother, caressed by a fond father; he grew, and finally became a man, honored and respected. Sometime during his early life a cry of distress was heard, the cries of a broken heart and wounded spirit, which none at first heard but God. Joy succeeded sorrow; rejoicing took the place of weeping. The world has gone very far astray in preaching that believing in Christ is a condition of life. "We believe," saith the Scripture, "according to the working of his mighty power that he wrought in Christ when he raised him from the dead." What is the power that raises the dead? It is life. Offered life could never effect a resurrection. The life must be imparted, worked in the subject. When God created Adam of the dust of the earth, suppose he had stood back and offered Adam life, would the man ever have become a living soul? Certainly not. But he breathed the breath of life into him, and he became a living soul. This is a figure of christian experience. The sinner is dead, and must be raised up, must be quickened or made alive, and when thus made alive, he is in possession of eternal life experimentally. This life being eternal, is self-developing; nothing can prevent it bringing forth its predestinated fruit. This life is a light, lighting up the dark recesses of the heart, revealing the inmost corruption of the soul unto itself, causing it to cry in anguish of spirit, "God, be merciful to me, a sinner." Repentance sets up, and cannot be driven away. This is a call to repentance; a call which none but Jesus himself can give. Not only is the sinner thus called to repentance, but repentance is granted unto him by the same Jesus; for he is exalted a Prince and a Savior, to give repentance and remission of sins to Israel. When Christ calls a sinner to repentance, by putting his laws in his heart, and writing them in his mind, he needs not a preacher to tell him to pray. All the powers of hell cannot prevent him from praying; neither does he need one to urge him to repent. All the works of the adversary cannot hinder his repentance; for it is God working in him to will and to do of his own good pleasure. Repentance is the fruit of the Spirit in the heart of the man who has been born again.

This fruit of the Spirit of life was clearly manifested in the life and character of our dear brother Gaines. He had not only been made a man of sorrow and acquainted with grief, but he had been brought to the banqueting house, under the banner of love; he had been made to lie down in the green pastures, and led beside the still waters, and made to drink of the pure river of the water of life. Our brother believed in Jesus; not as a mere nominal Christ of history; not as the Christ the world preaches, who is offering to save all men upon terms and conditions; but the Christ who saves his people by his grace; and this was the evidence whereby he believed Jesus had saved him. No man has the evidence that Jesus is the Savior but the man who has the evidence that Jesus hath saved him. The popular gospel is that Jesus will save if you will believe. This is exactly the reverse, and the guide-post to every false way. Believing in Christ is not a condition of eternal salvation, but salvation is a condition of believing. "He that believeth in me," saith Christ, "hath everlasting life." He is in possession of it now; and believing is the evidence that he has life; and not only the evidence, but the result of it. We believe according to the working of his mighty power that he wrought in Christ when he raised him from the dead. What power raised Christ from the dead? The power of life; and the life must be worked in the subject. The Protestant as well as the Catholic's faith represents God as offering life to men. Suppose when God created Adam of the dust of the ground, he had stood back and offered him life, would the man ever have become a living soul? Certainly not. Such an idea is the height of folly; and yet it finds its parallel in the doctrine proclaimed every seventh day in ten thousand pulpits. When God formed man, he breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul. This is an illustration of christian experience. The man in nature is dead. God comes to him, not to offer life, but breathe into his heart the Spirit of life, and the man is made alive to God. The man is quickened, raised up into a new life, brought up higher, brought into the kingdom of God. Old things pass away; all things become new. This new life is Christ, formed in him, the hope of glory, implanted there by the hand of God alone, according to his eternal purpose of grace, whereby he, in the ages eternal, by his own eternal decree, set that particular man apart to salvation; predestinated him to be conformed to the image of Christ. This is the way in which grace reaches the sinner; this is the way life reaches the dead; and this is the way God's children are manifested in the world. This was our departed brother's experience; this was his faith; and thus he set his seal to the testimony that God is true.

Brother Gaines was a man of prayer. This is of itself an evidence that he was a christian. I do not mean that he prayed the prayer of the Pharisee, or repeated a little rhyme taught him by his mother, or some other religious teacher; but from the depth of his soul the prayer, "God, be merciful to me, a sinner," went up to the Father. A man never prays in reality until deep soul troubles come—trouble which none but quickened sinners ever know. As long as a man feels himself righteous, he never prays; but when the Spirit of God in him strips him of all his defense, lays his heart open to himself, and makes him know his lost condition, and all other refuges have failed him, then he comes in anguish to his God for deliverance. When God spoke to Ananias, in the case of Paul, he said, "Behold, he prayeth;" as if it were a wonder. If it were possible to astonish the mind of the eternal God, he doubtless would have been astonished at the prayer of Paul. Paul's character, before this, was that of a zealous worshiper of God. He was a religious man in the strictest sense of the word. He possessed a religion that had been taught him of man; a religion that he had received from man. This religion taught him to pray; and no doubt many fine rhetorical prayers, eloquent and faultless in syntax, had gone up from his lips before this; but God had not heard them; but when "God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness," shined in his heart, and gave him the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ, then he prayed indeed, and God heard him; and then it could be said by God himself, "Behold, he prayeth."

Prayer is a wonder in heaven and in earth; and the prayer of our beloved brother was a wonder there and here, because it was the fruit of electing grace. In Paul's case, immediately after, "Behold, he prayeth," followed the glorious words of comfort from the mouth of the eternal Jehovah himself, "He is a chosen vessel." Does election trouble you? Let not your heart be troubled. So certain as you have ever prayed, so certain are you a chosen vessel. Not that your prayers elect you, but they are the evidence of your election of God, an evidence that your name is recorded in the Lamb's book of life. It is the custom of the families of earth to keep a family record. The Father in heaven also keeps a record of his family. In earth the child must be born and named before it can be recorded. In heaven this is just the reverse. The God of infinite knowledge and wisdom does not have to wait until his children are born that he may enter their names; but in his own eternal purpose of grace, the names of his whole family are written in letters of gold in the Lamb's book of life, and all the powers of death and hell have never been able to erase a single one from the glorious record. The fair pages of this book have never been blotted by sin, nor dimmed by its blighting influence; but the whole record stands complete, and all that are registered therein have been redeemed by the blood of Jesus, and shall never come into condemnation.

Brother Gaines was a man of faith. Not the faith that carnal professors talk so much about exercising, but that faith which is the gift of God, which works by love, and purifies the heart; the faith which Jesus is the author and finisher of. There are two faiths in the world. One is the fruit of the flesh, or the conviction of the natural mind; the faith of carnal worshipers. This faith says, God will save me if I do my part. The other is the fruit of the Spirit, a power within, born of God—the faith of God's elect. This faith says, God hath saved us with an everlasting salvation. Jesus paid it all, redeemed us unto God by his blood, and without him we can do nothing. This faith, instead of being exercised by the creature, exercises him, and moves to all good works; it makes man deny himself and own Jesus, not as a partner in his salvation, but the author of it.

Brother Gaines was sound in the doctrine of the church. He knew that true christianity was of higher birth than the product of the incantations of Catholic priests or the hocus pocus performances of modern Protestant hirelings. He had no use, neither in faith nor practice, for this modern doll-baby religion of the Sunday School. His heart had been made the recipient of that salvation which springs alone from the fountain of grace, which proceeds fresh from the throne of God untarnished by any earthly conditions. The doctrine of God being implanted in his heart, identified him with the people of God, gave him a place in the church, and gave the church confidence in him.

All these items of christian experience are steps in this wonderful conformation; results of a miraculous evolution which is going on in the life of the man. Christ was an evolutionist; the christian doctrine is a doctrine of evolution; and the image of Christ is attained by the process of evolution; but a grander, farther-reaching evolution than ever Darwin dreamed of; an evolution that time is too short to consummate; that requires the dawn of eternity to develop. The communication of the Christ life is instantaneous, but the growth and product require time. The higher the type of life the slower the development. The mushroom grows up in a night, while the oak requires centuries, perhaps, to reach its perfection; the pig is ready for the market in a few weeks, while man requires years to reach maturity. Eternal life, or Christ life, requires more time still. Here is the order, "First the blade, then the stalk, then the full corn in the ear." We have been talking to-day about the blade and the stalk in the experience of our brother; it now remains to speak of the full corn in the ear. This is never reached in this life; but nothing else can satisfy the hope of the saints of God. The full corn in the ear is what the christian is waiting for; that is, the adoption, the redemption of the body. This is received in the resurrection of the dead. This mortal must put on immortality; this corruptible must put on incorruption; these vile bodies must be changed and fashioned like unto his own glorious body. When this mortal shall have put on immortality, and this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, then shall be brought to pass the saying, "O, death, where is thy sting? O, grave, where is thy victory?" Every member of the body of Christ shall then arise in his likeness, completely conformed to his image, and shall each inherit the kingdom prepared for him from the foundation of the world. Sin, corruption and death shall all be left behind, and we shall be like our glorious Redeemer, for we shall see him as he is; and though brother Gaines is dead to us, he lives unto God and we shall see him again.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

W. H. Moore died June 1st, 1892. The deceased was a regular Old School Baptist, and a firm believer in the Lord Jesus Christ. The SIGNS OF THE TIMES was always a welcome visitor to him. He leaves a wife and two sons to mourn, and a host of friends, but not without hope. NICY E. MOORE.

DIED—In Hubbard City, Hill County, Texas, Sept. 29th, 1892, J. D. Stovall, aged 59 years.

He was baptized by Elder Ben. Parker soon after the civil war, and remained a devoted member of the Primitive Baptist Church until his death. Surely we must say, A good man has gone. While we mourn our loss, it is his eternal gain. May we be reconciled to the will of God, knowing that he doeth all things well. A FRIEND.

DIED—At the residence of his mother, in Covington, Ga., on April 5th, 1892, of typhoid fever, Joseph William Purington, son of Elder Joseph L. and C. A. Purington, in the 35th year of his age.

We have reason to be thankful that he left evidences that he had felt a change, although he never made an open profession of his hope. He leaves two children, a daughter of ten years and a son of seven; also an aged mother, with numerous friends, to mourn his death. C. A. PURINGTON.

COVINGTON, Ga.

George W. Russell died Dec. 7th, 1892, at his residence near Conway, Mo., in the 70th year of his age.

The deceased was the son of Jeremiah and Celie Wade Russell, both of whom were members of the Primitive Baptist Church for many years, but have long since gone to reap their reward. George W. Russell was born in Kentucky, Nov. 10th, 1823, came to Missouri with his parents in 1837, and was married to Adaline Crittenton in 1844. To them were born two daughters, Martha Forkner and Sarah Irvin. Brother Russell united with the Old School Baptists in the year 1858 or 1859, and lived a devoted member. He told the writer of this sketch not long before he died that he had only missed one meeting of the Ozark Association in twenty-five years, and had attended many others.

He leaves a wife, two daughters, eleven grandchildren and many friends to mourn their loss; but we sorrow not as those who have no hope. His remains were laid to rest in the Miller Cemetery on Dec. 8th, 1892, four miles east of Conway, Mo. Farewell, brother. We hope to meet you in that better land. R. C. NEWPORT.

Israel Barber Whitcomb was born Oct. 3d, 1812, in Lexington, Greene Co., N. Y., and died Sept. 16th, 1892.

In 1840 he experienced religion, and in a few months joined the Old School Baptist Church at Lexington, where he continued a member until his death. On Sept. 7th, 1867, he was licensed to preach, and on July 1st, 1869, he was ordained a minister of the gospel. He was pastor of the Middleburgh and Westerlo Churches for many years, also supplying other churches in the Lexington Association. After the death of Elder Samuel More he was chosen pastor of the Lexington Church, and continued her pastor until he removed to Cairo, N. Y., on account of impaired health. His last appearance in the pulpit was on the occasion of the Centennial Celebration of the formation of the Baptist Church at Lexington, held in October, 1890. As a minister of the gospel he went about cheerfully, lovingly, doing good, without hire or expectation of reward, except such as follows a servant of God, feeling that "woe is unto me if I preach not the gospel." His preaching was for the comfort of christians, eminently a peace-maker, ready to forgive any who had wronged him. As a husband, father and citizen he was highly esteemed.

Elder James Miller preached the funeral discourse at Lexington, and his remains were interred in the cemetery near the church-house. Well may we apply to him Paul's words in 2 Timothy iv. 7, 8: "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness."

Mrs. Elizabeth Blocker was born April 24th, 1819, and was married to Wm. H. Blocker on Nov. 29th, 1838. She joined the Primitive Baptist Church, and was baptized by Elder Joel Harvey, in Choctaw Co., Miss., some time in the fall of 1843. She died at our house, in Wise Co., Texas, July 15th, 1888. She was an exemplary Baptist, a loving mother, a good neighbor and a christian woman, and we have an abiding hope that she has entered into that rest which remains unto the people of God.

ALSO,

Wm. H. Blocker was born in East Feliciana Parish, La., August 4th, 1817. He emigrated with his parents to Mississippi, and on Nov. 29th, 1838, was married to Miss Elizabeth Gray, the subject of the above sketch. Not far from the time of his marriage he joined the Methodist Church, in which he remained an exemplary member until the fall of 1843, when he and his wife joined the Primitive Baptist Church, and were baptized by Elder Joel Harvey. He remained with them until his death, which occurred at our house, in Wise Co., Texas, Oct. 20th, 1892. He was a model man and a christian, and all that a father, a neighbor and a good citizen could be. What more can we say? Our mother and our father are gone. They left us to mourn and struggle yet awhile. But we hope not for a better report amongst good men, nor a surer hope hereafter.

R. E. & ELLEN CURRIE.

JIMMED, Texas.

DIED—Sept. 30th, 1892, Deacon W. L. Tomlin, son of Elder A. Tomlin, formerly of Talbot Co., Ga., at the residence of Mr. Upton, his cousin, in Magnolia, Columbia Co., Ark.

He was born in Newton Co., Ga., Aug. 29th, 1832; came to Drew Co., Ark., in the spring of 1859; was married to Miss Martha L. Murphy on Sept. 6th, 1860; was baptized in the fellowship of the Ephesus Church of Primitive Baptists, Drew Co., Ark., by Elder Stephen Berry, Aug. 24th, 1862, and was soon afterward ordained Deacon. He was a firm believer in the doctrine of predestination and election. I have often heard him say that his views were in perfect harmony with the Prospectus of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, and that to move one thousandth part of a hair's breadth from that he would be in a chance world. He lived a consistent member, and seldom was his seat vacant in his church meetings. How strange and sorrowful it is to meet and not see brother Lump, as he was commonly called by the brethren and sisters. He had been gradually going down ever since his wife died, and it seemed he felt that he soon must pass away. He gave his children instructions how to manage his temporal affairs, while they begged him not to go. He told them he must make that trip; that he intended to visit the South and North Washita Associations.

He leaves an aged mother, four sisters, eight children, and many relatives and friends, together with the Ephesus Church and the brethren and sisters of this association, to mourn the loss of one that was so loving and kind; yet our loss is his eternal gain. The Lord doeth all things well. O that the Lord would soothe the weeping ones by his kind and fatherly care over them, and suit this dispensation of his providence to their good, and all the glory be unto God.

G. W. CALDWELL.

HAMBURGH, Ark.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—It is with a very sad heart that I send you this notice of the death of my dear wife, Mary D. Oliver.

Mary was born Feb. 3d, 1854, and died Dec. 14, 1892. She united with the Frying Pan Old School Baptist Church, and was baptized by Elder E. V. White, in July, 1884, and lived a faithful and steadfast follower of Jesus up to the day of her death. We were united in marriage on Sept. 23d, 1874, and the fruits of our union have been five children, four boys and one girl, all being dead except the girl, and she only nine years old. Mary had been in very bad health for more than fifteen years. Her worst complaint was dyspepsia, which ran into consumption of the stomach. Since the death of our dear boy Jerome, who died the first day of last May, and whose obituary appeared in the SIGNS of June 15th, she has gone down very rapidly. She only kept up out of her bed two months after the death of our boy. Dear brethren, no tongue can tell the bitter sorrow of my poor, wounded heart at this time, for my little home seems no more like home to me without her; but she left with me and with many of the brethren a bright evidence that she was going home to Jesus, to be like him and see him as he is, so that I am constrained to say,

"Why do we mourn departing friends,
Or shake at death's alarms?
'Tis but the voice that Jesus sends
To call them to his arms."

I would like to tell of many precious things she said to me during her sickness, but space will not allow. She said to me a short time before she died, "Johnny, when I get very low, and am almost gone, please do not let any one come in and talk to me of a work of salvation, for I know that my destiny is fixed and sealed with God; so let me die in peace." Four long months I sat by her bedside, most of the time night and day, and watched that dear, wasted form grow weaker and weaker, until at last all motion stopped. Surely she did fall asleep in Jesus, for I have never yet seen one pass away so sweetly. Elders White and Frances and many of the brethren were with us the day we laid her away. Brother White spoke many words of comfort to my poor heart, and also to many of the brethren and friends, using the words for his text, "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? The sting of death is sin; and the strength of sin is the law. But thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

"Asleep in Jesus! blessed sleep!
From which none ever wake to weep!
A calm and undisturbed repose,
Unbroken by the last of foes."

"Asleep in Jesus! O how sweet
To be for such a slumber meet!
With holy confidence to sing
'That death has lost its cruel sting.'"

JOHN F. OLIVER.

HERNDON, Va., Dec. 24, 1892.

Lewis Cass Bowen, son of W. H. and Mary Bowen, was born near Raritan, Henderson Co., Ill., Sept. 10th, 1860, and departed this life, near the place of his birth, Dec. 14th, 1892, in the 33d year of his age.

The death of brother Bowen was very sudden, and very sad and shocking to his beloved wife and children and numerous friends. He and a young man, Mr. Charlie Burke, were on a load of wood, about four miles from his residence, returning home, when one line suddenly dropped out of his hand, and he said to Burke, "Charlie, do rub my hand." He then fell back on the wood, and was gone in a few moments, without uttering another word to be understood. The young man called repeatedly, and soon a number of neighbors gathered, and his remains were taken home, which of course was a dreadful shock to his wife and children and parents, who resided near by.

Brother Bowen joined the New Hope Church, at Greenbush, Warren Co., Ill., twenty-two miles from his residence, in the summer of 1886, and was baptized by Elder Cyrus Humphrey, as I was absent. I have been connected with this church as member and pastor since the spring of 1887, and acquainted with the Bowen family all the time, and I have known some things about them rather unusual. The grandfather, John Bowen, died in his ninetieth year. Two hundred and thirty-six had descended from him and his wife. John H. Bowen, brother to Lewis, dropped dead out in a field less than two years ago, speaking but a few words, and Lewis was the only person with him at the time; and he left a wife and five little children. Now brother Lewis has died suddenly, with but one person as a witness to his demise, and he leaves a wife and five little girls.

The subject of the present notice was a firm believer in salvation by grace, and we believe that his spirit has ascended to Jesus, his dear Savior. The deceased was twice married, his first wife leaving two little girls. His second wife was Miss Rena Holeman, daughter of Deacon Isaac Holeman, of Avon, Ill., who has three little girls; so that this dearly beloved sister in Christ is left heart-broken, with five little fatherless girls to care for. She is a precious member of our church at Greenbush.

On the 17th of December I attended on the solemn occasion in the village of Terre Haute, and addressed a large audience briefly, and then his remains were laid to rest. The bereaved and highly esteemed sister, and his worthy father and mother, have our profound sympathy.

MACOMB, Ill.

By the request of our highly esteemed sister Mendenhall I send for publication in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES the death of her husband, Deacon Charles C. Mendenhall, who died at his residence near Tonganoxie, Leavenworth Co., Kansas, Jan. 12th, 1892, aged 68 years, 7 months and 15 days.

His physician pronounced his disease pneumonia and "La Grippe" combined. His sickness was of short duration. His sufferings were very great, but he bore them with christian resignation. He was born May 27th, 1823, and was married to Miss Polina Fidler on Feb. 24th, 1848, in Madison Co., Iowa, with whom he lived a most pleasant and agreeable life until death separated them, leaving her to mourn the loss of a good and kind husband. They had born to them one child, a daughter, who grew to womanhood and married, but long since departed this life. They moved to Texas (the exact date not known to the writer), and while there he united with the Old School Baptist Church called Cedar Creek, in Grayson Co., Texas, and was baptized by Elder Savage on the third Sunday in October, 1854. I think they moved to Kansas in the year 1860. Brother and sister Mendenhall were in the constitution of the Little Hope Church, in April, 1868. In May, 1869, he was ordained Deacon of the church, in which capacity he served the church until he received the summons from the good Lord, who called him from a world of pain, toil, trial and affliction to a world of perfect happiness, where sickness, sorrow, pain and death will be no more. He was a faithful member in the church, a regular attendant at every meeting when able, sound in the faith, and firmly believing that salvation is free to all the chosen of the Lord. We cannot speak too highly of brother Mendenhall; but suffice it to say that he was a bright, shining ornament to the church, and was loved and respected by all who knew him as a citizen, as a neighbor and as a christian. We all mourn our loss, with sister Mendenhall, but not as they who have no hope, for we believe that our loss is his eternal gain.

May God's richest blessings be bestowed upon our bereaved sister, and may she be enabled to yet trust in the God of love and tender mercy, and be reconciled to his will, and wait with patience the time when God shall call her home to glory, to be with all the family of the Lord in the image of Jesus our Savior.

IRA HUFFMAN.

TONGANOXIE, Kansas.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—I send you a brief notice of the death of our dear old and faithful brother, F. C. True, which took place at the family residence in Mattoon, Ill., on the evening of the 5th inst., after a short illness.

Brother True was born in Woodford Co., Ky., Jan. 15th, 1812, he therefore being nearly eighty-one years of age when he died. He was united in marriage with Cynthia A. Wiggington on May 8th, 1833, and to them seven children were born. During the year 1833 the subject of this notice with his companion made a public profession of the religion of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, and were baptized by the late Elder Thomas P. Dudley. In 1834 they moved to Coles Co., Ill., and both became members of the Little Bethel Church, then under the pastoral care of the late Elder Thomas Threlkeld. Sister True left these mortal shores and entered the land of the blessed, where "the wicked cease from troubling and the weary be at rest," Oct. 29th, 1860. Dec. 23d, 1869, he was married to Mrs. Margaret O'Neal, who survives him, and is advanced in years. May the Lord graciously incline her to trust in him. The sympathy of many friends goes out to her.

Brother True was confined to his bed only about a week. Four sons, residents of distant states, were present, and recognized by the father before he fell asleep. Our esteemed brother and fellow-laborer in the ministry, Elder James M. True, a younger brother of the deceased, was also present at the bedside of the dying pilgrim, who, though conscious, could not talk, owing to an affection of the organs of speech; yet when singing was going on he would make an effort to join in the singing. At the sound of the name of Jesus his face would beam with joy; and the tearful eyes showed that his faith in Christ was unshaken. It was his stay and strength in life, becoming more grand and glorious in death. It was the shadow of a great Rock in a weary land. It was rivers of water in a dry place. It was a perfect covert from the tempest and storm that swept over these mortal shores; and to the dear aged pilgrim, whose life was fast ebbing away, it became the Sun of righteousness, arising with healing in his wings, that sent its uncreated radiance across the shores of immortality, to which he had so often longed to go. Thus calmly, joyfully and triumphantly he fell asleep.

The writer had known him for thirty-two years, and it can be said in truth that his was a blameless life, not marred by a shadow of reproach; and his constant and steadfast interest in the welfare of the church indicated that he truly was risen with Christ, and would set his affections on things of heaven, and not on things of the earth. He deplored his sinful nature, but rejoiced in Christ, and had no confidence in the flesh. How beautifully, too, he adorned the profession he made nearly sixty years ago! "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors, and their works do follow them."

The writer, with Elder James M. True, spoke briefly at the funeral on the 7th. Though a father in Israel has fallen, may the Lord resign us to this dispensation of his providence, and lead the sorrowing family to "the river, the streams whereof make glad the city of God."

J. G. SAWIN.

LOXA, Ill., Dec. 11, 1892.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—At the request of Miss Charity Lemmon, who is a patron of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, I have prepared and now send you the accompanying obituaries of her mother and sister for publication in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

Miss Charity, or "Aunt Charity," as we generally call her, has not united with the church, but we believe she is a sound Old School Baptist in experience and doctrine, and loves the truth and the people of our God. She is indeed desolate and afflicted, only looking unto and hoping in the Lord. Her three brothers and remaining sister are married and have families; and although kind and loving and devoted to her, yet they have their separate interests, and other earthly cares and ties, which buoy them up and sustain them. The obituary of the father, R. M. Lemmon, was published in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES some two or three years ago.

Thus the aged ones are passing away, and I am following closely after them; but these dear ones are being called to their eternal home and heavenly rest, while I am yet in a land of toil and care and labor, and heavily burdened. I can only see through a glass darkly, and faintly indulge in a humble hope of acceptance with God through Jesus Christ, and of a heavenly inheritance and a life beyond this vale of tears through the Son of God, who is heir of all things, and Christ, who is our life, and is in us the hope of glory.

"HAVE pity upon me, have pity upon me, O ye my friends; for the hand of God hath touched me."—Job xix. 21.

"Turn thee unto me, and have mercy upon me; for I am desolate and afflicted. The troubles of my heart are enlarged: O bring thou me out of my distresses. Look upon mine affliction and my pain; and forgive all my sins."—Psalm xxv. 16-18.

Mrs. Matilda Lemmon, relict of R. M. Lemmon, departed this life Oct. 4th, 1892, after months and years of suffering because of a cancer on her nose and face, which she bore with extraordinary patience and fortitude. Throughout her severe sufferings she manifested a sweet and childlike resignation to her heavenly Father's will, being in a great strait; having an intense desire to depart and be with Christ, forever freed from affliction and anguish, and wondering what the need was for her to remain in this body of flesh to suffer so much, and to be (as she thought) such a burden to the dear, loving ones who so faithfully, kindly and tenderly cared for her and nursed her. This language in Job xiv. 13, 14 seems to be suitable to her, and expressive of her feelings: "O that thou wouldst hide me in the grave, that thou wouldst keep me secret, until thy wrath be past, that thou wouldst appoint me a set time, and remember me! If a man die, shall he live again? all the days of my appointed time will I wait, till my change come."

The subject of this notice was born in Tazewell Co., Va., Nov. 25th, 1810, and hence was nearly eighty-two years of age at the time of her death. She was taken to Kentucky when nine years old, and thence after a few years to Indiana, where in her youth she was married to R. M. Lemmon, and where they raised a family of six children, three sons and three daughters, all of whom (except one daughter) survive them. She with her husband united with the Old School Baptists in Indiana, being baptized by Elder Nathanael Moss, in the fellowship of the Scaffold Prairie Church. This church after awhile became rent on the subject of the resurrection, and she never after ward united with any other church; but she remained sound in the faith of the Old School Baptists, and always loved their doctrine and order. We believe that if in her later years she had lived convenient to the people of her choice, and her health permitted, she would have united with them. She with her husband and family emigrated to Illinois in the year 1849, and thence to Saline Co., Mo., in the year 1865, where a few years later the writer became acquainted with them, and has ever since enjoyed social friendship and sweet spiritual fellowship with them.

She was buried on the 6th of October; and the large number of friends, neighbors and acquaintances who were present on the solemn occasion gave evidence of her worth and the high esteem in which she was held by them. The writer also attended, and talked to the congregation of death and the resurrection, and the hope of eternal life, using the latter part of the fourth chapter and the fore part of the fifth chapter of 2 Corinthians, in the hope that it might soothe and comfort the hearts of the bereaved ones. May the Lord bind up the broken hearts and heal the wounded spirits.

ALSO,

Mary M. Lemmon, daughter of R. M. Lemmon and Matilda Lemmon, died July 7th, 1891, having suffered a long time with eczema, and finally died of catarrh of the stomach.

Mary had been a great sufferer, but had borne her afflictions quietly and without murmuring. She had never made any profession of religion, but sometimes expressed herself that she could not live suffering as she did, and believed it would be better for her to be taken away, that her afflictions might be over. We indulge in sweet hope and abiding faith as pertaining to meek and quiet Mary. May the Lord comfort, cherish and strengthen the bereaved sister Charity, who so long and patiently nursed and cared for her afflicted and suffering sister Mary; also the sister Martha and the sister-in-law, with all the other kind members of the family, who so fully and faithfully shared in all the trials, afflictions and sorrows of this much-bereaved family.

The loved and venerated father, R. M. Lemmon, was first called to his heavenly rest, and soon the dear daughter Mary followed, and now the kind and loving mother is released from her sufferings, conflicts and temptations, and is with them basking in the arms of the dear Savior before the face of the glorious Father, and in the sweet peace and rest of a heavenly home, where they shall no more go out, but ever be in the presence of the gracious God, where there is fullness of joy, and at his right hand, where there are pleasures forevermore.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date. This date denotes the time at which your subscription expires; and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

LEBANON, Ohio, Nov. 20, 1892.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—VERY DEAR BRETHREN IN CHRIST:—I send you some precious letters to do with as you think best. Two of them were written to my dear mother several years ago. While looking over some of my letters a few days ago, and remembering how my mother used to enjoy reading brother Butler's good letters, and of writing to him, I felt that I would love to see them in print. He is a noble christian, and takes your valuable paper. The other letters are from a dear sister in Christ who has lately followed her dear Savior into the liquid stream. Such letters bring to remembrance the time when we with fear and trembling asked for a home with the people of God. I have many of her good letters. She commenced writing to me over a year ago. After reading my experience in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES she said she had wished to write to some one on the glorious subject. The day before I received her first letter I was feeling cast down, dark in mind. I promised I would never again write to any one on this glorious subject. Something said to me that I had deceived the church.

"Sometimes my hope's so little
I almost lay it by;
Sometimes it seems sufficient
If I were called to die."

The editorials and letters in the SIGNS are very precious, and I feel unworthy of such blessings. With christian love, I hope, to all the dear kindred in Christ, from one of the least, if one at all,

MATTIE S. BOWEN.

MARGARETVILLE, N. Y., Oct. 6, 1892.

DEAR FRIEND:—I have had the desire of late to try and comply with the request you once made that I should write you my experience; so this morning I will make the attempt.

I cannot remember the time when I did not have the desire to become a christian, or when I did not love to hear christian people talk, even when a small child. My parents being Old School Baptists, they often entertained the preachers and other members of the churches, while on their way to and from meetings. Thus I often had an opportunity of hearing them converse upon spiritual things. At one place where I used to visit when quite young a gentleman would sing the words, which caused me a great deal of trouble. When I would hear people talking about the end of the world it was very alarming to me, causing many frightful dreams. I remember I once dreamed that the end of time had come; that I saw the angel Gabriel coming in the clouds, blowing the trumpet, and that I was not prepared to go.

"The judgment day is rolling round; Prepare to meet your God;"

After I had passed my sixteenth year the death of a young friend cast a still greater gloom over my mind; for I well knew that I was not prepared for death if the summons should call for me. I then thought I would try to live differently; but it seemed that I could not; for I would break all my good resolutions, and sometimes would greatly enjoy the vain amusements of the world. At other times I would have a great desire to attend the meetings of all denominations, in order that I might hear of some way to be saved. But as my parents were Baptists I seldom had an opportunity of attending elsewhere. Sometimes when I did go to hear those ministers who were educated for the ministry they would remind me much of a schoolboy reciting his declamation; while Elder Gilbert Beebe's preaching always seemed so solemn that I thought it certainly must proceed from the heart; and some quotations of Scripture that he used while preaching I have never forgotten. Then it was a mystery to me that none of the Old Baptist preachers had to study for the ministry, while the others did. The thought would come to me, Surely this is the people of God; and I would wish I were good enough to be one of their number. Then again I would think they were the most bigoted and selfish people upon the earth, and that I would never, under any consideration, want to be one of their number.

Thus time passed on, and a little more than eleven years were spent, until the year 1875, when a dear friend was very suddenly snatched away by the hand of death, which caused me a still greater trouble of mind. I thought she was the most beautiful corpse I had ever gazed upon. I felt certain that she was happy, while I was doomed to everlasting destruction. I think I almost envied her lying there, looking so lovely in death; and she was prepared to go, while I was not. It had seemed to be her delight to converse about her soul's salvation; but

I thought it strange that she had talked to me so much upon the subject, since I knew nothing about it. She was a Presbyterian, and I always believed she was a sincere christian.

I now thought I must be more earnest in the matter of my soul's salvation, so that I might be ready to go if I were taken away very suddenly. As I was then living in a Methodist community I soon had an opportunity of attending a protracted meeting, where I thought I would seek and obtain religion. I went forward for prayers, but it seemed to avail me nothing. I was told to exercise faith, but I could not. I told them I felt like the poet had expressed it,

"Here, Lord, I give myself away;
'Tis all that I can do."

They told me that was all that was necessary. But I thought differently. As I had always been a reader of my Testament, I knew the Scriptures taught, "Ye must be born again." So I knew I was not a fit subject to unite with the church. At times I would fear that I had sinned away my day of grace; that there never would be any hope in my case. At other times I could but hope that the future might bring me some happiness. Once while attending a circus and show the thought came to me that I ought not to be there; that it was no place for me. I was very glad when it was all over, as I found it very tiresome. My friends have since tried to induce me to go, but I never felt that I could enjoy another, although I knew I would meet many old acquaintances. After eight more years had passed I again attended a protracted meeting, carried on by the Methodists. Again I went forward for prayers. They told me I must trust in the Lord. But it did not seem that I could. One afternoon I picked up the Bible, hoping I might find some consolation there. I opened it and read in the Psalms, "It is better to trust in the Lord than to put confidence in man. It is better to trust in the Lord than to put confidence in princes." It seemed as if those words were applied with power to my poor heart, and I felt that I could trust all to the Lord, and that he would do whatever was right in my case. I still attended meetings, and the prayer of my heart was, "God, be merciful to me, a sinner."

I do not think I have ever felt that very deep sense of guilt and burden of sin which others can tell of. I have never felt that my sins were so great that God could not pardon them. I have suffered so much since then that I do not remember just how I did feel; but it seems to me now that I felt that nothing was impossible with God, or too great for him to do.

One December evening, after I had returned from meeting, while reading and meditating upon the Scriptures, there came a very sweet peace into my heart, and these words came into my mind, "Now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace; for mine eyes have seen thy salvation." I was exceedingly happy. It did seem as though I was lifted up; as though heaven and Jesus were very near to me. I felt as though I would like to tell to the world around me what a dear Savior I had found. But I have never been able to tell anyone just how I felt at that time, nor to talk about that great happiness. That evening I retired to rest with a heart filled with thanksgiving unto God for his great mercy unto me, a poor sinner. I attended meetings for a time after this, yet it seemed I never could tell the people of any of my feelings, or talk about this great salvation. The following winter was a very enjoyable one to me, I felt so much of the love of God in my heart. These words would come into my mind, "We love God because he first loved us." "By grace are ye saved, through faith; and that not of yourselves; it is the gift of God. Not of works, lest any man should boast." I felt that it was not for anything I had done, but through the mercy of God, that I was enjoying this sweet peace. I felt to render thanks and praise unto him.

The next spring I experienced the first great sorrow of my life. My dearest earthly friend was taken away; my mother was consigned to the tomb. At the first I thought I never could give her up; but while on my way to the grave I became reconciled to the will of God. These words came into my mind, "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away: blessed be the name of the Lord."

The next summer I was not living as near the church, and did not attend meeting very often. When I did go to hear the Methodists, I did not find the sermon very interesting, as it consisted mostly of anecdotes. As I could not understand Old Baptist doctrine, and as I did not like to hear the Missionary Baptist preacher very well, I concluded I must try and be a Methodist. The next autumn I was again living where I could attend Methodist meeting, and thought I would unite with them. But I could not believe in their mode of sprinkling for baptism, and I felt a desire to be immersed. One day while attending a funeral I heard Elder Hubbell preach a sermon from the text, "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth. Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them." That was a precious sermon to me, and I have never heard another quite as good since then. I felt that I loved the Old Baptist people, and that they were far above me, so that I never could attain unto them; that they knew what I did not. They believed in election, which I could not understand, and therefore could not believe. I sometimes think that I did not want to; that I was a little too proud to go with this people that are everywhere spoken against. I wanted to go with the more popular religionists of the day.

Another year passed, and I was again mourning the loss of a parent; my father was taken from this world of sin and sorrow. You also know how hard it is to part with loved ones. But God can all our sorrows heal. During the winter following I attended the Missionary Baptist meetings; also a church calling themselves "Disciples." I also attended a Lutheran meeting, where they had a large pipe organ. But I could not believe just as they did. The next autumn I attended an Old Baptist association. It seemed good to me to be there, to meet with this people whom I could not help loving; but as I could not understand their doctrine, I could never expect to have a home with them. As I was again living near a Methodist Church I attended their meetings. The next year I was stricken down with a fever. Although some of my relatives died of the fever, I did not feel any fear. My mind was in a calm and peaceful state, and I felt that whether I recovered or not it would be all right; that I was in the hands of God, and he would do what seemed best unto him. After my recovery I again thought I would unite with the Methodists; but I did not, for my heart would be drawn out to the Old Baptists. Sometimes I would attend their meetings, and would hear such a good sermon that I would be loth to leave the place.

"My willing soul would stay
In such a frame as this,
And sit and sing itself away
To everlasting bliss."

The next winter my eldest brother was taken away. After his death I felt differently. I thought if I could not have a home with the Old Baptists I never could have one anywhere. The next summer after my return home from my sister-in-law's, I would sometimes feel sorry that I had not united with the Missionary Baptists while there, as I liked to hear their preacher quite well, and had a great desire to be baptized. Soon after this my health became very poor, so that I was unable to attend meeting. When the cold weather came on I grew worse, so that I was unable to sit up. But O! my distress of mind at times was far worse than my bodily pains. It did seem as if I would utterly perish; as though there could be no hope in my case; nothing but despair; that I was of all beings the most miserable, without hope or God in the world. It almost makes me shudder now when I think of the awful temptations I then passed through. That was a long, dark year that followed. Although some portions of Scripture at times would come into my mind, yet that did not relieve me. I felt that I deserved it all, but I did not know that any of God's people ever passed through such trying scenes. Thanks be unto God, who giveth us the victory, he saw fit to restore unto me the joy of his salvation, and also to reveal unto me the precious doctrine of his electing love, for which I feel to bless his holy name.

The next winter was a very happy one to me; and some of my happiest moments have been while suffering the most severe pain. I then felt my heart continually going out in love to God and his people. I sometimes think it is good for me to be afflicted, to humble my proud heart and stay it upon God. I believe you know the rest.

I am glad to hear that your health is improving. Mine is also. I have been able to attend meeting once, and heard Elder Hubbell preach an excellent sermon. I did not realize how tired I was until I was on my way home. The sermon did me so much good that I think I felt my heart go out to God in gratitude for his goodness and mercy. As cold weather is coming on, and I have so many sick days, I do not expect I shall be able to go to meeting again very soon.

I fear you will find this letter very uninteresting. Several days have passed since I commenced it, and I feel it is very poorly written. If you think it worth the while, please write me what you think of it all, for I am feeling more and more my imperfections.

Yours in love,
PHEBE J. FAULKNER.

MARGARETVILLE, N. Y., Nov. 4, 1892.

MISS MATTIE S. BOWEN—DEAR SISTER:—My petition has been granted, my request performed. Yes, the great desire of my heart, that I might be numbered with God's dear people, has been granted me. I have so longed to call you all brethren and sisters. But why should I, who am so weak and unworthy, and do not deserve this great happiness I am now enjoying? It seems too good to be real that I am now at home with the Old Baptists. I received your letter on Saturday evening, soon after my return from church meeting. I was so anxious to attend the last two meetings preceding this one; but I did not feel well enough to go. My head was feeling very badly on Saturday morning, so that I was afraid I would have to give up the idea and remain at home; and as the weather was rainy at intervals, I tried to convince myself that I better not go. While pondering the subject these words came into my mind, "Child, your Father calls, Come home." Then I felt I should make the attempt. At some other times when wanting to go to some place my strength would fail me, so that I would have to stay at home; but on Saturday as soon as I made preparations for going I began to feel better. Once last summer while mourning over my wicked thoughts, and trying to persuade myself that I ought not ask for a home with so good a people, these words came to me, "She hath done what she could." I knew they were the words of the Savior, and they made me have a greater longing to go with them if my health would permit me. But one year ago last summer when I had such an overwhelming desire to be baptized, and it seemed that almost every command in the Bible was sent home to me, it wore away in measure. I thought perhaps it might this time also, as I felt a little more reconciled to wait than I did at that time. A few weeks ago, while riding along by the side of the stream where I was baptized, the water looked so sweet to me that it caused me to think that perhaps the time was not far distant when I would be enabled to follow my Savior into a watery grave. Yet these thoughts would come to me, that the weather was growing colder, and it would not be advisable for one in my state of health to go into the water; also, I had always thought I never could tell anything that would prove satisfactory to the church. But after reading Elder Jenkins' letter, published in the SIGNS, I felt a little more encouraged. As he said the church did not require one to tell a great deal, I thought perhaps I might be enabled to tell a little; and the prayer of my heart had been that I might tell enough to be admitted into the church, as you, sister, had said in the SIGNS. It was very little that I did tell; but I tried to answer all questions that were asked me. One morning, a few days before this, these words, "Are you willing to give up all for Christ?" came to my mind. I felt that I would gladly do so if I were only strong enough, only well enough to attend meeting. On Sunday morning my head was feeling worse than on Saturday, so that I was afraid I would not be able to go; but, as on the preceding day, I felt better as soon as I began to make preparations. After listening to an excellent sermon, and the storm soon abating, we repaired to the stream, and I was baptized by Elder Hubbell. After coming out of the water I was loth to leave the place and people and return home. While on the road these words came to me, "Grace, mercy and peace be unto you." That evening my heart went out in gratitude to God for his great kindness unto me. Dear sister, no words can express the sweet comfort and peace that I have enjoyed since following the Lord. Ought I not always feel to praise my great Benefactor, who has been so merciful and kind to me? Surely all my days are his due. May they all be devoted to him. I do hope I shall never do anything to dishonor the cause I so dearly love. But I well know that of myself alone I can do nothing; but the Scriptures assure us that we can do all things through Christ that strengtheneth us, for which I feel to bless his adorable name.

"For good is the Lord, inexpressibly good,

And we are the work of his hand;
His mercy and truth from eternity stood,
And shall to eternity stand."

I am the least deserving of these mercies. Not one good act can I plead, but simply to the cross I cling. Helpless, I look to God for grace.

You have always written very encouraging letters to me, and I could not rest contented until I had written you of my present happy state. Although the past two years have been bright ones to me, yet I did not enjoy the rest, the answer of a good conscience, that I now feel. As my health is gradually improving I do not understand why I could not wait until I became stronger; but it seemed that I was not willing to wait any longer. I was very tired when I arrive home, yet I did not regret it. Jesus says if we do not take up our cross and follow him, we cannot be his disciples. "And why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things that I say?"

"Be joyful in God, all ye lands of the earth,

And serve him with gladness and fear;
Exult in his presence with music and mirth,

With love and devotion draw near."

I have thought that I never wanted to see any of my writings in print; but as some have expressed satisfaction in reading the other letter, you can do as you think best about sending the letter you mentioned; yet I feel the SIGNS is too good a paper to publish anything I can write.

From a little sister who desires to be kept from every evil way,

PHEBE J. FAULKNER.

SUNDAY, Nov. 25, 1877.

MY DEAR SISTER IN CHRIST:—I wrote the heading of the above date one week ago, but felt so cold and lifeless that I did not proceed. I do not feel much different to-night. Truly this world is a waste howling wilderness, full of dangers to the traveler wending his way through thickets, under which lie some lurking foe, ready to devour him. This is a sad picture; but when we look on the other side we find a better day dawning, which has a most cheering aspect. That eye which never sleeps nor slumbers is ever watchful of these poor pilgrims. The Lord leads them about and instructs them, as he did Jacob, and he keeps them as the apple of his eye. They are precious in his sight. He will carry the lambs in his bosom, and gently lead those that are with young.

"Even down to old age all his people shall prove His sovereign, eternal, unchangeable love."

What a consolation is this! David says, "Before I was afflicted I went astray." Dear sister, it is only to fill up the cup of suffering that is left behind, and goes to make up the all things, that work together for our good. The wicked are not troubled like others. When we were dead in trespasses and sins we were without knowledge of the deep depravity of our nature. Everything seemed to pass along smoothly till the Husbandman began to break the sod, and then we could see the thorns, thistles, briars and brambles. The word of God is sharper than any two-edged sword. It went down into the intents of the heart. It showed us what we were. And as we are now no better by nature, it is necessary for us to have troubles. Trials make the promise sweet, and bring us to the feet of Jesus, and keep us there. O how many who profess to be his disciples are not brought to his feet to learn of him, and are never able to come to the knowledge of the truth. If we suffer with him, we shall be glorified together, being heirs of God, and joint heirs with Jesus Christ, to an inheritance which is incorruptible, reserved in heaven. It is not given to us here, only we have a foretaste, an earnest, causing us to hope. Hope that is seen is not hope; therefore we with patience wait for it.

Dear sister, when we feel cast down and careworn, let us think of Jesus, who was a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief, even treading the winepress of the wrath of Almighty God for such poor, hell-deserving sinners as we are. Yes, he who was rich, for our sake's became poor, having nowhere to lay his head. O how tender and compassionate his words, "Father, I will that they also whom thou hast given me be with me where I am." Let us cast all our care upon him, dear sister, for he careth for us. He says, "I have loved thee with an everlasting love; therefore with loving-kindness have I drawn thee."

Your brother in hope of a better life than this,

B. F. BUTLER.

WOODHULL, Ill., Jan. 18, 1878.

MRS. AMANDA BOWEN—DEAR SISTER:—Your letter came safely to hand, and the only fault I found with it was that it was too brief. I like so well to read your letters, as they have the right sound; nothing but the same old, old story, which is forever new; the praise of the dear Redeemer, who is worthy of all praise and adoration.

"Worthy the Lamb, they cry,
To be exalted thus."

Yea, thrice worthy, having had compassion on a sinful worm like me. O what a stiffnecked creature man is, always prone to wander from the God he was made to love and adore. Such a sinful heart I daily carry about with me, that I am made to exclaim with one of old, "O wretched man that I am!" Some may think that to be born again means that the subject of grace is born over again; but I must believe different; for in me (that is, in my flesh) there dwells no good thing. But I do hope that I possess a spirit that is of God. "It is the Spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing." It is the Spirit that quickeneth or manifests us as spiritual subjects. Thus we are no more under the law, for we have been delivered from its bondage and curse by the body of Christ, who put away sin by the sacrifice of himself, in offering himself once without spot to God. He fulfilled the law and made it honorable by his obedience under and to it. The life of the sacrifice was required. The blood, or vital principle, or life, was made to flow out. His blood, Paul says, speaketh better things than that of Abel. Being applied to our consciences it speaks peace to our sin-burdened souls.

Dear sister, while some profess such a power to exert, and thank God that they can and do such good deeds, by which they are justified before God, and are so good, I must confess that I have nothing to plead in his sight but the merits of his Son; for I am such a sinful creature that nothing but his blood will cleanse my polluted soul from its guilt and sin. Therefore I must exclaim, "Thanks be to God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." He has blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ. Yes, it is all Christ; for he is the Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end. He was dead, and is alive forevermore. He holds the keys of hell and of death. He shuts, and no man opens. He opens, and no man shuts. Therefore if I must sing I will sing of grace, free grace.

I have penned these few lines as the thoughts have occurred to my mind. You will make due allowance.

Your brother, I hope,

B. F. BUTLER.

NORTONVILLE, Ky., April, 1892.

MISS MARY PARKER—DEAR SISTER IN CHRIST:—If you, who are so spiritually blessed, will allow one who is so poor and ignorant to thus address you. This is how I feel, poor and ignorant. I thought I would tell you of some of my travels; and if you shall think them as sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal, lay this in the waste-basket at once, and all will be well with me.

I was born in the year 1862. When quite young I had serious thoughts about the world coming to an end. I was told that this world would be burned with fire, and that the good people would go to heaven, while the bad people would go to the bad place. Of course I very much dreaded that day; for I thought I would be lost, as they told me I was a very disobedient child, and that the bad man would get me if I did not do better and say my prayers every night. So when all had retired, and the lamp was put out, I would arise and kneel beside my little pallet on the floor, and in my childish way ask God to make me a better child. But it seemed as though he would not hear me, because I was so bad, and because I was a poor orphan. My mother was a widow, and not able to take care of her children, so my sister and I were put out to make our own support. I fell into the hands of rich people, who belonged to one of the so-called Baptist Churches. In the five years of my stay with them I know they never visited a poor person, and one that was poor was a stranger in their house, unless they were hired to do some work. I continued in this way until I was old enough, as I thought, to understand preaching. The preaching that I heard was that every one, rich and poor, had an equal chance of salvation; so I prayed often to our heavenly Father to forgive my past sins, and that I might be better in the future. But something would seem to say, "You are a hypocrite. Your words are only from the lips." This would make me feel very sad, and I would think, It is no matter for you, for you have broken your promises. You said you would do better, but instead you have done worse. Then I would try to dismiss it from my mind. By this time I was fourteen years of age, and went to live with a family that belonged to the "Christian Church," so-called. They allowed me the privilege of attending Sunday School. I thought this quite a treat, and thought if I would continue to go, and learn my lesson well, and be a better girl, the Lord would forgive me. At the age of sixteen I attended a protracted meeting which they carried on. The preacher made it appear very plain. He said all we must do was to believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, and be baptized, and we would be saved. Well, I believed that Jesus Christ was the Son of God, for I read it in the Bible, and verily thought it a crime to disbelieve the Bible. So I was baptized and joined their church, and thought all was right. I was told to read the Bible and pray diligently; and I would come out all right. I thought I would read the New Testament through; but when I read I did not understand. When I came to the place where Jesus said to Nicodemus, "Verily, verily I say unto thee, except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God," something seemed to say, "You know you have not been born again." I would think, Are all the people that belong to this church playing the part of a deceiver? I thought that perhaps I did not understand them, and would hear them again. But I would say, That is the way he preached before, and surely a man would not preach a falsehood.

I went on in this way until the year 1888. During this time I was married. My husband received a hope, and tried to explain to me how it was. He said he understood the Scriptures to teach that the elect only were saved, and that it was not for anything good they had done or could do. I told him I could not believe that. I said God would be unjust to save one man, and let another go down to destruction without a chance of salvation. Then he would get the Bible and try to read to me; but I would not hear him. I told him he knew how hard it would be for me to give him up, but that I would rather see him die and bury him than to know he believed that doctrine. I thought it would be a disgrace. I told him I did not believe in the church I had joined, but I believed in a change of heart. Then the thought came to me, How are you going to get that change of heart? You have tried with all your power. Then my trouble came with double force. Something would say, "You have committed the unpardonable sin. You have sinned against the Holy Ghost." At length these words came into my mind, "A woman shall be saved in childbearing." So I prayed the Lord to take me away at that time, as it was near at hand with me, and I had three little ones to leave. But I could see no other chance for poor me. I got the Bible and thought I would find the words and read them; and, strange as it may seem, the book opened right at the place, but, alas! it did not read as I had thought. "Notwithstanding she shall be saved in childbearing, if they continue in faith and charity and holiness with sobriety." Did this suit my case? No indeed. My last prop was gone; so on I went, groping about in darkness, until the fall of 1889, when my husband went to the church and was received, on Saturday before the first Sunday in September. When he returned home I asked him if he went to the church. He said he did, and was received, and was to be baptized on the morrow. I was ironing at the time, and stood for a few moments. If he had said, I will be buried to-morrow, I would not have felt worse. I did not think he had done wrong. I was the one that was wrong. The next day we all went to meeting, and my

THE APOSTLES' DOCTRINE.

"THESE things command and teach."
—1 Tim. iv. 11.

In nothing is the divine wisdom of that inspiration which guided the apostles more clearly manifest than in the definite directions which are left on record in their writings, by which the man of God is thoroughly furnished unto all good works. Not only does it provide for every contingency which ever can arise in the experience of the saints while they remain in time, but it forbids their depending upon reason, the wisdom of this world, for advice under any circumstance. So entirely distinct is the kingdom of Christ from the governments of this world that it is impossible for the wisdom of this world to see the kingdom of God, or to recognize either the King or his chosen subjects. Being so completely separate from all earthly kingdoms, none of the princes of this world can know the principle of righteousness in which this divine government is founded; much less can any laws devised by them be adapted to the condition of the inhabitants of this everlasting and infinite dominion of the Prince of peace. The only law which can be recognized by the followers of the Lord Jesus is the perfect law of liberty which is put in their hearts by the Spirit of truth. For their instruction in discriminating between the precepts of this law and the suggestions of their natural minds, the inspired word is given as the only standard of infallible authority. Whatever may be the plausible appearance of any theory or practice which may claim their obedience, nothing can authorize their departure from the pathway of righteousness as it is revealed in the sacred oracles of God, which are written for our instruction by the men whom the Spirit of Christ moved to set in order all things "in the house of God, which is the church of the living God, the pillar and ground of the truth."

If there had been any possibility that the church could be capable of making rules for her own government, it would seem that those who in the primitive age had enjoyed the personal ministry of the Lord and his directly inspired apostles would have possessed every qualification by which to be guided in framing such a code. But even those ministers who were personally instructed by the apostles were not competent to teach anything but what was given them by apostolic ministration. The apostles themselves claimed no power to make laws for the government of the church of Christ. They could only declare authoritatively the precepts of that law which was ordained by the Lord Jesus as the King in Zion. Neither earthly monarchs nor ecclesiastical councils can add a single precept to the law as established by divine commandment in the inspired volume. The saints are not at liberty to acknowledge any authority in the doctrine or order in the church but that which bears the seal of this royal origin in the word of the Lord. Every word of his must be confessed as righteous and true; and by the same test every word which is not received from him must be rejected as rebellion against his sovereign authority. The apostolic directions recorded in the New Testament, being written under the guidance of the Holy Ghost must be infallibly complete in every time and place where the church of Christ can ever be located in this temporal condition. It should not be forgotten that all the revelation which God has given is for the benefit of his people while they are in this earthly house of their tabernacle. When they awake with the likeness of their Redeemer, in the perfection of eternal glory, they will have no need for even the instruction which is now so precious as it is received by the direct ministration of the blessed Comforter. Under the trials and afflictions which are encountered in this present evil world there is nothing given in the sacred Scriptures but that is needful for their profit and support. The provision of the organized church relationship is not to be regarded as of trivial importance. While the saints are not to be deceived by the false doctrines with which the religious teachers of this world delude their followers into supposing that they secure their eternal salvation by membership in a church, yet they are not to be unmindful of the blessedness which is experienced in keeping the precepts and following in the example ordained by the commandment of their Lord. This is the sum of all the instruction written for our learning in the Scriptures, and this is in harmony with the leading of the Spirit of truth in the individual experience of the saints. In obedience to the word of the Lord the saints have the answer of a good conscience toward God, while in disobedience they bring upon themselves the chastening rod with which the Lord visits the transgressions of his children.

The specification of "these things" as the embodiment of what the ministers of Christ are to enjoin upon the churches of the saints, forbids that any other things should be presented as of divinely ordained appointment. Many other things have at various times been urged upon the disciples as important; and perhaps in some cases since the apostolic day there have been teachers who claimed to be ministers of Christ while urging upon the saints the necessity of adding works of their own to the grace of God in Christ Jesus. Such teaching is so flattering to the pride of the carnal mind that it is readily accepted by reason as a consistent modification of the doctrine of the apostles; and when it is accepted by the saints, they are already brought into bondage under the yoke of legality. The imposition of a single action to be performed by the sinner as a condition of his eternal salvation, excludes the possibility of salvation by grace. It is therefore impossible that there should be any grace in a system which rests upon conditions to be performed by the sinner. If he has complied with the conditions, he may demand the reward as his rightful compensation; if he has not met the supposed conditions, there is no salvation for him by that conditional theory. This is conclusively demonstrated by Paul, "Even so then at this present time also there is a remnant according to the election of grace. And if by grace, then it is no more of works; otherwise grace is no more grace. But if it be of works, then it is no more grace; otherwise work is no more work."—Rom. xi. 5, 6. This must be regarded as unquestionably true in recognizing the doctrine of God our Savior, as it is defined by the inspired apostles of our Lord Jesus Christ. Hence, there can be no departure from the simplicity of this gospel of the grace of God without rejecting the very foundation of the doctrine which bears the seal of apostolic authority.

In condemnation of the presumption of such teachers as would introduce amendments to the original system of divine truth, it should be observed that not even the apostles themselves were at liberty to make any alterations in the message which they had received from their Lord. When they were sent forth into all the world, their risen Lord commanded them to "Teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you. And, lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world. Amen." If they had ventured to add one item to the commandment which they had received, or if they had failed to teach the observance of one thing which their Lord had enjoined, they could not have obeyed the high commission which was given them, and consequently they would not have been sustained by the presence of Jesus with them always. Let it be remembered that our Lord did not say, I will be with you, but "I am with you always." This is a very material point. By the gift of the Holy Ghost those chosen apostles were qualified to establish the doctrine and order which the Lord gave them. In doing this great work they were dependent upon him for wisdom and every needed direction to guide them in the pathway of perfect righteousness. He had told them before this time, "Without me ye can do nothing;" and they had learned the same truth in their past experience. So David says, "The Lord gave the word; great was the company of them that published it."—Psalm lxxviii. 11. If all the saints could be assembled in one place at one time, they could have no power to make a single rule which should have authority in the church of Christ. "For the Lord is our judge, the Lord is our lawgiver, the Lord is our king; he will save us."—Isa. xxxiii. 22. In the confidence which this truth affords, there is a perfect rest for all those who trust in the Lord. The doctrine of God our Savior secures the deliverance of every subject of electing love in the complete work of our Redeemer. Not only is this salvation sufficient for their deliverance from the power of death in the hour of their departure from this present evil world; it secures their victory in every conflict through which they are called to pass while in their pilgrimage through the wilderness of sin in which they sojourn here in time. No other assurance could justify their hope of salvation but the revelation which shines in the immutability of that eternal purpose and grace of God which is declared in the doctrine as delivered by the gracious Comforter to the apostles, who were chosen of God to proclaim the gospel to the end of the world. So long as the apostolic testimony continues to be the truth of God, so long is the glorified Redeemer with them as his inspired servants; and every decision which is rendered by their judgment is of equal weight and authority with the decision spoken by his own sovereign and omnipotent voice. This infinite sovereignty of our King is the very foundation of all the doctrine of salvation as testified by the apostles. Without it there could be no certainty of the ultimate triumph of divine grace in the salvation of the chosen vessels of mercy. The very name of Jesus could not be secure unless this firm foundation were established beyond the possibility of removal. It was given him, "for he shall save his people from their sins." Therefore this truth must be included among the things which the man of God must "command and teach." This will necessarily involve all the rest of the doctrine of the gospel of the grace of God.

For the information and qualification of those who are called of God to "earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints," the whole testimony of Jesus Christ is written by the pen of inspiration. The ministers of the gospel of whom Timothy was a pattern, are not left to their own discretion to decide what they are to testify in the churches to which they are called to minister. Neither are they at liberty to present their own best judgment as the message from the Lord to their brethren. Doubtless much confusion has resulted from the failure of some ministers to confine their teaching to those things which they have received by the gift of the Holy Ghost. Since the doctrine of the apostles is the record of inspiration, it necessarily follows that there can be no discrepancy between that record and the teaching of the same Spirit of truth in the individual experience of every one who is taught of God in the present time. Wherever there is a want of harmony found to exist between what we have believed and the apostles' doctrine, which is the rule established by inspiration, the error must always be in our own minds. However it may seem advisable to endeavor to conform their doctrine to the sentiments of those among whom they labor, the servants of Christ can never yield one principle of the apostles' doctrine without forsaking their fellowship. The gospel of the grace of God in salvation embraces every principle of divine truth, and this is all included in the things which Timothy was enjoined to command and teach. There was nothing left to his discretion as to whether it was profitable to the saints to whom he ministered. Neither was he at liberty to suggest anything as an addition to those things which he had received of the apostles. He was simply to be confined to teaching "these things," which were of divine authority. Of this probably no minister of Christ will need to be convinced by labored arguments. But it may not be so clear at a casual glance how the minister of Christ is to exercise the authority implied in the injunction to "command" these things. When led by the Spirit of Christ every saint feels that he is in need of some one to direct himself, and can have no inclination to assert authority over any one, much less over his brethren whom he esteems better than himself. How can the minister, who is the servant of all, "command" the observance of these things? Certainly it is not by assuming to have special authority delegated to him as a ruler over the church of God. Indeed, it is one of the things which every servant of Christ must "command and teach," to "Let nothing be done through strife or vainglory; but in lowliness of mind let each esteem other better than themselves." Such Christlike humility can never be commanded and taught by the usurpation of authority over one another.

The only obedience which can fulfill the injunction of our text is found in the perfect pattern given by the Captain of our salvation. "Though he were a Son, yet learned he obedience by the things which he suffered." In this heavenly example he commands and teaches all his disciples to observe the order and learn the doctrine which is of higher authority than the precepts of that law which was written upon tables of stone, as the eternal throne of Christ is more glorious than the iron rule of Moses. The perfect law of liberty is ordained by the commandment of the King in Zion; and they who are called to publish his precepts must insist upon the authority of every word which bears the seal of this divine origin. In no other way can any servant of the Lord exercise dominion over the freeborn subjects of salvation. Not even the chosen apostles could command obedience to any precept unless it was ordained by the authority of their Lord. Much less can any minister be justified in dictating rules of his own invention for the observance of the saints. It cannot be that this direction implies the establishing of the power in the ministry to control the faith or conduct of the saints to whom they minister in the proclamation of the word of the Lord. While Timothy and every minister whom God has called and qualified must earnestly contend for the faith, there is no power committed to any created being to command the observance of any things other than those which are set in order by the apostles. In commanding these things the obedience required is rendered to the Lord, who is the author and finisher of "the apostles' doctrine," and whose commandment gives validity to every ordinance and practice which the church is at liberty to observe. To such commandments the ministry must render implicit obedience, as is enjoined upon Timothy, "Let no man despise thy youth; but be thou an example of the believers, in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity." Certainly, this involves the obligation upon the minister himself to obey every injunction which he is authorized to command in the name of the Lord. Thus it will be manifest that the injunction in our text is in harmony with the apostolic admonition, "For I say, through the grace given unto me, to every man that is among you, not to think of himself more highly than he ought to think; but to think soberly, according as God hath dealt to every man the measure of faith."—Rom. xii. 3. This is the rule to which the saints are admonished to render obedience and submission. "Obey them that have the rule over you, and submit yourselves; for they watch for your souls, as they that must give account, that they may do it with joy, and not with grief; for that is unprofitable for you."—Heb. xiii. 17.

In the doctrine of the apostles is included not only all the principles of the gospel, but also the whole law and order of the church. There is nothing left to the suggestions of blind reason, or to be adapted to the circumstances of the case when it shall be presented. Infinite wisdom has provided for every emergency which can ever arise in the whole experience of all the saints. Not only is this true of the law which is given to the church, but also in the victorious conflict of the Captain of our salvation there is the complete example in which every saint in every time of trial must be made to triumph. Thus our Lord gives the victory to his followers; and it is "Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts."—Zech. iv. 6. This perfect law of liberty cannot be reduced to a mere literal compliance with the words of any precept. It is only fulfilled in spirit and in truth when the saints are led by the principle of the love of God, and walk in the Spirit, and crucify the flesh with the affections and lusts. This is the discipline established in the apostles' doctrine.

IT IS VERY IMPORTANT

That great care should be taken in sending a renewal of subscriptions, to give us the same name as the one to whom the paper is already coming. If the party is married be sure the initials are given correctly; for if the paper is coming in the wife's name and the husband writes us to send the paper the next year, and signs his own name, we have no means of knowing that the person to whom the paper is going is his wife; and not finding his name on our list he is entered as a new subscriber and the paper sent to both; or if the paper is going in the husband's name and the renewal sent on in the wife's name, the result will be the same. The best way is to inclose in your letter one of the little pink slips containing the name pasted either on the margin of the paper or on the wrapper in which it comes.

DONATIONS.

As may be seen by our published receipts, the brethren and friends are contributing with their usual liberality to the fund to enable us to send the paper to those brethren and sisters who are not able to pay for it, and yet love to read it. We doubt if there is any way the same amount of money could be expended to give as much real joy and true happiness, to as many, as is derived from the contributions to this fund. It is the poor and needy, as to this world's goods, that are the best capacitated to enjoy spiritual blessings; and could those who have sent their donations, see some of the many letters we receive, expressing the gratitude of those benefited by their generosity, they would feel that it is truly more blessed to give than to receive.

HAVE YOU KEPT YOUR SUPPLEMENT?

If not, and you are an old subscriber, and have paid the regular price for your paper, you can secure another copy of the supplement by writing us to send you one, as we have an extra supply on hand. We expect to make frequent reference through the SIGNS to it, and you ought not be without one.

husband was baptized. I thought he looked very happy; and the preacher prayed for any one who was a mourner on account of their sins. I thought surely he was praying for me, for indeed I did mourn. My last hope was gone. I thought my case was an outside one. At last this Scripture came to my mind, "Nay but, O man, who art thou that repliest against God? Shall the thing formed say to him that formed it, Why hast thou made me thus?" I then was made to see how God could be just and send me down to destruction. My prayer was then, "Lord, help mine unbelief." Then I was made to rejoice in salvation by grace. But I thought I would not tell any one about it. My people were all Campbellites, and when with them I would tell them what a precious Savior I had found, and how I had been led out of darkness into light. But they would only say that my husband had pulled the wool over my eyes. By this time I had become tame. I wanted to hear my husband read and explain. I desired to be taught. My husband told me I ought to go to the church. I told him I did not have anything to tell. I wanted to live with the people he was living with, the Old School Baptists. He told me to go, and if I was not worthy to live with them they would tell me so. So I went to the church on Saturday before the first Sunday in July, 1890, and was baptized the next day by Elder J. C. Riggan. I have had many doubts and fears since then, and say and do many things that are unlike a christian. We are very poor; but if my little hope will reach beyond the grave it will be all right.

I must close. I know you will get tired. Remember me in your prayers, and may I live nearer the throne.

Your unworthy sister, I hope,
ELLEN HIBBS.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, Ind., Dec., 1892.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—I wrote the following last winter; but it seemed so weak and so far short of what might be said, I threw it aside; but now I send it with my remittance, for you to read and burn if you choose. I still love the SIGNS. I have had a feast to-day reading "Mount Moriah." I have an experience with that brother, "Trying to look to the end of the bitter, could see nothing but the ashes."

Yours in the valley,
LINA W. BECK.

On the 26th day of December I had a cousin from Wisconsin visiting me. During our conversation she turned to my daughters and asked if they went to Sunday School. My eldest answered, "We do not go; for our parents, you know, do not believe in them." She seemed surprised and very anxious; and turning to me with such a grieved tone, she said, "Cousin Lina, it is very important that you should let them go. We must be up and doing, or we will be left behind. When the Savior was here on earth he watched over and cared for all the people; but now we are left to work out our own salvation. He told us to redeem our time. Every Sabbath day I attend two Sunday Schools and two preaching services, and one Christian Endeavor, making five meetings in all; so that the Sabbath is my most busy day, and am more weary at night than during the week when I teach my school; but I am so happy in the work for the Lord." Her talk made me feel sad. I did not reply to her, for her faith was so different from mine. I had not so learned Christ, and I could not make her understand my language. In the evening she left us, to go to her home and her duties; but for several days and nights her words were in my thoughts, and caused me to search the Scriptures to find who was in the wrong. I said to myself, I must be one of the foolish virgins who have no oil in their lamps. I kept going back over my unprofitable life, trying to gather up my good deeds; but alas! when I reached the end I had a bundle of nothing, and less than nothing. Finally one night while on my bed, whether sleeping or waking I cannot tell, my cousin seemed before me, and I was addressing her. The first I remember saying was, "But woe unto you Pharisees! for ye tithe mint and rue, and all manner of herbs, and pass over judgment and the love of God (Luke xi. 42). My cousin, be not offended with me. Jesus spake these words himself; and I feel either you or the Scriptures are wrong. In the eighteenth chapter of Luke Jesus spoke a parable unto certain which trusted in themselves that they were righteous, and despised others. 'Two men went up into the temple to pray; the one a Pharisee, and the other a publican. The Pharisee stood and prayed thus with himself: God, I thank thee that I am not as other men are, extortioners, unjust, adulterers, or even as this publican. I fast twice in the week; I give tithes of all I possess. And the publican, standing afar off, would not lift up so much as his eyes unto heaven, but smote upon his breast, saying, God, be merciful to me, a sinner. I tell you, this man went down to his house justified rather than the other: for every one that exalteth himself shall be abased; and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted.' You quote 'Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy;' and then acknowledge to me that you work harder and are more fatigued on that day than on any day that you labor for money. Who has required all this at your hands? It cannot be found in my Bible. When Samuel was old and gray headed he called Israel together and asked who had aught against him. And when they answered that there was nothing against him, that he had lived an honest and honorable life, hear him say, not one word about his good life, but, 'Now therefore stand still, that I may reason with you before the Lord of all the righteous acts of the Lord, which he did to you and to your fathers.' I have found long ago that we can do nothing to merit salvation. The Spirit quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing. Every one that hath heard of the Father cometh to Jesus. He giveth the hearing ear.

'None but Jesus, none but Jesus,
Can do helpless sinners good.'

He is the chiefest among ten thousand, the altogether lovely. What comfort and rest there is in Jesus. He is our true Sabbath of rest."

LINA W. BECK.

NEW CHURCH, Va., Dec. 19, 1892.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—Having to renew my subscription, I thought I would send you a short salutation for the SIGNS. I have been a subscriber to and reader of the SIGNS for about thirty years, and can in truth say that to me it is like the precious gospel of the Son of God. It has not yet become old or lifeless, because it has not become stale by departing from the original prospectus in doctrine, as some have undertaken to show. My love and attachment to the paper is stronger to-day than it was twenty-five years ago, by reason of what it contains. I have had copies of quite a number of Baptist papers sent to me, but I have yet to read the first one that suits me as well as the SIGNS. Some might say that it is selfishness. If so, I cannot help it. The SIGNS, to me, advocates but one Sovereign, and that is the God of the whole earth. No sovereign devil, no sovereign man or creature, no author or source of predestination but the one Sovereign, who predestinated, and then works all things after the counsel of his predestination or will. For my life I cannot see how sound, understanding Baptists can say, "O, I believe in the predestination of God if you will leave out the word absolute, or all things." In the strict sense of the word, that is not a belief in predestination that will stand the test. If the definition of the word that I now have before me is correct, it is the purpose of God from eternity respecting all events. Well, that covers the ground. I am sorry and feel pained at heart to think that brethren will draw the sword and wage war against the doctrine that has ever distinguished the church of God from all the broods of antichrist; and a great mystery to me is why this opposition should arise in certain localities. Brethren, can you tell me? May God help us all to remember that we are dust, and exercise lenity or sympathy toward each other; for one cannot profitably force an interpretation upon another. God must reveal all things respecting his purpose or character. I know this by personal experience; for I remember when I could no more have embraced joyfully the predestination of God, than Jacob could when he said, "All these things are against me." How hard it is to believe in that which seems to us against right. But God sees the right in all his ways and judgments; and no mortal can frame a bar of judgment by which he may be tried, because God is before and above all.

Another thing I discover in my travels and research is that there are so many Old Baptists who are without the SIGNS. Yet they are strict subscribers to and readers of the local and other newspapers. Here comes up another mystery to me, how it is that so many Old Baptists can live on such short rations spiritually, when it takes such heavy feeding for the body. With my poor self it seems to take every promise and every blessing that I can gather from reading the Bible, listening to gospel preaching, reading the SIGNS, comparing the experience of others with my own, and the mind of others relative to the general doctrine of the Bible, with my own mind, and all the solemn meditations and direct revelations; it takes all this to keep my feet from stumbling, and my heart from fainting. Dear brethren, you who are without the SIGNS have no idea what you are missing. You are not only missing the nourishing food that your hungering and famishing souls need, but you have no knowledge of when or where the Lord is reviving the hearts of his people in appearing in his glory in building up his precious Zion; so you cannot rejoice with them. I do not wish to appear vain in this, but it seems to me that rather than be without the SIGNS I would be willing to divide, and have some natural food and some spiritual, if I could not have a full allowance of both; for to eat and drink to the satisfying of our carnal appetites is not all that we live for, unless we have become rich, needing nothing; like unto the church of the Laodiceans, who had forgotten that they were wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked: a lamentable picture indeed.

Brethren Beebe, I would swell the list of subscribers to the SIGNS for the next year if I could; not wholly for your interest, but for the interest of the readers also. I would be so glad to see the SIGNS in every Baptist family where I go. I think it would keep them healthy spiritually; for the time that is now upon us requires all the good, sound gospel preaching and experimental correspondence, as a defense against the adversaries of our peace; for the army of antichrist is compassing both sea and land, and many a dear one without the knowledge of the Lord working among his people, only as they see about them, would feel like poor old Elijah when he thought idolatry had swept over all Israel, and that himself alone was left. How consoling it must have been to his poor heart when the Lord spoke to him in his complaint. So when we look around, and see nothing around us but error and blind zeal, and then pick up the dear old SIGNS, it seems to speak to us from a far country, saying, The Lord has reserved unto himself seven thousand that have not bowed the knee to those idol gods.

Brethren, I bid you and the SIGNS. Godspeed, as long as it contends for the doctrine it now does, and the same spirit is shown to govern the writers. Brethren and sisters, write on, speak often one to another. May the Lord be with you all, both editors and correspondents.

T. M. POULSON.

SOUTHAMPTON, Pa., Dec. 17, 1892.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—I send you a few extracts from a letter of Mary Parker to sister Bessie, which will answer the questions asked us by so many sympathizing friends. After describing the aggravated effects of her disease, and speaking of the intense suffering, she says:

"O, my precious sister, I do so long to be released! Not only to be relieved from pain, but that I may see my dear Jesus, be like him, and be with him forever. Death seems to hold no terrors any more; and I am constantly filled with a homesickness to be with my Father and his holy angels who surround the throne. At times I feel such a hungering to hear the word preached in its purity, and to mingle with the saints in the Lord's house, and join in their worship. Then it comes to me so forcibly that I cannot meet to enjoy such privileges until I meet in the great assembly above, to join those that are gone before, and to behold the King in his unveiled glory and beauty; and I do feel impressed, though it may be only a sweet delusion, that it will not be long until that happy, glorious time will be accorded me. Surely, cold and lifeless as I often feel, too weak in body even to frame a prayer, isolated as I am from God's dear people, there is a deep thirst, an intense hungering and thirsting after righteousness; which hunger and thirst our dear Savior has promised to fill."

"In a former letter you ask how they move me. We have a large chair for the purpose. I am so heavy that no two persons could lift me. Water has greater weight than flesh, you know. Brother says it is astonishing how heavy I am. He thinks I weigh three hundred."

I have thus copied what refers to herself that will be of general interest. In this, as in all her letters, she writes affectionately and thoughtfully concerning others who are in trouble or pain, and expresses the tender feelings of a kind and sympathetic heart. She has been able to write but little of late, her sufferings have been so great. She says the book has been a great help to her, and continues to be, and she does not know what she would do without it. May the Lord comfort her, as he only can comfort, and still give her spiritual strength and peace; and this, I think, is my wish and prayer for all his afflicted and poor people.

I write hurriedly, in the midst of preparation for our journey south.

Your brother in hope of eternal life,

SILAS H. DURAND.

P. S.—I repeat that all communications sent me here will be attended to. They will reach me soon.

S. H. D.

PEASTER, Parker Co., Tex., Oct., 1892.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE AND READERS OF THE SIGNS:—It is in weakness that I attempt to write for your perusal. An inspired apostle has said, "Whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the Scriptures might have hope." Yea, we are saved from despair by hope; hope in God and in his promises. When trials, temptations, doubts and fears come upon us, O what consolation there is in those things written aforetime. There we read of an ever faithful God, who never slumbers nor sleeps. We read that the Lord's portion is his people, Jacob is the lot of his inheritance. The Lord has a portion and lot of inheritance. He separates them from the world, and the world does not know them. Were this portion better than the rest? No. He did not choose them because they were more righteous than others, but because it seemed good in his sight. We read, "A seed shall serve him; it shall be accounted to the Lord for a generation." Speaking of the great High Priest of our profession, it is said, "When thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin, he shall see his seed [inheritance], he shall prolong his days, and the pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hands." "In his humiliation his judgment was taken away: and who shall declare his generation? for his life is taken from the earth." No man can declare it, but the Lord will make it manifest to all the chosen generation, the vessels of mercy. Again, "Surely they are my people, children that will not lie: so he was [not will be] their Savior. In all their affliction he was afflicted, and the Angel of his presence saved them: in his love and in his pity he redeemed them; and he bare them, and carried them all the days of old." So it is the Angel of God's presence that saves us in our afflictions to-day. Jesus was in his flesh made one with his people, and they are one in him, and he and his Father are one. God is well pleased with the work of the Son, and his portion stands justified before the Lord; justified in the perfect law-fulfilling life of Christ. He lived thirty and three years a perfect life for his portion; and we by faith can see and realize that his life just covers all our natural life, and his saints in him, with not a spot on them, being delivered from the law of sin and death, and will be delivered from the power of the grave. Well might Paul say, "Who shall lay anything to the charge of God's elect? It is God that justifieth; who is he that condemneth? It is Christ that died, yea rather, that is risen again, who is even at the right hand of God." "What shall we then say to these things? If God be for us, who can be against us? He that spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how shall he not with him also freely give us all things?" Blessed people, whose hope the Lord is. Blessed are the people that know the joyful sound.

Yours in hope,

J. A. RUTLEDGE.

HAYESVILLE, Iowa, Nov. 14, 1892.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—I received your note, admonishing me that my subscription for the SIGNS OF THE TIMES is about run out, and that I should renew if I want the paper. Now, it is sometimes hard for us to decide between want and necessity. I want the paper, because it affords me the pleasure of hearing from those poor and afflicted ones whom I have desired to claim as my kindred in Christ; but necessity says, "You had better pay off your little mortgage, or you may lose your little home." But I shall not want a home here much longer, so I will inclose the two dollars for the paper; not altogether for my own benefit; for there are three or four old sisters living near me who cannot get to hear any preaching of our kind, except what they read in the SIGNS. I read it through, and then hand it around, and also try to preach to them a little; and although they are weak and feeble in body, yet they are strong in the faith and grace which is in Christ Jesus. I am getting old and feeble, but as stout as is common for one of my age. I will be seventy-eight years old on the second day of the coming month. I have been trying to preach Christ, the way, the truth, the resurrection and the life, for about forty-four years. Yet if I did not believe that Christ came into the world to save sinners, I should have no hope. I have never written anything for publication; but I would like to try to give a sketch of my pilgrimage here on the footstool of the great Builder and Maker of all things that were made. If we could understand all the mysteries of the invisible world by the things that are made, or by the visible world, we should almost comprehend the infinite. But now we only see through a glass, and only know in part, which leaves a great deal of room for us to differ about those things which we do not understand.

If you can read this, and I shall find it out, I may try it again.

Yours in hope,

A. RICHARDSON.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

DEPARTED this life Dec. 7th, 1892, Mrs. Rebecca Ann Craig, wife of Benjamin F. Craig.

She was the daughter of Thompson and Catherine Hirst, and was born in Fauquier Co., Va., Aug. 29th, 1819, and married to Eleven H. Smoot on Oct. 1st, 1833. After living a widow five years she was married to Benj. F. Craig, Nov. 15th, 1866. She lived an exemplary christian life, loved by all who knew her. She will be greatly missed by friends, neighbors and the church, but most of all by her bereft companion; but I have the full assurance that she rested in the finished work of the crucified, risen and exalted Savior, triumphant in the faith to the very last.

B. F. CRAIG.

G. BEEBE'S SONS:—Please publish the death of my father, Elias Elmendorf, who died at the home of his son Daniel, Oct. 11th, 1892, in the 85th year of his age.

He was born in Olive, Ulster Co., N. Y., July 16th, 1808. His death was caused by extreme weakness and loss of appetite. He united with the Old School Baptist Church of Olive more than twenty-three years ago, and held strongly to his faith and profession. He would often say that he did not have a doubt nor a shadow that God was not able to do what he has promised. He had been a cripple for a number of years, which was a great hindrance to his attending meeting. He had been a widower twenty-two years. Five children survive him, three sons and two daughters.

Elder Fred. W. Keene preached at the funeral from Romans viii. 33. Hymn 1252, Beebe's Collection, was read and sung.

HIS DAUGHTER.

OLIVE, N. Y., Jan. 2, 1893.

DIED—March 29th, 1892, at the residence of her mother, four miles south of Lamonte, Mrs. Dixie Elsea, youngest daughter of G. M. Pemberton (now deceased) and Sarah E. Pemberton.

She was born Sept. 4th, 1866. In January, 1890, she was baptized by Elder R. M. Ogle, of the Primitive Baptist Church. She was united in marriage on March 31st, 1891, to Mr. F. R. Elsea, of Saline County. She leaves a mother, husband, three sisters and four brothers to mourn her departure, all of whom were with her in her last moments except Warren Pemberton, of Texas. The funeral services were conducted by Elder R. M. Ogle, who preached from Revelation xiv. 13.

How we all shall miss her tender love; but in the way of an all-wise providence it was best that she should go. Over in the summer land to which she has gone we doubt not that she is free from the pain so long endured here. Farewell, dear sister; once more, farewell.

P. G.

DIED—At his home in Osborn Hollow, October 3d, 1892, our dear brother, A. C. Scudder, aged 68 years.

Brother Scudder had been a member of the Old School Baptist Church of Otego for many years, being baptized in the fellowship of the same by Elder S. H. Durand; and by his consistent walk in the church and before the world he had gained the full commendation, esteem and steadfast fellowship of all. He was faithful to attend all the appointments of the church, and ready to aid in defraying any necessary expenses. In the last few years it was evident to us all that he was in failing health, but at the same time his mind was more fully set upon the better things of the kingdom of grace; and though the outward man was evidently perishing, the inward man was renewed day by day. His last illness (caused by internal injuries) was short; but as he neared the end his hope in the Lord was firm and strong, so that death had no terrors to him, but was both ready and willing to depart.

He leaves a widow, our dear sister Scudder, and six children, to feel their great loss of a kind and dear companion and loving father; and the little flock at that place also mourn their loss of a faithful and dear brother. The writer was away from home at the time, but brother D. M. Vail was there at the funeral on October 5th, and was enabled to preach to the afflicted ones comfortingly. May the stroke be overruled to the good of all.

B. BUNDY.

BRETHREN BEEBE:—I am requested to send you for publication in the SIGNS a notice of the death of Miss Hannah Boys, an aged and highly esteemed member of the London Tract Church. Her home was in New Castle Co., Del. She was born May 16th, 1808, and died Sept. 27th, 1891, making her age 83 years, 4 months and 11 days.

She was a firm believer in the glorious doctrine of salvation by grace alone, and for many years manifested her love for the cause of truth, but was deterred through a feeling of unworthiness from uniting with the church until late in life, having been baptized by Elder J. L. Staton on Saturday before the second Sunday in June, 1888, then in her eighty-first year. She became blind from a cataract in 1880, the sight of one eye having been destroyed in the attempt to remove the cataract. In all this time, however, she was a constant attendant upon the meetings of the church, conveyance being provided for her through the kindness of her cousin, our esteemed brother, Samuel Dennison, to whom she was very much attached. In 1888 she had an operation performed on the other eye, which proved successful, and she was enabled to see for the balance of her life.

The writer enjoyed the privilege of acquaintance with sister Boys for a number of years, and esteemed her a true and faithful, as well as a meek and humble follower of Jesus. May the Lord enable us all to walk by the same example to the praise of the glory of his grace. Amen.

A. B. FRANCIS.

WILLARD, Va., Dec. 30, 1892.

Mrs. Ann M. Carpenter was born near Horseheads, in Chemung Co., N. Y., Feb. 2d, 1810, and died Dec. 1st, 1892, at her home in Wexford Co., Mich., aged 82 years, 9 months and 29 days.

She united with the Baptists when about eighteen years old, and was baptized by Elder Philander D. Gillette. She moved with her father's (Wm. Carpenter's) family into the then territory of Michigan in 1831, where she was married to Ebenezer Snow Carpenter, in Lenawee Co., whence they moved across the line into Ohio, where they lived several years, thence to near Adrian, Lenawee Co., thence to near Deerfield, same county, and thence, after her husband's death, into northern Michigan, about fifteen years ago, where she resided until the time of her death. The family there consisted of herself, her mother-in-law (Mary Carpenter), her son Samuel and three daughters, Mary, Harriet and Keziah, all of whom (except Mary, who is still living) died before she did; thus leaving her with Mary alone, though not dependent nor destitute of other relatives near her. After moving into Michigan with her father's family she united with the Baptists, and always stood with the Old School from the first. She was through many years a cheerful entertainer of the brotherhood, affectionate to her family, and charitable to all. The humble writer and his afflicted mother (her sister) have received great kindnesses at her hands. Mary, the only living member of her family, still lives at her late home near Manton, Wexford Co., Mich., in which neighborhood several of the younger relatives and acquaintances followed them a few years after their settlement in that country. In her letter to mother (the last one living of eight children) Mary related some of her last words. When asked how she felt about dying she said, "You know how I feel. God's time is my time. My will was lost in his long ago." She blessed her with the assurance that God would not withhold his blessing wherever she should go.

The words quoted above suggested a few lines, which please publish with this if you have room.

Leaves of autumn, thickly falling,

Of remind of man's decay;

One by one the Lord is calling

All my earthly friends away.

Tender youth and features ancient Equal share the common lot;

Yet my mourning seems but transient,

And my griefs are soon forgot.

I am growing old and lonely,

Strangers here I mostly meet;

Long-lost names I cherish only

As a vision, fair and fleet.

Though the earth seems growing dreary

With the weight of moving years,

And I fear my heart grows weary,

Hardened by a dearth of tears.

Is it that my heart is growing

Callous as my moments fill?

Or my stubborn will is flowing

More toward my Master's will?

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date. This date denotes the time at which your subscription expires; and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS IN A PRECIOUS SAVIOR:—I desire to give a reason of my little hope, if you can bear with me in my weakness. May the Lord help me, that I may not err in so doing, for without him I can do nothing. From a child I was fond of this world's pleasure, and thought little of death or hereafter. My father died when I was of the age of five years, and my mother died when I was twelve. Her death was the beginning of sorrow for me. I had many reflections of heaven on my bed at night, but thought I was too bad a girl to go where she was; for I believed she had gone where she could no more have sorrow, pain and death. As I grew older this trouble somewhat wore off, and I sought gay company. Dancing was my chief delight. I would sometimes think I would like to be a christian, but was not willing to give up my worldly pleasure. I thought it would be time enough when I grew old. Sometime after this I went to work to get religion. Some of my associates had professed religion, and I thought I could be good if I tried. I would say my prayers at night and thought I was getting better; but this did not last long. I soon forgot all my good works, and was as fond of the world as ever. These things I have always been ashamed of since; they have become as filthy rags. If I have an experience of grace it began with me on the dancing floor, where the awful fear came over me that all was not well with me. From that hour I never enjoyed dancing any more. Now, to pass on, until the year 1874, I was married in my twenty-first year. In a few months deep trouble came over me. I did not know what was the matter with me. It had not yet been shown me what a great sinner I was. I would shun all company that I had so much love for before. I thought I must die and leave my husband. Many nights were spent sleepless. I thought my husband would awake and find me dead. My burden grew heavier, my days and nights darker, and everything in the future was dark to me; yet I did not fear torment. I would watch the sun set, and think it would rise no more until I would be in the cold arms of death. I would sit in the twilight, and as I then thought, pray to the Lord to let me live to see another sun rising. The darkness of the night and the darkness of my poor soul seemed to almost overcome me. One evening I sat praying my usual prayer, when, as if spoken, the words came to me, "What are you praying for?" O the dreadful fear that came over me! I felt the anger of a just God kindled against me. My sins arose like mountains. I could not lift up my head. I thought the time had come for the Lord to cut me off in death and from him. I hope I did then pray for his presence. If I could feel the presence of the Savior, I wanted nothing more. All at once, and unlooked for (for I could not see how God could be just and save such a sinner as I), a sweet peace came over me that I can never tell. My load that I had borne for two years was all gone, and I felt to be in the presence of my dear Savior. A few moments before I felt he had cast me off forever. O, thought I, can I sing that new song? Jesus was all I had in view. My sinful self was forgotten. I wanted to tell what a dear Savior he was. With the poet,

"I could not believe that I ever should grieve,

That I ever should suffer again."

But what a sad mistake! for in one short week doubts arose. I thought I was deceived. The sweet peace of mind was gone, and I wondered what all this meant. I went to my Bible, hoping to find something to settle this questioning within. My eyes fell upon the words of the Savior to Nicodemus, "The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh and whither it goeth: so is every one that is born of the Spirit." Again my poor heart, I trust, was filled with love and praise to my Maker, who had done all for a poor helpless worm. I thought I should never doubt again; but I was soon plunged into deep trouble, and my cry was,

"Show pity, Lord; O Lord, forgive; Let a repenting rebel live; Are not thy mercies large and free? May not a sinner trust in thee?"

The lines following were a great comfort to me.

"My crimes are great, but can't surpass The power and glory of thy grace."

I felt to be such a sinner, I would often wish I were a little bird that knew nothing but to enjoy life, and had no soul to lose. I would cry, O that I had never been born! These lines were with me for months,

"Should sudden vengeance seize my breath, I must pronounce thee just in death;

And if my soul were sent to hell, Thy righteous law approves it well."

"Yet save a trembling sinner, Lord."

I thought christians never sinned. I had heard some that professed to be christians say they had no trouble on account of sin; but I found sin mixed with all I did. I lived on in this way till a dear friend sent me some copies of the SIGNS to read. Why she sent them I could not tell, for I thought no one knew how my mind was exercised. In those papers I found my own experience, if I have any. Now I had a suffering desire to be baptized. My trouble grew heavier, with a sense of disobedience. My groanings were, Lord, be merciful to me, a sinner. My mind was drawn to old Frying Pan church, Fairfax, Va., though I had never been to their meetings, nor knew any of them. In 1880 we went to Frying Pan to hear Elder A. B. Francis preach, and it was the first preaching I ever heard, I trust, with a hearing ear. He told my experience much better than I could tell it. How my heart went out to the Lord's dear people! How I longed to shake hands with them! They were very beautiful to me. They were the people of my choice, but I was not worthy to be one of them. Two years after this death entered our little family and took our bright baby boy. I thought, This is because I am such a sinner; he was too good to live with me. This was a weak and trying time to me. The people of our village churches did many things to comfort me. They wished me to come to their meetings. I went several times, but felt out of place, and would feel like I would fall dead from the seat. I tried to love those people, as they were so kind to me in my troubles. I thought I could not go to the Old Baptists, for they all had an experience of grace, and I had nothing to bring. Finally I was cut loose from those so-called churches, for I found no food there. The SIGNS and the Bible were all the comfort I had. At one time I read in the SIGNS where Christ was the chiefest among ten thousand to every child of God. The thought came to me, Have I that evidence? I could not see that I had. I thought I had a hope, but must give it all up. I laid the paper down and tried to work. The question came to me, Do you love the way, the truth and the life? I thought I did above all things; and these words followed, "I am the way, the truth and the life." My poor heart was made again to rejoice, and I could say, He is altogether lovely. Often when I would be cast down and feel that I was forever lost, I would desire of the Lord, if it was his will, that I might praise him the remainder of my days, though I be cast off. In May, 1884, there was a three days meeting at Frying Pan. I had looked forward to that meeting, hoping the Lord would enable me to offer myself to the church as I was, poor, sinful and undone; but the time came, and I was unable to go on Saturday. My husband went on that day, and was received, and was baptized on Sunday. I went to see him baptized, but what a sore trial that was to me. I did not feel worthy to go with him into the water. I felt lonely indeed. I felt to be a poor, miserable child, with no home, although I thought the Lord had blessed me; that he had given me a dear Old Baptist for a companion. On the last day of the meeting I felt that I could not leave them all. I had no home to go to. Dear Elder Beebe spoke words of comfort to me, and once more I was made to rejoice. The following two months were of great strife within. Sometimes I would resolve to go and tell them of my little hope, for I thought I could not live and stay away; and again I would be far from it. I felt willing that they should judge, and thought they would know if I were a fit subject for baptism; but could I bear to be turned away from them? I felt it would be more than I could bear. I could go nowhere else. "Thou hast the words of eternal life." I felt the weight of the parable of the buried talent. "Lord, save, or I perish," was my cry. On Saturday before the second Sunday in July, 1884, I went before the church in much weakness, and told but little, and to my surprise they received me, and I was baptized on the next day by our dear pastor, Elder E. V. White. I cannot tell, as many do (and it has often troubled me), of a rejoicing; but I had a calm, sweet, but solemn rest, I trust, "the answer of a good conscience toward God." These words came to me with much sweetness, "He maketh the storm a calm, so that the waves thereof are still." But the following week I went into trouble again. I feared I had deceived the church. I feared I would be a reproach to the cause of Christ. I went to the word of truth, greatly desiring the Lord to open my blind eyes. On opening the Bible I read of the baptism of the Savior, where immediately he was taken into the wilderness to be tempted of the devil. I fear to speak of this, as it is claiming too much. I thought I could never doubt my Savior again.

Now, dear kindred in Jesus, my way has been almost all darkness, low in the valley. At times I can say with the poet,

"Poor, weak and worthless though I am,
I have a rich, almighty Friend."

If I am saved, it is all of grace.

MARY D. OLIVER.

"The law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus."—Rom. viii. 2.

It is evident that there are two prominent laws set forth in the Scriptures: the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus, and the law of condemnation and death in Adam. To my mind we find the antitype of both these laws represented by figures in the garden of Eden, in the two trees; the tree of life, and the tree of the knowledge of good and evil; for the eating of the fruit of these trees were laws within themselves. The fruit of the tree of life gave everlasting life unto the eater thereof; and the fruit of the tree of knowledge of good and evil was death unto the eater thereof. Therefore the partaking of the fruit of these trees were irrevocable laws by the commandment of God. I understand the spirit of any law to be the power exercised by that law; for law means power and dominion. Then, if the eating of the fruit of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil was death, that was the power of that law, and the party under the dominion of that law must pay the penalty of transgression for eating of the fruit of that tree, before he could be lawfully released from the dominion of that law. Now, the command given unto Adam in the garden was, "Of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat: but of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it: for in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." We will notice that in this command Adam was not prohibited from eating of the tree of life, nor any other tree that grew in the garden. Only the tree of the knowledge of good and evil was prohibited. If Adam could have eaten of the tree of life after he had eaten of the forbidden tree, he would then have lived forever; for the law of that tree was eternal life. Just so now is the condition of all the progeny of Adam. They are in nature the descendants of Adam, and born under the law of condemnation and death, the sentence of death resting upon them. Being children of transgressing parents, they are amenable to the law under which they are born, and must pay the penalty demanded by that law. To be released from under that law they must be born again, under another law, superior in power to the law of their natural generation, which law is the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus. Therefore Jesus says, "Except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God." And the apostle in his letter to the Romans sets forth in his argument that "the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death. For what the law could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh, God sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin, condemned sin in the flesh, that the righteousness of the law might be fulfilled in us, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit." Now, I understand the law of condemnation and death to be a righteous law, in that it only demands full obedience to its precepts. The apostle says it is weak through the flesh. The law says, "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." Therefore the law demands the life of the flesh; and demanding the life, it becomes weak through the flesh; for when a man becomes dead under the law, the spirit of that law has no power to raise him from the dead, but becomes exhausted in power, and has no further claim upon the man, he having paid all the law demanded, and leaves the man dead in his grave. Therefore the law is weak through the flesh. "But God sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin, condemned sin in the flesh, that the righteousness of the law might be fulfilled in us, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit." Now, here we have the introduction of another law, the law of the Spirit of life, just the opposite of the other law. The spirit of the other law was death. The spirit of this law is life; and this law being a life-giving spirit, condemns the law of death, or sin, which causes death, by coming in the likeness of sinful flesh. Sin is the fruit of disobedience. Jesus knew no disobedience. He came in the flesh, but knew no sin in his flesh, therefore the law could not condemn him; and being sinless, he condemned sin in the flesh; for he came in the flesh to redeem them that were under the law, and were sinners by nature, and subjects of death. To accomplish this, he offered himself, a sinless body, as holy as the law itself was, a sacrifice, the atonement for their sins, a sacrifice the law must accept. "For by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned." "So by the obedience of one shall many be made righteous." Therefore by his obedience sin is condemned in the flesh, and the law of the Spirit of life claims power and dominion over the sinner who walks not after the flesh, but after the Spirit; Christ Jesus having in his own body paid all the demands of the law for them that walk after the Spirit.

The experimental part of this subject is always interesting to them who have the experience of the saints of God. To those who have no experience, an argument from a natural standpoint would be more interesting; for they could naturally understand how a law could be satisfied by a man doing the best he knew how, and that nothing more should be required of him. Well, in one sense it would seem just. But did Adam do the best he knew how? The apostle says that Adam was not deceived, but Eve was. Certainly Adam did not do the best he knew how; and I do not think we have any better men now living than Adam was; for he was without sin before he transgressed. The desire to know good and evil is a fruit that is sweet to the taste. Can you find the man or woman who does not desire to know good and evil to day, to know that which is good? What harm is there to know that which is good? It is written, "There is none good but one; that is God." And to know good is life eternal. Then is there any conscious mortal who does not desire eternal life? It would seem we all should desire to know God and live forever. But it seems the knowledge of this tree produced death. What was your first experience? When you saw yourself as a son or daughter of Adam, standing guilty before a just and holy God, a subject of death, did you not desire to know God, or to be known of God as a beggar at the throne of mercy, asking the forgiveness of your sins? Was that a good desire? Certainly it was. But what did you see between you and your God? A drawn sword, a flaming sword, that turned every way, to keep the way of the tree of life. To eat of that tree was your desire. That sword had written upon it the law, "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." And you confessed you were a sinner. Did you disobey God in the garden of Eden? No. I never was in Eden. The tree of life grew there, and the fruit of that tree is what I now desire to eat of, even the law of the Spirit of life. But my father Adam did eat of that tree, and I am a son or daughter of Adam; therefore I inherit the penalty of transgression from him. To satisfy this law in some way is what I desire. I see the law is just. But I want to live. I want to eat of the tree of life and live forever, but not at the expense of divine justice; for that would be robbery, and I could not stand before God face to face. If the law demands my death, let me die to all its demands. But my desire is to be raised from the dead. I read that Jesus is the resurrection and the life; and he that believeth in him, though he were dead, yet shall he live; and he that liveth and believeth in him shall never die. But all I see is my condemnation and death. I would like to believe in Jesus, but how do I know that he was a propitiation for my sins? I have no evidence that when he offered himself a sacrifice for the sins of his people I was one of them. And how can I believe without evidence? The evidence is what I want, that Jesus died for me. I also read that "Except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God." Here I find myself a child of Adam, under the law of condemnation, in my natural state a sinner before God. How can a man be born again? That seems impossible. There must be some other law than the law of nature to bring about such a thing. My mind can not comprehend a man being born again. Yet Jesus says, "Except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God." He also says, "My kingdom is not of this world." Then how can a natural man be born into that kingdom? He also says, in answer to that question, "The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh and whither it goeth: so is every one that is born of the Spirit." So it would seem that this is a spiritual birth, and not a fleshy one; not a flesh and blood man, but a spiritual man, and governed by a spiritual law, which the apostle calls "The law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus." No mortal man can tell how it takes place. The figure is, "The wind bloweth where it listeth." No man can see the wind. He can feel the effect of it blowing upon him, and he knows it is the wind. So he can feel the desire to be saved from his sins, but cannot see how it can be, and God be just, and the justifier of the ungodly. He hears the thunder of the law in his ears, the sound of death, but sees no way of escape, and dies to hope of being saved. The way seems impossible. He becomes dead to the law in his own body of flesh, by any sacrifice he can offer through the flesh, to satisfy the law; for his flesh is sin, and sin is mixed with all he does. In this condition he becomes dead to the law, and to any hope of salvation through the works of the law. This man now is in a state of death spiritually; and unless some other law raises him from this death he is without hope and without God in the world, and is to himself lost. Jesus says again, that he came to save that which was lost. Well, here we have the character; one that in his experience feels himself to be lost; one that knows not where to go nor what to do; lost to hope; lost to anticipation; lost to himself; a lost sheep of the house of Israel. For the law was given to Israel, and he has been seeking salvation by the works of the law. Yet this one is a subject of grace, which Jesus came to save. His very character and condition identify him as such. Lost! And how is he saved? By the law of the Spirit of life. That law knows no death. It may pass through death, but it cannot be holden of death; for if it could, it would not be the law of the Spirit of life. The law is just the opposite of death in spirit. It raises the dead; for when the spirit of that law calls, "Come forth," the dead live.

Like it was in the valley of dry bones, the very breath of that law breathed upon them imparted life, and they arose a mighty army. This law delivers them from the law of sin and death, and destroys him that had the power of death, that is, the devil; and the sinner who was lost, who was dead, is made alive from under the law, by the body of Christ. The law held his body three days and three nights, until the law of the Spirit of life revived him, and he came forth a conqueror, leading captivity captive. Death was condemned, a chained prisoner, bound, and all his armor taken away. The strong man armed keepeth his palace until a stronger man comes and takes away his armor wherein he trusted. Death held his victim under the law of condemnation; but the law of life in Christ Jesus (for he was the tree of life) burst asunder the bands of death, and hath made the prisoner free from the law of death, by the body of Christ. Here is the witness of the believer in Jesus. In his experience he was lost. In the revelation to him of Christ as his Savior he is found under the law of life in Christ Jesus, and made free from the law of sin and death, and now walks not after the flesh, but after the Spirit. A man's walk is his course of life, whether it be morally or spiritually. Of course while in the world he has more or less to do with worldly things; for to leave them off he must needs go out of the world. But the walk religiously is what I wish to show in this subject. The apostle Paul in his religious zeal manifested that kind of walk or religion under the law that showed the spirit of the man, and the spirit of the law he was under at that time. He was worshipping under the law of condemnation and death, and manifested his zeal in persecuting and putting to death the disciples of Jesus, the very spirit of the law of condemnation. But his testimony is that when it pleased God to reveal his Son in him, he conferred not with flesh and blood. Now, when he became under the law of life, instead of killing his fellow-man he was zealous to save his life. The spirit of a different law was manifested, and those he once hated he now loved; and this was his evidence that the law of life was revealed unto him; and it is the evidence of all the followers of Jesus, love to the brethren. John says, "We know that we have passed from death unto life because we love the brethren." This is all the evidence I have. This is the spirit of the law of life in Christ Jesus; for he commanded his disciples that they should love one another; and he said, "By this shall all know that ye are my disciples."

Dear brethren Beebe, this subject has been upon my mind of late, and I thought I would write such views as presented themselves, in contrasting the two laws, of life and of death. They may not meet the views of some of my brethren, but they are my views, and are not binding on any one that disagrees with them. If you think they are worth printing, you are at liberty to publish them, after correcting errors in language, as I am a very poor scholar; but I hope I love the truth for the truth's sake, as it is in Jesus.

Affectionately yours,

JOSEPH BRODERS.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—As my mind has been directed to the consideration of the manhood of Christ Jesus in all his different revelations of himself in different ages of the world, under the names of Son of man, Wisdom, Power of God, Root and Offspring of David, Bright and morning Star, Lion of the tribe of Judah, the Lamb of God, "that holy thing" in the womb of the virgin, and in his various figures and signs, I will write a few of them for the consideration of the brethren, if you shall see fit to publish them. I have heard arguments on the seeming contradiction of Scripture in regard to one of the attributes of God, namely, his unchangeableness; and they never seemed to harmonize this seeming clash. It is in regard to his repenting that he had made man, and it grieved him at his heart. Also, repenting him of the evil that he said he would bring upon Nineveh, and did it not. But when we consider that he is man, as well as the great and dreadful God, we have the key to unlock the mystery. He can speak as a man. All the experience and revelation we have of God is through the man Christ Jesus. All the revelation of God's great doctrine comes through Jesus. He is "the beginning of the creation of God." This man was with the church in the wilderness by his representatives, and all along through the Jewish dispensation he had his representatives in the prophets. Job, the rich man of the east, represents the Gentile church. The first riches of Job represent the apostolic, and the first few years of what is called the christian era, when thousands and thousands were added to the church in the east, and the disciples spread the gospel through Asia, Africa and Europe, the then known world. This caused the envy of Satan, and he moved God against them. And God has given the Gentile church to be trodden under foot, and her riches to be swept away, and to be smitten with sore boils (schisms and divisions), which began to work even in the apostles' days; for in writing to the Thessalonian church he tells them not to think that the day of Christ is at hand; for it seems that some false teachers had said that it was; but the apostles did not so teach; for that day should not come till there was a falling away first, and that man of sin should be revealed, the son of perdition; and it had already commenced to work. It finally culminated in the church of Rome claiming universal authority over the whole world, and that her bishop was God's representative on earth. They destroyed and stole the first wealth of the church, and she has ever since, like Job, been prophesying in sackcloth and ashes, covered with the sore boils of divisions and strife, lamenting her condition, with her three pretended friends (the world, the flesh and the devil) trying to comfort her, and to make her believe that she is lacking in good works. But her life cannot be destroyed, for it is the life of God; yet, like Job, she needs reproof; and the first one to reprove her is a man in God's stead. Elihu, the man Christ Jesus, in the form of the faithful ministry, especially the apostle Paul, who is given the especial ministry to the Gentiles. As the reproof and instruction of Elihu prepared Job to receive directly from God a revelation of his great majesty in his wonderful works, both in the spiritual and material world, so in our day a faithful ministry, both in doctrine and practice, prepares the church to receive the wonderful doctrine of God's absolute government of the universe, both spiritual and material, to their salvation, from the smallest blade of grass to the mighty system of stars and constellations that swing their mighty bodies in immensity of space (no opposition of the sciences falsely so-called), giving glory to God. All are included in the wonderful works of God, as taught to the church in God's doctrine. In the spiritual, both the good and evil, from the little, tiny, wormlike spirit of man, to the mighty angels of light, or that mighty leviathan, Satan, whom God himself declared is chief of his ways (see Job xl. 19), are all included in God's doctrine, whose faithful proclamation saves them that believe from error, and, as the man Christ Jesus says, glorifies his Father also. But O wonder of wonders! the bringing of the man Christ Jesus into the world to save sinners is the most monderful mystery that ever drew the attention of mortal man; inso-much that angels desire to look into it; the immaculate conception of that holy thing in the womb of the blessed virgin Mary. The natural mind of man can only suppose that he was the son of Joseph. It takes a good hope through grace to believe that he is the Son of God, by the power of the Holy Ghost. Why? Because it takes the same experience that Mary had in his conception, and also the mother of John. This babe of Bethlehem must leap in the womb of our experience in being born again, of this incorruptible seed, by the power of the Holy Ghost. Great is the mystery of godliness," and that without controversy. "God was manifest in flesh, justified in the Spirit, seen of angels, preached unto the Gentiles, believed on in the world, received up into glory." And there this glorified man lives to-day, as the Advocate with the Father. The little children do not sin, that are born of God; for the Father has commanded them not to. But what about the man that is born again? "But if any man sin, we have an Advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous," so that there is still hope. Just like the apostle John says, "This is the true God and eternal life." All other kinds of gods are idols. The little children keep themselves from idols; but the natural man does not very often. This is what is contended for, that the spiritual air has been so darkened by the falling away, traditional error and false doctrine, called in "the revelation of Jesus Christ" the smoke of the bottomless pit, and called by Paul the revelation of the man of sin, so that we can hardly see. But I think the time of anti-Christ's ascendancy in the form of Christ is fast approaching its end. Then poor Job will have all his goods restored, and more; when again thousands upon thousands all over the world will be added to the church. The Lord hasten the day. This is what I understand by the day of Christ spoken of by Paul. Not the end of time for the earth, but the end of time for all antichristian forms and systems under the name of christian. Then the church of the living God will stand forth "terrible as an army with banners." You will notice that she first shone under the Jewish dispensation, "fair as the moon," before the falling away, "clear as the sun," and now soon, in the restoration and regeneration, "terrible as an army with banners." The Son of man's countenance (this is where God's doctrine shines) will be like lightening.

I submit this. Your sinful and unworthy brother, if one at all,

DAVID TITMUS.

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES—DEAR BRETHREN:—I take the liberty to send you a few of my thoughts concerning the things of the all-wise God and our Savior Jesus Christ, for you to publish if you think best. I am a poor writer, and it may be hard for you to get at my meaning; but such as I have I send you, and whether it will be of any profit I cannot tell. That I must leave with him who holds the seven stars in his right hand, and the seven spirits which are before his throne. This throne is his church; and the seven spirits are, first, the spirit of truth, which convinces of sin, of righteousness and judgment, and brings us to the feet of Jesus. The spirit of holiness, which is the Holy Ghost, sent down from heaven, which shows us the holy commandments of Jesus. The spirit of might, which enables us to walk in the WORKS OF FAITH.

"WHAT doth it profit, my brethren, though a man say he hath faith, and have not works? can faith save him? If a brother or sister be naked, and destitute of daily food, and one of you say unto them, Depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled; notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful to the body; what doth it profit? Even so faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone."—James ii. 14-17.

The peculiar glory of the doctrine of God as it is revealed in the gospel of Christ is declared in the perfect unity of the whole teaching of our Lord. The doctrines and commandments of men may be divided up into separate parts having no necessary connection with each other. Not so is the divine truth of the glorious word which the Spirit of Christ shows in the heart of every one who receives his instruction. It is like the garment worn by Jesus, being "without seam, woven from the top throughout." The doctrine includes in itself all the essential principles of the order and discipline divinely adapted to the spiritual kingdom which it proclaims; and every point in the practical order which bears the seal of the Spirit of Christ, must also involve the immutable truth of the whole doctrine of God as the author and finisher of the faith which was once delivered unto the saints. Only as it is manifested to them by the Spirit can the saints know this divine unity of the truth, every principle of which is inseparable from the doctrine of the gospel. From the natural mind of every sinner God has hidden it so effectually that it is impossible that reason should ever search for it.

Teachers of natural religion have been bewildered by inability to reconcile their understanding of this text with some declarations of Paul, so that they have questioned the genuineness of this epistle of James. This is the consequence of their failure to observe the fact that none can know the things of Jesus unless they are shown them by direct revelation. There is no disagreement between what is written by these two inspired apostles when their testimony is explained by the Spirit which searcheth all things. Writing concerning the promise given to Abraham, Paul shows that in it by faith Abraham was justified in Christ who is the Seed embraced in that promise. "He saith not, And to seeds, as of many, but as of one, And to thy Seed, which is Christ."—Gal. iii. 16. Referring to the justification of Abraham by that confidence which enabled him to see Jesus as his righteousness, in contrast with the fleshly reliance of carnal Israelites upon the law of Moses, Paul says, "Therefore it is of faith, that it might be by grace; to the end the promise might be sure to all the seed; not to that only which is of the [Sinai] law, but to that also which is of the faith of Abraham; who is the father of us all (as it is written, I have made thee a father of many nations), before him whom he believed, even God, who quickeneth the dead, and calleth those things which be not as though they were."—Rom. iv. 16, 17. This is the assertion of the sovereignty of God in the gift of that righteousness by which all the spiritual children of Abraham are included in the election of his grace unto the justification of life in Christ Jesus. Without this truth there would have been no "twelve tribes which are scattered abroad," to whom James could have written this epistle. Certainly he could not have designated carnal Israelites when he said, "My brethren, count it all joy when ye fall into divers temptations; knowing this, that the trying of your faith worketh patience." None could have faith but those who were born of the Spirit, of which that faith is the fruit. All such are the children of God. It is not, then, possible to wrest the expression of our text so as to make it represent the eternal salvation of those addressed as dependent upon their works. None are subject to the temptations designated in this epistle but those in whom dwells the love of righteousness, causing them to mourn under the bondage of corruption, which renders it impossible for them to do the good which they would, while they cannot refrain from doing the evil which they would not do. To this peculiar people every admonition and exhortation given by inspiration is exclusively addressed.

"What doth it profit, my brethren, though a man say he hath faith, and have not works? can faith save him? Let it not be forgotten that this is confined to such as the apostle recognizes as his brethren, who are very specifically described throughout the whole epistle. There can be no uncertainty regarding that salvation which was finished by their Redeemer when he satisfied the utmost demand of justice against all his members. In his resurrection is the declaration of eternal truth that every jot and tittle of the law was fulfilled, and the sins of all his chosen people were forever washed away in the cleansing fountain of his own precious blood. When he had finished the work which was given him to do, there was no condemnation against any of those for whom he was made a curse. This is the only ground of hope for James himself, or for any other subject of divine grace. This principle of divine truth is not to be regarded as open to discussion. It is the foundation without which there is no salvation for any sinner. But there is still another salvation which is peculiar to these vessels of divine mercy. In their present daily life they are saved from the chastening rod by obedience to the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus, which is put in their new heart, or rather, which is the new heart given to the saints in their manifestation as vessels of mercy. Now, confining the question to those who are brethren of the apostle in this heavenly relationship, let us consider the subject in the light of that which every saint must know experimentally; and if the Spirit is our guide, by whom the apostle was moved to write, our own experience will witness to the same principle which is presented in the text.

Let us take, for example, one in whose christian experience we have full confidence, and for whom we have fraternal love, with whom our fellowship has been unreserved. Let him declare the firmest confidence in every point of sound doctrine, and even be able to defend by arguments of irresistible logic that truth, so that we admire the ability displayed. Yet, if that brother in his daily deportment is walking in opposition to the doctrine he has professed, and practically claiming that his faith justifies him in such ungodly conduct, can we retain him in fellowship because of his sound views doctrinally? This is the import of the question under consideration. It is not merely whether he may be held in the professed membership of the organized church; but it searches the secret thoughts of the heart. Can that fervent love which springs from sweet fellowship be felt as embracing the brother who is thus despising the riches of that grace by which salvation has been brought to us as guilty rebels against God? It is true, he says he has faith; and as far as we are competent to judge it may be that we do not doubt his being taught of the Lord; but can we feel that warmth of fellowship for him which so joyfully embraces those in whose daily life it is manifest that they are governed by the Spirit of Christ? It may be that the reader will recollect some instance in which in his personal experience a practical answer has been found in the case of such a brother. It is not that there is a doubt of the genuineness of the work of grace in the case. It may be that we would be glad to feel as well assured for ourselves as for him; but it is impossible to force that fervent love which so freely flows toward the saint in whom is seen the leading of the Spirit of Christ. On the other hand, a brother may be very weak in argument, and his understanding of the doctrine may be very limited, while in natural attractions he may be deficient; yet if in his every day deportment and conversation he shows that it is his only desire to be found following Jesus, when led by the Spirit of God it will require no effort to love such a brother with a pure heart fervently. Indeed, it will not be in the power of one who loves God to refrain from loving that one in whom his Spirit is evidently ruling in his conduct and conversation. Love is already there, and must embrace its object wherever seen.

The most earnest declaration of faith in the truth of the gospel can avail nothing in saving in true fellowship one whose works of daily deportment deny the power of his professed faith to direct his steps in the way of righteousness. Thus in their own heart the saints read the same truth which is asserted by the pen of inspiration in our text. Not only does such inconsistent conduct forbid the continuance of brotherly love toward the one who walks disorderly; it often becomes the occasion of very serious questioning in the mind of the saint who finds his love restrained from embracing the offending one. The fact that he cannot fervently love such a brother suggests the doubt whether the Spirit of Christ really dwells in his own heart. This fear confirms the accusation of the tempter, who charges that all his hope is a delusion. Under such fiery trial the saint can only cherish sincere love and fellowship for the disobedient subject of grace; but he finds that it is not in his power to force that love, however much he may feel that it should be in his breast. The knowledge that the disorderly walking brother is sound in the faith, cannot save him in the approving judgment of the saint who is led by the Spirit to hold the commandment of Jesus as superior to all other considerations.

"If a brother or sister be naked, and destitute of daily food, and one of you say unto them, Depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled; notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful to the body; what doth it profit?" This illustration of the meaning of the inspired inquiry sustains the view presented in our remarks on the questions introducing our text. Certainly it does not show the power of divine love as controlling our action, if we can witness the necessities of one of those whom we regard as brethren, and manifest such indifference as is described in this clause of our text. It would seem that even natural reason would recognize the utter lack of sympathy and brotherly love which would be manifest in such conduct toward a needy brother. Under such extreme circumstances it is difficult to conceive of a natural heart so callous as to refuse at least temporary relief. But the question is, "What doth it profit?" The perishing one is not relieved by the words of advice. Rather he feels that he is mocked by them, since it is not to be supposed that any one would voluntarily be reduced to such destitution as described in this language. What better off is he for the words of pretended sympathy? Clearly, as implied in the question, he is not profited at all. He is just as "naked and destititute" as before he heard such words. They neither shelter him from the cold, nor satisfy his hunger.

But there is very serious instruction contained in this illustration, which the disciples of Jesus cannot afford to overlook. It must be remembered that the Judge of quick and dead has declared, "Verily, I say unto you [speaking to his own disciples], Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." And again, "Inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not to me." Herein is taught the unity of our Redeemer with each of his afflicted and poor people. He that toucheth one of them is guilty of attacking the Lord himself. That subject of grace who shall be found guilty of wounding one of these little ones, must suffer the terrible chastening of that divine rod which is visited upon every child who denies the power of that grace which has saved him, and willfully sins against the law of love, which is the perfect law of liberty in the gospel kingdom of our Lord Jesus. That judgment does not simply come upon the saint who has actually committed the evil deed; searching the secret thoughts of the heart, it finds murder in him who is angry with his brother; and the guilt of all sin in one covetous desire. No profession of soundness in the faith can save in the love of Christ one who lives after the flesh. Even though he be retained in professed membership in the church, and in the personal friendship of the saints, it is impossible that the love of Christ can approve his carnal departure from the law of the Spirit of life. In that sense, not even faith can save him. He must reap corruption as the result of having sown to his flesh.

"Even so faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone." From the whole connection of the text it is clear that there is no correct application of its instruction to any but those who have the faith of the Son of God. All such have already received the gift of eternal life, and none of them shall ever perish, since they have everlasting life. All that is written of them as living or dying, must be understood as referring to their present experience while subject to the vanity of the body of this death. The faith which is produced in the subject of salvation by the Spirit of life, should be manifested in the obedience of the humble disciple. This is walking in the Spirit. The saint who through the Spirit mortifies the deeds of the body, thereby enjoys the life which is wrought in him by the power of God. But in living after the flesh, that same saint experiences death. The faith which is fruitful in producing obedience to the commandments of the Lord, thereby attests the life which is in it; while that faith which is hidden under the carnality and disobedience of the natural mind, is in the sense of our text "dead." This is explained by the words, "being alone." The evident meaning of this expression is that there is no fruit manifest to the glory of divine grace in those who fail to yield their "members servants to righteousness unto holiness." It is said of some of the immediate disciples of our Lord, that their persecutors took knowledge of them that they had been with Jesus. This is the invariable result of works which are produced by living faith. They show forth the praise of him who hath called the saints from darkness, and given them the light of his own Spirit. This does not puff them up with pride and self-confidence, so that they may say to another, "Stand afar off! I am holier than thou." It produces that true humility in which each can only mourn the vileness of his own heart, while adoring the glorious perfection which is revealed in Christ. God is glorified in the body and in the spirit of the saint when his faith is shown by the works which are wrought in him by the grace of God. Such only are the works which attest that they are produced by living faith. In them the will of the flesh can claim no credit, and they bear the evidence in themselves that they are of heavenly origin. They can never exist separate from that living faith in which they manifest the vital power of the grace of God that bringeth salvation. The only works by which living faith is manifested in the saints are those acts of obedience to the law of Christ, by which the saints glorify God in keeping his commandments. So Paul admonishes the saints to such works, saying, "Wherefore, my beloved, as ye have always obeyed, not as in my presence only, but now much more in my absence, WORK OUT your own salvation with fear and trembling; for it is God which WORKETH IN YOU both to will and to do of his good pleasure."—Phil. ii. 12, 13.

WE EXPECT,

THE Lord willing, in a few numbers, to commence the publication of the Minutes of the proceedings and the resolutions drafted at the meeting of the brethren at Black Rock, Md., in 1832, at the time the division took place between the Baptists in the United States. After publishing the above we expect to run in serial form the able and powerful orations of Edward Iving before the London Missionary Board, May, 1824.

We at first anticipated commencing these articles with the beginning of the present volume; but we are receiving each number such large accessions to our list of subscribers that we have decided to delay their publication for a short time, in order to enable as many as possible to have the articles complete.

BACK NUMBERS.

WE still have a supply of back numbers of this volume, and new subscribers, whose names are sent in first, will be supplied with them as long as they last.

IT IS VERY IMPORTANT

That great care should be taken in sending a renewal of subscriptions to give us the same name as the one to whom the paper is already coming. If the party is married be sure the initials are given correctly; for if the paper is coming in the wife's name and the husband writes us to send the paper the next year, and signs his own name, we have no means of knowing that the person to whom the paper is going is his wife; and not finding his name on our list he is entered as a new subscriber and the paper sent to both; or if the paper is going in the husband's name and the renewal sent on in the wife's name, the result will be the same. The best way is to inclose in your letter one of the little pink slips containing the name pasted either on the margin of the paper or on the wrapper in which it comes.

DONATIONS.

AS may be seen by our published receipts, the brethren and friends are contributing with their usual liberality to the fund to enable us to send the paper to those brethren and sisters who are not able to pay for it, and yet love to read it. We doubt if there is any way the same amount of money could be expended to give as much real joy and true happiness, to as many, as is derived from the contributions to this fund. It is the poor and needy, as to this world's goods, that are the best capacitated to enjoy spiritual blessings; and could those who have sent their donations, see some of the many letters we receive, expressing the gratitude of those benefited by their generosity, they would feel that it is truly more blessed to give than to receive.

HAVE YOU KEPT YOUR SUPPLEMENT?

If not, and you are an old subscriber, and have paid the regular price for your paper, you can secure another copy of the supplement by writing us to send you one, as we have an extra supply on hand. We expect to make frequent reference through the SIGNS to it, and you ought not be without one.

INQUIRIES AFTER TRUTH.

ELDER F. A. Chick will please give his views on Matthew xx. 16 or xxii. 14, and greatly oblige a troubled one.

holy commandments, and to contend for the truth, to the glory of God the Father. The spirit of wisdom, which enables us to discern between truth and error, and to understand something of the mysteries of God. The spirit of adoption, whereby we hope for the resurrection, to wit, the redemption of our bodies. The spirit of love, which enables us to love God, and the brethren also, for the truth's sake which dwelleth in us. The spirit of prophecy, which is the testimony of Jesus, which enables us to testify of the things of Jesus in the church, and to understand something of the prophecies concerning his church in her development, and also in the development of the man of sin, or antichrist; for all through the Scriptures he (antichrist) also is prophesied of. There seems to be a spirit in the church at the present day to despise this; but the Scriptures by the apostle say, "Despise not prophesyings." There seems to be a disposition to mark out a particular line of thought, and say that everything else is unprofitable; whereas there are diversities of gifts in the church; but all are given for the edification of the body of Christ. God has not left his church in blind ignorance concerning her own development, nor of the development of antichrist in the earth. I have heard with pain those who seemed to have a good hope saying that we did not need to know anything else. I cannot agree with them in this. If that were the case, the all-wise Redeemer made a mistake (which God forbid) in giving us a history of the wonderful works of God in the chief of his ways, in the management of the old serpent, which is the devil. From the first of Genesis to the last of the Revelation of Jesus Christ, which God gave unto him, is included every word that has proceeded out of the mouth of God, and is the all Scripture given by inspiration of God, for the express purpose that the man of God might be thoroughly furnished, not in bread alone, but in strong meat and drink, which some brethren think we ought not to have, but only bread. But the Redeemer thought differently. He says, "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God;" in doctrine, reproof, instruction, and correction in righteousness; that is, God's righteousness; in everything he has done; whether in commanding that the wicked shall do wickedly, and none of the wicked shall understand (Daniel); or in using them as his sword; or in pronouncing his people righteous through Jesus their head, and commanding that they shall be zealous of good work; or in raising up false teachers in their midst, to give his servant something to do to brighten their swords. These (false teachers) he has said shall be, and I rather think it is for a purpose. There is no chance work with him, the true God, who neither slumbers nor sleeps; and he does not allow his soldiers to sleep too long. The spies of the enemy will get into the camp of the saints to make trouble, and awaken them. The froglike spirits of devils, working miracles, which have gone forth unto the kings of the earth, and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty, are making such a noise, and encompassing the camp of the saints, that it is no time to sleep; but, as the apostle says, "Let us watch and be sober, and hope to the end." Though the number of the army of the beast and the false prophet is as the sand of the sea, they cannot finally prevail; for at the proper time fire will come down from heaven and devour them; not natural fire, but the same kind of fire which is the wall round about the camp of the saints, namely, God's eternal and absolute predestination. Not the kind of fire that the religionists of the world causes to come down from heaven in the sight of the beast; for that is alone in the sight of the beast. It is not from heaven, but from beneath, in the sight of men. Man in his natural state alone has no more understanding of spiritual things than the beast. That is about as high as the natural intellect of man can get in the things that are spiritual. "But these, as natural brute beasts made to be taken and destroyed, speak evil of the things that they understand not." They "speak evil of dignities." Not only do they speak evil of the holy prophets and apostles, but also of the King in Zion, who are the dignities of the church of the living God. They speak evil of Satan also, and the dignity he represents as "king over all the children of pride;" "whereas angels, which are greater in power and might," dare not do so.—(See 2 Peter ii.; Jude.) For the old serpent, that is, the devil, is "chief of the ways of God," and has no power but of God. Search the Scriptures and see if God does not say so. But for all this we want to know what he is about; and the King of kings has graciously given us a chart of the work he has laid out for this wily serpent to do, all through the Scriptures, especially in the book of "The Revelation of Jesus Christ." We see to-day evidences of the work of the three unclean spirits before mentioned, on every hand. The so-called "Salvation Army" are going upon the breadth of the earth, scattering their unclean doctrines and practice through the whole world; and God has given us a revelation of this, that we might not be ignorant of Satan's devices. It is a blessed privilege to watch and keep our garments clean, in doctrine and practice, in this evil day, lest we walk naked, and they see our shame; constantly affirming none other things than what the holy apostles and prophets have said about those things. Nothing more, nothing less.

Your unworthy brother, if one at all,

DAVID TITMUS.

BRANTFORD, Ont., Dec. 2, 1892.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS:—I am sitting down with the view of writing you what may begin to be called my annual letter to the business columns of the SIGNS. Some time ago I laid aside the inclosed two dollar bill for this day, and have succeeded in keeping it for the purpose designed. I hate to get crowded in money matters, it seems to run away with so much of my peace of mind; but whenever I do set apart any for a special purpose it brings to my memory the saying of a friend of mine years ago. He asked me how I read my Bible; for he said he could not take any interest in his unless he had some special object or subject impressing him to it. I do not remember my answer, but his case often flows into my experience on other matters. I feel certain that I would never put away a cent if I had not an object in view; and this time, speaking after the manner of men, I hope is a good one; for if we who believe in salvation by grace do not uphold the preaching of it, who is to do it? and every man, according as God hath prospered him. This may seem boastful. I do not so mean it; for I realize fully that something might have come along quite unexpected, and yet quite peremptory, which would have forced that bill out of my hands. And this curiously enough leads me into thoughts concerning the predestination of all things. Many are exercised on that subject; and like the many pro and con, I have mine own opinion, and none other just seems to fit my exact case. It is a sublimely solemn doctrine, as I view it, almost too grand for our weak tongues or pens; to think that though conscious, living mortals, with a conscious will and desire of our own, with every nerve of these bodies, and every thought of these hearts, throbbing with life and purpose, we are yet, in a sense, as seen beneath the great white throne, souls under the altar of sacrifice, whose ashes are being continually poured out, yet they themselves preserved. Who can idly reflect on the fact that some great unseen hand is quietly moving, nay, breathing him about with more ease than the most skillful chess player moves his men, and there is not a possibility of escape, no, not one? The profitableness of holding this doctrine appears to me to arise from the daily growth of it in a man's soul, and not the reasoning of it into his head. How does God plant and develop it in the love of those who do love it? By showing them it is a blessing, and not a curse, though its form be ominous. Little by little one circumstance after another arises, and so persistently moulds their actions that, looking back after perhaps years of traveling, they find themselves just opposite to where they expected to be. Now, were they brought there by a continuance of great and startling providences? Not at all. Trifles which seemed light as air in themselves, woven together by unseen links, brought it all about. A friend came in and talked; a book was read; a slander went round; some one's wrath was kindled; or they themselves fell heedlessly into some fault they had no thought of a moment before; and so the shadows and the sunshine each did their part. Was this natural all, or was the invisible One behind the natural? And who is he but God?

The great root of bitterness which disturbs so many about this doctrine springs from the inbred yet false vanity of our natural hearts. The weak conscience of poor man makes him fancy that in some way or other, if predestination be true, he will be forced into the commission of sins he would have avoided. If it has that effect on his mind I think he had better leave it as a deep beyond his fathoming, and strive earnestly after all the good he can attain. If he be a true son in perplexity, his Father will teach him in due season how much good he himself is capable of.

Again, he is disturbed about its making God the author of sin. Now, God cannot be the author of sin; that is, in the sense of evil flowing from his heart, as a filthy stream from a muddy source. No, all that flows from the soul of God is the pure river of the water of life. But God is the Creator of all things; and unless he had so created, sin could not exist. He has created the first natural human vessel a vessel of dishonor, that out of it he may fashion a vessel of honor. I have heard folks say God could have done without sin if he chose. I do not believe it. Sin is the necessary outcome of the working out of his glorious plan of redemption, through and by that weaker vessel, born for the grave. If he could have done without sin he would; for his hatred to sin is manifested on every Bible page, and in every falling judgment. It is the strange work of a God, who to show forth his glory and make his power known created the vessels of his wrath, and then endures them with much long-suffering, to be destroyed, when the vessels of his mercy shine forth in the beauty of his holiness from the womb of the resurrection morning.

What then is the predestination of all things? It is simply the blessed fact that the evil passions which belong to this first Adam are dammed up, turned about and forced into just the line of action which shall bear fruit unto life in the heirs of grace, and be forever slain in the heirs of death.

Supposing free will was a truth, who would ever continue in the narrow way to the end, even if God had placed him there? How comforting to read, "Whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son." What about Peter if this had not been truth?

Again, concerning the ungodly, if their will was also free how far would they go? They crucified Jesus according to the purpose of God. But was their malice satisfied there? Nay, verily. They rolled a great stone to the sepulchre; for they feared his resurrection. Would he ever have risen if man could have hindered? Or would there be any such thing as the hope of the resurrection if one link in the chain was wanting?

I do not have any trouble, as some good brethren seem to have, over the different terms permit, appoint, ordain, predestinate, &c. They each, to me, have a separate symbolic beauty. Thus, when I speak of God permitting sin, I design to convey the thought that though it is utterly contrary to his holy nature, he has a wise use for it; yet not as a license for me to tamper with it at liberty. When the word appoint is used, I understand that every character and act fills its proper place. Ordained brings to my mind the certainty and fixedness of the matter; and predestinated carries me back to the eternal records, and forward to the glorious and sure end. O! there is nothing to quarrel about, but everything to love, revere, and grow into, of the wonderful attributes of God. How marvelous the grace of God, who transmutes even the filth of sinful nature into messengers of mercy. The envy of Joseph's brethren carried him to Egypt; and after bitter repentance and fears they are comforted and rebuked by the two-edged sword of the word, "As for you, ye meant it for evil; but God meant it for good, to preserve much people alive, as ye see this day." Again, the abominable sinner in the Corinthian Church; how the Sun of righteousness caught up the cloud of his iniquity, and returned it in copious showers of grief and penitence on all the afflicted body of which he formed a part. Says the apostle, "Ye sorrowed after a godly sort. What carefulness it wrought in you; yea, what cleansing of yourselves; yea, what indignation; yea, what fear; yea, what vehement desire; yea, what zeal; yea, what revenge. In all things ye have approved yourselves to be clear in this matter." O that we could feel from day to day that all God's dealings with us are good, and that continually; for in him is no darkness at all. It is only our purblind eyes that magnify them into monsters.

I must close, I hope with one sincere prayer, that all who love the Lord Jesus in sincerity, of like precious faith, may be blessed, and also a blessing; and that the columns of this paper may grow in spiritual matter, as becometh a paper that professes to set forth the doctrine of a holy and spiritual Being, whom we adore as God. I feel that you will pardon this with all its errors, as I really have not time to copy it.

Sincerely yours,

MRS. J. STREET.

LYNCHBURGH, Va., Nov. 29, 1892.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—GENTLEMEN:—Please bear with me a few moments while I attempt to give in my poor way some idea of who I am and what I am. From my earliest recollection my parents were members of the Providence (Missionary Baptist) Church, in Charlotte Co., Va. There was no Primitive Baptist Church in that section, but I am satisfied that they were of the Primitive faith. They were members of the church which approached nearest the true one in their reach, and I have every reason to believe that they both entered into that rest which remaineth to the people of God. In 1860 there was a protracted meeting at the said church. I attended daily, and became much concerned about my soul's salvation. I finally went up to the mourners' bench. There I mourned and wept, and for days tried to merit God's favor. I did all in the power of poor mortal to get relief. I tried to get it in my own way; but, alas! I only sank deeper and deeper into the "Slough of Despond." All my prayers and efforts availed nothing. I did not know what to do. I thought, If I turn back I will be forever lost; and I cannot go forward. I saw no hope of redemption. But when God saw fit he showed me that there was nothing for me to do; that all my efforts were vain; that Christ Jesus had done it all for me; that salvation was complete, that is, was finished; and that I, a sinner, was not to be redeemed with corruptible things, but with the precious blood of Christ. I then realized my inability to do anything, and prayed, "O God, thy will be done, not mine. O God, be merciful to me, a poor sinner." When he made me see and feel just what I was, and when I gave up and felt there was no help in me, I think I was then and there converted; for I felt happy indeed. I loved everybody that said they loved Jesus. I was in a heaven on earth. I joined the church to which my parents belonged, and the following year the late war commenced, in which I served four years, still trusting in Jesus; but when I returned home there seemed to be something wrong. I felt that when I went to meeting I was in the wrong place. I could not feel free and at home there. I became quite unhappy; so much so that I had my name erased from the roll of church members, and sought peace and comfort in the world, but found none. All was gloomy and dark. A miserable man was I. I thought, O where shall I go, or what shall I do to obtain relief? It seems there is no room for me in the church, and no peace nor comfort for me outside. Finally I decided to rejoin the church, hoping to become reconciled. I was received again into the church, and in the meantime had become head of a family. I was then burdened with instructions as to what was necessary to render me a good member and christian; that I must hold family prayers (which I tried to do), that I must attend Sunday Schools, that I must take my children there with me, that I must give so much each year for the support of the pastor of the church, that I must give liberally for foreign as well as domestic missions; for the Lord loveth the cheerful giver. I then became bewildered, and did not know what to do; but I tried to do the duties required, hoping relief would come. But the more I tried the farther off I got. Alas! I am lost to all eternity if this is the way to heaven. I could not see how any one could get there by his own good works. If I am to be a Pharisee to get to heaven, the devil had just as well register my name on his book now. Excuse me, for I am nearly crazy.

But to return. I withdrew again from the church, and have been for several years a poor, wandering sinner, alone, with no one to comfort nor speak a word of consolation. My wife is a good woman, kind and affectionate. No man ever had a better wife than I have. My children are good and kind to me. But, O God! there is a great trouble they know not of. I cannot be with them. Their faith, their religion, is not mine. What shall I do? Shall I once more go back and ask admission into the popular church, the fashionable church, or must I humble myself enough to ask the old despised "Hard Shell" Baptists to let me go with them? I am almost persuaded to do the latter. Pardon me, for I am in trouble, and if possible want to get relief. I would here state that I am somewhat encouraged, since Mr. George B. Woodfin kindly gave me a copy of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. He asked me to read a sermon by John Kershaw. I did so, and must confess that although I am forty-nine years old I never before heard the gospel preached nor read a gospel sermon; but I have attended church regularly from my infancy. When I read the said sermon, under the impulse of the moment I wrote under it these words, "This one sermon is worth a thousand of any I ever heard;" and on deliberate reflection I repeat the assertion. I think I am right. I have never had the pleasure of hearing a sermon preached by a Primitive Baptist; but I am fully convinced that their faith is the true faith, and their religion the true religion, and their church the true church, and that John the Baptist was right. If not, why did our Lord and Master come to be baptized of him? All I have to say in conclusion is that old-time religion is good enough for me. I pray that God will incline you to remember me, a poor, wandering sinner in a heathen land. Inclosed please find two dollars for the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. Send it to me; and I pray that God may cause it to drop in the path of one more poor soul, as it did in mine. I thank God that he put it into the heart of Mr. George B. Woodfin to take an interest in me. I believe he is an earnest servant of God, and doing the work allotted him faithfully. I ascribe all praise to the Creator, and none to the creature.

Yours truly,

N. H. HAMLET.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

DIED—At Centreville, Queen Anne's Co., Md., Dec. 20th, 1892, Mrs. Mary E. Richardson, in the 44th year of her age.

Sister Richardson was the oldest daughter of brother George and sister Susan A. Alexander, and granddaughter of Elder Thomas Barton. She was baptized by her grandfather on the first Sunday in November, 1867, and so had been and continued in the membership and fellowship of the church until called away by death. She was married Sept. 17th, 1884, to Mr. A. A. Richardson; and the residence being some distance away, she had not often had opportunity to meet with us since her marriage. One after another our much loved brethren and sisters are being called from the church militant to the more blessed triumphant state. From apparent good health she was suddenly stricken down to suffer intensely, until her disease terminated fatally. It was supposed to be an internal abscess. One stroke after another has fallen upon this family in rapid succession, until methinks they are ready to say, "I am the man that hath seen affliction," and to make the shadow of the almighty wings their refuge until all these calamities be overpast. A husband kind and affectionate is bereaved now for the second time, a father and mother sorely stricken, and brothers and sisters deprived of a loving and devoted companion. When shall it be that he who reigns King in Jerusalem will comfort all her waste places? We may not know the why nor the wherefore, but we know that "The Master is come and calleth for thee."

E. RITTENHOUSE.

DEPARTED this life Sept. 25th, 1882, after a lingering illness of nearly two years, our dear daughter, Mary E. Huntley, aged 17 years.

Her affliction was bone disease of one leg, which was amputated, yet without avail. During her illness, which was attended with great suffering, she was very patient, and seemed resigned to the will of God, and often felt to sing of joys to come, seeming to realize that with the Lord there was no injustice to sinners; and especially at the time of her departure she was calm. While her relatives stood about her she expressed the wish that they all might meet where parting would be no more. Her favorite hymn, which she often sung during her sickness, was,

"O how sweet it will be, in that beautiful land,
So free from all sorrow and care,
With songs on our lips, and with harps in our hands,
To meet one another again, to meet one another again."

She was a good girl, and beloved by all; yet she seemed to feel her sinfulness, and God's goodness to her, and realized how short she had come in many things before her parents. Yet all could feel, in looking on her peaceful face after death, that for her to die was gain.

"Sorrow for joy she had exchanged,
Forever freed from pain,
And in the heavenly regions range;
For her to die was gain."

She seemed to delight in listening to the gospel's joyful sound before her sickness; and now that she has been gone these many years we are not without hope, both for the dear one we speak of, and for another dear daughter who died five years before with that terrible disease, diphtheria.

We have been stirred in our minds to speak of the past, and some of our gracious Lord's dealings with us in our trials, in sickness and health. O how much better to us has he been than all our fears! and we have felt to say, "Before we were afflicted we went astray; but now we learn to keep thy law." We feel to bless his holy name, who both gave and hath taken away. We have five children left to us, although two are far from our home here; yet the same powerful hand is underneath, and to him would we look.

G. BEEBE'S SONS:—Please publish the obituary notice of sister Mary Ann Stone, who departed this life May 5th, 1892, at half-past two o'clock p. m., with consumption, which preyed upon her more than two years. She had good physicians and tender nursing, but only obtained temporary relief. Her physician advised her to change climates, which she did by staying with her brother, B. Stone, in Kansas, in 1891. In April, 1892, she returned home to spend her last days with her mother, Mary A. Stone. Her age was 26 years and 18 days.

She was born in Macoupin Co., Ill., April 17th, 1866. She united by experience with the Otter Creek Primitive Baptist Church at Girard on June 21st, 1885, and was baptized July 19th of the same year, with sister Catherine Turner, by Elder B. F. Query, having remained a worthy member six years, ten months and fourteen days. She died at her mother's residence in Montgomery Co., Ill., where she had moved after the death of her husband, Henry Stone, who died Feb. 14th, 1891. They had nine children, seven sons and two daughters (one son having died a few years ago), leaving her mother, six brothers and one sister, with a number of relatives and friends, besides the church where she had her membership, to mourn her absence, but not as those who have no hope, for we believe that she is with her glorified Savior.

Her funeral was held on the 6th at her mother's, when Elder B. F. Querry preached a comforting sermon to the surviving relatives and friends. One brother living in Kansas and one in Nebraska were not present. Her body was conveyed to the Virden Cemetery, in Macoupin Co., Ill., and laid in the silent tomb, there to sleep until the last trump. "For the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed. For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality. So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? The sting of death is sin; and the strength of sin is the law. But thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." May the blessing of the Lord rest with the sorrowing family.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date. This date denotes the time at which your subscription expires; and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

CORRESPONDENCE.

395 LYELL AVE., ROCHESTER, N. Y., }
December, 1892. }

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—Having been solicited time and again for at least a sketch of my christian experience, for publication in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, I will, with your permission, pen a few lines for its readers, many of whom have corresponded with me for years, which has been both profitable and pleasant. I still hope to receive their messages of loving fellowship, although in my suffering condition I can make but few and short replies, suffering as I do from day to day with what my physicians have concluded is the "fatal cancer," and knowing not but that the snows of the present season may fall upon my grave. I have desired to extol the grace of God in the fifty years of my spiritual warfare in this dreary wilderness.

In June, 1825, I was born of poor but honest and strictly moral parents, both of whom were orderly members of the Particular Baptists of England. Although they possessed none of this world's goods but what the blessing of God in the labor of their hands furnished them, yet they were always able to furnish every necessary good, with many comforts, for their family, together with ability to give them a fair education, myself suffering most for want of the latter, having always, until a woman grown, such poor health that at the age of twelve and a half years I had to quit school entirely. About that time, in 1837 or 1838, the Baptists were passing through that terrible ordeal of divisions on points of doctrine introduced by one Andrew Fuller. Being old enough, I remember well the hard reasoning and strong controversies between my dear father and the visiting brethren of that church. For years my dear mother remained at ease among them, while it pleased the Lord to open my dear father's eyes from the first, so that he at once discovered the cloven foot and its rapid advancement. Two parties were in the same church, each having their favorite ministers. Never while memory lasts shall I forget one very old gentleman, who on a visit preached for the original party, taking for his text the words in Psa. cxix. 96, "I have seen an end of all perfection; but thy commandment is exceeding broad." How he emphasised the words "all" and "exceeding," extending even to every thought. I think that sermon was greatly blessed to my father, for it was soon after this that he withdrew from them entirely, never to return, nor even to look back. About this time a cause of truth was started in the same city by the original name, "Particular Baptists," the other party taking the name "Missionary Baptists." At this newly opened church my father with a brother of his, who also left the "Missionary" cause, attended steadily, well satisfied with what they heard. Here begins my history, then in my fifteenth year. I was naturally, when not sick, a lively girl, yet strictly moral. I had heard my mother many times remonstrate with my father for leaving his family to attend elsewhere; and many times when my uncle would bring reading matter, such as Gadsby's, Kershaw's and Warburton's lives, with many of Huntingdon's writings, for father's perusal, have I heard my mother wish she dared throw them into the fire. But O! poor dear, an after day tells a richer story for her. About this time, one day I heard a woman telling her that where my father attended the minister (Mr. Wilkin) preached infants in hell not a span long. This greatly incensed me, and I determined to hear him for myself, although mother was very strict to keep us with her. But soon after this, my parents being from home on a visit, we younger ones were left in care of the hired girl, who had orders to take us on Sunday to mother's chapel. But living in the country on a farm, I had to walk three miles to the one I felt determined to attend. On reaching a certain point I jerked away from the girl, and went to father's chapel; but I failed to hear what I had foolishly expected to; nor did anything that was said arrest my attention. This was in the morning of the day. As there was to be preaching in the evening, I walked home much impressed that I must go again in the evening; but on what my desire was grounded I could not tell; yet go I must, and go I did, leaving behind me the girl's threat to tell my mother on her return. That evening's text proved as a nail in a sure place, and reads as follows: "That Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith; that ye, being rooted and grounded in love, may be able to comprehend with all saints what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height, and to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, that ye may be filled with all the fullness of God."—Eph. iii. 17-19. On the reading of the text by the minister (Mr. Wilkin), my whole being became aroused, and in every point I became guilty before God; reproaching myself for my curiosity, and threatening never to attend again. But alas! ere the next meeting time (Wednesday evening) came I was wanting to go, yea, hungry to hear more of that which justly condemned me. Never after this did I attend my mother's chapel, except on two funeral occasions. I attended that chapel thirteen months before any one ever asked me what I came for; and I have always felt thankful that they so tested me. They would kindly speak to me of my long walks, dark evenings, bad weather &c., but never touched on religion; nor did I want them to; but on my coming to the church they told me they had very interestedly watched me, and had assumed that the root of the matter was wrought in me.

I never knew if the servant girl told my dear mother of my departure from her orders. She never once told me that she objected to my going with my father, and he never persuaded at all; yet I think he often went with me for company on a week-day evening, he having worked hard all day and being tired. Well, from this time on, for about three years, I was in bondage and distress, perplexity and woe, a sinner burdened with sins, and knew not where to go, until Jesus showed himself to me, and whispered, "I am thine." In the month of July, 1842, after working and toiling at Mount Sinai's base, a slave to that law which condemns for the least failure, and for a nonfulfillment kills outright, driven to the ends of the earth in my forlorn and helpless condition, having lost all faith in works for salvation, and hope itself having died in despair, in my distress of mind and agony of soul I concluded to just once more acknowledge the justice of God in my condemnation, and then quit the field of battle. Thus one night I laid down to rest, if possible, with all the horrors of the damned in my soul. Like the dear disciples, weary and worn, I fell asleep; and O! the wonderful transition. At early dawn, just as the sun was sending forth his lovely rays over the earth, I awoke, repeating the following, "He hath brought up my soul from the lowest hell; he hath set my feet upon a rock; he hath put a new song into my mouth, even praise unto our God." Filled with this wonderful joy I arose and looked forth from my window. Not only did the trees of the field seem to be clapping their hands, but all creation echoed the voice of its Creator. Nor was all this but a faint emblem of the inward warbling of my soul. Then it was in my experience that the light of the moon was as the light of the sun, and the light of the sun as the light of seven days. Looking back over my weary wanderings through that legal dispensation, with all its curses entailed, looking at it in the light of that Sun which had just arisen in my soul, or through the one anointing of my eyes, the darkness formerly experienced became light unto me. Contemplating the holiness and justice of God in the condemning power of that law, I saw a glory as by the light of that sun; just looking at Paul's language, "For if that which is done away was glorious, much more that which remaineth is glorious;" yes, even to the light of seven days; a perfect and increasing light, shining more and more unto the perfect day. But, brethren Beebe, should you find a place in our esteemed family paper for this poor scribble, can you or brother Jenkins find it convenient to give your views of the text referred to Isaiah xxx. 26? I would love to feast upon the full contents of the word, a measure of which filled my soul at the time.

The following May, 1843, then in my eighteenth year, I went to the church, told my hobbling story, and was warmly received into my mother's bosom (the church), where, after my baptism in the lovely river Nene, in Cambridgeshire, England, I was nourished up in words of faith and good doctrine, for a little more than ten years, when I left my home country for America, when and where, after six and a half years of our married life, my husband died, leaving me with three small children (boys) to raise and educate, and as best I could fit for business life, which, with the blessing of God, I accomplished, though I had no means save a very small home. I had therefore to labor with my hands from day to day to support myself and family. But I had many excellent friends, and that, too, of the most respectable class.

On our first settling in this country we began to inquire for our people, and so particularly describing their views of truth that none could mistake who we meant. We were told that there used to be, years ago, a people of that order down in Connecticut, but that they were now all dead and gone out of knowledge. We both felt greatly discouraged and sad; but after a few moments I said to my husband, "We shall yet find the people we want, I feel sure." He inquired why I thought so. I replied, "Because of the words so powerfully on my mind, 'Thine enemies shall be found liars unto thee, and thou shalt tread upon their high places.'" He feared I was too positive; but no. While I could do nothing to bring those words into my heart, neither could I do anything toward erasing them; for they were there, and abode with me, although it was not until after the death of my husband that I learned of this people, when two original members of a church that Elder St. John served moved into that village. On hearing me talk in the so-called Baptist Church there, and finding such conflicting views advanced from what was proclaimed there, they sent me a copy of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, in which was a letter, and also poetry, I think, written by you, brother Beebe, while incarcerated in prison during the late war. From that time on, though a widow for thirteen years, and often short of means, yet such a feast was it to my soul that I have never since seen the time when I could dispense with so rich a boon, by which means I soon learned the locality of both ministers and churches of that order. On becoming acquainted with Elder St. John, of Watkins N. Y., and Elder J. P. Smith, of Delphi, N. Y., both preached for me in my humble cottage several times, much to the chagrin and contempt of the aforesaid so-called church there. But no matter, my heart was fixed, trusting in the Lord, yet supposing they would cut me off for the same; for be it known that I had, soon after my husband's death, and during the ministry of a very sound and faithful preacher, been prevailed upon to join the church. This man, quite aged, answered to their call to serve them, a few months before my husband's death, he being very much comforted and encouraged in hearing him. I had heard him preach but few times myself, but liked and approved of all I did hear from him. I was quite ignorant of the mind of the church respecting him, but I thought and concluded if the desk were kept straight the pew was not apt to get very crooked. On this ground I united by experience, intending to write to my own home church for a letter. They said nay, but were quite willing to receive me on experience; so I did so. At that time no business matters of the church came up; but at the very next meeting I found them almost a unit in opposition to the dear old man's preaching, declaring he was preaching sinners away from Christ, and that under such preaching the church would go down, &c.; that they would never be able to get up any more revivals, nor do any more good. So it went on to the end of the year for which he was engaged, when they turned him out. But O! the hot water I had got into. What should I do? And what could I have done had not the Lord stood by me, and strengthened me for the battle before me? All this was before I had heard of the Old School Baptists.

Thus I was often heard talking in their meetings, when opportunity was given, opposing their errors, and showing by the testimony of Scripture their ignorance of and misapplication of the same. For eleven years I was battling with them, both privately and publicly, yet never could I offend them. They always manifested a disposition to want to hold me with them, until their potage became so poisonous that I really feared to partake of more would end in death to all my spiritual access to God or comfort of his holy word; so I sent in my resignation, although at last it was done rather hurriedly, the result of a rather singular circumstance, as follows. I was walking home from one of their meetings one very bright moonlight night, on a country road, in a village then called Centreville, in Onondaga County, N. Y. While going north the moon was shining directly upon my back, reflecting my shadow before me. I halted, the thought occurring to me that although the moon was shining so brightly, and every object around was so distinctly seen, yet I was only following my own shadow, which was the only dark object around me. I turned quickly around, the moon then shining directly in my face, and my shadow had disappeared. Something said to me, "This is just how you are walking with that people. You know the true light, and you rejoice in it, and it alone, and yet professedly are one with that people who walk in darkness, following their pernicious ways, as you in following your own shadow." Much more was shown me in it than I can express, but which quickly decided the matter in my own heart; and, as before stated, thereupon I sent in my resignation, after which I was never visited by any of that church. But ere long a business circumstance arose between two of the male members, insomuch that they called a council and threw their doors open to everybody. The aforesaid brother and sister, formerly members of the church with Elder St. John, but who, like myself, were at one and the same time ignorantly drawn into this so-called church (he also having sent in his resignation), with myself agreed to attend the council. After that business was dismissed, and there being time for further remarks, one of the senior members of the council arose and said, "Since being in this village I have learned of two persons, formerly members of this church, sending in their resignation, without asking for a letter by which to join another. If either are present I would like them to give their reasons for so doing." After a little hesitation I arose, acknowledging myself one of the requested, adding that my reasons for so doing arose from a dissatisfaction with the views advanced by every minister I had heard there, saving the one serving the church at the time I united; that in reference to not asking for a letter, I had long concluded that an unsound church could not give a sound letter, and that my christian experience would prove a more satisfactory admission into any church I might thereafter unite with, of my own faith and order, founded upon the Scriptures. The brother then arose and testified similarly, each feeling relieved that we had the opportunity of testifying to the work of God in us.

Some time after this my present husband put in an appearance, he living in Utica, N. Y. where we were finally married, and I moved there. At the time of my leaving the Missionary Church I had no knowledge of this circumstance, nor had I even heard of the man, my present husband. But the Lord opened the way by leading me to the people of my choice, where more than twenty years since I united; in which church I have learned some lessons both pleasant and painful, bringing me down to this my jubilee year of spiritual training and instruction; a long schooling on a very dull scholar; for O how weak, foolish and ignorant I am. How little do I know; yet I am glad for that very little.

Though a sinner vile and base,
Yet a sinner saved by grace.

And now that in the providence of God we removed to Rochester, having two sons here, our nearest point of truth is May's Mills, where (though I never expect to go again) we have taken much of true comfort in meeting with the saints in their assemblies, as also in the ministration of the word by their pastor, Elder Bogardus, all being united in peace. O how good it is to dwell together in unity.

Being very weary, and also suffering, and fearing to weary you also (having had many sittings at this), I will for the present draw to a close, hoping, if spared, and this is published, to again take up some of the threads of the subject which, on reading this over, I find are left in an unfinished manner, my frequent extreme sufferings greatly interfering with my memory. Yet I ask one more favor (if not intruding), the copying of a few clauses from "Memories of the late John Warburton, Jr., of Southill, England, as an advertisement of the precious and valuable work of the Lord with him; not that I have the slightest pecuniary interest in the sale of the book, further than the comfort of Zion and the glory of God. The book is obtainable of his son, Mr. P. Warburton, 706 Nostrand Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y., at quite reasonable prices. The following are some of the extracts.

"The cares of this world, the mind engrossed with business, and the affections borne away by the things of earth, choke for a time the seeds of life. If God did not now and then call his people's affections from earthly things, what would be the consequence? The very thought seems to distress one. The Lord has but to speak to the heart, and immediately there is attention and action. 'When thou saidst, Seek ye my face, my heart said unto thee, Thy face, Lord, will I seek.'—Psa. xxvii. 8. What! no acting, no moving, no seeking, no praying, no longing, no desiring spiritual things, without being prompted with divine power? No, not the least moving in the heart. Of course my eyes can look into the word, my body can go to chapel, my tongue can articulate words, I can kneel in outward devotion, I can attend to a whole round of prescribed forms; but all of that, in the absence of the heart, is only bodily service; and that never did profit. Paul proved it so; so have I; so have you, and thousands more. It is the heart God requires. 'Son, give me thine heart.' O what a barren desert the heart is! It is under the curse of the divine law. Like Jericho, the city of the heart of man is pleasant for many things; but the water (the affections) is naught, and the ground barren. What is to be done with it? Some say, Cultivate it; but I have lived long enough in the world to know that a sandy desert is a desert."

"The atonement, of which I have in former letters in such a feeble manner attempted to write, is most surely believed amongst us. It is the mystery of God, the foundation of the Bible, the hope of sinners, the wonder of angels, the song of the redeemed, the confusion of devils, the glory of the elect, the matter of the Scriptures, and the truth which runs through every gospel sermon. It is the channel of mercy, the delight of God, the victory of saints, the wisdom of the wise, the scorn of fools, and the masterpiece of God. It is the armor of light to the christian in the conflict of faith. Without it there can be no standing against the wiles of the devil. It is the watchman's light. It is a lesson to the scholar, and a marvel to the learned. It is the life of the living. It supports the weak, encourages the timid, emboldens the feeble, restores the wandering, raises the sinking, and revives the parched. It turns curses into blessings, and wailings into songs. Indeed, thousands of tongues have spoken of its worth, thousands of sages have written of its virtue, power and glory, and yet not one-half of its value has ever been told. It is a mine whose riches can never be explored, an ocean that can never be fathomed."

"Showers cause the bud to swell, the flower to open; they fill the pools, and make the watercourses to flow. Things then appear lively; and when this is the case spiritually, the heart is filled with gratitude; the out-door crop and indoor feelings of soul move in harmony; when the watercourses flow, the willows by them thrive and flourish; and when the springs in Zion flow forth, causing floods upon the dry ground, and goodness and mercy to be poured upon the soul, faith then springs up, and we know that spiritual faith is taken up with the Master's business; it watches his hand and observes his footsteps. If the Lord withhold his favors, faith will beg and supplicate at the door of mercy for fresh supplies; and if it beholds the least token of mercy arising out of the sea of grace, even like a cloud as small as the hand of a man, it will return to the soul with words of encouragement, for there is a sound of abundance of rain. The soul then comes forth on the testimony of faith, and says, The Lord liveth. Hope thou in him, for I shall yet praise him."

And now, dear brethren Beebe and Jenkins, as our time for remitting for our highly esteemed and much valued paper, the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, is near by, please find inclosed P. O. Order for the coming year. Wishing you much of the presence of the Lord, and abundant success in your labors,

Your truly unworthy sister,
LYDIA ALEXANDER.

HIGHLAND, Oregon, Dec. 16, 1892.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—I arrived at my sister's Mrs. Mary Ringo, in Clackamas County, Oregon, yesterday, and have learned of the death of our dear old brother, Elder John Stipp. No doubt some of the brethren will send to the SIGNS OF THE TIMES a sketch of his life and an account of his last sickness and death; but I have felt a desire to add my feeble testimony and express my appreciation of the dear old brother's worth. In him the church had an able and uncompromising defender of her faith and order. Among all the ministers I ever met or heard preach, I never heard Elder Stipp's equal; not as an orator, but as a scriptorian. His mind seemed to grasp his subject, with all the Scripture bearing upon the same. He was not a man carried about by every wind of doctrine. His views on different points of doctrine were well studied, and when he advanced them, either in preaching or writing, he did it as being certain that he was right. His preaching was almost entirely doctrinal, but his private talk showed that he was not a stranger to the many trials of the saints. His doubts and fears were as great as the very least of the children of God. His only hope was in the blood of Jesus. But he is now at rest; his warfare is ended; he has received the crown of righteousness.

Well done, faithful servant; enter into the joy of thy Lord. May the Lord remember Zion, and give her gifts for her comfort and for his glory.

I will add no more, hoping some brother or friend will prepare a suitable notice of his death for publication.

In gospel bonds your brother in hope,

G. E. MAYFIELD.

ALDIE, Va., Dec. 13, 1892.

ELDER E. V. WHITE—DEAR BROTHER:—We buried poor brother Chamblin last Friday. It was sad to put him away; but he is doubtless at rest, and through with the suffering of this sin-accursed world. How I long for rest from sin myself, and every evil. But, my dear brother, it seems to me there can be nothing but sin about me; no spirit but what is of the flesh. It seems to me my own heart has deceived me. My life looks to be such a complete failure in every way but in evil. There is but one thing to console me; I would have it otherwise if I could. Whether that desire is of the Spirit I do not know; for my selfishness and self-seeking is so deep seated, running through every fibre of my being, that I can trace every desire of my heart to it. Even from that seems to proceed my desire for holiness and purity, knowing that the greater good comes from them to any one possessing them. No doubt the good Lord has some use for me, an infinitesimal speck in his world; and I will fulfill that use, like every louse or frog sent into Egypt; but it does seem that the use is something like theirs, to worry and annoy. But I feel that God is good. I find no fault with him. But I do so want his goodness to rest upon me, to be made as he is. I want him to dwell in me, and everything I do to be pleasing to him. I want every thought to be in subjection to him. I do so want to lose sight of myself, and to draw near unto him with full purpose of heart; but the reverse of this I find to be true.

I did not intend to write this, but to explain my absence from your daughter's wedding. My best wishes for you and each one of your family.

As ever, your affectionate brother,
J. N. BADGER.

HANNIBAL, Mo., Dec. 28, 1892.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—The 25th instant was my 80th birthday, and I reckon this will be the last annual remittance I will be able to make for the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. My connection with the paper has been long and (to me) pleasant. It has been nearly sixty years since I received the first number, and in that long period I do not know that I have missed a number. I still, though nearly worn out, have the interest of the paper and its success at heart, and hope the Lord may bless and prosper you in your present undertaking to furnish the brotherhood of Primitive Baptists with a weekly paper, and that it may also prove profitable to you, in order that it may be permanent.

I would like to write something for the information of the brethren, that they may know my present condition. Though nearly helpless, yet I have been greatly blessed of the Lord, for which I desire to praise and adore his blessed name. Should I improve sufficiently, I may do so hereafter.

With love for you, dear brethren, and all saints, I am your unworthy brother,

W. F. KERCHEVAL.

REISTERSTOWN, Md., Jan. 18, 1893.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—In the SIGNS of this week I notice a request from J. E. Moore, Cornwallville, N. Y., for my views upon Matthew xx. 16 or xxii. 14, through the SIGNS. Will you allow me space in the SIGNS to say that in the number of your paper for Feb. 19th, 1890, an article of mine upon the first named text may be found? I could write nothing different were I to write again, and I would refer the writer of the request to that number; and I would say that the same language in Matthew xxii. 14 I understand to refer to the same thing in substance as in Matthew xx. 16. Perhaps the one difference may be that while the text in Matthew xx. 16 relates rather to the spirit in which our service is rendered, the same words in Matthew xxii. 14 relate more directly to the outward course of life of those who profess to be followers of Christ. A right spirit is enjoined by the one text and its connection, and a right conduct by the other. Both taken together show the importance of a right spirit showing itself in a right manner; and I understand both to relate to professed disciples of Jesus only.

I remain your brother in a precious hope,

F. A. CHICK.

NOTICES.

WE EXPECT,

THE Lord willing, in a few numbers, to commence the publication of the Minutes of the proceedings and the resolutions drafted at the meeting of the brethren at Black Rock, Md., in 1832, at the time the division took place between the Baptists in the United States. After publishing the above we expect to run in serial form the able and powerful orations of Edward Livingston before the London Missionary Board, May, 1824.

We at first anticipated commencing these articles with the beginning of the present volume; but we are receiving each number such large accessions to our list of subscribers that we have decided to delay their publication for a short time, in order to enable as many as possible to have the articles complete.

PERSONAL.

IF J. W. Skaggs is living, and sees or hears of this request, he will please write to me, giving me his address.
M. B. WEEDON.

FORT SCOTT, Kansas.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

[WE have frequently made mention of the letters we are daily receiving from brethren and sisters who delight to read the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, but whose financial circumstances will not permit of their paying for it; and in order that those who are so kindly contributing to assist us in sending the paper to these brethren may have an idea of the nature of the appeals to which we refer, we publish below a few extracts from letters which are a fair sample of those we are constantly receiving. To all of these the paper is now sent; but we could not afford to send it were it not for the liberal aid we are receiving from those contributing to assist us in bearing the expense. Not having the consent of the writers to publish these letters, we omit the signatures and date lines.—ED.]

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS:—DEAR BRETHREN:—I have thought that by this time I would be able to send you my remittance for the last year; but I am not yet able. I thought I would write you to stop my paper; but it seems that I cannot do without it, as it contains about all the preaching I hear. It advocates the doctrine my soul delights in, if I know my heart. I am nearly sixty-eight years old, with no income but my own labor. It is the hardest times in money matters I have ever experienced. Your brother, I hope.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—I cannot expect you to furnish me with our precious paper, the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, free any longer, although in my lonely condition it is a great comfort to me. Our church is sixteen miles distant, and since my dear son was drowned I seldom get to hear preaching. We have plenty of preaching all around us, but I would starve to death on such preaching, if I were to go and hear it. If I ever get my home paid for I will pay for the dear old SIGNS the balance of my life. My little girls plow, and I work out the most of the time. Every dollar we can make, except a bare support, we pay on our land. We have three years more to pay in; and if we do not pay it, we will lose what we have paid. So you see my prospects.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—I have been a subscriber to the SIGNS for a few years, and there is no one that likes it, and the doctrine it teaches, better than I do; but I will tell you how it is with me financially. I am not able to pay you for it. Some years ago I was thrown from a mule and disabled for life. I am a poor man, and do not see how I can pay you for your kindness to me. I would say to those who have been so kind as to send me the paper for two years, I hope I will never be so ungrateful as to forget you. I hope the Lord will reward you for your kindness. I am sixty-four years old. I have been an Old Baptist about thirty-five years, but did not cross Jordan until about seven or eight years ago. I have a great desire to see brother W. L. Beebe. I read and re-read the dear SIGNS. There are also some others I wish to see who write for the SIGNS. I am six miles from any church, and cannot go often. We have but little preaching in the winter, on account of high water and bad swamps.

Dear brethren, farewell. May the Lord bless you in all your undertakings. Pray for me. I remain your brother in Christ, I hope.

NEW JERUSALEM.

BRETHREN BEEBE:—Will you please give your views on Rev. xxii. 1-6? Now, please do not refer me to some other article, or to some article written by other parties; for that will not satisfy me. I am now almost sixty-two years old, and am no doubt a little childish; certainly I am somewhat carnal, for I have preferences as to preachers and writers. I expect still to continue to patronize the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, and to do what I can to extend its circulation. I am a poor, ignorant, old sinner; and for thirty-five years I have been trying to preach the unsearchable riches of Christ; and I often feel that trying is about all that I have done. This may not be worth the time that it will take you to read it; but it is from one who hopes and believes he loves you in the truth as it is in Jesus. Fare ye well in the Lord!

REPLY.

"And he showed me a pure river of water of life, clear as crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God and of the Lamb. In the midst of the street of it, and on either side of the river, was there the tree of life, which bare twelve manner of fruits, and yielded her fruit every month; and the leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations. And there shall be no more curse; but the throne of God and of the Lamb shall be in it; and his servants shall serve him; and they shall see his face; and his name shall be in their foreheads. And there shall be no night there; and they need no candle, neither light of the sun; for the Lord God giveth them light; and they shall reign forever and ever. And he said unto me, These sayings are faithful and true; and the Lord God of the holy prophets sent his angel to show unto his servants the things which must shortly be done."—Rev. xxii. 1-6.

It would require much presumption for us to attempt to comply with this request if in so doing we propose to tell our esteemed brother something which he has not already learned in the long experience of his ministry; but it is scarcely necessary to disclaim the desire to present anything more than the things which have been revealed in the manifestation of the Spirit to all them who are led by its sacred instruction. The fact that the individual experience of our readers thus bears witness to the truth of such views as are submitted, is the best assurance of the fellowship of that guidance in which the saints are all taught of the Lord. However much the saints may differ in the details of their understanding of particular passages of Scripture, there can be no variance in their knowledge that "Salvation is of the Lord." When rightly understood, every portion of the inspired testimony concurs in this central principle of divine truth. So it is written, "To him give all the prophets witness, that through his name whosoever believeth in him shall receive remission of sins."—Acts x. 43. No interpretation of any inspired expression can be correct unless it bears witness of the grace of God revealed in Christ Jesus; and no very serious error can be involved in any exposition which recognizes that great embodiment of eternal truth. With this principle in view, whatever ability may be given to any minister in expounding the Scriptures will redound to the praise of that grace by which it is conferred upon him; God will be declaratively glorified, and the saints will be comforted; while the very grace bestowed will humble its recipient in the lowest dust of humility. Thus creature boasting is excluded not merely by a prohibitory law, but by the very light of truth shining in the heart of the favored saint. The more he is enabled to see Jesus exalted, so much the more is he made to abhor himself in dust and ashes. Only when deceived by false imaginations of carnal reason can the saints find anything to exalt self in the most lofty views which are shown to created intelligence. When any discovery of unknown beauty in the gospel is productive of intolerance and impatience toward those who have not been favored to receive the same manifestation, it is evident that the carnal mind is in control of the intolerant one; and it is more than probable that the fancied light is but a shining device of the adversary, by which he has captivated the deluded child. Against such snares the saints are warned in all the admonitions of the sacred word. These cautions are needful for them in their sojourn in time, or they would not have been left on record.

It will not be expedient to treat the text by separate clauses, or to even dwell upon every point of truth embraced in it. Our esteemed brother will not need to be reminded that this is a portion of that vision in which the Lord Jesus by his angel signified to his servant John "things which must shortly come to pass." With all the Scriptures this is included in the testimony of Jesus. While its awfully majestic sublimity strikes even the natural mind with peculiar force, to the subject of divine instruction there is no beauty in it except as it presents Jesus in his glorious power as the Savior of his people from their sins. The Spirit of truth must take and show this in every case, or the word is sealed from the scrutiny of finite investigation. Not even the natural mind of the saints is capable of receiving this revelation. Only by that faith which is the fruit of the Spirit can the saints themselves receive the things of Jesus which by that Spirit of truth are ministered unto them. This is clearly shown by the fact that John could understand nothing of all he saw and heard except as it was given him by the ministry of the Spirit, which is the Angel of Jesus Christ bearing witness of him.

It is important to observe that the revelation of the "river of water of life" was not a muddy little rivulet, such as might be stopped by any earthly obstruction. It was not only the water that was pure; the river itself is described as pure, signifying that there was no mingled pollution of earth to be found in that wonderful river. Neither could its purity admit of any condition to be rendered by a sinner in order to produce the crystal water of life in the river. No stronger illustration is afforded in nature than the crystal as expressing the perfect clearness of the water of life. The river cannot be separated from the water which constitutes it; both the river in its purity and the water of life proceed out of the throne of God and of the Lamb. As the river and the water are inseparable, so the throne of God is one with the throne of the Lamb. The throne signifies power and dominion. The omnipotence of God is all revealed in the Lamb; and only in that infinite power could this glorious river have its origin. The saints require no arguments to convince them that this river has no earthly fountain for its source. In the first display of divine light they learned that their only hope of salvation from their sins must be in the eternal election of God. Thus they are witnesses that this pure river proceeds out of the absolute power of God and of the Lamb, which is signified by the throne, in our text.

In the description of the street of it, and the river which was so inseparable from the street and the tree of life, there is a declaration which can never be comprehended by finite intelligence; and yet to every babe who is taught of God it is made clear that this description is the exact statement of the order of the holy city. When in the wilderness of condemnation they found no city to dwell in, neither any way by which they might come to a city of habitation, they were perishing with thirst, and their tongue failed in that dry land. They can never forget that Jesus was revealed in their extremity as the fountain of living water, and the only way of life. He is the Rock who was smitten in the wilderness, from whose wounded side flows the never failing river of the water of life, whose fountain is in the eternal purpose of God which he purposed in himself. This river never diverges from the living way, which is the street of the holy city, new Jerusalem. Our text is but a continuation of the glorious description of the vision which runs through the preceding chapter. It must not be forgotten that the whole vision is of the heavenly city. No earthly city could have such a river, such a street, and such a tree. This tree of life was one tree, yet it was in the midst of the street of the city, and on either side of the river. There never was any such river, street and tree even in the garden of Eden. It was typically represented there by the tree of life, but that was not the eternal life of the church, which was in Christ Jesus. "In him was life; and the life was the light of men." This divine Tree of life never was anywhere else but in the midst of the street of the holy city, and on either side of the pure river of water of life. He is the blessed Man, of whom David sings in the first Psalm. He is planted by the infinite and immutable counsel of God, and his fruit shall not wither. Every month, whether in the parching heat of summer, or in the chilling frosts of winter, this precious fruit shall feed and comfort the blest inhabitants of this favored city. There is no season for which this heavenly fruit is not adapted. In the day of prosperity there is the joy of the precious presence of the Lord; in the time of adversity and trial, the assurance of his unchanging faithfulness and truth affords heavenly food to strengthen and sustain every one of the afflicted and poor people, who have fled for refuge to lay hold on the hope which is set before his saints in the name of Jesus Christ the Righteous. But for the provision of this unfailing supply of the fruit of the Tree of life, the pilgrims and strangers would be unable to survive the arduous toil of their sojourn in the wilderness of this present evil world. Their Lord was made perfect through that suffering in which he was sustained by the angel from heaven strengthening him; so his followers must learn their own weakness in being conformed to the glorious grace revealed in him. It is important to notice that it was in the very moment of his expression of perfect resignation to the will of God that he received this omnipotent support from heaven. No saint ever rejoiced in that divine deliverance until stripped of every confidence in any selfish or earthly dependence.

Even the leaves of the Tree of life are for the healing of the nations. This does not signify that the nations of them who know not God are provided for in these leaves. By reference to the preceding context it will be seen that only the nations of them which are saved can walk in the light of this glorious city; the glory and honor of those nations shall be brought into the city. "And there shall in no wise enter into it anything that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination, or maketh a lie; but they which are written in the Lamb's book of life." Since the Tree of life, with all its twelve manner of fruits, including also its leaves, was within the gates of the holy city, it is clear that none could be partakers of the nourishment and healing afforded by it but those "nations of them which are saved," against whom "the gates of it shall not be shut at all by day; for there shall be no night there." Certainly it would be a violent wresting of the figure to understand that in this divinely appointed city there was provision made for the food and the healing of those evil workers, of whom God expressly declared that they should never come into the city. The healing leaves as well as all the twelve manner of fruits must be for the exclusive benefit of the people whom God has chosen unto salvation. This sacred Tree of life can never be approached by any others but the nations of them which are saved; because God himself, when he drove out the man from the garden, "placed at the east of the garden of Eden, cherubim, and a flaming sword which turned every way, to keep the way of the tree of life." In this absolute prohibition of the approach of the sin-polluted man to that typical tree of life, the Spirit shows to the saints the impossibility of any of the guilty race of Adam ever finding access to God through Jesus, the true Tree of life, until the Spirit of Christ is given to each one in his individual experience. Since this Tree is in the midst of the street of the city, and on either side of the river, there is no possibility that one of the inhabitants of the new Jerusalem should ever be in a position where this living and life-giving Tree shall fail to bring every needed support, nourishment and healing balm.

In the announcement that there shall be no more curse, there is presented a very striking contrast with that legal dispensation, which is characterized as the ministration of death.—2 Cor. iii. 7. While it was indeed glorious, that fiery law could only show the justice of the sentence which consigned to despair every man who failed to fulfill its most rigorous demand. There never was any life provided in the obedience to its just requirements. It could only accept the service as in payment of the debt which it demanded. Consequently, "As many as are of the works of the law are under the curse; for it is written, Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things which are written in the book of the law to do them."—Gal. iii. 10. This curse remains upon every one who seeks acceptance with God by works of obedience to that law which was given to Israel from Sinai. That law has no place in the new Jerusalem, the gospel church, which is above that slavish law, and is free, with her spiritual children.

There can be no need of any precepts written in stone for the nations who are favored to dwell in the everlasting habitation of this spiritual city of God. This is stated as the explanation of the glorious fact that there shall be no more curse. There can be no curse where the throne of God and of the Lamb is established. As there can be no darkness where the sun shines in nature, so the presence of God and of the Lamb renders the existence of sin impossible. Where there is no sin there can be no curse; and without the curse there can be no death. Since Christ is himself the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth, it is clear that there can be no sin still resting upon those who are redeemed from the curse of the law by his perfect atonement. "Clouds and darkness are round about him; righteousness and judgment are the habitation [or, establishment] of his throne."—Psalm xcvii. 2. The throne of our God is not a mere natural seat. As he is a Spirit, so the throne of his glory is his own infinite holiness. It is the fact that this throne is established in his church, by which it is rendered certain that his servants shall serve him. It is not merely stated that it shall be the duty of his servants to serve him; but the divine perfection of his government is such that it is an established fact that every one of his servants shall serve him. In the same everlasting covenant this is secured, together with the eternal foundation of his throne. He has engaged to be their God, and also he declares they shall be his people. Their service is not enforced by the terrors of death and penal sufferings. They are moved by the noblest motive which can be conceived of by man. It is not merely the fleeting emotion which is called natural love. They are made to desire the service of their God by the work of his Spirit which dwells in them, and works in them both to will and to do of his good pleasure. They do not merely serve him with outward actions; in their heart and spirit they render that worship which is acceptable in his sight. This is in that new heart and right spirit which their God creates and puts within them. Their service is inseparable from seeing his face, and bearing his name in their foreheads. As no one can ever see his own forehead, it is not possible that the saint should behold this seal of the Holy Spirit in himself. Yet they can never draw near to the throne of divine grace without presenting this name as their only claim to the favor of God. It is only as they bear his name that they hunger and thirst after righteousness. Surely no saint can claim that his corrupt and sinful carnal heart can produce that holy desire to bear the image of the beloved Savior. There is strong consolation in the fact that they who see his face do bear this seal of the Spirit of truth. Although many times they may fear to claim that they bear the mark of his name in their foreheads, they can hardly deny that they have seen his face. Perhaps in deep trial they may fear to claim that they have seen his face in open vision; but even then it will be hard for them to deny that they have seen his face in some of his saints. In this very weakness they give assurance that they bear the mark of his name in their foreheads.

In the declaration that there shall be no night there, the saint may be ready to find a witness against his own hope; since it is his constant complaint that his path is through darkness. This would be a very serious ground of doubt if it were not that the whole testimony of inspired servants is filled with the very same record of gloomy experience. Yet the subjects of this darkness are fully satisfied that they are themselves the cause of the darkness which oppresses them. They know by faith that "God is light, and in him is no darkness at all." But it is conclusive evidence that the light of life shines in the heart of any sinner when he knows this truth. No light of nature, as of a candle or the natural sun, or human reason, can show the glories which are revealed in that light which the Lord God giveth to all those whose dwelling is in this holy city. In the throne of his eternal power they reign with their Lord forever and ever.

In the closing testimony of the faithfulness and truth of these sayings is presented the certainty with which the determinate counsel of God has fixed every item in the changing scenes of time, so that none of the afflictions of his saints are accidental, and nothing can prevent their enjoyment of every comfort and joy which is given them in the divine appointment. The angel of revealed truth has borne no uncertain testimony, either in the written word of inspiration, or in the personal experience of those who are led by the Spirit of God. All his sayings are "faithful and true." The afflicted and poor people, who are pilgrims and strangers in the world, are constantly made to prove the infinite perfection of this truth of God. In each individual experience they are qualified to bear witness that the Captain of their salvation has never left them. He giveth them the victory, not only in their final deliverance from the bondage of mortality, but in every time of trial. The more severely they are called to suffer the more perfectly they are prepared to sing of his present help in their victory. There is strong support for the tried saint in the positive determination by which our God declares that all the things appointed "must shortly be done." His purpose of mercy and grace toward the subjects of electing love can never be defeated by all the powers of sin and hell. Every element of opposition against them shall but develop more manifestly their perfect safety as being "kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the last time." This gospel dispensation is the last time; and the hope of the saints in the salvation which is by grace, shall never fail until time shall be no more. Then hope shall be lost in the fulfillment of eternal glory, and faith shall be swallowed up in that glorious knowledge which is inconceivable. It can only be expressed in the words of inspiration, "Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is."—1 John iii. 2. In the manifestation of this gracious appointment of God, the saints are called to pass through much tribulation here in time; but the assurance of faith sustains them in all their conflicts, and they endure affliction as seeing him who is invisible. Infinite love enables them to glory in tribulation, and to count it all joy when they fall into divers temptations. All their trials are included in "the things which must shortly be done."

From what has been written our brother will understand that we see in the text the revelation of the heaven of gospel liberty as in contrast with the legal state of bondage under the Mosaic economy. Whatever may be included in the text in declaration of the ultimate glory of the church, we have not yet experienced, and can only wait for. Such views as may be satisfactory to others we are not disposed to controvert, being satisfied that there is much revealed to others which is beyond our measure. Of us nothing should be required but what has been revealed in our own experience. Those who have received larger development of the grace of God may well afford to bear with our weakness and extend the mantle of charity over our ignorance. Certainly the purity of the river of the water of life does not symbolize the wars and fightings which distress the saints when striving about words to no profit. "There is a river the streams whereof shall make glad the city of God, the holy place of the tabernacles of the Most High." That is the river which was shown to John in this vision. From no other source can the saints obtain joy and gladness; and from the heavenly sweetness of these streams sorrow and sighing forever must flee away. No other fountain could sustain the afflicted saints under their heavy weight of distresses and trials. Surely this helpless and suffering people have reason to rejoice in the positive assurance of that predestinating grace of God in which is their only hope of final victory over all their sins and sorrows. This is the new Jerusalem, in which is all the rest which remains to the people of God.

WE EXPECT,

THE Lord willing, in a few numbers, to commence the publication of the Minutes of the proceedings and the resolutions drafted at the meeting of the brethren at Black Rock, Md., in 1832, at the time the division took place between the Baptists in the United States. After publishing the above we expect to run in serial form the able and powerful orations of Edward Irving before the London Missionary Board, May, 1824.

We at first anticipated commencing these articles with the beginning of the present volume; but we are receiving each number such large accessions to our list of subscribers that we have decided to delay their publication for a short time, in order to enable as many as possible to have the articles complete.

OUGHT INFIDEL PUBLICATIONS BE PROHIBITED BY LAW?

[THE following verbatim report of a speech by Elder H. M. Curry before the National Normal University, in Lebanon, Ohio, on Thursday, Dec. 15th, 1892, is published at the request of many who heard it. The circumstance that called it forth was a speech from a gentleman advocating the prohibition of Infidel publications by law.—ED.]

THE question involves the most sacred rights of man, and the most vital principles of human government. I take my stand upon the side of truth, justice and freedom. I am not an infidel; but suppose I were one, would that subject my conscience to the dictates of other men? Would that take from me the inalienable rights to which I am born, and which are vouchsafed to me by all right principles of government? So far as human legislation is concerned I have a perfect right to worship any god or no god, just as my conscience might dictate. I have a perfect right to confess or to question any creed, any religion, or any book, notwithstanding any claim that either may make to divine origin. If I should not believe the Bible I have a right to say so, and no one has the right to prohibit me from publishing to the world my reasons for not believing it.

This nation is not owned by a church, nor creed, nor any body of divinity. This is a purely secular government, a government for the people, without respect to any shade of religious belief whatever. Let us forget then for a short time that we are Methodists, or Baptists, or Presbyterians, or Catholics, and remember that we are men and women, American citizens, living under a constitutional government, which declares that all men are created free and equal.

First, then, so-called Infidel writings are not so baneful to society as is generally supposed; but, on the contrary, they have been and continue to be a positive benefit. We are too prone to judge the music by the amount of gilding on the organ pipes. We are too apt to forget that gold is gold, whether in the leathern pouch of the beggar or in the silken purse of the king. We should remember that truth is truth, though it fall from the lips of the Infidel; and falsehood is falsehood, although served in the name of Christ from the silvery tongue of a pious priest. What evil is found in such writings, per se, that they should be denied publication? Where is the example of a man being inspired to commit suicide, or to take the life of another, by reading the "Mistakes of Moses?" Who ever heard of a young woman, just in the bloom of youth, being incited to drown herself, or to elope with a worthless lover, by reading Voltaire? Where is the example of young men being excited to burglary or highway robbery by reading "Hume's Essays?" Who ever heard of men being incited to arm themselves with fire and sword for the purpose of suppressing false worship by reading Paine's "Age of Reason?" But turn to history, turn to our daily papers, and there are thousands of examples, of every specie and shade of crime, in which the unfortunate actors were incited to the destruction of themselves and of others by reading some modern novel, some religious fanaticism, or some newspaper romance, written nine times out of ten by some professor of the christian religion. It is claimed that such writings make Infidels of the people. This is the merest assumption. Thomas Paine, Voltaire, David Hume, Diderot, and many other illustrious men, were driven to renounce the christian religion by the abominable practices of the so called "christian church." The abuses of the name of the christian religion have led more thinking men to question the truth of the Bible than all the Infidel books ever published.

This class of writings has promoted literature and art, science and civilization. As soon as the astronomer began to scan the heavens, the so-called church branded his noble forehead with the word Infidel. As soon as the geologist began to read the history of the earth in books of stone, the same anathema was hurled at him. When men in the realm of political and moral science began to question the divine right of kings, and the cunningly devised fables of priests, they received the same mark in their hands and in their foreheads. Take away from our libraries of science the writings of Huxley, Darwin, Spencer, and a few others, all of whom have been called Infidel, and what is left is almost worthless. Take from every department of knowledge the contributions of Humboldt, and each is robbed of its brightest gems and most valuable treasures. Did all the priests of Rome increase the intellectual wealth of that nation as much as Bruno? Did all the priests of France do as much for civilization as Voltaire? Did all the clergy of Scotland add as much to the sum of human knowledge as David Hume? Have all the clergy, monks, friars, priests, bishops, cardinals and popes of all Christendom done as much for religious liberty as Thomas Paine? The whole world is better off for his writings. Every sentence drawn from his pen was a blow against tyranny and a stroke for freedom. He was the only man in America, except Jefferson, perhaps, who had courage enough to attack Washington and his State church in Virginia. He saw oppression upon every hand, hypocrisy at the altar, venality upon the bench, and tyranny upon the throne; and with the courage of a true hero he raised his voice and wielded his pen against it all. To his writings, the "Age of Reason" not excepted, even more than to Roger Williams, we owe the religious liberty of this nation. The charity of Williams was not extended to men who denied the Bible or suspected the divinity of Christ. It was not based upon the rights of man, but upon the rights of believers who differed in nonessential points; but the charity of Paine was extended to all men, without respect to creed. It was based upon the right of man; and from this exalted position of freedom and patriotism he challenged the rights of kings and priests, and pointed the finger of scorn at every hypocrite in Europe and America.

But the religious people are afraid the Infidel will prove that the Bible is false, and destroy the christian religion. Where is their faith in the divine authorship of the Bible? Where is their faith in the divine origin of the christian religion? Where is their faith in God as the author and preserver of both Bible and religion, when they think the Infidel must be restrained by law to prevent them from demolishing both? If those who profess christianity, and pretend to believe the Bible, would show their faith by their works, others would have more respect for their profession, and more confidence in the existence and character of their God. True christianity does not need any such protective tariff system for its preservation. The current commercial religion of the present day may need such protection, but I am sure that Bible religion does not.

The evidences of the truth of the Bible are written far beyond the reach of Infidels. They are written in the very framework of the universe; written in the earth and in the sky; written in the stones and in the stars; and closer to us still, written in the experience of millions of human hearts. If the Bible should be burned, and the ashes scattered to the winds, the heavens would still declare the glory of God, and the firmament would still show forth his handiwork. If men should hold their peace, the stones themselves would cry out.

Truth has never sought protection behind legislation; neither has it ever sought to suppress error by law. It has always stood upon its own merit; and though sometimes crushed to earth, has risen again, and in the resurrection has shone forth more brilliant, more convincing, more powerful than ever. Jesus said, "I am the truth." He also said, "I have overcome the world." Truth then has overcome the world; and the victory denies that this measure is for truth's protection. All the interests of the christian religion, both for time and eternity, are centered in Christ; and he said, when brought before Pilate, "My kingdom is not of this world." This was the greatest crisis, from a human standpoint, that christianity can ever be called upon to pass through. Look at the picture: Christ, the founder, the builder, the prophet, the priest, the king, the hope, the life of the christian religion, stood arraigned before the judgment seat of the powers of darkness, to receive the sentence of death. If there is anything in the elements of this world that could contribute to the defense of his kingdom in any way whatever it certainly would have been called into action at this time; and if in this most trying hour he had nothing to ask of the rulers of this world, we may safely conclude that there never can a period arrive when earthly governments will be required to defend his cause. Christianity is not of this world in its origin, elements, provisions, protection, government, nor destiny. It is of heavenly birth; and by its own inherent heavenly power it shall accomplish its mission in earth.

Infidels, in their efforts against the Bible, have unwittingly increased the general store of human knowledge, and yet failed to add one cubit to the stature of their own cause, or to make one hair black or white. This fact proves conclusively the truth of the Scriptures, that we can do nothing against the truth, but for the truth; that "the wrath of man shall praise him, and the remainder of wrath he will restrain." Even Infidel writings are among the all things that work together for good to the christian. So we see that some good can come out of Nazareth. Infidel writings have been a potent factor in our civilization, and have been far more beneficial to the race and to the church than religious intolerance and tyranny of creeds.

"All discord is harmony not understood; All partial evil is universal good."

The proposition is altogether impracticable. What court or tribunal would decide the infidelity of a production? Congress would have to create a sanhedrim for this purpose, and the matter would naturally fall into the hands of the clergy. To favor one sect to the exclusion of all others would be acknowledging a State church, which is an impossibility in America, at least for the present. To form such a council of representatives of all sects and non-professing men would be creating a State authority in matters of religion, which is not only contrary to our Constitution, but would be trampling under foot the blood of our fathers, setting up a beast that would turn and rend us by devouring every principle of the freedom we now enjoy.

By what criterion would the matter be decided? You answer, By the Bible. Have men ever agreed upon what the Bible teaches? Is not the world full of quarreling, conflicting sects, all claiming to be the church of Christ, and claiming the Bible to be their guide, yet differing as much among themselves in their ceremonies and government, and striving as much among themselves for the ascendancy, as the nations of the earth? Have not dissensions as to Bible teaching called twenty Oecumenical Councils in less than that many centuries? The Nicene Council, with its three hundred and eighteen bishops and a thousand other dignitaries, the Council of Trent, with its twenty-one years' session, the Synod of Dort, with its numberless representatives from every nation in Europe, all testify that differences of opinion cannot be settled by the Scriptures as a criterion. These facts prove that the measure is absolutely impracticable without creating other evils a thousand times more destructive to public good than all the Infidel books that the world itself could contain.

The proposition calls for the restriction of the liberty of the press; and it is to be objected to upon that account. Our Constitution provides that Congress shall make no law whatever abridging the freedom of speech or of the press; and with jealous care of what is almost universally regarded as a sacred right essential to the existence and perpetuity of free government, a provision of similar import has been embodied in each of our State Constitutions; and a constitutional principle is thereby established, which throws a shield of protection around the free expression of opinion in every part of our land. Does this oneness of sentiment of the great and good men who framed our government argue nothing against this measure? They were men of the broadest experience, the ripest wisdom, the purest motive, and the profoundest statesmanship; and they with one accord declared that the press must be free. But we forget the experience, wisdom and prudence of our fathers, and are carried away into the merest religious sentimentalism. Reformed drunkards, playing the role of evangelists, are wanting to dictate to the legislative assemblies of this nation; religious fanatics are laboring to manufacture all public opinion; and what has not been manufactured by them they desire to have prohibited by law. They want to dictate by legislation not only what free citizens shall drink, but what books they shall publish and read. These principles of prohibition are not found in the Bible—they are not found in the right elements of government; but they may be seen recorded upon almost every page of the Koran of Mohammed, which has found its way into our language and our homes through the enterprise of the Foreign Mission work.

To the freedom of the press, more than to any other institution, we owe our civil and religious liberty, and every advancement of science and art. Look at England a century before the freedom of the press, and then look at it a century afterward. Not only England, but the whole world, was sunk in the grossest mental and moral darkness. Priests and monks monopolized every particle of information. The foulest licentiousness, the most intolerable tyranny, the most wicked cruelty, the most detestible fraud and violence, existed in the land. All orders of men were plunged in the deepest superstition and ignorance; they were led like idiot slaves by their religious and political masters. The blind led the blind, and all had fallen into the pit where there was no order, no peace, no morality; but priestcraft and ignorance, like two hideous monsters, ruled gloatingly over the whole. But as the sublime command of the Most High penetrated the original darkness of the universe, so the freedom of the press penetrated the darkness we have just surveyed. It said, "Let there be light; and there was light." Restrict the freedom of the press, and affairs will soon tend to the same deplorable condition. But one may say that such a slight restriction as the one proposed cannot do any harm, but must do a great deal of good, by suppressing Infidel literature. This restriction would be one step downward, and this step would call for another. A small leak will sink the great vessel. A match burned Chicago. Give this measure an inch, and it will take a mile. An ounce of preventive is better than a pound of cure; so keep the freedom of the press inviolate, as a certain preventive of all the train of evils that must necessarily follow its abridgement.

This proposition is barefaced religious intolerance; and what could be more hateful to a Christian, more obnoxious to an American citizen, or more antagonistic to free government? Something occurs every day to remind me that the spirit of the Inquisition still slumbers in the breasts of the people. True, it has lately ceased to burn alive, to saw asunder, to lash the back, to bore the tongue, to cut off the ears, to build dungeons and erect gallowses; but it comes with the face of a lamb, and modestly, meekly, piously requests that the press be surrendered to its control—that the most sacred rights of man be laid at its feet. The spirit that would deny the Infidel the liberty of the press would forbid him the freedom of speech, and as a last resort would burn him at the stake. The leading creeds of the world, whether Catholic, Protestant, Jewish or Mohammedan, have arrogated to themselves authority over the consciences of men, and have taken upon themselves the Herculean task of ridding the world of heresy, Infidelity, and all false worship; and in their vain attempts to accomplish the earth with blood. The principles of this resolution are children from the womb of Infidelity itself, cradled in superstition, nurtured in intolerance, and grown old in their father's business, and are calculated to raise up and dignify a religious aristocracy, to prostrate the rights of man, and eventually to repeat the dreadful scenes of persecution which in past ages have drenched the earth with human gore.

The gentleman who advocated this proposition from this stage had a great deal to say about a law for blasphemy. Concerning this allow me to relate an incident. The makers of the Presbyterian creed caused Servetus to be arrested for blasphemy. Calvin was his accuser. He was condemned to death by fire. He was bound to the stake, the fagots were lighted, and for awhile the wind carried the flames away from his body, so that he slowly roasted for hours. At last the flames climbed round his form; his murderers beheld through fire and smoke a white heroic face. There they watched until the man became a charred and shriveled mass. Law against blasphemy banished liberty from Geneva, and there was nothing but religious intolerance left. Hear another, and then draw your conclusions. A few centuries ago a serene and noble man made his appearance in one of the eastern countries. None had ever seen one like him before. He was wiser than Solomon, he was meeker than Moses, he was more patient than Job, more faithful than Abraham, more loving than Jonathan, and more prayerful than David. When he was reviled he reviled not again, and no guile was found in his mouth. He was not in sympathy with the popular religion, so he was arrested and brought before the judgment seat. The priests were his accusers. They testified, "We have heard him blaspheme;" and upon this charge he was put to death. This man was Jesus, the founder of the Christian religion. What need we further witness to see that all laws defining and punishing blasphemy were passed by impudent bigots, and ought to be repealed at once by honest men?

Now, of the things spoken this is the sum. This measure is the embodiment of every evil, both civil and religious, that could possibly come upon a nation, and merits the contempt of every loyal citizen; so let every honest heart unite in willingness to "Render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's, and unto God the things that are God's."

BROTHER Wm. B. Marshall was born June 8th, 1815, was married May 8th, 1844, and died Nov. 8th, 1892.

Brother Marshall was to us of the Valley Church a lovely brother. His purity of life and humbleness of spirit made him dear to us all, and we feel that our loss is great; but we trust and believe that his gain is infinitely greater. It makes us sad to know that so many of our precious brethren are passing away; but the Lord God omnipotent reigns, and does whatsoever pleases him. May the Lord keep us from putting forth our hand to steady the ark; but "be ye reconciled to God."

I tried to preach on the occasion at the house of sister Joseph Furr, where he died.

LEESBURGH, Va., Jan. 15, 1893.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—By request of Elder J. P. Allison and wife I send for publication in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES the following notice of the death of their dear and loving daughter, Emma Baker, who departed this life Sept. 14th, 1892.

She was born in Clackamas Co., Ore., Nov. 6th, 1868, and was united in marriage to A. L. Baker Dec. 9th, 1887. To this union were born three children, the youngest, an infant, dying soon after the mother. She never made a public profession of her faith by uniting with the church; but from the love and respect she manifested for the church, and the truth as it is in Jesus, we believe that she was called by grace, and was an heir to that inheritance which is undefiled, and that fadeth not away. At the time of her sad affliction her loving parents, Elder J. P. Allison and wife, were living in Douglas Co., Oregon, one hundred miles south, and received the message in time to arrive at her bedside a few hours before her departure. She was calm and in her right mind until she passed through the valley of the shadow of death, saying to her dear mother that she felt resigned to the will of the Lord in all things.

The unworthy writer, who was well acquainted with this loving sister, attended her funeral, and tried to speak words of comfort to the sorrowing friends from 1 Corinthians xv. 51. O how "precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints!"

S. WILLIAMS.

ALBANY, Oregon, Jan. 5, 1893.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—It becomes my sad duty to prepare for the SIGNS an obituary of our dear friend and sister in Christ, Mrs. Ariana Gorsuch, wife of Noah Gorsuch, of Baltimore Co., Md.

She had for many months been failing from valvular disease of the heart, and at last sweetly fell asleep in Jesus on Monday morning, Sept. 12th, 1892. Her age was 71 years, 8 months and 19 days. She was the daughter of brother Lewis and sister Sallie Cole, who spent a long life near the Black Rock Church, of which they were members, and whose house was such a pleasant home to all who visited them for many years. It was my privilege to baptize sister Gorsuch in the fellowship of the Black Rock Church on April 6th, 1873; and it may truly be said of her that she adorned the profession which she had made by her daily life. There could be no doubt as to how dearly she loved the cause of her Savior and those who were followers of him.

Very many of her brethren and sisters have cause to remember the loving-kindness which she ever showed them. Although her home was several miles from our place of meeting, yet it was very seldom indeed that her seat in our solemn assemblies was empty. I have seen her present frequently when some who lived near at hand thought the weather too inclement to venture out. O that we all had the same earnest, faithful spirit that shone forth in her! I often felt, as I saw her in her accustomed place, that I had reason to bless God on her behalf. None ever thought of her except to remember her as a true-hearted, lowly follower of the Lamb. In him she trusted, and she had no confidence in the flesh. Many loved to visit her home who were not Baptists. All knew her faith, and respected her for her honest convictions, while they knew and acknowledged her kindness to all. Of her mother none ever thought or spoke a harmful word, and so it may be said of her. She was not given to speaking very much upon religious themes, but none were more glad to hear such conversation; and what is better than many words, she proved the faith that was in her by her works. None were ever more prompt in attending to the needful expenses of the church. I do not say this in eulogy of the dead, but to the glory of the grace of God, which produced such fruits.

She had, as said before, been failing for some time, but still kept about and attended her meetings until in the summer. Her niece, sister Fannie Cole, who was with her during her last sickness, writes me that for several weeks her mind was not entirely clear; yet at times she gave every evidence that she was willing to depart and be with Christ. Often would she say, "Lord, take me home." The last week of her life divine things were the uppermost thought. Even though dear aunt had not uttered a word, we all could feel and know that it was well with her. Her everyday life proved that she lived the life of Christ. There never was one who had a kinder heart or lovelier disposition than she. She was always ready and willing to lend a helping hand. It was a pleasure, and not a burden, to do for others. Her work was a work well finished. She is better off, but I deeply feel our loss.

To this I will add that at the time of her death I was absent in Maine, and so Elder W. J. Purington was sent for, and came and spoke, as I am told, the word of truth with power and comfort to the sorrowing friends. The bereaved husband has the sympathy of all who know them in his old age. May God bless him abundantly with reconciliation and peace. Four brothers and one sister are left to mourn, but not as those who have no hope. The church feels as though her place can never be filled, but knows that for her to die was gain. May the same graces of the Spirit be manifest in our lives that were manifest in hers.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date. This date denotes the time at which your subscription expires; and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

AN OLD SUBSCRIBER.

BOSTON, Mass., Jan. 26, 1893.

JOSEPH'S brethren were made ashamed that day in his presence, and now there was danger of crimination and recrimination as to which was the most to be blamed. To prevent this he tells them that God was overruling all for good; and that as all were guilty, so all should be still, each one penitent for his own fault, and humbled before God and in the presence of each other.

"See that ye fall not out by the way."

O wherefore accuse ye your brother,
Forgetting your own ill design?
Why blame with reproaches another
For the fault that also is thine?

If there should be any among us
Wholly free from the guilt and the shame,

Who has come out of conflict victorious,
Then that one his brother may blame.

Since we all have need of forgiveness,
Having all of us gone far astray,
What need to weigh with exactness
Which is most to be blamed by the way?

But rather let each one remember
That perhaps equal guilt is his own;
Let him strive with earnest endeavor
That now words of peace shall be sown.

With anger and strife 'tis sufficient
In the past that our hearts have been fill'd;

Let us now be kindly and patient,
And envy and anger be still'd.

We are told to be kind and forbearing,
To remember how weak are we all;
Then let each for the other be caring,
Lest our brother should stumble and fall.

In guarding the weak one beside us
We also our own steps shall guide;
In the presence of foes that deride us,
Within us great peace shall abide.

Has our Brother the Elder forgiven,
Against whom our sin was so vile?
Let us see then that we are not driven
To dispute as we journey the while.

LAW AND GOSPEL.

HE feels most sensibly within
The damning nature of his sin
Who says, If God deals just with me,
My soul in torment soon will be.

But when the Spirit 'plies the balm
It gives the soul a heavenly calm;
He then can praise Jehovah, God,
For his atoning, pardoning blood.

CORRESPONDENCE.

REISTERSTOWN, Md., Dec. 9, 1892.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—I send you the inclosed letter from Elder May. I think it good and profitable.

Your brother in hope,

F. A. CHICK.

PINSONFORK, Ky., Nov. 23, 1892.

ELDER F. A. CHICK—DEARLY BELOVED FOR THE TRUTH'S SAKE:

—I have been waiting and waiting to have something to write you, but I am as destitute this evening as ever I was, it seems to me. I have concluded to write you a few lines anyhow, hoping that the Lord will direct my poor, wandering mind. I am almost continually down in the deep mire, where there is no standing, and oftentimes feel to cry out, in the language of David, "Lord, are thy mercies clean gone forever?" Were it not that I know the everlasting arms are underneath I should be driven to despair. But my thoughts are this evening, dear brother Chick, that the lower down we get the nearer we are to the everlasting arms, and this is much comfort to me; for "I am poor and needy, yet the Lord thinketh upon me," I hope. My dear brother, we may go down in the estimation of the proud and haughty, be hated of all nations (religious nations) for the cause and name of Jesus, and even go down to the bars of the pit, in our own feelings and imaginations; but it is a precious truth that we never can go down below the loving and everlasting arms of our dear Redeemer; for he is so righteous, both in himself and in all his dealings with his loved ones, that he cannot deny himself nor them. He loved them with an everlasting love; therefore (for that cause) with loving-kindness he draws them. "The good shepherd giveth [continually] his life for [because of] the sheep." "My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me; and I give [not offer nor sell] unto them eternal life [experientially]; and they shall never perish." No, no; the everlasting arms are underneath. Poor, weak, timorous, wayward and very sinful children of God, what would we do, what could we do, if the eternal God were not our refuge, and the everlasting arms underneath these poor, faltering, desponding and drooping children, who in themselves are just ready to perish, "cast down, but not destroyed?"

Dear brother, when I hear people talking of progressive sanctification, and saying they are getting better and better all the time, I am brought to solemn reflection and mortification of feeling, awfully fearing that I am not a child of God, never have been born again, nor tasted that the Lord is gracious; for I know of a truth that I am not that way at all, no, in no wise. I am not traveling that road, I am not exercised in that way, but to the contrary; for in very deed it does seem to me that I am getting worse and worse daily, and am often distressed and sore pained at my poor, hard and deceitful heart, to know whether in reality I am growing worse and worse, or am only enabled by the grace of God reflecting in the face of Jesus Christ to see my inbred corruption and awful deformity more and more as I grow in years. This I sometimes hope is the case; yet I often and awfully fear that I am a poor, deceived man. But be that as it may, my dear brother, my conclusions are (and I think that I almost if not quite know) that if I am deceived, and have been for more than thirty years, I am gone forever. As awful as the moment is, I can think of no way to better my condition in the least for the eternal world, and hence I am a poor, dependent mortal; and not only so, but a poor, little weakling, who am a great complainer, and hope I feel my need of Christ; yet I often fear that I do not feel my need of the precious Savior. I know that I feel needy, wretched, poor and sinful, and have daily longings after Christ, after holiness, and yet I fear it is only natural; for I am daily mourning over a hard and wicked heart, and a wretched, wandering mind, and am made to exclaim, "O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" "We are killed all the day long: we are accounted as sheep for the slaughter."

THURSDAY MORNING, 24th.—Dear brother, I am thinking this morning, as I am writing, and have often heretofore thought, of the language of the prophet Isaiah, where he says, "For the child shall die a hundred years old."—Isaiah lxx. 20. I have often thought that a child of God never grows out of childhood or dependency. Although we might live to be a hundred years old, we are as little, helpless and dependent upon our heavenly Father for ability to worship him as we were the day we were made to rejoice in what we thought was the precious Savior's love; although I do not pretend to say that this is the true meaning of this text, for I am inclined to think that the prophet's mind was employed on the blessed state and spiritual enjoyment of God's elect in the glorious gospel dispensation. Be that as it may, or rather as it is, it seems to apply personally to my case; for notwithstanding I have had a morsel of hope for more than thirty years, it is only a morsel now, and almost extinguished, as it seems to me. Doubtlessly I feel more weak, poor, wretched and needy than I did twenty or thirty years ago; a poor, uneasy, restless one.

Dear brother Chick, it seems next to impossible for me to look out of and away from self, so as to fall like a poor, helpless child into the everlasting arms of my dear Redeemer, though it is my desire to do so. I am so weak, timorous and faithless that I am clinging to self almost all the time; and when I feel myself sinking down, down, my faith fails, and I am afraid to let self loose, for fear the everlasting arms do not embrace me. Yet notwithstanding my poor, wretched, faithless and tempest-tossed condition, there is something about me that longs after Jesus, after holiness of life and conversation, and, in fact, causes me to abhor myself, causes me to hate my life, or hate the way I live; I live so far from what I think is my duty. So, my dear brother, when I sum it all up I am a poor, wayfaring stranger and sojourner in these low grounds of sin and sorrow, undone forever and ever without sovereign grace. "This is all my salvation and all my desire," I trust.

My dear brother, if there is so much as one crumb of comfort in this for you I cannot see how nor where; yet I am aware that the Lord makes darkness light and crooked things straight, breaks in pieces the gates of brass, cuts asunder the bars of iron, and gives his children the treasures of darkness and the hidden riches of secret places, "that they may know that I the Lord am the God of Israel," and the everlasting arms are underneath. My wife, who is a firm Predestinarian Baptist and a worthy member, joins in love with me to you and yours. Remember us and our children when you are enabled to pray to the Lord our God.

Yours in love sincerely,

W. J. MAY.

SANFORD, Maine, Dec. 19, 1892.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—As I am remitting for the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, our family paper, I thought I must speak in commendation of it, as holding to the word of truth in simplicity, and in comforting the children of God. "Comfort ye, comfort ye my people, saith your God. Speak ye comfortably to Jerusalem, and cry unto her that her warfare is accomplished, that her iniquity is pardoned; for she hath received of the Lord's hand double for all her sins. The voice of him that crieth in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make straight in the desert a highway for our God. Every valley shall be exalted, and every mountain and hill shall be made low; and the crooked shall be made straight, and the rough places plain. And the glory of the Lord shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together; for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it. The voice said, Cry. And he said, What shall I cry? All flesh is grass, and all the goodliness thereof is as the flower of the field. The grass withereth, the flower fadeth; because the Spirit of the Lord bloweth upon it. Surely the people is grass. The grass withereth, the flower fadeth; but the word of our God shall stand forever."—Isa. xl. 1-8.

Dear brethren, substantial is the word of the Lord; yes, firm as the mountains of the Lord. So is the doctrine that the SIGNS OF THE TIMES holds forth in true simplicity, as far as I can see with my weak understanding. I am well aware I am but a poor, feeble thing to perceive the things infinite; therefore I should not take too much to the flesh, but give to the Lord all glory. "To be carnally minded is death; but to be spiritually minded is life and peace. Because the carnal mind is enmity against God; for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be. So then they that are in the flesh cannot please God. But ye are not in the flesh, but in the Spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you. Now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his. And if Christ be in you, the body is dead because of sin; but the Spirit is life because of righteousness. But if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you. Therefore, brethren, we are debtors, not to the flesh, to live after the flesh; for if ye live after the flesh, ye shall die; but if ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live. For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God."—Rom. viii. 6-14.

The church of the Primitive order in North Berwick, Maine, having lost their pastor last January, have been without a pastor since Elder Wm. Quint died. But for all that, I think the Lord has stood by them, as the members have met in church and conference meeting monthly. It appears the church people have been more punctual in meeting to converse together, and to speak of the Lord's works, and how they have been led in the past. They have had preaching on six Sundays since Elder Quint's death, and the yearly Conference was held in September as usual, having Elders F. A. Chick and H. Campbell in attendance to minister to the wants of the church, which was ably performed by God's help. The ministering brethren shunned not to declare the truth, and the whole truth. We hope the Lord will help at our next yearly Conference, by sending a goodly number of ministering brethren to us. We would be glad, if the Lord will, that Elders Wm. L. Beebe and Benton Jenkins be with us at sometime, and any other of the ministering brethren who have a mind to come. We feel that it is good to have the preached word, and we trust the Lord to give the hearing ear; for unless the Lord give the hearing ear the word is dead and availeth nothing. As the apostle Paul has said, "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ; for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." Jonah said, "Salvation is of the Lord." O how blessed it is that salvation is of the Lord, and not of man.

Now, dear brethren editors, the God of all grace be with and sustain you in your arduous duties, and continue the SIGNS OF THE TIMES to the comfort of its readers. A happy new year to you all is my desire.

From a poor sinner saved by grace, if saved at all,

LEWIS BUTLER.

CHENEY, Neb., Jan. 17, 1893.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN IN CHRIST:—Having finished the business part of my letter, I desire to tell you the glad news of the prosperity of Zion here in Nebraska. There have been nine additions in the last three months. Last Saturday and Sunday were our meeting days. Although the weather was very cold, with much snow, and the wind blew strong from the north, with the temperature about six degrees below zero, there were quite a number of our members present. Some drove thirty-six miles in an open wagon, facing the wind about half the way. In that wagon was a weakly woman with three little children. They left home on Friday, and reached here just as meeting commenced. When the invitation was given for membership, this same woman came forward and told the church what great things the Lord had done for her, and how she was made to see herself a poor, lost and helpless sinner. This, she said, was five years ago. The Lord was pleased to deliver her from that burden of sin and just condemnation, and to reveal himself to her as her Savior, the chiefest among ten thousand, causing her to rejoice in him with joy unspeakable and full of glory. She said she desired a home with us, and the privilege of following the dear Savior in baptism. She was one of the most calm and composed persons I ever heard relate their experience. She was gladly received, and on Sunday we went about two and one-half miles to the water. The ice was fully sixteen inches thick. A watery grave was cut in the ice, and the water was about three feet deep. It was the most solemn scene I ever witnessed. Truly it represented a burial. After singing a verse of the appropriate hymn,

"Christians, if your hearts be warm,
Ice and snow can do no harm;
If by Jesus you are prized,
Rise, believe and be baptized."

Elder C. M. Cooper offered a very feeling prayer. Then two of the brethren assisted Elder Ring down into the water, and then assisted the dear little sister, and Elder Ring buried her beneath the yielding wave. Although the weather was so cold, she did not shiver nor move a muscle when led down into the water. She did not seem to mind it any more than though she were going down into empty space that was warm and comfortable. Truly she has the faith of God's elect. Nothing but the sustaining power of God's grace could bear her up. A most lovely expression was on her face when she came out of the water. Her name is Margaret A. Allen. I do feel that the dear Lord verified his promise to his children, being one in their midst, and fed his little ones with the bread of life that cometh down from heaven. Yes, we were made to drink deeply of the well of living water. We felt it was good to be there, on account of the indwelling of God's Spirit in the hearts of his believing children. May that peace, love and sweet fellowship ever remain with us, and with all the true Israel of God, is the prayer of a little brother,

JOSEPH BRUCE.

PORT JERVIS, N. Y., Jan. 1, 1893.

DEAR BROTHER JENKINS:—As this is the first day of the new year, I will try, the Lord willing, to write you some of my experience of this life, and of my hope of a future life. About the year 1878 I attended a revival meeting held by the Methodists in my native town. I was stricken with serious thoughts concerning my soul's welfare. I finally joined the Methodists, and attended the meetings regularly as my occupation would allow me. But alas! I found no relief for my poor, sin-sick soul. I finally withdrew from that church, and from that time until the year 1890, when I saw my companion buried in the liquid grave, something seemed to be saying to me, "Why stand you alone?" The more I thought about the words, the more I was convinced that I was a sinner of the deepest dye. I attended the Old School Baptist meetings as often as I could, and was convinced that what they contended for is the only way of life and salvation. In and of myself I know I can do nothing. All my help must come from God. The flesh and the Spirit are not in harmony. God be praised for taking me up out of the pit and miry clay, and setting my feet upon the Rock, Christ Jesus, and putting a new song in my mouth. I feel to thank God for showing me that man can do nothing within himself, nor for poor, lost, undone sinners, such as I am. There the clouds hung over my sin-polluted soul; but the light came after the darkness. God be praised for a blessing like this. It is a consolation to a poor sinner like me.

We are here in an isolated place, where we see nor hear nothing but vanity and vexation of spirit. I trust in the dear Savior, who died on the cross for a sinner like me, who am the chief of sinners. May God keep and sustain us all till time shall be no more. May we mount up with wings as eagles, run and not be weary, walk and not faint.

If you think it worthy, you may publish this scribble in that dear old paper, the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. I have written, I trust, as the Lord has directed my pen. Remember us at the throne of grace when it is well with you.

With kind regards to all the brethren and sisters, I remain your unworthy brother,

G. BEEBE'S SONS:—I will write a few lines, which you may publish in the SIGNS if you think best. I and my husband are living here in western Kansas, where we have heard but one sermon (by Elder R. M. Simmons) in the last six years. Only one Baptist, that we know of, lives here. He is a nephew of Miss Mary Parker. His name is Eden Lewis. I cannot tell you how much I would like to hear a Primitive Baptist preach. I do not wish to see my name in the paper, only I thought I might in that way find other Baptists in this county, and they might find that we live here. I do not know how near it is to a Baptist Church or association. I would be very glad to find out. If any should read these lines, and think us worthy of the trouble to let us know of the churches and associations, we would be very thankful. We are not members of the church, but we love the doctrine of the Old Baptists.

THE price of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES is not too high, in my judgment. It is the best and cheapest paper published, containing more solid reading for the money than any other I know of.

THE LEAVEN WHICH A WOMAN TOOK.

A SERMON BY J. BATTERSBY, OF LONDON, ENGLAND.

"ANOTHER parable spake he unto them: The kingdom of heaven is like unto leaven, which a woman took, and hid in three measures of meal, till the whole was leavened."—Matt. xiii. 33.

The chapter in which our text occurs contains eight parables. Four of them were addressed by our Lord to the multitude, as he sat in a ship, and they stood on the shore. The four parables are the parable of the sower and the seed, the parable of the tares, the parable of the mustard seed, and the parable of the leaven. Our Lord's disciples asked him why he spake unto the multitude in parables. His answer was clear and definite, "Because it is given unto you to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven; but to them it is not given." I would ask you to read at your leisure from the 10th to the 18th verse of this chapter, and then you will see for yourselves the wonderful difference which our Lord made between his own disciples and the multitude which he addressed. After the four parables already named, it is said, "All these things spake Jesus unto the multitude in parables, and without a parable spake he not unto them: that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophet, saying, I will open my mouth in parables; I will utter things which have been kept secret from the foundation of the world." In the parables of our Lord, things, deep things, which had been kept secret since the world began, were made manifest by the teaching and preaching of Jesus Christ. Then Jesus sent the multitude away, and he went into the house; and his disciples came to him, saying, "Declare unto us the parable of the tares of the field." He did so, and a most beautiful exposition it is. Read it, and study it. He then delivered to them, privately in the house, the parables of the hidden treasure, of the pearl, and of the net cast into the sea, and of the householder. Now all these parables are evidently intended to convey valuable instruction to the disciples respecting "the kingdom of heaven."

Before proceeding with an exposition of our text, it may not be out of place to remark that a parable has been defined as a similitude or comparison of one thing with another, for the purpose of setting forth some important truth or doctrine. This definition will suit me very well, although a parable may be described as a proverb, or wise saying, full of instruction. Indeed, I have read somewhere that a parable is an "earthly story with a heavenly meaning." This definition of a parable, I presume, has been chosen for the sake of simplicity. In speaking of the interpretation of parables generally, I do not think that it is necessary to the understanding of the main drift of a parable, to force every part of it, as setting forth expressly and minutely some important truth or doctrine. But if every part of a parable will bear pressing into the service of truth, and the truth elicited be not contrary to the clear and distinctive teaching of God's word, then I see no harm in drawing out of a parable all the instruction you can possibly obtain. Our Lord's exposition of the parable of the tares of the field to his disciples, may serve us as a model of interpretation. If I should take a different view of the parable which we are now about to consider, from some eminent divines, I hope my view will receive some support, at least, from the Scriptures, from history, and from experience. I will not delay you any longer, but proceed to open up the text.

Let us consider first what is meant by "the kingdom of heaven;" and secondly, the comparison itself, "The kingdom of heaven is like unto leaven, which a woman took and hid in three measures of meal, till the whole was leavened."

Let us consider first what is meant by "the kingdom of heaven." The expression, "kingdom of heaven," is peculiar to Matthew, and occurs from twenty to thirty times in his gospel. Mark and Luke use the expression, "kingdom of God," to convey the same idea. I do not think that we are to understand the Evangelists as meaning the kingdom of glory in heaven, or the kingdom of grace as set up in the hearts of believers by the Holy Ghost; but rather the kingdom of the Messiah during the gospel dispensation. In the third chapter of Matthew we read, "In those days came John the Baptist, preaching in the wilderness of Judea, and saying, Repent ye; for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." From what follows in the second verse, it is clear that the Baptist had an eye to the Messiah, and the setting up of his kingdom. After our Lord's baptism, and his conflict with Satan in the wilderness, he preached the same truth as the Baptist, saying, "Repent; for the kingdom of heaven is at hand."—Mat. iv. 17. Mark says, "Jesus came into Galilee, preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God." "The kingdom of God" and "the kingdom of heaven" are expressions for the kingdom of the Messiah, as it will be made manifest from time to time, until Jehovah-Jesus comes again in power and great glory. But "the kingdom of heaven," or the kingdom of the Messiah, includes the professing Christian Church under the gospel dispensation. And it is the state of this professing Christian Church which is described and illustrated by the parables of our Lord. The parables give us different phases of this varying professing Christian Church state here in earth.

The expression, "the kingdom of heaven," stands in contrast with all earthly kingdoms. "The kingdom of heaven" in its unmixed state has Christ for its King, whom the Father has set upon his holy hill of Zion.—Psalm ii. 6. The Messiah has a kingdom which is not of this world, over which he does and will rule and reign forever, as the Prince of peace. He governs it by his word and Spirit. I know of no other means. He sends forth the rod of his strength out of Zion, which rod is the word of his gospel. He rules in the midst of his enemies, and his people are a willing people in the day of his power.—Psalm cx. He sends forth the Holy Ghost into the hearts of his redeemed, and establishes his kingdom of righteousness, and peace, and love and joy in them to the praise of his grace. The unmixed state of the church is a kingdom within a kingdom. It is a kingdom which is not of this world. Few indeed are the parables of our Lord which give us this aspect of "the kingdom of heaven." There are, perhaps, two parables in this chapter which may be taken as favoring this unmixed aspect of "the kingdom of heaven." I mean the parable of the treasure hidden in the field, and the parable of the merchantman seeking goodly pearls. I shall say a few words upon each of these parables. "The kingdom of heaven is like unto treasure hid in a field; the which when a man hath found he hideth, and for joy thereof goeth and selleth all that he hath, and buyeth that field." Now, what is the treasure? My answer is from the third chapter of Malachi, the 17th verse: "And they shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels." Read the margin, and you will find the "jewels" to be the special and peculiar treasure of God, or God's special property. Now where was this treasure? It was "hid in a field." We are told that "the field is the world," dispensation, or age (verses 38 and 40.) The treasure was first hid in Christ, the covenant Head of the church. By the fall it was hid in the world. It was found again by a man. But who is the Man? Well, it is God's right hand Man—the Man Christ Jesus. He found the treasure in the field, and hid it as his own special property. And for his joy of having this treasure forever, he goes and sells all that he has, and buys the field. Surely, "ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that, though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor, that ye through his poverty might be rich." Now for the parable of the merchantman seeking goodly pearls. "Again, the kingdom of heaven is like unto a merchantman seeking goodly pearls; who when he found one pearl of great price, went and sold all that he had, and bought it." Who is the merchantman? It is not the penniless sinner, but Christ, who possesses unsearchable riches, and hence is well able to purchase the priceless pearl. But what are the goodly pearls? These are the Lord's hidden ones in the sea of this world, which have to be fished up from time to time by the Lord's fishermen. A pearl is a white, shining, beautiful and valuable thing; and so is a saint of God. Every child of God is a goodly pearl. There is, however, "one pearl of great price." And what is this? It is the whole church of God, as one body, for which Christ has shed his most precious blood. Christ is the Merchantman who seeks and finds. This idea often occurs in the Scriptures. For the one pearl of great price, the Merchantman sells all that he has. This is Christ, laying aside his glory, or emptying himself, by taking upon him the form of a servant, being made in the likeness of men, and being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, having become obedient even unto death, and that the death of the cross.—Phil. ii. 6-8. He parts with all, but he buys the priceless pearl. He bought it. He purchased the church of God with his own blood. Ye are bought with a price. The church is redeemed, not with corruptible things, as gold and silver, but with the precious blood of Christ, the spotless Lamb of God. These two parables may be taken as describing the kingdom of heaven in an unmixed state. But to proceed.

I am of opinion that many of the parables describe the mixed state of Christ's professing church and kingdom. In the parable of the sower we have four classes of hearers; the wayside hearer, the stony hearer, the thorny hearer, and the good ground hearer. It appears from this parable as if only one out of four of those who hear the gospel has any real spiritual interest in Christ. In the parable of the tares of the field, you have the spiritual children of the kingdom, and the children of the wicked one. This is a mixed state. The time will come when there shall be a separation; for God's messengers shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity. Meanwhile, both wheat and tares have to grow together until the harvest. The parable of the net gives us a view of things at the end of this dispensation. The net gathers of every kind, good and bad; and when the shore is reached, the good are gathered into vessels, but the bad are cast away. The parable of the ten virgins brings before us the mixed state of the professing Christian Church when the Bridegroom cometh for his bride.—Mat. xxv. Some of the parables seem to point at those who are the professed preachers of the gospel. I now refer more especially to the parable of the laborers in the vineyard, and to the parable of the talents.—See Mat. xx. and xxiv. The parable of the householder is most instructive upon this point.

GIVE NONE OFFENSE.

"GIVE none offense, neither to the Jews, nor to the Gentiles, nor to the church of God; even as I please all men in all things, not seeking mine own profit, but the profit of many, that they may be saved."—1 Cor. x. 32, 33.

In compliance with several requests, the following thoughts are submitted to the consideration of our readers, with the hope that they may be carefully compared with the inspired standard of truth and accepted or rejected as the word of the Lord shall determine. Such is the tendency of the natural mind to follow in the path of esteemed fathers and leaders that it can never be inappropriate to call the attention of the saints to the law of Christ as the extreme boundary of their liberty in the doctrine and order of the gospel. In the examination of the acknowledged authority of the apostolic judgment for the direction of the saints in their walk and conversation while sojourning in this present evil world, it must be remembered that the law of our Lord is spiritual, and not merely a ritual requirement. It is mockery in the sight of God for one professing obedience to the commandment of the King in Zion to comply with the formal action enjoined while in spirit rebelling against the principle of perfect love which is the fulfillment of that law. Only as led by the Spirit of Christ can any saint render acceptable service to God in keeping his statutes. "For when we were in the flesh, the motions of sins, which were by the law, did work in our members to bring forth fruit unto death; but now we are delivered from the law, that being dead [or being dead to that] wherein we were held; that we should serve in newness of spirit, and not in the oldness of the letter."—Rom. vii. 5, 6. From the effort to serve in the oldness of the letter the saints are continually being brought into bondage, and compelled to confess themselves guilty and under condemnation. But in the truth that "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us," there is the assurance of freedom from that curse which rests upon as many as are of the works of the law. The perfect righteousness of the glorified Redeemer is that which justifies all whom he came into the world to save from their sins. By no other way can an unrighteous man be made holy and without blame before God in love. The doctrine of God our Savior never presents anything at variance with this essential and vital principle. While much of the New Testament is devoted to instructing the saints as to their becoming walk and conversation in this world, it is never once intimated that their eternal salvation is affected one way or the other by their own actions or those of any finite creature. This principle of truth should never be forgotten. Whatever else may be taught by any particular portion of the Bible, it is certain that it is not rightly interpreted when it is apparently made to contradict this established truth.

"Give none offense." By detaching this text from the connection in which it is placed by the pen of inspiration, it may be made to seem to contradict the plain teaching of our Lord, and to condemn his own perfect example. No candid reader of the divine testimony can for a moment accept such an application. The whole volume of revelation must harmonize in its testimony; otherwise, it is certain that it is not correctly understood. Since the whole record is the testimony of the one Spirit of truth, one irreconcilable contradiction in that record would invalidate the entire volume. Cavilers may dare thus to trifle with the letter of the Scriptures; but those who reverence the Author of that word will rather confess their own blindness than thus charge God foolishly. In considering our text, even with the honest candor due to an expression of our fellow-mortals, it should be taken in the connection in which it is placed by the apostolic pen. In the first place, the whole letter is addressed exclusively "Unto the church of God which is at Corinth, to them that are sanctified in Christ Jesus, called (to be) saints, with all that in every place call upon the name of Jesus Christ our Lord, both theirs and ours." Every one included in this address must be already manifested as a subject of salvation in Christ Jesus. The whole preceding context is devoted to their instruction in their practical deportment as strangers and pilgrims called out of the world, among whom they must yet sojourn as in an enemy's land. To them only can this admonition be rightly applied. As a peculiar people there was needful for them peculiar instruction. All that is written in the preceding context is exclusively adapted to the direction of just such ignorant wanderers as these saints are described to be. To those Corinthians who had been called by grace there was need of the instruction given for their guidance in their intercourse with their unbelieving companions, among whom they were compelled to remain after they had received the knowledge of the truth. That is not the Spirit of our God which would compel others to accept such testimony as has been revealed to us in demonstration of the truth. While Christ had been given to those believers as their hope of salvation, they could not show that truth to their heathen associates; neither could they satisfactorily explain to those idolaters the motive which compelled them to turn away from the worship of idols, to serve the living God. They must remain in the community with their natural companions; yet they could not continue to participate in their ignorant devotions. For such a radical change in their manner of life they might well feel the need of instruction. In this letter, as in all the epistles, there is much specified direction given, not for the purpose of showing sinners dead in carnal enmity against God how they may become lovers of divine truth; but to enable the saints to understand how they should walk in that newness of life by which they glorify God in their body and in their spirit as the children of God. After the specific warnings repeatedly given for their departure from idolatry, and the instruction that they should do all, even in eating and drinking, or whatsoever they did, to the glory of God, then the whole instruction is recapitulated in the language of our text. As the law of Christ is love, so the effect of his Spirit in his disciples is the manifestation of peace. Even some of his immediate followers, who enjoyed the blessed instruction which came from his own lips, were so ignorant as to suppose that his kingdom was to be established by the force of carnal weapons and vengeful fire from heaven. They were doubtless sincere in thinking they were moved by zeal for the honor of their Lord in this desire for revenge; but he told them, "Ye know not what manner of the spirit ye are of; for the Son of man is not come to destroy men's lives, but to save them."—Luke ix. 55, 56. This embraces the whole law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus. Not merely that the saints are to refrain from outward actions by which they might give offense; but the holy principle of divine love rules in them when led by the Spirit of God, causing them to earnestly desire that the grace of God might be magnified even in the salvation of their enemies, and of those who despitefully use and persecute them. This is the signification of the admonition in our text. In the light of this commandment of our Lord the saints are shown the true character of their own motives at all times. The carnal mind always suggests that enemies should be met with the same enmity which they display; and that those who curse and despitefully use us should be repelled in the same spirit in which they attack us. When this principle governs our action it is certain that we are not led by the Spirit of Christ. Nothing which can be done by the adversaries of the saints can justify them in returning evil for evil. They can never be followers of Jesus in feeling a desire for revenge upon their enemies. Therefore they must be governed by the evil of their carnal mind when such a motive rules in their hearts.

Under very trying provocation it may often seem that this spirit of retaliation is prompted by zeal for the truth of God; and the tempter can present strong evidences to sustain this conclusion. But the test of this holy principle of divine love will expose the deceitful artifice, and the admonition in our text will forbid the act of retaliation which is approved by the carnal mind. Indeed, it is the case often that the saint is condemned in his own heart by the consciousness that the feeling of retaliation and resentment is still rankling within, even when he has been enabled by the grace of God to refrain from its expression in acts of hatred. Only by the light of the Spirit of truth shining in their minds can the saints be made sensible of this deceitfulness of their own evil hearts. Thus they find assurance of the genuineness of their hope in Christ even in the very sense of bondage under the corruption of their carnal nature.

"A daily cross, a stubborn will,
A heart replete with every ill,
Affections prone from God to go,
Are bonds that only Israel know."

"Neither to the Jews, nor to the Gentiles, nor to the church of God." Under the law of Moses, the Israelites were forbidden to do many things against their own people which were lawful for them to do against the Gentiles among whom they dwelt. Hence the specification that this injunction covered the conduct of the saints, not only toward each other as fellow-members of the church, but even toward unbelievers, including both Jews and Gentiles. In this important instruction it is essential that the saints should understand just what it is to give offense. From the example of our Lord in his humiliation, as well as from the whole record of revealed truth, it is evident that the saints are not at liberty to sacrifice their allegiance to the truth for the sake of avoiding the opposition of Jews or Gentiles who hate the doctrine of God our Savior. Neither are they authorized to forsake the precepts of the King in Zion rather than encounter the enmity of those who may be numbered as members of the church of God. Before the inspired apostles fell asleep there was manifested among the churches those who were offended when sound doctrine was presented by them. This does not justify the conclusion that the apostles had violated the injunction under consideration. So, when the saints now encounter the opposition of professed brethren against the presentation of gospel truth, they are not to be condemned as having trespassed against this admonition. Those who contend for the faith as given by our Lord may even be called to sacrifice their lives under the rage of adversaries; yet they have not given offense. The truth is not theirs except as it is given them by their Lord, who is its author and finisher. That enmity which is aroused by the declaration of this gospel is not against those who proclaim it, but against the divine Fountain of truth.

It is not in obedience to this admonition when a preacher attempts to compel his brethren to accept his understanding of any point of the doctrine as infallibly true. In so doing he takes the responsibility of giving offense to the church of God. If there had been no such action possible, there would have been no occasion for the apostolic injunction for the perfect instruction of the saints. In forbidding the giving of offense to the Jews and the Gentiles, it is not to be construed as giving license to the saints to shun to declare the whole doctrine of Christ. To the Jews this glorious gospel of the grace of God must always be a stumbling-block, and to the Greeks it is foolishness; yet in its proclamation the saints have never transgressed the direction in our text. The heathen have indeed raged, and the people imagined a vain thing; but their rage and vain imagination have been against the Lord and against his Christ. He must first be overcome before the wrath of the enemy can reach the saints who abide in his truth. So long as they know nothing in their preaching but Jesus Christ as the only Savior of his people from their sins, they cannot be charged with giving offense. All who reject that doctrine are raging against God himself. But there is special instruction in regard to the manner in which the truth is to be spoken. The saints should carefully observe that it is nowhere authorized that it should be degraded to the level of a mere contention for the mastery, or strife for the development of argumentative ability. While there can be no compromise of any item of truth, the saints are approved only in speaking the truth in love.—Eph. iv. 15. "And the servant of the Lord must not strive; but be gentle unto all (men), apt to teach, patient, in meekness instructing those that oppose themselves; if God peradventure will give them repentance to the acknowledging of the truth."—2 Tim. ii. 24, 25.

"Even as I please all men in all things, not seeking mine own profit, but the profit of many, that they may be saved." This explanation is added to the exhortation not in the way of boasting of his own perfect obedience, but as illustrating the sense in which the saints are directed to avoid giving offense. While there is little known of the history of Paul beyond the record of his constant strife with those among whom he preached, yet he did in the sense of the text give none offense. Even in the churches among whom he labored there were those who opposed the doctrine which he maintained; and at least some of those opposers were recognized by him as subjects of saving grace; yet in the sense designed in our text he gave none offense. And this is the manner in which the saints are exhorted to follow his example. This is clearly explained in the expression immediately following our text. "Be ye followers of me, even as I also am of Christ." Whenever Paul departs from the pattern of Christ, the saints are not authorized to follow him in that departure. But the manner in which he pleased all in all, not seeking his own profit, but that of all the saints, is in strict conformity to the great example of our Lord Jesus. Certainly Paul did not claim to please the unbelieving Jews and the idolatrous heathen in his doctrine and practice. The manifest sense of his expression taken in the connection in which it is written, is that Paul subjected his own personal advantage or profit to that of those in whose service he labored. The great object of his ministry was not the advancement of his own interest, either financially or in personal exaltation among the churches. Neither was he laboring, like the deluded votaries of modern antichrist, to gather stars for his crown of eternal glory. Those for whose profit he so earnestly wrought were already the subjects of that salvation which is complete in Christ Jesus. Now, the object for which Paul was seeking was that they might be saved from the errors and snares which beset the saints in this present evil world. For the accomplishment of the ministry which had been committed to him in their service, he subjected his own pleasure and temporal interest to their advantage, and laid aside every personal consideration which might hinder their profiting by his labors. So far was he from gratifying "all men" in his ministry, that even the saints were sometimes found opposing him; yet he could bear their burdens of weakness and carnality, through the grace of God which was with him. In this way he sacrificed his own pleasure for the pleasure of all the saints; and pleased all, seeking their profit, and not his own. Thus he labored that they might be saved not only in the visible organization of the church, but that they might be saved from error in doctrine and practice, as followers of the Lord Jesus. May the grace of our God enable us with all his redeemed people to be found giving earnest heed to the admonition of our text, and walking as children of the light, thus confessing our allegiance to him who loved us and gave him himself for our redemption; and to his name be glory evermore. Amen.

APPOINTMENTS.

PROVIDENCE permitting, Elder F. A. Chick will preach at New Vernon, N. Y., on the third Sunday in February (19th), at 10:30 a. m., and at Middletown, N. Y., at 3:00 p. m. on the same day. Also at Warwick, N. Y., at a later date, which will be announced in a subsequent issue of this paper.

"Therefore every scribe which is instructed unto the kingdom of heaven is like unto a man that is a householder, which bringeth forth out of his treasure things new and old."—Mat. xiii. 52. It is very evident to my own mind, whatever it may be to the minds of others, that every one of our Lord's parables were intended to set forth to those who had ears to hear, and eyes to see, and hearts to understand, some important truth or doctrine. "A wise man will hear, and increase learning; and a man of understanding shall attain unto wise counsels; to understand a proverb, and the interpretation; the words of the wise and their dark sayings."—Proverbs i. I hope you will bear in mind one fact, that many of our Lord's parables were not only instructive similitudes, but prophetic illustrations of the mixed state of the professing Christian Church during the present dispensation.

I shall now take up our second point, the comparison itself, "The kingdom of heaven is like unto leaven, which a woman took, and hid in three measures of meal, till the whole was leavened." In this comparison you have (1) the leaven; (2) the agent, a woman; (3) her action, she took and hid it; (4) the material in which she concealed it, in three measures of meal; and (5) the effect, till the whole was leavened.

The generally received interpretation of this parable is, that it refers to and illustrates the secret working and spreading of the gospel in the hearts of those who hear it, until they are brought entirely under its blessed influence. To enlarge upon this view for a moment, I shall give you the substance of an eminent writer upon the parables, who takes the leaven in a good sense, as referring to the gospel and to its triumphant and glorious results. He speaks of the kingdom of heaven as the gospel dispensation; of the leaven as the word of God, or gospel; of the woman as Christ; of the meal as persons; and of the whole lump as the entire body of the elect. He says leaven is of a diffusive quality; so is the gospel. Leaven diffuseth itself gradually; so does the gospel. That leaven is of a softening, assimilating, quickening and powerful nature; so is the gospel. That leaven works secretly and invisibly in the meal; so does the gospel in the hearts of the redeemed. This is a very short summary of the views of Mr. Keach, who takes the leaven in a good and gospel sense.

I believe it is admitted on all hands that leaven, in the Scriptures, is generally, if not invariably, used in a bad sense; and if so, why make the text an exception? I think it will be difficult to prove that Christ is ever spoken of as a woman in the word of God. I am aware that some interpreters speak of the woman as the ministry. Other objections might be raised to the above interpretation; for whatever may be fairly said of leaven, when viewed as the gospel in its operations, may also be said of it when viewed as "the mystery of iniquity" in its workings in the professing Christian Church, or kingdom of heaven. If I should differ from the exposition which I have just named, I hope to be able to give you reasons for doing so. You are not bound by my views, if they be not supported by the word of God. I pray the Holy Ghost to kill, revive and quicken some poor sinner this evening. This is the sovereign work of the Spirit. And I am one of those who believe in the sovereignty of God. But to proceed.

What are we to understand by leaven? What do the Scriptures say about it? Leaven itself is of a fermenting and corrupting nature. The Lord prohibited the use of leaven during the feast of Passover. These are his words, "Seven days shall ye eat unleavened bread; even the first day ye shall put away leaven out of your houses; for whosoever eateth leavened bread from the first day until the seventh day, that soul shall be cut off from Israel." Here is the punishment if any one presumed to do what God had forbidden. The person should be cut off from Israel, and he should not be reckoned as an Israelite. This cutting off may mean more than excommunication. It may have been cutting off by death. Again, we read, "In the first month, on the fourteenth day of the month, at even, ye shall eat unleavened bread, until the one and twentieth day of the month at even. Seven days shall there be no leaven found in your houses; for whosoever eateth that which is leavened, even that soul shall be cut off from the congregation of Israel, whether he be a stranger or born in the land. Ye shall eat nothing leavened; in all your habitations shall ye eat unleavened bread."—Ex. xii. 15, 18-20. Leaven was not to be offered in the sacrifices. "Thou shalt not offer the blood of my sacrifice with leavened bread."—Ex. xxiii. 18. This verse refers to the blood of the paschal lamb. And again, "No meat offering, which ye shall bring unto the Lord, shall be made with leaven; for ye shall burn no leaven, nor any honey, in any offering of the Lord made by fire."—Lev. ii. 11. You have now heard what is said about leaven in the Old Testament. Let us now hear what is said about it by our Lord in the New Testament. In the 16th of Matthew you read, "Then Jesus said unto them [his disciples], Take heed and beware of the leaven of the Pharisees and Sadducees." The disciples did not understand what our Lord meant at the first. They thought that he spoke to them about the leaven of bread; but afterwards they were enlightened, and then they understood him, and his meaning, too. "Then understood they how that he bade them not beware of the leaven of bread, but of the doctrine of the Pharisees and of the Sadducees."—Verses 6, 12. Luke says that this leaven of the Pharisees was hypocrisy (xii. 1). Hypocrisy was the leaven which corrupted all their principles and practices. The Pharisees were a proud and ostentatious sect among the Jews. They loved to pray standing in the synagogues, and in the corners of the streets, that they might be seen of men. They fasted often, they made broad their phylacteries, they paid tithes of all they possessed, and they transgressed the commandment of God by their traditions. They were hypocrites. The Sadducees were a sect who denied the resurrection, and said there is neither angel nor spirit.—Acts xxiii. 8. Well might our Lord caution his disciples against the "leaven of the Pharisees and of the Sadducees." Let us now hear what Paul says about leaven.—See 1 Cor. v. 6-8. "Know ye not that a little leaven." This little leaven was fornication, as we gather from the preceding verses. "A little leaven leaveneth the whole lump. Purge out, therefore, the old leaven, that ye may be a new lump, as ye are unleavened. For even Christ our pass-over is sacrificed for us: therefore let us keep the feast; not with old leaven, neither with the leaven of malice and wickedness, but with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth." I think it must be clear to you from the Scriptures which I have given you, that leaven is generally used in a bad sense. And if this be its general use in the Scriptures, why should we make an exception of our text? I see no real necessity for doing so. I shall therefore take it as illustrating the working of the mystery of iniquity in the professing Christian Church.—2 Thess. ii. 7. Paul prophesied of the evils which would arise in the professing Christian Church, and we can now say they have arisen and are being fulfilled at this very day. The prophecy to which I refer is in 1 Timothy iv. 1-3. "Now the Spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils; speaking lies in hypocrisy; having their conscience seared with a hot iron; forbidding to marry, and commanding to abstain from meats which God hath created to be received with thanksgiving of them which believe and know the truth." Here you have the leaven of apostasy working its way in the professing Christian Church during the gospel dispensation. This leaven wrought in the church in Pergamos. Jesus said, "But I have a few things against thee, because thou hast there them that hold the doctrine of Balaam, who taught Balac to cast a stumbling-block before the children of Israel, to eat things sacrificed unto idols, and to commit fornication." False doctrine leads to idolatry and uncleanness of living. This was also the leaven of the Nicolaitans, which our Lord condemned.—Rev. ii. 14, 15. We take leaven then as used in a bad sense.

We shall now speak of the agent, a woman. Who is this woman? When we hear of anything very good or very bad, a woman is generally the first in it. Now, I cannot see that the woman in my text refers to Christ. There is not sufficient scriptural warrant for speaking of Christ as a woman. Christ is the Husband of the church. Paul says, "I have espoused you to one Husband, that I may present you as a chaste virgin to Christ."—2 Cor. xi. 2; Rom. vii. 4. If Christ be the Husband, he is not the woman. Now, we read of a woman in the 12th of Revelation, who was clothed with the sun, and the moon under her feet, and on her head a crown of twelve stars. The woman in this chapter is the church of God in her purity and beauty, and yet persecuted. Her clothing is the Sun of righteousness; the moon of Jewish ceremonialism is under her feet; and the doctrine of the apostles, like twelve stars, adorn her crown. This woman was fruitful, and brought forth a favored offspring. But the great dragon, that old serpent, called the Devil and Satan, stood ready to devour, if possible, every child that was born of her. The children and the woman are taken care of by God himself; still she is persecuted, and has to fly into the wilderness, a place is prepared of God for her, where she shall be fed with heavenly food. Satan can persecute, but he can neither destroy this woman nor her offspring. "And when the dragon saw that he was cast unto the earth, he persecuted the woman which brought forth the man child. And to the woman were given two wings of a great eagle, that she might fly into the wilderness, into her place, where she is nourished for a time, and times, and half a time, from the face of the serpent. And the serpent cast out of his mouth water as a flood after the woman, that he might cause her to be carried away of the flood." This flood of persecution failed to destroy the woman. "And the earth helped the woman; and the earth opened her mouth, and swallowed up the flood which the dragon cast out of his mouth. And the dragon was wroth with the woman, and went to make war with the remnant of her seed, which keep the commandments of God, and have the testimony of Jesus." This is a description of the church of God in her pure and persecuted days. Persecution makes a wonderful separation between the precious and the vile. The wilderness is the place for the true and spiritual woman. "Who is this that cometh up from the wilderness, leaning upon her Beloved?" This is the bride, the church of God, leaning, resting and depending upon Christ, her Beloved and adorable Husband. This is not the woman to put leaven into the three measures of meal. Not she, indeed. She requires good and wholesome food for her support. But is there a woman capable of corrupting the meal? I think so.

I shall now show you a woman as she is described in the 17th of Revelation. She is the strange woman spoken of by Solomon. I shall read a few verses without any comment. "So he carried me away in the spirit into the wilderness: and I saw a woman sit upon a scarlet colored beast, full of names of blasphemy, having seven heads and ten horns. And the woman was arrayed in purple and scarlet color, and decked with gold and precious stones and pearls, having a golden cup in her hand, full of abominations and filthiness of her fornication. And upon her forehead was a name written, MYSTERY, BABYLON THE GREAT, THE MOTHER OF HARLOTS AND ABOMINATIONS OF THE EARTH. And I saw the woman drunken with the blood of the saints, and with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus; and when I saw her, I wondered with great admiration." Now, we are told who this woman was, in the 18th verse. "And the woman which thou sawest is that great city which reigneth over the kings of the earth." I have no doubt in my own mind as to the application of the whole of this passage to the apostate church of Rome. In her conduct for more than a thousand years she has answered the description which is here given of her. Solomon gives counsel to his son to avoid the strange woman. He describes her by her attire and craftiness, by her impudence and daring, and by her diligence and allurements. The wanton one yields to her fair speeches and flatteries; he goes after her like an ox to the slaughter, or like a fool to the stocks. This is the strange woman, the apostate church, which takes and hides the leaven in the three measures of meal, till the whole be leavened. Well might Solomon, as a prophet, advise the children of wisdom, "Hearken unto me now, therefore, O ye children, and attended unto the words of my mouth. Let not thine heart decline to her ways, go not astray in her paths. For she hath cast down many wounded; yea, many strong men have been slain by her. Her house is the way to hell, going down to the chambers of death."—Prov. vii. This is indeed the strange woman, the apostate woman, the harlot of the Revelation. This woman will take the leaven and hide it in the three measures of meal, till the whole be leavened.

We shall now say a few words upon the action of the woman. She took the leaven, and hid it. One thing I do feel certain of, and it is this, that she never took this leaven or received it from Christ. The leaven of Arianism, which robs Christ of his Divinity; the leaven of Pelagianism, which denies the depravity of man; the leaven of transubstantiation and the sacrifice of the mass; the leaven of purgatory and prayers for the dead; the leaven of maryolatry and popish infallibility, together with many other corrupting and depraving doctrines, were never taken from the word of God, but from him who is the father of lies, and the promoter of every abomination. The apostate woman is a tool in the hands of the wicked one to corrupt and deprave the gospel of Christ. She took the leaven, and hid it in three measures of meal.

What are we to understand by the "three measures of meal?" I look upon it as a figurative expression; and if I be right in this, then we are to search and see what spiritual truth it is intended to convey. When the three men stood before Abraham in the plains of Mamre, he said to Sarah his wife, "Make ready quickly three measures of fine meal, knead it, and make cakes upon the earth."—Gen. xviii. 6. This must be taken literally, and not figuratively. The fine meal was made into cakes, fit for food, which was to supply the needs of the three men. Again, I read of a "barrel of meal which wasted not."—1 Kings xviii. 14, 15. Although this meal was for daily food, yet it was miraculously supplied; a beautiful figure of the gospel, which is the pure meal from heaven. You will remember the pot of pottage set before the sons of the prophets, when they cried out to Elisha, "There is death in the pot." The prophet cast some meal into the pot, and then there was no harm in the pot. There is death in every pot in which there is no gospel. The gospel is the meal.—2 Kings iv. 38-41. The word for meal in my text means "ground flour;" a very fit emblem of the glorious gospel of the blessed God, which has been so admirably prepared for the sustenance of the saints. Now, if we take this "ground flour" as setting forth the gospel, then we shall regard the "three measures" as the quantity which each Person in the Trinity has contributed to the gospel. The gospel is the outcome of the everlasting and sovereign love of God the Father. The gospel has for its centre the atonement and bloodshedding of Jesus Christ. The gospel is revealed and effectually applied to the sinner's soul by the Holy Ghost. Has not the apostate woman concealed leaven in each measure of this "ground flour?" Has she not done all she could to discountenance the sovereignty of the Father's election of his people in Christ Jesus before the world began? Has she not, and does she not now, seek to glorify fallen man as sovereign in his salvation? And does she not try to hide leaven in the atonement of Christ, when she speaks of Christ's death as only making salvation possible? And does she not put leaven into the Spirit's measure when she speaks of baptismal regeneration, of man's free will, and carnal powers? You may know the woman by what you hear preached from the pulpits. "The strange woman" will be impudent, daring, and damning, if persons do not fall down and worship at her shrine. But the poor, persecuted woman will desire to know her loving Father, that she has victory over every foe through the "blood of the Lamb," and that she is under the teaching, guiding and glorifying influences of the Spirit of God. The children of the Most High know the taste of the "ground flour." They have fed upon Christ in the gospel, as the "Bread of heaven." They have eaten angel's food; for Jehovah has sent them meat in abundance. Lord, evermore give us this bread, which is made of pure "ground flour," and of the "finest of the wheat."

Now for the effect, "till the whole was leavened." Here is assimilation. The leaven in due time shows itself in its corrupting effects. If you take any part of the leaven of which I have spoken, it was small and apparently insignificant at the first. But now look abroad at all professing "Christian Churches." The "church of Rome," what is she now? If she looks beautiful without, what is she within? The mystery of iniquity is inscribed upon her forehead. Her anathemas and curses, her sales of indulgences and pardons, her pride and arrogance, her idolatrous worship of images and saints, her sacramental confessional and crimes, her forgeries and falsehoods, proclaim her as "the woman with the golden cup in her hand, full of abominations and filthiness of her fornications." She is "full of dead men's bones, and of all uncleanness." And what can we say for the "Church of England," with her ritualism! with her priestcraft, with her ecclesiastical mummeries, with her processional exhibitions, with her Latitudinarianism, and with her hosts of indifferents? There was a time when she contended for the faith once delivered to the saints, and counted not her life dear to herself, that the gospel of the grace of God might be preserved in our midst. But now, I fear, she is fast becoming "the habitation of devils, and the hold of every foul spirit, and a cage of every unclean and hateful bird." If you look again at the "Christian Sects," as they are called, do you find anything better in them? Alas! alas! In one sect reason is deified. In another, the Godhead of Christ is denied. In a third there is no Holy Ghost. In a fourth, the inspiration of God's word is ignored. And in most, if not in all of them, there is a proud-pursed Diotrephes, who loveth to have the pre-eminence. The words of my text are verily fulfilled in the professing "Christian Church" of the present day, "The kingdom of heaven is like unto leaven, which a woman took, and hid in three measures of meal, till the whole was leavened."

If the explanation of the text, which I have just given you, be scriptural and true, then is it not a time for testing and trying professing "Christian Churches" by the word of the Lord? What saith the Scriptures?

In conclusion, allow me to say to you that the true minister of the gospel has but one course to pursue. He is the "angel flying in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, Fear God, and give glory to him."—Rev. xiv. 6. How can a minister preach the gospel faithfully if he keeps back any part of the counsel of God? Paul could challenge the Ephesians, "I am pure from the blood of all men; for I have not shunned to declare unto you all the counsel of God." If you want to know what sort of a gospel he preached to the Ephesians, read his epistle to them. Woe is unto me if I preach not the glorious gospel of the blessed God. Woe is unto me if I preach not the Father in his sovereign and electing love. Woe is unto me if I preach not Christ and him crucified. Woe is unto me if I preach not the Holy Ghost in his quickening and saving power. We never need fear the consequences. All will be well. We have God's word of promise for it. "For as the rain cometh down, and the snow from heaven, and returneth not thither, but watereth the earth, and maketh it bring forth and bud, that it may give seed to the sower, and bread to the eater, so shall my word be that goeth forth out of my mouth: it shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it." Hallelujah! Praise ye the Lord!

As may be seen by our published receipts, the brethren and friends are contributing with their usual liberality to the fund to enable us to send the paper to those brethren and sisters who are not able to pay for it, and yet love to read it. We doubt if there is any way the same amount of money could be expended to give as much real joy and true happiness, to as many, as is derived from the contributions to this fund. It is the poor and needy, as to this world's goods, that are the best capacitated to enjoy spiritual blessings.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

By request of the dear ones of the deceased I in a feeble way will try to record the peaceful death of our valued friend and brother and father in Israel, Benjamin Spittler, who fell asleep Oct. 22d, 1892, at his residence in Ashley, Ohio, at the age of 71 years, 8 months and 22 days.

He was born in Fairfield Co., Ohio, Jan. 31st, 1821, and was married to Mary Fry in February, 1845. In the autumn of 1847 they moved to Sandusky Co., Ohio, and cleared up a farm. In the spring of 1857, having sold his improved farm, he moved to Bloom township, Seneca Co., Ohio, and bought the farm then owned by David Bretz, on which he lived until 1875, when he moved to Bloomville, Ohio, and entered the grocery business with his son, A. F. Spittler. A few years after the death of his wife, in 1876, he was married to Mrs. Elizabeth Owen, Feb. 1st, 1879. In 1886 they moved to Ashley, Ohio, where he lived until his death. He was a faithful member of the Old School Baptist Church, and died as he had lived, believing in salvation as a gift from God, freely bestowed upon poor, helpless sinners. The last time I was permitted to see him was on his death-bed. He took me by the hand and said, "I am just going home to heaven." Many times during his sickness he expressed a desire to depart and be with Jesus, and exclaimed, "All is well; all is well. The hope that I have had so many years is sufficient. I am a poor sinner saved by grace. Nothing that I can do or have done; just a poor, helpless sinner saved." He spoke many more precious words, the memory of which will be sacred for years to come. The apostle says, "Sorrow not even as others which have no hope." Truly we can say we have a sweet hope that he has entered into that sweet rest, the fullness of that blessed home which Christ has prepared for his dear children. How loath we are to part with our loved ones, and put them away from our sight forever; yet when we hear the sweet words fall from their dying lips of Jesus, home and heaven, and see the dear face illumed with divine love from above, we ought to rejoice that they were permitted to enter in through the gates into the beautiful city, to enjoy perfect felicity at the right hand of God. One by one he is gathering them home. By-and-by, when the last mile-stone is passed, the by-paths become less frequent, and fade away into the dim distance of the past, and the light of the celestial city at the end becomes brighter and brighter as we near the valley and shadow of death, we too will know that Jesus is there. Then we too can exclaim, "Farewell, vain world; I'm going home." No more sorrow, no more pain nor death, but all love and peace, life and joy. O home, sweet home; never more to leave the presence of our dear Redeemer. We will be made like Jesus, and see him as he is. O blessed thought! we will be free from sin, free from temptations, that so much annoy us here. Ah, dear ones, who are bowed down with sorrow, lift up your drooping heads. It is Jesus, your heavenly Father, who hath thus bereft you; but he hath not left you without hope, for it reaches farther than this vain world, even to that within the veil, where Jesus is. If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable. But, blessed thought, it carries us into the arms of Jesus, safe, secure from every mortal care; and your dear father and husband is resting there. He was loved and esteemed by every one who knew him. He was a faithful husband, a devoted father and companion. His religious experience dated from his childhood; and so clear was his evidence of the new birth that none doubted his sincerity. Many times during his life he was made to rejoice in a renewal of the sweet presence of the Holy Spirit.

His remains were removed to his former home in Seneca Co., Ohio, and the funeral services were conducted at the Honey Creek Baptist Church, Elder L. B. Sherwood officiating, using for a text John xvii. 24. May the peace of our dear Lord reign in the hearts of those left behind, and may they ever feel the sweet influence of that guiding hand. His love is from everlasting to everlasting, and his ways above human comprehension. He speaks, and it is done; he commands, and it stands fast. This will sustain you when all others fail.

ELLA SHERWOOD.

My mother, Rebecca Greenland, departed this life on the morning of Feb. 16th, 1892, aged 78 years, 7 months and 21 days.

She became a member of the Old School Baptist Church called Sidling Hill about thirty-five years ago. Some time after she removed her membership to the Wells Valley Church, where she remained a faithful member until called home. She was always very punctual in attending the meetings until age and infirmity deprived her of the privilege which she so much enjoyed. Six years before her death she received a fall, dislocating her left thigh, and never afterward was able to walk without support. At times her suffering was intense, but she bore it with calmness and resignation which surely only those can do who are supported by divine power. She always had a smile of welcome for all who called to see her; and when any of the brethren and sisters visited her the tears would flow down her cheeks, and her heart be too full for utterance. Fourteen months before her death that dread disease, cancer, began to develop itself in her left side and breast. She was then brought to my home, a distance of thirty-two miles, and put under medical treatment. Two cancers were removed, and for awhile we hoped the operation would prove a success; but in a few weeks the disease began to develop more rapidly than before. All that medical skill and loving hands could do was done, but all was of no avail. At times her suffering was very great.

Although ten months have passed since she left us, how vividly the picture of that sorrowful morning comes before me now. Only those who have passed through those trials know how hard they are to endure. The night before she died she rested unusually well. She awoke at four o'clock, and began singing in a clear voice the familiar hymn,

"Alas! and did my Savior bleed,
And did my Savior die?" &c.

She sang the first two verses and part of the third. During the day she spoke of father and brother Wilson, who had preceded her to the grave several years. In the evening she wished to retire at her usual hour, and remarked to another sister and myself that we should watch her that night. At the hour of midnight we saw that the final change had come. She talked almost constantly, but we could understand but little that she said. She seemed perfectly sensible of all that was going on. Calm and peaceful, and without a struggle, she fell asleep in the arms of her Savior, whom she so long had trusted.

"Like weary and worn out pilgrims,
Who sigh for the daylight's close,
He knows that they oft are longing
For home and its sweet repose.
So he calls them in from their labors,
Ere the shadows round them creep,
And silently watching o'er them,
He giveth his loved ones sleep."

What sorrow and loss there is in that one word, "Gone." Yes, mother was gone, never to return. Yet when I looked upon that dear face, so calm and peaceful in death, and thought over the long months and years of suffering which she had endured, I felt it was a happy exchange for her. While at my home I often heard her express her desire to depart and be at rest. She said that death had no terrors for her.

Her funeral was largely attended, and a discourse preached by Elder C. Funk from Psalm xxiii., and hymn 1257 (Beebe's Collection) was sung. Her body was then conveyed to the cemetery and laid beside father's. She leaves six daughters, two sons, many grandchildren and friends to mourn the loss of one who was always ready and willing to lend a helping hand and relieve the suffering and distressed. She was kind, generous and faithful to the last. We feel to say, Not our will, but thine be done.

"Weep not; her toils are over;
Weep not that her race is run;
God grant we may rest as calmly
When our work, like hers, is done.
Till then we would yield with gladness
Our treasures to him to keep,
And rejoice in the sweet assurance,
He giveth his loved ones sleep."

ANNA R. MCCLELLAN.

RAINSBURGH, Pa., Jan. 12, 1893.

WITH feelings of unspeakable anguish I attempt the task of writing the obituary of my dear father, Elder Lewis A. McDonald, who departed this life Nov. 5th, 1892. His disease was typhoid fever and bronchitis. He was taken on the night of Oct. 9th, and thought probably it was only a cold. On Thursday following he went to attend a union meeting at the Amnon Church, in Taylor County, of which he had the pastoral care for nearly twelve years. He came home on Tuesday following, and told us there was only one step between him and death.

He was born in Warren Co., Va., March 31st, 1825, and was married to Irena Stout on Jan. 22d, 1849, with whom he lived and nourished until it pleased God to call him from this world of sin and sorrow. He leaves a widow and five children (two having preceded him to the tomb), twelve grandchildren and a host of friends, to mourn their loss; but we sorrow not as those without hope, for he has left behind grand evidence that he is gone to rest in the heavenly mansion above, not made with hands, there to eternally dwell. His theme was salvation by grace, through the blood and merits of the great Redeemer. O how sad to stand by the bedside of our dear ones and see them pass from time to eternity; but to the saints of our God it is only falling

"Asleep in Jesus! blessed sleep!
From which none ever wake to weep!"

He was baptized in the year 1852 by Elder E. Dennison, and connected with the Primitive Baptist Church, with which he lived a consistent member until his death, having been a minister for nearly twenty years. His mission he faithfully filled, disappointing his congregations but few times. He has gone through rain and heat, in pain, through frost and sleet, his Master's cause to plead.

In his last sickness he had but little hope of recovery, and bore his affliction with great christian fortitude. He seemed very much resigned to the will of God. He sang a hymn a few nights prior to his death, and at the close exclaimed, "It will not be long." On the day before he expired he told us not to weep. O may our separation be only for a short space of time. His ministerial course began in the year 1873; but now his race is fully run, and from pain and toil he is free. His loving daughter,

IRENA C. McDONALD.

WESTON, W. Va., Jan. 9, 1893.

Ira Guernsey, of Schoharie, N. Y., expired very suddenly July 19th, 1892. At the time of his death he was at work in his barn, together with a brother and two hired men, unloading rye. He was pitching the sheaves back to the man packing them away, when without a word or a groan he expired in the place where he stood, before any one could get to the spot. Well might David say to Jonathan, "Truly, as the Lord liveth, and as thy soul liveth, there is but a step between me and death."

Mr. Guernsey was born in the town of Middleburgh, Schoharie Co., N. Y., Jan. 10th, 1832, and at the time of his death was in the sixty-first year of his age. Although not a member of the visible church, his words and actions clearly proved his heart to be in sympathy with the doctrine and faith of the Old School Baptist Church. His house was open to entertain her ministers, and his purse open when money was needed to make the house of worship comfortable. About a year ago, at the request of brother Peter Mowers, I called at his house to inquire if he wished to take the SIGNS another year. He said, "O yes; there was one article in the paper last week that was worth to me the price of the paper alone." From that and other conversations with him at various times I was led to believe that his understanding had been enlightened by him who teaches as man never taught.

A very large assembly of friends and neighbors convened at his house to pay their last tribute of respect to his memory, and to express their sympathy with the bereaved family. Elder John Clark was called upon to officiate at the funeral, held at the house, and was given liberty to speak comforting words to the friends and afflicted family, who without a moment's warning were deprived of the companionship and counsels of a kind husband and father. After the services his remains were borne to the cemetery in the rear of the Schoharie Court House, to await the final resurrection. While we all feel to share with the family in this their deep affliction, we pray for grace to be reconciled to the will of him who doeth all things well, who is too wise to err, and too good to be unkind.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date. This date denotes the time at which your subscription expires; and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

CORRESPONDENCE.

REISTERSTOWN, Md., Jan. 26, 1893.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—I have noticed in the last two numbers of the SIGNS that you intend republishing at an early date the account which was given in the first volume of your paper of the proceedings at the meeting held at Black Rock sixty years ago, which culminated in our final separation from what are now known as New School or Missionary Baptists. In this connection there have come up in my mind some expressions of holy writ which seem to me pertinent, and in harmony with the intention which you have in view. "Thus saith the Lord, Stand ye in the ways, and see, and ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls."—Jer. vi. 16.

I am sure that if any body of men loved and feared God, and strove to walk in the old ways, after the doctrine of the apostles, those who met at Black Rock upon that occasion most certainly did; and if any body of men were ever given light from on high to see the truth clearly since the days of the inspired apostles it was surely given to them. No doubt they were men of like passions with other men, confessing often and freely and sorrowfully their own failures and imperfections; but yet they by faith walked with God, and to them he showed his will, and gave grace to declare and obey it. Therefore it is well to stand in the way, and ask after the old paths, and to follow them as they followed Christ. In harmony with this we may remember that Israel often set up at the command of God memorial stones, to recall to their minds afterward what the Lord had done for them; and they were required to often recount the Lord's wonders of old in their gatherings together and to their children. In several of the Psalms also there is a narrative of their former history, in order to strengthen their faith, comfort them in trouble, and to admonish them to continue in the right way of the Lord, for their good and his glory. In fact, much of the whole Bible is history; and so, as said before, it seems to me that your purpose to publish the proceedings at Black Rock is good, and in harmony with these scriptural references.

Our God manifests himself in his providential dealings with his people, as well as in their heartfelt experience of his grace. The humble children of God in all ages have delighted to recognize the hand of their God and Father in that which was providential, as well as in that which pertained to his sovereign grace. In fact, the gracious exercises of their souls in love, gratitude and praise have often been inseparably bound up with his mercies or his judgments in his providence; and so the Lord has led his people little by little to believe that his power and wisdom are to be seen in every step of their outward as well as inward lives. When in obedience to the teachings of the Spirit of Christ in them, and in harmony with his word, they pray, "Give us this day our daily bread," they recognize that they are just as dependent each day for all outward and earthly blessings as for the bread of heaven. There is no independence in man. There is one only who is independent. We can neither live, move nor have our being except it be in God. It is as true of us as it was of the Master in the days of his flesh, that we go as it is appointed for us; and it is as true of every enemy of Christ and his cause and people as it was of Pilate, "Thou couldest have no power at all against me, except it were given thee from above." Thus it is well to recall the outward life and history of the church, while at the same time we remember the work of God in the hearts of those whose works engage our attention.

I have been reflecting upon the deep love for God and truth which must have been in the hearts of those who then withdrew from the great body of Baptists with which they had always been identified. No doubt it was to them a hard thing to separate from former friends and acquaintances, with whom they had gone to the house of God, and with many of whom they had taken sweet counsel; for it was no doubt true that many who did not come out and separate themselves from those who were perverting the truth were also the children of God, and gentle-minded, humble followers of the Lamb. Yet to them had not been given such clearness of vision and such strength as were shown by those who could no longer delay, but must hasten to depart from following the iniquities that were in the land. It was hard to incur misunderstanding and reproach from those whom they could not help loving, and for whose experience they could not but have fellowship. It is not so very hard to defend the truth against our open personal enemy, and his reproaches and enmity cannot wound any tender feeling; but it is hard to be opposed and to oppose ourselves to those who love us, and whom we love; and this they were compelled to meet and to endure.

The great body of those who bore the Baptist name were then intent upon "climbing up from the dung-hill," and taking their place by the side of other denominations, and there were but few who loved truth above popularity. These must expect to be derided and stigmatized and despised, and counted as lacking in zeal and love and charity toward their fellow-men. If they believed in God and his work, and did not dare to undertake to do what God had reserved to his own hand, they must expect to be charged with having no interest in the salvation of sinners, but with being selfish and pharisaical, and thinking of no one but themselves; and if they withdrew themselves from schemes which dishonored God and denied his work, they must expect to be charged with being opposed to all progress, and all endeavors to better the condition of mankind. All this did indeed take place; yet they were strengthened on their way, and continued to bear faithful testimony to the faith that was in them. Again I say, it seems to me well to consider all this for our strengthening and emulation at this time. I want to also add that I have never had the shadow of a doubt about the scripturalness of every position then announced and advocated by those who composed what is known as the Black Rock Convention. Theirs is the faith I have lived by thus far, and, according to the best of my ability, I always expect to advocate and defend the same.

Out of this separation, and as the result of it, sprang up the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. From its beginning it stood pledged to present and advocate the principles of truth there enunciated. It has not been false to this pledge. When it is, when it shall cease to defend each and all the principles there and then adopted, then, and not till then, do I expect to forsake it. Its editors and its correspondents have been but men—men subject to mistakes and failures like other men. No doubt they have made, as we all have, many mistakes. No doubt they have been men of like passions with the rest of us. But never has there been any room to doubt that they have been God-fearing men, true and faithful to their trust. I have felt a peculiar interest in the SIGNS because of this very fact, that it was the outgrowth of the division; and its pages have from the first reflected those principles of doctrine which led to the division, and also the same earnest spirit that was ready to sacrifice all that men hold dear in order to bear clear testimony to the truth. We may freely admit that as its editors and correspondents have been fallible men, so its pages have not been free from mistakes. We shall not find perfection in this life. The SIGNS is not perfect; but it does contend for the doctrine of God our Savior, it does rejoice in Christ Jesus, and has no confidence in the flesh. It does teach the necessity of vital godliness and the necessity of good works; not to atone for sin, but to glorify God. It does reject the unscriptural inventions of worldly-wise men, and clings to the God-given ordinances of the Lord's house. It does contend for the necessity of the new birth of God, and not of the will of man. It does bear living testimony to a God and Savior of omnipotence, omniscience, omnipresence, unchangeability, eternal purpose, and the sole Giver of eternal life; and while it contends for these things I expect to stand by it and support it as best I may.

I have been a reader of the SIGNS ever since I was old enough to read anything. At the age of eight or ten years I used to read the experiences published there. I have thus been reading it for nearly forty years; and I read it with a wider and increasing interest to-day. My testimony is that it has gone on in its course with straightforward consistency in the main. I do not say, and I am sure its editors do not claim, that no mistakes have been made, that no irrelevant or foolish matter has been published, that no mistaken notions of doctrine have appeared or have been advocated in its columns; but it certainly is true that the general tone and spirit of its pages have been consistent with the principles first enunciated. This is to be commended, because those principles were scriptural and God-honoring and man-abasing. Its errors have been such as belong to the general weakness of our fallen nature. Its steadfast defense of the truth has been by the grace of God.

I design in this to institute no comparison between the SIGNS and other excellent papers which have from time to time appeared and are still published for the defense of our Baptist cause. I simply desire to emphasize my approval of the SIGNS, and to express the fact that it is dear to me as an old friend of forty years' standing, and I should not know how to do without seeing its familiar face; and while I thus express my regard for it, I desire also to make mention of the constant kindness and forbearance shown to me personally by its editors and publishers. I have written very much and very often for its pages, and greater kindness has been shown me than I have in any wise deserved or could have expected; and I cannot help having a tender feeling for those who bear and forbear with me.

Now, brethren, I have written these few thoughts as an expression of my feeling for the SIGNS and desire for its prosperity; and this I have done because I believe in the same things which it advocates, and desire to see those principles maintained. The true prosperity of the Lord's house is in the growth and steadfastness in the truth of all who love his name, as well as in sinners being brought to know and love the Lord in the first place. Toward this end I believe the SIGNS has always striven to labor. May God bless its editors and contributors with all needed grace to continue in the defense of the gospel, is my prayer.

I remain your brother in the hope of Christ,

F. A. CHICK.

CANADA, KY., NOV. 15, 1892.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN IN CHRIST:—A young brother has requested me to write my travel, through the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, so I will try to do so, looking to the dear Lord to guide my mind. I feel so ignorant and sinful, I know I cannot say anything without the help of Jesus. He says, "Without me ye can do nothing."—John xv. 5. So we must have him in the lead all the time; for he leadeth in the way of righteousness, in the midst of the paths of judgment.—Prov. viii. 20.

Ever since I was a little girl I craved to be a christian, and commenced praying very young. I tried for several years, but found no relief. When I was eighteen years old a dear uncle from Minnesota visited my father's house and staid about ten months. He was a "Seventh Day Adventist." He read the Bible to me very often, and got me to thinking they were right; so I kept Saturday for the Sabbath, and fell on my knees beside my bed every night, asking the dear Lord to pardon my many sins. I went on in this way about six months, and then gave it up, for a cause best known to God. I would become reconciled for a while, and then would become troubled again. I continued in this way about eighteen months, and married a Baptist in principle, but he did not belong to the church. I still went on trying to pray, more troubled at times than at others, for over six years. In February, 1891, my blessed Savior took our darling babe home to himself. I then thought how suddenly he had taken it, and how quickly he could take me. I was troubled more about my future welfare than I was about my babe. I tried to pray night and day for about two weeks, and got contented again, when all of a sudden I was in such a fix that I could neither sleep nor eat. I was full and running over with grief. Such trouble I never had before. I could not tell any one of my condition, neither could I tell what was the matter. My husband was running his steam mill about one mile from home, and left me with my three little children at home. I tried to pray all the time. I could not work. I would go to the barn, and would fall on my knees in the darkest stall I could find. I was afraid some one would see or hear me. I was praying all the time. I would walk in the house and yard for hours at a time, and roll on my bed at night, asking the dear Lord to pardon my many sins. I was afraid he would call me away before I was pardoned. That was the last thing on my mind at night, and the first when I awoke in the night or morning. My husband would very often ask me what the matter was, and my answer would be, "You know what, my darling." He thought I was grieving about my little babe, and would tell me not to grieve after what the Lord had done, for it was all right. I continued to ask the Lord to have mercy on me a sinner, for about three weeks; but instead of getting better I thought I got worse. I did all I could do or say. I got to the place where I could not work, and thought my doom was to go down to that horrible lake. I thought it would be just and right, and I was willing for the Lord's will to be done. I was willing to be saved or lost. I thought the Lord would not do anything that was wrong, and I was willing to risk myself in his hands. I was willing for him to do his will, and I would be satisfied. In a moment my blessed Savior appeared on the rugged cross, and I thought if he died for me I ought to lay down my life for him. It seemed like I was willing to die for Jesus right there, I loved him so well. I could not help praising his sweet name. It was the sweetest name on earth to me. O how happy I was there by myself for about one hour. It seemed to me the sun shone the brightest I had ever before seen it. My burden was rolled away. This was about eleven o'clock A. M. I was in my chair, with my face in my hands, before my fireside. There is where I believe my dear Lord pardoned my many sins.

My dear brethren and sisters, it is no wonder we can praise our blessed Savior's name, when he rolls off our dark burden from before us, and lets the bright light from heaven shine around us. After a short time my mind led me to go to the Baptist Church and be baptized; but I did not go until the May meeting. I offered myself, and was received. Then brother W. J. May asked my husband if he wanted to talk to the church. He replied that he felt too unworthy. They told him they all felt that way, and such were the very ones to come. He was received also, and we both were buried in the watery grave on the third Sunday in June. When I offered myself to the church I thought my troubles were over; but before the month passed away I began to fear I had deceived the church. But at times I cannot help praising my blessed Savior's name, for he is so good and so merciful to save a poor sinner like me. He has said, "Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you, that ye should go and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit should remain; that whatsoever ye shall ask of the Father in my name, he may give it you."—John xv. 16. He makes the choice of us; we do not make the choice of him. He says, "I have chosen thee in the furnace of affliction."—Isa. xlviii. 10. So we have trials and troubles, and are tempted in many ways; but O how sweet the promise that he will not suffer us to be tempted above that we are able to bear.—1 Cor. x. 13. So we ought to rejoice one with another, and praise God, who has saved us, and called us with a holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own good will and purpose. He has said, "I have loved thee with an everlasting love; therefore with loving-kindness have I drawn thee." I believe that every one whom he draws with that love, at times will know it. John says, "We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren." I know, if I am not deceived in myself, that I love the church better than any of my near relatives in the flesh. I would rather be with them than with any body else. The most satisfaction I have is when I go and hear the doctrine of predestination and election by grace preached. It is a free salvation. Paul says, "For by grace are ye saved, through faith; and that not of yourselves, it is the gift of God. Not of works, lest any man should boast." If we had to work for it, it would not be a gift; it would be a purchase. "And if by grace, then it is no more of works; otherwise grace is no more grace. But if it be of works, it is no more grace; otherwise work is no more work." It cannot be a mixture, for God does not mix things as we do. If we had our way we would save everybody, while God just saves them that are his. His promise is sure and steadfast, having this seal, "The Lord knoweth them that are his." Then there are some he does not claim. He says, "Ye believe not, because ye are not of my sheep."

They must belong to some one; who is it? Jesus says, "Ye are of your father the devil, and the lusts of your father ye will do." If the devil is their father, they are his children. "The tares are the children of the wicked one." Some say they are all goats until they experience the new birth. The apostle says, "Because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying, Abba, Father." "Jerusalem which is above is free, which is the mother of us all." Babylon is the mother of all harlots. There is an opposite to everything; good and evil, light and darkness, rich and poor, cold and heat, &c. As God has ordained all things to suit himself, we ought to rejoice when we think we are of those he has called, and should praise his holy name; for he is the only one that is holy, and the only one that is good. There is none good but one, that is God."

Now I will close my ill-formed letter. I feel so unworthy that I hardly know whether to send it. It is soul-cheering to me to read from the many brethren and sisters in different parts of the country, through the SIGNS. Pray for me, your unworthy sister, if one at all, that I may grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

SARAH E. BOLT.

KELLY'S CORNERS, N. Y., Dec. 26, 1892.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—In my meditation upon the Scriptures the words recorded in 1 John iii. 18, 19, have seemed to impress my mind to express some thoughts thereon, for the benefit of the readers of the SIGNS.

The peculiar title of "my little children" significantly sets forth the fullness of affection and interest of a parent for its offspring; and it also portrays the great regard of the servant of the Lord for the children of his kingdom, as they are brought to know him, whom to know is life eternal, and to keep his commandments, from the effect of the love shed abroad in their heart by the Holy Ghost given unto them.

Again, the term "my little children" is presenting the order and oversight of every truly organized church of Jesus Christ, with an efficient ministration of the ordinances thereof, especially in regard to a pastorate; for none, without the feeling of forbearance and endurance, could claim the endearing title of a parent, nor bestow on others, as the children of God, this heaven-felt title of children, without knowing the care, anxiety and watchfulness in their sphere; so the inspired servant of our God gave directions to be followed regarding the care of the church of God; for "If a man know not how to rule his own house, how shall he take care of the church of God?" I am persuaded there will be that parental feeling; and the more stubborn or unyielding the child, the greater the care and anxiety of the parent naturally. So in our measure, both as preachers and brethren, we have to have our faith tried and proved with one another in the love of Christ, and the necessary "forbearing one another in love;" and as we bear one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ, we show thereby that we love one another with a pure heart fervently.

Again, the term "my little children" sets forth "the elect lady" (the church as chosen in Christ before the world was, and manifest in a belief in Jesus Christ, and constrained by love divine to follow him and keep his commands), as the keeper of the order, in the law or rule of her Husband (Christ); and the little children imply all that are thus gathered together in his name to speak of his kingdom and talk of his power, as under their mother's (the chosen one) authority they move and act in subservance, because each one has her law written in their heart.

While the writer of this epistle uses these endearing terms to describe the characteristics of men and women (not little natural children), he also connects himself with them by the little words "we," "ye" and "us;" implying that which is his desire toward them, his fullness of interest with them. He uses great plainness of speech in regard to the things with which he deals, presenting both cause and effect, to believer and unbeliever, naming them Christ and antichrist. "Little children, let no man deceive you." Naturally little children may be deceived, especially if they are not fearful. But it speaks to the knowledge of the babes in Christ, even to their faith in him, by which in their measure they have reasoning powers; or in other words, understanding in the truth, to know that no lie is of the truth. So this is a watch-word to them, "Let no man deceive you. He that doeth righteousness is righteous," while "he that commiteth sin is of the devil; for the devil sinueth from the beginning. For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil." In this the mystery of godliness is brought to view; and it is to be remembered that as a mystery it is revealed to the people of God, while it was and still is a hidden mystery, which none of the princes of this world can know but by divine revelation; yet babes in Christ joy in it, because it seems good in the Father's sight to reveal it to them.

It is in this, then, that the children of God are manifest, and the children of the devil: "Whosoever doeth not righteousness is not of God; neither he that loveth not his brother." Therefore the fearful consequence of hating instead of loving, or only loving in word or tongue, instead of indeed and in truth. As all the actions of the Lord's people are open and plain unto him, with whom they have to do, so it is indeed a very fearful thing for one of his little children to fall into the hands of the living God, with hatred, variance, emulation, wrath, strife, &c., which is all to be put away, and instead to desire the sincere milk of the word, that they may grow thereby in grace and in the knowledge of the truth; letting their love be without dissimulation; abhorring that which is evil, and cleaving to that which is good. There is nothing better for the little children of our God than to love one another indeed and in truth, doing good to each other, and communicating with each other, being helpers of each other's joy as a sacrifice with which God is well pleased, because he requires it of them.

It is one of the essential things, that we in our walk and conversation manifest our love to God, and to those of like precious faith with us; for by our fruits we are to be known by the children of God. "Beloved, if God so loved us, we ought also to love one another;" not in word and tongue, but indeed and in truth; and hereby we know that we are of the truth. The experience of the Lord's little children must always be verified in this; for in it they never need fear. Even if they should appear somewhat like the world, they will also find that they are not of the world. Although they have the same nature, and delight themselves in earthly things, yet having been made free by the truth they will, when exercised, measurably ignore everything but the truth; for nothing but the truth as it is in Jesus will do them good. Though oft in tribulation's maze and thick darkness they must pass, with sore questionings about the way they are walking, and with abundant knowledge of their shortcomings, nevertheless they hope, and look to Calvary's cross, and the finished work of Jesus thereon. All is well, and Jesus, as the truth, is verified in them, and hope appears as an anchor of their soul, sure and steadfast; for it enters into that within the veil, where their Forerunner is. Thus their hearts are assured before him; for there is none like Jesus to them. In him they have full deliverance tasted, and full preservation acknowledged. In the assurance of their heart before him, which shall be in the flow of this wonderful love indeed and in truth, none that feel it can mistake its origin; for the desire of each heart will be, as in their prayer for Zion, to let it have free course and run; yea, to "let brotherly love continue," and each abound in the work of the Lord; for no one can bear revenge or pride with Jesus in their view. He has told them (and still continues to sound forth his praise with assurance in their heart) not only, "If ye love me keep my commandments," but to continue in it. "By this shall all (men) know that ye are my disciples, if we have love one to another." "As my Father hath loved me, so have I loved you:

continue ye in my love." Again, for the assurance of our hearts before him, we are to forgive one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven us.

Brethren and sisters, do our hearts assure us before him in this? Do we feel thus toward any and all who oppose us? If we do not, where is our assurance of heart before him? I do not believe I am deceived in this important matter. God knows my heart. I want my heart assured in this thing, if not in any other, for it is of the utmost importance. In this mine I have been digging for thirty-three years; and while I have handled so much earth, and sifted and washed out so much of a worthless nature, my labor has not been in vain with myself and others with whom I have been associated, proving what is that good and acceptable and perfect will of God. It has been at times in this very thing, through much tribulation I have been entering the kingdom of God. While all the ways of the church of the Lord Jesus are marked out in righteousness, and the requirements of his chosen people are in the recorded testimony of truth, and also all the departures of the church and individual members, with their consequences and punishment, are set forth by the Lord and his appointed judges, as under the observance of the King in Zion who works all things after the counsel of his own will, all must be working together for the good of his chosen people, and there can be no mistake with him; for he has predestinated them to be conformed to the image of his Son; and if one could, by straying into sin, come short, the travail of soul by our gracious Lord would be incomplete.

But I am digressing. I desire to refer to testimony in my own mind in times past, of felt assurance of heart before Jesus, because of love still dwelling with me, or flowing out to those of like precious faith in Jesus. With all the different views expressed or written, whether public or private, so far as they have borne the test of true love, none have tended to disturb my own personal comfort in the truth; for I have been assured of the fact. With all the different views on points of doctrine, no one would be justified in receiving anything that was contrary to sound doctrine, or that did not bear a form of sound words, or that did not show the possession of love indeed and in truth, as an assurance to their heart before Jesus Christ. Neither would there be any justification to any one in rejecting any point of doctrine or practice laid down in the Scriptures of truth, because they are not able to see clearly as others do. The excellent fruits of the Spirit significantly set forth the assurance of heart before Jesus. This has been my constant guide, the testimony of Jesus being the spirit of prophecy. All the different gifts unto Zion must come forth with the ability that God giveth. They must come forth under all circumstances, so far as they are unto edification. Beyond this I have no judgment; for no man as a minister can go beyond the teaching of the Spirit, while he may continue to go beyond himself as a man, being led more and more into the glorious truth. He will have an experience of trial, to bring him forth with assurance in love to the brotherhood, and before his glorious Leader have assurance in his heart. It seems to me of late, as brethren in the ministry appear to differ much in the views they take of things written about, that all is acceptable or tolerable, as they manifest forbearance and love one to the other. May the Lord enable us to seek peace and ensue it.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS:—I send inclosed two letters, one written by Miss Nettie Hawk, of Rock Springs, Pa., the other by Mrs. Ida Hart, of Tuscarora, Pa. I have not the consent of either to have them published, nor do I think they were written for publication; but they are interesting letters to me, and will be, I think, to others.

WM. GRAFTON.

FURNISS, Pa., June 19, 1892.

ELDER WM. GRAFTON—DEAR FRIEND:—I received your kind and welcome letter, and am feeling so badly that if I had not promised to answer it I do not think I could do it; but as I did, I will answer it the best I can, although I feel it will be like myself, very imperfect.

I joined the Presbyterians three years before I came among the Old Baptists. I never could feel like they said they did. They said they felt so good and happy, while I felt so full of sin, and so very far from being good. The preacher asked me if I was not satisfied with myself. I told him I was not. He said I did not have faith, nor pray enough; that if I only believed, I would be saved. In my own way I would try to have faith, and would try to do good; but it seemed to me the more I tried the worse I got. I wondered what was the matter with me. I went to the communion twice. The last time I went I felt so wicked, and these words, "Wherefore whosoever shall eat this bread, and drink this cup of the Lord unworthily, shall be guilty of the body and blood of the Lord," came to me with such force, and I felt so condemned, I thought if I ever got home I would never do such a thing again; for it seemed to me that I had committed an unpardonable sin.

I was told before I came here that they would make a Baptist of me. I said they would not; and if I am one, I know they never even tried to make me believe as they do. It would have been useless to try; for when I first went to their meeting I thought, They do believe that no-

THE SEVENFOLD LIGHT.

"MOREOVER the light of the moon shall be as the light of the sun, and the light of the sun shall be sevenfold, as the light of seven days, in the day that the Lord buildeth up the breach of his people, and healeth the stroke of their wound."—Isa. xxx. 26.

In deference to the request of sister Alexander, as expressed in her letter upon page 25, current volume of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, we submit the following thoughts in connection with the text to which she refers. Nothing, however, which can be written or spoken by any mortal can give greater light or joy to our sister than that which dawned upon her darkness when the ever blessed Comforter took of that inspired testimony of Jesus and showed it unto her in her own deliverance out of darkness into the light and liberty of the sons of God. This will be manifest to her in the remembrance that she has never found language to express the great light which was then revealed in her heart. Only from faith to faith can this heavenly glory be communicated. The hearing of what the Spirit saith unto the churches is confined to him that hath an ear. And none can teach his brother the knowledge of that truth which is received by the revelation of Jesus Christ. Every one must be taught of the Lord. They who have been thus taught are comforted together in speaking often to each other of all the way which the Lord has led them. But that solemnly momentous theme is foolishness to them that perish. Thus there is just as strong assurance that one is led by the Spirit of God when he is interested in the testimony of Jesus, as there is that the Spirit is leading that servant of the Lord by whom the word is spoken or written.

It will be borne in mind that this prophet was moved by the Holy Ghost to testify of Jesus; and not only in our text, but in all that he wrote, there is no true comprehension of the record but that which displays the glorious truth that Christ Jesus is the fulfillment of all prophecy, the embodiment of all truth, and the origin and end of every purpose of eternal wisdom. In this text there is evident reference to the coming of the gospel day, in which the night of legal bondage should be past, and the glorious light of gospel liberty should be revealed through the coming of Jesus Christ in the form of a servant under the law, to redeem them that were under the law and under its condemnation. In all the prophetic messages the legal dispensation is described as the darkness of night; and the united testimony of all that cloud of witnesses, from the bleeding lamb of Abel, down to the last offering made by faith upon Jewish altars, proclaimed the ushering in of the glorious day of gospel light and liberty. In its relation to that legal dispensation the law written upon tables of stone was the sun from which all the types and ceremonies derived their light. But it was in that very law signified that all its provisions were to perish with the using, since there was nothing made perfect by its precepts. In its inflexible demands the exceeding sinfulness of sin was made manifest; but it could render no aid to the guilty sinner by which he might be made free from condemnation. Thus, while it gave the light of justice by which the sin of the transgressor was exposed, it left the condemned sinner under the terrible darkness of hopeless pollution and guilt. The fact that there was no release from guilt through the perpetual sacrifices which were demanded by the law of Moses, was declared in the requirement that they should be offered daily, and yet that there should be a remembrance of sin every year throughout that dispensation. Only in the ceremonial and typical sense of that temporal dispensation was the Israelite justified in the observance of the precepts of that law. Neither eternal life nor everlasting condemnation depended upon its obedience or disobedience. Those Israelites to whom it was given, were already dead and under the curse of divine condemnation, before the tables of stone were written by the finger of God on Sinai. That law was only revealed that in its light sin might be made manifest as exceeding sinful. Under the original transgression of Adam death passed upon all whose life was in him in that transgression. So Paul cites this as conclusive proof that in Adam all his children sinned unto death. "For until the [Sinai] law sin was in the world, but sin is not imputed when there is no law. Nevertheless death reigned from Adam to Moses, even over them that had not sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression, who is the figure of him that was to come."—Rom. v. 13, 14. This universal reign of death results from the fact that in Adam all his unborn children transgressed the commandment of the Creator; so that they have only been developed by natural generation as subjects of sin and death already under condemnation. This is all that can be seen in the light of that law which was added because of transgressions, and which entered that the offense might abound. There was indeed a glory in the exhibition of infinite justice in that legal sun; but all its light is turned into darkness in contrast with the brightness of the shining of that glorious Son of righteousness, from whence emanates the heavenly light of the gospel day. This is attested in the experience of every sinner who has heard the life-giving voice of the Lord Jesus Christ in his translation out of darkness into the marvelous light and liberty of the sons of God in the kingdom of his dear Son. The dreadful truth made manifest by the light of the law is only sufficient to convince the conscious sinner of his hopeless guilt; "for by the law is the knowledge of sin." No legal light can show the salvation of a sinner from his sins. The glory of the legal day shines only in the condemnation of all men, for that all have sinned. Yet there is divine glory in that light which shows the spotless purity of infinite justice. This was the utmost extent of the light of that day of the law of Moses.

The gospel day, of which the Spirit of Christ moved the prophet to record the wonderful declarations in connection with our text, glows with a light as far superior to that legal day as the Sun of Righteousness is superior to that merely typical sun which illumined the heaven of Judaism. In this bright day is revealed the most wonderful mystery of all the glorious testimony of God. God is just, and the justifier of him that believeth in Jesus.—Rom. iii. 26. No stains of sin can be too deep for the light of this day to show them completely washed away in that blood of Jesus Christ, which cleanseth his saints from all sin. This is not merely that they are released from the punishment justly due to their transgressions, as a criminal may be released by executive clemency. Pardon would never remove their guilt. Neither would it satisfy that hunger and thirst after righteousness by which our Lord has characterized them whom he has pronounced blessed. This infinite day of our God shows every subject of his grace made holy and without blame before God in love. No such miracle of omnipotent mercy can be seen in the brightest light of legal righteousness. The utmost shining of the light of that law which was given by Moses, shows only the justification of those who render perfect and perpetual obedience to its every requirement. The first transgression brings hopeless condemnation. Natural reason cannot imagine any light capable of showing the sinner perfectly justified, so that he is holy and without blame before God in love. Hence in every humanly devised system of salvation nothing more is claimed than that God is too merciful to be just; and therefore he has retracted the sentence which condemns all men as sinners. Evidently such as accept such doctrines and commandments of men, are not guided by the sevenfold light of this day which the Lord has made. When the saints are deluded by such false theories, and trust in such errors, they must learn with Jonah, "They that observe lying vanities forsake their own mercy." That lesson may take them with him to the bottom of the mountains, where they will realize that the earth with her bars is about them forever. Yet the Lord will bring up their life from corruption, to the praise of his own glory.

While in the estimation of finite intelligence the doctrine of this great grace seems to authorize sinners to continue in sin, to those in whose hearts this wonderful light shines it is clearly shown that their secret thoughts are judged in its infinite brightness. Even the sin which has never been developed in actual performance is exposed in those secret thoughts of the heart. Every one who has been brought to know this infinite light can say with the inspired psalmist, "I have seen an end of all perfection; thy commandment is exceeding broad." It is only when truth dwells in the inward parts that the commandment of God is obeyed in its spirit. Only in the sevenfold light of the great day which the Lord has made can the conscious sinner see the justice of his condemnation. In that divine light also does the miracle of grace appear, in which God is shown to be just in justifying the sinner which believeth in Jesus. In this great light the righteousness of God shines to the manifestation of the character of every one in whom it is revealed. It not only shows the truth of God in the doctrine of salvation through Jesus Christ, but it also tells the enlightened sinner his own hidden guilt. All his cherished righteousness is shown to be but as a garment of filthy rags, and he sees in his best works the exposure of abominable corruption. That obedience to the letter of the law in which he had trusted for justification, when exposed to the scrutiny of this sevenfold light of divine judgment, is shown to be but the flimsy screen of selfish hypocrisy by which he sought for divine favor, while still under the control or carnal covetousness. In this divine day the light of the moon, that is, the righteousness shining in the typical law, is as the light of the sun, in that it is manifest that no formal service can satisfy the spiritual demands which are the life of that law. No sinner in the light of nature ever saw the glory of perfect justice in the precepts of the holy law. Only in the revelation of its spirituality does it bring death to every one who is under its dominion. The Jew who had been obedient to every precept of the law in its letter, instantly died when the commandment came in the power of its divine holiness. The whole ritual of Judaism, as the moon, reflects the testimony of Jesus; and that light is made clear in the gospel day as applied by the Holy Spirit, the Comforter; the same light displays the dazzling glory of perfect holiness in the law as the sun of that legal day. But without the sevenfold light of that Spirit of truth which bears witness of Christ, there could be no perfection in the law nor the types of that shadowy dispensation.

If there could have been any uncertainty in regard to the day which is designated in our text, it is impossible to mistake the specification which identifies it as the day when "the Lord buildeth up the breach of his people, and healeth their wound." The testimony of inspiration establishes the fact that this work of the Lord is manifested in the gospel day. It was for the accomplishment of this glorious work that our Lord humbled himself and rendered obedience under the law, and became obedient unto death. The law never was magnified by the obedience of any other subject of its demands. In the submission of Jesus it was made honorable by the observance of its divine Author, who bowed the heavens and came down, who was in the form of a servant, and learned obedience. Surely the light of that sun was perfect in the glory as signified by the use of the prophetic number seven. Throughout the prophetic records this number always indicates the complete fullness of the things to which it is applied. It is also worthy of special observation that the specification of this day, for the revelation of this infinite glory, implies the fact that the perfect light of holiness was never manifested in that law of Moses until it was shown in the obedience of Jesus. Indeed, there never was any light given to men by which to comprehend the righteousness of God in any law until the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus was revealed. When all was fulfilled in the death of the Lamb of God, then was the infinite glory of divine righteousness displayed, in that the Son of God was made sin for the justification of the members of his body. Thus it is written in the Psalms, "When the Lord shall build up Zion, he shall appear in his glory. He will regard the prayer of the destitute, and not despise their prayer. This shall be written for the generation to come; and the people which shall be created shall praise the Lord." Not in all the marvelous works of omnipotence is there anything which so glows with the brightness of all the perfections of our God as this miracle of his grace in which sinners under just condemnation are made holy and without blame before eternal justice in divine love. Truly this light is as the combined light of seven days, since in it is concentrated the consummation of all the eternal purpose of God, for which all things were created. All this infinite light is seen when by the grace of God his saints can say, "We see Jesus!"

SUPPLY NEARLY EXHAUSTED.

ALTHOUGH we printed a large extra edition of the first number of the present volume, our supply is now nearly exhausted. We therefore shall in a few days have to discontinue sending back numbers to new subscribers. Those first received first served, as long as the supply lasts.

PUBLISHING AND READING THE "SIGNS OF THE TIMES."

PUBLISHING or reading a paper the character of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES differs widely from that of secular publications. Our long connection with the editorial department of the paper has proved to us that in selecting matter for its columns we are dependent on the Lord to enable us to judge when and what to publish. If not supported by divine power we of ourselves can do nothing, and we have doubtlessly made many mistakes in admitting articles that have been of little or no profit to the children of God; also in leaving out some that would have been edifying and instructing. We are painfully aware of our fallibility, and feel grateful to our readers for their kind and christian forbearance with our shortcomings; but with such ability as it has pleased the Lord to give us we have endeavored to so conduct the paper as to be for the best good of Zion and to the glory of God. As we take a retrospective view of our editorial work we feel that were it not for the leniency of our brethren we should be discouraged. Realizing as we do how imperfect have been our efforts, it is indeed consoling to receive such letters as the one on our first page, from so able and gifted a minister of the gospel as our dear brother, F. A. Chick. It does not, however, altogether depend upon the ability given the editors, but much is due to the spirit given to the readers of the SIGNS, whether they are of comfort and instruction to them. It is not to be expected that every article in every paper will be read by all with the same deep interest. In fact, it is not unfrequently the case that a dear saint may read a communication and receive sweet comfort from it, and again upon referring to it find that they have not been given the spirit to read it that they had before. Indeed, the inspired word cannot always be read with the same sweet, soul-cheering consolation; then how can we expect the SIGNS, all of each and every number, to be of that deep interest which we might desire to have it? If you receive a number that appears particularly dull to you, perhaps hundreds of other readers may consider it one of the richest they have received for a long time. Have you ever read the paper for a whole year without finding even one article that seemed to you worth more than the price of the year's subscription? If not, can you afford to discontinue your paper?

Brethren, as we said in the commencement of this article, we are truly sensible of our imperfections; but if the SIGNS is defending the true principles of the "faith once delivered to the saints" it should receive your encouragement and support. If, however, the doctrine advocated in the paper is not satisfactory to any, we cannot give the least encouragement that there will be any change in that respect.

SEE SUPPLEMENT.

THE second paragraph of Supplement, beginning, "To every old subscriber," &c., should be interpreted to read, "and send the paper to the new subscriber for the year 1893." The rest of the circular we think is too clearly expressed to need any further explanation.

We most earnestly request our brethren and friends to consider the third paragraph, and assist us all they possibly can on the terms therein stated, and thereby enable us to publish the paper in 1894 on the terms mentioned in the latter part of the fifth and sixth paragraphs. If you did not receive your Supplement, or have lost it, you can, if you are a subscriber to the paper, obtain a revised copy by writing us to send you one.

If you are not so situated that you can give this matter the time and attention you would like to, perhaps you have some reliable friend that you could interest in the work. If so, you are at liberty to give him the Supplement, and let him act in your name.

MARCH 1ST, 1893.

WITH our issue for March 1st we propose, the Lord willing, to commence the publication of the Minutes of the proceedings and the resolutions drafted at the meeting of the brethren at Black Rock, Md., in 1832, at the time the division took place between the Baptists in the United States. After publishing the above we expect to run in serial form the able and powerful orations of Edward Irving before the London Missionary Board, May, 1824.

We at first anticipated commencing these articles with the beginning of the present volume; but as we are receiving each number such large accessions to our list of subscribers, we decided to delay their publication until the time mentioned above, in order to give an opportunity to as many as possible to have the articles complete.

IT IS VERY IMPORTANT

That great care should be taken in sending a renewal of subscriptions to give us the same name as the one to whom the paper is already coming. If the party is married be sure the initials are given correctly; for if the paper is coming in the wife's name and the husband writes us to send the paper the next year, and signs his own name, we have no means of knowing that the person to whom the paper is going is his wife; and not finding his name on our list he is entered as a new subscriber and the paper sent to both; or if the paper is going in the husband's name and the renewal sent on in the wife's name, the result will be the same. The best way is to inclose in your letter one of the little pink slips containing the name pasted either on the margin of the paper or on the wrapper in which it comes.

PLEASE DO NOT.

OUR subscribers are especially requested not to pay their subscriptions for the SIGNS OF THE TIMES to Postmasters to forward to us, as they generally deduct twenty or twenty-five per cent. from the amount and send us the balance, retaining the discount as their commission, and often sending what they do remit in postage stamps. We also caution our patrons against "Newspaper Agencies," as they deduct a like commission. It is a very simple matter for a subscriber to get a post-office money order or a postal note, inclose it in a letter, and direct it to us, or to put the money in the letter and have it registered; but where several are sending from the same office it is well to choose one of the number to send for all at the one time.

DONATIONS.

As may be seen by our published receipts, the brethren and friends are contributing with their usual liberality to the fund to enable us to send the paper to those brethren and sisters who are not able to pay for it, and yet love to read it. We doubt if there is any way the same amount of money could be expended to give as much real joy and true happiness, to as many, as is derived from the contributions to this fund. It is the poor and needy, as to this world's goods, that are the best capacitated to enjoy spiritual blessings.

PLEASE STOP MY PAPER.

AT least nine out of every ten writing us to discontinue their paper add that it is not on account of their objection to anything the paper contains, but that they are not financially able to continue it. We would ask all such if they have taken into consideration the amount they have economized by stopping their paper. It is less than four-sevenths of a cent a day.

body but themselves is saved. And they preached such a hard doctrine that I thought it was no wonder they were considered queer. I did not love them a bit, and thought I would never go among them again; but the very next time I got a chance to go, I could hardly wait until I could get there. I felt so much like going that it would have been very hard to stay at home. I used to wonder what made them love each other so dearly; for I have never seen that love in other churches. But it was not very long until I found out that I was loving them more than any other people I had ever seen. I did not love them because I wanted to, for I did not want to love them a bit. I feel it was the Lord that led me to love them and their doctrine of salvation by grace. I think I love them because they can tell how I feel, so much better than I could ever tell them. I have listened in amazement when you have been preaching, and you have told my feelings better than I ever could tell you. I have wondered how you ever found out what a sinful being I am. I thought that surely you nor any of the rest of them could feel so wicked. You all seemed to be so good that I longed to be like you. When I got to loving the Old School Baptists and their doctrine, I was almost afraid to go and hear any other denomination, for fear I would not see any difference between them. But I did go, and found there was a greater difference than I expected to find. It seemed to be all works. They do not give God the praise. They tell the people the Lord has done all he can, and expects them to do the rest; thus depending on their good works to save them. It is very natural, I know. I did try to save my own self, but was brought to feel and know how very helpless and wicked I was; when I felt myself sinking down, as it seemed, into the lowest depths; when I felt less than nothing, and felt that I could not pray. It seemed as if I could do nothing but groan at my sinful state, and long to be better. I cannot find words to express my feelings. I am all sin. Everything I think, do or say seems to be mixed with it. I have gotten so that I hate myself. I know if I am ever saved it will be the Lord that has done it, and not anything that I have done. I get more comfort out of your preaching than I do out of other denominations, because it suits my case. I wonder why they seem so kind to me at Rock Springs? for surely if they knew me as I know my own self they would not even look at me.

I am afraid I am forgetting all about your questions. I do desire to be a christian; but I feel so very different from what I think they ought to feel, that I am afraid I never will be one. I do love those that I believe are christians. I do think the Old School Baptists are the true church. Their doctrine seems to be the doctrine that Christ preached; and they do not take and fix it up to please the natural ear, but preach it in the way the Lord teaches them.

I want to tell you that I feel I did not do my duty on the last meeting day. I wanted to tell them so badly how I did feel; but something seemed to tell me that I was too vile to tell anything. I was afraid I could not say anything if I tried.

I feel that I have not written as I would like to, but have done the best I could. There is so much that I cannot tell, which I would like to; and I have made so many mistakes that I am very sick of this letter. I think you will excuse it, will you not? And will you write to me again? I will be very glad to get another letter from you.

Your friend,

NETTIE HAWK.

MC COYSVILLE, Pa., Nov. 23, 1892.

ELDER WM. GRAFTON—DEAR BROTHER:—It is with much hesitancy that I attempt to claim that near and dear relationship with any of the Lord's dear people. I did not think when we parted the last of October, and you asked me to write to you, that it would be so long before I would grant your request; but the only excuse I can give for not doing so is my ever-present feeling of unworthiness in writing to any of the Lord's dear people. I will try to tell you some of my feelings, if I do not tire you out. I am certainly the most ignorant, and less than the least of all. I know I am a sinner, and that in me (that is, in my flesh) dwells no good thing. But Jesus Christ came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance. And "this is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptance, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners, of whom I am chief." I feel myself a great sinner.

"All the fitness he requireth
Is to feel our need of him."

I feel that without him I can do nothing. He is the author and finisher of the faith of his people. All his poor and afflicted people believe that he is able to save them, and with the leper can say, "If thou wilt, thou canst make me clean." And his answer to the leper is his answer to all that call upon him till time shall be no more. He is the same yesterday, to-day and forever. It has been many years since I first saw a great difference between the Old School Baptist doctrine and the Arminian doctrine. The latter is of works. But I feel and know that if I am saved at all it will be through grace; for I feel and know that within myself I can do nothing. You may ask when I began to feel that way. I do not know. I never believed what I heard preached here among the denominations. I used to go and hear them, but could get no comfort there. I used to long for Elder Francis' visits to us, and was disappointed if he could not come up. I did not get to hear him unless he came up. I always stayed to keep house, and let father and mother go. I would wait anxiously for the SIGNS to come, and took great pleasure in reading the experiences of others that felt the same way I did. I used to read my Bible, but it seemed a sealed book to me. It seemed that none of the precious promises were for me. In the year 1889 I was called to mourn the loss of my dear husband and daughter within a month's time. In the midst of my despair these comforting words came to me, "Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth." I used to sit and think over my lonely condition. It seemed there was a great burden hanging over me, and I was the most miserable being in the world. I lost father, mother, husband and daughter within three years. I often thought of offering myself to the church, but never felt myself fit. I thought I would wait until I had better evidence. But I longed to be among God's dear people. I had so much love for the Old School Baptists that I could not stay away any longer. I feel to say with Ruth, "Entreat me not to leave thee, or to return from following after thee."

Well, dear brother, I will close this. Write to me. With love to you and family, I remain your unworthy sister, IDA M. HART.

BANCHESTER, Ohio, Dec. 9, 1892.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—As my subscription is about to expire I have concluded to write a few lines to my brethren and friends scattered throughout the land. I am now in my eighty-second year, somewhat feeble in body, and, of course, shattered in mind, and confined mostly about home. We have two aged women still left in our town, sisters Hampton and Legit, which is about all the company I have in a religious point of view. It is said, "There are lords many and gods many;" so we have religions many, a great diversity of sects, but all agreeing in the common idea of conditional salvation. We have so-called Means Baptists, Free Will Baptists, New School Baptists, Miami Baptists, Campbellite Baptists, and Tunker Baptists; all of which have been introduced into the country since my time. In looking over the fashionable changes which have taken place since my first recollection of the Baptists, I am often made to stumble; sometimes to grieve and fret in my lonely condition, and almost at times to try to fall in with some of them; but a still, small voice kindly whispers, "Will you also go away?" We were taught in our early days the complete sovereignty of God; that the unconditional election of the saints in Christ from eternity was a truth; that the members were chosen and blessed in him with all spiritual blessings before the world began; that by an act of sovereign grace all the members of Christ's mystical body were loved in him from everlasting; as we sing,

"Saved in the Lord, forever saved,
And in life's bundle bound."

That when on the cross he bowed his head, the great atonement was made; as it is written, "He was delivered for our offenses, and was raised again for our justification." Thus we were taught to believe in a full, complete and finished salvation; that in the time appointed of the Father the children of his promise are called by his grace from darkness to light; from the power of Satan to God; as Jesus has said, "I give unto them eternal life, and they shall never perish." Upon this foundation we rejoiced, and gloried in singing the song,

"Amazing grace! how sweet the sound!
That saved a wretch like me;
I once was lost, but now am found;
Was blind, but now I see."

But sad changes have taken place since then. The world, the flesh and Satan all seem to unite to scatter and divide the flock. When the New School made their raid upon us, in ignorance of their devices I concluded there were so few of us left that we would be left in peace, to enjoy ourselves in our weakness and ignorance; that none but sincere, honest souls, who could find no other resting place, would condescend to unite with so weak and despised a set; but alas! how easily we are deceived. Our adversary, the devil, has lost none of his cunning, and the nature of the flesh has not changed for the better. The world still loves its own, and the christian is obliged to accept the assurance that in the world they shall have tribulation.

But we have something new among what is called Old School Baptists. If I understand them their system is about this, with respect to salvation, that the salvation of the elect is complete and sure; that is, by an act of grace; that none of the elect will or can be finally lost; but our present salvation, peace and happiness, or comfort, depends upon our faithful obedience; that is, on our good works. That is all very well for people who are good and strong, and have full control of themselves, and can live above the world; who can command their thoughts from all evil, and live a spotless life. But such preaching is no comfort to a poor, sin-polluted creature, such as I find myself to be, entirely without strength, or anything good dwelling within me; often with a heart so cold, so unbelieving and hard that I sometimes feel it to be a sin to try to pray; in darkness that may be felt, while I try to compass me about with the sparks of my own kindling; often finding myself compelled to lie down in sorrow; struggling against the temptations of sin and Satan all the week. And when on Sunday, for a change, I have attended the meeting of "Job's friends," to see if I could get some comfort or relief, I have been told to deny myself, and do many things commanded christians to do, and then God would bless me, and save me from my many sorrows and afflictions. Like "Job's friends," they put that cruel "if" in my way, which Satan and self have been tormenting me with all the week, and I return bruised and wounded, saying, "Miserable comforters are ye all." Notwithstanding this plan appears so plausible, and so near the truth, there is no gospel in it for one so completely helpless as I find myself to be. Could I always have grace to trust in the name of the Lord, and lean upon God, those gospel pretenders would no longer trouble or harass my poor, hungry, thirsty soul, which longs to be with Jesus, and to be like him. But why complain? The good Shepherd has promised us that in this world we shall have tribulation. So if it must needs be, let us try to exercise patience, and experience will lead to hope, which will not make us ashamed; for it is the anchor of the soul. It is written, "If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable." Thus for sixty-four years of my unprofitable life I have been trying to live the life of a christian; have been trying to be good in order to get better; but I find myself no better. As I grow older I see more of my infirmities. Could I but walk by faith, and not try continually to walk by sight, how pleasant would my path be in my journey down the dark valley of death. Then could I trust fully in what the poet sings, "E'en down to old age all my people shall prove My sov'reign, eternal, unchangeable love;

And when hoary hairs shall their temples adorn,
Like lambs they shall still in my bosom be borne."

Nothing but the sin-atonement blood of the good Shepherd can put away our sins. Nothing but the sweet power of the Spirit of life, bestowed on us freely by sovereign grace, can reconcile us to the continued trials, temptations and disappointments which beset us on every side. But, brethren and sisters, we are informed that "our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." Remember that all the promises of God in Christ Jesus are yea and amen.

But few of my old associates and companions in tribulation remain in the flesh. I occasionally hear from the few that remain, or see in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES a word from them. Sister Jones, of Sharpsburg, and sister Ashbrook, both of Kentucky, and sister Rebecca M. Craft, of Sidney, Ohio, and occasionally a few of the old, superannuated veterans of the cross of Christ, still remain to bear witness to the truth of God's saving grace and matchless love to the children of men.

J. C. BEEMAN.

PATTERSON, Pa., Jan. 16, 1893.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—Please excuse me for not forwarding my remittance sooner. I expected to get a few more subscribers, but have failed in it, as real Old School Baptists are scarce in our section of country. As long as the good Lord spares me in this wilderness, I want the SIGNS. I would sooner deny myself the half of my daily natural food than be without the paper. It seems to me one must be very poor if they cannot spare two dollars to pay for such a valuable article as the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. I do believe I have never spent money in any other way that gave as good satisfaction and real value received. We hear from our kindred in Christ all over the country, and O what a comfort it is that each and every week we can sit down and hear from such loved ones, who have been taught in that glorious school of Christ, which is far above all man's wisdom. O how often do I fear I have never been taught in that school, because I seem so different from those I have reason to believe have been with Christ and learned of him. O how I love to read the experiences of those who have passed from death unto life. A few of these pieces are worth all the paper costs for a year. It makes me feel sad to think there are so many of the Lord's poor and afflicted people deprived of the reading of the SIGNS, on account of not being able to pay for it. Therefore I inclose five dollars, which you may appropriate to that purpose. It is not that I have lots of money to throw away. We work hard for every dollar. The good Lord has prospered us in this world's goods; and if we are what we profess to be, it is our duty to share with our brethren who have not been so highly favored in temporal things.

Yours in tribulation,
M. H. VARNES.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

My dear husband, Joshua L. Hardy, departed this life May 26th, 1892, at his home near Sinking Fork, Ky.

He was born in Montgomery Co., Tenn., Nov. 20th, 1827. When about ten years of age he with his parents moved to Trigg Co., Ky., where they lived thirteen years, and then moved to Christian Co., Ky., where he spent the rest of his days. He was married on Sept. 28th, 1854, to Miss Martha Sizemore. Nine children blessed our union, but only four are living. On June 5th, 1880, he joined the Primitive Baptist Church at Muddy Fork, Trigg Co., Ky., and always went to meeting when his health would admit. His health being such that he was not able to work, he spent most of his time in reading the Bible. About five years ago he was stricken with partial paralysis, from the effects of which he gradually declined in health until his death; but during all his afflictions he was kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation, and died as he had lived, a faithful husband, a kind father, a true friend, and a worthy member of the church. May Jesus, who binds up broken hearts and comforts mourning souls, soothe the sorrows of the dear ones left behind.

"Why do we mourn departing friends,
Or shake at death's alarms?
'Tis but the voice that Jesus sends
To call them to his arms."

MARTHA S. HARDY.

SINKING FORK, Ky., Jan. 27, 1893.

DIED—Jan. 28th, 1893, sister Margaret J. Campbell, wife of J. H. Campbell, of Cammal, Lycoming Co., Pa.

Her maiden name was English. She was born April 3d, 1836, and married to J. H. Campbell Dec. 28th, 1854. She leaves behind a devoted, sorrowful husband and ten children (four girls and six boys, all grown up), with other near relatives and the church at Cammal, of which she had been a member for about twenty years (Elder S. H. Durand baptizing her), to mourn their loss. We mourn with those that mourn the loss of our dear and much esteemed sister in Christ. May the God of all grace bless her husband (who is also a subject of grace, and loves God and his people, though not a member of the visible church) and the dear, sorrowful children, who feel deeply their loss of a kind and affectionate mother, with reconciled hearts and minds to their loss, which to her we believe is gain, for she longed to go and be with Jesus.

Her principal disease was dropsy, from which she suffered very much for a little more than a year. All was done for her that a devoted husband, children and neighbors could do to relieve and comfort her. She is now at home.

The writer of this notice tried to talk a little to a large company of friends on the occasion of the funeral, Jan. 30th; after which her body was laid away in the cemetery behind the meeting-house.

D. M. VAIL.

WAVERLY, Pa.

Our hearts quiver with pain, our pens falter, when we attempt to write of the lives of our parents who have passed over the river, whose farther waves lave the eternal shore.

Thomas Buchanan Yeates and Mary Ann Rutledge were married in July, 1834, in Lincoln Co., Tenn., and lived to see their golden wedding morn dawn on their thrice-blessed union. Our father, son of Elijah Yeates, was born Nov. 3d, 1812, in Tennessee, and joined the Primitive Baptist Church at Stuart's Creek in 1830. In 1836 he moved his membership to Mt. Moriah, in the same county, and in 1878 moved to Texas and cast in his lot with a little flock called by the old familiar church name, Mt. Moriah, in Johnson

Co. There he remained until the day of his death, which occurred Oct. 28th, 1892. He filled the offices of Deacon and Clerk thirty years, and was known among the brethren as "The peacemaker."

ALSO,

Mary Ann Rutledge Yeates, our mother, was born in Surry Co., N. C., Feb. 4th, 1816, and joined the same church to which our father belonged in 1866, and after moving to Texas she lived and died in the Mt. Moriah Church. King Solomon described her when he spoke of a woman whose price was far above rubies, and the heart of her husband doth safely trust in her. Her children rise up and call her blessed. They were both staunch Baptists, walking humbly as became the children of God. They have left us white flowers of their blameless lives to bloom in our hearts, and the tender memory of the best father and truest mother that children ever knew.

DORA V. RELLE.

MARSHALL, Texas, Jan. 4, 1893.

DIED—In Lambertville, N. J., on Jan. 25th, 1893, Richard H. Burroughs, aged 64 years and 6 months.

The subject of this notice had been a member of the Old School Baptist Church of Hopewell, N. J., about twenty-five years, during which time he was enabled by reigning grace to honor his profession by a well-ordered life, giving no just occasion to any one to speak reproachfully of his profession. He always filled his place in the meetings of the church when it was possible for him to do so; but for a number of years his health had been such that he was not able a part of the time to go away from home much. But the prosperity of the visible church was uppermost with him; and when his physical strength was sufficient for him to attend the meetings of the church for worship, or to transact any business, he always subordinated his worldly matters to his church obligations. We as a church feel our loss very much; but our dear brother will have no more worldly troubles. Of him it could justly be said, "For me to live is Christ, and to die is gain." He was paralyzed about a month ago, which doubtless was the immediate cause of his death; but when he passed away it seemed that he suffered no pain, but sank down as peacefully as a little infant "sobbing itself to rest on its mother's bosom." His beloved wife died two years ago last July, who was also a faithful member of the church; and since her death he has appeared very lonely and sad.

He has left one child (a son), one brother, one sister, cousins, nephews and nieces, as well as the church, to mourn the loss of one of the excellent of the earth. His funeral was on Saturday, the 28th inst.; and in compliance with his request the thirtieth Psalm was read, and remarks made on some verses, as he desired should be.

WM. J. PURINGTON.

HOPEWELL, N. J., Jan. 30, 1893.

Miss Mary Jane Baldwin died suddenly at her home near Hockessin, Delaware, Nov. 28th, 1892, in the 74th year of her age.

She was a sister of our friend, Mr. Thomas L. J. Baldwin, with whom she had always lived in the old homestead. She was in every way a most estimable woman, and we have no doubt was also a lover of the truth; and although she never made a profession openly, she in many ways gave evidence of a gracious experience. On Saturday and Sunday, the two days immediately preceding her decease, she attended the monthly meeting at London Tract, which she enjoyed greatly, having related to her brother and nephew much of the preaching, and expressed herself as enjoying the meetings. The sad event came without the least premonition, like bolt from a clear sky, as she had been in the enjoyment of apparently perfect health for some time, and was very bright and cheerful, engaging in conversation with the family until a few minutes before, when she went into the dining-room to prepare dinner. In less than two minutes her nephew, who was in the adjoining room, heard her fall, and running out, found her prostrate and unconscious. He raised her up, and she breathed her last almost immediately in his arms. This is a sad stroke to the family, and particularly so to her brother, who has been called to pass through many such trials in this life. Her character is well expressed in the following lines, quoted by her nephew in a letter recently received by me:

"She died as she had lived—beloved,
Without an enemy on earth;
In word and deed she breathed and moved,
The soul of honor and of worth."

She leaves one brother and two sisters, with numerous other relatives and friends. May the Lord comfort them.

A. B. FRANCIS.

WILLARD, Va., Jan. 24, 1893.

Mrs. Tennessee Texanna Scruggs departed this life Dec. 24th, 1892, aged 37 years, 8 months and 9 days.

Sister Scruggs was born in Rusk Co., Texas, April 15th, 1855, and was married to Wm. Scruggs Dec. 13th, 1874. She experienced a hope in Christ about the year 1888, and was received into the fellowship of the church at Gum Springs, Harrison Co., Texas, and baptized by the writer on the fourth Sunday in May, 1889. Her disease was said to be consumption. She had a spell of pneumonia and bronchitis nearly seven years ago, and was never very well any more. A cough followed, which terminated in consumption. She leaves a husband, seven children (four sons and three daughters), an aged mother and several other relatives, together with the little church at Gum Springs and many other friends, to mourn their loss; but all have the glorious consolation of believing that though their loss is great, her gain is far greater.

It was my privilege to be with her in the last hour. While looking upon her suffering form, and witnessing her resignation, her willingness, yea, her anxiety, to go and be at rest, the words kept running through my mind, "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints." Sister Mary Woodall writes me, "She was so patient and calm, hoping unto the end, and so longed for that sweet rest. She talked so much and so prettily about dying. It was her request that I should stay with her until the last moment. She also requested that her pastor be sent for as soon as she died, to hold short services at the burial. 'For,' said she, 'to go to my church meetings and hear preaching is my greatest enjoyment in this life.' When I went to see her on Saturday morning she said, 'Aunt Mary, I am nearly done suffering.' I said, 'You are still willing for the Lord's will to be done?' She said, 'O yes, I am more than willing; I am anxious to go. I am so tired, so weary! O when will that rest come?' I said, 'It will come.' 'O yes. Sweet, sweet rest; I long to go.' She seemed to be perfectly rational to the last. Her last words were, only a few moments before she breathed her last, 'Dear Jesus, relieve me.'"

Sister Scruggs manifested great love for the cause of her Master, being a sound and consistent Primitive Baptist, and always in her place at the meetings of the church when not providentially hindered. May the Lord comfort the bereaved, and enable us all to say, "Thy will, not ours, be done."

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date. This date denotes the time at which your subscription expires; and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE LORD'S WORK.

How different it is in every way from men's work. The principles of worldly religion of all kinds can be understood by all men, whether they believe in them or not, as can the principles of any worldly science or business, and its work can be seen and judged of by the natural mind. It is of the world, and is submitted to the judgment of worldly wisdom. "They are of the world," says the apostle; "therefore speak they of the world, and the world heareth them." Prosperity in worldly religion is estimated by the same rules that decide as to the prosperity of any worldly business. Religious prosperity, in this natural view, means that there is much zeal and activity among those who are engaged in it; much work done in trying to gain proselytes; much money raised to be used in the work; many induced to unite with the churches; many coming forward and offering to go into some field of work, either at home or abroad, where there is a sufficient remuneration offered. In the field of this kind of religion there is as much animation, stir, strife, emulation, competition, with as large interests in money, stocks and real estate, as in any other worldly business. A revival in this religion means that where these interests have declined, they are again awakened and brought into activity by some superior powers of persuasion, or by greater inducements presented to the natural mind.

The contrast to all this is seen in the manifestation of the Lord's work, which has just been the subject of my contemplation, as I sit here alone looking over the wide field of my acquaintance with living souls. I have been thinking of the many who have of late written me of their exercises, and of the many more who have done so in the past twenty-eight years, and of the many who have spoken to me or in my hearing, or whose expressions I have seen. How widely different the circumstances under which these expressions were given; yet they are the same. The same deep soul trouble; the same bitter sorrow on account of sin; the same self-reproach and self-aborrence; the same sad certainty that there can be no hope for one so vile and sinful, yet the same humble cries for mercy; the same settled hatred of sin, and tenderness of conscience made sore by its effects, and shrinking from it; the same wonder when a hope springs up in the wounded and contrite heart; the same expressions of astonishment that they could dare to think that a holy God could love such a poor, miserable sinner; the same sweet feelings of praise and thankfulness and love to the dear Savior, mingled with questioning fears whether they may not have been deceived in thinking that so unspeakable a blessing can possibly be theirs.

Sometimes, though alone, I have a most comforting meeting with those whose words, spoken or written lately or years ago, come to my mind; and I would love to tell them, if I could see them, and they still were in need of the encouraging and comforting word, that the depth of sorrow and self-aborrence and bitter anguish which called forth that sad and hopeless cry from their poor hearts is the very thing that distinguishes them as the children of God, as belonging to that great company of the Lord's redeemed, of whom he says, "They shall come with weeping, and with supplication will I lead them;" and who, having come "out of great tribulation," shall stand in robes of white before the great white throne in full and satisfying joy and blessedness.

One of this great company, so distant from each other in time and earthly location, and so different in circumstances, that I am now thinking of, I have never seen. She has struggled along through sickness of body and terrible afflictions of soul, hungering for righteousness, and hating false religion; mostly alone in her soul travel, those nearest and dearest by natural ties unable to understand her feelings, and vexed, perhaps, at her words and ways that appear so strange. Her letters for the past six months tell a story that would be of great interest and comfort to the family of God. She still suffers, and in the last letter tells me that she has seemed near the end, and may soon be taken. She longs to hear some one speak who knows of these wonderful things, expresses the deep, delighted interest of a child of God in the precious word, repeats verses from hymns of praise, and shows how precious the gospel is to her, and how sweet and refreshing it would be to hear it preached, which has never been her privilege, at least since she has felt the movings of divine life, and to be favored with the privilege of following her dear Savior in baptism, and of sitting down as one of the family in the church of the living God. I wonder what the Lord's will is concerning her. How gladly I would go to her, and to any such, as would any of the sent ministers of Jesus Christ, to minister the word for her comfort, and to administer the ordinances to her in the fellowship of the church of God; but the Lord "will send by the hand of him by whom he will send, and speak" for the comfort of all his scattered little ones "by the hand of him by whom he will speak." He is the Shepherd, and none of his flock shall want.

Another of that company I have been thinking of was a young man in active business when, many years ago, he wrote in the depths of trouble. After having been long burdened with his sins he had experienced, as he thought, a hope. Then he had again fallen deeply in sin; and his expressions of anguish of soul, bitter lamentations, and fears that he could not be a subject of grace, I can never forget. How sorely and absolutely alone one feels in such a case; and yet how great the company of those who hear their humble confessions with tender, solemn joy and affectionate sympathy, because of a like experience. This man has long been a member of the church, a living, exercised member.

I thought I might briefly make mention of a number of those who come before me in memory, who have in such widely different situations expressed in some striking way the common experience of the saints, in telling concerning themselves what appeared to them to show that they did not belong to the family of God, and who have struck the chords of that harp of God which only the redeemed of the Lord ever possess, while expressing that praise and thankfulness to God which it seems to them no one can ever have such occasion to render as they, because the goodness and grace of God, they are sure, never could have been extended before to so great a sinner; but I cannot even mention them. In each case the field of gospel wonders is too wide to go over. Some are ministers who have spoken to the comfort of thousands, and who are now right sure that they are fruitless branches, barren fig trees, worthless servants. Others are little children, who can only say, "I love to go to meeting, and hear the preaching, and I wish I could be baptized." Strange that in all the different cases and circumstances there seems to be something that suits my feelings, and draws out my heart in love and fellowship to the one who writes or speaks.

But I thought when I began to write that I would speak of the work of the Lord, and of what prosperity is in that work. Well, this is the Lord's work, this painful knowledge of sin; this hatred of evil and hungering after righteousness; these vain efforts to do anything that can merit the favor of God; this wonderful revelation to our souls of a righteousness without works; of a love that the Lord had for us before the world began, which he has now shed abroad in our hearts; of a salvation not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy, by the death and resurrection of Christ, washing us from all sin, and by the renewing of the Holy Ghost in the birth of the Spirit. "This is the Lord's work, and it is marvelous in our eyes." But it is without noise in the world, and cannot be heard or seen by men. It "cometh not with observation." It "is within you." It is like the wind, felt but not seen, coming we know not whence, and going we know not whither, but doing the will of God effectually. Here also is spiritual prosperity, which is not, like prosperity in the world, shown in gratified desires, increase of goods, success in work, a feeling of strength, and of confident ability to still succeed in our business, and to keep on in the path we are traveling, but in sighs and groans that cannot be uttered; in continued failures in all our efforts to perform that which is good, so that we lose all confidence in ourselves; in feeling the buffetings of Satan's messengers, the aggravating manifestations of our evil propensities, and stirrings up of the hidden corruptions of our hearts, till we are forced to cry out to the Lord for mercy; in hoping when there appears no good reason why we should hope, but abundance of reasons in ourselves why we should not; in being emptied from vessel to vessel, plagued all the day long and chastened every moment, yet still trusting in the Lord, and loving the things that belong to his kingdom so well that there is a sweetness and joy in the feeling of that love, even with all this bitterness of self-aborrence, that we prize beyond all the joy this world could give.

The scriptural examples of spiritual prosperity are Lazarus at the rich man's gate; the publican in the temple, with eyes cast down, crying for mercy, and confessing himself a sinner; the three in the fiery furnace; Peter, no longer strong and self-confident, but humbled, shamed, heart-broken, outside of the house, alone in the darkness, weeping bitterly; Paul and Silas in prison at midnight, praying and singing praises to God; Paul, worn out with the pain of the thorn in the flesh, and with crying and struggling, in utter weakness, hearing the sweet words, "My grace is sufficient for thee, for my strength is made perfect in weakness."

The weaker we feel as to all spiritual strength, and the more destitute of all righteousness in ourselves, the more do we value the precious revelation of the truth that Jesus is the strength and righteousness of his people, and the more fully is our trust in him. The more our weakness and sinfulness and helplessness are felt in our souls the more do we "grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." The greater our hunger the more eager is our search for food; the stronger our love the more impatiently do we press toward the object of it. The more we feel of the dying of the Lord Jesus the more is his life made manifest in our mortal bodies. The less we esteem ourselves the more highly do we esteem our brethren, and the more careful we are that our love for them may appear in all our words and actions. These things are evidences of spiritual prosperity in the church, and in the individual child of God.

POMEROY, Wash., Jan. 5, 1893.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN IN CHRIST:—This being my fiftieth birthday, I have a desire to write to you, and to all the household of faith; that is, if after you have read it you think it worth the trouble of preparing for the press, and worthy of space in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. The expression of Paul the apostle seems to express my feelings now, better than I can find words to express them, where he says, "By the grace of God I am what I am." Had I the pen of a ready writer, O how I would like to set forth the praise, the honor and glory that is due to him, who hath all power in heaven and earth; who commands, and it stands fast; who speaks and it is done; who has given to man the bounds of his habitation; who hath directed all our steps; who hath led us about and instructed us, and kept us. Yes, his almighty power, although oft unseen nor realized at the time, has been round about us, to shield us from the many seen and unseen dangers we have been called to pass through. There are many events of my life that come up before me here. I will speak of two of them. In the spring of 1862, while I was in the army, and in camp near Kansas City, the word was brought to camp that Quantrell and his band were in the neighborhood. All the regiment was ordered out, except those on duty. Just as I had my horse saddled and equipped, ready to fall into line of march, my father came into camp to see me. He had come about sixty miles. There was a young man belonging to our company who was on camp guard, and who wanted to go on the trip very badly. On seeing my father come in, he ran to me and proposed an exchange of duty. In order to be with my father, I told him I would exchange if he could get permission from the captain. We got the permit just as the company was falling into line. That night they got into a skirmish, and on the next day the poor boy was brought back wounded, and died in a few days. It looks like it just happened that my father came to the camp, and like it just happened that this young man wanted to go very badly. But I am here to-day, while the young man was called away. I feel that God, who hath ordered our steps, appointed the means that I should be spared, and that I should be enabled to see it alone by his will and purpose that I was spared.

The next event that I will mention occurred in the fall of 1863, while in camp near Fort Smith, Arkansas. One beautiful morning, from some cause which I could not tell, I was weighed down with a heavy burden. I wanted to be alone, and away from the noise of camp; and as I thought I had upon me what we called "graybacks," I wandered off nearly half a mile from camp, into a thicket of sassafras. I cannot describe my feelings while there, nor tell why I felt so. I examined my clothing and found I was not mistaken. I remained there in meditation, and in cleansing my clothing, until nearly noontime, when I wandered back to camp. When I got there I was put under arrest and on extra duty for a couple of hours, for being absent without leave. An order had been sent to our company for six men to carry a despatch, and I was one of the number detailed to go; but not being there, another was taken in my place. I did my extra duties without complaint, and thought no more about the matter. But after a few days word was brought to camp that all the six men had been ambushed and killed.

I might refer to many more incidents of my life in which it seemed that the overruling providence of God countermanded the commands of men, and thereby I was spared. O how little I thought it was God's Spirit directing my steps and directing me into that thicket, and there detained me by the "graybacks," as we called them, until the danger had passed that was crossing my path of life. So, dear brethren, when I look over my sojourn here, it seems I can see that God, who created all things for himself, has used even the little, despised insect in the preservation of my life. Truly "By the grace of God I am what I am." Thus, referring to my natural life and present condition, I do feel that it is alone by God's mercies and grace that I am here to-day. How well does the poet describe my present feelings, saying,

"Through many dangers, trials and snares
I have already come;
'Tis grace has led me safe thus far,
And grace will lead me home."

When I think of my hopes and prospects, of my interests in the kingdom of God, I can claim nothing else "But by the grace of God I am what I am." For when I call to mind all that I have done, I can see nothing that I have done to merit the least of God's favors; but to the reverse. It seems that sin has been mixed with all I have done. After fifty years of life, and thirty-six years, as I hope, in the school of Christ, I have learned that there is nothing good I can do; for I have tried every way possible to overcome this old carnal nature of mine, and to subdue sin in my flesh; but I have made a perfect failure in this. Therefore I am made to know that "the law is spiritual; but I am carnal, sold under sin." And "I know that in me (that is in my flesh) there dwelleth no good thing; for to will is present with me; but how to perform that which is good I find not. For the good that I would, I do not; but the evil which I would not, that I do. I find then a law, that when I would do good, evil is present with me. For I delight in the law of God after the inward man; but I see another law in my members, warring against the law of my mind, and bringing me into captivity to the law of sin which is in my members." I am made to cry, "O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" Thus I learn that I have fellowship with the apostle; and not only this, but when I call to mind the many trials and conflicts that God in his providence has called his people to pass through, and the declaration of our Savior that in this world they shall have tribulation, and that he was a man of sorrow and acquainted with grief, and went a mourner all his days, I feel to hope that I have fellowship with his sufferings, and am acquainted with the way he has led his people. But if I were a free moral agent I would lead a different life. I would either be plunging into sin, or would be living without any of those conflicts or sin. I would not be a man of sorrow and acquainted with grief. I would do the things that I desire. I would not be a wretched man. O how different are God's ways from man's ways. I have learned that instead of man being a free agent, "it is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that sheweth mercy." Then, dear brethren, realizing this truth, that our salvation is not dependent upon our will or works of obedience to the law, but on God's grace and mercy, we take comfort in Paul's gospel, "By grace are ye saved, through faith; and that not of yourselves; it is the gift of God. Not of works, lest any man should boast." Thus we are enabled to rejoice in Christ Jesus, and have no confidence in the flesh. But the question arises sometimes, while meditating on these things, Why am I blessed with this grace above those my equals in the flesh? I am always without an answer to this question, only as I can find one in God's written word. I cannot tell why I should be moved to wander off into a thicket, while another, my equal in the flesh, should be taken and suffer death in my stead. I cannot tell why God should save me, and call me with a holy calling, and that not according to my works, but according to his purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began. No, dear brethren, there are many things for which I cannot give a reason why they should be. I cannot tell why there should be war. I cannot tell why God should make lice; but he did, and they got upon me, and I am here to-day; for what purpose I cannot tell. But God has a purpose in all things, for he made all things, "whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers: all things were created by him and for him." But what all things were made for I cannot tell, only for him that made them. I cannot tell why evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived. I cannot tell why in the latter day men of our own selves shall arise, speaking perverse things. I cannot tell why there shall be false teachers among the people. I cannot tell why these things are so; but it is so, and must be so, for God has said by his servant that it shall be so. But there is one thing Paul says we do know, and that is, "All things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose." This we can know only as God is pleased to instruct us by the Holy Ghost.

I find that my letter is getting quite lengthy, and I have failed to write what I wanted to. I must try to come to a close; but I want to speak of something I know. I know it is by the grace of God I am what I am. If I know nothing of the love of God, and of his grace given in Christ, I know that it is by his mercies I am here now, and that I am what I am. When I see so many things seemingly adverse to my good, the question is, Do I love him? Am I one of the called of God? If so, why am I thus? I am made to search for evidence. Many questions arise in my mind, such as, Why do I hate sin? Why have I no confidence in myself? Why cannot I enjoy myself as others seem to, and as I once did; that is, in the pleasures of this world? And then, why do I love those who are of a God-fearing spirit, and that shun every appearance of evil? Why do I so love the brethren that I am made willing at times to forsake all else for their comfort? Why do I so earnestly crave righteousness and true holiness? When I am enabled to examine these, with many other witnesses, I am constrained to say, "Yea, Lord, thou knowest that I love thee;" and in this I am sometimes enabled to see where all those adverse things work for my good, in causing me to search more earnestly for truth, and enabling me to see God's way of instructing his people.

Now, brethren Beebe, I will close by saying that I have been requested to write for the SIGNS; but owing to my blundering way of writing, and my weakness in being unable to write what I want to, I have delayed until the present. As I wanted to write and send you a new subscriber, I thought I would write as best I could, and you could act your pleasure in publishing it.

LIGHT.

WE read that "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth. And the earth was without form, and void; and darkness was upon the face of the deep. And the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters. And God said, Let there be light, and there was light." So we see that without light all the creation would have been void and incomplete, or of no value. Without it the face of the earth could not appear; neither could have been seen, realized nor enjoyed any of the works of creation. There could have been no living, growing plant, and hidden forever would have been all the beauties revealed by the pleasant light. Well may we sing as each evening draws on,

"Glory to thee, my God, this night,
For all the blessings of the light."

Again, we read, "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. The same was in the beginning with God. All things were made by him, and without him was not anything made that was made. In him was life, and the life was the light of men." Here we find is another light, as it were, the light of another world or kingdom. In nature we cannot see the first light spoken of until born a natural birth; and all born into this world see this light, and the things revealed by it, according to the strength of vision given unto them. So in order to see that light, or the life, which is the light, we must be born again. The eyes of the understanding must be enlightened. Sometimes we think we see this light according to the strength of the vision given. So let a trembling one, who hardly dares claim to be a subject of the new birth, remember that if they but catch a glimpse of this light, if they but understand the language of this kingdom, they are just as much born again as those who have a stronger vision. The natural light can visit all the surface or exposed places of the earth; but this light can penetrate the depths of the heart and reveal to the possessor of it its hidden secrets, whether they be joys or sorrows. "For God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ;" in the face of him who is the life and light of men. Unless God does so shine in our hearts and give us this light, we know we can never see the light of the celestial world; and always let us remember that that light is "the Lord God and the Lamb." If once we have seen this light, and felt this life, it can never be forgotten. Though darkness may return, and many a cloud close down upon our spiritual vision, yet we know that away off in the deep sweet somewhere the light is still shining. How dreadful it would be to feel there was no light anywhere. But we know we have seen and felt it, and often we can remember where it first came to us; and then again we may not have noticed how gradually the darkness faded away, and all things grew light unto us. We only know "The darkness is past, and the true light now shineth." Whether it come upon us as the gentle dawning of a summer morning, or burst upon us as from out a thick cloud, it is the same true light. It may be our pathway will be continually through light and shade. How sadly and bitterly we can remember the dark places, where the heavy darkness fell upon us, and it seemed we were never to see the pleasant light again. Yet were our eyes continually toward him who is the light. The groanings of our hearts have been, "O that I knew where I might find him." Weary with darkness, weary of the long, long night, O how we wish for day. How we long for the light of his countenance to be lifted upon us. We dread the hidings of his face. The light of his countenance reconciled, assuring us that his wrath is passed away, and his face is being turned toward us with favor, is so precious unto us. We can tell when a friend or brother is estranged from us by his countenance. If one's countenance is fallen, it betokens displeasure. Even though we cannot see them, yet if heretofore our communications together have been pleasant, and then grow cold or estranged, we know their countenance is changed toward us. So with our heavenly Friend. If we feel his presence withdrawn, if the light is shadowed, we begin to mourn and to search ourselves. What have we done? Where have we wandered? O that he would lift upon us the light of his countenance. It is the element in which our souls live. Often we think of the hour of death, which must surely come to us all.

What a dark hour it would be if there were no light, only what this earth affords. Not all the light of the great burning sun can lighten the tomb. Not one single ray can penetrate the dark shadow of death. We know our eyes must close in blindness and darkness upon all things here. But if we only have that "inner vision" that can look through the dark shadows, how happy we shall be. If when the last enemy takes hold upon us we can but have the eye of faith fixed upon him who is our life and light, how wonderfully favored we shall be. Often the mind goes back to the places where the light has fallen upon us, where we have been strengthened by it. It may come by a portion of the word. We may be but carelessly reading, though bowed with sorrow, thinking, perhaps, we will find relief in looking at the "sure word of prophecy," as into "a light that shineth in a dark place;" and as we search, some place is made to comfort us, to lighten our sorrow. Some time ago I read where our Savior in the garden prayed alone, and sank, as it were, with the burden that was upon him. "And there appeared an angel from heaven strengthening him." Could it be that he who was a child born, and yet the mighty God, could need strength from above? How near I drew to him in that hour, as I felt the truth of this. I am so weak, so constantly "without strength." In due time did he die for me? And before he died, did he experience that sense of weakness that he could be strengthened by an angel from heaven? I loved to read it over, and ponder it over and over. I loved to believe that it was literally and really "an angel from heaven." My mind is so tormented with vagaries, often questioning realities, so that when something seems a reality I rejoice in it. I recall a season of great trouble and darkness that came upon us nearly two years ago, when what we regarded as our chief joy was thrown in such distress that it seemed like there was none to help. Yet we could cry unto him, even with a great and living cry unto him whom we knew and felt to be mighty to save; and when at last the time came that some change was to come for us, how we trembled for the result. At the time, the literal heavens had been for days darkened by such scowling, threatening clouds, almost making our darkness of sorrow more oppressive; and just as by an unseen power and presence all things were so smoothly, peacefully and easily arranged for our good. As all things were concluded, just at the close of day, the clouds all vanished from the skies, and the setting sun shone with a smiling beauty, and the quietness and peace of heaven were all around us. All spoke of it, and the peace and light in my long troubled heart were so great that I slept not that night. It seems that the time must come around for us to tell of the great deliverances of our God. If we conclude in our own minds to let them pass unnoticed, we are brought to tell of them almost against our will.

I am again recovering from a most distressing illness, and it is seldom I have much spiritual light during sickness. My mind sinks with the affliction, and I go down to the depths, crushed in body and mind. How long the dark, cold mid-winter nights have seemed to me. How dark were the midnight hours in the midnight of the year. How earnestly would I watch for the least ray of morning light. All sufferers will say their sufferings are more intense in the night. And so it is with the soul's sorrow. No tongue can tell our anguish as we watch the shadows coming on, nor how we peer so earnestly through the felt darkness for one faint ray of the morning star. Yet in sickness I will sometimes have a little comfort. One night as the hour had turned toward morning I awoke from my weak, sick sleep, and thought I could hear our pastor and people singing the last hymn I had heard them sing. I thought I also sang with them; and for hours, in my weak, half-lucid state, I thought we sang or kept singing. All of the hymn I could remember were these two lines,

"To find at the banquet of mercy there's room,
And feel in the presence of Jesus at home."

I did not wish to remember any more. Just those two lines did so much cheer and comfort me as I kept revolving them in my mind for hours.

"To find at the banquet of mercy there's
room,
And feel in the presence of Jesus at home."

Dear reader, will you not keep and revolve them in your mind, and see if their sweetness and fullness will not come to you as they did to me?

"To find at the banquet of mercy there's room,
And feel in the presence of Jesus at
home."

G. BEEBE'S SONS—VERY DEAR BRETHREN:—As I have been somewhat negligent in my remittance for our paper, the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, I wish to ask your pardon for such delay, and wish also to say to you that I am glad we have such a blessed way by which we are brought very near together. I referred to the SIGNS as our paper; and indeed I believe it is; for you open its pages for all lovers of truth. I sometimes have a little hope that I love the truth for the truth's sake. I think that each and every reader of your valuable publication should feel a oneness for its success all over the land. For the truth, whether written or spoken, are we not made to rejoice in it? Do we not feel to

REVIVAL OF THE WIDOW'S SON.

DEAR BRETHREN:—Will you, when convenient, please give your views on the text, 1 Kings xvii. 21, 22? Yours in hope,

R. A. ROBERSON.

CAMPBELLSBURG, Ky., Dec., 1892.

REPLY.

"And he stretched himself upon the child three times, and cried unto the Lord and said, O Lord my God, I pray thee, let this child's soul come into him again. And the Lord heard the voice of Elijah; and the soul of the child came into him again, and he revived."—1 King xvii 21, 22.

While alwas desirous of gratifying the wishes of brethren who desire our views upon any portion of the doctrine of God our Savior, it is not without painful consciousness of the need of divine guidance that we endeavor to comply with such requests. It is not difficult for ingenious minds to construct a beautiful commentary upon the sublime language of inspiration. By such vain fancies many men have gained a high place in the estimation of their fellows as wonderfully gifted expositors of the hidden mysteries of the Scriptures. All expositions must perish with their authors and admirers, unless they have their origin in the same revelation by which holy men of old spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost. The infallible test by which all religious teaching must be tried is found in the inspired record itself. "To the law and to the testimony; if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."—Isa. viii. 20. Every incident and statement of the word of the Lord is the testimony of Jesus; "For the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy."—Rev. xix. 10. So our Lord directed the persecuting Jews to their own records, saying unto them, "Search the Scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life; and they are they which testify of me."—John v. 39. Therefore, however plausible may be the interpretation of any text, it is not the truth of God unless it presents Jesus. The word of inspired truth never was designed to gratify the curiosity of the carnal mind, nor for the assistance of reason in grasping the mysteries of natural science. This incident in the ministry of the prophet Elijah is of interest to the saints in all ages only as they are enabled to see in it the testimony of salvation in Christ Jesus. While there can be no question that the literal circumstance occurred just as it is stated in the account given by inspiration, the facts recorded when interpreted by the Spirit of truth preach the gospel of the grace of God in the deliverance of the election of divine love from death under the law, and their being quickened by the life of Christ in them the hope of glory.

Time and space would fail to dwell upon all the particular circumstances connected with the incident in the record of which our text is a portion. It will only be possible to call the attention of our brother to some of the points of truth contained in this very striking declaration of the sovereign power of God in the bestowal of his favor. In the fact that no explanation is given concerning Elijah further than that he was of the inhabitants of Gilead, is shown that it is not for his own honor that he was enabled to speak the word of divine truth. There may be deep meaning also in the fact that he was "of the inhabitants of Gilead," which is defined as signifying "heap of witness." Every servant of our God is of the same nativity. Being born in this impregnable hill of Zion, all the messengers of divine truth are sustained and defended by the power of God, so that no adversary shall ever be able to prevail against them. Even though they may be "appointed unto death" by the malice of their adversaries, they still have the victory through the triumphant Captain of their salvation. The murdered Abel being dead yet speaketh, and the tortured martyrs of the cross still shout with ecstatic notes the praises of him by whose blood they are made to be more than conquerors over death and hell. The stroke which releases them from this mortal state of bondage cannot destroy that life which is hid with Christ in God; and though their vital blood is poured out under the malice of their enemies, the truth of their testimony still survives and shines in the glorious heaven of eternal day. Even their afflictions are made by the grace of their Lord to attest their unity with their Redeemer in all the way by which he has led his chosen people. Not one of all the sorrows under which they groan in their earthly house of this tabernacle, but has its part in qualifying them to bear witness of the infinite glory of that grace by which they are made to rejoice in the victory of Jesus. Who that believes the Scriptures can question the purpose of God in all the circumstances connected with this miraculous display of divine power? Doubtless the widow had thought that the Lord had forgotten her when she was left to mourn in poverty and bereavement. Finite reason could see nothing but distress in the loss of her husband and in the famine by which she had been reduced to such straits that she was just ready to make a little food for herself and son of the last meal in a barrel and the last oil in a cruse, which seemed to be all that intervened between them and starvation. Only by faith could she have consented to provide of that little supply first for the prophet before satisfying the wants of her son and herself. Yet the same unerring wisdom by which Elijah was directed, made the widow obedient to the word of the Lord by the prophet. There was no more famine for the prophet and the house into which he was received. But there was yet a severe ordeal appointed for these favored subjects of divine election. The son of this poor widow was stricken with sickness so that there was no breath left in him. Then Elijah himself cried unto the Lord, and said, "O Lord my God, hast thou also brought evil upon the widow with whom I sojourn, by slaying her son?" Two points are especially worthy of observation in this verse. First, the prophet does not tell the Lord that some enemy has slain the son of the widow. He recognizes it as the act of the same Lord whom he calls, "My God." Neither does he speak of it as being done merely by the "permissive decree" of the Lord. Notice particularly his language. Secondly, the prophet could no more understand the dark dispensation than could the bereaved widow. It seemed to him that she was made to suffer for her kindness to him. There is rich assurance and comfort here for all who are called to pass through deep waters of affliction. When all is darkness and grief in our experience, when our last earthly refuge has failed, and when despair seems about to shut out our last expectation of relief, then we can have fellowship with the experience of this widow when Elijah was sent to her. The wonderful intervention of God in her deliverance can only be appreciated by those whose experience has attested the same unexpected display of the omnipotence of God in their own translation out of darkness and bondage into the light and liberty of the sons of God. But in the subsequent trial in the death of her only son it seemed that the mercy of the Lord had been withdrawn from her, and the prophet felt himself to be involved in the painful dispensation. In this unity of feeling in the afflictions of the widow to whom the Lord had sent him, the prophet represents the eternal and indissoluble unity of our Redeemer with the whole body of his chosen people. "For he said, Surely they are my people, children that will not lie; so he was their Savior. In all their afflictions he was afflicted, and the angel of his presence saved them; in his love and in his pity he redeemed them; and he bare them and carried them all the days of old."—Isa. lxiii. 8, 9. While this is readily confessed in its application to the whole election of grace, it is often denied in its application to each of the saints in their personal experience. From this record it is evident that the prophet was troubled with the same distrust of the mercy of the Lord, which caused the bereaved mother to complain; and the apostle positively declares that this is true. "Elias [Elijah] was a man subject to like passions as we are."—James v. 17. Unbelief prevents the saints from resting in the assurance which is afforded by the bright examples left on record in the Scriptures for our learning. While the purpose of God is clearly shown in the case under consideration, since the record is completed, it should be remembered that to the mother and to the prophet before it was brought to pass, that purpose was as completely hidden as is the mystery of his providence now attending our own pathway. Indeed, the full significance of the events here written was never known to mortals until all was fulfilled in the revelation of the gospel day.

In the statement that the prophet "stretched himself upon the child three times," there may be a reference to the revelation of the life-giving power of God in the three dispensations of time. The record bears witness that Abel was moved by the faith of Christ to offer his bleeding lamb as the figure of that Lamb of God who should bear the sins of the whole world of those who were chosen in him before the foundation of the world. The very same grace brought salvation to the saints under the legal dispensation. And in that grace all who believe in Jesus are made to rejoice in this day of gospel light and liberty. This use of the number "three" is often repeated in the Scriptures, always indicating the fullness of that to which it is applied. But of that significance it is not expedient now to extend the consideration. It will strike the thoughtful reader as remarkable that there was need for Elijah to "stretch himself" to reach the measure of the child. But this is also recorded of the restoration of the Shunamite widow's son, upon whom Elisha stretched himself, "and put his mouth upon his mouth, and his eyes upon his eyes, and his hands upon his hands."—2 Kings iv. 34. Only by the power of divine grace can any servant of the Lord be qualified to thus manifest the Spirit of Christ by humbling himself to be less than the least of all saints. In such esteeming others better than themselves the disciples of Jesus are but following him. Though he is Master and Lord, yet he made himself the Servant of the least of all his chosen saints. In humiliation, as in everything else, it pleased the Father that Jesus should have the pre-eminence.

In the prayer of Elijah is presented the abiding confidence of faith, in marked contrast with that presumptuous pride which moves men to direct the Lord to do what they will have done. The prophet does not claim that the Lord is under obligation to restore the life of the dead child in consideration of the faithfulness and devotion which he had manifested in proclaiming his truth. Neither does he intimate that the Lord will be profited in the granting of the favor for which he applies. He said, "O Lord my God, I pray thee, let this child's soul come into him again." The very petition gives evidence of the confidence of faith. Less than divine power could not grant the favor asked; and only the full assurance of faith could pray for it. But this prayer was dictated by the Spirit of truth, and all such intercession is according to the will of God. Consequently, "The Lord heard the voice of Elijah; and the soul of the child came into him again, and he revived." While those who think the Lord altogether such an one as themselves may understand that the suggestion of the restoration of the child's soul, or life, originated with the sympathy of Elijah for the bereaved mother, those who know the immutability of the counsel of God will recognize in this case the guidance of that Spirit of truth which works in the saints the desire for every blessing which God has prepared for them that wait for him. James refers to the prayer of Elijah as illustrating the power of the prayer of faith. There is no power in creatures to command this prayer. Only they who are led by the Spirit know anything of it. It is manifestly absurd to suppose that one can be led by the Spirit to ask anything at variance with the eternal will of God.

The reviving of the child was not subject to the decision of his own will, since he was completely passive in the whole transaction. It is not said that life was offered to him; neither was his mother consulted in the case. No doubt she was bitterly grieved at the loss of her son; but there is no evidence that her grief was any greater than that of other bereaved mothers. It was the will of God to show in this instance a shadow of that great grace by which the bars of death should be broken in the revelation of immortality in Christ Jesus, the antitypical son of the mourning widowed Zion; and as the effect of this marvelous display of omnipotence was to give assurance of the truth to the mother, so by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead the faith of every saint is established in the faithfulness and truth of the everlasting covenant, in which the life of the whole body of Christ is forever secured in his own immortality. For the comfort of every afflicted and poor sinner whose hope is in him alone, Christ Jesus is risen, and become the first-fruits of them that slept. So also them that sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. This glorious hope of immortality in Christ is the crowning victory of the faith of the Son of God. In a type this doctrine is declared in the subject embracing our text. Yet it was only faintly portrayed even in the miraculous reviving of the dead son of the widow. That reviving only gave back the perishing breath which had departed. The gift of eternal life was not manifestly revealed until in the resurrection of our crucified Redeemer it was brought to light through the gospel. In that newness of life the members of the body of Christ are alive forevermore beyond the power of death. The Captain of our salvation was the First-born from the dead in this glorious resurrection; and all his saints are in that sense risen with him.—Col iii. 1.

Fully aware that there is much glorious truth contained in the text to which we have not been able to call attention, we must submit what is written to the consideration of brother Roberson and all our readers, with the earnest wish that the attention of some of them may be directed to the further discussion of the subject through the columns of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

SEE SUPPLEMENT.

THE second paragraph of Supplement, beginning, "To every old subscriber," &c., should be interpreted to read, "and send the paper to the new subscriber for the year 1893." The rest of the circular we think is too clearly expressed to need any further explanation.

We most earnestly request our brethren and friends to consider the third paragraph, and assist us all they possibly can on the terms therein stated, and thereby enable us to publish the paper in 1894 on the terms mentioned in the latter part of the fifth and sixth paragraphs. If you did not receive your Supplement, or have lost it, you can, if you are a subscriber to the paper, obtain a revised copy by writing us to send you one.

If you are not so situated that you can give this matter the time and attention you would like to, perhaps you have some reliable friend that you could interest in the work. If so, you are at liberty to give him the Supplement, and let him act in your name.

MARCH 1ST, 1893.

WITH our issue for March 1st we propose, the Lord willing, to commence the publication of the Minutes of the proceedings and the resolutions drafted at the meeting of the brethren at Black Rock, Md., in 1832, at the time the division took place between the Baptists in the United States. After publishing the above we expect to run in serial form the able and powerful orations of Edward Irving before the London Missionary Board, May, 1824.

We at first anticipated commencing these articles with the beginning of the present volume; but as we are receiving each number such large accessions to our list of subscribers, we decided to delay their publication until the time mentioned above, in order to give an opportunity to as many as possible to have the articles complete.

pray for its heralds? Then we want to see the editors sustained first by divine grace, in order that they may be enabled to know the truth, and then the brethren to give them full patronage, so that they can send forth the messages of love and good cheer to very many dear ones who cannot hear the preached word. Of course the gospel is the same as it ever was, it being the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth, to the Jew first, and also to the Greek. Then all must be done, if of any comfort and consolation to the people of God, in the spirit of love and reverential fear toward God, asking him to guide the mind of both writer and reader, speaker and hearer. Let all be done to the glory of God; and when that is done, the saints will be edified and comforted; for they do desire, when led by that meek and humble spirit, that God may be glorified. We love each week to receive the SIGNS, a faithful messenger of the truth as it is in Jesus. We should be deeply interested in its success, because we believe it is contending for wholesome doctrine and scriptural practices for the beloved Zion, and against the many and mighty hosts of antichrist. That contention is in behalf of the most noble cause that ever did or ever can exist; second to none, and none equal to its beauty and mysterious loveliness. The faithful servants of God are preaching its wonders amid all oppositions of poverty, free-willism, and every vain and antichristian doctrine. It is preached and published by pen and tongue; and even the heavens silently but surely speak forth their testimony, in declaring the glory of God and showing forth his handiwork. The precious ones, east, west, north and south, all have the same gospel; and when we read of their experience in the SIGNS, or hear them tell it, let it come through the humble beggar or the rich, or from the poor African, they all declare how they have been made poor in spirit; and they all bring the glad news of how their God by his grace has led them. The soul-cheering story of every one who has been translated from nature's darkness into the kingdom of God's dear Son is that salvation is by grace alone; and though they may not fully understand it so, yet that grace was given them in Christ Jesus before the world began; and that not according to the works of the creature, but according to the purpose and grace of God. Then if it is according to the purpose of God, it certainly must be right. I have a hope that I, though a very poor and unworthy sinner, do truly love this sacred truth, that our God in his wisdom could and did provide salvation for each and every heir of eternal glory, and that by his eternal power and Godhead he was able to bring this salvation to his people. Had he failed in the very least, all would have failed. Think for a moment, if even the natural laws that govern this terrestrial world should fail in the very least, or could the most diminutive creature fly at random, or contrary to the all-seeing eye of him who created it; or could it by any means supercede or overstep the bounds of these laws which govern it; I say, if it could be possible for anything, however diminutive, to overstep its bounds, then where, I ask, O where would be the hope of the poor trembling ones? Gone, and gone forever. Or did it rest on any human contingencies as to whether this purpose and grace would accomplish their end, again I ask, where would be the christian's hope? The answer is again at hand, Gone, all gone. For we look around us and behold all creation fading, groaning and dying, from the tiny gnat to the largest quadruped. Yes, and here is man, the most wonderful being of all God's creation, and he also is passing along down to the grave, with all his fine spun theories; and in all his boasted power and earthly glory he is no better than the rest of creation. He too must die. All, all are vain, weak and helpless. Then where is our help? When we take a view of these things, how can we doubt the wisdom and purpose of God? We know that out of him there is no natural life; and out of the Lord Jesus Christ there is no spiritual or eternal life; for this eternal life was with the Father, and was given us in his Son. Then I want the mighty power of God as my undertaker and deliverer. I want to feel that when all things I behold, and when this poor, sinful body of mine shall fall, and when all around me shall quake and tremble, I say I want to feel that in the eternal sovereign Ruler and Governor of all things I have a hiding place. And when there is a mighty surging, upheaving and commotion in my soul on account of indwelling sin, then O how I desire this power to enter in and bind the strong man. And O how I desire the Spirit of my Master to stay with me. It is only then that I feel to be at all safe. It is when I hope it pleases him to whisper, "Peace, be still." Then my poor heart leaps up within me at this salutation. Then if we so much need his holy presence to keep us from falling, O how sad is the thought that when we come down to death, if we shall find ourselves left alone to battle with the monster death. There could be but one ending to the contest, as it was with our first parents, who fought, but lost, and were overcome; as it always will be with poor man when left alone to contend against sin and death. But the little saints of Zion's King can rejoice; for this grace was intrusted to the safe keeping of Jesus Christ, the Son of the living God, even before the world was; and he has kept it safely through all the antichristian days, with the church in the wilderness; and even down to death the Captain of our salvation kept it safely; and when death had laid his body low, and for the sake of this grace he must even feel the very pangs of hell, he still had the only right to reclaim his authority, when in the third revolving morning of his bondage in the tomb he came forth, instead of a martyred Christ a mighty King, having spoiled the very powers of death, hell and the grave. Then he alone has the right to the eternal Sonship. And being the great Son of God, and to honor his Father, and to save those who were given him by his Father, he finished the work assigned him. In him is this grace still safely kept. As a Son, learning obedience by the things that he suffered, in order to keep every jot and tittle of the law his people had violated, under its demands he became accursed, and by this obedience became the author of eternal salvation to all them that obey him. So then, if we do not understand his ways, we can yet trust in his mercy, for it endureth forever. Though his judgments are past finding out, yet I can rejoice in his love. Having loved his people with an everlasting love, by loving-kindness he draws them; and sometimes I hope I love him a little.

Pardon me for this intrusion. I had no idea of writing as I have.

Your very unworthy friend and well wisher in the Lord,

H. A. HARVEY.

BATH, Maine, Jan., 1893.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—I will send the inclosed, to assist in sending the SIGNS. I would gladly obtain subscribers for my loved paper, the SIGNS OF THE TIMES; but as I cannot, I desire to assist in every way I can. I enjoy reading its pages, as Jesus is so plainly set forth as the Savior of sinners, and my experience has taught me the same blessed truth. The love which has been "bestowed" upon us, that we should be called the sons of God, is truly wonderful. If my pen could only express some of the beauty I have seen in the word "bestowed," I should be able to write for the edification of God's chosen people. Jesus would be my theme, and his great work of redemption joyfully declared. Sinners saved by grace would know my meaning when I spoke of the great love wherewith God loved us, even when we were dead in sins. They are the only ones who know of this love which is "bestowed," not offered. When it is in exercise in our hearts we are never found esteeming ourselves better than our brethren. O no. Each one will say, as I heard a dear brother, "you are all good but me." All will be of the same size of Paul, "Less than the least of all saints." The natural man can never understand nor comprehend how the Word was made flesh and dwelt among men. The wise and prudent of this world can never find it out with all their wisdom and learning. But when it is revealed to a poor, helpless sinner by the Spirit, who can express the joy as they eat the flesh and drink the blood of this same Word which was in the beginning with God, and was God? The Lord has blessed me with a season of rejoicing after a long night of sorrow. I am glad to say I have seen nothing in myself whereof to boast, but the cause of my rejoicing has been what is treasured up in Jesus Christ. There I have seen the safety, beauty and redemption of the church. Trials must come in the church, and they will do us good. When we have been tried, we shall come forth as gold. We shall say with Job, "Behold, I am vile." These lines express more than I can,

"Trials must and will befall;
But with humble faith to see
Love inscribed upon them all,
This is happiness to me.

Trials make the promise sweet;
Trials give new life to prayer;
Trials bring me to his feet,
Lay me low, and keep me there."

Dear brethren, I am not writing as I intended when I took my pen, but I think you will perceive at once it is only for you to glance over at your leisure. I do not want to close until I speak of the kind, brotherly spirit manifest in the editorials; also in Elders Chick and Durand's communications. It is impossible to remind the saints too often that every "root of bitterness" is found in the flesh and carnal mind. It is not the fruit of the Spirit. I do rejoice every time it is written of in the SIGNS, exhorting the brethren everywhere to follow Paul's admonition to the Ephesians, "Let all bitterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamor, and evil speaking, be put away from you, with all malice; and be ye kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you." We are made to realize how we have been forgiven, all our sins and iniquities forever washed away by the precious blood of Jesus Christ; not for any works of righteousness which we did or can do. "Chosen in Christ before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before him in love." We shall not find any fault with our brethren when this love rules in our hearts, for it will enable us to see our own imperfections, and to cover failings in those we love. It will make us kind one to another, we shall feel our unworthiness, and as we realize how much the brethren have to bear with us, I think we shall have more of that feeling of gladness which was in our hearts when we found we were received into the church.

I do not think I am prejudiced against other papers published by the brethren, but I cannot find the truth declared so clearly, boldly and fearlessly, yet with that spirit of meekness which is in every number of the SIGNS. I do not think the price too high. It is often a great satisfaction, after reading a newspaper, to take up the SIGNS, and can believe what I read. I hope the Lord will put it into the hearts of the saints to assist in its publication. All we have of this world's goods is for us while we remain here; we cannot carry any of it with us. May the Lord enable each one of his children to use their possessions wisely. I will try to write something for you to publish, if you think best, when I find my mind led to do so. I hope we shall see you, Elder Wm. L. Beebe, here in Maine before the close of this year. May you be spared long to proclaim the truth as it is in Jesus, is the desire of your unworthy sister,

ATTIE A. CURTIS.

DEAR ELDER BEEBE:—At the request of the writer I inclose a letter which I hope you may see fit to publish soon. It is to let her many friends know that silence means suffering, not forgetfulness.

EMILY A. BROWN.

395 LYELL AVE., ROCHESTER, N. Y.

A PRISONER at home in these low grounds of sorrow! O when shall I be a prisoner released, set free, and made fit for the high grounds of eternal felicity and joy! But Father knows that the pains are all numbered, the sorrows all weighed, the tears all bottled, and so I rest, feeling at times, and oftentimes, too, that the harvest of joys is fast approaching. When will my lamp be trimmed and burning? for now it burns so dimly, if at all, that often I have to ask myself, Can God ever dwell here? Is this the soil that he has cultivated? Is the life seed scattered here? We read that "Reuben had great searchings of heart;" and are not his brethren like unto him? All akin to David, who begged, "Search me, O God, and know my heart; try me, and know my thoughts." O my dear, precious and tried sister, is not this the "way down deep" desire of our hearts? Yes, I know it is yours and mine, with all the "one family." I have of late been contemplating the infinite justice and holiness of our God, and have rejoiced in the very sweet conclusion that my soul has been brought to, which is not even to desire mercy at the expense of justice. No; let me but know that justice is satisfied, debts all paid, full satisfaction rendered, and no possibility of a second claim. Then O what rejoicing, and that, too, on safe and solid ground. With David we can say, "I will sing of mercy and of judgment; unto thee, O Lord, will I sing." But like David, we could never sing of justice until we had experienced mercy; for how could we sing while down at the very bottom of that horrible pit and miry clay, there bound by the shackles of sin, and vengeance (the law) thundering over our heads, "Pay me that thou owest?" No singing here, no notes can we raise, no harp can we strike, but dumb with the consciousness of that justice which God requires. O those "ends of the earth!" Who can measure the felt distance between God, this offended God, and the soul? But let mercy spread her balmy wings; then faith triumphs, and cries (not weeps), "I will sing of mercy and of judgment; unto thee, O Lord, will I sing." Not unto man, not unto money, not unto means, but unto thee, O Lord; for thou hast fought the battle and given us the victory. Then however dark and rough the road,

"If it but lead me to my God I'll bear the warfare through," seeing it is written, "Ye shall not need fight in this battle." No; the Captain of our salvation has done this, fought the battle alone, and he alone shall receive the honor.

But, my dear sister, my pen has run on in so different a strain from what I had thought of. In these days of extreme suffering and uncertainty you will have to take up with the odd bits and scraps; those, too, just as they are first given me. It is very difficult for me to sit long in one position. I have suffered extremely within the last ten days. Yesterday and to-day (Dec. 3d and 4th) I am much more comfortable, though greatly under the influence of anodynes in one form or another. I will here quote some lines with which our dear sister Spencer tried to comfort me; indeed they are rich, and just met my poor, barren soul's want of expression.

"O Comforter of God's redeemed, Whom this world cannot see,
What arm would pluck me from the flood
That casts my soul on thee?
Who would not suffer pain like mine
To be consoled by thee?"

I hope you are well in body and healthy in soul. Though we do not look for much putting forth at this wintry season of the year, the underground work is going on just the same; and we love to feel that precious foundation, even though we have to go down deep to find it. You know by your own experience that that foundation is laid far below every curse of the law, and every requirement against his dear redeemed but helpless children; so that they are not only favored to walk at large, but to feed in pastures green and fresh.

With everlasting love to my dear sister, from the poorest of the flock and the leanest in the fold,

LYDIA ALEXANDER.

SOUTHAMPTON, Pa., Dec. 29, 1892.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—I am sitting alone this evening, and feeling rather sad; and yet I feel to rejoice when contemplating the goodness and mercy of my heavenly Friend and Father, as I trust, who through his indulgent care has kept me thus far, and has spared me as a child. Well might I say, Goodness and mercy have followed me all the days of my life. Sometimes I do feel to praise him and bless his holy name.

We will enter upon another year, if spared a few days.

"The present moments just appear,
Then glide away in haste;
So we can never say, 'They're here,'
But only say, 'They're past.'"

When I took my seat this evening I had not the least idea of writing; but "out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." I have been thinking of all the dear ones for some time, and feeling the time has come for me to tell you, dear brethren and sisters scattered abroad, a few of my thoughts during the past year. I could not tell you all. The half can never be told. I often think it is too wonderful for me to attempt to speak of things divine. Much of the time of late I have been in great darkness of mind; yet even then I have felt to say,

"Darkness surrounds me, but I know
The Lord is ever nigh."

For his promises are true, and he has told us in his word that through much tribulation we must enter the kingdom.

"Though dark be the way, it will cease before long;
And then O how pleasant the conqueror's song."

I feel each time I write that it may be the last. Be that as it may, I only hope to be able to say from the heart, Not my will, but thine, O Lord, be done. I am at this writing much better in health than heretofore, for which I feel thankful, I hope. We have the promise that the Lord will never leave us in trouble to sink. Blessed Jesus! who is like unto him? I often question whether I am one for whom he died.

"I am so vile, so prone to sin,
I fear that I'm not born again"

I am so prone to leave the God I love, and go into by and forbidden paths. But I do feel that I love the dear saints, and love their company. As dear Elder Bundy said recently at a meeting with us, if he could not go with that dear people, where could he go? Yet he said he felt too unworthy to go with them. I thought if he was so unworthy, where would I class myself?

As a church we seem to be at peace, with Elder Durand as our pastor, who is faithful to his charge, preaching Jesus as the only way whereby we can be saved. As we by searching cannot find out God, it must come by revelation. When he speaks, it is done; when he commands, it stands fast. It is done forever. Then what have we to fear with such a Leader? I feel that our path is marked for us to tread, and we cannot go around it.

"Time is winging us away
To our eternal home;
Life is but a winter day,
A journey to the tomb."

I have written more than I thought to, and feel it is very imperfect, like the writer.

Your sister in hope,

R. F. HART.

FEBRUARY 9, 1893.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—Inclosed find two dollars to be applied to sending the SIGNS to the needy. I am sorry that you feel the necessity of holding out pecuniary inducements to get subscribers for the SIGNS. I cannot see why every lover of the truth is not willing, yea, anxious to have it. I know some are not able, and they seem the most anxious; while others, who are abundantly able, do not care for it, and yet are sound in the faith. Why is it so? I am sure they have no idea of what they miss. When we hear from those who have experienced the same things as we, it warms our hearts, and we have sweet communion with them, even those we never saw in the flesh. Can money buy this? Is the cost of the paper to be compared to this? The paper is worth more than the regular subscription, and I hope every brother that is able to buy five pound of tobacco per year will send on his two dollars for himself, and for others that he can get at that price, and not allow a money consideration to hamper the editors. I am wonderfully pleased with Elder Chick's article on the "old landmarks." Are we drifting into error, or were those dear and firm brethren in the past in error? "No," say some, "but we have learned some new things that they had not yet learned." Well, God's dear people are all taught of the Lord, in the same school, by the same Teacher, the same language; and when so taught we have one heart and one mind, and must and will agree. Then why differ? This is the fleshly mind; and how it does spread itself, and swell up to wonderful proportions, and claim great knowledge and gifts. This is the trouble; it is not the faith of God's elect that errs; it is the flesh. But I did not intend to write anything, only to send the remittance.

Yours in weakness,
MILTON DANCE.

EDITORIAL NOTICES.

NUMBER ONE ALL GONE.

THE demand for back numbers has been so large, that our supply of number one, this volume, is exhausted. We have a few copies of the other numbers and will send them when desired as long as they last.

IT IS VERY IMPORTANT

That great care should be taken in sending a renewal of subscriptions to give us the same name as the one to whom the paper is already coming. If the party is married be sure the initials are given correctly; for if the paper is coming in the wife's name and the husband writes us to send the paper the next year, and signs his own name, we have no means of knowing that the person to whom the paper is going is his wife; and not finding his name on our list he is entered as a new subscriber and the paper sent to both; or if the paper is going in the husband's name and the renewal sent on in the wife's name, the result will be the same. The best way is to inclose in your letter one of the little pink slips containing the name pasted either on the margin of the paper or on the wrapper in which it comes.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

A. J. More died Jan. 28th, 1893. He was born in South Carolina, Oct. 6th, 1810, and moved to Illinois about 1824 or 1825, settling in Effingham County. After residing there for a number of years he moved to Hosier Prairie, Clay County, and from there to Sassafras Mound, near Iola, where he resided until his death. He was a member of the Old School Baptist Church, having united with them about the year 1853. He was a faithful member, and a father in Israel, and will be missed around his family altar. His place cannot be filled any more, neither will his counsel be heard any more. While it is our loss, it is his eternal gain. He has received the crown of life, where there will be no more parting nor sorrow. Then why should we weep for him, my dear friends? for while he was at home in the body he was absent from the Lord; but he is now absent from the body and present with the Lord. It is sweet to know that Jesus has broken the iron bar, taken away the sting of death, and that through his death we are rich. May God by his divine power keep you all, is the prayer of the writer.

M. L. BILLINGS.

IOLA, ILL.

SISTER Julian Foster died at her residence, west of Avilla, Ind., on the morning of Feb. 1st, at the age of 67 years and 3 days.

Sister F. was born in York Co., Pa., Jan. 29th, 1826. Her maiden name was Beckley. She moved to Morrow Co., Ohio, where she was married to Ephraim Foster in 1848. They moved to this place many years ago. Their union was blessed with five children. Three of the children, with her husband, slept in death before she was called to join the saints above. About the year 1855 she was baptized in the fellowship of the Primitive Baptists by Elder Zachariah Thomas. There being no people of that order here at that time, she made the journey to the Salem Church, Morrow County, that she might be numbered with the people she loved. The distance was nearly two hundred miles.

The funeral services were conducted by the writer, using Romans i. 3, 4 as a basis for a few remarks to the sorrowing friends and neighbors. Sister Foster's only trust was in an independent God. The immediate cause of her death was pneumonia, but she had been in very poor health for many years. Besides the two kind and loving children, she has left a host of relatives and friends to mourn. As we looked upon the cold, pale face we thought of the sweet expression, "Some are fallen asleep." She was a reader of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

Sleep on, mother, till the Savior
Calls thee forth to bloom in heaven;
Long you lingered here in prison,
Now thou'rt free, and rest is given."

GEORGE A. BRETZ.

DIED—At her residence in Otego, N. Y., Jan. 19th, 1893, our dear sister, Mrs. Christianna L. French, wife of Deacon G. M. French, aged 70 years and 5 months.

Sister French was born at Blackshold, Enmore Parish, Somersetshire, England. She was one of eight children. She came to America with her parents and their family in 1840, and settled with them at Skaneateles, N. Y., where she resided until her marriage to brother French, Sept. 28th, 1848, when she came to Otego, where she spent the remainder of her life. She joined the Baptist Church at Skaneateles, and after coming to this place joined the church of Otego, where she remained a very useful member, and highly esteemed by the whole body for her many and useful gifts. Steadfast in the faith, she was never wandering abroad to glean in another field, but was satisfied with the rich pastures furnished her by the good Shepherd. She was given in a high degree to hospitality, and ever ready to minister to the sick, as very many, both in the church and in the world, can testify. She was of industrious habits, and faithfully filled her place in the church, so that she could be confidently expected, together with our dear brother, at all our meetings. It will be remembered by many readers of the SIGNS that many of her rich and comforting letters appeared therein, for the strengthening of the weak and warning the unruly. Nothing in the way of preaching could she take as true except as Jesus was the first, the last and the midst, the almighty and all-sufficient Savior of sinners.

She leaves her lonely and beloved companion, dear brother French, sister Susie Guernsey, of Newark, N. J., and sister Alveline Studwell, of Stamford, Conn., who are both her daughters, all of whom are members at Otego, and partakers of that same sovereign grace which saved and kept the mourned-for wife and the affectionate and loving mother; also many other friends and relatives. May the Lord make the mourning ones to joy in the midst of their trials, that she has gained a glorious victory, and has received the crown of righteousness.

"No more to sigh nor shed a tear,
No more to suffer pain nor fear,
But God and Christ and heaven appear Unto her raptured eye."

Her funeral was attended Jan. 22d by many sympathizing friends, relatives, brethren and sisters.

Since writing the above the following lines have been found, that sister French had written for her daughters:

"Dear children, I feel that I want to write you a few lines while I am able. We are in a dying world; my days are but few at most. Be kind to and look after your father; and if Elder Durand is living, that he and Elder Bundy should attend my funeral. Have Elder D. read the 1290th hymn, Elder B. to speak in prayer, and Elder D. to speak from the words he chooses. Do well by both of them."

B. BUNDY.

ANOTHER great man is fallen in Israel, an old veteran of the cross. Elder Stephen Trout died at his residence in Pike Co., Ky. Elder Trout was born somewhere in old Virginia, August 25th, 1810, and died Jan. 1st, 1893, aged 82 years, 4 months and 6 days.

He was sorely afflicted with rheumatism when about nine years old, so much so that he could walk only on crutches. He received a precious hope when very young, and joined the Old Baptists; but who baptized him we do not know. He commenced preaching when young. Notwithstanding his only way of walking was on crutches, and when riding on horseback he had to ride aside, yet he traveled hundreds and thousands of miles to preach Jesus, whom he dearly loved; and the greater part of his traveling was over rough and towering mountains. No matter how cold or wet, or even full waters, none of these things prevented him attending his appointments. Oftentimes when the waters and weather were so disagreeable that able-bodied brethren would decline going, he would mount "Old Prince," his noble and well-trained horse, and go right on as though the weather were ever so favorable. On one occasion, when he was going alone to his appointment in West Virginia, and had to cross Tug River, and the river was full, he ventured in, and while crossing the water washed him off his horse; but he caught the stirrup or the mane (I do not remember which), and his horse went with him in the direction he was going, and he went on to his appointment. He counted not his life dear unto him, that he might finish his course with joy, and receive a crown of righteousness.

Elder Trout came to Pike Co., Ky., about fifty years ago, joined the Old Pond Creek Church by letter, and lived a worthy and consistent member until the day of his death. About twenty-five years ago he had another heavy spell of rheumatism, which so drew his joints apart and disabled him that he could not walk a step even with his crutches; but he was stout and hearty in his body, and his children, and sometimes other friends, would haul him to meeting. He has been hauled every time he went to meeting (which was often) for the last twenty-five years in an old-fashioned corn-sled, with oxen. Then he would sit in his chair and boldly preach Jesus. The last meeting he attended was at his old home church, Pond Creek, which was on the second Saturday and Sunday in November, 1892. He was one of the valiant of Israel—valiant for the truth as it is in Jesus.

He left a widow and eight children (five daughters and three sons), one son having preceded him to the eternal world. All his children are married save one. Elder Trout fought a good fight and kept the faith, and we have no doubt that he is entered the portals of eternal day, where there will be no sickness, pain nor death. We will greatly miss him at our meetings, as he has been with us so long, and we have so often heard his voice in proclaiming the wonderful works of God. He was a good neighbor, a worthy member of the church, and a bold and fearless standard-bearer of truth. He is gone from us now, but we do not sorrow as those who have no hope, for our great loss is his eternal gain.

As brother Trout had no relatives in this country, we would love for all the Primitive Baptist papers to copy this, that it may come to the eyes of some of his people.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date. This date denotes the time at which your subscription expires; and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

CORRESPONDENCE.

1 JOHN III. 3-5.

"AND every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure. Whosoever committeth sin transgresseth also the law: for sin is the transgression of the law. And ye know that he was manifested to take away our sins; and in him is no sin."

For several months past I have had a number of requests by me to write for the SIGNS upon different texts and subjects. That I have not done so before has not been because I am at all indifferent to such requests from brethren or sisters; but partly because of lack of time, partly because I have not wished to crowd the SIGNS with my writing, and chiefly because of want of understanding of many of the Scriptures presented. Brother James Murphy, of Montrose, W. Va., by a letter several months ago, requested me to speak of the above quoted text through the SIGNS; and as to-night this text and its connection are somewhat upon my mind, I feel like trying to comply with brother Murphy's request.

Much of the language of John in this epistle seems mysterious and hard to understand at first view. Some things which he says, upon their surface, seem contradictory of other Scriptures; but this is not really so, as a more careful comparison of the Scriptures will show. Each of the apostles was equally inspired by the Spirit of God, but yet each retained his own individuality; and each wrote in his own peculiar style, and with his own peculiar turn of thought. It was among them as among ministers of Jesus to-day. All write or preach the same truth, but the language and manner of one differ from another. So in the writings of John we find peculiar expressions and turns of thought that we do not find in any of the other apostles. In all his writings, both in the gospel that bears his name, and in the epistles, and in Revelation, he seems to come into the very heart of religion. He never deals so much with events as with the spirit underlying those events. Others might write of the outward course of events, but it was his to get near to the heart of his Master, and to speak and write what he had learned while leaning on his breast. In this we do not make light of the narratives of the other apostles. They also wrote needful things as they were moved by the Holy Ghost, and it was the will and work of Jesus that they loved and uttered forth; but John's own peculiar narrative was also needed, and we could not do without it. We need to see the human side of the life of Jesus, and this we have more especially set forth in the first three gospels; but we also need to see the divine life of Jesus, as it was partly veiled and partly revealed in his human life, and this we have in the gospel of John. So in his epistles John continues to speak in his own manner and with his own spiritual turn of thought; and instead of dealing with special acts of obedience or disobedience, he speaks almost altogether of the spirit underlying the one or the other, as the case might be. Such words and such contrasts as these are common in his epistles: light and darkness, life and death, love and hate; and we see no shading nor toning up nor down in his use of these expressions. A man is either alive or dead, in the light or in darkness, loves or hates. With this apostle, who stood near the light of that world where all appears just as it is, and the secrets of all hearts are revealed, there is no half-way ground. We are disposed to conclude that some men, while they do not love God, yet cannot be said to hate him; and while not altogether in the light, yet are not in total darkness; but John will not have it so. Love, the love of God, burned so brightly in his heart that he knew that anything short of this love must be hate; anything less than the light of God was darkness. If it be asked, How shall we come to know these things? there is but one answer possible. We must come to know them as John knew them. We can know nothing about Jesus except as we come to know Jesus himself; and John gained his knowledge by living with Jesus, yea, lying on his breast. It is here that we must learn, if indeed we ever know these things. The first three verses of this epistle strike the keynote of all that follows. John writes and speaks of what he has seen and known. Having this knowledge, John recognizes that the relation which he and all like him bear to God is that of sonship; and as in chapter second he proceeds to treat of the unspeakable privileges of sonship, the fire burned within him, until at the opening of the third chapter he breaks out in language of wonder at the love of God, which has called even us to be called the sons of God. There is a wonderful meaning in the sentence which follows, "Therefore the world knoweth us not, because it knew him not." Just as far as the world knew Jesus it knows his followers. The world knew the features, form and name of this man Jesus, but it did not know him. It did not know the hidden nature, the indwelling presence of God controlling all his life, so that he did always what was pleasing to God; and so the world cannot know the child of God. It does not perceive the indwelling of Jesus through the Spirit in the very souls of his people; and though we were to live a life of perfect faith and perfect love, yet would it be hidden from the world.

And now we are the sons of God, he says, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but when Jesus shall appear, and we shall see him as he is, we shall be like him. We are sons of God, but all the glory of this heavenly relation is not yet made manifest; and it cannot be until we see him as he is. It is only as we see him that full liberty, the liberty of our sonship, appears. Freedom from the bondage of a holy but broken law, freedom also from the bondage of sin, is to be found in Christ, and in Christ alone. We are sons, but the warfare continues. When the conflict ends we shall not be any more truly sons of God, but we shall be more free and more at rest. We shall be like Jesus, for we shall see him as he is.

Now, the opening sentence of the text to which brother Murphy called my attention is, "And every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he [Jesus] is pure." Now, notice the hope is in the believer. By the work of almighty grace this hope to be like Jesus is begotten in the soul. To be like Jesus is that to which the child of God is called. He hopes for this. It is a hunger and thirst that belongs to his spiritual life, that began when it began to live within him, and which nothing else than perfection can satisfy. The believer is here presented as in the attitude of a man waiting and longing to be presented to his king. He desires nothing else; he can occupy himself with nothing else; he can be satisfied with nothing else. Now, such an one has caught glimpses of the beauty of the king in all physical and moral excellencies; and he has a hope that he shall be made like the king, when he shall see him face to face. Would not such an one, moved by such desires and such expectations, be found, while waiting, endeavoring as much as in him should lie to be as he hopes to be by and by? Would he not put away diligently what he might learn was displeasing to the king, and adopt in word and deed that which might be pleasing to the king? Now, this is just what the apostle in this third verse avers to be true of every one who has such a glorious hope in him. As he longs to be like Jesus, and expects to be like Jesus in all his being, by and by, so now he longs to please Jesus in all things while on the journey. He by the power of this indwelling hope purifies himself, as Jesus is pure. John uses here almost identically the language of Paul in 2 Cor. vii. 1. "Having therefore these promises, dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God." And here also it seems worthy of remark, the special ground of Paul's exhortation is precisely the same as that in our text in John. Both base their conclusion upon the ground of the sonship of believers. Paul quotes from Jer. xxxi. 9, the promise of God that he will be a father to his people, and receive them as his sons and daughters, and then exhorts his brethren upon the ground of such promises to cleanse themselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit. And so John declares that he who is a son of God, and hopes to be like Jesus, purifies himself. The only difference between the two, it seems to me, is that Paul is simply speaking of what we are as children of God by faith in Christ Jesus, while John not only says we are now the sons of God, but also sets forth the assurance of future perfectness as a hope necessarily involved in the fact that we are now children of God. And so Paul speaks in the language of exhortation to his brethren, while John speaks of this cleansing or purging as being necessarily involved in the indwelling hope itself.

Let it not be forgotten that all a believer can ever do in the way of ordering his outward life after the example of Jesus must be by the power of divine grace working in him both to will and to do of his good pleasure. And it is because the apostles recognize the fact of this indwelling life of Jesus in their brethren that they could use such exhortations as are scattered all through their writings. Christians are to obey not by subservience to the letter of the law merely, but in newness of spirit. They are indeed to put off the old man, and to put on the new man; to put away lying, slandering, hatred, wrath, strifes, debates, drunkenness, revelings, thievings, murders, and all such works of the flesh; and to follow truth, love, kindness, peace, sobriety, honesty, and all the fruits of the Spirit. But this they are to do as the children of God, and not in obedience simply to the form of an outward commandment. The law is now written in their hearts. It is no longer over them, but in them. And all the commandments of this law are summed up and fulfilled in this one word, love. And to help each other in this way of life, we are to exhort one another, and consider one another, to provoke unto love and good works. If such precious hope of final conformity to the likeness of Jesus be in us, we shall rejoice in such exhortations and admonitions. A dear brother once said to me, "I love to hear preaching that tells me my faults;" and I can respond, So do I. I want to know them, and, if I can, avoid them.

John in this text does not mean to teach perfection in the flesh; for this would be to contradict his own words, "If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us." The man who says he is perfect, only proves himself perverse, according to the testimony of Job. It is common experience, and common observation also, that the more carefully a child of God walks the more he sees and feels of his own inborn corruption. A man who knows little of God or of his law may be content to look at his outward actions, and satisfied if they are correct in a measure; but the man who is near to God, and stands in the clear light of his presence, has got beyond the outward, into the inward life, and sees the perverse spirit within; and so what he has attained, to him seems as nothing, compared with what he still lacks. I have been struck with the fact that while Job said, "Behold, I am vile," God pronounced him a just man. And when the publican confessed himself a sinner before God, he was justified. And when the patriarch said, "My name is Jacob" (a supplanter, a mean, vile man), the angel said, "Henceforth thy name shall be called Israel," (a prince of God). But John refers to the outward manner of life in this text, and means that the believer strives to put away from him his former evil life; and in proportion as this hope is realized in the soul, will there be a putting away of that which is contrary to this relation of children of God. To feel more and more of the power of endless life involved in this sonship is to be freed more and more from the power of iniquity, and to have stronger and more overwhelming desires after holiness in all our daily life.

Now, before closing, I will add a few words concerning the verses that follow. I desire simply to call attention to their bearing upon the third verse, and upon what I have been presenting.

Let us bear in mind that the law of God is love. Also, let us remember that this law is written in the heart of the believer also. In other words, he loves God. Therefore he cannot desire to transgress the law of him whom he loves. Sin is the transgression of the law; therefore the believer hates sin, and strives to depart from it; and this is what is meant in the third verse by purifying himself. And, furthermore, this same Jesus into whose likeness we hope to be conformed was manifested, that by his death he might take away the curse of sin, and redeem us from all iniquity, and purify us unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works. And "we know that in him was no sin." Now, it seems to me that the apostle presents these things here because they bear upon the one thought of which he speaks in the first three verses of this chapter, viz., of conformity to the likeness of Jesus. They open up great and wonderful mysteries and truths to us of which I will not now speak. I understand the apostle to mention them because they bear upon the hope which is in the child of God, and which leads him to purify himself, as Jesus is pure. How sublime the motives to godliness presented in the Scriptures! How far above and beyond those motives appealed to by all Arminian religions! These all appeal to self; but the Scriptures appeal to the love of God, and the sufferings and work of Jesus. "Beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, we are changed into the same image, from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord." This also is the glory of sonship, as distinguished from the servitude of the law; and at the end we shall be like Jesus; for we shall see him as he is.

I leave these thoughts for the consideration of brother Murphy, and all others who may read them. May the Spirit of God lead us more and more fully into a realization of our privileges as sons.

I remain your brother in the hope of Christ, our elder Brother,

F. A. CHICK.

REISTERSTOWN, Md., Feb. 2, 1893.

CRAMER, Ill., Jan. 15, 1893.

DEAR BROTHER:—I inclose a letter to you which I received a few days ago from a dear old brother. I esteem him very highly for the truth's sake. You may publish it if you see fit.

I feel like adding a very few lines for the readers of the SIGNS, if they will be fit to be seen. In the first place I will speak of the very good new year's gift I received, which was the first number of the SIGNS, dated January 4th. The first two letters in the paper, written by brethren Durand and Vail, seemed to lift me up out of the mire I had been in for so long a time, and gave me new hope that I might not be altogether mistaken in my hope. I know what good preachers they are, and highly esteemed, and yet they have such a wretched opinion of themselves, and such a view of their vileness. It is very evident the Lord leads all his children to abhor themselves, and to cry out, "Woe is me! for I am undone; because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips; for mine eyes have seen the King." Yes, I cannot help but believe, when I hear others tell of their vileness, and how they hate themselves, that such have the true evidence that they are born of God. Light makes manifest. If it were not for natural light we could not behold the things of nature. It is God who has commanded the heavenly light to shine in our hearts, and we see the abominable wretchedness of our sin-depraved nature. Therefore we cry and mourn, and pray, "Lord, have mercy upon me. I am poor and wretched, and not able to deliver myself." These are the poor and needy that seek water; yes, that living water; and they can find none. But the Lord in his own time, when their tongue fails for thirst, opens rivers of water in high places. I do believe I now realize something of this good hope through grace; that the Lord in measure has lifted me out of despondency, and revived me a little; and he did it in his own way. Those two communications seemed just for me. I thought I was too bad to ever hope again in God. I feel to praise the name of the Lord for his goodness to me, that I have the privilege of reading the good old SIGNS. I long for it every week. I seem to love what the religious world hates. Yes, they hate such a paper as the SIGNS, and think such a paper should not be allowed to exist. Well, they persecuted the beloved Master, and they will persecute his followers. This is a day of delusion, and of spiritual wickedness in high places. Truth is fallen in the streets. But woe unto the deceivers. They compass sea and land to make proselytes, and follow the way of Cain. So, dear brethren, let us who are of the day put on the whole armor of God. Touch not, taste not, the unclean thing. No doubt many of the dear children of God are caught in their net; but though they die in Babylon, the Lord will save them.

But I have forgotten myself. I want to say a word or so to all the new subscribers, as there will be a great many added this year. I am an old subscriber, over thirty-five years. Many have stuck to the SIGNS through thick and thin. I have no doubt many of them will send in pay for others, so as to increase the circulation. Do not at the end of the year say you are not able to pay for it. Think about this when you go to a fair or show. We say we are not able, when often it is deception, and from the old enemy.

If you have had it one year for nothing, take it as long as you live, and when you die you will die just as rich. Deny yourself of something else. If you do not, our editors may suffer loss in the end. With love to all for the truth's sake,

E. D. VARNES.

DEAR BROTHER:—It is said by the wise man that as "iron sharpeneth iron, so a man sharpeneth the countenance of his friend." I was forcibly reminded of this Scripture when I received your kind, brotherly epistle of the 20th of December. But I cannot tell why, unless it was because your language found a responsive chord in my poor heart; for it showed to me that there was one, at least, whom I felt sure was a true subject of sovereign grace, who was plagued like myself. The thought that there was one who thought me worthy of notice, or if not worthy (which I am not), yet who in my lonely and unworthy state could pity me enough to take the time to write words of comfort to me, so lifted me up that I immediately sat down to reply, with mind somewhat confused by the cares and perplexities of this life, and dashed off a few lines in a very incoherent style. I do not know now what I did say; but it was nothing to the point, I dare say. I do know this, however, that I did not notice the main point in your letter, which I had in mind when I began to write. I will now call your mind to it, and (if it is not again snatched from my view) offer you a few of my poor thoughts upon it. You quoted these words from the fifteenth chapter of First Corinthians, "If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable." Then you add, "So I suppose it is only in this life I have hope, which is the reason I am so miserable." Now, my dear brother, I must say to you that I think the adversary quoted that Scripture for you, and made his own application, too. You will notice that when he quotes Scripture for the saints he does just as he did for their Master: he chooses such as begins with an "if." Now let us see. Was his application of it to your case logical? The apostle in this chapter was presenting to the saints one of the most profound, logical and unanswerable arguments on the doctrine of the resurrection that the world has ever seen or heard; and, as a consequence, the resurrection of his people, their delivery from the bondage of corruption, to wit, the redemption of the body; for which, says the apostle, we also, which have the first fruits of the Spirit, do groan. What are the first fruits of the Spirit? The order in which the apostle has named the fruits (Gal. v. 22), love, joy and peace, are the first. Now, my dear brother, I think I have seen the first fruits in you at different times; and yet, like the apostle, you are groaning in spirit, waiting for your adoption, the redemption of the body, which can never be, if so be that Christ is not raised. This redemption of the body was the apostle's expectation. "Because I live, ye shall live also." It was also his desire, for he had woefully felt the abominations of his flesh, and was made to cry, "O wretched man that I am! Who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" This expectation and desire was what constituted his "hope in Christ;" which hope is an anchor of the soul, sure and steadfast, and entereth into that within the vail, whither the Forerunner has for us entered, even Jesus, who is made a high priest forever after the order of Melchisedec. This blessed dead, risen and ascended Christ was Paul's hope, and is your hope, is my hope, and the hope of every heaven-born soul. David says, "Blessed is the man whose hope is the Lord." Then yours is a blessed state, though you are made to moan and groan in spirit in view of the corruptions of your old nature; for therein you are more fully brought into the fellowship of the sufferings of Christ and his own dear people, and the better prepared to exalt the risen Christ. It is in this way he is glorified in you, and in all his dear people. Now, take away the risen Christ, and leave us only the dead Christ in Joseph's tomb, and surely we would be "of all men most miserable," with no expectation, no hope of ever being delivered from the bondage of this death, from the bondage of corruption. And why? Because the wicked are not troubled as other men. The corruption of their nature does not trouble them.

But I am wandering from what I wanted to say, and will try to get back to it, to wit, the logic of the wicked one. He caused you to believe that you were the most miserable of men, and hence had no hope in a risen Christ. Why do you think so? Because the Lord by his holy Spirit has revealed to you the vileness of the flesh, your own heart, and not mine, or you would be apt to conclude that I was the man. I say the Lord has done this, because Satan could not make this revelation if he would; and surely he would not if he could; for he is a liar from the beginning, and does not deal in the truth, except to pervert it and make it falsehood, as in your case. His first proposition, that if in this life only we have hope, &c., is the truth; but his second proposition remains to be proved, to wit, that you are of all men most miserable. Consequently the conclusion that you are without hope is an error. Are you more miserable than Paul, the "chief of sinners," who found a law in his members, warring against the law of the Spirit, which oftentimes brought him into bondage? Is the thorn in your flesh any worse than in his? He died daily. Do you die any oftener? Remember this is a time of conflict, and our conflict is with the world, the flesh and the devil. But thanks to our Lord, our weapons are not carnal, but spiritual, and mighty through God, to the pulling down of strong holds. It is also a time of deliverance, as I think you have testified, and, I trust, will testify again.

Since writing the foregoing I have had the joyous privilege of reading the first number of the SIGNS (through your generosity, I suppose, for which please accept my most heart-felt thanks), and it has almost put me out of the mind to send this to you. But there are more things I want to notice again. I do not think I said anything satisfactory to you in my last. I will now say, if it is the Lord's purpose, as well as yours, he will most assuredly open the way, and I would have to submit. But let me say to you, dear brother, be careful you do not try to take his work out of his hands. Remember the fate of Uzza of old. A word to the wise is sufficient.

Now, in conclusion, I will say, if there is anything in this to edify you, use it as you please; if not, destroy it as quickly as you can. I only request you to suppress my name in either case, while I remain your unworthy brother in the struggle against the flesh, ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS:—I here with hand you the foregoing letter, written by my wife to old sister Jackson, of Iowa. I have prevailed on her to let me send it for publication in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, as we know that sister Jackson will get it if published, and will appreciate it as much as if sent directly to her. Also, I know there are dear ones scattered over the west who will be reached in this way, and whom we esteem very highly. We would be glad to hear from them. Perhaps some desponding ones may take courage, and tell what great things the good Lord has done for them. We were somewhat surprised to receive the SIGNS as a present from our dear brother, Davis Burch, and have been highly entertained and enlightened in reading the correspondence and editorials, especially the experiences of the brethren and sisters.

With love to all saints, and best wishes for the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, I remain your unworthy brother in Christ,

N. S. BURCH.

HAYS CITY Kan., Dec. 19, 1892.

LYDIA JACKSON HORTON—VERY DEAR SISTER IN CHRIST:—Your letter of the 12th of November last caused me to meditate, and to look back to the time when the Lord first showed me that I was a sinner. My parents, Wm. S. and Sarah Garrett, as you know, were Old School Baptists. When I was a child I thought that none but old people belonged to the Old Baptist Church; and I thought that when I should become old and good like I thought they were, I would then join them. When I was about sixteen years old I began to see myself as a great sinner, and what to do I did not know. I was away from home at the time and attended a Methodist protracted meeting, where I heard a great many tell how they got religion. They said they prayed, and their prayers were heard. This made me feel worse than ever. At night, when my trouble was so great that I could not sleep, I would get up, and kneel down by my bed, pray the Lord to show me what to do, and to have mercy on me. I felt as if I could not live another day under such trouble. At that time I was taking care of a Methodist lady, who was sick with consumption. She told me she was going to die, and wanted me to meet her in heaven. This was a hard trial for me, who had no hope, to promise to meet her in heaven. To all appearances she died, and we laid her out; and for some time she seemed dead. As I stood by her (and I thought a great deal of her), and was thinking of what she had said to me, she opened her eyes, reached out her hand, and took hold of me. O, my sister, no tongue can tell what were my feelings. She lived one week after that. She begged that I would stay with her while she lived. I stayed three days with her, when my mother was taken sick, and I had to go home. I slipped away, but it was a hard thing for me to do; yet I felt I must go to my mother. When my mother became better I took up the hymn-book and opened it at the words,

"I am a stranger here below,
And what I am 'tis hard to know."

This suited my case. After a few days I went to meeting with my parents, and Elder J. B. Burch opened the meeting. He said it was just as well to read your feelings as to tell them, and he read the hymn I have referred to. I wondered how he, an Old Baptist minister, could have feelings like a poor, sinful girl; for I had felt that there was no one like me. I would go off into a lonely place and try to pray; but my prayers did not seem to go higher than my head. But one day as I was going out in almost utter despair, I walked along, hardly knowing where I was going. All at once a light seemed to shine around me brighter than the sun. I felt a great joy and peace, and was very happy. The next thing I realized I was going towards the house and singing,

"I'm not ashamed to own my Lord,
Or to defend his cause."

I was singing so loud that it fairly made the woods ring. Then I thought, O, if some one should hear me they would think I was crazy. Then I thought I would go and tell my mother; but before I got to the house I thought I would wait and see if these feelings lasted. So I tried to be composed, and to hide my feelings; but when I entered the house and saw my dear old mother sitting there, she looked so sweet to me that I could hardly keep my hands off her, and I did so much want to tell her what I had found; but for fear I was deceived I kept as still as possible. I would ask her questions about the Scriptures, but I did not want her to think I cared anything about it. After a few days Gabriel Barkley, a Baptist minister, came to our house, and I overheard mother telling him that she thought I had a hope in Christ. I felt so bad about it that I did not know what to do; for I was afraid she was mistaken, and that they would expect me to join the church. I felt I could not do that; for I was not quite seventeen years old, and I thought it would not look well for me to join the Old Baptists; but I thought I could go to meeting and hear the preaching. As I was going to a night meeting with my parents I felt as I never had before. I did not want to talk. When Elder Burch opened the door for the reception of members I thought to leave the house; but I could not move my feet. He began to sing,

"I'm not ashamed to own my Lord," &c.
This was too much for me, for I saw that I was ashamed to own his name, or defend his cause, or acknowledge him and his goodness to me before men. The next thing I realized I was talking to the church. I cannot remember what I said, but they received me, and I was baptized the next day. Then I thought my trials were all over, and that my life would be all joy and peace; and I suppose I have had my share. But I have often been unmindful of God's goodness, and not as thankful as I should have been, in view of his goodness and tender mercies to me, in bringing me out of darkness into light.

AND this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come."—Matt. xxiv. 14.

"This gospel;" a particular gospel; the gospel of the kingdom; proceeding out of, and coming from the kingdom; which kingdom has a King, the maker or originator of this gospel, to wit, the Lord Jesus Christ. This same Lord said it "shall be preached." Not that it may be so, or you can preach it if you want to, or let it alone if you want to; nor for filthy lucre's sake. None of these things are an incentive. But it "shall be preached." How? Of a ready mind; a dispensation of the gospel being committed unto those who shall preach it, it being revealed unto and in them. Where shall it be preached? Not simply to the Jews (though at first it was limited to them), but to the Gentiles also; even all the world, both Jew and Gentile. Having thus far seen how it shall be preached, where it shall be preached, and unto whom it shall be preached, now for what purpose

MR. BATTERSBY'S SERMON.

WHILE it is by no means a pleasant task to present objections against generally received expositions of scriptural expressions, every honest mind must be governed by its own understanding, and nothing is beyond the precincts of investigation but that which is clearly declared by the infallible teaching of our Lord. So far as we know, all scientific teachers of religion agree in understanding leaven as symbolical of corruption. In that view it is expounded in the sermon of Mr. Battersby, of London, England, which was inserted by request of a subscriber, in No. 5, current volume of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. It is singular at least that the express language of the Lord in his text did not interpose an impassable barrier against his sweeping assumption that in the symbolic interpretation of leaven it is always to be understood as signifying corruption. The Lord did not say that "Some heresy is like unto leaven;" that "The kingdom of heaven is subjected to the evil influence of something which like leaven shall corrupt its every grain, as leaven affects the particles of meal," or, as he defines it, the "ground flour," until all is corrupted. So learned a man as this Episcopal minister should have distinguished between the "kingdom of heaven," which is likened unto the leaven, and the evil works and false doctrines which have disturbed the peace of the church. Also, it seems a very manifest wresting of the words of our Lord to change that which he declares to be then present, and force its application to a time then far in the future. Jesus did not say, "The time will come when the kingdom of heaven shall be like this leaven." He says it is even while he was speaking to his disciples and the multitude in this parable that "The kingdom of heaven is like leaven, which a woman took, and hid in three measures of meal, till the whole was leavened." It conflicts with all the doctrine of gospel truth as written in the inspired Scriptures, and it subverts all that the saints have been taught in their experience, to regard "the kingdom of heaven" as corrupting the doctrine of the gospel upon which the saints are fed, as represented by the meal in this parable. It would be better to confess our failure to comprehend what is taught by it, than thus to force an exposition which is inconsistent with the clearly declared teaching of the Scriptures. The apostles in meekness acknowledged that while in the flesh even they knew in part only; and surely uninspired believers may acknowledge that there are divine declarations which they cannot comprehend. In consideration of the liability of all finite minds to error, it is safe to accept as truth nothing but that which bears the clear authority of the Spirit of truth in the inspired Scriptures. It is evident that all that testimony is in complete harmony when correctly understood. All apparent conflict in its several parts is attributable to the darkness of the understanding of the reader. Though many passages of Scripture seem to authorize a particular sentiment, one clear declaration of that word against the idea, is sufficient to condemn the construction by which the many passages were made to seem to sustain it.

It was doubtless an oversight on the part of the preacher that he failed to refer to the express commandment of the Lord, in which it was enjoined upon the children of Israel, in bringing a thanksgiving sacrifice, that "Besides the cakes [unleavened], he shall offer for his offering LEAVENED bread with the sacrifice of thanksgiving of his peace offerings."—Lev. vii. 13. Can it be that the Lord enjoins an emblem of corruption as the typical expression of the spiritual adoration and thanksgiving of his saints? Such an exposition of the subject seems to our view inconsistent with the whole revelation of his gospel in saving his people from their sins. Surely there can be no corruption in that everlasting anthem of thanksgiving with which the ransomed of the Lord ascribe unceasing praises to the Lamb of God, whose precious blood cleanses them from all sin. Yet such would seem to be the significance of the positive command that the emblem of corruption should be used in the sacrifice of thanksgiving under the figurative ceremonies of that shadowy dispensation.

Understanding the typical use of leaven as signifying the power by which works are produced, it is clear that the corrupt leaven does indeed manifest its nature in the works of the flesh which are full of all abominations. It is also gloriously revealed in the subjects of salvation that the Spirit of Christ which is in them is the leaven, or living power by which they are moved to love righteousness and abhor iniquity. This is the kingdom of God dwelling in the saints, which cannot be hid. It works in them both to will and to do of the good pleasure of God. Such perfect results do not spring from the leaven of sinful corruption. They can be produced only by the life of Christ working in the chosen members of his spiritual body, comprising every one of his people. "Now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his. And if Christ be in you, the body is dead because of sin; but the Spirit is life because of righteousness."—Rom. viii. 9, 10. From this vital power of God in the saints results every spiritual emotion, desire and consolation. It does indeed destroy and overcome the corrupt workings of the carnal desires of the natural mind; but while they remain in the body of this death they are continually in need of the quickening power of this holy Spirit of life in Christ Jesus. Without this pure and living principle they can render no thanksgiving in Spirit to that God who accepts no other adoration. So Paul entreates the saints, "Wherefore, my beloved, as ye have always obeyed, not as in my presence only, but now much more in my absence, work out your own salvation with fear and trembling; for it is God which worketh in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure."—Phil. ii. 12, 13. Quickened by this divine power working in them, they do "Worship God in the Spirit, and rejoice in Christ Jesus, and have no confidence in the flesh."—Phil. iii. 3. Herein is the substance of which the typical thank-offering was the shadow.

While there is much of the sermon under consideration to which we do not object, it is not our understanding that the "three measures of meal" are designed to symbolize a division of work among the three persons in the Trinity. Our first and sufficient objection to this idea is that it was not until the rise of the Papal hierarchy that the doctrine of the division of the Deity into three persons was invented. Therefore there is no mention of any such division in the inspired volume. This is sufficient to condemn the interpretation given. In addition to this, it appears presumptuous in any uninspired man to claim ability to solve that infinite mystery of godliness which was beyond the grasp of the inspiration bestowed upon the apostles. The blood of myriads of the saints has been shed by the persecuting inventors of this solution of the mystery of God; and it is accepted by the Protestant orders which have sprung from the Roman Catholic organization. Indeed, even some of the most earnest advocates of the doctrine of salvation by grace have accepted the dogma. Yet it can never be proven to be true until the testimony of God is revealed in support of it. It is not clear why the preacher made the application to the Trinity. The number "three" is applied to many other things in the Scriptures. In the only text where it is applied to God it is expressly declared that it is still true that "These three are one." No inspired evidence can be adduced in support of the popularly received doctrine of the division of God into three separate persons. Much less is it possible to sustain the monstrous absurdity that the woman who is the Mother of harlots, as explained by Mr. B., ever was able to hide the leaven of corruption in the holy constituents of the eternal God, even if those elements were scripturally designated as "three persons." Under whatever form our God is revealed, there neither is nor can be any corrupt leaven concealed in him. That doctrine of the grace of God which is called the gospel, is incorruptible as its holy Author. The efforts of antichristian powers have never succeeded in so much as staining the pure river with one drop of the pollution of Babylon. It is certain that all the power of God is interposed to forbid her diffusing her abominations through the whole provision of the gospel of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

While it is necessary for those who derive their existence from the Roman Catholic church (as do all the Protestant churches), to wrest the Scriptures so as to represent that organization as the church of Christ, those who stand upon apostolic ground have not come out from that antichristian church at all. When the sword of Constantine enforced the profession of Catholic religion upon the heathen world, the disciples of Jesus were not found in the church which had thus confessed its reliance upon the help of man. As in the organization of his gospel church at Jerusalem, our Lord declared that "My kingdom is not of this world," so the natural mind can never discern either the church of Christ, or the divine seal which is set upon her in the doctrine of eternal truth. But it is by the revelation of the Spirit of truth, whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him, that the subjects of saving grace are shown the mystery of the kingdom of God. Chosen in the furnace of affliction, and as the lily among thorns, beset with evil on every hand, the church of Christ, which is the gospel kingdom of heaven, still survives all the opposition and enmity of the world; the living power of divine truth can never cease to work in every chosen vessel of mercy, until they "All come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ." The hope of every saint is assailed by the denial of this ultimate triumph of the "kingdom of heaven," in the perfect conformity of every particle of the membership of the body of Christ to his own divine perfection. In that final deliverance of every saint from the bondage of corruption will be fulfilled that which is signified by the leaven being hid in the meal till the whole was leavened. When this was done there was no particle of the meal which had not received the energy of the leaven. So there must be the final conformity of every subject of electing love to the perfection which is revealed in the perfect Redeemer.

It is this irresistible power of the leaven which is presented in the parable. The same wonderful power of life is illustrated by the mustard seed in the preceding parable. As Mr. B. correctly remarks, it is not the design of a parable that every circumstance should be forced to conform to the illustration. The design of the specification of "three measures of meal" may be to include the three dispensations of time in which the kingdom of heaven is revealed. In that division there is the Patriarchal, the Mosaic, and the Gospel dispensation. The living power of the kingdom of heaven is manifest in each of these measures. No opposing power can stop the effectual working of this divine life in the subjects of eternal love.

It is not in any disposition to criticize that these remarks are submitted to the consideration of our readers. If the position assumed by Mr. B., is sustained by the only test of inspired truth, it will be more clearly manifest by comparing it with the infallible standard; if it will not bear this test, then the saints cannot afford to accept it as according to sound doctrine. The fact of Mr. B.'s connection with the established church of England, of itself, should not be considered sufficient reason for rejecting his views. Much precious truth has been spoken and written by men who were numbered among those worldly churches which cannot be acknowledged as the church of Christ. But, it should also be observed that the name of an eminent preacher cannot make that true which is contrary to the doctrine of Christ.

BUILDING UPON THE FOUNDATION.

WILL Elder Jenkins please give his views on 1 Corinthians iii. 12, and oblige an inquirer after truth?

"Now if any man build upon this foundation gold, silver, precious stones, wood, hay, stubble."—1 Cor. iii. 12.

Our dear brother has called attention to a most solemn and important subject; and we sincerely hope we may be enabled, in presenting our views, to show that they are in harmony with the oracles of God; for unless they are sustained by the inspired word they will be nothing more than "wood, hay, stubble," and our labor be in vain, and perhaps worse than vain.

It is well for us to remember that we are not now considering the mere opinion of a dying man, but the words of a man who was as God's mouth, and who spake by inspiration of the Holy Ghost. He calls himself a wise masterbuilder; and this he was by the grace of God given unto him, and not by anything outside of that grace. His knowledge of Greek and Hebrew, in which he had prided himself while a disciple of Gamaliel, did not enable him to see the kingdom of God, nor to build upon Christ, the true foundation laid in Zion. It did not afford him any advantage as a minister of Christ over or above his fellow-apostles and ministers who possessed little worldly knowledge outside of their vocation as fishermen. This apostle uses very strong language when speaking of his natural attainments in connection with the work of the gospel ministry; for he says he counts those natural attainments as dung. "But what things were gain to me, those I counted loss for Christ. Yea, doubtless, and I count all things but loss, for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord, for whom I have suffered the loss of all things, and do count them but dung, that I may win Christ, and be found in him, not having mine own righteousness, which is of the law, but that which is through the faith of Christ, the righteousness which is of God by faith."—Phil. iii. 8, 9. He declares that he preached the gospel, "not with wisdom of words, lest the cross of Christ should be made of none effect." Also, "And I, brethren, when I came to you, came not with excellency of speech or of wisdom, declaring unto you the testimony of God." He declared unto his brethren plain matters of fact, even "the testimony of God" in his own experience. Is it necessary for an individual, in order to declare the testimony of God, to have a knowledge of the Greek and Hebrew languages? No indeed. "Ye see your calling, brethren, how that not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are called: but God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty; and base things of the world, and things which are despised, hath God chosen; yea, and things which are not, to bring to naught things that are; that no flesh should glory in his presence." Paul further declared to these Corinthian saints, "And my speech and my preaching was not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and of power; that your faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God." But did not the apostle Paul speak wisdom? Hear him: "Howbeit we speak wisdom among them that are perfect; yet not the wisdom of this world, nor of the princes of this world, that cometh to naught; but we speak the wisdom of God in a mystery, even the hidden wisdom, which God ordained before the world unto our glory: which none of the princes of this world knew; for had they known it, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory." This wisdom of God came to Paul just as it comes to every gospel minister, and to every subject of the grace of God; that is, exclusively by revelation of God. God reveals the things of his Spirit unto his children, and they know them only by his Spirit. "The things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God." "Which things also we speak, not in the words which man's wisdom teacheth, but which the Holy Ghost teacheth; comparing spiritual things with spiritual."

The "all Scripture given by inspiration of God, and profitable for doctrine, &c., contains all that God ever reveals to his people here in time, and by this inspired record all our doctrine and practice should be tried. Jesus said, "Search the Scriptures;" and Paul exhorted Timothy, as a gospel minister, to "study," and to "give attendance to reading," &c. It is doubtful if any great amount of spiritual benefit has accrued to gospel ministers by the reading of commentaries upon the Scriptures by uninspired men. It certainly is not necessary that they should read such uninspired writings in order to be "able ministers of the New Testament;" and should any minister of Jesus Christ depend upon such things to prepare him to preach, he would be a "dry breast" to God's people. It is generally an easy matter for God's people to know, when listening to a man who is discoursing, whether he is declaring unto them "the testimony of God," as he has received it from God, or is presenting a medley, made up of ideas gathered from the writings of uninspired men, either dead or living, and which have not entered into his own experience. Worldly knowledge has a tendency to "puff up" the possessor of it, and make him feel that he possesses advantages superior to his less informed brethren; particularly if he has a smattering of the "dead languages." Paul says to these Corinthian saints, "Let no man deceive himself. If any man among you seemeth to be wise in this world, let him become a fool, that he may be wise." To the church at Colosse he said, "Let no man beguile you of your reward in a voluntary humility, and worshiping of angels [ministers], intruding into those things which he hath not seen, vainly puffed up by his fleshly mind, and not holding the Head," &c. The revelations from God are not calculated to "puff up" the saints, but to humble them. Many of the sweetest, most comforting and edifying ministers the church has had, in our knowledge, have been those possessed of very little natural erudition, and whose reading and study has been confined almost exclusively to the holy Scriptures. They have spoken out of what God has taught them in their experience, and which they have found written in the Scriptures. It has not been because they were indolent or lazy, but because they were not moved by the Spirit to do otherwise. We do not mean to intimate that it is improper to gain information from whatever quarter we may, in the providence of God; but we do insist that the qualifications of a gospel minister do not come from the reading of the works of uninspired men. The apostle Paul wrote to the Galatian brethren, saying, "But I certify you, brethren, that the gospel which was preached of me is not after man. For I neither received it of man, neither was I taught it, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ." While a minister of Jesus Christ must speak by inspiration of the Holy Ghost, if he really preaches the gospel, yet doubtless he often mixes his own theories or carnal thoughts with God's message; therefore the apostle has established the order of the church thus, "Let the prophets speak two or three, and let the others judge."—1 Cor. xiv. 29. "Despise not prophesyings. Prove all things; hold fast that which is good."—1 Thess. v. 20, 21. It is not probable that there has been a single gospel minister (aside from the apostles) who has not in his ministerial labors built upon the foundation more or less "wood, hay, stubble," as well as "gold, silver, precious stones." But the fire of God ever has and ever will declare the nature of all the work of God's people, whether ministers of the gospel or otherwise. God says, "Is not my word like as a fire?"—Jer. xxiii. 29. Again, "In that day [the gospel day, the day of which the apostle speaks, saying, "Every man's work shall be made manifest; for the day shall declare it, because it shall be revealed by fire; and the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is"] will I make the governors of Judah [the inspired apostles] like an hearth of fire among the wood, and like a torch of fire in a sheaf," &c.—Zech. xii. 6. Thus the fire of God's word, as delivered by the apostles will burn up, consume, destroy, every word and work of his people that has not been wrought in them by his own Spirit; while "the testimony of God" will remain, which is comparable to "gold, silver, precious stones." As only that which God has wrought by his Spirit and power in and by his saints can do them any real good, or afford them any real comfort, how blessed is the Spirit's testimony that it is God's purpose to destroy all else, so that they shall be saved from all their errors in word and deed. They themselves shall be saved so as by fire. O how much time and labor have been lost ("He shall suffer loss") by the saints in studying out and presenting carnal theories, which have neither benefited them nor their fellow-saints. Not only have they experienced loss in time and labor, but how very much suffering also have they and their companions had to endure because of those things. Everything that pertains to Christ, the Foundation, is precious, while all that emanates from our flesh is corrupt and depraved, for in it there dwells no good thing. When we take counsel of our fleshly or carnal minds in building upon "this foundation," which is Christ, we build with matter comparable to "wood, hay, stubble," which "work" shall be tried and ultimately consumed by the "testimony of God," as set forth by the apostles, who are the only wise masterbuilders in Zion. Any hope that is not built upon Christ alone, who is the foundation which God hath laid in Zion, and which the apostles in their official capacity as such have laid or taught, shall surely be found to be as the hope of the hypocrite, which shall perish. In laying the foundation Paul, as well as the other apostles, simply declared and taught what the dear Redeemer had commanded them to teach his disciples; for he said to them, "Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world. Amen."—Matt. xxviii. 19, 20. Whenever the saints build upon this foundation of God, which is in his holy mountains (Psa. lxxxvii. 1), they are abounding in the work of the Lord, and shall suffer no loss; for they shall find that their labor is not in vain in the Lord; thus they have or "receive a reward," even the assurance that they have not labored in vain.

The faith of the saints, which is built upon Christ, the Foundation, is compared to gold, because of its preciousness and durability, and its losing nothing by being tried with fire. Also, the speech or words of the saints are compared to silver and gold, when, like their dear Savior, they are given the tongue of the learned, to speak a word in season to the weary and tried saints. "A word fitly spoken is like apples of gold in pictures of silver."—Prov. xxv. 11; Isa. i. 4. The spiritual wisdom of the saints is also compared with gold and precious stones. "It cannot be gotten for gold, neither shall silver be weighed for the price thereof. It cannot be valued with the gold of Ophir, with the precious onyx, or the sapphire. The gold and the crystal cannot equal it." "No mention shall be made of coral, or of pearls; for the price of wisdom is above rubies."—Job xxviii. 15-18. The precious truth which Jesus taught his disciples, is like unto precious stones; hence he said unto them, "Give not that which is holy unto the dogs, neither cast ye your pearls before swine."—Matt. vii. 6.

The saints themselves are called stones; and they are precious stones, and lively or living stones, having eternal, spiritual life in them; and they are "built up a spiritual house," and are built upon Christ, "the foundation of the apostles and prophets."—1 Peter ii. 5. This is material that will stand the test of the fires of trial and persecution, and therefore is like "gold, silver, precious stones." This is the kind of material who are found coming unto Jesus, "as unto a living stone, disallowed indeed of men, but chosen of God, and precious." This is legitimate and proper material to build upon the foundation of which the apostle speaks. It is worth laboring for and building up. It will not make the gospel workmen ashamed; for the Master himself will approve it. It is living material, sound material, and will never be burned. This is the material that the apostles sought out, and which the ministry of Jesus to-day seek out, to build them upon Christ, the foundation; for "he shall send forth his angels [ministers] with the great sound of a trumpet; and they shall gather together his elect." Under the ministry of the apostles and other ministers these are gathered as the called out, the church, and are built up in their most holy faith by the gifts of the Spirit in the church, who minister "as of the ability that God giveth, that God in all things may be glorified." How beautiful and pleasant is the church built up exclusively of this precious material, free from strange children, with a God-given, faithful ministry, giving goodly words of instruction and comfort. Thus rid and delivered from the hand of strange children, whose mouth speaketh vanity, and whose right hand is a right hand of falsehood, the sons of Zion appear as plants grown up in their youth; her daughters appear as corner stones, polished after the similitude of a palace; her garners are full, affording all manner of store; her sheep bring forth thousands and ten thousands in her streets; her oxen (or ministers) are strong to labor; there is no breaking in, nor going out; there is no complaining in her streets. "Happy is that people that is in such a case; yea, happy is that people whose God is the Lord."—Psa. cxliv. What is so beautiful as a gospel church walking in gospel order, with Jesus in the midst? But as it was in Israel, in the days of the prophet Hosea, so it has sometimes been in spiritual Israel under the gospel dispensation, that strange children have been begotten.—Hosea v. 7. Paul in writing to this Corinthian church charges the same upon them; "for," says he, "some have not the knowledge of God: I speak this to your shame."—1 Cor. xv. 34. Also, the church in Thyatira had some of this illegitimate material among them, even the children of Jezebel, with Jezebel herself. But Jesus said he would kill her children with death, and that all the churches should know that he searcheth the reins and hearts.—Rev. ii. 20-23.

It is worse than useless for the saints to build up a body composed of this kind of dead material; for it is like unto "wood, hay, stubble." That kind of work will be burned, and the builders will suffer loss in various ways.

May it be ours to heed the admonition of the apostle, "But let every man take heed how he buildeth thereupon. For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ." "Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it. Except the Lord keep the city the watchman waketh but in vain. It is vain for you to rise up early, to sit up late, to eat the bread of sorrows: for so he giveth his beloved sleep. Lo, children are a heritage of the Lord, and the fruit of the womb is his reward. As arrows are in the hand of a mighty man, so are children of the youth. Happy is the man that hath his quiver full of them: they shall not be ashamed, but they shall speak with the enemies in the gate."—Psa. cxxvii. J.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

WE have on hand a number of letters written by brethren in Texas, Missouri, West Virginia, and other states, setting forth the troubles and perplexities in the churches, and requesting us to give them a place in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. As we cannot believe that the cause of God and truth would be served by their publication, we must decline to give them to our readers. We assure our brethren who are contending for the truth and the order of the house of God, that we sympathize with them in their trials and persecutions. The saints certainly have no cause to fret themselves because of evil doers, who prosper in their ways, and bring evil devices to pass. The psalmist says, "Evil doers shall be cut off; but those that wait upon the Lord, they shall inherit the earth." From the days of the apostles the churches of the saints have, from time to time, been disturbed and annoyed by restless spirits, by men loving pre-eminence, and desiring to be leaders. The Spirit by David has said, "As for such as turn aside unto their crooked ways, the Lord shall lead them forth with the workers of iniquity." Said the dear Redeemer to his disciples, "It is impossible but that offenses will come; but woe unto him through whom they come. It were better for him that a mill stone were hanged about his neck, and he cast into the sea, than that he should offend one of these little ones."

There might be some encouragement for us to render judgment in cases of disagreement between churches and individuals at a distance, if the several parties would agree to abide by the judgment; but as that is not to be expected, and as we cannot possibly know all the circumstances attending the cases, it would be presuming in us to sit in judgment in such matters.

Occasionally we are requested to announce the exclusion of a minister, even when the statement is not made that he is imposing upon the churches. It seems to us that this is uncalled for. No gospel church should receive the ministrations of a man without knowing his standing at home.

May Israel's God, who "maketh wars to cease unto the end of the earth," give peace and quiet to his Zion in all her borders.

shall it be preached? It is a lamentable truth that some preach it for money, or filthy lucre's sake. Some preach it as a means to accomplish the salvation of men and women from their sins. Others preach it as a help to God in saving sinners. But what saith the Scriptures, the words of the King? It "shall be preached for a witness." For what? "For a witness." What are witnesses for? To testify. What do witnesses testify to or of? The things they see, feel and hear. "I have appeared unto thee for this purpose, to make thee a minister and a witness both of these things which thou hast seen, and of those things in the which I will appear unto thee."—Acts xxvi. 16. Matthew, Mark, Luke, James, Peter, &c., testified to the Jews, and Peter and Paul to the Gentiles, comprising all the world, "Witnessing both to small and great, saying none other things than those which the prophets and Moses did say should come."—Acts xxvi. 22. What did Moses and the prophets say should come? They said "That Christ should suffer, and that he should be the first that should rise from the dead, and should shew light unto the people and to the Gentiles."—Acts xxvi. 23. Then to preach that Christ did come, and suffer, and die, and show light to the people and to the Gentiles, is to witness or testify. What did Paul testify? "How that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures."—1 Cor. xv. 3. "And was raised again for our justification."—Rom. iv. 25. We are not to do this for filthy lucre, nor to say that the doing of this is a means to accomplish the salvation of men and women, nor as a help to God in the salvation of sinners; but simply to testify that the Lord Jesus did, while here in the world, and that on the tree, make a full and complete atonement for the sins of his people; that he redeemed them from the curse of the law; that he made an end of sin for them.—Gal. iii. 13; Daniel ix. 24.

The next question is, Who is to be benefited by this testimony? Surely no one who does not feel interested in the testimony, or who does not feel guilty; but he who feels interested in the testimony cannot really feel so unless he feels guilty; and to feel guilty is to feel the need of a Savior, without being apprised of the Savior having saved you; and it is one of the evidences of being born again, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God.—John i. 13. When testifying of what we have seen and felt, the witness must be a partaker of the fruit. He tells how vile and sinful he is, how prone to evil he is, and of his helplessness; how loving, kind and plenteous is the redemption in Christ Jesus; how he wept, mourned and sighed on account of his sins; how crooked things were made straight, and rough places smooth; how darkness was made light, and joy and peace followed. The hearer who has been thus led is comforted, built up, encouraged, and is led to trust in Christ as their Savior; the Holy Spirit having first quickened them into life, and taught them their guilt and sinfulness; and being witnessed by the preacher and the Bible, there are three witnesses, by which every word shall be established; consequently they begin to rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory.

"Then shall the end come." What end? The end of what? The end of the Jewish dispensation, and the end of the temple and its services. "Then shall they deliver you up to be afflicted." "Then shall many be offended, and shall betray one another." "When ye shall see the abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet, stand in the holy place." "Then let them which are in Judea flee into the mountains." "When ye shall see all these things, know that it is near, even at the doors."—Matt. xxiv. 9, 10, 15, 33. Some have thought the end spoken of here meant the end of time, or the end of the material world. If this were so, it would be useless to flee to the mountains, as the mountains are called upon to fall upon certain ones. But we notice, by observing the history of the Jews, and the downfall of Jerusalem, that those things spoken of by the Savior came to pass in the downfall of the holy city, the dispersion of the Jews from Jerusalem and Judea, and the treading down by the Gentiles, as Jesus said. Therefore we conclude that this was "the end" that should come. And we hear Paul declare, thirty-one years after the death of Christ, that this same gospel "was preached to every creature which is under heaven."—Col. i 23. The "every creature" certainly means Jew and Gentile, as we do not find that those who were commissioned to preach the gospel to every creature ever preached to any but Jews and Gentiles. Consequently the end spoken of came when the gospel was preached for a witness. I frequently stop and meditate upon the signs of the times as they now appear before me, and wonder what is in the near future. The world is now, or at least is fast getting ripe and ready for some dire calamity, I know not what; but I sometimes think it is about time for the winding up of this earthly ball, and a presentiment to take place with me, which I had in my early christian life. O for grace to undertake and go through it. O for grace to uphold in all times of need. The old SIGNS OF THE TIMES has stood and battled for the sovereignty of God, and his doctrine of salvation by grace alone, for many years, against the combined religious innovations of the so-called christian world, and unswervingly has pointed out the "Lo, heres and Lo, theres." But the greatest question yet is, How stands the matter with me? I know, and very many times feel, that in my flesh there dwells no good thing. I am poor, weak, ignorant, sinful, and cannot see afar off. The things that I would, I do not; and the things that I would not, are the things that I do. O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from this state of things? The Lord, mighty in battle, is my only hope. Come, Lord; come quickly. My soul panteth for thee.

WILLARD, Va., Feb. 11, 1893.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—I feel to speak a word of indorsement of Elder Chick's article in this week's SIGNS. I have felt like I wanted to say just what he has in reference to the republication of the proceedings of the meeting at Black Rock in 1832, but could not express it as I would like to; but Elder Chick has fully expressed my mind on the subject. It is good to take a retrospective view once in a while, to "ask for the old paths" trod by those who have gone before us, and to follow them as they have followed Christ; not taking their saying and doing as a pattern, for we have but one pattern, Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, to-day and forever; the one only unchangeable God, who "is in one mind, and none can turn him." I have felt anxious for the republication of those Minutes, that the thousands of young brethren who were not conversant with the history of the separation from the votaries of the god of modern missionism may see and understand that we are not advocating and contending for some new thing, but that the SIGNS OF THE TIMES is to-day, in the face, and in spite of all opposition and persecution, consistently adhering to the principles advocated by those who dared to raise a voice against the innovations which at that time had become popular among the Baptists, and have since hurled their deluded followers into the vortex of false religion, and lost to them all semblance to the church of Jesus Christ.

Your brother in hope,

A. B. FRANCIS.

DE KALB, Ill., Jan. 29, 1893.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—VERY DEAR BRETHREN:—Should you have a few copies of the SIGNS of Jan. 25th, have the kindness to forward four or five to my address. I will just add that, being in a place of public resort last week, I asked and obtained permission to read to those gathered the article by Elder H. M. Curry. The result was quite gratifying, as it drew forth the responsive amens of several of the crowd, two of whom wished to obtain copies to distribute to their respective friends.

The broadcast dissemination of almost every shade of error is producing a reaction here, as elsewhere, which I trust may, under the unerring guidance of him who worketh all things after the counsel of his own most blessed will, result in the fulfillment of that precious declaration by the prophet Isaiah, "They also that erred in spirit shall come to understanding, and they that murmured shall learn doctrine."

O may the liberal libations of the Spirit of the adorable Lord and Master be continually showered upon both editors and correspondents, to render as in the past the SIGNS a rich conduit of spiritual supply to those who are seeking for the good old paths.

I was much delighted to read the dear afflicted sister L. Alexander's experience of conflicts and deliverances wrought in her behalf; but I was sorely grieved to learn the story of her great bodily suffering. If it is the pleasure of the living Head of Zion, may she realize the fulfillment of the exceeding great and precious promise, "As thy days, so shall thy strength be."

"In union with the Lamb,
From condemnation free."

THOMAS NORRIS.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Jan. 5, 1893.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—The SIGNS OF THE TIMES has ever been a welcome visitor to me. I think it has been nearly fifty years since I began to take it; and I have received it ever since, except one year. A few years ago I thought I would have to be deprived of the blessed privilege of reading it, as I became unable to pay for it, and wrote you to that effect. I have not language or words to express my gratitude to the Giver of all blessings bestowed upon me, a poor, dependent worm of the dust. Truly the Lord has ever been mindful of me, as well in my uprisings as in my downittings, manifesting his love to me, in putting that love in the hearts of his dear children to remember me, though I feel unworthy of that love and kindness to me in this my time of need. I hope I have the desire to say with the psalmist David, "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits" to me, a sinner saved by grace, I trust. And now may that God, the giver of all blessings, and the God of all comfort, bless all his dear children with all needful blessings. May it be his will to grant unto us the Spirit of grace, that we may be enabled to adorn the doctrine of our Savior in a well-ordered life and godly conversation, and in the end have life everlasting, is the desire of your unworthy brother in hope,

SILAS G. SUPPLEE.

PLEASE STOP MY PAPER.

At least nine out of every ten writing us to discontinue their paper add that it is not on account of their objection to anything the paper contains, but that they are not financially able to continue it. We would ask all such if they have taken into consideration the amount they have economized by stopping their paper. It is less than four-sevenths of a cent a day.

SEE SUPPLEMENT.

THE second paragraph of Supplement, beginning, "To every old subscriber," &c., should be interpreted to read, "and send the paper to the new subscriber for the year 1893." The rest of the circular we think is too clearly expressed to need any further explanation.

We most earnestly request our brethren and friends to consider the third paragraph, and assist us all they possibly can on the terms therein stated, and thereby enable us to publish the paper in 1894 on the terms mentioned in the latter part of the fifth and sixth paragraphs. If you did not receive your Supplement, or have lost it, you can, if you are a subscriber to the paper, obtain a revised copy by writing us to send you one.

If you are not so situated that you can give this matter the time and attention you would like to, perhaps you have some reliable friend that you could interest in the work. If so, you are at liberty to give him the Supplement, and let him act in your name.

NEXT NUMBER.

IN our next issue, March 1st, we propose, the Lord willing, to commence the publication of the Minutes of the proceedings and the resolutions drafted at the meeting of the brethren at Black Rock, Md., in 1832, at the time the division took place between what is now known as the Old and New School Baptists in this country. After publishing the above we expect to run in serial form the able and powerful orations of Edward Irving before the London Missionary Board, May, 1824.

We at first anticipated commencing these articles with the beginning of the present volume; but as we are receiving each number such large accessions to our list of subscribers, we decided to delay their publication until the time mentioned above, in order to give an opportunity to as many as possible to have the articles complete.

IT IS VERY IMPORTANT

That great care should be taken in sending a renewal of subscriptions to give us the same name as the one to whom the paper is already coming. If the party is married be sure the initials are given correctly; for if the paper is coming in the wife's name and the husband writes us to send the paper the next year, and signs his own name, we have no means of knowing that the person to whom the paper is going is his wife; and not finding his name on our list he is entered as a new subscriber and the paper sent to both; or if the paper is going in the husband's name and the renewal sent on in the wife's name, the result will be the same. The best way is to inclose in your letter one of the little pink slips containing the name pasted either on the margin of the paper or on the wrapper in which it comes.

JAN. 25th, 1893, by the same, in the Old School Baptist meeting-house at Snow Hill, in the presence of a large company of friends and spectators, Mr. T. Earnest Holloway, of Salisbury, and Miss Gertrude A. Truitt, of Worcester Co., Md.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

SISTER Anna M. Vredenburg died at her home in the city of Brooklyn, N. Y., on Jan. 7th, 1893.

She was baptized in the fellowship of the Ebenezer Baptist Church in the city of New York, Jan. 13th, 1861, by Elder James C. Goble. Her walk and conversation during the many years that her membership existed bore evidence to the fact that she dearly loved the doctrine of God our Savior and the assemblies of his saints.

Funeral services were held on Monday evening, Jan. 9th, on which occasion Elder Wm. L. Beebe spoke from the following words, "But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him."—1 Thess. iv. 13, 14.

SISTER Ann Henderson died at her home at Far Rockaway, N. Y., on Jan. 1st, 1893. She was baptized in the fellowship of the Ebenezer Baptist Church, in the city of New York, by Elder Silas H. Durand, on Sept. 4th, 1882. She was a faithful follower of the meek and lowly Jesus, and was released from the cares, trials and temptations of this mortal pilgrimage with a full assurance that she, like the psalmist David, will be satisfied when she awakes with the likeness of him who died for her sins and rose again for her justification.

"Asleep in Jesus! peaceful rest!
Whose waking is supremely blest;
No fear, no woe, shall dim that hour
That manifests the Savior's power."

At the request of the bereaved family I write this notice of the death of our dear sister, Mrs. E. P. Stringer.

The subject of this notice was born Nov. 26th, 1840, in Butler Co., Ala., being the youngest of six sisters, four of whom survive her. She was married to Wm. J. Stringer in 1855, came to Arkansas with her husband in 1860, settled in Ouachita County, where she united with the Primitive Baptist Church called Bethel, and continued steadfast in the faith. She raised an interesting family consisting of one son and five daughters, who still remain with their dear father to battle with the troubles of this sin-stricken world. Sister Stringer suffered for two years with nervous debility and heart disease. She manifested christian fortitude amid all her afflictions. She quietly passed away Oct. 14th, 1892. We miss her in her home and at the meeting-house. We go sorrowing, yet we feel assured that our loss is her eternal gain.

"Dearest sister, thou hast left us,
And our loss we greatly feel;
But 'tis God that has bereft us,
He can all our sorrows heal."

MARY E. McDONALD.

CAMDEN, Ark.

DIED—At the residence of her son, at Halcottsville, Delaware Co., N. Y., Jan. 15th, 1893, very suddenly, Mrs. Elizabeth Davis, of Andes, Delaware Co., N. Y., aged 69 years.

Sister Davis was a member of the Old School Baptist Church of Andes, having united with that church about thirty years ago, continuing a very worthy member to the day of her death. She was at their meeting on Saturday and Sunday before. While on a visit to her son, fifteen miles from home, she died very suddenly from what is termed heart failure. She was left a widow nineteen years ago, with a large family of children to care for. With their assistance and the blessing of God she was prospered greatly, although she was from time to time made to feel sore chastisements in the loss of children, as two good boys were taken from her by death. She was a very meek and loving sister in the church, and nothing delighted her more than to see the people of God dwelling together in peace, and to hear her Savior crowned Lord of all in the preaching. We will greatly miss her company, yet we trust that our loss is gain to her. She had selected a portion of Scripture some years before to be used on the occasion of her death. Elder F. W. Keene was present and preached from the words, "Thou wilt guide me by thy counsel, and afterward receive me to glory."

She has left four sons, three daughters and a number of other relatives, with the church, to mourn. May the Lord comfort and sustain them, is my prayer, for Jesus' sake.

ALSO,

DIED—At the home of her nephew, in Andes, Delaware Co., N. Y., Feb. 2d, 1893, Miss Parthena Davis, after a two weeks' illness from injury and old age, aged 74 years.

She was not a professor of religion, yet entertained a good hope through grace, and even in old age had a great desire to be baptized, but from failing strength and health was unable to get to meeting. On the night that her sister-in-law (sister Elizabeth Davis) was brought home she received an injury from a fall, that broke her hip. She was a great sufferer, and her age was so great that she gradually wore out, until death relieved her from her suffering.

Thus a home is bereft of two of its occupants in so short a time, the last leaving one brother, two sisters and numerous relatives to mourn, yet not as those who have no hope. I was present on the occasion, and tried to comfort the mourning friends from the words of Paul, Romans vii. 24, 25. May God comfort the afflicted.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date. This date denotes the time at which your subscription expires; and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

MINUTES OF THE PROCEEDINGS, AND RESOLUTIONS DRAFTED, BY THE PARTICULAR BAPTISTS, CONVENED AT BLACK ROCK, MD., SEPTEMBER 28, 1832.

(Copied from the first number of the "Signs of the Times.")

A MEETING of Particular Baptists of the Old School convened agreeable to a previous appointment at the Black Rock meeting-house, Baltimore, Md., on Friday, 28th September, 1832.

The introductory sermon was preached by Elder Samuel Trott, of Delaware, from Daniel ii. 34, 35: "Thou sawest till that a stone was cut out without hands," &c.

The meeting was then called to order by Elder John Healy, of Baltimore.

Prayer by Elder Thomas Barton, of Pennsylvania.

Elder Wm. Gilmore, of Virginia, was elected Moderator, and Elder Gabriel Conklin, Clerk.

A brief statement of the object for which the meeting had been called was made by the Moderator, and thereupon it was

Resolved, That a committee of seven brethren, viz., Trott, Healy, Poteet, Barton and Beebe, together with the Moderator and Clerk, be appointed to prepare an Address expressive of the views of this meeting, touching the object for which it was convened.

Brethren Scott, Cole, Ensor and Shaw were appointed to make the necessary arrangements for preaching during this meeting.

Prayer by brother Trott.

Adjourned to 9 o'clock to-morrow morning.

SATURDAY MORNING, 9 o'clock.

Met pursuant to adjournment.

Prayer by brother Choat.

The committee appointed to prepare an Address submitted the following, which was unanimously adopted.

ADDRESS.

To the Particular Baptist Churches of the "Old School"* in the United States.

*In reference to the epithet "Old School," which we have used as a discriminating term, we beg leave to say that we were led to adopt it from its having been applied to us by others; and that in our use of it we have reference to the school of Christ, in distinction from all other schools which have sprung up since the apostles' days.

BRETHREN:—It constitutes a new era in the history of the Baptists when those who would follow the Lord fully, and who therefore manifest a solicitude to be, in all things pertaining to religion, conformed to the Pattern showed in the mount, are by Baptists charged with antinomianism, inertness, stupidity, &c., for refusing to go beyond the word of God; but such is the case with us.

Brethren, we would not shun reproach, nor seek an exemption from persecution; but we would affectionately entreat those Baptists who revile us themselves, or who side with such as do, to pause and consider how far they have departed from the ancient principles of the Baptists, and how that in reproaching us they stigmatize the memory of those whom they have been used to honor as eminent and useful servants of Christ, and of those who have borne the brunt of the persecutions leveled against the Baptists in former ages. For it is a well-known fact that it was in ages past a uniform and distinguishing trait in the character of the Baptists that they required a "Thus saith the Lord," that is, direct authority from the word of God for the order and practices, as well as the doctrine, they received in religion.

It is true that many things to which we object as departures from the order established by the great Head of the church, through the ministry of his apostles, are by others considered to be connected with the very essence of religion, and absolutely necessary to the prosperity of Christ's kingdom. They attach great value to them, because human wisdom suggests their importance. We allow the Head of the church alone to judge for us; we therefore esteem those things to be of no use to the cause of Christ which he has not himself instituted.

We will notice severally the claims of the principal of these modern inventions, and state some of our objections to them for your candid consideration.

We commence with the Tract Societies. These claim to be extensively useful. Tracts claim their thousands converted. They claim the prerogative of carrying the news of salvation into holes and corners, where the gospel would otherwise never come; of going as on the wings of the wind, carrying salvation in their train; and they claim each to contain gospel enough, should it go where the Bible has never come, to lead a soul to the knowledge of Christ. The nature and extent of these and the like claims, made in favor of tracts by their advocates, constitute a good reason why we should reject them. These claims represent tracts as possessing in these respects a superiority over the Bible, and over the institution of the gospel ministry, which is charging the great I Am with a deficiency of wisdom. Yea, they charge God with folly; for why has he given us the extensive revelation contained in the Bible, and given the Holy Spirit to take of the things of Christ and show them to us, if a little tract of four pages can lead a soul to the knowledge of Christ? But let us consider the more rational claims presented by others in favor of tracts, as that they constitute a convenient way of disseminating religious instruction among the more indigent and thoughtless classes of society. Admitting the propriety of this claim, ~~could it be kept separated from other~~ pretensions, still can we submit to the distribution of tracts becoming an order of our churches or our associations, without countenancing the prevalent idea that tracts have become an instituted means approved of God for the conversion of sinners, and hence that the distribution of them is a religious act, and on a footing with supporting the gospel ministry?

If we were to admit that tracts may have occasionally been made instrumental by the Holy Ghost for imparting instruction or comfort to inquiring minds, it would by no means imply that tracts are an instituted means of salvation, to speak after the manner of the popular religionists, nor that they should be placed on a footing with the Bible and the preached gospel in respect to imparting the knowledge of salvation.

Again, we readily admit the propriety of an individual's publishing and distributing, or of several individuals uniting to publish and distribute what they wish circulated, whether in the form of tracts or otherwise; but still we cannot admit the propriety of uniting with or upon the plans of the existing Tract Societies, even laying aside the idea of their being attempted to be palmed upon us as religious institutions. Because that upon the plan of these societies those who unite with them pay their money for publishing and distributing they know not what under the name of religious truth; and what is worse, they submit to have sent into their families weekly or monthly, and to circulate among their neighbors, anything and everything for religious reading which the agent or publishing committee may see fit to publish. They thus become accustomed to receive everything as good which comes under the name of religion, whether it be according to the word of God or not; and are trained to the habit of letting others judge for them in matters of religion, and are therefore fast preparing to become the dupes of priestcraft. Can any conscientious follower of the Lamb submit to such plans? If others can, we cannot.

Sunday Schools come next under consideration. These assume the same high stand as do Tract Societies. They claim the honor of converting their tens of thousands; of leading the tender minds of children to the knowledge of Jesus; of being as properly the instituted means of bringing children to the knowledge of salvation as is the preaching of the gospel that of bringing adults to the same knowledge, &c. Such arrogant pretensions we feel bound to oppose. First, because these as well as the pretensions of the Tract Societies are grounded upon the notion that conversion or regeneration is produced by impressions made upon the natural mind by means of religious sentiments instilled into it; and if the Holy Ghost is allowed to be at all concerned in the thing, it is in a way which implies his being somehow blended with the instruction, or necessarily attendant upon it; all of which we know to be wrong.

Secondly, because such schools were never established by the apostles nor commanded by Christ. There were children in the days of the apostles. The apostles possessed as great a desire for the salvation of souls, as much love to the cause of Christ, and knew as well what God would own for bringing persons to the knowledge of salvation, as any do at this day. We therefore must believe that if these schools were of God we should find some account of them in the New Testament.

Thirdly. We have exemplified in the case of the Pharisees the evil consequences of instructing children in the letter of the Scripture, under the notion that this instruction constitutes a saving acquaintance with the word of God. We see in that instance it only made hypocrites of the Jews; and as the Scriptures declare that Christ's words are spirit and life, and that the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, we cannot believe it will have any better effect on the children in our day.

The Scriptures enjoin upon parents to bring up their children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord; but this, instead of countenancing, forbids the idea of parents intrusting the religious education of their children to giddy, unregenerated, young persons, who know no better than to build them up in the belief that they are learning the religion of Christ, and to confirm them in their natural notions of their own goodness.

But whilst we thus stand opposed to the plan and use of these Sunday Schools, and to the S. S. Union, in every point, we wish it to be distinctly understood that we consider Sunday Schools for the purpose of teaching poor children to read, whereby they may be enabled to read the Scriptures for themselves, in neighborhoods where there is occasion for them, and when properly conducted, without that ostentation so commonly connected with them, to be useful and benevolent institutions, worthy of the patronage of all the friends of civil liberty.

We pass to the consideration of the Bible Society. We are aware, brethren, that this institution presents itself to the mind of the christian as supported by the most plausible pretext. The idea of giving the Bible without note or comment, to those who are unable to procure it for themselves, is in itself considered, calculated to meet the approbation of all who know the importance of the sacred Scriptures. But under this auspicious guise, we see reared in the case of the American Bible Society, an institution as foreign from anything which the gospel of Christ calls for, as are the kingdoms of this world from the kingdom of Christ. We see a combination formed, in which are united the man of the world, the vaunting professor, and the humble follower of Jesus; the leading characters in politics, the dignitaries in church, and from them some of every grade, down to the poor servant girl, who can snatch from her hard-earned wages fifty cents a year for the privilege of being a member. We see united in this combination all parties in politics and all sects in religion; and the distinctive differences of the one, and the sectarian barriers of the other, in part thrown aside to form the union. At the head of this vast body we see placed a few leading characters, who have in their hands the management of its enormous printing establishment and its immense funds, and the control of its powerful influence, extended by means of agents and auxiliaries to every part of the United States. We behold its anniversary meetings converted into a great religious parade, and forming a theatre for the orator who is ambitious of preferment, either in the pulpit, in the legislative hall, or at the bar, to display his eloquence and elicit the cheers of the grave assemblage. Now, brethren, to justify our opposition to the Bible Society it is not necessary for us to say that any of its members have manifested a disposition to employ its power for the subversion of our liberties. It is enough for us to say,

1st. That such a monstrous combination, concentrating so much power in the hands of a few individuals, could never be necessary for supplying the destitute with Bibles. Individual printing establishments would readily be extended so as to supply Bibles to any amount and in any language that might be called for, and at as cheap a rate as they have ever been sold by the Bible Society.

2d. That the humble followers of Jesus could accomplish their benevolent wishes for supplying the needy with Bibles with more effect and more to their satisfaction by managing the purchase and distribution of them for themselves; and such will never seek popular applause by having their liberality trumpeted abroad through the medium of the Bible Society.

3d. That the Bible Society, whether we consider it in its monied foundation for membership and directorship, in its hoarding up of funds, in its blending together all distinctions between the church and the world, or in its concentration of power, is an institution never contemplated by the Lord Jesus as connected with his kingdom; therefore not a command concerning it is given in the decree published, nor a sketch of it drawn in the pattern showed.

4th That its vast combination of worldly power and influence lodged in the hands of a few, renders it a dangerous engine against the liberties, both civil and religious, of our country, should it come under the control of those disposed so to employ it. The above remarks apply with equal force to the other great national institutions, as the American Tract Society, and Sunday School Union, &c., &c.

We will now call your attention to the subject of Missions. Previous to stating our objections to the mission plans, we will meet some of the false charges brought against us relative to this subject, by a simple and unequivocal declaration, that we do regard as of the first importance the command given of Christ, primarily to his apostles, and through them to his ministers in every age, to "Go into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature," and do feel an earnest desire to be found acting in obedience thereunto, as the providence of God directs our way, and opens a door of utterance for us. We also believe it to be the duty of individuals and churches to contribute according to their abilities, for the support, not only of their pastors, but also of those who go preaching the gospel of Christ among the destitute. But we at the same time contend, that we have no right to depart from the order which the Master himself has seen fit to lay down, relative to the ministration of the word. We therefore cannot fellowship the plans for spreading the gospel, generally adopted at this day, under the name of Missions; because we consider those plans throughout a subversion of the order marked out in the New Testament.

1st. In reference to the medium by which the gospel minister is to be sent forth to labor in the field. Agreeable to the prophecy going before, that out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem, the Lord has manifestly established the order, that his ministers should be sent forth by the churches. But the mission plan is to send them out by a Mission Society. The gospel society or church is to be composed of baptized believers; the poor is placed on an equal footing with the rich, and money is of no consideration, with regard to membership, or church privileges. Not so with Mission Societies; they are so organized that the ungenerate, the enemies of the Cross of Christ, have equal privileges as to membership, &c., with the people of God, and money is the principal consideration; a certain sum entitles to membership, a larger sum to life membership, a still larger to directorship, &c., so that their constitutions, contrary to the direction of James, are partial, saying to the rich man, sit thou here, and to the poor, stand thou there. In Christ's kingdom, all his subjects are sons, and have equal rights, and an equal voice, as well in calling persons into the ministry as in other things. But the mission administration is all lodged in the hands of a few, who are distinguished from the rest, by great swelling titles, as Presidents, Vice Presidents, &c. Again, each gospel church acts as the independent kingdom of Christ in calling and sending forth its members into the ministry. Very different from this is the mission order. The mission community being so arranged that from the little Mite Society, on to the State Conventions, and from them on to the Triennial Convention, and General Board, there is formed a general amalgamation, and a concentration of power in the hands of a dozen dignitaries, who with some exceptions have the control of all the funds designed for supporting ministers among the destitute, at home and abroad, and the sovereign authority to designate who from among the professed ministers of Christ, shall be supported from these funds, and also to assign them the field of their labors. Yea, the authority to appoint females, and schoolmasters, and printers, and farmers, as such, to be solemnly set apart by prayer and the imposition of hands, as missionaries of the cross, and to be supported from these funds.

Whereas in ancient times the preachers of the gospel by the Holy Ghost. Acts xiii. 1, 4.

2d. In reference to ministerial support.—The gospel order is to extend support to them who preach the gospel; but the mission plan is to hire persons to preach. The gospel order is not to prefer one before another, and to do nothing by partiality. See 1 Tim. v. 17, 21. But the Mission Boards exclude all from a participation in the benefits of their funds who do not come under their direction and own their authority, however regularly they may have been set apart according to gospel order to the work of the ministry, and however zealously they may be laboring to preach the gospel among the destitute. And what is more, these Boards by their auxiliaries and agents so scour every hole and corner to scrape up money for their funds that the people think they have nothing left to give to a preacher who may come among them alone upon the authority of Christ and by the fellowship of the church. Formerly not only did preachers generally feel themselves bound to devote a part of their time to traveling and preaching among the destitute, but the people also among whom they came dispensing the word of life felt themselves bound to contribute something to meet their expenses. These were the days when christian affections flowed freely. Then the hearts of the preachers flowed out toward the people, and the affections of the people were manifested toward the preachers who visited them. There was then more preaching of the gospel among the people at large, according to the number of Baptists, than has ever been since the rage of missions commenced.—How different are things now from what they were in those by-gone days. Now, generally speaking, persons who are novices in the gospel, however learned they may profess to be in the sciences, have taken the field in the place of those who, having been taught in the school of Christ, were capacitated to administer consolation to God's afflicted people.—The missionary, instead of going into such neighborhoods as Christ's ministers used to visit, where they would be most likely to have an opportunity of administering food to the poor of the flock, seeks the more populous villages and towns, where he can attract the most attention, and do the most to promote the cause of missions and other popular institutions. His leading motive, judging from his movements, is not love to souls, but love of fame; hence his anxiety to have something to publish of what he has done, and hence his anxiety to constitute churches, even taking disaffected, disorderly, and as has been the case, excluded persons, to form a church, in the absence of better materials. And the people, instead of glowing with the affection for the preacher as such, feel burdened with the whole system of modern mendicaney, but have not resolution to shake off their oppression, because it is represented so deistical to withhold and so popular to give.

Brethren, we cheerfully acknowledge that there have been some honorable exceptions to the character we have here drawn of the modern missionary, and some societies have existed under the name of Mission Societies which were in some important points exceptions from the above drawn sketch; but on a general scale we believe we have given a correct view of the mission plans and operations, and of the effects which have resulted from them, and our hearts really sicken at this state of things. How can we therefore forbear to express our disapprobation of the system that has produced it?

Colleges and Theological Schools next claim our attention. In speaking of colleges we wish to be distinctly understood that it is not to colleges or collegial education, as such, that we have any objection. We would cheerfully afford our own children such an education did circumstances warrant the measure. But we object, in the first place, to sectarian colleges, as such. The idea of a Baptist College and of a Presbyterian College, &c., necessarily implies that our distinct views of church government, of gospel doctrine and gospel ordinances are connected with human sciences, a principle which we cannot admit; for we believe the kingdom of Christ to be altogether a kingdom not of this world. In the second place, we object to the notion of attaching professorships of divinity to colleges; because this evidently implies that the revelation which God has made of himself is a human science, on a footing with mathematics, philosophy, law, &c., which is contrary to the general tenor of revelation, and indeed to the very idea itself of a revelation. We perhaps need not add that we have for the same reasons strong objections to colleges conferring the degree of Doctor of Divinity, and to preachers receiving it.—Thirdly. We decidedly object to persons, after professing to have been called of the Lord to preach his gospel, going to a college or academy to fit themselves for that service.—1st. Because we believe that Christ possesses perfect knowledge of his own purposes, and of the proper instruments by which to accomplish them. If he has occasion for a man of science, he having power over all flesh, will so order it that the individual shall obtain the requisite learning before he calls him to his service, as was the case with Saul of Tarsus, and others since; and thus avoid subjecting himself to the imputation of weakness. For should Christ call a person to labor in the gospel field who was unqualified for the work assigned him, it would manifest him to be deficient in knowledge relative to the proper instruments to employ, or defective in power to provide them. 2d. Because we believe that the Lord calls no man to preach his gospel till he has made him experimentally acquainted with that gospel, and endowed him with the proper measure of gifts suiting the field he designs him to occupy; and the person giving himself up in obedience to the voice of Christ will find himself learning in Christ's own school. But when a person professedly called of Christ to the gospel ministry concludes that, in order to be useful, he must first go and obtain an academical education, he must judge that human science is of more importance in the ministry than that knowledge and those gifts which Christ imparts to his servants. To act consistently then with his own principles he will place his chief dependence for usefulness on his scientific knowledge, and aim mostly to display this in his preaching. This person, therefore, will pursue a very different course in his preaching from that marked out by the great apostle to the Gentiles, who determined to know nothing among the people save Jesus Christ and him crucified.

As to Theological Schools, we shall at present content ourselves with saying that they are a reflection upon the faithfulness of the Holy Ghost, who is engaged according to the promise of the great Head of the church to lead the disciples into all truth. See John xvi. 13. Also, that in every age, from the school at Alexandria down to this day, they have been a real pest to the church of Christ. Of this we could produce abundant proof, did the limits of our address admit their insertion.

We now pass to the last item which we think it necessary particularly to notice, viz., four-days or protracted meetings. Before stating our objections to these, however, we would observe that we consider the example worthy to be imitated which the apostles set of embracing every opportunity consistently with prudence for preaching the gospel wherever they met with an assembly, whether in a Jew's synagogue on the seventh day or in a christian assembly on the first day of the week; and the exhortation to be instant in season and out of season we would gladly accept. Therefore, whenever circumstances call a congregation together from day to day, as at an association or the like, we would embrace the opportunity of preaching the gospel to them from time to time, so often as they shall come together; but to the principles and plans of protracted meetings, distinguishingly so called, we do decidedly object. The principle of these meetings we cannot fellowship. Regeneration, we believe, is exclusively the work of the Holy Ghost, performed by his divine power, at his own sovereign pleasure, according to the provisions of the everlasting covenant; but these meetings are got up either for the purpose of inducing the Holy Spirit to regenerate multitudes who would otherwise not be converted, or to convert them themselves by the machinery of these meetings, or rather to bring them into their churches by means of exciting their animal feelings, without any regard to their being born again. Which ever of these may be considered the true ground upon which these meetings are founded, we are at a loss to know how any person who has known what it is to be born again can countenance them.

The plans of these meetings are equally as objectionable; for, in the first place, all doctrinal preaching, or in other words, all illustrations of God's plan of salvation, are excluded professedly from these meetings. Hence they would make believers of their converts without presenting any fixed truths to their minds to believe. Whereas God has chosen his people to salvation through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the TRUTH. 2 Thess. ii. 13.

Secondly. The leaders of these meetings fix standards by which to decide of persons' repentance and desire of salvation, which the word of God nowhere warrants, such as rising off their seats, coming to anxious seats, or going to a certain place, &c.—Whereas the New Testament has given us a standard from which we have no right to depart, viz., that of bringing forth fruits meet for repentance.

Thirdly. They lead the people to depend on mediators other than the Lord Jesus Christ to obtain peace for them, by offering themselves as intercessors for them with God;—whereas the Scriptures acknowledge but the one God and one Mediator.

Some may be ready to inquire whether protracted meetings, as such, may not with propriety be held, providing they be held without excluding doctrinal preaching, or introducing any of these new plans. However others may judge and act, we cannot approve of such meetings for the following reasons.

1st. Because by appointing and holding a protracted meeting, as such, although we may not carry it to the same excesses to which others do, yet as most people will make no distinction between it and those meetings where all the borrowed machinery from Methodist camp-meetings is introduced, we shall generally be considered as countenancing those meetings.

2d. Because the motives we could have for conforming to the custom of holding these newly invented meetings are such as we think cannot bear the test. For we must be induced thus to conform to the reigning custom either in order to shun the reproach generally attached to those who will not conform to what is popular, or to try the experiment whether our holding a four days' meeting will not induce the Holy Ghost to produce a revival among us commensurate with the strange fire enkindled by others; or else we must be led to this plan from having imbibed the notion that the Holy Ghost is somehow so the creature of human feelings that he is led to regenerate persons by our getting their animal feelings excited; and therefore that in the same proportion as we can by any measure get the feelings of the people aroused, there will be a revival of religion. This latter motive can scarcely be supposed to have place with any who would not go the whole length of every popular measure.—But 1st. We do not believe it becoming a follower of Jesus to seek an exemption from reproach by conforming to the schemes of men. 2d. We believe the Holy Ghost to be too sacred a being to be trifled with by trying experiments upon him. And 3d. We believe the Holy Ghost to be God. We would as soon expect that the Father would be induced to predestinate persons to the adoption of children by their feelings being excited, and the Son be induced to redeem them, as that the Holy Ghost would be thus induced to quicken them. These three are one. The purpose of the Father, the redemption of the Son, and the regenerating power of the Holy Ghost, must run in perfect accordance, and commensurate one with the other.

Brethren, we have thus laid before you some of our objections to the popular schemes in religion, and the reasons why we cannot fellowship them. Ponder these things well. Weigh them in the balances of the sanctuary; and then say if they are not such as justify us in standing aloof from those plans of men, and those would-be religious societies, which are bound together, not by the fellowship of the gospel, but by certain money payments. If you cannot for yourselves meet the reproach by separating yourselves from those things which the word of God does not warrant, still allow us the privilege to obey God rather than man.

There is, brethren, one radical difference between us and those who advocate these various institutions which we have noticed to which we wish to call your attention. It is this: they declare the gospel to be a system of means; these means it appears they believe to be of human contrivance; and they act accordingly. But we believe the gospel dispensation to embrace a system of faith and obedience, and we would act according to our belief. We believe, for instance, that the seasons of declension, of darkness, of persecutions, &c., to which the church of Christ is at times subject, are designed by the wise Disposer of all events; not for calling forth the inventive geniuses of men to remove the difficulties, but for trying the faith of God's people in his wisdom, power and faithfulness to sustain his church. On him, therefore, would we repose our trust, and wait his hour of deliverance, rather than rely upon an arm of flesh. Are we called to the ministry, although we may feel our own insufficiency for the ADOPTION.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—A number of us feel anxious to know your views respecting the doctrine of Adoption as taught in the New Testament. Does adoption affect the soul of man, or anything that survives this mortal body, or material man? Or, Are we to understand that the body is the thing affected by adoption? We have made this request at different times in the past, and we still desire to know your views on the subject.

REPLY.

"For ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear; but ye have received the Spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father."—Rom. viii. 15.

It is of no importance to any of the saints what may be the views of finite mortals in reference to any point of the doctrine of God our Savior. Even the chosen apostles of Christ must tarry in the city of Jerusalem until they were endued with power from on high, before they could correctly understand and expound the gospel as the truth is in Jesus. Not only the weak and ignorant, but the most gifted servants of God, are entirely dependent upon the Spirit of truth for the comprehension of the things of Jesus even as revealed in the written word. While in the things which pertain to this world the advantages of education are not to be denied, when seeking divine light the saints have never found the attainments of natural wisdom of any value. Saul of Tarsus had learned as much in the schools of men as any modern scientist, yet he confessed that he did not so much as know the Lord who spoke to him when on his way to Damascus; while the unborn John the Baptist certainly had not been taught in earthly schools when he recognized his Lord in the meeting of Mary and Elizabeth.—Luke i. 44. Failure to observe this difference between the wisdom of God and the teaching of men led to the introduction of religious schools, which only serve to foster persecution of those who still trust in the Lord alone. May the saints be taught that "Salvation is of the Lord" in temporal things as well as in their everlasting deliverance from the power of sin and death. They must now be led by the Spirit into all truth, just as that Spirit gave faith to Abel, by which he testified his trust in the bleeding Lamb of God. And he was just as competent to show that truth to Cain as is any saint now to show it to his fellow-mortal. Only as led by the Spirit can one saint show to another the truth which has been revealed in his own heart. There must be the same faith in the hearer as in the speaker, that it may be revealed from faith to faith.

In considering the doctrine of God as expressed in the subject of Adoption, it is certainly safe to give especial heed to what is written of it in the inspired record. The text above quoted is the first in which the word is found. In only four other passages is it mentioned, and in each instance it is written by Paul. In every case the original word is the same, meaning "appointment of sons." In the 23d verse of this same chapter it is said that "Ourselves also, which have the first-fruits of the Spirit, even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body." This is the condition of those who have "received the Spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father!" Having already received the Spirit of it, they are now waiting for this manifestation of the sons of God in the fullness of the adoption. The next use of the word is in the following chapter, where it is applied to the national Israelites as the chosen people of God among the nations of the earth. There was a sense in which the adoption pertained to them; yet it was like all the other favors bestowed upon that people, having only a typical application to them. In being selected by the choice of the Lord as his own peculiar nation the children of Jacob were subjects of his adoption. "Thus saith the Lord, Israel is my son, even my first-born."—Ex. iv. 22. This is the only case in which the word is used in reference to any others but the saints. To the churches of Galatia Paul wrote, "But when the fullness of time was come, God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons. And because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying, Abba, Father." Young's Concordance says that this word, "Abba," is a Chaldee word, signifying "Father." This is identical with the Greek word which is used in connection with it in Mark xiv. 36, and in these two passages of Paul's writing. With this translation, the text perfectly harmonizes with the declaration, "Wherefore I give you to understand, that no man speaking by the Spirit calleth Jesus accursed; and no man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost."—1 Cor. xii. 3. Only by the Spirit of the Son of God can any sinner claim the relationship of a son in calling upon God as his Father. Doubtless there is special significance in the use of this word "Abba" in the text. Abram was a native of Ur of the Chaldees in his natural birth; and in him there is exemplified the experience of all the faithful in Christ Jesus. It is by the Spirit of adoption that they cry unto God in their native language as lost sinners, as well as that they cast all their care upon him as their tender Father, whose constant watchfulness preserves them from evil in their wanderings through this enemy's land where they now sojourn. Until this Spirit is given unto them, they can know God only as the Holy One whose just judgment forbids that mercy should be extended for their deliverance from condemnation. When the Spirit of adoption enables the conscious sinner to cry to God as his Father, there is the living witness abiding in that one that he is born of God. He has that faith which is the fruit of the Spirit; "For he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him." By no cultivation can the natural mind of man be made to produce this indispensable pre-requisite qualification for coming unto God. Those who consider it an easy thing for the natural man to believe, certainly fail to observe the fact that belief must result from evidence; and that faith is the only evidence of things not seen. Then every one who thus comes to God has this abiding witness in himself, by which he must believe. He has not yet received the adoption which is the "redemption of our body." This redemption is literally "release from captivity." The continuance of bondage under the thralldom of sin extorts every cry of the burdened sinner, who loves righteousness and longs to be conformed to the perfect likeness of the holy Redeemer. Hence Paul groans, "O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" So long as they remain in this temporal state of existence this weary and perpetual bondage must continue. But it is certain that this captivity is known and felt only by those who have received the Spirit of adoption, whereby they cry to their Father for deliverance. It is further an assured truth that every one who has received the Spirit of adoption shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption, and shall be satisfied with the divine fullness of that righteousness after which they now hunger and thirst.

It should be especially observed that the inspired statement is not that the adoption pertains to only a portion of the saints who are the subjects of it. There is no more scriptural authority for restricting its application to the material bodies of the saints than there is for regarding it as affecting only their spirits, or their souls. When the carnal curiosity of men prompts them to indulge in theories of imagination in order to bring spiritual truth down to the comprehension of finite reason, the result is always that they are lost in utter confusion. The subject of redeeming grace (including all that he is, soul, body and spirit) has now received the Spirit of adoption; the whole of the man who was the servant of sin and loved the service, is now made to abhor himself in dust and ashes, because of his total pollution. Yet he is not released from that vile sin which he now hates. It is not any portion of the carnal man which is made spiritual, but a new creature. This is the origin of every holy aspiration, and of every wish for conformity to the image of Jesus. It is this hunger and thirst after righteousness which constitutes the seal of the Spirit of God. It is impossible that this heavenly seal should ever be counterfeited. There may be an outward pretence by which others may be deceived; but every one must know for himself whether he bears this sacred evidence of the abiding witness of the Spirit of truth. No matter how bitterly his own heart may condemn him, God is greater than his heart, and knoweth all things. That infinite grace which is in Christ Jesus abounds to the deliverance of all such prisoners out of the pit of guilt and condemnation. Their mourning over the sin which still works in their members, their grief because they cannot do the good they would, and their earnest anxiety to be like Jesus, all attest that they have received the Spirit of adoption, whereby they cry, Abba, Father. This very longing is the cry which is embodied in this appeal to that God whose fatherly love is the only source from which cometh salvation from sin. Without the Spirit of adoption no sinner can cry, Abba, Father, in thus looking to God for deliverance out of the depths of just condemnation.

All the devices of will-worshipping religionists are based upon the fear which stimulates all who are held under the bondage of legal servitude. Such slavish laborers can never cry, Abba, Father. Their whole theory recognizes God only as a hard task-master, in whose service they must toil incessantly; and after their most devoted service they can never be made perfect by that legal system. There is no room in their hopeless servitude for mercy and grace. Every hour demands its own tribute of service justly due. The first default incurs the irrevocable curse. In such slavery there is no recognition of God as the loving Father from whom cometh down everlasting blessings. That is well designated as "the spirit of bondage again to fear." What saint would not sink in despair if his hope must rest upon his own payment of the demands of infinite justice? In his relation to earth, as a child of Adam, he confesses no justifying righteousness can ever be produced. From that parentage he inherits only guilt and condemnation. But the righteousness in which is all his hope is found alone in Christ Jesus, who is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believes.

As a child of Adam, the subject of electing love is a child of wrath, even as others. Not only is his material body polluted by sin, but he is wholly buried in guilt. His "whole spirit and soul and body" is in need of the preserving grace of the God of peace.—1 Thess. v. 23. It will not be claimed by any conscious sinner that he has by nature a soul or spirit which is so holy as to need no cleansing from the sin which has corrupted his body. Hence, it must be seen that there is no less need for the adopting love of God to be displayed in the justification of the spirit and soul of the saint than of his mortal body. Indeed, since the body without the spirit is dead, there could be nothing left but inanimate clay if the spirit and soul were separated from the material or earthly body. It is not the experience of the saints in their present trials that their sufferings are confined to the mere physical pain which is felt by their natural flesh. Neither is it a mere physical exertion by which they cry, Abba, Father, when refuge fails them in their deepest distresses. The Spirit of adoption moves the whole being of the saint to call upon the name of the Lord, not as an unmerciful and just Judge, but as the gracious and loving Father, who commends his love to us in that while we were yet sinners Christ died for us. Unto every sinner who has received this Spirit of adoption, whereby his cry has been directed to God as the Father of all mercy, the assurance is given that he is included in that glorious adoption which secures the redemption of our body, in the final glorification of the whole election of grace beyond the reach of sin and sorrow, where every sinner saved by grace shall awake with the likeness of the perfect Redeemer, and be satisfied to dwell evermore in that glory which our Lord himself has with the eternal Father. This is the ultimate result of that adoption, of which the Spirit is received here. While it includes the whole sinner whose salvation is secured in Christ Jesus, it is only one form in the wonderful mystery of that revelation of godliness in which the salvation of God is revealed by his Spirit in his saints.

In presenting these thoughts on the subject, as requested by brother Sullers, it is not designed to controvert the views of others who may have preached or written on it. We can only give such understanding as we have received. It will afford us pleasure to hear from him or any brother who may have more enlarged views on the subject; only wishing to have the light of the Spirit by which the Scriptures may be rightly expounded as the testimony of Jesus.

work as sensibly as do others, yet we would go forward in the path of duty marked out, believing that God is able to accomplish his purposes by such instruments as he chooses; that he hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise, and the weak things of the world to confound the things that are mighty; and base things, &c., hath God chosen, that no flesh should glory in his presence. Though we may not enjoy the satisfaction of seeing multitudes flocking to Jesus under our ministry, yet instead of going in to Hagar to accomplish the promises of God, or of resorting to any of the contrivances of men to make up the deficiency, we would still be content to preach the word, and would be instant in season and out of season; knowing it has pleased God, not by the wisdom of men, but by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe. And that his word will not return unto him void, but it shall accomplish that which he please, and prosper in the thing whereunto he send it. Faith in God, instead of leading us to contrive ways to help him accomplish his purposes, leads us to enquire what he hath required at our hands, and to be satisfied with doing that as we find it pointed out in his word; for we know that his purposes shall stand, and he will do all his pleasure. Jesus says, ye believe in God, believe also in me. Ye believe in the power of God to accomplish his purposes, however contrary things may appear to work to your expectations. So believe in my power to accomplish the great work of saving my people. In a word, as the dispensation of God by the hand of Moses, in bringing Israel out of Egypt and leading them through the wilderness, was from first to last calculated to try Israel's faith in God—so is the dispensation of God by his Son, in bringing his spiritual Israel to be a people to himself.

There being, then, this radical difference between us and the patrons of these modern institutions, the question which has long since been put forth, presents itself afresh for our consideration in all its force. "Can two walk together except they be agreed?" We believe that many who love our Lord Jesus Christ, are engaged in promoting those institutions which they acknowledge to be of modern origin; and they are promoting them too as religious institutions; whereas if they would reflect a little on the origin and nature of the christian religion, they must be, like us, convinced that this religion must remain unchangeably the same at this day, as we find it delivered in the New Testament. Hence that anything, however highly esteemed it may be among men, which is not found in the New Testament, has no just claim to be acknowledged as belonging to the religion or the religious institutions of Christ.

With all who love our Lord Jesus Christ, in truth, and walk according to apostolic traditions, or gospel order, we would gladly meet in church relation and engage with them in the worship and service of God, as he himself has ordered them. But if they will persist in bringing those institutions for which they can show us no example in the New Testament, into the churches or associations, and in making them the order thereof, we shall for conscience sake, be compelled to withdraw from the disorderly walk of such churches, associations, or individuals, that we may not suffer our names to pass as sanctioning those things for which we have no fellowship. And if persons who would pass for preachers, will come to us, bringing the messages of men, &c., a gospel which they have learned in the schools, instead of that gospel which Christ himself commits unto his servants, and which is not learned of men, they must not be surprised that we cannot acknowledge them as ministers of Christ.

Now, brethren, addressing ourselves to you who profess to be, in principle, Particular Baptists, of the "Old School," but who are practicing such things as you have learned only from a New School, it is for you to say, not us, whether we can longer walk in union with you. We regret, and so do you, to see brethren professing the same faith, serving apart. But if you will compel us either to sanction the traditions and inventions of men, as of religious obligation, or to separate from you, the sin lieth at your door. If you meet us in churches to attend only to the order of Christ's house as laid down by himself; and in associations, upon the ancient principles of Baptist Associations, i. e. as an associating of the churches for keeping up a brotherly correspondence one with another, that they may strengthen each other in the good ways of the Lord; instead of turning the association into a kind of legislative body, formed for the purpose of contriving plans to help along the work of Christ, and for imposing those contrivances as burdens upon the churches, by resolutions, &c., as is the manner of some, we can still go on with you in peace and fellowship.

Thus, brethren, our appeal is before you. Treat it with contempt if you can despise the cause for which we contend, i. e. conformity to the word of God. But indulge us, we beseech you, so far at least, as at our request to sit down and carefully count the cost on both sides; and see whether this shunning reproach by conforming to men's notions will not in the end be a much more expensive course than to meet reproach at once, by honoring Jesus as your only King, choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season. And rebellion, you know, is as the sin of witchcraft.

May the Lord lead you to judge and act upon this subject as you will wish you had done when you come to see the mass of human inventions in connection with the Man of Sin, driven away like the chaff of the summer threshing floor, and that stone which was cut out without hands alone filling the earth. We subscribe ourselves your servants for Jesus' sake,

We acknowledge with pleasure the reception of an affectionate letter from the Muskingum Association, expressive of their warm attachment to the ancient order of the Baptist Church; and also an interesting epistle from our venerable brother, John Leland, disclaiming any connection with the popular schemes of the day.

The following resolutions were unanimously adopted, viz.:

Resolved, That our next meeting be held with the church of Pleasant Valley, Washington Co., Md., on the Monday after the third Lord's day in May, 1833, at the close of the business of the Baltimore Association.

Resolved, That we cordially invite our ministering and other brethren from all parts of the United States, who accord with our views as expressed in our address, to attend our next meeting. Also, that we recommend our address to the consideration of such Baptist Churches as profess to adhere to the ancient faith and order of the Particular Baptists' requesting those of them who are disposed to unite with us in the stand which we have taken to give us an expression thereof by messenger or otherwise.

Resolved, That brother Henry Moon be our messenger to the Muskingum Association, and that brother Gilmore write them an affectionate letter on our behalf.

Resolved, That we consider the receiving persons into Baptist Churches upon any ground whatever short of an evidence of their having been born from above, to be a subversion of the ancient principles of the Baptists, of the apostolic example, and of the declaration of the Master that his kingdom is not of this world. Therefore we will not administer baptism to any without receiving for ourselves an evidence of their having experienced the specified change; and we beseech the churches of our faith and order to guard against persons getting in among them through the excitement of their animal feelings, with as much caution as they would watch against receiving persons upon the ground of their receiving baptism as regeneration.

Resolved, That brother Healy superintend the printing of our Minutes, and that he be authorized to print 500 copies.

Resolved, That brethren Samuel Trott, Newark, New Castle Co., Del., Wm. Gilmore, Leesburgh, Loudoun Co., Va., Thomas Poteet, Golden, Baltimore Co., Md., Edward Choat, Golden, Baltimore Co., Md., Eli Scott, Golden, Baltimore Co., Md.,

John Healy, Baltimore City, Md., Thomas Barton, Strakers Ville, Pa., Gilbert Beebe, New Vernon, Orange Co., N. Y., Stephen W. Woolford, Washington City, D. C., Gabriel Conklin, Slate Hill, Orange Co., N. Y., be a Committee of Correspondence.

We beg leave to recommend to the patronage of our brethren a paper published by our brother, Gilbert Beebe, entitled "The Signs of the Times."

As some have misunderstood certain expressions in the latter part of his Prospectus relative to the popular institutions of the day, we would say that the views of the editor are such as are expressed in the Address published by us.

We desire at the close of our meeting to acknowledge the kind hand of God, which has been manifested in bringing us together, and permitting us to sit and consult together in harmony and fellowship, and for the affectionate manner in which we have been received by our brethren and friends in this vicinity.

After an affectionate address and prayer by the Moderator, the meeting was adjourned to the time and place above mentioned.

WM. GILMORE, Moderator.

GABRIEL CONKLIN, Clerk.

ELLIOTTSVILLE, Ky., Jan. 4, 1893.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—It has been my privilege to read your paper very little; still, from what I have read, I am confident you are earnestly contending for the faith once delivered to the saints. I think I shall become a subscriber to the SIGNS; but as the apostle commands us to "prove all things," I thought I would ask you to send me a copy to examine before I sent in my subscription. It is my desire to support Baptist periodicals that hold forth the form of sound doctrine; but before I hold fast, I want to prove them to be good. Still I fear I am not capable of proving the doctrine of our Savior. Before we can prove anything, we must have a correct standard. Were you to buy fifty yards of cloth, and desire to know whether the merchant had given you good measure, you would prove it by measuring it yourself. But were your yard-stick an inch too short or too long, the error would be in the proof, and not in the first measurement. Primitive Baptists have a correct standard by which to "prove all things;" one that is adjusted by the God of heaven. This standard is the Scriptures, which are given by inspiration of God, and profitable (not as a way-bill from earth to heaven) for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God (no one else) may be perfect, thoroughly furnished to all good works. The Scripture is the man of God's catalogue of all good works. If it is the catalogue of all good works, what kind of works are those which are left out of this catalogue? Are they not evil works? They must be. As Sunday schools, missionary boards, and all the modern inventions of men, are left out of this catalogue, or the Bible does not furnish us to them, they must be evil works. When proved by this standard, the only one we have to "prove all things" by, they are not good; and instead of holding them fast, we are to reject them. Though we have a correct standard, we cannot "prove all things," unless we know how to use it. What success would a man make in proving the measurement of his cloth, who does not know an inch from a foot? Just the same that the natural man, who knows not works from grace, would make in proving the doctrine of our Lord. As our standard is given by inspiration, and is used in proving spiritual things, no man but a spiritual man, and him inspired by the God of heaven, can use it. A natural man may understand natural things, but it takes a spiritual man to understand spiritual things. No fountain can ascend above its source; so nature has no comprehension above nature. Before we can understand the things of the Spirit of God, we must be spiritual; "for the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God;" "neither can he know them; for they are spiritually discerned." Before a man can "prove all things" he must know how to use the scale of the sanctuary, and know its author. "Flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven." "Learn of me," saith Christ; and Paul says, "I certify you, brethren, that the gospel which was preached of me, is not after man. For I neither received it of man, neither was I taught it, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ."—Gal. i. 11, 12. The gospel is not learned in theological schools, but only by the revelation of Christ. Jonah learned more in the fish's belly, in three days and nights, than any man has ever learned in one of these schools in a life time. He learned that "salvation is of the Lord;" and that is more than their teachers know. No one knows the mystery of the kingdom except those to whom the Lord reveals it. It is the gift of God. "Unto you it is given to know the mystery of the kingdom of God; but to them it is not given." He reveals it to whom he will, and from whom he will he conceals it. "It is the glory of God to conceal a thing." Jesus thanks his Father because he has "hid these things from the wise and prudent, and has revealed them unto babes;" and the only reason he gives, and his disciples dare ask him no other, is, "for so it seemed good in thy sight." Dear child of God, are you not satisfied without further investigation of the why of God's doings, when you are informed by his dear Son that it is because it seems good in his sight? This is reason enough for this poor sinner. I cannot see why he should love so vile a wretch as I with an everlasting love, and give his only begotten Son to die for me; but if he has, it is for no good foreseen in me, but simple because it seemed good in his sight; and I am made to cry,

"Dissolve my heart in thankfulness,
And melt mine eyes to tears."

I have digressed from my subject; but "it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps." It is plain that Christ alone can prepare us to understand the Scripture. True, we may teach each other the way of God more clearly, but we must have a spiritual mind before we are capable of being taught spiritual things. You do not send your child to school to give it a mind, but to develop, cultivate and strengthen the one it has. Teaching cannot produce mind. We do not preach to men, or teach them, in order to give them "the mind of Christ," but to "stir up their pure minds [the one they now have] by way of remembrance," that they may "grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ."

Now, brethren, you have the standard; and if the God of heaven has qualified you to use it, then "prove all things; hold fast that which is good." When a Goliath of Gath comes up and defies the armies of the living God, do not go out against him with Saul's armor on, which you have not proved, but take your staff of "hope, which maketh not ashamed," in your hand, your sling and smooth stones, and go in the strength of Israel's God. I will not try to speak of the "all things" which we are to prove, but simply mention one of much importance. Paul's charge to the Corinthians is, "Examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith; prove your own selves."—2 Cor. xiii. 6. Dear kindred in Christ, when proved by the standard, how do you stand? Have you on the whole armor of God, whereby you shall be able to stand against the wiles of the devil? "Prove your own selves," and see. Are you standing firmly on the Rock, with your loins girt about with truth, having on the breastplate of righteousness, and your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace? Are you taking the shield of faith, the helmet of salvation, and the sword of the Spirit, wherewith you shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked? I see some brethren and sisters that I think are thus standing; but when I examine myself I am made to realize with David, "But as for me, my feet were almost gone, my steps had well nigh slipped." The things I ought to have done, I have left undone; and I have done the things I ought not. Can it be that God's mercy has reached so vile a wretch as I? I can remember hearing my dear uncle, Elder B. E. Caudill, say, when I was a small child, "If you want to see the devil, look in a mirror;" and it seems applicable to my case. All of us have our temptations. One lust may entice you, and another me. Each has his "besetting sin;" and we are commanded to "lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us." Many are our infirmities, but all are for God's glory, and our good. O that the dear children of God could trust in his grace all sufficient, and his strength made perfect in weakness; and instead of murmuring about our infirmities, could glory in them.

I have written more than I intended writing when I began. Brethren Beebe, if you think proper you may publish this scribble in the SIGNS; if not, all will be right with me. I aim, if the Lord wills, to make a trip to Connecticut next spring or summer; and if there are any Primitive Baptists in that state I desire to meet them. I love them more than any people on earth, though once I was their enemy; and I fear yet I am not a Baptist in heart. I also aim to call on the brethren between that state and this. Any information a brother or sister will give me concerning the Baptists up north will be highly prized by the chief of sinners,

J. W. FAIRCHILD.

NEW HOLLAND, Ohio, Feb. 12, 1893.

ELDER BENTON JENKINS—VERY PRECIOUS BROTHER:—Ever since the receipt of your very kind letter I have wanted to write you and brethren Beebe some word of thanks; but I have felt so weak physically, so barren and unfit spiritually, that I have not seemed to have courage to make the attempt. Your dear letter, though brief, was very comforting to my weary and tried soul, coming to me when my frail, halting bark was rowing upon an angry, disturbed sea; when I felt that all the waves and billows of darkness and doubt, and the bitterness of fear and unbelief, were going over me. Your dear words of christian fellowship and love gave me new strength. By the eye of faith I once more beheld dear Jesus walking to me amid the waves, and above the storm came the "still small voice," the dear familiar voice, so much more infinitely sweet than the sweetest earthly music, saying in accents clear and sweet, "Peace, be still." O the joy of his coming! the great gladness that one glance of his dear form, even when seen from afar, or through a glass darkly, it will cause to flow into our poor hearts, to feel that Jesus is near, to recognize him as our Savior and Redeemer, to feel his love encircling us, and that underneath us are the everlasting arms. O! is it not joy indeed unspeakable and full of glory? To feel his existence, his wonderful power, his ability to save, his love and mercy in such fullness that we can say from the depths of our heart, "I know that my Redeemer liveth," does it not cause us to say with the psalmist, "Bless the Lord, O my soul; and all that is within me, bless his holy name?" When this blessed joy and peace and light shines in our hearts, after a time of darkness and storm within, how like sunshine after clouds and storm it seems, and how we are refreshed and cheered by its soul-cheering warmth. The coming of your dear letter seemed almost to be compared with a golden wand, touching some sweet-toned harp, causing all within to vibrate, and attuning its chords to send forth sweetest music to the soul, the music of redeeming love. Sometimes it requires but a word from another, a silent, inward thought from ourselves, to cause this song that the redeemed alone can sing, to send forth its sweetest notes. Not only did I feel this sweet music of the soul flow into my sad, troubled heart, after reading your kind, strengthening words, but again yesterday evening, while watching the sun from my window, sinking away in the distant west. Such thoughts of the wonders of God's vast and infinite wisdom and power, the magnificence of his creation, his great love and mercy, his goodness and condescension toward poor, fallen men and women, filled me with such adoration and praise, and caused my love to go out to him and his dear people in such fullness as no words of mine can describe. And O! if unto me, who am less than the least of all saints, is his grace given, it seems wonderful, most wonderful indeed. Such a consciousness of my sinfulness comes to me this moment, dear Elder Jenkins, such a sense of the evils of my sin-polluted heart, that I question if it be right for me to claim I have had such precious and blessed seasons from on high, such sweet communion with the Beloved. But O! herein is his power to save unto the uttermost, his wonderful forgiveness and condescension in granting salvation and manifesting his dear presence and love to a wretch such as I, so plainly shown that I feel it my duty to "Tell to sinners round

What a dear Savior I have found," and to speak of the power of his grace, the efficacy of his sin-cleansing blood, and tell of the sweetness and fullness, his wondrous love, so that other poor, desponding souls, who see themselves sinners in his sight, may flee unto this Rock of salvation, and find rest and peace to their troubled, tempest-tossed souls. For if a sinner so vile as I see myself to be, so far removed from God and all godliness, by my proneness to sin, has found grace and peace and pardon, where is there one sunk so low but what they may find hope? Truly, dear brother, can I say, Not unto me, not unto me, but unto the Lord be all the glory given. Of all his creatures I certainly have most need to praise him. Truly does he load me with benefits. He causes blessings to flow into my afflicted life like refreshing, distilling dew. For aside from his sweet manifestations of love and watchcare, there comes to me the dear love and fellowship of my dear kindred in him. How often when weary with pain and care and darkness and doubt has some sweet message of love come from some dear member of our Father's household, sweetly consoling and strengthening me, and causing me to feel that by reason of my love for them I had cause to lay hold of the blessed hope which is an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast. I am not always able to reply to these dear letters of love, but O! I prize them more than my natural food. Ever since I was moved into my winter quarters I have seemed to suffer more, and my sores are more in number, and more raw and painful. Two gallons of water drip from my limbs every twenty-four hours now, instead of one, which is very prostrating to my system, and renders me more weak and nervous. This, together with a deep sense of unworthiness, of ignorance and inability, has caused me to neglect many much prized correspondents. O! the weary days and nights that fall to my lot, the trying sleeplessness and pain, how hard they are to endure; how trying to the flesh. Yet I do not forget that others suffer, perhaps as much or more than I, and my love and tenderest commiseration go out to them during the lonely silence of many a sleepless midnight hour. But after "A few more days are ended,

A few more scenes are o'er,
A few more griefs are tasted,
We shall fall to rise no more."

No more to sin nor sorrow, no more to suffer pain; and we hope and trust we shall be in the full enjoyment of the fruition of that sweet hope that reaches beyond the grave; on whose bright, golden shore no blight nor darkness will fall; where the inhabitants will never say, "I am sick." O! the blessed thought that we are to be purified and cleansed, to awake in the image and likeness of our adorable Redeemer, to dwell with him and his holy angels forever, in an endless world of light and life and glory, is it not uplifting to our poor, weary souls, beyond all power of expression?

Will not you and dear brethren Beebe please accept my sincere thanks for the great kindness conferred on an unworthy worm? and may I not hope to have ever an interest in your prayers? With sincere christian fellowship and love to you and sister Jenkins, and all the dear household of faith, I am very affectionately your unworthy sister, I hope, in Christ,

MARY PARKER.

P. S.—Beloved brother Jenkins, this letter was not written with a view to having it published, but if you think it at all fit you can do as you like with it. I would copy it if possible, but am too utterly exhausted, besides I am so crowded with writing. O do not forget me. Since I last wrote I have had five orders for books, which, with one or two donations, furnishes me with sufficient funds. The Lord is so good to me. If only I were more patient and worthy. Thanking you for all your kindness, I am sincerely your friend and, I trust, sister, MARY.

EDITORIAL NOTICES.

EXTRA COPIES OF THIS NUMBER.

AGREEABLE to our announcement in former numbers, our readers will find in this issue of our paper a complete account of the Baptist Convention, held at Black Rock, Md., Sept., 1832, at which time the separation (or "split") took place between what is now known in this country as Old and New School Baptists. Judging from our own experience, we believe our brethren and sisters are constantly receiving the inquiry, "What is the difference between the different orders of Baptists?" And while we would not attempt to answer this question in detail as to all of the many sects called Baptists, we can show clearly and conclusively, by the proceedings and resolutions of this little band of valiant soldiers of the cross, what is the difference between the Particular or Old School Baptists and the whole brood of modern religious denominations, whether known as Baptists or by any other name.

In anticipation of a desire of our subscribers to procure extra copies, we have printed a large extra edition of this number, and will mail them to any address as long as the supply lasts at the following prices, viz.:

One copy for five cents; twelve copies for fifty cents; thirty copies for one dollar. Sums less than one dollar may be sent in postage stamps.

PLEASE DO NOT DO IT.

WE have reason to fear that some of our subscribers, in sending on names in accordance with the second paragraph of Supplement, are sometimes actuated by a desire to send the paper to some of the other denominations, whom they know will be more annoyed than pleased with it, and from whom there is not the slightest hope of their becoming permanent subscribers. Brethren, please do not do this, as it only incurs an expense to us, and is of no real benefit to any one. Our idea in making the offer stated in the second paragraph is to fill our list with permanent or live subscribers, not "deadwood." A word to the wise is sufficient.

We most earnestly request our brethren and friends to consider the third paragraph, and assist us all they possibly can on the terms therein stated, and thereby enable us to publish the paper in 1894 on the terms mentioned in the latter part of the fifth and sixth paragraphs. If you did not receive your Supplement, or have lost it, you can, if you are a subscriber to the paper, obtain a revised copy by writing us to send you one.

If you are not so situated that you can give this matter the time and attention you would like to, perhaps you have some reliable friend that you could interest in the work. If so, you are at liberty to give him the Supplement, and let him act in your behalf.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—By request I send you for publication in the SIGNS the obituary of Miss Margaret Clendenning, who departed this life Dec. 31st, 1892, aged about 50 years.

The deceased had been ill for a long time, during which time she suffered very much. She was attacked with muscular rheumatism in May, 1891, and afterward that dread disease consumption was developed, which slowly but surely carried her away. Our deceased friend followed the profession of a teacher, and was the Principal of a female primary school in Baltimore for many years. With her aged mother she attended upon our services in Baltimore regularly, and was an attentive listener to the word of God. She had never made a public profession of faith in Christ, but we know that she was a humble and thoughtful listener. In past years I have at times conversed with her upon the subject of a personal interest in the Savior, and at such times she always expressed herself as very poor and sinful in her view of herself, and as one who desired to know the truth. In her last illness she said that reading of the Scriptures and prayer when I would call to see her was a source of comfort and strength to her. A few days before she died she told her mother not to fret for her, and that she was not afraid. She said to me that she desired to be reconciled, and not murmur against God.

I tried to speak briefly to the comfort of the dear family upon the funeral occasion. They sorrow, but in hope of the resurrection through Christ.

I remain your brother in the hope of Christ,

F. A. CHICK.

REISTERSTOWN, Md., Feb. 17, 1893.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—I feel it to be my duty, yet how painfully sad, to announce through the columns of the SIGNS the death of my dear and precious father, James Watkins, who departed this life near Garnett, in Colorado, Oct. 25th, 1892.

He was born in Indiana, Feb. 29th, 1824. With his parents he moved to Sangamon Co., Ill., when quite young, and there grew to manhood. He professed a hope in Christ in his nineteenth year, and was baptized by Elder Cyrus Right, in the fellowship of the Old School Baptist Church, and remained a steadfast and humble follower of Christ until his death. Too much can never be said of his worth, as regards good morals, modesty and honesty. I never saw any one that was better posted in regard to the Scriptures than he was. He told me several years ago that he had read the Bible through thirty times; and he had the Bible as nearly committed to memory as any one I ever saw. But he has gone, as we firmly believe, to his reward in heaven. He had been longing for years for the time to come when he could lay his armor by and dwell with Christ above. He has left four children and an aged companion (our step-mother), who is in feeble health, to mourn our loss of a kind and loving father and husband, but not without hope. His past christian life and the good examples he has set before his children will be an ever green spot in our memories. May this sad bereavement be for our good and the glory of God.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date. This date denotes the time at which your subscription expires; and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

THE GOOD PHYSICIAN.

"They that are whole need not a physician; but they that are sick."—Luke vi. 31.

The whole-hearted need no physician,
They know not their perilous case;
The guilty, who feel their condition,
Will prize a salvation by grace.

The contrite, the needy, applying
To Jesus, the Friend of the poor,
The sorrowing, the sick, and the dying,
Find mercy and health at his door.

Poor abjects, by Satan tormented,
Were heal'd of sin's venom and smart;
The outcast, the lost, the demented,
Were taken in love to his heart.

He hush'd the rough winds when contrary,
The leper he heal'd with a word;
And was not his voice to poor Mary
The sweetest that ever was heard?

Dear Jesus, the desert is dreary,
Through darkness and dangers I roam;
I often am restless and weary,
And long to be with thee—at home.

THE LONE PILGRIM.

DEAR BRETHREN:—The inclosed ballad was published in the SIGNS more than thirty years ago, and I have been requested to ask you to republish it. It is the original Lone Pilgrim, and is sung by the tune of that name.

A. B. FRANCIS.

I CAME to the spot where the lone pilgrim lay,
And pensively stood by the tomb;
When in a low whisper a voice seemed to say,
How sweetly I sleep here alone.

The tempest may howl, and the loud thunder roll,
And dark-gathering storms may arise;
Yet calm is the slumber and rest of my soul,
The tears are all wiped from my eyes.

The cause of my Master compelled me from home,
I bade my companion farewell,
And left my dear children, who now for me mourn,
In a far distant region they dwell.

I wandered an exile and stranger from home,
I knew of no relative nigh;
I met the contagion and sunk to the tomb,
My soul flew to mansions on high.

O tell my companion and two children dear
To weep not for me, now I'm gone;
The same hand that led me through storms most severe
Has kindly conducted me home.

For here is a crown that doth glitter and shine,
Which I shall forevermore wear;
Then look to the Savior, whose love is divine,
May he bring you to dwell with me here.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE GOSPEL.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—I feel at the present time like penning down a few thoughts concerning the preaching of the gospel, and forward the same to you; and if you, after reading what is written on the subject, feel that it is worthy of publication in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, do so; and if not, cast it aside. The declarations of Scripture to base the remarks upon are the following: "For we preach not ourselves, but Christ Jesus the Lord; and ourselves your servants for Jesus' sake. For God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts, to (give) the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ. But we have this treasure in earthen vessels, that the excellency of the power may be of God, and not of us."—2 Cor. iv. 5-7.

When we have heard a declaration made verbally, or read it as written or printed, if it be a subject that we are intensely interested in, the thought comes into the mind, Did the author of that declaration know certainly that he had affirmed the truth? Now we will turn directly to the Scriptures and ascertain beyond a peradventure who the author of the words quoted, as the foundation of some remarks about to be made, was. His name was Saul, born at Tarsus in Cilicia, and a Pharisee by profession, and a distinguished disciple of Gamaliel; and before he was brought by Almighty power to know his condition, he was an ardent and bigoted supporter of the traditions of his fathers, violently opposed to the humiliating doctrine of the cross, and a cruel persecutor of the church; but on his way to Damascus, having power given him of the high priests, if he found men or women that believed in the Lord Jesus Christ, to "bring them bound unto Jerusalem," the appointed time had come for him to be stopped in his persecuting the church, and he was; for as he journeyed, he came "near Damascus, and suddenly there shined round about him a light from heaven; and he fell to the earth [poor, powerless creature, now where is your carnal wisdom and creature strength?], and heard a voice saying unto him, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?" Up to the time when he heard the voice of God, he felt himself to be not only alive, but such a good man in his own estimation; for he told his brethren how good he was when he was alive in his own view; but he is now made honest, which the grace of God always makes sinners, when they are made the recipients of it; and he said to Agrippa, "My manner of life from my youth, which was at the first among my own nation at Jerusalem, know all the Jews, which knew me from the beginning, if they would testify, that after the most straitest sect [a remarkable declaration, being a double superlative] of our religion I lived a Pharisee." Let all who have a deep interest in the truth read, not perfunctorily, but with care, weighing carefully the declarations, the twenty-sixth chapter of the Acts, and they must certainly understand why Paul preached Christ, the way, the truth and the life; for said he, in another place, "For I was alive without the law once; but when the commandment [not invitation] came, sin revived, and I died;" therefore he was separated from all legalism.

"For we preach not ourselves." "But I certify you, brethren, that the gospel which was preached of me is not after man; for I neither received it of man, neither was I taught it, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ." After the revelation of the truth, he did not "bandy compliments" with them who proclaimed anything that took one iota of the glory from his precious Redeemer; for his zeal for the truth was such that he said to the Galatians, "I marvel that ye are so soon removed from him that called you into the grace of Christ unto another gospel, which is not another; but there be some that trouble you, and would pervert the gospel of Christ. But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed. As we said before, so say I now again, If any (man) preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed."

Whenever or wherever any man or men begin to apply their carnal criticisms to the written Scriptures, and say, I know it reads "so and so," but then it does not really mean that, then they commence the "preaching with the wisdom of words;" and if they are "learned men," the wisdom of words will so represent the matter that the "cross of Christ" will be made (so far as they are concerned) of none effect; and the carnal, uncircumcised ears of natural men will be pleased with such rodomontade; for it sets forth smooth things, and man's ability and power will be extolled; and soon such teachers will discover that they are getting so much power over persons that they will not rest satisfied until they can make themselves leaders, for they feel that their "great ability," unless they possess more power, will not be known; and if they be persons of eminence and wealth who hear them, they will be very careful not to say anything about regeneration, spiritual birth, sanctification, afflictions, trials, fears, doubts, &c.; but be sure and shun them, (though they know nothing about their true meaning) but use more classical and refined words, so as not to offend the wise and learned of this world; and it is to be feared that sometimes, in the purpose of God, that his called ministers are so left to themselves as to feel the same, especially when they have been told you talk too much about afflictions and trials; and having imbibed the spirit that actuated "Diotrephes [nourished by Jupiter, great in his own eyes, setting up a standard of his own] who loveth to have pre-eminence among them," they will certainly manifest it in a measure; but the beloved John said, "Wherefore, if I come, I will remember his deeds which he doeth, prating against us with malicious words." When preaching is made up of man's goodness, mental powers, history, metaphysics and philosophy, it will not feed hungry, broken-hearted sinners; but on the contrary, will have the direct tendency "to make empty the soul of the hungry, and cause the drink of the thirsty to fail;" because at such times they are uttering "error against the Lord." Science is noble and laudable when pursued and used for its proper purpose; but when resorted to in order to build up and flatter the pride of carnal men, it ought not to receive any countenance whatever from the true church of God; for they who have a large store of carnal knowledge, and no grace in their hearts, feel that they are far above the ordinary class of men, and it leads directly to the attempt "to lord it over God's heritage," as is now witnessed in our own beloved country; for now the so-called clergy desire to regulate us in what we shall eat and drink, and what we shall do, how we shall perform it, and when. All such characters are preaching themselves, and not Christ and him crucified.

"But Christ Jesus the Lord." The apostle said, "And I, brethren, when I came to you, came not with excellency of speech or of wisdom, declaring unto you the testimony of God. For I determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified. And I was with you in weakness, and in fear, and in much trembling. And my speech and my preaching was not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and of power; that your faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God." The apostle could not have been with his brethren in weakness, fear and trembling if he had not experienced the same; for the word with should not be passed over hastily, for the literal meaning signifies joined. Therefore the weak, trembling children of God were comforted by his preaching, for his theme was Christ and him crucified, which reached and embraced the feeblest of God's dear children; for in thus preaching Christ he was right down in the valley of humiliation with his brethren; and when enduring persecution at the hands of the enemies of the cross he said, "Some indeed preach Christ even of envy and strife, and some also of good will. The one preach Christ of contention, not sincerely, supposing to add affliction to my bonds; but the other of love, knowing that I am set for the defense of the gospel. What then? notwithstanding, every way, whether in pretense or in truth, Christ is preached; and I therein do rejoice, yea, and will rejoice." That dear, sacred name was exceedingly precious to the apostle, whether uttered by men in love, and sincerely, or in envy and strife; for said he, "I know whom I have believed, and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that day." When there were such contentions among the brethren at Corinth what course did the apostle pursue? Did he side with any one faction, and commence preaching himself, in order to be the noted leader of a party? No, but he rebuked them all; for he said, "Now this I say, that every one of you saith, I am of Paul; and I of Apollos; and I of Cephas; and I of Christ. Is Christ divided? was Paul crucified for you? or were ye baptized in the name of Paul? I thank God that I baptized none of you but Crispus and Gaius; lest any should say that I baptized in mine own name. And I baptized also the household of Stephanas: besides, I know not whether I baptized any other. For Christ sent me not to baptize, but to preach the gospel: not with wisdom of words, lest the cross of Christ should be made of none effect; for the preaching of the cross is to them that perish foolishness; but unto us which are saved it is the power of God."

The inspired apostle did not shun to preach eternal, unconditional, personal election, predestination, foreknowledge, fervent, effectual calling, and the final victory of every redeemed vessel of mercy; neither is there a sentence recorded in any one of his fourteen epistles where he attempts to "fritter" away one iota of the meaning of predestination by telling what God did predestinate and what he did not, or "arraigning" the eternal "I am that I am" at the bar of man's carnal judgment; and why? Because he did not preach himself; for no man can preach Christ Jesus the Lord without preaching those glorious principles. Read, in the fear of God, if you are enabled thus to do, and see how he combines prophecy and fulfillment; and no carnal attempt made to draw the line of demarcation between what God decreed and "what happens" to be so, because he was a God-fearing man. Some of the most subtle metaphysicians have attempted to harmonize the doctrine taught in the epistles written by Paul with creature merit, and make it appear that things are not absolutely fixed, the evil as well as the good, but it has always been a vain attempt, and always will be; and when dear brethren make the attempt with their worldly wisdom to do a similar thing it has always been a failure and always will be, for when they are doing so they are preaching themselves, and not Christ Jesus the Lord. When a man can say, "Now if predestination applies to sin and holiness alike, then they are equally of the Lord." "What if some brother shall say, It ill becomes a poor, finite mind to sit in judgment upon the conduct of the Lord; to which I reply that if I think of God at all I must do so with a finite mind, for this is all the mind the Lord has given me." When a person talks that way it is to be feared that he shows that he is nothing but a natural man, for God's dear children "have the mind of Christ." There is not any gospel in such carnal caviling, for it is nothing but wood, hay and stubble, nothing but trash or combustible matter, and faithful, gospel preaching frequently sets it on fire; and sometimes when burning it makes much smoke, for our God "maketh his angels spirits, and his ministers a flame of fire." Would it not be well for such knowing persons, who attempt to tell us what our God can do, and what he cannot do, and still be just, to read carefully the following declarations? "For my thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord: for as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts." "I form the light, and create darkness; I make peace, and create evil. I the Lord do all these things." "See now that I, even I, am he, and there is no God with me: I kill, and I make alive; I wound, and I heal; neither is there any that can deliver out of my hand. For I lift up my hand to heaven, and say, I live forever." "Then said his wife unto him [Job], Dost thou still retain thine integrity? curse God and die; but he said unto her, Thou speakest as one of the foolish women speaketh. What! shall we receive good at the hand of God, and shall we not receive evil? IN ALL THIS DID NOT JOB SIN WITH HIS LIPS." When any of our brethren in the ministry get into a frame of mind to cavil with the terms eternal purpose, predestination, decree, foreordination and determinate counsel, &c., they then are not preaching Christ and him crucified, but themselves, which the apostles did not do; and so far as their words are concerned they are setting aside the Scriptures and following their own carnal, fleshly wisdom, which, while it may gratify carnal wisdom, never fed a hungry child of God, for it takes away the very foundation upon which their hope of immortal glory is based.

Jesus. The announcement of "the angel of the Lord" was, "And she shall bring forth a son, and thou shalt call his name Jesus; for he shall save his people from their sins."

[WITHOUT consulting the writer, we take the liberty of sharing the enjoyment of this letter with the readers of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES.—ED.]

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Feb. 4, 1893.

ELDER WM. L. BEEBE—MY DEAR BROTHER:—Your letter of the 25th ult. was duly received; and while it was comforting and welcome, in that it testified to your love and fellowship, still I cannot help feeling that I have deceived you into believing I ever possessed a good hope in the gospel of Jesus Christ. Your expressed approval of my past letters ought perhaps to encourage me in hoping the experience testified to was that of a child of God; but I am not glorying in any such assurance.

I trust you will not think the cause of my long silence is because I had no inclination to write to you; on the contrary, I have desired to write often, but feared you might make use of some letters as "copy" for the SIGNS; and the afflictions of the saints are grievous enough without me adding to their complaints.

To the closing query of your letter, ("Have you not the desire to comfort the saints?") I will say, Yes. I can conceive of no greater joy, no richer blessing, than to be given the power to speak comfortably to that "afflicted and poor people who trust in the name of the Lord." It is the Spirit of Christ alone which can minister that comfort, and it seems to me that such a gift would be a wonderful assurance of the Spirit's indwelling.

Your approval and that of those you refer to, concerning my writing, is not, however, the unanimous approval of all the SIGNS' readers; for I am aware of at least one brother who does not approve of writing such bitter things against oneself; and as I am not often satisfied with myself sufficiently to write sweet things, it is a wise thing for me to keep silence; and as I have given up hope of being any better in this life, it is not likely I shall at any time in the future be qualified to write more joyously. Indeed, it seems to me that as time passes I am obtaining a deeper insight into my own natural wretchedness and ruin; an increasing sense of sin's loathsome presence with me; and the burden of my sighing is, "O that I had wings like a dove, that I might fly away and be at rest."

The brother referred to, describes it as an unhealthy disposition of the mind to have in view so constantly the "old man," rather than the "new man;" but unfortunately I am myself; and if I speak of any experience it must be my own. It seems to me that I am comforted when others testify to a like experience with mine; and yet I am not prepared to say that mine is truly the same; for I am confident theirs is a blessed one, while mine I question.

To my mind, there is no doubt as to the health of this complaining people, and I have had some thoughts concerning it which never before impressed me. Indeed, I have never heard them spoken of in the way they have occurred to me, so I am unable to say whether they be theories or truth. Even though they be the latter, I cannot see why I should derive any comfort from them; for I do not know that any experience of mine has given rise to them.

Past attempts have taught me how impossible it is to convey impressions clearly in writing, and I shall perhaps miss bringing out that which most strongly impressed me; but if you can catch the drift of my thoughts, I am confident the spirit of a sound mind which has been given you will rightly determine and judge the spring of my conclusions.

As the saints "are by nature the children of wrath, even as others," their nature has undergone no change in the new birth, and the natural body still exists, absolutely powerless to observe God's holy law in perfect obedience. This law represents the holiness of God and his righteousness in the government of his creatures; and to maintain his character of being without variable-ness or shadow of changing, it is not to be abolished, but fulfilled; not to be made void, but established. The child of God knows by experience that the law has dominion over him as long as he lives. He realizes this in his utter helplessness to persuade his mind not to comply with it in judgment. It will judge guilty, or not guilty; condemn, or acquit him, according to the sentence of its law, notwithstanding all efforts to the contrary.

He finds sin dwelling in his flesh, and the sentence of condemnation rests upon him. When he is brought to know there is no relief from the requirements and threatenings of the law, but by the mediation of Jesus Christ alone, who of God is made righteousness to us, he is made to rejoice that "there is now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus," and "the peace of God which passeth all understanding" is ministered unto him. It was not long after I first believed I understood this declaration of Paul, that I experienced a doubt of being in Christ Jesus; for I perceived the law of sin in my members more distinctly than ever before. Surely this is not deliverance from the curse of the law, thought I, and I am cut off; for every promise in Scripture of this deliverance condemns me, as the law's demands are alive in me. It was some time before I found that not one word nor one letter of a promise is recorded in Scripture of any abatement of the law's perceptive power, or of any dispensation of God with reference to the original law of obedience. Could there have been any such promise in addition to those already given, then there would have been a righteousness by the law, and that would destroy every conception of God's justice, unchangeableness and truth. Could he be satisfied with an observation of his law, so weak, so imperfect as the obedience of the best of men would be, so inexpressibly beneath that which he required in the law of our creation, it would reflect upon the goodness of God himself. But no, he is a jealous God, and he will not credit us with a righteousness in his sight which is so imperfect as to be like tattered rags; but he requires that the righteousness of his law must be fulfilled in us. "There is none righteous, no, not one;" and it is alone in the righteousness of Christ, imputed to us, we fulfill in obedience the demands of God's holy law. As the saints grow in grace, they also grow in the knowledge of Christ; and if they grow in his knowledge, they must certainly grow in the knowledge of the law's demands, or they could not perceive what obedience was required. They know the law to be good, though it condemns them as sinful, and unable of themselves to obey its commands. They delight in the law of God after the inward man, but they realize a captivity to the law of sin which is in their members; and the more vividly this is realized, it impresses me as an evidence of being fruitful in a good work.

There have been times when I think this view has been very comforting to me; but still there is a painful feeling sometimes, that all my experience is not embraced in the sufferings of Christ; that there are evil times with me in which the Savior has never been, and therefore he cannot know from experience what I feel. Yet, if Scripture be true, the Lord is there in that very experience. When he cried, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" surely he testified to a sense of the Father's absence; to a suffering in which no conviction of the Father's presence comforted him.

Every doubt, every feeling of weakness, every infirmity of his people, was experienced in that awful agony of soul. Yes, in the midst of this seemingly evil time with us, "the Lord is there;" and the experience is "bearing about in the body the dying of the Lord Jesus, that the life also of Jesus might be made manifest in our flesh." If he is come in my flesh, can my experience testify a denial that he was a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief? Can I taste of the peaceable fruits of righteousness without chastening and tribulation? Has a good hope been given me in Christ if I am not also given to suffer with him? I think not. It seems to me that this experience is the exercise of the grace we feel the need of, and mourn the apparent absence of; that this very fear and trembling is salvation by grace; at least that is the way I read Scripture; and if it is false spiritualizing, please correct me. If the strength of our Lord is made perfect in weakness, and "he is the saving strength of his anointed," and "a very present help in trouble," then this strength must be the grace of God; for he is the God of strength, and ministers it of his own good will and pleasure. It is by grace, because it is given us to be partakers of the sufferings of Christ. Then if the strength of the Lord is manifested in our weakness, and it is by the grace of God, and if we "go from strength to strength," then this very suffering must be growth in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. Surely this is "being fruitful in every good work, and increasing in the knowledge of God." To the natural mind it would seem that as we increase in knowledge, sorrow would decrease; but the experience of the saints does not testify to this. "He that increaseth knowledge increaseth sorrow," and likewise strength; for "a man of knowledge increaseth strength;" so if God's strength is made perfect in our weakness, it would seem that an increasing sense of weakness is associated with a growth in grace. In having "grace and peace multiplied unto us," it is always "through the knowledge of God, and of Jesus our Lord." "This is life eternal, that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent."

Well, I have multiplied words without knowledge, I fear, and had better close. I accept your invitation, and will write for the SIGNS one of these days; but I am only a child yet; wait till I grow in understanding a little. There is little doubt in my mind as to my love for the Old School Baptists. They truly are a peculiar people, and zealous of good works; and the occasion of their complaints is a good work surely. However distasteful their distressed and mournful crying may be to some ears, it is to me sweet music, a harmonious and tuneful note in the ever new song of the redeemed. It marks them as a people separated from the world, pilgrims sojourning by faith in a strange country, whose conversation (citizenship) is in heaven, whence they look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ. They are graven on the palms of his hands, and he that toucheth them toucheth the apple of his eye. He is their God, and they are his people. Their fear and trembling mark them as a blessed people; for "blessed is the man that feareth always." Theirs is the victory that overcometh the world, even their faith. How can I help loving such a people, and desiring a name with them? If they will but bear with me, and forbid me not from following after them, to count me as one of them in fellowship with the sufferings of the dear Redeemer, who is our only hope, "The Lord our Righteousness," I will go with them in the strength of the Lord God: I will make mention of his righteousness, even of his only.

Remember me in love to all your family, and all who love the Lord's appearing.

Your unworthy brother,

JOHN MCCONNELL.

STATE ROAD, Del., Feb. 3, 1893.

BRETHREN BEEBE:—You no doubt are well aware that during the years I have been occupied in public among the brethren, many excellent private letters would be likely to accumulate on my hands. As a general thing I think your readers prefer letters written purposely for publication, and it might be considered a breach of trust to have published letters that were not so intended. I have in some instances declined to ask for their publication when given leave to do so. I am now going to send you one that I think will be read with more interest and profit than anything I could write, and propose its publication. The writer at the time was suffering from a severe and threatening affliction, and consequently the perplexing questions, misgivings and stumbling-blocks were to him matters of very serious and solemn import. When one knows that the earthly house that has for a time been a tabernacle for them is about to be dissolved, the questions and doubts that the letter deals with assume an intensity of sincerity and earnestness unknown and unfelt at other times. Some allowance should be made for the gloom that settles upon the mind when encountering the shadows of the dark valley. I think there is hardly a single point in the christian travel of hope and longing, of weariness and a sense of desolation on the one hand, or a consciousness of the blessedness of church fellowship and the gospel ministry, and a God-given right to the tree of life, on the other, but what may be traced in this letter. He has long ago been summoned to his reward. And for him and for ourselves we have this promise, that they that do hunger and thirst after righteousness shall be filled.

E. RITTENHOUSE.

DEAR ELDER RITTENHOUSE:—You, whose hair has grown gray in the service of administering comfort and instruction to the people of God, will not, I hope, misunderstand me, my motives, or what I may say to you. You spoke to me of seeming to follow and take an interest in the Old Baptist meetings. The only answer I made to you was, that I had but little doubt of anything but myself. I hardly know whether that is fully correct or not. There are many questionings in my mind that it seems hard for me to get rid of. I have read the Bible, endeavoring to satisfy myself as to the dealing of God with his people. I have read some of the records of the working of the divine Spirit with the hearts of men as contained in the SIGNS; but I find little to give assurance that I may number myself among those possessing a hope of being one of the chosen ones of God. It seems to me to be set prominently forward as necessary that one should feel the degradation, the depravity of his condition as a sinner, and I hardly feel that I am able to do so. Indeed, the only feeling I am able to realize is one of weakness, rather than of depravity; an inability to feel what it seems to me I should, as well as the lack of power to rise above the bondage of a fleshy nature. The only feeling of depravity I have is because of my weakness; because I do not feel to have the strength to walk in the ways of truth and righteousness; and not because of sinfulness. If I could only feel that I had strength to overcome my waywardness, I think I could feel some condemnation, some repentance for my sins. Now, I would like to know whether that is the way a child of God should feel. Some, in the experiences I have read in the SIGNS, speak of mourning, of shedding tears, because of their sinfulness; others of mourning, because they could not mourn. If regret at having a nature or character that lacks stability and strength enters into any part of their feelings, then I, too, have known some of their trials. But I hardly know whether I am capable of exercising a feeling as deep as is implied by mourning. If I have shed any tears, it was not because of the evil that is in me, but because I have felt myself debarred from the enjoyment of those blessings and privileges to which, it seems to me, the children of God are entitled. If I could only feel that I had endured bondage as the Israelites in Egypt, if I could recognize through the cloud and pillar of fire that I had been led and taught in the wilderness by the shadowy hand of God, if I could realize that I had been brought to stand at the Red Sea, and made to see the salvation of the Lord, I think I could then

THY WILL BE DONE.

BRETHREN BEEBE:—If one so weak and little dare ask such a favor, would you give your views on the portions of Scripture written in 1 Tim. ii. 4; iv. 10; 2 Peter iii. 9? May the God of all truth direct your mind, for nothing but truth will do us poor sinners good; and if we are saved, it is all of sovereign grace.

A. R. McDONALD.

ALBION, Ind., Jan., 1893.

REPLY.

"Who will have all men to be saved, and to come to the knowledge of the truth."—1 Tim. ii. 4.

"For therefore we both labor and suffer reproach, because we trust in the living God, who is the Savior of all men, specially of those that believe."—1 Tim. iv. 10.

"The Lord is not slack concerning his promise, as some men count slackness; but is long-suffering to usward, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance."—2 Peter iii. 9.

In complying with the request of our brother it will be understood that we have no hope of presenting any argument which shall silence the cavils of carnal reason against the sovereignty of the will of God. In the testimony of revealed truth the fundamental principle declared is that God is the high and lofty One that inhabiteth eternity, whose name is Holy. Every one who has received that knowledge of God which is eternal life, is ready to confess that this is the only ground of his hope for salvation from sin and death. Yet the cunningly devised sophistry of the adversary often cites some such expressions as those quoted, by which to bewilder the minds of them who believe, and thus to beguile them into a denial of their Lord. There is never a moment when the believer in Jesus can afford to forget that his only hope is in that God who works all things after the counsel of his own will. This is their sure refuge wherein they find safety in every time of trouble. Against this essential principle the assaults of the serpentine tempter have been directed from the first account given of his existence in the garden of Eden. To the woman he said, "Ye shall not surely die; for God doth know that in the day ye eat thereof, then your eyes shall be opened, and ye shall be as gods, knowing good and evil." Since that earliest record of him, there has been no departure from his desperate efforts against the truth of the holiness and immutability of God. In every attempt to overcome the confidence of the saints this is the point against which his opposition is directed. So long as the saints rest in the assurance of the infinite perfection of the truth, wisdom and power of God, the fiery darts of the devil cannot disturb their confidence in his salvation. The impervious shield of faith quenches all his fiery darts. These are the foundations of that city of God where his saints dwell. But "If the foundations be destroyed, what can the righteous do?" Whenever the tried disciples look away from this truth they are at once involved in unbelieving doubts. While this principle must be recognized by every one who hopes in the grace of God for salvation, there are times when they are entangled in the net of the enemy by reading some such detached expressions as are cited by our inquiring brother; and though they cannot yield their confidence in the truth, yet at times they are not able to refute the false suggestions of the enemy.

The immediate context explains the correct meaning of each of the portions cited by our brother. In the first quotation Paul is instructing Timothy as a minister of Christ how he ought to behave himself in "the house of God, which is the church of the living God, the pillar and ground of the truth." As a Jew Timothy had been taught to restrict his prayers to the tribes of Israel. Under the gospel kingdom of our Lord Jesus that limitation is broken down. Now it is of primary importance that the prayers of the saints should be conformed to the great and glorious change which had been wrought by the Captain of our salvation, who had broken down the middle wall which had separated between Jews and Gentiles. Now, "supplications, prayers, intercessions and giving of thanks" were to be made for all men, including kings and all that are in authority; not that God would enlarge the eternal counsel of his will so as to include them in the covenant of his grace, but it is expressly stated that the object of that prayer which is enjoined shall be "that we may lead a quiet and peaceable life in all godliness and honesty." Paul does not leave Timothy to understand that this is a plan devised by his own wisdom, whereby the world may be persuaded to accept overtures of grace, and thus become friendly to the church. But the reason given is, "For this is good and acceptable in the sight of God our Savior." It may astonish some very zealous advocates of universal chance salvation to notice that there is not a single direction in the whole inspired record for the saints to pray that God would save from everlasting death any others but those who are included in the eternal election of grace in Christ Jesus before the world began. So this prayer is not to ask anything but that which is good and acceptable in the sight of God. It is identical with that which Jesus taught his disciples to ask in the manner prescribed in the sermon on the mount. "Thy will be done!" No other petition is dictated by the Spirit of Christ but that which is conformed to the will of God. Certainly no other will ever be granted by that God "who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will." Not even the agony and tears of the suffering Son of God could change the eternal purpose of God. The cup which was prepared for him he did not refuse to drink.

The doctrine that in this expression the will of God is that the whole human race should be saved from sin, necessarily proves that none are benefited by that will, since the testimony of the Scripture is on record that some of the same men are already "suffering the vengeance of eternal fire."—Jude 7. Surely those who fear God cannot accept any such blasphemous absurdity. Every one included in this will of God is also included in the sixth verse, where it is written that Christ Jesus "gave himself a ransom for all." Whether this embraces an innumerable company, or a little flock, it is "according to the election of grace." This is "As many as were ordained unto eternal life." In the sense of the text, every one of the "all men" designated does "come unto the knowledge of the truth," and is saved.

There is a temporal sense in which the living God is the Savior of all men; and in the same sense he is the Savior of every creature, animate and inanimate, in earth and in heaven, visible and invisible. The power of God gave existence to every creature; and that power sustains each in its appointed place, as well the mote which floats unseen in the sunbeam, as the system of worlds which is beyond the range of finite imagination. "All things were made by him; and without him was not anything made that was made." Remember the truth here declared that God made all things. Can any believer in God for one moment indulge the thought that he has made any creature which he cannot control? The labor and suffering of reproach which the saints encounter is "because we trust in the living God, who is the Savior of all men." It is incumbent upon those who deny this universal salvation of God in giving to every creature natural life and breath, to show from what other source can that salvation come. Certainly they who hope in the grace of God for salvation from death, will not claim that there is any other source of life but the sovereign will of the eternal God. But while in his providential government "He giveth to all life and breath, and all things," and is thus the Savior of all his creatures, there is a special sense in which he is the Savior of those that believe. So Paul says, "For all things are for your sakes, that the abundant grace might through the thanksgiving of many redound unto the glory of God." For the salvation of his chosen people in the eternal glory of Christ, our God made the worlds, and to that end he still orders every event in time. There can be no failure in that eternal counsel of God. Without the assurance of this essential principle, there is no foundation for the hope of any saint. "For there is no power but of God." But it is not our understanding of this text that it refers to that fundamental principle. In this connection Paul is treating upon the promise for "the life that now is" for the safety of the saints. They are the special subjects of the salvation of our God even in their present state of subjection to the vanity of the body of this death. In all their afflictions and sufferings they are kept by the power of God, who is their present help in time of trouble, and who knoweth them that trust in him.

Where could the afflicted and poor people find comfort if they were deprived of the assurance that even their severest sufferings are given by the same loving Father who gave his only Son to die for them? They find rest in the immutability of the counsel of God, whose purpose cannot be defeated by all the opposition of sin and Satan. The Scriptures abound with illustrations of the wickedness of men being made use of as incidental to the accomplishment of the gracious design of God. This is very manifest in the record of the envy of Joseph's brethren, and most gloriously it is displayed in the murder of our holy Redeemer. The iniquity of the enemies of God is not palliated by the fact that God used their wickedness for the fulfillment of his own appointment of grace. He restrains all that wrath of man which is not manifested for the declarative glory of his own name in the salvation of his people from their sins. Pharaoh must reign in Egypt until God had shown his power in him; for that was the purpose for which God raised him up.—Rom. ix. 17. Power against Jesus was given from above to Pilate; and for that reason the sin of Judas was the greater.—John xix. 11. If any of the wise men of the world dare to object against the perfect righteousness of this truth of God they need give no argument to us; their controversy is with the Judge of the whole earth. May all the saints be found confessing that greatness belongs exclusively to our God; that "He is the Rock, his work is perfect; for all his ways are judgment; a God of truth and without iniquity, just and right is he."—Deut. xxxii. 4. In this only refuge they who have no helper have a pavilion which is hid from the wise and prudent. They cannot afford to regard this embodiment of all their faith in God as a mere theory which is to be tested by the blind reason of mortals. Without the truth of the infinite sovereignty of their God, conscious sinners cannot hope for salvation from just condemnation. An omnipotent Savior alone can deliver them who are already lost. The helpless and changeable idol of the carnal mind may afford an object of adoration to such as have some strength to help themselves. Our God says, "I am the Lord; I change not; therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed."—Mal. iii. 6.

In the expression quoted from Peter it would seem that only willful stupidity could wrest it to make it contradict all the doctrine of revealed truth. But since God has hid these things from the research of the wise, it is only an illustration of that darkness in which they are enshrouded when they fail to see the plain declaration of the text. If it were of a temporal matter that this language was written, a lawyer would be in danger of being shut out of court for failing to notice the specification "to usward," by which the whole sentence is confined to the writer and those to whom he was writing. As well might the claim to an estate be based upon the application of the language of the deed to anybody who might find it. The claimant would read the very same words which would be read by the rightful owner; yet who would suppose that the title could be established while the claimant is not the person named in the deed. By reference to the beginning of this letter it will be seen that nobody is interested in it except the writer and the people to whom he wrote. He carefully describes those addressed as "them that have obtained like precious faith with us through the righteousness of God and our Savior Jesus Christ." A simple remembrance of this limitation of what is written in this letter will expose the deceitful working of that enemy who would change the truth of God into a lie. The will of God is done in the case of every one of the "us" embraced in the text. Not one of them shall perish. This is secured in the eternal purpose of God. Not only are they "kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the last time," but the crucified Jesus "hath God exalted with his right hand [the same power of God] a Prince and a Savior, for to give repentance unto Israel, and forgiveness of sins." Having thus secured the fulfillment of his will, our God is just, and having salvation. Thus he has answered the prayer, "Thy will be done!"

EDWARD IRVING'S ORATIONS.

It was our intention to commence with this number the Orations of Edward Irving before the London Missionary Board, in May, 1824; but as we have received within the last two weeks an unusual amount of excellent communications from some of our most highly gifted brethren, we have decided to postpone the Orations for a number or two. We prefer to publish original articles as a rule, rather than selected matter, but if we have room we can often publish extracts that are very interesting, and this we think the Orations will prove to be.

BAPTIST CONVENTION.

In accordance with previous announcement, we published in the issue for Mar. 1st of this volume a complete account of the Baptist Convention, held at Black Rock, Md., Sept., 1832, at which time the separation (or "split") took place between what is now known in this country as Old and New School Baptists. Judging from our own experience, we believe our brethren and sisters are constantly receiving the inquiry, "What is the difference between the different orders of Baptists?" And while we would not attempt to answer this question in detail as to all of the many sects called Baptists, we can show clearly and conclusively, by the proceedings and resolutions of this little band of valiant soldiers of the cross, what is the difference between the Particular or Old School Baptists and the whole brood of modern religious denominations, whether known as Baptists or by any other name.

We have printed an extra edition of that number, and will mail them to any address as long as the supply lasts at the following prices, viz.:

One copy for five cents; twelve copies for fifty cents; thirty copies for one dollar. Sums less than one dollar may be sent in postage stamps.

PLEASE DO NOT DO IT.

We have reason to fear that some of our subscribers, in sending on names in accordance with the second paragraph of Supplement, are sometimes actuated by a desire to send the paper to some of the other denominations, whom they know will be more annoyed than pleased with it, and from whom there is not the slightest hope of their becoming permanent subscribers. Brethren, please do not do this, as it only incurs an expense to us, and is of no real benefit to any one. Our idea in making the offer stated in the second paragraph is to fill our list with permanent or live subscribers, not "deadwood." A word to the wise is sufficient.

We most earnestly request our brethren and friends to consider the third paragraph, and assist us all they possibly can on the terms therein stated, and thereby enable us to publish the paper in 1894 on the terms mentioned in the latter part of the fifth and sixth paragraphs. If you did not receive your Supplement, or have lost it, you can, if you are a subscriber to the paper, obtain a revised copy by writing us to send you one.

If you are not so situated that you can give this matter the time and attention you would like to, perhaps you have some reliable friend that you could interest in the work. If so, you are at liberty to give him the Supplement, and let him act in your behalf.

sing with joy that "I know that my Redeemer liveth." Is this the Pharisee desiring a sign? Do you think the Pharisee ever recognized or rejoiced in the goodness and mercy of Christ in making the blind to see, the deaf to hear, the lame to walk, in healing the sick, and giving life to the dead? I mean those who were so in the flesh, and in the Spirit as well. Because, it seems to me that at times I have been able both to see and rejoice in those healings, though they came not to me. I think I have been able to realize something of man's condition under the law, to see the necessity for that divine perfection which alone could meet its conditions, and of which Christ was and is the embodiment. Now, it is written, "Israel hath not obtained that which he seeketh for; but the election hath obtained it, and the rest were blinded." Can it be that I belong to the latter class? Is it that the beauty I have seen in the word is only such as is seen by the carnal mind? Can it be that my understanding and knowledge of divine things is not spiritual discernment, but only the natural understanding of the word, learned by listening to the preaching of those who have been taught by the spirit? Paul says, "If thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shall believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved. For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness; and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation." It seems to me that here lies my stumbling stone. I cannot doubt the existence of God; but "The devils also believe, and tremble." But whether I believe properly in Christ I cannot say. I wish I could. Not that I do not believe he lived, and was crucified, and raised from the dead; but that I have any part in that life, death and resurrection I cannot believe, as I would like. If I could feel confident that I possessed a true and living faith, I think I could then rejoice in a hope of the love and mercy of God, believing that "Now the end of the commandment is charity out of a pure heart, and of a good conscience, and of faith unfeigned." Now, what is to be done? If faith be the gift of God, if no man can come unto Christ except he be drawn by the power and will of God, how am I to attain that faith? How am I to become a follower of that holy One of God? The whole question to me resolves itself into these words,

"Come unto me, the Master says;
But how? I am not good;
No thankful song my heart will raise,
Nor even wish it could.
I am not sorry for the past,
Nor able not to sin;
The weary strife would ever last,
Should I the task begin."

Is this anything like a christian experience? Are these the feelings of a child of God? It hardly seems possible to me. I cannot realize how one whom God has blessed as a child of his adoption can possess a heart so cold, so callous, so devoid of zealous feelings, where his love and service are concerned. You speak to me of the Old Baptists. I cannot deny that I love them, and love the doctrine I understand them to teach. But whether it is such love as was commanded by Christ and his apostles I cannot say. I am afraid it may be but the natural affection one must feel for the home of his parents and his customary associations. It is true there have been times when to have been numbered one among the Old School Baptists would to me have been the height of earthly happiness; but there has never been a time when I felt that it was my duty to become so, or when I felt that I had any grounds upon which to ask a place among them, or that I have felt worthy to be there. Now, Elder, during the yearly meeting at Bryn Zion I heard Elder Poulson say, and I have heard the expression before, that it was useless for the inquirer to wait in hope or expectation to feel better before coming before the church. Now, while its truth forced itself upon me in believing that the more one recognizes the beauty of holiness the more abhorrent becomes his own weak, vacillating, fleshly nature, yet at the same time the thought occurred to me that there must be something to wait for; and if not a feeling of fitness or goodness, then what is it?

As you will see, I began this letter some time ago. I have read it over several times, and I hardly know whether I ought to send it or not. I would like for you to know how I think and feel concerning these questions; but what I have written expresses me so poorly, I am almost afraid you will attach more meaning to it than it really contains. But fearing that if I were to write it all over again I could get no nearer my true feelings, and might get farther off, I have concluded to send it, and hope you may not be deceived by thinking from what I have written that my feelings are exercised to a greater degree than what is really true. After you have read it, if you think it contains anything worthy an answer, I shall be glad if you will answer it. With love and sympathy for you in your deep afflictions I am,

Yours truly,

P. F. MEREDITH.

SHANNON, Ky., Feb. 7, 1893.

DEAR BROTHER—I have a letter from our dear sister Mary Parker, and knowing how anxious the brethren and sisters are to hear from her, I thought I would copy a part of it and send to you for the SIGNS.

Your sister,

MARIA REES.

NEW HOLLAND, Ohio, Jan. 9, 1893.

VERY DEAR SISTER:—Since last I wrote you, we have entered upon another year. A new, untried, unknown future lies before us. The old year with its joys and sorrows, its struggles, temptations and failures, is forever passed away. What the coming year may hold for us, none of us know, for we know not what an hour or a day may bring forth; but we, who have fled unto Jesus for salvation, feel that we may safely rest on this great Rock of safety, encircled by his everlasting love, with the everlasting arms underneath us; and that whatever may come to us will be just and right, and ordered by infinite wisdom and love. For many years New Year's day has been a time of sober reflection to me; the forming of new and better resolves; a fervent praying to be much better; to be enabled to lead a more useful, spiritual life; to search more diligently God's word; to "draw nigh to God," that he may draw nigh to me. But alas! how terribly I fail; how prone to wander, as the sparks fly upward. This year I have been so ill, my whole being so filled with suffering, that I was conscious of little save a hungering desire for better things. I cannot read, or write, or pray, without becoming almost crazed with pain. It grieves me so, and over and over again I ask myself, Will the dear Lord lay this to my charge? Will he be angry and displeased with me because I am too weak to rise above this great weight of human pain and woe? Surely he knows I am but dust; and having been tempted in all things himself, he knows how to succor, and how to pity one struggling against such "rivers of woe." I wish I could talk with you and your dear pastor about these struggles of mine; for I have been passing through deep waters of darkness, and have suffered beyond description in body and mind. I think the cold weather causes my raw, bleeding sores to be more painful. If it were not for the anthracite coal fire in the self-feeding stove, I know not what I would do. The money contributed me by the Scioto Association greatly assisted me in procuring comforts for this cold winter weather, and I am so thankful.

MARY PARKER.

RUNYAN, Ky., Jan. 15, 1893.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN IN THE LORD:—By request of brother R. T. Hackney, of Pinsonfork, Ky., I will try to write my experience, or something of what I hope have been the Lord's dealings with me. I do not feel like this relation of my experience can be of much comfort to any of God's dear children; therefore it shall be subject to your better judgment. If you shall deem it expedient, you may give it a place in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

My mind was arrested at an unexpected time to me. I was not thinking anything about serving the Lord; but ere I was aware my heart was made to weep and mourn, which continued about nine months, when, as I believe, the Lord spoke peace to my soul. My trouble had been so great that I thought I was going to die. My sins were great before me, and I thought hell and destruction was my doom; but there came a portion of Scripture to my mind as follows, "Seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you." In my weakness I tried to pray, and light shined before me. My burden was gone, my heart rejoiced, and I felt like a new person. I felt like I had been asleep, and had just been awakened; and I sometimes think this is the way with all God's children, who sleep in sin until God awakens them. Surely,

"I once was lost, but now am found;
Was blind, but now I see."

Then I had a great desire to join the Old or Primitive Baptist Church, which I believed was the church of God; but when I went to the church meeting, and saw the brethren and sisters, I felt so unworthy that I felt I could not tell them what the Lord had done for my poor soul. While my heart was there, a deepening sense of my vileness and proneness to sin caused me to often fear that I was not born again; but I believed the Lord would make his purpose known to me, if he had any purpose in me. I attended the meeting of Big Creek Church in June; and when Elder W. J. May gave the invitation to any who wished to join, before I knew what I was doing I was upon my feet and praising the Lord. Then and there I was not ashamed to own my Lord, and to praise his wonderful name. I related some of the things that I have here written, and was received into the fellowship of the Lord's humble poor. I was baptized by Elder W. J. May on the first Saturday in July, 1892. A few nights before I was baptized I saw the prettiest sight I had ever seen. If it was a dream, it was different from anything I had ever seen. Light shined all around me, and on the surrounding trees. I prayed to the Lord that if I were one of his that he would raise me up at the last day. I thought a woman came to me, and put her arms under me, and raised me up. Then I awoke. On the day I was baptized I was made to rejoice in God my Savior, who saves his people from their sins. On the last night of December, 1892, I thought I saw my Savior wrapped in a beautiful robe. He was at a window, and I talked with him. He put his hand into my hand, and his hand was not the color of any hand I had ever seen. It was not the color of flesh. When I can see these things in my dreams or imagination it seems to increase my faith, and gives me comfort, and brightens my prospects of heaven and immortal glory. But I have many doubts and fears, with cold and dreary seasons to pass through; yet I hope our dear Redeemer is with me, and I will fear no evil.

This is the first I have ever written for publication. I am aware of my weakness and inability to write;

but bless the name of the Lord, O my soul, for he hath saved his people. He can save, and none can hinder.

I remain your sister in hope of eternal life,

NEVADA RUNYAN.

"THE kingdom of heaven is like unto leaven, which a woman took, and hid in three measures of meal, till the whole was leavened."—Matt. xiii. 33.

In No. 5, present volume of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, I see a selected piece, a sermon by J. Battersby, of London, England, using the text that stands at the head of this scribble. Shall I dare say that I object to the application of the text? I am so ignorant, so weak, so blind, so sinful, so much nothing in regard to spiritual things. The writer takes the position that leaven is used in the Scriptures in a bad sense all the time, and proves it to his satisfaction from the Old and New Testaments. If he is right in this application, the dear Savior failed to properly liken his kingdom, unless it can be proved that his kingdom is bad. Now, to be as plain as I can, so that you may gather my idea, I will say, if I should sit for an artist to take my likeness and he should present to me the likeness of a pig, in my case the likeness would be good according to my feelings. But to the case under consideration. "The kingdom of heaven is like unto leaven, which a woman took, and hid in three measures of meal, till the whole was leavened." I have always understood in reading the Scriptures that the leaven referred to represents the grace of God bestowed or given to poor sinners of Adam's race here in time, to bring them to a knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus; and sometimes I hope I feel the working of it in my poor, sinful heart. No one that I have ever talked with, nor anything I have ever read, has given me a full understanding of the working of natural leaven in flour. Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither entered into the heart of man, the wonder workings of grace in the heart of a poor sinner, till the whole is leavened and finally received up into glory. Therefore I believe the leaven referred to is good, and the kingdom also. If not, where is the likeness or similitude?

In regard to the parable under consideration, my understanding has been that the office work of the woman and operation represented our blessed Savior as the dispenser of his grace; and the three measures of meal represented the elect of God in the three dispensations, which includes the whole church of God.

Now, dear brethren, I am not writing this as a fault-finder; God forbid; but for the truth's sake, as I hope. If I am mistaken in my views I do hope that some dear brother may be enabled by the Spirit of truth to investigate still further, till all the little children are leavened with good leaven, and compelled by the Spirit's power to enter that good kingdom, to the praise of God's good grace, for Jesus' sake.

In the general tenor of the sermon there is a great deal of instruction and comfort to the household of faith. In reading the Scriptures there is nothing named but what its opposite is brought to view. Now, if bad leaven has and can be proved, I hold that good leaven can also be proved by the experience of God's little children, which in type "a woman took, and hid in three measures of meal, until all was leavened."

If the leaven is bad, the kingdom must be bad, or where is the likeness or similitude?

After looking over what I have written, it looks so much like the poor, old sinner that wrote it that I feel ashamed to send it. I never have been satisfied in my little lot; but if I could outpreach all the Old Baptist preachers, and could outwrite all the correspondents of the dear old SIGNS OF THE TIMES, and could get all the attention paid to me that I desire, what would become of me? O my soul! May God give me grace to walk as it becomes one who is nothing, and less than nothing.

R. FLOURNOY.

OLATHE, Kansas, Feb., 1893.

BYBERRY, Pa., Dec. 10, 1892.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—After passing through great darkness of mind, and being alone this evening, meditating upon my sinfulness, and seeing no good in myself, the words came to me, "What a friend we have in Jesus." Also, the beautiful lines, "How sweet the name of Jesus sounds In a believer's ears; It soothes his sorrows, heals his wounds, And drives away his fears." O yes, dear brethren, what a glorious thing for us, poor sinners, that we have such a High Priest, such a glorious Friend, that sticketh closer than a brother. But I so many times ask, Am I one of his children? If I am, I shall surely be kept, through faith unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the last time. But I am often found wandering in by and forbidden paths. We do at times wander so far from God through unbelief and weakness of the flesh; yet he is still watching over us, and says, "Be not afraid." "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee." If God be for us, who can be against us? All our trials and conflicts are for our good, even for the trial of our faith.

This is our church meeting day at Southampton, and O how I would like to be there; but I am providentially hindered. I feel that it is a duty as well as a blessed privilege for every member to be there if possible; and now, while writing, I feel to be mingling with them in spirit, and to sing that precious hymn,

"From whence doth this union arise,
That hatred is conquered by love?
It fastens our souls in such ties
As distance and time can't remove."

In the midst of darkness comes light and sunshine, by which we see Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith. We must taste sorrow, the worm-wood and the gall, in order that we may enter into that rest which remains to the people of God. Here the question again comes, Am I one of that happy number? It seems to me that instead of growing in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, I see and feel my sinfulness more and more.

Your sister in bonds of love,
RACHEL M. OPDYKE.

EDITORIAL NOTICES.

PLEASE DO NOT.

OUR subscribers are especially requested not to pay their subscriptions for the SIGNS OF THE TIMES to Postmasters to forward to us, as they generally deduct twenty or twenty-five per cent. from the amount and send us the balance, retaining the discount as their commission, and often sending what they do remit in postage stamps. We also caution our patrons against "News-paper Agencies," as they deduct a like commission. It is a very simple matter for a subscriber to get a post-office money order or a postal note, inclose it in a letter, and direct it to us, or to put the money in the letter and have it registered; but where several are sending from the same office it is well to choose one of the number to send for all at the one time.

IT IS VERY IMPORTANT

That great care should be taken in sending a renewal of subscriptions to give us the same name as the one to whom the paper is already coming. If the party is married be sure the initials are given correctly; for if the paper is coming in the wife's name and the husband writes us to send the paper the next year, and signs his own name, we have no means of knowing that the person to whom the paper is going is his wife; and not finding his name on our list he is entered as a new subscriber and the paper sent to both; or if the paper is going in the husband's name and the renewal sent on in the wife's name, the result will be the same. The best way is to inclose in your letter one of the little pink slips containing the name pasted either on the margin of the paper or on the wrapper in which it comes.

DONATIONS.

As may be seen by our published receipts, the brethren and friends are contributing with their usual liberality to the fund to enable us to send the paper to those brethren and sisters who are not able to pay for it, and yet love to read it. We doubt if there is any way the same amount of money could be expended to give as much real joy and true happiness, to as many, as is derived from the contributions to this fund. It is the poor and needy, as to this world's goods, that are the best capacitated to enjoy spiritual blessings.

PLEASE STOP MY PAPER.

AT least nine out of every ten writing us to discontinue their paper add that it is not on account of their objection to anything the paper contains, but that they are not financially able to continue it. We would ask all such if they have taken into consideration the amount they have economized by stopping their paper. It is less than four-sevenths of a cent a day.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.

ELDER H. J. Redd having changed his address from Opelika, Ala., to Riverview, Chambers Co., Ala., desires his correspondents to address him at the latter place.

INQUIRIES AFTER TRUTH.

WILL Elder W. J. May, of Pinsonfork, Ky., please give his views on 1 Cor. x. 17? "For we being many are one bread, and one body; for we are all partakers of that one bread."

He leaves a widow, two children, an aged mother (sister Kelley, who is a member of the Old School Baptist Church at Grover, Pa.) and brothers, besides many friends, to mourn their loss. CHARLES BOGARDUS.

WHITE CHURCH, N. Y.

It becomes my solemn duty to write for publication the obituary of our dear mother, Mrs. Prudence O'Connor, widow of Francis O'Connor, who departed this life Dec. 22d, 1892, aged 92 years, 1 month and 16 days.

Her disease was paralysis; and after sinking gradually for thirteen days her remarkable constitution, enfeebled by age, succumbed to the grim messenger, death. The subject of this notice was born in Rensselaerville, Albany Co., N. Y., Nov. 6th, 1800. While yet a small child, with her parents and family they moved to Coxsackie, on the Hudson, where they resided a number of years. I have often heard her say that she saw the first steamboat that ever sailed up that beautiful river. When about eleven years of age they moved into Middletown, Delaware Co., N. Y., where she continued to reside until 1824, when she was married to Francis O'Connor, of Bovina, Delaware Co., N. Y., after which they located in Andes, where they passed all their married life. To them were born eight children, seven of whom lived to manhood and womanhood. Three sons and three daughters still survive. In 1880 our dear father was called to his eternal rest. Since that event mother has shared my home with me. I realize more fully now how much company she has been for me. Sixty years ago our parents united with the Baptist Church, and were baptized by Elder David Mead, in the east branch of the Delaware, near the stone school-house, below Margaretville. That was before the division in the Baptist Church. My mother always mourned that she had not as good an understanding of the Scriptures as she desired; but I consider her to have been a very devoted, humble christian, her life and conversation being most exemplary. Few have done more toward ministering to the wants of the brethren in the church than our father and mother. She retained her mind and memory to the last. She read her Bible and her paper, the SIGNS, daily until stricken down with disease. Her last testimony was, "How merciful the Lord has been to me."

Elder F. W. Keene preached at her funeral on "Christmas" day from Luke xxiii. 42, 43; after which Elder J. D. Hubbell made some appropriate and comforting remarks.

JULANA H. DICKSON.

ARENA, N. Y.

OUR dear friend, Mrs. Fanny Myers, beloved wife of our dear brother, Frank M. Myers, died quite suddenly at her home near Lincoln, Loudoun Co., Va., Nov. 22d, 1892. She had been in delicate health for some time, but little did we think the end was so near. She was bright and cheerful on Sunday, more so than usual. That night, after she had been in bed a little while, she called her husband and told him that she was suffering very much. He did all he could for her, and a doctor was sent for. He returned on Monday to see her, and pronounced her out of danger. She was restless all Monday night, but on Tuesday morning seemed better, and asked her husband if she could get up. He fixed her chair by the fire, and placed her in it. He then went behind her for something, and saw her throw up her hands. She never spoke again. As he took her up and laid her down she put one arm around his neck, and passed away. O how hard it was for him to give her up, as well as for the dear children to part with such a dear and precious mother; but he bows in sweet submission to the will of God, feeling that she was the Lord's, who gave her, and has taken her in his own time. O how the Valley Church will miss her; for we all loved her more than a friend. She had not united with the church, but I think she loved them dearly, for she would go through heat and cold to their meetings. She was like a little lamb bleating around the fold. At the first baptism she witnessed at the Valley she wept. I asked her if she were glad to be there. She said she was. Her favorite hymn was, "How firm a foundation, ye saints of the Lord," &c. I have seen her weep while that hymn was being sung. I think earth had lost its charms for her; for the last talks we had together about dying she said she did not expect to live long. All the regret she seemed to have was in leaving her family. She longed for rest, such as this world could not give her.

"O land of rest! for thee I sigh!

When will the moment come

When I shall lay my armor by,

And dwell with Christ at home!"

Her funeral was preached by our dear brother, Elder E. V. White, at the Kettocton meeting-house, using as a text Psalm lxxii. 1, 2. I could not attend her funeral, but was told that the sermon was grand, and the attendance very large. She was loved by all who knew her.

Mrs. Myers was a daughter of the late Wm. Shawen, of Loudoun Co., Va. She was in the forty-eighth year of her age. She died with heart disease. She leaves her beloved husband, five loving children, five devoted brothers and two loving sisters, with a host of other relatives and friends, to mourn their loss; but they feel that for her to die was gain. The warfare with her is ended.

"O happy soul, who safely past

Thy weary warfare here,

Arrived at Jesus' feet at last,

And ended all thy care."

No more will we meet her at her home, where the Baptists have had such a pleasant time with her, as well as with brother Frank. She never wearied of waiting upon them. I am glad the Lord gave her to us, for a sweeter lady I never knew.

HUGHESVILLE, Va.

BRETHREN BEEBE:—Another precious and beloved disciple of Christ has been called home. Mrs. Lovicy Brown, beloved wife of Deacon Benjamin Brown, departed this life early on the morning of Feb. 17th, 1893, in the village of North Henderson, Mercer Co., Ill., aged 70 years, 9 months and 27 days.

Sister Brown was a daughter of John and Mary McMurtry, and was born in Crawford Co., Ind., April 20th, 1822, and when eight years old the family came to Illinois and located in Knox County. For about two years the family had to seek the protection of a fort, on account of the roving bands of the Black Indians. When the deceased was about eleven years old her mother died, leaving six little girls. A remarkable and touching incident occurred on the next Sunday at the grave of the mother. Little Lovicy went to the grave with three of her little sisters, and arranging them around it, according to age, said, "Let us all kneel in silent prayer." From about that age her friends believe that she became concerned about eternal things. On July 4th, 1839, she was united in marriage with Benjamin Brown, who survives her. She was the mother of six children, Elder John M. Brown being one of them. Two sons and three daughters survive her, and were all present at her burial; and her three sisters were also present.

Our beloved sister united with the Henderson Church of Old School or Primitive Baptists, Knox Co., Ill., in 1844, and was baptized by the late Elder Joseph Jones. Sister Brown was thus a member of that church nearly fifty years, and was esteemed by all as one of the pillars of the church, as an able defender of the doctrine and order of the gospel, and having a comprehensive understanding of the revealed word of God. Faithful in her attendance at the meetings, able in discipline, and lovely in her manners, she was dearly beloved, and will be greatly missed by the Baptists of her acquaintance. I have known the deceased about thirty-five years, and I write this feeble tribute of respect to her memory, but feel that I shall fall far short of doing justice to her memory.

Sister Brown suffered several attacks of severe affliction the last few years of her life, all of which she bore with wonderful patience; and finally she was subject to heart trouble and dropsy. A few days only did she suffer in her final attack, but some of the death-bed scenes were very remarkable and sublime. She was rational until the last moment; and as long as she could speak she talked to her devoted husband, children and friends, saying that it was not hard to die, but that she found it hard to live, and that there was not a cloud between her and immortality. She had several sinking spells before she passed away, in one of which her friends thought she was gone; but she rallied again, and then told her friends that she had seen the glory of the world of spirits, and that her tongue could not describe its wonders, but that it was simply the glory of God. She gave directions about her burial in every particular—her coffin, her shroud, her grave; that I must come (sixty miles) and speak on the occasion; must read the fourteenth chapter of John, and use the first few verses as a text; that we should use hymns 1216 and 1257 in Beebe's Collection, &c. She finally fell asleep without a struggle, and left our dear brother and family desolate, and other relatives and the church to deeply feel their loss of this very estimable Christian lady.

I attended on Sunday, the 19th, and spoke at the residence briefly to a large audience, and then drove five miles to the church, and a large congregation was addressed there briefly; after which her remains were laid to rest near by, until God shall raise the dead. May the Lord bless the bereaved.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date. This date denotes the time at which your subscription expires; and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

GRACE.

JESUS, I love thy blessed name,
I have no hope but thee;
I would lie passive in thy hands,
Who art my only plea.

I lift my eyes, I look within,
Nothing but guilt I see;
But I would look to Calvary's cross,
And hope thou died for me.

For me, the vilest of the vile,
Thy blood was shed for me;
An act of sovereign, reigning grace,
How wonderful and free.

Then thanks, eternal thanks to grace,
So boundless, rich and free,
That Jesus ever came to die
For such a wretch as me.

Sometimes my soul can soar aloft,
As though on eagle's wings,
And shout and sing, 'Tis all of grace,
From first to last. Amen.

When I can get upon this strain,
And see such depths of grace,
I weep, I laugh, I sing, I cry,
It must be all of grace.

CORRESPONDENCE.

PARABLE OF THE PRODIGAL SON.

Luke xv.

I READ not long ago a sermon upon this parable, copied from the "Gospel Standard," of London, in which the elder son was regarded as representing an obedient christian who becomes jealous and angry when a brother, who has transgressed, repents and is welcomed back by the church. I do not now remember of having read this sermon in the "Standard," which I have taken for more than twenty years, and I cannot recall the name of the one who preached it. There was rich experimental truth in it, without which I do not think it would have been published in that magazine; but I do not think it gave the correct interpretation of the parable, especially as regards the father and the elder son. I wish now to present some considerations concerning it, to which I ask the careful consideration of the readers of the SIGNS, and particularly of the editors of the "Gospel Standard," though I do not think they regard the elder son as representing a gospel character.

In the true interpretation of a parable all its general features will be faithfully preserved, and no violence will be done to those apparently connecting portions which we may not be able clearly to apply; and every peculiar form of speech or special action recorded will have a special significance in illustration of the truth in the correct interpretation, which will not appear in any that is erroneous. The true interpretation will also be distinguished in this, that it will be in accordance with the experience of the Lord's people, in the light of which alone it can be understood. "Unto you," said the dear Savior to his disciples, "it is given to know the mystery of the things of the kingdom; but unto them that are without it is not given."

"And he said, A certain man had two sons; and the younger of them said to his father, Father, give me the portion of goods that falleth to me. And he divided unto them his living."

I do not understand this man to represent God, for reasons that I shall try to present; and for the same reasons, and others, I do understand that he is intended to represent Abraham, as the father of both the fleshly and the spiritual Israel.

1. I do not know of any sense in which God is spoken of in the Scriptures as having two sons. He has one "only begotten Son;" and all the innumerable company of "many sons" that he brings to glory have that relationship in him, and "are one with him" in that sense. Those who think these two sons both represent children of God understand them to stand for two classes of christians, obedient and disobedient. But there must be a good deal of embarrassment in the effort to sustain this view; for if we could see any way in which the history of the younger might answer to the experience of an erring christian, and to the various degrees of transgression (for each son must represent ALL of his class), we should be at great loss as to how the elder son could represent ALL of the obedient class, or even any of them.

These difficulties do not appear in the view that I now present. "For it is written that Abraham had two sons, the one by a bond maid, the other by a free woman. But he who was of the bond woman was after the flesh; but he of the free woman was by promise. Which things are an allegory; for these are the two covenants; the one from the mount Sinai, which gendereth to bondage, which is Agar. For this Agar is mount Sinai in Arabia, and answereth to Jerusalem which now is, and is in bondage with her children. But Jerusalem which is above is free, which is the mother of us all."

—Gal. iv. 22-26. Abraham is thus presented by the apostle as the father of both the old covenant and the new covenant children. Of the one he is the father as pertaining to the flesh, and holds for them all the goods of that conditional covenant; of the other he is the father by "the righteousness of faith," of which he received the sign of circumcision as a seal, "that he might be the father of all them that believe, though they be not circumcised."—Rom. iv. 1, 11.

In this, as in most, if not all of the parables, I understand the Savior to be showing the distinction between the legal and the gospel character, "taking forth the precious from the vile." In doing this, he describes the characters and sets forth the thoughts and acts of both, and in a special manner points out the strange and wonderful path in which his chosen are brought from under the covenant of works, where all at first are, and manifested as children of the heavenly Jerusalem. This is always for the comfort of the poor sinner who has been blessed to mourn on account of sin, and to hunger and thirst after righteousness; for he not only sees in the legal character a self-confidence and self-approval which he can no longer feel, but in the gospel character he reads the sins and sorrows and longings of his own heart. Regarding Abraham as the father, we shall see how each son represents ALL of each kind of children; "the children of the flesh," who "are not the children of God," and "the children of promise," who are "accounted for the seed."—Rom. ix. 8. The condition, work and language of the elder son characterize ALL of those who "go about to establish their own righteousness;" and the history of the younger is the heart-history of ALL who are called to repentance, and are made to rejoice in the blessings of the everlasting covenant.

2. It cannot truly be said of any gifts of God to his children that "he divided unto them his living," as an earthly father does when he gives to his children a portion of his estate. Nor does this forcible figure have any application to the manner of receiving or holding gospel blessings. There are no goods in the church of our Lord Jesus Christ to be divided as a separate portion to each of the children. Their inheritance in spiritual things is of a kind which allows of no division. They "are joint heirs with Christ." In a joint heirship an undivided part of the whole inheritance belongs to each heir. The right of every heir extends to every part of the estate, and he cannot dispose of that right in any way; therefore there could be no taking away, wasting or marring of any part without damage to every other heir. Light in a room will partly illustrate this kind of inheritance. Each occupant of the room has a right to an undivided part of the whole, and cannot do with less; but his full occupation of his right does not in the least lessen or disturb the enjoyment of any other.

A christian may go away from the good things of the gospel for a time, but he cannot take them with him. It is a blessed provision of the new covenant that nothing belonging to the children can be wasted or injured. Even though he sell his birthright, nobody else can obtain and enjoy it, as Jacob did that of Esau in natural things. His sonship cannot be sold, though its rights cannot be enjoyed by him while away from his Father's house. All this kind of goods are kept safely; and when the wandering child is brought back from the barren wastes of the world, he is amazed, and humbled in the dust, and melted down in love and thankfulness and deep contrition, to find that the boundless love of God has kept for him all those precious things which he thought he had lost forever, and has kept also for him that mercy without which the door into this heavenly enjoyment could never have been opened to him again.

This feature of the parable is true, however, of Abraham as the father of "Israel after the flesh." The rites and ceremonies of the law, and everything pertaining to this covenant of works, are the goods of those who are under it, and represent their living. "He that doeth these things shall live by them." It is to be remembered that the Jews always referred to Abraham as the father of their house, through whom these things which constituted their living were received. Now all these legal things go, with the responsibility indicated by them, belong to each one severally and individually. "The soul that sinneth it shall die." But this division of goods is not made, this individual responsibility is not manifested, until the younger son calls for his portion of the goods. This calling for his goods is an evidence that he has become dissatisfied where he is, that he feels his personal responsibility, and wishes to make his condition better. The elder son seems to have had no such feelings; and even after the division has been made at the request of the younger, he does not appear to have taken any account of it as of any interest to him, but continued working in the field as before. This is the case in the separation of the Lord's people from the world. When he will manifest them as children of the new covenant he first makes them restless under the old; for they are all at first under that covenant in which the wrath of God against sin is shown, being "by nature children of wrath even as others;" and until he quickens them by divine life they are as satisfied under that covenant as the others. "But when God, who is rich in mercy, for his great love wherewith he loved us, even when we were dead in sins," quickens us, then we begin to see and feel how much we lack yet, even though we may think, as the rich young man did, that we have kept all the commandments "from our youth up." Then we feel that we need a righteousness that exceeds what we now have, and at once go seeking for it. Of course we know of no way to obtain it by a more careful and profitable use of our legal goods, and we go to work with a sense of personal care and responsibility and anxiety never felt by those doing routine work under the direction of another. But this work only shows more and more how sinful we are, how far from the righteousness required by the law, which now begins to appear very plain to us. It does not take the poor sinner long to make that journey into the "far country," nor long to waste all his legal goods, and find himself not only destitute, but deeply disgraced. All this special work that he has done has only shown that every corrupt principle is in his heart, and his case, as he feels it, is just like the one who undertook to get more happiness by spending his goods according to his own judgment, but only wasted them in riotous living and was left impoverished, sick and disgraced. We thought to improve upon our present condition by what we should do, and increase the stock of righteousness we already had by employing it, as capital in money is employed often to great profit, by wise investment and energetic work. But the result is that all is gone, not only the goods we spent, but the stock we thought we possessed before. We have learned that we are far from righteousness. This vile nature of ours is the "far country" where we now find ourselves, without righteousness or strength, with no food but husk, no clothing but "filthy rags." Here and now the "mighty famine" arises in this land, and we begin to be in want.

We must not think that those who are intended to be represented by this younger son are such as have committed some special act of sin. It would not then be a parable. The teaching is concerning what takes place in the heart. The journey and dissipation of the younger son shows how the sinner finds out his true condition as vile and filthy in the sight of the law, while the steady working of the other shows the self-satisfied state of the natural man. The younger son had a right to call for his portion, and the father made no objection. The goods divided to both sons were the same. That which was wasted by the young and brought him to grief and shame is the same as that which is still the boast and dependence of the other. The very same works that have shown the child of God the sins and corruptions of his heart, are the riches and glory of the carnal professor.

This is the Lord's way of bringing us to the knowledge of the total depravity of our nature. Without these efforts to work ourselves into a more favorable state before the Lord we should never have known how far we are from him by nature, how vile and sinful before him. "By the law is the knowledge of sin." "I had not known sin but by the law." "Sin, taking occasion by the commandment, wrought in me all manner of concupiscence."

In this far country the quickened sinner alone is poor. The people of the country are rich. The natural man feels no need of anything which his own wisdom and strength cannot produce. This nature of ours, which has now become such a "far country" to this poor stranger, and so barren of all he needs, is to them the center and source of all abundance. They can live luxuriously upon its products. The famine which brings this poor stranger to such want does not touch them. In his extremity he tries to earn something by joining with them, and working in the fields of philosophy and wisdom of men. But wages do not help him at all. While he makes repeated efforts to believe that this vain philosophy and doctrine, which this carnal mind has hired him to dispense to others, is of some real value, and is often animated and encouraged by the eagerness with which it is received and swallowed down by those to whom he is sent with it by his wealthy employer, yet he has no profit to himself of all this labor under the sun; nor can he eat a morsel of it himself.

"And no man gave unto him." The natural man has nothing to give him that would be of any help, and has no care for him, nor sympathy for his needy condition. In this country there is no giving; all who need must earn a supply, or die. When his labor fails to supply his need he is at the end of the earth.

"From the end of the earth will I cry unto thee." "All the ends of the earth shall see the salvation of our God." The way to that salvation lies through the fulfillment of the law, and in that direction alone can the sinner look, even when he clearly sees that it justly condemns him. He knows nothing of Christ as the way, for that knowledge can never come until he is revealed in us the hope of glory; and when there is no longer any possible hope of paying any part of what the law demands, then, at the end of earthly power and wisdom and righteousness and hope, the cry for mercy begins. This desire for mercy is put into his heart by the Lord, and he must beg for it, not knowing that it is the Lord's way of bringing him to himself. "They shall come with weeping, and with supplication will I lead them." But it is to the God of the law and of justice that he looks, for he knows of no other. The publican went with his cries for mercy to the temple, the legal place of worship, but dared not go near. In his view the Pharisee was worthy of the favors he possessed, while he had not only no right to them, but deserved to be cast out. Yet all that his soul needs and hungers for is represented in that temple. To his father's house the younger son turns back, for there is the bread for which his soul is fainting. From this distant land utterly destitute, he now remembers that bread with a different feeling from that with which he regarded it while at home. Then he thought little or nothing about it, but now it is life to him. He remembers how plenty it was, so that even the servants had more than they needed. The plenty of that time is not what would satisfy him now; but he does not know this. He thinks if he could only get back where he was before, even as a servant, it would be so much better than this awful hunger. He knows of no desirable place but Abraham's house, for there only is the worship of that true God whom now he loves as never before. He has no thought of asking for his place again as a son. He has forfeited the right so proudly boasted of by the Jew, to say "Abraham is our father." He only asks for mercy, asks for the place of a servant. His pride is gone. He is humbled in the dust. No one brings a charge against him of sins done in that far country. No one can see into his heart to bring accusations of the terrible evils that have been discovered by him there. He makes the confession himself. And the form of that confession is peculiar; "Father, I have sinned against heaven, and in thy sight, and am no more worthy to be called thy son. Make me as one of thy hired servants." The Lord has no hired servants in the church, but in the house of Abraham after the flesh there were many. Against the legal heavens he has sinned, in the sight of Abraham, so that he can never hope to be received back as his son. Of the new gospel heavens, which the Lord has created for the joy and rejoicing of his people, this poor sinner yet knows nothing.—Isa lxxv.

The publican did not pray for mercy because he thought it would be a good work, but because he deeply felt his need of it. The younger son did not start back because he thought such a course would advance his interests with his father, but because his hunger compelled him, even though he must go as a beggar, and even then with no prospect of being heard by that father, in whose sight he had sinned so grievously, and must be so loathsome. The Syro-Phenician woman did not ask the crumbs of mercy because she thought the asking would be a meritorious act, but because she must have them, and was willing to receive them as a dog, feeling that she had no more right to them. So the poor sinner cries for mercy, though he sees no way in which a just and holy God can grant it. But his humble confession and earnest cry are full of power. The poor woman's faith reached farther than she knew, and brought an answer that went beyond her asking, covering all the desires of her heart. The publican, amazed and glad, went down to his house justified, when he had only asked for mercy. The younger son was lost in wonder to receive not only his place again as a son of Abraham, but also such expressions of love, and abundant favors, as had never been received, nor even known or cared for, by either of the sons before.

This shows the way in which the one who is condemned by the law receives the blessings of the gospel. Abraham must give them to him. They were promised to Abraham and to his seed exclusively in the covenant, and therefore through him comes the right to them. If that seed had meant the children of the flesh, then no Gentile nor disobedient Jew could ever have received the blessing, because it would then have come by the law; but the apostle clearly shows that it could not be by the law, because the covenant, in which all those blessings were promised to him, "was confirmed of God in Christ four hundred and thirty years before the law was given" to his fleshly seed, and so could not be affected by it. "For the promise was not made to Abraham through the law, but through the righteousness of faith." "Therefore it is of faith, that it might be by grace; to the end the promise might be sure to all the seed."—Romans iv. 13-16. "Therefore they that are of faith, the same are the children of Abraham," whether they be Jew or Gentile; and "the blessing of Abraham comes upon them through Christ." These are children of promise, as Isaac was; and as Abraham received Isaac again from the dead in a figure, so these are all received by him from the dead. They all go away, as the younger son did, realize by their dealings with legal things the abounding of sin within them, receive its wages, which are death, and then, through the greater abounding of grace, are brought again from the dead as the "children of Abraham by faith in Jesus Christ," "and heirs according to promise."—Gal. iii. and iv. How well all this truth, so fully dwelt upon by the apostle, is represented in the coming of the younger son into the wonderful enjoyment of things in that house which he never knew about before he went away, and by the words of his father when he received him: "This my son was dead, and is alive again." The special gifts of the father to that son represent the blessings of Abraham that "come upon the Gentiles through Christ." Those four tokens point to Christ. It is Abraham who receives the outcast and the stranger to the blessings that are in Christ. They could not belong to anybody but his seed, and through him must come the recognition of that seed.

In another parable the same truth is presented in a different way. Lazarus, the poor outcast, or stranger, sick and sore from the effect of sin, begging in vain for food from the legal table, where the Jew fares sumptuously every day, is carried, in the gospel dispensation, by angels, the ministers of new covenant blessings, into Abraham's bosom. That covenant which was made with him, and in which were promised him all spiritual blessings, "as the heir of the world," is as a bosom of rest and sweet content to the sin-sick soul that has tried in vain to find salvation by the works of the law; and those who by nature "are aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers to the covenant of promise," are made nigh by the blood of Christ. By that precious blood they have been "redeemed from the curse of the law," "that the blessing of Abraham might come on the Gentiles," and on the outcast Jew alike, "through Christ." "For the Scripture hath concluded all under sin, that the promise by faith of Jesus Christ might be given to them that believe." "For all are children of God by faith in Jesus Christ;" and such "are Abraham's seed, and heirs according to promise."—Gal. iii. 13–29. How carefully and tenderly, and with what absolute certainty, these ministers of Christ, such as Paul, carry the poor, afflicted beggars into this bosom of Abraham, and declare to them with glad assurance, "Now therefore ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow-citizens with the saints, and of the household of God."—Eph. ii. 19; Rom. xi. 11, 30–32.

The younger son has turned about, with his face toward that house where righteousness is, though he can see there no place of righteousness for him; but he is still a great way off when the unexpected meeting with his father takes place. He has made really no progress toward the house, except in his soul's desires. He is as ragged and vile as ever, "full of wounds and bruises and putrefying sores," and had no thought of even asking to enter the house, except in great mercy to be allowed a corner in the appointed place of servants. What a wonder, what bewildering joy fills his soul at this amazing revelation of love to him, where he looked for wrath. That very law, the legal heavens, against which he has so grievously sinned in the sight of his father, now brings forth for him, at the command of that very father, the best robe of righteousness to clothe him fitly. "The righteousness of the law is fulfilled in him," which had never been fulfilled by him. "He stands holy and unblamable in love before God" in the house of Abraham, "the father of all them that believe," and knows, as only poor, repentant sinners can know, "the blessedness of the man unto whom the Lord imputeth righteousness without works." The ring is put upon his hand to show the everlasting, securely binding and priceless quality of the love he now receives; and shoes are put upon his feet, even the preparation of the gospel of peace, by which henceforth he can stand upon the holy ground of the gospel, and walk in the precious good works of Jesus, which God hath before ordained that his people should walk in. And according to the mysterious terms of that covenant made with Abraham, in his flesh, in which the righteousness of faith which he had before was sealed with the sign of circumcision, the fatted calf is brought forth in his house, and killed for the feast of this son received again from the dead. Jesus is thus set forth as crucified, that these poor wanderers and strangers may be "delivered from the curse of the law," "the body of the sins of the flesh, being put off by the circumcision of Christ," so that now, without spot and blameless and unreplicable in the dear Savior's sight, they can "rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory." Here is a glorious feast, and a solemn merriment and gladness in the house of our father Abraham, which now appears as the house of God, the heavenly Jerusalem, whose children, that were all lost, are now home again forever.

4. The elder son is still working in the field, as are all who believe in salvation by their own works. Here is another point of difference between him and the one who is under the gospel dispensation; "for we which have believed do enter into rest," and "He that hath entered into his [Jesus'] rest, he also hath ceased from his own works, as God did from his."—Heb. iv. 3, 10. Jesus has finished the work of salvation, and there is no work for his people to do but to "speak of the glory of his kingdom, and talk of his power" (Psalm cxlv. 11), and show forth, by an obedient walk, "the praises of him who hath called them out of darkness into his marvelous light."

When the elder son drew near to the house, and heard the music and dancing, he did not go in himself, but called a servant, "and inquired what these things meant." When he was told of his brother's return, and of what had been done, he became angry, and would not go in. In order to represent a true christian he should have been in the house when his brother arrived, and the first to welcome him with joy. There is no work for a child of God that calls him outside of the church. His feet must stand within the gates of Jerusalem.—Psalm cxii. 2. If I should ever see one in the church become angry and jealous because a glad welcome is given to an erring brother who has returned humble, repentant, sorrowful, asking forgiveness, and seeking only the lowest place, I should conclude that he had never known the love of God to himself as a poor sinner, and had no right to a place in the church; for if ever that love, "which is the bond of perfectness," could be felt as strong enough to overcome the selfishness of our carnal natures, it would be on an occasion like that. I have never seen anything to indicate to me the indulgence of such a vile and hateful passion on such an occasion by a child of God.

But this is the disposition of the Pharisee toward a sinner who seeks a place in the house of Abraham, and toward whoever would give it to him. "He receiveth sinners," was in the esteem of the Jews as strong an objection as could be raised against Jesus. To this day the anger and contempt of those who believe in salvation by works is excited at the very suggestion of that doctrine which declares the electing love and heavenly favor of God to be received by those who in no way deserve it.

5. Why should an obedient christian who exhibits such a vile disposition toward a repentant brother, if such there be, be represented as the elder brother? We can see a reason when we look at him as representing the bond-children; for Ishmael was older than Isaac, enough older to mock him in the sorrowful time of weaning; Esau was older than Jacob; the law was before the gospel in manifestation, and is so in experience.

6. Can a child of God ever get into such a state as to say to him, "Lo, these many years do I serve thee, neither transgressed I at any time thy commandment," and that by way of complaining because favors have been shown to a poor brother? But this is the very language of the Pharisee. "Touching the righteousness which is in the law I was blameless." "We be Abraham's children, and were never in bondage to any man." They could boldly and sincerely persist in saying that it is not right to receive a sinner, and bestow those blessings upon him which truly belong only to the obedient. This Abraham does, so they are represented in the parable as making the complaint to him, which they really do. Yet they denied then, and still deny, that Abraham takes that course. They professed then, and still profess, that the Scriptures are their guide, while they deny them by their works; and while they are acknowledged by the Savior to be the seed of Abraham, they still manifest, as he told them, that they are not his children, in a spiritual sense, by not doing his works.—John viii. 37, 39.

7. Can the child of God ever say to him, "Thou never gavest me a kid, that I might rejoice with my friends?" Can he ever forget or deny the time of the gladness of his soul, when the night of weeping was gone, and the morning of gospel joy had dawned upon him? The Pharisee can truly use this language. He is under that dispensation of work which allows no time for merry-making. Singing and dancing are appropriate when work is finished and its rewards are received; but the work of the bond-children is never done. This character sees no reason for such a waste of time. He does not ask for the fatted calf for himself—seems to care nothing about that. He does not even ask for a kid, but merely mentions the fact that none was ever given him, as a complaint against the present unwise extravagance; against a doctrine and practice which he is sure will only tend to encourage just such licentious conduct as his brother has been engaged in.

8. If a child of God ever could have the face to make such a complaint to the Lord, could it possibly be upon the ground that he was much more worthy of such favors than this brother who has done so wickedly, and who does not even claim that he merits anything but punishment? But this is the very feeling and belief of every believer in a conditional salvation. Self-approval, and a contempt of the sinner, are the very heart and soul of that doctrine. The humble acknowledgments of sin and pollution, in the strong terms that are at times forced from the poor sinner, are an offense to the pharisaic principle in the heart. One who has never felt the awful depths of depravity in his own heart has an instinctive contempt for one who acknowledges such villainess, and really regards himself as far better and holier; while every heaven-taught soul knows that he has nothing to boast over the vilest transgressor, but great cause for thankfulness for that wonderful grace that has kept him from a greater fall.

And here we must close this so imperfect contemplation of so great and instructive a subject. We see the elder son still with his father Abraham, while the younger is in the house to which he cannot be entreated to go in. All that Abraham has in that legal covenant was his, and remained so to the last of that old covenant; but he cannot, and has no desire to, enter the house of joy and singing. All through the Scriptures, which preached the gospel to Abraham before Christ came, the entreaty is to that people to come

ORDAINED TO CONDEMNATION.

"For there are certain men crept in unawares, who were before of old ordained to this condemnation, ungodly men, turning the grace of our God into lasciviousness, and denying the only Lord God, and our Lord Jesus Christ."—Jude 4.

A very dear brother in the ministry, "whose praise is in the gospel throughout all the churches," has asked of Elder Jenkins for his views of this expression of the sacred record, and also for his understanding of the passage included in 2 Thess. i. 6-10. At the request of Elder J. we submit the following thoughts in connection with the text quoted from Jude. Of the other subject proposed it will not be expedient to write at this time. But it may be observed that Paul was moved by the Holy Ghost to give thanks to God for the display of his righteousness in taking vengeance on them that know him not, as well as in giving to the troubled saints rest. The same infinite righteousness is revealed both in the visitation of his just condemnation upon the guilty, and in giving to his afflicted and poor people rest with the apostles and prophets who were inspired to bear undying testimony to the truth which shines in the face of Jesus Christ. Without the recognition of the unlimited sovereignty of our God, controlling what we call evil, as well as what appears to us to be good, there could be no reliance upon the consolation which Paul was moved by the Holy Ghost to record in the connection to which our brother refers.

In the text above copied, it is evident that the reason is assigned for that which immediately precedes the text. In this brief epistle is embodied all the doctrine of God our Savior. Jude does not claim so much importance as to be above the need of introducing himself to the saints; he first presents his credentials as the servant of Jesus Christ, and then further identifies himself as the brother of James. Next he defines particularly those to whom his message is addressed, "To them that are sanctified by God the Father, and preserved in Jesus Christ, and called." On all such he invokes mercy and peace abundantly. Then he declares the testimony which he must bear to them. He does not say that they may secure his love by complying with conditions submitted; but recognizing their peculiar character as already established, he says, "Beloved, when I gave all diligence to write unto you of the common salvation [that is, of the salvation which belongs in common to all the election of grace in Christ Jesus], it was needful for me to write unto you, and exhort you that ye should earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints." Then follows the reason assigned in our text.

"For there are certain men crept in unawares." Let those who would cavil over this text carefully observe the language in its letter. Jude does not say that these creepers are persons who have succeeded in defeating the eternal design of God by invading the church; neither is it to be understood that in their wickedness they have brought to pass any circumstances which were not included in the eternal purpose of God. In all their deceitful working they have not escaped the scrutiny of that all-seeing eye of the Keeper of Israel, who neither slumbers nor sleeps. They have indeed crept in unawares to the saints whom they have deceived; but they can go no further than the limit set by the omnipotent God, by whom all his saints are kept through faith unto salvation. One point should be particularly noticed in reference to these intruders; they are never troubled with the suggestion of their real character. Their object is to deceive and rob the saints of their rest by introducing false doctrines for their own advantage. Only the true child, who hungers and thirsts after righteousness, is ever tempted to question the genuineness of his own evidence of being a child of God. As the tempter challenged the reality of the relationship of the Lord Jesus, so he is ever ready to raise the same question in the heart of every one who is led by the Spirit of God to follow in the footsteps of the dear Redeemer. Certainly he never tempts any of his own children. Neither could the temptation be a distress to one whose element is sin. Therefore, it is conclusive evidence that the love of righteousness is in every one who is troubled by reason of the consciousness of indwelling sin. Such cannot be the creepers to whom our text refers. The very language implies the design of such characters to deceive the church into which they have crept. This cannot be the case with one who loves the church. For the assurance of the tried saints the truth is written, "Beloved, let us love one another; for love is of God; and EVERY ONE THAT LOVETH IS BORN OF GOD, AND KNOWETH GOD."—1 John iv. 7. This gives the assurance to every one who loves righteousness and hates iniquity, that he is not one of those who have "crept in unawares."

"Who were before of old ordained unto this condemnation." However far back into the past the mind may plunge in the search for the date here specified, it is impossible for the finite comprehension of created beings to grasp the designated period. If we go back to the creation of the material universe, that is of old; but this ordination was before that. It certainly cannot result from anything which has transpired in time, since it was already settled in the ordination which was before the most remote period of time. They were ordained to this condemnation before the beginning of the material creation; for the date of that is given. "Of old hast thou laid the foundation of the earth; and the heavens are the work of thy hands."—Psalm cii. 25. Let the saints rejoice that this is left on record; for it shows them that the eternal purpose of God has never been changed by all the iniquity of sinners. The election of grace is settled in the eternal love of God, by which the saints were chosen in Christ before the world was; and that same eternal purpose of God appoints the condemnation of those who are described in our text. Let not the charge be brought against God that his appointment is unjust; neither let finite worms presume to ask why God has determined the destiny of all his creatures according to the good pleasure of his own will. "He giveth not account of any of his matters."—Job xxxiii. 13. "Even so, Father, for so it seemed good in thy sight!" This was satisfactory to our suffering Lord; it is sufficient for the saints when they are led by his Spirit. One thing should cause every trembling saint to rejoice, and that is the fact which is eternally settled, that none can ever be brought under this dreadful sentence but those here specified. Divine wisdom appointed and ordained to this condemnation none of those poor and needy ones whose earnest desire to be free from sin identifies them as lovers of righteousness. Every one who bears that peculiar mark is sealed by the holy Spirit of God unto the day of redemption. They cannot come under the wrath of God; because they are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation, sanctified by God the Father, and preserved in Jesus Christ. Those who are under this appointment to wrath are every one of them willing servants of the power of iniquity which dwells in them. By their hatred of the doctrine of the gospel they only develop the manner of spirit to which they freely choose to yield obedience. No deeper torment could be inflicted upon them than to be compelled to abide evermore in the presence of that holy God in whom is all the delight of those to whom his grace has brought salvation from sin. There is no condemnation to those who hate their own life because of its sinfulness; and there is no sinner who longs for deliverance from sin but that is led by the Spirit of God to hunger and thirst after righteousness. All such shall be filled with the perfect holiness of God in Christ Jesus. None shall be banished from the joyful presence of our Redeemer but such as shall say to the mountains and rocks, "Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb; for the great day of his wrath is come; and who shall be able to stand?"—Rev. vi. 16, 17. This manifests the condemnation to which they were "before of old ordained."

"Ungodly men, turning the grace of our God into lasciviousness, and denying the only Lord God, and our Lord Jesus Christ." This specific description definitely excludes every sick believer from the number of those creepers to whom the apostle refers. Ungodly men have no grief on account of the sin which dwells in their members. They may wish to die the death of the righteous, and to let their last end be like his; but they cannot wish to live the life of the righteous, nor choose to suffer affliction with the people of God. The characteristic by which they are described as "ungodly men," forbids the application of what is said of them to any who wish to be holy. That desire cannot arise from the enmity of the carnal mind, which is all the mind the natural man can possess. Their hatred against godliness is shown by these characters "turning the grace of our God into lasciviousness." It is not uncommon for such men to boldly declare that if they believed the doctrine of election and predestination, as it is held by those who tremblingly hope in the grace of God for salvation, they would go into all manner of wickedness, and trust to being saved anyhow. The grace of our God never leads those in whom it is revealed to any such ungodliness. Those ungodly men clearly expose their real principle when they confess that they are only restrained from acting out their wicked desires by the fear of future consequences. If they must be hired by the hope of reward, or driven by the fear of punishment, it is manifest that they do not love righteousness, nor hate iniquity. They unwittingly expose their real love of sin in their zeal against the truth of salvation by the grace of God as revealed in Jesus Christ.

These ungodly men cannot refrain from "denying the only Lord God, and our Lord Jesus Christ." In rejecting the doctrine of sovereign election by divine grace as the only way of salvation for sinners, they assert that the gospel as revealed in Jesus is not true, and thus deny the only revelation which God has given of himself. Every false system of religion is included in this awful blasphemy. Nor does it help their case that they claim to be followers of Christ. The rejection of the truth which bears the seal of inspired authority is the denial of the Author of that truth. And there is no denial of the only Lord God by creatures in any other way but in the rejection of his truth as revealed in the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. Careful attention to the address of this epistle forbids that it should be applied to avowed opposers of the organized church. It is into this sacred "house of God, which is the church of the living God, the pillar and ground of the truth," the text asserts that these characters have crept unawares. They have not come without designs on their own part; neither have they crept in so stealthily as to have escaped the observation of that God who every moment waters the vineyard which he keeps night and day. Since these men were before of old ordained to this condemnation, it is evident no secret work of theirs could escape the attention of that God who "hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation." The experience of the churches has illustrated the manner in which these creepers have invaded the holy places of the tabernacles of the Most High. The idea of creeping implies that they profess much meekness and distrust of their own judgment, and claim to seek instruction. They do not come with assumption of importance and authority, for this would alarm the saints; but their more common manner of creeping in is with such a painful profession of humility that it would be cruel to question their sincere love to the doctrine and organization of the church. Once they have gained the confidence of the saints they soon proceed to show their hatred against the truth by denying the very essential principle of the sovereignty of God, without which there can be no truth in the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Since these creepers are before appointed, it is evident that they are an essential portion of the creation of our God, and that they are included among the things which work together for the good of them who love God, and are the called according to his purpose. Cain and Pharaoh and Judas Iscariot acted out the wickedness of their own hearts; but they fulfilled the purpose of God. The remainder of their wrath he restrained. So the malice and deceitfulness of ungodly men in our day can do no more than our God has appointed for them to accomplish. The saints need not be disturbed when such creepers revile the truth of God; that is only fulfilling the purpose for which our God has raised them up. "But they shall proceed no further; for their folly shall be manifest unto all."

Hoping that others may be moved to write for the SIGNS OF THE TIMES in further consideration of this important subject, and that our dear brethren Jenkins and the inquiring Elder may give expression to their own views, we submit the foregoing to their examination. Nothing is worthy of the acceptance of the saints but that which is clearly sustained by the inspired record of eternal truth.

Concerning the passage in 2 Thessalonians, if the Lord will, we hope to present some thoughts in our next number.

in. Abraham saw the day of Christ and was glad. Everything belonging to him, as the father of the children of the legal covenant, pointed to Christ. "All the day long I have stretched out my hands to a rebellious and gainsaying people," said the Lord. This entreaty only expresses how all the Scriptures, in which the Pharisees think they have eternal life, testify of Jesus. But he said to them, "Ye will not come unto me, that ye might have life." The gospel is preached to them, that it may be clearly made known that they have no will for it, no desire for what is in the house. They ALL refuse. The elder son stands for every one of them, for every natural man, to whom the things of the kingdom of God are foolishness, and who still in heart mocks and "persecutes him who is born after the Spirit." To them through all the Scriptures of truth, as they sweetly testify of Christ, comes the entreaty of Abraham, their father, in the wonderful words that explain and justify this rejoicing over the children who have found rest in the house of God, "It is meet that we should make merry and be glad; for this thy brother was dead, and is alive again; and was lost, and is found."

RECONCILIATION.

"All things are of God, who hath reconciled us to himself by Jesus Christ."—2 Cor. v. 18.

DEAR BRETHREN:—The inspired Paul had just said to his brethren in Christ, "Old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new. And all things are of God." That is, all things that are become new are of God, and bear his impress. Every man in Christ Jesus is new, as new-born, having newness of life and spirit, new relations to God and his living people, a new heart, new desires and motives, new obligations, privileges and blessings; yea, all things are become new to the man who is himself a new creature in Christ. As new-born, he is heir to a new heaven and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness; and God's divine power hath given unto him all things that pertain to life and godliness. In this sense all things are of God. The covenant of life is new, the kingdom is new, the people are new, the city is new, the laws are new, the worship is new, the song is new, the joy is new; all things are new, and all things are of God.

"Who hath reconciled us to himself." Reconciliation is of God, therefore, and it is his work or act, not ours; for he is our Reconciler, and in love and mercy reconciles us to himself. So then, the enmity and irreconciliation were wholly on our part, but not on his; consequently, in the work of reconciliation, the change must be entirely in us, who are reconciled to God, and we only are acted upon; for the Lord changes not.—Mal. iii; James i. Israel was the chosen people of God, and his covenant was with them; yet they were a sinful and rebellious people; but he was still merciful, and called to them, saying, "Turn, O backsliding children, saith the Lord; for I am married unto you; and I will take you one of a city, and two of a family, and I will bring you to Zion."—Jer. iii. 14. This is much more true concerning his people of the new covenant, whom he hath loved with an everlasting love, and for whose sins Christ died; for he foreknew them as his glorified children, and predestinated them to be conformed to the holy image of his beloved Son. Therefore we should not think that God hated his people, or was angry with them, or irreconciled to them, and that Jesus must needs die for them to appease the wrath of their offended God; for Jesus is one with the Father, and his will and work were the Father's will and work. So the ministry of reconciliation testifies "That God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them," because Jesus made full atonement for their trespasses or sins, and through him God reconciles them to himself.—2 Cor. v; Rom. v.

To reconcile is to conciliate anew; to restore to friendship; to atone; to reunite. This proceeds from God, and he does it—reconciles us to himself, not himself to us. But the natural idea is, that God is offended at the sinner; therefore Christ died for sinners, to appease the anger of God towards them, and they must help to do the same, by turning to God and loving him; so that, through Christ's atonement and the sinner's repentance, God is reconciled to the penitent sinner and loves him. But Paul's doctrine in the text is, that "God hath reconciled us to himself." So then, God moved upon us, wrought in us, changed us toward him, and made us nigh unto him; but we did not move upon God, nor influence him, nor change him toward us, which the world thinks is so. Neither is it true, as men think, that God hath reconciled us to himself by the church and gospel ministry, nor by the Bible, nor by prayer, nor by preaching and teaching, nor by repentance and confession, but "By Jesus Christ." So then God in Christ hath reconciled us to himself. He hath made us his people, his friends, yea, his children; hath brought us back from our wanderings, made us nigh to himself, bestowed his love upon us, and given us a spirit to know him, and a heart to love him. This is rich mercy. All this is by our Lord Jesus Christ, who himself loved us, even as God loved him, and gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from the curse of the law, save us from our sins, and bring us to God in sweet reconciliation, peace and holiness. "For it pleased the Father that in him should all fullness dwell; and having made peace through the blood of his cross, by him to reconcile all things unto himself; by him, I say, whether they be things in earth or things in heaven. And you that were sometime alienated, and enemies in your mind by wicked works, yet now hath he reconciled in the body of his flesh through death, to present you holy, and unblamable, and unreprouvable in his sight."—Col. i. 19-22. This is the gracious and glorious purpose of God in having reconciled us to himself by Jesus Christ.

But as God was not our enemy, but we were his enemies, and he reconciles us to himself, the question may arise, Why should his holy Son die to make an atonement for our sins, and to make reconciliation and peace between God and us? The answer is, God is just and holy, no less than merciful and gracious, and love itself; and we were transgressors of his righteous law, which requires righteous obedience from those who are under it; therefore the blessed and holy "God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons;" that God might righteously reconcile us to himself, and that we should be holy and without blame before him in love. For this cause "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us."—Gal. iii., iv; Eph. i.

Therefore, brethren, not because God was offended at his foreknown people, did Christ die for their sins in the flesh, to turn away his anger from them (which would imply change in God), but because the holy law condemned them for their sins, and it must be fulfilled and honored. Paul plainly and beautifully tells us why and how it is that Christ died, saying, "But God commendeth his love toward us [not that he was offended at us], in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us. Much more then, being now justified by his blood [from the demands of the law] we shall be saved from wrath [the wrath or curse of the law], through him. For if, when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son, much more, being reconciled, we shall be saved by his life."—Rom. v. 8-10. So it was the love of God toward us, and not his wrath, that caused Christ to die for us. Paul therefore said of the Son of God, "Who loved me; and gave himself for me." O, brethren, do you not love this view of God, and of the atoning death of his beloved Son? Does it not sweetly reconcile us to God, as the dear children to our loving Father? For one, I love this view of our great and dreadful God; and it was the experience and understanding of this that first reconciled me to him, and gave me peace and joy in Christ Jesus my glorious Savior, who was blessedly revealed to me as the Lord my righteousness. Then I loved God, as my Father, and my soul joyfully praised him. That was nearly thirty-nine years ago. I then wrote to the minister who afterwards baptized me, "I am willing to be anything or nothing, just as God will." God thus reconciled me to himself by Christ Jesus. O how long and darkly, and with bitter anguish of spirit, I have labored to reconcile God to me under the awful fear that in wrath he was about to consume me. O how piteously I had wept, and begged for his mercy and pardon. Therefore the relief to my laboring and suffering heart was so unlooked for and great, that it could not be told. My peace was like the beautiful river of life that John saw; and "truly my fellowship was with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ."

Let me close with the expressive words of Paul, "And were by nature the children of wrath, even as others. But God, who is rich in mercy, for his great love wherewith he loved us, even when we were dead in sins, hath quickened us together with Christ (by grace ye are saved), and hath raised us up together, and made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus."—Eph. ii. "Now then we are ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us: we pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God. For he hath made him to be sin for us [him], who knew no sin; that we might be made the righteousness of God in him."—2 Cor. v. "And the very God of peace sanctify you wholly; and I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. Faithful is he that calleth you, who also will do it."—1 Thess. v.

Now, dear brethren, the Prince of peace himself be with you and give you peace, that the love and peace of God may rule in your hearts.

D. BARTLEY.

DEAR BROTHER:—My parents were poor, but respectable. They were both called by grace when I was very young. They tried to bring up their children in morality, and set a good example before them; but they did not try to make us christians, as they knew that was not in their power. I was born in sin, and was well content to live in that condition. Although better instructed and kept under more restraint than many others, I was wicked enough. My parents tried to keep me from all resorts of folly, worldly pleasure and temptation. I once wanted to go to a fair, where there would be all kinds of amusements, as well as drinking, and snares of every kind. My father asked me if I would like to die there. I answered, No. He said, "You cannot go." After a fair was over they always tried to give us some suitable pleasure instead. They had seven children, much sickness in the family, and three children died. After a long sickness my dear mother was taken from us to her home in heaven. She left four girls. I was the oldest, being nearly fourteen years old. My sister, Mrs. Knibbs, was the youngest, only three years old. When taken sick mother felt much troubled at the thought of leaving us; but before she died I heard her say that the Lord would provide, and she could leave us in his hands. A year after mother's death father married again, a dear good christian. She was a good wife, and a good mother to us. Soon after this I left home to support myself. How good the Lord was in preserving me from many evils. I had a hard road to travel sometimes, yet the Lord's watchful eye was over me. I had a hard place for two years, when the Lord provided a good easy place for me, to take care of a paralyzed lady eighty-four years old. When the Lord began a work of grace in my soul it was very gradual. Everything seemed to change. The things I once took pleasure in lost their charm. I could not enjoy young company. Old things passed away. I felt I was a poor sinner. I tried what I could do to help myself. I was going to be a good christian, and do some great thing. I did not know my own heart, nor the way of peace. How much I have been taught since then. The Lord, I hope, has opened my eyes to see that it is not of works, but of grace. I was living with a very worldly family, and I asked for liberty to go to meeting. The old lady said, "You never used to ask, and I shall have to answer for your sins." She might have thought I wanted to go out for pleasure. After her death I resolved to take no place where I could not go to a place of worship. I soon got a place, with liberty to go out every Sunday evening. I felt how good the Lord was to me. I did love to meet with his children. I wanted no other company. How little I knew then of the plague of my own heart, or of the riches of divine grace. Although fifty years have passed since then, I am a learner yet, and know but little; but this I do know, in Jesus is all my hope and desire. I had not courage at that time to speak to any one. Often have I gone home to speak to my step-mother, but could not say a word. After I had attended meeting some months the Elder spoke to me. I suppose he got some evidence of the state of my mind. He invited me to call and visit his wife and himself. I promised to do so. The evening I went I passed and repassed the house many times before I could get courage to call. I said very little, but he talked very kindly and instructive. I got acquainted with many dear friends. I wanted to be more free from sin, and thought I must grow more holy. One Sunday the pastor took for his text that beautiful verse, "Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth."—Rom. x. 4. I felt that I could cast my anchor of hope there. This was the righteousness I needed. I had none of my own. Soon after that I was received by the church, and followed my dear Savior in the ordinance of baptism on March 3d, 1839. O, dear brother, that was a happy day. How many changes I have felt since then; but the Lord has kept me by his power, and preserved me from bringing reproach on his cause. I have been trying to follow my Shepherd ever since; but often, like Peter, have I followed at a distance. How many backslidings and heart wanderings from the God I want to love, and sometimes think I do love. He will perfect the work of his hands.

"The work which his goodness began,
The arm of his strength will complete;
His promise is yea and amen,
And never was forfeited yet."

EDITORIAL NOTICES.

SERIOUS ILLNESS OF BROTHER B. F. COULTER.

WE are pained to learn that our dear and highly esteemed brother, Dr. B. F. Coulter, of Philadelphia, is lying very low with typhoid fever, so that only his physician and nurses are allowed to see him. We sincerely hope that this sickness is not unto death, and that he may be spared to his family and the church of Christ for many years to come.

READ CAREFULLY.

WHEN two or more new subscribers are sent at the same time, in accordance with terms given in Supplement, and one is in compliance with the second paragraph and former part of the fourth, and the others on terms given in third paragraph, it is very essential to state which name is sent according to terms of second and fourth paragraphs, as that name is credited to the end of 1893, while the others are credited one year from the time their subscription begins.

IT IS VERY IMPORTANT

That great care should be taken in sending a renewal of subscriptions to give us the same name as the one to whom the paper is already coming. If the party is married be sure the initials are given correctly; for if the paper is coming in the wife's name and the husband writes us to send the paper the next year, and signs his own name, we have no means of knowing that the person to whom the paper is going is his wife; and not finding his name on our list he is entered as a new subscriber and the paper sent to both; or if the paper is going in the husband's name and the renewal sent on in the wife's name, the result will be the same. The best way is to inclose in your letter one of the little pink slips containing the name pasted either on the margin of the paper or on the wrapper in which it comes.

BAPTIST CONVENTION.

In accordance with previous announcement, we published in the issue for Mar. 1st of this volume a complete account of the Baptist Convention, held at Black Rock, Md., Sept., 1832, at which time the separation (or "split") took place between what is now known in this country as Old and New School Baptists. Judging from our own experience, we believe our brethren and sisters are constantly receiving the inquiry, "What is the difference between the different orders of Baptists?" And while we would not attempt to answer this question in detail as to all of the many sects called Baptists, we can show clearly and conclusively, by the proceedings and resolutions of this little band of valiant soldiers of the cross, what is the difference between the Particular or Old School Baptists and the whole brood of modern religious denominations, whether known as Baptists or by any other name.

We have printed an extra edition of that number, and will mail them to any address as long as the supply lasts at the following prices, viz.:

One copy for five cents; twelve copies for fifty cents; thirty copies for one dollar. Sums less than one dollar may be sent in postage stamps.

PLEASE DO NOT DO IT.

WE have reason to fear that some of our subscribers, in sending on names in accordance with the second paragraph of Supplement, are sometimes actuated by a desire to send the paper to members of other denominations, whom they know will be more annoyed than pleased with it, and from whom there is not the slightest hope of their becoming permanent subscribers. Brethren, please do not do this, as it only incurs an expense to us, and is of no real benefit to any one. Our idea in making the offer stated in the second paragraph is to fill our list with permanent or live subscribers, not "deadwood." A word to the wise is sufficient.

We most earnestly request our brethren and friends to consider the third paragraph, and assist us all they possibly can on the terms therein stated, and thereby enable us to publish the paper in 1894 on the terms mentioned in the latter part of the fifth and sixth paragraphs. If you did not receive your Supplement, or have lost it, you can, if you are a subscriber to the paper, obtain a revised copy by writing us to send you one.

If you are not so situated that you can give this matter the time and attention you would like to, perhaps you have some reliable friend that you could interest in the work. If so, you are at liberty to give him the Supplement, and let him act in your behalf.

LENGTHY OBITUARY NOTICES.

WHILE we feel to sympathize with those who are called to part with near and dear relatives and friends in death, yet we must request that in writing obituary notices they will be as brief as possible. A little reflection on this matter will, we think, be sufficient to show how unnecessary are long accounts of the minor incidents in the life of the deceased. Aside from the immediate friends of the subject of the notice they are not of general interest; and those to whom they are of any importance are about all acquainted with the facts without publishing them. A short notice is more likely to receive early insertion in the paper, as our obituary department as a rule is very much crowded; and it frequently occurs that owing to the extreme length of the notices, the publication of some are delayed for two or three numbers.

PLEASE DO NOT.

OUR subscribers are especially requested not to pay their subscriptions for the SIGNS OF THE TIMES to Postmasters to forward to us, as they generally deduct twenty or twenty-five per cent. from the amount and send us the balance, retaining the discount as their commission, and often sending what they do remit in postage stamps. We also caution our patrons against "Newspaper Agencies," as they deduct a like commission. It is a very simple matter for a subscriber to get a post-office money order or a postal note, inclose it in a letter, and direct it to us, or to put the money in the letter and have it registered; but where several are sending from the same office it is well to choose one of the number to send for all at the one time.

DONATIONS.

As may be seen by our published receipts, the brethren and friends are contributing with their usual liberality to the fund to enable us to send the paper to those brethren and sisters who are not able to pay for it, and yet love to read it. We doubt if there is any way the same amount of money could be expended to give as much real joy and true happiness, to as many, as is derived from the contributions to this fund. It is the poor and needy, as to this world's goods, that are the best capacitated to enjoy spiritual blessings.

CHANGE OF RESIDENCE.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—Please discontinue sending the SIGNS to me at Santa Fe, Mo., and send it to Messongo, Accomack Co., Va., at which latter place I desire my correspondents to address me.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

ANOTHER precious member of the Leading Creek Church, sister Nancy Gray, departed this life on Dec. 7th, 1892, at her son-in-law's residence, Mr. Asa Kelly, near Montrose, Randolph Co., W. Va., aged 75 years and 11 days.

Her maiden name was Kelly. She was married to Washington A. Long on Sept. 16th, 1844, from which union there remain two daughters and one son, Mr. M. C. Long, Mrs. Dorothy Murphy and Bertha Kelly. Mr. Washington A. Long died, I think, during the late war. Sister Nancy remained a widow four years, when she married Mr. John Gray, who died about twenty-five years ago. Sister Gray lived to see all her children grown. She was baptized by the writer about eighteen years ago, and remained a faithful sister until her death, always filling her seat in the church when able. She was a good mother, a good neighbor, and a dear sister in the church. We all mourn our loss, which we hope is her eternal gain. May the dear Lord bless her dear children according to his holy will. O that we might always be reconciled to the will of the Lord. Dear brethren and sisters, we are going one by one, and no doubt it will soon be our turn. O that we may be well prepared when the summons comes, with glory full in view. The sweet promise of our blessed Jesus is that he will be with his children in all their trials and troubles, even to the end.

The writer attended the burial, sang a hymn and tried to pray. The body was laid away in our grave-yard, to await the resurrection morn, when we shall see Jesus as he is and be like him. Then all will be well.

JAMES MURPHY.

MONTROSE, W. Va.

DIED—At her home on the old farm on which she had lived for upward of sixty years, in Clarke Co., Ohio, sister Jane Carmon.

She was the daughter of John and Mary Buckles, and was born Oct. 25th, 1807. In the year 1826 she was married to Lewis Carmon. She was the mother of fourteen children. She had eighty grandchildren and forty-seven great-grandchildren, making a total of one hundred and forty-one descendants. Nine children survive her, to mourn their loss of a dear mother. Her husband departed this life Feb. 13th, 1874. She joined the Old School Baptist Church at Honey Creek, Champaign Co., Ohio, Nov. 11th, 1826, and remained an honorable and devout member for more than sixty-seven years. She died at the ripe old age of 85 years, 3 months and 11 days.

She was in the division of the Baptists in the year 1836, which tried men's faith of what sort it was. She was not willing to compromise with the men holding the Fuller and Carey doctrine, that Christ died for all men, to give them a chance to be saved by accepting offered salvation; but she held firmly that Christ died for the elect only, and that God will bring them with him or to him, without the loss of one.

The funeral was preached by the writer from Job xiv. 14 and 1 Cor. xv. 35: "If a man die, shall he live again?" "But some man will say, How are the dead raised up, and with what body do they come?" See Gen. iii. for the extent of that death, and Rom. iii. 10, &c. Also see John iii. 3; Matt. xi. 27; John vi. 44.

WM. LIPPINCOTT.

WESTVILLE, Ohio, Feb. 26, 1893.

SISTER Laney Winchell was born in the state of New York, April 12th, 1814, and died of dropsy at the home of her youngest son, E. Winchell, with whom she lived, near Yorktown Corners, in Henry Co., Ill., Jan. 16th, 1893, aged 78 years, 9 months and 4 days.

She was a beloved member of the Baren Grove Church of Old School Baptists, and an old subscriber and constant reader of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. While it has always been, and will continue to be, esteemed a great pleasure to have enjoyed her confidence and church fellowship, yet this is a trivial matter when compared with the gratification of having the assurance of her acceptance in the family of our heavenly Father. None were more delighted in hearing gospel preaching, conversing upon the all-important subject of salvation by grace, and singing the songs of Zion, one of her favorites being,

"I am a stranger here below,
And what I am 'tis hard to know;
I am so vile, so prone to sin,
I fear that I'm not born again."

Her home being about twenty-five miles from the place of her church meetings, she did not enjoy the privilege of meeting with her brethren as often as she desired. We are assured that she died as she had lived, trusting in the sure mercies of God.

Sister Winchell's maiden name was Elmendorf. She married Joseph, the brother of the late Elder Jacob Winchell, of the state of New York, Dec. 28th, 1830, and by him became the mother of eleven children, eight of whom survive her, and with many other relatives, a multitude of friends, and the little church, deeply mourn her death. She united with the Old School Baptist Church of Olive, Ulster Co., N. Y., at the early age of sixteen, and was baptized by Elder Warren.

Her funeral occurred Jan. 18th, 1893, when she was placed beside her husband in the family cemetery, to sleep the sleep that knows no waking until God shall bid her arise.

"Say, Live forever, wondrous King,
Born to redeem, and strong to save;
Then ask the monster, Where's thy sting?
And, Where's thy vict'ry, boasting grave?"

S. KETCHUM.

ELMWOOD, Ill., March 1, 1893.

DR. Frank Gordon requests me to write an obituary notice of his father, Gen. Anderson Gordon, who died at the residence of his daughter, Mrs. Georgiana Rankin, near Merrillton, Ark., Feb. 13th, 1893, at the age of 73 years.

He was born Feb. 13th, 1820, in Maury Co., Tenn., and lived a life more worthy of a book than the mere mention to which an obituary notice must be limited. I knew him well, and was honored with his friendship. He was no ordinary man, but a man of note all his life; a gentleman of refinement, dignity and decorum. Though a remarkable man, there was little peculiar about him, nothing odd nor eccentric, so well rounded was his character. He joined the Primitive Baptists in 1843, and was a conspicuous figure in the history of the Arkansas Church from that time until his death. The brethren there will feel lonesome now that he is gone. Of inflexible integrity and tenacity of principle, he was always in his "place about the temple," and as a citizen ready and swift to do his duty as he saw it.

Loyal to his friends, with exceptionally little that was harsh to say of anybody, he possessed the magnetism that appeals at once to friends and foes.

He came of good stock: his grandfather, John Gordon, an Irishman, and his grandmother of Scotch parentage, who moved from North Carolina to Maury Co., Tenn., in 1843. Their sons were John, James and Jesse, and their daughter Jane, all of whom married in Maury Co., Tenn. James, the father of Gen. Gordon, was born in North Carolina, Jan. 18th, 1792, and married Nancy Tomlinson in 1816, of Scotch-German parentage. She was born in North Carolina, Feb. 10th, 1800. They settled first in Lauderdale Co., Ala., and in 1839 moved to Conway Co., Ark., where they died, she in 1861 and he in 1870. His family were Old Side Presbyterians, and hers Primitive Baptists. He served two terms in the Arkansas Legislature. They had four children, James M., Henry V. and Eliza Ann. From 1839 Gen. Gordon lived in Conway Co., Ark., a merchant and farmer. From 1861 to the close of the late war he was in the Confederate service, an officer in Col. Carroll's Regiment, of which he became Colonel; and for the last eighteen months of the war it was known as Col. Gordon's Regiment. In 1854 Gov. Baxter appointed him General of State Militia; and in this position he served also through Gov. Garland's administration. In 1854 he represented Conway County in the Arkansas Legislature. But the monument most to his honor, erected by himself, is the family of children he leaves to perpetuate his name and many christian virtues. These children by name are Georgiana, Frank, Henrietta, John and Maggie, all prosperous, conspicuous and brilliant members of society.

WM S. SPEER.

LAMKIN, Texas, Feb. 20, 1893.

SISTER Sarah Haggard died at three o'clock a. m. on Wednesday, Jan. 11th, at the age of 75 years, 4 months and 5 days, of bronchitis and heart failure.

She was born in County Surry, Dorking, England, Sept. 6th, 1817. She was married in 1841, in London, to James Humphrey, who died in 1859. They came to America in 1848, living in the city of New York until the year 1855, when they moved to Geneseo, Henry Co., Ill. There being no church of their order in Geneseo, and seeing a letter from Elder B. B. Piper, of Lincoln, Ill., in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, inviting the Primitive Baptists there, they removed in 1857 to Lincoln, Ill., both uniting with the Lebanon Church, sister Haggard being baptized in June by Elder B. B. Piper, in the year 1862. She was married the second time to Harman Haggard, of Springfield, Ill., transferring her membership to the Spring Creek Church, Sangamon Co., where she remained a member until the death of her husband in 1874, when she returned to her old home in Lincoln, Ill., moving her membership back to the Lebanon Church, at Lincoln, Ill., and remaining a member in the best of standing until her death. She leaves three children by her first husband to mourn their loss: Mrs. Rebecca McCarty, of Holly Springs, Miss., Miss Kate Humphrey and Robert Humphrey, of Lincoln, Ill. The funeral services were held at the residence of Judge Humphrey on Friday, at two o'clock p. m., by Elder Dobbs, of Tallula, Ill. She was buried in the Union Cemetery, one mile southwest of Lincoln, Ill.

Sister Sarah Haggard justly reigned queen of love and light in her household. She looked well to the ways of it, and ate not the bread of idleness. She opened her mouth with wisdom, and in her mouth was the law of kindness. Her children rise up and call her blessed. I can truthfully say that I never met one whom I loved better, for to me she manifested so much of the fruit of the Spirit that I could but love her as a sister in Jesus.

Her pure spirit entered the chariot of love and light, while her precious children and loving friends bowed over her lifeless body with hearts of greater sorrow than they had ever before; for she whom they all loved most was gone forever from their happy home. Sorrow no more, dear ones; for she whom you loved and honored left with you by her everyday walk and conversation a sure evidence that she was by grace prepared to enter into an eternal rest, and ever be with the Lord. May God in the multitude of his mercies bring each one of her children to love and worship him as she did, is the prayer of her loving pastor,
L. O. DAVIS.

FELL asleep in Jesus, in the full triumph of faith, our dear old sister, Hester Rumney, at the home of her sister, Mrs. Knibbs, in Verona, Grundy Co., Ill., on Dec. 17th, 1893, aged 76 years and 6 months.

She was born at Upnor, Kent County, England, on July 21st, 1816. Her parents were called by grace when she was young, and her mother died when she was under fourteen years old, so that she became acquainted with sickness and trouble at an early age. She lived a respectable life until she was over twenty years old, when the Lord opened her eyes. The work was gradual. On March 3d, 1839, she was baptized, and joined Providence Church, at Chatham. When the division took place she, with a few others who held the truth, formed a church, with which she remained until she came to the state of New York, in the year 1852. She could not find a church of her faith and order for some time. On March 5th, 1861, she joined Ebenezer Church, in the city of New York. In the year 1880 she came to live with her sister, and united by letter with Ebenezer Church, at Verona, of which she remained a worthy member until her Lord saw fit to remove her from this dark world of sin and sorrow to the realms of eternal light and glory. She was much afflicted, being unable to leave the house for five years, but was not confined to her bed. It was her greatest comfort to have the brethren and sisters visit her. Her sister, although much afflicted, attended her with unceasing kindness, and entertained all visitors with the greatest hospitality.

Sister Hester was deeply taught in divine mysteries. She often spoke of her departure, and said to brother Downey and myself, "I want you both to come, and to speak from the words, 'I shall be satisfied, when I awake, with thy likeness.' But be sure and not praise me. I am a poor sinner, saved by grace alone." She was very diffident, and for years, when speaking of the saints, she would say, "O if I am only one of them; if I am only of that happy number. But I know I love them. I love the Savior, his gospel, his house and his ordinances. I long to be released and go home, to be forever with the Lord and his redeemed and glorified ones." For months before she was called home all doubts were removed, and she could view the heaven she loved with unobscured eyes. Her last words were, "Come, Lord Jesus; I am ready. Take me home; I am ready." Thus she passed away, to be with Christ.

Besides her own sister, she left two half-sisters, two half-brothers, and a number of other relatives and friends, with the little church; but she was full of years, joy and peace, and we know that our loss is her eternal gain.

A large number attended her funeral, which was held at the house. Elder John Downey and the writer conducted the services, and spoke from the Scripture she had selected, Psalm xvii. 15. May the blessings of our glorious King and Surety, Christ Jesus, rest richly on you, is the prayer of an old pilgrim.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date. This date denotes the time at which your subscription expires; and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. CORRESPONDENCE.

EXHORTATION.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—Among the admonitions given by Paul to Timothy to regulate his conduct in the ministry, recorded in 2 Timothy iv. 2, we find the word "exhort." He says to Timothy there, "Reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long-suffering and doctrine." Besides this, the word in some of its forms is found frequently in the New Testament. In Romans xii. 8 it is spoken of as a special gift bestowed upon some for the benefit of the whole body of Christ. In Hebrews iii. 13 and Hebrews x. 25 believers are also told to exhort one another daily. The word is from the Greek word paraklesis, and has a variety of significations and applications. It has at times the meaning of a calling upon, exhortation, incitement, persuasion, hortatory instruction, entreaty, importunity, earnest supplication, solace, consolation, joy, gladness, enjoyment and rejoicing. All these various shades of meaning are wrapped up in the original word; and if needful I could show instances in the New Testament where this original word is used with all these various applications of meaning to the people of God. From these various places in the word of God it seems to me right to say that the design of exhortation is, first, to instruct in the truth; and second, to incite those who hear to follow the truth by entreaty, persuasion and supplication, to the end that they may increase in joy, gladness and rejoicing in the Lord. In speaking such words of exhortation the motives appealed to in the Scriptures are not such as belong to the natural fear or hope or ambition of men, but such as are based upon the spiritual emotions of joy, love and gratitude in the heart of him who knows and loves God, and has the witness of salvation in Jesus Christ. Such expressions as these are used by the inspired writers in the New Testament: "I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice," &c. "Ye are not your own, for ye are bought with a price; therefore glorify God in your body and in your spirit, which are God's." "Know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost?" "If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above." And because "when Christ, who is our life, shall appear, ye also shall appear with him in glory, therefore mortify your members which are upon the earth, such as fornication, uncleanness," &c. I might almost indefinitely multiply similar quotations from the Scriptures in which exhortation to a careful and righteous life is based upon the highest motives, rather than upon slavish fear, or an equally slavish pharisaical ambition, such as the fleshly mind is alone capable of feeling.

As the motives addressed in scriptural exhortation are spiritual, being, as said before, the hope, love, joy and gratitude of the believer in Jesus, it follows necessarily that the persons spoken to are also spiritual. Natural, unregenerate men are never addressed in this way. The Holy Ghost (I speak with reverence) never makes the mistake of appealing to motives which do not exist in the one addressed. The dead know not anything relating to that to which they are dead. All men by nature are dead to God, and therefore dead to Christ, who sits at God's right hand, and dead to the kingdom where he reigns, and dead therefore to salvation in Jesus, and dead to all knowledge of their need of salvation in him; and of course such ones can feel no joy in, nor love for, nor gratitude for, a salvation of which they do not even feel their need. Therefore the Holy Ghost does not address words to those who cannot hear nor understand them; but it speaks through the words of Scripture to the living. If any one has any joy, love or gratitude toward Jesus Christ; if any one knows that he is a lost sinner and needs salvation; if any one has ever seen any beauty, glory and goodness in Jesus Christ; if any one feels as did Philip when he said, "Lord, show us the Father, and it sufficeth us;" then that one is not dead, but is alive to God, and to that one the word of exhortation speaks.

In this very thing, it has long seemed to me, is found the error of the Arminian. There is not a direct address in one of the epistles to unregenerate men. Sometimes the world of the ungodly is referred to in the third person, in distinction from the church of God; but the direct address in every case is either to some individual believer or to some congregation of believers. Therefore every promise, every warning, and every word of exhortation, is addressed to believers, and believers only. The Arminian sees no difference here between the church and the world, between a believer and an unbeliever, and so he uses all these promises, admonitions and exhortations in a general manner, and undertakes to apply them where they do not belong; and so he urges upon all men every christian obligation, whether they are christians or not, and declares it to be the duty of all to become members of the church, and profess salvation whether they are saved or not. In this he is guilty of the absurdity of calling upon men to exercise graces which they do not possess, such as love, hope, faith, fear, humility, &c., and to will and work out what God has not wrought within them either to will or to do; for Bible testimony is that "all men have not faith," and that dead men are destitute of all that life means or that life involves.

But to the living the word of promise, of exhortation, of reproof or of admonition is pertinent. To such ones all these things belong. I recall that when but a child my attention was called to the difference between the living in Christ and the dead in sin. I can remember instituting this comparison in my mind. It is consistent to appeal to natural emotions and motives when we wish to enjoin upon our children things which will, we think, make for their welfare in this mortal life; but how inconsistent all would admit it to be to address such admonitions or promises to men dead to this natural life and to this present world. Even so it is consistent to address promises and admonitions after a gospel sort to those alive unto God, alive spiritually, since such promises and admonitions relate to their welfare spiritually; but how inconsistent to address such things to the dead spiritually, since they can neither profit by nor understand them. I remember that this seemed clear in my mind when I was but a child; and it still looks clear to me that while he who preaches may speak of the dead in sins, yet he cannot speak to the dead, because while dead they cannot hear, but must count these things hard sayings, and beyond all their understanding. To this fully agree the words of Paul when he said, "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God;" and he cannot know them, "because they are spiritually discerned." Again, "What man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of man which is in him?" Even so the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God."

Now it has seemed to me that it is not unscriptural to say that just as we may and ought to warn, reprove, rebuke, admonish and exhort our children naturally to the turning away from evil, and the fulfillment of all their natural obligations to parents, to each other, and to all men, so in the Scriptures, and by those who preach the word, and by each other, the children of God are and ought to be warned, admonished and exhorted to depart from all that is evil, and to follow the word and example of Jesus; and in doing this how powerful are the motives appealed to in the Scriptures. Let it be never forgotten that they are spiritual motives, and not carnal. While a father will urge upon his child sobriety, honesty, industry, kindness, and abstinence from vice, by appealing to the child's love to himself, to his brothers and sisters, to his desire for a good name, or his wish to succeed in life, all of which are good and worthy motives in any child, yet the gospel never appeals to such motives in its exhortations to the children of God. It presents to its subjects loftier motives, which appeal to the powers of the spiritual life which Jesus has given him. One is earthly and natural all along the line, but the other is heavenly and spiritual all along the line. The believer is risen with Christ, and is to seek the things which are above, upon motives and grounds which are also above.

There is no promise of what would appear to the natural man a blessing for obedience; and neither are the chastisements for disobedience such as natural men could appreciate. The natural man cannot understand what this means, "If ye live after the flesh ye shall die; but if ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live." Nor can they comprehend such solemn messages and warnings as this, "Be not deceived; God is not mocked; for what a man soweth, that shall he also reap. If we sow to the flesh, we shall of the flesh reap corruption; but if we sow to the Spirit, we shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting." Job's friends judged after the best judgment of the flesh when they attributed his manifold sorrows to his sins, and advised him, if he would be prosperous again, to make his peace with God; but the believer knows of the results of transgression that they are not made up of losses of health or wealth or friends, but of deeper heart trials and sorrows, of spiritual coldness and darkness, of the hidings of God's face, and of subjection to the outer darkness—darkness that can be felt.

The rewards of obedience or of disobedience are not presented in the gospel as being so much for as they are in the keeping or disobeying the commandments. Under the law there were many rewards promised for obedience, and chastisements threatened for disobedience, which had no essential connection with the obedience or disobedience. For instance, if a man should shed his brother's blood, by man should his blood be shed. There was no connection between the crime and the punishment which could make the one the necessary consequence of the other. On the other hand, rewards were held out to the obedient which were not the natural or necessary results of that obedience. The blessings and curses were largely for obedience or disobedience. I do not say that this was so in every case, but this was the general spirit of things under the law. But in the gospel more is said about the blessings found in keeping the commandments, or the trouble found in a course of disobedience. Now, it seems to me that this is a real difference, and not a mere difference of words, as some have said. Jesus could say, "It is my meat and my drink to do the will of my Father." The pleasure is in eating and drinking, to a man who is hungry. Such an one needs no pay to be offered him for eating. So Jesus loved to do his Father's will, and found it his very meat and drink. In it he rejoiced, and by it he was comforted and strengthened, as food and drink comfort and strengthen our bodies. The same is true of each believer in his measure. In this view of the subject we can see how Paul's language can be true, that the reward is not reckoned of debt, but of grace. The will and the strength to do his will are of grace in the first place. They are rich and precious gifts freely bestowed upon us, and for them we never can be thankful enough; and in these gifts of God are stored up all fullness of comfort and joy. So his yoke is easy and his burden light, and bearing it never wearies, but rests the soul.

No! exhortation is not only a presentation of what a believer ought to do, but also of what he delights to do. It is pointing out the path of peace, joy and safety in the Lord. The apostle calls it stirring up the pure minds of his brethren by way of remembrance of truth already written in their hearts. We need such stirrings up constantly. We need to be reminded of the obligations pertaining to our high and holy calling. We need to be warned of the results of disobedience to God, and admonished of the results of obedience; and so we should exhort one another, and so much the more as we see the day approaching. These exhortations are not legal.

The law is the law of love, and in such a law there can be no bondage. It would be legal to exhort upon the ground that salvation and eternal life depended upon keeping the commandments. But it is not legality to stir up the mind to do what we love, and abstain from what we hate. Such exhortations come in the very spirit of gospel liberty. Does the word say, "These things ought not so to be?" or, "ye ought to do such things?" Then, weak and erring as I am, my whole heart responds "Amen and amen" to the words. To me there is no savor of bondage in such exhortations, but rather the sweetest liberty.

I leave these broken thoughts. May they do good and not harm. As ever, your brother,

F. A. CHICK.

REISTERSTOWN, Md., March, 1893.

"Forasmuch as ye know that ye were not redeemed with corruptible things, as silver and gold, from your vain conversation received by tradition from your fathers; but with the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot: who verily was foreordained before the foundation of the world, but was manifest in these last times for you, who by him do believe in God, that raised him up from the dead and gave him glory; that your faith and hope might be in God." "And I have put my words in thy mouth, and I have covered thee in the shadow of mine hand, that I may plant the heavens and lay the foundations of the earth, and say unto Zion, Thou art my people." "For he said, Surely they are my people, children (that) will not lie: so he was their Savior. In all their affliction he was afflicted, and the angel of his presence saved them: in his love and his pity he redeemed them; and he bare them, and carried them all the days of old." "I was set up from everlasting, from the beginning, or ever the earth was." Now, whenever or wherever any man or men attempt to set aside God's eternal decrees which embrace unlimited predestination, foreordination, foreknowledge, special atonement, fervent, effectual calling, and the final victory of every vessel of mercy, that moment such one or ones commence preaching self, which the apostles did not do, neither countenanced any who attempted it, for they did not bid them "God speed;" and those glorious principles of truth so penetrate and permeate the entire Scriptures of the Old and New Testament that he or they who can set that glorious doctrine aside must either rewrite the Scriptures or interpret them upon some unheard-of principle; and when that unholy caviling is going on, such persons are preaching themselves; from the moment that Jehovah spake matter into existence, until the present moment, not a single thing has transpired by chance, the so-called learned world to the contrary notwithstanding; for Jesus said, "Are not two sparrows sold for a farthing? and one of them shall not fall on the ground without your Father. But the very hairs of your head are all numbered." "Behold, I have created the smith that bloweth the coals in the fire, and that bringeth forth an instrument for his work; and I have created the waster to destroy. No weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper; and every tongue that shall raise against thee in judgment thou shalt condemn. This is the heritage of the servants of the Lord; and their righteousness is of me, saith the Lord." The dear children of our God, when led by his Spirit, rejoice that their heavenly Father is the absolute and righteous Monarch of the universe, the sole Arbiter of all events; for such heavenly truth is to them the glory of the Bible, the real soul of christianity, and the very foundation of their joys; and when his servants preach not themselves, but Christ Jesus the Lord, those heart-cheering, God-exalting and heavenly principles will be vindicated, and not the height of unthinking arrogance and infidel temerity will be cherished by the God-fearing servants of our God.

The Lord. How wonderful that the dear Redeemer fills the three offices, or rather bears the three glorious titles, Christ the anointed one to come directly to his people, in carrying all their burdens; for "surely he hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows: yet we did esteem him stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted; but he was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities: the chastisement of our peace was upon him, and with his stripes we are healed." Also, he was Jesus; for he is the only Savior of his people, as the apostle declared, "Who was delivered for our offenses, and was raised again for our justification;" therefore "the battle has been fought, and the glorious victory won," and he is to his redeemed people Jesus. Had there been one sin not atoned for, his name could not be Jesus; but thanks be to his holy and reverend name, nothing is to be added to his holy and reverend name, and nothing to be taken from it; all is complete in our Jesus. Also, he is Lord, the Governor of his people; and he has, through his inspired judges, given the commandments to his church and people while they remain in this militant state, or warfare, here in time; and there is not a sentence recorded in one of the epistles, giving one iota of authority to deviate therefrom under any circumstances; for when he commissioned the apostles he said, "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe all things what- soever I have commanded you; and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world. Amen." That divine command is just as much in force to-day as when given; and when Christ Jesus the Lord is preached, it will be set forth.

"And ourselves your servants for Jesus' sake." Those God-fearing men, the apostles, felt that they were the servants of Jesus Christ; and they neither used the prefix "Rev.," nor the affix "D. D.," but begin their epistles in such manner as to show that they feared God, and had not the temerity to use titles extolling the creature man. In his epistles, does the apostle begin his address by saying, I, the reverend Paul of Jerusalem? &c. No, but his address shows his humility; for he says to his brethren in Rome, "Paul, a servant of Jesus Christ, called (to be) an apostle, separated unto the gospel of God;" and all of his other epistles, while they do not commence with precisely the same words, show his humility and complete subservience to his Lord and Master. "James, a servant of God, and of the Lord Jesus Christ, to the twelve tribes which are scattered abroad, greeting." "Simon Peter, a servant and an apostle of Jesus Christ, to them that have obtained like precious faith [no others care about it in reality] with us through the righteousness of God and our Savior Jesus Christ." "Jude, the servant of Jesus Christ, and brother of James, to them that are sanctified by God the Father, and preserved in Jesus Christ, and called." It certainly is worthy of careful attention that the same spirit of humility and reverence to our God is manifested in all the epistles; because they were written by God-fearing men. The very term servant expresses both humility and dignity; of humility, to signify that they were not their own, but belonged to Jesus Christ; and of dignity, to show that they were accounted worthy to be his ministers; for Moses and Joshua were called servants. It may not be amiss to state right here that while it sounds more euphonious to render this original word doulos servant, the literal and true meaning is slave; but the dear children of God know that they "are not their own, but are bought with a price; therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's." Therefore their divine Lord and Master sends them forth to feed his sheep and lambs; and when, according to his divine will, his Spirit in their hearts prepares them for every good work and word; for the apostle said, "But when it pleased God, who separated me from my mother's womb, and called me by his grace, to reveal his Son in me [not simply to me, but in me], that I might preach him among the heathen, immediately I conferred not with flesh and blood." There was no conference with flesh and blood about the matter; for as servant he was to do his Master's bidding. Let consequences be what they might, it was not left optional with Paul to choose or refuse; because he was not his own, but a servant of Jesus Christ; and he went amongst them who had not seen his face in the flesh; for he "was unknown by face unto the churches of Judea, which were in Christ; but they had heard only, that he which persecuted us in times past, now preacheth the faith which he once destroyed. And they glorified God in me." The servants of the Lord Jesus Christ were to do his bidding, and not consult their own carnal minds about matters, and in doctrine, in word, in precept and in example, set forth the truth fearlessly and faithfully. Under the legal dispensation our God required the same faithfulness. "And Moses verily was faithful in all his house as a servant, for a testimony of those things which were to be spoken after; but Christ as a Son over his own house; whose house are we [not shall be], if we hold fast the confidence and the rejoicing of the hope firm unto the end." Another said, "The elders which are among you I exhort, who am also an elder, and a witness of the sufferings of Christ, and also a partaker of the glory that shall be revealed: feed the flock [not a herd, consisting of various species of animals] of God, which is among you, taking the oversight thereof, not by constraint, but willingly; not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind; neither as being lords over God's heritage; but being ensamples to the flock; and when the chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away."

As brevity is commendable, and for fear of being too prolix, the remainder of the text under consideration will be quoted as the closing portion of the communication, which conclusively shows where the wisdom, knowledge and power came from, enabling the apostles to declare the testimony of God. "For God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ. But we have this treasure in earthen vessels, that the excellency of the power may be of God, and not of us."

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—Inclosed find one dollar, which you will place to my credit on subscription for the SIGNS. It is all I can send now. I am still kept low in poverty's scale, yet I willingly deny myself of necessities of life which this would supply, rather than be deprived of reading the SIGNS, which comes to me so richly laden with God's truth as it is revealed in his written testimony. I as firmly believe that the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob is a God of purpose, as I do that there is a God. Often do I try to inquire of the Lord as to what his purpose is with me, why my lot is cast here in this strange land and waste wilderness. Perhaps some of the readers of the SIGNS, especially those dear brethren and sisters who have written me in response to some of my letters which appeared in the SIGNS several years ago, remember how I mourned and lamented over my lonely condition in this part of the earth, cut off from all church privileges and association with those who call upon the Lord out of a pure heart fervently; and, later, how I was made to rejoice, in that it appeared to me that the good Master had hearkened and heard my prayer; that the Lord had put it into the heart of one of his able ministers, Elder J. J. Evans, a stranger to us in the flesh, to visit us at the time and place we, the few remaining members of Antioch Church, had assembled for the purpose of disbanding as a church, by giving each other letters. Not long after this revival of our little church, one came among us clothed as a minister of Jesus Christ, and authority of an Elder of our faith and order. This man, in less than two years, began to tear down and destroy that which the old father in Israel, Elder Evans, had built up; so that to-day the little church is in a far worse condition than it was when the world and worldly religionists pronounced it twice dead and plucked up by the roots. Then we had peace, love and fellowship; but now peace is destroyed, love is marred, and fellowship is broken. The instigator of this state and condition of the little band has turned his face to the world, for what purpose God knoweth. Our God is a God of purpose, and has a purpose in this, as well as in all things else that cometh to pass under the sun.

Is it any wonder, dear brethren, that I am so disconsolate and cast down, when I see things come to pass so very different from what I so earnestly desired they might? Yet I have too much faith in that God whom I desire to worship and adore, to believe that he will long suffer truth and justice to be trampled under foot, and sin and iniquity to abound instead. If the dumb ass which spake with the voice of man forbade the madness of the prophet, will not God rebuke his children when they sin? Most assuredly he will.

When I read sister Boyd's letter in the SIGNS of Oct. 12th, 1892, telling of the pleasant season which she had enjoyed among the dear saints while assembled in associate capacity, and how the King of kings and Lord of lords reigned and ruled in the hearts of his dear children, my mind led me back to former days of my life, when I was permitted to enjoy just such seasons of joy and rejoicing, and for a time I was so lifted up above earth and earthly things that I lost sight of my earthly existence and surroundings; but when this bright cloud of thoughts which overshadowed me was lifted, and I was brought back to realize my earthly surroundings, I could but weep as a little child.

Often do I desire that it might be allotted to me to be cast among that people who alone, I believe, worship God in spirit and in truth. It does seem to me I could better realize what joy and great blessing it is to be permitted to meet the dear children of God where prayer is wont to be made. But as I am nearing my sixtieth year of age, and possess so little of earthly things, I have little if any hope but that I shall spend the remainder of my days in this to me desolate spot of earth. Often do I try to pray the Lord to reconcile me to the dispensations of his providence with me.

Dear brethren, when it is well with you I pray you to remember poor sinful me.

"LORD, make me to know mine end, and the measure of my days, what it is, that I may know how frail I am."—Psalm xxxix. 4.

It is true in our experience that we can and do receive the great and important truths embodied in the doctrine of God our Savior, feed upon them, be nourished and sustained by them, to the comfort and consolation of our souls, without clearly understanding them. And while "great is the mystery of godliness," it is also true that we receive the wisdom and knowledge of God in a mystery. We hope in God: yet no man hath seen God at any time; and this is the groundwork of our hope (Christ being its foundation), that we hope for the things we see not. The work of the Spirit of truth in the heart of man has never been revealed to the finite understanding; but the Spirit itself takes of the things of Jesus and shows them unto us; that is, unto our faith; and faith is the gift of God to them who are exercised thereby. Our experience of the operation of the Spirit in our heart is a faithful witness to the divine and eternal truths which are set forth in the Scriptures, and not only come to us in power and much assurance, but also to our edification, instruction and profit. The prayer of the saints of God is (among other things of which they feel in need) that they may be taught. The teaching is to point out to them the right way. The Lord (by the mouth of the prophet) in speaking of his gracious reign in Zion, said, "And though the Lord give you the bread of adversity and the water of affliction, yet shall not thy teachers be removed into a corner any more; but thine eyes shall see thy teachers; and thine ears shall hear a word behind thee, saying, This is the way, walk ye in it; when ye turn to the right hand, and when ye turn to the left." This is the heart's desire of every heaven-born child, that the way may be made clear to them; and not only the way of salvation, but also the plan of it, how it is to be wrought out in our mortal bodies. Those who are taught of the Lord receive their knowledge in a way that is directly opposite to all natural teaching. Our knowledge in the things of this natural life comes by observation and hearsay. But the knowledge we receive in the teachings of divine truth is a hidden knowledge. It can never be obtained by observation; neither can man teach it to his neighbor; but it is treasured up in Christ Jesus, the Mediator of the new covenant, and vouchsafed unto us in a gracious experience by the teaching of the Holy Ghost; as it is recorded, "That their hearts might be comforted, being knit together in love, and unto all riches of the full assurance of understanding, to the acknowledgement of the mystery of God, and of the Father, and of Christ; in whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge."

The prayer of the psalmist, in the words of our subject, was that he might be taught both the end and the measure of all his days, being assured also of the source and the dispenser of that knowledge.

"Lord, make me to know mine end." David well knew, and so does every poor child who has been taught in the school of Christ, that carnal reason never aspires to such knowledge, and always rejects it. They also know that no man knows the heart of man; neither can he know it, however diligently he may search. But every thought and every device of the heart is laid bare before the Lord, from whom nothing is hid; who knoweth the end from the beginning, and hath also declared it. By the mouth of the prophet he hath said, "For I am God, and there is none else; I am God, and there is none like me; declaring the end from the beginning, and from ancient times the things that are not yet done, saying, 'My counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure.' Flesh and blood hath never revealed such a 'Lord' to the mind and understanding of mortal man. But God hath revealed him, as the 'Word incarnate,' who is the life of all the redeemed, the glory of Israel, and a light to lighten the Gentiles. As children of the light, we seek the light. Our willing hearts, with eyes of faith, seek the fountain whereof issue living rays of gracious light, which descending upon us reveal to our enlightened understanding a cage of unclean beasts within, a depraved and deceitful heart, 'deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked;' and they reveal the secret, hidden things of darkness, which comprehendeth not the light. And, 'blessed rays,' they also reveal a living hope, which (however great the blackness, the darkness and the tempest) lives on, directing us to the heavenly Jerusalem, the city of the living God. It leads us to the throne

THE RIGHTEOUS JUDGMENT OF GOD.

"SEEING it is a righteous thing with God to recompense tribulation to them that trouble you; and to you who are troubled rest with us, when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ; who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power; when he shall come to be glorified in his saints, and to be admired in all them that believe (because our testimony among you was believed) in that day."—2 Thess. i. 6-10.

Whether it is given to finite minds to understand the revelation of divine truth, or whether it has seemed good in the sight of God to reveal that eternal mystery of his will only in its development in time, in his infinite sovereignty he is alike gloriously perfect in holiness. Reason is incapable of grasping the unlimited righteousness of God, because it can conceive of no standard of perfection but that which consists in compliance with the requirements of a law which justly claims obedience to its precepts. However such a standard may be applicable to created beings, it cannot present a correct test of the eternal purpose of God as the Sovereign who works all things after the counsel of his own will. In a limited sense earthly monarchs have claimed to exercise sovereign power; and so far as their fellow-mortals are concerned they have been under no obligation to obey any will other than their own. But there never was real sovereignty in the possession of any created being. In the full pride of his royal power the monarch must resign his vital breath at the immediate demand of death. No martial force can shield him when the hour of his brief existence has expired. His meanest slave is as capable of resisting this power as is the tyrant at whose word nations have trembled. Surely it cannot be claimed that such a helpless worm is sovereign in the true signification of that word. Such is not the sovereignty of our God. "He is the Rock, his work is perfect; for all his ways are judgment; a God of truth and without iniquity, just and right is he."—Deut. xxxii. 4. It is very important that the saints should ever remember that this infinite righteousness of God is not the result of what he has done; but that his righteous works flow from the fountain of his own eternal perfection. Nothing is required for the establishment of the perfect holiness of any work beyond the fact that it is the work of God. He is the absolute Sovereign whose will is the standard of infinite holiness. He has declared this as the cause of the preservation of his chosen Israel. "For I am the Lord, I change not; therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed."—Mal. iii. 6. In his own immutable perfection is the only safety of all whom he has chosen unto salvation through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus. When the trembling little ones who have hoped in the grace of God, have so far forgotten the ground of their salvation as to look in themselves for evidences of the reality of their hope, they are always overcome by the consciousness that no good thing dwells in their flesh. Only when the Comforter takes of the things of Jesus, and shows unto them that his righteousness is their justification, can they rejoice in the full assurance of that confidence in God wherein they find strength and victory over their wily and deceitful adversary. Under all other circumstances they are troubled and oppressed. Looking at the things which are seen they are ready to give up all hope, for they find nothing in themselves to justify their claim to be the followers of Jesus. They see him as gloriously holy, while in themselves is nothing but sin. Their heart condemns them; and if they had the directing of their own steps they would yield to utter despair. Under such gloomy surroundings, they are troubled on every hand. Thus tossed with tempests, they are overcome with weariness, while they are indeed heavy laden with the load of sin under which they continually groan. But in this experience they are brought to answer the description of those whom Jesus addresses when he says, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart; and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light." Rest is not desirable to any who are not weary. But to those who are exhausted with incessant toil nothing affords such welcome relief as undisturbed repose in that rest which is not broken by cares or fears.

In the portion of Scripture specified in the request of our inquiring brother, and quoted in the commencement of this article, there is manifest reference to the preceding context. The sentence begins with the third verse, in which Paul declares the ground of his thanksgiving to God for the brethren addressed, "Because that your faith groweth exceedingly, and the charity of every one of you all toward each other aboundeth; so that we ourselves glory in you in the churches of God for your patience, and faith in all your tribulations that ye endure; which is a manifest token of the righteous judgment of God, that ye may be counted worthy of the kingdom of God for which ye suffer."

Then follows the text submitted by our brother.

"Seeing it is a righteous thing with God to recompense tribulation to them that trouble you." While there can be no question in the recognition of this divine righteousness by those who are subjected to trouble, it may many times appear that the visitation of such recompense is long delayed. There are many examples of this in the Scriptures. It was not mere carnal impatience which moved the inspired psalmist to ask, "Will the Lord cast off forever? and will he be favorable no more? Is his mercy clean gone forever? doth his promise fail for evermore? Hath God forgotten to be gracious? hath he in anger shut up his tender mercies?" While he confesses it as his infirmity, it is yet the peculiar experience of a sinner who is led by the Spirit of God into the knowledge of his utter helplessness to deliver himself from the condemnation justly due to his transgressions of the holy law of God. So Habakkuk, in view of the long forbearance of God while the righteous suffered from the violence of the wicked, asks, "Wherefore lookest thou upon them that deal treacherously, and holdest thy tongue when the wicked devoureth the man that is more righteous than he? and makest men as the fishes of the sea, as the creeping things, that have no ruler over them?" It is very significant that the prophet says the Lord thus gives the victims into the power of their oppressors. He does not say that the wicked have acted in defiance of the appointment of God in thus devouring the righteous; but confessing the sovereignty of God in the matter, he inquires, "Shall they therefore not spare continually to slay the nations?"—Hab. i. 12-17. Paul pronounces the holy decision of infinite justice in our text; and it should be particularly noticed that his decision is directly the reverse of the judgment of the carnal mind. In the pride of his self-righteousness man says that it is unjust in God to inflict punishment upon the wicked when his omnipotence uses that wickedness for the accomplishment of his own eternal purpose. But all the arguments which are urged against the truth of the doctrine of divine sovereignty are based upon the false assumption that God is altogether such a one as dependent man. No created being can be the standard of truth and justice. This is an exclusive attribute of God. He is glorious in holiness, even though it had been his pleasure never to reveal his glory to men or angels. There is no standard by which to measure the perfection of his righteousness. It is inseparable from his existence. The justice of his works results from the perfection of his own infinite righteousness; it does not produce that righteousness. Here is the principle expressed in this clause of our text. "It is a righteous thing with God to recompense tribulation to them that trouble you." He has reserved to himself the administration of vengeance; and he is the only righteous Judge who can with equal justice turn the wicked into hell and all the nations that forget God, and deliver out of just condemnation the poor and needy, whose only justification is in the complete redemption that is in Christ Jesus. These destitute and helpless ones are the objects of the immediate care and protection of that God who is ever present with them in all their tribulations and afflictions. He will avenge them speedily. In this his righteousness is manifested even in his providential government of the affairs of time.

"And to you who are troubled, rest with us." This is the same recompense in which God reveals his righteousness. While divine justice assigns the recompense of tribulation to them that trouble the saints, by the same righteous judgment God recompenses to them who are thus troubled that sacred rest in which the inspired apostles and prophets could quietly "commit the keeping of their souls to him in well doing, as unto a faithful Creator." Like all the spiritual blessings bestowed upon the saints in Christ Jesus, this divinely perfect rest is hidden from the sight of the natural man. In vain does the reason of the saints seek to comprehend its wonderful power. When the billows of tribulation threaten to destroy the afflicted and poor saint, when he sinks in the dark mire of unbelief, and when refuge fails him, reason cannot grasp the cause of that "peace of God which passeth understanding," and as a resistless river brings him unto that heavenly rest which is peculiar to them who love the perfect law of liberty in the kingdom of Christ. It needs no testimony to identify it as the glorious rest of gospel liberty. Like the lustre of the natural sun in meridian splendor, it requires no philosophical argument, or chemical analysis, to reveal its real character. It is the witness whose living power abides in every one who receives it, and it needs no confirmation from secondary witnesses. So, when Jesus spoke the word of deliverance to you in your time of utter despair, you did not need an assurance that his word was omnipotent. Your guilt was removed, and you rejoiced with unspeakable joy. In the revelation of that Root of Jesse as an ensign of the people was glorious rest to your weary soul. That rest is the recompense assigned you by the righteous decree of the God who judges the quick and the dead.

In the sublime and awful language of the remaining portion of the text is specified the time when this righteousness of God shall be displayed. While finite intelligence may not dare attempt to comprehend the fullness of this revelation, in the measure given to each of the saints, they can see the period in their individual experience when they beheld with solemn awe this revelation of the Lord Jesus in the flaming fire of inflexible justice, taking vengeance on them as guilty rebels, in all whose thoughts God was not known. The testimony of those saints who were moved by the Holy Ghost to record the way in which the Lord led them, clearly attests the fact that every transgression and disobedience received a just recompense of reward even under the typical dispensation. This is presented for the admonition of the saints under the light and liberty of the gospel day. There certainly is a sense in which it is a fearful thing for the saints to fall into the hands of the living God. David in his great transgression felt all the pains of hell and found trouble and sorrow. Peter when the Lord looked upon him felt the intolerable burden of his own base treachery, and "went out and wept bitterly." It is not when the justice of God is forcibly defeated in its demands that this wonderful rest is recompensed to the troubled saints. The miracle of divine grace shows that God is "just, and the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus." In all the grace bestowed upon his saints there is no intimation that one of them is saved from condemnation by the sacrifice of justice. Their complete deliverance from sin is the only way in which they receive the justification in which they are accepted in the Beloved. This is the rest which God righteously recompenses to every troubled sinner. It is not by perverting judgment that God delivers these troubled and poor people out of all their distresses. Whenever they see him as their Deliverer he is admired in them as "glorious in holiness, fearful in praises, doing wonders."—Ex. xv. 11.

It is always "in that day," when the saints are enabled to behold the Lord Jesus Christ in the dispensation of the righteous judgment of God. The glory of that revelation makes the thick darkness of hopeless condemnation under which they were imprisoned, bright with the display of abounding grace. No subject of this salvation can fail to admire that beauty of holiness which shines in the face of his Savior in the time when he is made to believe that the grace of God has brought salvation to him. On the other hand, no sinner ever saw the divine glory of the salvation which is in Jesus without having received that eternal life which Jesus gives exclusively to his sheep who hear his voice. When he speaks peace to the troubled soul, though sunk under the deepest condemnation in his own heart, and sitting in gross darkness, this word of Jesus never fails to give that infinite light in which the ransomed sinner sees in his Savior the infinite fullness of all perfection. It requires no effort for such a subject of his grace to admire him in whom he is thus favored to believe. It is inconceivable how this text could be so wrested as to make it include among the admirers of the Lord Jesus one who does not believe. Hence, it must be confessed that there is no more discriminating expression in the sacred record than the words of this text.

While it is of primary importance to the saints to understand what application the Scriptures have to their own experience, there is no room to doubt that the dreadful decree goes forth from the mouth of our Lord Jesus by which all the enemies of his righteousness are consigned to that death which is everlasting. Of such destruction the finite mind of man is incapable of forming any correct conception. The saints have never found language to express the infinite distress of that horror of great darkness under which they experienced the pains of hell in the consciousness of their just condemnation. Much less can the feeble tongue of man express the unutterable torment of that death which can never expect the deliverance of life. Certainly there can be no "good tidings of great joy" in the proclamation of everlasting death. However it is included in the revealed word of the Lord that death has passed upon all men, for that all have sinned, it is not required of those who preach the gospel that they shall proclaim those terrors of undying torment which constitute the theme of worldly religionists. To them that believe, the gospel is the power of God unto salvation; to such as believe not, no words of mortal preachers can give any conception either of the justice or the love of God.

Having complied with the request of our brethren with such ability as God has bestowed upon us, we feel that it is not too much for us to ask of them to favor the readers of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES with their own reflections on the subject.

COVENANT MEETINGS.

In reply to the queries of our esteemed brother Hanks, in his communication on page 94, we will say that the monthly "covenant meetings," or "church meetings," in many parts of the north are opened and closed with singing and prayer, sometimes by the pastor, and sometimes by the deacons or private members. An opportunity is then offered for any one to be heard who may desire to unite with the church. Any business proper for the church to attend to is transacted, and the remainder of the time is spent by the members present in relating the exercises of their minds, in exhortation, singing and prayer. This we understand to be the order established by the apostle in his first epistle to the church at Corinth. "When ye come together, one of you hath a psalm, hath a doctrine, hath a tongue, hath a revelation, hath an interpretation. Let all things be done unto edifying." "For ye may ALL prophesy one by one, that all may learn, and all may be comforted."—1 Cor. xiv. 26, 31.

Many of our male members not only speak in prayer in these meetings, but also occasionally in the public meetings, especially in the absence of the pastor, and their gifts are highly appreciated.

The church in this city (Middletown) for many years has also had a Wednesday evening meeting from house to house, which has been conducted much the same as the monthly covenant meeting, and is generally well attended and much enjoyed. When held at the houses of the sick and infirm members, who are unable to attend the meetings of the church, and so are deprived of the preached word, it is not an unusual thing for the pastor to preach on such occasions.

In these conference meetings and church meetings the gifts in the church are brought into exercise, as an opportunity is given for all to speak as they feel impressed and are moved by the Holy Ghost. As we become familiar with the spiritual exercises of each other, by thus speaking one to another of our conflicts, trials and joys, we are drawn closer together in spiritual fellowship and love. Said the apostle John, "That which we have seen and heard declare we unto you, that ye also may have fellowship with us."

Some of the brethren in the churches have objected to the sisters speaking in covenant or conference meetings, as they have understood the apostle to forbid it when he said, "Let your women keep silence in the churches; for it is not permitted unto them to speak." The manner in which some interpret these words of the apostle would forbid that the sisters should join even in the singing of the songs of Zion in the public worship; for they could not join in the singing and yet "keep silence." Yet the literal version of the words appear to forbid them to thus speak, and to have their lips so sealed that they cannot engage in the singing, nor in declaring what God has wrought for them and in them. Can we suppose that the apostle meant such a thing? What we understand the apostle to teach is this, that the sisters are not to usurp authority over the brethren, or male members, by acting in an immodest or unbecoming manner, by conducting the public services, preaching and praying, which are acts of power and authority in the church, and which are to be exercised only by men, "as saith also the law." The apostle says it is a shame for a woman to be a public speaker; a shame both to herself and to the church, and should not be tolerated by the church. "But I suffer not a woman to teach, nor to usurp authority over the man, but to be in silence."—1 Tim. ii. 12. A woman may pray and prophesy, but not in public. We read in Acts xxi. 8, 9, "And the next day we that were of Paul's company departed, and came unto Cesarea; and we entered into the house of Philip the evangelist, which was one of the seven, and abode with him. And the same man had four daughters, virgins, which did prophesy."

While it has long been a custom in many of the churches north for the women to speak in the covenant and conference meetings, there has not been a lack of modesty on their part; nothing in their manner, while thus speaking of their exercises, to suggest to any one present that they were usurping authority over the male members, and the speech of many of them has been to the comfort and edification of the whole body.

We have thus briefly tried to answer the questions of our dear brother Hanks, and assure him that we would be pleased to have him visit us and behold our order.

LENGTHY OBITUARY NOTICES.

WHILE we feel to sympathize with those who are called to part with near and dear relatives and friends in death, yet we must request that in writing obituary notices they will be as brief as possible. A little reflection on this matter will, we think, be sufficient to show how unnecessary are long accounts of the minor incidents in the life of the deceased. Aside from the immediate friends of the subject of the notice they are not of general interest; and those to whom they are of any importance are about all acquainted with the facts without publishing them. A short notice is more likely to receive early insertion in the paper, as our obituary department as a rule is very much crowded; and it frequently occurs that owing to the extreme length of the notices, the publication of some are delayed for two or three numbers.

READ CAREFULLY.

WHEN two or more new subscribers are sent at the same time, in accordance with terms given in Supplement, and one is in compliance with the second paragraph and former part of the fourth, and the others on terms given in third paragraph, it is very essential to state which name is sent according to terms of second and fourth paragraphs, as that name is credited to the end of 1893, while the others are credited one year from the time their subscription begins.

PLEASE STOP MY PAPER.

AT least nine out of every ten writing us to discontinue their paper add that it is not on account of their objection to anything the paper contains, but that they are not financially able to continue it. We would ask all such if they have taken into consideration the amount they have economized by stopping their paper. It is less than four-sevenths of a cent a day.

of grace, where with a broken heart and a contrite spirit we cry unto the revealer of secrets, "Lord, make me to know mine end." We realize, as did the psalmist at another time, when he said, "I have seen an end of all perfection; but thy commandment is exceeding broad." When in our experience we come to "the ends of the earth," we have arrived at and see the end of all human perfection. Having failed to keep the law, we are taught in the failure that "All flesh is grass, and all the glory of man as the flower of grass; the grass withereth, and the flower thereof falleth away; but the word of the Lord endureth forever." We see the end of all we once thought was perfect, and "the commandment," which we discover to be "exceeding broad," teaches us wherein is the righteousness of the law, and how we are delivered from its bondage. "For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death. For what the law could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh, God sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin, condemned sin in the flesh, that the righteousness of the law might be fulfilled in us." Now, having received this divine teaching, we entreat the Lord, "Make me to know mine end." The more we become enlightened in the mysteries of the gospel, as much more do we realize how weak and ignorant we are. And in proportion as we taste that the Lord is gracious, so, more and more do we desire to know the sweetness of redeeming love. It was not idle curiosity in the psalmist that he desired to know his end. Neither did the cry of his heart seek to know the end of the literal days of his life. For to the children of divine life and light, Christ is the Alpha and Omega of all their joys and sorrows, and all their hopes and desires. Christ is the end and consummation of our hope, because the whole way and plan of salvation is complete in him; and when the poor, trembling child desires to know his end, he desires to realize the accomplishment and fulfillment of the righteousness of the law in him; and to know this is to know Christ; that he is the fullness of the Godhead in all the riches of grace. The carnal mind, even when excited by religious zeal, seeks not to know its end, because it is satisfied in the assurance that by a system of creature efforts it can accomplish its end. The light of divine truth presents the great contrast, that only the Lord can "Make me to know mine end."

"And the measure of my days, what it is." To know the measure of a thing is to know its length and breadth and depth and height. This is its fullness. The omnipresence of God presents this fullness in all its beauty and worth, and is realized in the experience of God's children, as recorded by the psalmist. "Whither shall I go from thy Spirit, or whither shall I flee from thy presence? If I ascend up into heaven, thou art there; if I make my bed in hell, behold, thou art there; if I take the wings of the morning, and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea, even there shall thy hand lead me, and thy right hand shall hold me." O that I could continually realize that I am ever in the presence of my God! Surely this is the prayer breathed by him who desires to know the measure of his days, the length and breadth and depth and height of God's love as shed abroad in his heart, and the constant living in his gracious presence. In the economy of God's grace man is ever the propelled, and never the propeller. For God moves in a mysterious way, in the hearts of his people, his wonders to perform. He makes them willing in the day of his power. The exercises of the mind are involuntary, being conceived and governed by a secret, hidden and mysterious power. In the child of Jehovah, the animal passions of the natural mind (and belonging to the Adamic nature) are restrained by the superabounding of God's grace. We are warmed and animated by the love of God, exercised by the faith of God, and strengthened and sustained by hope in God, all of which is Christ within us the hope of glory; and this is the perfect measure of all our days. It is recorded, "Thou shalt not have in thine house divers measures, a great and a small; but thou shalt have a perfect and just weight; a perfect and just measure shalt thou have, that thy days may be lengthened in the land, which the Lord thy God giveth thee."—Deut. xxv. 14, 15. The things that emanate from the flesh can neither give a just weight nor a just measure, for all is enmity to God. But a just weight and a just measure is vouchsafed unto us in Christ; for the righteousness of the law is fulfilled in us by Christ, our living head. And while the uprisings of sin in our flesh cause great billows of tribulation and despair to roll over us, casting us to the very bottom of the mountains, and in the darkness the beasts of the field creep forth, and every horrid creature, yet the perfect measure of our days is shown to us in the edict which has gone forth in the voice of the Lord, saying, "They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain; for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea." We have abundant evidence in the Scriptures, and also in the experience of our own hearts, that God's grace is sufficient for us in every trial, and that the bounds of Satan's power is set by the same predestinating sovereignty which predestinated the children of his choice to be conformed to the image of Christ. Of Job the Lord said unto Satan, "Behold, he is in thine hand; but save his life." And his life was as safe and secure as the invulnerable mountains of brass, as seen by one of the prophets, from between which issued every power of Satan to afflict mankind. Again, as recorded by John on Patmos a similar command was heard out of the voice of him whose power is supreme, setting the bounds of the reign of darkness, in a perfect measure of a complete Redeemer. "And I beheld, and lo, a black horse; and he that sat on him had a pair of balances in his hand. And I heard a voice in the midst of the four beasts say, A measure of wheat for a penny, and three measures of barley for a penny; and see thou hurt not the oil and the wine; which is the body of Christ, the church of the living God. To know the measure of my days is to know Christ in his fullness, the sweetness of his love, the fellowship of his sufferings, and the power of his resurrection. How glorious, full and complete a measure! This perfect measure is made up by, and in the perfecting of the saints, not complete "till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ."

"That I may know how frail I am." We perceive in all this prayer of the psalmist a desire to know Jesus, fully realizing, as he did, this great doctrinal truth, that one to know one's frailty must proportionately know the power in the wisdom which manifests our weakness and frailty; and that power is Jesus. Our own experience teaches us that when we have come to the end of all our creature strength, and our frail bark has become shattered and broken upon the rocks and shoals of our vile, depraved nature, and we fall prostrate, panting and breathless, ready to give up, then the Spirit, which helpeth our infirmities, presents to us Jesus as our strength and our salvation. Being frail and helpless, we cannot go to him; but O how sweetly and tenderly he comes to us, binds up our wounds, pouring in oil and wine, and caring for every want, with the comforts of sovereign grace from the wells of living water. Sore trials and dire tribulations call forth the prayers of the saints; for the heart prays not for what it does not need; so the words of our subject, the prayer of the psalmist, was called forth out of deep tribulation. In his deep distress he had said, "I will take heed to my ways, that I sin not with my tongue: I will keep my mouth with a bridle, while the wicked is before me. I was dumb with silence, I held my peace even from good." This presents his vain dependence upon an arm of flesh. He did not know then how frail he was. He thought he could take the reigns of government in his own hands. But let us read farther, and see how he succeeded. "And my sorrow was stirred. My heart was hot within me, while I was musing the fire burned. Then spake I with my tongue; Lord, make me to know mine end, and the measure of my days, what it is, that I may know how frail I am." How does that accord with your own experience, dear, little, trembling one? Does not your heart echo back the voice of sweet fellowship, saying, I am very frail; but my Lord is strong. He is my deliverer, the victorious Captain of my salvation, and I will put all my trust in him. He will show me, even himself, mine end, and the measure of my days, what it is, and how frail I am?

OZARK, Ala., Feb. 23, 1893.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—Having been solicited to write oftener for the SIGNS, I desire to do so; but how often I have set down with the intention of writing for our paper, but could not think of anything that would be of comfort to God's people. Even now, when I think of my feeble, barren mind, I am at a loss to know how or what to write.

If I know anything about the life of a christian, it is mysterious and very strange. Sometimes he is upon Pisgah's towering heights, and basking in the smiles of Jesus, feeling that "the Lord is mine, and I am his;" but soon, again, he is away down in the valley of despondency, crying in bitter anguish of soul, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" "O that I knew where I might find him, that I might come even to his seat." Then there is an indifferent feeling the christian has. O how I do dread that indifferent state when I cannot feel cold nor hot, and the company of the saints is not appreciated by me. If we then talk about Jesus, it is from the lips, and our hearts are far from him. I go to meeting, and the brethren look just like I feel. There is no real joy or mourning. O this wretched heart, this stony heart!

"Of feeling all things show some sign, But nothing moves this heart of mine." If I see God's children weeping, with bleeding hearts and eyes melted into tears, I can still look on with this wretched heart and wish that I could exhibit some outward marks of a christian. I can only bow in humble submission to Zion's conquering King, who said, "Be still, and know that I am God." God alone can soften this flinty heart and melt mine eyes into a fountain of tears. Many times we pray for that we do not want. I try to ask the Lord to make me humble; but I do not like to go through the deep waters of tribulation to feel humble. The christian never gets exactly right. But now I can take sweet comfort in the language of the apostle, "All things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose." There is not a conflict but what is for our good. If we did not go into the very depths of tribulation, and through the raging billows of life's tempestuous sea, wading through fiery trials, even in the very belly of hell, how could we ever comfort those who pass through such a dark and fearful ordeal? It is a sweet comfort to me amid life's dreary wilderness to meet those who have journeyed through floods and flames of sore afflictions and despaired in poverty's vale, feeling that "all these things are against me." When I can hear them tell of their despondent condition, they describe my feelings also. I am led to conclude that all the family of grace have their sore trials in some way. I used to wonder if the northern Baptists would be kind like our southern Baptists, seeing they have such superior advantages in a financial and literary way over many of our southern brethren. But the grace of God in their hearts has made them as loving, meek, humble and devoted Baptists as I ever met. While many of them possess much of this world's goods, yet they are a free, liberal-hearted band of brethren, and are very spiritually minded. It made me feel so unworthy to receive the many kind acts from the dear, precious ones of the north. I shall ever hold them all in grateful remembrance. May the Lord bless us all, and enable us to live our profession, and to bask sweetly in the smiles of Jesus.

Yours in gospel bonds,

LEE HANKS.

P. S.—Dear brethren, will you please tell us through the SIGNS how your covenant meetings are conducted? Do the most of the male members pray in public? Do they have prayer meetings? How often do they meet? The private members here depend upon the pastors to do the preaching and praying, and they have nothing to say themselves. I imagine that I should enjoy one of those covenant meetings very much. I love to see private members devoted. I notice there is much more life among the private members there than here. Is it right for a sister to speak in those covenant meetings?

MASON CITY, Iowa., Jan. 24, 1893.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—I herewith send you two dollars for the good old family paper, the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. I have been a reader of its columns so long that I do not know how to do without it. The first copy I ever saw was a month or so after I experienced a hope, in the year 1849, while I lived in Delaware, Delaware Co., Ohio. A dear old aunt sent me a parcel wrapped up with a copy of the SIGNS. It happened to be a number that was pretty well filled with experiences. I picked it up and began to read it, and it seemed that I never before had such a feast in my life. My eyes filled to overflowing, so that I could hardly see to read. I read it over and over, and it seemed better every time I read it. The writers expressed my own feelings, and described my own doubts in regard to the little hope I was then trying to throw away. I would say to myself, Surely there is a reality in christianity, and it is not a delusion. I am indeed one of that happy number; for here are many of God's children from all parts of the world speaking the same language, confirming the words of Scripture, "All thy children shall be taught of the Lord." I then subscribed for the paper, and have read it ever since, and do not now feel to do without it. I have been trying for the past few weeks to get subscribers, but have been unsuccessful thus far. The doctrine it contains is incomprehensible to the mind of any but those who are taught by divine inspiration. The whole world seems to be seeking after religious popularity. "Having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof." I asked a man a short time ago to subscribe for the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, an Old School Baptist paper. I asked him if he knew anything about the Old School or Primitive Baptists. He replied, "Yes, I know all about them that I want to. That old-fogyism is altogether too old and unpopular for these times." I told him it was plain to be seen that he was far in advance of the apostles, and had no use for the Lord Jesus Christ, only his name, to take away reproach.

When we come to meditate upon the goodness, greatness and mercies of God, how he works all things after the counsel of his own will, saying, "My counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure," and that none have a right to say unto him, Why doest thou thus? and that he hides the things of the Spirit from the wise and prudent, and reveals them unto babes, it is no wonder the doctrine appears foggy and misty to the world. But why should they yet find fault? Jesus himself explains it, saying, "Even so, Father; for so it seemed good in thy sight." I do feel to rejoice that God works all things after the counsel of his own will; and if it is not in accordance with his will to reveal all the hidden mysterious points of his glorious work of redemption, I hope I may be kept from setting myself up as a standard bearer. My desire is that I may be kept low at the feet of my brethren, taking heed unto myself, endeavoring to "feed the church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood," and striving to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. There is enough for us to preach and write about that we know, without writing about that which we do not know. If the inspired apostle John did not know all, how can we expect to know? He begins the third chapter of his first epistle thus, "Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God. Therefore the world knoweth us not, because it knew him not. Beloved, now are we the sons of God; and it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is." Let us rejoice that we have the witness within us that we are the sons of God, and can say with the man who was born blind, "One thing I know, that whereas I was blind, now I see."

I hope the brethren will do all they can to keep the SIGNS a weekly paper. I saw a letter in the third number of the present volume, from sister Mary D. Oliver, in which she speaks of a friend having sent her a few numbers of the SIGNS to read, in which she found her own experience, which was a great comfort to her. This was so nearly like my own experience that I could not refrain from speaking about it. There are, perhaps, thousands of like circumstances yet untold.

But I will stop. Do with this as you please. As ever, yours in hope of a blessed immortality beyond the grave,

A. B. LESTER.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

OUR mother, Mrs. Lydia Carpenter, died at her home in this place about four o'clock on March 4th, 1893.

Mother was born in western New York, and was seventy-eight years old on the 5th day of last December. When she was about seventeen years old she was given a good hope through grace, and in relating it she said she realized that she must be a believer in the Lord Jesus Christ in order to be saved, and it troubled her to feel that she could not believe; but when the word came to her with power, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved," then she said, "How easy it was to believe." When about twenty years of age, and after she came to Michigan, she was married to my father, Wm. S. Carpenter (who went before her five years ago), she being the daughter of Wm. and Caroline Older. She was baptized at the time of her experience by Elder James Carpenter, my father's father. In the division of the Baptists she remained with the Old School. Some years ago she grew entirely blind, having both eyes covered by cataracts. Nearly fifteen years ago father took her to the State University at Ann Arbor to have them removed. He took her before the class of students to have the operation performed, and said when she began to lose consciousness from the effects of the ether they gave her she began to pray in such a manner that all were hushed and bowed in the most solemn and reverent manner. Mother never had confidence to speak or pray publicly, but I know that her heart was much like an altar of incense before God. She was the mother of six children. One died in infancy and five survive her, two sons and three daughters. Her home was with her youngest daughter, Mrs. Sarah Hesse. Her eyesight was always somewhat darkened; and being afflicted with heart disease and rheumatism, she could not always get to the appointments of the church, but always had a deep interest in whatever she thought to be true and right, always looking for me after each meeting to come and tell her about it. I made it a point to do so, until I yet will find myself thinking what I will tell mother when I see her. She was of a deeply sensitive nature, and in scriptural words was strictly a "keeper at home." I have heard her say that she never saw dancing, never attended a fair, nor knew anything of the follies and amusements of the world. There was not a particle of frivolity about her. She never flattered her children, but she loved them for their own welfare. Had she been different from what she was I could not have the profound respect for her that I must always have. I feel that I owe very much to the influence she had over my life, though I did not always understand it. For years she had many times been thought to be dying; and as I would stand by her at those times she would talk to me in such a way that it would take a volume to tell it. She would say that her paroxysms would be just like a wave going over her, and every time she would expect to awake in the heavenly world, and sometimes would express disappointment that it was not so, saying, as she would look at me, "The same faces yet." She was familiar with the Scriptures, having studied them from a child, and was fond of reading, nearly always having a book or paper when her busy hands were not at work. When too weak or blind to read, then she would hold them and have them by her. She loved the SIGNS and other publications of our order; but her head had grown to hurt her so that it worried her to read, or to hear reading or talking. Her favorite hymn commences, "Vital spark of heav-

only flame." She would ask me to repeat it for her in her sickness. As much and as long as we watched her, she at last died alone, with a little granddaughter eleven years old, the daughter with whom she lived being away caring for a sick daughter of hers.

Mother had been unusually well for her, and was contemplating making me a visit until the morning of her death. Not feeling quite so well, she did not get up, which was no uncommon thing; but she seemed cheerful and comfortable. My brother-in-law, Mr. Hesse, and his uncle, who were caring for her, thinking her asleep went out, leaving her with the little girl who at once noticed a change in her grandmother, and rang the bell. I was sent for, but when I reached her she was lying on her pillow, with a glad, happy and heavenly look upon her face, as though she had received a most royal welcome to her Father's house; as though her long, wearisome journey ended, she was home at last. It was like a weary one lying down and falling asleep "like one who wraps the drapery of his couch about him, and lies down to pleasant dreams." It was not like death at all. She had told me that often a verse of Scripture would have so much fullness and sweetness for her that she would think she would have it used as a text for her funeral; then it would be followed by another, until there would be so many that she could make no choice. Finally it came to her that the Lord himself would provide a suitable one.

Elder W. L. Lines preached for her, according to her request, from the words, "To die is gain." I truly felt it was the Lord's provision, for out of the storehouse were brought forth the best things of the kingdom. I felt that surely she was one of the King's daughters, or he would not have ordered all things so royally for her burial. Although nearly four score years old, yet in her appearance mother never grew old, and as I looked upon her in her casket she was to me as lovely as a sleeping infant.

KATE SWARTOUT.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date. This date denotes the time at which your subscription expires; and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

CORRESPONDENCE.

IN FLORIDA.

OUR visit to this state was on account of my wife's health. We arrived December 27th. The usually cold and disagreeable weather which just then began, and which prevailed for a greater length of time than was ever before known here by the oldest inhabitant I have seen, had a very unfavorable effect at first, causing extreme prostration, which lasted about two weeks. Since then, in a better locality, under more favorable circumstances, and with pleasanter weather, the benefit we hoped for has been experienced to a remarkable degree. My wife is now better in health than for more than a year past. The weather has been comparatively pleasant since the first of February, though it has not been as continuously warm and clear as it is generally at this season, they say; nor is the spring as far advanced, the cold of January having set it back. Orange trees should have been in full bloom some time ago, and strawberries ready for market. There have been several days when the temperature was above 80°. It has reached 87°. Colds do not seem easily taken here. So far as I have observed they do not hold on. There is certainly some peculiar quality in the climate, and in the effect of pine forests, that is favorable to the health of many.

We hardly knew what locality to choose. We now think it was well that we came to an interior town, instead of going to either coast. The winds that prevail during the winter on the coasts, we learn, are too bleak and chilling for many invalids, even when in the same cases it may be very beneficial during the summer. It would be difficult to decide which is the most favorable place to select by hearing the testimony of those who live at each place. However truthful one is, and however determined he may be to give impartial testimony, he will decide in favor of the place in which he lives. At least I have found that to be the case with the large number of people I have interviewed. Some of them have never visited any other place, and some have but just arrived, or are only on their way to the locality in favor of which they give a confident voice as against all others. I have noticed something at almost every place I have visited to say in its favor, but nothing to distinguish one as absolutely superior to any other. Some places are protected from frost by the water near them; some are more exempt from frost because they are higher. The highest land in the State is called "Apopka mountain," although it is only 545 feet above the level of the gulf. It is three and a half miles southeast of Clermont, on the Orange Belt R. R. There I saw large fields of tomato plants. In most other places I have visited these plants would not have withstood the frost. The soil there is not rich. The next highest land is in Pasco County, two miles west of Dade City, and is 281 feet above the gulf. With the exception of a small clearing at one side, it is covered with a forest of large pine. The soil is good. From there I saw the Apopka mountains, thirty-five miles distant. Lakes abound, and they mostly abound in fish. There are very interesting peculiarities about them but I will not now speak of them. In riding in a carriage a distance of eight miles I counted twenty-one of various sizes, none of which had any visible outlet.

Bananas, pineapples and other sub-tropical fruits are not successfully cultivated, except along the narrow strip of land between the Indian River and the ocean, and some other places far south of this.

I have taken the opportunity to visit the churches in this part of the state, as far as I have been able, and have spent two or three days in a week away from my family in doing so. The labor, exposure and inconvenience attending these visits have made it no easy work. But it has never been easy for me to do any part of the work belonging to the ministry, the traveling, the absence from home, the exposure, the preaching, or the ministry of the order and ordinances of the church; it has never been an easy work for me, nor a work pleasant to the flesh. It is far from the work I would ever have chosen. Sometimes I wonder greatly how I have ever kept at it. I think it must have been the feeling of a "woe is unto me if I preach not the gospel," that has kept me at the work. But with the "hardness" that every minister has to endure "as a good soldier of the cross," and with the "afflictions of the gospel" which he has to partake of, and which I never could have endured of myself, there has been at times the experience of a sweet reward in the work. And that reward I have felt in meeting with and preaching the gospel to the churches here.

The first of the churches in this part of Florida is the Mt. Enon, in Hillsboro county. It was established in 1865. About two years previous to that time an old minister, Elder Mosely, felt impressed to travel southward from Alabama. He had appointments by the way, traveling on until he reached the house of Mr. Wiggins, the only Old Baptist in that part of the country, near two hundred miles from the Georgia line. There he staid two years. The result was the organization of that church. There are now thirteen churches in the Mt. Enon Association, besides seven in the Indian River, which has been constituted within a few years.

It is with the churches here as elsewhere; some are strong and vigorous, while others are weak and declining. The weakness I refer to does not have regard merely to numbers. A church with large membership may be very weak, while one few in numbers may have all the elements of true strength. How striking and beautiful is the description of the condition of the churches given in Acts ix. 31, "Then had the churches rest throughout all Judea and Galilee and Samaria, and were edified; and walking in the fear of the Lord and in the comfort of the Holy Ghost, were multiplied." Churches are never edified (nourished) and multiplied, in a spiritual sense, except under the conditions here mentioned. I have seen the time when such a condition seemed to prevail widely among the churches of my acquaintance; there have also been times when it seemed to me (perhaps owing somewhat to my own depressed state of mind) that the churches were very generally in a low and weak condition. But I have never known the time when there were not some churches that gave clear evidence that they were resting in the Lord and walking in his fear. I think that is the case with most of the churches here.

Should I have met with things erroneous of sufficient importance to require notice, those who know me well would not expect a mention of them in a letter for publication, unless I regarded them as of such a character as to affect my fellowship; in which they would know I had first spoken plainly on the subject with those involved in the error.

I have met but few of the ministers who serve these churches, and have had opportunity to have much conversation with but three. With all, so far as my acquaintance extends, I have felt that gospel fellowship that I so much enjoy. The brethren have manifested a cordial reception of the doctrine I preach, as that which they have been taught of the Lord, and a warm fellowship for me.

I am gratified that you are republishing in the SIGNS the minutes of the meeting at Black Rock in 1832. It will be seen that there has been no change from that time to this in the position occupied by the Old School Baptist Churches, and by the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, their representative journal, the first, and for a number of years the only, paper published professing to advocate the principles of doctrine and order declared at that meeting, by representative ministers and brethren from various parts of our country, to be their understanding of what the Scriptures teach. Some ministers, I learn, in some parts of our country, who oppose some points of doctrine, as, for instance, the predestination of whatsoever comes to pass, have asserted that it is not "Old Baptist doctrine," which may have disturbed some lovers of the truth. Now, the important thing is to know what "Bible doctrine" is. I believe that held by the Old School or Primitive Baptist church is Bible doctrine. And I do not know a more convincing proof of what is "Old Baptist doctrine" than the statement made by them when they first declared their reasons for withdrawing from those they esteemed disorderly. The doctrine and order then claimed as that of the Savior and his apostles, has been advocated by the SIGNS with unvarying faithfulness, courage and ability from that day to this, and it is entitled to be regarded as in a peculiar sense the representative of the Old Baptists, "our family paper," as I named it near twenty-eight years ago, because of having been started under most discouraging circumstances, against great opposition, at the very beginning of the separation, and of having continued through all the conflicts, advocating the same principles, and because it reaches to the brethren in every part of our country. Other journals have arisen in different localities of late years which are entitled to high regard by the brethren, and whose editors would be far from expressing a disparaging word concerning the SIGNS, but will cheerfully acknowledge what I have said about it. Other periodicals have been started as representing the Old Baptist cause, which have no just claim to be regarded as such. Some of them have ceased to be published.

I have always felt that it is one's right and duty to follow those impressions of his mind which he believes to have been made by the Spirit, in any work pertaining to the kingdom of God, whether writing, editing, publishing, preaching or any thing else. I believe, however, that the fellowship of the churches with whom he is associated is necessary to clearly establish the truth of his claim that his impressions have been from the Spirit. The mediums of correspondence between the Lord's people, established by the direction of the Spirit, will be for their benefit and comfort. Some brethren have expressed the belief that these papers are of no real benefit. They might as well say that it is of no use for those that fear the Lord to speak often one to another, and tell each other of his gracious dealings with them, unless they can meet and speak personally. But we all know how comforting it is to read the testimony of our dear kindred in Christ from whom we have been separated, or whom we have never seen. I will say here that I do not regard the word of any man, whatever his position, office, gift, personal character, attainments or wisdom, as of any authority in the church, only so far as it is the word of inspired men, written in the Scriptures of truth, which has been given unto him by the Spirit to minister to the saints. And I want here to express my full and cordial approval of the sentiments expressed by brother Jenkins in reply to the request of brother Supplee, which was published in the SIGNS of Feb. 22. I regard this as a most important subject, and especially to be carefully observed at this time. For there have been some things published in some of our journals of late that I cannot fellowship, nor will the mantle of charity or the love of God in the heart cover them. The principles I refer to, and the plain expressions used, clearly and plainly give great advantage in the kingdom of our God to those of superior mental powers and attainments in human learning and knowledge, and throw far into the background, or rather, entirely out of sight, the precious truth that has been my only hope and comfort, that these things are hid from the wise and prudent and revealed unto babes. The things I refer to show the feeble-minded, the unlearned and the babe to be at a great disadvantage in regard to spiritual things. This leaves me out of the precious secret of the Lord. If our God is known only by the Son, and by them to whomsoever the Son will reveal him, and if the things which he has given freely to his people cannot be searched out or known except by his own Spirit which is given unto them (Matt. xi.

26; 2 Cor. ii.), then the principles and expressions I have referred to are grossly erroneous, and are the very things which "Make empty the soul of the hungry, and cause the drink of the thirsty to fail, and destroy the poor with lying words, even when the needy speaketh right."—Isa. xxxii. 6, 7. I can bear with many kinds of error; but with this kind I cannot bear. I shall try faithfully to reprove it where it has been published. If I fail I shall then, if the Lord will, speak of it definitely through the SIGNS. The truth of the Scriptures is, that the things of the Spirit are known only by revelation, and that the Spirit, who divides to every man, in the church, severally as he will, has never divided or appointed a gift to one simply because of any natural superiority of any kind, nor so arranged that the unlearned are made dependent for valuable spiritual knowledge upon the learned, nor those of less mental power upon those more richly endowed with intellectual clearness and strength.

Here I take my stand as against all or any; for here the Lord brought me when he gave me a hope in him, and showed me the church as his perfect workmanship. I could then say, with the psalmist, "We shall be satisfied with the goodness of thy house, even of thy holy temple;" and I am thankful I can say it yet. I value human learning as highly as any one in its place; but when it begins to intrude upon the prerogatives of God, and to disport itself in the sacred precincts of his holy temple, as though it had some part in preparing "the tongue of the learned," which the Lord has given for the help and comfort of his weary ones, and when it begins to try to draw the children away from the simplicity of Christ, then I despise it, and am sorry, pitifully sorry, that any of the dear family should be so deceived. Nothing can be ministered to any one of the saints that shall be for his comfort and instruction but that which has already been taught him by that "anointing which he has received" of God, which "teacheth him of all things." Therefore all the ministration to the saints that is directed by the Spirit will be in conformity to that teaching by the Spirit within; and this will bring to us the feeling of its power and authority. That which the "unction from the Holy One" teaches us will also be strictly in accordance with the Scriptures of truth; and this enables the saints to distinguish between that which has been revealed by the Spirit and the vain imaginations of men, which they often claim to be the revelation of the Lord to them.

The plain declarations of the word have an authority to which we must bow, even though we have not yet experienced their power, or have not yet been shown that we have experienced it; for we all know that a portion of the word sometimes comes to the mind with power, explaining an experience which we have had long before. Then we understand for the first time, by the witness of the word, that the experience was from the Lord; and also are given to understand by the experience the meaning of the word.

How many dear children of God have in this way, all at once, been brought to see the truth and beauty and loveliness of a point of doctrine which before they hated. The entrance of the Lord's word gave them light to see that this very word had before been written in the heart. It has often been in this way that haters of election and predestination and the sovereign power of God have come to be lovers of them, seeing them as the precious truth of the gospel, without which there could have been no salvation.

When the saints are so well prepared to try the spirits, it does not seem that any one needs to fear that publications will do harm. Debaters upon spiritual subjects, and those who try to have dominion over the faith of the saints, and those who fight with the worldly weapons of skill and learning, and those who claim authority for the decision of councils and the writings of uninspired men, will have their interested audiences, among whom will be found some of the Lord's exercised people; but they will be hungry and unsatisfied. The great body of his people will form a very different and far more discriminating audience, for they "try the words as the mouth tasteth meat;" and when they find no food for their poor, hungry souls they turn to something else, with but little interest as to the result of the debate or argument.

There will be always those who with tongue or pen will be trying to tell what the Lord has shown to them of his love and grace and power and faithfulness; and there will always be an interest in, and more or less of comfort for, the Lord's exercised people in this kind of writing or speaking. These are the only true expounders of the Scriptures of truth. The deepest mysteries, which all the knowledge and wisdom of the world will never enable the most learned and able gospel minister to search out, will be thus unfolded to him, or to the unlearned, at an unexpected time, and in such an unexpected way that he shall never claim it as in any possible degree the result of his efforts or power in any respect. Then he, whether weak or strong in mind, whether learned or unlearned in worldly things, will be so thoroughly furnished unto the good work of teaching and comforting the saints that he will, easily and simply as a child tells what it sees, speak unto them "the wisdom of God in a mystery; even the hidden wisdom which God ordained before the world unto our glory."

He who is thus sent to them with words spoken or written will appeal to their experience as attesting the truth of the word he declares, while firmly insisting upon the written word of inspiration as that by which all theories and all experience are to be tried; and he will not, when thus directed by the meek and lowly Spirit of Christ, feel like using harsh or ironical or angry terms, nor like indulging in ridicule or levity. He knows that the word "will have free course and be glorified."

Write on, brethren. Publish what is written, brethren editors. Write and publish what you count profitable; but let us be careful that the Spirit is directing us. Let us not waste time in that kind of argument in which the passions and propensities of the carnal mind are exhibited and gratified; for truly all such writing or speaking is time and labor lost. Such things attract only a worldly audience, and appeal only to the carnal mind. The people of God's pasture, the sheep of his hand, do not linger long in such fruitless fields as this, but are found far away from the resorts and exhibitions of worldly wisdom, feeding in the wilderness and solitary place, that has been made glad for them, and in the desert, which has been made, by their dear and faithful and all-powerful Shepherd, to "rejoice and blossom as the rose."

MATTHEW VI. 25.

"THEREFORE I say unto you, Take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink; nor yet for your body, what ye shall put on. Is not the life more than meat, and the body than raiment?"

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN IN THE LORD:—One of our brethren, a young and faithful minister for the truth's sake, has requested my views on the above portion of holy writ, and the following verses; and if you will allow me a little space in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES I will suggest a few thoughts through its columns to the precious brother, as this was his request. I do confess that the undertaking is a painful duty for me, if it is my duty at all, which is a question in my mind daily, both as to preaching and writing for the papers; and I cannot decide to my satisfaction which of the two contending powers is right. However when called upon by brethren and friends for such views as I have, I do not feel clear to withhold them; and to give such as we have is all that can be reasonably required.

The channel in which the proposed text with the connecting Scriptures leads, is mortifying to the proud nature of some of the Lord's humble servants. Nevertheless we must submit to the truth of the matter, and not shun to declare the whole counsel of God, and rightly divide the word of truth. This text is part of Christ's sermon on the mount, as it is generally termed, and was delivered directly to his disciples; for it is said, "And seeing the multitudes, he [Jesus] went up into a mountain; and when he was set his disciples came unto him, and he opened his mouth and taught them" [the disciples], &c.

My limits call me to the point in question, and that is, what are we to understand by the words of the text relative to taking no thought for our life or body? as my querist and others have asked more than once. And first, we will say they mean precisely what they say to the characters to whom they were addressed, and that they have a special application to God's ministers in this our day, no doubt. We cannot apply this connection of Scripture to everybody, nor even to all of the Lord's faithful children, without perverting the Scriptures. For this life and body means our natural life and body, as regards our necessary food and raiment. I am well aware that narrow-hearted and covetous brethren, as well as others, try to explain away this exposition of the text, but to no avail, to all who are willing to be governed by the unerring standard, the Bible; for it is plain as noonday that Jesus was talking to his disciples, whom he had chosen, called and qualified, to send them forth as sheep in the midst of wolves; and it was God's way of sending them, without money, or scrip, or prearranged clothing, or other necessities, but a staff only. This was not from necessity, but of choice; and he tells them plainly that "No man can serve two masters," &c. "Ye cannot serve God and mammon." Some explain the word "mammon" to mean the devil, which exposition I for one would be excused from subscribing to just yet. Hence I shall construe it to mean the affairs of this world; that God's children who are not called upon to forsake houses and land, wife and children, to go into all the world and preach the gospel; I say, those of God's children who are not thus called have the right and ought to engage in what is termed "mammon" in this and similar texts.—Luke xvi 9. While, on the other hand, those whom God has separated unto the gospel of Christ are in duty bound to turn their backs upon these things; for they cannot serve God and mammon; that is, they cannot in obedience to the heavenly calling. They cannot forsake all these things, and also accumulate the common necessities of this life. "Therefore," that is, for this cause or reason, because it is impossible for them to do both. For this cause I say unto you, "Take no thought for your life;" that is, for the sustenance of this animal life. Do not charge your mind nor engage your thoughts about the affairs of this life what you shall eat, or what you shall wear; for no man that warreth entangleth himself with the affairs of this life, that he may please him who hath chosen him to be a soldier. For "no man can serve two masters; for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other." Then, if we who are called of God to the work of the ministry entangle ourselves with the affairs of this life (mammon), we will love and hold to them; and in proportion as we cherish, love and hold to the affairs of this life, we will neglect and in a sense despise the calling of God; for we cannot serve both. I have often thought that I have seen good brethren, whom God had called, in a great measure trying to do or serve both, when they did neither of them to much profit, but were often drowned in despair and perplexities. As I presume our brother, and probably others, are more interested in the relative duty of God's children in this our day, both the ministers and private members, I hope it will suffice for me to say that this text, with its connecting Scripture, was directly to the disciples of Christ, but does in the greater part apply to the ministers of our day; and as this is particularly a trying time with Zion, and especially the ministers of God, it does seem to me that it is high time for God's children to awake out of sleep, and put their shoulder to the wheel, and make a long pull, a strong pull, a pull all together, for the good of Zion and for the glory of God. Evidently we are not doing this when many are bearing none of the burdens, not so much as touching them with their little finger; not pulling at all forward, but some are pulling backward; pulling against the obedient children of God. These things ought not to be so, dear brethren. But it does seem to me in these last and trying days that the children of God ought, as far as God has prospered them in the affairs of this world, to try to loosen the hands of the called servants of God, or ministers of Christ, that they may not be entangled or perplexed with the cares of this life, that they may travel more, preach more, and more edifying and decisive, having their minds freed from the care and vexations of this life, and give themselves wholly to the work of the ministry. The Scriptures make it too plain to require any argument that it is the bounden duty of the saints to communicate of the good things of this life to their pastor who has forsaken his secular affairs to labor in word and doctrine for them. There can be nothing greater for the children of God than to discharge their duty. "The liberal deviseth liberal things, and by liberal things shall he stand." Also it is the bounden duty of the ministers of the cross to go forth and feed the flock of Christ in all faithfulness, meekness and patience, and leave the matter of support of themselves and their poor, distressed and dependent families entirely to God and their brethren. A brother or sister whom God has blessed with plenty in this world, and who would have their pastor to come and preach for them month after month, and year after year, without administering anything to aid in support of him and his needy family, is unworthy a name among Old Baptists. For "whoso hath this world's good, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?"—John iii. 17.

Now, the brother in need doubtless is the brother who has forsaken father and mother, wife and children, house and land, for Christ's sake and the gospel's, and has taken up the cross daily, and is following Jesus in the way, and taking no thought for the affairs of this life. "My little children, let us not love in word, neither in tongue, but in deed and in truth." "If a brother or sister be naked, and destitute of daily food, and one of you say unto them, Depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled, notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful for the body, what doth it profit?" &c. This is only in word and tongue; but when we communicate the necessary food and raiment, this is plain evidence that we love in deed and in truth, otherwise we are not entitled to the claim. In the scope of Scripture following the text is found all the encouragement necessary, if rightly considered. We are not to understand from the language of Jesus as recorded in this text, "Take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink, nor yet for your body, what ye shall put on. Is not the life more than meat, and the body than raiment?" I say, we are not to understand from these words of our Savior that the ministers of the gospel could or ought to do without these things, as is plainly asserted at the thirty-third verse in these words, "But seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." That is, all these things that you are commanded to not take thought for. Jesus' specially called their attention to the fowls of the air, which did not sow, reap, nor gather into barns; yet your heavenly Father feedeth them. "Are ye not much better than they?" Forasmuch then as our heavenly Father feedeth the so much inferior fowls and animals (surely it is the Lord that feeds all of them), why should the poor minister hesitate and falter? "Are ye not much better than they?" Verily you shall be fed. As to raiment, "Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow," &c. "Wherefore, if God so clothe the grass of the field, which to-day is, and to-morrow is cast into the oven, shall he not much more clothe you, O ye of little faith?" How forcible are right words; and with what conviction these words of Jesus ("O ye of little faith") reach the heart of the almost faithless and unworthy writer. The keystone and capstone of encouragement found in this connection is in these words, "Your heavenly Father knoweth [every moment] that ye have need of all these things."—Verse 32. When rightly considered, this is enough for any poor minister who, like the milch kine of old, leaves his little ones at home, being tied (bound) to the cart. They took the straight way up to Beth-shemeth, lowing as they went. I repeat it again, this is enough to encourage the poor, burdened minister of Jesus, who hath denied self, took up his cross daily, breasting all opposition, and feels burdened and bowed down under the great responsibility of preaching the Word, and also burdened with the care of the loved ones who are shut up at home—shut up from many comforts and privileges that others enjoy; but our heavenly Father knoweth that we need all these things.

I have in a hurried way embodied a few of my thoughts on the text submitted, hoping they may in part answer our brother's request. I have done the best I could. May the Lord bless them to the comfort of his dear children.

Yours in hope,

W. J. MAY.

SOUTH WESTERLO, N. Y., Dec. 22, 1892.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—I will send you a few lines to let you know that my unprofitable life is still spared. I am the same poor, blind sinner. I have been a reader of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES over fifty years, and cannot give it up as long as my kind friends will read it to me. It is a great comfort to hear from the dear brethren and sisters who have traveled the same road. I can witness to their joys and their sorrows. I think every year when I send my remittance that it will be the last. I am eighty-three years old, blind and feeble. It is seventy years since I first indulged a hope. The dear Lord took me out of a horrible pit, and placed my feet on a rock, and put a new song in my mouth, even praise to God. It is sixty-seven years since I united with the Baptist Church at South Westerlo. The members are almost all gone to their long home. Two old sisters are left in this place. The time is not far distant when I hope to lay my armor by and dwell with Christ at home.

I remain your unworthy sister,
RUTH A. ELMENDORPH.

SMITHVILLE, Texas, Nov. 27, 1892.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—I will now write you a few lines and let you know that I have not forgotten you. I want you to send me the SIGNS as long as you and I live. I am not afraid of its changing from the doctrine it now maintains; for I have now copies of the paper in my house that are nearly forty years old, and it continues the same; so I am willing to risk it the balance of my life. When I am dead my children will know what I have held as the truth. I love it because it is the truth. I may fall behind in my subscription, but sometime during the year I will forward it. I will send you five dollars now.

"For the love of money is the root of all evil; which while some coveted after, they have erred from the faith, and pierced themselves through with many sorrows."—1 Tim. vi. 10.

Without recognizing the vanity of the carnal mind, to which the new creature in Christ Jesus is subjected while sojourning in this world of sin, it is impossible to discern the application of the admonitions and exhortations in the Scriptures addressed to the saints. To the natural mind it is only in being completely conformed to the perfection of righteousness which is in Christ that any sinner has the right to claim to be his disciple. Taking advantage of this plausible error in the understanding of the saints, the wily tempter finds an easy victory over their judgment in his assaults upon their confidence in the hope which they have received. The pattern given in the inspired record, in which the saints are shown to be still beset with the corruptions and infirmities of the flesh, is the strong defense of the tried ones under such temptations; yet even this would be unavailing were it not that the Spirit of Christ which is in them perpetually attests that they are born of God. This divine witness is recorded in the earnest desire for release from sin, which causes them to confess before God their utter vileness, and to hate their own every day life, because of the sin which is manifest in it.

The admonition and instruction of which our text is a part, like all the directions given to the saints in the New Testament, are only the written expression of the law of Christ which is put in the inward parts, and written in the hearts of all the children of Israel under the new covenant of gospel liberty. This marks the distinction between the dispensation of life in Christ Jesus and that bondage which was revealed in the law of sin and death. Nothing is enjoined in the perfect law of Christ but what is most earnestly desired by every one who is led by the Spirit of God. And that Spirit prompts the saint to desire nothing but the complete fulfillment of all that is enjoined in the law and example of the Lord Jesus. They who are thus led to love righteousness are the only people who are troubled on account of their own sinfulness. To no others is the principle of divine holiness revealed.

In the two epistles to Timothy, Paul was moved by the Holy Spirit to present the complete rule for his conduct as a minister of Jesus Christ, in which he was shown the very same principle of love to God which is wrought in every one who has the life of God shed abroad in his heart. That love is the fulfilling of the law of Christ. It is never found in any others but those in whom it is wrought by the power of God. The written word bears witness to the same truth which God has put in the heart of every subject of his enlightenment; therefore it is indisputable evidence that every one is born of God when he is governed by the love of that truth which is written in the revealed Scriptures. It is not by ability to challenge comparison with others in rendering obedience to the law of Moses that the saints are identified. They are the peculiar people who cannot do the good which they earnestly desire to do, and who have constantly to mourn that they do the thing which they would not do. Certainly such helpless characters can have no occasion for glorying in their own works, nor can they exult in their own righteous emotions and desires. They can never attain to being anything more than sinners saved by the infinite grace of God. This is true not only in reference to the manifestation of their eternal salvation in ultimate glory; but also in their preservation in this present evil world. It is still proved in the experience of every disciple of Jesus, as he said to his immediate followers, "Without me ye can do nothing."—John xv. 5. Every subject of divine grace must be taught this lesson by personal experience. However much they may have learned by reading the Scriptures, or by hearing other saints tell of their dependence upon the present support of divine grace, the lesson is entirely new to each of them when the light of divine revelation is displayed shining in his own heart. The awful discovery of the pollution therein hidden would drive the conscious sinner to despair, were it not that the present help of the Captain of his salvation sustains his hope by the testimony of that abiding witness of living faith which is itself the evidence of things not seen. To those who are taught of God the exceeding sinfulness of their own hearts, no mere outward action can satisfy the desire for righteousness which is wrought in them by the Spirit of Christ abiding in them. They continually feel the need of wisdom from above to guide them in the way everlasting. For their exclusive benefit the whole inspired record is given. This should never be forgotten by the saints when reading the Scriptures.

"For the love of money is the root of all evil." However manifestly true may be this declaration as applied to the natural children of Adam, it is not in that unrestricted sense that the apostle was moved by the Holy Spirit to write it in this instruction to Timothy. He was not merely presenting a general treatise of moral philosophy for the reformation of the depraved nature of men. The inspiration of God was directing him in establishing the immutable decisions of the supreme court of the gospel heaven. The law of Christ commands the obedience of every one who loves him; beyond that boundary our Lord has given no commandment to any of the fallen sinners of the family of Adam. When he was here in the likeness of sinful flesh he refused to interpose his authority to enforce the just claim of one who appealed to him for such aid.—Luke xii. 13, 14. It is in our text then not designed that the principle stated should have a general application to the natural world, even though it may doubtless be true of all the race of mankind. In the church of Christ this fearful power of iniquity manifests itself, working in the carnal mind of those who are called to be followers of God. Covetousness is idolatry in the subjects of redeeming grace.—Col. iii. 5. It is not to be confined literally to the avarice which is directed to the accumulation of current coin. Deep down in the darkness of the corrupt heart is discovered the spring of covetousness, from whence arise all the abominations which are found distressing the saints while they sojourn in that enemy's land. The love of money may be considered the most easily detected form in which this sinful lust is developed; and hence it is appropriately used as including all the forms in which covetousness is manifested. It was by this principle of iniquity that the desire was prompted when the request was made that the two disciples might have the places of special honor in the kingdom of Christ. It is the same hateful motive which causes the saints to love the pre-eminence in the estimation of the church. Whether it be in the aspiration for prominence in the public assemblies of the saints, or in the wish to command the highest place in the estimation of the brethren, or in the desire to shine as wonderful lights among the churches, every form of selfishness is covered by the expression as used in our text. In a scriptural sense it is declared that "A feast is made for laughter, and wine maketh merry; but money answereth all."—Eccl. x. 19. In this definition every form of covetousness is included in "the love of money." Evidently those who are captivated by this desire for selfish advantage are not led by the Spirit of Christ, for he not only suffered the loss of all things for the deliverance of his people from just condemnation, but even gave himself for their sins, that he might deliver them from this present evil world, according to the will of God and our Father.—Gal. i. 4. This self-sacrificing and unselfish love is the product of the life of Christ dwelling in those in whom it is developed. No such fellowship of the Spirit can arise from the natural heart of man. As the Captain of our salvation laid down his life for us, so when his Spirit leads us we shall be made to lay down our lives for the brethren.—1 John iii. 16. This holy power of divine life in the saints cannot be reconciled to that carnality which is ever seeking selfish preferment. Whenever the saint is overcome by this covetousness he sows to the flesh, and of the flesh he must reap the miserable crop of corruption. No matter in what form it comes, selfishness is identical with "the love of money" as expressed in our text, and from its poisonous root is developed evil of every form by which the saints are called to suffer while sojourning in the earthly house of this tabernacle. All the works of the flesh grow from this root of desperate iniquity. Only when governed by the pure Spirit of Christ can the saints be free from this vile "love of money."

"Which while some coveted after, they have erred from the faith." It is not necessary to look far in order to find those terrible examples among the saints of God. Such as have never seen the bottomless pit of their own carnal depravity will not be prepared to sympathize with us in confessing that it is not once or twice, but times past numbering, that we have fallen under this bitter condemnation. This deadly error invariably shows that those captivated by it have erred from the faith, not only in loving this world and its false attractions, but in forgetting that "Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning."—James i. 17. While looking unto Jesus, the humble believer can rest in the assurance of his unfailing mercy and truth; then there is no occasion for coveting after the vanities which are estimated by money, or by the treasures which are prized in the transitory world which passeth away. When charmed by these deceitful attractions they deny their trust in the Lord, and thus seek to place their hope in the alluring things of time. For their conversion from such errors they often have to go down to the bottoms of the mountains, and cry out of the belly of hell. But when their soul (self-confidence) has fainted in them they remember the Lord, and their prayer comes in unto him, even into his holy temple. Then they learn, "They that observe lying vanities forsake their own mercy."—Jonah ii. 8.

For the consolation of such as have been brought low under the conviction that they have thus erred from the faith, let it be remembered that none can err from the faith unless they have received the faith. Jonah was a prophet of the Lord before he paid his fare to go to Tarshish. His rebellion was the experience of a subject of salvation not less than his final confession of his dependence upon the mercy of that God from whom he had sought to flee. His covetousness embraced a regard for his own honor as a truthful prophet, and he sought to avoid the loss of reputation which would result from the mercy of the Lord toward the city whose destruction he was commanded to predict. In the sense of our text his motive was "the love of money."

"And pierced themselves through with many sorrows." There certainly can be none but the subjects of redeeming grace who know this result of coveting after worldly treasures. The ungodly are they whose prosperity in the world excited the envy of the psalmist. They are not plagued like other men. Their eyes stand out with fatness, and they have more than heart can wish. But to the afflicted and poor people of God all the allurements which this world can present are but the accumulation of sorrows. Riches make to themselves wings; increasing knowledge increases sorrows; friendship betrays; and even the most reliable brother can only be trusted so far as he is kept by the power of God. Thus, in its most comprehensive sense, the worldly treasure of which money is the embodiment can only prove a piercing thorn to the deceived saint who sets his heart upon its attainment. Often do those thorns of sorrow come home with bitter anguish to the saints who have vainly sought for satisfaction in the pursuit the things which are attractive as money to the natural mind. May the grace of God so rule in the hearts of his saints that they may be kept from this sore piercing with many sorrows!

LENGTHY OBITUARY NOTICES.

WHILE we feel to sympathize with those who are called to part with near and dear relatives and friends in death, yet we must request that in writing obituary notices they will be as brief as possible. A little reflection on this matter will, we think, be sufficient to show how unnecessary are long accounts of the minor incidents in the life of the deceased. Aside from the immediate friends of the subject of the notice they are not of general interest; and those to whom they are of any importance are about all acquainted with the facts without publishing them. A short notice is more likely to receive early insertion in the paper, as our obituary department as a rule is very much crowded; and it frequently occurs that owing to the extreme length of the notices, the publication of some are delayed for two or three numbers.

COMPARISON OF CHRISTIAN AND HEATHEN CIVILIZATIONS.

[THE following lecture was delivered March 10th, 1893, in University Hall, Lebanon, Ohio, before the assembled students and faculty of all the departments of the University, by Elder H. M. Curry, and is published by request of some of our readers who were present.—ED.]

IN casting about for a subject for this occasion I hit upon the one announced to you from the Chair. I have chosen this theme for two or three reasons. In the first place it embodies many facts that are useful to mention; and in the second place, I have an idea in my mind which I can best get out along this line of discussion.

Do not be scared at the word Heathen; that is not such a bad word; it does not mean cannibal; it simply means in this connection those great nations of antiquity that reached the zenith of glory before the advent of Christ, or before it became fashionable to call everything Christian. Neither would I have you to attach undue importance to the word Christian; that does not mean anything now. In this connection it simply means those great warlike nations that have sprung up within the christian era, and profess the Christian religion.

The only medium of comparison between the civilizations of different periods or nations is what the people have thought, said and done. This is exemplified in their language, literature and works of art. There is no higher criterion by which to try the universal greatness of a people than their language. The facilities for the expression of thought are an unerring index to the character of the thought itself. Language was undoubtedly brought to the greatest perfection by the Greeks, several centuries before Christ. No people ever had so beautiful or refined a language, or spoke it with so much purity and grace. The Greek sentence was agitated throughout its length and depth by the stress of expression. The whole paragraph trembled from end to end when the thrill of life awoke in any of its parts. This language with its multitudinous endings all in harmonious accord lay like a beautiful meadow of stately grass swaying and waving in the breezes of thought. The thrill of joy, the message of defiance, the moan of the disconsolate, the palm of battle, the shout of victory, every emotion, every mood that the mind of man in his most vigorous estate is capable of experiencing, swept in rolling billows over the pulsating bosom of this beautiful speech. The Roman or Latin language was less beautiful, perhaps, than the Greek, but in many respects it was one of the most precise, expressive and artistic languages that ever graced the lips or stirred the heart of man. Where language was brought to such matchless perfection, there the very highest type of civilization must have existed.

The literature of a people forms a highway into the very heart of their mental and moral culture, their aesthetic tastes and religious notions, and is an exponent of every element and fact of their civilization. The literature of the Greeks and Romans, as to originality, literary merit, and influence on the world, surpasses that of all the so-called Christian nations; and as to moral elements, it is equal to that of any modern people. When we read the exquisite wit and keen satire of Horace, the stately and highly finished hexameters of Virgil, or the fiery, impetuous effusions of Homer, we are not conscious of the vast flood of years that rolls between us and our author. He identifies himself so closely with our own times that we forget we are reading what a Heathen wrote two thousand years ago. On comparing the Iliad of Homer, and the Æneid of Virgil, the two great Heathen epics, with Dante's Inferno, and Milton's Paradise Lost, the two great Christian epics, is found that the Heathen writers excelled the Christian authors in everything but heathenism itself. Dante's Inferno, as every one knows, embodies all the so-called Christian learning up to the thirteenth century, and is more essentially Heathen in every respect than the works of Virgil from which it is largely borrowed. Milton's Paradise Lost, which has been esteemed by the Protestants nearly as sacred as the Bible itself, bears the stamp of Heathenism upon his forehead. It opens with the customary invocation to the Heavenly Muse, the Heathen goddess of poetry, and then proceeds to turn the angels into soldiers, to make heaven a battlefield and the hatching place and nursery of devils, to put Christ in uniform, and make God a militia general.

Some of the most wonderful literary productions are of the greatest antiquity. While Isaiah was a little lad, roaming the olive-crowned hills of old Judea, receiving instruction in the Jewish law from Israel's Rabbis, Homer was playing in boyish glee under the sunny skies of Greece, finding tongues in trees, books in the running brooks, sermons in stones, and beauty in everything; and as Isaiah the prophet proclaimed to the inhabitants of Jerusalem his heaven-born warnings, denunciations and gospel promises, in all the grandeur, imagery and vigor of Hebrew poetry, Homer was delighting the ear, swelling the heart and moulding the character of aesthetic Greeks by the recital of this impetuous Iliad. Although this poem is of so ancient date, it has never been equaled in the history of literature. It has wielded a broader, more varied and perpetual influence over the human race than all other books ever written. It inspired the heart of the Greek to all that was beautiful in thought, noble in character and patriotic in deed. It incited the ambition of Alexander to conquer the world. It has shaped the literature and refined the tastes of all literary nations, and it rules England today through the statesmanship of Gladstone, and through English rule influences the whole civilized world.

The literature of the ancients was generally of a high order, and their refined and cultured tastes did not furnish a highway for such foolish, trashy, worthless productions as flood the Christian nations. The current modern literature is entitled to any other name than that of Christian. It is a flood of infidelity, a deluge of skepticism, a gulf stream of rubbish, with here and there a volume of truth drifted aside in some out of way eddy. From the standpoint of literature the Heathen nations surpassed the Christian civilization.

In oratory, the noblest, most exalted and sublime accomplishment that ever adorned an individual or blessed a nation, the Heathen Greeks and Romans stand unrivaled. At the head of that magnetic company who have swayed the world by eloquence stands Demosthenes, a Heathen master of diction, fountain of eloquence, king of orators. His oration on the crown is universally and justly acknowledged the most brilliant contest of oratory that the world has ever known. Cicero's orations are still studied as matchless models in diction, logic, eloquence and power. For simplicity, dignity, grandeur, intellectual and moral force, the great Heathen orators of Athens and Rome are altogether without a parallel in the history of eloquence.

In statesmanship the Greeks and Romans have never been surpassed. From their wisdom and experience all Christian nations have drawn instruction. Many of these Heathen statesmen were men of the purest motives, the broadest experience and the profoundest wisdom. The English Constitution and English Law were derived from the Roman codes and Constitution. Blackstone was not a lawgiver, but a commentator on law which had come down from the remotest antiquity. Solon and Lycurgus, so far as is known, were law-makers, and to them the nations are more indebted for common and civil law than to Moses, Israel's law-giver.

The ancient philosophers still hold sway in the world of thought. Aristotle, Socrates and Plato, will never die. In the most eminent seats of modern learning the principles of philosophy laid down by them have never been displaced.

Architecture, the most necessary and useful of all arts, was brought to the greatest perfection by the remote Heathen nations. Before Moses wrote the Pentateuch, or the smoke ascended from Jewish altars, the pyramids, the sphynx, the wonderful temples of Thebes, the walls and palaces of Nineveh, had been built, exemplifying taste and skill in architecture, and a knowledge of mechanics far in advance of anything known at the present day. The marble wilderness of Athens eclipses the world in examples of architectural beauty, symmetry and grace. The Parthenon is universally acknowledged to have been the most perfect specimen of architecture that has ever adorned this earth. It has long been the wonder, admiration and delight of poets, travelers and artists of all nations.

If the history of Greece had never been written, the Parthenon alone would testify to the superior greatness of that people. What a civilization that must have been that found a man to decree, an architect to design, a sculptor to adorn, statuary to execute, workmen to carve, and a people to pay for and maintain such an edifice.

In sculpture and painting the Greeks stand unrivaled. Their models have fixed the standard of taste for all nations. The statues of Palas Athena and Olympian Zeus, executed in ivory and gold by Phidias, for massiveness, expensiveness, majestic expression and every element of grace and beauty, are unsurpassed in the history of art. Painting, in all that is essential or beautiful, was brought to the greatest perfection several centuries before Christ, by Polygustus, Appollodorus, Zeuxis and Parrhasius.

In domestic life the Romans displayed every indication of a superior civilization. Their extravagance in ornaments, dress, sumptuous living and magnificent furniture excelled all modern nations. The palaces of Nero glittered with gold and jewels; perfumes and flowers showered from ivory ceilings. The halls of the nobles were hung with cloth of gold enriched with precious stones. They rode in gilded chariots. They bathed in marble baths. They slept on beds of down upon bedsteads of silver. They dined from gold plate upon tables of Delian bronze and pure gold. They drank from crystal cups. They wore embroidered robes adorned with jewels and precious stones. They decorated their houses with carpets from Babylon, onyx cups from Bithynia, bronzes from Corinth, and statues from Athens. Although this incredible luxury was an evil to society, yet it is an evidence of their matchless civilization.

A tree is known by its fruit. Such beautiful, expressive and adequate language, such acute, refined and sensitive wit, such noble, endearing and marvelous achievements in literature, such pure, true and self-sacrificing patriotism, such unwavering, invincible and incontestible courage, such ardent, devoted and exquisite love of the beautiful, such masterly, skillful and unequalled genius in sculpture, such massive, beautiful and sublime works of architecture, such keen, subtle and exhaustive philosophy, such wise, unselfish and profound statesmanship, such dignified, brilliant and overwhelming oratory, as has been exemplified in the ancient Heathen nations, is the most conclusive evidence of a civilization, in many respects superior to anything known at the present time, or that we can ever hope to see again.

This civilization was evolved without a Bible, without a church, or any of the religious machinery at work in the world to day. This is conclusive evidence against that foolish, traditional, superstitious notion extant that the Bible is the only civilizer, and the only way from barbarism to civilized life is through Bible instruction imparted through the medium of the Christian church.

It may be objected that the Christian civilization surpasses that of the Heathen in morals, virtue and forbearance. The objection is more easily made than sustained. England is a fair example of so-called Christian civilization. She is, perhaps, the greatest commercial and political power in the world at the present time, the greatest literary light of modern nations. Is she a model of Christian virtue? She has extended her dominion over the isles of the sea, in the name of Christianity. She has forced opium upon China and rum upon Africa in the name of gospel missions. She has planted her flag and standing armies in India in the name of the gospel of peace. She has starved Catholic Ireland for centuries in the spirit of Protestantism. England received her laws and Constitution from the Roman empire, her principles of freedom and independence, what little she has, from the ancient German barbarians, her indefatigable tact and perseverance from Anglo-Saxon ancestors, and her bigotry, intolerance and avarice from her religion. England taxes beggary to support royalty, and grinds the face of the poor to support a religious aristocracy. She has wielded the sword in the name of the cross, and lighted the fagots with the tapers from her altars. I do not thus mention England because she is a sinner above all nations, but because she is a fair example of so-called Christian civilization.

The Christian nations have excelled the Heathen nations in the arts of war. They have invented the revolver, the rifle and the bomb-shell. They have expended millions in constructing the most terrible and deadly engines of destruction. They are to-day educating, training and drilling five million men in the arts of wholesale slaughter. The world is covered with forts to protect Christians from other Christians, and the seas are covered with iron monsters, built and engineered by Christians, to blow Christian brains out. Every Christian nation is groaning under a vast debt incurred in waging war with other Christian nations, or in evangelizing Heathens with sword and ball.

The religion of the Heathen was milder, more humane and tolerant than that of the Christian nations.

It is true the Heathens sometimes offered human sacrifice; but that was mild indeed when compared with the Inquisition of Catholicism and the persecutions of Protestantism. The victims for Heathen sacrifice were generally selected from the prisoners of war, while the martyrs of the Christian nations were the most earnest, devoted, liberty-loving characters among them. The Heathen nations have sacrificed their thousands, but the Christian nations have martyred their tens of thousands.

The greatest enemy that modern civilization has had to contend with is nominal Christianity. From the time it was taken out of the slums and placed upon the throne by the wickedest emperor Rome ever had, until the present time, it has tried by every contrivance to rule the world. It has proved to be the most grievous tax a nation has ever been burdened with; a tax not only upon the purse, but upon every energy of a nation; a tax too often levied upon the conscience and exacted in blood. When the spirit of freedom and progress refuses to acknowledge its authority, it cunningly adapts itself to every whim and caprice of society, and is ready to write its name upon every enterprise.

The accepted religion of the Christian nations is eclectic. Its philosophy is the old Greek anthropology, which was introduced into the catechetical school of Alexandria in the third century, and which has formed the basis of all theological seminary instruction ever since. The two principal church festivals of both Catholic and Protestant communions (I speak of Christmas and Easter Sunday), were both derived directly from the ancient Heathen nations of northern Europe; and the modern Santaklaus imposed upon the credulity of the Sunday School infants is a hobgoblin from the same source. A specially educated and salaried priesthood is an institution of the ancient Egyptians, older than Moses himself, and has been perpetuated through the intervening Heathen nations, and finally incorporated into the eclectic system of nominal Christianity. I would not have you think for one moment that I would deride in the least true Christianity. This I could not do; but I desire to state most emphatically that true Christianity is not national. It was never intended to be so. Christianity is not a former of states. That religion that seeks to ally itself with every species of worldly power, to monopolize all our educational institutions, and to manufacture all public opinion, is not the religion of Christ.

The careful analysis of the two civilizations, called Christian and Heathen, shows that the same elements enter into both, and the same facts are attendant upon both, and so far as their nature is concerned they are essentially the same. There does not exist that fundamental, basal distinction that would warrant upon a scientific basis the classification that the qualifying words Christian and Heathen would imply. Civilization is in no way essentially dependent upon Christianity or the Bible. It is through the perversion of these institutions to that end that the name of Christianity and the Bible have been prostituted, and modern morals corrupted, and civilization cursed. In this is exemplified the truth of the proverb that "The perversion of the best things often leads to the worst." The present civilization bears more of the marks of Athens than Jerusalem, of the Greek Academic than the church, of Plato than of Christ.

EDITORIAL NOTICES.

IT IS VERY IMPORTANT

That great care should be taken in sending a renewal of subscriptions to give us the same name as the one to whom the paper is already coming. If the party is married be sure the initials are given correctly; for if the paper is coming in the wife's name and the husband writes us to send the paper the next year, and signs his own name, we have no means of knowing that the person to whom the paper is going is his wife; and not finding his name on our list he is entered as a new subscriber and the paper sent to both; or if the paper is going in the husband's name and the renewal sent on in the wife's name, the result will be the same. The best way is to inclose in your letter one of the little pink slips containing the name pasted either on the margin of the paper or on the wrapper in which it comes.

READ CAREFULLY.

WHEN two or more new subscribers are sent at the same time, in accordance with terms given in Supplement, and one is in compliance with the second paragraph and former part of the fourth, and the others on terms given in third paragraph, it is very essential to state which name is sent according to terms of second and fourth paragraphs, as that name is credited to the end of 1893, while the others are credited one year from the time their subscription begins.

PLEASE STOP MY PAPER.

At least nine out of every ten writing us to discontinue their paper add that it is not on account of their objection to anything the paper contains, but that they are not financially able to continue it. OBITUARY NOTICES.

Mr. P. C. Cockerham was born April 20th, 1825, and died of dropsy at his residence in Surry Co., N. C., on March 9th, 1893, aged 68 years, 11 months and 19 days.

He had never made any profession of religion, but left evidences of his acceptance with God. He was a very warm friend to the poor, unworthy writer. He sent for me twice during his sickness to come and hold divine services at his house; and I went, and tried to join with him in divine worship. I conversed with him freely on the subject of religion, and he gave me evidence that Jesus was with him. He seemed to greatly enjoy my conversation on religion.

I was sent for on the evening after his death, and on the 10th of March, 1893, I tried to speak words of comfort at his grave to the bereaved widow and children. May God comfort them in their great loss, is the prayer of one who loves them.

WM. R. WELBORN.

STATE ROAD, N. C., March 13, 1893.

SISTER Hannah Street departed this life March 4th, 1893. Although I am not in possession of all the particulars in regard to the time and by whom she was baptized, yet I believe she was baptized by Elder Eli Scott, which was in early life. She died in her 77th year. She united with the church at Harford, and continued all these years in fellowship with that church, of which there are but three remaining of that generation of membership. She was pretty generally known among the Baptists of this country. She was regular in her attendance at her meetings, and decided in her views of the only ground of hope and justification for poor sinners through Christ. Through most of her life she was exposed to many hardships and privations, but patient in endurance, looking onward to the end of faith, even the salvation of God. Without any disease, I believe, but the burden of infirmities and age, she sank under the weight, with a degree of calmness and resignation, and fell asleep. She was a daughter of the late Shadrach Street. Of a large family of children I believe there are but two left. They are also daughters. She was gathered unto her people in the Harford cemetery on March 6th, with some remarks by the writer.

May we all be prepared for that important change.

WM. GRAFTON.

FOREST HILL, Md.

SISTER Ann Horr died Oct. 16th, 1892. Her disease was dropsical consumption. Her last sickness was of about six weeks' duration. Her trust in Christ, her dear Savior, was unwavering to the end. She was baptized in the fellowship of the Old School Baptist Church of Fairfield in March, if I remember rightly, in the year 1874, by the writer of this article. A few years after she united with the church she moved into the northern part of the state of Michigan (Missaukee County), among her brothers according to the flesh, also a daughter, with whom she lived a portion of the time. She died at her brother's, Winter Carpenter, where she was taken away soon after she was taken sick. She was a great sufferer, but bore it with patience and christian fortitude. She was always ready to talk of and concerning the things of the kingdom of her heavenly Master. I can but believe that she will be raised up and come forth from the grave in the likeness of our dear Lord and Savior Jesus Christ in the resurrection. The place where she is buried is the one of her own choosing. The last night of her life in this world she told her brother, when he asked her if she wanted any supper, that she could not eat. A few moments later he went into her sick room and said, "Anny, can't you eat a little supper with us to-night?" She said, "No; I am going to eat supper with my dear Savior to-night." She chose for her text the language of Job, "For I know that my Redeemer liveth." Her funeral was preached by Elder Right.

THOMAS J. WYMAN.

OUR beloved brother, Morgan H. Stewart, one of our new subscribers to the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, met with a sad accident which terminated in his death. He was riding on horseback, and was thrown off, falling on his hands, breaking both arms at the wrist. This was on Wednesday, Feb. 21st, and he died the next Monday morning, Feb. 27th.

He was born June 12th, 1850, and joined our little church on the Saturday before he was hurt. Our pastor, Elder James H. Ring, was absent, and he was to be baptized at our next meeting; but God saw fit to remove him from the church militant to the church triumphant so soon. May the blessings of God rest upon his bereaved parents, brothers and sisters while passing under the rod of affliction, together with the church, neighbors and friends. We sorrow not as those who have no hope, for we believe that our loss is his eternal gain. He often spoke of the reason of his hope in Christ. He believed in the doctrine of salvation by grace alone, which lays the sinner low, and exalts the power and glory of the crucified and risen Savior, who bore our sins in his own body, and put them away by the sacrifice of himself, nailing them to his cross; and he arose again for our justification.

The funeral services were held at the house by Elder James H. Ring and brother J. Chapman, to the comfort of the bereaved family and friends; after which the remains were laid in the Cheney cemetery to await the resurrection morn.

JOSEPH BRUCE.

CHENEY, Neb., March 8, 1893.

John G. Steers was born Oct. 26th, 1834, was married to Miss Mary A. Travis Nov. 21st, 1855, joined the Bethel Indian Grove Church of Regular Baptists, situated in Livingston Co., Ill., in February, 1861, together with his wife, and was baptized in June following. He died March 6th, 1893.

Brother Steers' disease was complicated, and very severe and trying, which he bore many months with as much patience as is given to mortals. At last the long looked-for and desired rest came, and as he lay in his casket he looked calm and natural. He will be remembered by a great many Baptists, as I reckon he has fed as many as any one of his age. The preaching brethren will remember his liberality, for he stood in the front ranks of it all. It seemed natural for him to lead, not in worldly things only, but in spiritual. Ever since Elder John Darnel moved to Oregon brother Steers has been looked to by the church for counsel, for procuring preaching, taking care of the preachers, and everything else pertaining to the church matters. But he is gone, his race is run, and we are left behind; yet we sorrow not as those who have no hope, for we know that our loss is his gain.

His funeral was attended by many friends and neighbors, and a short discourse was delivered by the writer from the words, "If a man die, shall he live again?" After which the remains were quietly buried, to await the great resurrection, when we trust that we shall meet again in the likeness of the blessed Redeemer. Sister Steers and family have the deepest sympathy of all.

W. A. THOMPSON.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill.

SISTER Mary Jane Faulk was born in Randolph Co., Ala., April 10th, 1837. Her maiden name was Mary Jane Bowden. She moved with her mother to Pike Co., Ala., and there was married to P. M. Faulk, Jan. 3d, 1855. She was the mother of ten children, seven sons and three daughters, of whom five sons and two daughters survive. In 1863 she joined the Primitive Baptist Church at Pleasant Hill, Pike Co., Ala., and was baptized by Elder R. F. Missetine. Afterward moving to a different part of the county, she placed her membership with the Canaan Church, where she remained until 1874, when she moved with her husband and family to Wood Co., Texas, and cast her lot with the Primitive Baptists of that country, being a member of the Paran Church, Wood Co., Texas, at the time of her death, which took place at her home Jan. 24th, 1893, after a few days' severe suffering with "La Grippe."

Sister Faulk was a true believer in salvation by grace. She was possessed of that meek and quiet spirit that is such a beautiful trait in the Lord's people. She was a devoted wife and a kind mother. She was always true to attend her church meetings. She left evidence behind that all is well with her, which is a great joy to those left to mourn. We feel that our loss is her eternal gain. May the God of all grace comfort our dear brother, her husband, and bereaved children with that comfort which can come alone from him.

"Why should we mourn departing friends,
Or shake at death's alarms?
'Tis but the voice that Jesus sends
To call them to his arms."

"Are we not tending upward too,
As fast as time can move?
Nor would we wish the hours more slow
To keep us from his arms."

H. B. JONES.

HORACE, Texas, March 10, 1893.

Richard Ira Shaddock died at his home near Hallville, Harrison Co., Texas, on Feb. 9th, 1893, of cancer on his head and face, aged 63 years, 5 months and 15 days.

He was born Sept. 22d, 1829, in the state of Alabama, and remained there until 1842, when our parents, Benjamin and Martha Shaddock, moved to Winston Co., Miss. About the year 1850 my brother went to Lake Village, Chicot Co., Ark., and lived with Mr. Wm. Broner, to learn his trade. He was married to Miss Fannie Koon on Dec. 24th, 1865, who is left to mourn the loss of a kind and affectionate husband. He was a highly esteemed citizen and neighbor. May the Lord strengthen and comfort the widow in her bereavement. She did all that could be done by a mortal to alleviate his sufferings, watching over him night and day. She was the most attentive nurse I ever saw.

Brother Richard did not belong to any church organization, but gave evidence that he was a child of God. He was anxious to depart, saying that all preparations were made for him; that God worked all things right; that that was his hope. He talked a great deal about the church, and how they should bear each other's burdens. The Bible, the SIGNS OF THE TIMES and the church were his theme. The editorial in the SIGNS of February first, present year, caused him great joy. He said it certainly was the best he ever heard. On the 10th of February he was laid in the grave at Noon-day burying-ground.

He leaves his companion, one brother and three sisters to mourn their loss of a good and faithful companion and brother. We feel assured that our loss is his eternal gain. May the Lord direct, comfort and give us grace in our trials here below, is the prayer of the writer.

HIS BROTHER.

LONGVIEW, Texas, March 4, 1893.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—It is with a sad and heavy heart that I have to record the death of my dear wife, who departed this life on the evening of March 9th, 1893, at eight o'clock, from the hardening and contracting of the muscles of the valves of the heart; but it is a great comfort to hope and believe, from the evidence she left behind, that she has passed from this life to one of immortal glory. Although her family were Methodists, and her father a preacher, she never united with them nor any others, but was a great admirer of their doctrine until about twelve years ago, when she began to find fault with their and other preaching, saying they did not preach as they used to, and quit going to their meetings entirely, but went with me whenever she was able, not seeming to realize that the change was in herself. Since then she has continued to grow stronger in the doctrine of salvation by grace alone, and the great necessity of being born again, not of the will of the flesh, but of God. After this change she became more calm and quiet in her expressions, and very reserved about herself; but she frequently expressed her high estimate of the church of Jesus Christ, and her unfitness to be numbered with them. She held our ministering brethren in high esteem, particularly Elders Grafton and Francis. The former, I believe, she loved for the truth's sake, and always seemed disappointed if he did not come once a month. For more than a year she had often spoken to me of her departure, and expressed a desire to be rid of this mortality. She declared her firm belief that with this life ends all knowledge of humanity, and in the eternal world we will only be known as spiritual, and our employ will be to sing songs of everlasting praise to him that sitteth upon the throne.

MILTON DANCE.

It will be seen by the reader that brother Dance has written the above, leaving the article in my hands, with a wish that I would close it up as I thought best. From my long continued acquaintance with her I can cheerfully indorse all that has been said, and more, would it not swell this notice to too great a length. Her loss is very sensibly felt, especially by brother Dance. A daughter and son-in-law and granddaughter comprise the family left, who mourn their loss. I have just returned from the funeral, March 12th, 1893. Interment at Harford. The Lord be merciful to the sorrowful family.

WM. GRAFTON.

FOREST HILL, Md.

DIED—Dec. 3d, 1892, at his father's home near Berlin, Worcester Co., Md., Albert W. Warren, youngest son of brother and sister John S. Warren, aged 19 years, 10 months and 10 days.

His disease was typhoid fever, from which he suffered intensely for nearly four weeks. Albert was the "baby," and was petted a great deal, and, as the case generally is, was spoiled some; but in his sickness, his sister said, he was as humble as a little child. Awhile before he died he said to his father, "I cannot live long unless I get better," which nearly broke his father's heart. While in health Albert was wild, it was said that truthfulness was one of his characteristics.

How strange to us seems the providence of God in taking the youngest and leaving the oldest. None can stay his hand. Well might the prophet say that as high as the heavens are above the earth, so are God's ways and thoughts above ours; leaving the old, fading flowers, and cutting down those that are just beginning to bloom. But we would remember that he is only disposing of his own, and because it seems good in his sight. We pray that God may be so kind as to fill with his presence all the vacancy that he has made about the farm, the house, at the table, and around the fire, and above all in the heart of each member of the family. Taking one out of four leaves a large space indeed. This stroke has fallen heavily upon the dear parents and sister, as that was the home family at the time. I would to God that all could believe it was the right time for him to go, as the Lord doeth all things well. May the dear friends remember that all was done for him that love and skill could do, and may this quiet their hearts.

It was so ordered that Elder Frank McGlade was with me at that time, and by my request preached a memorable discourse from the words, "Come and see where the Lord lay;" after which the remains were laid away near the Indian-town meeting-house, to rest from all pain, sorrow and toil, until the Archangel's voice shall call the dead to life; and may it be his and our lot to have part in the first resurrection. We would assure the sorrowing ones, the father, mother, one sister and three brothers, of our heartfelt sympathy.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date. This date denotes the time at which your subscription expires; and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

THE WORD OF FAITH.

THIS is the word of faith,
The Spirit by the apostle saith:
Think not to thee 'tis given
To mount to heaven.
Thou hast not wings to fly,
Nor powers to stretch so high,
To bring Christ from above,
With strong delivering love.
We gravitate to earth
By nature and by birth,
Although a spark within us
From dust and death would win us.
And hence we moan and sigh,
And pant for God most high;
And were he not most low
To him we could not go.
And were he not most near,
To quell our guilt and fear;
As Brother, Friend and Neighbor,
To help us in our labor;
To heal and soothe and bless,
And comfort our distress;
To afford us extrication
From desperate situation—
From mire in which we sink,
Not pleasures, as we think;
To give us songs for sighing,
Breathe life into the dying—
Life glorious and abundant,
Enriched with joys redundant.

Cease then, my soul, thy going,
Thy striving, climbing, doing,
And turn to Christ within thee,
Who stoops so low to win thee;
And give him for his part
And portion all thy heart.
Him thus within possessing,
And with thy mouth confessing,
Blest and secure forever,
Thy life shall perish never.

JOHANNES.

ACROSTIC.

HAST thou faith to believe in this blest book of truth?
O! was it thy guide, thy companion in youth?
Lov'st thou its teachings, its promises rare?
Yearnest thou still its comforts to share?
Believest thou truly redemption's vast plan,
In Jesus' great love for poor, sinful man,
By giving his life a ransom for all,
Lost sheep of the flock, whom the Father doth call?
Esteemest thou lightly the treasures of earth?
And desirest thy heart those of heavenly worth?
Blessings await thee if thou dost endure;
O strive that thy calling and election be sure.
Of his strength mayest thou daily, yea, hourly receive,
Knowing that only in him thou canst live;
Denying thyself, and bearing the cross;
In winning of Christ, count all things but loss.
Vanity, pomp, earthly folly and pride,
If thou followest Jesus, must all be denied.
Not the riches of earth, but the kingdom of heaven,
Earnestly seek, and all else will be given.

CORRESPONDENCE.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, Ind., Jan. 18, 1893.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN IN CHRIST:—The inclosed letter may be helpful to some of your many readers; therefore I submit it to you. It was written to my only daughter many years ago, as the date shows, on the subject of the church and its ordinance of baptism, with its qualifying prerequisites, repentance and faith. Only yesterday I found it amongst other old letters; and having read it, I find that it expresses my belief now as truly as it did twenty-two years ago, and, doubtless, your belief, and that of our large brotherhood. So, brethren, it is a consolation to me that the Lord has kept me unshaken in the faith of the Son of God, now nearly forty years. For now, as in all the past, my faith is, that as God brought again from the dead the Lord Jesus, through the blood of the everlasting covenant, so he will also quicken together with Christ all his covenant people, for whom Christ died; not by might, nor power of either angels or men, but by his Spirit of life.

As brethren have desired to hear from me through the SIGNS, and I could send nothing more edifying at present than this letter, I trust you will publish it, and I may be permitted to write again. To all I send brotherly greetings in Christ Jesus.

D. BARTLEY.

JUNE 15, 1871.

MY DEAR DAUGHTER:—This is your birthday, and on this your eighteenth birthday I will write you a letter, which is written out of a father's love and solicitude for you, and for your higher and spiritual welfare. I mean this to be a religious letter, because you have professed to be concerned on the subject of religion; and I prefer to write to you on the subject, for the reason that in this way I can more connected-ly say what I wish, and you can more carefully examine it. And I hope you will give it a careful and serious examination, in the light of the Scriptures; for it is for your good alone that I write. The salvation of my dear children concerns me more deeply than anything else in this world; and if I could have the blest assurance that they shall all be saved in the Lord with an everlasting salvation, I could then with submission, comfort and hope give them up in death, and depart myself in peace and joy. But, as it is, I feel the deepest anxiety and solicitude about my children; and yet I very well know that their salvation is of the Lord, and not of man. Therefore to him alone I must look, and upon him call, to save them from the pit of destruction.

And O may he in mercy grant my humble, fervent prayer. While you remained with the Methodists, it was not my intention to say anything to you on the subject (since you had already joined them), unless you introduced it; but now, having been told that you have severed your connection with the Methodists, and that there is a talk that you will join another order (the New Lights), I feel that as you are my child, and young in experiences, a solemn duty rests upon me to try to instruct and advise you for your own good, whether you ask and receive it or not. Children, and especially young children, who are under age, should ask the advice and consent of their parents in every thing, and particularly if it be something important and serious. But alas! how often it is that children are willful, disrespectful and disobedient. But with such a course God is not well pleased.
His own beloved Son learned obedience, and said, "But that the world may know that I love the Father, and as the Father gave me commandment, even so I do."—John xiv. 31.

And now, Mary, in reference to spiritual and divine things, I ask no more of you than is contained in these excellent words of the dear Son of God, "as the Father gave me commandment, even so I do." I ask only that you obey God. First, then, this is the obedience of a child of God, the obedience of love, and no others can possibly perform it.
The Lord says, "If ye love me, keep my commandments." We must first love him before we can keep his commandments, and then we can show our love to him only by keeping his commandments. "Every one that loveth is born of God, and knoweth God." Therefore, except we have been born again, born of God, we do not truly love him, and cannot see his kingdom. His children only are the subjects and heirs of his kingdom; for he has promised his kingdom to them that love him, or to his children, and chosen them rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom.—James ii.
5. Therefore all the laws, or commandments, ordinances and privileges of the kingdom of God belong exclusively to his children, and no others have any right to them; neither can they obey nor enjoy them, because they are not born of him, and do not love him. And all the commandments, ordinances and blessings of God's kingdom are placed within the kingdom itself, and belong to it, and so none but "the children of the kingdom," the heaven-born heirs, have any right to them. Nowhere in the Scriptures is the kingdom or church of God, and the things concerning and pertaining to it, promised to any others. I wish you to well consider and remember this fact, for it is of the first importance, and overlooked by thousands of religionists, and also utterly ignored and disregarded.

And now, in the second place, this obedience of the children of God is confined to and measured by his authority; for it is simply the keeping of his commandments; and anything more or less than this is open disloyalty and disobedience to Zion's King, and cannot be justified or excused upon any pretext, however plausible it may seem. I want you to bear this in mind in all that you do religiously, throughout your life.
Here the Lord alone has the prerogative and right to speak and command, and it is ours to hearken and obey.
And if we are his children, and love him, we will thus desire and endeavor to honor him, in the childlike and unquestioning obedience of love. But if we are not his children, then we will choose to go in our own ways and observe the doctrines and commandments of men, and so dishonor God by our own blind and willful disobedience. And as the fruit of our doings, we shall in the end lie down in sorrow. The religious world is full of just such religionists, who are teaching and observing the commandments of men, without any authority in the word of God. But O! a righteous and fearful retribution awaits them; for God is the judge and just avenger of all such, and they shall not escape his judgment and condemnation. O let not my daughter be found among those! For the Lord says, "If any man shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book." But, again, he says, "Blessed are they that do his commandments."—Rev.
xxii. "It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God."
"For our God is a consuming fire."
Then, if we love and fear him, we should learn of him, and observe his word. Jesus, the risen and glorious

King of Zion, who reigns in righteousness, gave his servants, the apostles, the authority and charge to teach the subjects of his kingdom, or baptized believers, to observe all things whatsoever he had commanded them.—Matt. xxviii. 20; Mark xvi. 16. Therefore, if we believe in and love him, we should be very careful to see that he has commanded us to observe the things which we do, and to avoid doing anything which has not his authority or command. And we should strictly apply this divine rule to every religious organization, doctrine and practice, and see if it has this righteous sanction—the command of Christ; and if it has not, then we are guilty if we give it our support. And now, before you join any other so-called church, I want you (and it is your duty) to examine and be sure that, in faith and practice, such religious body has the command and authority of Christ for its doctrine and order. Try it by the New Testament. And if it has not the warrant of a divine command, or is not supported by a plain “Thus saith the Lord,” then, if you have any respect and love for Christ, and any regard for his honor, you should withdraw from it, or let it alone. I say this to you upon the authority of Christ himself, and for your own good. And just here let me ask, Where has the Lord Jesus Christ commanded his people to observe such a religious institution as a Sunday School? In vain you may look for the least shadow of authority for it in his word; it is one of the many commandments of men, and has no higher authority to support it. Therefore it is wrong, because it is unscriptural. If you love the Lord, you should and will observe only what he has commanded; for if you love him, you will also love his doctrine, or what he has taught, and walk in the truth, as it is in Jesus; and therefore you will love his people, who love and walk in the truth. You may think that to join some church, so-called, will do, no difference what one, so it suits you; but let me assure you that according to the Scriptures, Christ has but one church or kingdom, visible on earth; and if you would love, honor and obey him, you must belong to it; and this because, as I have shown, his ordinances and commandments are given to his kingdom or church, and can be observed and obeyed only in it. They cannot possibly be obeyed outside of Christ’s church, no more than the laws and institutions of this state could be fulfilled in any foreign state. Therefore immersion, even though it be of a true believer, if it be administered outside of the true gospel church, or kingdom of God, is not baptism; for baptism is a gospel ordinance, belongs to the gospel kingdom, and can be administered only in it. And hence there must be a gospel administrator (or ordained minister of the gospel church), as well as a gospel subject, and a true believer in Christ. The gospel kingdom, the church of Christ, is composed exclusively of gospel subjects, believers in Christ, children of God, who have been received upon the evidence of repentance of sin and faith in Christ, and buried in baptism, in the likeness of Christ’s death. The Old School Baptist church is just such a church as this; for in it Christ is “all in all,” and believers only are received; but I know of no other such church. Yet I do not ask you to join the Old Baptist church, nor would I have you to, unless you love God and his doctrine and people. For his doctrine is, “salvation is of the Lord,” “by grace,” “not of works.” And no other people besides the Old Baptists hold, preach and believe this doctrine, and carry it out in practice. Neither does any other church faithfully and truly hold and practice believer’s baptism by immersion. And yet there is no authority in the New Testament of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ for the baptism of any other, only a true believer in him. Look, and see. “The beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God,” was with John the Baptist, who preached the baptism of repentance, and baptized only those who confessed their sins, and believed on him that should come after him, that is, on Christ.—Mark i. 1–5; Acts xix. 4. But he rejected all others and would not baptize them.—Luke iii. 7, 8. And this doctrine and order has ever since been faithfully observed and carried out in the Redeemer’s kingdom. In the great commission of the Lord and Master to his servants to go and preach the gospel, faith stands before baptism, and qualifies for it; and therefore without gospel faith, faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, no one can receive and fulfill gospel baptism. And it is the imperative duty of the gospel church and minister to first know that the candidate for baptism is a gospel subject, a true believer in Christ, before this ordinance is administered. So, on the day of Pentecost, when the gospel church was first organized, those only who heard and were pricked in their hearts, and gladly received the word of truth, were baptized.—Acts ii. And afterwards, none but believers were added to the Lord and to the church.—Acts ii. 47; v. 14. When Philip, the evangelist, went down to Samaria and preached Christ unto them, they first believed the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ, and were then baptized, both men and women.—Acts viii. 12. And when Philip preached Jesus unto the Ethiopian, and he said, “See, here is water, what doth hinder me to be baptized?” Philip said, “If thou believest with all thine heart, thou mayest.”—Acts viii. 35–39. And still later, when the gospel kingdom was established among the Gentiles, and the great apostle Paul preached Christ crucified in the city of Corinth, and was determined to know nothing else among them (1 Cor. ii. 2), “many of the Corinthians hearing, believed and were baptized.”—Acts xviii. 8. Now in all this inspired record of the one only true gospel church, we find that this entire kingdom of God, the whole body of the church, is composed exclusively of baptized believers in the Lord; and so it is called “the household of faith” (Gal. vi. 10), and “the household of God.”—Eph. ii. 19. The Messiah’s kingdom, then, consists alone of the children of God, believers in Jesus, and belongs exclusively to them as we have seen. And they are manifested and known to be the children of God, by faith in Christ Jesus.—Gal. iii. 26; John i. 12, 13. A believer in Jesus is one who has confidence in him as the only and all-sufficient Savior, and who, from a sense of need as a lost and helpless sinner, trusts in him alone for salvation. If you are thus convinced, then you are a believer, a child of God, an heir of his kingdom, and a fit subject for the first ordinance in the kingdom, baptism. And now, if this is your true condition and character, where will you go to receive baptism? Remember, baptism is Christ’s ordinance, an ordinance of the church of Christ; and if you would walk in his footsteps, follow and obey him, you must go to his church, or visible kingdom, in which he reigns, and there submit yourself to his authority in his church, give to the church the satisfactory evidence of your faith in him, and then be baptized in the fellowship of the church of Christ; for nowhere else and in no other way can you obey the command and fulfill the ordinance of Christ. If you go to some false church, and receive immersion at their hands, it is without Christ’s authority, and is a solemn fraud practiced upon you; and you would still be unbaptized, and outside of Christ’s visible kingdom, and not under his yoke. If he has given you rest, then he commands you to take his yoke upon you and learn of him.—Matthew xi. 27–30. The only concern I feel for you, dear daughter, is that you should do this, if you indeed love the Savior, and believe on and trust in him. But if you do not, then you have no business to make a profession of religion at all. You should be very careful and serious about this, for it is a solemn thing, and God is not mocked. The holy Son of God said, “God is a Spirit; and they that worship him must worship in spirit and in truth.” But the world is full of false religion; and there are many false churches, too; but the Lord Jesus says of those, “In vain do they worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men.” How truthfully this portrays and describes the popular, worldly religion and its teachers. Do you wish to be identified with those vain worshipers, and sit under such false teachers? Or would you not choose rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, and esteem the reproach of Christ greater riches than the friendship of the world? The Lord Jesus is himself “the way, the truth and the life; and no one cometh unto the Father but by him.” “There is salvation in no other.” And sinners must realize and know this experimentally, in the work of salvation, which is not the sinner’s, but the Lord’s work; and when any one is taught this in the heart, by the Spirit, such a one will no more trust in man or his works, but alone in the Lord and his work. As I have shown, God’s household of faith is composed and made up of just such redeemed, quickened and believing sinners, who believe on the Lord and trust alone in him. Now, this pattern which I have given of the one true gospel church, is the divine and heavenly pattern, as given in the Scriptures, as I have plainly shown therein. This church is not many, it is but one. Jesus said, “Upon this rock I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it.” Therefore, according to this word and promise of his, it has not been destroyed, but still exists and stands unmoved upon this rock, Christ Jesus. And now, wherever this church of Christ is, it must and will be found to correspond, in its membership, ordinances, doctrine and order, with this scriptural pattern and divine model; otherwise it would not be the true gospel church, or the Redeemer’s visible kingdom, which was set up by the God of heaven in the city of Jerusalem on the day of Pentecost, as foretold by the prophet Daniel, ii. 44. But if we say there is now no such church as this, corresponding and agreeing with it, then the gates of hell have prevailed against it, and the word of the Lord is broken. But we spurn such an impious thought and confidently look to find the church of Jesus standing invulnerable upon the Rock of ages as it always has stood, contending earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints, and keeping the ordinances of the gospel as the Lord Jesus and his apostles delivered them, by administering them to but penitent sinners, and believers in Jesus. Such a church is the Old Baptist church. It truly corresponds with the first church in Jerusalem. Compare and see. And then compare every other church, both in doctrine and practice. Can you find one, a single one, out of the many, that preaches Christ and him crucified alone, as a full, complete and all-sufficient Savior of poor, lost and helpless sinners, and a finished redemption and salvation through the shed blood, death and resurrection of Christ, by grace, without works? Where is the one that teaches and believes that the Son of God has all power in heaven and earth, and power over all flesh, that he should give eternal life to as many as the Father has given him (John xvii. 2), and that all that the Father giveth him shall come to him, and he will lose none of them, but raise them up again at the last day?—John vi. 37-40. Not one of the many so-called churches preaches and believes this doctrine of Christ; but on the contrary, both in word and works they deny it. And yet, this is the doctrine of God our Savior, and, therefore the doctrine taught and held by his church. I need not add that it is the doctrine preached, believed and rejoiced in by the Old Baptist church, for this is well known by all. And now, compare those so-called churches in their religious practice, with the church which Christ Jesus has built. Do they receive and baptize believers only, upon the confession of their sins, and the evidence of their faith in the Lord Jesus? So far from it, many of them sprinkle their children and others, making no pretensions that they have been born again; and yet they take them into the pales of their churches; while all of them hold meetings, and protract them for the avowed purpose of getting up a revival, and of getting all into their churches that they possibly can, whether regenerate or not; for they do not require of them the scriptural evidence that they have been born again. And thus those of them who practice immersion, do grossly abuse and pervert this solemn ordinance, by immersing many unbelievers, who have neither died unto sin, nor been made alive unto God through Christ. The result is, their churches are mere worldly organizations; and if there are any true believers in Christ among them (which I do not deny), they are unequally yoked together with unbelievers. But the children of God are forbidden to be thus unequally yoked, and are commanded to come out from among all such, and be separate.—2 Cor. vi. 14-18. Will you do this, and obey the Lord? Now there is still another objection to the so-called New Light church which I feel to be my duty to point out to you. They as a denomination deny the divinity or Godhead of our Lord Jesus Christ, and so reduce him to the rank of a mere good man or creature. And yet they immerse in his name! What is this but idolatry, if he is not God? For baptism is a solemn act of religious worship; and worship offered to any other being than God is idolatry. Hence I shudder at the thought of my dear child being immersed by them. And besides, they also receive those who have only been sprinkled, which is another awful perversion of the ordinance of baptism and violation of the command of Christ; for the believer is "Buried with him in baptism," where-in also he is risen with him."—Col. ii. 12.

And now, dear Mary, while I do not ask you to join the Old Baptist church, the only visible gospel church, unless you do truly love this household of faith, and the doctrine of Christ, yet I must faithfully tell you once more that immersion outside of the gospel church or kingdom is not gospel baptism—is not obedience to Christ. If you love the Lord, keep his commandments. Affectionately your father,

D. BARTLEY.

BLANCO, Texas, Feb., 1893.

BRETHREN BEEBE:—I see in your issue of Feb. 1st a sermon by J. Battersby, of London, England, on the parable of the leaven. I have frequently been requested to give my views on the same subject; but knowing that our brethren differ in their views as to that parable, and believing that when that is the case brethren should be well assured of the correctness of their own views before offering them, I have so far withheld my own, any farther than to merely allude to the parable in a few instances; but as the subject has been brought before your readers, I have concluded (with your consent) to offer such views, in part at least, as I have upon that parable. I do not wish nor expect that what I may say on the subject will be received, any farther than it is in harmony with the inspired word of God. With due deference to all who may differ with me I shall proceed, and in the first place allude to some seeming inaccuracies of Mr. Battersby. In all he says about parables, both as to their aptitude in illustrating important truths, and their literal meaning or definition, I fully agree with him; and nearly all he says in his explanations is, I think, correct; but it seems that some of his teaching, though very instructive, is irrelevant as to this parable. His seeming errors consist mainly in his applications. I also agree with him in his exposition of the kingdom of God. I also believe that the kingdom of heaven in the parable refers to the kingdom of grace, or the presence of the Spirit in the Lord's believing children. "Behold, the kingdom of God is within you."—Luke xvii. 21.

I fail to see how the treasure hid in the field was first hid in Christ, and by the fall or sin of Adam was hid in the field, or world; for if the treasure had a standing in Adam before the fall, it was certainly lost, as being involved in the transgression; and this view of it seems plainly implied in the language of Mr. Battersby; for he says, "The treasure was first hid in Christ, the covenant head of the church, and by the fall it was hid in the world, and found again by the man Christ Jesus." But it seems plain to my mind that it being the spiritual, eternal or immortal life that was given the church or elect in Christ, it did not fall, or was lost, in Adam. But as the natural life of the elect was given them in Adam, they sinned and fell in him; and therefore it is God's elect among the fallen race of man that answers to the treasure hid in the field, as their eternal life never was in Adam to fall. This view of it seems in exact accord with the whole tenor of Bible teaching on the subject; also with what Mr. B. says about the goodly pearls for which Christ shed his blood, and about their being fished up from time to time.

As to what Mr. B. says about leaven being used in a bad sense only, and being of a fermenting and corrupting nature, I think is altogether irrelevant in the exposition of this parable; and this I expect to allude to in giving my own views on the parable. Mr. B. cites some texts to prove the corrupting nature of leaven, together with its corrupting influence on the christian church, in proof of which he refers to the prophetic language of Paul to Timothy, wherein he speaks of the apostasy that has flown from the corrupting influence of this leaven hid in the meal. He refers to the woman as the bride, or church of Christ, and then to the mother of harlots as being the woman meant in the parable. In the next column he says the gospel is the meal. I will now notice some seeming inconsistencies in the teachings of Mr. B., by asking, Is it consistent with his exposition of the kingdom of heaven, and of the character of leaven, as possessing a corrupting nature, to call it the kingdom of heaven? Would it not be more consistent for him to call it the kingdom of Satan? as his view of it has only a corrupting tendency. Again, he says, "The gospel is the meal." If so, is not the gospel corrupted? Yes; for he says, "The woman is a tool in the hands of the wicked one to corrupt and deprave the gospel." And in the same column he says, "If we take this ground flour as setting forth the gospel, we regard the three measures as the quantity which each person in the Trinity contributed to the gospel." And yet according to Mr. B. the glorious gospel of the Son of God is corrupted and depraved. From such premises all that see this may draw their own conclusions; but I for one do not feel willing nor at liberty to hold forth a corrupt and depraved gospel as presenting the only way of life and salvation to perishing sinners. For to say that the gospel is corrupt, and consequently corrupting, the preaching of it certainly would have a corrupting tendency. Where Mr. B. in support of his teaching refers to Popish Rome, and that state institution called the church of England, and other sects, as they have no connection with and form no part of the kingdom or church of God, his argument drawn from thence is entitled to no consideration whatever.

I shall now proceed to give my views on the parable as briefly as I can. In doing so I will present such testimony as appears to me pertinent, as being in accord with the inspired word.

First, the kingdom of heaven, or of God, is like leaven, which a woman took, and hid in three measures of meal. I understand the leaven to refer to the work of grace, or the kingdom of God set up in an elect sinner's heart, and that the whole force of its meaning is spent in its assimilating and transforming influence in conducting sinners from grace to glory. "Behold, the kingdom of God is within you."—Luke xvii. 20, 21. And as the leaven is hid in the meal, and works secretly, it (the kingdom of heaven) does not come with observation. The three measures, to my mind, has reference to the constituent elements that enter into the composition of man. "I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ."—1 Thess. v. 23. "The word of God is quick and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow," &c.—Heb. iv. 12. These two texts are sufficient to establish as a basis the three constituent elements of man as answering to the three measures of meal in the parable. And so, in my view of it, when the work of grace or kingdom of God is set up in a sinner's heart, this leavening process begins its glorious work of transformation and assimilation, and the whole leavening process will be fully consummated in the resurrection of the body, and not before. I feel assured that leaven in the parable is used on account of its active properties, in diffusing itself through the mass in which it is placed; and that in the elucidation of this parable its nature as being sour and corrupting, is entirely irrelevant; and how aptly it answers in its operations to the secret and hidden work of grace in a sinner's heart, in its transforming and sanctifying influence; and as the leaven permeates and is diffused through the whole mass of meal, secretly, and in its effects is gradual, and is hidden; so in the operations of grace in a believer's heart, and his conformation to the holy image of Jesus, seems gradual and hidden; yet he grows in grace, and in the knowledge of the glorious character of his Redeemer; and the transforming efficacy of this leavening process is such that instead of feeding his vanity it humbles and brings him down, as it were, in the dust of humility. So Isaiah, in view of the glorious character of his Lord, said, "Woe is me! for I am undone; because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips; for mine have seen the King, the Lord of hosts."—Isa. vi. 5.

As to leaven being used only in a bad sense, although I do not believe the character or nature of it, whether good or bad, has anything to do in the elucidation of this parable, yet it is used in two or more instances in a good sense. God commanded Israel to offer a sacrifice of thanksgiving with leaven. "The offering of fine flour shall be with leaven."—Amos iv. 5; Lev. xxiii. 17.

CHRIST MADE PERFECT.

PLEASE give your views on Hebrews v. 9, especially on the first clause, the sense in which he was made perfect.

C. C. PURVINES.

REPLY.

"And being made perfect, he became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him."—Heb. v. 9.

In the submission of this text for our consideration it is presumed that our inquirer recognizes the fact that it is but a single phrase taken out of the sentence beginning with the fifth and ending with the tenth verse of this chapter. It will also be observed that the whole sentence is closely connected with the context, in which the subject of the priesthood of Christ is presented as the antitype of that priesthood which by the Mosaic law was established in the family of Aaron. There can be no correct understanding of the text without taking it in the connection in which the inspiration of the Holy Ghost moved the writer of this epistle to record it. By taking disconnected expressions from the Scriptures and wresting them from the application in which they were written, the most monstrous absurdities may be apparently sustained. In such perversion of the truth of God into a lie none who fear him with filial reverence would desire to engage. Certainly in the construction of the words of inspiration there can be no safer guide than the explanation given by the Spirit of truth. Therefore it is well to consider the text in the light of the inspired letter in which it is recorded.

This epistle being addressed to those saints who had been called out from the nation of Israel, is largely devoted to showing the testimony of Christ as revealed in the typical ritual of Judaism. With that ceremonial dispensation all the children of Israel were familiar. They were taught the letter of that law which was given by the hand of Moses; and they thought that in their sacred Scriptures they had eternal life. Therefore it was needful that they should be instructed in the true spiritual significance of all those ordinances before they could come into the liberty of the sons of God in the gospel dispensation. It is essential that this should be remembered in examining the subject embraced in our text. "For the law having a shadow of good things to come, and not the very image [likeness] of the things, can never with those sacrifices which they offered year by year continually make the comers there-unto perfect."—Heb. x. 1. In all that dispensation nothing was more clearly defined than the law of the priesthood. Therein was declared in a figure the principle upon which all the people of spiritual Israel should be saved from their sins by the one complete offering of the Savior of all the election of divine grace. He is the true High Priest, of whom all the Levitical priesthood were but faintly typical. The rest into which that nation entered in obedience to the covenant given them, as well as every incident recorded concerning the dealings of God with them, was but the outline of shadow by which the reality of the body, the church in gospel liberty, was foretold to the faith of those saints who then looked forward to the coming of Christ Jesus as the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believes. It is not possible to correctly understand the true meaning of any of those things which were enjoined upon the nation of Israel except as the Spirit of truth shall take of them and show to his followers the testimony of Jesus in each item of that divinely appointed dispensation.

The expression to which our attention is called is included in the presentation of Christ as the true High Priest, by whom all the chosen tribes of spiritual Israel are reconciled unto God. This is shown to be strictly conformed to the pattern set forth under the law of Moses. "For every high priest taken from among men is ordained for men in things pertaining to God, that he may offer both gifts and sacrifices for sins; who can have compassion on the ignorant, and on them that are out of the way; for that he himself also is compassed with infirmity." To finite reason it seems unnecessary that in Christ there should be found conformity to this infirmity of the high priests of Judaism. But the wonderful fact is clearly declared in the connection, that "Christ glorified not himself to be made an high priest; but he that said unto him, Thou art my Son, to-day have I begotten thee." Herein is manifested that unsearchable mystery of which Paul says, "And without controversy great is the mystery of godliness; God was manifest in the flesh, justified in the Spirit, seen of angels, preached unto the Gentiles, believed on in the world, received up into glory."—1 Tim. iii. 16. It is very essential that this declaration be accepted just as it is written. The salvation of his people from their sins could never have been secured by any power less than the omnipotence of God. So Paul cautions the saints and faithful brethren at Colosse, "Beware lest any man spoil [that is, rob] you through philosophy and vain deceit, after the tradition of men, after the rudiments of the world, and not after Christ; for in him dwelleth ALL THE FULLNESS OF THE GODHEAD bodily."—Col. ii. 8, 9. There is no divine authority for any theory which represents the Redeemer of Israel as being less than the "Wonderful, Counsellor, The Mighty God, The Everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace."—Isa. ix. 6. It is infinitely better for the saints to confess with the apostle the mystery of godliness, and admire its awful glory, than to profanely seek to solve by finite reason that which God has purposely concealed from the prying curiosity of created intelligence.

Accepting the inspired testimony by which our Lord Jesus is declared to be the only revelation of the eternal God, it is certain that in that character there can be no sense in which he can be less than infinitely perfect. There could be no room for him to be made perfect in his divine holiness, so that it must be that the meaning of the expression in our text has its explanation in the official relation to his body the church, in which he is the High Priest of our profession. As the representative of all the election of grace they are all included in him. This is the only way in which he is involved in their sin, and in the need of "Being made perfect." Bearing all the sins of his people, he was made a curse for them. It was not by the arbitrary decree of God that he was made to be sin for us. Neither was it merely an exhibition of infinite pity and compassion. Being from everlasting the dwelling place of his people, and their life, eternal justice could be satisfied only by his payment of the penalty, in which he must give himself a ransom for their sins. For the accomplishment of this work he must be made flesh, made under the law, and must learn obedience by the things which he suffered. Of all the displays of his divine omnipotence none can compare with the amazing miracle wherein the eternal God put on all the weakness of his creature man, and being found in fashion as a man he learned obedience by the things which he suffered. Only by this yielding to the power of death was the justice of the law vindicated, and thus the justly condemned sinners for whom he laid down his life were made free from sin and delivered from the curse of the law. In fulfilling all that was demanded by justice on the part of his body the church, our Lord must become obedient even unto death. Until this was done, as the High Priest of his spiritual people he was not made perfect. In the type this was expressed in the vision of Zechariah, when he saw Joshua the high priest clothed in filthy garments, and standing before the angel.—See Zech. iii. As Satan was standing at his right hand to resist him, so the sins of all his people stood in array against the fulfillment of the purpose of God in the salvation of his people. No voice but the word of the Lord could answer the fierce accusations of this deadly adversary. The angel of divine justice demanded the life of the people whom the high priest represented.

No created arm could bring deliverance to them or to their high priest. Yet the power of God was displayed in the command, saying, "The Lord rebuke thee, O Satan; even the Lord that hath chosen Jerusalem rebuke thee. Is not this a brand plucked out of the fire?" The immutable purpose of God had determined the deliverance of Jerusalem from that fire of condemnation before Joshua was manifested in his filthy garments; yet it was needful that every incident should be accomplished according to the divine appointment in bringing into manifestation that eternal counsel of the will of God. While the natural mind is lost in the effort to comprehend the revelation of the infinite purpose and grace of God in the salvation of his people from their sins, it is always safe to accept what is declared in the inspired record of that revelation. Throughout the whole volume of the Scriptures the unchanging testimony is presented that Christ Jesus is the chosen and elect Servant to whom God has committed the infinite work of redeeming his sinful people from their state of guilt and condemnation, and presenting them holy and without blame before God in love. Less than divine omnipotence could not suffice to perform this miracle of justifying the ungodly. It is emphatically designated as the exclusive word of the Lord, "his strange work, and to bring to pass his act, his strange act."—Isa. xxviii. 21.

For this purpose God was manifested in the flesh, and he humbled himself to become obedient under the law which demanded of him the life of his body. Thus in the form of a servant he magnified the law by rendering service to its every demand. But when he was thus held under bondage by the inflexible requirements of the holy law, he was not yet manifestly made perfect. Until he had finished the work of meeting every tittle of the law, all its requirements were in full force against him. As prefigured in the prophetic vision, he stood before the angel of divine justice "clothed with filthy garments." The iniquity of all his body was laid on him, so that he was made a curse for us. He could not be made perfect so long as justice could confront him with one transgression of his members for which he had not rendered satisfactory atonement to its demands. This must not be construed to signify that there ever was a period in time or in eternity when sin rested upon the holy Redeemer in himself considered. Aside from his relationship to the chosen subjects of his grace there could be no sin found in the perfect Savior.

"For he who could for sins atone Must have no blemish of his own."

As the great Servant in whom the whole law of God found its only sinless obedience, our Lord Jesus stands alone. In the holy law, as well as in the declarations of the prophets and in the Psalms, the Lord was foreseen always before the face of the inspired witnesses who spoke as they were moved by the Holy Ghost. It is the Spirit of Christ in all his witnesses by which they groan under the burden of conscious guilt, and cry out of the depths unto God for deliverance. In his eternal being as our High Priest Christ is "holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners, and made higher than the heavens; who needeth not daily, as those high priests [under the Sinai covenant], to offer up sacrifice, first for his own sins, and then for the people's; for this he did once, when he offered up himself." In his complete obedience to the holy law of God he was made perfect as the righteous Servant of whom the law prophesied. To him was addressed the decree which announced, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind." Only in him did this embodiment of the law ever find its fulfillment. So he is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believes. This is the justification of all whose salvation is secured in him. While his immaculate holiness is attested by infinite justice in the law, he must render obedience even unto death. This could not have been required of him in any other way but as he is identified with his people in their condemnation. So it is written of him in the preceding portion of this letter, "But we see Jesus, who was made a little lower than the angels for the suffering of death, crowned with glory and honor, that he by the grace of God should taste death for every man. For it became him, for whom are all things, and by whom are all things, in bringing many sons unto glory, to make the Captain of their salvation perfect through sufferings. For both he that sanctifieth and they who are sanctified are all of one; for which cause he is not ashamed to call them brethren." In this life-unity consists the principle by which Christ Jesus could righteously give himself for the sins of his chosen people.

The suffering of our Lord could add nothing to his essential purity and divine holiness. This is too evident for demonstration. But without bearing our sins and enduring our burdens of suffering he could not be qualified to be touched with the feeling of our infirmities. In all our afflictions he must be afflicted, in order that he may be prepared to succor each afflicted and suffering one. So it was testified of him, "Surely he hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows; yet we did esteem him stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted; but he was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities; the chastisement of our peace was upon him; and with his stripes we are healed."—Isa. liii. 4, 5. Referring to the consummation of that suffering which he must bear, Jesus said, "I have a baptism to be baptized with; and how am I straitened [or pained] until it be accomplished!" After he had blotted out the handwriting of ordinances under which his people were condemned, he was no longer thus pained. The law of perfect holiness required nothing more. Having received full satisfaction of its utmost demand against his body, the church, justice freely acknowledged that its claims were canceled. Acknowledging its perfect satisfaction, the holy law now says, "Deliver him from going down to the pit; I have found a ransom."—Job. xxxiii. 24. In the payment of that ransom the Redeemer was made perfect as the Savior of all the election of grace. Only in his identity with his people is he revealed as the Christ of God. In his self-existent character as the eternal God he is not dependent upon the anointing by which he is entitled to the name of Christ. It is as the Servant whom God upholds, and his Elect in whom his soul delights, that our Lord is anointed with the Spirit of divine grace. In no other sense can he be called the Christ of God but as he is thus consecrated by the holy oil of divine power and condemnation. The very name Christ signifies Anointed or Ordained. Certainly the act of anointing involves the fact that the less is blessed of the better.—Heb. vii. 7. Hence it could not be as the eternal God that Christ was thus anointed. Clearly it is as that Servant whom the power of God upholds that he is the Anointed Savior, who is called the Christ. In that character he was not "made perfect" until he had finished the work which was given him to do. Then in his glorious resurrection from the dead he received the witness of eternal truth attesting his perfect fulfillment of all that was written of him in the will of God.

In being thus made perfect he became manifestly the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him. The word author here signifies the source, or origin, from whence exclusively that salvation proceeds. This was not revealed until he was made manifestly perfect in the accomplishment of all the work which he came to do. Then, having removed the curse of the law from all for whom he died, he brought life and immortality to light through the gospel. Thus he was to them the author of eternal salvation. Lest it should be suggested that it depends upon the sinner whether he will secure the benefit of this salvation by obeying him, it should be particularly observed that their obedience is secured by the same grace which brings their salvation. In the everlasting covenant it is provided that the Lord will be their God, and they shall be his people. It is God who works in them both to will and to do of his own good pleasure. He has declared positively unto our Lord that "Thy people shall be willing in the day of thy power, in the beauties of holiness."

—Psalms ex. 3. Nothing is left contingent upon the uncertain decision of the creature. While all that righteousness by which the saints are justified before God is in their Lord, it is also by his Spirit dwelling in them that they are made willing to render obedience practically to all his precepts and examples. So long as the perfection of Christ is beyond the reach of contamination, so long the salvation of his people from their sins is secured. None of them can come into condemnation while Jesus stands accepted before the throne of eternal justice.

IT IS VERY IMPORTANT

That great care should be taken in sending a renewal of subscriptions to give us the same name as the one to whom the paper is already coming. If the party is married be sure the initials are given correctly; for if the paper is coming in the wife's name and the husband writes us to send the paper the next year, and signs his own name, we have no means of knowing that the person to whom the paper is going is his wife; and not finding his name on our list he is entered as a new subscriber and the paper sent to both; or if the paper is going in the husband's name and the renewal sent on in the wife's name, the result will be the same. The best way is to inclose in your letter one of the little pink slips containing the name pasted either on the margin of the paper or on the wrapper in which it comes.

READ CAREFULLY.

WHEN two or more new subscribers are sent at the same time, in accordance with terms given in Supplement, and one is in compliance with the second paragraph and former part of the fourth, and the others on terms given in third paragraph, it is very essential to state which name is sent according to terms of second and fourth paragraphs, as that name is credited to the end of 1893, while the others are credited one year from the time their subscription begins.

AT least nine out of every ten writing us to discontinue their paper add that it is not on account of their objection to anything the paper contains, but that they are not financially able to continue it. Again, in the parable a woman took leaven and hid it in the meal. I believe that as it was common for women to prepare and make ready food for the use of their families, is the sole reason why her name is used in this parable; for I repeat here that in my view of it the main and only point of any consequence in its elucidation is the agency or operations of the leaven in the three measures of meal; for we must keep this main fact steadily in view, that "the kingdom of heaven [or of God] is like leaven, which a woman took, and hid in three measures of meal." Then, if we can see a likeness in the leaven in its operations to that of grace in an elect sinner's heart, that is, if we can see a fitness or aptitude in this leaven in secretly diffusing its properties and assimilating the whole lump, as the operations of grace diffuses its nature and assimilates the whole man, we will then, in my opinion, know all that was designed to be taught by this parable. The apostle says, "We are changed into the same image, from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord."—2 Cor. iii. 18. This blessed work of transformation is kept up in the hearts of the Lord's people below until they are fully ripe for glory above; and this is by the secret yet incessant operations and influence of grace or leaven hid in the meal. But grace must reign, or the leaven must go on with its transforming agency, till the whole lump, or spirit and soul and body, is leavened. So the apostle says, "But if the Spirit of him [God] that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken you mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you."—Rom. viii. 11. We have in the above text Christ's resurrection (as the covenant head of his bride) presented as both an earnest and pledge of the resurrection of all the members of his body, as he is "the first-fruits of them that slept," or sleep. And so when the mortal bodies of the Lord's people shall be quickened and raised from the dead, then the glorious work of the reign of grace, or the leavening process of transformation, will be fully consummated. Again, the apostle says that the creature that was made subject to vanity "shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God. For we know that the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now. And not only they, but ourselves also, which have the first fruits of the Spirit, even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body."—Rom. viii. 20-23. It seems by careful reading of the texts quoted, and their connections, that the word "quicken" in the eleventh verse, and the being delivered "into the glorious liberty of the children of God," in the twenty-first verse, and adoption and redemption, in the twenty-third verse, all refer to the quickening or immortalizing of our mortal bodies. Thus, while the saints of the most high God travel through this vale of sorrow, sickness and death, being under the blessed influence of the transforming agency of this leaven or grace of God hid in the meal or heart, they with sweet anticipation look forward to their quickening and delivery into the glorious liberty of the children of God, and to the adoption or redemption of their bodies. And when this glorious work of grace or leaven shall have been consummated, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, "Death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" As Christ, the covenant head of the church, in his resurrection became "the first-fruits of them that slept," so for them he removed the sting of death, and for them he swallowed up death in victory. So all the favored objects of eternal love shall be translated from grace below to glory above; and this I view as the final consummation of grace; and in my view it is figured by the leaven hid in three measures of meal.

I send this for your inspection and disposal. As I have been urged by brethren to give my views on the subject, I feel more interested in its publication. If you or other brethren think it contains errors I hope you will feel free to point them out. I am individually responsible for what this contains.

Your brother, I hope, in gospel bonds,

JAMES WAGNER.

ORATION ONE.

MESSIAH'S CONSTITUTION FOR THE MISSIONARY ESTATE.

WHEN kings send out ambassadors to represent their person and their interests in foreign courts they choose out from amongst the people men of high name and reputation, well skilled in the ways of the world and the policy of states; whom, having clothed with powers plenipotentary, and appointed with officers and servants of every kind, they send forth accredited with royal letters to all courts and kingdoms whither they may come, furnished with grace and splendor to feast the common eye, and laden with rich gifts to take the cupidity or conciliate the favor of those with whom they have to do. Also, when a nation fitteth out a journey or voyage of discovery, as we now do to the Polar Seas (which, as it is the third time, may it be blessed with three-fold success), they choose out men of fortitude, humanity and skill upon whom to bestow a valorous and steady crew, who will not be daunted by the dangers nor baffled by the difficulties of the work; and having called in the whole science and art of the country to fortify and accommodate the danger-hunting men, they launch them forth amidst the hearty cheers and benedictions of their country. And when a nation arrayeth its strength to battle for its ancient rights and dominions, or when a noble nation armeth in the cause of humanity to help an insulted sister in the day of her need, as the Britons have oft been called upon to do, the nation is shaken to her very centre with commotion, and every arm and sinew of the land straineth to the work. Fleets and armies and munitions of war, the whole chivalry, the whole prowess, strength and policy, and oft the whole wealth of the land, muster in the cause; and the chief captains forsake their wives and children and peaceful homes, and the warlike harness is taken from the hall where it hung in peace, and the bold peasantry come trooping from their altars and their household hearths, and "the trumpet speaketh to the armed throng." They gather into one, and descend unto the shores of the surrounding sea, whither every fleet ship and gallant sailor have made ready to bear them to the place where the rights of the nation or the insulted rights of humanity cry upon their righteous arm for redress; and their kinsmen follow them with their prayers, and their wives and children, their fathers, and the households of their fathers, with the assembled congregations of the people, commit them and their righteous cause to the safe conduct and keeping of the Lord of hosts.

But when the King of heaven sendeth forth these twelve ambassadors to the nations, fitteth out these discoverers of the people that sat in darkness and the shadow of death, and furnisheth forth this little army to subvert the thrones, dominions, principalities and powers of darkness which brooded over the degenerate earth, to bring forth the lost condition of humanity, and establish its crown of glory as at the first, he took men of no name nor reputation, endowed with no Greek, with no Roman fame, by science untaught, by philosophy unschooled, fishermen from the shores of an inland sea, the class of men which of all classes is distinguished for no exploit in the story of the world; Galileans, a people despised of the Jews, who were themselves a despised people. As at first, when God wished to make a man in his own image, after his own likeness, he brought not the materials from heavenly regions, neither created a finer quintessence of matter for the high occasion, but took from the ground a handful of dust, thereon to impress his divine image, and thereinto to breathe the spirit of lives: so the Son of God, himself a servant, despised and rejected of men, when he chose vessels to bear his name before Gentiles and kings and the children of Israel, preferred that they should be empty of human greatness, without any grace or comeliness in the sight of man, without any odor of a good name, or rich contents of learning or knowledge; that the treasure being in earthen vessels, the praise might be of God.

Such men having been chosen, for subverting the ancient thrones of darkness, * * * he sent them forth, destitute of all visible sustenance and of all human help, and forbade them to be beholden unto any. "Take nothing for your journey; neither staves, nor scrip, neither bread, neither money, neither have two coats apiece: provide neither gold nor silver, nor brass, in your purses, nor scrip for your journey; neither have two coats, neither shoes, nor yet staves; and salute no man by the way." No means of any sort did he permit for procuring the necessities of life, or purchasing the helps of their journey; no store of provisions, nor even a scrip for containing what might be offered them by the pity or piety of the people; no raiment nor vesture, with the change of which to comfort their weary and way-worn limbs, besides what was sufficient for nature's modesty and her present necessity. Without staff, without shoes, they fared on their way two by two, their sandaled feet exposed to dust and sultry heat, their bodies to every blast of heaven, their natural wants to man's precarious charity. The most defenseless bird that flies athwart the heavens, the weakest, most persecuted beast that cowers beneath the covert or scuds along the plain, are better provided with visible help than were these apostles of the Highest; for the birds of the air have nests to which to wing their flight at eventide, and the beasts of the earth have holes wherein to screen themselves from pursuit, but these missionaries of the spiritual and everlasting kingdom had not where to lay their head.

Whom having thus divided from the resources which human weakness hath in the storehouse and armory of nature, he next divided from the resources which she hath in the power and patronage and friendship of men. They are to compose no speeches for the ears of prince or governor, but to speak as the Spirit of Truth gave them utterance. They are not to go from house to house making friends against the evil day, but to abide where they first halted so long as they are welcome. They are not even to salute a friend, acquaintance or neighbor by the way. And if, in spite of these preventions, it should come to pass that the people they conferred with, well-disposed to them for their word's sake, should take pity upon their unprovided estate, and offer them money to help them on their way, lo, they have no purse for containing it! If they should offer them provision to be their viaticum from town to town, lo, they have no scrip wherein to bestow it! They cannot possess, they cannot accumulate; they are cut off and separate from all fixed and movable wealth which the world holdeth within its fair and ample bound. What will preserve life they are to take upon the credit of their universal message, without feeling obligation, for the laborer is worthy of his meat, and they are wholly obliged to another cause. In no earthly shape can they benefit from their labors under the sun; to no account can they turn the children of men, from whose liberality they can profit no further than to live. Like Jonah, commissioned with the burden of Nineveh, they are to gird up their loins and make speed; they are to hie from house to house, and hasten from town to town, inquiring after the spirits of men; to tell their tale and hurry onward: as the heralds of the northern chiefs were wont to hasten from house to house and village to village when rousing the mountain clans to war. And cause truly see I none why they who hold the commission to make peace should not be as fleet as those who hold the commission to levy war, and the messenger of salvation fly with as hasty a wing as the messenger of death; why servants should not be found to do as much, and to do it as hastily, for the King of heaven, as for the lordly chieftain of a mountain-clan or the throned monarch of a mighty land.

Thus disfurnished of resources from nature's storehouse, and hindered from ploughing with human help, do you ask if these first missionaries of the gospel had promises of welcome everywhere, and went forth on a flourishing and popular cause? if the way was prepared for them in every city, and a hospitable home made ready for them in every house? Hear what their Lord saith to them at parting: "Go your ways, behold, I send you as sheep in the midst of wolves. Beware of men, for they will deliver you up to the councils, and they will scourge you in their synagogues, and ye shall be brought before governors and kings for my sake, and the brother shall deliver up the brother, and the father the child, and the children shall rise up against the parents and cause them to be put to death, and ye shall be hated of all men for my name's sake." Such was their heavy parting. No missionary that ever went to the heathen fared forth on his way with so gloomy a foreboding, so cheerless a farewell. Let no one object, in the face of these predictions too truly fulfilled: "But these are not men like us, open to every want; they are inspired miracle-working men who had nature under their control." Their miracles, which saved many, protected not themselves; their inspirations, which blessed many, could not bless themselves from every harm and sorrow which patient nature can endure. They are to be placed at the bar of civil law, to be hunted out with religious persecution. Against them the tender affections of life are to rise in arms, and the soft and downy scenes of home are to bristle like the iron front of war. The tender hands which are wont to pluck the thorns of sorrow from our feet are to guide the weapons of their death. Of all men they are to be hated for his name's sake. They are to be hunted like the partridge on the mountains, and every refuge upon the earth is to be hidden from their sight. Go, said he, my chosen ones, go like the defenseless lamb into the paw of the ravenous wolf; the world thirsteth for your blood, and is in arms against your undefended lives. Nevertheless, go. You are without weapons of defense, no bribes are in your hands nor soft words upon your tongues, and you go in the teeth of hatred, derision and rage; nevertheless, my children, go.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—It is my painful duty to send the notice of the death of sister White, wife of Elder E. V. White, at her home in Leesburgh, Va. It occurred very suddenly on March 23d, 1893. She was born in Maryland, Jan. 15th, 1836; hence she was 57 years, 2 months and 8 days of age. Although she had been an invalid much of the time for many months, and a large part of that time confined to her room and bed, of late her health seemed much improved, so that she was enabled to attend meeting at "The Valley" on Sunday previous to her death. I copy from our dear brother White's pen the following particulars:

"I came in the house, I suppose, about 7 p. m. Lizzie was in the parlor with the children. She said to them, 'I will go upstairs and talk with Lige,' meaning myself. After awhile Ineze came up, and I read to them both. She went to the room opposite mine and commenced coughing violently. Ineze helped her back to my room. We tried to pacify her, and gave her medicine. Soon she said, 'I am dying.' I ran for the doctor, just across the street, and by the time he arrived she was dead."

So suddenly was she taken. Her acquaintance among the Old School Baptists in all this eastern country was extensive, and none knew her but to love her. I do not know the date of her baptism. She was baptized many years ago by Elder Furr, in the fellowship of the New Valley Church, Loudoun Co., Va. I have been acquainted with her ever since I came to Virginia, seventeen years ago, and can truthfully say there are none among us whose life, conversation and deportment, both in the church and in the world, were more exemplary than that of sister White. She has been a helpmeet indeed to our dear brother White. She was true to him during the hardships and dangers of the late war, and a faithful, helpful companion in his labors in the ministry, always ready to encourage him in the line of his duty. A devoted mother, a loving and beloved sister in the church, hers was indeed a true christian character. Given to hospitality, her house was a home for the Baptists. The brethren with whom she was intimately associated in the church will miss her sadly; but the heaviest loss comes upon her faithful husband and devoted children. The following sentiments I transcribe from our dear brother's pen. They show the faithfulness of that God in whom he is led to trust, and the power of grace in times of sore affliction:

"There is a God that rules; a God that not only stills the waves, but maketh them to be harmless, however high they rise, and even gilds them with the glory of his grace, so that in the sunlight of his love they show in a wonderful way his stately goings forth. The Lord in his great and awful majesty is to be admired in all who believe there is a pleasurable mourning, a sorrow that knows not complaint, a bitterness that replies not. Let no mortal touch these things. Mortal flesh shall not intrude. The place where thou standest is holy ground. O how vain the tenderest sympathy the dearest friends can give. True, dear Lord, thou wilt supply all our needs. Praise him, O my soul; for he is my only friend. "How sweet the name of Jesus sounds in a believer's ears; It soothes his sorrows, heals his wounds, And drives away his fears."

"Dear name, the rock on which I build, My shield and hiding place, My never-failing treasury fills With boundless store of grace."

I will only add further that sister White died in the triumphs of that faith in which she had lived, and which is so manifest in what I have copied above. She leaves five children (three sons and two daughters), with her husband, relatives and many friends, to mourn their loss. I am sure that I but express the earnest desire of all when I write the hope and trust that God of his great mercy and goodness will be very near our afflicted brother and his family, to comfort, strengthen and uphold them in this their time of sore need. I feel sure that they have the prayers of God's people.

ALDIE, Va., March 28, 1893.

My mother, Mrs. S. L. Meador, of Marion, Miss., died March 3d, 1893, in her 78th year. She had been a member of the Old School Baptist Church for more than fifty years.

MRS. J. E. PLATT.

MERIDIAN, Miss., March 22, 1893.

DIED—At Otego, N. Y., March 16th, 1893, our dear sister, Mrs. Sarah Chamberlain, widow of brother George A. Chamberlain, in the 88th year of her age.

This dear sister was baptized by the writer in the fellowship of the church of Otego several years ago, where she remained beloved by her brethren and sisters until called away by death. Her sickness was long and wearisome to her, but was borne with patience and resignation to the divine will. In her last long illness she was living with her daughter and son-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Landen Aldrich, by whom every care and kindness was bestowed that was put within their reach. I being from home at the time of her death, the Methodist minister of Otego was present and officiated. Her christian experience was published in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES of Sept. 15th, 1880.

B. BUNDY.

OTEGO, N. Y., March, 1893.

Hannah Myers Bar was born Aug. 25th, 1814, came to Ohio from Berks Co., Pa. (her native place), in 1829, was married to Thomas Bar March 3d, 1833, and died March 9th, 1893. Thirteen children blessed their union. Eleven lived to maturity, and eight still survive (three sons and five daughters), with numerous families. She leaves these and her aged husband, brother Thomas Bar, nearly eighty-four years old, and one brother, Charles Myers, eighty-three. She lived a member of the "German Reformed Church" from 1830 to 1860, when with her husband she became a member of the Old School Baptist Church, in which she died. It is said that she lived without ever having a quarrel, and died, it is believed, without an enemy. Of how few can this be truly said.

The funeral discourse was by brother Tusing, from John xiv. 2: "I go to prepare a place for you;" after which the poor body was taken to its last resting place till time shall be no more. We will all soon travel to the house appointed for all living.

THOMAS COLE.

ROYALTON, Ohio, March 22, 1893.

DEPARTED this life March 17th, 1893, Edward M. Faulkner, of Roxbury, Delaware Co., N. Y., aged 67 years.

Our dear departed brother was out to our meeting on the evening of March 7th, quite cheerful, although coughing some from a cold and lung trouble. He was taken worse on Thursday, I believe, and gradually grew worse, suffering severely at last from that dread disease, pneumonia. Death came on the ninth day to release him from his sufferings. We shall miss him very much as one faithful in Christ Jesus, whose joy for the past six years has been unspeakable, as the delivering hand of God was seen, who works all things after the counsel of his own will. When the Lord giveth quietness, who then can give trouble? When he hideth his face, who then can behold him? whether it be done against a nation or against a man only. Our God is in heaven, and this sad bereavement of the widow, the church, his dear children, and the large circle of relatives, must be to his glory. We believe our loss to be gain to the departed one. His general expression of interest was expressed in these lines:

"I hope you'll all remember me,
If you on earth no more I see;
An interest in your prayers I crave,
That we may meet beyond the grave."

"O glorious day! O blessed hope!
My soul leaps forward at the thought,
When in that happy, happy land
We'll no more take the parting hand."

Brother Faulkner united by baptism with the Old School Baptists about forty years ago. He was unwavering in the doctrine of God our Savior, and was truly a peacemaker in Zion, and delighted in the preaching of peace by Jesus Christ.

He leaves a widow, four sons and one daughter, with a large circle of relatives and the church, to mourn the loss of an efficient Deacon and brother beloved. May the God of all grace so overrule this providence that all may feel to say, "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord."

The funeral was largely attended at the house, where Elder Fred. W. Keene preached a very comforting discourse from the words, "As for me, I will behold thy face in righteousness; I shall be satisfied, when I awake, with thy likeness." I was also present and made some remarks.

J. D. HUBBELL.

KELLY'S CORNERS, N. Y.

Mr. Daniel Holeman, of Bourbon, Bourbon Co., Kansas, departed this life Nov. 12th, 1892, aged 84 years, 4 months and 4 days.

The deceased was born in Jackson Co., Ind., July 8th, 1808, and on June 7th, 1829, was united in marriage with Miss Priscilla Crabb, in the same county, who became the mother of nine children, five of whom are yet living. Mr. Holeman moved to Warren Co., Ill., in November, 1839, where his wife died Nov. 28th, 1846. On Oct. 31st, 1847, he married his second wife, Mrs. Hulda Cunningham, who survives him, and who has three children surviving from this union. In the fall of 1865 Mr. Holeman emigrated to Bourbon Co., Kansas, where he died.

The deceased was not connected with the visible church of Christ, but for many years gave his friends abundant evidence that he was a subject of grace, and they often urged him to come in and enjoy the privileges of the New Hope Church, at Greenbush, Ill., where the writer has been pastor since the spring of 1857. I was often at his house while the deceased resided near our church at Greenbush, and others with me, and his hospitality and strong friendship for us as Baptists endeared him to us; and we always found the dear SIGNS OF THE TIMES in his house, which he read and paid for during many long years. His father and himself, and some of his sons and grandsons, four generations, have patronized the "dear old SIGNS." The subject of this notice was a man of strict integrity and honor, and his word was as good as his bond among them that knew him, and his moral character unimpeachable. The first person the writer ever baptized was Stephen Holeman, son of the deceased, in August, 1858, in Warren Co., Ill., now of Kansas, who is one of the faithful followers of Jesus. Another son of the deceased is our highly esteemed brother, Deacon Isaac Holeman, formerly of Avon, now of Greenbush, Ill., at whose request I write this notice. After Deacon Holeman was baptized, and became a member with us, he visited his almost helpless father in Kansas, and had a long talk with him about uniting with the church, and told his aged father what a sweet peace he had enjoyed since he had been enabled to attend to that long-neglected duty himself; and the dear father wept and shed many tears, but remarked with deep emotion that he thought he had "waited too long," and still felt his unworthiness. The subject of this imperfect notice provided well for his family, and his friends, and especially the friends of Christ, were ever welcome to his hospitality. He became helpless about a year before his death; and when the summons came he simply and calmly fell asleep. He had requested that Elder Thomas Job should speak on the occasion, but he was called away from earth before this event. Deacon Holeman reached Bronson in time only to see his honored and beloved father laid away to rest. The will of the Lord be done.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date. This date denotes the time at which your subscription expires; and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

POETRY.

WHAT AM I?

My nature is so evil,
My sins are so abhor'd,
I'd trust as soon the devil
As its assuring word.

For when I've sought for quiet,
To be relieved from sin,
I've only found a riot
Of warring thoughts within.

I've made firm resolutions,
I've sought for peace in prayer,
And yet most dire commotions
Oft drove me to despair.

What though the world caress me,
And call me just and true?
The evils that oppress me
Are hidden from their view.

Great God, what wondrous favor
To me a sinner's given,
That I should feel the savor,
And even hope of heaven.

Or is my hope delusive,
And all its comforts vain?
And would I be intrusive
If I assurance gain?

Dear Jesus, Savior, tell me,
Have I a right or no?
And by thy grace compel me
All doubtings to forego.

I have through thy free pardon,
Through thy atoning blood,
In Gethsemane's garden,
In sympathetic flood:

I have through thy full merit,
Revealed on Calvary,
Bore all I could inherit
Of sin or misery.

I have felt some sweet solace
Descending from above;
As sweetly from thy chalice
I've drank thy precious love.

But tell me, Jesus, tell me,
And thy full justice give,
And by thy word compel me
In unmasked truth to live.

But O, I thirst for water
That flows in clearer streams
Than earthly visions flatter,
Or ever cheer my dreams.

Where righteousness eternal
Flows in a boundless sea,
And peace shall blossom vernal,
And always gladden me.

Where Christ, the blessed Master,
Shall cheer my constant heart,
And sweetly binding faster
His bonds that never part.

Where sin can find no entrance
To ever tempt a thought,
And saints in holy union
Are in one kindred wrought.

Where Father, Son and Spirit
Shall move, pervade and blend,
And heavenly hosts inherit
The promise without end.

CORRESPONDENCE.

"The sword of the Lord and of Gideon."

Although the dear old SIGNS was received at a late hour yesterday evening, and it is now only nine o'clock a. m., I have carefully read nearly every word in its precious pages; and when I cast my eyes to the top of the first page how appropriate to my mind seem the words, "The sword of the Lord and of Gideon." In reading the correspondence from the precious brethren and sisters I find several whom I am personally acquainted with in the flesh, and others whom I have never seen; yet I hope I am acquainted with them all in the Spirit. While reading of their many trials and sorrows, their temptations and cares, with a broken heart and contrite spirit, I hear each of them testify what great things the Lord hath done for us, whereof we are glad. I was made to think of those pitchers in the hands of Gideon's little band. Although the light was in the pitchers, the pitchers must needs be broken before the light could shine; but the pitchers themselves were empty. O what a fitting type of every child of God. While they have such a glorious and shining light dwelling within, it is no part of themselves. As I wish to speak a word to each of these dear followers of the Lamb who have written with so much comfort to my poor soul in this last precious number of the SIGNS that I have before me, I will begin.

First, we have that dear and faithful soldier of the cross, our beloved brother in Christ, Elder F. A. Chick, with whom I am personally acquainted, and now call to mind many pleasant recollections of days gone by. I am made to rejoice in reading his able correspondence from time to time, but this last from his pen is especially good to me. I heartily indorse his views, that all a believer can ever do in the way of ordering his outward course after the example of Jesus must be by the power of divine grace working in him both to will and to do of his good pleasure. His article all through (as also in all his writings) has the certain sound; and every good soldier of Christ will do well to prepare himself for battle when he hears from our dear brother Chick, from the pulpit or his pen. God bless you, dear brother.

Next comes our dearly beloved brother, E. D. Varnes, with whom I have had some acquaintance in the flesh. In his usual manner he comes forth, giving all praise and power and honor to the blessed Lamb of God, who taketh away the sin of the world. But brother Varnes does not realize that he is ascribing such praise to our God until he sees in others, even our beloved brethren Durand and Vail, the self-same complaining of their vileness and many shortcomings, and calls to mind that he has also seen the image of Jesus there. Now hear him: "These are the poor and needy that seek water, yes, that living water, and they can find none; but the Lord in his own time, when their tongue fails for thirst, opens up rivers of water in high places." As a result he says, "I do believe I now realize something of this good hope through grace, and that the Lord has in measure lifted me (not helped) out of despondency, and revived me a little; and he did it in his own way." In all his casting down and lifting up he does not lose sight of the grace of God that bringeth salvation. Although he speaks in such well deserved praise of the dear old SIGNS, as the messenger of so much spiritual comfort, he does not once attribute any power to that source, no, not even to the beloved editors nor correspondents; but all glory to God, who hath blessed their labors of love in comforting each other through its columns. Write on, dear brother.

Our next brother is a stranger to me in the flesh; but in spirit he is neither a stranger nor a foreigner, but a fellow-citizen with the saints, and of the household of God. He subscribes himself "R. F. H.," and instructs our brother Varnes to suppress his name. "Why ask ye my name, seeing it is secret?" As the secret of the Lord is with them that fear him, I can tell him of three great secrets he is in possession of, which these three letters stand for—Righteousness, Faith and Hope. No use trying to hide yourself, my dear brother. The mark in your forehead shone too plainly while reading your precious letter. Go on your way in peace to heaven, and wear a crown with Jesus.

Brother N. S. Burch, why stop so short, while your words are few and sweet? Why yes, dear brother, you tell the whole story in the close of your short letter. You close with love to all the saints, and subscribe yourself an unworthy brother. Love is the fulfilling of the law; and to feel your own unworthiness is to esteem others better than yourself.

See how much, dear brother, you have told; as we are not heard for our much speaking, but what we speak with the understanding. Then your dear wife, our precious sister, comes to the front with songs and everlasting joy upon her head, having obtained of the Lord joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing fled away. This dear sister was given faith even at sixteen to know the joyful sound. No wonder she was disquieted when she heard the Methodists, or any others of the synagogue of Satan, tell how they got religion, and much more so when they tell you how easy it is to lose it. Well has one of old declared, "Praise waiteth for thee, O God, in Zion." May sister Burch be ever ready to sing, "I'm not ashamed to own my Lord."

Next in order comes our beloved brother, A. D. Hutchinson, also a stranger in the flesh to me; but the able manner in which he defines the gospel of the kingdom brings to mind that we are traveling the same road. Some violently remove the landmarks, but brother H. points them out one by one and moves on. Yes, my dear brother, I fear that filthy lucre moves more of those filthy dreamers and gospel pretenders to make a display of the powers of darkness and the kingdom of Satan than we are aware of; few indeed who, like Paul, are made to cry out, "Though I preach the gospel, I have nothing to glory of; for necessity is laid upon me. Yea, woe is unto me if I preach not the gospel." Or, "For Zion's sake I will not hold my peace." But the cry of those pretenders should be, and no doubt is in many cases, for filthy lucre's sake. I cannot hold my peace, for it is necessary (having no other occupation) to gain my living in this way. May God bless his poor ministers, for they know the privations of life; but the promise is, "Lo, I am with you always, even to the end of the world."

Now we come to our precious brother and tried and true soldier of the cross, who, as we believe, was raised up to take up the pen that was laid down by his dear old father, and to wield "The sword of the Lord and of Gideon." Praise sits silent on my tongue when I view the past and contemplate the future, how that God in his infinite wisdom and mercy has from all the days of old raised up living witnesses, who being dead, yet speak of the wonderful works of God among the children of men; but space forbids me to dwell upon these adorable events. Suffice it to say that our beloved brother, Elder Wm. L. Beebe, whose able editorials come before us from week to week, go to prove to every child of God that God has raised him up for that same purpose; and he continuing by the grace of God from day to day, is but leaving on record for the comfort and instruction of the saints of the most high God such things as shall, when he is called from the shores of time, yet speak of the marvelous works and kingdom of our God. My precious brother, I am glad you spoke of the three persons in the Godhead, for I never could reconcile with the holy Scriptures the doctrine of three separate and distinct persons, but rather one God, the great Creator of all things. One God, the Son, in his mission on earth to save his people Israel. One God, the Holy Ghost, personating the great Comforter, that should be received in the hearts of his people. My dear brother, may the good Lord be with you in all your labors of love, and bless his work to the good of his people Israel, and the glory of his great and adorable name.

Next comes our precious brother, Elder Benton Jenkins (whom I know in the flesh and love in the Lord, as I trust I do all my dear brethren), "Building upon the foundation" of the prophets and apostles the precious jewels of gold and silver and precious stones, fitting emblems of the love and faith, hope and charity, the precious jewels of distinguishing grace, and warning the dear saints against their own carnal mind (which is enmity against God) in building wood, hay and stubble on this only foundation of the sinner's hope; for other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ. Quite right, my dear brother; if a man cannot lay a foundation that will stand, how can he expect his works to stand, even on another foundation? "For our God is a consuming fire." O what a blessing it is that it is so; that all our own work shall be destroyed, that no flesh shall glory in his presence. "He that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord." Pray for me, my dear brother.

Over the name of our dearly beloved brother, A. B. Francis (whom I also know in the flesh), we have a short but timely epistle, setting forth in his forcible manner the unchangeableness of our God, and advising the brethren to look back and ask for the old paths which our fathers trod, and not try to keep pace with the modern innovations that have so long ago become unpopular among faithful Baptists, so much so as to hurl their deluded followers into the vortex of false religion. Dear saints, follow Jesus. Let the world have its own. They are of the world; therefore they speak of the world, and the world heareth them. We should have no desire to deprive the world of what belongs to it; as one asked me a short time ago, "Have not we as good a right to believe what we do as you have to believe as you do?" O yes, I said. Paul says their damnation is just. They certainly have a right to it. With much love to brother Francis I will pass on to the next.

Though a stranger in the flesh, brother Thomas Norris is walking the good old way, if he can indorse that able sermon of Elder H. M. Curry's which he speaks of. I can truly say that we are brethren.

Last on our list of correspondents comes an old father in Israel (also a stranger in the flesh), Silas G. Supplee. From the first I have mentioned, even to this dear old brother, not one of these dear servants of God has ventured to ascribe any glory to himself, nor to any work of righteousness that he has done; but from beginning to end they testify that it is all of grace, free unmerited grace. I will say to this dear old brother, who has traveled so many years in these low grounds of sorrow, and to all the dear children of our great and adorable King, that our Jesus has promised to never leave nor forsake you; and as the poet says,

"E'en down to old age all my people shall prove

My sovereign, eternal, unchangeable love;

And when hoary hairs shall their temples adorn,

Like lambs they shall still in my bosom be borne.

"The soul that on Jesus hath leaned for repose

I will not, I will not, desert to his foes; That soul, though all hell should endeavor to shake,

I'll never, no, never, no, never forsake."

Dear brethren Beebe, hoping you will pardon me for again intruding on your time and space, I submit these few thoughts for your disposal. I am now a prisoner, having been confined to the house for five weeks, having only been able to meet with our little church once since December. I will say to all the friends who may have heard of my affliction that I am at last quite well reconciled, and am not suffering so much misery in my head nor portions of the body; but I am very weak, and still unable to work. The spine and kidneys being the seat of disease, my mind became so darkened, and I brooded so much over my affliction, and such a spirit of rebellion took hold of me, that we were all greatly alarmed. Many times I have laid down at night never expecting to see the light of another day, and was really sadly disappointed to awake in the morning, after a terrible night of tossing to and fro on my pillow, to find myself still in this suffering world; but at this time my mind is clearer than for many months, and I am enjoying a sweet season of rest for about two weeks. There remaineth a rest to the people of God. O how sweet is a foretaste of it here. Though weak in body, I expect, if the Lord permits, to start on a ten days' trip on Friday, March 3d, and with God's help will visit two or three churches, hoping to realize to some extent the fulfillment of the precious promise, "Lo, I am with you alway, even to the end of the world."

With love in the Lord to you, brethren, and all the household of faith, in hope of eternal life, which God, who cannot lie, promised before the world began, I am your unworthy brother,

J. A. GRAFTON.

OUR PROPHET.

"I WILL raise them up a Prophet from among their brethren, like unto thee, and will put my words in his mouth; and he shall speak unto them all that I shall command him."—Deut. xviii. 18.

Thus spake God to Moses of a Prophet to come; a Prophet who, like Moses, should redeem a people from bondage, found a glorious kingdom, give it laws and ordinances, lead it through a howling wilderness, and pilot it in triumph to a promised land. The likeness to Moses was in type only, however; for the redemption and preservation of this people was to be far more illustrious and glorious than that of its type. This predicted Prophet was Jesus of Nazareth, "of whom Moses in the law, and the prophets, did write." He who spake as never man spake, and who alone had the words of eternal life.

A prophet being a teacher, must possess wisdom and knowledge. This Prophet was the wisdom and knowledge of God, by whom alone can anything be known of him who raised him up. Said he, "All things are delivered unto me of my Father; and no man knoweth the Son, but the Father; neither knoweth any man the Father, save the Son, and he to whomsoever the Son will reveal him."

Christ has always been, and will forever remain, the great Teacher, the Prophet of his people. Salvation began to be spoken by the Lord (Heb. ii. 3); but before he was made manifest in the flesh he "spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets." "Of which salvation the prophets have inquired and searched diligently, who prophesied of the grace that should come unto you: searching what, or what manner of time the Spirit of Christ which was in them did signify, when it testified beforehand the sufferings of Christ, and the glory that should follow." Christ's prophetic office was carried on by his Spirit, speaking in the prophets of old; by which Spirit Christ preached unto the spirits in prison, in the days of Noah, while the ark was a preparing.—1 Pet. iii. 19, 20. "Prophecy came not in old time by the will of man; but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." While on earth "he taught as one having authority," and he distinctly states from whence his authority arises: "The word which ye hear is not mine, but the Father's which sent me."—John xiv. 24. "When he ascended up on high," "he gave gifts unto men;" and "we preach not ourselves, but Christ Jesus the Lord; and ourselves your servants for Jesus' sake. For God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ. But we have this treasure in earthen vessels, that the excellency of the power may be of God, and not of us."

Scripture testifies of him as the substance of all prophecy. It was his Spirit which inspired it all, and the record is of none but himself, the Word of God. His prophetic office is revealed to us in making known the whole will of God unto salvation. In us he is the faithful and true Witness; the Minister of the covenant of grace, the Wisdom and Knowledge of God.

"I will raise them up a Prophet from among their brethren." The declaration that this Prophet would be raised up from among his brethren, at once settles any question of his being of a different nature from them. The apostle tells us that he took on him not the nature of angels, but he took on him the seed of Abraham. "Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part of the same."—Heb. ii. 14.

"The Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us." His human nature was complete and entire in itself. He became an infant, a child, a man. "He grew in stature," yea, "and in wisdom," and even "in favor with God and man." "The child grew and waxed strong in spirit, filled with wisdom: and the grace of God was upon him." He was touched with a feeling of our infirmities of nature: he felt hunger, thirst, weariness, pain. He ate, drank, slept. He was sensible to human affection, such as sorrow (Matt. xxvi. 38), joy (Luke x. 21), love (John xi. 5), anger (Mark iii. 5), or grief, as it is explained, on account of the hardness of their hearts. He is represented as weak and ignorant of some things, not being able to do any thing of himself; that is, in his mere human nature; and not knowing the day of judgment. He often prayed to God, as to one that was able to save him, and is recorded as having "offered up prayers and supplications, with strong crying and tears, and was heard in that he feared."—Heb. v. 7. In the record which is given of his life here upon earth, it seems to me as clearly demonstrated that he had a human soul or spirit, like unto ours in all things, "yet without sin." His increasing in wisdom, his waxing strong in spirit, his having a will of his own, distinct from the will of his Father, his sorrowing, rejoicing, hoping, fearing, loving, desiring, and grieving, certainly go to prove this. Partaking thus of our human nature, he became, not the relation of angels, but our relation, our Brother, bone of our bones, and flesh of our flesh. The apostle notices this when he says, "For both he that sanctifieth and they who are sanctified are all of one; for which cause he is not ashamed to call them brethren, saying, 'I will declare thy name unto my brethren; in the midst of the church will I sing praise unto thee.' "It behooved him," says the apostle, "to be made like unto his brethren, that he might be a merciful and faithful High Priest." And again, "We have not a High Priest who cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities; but was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin." To make reconciliation for the sins of his people, it was necessary that he should suffer the penalty due to sin in the very nature which had offended; hence, "It behooved him to be made like unto his brethren in all things." It was necessary also that he should be without sin, else his sufferings and death could not atone for our sins, as he would have deserved to suffer and die for his own sins. Nor could he have been without sin had he been of ordinary generation, conceived and born as we are. Having been begotten by the Father, he is superior to all of God's creatures. "Being made so much better than the angels, as he hath by inheritance obtained a more excellent name than they. For unto which of the angels said he at any time, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee? And again, I will be to him a Father, and he shall be to me a Son. And again, when he bringeth his First-begotten into the world, he saith, And let all the angels of God worship him."

"Like unto thee." Moses was a type of this Prophet which was to be raised up, and it was in this sense the likeness was to consist. Everything under the law given by Moses was typical of something to come; as, for instance, the sacrifices under the law were shadows, figures, types, of the true sacrifice of the cross. A shadow is something which will present the outlines of the body from which it proceeds, and is properly termed a type of that body; so when we speak of types and antitypes we mean to express the fact of a resemblance between them, because it is owing to the resemblance that one thing becomes the type of the other. A symbol is a sign of something past or present. The meaning of the sign, however, depends entirely upon invention, and any one thing can be made the sign of another. For instance, the written characters in a tune-book are symbols of sound, and vocalized words are symbols of thought. But a type is a sign of something future, and the nature of it is expressive of the thing typified. There could be no connection between the two if the thing typified bore no resemblance to the type. So, when we view the Jewish sacrifices as typical of that sacrifice which sealed and established forever the better covenant, we see a resemblance between them which somehow corresponds to the design of Christ's coming. And likewise, in everything pertaining to the prophetic office of Moses, I think we may clearly discern a vivid type of our Prophet.

"And will put my words in his mouth; and he shall speak unto them all that I shall command him." That Christ did speak the words he was commanded to, his own testimony proves. "I must preach," "for therefore am I sent." See Christ's sermon, Matt. 5th, 6th and 7th chapters, and many other places, as Luke vi. 20. "He whom God hath sent speaketh the words of God." "My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me." "He that sent me is true; and I speak to the world those things which I have heard of him." "I do nothing of myself; but as my Father hath taught me, I speak." "I speak that which I have seen with my Father." "Even as the Father said unto me, so I speak." "The word which ye hear is not mine, but the Father's, which sent me." "All things that I have heard of my Father I have made known unto you." And that which he hath made known to us is, that God "hath saved us, and called us with an holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began." This "First-born among many brethren," "The holy One of God," "who did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth," who "was set up from everlasting, from the beginning or ever the earth was," "whose goings forth have been from of old, from everlasting," "Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, to-day and forever," this is the Prophet whom God hath raised up to be the Savior, Redeemer and Deliverer of his people.

Through this man, whom "God hath exalted to be a Prince and a Savior," "is preached to us the forgiveness of sins," and "we shall be saved from wrath through him." "Blessed be the Lord God of Israel; for he hath visited and redeemed his people. And hath raised up a horn of salvation for us in the house of his servant David; as he spake by the mouth of his holy prophets, which have been since the world began: that we should be saved from our enemies, and from the hand of all that hate us; to perform the mercy promised to our fathers, and to remember his holy covenant; the oath which he sware to our father Abraham, that he would grant unto us, that we, being delivered out of the hand of our enemies, might serve him without fear, in holiness and righteousness before him, all the days of our life. And thou, child, shalt be called the prophet of the Highest: for thou shalt go before the face of the Lord to prepare his ways; to give knowledge of salvation unto his people by the remission of their sins, through the tender mercy of our God; whereby the dayspring from on high hath visited us, to give light to them that sit in darkness and in the shadow of death, to guide our feet into the way of peace."—Luke i. 68-79.

J. M.

CHENEY, Neb., Dec. 23, 1892.

ELDER G. BEEBÈ'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN IN CHRIST:—I send you the inclosed letter, which was written by a dearly beloved sister in the flesh. She is in the seventy-second year of her age, and has been a widow since the spring of 1869. Her home is about two hundred and thirty miles from the church, so she is deprived of the privilege of meeting with the brethren oftener than once or twice a year; but she has from time to time written a letter to be read to the church. It is a great comfort to the church to hear from the members who are absent. This time she has written a sketch of her experience. The members of our little church are scattered over a large portion of this western country; but if it is true that they are the salt of the earth, it is no wonder they are scattered. The all-wise God has a purpose in all his works. If he desired things otherwise, he is able to have them so. It is written, "All things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose." How marvelous and mysterious are the ways of our God! Who can know them? It is written that the world by wisdom cannot search them out. Jesus said on one occasion, "I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, that thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes. Even so, Father, for so it seemed good in thy sight." Since it is God's will that his children shall be scattered here and there, some entirely alone in a far country, where they are not blessed with the privilege of meeting even one of their brethren to cheer them on their way, let us not forget to speak often one to another in the fear of God. Not that we fear him with a slavish fear, but because we love him. O what a comfort it is to me, poor and unworthy as I am, to have the privilege of hearing from the poor and afflicted people of God, scattered abroad in this unfriendly world, through the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. May the brethren who are deprived of meeting with the church take an interest in the welfare of Zion, and write, that we all may be comforted together in love.

Your unworthy brother in hope,
JOSEPH BRUCE.

DECEMBER 11, 1892.

TO SALEM CHURCH, IN LANCASTER COUNTY, NEBRASKA—DEARLY BELOVED BRETHREN AND SISTERS IN CHRIST:—If one so unworthy as I may address you thus. I did think I would be at our December meeting, but I do not now think I can. I feel like a cumberer of the ground. The leaves make an appearance, but no fruit is found. As I do not get to meeting often, I thought I would try to tell you my reason of a hope in Christ, if you will bear with me a little while, and pardon my shortcomings. I feel thankful to hear there are more coming to the church. May God be with you all until we meet again. I desire an interest in your petitions at the throne of grace. I may never meet you again in the church militant, but I do have a hope that when we are done with the trials and troubles of this world we will all meet in the church triumphant, where sickness, sorrow, pain and death are felt and feared no more, and parting will be no more. Pray for me, that I may be reconciled to all God's dealings with me, and at last be found one of that happy number.

When I was in my sixteenth year I became concerned about my soul's salvation. Up to this time I had never seen that I was a sinner, but thought I was even better than many of my associates and schoolmates, and my neighbors' children in general. The first prayer that I ever attempted to offer up, upon my knees (except my childish prayers), was to thank God that I was not as many of my neighbors; that is, I used no profane language, was honest, did not lie nor steal, and so on. A May meeting was drawing near, and I, with father and my oldest sister, was to go to the meeting on Sunday. I had made great calculations on going. There were to be three good preachers there. Elder William Saffer preached first. I do not remember his text, but in his sermon it seemed to me he told all my thoughts, and better than I could tell them myself. If I had ever told any one my thoughts, I would have felt confident that they had told him. The second minister was Levi Long. As he took up his subject it seemed to me that his sermon was all to me, and it appeared to me that every one in the house knew my feelings. This was the first time in all my life that I had seen myself a sinner. The third minister was Joseph Armstrong. He was a very able preacher, and I thought that I should surely hear something in his sermon to comfort me; but alas! all seemed against me, and I went home feeling sadly disappointed, but thought it would wear off, and by the next meeting I would feel better; but instead my troubles grew worse. I tried to pray, but could find no words but "Lord, be merciful to me, a sinner;" and it seemed that even those words fell to the ground. I could not see how God could be just in saving such a wretched sinner as I. I did not feel now that I was better than my neighbors and their children, but that I would be willing to exchange conditions with any of them. My troubles went on this way for

KEEPING THE SABBATH DAY.

"REMEMBER the Sabbath day, to keep it holy."—Ex. xx. 8.

An inquiring correspondent claiming to be "A Pilgrim," requests an answer to the question, "Are we, under the gospel dispensation, commanded to observe the Sabbath day? If not, why not? Second, Why do those who claim to be christians, substitute the first day of the week for the seventh day, which was designated under the law of God as given to Israel? Third, Is there any account of Sunday being observed as a day of worship before it was decreed by the emperor Constantine in the year 321?" Our correspondent also requests the views of Elder J. P. Allison, of Oregon, through the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, on Rev. iii. 20. With this request we would unite. It is not our practice to comply with anonymous applications for our views; but in this case it may be of interest to others besides the unknown applicant.

"Are we, under the gospel dispensation, commanded to observe the Sabbath day? If not, why not?" For the benefit of those who have been in the habit of hearing the gospel preached, or of reading the correspondence of the saints, it might be sufficient to reply to this inquiry with a simple negative, and assign the reason that the whole of that legal covenant, in which this precept is included, was expressly confined to the natural children of Israel, unto whom exclusively it was given. "And Moses called all Israel, and said unto them, Hear, O Israel, the statutes and judgments which I speak in your ears this day, that ye may learn them, and keep, and do them. The Lord our God made a covenant with us in Horeb. The Lord made not this covenant with our fathers, but with us, even us, who are all of us here alive this day."—Deut. v. 1-3. Certainly no language could be more definite and exclusive than this. Throughout the Scriptures there is nothing to signify that there ever was any extension of the demands of that law to a single individual who was not embraced in the covenant of God as given to that nation. In confirmation of this truth God spoke by his prophet, "Hear this word that the Lord hath spoken against you, O children of Israel, against the whole family which I brought up from the land of Egypt, saying, You only have I known of all the families of the earth; therefore I will punish you for all your iniquities."—Amos

iii. 1, 2. In all the denunciations of divine condemnation against the idolatrous Gentiles there is not an intimation of censure for their neglecting to observe the precept which enjoined the Sabbath day upon Israel. It is absurd to suppose that they were so careful to keep that day that they needed no reproof on that ground. Not even the patriarchs had received this covenant by which the sabbatic law was enjoined upon the nation whom the Lord chose as the type of his spiritual Israel, the election of his grace. There is no intimation of any injunction given from God by which man was authorized to observe any portion of time as a sabbath until after the Israelites had been delivered from Egyptian bondage. Nor can any precept be found in all the sacred Scriptures by which that sabbatic law was ever extended to include one sinner who was not a fleshly Israelite.

Aside from the presumption by which men have claimed to change the time of sabbatic rest from the seventh to the first day of the week, it is worthy of special attention that the most fanatical hypocrite who takes pride in his strictness as a keeper of that precept, is not less guilty than the sinner whom he despises. The law of God no more emphatically forbade secular labor on the seventh day than it enjoined such labor on all the previous six days. On the Sabbath day the Israelite was not at liberty to attend religious services, or to stand in the synagogues, or in the corners of the streets, and make long prayers; the law required expressly, "Abide ye every man in his place; let no man go out of his place on the seventh day."—Ex. xvi. 29. By their very religious devotions the advocates of sabbatic observance are themselves guilty of transgressing the letter of the law they claim to observe strictly.

Not only is it clearly recorded that the sabbatic law was confined to the nation of Israel, but under the gospel dispensation the saints are expressly commanded, "Let no man therefore judge you in meat, or in drink, or in respect to an holy day, or of the new moon, or of the sabbath days; which are a shadow of things to come; but the body is of Christ."—Col. ii. 16, 17. There can be no other meaning consistent with the letter of this admonition, but that the saints are not under the dominion of the law which enjoined the observance of the things specified. While they were held under the law of Moses every Israelite must be judged in all these things according to the precepts written in that law. There is no more divine authority for the saints rendering obedience to the law of the Sabbath day than for their abstaining from those meats which were forbidden to the Jews. All those special ordinances cited by the apostle are certainly included in the handwriting that was against us, and which was blotted out, and taken out of the way, being nailed to the cross of Christ. For the saints to still endeavor to attain to justification by obedience to those precepts involves the denial that they are redeemed from the condemnation of the law by the atonement of our Lord Jesus. If they are still under the dominion of the law of sin and death, then there is no hope of their ever being justified; "For as many as are of the works of the law are under the curse; for it is written, Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things which are written in the book of the law to do them."—Gal. iii. 10. Since the only righteousness by which any sinner can be justified before God is that which is complete in Jesus, those who still seek justification by the works of the law refuse to confess their entire dependence upon that salvation which is revealed in him. Since it is declared by inspiration that there is salvation in no other name but Jesus, it is a necessary result of looking to the law for acceptance that those who fall into that error are debtors to do the whole law. The truth is written that the curse abides upon all such. This is realized in the experience of the saints themselves. So long as they are looking to their own works for righteousness, they bear the condemnation of continual failure. While carnal professors may attain such success in this slavish service of the letter of the law as to feel themselves holier than others, the light of the knowledge of God shining in the heart of the saint shows him the pollution of his best emotion, so that he cannot rest in that false confidence. Of course, the eternal salvation of the saints is secure in Christ Jesus; it cannot be made more sure by anything which they can do. But it is in their present enjoyment of the comfort of hope that they suffer loss in yielding themselves to the service of the law. They can no more find the answer of a good conscience toward God in trying to keep the law of the Sabbath day than in the effort to fulfill any other of its precepts. Peter characterized that law as a yoke "which neither we nor our fathers were able to bear." The result of the solemn consideration of this matter by the inspired apostles was recorded for our instruction. "For it seemed good to the Holy Ghost, and to us, to lay upon you [brethren which are of the Gentiles] no greater burden than these necessary things; that ye abstain from meats offered to idols, and from blood, and from things strangled, and from fornication; from which if ye keep yourselves, ye shall do well. Fare ye well."—Acts xv. 28, 29. Nothing is said about the observance of any day as a Sabbath. Neither can any precept or exhortation be found in the law of Christ by which the saints are authorized to do anything on one day which they are forbidden to do on any other day of natural time.

The whole time of their sojourn in the body belongs to their Redeemer and they are not at liberty to yield their members to the service of sin on any day; nor is there any moment when they do not owe implicit obedience to the perfect law of liberty which is written by the Lord in their hearts. Being bought with a price, they are not their own.

To the second question of our correspondent it is sufficient answer to say that there is no shadow of authority in the inspired Scriptures for changing the day to be observed as a Sabbath. Certainly the Jews who crucified Jesus did not consider his resurrection from the dead as requiring the change of that sabbatic law which was given their fathers by the hands of Moses. The immediate disciples of Jesus had no reason for adopting the type of that rest which was fulfilled in the revelation of the gospel day. Nowhere in the New Testament is the first day of the week designated as the Sabbath. Nor is there any portion of time set apart as peculiarly holy time to the church of Christ. The religious world who devise their own laws have established the observance of the first day of the week as what they call the christian Sabbath; but that very ordinance exposes their spurious profession, since there can be no ceremonial observance of days under the dispensation of the gospel rest. The saints are not under the bondage of the law of a carnal commandment; therefore they cannot give six days to unremitting labor, as was enjoined by the law of Moses. We know of no higher or older authority for the designation of Sunday as a Sabbath than the decree of the heathen emperor Constantine. When he claimed to become a believer in Christ he changed the doctrine to his own idolatrous system, and was as zealous in persecuting the saints after as before his professed conversion. The fact that he dared to establish by the power of the sword that which he called christianity, of itself shows that he was utterly ignorant of that God whom he professed to worship. Following in his false claim of christianity, all the Protestant daughters of the Roman hierarchy have united in the erroneous notion that the gospel church is but a modification of the Jewish organization. Evidently no truth can be built upon so false a foundation. Probably the substitution of the first instead of the seventh day for his Sabbath was made by that tyrant in order to humiliate the Jews. Certainly it was not done by the commandment of the King in Zion.

The typical design of the Sabbath as enjoined upon the nation of Israel was to bear witness that the last day should be the everlasting rest of all those for whom Jesus gave himself a ransom. So it is said, "There remaineth therefore a rest [marginal reading, "keeping of a Sabbath"] to the people of God. For he that is entered into his rest, he also hath ceased from his own works, as God did from his."—Heb. iv. 9, 10. This rest Jesus gives to every sinner who knows him as the end of the law for righteousness. Instead of the merely ceremonial Sabbath enjoined by the law of Moses, this rest is the everlasting deliverance of those to whom it is given; so that they are no more under the law, but under that infinite grace which shines in the face of Jesus Christ. "For we which have believed do enter into rest." Whenever those believers who have entered into this rest, resort to their own works for justification, they are guilty of Sabbath breaking in its true spiritual signification. As a consequence they invariably experience that death to all spiritual comfort of which the natural death in the type was a figure. It should be observed that every Israelite who died under the sentence of that law was still as nearly related to Abraham as before he sinned. Not all the iniquities of that rebellious people could result in separating them from their birth relationship. So, while the saints may die to the present enjoyment of that rest which is given them in Christ, they cannot cease to be the chosen subjects of that grace which secures their salvation from sin in the ultimate glory of their divine Redeemer. The true Sabbath day, as revealed in the gospel of the grace of God, is that everlasting day which was made by the Lord in his rising from the dead, as the Sun of righteousness, and as victorious over sin and death. In that resurrection he brought life and immortality to light through the gospel. In him all his members are now free from that law whose curse abides upon as many as are of its works. Their six days of labor are past, and they now have only to rest in the finished work of righteousness by which their Savior has satisfied the utmost requirement of the infinitely holy commandment of God. This is that glorious Sabbath day which was revealed in the resurrection of Jesus from the dead, and which can never end until time shall be no more. The saints are not required merely to give one day in seven to the keeping of this Sabbath. From the instant when they first hope in the grace of God for salvation, this Sabbath is continual with them so long as they sojourn in time. Indeed, they only fully realize its infinitely glorious rest when they awake with the likeness of their Lord beyond the power of sin and temptation, and in the throne of his immortal majesty behold him as he is. Until that appointed time, as strangers and pilgrims they must wander in this wilderness of sin; but their everlasting Sabbath is revealed from time to time by the faithful ministration of the Spirit of truth, who takes this abiding rest of Jesus, and shows it in their individual experience. This is the perfect Sabbath day in which every saint finds rest.

READ CAREFULLY.

WHEN two or more new subscribers are sent at the same time, in accordance with terms given in Supplement of April 12th, 1893, and one is in compliance with the second or third paragraph, and the others on terms given in fourth paragraph, it is very essential to state which name is sent according to terms of the second or third paragraph, as that name is credited to the end of 1893, while the others are credited one year from the time their subscription begins.

IT IS VERY IMPORTANT

That great care should be taken in sending a renewal of subscriptions to give us the same name as the one to whom the paper is already coming. If the party is married be sure the initials are given correctly; for if the paper is coming in the wife's name and the husband writes us to send the paper the next year, and signs his own name, we have no means of knowing that the person to whom the paper is going is his wife; and not finding his name on our list he is entered as a new subscriber and the paper sent to both; or if the paper is going in the husband's name and the renewal sent on in the wife's name, the result will be the same. The best way is to inclose in your letter one of the little pink slips containing the name pasted either on the margin of the paper or on the wrapper in which it comes.

LENGTHY OBITUARY NOTICES.

WHILE we feel to sympathize with those who are called to part with near and dear relatives and friends in death, yet we must request that in writing obituary notices they will be as brief as possible. A little reflection on this matter will, we think, be sufficient to show how unnecessary are long accounts of the minor incidents in the life of the deceased. Aside from the immediate friends of the subject of the notice they are not of general interest; and those to whom they are of any importance are about all acquainted with the facts without publishing them. A short notice is more likely to receive early insertion in the paper, as our obituary department as a rule is very much crowded; and it frequently occurs that owing to the extreme length of the notices, the publication of some are delayed for two or three numbers.

PLEASE STOP MY PAPER.

AT least nine out of every ten writing us to discontinue their paper add that it is not on account of their objection to anything the paper contains, but that they are not financially able to continue it. We would ask all such if they have taken into consideration the amount they have economized by stopping their paper. It is less than four-sevenths of a cent a day.

ORATION ONE.

MESSIAH'S CONSTITUTION FOR THE MISSIONARY ESTATE.

THEY are launched into a stormy sea, a sea of storms and shipwreck is before them, and their frail bark is not fenced nor fitted out for any storm, nor furnished for any voyage. So the world would say, because so it seemeth in the eye of the world, which looketh but upon the visible and temporal forms of things. It is madness, they would say, moonstruck madness, to think that of such should come any speed. It is not in the nature of things they should exist a week in any region of the earth, and in barbarous regions not a single day. No policy of insurance would do their risk at any premium. They are shipwrecked, castaway creatures, doomed to death, and destined to effect no good even if they should outlive their first outsetting. Men must have a livelihood before they can speak or act. They must have protection to cover them from the tyranny of power, and law to save them from the riots of the people. They must be well paid if you would have them work well, for if a man have no comforts his life is miserable. What! such mendicants as these convert the world? say the well-conditioned classes. Vagrant, vagabond fellows; they are fitter for the stocks or the common jail. Such illiterate clowns, such babblers as these, instruct mankind! say the learned classes; away with them to their nets and fishing-craft. And, say the political classes, it is dangerous to the state; they cover plots under their silly pretenses, and must be dealt with by the strong hand of power. * * *

But the Wonderful, Counsellor, in whom dwelt all the treasures of wisdom and of knowledge, and who knew what was in man, did not without good and sufficient cause divorce the human desires from those objects on which they naturally rest. He knew that if he gave the messengers of his kingdom, which is not of this world, and against which this world conspireth, to expect any ray of hope, any shadow of consolation or scantling of support from the things of this world, it would be only to disappoint them in the end; for though he foresaw that fair weather would dawn and much enjoyment be partaken in the progress and toward the latter end of the work, he saw, hanging over its first beginnings in every region of the earth, storms and tempests and terrific commotions, out of which the eclipsed light of truth was to come forth, and the day of peace to be established. He knew that in every realm his truth was to make way against the edge of the sword, and, like the phoenix, to procreate itself in the flame of fire, and that his servants were to be heard from the paw of the lion and from the horn of the unicorn; wherefore it booted not to amuse those who were to plant the plant, and those who were to propagate the plant, with the enjoyments which were to be partaken under its future shade; and he spoke plainly unto them, and said, If ye have not a heart for the extremes of human suffering, and a soul above the fear of man, ye need not undertake this work—more perilous than war, more adventurous than a voyage to "regions of thick-ribbed ice," and more important to the earth than the most sacred legation which ever went forth in behalf of suffering and insulted humanity.

But while he cut them off from the power and virtue of gold and silver, which, they say, will unlock barred gates and scale frowning ramparts; while he denied them the scrip, and therewith hindered the accumulation or use of property in any form; while he forbade them change of raiment, that is, pleasure and accommodation of the person; and with their staff interdicted all ease of travel and recreation of the sense by the way; and in hindering salutations hindered the formalities of life, and the ends of natural or social affection; all these the natural motives to enterprise and the sweet rewards of success; while he cut asunder, because, as hath been said, he foresaw that whether he did so or not, the world would soon do it for them; he did not leave their minds in a void state, without motive or inducement or hope of reward, but proceeded to fill each several chamber thereof with the spirit of a more enduring patience and a more adventurous daring; to give to faith what he took from sight; what he interdicted in the visible to supply from the invisible; what of temporal things he spoiled them of to repay with things spiritual and eternal.

And instead of a home he gave them this declaration, which raised them first to a footing with himself, and then to a footing with God: "He that receiveth you receiveth me, and he that receiveth me receiveth him that sent me. He that receiveth a prophet in the name of a prophet shall receive a prophet's reward; and he that receiveth a righteous man in the name of a righteous man, shall receive a righteous man's reward." Instead of food he gave them this promise, "Whoever shall give to drink unto one of these little ones a cup of cold water only in the name of a disciple, verily I say unto you, he shall in no wise lose his reward." Instead of protection and a safe conduct on the way he gave them this stout-hearted admonition, "Fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul: but rather fear him which is able to kill both soul and body in hell. Are not two sparrows sold for a farthing? and one of them shall not fall to the ground without your Father. But the very hairs of your head are all numbered. Fear ye not, therefore; ye are of more value than many sparrows." When delivered up to councils, and brought before governors and kings, instead of human help and countenance, and skill of pleading and persuasive words, he gave them this sentence: "When they deliver you up, take no thought how or what ye shall speak, for it shall be given you in that hour what ye shall speak. For it is not ye that speak, but the Spirit of your Father which speaketh in you." When their fathers and mothers should betray them, and their sons and daughters should spit upon them, which the first confessors sadly proved, he gave them this consolation to their heavy hearts: "He that loveth father or mother more than me is not worthy of me; and he that loveth son or daughter more than me is not worthy of me." For their sustenance under false accusation he gave them this comfort: "The disciple is not above his master, nor the servant above his lord. It is enough for the disciple that he be as his master, and the servant as his lord. If they have called the master of the house Beelzebub, how much more shall they call them of his household." For the comfort of their hearts under blackening calumnies, when their sun of life was setting under thick and dark clouds of falsehood, and their name was like to be overshadowed forever, he gave them this assurance: "There is nothing covered that shall not be revealed; and hid that shall not be known. What I tell you in darkness, that speak ye in light: what ye hear in the ear, that preach ye on the housetops." For their use when they were enveloped in the flames, or extended upon the honorable cross, he gave them this heart-establishing word: "He that taketh not his cross, and followeth after me, is not worthy of me. He that findeth his life shall lose it: and he that loseth his life for my sake shall find it." To keep up a constant cheerfulness in their hearts under every hardship and mistreatment he gave them to know and to rejoice that their names were written in heaven; removing their confidence from everything terrestrial, that it might rest at the right hand of God, where there is fullness of joy and pleasures forevermore.

Thus furnished he his missionaries, building them up in faith and establishing them with infallible promise, weaning them from the bosom of the earth, to place them in the bosom of their Father in heaven. He took them from the hands of human protection, to put them under the arm of the mighty God of Jacob. He emptied them of self-dependence and dependence upon human strength and prudence, to fill them with the Spirit of wisdom and truth. He bestowed upon them the elements of heaven's heroism when he took from them the elements of earth's heroism; and he conveyed their treasures away from hence, where moths corrupt and thieves break through to steal, depositing them safely in the heavens, where also he prepared for them a place in his Father's house of many mansions, and wrote their honored names in the book of life.

It was a spiritual work they had to do; therefore he disembodied (if I may so speak) and spiritualized the men who were to do it. * * * They had to deliver the nations from the idolatry of the gold and the silver; therefore he took care his messengers should have none. They had to deliver them from the idolatry of wisdom; therefore he took care they should be foolish. They had to deliver the world from the idolatry of power and might; therefore he took care they should be weak. They had to deliver the world from the idolatry of fame and reputation; therefore he took care they should be despised. They had to deliver the world from the idolatry of things that are; therefore he took care they should be as things that are not; making them in all respects types and representatives of the ritual they were to establish, models of the doctrine which they went forth to teach.

Such were the men, and such the spiritual-equipment of the men, who were sent forth by Messiah, the Missionary of heaven, into all the world, to teach all nations his discipline, baptize them into his faith, and lay the foundation of that spiritual kingdom which is to cast down every other kingdom and endure forever. The instructions which he gave them, how to proceed in the effecting of this great revolution, were after the same unearthly and spiritual strain; such as the wisdom of this world setteth utterly at naught, yet wherein are contained the everlasting principles, by which alone the spiritual sovereignty over the souls of men is to be established. When we come, in the progress of this discourse, to argue upon these premises whereof we are now making the statement, we hope to manifest unto the spiritual man, and somewhat to discover unto the natural man, that this, and this only is the strength in which the cross is to conquer and subdue the glory and the strength of the nations.

These instructions were in the following words: "Into whatsoever city or town ye enter, inquire who in it is worthy; and there abide till ye go thence. And when ye come into an house salute it. And if the house be worthy, let your peace come upon it: but if it be not worthy, let your peace return to you." They were not, like poor mendicants, to go from door to door and from town to town, craving a morsel of bread and a cup of water; but like the royal ambassadors of heaven to the place, they were to inquire who was worthy to be honored with their presence, and blessed with the good tidings which they bore from the Majesty of heaven. * * * There was to be no stealthy progress nor keeping in the shade, but open dealing with the most open-hearted and even-minded of the people. There was to be no preference of ranks shown by these men of no rank, who counted kindred with Messiah, the missionary of heaven, and were God's children and honored ambassadors to the earth. They were not, like the Jesuits, to lay their artful toils around the high and noble and princely of the nations; nor like the mendicant Friars, to go about preaching a crusade of poverty or meanness; nor were they to take their distinction by the grade of intellect or of taste, which compose, even at the best, but a fractional part of human nature, and may exist in strength surrounded with the most dwarfish and pestilent forms of the moral, social and spiritual man. * * *

"And if the Son of Peace be there, your peace will abide upon it." Before their steps proceeded an invisible minister called the Son of Peace, who settled in these worthy habitations, and made the souls of the inmates ready for these apostles of the kingdom of peace. This Son of Peace is none other than the Prince of Peace, who sealed his instructions to his missionaries and concluded his incarnate ministry with these words, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." The same who appeared to Cornelius in a dream, when he directed him to Peter, and who advertised Peter of the approach of the messengers, after he had prepared him for their coming; who directed Philip to the eunuch while he crossed the desert, and caught him away when his work was done; who appeared to Paul as he journeyed to Damascus, and afterward, in the likeness of a Macedonian, invited his blessed steps to our quarter of the globe, saying, "Come over and help us." And to this day, wherever the true and faithful missionary proceedeth in the faith of Christ, this same Son of Peace goeth before his footsteps, and standeth him instead of sealed letters, forerunner and guide, instead of safe conduct and welcome, and everything else with which the prudence of men would furnish his perilous way; without dependence upon which Child of Peace, the missionary is a vagrant and a vagabond upon the earth; being dependent upon whom, he is the most gracious legate of heaven, never to return to heaven without accomplishing the high and holy intention for which he is commissioned of heaven to go forth unto the nations.

some time. I would try to put them off by going into company, but could not. If I had one moment of pleasure, it seemed that I had hours of trouble for it. I traveled on in this way for a little over a year, when it was meeting time again, and I went. It seemed to me that I could not stay away from meeting, and yet I felt that I was such a sinner that there was no help for me; but I resolved to do all the good I could, for I thought I must work myself into God's favor. Well, this meeting was the communion. O, brethren, here language fails to express my feelings, while they were administering the Lord's supper. It seemed to me that they were the most beautiful people I ever saw, and O how I longed to be with them; but it seemed to me that there was a deep gulf between them and me, so that it was impossible for me ever to cross. I went home sorrowing. I set new resolutions, that I would try to do all I could. I tried to pray, but could say nothing more than "Lord, have mercy on me, a sinner." I concluded that there was no mercy for me, that my case was an outside case. I had spent all of my store, I had tried all of my means, and all was a miserable failure. I was here made to see my works all as filthy rags. On Tuesday night after the meeting spoken of, I went to my room. I tried to pray, but it seemed I could not, so I went to bed. I felt I should never see the sun rise again. I tried to go to sleep, but could not. I felt like this surely was the last night on earth for me, and the thought of dying in this state of mind was fearful beyond description. I was sitting up in bed, and thought I would once more try to pray. I tried to form a prayer, as I felt it was my last; but I could say nothing. It seemed that these words were put into my mouth, "Lord, save, or I perish." If ever words were spoken from the heart these were, for I felt that they were all that would apply to my case. Then it seemed to me that there was a light that shone around me, brighter than the sun, and a voice that said, "Thy sins are pardoned." I then, for the first time in all my life, really praised God. O! I felt so happy. I thought I could tell everybody how Jesus could save sinners. O how I wished it was morning, for I wanted to tell the glad news to all the family, father and mother especially. I loved everybody, and wanted to tell it to all around me. I thought my troubles were all over, and that I could praise God the balance of my days. I wanted to go to the church and tell them what great things the Lord had done for me; but ere long the tempter came and told me that I was deceived. I tried to get my troubles back, that I might know how they were taken from me; but those troubles never returned to me; but I have had many troubles since then, for I was a disobedient child, and did not go home to my friends and tell them what great things the Lord had done for me, but kept putting it off from time to time, waiting to get better; and sometimes the tempter would tell me that I needed a brighter evidence, and the church would not receive me. Well, I traveled on in this way for about eighteen years, and still got no better. It seemed to me that the tempter used every means to deceive me, and to take advantage of my weakness. At one time I was almost persuaded that there was no reality in religion. If ever a poor soul was plunged into deep darkness it was I. Yes, it was darkness so thick that I could feel it. It seemed that the little spark of my hope was almost gone. O how humbly I prayed God to give me strength to withstand the tempter's snares. I made faithful promises to God to take up my cross and follow him; so the first opportunity I had, I went to the church, when the door was opened for reception of members. What I told the church I cannot say. I know I did not tell them what I thought I would; but to my surprise I was received into the church on Saturday, and was baptized on Sunday by Elder William P. Robison. I believe I came up out of the water rejoicing. I know I felt very happy. But I have had very many troubles since then; yet the still small voice often whispers, "Peace, be still," to my troubled soul. Yes, dear brethren and sisters, I have never entirely lost sight of that blessed light that once shone around me, although sometimes it seems almost hid in a mist.

Dear brethren, this is the reason of my hope in Christ Jesus. Your very little sister,

A. GWARTNEY.

GIRARDVILLE, Pa., Jan., 1893.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—The following lines are at your disposal. I received them in a letter from sister Wells, of Canada. I think her many friends will be pleased to see these heart-musings in the SIGNS. This beloved sister and mother in Israel has drank deeply of the waters of Marah. She has also partaken abundantly of the pure Fountain, springing up into everlasting life; and by faith she has seen the King in his beauty, and beheld the land that is very far off. She is now waiting for the fullness of joy in that blessed home, where all tears are wiped away and sorrow is never known. In that beautiful city the inhabitants shall no more say, "I am sick," nor the form bend under the weight of years, nor the bloom of youth vanish away. There the raiment will never grow old, for the seamless robe of purity, prepared for those who came out of great tribulation, will be never-fading ever new. What hallowed peace and sweet repose on that celestial shore! What rapturous joy for John when he was carried away in the spirit to a great and high mountain, where he saw the holy city, New Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, "having the glory of God: and her light was like unto a stone most precious, even like a jasper stone, clear as crystal;" and there was no night there.

"Glorious dwelling of the holy, where no grief nor gloom of sin Through the pure and pearly portals evermore shall enter in.
Christ its light and God its temple, Christ its song of endless laud;
O what precious consummation of the precious things of God!"

In love and sweet fellowship for the household of faith, I remain an unworthy sister in a blessed hope.
BESSIE DURAND.

MEDITATIONS.

'Twas in the silent hours of night, my thoughts did upward fly;
Strait is the road, and narrow too, which leads to joys on high.

While musing on the rapturous scene my spirit seemed to glow;
I longed to mount and soar away from this vain world of woe.

Lord, guide me through life's pilgrimage, till thou shalt bid me come,
The hosts to join in notes sublime in that most glorious home.

Full many are the sorrows which unto my lot do fall,
But thy sweet mercies, O my God, by far exceed them all.

O may my soul on the blest Lamb be now and ever stayed,

Who for my sins on Calvary a sacrifice was made;

And may I ever bear in mind what love
for me hath done,

Thou ever-blessed Lamb of God, my God's beloved Son.

And when my spirit is called home, my body in the tomb,

It will by God's own power be kept till he again shall come,

In hope, when the last trumpet sounds,
my sleeping dust he'll raise,

In life and immortality, his glorious name to praise.

For that blest hour O may I wait, and ever patient be,

In hope to see thy smiling face through all eternity;

Then with adoring saints shall I, with the angelic band,

Behold thy wondrous, better land, and in thy presence stand.

BOZEMAN, Montana, Mar. 23, 1893.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—Please publish in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES that there is a Primitive Baptist Church in Gallatin County, Montana. It is situated seven miles southwest of Bozeman. The meetings are held in the Phipps school-house. We meet once a month, on Saturday before the second Sunday. We have no ordained minister, and would be very glad if it were the Lord's will for one to come to us. We have a good country. We are few in number, but feel there is a prospect of a large church here when we shall have a minister. I ask the prayers of all God's people.

Your sister,

OBITUARY NOTICES.

Rebecca Garland was born June 19th, 1799, and departed this life July 16th, 1892, aged 93 years and 27 days.

Her husband, Jacob Garland, departed this life Nov. 6th, 1874, aged 79 years, 10 months and 10 days. They were members of the Sidling Hill Old School Baptist Church for a great many years. Her funeral was preached by Elder E. V. White, at the Juniata Association, on Friday morning, Oct. 14th, 1892, from the last clause of Isaiah iv. 3. She was the mother of eight children (six sons and two daughters), three sons and one daughter being present at the funeral. The last daughter died in November. Three of us children survive her; also thirty-two grandchildren (thirteen are dead) and forty-two great-grandchildren (five are dead). Her mind was good until her last sickness, which lasted five weeks. She was strong in the faith, salvation by grace alone, and not by works of the creature, but by that God who rules heaven and earth.

NEEDMORE, Pa.

I AM requested to send you an obituary, for publication in the SIGNS, of an aged and worthy citizen, Mr. Norval Silcott, who died Feb. 9th, 1893.

By reason of strength of constitution he had passed fourscore years, being in his eighty-third year, and had enjoyed good health until the last two or three years, when his health began and continued to fail until the end came. Mr. Silcott was not a member of the church, but seemed to be exercised at times on the subject of salvation, but whether he experienced a good hope through grace I know not; but it is known to him who is a discernor of the thoughts and intents of the heart, and with whom we have to do.—Heb. v. 12, 13. He was honest in his dealings, was a good neighbor, and provided well for his family.

He left a large circle of relatives and friends, who miss him, but none so much as his aged widow (sister Silcott), six daughters (two of whom are also sisters in the church) and two sons, to whom we tender our sympathy, with the desire and prayer that the Lord may give them resignation to his will.

Lucy B. Goodall died at the residence of her daughter, Cynthia A. Goodall, in South Pella, Iowa, March 7th, 1893, aged 81 years, 2 months and 21 days. The funeral services were conducted by the pastor of the Methodist Church. Elder Wm. J. Reeves, her former pastor, could not be reached in time, or the services would have been conducted by him. The remains were laid away in the Oakland cemetery, in the family lot of Mr. D. S. Huber, her son-in-law.

Grandmother Goodall had lived in Pella for a number of years, making her home of late with her daughter Cynthia, who lived near Mrs. Huber, so that she could pass the time at either place. This good, quiet old lady was greatly respected and loved by all with whom she came in contact, and had for her friends an entire neighborhood, all of whom, both old and young, will sadly miss her. Four of her daughters and her son, Dr. W. W. Goodall, of Chicago, Ill., were at her bedside at the time of her death. Two other daughters, one in Van Buren Co., Iowa, and one in Colorado, were unable to be present. The children will mourn the absence of a kind, faithful and indulgent parent; but their hearts are comforted and cheered by the assurance that the mother has passed on before to the possession of an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and fading not away. With the utmost faith and confidence in the promise of God, and a firm adherence to the teaching of the church of her choice, she lived and died. She has now obeyed the summons, and heard the voice that said to her, "Well done, good and faithful servant; enter thou into the joys of thy Lord."

Brethren Beebe, the above was sent me for publication in the SIGNS. I fully agree with you that such notices should be short. I wish to add a few words. I was present when our sister was received into the fellowship of the Bound Prairie Church, near Fairfield, Iowa, and she was a member of that church at the time of her death. For several years she has been living near and attending my old home church. We all will miss her; but our loss is her gain.

BARNES, Iowa, March 23, 1893.

DIED—Nov. 5th, 1892, E. J. Jarrel, wife of J. R. Jarrel, at her residence in Panola Co., Texas, of cancer in the stomach. She was born in Jasper Co., Ga., April 26th, 1836, and with her parents, McCalister and Frances Williamson, moved to Texas about the year 1856. She was married in 1858, professed a hope in Christ about 1870, and united with the Primitive Baptist Church at Clayton soon after. She was baptized by the late Elder Brassfield, of Rusk Co., Texas, and lived fully up to the profession she then made. She was always ready, willing and able to defend the doctrine of the church and Bible, and to refute the God-dishonoring religion of modern practice, which gives God only a part of the glory of saving sinners. She always maintained that it was a minister's duty to feed the sheep, and not to make them. She had a bright evidence of her deliverance from sin and bondage, and it grew brighter in her last days. She seemed anxious to be released from her suffering, and to be with her Master, in whom she put her trust. Her house was always open to entertain the ministry and brethren generally, and never tired in her works of charity as long as she was able to do anything at all. About fifteen or twenty years ago she felt a very small lump growing just under the skin on her right breast, which continued to grow gradually until three or four years ago, when it got to be larger than a hen's egg. By advice of the home doctors I carried her to New Orleans and had it removed. She soon recovered, and to all appearances was well; but we soon realized our disappointment, as it returned internally. She lost all appetite, and what she did eat failed to agree with her, until she was almost skin and bones without flesh. Her sufferings were beyond endurance, except by the grace of God. She endured it with great fortitude. In her last sickness she often spoke of sister Mary Parker, and greatly sympathized with her. We did all we could to relieve her, and to keep her here with us; but we could not stay the hand of death, which we tried to do with all our might. I know she has ceased from her sufferings now, but it is hard to be reconciled to God's ways in dealing with our loved ones.

She leaves many friends and relatives in Texas and Georgia to grieve after her departure; but I hope we may all be as ready, prepared and willing to obey the summons as she was. She had long been a subscriber to the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, and a lover of the doctrine it advocates, and always reminded me of remitting before the subscription expired.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date. This date denotes the time at which your subscription expires; and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

CORRESPONDENCE.

JOHN XI. 37.

"AND some of them said, Could not this man, which opened the eyes of the blind, have caused that even this man should not have died?"

DEAR BRETHREN:—The words of this question have been resting with force upon my mind for some days, and have suggested some reflections which have been pleasant to me, and which I trust have led me some little way into the great deep of the will and ways of God toward those whom he loves; and so what I have thus seen and rejoiced in I feel to pen down as best I may for the readers of the SIGNS. I seldom feel like making any apologies in speaking or writing, for if the matter be of God it needs no apology; and if it be not of God it should not be spoken nor written. It always seems to me needless to say that I have written or spoken the message but poorly, for we never shall be able to speak in a manner worthy so vast a theme. "As of the ability that God giveth," seems to me an expression that covers all the ground of what we need desire or expect.

The question of the text has seemed to me to be one of those expressions which in certain circumstances arise from all our hearts, and in which we learn our common weakness and common perplexity and common sorrow. By it we learn that men in the presence of great sorrow and trial then felt the same questionings and perplexities that we do now. God's ways to them were a great deep, as they are to us now. As they asked in their sorrow and blindness, Why is this as it is? so do we. As they questioned, Is God weak, or is he unfeeling, that he does not hear and answer us? so do we. As looking back to the ages that are past we find that the questions of men's hearts were the same as ours, so also we find that when answers were given they were also the same as ours. The question of the text is answered in the narrative. Let us consider the narrative, the question and the answer.

Jesus was beyond Jordan, in the place where John had baptized (x. 40), having departed from Jerusalem, where he had been teaching. In Bethany, which was near Jerusalem, in the home of Lazarus, Mary and Martha, there had arisen trouble and anxiety. Lazarus was sick, and the sisters sent unto Jesus, saying, "He whom thou lovest is sick." How simple was the message, and yet how profound! They did not say, He who loves thee is sick, but, "He whom thou lovest." This was all. They did not say, Come and save him. They added nothing to the simple message. What need of adding more? Did not Jesus love their brother? Would not this tender and mighty love bring him at once to their help? Surely it could need no multiplied words of urgent beseeching to bring to them the Master, who had never turned a deaf ear to the cry of any. If he had healed the many who were strangers to him at their slightest call for help, surely he would hasten to the relief of one whom he loved and had called his friend; and so in full and perfect confidence in both his love and his power they sent just the message, "He whom thou lovest is sick." Jesus, when he heard that, said, "This sickness is not unto death, but for the glory of God, that the Son of God might be glorified thereby." "Not unto death!" Yet Lazarus did die. What did he mean? Jesus was not mistaken. He knew what great work the Father had for him to do; and yet he said, "This sickness is not unto death." What was it for then? If not designed to take away the life of Lazarus, what was its design? To glorify God and his Son Jesus Christ, is the answer. That is, the ultimate design was this. His sickness and death both had this end in view. The language of Jesus means that no harm was designed for Lazarus, but, on the contrary, the most glorious design of all, viz., that through him the name of God should be magnified. Jesus did not, therefore, say that he should not die; but the design of his sickness reaches beyond this, and through this dark and bitter way it shall redound to the glory of God.

There is a peculiarity in the statements of the fifth and sixth verses that seems to me very striking. It is said, "Now Jesus loved Martha, and her sister, and Lazarus. When he had heard therefore that he was sick, he abode two days still in the same place where he was." Does not the word "therefore" say that he abode in the place where he was two days because he loved the sisters and their brother? He tarried because he loved them. To come at once and heal their brother would not be as great a display of his power and goodness as he would display when their brother should have died. Is not this what the word "therefore" in the sixth verse implies? Is it not true that love withholds as well as grants? Does not love often wait for the greater good, instead of granting the inferior good at once? To wait that he may be merciful, and to tarry that he may be gracious, is often the Lord's way. The highest good that he can confer is to reveal himself, and often he waits until we are prepared by his discipline for this revelation; and so, because he loves us, he tarries, perhaps many days.

But now, in answering the question of the text, let us consider some other things. In the fifteenth verse Jesus said, "Lazarus is dead. And I am glad for your sakes that I was not there, to the intent ye may believe." Does not this bear out the thought suggested above, that he tarried because he loved the sorrowing family, and he also loved his disciples? He had in store a greater miracle than to heal Lazarus could have been. It was such a miracle as should attest his divine power, and confirm the faith of his disciples, soon to be so sorely tried at the cross and at the tomb. This was the crowning miracle of all his human life. He gave life to the dead; and the closing part of this eleventh chapter tells us how this wondrous miracle of power and goodness was the open door by which he entered the sorrowful way that ended at the bar of Pilate and the cross. Immediately upon the scene which gloriously attested that God was indeed manifest in his flesh, came following the scene which attested that he was, as he had claimed, the Son of man as well as the Son of God. The display of divine power was followed by the display of human weakness; for "he was crucified through weakness."—2 Cor. xiii. 4. Thus could he rejoice for their sakes that he was not there, because he had a better thing in store for them. What this better thing was we learn still further on in the chapter. In the twenty-fifth verse Jesus said to Martha, "I am the resurrection and the life." In the fortieth verse he said to Martha again, "Said I not unto thee, that, if thou wouldest believe, thou shouldest see the glory of God?" Was not this glory made manifest in the raising up again of Lazarus as it had not been displayed before? Was not the Son of God made manifest as the resurrection and the life, to his own infinite glory and praise? Here Jesus made known the deepest mysteries of his divine and human life. Here at the grave of Lazarus was the culminating display of all the power and grace that was poured out upon him. It was for this that he waited yet two days. It was because of this that he said, "I am glad for your sakes that I was not there."

Thus I have feebly and brokenly sketched the narrative given in this wonderful chapter. Leaving this, let us come to the question of the text, "Could not this man, which opened the eyes of the blind, have caused that even this man should not have died?" This was said by some of the people. In their case it was a question; but we are told (verse 21) that when Martha met him she said, "Lord, if thou hadst been here, my brother had not died." In the thirty-second verse Mary, falling down at his feet, also said the same. The people put their thought in the form of a question, but the sisters were sure of his power to save. With them there seemed a sorrowful wonder, almost a reproach, tender and loving it is true, but yet with the accent of reproach in it, "Lord, if thou hadst been here, my brother had not died." Of the people there would be some who would doubt his power; and because he had not come and healed the man whom he loved they would begin to call in question everything that he had done. Others would question both his pity and his power. Men only look at the surface. Unregenerate men can look no deeper. Even the raising of Lazarus revealed nothing of the true Jesus to them, and so they hastened on the work of the betrayal and the crucifixion. This question in their mouths would mean much the same as the reproach which they hurled at him a little later, "He saved others, himself he cannot save." But the sisters believed on him and loved him, and knew his love to them and their brother, and they could not doubt his power nor his pity; and they confess all the awful mystery which is in their minds by saying, "Lord, if thou hadst been here, my brother had not died." In all the anguish of their bereavement the question will still come up, Why was not the Master here? Why did he let our brother die? We loved him so. He was so much to us. And Jesus loved him also. Why did he not spare us our brother? He saved others; why not hear our cry and heed our distress? It is the old questioning, and yet from the heart of every sorrowing disciple it comes up ever new; and though answered a thousand times, it must needs be answered again and yet again. There was no want of trust in their hearts, only they could not understand. It was his absence and his long delay to come to them that perplexed them. Their hearts turned to him still. They could turn to no one else. It is the common voice of sorrow and pain, which was full of awful mystery to David and Job as well as to them, that they utter. He gave sight to the blind; he could have caused that our brother should not have died. Why did he not heal him? Why must he be absent? Why did he delay when we needed him so?

Now what is the answer? The greater miracle. Is not this all the answer that was needed? For their good and for the glory of God. Was not this twofold reason sufficient? Is it not always sufficient to answer all our questioning? There have been times when I think I have felt it to be so. Could not Jesus have caused that this man should not have died? Yes and no. Yes, if we regard simply the power of Jesus. No, if we consider all that was involved, all that was meant. Jesus had healed the sick many times. This he was constantly doing. But this one man he would not come and heal, because he had for him a more glorious salvation, a more glorious display of divine power. He did not work the lesser miracle, because he would work the greater. This, it seems to me, is the answer.

If we turn to the Bible record we shall find that this was not a strange thing; that is, it was not entirely diverse from God's common way of dealing with his people and manifesting his glory. Thus he dealt with Joseph, with the children of Israel in Egypt, in bondage and oppressed, with David, Daniel, the three Hebrew children in the furnace, with Paul, and with hosts of others who were tortured, not accepting deliverance, that they might obtain a better resurrection. In all these instances our God did not bring a present deliverance, but he waited, that he might be all the more glorious before his people.

From this there are to be learned some lessons suited to our daily need that I desire to briefly allude to. Many of us mourn and are greatly troubled at the present low estate of our Zion. To our short sight all looks gloomy, and we are full of fearful forebodings. The love of many waxes cold; the numbers that come to the sanctuary grow less; carnality and worldliness abound; debates, questionings and differences multiply; brethren seem easily moved to impatience against each other; the watchmen are passing away, and but few are called to take their place; and so from hearts anxious and sorrowful the cry goes up, Why does our God tarry? Is he careless of our low estate, or does he love and pity those who trust in him? These have been my questionings much of late. Why does he not come and heal our backslidings, and rebuke the destroyer for our sakes? Why does he delay his coming? Often it seems all dark, and I cannot understand; but as I have communed with this theme there has come a ray of light. I do not know how nor when; I do not care to know. But it seems to me that I can believe that somewhere, somehow, our God has something richer and better for his people than a present answer to their request could be; and I can believe that whenever our God seems to wait it is that he may be more richly gracious to his church and cause.

In this theme there is also a lesson of patience and waiting for all the people of God in all their trials and sorrows. How many, like sister Mary Parker, have suffered lingeringly for years, while they and their friends have again and again called upon God for healing and help; but seemingly no attention has been given them. Is there not in this theme the solution for every such case? God has in store a greater miracle. Could he not heal this one as he has healed others? Why does he not heal the afflicted one so dear to us all, and so dear to him? O, brother or sister in affliction, be sure that he has some better thing in store for thee than to make thee well. What it is I may not know and you may not know, but he knows; and at the best time, the right time, his own time, he will reveal in you his glory. This is the right road to that glory. This is the lowly road, which royal feet have trod before us, and which by the way of the cross leads to the crown; and all this is in harmony with the words of Paul, written years afterward out of the experience of his own care-laden and afflicted life, "For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory; while we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen: for the things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal."

A last reflection in my mind is this. Jesus had often wrought the lesser miracles. He had often healed the sick, and had caused that they did not die. He had held Lazarus himself in life up to this appointed time. Now he ceases to do the lesser work, that he may show his power in a greater degree; and so our lives are prolonged. Jesus has kept us from a million dangers, and we ask to be still kept; but the time will come when it will be best for us to die, and God will cease to work these daily miracles with which we have grown so familiar that we hardly think of them. Then nothing remains but to comfort our hearts with the thoughts of the future life and the resurrection, the greater miracle. So Jesus loves us all the same, whether we live or die; for if we die it is that we may live again, and that life is better than this.

I leave these thoughts. May God bless them to the comfort of some troubled one.

I remain your brother in Christ,
F. A. CHICK.

REISTERSTOWN, Md., April 5, 1893.

135 BROADWAY, CINCINNATI, Ohio,
March 7, 1893.

BRETHREN BEEBE:—While walking through the city a few evenings since I saw the most remarkable sign over a door that I had ever seen. It was in these words, "Sons of God. Chartered 1891. Rev. John T. Cafford, President." Instantly this inquiry suggested itself to me, By what authority was that organization created? I could arrive at no other conclusion than that it was organized under the laws of Ohio. The date of its charter was given, 1891. But it occurred to me that infidelity was boldly written upon it. Surely the language of the inspired apostle was fully verified by those under whose direction that sign was written. "There is none righteous, no, not one; there is none that understandeth; there is none that seeketh after God. They are all gone out of the way; they are together become unprofitable; there is none that doeth good, no, not one. Their throat is an open sepulchre; with their tongues they have used deceit; the poison of asps is under their lips; their mouth is full of cursing and bitterness."—Rom. iii. 10-14. Evidently those thus described have not that faith which worketh by love; that faith without which it is impossible to please God, who is from everlasting to everlasting, who is infinite in all his glorious attributes, and who is the everlasting Father. Those who behold him in his great and wonderful character rejoice to know that he is God and changes not. They rest and trust in him, and their most earnest prayers are to know more and more of the superlative glories that are revealed to his saints by the Spirit. They need not worldly organizations chartered in pursuance with the laws of man. They need not the power and influence of those who vainly place the prefix "Rev." before their names. They loathe the thought of having men clothed with the authority of "Presidents" to rule over them in spiritual things. They desire none to rule over them but him of whom Moses spake, saying, "He is the Rock, his work is perfect; for all his ways are judgment; a God of truth and without iniquity, just and right is he."—Deut. xxxii. 4. They rejoice to know that he hath said; "Thus saith the high and lofty One, that inhabiteth eternity, whose name is holy; I dwell in the high and holy place, with him also that is of a contrite and humble spirit, to revive the spirit of the humble, and to revive the heart of the contrite ones."—Isa. lvii 15. His great and wonderful character causes them to rejoice, knowing that he in infinite wisdom, love and mercy indited the everlasting covenant of redemption, ordered in all things and sure; a covenant in which is secured the redemption and final glorification of all the "sons of God;" all who were chosen in him before the foundation of the world; chosen in the everlasting love of God; the contemplation of which caused his ancient servant to cry out, in an ecstasy of joy, "Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God. Therefore the world knoweth us not, because it knew him not."—1 John iii. 1. What a contrast! The world knows all the members of that society which was chartered in 1891, because they are all enrolled in the books of that organization. But that loving apostle said, "The world knoweth us not, because it knew him not." Even Israel, his covenant people, knew him not. "He came to his own, and his own received him not." They knew him not because his kingdom is not of this world. They were not born of that incorruptible seed which liveth and abideth forever. Not being born again, they could not see that kingdom nor know the subjects thereof, for the reason that the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit; and all the subjects of that kingdom are manifested in it by being born of the Spirit. During his humiliation the world persecuted him, because they knew him not; and the same world has persecuted his saints from the days of Abel to the present time, because they knew them not. The world does not know them, because they ascribe salvation unto the Lord, and say it is not by works of righteousness which we have done, but by the washing of regeneration and renewing of the Holy Ghost. It is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that showeth mercy. Therefore they give unto the Lord the glory due unto his name, and bring an offering into his courts; an offering of a contrite heart and broken spirit. But while they mourn on account of sin, and long to be holy, even as God is holy, they look not to the world to heal the wounds that sin hath made, or wipe away the tears that sorrow for sin has caused to flow. O no. They look away to that fountain foretold by the prophet in these words, "In that day there shall be a fountain opened to the house of David and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem for sin and for uncleanness."—Zech. xiii. 1. That day was the day in which the mountain of the Lord's house was established in the top of the mountains, and exalted above the hills; and that fountain was the fountain of the Redeemer's blood, which cleanseth from all sin; that blood of which the elder spake to John, saying, "These are they which came up out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb."—Rev. vii. 13. These are the "sons of God," and look not to earthly organizations, nor to the Reverend Presidents thereof; but they look away to Mount Zion, the city of the living God; that Jerusalem which is free, and is the mother of us all; that great city which hath foundations, whose maker and builder is God. The prophet in foretelling the setting up of the kingdom of God, the church, said, "And many people shall go and say, Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths; for out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem."—Isa. ii. 3. The pronoun "us" in that quotation personates the "sons of God," who are heirs to the glorious inheritance of the saints; and the contrast between them and those over whom the "Reverend John Cafford" presides in Cincinnati is as wide as immensity of space. The one are those whose names were written in the Lamb's book of life from the foundation of the world, while the others had their names written to their charter in 1891, and have as their leader and president one who has affixed to his name the word Reverend, which alone belongs to the name of the great I Am. That word is recorded but once in the sacred volume, in these words, "He sent redemption unto his people; he hath commanded his covenant forever; holy and reverend is his name."—Psa. cxi. 9. Then evidently infidelity, pride and vanity are the most prominent characteristics of all those who are claiming to be the "sons of God" in earthly organizations established and maintained under human laws. But the word reverend is derived from the word revere or reverence; and surely reverence is alone due to him who is holy, heavenly and divine. "Thus saith the Lord, Cursed be the man that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arm, and whose heart departeth from the Lord."—Jer. xvii. 5. This language of the prophet commends itself to the careful consideration of all the saints. Here a curse is pronounced against all who trust in man, and is a fearful warning to us all. It relates to the saints in spiritual things, and should be received as a warning to us all against that fearful unbelief that leads our carnal natures to look to other sources for help than the great God, who upholds all things by his mighty power. But more especially should the saints be warned against looking to poor finite mortals, knowing that the carnal mind is enmity against God. That enmity was made manifest when the glorious Son of God appeared upon the earth in accord with the eternal purpose of God. He was holy, harmless, separate from sinners; yet he was followed step by step, as he advanced in his ministry, by relentless persecution, till he passed through the mournful scenes of Gethsemane and the tortures of Calvary. Ah, how the hearts of the dear saints throb with the deepest sorrow when they remember that all his sorrows and sufferings were because of their sins. The prophet says, "But he was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities, the chastisement of our peace was upon him, and with his stripes we are healed."—Isa. liii. 5. Condemnation and misery were theirs by reason of sin, and the wages of sin is death. All his sufferings were endured by him to remove the awful malady of sin. He gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity. In that great work he went forth unaided by man. He says by the prophet, "I have trodden the winepress alone, and of the people there was none with me: for I will tread them in mine anger, and trample them in my fury; and their blood shall be sprinkled upon my garments, and I will stain all my raiment. For the day of vengeance is in mine heart, and the year of my redeemed is come."—Isa. lxiii. 3, 4. That year is the period of which the prophet speaks, saying, "Behold, I will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me; and the Lord, whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple, even the messenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in: behold, he shall come saith the Lord of hosts."—Mal. ii. 1. The Jews claimed to be the sons of God; but when the Messenger of the covenant came to his temple they knew him not. While they seemed to revere the law and the prophets, yet they were ignorant of the wise teachings which they contained. They understood them not, because they were carnally minded, and were not of his sheep. He said to them, "But ye believe not, because ye are not of my sheep, as I said unto you. My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me. And I give unto them eternal life, and they shall never perish."—John x. 26-28. In this our Lord personated the true character of the sons of God. Of them the apostle declares, "Because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying, Abba, Father."—Gal. iv. 6. That Spirit was eternal life, which he gave unto them. That life was secured to them by the everlasting redemption which existed alone in the Lord Jesus Christ. John says, "And when he had taken the book, the four beasts and four and twenty elders fell down before the Lamb, having every one of them harps, and golden vials full of odors, which are the prayers of the saints. And they sung a new song, saying, Thou art worthy to take the book and to open the seals thereof; for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood, out of every kindred and tongue and people and nation, and hast made us unto our God kings and priests, and we shall reign on the earth."—Rev. v. 8-10. The great plan of redemption was recorded in that book, and none were able to open the seals thereof till the Messenger of the covenant came to his temple. But when he came to make that great offering for sin, he by that offering opened the seven seals of that book. All had been dark and shadowy, but now the glorious Sun of righteousness had come, clothed with power to redeem his people and make them kings and priests unto God. But the four beasts, the four evangelists, which bore to the saints in all coming time the testimony of our Lord and his wonderful works during his incarnation, and the four and twenty elders, the twelve tribes of Israel, to whom the law was given, which bore testimony by its types of the coming of the great Messiah, and the twelve apostles, who were endured from on high to preach the everlasting gospel, fell down before the Lamb, having every one of them harps, and golden vials full of odors, which are the prayers of the saints. O how precious and sweet are those odors! When the humble follower of Jesus is made by divine grace to know his great needs, to know the deep pollutions of sin, he looks to none other for help than his glorious Lord. He seeks him in prayer, in supplication, in waiting on him in all his appointed ways. He waits upon him, having this comforting assurance, "They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength." How precious are their prayers, held in golden vials, which never corrode or become corrupt. But the beasts and the elders fall down before the Lamb. The law had by its types foretold his coming and his sufferings, and the four evangelists had recorded his advent, his sufferings, his death, and his triumphant resurrection; and now they behold him alive for evermore, far above the legal heaven, shining in resplendent glory in the gospel heaven, giving life, light and glory to his redeemed. What they had recorded in the law and in the four gospels was all in the language of mortals; but now in holy vision they behold him in his exaltation. He had opened that book, he had loosed the seven seals thereof, and thereby made manifest to his regenerated sons and daughters his seven divine perfections, which shine in undimmed effulgence in the redemption, preparation and final glorification of all his redeemed. So all the dear saints, when they by faith are enabled to behold his holy triumph over all the powers of darkness, fall down before him, beholding him in his more than wonderful character, by the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ; all, all they need while in their earthly pilgrimage, and all they will want throughout eternity. They then will be like him, and will see him as he is. But they fall down before him while clothed with mortality, and love and adore him. These are the true sons of God, who come up out of great tribulation, and wash their robes in the blood of the Lamb, and give to their adored Lord and King all the glory.

I am approaching closely the eighty-first mile-post in the journey of life; hence all I write or say must be feeble and uninteresting to the dear saints; but if this is published they will please bear with me in my infirmities, and in charity look over my errors and mistakes. But I am daily brought under great obligation to adore him from whom all blessings flow for blessing me with unusual good health for one of my age, and subscribe myself truly yours in christian love,

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—Once more I write to send you the name of a new subscriber. Thanks be to the good Lord, there are some in this place who love the dear old SIGNS OF THE TIMES for the truth's sake. It is all the preaching we get here. At times I am much cast down, feeling there has never been any change in this simple heart of mine, and that I have deceived the dear children of the Lord. Then the SIGNS will come, perhaps, with a letter from some of the dear little ones, which will take hold of my poor, fainting heart, and once more I am made to rejoice in the goodness and mercy of the all-wise Father, who ever watches over his children, no matter how far away they wander.

The cold winds of winter have passed away, and again we are permitted to breathe the sweet calm of the gentle spring. I feel, when I am once more permitted to taste the sweet calm that follows after a bitter storm, that I will never again doubt the Lord's loving care. But O how soon I am again back in the wilderness of woe. I know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose. But do I love him?

"Tis a point I long to know,
Oft it causes anxious thought,
Do I love the Lord or no?
Am I his, or am I not?"

I believe our pathway is marked out for us; and no matter how dark and thorny the way, we must travel on. Yet I go murmuring and complaining, although I would be otherwise if I could.

The new subscriber whose name I send you is a New School Baptist minister. He has been a reader of the SIGNS for a long time, and says brother Chick's writings alone are worth the price of the paper, as they have been a great comfort to him. It is not natural for any one to love the SIGNS unless they know the truth.

My dear brother William, how my heart goes out to the time when you preached at Frying Pan, Fairfax Co., Va., four years ago last August. What a glorious sermon you preached that day. When you gave out that precious hymn, "All hail the power of Jesus' name," &c., I thought

G. BEEBE'S SONS:—Will you give your views on Gal. iii. 8?

TOWN BLUFF, Texas, Dec. 11, 1892.

REPLY.

"And the scripture, foreseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith, preached before the gospel unto Abraham, saying, In thee shall all nations be blessed."—Gal. iii. 8.

Not knowing the especial point on which our correspondent wishes an expression of our views concerning this portion of the divine record, it is very possible that he may be disappointed in reading what may be written. Volumes might fail to specially define all that is legitimately contained in the brief expression to which attention is called. Yet we desire to comply with all such requests so far as it may be the pleasure of the Spirit of truth to reveal to our view in the texts submitted the testimony of Jesus.

In arriving at the correct understanding of any portion of the Scriptures it is manifestly important that it should be considered in the connection in which it is placed by the direction of the Spirit. Honest seekers after truth will readily see that it is a perversion of the inspired language when a sentence is taken out of the connection in which it is written, and construed as if it belonged with some other expressions; or, when language which refers to the subjects of divine grace, is given an unlimited application to all the enemies of truth and righteousness. With those who dare to cavil over the letter of the word we have no desire to contend. Even if they were forced to cease their opposition against the doctrine of God, nothing short of divine power could give them the love of the truth; so that in arguing with them it can never be possible if their reason should be convinced, that they should receive any better belief than that which causes devils to tremble. In this fact there is assurance for all who love the truth. While the belief of devils results in terror and hatred, there is no possibility that the love of the truth can exist in any other heart but such as have the Spirit of Christ dwelling in them. This test is infallibly correct in every case.

The attentive reader cannot fail to observe that in this letter to the churches of Galatia, Paul has carefully refuted the heresy which had troubled them, and which has been a constant snare to the saints in subsequent ages, in which it was claimed that the believers in Jesus were still under obligation to render obedience to the law of Moses as an indispensable condition of salvation from condemnation. This error seems so consistent with reason that there is no such thing possible as that it should be refuted by philosophic arguments. Only as the Spirit of wisdom is pleased to reveal Christ crucified in the case of each tried and tempted child can any be delivered from this deceitful suggestion of the adversary of their peace. It should be especially observed that the apostle declares that Jesus Christ had been evidently set forth crucified among those very foolish Galatians, who were now bewitched that they should not obey the truth. There is not less liability to the deceitful wiles of this witchcraft now than in the apostolic age. Those saints who are thus ensnared by the cunning craftiness of their enemy in this age, are as completely bewitched as were those Galatians whose folly is rebuked in this epistle. None but those who are manifestly led by the Spirit can be exposed to such attacks from the tempter. Only the living children of God are subjects of the enchantments by which they are led to disobey the truth. All who are willing servants of sin delight in the service in which they are engaged; and such need no bewitching to cause them to run greedily in the way of carnal pride and confidence in their own works for righteousness. They are in their element in the cultivation of that self-righteousness in which their pride is exalted, so that they trust in themselves that they are righteous, and despise others. This is no less congenial to the carnal mind of the saints than to others who know not God. Hence, they who have received the revelation of Christ crucified as their hope of salvation from sin, are subject to the vanity of temptation to depend upon their own righteousness for justification in the sight of God. Into this bondage of error those Galatian churches had been allured by the witchcraft of those who taught the conditional system of doctrine. There is no other device of falsehood more plausible than that which had been used to deceive them. If there were conditions for the saints to fulfill in order to secure the favor of God, certainly it would seem that the law which was given by him to Israel would be the embodiment of those needful requirements. It is very essential to the liberty of the saints that they be established in the truth that they are not under the law, but under grace. While carnal enmity finds in this liberty an encouragement to continue in sin, to those who know the love of God it affords the highest and most sufficient ground for their abhorrence of every sin. So they are to "Abstain from all appearance of evil."—1 Thess. v. 22. Those who bear this mark of the Spirit are certainly born of God. This evidence can be discerned alone by that faith which is itself the fruit of the Spirit. So Paul directs attention to the faith which is revealed in the individual experience of every saint. In confirmation of this evidence of the power of the Spirit in them he refers to the example of Abraham, whose faith was accounted (or, imputed) to him for righteousness. "Know ye therefore that they which are of faith, the same are the children of Abraham." In this spiritual relationship the saints are all justified with Abraham in the perfect righteousness of Jesus Christ, in whom all his members have satisfied every demand of the law.

"And the scripture." It must be remembered that this expression cannot signify the written testimony of Jesus which we call the Bible; for none of that scripture was written in the time when Abraham was in the flesh. There is no record of any revelation of that scripture in written form until the time of Moses, which was more than four hundred years after Abraham's day. Yet in the written word is the explanation of the correct meaning of the language in our text. "Forever, O Lord, thy word is settled in heaven."—Psalm cxix. 89. This is the eternal Word of God, in which is embraced the everlasting covenant ordered in all things and sure. In this unchanging purpose of God the names of all his chosen people are written, and their manifestation as vessels of mercy is the purpose for which all material things were brought into existence. This is the scripture which sheds abroad the truth in the heart of every saint, and which is hid from all the research of the wisdom of this world. Time and space would fail to speak of the infinite fullness of the revelation of this divine scripture. It includes every exhibition of the love of God in saving his people from their sins, and in bringing them into the enjoyment of that glory which our Redeemer had with his Father before the world was. No assaults of sin can mar the testimony given the saints in that everlasting scripture which is immutably recorded in eternal love. Nor can any false doctrine endure the light of this living scripture. Neither can it be drowned by all the floods of antichristian delusions which are poured out against it; nor can it be consumed by the fires of persecution. God himself must be destroyed by that power which could blot out this ever abiding scripture.

"And the scripture, foreseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith." This declaration cannot admit of any other doctrine but the immutable determination of all things by the will of God; and that is what we mean by the expression, "THE ABSOLUTE PREDESTINATION OF ALL THINGS." In no other doctrine is this assertion fulfilled. Without the perfect assurance of this truth not even the final glory of our Redeemer could be thus positively foreseen. It is absurd to claim that there was no purpose of God in the existence of the heathen; since their justification through faith could not have been determined while there was no certainty that they ever would have need of that justification. The whole exaltation of Christ as the Savior of his people from their sins, would have been a failure if there had been a possibility that they should never have any sins from which to be saved. So there could be no uncertainty in the eternal purpose of God to justify the heathen through faith; since God determined that they should be the subjects of that justification according to his own will before he gave existence to any of his creatures. The scripture in which the grace of God is revealed as extending to the blessing of the heathen, is but the immutability of that counsel which is called "the mystery of his will, according to his good pleasure which he hath purposed in himself."—Eph. i. 9. When it is remembered that the power of God is equal in extent to the infinity of his will, it will necessarily follow that his purpose can never fail of accomplishment. Upon this secure basis it is evident that the wisdom of God embraces alike the final completion of all his purpose, and the beginning of the development of his eternal counsel. On no other grounds could there be certainty of the fulfillment of any prophecy respecting future occurrences. That which is not unchangeably established cannot be positively foreseen. But the express assertion of our text leaves no room for questioning the purpose of God which determined the justification of the heathen through faith. Upon that very assurance was the gospel preached to Abraham. It must be observed that when the Lord called Abraham out of Ur of the Chaldees, he was himself one of the heathen among whom he was born. In his own calling the gospel was preached to Abraham as one of the heathen whose justification was exclusively through faith. This preaching of the sovereign will of God in the deliverance of his chosen people from the condemnation and guilt of their rebellion and sin, is the proclamation of the gospel; and in this sense the gospel is never preached by any other messenger but that same scripture which reveals the will of God as the source of justification to every subject of his electing love and grace. Those whom God has called and qualified to proclaim the testimony of Jesus do indeed speak the words of truth, but it is only when the Spirit of truth shines in the heart of the saint that the word is received by the believer as the gospel of the grace of God to his own comfort and assurance.

"Preached before the gospel unto Abraham, saying, In thee shall all nations be blessed." There is no mistaking the meaning of this preaching, since Paul was moved by the Holy Ghost to clearly explain that it is only through faith that the blessing of Abraham is received. It will not be claimed that the blessing which is here declared is received by those who never know the love of holiness; neither can there be any evidence of this blessing in those who depend upon their own works for justification. There is no record that the literal name of Christ was preached to Abraham; but in this immediate connection the apostle declares that the seed is Christ, in whom the promise was made to Abraham. In the announcement of the blessing to Abraham the gospel was preached before there was any expression of it even in the types and ceremonies of the Mosaic dispensation. That gospel testified of Jesus through the faith which enabled Abraham to believe God and to yield obedience to his commandment. Thus he is set forth as the father of them that believe, not only of the circumcision, but of the uncircumcision also. In this exaltation there is peculiar honor bestowed upon Abraham; but it must not be forgotten that it was only through the faith of Christ that he was enabled to receive that wonderful preaching. The blessing could not be ascribed to superior merit in him as a man; for in that case he would have been justified by works of his own. Nothing is recorded of his being different in any respect from his idolatrous kindred. Only by the election of divine love was he blessed in being called out alone, and favored with the faith which moved him to believe God; and his faith was accounted to him for righteousness. It was by this faith that he saw the day of Jesus, and rejoiced in it, and was glad.—John viii. 56. The same faith is needful to produce in the saints that belief now, not less than in the case of Abraham. The natural man is as destitute of power to receive the things of the Spirit of God now as in Abraham's day. God still calls his own sheep by name and leads them out of darkness into the light and liberty of the sons of God. His own life giving word is not less effective now than then; and there is now no more dependence upon human assistance than when he commanded the light to shine out of darkness; therefore there can be no conditional works to be performed by the subject of this divine calling. The blessing is entire and complete in the promised Seed, which is Christ. When this is revealed in the heart of a sinner he is blessed with faithful Abraham in the reception of the gift of eternal life in Christ Jesus. This is that gospel which the scripture preached before unto Abraham; and it is still "the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek." Wherever this testimony of Jesus is preached there is the scripture bearing witness that the glad tidings of great joy are for the healing of the nations of them which are saved. "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." This obedience of faith is the blessing of Abraham.

IRVING'S ORATIONS.

SINCE the commencement of the publication of the "Extracts" from Irving's Orations, in April 5th number, we have run extra copies, and will mail back numbers to new subscribers as long as the supply lasts. Those wishing to get the first of the serial will have to send in their names at an early date.

PLEASE COPY.

WE frequently receive articles, especially obituaries, which we are requested to ask other publications to "please copy." This we do not like to do for several reasons. In the first place, we are not willing to omit original matter to copy from other papers; and we do not like to ask other publishers to do what we are not willing to do ourselves. Besides, there are a large number taking the SIGNS who also take other papers, and to all such the copied articles would be stale.

CHURCH HISTORY.

THE two-dollar cloth and the two-dollar-and-fifty-cent leather bindings of the Church History are about exhausted, but we still have a few copies of the four-dollar Imitation Turkey Morocco binding, and two copies of the five-dollar Genuine Turkey Morocco on hand.

The sale of the History has become so light that we cannot afford to run another edition until we can ascertain how many copies can be sold. We therefore will receive subscriptions for the book, to be delivered the latter part of this year, if a sufficient amount is received to warrant the publication of another edition. If not, we will refund the money.

KEEP IT.

PLEASE destroy your old Supplements and keep the last one, and read it carefully. We especially request our brethren and friends to note the fourth paragraph, and to assist us all they can in accordance with the terms given therein. If you cannot attend to the matter yourself you are at liberty to authorize some one else to act in your name. It does seem to us like a fine opportunity for any energetic gentleman or lady to engage in a lucrative business.

When two or more new subscribers are sent at the same time, in accordance with terms given in Supplement of April 12th, 1893, and one is in compliance with the second or third paragraph, and the others on terms given in fourth paragraph, it is very essential to state which name is sent according to terms of the second or third paragraph, as that name is credited to the end of 1893, while the others are credited one year from the time their subscription begins.

IT IS VERY IMPORTANT

That great care should be taken in sending a renewal of subscriptions to give us the same name as the one to whom the paper is already coming. If the party is married be sure the initials are given correctly; for if the paper is coming in the wife's name and the husband writes us to send the paper the next year, and signs his own name, we have no means of knowing that the person to whom the paper is going is his wife; and not finding his name on our list he is entered as a new subscriber and the paper sent to both; or if the paper is going in the husband's name and the renewal sent on in the wife's name, the result will be the same. The best way is to inclose in your letter one of the little pink slips containing the name pasted either on the margin of the paper or on the wrapper in which it comes.

LENGTHY OBITUARY NOTICES.

WHILE we feel to sympathize with those who are called to part with near and dear relatives and friends in death, yet we must request that in writing obituary notices they will be as brief as possible. A little reflection on this matter will, we think, be sufficient to show how unnecessary are long accounts of the minor incidents in the life of the deceased. Aside from the immediate friends of the subject of the notice they are not of general interest; and those to whom they are of any importance are about all acquainted with the facts without publishing them. A short notice is more likely to receive early insertion in the paper, as our obituary department as a rule is very much crowded; and it frequently occurs that owing to the extreme length of the notices, the publication of some are delayed for two or three numbers.

EXTRACTS

FROM FOUR ORATIONS BY EDWARD IRVING, BEFORE THE LONDON (ENGLAND) MISSIONARY SOCIETY, MAY, 1824.

ORATION ONE.

MESSIAH'S CONSTITUTION FOR THE MISSIONARY ESTATE.

BEING welcomed on the strength of their salutation of peace, and through the predisposition of this Son of Peace, with whom God blesseth the hearts and the habitations of worthy men, the missionaries sat them down, and were content with any fare and with any accommodation. A little bread they needed to feed their natural hunger, a little water to cool their natural thirst, a little space to stretch their weary limbs; and in return they had deep, rich and various discourse upon the moral condition of mankind, copious and faithful revelations of the grace of God, glad tidings of great joy to the sons of men; and in earnest of that salvation wherewith they were intrusted they would heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, cast out devils, and raise the dead. Every good thing which can be wrought without the ministry of visible and temporal powers, every good thing which holdeth of the invisible, that is, every consolation, instruction, counsel and revelation which man's condition needeth, they held by free gift of God for free bequest to man; and all that they needed or besought in return was a morsel of bread to preserve their lives. * * * They made no haste to be gone, neither did they crave liberty to remain. They staid while they were welcome, or till their work was done; and whosoever came to the house from the neighborhood or village or town was free to sit and listen to the good tidings of the kingdom, without having even this pittance of bread and water to give in return. (But what is this I say? I would not libel mankind so far as to suppose they would grudge so penurious a return for so rich a gift.) There they sat day by day in the house of the poorest men, holding forth the gospel of peace unto the people. * * *

The men being so harmless, their destination so peaceful, and the spirit of their instructions so heavenly, it is difficult to imagine how it were possible they should meet with anything but welcome wherever they came; and it is one of the sorest libels upon the spirit of the world that almost all of them came to an untimely and violent end. Well said the just and devout Simeon, who staid on earth to welcome the great Son and Heir to the house of his Father, and wished to stay no longer, that the infant in his arms was set for a sign to be spoken against, that the secrets of many hearts might be revealed; and by Christ himself in these instructions, whereof we now present the substance, it is with still more clearness predicted that he came to send not peace upon the earth, but a sword. How true, alas! was shown the first year, yea, perhaps the first month of his life, by the cruelest sword that ever drank innocent blood, for which Rachel wept in Rama with great lamentation. Therefore it was necessary to prepare these missionaries for the shadowy side of that experience whereof he had forewarned, whereto he had foredoomed them. They were spiritual vessels, bound for every port where souls did tarry; and they had spiritual blessings to give in return for a welcome. * * * Thus their instructions ran in regard to all who mistreated them and held their commission cheap:

"Whosoever shall not receive you nor hear your words, when ye depart out of that house or city, shake off the dust of your feet, go your ways into the streets of the same, and say, Even the very dust of your city which cleaveth on us we do wipe off against you; notwithstanding be ye sure of this, that the kingdom of God is come nigh unto you. But I say unto you, it shall be more tolerable in that day for Sodom than for this city."

The city, into any house of which the messengers that came forth from heaven with heaven's credentials were not received, having in it not even one worthy man to arrest the merciful hand of heaven, was well nigh unto destruction; and the commission of heaven's servants was to read out its doom, and give it over to its hasty end. * * * If the people argue, the missionaries argue again; and being assaulted with scoffs and cunning, they defend themselves with meekness and long-suffering, and from the wisdom of the world they protect themselves with the wisdom which is from above. For besides the harmlessness of the dove, they had given to them the wisdom of the serpent, with which to expose sophistry, to outwit cunning, to defeat artifice, and meet every emergency. * * *

Thus went forth the first messengers of the kingdom, commissioned to the most pure and benevolent and worthy part of the people; and they approached them upon the side whereon a good man liketh best to be approached, of kindness and humanity; for it is more blessed to give than to receive. Yet, to keep their character clear from all associations of mendicancy or meanness, there is no scrip nor purse nor obsequious demeanor allowed them—nothing that might take from the heavenly condition of the men. No demand for food or raiment; what is set before them they partake of, and the spiritual knowledge and power which they possess they as freely give in return. * * * They are kept in close dependence upon God's assistance, and cannot move a step but in the strength of faith. They are delivered out of the conditions of policy, out of the conditions of force, out of the conditions of gain, out of the conditions of selfishness and of ambition; for I defy any one maxim which appertaineth to these four spheres of human activity to help them one jot in fulfilling their instructions; and they are delivered into the spiritual conditions of the spiritual kingdom which they went about to propagate. In prayer and communion with the Spirit of God they sail along upon an unseen and unpiloted course. They are living models of what they teach; moving epistles of the Spirit of God; incarnations, each one in his measure, of the divine nature; instead of the Scriptures to those who have them not, and commendations of the Scriptures to those who have them. If, as hath been said, the Bible is its own witness, these men, who personified all its truth that can be personified, and with their lips spoke the rest, must be their own witness; and by being hindered from worldly interests and worldly attachments, they are hindered from worldly discourse. * * * They confer upon no news but the good news of the kingdom; they touch no interests but the interests of eternity; speak of no country but heaven, in no authority but the name of God. Which four things, wisdom to address the people, entire dependence upon God, exemplification of the doctrine, and constant debate with the spirits of men, are surely four of the great principles in the propagation of the gospel; and it is incredible from how many altercations, from how many aberrations of purpose, and strivings of passion, and oppositions of interest, they are cut off. For if they are brought into debate, it must be for some spiritual sake, and spiritual truth must be elicited. If they are mistreated, it must be in the face of justice and innocency, which make friends to the injured; and doubtless whatever happeneth good or ill to them, good must come out of it to a cause thus implicated with no earthly interests, and devoted wholly to spiritual ends.

They who go forth to extend temporal power, and lay the foundations of earthly dominion, may and must go in the strength of chariots and horsemen and munitions of war; they who go forth to establish an influence and empire over royal courts may go in the strength of all-subduing wealth and diplomatic cunning; and they who go forth to discover the unknown regions and limits of the terraqueous globe must go with the state of science and in the strength of bold adventure. But they who went forth to bring all earthly powers under the Prince of Peace, and to subdue all arts and policies of man to the child-like simplicity of the wisdom which cometh from above, and to spread the spiritual kingdom of Christ over the bounds of the terraqueous globe, must divest themselves of those helps and instruments whereby the others prosper. They must not cast out Beelzebub by Beelzebub. They must not conquer a peace with arms in their hands, which, though a good enough combination of words for the earth, is a solecism in the speech of heaven. By being under Mammon they will never come to be under God; by conferring with Belial they will never hold communion with Christ. Each kind hath its appropriate equipment. That which is appropriate to the powerful is power, to the politic is policy, to the scientific is science, to the spiritual is the Holy Spirit. The weapons of their warfare are not carnal, but spiritual, yet powerful to the pulling down of strongholds. The stone that Daniel saw cut out without hands must swell without the help of human hands, and fill the earth. The kingdom which is to cast down every other kingdom must be independent of those kingdoms which it casteth down—must establish itself in its own proper strength; and living in this heaven-derived strength, must live forever. * * *

There is no visible thing about them to create hatred; the men come in the name of peace. There is no visible thing to excite jealousy; the men are possessed of nothing and coveting nothing. There is no visible thing to excite envy; for the men call nothing but their life their own, and even of that they are not careful. They meddle with no earthly concern, have no earthly end, walk in innocency, live in simplicity, cleave to no sect nor party of men, know no country, and intend no interests. Their tidings are all from heaven, and their discourse all of immortality; and it is virtue which they commend, and peace which they promote, and charity toward all which they enforce. A blessing goeth with them, health cometh to the house where they abide, and the Son of peace resteth there. * * * I cannot help thinking that the men were well endowed for their work, and that their work was worthy of the endowment, and that they would find in the worst of climes (as verily they did, for these same twelve planted the gospel far and near, from India to the British Isles) a class of men, and that the highest, to give them welcome. The ambitious, I see, would spurn them, and they would be content to be spurned; the cruel, I see, would maltreat them, and they would be content to be maltreated; the hollow-hearted wits and satirists would make merry with them, and they would be content to be made merry withal; and the busy, bustling crowd would pass them unheeded, and they would be content all unheeded to be passed. "What do these babblers say?" "They seem to be setters forth of strange gods." "Great is Diana of the Ephesians." "They set up another king, one Jesus." "Away with them; they are not worthy to live." I hear these sentences echoing round their path, and I see them following it fearlessly onward to the death; but do I not see a Felix trembling, a royal Agrippa knitting his half-convinced brows, a judge of Areopagus blessing the heavenly tidings, a Jason giving pledges for them, a Gamaliel speaking before senates in their behalf, a Dorcas, a Lydia, and honorable women not a few, waiting upon the wants of the all-enduring men? The thoughtful of the people are pondering the words which they speak, the serious-minded are applying their heart to the doctrine, charity is leading them by the hand, brotherly humanity is opening to them the gate, and affliction, comforted by their presence, is anointing them with tears of joy; and the genius of every high and heavenly faculty of the soul is sitting at their feet, well pleased to be schooled and taught by the messengers of heaven. I see they are but searching the land for the good, the noble and the true, leaving the wretched, which love the earthly garbage, to wallow in their sensualities. They are gathering each sweet and savory plant, leaving the weeds standing for a devouring conflagration which is to come. The fire of heaven hath come down unto the earth (for these twelve were baptized with fire); but it loved not the earthly elements, and ran along seeking materials which had some savor of the worthy regions from whence it came, which having found, it took and enkindled, and left in a heavenly blaze, each one in his place, to purify, enlighten and enkindle the region round about.

APPOINTMENTS.

ST. AUGUSTINE, Fla., April 4, 1893.

DEAR BRETHREN:—Please mention in the SIGNS that I expect to be with the church at Salisbury, Md., on the fifth Sunday in April, and on Saturday at three o'clock, my regular appointment there, and to arrive at Southampton on Tuesday, May 2d, if the Lord will. My family will not arrive there till a few weeks later.

SILAS H. DURAND.

EDITORIAL NOTICES.

PLEASE STOP MY PAPER.

AT least nine out of every ten writing us to discontinue their paper add that it is not on account of their objection to anything the paper contains, but that they are not financially able to continue it. We would ask all such if they have taken into consideration the amount they have economized by stopping their paper. It is less than four-sevenths of a cent a day.

PERSONAL.

Any one knowing the present address of J. L. Ricketts, formerly of Muscogee, Ind. Ter., will confer a favor by sending the same to this office.

I never heard it sung with the power it was sung that day. It seemed that the strains were caught up by the angels of heaven and wafted back to earth again. And then in your sermon God was exalted and man abased. The sweet promises to the little humble ones I can never forget. I was hungry and thirsty. I forgot I had a home on this earth, and was made to look beyond the veil.

Forgive me for tiring you with this poor letter; for my letters are like myself, of no account; but I know how kind you are with poor little ones. May the Lord, who watches over all, ever watch over you, and long spare you to proclaim his glorious truth, if it is his will, is the wish of your little sister,

CECIL DAVIS.

CROOKED CREEK, Ind., Dec. 27, 1893.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—I cannot do without our family paper while I can get two dollars a year to pay for it. It contains about all the preaching I get, as I live about fifty miles from any Baptist Church. My husband and daughter and myself are all the Baptists in this community. My husband, Uriah Linn, has been an Old Baptist about fifty-two years, and I have been one about thirteen years, and by the grace of God we expect to live and die such, and in the resurrection come forth and join the general assembly and church of the First-born, whose names are written in heaven.

Now, dear brethren, this is putting it very strong; but we have a hope and it is like an anchor to our poor souls; for Christ is our hope. "When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall we also appear with him in glory." The children of God have doubts many times, and also fiery trials to pass through; but the flames shall not harm them. These fiery trials are only to consume the dross; and that dross must all be consumed, so that the child of God will be fit for the Master's use. I am many times made to wonder why the people of God, the children of the Most High God, have to pass through so many troubles and trials, doubts and fears, while traveling through this world of sorrow. Sometimes our hope is strong, and we feel ready to go hence; and then again dark clouds will appear. But eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things that our heavenly Father has in store for his children; but the child of God frequently has foretastes of them, and O how sweet they are.

I have written more than I intended when I commenced.

MARTHA LINN.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 2, 1893.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—If I should be thought worthy to use that term, which speaks a near and dear relationship. Brethren have the same father and mother; and if so be that we are brethren, God is our Father, Jesus Christ our Elder Brother, and Jerusalem which is above is our mother, and therefore we are of that chosen generation, and called a holy nation, a peculiar people, that we should show forth the praises of him who hath called us out of darkness into the marvelous light of his dear Son; for it is of him, and through and to him should be all the praise, who of God is made unto us wisdom, righteousness, sanctification and redemption. Without our blessed Lord we have nothing necessary for our salvation. He has done it all for the church of the living God.

I did not take my pen to write a communication to the people of God, but to attend to a pleasing duty, and that is to forward you two dollars for a new subscriber, under the terms of your Supplement of December 15th, 1892.

Our church here is composed of a few, I trust, of the Lord's poor and afflicted people; and the greater part are of those who are poor in this world's goods, and have no abiding place that can be called their own. We have the gospel preached to us by Elder Wm: Lively, who was with us in our organization, and has continued with us since, and whom we deem faithful as a gospel minister.

Your brother with hope of eternal life,

W. P. BURKS.

LEBANON, Ohio, April 10, 1893.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—Allow me to mention your faithfulness in contending for the faith once delivered to the saints. The editorial on "Ordained to Condemnation;" had the true Bible ring. I would not have you infer that I think all your editorials do not bear the stamp of eternal truth; but I mention this one because it is along a line where men are apt to waver from the truth. There was not a syllable of Ashdod in it; no sickly sentimentalism apologizing for God or setting up a standard of justice to control his actions. It involved all the essentials of what the Arminian would call fatalism. But ugly names cannot remove the doctrine from the record of eternal truth, nor can malicious slander eradicate it from the heart of the saints where God has indelibly written it.

I am glad to see the minutes of the famous and much slandered Black Rock Convention published. I believe that to be the boldest stand for truth ever taken by any body of men in the history of this world. Those men were made heroes by grace, and their noble example should be held in remembrance as one worthy to follow, and their heroic deeds should be declared to the generations to come. I send twenty-five cents for Black Rock minutes.

I am now expecting to attend the associations at the east, where I hope to again meet you.

Yours in fellowship,

H. M. CURRY.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

OUR little son, H. T. Gainer, was born Jan. 26th, 1893, and died March 13th, 1893, aged 1 month and 16 days.

It was a sore trial to me to give up my little treasure. I am away down in the dark valley, where none but God can comfort. Why cannot I be more reconciled to his will, who ruleth all things, and doeth all things well? I trust he will keep and direct all his children in the strait and narrow way, and that when they are called away they will be reconciled to his will.

"O let my trembling soul be still,
While darkness veils the sky,
And wait thy wise, thy holy will,
Wrapp'd yet in mystery.

I cannot, Lord, thy purpose see,
But all is well, since ruled by thee.

"Thus, trusting in thy love, I tread
The path of duty on;
What tho' some cherished joys are fled,
Some flattering dreams are gone?
Yet purer, brighter joys remain;
Why should my spirit then complain?"

S. J. GAINER.

KERENS, W. Va.

DIED—In Loudoun Co., Va., at the home of her son, brother Frank Robey, April 6th, 1893, Mrs. Mary S. Robey, aged about 79 years and 6 months.

She went down to her grave like a shock of corn fully ripe for the harvest. Sister Robey was baptized in May, 1879, in the fellowship of the Ebenezer Church, this county, and has ever since honored her profession by a faithful fulfillment of the obligations she then assumed. It was her delight to meet with the church and be in the society of her brethren, listening with eager interest to the proclamation of the truth, testifying, in her quiet, gentle way, her love for it, and for the ordinances and order of the Lord's house. Her end was remarkably peaceful, and came as a fitting close to a well-spent life. Death had no terrors. Shortly before she died she said, "I am so weary and tired; but it will soon be over, and I shall be at rest." She was left a widow in 1859, with four small children to care for, who still live to bless her, and to mourn for her as a faithful mother, counselor and friend. May the Lord comfort all that mourn.

J. N. BADGER.

ALDIE, Va., April 11, 1893.

OUR beloved brother, Elder Jacob Lee, was born in Illinois, July 31st, 1818, moved to Missouri with his father in May, 1839, and in September, 1840, was married to the daughter of Robert Calhoun. He moved to Texas in 1844, obtained a hope in Christ in July, 1853, and united with the Missionaries. In August following he left them, and in September united with the Primitive Baptists. He was licensed to preach in September, 1874, and ordained on the first Sunday in May, 1875.

I have been very intimately acquainted with brother Lee since 1881, and have traveled with him on his preaching tours. He shunned not to declare all the counsel of God, and exposed error in every shape wherever he met it. He was afflicted with dropsy and hemorrhages of the stomach for a number of years, and often had to be hauled to his appointments. He was confined to his bed a long time at the last. On the fourth Sunday in August, 1891, he was at his church meeting, and preached nearly two hours on Sunday. He was taken down on Thursday following, and died on Saturday evening at six o'clock. His body was laid away in the Spice Rock Church-yard on the fifth Sunday in August, one week from the day he last preached. Our loss is his great gain.

J. G. NIXON.

CHERRY SPRINGS, Texas.

Mrs. Mary L. Moore was born in Baltimore, Md., Oct. 21st, 1837, and moved with her parents, Francis and Elizabeth Curtis, to Cincinnati in 1839. Soon afterward they came to Fulton Co., Ill., and in 1857 to Warren Co., Ill.; and on Dec. 2d, 1857, she was united in marriage with F. M. Moore, and they located in the vicinity of Roseville, in said county. Her husband, F. M. Moore, was one of the dearest members of our church at Greenbush, but left her a widow Oct. 2d, 1876, with six children, four sons and two daughters. The deceased being a woman of great energy and industry, and having good children to aid her, she improved her premises and schooled her children, and they loved her dearly. During last fall she went to Springfield, Ill., to stay with some of her children awhile, one of whom was a teacher in a commercial college, and three of them attending school; and there, after suffering indescribable agony for several weeks with cancer of the stomach, she gently fell asleep, as we believe, in Jesus, March 28th, 1893.

Mrs. Moore in her young days joined a religious society, but for many years I have known her, and have often conversed with her, and found her deeply concerned about baptism, and wishing to join the Primitive Baptists; but being many miles from a church, and feeling a deep sense of unworthiness, she had put it off until she became too weak. She read the SIGNS OF THE TIMES for many years. A very precious and worthy woman is gone.

Her remains were interred near her old home, her children being all present, and a large audience also, and were addressed by the writer. The Lord bless the bereaved.

ALSO,

AFTER I left home to attend the last sad tribute of respect to the memory of Mrs. Moore I received a message to go on the day after her burial and attend the following; and although I am furnished with but few of the particulars of his life, I have been requested to forward you a brief notice of the deceased, as many of his relatives have taken the SIGNS.

James M. McMurtry was born in Hardin Co., Ky., Oct. 21st, 1807, and departed this life March 28th, 1893, in his 86th year.

Mr. McMurtry came to Knox Co., Ill., when it was almost a boundless prairie, and exposed to the roving bands of the Black Hawk Indians, and located near the present village of Henderson, in said county, where he has since resided. He was a brother of Lieut. Gov. McMurtry, of Illinois, and uncle of our beloved sister, Lovicy Brown, deceased. He filled several offices with honor, and left the name of an "honest man," whose word was as good as his bond, and he will be much missed by the community.

There was a large attendance at his funeral, March 31st, and the writer addressed them, and he was laid to rest in Rice grave-yard, leaving seven children.

ALSO,

DIED—Marietta Blossom Holean, infant of A. W. and L. E. Holean, and granddaughter of Deacon Isaac Holean, on March 14th, 1893, near Avon, Ill., aged 1 year.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LUKE XII. 32.

FEAR not, ye little flock,
Thus Jesus speaks to you;
'Tis not to numbers great,
But to his chosen few.
With pleasure and with love
He will the kingdom give Unto his little flock,
And they shall with him live.
He mansions has prepared
With pleasure for his bride;
With him her life is hid,
For her he bled and died.
They from the washing came
So radiantly fair;
And each one bearing twins,
Not one was barren there.
There's naught that can divide
This fair one from his love;
There's naught on earth beneath,
Nor in the heights above.
He says on earth ye shall Have tribulations great,
And hated of all men,
All for the Master's sake.
Under his sheltering wing
The flock at noon retreats,
In pastures green lie down;
His food to them is sweet.
O if I only knew
My worthless name did stand
Engraved upon his heart,
And in his nail-pierced hand!
Then I would nothing fear,
For what can match his power?
Then let the lion roar,
He cannot me devour.
With yearning, wistful gaze
I view this little flock;
O how secure they stand,
Founded on Christ, their Rock.
Then fear not, little flock,
You with your God shall live;
For he has spoke the word,
And will the kingdom give.

EZEKIEL XXXV. 10.

In holy Scripture we are told
How Seir's sons, in days of old,
With Israel's land would fain make bold,
Whereas "the Lord was there."
From age to age we plainly see
Ungodly men will all agree
To rob the sons who are made free;
But no, "the Lord is there."
The Hagarenes, untam'd and wild,
Are wont to mock the free-born child,
But we rejoice, though much revild;
To us "the Lord is near."
The enmity between the seed
The Lord himself hath firm decreed;
And tho' the saints must oft-times bleed,
Yet still "the Lord is near."
No weapon form'd against the saint
Shall ever prosper; he may faint,
And often utter his complaint,
But still "the Lord is there."
On Canaan's shore he safe shall land,
Exulting on the heav'nly strand;
The scene how glorious and how grand!
"The Lord indeed is there."
Then in immortal strains he'll sing
The praises of his glorious King,
And heav'n itself with joy shall ring,
For Christ "the Lord is there."

CORRESPONDENCE.

SOUTHAMPTON, Pa., Jan., 1893.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—For some time I have been impressed with the thought that it was my duty so write what I trust have been the Lord's dealings with me in the travels of my soul; and also, some very dear brethren and sisters have asked me to write my experience; but I have put it off from time to time, because I felt that one so weak and ignorant as I am could not write anything worthy a space in your paper. But this is your property as soon as it comes into your possession. Do as you see fit with it. If you publish this, I would like to say to all God's dear children that Jesus is all my hope. It is by his grace alone I must be saved, if saved at all. When I was a child, or a small child (for I am only that now), I did not care to go to meeting. I loved to roam about home and play. My parents being Old School Baptists, they often entertained the preachers, and other members of the churches, while on their way to and from meetings. Thus I often had an opportunity of hearing them converse upon spiritual things, though I was not much interested in their talk then. My grandmother would often coax me to go to meeting, but I was not interested, and would always get tired of sitting so long. I did not see how they could sit so long and listen to the preaching. It was in the fall of 1890 that I was sick with the scarlet fever, and they were afraid that I would not get well. I was out of my mind four days and nights. On the fifth day, when I came back into my right mind again, so I knew what I was doing, I wanted to get well, but was afraid I would get worse again. I was afraid to die. I knew I was a very bad boy, and if I died I would be lost for sure. But finally I got better, so I could sit up. I got to reading the SIGNS, and thought if I only could be good, and get well, and do like some of those dear people I had been reading about, I would be very thankful; and I promised I never would do such bad things again. But after I went back to school again this wore away, and I got as bad as ever; but I often would think, O if I could only feel like I did when I was getting well. I said then that I never would do such bad things again, and here I would find myself doing just the very things that I said I never would do again. I would feel so bad that I would go into the school-room and get my books and try to study my lessons. I thought if I could keep away from the boys I would not do such bad things. But this would wear away and I would find myself playing with them again. Thus I wandered on until the first of May, 1891, when my dear grandfather died. He was a strong believer in the Old School Baptist doctrine, but was not a member. Elder Durand preached at the funeral, and it was while I sat there that these words came to me, Suppose you should die with all your sins upon you, what would become of you? O, it seemed as if all my sins that I ever committed rose up before me. I felt that I was condemned to death, and I feared every moment lest I should die. I went home that day feeling very much cast down. I felt that I was cast off forever; that there was no help for me; that I was condemned forever. O how bad I felt. Pen cannot describe it. When I got home I went up stairs to my room, and fell down on my knees, and promised the Lord if he would forgive my sins I would never do so again; I would try and live a better life; I would go to meeting every Sunday, and do everything I could to be better; but I have found that in all I ever did I never got any better, but worse. From that time on I went to meeting every Sunday, and tried to be better; but the more I tried the worse I got. When I would do good, then evil would present itself. Thus I went on until the next fall. One Saturday evening these words came to me, "And let fall also some of the handfuls of purpose for her, and leave them, that she may glean them, and rebuke her not." It just seemed as if I heard some one say them. I got the Bible and found them in the second chapter of Ruth, sixteenth verse. I read them, and also the whole chapter, and it seemed as if it meant they were as little words falling from my Master's lips on purpose for me to glean. It encouraged me a great deal. The next Sunday Elder Durand used this verse, together with some others, for his text, and it so encouraged me that I hoped I did have a little hope. To think that the dear Lord had let fall those words to comfort me, I was made to exclaim, as Ruth did, "Entreat me not to leave thee, or to return from following after thee: for whither thou goest I will go; and where thou lodgest I will lodge; thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God." But soon after that Elder Vail was here on a visit, and on Wednesday night preached at Elder Durand's. I do not think that I ever shall forget that sermon, although I went home feeling very badly. I had got the SIGNS that night, and when I got home I sat down to read it; and as I was reading it I felt so vile and sinful, my sins seemed to rise up before me, and I became so very dark that all my little hope seemed gone. Such a fear came over me that I was afraid to go to bed, for fear I would die before morning. I prayed the Lord to take away that burden of sin from me, which I felt was pressing me down to everlasting destruction. I read the SIGNS through that night, and got the Bible, and tried to find something to relieve me of my heavy burden of sin. How I spent that night no pen can describe. I never went to bed at all that night, and the next day I was so cast down and dark that I feared the approach of night again. I feared I would be wiped off the face of the earth before the dawning of another day. Thus was my case for many days. I would get the Bible and read, and found many precious things, but none for me. On Sunday, I would always be ready to go to meeting, hoping to hear something good for a poor sinner like me. During that fall or winter sister Emma Addis was baptized, and she looked so happy and beautiful that I only wished I could be like her, and be baptized and join those dear people which I so dearly loved; but I knew how sinful I was and felt if the Lord did not help me soon I must surely die. I went on in this way until the next spring. During the winter and spring I had such trials that I wore away until I felt as if there was nothing left of me but skin and bones. I was so weak that I could scarcely do anything without being nearly tired out. My mother wanted me to go on the railroad to learn telegraph operating, as she thought it would be easier for me, and I had been wanting to go for a good while; so about the first of March I went; but do you think I could learn very much with this heavy load upon me? No. I would be trying to implore the Lord for mercy to me, a poor sinner. Sometimes when I would be at the station I would feel so bad that I would go home. Several times I went home in the middle of the afternoon, and went off to the woods, or some place where no one would see me, and tried to ask the Lord for mercy. I had a small Bible which I would take along with me and read by the hour. One Sunday I promised the agent that I would attend to the station for him. My sister and a friend of hers came down on the train in the afternoon, and I had promised them that I would go up to Davisville, to the New School Baptist meeting, in the evening with them; but while I was at the station I thought it had been just a year since my grandfather died, and I had not missed one Sunday since then. It made me feel very bad. O how I wished I had not promised them. I thought I had not gone to meeting that morning where I ought to have gone, and where I loved to be; and now to-night to go up to Davisville, a place I would sooner be out than in, how could I do it? As we came up on the train I thought how I could get them to stay away; for I felt bad enough, and I wanted to go home. But my sister said I had promised her that I would go up with them, so I said we would go; but I did not say where. We went up, and just as we came up to the porch I felt as if I could not go any farther. I told them to go on in, and I turned around and went away. I felt as if I would fall, never to rise again, if I went in there. I sat along the road bank and waited until meeting was over, and then came down with them. That is the closest I have been to that meeting-house since, and I feel as if I could not go near there again, although I had been there several times before. One night when I came home from the station I went up stairs to go to bed. I had been feeling very badly all day, and just as I went to get my Bible I said, O, if I could only get relief from this terrible burden. In an instant it seemed these words came to me, "Be still, and know that I am God." I fell down on my bed as if I had been struck, and then these words came, "Son, be of good cheer; thy sins be forgiven thee." O, I felt so happy, and everything seemed to be so bright. I praised the Lord for his wonderful works to the children of men, for leading me in a way I knew not. I was made to sing,

"Amazing grace! how sweet the sound!
That saved a wretch like me;
I once was lost, but now am found,
Was blind, but now I see."

I fell asleep, and the next morning when I awoke everything looked so bright, and I felt so happy that I thought, Now I can go and tell the church how the dear Lord brought me from darkness into his marvelous light. But before the next meeting came this beautiful light had all passed away, and I was afraid it was all imagination, and that I had been deceived. But it was Satan that stepped in here; for the next Sunday while I was at meeting this beautiful light came back. It is the same with every child of God. The Spirit says, Go; but Satan approaches, and we draw back; but we are drawn by it to Jesus. He stands in faith's view most lovely, saying, "Come to me, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly, and you shall find rest unto your soul." After I went home from meeting I kept thinking about it. I was afraid to go before the church, for fear I would deceive them, and I was afraid I could not tell them anything. I was so young I thought it might be they would not receive me. But it so pressed on my mind that I thought I would go on Sunday afternoon and have a talk with dear brother George Lefferts, whom I thought very much of, and see what he thought; so mother and I went up there; but he was not home. O how I was disappointed; but as we came back to the corner of the road to turn down towards home, such a feeling came over me that I thought I must go up to Elder Durand's and tell him; so I asked mother if she would go up with me, and she said she would. O how glad I felt when we got near his house. I thought I could tell him everything; but after I got there I could not tell him near all. He talked nicely to me, and encouragingly. He told me that I ought to tell the church, and asked me if I would come to the next meeting. He said they could appoint judges, and they would tell me whether I was a fit subject to join the church. But I was afraid I could not tell them anything. I told him I would come if I felt I could. After I went out and started towards home I thought, How could he have had any confidence in me? for it seemed that I had not told him hardly anything. I did not want to deceive him nor anybody. I thought if he only knew my wicked heart as I knew it, he would not have talked to me as he did. At the next meeting I went, and as I was going I said, Now I hope I can talk to those people whom I so dearly love. Everything looked bright and happy; but as I went into the meeting-house something seemed to say, You are going into a place you are not worthy of entering. I did feel very unworthy to be there, but it was the place I so dearly loved, and I could not help going there. As I sat there every one seemed to be so happy, and they looked so beautiful, and I felt as if I was only some filthy rags. Something seemed still to say, You are not fit to be here. When the opportunity was given for any who had a desire to talk to the church, I said to myself, O I cannot go; I am the most unworthy person here; I am too unworthy to be with such good people; and it may be if I do go forward they will not receive me. But just about that time Elder Durand said to me, "Don't you feel like talking?" Then these words came to me most forcibly, "I am God." O what words of strength are these! O what more could I want in such a time as this? It was the crucified

Lord himself that spoke. What more could I want? He raised me up from my seat, and I went forward. It was all light then, for Jesus is the way by which we are saved. I then told them how I believed the Lord had led me from darkness into his marvelous light, in a way I knew not. It was not by anything that I had done, and if I was saved it was by free grace alone. I thought I said very little, but they received me most willingly and gladly, and I was baptized the next day, May 15, 1892. That night I went home feeling very happy. The next morning when I awoke the first thing I heard was the birds singing. They sang very sweetly. I raised up in bed and had to sing too.

"Alas! and did my Savior bleed,
And did my Savior die?
Would he devote that sacred head
For such a worm as I?"

I was eagerly waiting for the time to come to go to meeting. I could hardly wait, everything was so beautiful. When we got down to the water I thought it was the most beautiful place I had ever seen. After I came out of the water everything looked like heaven. It looked like the church standing there, and Christ in the midst. It was one of the happiest hours of my life. I can now sing,

"O how happy are they
Who their Savior obey,
And whose treasures are laid up above!
Tongue cannot express
The sweet comfort and peace
Of a soul in its earliest love."

The whole hymn is so good, but space forbids me to write it down. I have written entirely too much now; but I have been led on by him, I hope, who directs all; for without him I can do nothing. It seems as if this is almost nothing; but as it is I leave it to you. I hope it has not a worldly nature. I hope it is something the world can neither give nor take away.

Your unworthy brother,
CASPER G. FETTER.

"THERE remaineth therefore a rest to the people of God."—Heb. iv. 9.

The rest here spoken of is that rest which is obtained by faith. The first rest we read of in the Scriptures is recorded in Genesis ii. 2: "And on the seventh day God ended his work which he had made: and he rested on the seventh day from all his work which he had made." There is the rest of sleep; also the rest from worldly troubles and trials: but these are limited. The rest here spoken of is an unlimited one. It is a glorious rest; for it is written, "His rest shall be glorious."—Isa. xi. 10. It is a loving rest; for it is written, "He will rest in his love."—Zeph. iii. 17. It is a bountiful rest; for the psalmist says, "Return unto thy rest, O my soul; for the Lord hath dealt bountifully with thee. For thou hast delivered my soul from death, mine eyes from tears, and my feet from falling."—Psa. cxvi.

7, 8. Again, Jeremiah in his prophecy of the judgments upon Jerusalem says, "Thus saith the Lord, Stand ye in the ways, and see, and ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls."—Jer. vi. 16. It is a refreshing rest: "This is the rest wherewith ye may cause the weary to rest; and this is the refreshing."—Isa. xxviii. 12. It is a saving rest; "For thus saith the Lord God, the holy One of Israel, In returning and rest shall ye be saved; in quietness and in confidence shall be your strength."—Isa. xxx. 15. It is a quiet rest; "When he giveth quietness, who then can make trouble?"—Job xxxiv. 29. "And the work of righteousness shall be peace; and the effect of righteousness quietness and assurance forever."—Isa. xxxii. 17. It is a rest of confidence; "But Christ as a Son over his own house; whose house are we, if we hold fast the confidence and the rejoicing of the hope firm unto the end." "Cast not away therefore your confidence, which hath great recompense of reward."—Heb. iii. 6; x. 35. It is a rest of hope; "My flesh also shall rest in hope."—Psa. xvi. 9. Hope is the counterpart of faith; and faith, which is the gift of God, is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen. Hence faith is the goal which hope wishes to attain; "which hope we have, as an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast, and which entereth into that within the veil."

This rest is also peaceful; for to be spiritually minded is life and peace. Jesus is our peace, "who hath made both [Jew and Gentile] one, and hath broken down the middle wall of partition between us; having abolished in his flesh the enmity, even the law of commandments contained in ordinances; for to make in himself of twain one new man, so making peace; and that he might reconcile both unto God in one body by the cross, having slain the enmity thereby; and came and preached peace to you which were afar off, and to them that were nigh. For through him we both have access by one Spirit unto the Father."—Eph. ii. 14-18.

We see from the foregoing that the rest here spoken of is no ordinary rest, but is a glorious and everlasting rest. It is an inheritance which is sure, reserved for those appointed to it. Jehovah has commanded, and so it shall stand.

"Fenced with Jehovah's shalls and wills, Firm as the everlasting hills."

The rest here spoken of is the glorious, eternal rest of the saints of God, whom he hath called, quickened renewed, made alive by his Spirit, having washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. They are the wise virgins, who have their lamps trimmed, and oil in them, and who enter into the marriage supper of the Lamb, when the cry is made, "Behold, the Bridegroom cometh." They will also have on the wedding robe of Christ's righteousness, which is given to all them that worship God in spirit and in truth. These serve him, and suffer persecution for his sake, while traveling through this wilderness of woe. Blessed are all they that trust in him. Happy is the people whose God is the Lord. He is their Surety, and has said, "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee." He will make his face to shine upon them. "All that the Father giveth me shall come to me; and him that cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out." But the poor sinner often feels, How do I know that I am one of the saints of God? We experience many changes. Sometimes we are raised up high, and then brought down low. Sometimes we are basking, as it were, in the sunshine of his love, and at other times are doubting and fearing, and even brought to the verge of despair, and ready to cry out, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" Although we have had many distinct evidences, yet

"Blind unbelief is sure to err,
And scan his work in vain."

But let us remember David in all his afflictions.

"When trouble, like a gloomy cloud,
Has gathered thick and thundered loud,
He near my soul has always stood,
His loving-kindness O how good!"

The promise stands sure, "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee." Jesus is given for a witness, a leader and commander of the Lord's people. "Your thoughts are not my thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord." Some are called like Paul, suddenly stricken down by the voice of God, by his Spirit; but he was enabled to see his calling in the short space of three days, and was anointed by the Holy Ghost to be a servant and apostle of Jesus. "They that go down to the sea in ships, that do business in great waters; these see the works of the Lord, and his wonders in the deep." This was literally and spiritually fulfilled in the case of the apostle Paul, who suffered martyrdom at Rome for the gospel of Christ.

Some are called like Samuel, who wist not who it was that spoke to him.

"Those gentle desires,
Those wishes so weak,
'Tis Jesus that calls thee,
And bids thee still seek."

Thou hardly knowest, but still there is that secret ember in thy breast, kindling, till fanned by the bellows of divine love it sparkles forth.

"'Tis a point I long to know,
Oft it causes anxious thought,
Do I love the Lord or no?
Am I his, or am I not?"

Thou mayest have to wait for the Lord's answer, but it will come, as certain as the noonday sun.

"Whom once he loves he never leaves,
But loves them to the end."

He cannot break his covenant, which was made ere the world began. Thou mayest question thyself, and fancy all is a delusion, and say, It cannot be so; but in his own good time he comes, saying, "Blessed is he whose transgression is forgiven, whose sin is covered."

But some may say, "I have not had the working of the law as so many speak of." But hast thou had this, hast thou felt thyself a sinful, guilty creature before God, that thou hast offended his holy law, and deserve to be sent to hell for thy sins, and that only Christ Jesus can save you? If so, do not pray for a heavier weight of the law, nor seek it; for

Is to feel your need of him."

If thou art thus, seek after Christ, not after the law. Many have been in bondage for years through seeking after and trying to fulfill the law, which Christ did for us. If thou hast but a spark of that divine faith, thou art well off; for it is better to be "Little Faith" than no faith at all; for faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen. "Hope that is seen is not hope; for what a man seeth why doth he yet hope for?"

It appears most evident that this rest is for the sons of God, joint heirs with Christ, and heirs according to the promise; and this rest remains to them. They have many foretastes of it here below. The entrance into the full felicity is through the valley of the shadow of death; but they need fear no evil, for the rod and the staff of their Shepherd shall comfort them. They shall lean upon the arm of their Beloved and enter the gates of the celestial city, which are open to receive them; and when once they enter, there will be no desire to return; for there all is peace, joy, happiness, yea, the rest that remains to the people of God.

THOMAS BRIDGER.

CALLING AND FOLLOWING.

JESUS says, "My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me." "A stranger," he says, "will they not follow." They instinctively flee from him, for they know not his voice. In reading the gospels we are struck with the promptness and joyfulness with which the sheep in the days of his flesh ever obeyed the call of the good Shepherd; for, coming directly from him, it must needs be effectual. It would seem as if a call from him was what they were ready, and waiting, and anxious for; and so indeed it was. It was as if each one of them said, "Draw me, and I will run after thee." They were ripe for a call. It came to them just at the right time; neither before nor after. Hence it was always effectual, and is always effectual. Jesus found Matthew sitting at the receipt of customs, and called him, and he followed immediately, leaving the business of his office to take care of himself. He found James and John in a ship with their father, and called them; and they, without delay or demur, left the ship and their father and their nets, and followed him. Andrew and Peter exhibited like promptness in their following; so also did Philip and the guileless Nathaniel. The latter was convinced, as soon as Jesus had spoken to him, that he had at length found the true Shepherd of his soul, the veritable Son of God and King of Israel, of whom Moses in the law and the prophets did write. Zaccheus, too, was ready for a call, and, as I may say, aching and dying for it. So he climbed up into a tree, being short of stature, to see Jesus as he passed. Jesus noticed him, spoke graciously to him, called him down from the tree, and he came down forthwith, and received his Savior joyfully, earnestly protesting his willingness to give half his goods to the poor, and to make fourfold restitution of all that he might have gained unjustly. Here, most assuredly, was a living and fruit-bearing faith. So overjoyed was the man to be noticed and called by the good Shepherd. So it is still. The effectual call is no longer physically vocal, but it is heard by all who have an ear to hear, and heard effectually, and obeyed promptly. When Paul was called, without stopping to confer with flesh and blood, he immediately obeyed, and asked to be shown to the work which he was to do under his new Lord and Master. It was so with you, my brethren, whoever and wherever you are. In due season Christ called you by his Spirit. You had an ear to hear, and a heart to feel and appreciate. You did not regard the call as an ordinary matter, about which you might put on airs of considerateness, asking yourself whether it were worth your while to accept such a call. You did not say, Give me a chance to investigate the subject, and if I find the caller himself to be what he pretends, I shall then be prepared with an answer to his proposals and overtures. As one consciously sinking in the mire where there is no standing, you could not have been capable of such ridiculous conceit and absurd impertinence. It would have been simply impossible and inconceivable. You were too glad and thankful for such a call to make any hypocritical fuss about obeying it. Had you not just been saying, in your misery and despair, "O that I knew where I might find him?" And so you through grace obeyed the calling. Then you were justified freely. You are now in process of being made like the image of his only begotten Son, Jesus Christ. You are walking religiously in good works, and at length by God's mercy you will attain to everlasting felicity. Does any one recognize these words? Has he ever seen them before? We who believe them in their plain and obvious sense may indeed refuse to be known as Calvinists, simply because we would not be saddled with any man's name. For the truth was known and taught and believed long before Calvin, and is indeed coeval with the eternal God. But certainly, on the other hand, these words are not the proper and natural expression of the vagaries of that so-called learned professor of divinity, Arminius. (How is it these men are always so able and so learned?) Let us say, they are simply the truth as it is in Jesus, and as it is in the nature of things. And, by the way, it is wonderful to see how science, which is also truth, is confirming the old and solid theology in these days. We old fogies have stood still, seeing no reason why we should change our position, and now the best thought of the world, as yet, perhaps, all unconsciously, is coming round to us. Well, believer, when you were called you came. With one word or one look Jesus prevailed over you, and lovingly forced you into the fold. Since that memorable time you have had your ups and downs, your cold and warm seasons; you have doubted and feared, been humbled in the dust, and almost despaired; but you never saw the time, and never will see it, when you did not regard the call itself as high and glorious, above all things desirable, worthy of all acceptance, and the caller as the chiefest among ten thousand and the altogether lovely. But now what do we often see and hear? In response to the "general" call, various and absurd replies. One says, though not perhaps in words, Call me at a more convenient season. I cannot attend to the business now. Another says, I will investigate the claims of your Jesus, and then let you know my conclusion. Still another very foolishly asks the messenger whether he really believes that large story about Jonah and the whale, or accepts the Mosaic account of creation, or thinks that the sun actually stood still at the command of Joshua. Indeed the absurdities and irrelevancies are endless and innumerable of those who occupy the point of indifference, finding in themselves no need of the grace of God in Christ. It may well be said that as Jesus came not to call the righteous, so neither did he come to call the wise and critical who so foolishly show the manner and bearing of those who would "look a gift horse in the mouth;" that is to say, specially and effectually. Once I heard a preacher relate with approbation the story of a young man who made up his mind to get religion, "if there was such a thing," at the very next revival. I do not know how long he had to wait for such a chance, but we were told that he did finally "get religion." What kind it was, or how long it lasted, we were not informed. But we know that many are kind and condescending enough to "accept the overtures of mercy," and this young man was probably one of them. I cannot conceive that the personal call of Jesus by his Spirit, who knows perfectly to what manner of man he speaks,

CHASTENING OF ISRAEL.

"THEREFORE hell hath enlarged herself, and opened her mouth without measure; and their glory, and their multitude, and their pomp, and he that rejoiceth, shall descend into it."—Isa. v. 14.

In compliance with the request of Mrs. Starkes, on page 135, we submit the following remarks in connection with this portion of the prophecy in which God gave the testimony of Jesus by Isaiah. It will readily appear from a careful examination of the context that this verse is inseparably connected with the denunciation of divine condemnation against the house of Israel, which is presented under the symbol of the vineyard of the Lord. It must be borne in mind that in all the history of the nation of Israel there is a typical representation of things in the gospel kingdom of our Lord Jesus. There is no difficulty in accepting this as true of the special calling and manifest protection of the children of Abraham throughout their generations as the nation whose God is the Lord. It is not so clearly seen at all times that this typical witness is equally faithful in the record of all the rebellion and transgressions of that unrighteous and ungrateful people. Yet this is included in their representative character. Aside from this reflection of the experience of the saints in the history of national Israel, it can be of no more interest to the saints in this age than any other history of ancient nations. But in the daily conflicts and suffering of the saints they are often made to recognize the accuracy with which their experience is portrayed in the history of the proneness of national Israel to depart from the precepts and violate the provisions of that covenant which was given them by the God who had delivered them out of the prison of bondage in Egypt. That this sinfulness and wicked rebellion was included in the eternal purpose of God is clearly shown by the fact that it was expressly declared to them that "Ye cannot serve the Lord; for he is a holy God; he is a jealous God; he will not forgive your transgressions nor your sins." Josh. xxiv. 19. To natural reason it seems that this evil disposition of the children of Israel was a defect in the pattern which God designed them to present of his church under the revelation of gospel liberty. On the contrary, there is no iniquity of that people which is not the exact figure of transgressions which are found in the saints under the new covenant dispensation.

It is unnecessary to dwell particularly upon the literal transgressions of the fleshly Israel. They cannot be more plainly declared than what is written of them in the inspired books of the Old Testament. In the immediate presence of the smoking mountain from which they received the divine law, and while the awful thunders yet sounded in their ears, they were engaged in idolatry. The very priest whom God had appointed for his own service, was yielding to the clamor of the people in making the golden calf, to which they ascribed divine honors. The willful idolatry which was so early developed, continued throughout their generations; the burden of all the messages sent to them by the prophets, bears the unvarying evidence of their persistence in that rebellion against the commandment of their God, which was then and there exhibited in the very men whom the power of God had brought out of Egypt. So, in the chapter from which our text is taken, the Lord under the type of his vineyard tells of his dealings with his chosen people, and of their ingratitude. This typical expression is not left to be translated by the wisdom of men; the prophet was moved to give the correct interpretation of it. "For the vineyard of the Lord of hosts is the house of Israel, and the men of Judah his pleasant plant; and he looked for judgment, but behold oppression; for righteousness, but behold a cry." It is in pursuance of the same condemnation of the sinfulness of his national people that he denounces the woes which are written in the context. They are described as reveling in luxurious and riotous living, inflaming themselves with wine and music, as those who have nothing to regret or mourn over, while they are so forgetful of their dependence that "They regard not the work of the Lord, neither consider the operation of his hands." This is assigned as the reason for which the Lord's people are gone into captivity, because they have no knowledge. In the marginal reading it is said, "Their glory are men of famine." Hence, it is not strange that "Their multitude (are) dried up with thirst." Then follows the verse submitted by our anxious inquirer.

"Therefore hell hath enlarged herself, and opened her mouth without measure." There is no reference in this text to that final destruction of the enemies of God, when "The wicked shall be turned into hell, and all the nations that forget God."—Psalm ix. 17. There never has been any occasion for extending the borders of that bottomless pit which is "prepared for the devil and his angels." Eternal wisdom did not fail to make all provision for the destruction of the enemies of God; nor has all the sin of men and devils taken the God of heaven by surprise. The vessels of wrath were before of old ordained to condemnation, and their place was appointed them by immutable decree in the purpose of God. "For Tophet is ordained of old; yea, for the king it is prepared; he hath made it deep and large; the pile thereof is fire and much wood; the breath of the Lord like a stream of brimstone, doth kindle it."—Isa. xxx. 33. Certainly the Lord has not failed to provide and establish the exact limits of this final abode of those "vessels of wrath," who are "fitted to destruction." It has not been left for infinite destruction to enlarge or contract its bounds. There is no power which can even open the gates of that hell without the authority of our glorified Lord. He said to John, "Fear not; I am the first and the last; I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive forevermore, Amen; and HAVE THE KEYS OF HELL AND OF DEATH."—Rev. i. 17, 18. Those who trust in the Lord for salvation cannot afford to forget that he has unlimited control of hell, as well as of earth and heaven. Even death is led captive under his victorious command.

The hell which hath enlarged herself, must be such destruction as was provoked, or moved, by the oppression and unrighteousness of the house of Israel and the men of Judah. There was the express provision in the covenant which God gave to that people, by which they should certainly suffer the just visitation of divine punishment in every violation of the statutes enjoined upon them. "If ye be willing and obedient ye shall eat the good of the land; but if ye refuse and rebel, ye shall be devoured by the sword; for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it." In keeping the statutes of the Lord there were temporal blessings bestowed upon the nation of Israel. In disobedience, they were visited with corresponding natural distresses. In that covenant there was neither blessing nor curse that extended beyond this temporal state of existence. The hell spoken of in our text clearly refers to those calamities which are stated in the preceding verse. The literal meaning of the word "hell" is confusion, darkness and destruction. In this sense the meaning of the expression is perfectly defined by the explanation in the context. The confusion which had come upon the disobedient nation of Israel was indeed enlarged and without measure. When their honorable men were famished, and their multitude dried up with thirst, there was such darkness and destruction come upon them as could not be comprehended in any finite limits. All this was directly the result of the unrighteousness of those who were visited with the terrible vengeance of God in their rebellion against him. The confusion in which they were swallowed up is well described as "without measure." In their utter ruin they could claim no refuge. It would have been a hard affliction to have been led into captivity by their enemies. But in addition they were brought to feel the pangs of hunger and thirst. Of course, the loss of all they held as treasures was involved in this famishing and drying up. There being no boundary to the destruction which had come upon them, they could have nothing left in which to find consolation. The expression in our text is not too strong for such a visitation of divine judgment as they were made to endure in the punishment of their pride and rebellion against God. So, in the antitype, no type can exaggerate the suffering of the chastened saint when he sees his own rebellion against his Redeemer.

"And their glory, and their multitude, and their pomp, and he that rejoiceth, shall descend into it." Let it be remembered that this is the message of God to Israel. In common with the whole of this prophetic song, the fearful chastening here signified is limited to the vineyard touching which it is sung. The self-complacency of the saints may be gratified by generously giving all such severe reproofs to the enemies of the church of Christ, who openly resist the truth; but such is not the character to whom the song is sung; nor is it touching such that the text is written. Every one to whom this denunciation can be applied must be included in the house of Israel and the men of Judah. It is written, "My son, despise not thou the chastening of the Lord, nor faint when thou art rebuked of him; for whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son that he receiveth. If ye endure chastening, God dealeth you as with sons; for what son is he whom the father chasteneth not? but if ye be without chastisement, whereof all are partakers, then are ye bastards, and not sons."—Heb. xii. 5-8. Even to the natural understanding of the saints themselves, it is inconceivable that their very suffering under the just punishment of their sins should be the evidence of the love of God to them. Job says, "If I wash myself with snow water, and make my hands never so clean, yet shalt thou [not Satan] plunge me in the ditch, and mine own clothes shall abhor me."—Job ix. 30, 31. It is not difficult for the chastened saint to understand the providential visitation of affliction upon the wickedness and rebellion of his people; but when they have accumulated a stock of their own good works, in which to take pride, it seems very hard to find all their righteousness but filthy rags in the light of divine truth. The carnal pride and glory of those who are called to be saints cause them to exult in the things which they esteem meritorious in their own works. They never feel inclined to glory in those things which they regard as sinful and unrighteous. If it were in their power they would conceal from the judgment of God all their evil deeds. But in the revelation of truth they are made to know their best and most valued works as being polluted and vile. Instead of affording ground for boasting, they find distress and sorrow as the consequence of trusting in those things wherein they had reposed confidence. Thus their glory is turned into the bottomless pit of that confusion and darkness which is so bitterly felt by the subjects of saving grace when their pride is burnt up by the clear shining of the Sun of Righteousness. Their pride has always a multitude to support it; and they are never lonely when they are glorying in self-righteousness. It is so consistent with reason that all the multitude of fleshly resources contribute their pomp and splendor to encourage the reliance of the saint upon respectable resources. Until they are brought before the judgment-seat of Christ deluded saints may rejoice in their rebellion against the grace of God; but when the light of his holy commandment shines in their hearts, they find trouble and sorrow. They then know by personal experience what it is to feel the pains of hell and the sorrow of death; and they do indeed cry unto the Lord out of the lowest hell. The Lord never appears in the chastening of his spiritual Israel, but that the light of his countenance, turns into the confusion of hell every refuge of selfish confidence in which they had trusted. They are indeed made ashamed of all their dependence upon their own strength. This was set forth clearly in the type when the nation of Israel trusted in the aid of Egypt and Assyria. Their enemies triumphed and brought them into bondage. Their agreement with those mighty earthly powers invariably proved a snare and a delusion in their time of need. When they were so utterly helpless that they could neither deliver themselves nor offer any inducements to the nations to assist them, then the Lord heard their cry, and delivered them. So their glory, and multitude, and pomp, and their rejoicing, were together turned into the confusion of hell. Their trust in creature help was thus invariably made a shame to them.

While in this text and in the connection in which it is written there is such severe rebuke to all who trust in their own righteousness for acceptance with God, to those who are so poor and needy that they have no merit to plead before God there is sweet assurance and comfort. It is impossible that they should lose anything in that horrible pit of destruction, since they have in themselves neither glory, nor multitude, nor pomp, nor rejoicing. These are they whose trust is in the Lord alone; and they shall never be moved. He will never leave nor forsake them. The gates of hell cannot prevail against them who are built upon the unshaken rock of the immutable sovereignty of our Lord.

In conclusion we would say to Mrs. Starkes, and to all who are like her, standing at the gates of Zion, and looking with longing eyes upon her sacred street, there is nothing better for you than obedience to the word of the Lord. He says, "If ye love me, keep my commandments?" Do you love him? If not, why do you desire to suffer affliction with his people? While you confer with flesh and blood, seeking worthiness in yourself, your action declares that you do not love him. If you have no confidence in the flesh, then you are in full fellowship with Paul. Are you sure that you are more competent to judge your own case than those whom you regard as the church of Christ? That is what your action declares. If you believe the church is competent to judge and recognize the mark of a work of grace, do you fear that they will render a false decision, for the purpose of deceiving you? If you can trust them, the best thing for your own peace is to avail yourself of the first opportunity to submit your case to their judgment. You will certainly never find the answer of a good conscience toward God while continuing in disobedience to his express commandment. Remember his word is not. If you are fit—but "If ye love me, keep my commandments."

CHURCH HISTORY.

THE two-dollar cloth and the two-dollar-and-fifty-cent leather bindings of the Church History are about exhausted, but we still have a few copies of the four-dollar Imitation Turkey Morocco binding, and two copies of the five-dollar Genuine Turkey Morocco on hand.

The sale of the History has become so light that we cannot afford to run another edition until we can ascertain how many copies can be sold. We therefore will receive subscriptions for the book, to be delivered the latter part of this year, if a sufficient amount is received to warrant the publication of another edition. If not, we will refund the money.

PLEASE COPY.

WE frequently receive articles, especially obituaries, which we are requested to ask other publications to "please copy." This we do not like to do for several reasons. In the first place, we are not willing to omit original matter to copy from other papers; and we do not like to ask other publishers to do what we are not willing to do ourselves. Besides, there are a large number taking the SIGNS who also take other papers, and to all such the copied articles would be stale.

IRVING'S ORATIONS.

SINCE the commencement of the publication of the "Extracts" from Irving's Orations, in April 5th number, we have run extra copies, and will mail back numbers to new subscribers as long as the supply lasts. Those wishing to get the first of the serial will have to send in their names at an early date.

ORATION TWO.

THE PERPETUITY OF THIS MISSIONARY CONSTITUTION PROVED.

SUCH was the character and the commission which Messiah gave to the twelve apostles, whom he sent forth to preach the glad tidings of his kingdom; and when he afterward preferred other seventy to the same high office he gave them their instructions in nearly the same terms. He never afterward repealed these instructions; he never afterward added to them. When he enlarged their commission from the limits of Judea to the utmost bounds of the habitable earth he gave them no new directions, no new promises, no new warnings or predictions; nothing further, save the assurance that he was with them to the end of the world. When these men, schooled according to this discipline, went forth afterward in the same behalf, it is not to be imagined therefore that they would adopt other principles than those which they had already received from their Master, and practiced with so much success; and if they would not, then it is not to be imagined that we ought, unless some specialty in our case can be shown of importance enough to annul these commandments of Christ, and make the example of the apostles of none effect. But as it is of great importance that this point be established beyond all doubt, we have given it a separate place in this argument, and shall now proceed as was proposed:

To show that these instructions are of continual obligation, present the everlasting type of the missionary character, and are not by any human authority to be altered or abridged. To establish this most important conclusion let us first apply ourselves to the document itself, that we may ascertain from its style and matter whether it is meant to be local and temporary, or universal and everlasting. Now we are bold to say that from the beginning to the ending of it there is not a single sentence (save two afterward to be considered) upon which the whole church of Christ hath not passed a judgment, that it was pronounced for the constant use and edification of all who put themselves in jeopardy for the sake of the spiritual kingdom. Every promise in it hath become a standing order of the church. Its predictions have been fulfilled in every realm where the gospel of Christ hath been preached; and the first preachers of the gospel in every realm have established their hearts with the consolation which it containeth. The direction "to be wise as serpents and harmless as doves" hath always been the policy of Christ's confessors. The assurance that the Lord would put into their mouth what they should say hath always been the fountain of their eloquence. The privilege, when persecuted in one city, to flee into another, hath always been the measure of their self-preservation. The declaration that "the disciple is not above his master, nor the servant above his lord," hath been their support under every infamous accusation. The knowledge that the sparrows are objects of God's care, and that he numbereth the very hairs upon the heads of his servants, hath sustained them in the utmost jeopardy and straits. The promise of Christ to confess before his Father those who confessed him before men, to save the everlasting life of those who laid down their temporal life for his sake, to be instead of father and mother to those who preferred his cause to filial duty, and every other sentence, of whatever kind, whether breathing sorrow or joy, foreboding ill or promising good, hath become as it were an armorial bearing to the soldiers of the militant church, household words in the city of our Zion, with which she traineth up her sons and her daughters to be valorous for the Lord. Can a document, then, I ask, to which the church in all ages and in all countries hath attached an everlasting importance, and which contains within it the watchwords of every battle that hath been struck in this spiritual warfare, the last breathings of every valiant man who hath sacrificed his all for its sake, can such a document be allowed to perish? Shall any base-born generation be allowed to hide it from the eye of the church? Accursed be the generation that would harbor the thought. Shall any man or body of men, to answer their ends, veil it up or venture to annul it? Let him be anathema maranatha.

It is nothing to the prejudice of this reasoning that the document containeth two clauses which are local and temporary, and which can by no means be applied to anything beyond that journey among the towns and villages of Jewry upon which they were sent, and from which we are told they soon returned with gladness. "Go not into the way of the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not; but go rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel." "Ye shall not have gone over the cities of Israel until the Son of man be come." For it was necessary to define the extent of their first peregrination, otherwise they would not have known whither to direct their steps, nor when to return to attend upon their Lord, for whose witness they were chosen; and there is no more of a local and temporary nature than just to guide them in this essential point. They are directed to limit themselves to the lost sheep of Judah, because, before they had gone this round, the Son of man would come, that is, would openly announce himself to the nation. Now, because he marked their route, and gave them an idea of the duration of their journey, will any man infer that his instructions and counsels were intended only for that journey, and were to be cast away when it was over?—that man would make his Savior's words of less value than the words of the most ignorant parent who giveth parental counsel to his child, which the child holds sacred till death, never dreaming that it is canceled at the expiration of his first absence, and if not repeated is to be cast at his feet?

But the document containeth within itself the direct refutation of these detractions from its dignity and restrictions of its duration; for, except in those two clauses by which it was necessary to define the extent of this first peregrination, there is hardly another clause which is not rendered insignificant and even absurd by being applied to that solitary journey. It is said, "Beware of men, for they will deliver you up to councils, and they will scourge you in their synagogues." Now we have not the slightest hint that any of the twelve or seventy suffered indictment before civil councils or scourgings at the hands of religious rulers during this journey, from which they returned with joy, confessing that they had lacked nothing; and indeed I know not what councils there were in the towns of Judea (for they went not to Jerusalem) before which they could be brought. Again, it is said, "Ye shall be brought before governors and kings for my sake;" and it is further said, "For a testimony against them and the Gentiles." Now what kings, governors or Gentiles could they be brought before or testify against in a journey within whose bounds there was neither king nor governor, and during which they were not "to go in the way of a Gentile?" We have warnings of brother delivering up brother to death, and the father the child, and the children rising up against their parents and causing them to be put to death; and yet all the twelve returned safe and sound. Again, it is said, "Ye shall be hated of all men for my name's sake." Did that come to pass in this journey? Again, "He that endureth to the end shall be saved." Is it meant to the end of this short journey? But further to apply this experimentum crucis to the hypothesis that these instructions were intended for this journey only would produce such a tissue of absurdities as might destroy in my hearers that grave frame of mind with which discourses from this place ought always to be heard. Therefore let what hath been said suffice for showing the evidence which the document yields to its own durability, and the express denial and flat contradiction which it gives to every daring temporizer; and let us proceed onward in the establishment of this our second head of discourse, whereof, if we succeed in convincing this assembly and the christian church, we shall have done no mean service to the Missionary cause.

Against the perpetuity of these instructions an objection may be taken from a passage in the twenty-second chapter of the gospel by Luke, where they are alluded to in such a way as to a superficial reader might seem to repeal them, and to substitute others in their room. It is as follows, "And he said unto them, When I sent you without purse, and scrip, and shoes, lacked ye anything? And they answered, Nothing. Then said he unto them, But now he that hath a purse, let him take it, and likewise his scrip; and he that hath no sword, let him sell his garment and buy one." If this passage referreth to the same object as the other, viz., the propagation of the kingdom of Christ, it doth make a remarkable alteration indeed, not only permitting the help of purse and provisions of life, but also of instruments of war; and while it gives a permission to the two former, makes the latter indispensable, requiring the missionary who is without a sword to sell his garment to buy one. This the crusaders fulfilled to the letter, who converted all their property into steel and armed men, and went forth in panoply to spread the gospel of peace. But as no one in these times is disposed to fit out such an evangelical armament, all confessing it to be against the spirit and the letter of the gospel, no use can be made of this passage to invalidate any part of the other. It cannot be in part taken and in part rejected. The mercenary spirit of these times will not lay hold of the purse and scrip, while they deny to the crusader the sword which is made peremptory, while the others are but licensed; so that we might dismiss the passage as totally inapplicable to the propagation of the kingdom, and leave the man who useth it against the argument of this discourse to deliver himself from the dilemma into which he brings himself, of converting every christian mission into a crusade.

In all this there is nothing which hath or can have a wider application than to that hour of darkness during which the glory of his kingdom was eclipsed; and even of this season, that it was not to be literally interpreted, is manifest from the scene which immediately took place. The disciples, mistaking his meaning, made answer to him in these words, "Lord, here are two swords." He answered them, "It is enough;" that is, it is enough that I have reduced your minds from these high and towering expectations of power, which would have cast you upon ruin, to the lowly sense of your weakness, and the prudent thought of your safety. But they, imagining that he really meant them to use these two swords with which they were provided, said, when the rout came upon him in the garden, "Lord, shall we smite with the sword?" Peter actually lifted up his sword, and smote the high priest's servant, and cut off his ear; to which action our Lord made this reply, "Put up again thy sword into his place: for all they that take the sword shall perish by the sword." Which shows that not only did he not intend the sentence under consideration to be understood of the propagation, but not even of the defense of his cause; that so far from intending it to be applied literally to all times, he did not intend it to be literally applied even to that time of oppression, for the sake of which it was spoken; that it was to be understood * * * for a strong and figurative way of reducing their minds from the ambitious thoughts of power which their question indicated, down to a lowly sense of their true condition, its trials and its dangers.

We have been the more particular concerning this passage of Scripture, because it is the only one which seems to bear against those primitive instructions of the missionary, for the perpetual obligation of which we hold the argument. This being rightly interpreted (and no one but a crusader could think of interpreting it of the Missionary cause), every other part of Scripture proves that the apostles carried these instructions rigorously into effect. On the day of Pentecost, when they were furnished with all manner of gifts necessary for the work, * * * there was nothing appertaining to purse or scrip, to power or influence, to name or reputation, bestowed on them. The things interdicted by the Savior continued to be interdicted by the Spirit; for outwardly the men remained unaltered after they had been inwardly endowed with the word of wisdom, the word of knowledge, the gift of prophecy and miracles, the gifts of tongues and the interpretation of tongues. If money and provisions, if goods and possessions, had been necessary, why were they not bestowed at this time, when heaven furnished out its ministers to all nations? But that needed not to be bestowed from heaven, which was soon forthcoming in all abundance. For in these times, as soon as the Spirit took hold of the converts, he made them indifferent to all outward distinctions and emoluments wherein they formerly prided themselves; and not only the missionaries, but even the converts of the missionaries, becoming careless of purse and scrip and possessions, forgot the distinctions of thine and mine, and parted their all to such as had need. Now the apostles, when plenty of everything came flowing into their power, kept free from the worldly incubrance, and continued breaking bread from house to house, and did eat their meat with gladness and singleness of heart; and when they went forth to the temple, so true kept they by Christ's first instructions that they said unto a man who sought an alms, "Silver and gold have we none." When the converts brought their all and poured it at their feet, not only would they not own any of it, but they would not for the sake of holy charity and sacred justice be diverted by its distribution from the higher and better calling of giving themselves wholly to the ministry of the word and to prayer. And they continued as they began; for throughout the whole book of the Acts there is not one word from which it can be gathered that in journeying from town to town and from region to region they had any convenience of travel, abode in any houses of public entertainment, possessed any property which they could call their own, or in any way deviated from the spirit or from the very letter of our Lord's instructions. While they abode in a place they continued, according to the commandment of the Lord, in the house of one man, whom, when writing letters from the place, they call their host. When Paul went up to Jerusalem he communicated that gospel which he preached among the Gentiles. * * * When the Jews of any town would no longer hear him he condemned them, and turned unto the Gentiles; and when with one accord both Jews and Gentiles rose up against him he shook off the dust of his feet against that city and proceeded on his course. In short, I find not one of the instructions which they did not literally carry into effect. They had no wages; they depended upon no remittances; they lived all along and altogether upon the brethren.

EDITORIAL NOTICES.

LENGTHY OBITUARY NOTICES.

WHILE we feel to sympathize with those who are called to part with near and dear relatives and friends in death, yet we must request that in writing obituary notices they will be as brief as possible. A little reflection on this matter will, we think, be sufficient to show how unnecessary are long accounts of the minor incidents in the life of the deceased. Aside from the immediate friends of the subject of the notice they are not of general interest; and those to whom they are of any importance are about all acquainted with the facts without publishing them. A short notice is more likely to receive early insertion in the paper.

PLEASE STOP MY PAPER.

AT least nine out of every ten writing us to discontinue their paper add that it is not on account of their objection to anything the paper contains, but that they are not financially able to continue it. We would ask all such if they have taken into consideration the amount they have economized by stopping their paper. It is less than four-sevenths of a cent a day.

should ever be treated with such nonchalance, such practical contempt as I have here illustrated. I think he never casts his pearls before swine, seeing he enjoins it on his disciples not to perpetrate such folly. He spake as one having authority; and when he spake, the very devils obeyed him. Much more is he obeyed by the simple and humble who are sorrowfully looking for a shepherd: his sheep, as he lovingly calls them. To them he gives eternal life as a present possession; and they shall never perish, nor shall any man pluck them out of his hand; for they are the Father's also, and none can pluck them out of his hand. Hence, believers, you may see where you are, and how secure; the glorified spirits in heaven not more so. You are the sheep of his pasture. He made you, and not you yourselves. And before he made you, your names were written in the book of life. You were chosen in Christ before the foundation of the world.

JOHANNES.

PALESTINE, Texas, Feb. 15, 1893.

DEAR MR. BEEBE:—I have felt for some time like writing to let you know how I rejoice in reading the glad tidings to the weary soul, which are written in the Scriptures, and of which the columns of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES bear testimony. Jesus says, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." O how sweet these words seem to me! I have long desired to write something for your paper, but I feel too unworthy. I am not a member of the Old School Baptist church, but my husband is. I love to hear them preach; and if I could write and tell the good news as some of them do it would do my soul good. But I must try to be content with what the good Lord has given me. It is by the grace of God I am what I am. I cannot walk as I would nor can I talk as I desire. "When I would do good evil is present with me."

"O! for a closer walk with God!"

O! how I hunger and thirst after the enjoyment of the love of God! I do hope that my blessed Jesus died for me though I am such a sinner. The thought comes to me, The chief of sinners are the very ones for whom Jesus died. Being the mother of four little children I have many cares, trials and temptations in this life; but God delivers me out of them all. The question is continually arising in my heart,

"Was it for crimes that I have done
He groaned upon the tree?"

I am reading Miss Mary Parker's book. It makes me both glad and sad. Sad to know that she suffers so much, and glad that she gives God praise and thanksgiving in it all. O! that I could at all times say, "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord!"—Job i. 21. I long to know that I am a child of God. These words encourage me to hope, "We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren." Surely I do love those in whom I see the image of Christ. The things which I once loved I now hate; and the things which I once hated I now love. In my own trials I am made to mourn my wretchedness, and my cry is, Lord, save me or I perish! I often fear that I do not own my Lord as I ought; but, blessed be his holy name! it is sometimes given me to enjoy the light. At other times all is dark with me; but if we had no dark places to go through we would not know when we were in the light. I often fear I am not one of the chosen people; but my trust is in the grace of God. "Nevertheless the foundation of God standeth sure, having this seal, The Lord knoweth them that are his. And let every one that nameth the name of Christ depart from iniquity." "And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose." I have written these few lines just as they came into my mind; they are like the writer; all unworthy. Do as you think best with them, and all will be well with me. Pray for me, a poor sinner in hope of eternal life.

Will you please give your views on Isaiah v. 14?

JENNIE STARKES.

MAXWELL, Cal., Dec. 10, 1892.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—VERY DEAR BRETHREN:—I often have gloomy doubts and fears, with trembling of soul, in regard to this spiritual relationship. I am most of the time away down in the valley, where dark clouds intervene between me and the holy, happy land. I am often worrying and tugging in the "Slough of Despond," and get into "Doubling Castle," where old "Giant Despair" worries me, until I am almost ready to perish, and feel to say, "I am cast out of thy sight, O Lord; yet will I turn and look again toward thy holy temple." If it were not for one thing I should feel alone in my sore trials; and that is, in reading the dear old SIGNS OF THE TIMES, in which the many brethren and sisters speak, telling the same old story. They all appear to esteem others better than themselves. They all have their ups and downs in this waste howling wilderness. Here we find the words of the holy Jesus verified, "In the world ye shall have tribulation; but be of good cheer, I have overcome the world." All glory be to his adorable name. Just as surely as he overcame the world, so shall his holy, spotless bride overcome. Because he lives, she shall live also. Those wills and shalls stand as firmly as his throne.

Dear brethren editors, I did not expect to write so much when I sat down. I only expected to write a few words and notify you to continue sending me the SIGNS, and inclose two dollars to pay for it; for through it and my Bible I receive all my comfort and consolation. If there is a Babylon on earth it is here in this far western country. I have been living here about seventeen years, and have not heard what I conceive to be a gospel sermon during that time, outside of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. So you must know I feel that I am thrust out from my kindred, and am a wandering pilgrim in a strange land; and I hope, dear brethren, you will not become impatient with me if I make a request of you occasionally to give your views on some portion of the holy Scriptures. I once requested brother Wm. L. Beebe to give his views on Amos v. 2, which he replied to, and I must say that it was indeed a feast to my poor, hungry soul. Now I will make a request of our dear brother F. A. Chick, whom I have never seen in the flesh, to give his views on Gen. xxiv. 2-6. I hope he will reply in his own time, not only to gratify this poor worm, but also many others, who are ever looking to those dear under-shepherds who have been called out and placed upon the walls of Zion to proclaim the glorious gospel of the great Shepherd and Bishop of our souls.

I will now close this poor scribble by asking an interest in your prayers at the throne of grace.

Your unworthy brother, if one at all,

D. KENNARD.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—Please say through the SIGNS that I will be with the church near Martindale, Caldwell Co., Texas, on the fifth Sunday in April and Saturday before, if not providentially hindered. I also have promised to preach, the Lord willing, near Buda, on Thursday or Friday before, as may be arranged by Mr. D. G. Hatcher, of Buda. OBITUARY NOTICES.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—I am requested to send you a notice for publication in the SIGNS of the death of our esteemed brother, W. L. Hastings, who gently and peacefully fell asleep in Jesus at his home in Dorchester Co., Md., April 1st, 1893, aged 53 years, 3 months and 17 days.

His disease was consumption, with which he was confined to the house just four months. He was baptized in the fellowship of the Little Creek Church, in Sussex Co., Del., on the third Sunday in November, 1879, by Elder E. Rittenhouse. A few years later he moved to Dorchester Co., Md., taking a letter, and uniting with the Fishing Creek Church, where he continued a useful and faithful member until his decease. Brother H. was very highly esteemed for his integrity in business affairs, and in the church for the love of the truth manifested by him.

He leaves a widow, eight children (mostly grown up), the church, and a large circle of relatives and friends, by whom he was highly esteemed, to mourn, but not as those who have no hope. May the Lord comfort them.

A. B. FRANCIS.

BROTHER John F. Newlon died at his home near Unison, Loudoun Co., Va., April 13th, 1893, in the 74th year of his age.

His health had been failing some time, but seemed much better during his last days. He rode to Leesburgh (a distance of about eighteen miles) and returned the day before he died, and slept well that night until about four o'clock, when he awoke suffering with pain in the stomach and difficulty in breathing. He was aware of his departure, and remarked that his time had come and he must go; and in about two hours from the time he was taken he was relieved of all suffering by death. The doctor said that congestion of the lungs was the immediate cause of his death.

Brother Newlon was baptized in the fellowship of the Ebenezer Church (Loudoun Co., Va.) by Elder Leachman in September, 1868, and was a regular attendant and much esteemed member to the close of his pilgrimage. Soon after uniting with the church he was appointed Deacon; and being exemplary in his deportment and conversation, he used the office without reproach. Thus another one of the little flock at Ebenezer has been removed from us, and it fills our hearts with sadness to think that we shall see his face no more in the flesh; but inspiration teaches us that there is hope of a tree, if it be cut down, that it will sprout again, and that the tender branch (life) thereof will not cease; and that "as we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly." With this blessed hope we sorrow not as those who have no hope concerning them which are asleep; "for if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." "Wherefore," says an apostle, "comfort one another with these words."

Brother Newlon left a widow, two sons and two daughters, with many other relatives and friends, to mourn their loss. May the bereaved ones bow in humble submission to this afflictive dispensation, is our prayer.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date. This date denotes the time at which your subscription expires; and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

CORRESPONDENCE.

JOB XIII. 15.

"THOUGH he slay me, yet will I trust in him."

DEAR BRETHREN:—While the words of Job which I have quoted above were spoken out of the weight and gloom of multiplied sorrows, and can be understood only as we in our sorrows realize a similar experience of trust, yet I feel like spending a little time in their contemplation, and like writing down some of my thoughts for the SIGNS. I am often compelled to hesitate before daring to speak about trials and crosses to those who are bearing them, because I have been spared so many trials that others have endured or are enduring, and because it is out of experience only that we can be prepared to strengthen others; and yet my mind is often led to such subjects, and I feel more drawn in my mind to visit and speak with the afflicted than I do to visit the joyful and happy. I believe that I have at times found it more blessed to go to the house of mourning than to the house of feasting; and yet it seems to me that I am the very poorest comforter in the world. Of one thing I do at times feel glad, viz., that there is but one thing for the servant of God to do in all his ministry, and that is to point to the Lamb of God, who is all and in all to his troubled people. We cannot of ourselves administer comfort, but we may speak of him who can; and the apostle's testimony is that he desired to comfort those who were in any trouble, with the comfort wherewith he himself was comforted of God. This means, it seems to me, simply to tell of Jesus and his work. If any one is burdened, and I desire to help that one, is not the most effectual help just this, to say to him, "I also have been burdened and brought low, and the Lord has helped me?" I have felt like rejoicing often, that there is one book written in the world especially for the afflicted. The world and its votaries and its comforts flee far from the house of mourning; and its books of art, science, history or fiction, are for those who can enjoy them; but our God and Savior remembers those who are in the depths, and his words in his book are for them, and his words have power to cheer and comfort, and to bind up the broken heart. And so, though all insufficient in ourselves, yet we are encouraged to speak, since it is his word which we are to deliver, and since his promise is that the Holy Spirit, the Spirit of truth, the Comforter, shall take of the things of Jesus and shall show them unto us. These words of Job have seemed to me very wonderful as I have, at times, thought of them in connection with the circumstances under which they were uttered. It is very easy when the streams of gladness and prosperity are all full to overflowing, and the whole land is peaceful, and every harvest is plentiful, to say, The Lord is good, and I will trust him always. David had times of prosperity, when he rejoiced and praised the Lord, and gave repeated expression to his emotions of trust and gratitude. And this truly was right and heartfelt, and was the evidence that he did indeed recognize the hand of God in all his mercies. But yet this does not seem so wonderful as when he could say, "Thou hast spread a table before me in the presence of mine enemies;" and "Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil." It is not so wonderful as when Daniel in the den of lions, or the three Hebrews in the fiery furnace, could calmly rest in God. It is not such wonderful trust as enabled Paul and Silas in the inner prison, at Philippi, with flesh torn, and stiff from the scourging, and their feet fast in the stocks, at midnight to sing praises unto God. And neither is it so great as the trust of Job, when he could say, "Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him." To believe that God is kind and good and thoughtful of us, when we see the visible tokens of his goodness all about us, is one thing, and it is good for us when it is so. But to believe that he is kind and faithful and loves us still when it seems that he is dealing harshly with us, is the truest test of living faith in our hearts.

Let us look at this narrative of Job for a moment, and see in the light of it how these words stand out as living witnesses of the fact that God dwelt with Job, and that Job did indeed dwell in God as one who feared and trusted him. Here is a man whose life had been prosperous and full of honor and dignity. Men bowed down before him. The afflicted acknowledged his kindness and his bounty. Wise men counted him as their friend, and regarded his instruction. Riches were increased to him. Sons and daughters were his. He is blessed in person, in family, in friends, in basket and in store. He also fears and serves God, and receives his blessings humbly and gratefully as coming from the hand of God. God is good to him, and well may he recognize this goodness and praise him. But is this all? It is easy to say, "Blessed be the name of the Lord," when his hand is so bountiful. But how will it be if adversity comes? And Satan suggests that Job has no deeper faith than this, that he can praise and serve God in prosperity. And Job must be tried. The richer, deeper, greater faith that is really in his heart must be brought out to the light of day. It must be made to appear that Job not only knows and believes in the mercies of God, but what is a far better thing, that he knows and trusts in God himself. And Job is smitten again and again. His riches, his servants, his children, are all in succession suddenly taken away; and then his body is afflicted, and the wife of his bosom bitterness bids him curse God and die. Now, is not his faith shaken, his trust overwhelmed? As he weeps and groans and cries, shall we not hear some word of distrust? Will he not say, God has forgotten me? or, He is not good and kind and wise? Surely there is nothing now to prove his goodness. Will not Job begin to say, All is by chance, both my prosperity and my adversity? Or if it is of God, he prospered me at the first, that more and sharper pangs might be added to my grief in the end? But no, out of it all we hear him say at first, "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord." Yea, his faith rises to more astonishing height yet, and we hear him say, "Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him."

There are two little words at the end of this sentence that seem to me to contain the key to this whole matter, "IN HIM." This man had come to know the LORD. Not simply the Lord's words, or his doings, but HIM. Just as Paul, centuries afterward, out of his experience could utter the same great truth, "I know in WHOM I have believed," &c.; or as Abraham, of whom, centuries before, it was said, "He believed in the Lord." We may have come to believe in the goodness or wisdom or power of God toward us in the past, but the true question is, Do we believe in God? Job said he would trust in the Lord; yea, he would trust in him though he should slay him. It seems but a small thing to trust, when all about us are the evidences of his kindness and power engaged in our behalf; but do we believe in him in such a sense that we cannot question him when every earthly joy is lost? Yea, can we be calm and confident and believing when he puts forth his hand and slays us? If I ask myself this question now as I write, I have to answer that I do not know. Yet I am sure that if my faith and confidence be of God, and not the outgrowth of carnal security, they will be sufficient in any trying hour. And a few times in my life, my heart has been so filled with a sense of the presence of God, and of what he is, that I, too, could say, "Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him."

The poet has said,

"His love in times past forbids us to think He'll leave us at last in sorrow to sink."

I have been thinking about the matter in this way: A little child grows up at home. Day by day and year by year there are accumulating evidences of the ever watchful and unselfish care of his parents towards him. Little by little the child grows to believe in his father and mother, and to trust in them. By word and act, repeated and multiplied again and again, they prove to him that they are true to him and to his welfare. By and by he rests in the assurance that they love him, and are doing all things for his good. By seeing what they do, he comes to trust in them. Now, there comes a time when they impose restrictions upon him. They deny him something that he greatly desires. They subject him to labor and correction. They reprove and admonish him. They take away from him some valued treasures. Their whole course of conduct seems to have changed toward him. Is he now able to say, I will still trust my parents? Yea, though they subject me to greater hardships still, yet will I trust in them? Through their acts of kindness he comes to trust in them, and now, having come to trust in them, he still trusts, though he cannot understand why or what they may require of him afterwards. And trust in his parents is the chiefest blessing for a child. Thus Isaac trusted in Abraham; and thus Jephthah's daughter trusted in him; and thus Job trusted in his heavenly Father; and thus Paul trusted in God, and questioned not when he went forth to prison and to death at the call of his God.

Many of us have known men in some business or social relationship. As we have continued to know them and associate with them we have come to believe in them, to put full confidence in them. We know that they are honest and true to every trust. We come to believe in them. Now, in the course of business they take a course that we cannot understand. Yet we say in our hearts we know they have not done wrong. We know them too well to believe that. They have done what we could not understand, but yet we trust in them. So God's ways are beyond our power to understand, "Lo" we say, "these are parts of his ways; but how little a portion of him is known; but the thunder of his power who can understand?" We cannot understand why he has done this, but we know that he is too wise to err, and too good to be unkind.

Does any one say, It is not possible to have such faith or trust as this? I answer, Job had it, Paul had it, and hundreds and thousands of our afflicted brethren and sisters in Christ do have it now. Such trust God brings his people into the possession of by revealing himself to them. It is only as we see him that we can thus be strengthened. All his dealings with us are to this end, that we may know him, and his Son Jesus Christ, whom he has sent. In him are all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge. And to know him is life itself, eternal life. All knowledge without knowing God is vain and empty. It can bring no rest or peace, and does not lead to righteousness. But to know God is both rest and peace, because to know him is to trust him. Job knew God, and therefore he could trust him. In the heart of the believer, when doubts and fears arise and seem to prevail, nothing can give rest but to see again the bright shining of his countenance in the face of Jesus Christ. And thus it is good to remember our Bethels, and Hermons, and Mizars, where God has manifested himself to us in many wondrous ways of love and wisdom and power.

Through experiences like this all human boasting is silenced. Trust in God and human boasting cannot go together. They are essentially antagonists to each other. And so the prophet was inspired to say, "Let not the rich man glory in his riches, nor the wise man glory in his wisdom, nor the mighty man glory in his might; but he that glorieth, let him glory in this, that he understandeth and knoweth me," &c. Faith and humility always go hand in hand. And so the Roman centurion, of whom Jesus said, "I have not found so great faith, no, not in Israel," could at the same time that he confessed his faith in Jesus also say, "I am not worthy that thou shouldest come under my roof." The Pharisee has no humility, and therefore he can have no faith. Proud man trusts in himself, and therefore he cannot trust in God. But the humble disciple cannot trust in his own wisdom, strength or righteousness, and therefore he must trust in the wisdom, power and goodness of another.

This was the experience of Job in the days of his prosperity. But in the time of prosperity these things cannot be so clearly shown. And so the days of sorrow were given him, that in him the power of this trust might appear. Afterwards Paul could say, "I will rather glory in my infirmities, that the power of Christ may rest upon me." Paul had been so filled with the one desire that grace should be magnified in him, that he could glory in those very infirmities of his which gave the occasion for the display of the grace of God. He was glad to be weak, since the strength of God should thereby be made to more perfectly appear.

There are many who are passing under the rod yet, who are a wonder to all who behold them. They are cheerful under adversity, calm in the midst of turmoil, kind in the presence of enmity, and hopeful again in apparent darkness. Is not the secret of it all just like the secret spring in the heart of Job, by which he could say, "Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him?" What a wonder is this bond of fellowship which unites Job to many hearts to-day! In Christ, by his indwelling, through the Spirit, is this union and fellowship found. May God lead us more fully into this humbling experience of his power and goodness.

I leave these reflections. I remain your brother in hope through Christ,

REISTERSTOWN, Md., April 20, 1893.

BATH, Maine, March 23, 1893.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—I do not think I should write again so soon; but I have been feeling sorry since I heard of brother Coulter's illness, that I had not written to him of the comfort I had taken in reading his letters published in the SIGNS. I have neglected to do so, and have no good excuse to offer. I hope it will be the Lord's will to restore him to health again, and that I shall have the privilege to write him. I find my mind stirred up by way of remembrance after reading your reply to brother Hanks about the conference meetings, and the sisters speaking. I can never forget my feelings the first conference I attended. I felt at home, and that feeling has abided with me ever since. I have had more sweet comfort in those meetings than I can ever express. I have not had the privilege of attending regularly on account of my health, but the brethren have been patient and forbearing with me; so when I cannot be present I send a letter. It seems strange to me sometimes, but they have read every letter I have sent. The love for the brethren had been shed abroad in my heart, and the desire given to have a home with this

dear people. I had seen the beauty in baptism, and longed to follow in the footsteps of Jesus. I had felt my condemnation to be just; and when it seemed as if I must perish, Jesus was revealed as the Savior, and salvation by grace was so plainly seen, I could not keep silent. I soon found I could talk only with those of like precious faith and have it well received. I was cut off from the world and all its pleasures; and when I was given a name and place in the church, no tongue or pen can ever express that unspeakable joy which more than filled my heart. I seemed to be content at a few conference meetings to sit and listen to the others speak of the dealings of the Lord with them. But as my mind was led into the precious things of the kingdom of God, and it gave me so much joy to hear my thoughts and feelings expressed by the brethren, I felt I was very selfish to take all the good things and not even attempt to tell them I loved the same precious truth. And then, again, I would see so much beauty in a passage of Scripture that I could not help wishing to share the feast with those to whom Jesus was the one altogether lovely, and the chiefest among ten thousand. I have felt a freedom in the conference meetings, so that I could speak without a fear of being misunderstood. Even if I did not repeat a verse of a hymn or a portion of Scripture correctly, the brethren knew my meaning. I am more than glad that the churches here in Maine have always held conference meetings, and allowed the sisters to speak. I have taken so much pleasure in doing my work, getting ready to leave home early Saturday morning, to be away until Monday morning. Some days the way would seem hedged up, but when the time came the way would be opened; and while I was in the company of the saints every earthly care and perplexity would be forgotten, and I felt glad to tell what great things the Lord had done for me. There is not the least good thing for me to tell of myself, for it cannot be found in my flesh. I know and feel I am not worthy to be with the saints, and that sin is mixed with all I do. But the Lord has blessed me in leading my mind to look unto Jesus, and caused me to rejoice in him. I must ever sing of his goodness, loving-kindness and mercy, which have followed me all the days of my life. I cannot speak of any salvation only that which is of the Lord; no finished work only what Jesus has done; no faith and repentance only that which is the gift of God; no gospel only the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; no work in believing on the Lord Jesus Christ only the Lord's work. When I am made to rejoice in these precious truths, there is a comfort in being at a conference meeting, and to speak of them with the ability God gives me. I do not see any possible way for a brother to think I was exercising authority in any manner while I was telling the sweet experience of my heart. In the business meetings of the church we have no desire to speak. I like to be present at those meetings, and see the love and harmony usually manifested in my brethren. It seems to me as if my experience had caused me to sing as Miriam, the sister of Aaron, did. "Sing ye to the Lord; for he hath triumphed gloriously." I am very sure it is recorded that Moses and the children of Israel all sang this same song after they passed the sea and the waters were brought together again. It is exactly the same song that a sinner saved by grace sings now. The Lord is my strength, my salvation, my song, my guide, even unto death. We do often say, "Who is like unto thee, O Lord, among the gods? who is like thee, glorious in holiness, fearful in praises, doing wonders? Thou in thy mercy hast led forth the people which thou hast redeemed; thou hast guided them in thy strength unto thy holy habitation." We must ever sing and speak of the wonderful works of the Lord. I should find it hard indeed to be present at a conference meeting and have to keep silent, even if I were passing through the depths with no spiritual joy in exercise in my soul; for some loved one would express the feelings of my heart, and I should rejoice even in my sorrow. I do think the brethren receive a blessing in meeting together and speaking of the way the Lord leads them. The sisters are expected to relate some of their exercises when they come asking a home in the church; and as no child, whether brother or sister, remains in one place in their experience, but must travel forward in their journey here, each one has new conflicts and new deliverances to tell of; and the sisters as well as the brethren have the privilege of saying, "Come and hear, all ye that fear God, and I will declare what he hath done for my soul." The gifts in the church are not natural, but spiritual; and all the members of the body are placed as it pleased our Lord. It will not do for us to say to another, We have no need of you. The body would not be complete if one member was missing. But we can rejoice that the body of which Jesus is the head is perfect in every way, and he has the pre-eminence in all things.

My dear brethren, I do not know what you will think of this letter. I had not even a thought of writing anything for you to publish when I began to try to give expression to the thoughts your reply seemed to stir up; so I shall leave it with you to do as you think best. I have written many words, but I can never tell just what a beautiful, quiet resting place my home in the church has been. The company of my brethren has been all the pleasure I could ask for. I have surely gone in and out and found pasture. If I should have to give up one of the two, preaching or the conference, it would be the preaching. There is something about the conference that makes me feel the gospel is declared by each one in their experiences. I know the Lord is able to lead my mind to see the beauty in a passage of Scripture, so I have had a sermon all alone. May the Lord enable the brethren to meet together as often as possible, and speak of his kingdom, talk of his power, goodness and mercy, is my desire.

Your unworthy sister,

ATTIE A. CURTIS.

NEW HOLLAND, Ohio, Mar. 15, 1893.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—Find inclosed a letter written by Elder S. H. Durand, which I feel to have no right to appropriate all to myself, as I believe it contains spiritual food for all the afflicted and poor people of our adorable Lord.

Those of your readers who may have read the poem entitled "Lone Pilgrim," in the SIGNS, may be glad to know something of the eccentric preacher who was the subject of the poem. The author, Mr. John Ellis, an aged minister of the denomination called "Disciples," visited here in my brother's home a short time ago. He also wrote a poem about the "Lone Widow," whom he visited in her desolate home after her husband's death, more pathetic and touching than "Lone Pilgrim." "White Pilgrim" was the name originally given to this peculiar man. He lived at one time and preached in a village five miles from here, called Williamsport. He belonged to the "New Light Church." He soon tired of his narrow limits as pastor of one church; and dressed in garments of pure white, and riding a white horse, he began his "evangelistic" work, traveling through eastern Ohio, southern Pennsylvania, and reaching some portions of New Jersey, where he became a victim to smallpox, and died, and was buried in New Jersey, in some lone spot, alone, and far away from wife or kindred or home. Mr. Ellis, who traveled and preached with him on a part of his tour, afterward sought and visited the spot where the "White Pilgrim" lay, and while sitting beside the lonely grave composed and wrote the poem that has since been sung in almost every home in our land. The author of the poem is yet living and "evangelizing" in Colorado. He labored extensively among the Indians at one time, and composed a number of hymns in their native tongue.

With love to all the dear household of faith, I remain your unworthy sister in deep affliction,

MARY PARKER.

DE LAND, Fla., March 10, 1893.

MISS MARY PARKER—MY DEAR SISTER:—I cannot feel as you express yourself in your letter of the 4th, that my time is better employed than by writing to one like you, nor that you ought to ask my pardon for writing that letter. Just the reverse would be nearer my feeling on the subject. Your letter is so good, and interesting, and touching, that I am going to send a portion of it to the SIGNS for the dear friends to see. I get many letters speaking of you, some inquiring, and some telling of letters received from you in acknowledgment of some token of their love. The friends do not, and never will, forget you. They count it, as I do, a favor to be in correspondence with you, and to receive your letters. Your mind is kept in a great measure in exercise upon spiritual things, and it is a benefit to a christian to converse or correspond with such. I know that you are often greatly tried and tempted under and through your sufferings of body and anxieties of mind, and that you no doubt often feel cold, and barren, and worldly minded, and are assailed by "the accuser of the brethren" with doubts and fears. This could not but be the case with a living soul. One whose religion is only a profession, might be so sustained by a self-confidence, and a desire for admiration from the world, as to bear great pain with composure, as many have done. But one who has been made to feel the burden of a depraved nature, as you and all the Lord's people have, and whose hope rests upon the revelation of Christ to them as their righteousness, and whose blessedness is that "of the man unto whom the Lord imputeth righteousness without works," and whose religion, therefore, causes them to be hated and despised by the world, even by their nearest relatives, such will surely be greatly tried, and often "cast into darkness and in the deeps." They will be brought into such straits, into such places of desolation, distress and mourning, that only a fresh revelation of Jesus to their poor souls can do them good, "and bring them out of their distresses." This is the way you have been continually, again and again, prepared to "give thanks unto the Lord for his goodness, and for his wonderful works to the children of men." I have often thought of you in your seasons of inexpressible loneliness and gloom, which I know must come upon you, oftener, I have no doubt, than you speak of them. You could not describe them so as to bring your condition to the understanding of any one who has not had some measure of the experience of it. We have often spoken of it, as we have talked of your afflictions; and I think we have been able to follow your wonderful path as you began to come forth again out of the dark night, or "up from the wilderness, leaning on your Beloved." How blessed it is that the dear Savior knows all of your peculiar depths of trial and suffering; that, indeed, he is with you in them. He bore them all, bore your sicknesses, carried your sorrows, was afflicted in all your afflictions, tempted in all points like unto you, suffered for your sins, and thus was given "the tongue of the learned" (learned in all the knowledge of suffering), that he might speak a word in season to poor, weary souls, and so bring you forth out of every new depth to a new and greater height, better prepared to speak of his redeeming grace, and of his love that passeth knowledge, and to talk of his power. It is a comfort when we can feel, in such inexpressible griefs and gloom, that we are but following him who was made perfect through suffering to be the Captain of our salvation, and lead us to glory. "These are they which follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth." If we have followed him in sorrow and death, we shall follow him in glory. Indeed, do we not already know something of that glorious following? What else, my dear sister, could have given you to experience at times such a "rejoicing in tribulation," such a peace in the midst of conflict, such an exulting sense of victory, even while the enemy seemed to be coming in like a flood, and pressing hardest upon you, and such an exaltation of soul, even when in the lowest depths, that you seemed to look down from an infinite height of glory upon all the raging elements of trouble, pain and confusion here below? Yes, even here in these low grounds of sorrow, you, and all the Lord's dear afflicted ones, have tasted each in his appointed measure, the sweet fulfillment of the dear Savior's precious words to his Father and our Father, "The glory which thou gavest me, I have given them; that they may be one, even as we are one. I in them, and thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one; that the world may know that thou has sent me, and hast loved them as thou hast loved me."—John xvii. 22, 23.

When we learn that the path to such glory, and such an experience of oneness among all the dear people of God, lies through this "great tribulation," how thankful we feel that he has brought us into that sweet path of trouble; and how we long to bear with patience all the afflictions wherewith the Lord has in love and mercy afflicted us.

But I had no thought of writing at such length.

We all send love. Remember me kindly to your brother and his family.

Your brother affectionately,

SILAS H. DURAND.

TUSCOLA, Ill., Feb. 27, 1893.

DEAR EDITORS OF THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES:—I have been for some time a reader of your valuable paper, although not a subscriber. I have an uncle here (John Cox) who takes it, and I get the paper from him and read it.

I would like to write you my religious experience, and if you see fit you may publish it; and if not, you may consign it to the waste-basket.

When I was fourteen years old I joined the so-called "Christian" church during a revival meeting. I was told that all I had to do was to make up my mind to be good, and I would be good. Well, it did not do me any good, and I quit trying to "be good" for ten years. Then, urged by friends, I joined again, thinking that age could enable me to live up to my duty as I understood it. Well, still it would not go, for I was trying to do for myself what only God can do, and I had nothing within myself to create a love for good. I got disgusted and quit, and ceased to care much about heaven or hell, and sometimes doubted whether there was any truth in the world at all. This state of things continued for about one year, or until about eighteen months ago. I have been in bad health for some years. I was lying in my room one afternoon, thinking over my past life, what a failure it had been, when a strange feeling took possession of me. A weight of mountains seemed to rest upon me. I seemed to be slipping away from everything, and thought I was going to die. Then the question, "Where will I go to?" came to me. Then the conviction burst upon me that I was lost. I saw I was doomed, and I cried out in agony. Then, while heaven and earth seemed trembling in the balance, I felt a keen pain as of a sharp sword, and a burden was lifted from off my heart. A light burst in upon me, and I knew I had been born again; that new birth of which Christ spake to Nicodemus. Well, for a while I was happy, supremely happy. About two weeks after this I had a vision of Christ upon the cross, suspended in mid air. I thought I would never have any more trouble with the devil, and that my sinful nature was dead; but alas! I find I was sadly mistaken. But I knew better than to look for any good within myself. I am thoroughly out with Arminianism, or self-religion, and am a strong believer in predestination. About three months after I was converted I joined the Missionary Baptists here; but I think I was mistaken in so doing. I do not believe in their missions, but I do believe in predestination of all things, and they are directly contrary on these things.

The Primitive Baptists are few in this section, and this doctrine meets with much disapproval. But I cannot see how it can be otherwise. We believe that God is all-wise and all-powerful; and if so he certainly could stop all evil and cause only good to exist in the world. To illustrate, if I were in charge of a garden, and had the power to keep out everything which would injure the plants, but did not do so, I would certainly be blamed by the owner of the garden for not doing it. But God cannot be held responsible. He does not have to account to anyone for his actions. All we can do is to submit, whether we like it or not.

I would like to hear from some one

A HANDFUL OF CORN.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—Will you please give your views on Psalm lxxii. 16, 17, and gratify your very unworthy sister, as I hope, in Christ?

C. M. HOWARD.

STAMFORD, N. Y., March, 1893.

REPLY.

"There shall be a handful of corn in the earth upon the top of the mountains; the fruit thereof shall shake like Lebanon; and they of the city shall flourish like grass of the earth. His name shall endure forever; his name shall be continued as long as the sun: and men shall be blessed in him; all nations shall call him blessed."—Psalm lxxii. 16, 17.

Although we may have written before upon this portion of Scripture, there is no danger of exhausting its fullness of the testimony of Jesus. In compliance with the request of our sister the following thoughts are submitted to the consideration of our readers, with the sincere desire that they may be satisfactory to our inquiring sister.

Whatever else may be contained in the text, it is evident that in this whole psalm the Spirit of Christ moved the writer to record the positive certainty of the final triumph of Jesus in the glory of the gospel dispensation. Certainly our exalted Redeemer is the king to whom the judgments and righteousness of God are given; and all the gracious declarations contained in this wonderful prayer and prophecy find their fulfillment in Christ Jesus alone. None of the kings of the earth have ever met the specific description which is given in the context; and none who are governed by the selfishness of the natural heart can ever desire to bear the character given in this psalm of this Son of the King. While those who seek their own advantage must court the favor of the rich and prosperous, and gain the approbation of the rulers among men, this divinely appointed Judge is found maintaining the cause of those who have no helper, and "He shall judge the poor of the people, he shall save the children of the needy, and shall break in pieces the oppressor." This language is applicable to none but our Lord Jesus, of whom the prophet bears witness to the same effect in describing him as the Branch. "With righteousness shall he judge the poor, and reprove with equity for the meek of the earth; and he shall smite the earth with the rod of his mouth; and with the breath of his lips shall he slay the wicked."—Isa. xi. 4. Of no other king is this description correct. Only the King of righteousness answers the specifications by which the spiritual Solomon is identified in this prophetic prayer of David. The exalted Jesus alone has dominion "from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth." These limits do not refer to any geographical boundary. The government of the King in Zion extends from the river of divine judgment, the antitypical Jordan, to "all the ends of the earth," unto whom he says, "Look unto me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth; for I am God, and besides me there is none else." None of those included in this command shall fail to look unto Jesus, and none shall ever look unto him and be lost. If there is one characteristic of this psalm more prominent than any other it is the absolute immutability of every announcement contained in it. So, in the verse before our text, it is said, "And he shall live, and to him shall be given the gold of Sheba; prayer also shall be made for him continually, and daily shall he be praised." The gold of Sheba may signify the riches of the everlasting covenant, or that oath by which that covenant is established; the word Sheba being translated oath, or covenant. His praise can never cease while his eternal life exists, since his life is the everlasting assurance that his work is perfect in the salvation of all who come unto God by him.

"There shall be a handful of corn in the earth upon the top of the mountains." The first point that challenges attention in this clause of the text is the particular amount of the corn; it is exactly "a handful." There is not one grain more than the hand can grasp; nor can the hand embrace one more than the precise number of grains with which it is filled. This is an important specification to be observed in considering the gospel teaching of the figurative expression. Then observe next that the hand is not filled with tares or thistles. It is corn alone which is in the full hand. There is strong consolation for the afflicted and poor people whose hope is in Christ Jesus, in the witness here given. Not only is the least grain of this corn in the omnipotent hand from which no power can pluck it out, but even when it is "in the earth" it is still "upon the top of the mountains," in that all created things are subservient to the development of the gracious display of its fruit to the glory of God the Father. Often the little grain may feel that the earth has effectually covered it, so that it can never hope again to look up. In mournful despondency, the tempted one may ask, "Will the Lord cast off forever? and will he be favorable no more? Is his mercy clean gone forever? doth his promise fail forever? hath God forgotten to be gracious? hath he in anger shut up his tender mercies?" But the blessed Comforter will take of the things of Jesus and show unto the tried one, so that he shall know that this doubting unbelief is only his own infirmity.

Remembering the works of the Lord and his wonders of old, meditating of his work, and talking of his doings, he shall be able to rest in the assurance, "Thy way, O God, is in the sanctuary; who is so great a God as our God?"

But let it not be forgotten that the word of truth has declared that this "handful of corn" shall be "in the earth." Carnal reason refers the saint to his subjection to the vanity of earthly pollution, and finds therein occasion for assailing the genuineness of his hope in the grace which is revealed in the Lord Jesus Christ. Under this unbelieving doubt he forgets that his dependence is exclusively upon the power of that hand by which he is kept, and is ready to sink into despair. In such a time it is the work of the ever blessed Comforter to take this precious word of Jesus and show it unto the fainting believer. Then he sees that it is according to the will of God that he is given the fellowship of the sufferings of Christ in thus being subjected to the bondage of corruption "in the earth."

No depth of earth can ever change the "corn" into anything else. It may be buried long in dry and sterile earth; but when it is moistened by the heavenly rain it will be developed and always bring forth after its kind. No scientist has ever been able to comprehend the power which is called life, by which every seed is developed. Yet it is known to the humble laborer that he must plant living seed if he wishes it to germinate. So, in the application of the figure under consideration, there is life in the corn which is in the earth. If it could be claimed that any earth might communicate life to the seed planted in it, surely there could be no such power in the sterile soil which is found upon the top of the mountains. Nor is such a location favorable to the reception of the dew and rain. Certainly no gardener would select such a place for the cultivation of any crop which he sought to produce. The designation of so unfavorable a location signifies that the corn is not nourished by the soil in which it is buried. All its increase is of God. Divine grace displays miraculous power in the case of every sinner who is manifested as the fruit of this heavenly corn.

Since it is "upon the top of the mountains" that this miracle is developed, it is evident that it is above the mountain where the law pours its dreadful curse upon every sinner. There is but one such location revealed in the Scriptures. "And it shall come to pass in the last days, that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills; and all nations shall flow unto it." No curse of Sinai can ever reach this exalted place. The "handful of corn" is the planting of the Lord, that he may be glorified. No mountains of sin have ever risen high enough to defeat the purpose of eternal love in this divine planting. Although this precious seed is "in the earth upon the top of the mountains," it is still under the watchful care of that God who is the refuge and defense of his chosen people. This assurance is plainly declared in the prophecy concerning Jezreel, which name signifies the seed of God, or that which God planted. "I will sow her unto me in the earth; and I will have mercy upon her that had not obtained mercy; and I will say to them which were not my people, Thou art my people; and they shall say, Thou art my God." "For, lo, I will command, and I will sift the house of Israel among all nations, like as corn is sifted in a sieve, yet shall not the least grain fall upon the earth."—Hosea ii. 23; Amos ix. 9. Thus it is certain that even though buried in the darkness of this polluted earth, the chosen subjects of saving grace are not hidden from the sight of their faithful God. While they are dead in sin, and "children of wrath even as others," in their relationship to the earth, their life is still hid with Christ in God; and they "are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the last time." Let it be understood that this seed which is buried in the earth upon the top of the mountains was "a handful of corn" when it was buried, that it did not cease to be "a handful of corn" when it was "in the earth," and that it never bears any other fruit but the same corn whose life was in the original seed. For the comfort of the disconsolate saints who sit in darkness, it should be remembered that there is no possibility that the most insignificant one represented by this corn should ever be lost from the hand in which it is kept by the omnipotence of that God who works all things after the counsel of his own will. The love and wisdom of God ordained from the beginning concerning every one of those whom he has chosen and appointed unto eternal life, for whom Jesus died, that they should not be left to perish in their own weakness. The eternal God is their refuge, and underneath are the everlasting arms.

"The fruit thereof shall shake like Lebanon; and they of the city shall flourish like grass of the earth." The prominent doctrine contained in this clause is the unfailing certainty that this corn shall bear fruit "to the praise of the glory of his grace, wherein he hath made us accepted in the Beloved." Their flourishing does not signify that they shall prosper in the world; for in that sort of flourishing they would not bear fruit to the praise of their victorious Leader. The nearer to his own example his saints are led in their experience, the more is this prophecy fulfilled in their flourishing. The fellowship of the sufferings of Christ is the highest privilege bestowed upon those who love him. In this they are led by his Spirit to rejoice; and they flourish in conformity to the afflictions of the gospel. As the waving cedars of Lebanon were the emblematic expression of the praise of the God of the typical nation of Israel, so they well represent the praise of God in his spiritual Israel. The cedars had no control of the winds by which they were shaken; they only gave evidence of the unseen power of the winds. So the praise of the saints is but the expression of that which is wrought in them by the Spirit of Christ. They are destitute of power of themselves to declare the praise of their Lord, as the trees are powerless to shake themselves. So the grass of the earth can claim no glory for its flourishing. It is entirely passive in developing the effect wrought in it by the soil and atmosphere. Surely there is nothing in this illustration to authorize the saints, "they of the city," to seek in themselves the marks of that flourishing which is here foretold. It is only in the Lord that any inhabitant of Zion can find justification, and in him alone shall all the seed of Israel glory. Their growth in grace develops their own utter destitution of every good thing, and shows more and more clearly their entire dependence upon that grace which is revealed in the Lord Jesus Christ. It is the clearest proof of their flourishing in this spiritual growth when they most fully realize the truth of the words of Jesus, "Without me ye can do nothing." To the natural mind this growth appears to be withering, instead of flourishing. But it is the only way in which the saints are led away from self and earthly dependence, and made to rest in the perfect work of their Redeemer. This rest is indeed glorious.

Our limits will not allow that the last verse of the text should be considered in the separate clauses, as would be desirable. The continuance of the name of this King of glory is inseparable from the preservation of all the subjects of his grace, who are the "corn," which in our text fills the hand of their God. It is well to take in connection with this declaration the word of the Lord in which he says, "See now that I, even I, am he, and there is no god with me: I kill, and I make alive; I wound, and I heal: neither is there any that can deliver out of my hand. For I lift my hand to heaven, and say, I live forever."—Deut. xxxii. 39, 40. So Jesus says, "My Father, which gave them me, is greater than all; and no man is able to pluck them out of my Father's hand."—John x. 29. The conclusion is unavoidable that not a single grain of this handful of corn shall fail to be borne into that heaven to which the hand of God is lifted. The truth of his word and the confirmation of his oath secure this final glory of all this handful of corn. The all nations which shall call him blessed, are the same men who shall be blessed in him. They are "the nations of them which are saved, as seen in the vision recorded by John, Rev. xxi. 24. No others can so much as say that Jesus is the Lord.—1 Cor. xii. 3. May the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ lead all who hope in his salvation to rest in the everlasting name of this elect Corn of wheat, through whose death the whole family of the redeemed are sanctified; and to him be glory evermore. Amen.

CHURCH HISTORY.

THE two-dollar cloth and the two-dollar-and-fifty-cent leather bindings of the Church History are about exhausted, but we still have a few copies of the four-dollar Imitation Turkey Morocco binding, and two copies of the five-dollar Genuine Turkey Morocco on hand.

The sale of the History has become so light that we cannot afford to run another edition until we can ascertain how many copies can be sold. We therefore will receive subscriptions for the book, to be delivered the latter part of this year, if a sufficient amount is received to warrant the publication of another edition. If not, we will refund the money.

KEEP IT.

PLEASE destroy your old Supplements and keep the last one, and read it carefully. We especially request our brethren and friends to note the fourth paragraph, and to assist us all they can in accordance with the terms given therein. If you cannot attend to the matter yourself you are at liberty to authorize some one else to act in your name.

When two or more new subscribers are sent at the same time, in accordance with terms given in Supplement of April 12th, 1893, and one is in compliance with the second or third paragraph, and the others on terms given in fourth paragraph, it is very essential to state which name is sent according to terms of the second or third paragraph, as that name is credited to the end of 1893, while the others are credited one year from the time their subscription begins.

IT IS VERY IMPORTANT

That great care should be taken in sending a renewal of subscriptions to give us the same name as the one to whom the paper is already coming. If the party is married be sure the initials are given correctly; for if the paper is coming in the wife's name and the husband writes us to send the paper the next year, and signs his own name, we have no means of knowing that the person to whom the paper is going is his wife; and not finding his name on our list he is entered as a new subscriber and the paper sent to both; or if the paper is going in the husband's name and the renewal sent on in the wife's name, the result will be the same. The best way is to inclose in your letter one of the little pink slips containing the name pasted either on the margin of the paper or on the wrapper in which it comes.

EXTRACTS

FROM FOUR ORATIONS BY EDWARD IRVING, BEFORE THE LONDON (ENGLAND) MISSIONARY SOCIETY, MAY, 1824.

ORATION TWO.

THE PERPETUITY OF THIS MISSIONARY CONSTITUTION PROVED.

THE gospel must surely have changed its nature and abated its efficacy when the converts shall become loath to support the man who, under God, hath brought them from darkness to light, and from the service of Satan to serve the living God; and the converts must be miserable indeed if they have not bread and water for the mouth which hath brought them glad tidings of great joy. For in the primitive times it was counted an honor, not a burden, to give them the small accommodation which they needed. Cornelius prayed Peter to tarry with him certain days. Lydia, as the first fruits of her conversion, besought Paul and Silas in these words, "If ye have judged me to be faithful, come into my house and abide there." At Corinth, while yet Paul held with the Jews, he abode with Aquila, and wrought at his craft; but when he turned unto the Gentiles he entered into the house of Justus, one that worshiped God, and abode there. On parting from the Elders of the Ephesian church he said, "I have coveted no man's silver, or gold, or apparel; but these hands have ministered to my necessities, and those that are with me." Which last two instances show us how they were wont at times to labor for their bread, that they might not be burdensome; but that this was the exception, and not the rule of their proceedings, is manifest from Paul's apology for it in his epistle to the Corinthians. The rule was to follow out the unworldly, unselfish, unambitious way of life which Christ had taught, to be wholly careless of the present world, wholly disengaged from its concerns, that they might be wholly occupied with the things of the world to come.

When deviations do occur in the practice of the primitive times from this exact ritual of the missionary laid down by our Lord, they are of that kind which confirm the spirit of the rule, being all deviations by excess, not by defect, of its peculiar characteristics. Paul, in these two instances of Ephesus and Corinth, saw it good to forego the right of living by his ministry, but in foregoing it he carefully excepted against it being considered as a precedent. "Have we not power to eat and to drink? Have we not power to lead about a sister, a wife, as well as other apostles, or as the brethren of the Lord and Cephas? or I only, and Barnabas, have not we power to forbear working?" In these questions of the indignant apostle is revealed the custom of the first founders of the kingdom, to go from place to place, carrying with them no earthly means, and devoting themselves to no worldly calling, but depending upon the benevolence of the worthy, and having their feet shod with no preparation but the preparation of the gospel of peace. In his triumphant answers to the same questions we have it asserted as a fundamental law of the propagation of the kingdom, and supported by the reasonableness of the thing, by the Mosaic laws, and last of all by the ordination of the Lord, "that they which preach the gospel should live by the gospel." Now I ask in what part of the gospel this is ordained by the Lord if not in the passage for whose everlasting obligation we plead, wherein it is said, "For the laborer is worthy of his meat?" There is not another of the Lord's sayings which maketh even allusion to the subject. Here then Paul quoteth a standing rule of the kingdom, upon the authority of this document, which the practice of many moderns would wipe out of the canon. Do you ask, Why then did Paul dare to set aside the ordinance of the Lord? Let him answer for himself. "If others be partakers of this power over you, are not we rather? Nevertheless, we have not used this power; but suffer all things, lest we should hinder the gospel of Christ." He did it out of the nobile officium, the high prerogative of an inspired apostle, because he saw that the gospel of Christ, with which he was intrusted, would be advanced by his doing so; and how advanced he hath told us in his next epistle, when speaking of the same thing he thus expresseth his noble and magnanimous soul, "Have I committed an offense in abasing myself that ye might be exalted, because I have preached to you the gospel of God freely? I robbed other churches, taking wages of them, to do you service. And when I was present with you, and wanted, I was chargeable to no man: for that which was lacking to me, the brethren which came from Macedonia supplied: and in all things I have kept myself from being burdensome unto you, and so will I keep myself. As the truth of Christ is in me, no man shall stop me of this boasting in the regions of Achaia. Wherefore? because I love you not? God knoweth. But what I do, that I will do, that I may cut off occasion from them which desire occasion; that wherein they glory, they may be found even as we. For such are false apostles, deceitful workers, transforming themselves into the apostles of Christ." These false apostles and deceitful workers had accused the pilgrim traveler from town to town and from region to region as a needy vagabond, who thus earned dishonorable bread, whereby they sought to obstruct his success in the regions of Achaia; but the pilgrim traveler had a soul full of resources and a heart full of stoutness to overthrow these railers against the honorable calling and providential life of a missionary. Coming into the region which had been poisoned against him, he found a certain Jew named Aquila, with his wife Priscilla, and came unto them, and because they were of the same craft he abode with them and wrought; for by their occupation they were tent-makers." Thus did he defeat the wicked stratagem of Satan's servants, who had transformed themselves into the apostles of Christ, by demonstrating that he sought no gain, cared for no livelihood, but became all things to all men, that he might gain the more. Though I have, said the apostle, done this by virtue of my apostolic prerogative, the church will suffer no damage whatever if her missionaries, when they find the same false report circulating to the prejudice of the gospel, should adopt the same magnanimous course of working with their hands in order to put the calumny to death, and triumph over it with a holy indignation and joy, and not only contribute to their own necessities, but even to the necessities of others who have need; but I would advise them first to beware that they become not instrumental in spreading the very notion that they are hirelings and gainers by taking fixed and stated salaries, like any other craftsmen, which is the sure and certain way to make themselves not only reputed, but justly regarded as hireling craftsmen. So that this example of Paul's deviation doth as it were rivet upon both sides the well-driven and well-directed bolt of the Lord, inasmuch as he honoreth the fundamental principle, that the gospel should seek and have no worldly emolument, nor depend upon any expedient of earthly dignity; while, in order to make the principle triumphant in an extreme case which occurred in his travels, he reacheth into the region of self-denial and destitution farther than the Lord required, in order to get the weapons with which to meet the new and unprecedented obstacle that had been opposed to his course. And while he rivets the well-directed bolt of the Lord, he reproves that poor and pithless weapon with which the prudent spirit of these times aimeth its puny blow at the heathen world; for truly we moderns have taken the very means to create that stumbling-block which Paul found in his way at Corinth, by so constituting the missionary office as that the men of this world might have in their mouth the very words of which Paul reproved the Corinthians, and to disprove which he needed to adopt this voluntary act of self-humiliation. To cure this, our shallow prudence, if we would use the lesson given by this leader of the missionary army, we would do well, for as many years as we have fed and hired men, to require that they should go, as Paul did, into the other extreme of not even eating and drinking at any one's expense, but that they should support themselves by the labor of their hands, and glory thereby over the false prejudice with which the cause, by our mismanagement, hath come to be circumvented. This is the proper use of the apostle's deviation.

Now further, lest a sentence which occurs in the above quotations should be turned aside to justify the modern method of furnishing out the missionary, which the occurrence at Corinth doth so utterly discountenance; it is fortunate that from the epistle to the Philippians we can explain what those wages were which Paul took, and what his robbery of the churches, and what the supply of the Macedonian brethren, by the help of which he carried out his hardy scheme of confuting the false report by which the enemy had sought to impede his missionary progress. It is found written in the conclusion of his epistle to the Philippians (and how happy I am to make such quotations, God knoweth; for they bear my spirit up in the hopelessness of this controversy), "But I rejoiced in the Lord greatly, that now at the last your care of me hath flourished again; wherein ye were also careful, but ye lacked opportunity. Not that I speak in respect of want; for I have learned, in whatsoever state I am, therewith to be content. I know both how to be abased, and I know how to abound; and in all things I am instructed both to be full and to be hungry, both to abound and to suffer need. I can do all things through Christ, which strengtheneth me. Notwithstanding, ye have well done, that ye did communicate with my affliction. Now, ye Philippians, know also that in the beginning of the gospel, when I departed from Macedonia, no church communicated with me as concerning giving and receiving, but ye only. For even in Thessalonica ye sent once and again unto my necessity. Not because I desire a gift; but I desire fruit that may abound to your account. But I have all, and abound: I am full, having received of Epaphroditus the things which were sent from you, an odor of a sweet smell, a sacrifice acceptable, well-pleasing to God. But my God shall supply all your need according to his riches in glory by Christ Jesus." This is the apostle's receipt in full for his wages; this is his voluntary confession of his robbery; this is the help with which he was helped at Corinth of these good Philippians. As the former quotations are a proof of his most nice and chary delicacy lest the gospel of Christ should be breathed on with any aspersion, and of his magnanimity to bear every extreme of hardship rather than the missionary calling should be calumniated, let this stand for the proof of his most generous spirit to partake and receive brotherly help; and let it divide and distinguish that chariness and magnanimity from the natural pride and independence of the human heart, from which the former spirit is as distinct and distinguishable as the Spirit of Christ, who gave all heaven's glory up and took mendicant crumbs of men, is distinct and distinguishable from Satan's spirit. Let it show, moreover, into what straits Paul passed, and with what difficulties he was beset around, in following out his missionary peregrinations, and how he had no dependence upon foreign churches (for no one communicated with him save this of Philippi, whose gift he knew not of, and expected not, till Epaphroditus brought it in his hand). Finally, let it show how the Lord, the Son of Peace, forsook not in his wandering his hungered, his own laborious workman, whose niggard craft, oft interrupted, yielding him but a bare support, he brought him supplies from afar, and made them to follow him to Thessalonica, to Corinth, to Rome, everywhere through the heathen desert, as the waters of Meribah and the quails of the morning and the evening, followed the sandy, parched footing of the camp of Israel.

After perusing which examples, will any one say that Paul conformed not to the ritual of the missionary school because he took foreign supplies when they were offered, and wrought with his hands when it served his turn? Thou art right, he conformed not; that is, he did more than conform. He was an apostle, and more than an apostle, for he magnified the apostleship. Go thou and do likewise. Be more than a missionary; magnify the missionary office, and in such a way show thy nonconformity to thy Lord's commission and passport. But first be careful that thou art a missionary, and that the office in thy hand is not diminished of its due size nor shorn of its proper beams.

upon Christ's answer to Pilate, "Therefore he that delivered me unto thee hath the greater sin." Did Christ refer to his own Father there, charging his own Father with sin?

I sometimes hear people talk about building themselves up in christian life. Now, my experience is that I have been convinced there is nothing within myself that is good. If I am to have anything spiritual about me it must come from a source without.

The devil has been studying human nature six thousand years, and I cannot see but that he understands it better than I do myself; so if I undertake to do good of myself I am apt to fail. I believe only God knows what is best.

Yours in Christ,

W. C. COX.

HADDAM, Kan., Dec. 13, 1892.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—Having been a reader of the dear old family paper, the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, for a number of years, and receiving very much edification and comfort therefrom, I wish to add my testimony to its worth. After being, as I truly believe, born of the Spirit in the winter of 1872, and being made greatly to rejoice in my deliverance from the bondage of sin and death, I fell into the company of those who teach that it is only through obedience to the commands of Christ that we can be saved; that is, we must repent, have faith, be baptized, and literally obey all the ordinances of the Lord Jesus Christ, or be lost. And though I am ashamed to tell it, I took up with the notion, and tried in vain to live it and prove it, and preached it for seven years. It was contrary to my experience, and I utterly failed in every way to satisfy myself that I had any reasonable hope of salvation on the above grounds. So I stopped trying to teach others, and searched the Scriptures daily for three years, praying earnestly all that time that I might be led into the truth. I found no real proof of conditional salvation, no yea and nay, but all was yea and amen in Christ Jesus. This looked to me something like the doctrine of predestination; but could that be possibly true? About this time I became willing to get assistance from any source. I began to read the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, Elder J. F. Johnson's writings, and Elder G. Beebe's editorials. These all said there were no conditions whereby we could embrace eternal life; that there was utterly nothing we could do to merit salvation. This agreed with my experience and with the Scriptures, so far as I could understand them. And now, between the above named books and the SIGNS OF THE TIMES I feel that I have been led to embrace the truth, and taught more perfectly the truth of Christ. I am now willing to ascribe all honor to him, and accept him as my righteousness, sanctification and redemption. I have been many times greatly worried about some passages of Scripture that I did not understand; but I would not have to wait long until it would be explained to my edification and satisfaction in our family paper. I have had my travels, and about all my experience, hopes and fears, told far better than I can tell them. It does seem to me that the communications in the SIGNS have enabled me to get a better understanding of the way of salvation, by pointing out the many errors I had fallen into, and showing me what the Scriptures really do teach, that Christ is the end of the law for righteousness, and has saved his people from their sins. Like blind Bartimaeus, I hope I have cast aside my garment (self-righteousness), and arose and come to Jesus. My hopes are now centered in him. I now have a hope. But if eternal life depended on my righteous conduct there could be no hope for me. I do dearly love all who earnestly contend for the truth as it is in Jesus. That is why I call you brethren, and not because I think I am worthy by any means; for truly I feel too unworthy to be esteemed a brother. If the good Lord will kindly permit poor, unworthy me to still gather a few crumbs that fall under the table, I shall try to be satisfied and very thankful. To have my sight restored has been my prayer; and now if I can see the way, and see the Lord's chosen people follow him and be happy, and the truth prevail, and error exposed, and the blind receive their sight, the lame walk, the dumb speak, the lepers cleansed, and the name of Jesus exalted, I shall truly rejoice in Jesus as the way, the truth and the life.

The SIGNS OF THE TIMES is not the gospel, but it wields the sword of the Lord.

AMOS REED.

FAIRFIELD, Mich., Dec. 10, 1892.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS:—It is but a few months since I was baptized and received into the Old School Baptist Church. As I stood on the banks of the stream in which I was buried, it was with me both joy and sadness. I was glad I had been permitted to follow my Savior in the ordinance of baptism, and sad for fear my old enemy, doubt, would soon overtake me and cause deep sorrow. O, it is so delightful to be with those of the same faith. It seems as though it would be easier to live as I would like to, in peace and communion with Christ. Jesus was all day long my joy and song. But when the tempter comes I murmur and complain. Sometimes he says, "You cannot expect to be anything now. Those Old Baptists never see any good in themselves; and surely no one else can." But sometimes I can say I am glad I have been led in a path that takes away all love of the flesh, and ascribes all honor and glory to him who has all power in heaven and earth. I remember hearing you, Elder Beebe, preach about the promised land, and how the saints with an eye of faith looked across the river of death to the home of the blessed, those who were saved with an everlasting salvation. I remember the most of your sermon, although I was quite young. I heard other sermons that day, but nothing else so fixed my attention. If the joy we experience while meditating on his word is only a foretaste, why is it that we so cling to this mortal life? My health is poor, and I cannot get to meeting often. I have my Bible, SIGNS and hymn-book, and enjoy myself most at night when all is still. Then Jesus seems to come nearer, to cheer my fainting heart and strengthen me for another day of toil and temptation. Sometimes I think death is very near, and I often find myself wishing I could be forever with my Savior, and so be at rest. "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" I have thought so much of your sermon that I have, like sister Attie Curtis, made many silent visits. How I love to read the dear old SIGNS. No words can express it. There are but few of us here, but we have the word preached by my uncle, Thomas Wyman. Most of them are older than I, and O how small I feel. The 948th hymn of Beebe's Collection suits me,

"O thou in whose presence my soul takes delight," &c.

O how we miss brother Charles Livesay.

With love to all the dear saints everywhere, I am one of the weakest.

ALMORA BREES.

PORTLAND, Oregon, Feb. 24, 1893.

BRETHREN BEEBE—BELOVED IN THE LORD:—I have been sick and unable to work a large portion of my time since last September; but I have not forgotten my obligation to you. I could not be without the dear old standard-bearer, the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, now. If ever there was a time in my pilgrimage when that precious medium was full of comfort and sweet consolation to my poor heart it is now. How sweet to hear the language of Canaan, as the dear saints of the Most High tell of their joys and sorrows by the way. I would say to all the readers of the SIGNS,

"Shout, ye little flock and blest,
You on Jesus' throne shall rest;
There your seat is now prepared;
There your kingdom and reward."

And to you, dear brethren editors, may the Lord supply you with every needed grace in the future, as he has so graciously in the past, that you may continue to wield "The sword of the Lord and of Gideon," in honor of him who has called you to so noble and good a cause. I rejoice to see that in this day of great darkness there is a remnant according to the election of grace, who have not bowed down to any of the idols.

Yours in tribulation,

J. A. GRAFTON.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

Joseph Tucker was born Sept 27, 1839, and departed this life April 20th, 1893, aged 53 years 6 months and 23 days. He was joined in marriage with Miss Sarah Keton on Jan. 23, 1868. Eight children were born to them, seven of whom are living (one having preceded the father to the grave), with the sorrowing wife, to mourn their loss, which we hope is his eternal gain. He never united with any church, but was a firm believer in salvation by grace unadulterated with the works of man. The writer was with him a few days before his death, and heard his relation of a good hope, he having felt the free pardon of his sins.

I tried to speak to the comfort of the family, relatives and friends, after which his body was laid to rest in the Marysville cemetery, in Marion County, Iowa, to await the sound of the trump of God to awake the sleeping dead; for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible. I would say to the sorrowing family, Be of good cheer; he is not lost, but gone before.

JOHN T. BIXLER.

OUR dear brother in Christ, William Smith, died at his home in Redding, Ringgold Co., Iowa, on Jan. 26th, 1893, aged 75 years, 10 months and 20 days. He had a light stroke of palsy in the spring of 1892. In June following he had a very severe stroke, which rendered him almost entirely helpless. His mind was not badly impaired, considering his bodily affliction. He was born in Overton Co., Tenn., near Nashville, in the year 1816. He moved with his parents to Illinois in 1825, and was married to Katharine Keltner in 1838. In 1839 he moved to Jefferson Co., Iowa, where he joined the Primitive Baptist Church in 1843, and was chosen deacon the same year. He moved to Ringgold County in 1881. It was my privilege to be acquainted with him for the last twelve years, and I can truthfully say he was an exemplary christian. So far as truthfulness and honesty are concerned, none excelled him. He was a strong believer in the doctrine of predestination and election, and has been a constant reader of the SIGNS for a great many years, which he highly appreciated for the truth's sake, as does his dear old companion. A few days before his death he broke out singing and praising the Lord. Grandmother asked him what was the matter. He said he was going to die, and could see his way clear, and all was right. He also told her he stood firm on the foundation he first started out on, and that was to give all the glory to God. I have often heard him speak of his own weakness, and of God's power to work all things after the counsel of his own will. He leaves his dear companion, six sons and three daughters, his oldest son, James M. Smith, having preceded him in death some four years ago. His request was to not have any funeral preached; but by the request of some of the friends the writer's husband tried to speak a few words of comfort to the friends. There was a large and attentive congregation to pay their last tribute of respect to the deceased; after which the remains were taken to the Rose Hill cemetery for interment, to await the second coming of Christ, when brother Smith, and all the rest of God's people, will come forth, most glorious conquerors over death, hell and the grave, through Christ the Lord.

MRS. L. BLAKELY.

REDDING, Iowa, April 16, 1893.

DIED—Feb. 7th, 1892, Mr. John W. Mace, son-in-law of the late Whitefield Woolford. He had La Grippe, which left him with heart trouble in a distressing form. His sons hoped a change of climate would benefit him, and at their earnest solicitation he moved to Philadelphia, Pa., and we thought he was improving, when he had a return of La Grippe. They were not quite three months in their new home when the light went out, leaving many sad hearts. The loving care of his wife, devotion of his four sons, one daughter and many friends, and good medical attention, could not stay the approach of death. Mr. Mace was not a member of the church, but we believed him to be led by the Spirit of God, and an heir of immortal glory. We miss him in the dear old home, and in our meetings, where his voice was always heard in songs of praise. In a louder, sweeter song he sings God's power to save. He was taken to the Woolford cemetery, and sadly and silently buried in the cold, dark grave. May Israel's God be very near his loved ones in their sorrow, and lead them in paths of righteousness for his name's sake.

ALSO,

DIED—April 24th, 1893, in Washington, D. C., Mrs. Charles Edmonson, daughter of the late sister Berryman, of the Baltimore Md., Church. She was a loving wife, wise mother, kind sister and faithful friend. The peaceful expression upon her dear cold face seemed to say to her fond loved ones, Weep not; I was weary, O, so weary. The rest I longed for is mine. Now I know I am a child of God, singing his power to save.

Early in autumn she suffered intensely with sciatica, and in January was paralyzed from her waist down. Medical skill and devoted love alike were powerless; but by grace divinely given she could say, "I know my afflictions are for a wise purpose. I always liked the Old School Baptists; now I love them dearly. Elder Chick has been a great comfort to me. Sometimes I feel that I cannot wait for the regular times of his coming. I love him. I am afraid I have deceived you. If I could only know I was a child of God! I want an assurance. I want to suffer with my dear Savior; but I fear I have not the experience his dear people have. My greatest desire to get up again is that I may go to the little church here and ask a home with them. I want to be buried in baptism as my dear Savior was, and rise to walk in newness of life. I would not deceive the church; I would tell them how sinful I am, and how unworthy I feel." By her request I was with her several weeks, and it was indeed a precious privilege to hear her in psalms, hymns and spiritual songs, making melody in her heart to the Lord. It was not her privilege to have her name written upon the church-book here, but we know it was written in the book of life. On Thursday morning she said, "Susie, I am not afraid to die; why should I be?" "According as he hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before him in love." Later she folded her hands, saying, "I lay me down to die. Heavenly Father, precious Savior, take me home." May her fondly loved ones be led, as she was, by the Spirit of God, and like their precious one awake to find their names written in the book of life.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date. This date denotes the time at which your subscription expires; and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

MY CROSS.

WHEN I was called to follow Jesus
My Lord a cross held out to me,
Which I must take and bear it onward
If I would his disciple be.
I turned my head another way,
And said, "Not this, my Lord, I pray."

Yet as I could not but obey him,
I sought out many another kind,
And tried among those painted crosses
The smallest of them all to find.
But still the Lord held forth my own,
"This thou must bear, and this alone."

Unheeding, then, my dear Lord's offer,
My burdens all on him to lay,
I tried myself my cross to lighten
By cutting part of it away;
And still the more I tried to do,
The rest of it more heavy grew.

Well, if I cannot go without it,
I'll make the most of it I may;
And so I held my cross uplifted,
In sight of all who came that way.
Alas! my pride found bitterly
My cross looked small to all but me.

And then I was ashamed to bear it,
While others walked so free and light,
And trailed it in the dust behind me,
And tried to keep it out of sight;
Till Jesus said, "Art thou indeed Ashamed to follow as I lead?"

No, no! why this shall be my glory,
All other things I'll count but loss;
And quickly then I fashioned garlands,
And hung them round about my cross.
"Ah, foolish one! such works are dead;
Bear it for me," the Master said.

I bore it then with him before me Right onward through the day's white heat;
Till with toil and pain o'er-mastered,
I fainting sank down at his feet.
But for his matchless care that day
I should have perished by the way.

But O! I grew so very weary
When life and sense crept back once more!
The whole horizon hung with darkness,
And grief where joy had been before.
Better to die, I said, and rest,
Than live with such a burden pressed.

Then Jesus spoke: "Bring here thy burden,
And find in me a full release;
Bring all thy sorrows, all thy longings,
And take instead my perfect peace.
Trying to bear thy cross alone,
Child, the mistake is all thine own."

And now my cross is all supported,
Part on my Lord and part on me;
But as he is so much the stronger
He seems to bear it—I go free.
I touch its weight just there and here—
Weight that would crush were he not near.

Or if at times it seemeth heavy,
And if I droop along the road,
The Master lays his own sweet promise
Between my shoulder and the load;
Bidding my heart look up, not down,
Till the cross fades before the crown.

ANNA WARNER.

CORRESPONDENCE.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, Ind., Mar. 28, 1893.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—This letter, from the greatly afflicted and helpless sister Taylor, is too glorifying to the God of grace, and too rich in comfort for his saints, to be "cast into the fire;" therefore I send it to you, believing you will gladly publish it in the SIGNS, and that all who read it will feel that it is a blessing to their hearts. In it we see the truth of the words of the Lord Jesus, and of his servant James, "Blessed are the poor in spirit;" "Hath not God chosen the poor of this world rich in faith?" Truly hath God chosen the children of his love in the furnace of affliction, and refined them through suffering and fiery trials; that they may offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness. Now, while here in the flesh, they are partakers of Christ's sufferings; that, when his glory shall be revealed, they may be glad also with exceeding joy.

Your readers will only need to know of the temporal destitution and physical helplessness of our widowed sister, with her dependent little son, to manifest their love to her in the dear fellowship of sympathy and needful ministrations, remembering the words of Jesus, how he said, "It is more blessed to give than to receive." "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." Thus contributing to the necessities of this suffering saint, the loving and liberal brethren will enable her to gratefully and with comfort realize her hope and trust that "The Lord will provide."

For many years she has been bereft of the comfort of gospel preaching, almost altogether, through her bodily afflictions; therefore she very much appreciates the privilege of reading our periodicals and literature. An apostle of Jesus says, "As every man hath received the gift, even so minister the same one to another, as good stewards of the manifold grace of God." Yours in the fellowship of Christ,

D. BARTLEY.

OLD SPARTA, N. C., March 12, 1893.

ELDER D. BARTLEY—BELOVED IN THE LORD:—If one so unworthy may claim such sacred relationship with the chosen ministers and royal priesthood of Zion's King. I have greatly desired to send you some word, by way of answer to your last most timely, most welcome, dear letter, so richly perfumed with the delicious fragrance of the Redeemer's merits, to tell you how thankful I felt to both you and the compassionate Father, for those soothing expressions of christian fellowship and esteem, which acted like oil cast forth upon the troubled waters; and for the many excellent and soul refreshing things you were enabled to send me from the bountiful table of the dear Father. But I have been very cold and barren, so dead to all living sense of the Redeemer's love, and to all spiritual feeling, save an intense yearning, longing and reaching out of soul for the joys and benefits of the Master's rich pasture; that, aside from my severe suffering and physical inability, I could not write a word in due season to any of the faithful, time-worn laborers of the Lord's rich harvest-field, whose weary hands and feeble knees so much need to be lifted up and strengthened by those who reap the precious fruits of their laborious toiling. O, dear brother, I have passed through a long, dark, cold night of soul, when neither moon nor stars appeared to light up the indescribable gloom that hung over my spiritual sky, since I last wrote to you. I felt, not only the utter loneliness and desolation of a poor, helpless widow, and forsaken by the last human friend, but that Jesus had left me entirely alone upon the deep, black, stormy sea, without anchor to stay the frail, tottering life-bark, while the waves and billows rolled over my defenceless head. How fiery were the darts of the enemy, and how cunning were the devices he used to cast me into the yawning abyss of unbelief. Long did I toil, endeavoring to row against contrary winds, eagerly watching for the shore, hoping to soon catch a beam from the rising sun, praying with all my might for the Captain to come to my relief. But not until the coming of your precious letter did the Morning Star appear, and the still small voice speak peace to the furious storm. O how sweet and delightful and enjoyable was the tranquil peace, the heavenly calm, that pervaded my whole being, as my soul drank in the sweet fragrance of Jesus' dear name, the refreshing drops from his cloud, and bathed in the mellow, warm light of the reconciled countenance of the tender Father! Such a season of refreshing from the Lord afforded me such a blessed peace and perfect rest of soul, mind and body as I had not realized for several weeks. O how wonderful and precious is the power and love of God, when felt in the soul of a poor, vile, helpless sinner, and when it is so vividly displayed in the hearts of God's chosen in Christ Jesus, uniting and binding them together by its indissoluble cords, through the righteousness and blood of Jesus, their ever living head.

Often am I made to wonder why the Almighty Father should have chosen such a poor, sinful worm as myself to be a sharer of his saving grace, to feel the power and sweetness of redeeming love, shed abroad in my vile heart by the Holy Ghost which is given unto us; yes, given free, without money, without price; who were predestinated unto the adoption of sons, and ordained unto eternal life, through Jesus Christ, in whom alone is salvation; that I should be given an ear to hear and a heart to understand the certain joyful sound of the glorious gospel of God, the Savior and Redeemer of Israel. Well may a poet sing,

"O for such love let rocks and hills
Their lasting silence break,
And all harmonious human tongues
The Savior's praises speak."

How I do wish I could love and serve and praise and adore him as I ought; that my whole life could have been spent to the praise of the glory of his grace, which has, as I humbly trust, enshrined his name and love upon the highest throne of my heart. No other name, to my ear, is half so sweet as JESUS. What depths of meaning lie buried in that one word, Jesus! signifying, not only that he is the Savior of them that believe, but that all whom God hath chosen in him shall come unto him, in the day when the Father is pleased to manifest his omnipotent power unto them, and they shall be saved from their sins; "For he shall [not may, will, or can, for sinners will let him] save his people from their sins." How glad I am that salvation is certain to all the elect heirs of promise; for if left to the choice of sinners, they would never be saved. They are enemies to God, carnal, sold under sin, and have neither the will nor power to come unto him. Then, if we are believers in Christ, and have been translated out of nature's darkness into the glorious gospel light of God's dear Son, it is all by the unmerited, sovereign mercy and grace of God, who has by his Holy Spirit worked in us to will and to do, enabling us to believe on him through his Son. For it is the work of God that we believe on him whom he hath sent, to be a propitiation for the sins of his people Israel, in whom he is glorified. Then, if we have been redeemed and reconciled unto God by his Son, and have received the earnest of our inheritance, the Holy Spirit, whom the Redeemer said he would send to his disciples, when he left them in these low grounds of sorrow, to comfort their hearts, to abide with and teach them all things he had commanded them, what more can we want to prove that we are the "chosen generation," whom God hath taken from the degenerate, fallen posterity of Adam, to be a separate people unto himself, a peculiar people, who worship God in spirit and in truth, rejoice in Christ Jesus, and have no confidence in the flesh? Why should we care for the reproaches, persecutions and revilings of the world, who, as the Redeemer said, when they were nailing him to the cross, "know not what they do?" Their eyes are blinded by the god of this world, their hearts are hard as iron, so they cannot believe or know the things which God hath revealed unto us by his Spirit. Yet we do dread their slanderous tongues, and will strive to show them their errors, when they begin their arguments. All the people in this immediate vicinity are very warm, zealous Missionaries. They come, now and then, to try to show me how far in the wrong path I have strayed, and endeavor their best to reclaim me to their fold. But the old proverb says, "A burnt child dreads the fire." I was enticed by their flattering words at the tender age of fifteen years, and fell into the trap they set, through perfect ignorance of their doctrine. Indeed, a babe cannot relish strong meat, but must have the sincere milk of the Word, to thrive and grow, until it attains a few years. I was one of the most ignorant in spiritual things that ever lived, to be reared in a "Christian land." I never knew that there was a Christ made like unto sinful man (sin excepted), that was born in Bethlehem, and lived here in this world, suffered, bled and died to prepare the way from earth to heaven; never heard a family prayer around the fireside, till after I was fourteen years old. I was not brought up by any one, save the hand of the Almighty, which I can now look back and see how tenderly it guarded and shielded my orphan feet. Truly did the dear Lord take me under his gracious guardianship, when my father and mother forsook me, and was pleased to lead and instruct me in paths and ways I had not known. My precious mother and three of her children were taken from our home when I was a very small child, not quite three years old. Father broke up house-keeping, at the advice of his mother and sister, who agreed to take the youngest two, and the other two could stay with them during their vacation. By the charitable, loving hands of my dear aunt (now resting in the Father's eternal home of peace, as we hope and believe), I was trained and cared for, with as much care and love as could be shown for a motherless child, until I was nearly eight years old, when my father married again. He was, and had been, Sheriff of his county for several years (all during the war), which, of course, necessitated his absence from home a great deal. Not until he had been married nearly one year did he take me home, to live with his new wife; and I never saw her but once during that time, which was the first time I had ever seen her. When I was taken away from my precious aunt's comfortable and pleasant home, within whose walls an angry, unkind word was seldom heard, my feelings were unutterable, and like a whipped child did I weep, when she took me in her lap, telling me to love my new mamma, mind her, be a good girl, and come back to stay with her a month every summer and winter, then kissed and caressed me goodbye. O! how my heart-strings did brake, as I turned my face from the dearest spot on earth. I had seen so very little of my father, that he was almost an entire stranger, as was his wife. But with my sister (sixteen years old), and my brother (fourteen years), I went to live with my parents. I was a very timid child, very tender hearted, and would cry, in spite of all efforts, to refrain, when an unkind word was given me. I was afflicted from my birth, having a deformed foot. For a week I was so sad and lonely, and so craved the love and sympathy that my aunt had always shown me, I almost wept myself sick, for which I was scolded and threatened with punishment. Only six weeks had elapsed from the time we children went there, when, one morning, sister told father, he must carry her away; she could not and would not live in such continual confusion; and begged to let her take me back to my aunt's; but I was not allowed to go. In a few more weeks my brother also left. Thus I was left alone, to bear and endure, as best I could, for nearly three years, when father emphatically declared I should not be treated with such cruelty. (But he does not know until this day one-half of what I suffered from the merciless hands of his wife). So I was taken to my same childhood home, until father could have me some decent raiment prepared; then I was sent off over 200 miles to school, where I remained four years, during which time, I hope, the Lord was pleased to reveal himself unto me as my Father, and gave me a good hope through grace. The unspeakable joy, glory and love that filled my whole being, when Jesus appeared, the end of the law, as my righteousness, my Lord, my Redeemer, and my everlasting crown of rejoicing, was more than a sufficient recompense for all the trials I had encountered by the wayside, and more than an adequate compensation for the losses, crosses and deprivations I had suffered.

But O! what a most miserable, undone, helpless, despised and forsaken wretch I had felt myself to be, how desolate, sad and friendless, when I was sent off from every near and dear earthly friend, to dwell among strangers; and while suffering all the pangs and anguish of a convicted soul I was almost bereft of reason. O, my brother, language or tongue cannot tell what my heart suffered during that time, until the pitiful, compassionate Father was pleased to take me under his fostering care, and speak peace through the blood of his dear Son to my poor, troubled soul, and fondly pressed me to his bosom of infinite love. When I came home from school, then in my seventeenth year, I went to live with father and his wife, but did not stay long. It had been seven years since I had spent a single night with my father, and never had, since my recollection, spent only three years with him. So you see how utterly in the hands of the Lord I was, how entirely deprived of the careful training, nurture and instructions of kind parents, and the sacred influence, comforts and pleasures of a godly home, where love and kindness ought to dwell. How much a child, thus deprived, loses of life's pleasures. Yet I have been shown the good these afflictions and deprivations worked for me. By them, and being cast so early (at the age of twelve), upon my own judgment and dependence, I was made to feel the need of superhuman strength, was taught my own insufficiency and helplessness, and my desires and longings were drawn out toward God, whose name was always called by my aunt, when she would tell us about his goodness and mercy to us every day, the good man, the good Lord, and the heavenly Father. So I knew nothing of the Godhead dwelling bodily in the Son, nor of the Holy Spirit. After leaving her, I never heard anything more about the Lord, until I went to school. There they taught Arminianism, which I thought Bible doctrine. But, after uniting with them, I soon found their preaching was different from my experience. I had not so learned Christ, as he was held up in their pulpits. To me he appeared as a complete Savior, extending mercy, when justice seemed to demand death and eternal banishment from God. I talked with the pastor on the subject, and told him I was deceived and to take my name off; for if salvation came as a reward for good works, I had not merited such great holiness and grace. He told me I was not deceived, but had taken up some queer notions, that existed among a certain class of superstitious, fanatical people, called "Hard Shells." I was perfectly astounded at such a title, as well as the superstitious notions he said I had imbibed, and really was ignorant of their meaning. However, I could not feel that all was well, so great was the aching void, yearning and longing of heart and soul, for something beyond my reach, or knowledge to determine. I remained with them (but never communed at their table), two years and a half. After I had been home a few weeks, I decided to go hear the Old Baptists, whose doctrine I knew nothing about, and had never heard them preach but a few times, while with my aunt. I knew they were unpopular, and thought but little of by the world and other denominations. So I went, more out of curiosity than anything else. Their pastor was a very common, ignorant, unlearned man; but when he took his text, "And because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying, Abba, Father," an indescribable feeling and power came over me, that I could not account for. I sat spell-bound, wept like a child, and for the first time in my life (then nineteen years old) had heard a gospel sermon and prayer, rendered in scriptural manner. I was ashamed of weeping before so many people and a young gentleman that escorted me, but I could not help it. From that day I was in deep trouble, and encountered the greatest conflict, spiritually, I had ever realized, until the time for the next meeting. I was forced to go and fall at their feet, confess my love for them, own them as my people, their God my God, and ask of them a home to rest my weary soul. For, like the blessed Master, who, though infinitely rich, yet became poor, that we through his poverty might be made rich, I had not where to lay my head in this great, beautiful world. They gave me a hearty welcome to their fellowship, privileges, and all the enjoyments of their Father's home; and my peace and rest was delightful indeed for a few weeks. Since then, Satan, the flesh and the world have kept up a continual warfare, a terrible conflict, that will continue until mortality is swallowed up in immortality. I have fallen far short of my duty in every thing; have been slothful and unprofitable; not as fervent in spirit in serving the Lord as I ought. But while I have never felt worthy of so hallowed a home, and precious kindred, yet I have never regretted joining the church. Their members have always treated me with more kindness, and honored me more than I deserved. But the Lord is the giver of all mercies, and to him belongs all the honor and praise.

My dear brother, I have written altogether different from what I intended, and have not finished the subject, but must not intrude further on your time with such imperfect thoughts as mine. If you could only know through what "floods and flames" of sorrows, trials and tribulations my path has been, and what

I now daily have to contend with the human wrongs, how I have been oppressed, cheated and defrauded out of my natural rights, by those who owed me money, that was accumulated by the laborious years of toiling of my precious husband, who have taken advantage of my helplessness, to strip myself and child of every earthly support; and how sad, lonely, destitute, poor and needy I am, you would not think it strange that my writings are so poor and disconnected, nor that my mind should be so barren and void of spiritual things. O, what trials, what hardships and deprivations, the poor, destitute widows and saints have to endure in this world! If I could work, I should not fear but what I could keep from suffering, as the Lord so abundantly blessed the labor of my hands, when I had health. But, in my helplessness and impotency, to do any more than knitting, darning and mending up my little boy's clothes, when at my best, the prospect is indeed gloomy. But, "in some way or other, the Lord will provide." The earth and its fullness are his, and he can open the hearts of his people to minister to my necessities. This is the first time I have revealed the secret of my greatest sorrow. 'Tis quite humiliating to one's feelings to be so circumstanced as to become an object of charity; but the Lord gives, and the Lord takes away, blessed be his holy name. Pray for me, dear brother, and write me, if you can feel it in your heart to do so. Your letters do me so much good.

With abiding love, I am yours in sorrow, but sweet hope,

RUTH TAYLOR.

P. S.—Excuse this lengthy and miserably scribbled letter, and cast it into the fire. I am alone most of the time. I have not seen a Baptist in nearly three months. Writing is my only way of communing with them.

RUTH.

SADIEVILLE, Ky., March 16, 1893.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—Inclosed you will find a letter addressed to me by our much beloved brother, H. Cox. I cannot express the comfort it gave this unworthy one. I send it to you, and to all the dear saints, that they may share the sweet message of love from his pen.

I am still permitted to remain in my little home at this place. Our regular meetings are also held with me. As the time of our dear pastor, Elder Eubanks, is all taken up on Saturdays and Sundays, therefore our meeting days are Thursday and Friday before the third Sunday; but our time in our church-house is on the fourth Saturday and Sunday in each month. If any of the brethren feel a desire to visit the little flock at Elk Lick they will be gladly received.

May the Lord support and strengthen you all in the glorious task, in sending the SIGNS to our heavenly Father's dear children, is the prayer of your sister in love of the truth, E. THEOBALD.

CINCINNATI, Ohio, March 11, 1893.

DEAR SISTER THEOBALD:—Your late kind and interesting letter came in due time, and we were glad to hear from you. Separated as God's dear people are, it must be a great pleasure to them to hear from each other. It is that which makes the SIGNS OF THE TIMES peculiarly interesting. In that paper we read the travels of the saints as they journey through this wilderness, this land of sin and sorrow. But the halo of glory that shines in all their writings is made the more brilliant by their oft expressed desire to give all the glory to God for all things bestowed upon them while in their earthly pilgrimage. They are strangers and pilgrims here below, and seek a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God. It is a source of great joy and rejoicing to know that that great city hath foundations. Surely those foundations are the unchanging and eternal attributes of the great Builder. The psalmist says, "If the foundations be destroyed, what can the righteous do?" But the saints rejoice to know that "the foundation of God standeth sure, having this seal, The Lord knoweth them that are his." His knowledge is co-equal and co-eternal with all his other glorious attributes. The prophet says, "For thus saith the high and lofty One that inhabiteth eternity, whose name is Holy: I dwell in the high and holy place, with him also that is of a contrite and humble spirit, to revive the spirit of the humble, and to revive the heart of the contrite ones." He who inhabiteth eternity is the same yesterday, to-day and forever. He says, "I am God, I change not; therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed." Then the foundations of that great city, the church of the true and living God, are sure; and the Lord knoweth all who have been brought by divine and sovereign grace into that banqueting house, and all who will be brought into that glorious habitation of the saints to the end of time. Jesus says, "I am the good Shepherd, and know my sheep, and am known of mine. As the Father knoweth me, even so know I the Father; and I lay down my life for the sheep. And other sheep I have, which are not of this fold; them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice: and there shall be one fold, and one Shepherd." The Father knoweth the Son from the ancients of eternity. The psalmist says, "Lord, thou hast been our dwelling-place in all generations. Before the mountains were brought forth, or ever thou hadst formed the earth and the world, even from everlasting to everlasting, thou art God." He was their dwelling-place in all generations; therefore he said, "I know my sheep, and am known of mine."

Then they were his, given in the everlasting covenant of redemption, ordered in all things and sure. He says, "I lay down my life for the sheep." And the apostle says, "He gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity." In that covenant the redemption of all his people was made sure. They shall return and come to Zion with joy and rejoicing on their heads, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away. Their glorious Lord says to them, "Sing and rejoice, O daughter of Zion; for lo, I come, and I will dwell in the midst of thee." He came clothed with power to redeem them. He said, "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth." Omnipotence is one of his attributes, and he changes not; therefore the salvation and final glorification of all his people was secured to them before time began. They are those addressed by the apostle, "Elect according to the foreknowledge of God the Father, through sanctification of the Spirit unto obedience, and sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ." They are "sanctified by God the Father, preserved in Jesus Christ, and called." Wisdom is given them from above, by which they know him, whom to know is life eternal. They know him because he is made unto them wisdom and righteousness and sanctification and redemption. They have not learned that wisdom in the schools of men. It is written, "The world by wisdom knew not God." "The wisdom of this world is foolishness with God." James says, "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God." How different is that instruction given by the inspired apostle, from that which is given by men in these degenerate times. They tell the young men, "If you lack wisdom, go to college and study for the ministry." But there they learn no more of the great and glorious truth of the gospel than Saul of Tarsus did at the feet of Gamaliel. Of them the prophet Jeremiah says, "The wise men are ashamed; they are dismayed and taken. Lo, they have rejected the word of the Lord." They reject the word of the Lord, which says that Jesus is made of God unto his saints wisdom; but they seek wisdom in the schools of men. The true minister of the everlasting gospel is told to "Walk about Zion, and go round about her; tell the towers thereof; mark ye well her bulwarks, consider her palaces; that ye may tell it to the generations following." That Zion is the church of the Lord Jesus Christ, given to him in the everlasting covenant of redemption. She is clothed with the sun, and the moon is under her feet, and a crown of twelve stars upon her head. Her Lord is a wall of fire round about her, and he is the glory in the midst. Her towers and her bulwarks are the divine perfections of her Lord, who is made unto her wisdom. With that wisdom they go forth and tell of her safety and security, founded on the Rock of ages, and of her glory, clad in clean and white linen, which is the righteousness of the saints; upheld by the omnipotence, wisdom, immutability, omnipresence, love, justice and mercy of her glorious Lord; yes, kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the last time. Go forth, ye heralds of the cross, and tell to the generations following the beauties and glories of the Zion of our God. Yea, tell them that all her children are kept as the apple of his eye, in the hollow of his hand, ready to be revealed in the last time, when this mortal shall have put on immortality, and this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and all his saints shall be fashioned like his glorious body, alive for evermore. They shall be like him, and shall see him as he is; see him in his undimmed glory, no longer a man of sorrow and acquainted with grief. By an eye of faith the saints now behold him in his resurrection glory, and by the same power are enabled to say with that afflicted servant Job, "And though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God, whom I shall see for myself, and not another." While here below they walk by faith; but faith will be swallowed up in victory in that great day when all the saints shall come forth from the pale nations of the dead, clad in immortality, with their voices attuned to the melodies of the skies. O may it be our happy lot, dear sister, to join in that glorious song of everlasting triumph over all the powers of darkness, sin and sorrow, is my most sincere prayer.

Please excuse these rambling thoughts. I have written them as they came up in my mind. If they are true, rejoice in them, and give to God all the glory; but if false, cast them aside, where all that troubles the dear saints should be cast; and believe me affectionately yours,

H. COX.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—Within I send a letter written by a precious sister who has been following along after the flock for more than forty years; but last summer she was compelled to come in, and Elder Oliphant baptized her in the fellowship of our church here in Crawfordsville. I will long remember how happy she looked as she was led out of the water; and she told me that day, "I feel a quiet peace of mind."

Elder Durand's letter in the SIGNS of Feb. 15th, on "The Lord's Work," was a comforting morsel to me, and I hope all who sigh and cry will see it. By reading it I was made to think of many similar experiences. I will only relate one. Elder Lot Southard had preached a very able, comforting sermon in the morning; but in the afternoon his head hung low. He had nothing to say, but wandered in the woods solitary and alone. Then at night he was sleep-

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN IN THE LORD:—I would like to read an article on the text, Psalm lxxvi. 10, when it is the will of the Lord to impress you to write on that subject.

"Surely the wrath of man shall praise thee; the remainder of wrath shalt thou restrain."—Psalm lxxvi. 10.

In the psalm from which this expression is taken the Spirit of Christ moved the writer to record the glorious works of the Lord in making his goodness known to Israel. Not only is he revealed as dwelling in Zion, and having his tabernacle in Salem, but his glory shines in the display of his power to destroy the weapons of the mighty. "There brake he the arrows of the bow, the shield, and the sword, and the battle." It is clearly in illustration of this majestic exercise of his omnipotence that all the manifestations of his power are specifically stated in the preceding verses of this psalm. It needed only the rebuke of the God of Jacob, and "both the chariot and horse are cast into a dead sleep." But the most amazing exhibition of the glory of this God is recorded in the verses immediately preceding our text. "Thou didst cause judgment to be heard from heaven; the earth feared, and was still, when God arose to judgment, to save all the meek of the earth. Selah." In the literal deliverance of the nation of Israel out of Egypt there was such power displayed as struck terror to the hearts of their adversaries. The God by whose hand they were led through the wilderness, where there was no way, subdued their foes, and from the unknown shades of night gave them supplies for their journey. But it should be especially noted that it was the very same mercy by which God arose for the salvation of all the meek of the earth, which was the terrible judgment of all the stout-hearted and the men of might. It is an evidence of the blindness of natural wisdom that, with all their boasted familiarity with the letter of the Scriptures, the wise teachers of carnal religion cannot see the perfect unity of the judgment of God in the salvation of the meek of the earth, and in the utter destruction of the proud haters of his own truth and grace. When the justice and mercy of divine sovereignty are revealed in the experience of the saints, they are qualified to rest in the certainty of that salvation which God has ordained for all his spiritual Israel.

Without the recognition of this perfection of God there can be no consistent understanding of the mercy and grace of that eternal election which is founded upon the immutability of that counsel of his will wherein he hath from the beginning chosen his people unto himself, and ordained them to be conformed to his own holiness. But this principle is opposed by every power of the natural mind, so that it is only as the Spirit of Christ takes and shows it unto each individual saint that even those who are taught of God can receive it as eternal truth. When they seek by reason to grasp this revelation they are met by the insurmountable declaration of the Scripture, "But the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned."—1 Cor. ii. 14. The highest attainments of reason must still pertain to the natural man; so that this word of the Lord forbids that by the light of that mind any sinner should comprehend the grace of God as it is bestowed upon the subjects of electing love. Only by that faith which is itself the fruit of the Spirit can the saints know this, "Now we have received, not the spirit of the world, but the spirit which is of God, that we might know the things that are freely given to us of God." This does not signify that the saints are destitute of the natural spirit of the world as children of Adam; for it is in that nature that they inherit every principle of sin and rebellion against God. Of this they have constantly to complain, and against it they have to be engaged in unceasing warfare. Their daily experience painfully attests that the spirit of the world has its abode in their carnal nature. But it is not in that relationship that they know the things to which the text refers. In their earthly nature they know the things of the earth. To know spiritual things they must have the faith which is the fruit of the Spirit. It is this spiritual fruit by which the saints "know the things that are freely given" them of God. Since reason cannot receive the testimony of faith, there must ever be a conflict in the saints between the knowledge of faith and the judgment of reason.

"Surely the wrath of man shall praise thee." Nothing can be more humiliating to carnal pride than this wonderful truth. It is not so much against the inclination of the natural mind to confess that praise is due to the Creator; and man claims that it is a meritorious act on his part when he utters words in expression of the acknowledgment of his dependence upon the divine favor; but no effort of the carnal mind can grasp the fact declared in this clause of our text. By rendering praise to God, reason expects to conciliate his favor; and with that design selfishness professes great earnestness in praising the idol which in imagination represents the object of natural devotion. But that very worship is conclusive testimony that such idolaters are ignorant of the true God. Among all the professors of this selfish religion there are none who can receive the assertion of the text as true. It is the universal theory of all false teachers that God is praised by every good and loving action and word of his creatures. But by one consent they agree that his praise is not expressed in anything which originates in the wrath or evil designs of sinners. Necessarily such an erroneous understanding involves the ability on the part of man to discriminate between what is good and what is evil. Of course, this claim cannot be surrendered without staining the glory of all the proud Pharisees who trust in themselves that they are righteous, and despise others. Hence, none are found relying upon the doctrine of our Redeemer but such as are compelled to confess with shame that they are totally destitute of claims upon the favor of God. Among them all there is not one who can boast of any action or thought which could be accounted as commending him in the sight of divine justice. Such poor and needy suppliants can never afford to attempt to pass judgment upon the appointments of God in his providential dealings with the creatures of his hand. However the mystery of his way exceeds their comprehension, they can only say, "I was dumb, I opened not my mouth, because thou didst it."—Psa. xxxix. 9. Many examples are left on record for our learning, in which the very malicious designs of wickedness wherewith the saints were afflicted were made incidents in the purpose of God to bring to pass the most gracious favors ever bestowed upon those to whom they threatened destruction. Nay, more than this may be boldly asserted as the testimony of divine inspiration. The purpose of God has never been defeated in all the devices of the workers of iniquity. The very introduction of sin into the world but opened the way for the exaltation of Jesus as the Savior of his people from their sins. The malice of Cain was tributary to the praise of God as shown in recording the testimony of Jesus through the faith by which Abel "obtained witness that he was righteous, God testifying of his gifts." The sovereign election of God was clearly displayed in the case of Jacob and Esau. Can any candid reader of the Scriptures suppose that the will of God was defeated in the enmity which moved Esau to hate Jacob? It is expressly recorded that before the children were born, when neither of them had done any good or evil, "That the purpose of God according to election might stand, not of works, but of him that calleth, it was said unto her [Rebecca], The elder shall serve the younger. As it is written, Jacob have I loved, but Esau have I hated."

Certainly that vessel of wrath would not have been fitted to destruction by having the grace of God shed abroad in his heart. The divine appointment by which he was hated of God, included the principle of enmity against God whereby he was shown to be justly condemned. Again, in the case of Pharaoh, there can be no question that the purpose of God was accomplished by the mad folly with which that tyrant repeatedly defied the commandment which was sent to him. Would the direct interposition of omnipotence have been so gloriously displayed if the first message by Moses had been immediately obeyed in the release of the chosen nation from bondage? The very intensity of that malice which so persistently refused to submit to the direction of the inspired commandment, was made to exhibit more fully the power of God in the destruction of the oppressor and his hosts. In the promise given to Abraham, the bondage and deliverance of his seed was expressly declared ages before it was literally fulfilled; yet the wrath and iniquity of man was made subservient to the accomplishment of the divine appointment. In the history of the patriarch Joseph, the envy and wrath of his brethren could not be a merely accidental contribution to the accomplishment of that which God had shown in the dreams of the child. Joseph himself told his humiliated brethren, "Fear not; for am I in the place of God? But as for you, ye thought evil against me; but God meant it unto good, to bring to pass, as it is this day, to save much people alive."—Gen. l. 19, 20. No finite mind could have seen the end which God brought about through the envy of the brothers of Joseph. The wickedness by which he was cast into prison appeared to forbid the exaltation of the captive. Still more gloomy was the prospect when the restored butler of Pharaoh for two weary years forgot his obligation to Joseph. Yet even that was included in the appointment of God among the things which must work together for the salvation not only of Joseph but of all the tribes of Israel. So the design of God was not hindered by the wrath which man directed against its accomplishment. The guilt of all their evil designs did indeed rest upon the adversaries of this saint; but their malice could be accomplished no more than the will of God had determined should be done to show his own immutable love and favor to his chosen servant. The evil workers did nothing but what was dictated by their malice and wrath; but there could not have been one of their actions left out of the works of wrath by which the glory of God was displayed in the exaltation of Joseph. So the black cloud is no part of the bright rainbow which cannot be seen without it. In the antitypical Joseph the same wonderful power of God was shown in giving the exact bounds of every exhibition of wrath against him. The combined malice of earth and hell could not take him from teaching publicly among the people until that hour which was determined in the sovereign purpose of God. Even then, Judas could not decide what should be the price of his treachery. The word of prophecy had recorded that sum five hundred years before the sale was made. He could not accept twenty-nine pieces of silver; nor could the bloody persecutors give him thirty-one pieces. After his horrible work was done, the accursed money could be appropriated to no other purpose but the purchase of the potter's field; for that was also written by the pen of prophecy. None can deny that in this the wrath of man did declare the praise of God. The Scriptures abound with examples of the victory of the predestination of God over all the wrath of man. Thus is the truth of this expression made manifest.

"The remainder of wrath shalt thou restrain." In the examples already cited there is no possibility of avoiding the fact that the dominion of our God extends to the control of all powers which are in existence. The testimony of Paul is as comprehensive as language can be made when he says of the dear Son of God, "Who is the image of the invisible God, the first-born of every creature; for by him were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible or invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers; all things were created by him, and for him; and he is before all things, and by him all things consist."—Col. i. 15-17. It is inconsistent with the plain light of common sense to suppose that the Creator of all things has not power to control the creatures of his will. If it were possible that he should fail to do what he purposes in any case, there can be no assurance for the comfort of any saint, since his failure in that instance necessarily proves that he is not omnipotent. If there is any power beyond the control of our God, then that power may finally prevent the fulfillment of any promise of his grace. But the helpless subjects of eternal love are assured that our Lord is above all gods. "Whatsoever the Lord pleased, that did he in heaven, and in earth, in the seas, and in all deep places." "Wherefore should the heathen say, Where is now their God? But our God is in the heavens; he hath done whatsoever he hath pleased."—Psalm cxxxv. 6; cxv. 2, 3. These express statements of this fact are sufficient for the establishment of its divine authority in the mind of those who reverence the word of the Lord. No arguments could avail for the conviction of those from whom God has hid these things.

The preciousness of this essential principle of revealed truth to the afflicted and poor followers of the Lamb of God, consists in the absolute certainty that every conflict in their warfare, every sorrow in their cup of tribulation, and every bitter loss and cross under which they are called to mourn, must be appointed for the good of the tried one to whom it is given. The same great love wherewith God loved his people, even when they were dead in sins, which he commends in the gift of his own blood, that we might be reconciled to God, that same infinite love has given every trial by which we are experimentally brought into the fellowship of the sufferings of our triumphant Redeemer. His own hand is the protection of every saint from all that wrath of man which is not ordained to show forth the praise of God by working together with all things for the good of them that love God, including every one of those who are the called according to his pleasure. Surely the saints have reason to rejoice that the power of God restrains all the remainder of wrath after the fulfillment of his praise in the salvation of his people from their sins, and from the death which is the necessary consequence of sin.

In accordance with the request of brother Tomlin, we have submitted the foregoing reflections. The subject is still full of precious testimony of Jesus. May the Lord be pleased to lead all his saints into the rich comfort contained in this record, and to his name be glory evermore!

EXTRACTS

FROM FOUR ORATIONS BY EDWARD IRVING, BEFORE THE LONDON (ENGLAND) MISSIONARY SOCIETY, MAY, 1824.

ORATION TWO.

THE PERPETUITY OF THIS MISSIONARY CONSTITUTION PROVED.

I HAVE heard quoted, as another deviation from the letter of the missionary charter, which is obscurely hinted at in the epistle of John, addressed to Gaius, in these words, "Beloved, thou doest faithfully whatsoever thou doest to the brethren, and to strangers; which have borne witness of thy charity before the church: whom if thou bring forward on their journey after a godly sort, thou shalt do well: because that for his name's sake they went forth, taking nothing of the Gentiles. We therefore ought to receive such, that we might be fellow-helpers to the truth." This, like the former, proveth more for the spirit of the missionary charter than if it had been in most exact conformity with its letter; showing first that the travelers and ambassadors of the kingdom in these times were wont to be brought on their way from place to place by the charity of brethren, even though strangers, and did not hesitate to be beholden to their charity; secondly, that they went forth to the Gentiles without any means of conveying themselves thither, but needed assistance to reach the scene of their labors; and having reached the harvest-field, they put in their sickle and reaped without any hire, taking nothing for their reward, but passed on dependent as before upon the bounty of the brethren. So much the passage proves, that these christian expeditions were undertaken without any dependence upon ways and means, and were executed without any fee or reward; but it does by no means prove that while they were with the Gentiles they refused to be beholden to them for their subsistence. They took nothing from the Gentiles, and needed to be helped on their way, that is, they departed as poor as they came; but how they fared among them is not stated, because it was not necessary for the apostle to state more than their present condition as his argument for the brethren to help them. The passage, therefore, is nothing more than a certificate of the poverty and disinterestedness of these missionaries, given under the hand of an apostle to a brother, who on other occasions had been helpful to the brethren. How much it supports the spirit of the apostolical school of missionaries any one can see; how it beareth upon the present school it is not yet the time to discourse of at large.

Other instances of this kind occur in the apostolical record. Paul, writing to Philemon from his bonds in Rome, desires him to provide him a lodging, trusting that through their prayers he would be given to them. He was then Paul the aged, and Philemon was his dearly beloved brother and fellow-laborer, from whom he might, without fear of misconstruction, ask such a favor; yet with what delicacy he touches upon pecuniary matters, any one who reads that model of delicate affection may well apprehend. At Rome, in like manner, he dwelt two years in his own hired house, and received all that came in unto him; because he was there as a prisoner upon parole, and accommodated his apostolic character to his forced conditions. But on his journey to Rome the missionary constitution was fulfilled to the letter by the brethren at Puteoli; with whom he was desired to stay seven days; and also by the brethren at Rome, who met him at the Three Taverns and conducted him on his way. In like manner Titus is instructed to bring Zenas the lawyer, and Apollos, on their journey diligently, that nothing be wanting unto them. In like manner he writes to the Corinthians concerning Timothy, that they would "conduct him forth in peace, that he may come unto me." Of such importance was this part of apostolical discipline held that it is enjoined in general precepts, like any other great head of christian duty, "to distribute to the necessity of saints, and to be given to hospitality;" and it is set down as a mark of those widows who are to be taken into the number, "that they have lodged strangers;" and of a bishop it is required as an indispensable quality that he should be given to hospitality; and to all it is often enjoined, as to the Hebrews, "that they be not forgetful to entertain strangers, for thereby some have entertained angels unawares."

Sometimes, in casting my eye back over what I have written, and considering the new doctrine which I have dared to advance in opposition to the universal practice of the churches, I have felt a fear come over my mind, as if I had been guilty of presumption in daring to interpret God's word upon this subject for myself; but the more I have been led to study it by the opposition which these ideas have received, the more I have been convinced of their truth. The passages which have been quoted against them have, upon deliberate study, turned out to be in their favor; and the instances which have been given of deviation have always proved to be deviations in excess, not in defect, of the standard of faith and self-denial. Moreover, in making those researches into the primitive appointments of Messiah and practices of his apostolic servants many new convictions have been brought to our mind concerning the office of the pastor and the office of the preacher which differ from the approved notions as widely as those which we have set forth of the missionary; so that silently we have come to the strong and steady persuasion that this is but a silver age of the church, taken at its best, and that the golden age is yet to come; that we are not perfect, any more than our fathers; that we should learn to believe in our imperfections, and welcome any one who will honestly declare them to us.

Sometimes, on the other hand, I have been tempted to indignation and wrath that the institution and appointment of the great head of the church should have been so widely departed from in these modern times, and, being honestly and plainly stated, should find so little favor in the eyes of a generation which prides itself in the evangelical character of its missionary undertakings; and that, instead of going about to seek men who were advanced in faith to the height of the undertaking, they have gone about to reduce the undertaking to the measure of an ordinary faith, and have attracted to the service many who were hardly fit for a pastoral care in the church at home, much less for laying the foundation of christian empire abroad. But most of all hath a holy indignation risen within my breast when, to keep up the popular glory and renown of their work, which they should be ever rectifying by the word of God, they should be content rather to obliterate and annul that part of his holy word which is able to give them counsel. It is instructive of the self-exaltation of man to hear with what cool indifference they would consign to uselessness those immortal counsels which our Lord gave for the conduct of christian missionaries, in order that they may have the field open for their own infallibility. They would break through all rules and laws of interpretation, and to a passage whose every word and sentence breathes immortality they would give a temporary application, destroying its obligation, losing its comfort, and abolishing its promises to the evil-entreated messenger of peace; all because it contains in its bosom two clauses which were necessary to make it useful and applicable to the time which then was, as well as to the times which were to come. Against this I have argued by an analysis of the passage, against it I have protested by an appeal to the apostolical times, in the hope of being able to prevail by argument and appeal; though I confess with slender hope in a time when names or periodical organs of opinion have obtained almost the whole authority in the church.

But if there be left in the church any reverence for the holy Scripture, any love to the words of Christ, any superiority to the things of sight, and trust in the good promises of God, any memory of her past triumphs, or any hope of future victory, by these I do entreat the church to hesitate how she discredits this portion of the holy Scriptures, because it applied to those times no less than to all other times. For upon the same principle she would annul every word of the sermon on the mount, which was suggested by Jewish errors, and was given for the abolition of Jewish errors; and every parable, and every rebuke, and every exhortation, and every instruction of the Lord, which all sprung out of the occasion presented to him, and applied to it with far more exemption of every other occasion than the passage before us; which, if it be distinguished by anything, is distinguished by this, from most other of our Lord's discourses, that it will not apply, cannot by any showing be made to apply to that occasion, but bursts all limitations of time and place, and writes its own superscription to be, to the church universal upon the earth. There are some passages in our Lord's instructions which apply only to a particular time and condition of things, such as that spoken at the last supper, of which we have given a commentary above, and which can never come to be applicable again, because the Son of man can never again be removed by the hour and power of darkness from the power of protecting his church. But when any man would rob the church of any of the Lord's sayings, which the first apostles were glad to catch from oblivion, rather than to convey to it (of which their zeal we have seen an instance quoted from the missionary charter, 1 Cor. ix. 11, and may see another, Acts xx. 35, in Paul's discourse to the Elders of the Ephesian church), then that man should be indicted as guilty of high treason to our King, who liveth upon earth only in his words; of sedition against his kingdom, whose laws are the words of our everlasting King.

Foolish men! vain, ignorant and foolish men! they know not what they do in their haste to annul the precious words of Christ; neither understand they the nature of the words of Christ which they would annul. The glorious words of Christ were not for one occasion, but for all occasions; not for one race of men, but for all races of men; not for one age, but for all ages of the world. Yet in that which he said there was always something local, temporary and occasional; enough of the present time and present manners for it to lay hold of the feelings of the present audience. But because the eternal truth which he spoke had around it the drapery of the times, did it thereby become temporary? We, whose souls are educated in time, being of yesterday, do smack of time in all our thoughts and speeches, except wherein we are guided by revelations of eternity; but he who was from eternity, the same yesterday, to-day and forever, partaketh not and cannot partake of the same infirmity. The truth which he spoke is truth metaphysical; that is, truth independent of the conditions of time and place, applicable to all times and places, and equally applicable when time shall be no more. The truth which he spoke addresseth not the temporary, but the eternal in man; and by awakening the immortal in us, enableth us to shake off the temporal coil with which we are enslaved. Yet, as hath been said, the eternal truth which he spoke, and from which all ages since have derived the knowledge of eternity and the sense of immortality, had a special application to the people to whom it was first addressed, and took hold of the forms of thought then current in the world, in order to deliver men from what was false, and manifest more clearly what was true, in those very things which they believed and by which they were surrounded. But this taste of the times, and glance at the occasion, must never for a moment beguile us into the imagination that they reach no further, and were intended to reach no further, than to that occasion; otherwise we must be content to lose all which he spoke from first to last. For example, the sermon which he preached on the mount, wherein he gathered up the fragments of all moral feeling and moral law, to issue them anew with divine wisdom, and write them in everlasting letters, not only searched into the joints and marrow of the pharisaical sophistry and hypocrisy, but hath become to every country where it hath been published abroad the basis of law and manners, and will continue the perfection of both while the world lasteth. Again, the comforting speeches he made to his followers before his crucifixion not only moved them to earnest questions, indicating their personal concern in what he said, but have been the sustenance of his disciples ever since in all the trials of their lives and in the hour of their departure; and will never cease to be as refreshing to the church as the waters of Meribah. His prayers, however aptly addressed to the occasion on which they were first uttered, are still the most frequent and the most soul-impressive of all our addresses to the throne of God. Those parables, whose images, like the Gorgon's head, froze his opponents to stony silence, are to this day the beautiful pictures of all social and religious duty, each one of them the porch and entrance to a magnificent temple of truth and blessedness; and those very parables which shadow forth the nature of his kingdom—the parable of the mustard seed, of the leaven, of the twelve virgins, of the steward, of the royal feast, of the laborers in the vineyard, of the sower and the seed—are not these as applicable now as then, and as frequently enforced and applied by the ministers of the gospel? If in all other things he spoke for eternity, yet missed not the present occasion; if in all other things he spoke for all times and all occasions; who is he who will say that when equipping and instructing the messengers and missionaries of his kingdom, upon whom all the rest depended, he hath said nothing perennial, but only spoken well for the occasion, and must not be understood as instructing us in the same terms in which he instructed them? The man that saith or fancieth so hath need to learn again what be the first principles of the doctrine of Christ; and I warn him to beware how he taketh from or addeth to the words of the prophecy of this book, lest God shall add unto him all the plagues that are written in this book; how he break one of these commandments, or teach others to do so, that he be not called least in the kingdom of heaven. If he, the King and Founder of the spiritual kingdom, in whom dwelt all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge, did not understand and know the full provision and furniture for his own envoys and ambassadors, the strength in which they should fight, and the weapons with which they should overcome the powers of darkness, I marvel indeed who should understand and know them; and if his rules fail to be applicable to our case, I marvel who shall help out their inefficiency. The church, say you; but what is the church without its Head? Where is its counsel without its Counsellor? Where its authority without the Spirit of Christ? Therefore let no man nor body of men, no christian nor society of christians, nor the whole visible church, in their presumption dare to say these instructions of Christ to the messengers of the kingdom are now inapplicable, are Utopian, are extreme, are to be cautiously interpreted and prudently carried into effect; for if these be cast aside, I for one see not upon what scriptural basis a Missionary Society resteth, nor do I see by what principle a christian missionary is to guide himself. * * * In short, without this document I am all at sea upon the missionary question, and must handle it like a question of state policy or of church management; but preserving this I have the Magna Charta of the Missionary Constitution, the description of the missionary character, the scale of his qualifications, the directory of his procedure, his safe conduct from the court above, and his assurance of success upon earth and of immortality in heaven.

CHURCH HISTORY.

THE two-dollar cloth and the two-dollar-and-fifty-cent leather bindings of the Church History are about exhausted, but we still have a few copies of the four-dollar Imitation Turkey Morocco binding, and two copies of the five-dollar Genuine Turkey Morocco on hand.

The sale of the History has become so light that we cannot afford to run another edition until we can ascertain how many copies can be sold. We therefore will receive subscriptions for the book, to be delivered the latter part of this year, if a sufficient amount is received to warrant the publication of another edition. If not, we will refund the money.

less, and groaned and sighed. When I called to him and asked if he was sick, he answered, "Yes, heart-sick, to think I am so fruitless; nothing but a barren fig-tree. I'll never, no never, try to preach again." That was years ago, when I was young, and his words were a damper to me. I wondered how such a gifted comforter could feel so despondent. I asked why the Lord suffered it to be, when the Scripture, "Fear not, little flock; it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom," came to mind, and I saw the saints of all ages had been a fearful people.

"The fearful, the faithless, the weak, are my care; The helpless, the hopeless, I hear their sad prayer."

For all this company of trembling, sighing, afflicted people, whose trust is in the Lord, I want to claim relationship.

Sister Long lives four miles out in the country, and is a widow. Her husband has been dead several years. He was a very loving, faithful member of our church for many years.

LINA W. BECK.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, Ind, Feb. 5, 1893.

TO THE CHURCH AT CRAWFORDSVILLE—DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS IN CHRIST:—My mind has been drawn out or impressed to write to you for a long time; and now to-day, as I cannot meet with you on account of the earth being covered with so much ice, I will try in my weak way to put a few of my thoughts on paper. I see more and more of my nothingness each day. My day is far spent, and the evening shadows are gathering around me, and I so little and worthless. I desire to assure you that I have not forgotten my heavenly Father's family; for my love for you grows stronger and stronger each day. I hope I have not been forgotten by you, and that you are praying for poor, unworthy me this day. I seldom close my eyes in sleep without thinking of the dear Savior, and how he has watched over my wandering steps, and finally, after so many years, brought me to the fold of Christ. O what a glorious doctrine, "Salvation by grace." Can it be possible that I am one of that blood-washed throng? Dear brethren and sisters, let us rejoice and glorify the name of our God.

"How sweet the name of Jesus sounds In a believer's ear; It soothes his sorrows, heals his wounds And drives away his fears."

I think I know these feelings by experience, and hope I have tasted that the Lord is gracious. Sometimes I can say, I know that I have passed from death unto life, because I love the brethren. I have enjoyed more peace of mind since our January meeting, and the time will seem long till I can meet with you again. I want to tell some of the Lord's dealings with me. When I was a little girl I was made to see myself a great sinner. In the silent watches of the night I was made to mourn and weep over my sins. At one time I went to a Baptist meeting. After the preaching they went to the water to baptize. The minister led the candidates down into the water, and I felt as solemn as the grave. The water looked lovely, and the ordinance seemed beautiful, and I had a desire to go there too; but I told no one, not even my dear mother, for fear she would say, You do not know what you are talking about. So I went on from time to time, and year to year, having the same feelings, yearning to be with Christ's church. All the members seem such bright and shining lights, and I so unworthy. Sometimes I could see, with my weak understanding, that the merit was in Jesus, not in poor me. "The flesh profiteth nothing." I cannot tell my feelings as many do in our dear paper, the SIGNS, but I have many thoughtful hours. I receive much comfort from you all, dear brethren and sisters. Brethren Oliphant and Nowel tell my experience better than I can. They seem to know all my ups and downs. If dear old brother M. M. Vancleave is not at our meetings I feel that there is a great vacancy. May the Lord bless him in his declining days. My brethren and sisters, remember me at the throne of grace, and pardon this poor scribble.

Your very unworthy sister in Christ, if one at all,

SARAH A. LONG.

OPELIKA, Ala., April 11, 1892.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—I have read the SIGNS, I hope, to profit, and have much enjoyed several articles, and felt built up. I hope the brethren will continue to give the certain sound. Brother Jenkins struck the key-note of Old Baptist doctrine on knowledge as the gift of God, and not the result of study, as some vainly imagine. I wrote an article and did not send it on; but Elder Durand did send on his, and I was struck with the coincidence that, although hundreds of miles apart, we had the very same thoughts. I did enjoy brother Durand's letter written from Florida, referring to brother Jenkins.

I was glad Elder Curry's speech and lecture were published for the benefit of the household of faith. I know it must have sounded like thunder from the throne, in Lebanon, Ohio, the seat of learning, and the home of many who could not indorse the lecture; for the indorsement of that lecture would upset the theories and systems which Arminian heathen have been nursing for centuries. I am glad the Lord has raised up fearless and able men who are willing to stem the current and speak the truth in high places; for the apostle said, "For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places."—Eph. vi. 12.

I enjoyed the reading of the Minutes of the Black Rock meeting, and I hope the Baptists will still contend for the faith once delivered to the saints. Surely did Jesus say, "I send you forth as sheep in the midst of wolves." The church is like Daniel in the lions' den, the bush in the fire, the Hebrews in the fiery furnace, and like a ship on a boisterous ocean. From a human standpoint she seems to have all the odds against her; but yet, thank God, as Jesus said, "The gates of hell shall not prevail against it." The stone cut out of the mountain without hands (without instrumentality) smites the great image, and it falls to pieces; but God's kingdom, which is an everlasting kingdom, shall stand forever. May the Lord arm his soldiers, and make them faithful in the battle, is my desire.

Yours in hope,

W. LIVELY.

MARRIAGES.

On April 26th, 1893, by Elder Wm. J. Purington, at the residence of Dr. John Strobel, No. 948 North Fifth St., Philadelphia, Mr. Thomas C. King, of Mooreland, and Miss Rosanna B. Strobel, of Philadelphia, both of Pa.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—I am requested to write an obituary notice of our precious sister, Polly York, for publication in the SIGNS.

She was born July 26th, 1811, and was married to Adam York when quite young, bearing four sons and three daughters. She was the mother of our dear brother, C. W. York. Brother York told me that she had been a member of the Primitive Baptist Church nineteen years last August, and a more faithful sister in Christ Jesus I have never met; but she is no more in this poor world of sorrow and toil.

Sister York died of dropsy on April 29th, 1893, and the unworthy writer was sent for to attend the funeral at Grassy Creek grave-yard, in Surry Co., N. C., on Monday morning, May 1st, 1893, at nine o'clock, when and where I addressed a very large audience from Rev. xiv. 13. I greatly felt the power of God while speaking, and much good feeling was manifested among that large gathering of people. When I had closed the services we bade our aged sister farewell for all time, and laid her beneath the sod, to await the trump of God.

WM. R. WELBORN.

STATE ROAD, N. C., May 2, 1893.

Elder John B. Copeland, the subject of this sketch, was born in Franklin Co., Va., July 5th, 1846, and died at his home near Slater, Saline Co., Mo., Feb. 22d, 1893, aged 46 years, 4 months and 17 days.

He was married to Sarah E. Oldham on August 10th, 1873, and was the father of seven children, of whom six are living. In May, 1874, he united with the Old Baptist Church, and was ordained to the ministry on August 18th, 1878, being a faithful and uncompromising exponent of the truth, not fearing to declare the whole counsel of God. For several years his health had been poor, and during the last ten months of his life he was confined to the house, and was a great sufferer; but through all his affliction he was patient, feeling that the Lord's hand was laid on him for good, though he could not see it. He was one who believed that God "worketh all things after the counsel of his own will;" and that all he does is right, just and good, whether we can see it or not. It was my privilege to visit him and the church of which he was pastor during the last year of his life, which seemed to be a comfort to him, and he looked forward to each meeting anxiously (we always held the Saturday church meeting in his house after he was confined to his house). I was greatly blessed by his comforting words, timely counsel, and his experience in the ministry, of which I might write much to the comfort of God's ministers; not in the flesh, but in the Spirit. His life has demonstrated the truth of the words, "Many are the afflictions of the righteous; but the Lord delivereth him out of them all." He passed away in the full assurance of the faith that kept him through his short but eventful life. The churches he left were in peace, and a unit in doctrine; no isms, no "Lo heres" nor "Lo theres" among them. He rests from his labors, and his works follow him.

I tried to speak at his funeral from John i. 16, 17: "And of his fullness have all we received, and grace for grace," &c. While I realize how sadly we miss him, yet we sorrow not as those who have no hope; "for if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." May the Lord, who is able to abundantly bless, be with his dear sorrowing family and friends, and all the dear saints, and comfort them in affliction.

WM. M. STARTZMAN.

DIED—At her home in Toulon, Stark Co., Ill., March 30th, 1893, after a protracted illness of seventeen weeks, Mrs. Jane Atherton, relict of brother J. R. Atherton, aged nearly 89 years.

Sister Atherton's maiden name was Armstrong. She was born in Hamilton Co., Ohio, June 5th, 1804, and was married Jan. 16th, 1825. They came to Illinois in 1831, and settled near Nauvoo, Hancock Co., where they remained until 1845, when they settled in Stark Co. I think they were in the constitution of the Spoon River Church, and remained steadfast and highly respected members until their death. On account of the infirmities of age sister A. had not been able to attend the meetings for some years. I am informed by her daughter, Mrs. McClenahan, that she requested her to write to me after her death, and say that although she had not heard a Baptist sermon for a great while, yet she died firm in the faith, and hoped to clasp hands with you all on the heavenly shore.

The funeral services were conducted by the Congregational minister on Monday, April 2d; after which her mortal remains were placed beside those of her husband in the Toulon cemetery.

ALSO,

DIED—At his home near Annawan, Ill., April 1st, 1893, of old age, Eli Batten, aged about 92 years.

Brother Batten was born in Virginia, and soon after his marriage emigrated with his wife to Ohio, where he was called by grace, and joined the Old School Baptist Church, and, if I am not mistaken, was baptized by Elder Wilson Thompson. Again he moved west, this time settling in Henry Co., Ill., on the farm on which he died; and when the Barren Grove Church was constituted he brought a letter, and himself and sister B. were received, and he remained a worthy member until his death. I visited him a few days before his death, and found him very firmly established, and waiting patiently until his Master should call him home.

He was buried on Monday, in the Fairview cemetery, to await the resurrection of the just.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date. This date denotes the time at which your subscription expires; and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

CORRESPONDENCE.

PERSONALITY OF MAN.

THE question, "What is man?" is the stumbling-stone in all systems of human philosophy, and is no nearer answered to-day than in the days of the psalmist, who recorded it upon the pages of inspiration. Notwithstanding the many volumes that have been written by all the different schools of philosophy, man still remains

"Chaos of thought, and passion all confused,

Still by himself abused or disabused;
Sole judge of earth in endless ruin hurled,

The glory, jest and riddle of the world."

The origin of man, his nature and destiny, are problems which have engaged the human mind for centuries, and which still remain as unsettled, so far as philosophy is concerned, as in the beginning. Two leading schools of philosophy have been and are still engaged in the discussion, one denying man's personality and the other affirming it. Many profound thinkers have written extensively upon both sides of the question, each working out his own preconceived notions along his favorite line of thought, and finally arriving at that conclusion which best satisfies his own position upon religious and scientific questions. It is astonishing to what extent prejudice, tradition and legend shape men's politics, religion and philosophy.

"We are the same that our fathers have been,

We see the same things that our fathers have seen,

We drink the same stream and view the same sun,

And run the same race that our fathers have run."

The personality of man is the battle-ground between skepticism and modern christianity. The philosopher whose religious tastes, temperament and predilections lead him to deny nominal christianity and embrace materialism, deism or atheism, shapes his philosophy accordingly, and endeavors to prove that man is not a personality, because if this one point be established his victory is gained, so far as philosophy is concerned; while upon the other hand, he who is led either by tradition, persuasion or legend to embrace nominal christianity, engages to prove that man is a personality, because the nature and capabilities of man form the foundation of all modern religious theories. In order that the prevalent theory of conditional destiny may have some face to it, some foundation for reasonableness or plausibility, certain qualifications must be ascribed to man to constitute him a personality, capable of accepting, applying and carrying into effect the provisions which men assume that God has made for their salvation.

The materialistic school of philosophy, reasoning from the preconceived falsehood that there is no God, has labored to prove that man himself is not a personality; and upon the other hand, the so-called christian philosopher, in love with the idol tradition of conditional salvation, based upon man's free agency, invents a philosophy which makes man a kind of demi-god, by ascribing to him a mind, spirit or soul that is spiritual in the same sense that God is spiritual—a principle of immortality, a spark of divinity, as they often call it. They assume that in order for man to be a personality he must be endowed with the ability to know God, and to choose between right and wrong, and to exercise all the functions of an essential free moral agent; and that without this dual nature and these qualifications he cannot be a personality. Now, that man is endowed with reason, and possesses a knowledge of himself and his environment that the brute creation does not possess, every one must admit. It does not require a philosophy to establish this fact. But that to constitute him a personality requires that he possess a spark of divinity, a principle of immortality, a spiritual mind, of the essence as God himself, every one who has the slightest respect for the New Testament psychology must emphatically deny. The great mistake that philosophers have all fallen into is this, that in order for man to be a rational, ethical personality, distinct from the brute creation and pre-eminent over it, God must impart to him in his natural creation the spiritual, immortal nature of God himself, and that without this God-element there can be no distinction between man and beast. The qualifications of man that distinguish him from the irrational animal creation, and constitute him a personality, are products of creative power; and all products of creative power, or all created existences, are essentially different in essence or substance from the essence or substance of the creator.

"Of God above or man below
What can we reason but from what we know?"

Of man what see we but his station here
From which to reason or to which refer?"

In man's creation he was of the earth, earthy. In this creation he is capacitated to live on the substance of the earth, to love, understand and enjoy the things of this world, but separated in all his nature, in all his powers of body and mind, from the spiritual world. The law of continuity furnishes an a priori argument for the position we are attempting to establish of the most convincing kind, of such a kind indeed as seems to be final. If nature be a harmony, man in all his relations, physical, mental and moral, necessarily falls within its circle. It is altogether unlikely that man should have a spiritual nature violently separated in all its conditions of growth, in its essence and substance, from his earthly nature. It is difficult to conceive that the natural man should be guided by one set of principles, and these at a certain point give place to another set of principles altogether new and unrelated. Nature has never taught us to expect such a contradiction. Man cannot in the nature of thought, in the nature of language, be separated into two such incoherent halves.

The Bible account of man's creation is, "The Lord God formed man of the dust of the earth, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul." The unity of man as a living organism, as a natural personality, is most forcibly set forth here. The prevalent philosophical idea of man's personality is that God breathed into man an immortal soul, something ab extra to the man physical, and that this soul is the embodiment of the man's reasoning, knowing, intelligence, and is in substance of the same divine essence of God himself; and that without this germ of divinity man could not be a personality. Nothing can be farther from the true nature of man's personality as revealed in the history of nations, in the history of men, and in the everyday life of each individual. When facts contradict philosophy we must give credence to facts. Besides, the one brief statement of the Bible condemns the idea conclusively: "God breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul." He did not breathe a living soul into the man, but man became a living soul. Man and soul mean the same thing in this place.

It is true that the Bible was not written for a text book on psychology, yet no more beautiful system of philosophy can anywhere be found than that recorded by inspiration. It is consistent with itself, and is nowhere contradicted by existing facts. That fundamental principle of the christian religion laid down by Christ himself, "Except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God," is the embodiment of principles of philosophy which locate man in nature, and fix, define and bound his personality. The explanatory clause, "That which is born of the flesh is flesh," shows conclusively that man is the product of a fleshly birth; and all his powers, both mental and physical, are derived from the same source, and all belong to the same environment. The term "flesh" does not mean the literal flesh of the human body, but means man as a whole, as an individual, a personality; and if this personality ever sees the kingdom of God, is ever made a partaker of the divine nature, of immortality, it must be born again.

The present christian (?) philosophy of man's personality sets up the most serious enemy that christianity has to deal with at the present day. Of the multitudes who profess the christian religion at the present time, how many have clear in their minds the cardinal distinction made by Christ between born of the flesh and born of the Spirit? By how many nominal christian philosophers is not this fundamental postulate persistently ignored? A thousand modern pulpits are preaching every seventh day a philosophy of personality that not only contradicts this cardinal principle of the teaching of Christ, but renders the necessity of the new birth entirely useless.

The principle of psychology laid down by Paul is, "The carnal mind is enmity against God; it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be." The carnal mind here means that mind which constitutes man a person; and this mind is so far from being a spiritual essence, a spark of divinity, that it is enmity against God, not even subject to his law, neither indeed can be. The same apostle, in pursuing the same line of thought, says, "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned." By natural man here is meant that personality which is born of the flesh, and is flesh, and which has no capacity for the things of the Spirit.

He cannot know them. This is not a dogma of theology, but a necessity of science; and science accepts the situation. If philosophers would or could acquaint themselves with the meaning of the scriptural terms flesh and Spirit, they would free themselves from many blunders, and enter a new field of philosophic thought. The terms flesh and Spirit are no less scientific terms; they are strictly physiological in their import, and lie at the bottom of a biology which the scientists have hitherto entirely overlooked. The most complete, definite, real antithesis known to human thought is expressed by these terms. They are used to express two orders of life so completely separated from each other that nothing but the word "death" can express the nonrelation of the lower to the higher. Man, with all his powers of soul, body and spirit, lies within the order denominated flesh. His personality belongs here in toto. As the bird in its attempts to quit the earth and soar into the sky is beaten back by the unseen wires that fix its bounds, so the powers of man cannot extend beyond their environment, but in their endeavors to enter the spiritual world, even through the subtle medium of thought, are held back by an unseen but fixed boundary which they cannot pass. The agnostic's assertion that he knows nothing of the spiritual world is true, however much the nominal christian may dispute it. He really does not know. The statement that the natural man receives not the things of the Spirit of God, neither can he know them, is final, as a statement of scientific truth.

Can the philosophy that makes the mind or soul or spirit of man homogeneous with God be true without destroying in toto the statements of Paul and Christ? It may be urged that Paul was not inspired, that Christ was not the Son of God. Admit this to be true, and yet who among men is entitled to more respect as authority in philosophy, and where is the system of philosophy that is more rigorously demonstrated in men, as exhibited in their everyday life? The personality of man is not denied in the New Testament philosophy, but established. It contradicts other systems, that is all; and it does not contradict them by mere dogmatical assertions, but upon the most tangible scientific basis.

Man as a created intelligence stands above all creatures within his environment. He thinks, reasons, wills, loves, hates, mourns, rejoices, and is conscious of himself as distinct and separate from the things around him; he is conscious of his own individuality. These conditions and objects of consciousness are essential elements of personality, and prove that man is a person, but in every particular finite, in every particular natural as opposed to spiritual, mortal as opposed to immortality. There is nothing in man's personality that is immortal, in the Bible sense of that term. I do not mean that man shall not live again, or that there is no future existence for him. Endless existence is not immortality. The Bible declares that God alone has immortality, and I am unwilling to ascribe to man what God alone is said to possess. Man thinks, but his thoughts are vain, unfruitful, and always fallible; this proves that his mind is vain and fallible, and hence cannot be of the essence of God. He reasons, but his reasoning is uncertain, and often reaches wrong conclusions. He wills, but his willing is mutable, feeble, and upon all hands subject to defeat. He loves, but his love is often misplaced, embraces evil and wicked things; men love darkness. He hates, but he hates the good, even hates God himself. These facts, as exhibited throughout all history, are insurmountable barriers to our accepted philosophy of personality.

Man is a child of earth, thoroughly identified with the earth in all his manifestations; and whether his correspondence with earth can be broken and his personality preserved, is a question which philosophy can never solve. The fact that man is a personality cannot help us here. The heart, ignorant of what lies beyond, wraps itself in the vainest imaginations, the basest traditions, and the most ridiculous legends, and struggles to light its own darkness and penetrate the darkness beyond by the feeble lamp of philosophy. Around the mysterious region of the Hereafter, Superstition has cast her sable mantle.

Philosophers endeavor to prove by the personality of man that there is a personal God. Their argument is that a finite personality must necessarily be the product of an infinite personality, or a personal God; but the comprehension of God as a person, as the true God, as the I Am, as Jehovah, is not the product of a philosophy, but must come through the revelation of faith. This revelation lifts us out of the miry clay of an uncertain philosophy, and places our feet upon a rock. It gives us a mind, a heart, an understanding, that cannot be accounted for upon any principles of human science. It lifts the veil of fear and superstition from the heart, and answers in the affirmative the question, "If a man die shall he live again?" The revelation of faith also solves the problem of the preservation of man's personality in the dissolution of his correspondence with this earth.

The duration of man's personality is determined by the author of it. It is not necessarily endless within its own attributes. Not only is the duration of man's personality fixed by the will of God, but the condition or state of its existence is determined by the same eternal will. God's personality, from the very nature of it, is essentially self-existent, eternal, immutable, immortal; but man's personality is not so essentially. A created personality can be limited as to duration, can have any given nature or condition that may be determined by its creator. From our own instinctive fears and longings we may infer that our personality may exist in a future state, but the only ground for assurance of this is the revelation given by God through Jesus Christ; and this revelation is not given to all men, for many of the wisest philosophers endeavor to reason away man's personality here and his existence hereafter. In the midst of an uncertain philosophy upon the one hand, and unbelief upon the other, it doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that when Christ shall appear we shall be like him.

"FOR we being many are one bread, and one body: for we are all partakers of that one bread."—1 Cor. x. 17.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN IN THE LORD:—In some one of the past numbers of the SIGNS I saw a request from sister Nevada Runyan, of Runyan, Ky., for my views through our highly prized medium of correspondence, the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, on the above portion of holy writ; but I have deferred answering until now, and for no other reason than a deepening, heartfelt sense of my weakness and unworthiness to write on any portion of God's word; and even now if I have any special light on the text submitted it is very faint and glimmering. However, I cannot in justice to my feelings pass such requests by unnoticed; therefore I will offer a few thoughts, such as I have, relative to the subject, hoping they may be of some comfort to our highly esteemed sister, and others of like precious faith.

This text is a positive declaration of inspiration, and neither has reference to nor embraces any but God's people, the elect vessels of mercy, whom he chose in Christ Jesus unto eternal glory. The context shows plainly that the apostle was enforcing on the minds of these dearly beloved children of God in a most vivid manner the disobedience of the Israelites, and their overthrow with literal destructions and righteous judgments, as our ensamples and for our admonition, upon whom the ends of the world are come; and not only so, but that the Lord our God had a table for his loved ones to gather around, and a cup for them to partake of; and also that the devil had a table for his children to gather around, and a cup for them to partake of; and that these plainly distinguished classes, with their respective places, way and manner of worship, should have no communion or fellowship with each other; nor could they have, without subjecting the Lord's children to the same like destructions as came upon the children of Israel in the wilderness for their disobedience; for all these things happened (came unexpectedly) unto them for ensamples, or were our examples, to the intent we should not lust after evil things as they also lusted. May the Lord enable us to flee from idolatry. "Little children, keep yourselves from idols;" for "Ye cannot drink the cup of the Lord, and the cup of devils. Ye cannot be partakers of the Lord's table, and of the table of devils." "For the cup of blessing which we bless, is it not the communion of the blood of Christ? The bread which we break, is it not the communion of the body of Christ?" The word "communion," in its common acceptance, means fellowship, concord or agreement; and in this text it has direct reference to the mutual communion of Christ and his children in the solemn sacrament known among us as the Lord's supper. But this communion and fellowship of Christ and his children are not confined alone to the sacrament known as the Lord's supper; for the apostle John says, "Truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ."—1 John i. 3. We do also most assuredly believe that God's children have communion with Christ by election in him, by their relation to his humanity, and by a participation of his Spirit; for they are made partakers of all the covenant blessings treasured up in Christ for them, and which are made known unto them experimentally, according to the eternal purpose which he purposed in Christ Jesus before the world began. For Paul said to the Ephesian church, "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ, according [in harmony] as he hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before him in love."—Eph. i. 3, 4.

"For we being many." The plural pronoun "we" in this text, which comprises the exact number expressed by the following noun "many," is no more nor less than God's entire people, known as the election of grace and body of Christ, whom he purchased with his own blood; for when Jesus took the cup, and had given thanks, he gave it to them, saying, "Drink ye all of it; for this is my blood of the new testament, which is shed for [because of] many, for [because of] the remission of sins;" that is, for the remission of the sins of the "many."—Matt. xxvi. 27, 28. For the body (church) is not one member, but many; and God hath set every one of them in the body as it pleased him. Inasmuch then as God set every one of the members in the body as it pleased him, he is the only being that officiated in the organization of this one complete body; and this church, or body of Christ, is the only one of her mother—the only one organized by infinite wisdom and eternal love; consequently there is none other like it—none other of this kind. "There are threescore [sixty] queens and fourscore [eighty] concubines, and virgins without number;" but "My dove, my undefiled, is but one."—

Song vi. 8, 9. One chosen in Christ, preserved in him, blessed in him, and called with a holy calling. Individually we are many, yet we are joined together in one mystical body, of which Christ is the Head and Savior; and we declare ourselves to be so by our fellowship together in the ordinance of the Lord's supper, and by having love one for another, manifested in our everyday life, &c. For the bread we eat in taking the Lord's supper is one bread, and the wine we drink is one wine. Although the bread may be composed of many individual grains of corn, yet it is but one bread; and the wine may be also composed of many individual grapes, yet it is but one wine. Hence the Lord's chosen people are redeemed to God by the blood of Christ out of every kindred and tongue and people and nation; and yet they are all one in Christ, and are many members, yet but one body. All the elect of God out of every kindred, tongue, people and nation, from the beginning to the end of the world, is but one body, the church, the bride, the Lamb's wife; one body and one Spirit, and called in one hope of their calling. One Lord, one faith, one baptism, one mind, love and design, being knit together in love; and this everlasting or eternal love is the cement which cements this one body in an indissoluble union, and unites and joins these many members so closely that they are but one body. "Are one bread, and one body." Christ is spoken of as the bread which came down from heaven. "If any man eat thereof he shall live forever; and the bread that I will give is my flesh, which I will give for the life of the world."—John vi. 51. "Whoso eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood hath eternal life, and I will raise him up at the last day." "I am the bread of life." This is one bread, of whom all God's children are partakers. This last phrase of the text more plainly gives us the cause of the unity or oneness of Christ and his people; it is because they are all partakers of his divine nature and holiness. Notwithstanding the Lord's chosen people in their individuality are many, yet they are but one body; and the very idea of many being but one denotes a most inseparable union and intimate communion, as if they were but one person or one body. This last phrase the apostle has used in a most lucid manner, to show the union and communion that is between Christ and the members of his body, the church. This oneness or unity of Christ and his people is the only ground of their acceptance with God; the only ground upon which their sins are pardoned, their persons accepted, and finally they are brought to eternal glory, where we shall be like Jesus; for we shall see him as he is, and so shall ever be with the Lord. "For we being many are one bread, and one body: for we are all partakers of that one bread."

PINSONFORK, Ky., April 20, 1893.

RATON, N. M., April 24, 1893.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—I send to you a letter written by sister White, which I think will interest many of your readers. The news of her death came to us in our southwestern home very suddenly, as we had not heard of her failing health. I had spent many pleasant seasons in her company, and she was endeared to me in warm christian love. The letter I send portrays the deep christian experience which she had tasted, and her unfaltering trust in the Savior of the church. We sympathize deeply with her bereaved family and the church of which she was a member, all of whom will miss her presence among them.

Yours in christian love,

ELIZABETH H. BOGGS.

MARCH 18, 1878.

MY VERY DEAR SISTER BOGGS:—I received your very welcome letter during my husband's absence. You can well imagine how gladly it was received. I am sure I only have to ask your forgiveness for not answering before this; for you know so much of my weakness and imperfection that I am sure you will pardon me, and not think me unmindful of such a favor as I hope I will always feel a letter from you to be. We received the notice of Elder Hartwell's death. O what a sad bereavement! I have no doubt now that you feel his place can never be filled. It seems hard, when such dispensations of God's providence come upon us, to feel in our hearts, "Thy will, O God, be done." We can only feel that when the Lord gives us strength. We surely cannot say those words in our own strength. It is he alone that is able to fill that place. There is nothing too hard for him to do; and we have the blessed assurance, if we are his children, that he will never leave nor forsake us. But O, I have so many doubts about my salvation. I do not doubt for one moment the salvation of the church. I know that is sure. Chosen in Christ before the foundation of the world; and just as sure as the Head lives, the body must live also. He is the Head of the church, the body; and it must be a perfect body. We cannot conceive of Christ having anything but perfection; and surely it takes every member to make that body perfect. He says in another place, "I am the vine, ye are the branches." But every branch that beareth not fruit shall be cut off and thrown into the fire. Brother Powell certainly expressed my feelings on Sunday when he said he thought he must be the branch that bore no fruit. I think I must surely be that one; for in me, I feel, there is no good thing. I am always doing the things that I should not, and leaving undone the things that I ought to do. I think I can say, with Paul, "O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" O what can make us more wretched than when Christ withdraws himself from us? We are then indeed of all men most miserable. But I have often thought of the passage of Scripture (I do not know just where it is) which says, "Though we believe not, yet he abideth faithful: he cannot deny himself." What a consolation to those who so often find themselves in a fix that they cannot decide whether they really believe or not. But there is one thing there can be no doubt about, whether we believe or not, Christ's blood is sufficient to cleanse us from all sin. Blessed is the man to whom Christ will not impute sin. O, my sister, when we feel the burden of our sins bearing us down so low, we cannot conceive of anything like the goodness of God in giving his only begotten Son to bear the sins of the whole church. We feel sometimes that surely he had enough to make him sweat great drops of blood falling to the ground, and all on account of our sins. O that I could love him more and serve him better, is the prayer, I trust, of my poor, weak self.

Elijah came home from your place on Saturday night. He stopped to see Elder Purington. He says he can never forget the kindness bestowed on him while on that trip; but he had so little spiritual enjoyment and so little liberty in preaching that he felt he must have been more a burden than a pleasure to the church. We were all so glad to see him. That was the longest trip he has ever taken since he has been trying to preach.

I see in the last SIGNS that our dear old brother Beebe is able again to fill his place in the pulpit, for which we all have great reason to be thankful. I do not now expect to attend the Baltimore Association. I wish you could attend. Brother Chick expects to come from there and be here on the third Sunday. Cannot you come with him? Old sister Hickson says she expects to come. If you could only be with us it would remind us of the week we spent together last summer.

Now, my dear sister, I must bid you good-by for the present. I hope you will overlook all the imperfections in this scribble, and write to your unworthy sister in hope. Elijah joins me in love to you; and he sends his love and returns thanks to you and all the friends at your place.

LIZZIE WHITE.

THE NAMES OF BLASPHEMY.

IN reading the Scriptures of divine truth we are, like Peter, led to see that there are some things hard to be understood, which we no doubt do very often wrest, being unlearned, and consequently unstable. It is no very pleasant task to the flesh to resist popular notions and long accepted practices. But the Spirit of Christ and of wisdom, and a sound mind, will enable us to detect anything that is contrary to sound doctrine and the traditions delivered to the church by the apostles, and to resist the same with a ready mind, no matter what the consequences are. For no lie is of the truth, whether in doctrine or practice. Even the little foxes spoil the vines. Any practice, be it ever so small, not given in the apostles' doctrine, is a corrupt practice. We see some worshiping of angels even among Old Baptists, by calling some great preachers and writers "divines." This is a name of blasphemy when given to any mortal man. This title belongs to him only who hath immortality dwelling in the light, which, it is expressly declared, no man can approach unto; whom no man hath seen nor can see. But no marvel, for Satan has tried to make the Scriptures teach this; but he never yet got any farther than the heading of the chapters, or the margins and explanations. He tried to make God's servant John take a name of blasphemy; but the Scriptures by John repudiate it. It is this, "The Revelation of St. John the Divine." This is a name of blasphemy, and is given the lie in God's first sentence, "The revelation of Jesus Christ," &c. The reason I speak of this is because I believe some of God's people are caught in this, in telling what some "eminent divines," as they call them, have said or written. This I cannot receive, as it is one of the ear-marks of the whore and her daughters, who are full of just such names. "Reverend," "Holy Father," "Mother of God," "Queen of heaven," are some of the names of blasphemy written upon her, as well as her daughters. Blasphemous doctrines, claiming attributes of God. And some of the unstable are following their pernicious ways. Some are making light of the express commands of the apostles, because they are not popular. One in particular is, women teaching and speaking in the church, usurping authority, which is expressly forbidden by the apostles; and they are the mouth of God. This practice is very popular with antichristian denominations of the second beast. Why? Because there is a great power in the voice of a woman to draw the fleshy mind of man. This is why, or one reason why, the wisdom of God has said, "It is a shame for a woman to speak in the church." It will not do for sisters to quote what those noble women did and said at the sepulchre, and elsewhere, in the apostolic days, in order to controvert what the apostles have said and commanded concerning the dress and behavior of women in the house of God, who profess godliness; for the wisdom of God has given directions in this to the church, and it is not safe to ignore it (read 1 Cor. xiv.; also Titus, Peter, and others), and say it does not matter; that a different rule is just as good. This is blasphemy, setting our wisdom above God's wisdom. This shows a mark of the beast. There is a disposition

GOSPEL PREACHING.

"STUDY to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth."—2 Tim. ii. 15.

No work of such solemn importance was ever committed to any created being as that which is embraced in the ministry of the gospel of the grace of God. It is not possible that any natural qualifications can prepare a man for this service; nor can the lack of any natural advantages constitute an impediment in the way of obedience when the Lord has called one of his people to the fulfillment of the office of bearing the message of redeeming love to the comforting of his afflicted and poor saints. Reason says, "It is important that those who are recognized as preachers of the gospel should have sufficient worldly education to enable them to critically read the Scriptures, and to withstand those who seek to pervert the sacred record." To the natural mind of the saints this does seem consistent; and perhaps every servant whom God has called to the ministry has found his lack of such literary ability presenting an obstacle in the way of obedience to the divine direction. Not only has this deceitful plea been urged in the present age, and under the gospel dispensation, but even in the prophetic days this stumbling-block afforded a pretext behind which disobedience and unbelief took plausible shelter in rebellion against the authority of the Lord God. When Jeremiah was sent to prophesy he said, "Ah, Lord God! behold, I cannot speak; for I am a child. But the Lord said unto me, Say not, I am a child; for thou shalt go to all that I shall send thee, and whatsoever I command thee thou shalt speak. Be not afraid of their faces; for I am with thee to deliver thee, saith the Lord. Then the Lord put forth his hand, and touched my mouth. And the Lord said unto me, Behold, I have put my words in thy mouth. See, I have this day set thee over the nations and over the kingdoms, to root out, and to pull down, and to destroy, and to throw down, to build, and to plant."—Jer. i. 6-10. How much did the natural intelligence of Jeremiah contribute to the work to which he was sanctified and ordained before his natural birth? Did Moses feel that he was peculiarly adapted for the work assigned to him, because he "was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians?" After all other objections had failed to excuse him, "Moses said unto the Lord, O my Lord, I am not eloquent, neither heretofore, nor since thou hast spoken to thy servant; but I am slow of speech, and of a slow tongue. And the Lord saith unto him, Who hath made man's mouth? or who maketh the dumb, or deaf, or the seeing, or the blind? have not I the Lord?"—Ex. iv. 10, 11. Under the gospel dispensation, did Paul claim that his superior education which was received at the feet of Gamaliel, gave him precedence over Peter, and James and John, who were illiterate fishermen? Instead of this, he counted all his educational attainments as loss for Christ; and when it pleased God to reveal his Son in him that he should preach him among the heathen, he says, "Immediately I conferred not with flesh and blood; neither went I up to Jerusalem to them which were apostles before me; but I went unto Arabia, and returned again unto Damascus."—Phil. iii. 7; Gal. i. 17. Thus it is manifest that there is no inspired authority to support the popular theory that natural education adds to the qualification of one of whom God has called to the work of preaching the gospel.

"Study to show thyself approved unto God." The manifest signification of the word "study" as here used is not to endeavor to learn what men have taught in religion, but to earnestly seek to be found speaking no other things but such as have been revealed by the Holy Spirit in the experience of the servant of the Lord; for this is all that can be profitable to the saints to whom the minister of Christ is called to testify the doctrine and order which our Lord has established in his kingdom. Herein is one essential point of difference between the gospel ministry and every emissary of antichrist. Since the whole system of worldly religion is addressed to the mental powers of the children of this world, there is consistency in those who teach that system being so thoroughly trained in worldly wisdom as to be able to convince the natural mind of those things which are to be taught. Hence there is need for all the schools and other inventions which have been devised by the votaries of false religion. If they are to study to show themselves approved unto men, it is but reasonable that they should look to men for that instruction which is needful to qualify them for the service of men. But the apostle does not direct Timothy to any such course of study as this. He says nothing to him about seeking to be approved of men. It is to that God who knoweth all things, that the gospel preacher must look for approbation when he faithfully speaks the truth as he is moved by the Holy Ghost. This is the meaning of the word "study" in this text. There is no earthly consideration which can compare in importance with the attainment of the approval of that God who has called every servant whom he has authorized to preach his everlasting gospel. In the example of Paul himself there is an illustration of this solemn truth. In his charge to the elders of the church of Ephesus he recounts his afflictions in the work of the ministry and says, "But none of these things move me, neither count I my life dear unto myself, so that I might finish my course with joy, and the ministry, which I have received of the Lord Jesus, to testify the gospel of the grace of God."—Acts xx. 24. Thus he studied to show himself approved unto God. If he had sought the approval of men, Paul was better qualified to secure that favor than any in our time, since he had all the advantages of natural birth to add to the attainment of the very highest rank among religious students. Not even all the writings of uninspired men, which have been published since the apostolic day, could have added to his stock of scientific religious qualifications. Certainly if there had been valuable preparation for the ministry of Christ in those educational advantages none could have known them better than the very apostle who wrote this letter to Timothy; yet he never once suggests that the servant of the Lord could do better work after a course of natural study under the direction of some learned teacher of the wisdom of men.

The word used by Paul in this text has the same meaning with that which is translated "giving all diligence."—2 Peter i. 5. The preaching of the gospel of the grace of God is not so light a matter as to be of secondary importance. No temporal considerations can take precedence of the high privilege which is given to the ministry of Christ in their being called of God to the service of his ransomed people. Not even the duty of burying a dead father, or bidding farewell to the members of the domestic circle, can justify delay in the performance of that work which the Lord has commanded.—Luke ix. 57-62. Nothing can compare with the reward which is experienced in obedience to the word of the Lord; and there is no suffering so fearful as that which is felt by the disobedient child who falls into the hands of the living God in the visitation of just chastisement upon his transgressions. "For we know him that hath said, Vengeance belongeth unto me; I will recompense, saith the Lord. And again, The Lord shall judge his people."—Heb. x. 30. As far as the infinite majesty of God exceeds all created glory, so far the authority of his commandment transcends the most urgent obligations of an earthly character. Hence it is important that the saints heed this admonition to make the attainment of the answer of a good conscience toward God the first consideration at all times and under all circumstances. In so doing they obey the injunction in our text. While this is primarily addressed to Timothy as a minister of the gospel, it is profitable for the direction of every one of the saints. Indeed, there is no such effective preaching for the guidance of the followers of Jesus as that which is found in the daily life and continual example of those who are called to declare the testimony of divine grace in the salvation of sinners. What advantage is the logic of Paul and the eloquence of Apollos in proclaiming the letter of sound doctrine, if the conduct of the minister shows that he is himself destitute of the power of that grace in his own heart? Certainly so far as his labors are designed to comfort the afflicted and poor people of God such a minister must be a castaway. He can have no divine joy in the work of his ministry.

"A workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." In this expression is included the standard of excellence whose attainment is to be the object of the servant of the Lord, and also the definite direction by which that end is to be attained. The familiar illustration of a competent workman is presented as the representative of the minister whom God has called to serve in the proclamation of his gospel. The workman who is engaged in building a house might be able to give the history of houses from the beginning of time to the present, and elaborately describe their beauties; yet if he could not himself construct a building which would bear its own weight, he would certainly need to be ashamed of his folly in attempting a work for which he is not qualified. So, that professed minister of the gospel has need to be ashamed of his work who cannot so divide the word of truth that it shall set forth the testimony of Jesus. The proud rabbi who can at once read all the various dialects in which men have ever written their books, has need to be ashamed if he cannot so divide the word of truth that it shall testify of Jesus. The illiterate peasant who depends upon the kindness of some more favored companion for the literal reading of the Scriptures, seeing Jesus in every sentence he hears, has no need to be ashamed; even though he can frame no grammatical sentences, nor tickle the carnal ear with great swelling words of vanity. The strongest assurance that the ministry of a preacher is effective and profitable is found in the fact that it is applied by the Spirit to the comfort and admonition of the humble disciples of our Lord. It is of small consequence whether the preaching is considered by the world as wonderfully eloquent and conclusive, so that multitudes give rapt attention to the words of the minister. There is no gospel in such preaching if it has not the Spirit of Christ in it. Although the whole world may be attracted by the beautiful language and strong arguments of the preacher, he has need to be ashamed if the word of truth has been so deceitfully wrested that it has been changed to an indorsement of the doctrines and commandments of men. Jesus is not in such preaching, however loudly the name may be uttered. There is no more deceitful form of falsehood than that which claims reverence for the truth while denying its living power. Of such preachers Paul says, "They profess that they know God; but in works they deny him, being abominable, and disobedient, and unto every good work reprobate."—Tit. i. 16. If any ministers whom God has called have so far conformed to the wisdom of this world as to bear the description here given, surely such have need to be ashamed. There can never be such departure from the right way of the Lord without the distortion of the word of truth. When the Spirit takes of the things of Jesus in the law and in the prophets, and reveals them unto his saints, he shows their testimony of the Messiah as the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth. The minister of Christ has no need to be ashamed when he can so divide the word of truth that this glorious witness shines in all that is written by inspiration. It is of little consequence whether the tongue is as stammering as that of Moses, or as eloquent as that of Apollos, when the Spirit takes the words spoken, and applies them to the experience of the saints, they are full of sweetness and comfort. While the privilege of uttering the words of this truth is unspeakably blessed, the honored messenger by whom the Lord is pleased to speak is never puffed up by his own ability when led by the Spirit of truth. On the contrary, the invariable effect of such wonderful grace is to humble the messenger in the dust. The same light which reveals the glory of God in his truth shows the pollution and vileness of that servant in whom it is thus gloriously shining. So Isaiah, after describing the vision of the Lord which he saw in the year that king Uzziah died, immediately cries, "Woe is me! for I am undone; because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips; for mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of hosts." Thus the word of truth when rightly divided shows the just condemnation of every sinner, and witnesses the infinite perfection of holiness in which our God works all things according to his own eternal purpose. Upon this immutable foundation rests the whole building of the sanctified church of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

The word of truth is not rightly divided by assigning some portion of it to one saint, and some other portion to another. There is nothing in the revelation which God has given but that every saint has a heritage in it. The whole word of truth is the common possession of all the saints. There is none of it which any one can afford to regard as having no application to himself. On the other hand none can claim exclusive proprietorship in any portion. It is the undivided and indivisible heritage of the whole household of God. The only right division of it is in the application of every portion to that particular condition in which the saints all need that very word of divine comfort or instruction. In doctrine, that which pertains to the typical and legal system must not be applied to the gospel, except as designed to bear testimony to the glory which shines in Jesus Christ. Neither is the grace revealed in the gospel to be presented as a mere appendage to the Mosaic dispensation. Jesus is not tributary to Moses; but in rightly dividing the word of truth it will be shown that all the law and the prophets testify of Jesus. All this rich treasure of infinite fullness of grace and truth came by Jesus Christ; and it is needful to constantly affirm this divine reality in rightly dividing the word of truth. When the saints lose sight of this principle of the gospel they become entangled in the yoke of legal bondage, and thus lose the enjoyment of their heritage of liberty in the word of truth.

KEEP IT.

PLEASE destroy your old Supplements and keep the last one, and read it carefully. We especially request our brethren and friends to note the fourth paragraph, and to assist us all they can in accordance with the terms given therein. If you cannot attend to the matter yourself you are at liberty to authorize some one else to act in your name.

When two or more new subscribers are sent at the same time, in accordance with terms given in Supplement of April 12th, 1893, and one is in compliance with the second or third paragraph, and the others on terms given in fourth paragraph, it is very essential to state which name is sent according to terms of the second or third paragraph, as that name is credited to the end of 1893, while the others are credited one year from the time their subscription begins.

IT IS VERY IMPORTANT

That great care should be taken in sending a renewal of subscriptions to give us the same name as the one to whom the paper is already coming. If the party is married be sure the initials are given correctly; for if the paper is coming in the wife's name and the husband writes us to send the paper the next year, and signs his own name, we have no means of knowing that the person to whom the paper is going is his wife; and not finding his name on our list he is entered as a new subscriber and the paper sent to both; or if the paper is going in the husband's name and the renewal sent on in the wife's name, the result will be the same. The best way is to inclose in your letter one of the little pink slips containing the name pasted either on the margin of the paper or on the wrapper in which it comes.

to brand those who contend for the apostles' order in everything pertaining to the church, with being very particular about the letter of Scripture. The love of God writes the order of his house in every particular in the heart. There are no nonessentials written for our learning. The God with whom we have to do does not trifle. The stakes of Zion are all set, and the lines are all drawn. We have no stakes to set, not even by his stakes; and to remove one of the least of his stakes, and teach men so, is visited with punishment. Surely the church of the living God does not want any of the man-devised garments of Babylon. The doctrine and order given by the apostles are a perfect fit for the church of God, pronounced so by God himself; so we have no need to rob antichrist. They are welcome to their own, and the church of the living God wants her own; no more, no less.

Yours in hope,

DAVID TITMUS.

FLEMINGSBURG, Ky., Feb. 23, 1893.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—Inclosed find post-office order for two dollars. I cannot do without the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. It is a sweet and blessed means of correspondence and intercourse between the people of God, as they are scattered throughout the United States and Canada, bringing to each the blessings of the gospel of Christ, and the mutual experiences of God's children as to his dealings with them. I recognize the fact that there are people who call themselves Old School Baptists, who say that the SIGNS does not teach sound doctrine; but my father was a subscriber for the paper before me, and I have been a reader of it for about forty years; and if it teaches any doctrine different from what it taught when I first read it, or any doctrine not taught in and sustained by the Scriptures of divine truth, I am unable to perceive it. With no intention to flatter, you are certainly faithful sentinels on the watch-tower of Zion, earnest and zealous ministers of the New Testament, declaring the whole and true testimony of God. May the grace and mercy of God sustain and success attend you in your efforts to serve and comfort the people of God.

When I say, "Who call themselves Old School Baptists," I do not mean to use that term in a feeling of unkindness, or with a desire to offend; for I trust those persons alluded to above have experienced a hope in Christ, and rely alone upon the efficacy of his atoning blood to redeem them from the curse of sin; but I sometimes fear they are controlled by feelings of prejudice and pride. I humbly pray that our heavenly Father, if consistent with his holy will, may remove all human pride from the hearts and prejudice from the minds, and restore christian fellowship and love among the members of his beloved Zion.

There was a time, before I had a hope, or before that hope became sure and steadfast, that I thought the experiences of God's people, relating his dealings with them, and giving their own thoughts and reflections as to their sinful state, their lost and ruined condition, as published in the SIGNS, was dry reading, especially unless it was written in elegant style, and expressed in fine and eloquent language. But now, since by the grace and mercy of God I have been made to see myself as I am, a miserable sinner, and to realize that I am nothing, less than nothing, and vanity, and made to rely alone upon the merits of the precious blood of Christ, who was humility itself, I can read those expressions of the brethren and sisters, though clumsily written, and enjoy sweet communion with, and feel the strongest fellowship for them, although most of them are utter strangers to me in the flesh, and I may never behold their faces; realizing that we have a common interest in him who was delivered for our offenses, and rose again for our justification.

When I began this I had little thought of writing anything but an order for your paper; but as I live about twelve miles from our place of preaching, which is May's Lick, Mason Co., Ky., and have been sick, and been unable to go to meeting, so when I began to write I just ran over, and have afflicted you with this long letter. I presume you know the brethren and sisters at May's Lick, and have enjoyed the pleasure of their society, and can therefore appreciate the privation one would feel who is usually accustomed to meet with them once a month, and of hearing Christ and him crucified preached in such a comforting manner by our dear brother Eubanks, and who has not enjoyed any of those blessed privileges for more than five months.

While I know you have never shrunk from declaring the whole testimony of God, still I sometimes wish that you and the other brethren, who are competent to write and speak, would say more about the duty of the brethren and sisters to maintain the worship of God's house, the support of the ministry, the repairing, building and maintaining the houses of worship. I fear there is too much carelessness and apathy in this regard among some of the brethren. May God inspire our hearts with zeal to do his holy will; and, if consistent with his righteous purpose, I would humbly pray that he revive his work in the hearts of his people, and restore peace and order in all the borders of his Zion. "O Lord, revive thy work in the midst of the years, in the midst of the years make known; in wrath remember mercy."

Your unworthy brother,

JOHN S. POWER.

EXTRACTS

FROM FOUR ORATIONS BY EDWARD IRVING, BEFORE THE LONDON (ENGLAND) MISSIONARY SOCIETY, MAY, 1824.

ORATION THREE.

THE PERPETUITY OF THIS MISSIONARY CONSTITUTION PROVED.

HAVING thus established beyond a question, from the document itself, that it is written for all ages, and having shown that it was acted upon in the spirit and beyond the letter by the apostles and first missionaries of the church, I see not what remains further to be said in order to prove that it ought still to be regarded as the constitution of the missionary estate and the directory of the missionary course; but I feel, while I speak, a certain inward admonition to weave the tissue of my argument as it were of double strength; for I seem to see the apparition of many enemies, and to have the foretaste of a fiery trial, for these thoughts which I have adventured forth. The warlike spirit of the Crusaders, who unsheathed the sword which the blasphemous father of Christendom had blessed, and unfurled the consecrated banner of the cross, therewith to spread the gospel of peace, and the artful spirit of the Jesuits, who brought all the stores of human wit and worldly wisdom to the same great undertaking, and the spirits of this monied and prudential age, who preach the crusade of gold as eagerly as Peter the Hermit preached the crusade of steel, all these seem to arise to overwhelm the poor wight who shall say that neither gold nor steel nor worldly wisdom is essential to the equipment of a missionary; but so far from being the allies of Christ in the propagation of the spiritual kingdom, are the three chief powers against whose combined strength his servants have to make their way, and upon whose humbled pride they have to lay the foundations of his empire.

Therefore I oft pause and look to my instructions, and see whether I be well sustained in the cause which I plead; and a still, small voice whispereth to me that I am. The monitor within me saith unto my hesitating mind, Beholdest thou not that the deficiency of earthly means is balanced by the sufficiency of unearthly promises? and that though there be no purse wherewithal to purchase the means of life, there is an admonition from heaven to all men to take the unprovided missionary to their home and give him bread and water? and though there be no steel with which to cleave obstacles in twain, there is the word of God, which is a hammer that breaketh the rock in pieces? and though there be no defense of Jesuitical wiles, there is the eye of Providence, which counteth every hair upon their head, and holdeth their lives more dear than the beasts of the field and the fowls of heaven, for which he liberally provideth? Perceivest thou not that the former and the latter end of the instructions balance and sustain each other, and that if the former be taken away the latter hath no counterpoise, and the whole proportion and wisdom of the passage is destroyed? Therefore, seeing it will not permit of mutilation, nor of abrogation, nor of temporizing, what can I do but redeem my pledge of upholding the truth of my Master with that liberty of prophesying which this grave and revered assembly, taking example from those three still more venerable assemblies mentioned at the beginning, will not hinder in him whom they have set up to prophesy to them out of the word of the Lord.

It is not for the words, purse, scrip, raiment, staff and friendship that I contend. Whether a man shall have money, provisions, comforts, conveniences of travel and friendly sustenances, or shall not have them, is not the question. Whether a man shall hide himself from all the secondary means of prosperity, or shall profit by them, is not the question. The question is concerning those fields of interest, those spheres of ambition and refuges of trust, which the words purse, scrip, raiment, staff and friendship denote; whether the missionary shall occupy any of them or shall not; whether he shall go forth independent of them or dependent on them; whether his character shall be molded and modeled after the fancy of the times and the current maxims of the christian world, or shall stand unalienable and unalterable, like the character of the pastor or the christian. If a missionary, possessing all these things, can be a man of as entire faith and devotion as though he had them not, it is a small matter so far as he himself is concerned; yet not a small matter, as we shall see, so far as the success of the work is concerned. But it is not a small matter whether the idea of the christian church concerning these offices shall be a constant or a changeable thing; whether the idea of the missionary concerning his office shall descend to him of God or descend to him of men; and whether those that guide the work shall consider themselves as infallible to give law to the missionary—a commission, self-appointed, of oyer and terminer in this great cause, or men acting under authority, under responsibility, and by exactly prescribed rules. These are questions vitally concerning both the glory of God and the well-being of man; and I feel that I have been agitating a mighty matter, and am myself under terrible responsibility, if I advocate not to the utmost the perpetuity of these decrees.

Taking courage, therefore, I now venture a little higher into the dignity of this argument, and declare that not only do the unrepealed authority and the intrinsical character of these instructions bind them forever upon the propagators of the kingdom, but that, from the nature of the gospel itself, he who propagates the gospel must be separate from worldly interests and stand aloof from worldly occupations; and just in proportion as he getteth under the spirit of his high vocation, he will, of his own accord, though there were no binding precept upon the subject, cast himself into that outward condition here presented to the twelve great champions of Christendom. It is not a conventional, but an appropriate, not an expedient, but a necessary character for every one who possesseth a certain measure of God's Spirit; or, to speak in the language of the metaphysical schools, it is the outward and necessary form under which a certain large measure of spiritual influence will always manifest itself. But first it may be necessary to explain the language which I use.

The twofold nature of man, body and spirit, maketh it necessary that everything by which he is to be moved should have an outward form. While yet it lives in spiritual essence alone, it is to him as if it lived not, and its life hath over his life no influence or control; hence the great Father of spirits hath given to all the attributes of his being an outward form and manifestation. The heavens declare his glory, and the earth showeth forth his handiwork; and the sun which circlet round the earth is the tabernacle of his effulgency. The written law, which is holy and just and good, is the form of his holiness; and the gospel of his Son is the form of his mercy and grace. Heaven is the outward form of his blessedness, and hell of his fearful wrath against the rebellious; and every doctrine in revelation is a form to the intellect of some spiritual attribute of the Invisible—the doctrine of the atonement of his justice, the doctrine of the Holy Spirit of his help. To the most noble and capital truths or doctrines he giveth not only a form for the intellect, but for the very sense of man. His incarnate Son is the fleshly form of his glory and the visible image of his person. The doctrine of our natural corruption and gracious purification by the blood of Christ hath the sensible form of baptism; and the doctrine of our continued sustenance by his word and Spirit hath the sensible form of the supper. * * * The visible church is the sensible form of the heavenly communion; and there is nothing in the being and purposes of God which it might benefit man to know that hath not a form of expressing itself to the soul of man through the intellect or through the sense.

Now, in like manner as God hath given to his spiritual being a constant form in revelation, so hath he appointed unto his servants to manifest their spiritual being under some constant form. To every man in his station he hath appointed his duties: to the servant and the master, the husband and the wife, the parent and the child, the ruler and the ruled; which duties are the outward form which his holy Spirit taketh in these persons and conditions. To a rich man he hath given rules how to use his riches, and to a poor man how to bear his poverty; to a wise man how to use his wisdom, and to a fool how he may be cured of his folly; to the strong how to employ his strength, and to the sick how to bear his affliction. So to all the various gifts of nature, allotments of Providence, and preferments of rank and power, hath God appointed a certain formulary for their right manifestation in the sight of men; nor alloweth, without rebuke and chastisement, that these conditions should be otherwise occupied than for the ends for which he hath bequeathed them diversely, that they might rightly occupy the diverse members of his great household, and bring out the common weal of the whole family. While over every chamber of this world's variety he appointed a spiritual servant to preside, he did also appoint an order of men superior to these, who should travel over the many chambers of the house, and see that each servant was rightly occupying till the great householder should come; stewards who should neither occupy the treasury chambers, nor the attiring rooms, nor the bazaars of business, nor the museums of knowledge, nor the shops of art, nor the halls of judgment, nor the apartments of state and dignity, nor the saloons of grace and beauty, nor the awful places of throned sovereignty; but who should travel over all these from room to room, even from the dark and laborious foundations up to the stately elevations and gilded pinnacles of society, surveying the work and occupation of every inhabitant, and carefully keeping them to the right and diligent performance of their several parts, that they may be able to render an account of their work when the Lord shall come to call the work of every man into judgment. This watchful, careful office appertaineth to the minister of the gospel, or the pastor of the souls of the people, in which, if he faithfully travel, his shall be a great reward; but if he stoop to engage himself with any of the diverse traffics, and meanwhile, for want of careful oversight and spiritual instruction, the souls committed to him go astray to serve other masters than the Lord, their blood shall surely be upon his head.

Now, if the Lord our God hath taken to himself a form in the Scriptures for the instruction of man, and hath instructed each of us in his station to take a form for the edification of one another, and wherever his counsels are revered and obeyed hath added the form of a minister, who, standing aloof from the several engagements and their temporal rewards, shall be his voice and messenger unto the people, satisfied with the singular dignity thereof, is it to be believed that he should have appointed no outward form to those chief and leading men who were to carry abroad over the earth these celestial instructions, and teach the nations to rule their character and set forth their works after the will and pleasure of their heavenly Father; that giving to all others good and particular instructions how they shall best and most happily fill their stations, he should leave the perilous apostles and missionaries of the whole institution no instructions as to the form which they should take? * * * This were to build a ship, with occupations for a numerous crew, and berths provided for many officers and men, but to make no provision how she should be launched into the deep; or, being launched into the deep, it were to fill her with plentiful supplies to some distressed colony, and man her with able hands, but make no provision of a skillful pilot and good instructions to carry her through the strong currents and stormy winds which set adverse to her course. The thing is not once to be imagined of him who is all-wise and all-provident, as well as all-good and bountiful. A priori, before any appeal to the fact, it may be concluded that the missionary doubtless will have his form, as well as the people whom it is his calling to inform after the will of God; and his form will be after the fashion of the minister or pastor, somewhat more devout and adventurous, as the discoverer and subduer of a country needeth to be more adventurous than he who keepeth it under regiment. The one fearless, the other watchful; the one expedite and ready for all encounters, the other burdened with many charges; the missionary a spiritual warrior, the pastor a spiritual shepherd.

What this form of the missionary is we have already gathered from Messiah's own constitution of the missionary estate; but it will be a great confirmation of the doctrine if we can show that, from the very nature of the Spirit's operation upon the heart of man, it must necessarily follow that the missionary should be such a self-denied and world-divested creature, and that he cannot come into a more full and sufficient condition without incommoding himself and hindering his work; that it is the necessary form of his office, from which every deviation must be lamented as a defect, and deliverance from it earnestly ensued as an attainment of stature and a step toward success. Also, that it hath been, from the first of God's revelations to the last of them, the form which the messengers he chose either assumed at the outset or came to in the end. Also, that the work hath not changed in these times, that we should ignorantly conceit a change in the workman or his tools to be expedient. Also, that this unworldly and extreme character of the missionary is in perfect keeping with the other parts of christian discipline, of which no part can be leveled down to worldly prudence and homely practice without loss to the church and deception of the world; and therefore that our true course in this and all other christian institutions is to work our character up from worldly levels into their pure elevations, assured that at every step we come into nearer neighborhood to the divine Spirit, and a larger sphere of blessing unto men. Such is the train of argument which this oration will take in order to justify this form of the missionary, by showing its alliance and affinity with the rest of the christian revelation.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

OUR dear father, Jehu L. Singrey, was born in Baltimore Co., Md., July 14th, 1807, and died at his home in Nodaway Co., Mo., August 8th, 1892, in the 86th year of his age.

He had been a member of the Baptist Church twenty-two years, and a subscriber for the SIGNS OF THE TIMES about twenty-five years. He has left an aged widow and six children to mourn the loss of a kind husband and father. We miss him very much, but feel that for him to die was gain.

HIS DAUGHTER.

DIED—April 26th, 1893, Alice May Cox, eldest daughter of Thaddeus and Matilda J. Cox, aged 10 years and 4 months.

Her disease was hectic fever and an abscess in her side. We were expecting it to break on the outside. The evening before she died at midnight her sufferings were terrible. She had suffered eleven long weeks, as she said, and also said that she wanted to die. She talked about dying for more than a week before the end came. She asked me to read a piece of poetry in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, on the subject of grace, about three weeks ago. We hope our loss is her gain. She leaves her father and mother, one sister and three brothers, to mourn after her. The remains were laid in the Riverside Cemetery, to await the resurrection morn.

THURSTON, Oklahoma Ter.

SISTER Virginia Ann Hearing departed this life March 31st, 1893, after being sick one week. She was born in Union Co., Ark., March 1st, 1840. Her maiden name was Gordon. Her father came to this state from Missouri. She was first married in 1868 to Mark Smith, who died in 1871. Of this union there was one child, who died in infancy. She was married to brother J. J. Hearing Dec. 7th, 1892. It was my happy privilege to know her about eleven years, and she proved to me to be a friend indeed. I have often remarked that she had as good a heart as any one. She was a lover of the doctrine of salvation by grace. She fell and crippled herself more than a year ago, and could not get about to wait on herself and others as she once could. This caused her to wish her time short. May her God ever be ours, and keep us unto the end. May her dear husband and step-children be ever blessed by the same God, and may he console them even to the end.

J. H. BLYTHE.

MONTICELLO, Ark., May 1, 1893.

DEAR BRETHREN:—By request of his sorrowful mother I notice the death of Chester A. Bogart, youngest son of Nathan and Sarah Bogart, who died in this place on the morning of March 20th, 1893, aged 10 years, 3 months and 13 days.

From his birth he had an affliction of the spine, which made him something of a delicate child; yet he grew to the average size, and was a bright, active little boy, loved by his teacher and playmates, who manifested much regard for him through his sickness: and at his burial services. His affliction, and being the youngest child, especially endeared him to his father and mother, whose constant companion he was. He seemed to fail gradually at the beginning of last winter, until some time in January he wholly gave way, and suffered what would be impossible to tell until the final release came. He always attended our meeting with his parents, and for one so young would look interested at times. Our pastor, Elder Lines, would always call to see him when in the place, and once near his last days began to sing in his presence, "Jesus, lover of my soul," when the little one began to weep; and when he had at last suffered all that was allotted him in this life, his look was happy and peaceful, like as of those who have entered the glory which shall be revealed in us when this light affliction has done its work. We know and are told that "Death is the king of terrors," yet after it is past, and we see them look so happy, we wonder how it can be so terrible, until it is explained to us by the apostle, who tells us of the victory given us through our Lord Jesus Christ. When the loved ones are taken away from us the world is so dark, even though we feel that it is gain to them; yet we must feel that it is loss to us. Only the Comforter can bring us consolation.

The funeral services for little Chester were conducted by Elder W. L. Lines, to the comfort and edification of all. There are left to the afflicted parents two other sons.

KATE SWARTOUT.

WOODSTOCK, Mich.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—It is with a sad and deeply wounded heart that I lift my pen to write to you. My only child, Mrs. Florence Lindsay, bade a last farewell to earth and earthly things on April 21st, 1893.

On the 16th the family came from Cincinnati to Ghent to spend the spring and summer with us. On that day she was stricken with pneumonia, and lingered until the following Friday. She said to weeping friends and relatives shortly before her departure that she was not afraid to go, and that the future was bright before her. Her only trust was in her dear Redeemer. She had been for more than twenty years a member of the Missionary Baptist Church, and she and I often conversed on that greatest of all themes, the religion of our glorious Lord, in whom rested all her hopes. She was in the forty-eighth year of her stay on earth, and had been united in marriage to Carter B. Lindsay thirty-one years when she left him, together with two daughters and her aged and afflicted parents, to mourn her departure. O what a sad, sad scene around her dying bed! The glories of earth vanished into thick darkness around us when the tie that bound her to us was severed in twain by death's withering touch. Then Marie, her youngest daughter, said, "I have no home. There is no home for me on earth without ma." But, dear child, there is a home where scenes of sorrow can never enter. In that home we fondly hope and believe our dear departed one is basking in the sunlight of an eternal day.

On Sunday morning a very large audience met at the Baptist church-house here, to which Elder Loving, of that church, preached an interesting and comforting discourse to the bereaved and weeping relatives and friends of the departed; after which her remains were followed by a very large procession to the Carrollton cemetery, where they were laid beside the last resting place of her dear departed sister, who had long since exchanged the vanities of earth for the joys of the redeemed. In silence there they rest until that great day when this mortal must put on immortality. Then death will be swallowed up in a glorious and never-ending victory through our glorious Lord. Dear readers, please remember these poor and afflicted ones in your supplications.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date. This date denotes the time at which your subscription expires; and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

CORRESPONDENCE.

[THE following correspondence will, we trust, be read with interest, as showing how the Lord is calling and leading his children out of Babylon, and bringing them to Zion, to find companionship among those who love the truth and walk in the order of his house. At the time of the correspondence brother Brink was a minister among the New School Baptists, having been ordained by them several years ago. On the fourth Sunday in February last he and his companion were baptized by Elder Benton Jenkins in the fellowship of the Old School Baptist Church in Middletown, N. Y.—ED.]

SHUSHAN, N. Y., Nov. 19, 1891.

ELDER BENTON JENKINS—DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST:—I have enjoyed reading the "Editorials" very much, as far as I have had time to go. I am under obligations to you for the SIGNS, several copies of which I have received of late, for which you will please accept my thanks. * * *

I would like to spend a few hours with you this afternoon. I have no doubt I would enjoy it as well, and receive as much profit, as I did the afternoon I spent with you. My faith in God and his word is firm and steadfast. My interpretation of some portions of his word may be wrong. If so, I am ready, willing and praying that the Spirit will guide me into all truth. I should be very glad to hear from you at your convenience, should you feel so disposed, and assure you that whatever you should say to me under the direction of the Holy Spirit would be received in his name, whose we are, and whom we serve. Sincerely yours,

F. S. BRINK.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y., Nov. 25, 1891.

ELDER F. S. BRINK—DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST:—Yours of the 19th inst. was gladly received. * * * I have thought much about you since the pleasant afternoon we spent together in my office. I hope I may be favored with another visit from you when you again visit this place. If I could spare the necessary time I assure you I should visit you at Shushan. * * * I have felt a fellowship for you in the Spirit that I have never felt for any other New School Baptist minister I have been acquainted with. I believe the Lord has called you to the work, and that he has a purpose in your being where you are; but I do not believe he will suffer you to remain there all your days. He is able to do his own work; and as long as you can feel comfortable in mind, and satisfied that the New School Baptists are the church, I would advise you to remain with them. If they are the church, the Old School Baptists are not. Many of our most gifted preachers have come out from the New School Baptists, after having preached for them for years. They have generally remained there until they were burned out. John the Baptist said, and it is yet Old Baptist doctrine, "A man can receive nothing, except it be given him from heaven." My dear brother, search the Scriptures with care, observe the pattern of the gospel church as given in the New Testament, and lay the measuring rod upon the various religious organizations of the world, and I believe you will find that the Old School Baptists are the only people who can stand the test. Happy I am to believe that your faith in God and his word is firm and steadfast. May the Lord give you understanding in all things.

I want to tell you why I do not address you as "Rev.," but as "Elder." I cannot conscientiously give to man a title that belongs to God alone, and which he himself claims as his name. "He sent redemption unto his people: he hath commanded his covenant forever: holy and reverend is his name."—Psalm cxi. 9. "The Elders which are among you I exhort, who am also an Elder," &c.—1 Peter v. 1. I believe you understand me, and will not be hurt with what I say. My time is so occupied that I cannot write very long letters, and perhaps it is best that it is so. I hope you will feel free to write your mind to me when you feel like doing so. I assure you I will appreciate your letters of fellowship and friendship. The Lord be with you.

Sincerely yours,

BENTON JENKINS.

SHUSHAN, N. Y., Dec. 4, 1891.

ELDER BENTON JENKINS—DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST:—Your very welcome letter of Nov. 25th was received "Thanksgiving Day," and I assure you of my pleasure in hearing from you. * * *

I too have thought many times of the afternoon we spent together with so much profit to myself. I do desire above all things else to know and do the will of the Lord; and while I am very pleasantly situated in my present position, and have no reason to complain for lack of fellowship and respect on the part of my brethren in the church and the ministry of our denomination, if I thought I could do the mind and will of God better somewhere else, I would willingly give up my present position and go wherever the Spirit might lead me. Of course you know, after our conversation that afternoon, that I have had thoughts regarding my leaving the New School and joining the Old School Baptist Church. I need hardly say to you that I would have no temporal object to gain in so doing, but only that I might serve my Lord and Savior Jesus Christ in a more acceptable way. I believe these thoughts were given me by direction of God, and I feel that I am in the hands of the Spirit, that I shall be shown my duty, and trust I shall be given grace to do it when it shall be shown to me; but I have not as yet made any decision regarding a change. I enjoy your letters very much, and they are a source of blessing to me; but I could much better talk to you than I can write. I wish it were possible for yourself and wife to come up in Washington County and stay a few days with us. * * *

You know I differ in a number of points from our denominational belief. Our church here at Shushan is quite different from any other of our denomination with which I have an acquaintance. The majority of our people (we have one hundred and three members) are inclined to the Old School doctrine regarding election, ministers, their call, education, &c.; but we have some quite prominent members who, having associated with Pedobaptists, have imbibed many of their notions, and hence as a church we are in harmony with the denomination as a whole in belief and practice. The great question uppermost in my mind is, Can I best serve God here, declaring the truth as I am shown it, or by associating with those whose distinctive doctrines are in greater if not perfect harmony with my own belief? I should like very much to confer with you regarding this and questions of minor importance. I heartily agree with you regarding the "Rev.," and had much rather be addressed as "Elder" or "Pastor," both of which terms I believe were given to the early ministers of the church.

Well, I must close, and hope, if it be the will of God, that I may hear from you soon, and see you in due time, when I can tell you, and you can tell me, of the things uppermost in our minds regarding the cause of our Lord far better than we can write. That God will guide me to the praise and glory of his name, is my prayer.

Yours in fellowship of Christ,
F. S. BRINK.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y., Jan. 28, 1892.

ELDER F. S. BRINK—MY DEAR BROTHER IN THE SPIRIT:—I rejoiced while I read your last letter, and little thought that six weeks would pass before I would write you again. I have so many correspondents that it is difficult for me to find time to attend to their letters promptly. * * * I have not had that amount of comfort and light in my mind for some time that I have enjoyed in times past, and so have not felt much like writing to spiritual friends. I get very low down at times, and wonder if the Lord ever has spoken by me; yet I must believe that what I have declared is the truth, though it be but in the letter. I seldom have had any doubt as to what is truth. My own experience has taught me that God is the absolute Sovereign over all beings and events; that it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps; that in my flesh there dwells no good thing. That I am by nature a vile sinner, I have not the least doubt. I feel that it is so, and the Bible confirms it. But I hope that Jesus actually bore my sins in his own body, and put them away by the sacrifice of himself. I hope I have experienced both justification and pardon. * * *

If you ever feel that you would like to write to some of our Elders who have had a similar experience with you among the Missionary Baptists, I would recommend you to Elder W. Lively, whose writings you doubtless have read in the SIGNS. How are you getting on with the book of "Editorials," and how do you like the SIGNS? Are you writing any sermons these days? Are you enjoying your mind? Tell me how it is with you, and I will promise to inflict a longer letter on you. I cannot write much at present, as I have to get out some copy for the paper. I hope you will bear with me in my infirmities, and believe me a true friend, and brother in Christ Jesus. I shall hope to hear from you ere long. The Lord be with you, and give you understanding in all things is my prayer.

BENTON JENKINS.

SHUSHAN, N. Y., Jan. 29, 1892.

ELDER BENTON JENKINS—MY DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST:—You will undoubtedly receive this letter with surprise at the quick result of your investment, which I received only this morning; but I have been thinking for some time of writing you again, and when your letter arrived I thought I would answer it immediately.

My mind is grasping new truths almost daily. God's word, opened by his Spirit to the eyes of my spiritual understanding, is becoming more and more "a lamp unto my feet and a light unto my path."—Psalm cxix. 105. I have greater liberty of thought and freedom of expressing my thoughts of God's truth than I ever had before. You remember I told you of my firm conviction that I ought not to preach written sermons any longer. Well, I returned home, and began preaching as the Lord gave me utterance, neglecting my former practice of spending a goodly portion of each week in the preparation of my two sermons on manuscript for delivery on the next Sunday, but spent all the time I could take from my pastoral and other duties reading and studying God's word; and thus far when the time has come for me to preach I have never been without a message which I could feel was God's, although sometimes it has come to me within two hours of preaching time. Some of my sermons which seem to have done the most good were messages that came to me only a little while before I entered the pulpit. Had any one told me a year ago that I should at this time be preaching without writing out my thoughts I should have doubted it; but I feel, to use the language of the psalmist, to say, "This is the Lord's doing; it is marvelous in our eyes."—Psalm cxviii. 23. When I first began to preach this way, wholly dependent on the immediate power of God, some of my Deacons urged me to return to my old way—write and deliver from manuscript; but as you would readily imagine if you knew my mind, I persevered in what I believed to be God's way, and within the last month our people have heartily indorsed my way. It was a step I should never have taken had not God called me to it, as no other minister in these parts preaches without manuscript, and my predecessors have nearly all read their sermons. Our people are beginning to realize, what I have known ever since I have been preaching these God-given messages, that "my speech and my preaching was not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and of power."—1 Cor. ii. 4. The last two Sundays I have had great liberty, and feel that God has been with me. For a number of years back it has been the custom for the three different denominations in this village to unite in a "union" service once a month, two churches dismissing to unite with the other. I have lately brought our people to see the uselessness of the habit, and recently the church voted to discontinue them. Of course it excites considerable talk, but I believe results will be good.

I have been hoping that yourself and wife would be able to pay us a visit soon, and still hope you may, although you do not give us much encouragement to-day. * * * I am anxiously desiring to see you for a long conference together. I have many questions that I would like to have light upon, and believe that you would aid me if you thought, as I know, that they were asked in sincerity, and honestly in the sight of God. One thing I will mention here. If I remember rightly, I understood you to tell me that ordinances administered by other than Old School ministers were not recognized as valid by your church. I have thought much about it, as, if the Lord should ever lead me to sever my relations with the church I am now connected with, and lead me to offer myself for membership in your church, I could not (as I now feel) be baptized again, having been immersed on profession of my faith in Christ as my Savior. It would be sacrilege on my part to submit to the administration of that blessed ordinance, which was truly a symbol of my death to sin and resurrection to walk in newness of life, whatever may have been the faith of the one whom I then thought was walking close to the teachings of God's truth, and to whom I submitted myself. I trust you will be able to give me the truth of God's word on this.

Now I must close. "Ye see how large a letter I have written unto you with mine own hand," and I trust I shall hear from you soon.

Sincerely yours for the truth's sake,

F. S. BRINK.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y., Feb. 4, 1892.

ELDER F. S. BRINK—MY DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST:—Your letter of the 29th ult. was read by me with pleasure. "I wish above all things that thou mayest prosper and be in health, even as thy soul prospereth," as said the Elder and apostle John to the well-beloved Gaius. He had no greater joy than to hear that his children were walking in truth. I do indeed rejoice that the Lord is favoring you with new and greater light in his word, and also with liberty of speech. What a wonderful difference there is between the ability which God gives his ministers to preach his truth, and that ability which is of men. "Not that we are sufficient of ourselves to think anything as of ourselves; but our sufficiency is of God, who hath made us able ministers of the New Testament." How strange must those words of that naturally bold, fearless, highly educated Paul sound to the ears of a natural man, "I was with you in weakness, and in fear, and in much trembling." No doubt it has appeared to many as "cant." I know I have experienced it hundreds of times; but I have sometimes been foolish enough to think that I would not feel as much so if I were possessed of a better natural education. I imagine it is an easy thing to read before a congregation a carefully prepared sermon; that there could not be much fear and trembling connected with it. I have never so much as attempted to write a sermon for delivery, and do not know that I could make a success of it. I do know I would be afraid to try. I have too much confidence in the promise of him who has, I trust, called me to speak in his name, to do such a thing. He said he would be with me, and added, "The testimony of the Lord is sure, making wise the simple." * * * I hope we may have a long and pleasant visit together while you are in Middletown.

I am glad you did not join that "union" in your town. Remember the command of God in Deuteronomy xxii. 10, "Thou shalt not plough with an ox and an ass together." "Thou shalt not sow thy vineyard with divers seeds; lest the fruit of thy seed which thou hast sown, and the fruit of thy vineyard, be defiled." * * * I cannot at present write much more, anxious as I am to reply to your question about baptism. I am reminded of the words of the wise man, "He that increaseth knowledge increaseth sorrow."—Eccl. i. 18. But spiritual knowledge is worth all the sorrow it costs us. For the present I will only say, Read "Editorials of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES," volume i., page 639, "What Baptism is Valid?" I will try to write more before long. I hope you will not at any time wait for me to write, but write me whenever you feel like it. My time is very uncertain for writing.

Your companion in tribulation and hope,

BENTON JENKINS.

SHUSHAN, N. Y., March 24, 1892.

ELDER BENTON JENKINS—MY DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST:—When I last saw you, Thursday a. m., March 3d, I little thought that so long a time would intervene before I should communicate to you my thoughts. * * * Since my return I have thought many times of writing to you, but have not been in that state of mind which I could wish to be in when writing. I feel, though I hardly know why, that my work in Shushan is drawing to a close, and anticipate that by November 1st, if not before, I will sever my relation with this people as their pastor. Where I shall go I do not know; but I feel that God is leading me, and my only desire is to do his will. I mention this fact to you because I know not but that God will lead you to show me an open door where I could better do his will than where I now am, though I do not lack for a church over which to minister, knowing of several to which I could go; but I feel that more is needing than a pulpit and salary. I want the manifest guidance of God in that which I do; hence I wait until he shall lead. I feel that the way in which I have been led thus far is just as I might have expected him to do. He who led me here when I came shows me first that my work here is ending before another door is opened; and so I wait and trust, knowing that he does all things well, and that one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day.

The "Editorials" have had frequent reading since my return, and I can assure you have been heartily enjoyed, as has the SIGNS also. * * * I sometimes read them to Mrs. Brink, and she frequently remarks the constant quotation of Scripture in proof of the doctrine taught; and that style of teaching just suits us, for we feel, with David, that "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path." We were reading with pleasure and profit last evening the editorials of December 9th and 16th, 1891, on "Foreknowledge and Predestination," every word of which I believe is God's truth. In infinite wisdom God is unfolding his truth to me, and my mind is grasping new truth, or rather phases of truth new to me. I believe that God had a purpose in creating the world and all things therein. I believe that that purpose will surely be accomplished, that his will shall come to pass; and, as one who has been saved by grace alone, I feel to love and serve him as best I may while life shall last. I do not feel, as I have heard ministers say they did, "a weight of souls." I could not save myself, and I do not feel that I could save others. Jesus only saves me from my sins. I am not preaching to save souls. Except a man be called of God, and his mind is opened to the reception of the truth by the Spirit, I do not believe he can discern it. * *

My object, as far as I have an object in preaching, is to rightly divide the word of truth as it shall be shown to me by the Spirit, and then I believe it will accomplish that whereunto he sends it, without "anxiety" on my part, or "revival meetings" on the part of the church. * *

But I must close, hoping that I may hear from you soon.

Sincerely yours,

F. S. BRINK.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y., March 30, 1892.

ELDER F. S. BRINK—MY DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST:—I was truly glad to receive another letter from you last Friday. * * * I am glad that you find so much enjoyment in reading the editorials, and that your dear companion also is a lover of the gospel truth. You are indeed highly favored of the Lord.

Yes, I do believe the Lord is leading you, and I hope and trust he will not leave you until he brings you to find rest in the fellowship and close companionship of the visibly organized church, "the pillar and ground of the truth." While we can never impart spiritual life to one another, nor have we dominion over one another's faith, as the apostle said, yet we may be helpers of each other's joy.—2 Cor. i. 24. He said, "We write none other things unto you than what ye read or acknowledge; and I trust ye shall acknowledge even unto the end."—Verse 13. The dear Redeemer used clay in opening the eyes of one who was blind. He does the same yet. He also makes clouds to drop the rain of his doctrine upon his people, and his Spirit, like a mighty wind, wafts his "bright clouds," and causes them to drop their treasure wheresoever he has a tree or a plant that he designs to water and make fruitful. He also waters his garden with his dew, his speech, which comes not from a cloud, but directly from him. I wish I might be one of the Lord's bright clouds to you. I would delight to water you with his doctrine, which drops as the rain. I wish I could be used by the Lord as clay in his hand to open your eyes fully to see the order of his house as I am sure he has shown it to me. I will forward you an editorial by the late Elder Beebe on the order of the house of God, which is better than anything I can write. I hope the Lord may bless it to you. Until the Lord gives you to see that the New School Baptists are not his organized church on earth, I feel that I cannot "show you an open door," much as we both desire it. As sure as you are an honest, truthful man (and I have not a shadow of doubt of it), you are not a New School Baptist; nor do I believe you can express to them the sentiments you have expressed in your last letter to me, and retain their confidence and fellowship. Yes indeed, "more is needed than a pulpit and a salary." I have faith in the faithfulness of the dear Redeemer, who said to his followers, "But seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these [temporal] things shall be added unto you." There are ten thousand things worse than being as poor as the Master was while on the earth preaching his own gospel. If the Lord shows you that you are in Babylon you will be willing to leave it and, if necessary, stand still for a time, till he bids you advance. You will do just that amount of work that he designs you shall, and that will be for his glory. I would feel sorry to have you leave the New School Baptists until you could feel toward the Old Baptists as Ruth expressed her mind, "Entreat me not to leave thee," &c. I love you as one of the Redeemer's brethren, and my prayers ascend for you. I wish I could hear you while preaching that truth which we love, I trust, better than our natural life. * * *

I have had call after call while writing this, and will have to stop writing for the present. I hope I have said nothing to hurt you. Pray for me. I hope you will write often to me, and feel that I am a friend and brother, although you receive very little rain from me. I would do better if I could.

Sincerely yours,
BENTON JENKINS.

SHUSHAN, N. Y., April 21, 1892.

MY DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST:—I cannot tell you how much good your last letter did me, only that it was of great blessing and encouragement. Two or three different times I have taken up my pen to answer it, and after writing more or less have each time carefully forwarded to the waste-basket, as my mind was not in condition to express the truth to you that I desired. And so three weeks have gone by, and now I again take up my pen to spend a good part of the afternoon talking to (I wish I could say with) you. * * *

After I read the SIGNS through aloud to Mrs. Brink, I send them out among our people, here and there, where I think they will be appreciated, except in a few instances like that of Elder Ira Turner's letter and the answer on "Foreknowledge and Predestination," which I have preserved for our own use hereafter. Perhaps you remember it. It was published Dec. 9th and 16th, 1891, and expresses my faith as given me of God far better than I could express it myself. I doubt if the truths therein enunciated are held by any considerable portion of the members of the denomination to which I belong; but I believe them, every one. My faith is based upon that sure and unshakable foundation, and my preaching is in accord with those truths. I must tell you that some time since I heard that certain of our members were complaining that Mr. Brink was not adding any members to the church. I waited until God gave the message, and commanded me to deliver it, based upon the last clause of Acts ii. 47. A close study of the context, as well as of the text itself, served to show the motive of the machine-made and the machine-working church members, and ever since that time things have been quiet on that score; but later the same class of our members were prominent in asserting that "Mr. Brink is trying to break up the church." So I found out that all these objections started with one or the other of three members of the church, who had been prominent heretofore in man-made revivals, and of course did not feel kind toward me, since I had broken up their business of traffic in souls. I thought that the time had come for me to go elsewhere; but we have been advised otherwise by the most spiritual minded members of the church; and as I have never, nor shall I in the future, hesitate to preach the truth as God shows it to me, and since these peculiar truths had been received by some, I believe, as seed sown in good ground, I waited before resigning, to see what God would have me to do. But at the close of service Sunday morning, March 27th, I felt called to take the step. * * *

I have carefully read the editorial you recently sent me on "Christian Baptism," &c. Still I cannot see things as you do with regard to this doctrine. I know that you will not be offended with me for freely speaking my mind; but that attitude of the Old School Baptists toward this doctrine alone seems to me to be their weakness. I cannot understand why the administration of the ordinance by a minister should be counted valid while he is in fellowship with the church, and not valid if administered by the same man a few days or weeks (as the case might be) later, when he was not in fellowship with the church. I look upon baptism as the act of the person baptized, rather than the act of the administrator. I suppose in this case I am not sound, but I am sincere. * * *

I believe that the person born again, who in obedience to our Lord's command is "buried with him in baptism," is baptized with a valid baptism, however heterodox the minister may become thereafter, or even be at the time, unknown to the person baptized, who of course would (if sincere) cast in his lot with the church which he believed lived closest to the teachings and example of our Lord and his disciples and apostles. An illustration in point of this is my own case. When the Lord in mercy revealed himself to me, and I had the witness of the Spirit that I was a child of God, when old things passed away and all things became new with me, I submitted myself to be baptized (immersed on profession of my faith) by one whom I thought to be a true servant of the Lord Jesus, and whom I believed to represent the true church on earth. I find after years of experience and enlarged acquaintance that those distinguishing traits which I supposed marked them as a "peculiar people" have been effaced. But I find a people who do hold to the truths revealed to me at my conversion, still I do not feel that my profession of faith and baptism are invalid because of that. To the contrary, I believe it to be the only position which I could take, holding the faith that God gave me at the first, when I found that the existing state of affairs is different from that I anticipated, to find those who hold to the faith once delivered to the saints. * * *

I sincerely hope that you will not be offended at my dullness of perception in comprehending those truths which seem so clear to you. Perhaps the Lord may use you, my brother, to reveal these things to me, if he will that I come to a knowledge of them.

But I must close. May our prayers be united at the throne of grace, and may the God of peace sanctify us wholly. I shall welcome your answer at your convenience.

Yours truly,
F. S. BRINK.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y., May 2, 1892.

DEAR BROTHER IN THE LORD:—I assure you I was much pleased to receive your letter of the 21st ult. I have felt for some time that the crisis would soon come, of which you speak in your letter, and that some at least would be for casting you out of their synagogue, crying, as the carnal Jews did against the Savior, "Away with him." It sounds very much like a repetition of the history recorded in Acts xix. 23-28. I rejoice that the Lord sustains and strengthens you to declare the truth of God as revealed unto you, whether men will hear or forbear. We may feel like remaining in Babylon to heal her, but we shall never succeed.—Read Jer. l. 12-15.

No, you need never fear my being offended with you because you cannot see a point of doctrine or order as I do. How unreasonable that would be, while I believe that spiritual things are purely a matter of revelation from God. I believe you have honestly felt that the attitude of the Old School Baptists toward New School baptism is a weakness of theirs; but I believe the Lord will yet open your understanding to it, and then you will be able to see that it is decent and in order, and not a weakness. According to what you have expressed, if the candidate is only sincere, his baptism by a Mormon or Roman Catholic is equally as good and valid as that administered by one sent by God to baptize, and sustained by the fellowship of a gospel church. Is it possible? If your baptism is good and valid baptism, why is not your ordination to the ministry equally so? Do you not understand that no one is authorized to administer the ordinances of the church but those who are called of God and set apart by the church? Why, even an apostle, the apostle Paul, could not, would not go forth to preach and baptize, though called of God to be an apostle, until set apart to the work by the church. God has thus established the order of his house. The Holy Ghost said to the church, "Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them," &c.—Acts xiii. 1-5. I cannot understand why we should regard that as valid gospel baptism which is administered by men-made ministers, standing in connection with antichristian bodies, any more than that which might be administered by any rowdy on the street. Is not one as much authorized by God as the other? If our "feelings" and opinions are to be the test in this matter, we might as well discard the Scriptures entirely. Baptism, the apostle

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—Please give your views on Matt. xviii. 9, if not asking too much of you. May the Lord direct you in the future as he has in the past, is my prayer. I remain your unworthy brother,

REPLY.

"And if thine eye offend thee, pluck it out, and cast it from thee; it is better for thee to enter into life with one eye, rather than having two eyes to be cast into hell fire."—Matt. xviii. 9.

Although the subject presented by our brother has often been considered in our columns, both by correspondents and editorially, it is of such vital importance to the peace and comfort of the saints that it cannot be too frequently urged upon their attention. If the chosen people of God were no longer subject to the vanity of carnality after they have received the knowledge of divine grace in their translation from death into the light and life of the kingdom of Christ, there would be no occasion for the inspired directions written in the Scriptures for their guidance when assailed by the temptations appointed for the trial of their faith. It is impossible that the truth that salvation is exclusively by grace, should be comprehended by reason as it is revealed to the saints through that faith which is the gift of God. It seems to the natural mind of the saints, as to every one who looks only at the things which are seen, that subjects of divine grace must be free from the power of sin and temptation; therefore, when they find the law of sin still dwelling in their members they are ready to conclude that their hope is certainly a delusion. But it is written for the assurance of such conscious sinners, that "This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptance, that Christ Jesus came into the world to SAVE SINNERS, OF WHOM I AM CHIEF."—1 Tim. i. 15. The saints are not so often tempted to doubt the first statement of this faithful saying as a general declaration of the finished work of the Redeemer; they can regard the salvation of sinners by Jesus Christ as a settled truth; yet they find in their own sinfulness occasion for calling in question their interest in that salvation. The strength and sweetness of this apostolic testimony would be entirely destroyed if it had been written "sinners of whom I was chief." Reason can grasp the fact that Saul of Tarsus was a vile sinner when he persecuted Jesus in his saints; but it is only by the light of revelation that the believer can understand how he was still the chief of sinners when he had spent a lifetime in laboring and suffering for the comfort of those whom he had before persecuted. When the Spirit takes this truth and shows it to the troubled saint, he receives assurance that he is led in the same way of conflict in which Paul walked. Often it is a wonder to them who are troubled under the sense of their own pollution, when they find that Paul claims to be chief of sinners; for they are confident that they must be entitled to that distinction. And while Paul justly confessed his own sinfulness, the very same confession is also true of every contrite heart. Each one is chief of sinners in his own sense of vileness. It is of such characters as know their own guilt, that the church of Christ is composed. When this fact is considered it is not strange that the infinite wisdom of their Lord provided such definite instruction for the conduct of his disciples while they remain here in the flesh. Only those who have to contend with the frailty of sinful nature could have need of the admonitions, exhortations and instructions left in the Scriptures for the perfecting of the saints. In reading the inspired word it is essentially necessary that it should be constantly observed that the whole record is given for the benefit of those who have the love of holiness, and yet feel themselves subject to the law of sin which is in their members. There could be no need of any of the inspired rules for the direction of the saints if they were already delivered from their evil heart of unbelief. It is for their learning that every word of the Scripture is given; that they may be able to discern between the dictates of their fleshly mind and the leading of the Spirit of truth. In the immediate connection of the verse cited by our brother, the Lord was teaching his disciples the great distinction between the selfish aspirations expressed in the inquiry to which he was replying, and the love of God, which is the very element of his gospel kingdom. While carnal covetousness was manifested in their desire to know who should be greatest in the kingdom of heaven, by the illustration of a little child he showed them their utter helplessness and dependence, as a reproof to that pride by which their inquiry was suggested. There is no possibility that the disciples of Jesus should ever enter into the kingdom of heaven while they are controlled by this selfish principle. Since it belongs to the fleshly mind it can only produce the works of the flesh in those who are governed by it. Painfully is this truth illustrated in the experience of many of the churches in the present day. Where the saints once manifested the love, joy and peace, which attested the indwelling of the Spirit, there are now developed those abominations which are declared to be the works of the flesh. Idolatry is engaged in worshiping "our fathers," or teaching for doctrines the commandments of men. Witchcraft has blinded the eyes of the saints so that they cannot see the plain word of revealed truth. Hatred has usurped the hearts where fraternal love prevailed; and variance, strife, seditions, heresies, envyings, with all their awful train of evil works, have robbed the churches of that blessedness which constituted for the saints "the kingdom of heaven." They can never enter that blissful kingdom until they are converted from this carnality, "and become as little children." The correct understanding of the verse cited by our brother necessarily involves the preceding context, which clearly shows the proper application of the text.

"And if thine eye offend thee, pluck it out and cast it from thee." In this strong illustration is shown the importance of the principle to which Jesus was directing the attention of his disciples. Taking the natural body as the figure, no member could be more serviceable than the eye. There might be occasion to doubt the propriety of sacrificing so valuable an organ even though its condition should threaten the health of the whole body; but the instruction given in this connection shows that when it is an offense, even the eye must be plucked out and cast from the body. Certainly the circumstance could never literally occur that the members of the natural body should offend the person to whom they belong. The hand does what is directed by the will of the person to whom it is subject. The different members of the body have no separate volition. They act only as they are moved by the will which controls the whole body. But this clear figure is used to show the paramount importance of the law of Christ as superior to the most cherished powers of the natural mind, or the strongest natural affections. The same essential instruction is shown in the case of the disciple who asked permission first to go and bury his father.—Matt. viii. 21. No natural obligation could seem more binding than this filial duty; but the commandment of the Lord is not allowed to give place to this most urgent demand of nature. The first step in the path of the disciple of Jesus cannot be taken in any way but by denying self. Thus not only the eye, but every natural inclination and desire must be plucked out and cast from the follower of our Lord.

Now, notice the characters to whom this instruction is given. It is not addressed to the unbelieving multitude, as if it were designed to show them how they might become subjects of the salvation which is in Christ Jesus. It was spoken to none but those whom he recognized as his own chosen disciples. This shows that the instruction is applicable only to them. The inquiry to which it is recorded as the answer, exposed the selfishness of their hearts. As his followers they were required to crucify the carnal affections and lusts. This could be done only by plucking out from their minds every selfish emotion, and presenting their bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ. In this self-denying way they should cast from them the evil principle of carnality, and walk in the Spirit. So Paul says, "Walk in the Spirit, and ye shall not fulfill the lust of the flesh." Every act of conformity to the flesh is offensive to the follower of Jesus. Therefore there can be no indulgence of natural feelings or desires without injury (or offense) to the spiritual enjoyment of the saint. This is illustrated in the example of Paul when he says, "I therefore so run, not as uncertainly; so fight I, not as one that beateth the air; but I keep under my body, and bring it into subjection; lest that by any means, when I have preached to others, I myself should be a cast-away."—1 Cor. ix. 26, 27.

"It is better for thee to enter into life with one eye, rather than having two eyes to be cast into hell fire." This expression cannot refer to the entrance into eternal life, since it was spoken to none but those disciples unto whom Jesus had already given eternal life. Neither can the hell fire signify the eternal destruction of those to whom Jesus had given the assurance that they should never perish. Divine Wisdom says, "My son, let not them [the ways of wisdom] depart from thine eyes; keep sound wisdom and discretion; so shall they be life unto thy soul, and grace to thy neck."—Prov. iii. 21, 22. "For to be carnally minded is death; but to be spiritually minded is life and peace." Into this life and peace the saints enter when they walk in humble obedience to the commandments of their Lord as they are led by his Spirit. It is to the saints that it is written, "Therefore, brethren, we are debtors, not to the flesh, to live after the flesh. For if ye live after the flesh, ye shall die; but if ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live."—Rom. viii. 6, 12, 13. Jesus expressly limits this injunction to his own disciples. He does not state this as a rule which may be applied to the world indiscriminately. "It is better for thee." This cannot be distorted to signify an appeal to those who have not the love of God, as if they were urged to choose to obey the voice of Jesus, and thereby secure an entrance into eternal life. For the saints who hunger and thirst after righteousness, it is better that they enter into that enjoyment of life and peace, feeling to be poor and needy, confessing their blindness and unworthiness, and in such destitution as to need daily to ask for bread, than seeing clearly the deepest mysteries of doctrine to be cast into that confusion which is well called hell fire. "Behold, how great a matter a little fire kindleth! And the tongue is a fire, a world of iniquity; so is the tongue among the members, that it defileth the whole body, and setteth on fire the course of nature; and it is set on fire of hell."—James iii. 5, 6. It is not needful to discuss the impossibility of the conduct of the saints defeating the eternal will of God by which the final salvation of all his chosen people is secured. Neither their own sins nor any other enemy can forbid their being with their Redeemer where he is exalted in the glory which was his before the world was. This is unalterably settled by his own glorious victory over death and hell. It is in their subjection to the vanity of the body of this death that they feel the pains of hell when they reap the corruption whose seed they have sown in living after the flesh. Not many have been favored to walk in the pilgrimage of the saints but that they have soon learned the need of this important instruction. To selfish pride it is very desirable to have the discernment which is signified by the possession of two eyes. This aspiration springs from the same carnal pride which prompted the disciples to ask who should be greatest in the kingdom of heaven. Reason can never learn that it is of infinitely higher importance to be content with the humblest ability than to be puffed up in the consciousness that our gifts are unsurpassed by any of those bestowed upon our brethren. In meek humility the saint who is led by the Spirit of Christ enters into the heavenly enjoyment of life and peace, though fully realizing that his comprehension of divine truth is limited. Not only is this a more blessed condition than the exaltation which could assume superiority over others; but it is in this lowly place that the sheep feed securely, sheltered from the assaults of pride. There is abundant room in the church for unnumbered millions of simple saints who feel to be little children; but when one of them has grown so large as to know more than his brethren, and having two eyes to see what is not revealed to others, he is sorely crowded, and unless restrained by divine grace he will be unable to remain in the organized church. Hell fire is the only name for that dreadful torment into which the subject of grace is cast when he is thus puffed up with self-confident vanity. In that condition he can have no fellowship with the poor and needy children of the kingdom of grace. Certainly he is not in fellowship with the apostles, of whom Paul says, "For we are the circumcision which worship God in the spirit, and rejoice in Christ Jesus, and have no confidence in the flesh."—Phil. iii. 3. There is no claim to the perfect vision of "having two eyes" in Paul's confession, "For now we see through a glass, darkly; but then face to face; now I know in part; but then shall I know even as also I am known."—1 Cor. xiii. 12.

In its application to the discipline of the organized church, it is unnecessary to say more in reference to the text, than that the same principle which demands the sacrifice of confidence in self in the individual experience of the saints, must also require the submission of every saint to the direction of the law of Christ. There can be no other way of peace for the church but in obedience to the perfect law of liberty. There can be no prevalence of that confusion which is called hell fire in the church while every member is walking in that true humility which claims no more than the apostle claimed, to know in part, that is, to have but the limited understanding which is represented by "having one eye."

May the Lord keep his weak and ignorant little ones from the pride and self-confidence which trusts in self, and despises others! Only as he giveth grace to subdue the pride of nature can any of the pilgrim strangers repose their whole trust in the Lord. If there had been no possibility of the saints becoming offenders in the sense of the text, there would have been no occasion that the instruction should have been given them. But as they love the great peace of those who keep the commandments of their Lord, let every believer pray to be kept from the vain glory of trusting in himself as having attained to see with two eyes. While contending earnestly for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints, may all the followers of Jesus be delivered from that vanity which leads them to offend against the law of love and peace.

TO OUR DELINQUENTS.

WE are again compelled to call the attention of a number of our subscribers to their delinquency. We are publishing the SIGNS OF THE TIMES this year on more liberal terms than ever before, and really below what we can well afford. With many the neglect to send on their remittances is more from thoughtlessness than from intentional neglect. The inconvenience to us is just the same whether the payments are held back from inability to pay, or from indifference, or through carelessness. Will not our brethren and friends, every one when they read this notice, look at the date next to their name, and if they find it in arrears, please make a special effort to send on their subscription? We are furnishing more reading matter for the price of the paper than any publication of our order and at double the expense, and need the money to meet our liabilities falling due.

EXTRACTS

FROM FOUR ORATIONS BY EDWARD IRVING, BEFORE THE LONDON (ENGLAND) MISSIONARY SOCIETY, MAY, 1824.

ORATION THREE.

THE PERPETUITY OF THIS MISSIONARY CONSTITUTION PROVED.

It is the nature of man, fallen from truth, and alienated from the life of godliness, diligently to seek how he may bestow upon the creature, and of all creatures upon himself, that worship and glory which is due to God alone. His talents, though they be created and matured by God; his knowledge, though all that he knows be of God's providence and handiwork; his possessions, though they consist in a portion of God's goods freely bestowed; his bodily strength, his form, his very name, that most airy and accidental of all things, it is man's nature to magnify into a God, and to worship as his chief good. And some will fall prostrate before science, and others before literature, and others before brute and senseless nature, and others before idols of wood and brass; and in short there is nothing inherent in the nature of man or existent in the outward world whereof the fallen soul hath not at some time and place made an idol, and with which in all times and places it hath not a tendency, less or more, to divide the reverence which is due to God alone. So that the greatest impediment to the progress of the gospel in the soul ariseth out of the things which are seen and temporal, the world and the things of the world, which come to naught. These occupy our senses, and thence steal into our affections, when the imagination formeth them into more lively and wily combinations; and the intellect, busying itself with their relation, at every step of the investigation discovereth them to be so wisely adapted to the wants of man, so stimulative of a thousand pleasures of the sense, and so profitable to the ambition and enjoyment of the present world, that they gain and gain over our time, our interests, our desires, our fears, until at length there is left in the soul no room for the gospel to occupy. All is prepossessed and preoccupied when the gospel comes into action, which hath therefore to begin its course by checking, cutting off, prohibiting, rebuking, and the like distasteful operations, known generally by the name of repentance; and after having brought these former propensities to a stand, it seeks to drive them all backward, to turn the tide of bitter waters upon their evil fountain, and to recover the fields of the soul which they had drowned and wasted from their rightful possessor. In proportion as this work of emptying goeth on, the work of the Spirit proceedeth, the dew of God's blessing descendeth as upon the thirsty earth, and the fruits of the Spirit fill the former waste places. The evil invaders are cast out, the turbulent possessors are quieted, the lamb lieth down with the leopard, the young lion and the fatling together, and the desert of our spiritual state rejoiceth and blossometh like the rose.

If so it be found in the experience of all christians that the things of the Spirit prosper in proportion as the things of the flesh decay, and that confidence in the right arm of Jehovah increaseth as our confidence decreaseth in princes and the sons of men, in the corn, the wine and the oil, and that allegiance unto Christ doth undo and dissolve the allegiance of the human soul to Mammon and Belial and Satan, and even to the dearest and nearest friendships and relations of life, it is most manifest that the disseminators of such a doctrine over the earth must be denuded of all the things in which men place their trust, and to which they render their homage, in order that they may be wholly under the influence of that spirit, worship and allegiance under which they seek to reduce the rest of men; and these deprivations exacted by our Lord of those who go forth as the propagators of his spiritual kingdom are to be considered not only in the sense of tests or trials imposed by him, or of mortifications imposed by themselves, or of examples offered to the people to whom they go (though in all these respects they may and do serve good ends), but as the necessary and indispensable condition to their being wholly under that very Spirit to which they would persuade to be subject, and as sure evidence that they continue under it so long as they love and submit to such a discipline. Christ wished none but spiritual men to take this office upon themselves; and of the spiritual men in the church he wished those who were strongest in faith, and those alone, to venture forth. Therefore he set the mark to the most unearthly standard, and appointed that there should be no purse, that is, no pecuniary emolument; no scrip, that is, no possessions; no change of raiment, that is, no pleasures or accommodations of the body; no staff, that is, no ease or pleasure of travel; no salutations by the way, that is, no ends of natural or social affection. Which he ordained, not because he was a hard master, * * * but because if any one would undertake it he would not permit him to be ignorant of the cost, but instructed him in the measure of faith which was indispensable to the work, saying to them, Unless the things of the Spirit have prospered thus and thus far with thee, unless the kingdom of heaven hath prevailed within thy soul, and subjected all these regions of natural gladness, thou art not prepared for the work; but if otherwise, then go thy ways, and, lo, I am with thee unto the end of the world.

If this argument, drawn of necessity from the nature of the christian spirit, be well founded, then it will follow that amongst those who are full of the Spirit, he who hath a purse is as he who hath none, and he who hath a scrip as he who hath none, and he who hath a field as he who hath none, and he who hath a kingdom as he who hath none; and it confirmeth us the more in the soundness of the argument, that at the great outpouring of the Spirit on the day of Pentecost this condition of things was realized among the disciples, who had all things in common, and sold their possessions, and poured out their price at the apostles' feet. It will likewise follow that a missionary, in proportion as he is careful of these things, shows himself deficient in the supply of that Spirit whose chosen vessel he preferreth himself to be; and that no age of the church which setteth store by these outward visible means is greatly enlightened of the Spirit, but hath need to seek for a more plentiful diffusion of his ghostly influences. It will follow, moreover, from this fruitful proposition that though a missionary in the first instance should go forth stocked like a trader, fitted out like a discoverer, accredited like a royal envoy, and three times armed with prudence like a hostile spy, when he cometh into close communication with the Spirit of God and the spirit of the people, in order to be the mediator between these natural enemies, he will, if his mind be open to light, be taught the utter helplessness of all these helps, the utter uselessness of all these useful things, to that work in which he hath embarked; that though they may commend him to the proud and worldly part of the people, and gain for him a place in their regard as a man of some consequence and reputation, they are so far from bringing him into contact with their spiritual feelings, which alone he careth or ought to care for, that they set him more remote from thence, and induce a mistake with respect to his unearthly purpose which it will require him much time and labor to correct; and if he be a true man, and a man of spiritual discernment, I think that a transmutation will speedily come upon the outward estate of this well-furnished missionary. He will by degrees divest himself of all those things which withdraw the people from the word of his mouth, or hinder them from apprehending the simplicity and sincerity of his spiritual purpose. He will adopt their dresses, follow their manner of life, eat with them, drink with them, and seek access to them at all their unguarded moments, that he may be always at hand to drop his words seasonably into their ear, and manifest constantly before their eye the influence of his faith over all the conditions of man, instead of merely addressing them now and then with set speeches and abstract discourses against the very time, form and place of which their minds are already in arms. He will not scruple to take favors at their hand, if that will bring him into closer confidence of their souls, which it doth far more frequently than otherwise; and if not, he will work to them for his meat, teach them the arts of his country, do anything that may bring him and keep him in close and frequent contact with their personal affections. He will learn to be of no country, that he may remove political hindrances out of the way; and he will learn to carry no temptations about with him. His wealth, which maketh him to be envied, and perhaps endangereth his life, he will cast into the first brook which he crosseth, or diligently hide it from the people. (But how shall he hide it from his own heart?) His equipage of travel he will put aside, and, like Bernard Gilpin, the Reformer of the North, he will give his horse to the first poor family which hath need of one to earn their bread; and, like that most noble of parish priests, however full-handed the missionary may set out on his expedition, he will, if his mind be open to light and his heart to love, return from his excursion not only empty of all things, but beholden to the worthy men who had compassion upon him by the way. So that, according to the argument, the spirit which prevaileth within the missionary's breast will never fail to bring him into that very condition of nakedness and dependence (I should rather say fullness of faith and spiritual plenty) which the great Counsellor and Founder of the missionary cause, in the plenitude of his wisdom, ordained as the proper condition, not to end with, but to set out with, in this faithful and spiritual adventure.

It is not that we attach any importance to the outward costume of a missionary, which also may be assumed. Under the coarse frock of a friar lay oft more pride and cunning than beneath a cardinal's hat; and the triple crown hath not covered more ambitious purposes than lay within the cowl of the Jesuit who exposed himself to every blast of heaven. The pride of human nature may make noble-minded men to dwell, like Diogenes, in a tub; the disappointments of the world may drive them, like Timon, to the woods; and racking remorse may send them unprovided pilgrims over untrodden deserts, or attach them to the coarse fare and bare walls of a hermit's cell. The forms of poverty and meanness are endless which the spirit of man may assume for its own particular gratification, without any regard to the well-being of others, or the propagation of the kingdom of Christ; and therefore no form is to be taken as a sure test of the true spirit of a christian missionary. Nevertheless, as hath been proved above, there is a form which beyond others is expressive of a heavenly mind and a disinterested mission, that which Messiah chose for himself when coming into the world. * * * It is not indispensable to the true missionary spirit, but the true missionary spirit doth love it, and cannot without self-denial be brought to lay it aside. It is not unequivocal to those without, but it is least liable to be misinterpreted. It is not a capital crime against the laws of the spiritual kingdom to lay it aside for an occasion, as it is not a capital crime against our naval laws for a captain to lose his ship; but as in the latter case, so in the former, he ought to be put upon his trial, and make appear before the statutes of our king that it was for the best interests of the kingdom that it was set aside.

Such is the argument drawn from the necessary laws of spiritual influence, and such are the consequences of the argument; but what saith the fact? The fact saith this, that by men, so conditioned as these instructions set forth, God hath always wrought enlargement or salvation to his spiritual kingdom. Joseph, by whom he saved the promised seed, and got for them the land of Goshen, was first stripped of everything, father and mother and brotherly love, made a bondsman, beleaguered with temptation, falsely accused and imprisoned, friendless and helpless in the dungeons of a foreign land; and when, the people being lost to the knowledge of God and the nobility of their calling, the orphan shepherd Moses was chosen for the great work of setting them free, and receiving the law from the mouth of the Lord, he argued three times his unfitness for the work: first, from Pharaoh's strong and high condition; secondly, from the unbelief of the people; and lastly, from his own meanness and want of eloquence. But the Lord gave him no appointments under heaven save his shepherd's rod. Elijah, who was called on at another similar pass, when the people had with one accord fallen away under idolatry and tyranny, had not a house nor a morsel of meat nor a friend within the bounds of Israel to give him shelter; yet the Lord by his hand slew all the priests of Baal, and overthrew their altars in the high places. Elisha, on whom his mantle fell, and with it his perilous work, that same day he received his commission to go forth to the Lord's work, sacrificed his oxen, and made the fire for the sacrifice out of the wood of his agricultural implements, cutting asunder all connection with the world, and destroying that which won his bread, devoting the instruments of his wealth in thanksgiving to the Lord, who had called him to the work of a higher husbandry. David, from feeding the sheep, by neither chariot nor horsemen, won favor in the sight of Israel, and was advanced to the throne. Esther, an orphan woman, saved the people of the Lord from utter ruin. All the prophets were without reputation or worldly condition, otherwise they had been unfit for their perilous work. Amos from among the herdsmen of Tekoah, Ezekiel from the captives by the rivers of Chebar, Daniel and the three children from menial offices in the palace of an eastern king; and whosoever else under the former dispensation was separated as a chosen vessel for containing the revelation and doing the work of the Lord, was either ill-conditioned by birth, evil-starred of fortune, or stripped naked by the world, made a Nazarite of, separated by the Lord unto himself, before he could be entered to the work of doing great and lasting service to the interests of righteousness. John the Baptist, the forerunner of Christ, * * * was made a Nazarite from his mother's womb; that is, he was separated from strong drink, which representeth all artificial stimulants of the spirit and luxuries of the body; and a razor was not permitted to come upon his head, which meaneth that he was separated from all outward show and ornament. Thus being hindered from regarding his own gratification and the world's eye, he was come into a condition for receiving the inspirations of the Spirit of God, which cannot enter into communion with sense and selfishness, those two great idols of men. Christ himself, though he was in the form of God, and thought it not robbery to be equal with God, made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of man; and being found in fashion as a man, humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. Wherefore God also hath highly exalted him, and given him a name above every name, that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven and things in earth, and things under the earth, and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father. * * * Finally, what the twelve and seventy were, and how they were fitted out for their work, we have spent the former head of this discourse in explaining; and what the people were who first received their message, and in their several neighborhoods propagated the kingdom, Paul hath told in the Corinthians: "Brethren, ye see your calling, how that not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are called: but God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty; and base things of the world, and things which are despised, hath God chosen, yea, and things which are not, to bring to naught things that are."

tells us, as well as the dear Redeemer, is to be administered in the name (that is, by the authority) of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost. Has any one such authority outside of the organized church of Christ? No one is divinely authorized to preach the gospel, or to administer the ordinances, but those who are at the time of preaching or administering sustained by the fellowship of the apostolic church. Was the man who baptized you sustained by the fellowship of the apostles, or the apostolic church? Was he continuing steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship? If he really sustained that character, and was held in that fellowship when he baptized you, and you were really baptized in the fellowship of the gospel church, I would charge you not to leave the fellowship of that church in whose fellowship you received that sacred ordinance. As the Scriptures clearly teach, to give validity to the ordinance the church must be the church of Christ, in apostolic order, and the administrator an ordained servant of the church. Jesus set for his followers the example. He went to John the Baptist, who was authorized of God to administer the ordinance. "Thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness." Can we follow him in his example if we receive the ordinance from one who is not divinely authorized to administer the ordinance? There is but one apostolic church in existence. If the Old School or Primitive Baptist church is that church, then all other professed churches are not the apostolic church, but are antichristian. If the so-called Missionary Baptists are the church, then the Old School Baptists are not the church of Christ. All spiritual gifts belong to the church, and are to be used there. In the type, in the temple at Jerusalem, everything in the house was sanctified by the house, and was to be used in the house, or temple, and were not to be removed. The altar sanctifieth the gift. If you can regard the New School Baptists as the body and church of Christ, and their ministers as members of the organized church of Christ on earth, certainly it is your duty to remain with them. To resist them would be to resist the authority which Christ has vested in his church. If you are fully convinced that they are not the church of Christ, why tarry among them? Leave them, and see that nothing belonging to them cleaves to you. I want to be plain with you, and I trust you will be plain with me. I believe you are very far from being mercenary; that it would not be a question with you, Can I have a living among these poor and afflicted people? We can assure you of sweet, spiritual fellowship, with abundance of poverty and persecution. That was the lot of the Master, and it is good enough for us his followers. "Marvel not if the world hate you." * * *

Before I close I want to say that there have been several instances in Old School Baptist churches in this state where they have received members on their New School baptism; and all went on well for a time, until the Lord revealed the order of his church to those thus received, when they saw plainly that they had not been properly baptized. Then they were not only dissatisfied with their New School baptism, but were decidedly dissatisfied with the church or churches that had so received them.

What more can I say? If I have not made the subject plain to you now, I have little hope of ever doing so, yet I would not like to be weary in well doing. I want to do you all the good I can. I believe I have no selfish motive in all this.

I have written hurriedly, but I hope you will be able to decipher it. Do not hesitate to ask me questions. So far as I am able to answer them it will afford me much pleasure. It is not necessary for me to tell you that there are a great many things I do not know; but there are some things that the Lord has taught me, and those things I love to talk and write about. May the Lord give us understanding in all things pertaining to his blessed kingdom, and grant us grace to walk in his ways.

Please let me hear from you when you have the time to devote to me.

Your friend and, I hope, brother in Christ,

BENTON JENKINS.

WESTON, Michigan.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—Again we are reminded of the flight of time. The year 1893 is here, and our dear aged father, who has taken the SIGNS nearly forty years, sends renewal of subscription. He feels that he cannot be without it, and also helps some one else who is worthy, as he wishes to aid you in your labor of love. He is feeble, and sits in his room much of the time reading. He is a firm believer in the doctrine so ably advocated by the SIGNS, as is also our mother, who is feeble, and has met with a serious accident, being thrown from a cutter. The animal driven slipped and fell, overturning the vehicle. Her right arm is badly bruised, if not broken. She says she is like the one who wrote those verses in the SIGNS, and wonders why her neck was not broken. Both are advanced in years, and ere another year dawns on earth they may have passed away. They hope to see all true Primitive Baptists respond to your request, and quickly; for the question is this, Can we do without the SIGNS? We are scattered, and how could we hear from dear ones once a week, traveling the same road, if not through our family paper? We do hope that they who fear the Lord will speak often one to another; not only the learned ones, but also the poor, weak, faltering lambs of the flock; for their cry touches a tender cord. We feel surely they are those who mourn, and so surely will be comforted. We are surrounded by those who are mighty, working, as they say, to save souls. They look upon us as those who need pity; but the Lord knows the heart. I can hear the organ, and can hear them sing their lively songs, from where I sit; but I have no desire to be counted with them. Surely the Lord hath led me, else I had gone astray. Not in my own strength have I stood, but in the strength of Israel's God. He is my strong tower, my sure defense. He will not forsake his beloved. Fight on a little longer; the conflict will end by and by, and you will hear the welcome, "Child, your Father calls, Come home."

With love to all who are of like faith,

SARAH WYMAN.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

DIED—Near Ovilla, Texas, April 28th, 1893, D. Lancaster, aged 87 years lacking 2 months and 2 days. Father was a Primitive Baptist more than fifty years, and a subscriber to the SIGNS OF THE TIMES forty years or more.

MRS. M. F. MOFFETT.

DIED—May 4th, 1893, brother Elliot Harding, of Talmadge Hill, Tioga Co., N. Y.

He was born in Deerpark, Orange Co., N. Y., Sept. 14th, 1810, and removed to the place where he died in 1833. His disease was heart failure, from "La Grippe." He was in failing health two or three months before he died. He was married twice, and leaves a sad and lonely widow and several children to mourn for a kind husband and father. He was highly esteemed as a neighbor and as a brother in the Old School Baptist Church at Waverly, having united nearly fifty years ago, and was a lover of God's truth. His labor on earth is ended, and he is at rest. May the Lord comfort the mourning ones with his gracious presence, for Jesus' sake.

A large number of neighbors and friends met at his residence to pay the last tribute of respect to the departed on Saturday, May 6th, at ten o'clock a. m., when the writer of this notice tried to comfort the living.

D. M. VAIL.

OUR dear sister in Christ, Martha Oliver, died April 13th, 1893, at her home in Franklin Township, Lenawee Co., Mich., in the 64th year of her age.

She was born in the township of Ticehuro, Sussex Co., England, Oct. 30th, 1829. Had she lived until next October she would have been sixty-four years old. She was baptized in the fellowship of the Old School Baptist Church of Fairfield April 29th, 1875, by the writer of this article. The cause of her death was kidney and liver trouble, from which she had suffered greatly a large portion of her life, but bore all her great pain and suffering with patience and christian fortitude. Her dear husband said to her a little while before she died, "O if it were only me that was going instead of you." "O no, O no; if it is the Lord's will I am willing to go." She was a firm believer in the doctrine of election, predestination and salvation by grace, and lived a very exemplary life. Her manner, walk and deportment were beyond question. Indeed, she was a mother in Israel. She was a devoted wife and mother in her fleshly family, which all attest. But, dear husband and children, why should we mourn her departure? She has gone from the evil to come, and gone home to be forever at rest from all the trials, cares, conflicts and tortures of pain and death in this world of sorrow and distress, to be with her blessed Redeemer, who loved her with an everlasting love, and loved her to the end; therefore in loving-kindness he has taken her home, that she may partake in the sweet fruition of that righteousness which is in store for all those who love the appearing of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. May the dear Lord sanctify this event of his providence to the good of the bereaved brother and children, and all the glory and honor be ascribed to his great and holy name.

The writer of this notice was called to the house of mourning to preach her funeral, and tried to speak words of comfort to those who mourned the loss of a departed wife and mother. "Asleep in Jesus! blessed sleep!"

T. J. WYMAN.

DIED—April 8th, 1893, at the residence of his daughter, near the Bryn Zion meeting-house, Ezekiel G. Reed, in the 57th year of his age.

He was baptized and received in the fellowship of the Bryn Zion Church on April 3d, 1866, and consequently his connection with the church continued for twenty-seven years and about one week. He was probably inclined to dropsy of late years, and last fall suffered something like a slight paralysis. Since that time he had been gradually failing. His companion, who was a member with him, survives him, and is left lonely in the world. A home where many of the friends have been hospitably entertained is now broken up. We hope to see the time when the Lord will build again the waste places in Zion.

ALSO,

DIED—On Saturday, April 29th, 1893, at the residence of her daughter and son-in-law, in Wilmington, Del., Mrs. Rebecca Frazier.

Sister Frazier was born in Kent Co., this state, Oct. 22d, 1806, and was at the time of her death in her 87th year. She was married to Mr. Thomas E. Frazier Dec. 22d, 1825, and settled near the Cow Marsh meeting-house, where their hospitality was enjoyed by many for half a century. She was baptized by Elder Stephen Woolford, who was then supplying that church, April 3d, 1830, and has continued a steadfast and devoted member of the church at Cow Marsh more than sixty-three years. The general division among the Baptists took place a short time afterward, but no inroads were made in that church. Elder Woolford was a sound, consistent gospel preacher, and the material gathered under his ministry continued to maintain gospel order in its original purity. It is interesting to see, as we sometimes do, some one or more live on through many changes and religious excitements for more than two generations, holding fast invariably the original profession of their faith; and not only so, but ever ready to instruct and encourage others in walking in and contending for the faith which was once delivered to the saints. Though living to so great age, she retained her faculties, and did not cease from yielding fruit.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date. This date denotes the time at which your subscription expires; and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y., WEDNESDAY, MAY 31, 1893.

NO. 22.

CORRESPONDENCE.

REISTERSTOWN, Md., May 16, 1893.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—In a recent number of the SIGNS I notice a request for my views upon a portion of Scripture recorded in Genesis xxiv. 1-6. I have mislaid that number of the SIGNS, and cannot recall the name of the person making the request; but I feel like writing a few words in response. I would be glad if I knew just what questions were in the mind of the writer; but as I do not I will simply suggest a few thoughts and leave them with you, and, if published, with the readers of the SIGNS.

The Scripture referred to reads as follows, "And Abraham was old, and well stricken in age: and the Lord had blessed Abraham in all things. And Abraham said unto his eldest servant of his house, that ruled over all that he had, Put, I pray thee, thy hand under my thigh: and I will make thee swear by the Lord, the God of heaven, and the God of the earth, that thou shalt not take a wife unto my son of the daughters of the Canaanites, among whom I dwell: but thou shalt go unto my country, and to my kindred, and take a wife unto my son Isaac. And the servant said unto him, Peradventure the woman will not be willing to follow me unto this land: must I needs bring thy son again unto the land from whence thou camest? And Abraham said unto him, Beware thou that thou bring not my son thither again."

Our warrant as ministers of the Lord Jesus Christ for writing or preaching concerning the things contained in the Old Testament is found in the statement of the inspired apostle, "Whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning." From which we learn that our loving and all-wise God and Father has suffered nothing to go into the canon of the Old Testament Scriptures but what is good and profitable for us to consider. There is therefore no word, either of history or prophecy, either of promise or of admonition in the Old Testament, that we can say is of no use to the people of God. The text quoted above is among the whatsoever things that were written aforetime, and therefore we may learn something from it. Yet we can learn nothing from it except the same Holy Spirit that indited it also illumines our minds, so that we may see the deep things of God which are hidden here as jewels in a mine.

But first I desire to present a general thought or two upon the interpretation of the types and of the Scriptures of the Old Testament in general. It is not safe to deduce a principle of doctrine from a type unless we find that principle of doctrine also clearly stated in the New Testament; neither is it right to carry the application of a type out into details not warranted by the clear statement of the truth in the New Testament. It seems to me more and more sure, as I read the types in the Old Testament and the parables in the New, that in all cases they are meant to set forth some one great truth; and after discovering that truth it is not safe to pass far beyond it. The type or the parable may indeed suggest very many things to us that are true, and of these things we may speak; but still it remains true that they are meant to set forth some one great truth concerning Jesus and his salvation. A century or two ago there was an epidemic of fantastic interpretations of the types and shadows and parables. Even the simplest didactic or historical statements were distorted and caricatured out of all semblance to themselves and the truth which they were meant to convey; and these distortions of men's ingenuity were considered of more value than plain gospel promises or gospel admonitions. It is to be feared that Satan has been at work in this direction in more modern times, and has thus endeavored to obscure and hide plain scriptural teaching from the minds of the people of God. I myself in the past have not been guiltless in this regard; and the discovery of my mistakes in the interpretation of the types has made me more cautious in speaking of them, and more anxious not to go beyond the plain statements of the New Testament in my views concerning them.

Of one thing we may be sure, viz., that there can be no type of the eternal Godhead. Nothing that we see can in any measure picture out the essential being of Jehovah. Israel was forbidden to make any image or likeness of God. Any likeness that men might make would be false, and its effect would be to lead men away from the true God into idolatry; and so we can have no type or figure of our God in his uncreated glory. But he has been pleased to tabernacle in human flesh in the person of Jesus Christ; and of Jesus we do have types, and many things are used in the Bible to set forth his character and work, and his relationship to his people. The relations of Father, Friend, Master, Protector, Guide, Shepherd, &c., are all used to set forth the manner of God's dealing with us; but we have no likeness or image of him. The types all point to Jesus Christ, God manifest in the flesh; and the parables set forth his work among his people.

Now, in the Scripture to which our attention is especially called we cannot doubt that Jesus in some of his holy character and work is set forth. This portion of the life of Abraham and of Isaac was as much under the immediate guidance of our God as was any other part of their lives. Jehovah ordered this, as he did all the national travel of the twelve tribes, the children of Abraham, in such a way as to carry out his purposes concerning the birth of his Son on the earth. All the centuries of the national history of Israel were made subservient to the greatest event of all, the coming of the Son of man. In that chain of events, from the first to the last, nothing occurred by chance; nothing might have been otherwise. The actors in the events recorded did not know the meaning of what they did, but God knew. They did not see how they were needful links in this wonderful chain, but God knew; and not a move took place but what men, all unwittingly it is true, were doing just what his hand and his counsel purposed to be done. So Isaac and Rebecca were needful links in the genealogical chain which led down through the ages to the coming and birth of Christ. Abraham indeed may not have understood the full significance of what he was now doing; but the faith of God was in him, and it moved him to do God's will here as well as elsewhere. How true it is that as Abraham knew not fully what he did, and could not trace its bearing upon the mysterious future, so we all know not what we do in anything. But God knows; and because he knows we may commit all to him, and be calm and confident, even while we stand in awe before him, and wonder at his vast designs.

But it seems to me that in this Scripture we have not only a narrative bearing upon the fact of the coming of Jesus in the flesh through the line of Isaac and of Rebecca, but there is also shadowed forth the people for whom he came, the objects of his redeeming love and grace. Isaac was not to take a wife from the Canaanites, among whom Abraham dwelt. They were a people devoted to destruction. They were a people under the ban and curse of God. They therefore could not share in the glory of the lineage of Jesus. But a wife must be found for Isaac from among the people from whence the Lord had called Abraham. His bride was of the family to which Abraham belonged, and of which Isaac therefore was also a member. Is there not a clear setting forth here of the election of grace? Is not the teaching of this type in full harmony with the Scripture, "He took not on him the nature of angels, but he took on him the seed of Abraham?" Jesus came to redeem his bride. His bride was composed of vessels of mercy. They were elect vessels of mercy. They were chosen to this end before time was. So Rebecca was the chosen bride of Isaac. The servant of Abraham did not pray that God would choose the damsel who should be the wife of Isaac (this was already done), but that God would show him by a certain way her whom he had appointed.—Gen. xxiv. 14. This is all that the servants of God can do to-day, that is, ask him to show forth those whom he has appointed to be the bride of Jesus. The bride is chosen; every vessel of mercy is appointed, but as yet they are hidden.

God sends forth his servant, but it is only "to make ready a people prepared of the Lord." The servant brings the message, but the heart of Rebecca is prepared beforehand. This the servant recognizes, and so he prays that by a certain sign the one appointed may be made known to him. Such a message has never reached the ears of Rebecca before. The name of Isaac is strange to her ears; but the Spirit of God has made her ready, when she does hear the message, and the name of Isaac is revealed to her, to forsake all, home, friends and kindred, and follow the servant as he led the way to the place where Isaac dwelt, even as Abraham before her went out also from his own land and kindred at the call of God. The message of the servant did not work this preparation of heart, but it met this preparation, and was fitted to it; and so her heart responded to it joyfully, just as many a heart since has leaped and bounded as they have heard the gospel message which the true Bridegroom has sent them by the mouth of some servant of his. The servant desired an evidence from the chosen one herself; and it was such an evidence as would show qualities in her suitable for a wife for his master. He desired her to be kind and pitiful and gentle and helpful. Such an one, adorned with such good and gracious characteristics, would be suitable for a bride for his master. If I know anything about the matter at all, the spirit of a minister of Jesus Christ to-day is to seek those whom the Lord has prepared; and it is still true, as it was of Rebecca, that they bear certain marks by which they may be known. Some of them are, they are ready to hear the gospel, the name of Jesus is attractive in their ears, they gladly hear the words of his servants, and joyfully seek the Savior's presence.

The servant was put under oath not to depart from the command of his master in this matter; but the oath did not bind to any unwilling service. He went willingly and solemnly, as in the love and fear of God. This was right. He abided in the way pointed out. It was a blessed way. Afterward he could exultingly say, "I being in the way, came to the house of my master's brethren." Is it not a great thing for the servant of God to be in the way? The blessing is found in it. Gospel ministers have a dispensation of the gospel committed to them. They are under necessity, but if they go willingly they have a reward. This is Paul's testimony.

Another thought that comes to my mind is this, that if this Scripture is plain in its teaching of anything, it is that the election of grace are men and women of a fallen race; and because the chosen people of God are men and women clothed in flesh and blood, Christ also became a man clothed in flesh and blood, that he might redeem them. He was Immanuel (God with us), that we might be redeemed and be forever with God. How absurd the theory that the children of God are divine and eternal existences. There is no being of whom eternity can be predicated but God; and to attribute eternity to any other being is blasphemy. What an absurdity is that theory which involves the idea that a part of the children of God have never left the heavenly abode as yet, while others have taken the journey to earth and have gone back again. Brethren, in the election of vessels of mercy is our only hope, and this is most surely taught in the wonderful Scripture which we have been considering.

I leave these reflections. If published, may they do good, and not harm.

I remain your brother in the precious hope of the gospel,

"I have planted, Apollos watered; but God gave the increase."—1 Cor. iii. 6.

These are such familiar words to the saints that it is hardly necessary to say that the apostle Paul was the writer of them. The occasion that called forth the words was of great import, not only to the Corinthian brethren to whom he was writing, but also to us who, as we hope, do manifest the increase of God, through faith, in our daily lives. The apostle was at the time teaching his brethren by words of wisdom, that they might be delivered from the error into which they had fallen; showing them the difference between carnal and spiritual things; between the spirit of man and the Spirit of God; that the things of the Spirit can come only by revelation of God, and not by searching. It is the Spirit that searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God. And so he said to them, "For what man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of man which is in him? Even so the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God." The brethren at Corinth had fallen into the same error which has come to the saints in every age (and of which we also are not free), which was and is the setting up of a carnal god, and following and worshiping him, forgetting for a time the God of our salvation. Therefore the apostle reminds them saying, "Are ye not carnal?" when some had said, "I am of Paul;" and others, "I am of Apollos." It is as easy as it is natural for the saints to set up in their hearts a false worship, vainly thinking they are doing God service in such worship. The natural mind, under a natural law, naturally turns to the works of the law for justification. If we wish to observe the creature workings of Arminianism, we do not have to go out into the world to find them; but to turn the eyes of our faith within to our own mortal self, we will find there the whole Armimintarium with which to work the works of the creature, but not of God. The power by which we work out our own salvation with fear and trembling is never seen by mortal eyes, neither can it be comprehended by the natural mind, but must be discerned by the Spirit of Christ, which dwelleth and abideth in his people. And only by the same Spirit can we discover that all our creature works are of no avail in the salvation of a lost and ruined sinner. It is a sad and distressing reflection to the weary way-worn pilgrim when he finds he has gotten far out of the way in following some chimera of his own brain, concocted by his enemy, the devil. Our church privileges are often turned from the peaceful habitation of the Lord, into a scene of confusion and unhappiness, by the impressions produced from the wily machinations of the flesh. Bitterness will arise in the hearts of brethren one against another, because of each one harboring in his bosom an idol, of which he is not at the time aware, but which deprives him of the comforts of the gospel, and casts him into that death which is common to all the saints so long as they remain in the flesh. How often is a word dictated by the Spirit withheld, which if spoken would cast oil upon the troubled waters; yet it is kept back by pride or anger, neither of which should ever hold a resting place in the hearts of the children of God. We cannot conceive how quickly love clears the cloudy sky of the seeming differences of those whose hope is in the Lord. And how surely "A soft answer turneth away wrath." The love of God binds the children of God together in a very bundle of love; and as it exercises its subject, the hay and stubble of discord are scattered to the four winds, and disappear as the dew under the morning sun. But when our hearts are turned to false gods by false impressions, we become severed, the golden chain is broken, and we fall apart. One will say as did they of Corinth, "I am of Paul," and another, "I am of Apollos," changing the truth of God into a lie. The heart while in its bitterness is almost always yearning for the peace and comfort and quietness of Zion. The apostle with sorrow in his heart, for their divergence from the truth, communes with them, speaking to their faith, in the words of our subject, taking no honor to himself, but giving all the honor and glory to God. "I have planted, Apollos watered; but God gave the increase." How searching and with what power do such words of admonition and instruction come into our souls, sometimes showing us how far we have gone astray.

"I have planted." As the things of nature, which are brought before our natural vision, are brought to view as representing the things which are not seen, and through which we are instructed by way of comparison, so we compare the type given us in nature with the antitype as written in our heart and as set forth in the Scriptures. Of the seed that is planted in the ground that it may bring forth increase, wheat has been used as representing in death and life both Jesus and his church. Jesus presented this figure when he said; "The hour is come that the Son of man should be glorified. Verily, verily, I say unto you, except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone; but if it die it bringeth forth much fruit." And as applied to his church, he also says by John the Baptist, "whose fan is in his hand, and he will thoroughly purge his floor, and gather his wheat into the garner." As far as my own experience and knowledge of the planting of grain goes, it is a significant fact that wheat is about the only grain among the cereals which is planted in the Autumn, and that will withstand the ravages of the frosts of winter. Therefore it is a beautiful type or the saints of God, who are the only ones that ever pass through the winters of a christian experience. Others start upon the journey as did Bunyan's Obstinate and Pliable; but as soon as difficulties and opposition arise, they turn back to their proper element again. The wheat is planted at a time when all vegetation in nature is about to enter into a condition of decay and death, in consequence of the seed time and harvest having passed, succeeded by the chill north winds of approaching winter; presenting that time of our experience when we are verily going into death, that our life might be made to appear. The husbandman in nature sows his seed; but except life had been already implanted in the seed, his sowing would be in vain. He cannot impart life. His powers are restricted, while God's power is unlimited. And so Paul, with the other apostles, could plant and water and observe the growth; but the increase, the giving of life, must be of God. They could build upon the foundation, Jesus being the chief corner stone. Each grain of wheat (or child of God) that was manifested in their labor was a living subject, having that life imparted to them by the Lord of life and glory. Therefore the apostles could only lay the foundation of the visible church with lively stones that had been prepared by the Lord for the building of God. Saith the apostle, "For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ." The apostles had no more power to impart life to dead subjects than has the husbandman to impart life to a decayed grain of wheat. Therefore his memorable and precious words, "I have planted." As an apostle and minister of the new covenant, his work was accomplished in the planting of the word by inspiration, which has resulted in all after time to the edification and instruction of the body of Christ.

"Apollos watered." In nature there are elements (from seed time to harvest) necessary to the propagation of the seed in manifesting the life therein contained. "First the blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear." Water is one of the essential requirements to assist in the production of the crop. Apollos could not produce the water, but he could apply it where it was needed, as directed by the Spirit, it having been prepared and provided to his hand by the hand of providence.

"But God gave the increase." Is it any wonder that the children of God are willing and glad to give to the living God all the glory and honor due to his holy and reverend name? From the one "corn of wheat" which must needs fall into the ground and die, which is Jesus, our life, many precious grains have been called into manifestation, each one having the same life as the original seed; the life not being in creased, but manifested in all the chosen seed of the harvest of Israel. The increase of God, after the planting and watering, until the harvest appears, is in manifestation only; for while we do not limit the power of God in any sense, and say that he could not (were it his will) bring all the world into his spiritual kingdom as sons of his glory, yet we live upon his word, as written in our hearts, and recorded for a witness and a testimony in holy writ; that his church was chosen in Christ before time began, to which nothing can be added nor taken from; for the train of the King of Zion completely and exactly fills the temple. No room for another stone in the perfect building of God; and not one stone which has been placed there (not by Paul or Apollos, but by the all-wise Architect) can in any wise be spared or misplaced. The increase of God will surely go on, from the seed time until all the blessed subjects of his sovereign will and choice shall be harvested and gathered into his garner; then time shall be no more. There shall be no need any more for the rising of the natural sun, nor the setting thereof. Death shall be swallowed up in victory over all created things, even hell and the grave.

The manifestation of the increase of God is shown also in the various gifts which he has bestowed upon his people, each one possessing the gift of God according to the measure of the gift of Christ. Our Savior possessed that gift in its full and complete measure; therefore the power of the gift was at all times above the power of sin; while his saints, having but a partial measure in this time state by the power of reigning grace and the riches thereof, by a growth in grace, which is the increase of God, they go on in the work of perfecting, "till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ." The poor trembling child of grace in the increasing knowledge of self through the Spirit, feels that he is continually growing backward in spiritual things, growing less and less, his confidence decreasing, his sinfulness and his unworthiness so painfully apparent, that he does not realize that this very experience is the increase which God giveth; and the more he feels he is growing backward, the more surely he is pressing forward toward the mark for the prize of his high calling in Christ Jesus. We often mourn the absence of any gift in Christ, seeing as we do the precious gifts in our brethren, to which we dare not hope to attain. But God be praised for his infinite wisdom and love, he has held none of his children in disregard, but has given to each a measure of his precious gifts; so that, however insignificant one may feel to be among his brethren, his own gift is of the same importance in the economy of grace as those whose gifts seem of such greater worth. The very smallest stone in the structure of God's building is just as necessary to the perfecting of the building as the stones of greater size. In the wisdom of God he has given his loved ones to feel as did the apostle when he wrote, "Unto me, who am less than the least of all saints, is this grace given." Then how precious is the thought that as we become smaller and smaller, and more ignorant in our own esteem, we are becoming more worthy to give praise to the glory of God, being prepared, as was Jonah, with all the saints, to sacrifice with the voice of thanksgiving, and to enter into that rest that remaineth to the people of God. If we could remember always that the increase is not in ourselves, but of God that showeth mercy, even merciful to our unrighteousness, we could indeed be happy in the Lord, the divergence from our union, harmony and love would cease to exist, our pride and self-conceit would no more cause us to cry aloud in selfishness, I am for Paul, and I for Apollos; but we would, with Paul, relish the sweetness of his own words, "I have planted, Apollos watered; but God gave the increase."

THE WIDOW'S MITE.

THE above named subject has been on my mind for a little time, and I feel like freeing my mind in regard to it; yet I have no train of thought as to the full intent of the act, nor of the Savior's expression in regard to it, only as I hope I have, and as others may have, a personal interest therein, by an experience of the Lord's work in the heart, and brought to acknowledge Jesus as Lord of all. Godly edifying should be the one motive of the servants of the Lord, whether writing or speaking. "The edifying of itself in love" should be the whole desire of the church of the living God. They should let their yea be substantiated by the truth as it is in Jesus, as no lie is of the truth. They should also let their nay be confirmed, setting their faces against everything that does not declare the King of Zion pre-eminent in all things. Though he was once dead, yet he now lives at the right hand of God, with all power in heaven and earth given unto him. In the Savior dwelt all the fullness of the Godhead bodily while about his Father's business on earth. All his acts declare the justice and judgment of his throne. God in his holy habitation is a father of the fatherless and a judge of the widows. Such were the acts of our gracious Redeemer to set at naught the glorying of the flesh, and to justify the lowly ones. He said, "For all they did cast in of their abundance; but she of her want did cast in all that she had, even all her living."—Mark xii. 44. The express testimony of our Savior to his disciples, that this poor widow had cast in more than all they which had cast into the treasury, presents the contrast between the covetous and honor-seeking worldling, and the humble and God-honoring subjects of his care. Jesus sat over against the treasury, observing the contributors to the fund. Some cast in a piece of money, and some who were rich cast in much money; but the poor widow with but the two mites cast in all her living, while all others cast in of their abundance, according as their desires prompted. The evidence was against them, as it always is with one in possession of wealth or worldly wisdom, as it was to gratify their carnal desires, or appease the wrath of God, and give them favor in time of need. Such was the condition of the Pharisee in the parable, who thanked God for what he had himself done, and thought of his sufficiency, as one who had paid tithes, &c. This carnal reason has been wont to do in all ages, thinking that to-morrow shall be as this day, and much more abundant, if occasion requires; for the evil man out of the evil treasure of his heart can only bring forth evil things; for out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh. But how different with the poor widow with but two mites; and what a difference in the judgment. "All her living;" "more than they all;" because she has no reserve or substance left; just like every one of a broken heart and contrite spirit before God. "All her living," yet but two mites, freely given; showing a full trust, a declaration of faith in God, who is her Judge. Therefore we have a lesson in it of helplessness before God, on whom we depend for mercy; implicit confidence in God who alone can heal or save us; no withholding from him, even though the pittance be small. All is freely yielded up without any demand. It is the swelling gratitude in the heart of one whose husband (the law of commandments) is dead, and who has but two mites left. Yet it is more than all Pharisaic pride and long prayers. It is all their living. They are only able to say, "God, be merciful to me, a sinner." I know it by my own experience. All my former notions about salvation were out of the abundance of self-righteousness I then possessed. But then the Lord never allowed me to cast into the treasury; yet I thought to do so some day. But little did I think that when I should do so, I should be reduced to a widow's two mites, or that the Savior would observe so small an offering, or that any offering I might bring would be acceptable in his sight. Yet I am glad to know that is the great sacrifice of a broken heart of a contrite one, which is acceptable to our God; and those are the ones with whom he delights to dwell. How wonderful are the dealings of God with his people, ever bringing them low, that they may appreciate his great favor to them; and as he helps them in their time of need, they know it is he alone that can do them good. Like the poor widow, all their living, all their substance, is from him, and from him is their fruit found. So Paul could say much of widows to comfort the people of God. For all God's people under the new and everlasting covenant must feel in some measure their days of widowhood, when "dead to the law by the body of Christ," and mourning over their sins, having nothing to cast into the treasury of his grace but their utter unworthiness and ungodliness, feeling to say,

"Here, Lord, I give myself away,
'Tis all that I can do."

While a consciousness of their widowed condition remains, and all hope is vanished, unless the Lord have mercy, each can say,

"O might I once mount up and see
The glories of the eternal skies,
What little things these worlds would be,
How despicable to my eyes.

There, from the bosom of my God,
Oceans of endless pleasure roll;
There would I fix my last abode,
And drown the sorrows of my soul."

All Scripture given by inspiration of God is profitable to his people. God does not allow divorcing among his people; for the woman is bound by the law to her husband as long as he liveth; but when he is dead, she is at liberty to be married to another, even to whom she will, only in the Lord. This is a natural figure. The Lord only is the husband of the church. As the first husband (the law given on mount Sinai) is dead, or removed by the death of Jesus, the quickened subjects of God's grace in their experience of his power in their hearts desire the one thing of him, and that they will seek after, that they may dwell in his spiritual house; and when they are low down, and the Lord helps them, they crown him Lord of all, or give all their living, as from him and to him are all things, who is blessed for evermore. He will not leave himself without witnesses, and their united testimony will be that he is God, and beside him there is no Savior. As in nature many widows live lonely and mournful lives, while others remarry, so the figure shows in some degree the times of mourning of those who find themselves unable to keep the law, and powerless to attain to the righteousness which is of faith in Christ, as it is a revelation of his will, who works in them both to will and to do. They all prove in their measure the words of prophecy, "I will yet for this be inquired of by the house of Israel, to do it for them." Without Jesus they can do nothing. This little word "without" has great significance. In him they have peace. In him they are saved with an everlasting salvation. Within him only can that peace and solace be found, as they are made one by an experience of this heavenly grace in the heart, even as Jesus and his STAND FAST.

"THEREFORE, brethren, stand fast, and hold the traditions which ye have been taught, whether by word, or our epistle."—2 Thess. ii. 15.

It is one of the most prominent characteristics of the inspired letters written by the apostles to the churches that they all manifest the most intense desire for the best interest of those to whom they are addressed. In no other epistle is this more clearly expressed than in this second letter to the church of the Thessalonians. In this, as in the first epistle to this church, Paul gives thanks to God on their behalf, in consideration of the growth of faith and charity in every one of them all toward each other. So extraordinary was the development of this characteristic among the members of this church that Paul gloried in them in the churches of God for their patience and faith in all their persecutions and tribulations which they endured. Such commendation might well have excited in them a feeling of selfish confidence, and led them to claim superiority over other churches if they could have found in themselves the cause of their possessing the qualifications which are commended. They might then have presented themselves as worthy of the emulation of the less approved churches, and rested in their own meritorious deportment as entitling them to the high regard of their brethren. But Paul positively forbids all such glorying by telling them that he and those who were with him were bound to give thanks always to God in consideration of the exceeding growth of their faith and charity. If the saints could apply this test it would always discriminate between the works which are approved of God and those which only serve to exalt the pride of the carnal mind. When the grace of God enables one to esteem others better than himself, and therefore to love the brethren with a pure heart fervently, it can never fail to cause him to esteem himself less than the least of all those among whom he earnestly desires a place. He does not need to be taught that this is the right feeling for him to cherish; nor does he have to try to bring himself to that humble position where he can look upon himself as less worthy than others. He feels that it is a painful fact that he is not worthy of a name among the saints, in whom he sees the likeness of his Redeemer. So far is it beyond the power of any saint to produce this humility in his own heart that he cannot so much as desire to possess it unless that desire is produced by the indwelling Spirit of Christ. Hence, it is certain that the Spirit dwells in every one who earnestly longs to be conformed to his image in humility and fervent love. This is the seal which assures the final deliverance of those in whom it is set, so that there can be no failure in the case of one who bears this mark.

In the beginning of this chapter the earnest entreaty is enforced by the consideration of the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and by our gathering together unto him, that the saints be not deceived, or shaken in mind, or troubled, by spirit, nor by word, nor by letter as from the apostles, as that the day of Christ is at hand. The positive declaration is recorded that there must come a falling away first, in which that man of sin shall be revealed, the son of perdition. All his wickedness is foretold with no less certainty than the fact that the Lord shall destroy him with the brightness of his coming. They who are deceived by the "working of Satan with all power and lying wonders," are those who perish, "because they received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved." Then it is certain that not one of those who have the love of truth can be included among those who thus perish. There is nothing more required to secure their being saved than that they have received the love of the truth. Let those who fear God and love righteousness notice with sacred reverence the fearful truth here stated. It is not said that God has done all in his power to reclaim these sinners from their erroneous notions; but "For this cause God shall send them strong delusion, that they should believe a lie; that they all might be damned who believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness." This is presented in contrast with that occasion for thanksgiving to God for his brethren to whom this letter is written, whom he particularly and exclusively describes as "beloved of the Lord." The assurance of that love is definitely declared in the next clause of this sentence. "Because God hath from the beginning chosen you to salvation through sanctification and belief of the truth; whereunto he called you by our gospel, to the obtaining of the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ."

Having thus positively laid the foundation of the doctrine of God as the ground of their hope, the stability of that truth is the reason by which the saints are admonished in our text to "stand fast." Enemies of the truth assert that the effect of this doctrine of the salvation of sinners by the unchanging election of divine grace is to encourage men to continue in sin. The apostle deduces from this truth the very reverse of this carnal conclusion. "Therefore, brethren, stand fast, and hold the traditions which ye have been taught." They are not authorized to hold any other traditions but those which they have received by the teaching of the Holy Ghost. Traditions which can claim no higher origin than the doctrines and commandments of men are not the kind which this inspired commandment directs the saints to hold. Every natural mind has an abundant supply of traditions which are cherished as worthy of being held with zealous devotion; for they are regarded as sacred truth until their falsehood is exposed by the light of righteousness. Such are not the traditions which the saints are exhorted to hold. No devotion in holding to error can ever make it less false; and it is still true that "No lie is of the truth." However sincerely the saints may cling to any false doctrine, it will prove a bitter delusion; and the more devotedly they cherish it the more cruel will be their suffering of loss in its exposure. There is nothing really profitable to the saints but that which is taught by the inspired word and epistles of the princes who are set upon thrones of judgment in the spiritual Israel of our God. Every saint must accept what is left on record for our learning; and there is no appeal from the apostolic decision on every point of doctrine and order in the church of Christ. Hence it is of the utmost importance that every professed follower of Christ should give heed to the admonition in our text. The value of any tradition or instruction depends entirely upon the source from which it comes. All the traditions which originate in the darkness of the natural mind must perish with the source from whence they spring. In this list is included every form of natural religion and morality. The traditions which are specified in our text are not of an earthly origin; therefore they do not perish with earthly things. Since the Holy Ghost moved the inspired servants to speak and write, the traditions taught by them are of divine origin, and can never be less holy and true than their divine Author. Only as they were moved by the Holy Ghost could the apostles present that truth which is called in our text "the traditions which ye have been taught." With all the abundance of revelations bestowed upon them, they were in themselves merely men of like passions with those heathen Gentiles to whom they preached the gospel of the grace of God as revealed in Jesus Christ.—Acts xiv. 15. It should put to shame those uninspired writers who assume to be standard authors, when they read the earnest protest of the apostles against the ascription of like authority to themselves. Instead of directing the saints to rely implicitly upon their instructions as infallible, the direction given by inspired authority is, "Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed. As we said before, so say I now again, If any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed."—Gal. i. 8, 9. So also it should be seriously considered by those who ascribe authority to the views of such uninspired men, even though they be able ministers of the gospel, that when they regard them as the criterion by which to judge of the soundness of any point of doctrine, they are guilty of the same idolatry which was condemned by the apostle in the case of those heathen worshipers at Lystra. "Therefore, brethren, stand fast, and hold the traditions which ye have been taught," not "by the fathers," or "standard writers," but by the only medium through which any gospel truth has ever been recorded, by the word or epistle of those apostles who were endued with power from on high. No other traditions, theories or doctrines are profitable to the saints.

If there had been no possibility of the saints being moved from the truth which was taught in their experience, there would have been no need of this earnest admonition. But even while the apostles were yet in the flesh there were frequent occasions when the introduction of errors in doctrine and in practice demanded sharp reproof. It is absurd to claim that there is less need of such admonition now than in the apostolic age. It would seem strange that those who had been taught the truth by the immediate word of the apostles should be liable to forsake their instruction and embrace false traditions and commandments of men. But the record of truth shows that in the very presence of our Lord it was possible for his disciples to be captivated by a carnal spirit. No saint is beyond the reach of such temptation while he remains in the body of this death. Hence, it is important that every one should give the more earnest heed to the doctrine which the saints have been taught by the Spirit of Christ who leads them into all truth; and in trying the traditions presented for the doctrine of Christ they are at liberty to recognize as standard authors only the inspired writers of the sacred Scriptures. Whenever they depend upon the authority of the most highly esteemed ministers, or the most tenderly cherished fathers, they are violating the admonition of our text, and must fall under the delusion of their carnal devices. The only way in which the saints can "stand fast," as directed in our text, is by holding the traditions which are taught by the Spirit of truth; and all such instruction is in perfect accord with the words and epistles of the apostles. Nothing can be reliable as a test of doctrine but that word which bears the seal of inspiration as recorded by the chosen apostles and prophets of our Lord Jesus Christ. In accepting anything else the saints fail to hold the traditions which they have been taught by the word and epistles of the appointed judges who sit upon the thrones of judgment in the church of the living God. However any erroneous sentiment may commend itself to the natural understanding of the believer, its falsehood will be shown when it is tried in the fire of the word of the Lord. Therefore the saints cannot afford to be indifferent to this solemn admonition.

The object in view is not that the everlasting life of the saints may be secured by attention to this admonition. Those to whom Paul wrote were already recognized as the church of God. Because they were called to be saints it was needful that they should be instructed how they should walk in following after righteousness. They were not to be guided by the traditions and commandments of men, nor yet were they to look to the law of Moses for a rule of life. The perfect law of liberty in Christ Jesus is given them in the spirit of righteousness which dwells in them. They stand fast only when they are led by the holy principle thus wrought in them to walk in newness of life. All the obedience of faith is rendered in joyful love to the infinite perfection of holiness which is revealed in the face of Jesus Christ. Nothing is so painful to the lover of righteousness as the consciousness of pollution and sin in his best efforts to render obedience to the law of holiness which is in his heart. His most earnest desire is to be found walking in conformity to the perfect pattern which is seen in Jesus. The Spirit of Christ works in every one who is born of God the same intense desire which governed Paul when he said, "But what things were gain to me, those I counted loss for Christ. Yea doubtless, and I count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord; for whom I have suffered the loss of all things, and do count them but dung, that I may win Christ, and be found in him, not having mine own righteousness, which is of the law, but that which is through the faith of Christ, the righteousness which is of God by faith; that I may know him, and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings, being made conformable unto his death; if by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead."—Phil. iii. 7-11. Paul did not mean to express the desire for that knowledge which consists in an understanding of the doctrine of the gospel; for he was already established in that truth. In common with all the saints, he longed for the final deliverance from the bondage of corruption, when he should be free from the body of this death, and satisfied in the perfect likeness of his Lord. So long as they continue in this house of their pilgrimage they must walk by faith, and rest in the assurance of that hope which abides in them; but when they shall see their Lord as he is they shall be like him. Then they shall have no further occasion for encouragement to stand fast; for they shall no more endure temptation and suffering, being forever with the Lord.

FROM FOUR ORATIONS BY EDWARD IRVING, BEFORE THE LONDON (ENGLAND) MISSIONARY SOCIETY, MAY, 1824.

ORATION THREE.

THE PERPETUITY OF THIS MISSIONARY CONSTITUTION PROVED.

WHAT more, then, is required to show that there ever must be and ever hath been a necessity for disjunction from the works of the world in order to work the works of God, that the great heralds of heaven must take a stand above the earth in order to raise men above the earth; that they must undervalue those things which they teach men to undervalue? What are missionaries but the prophet's order enlarged from the confines of the land of Israel to roam at large over the world—God's messengers to the nations? * * * Each a Jonah to the several quarters of the heathen world; not servants of this or that association of men, but heralds of heaven, who dare not be under other orders than the orders of Christ. It is a presumption hardly short of Papal to command them. They are not missionaries when they are commanded; they are creatures of the power that commandeth them. Up, up with the stature of this character. It is high as heaven. Its head is above the clouds which hide the face of heaven from earth-born men. Its ear heareth the word of God continually, and continually re-echoeth what it heareth to the nations. * * * I wonder how any one can be so impious toward God, so cruel toward men, as to wish to obliterate one feature of his celestial character. Though none of those who at present respectably bear the honors of the name come near to it, still let it stand, that, being ever in their eye, they may approach it more and more near. Though none of this generation can bear the palm of it away, some of our children may; and though none of our children should reach it nearer than their fathers, some of our children's children may. * * * Martha, who was burdened with many things, is the genius of the human race. Mary, who had chosen the one thing needful, is the genius of the missionary band, who, not out of the greatness of their grief, but the greatness of their love, have become careless of all those things, save that good part which shall not be taken from them.

Who is he that talks of change? The missionary ordinance can never change, for the missionary work doth never change. His work is still to overthrow the prince of this world, seated upon the beauty and pleasantness, upon the magnificence and glory of the visible creation, and to deliver the souls of men into the worship of the invisible God. Kingdoms may undergo every vicissitude, and be found under every form of civil polity; nations may exist in every degree of culture or barbarism; they may be noble, high-minded and proud; sordid and base, and given over to gain and sensual indulgence; vainglorious, pompous, and fond of a thousand spectacles; they may be groveling in superstition, sunk in ignorance, abandoned to sloth and effeminacy, or fierce, fiery and uncontrollable; but never will a kingdom or nation be found possessed of the knowledge of the true God, devoted to the faith and pursuit of spiritual objects, or living in the practice of christian precepts. The maxims, the spirit of the laws and policy, the motives and principles of private conduct, the whole tenor of their society and the influence of their religion, have to be counteracted and overthrown in these times as entirely as in the days of the apostles. There is no relaxation of the difficulties of the work, which never changeth; and the gospel which the missionary hath to preach, the kingdom which he hath to propagate, is still the same spiritual kingdom which flesh and blood cannot inherit, whose King hath no communion with Belial nor with Mammon, in whose sight iniquity cannot stand, and to whom the proud heart and the high look are an abomination. This gospel, which hath toleration for no natural form of humanity, however excellent, and condemneth every living man, which beginneth in sorrow and repentance for the past, proceedeth by the faith and preference of things unseen, and is perfected in a thousand acts of self-denial and self-discipline, is not now more agreeable to the nations than it was when first revealed by our Lord and Savior; and if the gospel, after two thousand years, is still as unaccommodating to the world, and the world is still by nature as averse from its faith and discipline, how should the manner of its propagation be altered in any respect from what was laid down and followed at the first? If the first missionaries were made spiritual personages in order to exhibit practically to the people that preference and all-sufficiency of spiritual things which they preached, if they were men of faith alone in order to exhibit that principle which they sought to magnify over sight and sense, why should they not be so likewise in these times, in which the heathen are still as devoted to things seen and temporal as they were in the days of Paul? Even supposing the present missionaries had more divinity of nature than the apostles, and that they could possess purse, scrip, and all other accommodations, without being thereby unspiritualized, how shall they hinder the evil interpretation of the heathen, who see them hired, paid, accommodated, befriended, and in all outward things better conditioned than themselves? They speak to us of faith, let them show us their own. They speak to us of the providence of God, but they venture not hither without every security. They tell us of Christ's disinterestedness to us, but what lessons give they us of the same? And so forth through every particular of their condition, by which Christ intended that they should evidence the doctrine which they taught. I cannot understand, therefore, in any way how the condition of the missionary work should be changed when the work itself remaineth the same; nor how the instruction which Christ gave for the propagation of his kingdom should now be null and void when it is the same kingdom that is to be propagated, and the difficulties and impediments are still the same, over the head of which its propagation is to be effected.

I admire the steadiness with which the spiritual people of this day have stood out against the ignorant clamor that the heathen must be civilized before they can be christianized. I admire also the faith which they have shown in the power of God to save men by the preaching of the word, without any help of the arts of government or of civil life, and the simplicity with which they devote themselves to the circulation of the Scriptures and the sending out of teachers and preachers; and they are never enough to be commended for standing aloof from the employment of force and power and civil policy, in all these respects fulfilling the maxim of Christ, "My kingdom is not of this world." But there are a few things which still savor of the spirit of the world, and which must be put away by the diligent perusal and faithful execution of this the missionary charter; which, instead of arguing against or pulling down, they should regard as the everlasting conditions of the missionary work, within which men have only to come in order to be ready for the high office, and ripe for scattering the everlasting seed amongst the nations. There hath been much searching of the Scriptures for a platform of church government, and every passage which can be forced into that application has been strained to the utmost, in order that a ius divinum might be made out for episcopacy, presbytery and independency in their turns. Sure I am that none nor all of these put together can make out such a divine right as the missionary work hath in these instructions of our Lord; and had there been human interests concerned in the establishment of it, as human interests there are none, unspiritual men would long ere this have used it for securing them. But being the death of secularity, the essence of spiritual-mindedness, and the quintessence of self-denial, I perceive that it hath everything to contend with, scoffs, ridicule and worldly wisdom, and cannot be generally acceptable in times when the secular and the spiritual have become strangely intermingled, and maxims current on the Exchange have become current in holy places; when the offices of the church have come to be valued by their emoluments, and for their emoluments sought out, and as an emolument discoursed of amongst the people. It is not now the time to discourse of the pastoral office (I shall hereafter), but it were easy to show from the epistles of the great Shepherd to the angels of the seven churches of Asia that it is an office in its spirit consenting with that view of the missionary office which we labor to establish, and widely dissenting from those views of it which are now current amongst both priests and people. But while those erroneous views prevail of the pastoral office, which is under our eye at home, and from which we derive our notion of the missionary, it will be in vain to think that the latter notion can be a correct one. Therefore it is the more necessary, among the many sources of error to which we are exposed in making up our idea of the missionary, to adhere to the divine platform contained in these verses, and be governed by the jus divinum, the divine authority of that unrepealed constitution.

Therefore I say, let this type of the missionary stand, that he is a man without a purse, without a scrip, without a change of raiment, without a staff, without the care of making friends or keeping friends, without the hope or desire of worldly good, without the apprehension of worldly loss, without the care of life, without the fear of death, of no rank, of no country, of no condition; a man of one thought, the gospel of Christ; a man of one purpose, the glory of God; a fool, and content to be reckoned a fool, for Christ; a madman, and content to be reckoned a madman, for Christ. Let him be enthusiast, fanatic, babbler, or any other outlandish non-descript the world may choose to denominate him; but still let him be a non-descript, a man that cannot be classed under any of their categories, nor defined by any of their convenient and conventional names. When they can call him pensioner, trader, householder, citizen, man of substance, man of the world, man of science, man of learning, or even man of common sense, it is all over with his missionary character. He may innocently have some of these forms of character, some of them he cannot innocently have; but they will be far subordinate, deep in the shade, covered and extinguished to the world's incurious gaze, by the strange, incoherent and unaccountable character to which he surrendereth himself mainly. The world knoweth the missionary not, because it knew Messiah not. The nature of his life is hid with Christ in God. He is not a man, but the spirit of a man. He is a spirit that hath divested itself of all earthiness, save the continent body, which it keepeth down and useth as its tabernacle and its vehicle, and its mechanical tool for speech and for action.

The standard is a high one, and suiteth not an easy and prudential age, and we that are bred in peaceful places may stumble at it, and some of our self-sufficient spirits may scoff at it; but our fathers held it in reputation when they suffered the loss of all things, and counted them but as dung, that they might win Christ, and the missionaries who came to our fathers were accustomed to it. What is a missionary who shrinketh at it? Can he stand the stake or the cross who cannot bear hunger, thirst and nakedness? Was any man a martyr who could not be a hungered for Christ? What are purse, staff, scrip, raiment and friendship but the help and sustenance of life, taking their value from the love we have of life? If we are prepared to scuttle the ship, are we not prepared to sink the timbers and cordage and tackle of the ship? This unearthly dimension of the missionary character is in such keeping with the rest of the christian dispensation as to commend itself to our mind on that very account. Had it not been perfect in this its beau-ideal, had it not been accommodated to prudence and practice, a plausible, reasonable, fair-looking speculation like that which it seems hasting to become, I for one would have said, This is not like a character of Christ's delineation. It wanteth the touch of the divine hand. It hath not the supernatural air. It is of the earth, earthly. It is not of the heavens, heavenly. It is born of flesh. It consorteth with Mammon and hath fellowship with Belial. I doubt whether it be an original or not; for here in Christ's style is a description of faith as the substance of things hoped for; and here is a cloud of witnesses who by faith substantiated invisible things; and here is a description of the christian life as a walk by faith and not by sight; and here is a description of charity so perfect as to make the holiest man abhor himself; and here is a law which condemneth the just men; and here is a rule of chastity, and a rule for behaving to enemies, and a rule for alms-giving, and a thousand other rules of Christ; not one of which is calculated in accommodation to man's imperfections, but in accommodation to God's perfections; not in measure with man's weakness, but in measure with the Spirit's power; not for the strength of fallen nature, but for the sufficiency of the grace of God. Shall the individual traits of the christian character be superhuman, and the whole christian not be superhuman? Shall the christian be superhuman, and the missionary not be three times superhuman?

Stumble, therefore, who pleaseth at the severity of these institutions of the missionary; I glory in them. Tame them down who pleaseth; I, while I live, will uphold their sublimity. Temporize with them who please; they do it at their proper risk. Let it be mine to love and reverence my Savior's words. Nay, moreover, let them who please cool down the temper of the missionary, and lower the mark of his high calling; be it mine to rouse his spirit, and, if duty hindered not, to rouse my own spirit to the height of the undertaking. When the missionaries, the forlorn hope of our warfare, issue from the gate of our camp, let us cheer them with songs of ancient chivalry, with examples of ancient victory. Let the daughter of Zion brace the heart of her warlike sons with her heaven-derived minstrelsy, that they may go forth in the spirit of the mighty men of old, and scale the steep which frowneth upon flesh and blood, and plant the good standard of the faith upon the loftiest battlement of the enemy's strongest hold; which strong and lofty though it be, is not more strong than the strength of our God, nor more lofty than the flights of our faith; which strong and lofty though it be, is permitted thus high to rise and thus sternly to frown, only that it may prove the good temper of the warrior's soul, and prove before the high witnesses of the contest how humanity in the weakest of Christ's servants is stronger than death and the grave, than earth and hell, and can triumph over them and lead them captives, as did the great founder and everlasting captain of the missionary work. Therefore I say, let the lineament of perfection stand flaming forth, because it is the failing of human nature to rest satisfied with its attainments, and to come to a stand in its progress, through the might and multitude of surrounding objects. Unto feeble and faithless man there needeth always a voice like that which was given unto Moses when the people pressed between the angry sword of Pharaoh, and the raging sea stood still in sore dismay: "Speak unto the children of Israel that they go forward." Of all men the missionary needeth this voice the most, because his course is the roughest and his enemies the most inveterate. As the Baptist came in the desert, so he cometh in the moral wilderness and spiritual desert of human life; and though he be nothing but a voice, he crieth out, "Prepare the way of the Lord, make his paths straight; let every valley be filled, and every mountain and hill be brought low; let the crooked be made straight, and the rough places be made smooth." Such a one shall have in his teeth a phalanx of opposition, and he hath need of a heart like a lion's heart, and of a wing like an eagle's wing, and there must be upon his banner, Forward! forward! and that he may never faint nor fail, his banner should be this divine portrait of a perfect missionary, this safe conduct and assurance of ultimate success, to flame over the darkness of his path, like the pillar of fire which directed Israel in the watches of the night.

Father are one. "I in them, and thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one." "That they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and, I in thee, that they also may be one in us." "O righteous Father, the world hath not known thee; but I have known thee, and these have known that thou hast sent me. And I have declared unto them thy name, and will declare it; that the love wherewith thou hast loved me may be in them, and I in them." What a shedding abroad of love in the heart of sinful worms, that they may know his heavenly grace! "All thy children shall be taught of the Lord, and great shall be the peace of thy children." Thus the days of their widowhood shall be ended. They shall shout aloud for joy, and shall flow to the mountain of his holiness. Truly the Lord hath triumphed gloriously. The Spirit of the Lord God upon Jesus has searched the widow's heart. Penniless and broken-hearted she casts her burden upon the Lord, for she has nowhere else to go. He alone observes the heart and the hand at the treasury, and he only knows the motive. But great will be the devastation of she who sits as a queen, and says, "I am no widow," with all her train, in their Pharisaical pride and worldly ambition. In vain do they worship, teaching for doctrine the commandments of men. But each humble saint, having the eyes of their understanding enlightened, behold the Lord high and lifted up, and his train filling the temple. They find themselves undone, but find Jesus all in all to them.

SHOHOLA, Pa., April 24, 1893.

DEAR SISTER JENKINS:—I have a nice letter from sister Sarah E. Sayer, which was written to brethren Beebe; but she concluded she would send it to me. She told me to burn it after reading; but I think it a good letter, and I will not burn it. I think if she had sent it to the brethren Beebe it would have been published in the SIGNS. You may do what you think best with it.

Your unworthy sister,

MARY J. MCKEAN.

UNIONVILLE, N. Y., April, 1893.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—Last night I read Elder Durand's letter in the SIGNS on the "prodigal son," and my soul feasted on the gospel food it contained. When I awoke this morning these words came rushing into my mind, "Paul may plant, and Apollos water; but God must give the increase." The beauty these words contained for me is indescribable. It seemed that by an eye of faith I could see the church set up in its militant state, and shining forth in all its brilliancy and splendor. I could then say that I was a living witness to the truth then shown me. Elder Durand in relating the experience of the prodigal told my own plainer than I could. Looking back and traveling over again the seven long and weary years that I passed through, groping my way in the darkness, and finding no light, I could indeed bear testimony that the law was a hard taskmaster. But when the Sun of righteousness arose with healing in his wings, then all my self-righteousness did flee, and I was given that peace which passeth understanding. I could not then believe that I ever should grieve or see any more trouble. That was in the spring of the year 1858; and it seems now, in the year 1893, that the only hope I have is this, that if I am saved it is by grace alone; and if I am one of that number that come up out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb, all the praise is due to Father, Son and Holy Ghost; for of myself I can do nothing, and am often made to cry,

"Could the Savior live and die
For such a worthless worm as I?"

We have been wonderfully blessed of late in our church at Middletown. The Lord has made bare his arm, and we have been made to stand still and behold the wonders of his power in bringing his lambs out of Babylon, and gathering them into the fold, with believers to live and die. Paul has planted, and Apollos watered; but God gave the increase. As my dear parents used to say, there is no greater blessing on earth than a faithful gospel ministry. The longer I live, and the more I see of the world and its religion, the more I am made to appreciate the great blessing that has been bestowed on me. I am made to say, "The lines are fallen to me in pleasant places; yea, I have a goodly heritage." Ever since I can remember, I looked forward to the annual visits of your father and other saints with the greatest pleasure, as it made my parents so happy; and after I began to enjoy the things of the kingdom, and he opened the Scriptures to us so beautifully, I felt that we were greatly blessed; for I feel that your father was to us as a church what Paul was to those to whom he preached, holding forth the sincere milk of the word; and when he had finished his work, although it looked so dark and mysterious to us, yet God in his kindness gave us an Apollos to water, in the person of our dear pastor, who has been made strong in the Lord, not shunning to declare all the counsel of God. But God must give the increase, as was shown in our last church meeting, when one of the little ones, who had been with another denomination for nearly twenty years, was made to see that it was not the true church, and was directed by an unseen power to come where the gospel is preached in its purity. Also, another of the same family, who had been identified with the New School, and had been one of their bright lights, together with his wife, were made willing to come and identify themselves with "that sect that is everywhere spoken against;" "choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season." We were made to say, "It is the Lord's doings, and marvelous in our eyes." When we witnessed their burial in the watery grave, where the ice was cut, being twenty inches thick, we could truly say with the poet,

"Christians, if your hearts be warm,
Ice and snow can do no harm;
If by Jesus you are prized,
Rise, believe, and be baptized."

There seems to be many more feeding around "the shepherds' tents," and we hope the time is near when they may have strength given them to follow their Redeemer in his commands, that they may find rest unto their souls, and be no longer strangers and guests, but like children at home.

I must close these rambling thoughts by telling you that the good old SIGNS still comes laden with good news from a far country. It seems to me more precious than ever. Many times when wayworn and hungry, its messages of love revive and refresh me, and build me up in my most holy faith. As I have preserved the old volumes, I love to peruse their pages, and to think of the many loved writers who have gone home, leaving their messages behind them for me to feed upon. As I am so weak and forgetful, it sends me to the Bible to get the meaning of the Scriptures they contain, and I often receive great comfort.

Your unworthy sister in hope,
SARAH E. SAYER.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS:—Will you please examine and publish the following letter, or a part of it, if you think best?

JOSEPH HILYARD.

COTTON HILL, Ill., March 14, 1893.

JOSEPH HILYARD—DEAR BROTHER:—I reached Springfield in time for the train, and reached home all right, but met sad news in hearing of the death of old father Sanders, which occurred on Tuesday evening at nine o'clock. We attended his funeral on Thursday at Horse Creek church-house. After introducing the services I was blessed with the privilege of again hearing the glorious doctrine of salvation by grace, proclaimed by that dear brother, G. W. Murray. I was glad I was there. As we walked before the bearers who bore the dead body of that old servant of God to its last resting place, many were my thoughts. O my God, said I, that was the kind of funeral preaching for me. Jesus was first, and Jesus was last. Whenever we get away from him, we get away from the truth, away from the gospel, away from the life, away from the resurrection, away from the right way. With Jesus we have it all; for he is God over all, blessed for evermore. O that the God of heaven may reveal his Son to his ministers, and make them bold as lions in declaring him as God's salvation to poor, perishing sinners. This is my greatest desire, to know him, whom to know is life eternal. On this eternal life my only hope depends. A glorious thought it is, that the strong cords of God's eternal love can never be severed by the fiery darts of Satan. They only have a tendency to increase the faith of God's servants in the proclamation of his glorious gospel in the salvation of sinners. When his ministers can realize the sweetness of that honey which Samson found in the dead carcass of the lion, O how bold it makes them. There is a vast difference between that honey and the honey made by bees from wild flowers, which only feeds the natural man and sustains his natural life. The other feeds the soul, and strengthens us in that eternal life in which we grow in the Lord. This is not found in nature's garden; it is only found in the Lion of the tribe of Judah, the Root and Offspring of David, the bright and morning Star. Although he was once dead, he is alive for evermore. To this end we look, we pray, we rest, in the hope of the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ, who shall change our vile body and fashion it like unto his glorious body. Brought into that glorious rest that remains to God's dear children,

"Sickness and sorrow, pain and death,
Are felt and feared no more."

May this be the happy lot of us all, is my desire.

I had no thought of writing what I have when I began. I hope this will find you still improving in health. I cannot say I am well. It fell to my lot to try to do the preaching at Sugar Creek on Saturday and Sunday. Love to all.

Yours as ever,

C. C. PURVINES.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

DIED—Very suddenly, May 3d, 1893, after a long illness, Edward Vermilyea, of Dunraven, N. Y., in the 64th year of his age.

Brother Vermilyea had gastric trouble of the stomach for many years, and had been, until a short time before his death, confined to the house for more than six months; but for a time before his death he was so improved in strength that he went out, and was able to attend meeting on Saturday and Sunday before his death, at which time he participated in the communion service, enjoying it well. It was my privilege to stay at his house on Saturday evening, little thinking it was my last visit with him and his dear wife together on earth. But such are the ways of our God; and while his dear companion is left lonely and childless to mourn, and the church has lost an efficient member, we trust that for him to die was gain. He had been a member of the church for many years, and knew that in the world he had tribulation.

On the night of his demise there was nothing alarming about his condition, but apparently quietude reigned until he had occasion to get up; and as he laid down again something seemed to give way in his stomach, and he never spoke again. His wife spoke to him, but not getting any answer arose, to see him breathe his last. It was a great shock to her, as they were alone in the house, and she must go for help and return to the lonesome dwelling. I trust the dear Lord gave her strength equal to her day of trial, and that his grace was sufficient; but the loneliness none but those who have felt it can tell.

I was away at the time of his burial, and Elder Keene preached on the occasion. May God sustain the widow and relatives and the church in this loss.

ALSO,

MAY 14th, 1893, Mr. and Mrs. Jonathan Ballard, of Batavia Kill, N. Y., aged 89 and 75 years.

Their son Harris had gone before them on Monday previous, and was buried on Wednesday. Their disease was pneumonia. Sister Ballard was taken sick before the burial of her son, who left a fully swallowed up in victory, because the victory then is fully given through our Lord Jesus Christ. Herein is the fullness of my comfort for all the afflicted ones, as well as for the church of God; for the last trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible. So we trust that father, mother and son are at rest; all within a week being taken from the home place, to leave the fatherless and widow to mourn, but not as those who have no hope. Four sons and a daughter, with many other relatives and the church, are left to mourn. May the sustaining hand of God be their reliance.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date. This date denotes the time at which your subscription expires; and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

CORRESPONDENCE.

FREMONT, Neb., Feb. 14, 1893.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—The time has rolled around once more for me to renew my subscription for the SIGNS, I will also add an extra dollar, which you may use for the benefit of another as you see fit. This certainly does not come grudgingly. I regard it as a pleasant duty, and it calls forth a feeling of thankfulness to the Giver of all gifts that he has not only placed me in a condition that I can procure for myself our valuable medium of correspondence, but has also enabled me to assist others who are less fortunate. I regret that I cannot do better than this. I also feel glad that this disposition seems to prevail among the brethren and sisters in general. This is a right spirit; for what have we that we have not received? If I feel inclined while here in solitude to sit down and commune with those of like precious faith who are scattered throughout the length and breadth of this land, through this paper which God has blessed to our use, even in this I trust his counsel guides me and his right hand upholds me. It is a blessed privilege which I think we all enjoy. But I often feel very small and insufficient when I try to write, and have so many things in my mind that I want to say, and really doubt that I shall ever be able to bring order out of it, or be enabled to commit my thoughts to paper so that my meaning will be intelligible to others; for nature never has bestowed much of her gift on me. I have to say with the apostle, "By the grace of God I am what I am." I remember that an old brother, and able writer for the SIGNS, once said that he thought the writers for the paper generally occupied too much valuable space in framing excuses for their letters. That was said long ago, but I remember I thought to say in reply, We are not all a Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas, or even like yourself, expressly adapted to the edifying of the body. God hath set the members in the body as it hath pleased him. All are not a hand nor a foot. All are by the wise master Builder placed in perfect order; the head to rule, the hand to work, the foot to support the body that it may walk uprightly, the ear to hear, the eye to see, the heart to understand; all are in his own order. To these are added the less useful members, else the body would not be complete and perfect. "Blessed are your eyes, for they see; and your ears for they hear." There is a blessing for all. This is the bride, the Lamb's wife; and when seen by her Husband in her spotless robe of righteousness he says of her, "Thou art all fair, my love; there is no spot in thee."

Martha was cumbered about much serving; while Mary, whom it pleased the Master to give greater instruction, was satisfied to sit at his feet and listen to his words. I often feel that perhaps I have mistaken my calling, and that it would be more profitable for myself and others if I could be more content to listen to others, whom God has set as instructors in his kingdom, and not impose upon what may perhaps be the rights of others. While I hope I do most heartily appreciate and enjoy that which I receive from the pen of others, yet I cannot at all times resist the desire that arises to add my feeble efforts as a testimony of the goodness and mercy of God, who is so merciful to me, and to speak of his majesty and immutability as they are impressed on my mind. While I hope I have no desire to knowingly shun my whole duty, yet the flesh is so weak that I often question the truth of these desires as coming from the right spirit, and wonder if they are only the working of the flesh, which we have no right to bring into the spiritual kingdom; for flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God. Another great hindrance is that I am but a weak, sinful woman, and perhaps I never see anything in the right light; yet I am always willing to leave anything I write to the judgment of the editors. I once told the late Elder McKay of the feeling I had respecting the position of woman in the church, and how I regarded her womanhood as a bar that seemed to exclude and shut her out from the full privilege of giving her understanding of the Scriptures as freely as the brethren may. With this feeling, which seems born to me as a part of my nature, one can imagine the battling I have done to overcome this feeling, whenever I have felt a desire to write again for our paper. The Elder did not agree with me in this idea, and quoted the prophecy of Joel, that in the last days God would pour out of his Spirit upon all flesh, and they should prophesy. "And upon the handmaids in those days will I pour out my Spirit." "And your sons and your daughters shall prophesy." I agreed with him that these are the last days, but I considered that prophecy had been fulfilled on the day of Pentecost. Also, at that time the gospel was preached to all nations; for there were gathered at Jerusalem at that time people of every nation under heaven, and the gospel was preached. In these days of so-called wisdom and enlightenment, when men put light for darkness, and darkness for light, which are days of spiritual wickedness, when men have become wise above what is written, it is no strange thing to see the Protestant daughters of the strange woman standing at the corners of the streets; for their feet abide not in their own house, and their work is to lead captive silly ones. They say of themselves, We have paid our vows; or, in the more modern way of speaking, We are holy ourselves; we have consecrated ourselves to God and his work; we have made our peace with him; we are without sin. And this, too, in direct contradiction to the Scriptures, which say, "If we say we have no sin we deceive ourselves and the truth is not in us." They say they are commissioned of God to convert sinners; that they have peace offerings with them, which they offer to the people. With their much fair speech and flattering words they cause them to yield. The simple go after them, as the ox goeth to the slaughter, and know not their house is the way to hell, going down to the chamber of death. But are we by nature better than they? No, by no means. By nature we were children of wrath, even as others. But we hope that God in his great mercy has given us a knowledge of the truth, while they are blinded. Except the Lord had left us a seed, we had been as Sodom and Gomorrah. Except God for Christ's sake had done better things for us, we would still be in darkness with them. They being in darkness, know nothing of God's power and Spirit; for the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned. How absurd is the idea of attempting to teach a dead man, or trying to make him believe that he is in need of anything. "The dead know not anything." They cannot teach one dead sinner to know God, whom to know is life eternal. They cannot teach them that the conditions of salvation were settled in eternity; that salvation rested entirely upon one who is able to save to the uttermost all that come unto God by him; who has met and fulfilled all the conditions of salvation, and by the one offering perfected forever all them that are sanctified, so that there remains no more sacrifice for sin. "They are of the world, therefore speak they of the world, and the world heareth them." But John says, "We are of God. He that knoweth God heareth us." We are comforted with the thought that his own arm brought salvation unto him, and of the people there was none to help. His arm ruled for him, his reward was with him, and his work before him. When he made his soul an offering for sin he saw of the travail of his soul, and was satisfied. He has declared that he will feed his flock like a shepherd, and gather the lambs in his arms. He is not yet impoverished. If he were hungry he would not ask of us. The cattle on a thousand hills are his. He saith unto Zion, "Fear not, for I am with thee." "I have redeemed thee; thou art mine." "I will bring the blind by a way they knew not; I will lead them in paths they have not known." "I have blotted out, as a thick cloud, thy transgressions, and, as a cloud, thy sins. Return unto me; for I have redeemed thee." He carried them all the days of old, saying unto Zion, "Thy God reigneth." "Comfort ye, comfort ye my people, saith your God. Speak ye comfortably to Jerusalem [whose children rise up and call her blessed], and cry unto her that her warfare is accomplished, that her iniquity is pardoned; for she hath received of the Lord's hand double for all her sins." Not at the hand of another, as a "revivalist" once said in this place, as he stood with one hand outstretched to the congregation, and the other hand pointing to heaven, and with words of dreadful blasphemy said, "I stand here with offered mercy from God, and it is with you to accept it or reject it." Do not such plainly manifest themselves as sons of perdition, exalting themselves above God, and calling themselves God? "Whose coming is after the working of Satan." Do they not make God a liar? For he has said that he has all power in heaven and earth. Would such language admit that God does his will in the army of heaven and among the inhabitants of the earth? Do they not profess to have more power than the Savior himself? God has prepared a people for himself, and they shall show forth his praise. To them he said, "Fear not; for I am with thee." They are continually before him. They are engraved on the palms of his hands. He says, "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee." "When thou passest through the waters, they shall not overflow thee; and through the fire, it shall not kindle upon thee." Although we do him oft forget, yet he does not forget us, nor mark iniquity against us. When the word of the Lord came to Elijah, directing his feet eastward, and to hide himself by the brook Cherith, he made haste and delayed not; for he had faith in God that he would direct his steps aright. I have often wondered why the raven, an unclean bird, was chosen of God to carry food to sustain one of his prophets; yet I do believe God had a purpose in it; for all Scripture given by inspiration of God is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works. They are a thorough furnisher to the people of God in all things pertaining to God and godliness. They testify of Jesus, and are for the instruction of the saints in spiritual things. We might mention many holy men of old who by their works proved their faith in God, God working in them and through them, using them as means, that his power might be displayed, to the declaring this own glory. But some one may say, I thought you did not believe in means. O, yes I do, but not the means of finite man. I do believe that God has used means, and has used man as a means when it has so pleased him; but he has never used man as a means of giving eternal life. Was not the selling of Joseph into Egypt the means of saving much people alive? Also, the raven was the means by which Elijah was sustained. It is the circumstance of Elijah being fed by an unclean bird, in connection with my own life at present, that I wish to speak of. God is the same yesterday, to-day and forever. His means are not exhausted, as I want to prove. I do not claim to understand the spiritual significance of the word Cherith as we find it here recorded in connection with this prophet, nor do I consider it necessary. It is enough for me to know that it was the will and order of God that the prophet should be separated and hidden from his people, and that he trusted in God to supply his needs. Many who are familiar with my life know that I, like Elijah, am a castaway, having sold my birthright. It is a desert land in which I dwell; no pleasant fruits; no cooling streams; no gleaning in fields where handfuls are dropped on purpose for me, that I may gather and find favor in the sight of the Lord God of Israel, under whose shadow we have come to trust. While the nations round about me flourish as a green bay tree, and their eyes stand out with fatness, and they have more than heart can wish, why is it, I ask myself, that in all this city, this mixed multitude of nations, there is found but one poor, trembling sinner whose only hope is in God, in that mighty power which was wrought in Christ when he was raised from the dead? "In whom we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of his grace." While those round me say they are warm, they have found the fire, in spite of my exertions I grow cold and lifeless in regard to God and spiritual things. Were it possible that Jesus could forget Calvary, and the travail of his own soul, or his covenant with his chosen, then might my hope perish.

You may wonder why I have given expression to my mind in the manner I have. It may seem rude to some, and not becoming to one like myself; but I cannot help it; I must give relief to my mind; for the ravens, in the form of false religionists (revivalists, as they call themselves), have disturbed my slumber, have awakened me from my sleep, by their chattering noise, and their bright and borrowed plumage; but of themselves they are black; for it is plainly evident that the light of the knowledge of the glory of God has never shined in their hearts to reveal to them the corruption and sin that is hidden therein. These blind leaders of the blind invite, urge, and, if needs be, force poor, deluded, scared, excited mortals up to their anxious benches, telling them that God has done all he can, and that it is impossible for them to be saved unless they come up and accept God as their Savior; and to convince them of the truth of their theory, they quote this Scripture, "What more can I do for my vineyard?" Then, of course, God has made a failure, and it depends on man to follow on after and finish what God was unable to do. God forbid! They call upon the multitude to come and hear the gospel preached, while they preach not the gospel at all; for the gospel is the power of God unto salvation. They preach the power of man. There is a path which no fowl knoweth, and which the vulture's eye hath not seen. The redeemed of the Lord walk there. The world does not desire it. There is not room there for their works. This way is so high that it reaches to heaven, and so deep that it reaches down to the lowest depths, and so broad that there is room for all who are less than the least of all saints.

I must bring this to a close; yet I have not said what was in my mind, as I would like to. I did hope and feel when I sat down that perhaps I might be able to write some of my thoughts, if only for my own satisfaction, wherein by the blessing of God, and not for any merit of my own, I have been made to differ from those whose hearts are hardened, and whose eyes are blinded, lest they should see, and be converted, and be healed, as said Jesus.

"My brethren, count it all joy when ye fall into divers temptations, knowing this, that the trial of your faith worketh patience." "Tribulation worketh patience, and patience experience, and experience hope." The everlasting Father is able to keep us, and to lead us into the perfect way. Through his abounding goodness and mercy we are enabled to lift up our eyes to the hills, from whence cometh our help, to the strong tower of his everlasting covenant, and find that new and living way which he hath consecrated for us through the veil, that is to say, the flesh of Jesus; to draw nigh with a true heart, in full assurance of faith, trusting our all to him, who is able to keep us from falling, and to present us faultless before the throne.

If I have written anything amiss, may God forgive me; and to his holy and reverend name be all praise throughout time and eternity.

Your sinful yet hopeful sister,
ABBIE CODDINGTON.

LOXA, Ill., March 20, 1893.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—I inclose a letter received some days since from our esteemed brother H. Cox, who is at present located in Cincinnati. There is too much of the good and excellent manna that cometh down from above, in this letter of his, to be hidden away under a bushel. The saints are of one common household. They are the subjects of the same spiritual kingdom. The same heavenly truths are of interest to the entire chosen generation. And if one so poor and feeble as I feel myself to be, is comforted and encouraged by messages of love from some brother or sister who wields the pen of a ready writer, is it not possible that others may share in the precious things conveyed through the medium of the pen, and sent out through the columns of our family paper? May the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ abound with and keep his saints in peace, is my sincere desire.

Your brother,
J. G. SAWIN.

CINCINNATI, Ohio, March 9, 1893.

DEAR BROTHER J. G. SAWIN:—I am in receipt of a letter from brother Farmer, in which he told me of the great enjoyment afforded him by the sermon you delivered at the last January meeting at Little Flock Church. He said that the subject discoursed by you in that sermon was the deep and profoundly interesting truth given to God's dear people by the prophet, in the seventeenth verse of the third chapter of the prophecy of Daniel. The words of that text are as follows, "If it be so, our God whom we serve is able to deliver us from the burning fiery furnace, and he will deliver us out of thine hand, O king." You will please pardon me for giving you some of my thoughts and meditations that have been given me upon that subject since I received brother Farmer's letter. It is written, "All Scripture (is) given by inspiration of God, and (is) profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness."—2 Tim. ii. 16. The question appropriately suggests itself to us, How are the saints profited in this gospel day by the history given therein, in which is recorded the persecutions of the haughty king Nebuchadnezzar? Since that period the pen of the historian has recorded the acts and doings of great men, and the rise and downfall of kingdoms, empires and republics. But in what manner are the saints instructed in righteousness by pouring over those musty pages? Surely in no wise. They were not given by inspiration of God. But the prophet Daniel gives us by inspiration the acts and doings of Nebuchadnezzar; therefore we should look in that history thus given for that which will instruct us in righteousness. The conclusion to which, perhaps, we should arrive is that those historic facts are figurative; and if so, to what does that proud king point? He was proud. He was in his own mind independent of all other powers save his own. He had made an image of gold, and he called his officers and all his chief men to attend its dedication; and he made a decree that at the sound of his musical instruments all should fall down and worship his golden image which he had set up; and he affixed a penalty upon all who disobeyed that decree. He said, "And whoso falleth not down and worshipeth, shall be cast the same hour into the midst of a burning fiery furnace." The most fearful death was the penalty; and that decree and that penalty originated in the mind of that proud monarch. He disregarded the laws of heaven. "Thou shalt not kill." But in his imaginary independence of all other powers he set up that image, made that decree, and fixed that penalty. This is sufficient to show his ignorance of him who doeth according to his will in the army of heaven and among the inhabitants of the earth.

The question now suggests itself, What does that part of the history of Nebuchadnezzar prefigure? To that question this answer might be given, His pride, his ignorance of the existence of the great Jehovah, and his extreme wickedness, evidently and aptly prefigured the infidelity, corruption and wickedness of the descendants of the first Adam. They were carnally minded, and the carnal mind is enmity against God. Their feet are swift to shed blood; destruction and misery are in their ways; their mouth is full of cursing and bitterness; the way of peace have they not known. These declarations apply with wonderful force to Nebuchadnezzar. His idolatry showed clearly his entire lack of knowledge of a great and all-over-ruling power. His pride in setting up that golden image, and his attempt to destroy Shadrach, Meshach and Abednego, showed the depth of corruption into which he was sunk, and that his feet were swift to shed blood. Carnality evidently pervaded his whole being; and the history of our race in all past ages, as well as the present, clearly presents this mournful truth, that we by nature are no better than he was. Every day's development of the wickedness of man now on the earth forbids that any should plead not guilty to the indictment drawn by the inspired apostle, and recorded in the third chapter of his epistle to the church at Rome. The apostle says, "For whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, is guilty of all."—James ii. 10. Then surely there are none righteous, no, not one. All have gone out of the way. All have become unprofitable.

Nebuchadnezzar knew not God. He had no faith in the glorious Son of God. Therefore he was under the dominion of sin. And what better naturally are any of the fallen sons of Adam than he? All are counted under transgression, and the advent of our glorious Lord was to save his people from that awful condition. His name was borne to earth by a heavenly messenger, and that name was declarative of his mission. "His name shall be called Jesus; for he shall save his people from their sins." It was to save them from the awful condition in which they were involved by reason of sin; and Nebuchadnezzar fitly represented that condition.

But let us, dear brother, turn from this gloomy picture. Let us look to those three Hebrew children, and inquire what they represent. Their answer to the king indicated clearly what people they typified. They said to the king, "O Nebuchadnezzar, we are not careful to answer thee in this matter;" and then they said, in the words of your text, "If it be so, our God whom we serve is able to deliver us from the burning fiery furnace, and he will deliver us out of thine hand." Then it is but fair to conclude that they prefigured all the regenerated sons and daughters of the Most High who ever have or ever will live upon the earth. But what a contrast. That haughty king in his infidelity (which represents all the fallen sons of Adam in their earthly relationship) denying by his decree and their consequent punishment all other powers except his own; declaring by his acts that there was no God beside his idol god. But the other side of this contrast brings comfort and consolation to the redeemed. By it they are profited, because they are instructed in righteousness. They declare their faith in the God whom they serve, and defy the power of men. Their faith in God is that which is the gift of God. In view of their faith the apostle could appropriately say,

"Now abideth faith, hope, charity." It abode with Shadrach, Meshach and Abednego, because it was the gift of God; and the gifts and calling of God are without repentance. It abode with them, and enabled them to defy the powers of the king, and to treat with contempt his fiery furnace. It was by that faith that the ancient servants of God mentioned in the eleventh chapter of Hebrews defied the powers and persecutions of earth, and were brought off conquerors, and more than conquerors, through the power of that God who walked in the fiery furnace with the Hebrew children, and delivered them unhurt before that idolatrous king and his host. They are they who rejoice in Christ Jesus, and have no confidence in the flesh. They have beheld by faith their glorious Lord in his incarnation and humiliation. But more glorious still, they have by faith beheld him coming forth from the darkness of the tomb, clad in glorious immortality; and they have beheld with almost seraphic delight his sons and daughters coming to his fold, declaring what great things the Lord has done for them; things which have filled their inmost being with joy and rejoicing; things which have bound them together with the strong bonds of christian love and fellowship; things which have enabled them to sing the song of Moses, the servant of God, and the song of the Lamb, saying, "Great and marvelous are thy works, Lord God Almighty. Just and true are thy ways, thou King of saints." Beholding the great and wonderful conquest of their God they cry out in the language of Moses, "There is none like unto the God of Jeshurun, who rideth upon the heaven in thy help, and in his excellency on the sky."—Deut. xxxiii. 26. Yea, they give unto the Lord the glory due unto his name, and set up no graven images. They rejoice in him because he hath sent redemption unto his people. When they by grace are enabled to behold their perverseness in time, by faith they cry out with the psalmist, "The Lord preserveth the simple: I was brought low and he helped me. Return unto thy rest, O my soul, for the Lord hath dealt bountifully with thee."—Psa. cxvi. 7. But when the saints, who are prefigured by the three Hebrew children, are enabled to rejoice in their Lord as their great deliverer, they turn with longing eyes to their future and eternal home. As he delivered those three persecuted saints from the power of a great monarch clothed with unlimited earthly power, and backed by a powerful nation of idolaters, so they rest all their hope and confidence in him, fully trusting and believing that he will finally deliver them from sorrow, pain, disease and death, and secure to them the great and glorious inheritance of the saints, where there are joys evermore.

Dear brother Sawin, you will please pardon me for having let my pen run on so far without, perhaps, giving a single thought that would edify or instruct you. Brother Farmer did not give me even the outlines of your sermon at Little Flock, therefore you will please not conclude that I have attempted to controvert any part of that sermon, which I have no doubt was able, instructive and edifying to God's people then assembled there; but you will please accept these feeble and rambling thoughts as a token of my love and fellowship for you. I am in usual health, but my wife has been in feeble health all winter. Please write me when you have leisure. Tender my kindest regards to your family, and believe me affectionately yours, OAK CREEK, Ore., April 23, 1893.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—In No. 15, present volume of the SIGNS, I read, "Will Elder J. P. Allison give his views on Rev. iii. 20?" And you, brethren Beebe, add, "We unite in that request." I would be truly glad to comply with that request if I thought I could say one word, even one, that would comfort you, who have so often comforted this poor sinner. Excuse my weakness, but I will have to confess that I fell in love with you, Elder Beebe, in the time of the late civil war; and my love for you and the glorious doctrine of grace that you proclaim in the dear old SIGNS has never abated in the least since then. Your reply to the questions of "A Pilgrim" on the subject of the Sabbath was so good and full of marrow that I said to my wife after reading it, "How beautiful are the feet of those who preach the gospel of peace, and bring glad tidings of good things." What a blessing indeed to know and feast upon this joyful sound. His feet are shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace. "How beautiful are thy feet with shoes, O prince's daughter." I can say in truth that the dear old SIGNS OF THE TIMES is filled brim full, every number, with the pure unadulterated gospel. What able writers we have. There is that solid veteran, Elder Wm. J. Purington, whom I love to read after; he is so firm. He says, "Now some Scripture shall be brought forward," &c. Then there is that sweet and able gift bestowed upon Elder Chick. It is wonderful. Then comes our dearly beloved brother Durand, with his wonderful gift of healing and feeding. It matters not where the sheep are, he always gets the food in the right place. Then brother Coulter comes along and goes with us to the banqueting-house, and by the river of waters, and gives us a taste of the wine, and makes us feel like we are all present, eating and drinking of the good things of the kingdom.

I might speak of many other precious writers; but dear sister Parker is the wonder of all. O how touching and simple and sweet are the expressions of love in that poor, suffering heart. I have shed tears time and again while trying in my feeble manner to petition mercy for her.

But I must close. I did not intend to write what I have when I sat down; but I wished to say to you, dear brethren, that I want you to write on the text proposed by our "Pilgrim," as I am farming now, and am so tired and worked down that I cannot write; and then I am so unlearned in letters and writing that it would be a greater task for you to get my disjointed matter ready for the press than it would be for you to do the writing at first; and it would be much more instructive than anything I could write; so please take the cruise and just let it run. May the good Lord bless you, dear brethren, and sustain our dear old medium of correspondence. Fare ye well in the Lord.

J. P. ALLISON.

DILLEY, Oregon, May 26, 1893.

BRETHREN BEEBE:—You will find inclosed two dollars to renew our subscription to the SIGNS, which will soon be out. As we failed to send even one new name, we send the regular price, and truly believe that God will enable you to keep the dear old paper going so long as his people have need of it. Woe will be upon that people should the time come when they have no need of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, so long as it is published as in times past, in defense of the truth as it is in Christ Jesus. I know of a large church whose leading members patronized the SIGNS for years, but who one by one dropped it, deeming it too hard, ruthlessly trampling under foot the feelings of the tenderlings of the flock; and that same church grew and waxed weak, though her numbers were many. After a time discord arose, many of her members went out after strange gods, even a golden calf was made, and many of them fell down and worshiped it; and that church split asunder, the majority becoming unto us as heathen, and the remainder suffered, but stood firm in the truth, and I hope will again patronize our family paper, instead of those having an uncertain sound.

Yours in hope,

MRS. J. K. BOYD.

EDITORIAL NOTICES.

PLEASE COPY.

WE frequently receive articles, especially obituaries, which we are requested to ask other publications to "please copy." This we do not like to do for several reasons. In the first place, we are not willing to omit original matter to copy from other papers; and we do not like to ask other publishers to do what we are not willing to do ourselves. Besides, there are a large number taking the SIGNS who also take other papers, and to all such the copied articles would be stale.

SELF-EXAMINATION.

"EXAMINE yourselves, whether ye be in the faith; prove your own selves. Know ye not your own selves, how that Jesus Christ is in you, except ye be reprobates?"—2 Cor. xiii. 5.

The direction here given demands the especial attention of every one to whom it is directed, and can by no means be distorted to make it applicable to one who is not specified by the inspired writer of the epistle. It is manifestly absurd to suppose that the apostle was moved by the Holy Ghost to admonish unbelievers to make such an examination of themselves. By reference to the opening expression of this epistle it will be seen that both the authority of the writer and the characters addressed are clearly defined. "Paul, an apostle of Jesus Christ by the will of God, and Timothy our brother, unto the church of God which is at Corinth, with all the saints which are in all Achaia." This limitation of the application of what is contained in this letter must ever be observed by all who would properly understand the things which are written for the learning of the saints. Throughout the letter the same peculiar people are described, and every word of comfort must be confined in its application to them. So also the severe reproofs and denunciations of carnality, by which the conduct of some is condemned, can be given to none but the saints to whom the letter is written. It is very congenial with the pride and self-confidence of the natural mind to regard these expressions of condemnation as belonging to the unbelieving world, and often the saints may be blinded by this delusive perversion of the truth. The best and only safe criterion by which to try the suggestions which appear plausible to reason is found in the effect produced upon the saint by them. Nothing in the testimony of Jesus is correctly understood if it fails to produce abhorrence of sin in the subject of divine instruction. Whatever truth may be expressed in the letter of any theory, it is not the faith of Jesus Christ unless it shows his infinite holiness in contrast with the exceeding sinfulness of the natural mind in the sinner in whose heart the light of that truth is revealed. This is an important fact to be remembered by the believer, not only as a test of sound doctrine, but for his own comfort. It is a matter of personal interest to each one of the saints.

"Examine yourselves whether ye be in the faith." Blind reason perverts this admonition so as to make it require the follower of Jesus to seek some evidences of righteousness in himself. Failing to find any good thing in his flesh, the tried believer would sink in despair but for the abiding witness of that living faith which is the fruit of the Spirit of Christ, and which never can be destroyed. Hence it is of vital importance to every saint that he should evermore abide in the assurance of that unerring testimony which is given for the support of everyone whose hope is in Jesus. Very often the result of this self-examination will show the troubled saint that instead of abiding in the faith of the Son of God, he has become entangled with legal bondage, so that he is endeavoring to attain to justification by righteousness of his own. When thus captivated by the delusive snare of the adversary, the bewildered pilgrim has unconsciously forsaken the strong defense of that faith which is inseparable from his hope in Christ; and in seeking for righteousness by the works of the law, he has denied the Lord Jesus as his only and sufficient refuge. While thus entangled again with the yoke of legal bondage, he is not resting in the faith. It may be that he has professed the belief of the truth, and that he would contend for the letter of the doctrine of salvation alone by the grace of God in Christ Jesus; but it is evident that he is not in that faith when he is looking for evidences of righteousness in himself, and cast down with despondency because he finds nothing in himself to justify his claim to acceptance in the sight of God. When the light of truth is applied to the experience of the saint he finds that his hope does not rest in his own righteousness; for it was when he was conscious of his just condemnation that Jesus Christ was revealed in him as the end of the law for righteousness to him. Only as he abides in the faith of Jesus can he rest in the confidence of that comfortable hope by which he is saved from despair under the consciousness of the law of sin still working in his members. Therefore it is for the confirmation of their souls in the confidence of hope that they are to closely examine themselves as admonished in the text. When the saints are listening to the cruel suggestions of the adversary, and trying to find in themselves some merit to authorize their claim to be the followers of Christ, there is nothing in their action to support the claim that they are in the faith. Their works deny the profession of their trust in the finished work of Jesus as the complete satisfaction of all the demands of infinite justice. So effectually bewildered are those thus captivated by their carnal reasoning, that it is only by the Spirit of truth shining in their hearts they discover that they are not in the faith. In every such departure from the faith the wandering saint suffers the loss of the strong consolation found in the sure mercies of David as ministered to those who trust in the everlasting strength of the Lord.

In the faith which was once delivered unto the saints there is a sure defense against every assault of the enemies of their peace. When the truth is assailed by enemies, either in the form of wicked men or evil spirits, there is no confidence to be reposed in the strength of reason for repelling such attacks. Only by the living faith of the Son of God shall the adversaries be turned to confusion. The doctrine is not dependent upon the ability of men for its defense; the Spirit of truth will take care of his own holy teaching. The very weakness and insufficiency of the little ones which believe in Jesus shall cause the glory of God to appear the more clearly in giving the victory to his truth in every conflict. There is never occasion for trembling lest the enemy should prevail against the truth. All the omnipotence of the eternal God protects his own doctrine. That protection also secures the preservation of all who hope in the salvation which God has revealed in Jesus Christ. Then it is of serious importance to the saints to be firmly established in the faith. This is their strong tower of safety, in which they need fear no evil. Dwelling in this secret place of the Most High, every believer abides under the shadow of the Almighty. Secure in that holy habitation, it is written, "There shall no evil befall thee, neither shall any plague come nigh thy dwelling." Surely no saint can afford to think lightly of this solemn admonition.

"Prove your own selves." The word prove in this expression has the meaning of test, or try. This is evident from the context, as well as from the letter of the text. It is a specification of how the saints are admonished to examine themselves. There is precious assurance to the believer in the fact that the Spirit works in the heart of each of them the most sincere obedience to this exhortation. While it is all the desire of the carnal religionist to get to heaven at last, the subject of divine teaching longs to be free from the pollution of sin, and to be perfectly conformed to the likeness of his holy Redeemer. He can never be satisfied until this earnest aspiration is fulfilled. The law of holiness is implanted in him; and it is his delight to work righteousness. He does not have to read the requirements of the law in tables of stone; the Lord has put his law in his heart, and thus works in him both to will and to do of his own good pleasure. Since this is the work of God, there is no uncertainty about its fulfillment. Hence it is the infallible test in every case. The chosen people of God are a willing people. They are not able to deliver themselves from the bondage of sin; but they feel to cry for deliverance. No others bear this peculiar mark.

In proving your own selves all who bear this mark are in fellowship with Paul and all the inspired servants of God.

"Know ye not your own selves, how that Jesus Christ is in you, except ye be reprobates?" It is the very basis of the hope of every saint that he is so identified with the only Savior of sinners that the life of Jesus abides in him. That vital principle of holiness produces hunger and thirst after the perfect righteousness revealed in Christ Jesus as the complete fulfillment of the law of God. Without assurance of this essential truth no conscious sinner could hope in the grace of God for salvation. However he may feel the need of deliverance from the curse of the law, no one who knows and loves the holiness of God can desire that the truth and immutability of divine perfection should be sacrificed for the sake of such a justly condemned wretch as he sees himself. The only source from which the love of holiness can arise in the heart must be the Spirit of Christ. "Now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." This is the decisive test in the case of every one who claims to be interested in the salvation which is in the Lord Jesus. "For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God."—Rom. viii. 9, 14. By this testimony of inspiration the Holy Ghost has defined the exact number of those sinners who are saved in the everlasting covenant of electing love. They are not ordained unto life because they are so submissive as to follow the direction of the Spirit of God; but it is because they are embraced in the eternal love of God that they were chosen of him in Christ Jesus before the foundation of the world, that they should be holy and without blame before him in love. There is no revelation by which the cause of this abounding grace can be traced further than the eternal counsel of the will of God. In vain may reason strive to comprehend why God was thus pleased to reveal the inconceivable riches of his grace. He has given no account of this mystery to the comprehension of created intelligence beyond that which was declared by our dear Redeemer. "Even so, Father, for so it seemed good in thy sight." The most bitter enemy against God is not more opposed than the carnal mind of the subject of electing love to this sovereignty of God in the display of his great grace in the salvation of his people from their sins. While the saint is made constantly to feel the conflict between that law of sin in his members, and the desire and love of righteousness, it is only when the Spirit of truth manifests in him the light of life that he can see the abiding presence of Jesus Christ in himself. This witness is given only through that faith of the Son of God which reason cannot receive; nor can the natural mind discern the assurance of this spiritual testimony.

Hence there is an unceasing conflict between the flesh and the Spirit in the case of every believer in Jesus. By faith he knows that he has passed from death unto life, having the witness of the love of the brethren. With the natural mind he can see no evidence to support his hope, since he still knows that sin works in him its awful development of abomination. When severely tried in this terrible strife the adversary often suggests the charge that he is mistaken in all his hope, and that he is a reprobate. This text is an effectual shield against this cruel charge. None can be reprobates who have the desire to be delivered from the power of sin. Only by the living Spirit of Christ dwelling in them can there be such a holy aspiration in the heart of any sinner. This is not merely a great truth to be learned by reference to the inspired testimony. It is clearly revealed in the individual experience of every one who is led by the Spirit. This knowledge cannot be attained in any other way but by the revelation of Christ in you the hope of glory. When the truth is presented as included in the doctrine of the gospel, without reference to his own personal case, the believer will not question the evidence of the indwelling of Jesus Christ in every one who loves holiness and feels sin to be a cruel burden. This knowledge cannot exist in any one who is not in possession of that faith which can only be the fruit of the Spirit. Therefore Jesus Christ is in every one who has the hatred of sin in his heart. No such character can by any possibility be a reprobate. The more deeply the consciousness of this bondage under sin is felt as a burden, the more manifest is the testimony that Jesus Christ dwells in that heavy laden one. His deepest groaning attests his hunger and thirst after righteousness. He is thereby sealed as an heir of God and a joint heir with Christ to the heritage of infinite holiness unto which all the saints are appointed.

Instead of this exhortation being designed to set the saints to the hopeless task of finding in themselves such good works as should encourage them to hope in their own worthiness, it expressly directs the perplexed one to the only ground of his confidence, in the revelation of Jesus Christ as ever dwelling in each of his helpless and severely tried little ones. When they are by grace enabled to rightly prove themselves, they will always find the only ground of their confidence to be that they are justified freely by the grace of God in Christ Jesus. "For we are the circumcision, which worship God in the Spirit, and rejoice in Christ Jesus, and having no confidence in the flesh."

EXTRACTS

FROM FOUR ORATIONS BY EDWARD IRVING, BEFORE THE LONDON (ENGLAND) MISSIONARY SOCIETY, MAY, 1824.

ORATION FOUR.

CONCLUSION, FROM THE MISSIONARY DOCTRINE.

(Concluded.)

WHILE I contend with all my might that the portraiture of the missionary given by Messiah, with his instructions for the perilous voyage, should not be hid from the sight and study of the church, but live in its few grand and simple lineaments, untouched by any mortal hand, and unsoftened by the compromising taste of any age; and that every one who looks to this, the highest preferment in the kingdom of Christ, should be qualified according to the testament of our King, over which testament the church is the guardian to execute it faithfully, not to enlarge nor abridge it in one jot or tittle; I am far from intending, as the conclusion of the whole matter, that no one shall make trial and experiment of this service until he feel the image of Messiah perfected in his soul, or that God will withhold his blessing from the rude beginnings and mistrustful settings-out of this high and holy calling. As God doth know, and my conscience beareth me witness, it is not to discourage or repel any spirit which feels stirred to attempt the undertaking, but to encourage and attract all christian spirits by its ethereal excellence and transcendent glory, that I would preserve the standard perfection of this character unreduced and unveiled before every eye; and if any one think that by the opposite course of reducing its lofty dimensions or veiling its heavenly purity he will recommend this or any other part of the christian system to the world, he doth err, nothing knowing the end of christianity nor the nature of the world. By doing so he shall but place the world on good terms with itself, and mislead still farther its false estimation of its own wretched conditions; while he prostitutes the great boon of heaven, which was given not to please the deluded world, but to redeem it out of its present self-satisfaction and self-complacency. The world is to be undeceived with respect to all its ideas of greatness and goodness, its heroism to be despoiled, its virtues put to shame, its boast and glory mocked, by the new school of character and action which the gospel introduceth, in order to cast all its conditions into the shade, and force them to confess that they are nothing. The divine stature and heavenly majesty, the unstained purity and tender mercy, and the self-divested, self-devoted disinterestedness of the new man, created in the image of God, are intended to silence the empty boastful-ness of the old man, to call forth spiritual faculties from their hiding places of ease and selfishness, and to offer a wisdom and righteousness, an honor and glory of another kind than that whereof nature is ambitious, and wherewithal she is content. It is not by indulging nature, therefore, in her false judgments and depraved tastes, but by rebuking her, by exhibiting ideas and forms of higher things, that she is to be led onward to perfection. Her own self-love will draw the standard down, without any help on your part, and in spite of all your endeavors the other way. Your office, therefore, is to propound to her no second edition of the things revealed from heaven for her regeneration, but the very things, if you would humble her, beat her out of her proud refuges, prostrate her in sorrow and repentance, and bring her to be an earnest suitor for the sufficient grace and perfect strength of God; and he who shrinks from the perusal of these new forms of character because they are too high for him, and cannot be entered into at one attempt, and would therefore have them lowered, doth err no less than he doth who, to serve his error, would bring them down to his low desire or faithless timidity. For it is wholly to misstate the nature of this holy operation to imagine that it is finished at one flat, as creation was at first, and that the child of God starteth at once into being and perfect manhood. * * * It is by exercise we grow, for the grace of God is a vital principle which begetteth life and action. By this new life and action of the soul's faculties we do both discern the presence of that grace which we have received and our need of more, which we receive in due time after we have proved ourselves faithful over the few things already committed to our trust; and so we go on from grace to grace and from strength to strength by diligently occupying that which we have, and fulfilling those duties which are meet to our present infirmity. Therefore the perfections of holiness presented in Scripture, and the sublimities of character exemplified by Christ, ought to be constantly kept full in our view, that we may know what the Lord our God requireth of us, and how far we come short of his glory; whence are fed the fountains of our penitence and humility, at which prayer refresheth her too feeble voice, and the Lord, hearing her refreshed voice, supplieth all our wants in due season out of his inexhaustible fullness. Thus as in a circle, from the idea of perfection to the consciousness of weakness, and from the consciousness of weakness to the increase of strength, and from the increase of strength to the increase of performance, and from the increase of performance to the idea of still higher perfection, we approach more and more near to that purity of holiness and sublimity of character, without the knowledge and perusal of which we should not have known our deficiency; and not knowing our deficiency, not have besought for higher aid; and not beseeching the aid of heaven, should not have received the grace which is sufficient for us, and the strength which is perfected in weakness.

If such be the progression of the christian graces, it is most manifest that whosoever can recover a true christian idea from the corrupting hand and compromising spirit of his age, and give it to the world in its original form and beauty, doth serve the best interests of his age, though he may somewhat trouble its present self-sufficiency. For though he do rebuke the imperfect measures with which the over-easy times are satisfied, and turn against himself the zeal which he disturbeth in its well-meant but ill-informed courses, he doth open to all candid and truth-loving spirits a higher region to which they may cast their longings; * * * and if any one, in the couch of his contentment, should feel himself rebuked of listless, self-satisfied ease, he ought, while he plucketh up his pilgrim's staff, and manfully addresseth himself to another stage of his progress, give thanks unto God, who sent a messenger to rouse his spirit afresh, and show him the way to new enjoyments and new entertainments of his spiritual life.

If therefore, in the idea of the missionary which we have sketched in the first of these orations, and which in the two latter we have sought to fix and make lasting by many fiery ordeals, there be anything more enlarged and elevated than that which at present prevaileth in the church, the use to which it should be put, after it hath been first tried by non-conforming truth, is to ruse the spirit of missionaries to still higher aims, to whet the present zeal of the church to a still finer edge, and to set on fire whatever is noble and generous and devoted in the breasts of godly men. It were totally to misuse the truth, and to misunderstand the whole economy of grace, for any one to take offense at the height and purity of the character delineated above, or to withdraw his shoulder from the missionary work, because the work turneth out to be a more stiff-necked work than he had at first conceived; for as it is the perfect purity of the law which slays our self-sufficiency, arouseth our dormancy, and, like a good school-master, forceth our childish reluctance to betake itself to Christ for help, so is it the nobleness of the missionary character, its independence of all natural means, and indifference to all human patronage, its carelessness of all earthly rewards, and contempt of the arithmetic of visible and temporal things, which force the man who would essay it to pass out of those resources human nature fostereth within herself, and have his refuge and dependence upon the Spirit of God for sustenance, for patronage, for reward, and for a rule of procedure. After all he can do in this kind, it will still be the complaint of every good and faithful missionary that he hath not been able to eradicate self-confidence, that root of bitterness which poisons spiritual health, and brings on a prostration of spiritual strength; so that these deprivations of Christ are but incumbrances kindly removed, weights cast away, and besetting sins (sins that beset every man) warned away from the missionary, in consideration of the arduous race which he hath undertaken to run.

Seeing then that every christian grace hath its slenderest beginnings, as well as its ultimate attainments, it is to be inferred that the missionary is not perfected without use, nor by one effort of faith carried to so great a height above sublunary things. We are told of the mighty Nazarite under the former dispensation, that "the Spirit of the Lord began to move him at times in the camp of Dan, between Zorah and Ashtaol." So when the Spirit of the Lord begins to move the gospel Nazarite, though it be in his native village, his native town, or his father's house, let him obey its movements, and not quench them, but follow onward at their bidding; and even in this, the infancy of his calling, he will find it needful to renounce the approbation of the world, perhaps the affection of his friends, certainly his own ease and natural pleasure, with many other things dearer to life than a meal of meat or a change of raiment. As he obeys the divine voice which speaks within his soul, and encounters the strokes of their undiscerning blindness to that which is spiritual, he will experience so much support of the Spirit, such inward joy and satisfaction, that his faith will gather courage and spread its wings abroad, beyond the confines of his father's house, his native village, or his native town. He will grow so full of faith, and contemplative of things unseen as to forget his trust in sight, and dependence upon the things that are. Inward assurances of God's direction will become so strong, the monitions of his spirit so audible, the commands of Christ to go forth unto all nations so imprinted in fire upon his heart, * * * and his whole inward man become so restless and aroused that he will have no peace till he arise and go forth. This strength of faith hath a beginning in the soul like the grains of a mustard seed, which being crushed or neglected in the embryo, will never grow to the largest tree of the forest in whose branches the birds of the air build their nests and under whose boughs the beasts of the field have their habitations. The word of God at first is a spark, then it is a burning coal, at length it is a consuming fire within the hearts of his servants, and they are weary of forbearing and they cannot stay nor hold their peace; they must speak or they must die, and though they should die they will speak; then have they no rest, but hasten over land and over sea, over rocks and trackless deserts; they cry aloud and spare not, and will not be hindered. In the prisons they lift up their voices, and in the tempests of the ocean they are not silent; before awful councils and throned kings, they witness in behalf of the truth. Nothing will quench their voice but death, and in the article of death, ere yet the spiry flame and rolling smoke have suffocated the organs of the soul they speak, they pray, they testify, they confess, they beseech, they warn, and at length they bless the cruel people. But to arrive at this supremacy of human nature, the perfection of the missionary, that most perfect form of manhood, many degrees must be passed through and much discipline endured. These high graces are of gradual progress, not attained without hard and patient trials, which are to be had in the missionary field, not out of it. Therefore it is expedient for the very attainment of perfection, that the missionary should make proof of what faith and spiritual strength he is already possessed, in order that being found worthy he may have an increase of talents from the master of the house. To take the spolia opima of the war he must be inured to every adventure and address in arms. Therefore with what zeal I discover and set forth the form of the high calling and urge the souls of missionaries to read it, with that zeal also I urge them to every step by which it is to be reached, looking not at what is behind, as if they had already attained or were already perfect, but looking to the things which are still before and pressing onward to the mark. Whether the blessing of God will be vouchsafed to the lower degrees of this majestic character no one can doubt who knoweth anything of his revelations, which are not for the perfect, but that we may grow up to the stature of the perfect. He blesseth the humblest effort to advance; he rewardeth the smallest measure of attainment. The very thought and imagination of good he blesseth with an inward satisfaction of the soul. Nay, even sorrow and penitence for evil committed, and the relaxation of wickedness before any contrary movement hath been made he regardeth with approbation, and rewardeth with a certain dawn of hope and foretaste of peace. Of all his revelations this is the spirit: that he is the origin, the promoter, and the strength of every good thought within our breast, and of every good cause which hath an existence in the world, or is yet to be brought into being. Therefore, at home or abroad, whoever out of a pure heart seeketh to promote the gospel of Christ, which is the world's redemption and salvation, may rely upon a blessing; and the more pure his intention, the more will it be approved of God, and the more spiritual his means and instruments, the more speed will he come; and when his whole heart, strength, soul and mind are brought over from resting upon the visible to rest upon the invisible helps, then his horn shall be exalted, and the full measure of the Lord's blessing poured out upon his handiwork.

I think the lame and partial success which hath attended modern missions in the way of conversion, compared with those of former times, should have humbled us to revise the principles upon which we have proceeded and see whether there be not a large mixture of human wisdom and creature-trust in our measures. But it is not yet time to enter into the proper office and duty of a missionary society, which is surely not infallible, but liable to be canvassed, judged, and if need be, censured and rebuked by christian judgments. This will come in a more advanced part of our discourse; and the subject which should now come to our hand is to justify and recommend the practice of this missionary constitution which we have drawn from the words of Messiah, and defended from the attempts of temporizing men to annul it, and so deprive the church of what might be termed the principles of her foreign policy.

When I shall come to justify the wisdom and commend the practice of this self-denying missionary ordinance, I will not stoop so low from the high dignity of the subject as to notice the sneers and sarcasms and disappointed speeches with which the sensual man, and those spiritual men in whom the sensual man still struggles for the ascendancy, will assail the principle of no scrip, no provisions, no accommodations for the journey, no stately deputations to the authorities of the place, no traveling charges, nor any of all the other fat and convenient things which are now held almost as indispensable to the carrying on of a religious work, as heretofore they were to a county canvass, a judicial assize, or a parliamentary commission to inspect the condition of the realm. Those who have accustomed themselves to carpet warfare, cannot like the conflict of naked steel. Those who have rejoiced in the countenance of a wealthy or a noble man, as in the face of heaven, must needs sink to the centre when they are told to go forth where every fat and fair countenance is set against them like a flint. With such objectors I will have nothing to do until they learn out of the Scriptures whence the strength of Israel cometh, and with what arms the Lion of the tribe of Judah doth triumph over his foes. They need to learn what are the first principles of that kingdom concerning the high offices of which the present discourse is held; and they must be given into the hands of some wardens of the outposts to be a little instructed in the vulgar language and household customs of the holy land before they can be admitted to speculate on these its high and noble commissions, of which their jokes and sarcasms do only betray their gross and blinded ignorance. But on the other hand, every objection and doubt which presents itself in a serious frame of truth, and breathes the brotherly spirit which is proper to the disciples of Christ, I promise to do my endeavor to remove out of the way, that I may carry the greater consent of my hearers along with me to the question, How this constitution will answer in practice? For the purpose of hearing all that can be said against Messiah's institute, and all that can be said in favor of the innovations which have usurped its place, I delay at present going into the other parts of this discourse, content that I have laid before the church what seemeth to me the sound doctrine concerning the missionary question. Perhaps some one able to defend it may in the mean time rise up, certainly many will rise up, to impugn it; and though I should have to undertake the work alone, I will by the grace of God most certainly undertake to justify in practice what I have delineated in idea. * * *

The argument for the perpetuity and unchangeableness of the missionary constitution is now concluded, and resteth upon these main pillars of truth, the instructions of our Lord to the first missionaries, four times recorded in the evangelists, unrepealed, unsupplemented, unabridged; the obedience thereto of all the apostles and first ministers of the gospel, whose record is in the Scriptures (their deviations, when they do deviate, being always by excess, and never by defect, of our Lord's injunctions); the necessary law of the Spirit's operation; the constant condition of God's chosen messengers from the time of the patriarchs; the constant and unchanging form of the work which they have to do in converting the nations; and the perfect keeping which there is between the form of the missionary as given by our Lord, and the other parts of the christian institution. I am aware how this position is to be assailed by those who have built up a system of administration on which they have set their heart to call it perfect and infallible, and which I charge as exceedingly imperfect, destined to much improvement, and with its improvement destined to much greater simplicity and larger success; and I am alive to the inveteracy of hatred and the injustice of argument with which this position will be treated, and conceive it right to put the christian church upon their guard, that they sell not this question, in which the present and future generations or the world are concerned, to the highest names upon a subscription list, nor discern it by the ostracism of the people, nor yield it to the voice of a hireling and sectarian press, which courts are not competent to the issue. I solemnly charge the church, by my authority of a minister ordained to keep and watch over the verities of

OBITUARY NOTICES.

Mrs. Sarah Elizabeth Jeter departed this life Jan. 26th, 1893. She was born Dec. 4th, 1834, and was therefore 59 years, 1 month and 22 days old. She joined the County Line Church in Alabama at the age of eighteen years, and was married to U. J. Sims on May 29th, 1859. Brother Sims died (I have not the date of his death), leaving her with two children, a son and daughter, both of whom survive her. She moved to Arkansas, and from there to Texas, and was married to brother W. H. Jeter in December, 1882. They afterward became members of the Gum Springs Church by letter, of which church she died a member. Sister Jeter was one loved by many brethren, sisters, friends and neighbors, she being of so gentle and quiet a disposition. She was well-versed in the Scriptures and sound in doctrine, being a strong believer in salvation alone by the grace of God, and had no confidence in the various anti-christian inventions of men claiming to be a means of saving sinners. May the good Lord sanctify this sad bereavement to the good of those left to mourn, and afford them that comfort which can come only from his gracious hand.

H. B. JONES.

HORACE, Texas, May 26, 1893.

Mr father, Jacob Lake, died of heart failure at my residence on Wednesday night, May 10th, after an illness of only two days and a half, aged 89 years, 8 months and 17 days.

Father was a member of the Old School Baptists about sixty-five years, and remained firm amidst all the trials and divisions that the church has had to pass through in that period of time. In his younger days he took great delight in traveling and visiting other associations as a corresponding messenger to aid by the help of God in keeping up correspondence with the Juniata Association. The SIGNS OF THE TIMES he took great pleasure in reading from its first publication.

He leaves an aged companion, eleven years younger, six daughters, the writer, and a number of grandchildren and great-grandchildren; to mourn their loss. Let us be reconciled to the Lord's will, knowing that he has bereft us.

His remains were laid to rest in the cemetery of the Sidling Hill Old School Baptist Church. Let us faithfully render to the Lord that which he requires of us, while his blessings are poured out upon us from day to day. May that be my happy lot, is my prayer, for Jesus' sake.

JONAS LAKE.

LAIDIG, Pa., May 22, 1893.

My dear brother, Dr. James H. Hall, died at his home in Petaluma, California, on July 2d, 1892.

He was a son of Elder L. A. Hall, and was born in the state of Delaware, Sept. 8th, 1808. He read medicine with his father, attended three courses of lectures at Jefferson College, Philadelphia, Pa., and graduated in 1833. He was married to Miss Sarah G. Thomas, in Philadelphia, Oct. 30th, 1831. He practiced medicine in Delaware three or four years, and settled in St. Louis, Mo. To them were born thirteen children. Seven sons and two daughters are living. The eldest, Augustus, went to California and died, aged twenty-one years. Elizabeth married in St. Louis, Mo., and died, aged nineteen years. Sallie died in infancy. Dr. Fred Hall died at the age of thirty-two years. The oldest now living is Dr. James H. Hall, a Baptist, in Potosi, Mo. Dr. L. P. Hall has charge of a hospital in Fulton, Mo. Mary married Mr. Wm. A. Lewis, of Petaluma, Cal. Charles H. and Edward J. are living in Petaluma, Cal. Walter R. is a druggist in San Francisco, Cal. Sarah married Prof. Cromwell, and lives in Petaluma, Cal. Gilbert B. is a lawyer in Petaluma, Cal.

In 1839, I think, he and his wife were baptized in St. Louis, Mo. He wrote his father their christian experience, and O how my father rejoiced to read of his bright and sweet hope in Christ. After the cruel war was over himself, wife and children at home with him moved to Petaluma, Cal., his health failing him, and the last six months of his life he went down rapidly. His dear and faithful wife wrote me that in all his afflictions his Savior was all in all to him. He would say, "Why doesn't my Father call me home?" "Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him; for I know that my Redeemer liveth." He would repeat the hymn, "Jesus, lover of my soul," &c. On Monday he sank into a quiet sleep. His wife called to arouse him. He looked up at her and said, "We shall meet." O that precious hope; I love to think upon it. He closed his eyes, and passed quietly and peacefully away. The remains were laid in the Petaluma cemetery to await the resurrection morn.

SARAH H. BISHOP.

DOVER, Del.

OUR dear old brother, Elisha Hastings, departed this life at his late residence in Wicomico Co., Md., March 16th, 1893, aged 84 years, 2 months and 16 days, after an illness of about six weeks of a failure of the vital powers from extreme old age.

Brother Hastings and his wife were baptized more than fifty years ago in the fellowship of the Little Creek Church, Sussex Co., Del., by Elder Warner Staton (the father of Elders G. W. and J. L. Staton), and proved a steadfast and faithful follower of the meek and lowly Jesus without wavering unto the end of his earthly pilgrimage. He lived nine miles from the place of meeting, but went through cold and heat, sunshine and rain, his seat being seldom vacant. In 1886 he with several others united in organizing and constituting the Forest Grove Church, about two miles from his home, and was favored to see it grow and prosper as he so greatly wished. He leaves four sons, two daughters and a number of grandchildren, with the church, to mourn, but not as those who are without hope.

ALSO,

DIED—At the home of his mother, Mrs. Amelia Shockley, in Salisbury, Md., April 3d, 1893, Gordon Shockley, aged 17 years.

He leaves a widowed mother, one brother and two sisters to mourn the loss of a son and brother, cut off suddenly in the bloom of youth. His illness was pneumonia, with which he was sick only five days. May he who wounds, and who only can heal, comfort the heart of our dear sister in this sad bereavement, and enable her to say, with Job, "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord."

A. B. FRANCIS.

Mrs. Susan Nowell died at her home near Gum Springs, Harrison Co., Texas, with cancer on her face. She was also affected with paralysis for the last four months, but we thought she was better. She had a cancer taken off her nose a year ago, but it returned worse, and I think was the cause of her death. All was done to alleviate her suffering that could be done. She talked a great deal the day before she died, saying that she was willing to depart, and requested her children and friends not to weep for her; that her trust was in God, and but one thing troubled her, which was that she had not discharged her duty by going to the church. She gave a bright evidence of her acceptance as a child of God; and on the 4th day of May, 1893, at about four o'clock, she ceased to breathe.

She was born in the state of Alabama, Jan. 18th, 1837, and was the daughter of Martha and Benjamin Shaddock. She was married to R. A. Nowell Dec. 24th, 1857, and to them were born nine children (four sons and five daughters), eight of whom are living. She was a loving mother, sister and companion, and liked by all who knew her. She was laid away on the 5th day of May, 1893, in the Gum Springs burying-ground. She has left an affectionate companion, eight children, two sisters, one brother, relatives and friends to mourn, but not without hope; for we believe and know that she left a weary land to exchange for a land of rest, where sickness, sorrow, pain nor death can never disturb. May the Lord direct, comfort and strengthen us to bear our bereavement as faithful soldiers of the cross, and let us strive to enter in at the strait gate.

Written by her brother,

W. H. SHADDOCK.

LONGVIEW, Texas, May 8, 1893.

Mr dear mother, Maria Hartenbower, departed this life March 24th, 1893, after being sick eight weeks, aged 85 years, 9 months and 18 days.

She was born in Lincoln Co., Ky., and moved with her parents while a child to Clark Co., Ky., where she was married in 1836 to Jeremiah Hartenbower, from which union there were born eleven children, of whom eight survive her. She moved to Green Co., Ky., with her husband, where they lived until they moved to Putnam Co., Ill., in 1880. Here my father and she underwent the horrors of living in a temporary fort with a number of families during the Black Hawk war. She was a member of the Sandy Creek Old School Baptist Church for about forty years. None were more delighted in hearing the gospel preached, and to converse on the subject of salvation by grace. She was very willing to go and be at rest. She said she loved her children and friends, but that she would far rather be at home with her heavenly Master. My father has been at rest more than seventeen years, and she has staid with us the most of that time. We feel very lonely without our dear mother, but we know that she is at rest.

The funeral services were held at our house, conducted by Elders Gill and Downey, on Sunday, March 26th; after which a large concourse of relatives and friends followed her remains to the Lostant cemetery, where they were laid to rest.

"Thou art gone to the grave, but 'twere wrong to deplore thee, Since God was thy ransom, thy guardian,
thy guide;

He gave thee, he took thee, and he will restore thee,

Where death has no sting, since the Savior hath died."

MINERVA HILTABRAND.

LOSTANT, Ill., May 25, 1893.

"EVEN to-day is my complaint bitter:
my stroke is heavier than my groaning."
—Job xxiii. 2.

It has been my lot to attend on many funeral occasions, and I have witnessed the anguish of soul of those bereft of loved ones, and would try to place myself in their stead; but until plunged into the like affliction I knew but little. I have been called to part with a loving and devoted companion. Experience has taught me what I knew but little about before.

My wife was a daughter of the late Isaac and Jane Varns, of Tuscarora, Pa. She made no public profession, but I found her a decided believer in the doctrine set forth in the word of God, salvation by grace through the crucified but now risen and exalted Redeemer, and that before we were married; and all the years in which we were allowed to live in this relation she manifested the same steadfastness in the truth. She often told me that her life would end like a the holy gospel, that they determine the issue that will be joined between us by a trial of these six counts: First, whether Christ's instructions were for that first journey, or for all the journies of his missionaries. Second, whether the apostles walked in them or not; and if they deviated, whether they deviated in the spirit or from the spirit of these instructions. Third, whether the Holy Ghost, in proportion as he possesseth the spirit of a man, doth not lift him out of worldly dependence into an assured faith upon the providence and promises of God. Fourth, whether God's preachers and prophets and missionaries, by whom he extended his church from the time it was the single family of Jacob down to the time that the Lion of the tribe of Judah came, were not stripped bare of earthly refuges and reliances before being employed, or brought to that condition before being prospered in their work. Fifth, whether the obstacles to the spiritual kingdom, which God heretofore chose things that are not to bring to naught, be not still the same, and by the same means to be overcome. Sixth, whether this idea and outward form of the missionary, contained in Messiah's instructions, be not consistent and in keeping with the idea of a pastor, with the idea of a private christian, and every other idea which is revealed by Christ for the redeeming and perfecting of the fallen condition of humanity. Upon these six counts I will risk the issue and stand by the award of the question, whether Messiah's constitution was intended for an unchangeable constitution in the church, or is to be patched and mended, helped and repaired, and accommodated by wiser heads to the changing condition of the world. Whether in this great work the church is to act upon a common principle and be guided by a common law, or to adopt a principle which may seem to it the most expedient, and follow a rule which may appear to it the most wise. Whether the churches which they may be honored to plant are to have the character of the order that planteth them, like the Jesuit settlements of Paraguay, or to have the character of the primitive churches, which were of one heart and mind, because the apostles were obedient to the instructions of one common Lord. Whether, in fine, we are to open in the hearts of our missionaries inlets to every spirit of hypocrisy, avarice and ambition, and close as many inlets to the Spirit of truth, quenching by our prudences and policies the one everlasting Spirit of God, and giving vent to as many spirits, crusading, jesuitical, commercial or political, as there are diverse ages in the church, which are not, like the ages of the world, fourfold (of gold, of silver, of brass, of iron), but manifold, according to the degree of impurity and incompleteness in the doctrine which is preached, and in the degree of laxness or lordliness in the discipline which is administered in the churches.

THE END.
