THROUGH PEACE TO LIGHT.

I do not ask, O Lord, that life may be
A pleasant road;
I do not ask that thou wouldst take from me
Aught of its load;
I do not ask that flowers should always spring
Beneath my feet;
I know too well the poison and the sting
Of things too sweet.
For one thing only, Lord, dear Lord, I plead,
Lead me aright—
Though strength should falter, and though heart should bleed—
Through peace to light.
I do not ask, O Lord, that thou shouldst shed
Full radiance here;
Give but a ray of peace, that I may tread
Without a fear.
I do not ask my cross to understand,
My way to see;
Better in darkness just to feel thy hand
And follow thee.
Joy is like restless day; but peace divine
Like quiet night:
Lead me, O Lord, till perfect day shall shine
Through peace to light.

SOLOMON'S TEMPLE SPIRITUALIZED.

BY JOHN BUNYAN.

CHAPTER I.

Where the Temple was built.

THE temple was built at Jerusalem, on Mount Moriah, in the threshing-floor of Ornan, the Jebusite; whereabout Abraham offered up Isaac; where David met the angel of the Lord, when he came with his drawn sword in his hand to cut off the people at Jerusalem for the sin which David committed in his disorderly numbering of the people.—Gen. xxii. 4, 5; 1 Chron. xxi. 15; xxii. 1, 2; 2 Chron. iii. 1. There Abraham received his son Isaac from the dead. There the Lord was entreated by David to take away the plague, and to return to Israel again in mercy; from whence also David gathered that there God's temple must be built. "This," said he, "is the house of the Lord God, and this is the altar of the burnt offering for Israel."—1 Chron. xxi. 28; xxii. 1.

This Mount Moriah therefore was a type of the Son of God, the mountain of the Lord's house, the Rock against which the gates of hell cannot prevail.

CHAPTER II.

Who built the Temple.

THE temple was built by Solomon, a man peaceable and quiet, and that in name, by nature, and also in governing; for so God had before told David, namely, that such a one the builder of the temple should be. "Behold, a son shall be born unto thee, who shall be a man of rest; and I will give him rest from all his enemies round about; for his name shall be called Solomon, and I will give peace and quietness unto Israel in his days. He shall build a house for my name; and he shall be my son, and I will be his father."—1 Chron. xxii. 9, 10; Psal. lxxii. 1-4.

As therefore Mount Moriah was a type of Christ, as the Foundation, so Solomon was a type of him, as the Builder of his church. The mount was signal, for that thereon the Lord God, before Abraham and David, did display his mercy. And as Solomon built this temple, so Christ doth build his house. Yea, "Even he shall build the temple of the Lord, and he shall bear the glory."—Zech. vi. 12, 13; Heb. iii. 3, 4.

And in that Solomon was called peaceable, it was to show with what peaceable doctrine and ways Christ's house, his church, should be built.—Isa. ix. 6; Micah vii. 2-4.

CHAPTER III.

How the Temple was built.

THE temple was built, not merely by the dictates of Solomon, though he was wiser than Ethan, and Herman, and Chalcol, and Darda, and all men (1 Kings iv. 31), but it was built by rules, prescribed, or in a written word, and as so was delivered to him by his father David. For when David gave to Solomon his son a charge, he gave him also the pattern of all in writing; even a pattern of the porch, house, chambers, treasuries, parlors, &c., and of the place for the mercy seat; which pattern David had of God; nor would God trust his memory with it. "The Lord made me," he said, "understand in writing by his hand upon me, even all the works of this pattern." Thus, therefore, David gave to Solomon his son the pattern of all; and thus Solomon his son built the house of God.—See 1 Chron. xxviii. 9-20. And answerable to this, Christ Jesus, the builder of his own house, "whose house are ye," doth build his holy habitation for himself to dwell in, even according to the commandment of God the Father. "For," said he, "I have not spoken of myself; but the Father which sent me, he gave me a commandment, what I should say, and what I should speak. And hence it is said that God gave him the revelation. And again, that he took the book out of the hand of him that sat on the throne, and so acted as to the building up of his church.—John xii. 49; Rev. i. 1; v. 7.

CHAPTER IV.

Of what the Temple was built.

THE materials with which the temple was built were such as were in their own nature common to that which was left behind—things that naturally were not fit, without art, to be laid on so holy a house. And this shows that those of whom Christ Jesus designs to build his church are by nature no better than others. But as the trees and stones of which the temple was built were first hewed and squared before they were fit to be laid in that house, so sinners, of which the church is to be built, must first be fitted by the word and doctrine, and then fitly laid in their place in the church. For though, as to nature, there is no difference between those made use of to build God's house, yet by grace they differ from others; even as those trees and stones that were hewed and squared by art for building were made to differ from those which did abide in the wood or pit. The Lord Jesus, therefore, while he seeketh materials wherewith to build his house, findeth them "the clay of the same lump" that he rejecteth and leaveth behind. "Are we better than they? No, in no wise."—Rom. iii. 9. Nay, I think, if any be best, they are they which are left behind. Jesus "came not to call the righteous, but sinners, to repentance."—Mark ii. 17. And indeed in this he doth show both the greatness of his grace and of his workmanship; his grace, in taking such; and his workmanship, in that he makes them meet for his holy habitation. This the current of Scripture maketh manifest; wherefore it is needless now to cite particulars; only we must remember that none are laid in this building as they come out of the wood or pit, but as they first pass under the hand and rule of the great Builder of the temple of God.

CHAPTER V.

Who were to fell those trees and to dig those stones with which Solomon built the Temple.

As the trees were to be felled and the stones to be digged, so there were for that matter selected workman appointed. These were not of the sons of Jacob, nor of the house of Israel. They were the servants of Hiram, king of Tyre, and the Gibeonites, namely, their children that made a league with Joshua in the day that God gave the land of Canaan to his people.—Josh. ix. 12-29; 1 Kings v. 2; 2 Chron. xxvii. 28. And these were types of gospel ministers, who are the men appointed by Jesus Christ to make sinners (by their preaching) meet for the house of God. Wherefore as he was famous of old who was strong to lift up his axe upon the thick boughs, to square wood for the building of the temple, so a minister of the gospel now is also famous, if used by Christ for the converting of sinners to himself, that he may build him a temple with them.—Psal. lxxiv. 5; Rom. xvi. 7.

But why, some may say, do you make so homely a comparison? I answer, Because I believe it is true; for it is grace, not gifts, that makes us sons and the beloved of God. Gifts make a minister; and as a minister, one is but a servant, to hew wood and draw water for the house of God. "Yea, Paul, though a son, counted himself but a servant, purely as he was a minister, a servant of God, a servant of Christ, a servant of the church, "and your servant for Jesus' sake."—Titus i. 1; Rom. i. 1; 2 Cor. iv. 5. A man then is a son, as he is begotten and born of God to himself; and a servant, as he is gifted for work in the house of his Father. And though it is true that the servant may be a son, yet he is not a son because he is a servant. Nor doth it follow that because all sons may be servants, therefore all servants are sons. And therefore, when the time shall come, he that is only a servant here shall certainly be put out of the house, even out of that house himself did help to build. "The servant abideth not in the house forever." "The servant;" that is, he that is only so.—Ezek. xlvi. 16, 17; John viii. 35. So then, as a son, thou art an Israelite; as a servant, a Gibeonite. The consideration of this made Paul start: he knew that gifts made him not a son.—1 Cor. xii. 28-31; xiii. 1, 2.

The sum then is, a man may be a servant and a son; a servant, as he is employed by Christ in his house for the good of others; and a son, as he is a partaker of the grace of adoption. But all servants are not sons; and let this be for a caution and a call to ministers to do all the acts of service for God, and in his house, with reverence and godly fear. And with all humility let us desire to be partakers ourselves of that grace we preach to others. This is a great saying, and written, perhaps, to keep ministers humble, "And strangers shall stand and feed your flocks, and the sons of the alien shall be your ploughmen and your vinedressers."—Isa. lxi. 5. To be a ploughman here is to be a preacher; and to be a vinedresser here is to be a preacher.—Luke ix. 59-62; 1 Cor. ix. 27; Matt. ii. 1-8; xxi. 28; 1 Cor. ix. 7. And if he does this work willingly, he has a reward; if not, a dispensation of the gospel was committed to him, and that is all.—1 Cor. ix. 17.*

CHAPTER VI.

In what condition the timber and stones were when brought to be laid in the building of the Temple.

THE timber and stones with which the temple was built were squared and hewed in the wood or pit, and there made every way fit for the work, even before they were brought to the place where the house should be set up; so that there was neither hammer nor axe, nor any tool of iron, heard in the house while it was building.—1 Kings vi. 7. And this shows, as we said before, that the materials of which the house was built were, before the hand of the workman touched them, as unfit to be laid in the building as were those that were left behind; consequently that themselves, none otherwise but by the art of others, were made fit to be laid in the building.

To this our New Testament temple answers; for those of the sons of Adam who are counted worthy to be laid in this building are not by nature, but by grace, made meet for it; not by their own wisdom, but by the word of God. Hence he saith, "Therefore have I hewed them by the prophets." And again, ministers are called God's builders and laborers, even to this work.—Hosea vi. 5; 1 Cor. iii. 10; 2 Cor. vi. 1; Col. i. 28.

No man will lay trees, as they come from the wood, for beams and rafters in his house, nor stones as they are digged in the wales. No, the trees must be hewed and squared, and the stones sawn and made fit, and so be laid in the house. Yea, they must be sawn and so squared that in coupling they may be joined exactly; else the building will not be good, nor the workman have credit of his doings.

Hence our gospel church, of which the temple was a type, is said to be fitly framed, and that there is a fit supply of every joint for the securing of the whole.—1 Peter iii. 5; Eph. iv. 16, 20, 21; Col. ii. 19.

As they therefore build like children that build with wood as it comes from the wood or forest, and with stones as they come from the pit, even so do they, who pretend to build God a house of unconverted sinners, unhewed, unsquared, unpolished. Wherefore God's workmen, according to God's advice, prepare their work without, and make it fit for themselves in the field, and afterwards build the house.—Prov. xxiv. 27.

Let the ministers therefore look to this, and take heed, lest instead of making their notions stoop to the word, they make the Scriptures stoop to their notions.

CHAPTER VII.

Of the foundation of the Temple.

THE foundation of the temple is that upon which it stands; and it was twofold: first, the hill Moriah, and then those great stones upon which it was erected. This hill Moriah, as was said afore, did more properly typify Christ. Hence Moriah is called "the mountain of the house," it being the rock on which it was built. Those great stones, called foundation stones, were types of the apostles and prophets.—Matt. xxi. 18; Eph. ii. 20, 21; Heb. xi. 10.

Now, as the temple had this double foundation, so we must consider it respectively and distinctly; for Christ is the foundation one way, and the prophets and apostles a foundation another way. Christ is the foundation personally and meritoriously; but the prophets and apostles, by doctrine, ministerially. The church then, which is God's New Testament temple, is said to be built on Christ, the foundation; so none other is the foundation but he.—1 Cor. iii. 11, 12. But as it is said to be built upon the apostles, so it is said to have twelve foundations, and must have but they.—Rev. xxi. 14.

What is it then? Why, we must be building upon Christ, as he is our Priest, Sacrifice, Prophet, King and Advocate; and upon the other, as they are infallible instructors and preachers of him. Not that any may be an apostle that so shall esteem himself; nor that any other doctrine be administered but what is the doctrine of the twelve; for they are set forth as the chief and last. These are also they, as Moses, which are to look over all the building, and to see that all in this house be done according to the pattern shewed to them in the mount.—Ex. xxxix. 43; John xx. 21-23; 1 Cor. iii. 9; iv. 9.

Let us then keep these distinctions clear, and not put an apostle in the room of Christ, nor Christ in the place of one of those apostles. Let none but Christ be the High Priest and Sacrifice for your souls to God, and none but that doctrine which is apostolical be to you as the mouth of Christ for instruction to prepare you, and to prepare materials for the temple of God, and to build them upon this foundation.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THANKSGIVING.

"In everything give thanks: for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you."—1 Thess. v. 18.

How often an expression of thanks in the ordinary intercourse of men is a mere conformity to a social requirement; and even when addressed to the Lord, how seldom, it is to be feared, do the words upon the lips truthfully express the sentiments of the heart! Probably the most frequent and most unhesitating use of the ordinary form of thanksgiving to God is by those who know nothing of the spiritual blessings which alone produce the feeling of true gratitude to God. The natural man can feel thankful to men for favors received, but to be thankful to God is beyond his power or desire; for of that God who bestows all favors and blessings, both temporal and spiritual, he is entirely ignorant. None know him but they unto whom the Son will reveal him. To know him is eternal life.—Matthew xi. 27; John xvii. 3. Only the redeemed of the Lord are commanded and enabled to give thanks unto the Lord (Psalm cvii. 2), and they alone of all men ever question their ability or their right to do so. Expressions of thankfulness to God from the lips of natural men are no more than expressions of gladness on account of gratifying circumstances; but the thought of such being the case does not occur to them, nor would it be a trouble to them if it did; while the Lord's dear people are often troubled upon this point, being greatly tempted to doubt whether their expressions of gratitude to God mean anything more than that they are glad. But the Lord will in his own wonderful way show them how to distinguish between the feeling of natural gladness and the true gratitude that his Spirit inspires for both natural and spiritual blessings. The words of the apostle indicate this wonderful way: "In everything give thanks."

When we are enjoying health of body, when our labors have been crowned with success, so that we are abundantly supplied with all that is necessary to satisfy our needs and gratify our tastes, when our family and social relations are all that we could desire, affording us a rich revenue of comfort, remembering those that are racked with pain, or lying weak and helpless, and those who are suffering from want, and those whose homes are desolate, or worse than desolate, and contrasting our circumstances with theirs, and shuddering at the possibility of such afflictions coming upon us, we sometimes feel that we ought to be very thankful, and try to give thanks to the Lord for the temporal blessings that are ours. Yet there is often a question in our minds as to whether there is any real, spiritual thankfulness in such feelings as these; and especially will the exercised soul question the spirituality of such feelings of gladness and self-congratula-tion when he remembers that he has them in common with all worldly men, and that the same principle causes the appointment of thanksgiving days by kings, governors and rulers of this world, upon which all the people are called upon to unite in giving thanks to God for the blessings of abundant harvests and prosperous circumstances. To contrast our condition with that of others, and give thanks because we are better off than they, may well cause the spiritually minded to question whether this is true thankfulness at all. Especially are we at a loss and in perplexity with regard to the character of our thanksgiving when we meet one who is suffering from the lack of all that we enjoy, and would be thankful for, one who is sick, in extreme poverty, distressingly afflicted in home relationships, or desolate through bereavement, and when we find that one manifesting a spirit of humble thankfulness, and praising the name of the Lord, from whose hand he humbly and thankfully acknowledges all his afflictions have come. How it sometimes startles us to think that we are really joining with the world in that kind of thanksgiving which is only for those who are well and prosperous in the world, and surrounded with loved and loving friends, and from which the sick and poor and desolate and afflicted are excluded.

A thanksgiving day has been appointed by the great King, in the sweet and solemn observance of which all his people are commanded and blessedly enabled and constrained to join. No one of all that chosen generation, that holy nation, that peculiar people, can by any possibility fail of seeing this wonderful day of salvation, this day which the Lord hath made, and in which his people rejoice and are glad; nor will any one who sees this day fail to give thanks to the Lord, and to show forth the praises of him who hath called us out of darkness into its marvelous light. There is true thankfulness in the feeling of the redeemed which arises from the contemplation of the temporal blessings which the Lord has bestowed upon them, although they are so often tempted to think that they are only glad; but the true gratitude and praise to God must be separated from the selfish complacency of the carnal mind by the fire of affliction, as silver is separated from the dross when it is refined.—Zech. ix. 13. This fire may come in the temporal comforts being removed, or it may come in the form of such afflictions of mind or body that all enjoyment in those things that were so highly prized is lost, while yet they remain ours. We are made to see that the thankfulness we feel for health is the same that the child of God feels whose health is gone. We and he are made thankful to God for his dispensation to us, whatever it may be. The rich in this world's goods who is spiritually minded is thankful for his riches for the same reason that the poor is thankful for or in his poverty, because he sees God's will in it, and desires to be conformed to that will, and to live to the glory of God, and knows that God will so direct that all things shall be seen as working together for his good.

"In everything give thanks." Not in health alone, but in sickness as well; not only "when abounding in wealth," but also "in poverty's vale;" not alone when enjoying the sweet home comforts, but when homeless, desolate and distressed. "For this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you." To give thanks in and for afflictions is above the power of the natural mind. It is only when the will of God in Christ Jesus is wrought in us by him who worketh in us both to will and to do of his own good pleasure, that any one can do that. "O give thanks unto the Lord, for he is good: for his mercy endureth forever. Let the redeemed of the Lord say so, whom he hath redeemed from the hand of the enemy." It is impossible that any should truthfully say so but the redeemed of the Lord. These have seen the works of the Lord, and his wonders in the deep. They have seen and carefully observed his wonderful works to the children of men, and therefore they know the loving-kindness of the Lord.—Psalm cvii. When the eyes of their understanding are enlightened, they see that the love of God is manifested toward them as well in every afflictive dispensation of his providence as in the comforts of this world—as well in the castings down and distresses of soul as in the holy comfort and peace they are sometimes given to enjoy; and they cannot but give thanks in and for everything through which that wonderful love is displayed to them.

To the world there can appear no reason for giving thanks when one is sorely tried and afflicted, because those things for which thanks are truly rendered unto God are hidden from the world. The wise and prudent of this world can only look upon the things which are seen, and so cannot know how affliction can work a "far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory," for that can only be known by those who are looking "not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen; for the things which are seen are temporal, but the things which are not seen are eternal."—2 Cor iv. 17, 18. When Job's faith was so in exercise that he could look upon the things that are eternal, he could see the love of God as clearly manifested to him in the dark and fearful trial for which he was delivered into the hands of Satan, as when the candle of the Lord shined upon his head, and he washed his steps with butter, and the rock poured him out rivers of oil; for by the power of that faith he could say, in the deepest darkness and confusion and distress, "He knoweth the way that I take: when he hath tried me, I shall come forth as gold." In the afflictions of David, that man after God's own heart had to acknowledge the wonderful manifestation of God's faithfulness, saying, "I know that in faithfulness thou hast afflicted me." To Daniel in the lions' den, to the three in the fiery furnace, to Hezekiah in his sickness, to Jonah in the depths, to the apostles in prison, and to Paul under the buffetings of the messenger of Satan, the heavenly love and sweet favor of God, his sustaining grace and delivering power, were more abundantly manifested than in their times of peace and temporal comfort. Indeed, it is only in straits and dire afflictions, and in the felt sinfulness and depravity of our fallen nature, that the preserving grace and healing mercy of our God are displayed in their precious fullness and power; and while we know that God is able to keep his people in prosperity as well as in adversity, there are times when we can see that the dark and trying path of adversity, although we shrink from it, is the safest path. In that path we are kept from many temptations that sorely beset us when in prosperity. We are kept more carefully and constantly watching the hand of the Lord, more in prayer to him, more sensible of our dependence upon him; and when we find his mercy so wonderfully manifested to our unrighteousness, and his grace so sufficient for us under all the buffetings of the enemy, the rankling pain of the thorn in the flesh, and his glorious power so blessedly displayed in quenching the violence of fire, and stopping the mouth of the roaring lion that seeks to devour us, and his strength made perfect in our weakness, we may well feel constrained to give thanks unto him for these dark and terrible afflictions, in which such wonderful displays of his love and mercy and gracious power have been made to us, and even to glory in the very infirmities that we hate, and which have caused us such mourning and sorrow, that the power of Christ may rest upon us.

What a thanksgiving day is this to the people of God, when the dear Savior appears to them in the blessed light and joy of his salvation—when the Sun of righteousness arises upon them with healing in his wings! It is then, and only then, that we can sing and make melody in our hearts unto the Lord: "Giving thanks always for all things unto God and the Father in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ."—Eph. v. 19, 20. Although there should appear to men no reason for appointing a thanksgiving day, but rather a day for fasting and lamentation and supplication; although no harvest should reward the labor of the husbandman; "although the fig tree shall not blossom, neither shall fruit be in the vines; the labor of the olive shall fail, and the fields shall yield no meat; the flock shall be cut off from the fold, and there shall be no herd in the stalls;" yet those who are given power to lift up their eyes and behold the fields of that spiritual land where the great Husbandman is working, see abundant reason to "rejoice in the Lord, and joy in the God of their salvation;" for here a glorious harvest always appears to the spiritual view. Here the Lord visits the earth and waters it, and greatly enriches it with the river of God, which is full of water. Here he settles the deep furrows that have been made by the plow of sore affliction with his blessed doctrine, which drops upon the broken heart like the rain; and he makes the hard earth soft with gracious showers. Here the year is crowned with his goodness, and his paths drop fatness. They drop upon the pastures of the wilderness, the green pastures where he makes his people lie down in sweet gospel rest while yet in this wilderness state, and the little hills, the churches of the saints, rejoice on every side. "Then had the churches rest throughout all Judea and Galilee and Samaria, and were edified; and walking in the fear of the Lord, and in the comfort of the Holy Ghost, were multiplied."—Acts ix. 31. These paths of the Lord, his walk in the saints in the order and doctrine of his house, as he says, "I will walk in them"—his goings forth in exhibitions of abounding grace and love and mercy and faithfulness and salvation, drop such fatness upon these pastures of the wilderness that we see them clothed with flocks, which are drawn thither by the rich and sweet and nourishing provisions of his grace and love. These sheep of his pasture find no comfort in this wilderness, where they wander so much in the dark, and in a solitary way, only as they come together in these green pastures, when they enjoy with each other and with him, their Shepherd, the precious fellowship of the Spirit. In their deepest humility and self-abasement these paths of the Lord, dropping such fatness upon them, cause them to be as valleys covered over with corn. "They shout for joy, they also sing."—Psalm lxxv. 9-13. Here are the heavenly places in Christ Jesus where the saints sit together; not in their natural life, but in the resurrection life of Jesus, as "quickened together with him, and raised up together." What fragrance the name of Jesus gives to this heavenly land! Because of the perfume of his name, which "is as ointment poured forth" upon all his people, the smell of each redeemed soul "is the smell of a field which the Lord hath blessed;" and in the enjoyment of this heavenly fragrance, in the light of this true thanksgiving day, each one of the dear children of God can say, "O give thanks unto the Lord, for he is good; for his mercy endureth forever." "O praise the Lord, all ye nations; praise him, all ye people. For his merciful kindness is great toward us; and the truth of the Lord endureth forever. Praise ye the Lord."

Some have questioned the propriety of the people of God meeting for worship on days which have been appointed by governors and rulers for public thanksgiving, because in their opinion it is an unwarranted conformity to the religious customs of the world, and is recognizing an authority in such rulers which they do not possess; but why would not such objections apply just as forcibly to meetings on Sunday? Do our brethren generally regard the first day of the week as bearing to us the same character which the seventh day bore to the Jews? Do they understand it as having been set apart for especial observance by the church, as the seventh day was for national Israel? Is it for any such reason that our meetings are generally held on that day? I think not. I believe it is generally understood by our brethren to be the teaching of the Savior and the apostles that the Jewish sabbath was, with all the other ordinances of that dispensation, figurative of the things of the gospel dispensation; and that it had its fulfillment in the rest which the dear Savior obtained for his people, and which those who believe enter into, "ceasing from their own works, as God did from his;" and that no other day of the week has been substituted for the seventh by divine command as more holy to the church than the rest, but that all days are equally holy; and that the observance of any particular day as more holy to the Lord than another is not only not enjoined upon the gospel church, but is especially discountenanced in the teachings of the New Testament; although those who regard every day alike are not to judge those who esteem one day above another.—Mark ii. 27; Gal. iv. 10; Col. ii. 18; Heb. iv. 1-10; Rom. xiv. 5, 6. Any other day is in our esteem as appropriate for the meetings of the church, so far as divine command is concerned, as the first day of the week; and those who by reason of necessity, or to have more frequent meetings, occupy other days of the week in this delightful service, realize the presence and blessing of the Lord as well as on the first day. Why then do we meet generally on Sunday? One principal reason is that because this day has been established by law and custom, labor is discontinued, and it is therefore rendered more suitable and convenient for meetings. They can be held without disturbance or distraction. Besides, it is very suitable to have one day on which it is understood by all that meetings will be held. We may gather from two places in the New Testament at least that there was by the primitive church a regularly appointed time for meetings, no matter how often they had meetings besides, and that was on the first (day) of the week—Acts xx. 7; 1 Cor. xvi. 2. But although it should clearly appear that they did meet regularly on the first day of the week, as well as on other days, this could not have the force of a divine command as establishing that day as a day of peculiar holiness, in the absence of any record of such command by either the Savior or the apostles. We are not warranted in believing that the apostles could have received a command from Jesus to teach the especial observance of the first day of the week as a sabbath, as an especially holy day, and have failed to say one word to that effect; while they distinctly taught the deliverance of the church from holy days, new moons and sabbath days, with all other of those ordinances that were necessarily "to perish with the using." The appointment of any particular day as distinct from the rest would be contrary to the nature and meaning and power of the gospel, which is itself one day to the Lord, a "day which the Lord hath made," which all the legally appointed days pointed to as types, and in which the Lord's people, instead of being burdened, "rejoice and are glad."—Psalm cxviii. 24.

I do not see any objection to brethren meeting on Sunday, or any other day which custom or law has made a convenient day for meeting; therefore I see no objection to having meetings for worship on days that have been appointed by men for thanksgiving. The meetings of the saints for worship can never be justly regarded as conforming to the world. To refrain from meeting on any day because it was a day appointed for the meetings of those whose religion is of a worldly character, would be to deprive ourselves of a precious privilege for fear those who have no understanding of the principles of our worship should think we were following their example. We have the benefit of all the laws and institutions and works of the world.—1 Cor. iii. 21, 23; vi. 12; 2 Cor. iv. 15. We believe that all are for the saints, while we are not or should not be under the power of any of them. On all days alike the saints, when favored to realize the presence of the dear Redeemer, find their sabbath and their thanksgiving day. That day with them does not begin and end with the rising and setting of the natural sun upon any particular day of the week, but it began with the rising of the Sun of righteousness upon them as their light and their salvation, and it shall never end; for although this blessed Sun shall often be hidden from their view by dark and stormy clouds, it shall never more go down, for the Lord shall be their everlasting light, and the days of their mourning shall be ended.—Isaiah lx. 20.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—Like the child who has a promise of a new toy, we are looking anxiously for the initial number of the weekly SIGNS, hoping it will bring satisfactory returns to its publishers in a financial way, as well as the full satisfaction which its patrons have always derived from it while it made its semi-monthly visits. The value to its readers of such a medium of correspondence as the SIGNS OF THE TIMES should certainly be the matter contained therein. It is not an ordinary periodical, nor is it a paper that the natural mind has any relish for. There are in it no Sunday School stories to draw the youthful mind from one kind of novel reading to another equally as bad (if not worse), because clothed in a religious garb. It is not intended for ornamental purposes, nor to be glanced at and thrown aside; but it is a drop of water to the thirsty, a sweet morsel to the hungry, a crumb of comfort to the weary pilgrim, who, while traveling through the wilderness of this world, takes courage when he finds that others have passed through the same difficulties through which he is passing. It is a sweet communion of the followers of Jesus, who see each other (perhaps never in the flesh) but in the Spirit, bearing each other's burdens, and not withholding the spiritual light they have received, knowing that much of their own comfort is derived from the same source. It is written, "Then they that feared the Lord spake often one to another: and the Lord hearkened, and heard it [Precious thought, dear writer! The Lord hearkens; and when he does, it is not in vain], and a book of remembrance was written before him for them that feared the Lord, and that thought upon his name."—Mal. iii. 16. It is the speaking one to another through our family paper that brings us together in love as little children, having one faith, one hope, and one life, which is Christ Jesus our Lord. In every page of the SIGNS Jesus is our theme and our song. We desire no other. The same song was sung in prophecy before the manifestation of Jesus in the flesh. It was sung by a host of angels to the shepherds, while an infant he lay in the manger; and now it is a song of reality with every heaven-born child. "The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace," &c. All these are manifested by the correspondence of the saints, bringing to each one who is prepared to receive comfort of the Lord that blessed peace and assurance that the earth is the Lord's, and the fullness thereof, and that he maketh us to lie down in green pastures, he being the great Physician who healeth all our wounds. When you take up your pen, dear brother or sister, be assured, if your letter is indited by the Lord, it will not go astray, but as a welcome message it will reach the trembling, needy lamb for whom it was intended; and being fruitful, the recipient may in gladness communicate to another equally as needy. We read in Isaiah, "The burden of Damascus," "The burden of the valley of vision," &c. The dear old prophets were burdened with that concerning Israel, and that burden was not removed until in prophecy it was delivered to whom it was sent. The ministers of the gospel of Christ are custodians of messages from the Lord to his children, and this is a burden laid upon them, and I have no doubt they feel it as such many times. Let us all do our utmost to keep up our family correspondence. Yours in a precious hope, ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN IN THE PRECIOUS FAITH OF THE LORD:—In much weakness, both of body and mind, I have taken up my pen to let you know that I am yet in the land of the living, and to thank you for the reception of the SIGNS, which I did not expect, feeling so unworthy of such a favor from my brethren. May the good Lord open the windows of heaven and pour a blessing into your souls which the world can neither give nor take away. About all the preaching I have is what I read, and it seems to me the SIGNS grows better and deeper in gospel truth; or it may be because I am getting nearer the grave, and the eyes of my understanding are better.

We met at John Dawson's last Sunday, and brother Fetter arose before us and spoke from Job xiv. 1-5, much to our edification, and giving to God all the power, glory and honor. I had to tell him at the close of the meeting that by the eye of faith I could see the crown laid up in heaven for him. He is very weak in body, but rich in faith and the power of the Lord. After refreshment of dinner we all spent the evening in social conversation, sister Luviny Dawson reading for us the first piece in the SIGNS of November first, which was very precious to me.

Then brother Fetter took up the travel of his mind, telling how his steps were directed here, and giving a relation of his trials in the ministry. I must confess that it filled my heart with sadness; for when one member suffers, the whole body suffers with it. O that the good Lord may, in his own time and way, right all our wrongs, and once more bless his cold and languishing Zion, for Christ's sake, who has redeemed us. Now, dear brethren, for the cause and love of the truth I have written this; and if your better judgment does not say it is wrong, I would like to see it in the SIGNS, as I get many salutations from christian friends far and near who read that paper.

Finally, brethren, farewell. When it is well with you, remember me, a lonely widow, now seventy-five years old.

As ever, yours truly,

E. B. SCOTT.

P. S.—After writing the foregoing, being weary, I lay down to rest, and took up the SIGNS to read. O how good it is, particularly the editorial on "Correspondence and Fellowship." Brother Fetter and I had been talking on the same thing, seeing eye to eye with you. Please forgive me for taxing your time to read this. I may never do the like again, as I am looking for my passport, longing to go home. Adieu.

NORTH JAY, Maine, Nov. 22, 1888.

DEAR BROTHER WM. L. BEEBE:—Will you please give your views through the SIGNS OF THE TIMES on Revelation xx. 6? My mind has been upon that text a long time. Who are those that have part in the "first resurrection?" And what is meant by the "second death?" Your compliance will oblige one who desires to know nothing but the truth as it is in Jesus. Nothing but that truth will satisfy a believer in Jesus, our precious Redeemer, our Benefactor, and our Supporter. In all our trials, conflicts and afflictions Jesus will never leave nor forsake us; but he will give us joy that is unspeakable and full of glory. He will cause our cup to run over by the manifestation of his unfailing love and great goodness. May we be made thankful for every blessing we receive, and may we be deeply conscious of our own unworthiness, and the depravity of our hearts! I hope you will be able to send the SIGNS awhile longer. I take so much comfort in reading the editorials and communications. May the good Lord bless you seven fold, and give you wisdom, knowledge, and understanding of his word, and make you wise as serpents and harmless as doves. Fear not, nor be dismayed.

Your unworthy sister in hope,
MRS. AZEL MACUMBER.

INTRODUCTORY TO VOLUME LVII.

ENTERING with this issue of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES upon the fifty-seventh year of its publication, a review of its past history may well inspire us with gratitude to God for his signal blessing, by which this medium of correspondence has been preserved to the lovers of sound doctrine. In the face of that flood of popular errors which had come in upon the church of Christ since the close of the last century, a little company of believers about sixty years ago, without capital, and unable themselves to see how their effort could be successful, attempted to find their brethren by the publication of the first regular periodical ever issued in advocacy of the simple truth of the gospel of Christ. By the blessing of God the wrath and contempt of the proud spirit of anti-christ was made the vehicle by which others who were mourning over the general prevalence of error, learned that there was such a paper in existence. The result was that the despised and mourning little companies of saints in distant localities were brought into correspondence with each other. More than a half century of fraternal intercourse has thus been enjoyed by those who might otherwise have been ignorant of the fact that they were brethren. Time and space would fail to record the many signal expressions of divine favor by which the publication has been perpetuated up to the present time. Very few of those who read the first years of the paper, now remain upon the shores of mortality. Nearly all who rejoiced to hail the advent of the first volume have entered the haven of eternal rest. Yet thousands have been raised up to still contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints. So manifest has been the power of God in the maintenance of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES that we may well say, "Hitherto hath the Lord helped us."—1 Sam. vii. 12.

Relying upon the continued favor of the same omnipotent Supporter, we enter upon this new volume with the prayer that the Lord may so direct our course that his afflicted and poor people may find comfort and encouragement in reading our columns. Fully appreciating the value of the assistance rendered in the past by our many and gifted regular correspondents, we earnestly hope for a continuance of their contributions to enrich our pages during the coming year. In no other way can the ministers of Christ address so large a number of interested people as through the press; and numbers of anxious readers eagerly look to the SIGNS OF THE TIMES as the only channel through which they hear from their fellow-pilgrims in this wilderness world. The experience of more than half a century has proved the advantage of this general correspondence. The occasional contributions of those who declare what they have experienced of the goodness and mercy of God, are always interesting to every lover of the doctrine of God our Savior. Such communications are always desirable. Under our new arrangement of weekly issues there will be greatly increased room for such joyful messages. Many private letters are full of rich comfort and instruction, which might be given to the whole household of God by publication. All truth belongs alike to the saints in every age and in every place. It is desirable that all who have such correspondence in their possession, should obtain the consent of the writers to its publication, and forward it for the SIGNS. It will still be the desire of the editors to exclude everything concerning local or personal difficulties, since no good result can be attained by publishing such things. The law of Christ authorizes no further proclamation of offenses than that they be told to the church. Of course, the church having jurisdiction of the case is the only tribunal to which it can properly be reported. It can be of no benefit to those involved in difficulties, if they secure the sympathy of brethren at a distance, who can have no voice in the disposal of the case in the individual church where the trouble exists. Therefore we earnestly request that no such matters be reported to us. While we are in this state of imperfection offenses must needs come among the churches of the saints; and the law of Christ definitely directs the course of treatment for them. In any case "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him."—James i. 5. The Spirit of Christ will never direct contrary to the law given by inspiration of God.

With the sincere desire that the love of Christ may be richly manifested in the correspondence of the saints which shall be published in the opening volume of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, and humbly asking the prayers of all lovers of our Lord that we may be kept by his power in the love of God and guided by his Spirit, we tremblingly yet hopefully enter upon this new year of our labors, trusting in the same infinite grace by which we have been sustained in the past, and craving a continuance of the kind forbearance and sympathy of our brethren. And may grace, mercy and peace from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ, abide upon us and all his Israel now and evermore. Amen.

THE FIRST RESURRECTION.

"BLESSED and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection; on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years."—Rev. xx. 6.

Although we have before given expression to some of our thoughts in connection with the subject contained in this text and its context, in compliance with the request of sister Macumber, in another column, the following remarks are submitted to the consideration of our readers. As many have recently begun to receive the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, it may be well to repeat what has frequently been expressed in the past years of our publication, that what is written by us or by any uninspired man is entitled to no more credit than that which is commanded by its strict conformity to the divine standard of truth as it is given exclusively in the sacred Scriptures, and revealed alone by the Spirit of Christ in the heart of every one who is taught of God. While it is profitable for the saints to interchange views, and talk of their individual experiences, it should never be forgotten that the most devoted christian is liable to be deceived by the devices of the tempter; so that it is possible that even those whom we regard as reliable instructors in the doctrine of Christ, may sincerely hold views which are not authorized by the direct and clear teaching of the Scriptures. There is no infallible guide but the Spirit of truth which searches even the deep things of God. By that Spirit every individual saint must judge and prove all things. By this test truth is always approved and every false sentiment is exposed and condemned.

In this revelation of Jesus Christ, as it is recorded in the book from which our text is taken, it should be remembered that it is all the one testimony of Jesus. Much wild speculation has been published in the way of distorting the things here written, to make them seem to refer to prominent events in the history of the nations of the earth. However such commentaries may commend themselves as consistent with natural reason, such application can only describe the perishing things which are seen, and as such they are no more than the shadows of the real truth, which is found alone in the spiritual experience of the saints and in the dealing of God with his church. In order to see the truth which God has hidden in the wonderful record of this book it must be revealed in the experience of his people by the same Spirit under whose guidance the apostle was moved to write it. The whole of this glorious revelation is one inseparable picture in which Christ is set forth as the embodiment of the great mystery of godliness, and in all that revelation Jesus must be presented not only as the Savior of his people from their sins, but as their present help in every time of trouble, and all their salvation while sojourning here in this polluted valley of the shadow of death. When a portion of this one testimony is detached from its connection, and explained without reference to the other portions of the same great declaration of eternal truth, there may be an apparent consistency with natural reason in such an application while all the comfort and instruction for the saints is overlooked and omitted. No explanation of Scripture is full and correct unless it presents divine comfort and instruction to the saints in such a manifestation as is directly applicable to their own personal and present experience. The application of this test will be a safe criterion by which to discriminate between the truth as received by experimental revelation and all the devices of carnal reason. There is no testimony of Jesus which is not written in the experience of those who are led by his Spirit; and no Scripture bears the seal of inspiration unless it does testify of Jesus as the perfect and only Savior of his people from their sins. Since the saints "know all things" by virtue of that "unction from the Holy One," which they have, and that anointing abideth in them (1 John ii. 20, 27), they are never left without this sure test by which to discover the difference between truth and error. It is the continual work of the tempter to turn their attention from this safe and certain guide to the deceptive reasoning of their own natural minds. But in this as in every effort to find aid in the powers of the natural man, they must invariably learn that if they live after the flesh they shall die. It is alone by grace that the saints are saved in their daily experience as well as in their final deliverance from sin and its fearful consequence.

While the most sublime imagery and the loftiest language are used by the inspired servants of God in recording the things which were given them to declare concerning the great mystery of godliness, it should be remembered that all their words and figures fall short of expressing the unspeakable riches of the goodness and mercy of God as revealed in the gift of eternal life in Jesus Christ, which he has bestowed upon sinners who "were by nature the children of wrath, even as others." The awful grandeur of the similitudes which are written in the book of Revelation may well challenge the admiration of the natural mind; but when the Holy Spirit shows to the saints the glorious testimony of Jesus in these figures, they seem but as the dark cloud upon which the finger of God has inscribed the bright rainbow of his inconceivable love. The whole of this book is declared to be "The Revelation of Jesus Christ, which God gave unto him," and it embraces all of that great mystery of godliness in which God was manifest in the flesh as he is revealed in the face of Jesus Christ. This revelation was by the angel of Jesus "signified to his servant John," by whom it was recorded for the benefit of the saints in all subsequent ages as included in the "seven churches which are in Asia." In the vision described in the immediate connection of our text, we understand the angel revealed to be our Lord Jesus, who is called the Angel or Messenger of the covenant, in whom his people delight.—Mal. iii. 1. He alone has the key of the bottomless pit, and in his hand is the great chain which binds and restrains the old serpent, which is the devil and Satan. He came down from the heaven of his own glory which he had with the Father before the world was, and was made a little lower than the angels for the suffering of death. By fulfilling the law of eternal justice he did blot out the handwriting of ordinances which was against his people, and "through death destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil, and deliver them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage."—Heb. ii. 14, 15. In this marvellous display of his omnipotent grace he also came down from the heaven of the legal dispensation, which he abolished by the sacrifice of himself. In his resurrection he was glorified as having all power given unto him in heaven and in earth. The powers of iniquity are all subject to his command, and he has led captivity captive. The bottomless pit of helpless bondage in sin and falsehood is the abode of the devil and all his angels, and our victorious Lord holds the key by which their imprisonment is forever secured. Therefore there is no possibility that any of his redeemed people can ever be destroyed by all the malice and rage of sin and Satan. The victory is already accomplished by our glorified Redeemer. He that liveth and was dead is alive forevermore. Amen. His life assures the eternal life of all whose sins he bore in his own body on the tree of the cross when he perfected forever them that are sanctified.

As Jesus is himself "before all things, and by him all things consist," it is manifest that there can be nothing before him. He declares, "I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live; and whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die."—John xi. 25, 26. Both in his exaltation over all created things, and in his existence, Jesus is pre-eminently the First in every particular. Then as the "First begotten of the dead," he is evidently the "First Resurrection." In him is the eternal life of all his body, the church, which is the fullness of him that filleth all in all. The blessing pronounced in our text therefore embraces the same characters who are specified in every other benediction in the Scriptures. All who are included in the election of grace are members of the body of Christ, and when Jesus as their living Head arose from under the law and left the realm of death, every member of his body was delivered from the guilt and condemnation of sin, and in that sense they all are risen with him. So the Spirit moved Isaiah to prophesy unto the true Israel, "Thy dead shall live; my dead body shall they arise. Awake and sing, ye that dwell in dust; for thy dew is as the dew of herbs, and the earth shall cast out the dead."—Isa. xxvi. 10. He that hath part in this First Resurrection is indeed blessed, and the blessing which abides upon him is inseparable from the holiness which marks him as one who is justified freely by divine grace from all sin and condemnation, being cleansed by the blood of Jesus and made holy and without blame before him in love. The specification of our text excludes from this divine blessing all who have not part in the First Resurrection. Death has already passed upon all the family of man, for that all have sinned. No efforts of their own can ever deliver them from this hopeless condition. There is righteousness and life nowhere else but in Jesus. All the blessing of life and holiness must therefore be in him. After clearly discriminating between the works of the flesh and the operation of the Spirit in his own experience, Paul says, "There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit."—Rom. viii. 1. Manifestly all such characters are both "blessed and holy." Yet neither the blessing nor the holiness is the result of any works or merit in themselves. They are indebted for both to that grace of God by which they were chosen in Christ before the foundation of the world, that they should be holy and without blame before him in love.

By the "Second death" we understand the hopeless condemnation which rests upon all the sinful race of Adam, who are not blessed and holy in Christ as the "First Resurrection." Jesus says, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation; but is passed from death unto life."—John v. 24. Upon such as are thus blessed and made holy and without blame before God in love, the holy law of God can have no power to inflict its condemnation, because Jesus paid all the demands of infinite justice as their life, when he was made a curse for all the members of his body. There is no principle revealed upon which the sinless Son of God could have been the victim of the sword of divine justice except as he is identified with his people as their life. By reason of that unity he is the very life which was demanded by the holy law, and as such he confessed that it was written of him to do the will of God. In laying down his life for the members of his body he delivered them from their sins and the death to which their sins consigned them. By this one offering they were perfected forever, justified from all things which could be laid to their charge; the law could demand no more than the life of the sinner, and Jesus is the life of his body including all for whom he died. By this blessed unity with Jesus all his members are made holy as he is holy. The perfect righteousness of Jesus is the garment of salvation in which the Lord has clothed all his people as "priests of God and of Christ," as he promised in his oath to David, "I will abundantly bless her provision; I will satisfy her poor with bread. I will also clothe her priests with salvation; and her saints shall shout aloud for joy."—Psa. cxxxii. 15, 16. This is the "fine linen, clean and white," the "righteousness of saints," in which it was granted the church to be arrayed. No blemish can ever mar this immaculate clothing. Arrayed in this robe, every saint is holy as the Lord himself.

By the period specified as "a thousand years," we do not understand a definitely limited time, as men count years. Since the Lord began to reign in his gospel kingdom, as manifested on the great day of Pentecost, nearly two thousand of our years have passed, and yet his dominion knows no limit. Still do his people "reign with Christ." But it must not be understood that they ever can reign without him. It is only as he gives them the victory that they are able to reign over sin and self, and they learn by continual experience that without him they can do nothing. When he appears in their experience they always triumph over all adversaries; but when they are left to prove their own strength they are still weak and helpless as was Peter when at the accusation of a maid he denied the Lord. Yet all his saints are by his grace made to reign with Christ in the glory of his kingdom, while they are obliged to confess that "the kingdom and the power and the glory" all belong to Jesus alone.

COMMENTS ON CHAPTER V. OF SOLOMON'S TEMPLE SPIRITUALIZED.

THAT the servants of Hiram who assisted in the building of the temple, as well as the Gibeonites named, were types of gospel ministers, we will not dispute; neither will be dispute that the gospel ministry are in the hand and under the control and guidance of the great Builder, for the conversion (not quickening) of redeemed sinners; that is, through their preaching, or teaching, many are turned from darkness to light, their eyes opened to behold the order of God's house, so that they find and enjoy inheritance among them which are sanctified by faith that is in Christ Jesus.—Acts xxvi. 16-18; xx. 31, 32. Paul says that Jesus told him that he had appeared unto him for this purpose, to make him a minister, &c. And Peter says, "Men, brethren, ye know how that a good while ago God made choice among us, that the Gentiles by my mouth [in preaching, or teaching] should hear the word of the gospel, and believe," and thus find inheritance among the sanctified by faith in Christ Jesus, in gospel churches. Through the ministry of the word redeemed sinners are gathered together and built up in "the faith which was once delivered unto the saints."

It is also true that such ministers are servants of Christ, and sons of God, being born of God. Only such as serve God are his servants, in a proper, scriptural sense. Should one who is not a partaker of grace, and therefore not manifested as one of the sons of God, obtain a nominal standing in a gospel church, and be recognized as a minister of Christ, he would not be a servant of God or of Christ. He could not be, because he would not, could not, serve God or his people, but would continually be serving himself of them, in the gratification of his purely selfish motives. Without the love of God in the heart, no one can be a servant of God, in a gospel sense. The Lord says, "My servants shall serve me." "His servants ye are to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey." "For the kingdom of God is not meat and drink, but righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost. For he that in these things serveth Christ is acceptable to God, and approved of men."—Rom. xiv. 17, 18. One may be a son of God, and yet be serving his own carnal lusts and appetites, instead of serving his Lord; but no one can be a servant of God, in a gospel sense, without being a son. We are not justified in supposing that under the gospel and in the gospel church God calls and qualifies as his servants, for the work of the ministry, any who are not his sons, but are destitute of his grace, and that "therefore, when the time shall come, he that is only a servant here, shall certainly be put out of the house, even out of that house himself did help to build." Of course we do not mean to dispute the fact that God uses wicked men and devils to accomplish his will and pleasure, and that in this sense they serve him, though they have not known him nor his purpose, as in the case of Cyrus, Nebuchadnezzar, and many others. We cannot suppose that these last named characters were typified by the servants of Hiram or the Gibeonites named.

Under the legal covenant, which embraced fleshly Israel, it was not required that one should be a subject of faith, a child of God, in order to render acceptable service under that covenant, and thus be a servant of the God of Israel. There were among the servants there those who possessed the faith of God, and those who did not possess it. When the offerings of the Israelites were brought to the priests, according to the law of God, they were not required to discern or discriminate between those who brought them, as to whether the comers thereto possessed spiritual life or faith in God. But there was a time coming when there should be a different order of things; when those who were merely servants, and not sons, should be put out of the house; when every branch that did not bring forth spiritual fruit should be broken off; when the angels, the true, spiritual servants or ministers of Jesus should gather out of the kingdom all things that offended, and only those should remain in the vineyard, the kingdom, the house, who were spiritual subjects, born of God, and who worship in spirit and in truth. Hence the Lord said, by the mouth of his holy prophet, Malachi, "Then shall ye return, and discern between the righteous and the wicked, between him that serveth God and him that serveth him not." This is beyond all doubt a prophecy of gospel times.

We cannot agree with the author's application of Isaiah lxi. 5, "And strangers shall stand and feed your flocks, and the sons of the alien shall be your ploughmen and your vine-dressers." We regard this also as a prophecy of gospel times, of the gathering into the gospel fold the Gentile saints, and their ministry from thence. Then should these Gentiles be, according to testimony of the inspired apostle Paul, "No more strangers and foreigners [strangers and sons of the alien], but fellow-citizens with the saints, and of the household of God; and are built on the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone. In whom all the building, fitly framed together, groweth unto a holy temple in the Lord: in whom ye also are builded together for a habitation of God through the Spirit."—Eph. ii. 19-22. Here we have the true, the antitypical temple of Solomon, and the servants therein those who in the days of the prophet were called "strangers" and "the sons of the alien." These Gentile believers, sons of God, are represented as saying, "Doubtless thou art our Father, though Abraham be ignorant of us, and Israel acknowledge us not: thou, O Lord, art our Father, our Redeemer; thy name is from everlasting."—Isa lxiii. 16.

INCREASED ABOUT 2,000!

DEAR BRETHREN:—We trust it is with a true spirit of thankfulness to our ever-gracious God that we announce that he has put it in the hearts of the lovers of truth to make an unprecedented effort in extending the circulation of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. Never in all our experience with the paper have we known such universal interest manifested in procuring new subscribers. Nearly every letter received within the last few weeks has contained from one to ten or more new subscribers; until now we have the pleasure of informing our readers that by the time this number is out we will have nearly, if not quite, two thousand more subscribers than we had at the commencement of 1888! These new names have been received at one dollar each, and therefore will be no financial benefit to us for this year; but it will take the paper into thousands of homes where it otherwise would not have gone, and this will be a great source of gratification to all who believe the precious truth advocated by the paper. How we shall fare financially remains yet to be seen. If all who subscribed at the commencement of last volume at one dollar for the semi-monthly renew their subscription at two dollars for the weekly, and the general interest in the increase of our circulation continues among the brethren and friends that has been shown of late, then we may consider the paper established as a weekly.

The paper was never before as cheap as is the weekly at two dollars a year. For many years it was published an eight-page semi-monthly, twenty-four numbers a year, at one dollar, and then the subscriber paid the postage—twenty-four cents a year, or one cent for each number. Now we give fifty-two numbers of the same size, and pay the postage ourselves. Certainly none can complain of the price if they want the paper. Some may think they cannot afford to take the paper because they have to pay the two dollars all at one time; but, dear brethren, did you ever stop to think how much this cost you a day? It is about half a cent. We doubt not but what many of you have an old pipe that costs you more than that. If you really want the paper, there is not one in a thousand of you but what can afford it, if you only think so.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

DIED—At her late residence in Fairfax County, Va., May 13th, 1888, Mrs. Virginia Broders, wife of brother John Broders, of the church in Alexandria, Va., aged forty-four years.

Mrs. Broders had been sick but a short time, and her sudden death was an unlooked-for event. She was a lady of an industrious, active temperament, untiring in her attention to her family, to whose care and comfort her whole life seemed devoted. We clearly see, however, that our God works and none can hinder.

"In deep, unfathomable mines
Of never-failing skill
He treasures up his bright designs,
And works his sovereign will."

Death enters this family circle, and removes from their midst the subject of our notice, apparently in the prime of life, and in the sphere of great usefulness; but we rejoice to know that the Lord directs all things after the counsel of his own will.

"His purposes will ripen fast,
Unfolding every hour."

We rejoice in the knowledge of his unbounded sovereign power over all things, working everywhere in the accomplishment of the one grand design for which all worlds were made. The deceased leaves her husband and six children, besides other relatives, to mourn their loss in her death. They have our deep sympathy in their bereavement, and sincere hope that our God may overrule it all to their good and his own glory, knowing that he doeth all things well.

ALSO,

DIED—At her home in Alexandria, Va., Feb. 11th, 1888, sister Maggie Fisher.

The deceased was born in Occoquan, Va., and had been baptized by the late Elder Joseph Purington during his ministry in Alexandria. She had been gradually declining in health since the death of her mother a short time previous. During her sickness she seemed calm and resigned to the heavenly will, and met with patience the final stroke which released her from a world of toil and care. I attended the funeral, and spoke to the brethren and friends who were present of the riches of the grace of our God displayed in the salvation of lost and helpless sinners. The deceased leaves two sisters, five brothers, and other relatives, with the church of her membership, to mourn their loss in her death. We shall miss her in the solemn feasts of Zion, but realize that she has passed on but a little while before us, and that our loss is her immortal gain.

The Lord God omnipotent will raise up others to fill the places of those whom he calls from time to eternity, and will most assuredly work all things after the counsel of his will and for the good of his children. We confide in him ever, in whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge, and upon whose almighty word all time and eternity wait. How insignificant are earthly nations and powers, all mortality indeed but a vapor, but "the word of the Lord endureth forever."

WM. M. SMOOT.

OCCOQUAN, Va., Dec., 1888.

SISTER Elizabeth Hill, widow of Nathan Hill, was born April 2d, 1807, in Williamsburg, Clermont Co., Ohio, and died Dec. 4th, 1888, aged eighty-one years, eight months and two days. She was buried Dec. 6th, Elder George Cottrell preaching a discourse on the resurrection, principally from these words, "If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable."

The subject of this notice united with the Baptists about sixty years ago, and was a faithful member, always desiring to meet the brethren and sisters, and remained sound in the faith, saying to brother Cottrell some time before her death that the Baptists here (in the Greenville Association) preached the doctrine of grace and predestination of all things as they did in her earliest recollection. She was baptized by Elder — Smith, in the Stone Lick Church, Clermont Co., Ohio. After her marriage to brother Nathan Hill, Nov. 14th, 1850, they emigrated to Darke Co., Ohio, Oct. 1st, 1854. She was stricken with paralysis; and after seventeen months of great suffering, which she bore with true christian fortitude, she passed away in the joy of that precious faith which had sustained her so long. The Providence Church, of Darke Co., Ohio, with which she spent her last years since her reception, May 10th, 1879, will long feel their loss. May the Lord bless them, together with kindred and friends, under their bereavement. In humble hope,

A. B. BREES.

DIED—In Great Falls, N. H. (his home was in Shapleigh, Maine), Oct. 21st, 1888, Mr. John G. Wentworth, aged seventy-five years and ten months.

He experienced a hope in Christ in his youthful days and united with the Baptists; but the church that he united with went with the New School Baptists. For quite a number of years he has been dissatisfied with them, and has been talking about offering himself to the Old School Baptists; but living twelve miles from our church, he put it off from time to time, and neglected to do it; but he selected me to preach at his funeral. We believe that he has gone to his eternal rest. He has left quite a number of children to mourn.

ALSO,

DIED—In North Berwick, Maine, Nov. 20th, 1888, Mrs. Abbey M. Staples, wife of Mr. Gilbert B. Staples, aged thirty-three years and ten months.

Her disease was quick consumption, and in her last days she suffered beyond description. She never made any confession of a hope in Christ, but was a kind companion and mother and a good neighbor. She has left her husband and four children, the youngest about one year old, who will miss the care of a loving mother. A large number of people were at her funeral. May God bless her husband, mother, brothers, sisters, and all who are called to mourn.

WM. QUINT.

NORTH BERWICK, Maine.

Sarah Morris Whistler, wife of Jacob Whistler, was born July 25th, 1804, and died Nov. 8th, 1888, being eighty-four years, three months and fifteen days old.

There were born unto them twelve children, of whom nine remain to mourn their loss of a kind mother. She united with the Old School Baptists in the year 1841, living forty-seven years a christian and upright life, her house being open to her brethren and friends who wished to call upon her. Truly we have lost a true sister, and the neighborhood a good christian neighbor; but we hope our loss is her eternal gain. The funeral services were conducted by the writer.

ALSO,

SISTER Mary M. Blue was born Feb. 9th, 1813, and died Dec. 17th, 1888, being seventy-five years, ten months and eight days old.

Sister Blue united with the Turkey Run Church fifty-nine years ago, and we feel that she has been called from the church militant to the church triumphant. May God enable us to adore and praise his great and reverend name, for he worketh all things after the counsel of his own will, and none dare say unto him, What doest thou?

Elders Thomas Cole and R. W. Peters were called upon to conduct the funeral services, which we did, to quite an interesting congregation.

R. W. PETERS.

CIRCLEVILLE, Ohio, Dec. 19, 1888.

It is with a heart full of sorrow and grief that I attempt to write for publication the death of my dear departed husband, James Pearce, who died at his son's residence in Fayette Co., Ind., April 12th, 1888, of rheumatism, kidney complaint and old age. Had he lived thirteen days longer he would have been eighty-eight years old. He said he was not afraid to die. The Bible, hymn book and SIGNS OF THE TIMES were all the preaching he had for a great many years. Being too feeble to walk, and having no other way to go, he had to stay at home. He belonged to the Old School Baptists, and was baptized by Elder George Harlan. He was truly a good man, a devoted husband, a kind neighbor and friend, upright in all his dealings with his fellow-men, and had the confidence and good will of all. How calm and peaceful he looked as he lay in the cold arms of death! He passed away without a struggle. I desire to be reconciled to this my great bereavement, but find it hard to say, Thy will, O Lord, be done!

C. P.

Cyrena Yeoman Garinger, daughter of James and Sarah Yeoman, was born April 17th, 1806, in the state of New York, and died October 20th, 1888, aged eighty-two years, six months and three days.

She emigrated with her parents to Ohio in the spring of 1815, landing at Columbus, then six miles above Cincinnati, and in the fall of the same year removed to Fayette County. In the year 1825 she was united in marriage to David Garinger, from which union there were born unto them nine children, four sons and five daughters, all of whom are still living. Cyrena united with the Old School Baptist Church called Paint Creek in November, 1831, and has lived fifty-seven years in one church, a faithful member until death. She with her husband accumulated a large fortune, which they left to their children.

The writer was called upon to address a large congregation at the old church, and we laid her away to await the morning of the resurrection.

R. W. PETERS.

DIED—At her home in Binghamton, N. Y., July 27th, 1888, sister Hannah P. Hilton, aged forty-nine years.

Sister Hilton had been a firm friend of the Old School Baptists and the cause of truth for many years, and long ago had said to her friends that she had a hope; but she never had strength to come before the church until October, 1887, when she was received, and baptized by Elder Wm. Campbell, at Osborn Hollow. She has been a great sufferer for many years from a complication of diseases, but endured them all with patient resignation to the will of God, and in her last days experienced a separation from all earthly things, her affections being truly set on things above. She leaves a brother, several sisters, and numerous friends and relatives, to mourn.

Her funeral was attended at Osborn Hollow, her former home, where Elder Charles Bogardus preached a comforting discourse to the friends and relatives. May the Lord sustain the afflicted family, and glorify his great name.

B. BUNDY.

John J. Harris was born in Newton Co., Ga., in 1825, and moved with his father to Chambers Co., Ala., in 1835. He was married to Martha Stroud in 1847, and moved to Arkansas in 1848. In 1868 he moved to Louisiana, and in that year obtained a hope in Christ, and was baptized by Elder John Wyatt. He returned to Arkansas in 1869, and united with the Pilgrims' Rest Church, and was soon ordained as Deacon, in which capacity he served until his death. His first wife, Martha, died in the year 1877, and he soon afterward married her sister Lizzie, with whom he lived in peace until his death, August 10th, 1888, leaving his wife and two children, with many friends, to mourn his death. He stood high in the estimation of good people for his honesty, integrity and faithful dealing with his fellow-men. He lived an exemplary christian life until his death.

E. W. NORMAN.

On November 11th, 1888, Mrs. Phebe J. Tyler passed over the river to the better land, where there is rest for the weary, aged seventy-eight years.

She was a relict of Dr. James Tyler, whose death was noticed in the SIGNS last year. Since her youth she has been a firm believer in the doctrine of the Primitive Baptists, keeping aloof from the errors so universally advocated in these days. She united with the Old School Baptist Church (by letter) in Darien, Genesee Co., N. Y., in March, 1841. For the past three years she had lived in Attica, Wyoming County, where her funeral was largely attended at the late residence of her brother, J. R. Williams. The burial was at North Darien Cemetery on the fourteenth.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date, this date denotes the time at which your subscription expires, and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

CORRESPONDENCE.

REISTERSTOWN, Md., Nov. 30, 1888.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—A short time since a dear sister in Maine wrote me, asking me to write through the SIGNS upon the words found in Isaiah vi. 1, saying that they had come to her mind with strength and comfort of late. I have no doubt that our sister has seen more in these words than I can by any possibility write at this time, and yet I feel like trying to comply with her request. The text reads as follows, "In the year that king Uzziah died I saw also the Lord sitting upon a throne, high and lifted up, and his train filled the temple."

Any one who desires to see the real force and meaning of the visions that were vouchsafed the prophets, must know something of the circumstances under which they were given. A vision of the Lord is here given to Isaiah; and when we consider the circumstances of this time, it becomes very full of meaning, both as regarded the then present time, and our own case as well. By reference to Second Kings xv. and Second Chronicles xxvi. two things will be seen. First, that the people were still largely worshipers of idols, and unmindful of the law of the Lord; and second, that king Uzziah himself, at the last of his long reign of fifty-two years, had become proud, and sought to usurp the priests' office, and had therefore been smitten with leprosy, and, according to the law, could no longer mingle with men, and so his son reigned in his stead. Accordingly all these opening chapters of Isaiah are a description of their idolatry and wickedness, and a declaration of the judgment of God upon them. Professing to be followers of the true God, they yet honored him not, and worshiped and served the creature more than the Creator. The king himself had shown a bold defiance of God in his last days, though all his reign up to the last had been in righteousness and truth. The whole life of the people was such as to show that they regarded neither the divine sovereignty nor holiness, counting them both as mere fables, or as though they were not.

Now Isaiah declares that in the midst of this prevailing degeneracy and evil he saw the Lord. He saw him "lifted up." He saw multitudes about him filling the temple. He heard heavenly inhabitants bearing united testimony to his holiness, and declaring that the earth was full of his glory. The people and the king had by their whole manner of life seemed to say, "God is not high and lifted up; he is not worthy of homage from his creatures; he is not holy; he has no glory." Now the prophet declares, on the other hand, that which he saw and heard concerning God.

It would seem that until then the prevailing corruption of the time had not seemed so terrible to him; but now the vision of the Lord had changed all this dullness and blindness of comprehension into keenness of vision, and Isaiah saw first his own sinfulness in the presence of God, and then the wickedness of the people, and confessed his and their guilt. Being guilty himself, he could not speak. How could he pray, how could he proclaim what he had seen, how could he reprove the people, seeing that his own lips were unclean? But now one of these holy beings who had convinced him of God's holiness and his own sinfulness, flew to him with a living coal from the altar, and touched his unclean lips, and said that his iniquity was taken away and his sin purged. The living coal from the altar of burnt offering was to him the sacred pledge that the sacrifice had been made and burned and accepted for all Israel, and for him as well; and now when God says, "Whom shall I send, and who will go for us?" he can respond, "Here am I; send me." This is the only ground upon which any minister of Jesus can go, preaching the gospel, warning, reproof, rebuking, as the word of the Lord requires. These, it seems to me, are some of the general truths presented in this connection. It would be interesting indeed to dwell upon each and every verse of this short chapter, but the space of an ordinary article for publication forbids. I will try to talk a little about the words of the first verse.

First, the time of the vision—"In the year that king Uzziah died." On the one hand was the spectacle of the king himself, leprous, and dwelling apart from men, as a monument of the judgment of God against sin. As leprosy separated him from whole, sound men, so his sin had separated between him and God. Whether the vision was before or after the death of the king, still the mind of the prophet would be turned to him, and would recall his pitiable state, and the transgression that led to it. If there was in Isaiah any spirit of self-praise and of condemnation of the king, this vision of God and his holiness would forever silence it, because now he saw that not only was the king unclean, but also that he himself and all the people were unclean. A view of God always humbles self and silences boasting. It was a fitting time for such a vision to be given him. God gives visions just at the right time, and when his people are prepared for them. We would hasten the work, but God does not make haste. All is done just as is right and for the best. In Uzziah appeared a picture of human vanity and weakness and folly; but in this vision of the Lord was seen all wisdom, power, righteousness and truth. To silence all human boasting on the one hand, and to reveal the source of all strength and comfort on the other, was this vision given. Our God works in just such ways yet. Seeing the folly and weakness of some other man, we would boast; but then the Lord shows us our own uncleanness by giving us a view of his holy character, and then we can no longer boast. Now we are prepared to reprove and rebuke sin with all long-suffering and doctrine. Being now converted, like Peter, out of our self-sufficiency, we are prepared in every way to be of use to the brethren, and to strengthen them.

Second. "I saw also the Lord sitting upon a throne." In the Scriptures the word "sitting," or "to sit," always implies quietness, stability, something settled or established. If there has been any struggle, it is all ended; if any opposition, it is all silenced, and all now render allegiance to a recognized authority. So the prophet sees the Lord, as one whose right to the throne is not disputed, and who can laugh and hold in derision any feeble, puny arm that may be raised against him. His right and his ability to hold the throne are alike unquestioned and unquestionable. No question could arise in the mind of this true prophet after such a vision as this. Had he seen the Lord standing or going forth in battle array, it would not have given him such a view of the ineffable peace which is with God as he sits upon his throne.

The word "throne" implies authority, government, or dominion, whether in exercise or not. It differs from the word "sceptre" in this, that while the throne is the emblem of power or authority in itself, the sceptre means that power or authority in exercise. With Jehovah they never can be separated. He has authority, and his authority is always in exercise. It would be impossible here to refer to all the places in the word where God is said to reign. It is said again and again, "The Lord reigneth," and "His kingdom ruleth over all." The words "high and lifted up" express the supreme exaltation of our God over all worlds and beings. Not only is he over all, but infinitely above all. He is not "first among his equals," but he has no equals. Angels can no more climb to his seat than can a worm. No storm of earth can affect his eternal repose. He speaks, and it is done; he commands, and it stands fast. He is the high and lofty One who inhabits eternity, and yet he dwells with those of humble and contrite heart and mind.

There are two things in which we are to trace the divine authority and sovereignty. First, among and over the wicked; and second, in the hearts of his people. The wicked imagine that they are their own keepers—that they order their own lives; but it is not so. They are under constraint and restraint. He constrains them to go just so far and in just such direction as shall tend to fulfill his purposes, and restrains them from going any further, or in any other direction. So it is that "The wrath of man shall praise him, and the remainder of wrath he will restrain," or hold in check. Pharaoh supposed that he was doing his own will, but he was simply fulfilling the purpose for which God had placed him in the world. When Nebuchadnezzar carried Israel into the seventy years' captivity, and again, when Cyrus gave command that they should return, they meant not to do the will of God; and yet his will was done. When Judas betrayed and sold Jesus, and the Jews cried out, "Crucify him! crucify him!" and Pilate ordered him to be scourged and crucified, they did not know that they were simply fulfilling the eternal purpose of Jehovah, and were accomplishing the redemption of millions of fallen sinners. See how the divine sovereignty shines forth in every act of those who took part in the awful scenes of that dread day! What the Scriptures had declared must be fulfilled, men were the unwitting instruments in the hands of God. They hated God, and yet they willingly did his will, supposing that it was their own will, and not his. So, in like manner, Joseph's brethren, in hatred and envy and jealousy of Joseph, sold him for a slave, supposing that they were doing simply their own will. They were doing their own will, but they were doing God's will also; because by this very means he meant to save much people alive. Here are plain declarations of the word. These things we accept and believe; but, like one of old, we must say, "Such knowledge is too wonderful for me; I cannot attain unto it."—Psalm cxxxix. At the most we can catch but feeble glimpses of all that the divine sovereignty means. Our vision is confined to narrow limits, but God's sovereignty is illimitable.

Unless we are prepared to fix a limit to the divine sovereignty, we can fix no limit to the divine foreknowledge, wisdom, power, unchangeableness and predestination. They all stand or fall together. As broad and as full as is one, so broad and full are the others. Election also comes in with all the rest. The attributes of our God are all in harmony with each other. He does not, he cannot sit upon his throne unless he be a God of power and eternal purpose.

Because he rules among the inhabitants of earth, therefore can his children rest and put away all fear. No weapon formed against them shall prosper, but rather shall turn to their good. The wicked are his sword to correct his people, but they are also ravens to bring them daily blessings. So "all things work together for good to them that love God." Because all work for good, Paul could say, "In all these things we are more than conquerors" through Christ. We are more than conquerors because we not only triumph over these foes through Christ, but find them actually doing us the greatest good. O how blessed to think that even the rage of Satan is turned into a vehicle by which good comes to us! Satan rages through wicked men, but they as well as he are but doing God's purpose.

God reigns over and among wicked men, but he reigns most blessedly in his people. Wicked men do not know that God reigns over them, but his people recognize his reign over them. Wicked men say, "We will not have this man to reign over us." God's people pray, "Do thou, O God, come and reign in my heart and over my whole life!" The wicked do God's will, meaning to disobey him; but his people lovingly, longingly and joyfully do his will, only grieving that they come so far short of the obedience which they desire.

God reigns in his people in convincing and convicting them of sin, of righteousness and judgment, in subduing their pride and lofty looks, in bringing them not to trust in self, but to trust in Jesus, in keeping them day by day from being overcome by temptation, and in guiding their feet in the way of obedience and love. He reigns in them when afflictions, trials and sorrows come, keeping back the murmuring spirit, beating down rebellious passions, and bringing in calmness and rest and peace and assurance. If these things are felt in the heart at all, we owe it to his reigning power. Sometimes he brings to our view some precious promise, at another time an admonition, at another some view of a principle of doctrine from his word, and thus subdues our rebellion, and creates peace for us and in us. At another time he reigns by showing us our own evil, corrupt nature and rebellious heart, and so makes us ashamed and stills our murmuring. At another time he unveils himself, and gives us to see something of his divine perfections in the face of Jesus Christ, and fills us with adoring wonder and awe, thus subduing into silence our vain boasting and glorying. Then again he gives us to see glimpses of his wisdom, power, love, omniscience, omnipresence, foreknowledge, predestination and truth; and while we cannot begin to measure it all, yet we are made to bow before him, and to say, "How unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out!" In all these various ways does he reign in the hearts of his people, and produce emotions of love, joy and praise in the mind, and ready and humble obedience in the life, and confession with the mouth. Words must ever fail to describe his power and exaltation, and words must ever fail to describe the feelings of one who has ever seen such visions of the Holy One. We, too, at such times will cry, "Woe is me! for I am undone!" [margin, I cannot speak]; because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips: for mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of hosts." When man is filled with pride, and boasts of his wisdom, power and goodness, he has a very small estimate of what Deity is; but when a man sees God, all boasting is at once silenced. When I am something, God is nothing; but when I become nothing, then is God all and in all.

From this connection we also learn that when we see our God as a sovereign upon his throne, high and lifted up, we shall also have the testimony borne in upon our souls that he is holy, and that the whole earth is full of his glory; that is, everything on earth testifies to his power and Godhead. When we see God in his temple (and we never see him at all until we see him there), then are we prepared to see him everywhere. "The whole earth," then, "is full of his glory." Thus it is that it can be said that by faith we know that the worlds were made by the word of God; and thus the child of God is taught that everywhere and in all things God works, sometimes concealing himself, and sometimes making bare his arm.

How all this strengthens and confirms the fainting heart! Jesus said, "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore, and teach all nations," &c. Upon this blessed assurance they could and did go forth, and found that all things were made to work for the furtherance of this gospel of the kingdom which they preached; and so Isaiah himself, having received the evidence that his sins were cleansed away, could in the strength of the Lord go out to a gainsaying and rebellious people, and warn, reprove and rebuke them as God gave him an open door. In this strength also he could confidently speak of the Messiah that was promised to Israel, sure that God would bring it to pass. Because God reigns, we also to-day have confidence to go preaching Jesus and salvation in him, and also to bid the troubled ones fear nothing, since he who reigns is also their friend and helper.

We learn also from this text that it is not always that we see God in his temple and upon his throne. Isaiah had no doubt often been in the temple, and joined in the outward worship offered there, but he does not speak of such a vision as this before. The God of Israel is a God who hides himself. We often frequent the outward sanctuary, and again and again go away without the vision of the Holy One; and this is true even after we have believed in him with joy. Simply attending upon the outward worship of the sanctuary does not reveal the Lord. One may have grown up in constant attendance upon the ministration of the word, until gray hairs have crowned his head, and yet have never seen the Lord. Pharisees to-day, as of old, have never seen him, else would they also cry, Unclean! unclean! Scribes have never seen him, else they would not be questioning about trifles. Sadducees have never seen him, else they would not be disputing about the power of the resurrection, or denying the life to come. Ritualists have never seen him, else they would know that their forms are but a mockery of worship. Arminians have never seen him, else they would not turn to creature work or excitement to save sinners. Mere formal believers in the letter of the truth have never seen him, else the letter would not satisfy them. These may all frequent the outward sanctuary, but that is all; they have not seen the Lord—they do not know that he is in his holy temple. When they shall see him, forms, ceremonies, self-righteousness, outward form of doctrine, will be swept away, and one thing only will they see, and that is what sinners they are. Many can say even now, "At such or such a time I saw the Lord;" and they too were convinced of sin, and felt themselves unclean.

Now, third, the prophet saw "his train," and that it filled the temple. By this is meant those who dwell in his presence, who love and serve him day and night. His name again and again is said to be the "Lord of hosts;" and here the same vision that revealed the "Lord of hosts," also revealed the "hosts of the Lord." I have always believed that when the term is used, "The Lord of hosts," all his creatures, both animate and inanimate, are meant. Angels, men, and worlds unknown make up his hosts. But in this vision of the prophet I understand especially that his redeemed saints, whose special privilege it is to dwell in his presence, in his temple, are meant. When the seraphim cried, "Holy, holy, holy is the Lord of hosts," the further truth was also implied that those who dwelt in his presence were also holy. Yet they had been men of unclean lips, as was Isaiah. He saw a holy God and a holy people, while he was all unholy. He was not fit to abide in the presence of God, nor could he dwell with such a people. There could be no room for him in such a company. Here is presented that innumerable company which no man can number, who are redeemed unto God out of every nation, and who sing the new song of praise to God and the Lamb.

In this day of declension and departure from the ways of Zion, it seems to me there is comfort in this truth, that after all the temple of the Lord is filled with those who praise his name and wait upon him. The Lord is not left without witnesses, nor will he be while the world shall endure. Are we glad to believe this? O that it may be the case often, yea, always, with us, that we may see the Lord a sovereign, high and exalted, and join with those who in every age have worshiped and served him.

I trust these reflections, if published, may be of interest to the dear sister who suggested the text, and of use to the brotherhood generally. The theme has only been glanced at.

As ever, your brother in hope,
F. A. CHICK.

DAYTON, Wash. Ter., Nov., 1888.

BELOVED BRETHREN BEEBE:—I will again attempt to write a communication, notwithstanding you have failed to publish a number of my letters. I will write as plainly as I can, being a poor penman, and submit all to your better judgment.

I was born May 16th, 1833, and am now over fifty-five years of age. I joined the Davis Fork Church of Regular Predestinarian Baptists, at Mexico, Missouri, about the year 1854. The exact date I do not remember. My burden of sin and guilt was so great, and my mind so occupied with the things of the Spirit, that I paid no attention to the passage of time. From my earliest recollection there had been a controversy on the doctrine of the two seeds. When I joined the church there was another controversy, on actual and vital union, which was rending the churches of the saints. Also, the means doctrine, and the doctrine of the absolute predestination of all things.

I presume that brother Bartley had direct reference to these disputes, and perhaps others of a kindred nature, such as, two spiritual Adams, &c. I also suppose that his proposition embraced only Primitive Baptist Churches, as churches of the saints. This being premised, I cannot object to the intention of the beloved brother in the proposition, nor to the proposition itself, abstractly considered. But I cannot accept it, for reasons which you have mentioned in your reply. It would require a lengthy supplement to sufficiently guard it against misunderstandings, and might therefore become the sliding scale on which a mongrel mass of heterogeneous rubbish would be foisted upon the churches of the saints, so that they would thenceforward cease to be churches of Jesus Christ. Yet I believe that brother Bartley has written in the interest of peace. "Blessed are the peacemakers." Yea, God Almighty bless brother Bartley. "God is not the author of confusion, but of peace, as in all the churches of the saints." But it is written, "Mark them which cause divisions and offenses contrary to the doctrine which ye have learned, and avoid them."—Rom. xvi. 17. "For where envying and strife is, there is confusion and every evil work."—James iii. 16.

I would not be willing to receive brother Bartley's five items, nor any other items or mere human articles, as a basis of union or christian fellowship. The true basis of christian union or fellowship is the faith of Jesus; and the only standard of orthodoxy is the word of the Lord, or the inspired testimony of the chosen witnesses who had knowledge of the things they wrote of, being eye witnesses of the same from the beginning. Their testimony was confirmed by the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven, and made manifest by signs and wonders, and gifts of the Holy Ghost, which are denominated signs of apostleship, throughout the whole list of divine testimonials to those heaven-commissioned apostles.

John gives the only true basis of christian fellowship in these words, "That which we have seen and heard declare we unto you [who have an unction from the holy One], that ye also may have fellowship with us [the apostles]; and truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ."

Thus you see, brethren, that no human creed is necessary to this fellowship; and all the use we might have for a scholastic creed would be to guard against misrepresentation by others, and to show to one another our understanding of the Scriptures of truth, which contain the only divinely authorized basis of union in all the churches of the saints, both in the primitive and all subsequent ages of time; and this is ample for all the vicissitudes through which the Lord calls his beloved Zion to pass. If anything above a human origin is given creeds or confessions of faith, I detest and despise them.

As to some of the disputes on doctrine, I wish to say that all learned and scholastic discussions and propositions necessitating critical investigation, a research into scholastic divinity, so-called, place the subject far above the capacity of the "ignorant and unlearned." Therefore to substitute these things in the stead of the simplicity that is in Christ, is to overreach the capacity of the meek and lowly followers of the Lamb.

The Methodist "Confession," coming from the very feet of Gamaliel, so to speak, is fraught with long years of study, emanating from a solemn conclave of Bishops and Elders, so called. Take this, for example, and their practice under it, and we have a sight truly appalling. It runs like this, "Dost thou believe in the Old and New Testament Scriptures? Dost thou believe in the Father, Son and Holy Ghost? Dost thou believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, that he was conceived of the Holy Ghost, born of the virgin Mary; that he suffered under Pontius Pilate; that he was crucified, dead and buried; that he arose on the third day, and ascended up into heaven? Dost thou believe in the holy Catholic Church [I quote from the old discipline], the communion of saints?" &c.

Now this looks to me very scholastic. We will suppose a man just awakened from his bed of sin, and desiring to flee the wrath to come. He presents himself before this body of divines, and says, "All this I steadfastly believe." Then "the outward sign of an inward grace" is applied to him, and he is told that he must now get religion. My God, has the man lied, or has the "outward sign" lied? Has John the Baptist lied? Has the beloved disciple lied? Has Christ lied? Perish the thought. But something has lied; either the man, or the "outward sign," or the sacerdotal functionary. What, a steadfast believer in the Lord Jesus Christ, by the Holy Ghost, born of God, passed from death unto life, and shall not come into condemnation, nor ever taste death, but live forever, has now to get religion! Pray, what is religion, and how do you get it? "O well," says one, "he must go to the mourner's bench, agonize, be prayed for, and get up and tell about it." Is that all? I had supposed that matter was all settled when you put the "outward sign" on him. He replies, "O well, that is the way we have always done." Then you have always practiced a lie. Therefore I conclude your so-called church has lied. The man may have affirmed that he knew not of the mark of the beast; may have lied, being nicknamed, "the outward sign." Now I think the lie is found, although it has been skipping about all these years, like the Dutchman's flea. And it is a practical one, a very popular one, and a very common one. Yet it is about as near as human wisdom can guess at the truth of the gospel.

Now, brethren Beebe, I fear you will not be able to read, much less to print, this letter; yet I have done the best I could. I will send in this my remittance for our paper. Remember me, a poor, old, miserable, but, I trust, redeemed sinner, saved by grace, if saved at all. Throw the mantle of charity over this, and cover a multitude of faults.

Yours, I hope, in the faith of Jesus,

I. N. NEWKIRK.

BASIS OF UNION.

DEAR BRETHREN:—It is due to the cause of truth that I speak concerning the Circular published on page 188 of the SIGNS of 1888, and as a brother, I ask a brotherly hearing and kindness; for the Lord says, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

The Circular was not intended for the churches of the Lord's people in general, who are already in union, but for as many of them, especially here in the west, whose union has been interrupted in the past, but who now desire to restore peace and union, and to have the fellowship of all sound Baptists. Two extremes in doctrine have troubled our people here in the west; namely, instrumental regeneration, and no regeneration of the children of men. And there have been some irregularities in receiving alien immersion as baptism. But those who hold these extremes have gone out from us, and they are now separate factions, not in fellowship with the sound Baptists.

The Circular is simply a declaration against such extremes, and an expression of fellowship in the truth for all sound gospel churches. It recognizes every sound Primitive Baptist Church with its Articles, and neither sets them aside nor changes them; but it is only a reaffirmation of Bible truth upon those points which have been denied by those disorganizers who have troubled the churches. The church has a right to make such a scriptural declaration of her faith and standing in the gospel, harmonious with her existing biblical Articles; and she has done so, when need be, from time immemorial, and will do so again. And some uninspired man wrote those Articles of belief and reaffirmation of certain principles of the Bible; but the church itself judges of their correctness. In the present case not a few sound and excellent brethren and ministers, and a number of gospel churches, have judged favorably of the Circular and approved it. But they had no thought of rejecting or giving up either the Bible or their scriptural Articles, nor of restoring any excluded persons, nor of recognizing anything as gospel baptism which is not; but only to "let brotherly love continue" between them and every other sound gospel church. The result has been peaceful. The churches that adopt the Circular open the door of fellowship to no others only the churches of the saints, "who have obtained like precious faith," and are known to be Primitive Baptist churches; and of this the church will judge for itself, as the only body having gospel authority. But the churches that adopt the Circular do not change their relations to those who do not adopt it, because it is harmonious with the Bible and the scriptural Articles of all sound Baptist churches. Therefore, because the church at Crawfordsville adopts it, but the church at Antioch does not, their union in the gospel is not interrupted, but they continue, as before, in sweet fellowship. This is not a supposed case, but a fact.

If the items of the Circular may be misconstrued and distorted, so may every truth of the Bible, and of all the accepted Articles of the Baptist churches. But it is not at all probable that any persons or party, who neither love the truth nor the brethren, but hate both, would seek their fellowship by trying to misconstrue any of the six items of the Circular; yet if any such enemies should attempt to so deceive a sound body of brethren, the church would have wisdom to detect them. But it is not at all likely that the Mormons, or the Greeks, or the Protestants, or the two seed, the nonresurrection and the Means Baptist, or any designing enemies of the truth, will adopt the Circular, and thus try to take advantage of and impose on sound Baptist churches; because none of those unsound orders would like it well enough to adopt it. Nor is there the least danger that any conditionalist would think of deducing from it the notion, "that the gospel offers salvation to every sinner, on the condition of its acceptance by him," because he would know that there is no such thing in the Circular.

Now, as to the rescinding clause of the sixth item of the Circular, it is too expressly defined, guarded and limited to be misapplied or abused; for it is addressed only to "the churches of the saints," and they are specified as "the Primitive Baptist churches," who have obtained the same faith with the church that adopts the Circular; therefore all others are left out, and the door of fellowship is not opened to any of them. But it is according to the gospel, and good and pleasant, that brethren should dwell together in unity; that the Primitive Baptists, the churches of the saints of the same precious faith, should walk in love and fellowship with one another. Therefore, if hindering causes and acts should arise to interrupt the fellowship between any of them for a time, which is sometimes the case, then to endeavor to restore fellowship, by forgiving one another, and removing such hindering causes between any of the churches of Christ, is Christ-like, and pleasing in his sight; and it would be to the glory of the churches to do so.

It is but simple justice to say that the Circular is not an attempt to modify the truth, nor the offense of the cross, nor to compromise with any who do not receive the truth in the love of it. But it is a plain statement of Bible truth, relative to points which have been disputed; and for the most part it is in the words which the Holy Spirit has used, not with ambiguity, or double meaning, or obscurity, but with godly sincerity and clearness. This is not merely the opinion of the imperfect and unworthy writer, but it is the judgment of many of our esteemed and approved brethren in Christ, including not a few able ministers of the new testament, men who would hazard their lives for the truth's sake, who would not betray the Master and his brethren, nor compromise with error. But they do desire to recognize as brethren those whom God has cleansed and received, and to walk in love and live in peace with his dear children, who love the brethren and the truth of Christ.

Have I sinned before the Lord or against his people, in trying in meekness and love to foster this desire and endeavor? O I trust not. The dear, loving Master himself has both commanded and prayed for this love and union of his saved people.

Wishing grace, mercy and peace to the household of God, I am in love sorrowfully your unworthy brother,
DAVID BARTLEY.

NEW CASTLE, Ind., Dec. 17, 1888.

"The Lord reigneth; let the people tremble: he sitteth between the cherubim: let the earth be moved. The Lord is great in Zion; and he is high above all the people. Let them praise thy great and terrible name; for it is holy."—Psa. xcix. 1-3.

Thus sang the sweet psalmist of Israel, and thus shall sing all the saints who, like him, have seen the glory of the Lord, and the excellency of our God. "O Jerusalem, that bringest good tidings, lift up thy voice with strength; lift it up, be not afraid; say unto the cities of Judah, Behold your God!" "O Zion, that bringest good tidings, get thee up into the high mountains," where the Lord's house is established, and shout from the top of the mountains, "The Lord reigneth; he is clothed with majesty; the Lord is clothed with strength, wherewith he hath girded himself." What theme can we possibly contemplate that is more calculated to elevate our affections and banish our fears than the sovereignty of the God of our salvation? It is the first song that is uttered by the captive exile, when delivered from the pit, when God reveals to him his gracious name, turns his darkness to light, and puts a new song in his mouth, even praise unto God. Whatever may be his fears afterward, at this time, in this day of salvation, he is not afraid to sing that God is first and last, the Almighty, who has created all things for himself, and for whose glory they are and were created. From the throne of God, established in the heart of "the people," whom he has formed for himself, to show forth his praise, the voice of praise and thanksgiving issues, saying, "Praise our God, all ye his servants, and ye that fear him, both small and great."—Rev. xix. 5. To "the people," whom the Lord has redeemed, and brought with singing unto Zion, and with everlasting joy upon their head, he says, "I, even I, am he that comforteth you. Who art thou, that thou shouldst be afraid of a man that shall die, and of the son of man which shall be made as grass?" "I am the Lord thy God, that divided the sea, whose waves roared: the Lord of hosts is his name. And I have put my words in thy mouth, and I have covered thee in the shadow of mine hand, that I may plant the heavens, and lay the foundations of the earth, and say unto Zion, Thou art my people." The words of our God, which are put in the mouth of his people, are the word of their testimony, as well as the bread on which they live. Nothing short of this will satisfy their hungry souls. "Thy words were found, and I did eat them; and thy word was unto me the joy and rejoicing of mine heart; for I am called by thy name, O Lord God of hosts."—Jer. xv. 16. "And they overcame him [the accuser of the brethren] by the blood of the Lamb, and by the word of their testimony; and they loved not their lives unto the death."—Rev. xii. 11.

"The Lord reigneth." But what is it to reign? It is to possess or exercise sovereign power or authority; to exercise uncontrolled dominion. If then "the Lord reigneth," he possesses and exercises sovereign, uncontrolled authority and dominion in heaven, earth, and under the earth. So it is declared of him, for the comfort of his saints, that he is great, and is above all gods; and whatsoever he pleased, that did he in heaven, and in earth, in the seas, and in all deep places.—Psa. cxxxv. 5, 6. Therefore the psalmist says, "Praise ye the Lord. Praise ye the name of the Lord. Praise him, O ye servants of the Lord. Ye that stand in the house of the Lord, in the courts of the house of our God, praise the Lord; for the Lord is good; sing praises unto his name, for it is pleasant."

Well may it seem strange that any subject of God's power and grace should say that this sovereign power and authority is abundantly set forth in the volume of inspiration, yet they have never been enabled to love it and rejoice in it. How sadly blinded by the god of this world must that one be who cannot rejoice that the Lord God omnipotent reigneth, exercising uncontrolled dominion over all beings and all events. Yet it is evident that such is the case at times with the true Israel of God. It was said by the apostle Paul of some of national, fleshly Israel, in the days of his ministry, that blindness in part had happened to them; and it is even so now with spiritual Israel. "I would not, brethren, that ye should be ignorant of this mystery, lest ye should be wise in your own conceit." "O the depths of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! How unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out!" "For of him, and through him, and to him, are all things: to whom be glory forever. Amen."

"All things in earth, and all in heaven,
On thy eternal will depend;
And all for greater good were given,
And all shall in thy glory end."

"This be my care; to all beside Indifferent let my wishes be;
Passion be calm, and dumb be pride,
And fixed, O God, my soul on thee."

May it be ours to exalt the Lord our God, and worship at his foot-stool; for he is holy. J.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y., Dec., 1888.

DEAR BRETHREN:—I have been reading in the book of the prophet Daniel, of himself and his companions. I was made to see what the powerful God can do for them that put their trust in him. These blessed men were children of Israel "in whom was no blemish, but well favored, and skillful in all wisdom, and cunning in knowledge, and understanding science, and such as had ability in them to stand in the king's palace." Daniel had understanding in dreams and visions, and was "ten times better than all the magicians and astrologers;" for when the king was troubled about his dream, it was unfolded to Daniel in a night vision. Then Daniel told the dream to the king, with the interpretation thereof. Then the king promoted Daniel and his companions to great honor in the kingdom.

After this the king set up a golden image in the plain of Dura; and all the people were commanded, when they should hear the appointed music, to fall down and worship the image, or be cast alive into a burning fiery furnace. It was told the king that certain Jews whom he had set over the affairs of Babylon did not worship the image he had set up. Then Shadrach, Meshach and Abednego said to the king, "We are not careful to answer thee in this matter. If it be so, our God whom we serve is able to deliver us from the burning fiery furnace, and he will deliver us out of thine hand, O king; but if not, be it known unto thee, O king, that we will not serve thy gods, nor worship the golden image which thou hast set up." Then the king was full of fury, and commanded the most mighty men in his army to bind the three; and they were cast into the fiery furnace. But blessed be God, the fire had no power to hurt them, for God was with them. Here was the faith of God's elect. He never forgets them that put their trust in him.

After Daniel had interpreted the king's dream and the handwriting on the wall, certain men conspired to take away his life. But Daniel went into his house; and his windows being opened in his chamber toward Jerusalem, he kneeled upon his knees three times a day, and prayed, and gave thanks before his God, as he did aforetime. He was a God-fearing man. There was necessity for prayer, for his life was at stake.

They cast Daniel into the den of lions. But the king went to his palace, and passed the night in fasting, and very early in the morning he arose and went in haste unto the den of lions, and said, "O Daniel, servant of the living God, is thy God, whom thou servest continually, able to deliver thee from the lions?" Daniel said, "O king, live forever. My God hath sent his angel, and hath shut the lions' mouths, that they have not hurt me, forasmuch as before him innocency was found in me." Only innocency and the lions can lie down together.

Now, dear brethren, I will close. These are some of my thoughts. It is wonderful to see God's power displayed in such a marvelous manner.

Yours in the love of the truth,
MARY CAREY.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—Inclosed please find two dollars, my subscription for the SIGNS. I cannot make myself willing to do without it, as it contains all the preaching I have. I take much comfort in hearing from my best friends. I feel that they are my best friends, for they speak the sentiments of my heart. If I could write as some do, O how I would love to do so. But I feel that I am a poor, sinful worm of the dust, and am always doing that which I should not, and leaving undone that which I should do. But "it is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me." Yet I have some precious seasons in meditating on God's goodness to me, in preserving my unprofitable life. And I remember what precious seasons I enjoyed at the meetings last year, from Bryn Zion Church to the Chemung Association. It was a season never to be forgotten by me. I take much comfort in thinking of it; for it seemed some of the time that I hardly knew whether I was in the body or out of the body. I love to think on mercies past.

"What peaceful hours I then enjoyed!
How sweet their memory still!"
I am living it all over day by day, and remember the kindness I received. I would so much like to see Elder Vail and hear him preach again. It came with such power, it really did my soul good. I cannot forget it, nor the rest for that matter. It was like cold water to a thirsty soul, and has cheered me in my lonely life. I feel to thank God and take courage. Yet I have to mourn over my sinful nature, and

"Oft I feel my sinful heart,
Prone from my Jesus to depart;
But though I have him oft forgot,
His loving-kindness changes not."
With love to all the saints, as ever,
SYBIL ALLEN.

LEAVEN.

ELDER WM. L. BEEBE—DEAR BROTHER:—I have very seldom sent you a subject to write an editorial upon, but I am now anxious for you to give your views as soon as you can make it convenient, in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, on the scriptural or spiritual use of leaven. Does it or not invariably represent false doctrine, deceit, hypocrisy, &c.? See Matt. xiii. 33; xvi. 6, 11, 12; 1 Cor. v. 6-8.

I. N. VANMETER.

MACOMB, Ill., Dec. 6, 1888.

REPLY.

WHILE fully conscious that our esteemed brother, Elder Vanmeter, is far better qualified to give instruction to us, than to be profited by any thoughts of ours, we would not pass his request with indifference. In the consideration of his inquiry, however, we wish it distinctly understood that we claim no infallibility for the views expressed. Doubtless he might write much more profitably upon the subject than we can hope to do. It will afford us pleasure to receive from him or any other brother a more extended discussion of the subject in the light of the inspired testimony of Scripture.

Under the shadowy dispensation of the ceremonial law leaven was forbidden to be used in any offering wherein there was signified a confession of sin. The one case in which it was commanded to be used by the Israelite under that law, was "With the sacrifice of thanksgiving of his peace offerings."—Lev. vii. 13. In this case there was an entirely different signification in the offering from that which was designed in all other sacrifices ordained under that typical law. While in every sacrifice in which there was a confession of sin that law expressly prohibited the use of leaven, in this offering of thanksgiving was the expression of the assurance of divine favor in the forgiveness of all sin; and for this reason it was required that in this offering alone leaven should be used in connection with the offering ordained. Certainly it will not be understood by our esteemed brother that in this type the use of leaven required the mingling of anything to "represent false doctrine, deceit, hypocrisy, &c." It seems more consistent with the use of this symbol throughout the Scriptures to understand it as significant of the principle of rejoicing which is called life, while the exclusion of leaven from all offerings which expressed contrition and sorrow for sin, would signify the necessity for self-denial and bitterness on the part of the penitent sinner.

When our Lord used the illustration in the parable cited in Matt. xiii. 33, we cannot conceive of any sense in which he could have intended to "represent false doctrine, deceit, hypocrisy, &c.;" nor do we for a moment suppose that such an application would be accepted by our brother, or by any other believer in the truth of salvation by our Lord Jesus. In all that we have heard or read of the views of brethren in reference to this parable we have not found such an idea presented. In the record of the same parable in Luke xiii. 21, it is used to illustrate "the kingdom of God." Unquestionably, the same truth is expressed in both these passages. So far is this parable from signifying the abominations specified by our brother in his inquiry, that the apostle has recorded just the reverse as the inspired definition of that expression which is likened to leaven in the parable of our Lord. "For the kingdom of God is not meat and drink; but righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost."—Rom. xiv. 17.

In the passage cited from the language of our Lord as recorded in Matt. xvi. 6-12, it is plainly stated that "Then understood they how that he bade them not beware of the leaven of bread, but of the doctrine of the Pharisees and of the Sadducees." This was the principle in which those self-righteous characters rejoiced as their life. In their daily experience the saints still find the need of heeding this admonition of our Lord. The carnal mind constantly suggests this doctrine to them, and it works in them the desire to rejoice in themselves, as those legal worshipers did. Jesus condemned them of whom it is said that they "trusted in themselves that they were righteous, and despised others."—Luke xviii. 9. Of this leaven we still have need to beware. So Paul says, "But we had the sentence of death in ourselves, that we should not trust in ourselves, but in God which raiseth the dead."—2 Cor. i. 9. The condemnation of this "leaven of the Pharisees" no more implies the rejection of all leaven than the warning against living after the flesh implies the condemnation of all life. While the leaven or doctrines of men and of devils are all contrary to the truth of the gospel, the doctrine of God our Savior is the essential principle which animates those who are led by the Spirit of God to trust in that salvation which is revealed in Christ Jesus. It is in the peculiar quality by which leaven conforms to itself all the meal in which it is hidden, that the kingdom of heaven is likened unto it. In the parable, the meal is powerless either to leaven itself or to resist the action of the leaven. So neither the individual subjects of divine grace, nor the whole embodiment of the church of Christ, has any power to control this principle of life which is the kingdom of God within them.—Luke xvii. 21.

In the use of the leaven in 1 Cor. v. 6-8, it is plain that the apostle refers to it as to a familiar illustration, having no more design to prohibit the use of the leaven of literal bread than our Lord had in the parable of which we have written. It was not from the bread they used even in the ordinance of the Lord's Supper that they were commanded to purge out the old leaven; it was from themselves that the old leaven must be purged out, and the result of that purging was declared to be "That ye may be a new lump, as ye are unleavened." This is in harmony with the application already suggested of the use of leaven to represent the principle by which the saints are led. The old leaven in this case will signify all the principles of nature, or carnal hopes, in which the saints had trusted before they were brought to see Jesus as their perfect righteousness. So long as they continued to look to the works of righteousness which they had done or could do, they manifested the effects of the old leaven of legal trust, which could work in them nothing but death to all their comfort of hope in Christ. They must be divested of all this confidence in self, before they could experience the blessedness of perfect hope in the righteousness which is in Christ Jesus. When entirely delivered from their former trust they are a new lump, in the illustration, fitly prepared to rejoice in the perfect righteousness which is in Christ our true passover sacrifice.

Much more might be profitably considered in connection with the significance of the "scriptural or spiritual use of leaven;" but we would prefer that our inquiring brother should present his own views on the subject. We have read an argument by a venerable and highly esteemed brother, who contends that leaven as used in the Scriptures, always signifies corruption, and upon that ground he cannot approve the use of leavened bread in the administration of the Communion Supper. With all deference to his age and long and useful service in the ministry, we have to dissent from his view upon this subject; because that we have found no authority in the law of Christ for perpetuating any of the ceremonial provisions of the old covenant, which were fulfilled in the life and death of our Lord Jesus. Since he is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believes, it seems to us inconsistent that his disciples should go to the ordinances of Moses for instruction in the gospel kingdom. Mere inferences are not law even in earthly courts, much less can they be accepted as authority in the kingdom of divine grace. In giving instruction to the church at Corinth, which was among the Gentiles, Paul does not specify that the bread used at the Supper must be unleavened, although it might reasonably be inferred that as Gentiles they were not aware that the bread used in the Jewish Passover was unleavened. It is very important that we observe all things whatsoever our Lord has commanded, but it should be remembered that there is no authority delegated even to his apostles to establish any other rule but that which bears his clear and unmistakable authority. It may be inferred that the river Jordan, in which Jesus was baptized, was fresh water; but it will not be contended therefore that baptism administered on the sea-shore is invalid. The law of Christ is perfect, and needs no inferential supplements to complete its appointments. The atmosphere of his divine kingdom is perfect love, and the officers of his appointment are peace. May the blessed subjects of his kingdom be satisfied to "Follow after the things which make for peace, and things wherewith one may edify another."—Rom. xiv. 19.

PUBLISHING EXCLUSIONS.

WE have repeatedly announced our desire to be excused from taking any part in cases of discipline which can be disposed of only by those churches in which they arise, and in which no good result can be attained by our being involved in them. It is not the design of our publication to expose the faults and imperfections of any who have professed to be members of the church of Christ. Much less is it our wish to promote discord by repeating to the world matters of disagreement which from time to time must come to disturb the peace of the saints while they are subject to the imperfections of this earthly state. Even in the apostolic day many cases are recorded in which the churches were under the painful necessity of dealing with disorderly members; and in some instances it was required that they should put away such from among them. But there was no instance in which they were pursued any further than to the severing of their connection with the church. After they were thus cut off they were to be unto the saints as the heathen and publicans, with whom the church had no fellowship, but against whom they were not to harbor malice or revenge.

Occasionally we are requested to publish acts of exclusion which are reported from churches at a distance, of the particulars of which it is impossible that we should know anything personally; and in many instances we are no more acquainted with those who make the request than with the members whom they would publicly denounce. How can we know whether the case is properly reported, or whether the law of our Lord has governed the action in the case? In most of these cases it is not apparent what good result can be expected from the publication of the action even though it may have been strictly in gospel order. Even the gross wickedness of the transgressor whose case is mentioned in 1 Cor. v. 1-5, appears to have been forgiven, from the exhortation in 2 Cor. ii. 6-11. It is hardly conceivable that a more disgraceful case could occur in this age; yet even that would only have been aggravated by publication to the world.

When an ordained minister has been regularly excluded after due labor for his restoration, if he defies the decision of the church and continues to use her authority for imposing himself upon churches who are ignorant of the condemnation passed upon him, it may be necessary to publish his exclusion for the protection of such innocent churches; but even in such a case it would be better, if possible, to notify privately those immediately concerned. A public denunciation of one who is in disorder will often be construed by him as persecution, and thus it may be made to defeat the design of the church denouncing him. There is also a possibility that carnal feeling may be excited in the minds of those who are troubled by the disorderly member, and they may suppose that it is a sincere regard for the cause of Christ which moves them when they are governed by fleshly resentment. Under such circumstances it would be clearly wrong to stigmatize the victim of personal prejudice by publicly denouncing him. While no christian would willingly be guilty of thus persecuting a brother, there is none who can safely claim to be free from liability to be thus mistaken in his own motives. In obedience to the gospel rule there is no room for the indulgence of the angry passions of nature; and the Lord will take care of the consequences of a strict observance of his word. But when they are led by their carnal temper to depart from his law the saints sow to the flesh, and of the flesh they shall reap corruption. May the power of the grace of God keep us with all his saints from thus sinning against the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus.

OVER 2,000.

SINCE the commencement of volume fifty-six we have received over two thousand new subscribers, and about three-fourths of them have been sent in since the announcement of our intention to publish this year weekly. To run weekly nearly doubles our expenses for material, and more than doubles the work. We therefore can no longer afford to carry gratuitous, half-price or delinquent subscribers, but shall before another number have to strike them from our list. All, therefore, who wish to not miss any of the numbers of this volume will please see that their arrearages are paid up. We do not refer to those who are but a few months behind, but to those from whom we have heard nothing for from one to three years, and many of whom may be dead or moved away, for all we know.

BACK NUMBERS.

WE still have several hundred copies of No. 1, and shall run a surplus for a few issues, to supply new subscribers with back numbers to the first of the volume, with which commences the serial, "Solomon's Temple Spiritualized."

CHAPTER VIII.

Of the richness of the stones which were laid for the foundation of the Temple.

THESE foundation stones, as they were great, so they were costly stones; though, as I have said, of themselves of no more worth than they are of their nature that were left behind. Their costliness, therefore, lay in those additions which they received from the king's charge.

First, in that labor which was bestowed upon them in sawing, squaring and carving; for the servants, as they were cunning at this work, so they bestowed much of their art and labor upon them, by which they put them into excellent form, and added to their bigness, glory and beauty, fit for stones upon which so goodly a fabric was to be built.

Secondly, these stones, as they were thus wrought within and without, so, as it seems to me, they were inlaid with other stones more precious than themselves; inlaid, I say, with stones of divers colors. According as it is written, "I will lay thy foundations with sapphires."—Isa. liv. 11. Not that the foundations were sapphires, but they were laid, inlaid, with them; or, as he saith in another place, they were adorned with goodly stones and gifts.—Luke xxi. 5.

This is still more amplified where it is written of the New Jerusalem (which is still the church on earth, and so the same in substance with what is now), "The foundations of the wall of the city were garnished with all manner of precious stones."—Rev. xxi. 19. For these carvings and inlayings, with all other beautifications, were types of the extraordinary gifts and graces of the apostles. Hence the apostle calls such gifts signs of apostleship.—Rom. xv. 19; 2 Cor. xii. 12; Heb. ii. 4. For as the foundation stones of the temple were thus garnished, so were the apostles beautified with a call, gifts and graces peculiar to themselves. Hence he says, "First, apostles;" for that they were first and chief in the church of Christ.—1 Cor. xii. 28.

Nor were these stones only laid for a foundation for the temple; for the great court, the inner court, as also the porch of the temple, had round about them three rows of these stones for their foundation.—1 Kings vii. 12. Signifying, as seems to me, that the more outward and external part, as well as that more internal worship to be performed to God, should be grounded upon apostolic doctrine and appointments.—1 Cor. iii. 10-12; 2 Thess. ii. 15; iii. 6; Heb. vi. 1-5.

CHAPTER IX.

Which way the face or front of the Temple stood.

THE temple was built with its face or front toward the east, and that, perhaps, because the glory of the God of Israel was to come from the way of the east into it.—Ezek. xliii. 1-5; xlvii. 1.

Wherefore in that its front stood toward the east, it may be to show that the true gospel church would have its eye to and expectation from the Lord. "We look," said Paul. Whither? "Our conversation is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Savior."—2 Cor. iv. 18; Phil. iii. 20; Psalm lxii. 5.

It was also set with its face toward the east to keep the people of God from committing idolatry, to wit, from worshiping the host of heaven, and the sun, whose rising is from the east. For since the face of the temple stood toward the east, and since the worshipers were to worship at or with their faces toward the temple, it follows that both in their going to and worshiping God toward that place, their faces must be from and their backs to the sun. The thus building of the temple, therefore, was a snare to idolaters, and a proof of the zeal of those that were the true worshipers; as also to this day the true gospel instituted worship of Jesus Christ is. Hence he is said to be, to idolaters, a snare and a trap, but to the godly a glory.—Isa. viii. 14; lx. 19.

Do but see how God caught the idolatrous Jews, by this means, in their naughtiness. "And he brought me," said the prophet, "into the inner court of the Lord's house, and behold, at the door of the temple of the Lord, between the porch and the altar, were about five and twenty men, with their backs toward the temple of the Lord, and their faces toward the east."—Ezek. viii. 16. It was, therefore, as I said, set with its face toward the east to prevent false worship and to detect idolaters.

From the east also came the most blasting winds; winds that were destructive to man and beast, to fruit and trees, and to ships at sea.—Ex. x. 13; Job xxvii. 21; Ezek. xvii. 10; xix. 12; xxvii. 26; Psalm xlviii. 7.

I say, the east wind, or that which comes from thence, is the most hurtful; yet you see the temple hath set her face against it, to show that the true church cannot be blasted or made to turn back by any affliction. It is not east winds, nor any of their blastings, that can make the temple turn about. Hence he said that Jacob's face shall not wax pale. And again, "I have made thy face strong against their faces." "And the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."—Isa. xxix. 22; Ezek. iii. 8; Matt. xvi. 18.

It might also be built with its face toward the east to show that the true church looketh, as before hinted, for her Lord and King from heaven, knowing that at his coming he will bring healing in his wings; for from the east he will appear when he comes the second time, without sin unto salvation; of which the sun gives us a memento in his rising there every morning. "For as the lightning cometh out of the east, and shineth even unto the west; so shall also the coming of the Son of man be."—Mal. iv. 2; Heb. ix. 28; Col. iii. 3; 2 Peter iii. 11-14; Matt. xxiv. 27.

Christ, as the north pole, draws those touched with the loadstone of his word, with the face of their souls toward him, to look for and hasten to his coming; and this also is signified by the temple standing with its face toward the east.

CHAPTER X.

Of the courts of the Temple.

I PERCEIVE that there were two courts belonging to the temple. The first was called the outward court.—Ezek. xl. 17; xlv. 21.

This was that into which the people of necessity first entered when they went to worship in the temple; consequently that was it in and by which the people did first show their desires to be worshipers of God. This answers to those badges and signs of love unto religion that people have in face or outward appearance.—Matt. xxv. 27; 2 Cor. x. 7.

In this, though there may sometimes be truth, yet often are lies and dissimulation; wherefore commonly an outward appearance is set in opposition to the inner court, and outward to the inner man; and that is, when it is by itself; for then it profits nothing.—Rom. ii. 28; 1 Cor. xiii. 1-3; 2 Cor. v. 12. Hence the outward court was something to the Jews, because by outward bodies they were distinguished from the Gentiles; yet to us it is little. For now "he is not a Jew who is one outwardly." Therefore all the time of the beast's reign this court is given to be trodden under foot; for, as I said, outward show will avail nothing when the beast comes to turn and to toss up professors with his horns.—Rev. xi. 12.

But as there was an outward court, so there was an inner court; a court that stood nearer to the temple; and so to the true practical part of worship, than that outward court.—Ezek. x. 13; xlv. 1; 1 Kings vi. 36.

This inner court is that which is called the court of the priests, because it was that in which they boiled the trespass offerings, and in which they prepared the sin offering for the people.—2 Cor. iv. 9; Ezek. xlv. 20.

This court, therefore, was the place of practice and of preparation to appear before God, which is the first true token of a sincere and honest mind. Wherefore here, and not in the outward court, stood the great brazen altar, which was a type of Christ, by whom alone true worshipers make their approach with acceptance unto God. Also here stood the great brazen scaffold, on which the king kneeled when he prayed for the people; a type of Christ's prayers for his, when he was in the world.

Wherefore this court was a type of practical worship, and of our praying, hearing and eating before God. There belonged to this court several gates—an east, a south, and a north gate; and when the people of the land went into this court to worship, they were not to go out at the gate by which they came in, but out of the gate over against it; to show that true christians should persevere right on, and not turn back, whatever they may meet with in the way. "He that entereth in by the way of the north gate to worship, shall go out by the way of the south gate; and he that entereth by the way of the south gate, he shall not return by the way of the gate whereby he came in, but shall go over against it."—Ezek. xlv. 9.

These courts were places of great delight to the Jews, as both feigned and sincere profession is to those that practice therein. Wherefore when the Jews did enter into these, they did use to do it with praise and pipe, as do both hypocrites and sincere ones. So then, when a man shall tread in both these courts, and shall turn what he seems to be in reality, then, and not till then, he treads them as he should; for then he makes the outward court and his treading there but a passage to that which is more inward and sincere. But he that stays in the outward one is but such a one as pleases not God, for that he lacks the practice of what he professes with his mouth.

CHAPTER XI.

Of the great brazen altar that stood in the inner court of the Temple.

In the inner court stood the great brazen altar which Solomon made. This is evident; for when he kneeled upon the scaffold to pray, he kneeled before this altar.—Ex. xl. 6-29; 2 Chron. vi. 13; 2 Kings xvi. 14; Joel ii. 17.

This altar seems to be placed about the middle of this court, over against the porch of the house; and between it and the temple was the place where Zachariah was slain. This altar was called the altar of burnt offering, and therefore was a type of Christ in his dignity; for Christ's body was our true burnt offering, of which the bodies of the sacrificed beasts were a type. Now that altar upon which his body was offered was his divinity, or Godhead; for that, and that only, could bear up that offering in the whole of his sufferings; and that, therefore, and that only, was to receive the fat, or the glory. Hence it is said that he, through the eternal Spirit, offered himself without spot unto God.—Heb. ix. 14. For Christ is Priest, and Sacrifice, and Altar, and all. As a Priest, he offered; as a Sacrifice, he suffered; as God, he supported his humanity in suffering all the pains he underwent.—Gal. i. 4; ii. 20; 1 Peter iii. 10; Heb. ix. 13.

It was then Christ's Godhead, not the tree, that was the altar of burnt offering, or that by which Christ offered himself an offering and a sacrifice to God for a sweet smelling savor.

That it was not the tree, is evident; for that could not sanctify the gift, to wit, his body. But Christ affirmeth that the altar sanctifieth the gift; and by so saying, he affirmeth that the altar on which he offered his offering was greater than the offering itself.—Matt. xxiii. 19.

Now the body of Christ was the gift, for so he saith, "My flesh I will give for the life of the world."—John vi. 51. But what thing is that which is greater than his body, save the altar, his divinity, on which it was offered? The tree then was not the altar which sanctified this gift to make it of virtue enough to make reconciliation for iniquity.—John vi. 15; xvii. 19; Heb. ix. 14; Col. i. 19-21.

Now, since this altar of burnt offering was thus placed in the inner court, it teaches us several things.

First, that those who come only into the outward court, or who rest in a bare appearance of christianity, do not by so doing come to Jesus Christ; for this altar stands not there. Hence John takes notice only of the temple and this altar, and them that worship therein, and leaves out the outward court, and so them that come no farther.—Rev. xi. 1, 2.

Secondly, this teaches us also that we are to enter into that temple of God by blood. The altar, this altar of burnt offering, stood as men went into the temple. They must go by it, yea, they must leave their offering, and so go in and worship, even as a token that they came thither by sacrifice and by blood.

Thirdly, upon this altar Solomon, at the dedication of the temple, offered thousands both of oxen and sheep, to signify surely the abundant worth and richness that would be in the blood of Christ to save, when it should be shed for us; for his blood is spoken of with an "how much more." "For if the blood of bulls and of goats, and the ashes of an heifer, sprinkling the unclean, sanctifieth to the purifying of the flesh, how much more shall the blood of Christ, who through the eternal Spirit offered himself without spot to God, purge your conscience from dead works, to serve the living God."—Heb. x. 14; 2 Chron. vii. 5-8; Heb. x. 1-12.

Let us then not dare to stop or stay in the outward court, for there is not this altar; nor let us dare, when we come into this court, be careless whether we look to this altar or no; for it is by blood we must enter. "Without shedding of blood there is no remission." Let us always then, when we come hither, wash our hands in innocency, and so compass this holy altar. For by Christ, who is the altar indeed, we are reconciled to God. This is looking to Jesus. This is coming to God by him, of whom this altar and the sacrifice thereon was a type.

CIRCULAR LETTERS.

To the churches composing the Bethel Association of Primitive Baptists, when convened with Leatherwood Church, on the 22d, 23d and 24th days of September, 1888, this annual Circular is sent.

"UPON this rock I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."—Matt. xvi. 18. These are Christ's words. We believe the words, for they are the words of him who spake as never man spake. He needs no help to build his church, for he has all power in heaven and earth. Is not this the church that David spake of? He said by inspiration, "They that trust in the Lord shall be as Mount Zion, which cannot be removed, but abideth forever."—Psa. cxxv. 1. Again, "For the Lord hath chosen Zion; he hath desired it for his habitation. This is my rest forever: here will I dwell; for I have desired it. I will abundantly bless her provision: I will satisfy her poor with bread."—Psalm cxxxii. 13-15. Her food comes down from heaven. She does not clothe herself. Her Husband, Christ, clothes her with his own righteousness. "When the Lord shall build up Zion, he shall appear in his glory." He did appear in his glory. "Those that be planted in the house of the Lord, shall flourish in the courts of our God." "His foundation [Christ] is in the holy mountains. He loveth the gates of Zion more than all the dwellings of Jacob." "And of Zion it shall be said, This and that man was born in her." "Not by might, nor by power [of man], but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts." "Blessed is the man whom thou choosest, and causest to approach unto thee, that he may dwell in thy courts. We shall be satisfied with the goodness of thy house, even of thy holy temple." This is the same church that Christ built upon the rock. "Beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth, is Mount Zion, on the sides of the north, the city of the great King. God is known in her palaces for a refuge." "Walk about Zion, and go round about her: tell the towers thereof. Mark ye well her bulwarks, consider her palaces; that ye may tell it to the generation following. For this God is our God forever and ever: he will be our guide even unto death." "Thus speaketh the Lord of hosts, saying, Behold the man whose name is The Branch; and he shall grow up out of his place, and he shall build the temple of the Lord: even he shall build the temple of the Lord; and he shall bear the glory, and shall sit and rule upon his throne: and he shall be a priest upon his throne: and the counsel of peace shall be between them both." Then Christ alone builds his church; not with natural stones, but with spiritual stones. Peter says of these spiritual stones, built upon a sure foundation, Christ, "To whom coming, as unto a living stone, disallowed indeed of men, but chosen of God, and precious, ye also, as lively stones, are built up a spiritual house, an holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ. Wherefore also it is contained in the Scripture, Behold, I lay in Sion a chief corner stone, elect, precious: and he that believeth on him shall not be confounded. Unto you therefore which believe he is precious: but unto them which be disobedient, the stone which the builders disallowed, the same is made the head of the corner, and a stone of stumbling, and a rock of offense, even to them which stumble at the word, being disobedient: whereunto also they were appointed. But ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people; that ye should show forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvelous light." Was he ever precious to an unbeliever? Never.

Now, to prove that the Primitive or Predestinarian Baptists, as we are called, are the church of Christ: Do we hold the same doctrine? Have we the same faith? Have we the same ordinances? We believe so. On the day of Pentecost, when Peter preached Christ, those that heard, and were pricked in the heart, said to Peter and to the rest of the apostles, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" Not to be saved, for their hope was in Christ, their Savior. "Then Peter said unto them, Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." "Then they that gladly received his word were baptized." We believe the same. "And the Lord added daily to the church such as should be saved." They did not receive any on probation; neither do we. They received only those whom they believed God had saved through Christ; so do we. They baptized only professed believers; so do we. "And believers were the more added to the church, multitudes both of men and women." "And the hand of the Lord was with them; and a great number believed, and turned unto the Lord." The apostles believed that God only could write his spiritual law in the hearts of the children of men; and we believe the same.

Brethren, trust in God; for he only can defend you.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

DEAR EDITORS:—I beg space to record the deaths of four of my dearest relatives.

My devoted father, James K. P. Burns, departed this life on June 5th, 1888. He was born in Tippah Co., Miss., Aug. 4th, 1845, and moved with his parents, John R. and Elizabeth J. Burns, to Nacogdoches Co., Texas, where he was reared to manhood. In 1866 he was married to Miss Sarah E. Biggs, with whom he was spared to dwell until his death. About the year 1866 he joined the Primitive Baptist Church, with whom he remained, with my mother. In 1872 we moved to San Augustine County, and then to Sabine County. About the year 1876 he was ordained to the work of the ministry, and devoted much of his time to that calling. In the winter of 1879 he moved to Vernon Parish, La., where he died. He was a strong advocate of the doctrine of the predestination of all things. He was willing to sacrifice time and ease for the comfort of his brethren, whom he so much esteemed. During the last few years of his life his mind seemed to be entirely on things of a religious character, the last few months of which his theme was the resurrection of the dead. His last sermon was on his dying bed, a day or two before he died. His voice was weak and faint, and his words almost inaudible, but he was understood to be speaking on the resurrection. His closing prayer was on the day before his death.

Father was a friendly and obliging neighbor, a devoted husband, and a kind father of eight children, only four of whom survive. One, a little son, died at a tender age, and was buried near our old home in Texas. Another, a little girl, died when young, and was buried near our present home, where the father now lies.

ALSO,

Celia J. Burns preceded our father three days. She was born in Nacogdoches Co., Texas, Oct. 21st, 1869, and died June 2d, 1888, aged eighteen years, seven months and eleven days.

She was not a member of the church, but a remarkable change was noticed in her conversation and religious interest. She bore her sickness without complaining, although she suffered greatly, and seemed conscious that she must soon faint and die. Death had lost its sting. Her mortal body was laid by the side of that of her little sister, the place of her own location.

ALSO,

Naomi A. Burns, the second daughter, was born in the same county, Jan. 28th, 1872, and died July 28th, 1888. Her age was sixteen years and six months.

She had never joined any church, but in conversation manifested deep thought and sincere reflection. She bore her sickness with much patience and fortitude; and when death called for her departure she orally responded with rejoicing. Her joy seemed more than she could tell. She told us not to grieve for her, and gave a word of comfort to the heart-burdened writer, which was, "Grieve no more for your sins; God has forgiven you them all." To the last she rejoiced in the beauty of her departed sister and father, the Savior and all his angels, pointing to one beauty after another beyond this dying world, as if looking across the shadow of perishable time to the sunny shore, where is bliss forevermore. She bade us adieu, and told us to bury her by the side of the dear one departed.

ALSO,

Rebecca Burns, the kind wife of the sorrow-stricken writer, whose society I had enjoyed but a short time, having been joined in marriage on January 18th, 1888, died on May 25th, 1888.

She was the daughter of Elder David and Hester Richey. She was not known to the visible church, but her walk was consistent in her ways. She was kind in her manner, and beloved by all who knew her. It was our lot to dwell together but four months until she was taken sick, from which she never recovered. She bore her sickness with much fortitude. Although she suffered greatly, she seemed at ease in spirit, and spoke but little of getting well. When she saw me wiping away the fast-falling tears of sorrow, she would answer in a quiet, peaceful tone, "I am not scared at all. We must all die." When, as it seemed, she became convinced that the time of her departure was near, she expressed herself as being willing to go, and rejoiced in a living hope beyond. At one time she asked my since-departed father, in a child-like manner, if he was willing to die. He promptly answered that if it was his appointed time he thought he would be willing. She clasped her feeble hands with joy, as she had found a witness in a living hope, and rejoiced, and praised God for his goodness. She was a dear companion, an appreciated daughter by both our parents, who were with her in her sickness, together with many friends.

We are left to mourn the absence of our loved ones, but hope that our earthly loss is their eternal gain. With patience we must wait our appointed time. Earth has been robbed of its endearments, and no place here is dear, nor treasures real, save one not wrought nor merited by wretched sinners, but compassionately provided for the chosen ones, called, qualified and made meet. We hope to be remembered in our bereavements, a mother, three little sisters, and many friends and relatives.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date, this date denotes the time at which your subscription expires, and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

CORRESPONDENCE.

STATE ROAD, Del., Dec. 7, 1888.

BRETHREN BEEBE:—In your editorial in the last issue of the SIGNS, on the subject of the qualifications for the office of Deacon, you join with the inquirer in a request for others to write on the same subject. I have written privately and for publication at different times considerable upon this subject, and on that account I have doubted the propriety of my attempting anything further, especially as I have nothing to vary or to add particularly to what I have said before. I am not going to object to anything you have written, although on some points I fail to see the force or propriety of your remarks. I will venture to offer some suggestions, to be taken for just what they are worth.

I believe that what is written is intended to be plain and practical, designed to give needful and profitable instructions to the churches in regard to the work and qualifications of her officers. I have not understood the apostle as requiring that a Deacon must be sinless, or that his wife must be so. He would not require of a church to find such qualifications as no man had, and so virtually debar her from having officers. The brethren are competent judges of these qualifications, and they are not at liberty to appoint to office those in whom the evidences of fitness are wanting. It is a quite common thing for the brother himself to object, and to insist that he lacks qualifications; and it would probably be hard to find a brother whom the brethren had their minds fixed upon who would judge himself fit for the place. It does not follow that he is unfit, or that he will not be faithful to the trust.

It seems to be pretty well understood, and the brethren are generally agreed, that the work of a Deacon is to serve the church in temporal matters. This service is not particularly described by the apostle. The service varies so much at different times and under different circumstances, that it would have been difficult for him to have done so. Every church that maintains her standing and keeps up regular meetings, has need of much serving in secular matters, and she has no trouble to find out what service it is that she needs. The qualifications named by the apostle have, I think, direct reference to the services that will be required of them. Suppose we take, for an example, an instance of a minister being expected by rail to meet an appointment with some certain church. Said church will need some one of her members to meet the train and take care of that minister, seeing that he has a place to put up, and a way to get to the appointment and back to the train; and if a contribution is needed to defray expenses, see to that also. This one, among a hundred duties, will serve to show that a man is best fitted for this work who has a home and sufficient means, so that the service does not burden him unreasonably, or that he should be unable to attend to the calls upon him. The location of his home is also a matter of some importance; as if a man resides out of reach, it would be impossible to render that prompt and faithful service that would be required. Sometimes, perhaps, he would not know what was needed on account of living far away. It will hardly be required or expected here that I should go over and enumerate all or most of the temporal duties devolving on church officers.

It is not clear to me that the apostle, in enjoining that the Bishops and Deacons should be husbands of one wife, alluded to polygamy. That would imply that there were brethren in the churches with more than one wife. There is good reason to believe that the churches did not allow that. That a young man who is unsettled, and no certain home, or none of his own, would be but a poor and uncertain dependence for a Deacon, is obvious. As to a man losing his wife disqualifying him, I will observe that I have not known of an instance of a man being suspended from the office on this account, or hardly on any other account; but the work practically devolves on some one else frequently. Sometimes the family is broken up, and the man finds a home where he can—among his children or with strangers; or, if he continues to keep house, the character of the housekeeper and the housekeeping will be very uncertain. Children come into the account, not as a necessity, but only where there are children, as to their government.

Now, as to all these qualifications, I fail to see anything in them but what ought to be there, and ought to be found in every man who is entrusted with a responsible office in a gospel church. "Likewise must the Deacons be grave, not double-tongued, not given to much wine, not greedy of filthy lucre; holding the mystery of the faith in a pure conscience." "Let the Deacons be the husbands of one wife, ruling their children and their own houses well." I think it will be conceded that all these things ought to be so, and to be first proved. "Then let them use the office," &c.

Brother Odom's inquiry was in regard to the Deacon's wife and her deportment. You, brother Beebe, have not lived to your present age without knowing that both preachers and Deacons have suffered, and their usefulness been impaired, and the cause reproached, by some of those blemishes in the character of their wives. While, on the other hand, men's wives have not only been helps to them, but their usefulness and faithful and satisfactory service have depended largely upon their wives. I do not like to be a critic over the action of any church; but I have lived long enough to see something of the working of these things. I have seen present to sanction the appointment of quite a number of Deacons. I will not say that any of them lacked, or do now lack, the scriptural qualifications; but I have known of several instances of appointments to that office, and sometimes a solemn ceremony of ordination, and the appointee never afterward pay one particle of attention to the office and its duties, and perhaps but very seldom attend the church appointments. Not only so, but there was no reason to expect anything else. The shortcomings were all open beforehand. In regard to the wife being in sympathy with her husband, suppose we contemplate a picture on the other side a little while. Suppose the wife is not in sympathy. She does not like the Baptists. She influences and prejudices the children against them. The house is divided. The children treat Baptist company coldly and with disrespect. When their father has Baptist ministers or brethren to entertain, other wild and vain company is being entertained in another part of the house. I need not ask how such a man will do for a Deacon. He does not rule his own house well. His children are not in subjection with all gravity. His wife does not with him hold the mystery of the faith, neither is she faithful to him in all things.

For some of these things a man may not be to blame; but the fact will remain that they unfit him to fill the office with honor to himself, and to the profit and prosperity of the church. I have not understood it that a brother's wife must of necessity be a member with him. It is certainly well when it is so. If she believes with him, and feels the responsibility of her position, she may afford him all needful support without being a member; but she must be grave, not a slanderer, sober, faithful in all things. These things must be so; and when a church has erred in appointing some person unsuited to the work, I do not know why they should not reconsider the act and disannul it. When a man afterward marries an unbeliever, or one that is at least unfriendly, it should be understood that he has disqualified himself, and another should be appointed in his place. The same might be said if where the children are grown up they should be unruly, causing confusion and disorder in the family, and reproach upon the church because of their father's position, it seems to me that the qualifications now being wanting, suspension from the sacred obligations has become necessary; yet I have never known of an instance of suspension on any such account. I suppose churches prefer to bear the reproach rather than to resort to the extreme measures necessary to bring relief. I do not know what churches see in appointing, as has sometimes been the case, some person or persons who never attend to the duties, or even appear to know what their duties are, and then leave them stand as Deacons for years, while somebody else is doing the work. Instead of it being an honor to a man, it tends to his dishonor and reproach when he is appointed to a place for which he has no qualifications, and the obligations of which he utterly neglects. A church may thus bring herself down from her exalted station to the level of her incompetent and unfaithful officers.

The qualifications for Deacons, like other gifts, are given by that Spirit from whom all gifts come. They are for the purpose for which they are used, and I do not think a gospel church is often destitute of some qualified members. The churches in this section of the country generally have two. Then they can relieve each other, and there is one to depend upon in case of the sickness or absence of the other. Sometimes they make out with one; but from one to four is customary, according to the amount and character of service required. The church should give honor to whom honor is due, and not accept faithful service at the hands of a brother for a long time without acknowledging it by appointment to the office.

One thing more. The office of a Bishop I have understood, not to refer at all to the ordination to the ministry, but the official relationship of overseer or pastor to a church. Pastoral qualifications are peculiar, and are mentioned as a distinct gift from all the others named. There are many instructors, but not many fathers. It is not necessary that a man should be a husband and settled in life to be ordained; but that it would be better in assuming pastoral charge of churches, will be admitted.

I respectfully submit the above to brethren Beebe, brother Odom, and the brethren generally.

E. RITTENHOUSE.

BALTIMORE, Md., Nov., 1888.

DEAR BROTHER JENKINS:—I will try to explain to you my views in relation to the first seven verses of the seventy-eighth Psalm. I stated that it was still proper to teach children in some way the Scriptures, wherein are the statutes of the Lord, and referred you to this passage for proof. You answered that that was under the law; that in the gospel day they shall no more teach every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord; for all shall know him, from the least to the greatest of them.

I will say, first, that teaching the statutes of the Lord is not teaching to know the Lord. Very widely apart. For I apprehend that none can know him, only as did Peter. None but the Father can reveal him unto us. But this does not teach the fact as to whether I should teach the statutes of the Lord to the young and old or not.

Under the old covenant there was no public instruction. All worship was at first confined to the tabernacle, then to the temple; and when the synagogues were erected, they were used principally for the reading of the law and the prophets; and all Israel attended them with their children, and read in turn the Scriptures, so that those in attendance could hear them read. The commands were not taught, only as taught by the parent, and in the tabernacle, and later in the synagogue, except occasionally, when a prophet arose; and then, what was one among so many? Thus it was until the time of John the Baptist, the greatest of the prophets, who said, "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world;" the great sin-bearer, Christ Jesus, who taught as never man taught; who sent forth his ministers and apostles to preach. As if he had said, Go teach that I am come according to the Scriptures. And after his resurrection he sent his apostles into all the world to preach the gospel to every creature; and we find the apostles going everywhere, preaching the gospel, or the risen Savior.

Thus the passage you refer to is in contrasting the mode and means of making known the things of God; for he says that the spiritual Israel shall know him, from the least to the greatest of them. As if he had said, They shall testify of me, out of the abundance of the knowledge of God in his appearing, in contrast with the old covenant, the new being so much more glorious. In the new there shall be a profusion of divine light from the Sun, Christ, as compared to the moon, under types and shadows. Now there shall be the great Light from heaven. God gave the word, and great is the company of them that publish it. Yes, an abundant gospel ministry, diffusing the light from heaven. It is no longer left to the parent alone; but that is not forbidding the parents to teach their children the statutes of the Lord. And not only so, but his word is now by his providence printed in nearly every language. Here is the record of his wonderful works to the children of men; and here are recorded his statutes, and his mind and will concerning us.

Do you cease to teach because Christ is known by revelation? Now let us look at your passage again, Hebrews x. 16. "They shall no more teach," &c. This is a citation from Jeremiah xxxi. 31-34. The apostle recognizes that this is now the time prophesied of. We must go back to the seventh verse, and come up to this passage, and there we shall see a first covenant and a second covenant; a new covenant and an old covenant. We must not think it is meant that the one differed from the other in substance, or that any change had taken place in the mind of God, for it is not so; for the old covenant preached Christ. Truly dimly so, in comparison to the great sunlight shed forth by Christ and his apostles. Heretofore the covenant was with a natural people and nation, with many righteous that were taught of God by faith. The Jews were types, and were the dawning of the same great Teacher, Christ. In reality there has been but one covenant, and that from everlasting; and that covenant is the Lord Jesus Christ, the same before his coming as at his advent; and as he is now, the same yesterday, and to-day, and forever, the sole covenant to the people. Neither can his gospel be called a new revelation, differing from the old testament in sum and substance; for the gospel was preached to Abraham.—Gal. iii. 8. Then Isaiah saith, "Who hath believed our report? and to whom is the arm of the Lord revealed?" He preached Christ then, and was known then by Christ being revealed in them, as now.

But here in Psalm lxxviii. is a reference to a statute or law that is national. Israel was to teach the many great and wonderful works of God, his promise to Abraham, that he would perform for him, and would be his God, and that he was his God. And then the many manifestations of his power in carrying out his promise, in Egypt, at the Red Sea, in the wilderness, water out of the rock, manna and quail, their wonderful marches, &c. Also, that he gave them the land according to the promise; his judgments in the wilderness, and in Canaan, and in Babylon; and of their being brought back according to his promise, or word. Now this was to be taught, that they might set their hope in God, and not in Baal-peor. Stop, and read the whole Psalm.

Shall we not preach or teach that we are blessed according to that promise unto Abraham? And shall we not make mention that there were shepherds that saw his star, and went by its guidance, and worshiped the Savior; that he came according as it was written in the law and in the Psalms, was crucified, buried, arose from the dead, appeared unto Mary and the twelve, and, last of all, has appeared unto me and you? If so be we are his witnesses, then let us tell it, and speak of the wonderful works of God.

I will say that truly it is not left to man to give the knowledge of God, who is known only by revelation. But here was to be a great and grand display of his enlightening and saving power, diffused by the tabernacle of the Son of God openly in our nature. And from the least to the greatest, all his saints shall know him, and that not by hearsay, or duty faith, or speculative faith, or theories of man's apprehension of God as he is revealed in the Scriptures; but a spiritual persuasion; yes, an inward consciousness, whereby we know him, and his revealed word to us, that our sins are pardoned; yes, have that soul-enraptured enjoyment of his presence, so that afterwards we have to say, "The Lord was in this place, and I knew it not." This is faith; and the just live by his continued word by the way.

Now, I ask, Can you hold your tongue? No.

"Then will I tell to sinners round
What a dear Savior I have found;
I'll point to his redeeming blood,
And say, Behold the way to God."

"Preach the gospel to every creature." Will you limit it to a certain age? It is compared to seed sown. Some fell by the wayside; some fell on stony ground; some fell among thorns; some fell among good ground. Where is it written that you should withhold your hand on account of the ground? Our Father makes the ground good by ploughing deep, so that the poor soul feels his sins, and the word comes to him, not in word only, but in power, if applied by the Spirit.

Does it follow that one taught of the Lord shall not teach men the statutes of the Lord? Is not that which is true of the type also true in the antitype? If then it was true that natural Israel should teach their children the statutes of the Lord, and his wonderful works to the children of men, shall it be less so in the antitype? We are to be as a light set upon a hill, which cannot be hid. Should not that divine life in the saints be reflected, so that men, seeing their good works, shall glorify their Father which is in heaven?

The apostle, in giving instruction to parents, to bring up their children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, cites the law, "Honor thy father and mother; which is the first commandment with promise; that it may be well with thee, and thou mayest live long on the earth." Here the law is taught to the young.

I have referred to the nation of Israel reading the law and the prophets in their synagogues on the Sabbath day, and that all attended, old and young.

The word says, "Assemble yourselves together, after the manner of some." As if he had said, After the manner of the Jews in their synagogues. Shall we not take old and young to the house of God? And if the parent cannot go, where is the best and proper place for the young, but with the brethren, and not mingling with the Midianites and learning their ways? I ask, Will you allow your sons and daughters to visit an immoral place, and not feel condemned if they take up with their ways? Will you allow the Midianites to preach or teach in your churches? Of course you say, No. Then how can you hire them by contributions to teach the young for you, as they have nine out of ten in all the cities of this country? In a word, whenever our enemies have had a sacrifice or a dance, in the end the most of them have been joined unto Baal-peor; and we have therefore, like Israel of old, been diminished; yes, chastened.

My brother, I desire to search the Scriptures for my faith and practice. Let God be true. I do not care for traditions, if not supported by the word. The how is a small matter; but do we do our duty? I hope you will not again try to parry the truth.

I remain your brother in hope,
JOHN THORNE.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y., Jan. 10, 1889.

DEAR BROTHER THORNE:—I embrace the first opportunity to reply to yours, and sincerely hope I shall not be left of the Lord to "parry the truth." Truth alone can do us good. I also desire to search the Scriptures for my faith and practice. But, like the apostle Paul, I profess to be a "minister of the New Testament," and "not of the letter." I desire not to follow or attempt to live upon shadows, but upon a real substance. If I find carnal, typical Israel engaged in a work which God commanded them in the law, I know I am not to do that work, for it is the letter, and not the spirit. It simply shadowed forth a spiritual work of a spiritual people. I desire to remember that both that people and their work were typical, and that I have to do with what they typified only. To perpetuate anything pertaining to that covenant which they were under, is to deny that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh, which is antichristian. The carnal Israelite was forbidden to eat the blood of the sacrifices, to signify that there was no spiritual life or service there, but that the spirit or life of all their service should be found in "the generation to come," the people which should be created.—Lev. xvii. 10-14; Psal. cii. 18. There was something better reserved for us under the gospel. We live not on shadows, but the real substance. I insist that everything under the gospel and in the gospel kingdom is absolutely new. No part of the old covenant is found in the new. "And he that sat upon the throne [Jesus, the King in Zion] said, Behold, I make all things new. And he said unto me, Write; for these words are true and faithful."—Rev. xxi. 5. The closing words of this book of Revelation are a solemn address to the saints, and may the Lord cause them to sink deep into our hearts. "For I testify unto every man that heareth the words of the prophecy of this book, If any man shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book. And if any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, and out of the holy city, and from the things which are written in this book."—Rev. xxii. 18, 19. With God's enlightened children the how is not a small matter, as you seem to think, in any matter pertaining to his kingdom. They not only desire to do what their King has commanded them, but also to do it in the manner he has commanded; and nothing short of this will be accepted as obedience by their King.

You ask, "Do we do our duty?" Nothing is the duty of the child of God unless it is expressly enjoined by the King in Zion, or by his enthroned judges, the inspired apostles. If, then, it is their duty to teach the statutes of the Lord to their natural children, we shall find the command to do so written in the New Testament. If there is such a command in the New Testament, I have failed to find it. Ephesians vi. 4, will not answer to establish your theory. The apostle shows that the new covenant is unlike the old covenant; but you say that we must not think that the one differs from the other in substance. But there was no substance in the old covenant, any more than there is substance in any other shadow. Again, you say, "In reality there has been but one covenant, and that from everlasting." That cannot be so, for the apostle says, "For these are the two covenants."—Gal. iv. 25. And the Lord says, "I will make a new covenant." "Not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers," &c.—Jer. xxxi. 31, 32. It seems to me that your statements are calculated to confuse the mind, and are opposed to what the Lord and the apostles have declared. The apostle says that the old covenant is "abolished;" that "the handwriting of ordinances" is taken out of the way; that we are dead with Christ from the rudiments (or elements) of the world (that old world); that we are to "touch not, taste not, handle not;" that the works of that old covenant are "dead works." "Which things have indeed a shew of wisdom in will-worship, and humility, and neglecting of the body; not in any honor to the satisfying of the flesh. If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above [the old covenant or law], where Christ sitteth [in the gospel kingdom] on the right hand of God."—Col. ii. and iii.

Let us examine the new covenant a little. "And they shall no more teach," &c. This expression, "no more," shows that under the old covenant they were required to teach, and did teach; and that in whatever way or manner they did teach, they shall "no more teach." The question then is, How did they teach under the old covenant? "And these words, which I command thee this day, shall be in thine heart. And thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up."—Deut. vi. 6, 7. Thus we see that under that old covenant the teaching of the statutes of the Lord to the children of the Israelites was alone by the parents. You acknowledge that "under the old covenant there was no public instruction. All worship was at first confined to the tabernacle, then to the temple; and when the synagogues were erected, they were used principally for the reading of the law and the prophets, and all Israel attended them with their children." But did God ever command the erection of synagogues, and authorize Israel with their children to there assemble? It seems to me that these were among the inventions of carnal Israel, and not required at their hands; as much so as so-called Sabbath Schools of this day are the inventions of men, and are a part of their "crooked ways." And "As for such as turn aside unto their crooked ways, the Lord shall lead them forth with the workers of iniquity."—Psal. cxxv. 5. Under the patriarchal and legal dispensations it was understood that the government of children was confined to the parents, and there it should remain to this day. Parents are obligated to bring up their children in the way of morality, to honor their parents, so far as it is in the power of the parents to do so. This is the law of their Creator; but they are not commanded or required to teach them religion.

The Bible is not a proper book to place in the hands of the young. Carnal Israel understood this. There are portions of it that they should not read, nor should be read to them. I am not aware that any Old School Baptist has ever objected to parents reading a portion of the Scriptures to their children, at proper times and places; nor that there is any impropriety in taking their children with them to their places of worship; but some do object to compelling them to thus attend, lest in so doing the object had in view be defeated. When children are compelled to go to such places greatly against their wishes, it generally has the tendency to produce in them contempt for such religion. Parents should use judgment in this matter. Old School Baptists generally have no such customs; and yet I think we may challenge the world to a comparison of children, as to religious intelligence, honor and respect for parents, and general morals. It is a proverb in the world, that no one knows so well (in their own estimation) what to do with children, as the man or woman who has never had to manage any.

The law which the carnal Israelites were under, as a covenant, was given exclusively to them. The Lord said to them, "You only have I known of all the families of the earth."—Amos iii. 2. And the Redeemer said that the first commandment was, "Hear, O Israel," &c. The Gentiles were never under that law or covenant. That which was promised or secured to Israel in the type, in the observance of that law, could not then, nor can it now, be obtained by any Gentile by observing that law, because the Gentiles were not children of that covenant. For example, the law said to the Israelite, "Honor thy father and thy mother, that thy days may be long upon the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee." When they obeyed this command, the Lord guaranteed them long life in that land which he gave them, according to his promise to their father Abraham. This was one of the statutes of the Lord that he commanded Israel to teach to their children; and a very important one it was to them, for it embraced a matter of life and death. But suppose that now we attempt to apply it to the children of Gentile parents. Can we say to them, "This statute applies to you, and we promise you, by authority of the God of Israel, that if you will honor your father and your mother according to the flesh, your days will be long upon the land?" We have no authority for thus teaching, but the carnal Israelite had. By the authority of God they did so teach, and also celebrated the statutes of the Lord in the songs of the temple, as in the seventy-eighth Psalm, referred to by you. As I have said, that was a shadow, or type. The substance that cast the shadow is found in spiritual Israel under the gospel, or the new covenant; "the generation to come;" "the generation of Jesus Christ;" the children of antitypical Abraham; the seed of Israel, the Prince who has prevailed, and has power with men and with God; the chosen generation; the people which should be created, and who should praise or worship the Lord in spirit and in truth; who are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works (not the dead works of the law), which God hath before ordained that they shall walk in them. Their Father is God; their mother is Jerusalem above the law, or the new covenant. This is the Father and this is the mother they are to honor, by yielding obedience; and when they do so they realize the promise of long life in antitypical Canaan. This should be taught by spiritual Israel to spiritual children, to whom alone it can apply; and such spiritual children, having the love of God their Father in them, and the love of the mother in them, will desire to be obedient.

The words, "They shall teach no more every man his neighbor," &c., are not simply an interdiction, but are prophetic. They shall not do so, because it is impossible, as you also say, to give the knowledge of God, who is known only by revelation. We need have no fear that any of God's children shall fail to receive the knowledge of him, which is eternal life; for he has declared, "They shall all know me." "And all thy children shall be taught of the Lord, and great shall be the peace of thy children." But while this is true, I certainly do believe that it is inconsistent for Old School Baptists to send their children to Sunday Schools where false religion is taught. It seems to me that it is tempting the Lord when they do so, and then say that the Lord is able to bring them out of the errors there imbibed. "It is written, Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God." It is true that he is able to do all things, but that does not justify us in tempting him.

If at times the churches of the saints are diminished and chastened, it certainly is not because they have failed to teach their natural children the statutes of the Lord; we must look elsewhere for the cause of such diminution and chastisement. The Lord has his own set times to increase the number of the organized church, and that does not depend upon what we may regard, in our carnality, as the best kind of preaching to accomplish that object. The Lord works, and none can hinder.

As ever, affectionately your brother,

BENTON JENKINS.

"AND Joseph gathered corn as the sand of the sea, very much, until he left numbering; for it was without number."—Gen. xli. 49.

No man was ever known to seek spiritual food until he was hungry; craving something he has not within himself; that spotless purity, which is Christ's righteousness; that best robe, which he has wrought for sinful men. So were the sons of Jacob hungry; not only hungry, but starving for the bread of life, when Jacob heard that there was corn in Egypt. Some one, wise and good, has stored up corn against this time of need. So with the children of Israel in these days, when they get very hungry for some spiritual food, some relief from their starving condition, some hope of a better future; and their very hungerings seem to assure them that there is a treasure of the bread of life laid up somewhere in this broad earth, for some one, if it is not for them; and they begin to search for that treasure. Perhaps they hear that there is salvation in the Bible, and they read, but only to find the denunciations against sinners as their portion; for they have sinned. So had Jacob's sons. And the man spake roughly to them. But after awhile they perchance hear a sermon that promises rest for the weary, comfort to the mourning, and the gospel is preached to the poor. Their sack is full, and they go back to their own land to enjoy the corn they have received, with their families, or perhaps with some friend who is also hungry for the same bread of life as themselves; and they feast for a time. But the hunger comes again, perhaps more severe, because of the food they have tasted, and because they know now of a certainty that there is corn laid up in Egypt (this earth). But they do not go again until they must; for they feel guilty concerning the wrong they had done, and the man would not take their money. Would you offer money to the Lord? or dare to ask any one to put anything into the Lord's treasury? Consider to whom we would offer this money. Joseph, the type of Christ, was ruler over all Egypt. So is Christ ruler over all the earth. Joseph had laid up corn as the sand of the sea: so has Christ laid up a treasure of spiritual food that is unnumbered; for it is without number. "And without thee shall no man lift up his hand or foot in all the land of Egypt."—Gen. xli. 44. What need had he of their money? He refuses it, even when they would have been glad to have paid for some food to keep them from starving. Our Jesus has said, "All power is given into my hand in heaven and earth." What need has he of our money? The gospel of the grace of God is free, and cannot be bought or paid for. Neither was it worth while to tell Joseph of their learning or their goodness. He was with them in their childhood, and knew all about them. The children of Israel did not try it. Neither dare the children of Israel now come to the Lord boasting their sufficiency for his service, nor their wealth to add to his treasure. They came begging food, and begging Joseph to take money and a present; but he gives them food, and throws their money on their hands. They discover that it is their own brother who is ruler over the treasure of all the food in Egypt, and they go and tell their father. Israel said, "It is enough;

Joseph my son is yet alive: I will go and see him before I die."

Joseph was the hope of Israel of old, and Jesus is the hope of spiritual Israel now. And when Jesus makes known to us that he is our own brother, and that the Lord sent him to the earth long ago to lay up this treasure for us, we (Israel of to-day) say with tears of gladness, It is enough. My hope is yet alive, and I shall yet rejoice in that spotless purity, which is Christ's righteousness, and his forgiveness of our sins. Then Joseph said, "Come down unto me, and tarry not, and thou shalt be near unto me," &c. So Christ bids those who are hungry for the bread of life, and have tasted of that heavenly food, and are now come seeking food again, that they may not starve, to come and dwell near him. "Make haste, come, and tarry not; and I will nourish you: for there is yet five more years of famine." As he has promised, he is also faithful to perform, and his treasure is abundant, even as the sand of the seashore, unnumbered; for it is beyond number. Jesus, our Brother in the Lord's family, came to this earth long ago. Our sins crucified him, and we meant it for evil. We would even have sold our hope, and put away forever our fears of torment, if we could. And then we see what comes of his dreams, these impressions, the still, small voice of God. But Jesus says that the Lord overruled it for good, that he might save many. He suffered hunger, sorrow, temptation and death. Now he is raised to heaven, and is the Ruler over all the earth, and has all the treasures of life, forgiveness, joy and spiritual food, which food is the contents of the granaries which are in every city (or church) in all the broad earth. He does not give you all of it at once. What could you do with it if he did? Neither can you buy it. The gospel is preached to the poor, and is free. But he gives you a word of comfort, day by day, now and then, to strengthen your hope, feeding that hungering which he himself implanted. Then again, at times, he gives you such fullness of his stores of grace and love that you are made to say, in the gladness of your souls, "It is enough." Jesus, our hope, is yet alive. We shall dwell ever near him, and be kept by his power. At other times we feel so barren and hungry that we fear that the treasure is insufficient, or that he will withhold it at some time of need. He again assures us, "My grace is sufficient for thee." The great store also contains all the doctrine; for we see a definite purpose in it all. Joseph says, "The Lord sent me here before you." And not only so, but the Lord gave Joseph glimpses and impressions of what should be in the future, while he was yet a boy. So the treasure contains first God, his wisdom, his foreknowledge, predestination, election. Jesus Christ is sold by sinners, wickedly, with hatred. The same is overruled for their salvation. The love of Christ for his brethren, their utter inability to pay for that sacrifice or that love, a call to come and dwell near him, and a promise that our hungerings shall be satisfied. Let us talk about this one store-house together, and admire the great wisdom, goodness and foreknowledge of God, encouraging each other by the way with the good things the Lord of the treasure of the gospel has given us.

Yours in fellowship,

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN IN THE LORD:—Please give the following a place in the SIGNS, and oblige many brethren, who are anxious to know about our sad misfortune, as we had thought, but to our surprise, a glorious and marvelous work of our blessed Savior.

My brother, W. R. Jones, son of Elder W. F. Jones, was taken sick about the middle of September, 1888, with falling fits. Several times he fell as dead, and sometimes was unconscious for an hour or more. He had about twelve or fifteen in all. The doctor at first thought it was epilepsy, but afterward said it must be tumor on the brain. He doctored for something, he knew not what, until he became so delirious at times that we had to send him to an insane asylum, near Topeka, Kansas. He was there about one week, when he was restored to health. The second time I visited him I found him all right and in his right mind; also the third time. The fourth time he drew a Testament from his pocket, gave it to me and said, "This is what is the matter with me." He then told three of us how the Lord had visited him in the asylum, and had forgiven him his sins, and bade him arise, and healed him in every way. The keepers say he never had a fit after he came there, but was flighty a few days. They say he is a mystery to them. But he is not so to us. We were made to rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory, to hear him tell how great things the Lord had done for him. He had gone down preaching the doctrine of predestination; and as he went down, so he came up, but he had not then been delivered. I visited him before he got so bad, on my way to the Western Corresponding Association of Missouri. He said, "I may get well, and I may not; but if I am to get well, I know I will; for what is to be will be." I said to him, "Yes, and God can heal all manner of sickness."

"Great and marvelous are thy works, Lord God Almighty: just and true are thy ways, thou King of saints." Brethren, "Judge not the Lord by feeble sense,

But trust him for his grace;
Behind a frowning providence
He hides a smiling face."

"Ye fearful saints, fresh courage take;
The clouds ye so much dread
Are big with mercy, and shall break
In blessings on your head."

As ever,

A. D. JONES.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS:—I thought I would seat myself and write you a few lines, as my time for that dear paper, the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, is run out, and a little past. Perhaps you think I have forgotten you, but I have not, nor will I as long as I retain my senses. I cannot do without the paper, for it gives me much comfort while reading it. There is plenty of what the world calls preaching here, but it does not agree with my experience, if indeed I have one. I would liked to have got some subscribers for the dear family paper, but there is too much Arminianism here to get many new names. I love the communications in the paper from the dear friends all over the land; also the editorials. I hope you will live long and continue to send out the truth, if it is the Lord's will. I hope I love the truth, for it is that which will stand when time shall be no longer.

Yours in hope of eternal life,
MARTIN ROBINSON.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—We are strangers in the flesh, but I hope we are not strangers in the Spirit. As we live in this territory, and have no Primitive Baptist preachers, I would like to say through the SIGNS OF THE TIMES that any traveling preacher, sound in the doctrine of the Primitive Baptists, will be gladly welcomed by us. If any such will come and preach for us, they will please notify me at New Boggy, and I will meet them at Atoka Station, as we live twelve miles from a station.

It affords me great satisfaction to read the dear old paper, especially pieces from dear brethren and sisters whom I have known personally.

Your sister in hope of eternal life,

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR SIRS:—As the time of our subscription to the SIGNS has nearly expired, I inclose two dollars to renew it. We wish it God speed. We have tried to obtain new subscribers, but find none who love the doctrine it advocates. Will you or Elder Durand please write on the text, "It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God?" What perplexes me is how we are in his hands any more at one time than at another. I know I am very ignorant of spiritual things, but I do desire to know the truth as it is in Jesus.

Very respectfully yours,

CHRIST JESUS A LIVING STONE.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—If it is not asking too much, I want your views on 1 Peter ii. 4, and also on verse 22.

Your brother, I hope,

L. C. GODFREY.

REPLY.

"TO WHOM coming, as unto a living stone, disallowed indeed of men, but chosen of God, and precious."

"Who did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth."

While in the expressions cited there is no question but that Christ Jesus is the character designated as the Lord mentioned in the preceding verse, we do not know the particular point upon which our inquiring brother wishes our views. No more comprehensive theme could be presented than the glorious character of our Lord Jesus in his relation to his people. All their heritage as children of God is comprehended in him as the Rock of their salvation. So long as the truth of the gospel is presented there can be no departure from the text selected. Desirous as we are to comply with the wishes of our correspondents, it is beyond our power to write all that is embraced in the boundless field of truth which might be included in the text specified. Still with the hope of suggesting some thoughts which may afford satisfaction to him and others of our readers, the subjoined reflections are submitted.

It must be observed that this whole epistle is written by the inspiration of God, and Peter particularly addresses it to the scattered strangers, whom he declares to be "Elect according to the foreknowledge of God the Father, through sanctification of the Spirit, unto obedience and sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ." These strangers are included with himself in the blessing which God has bestowed upon him according to his abundant mercy. They are sanctified as being begotten again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, and thus they are manifested as the children of God. By reason of this vital relationship they love Jesus Christ in whom they believe though they have not seen him, and they rejoice in him. They are "Born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth forever." In consideration of this living relationship they are exhorted as new born babes to desire the sincere milk of the word, that they may grow thereby, if so be they have tasted that the Lord is gracious. Of these elect strangers the apostle speaks as coming unto Jesus, as unto a living stone. This illustration is contrary to nature, since there is nothing in the material world which can be called a living stone. The tables of stone upon which the finger of God inscribed the holy law which was given to Israel, had no life in them, being characterized by inspiration as "the ministration of death."—2 Cor. iii. 7. In contrast with this terrible display of the perfect holiness of God, the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus is declared to be "the ministration of life." This law is revealed in Christ Jesus as the Living Stone to whom his believing children come. None but those "who by him do believe in God" can come unto this "Living Stone," because the natural man cannot know this incomprehensible mystery.—1 Cor. ii. 14. Jesus said, "No man can come to me, except the Father which hath sent me draw him; and I will raise him up at the last day." And to the gainsaying Jews he said, "Ye believe not, because ye are not of my sheep, as I said unto you." The truth of God assures the coming of all who are taught of him. "Every man therefore that hath heard and hath learned of the Father, cometh unto me."—John vi. 44, 45; x. 26. This constitutes the definite number of all who were included in the election of God as chosen in Christ before the foundation of the world, and predestinated unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ unto himself, according to the good pleasure of his will.—Eph. i. 4, 5. While it is certain that every one of these shall come unto Jesus, it is impossible that any others can even have the will to come.

So effectually has God hidden the things of the Spirit from the wisdom of the natural man that no attainments of carnal reason can ever enable any one to understand what it is to come to Jesus. Not even the saints can comprehend this mystery by their natural minds. When by the Spirit they are led to Jesus as the precious Stone upon which they are built as the temple of the glory of God in salvation, the whole way by which they are led seems to them to be going from him instead of coming to him. As they see more clearly their own vileness and feel their bondage under sin more keenly, they think they are daily farther from the perfection which is in Jesus. The growth in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, is a continual revelation of their utter helplessness and unworthiness. The more they are made to understand the depth of their just condemnation, the more fully are they qualified to know the exceeding greatness of the mighty power of God in the display of that grace by which Jesus is revealed as their Savior. Their coming to him is not confined to the first revelation to them of his grace in the blotting out of their sins and giving them to hope in his salvation. They must continually come to him in all their pilgrimage through this valley of the shadow of death. When they are made to cry unto him out of the depths of their afflictions and distresses, when they sink in deep mire where there is no standing, when their hope seems lost in darkness, and despair threatens them, they are even then coming to him who led the way of suffering and went down into the lowest pit for their offenses. In such conscious unworthiness they are indeed unable to approach the dreadful mount of legal holiness, but in Jesus they find refuge in every time of trouble, because he is their righteousness, and in him all the demands of the law are satisfied. As the eternal Rock he is immutable in his love and mercy toward the subjects of his grace, and yet he is to them the ever-living and present Friend who gives them deliverance in all their times of trial. Not only does he protect them when they have fled to him for refuge, but he shields them at all times by his presence and draws them by his love, so that he is one with them in every time of need. Such a permanent and secure Refuge is well designated as a "Living Stone."

Notwithstanding the express declarations that this Living Stone is disallowed of men, the saints are continually seeking to show to their natural minds the perfection and beauty which they have seen in him; and much of their trouble arises from their doubts, which are based upon the impossibility of making blind reason see the glorious truth which can be known by faith alone. If it could at all times be remembered that this Living Stone is disallowed of men, much of the perplexing and distressing doubt and unbelieving fear of the saints would be overcome. As new born babes they are so weak and helpless that the memory of the sweet assurance which God has given them, cannot afford them support in times of darkness, except as the Spirit of truth takes and shows to the tried ones the strong consolation of his gracious word. For their encouragement the inspired Scriptures abound with the most unreserved declarations of the unchanging faithfulness of their divine Redeemer's loving care and protection; yet they can of themselves appropriate no word of that comfort. It must be applied by the Spirit in every case. This Living Stone is thus experimentally disallowed by the saints themselves.

"But chosen of God." In this clause is declared not only the exaltation of Jesus above every name that is named in this world or that which is to come, but the word "chosen" here signifies "accepted, approved." This accords with the repeated records of the witness borne to our Redeemer by the voice of God; as at his baptism in Jordan, and on the mount when he was transfigured before his disciples. As the obedient Son of God he is the only one who is approved by the infinite holiness of divine justice. The work which Jesus came into the world to accomplish, was beyond the power of any created being, yet he did not fail nor become discouraged in fulfilling all that was written of him in the eternal purpose of God. "In him dwelleth all the fullness of the Godhead bodily." Less than that fullness would not have qualified him for the great work which he came to do. Having in himself all the perfections of God, he was able to answer all the requirements of infinite justice by laying down his life for the sins of his body, embracing every member of the spiritual church; and having thus put away their sin by the sacrifice of himself, he was able to take his life again, according to the commandment which he received of his Father.—John x. 18. In thus doing the work which was given him to do, Jesus was manifestly approved of God, not only by the express word which was heard from heaven, but also "by miracles and signs and wonders which God did by him."—Acts ii. 22. In this divine testimony of the acceptance of our Redeemer the assurance is given that all his chosen people are accepted with him. Not one of them could be left out of this blessed acceptance without involving the charge against Jesus that his work was not perfect. In no other sense can Jesus be chosen and approved of God but in his unity with his body, including every one of those sinners who were chosen in him. Hence, the subjects of saving grace are all included in the same election of God in which Christ Jesus was chosen as their Head and Life. Well may the saints esteem him as "precious." He is the embodiment of all their salvation from sin, and in him are treasured for them all the riches of mercy and grace for time and for eternity. There is no other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved. Language is incapable of describing the preciousness of this gracious Savior to those who know him as their righteous Redeemer.

"Who did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth. It is written of him that by the pleasure of God he has the pre-eminence in all things.—Col. i. 18. He "was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin."—Heb. iv. 15. Nothing less than divine power could enable him to take our infirmities and bear our sins; yet this was necessary that he might "be able to succor them that are tempted." Having endured all the power of temptation and borne all our infirmities, he has overcome for us every opposing power, and is a present help to give the victory in all our conflicts. In his triumph over sin and its wages, death, our Jesus now holds the keys of hell and death, so that there is no possibility of condemnation coming upon any of those whose sins were laid on him. His blood cleanseth them from all sins. If he had failed to satisfy divine justice on the part of his people, whose iniquities were laid on him, then the failure to do the will of God would have been sin on his part. But no such failure could mar the perfect work of him whom God made strong for himself.—Psa. lxxx. 17. He did no sin. His every word was truth, and no falsehood was found either in his tongue or in his heart. Guile never found place in his perfect heart. Of this fact even Pilate was forced to testify. But the comfort and sweetness of this gracious truth in the present experience of the saints is found in the positive certainty of the word of his promise, upon which he has caused them to hope. Immutable as his eternal throne, the unchanging love of God cannot deceive the trust of those who have fled for refuge to lay hold upon the sure mercies which are revealed in Christ Jesus. The mountains of guilt and sin which arise to forbid the hope of the conscious sinner, are washed away by the pure stream of saving grace flowing from the throne of God and the Lamb, which is proclaimed by the guileless word of everlasting truth.

"As well may he his being quit
As break his word, or oath forget."

The exhaustless theme of the glorious perfection of holiness which is manifested in the character of our Savior, furnishes the subject of eternal songs of adoration and praise in the world of everlasting bliss. Mortals can never hope to express its unutterable fullness. Hoping that something here written may afford satisfaction to our inquiring brother, we leave the subject for the present.

SOLOMON'S TEMPLE SPIRITUALIZED.

BY JOHN BUNYAN.

CHAPTER XII.

Of the pillars that were before the porch of the Temple.

THERE were divers pillars belonging to the temple; but in this place we are confined to speak of only two, namely, those which stood before the temple.

The pillars stood before the porch or entrance into the temple, looking toward the altar, the court, and them that were the worshipers there. Also, they were a grace and a beauty to the front of the house.

These pillars stood one on the right hand and the other on the left, at the door of the porch of the temple; and they had names given them, you may be sure, to signify something. The name of that on the right hand was called Jachin (God shall establish), and the name of that on the left hand was Boaz (In it is strength).—1 Kings vii. 21; 2 Chron. iii. 17.

These two pillars were types of Christ's apostles—of the apostles of the circumcision and of the uncircumcision; therefore the apostle Paul also calleth them pillars.—Gal. ii. That the pillar on the right hand was a type of himself and his companions, who were to go to the uncircumcised and preach to the Gentiles the way of life. "And when James, Cephas and John, who seemed to be pillars, perceived the grace that was given unto me, they gave to me and Barnabas the right hands of fellowship, that we should go unto the heathen, and they unto the circumcision."—Gal. ii. 9. So then these two pillars were types of these two orders of the apostles in their divers service for God.

And that Paul and Barnabas were signified by those on the right hand, to wit, to be the apostles of the Gentiles, he sheweth again, where he saith, "That I should be the minister of Jesus Christ to the Gentiles, ministering the gospel of God, that the offering up of the Gentiles might be acceptable, being sanctified by the Holy Ghost."—Rom. xi. 13; xv. 16.

And since the name of this pillar was Jachin (God shall establish), it sheweth that opposition shall attend it; so also that God would bless his word preached by them to the Gentiles, to the conversion of numbers of them, notwithstanding all the opposition of the enemy.

This is further implied, for that they were made of brass; as God saith of the prophet, "I have made thee an iron pillar and brazen walls." "They shall fight against thee, but they shall not prevail against thee."

Wherefore Paul says of himself that he was set for the defense of the gospel, that the truth of the gospel might continue with them.—Phil. i. 17; Gal. ii. 5.

CHAPTER XIII.

Of the height of the pillars that thus stood before the porch of the door of the Temple.

THE pillars were eighteen cubits high each; and that is as high, yea, as high again, as the highest giant that we ever read of in this world; for the highest of which we read was but six cubits and a span. True, the bedstead of Og was nine cubits long; but I trow the giant himself was shorter.—Deut. iii. 11; 2 Chron. iii. 15. But put the longest to the longest, and set one man upon the shoulders of the other, and yet each pillar was higher than they.

We have now, that I know of, but few that remain of the remnant of the giants; and though they boast as if they were higher than Anak, yet these pillars are higher than they.

These pillars are the highest. You may equal them, and an inch above is worth an ell below. The height, therefore, of these pillars is to show us what high dignity God did put upon those of his saints whom he called to be apostles of the Lamb; for their office and call thereto is the highest in the church of God. These men, I say, were made thus high by their being cast in such a mould. Of that which added yet further to their height, we will speak anon. We only speak now of the high calling by which they, and only they, were made capable of apostolical authority. The apostles were sent immediately; their call was extraordinary; their office was universal; they had alike power in all churches; their doctrine was infallible.—Acts xxvi. 16; 1 Cor. ix. 1; Gal. i. 1; 1 John i. 1-3; John ii. 23.

And what can our pretended giants do or say in comparison of these? The truth is, all other men to these are dwarfs, are low, dark, weak, and beneath them; not only as to call and office, but also as to gifts and grace. This sentence, "Paul, an apostle of Jesus Christ," drowneth all. What now are all other titles of grandeur and greatness when compared to this one sentence? True, the men were but men in themselves; for what was Paul, or James, or John? Yet by their call to that office they were made highest of all in the church. Christ did raise them eighteen cubits high; not in conceit, for so there are many higher than they; but in office, and calling, and divine authority.

And observe that these stand at the door, at the entering into the temple of God, at which they enter who go in thither to worship God; to show that all right worship, and which will be acceptable to God, is by or according to their doctrine.

CHAPTER XIV.

Of the chapters of the pillars of the Temple

THERE were also two chapters made for the pillars of the temple, for each one, and they were five cubits high apiece. These were types and shadows of that abundance of grace which God did put upon the apostles after the resurrection of our Lord. Wherefore, as he saith here, the chapters were upon the pillars; so it is said that great grace was upon all the apostles.—Acts iv. 33.

These chapters had belonging to them a bowl, made pommel-fashion; and it was placed upon the head of them, perhaps to signify their aptness to receive and largeness to contain the dew of heaven; that shadow of the doctrine of the gospel, which doctrine the apostles, as the chief, were to receive and to hold forth. Hence as the bowls were capable to receive the dew of heaven, these are said to receive grace and apostleship, for obedience to the faith among all nations, for his name.—Rom. i. 5; 1 Kings vii. 16, 42; 2 Chron. iv. 33; Deut. xxxii. 1; Rom. iv. 29.

There was also upon these chapters a net-work, or nets like unto checker-work, which added to their lustre. These nets were they which showed for what intent the apostolic offices were ordained. Hence Christ calls them fishermen, saying, "Ye shall catch men."—Matt. iv. 19; Mark i. 17; Luke v. 10; 2 Cor. xii. 16.

The world is compared to a sea, and men to fishes, and the gospel to a net.—Ezek. xlvii. 10-14; Matt. xii. 47-50. As therefore men catch fish with a net, so the apostles caught men by their word; which word, to me, is signified by this net-work upon the top of these pillars. See, therefore, the mystery of God in these things.

CHAPTER XV.

Of the pomegranates adjoined to these nets on the chapters

THERE were also joined to these nets, upon the top of these pillars, pomegranates in abundance, four hundred for the net-work. Pomegranates, you know, are beautiful to look upon, pleasant to the palate, comfortable to the stomach, and cheering by their juice.—1 Kings vii. 42; Song iv. 3; viii. 2; iv. 13; vi. 11; vii. 12. There were to be two rows of these pomegranates for one net-work, and so two rows of them for the other. And this was to show that the net of the gospel is not an empty thing, but is sufficiently baited with such variety as is apt to allure the saints in the world to be caught by it. The law is but a sound of words; but the gospel is not so. Hence it is called the gospel of the kingdom, and the gospel of the grace of God.—Matt. xxiv. 14; Acts xx. 24.

Grace and glory! Grace and glory! These are the pomegranates of the word of the gospel. The argument of old was milk and honey. That was the alluring bait with which Moses drew six hundred thousand out of Egypt into the wilderness of old.—Ex. iii. 8. But, behold, we have pomegranates; two rows of pomegranates; grace and a kingdom. No wonder then if when the apostles, men of skill, did cast this net, such numbers were caught, even by one sermon.—See Acts ii. Nets are instruments of death; but the net of the gospel doth catch to draw from the snares of death. Wherefore this net is contrary. Life and immortality are brought to light through the gospel. No marvel then if men are so glad, and that for gladness they leap, like fishes in a net, when they are caught by the gospel of the Son of God. They are caught from the snares of death, to live with God in glory.

CHAPTER XVI.

Of the chains that were upon these pillars that stood before the Temple.

AS THERE were nets and pomegranates, so there were chains, belonging to these chapters, or these pillars. "And he made chains, as in the oracle, and put them upon the head of the chapters."—2 Chron. iii. 16.

But what were these chains a type of? I answer, they were, perhaps, a type of those bonds which attend the gospel, by which saints are taken and tied fast to the "horns of the altar." Gospel grace and gospel obligations are ties and binding things. They can hold those who are caught by the word. "Love is strong as death." "Bands of love and cords of a man," as chains, take hold on them that are taken by the gospel.—Hosea xi. 4; Song viii. 6.

But this strength to bind lieth not in outward force, but in a sweet constraint, by virtue of the displays of undeserved love. "The love of Christ constraineth us."—2 Cor. v. Wherefore, as you find the nets, so the chains had pomegranates upon them. "And he made a hundred pomegranates, and put them upon the chains."—2 Chron. iii. 16. The chains then had pomegranates as well as the nets, to show that the bonds of the gospel are irresistible goodness, such with which saints love to be bound, and such as they pray they may be held fast by. He binds his foal to the vine, his saints unto this Savior.—Genesis xlix. 11. By these chains there is shown what strength there is in gospel bonds. Never man yet was able to resist them, that well did know the meaning of them. They are mighty to make poor men obedient, and that in word and deed.

These chains were such as were in the oracle, to show that gospel bonds are strong.

ON Dec. 26th, 1888, at the residence of S. F. Terry, Esq., near Philadelphia, Pa., by Elder A. B. Francis, assisted by Elders S. H. Durand and P. G. Lester, Mr. Edward A. Priest, of Hunterdon Co., N. J., and Miss Mollie T. Francis, formerly of Fauquier Co., Va.

JUNE 16th, 1888, by Elder A. B. Brees, at the house of the bride's father, Shelby Co., Ohio, Dr. E. A. Fisher, of Pleasant Hill, Ohio, and Miss Ella Irene Hance.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

Mrs. Frances Louisa Hassell, my beloved wife, after four weeks' illness, passed gently from earth, in our rented home at Williamston, N. C., yesterday evening at six o'clock, Jan. 6th, 1889.

She was the youngest daughter of Calvin and Winnifried Woodard, of Wilson, N. C., and was born Oct. 13th, 1859, thus being in her thirtieth year. We were married May 3d, 1876; and there have been born to us seven children, John, Mark, Frank, Charles, Mary, Calvin, and Winnie, of whom the last five are still living. Little Winnie was born on the 9th of December, and her mother was taken with chills three days afterward, and in two weeks her fever took a typhoid form, and the best medical skill and the most faithful nursing could not prevent her spirit from obeying her Maker's call to leave these mortal shores. A more faithful and devoted wife and mother I never knew; a more beautiful, intelligent, industrious, economical, pure, modest, quiet, patient, uncomplaining, self-sacrificing, lovely woman, I should not know where to find. She was not only my wife and the mother of my children (all the five living ones being under eight years of age), but my housekeeper, and my teacher of music and art. Surely a man never had a more efficient helpmate. It seemed barely possible for me to meet my family expenses with her invaluable help; only the Lord knows how they can be met without her. Her loss is the severest trial of my life. May the Lord give me his indispensable grace to enable me to kiss the rod that smites me, and to bear with meekness and resignation the dreadful blow. All things work together for good to those that love him. His grace shines the brightest in the furnace of affliction, and thus shows its unearthly and indestructible character. We owned only a half-interest, not yet entirely paid for, in the Wilson Collegiate Institute at Wilson, N. C., and that we had to sell to try to pay the Church History Debt of $2,000. My wife deeply felt that all her own as well as my hardest years of labor were taken from our poor, little, helpless children and given to the Church History. For many years she longed for a little home that she could call her own; but about three years ago she dreamed that the Virgin Mary appeared to her and showed her a bright mansion in the skies, and said, "This is the house, not made with hands, eternal in the heavens, and is meant for you." After that she troubled herself no more about an earthly home, but felt that she should soon be called from this world to a better, a brighter, and an enduring home in heaven. When she left her mother's place in Wilson County, at the close of our last summer vacation, she told her that she never expected to visit her again, but that she was going down to Williamston to die. This presentiment continued with her to the last. Dr. L. H. Reid, who attended and nursed her most skillfully and faithfully day and night, declared that he never felt so much interest in a patient before; that he never saw so quiet, patient and lovely a sufferer; that he would give everything he had to secure her recovery. But our heavenly Father, whose thoughts and ways are infinitely above ours, has seen proper to take her dear spirit to himself, in a world, as I cannot but believe, of everlasting light and love and rest. A calm, sweet, angelic smile rests upon her features in death, and I feel assured that her labors and sufferings are forever ended. Her remains are to be buried in the church-yard at Skewarkey to-morrow.

SYLVESTER HASSELL.

WILLIAMSTON, N. C., Jan. 7, 1889.

Mrs. Harriet Ketchum, relict of Eddy Ketchum, deceased, was born in Tioga Co., Pa., Nov. 19th, 1809, and departed this life Dec. 16th, 1888, aged seventy-nine years and twenty-seven days.

The deceased was a daughter of the highly respected Ichabod Smith and Anna his wife, one of the very prominent branches of the Smith family. In 1817 the family located in Ohio, and there, on December 18th, 1827, she was united in marriage with Mr. Eddy Ketchum, who died in 1884. To them were born ten children, six sons and four daughters, all of whom, except one daughter, survive their beloved mother. Among her respected children is our highly esteemed and able brother, Elder Smith Ketchum, of Elmwood, Ill. In 1828 sister Ketchum professed a hope in Christ, and was baptized by Elder Lemuel Jackson, in fellowship with the Bucyrus Church, Crawford Co., Ohio. After some time she and her husband joined the Honey Creek Church, of Ohio. After they located in Marshall Co., Ill. (date not at hand), brother and sister Ketchum joined the Bureau Church, of the Sandy Creek Association, which after a time was mutually dissolved. They then, by letter, joined the Blue Ridge Church, in Champaign Co., Ill., where they remained in full fellowship until they were called away from earth. Sister Ketchum always seemed deeply sensible of her own imperfections, but was ready to cast the mantle of charity over the imperfections of others, yet she had no patience with deceivers and hypocrites. Wherever this sister's membership was, for over sixty years, she was the same faithful, devoted and beloved disciple of Jesus. She spent the years of her widowhood mostly with her daughter, our beloved sister, Eleanor Stansell, at Fisher, Champaign Co., Ill., where she died. Her last illness was of but a few days' duration, and she was not rational except by spells, and hence did not talk much as she approached her end; but her daughter believes, from expressions her mother dropped just before she was taken down, that she had a warning of the near approach of death, and she very visibly smiled as her spirit was about to take its departure.

Her remains were conveyed by train over one hundred miles to Elmwood, Peoria County, where I met them, and on the 19th addressed her many surviving relatives and friends from Job xiv. 14; after which her remains were laid to rest by the side of her deceased husband in the Elmwood Cemetery, to wait further orders.

A noble and worthy mother in Israel has departed, and has left many relatives and friends to treasure up her many virtues. May the blessings of our God rest upon them.

Your brother in Christ,

I. N. VANMETER.

MACOMB, Ill., Jan. 1, 1889.

OUR dearly beloved and highly esteemed brother in Christ, Deacon Robert Beaty, known to you as a subscriber and reader of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES for more than thirty years, was born in Preston County, W. Va., Nov. 4th, 1810.

At the age of four years he was brought to Coshocton Co., Ohio, by his parents, Levi and Sarah Beaty, who also were members of the Regular Baptist Church. About the year 1828 the deceased was married to Miss Rebecca Holt, by whom he had five children, two boys and three girls. In October, 1840, he lost his wife by death; and while a widower it pleased the good Lord to open his understanding to see himself a sinner, and after three or four months of great agony of soul he was finally delivered from his great distress by the revelation of Jesus to him as the Savior, and to receive that hope which remained with him the remainder of his earthly pilgrimage, and of which he so often loved to talk to the saints. On the fourth Sunday in May, 1841, he came before the Zion Church of Regular Baptists, and related briefly what the good Lord had done for him, and was received into her fellowship, and was baptized by her pastor, Elder Wm. Purdy. In July following he was married to Miss Fanny Alfred, by whom he had ten children, six sons and four daughters. In the fall of 1849 he with his wife and children moved from Coshocton Co., Ohio, to Fulton Co., Ill. In the year 1850 he with others were constituted into a church called Mount Zion, in said county, and he was chosen and ordained as her Deacon and Moderator, which offices he filled in a scriptural sense, proving his profession by an exemplary deportment, until as a shock of corn he was fully ripe, when his Master came and called for him, which took place on the 19th day of February, 1888.

We know that many brethren will bear us record that as a disciplinarian brother Beaty had but few equals. He never faltered when duty called, but went far and near, always seeming to take great delight in meeting with the saints, both as a peacemaker and general counselor. Truly can it be said of him that a father in Israel has fallen, but fallen to rise again.

CYRUS HUMPHREY.

Mrs. Helen Cadwell, wife of Hon. H. R. Cadwell, and daughter of Nathaniel Beyea, deceased, was stricken with paralysis on Thursday morning, Dec. 13th, 1888, and died about two o'clock p. m. of the same day.

Mrs. Cadwell was twice married, her first husband being John Beyea. Although not a member of the visible church, Mrs. Cadwell was a lover of the truth, and always waited upon the ministry of the word when opportunity offered. She was held in high esteem, not only by the church, but also by her neighbors, and her departure is sincerely mourned by all. Her funeral took place from her residence in Otisville, N. Y., when a discourse was preached by Elder Benton Jenkins; after which her mortal remains were deposited in the cemetery of the New Vernon Church, on the 17th.

Mrs. Cadwell is survived by her grief-stricken husband, three children and three brothers, Deacon Samuel B. Beyea, of the New Vernon Church, being one of the latter. May the Lord comfort the mourners.

DIED—Near Jacksonville, Middlesex Co., N. J., Sept. 4th, 1888, sister Rebecca Martin, aged eighty years, three months and fifteen days.

The deceased was baptized in the fellowship of the Jacksonville Church, by Elder James Goble, in the year 1832. On her removal to Brooklyn, N. Y., a few years ago, she became a member of the Ebenezer Old School Baptist Church, worshipping at 154 West Thirty-Sixth St., New York, where her membership was at the time of her death. She was ever a warm-hearted christian, esteemed as a humble follower of her Lord by those who enjoyed her acquaintance. She died in the triumphs of faith, in the hope of the resurrection of the dead. Her funeral services were conducted by the writer.

She is survived by several sons and daughters, who sorrow not as those who have no hope. May the Lord comfort them in all their sorrows.

WILSON HOUSEL.

DIED—At his home in Troy, Michigan, Nov. 22d, 1888, Benjamin Eldred, in the ninetyeth year of his age.

He was born in Washington Co., N. Y., May 28th, 1799. He removed to Oakland Co., Mich., in the fall of 1835, bringing with him a wife and five children, of whom only two survive him. His first wife died Aug. 9th, 1856, after which he married Mrs. Sarah Farrand, who still survives him, although in very poor health.

At the early age of fifteen years grandpa united with the Baptist Church, and has been a firm believer in the gospel all the remainder of his long life. He was always anxious to exchange religious views with all whom he met. He was sick about two weeks, and suffered very much. He was sure that he could not recover, and often asked the attending physician how long he could possibly live; but he said he was ready and anxious to go, that his work on earth was finished, and he would be at rest. Grandpa has been a subscriber for the SIGNS OF THE TIMES for about thirteen years, and has always looked with pleasure to its coming. He often sent one or two copies to friends, and asked them to read certain pieces which interested him. The last paper that came before he was taken sick was on November 8th, and contained a discourse upon the words, "He maketh the clouds his chariot." During his sickness he often spoke of this piece, and asked his daughter to read a part of it to him. The last few hours of his life were painless, and he passed to his reward without a fear.

"Life's labor done, as sinks the day,
Light from its load the spirit flies;
While heaven and earth combine to say,
How blest the righteous when he dies."

L. MAY ELDRED.

DECEMBER 5, 1888.

William H. Downs was born in Fauquier Co., Va., April 15th, 1812, was married to Eliza M. Smith August 23d, 1834, came to Ohio in 1835, settled in Logan County, and remained there until his death, which occurred October 17th, 1888. There were nine children, three boys and six girls. All lived to be grown. Two boys died before the parents, the wife dying Nov. 20th, 1884, of dropsy. Her obituary was published in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. His death was from asthma and Bright's disease. He was baptized by Elder Geo. McCollough about thirty-nine years ago. His seat was always filled when the Old Baptists had meeting. He was in good standing in the church up to his death. He leaves seven children, about forty grandchildren, and seven great-grandchildren, to mourn the loss of one so dear. His funeral was preached at Pickertown, Logan County. Only four of his children were present to follow him to his last resting place, the others being scattered in different states, too far away to come to the funeral. May the Lord comfort and sustain the sorrowing children and grandchildren, and remember in mercy those who mourn the loss of a dear father and mother, pardon all their sins, and qualify them to follow the example of their dear parents, who, we confidently believe, have entered into that rest that remains to the people of God.

"Farewell, father, mother, dear!
Life is sad without you here.
O may we meet in heaven above,
Where all is joy and peace and love."

REBECCA J. SMITH.

BELLEFONTAINE, Ohio.

Reuben T. Couch departed this life at his home near Island City, in Union Co., Oregon. He was born in Bedford Co., Tenn., Sept. 23d, 1833, and died Sept. 7th, 1888, aged fifty-four years, eleven months and fifteen days.

Brother Couch was stricken with paralysis while returning home from Island City, Sept. 1st, in company with one of his sons. By the time he reached home he was unconscious, and all that physician and kind relations and friends could do would not cause him to rally, and he gradually sank until the morning of the 7th, when the spirit returned to God who gave it.

Brother Couch was principally raised in Linn Co., Mo., where his father moved and settled in 1839. He was married to Miss Amelia A. Walker, Jan. 16th, 1860. He united with the Old School Baptist Church called Liberty, and was baptized by Elder Wm. Sears, in 1867, where he lived a worthy member until 1876, when he and family moved to Grand Ronde Valley, in Union Co., Oregon. In 1879 brother Couch and wife and several other brethren and sisters were constituted into a church called Big Spring. It always seemed our dear brother's delight to entertain his brethren and sisters, and he would spare no pains to try to make them comfortable. How we shall miss his kindly greeting and smiling face when we visit the little church. May the Lord comfort our dear sister and the eight children whom he left to mourn their great loss. The little church has lost a worthy member. The Lord gave, and it is his right to take away. May all who feel the loss be able to say, "Blessed be the name of the Lord." He has fought the good fight, finished his course, and kept the faith. We believe he is with his Lord, enjoying the reward prepared for him.

"A precious one from us has gone,
A voice we loved is stilled,
A place is vacant in our home
Which never can be fill'd.

"God in his wisdom has recalled
The boon his love had given;
And though the body molders here,
The soul is safe in heaven."

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date, this date denotes the time at which your subscription expires, and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

POETRY.

A SOLILOQUY.

WHEN death in his power
Shall come in his hour,
And call me away,
Then sweetly I'll rest
In that home of the blest
Where Jesus once lay.
There in that lone bier
Will I wait till I hear
The trumpet's loud call;
Then in triumph arise,
To meet in the skies
My Lord, my Jesus, my all.
Then I'll hie me away
To that land of bright day
Where seraphs do roam;
And the angels I'll kiss,
Amid scenes of bright bliss,
In my heavenly home.
Ah! blest be that hour
When Jesus in power
Shall call us away,
And bid us arise,
To dwell in the skies
In that heavenly day.

H. COX.

THE END OF THE WAY.

My life is a wearisome journey,
I'm sick with the dust and the heat,
The rays of the sun beat upon me,
The briars are wounding my feet;
But the city to which I am going
Will more than my trials repay;
The toils of the road will seem nothing
When I get to the end of the way.
There are so many hills to climb upward,
I often am longing for rest;
But he who appoints me my pathway
Knows just what is needful and best.
I know in his word he has promised
That my strength shall be as my day;
The toils of the road will seem nothing
When I get to the end of the way.
He loves me too well to forsake me,
Or give me one trial too much;
All his people have been dearly purchas'd,
And Satan can never claim such.
By and by I shall see him and praise him
In the city of unending day;
The toils of the road will seem nothing
When I get to the end of the way.
When the last feeble step has been taken,
And the gates of the city appear,
And the beautiful songs of the angels
Float out on my listening ear;
When all that now seems so mysterious
Will be plain and clear as the day;
The toils of the road will seem nothing
When I get to the end of the way.
Though now I am footsore and weary,
I shall rest when I'm safely at home;
I know I'll receive a glad welcome,
For the Savior himself has said, Come!
So when I am weary in body,
And sinking in spirit, I say,
The toils of the road will seem nothing
When I get to the end of the way.
Cooling fountains are there for the thirsty,
There are cordials for all who are faint,
There are robes that are whiter and purer
Than any that fancy can paint.
Then I'll try to press hopefully onward,
Thinking often through each weary day,
The toils of the road will seem nothing
When I get to the end of the way.

CORRESPONDENCE.

REISTERSTOWN, Md., Dec. 13, 1888.

DEAR BRETHREN:—Perhaps there is nothing among all the mistaken notions of men concerning religion that has caused more anxiety and fear among the humble-hearted followers of the Lamb than the generally accepted idea of what is called the "judgment day." Many and many a soul has been plagued all its days because of dread of that day. When the chains of Satan are broken by divine grace, and the prey has been taken from the mighty, so that he no longer reigns, it is his aim to plague and annoy the escaped captive by endeavoring to lead him into false views of some portion of the word, in order that his confidence may be broken, and the poor soul plunged into darkness, doubt and fear. While the word and Spirit of God everywhere assert the absolute security of the redeemed in Christ, the enemy of souls would deprive them of the rest which this truth is calculated to give by still holding up the idea that all is not secure, and that there is yet some trying ordeal to be endured before their final safety can be assured. Among the things which the enemy of souls has used most frequently to disturb the people of God, the idea of a future time of judgment has been often prominent. Many portions of the word have been misapplied and perverted in the minds of the children of God, until many have actually thought that their final destiny is not yet secure, and will not be until they have been brought up for trial and their works are judged. Feeling themselves to be vile and disobedient, they have feared that they could not stand in that day, and so all their days have been clouded with grief, and in death itself their hearts have trembled with fear.

The general idea of the future judgment among almost all who profess to be Christians, and among many children of God, is that at the end of the world every man, woman and child shall be brought for trial to the throne of God, who will sit as a judge. Each man will there be confronted with all his evil deeds and all his good deeds, and every one whom he has wronged will appear against him, and all to whom he has done good will testify for him; and according to his deeds will he receive sentence from his judge. No wonder that the child of God, with all his consciousness of sin within and without, and with his lack of any good thing in heart and life, looks with constant dread to such a day as this; for he knows that when the Lord marks iniquity he cannot stand.

Now, for the comfort of such troubled ones I desire to suggest a few reflections, and to consider a few of those portions of the word that have been supposed to sustain the above named view. The destiny of no man is uncertain, nor has it ever been. Whatever may take place at the end of the world, there will be no such trial as has here been spoken of. When the end of the world shall come, everything will be found according to the infinite wisdom that sees all to-day as entirely as it will then. God will make then a complete and final display of every hidden thing, and show that his word has been settled forever in heaven. His judgment, which is now hidden and obscured, will then shine forth clear as the noonday, and all the hosts of heaven and earth shall acknowledge his dread supremacy and holiness, his judgment and his truth. But the people of God need fear no trial, the result of which will be uncertain. They may be sure that their happy destiny is settled beyond all danger, and that they are safe in the Lord.

Before presenting some of the reflections that are in my mind, I wish to say of the wicked also that their final destiny is also settled. They are dead in sins; they abide in sin and in death; and unless redeemed by the blood of Christ they abide in sin and death forever. Men are presented in the Scriptures as being condemned already. "God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world." It is also said that "he that believeth not is condemned already." The fact that a man believes not in Jesus is full proof that he is dead in sins, that he has not been made alive to God, and that he now abides under condemnation. There is, there can be, no uncertainty in this matter. A man is either justified in Christ and cannot come into condemnation, or else is out of Christ and is already condemned. In either case there is no room nor need for such a time of judgment as is generally supposed to be before us. It is not uncertain in either case with God as to what the result will be.

I will further add that the popular notion of a future general judgment is in its very origin and nature Arminian. It is based upon the conditional system of salvation, which leaves the whole matter uncertain until the end of a man's life. This system asserts that God himself does not know, until all lives and the results of all lives are summed up, how to fix the destiny of any man. I am writing here to those who have no such view of the Almighty as this, and who know that salvation is not upon conditions of our performance. But if this idea of the future judgment be true, then is Arminianism true, and conditional salvation is true, and the Almighty is not perfect in knowledge. Surely we must reject every notion which entails such fearful conclusions as this. If we believe the doctrine of personal election to life and final glory, if we believe in the full efficacy of the atonement, if we believe in the always effectual calling of the Spirit, if we believe that the divine power keeps the saved ones, so that they can never be separated from God, then are we sure that there is, there can be, no such thing as uncertainty with regard to the future state of any man, woman or child that has ever had or shall have existence upon the earth.

The same train of reflections also does away with the notion of degrees of punishment for the finally lost. Men are all alike dead in sins. All are haters of God. All are lost and equally depraved. If any man lives outwardly a better life than his neighbor while yet unregenerate, it is not because he is any better, but because the restraining power and providence of God is over him. God suffers the wrath that is in him to go just so far as shall praise his holy name, while yet he restrains the immeasurable volume of the remainder. All the fountains of men's hearts are equally corrupt; but from one God suffers a mighty river to flow forth, while he restricts the outgoings of another who is equally vile to a tiny stream. If one man's thoughts, words and actions are moral, while those of the other are vile, it is not because the nature of one is better than the other, but because God has restrained one more than he has the other. Not one lost soul can ever point the finger to another and say, "He is worse than I." In the light of eternity which floods all who stand before the throne of God, all the apparent distinctions of goodness among men on the earth are resolved away, and it is seen that the first chapters of Romans are true, which equally condemn all men. While some places in the Scripture, on their face, seem to look like degrees of guilt and de-degrees of punishment, it will be seen by careful reading that the reference is not to any future state, but to God's dealings with men in his providence here. Such texts as this, "It shall be more tolerable for Sodom and Gomorrah in the day of judgment than for you," come under this head. Concerning this text I will remark that not men, but cities, are spoken of; and in the judgment that fell upon those cities children suffered equally with the guilty. In all that relates to the future world we have to do with God personally, and not as cities or nations. Therefore this language related to the judgments of God providentially among men. As men sow, they also reap here and now; but if it were so in what relates to the next world, not one could be saved. It is a great mercy for men while in this world if God keeps them from sowing much wickedness.

By parity of reasoning it is also apparent that the notion of degrees of reward in the future world is unscriptural. There is not one text which even seems to assert such a notion; and to contend for it is to contradict such texts as this, "Not unto us, O Lord, not unto us, but unto thy name give glory."—Psalm cxv. 1. Among all the unnumbered millions of the redeemed not one has ever had any right to say, "I am better than thou." It would mar the heavenly harmony itself if in that world one should say, "I did more good than you, and therefore am I happier than you." Sure I am that no saint on earth, when led by the Holy Spirit, ever said, "I have done more than you," claiming therefore a higher seat; and sure I am also that if saints should hear the one among them all most faithful begin to boast after such a fashion, they would quickly fear for him, and lovingly warn him that "Pride goeth before destruction, and a haughty spirit before a fall." If we are so happy as to win heaven at last, we shall go there as Paul, Elijah and Enoch did, sinners saved by grace. If saved at all, grace did it. If we did any right thing while here below, grace still must be praised. If we did more than others, it is not something to claim a higher reward for, but for which greater praise should be rendered to God. Instead of more abundant labors entitling us to more reward, we shall in adoring wonder inquire, "Who am I, that such a privilege should have been accorded me as to thus serve my Master?" And we shall say, "Let me fall in lowliest fashion at thy feet, because that I, most unworthy, have been so much favored." "Others, who loved thee equally with myself, were not given so much to do." "Lord, I thank thee for such a gracious privilege as has been mine." Here below it is true for the believer that as he sows so shall he reap, but in the end all is of Jesus. "For of him, and through him, and to him, are all things." In that world Jesus only shall be praised. There is no room there for degrees of happiness for saints.

Having alluded thus to some of the thoughts which seemed to me connected with the subject, I will proceed to give some reasons why the people of God need never fear being called up for trial in the next world.

First. The word expressly says that they shall not. I will quote, "Verily, verily I say unto you, He that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation." The Greek word translated "condemnation" here is krisin, from krisis, and in forty-one passages is translated "judgment." Thus the Savior's express word to those who believe is that they shall not come into "judgment." Surely this is in itself sufficient to settle the matter at once. Other Scriptures, whatever they may seem to say, do not contradict this. They must be interpreted in harmony with this express declaration that the believer does not come into judgment. He need not fear any condemnation; and what is more, he need not fear any future judgment. All those passages which assert that the believer is "passed from death unto life," that he has "everlasting life," that he "shall not see death," necessarily imply the same truth; and Paul's challenge in Romans viii. 33-39 could not have been so confidently uttered had he believed that he was not yet judged.

Second. The type shows that the saints are already judged. When Israel had come to the banks of Jordan, in full view of the promised land of Canaan, and Moses was dead and buried, and Joshua was leader for the people, we are told that the priests bearing the ark were commanded to step down into Jordan. When they had done so its waves were stayed; and the priests with the ark stood firm in the midst of Jordan until all Israel had passed over. Then they also passed over, and Jordan rolled on as before. Jordan means "River of judgment." Canaan is a type of gospel rest. Joshua is a type of our Jesus. Their experience is also ours. Jesus entered the waters of judgment for us. He has stayed its waves till all Israel shall have passed through; then its waters flow on as before. But Israel shall not cross it again; and when others approach its brink there is no one to stay its waves for them. Child of God, Jordan shall not again bar your path. Judgment is behind you forever.

Third. The fact that Jesus has died and risen again, bearing the judgment of his people upon him, is a sure and certain pledge that his people are free. In him they have been judged, and full punishment meted out. Can it be possible that Jesus shall see so much of his work done in vain? To look forward to a future judgment is to declare the work of Christ of no value, to put the soul in bondage again to fear, to deny our full justification, and to cut us off from saying, "I am certainly saved in Christ." To expect a future judgment is to take away all joy, and to seal our lips from saying, until after it shall be passed, "Thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." When Satan could not rob us of our joy in any other way, he strove to do so by the thought of a future judgment, thus obscuring in the minds of the people of God the one grand truth in which their hope rests, that Jesus has once been judged for us and we in him. Child of God, hold fast here. It is sure ground. It will not fail.

Fourth. The idea of a future judgment is seen to be absurd at once when we remember that all who have thus far died, have ever since their death been either in the enjoyment of all that heaven can give, or in the torments of the lost. Is the tenure by which the righteous dead hold the enjoyments of heaven an uncertain one? How could they have ever entered heaven, or the others have entered the regions of darkness, if judgment has not already been passed? If it be urged that the final judgment is but a form to make public what has already been done, surely the idea of such a mere ceremony must be abhorrent to a reverent mind.

Thus, then, the plain testimony of Jesus, the language of the type, the death and resurrection of the blessed Lord, and the fact that millions are now glorified or lost, all unite in one conclusive argument against the idea of a future judgment. I do not forget that a number of Scriptures are quoted and relied upon to prove this popular idea. I will just say concerning them that while here I have not time nor space to notice them; yet I have been giving them careful reading, and am convinced that none of them really contradict the words of Jesus when he said, "They shall not come into judgment."

I have not written this for argument, but that, if any child of God is now living in dread of a future judgment, I may, if God will, suggest something that shall show him that his fear is unfounded. I rejoice in a judgment satisfied in Christ. May we all see this matter clearly. So shall Jesus alone be exalted and his people's hearts comforted.

I remain, as ever, your brother in hope of life beyond,

F. A. CHICK.

LOUVALE, Ga., Dec. 7, 1888.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN IN THE LORD:—I read with much interest the last issue of the SIGNS. I was somewhat surprised to know of any one once being a Primitive Baptist and leaving them to join other orders; but when they leave other orders to join the Primitives, it seems reasonable. Our friend Duley, in his extended reason for leaving the Old School Baptists to join the New School Baptists, is a little queer to me. I was made to see the error of the new, modern order of so-called Baptists, in 1880, and found a home among the Regular, Primitive, Bible Baptists. I have no doubt but he and the new friends he has found think his arguments conclusive. They may tend to satisfy those who are very weak in faith, and who are in the dark; but the faithful children, who walk in the light, have to smile at the idea of him who went out from us because he was not of us. He quotes Scripture, and uses it quite artfully, and the simple would be deceived and be led astray with the error of the wicked. I do not write this because I think brother Hardy has failed to answer him, for he has done so to my satisfaction, I can truly say; but I simply wish to add a word or two. I was once under the same delusion, and was conscientious, and used pretty much the same arguments; but after the eyes of my understanding were enlightened, and by faith I was made to choose rather to suffer affliction with the people of God than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season, I saw quite differently. I cannot question his honesty, nor do I desire to do so. God's people have been led away by the errors of the wicked, and we have seen spiritual wickedness in high places. Such constructions and interpretations of Scripture open the door for the entertainment and satisfaction of the mother and all her brood of Arminian workmongers. There has been a good deal of such teaching by errorists in all ages, for a purpose; and we would not like to put a limit on the soft-handed gentry, knowing that for the sake of the stomach and pocket-book they could surpass the whole modern progressive world in ingenuity. We know that the Fuller view, as we may call it, is what led off many into these dark labyrinthian passages; and some who have followed them have gone out of sight of the truth. Truly does Paul say of such characters, "Ever learning, but never able to come to the knowledge of the truth." Also Jude and Peter speak of them as following in the way of Cain, and running greedily after the error of Balaam for reward. These are what we might call reward Baptists, money seekers, and seemingly ignorant that we are not redeemed with gold and silver, but with the precious blood of Christ. It can never be proved that the sinner dead in sins is a subject to be addressed concerning Christ and his gospel, while in that condition. Even Jesus himself did not preach the gospel to them until they were quickened; but when they were quickened, then they had the gospel preached to them; and some never had it preached to them at all; for Jesus told them they could not believe, because they were not his sheep. But some in this day presume that they are gospel preachers, and that by preaching they can make a sheep out of a goat. This is presumption, and is the error of the wicked, and there is an abundance of it in our day. When Jesus was here in person, he said he spake to them in parables, that seeing they might see and not perceive, and hearing they might hear and not understand. It looks strange that if he intended to save them by preaching, as Mr. Duley thinks, why he should use parables, and then take his disciples aside and tell them the reason why he used parables, and that it was the special favor of God to reveal to them the mysteries of the kingdom. But Mr. Duley is so good natured that he thinks it meet to violate the law of Jesus, and give the children's bread to the dogs. It is a fact that some people have more love for dogs than for children. Ahab and Jezebel did; and we believe that Fuller's views are of the Ahabic and Jezebelic character, and are not after Christ. Mr. Duley is loose on the invitation question, and I reckon he is loose on the atonement. I know he is altogether wrong on the church question, when he goes to the modern Fullerites to find the church of Christ. He is perhaps not aware that (Korah, Dathan and Abiram like) the world has opened and swallowed them up. They are of the world, and the world heareth them. Brother Hardy's quotation of the covenant principle was answer enough for me, for that downs all Arminian argument on that question, and all other questions in opposition of the truth of God.

I would like to ask Mr. Duley if he could prove that there was one gospel invitation in the whole gospel, and if he knew the word invited is not in the New Testament, but that it occurred every time in the Old Testament, in a bad connection once. Esther invited Haman to a banquet. He accepted the invitation, went, and was hung. Samuel invited the people to witness the anointing of Saul out of a glass vial; and his kingdom, though shiny, was broken, and he was rejected. Absalom invited his father's subjects to a sheep shearing, and he got up rebellion, and was hanged in a tree by his hair. We see that such was the result of invitations. Hence we speak, when we talk the language of Zion, of gospel calls; and we believe that "where the word of a king is, there is power." The great trouble with the present system of error is, its votaries preach a mighty God and an almighty man and a mighty devil; that it is all with the man, and he can do as he pleases; which is as false as it is absurd. They certainly know not the power of God who are thus led away into any such false systems of works, versus grace. We are hated because we believe in grace, sing grace, preach grace, trust grace, and rejoice in grace, and see it exalted, and God glorified. That is what delights the true church. But the false church sings works, preaches works, trusts in works, but does very little. Christ says, "Beware of the leaven [doctrine] of the Pharisees and the Sadducees, which is hypocrisy." The leaven is used to make bread rise, and make it appear to be more than there really is. So is their doctrine full of appearance and show. They make clean the outside of the cup, make many pretensions, and so deceive many. Christ, by Peter, says, "Many shall follow their pernicious ways, by whom the way of truth shall be evil spoken of." Now I would say to friend Duley, If you can be satisfied among them, stay there; for that is the place for you. We are willing for all such to leave our ranks; and we desire all those who are over there, and belong to the Old Baptists, to come home, where they can enjoy freedom in the truth of Jesus, our Captain. May the Lord of life and glory lead his people in the right way, to the glorious city of habitation.

Yours in hope,

W. LIVELY.

MILTON CENTER, Ohio, Dec. 30, 1888.

BRETHREN BEEBE:—Nine years and more are numbered with the past since I received the forgiveness of my sins. Amid the numberless temptations and trials of life, I still take comfort in the thought that God has given me the earnest of the Spirit. While I have often doubted the validity of my experience, there is something that I cannot throw away. I know that there has been a change in me. What once gave me comfort, affords me no delight now. But "from what I hate I can't refrain." What causes all this? This question is frequently asked me by others. Only a few days ago a dear young brother asked me the question, while tears streamed down his cheeks. I tried to tell him the experience of the apostle to the Gentiles, "When I would do good, evil is present with me." "It is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me." He denominates it a "thorn in the flesh." One of our first lessons in experience is that sin is not eradicated. By it we are buffeted, lest we be too highly exalted. It keeps us low. But knowing our sinfulness, we look forward to our deliverance. We are awaiting a glorious manifestation in the bright beyond. Then "our vile body" shall be changed. Sometimes I fancy that I see that bright day approaching. The resurrection! How it cheers my downcast soul and fills me with heavenly rapture! Redemption secures the resurrection of our bodies. The "purchased possession" will not always be left below. In heaven it will bloom and shine forever. I have so often wondered how any true follower of our dear Jesus could question the resurrection. Amid the vain speculations of to-day, it looks sometimes as if truth were entirely covered up. Men pride themselves in their own strength and wisdom, and are so impatient when we talk about the blessed truth of the Bible. O that our preaching brethren would determine to know nothing but Christ and him crucified. How it pains my poor heart to hear of some that have seemed to contend for truth, start out on vain and imaginary issues. Surely we have need to watch and pray, lest we enter into temptation. Paul carefully admonished his brethren to steadfastness. Foolish and unlearned questions are to be avoided. Better be engaged in preaching nothing, rather than to build upon our own imaginations. A class of "filthy dreamers" can do us no good. While I believe that God reveals himself to his people, I do not believe that he teaches one thing in the Scriptures and another thing in revelation to us. Men sometimes mistake impressions for revelations. The opinions of uninspired men amount to nothing. Let us search the Scriptures and be guided by them.

I have been greatly blessed of late. I have seen some of God's dear ones come to the church. How differently the workings of the Lord and the deceitful workings of the flesh. God still leads his people to repentance, not willing that any should perish. The efficacy of Christ's blood shall lose none of its power until all the ransomed ones be saved to sin no more.

Yours in common trial,

GEORGE A. BRETZ.

"JUSTICE."

THIS word "justice" in our natural life and application means much, and covers much ground. Justice is supposed to be the ruling principle in man, and in our laws, and as such stands high among law-abiding citizens. If a man does good in the eyes of the law, justice is meted out to him; and if he does evil, justice is as surely his due. But inasmuch as all the acts of men are weak, the evil doer does not always receive his due. But as we propose to have somewhat to say in regard to "justice" as meted out by God, we will quote from the record of God. "Justice and judgment are the habitation of his throne."—Psa. lxxxix. 14. We also read that God is not only just, but is merciful. Now how can that be? According to justice among men, it would be required by the law "a tooth for a tooth," &c., and no mercy could be extended in the face of justice. A man that is found guilty of murder must suffer the full penalty of the law, death; and to extend mercy would not be fulfilling the law. And in no sense whatever can justice and mercy go together among the children of men. Justice and judgment ought not to be separate in a law sense; for it requires great judgment to dispense justice. But the justice of God stands upon higher ground than man's judgment, and is of a supreme order, to which the mind of man cannot attain. Therefore to understand and enter into this word "justice," in a spiritual sense, it is necessary that we should be partakers of the divine nature, having this principle implanted in us, and witnessed by us in our own experience, wherein we find justice meted out and mercy extended.

Justice then is experienced by the child of God. In his first feelings of condemnation he may not realize the justice of that condemnation, but he surely will before he can see any mercy extended. Condemnation brings one to realize his situation as lost, and he sets himself about making reconciliation, about saving himself from sin, which he now sees the sinfulness of. But when he comes to realize the justice of that condemnation, he cannot possibly see any way in which he can be saved. But he works and works, to get into the favor of God, even after he has realized that his condemnation is just. And if he cries for mercy (which he is sure to do), he does not expect it, because he cannot see how God can extend it and be just; for God has said, "The soul that sinneth it shall die;" and he knows that he is a sinner. He now reasons as a man, and according to man's justice he can see no salvation for him. Why? Because he is worse than any one else. Mercy may have been extended to others, not so bad as he, but not to him. According to a man's judgment, this is a terrible state to be in, with no power to lift the burden. But in the midst of despair he beholds "the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." Is this mercy? Is this justice? Yes, "Mercy and truth are met together; righteousness and peace have kissed." Now he can see how justice and judgment are the habitation of God's throne, how God can save a sinner, be merciful to one justly condemned, and yet be just. The justice of God's mercy is seen in the Sacrifice. By faith Abraham experienced salvation, or saw salvation in the Sacrifice prepared by God. And so by faith we experience salvation through or in the Sacrifice of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. And the child of God cannot see any justice in God's mercy except through and by this great and glorious Sacrifice. That one should die for all, appears as something beyond our comprehension, before faith comes. By faith we see Jesus as the salvation of his people from their sins—as our salvation. By faith we see our sins laid upon him, and carried into oblivion, never more to be remembered against us. How sweetly this assurance comes! How like good old Simeon when he said, "Now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, according to thy word; for mine eyes have seen thy salvation." The child of God here realizes that God can and does save poor, lost sinners, according to justice. He feels that mercy has come through the obedience of one who took on himself all the sins of his people, and as the Head of the body suffered the penalty, which is death. This is a mystery to the natural mind, and can only be known by faith. "The soul that sinneth it shall die." This is also a matter of faith. The "church of Jesus Christ" is called a body; and there never was a body without a head. The Head of the church is Christ. And Christ being the soul or life of the body, it shall die. And as the head and representative, he took on him the sins of his people, his body, and in the strict sense of the term the soul died, the just for the unjust. It appears to me that he is the soul of his body, the church, and that full and perfect justice was done when he died for the sins of his people; and therefore mercy could be extended to the sinner.

To your judgment, brethren Beebe, this is left.

Yours in hope,

GITTINGS, Baltimore Co., Md.

HANNIBAL, Mo., Jan. 7, 1889.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—With the admirable mail facilities afforded by our country, the first number of volume fifty-seven of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, and the commencement of the weekly, came promptly to hand, before Sunday after the day of publication on Wednesday, the 2d inst. I found in it the full measure of my expectation, in every particular. The serial article on "Solomon's Temple Spiritualized," with which it opens, was both interesting and instructive, with the exception of that portion upon which you commented, which was entirely to my mind. There are some in this day who hold the same pernicious sentiment, and I was glad your watchful eye would not let it go forth without correction. It matters not whether the sentiment be antiquated or modern, if it does not harmonize with the inspired word of truth.

Next follows the very excellent and instructive letter of our esteemed and dear brother Durand, upon the subject of "Thanksgiving," showing so clearly to whom the words of the apostle to the Thessalonians were addressed, and to whom alone they are applicable. The world knows nothing of them, in the sense they are written; and still there is great parade made among men, to be seen of men. I feel sure that every child of God, "instructed unto the kingdom of God," will realize in his or her experience the truth he has so beautifully and comfortably expressed. I feel in my own experience that the most precious and blessed seasons of thanksgiving to God have been in deep affliction and pain, when I have felt in my inmost soul to give expression to the words of the psalmist which he has quoted, "O give thanks unto the Lord, for he is good; for his mercy endureth forever. Let the redeemed of the Lord say so, whom he hath redeemed from the hand of the enemy." None other can "say so." I only want to allude to what our dear brother has so fully spoken. I know I can add nothing to its fullness, but I want to bear my testimony to it. What he says about "Thanksgiving Days" appointed by the rulers of this world, and the admission that the saints may also meet on such days, is not according to my judgment. Many of these "Proclamations of Thanksgiving" are made by wicked and dissolute men, without the least knowledge or the fear of God, and are not far removed from blasphemy, and is surely "taking the name of the Lord in vain;" and the whole matter, as carried on in the world of mankind, of every sort of character, is to my mind the grossest idolatry, and the people of God should give no encouragement to it. I do not conclude there is any similarity or parallel in our Sunday. The disciples of Jesus, in the days of the apostles, met together on "the first day of the week," in consequence of the resurrection of our Lord, and to break bread, and celebrate his death and suffering; and they have so continued to this day, regardless of the action of the rulers of this world. And had any other day been appointed by such rulers, they would doubtless have continued on in the same day, "the first day of the week." I am sorry to dissent from the view of our dear brother, but I can do no less; for I know all of these worldly things are of no divine authority, and we should give no countenance to them by our actions, in any sense.

Then comes the unexceptional letter of our dear brother Coulter, which I read with great pleasure, and found many precious gems in it.

Then follows one from sister E. B. Scott, from "away back" in the wilderness, telling of some precious seasons she has had, and making mention of brother Fetter. I have wondered whether he is the same brother Fetter who so endeared himself to me by the precious truth he spoke some years ago while he was on a visit in Virginia.

And sister Macumber, in a short letter, asks your views on "the first resurrection," to which you responded, to my instruction and comfort. The additional circulation is mentioned, of the SIGNS, causing many pleasing reflections in my mind. Thus the new volume, as weekly, seems to open auspiciously, and I trust that under the guidance of our dear Lord it may increase and prosper, to the comfort and edification of his dear people. May he bestow upon you wisdom to "discern both good and evil," and thus be enabled to send nothing forth not in harmony with his word.

As ever, yours,

W. F. KERCHEVAL.

OZARK, Ala., Dec. 9, 1888.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN IN CHRIST:—It has been some time since I wrote you; and feeling a desire to say a word to the dear readers of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, I again make the attempt.

Many have been the pleasant hours I have spent in reading the writings of the precious brethren and sisters. It seems that they all come testifying of the same blessed truth, "Salvation is of the Lord," and that it is "Through much tribulation we must enter the kingdom." When that vast multitude which no man could number was presented to John, it was said, "These are they which came up out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb." Those robes that they wore were without a seam, and God put the robe on them.

"And lest the shadow of a spot
Should on my soul be found,
He took the robe the Savior wrought,
And cast it all around."

That robe is the righteousness of Christ. None can ever put that robe on themselves. God alone has to perform all the work. Adam and Eve sewed fig leaves together to hide their nakedness, which was indeed a very poor robe, that would not last long. But when God clothed them, he clothed them with coats of skins, which were of a durable substance, and represented the righteousness of Christ. Every one of that "innumerable company" (or elect) had the same kind of robes. All were made by the same great Being, and exactly fit the subjects for whom they are prepared. Those garments do not last for a season and then decay, but they will last eternally. O child of God, if you have been clothed with that robe, it will not wax old during your career of life, though you go through tribulation, yea, "great tribulations;" but that robe will continue with you. Though you go into the fiery furnace, or into the lion's den, that robe is still sufficient for you. Indeed the poor child of God has many losses and crosses to experience; but they are all for his good. We are often complaining about our conflicts; but what evidence would we have that we are God's children, if we had no tribulation? The apostle says that they that are without chastisement, whereof all are partakers, are bastards, and not sons; for whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth. Then let us be reconciled to God, for he doeth all things well. Another year is almost ended, and many of the dear saints have been called home to try the realities of the blessed haven of eternal felicity, while there are many who are spared, and are filling up the time God has allotted for them. They are in a world of tribulation; and while here, they shall have it. But be of good cheer, for Christ has overcome the world. One thing that so distresses us is the groanings within. We groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body. We realize daily that sin is not destroyed in our flesh; that when we would do good, evil is present. But remember the flesh never aspires to anything of a spiritual nature. Hence if ye (the children of God) live after the flesh, ye shall die to your christian comfort. If you have heavenly aspirations, they are from a heavenly source, and are the fruit of the Spirit. O that all our desires could be heavenward, and that we could be more and more devoted to the cause of Christ. May the Lord abundantly bless us all, and bind us together in love and fellowship, that each may esteem others better than himself. Little children, be not conformed to this world, but be ye transformed, and let brotherly love continue.

I can only write as I think, and will close, trusting that the Lord may ever sustain you, brethren Beebe, and all the dear writers for the SIGNS, to speak words of comfort to the little ones. When at the throne of grace, remember a poor boy, who is saved alone by grace, if saved at all.

Yours in love and tribulation,

LEE HANCKS.

SOUTHAMPTON, Pa., Dec. 11, 1888.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—More than five years have gone by since our dear brother, Elder J. M. Theobald, was called from this mortal state, but the memory of his powerful gifts, of the graces of the Spirit so richly manifested in his walk and conversation, of his kindness and tenderness of heart, of his faithfulness and steadfastness as a minister and brother and friend, is still fresh and clear with me; and I doubt not it is the same with all who enjoyed his friendship and fellowship, and who had the privilege of sitting under his singularly rich, clear, powerful and comforting ministry of the word. Since your publication in the SIGNS for June 15th, 1888, of his letter which I sent you two years before, I have felt a desire that others of his familiar letters, in which he has spoken of divine things, might be published. I have a number, as no doubt others have, which are well worthy of publication, and some time in the future they will very likely be laid before the brethren. For the present I feel like sending you for publication the concluding sentences of the last letter I received from him, written about six months before he was called to lay his armor by.

Your brother in the hope of the resurrection,

SILAS H. DURAND.

SADIEVILLE, Ky., April 18, 1883.

DEAR BROTHER DURAND:—For more than a year I have, it seems to me, been under a great cloud of affliction and trial, with just enough strength to hope that "when I am tried I shall come forth as gold." Yet at times I have been brought to conclude that all these things are against me, or that I shall one day fall under the accumulating trials of the way. I know that "the righteous also shall hold on his way, and he that hath clean hands shall be stronger and stronger;" that as our infirmities are brought to view by trial, so is the strength that is made perfect in our weakness; but I find that I cannot always take pleasure in infirmities, but am made still to cry, "O that my ways were directed to keep thy statutes; then shall I not be ashamed when I have respect to all thy commandments." "I will praise thee in righteousness when I shall have learned thy righteous judgments."

I have just read your article on the subject of the resurrection, and as far as I am capable of judging, I can sincerely indorse what you have written; yet I shall not be surprised if some one will be ready to say, "Thou dost sow that identical body that shall be."

Please remember us kindly to sister Durand and sister Bessie. We shall hope to see you in Kentucky this fall at our association, if God will, and of course at our place, Elk Lick, if you come. May God bless you, dear brother; and when access is given you to the throne of grace remember me, who am a worm, and no man, yet hoping, through grace abounding to the chief of sinners, that I may claim fraternal relationship with the household of God.

Your unworthy brother,
J. M. THEOBALD.

TONICA, ILL., Nov. 30, 1888.

DEAR BRETHREN:—Please find inclosed two dollars to pay my subscription for another year for our dear family paper. It is a luxury that I have been permitted to enjoy, which no one seems to covet in the little town where I live. It would give me much pleasure if I could find some one near me that I could induce to take the paper, and thus help to increase the circulation; and in so doing I would have some one that would at least be willing to converse on the good things the paper is filled with. I am some distance from the place where the meetings of our order are held, and seldom get there after the weather gets cold; and if it were not for your vigilance in sending out the dear old SIGNS I would be quite shut in. I do not think that any of the Baptists are strangers to each other, and I confess that I feel a little better acquainted with the readers of the SIGNS than with any other class of people. It is rather a mystery to me when I see any of our faith and order doing without it, if they are able to afford it.

Since I attended the association at Middletown, two years ago, I have had a constant desire to see you all again in the same capacity.

MRS. S. C. NEWTON.

STAR PRAIRIE, Wis., Nov. 18, 1888.

DEAR BRETHREN:—I hope this will find you all well, and still contending for the faith which was once delivered to the saints by him who was, and is, and is to come, the eternal

God, who declared the end from the beginning, and said his counsel shall stand, and he will do all his pleasure. When I think of his eternal greatness, I am lost in wonder. O what a wonderful God! By the word of his power he commanded, and it stood fast. He spake, and it was done. He took counsel with none. He fills immensity, being the high and lofty One that inhabiteth eternity.

"He plants his footsteps in the sea,
And rides upon the storm."

"He sits on no precarious throne, Nor borrows leave to be."

All glory and dominion are his. He will not give his glory to another, nor his praise to graven images. Exalted be his glorious name.

"Not Gabriel asks the reason why,
Nor God the reason gives;
Nor dares the favorite angel pry Between the folded leaves."

"This awful God is ours,
Our Father and our love."

If our life is hid with Christ in God, we do not hope in vain.

I hope the Lord will give you spiritual and temporal strength to wield "The sword of the Lord and of Gideon," and cut asunder the joints and marrow of antichrist, wherever you find him; for the sword of the mouth of God is able to put to silence all the old wives' fables that are in vogue.

May the Lord be our stronghold in the day of trouble, and finally accept us in that house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens, to praise him forevermore, is the prayer of your unworthy brother,

C. S. LOCKWOOD.

WEST CHESTER, Pa., Dec. 16, 1888.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—Inclosed please find two dollars to renew my subscription for the coming year. I am sorry that I cannot send you even one new subscriber. If I were able I would pay for several subscriptions, and send to one and another, in hope that they would enjoy the paper, and so become regular subscribers. As it is, I am alone here. There is not one, as far as I know, in all this beautiful place who thinks and feels as I do, or holds the grand old faith which was once delivered to the saints. The doctrine of the absolute predestination of all things, and election by grace, I love. It is all soul-satisfying. I often wonder what has become of dear Elder Purington, and wish he would give us more of his strong doctrine on predestination.

Wishing you all success in the weekly publication of the SIGNS, which I shall hail with joy, please find my address at the top of this.

As ever, in hope,
JANE JACKSON.

THRIFTY, Brown Co., Texas.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—Please publish in the SIGNS that if any of our ministers travel through this country we would like to see and hear them, as we are destitute of preachers in these parts.

Yours in hope of eternal life,
R. EATON.

THE SECT EVERYWHERE SPOKEN AGAINST.

"IF YE be reproached for the name of Christ, happy are ye; for the spirit of glory and of God resteth upon you: on their part he is evil spoken of, but on your part he is glorified. But let none of you suffer as a murderer, or as a thief, or as an evil doer, or as a busybody in other men's matters."—1 Peter iv. 14, 15.

The followers of our Lord Jesus are by inspiration distinguished as a peculiar people; and in every characteristic by which they are described in the Scriptures they are essentially different from all other societies or companies of the children of men. While the definite peculiarities which clearly mark this favored people are plainly recorded in the revelation which God has given, it is impossible for those peculiarities to be counterfeited by any who would falsely assume to belong to the church of Christ. Since the profession of religion has become fashionable, and the world has claimed to be favorable to the church of Jesus Christ, many societies have been devised among men, all claiming the right to be recognized as the true church. As all these seek to gain popular approbation they endeavor to present allurements which shall meet the desires of the natural mind. None of them could hope for success if they promised their adherents only persecutions and revilings. Even those fanatics whose religion consists in self-inflicted privations and punishments, take pride in the very afflictions which they voluntarily choose to endure. Although such professed christians may seem to bear the marks of afflictions which would show them to be followers of Christ, they have only the external form of suffering, while in reality they exult in their voluntary humiliation. It was to his own chosen disciples that Jesus said, "Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake. Rejoice, and be exceeding glad; for great is your reward in heaven; for so persecuted they the prophets which were before you."—Matt. v. 11, 12. It must be observed that this blessing does not extend even to the disciples of Christ when the reproach which they endure is justly due to their own misconduct. It must be said falsely for the sake of Jesus. This will never produce in those who thus suffer any feeling of selfish pride, nor yet any desire for revenge upon their persecutors. The spirit of glory and of God which rests upon them when enduring such suffering, will always inspire the feeling which was in Stephen when he prayed for his murderers, saying, "Lord, lay not this sin to their charge." The Lord does not say, "Blessed shall you be," as if the blessing were to be afterwards received by those who were so persecuted, but "Blessed are ye," showing that the persecution for Jesus' sake attests the fact that the blessedness already abides upon them. So Peter says in our text, "If ye be reproached for the name of Christ, happy are ye."

To the subjects of persecution it is of great interest to know whether they are in reality "reproached for the name of Christ." By reference to the preceding context it will be seen that Peter admonished the beloved subjects of election to whom he wrote, saying, "Think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing happened unto you; but rejoice, inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings; that when his glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad also with exceeding joy." This revelation of the glory of Christ is made manifest in the individual experience of them who are called to endure such reproaches and trials. They see his glory, when he appears for their deliverance, and gives them the victory over the fiery trial which is to try them. It is only as he does thus appear to their joy, that they are ever able to triumph over the opposition of the temptation and enmity of sin with which they are ever surrounded. They continually prove by experience the truth of his word, "Without me ye can do nothing." The wrath of man is made to attest the reality of the confidence which the saints have in the salvation of God when they are persecuted for the sake of Jesus. The fact that so the prophets and ancient saints were persecuted, is assigned by our Lord as evidence that all such as endure like persecution are blessed in their sufferings. When these reproaches and afflictions are suffered as the result of devotion to the doctrine and order of the gospel, they who are so afflicted have the assurance that they are blessed in being favored to bear the same persecutions which were borne by their Lord and his inspired followers. They may determine whether their afflictions are borne for the sake of Jesus, by ascertaining whether it is for unswerving devotion to his precepts and example that they are called to suffer. The blessedness is not experienced in suffering for any sentiments or faults of their own; they can only suffer for the sake of Jesus when they are persecuted for their adherence to his doctrine and example. They have no ground for rejoicing when they suffer in consequence of their own faults. "For what glory is it if when ye be buffeted for your faults, ye take it patiently? but if, when ye do well, and suffer for it, ye take it patiently, this is acceptable to God."—1 Peter ii.

20. Hence, it is evident that the blessing consists not in the suffering itself, but in the fellowship of Christ which witnesses their devotion to his truth and righteousness. Doubtless there was an experience of heavenly joy felt by the three Hebrews in the fiery furnace, when they had the companionship of the Son of God in the midst of the fire; but no such bliss could have been found by them in presumptuously going into the furnace for the purpose of gratifying their own carnal pride. So, when any follower of Christ is called to endure persecution for righteousness' sake, he will certainly be protected by the spirit of glory and of God resting upon him; but that protection is not promised even to the saints in following the dictates of their own carnal will. For this reason David says, "Who can understand his errors? cleanse thou me from secret faults. Keep back thy servant also from presumptuous sins; let them not have dominion over me: then shall I be upright, and I shall be innocent from the great transgression."—Psa. xix. 12, 13. Under such a sense of dependence upon the preserving care of God the saints will never desire to sin presumptuously.

The same persecution which convicts the enemies of truth and righteousness, witnesses to the fact that those who suffer are indeed the true followers of Jesus. While God is glorified in the sufferings of those who are led by his Spirit, the malice of their persecutors exposes them as being governed by the spirit of iniquity. In this way the wrath of man is made to praise the Lord, both in the justice which condemns the wicked, and in the wisdom which causes even the malice of enemies to work for the good of his saints in attesting the genuineness of their faith in Christ. This manifestation of the power of God in protecting his chosen people is not confined to those who are called to endure physical pains and literal martyrdom for their obedience to the commandments of Jesus; it is equally true that in all their trials the angel of his presence saves them. No affliction can befall those whom God has chosen, but that he has ordered it for the benefit of those who are called to endure such trial. There is not power enough in earth and hell to inflict upon one of those little ones which believe in Jesus, one pang of suffering, either physical or mental, beyond the exact measure which infinite love has ordained for their good and for the revelation of the glory of God in them. Thus, the very evil speaking of the enemies of truth is necessary to the manifestation of the declarative glory of God in the experience of the slandered saint. In thus persecuting those who follow the narrow way of truth, their enemies bear witness that they are indeed the disciples of Jesus; for in the same spirit he was persecuted. "Yea, and all that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution."—2 Tim. iii. 12. Even though the disciple of Jesus should dwell alone in the desert, he cannot escape this suffering of reproach for the name of Christ; for his own carnal mind will ever assail his hope, urging cruel doubts of the reality of his faith in the grace of God.

While they are not troubled with doubts as to the fact of their suffering persecution in their continual conflicts with sin and unbelief, there is often much questioning in the mind of the saints whether such suffering is in reality the testimony of their fellowship with the afflictions of the chosen people of God. They cannot see that in their trials "the spirit of glory and of God resteth upon" them. They may see that on the part of their accusers the truth and power of God are denied; but it is not so clear to them how it is that in this experience of persecution by them God is glorified on their part. Hence they do indeed in their daily experience say, Lord, when did we do the things which proclaim thy glory? There is no clearer evidence that a man is destitute of the knowledge of God and of his own sinfulness, than his thinking that he can render acceptable service to the Lord by his own works. The consciousness of entire dependence upon the unmerited favor of divine grace, is on the other hand acceptable worship in spirit and in truth, by which the saints do glorify him. To natural reason it appears that God is worshiped by the works of the hands of men; but all such worship is rejected by him, while they that render acceptable service always worship him as did the woman of Canaan, "Saying, Lord, help me."—Matt. xv. 25. The spirit which renders such worship can never give rise to self-confidence. The helpless beggar has nothing in himself wherein to exult. His very supplication necessarily confesses that he is entirely dependent upon the favor of that sovereign God to whom his prayer is directed. Therefore God is glorified in every such appeal. To all such cries he is gracious in granting relief. "He will regard the prayer of the destitute, and not despise their prayer."—Psa. cii. 17. There is no promise on record which embraces such as have some merit of their own upon which they can rely. God is glorified in the deliverance of sinners from their sins, and in justifying them that believe from all things from which they could not be justified by the law of Moses. This is the faith of the Son of God, which characterizes the peculiar people who constitute the sect which is everywhere spoken against. The salvation which is revealed in him not only saves his people from the punishment due to their transgressions, but makes them holy and without blame before God in love, thus saving them from their sins. By this revelation of sovereign grace in salvation boasting is excluded.

Therefore, those who hold this doctrine are everywhere the subjects of the same reproaches which will worshipers have ever heaped upon the doctrine of God our Savior, because it cuts off all occasion for glorying in the flesh. While those who claim to have righteousness of their own, will ever be found glorying in that righteousness, to such as have seen an end of all perfection in the flesh the salvation which is revealed by grace in Christ Jesus is that gospel of God which is indeed "good tidings of great joy." To such poor ones the gospel is preached in the revelation of Christ Jesus as the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believes.

By the injunction in our text forbidding the saints to suffer "As a murderer, or as a thief, or as an evil doer, or as a busybody in other men's matters," the Spirit of inspiration has effectually silenced the cavil which has been urged against the doctrine of Christ, charging that its legitimate result is to give license to the saints to continue in sin. Perhaps it may not be needful to call the attention of the saints to the importance of avoiding the grosser crimes here specified. The tempter will not often present the suggestion of indulgence in such manifest wickedness until the conscience of the saint has been seared by habitual subjection to the direction of the carnal mind. But the last specification is very comprehensive, and it may be well to consider our liability to be unconsciously led into transgression of the apostolic direction in this particular. Such is the deceitfulness of sin that the saints must be continually watchful lest they are entangled in the devices of the adversary. If the adversary were always clearly recognized in presenting his temptations, the saints would not be liable to be deceived by them; but when he comes as "transformed into an angel of light," they are more likely to be overcome by his devices. While they would be startled at the thought of deliberately interfering in the affairs of others, especially if the design were to injure them, they may not at all times so readily discern the impropriety of interposing their judgment in the affairs of others when they suppose they are impelled by a sincere desire to accomplish a good result. When led by the Spirit they may "By love serve one another." Under the guidance of love they will never be found seeking to "bite and devour one another." Whenever this disposition is felt, it is certain that it is not prompted by the love of Christ, which is that heavenly charity so fully described by Paul in 1 Corinthians xiii. 1-8. Unless those who attempt to restore an erring brother are spiritual, their efforts will not be in the spirit of meekness; and the consequence of their interference will be additional strife and confusion. This is the effect of being a "busybody in other men's matters;" and every one who is engaged in such interference, is violating the admonition of our text. This is a very serious matter, and it is important that the saints should carefully examine themselves before undertaking such a task. It is indeed a very desirable thing to render such a service as the restoration of an erring brother; for thereby "He which converteth the sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death, and shall hide a multitude of sins." But there is no possibility that this desirable end shall be attained unless the one who undertakes it is himself directed by the Spirit of Christ. Otherwise he is a "busybody in other men's matters," and must suffer as such. The test by which it is to be determined whether one is in the proper spirit for this important work, must be the desire by which he is actuated. If he is in the Spirit of Christ he will seek the conversion of the erring one, not for the sake of exhibiting his own superior merit, but from fervent love; and the consideration of his own liability to be tempted and overcome will work in him that spirit of meekness without which his efforts will be unavailing. Those who are truly spiritual are more likely to distrust their own motives than those who are only acting as busybodies in other men's matters. For while they who are truly led by the Spirit of Christ are constantly questioning their own character, they are contrasted with those who are in the flesh by Solomon, when he says, "A wise man feareth, and departeth from evil; but the fool rageth and is confident."—Prov. xiv. 16. May the power of divine grace keep all who love the Lord in the path of righteousness, and preserve us all from presumptuous sins, for Jesus' sake. Amen.

SOLOMON'S TEMPLE SPIRITUALIZED.

BY JOHN BUNYAN.

CHAPTER XVII.

Of the lily-work which was upon the chapiters that were upon these pillars of the Temple.

THESE pillars were also adorned with lily-work, as well as with pomegranates and chains. Chapiters also, which were upon the top of the pillars, finished.—See 1 Kings vii. 19, 20. This lily-work is here put in on purpose, even to show us how far off those who were to be the true apostles of the Lamb should be from seeking carnal things, or making their preaching a stalking horse to worldly greatness and that preferment. There was lily-work upon them; that is, they lived upon the bounty and care of God, and were content with that glory which he had put upon them. “Consider the lilies how they grow: they toil not, they spin not; and yet I say unto you, that Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these.”—Matt. vi. 28, 29; Luke xii. 27. Thus, therefore, these pillars show that as the apostles should be fitted and qualified for their work, they should also be free from cares and worldly cumber; they should be content with God's providing for them, even as the goodly lilies are. And as thus prepared, they were set in the front of the house for all ministers to see and learn and take example of them, how to behave themselves as to this world in the performing of their offices.

And that which gives us further light in this is, that this lily work is said by divine institution to be placed over against the belly, the belly of the pillars, a type of ours.—1 Kings vii. 20.

The belly is a craving thing; and these things, saith the text, were placed over against the belly, to teach that they should not humor, but put check unto, the desires and cravings of the belly; or to show that they need not do it, for that he that calls them to this work will himself provide for the belly. It is said of the church that her belly is as a heap of wheat set about with lilies (Song vii. 2), to show that she should, without covetousness, have sufficient, if she would cast all her care upon God, her great provider. This the apostles did, and this is their glory to this day.

So was the work of the pillars finished. To live lily lives, it seems, is the glory of an apostle, and the completing of their office and service for God. But this is directly opposite to the belly—over against the belly; and this makes the harder work. But yet so living is the way to make all that is done sweet-scented to those that be under this care. Covetousness makes a minister smell frownyish, and look more like a greedy dog than a minister of Jesus Christ. Judas had none of this lily-work, so his name stinks to this day. He that grows like the lily shall cast forth his scent like Lebanon. His branches shall spread, and his beauty shall be as the olive tree, and his smell as Lebanon.

Thus lived Christ, and thus the apostles next; nor can any other, as to this, live like or be compared to them. They coveted no man's silver or gold or apparel. They lived like lilies in the world, and did send forth their scent as Lebanon.

Thus you see of whom these pillars were a shadow, and what their height, their chapiters, their bowls, their nets, their chains, their pomegranates, their lily-work, did signify, and how all was most sweetly answered in the antitype. These were men of the first-rate—the apostles, I mean, were such.

CHAPTER XVIII.

Of the fashion of the Temple.

OF the length and breadth of the temple I shall say nothing; but as to the height thereof methinks I see something. The temple was higher than the pillars, and so is the church higher than the officers. I say, consider them singly as officers, though inferior as to gifts and office. For, as I said before of ministers in general, so now I say the same of the apostles, though as to office they were the highest, yet the temple is above them. Gifts and office make no men sons of God, and so they are but servants, though these were servants of the highest form. It is the church, as such, that is the lady, the queen, the bride, the Lamb's wife; and prophets, apostles, ministers, &c., are but servants, stewards, laborers, for her good.—Psalm xlv. 9; Rev. xix. 7; 2 Cor. iii. 5; iv. 1, 2.

As therefore the lady is above the servant, the queen above the steward, or the wife above all her husband's officers, so is the church, as such, above these officers. The temple was higher than the pillars.

Again, as the temple was highest, so it enlarged still upward; for as it ascended in height, so it was still wider and wider, even from the lowest chambers to the top. The first chambers were but five cubits broad, the middle one six, but the highest were seven cubits.—1 Kings vi. 5, 6. The temple, therefore, was round about above, some cubits wider than it was below; for there was an enlarging and ascending still upward to the side chambers; for the winding about was still upward, round about the house; therefore the breadth of the house was still upward, and so increased from the lowest chambers to the highest, by the midst.—Ezek. xii. 7. And this was to show us that God's true gospel temple, which is his church, should have its enlargedness of heart still upward, or most for spiritual and eternal things. Wherefore he saith, “Thy heart shall fear, and be enlarged;” that is, the most affected with “things above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God.”—Isa. xl. 5; Col. iii. 2, 3. Indeed, it is the nature of grace to enlarge still upward, and to make the heart widest for the things that are above. The temple was therefore narrowest downward, to show that a little of the earth, or this world, should serve the church of God. “And having food and raiment, let us therewith be content.”

Since then the temple was widest upward, let us imitate it, and have our conversation in heaven. Let our eyes, our ears, our hearts, be most for things above. Let us open our mouth (as the ground that is parched doth for the rain) for the things that are eternal.—Job xxix. 23; Psalm lxxxi. 10.

Observe, again, that the lowest parts of the temple were the narrowest parts of the temple; so those in the church who are nearest or most concerned with earth are the most narrow-spirited as to the things of God. But now let even such an one be taken up higher, above, to the uppermost parts of the temple, and there he will be enlarged and have the heart stretched out. For the temple, you see, was widest upward; the higher, the more it is enlarged. Paul, being caught up into paradise, could not but be there enlarged.—2 Cor. xii.

One may say of the fashion of the temple, as some say of a picture, It speaks. I say that its form and fashion speak. It says to all saints, to all the churches of Christ, Open your hearts for heaven; be ye enlarged upward.

I read not in the Scriptures of any house but this that was thus enlarged upward; nor is there anywhere, save only in the church of God, that which doth answer this similitude. All others are largest downward, and have the largest heart for earthly things. The church only is widest upward, and has its greatest enlargement toward heaven.

CHAPTER XIX.

Of the outward glory of the Temple.

I do also think that as to this there was a great expression in it; I mean, a voice of God; a voice that teacheth the New Testament church to carry even conviction in her outward usages. And besides this of its enlarging upward, there was such an outward beauty and glory put upon it as was alluring to beholders. The stones were curiously carved and excellently joined together. Its outward show was white and glittering, to the dazzling of the eyes of the beholders. Yea, the disciples themselves were taken with it, it was so admirable to behold. Hence it is said that they came to Christ to show him the buildings of the temple. “Master,” said they, “see what manner of stones and what buildings are here.”—Matt. xxiv. 1; Mark xiii. 1; Luke xxi. 5. And hence it is said that kings and the mighty of the earth were taken with the glory of it. “Because of thy temple at Jerusalem shall kings bring presents unto thee.”—Psa. lxxviii. 29, 31. Kings, Gentile kings, shall be so taken with the sight of the outward glory of it; for they were not suffered to go into it. No uncircumcised were admitted thither. It was therefore with the outward glory of it with which the beholders were thus taken.

Its enlarging upward, as that was to show us what the inward affections of christians should be (Col. iii. 1-3), so its curious outward adornment and beauty was a figure of the beauteous and holy conversation of the godly. And it is brave when any are made to say of the lives and conversation of saints, as they were made to say of the stones and outward buildings of the temple, Behold, what christians and what goodly conversations are here! I say it is brave when our light so shines before men that they, seeing our good works, shall glorify our Father which is in heaven.—Matt. v. 16. Hence this is called our adorning, wherewith we adorn the gospel, and that by which we beautify it.—Titus ii. 10. And without this, what is to be seen of the church of God? Her inside cannot be seen by the world, but her outside may. Now, her outside is very homely, and without all beauty, save that of the holy life. This only is her visible godliness. This “puts to silence the ignorance of foolish men.”

MARRIAGES.

JAN. 8th, 1889, by Elder A. B. Brees, at the residence of the bride, in Wapakonetta, Ohio, Mr. Andrew Welchance, of St. Johns, Ohio, and Mrs. Alvira Nixon, both of Auglaize Co., Ohio.

MEMORIALS.

(By Elk Hill Church, Spencer Co., Ky.)

As it has pleased the all-wise Ruler and Disposer of all beings and events to remove from our midst by death our well-beloved brother, James Shelburn, therefore we feel to say:

First. That in view of his faithfulness and zeal in the cause of our blessed Lord and Master, and of his unblemished character as a citizen of our commonwealth, and of his many christian virtues, truly a father in Israel is fallen.

Second. That a sounder or more consistent christian could hardly be found, taking the Bible or Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments as his only rule of faith and practice, thus being not only sound in faith, but also in practice; being ever ready to do what the Scriptures enjoin, “Do unto others as you would they should do unto you;” being upright and just in all his dealings with his fellow-men.

Third. That in the death of our beloved brother the commonwealth has lost a worthy citizen, the vicinity in which he lived has lost a kind and obliging neighbor, his children and grandchildren a most tender and loving parent, his mourning friends one who to them has been a friend indeed, and the little church of which he died a worthy member an almost irreparable loss.

Fourth. That as a church we can say to the sorrowing children, We fully sympathize with you in this your sad and sore bereavement; but sorrow not as they who have no hope, for father has only fallen asleep in Jesus, that blessed sleep, from which none ever wake to weep.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS—VERY DEAR BRETHREN IN CHRIST:—By the special request of our beloved and esteemed brother in Christ, it becomes my painful duty to send you for publication a notice of the death of three of his lovely and beloved children, which occurred as follows:

James Lazell Biggs, only son of James and Elizabeth F. Biggs, died Sept. 27th, 1888, aged fourteen years, eight months and sixteen days.

Rosa A., their next to oldest daughter, died Sept. 30th, 1888, aged sixteen years, six months and eleven days.

Bertha Anna, their youngest daughter, died Oct. 20th, 1888, aged seven years, two months and three days.

The disease was diphtheria. Thus in a very short space of time our dear brother was called to part with three beloved, dutiful, good and noble children, leaving but one, the oldest daughter; and it is not strange that he should feel as did good old Jacob when he said, "Me have ye bereaved of my children: Joseph is not, and Simeon is not, and ye will take Benjamin away: all these things are against me." But the Lord showed him that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose. Though our dear brother has been made to drink deep of the cup of affliction, yet the Lord is still good to him. Having buried the mother of those loved children, a member with him of the same church, two years ago last August, the Lord remembered him in mercy, and gave him again a good companion, a noble wife, a member with him of the same church. While we deeply sympathize with him in this hour of his affliction and bereavement, we do feel that we have more reason to weep for ourselves and for our children than for those dear ones that the Lord has taken from the evils of this corrupt and sinful world; for we doubt not that they have fallen asleep in Jesus, and now rest where the wicked cease from troubling, and where the weary are at rest. I was away at the time the first two were buried, but I am told that Elder L. T. Buffner preached a very able and comforting sermon on the occasion; The writer met with the family and friends when dear little Bertha was buried, and tried as best he could to point to some of the sweet and precious promises of God, designed by him to comfort them that mourn.

"How short the race our friends have run!"

Cut down in all their bloom.
The course but yesterday begun,
Now finished in the tomb."

May God bless this dear family, and all his dear children, in their afflictions, is our prayer, for Jesus' sake.

L. B. HANOVER.

SUNBURY, Ohio, Dec. 13, 1888.

DIED—At the residence of his son-in-law and daughter, David and Mary Snider, in Shelby Co., Ky., at two o'clock a. m. on the 22d day of November, 1888, brother James Shelburn, member of the Regular Old School Baptist Church of Elk Hill, Spencer Co., Ky.

He was taken ill after attending our meeting, on the fourth Sunday evening in July last, with what was thought to be derangement of the stomach and liver, which finally culminated about four or five weeks before his death in progressive paralysis, from which he became a great sufferer, causing at times mental derangement; though when able to control his mind he would speak of Jesus, his precious Savior, as the only name given under heaven whereby poor sinners like himself must be saved. Brother Shelburn was born Feb. 2d, 1806, so that at the time of his death he was eighty-two years, nine months and twenty days old. He was a native of Shelby Co., Ky. His father, Augustine Shelburn, and his mother, whose maiden name was Jane Bush, were natives of Virginia, and came to Kentucky as pioneers after the close of the war of the Revolution, he (his father) having served as a private under General Gates. Brother Shelburn could therefore amuse and entertain one for hours with stories and anecdotes of the primitive or pioneer days of our state. He was married after reaching mature age to Perlina Asby, of Spencer Co., Ky., a most estimable lady, with whom he lived happily for more than forty years, until it was the pleasure of the Lord to separate them by death. Nine children blessed this union, five sons and four daughters, six of whom survive him, one daughter and five sons. We have not the date to point us to the time when brother Shelburn first joined the church, but suppose it to be somewhere between fifty and sixty years ago. He first joined the church at Salem, in Shelby Co., Ky., and remained with her until she went off into the Missionary delusion. He afterward, about forty years ago, joined the Old Baptists at old Beech Creek, in the same county, and remained there until he with eleven others took letters of dismission, June 26th, 1879, and constituted our church (Elk Hill), where he remained a sound, consistent and faithful member (as he ever had been) until it pleased the merciful Lord to call him home to his reward.

Thus lived and died this faithful servant. He was not ashamed to speak the name of Jesus his Savior, nor did he blush to own his cause; so much so that all who knew him would say, "Uncle Jimmie Shelburn is a christian." An old worldling remarked to the humble writer since his death, "One of the strongest pillars of your church is gone." I replied, "Yes, but he is gone home to receive the welcome plaudit, 'Well done, thou good and faithful servant! enter thou into the joys of thy Lord.'"

He leaves five sons, one daughter, many grandchildren, and numerous other relatives, neighbors and friends, together with the little church at Elk Hill, to mourn their loss, but not as those who have no hope, for we trust that our loss is his eternal gain. "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord."

W. T. RITTER.

DIED—Near Bastrop, Louisiana, Oct. 11th, 1888, our beloved sister, Mrs. Nancy Hayden, wife of our dear brother, Elisha Hayden.

Sister Hayden was born in Mississippi, May 8th, 1824. Her parents moved to Louisiana when she was young, and there she grew to womanhood, and married at the age of eighteen years. A few years later they moved to Bastrop, where she raised her family (having joined the church previously), and there remained until her death, a lovable sister, mother, wife and neighbor, there being never a blemish on her character in any of the relations of life.

She leaves a kind husband and several affectionate children (two of whom are members of the church), together with all the brotherhood and very many friends (indeed, all who knew her), to mourn their loss; but we all feel that our loss is her infinite gain.

May the gracious Spirit of our God soothe the sorrows of the bereaved ones, and give us all sweet submission to his most holy will, and enable us all to ascribe the praise to his holy name. Amen.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date, this date denotes the time at which your subscription expires, and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

"THIS MAN HATH DONE NOTHING AMISS."

(Luke xxiii. 41.)

"He did nothing amiss!" O how sweet is the sound
To a sinner who knows in himself can't be found
A single good thing, either word, deed or thought,
And has daily to say, "I've not done what I ought!"
Of whom is it spoken? Of Jesus the Lord.
Though one with the Father, he took flesh and blood,
Came under the law, his loved bride to redeem,
That she might be spotless and comely in him.
He looked through the future long ere man was made;
He said, "I will suffer and bleed in her stead.
To prove myself able to put sin away,
I'll live, O my Father, thy law to obey."
In due time he came to this sin-stricken earth,
The Highest o'ershadowed—the virgin gave birth!
Thus God in our nature was seen in the man
Made like to his brethren, according to plan.
How blameless his life was, what tongue can describe?
Not a jot of God's law did he e'er put aside.
He did "nothing amiss" from the time he was born,
While he trod this low vale, till he laid his life down.
O come, then, poor sinner, thy fears cast away;
Look not at thyself; Christ says, "Look upon me!
My blood shall absolve thee, my righteousness clothe;
In me thou art perfect, my fair one, my love!"
Blest Spirit of truth! breathe the precious words home
To the soul of that sinner who feels all undone;
Whose heart thou hast broken and filled with deep grief;
Reveal the Lord Jesus, and thus give relief!
He did "nothing amiss!" Can we ever grow tired
Of admiring the work of the Incarnate Word?
In his pure obedience, through his precious blood,
We have freedom, access, and are made nigh to God.
We sin when asleep, and we sin when awake,
Beset with the evil we strive to forsake;
But with Jesus, our Surety, no fault could
be found;
Thus covenant mercies to us may abound.
The Father smiles on us! With him he's well pleas'd!
In Christ we're accepted—in Jesus we're raised

To the throne of his glory, and there we shall trace
Forever and ever the wonders of grace!
O shout, then, ye ransomed! O lift him on high,
Who did "naught amiss," and who lived here to die!
Let heaven's vaulted arches his praises proclaim,
Who passed by the angels, but came to save men!
To the three-one Jehovah all glory is due (Through eternity's ages the theme we'll pursue).
He planned and he purposed, performed and revealed;
He elected, redeemed, converted, and sealed.
O help us, ye cherubim, seraphim bright!
Tell, tell of his wisdom, his love, and his might!
Fall prostrate before him and boast in his name;
He only is worthy! Alleluia! Amen!

CORRESPONDENCE.

CHRISTMAS.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETH-REN:—This day is recognized by many as the anniversary of the birth of our Savior. Whether or not the twenty-fifth day of December is truly the anniversary of that greatest event ever recorded by either the sacred or profane historian, is not a question that I am now disposed to discuss. We find no command within the lids of the sacred volume which requires the true followers of our once meek and lowly, but now exalted Lord, to celebrate in any way that day, the day in which he laid aside the glory he had with the Father before the world was, and took upon himself that body which was prepared him. As the sacred volume is silent on that subject, it behooves the children of God to keep that day to the Lord, but not more so than all other days. The sublime glories that burst forth upon a sin-cursed world when the angel of the Lord announced his advent to the shepherds who watched their flock by night, present to us a subject of such superlative glory that when we attempt to meditate upon it we are lost in wonder and astonishment. The condescension of our glorious Lord, the mystery of the union of God and man, is beyond the reach of human thought, and its contemplation causes us to exclaim, in the language of the apostle, "Great is the mystery of godliness! God was manifest in the flesh." The apostle has said to the saints for their comfort while sojourning in this land of sin and sorrow, "Ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor, that ye through his poverty might be rich." Yes, and his own sacred lips have declared to you,

"The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests; but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head."
When you remember this you are lost in more than astonishment, if more could be; for you know that all his sorrows, afflictions and sufferings during the thirty-three years of his earthly pilgrimage were for your redemption, and to fit you for the enjoyment of the inheritance prepared for you, to whom he will say, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you before the foundation of the world."

But the sacred historian says,
"And there were in the same country shepherds abiding in the field, keeping watch over their flock by night.
And, lo, the angel of the Lord came upon them, and the glory of the Lord shone round about them: and they were sore afraid. And the angel said unto them, Fear not: for, behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Savior, which is Christ the Lord." It will be observed that when that announcement was made to those shepherds they were watching their flock by night.
They were attending to their secular affairs, not looking for nor expecting that they would be the first on earth who would hear that glorious news, those glad tidings, "Unto you is born this day in the city of David a Savior." How was it with you, dear saint, when you first realized the need of a Savior? It was night to you; for "darkness covered the earth, and gross darkness the people." Then you, like those shepherds, were afraid. How were you engaged when that announcement was first made to you? Your answer is, I was engaged in the affairs of this world. I, like our first parent, am of the earth, earthly; and when the glory of the Lord shone about me it was that light which shineth in darkness, and the darkness comprehended it not.
When that light shone in you it disclosed to your astonished vision the loathsome pollutions of sin that permeated your corrupt heart and nature, which caused you to adopt this language of the apostle, "O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" For your comfort that infinitely important question is answered by that heavenly messenger who announced to the astonished shepherds his advent to earth in these cheering words,

"Unto you is born this day in the city of David a Savior, which is Christ the Lord." The prophet, viewing in prophetic vision this great and glorious event, breaks forth in this language, "Unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given: and the government shall be upon his shoulder: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The mighty God, The everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace."—Isa. ix. 6. His coming was not attended by the pageantry and pomp of earthly courts, nor heralded by thrilling martial music, for his kingdom is not of this world; but the prophet of the Lord beheld afar off his advent, and announced it in language which all the wisdom of earth has failed (and will ever fail) to comprehend.
He in prophetic vision viewed him in his exalted and glorious character as the God-man-Mediator, the glorious One in whom all fullness dwells.
The apostle says, "In him dwelleth all the fullness of the Godhead bodily." The prophet declares him to be "The everlasting Father." And the psalmist, when addressing him, says,
"Lord, thou hast been our dwelling place in all generations;" "even from everlasting to everlasting, thou God."
Then he in whom all fullness dwells is from everlasting to everlasting.
Glory to his exalted name! He is "head over all things to the church, which is his body, the fullness of him that filleth all in all. Justice and truth go before his face; and in his all-exalted character as the Redeemer of his people shine resplendently his justice, eternity, omnipotence, immutability, truth and love. Viewing him in his truly exalted character, in whom is the perfection of holiness, you, dear saint, exclaim from the depths of your heart, "Blessing, and honor, and glory, and power, be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb forever and ever."
And you are ready to join the heavenly hosts, praising God, and saying,
"Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men."

When the glory of the Lord shone round about those shepherds they were sore afraid. They heard a voice from on high which announced to them the fulfillment of the promise made to Jacob at Bethel, "In thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed." Jacob said, "Surely the Lord is in this place, and I knew it not." He was afraid, and those shepherds were afraid; but their fears were dispelled when the heavenly messenger said to them, "Fear not; for, lo, I bring you good tidings of great joy." The promise both to Jacob and those shepherds was sufficient to have dispelled their fears; but they did not rely fully on those promises. Although the Lord said to Jacob, "Behold, I am with thee, and will keep thee in all places whither thou goest," yet he showed a want of confidence in those promises when he said, "If God will be with me, and will keep me in this way that I go, and will give me bread to eat, and raiment to put on, so that I come again to my father's house in peace, then shall the Lord be my God." He put in a condition as to the Lord being his God. The shepherds desired to know more than had been revealed to them by the heavenly messenger. They said, "Let us now go even unto Bethlehem, and see this thing which is come to pass, which the Lord hath made known unto us." This is all in accord with the experience of God's people in this age, as well as in past ages. They pray for greater manifestations of his grace. They desire to know more of the sublime glories of the great plan of life and salvation through him whose advent to earth was announced by the angel of the Lord, "Unto you is born this day in the city of David a Savior." It will be observed that the language used by the angel was, "Unto you"—unto those shepherds. We learn that anciently the vocation of shepherds was a very humble one, and their flocks were dependent upon the bounties of heaven to sustain them. The history of this great event does not negative that idea. They were keeping watch over their flock by night. They were isolated from a busy world, yea, even from their friends and families, by night. Then the advent of our glorious Lord was first announced to men cut off from all places of honor, from social intercourse with the busy world. But low as those shepherds were, they were permitted to hear the sweetest music that ever thrilled and charmed mortal ears; for "suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host, praising God, and saying, Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men." Still more, his coming was not amidst scenes of splendor, not in a lofty palace decorated with silver, gold, precious stones and gaudy trappings; but he who is King of kings and Lord of lords was found by the shepherds wrapped in swaddling clothes and lying in a manger, the habitation of the ox, where he doth eat straw. Then surely he who was rich, for our sakes became poor. He who was the Creator of the vast universe, when he came to earth was denied by vain, sinful man the lowest hospitalities of civilized life, and was found by the shepherds among the lower grades of animal life. The prophet, viewing him in his humiliation, breaks forth in this language, "He is despised and rejected of men; a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief: and we hid as it were our faces from him; he was despised, and we esteemed him not. Surely he hath borne our griefs and carried our sorrows: yet we did esteem him stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted." "He was taken from prison and from judgment: and who shall declare his generation? for he was cut off out of the land of the living: for the transgression of my people was he stricken."—Isaiah liii. Then his great condescension, humiliation and suffering were for the transgression of his people. He had done no violence, neither was any deceit in his mouth. Then surely "he was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities: the chastisement of our peace was upon him; and with his stripes we are healed." The pronouns our and we, used by the prophet, personate the same people to whom the angel referred when he said to Joseph, "She shall bring forth a son, and thou shalt call his name Jesus; for he shall save his people from their sins." The prophet Zechariah, viewing afar off in prophetic vision the complete fulfillment of that glorious promise, "He shall save his people from their sins," breaks forth in this language, "As for thee also, by the blood of thy covenant, I have sent forth thy prisoners out of the pit wherein is no water." The apostle says, "By his own blood he entered in once into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us." It was his blood shed upon Calvary which was the blood of the everlasting covenant, by which he obtained eternal redemption for his people, and sent forth his prisoners out of the pit wherein is no water. Ah, dear saint, earth affords no springs of living water that will wash out the polluted stains of sin. Nothing but the blood of Jesus, which cleanseth from all sin, will remove those pollutions, and array you in "fine linen clean and white, which is the righteousness of saints." For your comfort the prophet says, "Turn you to the stronghold, ye prisoners of hope: even to-day do I declare that I will render double unto thee." Isaiah says to these same people, "prisoners of hope," whom Jesus has saved from their sins, "Comfort ye, comfort ye my people, saith your God: speak ye comfortably to Jerusalem, and cry unto her that her warfare is accomplished, that her iniquity is pardoned; for she hath received of the Lord's hand double for all her sins." Those people had violated the law, the penalty of which was death. "The soul that sinneth it shall die." They were led captive by the devil at his will, and hence were prisoners; but, glory to God's exalted name, he by the blood of the everlasting covenant hath sent forth those prisoners out of the pit wherein is no water. Not only did he redeem them from the penalty of the law, but he is made unto them righteousness. Then they, having no righteousness of their own, are made partakers of his holiness. The apostle says, "For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them." Speaking of the grace given them, he says, "Ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear; but ye have received the spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father. The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God: and if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ." Then surely those prisoners of hope have received of the Lord's hand double for all their sins. They are redeemed from under the curse of the law. They are sanctified by God the Father, preserved in Jesus Christ, and called. They are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the last time. They are heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ; heirs to an inheritance which is incorruptible, undefiled, and fadeth not away. All is secured to them in and through their glorious Lord. Then they are prepared by grace divine to join the heavenly hosts in sweet accents of praise to his exalted name, saying, Glory to God in the highest, peace on earth, good will to men. Then, dear saint, "Set your affection on things above, not on things on the earth. For ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory."—Col. iii. 2-4. This is the highest thought, the most earnest and exalted wish and desire, that has found a lodgment in your minds and hearts since you have been enabled to hope that the glory of the Lord has shone about you, and you have seen the King, the Lord of hosts.

To you who may read these rambling thoughts they are presented as a Christmas gift, from one who daily realizes himself to be less than the least of all saints, if one at all.

H. COX.

WARWICK, N. Y., Dec. 27, 1888.

ELDER B. JENKINS—DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST:—Inclosed please find one dollar which I would like Elder Hassell to have. I feel very sorry for him, and I do sincerely hope that the amount can be raised. I wish the dear Lord would put it into the heart of every Primitive Baptist to do what they could for him.

I have the feeling that I would like to write you; and why I should, I cannot tell, for I know I have not the ability to write. For weeks I have felt like writing you, and then I would think, How foolish in me. What can I write that would interest Elder Jenkins? But as time goes on the desire grows stronger, and I now feel that I must write. What I am to say I do not know, for no one feels their nothingness, their emptiness and weakness, more than I. I do hope and trust the dear Lord will guide my pen and direct my thoughts, and I will write only what he puts in my heart.

I was somewhat disappointed when you were to New York in October, in my not being able to attend meeting on Sunday. I was rejoiced when sister Hobbs so kindly invited me to remain with her over Sunday, as I had had the desire for years to attend the Ebenezer Church. But just when I thought I could go, I was taken ill. I feel the privilege was more than I deserved, and for some cause the Lord denied me it. Our ways are not his ways. O that I might be submissive to his holy will, and feel to say at all times and in all trials, Thy will be done, O Lord, not mine. I can feel to say, "The steps that I take, and the station I fill, My Father determined and wrote in his will."

I had many trials while in the city. One day after I had been to the eye infirmary, and the doctor pronounced my case a hopeless, incurable one, and said there was no help for me, it was indeed a bitter disappointment. My last hope was blighted. No one but God knew the anguish of my sinful heart. For a time I was left alone, and I can truly say I felt alone; for never in my life did I feel so lonely. I felt I was in the great city of New York alone, and without friends. I wished that some passage of Scripture would present itself to my mind to comfort me; but none came. Then I wished I might feel Christ's presence with me, and his almighty arm supporting me. That was denied me too. Then I cried out, "O my God! why hast thou forsaken me?" I spent the remainder of the day in weeping. At last night came, and I retired; but there seemed to be no rest for my aching heart, and for hours I lay tossing about on my pillows, when all at once it came to my mind how quick I was to call on the precious Savior when I was in deep distress and sorrow; that after I had looked to every other source first, and when all failed, then I looked to the dear Savior. I did find comfort, and at last fell into a quiet, peaceful sleep. I was like a little babe soothed to sleep on its mother's breast. "God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble." O! I wonder that he does give us strength and hear our cry when we go everywhere else, look to every other source, before we go to our dearest and best Friend, who sticketh closer than a brother, and who loves us at all times. His love changeth not; it is the same to-day and forever. If he once loved us, he loves us to the end. He is not changeable, like us, poor mortals.

"The soul that on Jesus hath leaned for repose, I will not, I will not, desert to his foes; That soul, though all hell should endeavor to shake, I'll never, no, never, no, never forsake."

I felt my weakness and helplessness, and also felt that I could not raise my finger without my Father's will. I feel I have been taught a great lesson by the trials and sufferings I was made to pass through. My faith has been made stronger. The dear Lord has chosen his children in the furnace of affliction, and they are to have tribulation while in this world. I do think our dark and trying times are for our own good; yea, they work for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. If we are without chastisement, then we are bastards, and not sons; for whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth. "All things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose." I feel that our path is marked out for us, and we are to have just so much affliction and trial while in this life. The Lord measures it out for us, and he knows just how much we need. Every day and in every trial he gives us strength to bear it. Then, and not until then, do we realize the blessed promise, "My grace is sufficient for you."

"Thy way, O God, is in the sea,
Thy paths I cannot trace,
Nor comprehend the mystery
Of thy unbounded grace."

If our life were smooth, and our path without thorns, would we look to the precious Savior and call on him for help? I fear not. I am afraid we would cling to this world. There is nothing here for us but sin, sorrow and affliction. At times I get so tired of this world, sin and my wretched self, that I feel to cry out for home, for rest, for heaven. We know this earth is not our home; we are only here for a little season; soon we will be called away, and, I trust, to that bright and happy home, where there is no sin nor sorrow, nothing but love and peace, that has been prepared for the saints of God. "In my Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you." How many promises there are for the children of God! At times I feel that I cannot claim one. How do I know that I am one of the little ones? I know it is written, "We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren." I feel that I do love the brethren; and if I have any home, it is with the Old Baptists. At times my hope seems so little that I almost lose sight of it, and have felt that I had been deceived; but, the worst of all, I feared I had deceived the church; that I had grasped the shadow and missed the substance. I know the heart is desperately wicked, and deceitful above all things. I am a mystery to myself. There is nothing of me, but sin, from the crown of my head to the soles of my feet. The good that I would, I do not; but the evil which I would not, that I do. Paul said, "But I see another law in my members, warring against the law of my mind, and bringing me into captivity to the law of sin which is in my members. O wretched man that I am! Who shall deliver me from the body of this death? I thank God through Jesus Christ our Lord. So then, with the mind I myself serve the law of God, but with the flesh the law of sin." When I can look back to my experiences, and see the way I was led, and the way I was brought out of the wilderness, as I trust, into the marvelous light, my hope is strengthened. I cannot but feel that it was the Lord's work, and nothing I did myself. As faint as the little hope is, I would not be willing to part with it for worlds. I have been a member for eight years, and a very unworthy one, too. I never can forget the day I went before the church and told them what I hoped the Lord had done for me. I experienced such a peace of mind, that which the world cannot give nor take away. A month from that time I was baptized. In the meantime I had a feeling I could not describe. I could not feel just as I thought I ought. I had this feeling until I got to the water, when it left me, and I felt I was surely following Christ's example. If I ever felt his presence with me, I did then. It was indeed a glorious day, and for three days it seemed to me I was the happiest being on earth. I thought there never would a cloud obscure my sky.

"Little then myself I knew,
Little thought of Satan's power;
Now I find their words were true,
Now I feel the stormy hour.
Sin has put my joys to flight,
Sin has changed my day to night."

The clouds came, the doubts and the fears. But this one thing I do know, if I am saved at all it will be through God's great mercy, and nothing I merit myself.

"And if my soul were sent to hell,
His righteous law approves it well."

I see my letter is quite lengthy, and I had better close. I do not know why it is my feelings have been led to write you. I trust I have written nothing I ought not, and that you will receive it in the spirit I hope it is written, that of Christian love and fellowship.

From an unworthy sister, if one at all, and the very least of all,
MARCELIA THOMPSON.

"UNDERSTANDEST thou what thou readest?"—Acts viii. 30.

It is a great matter indeed that we understand what we read. We cannot be instructed by reading, unless we can get at and understand what is contained in that which we read. Hence one of old was made to say, "How can I, except some man should guide me?"

Brother Jenkins, since reading brother Thorne's letter, and your reply, on the subject of teaching, many things have come into my mind in reference to understanding what we read. In the first place, it seems to me necessary that we possess wisdom, or that preparation of heart which qualifies us to understand and receive instruction, in order that we may be instructed. With this blessing there is always more or less desire to be taught, an inquiring after truth, and as to what is truth, and as to whether we know the truth, and a sense of lack of knowledge. Hence the more one is taught, the more appears that is beyond their capacity to understand. We know in nature, or in reference to the knowledge of things pertaining to nature, that the capacity or qualification to be taught or instructed is entirely of the Lord, independent of all training or teaching that can be offered. All the best teachers in the world cannot impart knowledge to one who is entirely destitute of wisdom or capacity to receive and understand. Now, if the apostle in speaking of "the natural man," who "receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God," means the man as he is born into the world, possessing no qualification to understand anything that is not of this world (as we think he does), then it seems clear that in order for him to be instructed in spirit, or in things pertaining to the Spirit, he must first be qualified to receive. Then if the statutes, commands and ordinances are to be observed and obeyed in spirit, they must first have spiritual capacity. Indeed I cannot understand that there is any command, statute or ordinance to be observed or obeyed by any but those who are thus qualified or blessed with wisdom from above. Under the new covenant all the blessings are spiritual. As none but national Israel were under those laws as given to them, so spiritual Israel, or Jerusalem from above, are the only ones that have any sabbath to keep. One cannot be required to keep that which they do not have. "If ye love me, keep my commandments." There is no one else addressed, and there is no question as to our keeping his laws and ordinances but that, Do I love them? And we cannot keep them in any other way than in love. We mistake the keeping of them if we have no love for them. There is no law against love. Love is the fulfilling of the law.

But in reference to teaching, there is no doubt about our being helpful to each other in many ways; and, in a sense, we teach each other many things; but, as we generally say, it is something we already knew, but we did not so well understand before as now. Our pure mind has been stirred up. I do not think there is any doubt but that some know things that others do not know; but we all know what we have learned by and through experience; and experience is something no one can impart to another. For instance, you know something that you have learned in this way. You know for yourself and not another. I meet you, have the privilege of conversing with you, and you tell me plainly what you have learned. You know it is truth. I may not have had that peculiar exercise of mind, and hence do not know; yet I believe you tell the truth; but I only know as you have told me. I have heard with the hearing of the ear, but mine eye hath not seen; and I never can know as you know, until the Lord opens the eyes of my understanding, as he has yours. Yet there is much instruction in conversing with each other, and in hearing the gospel preached; but we are really instructed as light is given us from above; and that is because wisdom is ours.

I am glad that brother Thorne's letter and your reply are before the people. It seems to me there is much matter for thought in both. I suppose brother Thorne knows of some Old School Baptists who send their children to school to be taught religion. I do not, and should be sorry if I did, and equally sorry if I knew any Old School Baptist that was trying to teach them such things at home; for certainly all they can learn by such teaching will be what the Pharisees knew.

Children should, if possible, be taught better at home than to want to go where people profess to know so much about spiritual things, and yet know nothing.

I have scribbled these rambling thoughts because I felt impressed to do so.

JOSEPH L. STATON.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Jan. 13, 1889.

ELDER WM. L. BEEBE—DEAR BROTHER:—Recently I received a letter from one of our members at Southampton, who a year ago moved to the northwest corner of the United States. He is one of our youngest members in years and profession. Some of our church have desired it printed in the SIGNS, for the benefit of scattered ones. I inclose it. Use your judgment, and all will be well. Last evening I received a letter from your daughter, Ella McColl. She says she "feels so alone." "Indeed we often do feel that we are dwelling in a wilderness. We have but one beside ourselves, that we know of, who understands the truth. Ah! how the natural man rebels against exalting Jehovah and abasing man. I know I love those in whom the Spirit of Christ is manifest; but in my daily walk and conversation no one could detect the slightest resemblance to one who wished to be like him."

I have quoted so much of her precious letter, to show how in fellowship she is with us all, trusting, doubting, hoping, fearing. My sympathy goes out strongly for those who through force of circumstances are separated from those of like faith; perhaps more so since I have found loneliness in a crowd to be so lonely. In theory we believe the eye of the omniscient Jehovah, who neither slumbers nor sleeps, is watching every one who trusts in him; and yet I am so weak and faithless, I often fear lest the tempter might get the mastery of some isolated one.

Wishing you and yours a "Happy New Year"—happy in the love of him who careth for you, I remain your sister in hope, MARGARET B. BANES.

DEERFIELD, Montana Ter., Sept. 22, 1888.

MISS MAGGIE BANES—DEAR SISTER:—I received your kind and much appreciated letter some time ago, and should have answered it at once; but I felt as though I was too dark, and too much closed up, and I have been laboring in darkness most of the time since. Sometimes there comes a glorious little ray of sunshine in my way, and I feed on it for several days. When I first came away from the east I was alone in body, but not in spirit. It was, I think I can say, for months that the Lord was pleased to reveal his presence to me, a poor worm of the dust, as I felt myself to me. I was alone through the day quite a little after I came here, but I think I can say that it was the brightest season I ever passed. It was a good while that I seemed to be above this world, and I think I can say, like Paul, that during that time I saw things that were unspeakable. I did not try to explain my feelings to any one here, for I knew they could not understand them, excepting they had experienced the love of God in their heart. The only one I could confer with then was our holy Savior; and surely if ever I had earnest prayers, it was then. All day long it seemed that the Lord was pleased to fill my heart and soul with prayer and praise. There were lots of different varieties of flowers on the prairie, and the many birds and their songs seemed to set forth to me then the perfection and beauty of our God more fully than I had ever seen before. Passages of Scripture would come to my mind, and those old hymns never sounded better. Surely it was a foretaste of heaven. But since then I have gone down pretty low, I think nearly to the bottom; and if it were not for those blessed springs in the great desert, we would give up all hope. I do not know, but probably I am not like any one else. After enjoying the presence of our glorious Savior, and having the evidence that we have at those seasons, then the tempter comes, and says, "You are deceived, and are deceiving others." Then I will take up the Bible, but can find no comfort; and the hymns that nearly always were so good, do not then have the same meaning to me; and I commence to think that if I do not find one of those springs soon, I must give up in despair. But we always are rescued before we sink. We poor mortals, or rather I, have so little faith. When his presence is with and about me, then I am made to praise his holy name; but as soon as the tempter comes, I am ready to doubt. If it were not that I could look back to those precious seasons, I would almost give up in despair at times. I would like very much to see all of those dear old saints at Southampton. Please remember me to all the brethren, sisters and inquiring friends.

I remain your brother in hope of a glorious resurrection,
THEO. HOGELAND.

RAMER, Ala., Jan. 6, 1889.

DEAR EDITORS:—Apologies are a very poor dish, yet I feel like I should say something in that line; for I once read, and also wrote for, the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. I have not written for the public in some time, for I became confused when I read the different opinions of our ministers. I could not see who had made them to differ, as they all professed to be taught of the Lord. Financial pressure and the great confusions, together caused me to quit writing for publication. I write many letters, only to lay them aside. This may fare the same fate. I hope it will, if the Lord has not required it at my hands. My feeble efforts in the past have been as bread cast upon the waters, of which I hope I gather occasionally. Many precious brethren and sisters request that I should write. If there is one little lamb in all the flock that I can feed, it is enough. Although it is a great cross for me to write for publication, as I said, there is a propelling power, which sister Phillips once explained more to my satisfaction than I can. Suffice it to say, I hope that the graces of the Spirit were treasured in Christ before the foundation of the world, "according as he hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before him in love: having predestinated us unto the adoption of children [By the preacher? No.] by Jesus Christ to himself, according to the good pleasure of his will."—Eph. i. 4, 5. Why should there be objection when we say that God did predestinate all things, since all agree that God works all things after the counsel of his own will, and none dare say, Jehovah, what doest thou? Hath not the potter power over the clay, of the same lump to make one vessel unto honor and another unto dishonor? Men do look very simple to preach the doctrine of the Bible, and then try to excuse God for teaching it. This is what confused me so that I did not know what I did believe. But I was determined to know nothing among you save Jesus Christ; and I do hope the Lord has taught me, for I tried to learn it, but could not. For want of room, I will cite you to Job i. 12. I do hope it has pleased God to give these things to me; but the purpose is yet unknown to me, and therefore I will withhold it at present. If dear brother Purfoy should see this, I hope he will kindly remember me. I have felt so keenly his mild reproof when we last met, that I would write to him if I could.

Dear brethren, go on preaching the gospel of Christ. You become the enemy of many because you tell them the truth. I do thank God for the gift of such ministers as yourself, brethren Lively, Curry, and many others, too numerous to mention. Brother Curry, though a babe in the ministry, is highly esteemed as a servant of God here. Baptists here are greatly revived.

For want of space I quit. Please correct this, if it is published. Ever remember me at the throne of grace; for if a saint at all, the least of all.

L. E. SELLERS.

MACOMB, Ill., Jan. 16, 1889.

ELDER WM. L. BEEBE—DEAR BROTHER:—I thank you heartily for complying with my request for your views on the spiritual applications or uses of leaven as it is spoken of in the holy Scriptures. I have recently read your editorial in the SIGNS of January 9th. Our views are in harmony as to the idea you advance, that leaven is used to illustrate doctrine or teaching, whether good or bad, true or false. The silent, enlivening and quickening influence of the Spirit of God, and the sweet and reviving effects of gospel truth, have, do and will leaven or quicken the whole lump or body of Christ; the kingdom of heaven in three measures, patriarchal, legal and gospel dispensations, and each member of that body or kingdom, in "spirit and soul and body."—1 Thess. v. 23; Rom. viii. 11. But the false and bewitching doctrines of Pharisees, &c., have a corrupting effect, and we are warned to beware of such doctrine and such men.

The reason, brother Beebe, that I requested your views on this subject is this: I never knew till a short time ago that any of our brethren differed from my view of the subject, but have found that an aged and able fellow-laborer in the gospel holds that leaven in the Scriptures everywhere represents false doctrine, corruption, &c. This difference about a word, however, does not weaken my fellowship and high esteem for my aged brother. I prefer unleavened bread in the communion. Success to the SIGNS.

Your brother,

I. N. VANMETER.

DERMOT, Kan., Jan. 15, 1889.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN IN CHRIST, AS I HOPE:—I have been a member of the Old School, Primitive Baptists for fifteen years, and for the last ten years have been almost destitute of hearing any of that order preach. I joined the Powder Spring Gap Church, in Union County, Tennessee, and was baptized by Elder Matthew McDonald. I lived near that church about five years, during which time I enjoyed myself well. I then moved to Kentucky, and did not hear an Old Baptist preach, except when I went to Tennessee. I remained there about eight years, and then moved to Stevens County, Kansas, where I now live. I was one of the first settlers here. There are a few Old Baptists settled around here, but we have no preacher of our faith and order, and I do not know that one lives anywhere near. If there is one, I would like to hear from him through the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, or have him visit us. If there are any in Kansas, I would love to hear from them, as we feel very lonely. We hope the Lord will send us a minister of the gospel, and that Zion may travail and bring forth in this western country. We have six or eight members in this section who hold letters of dismission from churches of our faith and order in Tennessee, and we would love to be organized into a body.

Yours in hope of eternal life,

JOHN COOK.

SOUTHAMPTON, Pa., Jan. 2, 1889.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—Sister Alma F. McNaughten tells me that the cloth bound edition of sister Mary Parker's book is exhausted. She has one hundred and fifty of the paper bound yet on hand, the price of which is reduced to fifty cents, to which those ordering by mail will add eight cents for postage. Eight hundred of the cloth bound have been sold, and all of the proceeds, after the cost of publication was paid, have been for the benefit of our dear afflicted sister, whose terrible disease, I learn, is of late greatly aggravated. The Lord has indeed sorely afflicted her in this life, but he has greatly blessed her in spiritual things, and will sustain her under all her pain and trial. Sister McNaughten has received nothing for her labor, but has been financially a loser. With her it has been a labor of love, and such shall be blessed in their deeds. Those wishing the book will address her at Pleasantville, Fairfield Co., Ohio.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—Another year of our subscription to your valuable paper, the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, has rolled by, and we should have remitted sooner; but owing to sickness we have been unable. Please forgive the delay, and accept our thanks for sending the paper. You will see that our little club is broken up. May the Lord reconcile us to every event of providence while passing through this world of sin and sorrow, and enable us in spirit to say with the poet,

"My times of sorrow and of joy,
Great God, are in thy hand;
My choicest comforts come from thee,
And go at thy command."

We esteem the SIGNS OF THE TIMES very much, and wish it every success; and may you, dear editors, long be spared to comfort the little ones by publishing it in the future, as in the past, a bold and fearless advocate of the truth.

I am, as I hope, your unworthy little brother,

WILLIAM HASTINGS.

PRAYING WITH THE SPIRIT.

"AFTER this manner therefore pray ye: Our Father which art in heaven, Hallowed be thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread. And forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors. And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. For thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, forever. Amen."—Matt. vi. 9-13.

The subject of prayer is of inestimable importance to the saints from their earliest consciousness of helplessness and need until they are released from this mortal state. When they see their just condemnation as sinners, they necessarily cry unto God for mercy. This is the first true prayer that is ever uttered by any sinner. It is also exclusively confined to those who are taught of God to know the exceeding sinfulness of sin which has wrought death in them. To such perishing characters the utterance of a form of words does not constitute prayer. The quickened sinner may have been taught in infancy to say the words quoted above from the lips of our Lord, and he may have thought that their repetition was prayer; but now they seem too sacred for his sinful lips to utter, and their use by him even in his ignorance of their infinite holiness, now appears more like blasphemous mockery than a real prayer. In his despair and agony of soul groans and tears of distress are wrung from his heart, and without daring to hope for relief he prays, "God, be merciful to me, a sinner!" This is his first prayer, although he may have been trained to "say prayers" from his earliest childhood.

Those hypocrites whose object in praying is "that they may be seen of men," have their reward in the display of their religious zeal before their fellow-mortals. The praise of men is that reward. This is not the object of that prayer which is indited by the Spirit, and which is heard and answered in the heaven of the favor of God. In the manner of prayer enjoined by our Lord upon his disciples, the first expression necessarily requires that they must be governed by that faith which is the fruit of the Spirit. Without the witness of that faith it is impossible for any sinner to claim the relationship by which he would be justified in calling the God of heaven his Father. The same faith must enable him to witness that God is in heaven. "For he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him."—Heb. xi. 6. "No man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost."—1 Cor. xii. 3. By the power of that faith they are made to reverence the name of the Lord as expressed in the petition, "Hallowed be thy name." The same direction of the Spirit of God is manifest in the whole of this pattern which our Lord gave for the instruction of his disciples.

"Thy kingdom come." Upon this expression much has been said and written by gifted ministers of our Lord; and many have contemplated its significance greatly to the profit of themselves and their readers. The subject has also been much distorted and perverted by worldly teachers, who have assumed to be authorized by it to attempt the work of converting the world in order that they might assist the Lord in the development of his kingdom. Indeed, the principal support of all the systems of false religion is their professed efficiency in the work of bringing about the fulfillment of the end desired in this petition. It would seem that even reason should see the inconsistency of praying for that which they feel competent to effect by their own power; but a further consideration of the subject still more clearly exposes the absurdity of such an understanding of this language of our Lord.

In the inspired Scriptures the "Kingdom of God" is clearly defined. "For the kingdom of God is not meat and drink; but righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost."—Rom. xii. 17. This kingdom is revealed in its relation to the whole church of Christ collectively, and also in its development in the saints individually. In both these manifestations, the Spirit of Christ, which dwells in every subject of grace, produces the desire expressed in this clause of the prayer under consideration. It is therefore appropriate to the condition of the church and of the disciples of Jesus in every age and condition, as it was to the immediate followers of Jesus when he was with them under the law of Moses. Until he had finished the work of magnifying that law in all its demands, Jesus was himself subject to its holy requirements. He was not manifestly glorified until he had blotted out that handwriting of ordinances, nailing it to his cross. In the sense of the visible establishment of his kingdom, therefore, it was yet to come, at the time when he taught his disciples to pray after this manner. But while in that sense his kingdom did come when he endued his chosen apostles with power from on high, as recorded Acts ii., and the church was then established in the full glory of gospel liberty, that display of the exaltation of our Lord as the King of glory is yet manifestly coming to his people as the Holy Spirit comforts them by taking of the things of Jesus and showing his glorious grace unto them. They may therefore still consistently pray, "Thy kingdom come!"

In their individual experience the saints continually realize their need of the manifestation of that "righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost," which, as above quoted, is scripturally designated the kingdom of God; so that they have the prayer wrought in them for the coming of that kingdom in themselves. There is no clearer mark than this earnest desire by which to identify those in whom the Spirit of God dwells. They are the characters of whom Jesus spoke in the beginning of this wonderful discourse when he said, "Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness; for they shall be filled." He does not present this as a condition upon the performance of which sinners may be blessed; but those who bear this mark are already blessed, because without the blessing of the Spirit dwelling in them none can bear this peculiar seal. All who are thus blessed do pray for the coming of the kingdom of God within themselves. Since this prayer is indited by the Spirit which dwells within them, it is always according to the will of God, and therefore it is always effectual. No sinner ever had this prayer in his heart except it was wrought there by the indwelling of the Spirit of Christ, which seals the heirs of glory who are already blessed in Christ Jesus. Hence, every one who really desires the reigning power of the righteousness of God to be manifested in himself, has the assurance of the word of the Lord that he is led by the Spirit of God, and is passed from death unto life.

The reign of Christ in his chosen people is a spiritual government, and is recognized only by that faith which receives the things of the Spirit of God; for this cause they can never satisfy their own reason of the truth that Christ lives and reigns within them. Their natural mind can see nothing of that revelation which they have received by the faith of the Son of God. Consequently reason always denies that living truth, while they positively know it by the abiding witness of the Spirit which dwells in them. This is the unceasing warfare which must continue in every one who has received the gift of eternal life which is implanted in all who hear the voice of the Son of God. The flesh can only be guided by the natural mind, and cannot receive the things of the Spirit; and the mind of Christ knows with certainty the truth of life which is revealed through the spiritual power of faith. The irreconcilable opposition of these contrary principles will continue to be manifested until the veil of mortality shall be taken away, and then in their individual experience they shall realize the answer of this prayer in the consummation of that glorious victory, when they shall awake with the perfect likeness of their Lord, and see him as he is, with no cloud of selfish thought to obscure the ecstatic assurance of eternal victory over sin and doubtful questioning. There will then be no more occasion for the prayer, "Thy kingdom come!" They shall be glorified experimentally with their Lord, with the glory which he had with the Father before the world was. His kingdom will then be come in its glorious manifestation, and sin shall no more distress his redeemed people.

"Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven." The same perfect conformity to the sovereign will of God expressed in the preceding clause inspires this petition; and without this principle of submission there is no real prayer. Even the natural mind should be able to observe the contrast between this supplication, which is according to the will of God, and that presumptuous dictation which is currently called prayer in the religious world. Instead of asking that the will of God be done, the popular style of prayer is made up of two parts; first, telling the Lord what wonderful works men are doing for him; and then directing what they will have God do to secure their approbation. Reason can find no use for prayer in subjection to the will of God. This rebellious spirit sometimes directs the saints when they are governed by their natural mind. Instead of asking as here taught by our Lord, they would desire that they might substitute their will for his. But in his goodness and mercy the Lord denies their prayer when they thus ask amiss. The prayer of faith is always effectual and fervent, because it is inspired by that Spirit which "itself maketh intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered." That Spirit never inspires any prayer at variance with this direction of our Lord, "because he maketh intercession for us according to the will of God."—Rom. viii. 26, 27. If the will of God were subject to be influenced by the dictation of mortals, there could be no certainty of the fulfillment of any promise of his grace, since the prayer of some one might change the result which he had designed. But so unchangeable is his eternal purpose that even in that agony which extorted from our suffering Lord sweat which "was as it were great drops of blood falling down to the ground," he prayed, saying, "Father, if thou be willing, remove this cup from me; nevertheless not my will, but thine, be done."—Luke xxii. 42. When our Lord expressed such resignation under circumstances so dreadful, how awful is the presumption of sinful worms who would ask that the will of God should give way to their dictation! Yet nothing less than the power of the Spirit of God can enable any saint to pray in sincerity and truth that the will of God be done in the dispensations of his providence afflicting them. The Spirit which was in our Redeemer dwells in every one who feels the desire that is expressed in this prayer. All such are led by the Spirit of God, and are the sons of God. While they sensibly realize the struggling opposition of their own will, which is not reconciled to the will of God, they do earnestly desire to be governed by the Spirit of Christ, so that they may be able to rejoice in the truth that the will of God is supreme; this desire is never felt by any others except such as are born of the Spirit of God. Wherever it exists, it is that prayer which is heard and accepted of God. He hears every such desire, even though it is so secret that it never finds expression in words. Indeed, the very existence of this desire in the heart of any mortal, however he may grieve over his rebellious natural will, is conclusive demonstration that the Spirit of Christ dwells in him. No clearer mark than this desire is set upon any subject of the saving grace of God. Without the Spirit of Christ ruling in the heart, there is no grief over the presumption of the carnal will, which would always, if it were able, subvert and defeat the will of God. In none but the saints can there be any mourning over this carnal spirit of enmity against God. The mourning is itself "praying with the Spirit." Every such mourner does pray that the will of God be done in earth, as it is done in heaven, for his heartfelt wish is that his own earthly and carnal mind should be conformed to the will of God. This is asking according to the will of God. Implicit subjection to that will always characterizes the direction of the Spirit of Christ. While governed entirely by this Spirit, the saints are experimentally in heaven. They then can witness that in the presence of God there is fullness of joy, and in the divine approval which is found at his right hand there are pleasures forevermore. In this heaven they can witness the fulfillment of the will of God; and they in spirit desire that will to be done in all their sojourn in this earthly house of their tabernacle. This prayer is embodied in every sigh and groan which arises from their hearts under a sensible realization of their bondage in sin. Of course it is true that the will of God is done in the heaven of ultimate glory, where sin can never enter; but it is only consistent to understand the saints in their prayer as testifying to that truth which they know by personal experience. They know that the will of God is done in all the heaven which they experience when they are enabled to rejoice in his supreme government over all events in time and in eternity. Praying with the Spirit, they earnestly wish that the wisdom and love of God may control all things in earth, as it does control all in this blissful heaven.

FIVE NUMBERS THIS MONTH.

OUR readers will please take notice that this makes five numbers they receive this month. The work of mailing each number is as much for an eight-page as it is for a twelve-page paper; and the mailing being about half of the mechanical labor, the work this month is more than double what it would have been had we continued our publication a twelve-page semi-monthly.

We are happy to say that the interest still continues among our subscribers to enlarge the circulation of the SIGNS, and that it is still increasing. We have received a number of orders for the paper at one dollar a year for new subscribers since the time expired, but we must insist that this be discontinued. The price of the paper now is two dollars a year, and we beg that none will ask for a deviation from these terms, as we cannot afford to furnish the paper weekly for less than two dollars a year until our circulation is increased about two thousand more than it is at present, and if it increases as much this year as it did last year we shall reach that number by next volume.

CIRCULAR LETTERS.

The Maine Old School Baptist Association, in session with the branch of the Bowdoinham Church, near Gardiner, Maine, Sept. 7th, 8th and 9th, 1888, to the churches, associations and meetings with which we correspond, sendeth greeting.

BELOVED BRETHREN:—In the gracious providence of the all-wise Creator and Preserver we are once more permitted to transmit our thoughts, feelings and desires, not only to those we know, but also to those we have never seen in the flesh, "fellow-citizens with the saints, and of the household of God." For "Wisdom hath builded her house; she hath hewn out her seven pillars," resting upon "the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone." "For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ."

Dear brethren, in penning a few thoughts for your comfort and consideration, let us take this foundation as the foundation of our communication, surrounded as we are by the various allurements of a sinful world, the artful devices of Satan, the "Lo heres" and "Lo theres" that come to us in a thousand forms, with the vanities of life and the depravity of our old man. These all, in their workings, have a tendency to trouble and torment the saints. It is a blessed thought, as well as a gracious truth, that the poor, tempest-tossed and afflicted child of God has something more to rest upon than the sands of this visionary and delusive world. Although we are in the world, yet we are not of the world; for Jesus has chosen us out of the world, and has become our resting place, a sure foundation. Should we in thought attempt to pierce the clouds and darkness that surround the unnumbered cycles of eternity, we should never be able with our finite minds to trace the origin of that chief corner stone which God has laid in Zion. "Therefore thus saith the Lord God, Behold, I lay in Zion for a foundation a stone, a tried stone, a precious corner stone, a sure foundation: he that believeth shall not make haste."—Isaiah xxviii. 16.

In the beginning, before the birth of time, ere the morning stars sang together, or the sons of God shouted for joy, he was there, the bright and morning star; and yet it is Jesus, the babe of Bethlehem, and the despised Nazarene. "Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid." Earthly foundations, with the lapse of time and frosts of centuries, crumble and decay, and, like false doctrines and false teachers, shall soon be numbered with the things that were and are not; but this abideth ever, a sure foundation. No deception, no flaw. It extends beneath our woes, and covers our transgressions. "All thy waves and thy billows are gone over me."—Psalm xlii.

7. "But he was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities: the chastisement of our peace was upon him; and with his stripes we are healed."—Isa. liii.

5. This foundation which God has laid in Zion is a stone, and of his own choice. The puny waves of Arminianism and skepticism may roll and break, froth and foam, but still the stone remains: "a tried stone." When we are led to contemplate the Son of God as under the law, there is no failure from the manger to the cross. While he was subject to his reputed parents, he was still about his Father's business, fulfilling every jot and tittle of the law and the prophets. He repaired to the wilderness, being led by the Spirit to be tempted of the devil, having fasted forty days for the children of Israel; and where they failed, murmured and complained, he, Jesus, the tried stone, the sure foundation, fails not, though tempted by the inventor of "free moral agency." How often Satan comes to the children of God in the wilderness (the place where he almost always finds them) with his "if," "if," "if," in seasons of sorrow and darkness, and sometimes drives them almost to despair with doubt. If I, say they, am a child, why am I so afflicted and tormented? If a christian, why do I not have the sweet peace and comfort that I once thought I enjoyed? If thine, O Lord, why not answer by the sweet visions of thy face, by Urim or Thummim? Why not, by some supernatural test, convince me? Let the sun go backward, or the moon stand still; let the waters be piled as an heap, or the heavens roll together as a scroll. "Nevertheless the foundation of God standeth sure, having this seal, The Lord knoweth them that are his." Should we trace the weary footsteps of the man of sorrows, we would see in the light of revelation that Jesus was the friend of publicans and sinners. The sorrowing are comforted, the palsied are made whole, lepers are cleansed, the lame walk, the blind see, the deaf hear, the dead are brought back to life, and the poor have the gospel preached unto them. No wonder that Pilate, in the presence of Jesus' accusers, was made to cry out in words that shall ever live as a landmark of his purity, "Why, what evil hath he done? I find no fault in him." While he rebuked sin and hypocrisy, casting out the buyers and sellers in his house, yet he gathers the lambs in his arms, and carries them in his bosom. Are we weak? Jesus is mighty. Are we poor? The gold and the silver are his, and the cattle upon a thousand hills. Are we ignorant? Jesus is the embodiment of all wisdom and knowledge. Are we sinners? He is our righteousness. Do we feel forsaken and cast down? He says, "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee." Are we hungry and thirsty? Jesus is that bread and water of life which came down from heaven. Are we slow of heart to believe? He is of quick understanding, and the author and finisher of our faith. Are we dying and moldering back to dust? Jesus is our life and our resurrection. Do we feel to be less than the least? Jesus is all and in all to them that believe. "Who of God is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption." May God in mercy and grace grant that we, Old School Baptists, may all stand upon the same foundation, and build thereon, not gold, silver, precious stones, wood, hay and stubble, but with the apostle Paul exclaim in spirit, "God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ." Again, "For I determined not to know anything among you save Jesus Christ and him crucified." Therefore, beloved brethren, "be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord." Brethren, pray for us; not that we may roll in luxury and idleness; not that we may walk with golden canes in silver slippers, and on velvet cushions sleep out a miserable existence; but pray that the Holy Spirit may descend and sit as a refiner and purifier of the silver and gold; that wanderers may be reclaimed, and the sheep and lambs brought to the fold of the one Shepherd; that Jerusalem may be a rejoicing, and her people a joy.

The following named visiting Elders are present: Wm. Quint, W. J. Purington and F. A. Chick, and the sheep and lambs have been fed.

"My willing soul would stay
In such a frame as this,
And sit and sing itself away
To everlasting bliss."

Our next annual association will be held with the Old School Baptist Church in Bowdoinham, Sagadahoc County, Maine, on Friday, Saturday and Sunday before the second Monday in September, 1889.

HIRAM CAMPBELL, Mod.

SOLOMON'S TEMPLE SPIRITUALIZED.

BY JOHN BUNYAN.

CHAPTER XX.

Of the porch of the Temple.

We come next to the porch of the temple, which is commonly called "Solomon's." This porch is in the front of the house, and so became the common way into the temple.—1 Kings vi. 3; 2 Chron. iii. 4.

This porch was therefore the place of reception in common for all, whether Jews or religious proselytes, who came to Jerusalem to worship.—Acts iii. 11; v. 12.

This porch had a door or gate belonging to it, but such as was seldom shut, except in declining times, or when men put themselves into a rage against those better than themselves.—2 Chron. xxix. 7; Acts xxi. 28-30. The gate of this porch was called "Beautiful," even the beautiful gate of the temple, and was that at which the lame lay to beg for alms of them that went in thither to worship.—Acts iii. 1, 2, 10.

Now then, since this porch was the common place of reception for all worshipers, and the place also where they laid the beggars, it looks as if it were to be a type of the church's bosom of charity. Here the beggars were relieved and received alms. These gates were seldom shut; and Christians' compassion should be always open, as charity beautifies the churches. Largeness of heart and tender compassion is excellent. It is the bond of perfectness.—1 Cor. xiii. 1-13; xiv. 1; Heb. xiii. 1-3; John v. 6, 7; Col. iii. 14.

This porch was large; and so should the charity of the church be. It was, for length, the breadth of the temple, and of the same size as the holiness of all.—1 Kings vi. 3; 2 Chron. iii. 4-8. The first might be to teach us that in charity we should not be niggardly; but, according to the breadth of our ability, we should extend it to all the house; and in so doing, the very emblem of heaven is upon us, of which the holiest was a figure. "As we have therefore opportunity, let us do good unto all; especially unto them who are of the household of faith."—Gal. vi. 10.

This porch was, as I said, not only for length the breadth of the temple, and so the length and breadth of the holiest, but it was, if I mistake not, for height far higher than they both; for the holy place was but thirty cubits high, and the most holy place but twenty. But the porch was in height an hundred and twenty cubits. This beautiful porch was therefore four times as high as was the temple itself.—1 Kings vi. 2, 20; 2 Chron. iii. 4.

One excellent ornament therefore of the temple was that it had a porch so high; that is, so famous for height; so high as to be seen afar off. Charity, if it be rich, will be seen afar off: I say, if it be rich, large, and abounds. Christ's charity was so high that no man could hide it; and the charity of the churches will be seen from church to church; yea, it will be spoken of to their commendation in every place, if it be warm, fervent and high.—Mark vii. 36; 2 Cor. xiii. 24; ix. 2, 3, 14.

CHAPTER XXI.

Of the ornaments of the porch of the Temple.

THERE were three things belonging to the ornament of the porch, besides its height, that were ornaments unto it.

I. It was overlaid within with gold.

II. It had the pillars adjoined unto it.

III. It was the inlet into the temple.

First. It was overlaid with gold. Gold oftentimes was a type of grace, and particularly of the grace of love. Solomon's chariot, called gold, is yet again mentioned by the name of love.—Song iii. 9, 10. As it is in the church, the grace of love is as gold. It is the greatest, the richest of graces, and that which abides forever. Hence they that show much love to saints are said to be rich.—1 Tim. vi. 17-19. And hence charity is called a treasure; a treasure in the heavens.—Luke vii. 33, 34. Love is a golden grace. Let then the church, as the porch of the temple was, be inlaid with love as gold.

Secondly. It had the pillars adjoining to it, the which, besides their stateliness, seem to be there typically, to teach example. For there was seen, by the space of four cubits, their lily-work in the porch.—1 Kings viii. 19. Of their lily-work I spake before.

Now that they were so placed that they might be seen in the porch of the house, it seems to be for example, to teach the church that she should live without worldly care, as did the apostles. And let ministers do this. They are as pillars in the churches, and stand before the porch of the house. Let them also show their lily-work to the house, that the church may learn of them to be without carefulness as to worldly things, and also to be rich in charity toward the brethren. A covetous minister is a base thing, a pillar more symbolizing Lot's wife than a holy minister of Jesus Christ. Let them, since they stand at the door, and since the eyes of the porch are all upon them, be patterns and examples of good works.—1 Tim. vi. 10-12; Titus ii. 7.

Thirdly. Another ornament unto this porch was that it was an inlet into the temple. Charity is that which receiveth the poor and afflicted into the church. Worldly love, or that which is carnal, shuts up bowels, yea, and the church doors too, against the poor of the flock. Wherefore look that this kind be never countenanced by you. Crave that rather which is a fruit of the Spirit.

O churches! let your ministers be beautified with your love, that they may beautify you with their love, and also be an ornament unto you, and also to that gospel which they minister to you, for Jesus Christ's sake.

CHAPTER XXII.

Of the ascent by which they went up into the porch of the Temple

THIS porch also had certain steps, by which they went up into the house of the Lord. I know not directly the number of them, though Ezekiel speaks something about it.—Ezek. xl. 38, 39. Hence when men went up to worship in the temple, they were said to go up to the house of the Lord.—Isa. xxxviii. 22.

These steps, which were the ascent to the temple, were so curiously set and finely wrought that they were amazing to behold. Wherefore when the queen of Sheba, who came to prove Solomon's wisdom, saw the house which he had built, and the ascent by which he went up into the house of the Lord, she had no more spirit in her. She was by that sight quite overcome.—1 Kings x. 4, 5.

These steps, whether cedar, gold or stone, yet that which added to their adornment was the wonder of a queen; and whatever they were made of, to be sure they were a shadow of those steps which we should take to and in the house of God. Steps of God.—Psa. lxxxv. 13. Steps ordered by God.—Psa. xxxvii. 23. Steps ordered in his word.—Psa. cxix. 133. Steps of faith.—Rom. iv. 12. Steps of the Spirit.—2 Cor. xii. 18. Steps of truth.—2 John 4. Steps washed with butter.—Job. xxix. 6. Steps taken before or in the presence of God. Steps butted and bounded by the divine rule. These are steps indeed. There are, therefore, no such steps as these to be found anywhere in the world. A step to honor, a step to riches, a step to worldly glory, are everywhere; but what are these to the steps by which men ascend or go up to the house of the Lord?

He then that entereth into the house of the Lord is an ascending man. As it is said of Moses, he went up into the mount of God. It is ascending to go into the house of God. The world believes not this. They think it is going downward to go up to the house of God; but they are in a horrible mistake.

The steps then by which men went up to the house of the Lord were figurative of those steps which men take when they go to God; for those steps were the way to God, to God in his holy temple. But how few there are that, as the queen of the south, are taken with these godly steps. Do not the most rather seek to push away our feet from taking hold of the path of life, or else lay snares for us in the ways? But, all these notwithstanding, the Lord guides us in the way of his steps. They are goodly steps; they are the best.

CHAPTER XXIII.

Of the gate of the porch of the Temple.

THE porch, at which was an ascent to the temple, had a gate belonging to it. This gate, according to the prophet Ezekiel, was six cubits wide. The leaves of this gate were double; one folding this way, the other folding that way.—Ezek. xl. 48.

Now here some may object, and say, Since the way to God by these doors were so wide, why doth Christ say that the way and gate are narrow?

Answer. The straitness or the narrowness must not be understood of the gate simply, but because of that cumber that some men carry with them, who pretend to be going to heaven. "Six cubits." What are fifteen cubits to him who would enter in here with all the world on his back? * * * * * Wherefore he that will enter in at the strait gate, of which this gate into the temple was a type, must go in by himself, and not with his bundles of trash. And if he will go in thus, he need not fear there is not room. The righteous nation that keepeth the truth shall enter in.—Isa. xxvi. 2.

They that enter in at the gate of the inner court must be clothed in fine linen. How then shall they go into the temple who carry the clogs of the dirt of this world at their heels? "Thus saith the Lord God, No stranger, uncircumcised in heart, nor uncircumcised in flesh, shall enter into my sanctuary."—Ezek. xlv. 9, 17.

Wherefore let such as would go in remember that here is room, even a gate to enter in at, six cubits wide. We have been all this while but on the outside of the temple, even the courts of the house of the Lord, to see the beauty and glory that are there. The beauty hereof make men cry out, and say, "How amiable are thy tabernacles, O Lord of hosts! My soul longeth, yea, even fainteth, for the courts of the Lord." "A day in thy courts is better than a thousand."—Psa. lxxxiv. 1, 2, 10.

*We have omitted a portion of Chapter xxiii., and marked the place with asterisks, as we do not consider the matter in the original calculated to edify or instruct our readers. We do not claim to publish a literal copy of this work, but shall alter or omit such portions as we do not think appropriate for the SIGNS.—Ed.

BACK NUMBERS.

WE still have copies of back numbers, and shall run a surplus for a few issues, to supply new subscribers with them to the first of the volume, with which commences the serial, "Solomon's Temple Spiritualized."

MARRIAGES.

ON Jan. 17th, 1889, by Elder Wm. J. Purington, at the residence of the bride's parents, Mr. David W. Sheppard, of Montgomery, and Miss Lizzie P. Hill, of Hopewell, both of N. J.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

DEPARTED this life, quite suddenly, Dec. 27th, 1888, at Newark, N. J., Mrs. Emma R. Wolff, aged twenty-seven years, six months and twenty days.

Sister Wolff made a public profession of religion when in her thirteenth year, uniting with the Old School Baptists, and remained a steadfast believer in the faith once delivered to the saints; and though her death was very unexpected to her friends, until a few hours before, yet we trust our loss is gain to her. She left behind a tender babe of nearly four weeks, a sorrowing husband, four brothers, one sister, a father, and numerous friends, to mourn her demise; but the Lord's ways, though mysterious, are equal, and may we and they be taught to bow to his almighty will.

Her funeral was quite largely attended at her pleasant home, the house in which she died, in the vicinity of Roseville, Newark, N. J., on Sunday, Dec. 30th, 1888, where the writer tried to comfort the afflicted ones with the comfort wherewith we trust we have been comforted of the Lord; after which we followed her remains to the cemetery, to be laid beside a formerly departed babe. May the Lord sustain the sorrowing ones.

ALSO,

AFTER a lengthy illness, ending in dropsy, Mrs. Olive Kelly died at the residence of her brother, in Batavia Kill, Roxbury, N. Y., Dec. 30th, 1888, aged about forty-two years.

Mrs. Kelly was not a public professor of religion, but we believe she entertained a hope, from expressions given, and was prepared and waiting for the summons to call her away. She had been widowed something over two years, and leaves parents, brothers and sisters to mourn.

Her funeral was largely attended on Jan. 1st, 1889, when the writer spoke from these words, "I am persuaded that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord."—Rom. viii. 38, 39. May the Lord afford healing to all the afflicted ones.

J. D. HUBBELL.

KELLY'S CORNERS, N. Y.

Levi Harvey Elliott departed this life at his home near Cherry Flats, Tioga Co., Pa., Tuesday morning, Jan. 8th, 1889, after an illness of four days of typhoid pneumonia.

He was baptized in the fellowship of the church at Cherry Flats, Sept. 5th, 1858, by Elder Eli Gitchell, and remained a faithful member until his death. In 1876, after the death of his father, he was appointed Deacon. He seems to me to have been one of those who used the office of a Deacon well. He spared no labor in visiting the brethren, when he was able, and in visiting sister churches to attend extra meetings, and to assist in council. I served the church several years once a month, traveling a long distance to do so, and always found him attentive to the interests of the church, and to the needs of those who came to serve in the gospel. He will be greatly missed by the little band of brethren and sisters in their conference meetings, where his voice was always heard testifying to the truth, and speaking of his exercises, his trials and comforts, and in all their meetings. He leaves a wife, three sons, one daughter, three brothers and one sister. Our dear bereaved sister is a member of the church, and walked with him for a number of years as heirs together of the grace of life, and has been what the apostle says a Deacon's wife ought to be, faithful in all things. May the Lord strengthen her to bear with patience her loneliness, and comfort her and her children and grandchildren, all of whom were much devoted to him. Our brother's health had been very poor for two years, and he had often expressed a wish to depart to his heavenly home. It was his request that I should be sent for to attend his funeral, which I was enabled to do on Thursday, Jan. 10th, at the Cherry Flats meeting-house, using as a text the words of the dear Savior to Martha, "I am the resurrection and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live: and whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die. Believest thou this?"—John xi. 25, 26.

SILAS H. DURAND.

John Kable died at his residence in Jefferson Co., W. Va., Dec. 30th, 1888, in the eightieth year of his age.

In addition to infirmities incident to age, he was subject to spells of inaction of the stomach and bowels, from which he suffered intensely at times, and which finally terminated in paralysis and death. His sufferings and death were similar to sister Kable's, who preceded him but a few months. Brother Kable was baptized by Elder J. N. Badger, in September, 1885, and united with Ebenezer Church, in this (Loudoun) county, Virginia, and continued a worthy and highly esteemed member until called hence. He will be missed, not only at Ebenezer, but also by an extensive acquaintance of friends, by whom he was highly esteemed. His companion's death left him alone and lonely. He remarked on one occasion that he was like a lone tree, ready to fall at any time. He has now fallen asleep in death, to awake no more until "the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed."

Yours in this blessed hope,

E. C. TRUSSELL.

SNICKERSVILLE, Va., Jan. 6, 1889.

James Skidmore, one of the early settlers of Troy, Michigan, died at the old homestead, Nov. 23d, 1886, of partial paralysis and heart disease, aged eighty-eight years and eight months.

He came to Oakland County in 1824, and located on a piece of land which was secured of the Government the previous year, and has made that his home continuously for sixty-two years. His wife died in 1873, after having shared the hardships of pioneer life forty-nine years. One son and two daughters survive him. Mr. Skidmore was the grandfather of ex-Mayor Grey, of this city, and ex-Representative J. S. Grey, of Troy.

The funeral takes place to-morrow (Thursday) morning, and the remains will be interred in the local cemetery.

MRS. H. SKIDMORE.

PONTIAC, Michigan.

Alpha Susan Baxter was born in Fulton Co., Ind., Dec. 27th, 1864, and died Nov. 20th, 1888.

Her maiden name was Tipton. She was married to Charles J. Baxter on Jan. 5th, 1888, and came to Morgan Co., Ill., Feb. 15th, 1888. She obtained a hope in Christ, and joined the Regular Baptist Church on Jan. 7th, 1887, and was baptized by E. J. Delf, in Fulton Co., Ind.; after which she and her husband joined Union Church, Morgan Co., Ill., she by letter and he by experience and baptism, on July 1st, 1888, where she remained until her death.

She leaves an infant babe, a dear husband, father, mother, five brothers, two sisters, with many friends, to mourn their loss. Thus it must be; and how highly favored are we when we can say, "The Lord's will be done."

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date, this date denotes the time at which your subscription expires, and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

CORRESPONDENCE.

NORTHWOOD, Ont., May 9, 1882.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS:—In compliance with an irresistible impression of mind, I am constrained to write for publication a sketch of my wanderings thus far in the wilderness, though I feel that it has all been published in your paper many times. The words, "That which we have seen and heard declare we unto you, that ye also may have fellowship with us; and truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ," have been much on my mind of late. A gleam of heavenly light has just broken through the gloomy darkness of the way, and it makes me feel more than ever my ignorance and weakness; and yet I feel like proclaiming to all around how rich, sovereign and free is that grace which could visit and take compassion on such a rebel as I. Of sinners I am chief; of saints I am certainly the least. Therefore I hope I have fellowship with the great apostle who left the blessed words on record. Truly I have felt sweet fellowship with many of those dear children of God whose experience I have been favored to read in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

From my earliest recollection I had a keen relish for the pleasures of the world; and though my plans were often frustrated, I never would allow anything to trouble me long. When one bubble would burst, it was followed by another just as attractive, and I often wondered what people could find in the world to make them gloomy. I thought this world a very pleasant place to live in, till all at once I found myself overshadowed by a gloom for which I could not account—a gloom so heavy and deep that it seemed to press me to the earth. On June 30th, 1878, Elder Wm. L. Beebe was at morning prayer at our house. How I wished that he would pray for me. When he was nearly through, and I was thinking it was wrong for me to think of such a thing, he said, "Lord, hear the desire of the humble." I thought that included me. I desired salvation. My heart thrilled again and again with delight, and I felt it several times during that day and the next morning. I was dumb with amazement. What could it mean? It was like letting in a ray of light, which showed me at once a heart-searching God and the inward depravity of my heart. I had always lived in open rebellion against God, and now I had no hiding place. For the first time in my life I turned to the Bible for comfort, but found nothing for me for several days. One evening as I read, "Thou hast bought me no sweet cane with money, neither hast thou filled me with the fat of thy sacrifices; but thou hast made me to serve with thy sins; thou hast wearied me with thine iniquities," I thought every word was meant for me, that my doom was sealed, that hell was my portion, and I deserved it. But the next verse was, "I, even I, am he that blotteth out thy transgressions, for mine own sake, and will not remember thy sins." Though these words seemed spoken to me with such power that they took my strength from me, still I dared not to think I was one for whom Jesus died. If all my past transgressions were blotted out, I was as ready to transgress as ever. "Thou shalt have no other gods before me," were the words that kept following me; and I could see that all along I had been serving the god of this world, though often chastened.

"O! ever thus, from childhood's hour,
I've seen my fondest hopes decay;
I never loved a tree or flower,
But 'twas the first to fade away."

I thought I had sins enough to overwhelm me, if I were made to truly see myself as the sinner I was in the sight of God. I had never dared to ask to be eternally saved. Like the blind man who did not know that it was Jesus who had opened his eyes, I had not even asked for sight, not thinking of the possibility of such a blessing. I think he must have earnestly desired it. I did not wish to give up my idols. One day as I was (like the Israelites) murmuring because of hunger in the wilderness, and sighing for the time when I did eat bread to the full, as I sat around the fleshpots of Egypt, a voice seemed to say, "Ephraim is joined to idols; let him alone." All the trouble which I had had for two weeks seemed to leave me in an instant, and I had liberty to go into the world and enjoy it till I had enough of it. I could be as gay as anybody. My companions know how I spent the next two years. Elder Wm. L. Beebe continued to preach for us once in three months, and he would say such comforting things to the mourning ones that I sometimes wished I was one of them. Sometimes he would drop a word of experience that even I could treasure up, and I had a great desire to hear more preaching. "The harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few: pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he will send forth laborers into his harvest," kept following me, when it seemed presumptuous for me to ask for anything. But the case was urgent. What a harvest was ready! There were so many sorrowful ones (for the Lord is working here) that I could not forget them. Only those whom the Lord has burdened can form any idea of what a burden it was; and yet I do not know that I ever once thought that it was sent by the Lord. I tried many ways to get rid of it, but the most successful was to witness the presumptuous mockery of some of those who called themselves God's servants.

I attended the quarterly meeting at Dunwick, but did not hear one cheering word. We must go beyond the watchmen. The Lord's people seemed to have grown strangely cold and distant. I felt that I was one alone. "We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren," gave me a great deal of trouble. After the meeting was over, and before I had gone home (May 5th, 1880), a voice said, as distinctly as if spoken by the natural voice, "I have loved thee with an everlasting love; therefore with loving-kindness have I drawn thee." For a moment I seemed drawn from the world; and I had such a realizing sense of the solemn presence of the great God of heaven and earth, that I thought perhaps I was one for whom Jesus died, and it would yet be revealed to me. When I would try to find pleasure in the world, "Thou shalt have no other gods before me," would thunder in my ears. After a while I was taken sick, and one evening a light shone around me, far exceeding the light of the sun. I thought from that time I was going to die. I had a promise that "at evening time it shall be light." I seemed to be carried above the world that I had loved so well, and I thought I would never care for it again. These words came, "Behold, I will take away from thee the desire of thine eyes with a stroke; yet neither shalt thou mourn nor weep, neither shall thy tears run down." When I was unconscious of what was passing around me, I seemed to have a view of that heavenly land, and a voice said, "In his presence there is fullness of joy." What a longing desire I had to burst those fetters and fly away! How unwilling I was to recover! I thought that I could never care for the world again. There was nothing here like what I had seen. I soon recovered, and when Satan told me that what I had seen was but the imaginations of a fevered brain, and that every one who had typhoid fever had seen the same, I gave up all for lost. And still I was commanded to pray the Lord of the harvest that he would send laborers into his harvest. Others might be saved if I were lost.

Shortly after this Elder Beebe left Canada. Elder Pollard had gone before, and we were left without any preacher. I tried to throw all my care away. For a time these things passed off my mind, and I had more enjoyment in worldly company than I had for a long time before, for I escaped the rod for a while. But that was my only hope, and I would sometimes think, Could it be that I was lost, and that the Lord indeed had cast me off forever? After the February meeting at Duart, to which I had gone very reluctantly, I was plunged in the deepest despair. My trouble seemed more than I could bear. Society had no power to please; it was like singing songs to a heavy heart. My "favorite authors" seemed to have chosen such worthless themes that they could please no longer. I was driven to the Bible, and there seemed to be nothing but curses there for me. Nothing in all the world could give me a moment's peace, and something would say tauntingly to me, "Where now are the gods thou hast made thee? Let them arise, if they will save thee in the time of thy trouble." I did not know what ailed me. I longed for death. I never thought of future punishment; I had the punishment with me. Sometimes I thought I was insane, and sometimes thought I had heart disease. My heart felt as though there was literally a weight in it too heavy to be borne. Everything seemed draped with a funeral pall. O the horrors that I felt under the conviction of a guilty conscience! I felt that every action of my life had been nothing but sin, and yet my heart was so dead and desperate that I could not pray.

Elder Beebe came here to preach, and brought brother F. W. Keene with him (he had baptized him the week before), and when he called on him to preach I was sorry. I wanted to hear Elder Beebe preach. He preached from Isaiah xxviii. 12, 13; and when he told what it was to be ready to perish in the land of Assyria, and to be an outcast in the land of Egypt, he described my feelings so minutely that I began to see where I was; and I thought perhaps I was one who would yet worship the Lord in the holy mount at Jerusalem. After coming home from meeting that night, he asked me if I knew what it was to be ready to perish in the land of Assyria, and to be an outcast in the land of Egypt. I told him I thought I did. He asked me if I had a hope. I told him it was all in, "I will visit thy transgressions with the rod, and thine iniquities with stripes," as that was the only promise I could claim. He seemed quite pleased, and said, "That is a good hope. For whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth. If ye endure chastening, God dealeth with you as with sons; for what son is he whom the Father chasteneth not? But if ye be without chastisement, whereof all are partakers, then are ye bastards and not sons." I was thankful to him for that encouragement. He was the only one who had spoken to me in all that lonely way. And how often I had fellowship with Jeremiah when he said, "Is it nothing to you, all ye that pass by? Behold, and see if there be any sorrow like unto my sorrow, which is done unto me, wherewith the Lord hath afflicted me in the day of his fierce anger."—Lam. i. 12. It was not like any earthly sorrow, which time could heal; for time only intensified this already terrible sorrow. At times some of the promises seemed to be for me, such as, "O thou afflicted, tossed with tempest and not comforted! Behold, I will lay thy stones with fair colors, and thy foundations with sapphires." But it was like offering bread in the future to a famishing child. I must have a present help, or perish. The words of Isaiah kept troubling me, "Behold, the Lord's hand is not shortened, that it cannot save; neither his ear heavy, that it cannot hear; but your iniquities have separated between you and your God, and your sins have hid his face from you, that he will not hear."—Isa. lix. 1, 2. When I would turn to the world for comfort, a voice would say, "But now after that ye have known God, or rather are known of God, how turn ye again to the weak and beggarly elements, whereunto ye desire again to be in bondage?" At times I would feel that it was God's hand that was leading me, and I could say, "But he knoweth the way that I take: when he hath tried me, I shall come forth as gold." All this time I thought I would be satisfied if I could only know that it was a work of grace in the soul. "I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness," seemed to point to the time of death, and I never thought I would ever see happiness in this world again. I felt that I was one alone, till the words, "He trod the winepress alone, and there was none to help him," came into my mind so forcibly that I thought perhaps it was all that I might know the fellowship of his sufferings. My sorrow kept still increasing. When brother F. W. Keene came again, March 27th, 1881, he preached from Psa. cvii. 4-7, "They wandered in the wilderness, in a solitary way: they found no city to dwell in. Hungry and thirsty, their soul fainted in them." He described, much better than I can now, the solitary way in which I had wandered, and the dreary places of sin, morality, &c., which I had tried, but could not dwell in. It was a solitary place: no one seemed to live in that awful land. Forsaken of God and man, there seemed to be no comfort. "Hungry and thirsty, their soul fainted in them." It seemed they could go no farther, but must sink under the wrath of God, under this burden of sin and condemnation. "Then they cried unto the Lord in their trouble." It was like the cry of a drowning man, which no one could imitate; but when placed in the same condition, they could cry without teaching. This was just like my case; for I never would call on the Lord till I was at my wits' end. I listened as if spellbound. I felt a full assurance that I was one of the wanderers. But was there any release? Would I have to go mourning all my days? These were the questions that would arise in my mind. He answered them all in the words of the text, "And he delivered them out of their distresses." What a deliverance! The poor outcast and wanderer has now found a place where he can rest in peace and safety. I thought the words were intended only for me, when he said, "Cheer up, poor wanderer. It was God who caused you to wander, and we have his word for it that he will lead you out by the 'right way.'" "And he led them forth by the right way, that they might go to a city of habitation." Before he was through with that sermon I could see that God, against whom I had murmured and rebelled at every step, had led me all the way. When we came home from meeting, how happy I was, how glad I felt, how light, how free. My heart seemed bubbling up with a great joy. The next morning something seemed to say again and again, "The time of the singing of birds is come." In my ignorance I did not know where I had read the words, though I had read the Bible twice through. The beauties of nature, which I had almost worshiped before, seemed to pale from that day, as the moon pales before the rising sun. That idol, too, had to be taken from me. My eyes had opened on a new world of joy, of which I had known nothing before. I forgot that I had ever had any trouble. The next day I felt a longing desire to be baptized. That desire has increased till I cannot pass a stream without thinking, "Here is water, what doth hinder me to be baptized?" Then for the first time I missed that weight of condemnation with which I was burdened when I went to meeting the preceding evening. What had become of it? Christ had borne it all, and I was free. Could it be that I, who felt so weak and ignorant, had been born again? What a change! I read the Bible through again, and it seemed like a different book. All the sweet and precious promises were mine. This "earthen vessel" could hold no more. I had been tempest-tossed, in midnight darkness, so long that the dazzling splendor of the Sun of righteousness was too much for my astonished gaze. I could often say, "Turn away thine eyes from me, for they have overcome me." Why could I not have seen before that it was all the work of eternal love, and avoided all that trouble? For months I could not think of it without a shudder. Once I received a partial answer in the words, "To humble thee, and to prove thee; to know what was in thine heart, whether thou wouldst keep his commandments or no." Again, these words were given me, "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints." Then I again read Elder Durand's communication in the SIGNS of June 1st, 1881, and it was opened up to me so clearly that every throb and sting of pain in that death was needful, that I wondered I had not seen that it was the fellowship of the sufferings of Christ, and was precious in the sight of the Lord. I could have no hope of being glorified with him, had I not been one with him in his sufferings and death. I had read that communication some months before, and then it was just what I wanted to know; but I can receive nothing till it is given me. Sometimes I am told, "I have yet many things to say unto you, but ye cannot hear them now." It is painfully humbling to learn the full meaning of the Lord's words, "Without me ye can do nothing." I felt as weak and helpless as a little child, and had to beg for strength to acknowledge his name. I felt that I was denying him, and was afraid of being led into darkness for doing so, till these words flowed sweetly into my mind, "For this is as the waters of Noah unto me: for as I have sworn that the waters of Noah should no more go over the earth, so have I sworn that I would not be wroth with thee nor rebuke thee." They were followed almost immediately by, "Follow me." I could not talk to any person about these things, though I had sweet access to the throne of grace. For a long time my encouragement was in these words, "O my dove, that art in the cleft of the rock, in the secret places of the stairs, let me see thy countenance, let me hear thy voice: for sweet is thy voice, and thy countenance is comely." Then I was led down a little lower, but these words shone as a light on my path, "They shall come with weeping, and with supplication will I lead them. I will cause them to walk by the rivers of waters, in a straight way, wherein they shall not stumble: for I am a father to Israel, and Ephraim is my first-born." After a while the words of the psalmist seemed to better express my mind, "Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death I will fear no evil; for thou art with me: thy rod and thy staff they comfort me." All this time I felt that my life was "hid with Christ in God." One day, after vainly endeavoring to get me to tell him some of the exercises of my mind, which I could not do, F. W. Keene said to me, "Shut up, and cannot come forth: that is where you are." And then he added, "I will bring the blind by a way they know not, and in paths they have not seen: I will make darkness light before them, and crooked things straight: these things will I do unto them; and not forsake them." That is God's promise, and it is just as true to-day as when it was written. We change, but he changes not." No words could have suited me better. I could not see one step ahead. One day I thought, Can God so mock one of his children as to command them to do anything which he does not give them strength to perform? And these words came with power, "I can do all things through Christ, who strengtheneth me," followed by, "When I am weak, then am I strong." We are only strong when we are so weak as to feel that our entire dependence is in God. Our spiritual life is in him.

All this time I felt separated from the Lord's people by my unworthiness. I felt that they would not want me in the church. Who would believe that the great God of heaven and earth would visit such as I? I had never attempted to tell it but once, and then had no liberty. I started to the February meeting at Duart, feeling my entire dependence on God, as I had no power of my own to tell what he had done for me; but when I got there I kept looking from one to another for a little help. At last I saw a deacon that I dearly loved coming toward me, and I thought he would help me; but he tore away the last prop, and I dropped gently into the arms that never fail. I felt their firm support, and the words came, "The eternal God is thy refuge, and underneath are the everlasting arms." Never was deliverance more timely. I hardly know what I was enabled to say, but my heart was melted when they received me, and gave me a hearty welcome, without asking a question. I thought then I had learned to entirely distrust myself, and to trust only in God, who hath delivered, and doth deliver, and in whom we trust he will yet deliver.

I have the old nature to contend with. Clouds will intervene. The hand is hidden that wields the rod, and ahead the way looks rugged and steep. Sometimes I feel like murmuring, and think my daily cross is heavier than other people's; but when I am led to look away, above and beyond all these, to the sufferings of Christ, I am lost. Can I say, "Truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ?" Not long since I was tempted and tried, till I longed to leave this "house of clay." All at once, like a wearied child, I was picked up, and a sweet voice soothingly said, "In a little wrath I hid my face from thee for a moment; but with everlasting kindness will I have mercy on thee." "I have loved thee with an everlasting love; therefore with loving-kindness have I drawn thee." "I will not leave you comfortless: I will come to you." That voice sounded as new and wonderful to me as it did the first time I heard it; and I thought I could never doubt again; for "when my Father and my mother forsake me, then the Lord will take me up." I could truly say, "My heart is fixed: I will sing and give praise." I was astonished at the joy I felt. I was led to review all the way the Lord had led me; and I took my pen, thinking perhaps it would open a channel to convey those sweet thoughts to some little one wandering in the wilderness, in a solitary way. I felt,

"O could I speak the matchless worth,
O could I sound the glories forth
That in my Savior shine;
I'd soar and touch the heav'nly strings,
And vie with Gabriel while he sings
In notes that are divine."

SARAH CAMPBELL.

STATE ROAD, Del., Jan. 18, 1889.

BRETHREN BEEBE:—Among the communications in the SIGNS of January 9th is one from a brother Newkirk, which embraces some sentiments to which I would like to call attention. It is such portions of his letter as deals with creeds—human creeds, scholastic creeds, &c. It is not simply his letter, or what is contained in his letter particularly, that I propose to notice, but to examine the subject in a kind of general way.

The denunciation of creeds is not new. It may be traced all the way back to the days of the Reformation. The expressions of denunciation have been handed down from generation to generation, so as to have become quite familiar sounds; and brother Newkirk may have fallen into the use of some of them inadvertently, without being aware of the consequences of the position he was taking. Allusion is made in the letter I speak of to Elder Bartley, and five items published by Elder Bartley as a brief summary of the fundamental principles of the Baptist faith. I have nothing to say now of those items, or of the design of their publication, more than this: If they are unsound, and are not sustained by Scripture, it is the right of brother Newkirk or any other brother to point out the errors, and I doubt not Elder Bartley would thank him or them for it. It is the indiscriminate denunciation of creeds that follows this allusion, that attracts my attention. It has been quite generally regarded as one of the weapons used by the enemies of truth, and as having been confined exclusively to them. The cause of execration was not claimed to be that the creeds objected to were in conflict with the word, or unsustained by it, but simply that they were creeds. They have been compared to boxes placed upon the heads of children to confine the growth to a particular shape. If they were entirely made up of Scripture quotations, it was no matter; still they were human creeds, and denounced as such. The Master has said, "He that doeth truth cometh to the light, that his deeds may be manifest that they are wrought in God." Even from away back in the dark ages a brief summary of faith has come down to us from the persecuted Waldenses. It is a testimonial in regard to that people that is greatly prized. Baptists, Presbyterians and Episcopalians have from time immemorial published to the world what they understood to be a summary of the faith "once delivered to the saints;" while Unitarians and some others have neither published nor acknowledged their belief, but denounced all such publications as human creeds. We ourselves are publishing all the time in our papers and association Minutes what we believe on all subjects appertaining to the faith. If brother Newkirk is a reader of the SIGNS, he may find rather more than five items in the Prospectus of that publication, and republished from time to time, as a summary or declaration of faith to which the SIGNS stands pledged steadfastly to adhere. In my public calling it has been my lot to baptize quite a number. It was invariably upon a profession of their faith in Christ; and why should it be thought improper to avow our belief? Can any other reason be assigned than that the objector is either an unbeliever, or that he holds sentiments that will not bear the light? I have very much wondered that anybody claiming to be an honest Baptist would ever be found joining in this hue and cry against a declaration of our faith.

The English word "creed" is from the Latin credo, which is simply, "I believe." The salvation of the Lord's people is said to be "through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth." There can be no harm or wrong to any one from a belief of the truth. Philip required of the eunuch to know what he believed before he could be admitted to baptism. I am acquainted with the organization of quite a number of churches, and they all have a covenant, embracing a declaration of their faith, to which each of the organizing members subscribes. When such church applies to some association of churches for admission and recognition as a sound gospel church, her credentials are examined, and if found satisfactory, assurance is given her by extending to her messengers the right hand of fellowship. Those who relate their christian experience and their belief of the truth are, I presume, all human, and so are those who draft church covenants; so I suppose all these things might be stigmatized as human. If it were possible to show our faith without either speaking or writing, it would still be and remain that we had faith, or a creed, if it should be so called. If there is any better way to get at the character and standing of a church than by reference to their published articles of faith, I have yet to learn what it is. When these published creeds are found upon examination to be the truth, and to accord with sound doctrine, I see no occasion why any brother should detest and despise them. I myself was examined twice in regard to my belief; once when I first offered to the church, and then again when the brethren were contemplating ordination. Indeed, it is and has been the uniform, and I do not know but universal, practice of sound, orderly churches to have a distinct understanding about what they believe. If somebody is ready to say that it is no matter what we believe, so we live right, I would propose to them to examine the Scriptures and see whether faith was not always the test. It would seem that the whole human family were included in the two classes, believers and unbelievers; and the term to designate a disciple of Christ, a follower of the Redeemer, is almost uniformly "a believer." In looking over the New Testament I find more than one hundred different places where the Lord's people were characterized as believers. So it would seem that they all had creeds; and without faith it was found impossible to please God. But is it so that it does not matter what a man believes? It is written, "I believed, and therefore have I spoken." We also believe, and therefore speak. If people do not sincerely and honestly believe what they are acting out, it will not be approved of either God or men. Belief is the basis and foundation of all devotion and sincere and honest action. I shall be using the language of inspiration if I exhort the churches to "hold fast the form of sound words" which they have heard of me, &c. Timothy was instructed to speak the things which become sound doctrine. Paul and Silas, as they went through the cities, delivered them the decrees for to keep that were ordained of the apostles and Elders which were at Jerusalem.

Brother Newkirk quotes a passage that is exactly in point here, "That which we have seen and heard declare we unto you, that ye also may have fellowship with us." This is exactly the reason for all these published declarations of faith, that our fellowship may be promoted and extended; and it is passing strange to me that an objection should ever have entered the mind of anybody against a candid and honest acknowledgment of one's faith. Ignorance of each other may exempt us for a time from strife, and preserve an outward appearance of harmony; but there can be no real fellowship in the truth without such acknowledgment as shall give assurance that the truth is believed and received in the love and understanding of it.

Not long ago I saw an account of a sermon by a distinguished Unitarian preacher, in which he took occasion to say that the system of theology prevailing at the present day was invented and promulgated some two or three centuries after the days of the apostles; that the system taught by them was very simple and practical, and that it embraced merely our duty to God and to our fellow-creatures; and that men were not required to believe that Christ was God, or that he was even one with Deity, but simply that he was a teacher come from God. This appears to have been received with approval by an immense congregation. I wondered whether any in all that throng were at all conversant with the New Testament. Had they ever read, "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God." "And the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us," &c. Or, "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life: and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him."—John iii. 36.

TUSKEGEE, Ala., Nov. 29.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—As soon as I get the time, I intend to try and work up for you a good many new subscribers for our family paper, the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. I do hope you will succeed in making a success of it as a weekly paper. I for one will do all in my power to swell your list, thereby enabling you to continue it a weekly paper. I do hope all the brethren will take an interest in the cause, and each subscriber do all he can in obtaining new ones. If they will, it will soon double your list; and as I have said above, I do hope each one will go to work for the paper. And I further hope that all subscribers will not forget one very important duty (and it is very important), and that is for all to pay up promptly, because that is the way you make a support for yourself and family, by the publication of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. It is as just a debt as if they were to get my goods and not pay for them; or as if I were to buy a farmer's produce and then not pay him for it. So I do hope that all who are behind with you for the paper will pay up at once. I do not suppose you are able to furnish it free. W. P. THOMPSON.

EDGERLY, La., Dec. 15, 1888.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—After finishing the business portion of my letter, I desire to say to you that the SIGNS OF THE TIMES is received always in due time, and is a welcome messenger at our homes, because of the rich treasures of gospel truth that adorn its pages. In all the long years that it has been my blessed privilege to peruse its columns, I have not discovered any departure from the doctrine of God our Savior as set forth by your dear father in his prospectus in 1832; and for the information and comfort of many of the dear little lambs of Jesus who have not hitherto been subscribers to the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, I desire to transcribe for publication most of the Articles, with some abridgement.

1. The Existence, Sovereignty, Immutability, Omnipotence, and Eternal Perfections of the Great Jehovah.

2. The Absolute Predestination of all things.

3. Eternal, Unconditional Election.

4. The Total Depravity and Just Condemnation of fallen man.

5. That the Atonement and Redemption of Jesus Christ are for the elect only.

6. The Sovereign, Irresistible, and in all cases Effectual work of the Holy Spirit, in Regenerating and Quickening the elect of God.

7. The final Preservation and Eternal Happiness of all the sons of God by Grace.

8. The Resurrection of the dead and Eternal Judgment.

9. That the Church of Christ is composed exclusively of baptized believers.

10. That there is no connection between Church and State.

A decided opposition to all the institutions and societies of men, set up in order to advance the Redeemer's kingdom.

In a word, war was made with Arminianism and her entire brood of institutions. Now I feel to rejoice in the great truth, based upon an intimate knowledge of the brethren and churches composing the South Louisiana Primitive Baptist Association, that the living principles referred to in the Articles of that Prospectus are believed, loved and earnestly contended for throughout the entire body. The Lord has been graciously pleased to bless some of our little churches in the year that is about closing with an ingathering of precious souls. "Bless the Lord, O my soul; and all that is within me, bless his holy name," that he has remembered us in our low estate, and is manifesting his power, love and mercy in bringing home his election of grace, whom he has loved with an everlasting love, and with loving-kindness draws them. Every soul thus drawn realizes his helplessness and guilty condition before God, and acknowledges his condemnation just. From that dreadful sentence I do know of a truth (if I am not deceived) there is no appeal, and no final escape for the poor, condemned sinner, through earthly help or power inherent in himself. The Lord alone can deliver; he alone can speak peace to the troubled soul. He can wound, and he can heal; he can kill, and he can make alive. He speaks, and it is done; he commands, and it stands fast. In all the glorious work of the salvation of sinners, he declares there was none to help, none to uphold. "Therefore mine own arm brought salvation unto me, and my fury it upheld me." Now, in closing, may the Lord bless you, dear brethren, with his sustaining grace, enabling you to earnestly contend for the faith once delivered to the saints, is the prayer of your unworthy brother,

W. M. PERKINS.

DANVILLE, N. Y., Jan. 21, 1889.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—Is it not a curious fact that we are frequently astonished at what we see almost every day of our lives? We know that the waves of Arminianism and error surround us on every side; we hear the utterances of false doctrine at every turn; we see the religious world engaged in gambling operations with impunity, and the temples erected for religious service used for musical concerts and theatrical performances! And notwithstanding our abhorrence of such things, we involuntarily stop our ears, close our eyes, and put our hands upon our mouths, lest our friends and neighbors accuse us of cynicism! O the weakness of human nature! or, I might say, our subserviency to the enemy of our souls.

But I took up my pen to say that I was last evening inveigled to attend on a religious meeting, to witness the performance of a solo by a visiting singer of some note. Before that performance commenced, however, the usual routine of religious services had to be gone through with—reading a portion of Scripture, prayer, singing by the choir, and the sermon. The text was, "Fret not thyself because of evil doers," &c., ending with, "Trust in the Lord, and do good."—Psalm xxxvii. 1-3. While descanting upon the subject, the speaker gave a fair exhibition of his rhetorical powers, and also of his profound ignorance of the lesson taught, or else a deliberate misapplication of its intent; for instead of giving the psalmist's promised reward, "So shalt thou dwell in the land, and verily thou shalt be fed," he applied it to the salvation of sinners, and told how much good we could do by "helping" the Lord in that great work. While I was astonished at the preacher's ignorance, or perfidy, yet it seemed a matter of course, as resulting from the popular teaching and practice of the times. The longer I live, the more satisfied am I of the frailty and crookedness of human nature, especially as I am confronted with so many exhibitions of them in my own personal experience. I am more and more convinced that there dwells no good in me, and consequently am less and less inclined to trust in self; so that there seems no safety but in that covenant which is ordered in all things and sure, sealed by the blood of Christ, in whom is my only hope.

I am pleased with the new arrangement to visit us weekly with the SIGNS, as it seems to bring us more closely together in social correspondence and spiritual communion. Whether I appreciate this as much as those brethren do who are favored with frequent personal intercourse with each other, I am not able to say; but in my isolation I find the SIGNS ever a welcome visitor, laden with precious viands from the Master's table.

Write on, dear brethren and sisters, and may the Lord bless and direct you.

Unworthily yours,

P. WEST.

BURN STATION, TENN., Dec. 12, 1888.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN—If I am worthy to address you as such. I read the last number of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES for 1888, and seat myself to try to write you a few lines, to remit for 1889, as myself and dear old companion do not feel that we can do without it. I thought when I sent you the money for this year that I would have to give it up, not seeing how I could pay for it. We are both in our seventy-first year, and are alone, with the exception of one afflicted daughter, and I am feeble in health. I have been taking our family paper, as we call it, nearly twenty years, and have the first and second volumes of the book of "Editorials." I want the SIGNS as long as I live and can read it, or can pay for it. We are well pleased with the idea of its coming weekly. I do hope the dear brethren and friends will enable you to continue it after that. It is the oldest Primitive Baptist paper in the United States, and I think it is the best. Dear brethren, I do hope the good Lord will enable you to go on with it, and that the dear brethren and sisters may keep its pages as full of good reading as it has been heretofore; for I feel to hope, in reading the many precious communications and editorials, that my poor soul has been comforted and lifted up when very low. I have many doubts and fears, trials and temptations. It seems to me the older I get the plainer I can see there is nothing good in me; that is, in my flesh. When I would do good, evil is present, and I am often made to cry out with poor old Job, "O that it were as in months past," when, I hope, Jesus showed his smiling face. Then it was all peace, love and joy. Then it was that I could claim him as my own personal Savior; and I hope that I do yet, at times; but I am so much of the time in gloom and darkness, that it makes me fear I have never been born again. But the goodness of the Lord has followed me all the days of my life; for it is in him that I live and have my being. I can do nothing without him. And if my poor heart deceives me not, I desire to trust him for all that pertains to us for this life, and also that which is to come. I must close this poor scribble; do with it as seems to you right, and all will be right with me.

Yours in christian love, I hope,
W. R. DANIEL.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—The SIGNS meets the approbation of all the Old, Primitive, Predestinarian Baptists in this part of the country, as far as it has been introduced. I hope the good Lord will give it a wider circulation, and still enable you, dear editors, to use "The Sword of the Lord and of Gideon." And my heart's desire and prayer to God is that the good Lord will still enable you, and the dear correspondents of our dear family paper, the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, to earnestly contend for the faith once delivered to the saints, and that all Arminianism may be driven out of the church of God. There seems to be champions among the Philistines, as large as the one we read of in 1 Samuel xvii. 4; and they are challenging the army of Israel. But thanks be to God, we have a few striplings that are not afraid to fight them; for they go in the name of the Lord, with their "shepherd's bag and five smooth stones from the brook;" and they throw them every time. I believe those stones to be a figure of election, predestination, purpose, foreknowledge and reprobation; and either of them will slay these Goliaths of Gath.

Write on, dear brethren. I feel like our dear family paper, the SIGNS, is worth its weight in gold. If you think these few words would be of any comfort to the household of faith, give them a place in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. If not, all will be right with me.

Your unworthy brother, if one at all, in hope of eternal life,
E. M. MILLER.

WESTCLIFFE, COL., Jan. 20, 1889.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—I see in the first number of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES a letter from dear old sister E. B. Scott, of Colfax Co., N. M., with whom I used to correspond, being eighteen years ago. I have the promise of a visit the coming summer from Elder R. Flournoy, of Kansas. I desire that sister Scott, or some other brother or sister Baptist, give me her present post-office address, as brother Flournoy and myself (perhaps others also) will, if the Lord willing, pay her a visit during the time of brother Flournoy's visit with me.

I am just recovering from a severe attack of acute rheumatism, from which I have suffered beyond my power of description. I am not able to write more at this time. I ask you, brethren Beebe, to give place in the SIGNS when convenient to my request as above, as I am desirous of obtaining sister Scott's address.

Yours in tribulation,
J. H. YEOMAN.

UTICA, N. Y., Dec. 14, 1888.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—Inclosed find postal note of two dollars, which please apply to our subscription for SIGNS OF THE TIMES for the coming year. We would be much pleased to be able to furnish you a list, however small, of new subscribers; but in all this large city we do not find one, beyond the few whose names you already have, of our little church, who are willing to pay the small sum of one dollar. Indeed they have no desire to read it at all. But truly ourselves are very thankful for such periodical, affording as it does so much pure and wholesome comfort and instruction, whereby one does edify another.

Hoping therefore that it may be continued in such a manner as that both editors and publishers will feel satisfactorily recompensed, is the desire of

R. & L. ALEXANDER.

WOODHULL, Ill., Dec. 8, 1888.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—I will inclose two dollars to pay for your paper, the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. I have been taking your paper for a good many years, and think it contains as good preaching as there is in this world. I have never joined the church, but I feast on the Old Baptist doctrine. It is meat and drink to me. Christ is the end of the law to them that believe. In fact, he is everything—the way, the truth and the life, the sum and substance of the Old and New Testaments. All is fulfilled in him. There is no other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved. He is all in all to the helpless sinner. Yours in love of the truth, hoping that you may get support enough that you can publish your paper every week.

PRAYING WITH THE SPIRIT.

"AFTER this manner therefore pray ye: Our Father which art in heaven, Hallowed be thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread. And forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors. And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. For thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, forever. Amen."—Matt. vi. 9-13.

"Give us this day our daily bread." The narrow application of this petition to the food which supports the natural body (as it is generally received by the religious world), is an entire digression from the spiritual import of the whole example of prayer as given in the text, and seems contrary to the instruction in the immediately following record of this divine teaching, where our Lord expressly enjoins upon his disciples with the most solemn emphasis, "I say unto you, Take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink; nor yet for your body, what ye shall put on. Is not the life more than meat, and the body than raiment?" "For your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things." Again he says, "Labor not for the meat which perisheth, but for that meat which endureth unto everlasting life, which the Son of man shall give unto you; for him hath God the Father sealed."—John vi. 27. The promise of our Lord secures to all his people the protection of his presence, and it is written to them, "My God shall supply all your need according to his riches in glory by Christ Jesus." They are assured that their temporal necessities are all known to their Lord, and his faithfulness has never failed them; yet they are not authorized to tempt the Lord by willful disobedience to his injunctions which direct that they should be "not slothful in business." In the observance of the inspired rule they have no occasion to be apprehensive of the consequences which may follow that obedience. They are blessed with all spiritual blessings in Christ Jesus, and no good thing will God withhold from them that walk uprightly; yet for their comfort they are given the privilege of asking of him for those favors which he has promised them. By his Spirit dwelling in them they are moved to desire perpetual supplies of that bread which cometh down from heaven, of which if a man eat he shall never die. It is according to the will of God that they shall feel this hunger and thirst after righteousness, so that the prayer of faith for this spiritual bread is truly that intercession of the Spirit which is according to the will of God. The only way in which they labor for this meat, or food, is by working out that salvation which God worketh in them both to will and to do of his good pleasure.—Phil. ii. 12, 13. None can have this desire in their hearts but those who are already blessed by the sealing of his Spirit dwelling in them; and every one who is so blessed does continually pray for that heavenly bread which can only be received from God through the grace which is given in Christ Jesus. Since this desire can never arise from the carnal mind, which is enmity against God, there can be no more conclusive evidence of the indwelling of the Spirit of Christ in any man than that which is manifested by such hunger and thirst after righteousness. Hence, this is that witness which abides in every one who is born of God. So John says, "He that believeth on the Son of God hath the witness in himself."—1 John v. 10.

"And forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors." There is in this petition a very serious significance. It is only as moved by the power of divine grace that any one can understandingly make this request of the Lord, that he will deal with us as we deal with our fellow-men. The most that we can do by nature is only to forgive those who appear to be worthy of our favor; but who is prepared to ask such forgiveness of the Lord? If his forgiving love were withheld until we deserved his mercy, every sinner must at once sink in despair. It is the peculiar glory of that salvation which is revealed in our Lord Jesus, that even "Where sin abounded, grace did much more abound; that as sin hath reigned unto death, even so might grace reign through righteousness unto eternal life by Jesus Christ our Lord."—Rom. v. 20, 21. This is all the hope of every saint. We are not taught to pray contrary to this hope which is wrought in the saints by the Spirit of truth. In his instruction to his disciples our Lord has given the true import of this petition. He says, "When ye stand praying, forgive, if ye have ought against any; that your Father which is in heaven may forgive your trespasses. But if ye do not forgive, neither will your Father which is in heaven forgive your trespasses."—Mark xi. 25, 26. While neither the good deeds nor the evil works of the saints can affect their eternal salvation which is completely secured in the perfect work of Christ Jesus, their enjoyment of that salvation in the answer of a good conscience toward God while here in time is often seriously hindered by their disregard of the commandments of their Lord. When they cherish an unforgiving spirit they are obeying the dictation of their carnal mind, and thus living after the flesh. In such action they are sowing to the flesh, and of the flesh they shall reap corruption. It is to the saints that Paul writes, "If ye live after the flesh ye shall die; but if ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body ye shall live."—Rom. viii. 13. It is but the mockery of prayer when a form of petition is spoken, while the selfish mind governs the suppliant. The prayer of faith is infinitely above all earthly desires. Yet it is frequently given to the saints by faith to ask for temporal mercies, and such prayer is always answered. All those prayers which originate in the natural mind are in mercy denied. Only that intercession is effectual which is according to the will of God. And this is all the prayer which is indited by the Spirit of Christ. Will worshipers and idolaters think that their earnest prayers have power to change the purpose of God; but the mind of Christ seeks ever to be perfectly conformed to that which God has ordained. All other prayers are but the expression of carnal covetousness. Even the saints may utter such prayers when governed by their natural mind. It was to the saints that it was written, "Ye ask, and receive not, because ye ask amiss, that ye may consume it upon your lusts."—James iv. 3. When led by the Spirit of God in true humility to pray as instructed in our text, the saints are delivered from all selfishness, and then they do from their heart forgive those who have trespassed against them in whatever way that trespass may have been committed. More than this, by the grace of God they are enabled to pray as did Stephen, for the forgiveness of God to be extended even to those who are at that very time engaged in afflicting and persecuting them. In this prayer they give unquestionable evidence that they are governed by the Spirit of our dear Redeemer, whose expiring groan brought salvation to the very enemies who wrought his death. That Spirit shone forth in all its divine glory when on the cross Jesus prayed for his blood-thirsty murderers, saying, "Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do!"

In the daily experience of the saints they learn the importance of implicit obedience to the law of Christ in forgiving those who have trespassed against them. While cherishing resentment in their secret thoughts, they can never enjoy the heavenly peace which is known in the manifest presence of Jesus dwelling within them by his Spirit, and raising them above all the clouds of doubt and fear which beset them in their pilgrimage through this world of sin and sorrow. In this way they learn by personal experience that they can only be forgiven as they forgive their debtors. This principle is exemplified in all the law of the kingdom of Christ. "With what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged; and with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again." This is the perfect law of liberty which is established in the kingdom of Christ. It is written in the heart of those who are born of God, and it cannot be fulfilled by any who have not been called out of the darkness of death in sin, and translated into the kingdom of the dear Son of God. Even the saints can walk in obedience to this heavenly rule only as it is wrought in them both to will and to do by the Spirit of God which leads them. Their natural or carnal mind can no more produce the forgiveness which flows from true charity, than can the mind of the sinner who never knew the power of divine grace.

"And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil." While it is plainly written that "God cannot be tempted with evil, neither tempteth he any man," yet for the trial of the faith of his saints, and to teach them the strength and faithfulness of his grace, he does give the adversary the power from time to time to assail them with temptations by which their faith is tried. In all these trials they are kept by his power, and his grace is shown to be sufficient for them. He will not suffer them to be tempted above that they are able; but will with the temptation also make a way to escape, that they may be able to bear it.—1 Cor. x. 13. It was in this way that Daniel and the three Hebrews were enabled to escape the den of lions and the seven times heated furnace. So the grace of God is magnified in the temptations which his saints are called to endure in all their sojourn here in time. They are not promised that they shall not endure temptations and tribulations; but they prove the truth of his word in finding that the grace of God is sufficient for them in every time of trial. Natural reason would presume upon this assuring truth to seek occasion for this display of the preserving care of God by willfully going in the way of temptation; but the Spirit of Christ ever prompts the prayer as taught by our Lord. So Jesus as our perfect Example met the suggestion of the devil, with the written word of God, "Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God."—Deut. vi. 16; Matt. iv. 7. The Spirit of Christ never moves the saints to try how far they may go into sin; but they are made to desire just what is expressed in this clause of the teaching of Jesus, that they be not subjected to the power of temptation, but that they may be delivered from evil. This does not simply include the distress and suffering attendant upon sin, but the prayer is for deliverance from the sin itself. In this desire is included that hunger and thirst after righteousness which identifies those who are the subjects of the blessing pronounced by our Lord in the commencement of this discourse. Every one who finds this prayer in his heart is therefore already blessed of our God.

In this prayer is also included the confession of conscious weakness and of the need of divine grace to keep the suppliant from the power of the evil which must be encountered. None can honestly utter such prayer until they have learned their own helplessness; and all such have fled for refuge to lay hold upon that hope which is set before the saints in Jesus as the only Savior of his people from their sins. None can know Jesus in this gracious character until they are taught of God as the truth is in Jesus. The fact that this prayer is in the heart is conclusive testimony that the praying one is led by the Spirit of God, and is a son of God, "Being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth forever."—1 Peter i. 23. No others know their need of that grace which is in Christ Jesus, in whom alone is the righteousness by which sinners are freely justified in the sight of divine justice.

"For thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, forever. Amen." Clearly as the sovereignty of God appears in the visible works of the material creation, it is one demonstration of the blindness of carnal reason that the natural mind never can understand this truth which is thus evidently displayed. To the letter of this declaration all professed believers of the Bible will agree; but when the doctrine of the inspired Scriptures is presented as it is taught in the experience of those who are led by the Spirit, the rebellion of the carnal mind rises at once, denying this very truth. In ascribing omnipotence to God, the pride of man is abased, as he is thus shown to be dependent upon the favor of God for all things, including even his own existence. This excludes all occasion for boasting in the works of man. No one can understandingly make the confession expressed in these closing words of the instruction given by our Lord, unless he has experimentally "seen an end of all perfection" in the works of finite creatures. The confession that the sovereignty here expressed belongs to God, forever silences all the arguments of those who deny that sovereignty in the salvation of his people from their sins. Although it is common for all opposers of the truth to repeat these words in their formal prayers, no false systems of religion can stand in the light of their truth, as revealed by the Spirit, any more than Dagon could stand in the presence of the ark of God, which his worshipers had taken and brought into his temple in Ashdod.—1 Sam. v.

When the saints are enabled by grace to confess that God is glorious in holiness, in the display of his sovereign will concerning them, in that confession they are comforted with the assurance of his unchanging faithfulness and love. They then rejoice in the truth, and rest in the full confidence of the faith which is in Christ Jesus. Feeling assured that the God of their salvation has the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, they have no occasion to fear the rage of hell and sin. Well may they joyfully say, in confessing this truth, and in reverential adoration, "Thine is the glory forever." And to this truth it is their happy privilege to respond, Amen. So they would have it established both now and evermore. And let all who love his holy name unite in saying, "Amen! Even so! Come, Lord Jesus."

POETRY.

THE TWO ARMIES.

WHEN first the Spirit plants new life within,
He gives a deadly blow to reigning sin;
His own sweet graces in the soul are felt,
And faith, and hope, and love, the spirit melt.

Love to the Lord is now an ardent flame,
And every one who loves the Savior's name

Is to the new-born babe an object dear;
He loves and trusts, confides and feels no fear.

But soon, alas! he feels a cruel smart;
His bosom friend hurls daggers at his heart;

Like false Ahithophel, when he turned round,
And a vile traitor to his king was found.

Our dearest friends oft draw our hearts from God,
And then they prove to us a smarting rod;

We fondly lean upon a broken reed,
And find it fails us in our greatest need.

Now disappointment sours the ardent mind,
And we exclaim, "No good in man we find!"

All, all are briery thorns, and nettles, too,
And as we lean on them they pierce us through.

Strife and contention, anger, rage and pride,
With cruel jealousy stand side by side;

Sin's hateful progeny within the breast
Rages and raves; the spirit cannot rest.

But does the ransomed soul submit to sin
Without resistance to the host within?

No; Christ's own children never can rest here;
Two armies in the Shulamite appear.

The Holy Spirit beams upon the soul,
The raging waves of passion to control;

"Peace, peace, be still," comes with a soothing power,
And lays the rebel prostrate in that hour.

Then such a view of self appear within,
With all the deadly mass of inbred sin;

So black a catalogue is brought to light,
Our brother's sins all vanish from our sight.

At Jesus' feet no discord rears its head;
That hateful demon for a time has fled;

O that we never more may feel its power,
But live in love and union every hour.

Till Jesus calls us from this earth away,
And frees us from the burden of this clay;

When in our home above we are shut in,
We shall forever be released from sin.

SOLOMON'S TEMPLE SPIRITUALIZED.

BY JOHN BUNYAN.

CHAPTER XXIV.

Of the pinnacles of the Temple.

THERE were also several pinnacles belonging to the temple. These pinnacles stood on the top, aloft in the air, and were sharp, and so were difficult to stand upon. What men say of their number and length I wave, and come directly to their signification. I therefore take those pinnacles to be types of those lofty, airy notions with which some men delight themselves, while they hover, like birds, above the solid truths of Christ. Satan attempted to entertain Christ with this type and anti-type at once, when he set him on one of the pinnacles of the temple, and offered to thrust him upon a false confidence in God, by a false and unsound interpretation of a text.—Matt. iv. 5, 9; Luke iv. 6, 10, 11.

You know some men cannot be content to worship in the temple, but must be aloft. No place will serve them but pinnacles, that they may be speaking in and to the air; that they may be promoting their heady notions, instead of solid truth; not considering that now they are where the devil would have them be. They strut upon their points, or pinnacles. But let them look to it; there is difficult standing upon pinnacles. Their neck, their soul, is in danger. We read that God is in his temple, and not upon these pinnacles.—Psalm xi. 4; Heb. ii. 20.

It is true that Christ was once upon one of these; but the devil set him there, with the intent to have dashed him in pieces by a fall; and yet even then told him that if he would venture to tumble down he should be kept from dashing his foot against a stone. To be there, therefore, was one of Christ's temptations, and consequently one of Satan's stratagems. Nor went Christ thither of his own accord, for he knew that there was danger. He loved not to clamber pinnacles.

This should teach christians to be low, and little in their own eyes, and forbear to intrude into airy and vain speculations, and to take heed of being puffed up with a foul and empty mind.

CHAPTER XXV.

Of the porters of the Temple.

THERE were porters belonging to the temple. In David's time their number was four thousand men.—1 Chron. xxiii. 5.

The porters were of the Levites, and their work was to watch at every gate of the house of the Lord; at the gate of the outer court, at the gates of the inner court, and at the door of the temple of the Lord.—2 Chron. xxv. 15.

The work of the porters, or rather the reason of their watching, was to see that none not duly qualified entered into the house of the Lord.

"And he set the porters at the gates of the house of the Lord, that none which was unclean in anything should enter in."—2 Chron. xxiii. 19.

The excellency of the porters lay in these three things, their watchfulness, diligence and valor, to make resistance to those that, as unfit, would attempt to enter those courts and the house of God.—1 Chron. xxvi. 6; Mark iii. 34.

These porters were types of gospel ministers, as they are set to be watchmen in and over the church and the holy things of God. Therefore, as Christ gives to every man in the church his work, so he commands the porter to watch.—Isa. xxi. 11; Ezek. iii. 17; xxxiii. 7; Acts xx. 27-31; 2 Tim. iv. 5; Rev. iii. 2, 3.

Sometimes every christian is said to be a porter; and such at Christ's first knock open unto him immediately.—Luke xii. 36-39. * * *

CHAPTER XXVI.

Of the charge of the porters of the Temple more particularly.

THE charge of the porters was to keep their watch, in four square, even round about the temple of God. Thus it was ordained by David, before him by Moses, and after him by Solomon his son.—1 Chron. ix. 24; Num. iii.; 2 Chron. xxiii. 19; xxxv. 15.

The porters had some of them the charge of the treasure chambers; some of them had the charge of the ministering vessels, even to bring them out by tale; also the opening and shutting of the gates of the house of the Lord was a part of their calling and office.

I told you the porters were types of gospel ministers, as they are watchmen, and over the house of God; and in that they were thus to watch round about the temple, what is it but to show how diligent Satan is to see if he can find a hole for that purpose?

This also showeth that the church of itself, without its watchmen, is a weak, feeble, and very helpless thing. What can the lady or mistress do to defend herself against the thieves and sturdy villains, if there be none but she at home? What would the temple do without its watchmen?

Again, in that the porters had charge of the treasure chambers (as it is, 1 Chron. ix. 26), it is to intimate that the treasures of the gospel are with the ministers of our God, and that the church, next to Christ, should seek them at their mouth. "We have this treasure in earthen vessels," saith Paul; and they are stewards of the manifold mysteries of God.—1 Cor. iv. 1; 2 Cor. iv. 7; 1 Peter iv. 10; Eph. iv. 11-13.

These are God's true scribes, and bring out of their treasury things new and old; or, as he saith in another place, "At our gates [that is, where our porters watch] are all manner of pleasant fruits, new and old, which I have laid up for thee, O my beloved."—Matt. xii. 52; Song vii. 13.

Further, some of them had charge of the ministering vessels, and they were to bring them in and out by tale.—1 Chron. ix. 18.

If by ministering vessels you understand gospel ordinances, then you see who has the charge of them, to wit, the watchmen and ministers of the word.—Luke i. 12; 2 Thess. ii. 15; 2 Tim. ii. 2.

If by the ministering vessels you mean the members of the church (for they are also ministering vessels), then you see who has the care of them, the pastors, the gospel ministers. Therefore, "Obey them that have the rule over you, and submit yourselves: for they watch for your souls, as they that must give account, that they may do it with joy, and not with grief; for that is unprofitable for you."—Heb. xiii. 17.

The conclusion then is, let the churches love their pastors, suffer themselves to be watched over, and to be exhorted, counseled, and, if need be, reproved and rebuked by their pastors. And let the ministers not sleep, but be watchful, and look to the ordinances, to the souls of the saints, and to the gates of the churches. Watchman! watchman! watch!

CHAPTER XXVII.

Of the doors of the Temple.

Now we come to the gate of the temple, namely, to that which let out of the porch into the holy place.

These doors or gates were folding, and they opened by degrees: first a quarter, then a half, after that three-quarters, and last of all the whole. These doors also hung upon hinges of gold, and upon posts made of the goodly olive tree.—1 Kings vi. 33, 34; Ezek. xli. 23, 24. These doors did represent Christ, as he is the way to the Father; as also did the door of the tabernacle, at which the people were wont to stand when they went to inquire of God. Wherefore Christ saith, "I am the door [alluding to this]: by me if any man enter in he shall be saved, and shall go in and out and find pasture."—Ex. xxxii. 6, 10; xxxviii. 8; xl. 22; Lev. i. 3, 4; viii. 3, 4; xv. 14; Num. vi. 13, 18; x. 3; xxv. 9; xxvii. 2; 1 Sam. ii. 22; John x. 9.

"I am the door"—the door into the court, the door into the porch, the door into the temple, the door into the holiest, the door unto the Father. But now we are at the door of the temple.

And observe it, this door by Solomon was not measured, as the door of the porch was; for though the door into the court and the door into the porch were measured, to show that the right to ordinances and the inlet into the church are to be according to a perfect rule, yet this door was not measured; to show that Christ, as he is the inlet to saving grace, is beyond all measure, and is unsearchable. Hence his grace is called unsearchable riches, and above all we can ask or think, for that it passeth knowledge.—Eph. iii. 8, 19, 20. It is therefore convenient that we put a note upon this, that we may distinguish rule and duty from grace and pardoning mercy. For, as I said, though Christ, as the door to outward privileges, is set forth by rule and measure, yet as he is the door to grace and favor, never a creature as yet did see the length and breadth of him.—Eph. iii. 17-19. Therefore, I say, this gate was not measured; for what should a rule do here, where things are beyond all measure?

This gate being also to open by degrees, is significant to us; for it will be opened first by one fold, then by another. "For now we see through a glass darkly; but then face to face. Now I know in part; but then shall I know even as also I am known."—1 Cor. xiii. 12.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

Of the leaves of this gate of the Temple.

THE leaves of this gate or door, as I told you before, were folding, and so, as was hinted, have something of signification in them. For by this means a man, especially a young disciple, may easily be mistaken, thinking that the whole passage, when yet but a part, was opened; whereas three parts might be kept undiscovered to him. Never yet man saw all the riches and fullness which is in Christ; so that, I say, a new comer, if he judgeth by present sight, especially if he saw but little, might easily be mistaken; whereas such, for the most part, are most horribly afraid that they shall never get in thereat.

How sayest thou, young comer? Is not this the case with thy soul? So it seems to thee that thou art too big, being so great a sinner. But, O thou sinner, fear not; the doors are folding doors, and may be opened wider, and wider again after that. Wherefore when thou comest to this gate and imaginest there is not space enough for thee to enter, knock, and it shall be opened unto thee, and thou shalt be received.—Luke xi. 9; John ix. 37. So then, whoever thou art, that art come to the door of which the temple door was a type, trust not to first conceptions of things, but believe there is grace abundant. Thou knowest not yet what Christ can do: the doors are folding doors. He can do exceeding abundant above all that we ask or think.—Eph. iii. 20.

The hinges on which these doors do hang are, as I told you, of gold; to signify that they both turned upon motives and motions of love, and also that the openings thereof are rich. Golden hinges the gate to God doth turn upon.

The posts on which the doors did hang were of the olive tree, that fat and oily tree, to show that they do never open with lothness or sluggishness, as doors do whose hinges want oil. They are always oily, and so open easily and quickly to those who knock at them. Hence you read that he that dwells in this house gives freely, loves freely, and doth us good with all his heart. "Yea," he saith, "I will rejoice over them to do them good, and I will plant them in this land assuredly with my whole heart and with my whole soul."—Jer. iii. 12, 14, 22; xxxii. 41; Rev. xxi. 9; xxii. 17.

Wherefore the oil of grace, signified by this oily tree, or these olive posts, on which these doors did hang, causes that they open glibly or frankly to the soul.

MARRIAGES.

ON Dec. 29th, 1888, at the residence of the bride's parents, by Elder Zinn, Mr. George Furman and Miss Ella Barb, both of Monongalia Co., W. Va.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—Please insert a notice of the death of my dear brother, John W. Staton, of Snow Hill, Worcester Co., Md. The telegram says he died last night.

Your unworthy brother in deep affliction,

JOSEPH L. STATON.

NEWARK, Del., Jan. 29, 1889.

"FOR I know that thou wilt bring me to death, and to the house appointed for all living."—Job xxx. 23.

Mrs. Hanna Hill died at her residence near Rock Springs, Cecil Co., Md., in the seventy-third year of her age.

Our sister was a devoted member of the little church at Rock Springs. She was made willing to follow her divine Lord and Master in the ordinance of baptism, which was administered by the writer of this notice, Sept. 11th, 1870, in which relation she remained steadfast unto the end, patient in affliction, meek in her own eyes, and lowly in mind, looking for that blessed hope. Probably she came about as near being reconciled to her lot as any one. She was attacked with something like paralysis some years ago, and seemed gradually to grow more feeble, both in mind and body, until death. Her funeral was attended on Jan. 8th, 1889, at Rock Springs. She leaves a family of four sons and one daughter, who will miss a devoted mother; one son in particular, who is afflicted. May he fall into the hands of kind friends.

WM. GRAFTON.

FOREST HILL, Md., Jan. 16, 1889.

Sarah Isabel Dolton departed this life near Amity, Mo., Dec. 18th, 1888.

Sister Sarah was the wife of brother Joseph H. Dolton, and was fifty years, one month and one day old. She was born in De Kalb Co., Mo., and was the daughter of brother Wm. T. and sister Hannah Thornton, and was united in marriage to J. H. Dolton on Dec. 1st, 1859. In March, 1870, sister Sarah and her husband were received into fellowship by the Salem Church of Regular Baptists, and were baptized by the pastor, Elder E. C. Moore. I have known the deceased for more than twenty years, and she has always been a faithful and promising member, filling her seat in the church when not providentially hindered. She suffered six months with a complication of diseases, which terminated in urinic poison. She seemed to have a presentiment of her condition, and said she was ready and willing to go. She leaves a sorrowing husband, one daughter, five sons, a father, brothers, sisters, a host of friends, together with the church, to mourn. May the good Lord bless and comfort the bereaved.

C. C. MOORE.

OSBORN, Mo., Jan. 8, 1889.

Rachel Verbryck departed this life Dec. 4th, 1888. Brother Durand preached her funeral sermon on the 6th. She was born July 16th, 1800, and was married to her husband, Benjamin Verbryck (whose obituary appeared in the SIGNS two or three years ago), in December, 1817. She experienced a bright hope, and was baptized in May following by Elder Vanvelsan. She heard Elder G. Beebe when he first spoke in New York City, a mere boy. She and her family came to Terrytown, Bradford Co., Pa., in 1832, and lived near my father. We became very much attached to each other, and that love and attachment has never grown cold. She was a member of the Asylum Church at the time of her death, which occurred at the residence of her son Benjamin, in Long Island City, N. Y. She leaves six children, three sons and three daughters, with the church of which she was a worthy member, to mourn their loss.

ABBIE DODGE.

WYALUSING, Pa., Jan. 25, 1889.

Mrs. Harriet Wilson was born in Bradford Co., Pa. She was a daughter of Wm. and Rhoda Crofford, and emigrated to Ohio when young. She was married to Joseph Wilson in 1841, and became the mother of eight children, six now living. She never united with any church, but had a lively hope in Christ, and always attended the Baptist meetings. She was a devoted wife, a kind mother and a good neighbor. She died Sept. 24th, 1888, in the seventieth year of her age. Her funeral was preached by the writer, from 1 Cor. xv. 3, 4, to a very large congregation; after which her body was buried in the Chelcy Church cemetery, there to await the resurrection.

ALSO,

Joseph Wilson, her dear husband, was born in Maryland in 1821. His parents moved to the state of Ohio when young, and at about the age of twenty years he joined one of the churches of the Sciota Association of Old School Baptists, in Ohio, and soon afterward was married. He obtained a letter and emigrated to Jo Daviess County, Ill., and was one of the members in the constitution of the Providence Church of Regular Predestinarian Baptists, in Jo Daviess Co., Ill., where he lived a worthy member until his death, which took place Jan. 15th, 1889, aged sixty-seven years and nine months. He leaves six children (three boys and three girls) and eighteen grandchildren, with the church and a host of friends, to mourn their loss; but they do not mourn as those that have no hope.

The writer tried to preach a discourse on the occasion from 1 Cor. xv. 18: "If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable." After which we laid his mortal body by the side of his wife.

BENJAMIN SALLEE.

WARREN, Ill., Jan. 22, 1889.

DIED—Sister Katherine Carter, of Aldie, Loudoun Co., Va., Dec. 30th, 1888, aged nearly eighty-four years.

Sister Carter was married to brother Wm. Carter, of Prince William Co., Va., fifty-two years ago; hence they have lived together more than half a century. A faithful wife, a devoted mother, and an exemplary christian, she filled the measure of her days, and in a ripe old age has been gathered home to receive that reward promised all those who love the appearing of the Lord Jesus. She was baptized by Elder R. C. Leachman, in August, 1867, in the fellowship of the Quantico Church. About ten years ago the family moved to Aldie, Loudoun Co., Va., and the membership of brother and sister Carter and their daughter (sister Sophia) was removed to Mt. Zion Church, in that county. All the brethren who were favored with an acquaintance with her can testify to the gentleness of her disposition, her patience in affliction, her faithfulness in the church, and her love for the truth and for those who love the truth. Even down to old age she experienced the faithfulness of Israel's God to his promise to be with his people. Although she was made to walk in darkness often, her strength was firm, and she longed to depart and be at rest. The last messenger came suddenly, but she welcomed him gladly. Her disease was pneumonia. She was sick only five days, but her suffering was intense, and it was a relief to the afflicted family when the end came.

A husband and four children, with several grandchildren and great-grandchildren, are left to mourn. Brother Carter feels his loss deeply. He is left lonely in his old age, but he is much blessed in the loving care of a devoted daughter, sister Sophia. May God bless and comfort the afflicted, and make them realize that it is good to be afflicted.

J. N. BADGER.

NEW BALTIMORE, Va., Jan. 21, 1889.

DIED—In Howe's Valley, Hardin Co., Ky., Jan. 12th, 1889, Elder E. W. Keith, in his seventy-eighth year.

The Lord has removed from our midst a faithful, humble, meek and devoted servant of God, without ostentation, and always deeply in earnest; no lightness, no jesting; prudent, just and good; free to communicate the things which God had taught him, even the deep things of God; for his God was pleased to bless him with no small degree of wisdom, knowledge, and spiritual understanding; but for many years he was under sore affliction, and preached but seldom.

Having lost his dear companion some years since, he lived rather a lonely life, often visiting his beloved brother, Sam. Hansbrough, and his relatives where he died. He retained his mind to the last. He leaves behind him a son and daughter, and several grandchildren, to mourn the loss of an affectionate and beloved father. We were present at his ordination (Elders Ben. Keith and James L. Fullilove officiating), some forty-five years since, and have been intimately associated with him until his decease. Precious brother! We weep not for him, but for the loss of his blessed society. He was one of the ablest defenders of truth and gospel in the Otter Creek Association, composed of a number of churches and a thousand or more members; but after the late war it seemed that God removed the candlesticks, and the churches failed to meet for worship. After a season it pleased some of the fathers to assemble together at their different homes for the purpose of social conversation upon the things of the kingdom of God. Elder E. W. Keith, of Larue County, J. E. Little, of Nelson, Elder J. L. Fullilove, Elder Ben. Keith, Dick Richards and Sam. Hansbrough, of Hardin County, Pouncey Nuckold and Isaac Smith, of Barren County, and the writer, are about the number that met together from house to house and from time to time. Our deceased brother took much interest in these meetings; and indeed they were refreshing seasons to all, as all expressed freely the dealings of God with them in opening their understanding of his blessed word. One of these meetings especially will never be forgotten. While assembled at brother Hansbrough's two of the party were conversing of the things of the New Testament, when the awful presence of God seemed to pervade the whole room, and both saint and sinner were melted into tears. The fathers expressed themselves as having seen no such a time for many years. But now the Lord has called them home. Brother Sam. Hansbrough and the writer only are left to mourn our loss.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date, this date denotes the time at which your subscription expires, and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

POETRY.

ALL IN ALL IN JESUS.

WHAT though fierce winds, shifting, shifting,

Wildly toss my tiny bark?
What though I seem drifting, drifting,
Unto shipwreck in the dark?
I've a cable strong and mighty,
That will stand severest shock;
And I fear no tossing billow,
For I'm anchored to the Rock.

What though all life's journey, journey,
Bringeth naught but weary hours?
What though all is thorny, thorny,
Showing never aught of flowers?
Caring not, I to my bosom
Clasp more close a cluster rare—
"Israel's Lily," meek and lowly,
And the "Rose of Sharon fair."

What though friends seem leaving, leaving

Me to walk my way alone;
And my heart is grieving, grieving
For the days that now are flown?
Whispered One at the beginning,
"I'll be with thee to the end;"
And, unseen to mortal vision,
He still proves a changeless Friend.

What though night grows deeper, deeper,
And the glimmering day is past;
Though the weary seeker, seeker
Longs for the sweet rest at last?
Yet I know, when all is ready,
And the Father's time is right,
I shall, with my longings ended,
At the "even-time" have light.

What though hearts are yearning, yearn-
ing

For the loved of long ago;
Bitter lessons learning,
From the shadowy page of woe?
To our pleadings the great Teacher,
Bending o'er us from above,
Whispers ever, "Trust me, children;
All the chastening's done in love."

1 THESSALONIANS IV. 13-18.

THE Lord of glory, life and love
Descended from the heavens above,
His people from their sins to save,
And rescue them from every grave.

He died for them upon the cross—
Not one of them can e'er be lost;
For he atoned for all their sin,
And by his Spirit brings them in.

And when their bodies are laid down,
To rest awhile beneath the ground,
He never does forget the place,
But knows them all, of every race.

And when the last loud trump shall sound,
To wake the nations under ground,
They all shall come forth out of death,
And henceforth breathe the eternal breath.

All their vile bodies shall be changed,
In heavenly order be arranged,
To meet King Jesus in the skies,
And gaze on him with heavenly eyes.

Thus he will take them to that rest
He has prepared for all the blest;
All toil and sorrow will be o'er,
And they shall praise him evermore.

CORRESPONDENCE.

HOPEWELL, N. J., Feb. 6, 1889.

BRETHREN BEEBE:—I am about to write a communication, which I wish you to publish in the SIGNS; and the portion of Scripture chosen to base the remarks on is the following: "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." The reason that the preceding Scripture has been selected is that letters have come to hand with such questions as, "What do you believe?" "Where do you stand?" And a brother recently said, in a letter, after making some general remarks, "There is a feeling here, and I partake of the same, that you owe it to yourself and to your friends to let all distinctly know whether you indorse or not the absurdity contended for, that the sinner (as such) is born again; if the sinner (the seed of the earthly Adam) was chosen in Christ before the foundation of the world," &c. And many other questions of like import from various persons.

I do not now think of one who has said, What does the Scripture say? Neither are any of the questions proposed in Scripture language, but a formula of words to suit their own notions. In what is about to be written, I shall not enter into any argument, in order to meet or silence the rationalism, metaphysics, neology, gnosticism, and other carnal vagaries now advocated, but shall strictly adhere to Scripture testimony.

In the year 1849, the last Sunday in the month of September, in the state of Maine, I read for a text (it being the first time I had attempted to expound a portion of Scripture) the following declarations: "Thou shalt call his name Jesus; for he shall save his people from their sins." I think I have never doubted the truth of that inspired declaration of "the angel of the Lord," since I used it for a text, but have doubted many times whether I am one of the redeemed of the Lord. Right here, before proceeding any farther, I feel it very necessary to remark that, when speaking or writing on any principle of the doctrine of God our Savior, great care should be taken, if possible, to do so, and keep each branch of truth in its proper place; for instance, redemption, spiritual birth, salvation, and all other distinct principles of the doctrine; for sometimes the three great and important principles just named are so mixed as to constitute a perversion of all three of them.

The Scripture declaration says, Jesus "shall save his people from their sins." Therefore, if they are to be saved from sins, they certainly must be sinners. The declaration of the prophet is, "Yet it pleased the Lord to bruise him: he hath put him to grief. When thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin, he shall see his seed, he shall prolong his days, and the pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hand. He shall see of the travail of his soul, and shall be satisfied. By his knowledge shall my righteous servant justify [not simply pardon, but justify] many; for he shall bear their iniquities." How could their iniquities be borne, if there were none to be borne? Read the fortieth Psalm, in which the speaker is the Messiah, and see into what an horrible pit his covenant relation to his church brought him. Said the apostle Paul, "For he hath made him (to be) sin for us, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him." Said the apostle Peter, "Who his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree, that we, being dead to sins, should live unto righteousness: by whose stripes ye were healed." Also said Paul, "This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptance, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners, of whom I am chief." But he does not say, Of whom I was chief, but am now a better man.

If it has not been proven that sinners are redeemed and saved by Jesus Christ, it is useless to attempt to prove that the term sinner is in the Bible. It should be carefully noticed that the declarations of Scripture thus far quoted have been adduced to show that sinners are the subjects of redemption and salvation; and not a passage of holy writ can be found to sustain the vagary that eternal, spiritual life ever sinned or died; consequently spiritual, eternal life was not redeemed, but sinners. And a host more of scriptural declarations might be brought forward to sustain and corroborate the same glorious truth.

Now we will see what the Scripture says concerning the spiritual birth. Jesus said unto Nicodemus, "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born again [margin, from above], he cannot see the kingdom of God. Nicodemus saith unto him, How can a man be born when he is old? Can he enter the second time into his mother's womb, and be born? Jesus answered, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God. That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit. Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again." These declarations of Jesus are of awful moment; for they are declarations of facts; and, when we receive them as little children, we shall not go to theorizing and querying, by asking, "Is the sinner interested in that birth? What part of the man is made spiritual?" &c. As the inspired Scripture is profitable for doctrine, we will now see what inspired apostles say about the matter. Peter says, "According as his divine power hath given unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness, through the knowledge of him that hath called us to glory and virtue: whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises, that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust." If these words of Peter do not show that "the vessels of mercy, which he had afore prepared unto glory," are interested in the spiritual birth, then there is no meaning in terms, and the law of language has no force whatever.

Right here, before proceeding any farther, it seems necessary to insert what may be justly termed a "caveat;" for there seems to be a disposition, when reading a communication, sometimes, "to beg the question;" that is, turn sentences from their true and legitimate meaning. Therefore we wish it distinctly understood that the Scripture does not say that the man is born over again; neither can it be found that any inspired apostle says the Adamic man is made spiritual; but he is made a partaker of the divine nature, a recipient of spiritual life; therefore, not only interested, but at times a wondering admiration causes him to rejoice in the God of his salvation. And the feet that once took him to the assembly of them whose practice habitually is folly, vice and crime, now take him to the assembly of the children of God. The tongue that once blasphemed the name of the Lord, is now used to lisp his praise. And the hands that once would smite the saints, are now used to minister to their wants. Does a man thus converted show that he is not interested? Says Paul, "But when it pleased God, who separated me from my mother's womb, and called me by his grace, to reveal his Son in me [not to me, nor to something else, but me, Paul], that I might preach him among the heathen, immediately I conferred not with flesh and blood." "Now, if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his. And if Christ be in you, the body is dead because of sin; but the Spirit is life because of righteousness." If the seventh, eighth and ninth chapters of the epistle to the Romans are read with a child-like spirit, and with the fear of God in the heart, it will soon be seen whether the sinner, Paul, as well as his brethren at Rome, were interested in the all-important matter of the spiritual birth or not. John says of Christ, "He came unto his own, and his own received him not. But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name; which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of man, but of God." "Now, to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, And to seeds, as of many; but as of one, And to thy seed, which is Christ." "To whom God would make known what is the riches of the glory of this mystery among the Gentiles, which is Christ in you the hope of glory." "But I keep under my body, and bring it into subjection, lest that by any means, when I have preached to others, I myself should be a castaway." Who or what would be a castaway, if the body was not kept under and brought into subjection? Eternal, spiritual life? No; but Paul, the apostle. And in "every age" of the gospel dispensation the church has had painful examples of what Paul affirmed; for not only individual members of the church, but ministers, have become castaways on account of their vile conduct. But how could such things be if men, sinners of Adam's fallen race, were not interested? And be it remembered that ministers of the gospel have to preach, not only by verbal declarations from the pulpit and other places, but by their course of life; for if they deliver sound doctrine orally, and their course of life shows them to be under the dominion of principles exactly opposite what they preach, sooner or later their usefulness will cease, and they become castaways. "Be not deceived: God is not mocked; for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he [not some one else, but the man who does the sowing] also reap. For he that soweth to his flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit, shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting." Enough Scripture has been quoted to show that the creature, man, is not only interested in the spiritual birth, but deeply interested; for a salvation follows that birth in his time state—a salvation from error, from folly, from vice and immorality. Said the apostle James, "Brethren, if any of you do err from the truth, and one convert him, let him know that he which converteth the sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death, and shall hide a multitude of sins." To quote all the Scripture which shows that the sinner is interested (not born over again, nor made into spirit, while in the flesh), would be to transcribe a large portion of the New Testament.

Now we will see what the Scripture says about God's children being chosen in Christ. "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ, according as he hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before him in love; having predestinated us unto the adoption of children [not to be adopted children, but unto the adoption of children] by Jesus Christ to himself, according to the good pleasure of his will." Now, why not be willing to receive the divine testimony, without asking, "Do you believe that the flesh, blood and bones of the sinner were chosen in Christ?" In answer to such caviling, we emphatically state that there will be no miscarriage concerning the flesh, blood and bones; because no vessel of mercy will be lost sight of; and flesh, blood and bones are required to constitute a vessel of mercy. "For no man ever hated his own flesh, but nourisheth and cherisheth it, even as the Lord the church: for we are members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones." And there are a number of other passages treating upon the same members, but too much space would be occupied were all of them quoted. Said Jesus to his disciples, "Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you, that ye should go and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit should remain; that whatsoever ye shall ask of the Father in my name, he may give it you." Was the choice of these disciples here on earth counter to the choice in the eternal mind of God? No; but a manifestation of his purpose here on earth. For "he is in one mind, and who can turn him? And what his soul desireth, even that he doeth." Said the Messiah, "My substance was not hid from thee when I was made in secret, and curiously wrought in the lowest parts of the earth. Thine eyes did see my substance, yet being unperfect; and in thy book all my members were written, which in continuance were fashioned, when as yet there was none of them." "And I will sow her unto me in the earth; and I will have mercy upon her that had not obtained mercy; and I will say to them which were not my people [under the legal dispensation, but Gentiles under the gospel dispensation, made nigh by the blood of Christ], Thou art my people; and they shall say, Thou art my God." Said the dear Redeemer, "As thou hast sent me into the world, even so have I also sent them into the world." Was not Christ sent into the world clothed with a mantle of flesh and blood? Said the apostle James, "Hearken, my beloved brethren. Hath not God chosen the poor of this world, rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which he hath promised to them that love him?" Upon the day of Pentecost Peter said, "For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." Who or what was afar off? It could not be eternal, spiritual life; therefore it must have been sinners of Adam's fallen race that were afar off by wicked works. And the calling did not make the promise, but was the result following the promise, at God's appointed time. In these things, testified so clearly and fully in the Scriptures, the glorious, soul-cheering, heart-comforting and God-honoring doctrine of the absolute predestination of all things shines with resplendent majesty.

Having answered in Scripture language the questions propounded, I feel like closing this communication with some general remarks. I have had a visible connection with the Old School or Bible Baptists for more than forty years, whether worthy to be with them as a people or not; during which period I have written quite a number of articles upon various principles of the doctrine of God our Savior, nearly all of which have been published, as well as a number of Circular Letters for the associations with which I have been connected. During that long period I have neither been awed by fear nor enticed by carnal sympathy to swerve one iota from what I have understood to be Bible truth; and I feel at the present time not only willing, but ready, to defend every sentiment published; and it now seems rather peculiar that I must be "catechised" so closely as to what I believe; for it makes not any difference what I believe, or that man holds to, or those men preach, or what doctrine an association holds, if the belief and the doctrine are not sustained by the Scriptures of eternal truth. If there has been any change in my mind concerning the truth of God, I am not aware of it. The belief of men and the doctrine of associations are very unsafe tribunals to have confidence in. The apostle Paul declared the gospel to his Corinthian brethren, "in demonstration of the Spirit and of power; that your faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God."

Divine truth, when cordially received, always produces effects corresponding to its own nature, and clothes the blessed recipient with a child-like spirit, and will not lead such an one to caviling, and to feel to show how "smart" he is; for that man who has seen the glory of God shine in the atonement of Christ, and has the hope that he has been redeemed by the precious blood of Christ, cannot in his character and habitual conduct exhibit the dominion of principles exactly contrary to what he has received; but the mere nominal professor will, at some time, especially when matters do not suit him. A genuine believer cannot be an unjust and implacable man; for he has seen the highest display of divine compassion toward his own guilty soul; and as he is affected thereby, he will be kind, tender-hearted, ready to forgive injuries, as God for Christ's sake has forgiven him. For as the seal leaves exactly its own impression on the melted wax, so does the divine truth on the mind of that person who has experienced the power of grace.

But I feel to say no more. May the writer of this, as well as all who have patience to read it, say from the heart, as did David, "Search me, O God, and know my heart; try me, and know my thoughts; and see if there be any wicked way in me, and lead me in the way everlasting."

Brethren editors, as I have not taxed your patience for some time with anything like a communication to be printed, I wish you to print this; and I feel responsible as an individual for what it contains. I have not written in a spirit of recrimination, but, I hope, in the fear of God. But as I have so many questions propounded, I have felt it binding upon me to deliver myself clearly, fully and unequivocally upon the cardinal principles involved in the questions; yet I am satisfied that if called to preach the gospel of the grace of God, it is not binding upon me to attempt to answer all the questions which may be asked me, for some have been propounded that the angels in heaven could not answer.

I wish to say to them who are so anxious to explain philosophically the whys and wherefores of God's purposes, if all who profess to love the truth of God were enabled by reigning and abounding grace to renounce their own carnal wisdom, and follow implicitly the obvious meaning of the written word of God, there would be an avoiding of so many "foolish and unlearned questions, knowing that they do gender strifes." "But avoid foolish questions, and genealogies, and contentions, and strivings about the law; for they are unprofitable and vain." "As ye have therefore received Christ Jesus the Lord, so walk ye in him; rooted and built up in him, stablished in the faith, as ye have been taught, abounding therein with thanksgiving. Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy or vain deceit, after the tradition of men, after the rudiments of the world, and not after Christ." The glorious doctrine taught in the Scriptures is not to be held chargeable with the vain theorizing and speculations now being advocated; and what a deplorable state of mind persons must be in when their own narrow and limited views are made the standard, and that they will treat the declarations of Scripture as they would the testimony of a suspected witness on the stand, receiving his evidence only as it harmonizes with their own apprehensions of matters. What is such a course but the very summit of unthinking arrogance? "The secret things belong unto the Lord our God; but those things which are revealed belong unto us, and to our children forever, that we may do all the words of this law."

WILLIAM J. PURINGTON.

SUTHERLAND'S CORNERS, Ontario.

DEAR SISTER IN CHRIST JESUS:—Sometimes in my thoughts I contemplate the whole body of Christ, which is his fullness (Eph. i. 23); and feeling some emotions of love for the church, whom the beloved Lord Jesus has redeemed from all iniquity by his precious blood, I do indeed find desires springing up within my heart for the true prosperity and peace of Zion. At other times my thoughts are engaged concerning this or that member of the body of Christ in particular; and though absent from them, and perhaps unknown by face unto them, yet that secret, precious bond that unites all the family of God binds me, I hope, to them, and produces in my heart a godly solicitude for their welfare in the kingdom of God. I have felt also the preciousness of the truth that the body is "unto the edifying of itself in love."—Eph. iv. 16. The members are placed in the body as it pleaseth God, and are all necessary, whether it be the eye, the hand, or the foot; and the members of the body of Christ have gifts differing. Therefore all have not the same office; but the Lord gave some apostles, and some prophets, and some evangelists, and some pastors and teachers, for the edifying of the body of Christ. In how many ways do we see that this is so! We are now living in an age wherein the people of God are able to communicate one with another concerning the precious things of Christ, which in but a small degree belonged to the past; the knowledge of reading and writing, the benefits of a cheap postal system, and the printing press sending forth its abundance of cheap religious literature. While these things are used by the world to advance worldly and worldly religious interests, nevertheless much benefit has been reaped by the children of God, who have been able to communicate in writing one to another their knowledge and experience of the doctrine of God our Savior. Many a time has my heart been cheered while reading the record of some of the things experienced, under the teaching of the Holy Ghost, by some one or another of God's elect whom I have never seen, and never expect to see while here in this tabernacle of clay. This was especially so some years ago. Then I felt as though I were alone; for, with the exception of some of my kindred in the flesh, I found none with whom I could hold communion in the things of Jesus Christ. Then I would read some precious communications published in the Gospel Standard; and though the ocean and thousands of miles separated us, I felt I was not alone in the world, but that I had dear companions in the same pathway, wayfaring men, dear and beloved kindred in Christ, in England. Of late years I have found out many in America with whom I can and do hold sweet fellowship in the gospel, and the blessed Lord has been pleased to give me a lot and portion among some of his children in gospel church fellowship. Here I have felt to have a home; and though trials have been my lot, and grief has often been my meat, yet I have felt it to be a precious privilege to walk with those of like precious faith who feed upon the doctrine of the dear Lamb of God, and with them to observe whatsoever he has commanded his people, and to walk in the order of the house of God.—Matt. xxviii. 20; 1 Tim. iii. 15.

I often think of you, and many more like you, dear sister, who are comparatively isolated, and cut off from meeting with the blood-bought household in their solemn assemblies to worship the Lord God of hosts. When thus the people of God are assembled, and verily worship God in spirit and in truth, it is then a time and place wherein they feel, "This is none other but the house of God, and this the gate of heaven." But all this is in the gift and power of the Lord alone; for the people of God may meet together and have preaching, singing and prayer, may observe all the form, and yet all be in vain, and utterly destitute of acceptable worship in the sight of our God, who is a consuming fire. In Revelation the Lord says, "I will spue thee out of my mouth." But an apostle, speaking in the Holy Ghost, saith, "Wherefore we receiving a kingdom which cannot be moved, let us have grace, whereby we may serve God acceptably with reverence and godly fear: for our God is a consuming fire."—Heb. xii. 28, 29. Do we not, dear friend, often feel our need of this very grace of God to help us in time of need? This is a time often felt by me, so many are the needs that daily press upon me. I find all the resources of creature ability utterly insufficient; but I am given most blessedly to prove that in our dear Lord I have "enough and to spare." O the inexhaustible fullness of Christ! All his people's needs he will supply. A few hours ago I hit upon these lines, expressive of much that my soul passes through. "They wonder Jehovah should single them out, And cause them to hear his sweet voice; They wonder sometimes that their hearts are so hard; They wonder they cannot rejoice.

"And sometimes they wonder they cannot believe,
And wonder what can be the matter;
And thus they go wondering day after day,
And wonder sometimes they're no better.

"But sometimes they wonder that things are not worse,
And bless God things are as they are;
'Tis then they can thank him for wonderful grace,
That has brought their poor souls on so far."

As soon as I had written the above I was called away from my writing; and since then, while attending to various things, though the time has been very short, what a multitude of things, and what a variety of internal emotions, has my poor soul passed through! Not many minutes after I dropped my pen I went groaning and weeping in spirit over that which no mortal eye could discern, even "sin that dwelleth in me." Saith Jesus, "Out of the heart proceed evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornications, thefts, false witness, blasphemies: these are the things which defile a man."—Matthew xv. 19, 20. My sinfulness causes me so often to go mourning and sighing in the bitterness of my soul, with Job, "Behold, I am vile!" but surely it cannot be that he or any one has been so vile as I! Though one's life and behavior be such in the sight of men as to cause their admiration and call forth their praise, and such a walk as any Pharisee would be contented with, all, all is hateful, all is loathsome, to me, for I see and feel that all my righteousnesses are as filthy rags!

"Jesus, my sorrow lies too deep for human ministry;
It knows not how to tell itself to any but to thee!

Thou dost remember still, amid the glories of God's throne,
The sorrows of mortality, for they were once thine own.

Yes; for, as if thou wouldst be God, e'en in thy misery,

There's been no sorrow but thine own untouched by sympathy.

Jesus, my fainting spirit brings its wretchedness to thee;

Thine eye at least can penetrate the clouded mystery.

And is it not enough, enough, thy holy sympathy?

Then there's no sorrow e'er so deep but I would tell to thee."

I was favored to tell Jesus how hateful and bitter my vileness was to me. O what longings for salvation did I prove welling up from my distressed soul! and then receiving the felt evidence that "My Beloved is mine, and I am his." I was enabled to "greatly rejoice" in the comfortable hope of salvation in Jesus. "Unto you therefore which believe he is precious." I found it to be so. O how many times have I proved this to the consolation of my heart, that in Jesus is all my salvation and all my desire!

"In every office he sustains,
In every victory he gains,
In every counsel of his will,
He's precious to his people still."

Thus here a little and there a little it is given one to taste the tender mercy of our God, and to sing in grateful notes of heavenly praise, ascribing "Blessing, and honor, and glory, and power, unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb forever and ever. Amen."

While we are "here in the body pent" troubles we must undergo. The two armies in the Shulamite will war one against the other. O how bitter are these conflicts! But we have everlasting peace in the Lord Jehovah.—Isa. xxvi. 4. Jesus has said, and I prove it true, "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid." "In the world ye shall have tribulation: but be of good cheer; I have overcome the world." Then there is hope of eternal victory to all the blood-bought of Jesus Christ. I sometimes long for and anticipate the day (it will be eternal day) when, in the resurrection, we shall be changed, and fashioned like unto Jesus. For "when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? The sting of death is sin; and the strength of sin is the law. But thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." O should we not, dear sister, be most miserable without the divine hope of complete salvation? In a little while our sojourning and journeying in this clay tenement as wayfaring men will be over, and we shall sigh and groan no more.

"O'er all our foes we'll victory gain,
And with Emanuel ever reign."

My soul is humbled in the thought of such a glorious hope. O how sovereign is the grace of God that bringeth salvation! Dear sister in the Lord, I often feel it is a wonder of wonders that the grace of God has brought salvation to me. But grace reigns through righteousness unto eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord. He is not a throne of grace, but Jesus is "the throne of grace."—Heb. iv. 16. All I desire, all I truly need, I find summed up in Jesus; and this is not what I proved some years ago only, but what I am taught and given to find from day to day. "Blessed be the name of the Lord." O that I could love, praise and adore the Lord our God forevermore! Here our praises are mixed with murmurings; but when time shall be no more, and we arrive in glory, nothing then shall mar our peace, nothing shall disturb our joy in and everlasting worship of God the Father, Word and Holy Ghost.

"We look and we long for thy glorious appearing;

Thy pleasure at home we more fully shall know;
Safe lodged in thy arms, all thy glory then sharing,

Nor leave thee forever, ah, never, O no!

"No more shall we mourn that thy face thou'rt concealing;

No Satan, no sin (base intruders below!);
But ever behold thee, fresh glories revealing;
Amen! hallelujah! Come, Lord, even so!"

I will bring my writing to a close, sincerely hoping this may find you in the enjoyment of a measure of health, and favored to rejoice in Christ Jesus, having no confidence in the flesh.

I am, I hope, your brother in Jesus,
FRED. W. KEENE.

WELLSFORD, Kan., Jan. 1, 1889.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—In my reply to a communication written by J. M. Duley, and recently published in the SIGNS, there is a mistake. He, I suppose, aimed to quote from Acts xxvi. 18; but I understood him to quote from Romans, and I thought he made the quotation different from what he did, and that is the reason why I replied to him as I did. He made the quotation correct, but put a wrong construction upon it. He quoted it to prove that the dead sinner's eyes were opened by and through Paul's preaching. I take the position that the characters under consideration were not dead in sin and destitute of spiritual life. The quotation reads, "To open their eyes, and to turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God: that they may receive forgiveness of sins, and inheritance among them which are sanctified by faith that is in me." Now, if the quotation did apply to the dead sinner, what would it prove for an Arminian? They say that salvation is conditional, and depends upon a certain work to be performed by the sinner; that the sinner must get up and make the start, and then Christ will meet him on the half-way ground. I heard a Missionary preacher say once, in presence of a large concourse of people, that there need not one sinner leave the place without religion. And they say that if you are not religious you can become so at any time. So the sinner is not dependent upon the Lord, but the Lord is dependent upon the sinner. But if the dead sinner has to act, in order to eternal life, how could Paul open their eyes, and turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan to God, until they act? Now, if the preacher can turn them without their action, why tell them they must first act, in order to eternal life? So there is nothing in the quotation for an Arminian, for the action of the sinner is not mentioned in it. If the Bible nowhere contradicted the view that it is the business of the preacher to open the eyes of the dead sinner, and turn them from darkness to light, it would look more reasonable to put that construction upon the above quotation; but as the Bible contradicts that position, we cannot admit it. It is said in Isaiah that God "will come and save you. Then the eyes of the blind shall be opened, and the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped." Again, Isaiah xlii. 6-8, "I the Lord have called thee in righteousness, and will hold thine hand, and will keep thee, and give thee for a covenant of the people, for a light of the Gentiles; to open the blind eyes, to bring out the prisoners from the prison, and them that sit in darkness out of the prison house. I am the Lord, that is my name; and my glory will I not give to another, neither my praise to graven images." The Lord declares here that it is his work to open the blind eyes, and declares he will not give his glory to another. But the Arminians think he has given it to the preacher. Whose eyes was it then that Paul opened? The eyes of the character that had been born again, and perhaps had been wrongly taught. Has it not come under the observation of nearly every Baptist, that there have been persons in Babylon that despised the doctrine of election, predestination and salvation by grace, and afterwards their eyes were opened, and they saw a beauty in the above doctrine, were made to love it, embrace it, to rejoice in it, and to come out and join the Regular Baptists and believe in Christ as their whole, full and complete Savior? They had the same experience while in Babylon, believing a "do and live" doctrine, that they have now. Were not the eyes of some of the characters opened by the proclamation of the gospel when the Lord's preachers went and preached Christ, the way, the truth and the life, and told those characters their experience and travels from first to last better than they could themselves? And they tell it with such power that they cause a mighty shaking among the dry bones. But it is hard for people to understand how believers are saved; they think that salvation ought always to be applied to unbelievers. But Paul says, 1 Corinthians i. 21, "It pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe." Romans i. 16, "For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ; for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." 1 Corinthians i. 18, "For the preaching of the cross is to them that perish foolishness; but unto us which are saved it is the power of God." 1 Timothy iv. 16, "Take heed unto thyself and unto the doctrine, continue in them, for in doing this thou shalt both save thyself and them that hear thee." When we come to talk of eternal salvation, Paul says it is according to God's purpose and grace which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began, but is now made manifest by the appearing of our Savior Jesus Christ, who hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel. It does not say that he brought life and immortality through the gospel, but brought it to light. Hear Paul again, Hebrews iv. 2, "For unto us was the gospel preached as well as unto them; but the word preached did not profit them, not being mixed with faith in them that heard it." Now, what was Paul's argument here? It is very plain that he was arguing that the preaching of the gospel did not profit them that were destitute of faith. Does the Bible teach that Christ saved sinners, or does it teach that a mere proclamation of what Christ has done is sufficient to save them? We know that opium will ease pain; but suppose that a person was suffering much pain, and a physician was called, and he proclaimed to the suffering man that opium would ease pain; would a proclamation of the fact be sufficient to ease the sufferer, or would not the remedy have to be applied? If so, then tell me what good the proclamation of the fact has done the poor suffering man. So what Christ has done is sufficient to save sinners. Then a proclamation of the fact has nothing to do in their eternal salvation. "But the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned."—1 Cor. ii. 14. Did not Paul preach the things of the Spirit? If so, the natural man could not know what he preached. So those, and those only, that have faith are profited by the proclamation of the gospel. Now a few quotations in regard to faith. Hebrews xii. 2, "Looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith." Romans xiv. 23, "For whatsoever is not of faith is sin." Faith is the fruit of the Spirit. "But without faith it is impossible to please God." So when Paul opened the eyes of those characters, and turned them from darkness to light, they then could see the beauty in the doctrine of Christ their Savior. Then Satan and his preachers combined could not hold them in his kingdom; but they are turned from that to the church of God. They are then believers in Christ. But we cannot believe in Christ while we are believing in the works of man. Christ asks the question, "How can ye believe, which receive honor one of another?" I believe that there are persons born of the Spirit of God that are not really believers in Christ, but are receiving honor of men; receiving them that come in their own name; and are ignorant of the plan of redemption and the forgiveness of sins. They think that it is done in part by the act of man. But hear Paul, Ephesians i. 7, "In whom we have redemption through his [Christ's] blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of his grace." Here we are told that we have forgiveness of sins through the blood of Christ. But those characters that had their eyes opened by Paul's preaching, and turned from darkness to light, received forgiveness of sins. But can a person receive a thing that does not exist previous to their receiving it? Their sins were forgiven; and through Paul's preaching they received a knowledge of that fact. When their eyes were opened, so that they could see and understand the plan of salvation, and that everything necessary to eternal salvation was the gift of God, they then wanted an inheritance among them that are sanctified by faith, the same that is in Paul. Just a few more questions. Was Paul made alive from the dead by anything that he himself did, or anything that the preacher did for him? If so, will some one tell what it was? Was not Paul's conversion a pattern for those that should believe hereafter? Do the Arminians cut according to the pattern?

Yours in hope of eternal life,
J. B. HARDY.

LOUVALE, Ga., Jan. 3, 1889.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN IN THE LORD:—We wish all the readers of the SIGNS a Happy New Year, together with the editors and correspondents. The Lord has blessed us in the past, and has seen fit in his wisdom to preserve our unprofitable lives, and lengthen the cords of our natural lives, for purposes of his own glory. Truly may we say, "The Lord is good, a stronghold in the day of trouble." We can all witness that he is slow to anger and plenteous in mercy. He changes not, therefore the sons of Jacob are not consumed. He is long-suffering and pitiful, and remembers we are but dust. He has preserved us through another year. Eighteen hundred and eighty-nine is now upon us, and the question may be with us, How shall we spend it? Whatever may be our resolutions, there is one thing we know, and that is, Salvation belongeth unto God, and with him are the issues of life and death. He can create, and he can destroy. Our times are in his hand. Grace is our hope, yea, the favor and mercy of our God. Some trust in horses, some in chariots, some in other vain things; but happy is the man whose hope is the Lord, and that has learned experimentally that in Jehovah the Lord is everlasting strength. During the past year our memory may call back some sad seasons and cloudy days through which we have passed, while a part of the way was desert and barren, and dreary days and nights of weariness we have spent, and often doubtless had almost despaired, which almost makes us shudder to think of it. But we may also remember the Lord, like David, from the hill Mizer, and the land of the Hermonites, and the Jordan. But as often as we remember these deliverances, we can rejoice in hope of the glory of God, and can realize that there shall be deliverance in Mount Zion and in Jerusalem, as the Lord has said.

I read a comforting letter from a brother not long since, who had received one from me while in a low state. He asked, "How is it now with you? Are you still in Lodebar? Have you, since you wrote, seen the King? Have you been able to reach his table, and eat of the fat things, and sipped the wine on the lees, well refined?" My reply was that I hoped I had been near him, had realized his blessed presence, and he had given me comfort. But alas! for us. We think, when we do get near him, we will stay there, and stray no more; but we soon find ourselves at a distance, straying away from the fold. We need a constant shepherd. We cannot keep ourselves. The Lord is thy keeper, thy shade upon thy right hand. How often we say, Where is my beloved? We, like Job, go to the right and to the left, and we do not perceive him. I keep thinking I will leave off my follies and my sins; but if they are left off, I cannot miss them, and am made to cry, "O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me?" We are somewhat comforted with the thought, "With the mind I serve the law of Christ; but with the flesh the law of sin." We are complicated, having a desire for good, and also a disposition to go into sin—a company of two armies—the old man and the new man. We have the promise that we shall be more than conquerors through him that loved us and gave himself for us. When I first began the christian race, if indeed I am in it, I thought I would be a great deal stronger, and by this time I would be a good man; but alas! I feel weaker, and sometimes it seems I get worse instead of getting better. Sometimes I feel like I will be more diligent than ever; but alas! I find myself neglecting the things I ought to do, and am active in that which I ought not to do. I have left undone things that should have been done, and have done the things I ought not. Sometimes I feel alienated and distant, alone, dejected, cast down, and feel like my efforts to do good are vain. I forget that I was purged from my old sins, and cannot see afar off. I feel like the church would be better off without me; that I ought not to try to preach any more; that perhaps I am deceiving the people of God; and if they knew me as I know myself, they would not have me. And yet I do not know myself; I do not see even all my own follies. How dependent then we are, and how these things should humble us in the sight of God. Again, the shortness of time comes up, and also the words of the apostle, "Redeeming the time, because the days are evil;" "Fervent in spirit, serving the Lord." Then we may well pray the Lord to teach us the measure of our days, and apply our hearts unto wisdom; that he would give us a good understanding in all things; that he would give us heavenly wisdom, and put his fear in our hearts, that we may be able to walk before the Lord in the land of the living. May our prayer be that of Habakkuk, "Lord, revive thy work in the midst of the years; in wrath remember mercy." I hope the Lord in mercy may grant a revival of the spirit of grace in all the hearts of his people; that if consistent with his will it may be a year of good meetings; that union, peace and love may prevail throughout Zion. We feel that it is greatly needed in these parts.

Some have thought that Old Baptists do not believe in revivals; but they believe in the sort Elijah had when he called fire down upon his sacrifice, which consumed the sacrifice and the altar, and licked up all the barrels of water; and the end of it was the destruction of the false prophets of Baal. That is the sort of revival that seems to be needed just now—heavenly fire from the eternal throne of God, a consuming fire, that cannot be put out by water; not the sparks of our own kindling. Yes, the live coals from off the altar of our God, on the tongues of the ministry, speaking forth God's glorious praise, and the exceeding great mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ. Christ, the Savior of such sinners as we are; Jesus, the Son of the Most High God; Jesus, the Mediator and great High Priest, the Husband and Shepherd of his church, the sheep of his pasture; Jesus, our elder Brother; Jesus, our Captain, our Head and King; yea, the King of kings and the Lord of lords; Jesus crucified and risen from the dead, exalted Prince of peace, at the right hand of God; Christ, the power of God and the wisdom of God. God grant us the spirit of grace, and the spirit of prayer for his blessing upon his people; for then we can look for it; for we read of things coming to pass while they were yet speaking. We receive when we do not ask amiss, to consume it upon our lusts. May the Lord bless us, lead us, guide us, and go before us, and choose our changes for us, and lead us in the way of life everlasting, is my humble desire, for his precious name's sake. Amen.

Yours in hope,
W. LIVELY.

MONTAGUE Co., Texas, Jan. 10, 1889.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—I received a sample copy of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES on the 7th inst. I send you our faith, as set forth in our Minutes of the Trinity Association of Texas. Elder J. A. Campbell visited me yesterday. He lives ten miles distant. He is pastor of two churches. He and his brethren of said churches are delighted with the issue of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES of Jan. 2d. Indeed all the brethren, as far as I have known, are delighted with that issue. My dear brethren, why is it that the true church is so greatly awakened at the present time? May God illuminate your mind with wisdom, and enable you to speak and write to the edifying of the poor saints; and may they be built up in their most holy faith. I pray God to bless you, and strengthen you in power and in might, in setting forth to the comfort of the saints the truth of the gospel as it is in Christ Jesus. I heard your dear father preach fifty years ago. I was then young. I never have forgotten it. May God bless you, for Christ's sake.

I hope I am your brother in Christ,
JAMES M. GUGSBY.

JANUARY 11, 1889.

DEAR BRETHREN—If one so unworthy as I feel myself to be may call you by that name. Having finished the business part of my letter, I will try in my weak and feeble manner to tell you how highly I appreciate the dear SIGNS. Surely it is a blessed medium sent from the Lord; for every good and perfect gift cometh from the Lord. How much comfort it affords us! The sweet communications from the dear unknown brethren and sisters go home to my heart. I feel sometimes like casting in my mite with them, but they can tell my own feelings so much better than I could myself. I am now thirty-five years old. I have been a member of the Old School Baptist Church ever since I was eighteen years old. I have found them to be the only people that believe the Bible and the doctrine it sets forth. My prayer is, Lord, be merciful to me, a sinner; and if I am deceived, undeceive me. May you long be spared to wield "The Sword of the Lord and of Gideon." Asking you to remember me in your prayers, I subscribe myself a little one.

H. M. FINLEY.

WHITEFIELD, Maine, Dec. 7, 1888.

BRETHREN BEEBE:—I have taken the SIGNS OF THE TIMES for more than forty-four years, and O how many times I have wished that I could take the writers for it by the hand and say, Amen, to the glory of God. I have undertaken to write a number of times, but the archdeceiver has put in his oar and told me that the brethren could witness to that. By that time I could not command language to describe how I felt and how I appeared to myself; so I would give it up and put what I had written in the stove. Yet I had one in the house for the last ten years, and at times I have thought I would send it to the dear editors, believing they would overlook what was bad about it, if they could gather enough from it to believe that I am a child of God.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN IN CHRIST:—Now that the year is up, I will send two dollars for the SIGNS. I cannot express the delight that fills my soul at times while reading in the SIGNS the letters from the dear brethren and sisters in Christ. O what a sweet rest for the weary soul that trusts in Jesus for salvation! For I can truly say, as Paul said, "In my flesh dwelleth no good thing." Jesus is all my hope for salvation; and I feel to thank God for leading me out of every false way, and putting a new song in my mouth, even praises to my God and your God. The Lord doeth all things well, and according to his own good pleasure, and for his own glory.

Do with this as you think best. Your afflicted, unworthy sister, if one at all,

CHRISTENAH TOMPKINS.

THE WAY OF MAN NOT IN HIMSELF.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—If you feel like making some comment on the words in Jeremiah x. 23, I would be thankful. If the way of man is not in himself, who or what governs him, and what his steps? I am a poor old man with a broken spirit; but I wish to send you a few new subscribers, with the money. I wish it were ten times as much, for surely the SIGNS is worth reading. I would not do without it for five dollars a year, if I could raise that amount. It has given me great consolation for the last two years. The editorials and communications seemed to suit my present unhappy condition. May God bless you and all his dear children, is the prayer of an old sinner saved by grace, I hope.

"O LORD, I know that the way of man is not in himself; it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps."—Jer. x. 23.

Whether finite intelligence can understand them or not, those who are taught of God will confess that all the declarations of inspiration must be true. The reason of the natural man is ever ready to dispute the truth which God has revealed, and the adversary of the afflicted and poor people of God does not cease to suggest questions how the word of the Lord can be certainly established in righteousness, as they have been made to know in their own experience. It is only by the faith of Jesus Christ, which is wrought in them by his Spirit, that they can rest in the assurance given to them in the sure testimony of the word of eternal truth.

The whole record of the prophecy and Lamentations of Jeremiah is expressive of the mourning of the servant of the Lord, which was occasioned by the departure of Israel from the path of obedience to the commandments enjoined upon them in the law of their God. Notwithstanding the many signal displays of divine favor and protection manifested toward them, they showed a constant inclination to conform to the idolatrous practices of the heathen nations by whom they were surrounded. According to the provisions of the conditional covenant which God gave to them, the consequence of their disobedience was the visitation of the righteous judgment of God upon them. In the time of this prophet the people to whom he was sent were delivered into captivity and carried away into Babylon. Their afflictions were severe, and they were shown their own utter helplessness. Their sufferings are pathetically recounted in the inspired account which is given of them. But the true meaning of the whole history is found in the typical representation of the experience of the church of Christ under the gospel dispensation. It is in this application that all the Scriptures are they which bear testimony of Jesus as the Savior of his people from their sins. The prophets and holy men who spoke as they were moved by the Holy Ghost, in expressing their own emotions told the experience of the saints in all times and under all the changes to which they are subject. When the terrible denunciation of the wickedness of Israel was declared by Jeremiah, it was not less a grief to him to know that evil was determined against his kindred, than it was to other Israelites; but he had no power to alter the message which was sent by him. It must be declared just as it was given to him in order that it might be the exact pattern of the heavenly things in the gospel kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ. The strict justice which shines in the flaming law of Sinai, is only a faint representation of that perfect holiness in which God renders to his spiritual people the fruit of their own transgressions. The temporal blessings provided for that natural Israel but feebly reflect the infinite glory of those spiritual blessings in Christ Jesus which are enjoyed by the saints in obedience to the law of the Spirit of life as it is written in their inward parts by the Holy Spirit.

In the connection of the text submitted by our brother the Lord declares his condemnation of the idolatrous Israelites, and his determination to sling them out of the goodly land which he had given to them, and that this distress should at once be visited upon them. He speaks for all Israel in the response to this fearful announcement, confessing that there is just cause for the desolation which the Lord has decreed upon them in their rebellion against him. "For the pastors are become brutish, and have not sought the Lord; therefore they shall not prosper, and all their flocks shall be scattered." Under such distressing circumstances carnal enmity would find encouragement to rebel still farther, and fly from the hand of him who thus visited chastisement upon them; but the contrite spirit which the Lord has put within his people looks to him alone for relief. Out of the depths of sorrow and sin they must cry unto the God of their salvation.

"O Lord!" Having learned by individual and personal experience that there is salvation in no other name, the saints must always call upon him in the day of trouble. His Spirit moves them thus to call, and they always find him a present help. Although others may use these words in their formal prayers, none can truly call upon the name of the Lord unless they are moved by the Spirit thus to cry from the ends of the earth, that is, from the felt consciousness that no other hand but his can bring deliverance unto them. They must know that "Vain is the help of man," before they can truly call upon the name of the Lord. "For he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him."—Heb. xi. 6. Even the saints themselves can only thus come to the Lord in their prayer as they are moved by his Spirit which dwells in them. When they thus call upon him he always hears their cry and saves them even in the midst of their deepest troubles. There is no more precious privilege bestowed upon the favored subjects of the electing love of God than this liberty to call upon his name in their extreme poverty and distress. In thus crying unto him they confess their own nothingness and their unreserved confidence in the infinity of his grace and power to deliver them even from deserved affliction.

"I know the way of man is not in himself." This can be truthfully said by none but those who have learned its truth by personal experience. Indeed, no other character can even desire to say this. The confession of this knowledge necessarily involves the renouncing of all confidence in the will of man as well as all dependence upon merit in self. Such knowledge can never be attained by any teaching other than that which is received by the light of the revelation of the Spirit of truth. The pride of the carnal mind revolts at the doctrine, and claims ability not only to choose his own way in things temporal, but even to decide his own eternal destiny. It is evident that this confession utterly excludes every system of the freedom of the will of man, and silences all arguments which can be brought in support of any theory of salvation as dependent upon the will of the sinner. Even the saints who have been taught experimentally this heavenly knowledge, cannot at all times truthfully make this confession. When in the enjoyment of temporal prosperity and resting in the imagination that they are able to do their own will, they sometimes think that they are directing their own way; and in that delusion they become so self-satisfied that they can have little forbearance toward those who do not seem to their view so upright as themselves. From this error the Lord redeems them with his judgments. He gives the tempter power to try them by his deceitful wiles; and when like Peter they find their own weakness, they are converted from that vain confidence, and humbly cry unto the Lord, who alone is able to save them out of the pit of hopeless condemnation. In such trials they learn their need of the directing and sustaining hand of the Lord to keep and guide them in all their journey through this wilderness of sin and temptation.

While our inquiring brother will doubtless be ready to admit that the way of the saints is directed by the ever present hand of the Lord, and that without him his people can do nothing, it may not be so clear to his mind that the way of men who live in sin can be said to be not in themselves. He asks, "If the way of man is not in himself, who or what governs him, and what his steps?" The carnal pride of man claims freedom to direct his own way. He spurns the idea of being under bondage to any power above himself; and proudly asserts his ability to choose whether he will do good or evil. This doctrine is the essential principle of all false systems of religion, whether called Pagan, Papal, or Protestant. It can never be demonstrated to the satisfaction of the natural mind that man is without power to direct his own way. The testimony of the inspired Scriptures is plain upon the subject, yet it is hidden from the comprehension of the wise and prudent of this world. Naturally, man assumes the right to determine whether his Creator has dealt justly with him as his creature, and some will dare to say that if God has not given to every man the opportunity to decide his own case he is not just. Of course, those who hold such ideas do not believe the declaration of our text. With them we have no occasion to argue. They plainly declare themselves to be infidels, and no power less than the omnipotence of God can make them know and love the truth. But for such of the saints as are entangled in the devices of the adversary, it is an end-of-all controversy when the plain testimony of the Scriptures is presented in the light of that instruction which they have received in their own experience. As has already been sufficiently explained, the saints are led or governed by the Spirit of Christ which they have received, and which ever dwells in them. This Spirit leads them into all truth. While they remain in the flesh they are at some times ensnared and led captive by the devil, as were many of the saints whose trials are written in the Scriptures; but they are never at home in that captivity. They will always feel their bondage as a galling yoke, from which they groan with anxious desire for release. Even in their captivity they will long for deliverance. To all such the word of the Lord is sure, that "Unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation."—Heb. ix. 28.

In view of the awful wickedness of men carnal reason suggests that it cannot be true that they are under the control of that God who is perfectly holy and righteous in all his works. This thought has led some dear children of God to question his purpose in the wickedness of such evil deeds. While not willing to assume that we can understand the mystery of iniquity, it does seem to our view that the Scriptures have given sufficient explanation on the subject to show that even the most revolting manifestations of iniquity that ever have transpired were and are under the control and included in the purpose of our God. The wickedness of Joseph's brethren was inseparably interwoven with the purpose of God in the fulfillment of his promise to Abraham. When their evil works were exposed Joseph said to them, "Fear not; for am I in the place of God? But as for you, ye thought evil against me; but God meant it unto good, to bring to pass as it is this day to save much people alive."—Gen. i. 20. Without the transgression for which Saul was rejected, there would have been no room for David upon the throne of Israel. So the omnipotence and infinite wisdom of God are displayed in causing the wrath of man to praise him, and in restraining the remainder of wrath. The guilt of the murderers of our Lord Jesus was not in any degree the less because their crime was included in the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God. While men act willingly in the commission of crime, they are obeying the direction of the evil spirit of Satan, by which they are controlled. That iniquitous principle reigns in the servants of sin, and their actions only manifest their subjection to the absolute control of the spirit of evil. The only reason for the different development of iniquity among men, is that God in his providential mercy restrains some from going to the same lengths in crime to which others are carried by the evil spirit which works in all the servants of sin.

"It is not in man that walketh to direct his steps." None can truly make this confession without the leading of the Spirit of God. Naturally, all men believe that they can do whatever they will. They say, "With our tongue we will prevail; our lips are our own; who is lord over us?"—Psa. xii. 4. The first lesson taught to the quickened sinner shows him the error of this claim; yet the saints need to have the same fact repeatedly impressed upon them throughout their whole sojourn in this wilderness world. Selfish pride continually claims ability to choose the right way; and the saints never attain strength in themselves to withstand the temptation to trust in themselves. Only when led by the Spirit of Christ can they truly confess that they have not the ability to direct their own steps. When any man sensibly realizes this truth it is unmistakable evidence that he is taught of God.

Doubtless our inquiring brother has proved in his individual experience the truth of this confession. With Paul, every one who is led by the Spirit has to learn that while he has the will to walk in the way of holiness, how to perform that which is good he finds not. By this experience he is qualified to testify to the same truth which is expressed in the text. His own experience thus gives the correct and only answer to his question. He can only conclude with the inspired apostle, "So then with the mind I myself serve the law of God, but with the flesh the law of sin." This experimental knowledge excludes all boasting of the freedom of his own will. Under the bondage of corruption every emotion of the flesh is vile and sinful, so that it ever works death to all spiritual comfort; on the other hand, when led by the Spirit to crucify the flesh with the affection and lusts, the saints enjoy that perfect peace, which is life in the Spirit. These are the two powers by which the way of man is governed.

BY JOHN BUNYAN.

CHAPTER XXIX.

What the doors of the Temple were made of.

THE doors of the temple were made of fir, that is so sweet-scented and so pleasant to the smell.—1 Kings vi. 34.

Mankind (the redeemed) is often compared to the fir tree.—Isa. xiv. 8; xli. 19; lv. 13; lx. 13.

Now, since the doors of the temple were made of the same, doth it not show that the way unto God's house and into his favor is by the same nature which they are of that thither enter, even through the vail, his flesh?—Heb. x. For this door (I mean the antitype) doth even say of himself, "I am like a green fir tree. From me is thy fruit found."—Hosea xiv. 8.

This fir tree is Christ, Christ as the man, and so is the way to the Father. The doors of the temple are also, as you see here, made of the fir tree, even of that tree which was a type of the man Christ Jesus. Consider Hebrews ii. 14.

The fir tree is also the house of the stork, that unclean bird; even as Christ is the harbor and shelter for sinners. "As for the stork, the fir tree is her house." And Christ saith to sinners who feel their need of shelter, "Come unto me, and I will give you rest." He is a refuge for the oppressed, a refuge in time of trouble.—Deut. xiv. 18; Lev. xi. 19; Psalm civ. 17; lxxxiv. 2, 3; Matt. xi. 27, 28; Heb. vi. 17-21.

He is, as the doors of fir of the temple, the inlet to God's house, to God's presence, and to a partaking of his glory. Thus God did of old, by similitudes, teach his people his way.

CHAPTER XXX.

How the doors of the Temple were adorned.

AND Solomon carved upon the doors cherubim, palm trees and open flowers, and overlaid them all with gold.—1 Kings vi. 35; Ezek. xli. 15. These cherubim were figures or types of angels. * * *

Again, as the cherubim are carved here, so there were palm trees carved here also. The palm tree is upright; it twisteth not itself awry.—Jer. x. 5. Apply this to Christ, and it shows us the uprightness of his heart, word and ways with sinners. "Good and upright is the Lord: therefore will he teach sinners in the way;" in at the door to life.—Psalm xxv. 8; xcii. 15.

The palm, or palm tree, is also a token of victory; and as placed here, it betokeneth the conquest that Christ, the Door, should get over sin, the devil and hell for us.—Rom. vii. 24; viii. 37; 1 Cor. xv. 54-56; Rev. vii. 9-11.

If we apply the palm tree to the church, as we may (for she is compared thereto—Song vii. 8-10), then the palm tree may be carved here to show that none but such as are upright of heart and life shall dwell in the presence of God. The hypocrite, says Job, shall not come before him. The upright, says David, shall dwell in his presence.—Job xiii. 16; Psalm xxiv. 3, 4.

They are they that are clothed in white robes, which signify uprightness of life, who stand before the Lamb with palms in their hands.—Rev. vii. 9.

There were also carved upon these doors open flowers, and that to teach us that here is the sweet scent, the fragrant smell, and that the coming soul will find it so in Christ, the Door. "I am," saith he, "the rose of Sharon, and the lily of the valleys." And again, "His cheeks are as a bed of spices, as sweet flowers: his lips like lilies, dropping sweet-smelling myrrh."—Song ii. 1; v. 13. Open flowers are the sweetest, because full grown, and because as such they yield their fragrance most freely. Wherefore when he saith that upon the doors are open flowers, he setteth Christ Jesus forth in his good savor, as high as by such similitudes he could, and that both in name and office; for open flowers lay, by their thus opening themselves before us, all their beauty also most plainly before our faces. There are varieties of beauty in open flowers, the which they also commend to all observers. Now upon these doors, you see, are open flowers, flowers ripe, and spread before us, to show that his name and offices are savory to them that by him do enter his house to God his Father.—Song i. 1-4.

All these were overlaid with fine gold. Gold is most rich of all metals. And here it is said that the doors, the cherubim, the palm trees, the open flowers, were overlaid therewith. And this shows that as these things are rich in themselves, even so they should be to us.

CHAPTER XXXI.

Of the wall of the Temple.

THE wall of the temple was ceiled with fir, which he overlaid with fine gold, and set thereon palm trees and chains.—2 Chron. iii. 5-7. The walls were as the body of the house, unto which Christ alluded when he said, "Destroy this temple, and in three days I will raise it up."—John ii. 19-21. Hence to be and to worship in the temple was a type of being in Christ and worshiping God by him; for Christ, as it was said, is the great Temple of God, in the which all the elect meet, and in whom they do service to and for his Father. Hence again, the true worshipers are said to be in him, to speak in him, to walk in him, to obey in him.—2 Cor. ii. 14; xii. 19; Col. ii. 6. For as of old all true worship was to be found at the temple, so now it is only found with Christ, and with them that are in him. The promise of old was made to them that worshiped within those walls: "Even unto them will I give in mine house and within my walls [to them that worship there in truth] a place and a name better than of sons and of daughters."—Isa. lvi. 5. But now, in New Testament times, all the promises in him are yea, and in him amen, to the glory of God by us.—2 Cor. i. 20.

This is yet further hinted to us, in that it is said that these walls are ceiled with fir; which, as was shown before, was a figure of "the man Christ Jesus."

A wall is for defense; and so is "the man Christ Jesus." He is, was, and will be our defense forever. For it was he that underwent and overcame the curse of the law, and that in which our everlasting righteousness is found. Had he not in the flesh interposed, we had perished forever. Hence we are said to be reconciled to God in the body of his flesh through death.—Col. i. 19, 20; Rom. v. 8-10.

Now this wall was overlaid with fine gold. God is here a figure of the righteousness of Christ, by which we are justified in the sight of God. Therefore we read that his church, as justified, stands at his right hand in clothing of gold. "Upon thy right hand did stand the queen in gold of Ophir." And again, "Her clothing is of wrought gold."—Psalm xlv. 9, 13. This the wall was overlaid with; this the body of Christ was filled with. Men, while in the temple, were clothed with gold, even with the gold of the temple; and men in Christ are clothed with righteousness, the righteousness of Christ. Wherefore this consideration doth yet more illustrate the matter.

In that the palm trees were set on this wall, it may be to show that the elect are fixed in Jesus, and so shall abide forever.

Chains were also carved on these walls; yea, and they were golden chains. There were chains on the pillars, and now also we find chains upon the walls.—Phil. i. 12, 13.

Chains were used to hold captives, and such did Paul wear at Rome; but he called them his bonds in Christ.

Chains sometimes only signify great afflictions, which God lays upon us for our sins.—Psalm cvii. 9-11; Lam. i. 14; iii. 7.

Chains also may be more mystically understood, as of those obligations which the love of God lays upon us, to do and suffer for him.—Acts xx. 22.

Chains do sometimes signify beauty and comely ornaments. "Thy neck," saith Christ to his spouse, "is comely with chains of gold." Again, "I put bracelets upon thy hands, and a chain on thy neck."—Song i. 10; Ezek. xvi. 8-11; Prov. i. 9.

Chains also do sometimes denote greatness and honor, such as Daniel had when the king made him the third ruler in the kingdom.—Daniel v. 7, 16, 29.

Now all these are temple chains, and are put upon us for good; some to prevent our ruin, some to dispose our minds the better, and some to dignify and make us noble. Temple chains are brave chains. None but temple worshipers wear temple chains.

CHAPTER XXXII.

Of the garnishing the Temple with precious stones.

"AND he garnished the house with precious stones for beauty."—2 Chron. iii. 6.

This is another ornament of the temple of the Lord. Wherefore, as he saith, it was garnished with them; it was garnished with them for beauty. The text saith "garnished;" the margin saith "covered."

Wherefore I think they were fixed as stars, or as the stars in the firmament. So they were set in the ceiling of the house, as in the heaven of the holy temple. And thus fixed, they do the more aptly tell us of what they were a figure, namely, of the ministerial gifts and officers in the church. For ministers, as to their gifts and office, are called stars of God, and are said to be in the hand of Christ.—Rev. i. 20. Wherefore as the stars glitter and twinkle in the firmament of heaven, so do true ministers in the firmament of his church.—1 Chron. xxix. 2; John v. 25; Dan. xii. 3. So it is said again that these gifts come down from above, as signifying that they distill their dew from above. And hence again the ministers are said to be set over us in the Lord, as placed in the firmament of his heaven, to give light upon his earth. "There is gold, and a multitude of rubies; but the lips of knowledge are a precious jewel."—Prov. xx. 15. Verily it is enough to make a man in this house look always upward, since the ceiling above head doth thus glitter with precious stones. Precious stones; all manner of precious stones; stones of all colors. For there are divers gifts, differences of administrations, and diversities of operations; but it is the same God which worketh in all.—1 Cor. xii. 4-6.

Thus had the ceiling of this house a pearl here, and there a diamond; here a jasper, and there a sapphire; here a sardius, and there a jacinth; here a sardonyx, and there an amethyst. For to one is given by the Spirit the word of wisdom; to another the word of knowledge; to one the gift of healing; to another faith; to one man to work miracles; to another the spirit of prophecy; to another the discerning of spirits; to another divers kinds of tongues.—1 Cor. xii. 8-11.

He also overlaid the house, beams, posts, walls, doors, &c., and all with gold. O what a beautiful house the temple was! How full of glory was it! And yet all was but a shadow, a shadow of things to come, and which was to be answered in the church of the living God, the pillar and ground of the truth, by better things than these.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

DIED—At his late residence in Eugene, Knox Co., Ill., Nov. 12th, 1888, of consumption, Mr. J. H. Kimler, aged sixty-three years, eleven months and ten days.

Brother Kimler was born near Crawfordsville, Indiana, Dec. 2d, 1824. He married Miss Mary J. Lane, June 17th, 1847, who, together with six sons, survive him. He came to Knox Co., Ill., in 1850, where they resided until 1856, when they removed to the state of Iowa, where they lived until 1863, when they came back to Illinois, where they continued to the time of his departure. Brother Kimler was a worthy and very highly esteemed member of Harmony Church, having united in 1867. He was chosen Clerk, and served in that capacity to the entire satisfaction of all concerned, until failing health made it necessary to appoint an assistant. If his seat was not filled at our regular monthly meetings it was because he was providentially hindered. He was a firm and uncompromising believer in the doctrine of the Old School Baptist Church, fully realizing his entire dependence upon the mercy of God, and trusting in his promises. He was a warm friend of the SIGNS, having been a reader and subscriber for a number of years.

The church has lost a warm friend and a worthy member, and at their last meeting gave an expression of their deeply felt sympathy with sister Kimler and the bereaved family and friends. After religious exercises at the late home on the 14th, the remains were carefully laid to rest in the cemetery at Brimfield, Peoria County, beside his four daughters who had preceded him, in full hope of that better resurrection promised, and so earnestly and anxiously looked and longed for by all those that love our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

ALSO,

In Republic Co., Kansas, April 4th, 1888, sister Harriet E. Waterman.

Sister Waterman was a member of the Harmony Church at this place for a number of years, and died in fellowship with the church. There being no Baptist minister in reach of them in Kansas, by request a discourse was preached near the home of her brother, brother H. Kimler, to the surviving members of the family and friends in memory of the deceased on the fourth Sunday in July, 1884. Her husband, Nicholas Waterman, died in 1875, after which time she remained a widow.

S. KETCHUM.

Deacon Thomas Rodgers was born in Bourbon Co., Ky., April 11th, 1802. He united with the Old School Baptist Church of Christ at Georgetown, Ky., in 1841, and was baptized by Elder Thos. P. Dudley. He subsequently removed his membership to the church at Frankfort, Ky., which church dissolved. He then united with the church at Little Flock, Anderson Co., Ky., on the fourth Saturday in October, 1865, and remained a faithful and devoted member until his death, which occurred at the residence of his son, brother J. H. Rodgers, near Frankfort, Ky., Dec. 5th, 1888.

Brother Rodgers was set apart to the office of Deacon by the church at Little Flock on the fourth Saturday in October, 1874, holding this position until death. I feel that no eulogy is necessary to those that knew brother Rodgers, as did many of the Baptists of Kentucky, as a tablet is written in their memory which time alone can erase. As a citizen and neighbor none were superior, being ever ready and willing to administer to those in distress, wherever found. He was a devoted lover of the saints of our God, ever faithful in the discharge of all the duties incumbent upon him. In his death the church has lost one of her most exemplary members, our aged and beloved sister Rodgers (who survives him) has lost a faithful and devoted husband, and his children (six sons and one daughter, three of whom were members with him) have lost a loving and true father. The writer feels that he has lost a faithful yoke-fellow and a father in Israel.

Elder P. G. Lester, his beloved pastor, spoke to his memory on the occasion from 1 Cor. xv. 25, 26, an able and comforting discourse, to his many brethren, sisters and friends that were present on the occasion; after which his remains were laid to rest in the family burying-ground near by.

Asleep in Jesus! O for me
May such a blissful refuge be!
Securely shall my ashes lie,
Waiting the summons from on high.

B. FARMER.

FARMDALE, Ky., Jan. 28, 1889.

DIED—At New Vernon, Orange Co., N. Y., Jan. 27th, 1889, of bronchitis, Theodore Graham, infant son of George and Ida Graham, aged three months and four days.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date, this date denotes the time at which your subscription expires, and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

POETRY.

PSALM V. 3.

"My voice shalt thou hear in the morning."

A sinner spared, O Lord, to see Another morn begun,
Would cry, "Be merciful to me,"
Or else I am undone.

Throughout the past I have indeed
Sunk down in sin and mire—
Gone much astray, but little sought
Pure gold well tried by fire.

My soul has often turned aside
From Christ, the living Way,
And scarce a thought or wish arise
To make my soul to pray.

Can any sinner be so hard,
So fully sunk in sin,
So blind, so lost, and wholly gone?
I have no peace within.

But, like a stone, without the life
To feel, to groan, or grieve,
I cannot seek to God alone,
Nor in his name believe.

No cultivating grace have I,
Nor stock, nor barn, nor store;
So helpless in my soul am I,
I cannot ask for more.

Sometimes I feel to want to know
More of the grace of God;
And then I cry, "Lord, give me grace,"
But cannot bear the rod.

Sometimes I run astray in sin,
In thoughts both vain and wild,
And seem more like the world at large
Than like a living child.

Sometimes afflictions drive me close,
I cry, confess, and weep,
And want to know that Christ is mine;
My heart is such a deep.

Sometimes his mercy makes me melt,
And then, before his throne,
I spread my wants, and beg that he
Will keep me as his own.

My tears are sweet, my love is warm,
Affections then are set
On Christ above; but O I want
More of these seasons yet!

Sometimes my thoughts are turned to prayer,
"Lord, give more life divine."
Anon I feel that not a cry
Springs from a heart like mine.

O what a motley, worthless worm
Before the Lord on high!
When will he whisper, "Thou art mine,"
Kiss me, and bring me nigh?

When will his love my soul so cheer,
Without a doubt to sing,
"He is my Rock, Salvation too;
I'm safe beneath his wing?"

To hear his voice, to view his smiles,
To see him intercede,
To hang upon his arm, his strength,
Will make me blest indeed.

I'd envy not the worldling's mirth,
Nor all the gold below,
If he'd but say, "Poor soul, I'm thine;
Thou shalt my glory know."

Abide in life, abide in death,
And give thy presence then;
And then I'll say, "The Lord is mine,
I'm his! Amen! Amen!"

CORRESPONDENCE.

WOODSTOCK, Michigan.

DEAR BRETHREN:—The words of the psalmist have been with me of late, when he said, "He that dwelleth in the secret place of the Most High, shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty. I will say of the Lord, He is my refuge and my fortress: my God; in him will I trust."—Psa. xci. 1, 2. The whole psalm is very precious to me. We learn our safety in God by the dangers that surround us. Our prayer is often lifted unto him to protect us from dangers seen and unseen. A sense of helplessness and a fear of danger are among the first things we realize in a natural sense; and we look to those around us for protection, feeling more safely when we are surrounded by those we think are stronger than we. And even before we can claim a knowledge of God as an all-powerful Savior, we begin to learn our helplessness as regards temporal things. We are not able to feel nor find safety from the elements, but know we are at their mercy. The storm may carry us away in a moment, and many things come before us which we know no human hand can control, and from which no earthly power can save. Even in childish years we can remember turning to God in fear and trembling, as unto the only One who could protect from dangers that caused the heart to fear. But how much more when we come to say of the Lord, "He is my refuge;" when we come to dwell in him, abiding under his shadow; when we have acknowledged him as our God, in whom we trust. If we have learned to thus make our boast in the Lord, how self-reproachful do we sometimes feel when we yet find ourselves seeking help or protection from an earthly source. Why are we so fearful sometimes to be left alone, and yet remember that the most heavenly seasons we have ever enjoyed were when we were all alone, and yet not alone; for we felt a presence with us which was perfect love, casting out all fear. We thought not of being alone, unless it was the dread of being disturbed in our meditations, which were most sweet. This has often cheered me when I have thought of the hour of death, that hour and place where another cannot come between God and the soul. No power, no word, no hand, can go with us there, save only the One who gave us life; the

One who takes it away, giving us, as we hope, a better life. In this place there can be no intervening power; neither in our spirit life, which he gives us, can there be an intervening power. In the most important things which concern us we must be alone with our God. Is there not truly a secret place of the Most High, where we can dwell, a living, abiding place? The nearest friend may enter there for himself, if called of his God, but not for us. Also, into the secret closet we must go alone. There are things between us and our God that we cannot fully tell to another. We may be always trying to tell it, but utterly fail. How can we tell of the living with him in the closest, heart-communion, even when the heart is silent before him, yet is so full of peace and praise, when it is before him breaking with sorrow and pleading with groanings unutterable, where words do find no place? Yet O the consolation in all this, when we realize that it is with the Most High we are pleading; that it is under the mercy seat we find a place; that the Spirit breathing tells us that we possess the life eternal that must dwell in its native place. And shall we who possess this life seek for some other secret dwelling place, some earthly abode, some other dark shadow to cover us? Yet how natural it is for us to want earthly beings or friends around us. We may even be afraid of the darkness of night, and shrink to be left alone; yet when it must be so, and we try to not be afraid, and find that we fail to quiet our own fears, how precious will sometimes come the promise unto us, drawing our minds toward him who has all power, remembering that the darkness and the light are both alike to him. What a stillness will gather around us. The deep stillness will seem more sweet than the sweetest hush of the summer evening time. God is there, and the holy sweetness of such hours abides with me in remembrance, as though I had been called into some holy mountain of peace and praise. And yet again I will be just as fearful as ever before; the feeling of perfect security will be gone from me, and I only remember my waywardness, and fear the just judgment of him from whom I have departed. I have only held him in remembrance when my fear is with me, and now I greatly fear he will only mock, and not regard my cry. And even to this day I can witness that "Great is his faithfulness unto the children of men." All this dreary wilderness way he has been to me "the shadow of a great rock in a weary land," and I can often say, "I will both lay me down in peace and sleep, for thou, O Lord, only makest me to dwell in safety." "All my safety is in thee." Should we trust in anything else, how soon the Lord can take it away. Should we trust in uncertain riches, how soon they can take wings and fly away. And often I fear I do not in all my ways acknowledge him as God; that I may be found looking unto strange things for safety or help, and be found with an evil heart of unbelief in departing from the living God. This searching question brings us down to all our way and walk in this life. Is he not a God of providence as well as of grace? Often have I thought of one of the prophets who, when he was returning from the captivity, would not ask of an earthly ruler an escort or an armed guard to protect him on his way, lest he should betray his lack of confidence in his God. And the greater the danger or emergency we are in, the greater ought our confidence be in him. Precious indeed is that faith which looks unto and rests in God both for life and for death, and for that which is beyond the void; and sorrowful indeed it is when we begin to join with the idols of the land, or institutions of the day. We know it is God who sends the ravens to us with bread, without our joining affinity with them. We are told that "Though hand join in hand, the wicked shall not go unpunished." Though the Lord bid them feed or famish us, yet we are not told to join with or be unequally yoked together with them; for what communion hath light with darkness? And I am unable to understand what benefit the idols of the heathen were to the people of God in ancient times, or what benefit the works of darkness in our day, which answer to them, are to us; for says the apostle, "It is a shame even to speak of those things which are done of them in secret." So we see the secret place of the Almighty, and the secret places of darkness, or of men, are very different things. How the child of God can dwell in both, seems mysterious to me. And if we find in us a heart exercised with covetous practices, or if our soul does bless the coveters whom the Lord abhorreth, or if we are coveters after the orders and ways of the world, do we indeed remember that covetousness is idolatry? And the admonition of the beloved John to his brethren was, "Little children, keep yourselves from idols." We always thought the idols of the heathen were a source of distress to the people of God; that their wandering after them and joining with them only brought distress and the judgments of God upon themselves; and those who defiled these idols and made them as odious as possible, were approved of the Lord. It was because of their doings that the apostle was afraid of his brethren; because they observed days, and times, &c., manifesting a conformity to those around them. To "Be not conformed to the world" seems to be a very hard lesson for us to learn. To be a friend of the world is not being a friend of God; to trust in the shadow of Egypt is not abiding under the shadow of the Almighty; and if we are honest at heart, and faithful before God, we will want no secrets of our own, but will say with David, "Search me, O God, and know me; try me, and see if there is any wicked way in me; and lead me in the way everlasting."

Very meekly your sister,

KATE SWARTOUT.

KELLY'S CORNERS, N. Y., Dec. 15, 1888.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—While the weather is wintry this morning, I thought I would write a letter for the benefit of the readers of the SIGNS in general. I hope my impressions and desire to write are truly for the benefit, rather than for the injury of any of the little ones of our heavenly Father. In connection with this thought comes up the question, Can anything good come from an impure source? Not anything. The tree must be made good in order to bear good fruit. And as there is none good but God, so only when the goodness of God has been manifested, in the gift of eternal life, can the fruit of the Spirit be manifest. Therefore we cannot judge ourselves or others by earthly wisdom, but by the fruit borne. In this every saint and servant of the Lord to their own Master stands or falls. As true faith takes God at his word, and God is true, while all men are false, the just must live and walk by faith. "But without faith it is impossible to please God." No correspondence among dear brethren can be entered into, and be sweet and lasting, but that which gives God the glory and abases the creature. How blessed it is to sit at the feet of Jesus, and at the feet of the brethren, and with them look upon the dear Savior, and think of him as our Advocate and our Head, in whom is the store of grace, wisdom and knowledge. By his stripes the members of his body have been healed of the worst of maladies, sin; and having felt the work and power of his grace in their hearts, their prayers like the ancient incense rise up to the Lord of hosts, in remembrance of his goodness to them in all his wondrous works of love and mercy.

I feel that the service of a minister of the gospel, who is required to testify in the name of Christ, is to comfort and instruct the little children, to confirm the young men and women, and to present the rod and staff for the comfort of those who are aged, in the church of the living God. Divine faith in the heart prompts but the one thing, all else being vain. This cannot be learned in connection with earthly science, but alone by the revealed will of God in his people. Paul says, "For I neither received it of man, neither was I taught it, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ." Then the study of Timothy, and of every one of the Lord's ministers, to show themselves approved unto God, can only be in connection with divine faith in the heart. I reckon the more their faith is tried, the nearer they are like Jesus. The more they know of their own weakness, the more the almighty power of God is revealed as the strong tower and refuge of his chosen people. They are more fully prepared by the tribulation they have in the world to rejoice in the God and Rock of their salvation, and to know no will but his. Herein the old paths appear as well beaten by the fathers, in delight in the doctrine of God our Savior, and resting in the sovereign will of our God, who made the subtle serpent as well as the peaceful dove, having a place and use for both. Neither men nor devils, in the days our Savior was on earth, could stand in the way of his coming to do the will of his Father, and saving all that were given him in the covenant ordered in all things and sure. His unalterable decree of love and mercy must be fulfilled, according to the eternal purpose which he purposed in himself, and as declared in the Scriptures, for it will be to the praise of the glory of his grace; and the richness will be enjoyed by his dear believing people as they are brought to know him, whom to know is life eternal. "This is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life; and this life is in his Son." I do not know how the weakest saint could do without the fullness of God, of which they are all filled in Christ. Of his fullness they all will receive in their knowledge of him. Their heavenly Father freely gives them all things, as he gives them his Son. Only those who have the Son of God have life; and as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God. The supremacy, omnipotence, omniscience and omnipresence of the only wise God and Savior of the church, the body of Christ, could not be taught in the declaration that only good things were ordered by him, or good deeds done through his Spirit. For while there is no unrighteousness with him, who is a God of purity, just and right, yet all his works praise him, whether in putting enmity between the seed of the serpent and the seed of the woman, or in putting his own blessed Spirit in a Saul of Tarsus. I saw in print, not long since, a declaration that shocked me as I read it, in regard to predestination; that to prove it absolute would make God the author of all the wickedness that takes place in the world. I do not so understand the matter of God's sovereign rule, as the Creator and Ruler of all his creatures. Sin is a transgression of the law; it is the effect of deception in our mother Eve, who had the life of her husband, and who must bear a part with her in the transgression, though not deceived in the matter. Adam and his wife prefigure Christ and the church. For the everlasting love he bears to her, though not deceived, must follow her in the transgression, be made sin for her, to deliver her, and to manifest her in his life and love on the earth, according as she had been chosen in him before the foundation of the world, that she should be holy and without blame before him in love. "Without controversy, great is the mystery of godliness." "Without the shedding of blood there is no remission of sin." Christ Jesus is the author of eternal salvation unto all that obey him. He is the author and finisher of our faith. While the subtle serpent deceives and leads men on in darkness, the almighty Creator of the universe, the God of salvation, has set his boundaries, or length of chain. And did he not appoint his work and limit him to his own will? Could wicked men or devils go beyond God's will in opposing his Son? Had they not a work to do in connection with it? Could they take Jesus before the time? Their time to act out their carnal mind, which is enmity against God, was always ready. But they could only do what God in his holy counsel determined before should be done. And to do this, they must wait for their hour and power of darkness. None have done nor will do more than will be for the glory of God and the good of his people; and in all this the Scriptures will be fulfilled. Cain-like, all evil doers will be known as well before they act as after they act, by the One who searches the heart and tries the reins, proving vain man in his heart to be deceitful and desperately wicked. God alone fully knows him, to whom he is amenable.

I believe I know, like the apostle, the exceeding sinfulness of sin; for when the commandment came, sin revived, and I died to all expectations of saving myself, or of being saved by the deeds of the law. I also hope that the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death. If so, what need I fear, as regards the works of darkness? Are they not under the control of Zion's King? Most assuredly. And I am persuaded that neither death, nor life, nor any of the intermediate things, can separate me, or any of the afflicted and poor people, from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus my Lord. This alone, dear brethren, should make us joy in the God and Rock of our salvation. Though by divine faith we know that the body is dead because of sin, yet by the same heavenly light we know that the Spirit is life because of righteousness. Our life is hid with Christ in God; and when he, who is our life, shall appear, we shall also appear with him in glory; for we are kept by the power of God, through faith, ready to be revealed in the last time. Then there is no failure or lack with our covenant God, who keeps covenant and mercy with them that love him, to a thousand generations. There are those whose conversation is in heaven, from whence they look by faith for the coming of their Savior, unto whom he will come the second time, without sin unto salvation. And the Lord's people know right well, when sitting together in heavenly places in Christ, desiring that brotherly love may continue, that Christ is their Alpha and Omega, and that without him they could do nothing to comfort each other, or to glorify his great name.

In writing these lines I do not wish that they should take the place of better matter that would be for the comfort of the saints; but I desire to express to the patrons of the SIGNS, scattered abroad, my earnest and heartfelt desire for the good of all, in all uprightness, as their heavenly Father leads them along. If I have an interest with you, it is solely the work of the Lord in saving me, a great sinner, and bringing me, thirty years ago this winter, to praise his great name. And I want no other doctrine or order than that belonging to the place where his honor dwells, the church of God, his house, where there is a dwelling together in love, and an endeavor to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. I desire that the Lord may keep me from preaching any other doctrine than that which thirty years ago I believed to be the doctrine of God my Savior, which abases man and glorifies God. It is to-day my only comfort and hope, as a poor sinner saved by grace, and by grace alone, through faith, which is surely not of myself, but is the gift of God. I could go with no other people than the Old School or Primitive Baptists. If I could not be borne with by them, I would have to stand alone in the world. As I meet the saints month after month in the several churches I serve, and find them in love and peace, and see them interested in the preached word, and now and then see one being drawn to love the church and to desire a place therein, I feel that truly

"God moves in a mysterious way,
His wonders to perform."

"There is none like unto the God of Jeshurun, who rideth upon the heaven in thy help," whose name is great in all the earth, and needeth not the weak arm of man to assist him in the salvation of a sinner. He speaks by whom he will, and sends by whom he will, for the comfort of his chosen people. He holds his servants in his right hand, and sustains them in all the way he calls them to go.

And now another year has nearly passed away, and if God wills we shall soon enter upon a new year. The past year has been an eventful one in disasters and crime. I rejoice that "the sword of the Lord and of Gideon" is unsheathed, to battle for the truth. May it appear bright and glistening in the rays of the Sun of righteousness, and may the year to come be profitable to the editors and contributors of the familiar household paper, the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. While other periodicals have their rights and interest, may the brethren generally consider this one, best known, longest tried and fully useful medium, and with united aid generously sustain it for the good of all sections. I also hope that while this is put into the hearts of the lovers of truth by the Lord, he will also move them to remember our brother, Elder Hassell, and not let him be crushed by the weight now resting upon him.

Yours in gospel bonds,

J. D. HUBBELL.

NORTHPORT, Ala., Jan. 23, 1889.

ELDER WM. L. BEEBE—DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST:—There are several passages of Scripture that have bothered me considerably for some time, and it seems that the more I read the worse tangled I get; and I want to make mention of some of them through the SIGNS with the hope that you and others will be led to write upon them. If I know my heart, I want nothing but the truth as it is in Jesus, for nothing else will do us good, either in time or eternity.

In the first place, I have heard among our people considerable distinction made between "eternal salvation" and "time salvation," as also between the gospel itself and the proclamation of that gospel; and I have tried in my weakness to set up those distinctions myself. But what has bothered me is that Paul says, Romans x. 16, "But they have not all obeyed the gospel." He does not say the "proclamation of the gospel." Again, Romans ii. 8, some are mentioned that "obey not the truth." What is the gospel but "the truth?" In writing to the Galatians, he says, "Who hath bewitched you, that ye should not obey the truth?" Peter says, "For the time is come that judgment must begin at the house of God: and if it first begin at us, what shall the end be of them that obey not the gospel of God? And if the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear?" Now, it seems to me that Paul answers Peter's question in 2 Thessalonians i. 8-10, in the following language: "In flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ: who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power; when he shall come to be glorified in his saints, and to be admired in all them that believe (because our testimony among you was believed) in that day." Now, Peter's question is, "What shall the end be of them that obey not the gospel?" And Paul's answer is, "Who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power." Is it the people of God that "obey not the gospel?" And if so, are they to be "punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power?" If so, where do we go to prove the doctrine of the everlasting damnation of the wicked?

Again, Paul says in Hebrews, "He that despised Moses' law, died without mercy under two or three witnesses. Of how much sorer punishment, suppose ye, shall he be thought worthy who hath trodden under foot the Son of God, and hath counted the blood of the covenant, wherewith he was sanctified, an unholy thing, and hath done despite unto the Spirit of grace?" Who is "he that was sanctified" in this quotation? What can be any "sorer punishment" than to "die without mercy under two or three witnesses?"

Will Elder Wm. L. Beebe reply through the SIGNS to the foregoing questions and quotations?

Will Elder F. A. Chick write through the SIGNS upon the eighth verse of the fourth chapter of First Timothy? "For bodily exercise profiteth little; but godliness is profitable unto all things, having the promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come."

I would like also that brother Chick write on the subject of prayer in all its scriptural bearings, public, private, and in the family.

Not long since a man in this town announced that he would preach on the subject of "saving faith," the "faith that saves." My first thought was that there was no such faith spoken of in the Bible; but after examination I find that there is such a faith. I find in Matthew ix., where the woman who was diseased with an issue of blood of twelve years' standing, touched the hem of Christ's garment. Jesus said, "Daughter, be of good comfort, thy faith hath made thee whole." In Mark v. 34, "Daughter, thy faith hath made thee whole; go in peace." Mark x. 52, Jesus said to the blind man, "Go thy way; thy faith hath made thee whole." To the cleansed leper Jesus said, "Arise, go thy way; thy faith hath made thee whole." "And, behold, they brought unto him a man sick of the palsy, lying on a bed: and Jesus, seeing their faith, said unto the sick of the palsy, Son, be of good cheer; thy sins be forgiven thee." Jesus used similar language to the man that was let down through the housetop. "And when he saw their faith, he said unto him, Man, thy sins are forgiven thee." But the particular point I wish to call attention to is the woman that "washed the Savior's feet with her tears, and wiped them with the hairs of her head." Of this woman it is stated that "she was a sinner," and that "she loved much." So Jesus says, "Her sins, which are many, are forgiven." "Thy sins are forgiven," and finally, "Thy faith hath saved thee; go in peace."

Now what I desire to know is, In what sense did this woman's faith save her? Is there any difference between faith and belief? Paul says, "But without faith it is impossible to please him." There are evidently degrees in faith, to wit, "great faith," "strong faith," "little faith," "weak faith," &c. Christ said, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature: he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." Is this "water baptism," or the baptism of the Spirit? Is this salvation eternal, or is it a "time salvation?"

Will Elder S. H. Durand write through the SIGNS upon the foregoing, and answer these questions, and oblige an anxious inquirer after truth?

Yours in the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ,

H. J. REDD.

STAMFORD, N. Y., Dec. 18, 1888.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR FRIENDS:—I have felt for some time a desire to write you and the readers of the SIGNS some of the exercises of my mind. Not being a professor, I have felt diffident about it, until it is so strongly impressed upon my mind that I thought possibly it was my duty. If so, my desire is not to neglect it. My prayer is, "Lord, teach me my duty, and give me strength to perform." I have indulged a hope for years in the dear Redeemer, that my sins were borne in his own body on Calvary's rugged tree. It is truly a great thing to believe that one so vile and sinful as I feel myself to be should be included in that happy number who have come up out of great tribulation; for it is through great tribulation we must enter the kingdom. I sometimes almost give up the little hope I have, for the reason that I have never passed through such bright visions as some relate in their experiences. But when I am thus reflecting upon the preciousness of this hope, these words come forcibly to my mind, "We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren." I cannot remember any time in my life that I disliked to hear people talk on religious subjects. It was always pleasant to hear christians talk and relate their exercises. I often did hear them when I was young, and lived with my parents, as they were members of the Primitive Baptists; and my grandfather, Elder Wm. Choate, was a minister of that order, as some of the readers of your paper will remember. He was a dear father in Israel. He lived such a devoted christian life, I love to think of him. I do not remember the first serious reflections upon my sinful state, and of the final punishment of the wicked; but I had a sorrowful dread of death, as I felt to be a sinner, and unprepared to meet my God. I did not feel that I could do the work, but would put these thoughts away and enjoy the company of the young, and worldly pleasures, until the year 1867, when I was called to part with my oldest sister by death. It was sudden, and very shocking to me, for she was a loved sister, two years older than myself. I did not see her during her short illness, as we were both married and living some distance apart. I went to her burial, and remained one week with her family, and returned to my home. She was not a professor, but my grandfather told us he had a hope for her, as he had seen her weep while sitting under his preaching. This gave us great hope that she was at rest. After my return (I think the first Sunday) I attended the Dutch Reformed. We attended that, as there was no Baptist Church in that place. It was "sacrament day" with them, and I remained to witness the ordinance. As I beheld them sitting around the table, it seemed I never before saw such beauty in the ordinance, and thought, O if I only could be worthy to partake of the Lord's Supper on earth. It seemed to me that my dear departed sister was enjoying the beautiful realities in heaven, and these words came to me, "It is not mine to give, but it shall be given to them for whom it is prepared." To-day my mind goes back to that time. It gave me comfort, and is still an anchor to my soul, both sure and steadfast. But I have had many fears, and have thought I should experience some brighter evidences, if indeed I am a child of God. But it seems with me to have been a gradual strengthening of that hope. I can truly say that I would not exchange it, though small, for the wealth of nations. I read in the SIGNS such excellent experiences, such bright manifestations; but I feel assured that if there has been a good work begun within me, it will be performed until the day of Jesus Christ. I do believe I love the people of God, and the doctrine contained in your paper. The predestination of all things is a loved doctrine to me: it is what my hope centers upon. If my name was not written in the Lamb's book of life before the world was formed, I am none of his. The Primitive Baptists are the people of my choice. I fear sometimes that it is because I was brought up among them. It seems to me that doctrine accords with the sacred Scriptures. I trust it is for no other reason than that I have been taught it of the Lord, as I remarked to a lady once, who was a Methodist by profession. She said in conversation that she did not know how any one could believe that doctrine. I told her they never did except they were taught it of the Lord. I am like a pilgrim and stranger in this world of sin and sorrow. It seems to me that those of the household of faith that are privileged to hear the word of God proclaimed in its purity are in the enjoyment of rich blessings. The SIGNS contains all the preaching I have, and it comes richly laden. I am truly very grateful for this privilege, and would say to all, Continue to write, for you know not how much comfort you may give some poor, little one like myself. Sometimes when I read the christian experiences it causes the silent tear to drop. Why is this? It is a joy to listen to one that can describe our feeling better than we can ourselves—some weary, wayfaring traveler, journeying, as we hope and trust, the same spiritual road, to that better country, that happy home, where there will be no tears shed, neither will be needed the light of the sun nor the moon, but the glory of God shall be the light thereof. I feel I have a great many things to be thankful for: one is God's preserving mercy, which has been over me all my days. I am now past the middle age of life, in very poor health, and am not a stranger to sorrow of different kinds. The stern hand of death has taken from me nearly all my dear kindred; my children, two in number, my sisters and my mother. My father is still living, now past eighty years, and stands as a true sentinel on Zion's walls, firm and uncompromising with error. I would be very glad to be worthy a name with the people of God, but feel that I live far from a christian life. I find within my heart so much corruption and sin, that when I would do good evil is present with me. I am made to exclaim with the apostle Paul, The things I would do, I do not; and the things I would not, that I do. My prayer is daily, "God, have mercy upon me, a sinner;" for I am fully persuaded we can do nothing in and of ourselves to merit salvation. Christian friends, pray for me, that I may not be deceived, nor deceive any. Dear editors, use your better judgment in regard to publishing these imperfect lines. If published, please correct all mistakes. May you long be spared to feed the sheep and lambs of the fold.

Yours in hope of a better resurrection,
CORDELIA M. HOWARD.

REISTERSTOWN, Md., Jan., 1889.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—I send you the inclosed good letter from brother Cox. He has suggested things that I am not willing your readers should lose.

I remain your brother,

F. A. CHICK.

GHENT, Ky., Jan. 14, 1887.

ELD. F. A. CHICK—DEAR BROTHER:—I have read with deep interest, and, I hope, with profit to myself, your commentary on Isaiah vi. 1, published in the SIGNS of the 9th instant. I hope you will pardon me for offering to you some of my feeble thoughts upon the sublime truth there recorded by the prophet.

He says, "In the year that king Uzziah died I saw also the Lord sitting upon a throne, high and lifted up." Evidently the word "throne" is declarative of kingly power, as you have forcibly written. It is that power which alone belongs to him who is omnipotent; that power of which the prophet Jeremiah speaks, saying, "Ah Lord God! behold, thou hast made the heaven and the earth by thy great power and stretched out arm, and there is nothing too hard for thee." Surely Isaiah had a view of that power when he used the word "high;" and when he used the words "lifted up" he presented the great truth that he was lifted up from and above that state of mortality in which he appeared to make an offering for sin and bring in everlasting righteousness. He said, "Thus it is written, and thus it behooved Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day: and that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations." Then it is evident that the words "high" and "lifted up" present to us two separate and distinct characteristics of our Lord. The word "high" presents him in his omnipotent power as the Creator of the vast universe, and the words "lifted up" as the Redeemer of his people. Jacob beheld him at Bethel, when he had a vision of the ladder set up on the earth, and the top of it reached to heaven. He said, "And, behold, the Lord stood above it, and said, I am the Lord God of Abraham thy father, and the God of Isaac: the land whereon thou liest, to thee will I give it." When Jacob awoke he was afraid, and said, "How dreadful is this place! This is none other but the house of God, and this is the gate of heaven." Feelings of dread, of wonder and of awe seized him, and caused him to cry out, "How dreadful is this place!" Isaiah said, "Woe is me! for I am undone; because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips: for mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of hosts." Jacob said, "How dreadful is this place!" and Isaiah said, "Woe is me!" One had seen the Lord standing above the ladder, and the other had seen the King, the Lord of hosts; but the view they had of him filled them both with feelings of awe, of dread, of sorrow. Ah, my dear brother, when you saw the Lord in his wonderful character as the Creator and Upholder of all things, feelings of wonder and dread seized your very inmost being. Like Jacob, you were ready to cry out, "How dreadful is this place!" So it is with all the saints. When they have a glimpse of the great and wonderful character of the Creator and Upholder of all things, and are enabled to see themselves so infinitely small when compared with the vast works of creation, and so blackened by sin, yea, black as the tents of Kedar, it is then that they are made to cry out, in the language of the prophet, "Woe is me!" and in the language of Jacob, "How dreadful is this place!" All is sorrow; all is dread. But when they hear him saying, "As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up," and, "I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men [both Jew and Gentile] unto me," it is then that those feelings of sorrow, of dread, of awe, vanish. They all cease to obscure their mental vision, because they have learned that he, their glorious Lord, is exalted a Prince and a Savior, to give repentance and the remission of sins unto Israel. From the depths of their hearts come welling up praise, adoration and thanksgiving, and they cry out, "Alleluia! for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth." They rejoice to know that their God is omnipotent, that he has all power both in heaven and earth, and that he is able to keep them through faith unto salvation; and they rejoice to know that in that God they have found a Savior who is able to save to the uttermost all that come to God by him. They by faith behold him in his wondrous power to save, and in his wondrous love made manifest in his humiliation, in which he redeemed his people from all iniquity; that humiliation in which he was lifted up to suffer on the cross the penalty of that law which his people had violated, which was death. That power and that love are united, are completely harmonious, in the salvation and final glorification of all the redeemed. They are both declared by the prophet in the use of the words "high" and "lifted up." It may be true that many of the saints in this day of the world do not have given to them in their experience as clear a view of the character of the great Jehovah as was given to Jacob at Bethel and at Peniel, at which he said, "I have seen God face to face, and my life is preserved." At Peniel he did not utter words that indicated dread, sorrow or anguish, but words of rejoicing. His life was preserved, and he rejoiced in his God; for there his name was changed from Jacob (a supplanter) to Israel (one who prevails with God). Ah, what a change! but no greater with Jacob than with Isaiah. His language was, "Woe is me!" when he had seen the King, the Lord of hosts. But when the live coal was taken from off the altar by the seraphim and laid on his lips, his language was changed, for his iniquity was taken away and his sin purged, and he said, "Also I heard the voice of the Lord, saying, Whom shall I send, and who will go for us? Then said I, Here am I; send me." He had seen his Lord in his glorious character as the Redeemer of his people, which changed him, and made him willing in the day of God's power—willing to be a servant of his Lord, and bear such tidings to Israel as the Lord commanded, and nothing more. So you, dear brother Chick, when you were called to the great work of the gospel ministry, were made willing to accept that call and go forth, proclaiming the everlasting gospel; yes, to obey your Lord, who has said, "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."

Please pardon this intrusion upon your time and patience, and believe me affectionately yours,

H. COX.

NORTHPORT, N. Y., Dec. 13, 1888.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—As my remittance is nearly due, with pleasure I send it. I often think of you and your arduous duties, and a prayer goes up to the Lord that you may have strength, and all that is necessary, to carry on your valuable paper. I often wish it was in my power to increase its circulation. I wish to say, to the honor of God's blessed name, that he does not leave me comfortless. I have sweet seasons that cheer me in my pilgrimage, and am looking forward to the last time. As I am drawing toward the close of my pilgrimage, the precious truth of God is more and more precious to my soul. The Lord is showing me more of my unworthiness and vileness, and of his almighty power to save to the uttermost. I am led to view him in all his works. Truly they all praise him, and I bless and adore him. It is over fifty years ago that I listened to the blessed truth of God from the lips of your dear departed father, in Utica, N. Y., and it is as sweet to me now as it ever was. It is all my support and trust. I would say to the dear family, O how my heart goes out in love toward you, and especially to the afflicted ones. Dear sister Parker is one of the many in whom God is pleased to show his mighty power and goodness, in supporting and causing to sing in the fire. My sympathy goes out to such, knowing what it is to suffer. But how sweet to think that these light afflictions, which are but for a moment, work for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. How blessed the thought that our dear Savior knows every pain we experience. Soon the conflict will be ended, and we shall be released from this body of sin, and reign with Jesus eternally. With this glorious prospect in view, I will close with the words, "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" This shall be the triumphant song, and all the praise shall redound to him that sitteth upon the throne and to the Lamb forever and ever.

Yours in everlasting bonds,
ELIZABETH BEESLEY.

UNION SPRINGS, Ala., Feb. 5, 1889.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—I had only read to the third page of the SIGNS before I had to stop and write you. There is no church near me, and I am only refreshed and cheered by reading such papers as yours. Let me say to you that the witness I bear to your writings is convincing evidence to me that you are a child of God. You can picture out so plainly man's condition in his fallen state, and the wisdom and providence of our God. What I mean is this, to feel those revelations, and then be inspired with sufficient wisdom and knowledge to write them, so that we afar off can read and understand. This is surely comforting to all such as I am. O how can one doubt the providence of God, when the evidences are so plain? I believe and hope that I am not prejudiced, nor do I wish to be; but to my mind and understanding there is nothing more clear than the teachings of the Old School Baptists. Since my early boyhood I have loved and cherished their preaching, although I have had an opportunity of hearing but very little of their preaching since I cast my lot with them, about fifteen years ago. You will please excuse me for writing to you thus, but I indorse the sentiments you write so fully that I could hardly keep from expressing my heartfelt desire for your long and happy success.

May God in his mercy and wisdom guide and protect you through your journey in life, so that those poor famished souls who cannot get to hear preaching may read your teachings and be edified thereby.

Your brother in hope,
A. L. FOREMAN.

ILES JUNCTION, Ill., Jan. 24, 1889.

BRETHREN BEEBE:—I am glad that you will not let any of the church troubles appear in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. When any trouble comes up in the church, that is the place to settle it, and not spread it. Those who are far away from the place where the trouble originates can know nothing of it, only as we are informed of it. We may not understand the merits of the case, and in forming our judgment we may take the wrong side unintentionally. I think we will feel better while reading of the Lord's dealings with his children. We have trouble enough in our warfare here, without borrowing from others. May the good Lord be your Leader, and may he keep us in the right way, is my prayer.

GIVING A CHARGE.

"ELDER BEEBE:—Please give your views on the subject of the propriety of giving a charge to newly received members of the church. Should they not be admonished how they should walk as followers of their Lord and Master? Your compliance will oblige

"AN UNWORTHY BROTHER."

There can be no improvement upon the perfect order established by the inspired apostles, who were fully qualified by the Holy Spirit to do what was commanded them by our Lord. He directed them to "Teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you; and lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world. Amen." As fallible creatures they were not competent to do this great work; but the Lord provided for their deficiency by the gift of the Holy Ghost, who should bring to their remembrance all those things which they were thus solemnly enjoined to teach. Since even those immediate followers of Jesus, who had been personally instructed by him, were not left to their own discretion in establishing the order of the church, it is certainly a very great stretch of presumption for any uninspired mortal to propose any change in that order which they have ordained for the guidance of the nations whom they were inspired to teach. Therefore as followers of our Lord we must find every rule for our walk laid down in the record which God has given through his chosen and divinely inspired apostles. "All things" are there; if we cannot find them it is not because of any defect in the perfect law, but because of our own blindness.

There is no record that the apostles ever gave any special charge to those whom they baptized in distinction from those who had been previously recognized as members of the church. The charges and admonitions which are written in the law of Christ, all speak alike to every one of the saints, whether just received into the visible church or those who have been long identified with the disciples of Christ. The propriety of this will be readily seen by those old members who still feel their need of such admonitions as sensibly as in their early membership in the church. They have to mourn that they have not grown so strong as to be able to choose their own way, and yet realize their constant dependence upon the leading of the Spirit of Christ. Knowing their need in this respect, the Lord by his Spirit has given the admonitions, exhortations and charges, which are left in the inspired word for the guidance of all who will live godly in Christ Jesus. To this perfect rule we all do well to give earnest heed.

In the public recognition of those who have but recently been received into the visibly organized church, it is common in some sections for the pastor to give a brief address of welcome to them, in which he usually reminds them of the new relation which they have assumed, as being "No more strangers and foreigners, but fellow-citizens with the saints, and of the household of God." In calling their attention to this change in their condition there is certainly no impropriety in speaking particularly of the admonitions given by inspiration which apply to them in their newly assumed connection with that kingdom which is not of this world. This may be called a charge to them; but it equally applies to all the older professed members of the church. While the walk and conversation of the newly received professor is very closely watched by those who seek occasion against the doctrine of Christ, and the accuser of the brethren is ever intently seeking to ensnare them by his wily devices, older members can witness that they have not yet outgrown the liability to be deceived by him. Therefore, the word of truth abounds with instruction and admonition, charging all the saints with solemnity and earnestness, and exhorting them to walk worthy of the vocation wherewith they are called. This charge is so important to the peace and comfort of the saints that it cannot be too frequently nor too seriously impressed upon either newly received members or those who have grown old in their profession of the faith which is in Christ Jesus.

While it is not to be understood that the order of the church requires the formal delivery of a public charge to each member individually when he is received into the organized church, yet the New Testament furnishes both example and precept for the continual expression of care for the order of the gospel and for the welfare of the saints, in the frequent charges and exhortations which are left on record in that perfect rule. Whenever in the providence of God there is opportunity, it is certainly in strict accordance with the pattern given for the saints to be charged and exhorted to walk as children of light. Ordinarily, it seems that when they are just received into the organized church the occasion is appropriate for their attention to be called by special charge to the primary importance of seeking the things which pertain to godliness. Yet it must be remembered that this charge is no part of the divinely authorized form of receiving members into the fellowship of the church.

The believer who is baptized in the fellowship and by the authority of the church of Jesus Christ, is already manifestly a member of that church, and is entitled to all the privileges, and under all the obligations, which belong to the member who may have been baptized a half century before that time. Indeed, in the heavenly government of our Lord, as revealed in the gospel church, there is not any distinction of time. Paul is not a whit behind the very chiefest apostles, although he was not manifested as a believer until after the Holy Ghost had descended upon the others, who had followed the Lord in his personal ministry. So, every one who is received into the fellowship of the church is on a perfectly equal standing in the church with every other member. In the relation which they bear to each other in the world, their standing is not changed by this equality in the church. The wife still owes the same reverence to her husband, the child still is in subjection to his parents, and the servant still must obey his master. These obligations are sacredly binding by their allegiance to the Lord Jesus. So they are explicitly required by the law of Christ. The denial of them is transgression against him. While this is true, it is still enjoined upon the saints that each shall esteem others better than himself. This is wrought in them by the Spirit which dwells in them. They are made to see their own unworthiness so clearly that each really feels less than the least of all saints; and they must therefore esteem all others better than themselves. By this feeling of mutual esteem they are led to fulfill the direction to be subject to one another. This leads to that perfect peace which is the peculiar characteristic of the church of our Lord when walking in the order which he has ordained.

The most effective charge which can be given to a newly received member is that which is presented by the exhortation, "Let us consider one another to provoke unto love and to good works."—Heb. x. 24. This is explained in the next verse to be done by "Not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is; but exhorting one another; and so much the more as ye see the day approaching." The most solemn and impressive address which can be spoken will not have the effect of influencing a brother for good, which will result from the personal example of those who manifest the leading of the Spirit of Christ in their own daily walk and conversation. When the older members of the church are careful to maintain good works, as directed by the apostolic rule, it will be of little consequence whether they say anything in words to new members on the subject of their matter of walking in their everyday life. It is a true adage that "Actions speak louder than words." In the ardor of that early love which is common among the new members, they are not likely to need verbal admonition more than those who have been longer in their conflict with the world and the fleshly devices which the devil uses so deceitfully against their pursuit of the things which become their profession. The giving of a verbal charge is not a departure from the law of the Lord, but it should always be given in the love of Christ, and not as an expression of any superiority on the part of the giver over the new member to whom it is given. Indeed, such a claim would itself be a violation of the law of Christ. Such an example could not be approved by that law.

It is very needful that the saints should be continually reminded of the things which are given in charge by the inspired apostles. These things should be faithfully declared by the ministry of the word as well as presented in the walk of those who have professed to be the disciples of the Lord Jesus. Obedience to the Lord requires that they be taught to observe what he has commanded in distinction from all traditions of men, and in opposition to all the teachings of natural reason. Members of the church never can be too old to need such charges as are written in the law of Christ. It seems rather that as they grow older they have more need of such charges being brought to their remembrance, even though they once knew them. From the first development of the light of divine life in the experience of the saints, they have continual occasion to remember the admonitions and instructions given by inspiration of the Holy Ghost for their learning. These things are all given in charge by the authority of the Lord Jesus as they are written in the New Testament; this includes everything which can be recognized as binding upon the church of Christ either as a body or in her individual members. When they are observed in the spirit of them, the saints will have no occasion for any further charge.

Whether these important directions of the Spirit are specially given in charge verbally to newly received members, or taught to them by the practical walk of the older members, they are so inseparably identified with the whole teaching of the Spirit of Christ that none can walk in the path of obedience to the Lord Jesus without manifesting the essential principles of them in their conduct and conversation. Indeed, it is commonly the first manifestation of the leading of the Spirit in a subject of divine grace, that he desires to know what the Lord has enjoined upon him. This is the all-important question with him, and he has no need then to be told to be submissive to the inspired rule. In the love of holiness he is ready to receive instruction, and like Paul, he asks, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" To such an inquirer it is always proper to reply, as did Peter to those who asked instruction on the day of Pentecost, "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." In obedience to our Lord such repenting sinners always do receive the gift of the Holy Ghost in the answer of a good conscience toward God.

Hoping that from these remarks our brother may be able to gather our views on the subject embraced in his request, we leave the matter to his further consideration. In his own experience he will find the clearest and most comprehensive explanation of the subject; and to him as to all the saints, the only really profitable instruction is that which is received thus directly from the Holy Spirit. May the Lord be pleased to lead him and us, with all who love the truth, into the full manifestation of his light; and to his divine grace be glory evermore. Amen.

MAILING THE WEEKLY.

THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES office is a busy place since changing the publication from a semi-monthly to a weekly. The work of mailing the paper is about half of the mechanical labor; and as each of the fifty-two numbers of the weekly requires as much work to mail them as did each of the twenty-four numbers of the semi-monthly, it will be seen that the work in that department is more than doubled. We have sent the papers off on exact time to the very train each week; and if there has been any delay or irregularity in our subscribers receiving their paper, it has not been on account of any neglect on our part. We have never known a time when our subscribers evinced such an interest in the promotion and advancement of the paper, and we therefore feel amply repaid for the extra labor and expense we have assumed without an advancement in the subscription price. Our profits are much smaller, but our circulation is much larger.

LARGE HYMN BOOK FOR A DOLLAR, SIX FOR FOUR DOLLARS AND A HALF.

We have had bound in cloth, the same style as the "Editorials" or "Church History," a few hundred of our large type Hymn Books, which we will send post paid at the above prices. These books are especially adapted for aged people, or for pew racks, to be used in churches.

A SMALL ONE FOR SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS, OR SIX FOR THREE DOLLARS.

We also have the small type book bound in cloth, which we will send post paid at price stated above. Cash must always accompany the orders. Address,

SOLOMON'S TEMPLE SPIRITUALIZED.

BY JOHN BUNYAN.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

Of the windows of the Temple.

"AND for the house he made windows of narrow lights."—1 Kings vi. 4. There were windows for this house, windows for the chambers, and windows round about.—Ezek. iv. 16-36. These windows were of several sizes, but all narrow; narrow without, but wider within. They also were finely wrought and beautified with goodly stones.—Isa. liv. 14.

Windows, as they are to a house an ornament, so also to it they are a benefit. "Truly the light is sweet, and a pleasant thing it is for the eyes to behold the sun."—Eccl. xi. 7. The window is that which Christ looks forth at; the window is that which the sun looks in at.—Song. ii. 9.

By the light which shines in at the window we also see to make and keep the house clean, and also to do what business is necessary there to be done. "In thy light we see light;" light to do our duty, and that both to God and man.

These windows therefore were figures of the written word, by and through which Christ shows himself to his, and by which we also apprehend him. Hence the word of God is compared to a glass, through which the light doth come, and by which we see, not only the beams of the Sun, but our own smutch also.—2 Chron. iii. 18; James i. 23-25.

The lights indeed were narrow; wherefore we see also through their antitype but darkly and imperfectly. "Now we see through a glass darkly," or as in a riddle. "Now we know but in part."—1 Cor. xiii. 12.

These windows and their lights are of but little service to those that are without. The world sees but little of the beauty of the church by the light of the written word; though the church by that light can see the dismal state of the world, and how to avoid it.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

Of the chambers of the Temple.

IN the temple Solomon made chambers.—1 Kings vi. 5. The chambers were of several sizes; some little, some large, some higher, some lower, some more inward, and some outward. These chambers were for several services; some for rest, some to hide in, some to lay up treasure in, and some for solace and delight.—2 Chron. iii. 9; Ezek. xl. 7; xli. 5, 9, 44; 2 Chron. xxxi. 11, 12; 2 Kings xi. 1-3; Ezra viii. 29.

They were for resting places. Here the priests and porters were wont to lodge.

They were for hiding places. Here Jehoshebah hid Joash from Athalia the term of six years.

They were also to lay the temple treasure or dedicated things in, that they might be safely kept for the worshippers.

And some of them were for solace and delight; and, I must add, some were for durable habitation. Wherefore in some of them some dwelt always; yea, their names dwelt there when they were dead.

Those of them which were for rest were types of that rest which by faith we have in the Son of God (Matt. xi.), and of that eternal rest which we shall have in heaven by him.—Heb. iv. 3.

Those chambers which were for hiding and security were types of that safety which we have in Christ from the rage of the world.—Isaiah xxvi. 20.

Those chambers which were for the reception of the treasures and dedicated things were types of Christ, as he is the common store-house of believers. "For it pleased the Father that in him should all fullness dwell." "And of his fullness have all we received, and grace for grace."—John i. 16; Col. i. 19.

Those chambers that were for solace and delight were types of those retirements and secret meetings of Christ with the soul, when he gives it his embraces, and delights it with his bosom and ravishing delight. "The king hath brought me into his chambers," "into the chamber of her that conceived me," and there he gave her his love.—Song i. 4; iii. 4.

The chambers which were for durable dwelling places were types of those eternal dwelling places which are in the heavens, prepared for them that shall be saved.—John xiv. 1-4; 2 Cor. v. 1-4. Thus it is to dwell on high, and to be safe from fear of evil. Here, therefore, you see, are chambers for rest, chambers for safety, chambers for treasure, chambers for solace, and chambers for durable habitation. O the rest and peace that the chambers of God's high house yield to its inhabitants! Here they rest from their labors, rest upon their beds, rest with God, rest from sin, temptation, and all sorrow.—Rev. xiv. 13; Isa. lviii. 1, 2; 2 Thess. i. 7. God, therefore, shall wipe all tears from our eyes, even when he comes out of his chambers as a bridegroom to bring his bride, his wife, unto him thither, to the end they may have eternal solace together.

CHAPTER XXXV.

Of the stairs by which they went up into the chambers of the Temple.

THERE were stairs by which men went up into these chambers of the temple; and they were but one pair, and went from below to the first, and so to the middle, and thence to the highest chambers in the temple.—1 Kings vi. 8; Ezek. xli. 7.

These stairs were winding, so that they turned about who did go up them. So then he that essayed to go into those chambers must turn with the stairs, or he could not go up; no, not into the lowest chambers.

These stairs, therefore, were a type of a twofold repentance; that by which we turn from nature to grace, and by which we turn from imperfections which attend a state of grace to glory. Hence true repentance, or the right going up these turning stairs, is called repentance to salvation; for true repentance stoppeth not at the reception of grace; for that is but a going up these stairs to the middle chambers.—2 Cor. vii. 10.

Thus, therefore, the soul at its going up these stairs turns and turns till it enters the doors of the highest chambers. It groans, though, in a state of grace, because that is not the state of glory. I count then that from the first to the middle chambers may be a type of turning from nature to grace. But from the middle to the highest, these stairs may signify a turning still from the imperfections and temptations that attend a state of grace, to that of immortal glory.—2 Cor. v. 1-10. For as there are turning stairs from the lowest to the middle chambers, so the stairs from thence yet turn, and so will do till you come to the highest chambers.

I do not say that they that have received grace repent that they have received grace, but I say that they that have received grace are yet sorry that grace is not consummated in glory; and hence they are for going up thither still by these turning stairs; yea, they cannot rest below, as they would, till they ascend to the highest chambers. "O wretched man that I am!" and, "In this we groan," is the language of gracious souls.—Romans vii. 20; 2 Cor. i. 2, 3.

CHAPTER XXXVI.

Of the molten sea that was in the Temple.

THERE was also a molten sea in the temple. It was made of brass, and contained three thousand baths.—2 Chron. iv. 2-9.

This sea was for the priests to wash in, when they came into the temple to accomplish the service of God; to wash their feet and hands at, that they might not, when they came thither, die for their unpreparedness. The laver also which was in the wilderness was of the same use as here.—Ex. xxviii.

It was, as may be supposed, called a sea, for that it was large to contain; and a sea of brass, for that it was made thereof. It is called, in Revelation, a sea of glass, alluding to that in the wilderness, which was made of the brazen looking-glasses of the women that came to worship at the door of the tabernacle.—Rev. iv. 6; xv. 2; Ex. xxviii. 8. It was also said to be molten, because it was made of that fashion by fire; and its antitype is therefore said to be a sea of glass mingled with fire.—Rev. xv. 2.

This sea was a figure of the word of the gospel, in the cleansing virtue of it; which virtue then it has when mingled with the fire of the Holy Ghost. And to this Christ alludes when he saith, "Now are ye clean through the word which I have spoken unto you."—John xv. 3. It was a figure of the word without mixture of mere inventions; hence it is called pure water. "Having your bodies washed with pure water." And again, "That he might sanctify and cleanse it [the church] with the washing of water by the word."—Eph. v. 26; Titus iii. 5. All these places are in allusion to the molten sea, at which of old they washed when they went into the temple to worship. Therefore, being washed, we are told to draw near to God.—Hebrews x. 22.

From under this sea round about appeared oxen, "ten in a cubit, compassing the sea round about."—2 Chron. iv. 3. Understand by these oxen ministers; for to them they are compared.—1 Cor. ix. 9. Then we are taught whence true ministers come, to wit, from under the power of the gospel.

It is also said in the text that these oxen were cast when the sea was cast; insinuating that when God ordained the word of grace to save us, he also in his decree provided ministers to preach it to us to that end. Paul tells us that he was made a minister of the gospel according to God's eternal purpose, which he purposed in Christ Jesus our Lord.—Eph. iii. 9-11; Col. i. 25.

This sea is said to have a brim, like the brim of a cup, to bid as well to drink of its grace as to wash in its water; for the word and Spirit, when mixed, have not only a cleansing, but also a saving quality.—2 Chron. iv. 1-5; 1 Cor. xv. 1, 2.

This brim was wrought with lilies, or was like a lily flourish, to show how they should grow and flourish, and with what beautiful robes they should be adorned, who were washed and did drink of this holy water; yea, that God would take care of them, as he also did of lilies, and would not fail to bestow upon them what was necessary for the body, as well as for the soul.—Matthew vi. 25-34.

MARRIAGES.

FEB. 7th, 1889, at the residence of the bride's son-in-law, Roxbury, Delaware Co., N. Y., by Elder J. D. Hubbell, Mr. Daniel M. Leonard and Mrs. Roxy Davis, both of Roxbury, Delaware Co., N. Y.

By Elder T. M. Poulson, Jan. 1st, 1889, at the line of Maryland, Mr. Frederick Marsh, of New York, and Miss Maggie Robbins, of Accomac Co., Va.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

DIED—Aug. 23, 1888, Mrs. Julia Burgner, wife of brother Jos. Burgner, aged sixty-eight years, ten months and twenty-seven days, leaving behind, to the comfort of all her friends, evidences of a gracious change.

ALSO,

SISTER Mary Burgner, daughter of the above, preceded her to the spirit land several months, leaving a wide circle of friends, brethren and sisters to mourn; for she was lovely in life, and there was carried to her grave, in her countenance, the impress of an angel's touch. Her age was about thirty-eight years.

ALSO,

DIED—Feb. 6th, 1889, sister Millie Sher- rich, aged fifty-seven years, ten months and six days.

She had walked about a mile that morning to build a fire in a house to which her daughter was to move. She was accompanied by a young lady, who left her alone about 10½ o'clock; and when her daughter arrived with her father, about noon, she was found in the yard, burned to death! She had been for two or three weeks previous in a happy state of mind, singing much of the time when at her work; and when asked by her kind husband what influenced her to be so jubilant, she replied that she felt joyful and happy. It now would seem that her Master was preparing her for a happy exit to a better world.

On each of their funeral occasions the unworthy writer was called upon for some remarks.

THOMAS COLE.

DIED—At the residence of his daughter, Mrs. Henry Wilson, Oxford, Indiana, Nov. 6th, 1888, of infirmities incident to old age, Mr. Wm. M. Layne, aged eighty-three years, one month and twenty-two days.

Mr. Layne joined the Baptist Church in the state of Kentucky, in or about the year 1826, and was baptized by Elder Vancleve. He married Eunice Vancleve in 1826, the fruits of this union being one child, a daughter, who was left to him at its mother's death in 1827. In 1828 he married Lucretia Searcy, by whom there were born to him thirteen children, she having preceded him to the land of rest about one year and a half.

His funeral occurred from the residence of his son-in-law, Mr. Wilson, and was attended by a minister of another order; after which he was laid to rest beside his wife, sister Lucretia Layne.

ALSO,

DIED—In Crawfordsville, Ind., Eunice McGregg. She was a daughter of the late Wm. M. Layne by his first wife, and was born in Kentucky in June, 1827.

S. KETCHUM.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS:—By request of sister Lynn, I send for publication a notice of the death of her father, brother Ira Baldwin.

He was born April 27th, 1809, and died Dec. 9th, 1888, and therefore was between seventy-nine and eighty years of age. Brother Baldwin was married three times. First to Sarah Hunter, by whom he had eight children, four sons and four daughters, five of whom are now living, two sons and three daughters. His second marriage was to sister Mary Lynn, Oct. 2d, 1865. His third marriage was to sister Anna Hart, Sept. 23d, 1874, who still survives him. Brother Baldwin received a hope in Christ on the 18th day of February, 1828, joined the Regular Baptist Church, was baptized by Elder Charles Whitting, April 20th, 1828, and has remained a member in good standing ever since. He was a man that loved the truth, and nothing would suit him but rich, free, sovereign, reigning grace, without any creature works whatever.

The community has lost a good citizen, the children have lost a good father, and the church has lost a good member; but what is our loss is his eternal gain.

By request of sister Lynn, the writer preached a discourse from 1 Cor. xv. 49: "And as we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly," being the same that was used at her mother's funeral.

THOMAS MACER.

LYNNVILLE, Ind., Jan. 31, 1889.

DIED—June 4th, 1888, of a complicated disease and old age, Sabitha Jane Bishop, aged sixty-three years, six months and nineteen days.

She was born in Ohio, her mother dying when she was small. From there she moved with her father to Illinois, and afterward to Wisconsin, where she was united in marriage to Solomon Bishop, on Dec. 4th, 1842. She moved with her husband to Fayette County, Iowa, and lived there eighteen years, and then moved to Nodaway Co., Mo., and from there to Lincoln Co., Kansas, in 1870, where she lived until removed by death. She was the mother of ten children (three boys and seven girls), all living. She had twenty-six grandchildren, who are all living but one, and three great-grandchildren, two living. She united with the Primitive Baptist Church in 1859, of which she remained a faithful member until her death. She was a faithful wife and kind mother. May her children remember her christian example, and may they enjoy the rest that remains to the people of God.

Her husband, who is a member of the same church, survives her, having lived to the ripe old age of seventy-five years, and is reasonably strong. May he labor on a few more years, and finally receive the crown prepared for all who love the Lord.

The funeral services were conducted by the writer, using Hebrews xiii. 14.

L. W. FITZWATER.

BASHAN, Kansas, Jan. 28, 1889.

DEPARTED this life, after a short and painful illness, at the residence of Mrs. Abbie Stout, in Hopewell, N. J., April 6th, 1887, Mrs. Eliza Ann VanBuskirk, in the seventy-sixth year of her age.

She had long been a member of the church at this place, and adorned her profession with a well-ordered life. The peace and prosperity of the church was ever uppermost in her thoughts; and so great was her attachment that she remarked to friends a short time before her last sickness that she never wished to be or go where she could not see the smoke ascending from the building where she had been permitted to worship and mingle with the children of God for so many years; and it was her privilege to leave a fund for the use of the church. "Being dead, she yet speaketh."

"Asleep in Jesus! O how sweet
To be for such a slumber meet!"

ALSO,

Mrs. Abbie Stout, relict of Deacon Zephaniah Stout, of Hopewell, N. J., departed this life March 20th, 1888, in the eighty-sixth year of her age.

She was not a member of the church militant, but we trust she has joined the church triumphant; for her Savior appeared to her at an early age, when she was in great darkness and distress of mind, telling her he would never leave her nor forsake her; which blessed promise and hope she clung to as an anchor of the soul through her long and weary pilgrimage through this world of sin and sorrow. Her diseases were of a nervous nature, and so complicated as to greatly affect her mind at times, as well as her body. She was a person of great kindness, and her heart ever went out in sympathy to the needy and distressed; and being blessed with a comfortable home and an abundance of this world's goods, many there are who can testify to her kindness and generosity. It gave her great comfort to be able to meet with the children of God for worship; and this, at frequent intervals, she was permitted to do, until within a short time of her death.

A FRIEND.

DIED—At the residence of her sister, in Prince William Co., Va., in November, 1888, sister Mary Fairfax, of the Occoquan Church, Prince William Co., Va.

The deceased had been sick over a month with typhoid fever. At one time she seemed to be getting better, and we fondly hoped that she might recover, but were doomed to disappointment. Sister Fairfax had been blessed with excellent health throughout her long life. She was a woman of industry and faithfulness in all the relations of life. Her nephew, brother James Posey, writes me, "She was a firm Old School Baptist, ever ready to contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints. The morning she died she talked beautifully, saying, 'I am going home to my blessed Redeemer. I will soon be at home, where there is no more sorrow, no more sin nor trouble. The warfare will be at an end, and no cause of grief for anything more on earth.' May the God of all comfort bless the bereaved family, and lead the children in the path that their dear and faithful mother has trod."

I can cordially indorse what brother Posey has said in reference to the zeal of our departed sister Fairfax. She was baptized by the late Elder Jos. L. Purington, May 3d, 1872, having been a dear lover of gospel truth for some years previous to that time. Living near our meeting-house at Oak Grove, Prince William Co., Va., she rarely ever missed an appointment there, but was faithful in her attendance through snows and rains; faithful in summer heat or in winter cold. She was at meeting for the last time on the second Sunday in October, having arisen from a bed of sickness to attend. She returned to her sister's and went to her bed, never again to mingle with us in the solemn service of Zion. She leaves several children and other relatives to mourn their loss in her death. How precious is the testimony of such a life! How imperishable the character of such a name, above the greatest things of earth, the name and immortal heritage of the children of light! May the Lord graciously sanctify the affliction to the good of those that mourn. We know that he will do all things well.

ALSO,

DIED—Of diphtheria, at her home in Alexandria, Va., Jan. 19th, 1889, Maggie Beardon, in the tenth year of her age.

The deceased was a bright and interesting child, beloved by those who knew her. Her death is a severe affliction to her father, who has been called within two years to part from his wife and child. Maggie was sick but a few days, and bore her sickness with remarkable patience for one of her age. She leaves her father, brother, together with other relatives and a large circle of friends, to mourn her death. May it be richly blessed by the God of all grace and comfort to their good. We know that

"Behind a frowning providence
He hides a smiling face."

I attended her funeral, and spoke for a short time to those who were gathered there from Romans xi. 33, last clause. Thus we see that, whether in youth or in old age, it is God who directs the arrows of death. We must fill up the measure of our appointed time here.

"Till he commands we cannot die.
Not a single shaft shall hit
Till the God of love sees fit."

In this knowledge we can surely rest, confiding all things in the hands of him who disposes all events for the good of his children and his own glory.

WM. M. SMOOT.

OCCOQUAN, Va.

John W. Staton, Clerk of the Circuit Court for this county, died suddenly at his home in Snow Hill, on Monday night, Jan. 25th, 1889, of neuralgia of the heart.

At the opening of the January Term of the Court he went to his office, but, feeling unwell, was obliged shortly afterward to return home. This was his last appearance out, although he was thought to be only slightly indisposed. Just a few moments before his death he complained of a severe pain in the region of his heart, and expired before medical assistance could reach him.

Never has the duty of recording a death in our midst been performed with greater regret, for any one outside our own losses by the grim messenger, than in making the above announcement. Mr. Staton was born in 1823, about six miles from Salisbury, and was the next eldest of a family of seven children, two daughters and five sons. Elder Joseph L. Staton, of the Baptist Church of Newark, Del., is a brother of the deceased. A wife and four children, one son and three daughters, survive him. His funeral took place in Berlin on Thursday morning last.

He had four children, to whom he was a most indulgent and devoted parent. He made himself their companion, ever ready to join in their sports, and yet preserved their respect. Innocent enjoyments of all kinds abounded so much in his family circle that all, from the oldest to the youngest, delighted to be "at home," and it was a pleasure for any one to come within its influence. The trait in his character which was probably more important than any other was his easy, unpretending, and yet ever cordial and abounding hospitality. That rare talent which, without neglecting a guest, leaves him sufficiently master of his own time to make him feel at home, he possessed in an eminent degree. His own duties necessarily engrossed a large part of the day, but he managed it so that he always seemed to be at leisure when his presence could contribute to the comfort or the enjoyment of his friends, so easy and so natural did the duties of hospitality set upon him. Many who read this brief tribute to his memory will remember the warmth with which they have been received under his roof, the earnest inquiries for old friends which they would have to answer, and the devotion to their comfort which every member of his household exhibited, and how they were made to forget that they were in a town of strangers.

In youth and early manhood the same qualities which endeared him to his childhood companions, made him the idol of the circle in which he moved; and when years had brought him to middle life, the qualities of sound judgment, kind heart, enlarged benevolence and stern integrity were but the ripened fruit of his early days.

The deceased will be greatly missed by his friends; but how inexpressibly great indeed is the loss to his immediate family!

That devoted wife, who for many years has loved and cherished, and almost worshiped him, may she have full consolation, when her present overwhelming grief is allayed, in the only reasonable conviction that the late partner of her joys and cares has his rest and home in the celestial abode. The large concourse of people from various parts of the county who followed his remains on Thursday morning to their last resting place in Berlin, testified the esteem in which Mr. Staton was held.

To the almost broken-hearted family we can only give the assurance of the whole community's unfeigned sympathy for their irreparable loss.—Worcester Co. (Md.) Shield.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date, this date denotes the time at which your subscription expires, and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

THE TEN VIRGINS.

Matthew xxv. 1-13.

I WILL try to express my understanding of this parable for the consideration of brethren. In the preceding chapter the closing of the legal dispensation, and the coming of the Son of man in his gospel kingdom, are set forth.

"Then shall the kingdom of heaven be likened unto ten virgins, which took their lamps and went forth to meet the bridegroom." In the coming of the "kingdom of heaven," or "the kingdom of God," the Jews as a nation are at first alone regarded. That kingdom was afterwards taken from them and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof.—Matt. xxi. 43. This parable I understand to have reference to that people under the legal dispensation, and to the separating of the spiritual people of God from among them, and to the bringing of them into the gospel kingdom. The arising of the virgins to trim their lamps, and their conversation and actions, precede the marriage, and cannot therefore, in my view, represent what takes place among gospel characters with reference to their obedience or disobedience; for that marriage represents the manifestation of the gospel relation between the Savior and his people. The door divides between the two dispensations, and forever separates the characters belonging to each. All who belong to the gospel kingdom are represented by those who went in to the marriage.

I understand the ten virgins to represent Israel under the law, and the lamps and vessels their character and profession as the people of God. Under that dispensation they went forth to meet the bridegroom, the Messiah. His coming was promised from the first, and all the ordinances of divine service under the law had reference to that supreme event. In all the rites and ceremonies which they observed, they were going forth to meet the bridegroom. The term "virgin" well represents them in this character as entirely separated unto him who declares himself to be their Husband, and in this sense, as his chosen people, kept pure and chaste unto his coming. All were not what they appeared, but the distinction between the true and the false could not be known until the coming of the bridegroom.

"And five of them were wise and five were foolish. They that were foolish took their lamps and took no oil with them. But the wise took oil in their vessels with their lamps."

The object of this parable is not to teach men how to become wise, and how to avoid being fools; but to show the distinction between the two characters, and how the foolishness of the one and the wisdom of the other are manifested. A fool can never become a wise man by any work of his own, although when silent and idle he may be mistaken for one; and a wise man cannot become a fool, although he may act like one. The foolish virgins were not foolish because they took no oil, but they took no oil because they were foolish; while the wise manifested their wisdom by taking oil. In considering the application of this parable we must carefully remember that there was a distinction from the first between these two characters, a distinction that was not caused nor affected by anything they had or had not done, and therefore a distinction which must continue. It is not intimated that the foolish virgins shall ever become wise, or that any provision for such a change of character has been contemplated; but they continue foolish to the end.

It is necessary to inquire in what wisdom consists, and by whom it is bestowed. "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom."—Psa. cxi. 10; Prov. ix. 10. And the fear of the Lord is so defined as to show that it never exists separately from the Spirit of the Lord, but is a most prominent manifestation of that Spirit in the dear Savior while here in the flesh, and in his people. Concerning Jesus it was said in prophecy, "And the Spirit of the Lord shall rest upon him, the spirit of wisdom and understanding, the spirit of counsel and might, the spirit of knowledge and of the fear of the Lord; and shall make him of quick understanding in the fear of the Lord."—Isaiah xi. 2, 3. It was the Spirit of the Lord with which the Savior was anointed to preach the gospel to the poor (Luke iv. 18), and it is the same "unction from the Holy One" by which his people "know all things."—1 John ii. 20. The Lord says concerning his people, "I will put my fear in their hearts, that they shall not depart from me."—Jer. xxxii. 40. This fear is "to hate evil" (Prov. viii. 13), "is a fountain of life to depart from the snares of death" (Prov. xiv. 27), and is declared to be the Lord's treasure.—Isa. xxxiii. 6. This is the oil which the wise virgins took in their vessels, and they took it because they had it. It is the anointing which they have received of the Lord, and it abideth with them, teaching them of all things.—1 John ii. 27. This oil constitutes their wisdom, and in its possession consists the difference between them and the foolish virgins, who did not possess it then nor afterwards.

"While the bridegroom tarried they all slumbered and slept." The bridegroom tarried during all the legal dispensation; and while the people of Israel were busy attending to the works of the law, at the same time their condition as the people of God nationally is well represented by the sleeping of the virgins. That nation embraced within itself both the wise and the foolish, both the wicked and the righteous; but while they were waiting, sleeping, they all appeared exactly alike, and there was no mark or sign by which they could be distinguished from each other. They all had lamps and vessels, and no one could see which vessels contained oil and which were empty. During the legal dispensation it was impossible to "discern between the righteous and the wicked, between him that served God and him that served him not," for all the works prescribed under that covenant could be done as well by one as by the other. It was at a time yet to come, the very time indicated by the coming of the bridegroom, when the distinction between the two characters should plainly appear.—Mal. iii. 18. The coming of Jesus discovered then, and ever discovers, the truth or falseness of every profession. Wherever his word is in the heart his appearing will call forth a flame of sacred love and holy devotion, and will manifest a sweet readiness to meet him, and that word of life within his people will be as a lamp unto their feet and a light unto their path.—Psa. cxix. 105. But those who have not that word will always be considering that something must be done by themselves or others in order to make them ready to meet him.

"And at midnight there was a cry made, Behold, the bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him." Midnight is the dividing line or point between the going and the coming day. This was the time of the coming of John the Baptist, who in a sense belonged to each day. He was a prophet, and yet more than a prophet, for he was as a messenger before the face of the Lord, to prepare his way before him.—Matt. xi. 9, 10; Luke i. 76-80. I regard the preaching of John the Baptist, and the preaching of Jesus and his disciples before his crucifixion, as the midnight cry. "Behold, the bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him." "Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." As soon as this cry is made the distinction between the wise and the foolish begins to appear. The one has the oil of divine life, the Spirit of the Lord, in which consists all the preparation and readiness to meet him that is needed, and all that shall ever be required; and this readiness is at once manifested. The other has only the lamp, the legal form or letter, the mere profession, and cannot "bring forth fruits meet for repentance," or give any evidence that they have turned from the dead works of the law to serve the living God. These lamps during that night dispensation were all alike furnished by the works of the law; but when Jesus appeared something exceeding the righteousness of the law, the righteousness of the Scribes and Pharisees, was required. The works of the law could only atone for past sins, even in a ceremonial manner, and had no effect upon the future. And so when the announcement of the bridegroom's coming calls for the trimming of the lamps, another kind of righteousness is required which will throw its radiance forward, and light up the pathway to eternal glory.

"Then all those virgins arose and trimmed their lamps. And the foolish said unto the wise, Give us of your oil; for our lamps are gone out." All Israel alike were expecting the Messiah, and all interested to prepare for his coming; but what a difference in their desires and interest concerning this great event. This difference is illustrated in the parable. The wise did not inform the foolish that their lamps had gone out, but they themselves recognized the fact. By this it might at first appear as though they truly saw their undone and helpless condition as sinners, in which case they must be regarded as having spiritual life. But this is evidently not the case; for, although they appear to see their lack of what is required, they evidently do not feel it to be a lack in themselves, which would be beyond their power to remedy, but a lack in their circumstances and possessions, which they at once set to work to supply. If anything more is required than what their works under the law will furnish they see that it is not in their possession, but still do not seem to question their ability to obtain it, and ask with great boldness and confidence, "What shall we do that we may work the works of God?"—John vi. 28. "What good thing shall I do that I may have eternal life?"—Matt. xix. 16. They manifest their foolishness in the first place by applying to the wise for a part of their oil. This is the prime article of the legal or worldly system, that every man can teach his brother and his neighbor concerning the things of religion, can impart of his goodness and merit to those who lack, and so help them to prepare for the kingdom of God. The carnal Israelite is here represented, who cannot see to the end of that which is abolished, has no idea of the true meaning or spiritual value of the legal ceremonies, but still regards them as valuable in themselves, and as something of which some may possess a greater amount than others. Therefore they say, "Give us of your oil." But if the wise had only had the kind of light which the foolish had, their lamps, too, would have gone out when gospel light was called for. But while they all alike performed the required services under the law, the wise had grace and faith in the heart by which they looked beyond the shadow to Jesus, and the announcement of his coming did not cause their lamps to go out, but on the contrary manifested the true light in them.

"But the wise answered, saying, Not so; lest there be not enough for us and you; but go rather to them that sell and buy for yourselves." The Savior sent the legal inquirer to the law. "What is written in the law? how readest thou?" "This do, and thou shalt live."—Luke x. 26-28. The wise know that nothing of a spiritual nature can be imparted by one who possesses it to those who are destitute. Spiritual blessings can no more be shared even with the dearest friend who is without the same than one could share the comforts of life with the dead. Those who have the unspeakable gift know that they neither received it of men, neither were they taught it but by the revelation of Jesus Christ.—Gal. i. 12. So all who apply to living souls for help in obtaining merit in the sight of God will be directed elsewhere, and assured that each must have this for himself. Of the oil which will cause the lamp of a profession to burn in the presence of Jesus no one ever has any to spare.

"And while they went to buy, the bridegroom came; and they that were ready went in with him to the marriage: and the door was shut." Very readily the foolish accepted the only alternative apparent to them, and went to buy. Those who expect to receive the favor of God as a reward for works they are doing, must necessarily be absent when the dear Savior comes; for his coming is not on account of any works of the creature, and therefore cannot ever be at an expected time. The wise are those whom grace has made ready, and they are waiting for him who is the consolation of Israel, as were Simeon and Anna, and hosts of others; and to them he comes at his own appointed time, which is the right time for them. The foolish, depending upon their works for fitness, can never come to the point of finished work, and so can never be present at his coming.

"Afterward came also the other virgins, saying, Lord, Lord, open to us. But he answered and said, Verily I say unto you, I know you not." "When once the master of the house is risen up, and hath shut to the door, and ye begin to stand without, and to knock at the door, saying, Lord, Lord, open unto us; and he shall answer and say unto you, I know you not whence ye are."—Luke xiii. 25. When Jesus arose from the dead the door was shut between the legal and the gospel dispensations, never again to be opened. In the resurrection of Jesus all the church of God were raised up from under the law, and are forever free from its condemnation. Thus all were made ready by him, and all went in with him to the marriage. All must be present in this legal and mystical sense when the marriage takes place. In the experience of this salvation throughout all the ages of the gospel dispensation those who are accepted go in with Jesus. They experience an acceptance with him. No one is accepted or enters separately; no one on account of personal merit of any kind. "God is no respecter of persons." All the living creatures which Peter saw in the great sheet were clean because they were in the sheet. So all the elect are regarded as righteous in Jesus. Whoever fears the Lord and works righteousness, thus gives evidence that he is (not shall be) "accepted with him."—Acts x. 35.

The legal character of the foolish virgins is here again clearly presented. They are on the legal side of the door, and seek to enter in by the works of the law. It was impossible that they could have come in time to go in to the marriage with the oil they had bought. If one could have entered in by his own works, then there could have been no salvation for a Gentile, and none for an Israelite who had ever committed one sin in thought, word or deed.—Romans xi.

One who knocks, or otherwise requests a door to be opened, presents some reason why this request should be granted. Those mentioned in Matthew vii. 22, 23, and Luke xiii. 26, present their good works, and their supposed acquaintance with the Master. These foolish virgins, who in my view represent the same characters, present their self-obtained oil. In each case the Lord declares that he does not know them; and in one case the answer is, "I never knew you," which is precisely the same, for those whom he does not know at one time he never knew.

The figure of a marriage, which is the prominent feature of the parable, gives to me another reason for regarding the wise virgins as alone representing the Lord's people. The others were not at the marriage ceremony, and therefore could not, it would seem, represent those blessed characters who are called to the marriage supper of the Lamb.—Rev. xix. 9. It is a very general sentiment that a marriage ought not to be delayed beyond the appointed time; and those who are inclined to be tardy on other occasions will make extra efforts to be in time when called to a marriage. If this is so among men, how much more under that government where every appointment is absolute, and not subject to the shadow of a change. This marriage could not be delayed one instant for any late comer. With divine and absolute punctuality all who were called were present at the appointed time to enter in, and the door was shut.

Those who in this parable, and in Luke xiii. 25, come after the door is shut and seek to have it opened, I cannot regard as disobedient and transgressing children of God, because all such shall be admitted when they knock. The very terms of the new covenant secure for them mercy for all their unrighteousnesses. But these were refused admittance. Jesus knows all his people, and his eye is upon them even when, like Jonah, in their own experience they are cast out of his sight; but these he declares he does not know. When the disobedient child of God repents, and seeks forgiveness, and finds it, he returns, and enters joys and privileges which had been his before he went astray. But here is a door which was never opened before, and will never be opened again. Neither the bridegroom nor the virgins ever passed through this door until upon this occasion; and none will ever pass through it again, except as in an experimental sense those who are called realize this entering with the bridegroom. This is the door between the law and the gospel, which was opened by the death and resurrection of the dear Redeemer, to bring his redeemed family through; as, under the lead of Joshua, Jordan was divided to let Israel pass through into the land of Canaan. When one is given a hope of salvation he receives that hope not upon the ground of having sought admittance, but as having been "accepted in the Beloved." In this experience one never realizes a passing through the door, but is surprised to find himself in an unexpected time and in an unknown way within the door, within the walls of salvation. It is always a wonder to the rejoicing soul how he came to be there. Often the wondering saint will wish for his burden again, that he might notice how it passed from him, and how he came into this grace wherein he stands. But this none can ever observe. "The kingdom of God cometh not with observation." But the favored one who is experimentally within the city of God, and is enjoying some taste of the marriage supper, the feast of fat things, while wondering to find himself there, is given to know that he was known and loved with an everlasting love by the dear Redeemer, and never lost sight of, but watched over, and preserved in Jesus Christ, and drawn with loving-kindness, and brought through great tribulation, at the appointed time to realize in sweet experience the sacred joys of this marriage supper of the Lamb.

All these parables, from that of the great supper to that of the sheep and goats, appear to me to show in various ways the distinction between the Lord's people and those who do not attain unto the law of righteousness, because they seek it not by faith, but as it were by the works of the law.—Rom. ix. 31. This kind of teaching is for the benefit and comfort of the saints, who are represented as the poor, the lame, those who were compelled to come in, those taken while their companions are left, the faithful servants, the wise virgins, the sheep; and it is to them and for their good that the admonition is repeatedly given, "Watch, therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of man cometh." The Savior's command to them to watch is not in vain. It comes to them with power; and like all the words that go forth out of his mouth, it accomplishes that which he pleases.—Isa. lv. 11. The teaching concerning the faithless character, false profession, and awful end of those who in these parables are rejected and sent away by the Savior, has the effect to make the Lord's people watchful. It is they only who examine themselves with anxiety and trembling, fearing lest they shall be found among the foolish and faithless, who shall go away into everlasting punishment. They, and they only, often fear that they are way-side or stony-ground hearers. Those who are described as the excuse-makers when the gospel feast is declared ready, the wicked and slothful servants, the foolish virgins, the goats, appear to have no fears, no self-distrust or self-depreciation, but are self-complacent, ready to plead their own merits, and to deny any charge against. But the righteous can see no merit in themselves, and freely acknowledge that they well deserve the wrath of a holy God. Therefore they are kept watchful of the hand of the Lord and of his dealings with them, and watchful of themselves, desiring that they might walk in the fear of the Lord. And to them, while made thus watchful, it is from time to time shown wherein they essentially differ from those who are rejected, and precious evidences are sweetly forced upon them that the dear Lord has given them wisdom and faithfulness, has broken and mellowed their hearts, and made their consciences tender in his fear, in order that they shall be good-ground hearers of his precious word, and that he has in infinite love and mercy set them on the right hand of their loved and glorious King.

SILAS H. DURAND.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—As many patrons of the SIGNS have expressed their appreciation of the weekly issue of the SIGNS, I also desire to say that I am very glad, because God in his providence has enabled you to commence the weekly publication of the oldest and best Baptist paper in America; for I think it is confined more to spiritual things than any other paper that I have yet seen. I hope it may be successful as a weekly. I have been a reader of it for many years, and during that time I have generally approved what was published, and highly appreciated the opportunity of reading it; and though for more than thirty years, during which time I have been a reader, some things have appeared in its columns that I could not fully indorse, yet I have accounted for it in my dullness of comprehension; and if at any time one or more of your correspondents have given their views on certain portions of Scripture that are inconsistent with the holy writ, it is only a mistake that all uninspired men are liable to make. But in justice to the very many writers who have written for the SIGNS, they have been willing to submit their views to the brethren, to be carefully compared with the word of inspiration, and have not shown a disposition to force their opinions upon the minds of others. There may be a few exceptions in this respect, and a few instances in which designing men have endeavored to make use of the columns of the SIGNS for the purpose of spreading discord among the churches, and of gratifying a selfish propensity; but these are rare, and through the vigilance of the editors they have been discovered in time to have a portion at least of their ends thwarted. "Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity." But we fail to realize this good and pleasant frame of mind, except there be a dwelling together in unity, and this unity is given us in the Lord Jesus Christ. It is a fellowship with him in his suffering, in his death, and in his glorious resurrection; for if we suffer with him, we also shall reign with him. "That ye also may have fellowship with us: and truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ."—1 John i. 3. "God is faithful, by whom ye were called unto the fellowship of his Son Jesus Christ our Lord."—1 Cor. i. 9. And if we love him that begat, we also love them who are begotten of him. And where there exists genuine love among brethren, there is fellowship, and a dwelling together in unity. I do not think the word union, as it is sometimes used to show relationship between Christ and his church, and between the individual members of the church, expresses the relation; for discordant elements may be joined together in union. But both he that sanctifieth and they who are sanctified are all of one. And there is one body, and one Spirit, even as they are called in one hope of their calling. One Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in them all. If we have not the Spirit of Christ, we are none of his. "And as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God." From these and many other declarations of Scripture we conclude that being heirs of salvation, and joint heirs with Christ, walking after the Spirit, and not after the flesh, there is no discord among the saints, but a sweet sitting together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus. Two cannot walk together except they agree. If one walk after the flesh, and the other walk after the Spirit, there is a conflict; hence discord. But one is justified, and the other is condemned. For "if ye live after the flesh, ye shall die; but if ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live." It is highly important to us, if we desire the approval of our Master, to be found walking in him, endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace, and to stand firm; for this is a day of darkness, when many are giving way to the popular delusions of the world, which seem to be increasing and closing around the saints of the Most High. Brethren, this imperfect letter is at your disposal.

As ever, in fellowship,

J. BEEMAN.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Jan. 22, 1889.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—I feel like writing to you to-night of some of the thoughts that have been passing through my mind for the past week upon the subject of the matter contained in the book of Esther. The types and shadows of the old dispensation seem sometimes to become so intimately blended with the reality of the gospel times, to which they are directed, or to which they point, that in reading the one the mind becomes concentrated upon the other, even to the swallowing up of the historical matter, in the rich reality of the truth which has been presented. The king of the Medes and Persians had a wife (queen Vashti), who in disobedience to his command refused to be brought before him, that she might be shown to the people; for she was fair to look upon. In looking upon the king as a type of our Lord and Savior

Jesus Christ, we can see in the queen and her disobedience a pattern of the children of national Israel. By the surrounding nations they were looked upon as a highly favored people, as a mighty people, chosen from among the nations, and kept by the power of the unseen and unknown God. While they were the chosen people of God, yet they (like queen Vashti) were a stiff-necked and rebellious people, disobeying time after time the commandments laid upon them, and running after other gods. But the God of Israel was long-suffering, of tender compassion and enduring mercy, passing over their many rebellious acts with forgiveness, taking them into favor not only seven times, but seventy times seven. Haman, it would seem to me, represents the proud Pharisee, or one in the position of Saul of Tarsus. Seeing the poor Jew sitting at the gate of the king's palace, refusing to bow to him or do him reverence, he desired to persecute him and all his people by putting them to death. When the king said unto Haman, "What shall be done unto the man whom the king delighteth to honor?" like the Pharisee who thanked God that he was not as other men, Haman in his heart thought there was no other man in the kingdom whom the king would delight to honor as he; and so, through his treachery, pride and self-sufficiency, he was brought to hang upon the very gallows which his own hands erected for the hanging of poor Mordecai. As the apostles and ministers of the cross of Christ stand upon the walls of Zion, watchful not only of their King, but also of his people, so Mordecai sat at the king's gate, not only giving information as to the danger to the life of the king, but also with watchful eye guarding the interests of his people. I have sometimes thought that the two characters, Haman and Mordecai, might fitly represent the two natures manifested in the one man who was first Saul of Tarsus, full of vindictive wrath and blood-thirstiness, until such time as he by the power of his Redeemer became Paul the apostle to the Gentiles.

Mordecai, the champion of national Israel, and Paul, the same character toward spiritual Israel. And now we come to that beautiful character, queen Esther, who as a pattern of the church presents herself before the king, not with a brazen face, as did Haman, but with a veiled countenance. As by the resurrection of our Savior the legal heavens passed away, and the gospel kingdom was set up, so after the disobedience of the first queen, by the command of the king she was put away, and in her stead was ushered in the true bride, the new queen, spotless and pure. How different the petition of the queen to her king from that of Haman. When she is asked, "What is thy petition, queen Esther, and it shall be granted thee? and what is thy request, and it shall be performed, even to the half of the kingdom?"

She answers, with humility and with meekness of heart, "If I have found favor in thy sight, O king, and if it pleaseth the king," &c. And so, dear brethren, as the church, the bride, cometh to her Lord, so each individual member comprising that church, as they are drawn unto him by the Father, experiences that trustfulness, reverence and humility which characterize every humble follower of Jesus. Not as the Pharisee, boasting in his strength and wisdom, does the child of God approach the throne of grace to petition for that which the heart desires; but conscious of his weakness and sinfulness, realizing his unworthiness, being borne down by the burden of debt which is upon him, and having nothing wherewith to pay, like queen Esther he presents himself before the Lord in the attitude of one who, needing all things, depends entirely for all things upon him who he knows is able to give. In her petition to the king she asked for nothing that would adorn her natural body, nothing that would raise her higher in power or popularity; but offering up her own life, which she jeopardized, she said, "If it please the king, and if I have found favor in his sight, and the thing seem right before the king, and I be pleasing in his eyes, let it be written," &c. I feel sure that every heaven-born child has reached in their experience just this state of dependence. If all these things are true, then may we venture to ask. Esther's petition was granted by the king before it was uttered; and so every prayer of God's children is answered in the heart before uttered by the tongue. Sweet and precious are the prayers of the saints, given by the Spirit, and offered unto and accepted by the Father. How perfect are all his ways! How unsearchable are his riches! His ways are past finding out, and his riches are above all rubies. What have we that the Lord has not given us? All things are his. In him are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge. We are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works. From our natural attainments we have nothing to boast, and from our spiritual riches we are unable to give praise adequate to the favors we have received. As we journey on through this vale of sorrow and unbelief, imprisoned in our natural bodies, we are made willing in the day of God's power, and gladly take up our cross and follow him; and so from time to time, being weary and footsore, we are brought into his garden, which is inclosed with the walls of salvation, tenderly nurtured, growing in grace, until that perfect day when time shall be no more, and the glories of eternity shall be revealed.

Yours in hope of life eternal,

B. F. COULTER.

DUNKERTON, Iowa, Dec. 20, 1888.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—Inclosed you will find a precious letter from brother and sister Ellis, written to me by sister Ellis. Her beloved husband was deprived of his sight last spring, which is a great trial; but we have reason to thank God that he has revealed himself to him years ago as the chiefest among ten thousand, and the One altogether lovely. It has been my happy privilege to meet with this dear brother several times at our meetings and associations, and we have had many precious, enjoyable seasons together, while trying to exalt the precious Savior, in speaking of his dear name. My desire and prayer is that our family paper may be made a blessing to the church of God.

With love to you and all the correspondents and readers of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, your brother,
THOMAS BLAKE.

CHARLES CITY, Iowa, Nov. 22, 1888.

DEAR BROTHER AND SISTER BLAKE:—I have been expecting to hear from you for some time, as you said in your last letter you would write again after you returned from the meetings; else I should have written before, according to promise. Mr. Ellis remains about the same as he was when you were here. He felt somewhat tired for awhile, but the memory of the good meetings seemed to keep him up. He said he thought it would last him forty days on his journey. How pleasant it would be if we could have those sittings together in heavenly places oftener; but we must submit to the will of him that doeth all things well. He knows what is best for us. What a blessing it is that our destiny is not left to ourselves; for how soon we would ruin ourselves. All my hope is that he overrules all things (not a part) for his own glory and the good of those that love him; and all do love him that know him, even those he manifests himself to, and no others. I hope and trust I have seen him by the eye of faith, and yet my faith is often very weak; but although little and weak as it is, it is everything to me, a pearl of great price, freely bestowed on one very unworthy. I often think, What is man, that the Lord should be mindful of him, and watch over him, and keep him safe to the journey's end, and then receive him, to praise him through eternity for his mercy and goodness? Happy thought, if we can be counted worthy to enter into that rest that remains to the people of God. Happy exchange from this world of sin, sorrow and affliction. Jesus was afflicted, and what are our afflictions compared with his, who for our sakes became poor, that we through his poverty might be rich? His sufferings in the garden and upon the rugged hill of Calvary, and his agony on the cold ground, when he sweat as it were great drops of blood, all were for us poor, lost and ruined sinners. Why should we complain? Let our lot be cast where it may, his path was much rougher than ours. Yet how often we murmur and complain when anything obstructs our way. But although he sees fit to use the rod for our transgressions, and hides himself for awhile, he returns again with healing in his wings, and pours in the "oil of joy for mourning." When he says, "Peace, be still," there is a great calm. He can stay the tempter's hand, and make smooth sailings again for awhile. But so often we get into by and forbidden paths, and the seas are boisterous, and the way is rough. O! if we could always keep close to our Guide, we would be safe; but for our good he often sees fit to leave us to ourselves for awhile.

Well now, sister Blake, I hope your health is improved, and the Lord will support and keep you all. We received a kind letter from your daughter Sarah yesterday. We send united love to you both. My sister is still here, and joins with us.

MRS. C. P. ELLIS.

HARTLAND, Wash. Ter., Jan. 21, 1889.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—Allow me to express my gratitude to you for your long-forgiveness with us in not sending in our remittance for the SIGNS. You have continued to send them on to us, for which accept our sincere thanks. We live twenty miles from Goldendale, where our membership is. We are getting along in years, and cannot attend regularly. My health is very poor, and I can only attend once and awhile during the summer. The SIGNS OF THE TIMES contains about all the preaching that I have, or at least all that I can call preaching. We are living in a neighborhood that is divided up with different denominations of so-called churches. Sometimes I go to hear them, and wish I had stayed at home. But then I begin to think it may be the fault is in me, and I am afraid that I am too apt to judge others. May God help me to know the truth as it is in Christ Jesus. I have been a reader of the SIGNS ever since a child. My dear father, Dr. J. M. Savage, who now lies silent in the grave, was one of the first subscribers to the paper, and when I married and left home he furnished it to me for a number of years, and I feel like I cannot do without it. I have often felt that I would so much like to write my experience of grace; but feeling my own weakness and inability to say anything that would edify or encourage God's dear children, I have deferred from time to time to do so. Yet I feel there is a duty for God's dear children to perform, and if I am one of that happy number I pray that God will help me to perform that duty, let it be what it will, for I feel assured that I am in the hands of an all-wise Creator, who cannot err, and who does all things well. May the dear Lord reconcile me to his will in all things. My earnest prayer is that you, dear brethren, may be spared and blessed with the right understanding of his word, that your teachings may edify and comfort the dear children of God in the future, as they have in the past.

I am, as ever, your unworthy sister,

LOUISA PITMAN.

PRATT MINES, Ala., Feb. 6, 1889.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS:—I have just been reading brother Lively's letter, expressing his interest in the SIGNS containing brother Hardy's able and efficient reply to friend Duley. Brother Lively was not by himself in being interested in that. Brother Hardy seems to be "the right man in the right place," when it comes to refuting Missionary arguments. His book of "Five Days Debate" is very interesting. I consider that he done his duty well, and fully maintained the cause he went there to defend. Brother Lively expresses some surprise that any would leave the Old Baptists to go to other orders; and it is true that it is seldom ever done. But friend Duley did better than a church east of Birmingham; for they passed a resolution declaring nonfellowship for God's predestination of all things. Friend Duley went clear over to the Missionaries, while they stopped on the half-way ground. The Deacon told me they believe predestination of all things to be heresy. "But this I confess unto thee, that after the way which they call heresy, so worship I the God of my fathers." Predestination of all things is the only doctrine that sweeps every error so clean that there is no place left for Arminianism, chanceism, or any other ism. It utterly refutes the eternal two seed, nonresurrection theory, and is the only doctrine that fully sustains the fact that God is the Creator of all things, that "he is before all things, and by him all things consist."

P. J. POWELL.

ACWORTH, Ga., Nov. 27, 1888.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—By request of brother Alexander, I send you a list of names of Baptists in Texas. He wishes you to give your views through the SIGNS OF THE TIMES on the subject of the transgression, as Baptists out there differ on that, as also on predestination.

I have been in much trouble for a long time. When I lay down to-night I could not sleep. In taking a retrospective view of my life I felt discouraged, and said, O Lord, give me right thoughts and understanding of these things! Then these words came so sweetly to my mind that the tears flowed from my eyes and my heart was filled with praise to God, "Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake. Rejoice, and be exceeding glad; for so persecuted they the prophets which were before you." I often think of Jesus when I cannot sleep. You know we read that he spent whole nights in prayer; and it certainly was for us. He had no sin.

Your unworthy sister,

L. P. McDANIEL.

LAMENTATIONS III. 38.

G. BEEBE'S SONS:—Is there such a passage of Scripture, "Out of the mouth of the Most High God doth not proceed both good and evil?" J. S. B.

REPLY.

Evidently there is no such declaration in the inspired record, as such a sentiment conflicts with what the Lord himself has declared by the mouth of his inspired prophets. In Lamentations iii. 38, Jeremiah inquires, "Out of the mouth of the Most High proceedeth not evil and good?" Most certainly they do. Who will dispute it? "Shall there be evil in a city, and the Lord hath not done it?"—Amos iii. 6. "I form the light, and create darkness: I make peace, and create evil: I the Lord do all these things."—Isa. xlv. 7. Has anything transpired contrary to the will of God, or that he has not decreed? "Who is he that saith, and it cometh to pass, when the Lord commandeth it not?"—Lam. iii. 37. Does he not say that he has declared the end from the beginning?—Isa. xlv. 10. If men succeed in their wicked designs, it is because God has determined that so it shall be. "A man's heart deviseth his way, but the Lord directeth his steps."—Prov. xvi. 9. "Now therefore be not grieved, nor angry with your yourselves, that ye sold me hither; for God did send me before you to preserve life." "But as for you, ye thought evil against me; but God meant it unto good, to bring to pass, as it is this day, to save much people alive."—Gen. xlv. 5; 1. 20.

"God moves in a mysterious way,
His wonders to perform;
He plants his footsteps in the sea,
And rides upon the storm."

"Blind unbelief is sure to err,
And scan his work in vain;
God is his own interpreter,
And he will make it plain."

"There are many devices in a man's heart; nevertheless the counsel of the Lord, that shall stand."—Prov. xix. 21. To quote all the Scripture that declares the predestination of God in all things that come to pass, would be to transcribe a very large portion of the volume of inspiration. Says the wise man to the children of wisdom, "Cease, my son, to hear the instruction that causeth to err from the words of knowledge."—Prov. xix. 27. Where shall we find the words of knowledge but in the "all Scripture given by inspiration of God, and profitable for doctrine?" What comfort can possibly accrue to a child of God from the thought that anything comes to pass that was not embraced in the counsel of God, and that does not proceed out of his mouth as a decree?

In this book of Lamentations the prophet Jeremiah mourns over the deplorable condition of God's people, driven from their beloved city, and captives in Babylon, as a just judgment upon them for their departures from their covenant God. "How doth the city sit solitary that was full of people! how is she become as a widow!" "The ways of Zion do mourn, because none come to the solemn feasts. All her gates are desolate, her priests sigh, her virgins are afflicted, and she is in bitterness. Her adversaries are the chief; her enemies prosper: for the Lord hath afflicted her for the multitude of her transgressions; her children are gone into captivity before the enemy." "Zion spreadeth forth her hands, and there is none to comfort her." "The Lord hath commanded concerning Jacob, that his adversaries should be round about him." "The Lord hath purposed to destroy the wall of the daughter of Zion." "The Lord hath done that which he hath devised: he hath fulfilled his word that he had commanded in the days of old." It is true that the Chaldeans were the instruments, yet the Lord declares that it is his doings, and that it was the fulfillment of his purpose in the days of old. Is there evil here and the Lord has not done it? The wicked are his sword, and he is the hand that wields it. "O Assyrian, the rod of mine anger, and the staff in their hand is mine indignation. I will send him against a hypocritical nation, and against the people of my wrath will I give him a charge, to take the spoil, and to take the prey, and to tread them down like the mire of the streets. Howbeit he meaneth not so, neither doth his heart think so; but it is in his heart to destroy and cut off nations not a few." "Wherefore it shall come to pass that when the Lord hath performed his whole work upon Mount Zion and on Jerusalem, I will punish the fruit of the stout heart of the king of Assyria, and the glory of his high looks." Thus we see that the wicked devices of men are embraced in the counsel of the Lord which shall stand, and out of the mouth of the Most High proceedeth the evil with which his people are afflicted. How awful is his chastening rod! He has determined the nature and the measure of the evil that shall come upon his people, and declares that the effect is not uncertain, but shall be seen in their mourning over their sins, and returning unto him, the mighty God, who had smitten them. "Wherefore doth a living man complain, a man for the punishment of his sins?" Does Jeremiah complain that the Lord has dealt unjustly or unkindly with Israel in his judgments? Does Israel complain and murmur? Why should they complain for the punishment of their sins? "It is of the Lord's mercies that we are not consumed, because his compassions fail not. They are new every morning; great is thy faithfulness. The Lord is my portion, saith my soul; therefore will I hope in him. The Lord is good unto them that wait for him, to the soul that seeketh him." "Remembering mine affliction and my misery, the wormwood and the gall. My soul hath them still in remembrance, and is humbled in me. This I recall to my mind, therefore have I hope." "My son, despise not thou the chastening of the Lord, nor faint when thou art rebuked of him; for whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth. If ye be without chastisement, whereof all are partakers, then are ye bastards, and not sons." When humbled under the mighty hand of their God, Israel shall not complain, but shall say, "I know, O Lord, that thy judgments are right, and that in faithfulness thou hast afflicted me." "But when we are judged, we are chastened of the Lord, that we should not be condemned with the world." It is a mercy and an evidence of God's favor that his people are punished for their sins. "He hath not dealt so with any nation; and as for his judgments, they have not known them. Praise ye the Lord." God said to Israel, "You only have I known of all the families of the earth: therefore will I punish you for your iniquities." Bastards may escape his rod, but his children never will. Like Israel in the type, his spiritual people may "become as a widow," and may "sit solitary;" but the Lord will not cast off forever, for he will again commend his love toward them, and take vengeance on them who have been a sword in his hand to afflict them.

In the Lamentations of Jeremiah is expressed the sorrow of the re-deemed family of God, under a sense of their sinful and wretched condition, while subject to the vanity of this time state. Under his afflicting hand the flesh would say, "Curse God and die." Why should you be thus afflicted? The Lord could, in a moment of time, deliver you from it all, and why does he not do it? He could keep you from sinning against him, and why does he not do it? How many questions of this kind present themselves to the mind of the tried subject of God's grace. O what replyings against God! "He hath brought me into darkness, and not into light. Surely against me is he turned; he turneth his hand against me all the day." "He hath builded against me, and compassed me with gall and travail." "Also when I cry and shout, he shutteth out my prayer." "Is it nothing to you, all ye that pass by? Behold, and see if there be any sorrow like unto my sorrow, which is done unto me, wherewith the Lord hath afflicted me in the day of his fierce anger." We are apt to think that our sorrows and trials are peculiar to ourselves; that none who cherish a hope in the mercy of God have as much cause as we for doubts and fears. But every heart knoweth its own bitterness, and every one must mourn apart. Could we only believe that the Lord was trying our faith in these things, how easy the mind would be. "What thing shall I take to witness for thee? What thing shall I liken to thee, O daughter of Jerusalem? What shall I equal to thee, that I may comfort thee, O virgin daughter of Zion? For thy breach is great like the sea: who can heal thee?"—Lam. ii. 13. The sorrows of God's people surely are like a sea. "All thy waves and billows are gone over me." Deep calleth unto deep. The sea of trouble appears to have no bounds, and we are overwhelmed. Are there any temporal troubles and calamities to which we can compare the awful sufferings of that child of God who is experiencing the hidings of God's countenance? We can bring forth nothing from all the realm of nature that will answer to it, or that will afford comfort to the "afflicted, tossed with tempest." Perhaps it would be next to impossible for us to think of the worst temporal affliction we have endured, without thinking of some one who has been or is worse off than we have been. Thus by comparing and contrasting our situation with that of others, we might be more or less comforted. But not so in these soul troubles. Only he out of whose mouth proceedeth both evil and good can comfort us: only he who has "the tongue of the learned" can speak the word that will give rest and quiet to us. "Who is he that saith" to such a troubled one, Peace, "and it cometh to pass, when the Lord commandeth it not?" But when the "waters flowed over my head, then I said, I am cut off," ready to perish; yet hope is not dead; faith is not destroyed; there is a throne of grace; "I called upon thy name, O Lord, out of the low dungeon." Amazing grace! "Thou hast heard my voice!" "Thou drewest near in the day that I called upon thee; thou saidest, Fear not."

"The storm could not bury that word in the wave—
'Twas taught through the tempest to fly;
It shall reach his disciples in every age,
Saying, Be not afraid, it is I.
It is I, it is I.
Fear not, trembling one, it is I.
In the midst of the storm,
In the midst of the gloom,
Fear not, trembling one, it is I."

Out of the mouth of the Lord has proceeded good, as well as evil. "O how great is thy goodness, which thou hast laid up for them that fear thee; which thou hast wrought for them that trust in thee before the sons of men. Thou shalt hide them in the secret of thy presence from the pride of man: thou shalt keep them secretly in a pavilion from the strife of tongues. Blessed be the Lord; for he hath shewed me his marvelous kindness in a strong city.

For I said in my haste, I am cut off from before thine eyes; nevertheless thou heardest the voice of my supplications when I cried unto thee. O love the Lord, all ye his saints; for the Lord preserveth the faithful, and plentifully rewardeth the proud doer. Be of good courage, and he shall strengthen your hearts, all ye that hope in the Lord."

THE TRANSGRESSION.

IN accordance with the request of brother Alexander, as expressed in the letter of sister McDaniel, on page 68, we offer some thoughts upon the subject of the mystery of iniquity, as it was first manifested in the natural creation. It must be remembered, however, that finite intelligence can never comprehend the wonders connected with this deep mystery. God has purposely hidden this matter of the origin of iniquity among those secret things which he has reserved in his own keeping; and all that we are capable of comprehending concerning it is what he has been pleased to reveal in his sacred word. Natural reason and philosophy can only wander in a hopeless labyrinth of error when seeking to explore this infinite and fathomless secret of the Most High. All that is for the benefit of his saints to know is clearly revealed in the inspired Scriptures. All efforts to know more than this only tend to bewilder the mind of the inquiring saint.

The first thing to be considered in discussing the subject proposed for our views, is the scriptural definition of transgression. It is written that "Whosoever committeth sin transgresseth also the law; for sin is the transgression of the law."—1 John iii. 4. And Paul says, "Where no law is, there is no transgression."—Rom. iv. 15. Again it is written, "All unrighteousness is sin."—1 John v. 17. From these declarations of divine truth it is evident that wherever there is sin there is a transgression of law. The converse is also true, that wherever any law is transgressed there is sin made manifest by that law.

We presume the principal point of our brother's inquiry is with reference to the origin of sin. On this subject much speculation has been published from the pulpit and from the press; but all has added nothing to what is given by the word of inspiration. Many highly esteemed ministers of the gospel have been carried away from the simplicity of the word of truth by fanciful theories, in which they have thought to explain the indisputable fact of the existence of sin. Some have contended that it was not included in the purpose of God that sin should ever have place in the universe which he created; and many dear subjects of the redeeming grace of God have been captivated by this theory, not appearing to consider that such a view involves the denial of the infinite wisdom and power of God. It is argued that the holiness of God is impeached by the doctrine that he purposed the existence of the wicked as rebels against his perfect law; and that if the entrance of sin into the world was included in the eternal purpose of God, then there is no just ground for the condemnation of those who have transgressed the law which was given to them. From this fallacy is deduced the charge of unrighteousness with God, and he is said to be "the author of sin." Under the delusion of this false system of reasoning some dear children of God have been betrayed into the denial of clearly revealed truth. The effect of that denial is felt in their failure to find rest in the perfect assurance that the God of their salvation is really sovereign and infinite in all his glorious attributes, so that all beings and all worlds are subject to his will. Thus they are robbed of their comfort which is assured by the confidence in the unlimited power of God to declare the end from the beginning, and to cause his glory to appear even in making the wrath of man to praise him, and in restraining the remainder of wrath.

Since this subject is too deep for finite comprehension, there can be no safety in trusting to the vain efforts of reason for its investigation. The only light upon it is that which God has himself declared. To those who really believe the testimony of divine truth the record of the word of the Lord must be the end of all controversy, whether finite reason can understand that word or not. In the third chapter of the book of Genesis is found the first account of the entrance of sin into the world. Paul, referring to that record, says, "By one man sin entered into the world;" "By the offense of one judgment came upon all men to condemnation."—Rom. v. 12, 18. From that first disobedience, in which all the natural race of Adam was involved in death, there is no possibility that any man should ever deliver himself so as to be justified from sin. The law which was given to national Israel on Sinai, contained no provision for the removal of that condemnation which had come upon them in common with all the family of Adam in that first disobedience to the command of the Creator. Even if an Israelite could have fully answered every demand of that law it would not have released him from the death which had already passed upon him in that original transgression. Neither did the violation of the law of Moses bring upon the transgressor any penalty beyond the temporal calamities which were provided in that law. There was neither eternal life nor eternal death in that covenant which was given to the natural Israel. "For if there had been a law given which could have given life, verily righteousness should have been by the law."—Gal. iii. 21. By the commandment of that law sin is made to appear, as it truly is, "exceeding sinful." For this end it was added, "because of transgressions."

It is evident that without the existence of sin there could have been no revelation of salvation for sinners. But it is clearly written to the elect strangers, that they were not re-deemed with corruptible things, as silver and gold, from their vain conversation received by tradition from their fathers; "but with the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot; who verily was foreordained before the foundation of the world, but was manifest in these last times for you, who by him do believe in God that raised him up from the dead, and gave him glory; that your faith and hope might be in God."—1 Peter i. 18-21. It is inconsistent to suppose that this eternal purpose of God provided for a mere contingency which might never come to pass. The provision of Christ Jesus as the Savior of his people from their sins, necessarily involves the provision that he should have a people to be the subjects of that salvation which was provided in him. So Paul says, "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ, according as he hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before him in love; having predestinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to himself, according to the good pleasure of his will, to the praise of the glory of his grace, wherein he hath made us accepted in the beloved."—Eph. i. 4-6. This doctrine perfectly agrees with that which the Spirit of Christ moved David to sing, "My substance, [marginal reading, strength, or body] was not hid from thee, when I was made in secret, and curiously wrought in the lowest parts of the earth. Thine eyes did see my substance, yet being imperfect; and in thy book all my members were written, which in continuance were fashioned, when as yet there was none of them."—Psa. cxxxix. 15, 16. From this declaration it seems evident that the purpose of God was not defeated by any circumstances surrounding the chosen members of the body of our gracious Redeemer. In their hopeless death in sin they were not less the objects of eternal love and choice than when finally exalted in glory with their triumphant Redeemer. This truth is indispensable to the comfort of hope in which the believer in Jesus finds all his rest. The power of our God is supreme over the wickedness and malice of all enemies of his truth as it is exalted in the heaven of his glorious holiness. So Jesus denied the assertion of Pilate when he claimed power to release him or to deliver him to be crucified, saying, "Thou couldst have no power at all against me except it were given thee from above; therefore he that delivered me unto thee hath the greater sin."—John xix. 11. It is important to notice that the Lord finds in the fact of the fulfillment of the purpose of God in his betrayal "greater sin," instead of the conclusion of carnal reason, which would contend that Judas could not have been guilty in doing that which the hand and counsel of God determined before to be done.—Acts iv. 28. All who believe the Scriptures will confess that the murder of the Lord of life was the most awful crime ever wrought by sinful men; yet this is plainly declared to have been done in fulfillment of the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God.—Acts ii. 23. It was indeed done with wicked hands, and was no less criminal in those who crucified him, although God used that crime as the channel through which his chosen people were cleansed from all sin. This wonderful mystery is beyond the comprehension of finite intelligence, yet it is positively declared by the infallible revelation of divine truth. Without the death of the Savior there could be no salvation for sinners. By his precious blood alone his saints are cleansed from all their transgressions, and made holy and without blame before God in love.

As this was included in the purpose of divine grace for the redemption of the chosen people of God, so all minor exhibitions of wickedness are among the things which God will cause to show forth his glory in the manifestation of his grace. Many instances might be cited from the Scriptures, wherein God caused the sinful actions of men to contribute to the accomplishment of his purposes of mercy and goodness to his chosen people. The envy of Joseph's brethren was made subservient to the fulfillment of the dreams which God had given to the child. The arrogance of Haman was one of the incidents in the providence of God through which was brought about the deliverance of the Israelites from utter destruction. The tyranny and obstinacy of Pharaoh was used in bringing the chosen nation out of Egyptian bondage. The persecution at Jerusalem was the instrumentality which God had appointed by which the saints were driven everywhere, preaching the word of salvation among the Gentiles. In all these, and many other cases which are written for our learning, the enemies of God were impelled by wicked motives, and were not the less guilty because their malice was made to serve the very truth which they sought to destroy. To the narrow view of reason the way of the Lord is wrong and inconsistent with his promise of love and mercy, so that even Jacob said, "Me have ye bereaved; Joseph is not, and Simeon is not, and ye will take Benjamin away: all these things are against me."—Gen. xlii. 36. Yet it was but a little time after this that he saw the wagons which Joseph had sent to carry him, and then by the power of faith his spirit revived. It was Israel who then said, "It is enough; Joseph my son is yet alive; and I will go and see him before I die."—Gen. xlii. 36; xlv. 27, 28. So it is now with them who are led by the Spirit of God. While, like the natural Jacob, reason is always despondently questioning the faithfulness and truth of God, it is given them at times by faith to see, as was shown to the typical Israel, that even the severest afflictions and the most adverse circumstances which they encounter are all working together for good to them. This comforting and precious truth is never seen in any other way but by faith. Reason cannot receive the revelation of the Spirit, because it is purposely hidden from the natural man, to which reason belongs. The light of revelation is all darkness to the wisdom of this world, even in the saints. For this cause there must ever be a continual warfare with them between the darkness of their natural mind and the knowledge which they have by the revelation which they receive by faith, and which is the ground of their hope in the salvation of God in Christ Jesus. In this conflict the saints always find the importance of relying with a firm assurance upon the firm foundation of the omnipotence and unlimited sovereignty of the God of their salvation. No philosophy can shake the clear declaration of this truth as it is written in the Scriptures. With the admission of the real sovereignty of God all the caviling of unbelief is silenced. This truth gives the victory to the saints in every assault of unbelieving doubts.

It is not possible in the brief limits of this article to refer in particular to the mass of scriptural testimony by which the sovereignty of God is declared; the unprejudiced reader will find it in all the record given by inspiration of God.

While reason is so blinded by sin that it is not a safe guide in regard to the important subject of our brother's inquiry, it does seem that there is no consistent acknowledgment of the existence of the God whose every attribute is infinite, without the admission that the inspired declaration is true, that "The Lord hath made all things for himself; yea, even the wicked for the day of evil."—Prov. xvi. 4. The purpose of the Lord has not been defeated by the transgression of his law. This is too wonderful for finite comprehension; yet it is plainly written by the infallible Spirit of truth, not only in this text, but in the whole record which God has given. We cannot claim ability to comprehend this awful mystery; yet we would not dare contradict what God has declared. Confessing our own vanity in the sight of the Holy One, let us all in humility say, "Yea, let God be true, but every man a liar."—Rom. iii. 4. Even reason cannot consistently deny that in his infinite sovereignty God is just in the creation of devils and darkness, as well as in the creation of angels and the formation of light. Otherwise, there is a limit to his sovereignty. This is atheism, for without infinity in all his perfections there can be no God. The initial error in all reasoning on this subject is the assumption that man is capable of judging the work of God. It should never be forgotten that while he has given his law to his creature man, he is God, and therefore he is above all law. His will is his only standard of right. "Whatsoever the Lord pleased, that did he in heaven, and in earth, in the seas, and in all deep places."—Psa. cxxxv. 6.

SOLOMON'S TEMPLE SPIRITUALIZED.

BY JOHN BUNYAN.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

Upon what the molten sea stood in the Temple.

THIS molten sea stood upon the backs of twelve brazen oxen.—2 Chron. iv. 4. These oxen, as they thus stood, looked three toward the north, three toward the west, three toward the east, and three toward the south.

These twelve oxen were types of the twelve apostles of the Lamb, who, as these beasts stood looking into the four corners of the earth, were bidden to go and preach the gospel in all the world.

They were compared to oxen, because they were clean; for the ox was a clean beast. Hence the apostles are called holy.

They were compared to oxen, because the ox is strong; and they also were mighty in the word.—Prov. xiv. 4; 2 Cor. xii.

The ox will not lose what he has got by drawing—he will not let the wheels go back. So the apostles were set to defend, and not let that doctrine go back which they had preached to others; nor did they. They delivered it pure to us.

In that they stood with their faces every way, it was, as I said, to show how the apostles should carry the gospel into all the world.—Matthew xxviii. 19; Mark xvi.

And observe, just as these oxen were placed, looking in the temple every way, even so stand open the gates of the New Jerusalem to receive those that by their doctrine should be brought into it. "And they shall come from the east, and from the west, and from the north, and from the south, and shall sit down in the kingdom of God."—Rev. xxi. 13, 14; Luke xiii. 29.

These oxen bear this molten sea upon their backs, to show that they should be the foundation workmen of the gospel, and that it ought not to be removed, as was the molten sea of old, from that basis to another.

It is also said concerning these oxen that thus did bear the molten sea, that all their hinder parts were inward; that is, covered by that sea that was set upon their backs. Their hinder parts, or, as the apostle has it, our uncomely parts.—1 Cor. xiii. 23, 24. And, indeed, it becomes a gospel minister to have his uncomely parts covered with that grace which by the gospel he preaches unto others; as Paul exhorts Timothy, to take heed unto himself and to the doctrine.—1 Tim. iv. 6.

But alas! there are too many who, can they but have their heads covered with a few gospel notions, care not though their hinder parts are seen of all the world. But such are false ministers. A prophet calls them the tail. "The prophet that teacheth lies [either by word or with his feet], he is the tail."—Isa. ix. 15; Prov. vi. 12, 13. But what a shame to hide his head under this molten sea, while his hinder parts hang out. Such an one is none of Christ's oxen; for they, with honor to their Master, show their heads before all the world, for that their hinder parts are inward, covered.

Look to thy hinder parts, minister, lest while thy mouth doth preach the gospel, thy nakedness and shame be seen of those which hear thee. For they that do not observe to learn this lesson themselves, will not teach others to believe the word, nor to live a holy life. They will learn of them to show their shame, instead of learning to be holy.

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

Of the lavers of the Temple.

BESIDES this molten sea, there were ten lavers in the temple, five of which were put on the right side, and five also on the left.—2 Chron. iv. 6. Of their fashion and their furniture you may see in First Kings vii.

These lavers, as the molten sea, were vessels which contained water; but they were not of the same use with it. True, they were both to wash in—the sea to wash the worshipers, but the lavers to wash the sacrifice. "He made also ten lavers, to wash in them such things as they offered for the burnt offering; but the sea was for the priests to wash in."

The burnt offering was a type of the body of Christ, which he once offered for our sins; and the fire on which the sacrifice was burned was a type of the law which seized on Christ when he gave himself a ransom for us. For that under the law was called the burnt offering, because of the burning upon the altar.

But what then must we understand by these lavers, and by this sacrifice being washed in them, in order to its being burned upon the altar? I answer, I think that the ten lavers were a figure of the ten commandments, in the purity and perfection of Christ's obedience, to which he became capable of being made a burnt offering, acceptable to God for the sins of his people. Christ was made under the law, and all his acts of obedience to God for us were legal.

And his living thus a perfect legal life was his washing his offering in these ten lavers, in order to his presenting it upon the altar for our sins. The lavers went upon wheels, to signify walking feet. And Christ walked in the law, and so became a clean offering to God for us. The wheels were of the very same as were the lavers, to show that Christ's obedience to the law was of the same, as to length and breadth, with its commands and demands, to their utmost tittle and extent. The inwards and legs of the burnt offering were to be washed in these lavers, to show that Christ should be pure and clean in heart and life.

We know that obedience, whether Christ's or ours, is called a walking in the way, typified by the lavers walking upon their wheels. But I mean not by Christ's washing of his offering that he had any filthiness cleaving to his nature or obedience; yet this I say, that so far as our guilt laid upon him could impede, so far he wiped it off by washing in these lavers; for his offering was to be without blemish and without spot to God. Hence it is said that he sanctified himself, in order to his suffering. "Being made perfect, he became the author of eternal salvation to all them that obey him."—John xvii. 19; Heb. v. 6-10. For albeit he came holy into the world, yet that holiness was but preparatory to that by which he sanctified himself in order to his suffering for sin. That which was his immediate preparation for his suffering was his obedience to the law, his washing in these lavers. He then first yielded complete obedience to the law on our behalf; and then, as so qualified, he offered his washed sacrifice for our sins, without spot to God. Thus, therefore, he was our burnt offering, washed in the ten lavers, that he might according to the law be accepted of the Lord.

"And he set five of the lavers on the right side of the house, and five of them on the left." Thus were the ten divided, as the tables of the law; one showing our duty toward our God, the other our duty toward our neighbor; in both which the burnt offering was washed, that it might be clean in both respects.

They might also be thus placed, the better to put the people in mind of the necessity of the sanctification of Christ, according to the law, in order to his offering himself an offering to God for us.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

My dear husband, Josiah Murphy, died at his home in Barbour Co., W. Va., Dec. 3d, 1888, after a short illness of chronic asthma, aged fifty years, three months and sixteen days.

After intense suffering, he passed from death unto life. He did not belong to any church, but was a strong believer in the doctrine of the Old School Baptists, and loved to read the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. He is sadly missed by friends, as well as by relatives. He leaves a wife and ten children to mourn their loss; but I hope our great loss is his eternal gain.

AMANDA MURPHY.

It has become my painful duty to record the death of my dear wife, which occurred on Sunday evening about nine o'clock, Dec. 8th, 1888, aged forty years, seven months and twenty days.

She was a member of the Old School Baptists, and was always ready to defend the cause, and to declare what she hoped the Lord had done for her soul. Her home was always open for the people of God. Her sickness was typhoid fever, which turned to congestion of the lungs. She leaves myself and five children. I know it to be true that none can mourn as they who have lost such a good companion. May the Lord cause the children to realize their absolute dependence upon him, wean them from every other refuge, and make them, if it is his holy will, to openly confess him who has so manifestly shed abroad his love in their hearts.

A. G. PHILLIPS.

MONTROSE, W. Va.

Elder William Long departed this life at Nora Springs, Iowa, Jan. 31st, 1889, aged seventy-eight years, three months and six days.

The deceased was born Oct. 25th, 1810, in the state of Virginia. He had lived at Nora Springs fourteen years. He was united in marriage August 20th, 1832, to Martha Miner, by whom he had thirteen children, nine of whom survive him, four sons and five daughters. His wife died Dec. 5th, 1881. On April 3d, 1884, he was married to Esther Louis, widow of Wm. Louis. Sister Long still lives.

Elder Long was called by grace in early life, and joined the Old School Baptists, and has been an able minister of Jesus Christ fifty-two years. His last illness was of short duration, being sick only three days, passing quietly away in hope of life beyond the grave. The writer spoke at the funeral, by request of the family, from Phil. iii. 20, 21; after which the remains were interred in the cemetery near the town, to await the summons at the resurrection.

Trusting that the Lord may sustain and keep the bereaved ones, and enable them to trust in him, I am your brother and fellow-laborer,

THOMAS BLAKE.

DUNKERTON, Iowa.

DIED—At her home near Fairfax Court House, Va., Dec. 24th, 1888, Miss Eugene Trott Fox.

The deceased had been sick for several months, suffering much during the time, but bearing her suffering with great patience. She was a dear friend of our people, regularly attending our meetings, and giving evidence in many ways that she knew and loved the truth as it is in Jesus. A large congregation attended her funeral on the 25th, the writer using as a text upon the occasion portions of the seventy-first Psalm. The deceased leaves an aged and widowed mother, two brothers and one sister, besides other relatives, to mourn their loss. Her mother, now ninety-two years of age, in her long and eventful life has experienced many such afflictions. May the kind hand of him who has been her support throughout her mortal pilgrimage continue to sustain her, as well as all who are called to mourn in this dispensation of the providence of our God. Truly he is the "God of all comfort." In his presence is fullness of joy. We are constantly reminded that we have no abiding city upon mortal shores. Death and disease are the common heritage of us all. No age or condition is exempt from such visitations. To know that the hand of the omnipotent One is directing all these things is the consolation of his dear children. In him we can safely confide all that we have or hope to be, knowing that he will most assuredly work all together for the good of his children and his own great glory.

WM. M. SMOOT.

OCCOQUAN, Va.

Jennie B. Burris passed to the other life on Dec. 23d, 1888, aged twenty-two years and eleven days.

It was my good fortune to meet Mrs. Jennie Burris about the middle of September, 1888, and from that time until her death I saw her almost daily. Consumption had set the seal of death on her, and for years she had been a patient sufferer. She was always cheerful, hoping for the best, and many times told me that she was willing to go when the Master called. Her last hours were full of hope, and a longing to be gone and be at rest in God's kingdom. While she suffered severely at times, she said his grace was sufficient for her. At the very last her testimony was, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end."

Thus has passed away one who was bright, loving and good. No one could know her only to love her, being generous and thoughtful to the very last. While it is human to mourn, we could not wish her back. Her mother cared for her as only a loving mother could. She was her "baby," as she called her. An older sister and father had preceded her with the same disease. One sister is left, who was with her, and did all that a loving sister could. These, with husband and children, are left to mourn for her, but not without hope; for daily and hourly she gave evidence of the kingdom of God within, by manifesting it in her life. God is good.

STIMSON SMITH.

CAIN, Iowa.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—It becomes my painful duty to send for publication in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES the obituary of my dear wife, Elizabeth Scroggin, whose maiden name was Lucas.

She was born in Sangamon Co., Ill., April 8th, 1827, and died at her home in Logan County, Ill., Nov. 1st, 1888, in the sixty-second year of her age. She was sick about twelve months with sciatic neuralgia and a complication of diseases, which the doctors, with all their skill, could never reach nor check. No tongue can tell nor pen describe her suffering; yet she bore all with christian fortitude, lamenting more on account of her sinfulness than on account of her suffering and pain. She received a hope that God for Christ's sake had forgiven her sins, and joined the Old School or Predestinarian Baptist Church called Lake Fork (situated in Logan Co., Ill.) by experience, and was baptized July 4th, 1858, by Elder Michael Mann, and remained a worthy member of the same church until her death, being a little over thirty years. Her seat was seldom vacant on meeting day, for her chief joy was to meet with her brethren to worship that God who created all things for himself, in whom she trusted for life and immortality, having no confidence in the flesh.

The subject of this notice was married to the humble writer of these few lines on March 25th, 1845, of which union there were seven children born unto us, two dying in infancy, the other five being at her bedside when she quietly passed away like one falling asleep, without a groan or a struggle. We are left to mourn for a loving wife, a tender and affectionate mother, loved and respected by all her friends and neighbors, and especially by the household of faith. "Asleep in Jesus!" And "them that sleep in Jesus will God bring with him," when the voice of the Archangel and the trump of God shall awake the sleeping dead. Therefore we sorrow not as those that have no hope. May God in his infinite mercy enable us all to be reconciled to his dealings with us, and enable us to realize that the Lord gives, and the Lord taketh away.

Yours in much tribulation,

R. S. SCROGGIN.

ORDINATIONS.

THE Mill Creek Church, Putnam Co., Indiana, at her regular meeting of business in November, 1888, agreed to ordain brother MARION M. HEARST to the full functions of the gospel ministry on Saturday before the third Sunday in January, 1889, and agreed to send for ordained and other helps to assist in the ordination from the churches of Sugar Creek, Vermillion and Okaw Associations, and also from Bethel, Little Walnut and Mount Gilead Churches.

On Saturday before the third Sunday in January, 1889, the church met; and after attending to the other business, the reference was called for in regard to the ordination. The churches were then called, and most of them responded. The church then received the council that had been sent by the sister churches.

The council was organized by electing Elder G. W. Dalby, of Okaw Association, Moderator, and E. F. Goff, of Sugar Creek Association, Clerk.

Deacon W. E. Moore was invited to a seat in the council.

The ordained authorities of Mill Creek Church were also invited.

The council inquired of the church if she was in the same mind as she was when she sent for the council. Answered in the affirmative.

The Deacon of Mill Creek Church presented the candidate to the council.

The council requested the candidate to relate his experience and call to the work of the ministry.

The council decided to proceed with the ordination.

The ordination prayer was delivered by Elder James Smith, of Vermillion Association, and the hands of the presbytery were laid on the candidate.

Names of those composing the presbytery: Elders Jonathan Vancleave, Wm. H. Darnall, G. W. Dalby, John Adams, Benjamin Mahon, James Smith, J. B. Swank, J. N. Dalby, Deacons Ephraim Shute, Isaac Rice, B. H. Martin, Ransom Vancleave, Curtis Hardee, W. E. Moore, John Howard, Bennett Swain, Ephraim Tucker, and J. W. McAninch.

The charge was delivered by Elder Jonathan Vancleave, of Sugar Creek Association.

The right hand of fellowship was given to the candidate.

The council appointed Elder Wm. H. Darnall to write the credentials, and present them to-morrow morning at ten o'clock, to be received and signed by the presbytery.

G. W. DALBY, Mod.

E. F. GOFF, Clerk.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

* Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date, this date denotes the time at which your subscription expires, and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

SONG OF SOLOMON I. 4.

"Draw me, we will run after thee."

Draw me, Lord, I humbly pray thee,
By the tender cords of love;
Draw me by thy voice of mercy
To thy mercy-seat above.

Draw me out of all my weakness,
Give me strength to come to thee;
Draw me by thy loving-kindness
Nearer to thyself to be.

Draw me far from human boasting,
From the busy courts of pride;
Draw me by thy gentle teaching
To my Savior's loving side.

Draw me off from self-deception,
From my sinful self and ways;
Draw me into close communion
With thy heavenly mysteries.

Draw me into closer feeling
With thy sorrowing members here;
May there not for them be wanting
Once the sympathizing tear.

Draw me to the path of suffering,
Jesus crucified to see;
Draw me, Lord, in wisdom's pleading, Wheresoever it please thee!

—Gospel Standard.

FEED MY SHEEP.

(John xxi. 16.)

The love of the Lord is good,
Casting out fear;
The testimony of him is food,
Bringing good cheer.

Salvation from the Lord is sure,
Having this seal,
That our God, who is holy and pure,
Knoweth whom to reveal.

The lambs of the fold are meek,
Following their Guide,
Knowing no other pasture to seek,
In no other shelter to hide.

The strength of the Lord is great,
Mighty to save;
Lifting us from our low estate,
E'en from the grave.

The presence of the Lord is sweet,
Banishing despair;
On his table precious meat,
Spices rich and rare.

The promises of the Lord apply (Revealing sovereign grace)
To all the chosen far and nigh,
In every clime and race.

His loving-kindness we can see
Displayed to all his choice,
Shedding his blood upon the tree
That we might all rejoice.

Jesus, our sceptre and our sword,
Our undefiled and true,
Lead us to thyself, our Lord,
All old things change to new.

Feed us from a heavenly source,
Give water from thy fount,
Let ecstasy lift us from remorse,
That we may climb to Zion's mount.

CORRESPONDENCE.

JOHN VIII. 1-11.

THE apostle Peter, writing to those who are "Elect according to the foreknowledge of God the Father, through sanctification of the Spirit, unto obedience and sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ," says, "Unto you therefore which believe, he is precious."—1 Peter ii. 7. If Jesus is precious to us, do we not when tasting his preciousness find a sacred delight in poring over the pages of the holy Scriptures, and there read the wondrous and glorious things recorded concerning Jesus, our beloved Redeemer? In grateful praise to the Lord, I confess there have been and still are times when it is so with me, and I would it were more often the case; for I know what it is to feel so wretchedly barren and lifeless that my soul is much discouraged because of the way.—Num. xxi. 4. Then the Bible (though I task myself in reading it) is a dry and sealed book, and to my shame I acknowledge I eagerly turn from it to peruse the newspaper, or some other literature. Perhaps some one reading these lines may be saying within themselves, "I have felt Jesus precious to my soul, and he is still my heart's desire; but I cannot claim that I am one of God's elect, I am such a poor, sinful creature. I cannot tell an experience like some that I have read about, or some that I know, and I often fear I am not one of the chosen seed." Dear fellow-traveler, is Jesus precious to thee? Then thou art precious to him. Thou art one of God's elect. And it is because God hath loved and hath chosen thee that thou hast been taught to feel how very precious Jesus is. To none but the elect is Jesus precious. To all, while dead in trespasses and sins, he is as a root out of dry ground, he hath no form nor comeliness, no beauty that men by nature desire him.—Isaiah liii. 2. But those to whom Christ is precious are "lively stones," the elect of God.—1 Peter i. 2. But if there is one to whom the dear Savior is not precious, if you have never tasted that he is gracious, if thy soul has never yearned for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord, what advantage is it for you to say, "I believe in the doctrine of election, of the predestination of all things, and all the points of doctrine?" Your tongue may be loud and incessant in arguing against Arminianism, you may rail against Sunday Schools, theological colleges, monied missionary institutions, hireling preachers, and all carnal, unscriptural religious institutions; you may inwardly (yea, outwardly, too, for that matter) glory in and praise yourself; you may be high in your own estimation, and in the estimation of others also, for your attainments, and ability in discussing points of doctrine; you may have often chuckled over the discomfiture and defeat of your opponents, and in no uncertain tones heralded your pre-eminence and victory over the enemies of Old School Baptist doctrine. Is this your portrait? Does this very nearly set you forth? Well, if your heart has never felt the need of Jesus, if he is not your soul's desire, if Jesus is not precious to thee, what advantage do all your knowledge and abilities give you in the sight of the eternal God, over the despised Arminians? What evidence is there that you are one of God's elect? At present there is none. Notwithstanding all, you are yet dead in trespasses and in sins. It is recorded in Genesis xxiv. 63, "And Isaac went out to meditate in the field at eventide." If Jesus is precious unto you, let us together go forth in the field of the gospel of Christ; and if favored of the Lord with meditation therein, our meditation upon the person, grace and glory of Christ Jesus our Lord will be sweet.—Psalm lxxvii. 12.

"Jesus went unto the mount of Olives." Sweet and profitable memories to God's dear children are associated with this mount. In 2 Samuel xv. 30, we see king David, with a humble and contrite heart, wading through Gethsemane's vale; and then "David went up by the ascent of mount Olivet, and wept as he went up, and had his head covered; and he went barefoot. And all the people that was with him covered every man his head; and they went up, weeping as they went up." What a sight is this to our faith, of God's amazing grace! How clearly is displayed the faithfulness of our heavenly Father! Saith God, "I will visit their transgressions with the rod, and their iniquities with stripes: nevertheless my loving-kindness will I not utterly take from him, nor suffer my faithfulness to fail."—Psalm lxxxix. 32, 33. "As many as I love, I rebuke and chasten."—Rev. iii. 19; Heb. xii. 5-11. Another scene could be witnessed in this mount, when Solomon, one that was beloved of his God, was made king over all Israel.—2 Samuel xii. 24. Nevertheless even him did outlandish women cause to sin in building places for the worship of false gods. This is a humbling sight, but perhaps we think we would never be so led astray as to do the like. Ah, dear fellow-believers in Christ Jesus, we know not what we would do, so depraved are we by nature. We do well to give heed to the faithful word, "Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall;" and to remember that we are only upheld and kept by the power of God.—1 Peter i. 5. Then we shall look away from our fancied creature confidence and strength, and find our help in God.—Psalm lxxv. 5. Our prayer will be, "Hold thou me up, and I will be safe."—Psalm cxix. 117. O that thou wouldst keep me from the evil, that it may not grieve me.—1 Chron. iv. 10. We are in good keeping when kept by him who neither slumbers nor sleeps."—Psalm cxxi. 3, 4. What difference is there, dear children of God, between this base and horrible conduct in Solomon, and those who, professing to have passed from death unto life, and by their profession of the name of Christ in baptism have declared with the apostle Paul, "God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world," when they are so enticed that they, it may be, give of their worldly substance to tea meetings, socials, bazaars, to build places for the worshipers of antichrist; or when some pleasing little child comes around soliciting contributions for the purpose of sending the gospel (that is, another gospel, which is not another—Gal. i. 6, 7) into foreign lands to save the heathen from perishing, and you just give a trifling amount to get rid of them, or that you may escape the odium of being stingy, odd and uncharitable? You, perhaps, say, I should be sneered at; I should lose many friends; my business would suffer; I do not go to their meetings myself; and I do not see that there can be much harm in giving a small amount of money toward building them a place of worship, or to buy an organ for their choir. I will not say it is altogether right, but perhaps you that find fault with me sometimes do something worse yourself. O believer in our Lord Jesus Christ, when in your "first love," in the fullness of your grateful heart, you found the sweetest melody in your soul to the Lord, would you in the least degree, would you have thought of doing that which would give the slightest semblance of countenance or aiding that which reviled and set at naught the dear Savior? Would you, if you knew it, in word or in any way have aided any whom you felt were against Christ, against his doctrine, anti-christ? I know you would not "God forbid," you would have exclaimed. "O Lord, keep me from ever doing such a thing, from acting so shameful a part." Then why can you, O christian, in any degree do so now? O gracious Lord, grant us mercy to be faithful followers of our dear Redeemer.

Altogether another sight some time after was witnessed at the mount of Olives, in which the grace of God divinely shines in the righteous acts of king Josiah; for he destroyed the high places that Solomon had made; he brake in pieces the images, cut down the groves, and filled them with the bones of men.—2 Kings xxiii. 14. Is it not a pleasure to you, dear child of God, to see in others that walk which betokens their obedience to the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ? not only in the act of baptism, and in partaking of the Lord's Supper, but in less conspicuous acts, and yet enjoined upon us by our most gracious Lord; so much so that he has written them in our hearts. Yes, when this obedience of a willing people (Psa. cxi. 3; Phil. ii. 13) is come abroad (Rom. xvi. 19), if we are subjects of the same like precious grace of God, it will refresh (Philemon 7) and gladden (Acts xi. 23; 3 John 4), and cause our hearts to give thanks and glory unto God.—2 Cor. ix. 13, 14. The mount of Olives was the place where Jesus made his abode at night when visiting Jerusalem.—Luke xxi. 37. Thus on the night in which Jesus was betrayed, after partaking of the Lord's Supper, they sang a hymn and went out into the mount of Olives.—Matt. xxvi. 30. What an amazing sight was witnessed on this night by the apostles Peter, James and John. Let us read Luke xxii. 39, "Jesus came out, and went, as he was wont, to the mount of Olives; and his disciples followed him. And when he was at the place, he said unto them, Pray that ye enter not into temptation. And he was withdrawn from them about a stone's cast, and kneeled down, and prayed, saying, Father, if thou be willing, remove this cup from me; nevertheless, not my will, but thine, be done. And there appeared an angel unto him from heaven, strengthening him. And being in an agony he prayed more earnestly: and his sweat was as it were great drops of blood falling down to the ground. And when he rose up from prayer, and was come to his disciples, he found them sleeping for sorrow, and said unto them, Why sleep ye? rise and pray, lest ye enter into temptation. And while he yet spake, behold a multitude, and he that was called Judas, one of the twelve, went before them, and drew near unto Jesus to kiss him. But Jesus said unto him, Judas, betrayest thou the Son of man with a kiss? When they which were about him saw what would follow, they said unto him, Lord, shall we smite with the sword? And one of them smote the servant of the high priest, and cut off his right ear. And Jesus answered and said, Suffer ye thus far. And he touched his ear, and healed him. Then Jesus said unto the chief priests, and captains of the temple, and the elders, which were come to him, Be ye come out as against a thief, with swords and staves? When I was daily with you in the temple, ye stretched forth no hands against me: but this is your hour, and the power of darkness. Then took they him, and led him, and brought him into the high priest's house. And Peter followed afar off." I have been favored in times past with such meditation (as I believe by the Holy Ghost) upon this portion of the Scripture that my heart has overflowed with mingled joy and sorrow before the Lord; but I find upon reading at this time I have not the same feelings, that most precious and desirable experience. I cannot give it to myself; I cannot by any mental effort create it. No indeed! But I have hope that what I have tasted in the past was truly of God, "According as his divine power hath given unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness."—2 Peter i. 3.

"My times of sorrow and of joy,
Great God, are in thy hand;
My choicest comforts come from thee,
And go at thy command."

"Jesus went unto the mount of Olives, and early in the morning he came again into the temple, and all the people came unto him; and he sat down and taught them." Little did the multitude know that he whom they called the carpenter's son, Jesus of Nazareth, was the glorious antitype of that remarkable building. "Every whit uttereth his glory" (margin, Psalm xxix. 9). By faith God's people under the Old Testament dispensation were enabled to see and believe the temple to speak concerning Christ and his church. The psalmist speaks of it as the place where God's "honor dwelleth;" and by the grace of God he hoped "to behold the beauty of the Lord, to see his power and glory."—Psalm lxxiii. 2. At all times, in all their distresses and troubles, the Israel of God looked toward this house.—1 Kings vii. 38-48. Daniel prayed and gave thanks before his God three times a day, his windows being open in his chamber toward Jerusalem.—Dan. vi. 10. (I think Daniel, were he living to-day, and was to pray and give thanks before God three times a day, would be sneered at by some as a formalist and Pharisee).

Jonah, even when in the belly of the whale, by precious faith exclaimed, "I said, I am cast out of thy sight; yet will I look again toward thy holy temple."—Jonah ii. 4. Saith the Lord by the mouth of the prophet Malachi, "Behold, I will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me: and the Lord, whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple, even the messenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in: behold, he shall come, saith the Lord of hosts." This was literally fulfilled (Luke ii. 27), and from time to time we find the dear Redeemer in the temple, which he called "my Father's house;" and here, as elsewhere, he was ever about his "Father's business."—Luke ii. 49; John ii. 16. "All the people came unto him, and he sat down and taught them." Unto Jesus shall the gathering of the people be.—Gen. xlix. 10. They came to him from every quarter.—Mark i. 45. In a spiritual sense none ever come to Jesus except those to whom it is "given"—except the Father "draw" them.—John vi. 44-65. When we look back over the past we can find a time when in Jesus we could see no attractions to allure us to him. All the traditional knowledge we had of him, that we had learned of men, was of no avail. The "very Christ" was undesired; we sought him not. Thus if Christ be only known after the flesh (2 Cor. v. 16), such knowledge will fall altogether short of imparting the true knowledge of the Son of God. Those whose knowledge is that of a natural acquisition, are yet strangers to the Christ of God. But God gives to his elect "an understanding, that they may know him that is true; and we are in him that is true, even in his Son Jesus Christ."—1 John v. 20. Thus "it is written in the prophets, And they shall be all taught of God. Every man therefore that hath heard and hath learned of the Father cometh unto me."—John vi. 45. It was thus that Jehovah displayed his everlasting love, and with loving-kindness drew us.—Jer. xxxi. 3. Could we frustrate such drawing as this? O no! the Lord did not try to draw us, neither did he show himself to be a God who was desirous of drawing us, and because we were so stubborn and would not come he became disheartened; his love turned to anger, and then he leaves us to perish with double damnation, because we would not come. This god belongs to anti-christian religionists, but is not the God whom we have hope hath taught us, and whom we love and adore. For Israel's God is he who saith, "My counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure." No ineffectual work does Jehovah engage in, for "He is the Rock, his work is perfect: for all his ways are judgment: a God of truth and without iniquity, just and right is he."—Deut. xxxii. 4. "All that the Father giveth me shall come to me, and him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out."—John vi. 37. Not one will be left to perish.

"They shall come, 'tis heaven's decree;
They shall to Jesus bow.
This precious 'shall come' conquered me,
And gives me comfort now."

Saith the Lord to Israel, "Thou shalt remember all the way the Lord thy God hath led thee." How blessed when by the kindness of God, the Holy Ghost, I am favored to call to remembrance his gracious dealings with my soul. I was by nature a child of wrath, even as others; dead in trespasses and sins; but God, who is rich in mercy, for his great love wherewith he loved me, was pleased to quicken me. Thus I hope I was experimentally made a partaker of eternal life, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord.—1 John v. 11. "Made a partaker of the divine nature." Saith Jesus, "I give unto them [my sheep] eternal life, and they shall never perish."—John x. "And ye, my flock, the flock of my pasture, are men, and I am the Lord your God."—Ezek. xxxiv. 31. I found I was a sinner, lost, condemned, overwhelmed, and enslaved by sin. I was full of alarm, and groaned and sighed under the pressure of my terrible load, which I was powerless to throw off. I strove against its power, but sinned and stumbled but the more. I wrestled against this monster, sin, but to my sad dismay found I was the slave of sin. I hungered and thirsted for righteousness, for the water of life. Poor and needy, I wandered, and my soul fainted in me; but no salvation; no refuge, could I find. But all along I believe it was the Lord who was my teacher and guide, and with the cords of his love he led on in paths that I had not known. He drew me on until my strength failed me (Psa. cii. 23); and then all hope in my creature sufficiency was gone, and my despairing cry was, "God, be merciful to me, a sinner." Then in his own way and time the Holy Ghost revealed Jesus to my soul, and by "precious faith" I viewed the crucified One. Never shall I forget that sight. How vile, how hideous, sin appeared; for I was enabled to believe that my sins were laid on Jesus, that he was made sin for me. There, in the cross of Christ, I saw and tasted by faith the love, mercy and grace of God, and was comforted also in the doctrine that he is a just God and a Savior.—Isa. xlv. 21. And from that time, all the way may be described in the words of the apostle Peter, "To whom coming." Yes, the blessed Redeemer is the fountain, my storehouse, my counselor. Jesus is my all. Are not these things thus imperfectly portrayed, which my soul has proved, the very things that belong to the life of the quickened sinner, who is manifestly one that God hath chosen in Christ Jesus before the foundation of the world, and whom Jehovah hath predestinated unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ unto himself, according to the good pleasure of his will?

"He sat down and taught them." At the feet of this same Jesus we would sit down and receive his words.—Deut. xxxiii. 3. There is something deeply significant in the language of Christ when he said, "Learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart; and ye shall find rest unto your souls."—Matt. xi. 29. Man may teach his fellows the things of a man, natural, earthly things; "but the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God." Thus to the elect and called of mankind, "both Jews and Greeks," God has given his Spirit, that we (saith the apostle) might know the things that are freely given to us of God. The Lord then capacitates us poor sinners, base things of the world, to receive and know the things of God.—2 Cor. ii. 12-16. There was a time "when we were in the flesh."—Rom. vii. 5. Then we knew not the things of God; neither could we, because they are spiritually discerned. "As it is written, Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him. But God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit: for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God."—1 Cor. ii. 9, 10. Though God hath loved us with an everlasting love, we did not know it; we cared not to know; though we were blessed by our God "with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ, according as he hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world," we were altogether ignorant of this, ignorant of God and the things of God. "But," saith the apostle Paul, "ye are not in the flesh, but in the Spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you."—Rom. viii. 9-11. Thus we were brought forth by the Spirit, born again.—John iii. 3. But says some dear, trembling child of God, I am so fearful that I am not born again. How can it be that I am born of the Spirit, born of God? Yet I hope I have truly believed on his name, and believe I have been so favored that I have known, I hope, what it is to greatly rejoice in his salvation, with joy unspeakable and full of glory. But is it not written, "Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin; for his seed remaineth in him; and he cannot sin, because he is born of God?"—1 John iii. 9. But as for me, I am so often called to mourn over my sins, and sometimes am so pressed down by the weight of them, they are too heavy for me to bear.—Psa. xxxviii. 4. I am forced to sigh over my hateful vileness, and am filled with lamentations over my wretched condition. And in consequence of all this I am perplexed to know how it is that I am born of God; for "Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin." Well, dear tried one, let us together peruse some of the things recorded in the autobiography of Paul, an apostle of Jesus Christ; for these are things written for our comfort and learning; and his own lips shall tell us what he was by nature, and by the grace of God.

He was "of the stock of Israel, of the tribe of Benjamin." He saith, "I am verily a man, a Jew, born in Tarsus, a city in Cilicia;" "circumcised the eighth day;" "brought up in this city [Jerusalem] at the feet of Gamaliel, and taught according to the perfect manner of the law of the fathers, and was zealous toward God;" "touching the law, a Pharisee;" "the strictest sect of our religion;" "I profited in the Jews' religion above many my equals in mine own nation, being more exceedingly zealous of the traditions of my fathers." "If any other man thinketh that he hath whereof he might trust in the flesh, I more." "Concerning zeal, persecuting the church; touching the righteousness which is in the law, blameless."—Phil. iii. 4-6. "I persecuted the church of God."—1 Cor. xv. 9; Gal. i. 13. "I verily thought with myself that I ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus of Nazareth, which things I also did."—Acts xxvi. 9-11. "I made havoc of the church, entering into every house, and haling men and women, committed them to prison."—Acts viii. 3. "But when it pleased God, who separated me from my mother's womb, and called me by his grace, to reveal his Son in me, that I might preach him among the heathen."—Gal. i. 15, 16. "It came to pass, that, as I made my journey, and was coming nigh unto Damascus about noon, suddenly there shone from heaven a great light round about me. And I fell unto the ground, and heard a voice saying unto me, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? And I answered, Who art thou, Lord? And he said unto me, I am Jesus of Nazareth, whom thou persecutest. And they that were with me saw indeed the light, and were afraid; but they heard not the voice of him that spake to me. And I said, What shall I do, Lord? And the Lord said unto me, Arise, and go into Damascus; and there it shall be told thee of all things which are appointed for thee to do. And when I could not see for the glory of that light, being led by the hand of them that were with me, I came into Damascus. And one Ananias, a devout man according to the law, having a good report of all the Jews which dwelt there, came unto me, and stood, and said unto me, Brother Saul, receive thy sight. And the same hour I looked up upon him. And he said, The God of our fathers hath chosen thee, that thou shouldest know his will, and see that Just One, and shouldest hear the voice of his mouth. For thou shalt be his witness unto all men of what thou hast seen and heard. And now why tarriest thou? arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord."—Acts xxii. 6-16. "By the grace of God I am what I am."—1 Cor. xv. 10. "I was made a minister according to the gift of the grace of God given unto me, by the effectual working of his power. Unto me, who am less than the least of all saints, is this grace given, that I should preach among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ."—Eph. iii. 7, 8. "I was unknown by face unto the churches of Judea which were in Christ: but they had heard only, That he which persecuted us in times past now preacheth the faith which once he destroyed. And they glorified God in me."—Gal. i. 22-24. "I thank Christ Jesus our Lord, who hath enabled me, for that he counted me faithful, putting me into the ministry; who was before a blasphemer, and a persecutor, and injurious: but I obtained mercy, because I did it ignorantly in unbelief. And the grace of our Lord was exceeding abundant with faith and love which is in Christ Jesus. This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners; of whom I am chief. Howbeit for this cause I obtained mercy, that in me first Jesus Christ might shew forth all long-suffering, for a pattern to them which should hereafter believe on him to life everlasting."—1 Tim. i. 12-16. "For I was alive without the law once; but when the commandment came, sin revived, and I died. And the commandment, which was ordained to life, I found to be unto death: for sin, taking occasion by the commandment, deceived me, and by it slew me. Wherefore the law is holy, and the commandment holy, and just, and good. Was then that which is good made death unto me? God forbid. But sin, that it might appear sin, working death in me by that which is good; that sin by the commandment might become exceeding sinful. For we know that the law is spiritual: but I am carnal, sold under sin. For that which I do, I allow not: for what I would, that do I not; but what I hate, that do I. If then I do that which I would not, I consent unto the law, that it is good. Now then it is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me; for I know that in me (that is, in my flesh) dwelleth no good thing. For to will is present with me, but how to perform that which is good I find not. For the good that I would, I do not: but the evil which I would not, that I do. Now if I do that I would not, it is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me. I find then a law, that, when I would do good, evil is present with me. For I delight in the law of God after the inward man: but I see another law in my members, warring against the law of my mind, and bringing me into captivity to the law of sin which is in my members. O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death? I thank God through Jesus Christ our Lord. So then, with the mind I myself serve the law of God; but with the flesh

the law of sin."—Rom. vii. 8-25. "I am crucified with Christ: nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me: and the life which I now live in the flesh, I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himself for me."—Gal. ii. 20. "But God forbid that I should glory save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world. For in Christ Jesus neither circumcision availeth anything, nor uncircumcision, but a new creature."—Gal. vi. 14, 15. "Therefore if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature: old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new."—1 Cor. v. 17; Rom. xvi. 7.

Now, dear child of God, we have listened to Paul's own narrative of who and what he was, and of how God wrought with him and in him; what he was by nature, a child of wrath, even as others of the human family, dead in trespasses and sins.—Eph. ii. 1, 2. This very one, Paul, did God call by his grace, revealing his Son Jesus Christ in him. God appeared unto him, made him know his will. Yea, unto this man, who was before a blasphemer, and who long after he was called by grace and preached the unsearchable riches of Christ would say, I am the chief of sinners; unto this man, a sinner of the offspring of Adam, whom God separated from his mother's womb, and who was born in the city of Tarsus, did God reveal his doctrine; for saith Paul, I was taught it by the revelation of Jesus Christ.—Gal. i. 11, 12. He was a chosen vessel unto God (Acts ix. 15); a vessel of mercy whom God afore prepared unto glory (Rom. ix. 23, 24); whom the Lord did not cast away (Rom. xi. 1); one of the elect according to the election of grace. Then we have that most precious record of his experience as a quickened sinner (Eph. ii. 1), called by grace (Gal. i. 15), and find that his testimony, "Now if I do that I would not, it is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me," is in harmony and oneness with the testimony of the apostle John, "Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin." Thus it is manifest that Saul of Tarsus, who was born of a woman, was a believer, one of the children of God (John i. 12, 13), born of God (John iii. 1-10; v. 1). O how good it is to abide in the doctrine of Christ.—2 John 9. Yes, the truth is precious, an experimental reality, which not all the sophistries of men can ever undermine or cheat us out of, because the truth is wrought in us and felt by us. "According as his divine power hath given unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness, through the knowledge of him that hath called us to glory and virtue."—1 Peter i. 3.

What a paradox is our life! No wonder then when experiencing such conflicts within, we should exclaim, "Why am I thus?" Happy are we if favored like Rebekah, who "went to inquire of the Lord."—Gen. xxv. 22. Yes, dear children of God, we are sinners. If we say we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us. If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness.—John i. 8, 9. With Paul we feelingly say, "Sinners, of whom I am chief." "I know that in me (that is, in my flesh) dwelleth no good thing."—Rom. vii. 18. I have no confidence in the flesh.—Phil. iii. 3. Sin dwelleth in my members. In my members I find the law of sin, which is in my members, often holds me in wretched captivity. "I thank God through Jesus Christ our Lord. So then with the mind I myself serve the law of God, but with the flesh the law of sin."—Rom. vii. 25.

Our blessed Savior "was manifested to take away our sins; and in him is no sin. Whosoever abideth in him sinneth not: whosoever sinneth hath not seen him, neither known him."—John v. 5, 6. And no matter how paradoxical and illogical the doctrine may appear, it is nevertheless scripturally and experimentally true, that he who abideth in Christ Jesus is one to whom God hath given eternal life (1 John i. 2; v. 11; John xvii. 2); a poor sinner, confessing his sins to God (1 John i. 7-10; ii. 1, 2, 6); one of the sons of God (1 John iii. 1-3); one that is born of God (John i. 12, 13; 1 John iii. 9). "What will we see in the Shulamite? As it were the company of two armies" (Sol. Song vi. 13); the flesh and the Spirit (Gal. v. 17); the law in the members, and law of the mind (Rom. vii. 23). "I am black, but comely, O ye daughters of Jerusalem, as the tents of Kedar, as the curtains of Solomon."—Sol. Song i. 4; 2 Cor. vi. 8-10.

What we have penned, dear children of God, upon this important subject, is that which we know is contained in the life of those whom God hath called by grace, who are born again. And in thus (as we hope) scripturally presenting that which we have handled and felt, my desire is that it may be to your edification; for this is, and should ever be, our aim in all our communications one to another.

I am, I hope, your brother in Christ Jesus,

FRED. W. KEENE.

SUTHERLAND'S CORNERS, Ontario.

NEW HAVEN, N. Y., Jan. 28, 1888.

DEAR SISTER:—Having a little leisure, I will try and write what I hope have been the dealings of the Lord with me.

About thirty-three years of my life I lived as I was born, an Adamic man. I felt that I was a moral man, and that my chance was just as good for heaven as those that claimed to be christians. About the year 1880, while living near Barnerville, Schoharie Co., N. Y., my father asked me to go with him to Greene County and look at a farm, and if we could make a bargain we would buy it in partnership. I consented to go and look at the place with him. Soon after that he said that at such a time we would go; for there was to be a two days' meeting at Lexington, and he wished to attend it. On the day appointed we started. The first night we stayed at Elder Cole's, and the next morning we started for Lexington, and arrived there in time for the first sermon. I thought at first that I would not stop at the meeting, but would go on to Hunter, where my sister lived. Then I thought, Here is where I used to go to meeting sometimes when a small boy, with my mother; and the memories of my boyhood days came so fresh to my mind that I concluded to stay and hear one sermon. I do not remember who preached, but I remember that he preached something about the elect, and before the foundation of the world. I remember that I said to myself, Yes, that sounds natural. I remembered hearing the Old School Baptists talk at our house, when a boy, about elect, and before the foundation of the world; but I never could get any understanding of what they meant. After the sermon I started for Hunter, and my father told me to ask my sister Minerva if she wanted to come to the meeting to-morrow; that if she did, I could bring her down. I thought, Have I got to come to such a dry place as this? To hear a priest say mass would be just as much consolation. I thought at first that I would not say anything about it to her; but I knew he would ask her why she did not come to meeting, and so would find out that I did not ask her. When I got there I spoke to her about it, and she concluded to go; but the next day it rained, and I had a good excuse, and we did not go. The next day we looked at the place mentioned above, and that night we stayed near Prattsville with an Old School Baptist. During the evening a son-in-law of the gentleman with whom we were staying came into the room where we were and said to my father, "I would like to ask you a question." "Very well," said father; "we are ready to answer all questions that we can." His question was, "What kind of a place do you think hell is?" Quicker than a flash of lightning I seemed to be in the presence of God, and there was judged according to the deeds done in the body. All my sins stood before me like mountains. I saw that I was a great sinner in the sight of God, and that he was just. All this, if not more, passed through my mind before father made an answer. Then his answer was, "To be in the presence of God in an unprepared state would be hell enough." How surprised I was when he answered just as it appeared to me. I thought to myself, That is just my condition. O how distressed I felt! It seemed as if everybody looked at me just as I looked at myself. At that moment I wished I could be alone, where no one could see me. It seemed, as I sat there, as if I could see the smoke of my torment ascending upward. I could see why in the last day some would pray for rocks and mountains to fall upon them, to hide them from the face of God. Surely, I thought, to be in the presence of God in an unprepared condition, the torment equaled the pains of a lake of brimstone and fire. I thought of an eternity spent in this condition. I was changed in the twinkling of an eye. I thought, previous to this, that going to heaven was like going to any earthly entertainment—that if we could only get there we could enjoy all that was to be enjoyed; but now I saw that to be in the presence of God in my condition was a hell in full.

We went home the next day, and I had serious thoughts upon this subject for many days. I thought I would commence and lay aside my burden of sin by degrees. I began to lay aside some of my greater sins, and thought I would soon be able to stand before God a perfect man. In this way my work went on for nearly two years. I do not remember as distinctly about these two years as I do the later, but what I can recall were efforts to lay aside my sins, which I thought I got along finely with. It would have taken but little flattery to have made me believe that I could live a christian life. During this time my father moved to Lexington. I had been working a farm, but concluded to go west. I had made an auction, and sold off my stock and farming tools, and had the day set to start west, but was sick, and could not go. I got better, and set another day. Again I was sick, and could not go; so I concluded to give it up for the time being. Soon after this I received a letter from my father, stating that, if I was out of business, I might come out where he was, make a visit, and work in haying; and seeing that they paid larger wages out there, I concluded to go. The next Sunday after I got there he preached at a school-house, and I went to hear him. I remember he stated that the old man, as he termed it, was not changed. Then I began to think that surely I must be about as good as those that called themselves christians; but toward the last of his sermon he said, "There are two classes of sinners." One class, he said, were always comparing themselves with christians, claiming their morals to be equally as good, if not better. He explained that salvation was a gift of God, and not of works. This knocked the prop out, and all my labors of two years fell. This brought on my troubles again, and my inquiry and prayer was, "What shall I do to be saved?" The following fall I was canvassing. I was at Gallopville, and they had just started a protracted meeting, and a man by the name of Brunk carried them on. I remember calling at a minister's house, and he told me about the meetings, and said I had better stay and attend them. I told him that I realized my condition, and asked him what I could do to be saved. He told me to go to their meetings, go forward, and give my heart to God. I thought to myself, I have done all that I can, so if there is anything for me to do I do not know what it is; and my troubles came on with great force. I went home, and began to have a desire to read the Bible. This was something new for me, for scarcely ever did I read a word in the Bible. My troubles became so great that at times I was afraid to go to sleep, for fear I would die before morning and find myself in torment. My desire for reading the Bible increased. One night, when I was alone at home, I took the Bible and turned from one part to another, for I had nothing in view. Finally I commenced to read Lamentations iii.: "I am the man that hath seen affliction by the rod of his wrath." "He hath hedged me about, that I cannot get out: he hath made my chain heavy. Also when I cry and shout, he shutteth out my prayer." "Thou hast removed my soul far off from peace: I forgot prosperity." These words reminded me that I was not the only one that had had trouble in spirit. Then I read on: "Remembering mine affliction and my misery, the wormwood and the gall. My soul hath them still in remembrance, and is humbled in me. This I recall to my mind, therefore have I hope. It is of the Lord's mercies that we are not consumed, because his compassions fail not." "It is good that a man should both hope and quietly wait for the salvation of the Lord." "For the Lord will not cast off forever." As I read these words I felt a glimmer of hope. I then remembered having read, "As many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God." Then I thought of the children of Israel when they were led to the shores of the Red Sea, and were commanded to stand still and see the salvation of the Lord. I felt that I had the command to wait. This was a very critical time for me; for often the tempter would point out to me that I might come to a sudden death, and be lost by waiting. About this time I was advised by a friend that had just united with the New School Baptists to go to a prayer-meeting and take part. She said she knew I would enjoy it and find relief. She said she had been in just my condition for years, and found relief in that way. My answer was, "One that has been led as far as the shores of the Red Sea, will find some way opened." I could not tell how, but I had faith that there would be some way opened. Not long after this Mr. William Gurnsey came along and called at my house. He said there would be preaching at Schoharie Hill the next Sunday, and that a new minister would preach. His name was Earl. I never heard of the man before. The thought struck me right away, I will go and hear him preach; but I did not know how I would get there. The next time I saw my sister she asked me if I did not want to go to Schoharie Hill to meeting, and I told her I did. When Sunday came we went to meeting, and I thought it was the most wonderful sermon I ever had heard. While he was speaking of the road that the child of God travels, he told me of every place I had been, and even my thoughts. From this I felt a strong evidence that I had been led by the Spirit; but yet I was in great fear that I would be cut off and be lost. Soon after this I went to Lexington. The day after I got there I remember what a desire I had to read the Bible. My desire was so great that I trembled with emotion, and walked three times across the room to the table where the Bible lay, but dared not take it, for fear some one would ask me some question. My folks were going away for a short time, and I would be left alone. This was just what I wanted. As soon as they were gone I took the Bible, opened it, and commenced to read. "My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me: and I give unto them eternal life; and they shall never perish, neither shall any pluck them out of my hand. My Father, which gave them me, is greater than all; and none is able to pluck them out of my Father's hand." At this moment it seemed as if I was picked up and carried far above this world, and as if I heard a voice say, "If you had gained the whole world you would not be as well off as you are now." It seemed at that moment that I could look back and see the wealth of the world—all the countries and cities and gold. Then again I heard the still, small voice proclaim, "You are an heir to eternal life." At this moment it seemed as if the wealth of the world was not to me the value of a pin, in comparison with that eternal wealth which my soul seemed to possess. It is utterly impossible for me to explain the joy, peace and happiness that I enjoyed at this time. My burden was gone, and everything seemed to be praising God. O how bright the sun did shine, and even the trees seemed to be moved with joy! Since that time something often seems to tell me that it is all a delusion, and I have no experience. If it was imagination, why can I not imagine it again? It was the happiest hour of my life. I have often wished for my burden again, that I might watch it more closely when it left me; but I have not been able to bring it back. I have often thought, if I could be deemed a worthy subject, I would like to follow my Savior in baptism; but O! I feel so unworthy.

I will now leave the subject, and leave it for those that have a more reliable evidence to decide whether I have been led by the Spirit, or whether I am deceived.

EUGENE GASS.

DAYTON, Wash. Ter., Feb. 15, 1889.

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES—
DEAR BRETHREN:—I need to apologize for attempting to exhibit my poor, crude thoughts in your well conducted and highly prized paper. I am sure I would not do so at this time if it were not, in my humble judgment, necessary; therefore I hope you will pardon my intrusion.

In the SIGNS of February 6th, Elder Rittenhouse takes exception to sentiments which he supposes attributable to me, from remarks of mine in the SIGNS of January 9th, on the five items proposed by brother D. Bartley as a basis of union. Brother Rittenhouse has misunderstood my design in those remarks, and the remarks themselves. And as he has not, evidently, given due attention to the language he has criticised, and as there may be other dear brethren who do not see the soundness of the views therein presented, I desire for their sakes to be heard on a subject of such importance as the basis of christian union is, as spoken of by brother Bartley. And, first, I wish it distinctly understood that I was not discussing human creeds, scholastic or unscholastic, either Baptist, Catholic or Protestant, on their own merits as expressions of belief. In this I may not have been sufficiently explicit. Be that as it may, if the sentiments I have expressed were carefully weighed and judged by the connections in which they stand in the article referred to, I think no such misunderstanding could have occurred. Therefore what I have written are solemn and settled convictions of truth, holding, as I do, to be sound the articles most commonly found among all sound Old School, Predestinarian, Regular, Bible Baptists. And I am happy to be able to say that my beloved brother Rittenhouse is the first (in my knowledge) Primitive or Bible Baptist that has objected seriously to anything I have said or written on christian faith or practice, during my ministry of over twenty-two years.

I will quote the first article of the Old School Baptist Church called Harmony, in Columbia, Washington Territory, as follows, "We believe that the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments are the word of God, and are the only rule of faith and practice." The articles or abstract of faith of which this forms a part are in substance and in words, slightly abridged, the old "Philadelphia Confession." To this confession I implicitly adhere, including the Black Rock confession, when rightly understood. I refer to "The absolute predestination of all things;" that is, all things that God has created and made. For it is said by the apostle, "For of him [God], and through him, and to him, are all things." This language is enough for me, and goes to the bottom of the subject. But it does not follow that sin is of, through and to him, as a thing that he has created. As to the term absolute itself, I hold it to be unnecessary as an auxiliary phrase, and can only be employed properly as explanatory; for the word predestinate, as used in reference to God's purposes, carries all the weight of absolute sovereignty in itself.

But I am not discussing creeds and confessions, nor have I been, but only trying to point out the fundamental doctrine, which alone, in the nature of the case, can be considered the basis of christian union. The apostle Paul beautifully expresses my sentiments on this subject in the following language, "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." I deem this one text of holy writ exhaustive of the whole subject; and we need not the pope of Rome as the centre of unity, nor any council of men, nor any formula of christian faith emanating from uninspired men, as a basis of union; for the blessed King in Zion has said, "Upon this rock will I build my church." Here is the centre of christian unity; and the testimony of the inspired apostles and prophets, with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven, in signs and wonders and mighty deeds, is the basis of christian union, or fraternity, or fellowship.

Some might yet suppose that I am crying out against creeds. I will say that I do hold a creed, the first article of which ignores its own existence as a rule of faith or practice, in the words quoted above, "We believe the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments are the only infallible rule of faith and practice."

I have not supposed it necessary to follow brother Rittenhouse in all his animadversions, because he, I think, had reference to me in a small part only; and I think, too, there is little difference between us.

Now, brethren Beebe, if you do not wish to publish all this letter, please publish at least my disavowal of the sentiments attributed to me by brother Rittenhouse.

Yours in hope of eternal life, and in the fellowship of Jesus Christ,
I. N. NEWKIRK.

WEST LODI, Seneca Co., Ohio.

DEAR BRETHREN:—I send you the following incident of soldier life, which I hope you will give a place in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. It so plainly shows the hand of God in it that I send it to you for publication, so that others may read and be interested, as I know they will be. It is too good to be lost.

I am yours in hope of a blessed immortality beyond the grave,
JOHN BARGER.

"COVER my defenseless head
With the shadow of thy wing."

A party of northern tourists formed part of a large company gathered on the deck of an excursion steamer that was moving slowly down the historic Potomac one beautiful evening in the summer of 1881.

A gentleman who has since gained a national reputation as an evangelist of song had been delighting the party with the happy rendering of many familiar hymns, the last being the sweet petition so dear to every christian, beginning, "Jesus, lover of my soul." The singer gave the first two verses with much feeling, and a peculiar emphasis upon the concluding lines, that thrilled every heart. A hush had fallen upon the listeners that was not broken for several seconds after the musical notes had died away. Then a gentleman made his way from the outskirts of the crowd to the side of the singer and accosted him with, "Beg your pardon, stranger, but were you actively engaged in the late war?"

"Yes, sir," the man of song answered courteously, "I fought under General Grant."

"Well," the first speaker continued, with something like a sigh, "I did my fighting on the other side, and think, indeed am quite sure, I was very near you one bright night, eighteen years ago this very month. It was much such a night as this. If I am not very much mistaken you were on guard duty. We of the south had sharp business on hand, and you were one of the enemy. I crept near your post of duty, my murderous weapon in my hand; the shadow hid me. As you paced back and forth, you were humming the tune of the hymn you have just sung. I raised my gun and aimed at your heart. I had been selected by our commander for the work, because I was a sure shot. Then upon the night rang the words,

'Cover my defenseless head
With the shadow of thy wing.'

Your prayer was answered. I could not fire after that. And there was no attack made upon your camp that night. You were the man whose life I was spared from taking."

The singer grasped the hand of the Southerner, and said with much emotion, "I remember the night very well, and distinctly the feeling of depression and loneliness with which I went forth to my duty. I knew my post was one of great danger, and I was more dejected than I remember to have been at any other time during the service. I paced my lonely beat, thinking of home and friends, and all that life holds dear. Then the thought of God's care for all that he has created came to me with peculiar force. If he so cared for the sparrows, how much more for man created in his own image; and I sang the prayer of my heart, and ceased to feel alone. How the prayer was answered I never knew until this evening. My heavenly Father thought best to keep the knowledge from me for eighteen years. How much of his goodness to us we shall be ignorant of until it is revealed by the light of eternity! 'Jesus, lover of my soul,' has been a favorite hymn; now it will be inexpressibly dear."—The American.

DOES CHRISTIANITY PROGRESS?

IN reply to this question a paper was read before the last Church Conference of England, in which Canon Taylor astonished his associates by expressing grave doubts whether the results of Christian Missionary efforts were sufficient to justify their prodigious cost in the sacrifice of money and labor. It is very remarkable that the experience of more than a half-century was necessary to show the folly of attempting to proselyte the heathen world to that false theory which is popularly called Christianity, when its advocates cannot retain those who have from infancy been educated to receive its erroneous doctrines. What is meant by the term "Christianity," as used in this article, is not the gospel of Christ, as revealed in the inspired record, but it is that false system which claims the name of Christ as authority for "teaching for doctrines the commandments of men." While it is doubtful whether the author himself knows anything of the living power of the word of truth as it is experienced by every subject of grace, as a teacher of that system of religion which is propagated by the modern Missionary scheme, and a recognized authority of high standing among such worldly professors, his testimony cannot be rejected by them.

He has since made the following statement of mathematical calculations, and facts taken from authentic reports, which carry the evidence of their correctness in their simple presentation. In any natural business such facts would be sufficient ground for abandoning the scheme which thus proved its own absurdity; but in religion men are blinded by the god of this world, so that they not only refuse to see the clear testimony of the Scriptures, but even their natural reason is stupefied. The religious world will still worship the idol of their own efforts and missionary works, even while they cannot ignore the facts presented by this teacher of their own school.

"Leaving out Thibet, Borneo, and other regions of which the population is unknown, the most recent estimates make the nonchristian population of Asia and Africa upward of 920,000,000, of which the natural increase by the excess of births over deaths must be more than 11,000,000 annually. Dr. Maclear, who is the principal of a training college for missionaries, and 'perhaps the greatest living authority on this subject,' estimates the annual increase of native christians due to missionary efforts at 60,000. At that rate, then, it would take the missionary societies 153 years to overtake even this natural increase of the nonchristian population in a single year. In spite of our advance, instead of overtaking the work, the work is overtaking us. It is like the tortoise racing with a railway train; the longer the race continues the further the tortoise is left behind. Something like $10,000,000 is spent annually on Protestant missions, and there are about 6,000 American and European missionaries, with about 30,000 native agents, and yet there are to-day upward of 10,000,000 more heathen and Mohammedans than there were a year ago. If the population remained stationary and all the converts steadfast, it would take more than 330,000 years to convert the world, or nearly a million years if the relapses are taken into account. In China, the number of adults baptized by the Church Missionary Society last year was only 167 out of a population of 382,000,000, with an annual gain of at least 4,580,000 by the excess of births over deaths. At this rate the Society would have to work 27,000 years to come up to the natural increase of one year, and more than 1,680,000 years to convert China, even if the population remained stationary. The expenditure is enormous; in any other department of effort it would be called wasteful. In China the cost of the 167 conversions was about $75,000. In Ceylon last year 424 agents of this Society spent $55,000 in making 190 adult converts, out of a population of nearly 3,000,000; and yet the relapses were more numerous than the conversions, for there was an actual decrease of 143 in the number of native christian adherents. In Northern India it cost $170,000,000 and the labors of 715 agents to make 173 converts. In Egypt, Persia, Palestine and Arabia, the Society employs 119 agents, and has expended over $117,000 in the last two years, with absolutely no conversions."

From this confession of the utter failure of the popular scheme of propagating the doctrines of false christianity by the use of humanly devised means and money, it would seem that consistent reason would lead to the abandonment of the hopeless task; but the fanatical spirit of will-worship still blinds its votaries even to such recognition of God as is "clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead." Under the enchantment of this modern witchcraft, reason is so intoxicated that it cannot comprehend facts when plainly stated. Over a year ago it was published that the English missionaries at Blantyre station in Africa, were importing handcuffs, with which to terrorize the natives. This charge was made by Major Serpa Pinto, the eminent Portuguese explorer. No attention was paid to it by the religious world. A few years ago a returned missionary from Asia, after many years of labor there, publicly declared his conviction that it was useless to send missionaries to convert the heathen, unless the sword went before them to subjugate the people among whom they were to labor. His candid statement of plain facts was lost in the mad uproar of the worshipers of the idol of Missionism.

It is not expected that the publication of these confessions of the advocates of this antichristian scheme will attract any attention from their followers. It is our purpose simply to show in this instance how the Scripture is fulfilled, where it is written, "But evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving, and being deceived." "And for this cause God shall send them strong delusion, that they should believe a lie: that they all might be damned who believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness."—2 Tim. iii. 13; 2 Thess. ii. 11, 12.

REQUESTS FOR VIEWS.

By way of a general explanation to our numerous correspondents whose inquiries for our views have not been answered, we would repeat what has been frequently stated in the past, that our silence does not indicate any unwillingness to comply with the wishes of our correspondents. It would certainly afford us sincere pleasure to give a clear explanation of every point which may perplex any of our brethren; but it must be understood that our ability is very limited, and that it is not possible that we should publish replies to all the questions sent us, even if we had the necessary knowledge to answer all inquiries correctly. To the extent of the understanding which God has given us, it is ever our desire to serve his people by submitting before them our views on any point connected with the revelation of his truth. Whether from the press or in that proclamation of the word vocally, which is commonly called preaching, it is the highest privilege to which we can aspire, if we may be favored of God to present his truth to the comfort of those who love the gospel of divine grace.

In nearly all cases we are grateful to our inquiring brethren and friends for their patient forbearance when their requests have been passed without reply. Their fraternal kindness is deeply appreciated by us, and we feel more warmly drawn to them in view of their manifest consideration for our infirmity. In a very few cases questions have been submitted accompanied with the threat that unless we answered in accordance with the mind of the inquirer, we must expect to lose his patronage. To such intimations we would reply that if the writers are satisfied that they are moved by the Spirit of Christ in thus threatening, we are not disposed to contend with them. If God deals with them as with his children, they will receive his condemnation or chastening as they are approved or condemned in his sight. It is a very trifling consideration whether we are individually sustained or opposed by the judgment of men. The time is short when such judgment can affect our peace. The present answer of a good conscience toward God, in our daily walk and conversation, is of far more consequence than any favor or condemnation which can come from dying men. If any patron of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES feels disposed to enforce his sentiments by withdrawing his support from the paper, it will certainly show that he has more regard for his own thoughts than for the truth which he thus rejects. While regretting to lose the patronage of any lover of gospel truth, we cannot insist that any one shall continue to read the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, when he feels that it is not in harmony with his own experience. On the other hand, the offer of thousands of subscriptions could not justify us in departing from the principles of the doctrine of the gospel of Christ. A brief summary of these principles was published in the original prospectus of this paper. It has never been shown that those principles have been sacrificed in the conduct of our publication. With such ability as God is pleased to give, we desire to continue in the maintenance of the same principles of eternal truth. The word of the Lord endureth forever. In vain do the heathen rage, and the rulers take counsel together against the Lord and against his Anointed; all their united efforts can only show the omnipotence of that word which has gone forth from the mouth of the Lord, in which he has given assurance to his chosen people that their salvation is complete in Christ Jesus, and that they are kept by his power in all their trials in this present world. Hoping still to be strengthened by the favor and assistance of all lovers of the doctrine of God our Savior, and earnestly requesting a continuance of the forbearing love manifested toward us in the past, we propose to comply with such requests as may be received, to the extent of our ability; but we must still earnestly entreat our brethren to remember our weakness and ignorance, and exercise toward us all the charity which they can extend.

SOLOMON'S TEMPLE SPIRITUALIZED.

BY JOHN BUNYAN.

CHAPTER XXXIX.

Of the tables of the Temple.

"HE made also ten tables, and placed them in the temple, five on the right side, and five on the left."—2 Chron. iv. 8. Some, if not all these tables, so far as I can see, were they on which the burnt offering was to be cut in pieces, in order to its burning. These tables were made of stone, of hewn stones, on which this work was done.—Ezek. xl. 40-44.

Now, since the burnt offering was a figure of the body of Christ, the tables on which this sacrifice was slain must needs, I think, be a type of the heart, the stony heart of the Jews; for, had they not had hearts as hard as adamants, they could not have done that thing. Upon these tables was the death of Christ contrived, and this horrid murder acted, even upon those tables of stone.

In that they are called tables of hewn stone, it may be to show that all this cruelty was acted under smooth pretenses; for hewn stones are smooth. The tables were finely wrought with tools, even as the hearts of the Jews were with hypocrisy. But alas! they were yet stone; that is, hard and cruel, else they could not have been an anvil for Satan to forge such horrid barbarism upon. The tables were in number the same with the lavers, and were set by them, to show what are the fruits of being devoted to the law, as the Jews were, in opposition to Christ and his holy gospel. There flows nothing but hardness and a stony heart from thence. This was shown in its first writing, as it was written on tables of stone, figures of the heart of men; and on the same tables, or hearts, was the death of Jesus Christ compassed.

One would think that the meekness, gentleness or good deeds of Jesus Christ might have procured in them some relentings when they were about to take away his life; but alas! their hearts were tables of stone. What feeling or compassion can a stone be sensible of? Here were stony hearts, stony thoughts, stony counsels, stony contrivances, a stony law, and stony hands. And what could be expected hence but barbarous cruelty indeed? "If I also ask you," said Christ, "ye will not answer me, nor let me go."—Luke xxii. 68.

In that the stony tables were placed about the temple, it supposeth that they were temple men, priests, scribes, rulers, lawyers, &c., that were to be the chief ones on whose hearts this murder was to be designed, and by them enacted, to their own damnation, without repentance.

CHAPTER XL.

Of the instruments wherewith the sacrifice was slain, and of the four tables they were laid on in the Temple.

THE instruments that were laid upon the tables in the temple were not instruments of music, but those with which the burnt offering was slain. The four tables were of hewn stone for the burnt offering; whereon also they laid the instruments wherewith they slew the burnt offering and the sacrifice.—Ezek. xl. 42, 43.

Here we are to take notice that the tables are the same, and some of them of which we spake before; that the instruments with which they slew the sacrifice were laid upon the tables.

The instruments with which they slew these sacrifices. What were they but a bloody ax, bloody knives, bloody hooks, and bloody hands? For these we need no proof; matter of fact declares it.

But what were those instruments a type of? Doubtless they were a type of our sins. They were the bloody ax, the knife, and bloody hands, that shed his precious blood. They were the meritorious ones, without which he would not have died. Though then the hearts of the Jews were the immediate contrivers, yet they were our sins that were the bloody tools or instruments which slew the Son of God. "He was wounded for our transgressions;" "He died for our sins."—Isa. liii.; 1 Cor. xv.; Gal. i. O the instruments of us churls, by which "this poor man" was taken from off the earth!—Isa. xxxii. 7; Prov. xxx. 14. The whip, the buffetings, the crown of thorns, the nails, the cross, the spear, with the vinegar and gall, were nothing in comparison of our sins. "For the transgressions of my people was he stricken."—Isaiah liii. Nor were the flaunts, taunts, mocks, scorns, derisions, &c., with which they followed him from the garden to the cross, such cruel instruments as these. They were our sins then, our cursed sins, by, with and for the sake of which the Lord Jesus became a bloody sacrifice.

But why must the instruments be laid upon the tables? Take the tables for the hearts of the murderers, and the instruments for their sins, and which place more fit for such instruments to be laid upon? It is God's command that these things should be laid to heart, and he complains of those that do not do it.—Isa. xlii. 25; lxvi. 11.

Nor are men ever likely to come to God until these instruments with which the Son of God was slain be indeed laid to heart. And they were eminently laid to heart, even by them, soon after, the effect of which was the conversion of thousands of them.—Acts ii. 36, 37.

Wherefore when it says these instruments must be laid upon the stony tables, it insinuates that God would take a time to charge the murder of his Son home upon the consciences of them that did that murder, either to their conversion or condemnation. And is it not reasonable that they who did this horrible villainy should have their doings laid before their faces, upon the tables of their hearts? They shall look upon him whom they have pierced, and shall mourn.—Zech. xii. 10; Rev. i. 7.

But these instruments were laid upon some of the tables, and not upon all the ten, to show that not all, but some of those so horrid, should find mercy of the Lord.

But we must not confine these tables only to the hearts of the bloody Jews: they were our sins for the which he died. Wherefore the instruments should be laid upon our tables, too, and the Lord lay them there for good, that we also may see our horrid doings, and come bending to him for forgiveness.

These instruments thus lying on the tables in the temple became a continual motive to God's people to repentance; for so often as they saw these bloody and cruel instruments they were put in mind how their sins should be the cause of the death of Christ.

It would be well also if these instruments were at all times laid upon our tables, for our more humbling for our sins, in everything we do, especially at the Lord's table, when we come to eat and drink before him. I am sure the Lord Jesus doth more than intimate that he expects we should do so, when he saith, "This do in remembrance of me;" in remembrance that he died for their sins, and consequently that they were the meritorious cause of the shedding of his blood.

To conclude, let all remember that these cruel instruments are laid upon the tables of their hearts, whether they see them or no. "The sin of Judah is written with a pen of iron, and with the point of a diamond: it is graven upon the table of their heart."—Jer. xvii. 1. A pen of iron will make letters upon a table made of stone, and the point of a diamond will make letters upon glass.

CHAPTER XLI.

Of the candlesticks of the Temple.

"AND he made ten candlesticks of gold according to their form, and set them in the temple, five on the right hand, and five on the left."—2 Chron. iv. 7.

These candlesticks were made of gold, to show the worth and value of them. They were made after the form, or exact, according to rule, like those that were made in the tabernacle, or according to the pattern which David gave to Solomon to make them by. Observe, there was great exactness in these; and need there was of this hint, that men might see that everything will not pass for a rightly ordered candlestick with God.—Ex. xxv. 31-47; 1 Chron. xxviii. 15, 16.

These candlesticks are said sometimes to be ten, sometimes seven, and sometimes one. Here, ten; Rev. i., seven; Zech. iv., one. Ten is a note of multitude, seven a note of perfection, and one a note of unity.

Now, as the precious stones with which the house was garnished were a type of ministerial gifts, so these candlesticks were a type of those that were to be the churches of the New Testament. Wherefore he says, "The seven candlesticks which thou sawest are the seven churches."—Rev. i. 12, 13, 20.

The candlesticks were here in number ten, to show that Christ under the New Testament would have many gospel churches. "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth," saith he, "will draw all men unto me;" that is, abundance; for the children of the desolate, that is, of the New Testament church, shall be many more than they of the Jews were.—John xii. 32; Gal. iv. 17.

In that the candlesticks were set by the lavers and stony tables, it might be to show us that Christ's churches should be much in considering that Christ, though he was righteous, yet died for our sins: though his life was according to the holy law, yet our stony hearts caused him to die. Yea, and that the candlesticks are placed there, it is to show us also that we should be much in looking on the means by which we caused him to die; for the candlesticks were set by those tables whereon they laid the instruments with which they slew the sacrifice.

These candlesticks being made according to form, seem not only to be exact as to fashion, but also as to work; for that in Exodus, with its furniture, was made perfectly of one talent of gold; perhaps to show that Christ's true spouse is not to be a grain more nor less, but just the number of God's elect. This is Christ's completeness, his fullness. One more, one less, would make his body a monster.

The candlesticks were to hold the light, and to show it to all the house: and the church is to let her light so shine that all within may see the light.—Matt. v. 15, 16; Luke viii. 16; xi. 33; xii. 35. To this end the candlesticks were supplied with olive oil, a type of the supply that the church hath, that her light may shine, even of the fruit of the Spirit.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—Please change the address on my paper from Herndon, Va., to Willard, Fairfax Co., Va., a new office just established near where I live. Please publish in the SIGNS.

As ever, in love and fellowship,
A. B. FRANCIS.

MARRIAGES.

ON Thursday, Feb. 21st, 1889, at the residence of the bride's parents, Petersburg, Del., by Elder E. Rittenhouse, Mr. Davis H. Frazier and Miss Sallie C., daughter of Ezekiel C. Frazer, all of Kent Co., Del.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

FELL asleep at the house of her great-niece, in the eighty-fourth year of her age, sister Anna Jenkins.

Our departed sister and mother in Israel was baptized by Elder Eli Scott, in the year 1832, and united with the church at Harford, where she continued until her course on earth was finished, over fifty years. She was twice married, first to Robert Chapel, an Englishman. Her second husband was brother James Jenkins, of Rock Springs. There were no children by either marriage. She survived both husbands, spending the last years of her pilgrimage with her nephews and nieces, and the Old School Baptists in Harford. She was remarkably firm in her belief of the truth, devoted to the cause, faithful in her attendance upon the meetings of the church, though old and infirm, and felt it a privilege to be at her post. She was a great lover of good preaching, and none could extol too highly the name of God, nor abase the creature too low. There was nothing very remarkable attending the closing scenes of her life. Worn out with age and infirmities, she was heard to say,

"Weary of wandering round and round
This world of sin and gloom,
I long to leave the unhallowed ground,
And dwell with Christ at home."

She died Feb. 2d, 1889, and was buried at Harford, after some remarks on the occasion by the writer. She leaves a number of nephews and nieces, with the church of which she was an orderly and consistent member.

ALSO,

DIED—At his residence, Feb. 20th, 1889, our esteemed brother, Samuel Glenn, in the seventy-second year of his age.

He and his wife emigrated to this country from Ireland many years ago, and in very destitute circumstances; but through industry and economy they purchased a comfortable home in Harford. The circumstances leading to his connection with the church at Harford were striking, the particulars of which would swell this notice to too great a length. Ever low in his own eyes, mourning over his imperfections and shortcomings, he seemed to be led through deep waters, searching and discriminating his experience, which he often said was in the heart. He loved to talk on the subject of the travel of mind in the christian warfare, of fears and fightings within. In his declining months he was visited by a number of us. He said from the beginning of his weakness that he would not get up; and before he was taken sick, I believe, he spoke of his departure as being near at hand. He was not a great sufferer, was very patient and calm, and hoping unto the end. The affliction is peculiarly heavy upon his wife, now a widow, who watched over him by day and by night, sparing nothing that could add to his comfort. He was baptized about two years ago by the writer, and remained a member of the Harford Church until his death. On this occasion also some remarks were made by the writer. He leaves a widow, two daughters and four sons to mourn their loss, which we feel is his eternal gain.

WM. GRAFTON.

FOREST HILL, Harford Co., Md.

BROTHER D. K. Stovall was born in McNary Co., Tenn., Aug. 4th, 1856, and died Nov. 8th, 1888, aged thirty-two years, three months and four days.

He lived a pious life, and proved by his daily walk that he was a subject of grace. He lived ten years with the New School Baptists (his father being a minister of that order), and was baptized by his father. But the good Lord showed him the right way, and in reading the Scriptures he became thoroughly convinced that the Primitive or Old School Baptists are the true church. He joined the church at Enon, Hardeman Co., Tenn., and was baptized by the beloved pastor, Elder J. W. Davey, on the first Sunday in November, 1881. He moved his membership to Bethel Church, where he lived in peace with the brethren until his death. He moved to Boone County, Ark., but never attached himself to any church here. He was a very precious brother to me. We talked on the Scriptures a great deal, and I found him sound in the faith, a firm believer in the predestination of God in all things. He was well versed in the Scriptures, and told me that he had very strong impressions of mind in regard to testifying to the grace and mercy of God; but he seemed to view his great unworthiness. I spent all night with him during his sickness, and he told me that he could not get well. He had no fear of death, but did not like to leave his dear wife and three little children. His disease was typhoid fever. He was sick five weeks and four days. He will be much missed in his neighborhood. He was a good neighbor, and a kind and affectionate husband and father. May the Lord sanctify this sad bereavement to the good of the bereaved is the prayer of your unworthy brother,

WM. J. CASEY.

LEAD HILL, Ark.

My dear brother, John W. Staton, who died in Snow Hill, Worcester Co., Md., January 28th, 1889, was the third child, in age, of seven, five sons and two daughters, four of whom are yet living. Our father, Warner Staton, was a gospel minister, who died in 1854. Our oldest brother, George W. Staton, was also a gospel minister, who died in 1872. Our oldest sister, Elizabeth Staton, was a faithful member of the church for many years, who also has passed away.

John W. Staton was born April 3d, 1823. We are satisfied that in early manhood he was given a knowledge of and love for the truth, for his life ever afterward gave evidence of such a blessing; but for some reason, known only to God, he never made a profession of his hope by uniting with the church; otherwise his life was devoted to the cause. His house and home were always open, and he was always ready to entertain the church and friends in the best possible manner. Indeed it seemed to be the life of the man to be pleasant and helpful to all around him, especially to those that were in need of help. He leaves a widow, who is a worthy member of the church, and four children, who, we hope, have the cause at heart, to mourn the loss of one of the very best of husbands, and a devoted, indulgent father. The church has lost a true and faithful friend, and the community in which he lived a useful and helpful citizen; but we fully believe the good Lord has taken him to everlasting rest. He was complaining and suffered severely for several days with pain in the breast, but was thought to be almost well until about eleven o'clock on Monday night, when he was taken suddenly worse, and died in a very few minutes.

Your unworthy brother in deep affliction,

JOSEPH L. STATON.

James W. Thompson was born July 17th, 1827, and died Feb. 6th, 1889.

He joined Bureau Old School Baptist Church July 23d, 1859, was elected Deacon in May, 1860, and was licensed to preach the gospel in October, 1870. Bureau Church was dissolved and lettered out on Oct. 25th, 1879. Brother James held his letter until after the trouble in the Sandy Creek Church. He said he never expected to be able to meet with the church any more, but wanted a home when he was called away, so he became a member by letter of Sandy Creek Church, in February, 1888. He was a firm and true Baptist, though a great sufferer, having his eyes injured in the Mexican War, and contracting lung trouble in the late war, so that he was able to preach publicly but very little; but his great delight was to talk of Jesus and his righteousness, and salvation by grace. He was nearly blind for some years, and was troubled with a cough; yet he made a support as pension agent, until he himself was pensioned.

His funeral took place from the "Christian Church" in Princeton, Ill., where a discourse was delivered from 1 Peter iv. 12, at his own request, by the writer, to a very large and attentive congregation of sympathizing friends and neighbors. He leaves a wife, but no children, to mourn her loss.

In hope of a better resurrection,

W. A. THOMPSON.

TONICA, La Salle Co., Ill.

Mrs. Catharine Cox, wife of Jos. L. Cox, of Wyoming, Stark Co., Ill., died Jan. 10th, 1888, of congestion of the lungs, aged seventy-five years, ten months and ten days.

She was born in Carroll Co., Va. In 1835 she left her native state and settled in Ohio, where she lived until 1838, when she settled in Illinois, where, on November 12th of the same year, she married Mr. Cox, who, together with five sons and two daughters, are left to mourn the loss of a faithful wife and a loving and devoted mother.

Sister Cox, whose maiden name was Edwards, united with the Baptist Church at about the age of eighteen years, in Virginia (date and name of church not at hand). On coming west she cast her lot with the little band of disciples known as the Spoon River Church, and remained in fellowship with them until her death. The writer was notified, and on Jan. 12th, 1888, spoke to the bereaved family and friends upon the subject of death, God's mercies, and the blessed hope of a resurrection; after which the loved remains were tenderly laid to rest to await God's command.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date, this date denotes the time at which your subscription expires, and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

POETRY.

THE LOVED AND LOST.

"THE loved and lost!" why do we call them lost?
Because we miss them from our outward road.
God's unseen angel o'er our pathway crost,
Looked on us all, and seeing it was best,
Straightway relieved them from life's weary load.
They are not lost; they are within the door
That shuts out loss and every hurtful thing—
With angels bright, and loved ones gone before,
In their Redeemer's presence evermore,
And God himself their Lord, their Judge and King.
And this we call a loss! O selfish sorrow
Of selfish hearts! O we of little faith!
Let us look round, some argument to borrow,
Why we in patience should await the morrow,
That surely must succeed this night of death.
Aye, look upon this dreary, desert path,
The thorns and thistles wheresoe'er we turn;
What trials and what tears, what wrongs and wrath,
What struggles and what strife the journey hath!
They have escaped from these; and lo! we mourn.
Ask the poor sailor, when the wreck is done,
Who, with his treasure, strove the shore to reach,
While with the raging waves he battled on,
Was it not joy, where every joy seemed gone,
To see his loved ones landed on the beach?
A poor wayfarer, leading by the hand
A little child, had halted by the well
To wash from off her feet the clinging sand,
And tell the tired boy of that bright land
Where, this long journey past, they longed to dwell.
When lo! the Lord, who many mansions had,
Drew near and looked upon the suffering twain;
Then pitying, spake, "Give me the little lad;
In strength renewed and glorious beauty clad,
I'll bring him with me when I come again."
Did she make answer selfishly and wrong,
"Nay, but the woes I feel he too must share!"
Or, rather, bursting into grateful song,
She went her way rejoicing, and made strong
To struggle on, since he was freed from care.
We will do likewise. Death hath made no breach
In love and sympathy, in hope and trust.
No outward sigh or sound our ears can reach,
But there's an inward, spiritual speech,
That greets us still, though mortal tongues be dust.

CORRESPONDENCE.

HOPEWELL, N. J., March 1, 1889.

AS A number of brethren and friends have expressed the desire that I should write out and have published in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, so far as possible, the substance of the sermon delivered on the occasion of the funeral of Mrs. Amanda E. Chick, wife of Elder F. A. Chick, at Black Rock, Baltimore Co., Md., Aug. 22, 1888, I will comply with the request, so far as I am able thus to do; but it is impossible for me to give the discourse verbatim; because during nearly forty years that I have been speaking, as a servant of God, to his professed children, I have never delivered a written sermon, nor memorized one from some modern author. But there have been times that the truth of God appeared so sweet, so precious, and so full of comfort, that the same has appeared to be indelibly fixed in my mind, not only for days, but months afterward. For a number of years, when called to speak at funerals, if I had the opportunity, I inquired of the bereaved if they desired any particular portion of Scripture used as a text on the occasion; and very many times the afflicted ones had, and I have used the same; but upon this occasion I inquired of my nephew if he had, and his answer was no; that all he wanted was the gospel preached; to which I replied, by the grace of God sustaining me, that would be done.

Text.—"All that the Father giveth me shall come to me; and him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out. For I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me. And this is the Father's will which hath sent me, that of all which he hath given me I should lose nothing, but should raise it up again at the last day."—John vi. 37-39.

"All that the Father giveth me shall come to me." Brethren and friends, when in the providence of our God we are called together to sympathize with them who are bereaved, and to perform the sad rite of sepulture, it is proper and right, if circumstances admit, to preach the gospel, ever remembering that the proclamation is addressed to the literally living; for the dead, as such, are beyond our sympathies and sorrows. The disciples of John "came and took up the body, and buried it, and went and told Jesus." "And devout men carried Stephen to his burial, and made great lamentation over him." In entering upon a brief elucidation of the text now under consideration, the object shall be, if God will, to show according to divine testimony the certain victory of every vessel of mercy, through the blood and righteousness of Jesus Christ, over every foe, both internal and external. All Bible readers and believers know that the words of our text were uttered by the Redeemer of Israel, while God incarnate; and the first word to be carefully examined in our text is the word all. In this connection it is limited by the relative clause, "that the Father giveth me;" and we must keep this distinction before the mind, if possible, as we proceed. In this place, as in many others, it clearly, fully and distinctly shows a perfected number, which is the case in many other portions of Scripture; and it will not be according to divine truth to give it that latitudinarian view that too often is the case. And they went in unto Noah into the ark, two and two of all flesh wherein is the breath of life." In this quotation we ought to see the force of the Hebrew word kol, a perfect number. "And all flesh died that moved upon the earth." All in this quotation is from the same original word, which ought to satisfy any Bible reader that the word has its full and just meaning according to the connection in the sentence which it qualifies; and in this text, as recorded by John, it is from the Greek word pas, signifying all, any, every, &c.

Having defined the meaning of the first word of our text, we will now see what the Scripture says about sinners being brought to Jesus; for he says they "shall come to me;" and see whether there is any uncertainty in the awfully momentous matter; also, whether their coming to Jesus is optional with the sinner, dead in trespasses and sins. Said Jesus, "No man can come to me except the Father which hath sent me draw him; and I will raise him up at the last day." This negative is as certainly true as the affirmative concerning them whom the Father had given him. Jesus said to the Jews, "But ye believe not, because ye are not of my sheep, as I said unto you. My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me; and I give unto them eternal life; and they shall never perish, neither shall any (man) pluck them out of my hand. My Father, which gave them me, is greater than all; and no man is able to pluck them out of my Father's hand. I and my Father are one." Let us keep distinctly before us the glorious truth that it is not a proffer, nor an offer, but a gift; for "the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." In the vessels of mercy coming to Jesus, there is a hidden, yet almighty, power which causes them to come; for in the blessing pronounced upon Joseph, who was a lively and glorious type of the Messiah, "His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the horns of unicorns: with them [not by them] he shall push the people together to the ends of the earth: and they are the ten thousands of Ephraim, and they are the thousands of Manasseh." The ends of the earth here harmonize with the same recorded by the prophet, "Look unto me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth; for I am God, and there is none else." "I drew them with cords of a man, with bands of love."

My brethren and friends, the quotations made are sufficient to corroborate the glorious truth that when God begins the work, they shall come; and sooner or later such realize something of the truth and power of the declarations, "The eyes of your understanding being enlightened, that ye may know what is the hope of his calling, and what the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the saints, and what is the exceeding greatness of his power to usward who believe, according to the working of his mighty [margin, the might of his power] power which he wrought in Christ when he raised him from the dead, and set him at his own right hand in the heavenly places." As in natural death, or the death of the mortal body, some suffer only a short time, and others linger for months, and sometimes years, as in the case of the beloved one whose mortal remains are now here, but death finally terminates the conflict, so in the experience of God's dear children, his purpose is such that his judgments are unsearchable, and his ways past finding out. Some are quickly delivered after seeing their just condemnation, as in the case of Saul of Tarsus; but it seems that it was different with Lydia, and the young man who could say, "One thing I know, that whereas I was blind, now I see." It seems wonderfully strange to us that some who have a hope in the Lord Jesus Christ live so many years before strength is given them to make a public profession; but thus it is. "For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness, and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation." This declaration shows us that it is heart work, or work in the heart first, and then confession. And in all the divine economy of our heavenly Lover, the cause always precedes and produces the effect. And how careful all should be, when dwelling upon any branch of gospel truth, to be sure not to pervert the Scriptures by putting the effect for the cause.

"And him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out." This is a very consolatory portion of our text, to "the poor in spirit," to them who are "poor and of a contrite spirit," and tremble at the word of God; for "The Lord is high unto them that are of a broken heart, and saveth such as be of a contrite spirit." "The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit: a broken and a contrite heart, O God, thou wilt not despise." My brethren, the glorious, soul-cheering, heart-consoling doctrine declared in this clause of our text, when applied sweetly and powerfully by the Spirit, fills God's dear children with adoring wonder; for they see that whether wise or ignorant, rich or poor, high or low, bond or free, they are all one in Jesus Christ; for "there is neither Greek nor Jew, circumcision nor uncircumcision, Barbarian, Scythian, bond nor free; but Christ is all and in all." Therefore while there now is, always has been, and will continue to be, worldly distinctions in the family of man, in our Lord Jesus Christ no such distinctions exist; for a Lazarus is just as precious as a learned Paul; the soul of a day-laborer, or a mechanic, is just as valuable as that of a man of letters; for in this wonder of wonders, the redemption and salvation of rebel sinners, mountains are abased, and valleys exalted. All are brought upon an equal footing, and are equally precious in the sight of God our Savior. For when the sum of the children of Israel was taken, every one that passed among them that were numbered, they were to give "half a shekel, after the shekel of the sanctuary." "The rich shall not give more, and the poor shall not give less." Which important truth shows they were all of equal value before God, whatever might be their worldly poverty or riches. Now can any words show more absolute security for all who are drawn to Christ, than those now under consideration? Yet in this day there is a class of teachers who tell us that persons may fall from grace and eternally perish! What is such teaching? Does it not set aside what God has given us in the Scriptures? Certainly it does, and therefore is blasphemy. To give a seeming countenance to that carnal theory, frequently the following words are quoted, "If any man draw back, my soul shall have no pleasure in him." But what garbling with the Scriptures! Why not quote the next verse in the context, which reads, "But we are not of them who draw back unto perdition, but of them that believe to the saving of the soul?" Thus we have two classes described, the nominal professor and the genuine believer. And instead of supporting the carnal theories of men, it is a complete refutation of them. Said Jesus in his prayer to his holy Father, "Those that thou gavest me I have kept, and none of them is lost, but the son of perdition, that the Scripture might be fulfilled." He had an external call, and was numbered with the other apostles; but he knew nothing about an internal call, and the efficacious work of grace, therefore did not come to Christ, but was the son of perdition all the time, and filled exactly the place God designed that he should. Jesus said to the troubled disciples, "Yet a little while, and the world seeth me no more: but ye see me. Because I live, ye shall live also." We will now cease dwelling upon this clause of our text, by quoting the words of the apostle Paul when he defied every power combined to separate God's dear children from his love to them in Christ Jesus; for he said, "I am persuaded that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord."

"For I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me." Now in cogent language the reason is given why none will be cast out; for the dear Redeemer came down from heaven not to do his own will, but that of his holy Father. The prophecy made more than seven hundred years before his advent was, "I will ransom them from the power of the grave; I will redeem them from death: O death, I will be thy plagues; O grave, I will be thy destruction: repentance shall be hid from mine eyes." "Surely he hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows: yet we did esteem him stricken, smitten of God and afflicted. But he was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities, the chastisement of our peace was upon him, and with his stripes we are healed." In fact, I might quote to you, brethren and listening friends, the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah entire, all of which shows that the Messiah would not, as Mediator and Savior, do his own will while God incarnate. And "though he were a Son, yet learned he obedience by the things which he suffered: and being made perfect, he became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him." In prophecy events are spoken of as already accomplished, which were, as it regarded their open manifestation or fulfillment here on earth, to be perfected many years hence. But with our God there is no yesterday, nor any to-morrow, for it is one eternal now. Hence the questions were asked and the answers given, in the Scripture about to be quoted, nearly seven hundred years before the birth of Christ. "Who is this that cometh from Edom [place of blood], with dyed garments from Bozrah [tribulation], this that is glorious in his apparel, traveling [not attempting to travel, as legalists and conditionalists talk about it] in the greatness of his strength? I that speak in righteousness, mighty to save. Wherefore art thou red in thine apparel, and thy garments like him that treadeth in the wine-fat? I have trodden the winepress alone, and of the people there was none with me; for I will tread them in mine anger, and trample them in my fury; and their blood shall be sprinkled upon my garments, and I will stain all my raiment." As the Redeemer was thus seen coming from the enemy's country, the battle had been fought and the glorious victory won; for he said, "And I looked, and there was none to help; and I wondered that there was none to uphold; therefore mine own arm brought salvation unto me, and my fury it upheld me."

Now, brethren, we will see what the New Testament record says concerning the dear Redeemer not doing his own will, but the will of his holy Father. "Then saith he unto them [his disciples], My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death. Tarry ye here, and watch with me. And he went a little farther, and fell on his face, and prayed, saying, O my Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me! Nevertheless, not as I will, but as thou wilt." Such was the agony of Christ that "there appeared an angel unto him from heaven, strengthening him. And being in an agony, he prayed more earnestly, and his sweat was as it were great drops of blood falling down to the ground." When in such agony was he not doing the will of his Father? In prophecy it had been said, "Repentance shall be hid from mine eyes." Did God's purpose change? No; and his sweat was as it were great drops of blood, showing that he was treading the winepress of divine wrath, because he was the kinsman Redeemer. And, although Israel as a nation so far departed from God's commandments and became so idolatrous that judgment was turned away backward, and equity could not enter, and he that departed from evil made himself a prey, in the agony of Christ judgment and equity did enter, and infinite justice received full or plenary satisfaction for every elect vessel of mercy. And in this matter there can be no parallel in the doings of angels or men, for Jehovah appeared a just God and Savior, having laid upon him the sins of his people, as recorded in those forcible words of Peter, "Who his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree; that we, being dead to sins, should live unto righteousness: by whose stripes ye were healed." Right here we feel it binding upon us to emphatically state that all that agony of Christ was for sinners of Adam's fallen race; that redemption is not a myth, but a divine reality. We will again revert to those awful scenes in the garden, in order that we may see more fully, if possible, the force of the momentous truth that Jesus did not his own will, but the Father's; for impetuous Peter "drew his sword, and struck a servant of the high priest's, and smote off his ear. Then said Jesus unto him, Put up again thy sword into his place; for all they that take the sword shall perish with the sword. Thinkest thou that I cannot now pray to my Father, and he shall presently give me more than twelve legions of angels? But how then shall the Scriptures be fulfilled, that thus it must be?" Are not all of us now present, who love the Lord, when contemplating the perfect obedience of Immanuel in thought, word or deed, from the lowly manger to the cross, lost in wonder, amazement and love? Before closing our remarks upon this awfully sublime and mysterious work of Christ, we will revert to him when arraigned at Pilate's bar; for said "Pilate unto him, Speakest thou not unto me? Knowest thou not that I have power to crucify thee, and have power to release thee?" Do we not think that Pilate really felt that Jesus was in his power to do with him as he had stated? Like thousands of legal believers and teachers in this day talk about what power they have. But let us with reverence hear the answer of our precious Redeemer; for said he, "Thou couldst have no power at all against me, except it were given thee from above. Therefore he that delivered me unto thee, hath the greater sin." When Jesus had tabernacled in the flesh the appointed time, and had endured every temptation appointed him (for he was tempted, said the apostle, in all points like as we are, yet without sin), the time came when the sacrifice of himself was offered; for "he said, It is finished; and bowed his head, and gave up the ghost." And let us remember that he "through the eternal Spirit offered himself without spot to God," and by that "one offering he hath perfected forever them that are sanctified."

"Well might the sun in darkness hide,
And shut his glories in,
When Christ, the mighty Savior, died
For man, the creature's sin."

"And this is the Father's will which hath sent me, that of all which he hath given me I should lose nothing, but should raise it up again at the last day." While clothed in flesh, a seeming weakness was manifested by Jesus; for he was "despised and rejected of men, a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief." Also, "And he made his grave with the wicked, and with the rich in his death; because he had done no violence, neither was any deceit in his mouth." But his glorification consisted in his emerging from that cloud, leaving the veil of his infirmities in the tomb, without any of them adhering to him; for he was "declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the Spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead." Said the apostle, "For where a testament is, there must also of necessity be the death of the testator; for a testament is of force after men are dead; otherwise it is of no strength at all while the testator liveth." With what adoring wonder the children of God often contemplate the glorious truth that here is something as far above and beyond the comprehension of finite mortals as the heavens are above the earth; for the testator in this will became the executor; for said John, "When I saw him, I fell at his feet as dead. And he laid his right hand upon me, saying unto me, Fear not: I am the first and the last: I am he that liveth, and was dead, and, behold, I am alive forevermore, amen, and have the keys of hell and of death."

We are taught in this last verse of our text, by our Savior, that his Father's will is that he should lose nothing; and if anything is lost, the will would be broken. Therefore the glorious doctrine of the resurrection of the dead and from the dead is just as broad as redemption is; and although to us it is an incomprehensible subject, it is true. When Israel was about to leave Egypt, and no longer serve the tyrant Pharaoh, the declaration was, "There shall not an hoof be left behind." So in the resurrection at the last day the redeemed bodies of the saints will not be left out; for said the apostle, "Ye are not your own; for ye are bought with a price: therefore glorify God in your body and in your spirit, which are God's." Was not the body in that divine purchase? The apostle says it was. Therefore is it not very rash talk, to say the least of it, when persons say, "I don't care anything about this old, sinful body?" When Jesus "yielded up the ghost, the veil of the temple was rent in twain from the top to the bottom, and the earth did quake, and the rocks rent, and the graves were opened, and many bodies of the saints which slept arose, and came out of the graves, after his resurrection, and went into the holy city, and appeared unto many." How often questions like the following are asked, "Do you not think that is figurative language, that literal graves were not opened? But if so, did those saints die again, or where did they go?" &c. Now, dearly beloved brethren and listening friends, such cavilling should receive no countenance from the lovers of truth. Atheists and infidels can talk that if they like, but you who have been brought by reigning and abounding grace to believe and love the doctrine of infinite wisdom and almighty power, have no use for such cavilling; but you desire to receive God's word as little children. But the declarations of the apostle Paul are exceedingly sweet and precious unto you at times; for said he, "As in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive. But every man in his own order; Christ the first fruits, afterward they that are Christ's at his coming. Then cometh the end, when he shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father; when he shall have put down all rule, and all authority, and power. For he must reign till he hath put all enemies under his feet. The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death." Many excellent brethren apply this to Christ's coming to believers in their experience; and it is a soul-comforting truth that he does come to them in their experience. But if this does not show a finality, and the end of his Mediatorial reign in his kingdom, then terms have no meaning whatever. Declarations in the New Testament which are plain, positive and unequivocal, should never have a tropical or figurative meaning given them; for if such a course is pursued, the written Scriptures can be of no use whatever. But when theorizing begins, we hear these words, "How can such things be?" But let us remember that the how is with Jehovah, and not finite mortals. An inspired servant of God said, "What if God, willing to shew his wrath, and to make his power known, endured with much long-suffering the vessels of wrath fitted to destruction, and that he might make known the riches of his glory on the vessels of mercy which he had afore prepared unto glory?" "The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptation, and to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished." Why not be willing to leave this awfully momentous how just where inspired apostles have left it? Is the record of the birth, the life in the flesh, the agony in the garden, the enduring of such contradiction of sinners against himself, the excruciating death on the cross, and the resurrection from the dead, of the Lord Jesus Christ, merely figurative expressions, or are they the most awful realities? O! they mean just what they declare. Even so concerning the quaking earth, the rending rocks, the opening the graves, and the rising bodies of the saints which slept. How sad to contemplate that many dear children of God admit a part to be real, and the other figurative. I will quote no more from the fifteenth chapter of First Corinthians, but I hope all will read for themselves. I shall detain you only a few minutes longer, but I desire to make two or three more quotations, and a few general remarks, and then leave the subject for your meditation. The apostle said to Timothy, "But shun profane and vain babblings, for they will increase unto more ungodliness; and their word will eat as doth a canker [margin, gangrene]; of whom is Hymenæus and Philetus; who concerning the truth have erred, saying that the resurrection is past already, and overthrow the faith of some. Nevertheless the foundation of God standeth sure, having this seal, The Lord knoweth them that are his: and, Let every one that nameth the name of Christ depart from iniquity." Sometimes objection is made to our openly calling names; but the apostle did, and they must have been noted characters, otherwise they would not have been named; and he did so to put his brethren on their guard. With one more quotation I shall close. Said Paul, "But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not even as others which have no hope. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord, shall not prevent them which are asleep; for the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the Archangel, and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first. Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall we ever be with the Lord. Wherefore comfort one another with these words."

My brethren and friends, the humiliation and perfect obedience of Jesus Christ while under the law, his painful death on the cross, and his triumphantly glorious resurrection, leading captivity captive, have been sustained by the written word of God; and now in his exaltation and glorification on his Mediatorial throne, clothed with all power in heaven and in earth, the blessed effects of his suffering and death will be carried to all for whom the atonement is made. "Now unto the King eternal, immortal, invisible, the only wise God, be honor and glory forever and ever. Amen."

WILLIAM J. PURINGTON.

STATE ROAD, Del., Feb. 25, 1889.

BRETHREN BEEBE:—I have read three different letters in late issues of the SIGNS on the subject of training and bringing up children. Three different writers, all men of age, experience, and of acknowledged ability, would be likely to say all that need be said on one subject. If something more on the same subject should be well said, perhaps you would not object.

I have long felt that our brethren needed instruction in this particular line, and also admonition, perhaps, more than on any other one topic that could be named. I do not doubt that brother Thorne is honest and conscientious, and prompted by proper motives, in his suggestions in regard to this matter. In debate it is natural to strive for the mastery; and in thus striving disputants sometimes place their opponent in an attitude which can be easily made to appear untenable, which is nevertheless drifting away from the real issue. All parents are supposed to be naturally interested for the welfare of their children, and consequently for their proper bringing up. All readers of the SIGNS may be supposed to be conscientious on this subject, and really desire to know what is required of them, and to do it. The causes of doubt, of anxiety, and even perplexity, in regard to this matter, will more readily appear if we take into consideration the location and surroundings of many Old School Baptist families. Those who have appointments for preaching regularly every Sunday within convenient distance, know little of the difficulties that parents have to contend with where they are surrounded with modern religious meetings and institutions, and their own church meetings are far away, and the appointments for preaching are far apart. What are they to do with their children when Sunday comes? Must they be kept in, like prisoners, or must they be allowed to go, without restraint and without admonition, wherever they may happen to drift? If the children must thus go at their will, I presume the parents would not go with them, even enough to see whether there was any choice in the places they were inclined to frequent, or which among them would be most deleterious in their effects upon the moral and religious instincts of their children. There are festivals, and sociables, and gambling fairs, and picnics, and protracted religious excitements, sometimes protracted far into the night, and sabbath schools, and other kindred gatherings, too many to enumerate here, all zealous to secure the attendance of all the children within reach. The pressure that is brought to bear upon children to induce their attendance even at places disapproved by the parents, is found pretty hard to resist. It is certainly such as to excite suspicion as to the design in regard to children whose parents might be supposed to be fully equal to taking care for their own children. It might do here for me to suggest that if Baptist parents consent to indulge their children in attending institutions and gatherings contrary to their own faith and practice, the parents should accompany them, and see and know for themselves the idolatrous practices and religious fanaticism into which they are sending their children. I know of an instance where the children of a Baptist family were appealed to and told in so many words that they could not go to heaven if they did not go to Sunday School.

What the object of all this anxiety in behalf of the children of parents who do not approve of these modern inventions for convert-making is, it is not now my purpose to inquire. What is the proper thing for parents to do when placed in these somewhat trying circumstances? is the question I am dealing with. That there is a responsibility resting upon parents in regard to the proper care of their own children, is fully shown in the apostolic instructions, where the responsibility of parents is dealt with. As, for instance, "One that ruleth well his own house, having his children in subjection with all gravity." Again, "Ruling their children and their own houses well."—1 Tim. iii. "If any widow have children or nephews, let them learn first to show piety at home, and to requite their parents: for that is good and acceptable before God."—1 Tim. v. 4. I have known in any time of instances where both parents were members of the Baptist Church, and would attend regularly all preaching appointments; and the children were as regularly fixed up for attendance at the Methodist or Presbyterian Sunday School. So far as attendance at our meetings is concerned, we would never know that they had any children. They become acquainted with each other in the nursery, attractions are continually presented, attachments are formed; and the result is, if they attend preaching appointments at all, they attend where they have become acquainted, and where attachments exist to draw them. This was undoubtedly the design of institutions of this kind, and hence the anxiety and zeal in behalf of the children of Baptist parents; and if it comes to pass that the man's foes are the men of his own house, who is to blame for it? What else had he any right to expect? What are children to think of the faith of their parents, when their practice is in continual conflict with it?

If people love their meetings and love their children, I should think they would arrange to have them attend with them. If they are accustomed in early life to accompanying their parents to their places of worship, they will not expect, and will not be likely to desire, anything else. "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it." Where the appointments are at a distance, providing conveyance for children will be attended with more or less difficulty, and sometimes with some expense. Parents cannot show their love and care for their children to better advantage in anything than in this. Let them be suitably and sufficiently well-dressed for any and all occasions; and then if all cannot go, they can go in turns, the parents making all necessary sacrifices to have their children share in whatever they prize as precious and profitable to themselves. When we have religious company, ministering or other brethren, let the children be present to become personally acquainted, and to see how these people love one another. If we have yearly meetings or associations where extra enjoyment is to be expected, let there be care and thought for the children as well as for ourselves. I will appeal to any Old School Baptist whether such a course is not more becoming, and to be attended with better results, than either neglecting the children to grow up like heathen, or else drift into the prevailing currents of error that surround them. This is not assuming the prerogatives of the Spirit of God at all, nor proposing to teach those lessons nor impart that understanding that can only be known by experience. To refer to the provisions of the New Covenant, and the fact that the Lord alone can give spiritual understanding, in defense of an utter neglect of our children in relation to spiritual things, is really evading the issue, and debating grounds that are not disputed. It is not merely the best of the argument that we want, but seasonable admonition and good counsel in regard to one of the most difficult subjects that Old School Baptists ever have to deal with. I have lived long enough to see the practical workings of various methods, and also of the workings of no method at all. In this latter case, as well as in some of the cases before alluded to, they do not remain long in the inheritance that the Lord their God has given them. If children show in their life that they have no faith in the reality or sincerity of the profession of their parents, who is to blame for this? Upon whom does the responsibility rest? Such things do not occur without cause. I once knew of an instance of two girls being sent to a high school under the control of the Roman Catholics. The family were Methodists, but it was supposed to be a good school, where no religious influence would be exerted. They came home Catholics, and so remain. Better keep our children at home under our own care, and give them what education we can, than risk, for the sake of a popular education, exposing them to the errors and prejudices that they must necessarily encounter in almost any of the institutions of our day. A good brother once said in my presence, to some others who were present, "Well, brother Rittenhouse has children. We will see what he can do; whether he can make Old School Baptists of them." He knew well enough that I made no pretensions to any such thing, but I suppose that some gentle suggestions I had offered might have annoyed him. I am willing to make all reasonable allowance for brethren and sisters whose circumstances fetter them, and a stern necessity seems to require some conformity to their religious surroundings; yet let them that fear the Lord and that think upon his name keep their garments unspotted. If they are proscribed and persecuted, peradventure it shall turn to them for a testimony. It is among New Testament admonitions, and not appertaining in any wise to the Old Covenant, to bring up our children "in the nurture and admonition of the Lord," for this is right.—Eph. vi. 4. It is from the pen of inspiration that "We have had fathers of our flesh which corrected us, and we gave them reverence;" and I believe it still holds good. On the other hand, I do not know what more some parents could do that they have not done to alienate their children from the Baptists, and to steep them with all the skepticism and materialism of modern times. The transgression of the sons of Eli, the Jewish priest, was charged home upon him because he restrained them not. I will only add that "When a man's ways please the Lord, he makes even his enemies to be at peace with him."

In love and fellowship,

DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS IN THE LORD:—It is with fear and trembling that I, a poor, weak worm of the dust, address you all. I will try to express some of my experience in connection with God's predestination, and hope you will cast the mantle of charity over me; and if I am deceived, pray for me, that the Lord may open my eyes to the truth as it is in Jesus. We may think that this way or that way is right, but we do not know anything except the Lord reveals it to us in our experience. And when the Lord opens the eyes of our understanding, and gives us to know and understand the truth as it is in Jesus, then it appears glorious and beautiful, and we rejoice in the Lord, who says, "Knock, and it shall be opened unto you; seek, and ye shall find." When these commands come to the heart in the power of the Spirit, we knock and seek. God is not wooing and beseeching us to come to him; but he speaks, and it is done. So have I found in my experience that it is not in man to direct his steps; for I was zealous in what some call half-predestination, or in other words, I fully believed that God had predestinated the eternal salvation of his people, and all that was good; but I could not believe that everything worked for their good. I could not see how God could predestinate all things, and not be the author of sin. I was so jealous of his holy character that I could not bear anything that reflected evil on his perfections. All said that God was not the author of sin, yet I could not see how it could be otherwise if God absolutely predestinated all things. I became greatly troubled and perplexed about it. It was in my mind day and night while awake, and troubled me so that I could not sleep much at night. I searched the Scriptures to see if I could find the origin of evil. I could only find that by man came sin, and all sin was the work of the flesh. Also, that God works all things after the counsel of his own will; that he works, and none can hinder. Yet I could not harmonize it all, and was troubled and confused. There seemed to be war in my bosom all the time, and I contended for my way as long as I had any strength to do so. I sincerely thought I was right. I would read the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, and enjoyed it until I would come to some hard saying, or insinuation of Arminianism in those who did not believe in the predestination of all things. That would grieve and hurt me so that I thought I would not read the paper any more. I would weep and cry, for I was so weak that I could not help it. I had been troubled and confused about it until my feelings had become very tender. I could not say that I knew I was right, but I sincerely thought I was. I knew I could not help believing as I did, for I could not see any other way. Others said that it was revealed to them, and I thought God would be partial to reveal it to some and not to others. I thought God was not partial toward his children. There was a mystery in it that I could not understand. I sincerely desired to be right, for I knew that Jesus was the right way, and I wanted to be with him, in whom is peace, comfort, and salvation from sin. I tried to pray that he would show me the right way in a dream, or give me evidence in some way that was right. But day after day passed, and the perplexity of my mind grew greater. I would try to throw it all away and go on in peace as I had in days past, as I thought there was no necessity for my being so troubled about it. Sometimes I felt that surely I had no hope, and had been deceived all the time. I would shed tears of sorrow over my condition, and could find no comfort anywhere. One evening the Scripture came into my mind, "And purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works." I felt that all the trouble and confusion of mind which I had passed through had been used as a purifying, and I felt willing to suffer it all, if it would bring me into a nearness with my Savior. I felt a sweet assurance that the Lord would direct me aright. That night before I fell asleep the words came to me, "Follow me." They came with such power that they seemed to penetrate my very soul. All was peace, for I felt that the Lord would direct me aright, and that I had nothing to do but be still and know that he is God. Yet the words were in my mind, "Follow me," and I wondered what they meant.

I traveled on in this way for some time, and came to think that there was not so much difference among the Baptists as I had thought there was; that they only expressed themselves in different words; but I began to feel that the absolute predestinarians were upon the stronger foundation, and that the others were rather bearing toward a sandy foundation. I felt that I was being

ADMONITION TO DILIGENCE.

"WHEREFORE, beloved, seeing that ye look for such things, be diligent that ye may be found of him in peace, without spot, and blameless."—2 Peter iii. 14.

In nothing does the evidence of divine inspiration more clearly appear than in the precise adaptation of every admonition and exhortation to the character and condition of the saints to whom it is designed that the sacred Scriptures shall be the perfect light in all their pilgrimage through the changing scenes of time. Finite wisdom could never have devised such instruction as the Spirit of truth finds in the record of the testimony of Jesus, which is written for our learning, that we "may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." The fact which is realized continually by the saints, that they are not able to appropriate to themselves the light thus revealed, only confirms the assurance that it is indeed the revelation of the Spirit of Christ by which it is written and manifested to them in the power of God. While they are made by faith to know that all their salvation, both temporal and eternal, is secure in the finished work of their Redeemer, it is not so made manifest to their natural understanding, which can only receive such evidence as is satisfactory to carnal reason. Hence originates that unceasing warfare within their own hearts, which is the characteristic peculiarity of those who are led by the Spirit of Christ. Confidence in the certainty of their trust in the redemption that is in Christ Jesus would encourage reason in presumptuously continuing in sin; but the same firm reliance revealed by faith produces that hunger and thirst after righteousness by which our Lord describes those who are the subjects of his divine blessing.

In considering the exhortation in our text, it is necessary to bear in mind the particular description given of those to whom the apostle addressed this whole epistle, and also the authority by which he wrote. He begins with the assertion of his own position as "a servant and an apostle of Jesus Christ," and then exclusively addresses his letter "to them that have obtained like precious faith with us through the righteousness of God and our Savior Jesus Christ." Throughout the epistle these characters are instructed, exhorted and admonished. In the immediately preceding context they are encouraged by the assurance that the Lord will faithfully perform all his word of promise, even salvation, ready to be revealed in the last time. "Wherein ye greatly rejoice, though now for a season, if need be, ye are in heaviness through manifold temptations." "If need be," here implies that it is necessary that we pass through fiery trials and manifold temptations. "That the trial of your faith, being much more precious than of gold that perisheth, though it be tried with fire, might be found unto praise and honor and glory, at the appearing of Jesus Christ." God hath chosen his people in the furnace of affliction. Afflictions being then an inheritance of the people of God, we should remember that "our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." Jesus has not only promised his true followers, "In the world ye shall have tribulation," but has given immediately following the precious assurance indeed, "But be of good cheer; I have overcome the world." Often have those words of our blessed Savior come to me all along the journey of life with much comfort indeed. When I have been passing through sore trials and afflictions, tried and tempted by the adversary, I have been made to rejoice to know that the promises of God are sure to all the heirs, and that they are confirmed unto the heirs by an oath. "Because he could swear by no greater, he swore by himself." "Wherein God, willing more abundantly to show unto the heirs of promise the immutability of his counsel, confirmed it by an oath; that by two immutable things, in which it was impossible for God to lie, we might have a strong consolation, who have fled for refuge to lay hold upon the hope set before us." Dear saints, what stronger consolation could we have or ask for than the oath of God in our behalf? Our God is a God of purpose. We are such poor, short-sighted creatures that we cannot comprehend his purpose (at least for the time being) in the trials, afflictions and temptations which we are daily called to pass through; yet God has a purpose in them all. Even in the creation of the smallest insect or worm that creepeth upon the earth, he had an all-wise purpose. If our God has taken so minute notice of us as to number the very hairs of our heads, surely nothing will or can befall us in this life, however small or great, but that he does and will overrule for our good, and will in the end accomplish his purpose, praise and glory. How truthfully has the poet sung,

"His purposes are ripening fast,
Unfolding every hour;
The bud may have a bitter taste,
But sweet will be the flower.

"Blind unbelief is sure to err,
And scan his work in vain;
God is his own interpreter,
And he will make it plain."

God grant us the spirit of reconciliation in all our trials and afflictions in this life, is my prayer.

J. H. YEOMAN.

for me to know them, the Lord will open the eyes of my understanding to know them, if I am one of his children; and so will he to all his children. He withholds nothing from them that is for their good. As time rolls on he reveals such things as are necessary for their good and his own glory. Then let us have forbearance, and cultivate a spirit of love for each other.

EMMA BARFIELD.

WESTCLIFFE, Col., Feb. 6, 1889.

DEARLY BELOVED IN THE LORD:—I have remained silent for some time past, but feel a prompting within to take up my pen to write something for the readers of our dear family paper, the SIGNS. As I have no particular subject upon my mind to write upon, I will first write such thoughts as may present themselves.

The first of last month I was prostrated with a severe attack of acute rheumatism. The severe pain I have endured is beyond my powers to describe. During my affliction, when it seemed that nature could endure no severer pain, and I found the inclination to murmur and complain at my lot, the thought would come to me, How many of the dear saints at this moment are undergoing perhaps far more suffering than I am, and yet not a word of murmur escapes their lips. Often during the past month have I thought of the patience and meekness of that dear afflicted sister, Mary Parker. While my affliction has been of but few days, she has been a sufferer for years. During her long continued suffering she has manifested such patience and meekness of spirit that to the natural mind of man it is a marvel indeed. For months past, upon receiving each number of the SIGNS, I have first glanced over the obituary notices, expecting to see the announcement that the Lord had released this much afflicted sister from her earthly prison, and called her to himself, to dwell with him in that mansion above, where sin and sorrow, pain, and sickness and death, are felt and feared no more, and where the weary shall ever be at rest.

When trials and afflictions shall fall to our lot in this world, we seem to be forgetful that they are according to the promise of our God. Jesus said, "In the world ye shall have tribulation." Peter admonished his brethren, "Think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing happened unto you." Peter was well qualified to give this admonition to his brethren. He knew full well what it was to be tried and tempted. At one time Satan desired to have him, that he might sift him as wheat. But Jesus told him, "I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not." And I believe that Jesus has prayed for every lamb of his fold, and they are kept by the power of God, through faith unto drawn toward the former in love, that I could enjoy their writings better, and felt more interested in reading them, while I loved the other Primitive Baptists none the less.

One morning I was alone, and everything seemed calm and still. I was meditating on these things, pondering them in my mind, and the Savior, as I hope, lifted away the veil of darkness, and showed me the true foundation of the church, with those absolute predestinarians all glorious and beautiful, founded upon a rock, even Jesus, who had all power in heaven and earth, even before the foundation of the world, and had fixed all things according to his will and purpose, and to his own glory. I arose to my feet, clasped my hands, and said, "There is the church, and the Lord has shown it to me." I felt to say, like Elizabeth of old, "My soul doth magnify the Lord." He had led me along, and I had followed him, for I had no desire to do otherwise. His people are made willing in the day of his power. He gently leads them by the cords of love.

My troubles were all gone, and I felt that the Savior had special care for me because I was little and weak, and that I need not fear any more. He had been leading me all the time through the rough and thorny places I had passed through. The mysteries and impossibilities that I had been so blind to, had opened up to my understanding, and my soul did feast upon many things that were once bitter to me. I could see that God's foreknowledge and predestination could not be separated; that man was not the essence of God, but was only made in the image and likeness of him; therefore God is not defiled with the sin of man, nor responsible for his evil deeds. For man did not have the nature, power nor purity of God, and has no relation to him. The natural man has no more relation to God than the beast of the field. But Adam's posterity being related to him by blood, received his nature, and all fell under the condemnation of sin because their federal head had sinned; and they all voluntarily sin; it is no compulsion; for they have no desire to resist evil within themselves. But God sends forth the Spirit of his Son into the hearts of his people, whereby they cry, Abba, Father; and they have power through him, and him only, to overcome sin. Adam did not have that power when he transgressed the law in the garden. Why God did not give to him the power to live perfect, and keep his posterity so, who can tell, only that it was not his pleasure? We read that he doeth his pleasure in the armies of heaven and among the inhabitants of earth. He has a right to do as he pleases with his own; to make some vessels unto honor, and some to dishonor.

There are many things about this subject that are yet mysterious to me; but I believe that if it is necessary when "the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also and the works therein shall be burned up." By the word "Wherefore," with which our text is introduced, reference is made to the strong assurance contained in the declaration just written. Surely when we can realize the certainty of the truth there stated, there is no occasion for the saints to doubt the purpose of God in any of those mysterious events which are so deeply hidden from our understanding. Not even the departing heavens, the melting elements, and the burning earth can prevent the accomplishment of the precious promise of the love and grace of God, who has spoken good concerning the chosen people whom he has formed for himself. Their faith is to be severely tried by the tribulation of their pilgrimage in the world; but they have the support of his word by which they are told to be of good cheer in the knowledge that he has overcome the world. The testimony of this truth abides in them, so that they are witnesses by personal knowledge of it. Those who are led by the Spirit of God have such strong consolation as is necessary to sustain them against every opposing power which shall assail their confidence in the hope wrought in them by the manifestation of divine grace in their own hearts. They are not even left to depend alone upon the word written in the Scriptures; for that word is but the transcript of the same truth which is revealed by the Spirit which dwells in them. Hence, it is said to them by the inspired word, "Ye have an unction from the Holy One, and ye know all things."—1 John ii. 20. This knowledge, being given only by the anointing from the Holy One, is hidden from the comprehension of the natural mind of the saints themselves; much more is it impossible that the searching of the wise and prudent of this world should ever attain to it.

In addressing the saints by the word "Beloved," which is so frequently repeated in this epistle, there is the expression of a living principle which is far deeper than any mere natural bond of union. The Spirit of Christ abides both in the apostle and in all those to whom he writes, bearing unquestionable witness that they are brethren by a more enduring relationship than any earthly kindred. They are therefore beloved in the unity of the Spirit, which is inseparable from that heavenly love by inspiration denominated charity. This holy fruit of the Spirit cannot exist anywhere but in such as are led by the Spirit of God. Wherever it is found it is conclusive evidence that Christ dwells both in the individual whose heart burns with its holy flame, and in those to whom that love is attracted. The word "Beloved," as used by inspiration, is not to be understood in the unmeaning sense in which such terms are used in ordinary communications among men. Every one to whom this word is applied, has the divine witness that he is indeed sealed by the Spirit as an heir of God and a joint heir with Christ to all the heritage of eternal glory, which is reserved in heaven for all those who are kept by the power of God. Thus all the saints are builded together, each supported by all whom their love embraces, and each bearing witness to the genuineness of the faith of all to whom their love is attracted. The apostles are not more surely inspired of God than are all who have fellowship with the truth written by them, also led by the same Spirit.

"Seeing that ye look for such things." It is not consistent with this text to apply its admonition to those who never have looked for the things specified. Every one addressed does look for the things to which these words refer. This is not the performance of a condition on which they expect to secure divine favor; it is simply descriptive of the peculiar people embraced in the love of God as expressed by the apostle. Every one of them does look for those things of which the Holy Spirit moved Peter to write. This looking is like the homesickness of those Israelites who sat by the rivers of Babylon in their captivity, and wept when they remembered Zion. None but Israelites could thus mourn; and if a Babylonian had voluntarily wept with them, he could not have really felt the desolation under which they were mourning. However desolate they were, there could be no question that they were looking for deliverance. They could see no possibility that such deliverance could come to them; yet their God brought them out at his own appointed time. So every one who really feels the yoke of bondage in the service of sin, bears the infallible seal of the Spirit as one of the true Israel, in looking for deliverance. This is but the evidence of their hunger and thirst after righteousness. The gracious promise of our Lord is that "Unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation."—Heb. ix. 28. Then let the weary ones, who are thus looking for the revelation of their final victory, with firm assurance rest in the truth of his encouraging word. They shall not look and long in vain. At his appearing the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give "a crown of righteousness" to "all them also that love his appearing." This includes all who look for such things.

"Be diligent that ye may be found of him in peace, without spot, and blameless." To the natural mind there seems to be an indication in this admonition that there was soon to be a manifest coming of the Lord attended with those signs of desolation described in the tenth verse of this chapter. This is the view taken of the subject by all worldly professors. The essential motive used to induce men to make a hypocritical profession of christianity, is the terror inspired by threatening them with the near approach of the coming of our Lord to pour his indignation upon the unbelieving world. The fear of hell is mistaken by them for the fear of the Lord, and they are thus deluded into thinking that they have secured their own salvation by professing to believe the errors presented to them as the gospel of our Lord. Teachers of those false doctrines pervert such expressions as this portion of our text, by representing that the characters addressed are sinners who have not been led to see themselves as lost and dead in sin. This fallacy is exposed even by the literal reading of the whole sentence of this text. None but living subjects of the grace of God are looking for the things referred to. No others are admonished to diligence in the words under consideration. This is evident from the whole epistle.

It is not a mere apprehension of the coming of our Lord which is expressed in the connection of our text; the apostle was moved by the Spirit of Christ to record certain and established truth. That which he wrote was not only important to those beloved ones who were contemporary with him, but the same admonition speaks to the saints to-day and in every age of time. In the sense designed, that coming is not confined to any period of literal time. His saints are ever in his presence, and stand continually at his judgment seat. When walking in obedience to his precepts and example, they have the present answer of a good conscience toward God; when they deny him by walking after the devices of the fleshly mind, they receive the just chastening due to their departure from his commandments. They are sometimes tempted by the suggestion that they may with impunity continue in sin; but they never yield to temptation without proving the truth that "the wages of sin is death." Sowing to the flesh, they certainly "shall of the flesh reap corruption." The eternal life of the saints is not subject to their disposal. It is neither gained by their obedience, nor forfeited by their disobedience. Their eternal salvation is forever complete in their perfect Redeemer. It is in their present experience that they eat the fruit of their own doings. They never feel the chastening rod while walking in submission to the law and example of our Lord as it is written in their hearts by the finger of God; on the other hand, they can never have the answer of a good conscience toward God while walking in disobedience. Living children of God know the meaning of the life and death which is felt in this experimental sense. To them this admonition to "be diligent" does not present an irksome task or unpleasant duty, which must be performed as the price of their everlasting happiness. It is but the expression of that which God works in them both to will and to do of his good pleasure. They earnestly desire that great peace which is felt by those who love the law of the Lord, and its enjoyment is their life and happiness. They are never led by the Spirit to desire anything contrary to what is written in the law of Christ. Neither is there any requirement therein recorded which is at variance with the direction of the Spirit of Christ which dwells in them. They feel the need of diligence in keeping under the sinful workings of their natural minds, and they have no more intense desire than that they may ever be found of him in peace. When anything is suggested to them as being proper for them to do, they are always safe in bringing it to the test of the inspired rule. If it is there approved they have no occasion to fear the consequence of acting in conformity to that suggestion. If the law of Christ has not authorized it, they are always safe in refusing to act upon it. They may encounter threatening opposition in either case, but diligent adherence to the law of Christ is always their safety. Implicit obedience to the perfect law of liberty is the path of peace for the saints, even though it lead them to meet persecution and temporal death. Stephen found peace, and was found of the Lord in peace, as he fell asleep under the rage of the Jews. He gloriously triumphed in his latest breath. With him all who have been found "faithful unto death" receive "a crown of life."

To be found of the Lord "without spot and blameless" does not signify that the saints who are thus approved have no sinful emotions in their natural minds; nor yet that they are able by their own strength to subdue their evil nature. Paul was constrained to cry for deliverance from the body of this death, yet he was assured of the crown of righteousness. It is only as they are enabled by divine grace to "crucify the flesh with the affections and lusts" that they are ever found "in peace, without spot, and blameless" when they stand in the manifest presence of their Lord. Hence they have nothing in themselves of which to boast. The saint whose walk and conversation is the most unblemished, must confess that he is indebted to the grace of God for keeping all his steps, and he must know that of himself he can do nothing. The most feeble wanderer is kept by the same omnipotent love and grace. The long-suffering of our Lord is salvation to all who "look for such things" as the manifestation of his grace in their deliverance from the tribulations of earth and sin. May the saints everywhere and at all times be enabled to obey the inspired command, "Do all things without murmurings and disputings; that ye may be blameless and harmless, the sons of God, without rebuke, in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation, among whom ye shine as lights in the world; holding forth the word of life."—Phil. ii. 14-16.

BY JOHN BUNYAN.

CHAPTER XLII.

Of the lamps belonging to the candlesticks of the Temple.

TO THESE candlesticks belonged several lamps, with their flowers and their knobs.—2 Chron. iv. 21. These lamps were types of that profession that the members of the church do make of Christ.

These lamps were beautiful with knobs and flowers, to show how comely and beautiful that professor is that adorns his profession with a suitable life and conversation.

We read that the candlestick in Zechariah had seven lamps belonging to it, and a bowl of golden oil on the top, and that by golden pipes this golden oil emptied itself into the lamps; and all, doubtless, that the lamps might shine.—Zech. iv. Christ, therefore, who is the High Priest, and to whom it belongs to dress the lamps, doth dress them accordingly. * * *

CHAPTER XLIII.

Of the shewbread on the golden table in the Temple.

THERE was also shewbread set upon a golden table in the temple.—1 Kings vii. 48. The shewbread consisted of twelve cakes, made of fine flour. Two tenth deals were to go to one cake, and to be set in order in two rows upon the pure table.—Ex. xxix. 33; Lev. iii.; xxiv. 5-9.

These twelve loaves, to me, seem to be a type of the twelve tribes under the law, and of the children of God under the gospel as they present themselves before God, in and by his ordinances, through Christ. Hence the apostle says, "For we, being many, are one bread."—1 Cor. x. 17. For so were the twelve cakes, though twelve; and so are the gospel saints, though many. "So we, being many, are one body in Christ."—Rom. xii. 5.

These cakes, or shewbread, were to have frankincense strewed upon them as they stood upon the golden table, which was a type of the sweet perfumes of the sanctification of the Holy Ghost, to which I think Paul alludes when he says, "That the offering up of the Gentiles might be acceptable, being sanctified by the Holy Ghost."—Rom. xv. 16.

They were to be set upon the pure table new and hot, to show that God delighteth in new and warm believers. "I remember thee, the kindness of thy youth, the love of thine espousals."—Jer. ii. 2. "When Israel was a child, then I loved him."—Hosea xi. 1. Men at first conversion are alike to a cake well baked and newly taken from the oven. They are warm, and cast forth a very fragrant scent, especially when a warm, sweet incense is strewed upon them.

When the shewbread was old and stale, it was to be taken away, and new and warm put in its place; to show that God has but little delight in the service of his own people when their duties grow stale and mouldy. Therefore he removed his old, stale, mouldy church of the Jews before him, and set in their room upon the golden table the warm church of the Gentiles.

The shewbread, by an often removal and renewing, was continually to stand before the Lord in his house; to show us that always, as long as ordinances should be of use, God will have a new, warm and sanctified people to worship him.

Aaron and his sons were to eat of the old shewbread; to show that when saints have lived in the world as long as living is good for them, and when they can do no more service to God in the world, they shall yet be accepted of Jesus Christ, and that it shall be as meat and drink to him to save them from all their unworthiness. * * *

CHAPTER XLIV.

Of the snuffers belonging to the candlesticks and lamps of the Temple.

AS THERE were candlesticks and lamps, so there were snuffers also prepared for these in the temple of the Lord. "And the snuffers were snuffers of gold."—1 Kings vi. 50.

The use of snuffers is to trim the lamps and candles, that their light may shine the brighter. Snuffers, you know, are biting, pinching things; but use them well, and they will prove not only beneficial to those in the house, but profitable to the lights.

Snuffers! you may say, of what were they a type? Answer. If our snuffs are our superfluities of naughtiness, our snuffers then are those righteous reproofs, rebukes and admonitions which Christ has ordained to be in his house for good; or, as the apostle has it, for our edification. And perhaps Paul alludes to these when he bids Titus rebuke the Creteans sharply, that they might be sound in the faith.—Titus i. 12, 13.

As we should say, they must use the snuffers of the temple to trim their lights withal, if they burn not well. These snuffers are therefore of great use in the temple of God; only, as I said, they must be used wisely. It is not for every fool to handle snuffers at or about the candles, lest, perhaps, instead of mending the light, they put the candle out; and therefore Paul bids them that are spiritual do it.—Gal. vi. 1.

My reason tells me that if I use these snuffers as I should, I must not only endeavor to take the superfluous snuff away, but so to do it that the light thereby may be mended; which then is done if, as the apostle says, I use sharpness to edification, and not for destruction.—1 Cor. v. 4, 5; 2 Cor. xiii. 10.

Are not the seven churches of Asia called by the name of candlesticks? And why candlesticks, if they were not to hold the candles?

And candles must have snuffers therewith, to trim the lights. And Christ, who is our true Aaron, in those rebukes which he gave those churches, alluding to these snuffers, did it that their lights might shine the brighter.—Rev. ii. 3. Wherefore, as he used them, he did it still with caution to their light, that it might not be impaired. For as he thus trimmed these lamps, he yet encouraged what he saw would shine, if helped. He only snipped the snuff away. Thus therefore he came to them with these snuffers in his hand, and trimmed their lamps and candlesticks.—Rev. ii. 4, 20; iii. 2, 15.

This should teach ministers, to whom it belongs under Christ, to use these snuffers well. Strike at the snuff, not at the light, in all your rebukes and admonitions. Snuff not your lamps of a private revenge, but of a design to nourish grace and gifts in the church. Thus our Lord himself says he did in his using of these snuffers about the candlesticks. "As many as I love I rebuke and chasten; be zealous therefore and repent."—Rev. iii. 19.

To conclude, watchman, watch, and let not your snuffs be too long, nor pull them off with your fingers, or carnal reasonings, but with godly admonitions, &c. Use the snuffers graciously, curb vice, nourish virtue, so ye will use them well, and so your light will shine to the glory of God.

CHAPTER XLV.

Of the snuff-dishes that were with the snuffers in the Temple.

AS THERE were snuffers, so there were also snuff-dishes in the temple; and they were also made of gold. The snuff-dishes were those in which the snuffs were put when snuffed off, and by which they were carried forth of the temple. They therefore, as the snuffers also, are of great use in the temple of God. By them the golden floor of the temple is kept from being daubed by the snuffs. By them also the clean hands of those that worship there are kept from being defiled. By them also the stinks of the snuffs are soon suppressed in the temple, and consequently the tender noses of them that worship there are preserved from being offended.

Snuffs, you know, are daubing things, stinking things, nauseous things; therefore we must take heed that they touch not this floor on which we walk, nor defile the hands which we lift up to God, when we come to worship him. But how must this be done, but as we take them off with the snuffers and put them in these snuff-dishes?

Some are for being at the snuffs with their fingers, and will also cast them at their feet and daub the floor of God's holy house; but usually such do burn themselves as well as defile themselves. But is it not a shame for a man to defile himself with that vice which he rebuketh in another? Let us then, while we are taking away the snuffs of others, hate even the garments spotted by the flesh, and labor to carry such stink with the snuff-dishes out of the temple of God.

Snuff-dishes, you may say; what are they? I answer, If sins are the snuffs, and rebukes and admonitions the snuffers, then, methinks, repentance, or in case that be wanting, the censures of the church, should be the snuff-dishes. Hence repentance is called a church cleansing grace, and the censures of the church a purging out of the old leaven, and making it a new lump.—1 Cor. v. 2; 2 Cor. vii. 11.

Ah, were these snuff-dishes more in use in the churches, we should not have this man's snuff defiling that man's fingers as it doth; nor would the temple of God be so besmeared with the snuff and bedaubed as it is. Ah, snuffs pulled off lie yet on the temple floor, and there stink and defile both feet and fingers, both the callings and conversation of temple worshipers, to the disparaging of religion and the making of religious worship but of low esteem with men; and all, I say, for want of the due use of these snuffers and these snuff-dishes there. Nay, are not whole churches now defiled with those very snuffs that long since were plucked off, and all for want of the use of these snuff-dishes according to the Lord's commandment? For you must know that reproofs and admonitions are of but little use where repentance or church censures are not thereto annexed. When ministers use the snuffers the people should hold snuff-dishes. When round reproofs for sin light upon penitent hearts, then brave work is in the church. Then the snuff is not only pulled away, but is carried out of the temple of God aright. And now the worship and the worshipers shine like gold. "As an ear-ring of gold, and an ornament of fine gold, so is a wise reproof upon an obedient ear."—Prov. xxv. 12.

Ministers, it appertains to you to use the snuffers, and to teach the people to hold the snuff-dishes right.—Acts xx. 20, 21; 1 Tim. iv. 2. We must often be snuffed with these snuffers, or our light will burn but dimly, and our candle will also waste. Pray therefore, O man of God, look diligently to your people, snuff them as you see there is need, but touch not their snuff with your fingers. A little smutch on you will be seen a great way. Remember also that you are to leave the snuffs nowhere but with these snuff-dishes, that the temple may be cleared of them. Cast them away, I say, with fear, zeal, care, revenge, and with great indignation (2 Cor. vii. 11), and then the church, your conversation, your fingers, and all, will be kept white and clean.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—By request, I send you the obituary of brother O. Perry Wornall, who died at the residence of his son, Mr. Samuel Wornall, near Kansas City, Missouri, on Monday, Jan. 28th, 1889.

The deceased was born in Clark Co., Ky., Oct. 12th, 1819. He had made Bourbon County his home for the greater part of his life, having married Elizabeth Ewalt, of that county, Feb. 25th, 1845, who survives him, with two sons, Mr. Samuel Wornall, at whose home he was visiting at the time of his demise, and Mr. Thos. Wornall, of Bourbon County. Brother Wornall united with the Old School Baptist Church at Elizabeth, in Bourbon Co., Ky., on the second Saturday in June, 1846, and was baptized by Elder Thos. P. Dudley, who was at that time the pastor. He was widely known among the Baptists of Kentucky and other states as a zealous, faithful and consistent christian. In his gentle way he was ever ready to encourage the faltering, cheer the faint-hearted, support the weak, active in provoking to love and good works, and inciting to duty by his own christian example. Religion was the theme of his life; and I well remember that, at the last or next to the last meeting he attended at Elizabeth, while there were three preachers in the stand, after the first discourse, by Elder W. M. Smoot, of Virginia, he arose from his seat and said, "Brethren, I want to sing,

"'Tis religion that can give Sweetest pleasure while we live."

His memory will ever be held sacred by those who knew him, for to know him was to love him.

Together with his wife and two sons and their families, he leaves two sisters (one of whom is our beloved sister, Mrs. F. P. Clay), numerous kindred and friends, with the little church at Elizabeth, to mourn their loss. We will miss him, brethren, not only at our meetings, but at his hospitable home, which has been a Baptist home for so many years. His remains were brought to Paris, where the humble writer attended his funeral, at the Southern Presbyterian Church, using the text, "A good name is better than precious ointment; and the day of death than the day of one's birth;" after which his remains were deposited in the cemetery at Paris. May the Lord comfort the bereaved, and, if consistent with his holy will, may he lead his two sons to follow their noble father as he followed Christ.

ALSO,

I SEND you the obituary notice of sister Artie Wallace, who died in Covington, Ky., Jan. 2d, 1889.

Sister Wallace was the relict of the late Gen. John Wallace, who died in Burlington, Ky., several years ago. She was born March 10th, 1810. She united with the Baptist Church at Forks of Elk Horn, in Franklin Co., Ky., and was baptized by Elder George Waller. This was before there was a final division between the Old School or Particular Baptists and the Missionary Baptists. She afterward moved to Boone Co., Ky., and placed her letter with the Particular Baptist Church at Sardis, in that county; and through all the vicissitudes and mutations that have transpired around her in the "Lo-heres" and the "Lo-theres," she remained faithful to her first espousal. She was a bright and intelligent Baptist. Firmness was one of the characteristics of her religious faith; but her gentle, child-like simplicity either won the esteem and respect, or over-awed into silent submission, those who opposed.

She leaves one child, Mrs. Artie Sleet, whose husband is Mr. Benjamin Sleet, of Covington, and their little daughter, Lucille, with a large circle of friends, together with the church, to mourn their loss; but we sorrow not as those without hope. I was telegraphed to preach at her funeral, which occurred at the family residence in Covington, Jan. 4th, 1889; after which her remains were deposited in the vault at Linnwood Cemetery, near Covington. May the Lord, who doeth all things well, give the spirit of reconciliation to the dear afflicted family; and may he lead that dear, loving, doting daughter, while her heart is torn, left bleeding, and overwhelmed with grief, to the Rock that is higher than she.

J. TAYLOR MOORE.

GEORGETOWN, Ky.

I wish for the information of friends in the states to chronicle the departure of four loved ones, who have been called from our midst to realize that future to which all are fast hastening.

The first I will name is Bessie Price, who was called on the 8th of November, 1888, at the age of three years, one month and one day. She was the daughter of John and Alice Price.

The next was a sister of the writer, Mrs. Alice Price, who died Dec. 9th, 1888, in the thirty-second year of her age.

She was the daughter of Charles and Margaret Davis, and was married to John Price in August, 1878. She had professed a hope in Christ, but had not attached herself to any church. She leaves a husband, four little children, father, brothers and sisters, to mourn their loss; but all feel that our loss is her great gain, as she left shining evidence of a hope of glory.

The next great bereavement was the call for my dear companion, which occurred Dec. 11th, 1888. She was born in Boone Co., Mo., Feb. 17th, 1864, and was a daughter of David and Susan Fawcett. She professed a hope in Christ and joined the Christian Church in 1879, and was a faithful member while she lived. She was united in marriage to the writer on Dec. 29th, 1887, in Boone Co., Mo., and came to this territory, where she died. She leaves father, mother, brothers, sisters, and an infant babe, to mourn our loss; but we feel sure that our loss is her gain.

The next was my sister, Anna Atterberry, who died Dec. 27th, 1888, in the thirty-seventh year of her age. She was the daughter of Charles and Margaret Davis, and was married to H. T. Atterberry on January 5th, 1870. She professed a hope in Christ some years ago, but never joined any church, but her faith was in harmony with the Primitive Baptists. In 1882 she with several others came to this territory.

She leaves a father, brothers, sisters, husband and three daughters to mourn their bereavement; but she left evidences of a hope of a better life beyond this vale of tears, where we all hope we will meet and be complete in the embraces of the Savior's love, away from all sorrow and trouble.

C. B. DAVIS.

LEOTAH, W. T., Jan. 20, 1889.

My dear mother, Mrs. Phebe A. Dutcher, died at her home in Chittenango, N. Y., Feb. 5th, 1889, aged seventy-five years, three months and fifteen days. She experienced religion in her eighteenth year, and united with the Old School Baptist Church, and continued a worthy member until her death. She had been frail in body for about five years, and for the last two years had suffered intensely. Cancer in the breast was her trouble, and at last ended her pilgrimage. She was sound in the faith of God's elect, turning neither to the right nor to the left. We would bow submissively to God's will, for he does all things well.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date, this date denotes the time at which your subscription expires, and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

CORRESPONDENCE.

709 N. CALVERT ST., BALTIMORE, Md.

BROTHER JENKINS:—I have read your criticism of my letter. The first thing I noticed was that you had not watched as well as prayed, that you might not parry the subject, as no part of my thought is answered, only in sermonizing on words. I think it will appear to any one, not biased by your words, that my meaning was that there has been but one way of salvation; that Christ was preached in the types and in the law, the sacrifice for sin, and the gospel saith the same. I therefore said we must not think that the one differed from the other in substance, for they both teach the same. The first said that God would make his soul an offering for sin; and the gospel says he has done it, according to his word. Is it not so? The natural Israelite read Moses with a veil untaken away; and the Gentiles read the Old and the New Testaments with that same veil untaken away to-day.

Is the gospel erected on the ruins of the law? It would appear so from your remarks. I hold it is not so. Is not every one that comes to Christ brought there weeping, poor, and trembling at God's word? The commandment comes, then sin revives, or he sees more of it, and the poor soul dies to all hope of acceptance through the deeds of the law. Did it not condemn you? Is not sin by the law exceeding sinful? Paul says that "The law is spiritual; but I am carnal, sold under sin." The matter of death is in the sinner, not in the law. It is man's inability. The law is weak, acting on sinful flesh; but God sent his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin condemns sin in the flesh, that the righteousness of the law might be fulfilled in us. As if he had said, Who are led of the Spirit. The gospel could not be the gospel without this perfect law, which points out the just requirements of God on the one hand, with majesty and truth. In the gospel there is an exhibition of a full payment or sacrifice for all its requirements by one who was able to pay in full. The law and the gospel are two branches of one divine will or revelation, and in this union it is that mercy and truth are met together, righteousness and peace have kissed each other; yes, that God is just, and the justifier of him that believeth in Jesus. Thus we see that all of God's revelations are but one, though diversified by several names and parts, called dispensations, &c. So the great Revealer is one who spoke to us in the garden, then to Abel, then to Noah, then to Abraham and the patriarchs, Melchizedec, &c., then to Moses, then to the prophets and psalmist, then to John, and by Christ, who is the chief corner stone. Thus we see that which Ezekiel saw in the emblem of a river, to show the religion of the Israelite to be the same with the patriarchs in the truths taught; but they had also some of the same rites, or sacrifices.

The law of Moses to Israel may be divided into three classes: first, judicial; second, the moral; and third, the ritual. The first and third are abolished. The first was for their national government; and the third, the ritual, preached Christ. Sabbath days, new moons and holy days, with circumcision and sacrifices, were and are now nailed to the cross of Christ. As if they had said, This is he of whom those things spoke or typified. But the living law was in the psalmist's heart. He certainly did not mean the written law, nor the ceremonial law. He said, "O how love I thy law," &c. For they could not profit; but the end or object of the law did. It was the understanding he prayed for. The written is a revelation of the unwritten word or mind of God. This living law in the sinner is the death to all legality. It leads to Christ, and to him alone. He is now a convinced sinner, and needy; and so far from depending upon self-righteousness, he sees it to be unrighteousness, and therefore has no hope of being just with God by deeds of that law he is ever transgressing. The veil has been taken away. But can you preach the one without the other? If a sinner, how, and by what law? Is he not under the covenant made in the garden, and that the seed of the woman should bruise the serpent's head? You say we never were under the Abrahamic covenant. That is so. But we are made fellow-heirs of that river of the knowledge of God, which, though small at first, in the garden, continued to enlarge till it became a river to swim in, and ran forth into the sea, whose waters shall be healed. It shall bring forth new fruit, because the waters issue out of the sanctuary. This means all of the word of God from first to last, and that, too, for Gentiles as well as Israelites. "That the Gentiles should be fellow-heirs, and of the same body, and partakers of his promise in Christ by the gospel." "Which in other ages was not made known unto the sons of men, as is now revealed unto his holy apostles and prophets by the Spirit."—Eph. iii. 6, 5. You say, "Shall we teach those things taught under the law dispensation, as in Psalm lxxviii.?" Paul says so. "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness; that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." How furnished unto all good works, if you now refuse its instruction?—2 Timothy iii. 16, 17. There was no new Scripture in those days, and Christ and the apostles refer to the old over three hundred times. It was he who gave the law that fulfilled it. Here we find instruction, if not to be instructed by his statutes and judgments, and out of his law, as Paul does? You say that David was under the law when he wrote Psalm lxxviii., and that now all things are absolutely new, and therefore no part of the teaching of the Old Testament is proper, in the face of all this testimony. The Bereans were more noble, because they searched the Scriptures to see if these things were so or not. Christ said, "Search the Scriptures, for they are they that testify of me." I say, instruct in the testimony of Jesus. Paul says to Gentiles, "For whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the Scriptures might have hope." Again, "Rejoice, ye Gentiles, with his people." Did you ever consider the address of Stephen, all out of the old Scriptures? Read it. Then Paul says, "Who feedeth a flock, and eateth not of the milk of the flock? Say I these things as a man, or saith not the law the same also? For it is written in the law of Moses, Thou shalt not muzzle the mouth of the ox that treadeth out the corn. Doth God take care for oxen? Or saith he it altogether for our sakes? For our sakes, no doubt, this is written."—1 Tim. v. 18. Say I these things as a man? Has not God said so? Saith not the law the same? Doth not this agree in a legal point with David, in the seventy-eighth Psalm? No doubt both were written for our sakes, and for our instruction, and both Paul and David were inspired. But you insist that everything is absolutely new, in the face of this judge in Zion. Paul quotes the law often for proof. You are not willing to take the teaching of God as he inspired the prophets and psalmist, because they lived under a legal dispensation, especially for correction in righteousness, nor for reproof. Can you violate one point of the written law and not feel condemned? Why not feel so for not teaching the statutes of the Lord? Should not the living law bring forth more fruit than the written? Christ came to fulfill the law for us on the cross, which is imputed unto us, and which is imparted unto us by his Spirit that dwelleth in us. Do we thus make void the law? Nay, we establish the law. He here writes to Corinthian Gentiles. He saith, "Moreover, brethren, I would not that ye should be ignorant, how that all our fathers were under the cloud, and all passed through the sea; and were all baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea; and did all eat the same spiritual meat; and did all drink the same spiritual drink: for they drank of that Rock which followed them: and that Rock was Christ." But you say there was no substance in it, even though Christ was there. "But with many of them God was not well pleased; for they were overthrown in the wilderness. Now these things were our examples, to the intent we should not lust after evil things, as they also lusted." I would here say, If these things were ensamples for the Corinthian brethren, are they not so for us also? "Neither be ye idolaters, as some of them. As it is written, The people sat down to eat and drink, and rose up to play. Neither let us commit fornication, as some of them committed, and fell in one day three and twenty thousand." The matter of Balaam I will also refer to. Let us not tempt Christ in saying that we will not heed what he has spoken to the fathers by the prophets. Now see well this eleventh verse, "Now all these things happened unto them for ensamples; and they are written for our [Gentiles] admonition, upon whom the ends of the world are come." Therefore let him that thinketh he standeth, take heed to those Scriptures that are able to make one wise unto salvation. I leave those Scriptures to do their own teaching. John had reference to his own book of Revelation, and not to the passages referred to here, that I hope you have only overlooked, and hope your part will not be taken away.

You object to my citing Ephesians vi. I will try it again. This letter was written fifty-nine years after Christ, and to a Gentile church. You say this was one of the statutes of the Lord that he commanded Israel to teach to their children; and, you say, a very important one it was to them, for it embraced a matter of life and death to them. You then say, "But suppose we attempt to apply it to Gentile children. Can we say this statute applies to them?" Paul thought so, and so applied it to the Ephesian Gentiles, did he not? Well raised children in the mean do inherit the land; while the vicious and disobedient and badly raised, not having had the instruction of the Lord, as in Psalm lxxviii. and Ephesians vi., shall not live out half their days, as the Scriptures have said. "Children, obey your parents in the Lord; for this is right." I say, How in the Lord, if not in his word? and they had none but the old to quote. "Honor thy father and thy mother; which is the first commandment with promise; that it may be well with thee, and thou mayest live long on the earth." Without controversy, this is the law here quoted, and to natural children. "And ye fathers, provoke not your children to wrath, but bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." Without doubt this is the same party spoken to in the three preceding verses; therefore natural children. The fifth speaks of natural servants; or this passage, "Husbands, love your wives." Were they exhorted to love their spiritual wives only, or were they to love their natural children and servants? It has been said by others that it is spiritual children referred to. I would then ask, Are they now under legal promises? Do they mean that to honor my father, Paul, or my mother, Priscilla, I shall have legal blessings of long life? Is that right? "And ye fathers, provoke not your [spiritual] children to wrath, lest they become discouraged." Did you ever hear it hinted on ordaining an Elder? Strange omission, if true. Or did he mean to say, Do not speak all the truth if it comes hard on your spiritual children, especially this warning and rebuking? For Paul writes to the Corinthian Gentiles; for they might be provoked to wrath. Or do they mean that the minister can give spiritual admonitions? I hold that the Spirit is a sovereign, and doeth all his pleasure, even to believers. Shall I turn from my illustrious predecessors and adopt this vague idea? It has been rendered, as I have it in all the old covenants attached to their confession of faith in all the old churches, and all the writers, new and old. This is here teaching the child, as in Psalm lxxviii. Again, in choosing a Bishop, he should rule well his own house, having his children in subjection with all gravity. "For if a man know not how to rule his own house, how shall he take care of the house of God?" As if he had said, If he has not taught at home, how can he do so abroad? This agrees with the following, "Except a man provide for his own, especially his own household, he has denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel." He has not given them that moral instruction, called the nurture and admonition of the Lord, by the mouth of the parent. They are to have the discipline and instruction of God as he spake to the fathers by the prophets and psalmist. Discipline may refer to all that is necessary to form the mind. It imparts proper behavior, and how to regulate and restrain their passions, and warned against the vices of others. Think of the example of the old prophet Eli and his sons. He said, "Why do ye do so?" But we find that was not sufficient; he should have commanded his sons. You do not seem to think so, for fear it might not do any good. Then think of Abraham being called the friend of God, and the cause of the remark of God just before the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah. He said, "I know Abraham, that he will command his children, and his house after him; and they shall keep the way of the Lord to do justice and judgment, that the Lord may bring upon Abraham that which he hath spoken of him."—Genesis xviii. 17. Whereas those that did not, were destroyed. This was before the law. If the child has to be educated, shall not the parent educate it, or one whom he believes knows the truth? The best place outside of the parental roof is in the church, which is the pillar and ground of truth. Or shall it be sent to those whose business it is to teach untruth, and to bias the mind against the truth, or pervert the word? David said (if you will allow his evidence) that the Scripture was a lamp to his feet. Shall we give the lamp to the enemies of truth, that cry "Lo here" and "Lo there," and we at the same time be denouncing them and their mode, and indirectly be their supporters? That has ever been our practice. Is it consistent? A Sunday teaching of the young by the church would produce more consternation than to have all our children brought up in the Midianite schools. I have proof of it. Take heed to yourselves that ye be not deceived, and your sons and daughters taught another faith, the opinions of men, another gospel, good works (that is, acceptance through deeds of the law), another baptism, one to wash away their sins, and to deny the work of Christ, another forgiveness of sins by a priest, or by accepting certain offers of salvation, teaching for doctrine the commandments of men, entangling the child, if a subject of grace, with a yoke of bondage.

You say you do not know that any Old Baptist objects to parents reading a portion of the Scriptures to their children, nor that there is any impropriety in taking their children with them to their place of worship. Does not this imply that there is no need of exhortation to do so, as it does not matter, no fault if they do not? If the church is the pillar and ground of truth, should you not exhort that the children go to the pillar and ground of truth to be taught what God has said? David said (Psalm lxxviii.), "We will not hide it from our children;" but you say that is legal. You make a kite of my word that I do not care for the how, as long as it is done. I again say so. This is not a ceremonial dispensation. I do not care whether you tell the truth in the house, in the street, in a barn, or in a house of worship; nor do I care whether the children be nurtured and admonished by the word of the Lord at home or in the church. Nurture it in the truth, that it be kept from the advice of Balaam, who caused Israel to sin. He told Balak of God's promise that he would visit Israel with a rod for mingling with idolaters, and for their uniting in their sacrifices; so Balak invited them unto their sacrifices, the people did eat of their sacrifices, and did bow down to their gods. One of the princes took one of the daughters of one of the princes of Midian and brought her unto his brethren, to be one with them in the family and people, and to the king that sought their destruction by curses, but failed. But now they prevailed. Take Paul's advice (1 Cor. x.), "These things happened for our [Gentiles] instruction." We are now told that we have no authority for giving to children the admonitions of the Lord, in the face of the many passages brought forth. Is there any for sending or letting them go to Midian, and not a word said against it? But a hue and cry is raised against every way the church or parent may do; at least there is not a word about it. In English law the hider is as bad as the stealer. We have suffered in all the cities as did Israel of old for their sin. Our assemblies are nearly deserted by the young. Shall we allow those streams of the knowledge of God to be poisoned by the enemies of truth? I have known this church forty-three years, I knew most of those that came out in the division, I have the church books, and I can find but four Old School Baptist children that have been added to this church; neither have they attended the meetings in any other ratio. Our congregation has been those who have attended our meetings in the country, they not having Sunday Schools to draw them away. I may say that we could not keep up a visibility were it not that we have accessions from the country; and this is but a sample of all the cities. If a snake should be in the cradle with your child, would you not snatch it out and kill the snake in the most practical manner, and not dote about a certain how had not been given that you had seen? But the how is very plain.—Psalm lxxviii.; Eph. vi.; 1 Tim. iii. 13-16; 1 Cor. x. 9, &c.

Assemble yourselves together, and read and expound the Scriptures, as the Jews did of old. "Search the Scriptures, for they are they that testify of me." You say that parents are not required to teach their children religion. Did you not infer by that that I had said so? Did I not distinctly say in the beginning that I had no such idea? Read it. I will say again that God, like the natural sun, must be seen by his own light only. You then say that the Bible is not a proper book to place in the hands of the young, and that carnal Israel thought so. I do not know where you find the latter. I had no idea that your extreme had met the other. The other end has fought us with sword and fire from the days of Constantine till of late, to take it from us. If it is not a proper book for the young, were they not right? That book, and the instruction derived therefrom, kept our fathers during all the dark ages, and till now, and has been the man of our counsel till now, to be discarded. The old Scriptures that Christ and his apostles have ever quoted for their authority, Ezekiel's river, is now dry, according to you, and not sufficiently chaste now for the young, who read the newspapers daily, describing all the crimes of the day. We have here a Deistical freethinking society, who have published their creed, and are starting a Sunday School. I notice that the Bible is one of the books not allowed. The Bible not only teaches the good, but the bad is faithfully pointed out by him who is the Covenant of the people, from the garden to the cross, and forever.

There is a tendency on one part of error to make the word to be all there is of truth, or the knowledge of God, and deny the work of the Spirit; and on the other side of error, indirectly oppose and deny the teaching of the written word of God, as he spake to the fathers by the prophets. If the old Scriptures were given by inspiration of God, and Paul says so, then I say with him that they are profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness. David (Psalm lxxviii.) said the word instructed him. He said we will not hide what our fathers have told us. "We will not hide them from their children, showing to the generation to come the praises of the Lord, and his strength, and his wonderful works that he hath done. For he established a testimony in Jacob, and appointed a law in Israel, which he commanded our fathers, that they should make them known to their children; that the generation to come might know them, even the children which should arise and declare them unto their children; that they might set their hope in God, and not forget the works of God." Surely if this was to be so taught to natural Israel by natural parents, shall it be less so from them in whose heart the living law dwells and is fulfilled? How fulfilled by denying to do those things? Christ said, "Think not that I am come to destroy the law or the prophets." If the types are shadows or likenesses of an object, must not the object be and have all the marks of the likeness? Is there no mark of the fulfilling of the law in the child of grace? Is fulfilling to turn away from its instruction and become lawless? Is the law sin? Shall we continue in breaches of the law because grace abounds? If he who gave the law dwelleth in you, leadeth you, guideth you by his counsel, he will also instruct you by what he hath said of old to the fathers by the prophets, and in his law; not to be sons, but because ye are sons by his Spirit dwelling in you. "Walk about Zion, and go round about her: tell the towers thereof. Mark ye well her bulwarks, consider her palaces; that ye may tell it to the generation following. For this God is our God forever and ever. He will be our guide unto death." This is true to-day. Still tell to old and young the wonderful works and judgments of God.

I hope my first article will be re-read as it stands, without note or comment, that makes me say that which I had never thought of. I am aware I had, as I have in this, crossed the natural trend or bias. But arise above that, and examine my meaning. I have no doubt I have used words that may be easily construed to mean something other than my meaning. I will not answer so generally again; but I have no objection to answering or writing on one subject at a time, but not in the spirit of controversy and for the mastery. I only desire truth. Truth may in a measure be fallen in the streets. It cannot perish nor diminish; for, like its author, it is eternal and unchangeable. We hope this truth, like the sun, shall arise in glorious elegance, and great shall be the company of those that publish it.

I will say in conclusion that all men and children are still under the moral law, except they are led of the Spirit. They are not under the law. But the law has been their school-master to bring them to Christ. By the law is the knowledge of sin. Still you may say, Am I a minister of the law? By no means. But you cannot tell of the payment of a debt except you know of the debt. You must know of the requirements and the fulfilling of that law that has been violated. Think not that Christ came to destroy the law, or that the gospel should be erected on the ruins of the law. If it was proper for Abraham to teach his children, and to command his own before the law, shall it be less so now? Shall not David be permitted to quote the law, as well as Paul, for Gentiles, fifty and sixty years after Christ?

I remain your brother in hope,
JOHN THORNE.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y., March 9, 1889.

DEAR BROTHER THORNE:—We are exhorted by the apostle to "be of one mind;" and if we have the mind of Christ, with which we serve the law of God, and are led by it, we shall "speak the same things." But we have also another mind, by which we serve ourselves, or the flesh, and which would lead us to strive for the mastery. What an easy matter it is for us to be mistaken in the spirit by which we are actuated. Our wicked heart often deceives us. What we sometimes regard as holy zeal for God and truth, proves to be no better than that which was rebuked by the dear Redeemer in his disciples, when they asked him if they should not call for fire from heaven to consume those who were opposing and persecuting him. Remembering that the prophet Elijah, on a certain occasion, being led by the Spirit of God, had said, "If I be a man of God, then let fire come down from heaven and consume thee and thy fifty; and fire came down from heaven and consumed him and his fifty," they concluded that it was proper for them to do likewise. But Jesus "turned and rebuked them, and said, Ye know not what manner of spirit ye are of."—2 Kings i. 10; Luke ix. 54, 55.

If we are not of one mind in any matter pertaining to the gospel, perhaps we may attain to that which is so desirable by contending earnestly for the faith which was once delivered to the saints. The apostle Jude exhorts us so to do. If it be true that debate seldom throws any light on the points debated, it must be because the spirit or style of the debate is not good. Controversy between brethren, when conducted in the proper spirit, is productive of good, and should not be condemned by any. How is it possible to either preach or write without controversy? Jesus and his apostles are our examples, and they were engaged in controversy, dispute, contention. Paul was "disputing daily in the school of one Tyrannus. And this continued by the space of two years."—Acts xix. 8-10. Such is the peculiar temperament of some brethren, that they cannot, it seems, engage in a controversy without saying things in a seemingly harsh and unkind manner, even when they do not mean to do so, and there is really no bitterness in their spirit. It is not every brother who can, like Paul, rebuke sharply, or contend earnestly, and yet edify, and not destroy. Some excellent brethren in their communications express their disapproval of discussions, and no doubt honestly and sincerely believe that they avoid them, when their communications are almost invariably criticisms, and calculated to provoke controversy and unpleasant feelings. Of course they do not mean to produce that effect. O that we may take heed to our spirit, watch and pray. I write these things, my dear brother, under a feeling sense of my infirmities, which are an almost constant grief to me. Perhaps they will be a benefit to others.

You complain that I have answered no part of your thought, but have sermonized only on words. How can I know your thoughts, only as you express them by words? Words are signs of ideas, or thoughts. You are not lacking in ability to use words to properly clothe your thoughts. It is not "merely the best of the argument" that I want, but to present the truth according to the inspired record. All counsel relative to spiritual matters that is really good is found there. It matters little to me what any man's observation has taught him, if it is not clearly sustained by the Scriptures. While it may appear to you, and perhaps to some others, that I have parried the subject, and "drifted away from the real issue," it does not so appear to me. The subject is a very comprehensive one, and is as important as it is extensive. It must be that you have misunderstood some things in my reply, or you would not use expressions that you have used; such as, "If you will allow his (David's) evidence;" and, "Indirectly oppose and deny the teaching of the written word of God, as he spake to the fathers by the prophets." Again, you quote 2 Timothy iii. 16, 17, and then ask, "How furnished unto all good works, if you now refuse its instruction?" When have I refused the instruction of the all Scripture given by inspiration of God, and profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness? God forbid that I ever should. I have denied, and do yet deny, that it was given for any other purpose than that which the inspired apostle has said, namely, "That the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." Not that natural children, either of believers or unbelievers, may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works. Immediately preceding this declaration, the apostle says to Timothy, "But continue thou in the things which thou hast been assured of, knowing of whom thou hast learned them." I pause to inquire, Of whom had Timothy learned and been assured? Was it of men or of God? Most assuredly of God, and not of man. The apostle continues, "And that from a child thou hast known the holy Scriptures." That is, he had been taught of God from his childhood, having been called by grace in his childhood (as many to-day are), else he could not have learned and been assured of these things. This, to my mind, is "without controversy." What does the apostle say these Scriptures are able to do for this manifest child of God? "Which are able to make thee wise unto salvation." The holy Scriptures set forth the way of life and salvation through the Lord Jesus Christ, and make "the man of God" wise as to his duty toward God and man. "Which are able to make thee wise unto salvation, through faith which is in Christ Jesus." The same apostle says that the things which were written aforetime, in the holy Scriptures, were written for our ("the called of Jesus Christ," "beloved of God, called to be saints") learning, that we (the same characters) through patience and comfort of the Scriptures might have hope. Not that our natural children "might set their hope in God, and not forget the works of God, but keep his commandments," as you have said. The children that David refers to in Psalm lxxviii., he tells us are "the generation to come;" "the children which shall be born;" the sons of God that should believe on the name of Jesus by the power of God, and who should be born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God.—John i. 12, 13. This is the seed that should serve him, and be accounted to the Lord for a generation.—Psa. xxii. 30. It is the people that should be created, and praise the Lord, when the Lord should build up Zion, in the resurrection of Jesus from the dead, and from under the law, and his church or body with him. Peter identifies the saints as this generation, saying, "Ye are a chosen generation." Do we read that the Scriptures were written for the learning of any others? Can any others really know and be assured that the Scriptures are given by inspiration of God? If they can, where is the testimony to that effect? I have neither disputed nor doubted that the Scriptures teach the saints their duty to their children and to all men. I have said that the discipline of children is, in the Scriptures, exclusively vested in the parents. Parents are responsible for the conduct of their children while under their care and control. They are required to teach them to be moral, so far as it is in their power, that they may be useful in the world. They have the right to even compel them to attend their places of worship, to say where they shall and shall not go. It is manifestly inconsistent to allow them to go where error of any kind is taught. I do mean to say that it is not the duty of the parents to take their children to their places of worship, because they are not exhorted or commanded to do so in the New Testament, which is our only rule of faith and practice. It matters not to me what would "produce consternation" in the camp of our enemies, if the New Testament has not instructed us to do that thing. It is an impeachment of the wisdom of Jesus for us to say that a course is good that he has not authorized nor his apostles taught. There has been with me no "hue and cry" against anything that the Scriptures authorize the saints to practice. There is nothing in our worship or preaching to attract young men or women, old men or women, or children, unless they have an experience of grace, and I cannot therefore wonder that they avoid our assemblies, and go where there are attractions for them. I am certain that I would not subject myself to the reproaches and sneers of the world, which seem necessarily connected with attendance upon Old Baptist meetings as a general rule, unless I dearly loved the truth. I hope I shall not murmur against God if he does not bring into the church the children of Old Baptists, or if he "keeps up our visibility by accessions from the country." I do not like your "snake" illustration. I do care for the "how." I want God's how, and no other how. No other how is "decently and in order." It matters not what our "illustrious predecessors" have done, for they are not our pattern; nor can we substitute "all the old covenants attached to their confessions of faith" for the inspired record.

There is no doubt in my mind that the apostle, Ephesians vi., is exhorting those who are spiritual, subjects of the new birth, as he was an apostle to none others, being a judge of spiritual Israel only. He says, 1 Corinthians v. 11-13, to the saints, "I have written unto you," &c. "For what have I to do to judge them also that are without? Do not ye judge them that are within?" The fathers, the children and the servants who are exhorted by him "are within," being members of the organized church. None but the saints can possibly receive the nurture of the Lord. Of course you will also say that only those who are born of God can receive spiritual food. It does seem to me that if the apostle is here speaking to fathers of their children who were not subjects of grace, he would not have used the expression, "nurture and admonition of the Lord." I cannot believe that the apostle is here exhorting purely natural children. The address in the opening of the epistle would forbid such a thought or application.

The expression, "One that ruleth well his own house, having his children in subjection with all gravity," and, "Ruling their children and their own houses well," has no allusion to teaching them the statutes of the Lord, but simply preserving order in their houses; and the apostle speaks of it in distinction from taking care of and maintaining order in the church; that if a father cannot or does not rule in such a manner in his own house or family as to command their respect and obedience, he is not fit to be a bishop or pastor in the church. The fathers in the flesh should correct their children, and the children should give them reverence. In 1 Timothy v. 8, the apostle is speaking only of such provision as an infidel makes for his family, which are purely natural things, such as food and raiment. "But if any provide not for his own, and specially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel." An infidel will do that, and "the faith" requires it of the saints.

I do object to the literal application that is sometimes made of the proverb, "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it." Solomon does not say that he will not be likely to depart from it, or not likely to desire anything else. The proverbs of Solomon, in their proper application, will never fail. They are not like the proverbs of other men, or their general rules, of which we say, "There are exceptions." The proverb was not even true in Solomon's case; for, with all his wisdom, and all the good training he had received from his youth up, when he was old he departed from the right way, and outlandish women caused him to sin. I have read of one child that was trained up in the way he should go, and never departed from it. That child was Jesus of Nazareth.

Now I am surprised at your reference to Psalm lv. 23, "Bloody and deceitful men shall not live out half their days." The Scriptures do not deal with things "in the main." This declaration of David is not a literal truth. Even common observation in the world of mankind disproves it. Some of the most deceitful and bloody men of the world have lived to old age. It is true in the church, and will never fail there. A brother that is seeking the downfall of a brother, plotting his death to the privileges of the church and the fellowship of the church, will be found deceitful and bloody, and will eventually lose his own life or standing in the church, and in this sense not live out half his days. "With what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again." That is Scripture that was written for the learning and admonition of the saints, and for none others.

While I may not be able to prove to you from the Bible that fleshly Israel read the Scriptures to their children, instead of placing them in their hands to read for themselves indiscriminately, yet it seems to me evidently true, from the fact that copies were few and expensive, and also the sacredness in which they were held. It is not likely that they would have been read publicly to the people as much as they were, according to the record, if they were in common use by the people. There is a true proverb in the world, that familiarity breeds contempt. It is a lamentable fact that since the Bible has become a common book for the young to read, and to commit to memory, that same familiarity with it has bred a lack of reverence for it as the written word of God, and the name of God and Christ are used upon the lips with no more reverence or sacredness than household words. It was not so with the carnal Jews in the times of greatest degeneracy.

It is also a lamentable fact that the common newspapers of this age are so filled with accounts of crime, unchaste advertisements, &c., that a person of modesty is afraid to read anything from them aloud, unless they have first read it to themselves. The truth is, they are not fit, many of them, to be placed in the hands of a child, or scarcely an adult. And not only so, but a large portion of the books, including those used in the schools, contain much that is of a religious character, and almost invariably opposed to the truth of God. If children are sent to the schools, they are often compelled to listen to an "opening prayer," and to sing words that are equally unsound, not to speak of the often addresses of teachers that are calculated to poison their minds and lead them to hate the truth of that Bible which the teachers profess to reverence. Certain I am that nothing short of almighty power can counteract the poison. Old Baptist parents may tell their children what they themselves believe, to a certain extent, and what they understand the Bible to teach; yet this will not counteract the poison; for the doctrine is "hard sayings," yea, "foolishness," to the natural mind, being only spiritually discerned.

While it is natural that we should desire large congregations when the word of truth is ministered publicly, yet we know that only the spiritual ones are really profited and hear the gospel. How troubled the "few" sometimes are, because the congregations are small. But I know we have present all the Lord designs shall be there. God in his providence can direct the steps of his people to the places of truth, and will do so if it is his purpose and for his glory. O that we could be quiet, and know that he is God, doing all his pleasure.

I have not disputed or doubted that Jesus was preached in the types and in the law. But who were benefited by that preaching? Only those who had faith, being born of God. "But the word preached did not profit them, not being mixed with faith in them that heard it."—Heb. iv. 2. Is the effect any different now? Certainly not. Let me call your attention to your quotation from 1 Corinthians x. 1-12. You say, "I leave those Scriptures to do their own teaching." Let us see what they teach, and whether I deny their substance. The apostle is calling attention to the shadows of the law, and treats of them as shadows, and in following them up comes to the substance that cast the shadows. Did you ever know a shadow to have substance? He speaks of the typical Israel being baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea, when they left Egypt, and were forever separated from Egyptian dominion. This shadowed forth the deliverance of spiritual Israel from the bondage of the law, being dead to the law by the body of Christ, to whom we are married, and to whom alone we owe allegiance. He then speaks of all the Israelites in the type, who were thus redeemed from Egypt, eating of the same spiritual meat, and drinking of the same spiritual drink, and drinking of the spiritual rock that followed them. And yet the manna, the water and the rock were not spiritual, but natural. When he says, "And that rock was Christ," he simply means that in the spiritual application of the shadow or type, that rock was Christ. It is very probable that the same rock out of which the water issued that followed them in their pilgrimage in the wilderness, is yet there. If it is, we would not regard it as Christ. It was Christ in a figure. But with many who drank the water from that rock, and did eat of the manna (also a type of Christ, the bread from heaven), God was not well pleased; for they rebelled against God, and became idolaters, and God overthrew them in the wilderness. "Now all these things happened unto them for examples [or, as the margin reads, types]; and they are written for our [spiritual Israelites] admonition, upon whom the ends of the world are come." Here is nurture and admonition of the Lord, for his spiritual people, who alone can receive the nurture of the Lord.

If your views of the law are correct, I am very much in the dark. You say that the law given to Israel may be divided into three classes, and that two of those classes are abolished, while the remaining one class is still in force. I am not certain where you got that idea, but I am persuaded that you did not find it in the Scriptures of truth. It has been very largely imported into this country, and is generally received by those who have "the vail upon their hearts." The apostle speaks of "the ministration of death, written and engraven in stones," the "tables of the law," delivered unto Moses by God. I have called your attention to the words of the Savior, referring to the "decalsogue," "Hear, O Israel." Jesus came to fulfill this law (not parts of it), and did fulfill it; and the righteousness of the law is fulfilled in (not by) his members, when they have the love of God shed abroad in their hearts by the Holy Ghost, which is given unto them. This is not the law that was given to Adam in the garden, by the transgression of which he involved all his posterity in sin and death; for the apostle tells us that the law from Sinai was added, and that there was a limited time for it to serve, and that was until the seed should come to whom the promise was made. That seed is Christ. "Wherefore," he says, "the law was our schoolmaster unto Christ," or until Christ came. The law was not our schoolmaster to bring us to Christ, as the supplied words make the apostle say. He did not so say; for that is contrary to his argument here. The law does not bring any one to Christ. It is a ministration of death. The Sinai law was given alone to Israel, in a preceptive form: the spirit of it, in promises, not precepts, is fulfilled in the spiritual Israel by God, "Thou shalt love," &c. By the prophet Ezekiel the Lord says, "I will take away the stony heart out of your flesh." What is that stony heart, if it is not that law written on tables of stone, which was the heart of that national people? "And I will give you a heart of flesh." What is this heart of flesh, if it is not Jesus, God manifest in the flesh? He is the heart of spiritual Israel. Out of this heart are the issues of spiritual life to the saints. The old heart is taken away, and the new heart given them. You ask, "Is the gospel erected upon the ruins of the law?" If the taking away of the law, and the giving of Jesus instead thereof, is erecting the gospel on the ruins of the law, of course I should have to answer your question in the affirmative; but I would not use your expression. "Is the law then against the promises? God forbid." "Do we then make void the law through faith? God forbid: yea, we establish the law." I understand the apostle to use the word faith here for the gospel, which is a system of faith.

When God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, shines in the heart of his people, by that light they are made to see and feel their vileness and depravity, and their utter inability to put away their sins; for their natural heart and spirit are both corrupt. By the law or will of God written in their heart is the knowledge that they are sinners. They may never have read or heard of the ten commandments, nor had any of their words applied to them in their sense of condemnation. Before Jesus is revealed to them as their Savior, if they read the Bible they will feel that the whole Scriptures condemn them. They cannot as yet know or believe that there is no condemnation to them; yet it is as true then as it will be when it is made known to them by the revelation of Jesus, that their sins were atoned for more than eighteen hundred years ago, when they were redeemed from the curse and dominion of the law.

But I am making this reply longer than I intended, and will add no more. You speak about the readers being possibly biased by my words. I hope they will without bias consider what we both have written, and as wise ones judge what we say, and be edified thereby.

Affectionately your brother,

STATE ROAD, Del., March, 1889.

BRETHREN BEEBE:—I have felt of late years in what writing I did to avoid discussion, or what would even have that appearance, with my brethren. Debate but seldom throws any light on the points debated, and the spirit and style of debate is not relished by all, or even most, of your readers. As I have felt to object to long continued discussions on the part of others, I have of course felt to avoid taking part in them myself. I cannot help nor control my understanding of the Scriptures; and as I understand them to be the truth, and the whole truth, so I also understand all Scripture to harmonize. I sometimes feel called upon to remind writers and readers of what the Scriptures do say, where they have (inadvertently perhaps) drifted into conflict with them. I have on this account been sometimes rather tartly dealt with; but I trust I feel a sort of jealousy for the truth, as also for all those who write in defense of it. In the issue of the SIGNS that has just come to hand, I find comments upon a passage that clash with my understanding of that passage, and consequently with what I understand the Scriptures to teach generally. It is editorial, and at this I both wonder and regret, because I have so very seldom found myself at variance with the editors on any subject. The article referred to is written as a comment on the language of the inspired prophet, Lam. iii. 38, "Out of the mouth of the Most High proceedeth not evil and good?" This is in connection with several sayings of like import, and they all are evidently designed to comfort the people of God under their afflictions. As they all bear more or less on the subject in hand, I will quote some of them. "But though he cause grief, yet will he have compassion according to the multitude of his mercies. For he doth not willingly afflict nor grieve the children of men. To crush under his feet all the prisoners of the earth; to turn aside the right of a man before the face of the Most High; to subvert a man in his cause, the Lord approveth not."—Lam. iii. 32-36. All these sentences are in harmony with the one first cited, and go to show that even seeming evils and afflictions are designed for our profit, and are directed and controlled "according to the multitude of his mercies." There is no evil or wrong in his government, nor any evil proceeding out of his mouth. It will be observed by all attentive readers that the word evil is used in the Bible in a multitude of instances; in relation to wars, calamities, and all sorts of afflictions. As in 2 Chronicles xxxiv., "Behold I will bring evil upon this place and the inhabitants thereof." And again, "Thou shalt be gathered to thy grave in peace; neither shall thine eyes see all the evil that I will bring upon this place." I will not multiply quotations. This use of the term abounds throughout the Old Testament Scriptures. Of course it is important to notice the distinction between this sense of the term, and the sense when the kings of Israel were said to do evil in the sight of the Lord. It is said also that the heart of the sons of men is fully set in them to do evil. In this sense the word of the Lord is pure, and no evil proceedeth out of his mouth. In the other sense, we find Job challenging thus, "Shall we receive good at the hand of God, and shall we not receive evil?"

The present state is a state of discipline and trials; and he hath set the day of adversity over against the day of prosperity, but with the same faithful care of his people and regard for their good in the one case as the other. We find Abraham on one occasion using this form of challenge, thus, "Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?" I do not regard either of these expressions as mere inquiries, or as expressing doubt, but so far from that as to be the strongest form of assertion known to our language. In the sense in which the term evil is applied to wicked men, as, "evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse," I beg leave to indorse the declaration of the prophet, that "Out of the mouth of the Most High proceedeth not evil and good." Moses says, "A God of truth, and without iniquity, just and right is he." That the Lord creates, directs and governs all providential events, and that he rules among the nations and in the midst of his enemies, is not questioned nor disputed. In the passage, "Is there an evil in the city," &c., it is evident, I think, beyond question, that a calamity of some kind is spoken of. It is a comfort to understand that all temporal evils that we encounter are subject to the control and government of Jehovah. There is an evil spirit, or spirit of evil, in the world; corrupt, impure, and abominably wicked: the spirit that now works in the children of disobedience. And in so far as it has ever been hidden, it shall be revealed, the mystery of iniquity, that exalteth and opposeth itself against God; whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth, and destroy with the brightness of his coming. It does not devolve upon us to find out just when and where this spirit originated. We know when it entered into the world.

The four living creatures that were round about the throne cried, "Holy, holy, holy," every time. And to this do all the prophets witness, and they do not rest nor change their voice day nor night. We do well to join in the same ascriptions. I have met with arguments sometimes like this, that as God was under no law, it would not be wrong in him to do what would be wrong in itself or in his creatures. Such arguments I have no disposition to deal with. The law of God is perfect, because it is a transcript of himself, and of his infinite and changeless perfections. He cannot deny himself.

I will submit the above. We cannot any of us do anything against the truth. That will stand, whatever becomes of us.

In love and fellowship,
E. RITTENHOUSE.

QUERIES OF ELDER H. J. REDD.

WHILE feeling that it would have been more desirable for our esteemed brother to have given us the benefit of his own views on the texts submitted for our consideration in his letter on page 59 of our issue for February 20, we are willing to comply with his wish so far as it is in our power to present views consistent with the truth as it is revealed in the Scriptures and in the experience of the saints. It must be understood, however, that we claim no ability to instruct our brother or any minister of Christ further than in an interchange of ideas all may be mutually profited.

In Hebrews v. 9, it is written of our Lord that "being made perfect, he became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him." It is needless to remind those who know the power of God that there is no possibility that the salvation of which he is the author shall fail to "save them to the uttermost that come unto God by him, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them."—Heb. vii. 25. Since in the eternal purpose of God the subjects of his electing love were chosen in Christ "before the foundation of the world," and "preserved in Jesus Christ" before they were called by his grace, it is plain that in that sense they are saved by the "eternal salvation" which is thus revealed in Jesus, who is the author and finisher of the faith of his people. Of the truth that all the chosen people of God are thus securely kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation, it is needless to furnish proof to our brother. Without personal assurance of this fundamental point no saint could have any hope for acceptance with God.

In regard to the expression "time salvation," it is not so clear just what is meant, since the inspired Scriptures have not explained that phrase. We can only speak of it as it appears to our understanding. When the expression has been used in our hearing it has conveyed to us the meaning of the preservation of the saints in their temporal sojourn here on earth. In this sense we cannot understand how this salvation can be left out of the eternal salvation which is in Christ Jesus. When the infinite love of God purposed the eternal salvation of his chosen people, his wisdom ordained every incident in the execution of that purpose of love. Finite reason is lost in the effort to grasp the development of that purpose even in the narrow limits of time, much less can any created intelligence comprehend the eternal counsel of the will of God. Well does Paul exclaim, "O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! how unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out! For who hath known the mind of the Lord? or who hath been his counsellor? Or who hath first given to him, and it shall be recompensed unto him again? For of him, and through him, and to him, are all things: to whom be glory forever. Amen."—Rom. xi. 33-36. It is inconsistent to claim confidence in the eternal salvation of the saints, while questioning the certainty of the incidents in time through which that eternal purpose of love and mercy shall be brought into manifestation. "He that spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how shall he not with him also freely give us all things?" There is an inclination to infidelity in the murmuring which arises in the thoughts of the saints when they are called to encounter what they consider adverse incidents in their pilgrimage here in time. Left to themselves they would yield to the suggestion of the tempter, and conclude that their hope was a worthless delusion; but they are saved from sinking into despair by the same power of divine grace which is gloriously displayed in their eternal salvation. This may be called "time salvation," since it is experienced in the temporal conflicts of the saints. It is not separate from their salvation from sin, which is in Christ, but is a part of that salvation.

In regard to the distinction "between the gospel itself and the proclamation of that gospel," it seems that there is a very manifest difference. As it appears to our view it might be illustrated by the difference between a substantial feast and the proclamation that such a feast was prepared. The starving might hear the proclamation announcing the rich provision as ready for their relief, and yet their hunger would remain; but when they were enabled to partake of the feast then they would receive the nourishment which was required for their comfort and sustenance. The gospel of Christ is itself the power of God unto salvation to every one that believes; but the proclamation of that gospel is often even to the believer an empty sound. It is sometimes the case that by the same sermon one hearer is fed and comforted, while another may have heard only the words of the preacher without receiving any spiritual profit. The gospel was proclaimed, but it came to the one "in demonstration of the Spirit and of power," while to the other who heard the same words there was no gospel enjoyment found in them. The inspired Scriptures testify of Jesus, but it is only as the Spirit of truth shall take of their testimony and show it unto his saints that they are able to receive it as the gospel of the grace of God. The whole gospel is embraced in the very name of Jesus; but none can see that joyful truth without the revelation of the Spirit through the faith of Jesus Christ. Since God has hidden these "good tidings of great joy" from the wise and prudent, no proclamation by men or angels can show them to the natural man. The voice of God alone can deliver from the power of darkness those who were by nature the children of wrath, even as others, and can translate them into the kingdom of his dear Son. That voice is called The Word of God, and is the glorious gospel of Christ. The power of that eternal Word has never been delegated to any created being. In that sense there has never been any proclamation of the gospel except by the great Preacher who says, "The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me, because the Lord hath anointed me to preach good tidings to the meek."—Isa. lxi. 1. So David says, "The Lord gave the word; great was the company of them that published it."—Psa. lxxviii. 11. Every one who has heard the word of the Lord in his own heart, will see the contrast between the omnipotence of that word and the weakness in which the most gifted servant of God can proclaim it. The expressions cited from Romans x. 16, and ii. 8, cannot be understood as contradicting this truth which is clearly taught in the Scriptures and in the experience of the saints. The gospel is the truth; and the revealed truth of God in the experience of his saints is the gospel. But in the expressions which speak of disobedience to the gospel and to the truth, the connection shows that the saints are reprov'd for disobedience to the commandments of their Lord. While it is true that in nature the death penalty is the extreme limit of just retribution, to the saints there is "much sorer punishment" visited upon "him who hath trodden under foot the Son of God, and hath counted the blood of the covenant, wherewith he was sanctified, an unholy thing, and hath done despite unto the Spirit of grace." None can know anything of this sorer punishment in any way but by personal experience. It is written in the immediately following context, "For we know him that hath said, Vengeance belongeth unto me, I will recompense, saith the Lord. And again, The Lord shall judge his people. It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God."—Heb. x. 29-31. David says to the Lord, "Thou hast delivered my soul from the lowest hell." And again, "Deep calleth unto deep at the noise of thy waterspouts; all thy waves and thy billows have gone over me."—Psa. lxxxvi. 13; xlii. 7. It is generally understood that while David in these expressions was telling his own personal experience, the Spirit of Christ moved him also to declare beforehand the sufferings of Christ in bearing the sins of his people in his own body. We see no connection between the just dealing of God with his own redeemed people and "the everlasting damnation of the wicked." The law of sin and death has no dominion over the saints who have been made free from it by the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus.—Rom. viii. 2. To them there is no death which can separate them from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord. Yet there is a sense in which they are liable to die. Paul says to them who are "beloved of God, called to be saints," in this immediate connection, "If ye live after the flesh, ye shall die; but if ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live."—Rom. viii. 13. Evidently this is fulfilled in the present experience of the saints. We cannot conceive of any sense in which they who have not the Spirit can be addressed in such language. Every saint who has felt the burden of sin in his members, must know experimentally what is meant by this death. In the typical dispensation given by Moses, the Gentile nations were never reprov'd for violating the covenant which God gave to the nation of Israel; in the antitype, the law of Christ is limited in its application to the subjects of his kingdom, who are all identified by the peculiar mark that they love him. To them the hiding of his face is death; and they know that in his presence is fullness of joy, and at his right hand are pleasures forevermore.—Psa. xvi. 11. This joy and these pleasures are life to the saints; while the darkness of the hiding of the presence of the Lord is to them more painful than mere physical death. Only they who are the subjects of grace can do despite unto the Spirit of grace; and all such "are sanctified by God the Father, and preserved in Jesus Christ, and called." The punishment of the disobedient with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power, is not the cutting off from eternal life of such disobedient ones. The eternal life of every one who is saved in the redemption that is in Christ is securely hid with Christ in God; their obedience has no more to do with obtaining or preserving that life than their sinful acts. The "everlasting destruction" is experienced in their present state while they "obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ." The term "everlasting" is always used in the sense appropriate to the subject to which it is applied. In Genesis xvii. 8, the possession of the land of Canaan is called everlasting. It is certain that this is not the same in meaning with the application of the same word to our God. Many other illustrations will doubtlessly occur to our brother in recalling the frequent use of this word in the Scriptures. When the darkness of self-condemnation oppresses the afflicted saint he does not need the passing of years to make him realize everlasting distress. It may be that the clock does not indicate the passage of an hour, yet the suffering one has endured all the agony of everlasting misery. Neither the suffering nor the joy of the saints can be measured by natural time.

In regard to proving "the doctrine of the everlasting damnation of the wicked," it does not seem to our view to be any part of the preaching of the gospel of salvation to prove the condemnation of the guilty world. It is not probable that the united efforts of the apostles could have satisfied Saul that he was a child of wrath when he was persecuting the saints; but one word from our Lord was sufficient to carry conviction to his heart. If any sinner needs to be convinced by argument that he is already condemned, it will not show him his true condition though the whole volume of Scripture were cited. John the Baptist says, "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life; and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him."—John iii. 36. Every subject of divine instruction is satisfied of his lost condition before he is enabled to hope in the salvation of God. With the world of sinners dead in sin there is no more profit in argument, than in attempting to make the carcasses in a cemetery conscious that they are destitute of natural life. The universal reign of death is positive proof that all are children of wrath. The revelation of salvation by the grace of God in Christ Jesus is the only hope of any one of the lost and ruined race of Adam.

These brief remarks are submitted to the consideration of our esteemed brother, with the hope that they may be satisfactory to him; and we would be gratified to receive from him a further elucidation of the subjects embraced in his queries.

SOLOMON'S TEMPLE SPIRITUALIZED.

BY JOHN BUNYAN.

CHAPTER XLVI.

Of the golden tongs belonging to the Temple.

THERE were also tongs of gold used in the temple of old.—1 Kings vii. 49.

The tongs were used about the altar, to order the fire there. They were also used about the candlesticks, and are therefore called his tongs. Perhaps there were tongs for both these services; but of that the word is silent.

But what were they used about the candlestick to do? I answer, To take holy fire from off the altar, to light the lamps withal. For the fire of the temple was holy fire, such as at first was kindled from heaven, and when kindled, maintained by the priests, and of that the lamps were lighted.—Lev. ix. 24; 2 Chron. vii. 1. Nor was there, upon pain of death, any other fire to be used there.—Lev. x. 1.

These tongs, therefore, were used to take fire from off the altar, to light the lamps and candlesticks withal. To trim the lights and dress the lamps was Aaron's work day by day.—Ex. xl. 24, 25; Lev. xxiv. 2, 3; Num. viii. 3. "He shall light and order the lamps upon the pure candlestick before the Lord. And Aaron did so: he lighted the seven lamps thereof, as the Lord commanded Moses."

What is a lamp or candlestick to us, if there be no light thereon? And how lighted without fire? And how shall we take up coals to light the lamps if we have no tongs prepared for that purpose?

With these tongs fire was also taken from off the altar and put into the censers to burn sweet incense with before the Lord.

The tongs then were of great use in the temple of the Lord. But what were they a type of?

The altar was a type of Christ, the fire a type of the Holy Ghost, and the tongs a type of that holy hand of God's grace by which the coals, or several dispensations and gifts of the Holy Ghost, are taken and given to the church and her members, for her work and profit in this world.

Tongs, we know, are used instead of fingers. Wherefore Aaron's golden tongs were a type of Christ's golden fingers.—Song v. 14. Isaiah saith that one of the seraphim flew to him with a live coal in his hand, which he had taken with the tongs from off the altar. Here the type and anti-type, to wit, tongs and hands, are put together.—Isaiah vi. But the prophet Ezekiel, treating of like matters, quite waves the type, the tongs, and speaks only of this holy hand. "And he spake to the man clothed with linen, and said, Go in between the wheels, even under the cherub [where the mercy-seat stood, where God dwelt.—Ex. ii.; Psal. lxxx. 1], and fill thine hand with coals of fire between the cherubim."—Ezek. x. 2.

Thus you see our golden tongs are now turned into a golden hand—into the golden hand of the man clothed with linen, which is Jesus Christ, who at his ascension received of God the Father the Spirit in all fullness, to give, as his divine wisdom knew was best, the several coals or dispensations thereof unto his church, for her praise and her edification.—Matt. iii. 11; Acts ii.

It is by this hand also that this holy fire is put into our censers. It is this hand also that takes this coal, therewith to touch the lips of ministers, that their words may warm like fire. And it is by this hand that the Spirit is given to the churches as returns of their holy prayers.—Luke xi. 1, 2; Rom. viii. 26; Rev. viii. 5.

It was convenient that fire in the temple should be disposed of by golden tongs, but the Holy Ghost by the golden hand of Christ's grace; for that can wittingly dispose of it, according as men and things are placed, and to do and be done in the churches. Wherefore he adds, "And one cherub stretched forth his hand from between the cherubim unto the fire that was between the cherubim, and took thereof, and put it into the hands of him that was clothed with linen, who took it and went out."—Ezek. x. 7.

By this hand then, by this man's hand, the coals of the altar are disposed of, both to the lamps, the candlesticks, the censers, and the lips of ministers, according to his own good pleasure. And of all this were the tongs in the temple a type.

CHAPTER XLVII.

Of the altar of incense in the Temple.

THE altar of incense was made first for the tabernacle, and that of shittim wood; but it was made for the temple of cedar; and it was to be set before the vail, that is, by the ark of the testimony, before the mercy-seat, that is, at the entering of the holiest, but not within. And the priest was to approach it every morning, which as to the holiest he might not do. Besides, when he went in to make an atonement, he was to take fire from off that altar, to burn his incense within the holy place.—Ex. xxx. 4-11; Lev. xvi. 18.

It was called the golden altar, because it was overlaid with pure gold. This altar was not for burnt offering, as the brazen altar was, nor for the meat offering, nor for the drink offering, but to burn incense thereon; which sweet incense was a type of the grace of prayer.—Psalm cxli. 2.

Incense, or that called incense here, was not a simple, but a compound, made up of sweet spices, called stacte, onycha and galbanum. These three may answer to prayer, supplication and intercession.—Ex. xxx. 34-37; xxxvii. 29; 1 Tim. ii. 1.

This incense was to be kindled every morning, to show how Jesus Christ continueth interceding for us; and also that all true praise to God is by the work, the renewed work, of the Holy Ghost upon our hearts.—Rom. viii. 26.

Incense, as you see, was made of sweet spices, such as were gummy, and so apt to burn with a smoke, to show that not cold and flat, but hot and fervent, is the prayer that flows from the spirit of faith and grace.—Zech. xii. 10; Jer. v. 16.

The smoke of this incense was very sweet and savory, like pleasant perfume, to show how delightful and acceptable the very sound of right prayer is unto the living God, because it comes from a broken heart.—Psa. li. 17; Song ii. 14.

This incense was to be offered upon the golden altar, to show that no prayer is accepted but what is directed to God in the name of his holy and blessed Son, our Savior.—1 Peter ii. 5; Heb. xiii. 15.

They were commanded to burn incense every morning upon this altar to show that God is never weary of the godly prayer of his people. It also sheweth that we need every day to go to God for fresh supplies of grace to carry us through this evil world.

This altar, though it stood without the vail, to teach us to live by faith, and to make use of the name of Christ, as we find it recorded in the first temple, yet was placed so nigh unto the holiest that the smell of the smoke might go in thither, to show that it is no distance of place that can keep the voice of true prayer from our God, the God of heaven, but that he will be taken with what we ask for according to his word.

It stood, I say, near the vail, near the holiest; and he that burnt incense there did make his approach to God. Hence the psalmist, when he spoke of praying, said, "It is good for me to draw nigh unto God."—Psa. lxxiii. 20; Heb. x. 22.

This altar thus placed did front the ark within the vail, to put us in mind that the law is kept therein from hurting us. Let us know also that the mercy-seat is above, upon the ark, and that God doth sit thereon with pardon in his hand. O what speaking things are types, shadows and parables, have we but eyes to see and ears to hear!

He that did approach aright the altar with incense of old (and there he did so when he approached it by Aaron, his high priest), pleased God. How much more shall we have both person and prayers accepted, and a grant of what we need, if indeed we come as we should to God by Jesus Christ. But take heed that you approach not to a wrong altar. Take heed also that you come not with strange fire; for these are dangerous things, and cause the worshipers to miss what they would enjoy. But more of this in the next particular.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS:—I have just received a telegram stating that Elder Wm. A. Campbell, of Cammal, Pa., is dead. D. M. VAIL.

WAVERLY, N. Y., March 14, 1889.

DIED—In North Berwick, Maine, Dec. 7th, 1888, Mr. Wm. Roberts, aged nearly eighty-four years.

He had been very feeble for a number of years, but kept around most of the time. The night before he died he retired as well as usual. In the morning his son went to him and found him asleep, and soon after that he was found dead in his bed. He was a fine man, and gave good evidence that he was a child of God, and did not fellowship any of the new things which men have got up in their religious worship in these last days; therefore his son called on me to preach at his funeral. He has left three children to mourn.

ALSO,

In Sanford, Maine, Jan. 27th, 1889, Miss Mary Worster, aged about seventy years.

She had a shock about one year before she died, which caused her to suffer beyond description. She never made an open profession of a hope in Christ, but was a fine woman, respected by all that became acquainted with her. She has left a good record behind. Two brothers and one or more sisters are left to mourn her departure.

ALSO,

In Sanford, Maine, Jan. 30th, 1889, Mrs. Almona Stiles, aged forty-four years.

She gave good evidence that she was a child of God, and was a firm Old School Baptist in belief, but never united with the church. She has left one daughter, two brothers and five sisters to mourn their loss.

ALSO,

In North Berwick, Maine, Feb. 19th, 1889, Mr. Allen Greenough, aged sixty two years.

He died with consumption. He was not a member of our church, but was with us in belief, having no fellowship with those who believe that their eternal salvation depends upon what man can do. He was a fine man, and gave good evidence that he had been born again, and did see the kingdom of God, and seemed to be at home when at our meetings. He has left a sorrowing wife, three children, an aged mother, and six brothers and sisters to mourn.

ALSO,

In Sanford, Maine, Feb. 20th, 1889, Mr.

and Mrs. Frank Blanchard's babe, aged about six months.

The father and mother took it out to ride a short distance to have its picture taken, but it died in its mother's arms soon after they left home. It was their only child, and it was sad for them to part with it.

I preached at all the above funerals.
WM. QUINT.

NORTH BERWICK, Maine.

SISTER Permelia Burnett was the daughter of George and Elizabeth Herndon, and was born in December, 1806, and died Nov. 29th, 1888.

Her father was a soldier in the Revolutionary War, a pioneer settler of Logan Co., Ky., and a devout member of the Primitive Baptist Church. Her life was not that of flowery ease, unalloyed happiness and unclouded brightness; but being reared in pioneer life, her childhood was deprived of many of the social and educational advantages of the present day, and was full of toilsome labor; yet being physically strong and mentally vigorous, and having a remarkably retentive memory, she entered womanhood with a hale body and a well-stored mind, and was thus well prepared to face the stern duties of after life. She married Richard Burnett, and had eight children, and was then left a widow, with all the responsibility of rearing and providing for them. The death angel came, and from her loving embrace relentlessly snatched one of the loved ones God had given. While this child lay sick and dying she received her first deep and lasting impressions of the reign of grace in behalf of sinners. She then and there realized the futility of a conditional plan of salvation; "for," said she, "my child has not the mental power to understand the conditions, nor the will power to voluntarily comply therewith, nor the physical strength to go forward and receive the administration of ordinances contained in the conditional plan; hence, if conditions be true, my child is lost. But I cannot believe that my loved one is lost; for Jesus took a little child in his arms and blessed it, and said (to the great consolation of parents), 'Suffer little children to come unto me; for of such is the kingdom of heaven.' Hence I believe that my child is saved—saved from the awful consequences of sin, and translated into the kingdom of love and joy and peace." But, turning to herself, she asked, "What more can I do than my babe? for Jesus also says, 'Except ye be converted [be changed from self-reliance and self-righteousness], and become as a little child, ye cannot enter the kingdom of God.'"

Feeling the great necessity of grace in behalf of sinners, and realizing that she was a sinner, and that nothing but the blood (the life) of Jesus, graciously bestowed upon her, could cleanse her from all sin, she united with the Primitive Baptists in the troublous times of 1835; and from that time till her death (fifty-three years) she was a consistent and devoted member. She was one of the few who take the Bible for their guide, and drew strong consolation from its precious promises. Under the sad misfortune of widowhood, under the great responsibility of rearing and educating her family, amid all the dark and sore tribulations through which God called her to pass during her long and checkered life, she was never heard to murmur or complain against God's wise though dark dispensations over her. She believed that all things would work together for good to her; hence she realized great comfort from the hope that, when she was done here, she would receive an abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom of God. Being careful to maintain good works, she stretched out her hand to the poor; yea, she reached out her hands to the needy. She felt assured that all the tribulations and misfortunes, all the tribulations and bereavements, all the sickness and sorrow, incident to this life, could not separate her from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus. By her exemplary life, her orderly walk and godly conversation, she has left in the memory of her friends and loved ones a record more enduring than any material structure that can be reared to her name and memory. Finally, it can well be said of her, in the language of poesy,

"Pale, withered hands, that more than fourscore years
Had wrought for others—soothed the heart of tears,
Rocked children's cradles, eased the fever's smart,
Dropped balm of love in many an aching heart—
Now, stirless, folded, like wan rose leaves pressed,
Above the snow and silence of her breast,
In mute appeal they tell of labors done,
And well-earned rest, which came at set of sun."

T. C. HERNDON.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date, this date denotes the time at which your subscription expires, and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

HEAVENLY DESIRES.

SPIRIT divine, assist my lays,
While I attempt to sing the praise
Of him who died upon the tree,
That he might set his people free.

How shall a feeble worm begin,
With heart and lips defiled by sin,
Whose thoughts, unless impressed by thee,
Like a deceitful bow will be?

No thanks to me, most holy Lord,
That I still hang upon thy Word;
My heart, a sink of every ill,
Would follow after evil still.

I'm kept by thee, my gracious Guide,
Though ills beset on every side;
For 'tis by thy restraining power
None can my feeble soul devour.

O that my heart in love would glow,
Mine eyes with tears would overflow,
While I could sink before thy feet,
Thy love and mercy to repeat.

But ah! my heart's a barren waste,
Where no good thing can e'er be raised,
Where hope would die if 'twere not fed
By thee, who art the living Bread.

Then shall I silent keep my tongue
Because but feeble is my song?
No; though my love may feeble be,
I'll praise thy love so great to me.

I come in thy prevailing name;
Dear Lord, accept me as I am;
Purged by thy blood I shall appear
Before thy throne exceeding fair.

PSALM CXXXIX. 23.

BEFORE thy cross, dear Lord, I fall;
Out of the depths to thee I call;
Thou art my Hope, my Help, my All.

Search, search my heart, surcharged with woe,
Till all its idols it forego,
And thee, thee only, learn to know.

A thorny path with flints bespread,
With bleeding feet I fearless tread,
For thy dear hand upholds my head.

O, dearest Lord! thy tender eye
Rebukes, yet pities my lone cry,
When staggering 'neath my cross I lie.

The broken cisterns, who shall count,
The heart will fill at earth's dark fount,
Ere upward unto God it mount.

Poor human heart, with human needs!
How many are its broken reeds,
Grasped till the hand in torture bleeds!
How many gourds have felt the blight!
How many stars have lost their light!
How many suns gone down in night!

All, all are gone, like barques at sea,
Lost in the dread immensity!
And now I stand alone with thee.

All prostrate at thy feet I kneel,
For thou canst all our sorrows feel,
And thy dear hand our wounds can heal.

No more I mark the dreary road
My bleeding feet so long have trod,
Since it doth lead to thee, my God.

CORRESPONDENCE.

ELDER WILLIAM J. PURINGTON—DEAR BROTHER:—Will you please give your views through the SIGNS on Romans, fifth chapter and fourteenth verse, and favor a little one?

GEORGETOWN, Ky., Feb. 28, 1889.

REPLY.

THE Scripture to which my attention is called reads thus, "Nevertheless death reigned from Adam to Moses, even over them that had not sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression, who is the figure of him that was to come."

The inspired apostle began the epistle to the Romans by prefixing his name, title and designation; for said he, "Paul, a servant of Jesus Christ, called (to be) an apostle, separated unto the gospel of God, (which he had promised afore by his prophets in the holy Scriptures), concerning his Son Jesus Christ our Lord, which was made of the seed of David according to the flesh, and declared (to be) the Son of God with power, according to the Spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead." The prefatory address ends with the fifteenth verse. Then he announces in brief but positive terms the grand, glorious and soul-cheering subject which embraces and occupies the first five chapters of this epistle, viz., the doctrine of the justification of the redeemed church of our God. He tells us in plain, unequivocal language his feelings concerning the momentous matter; for he says, "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ; for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth [not if you will believe], to the Jew first, and also to the Greek." That system which pleases carnal religionists, or merely worldlings, and in which there is nothing which appears to them like "foolishness," cannot be the gospel of which Paul affirmed he was not ashamed. And he who knew what is in man, solemnly and repeatedly warned his disciples against being ashamed, enforcing his admonitions by the most awful sanction, saying upon one occasion, "For whosoever shall be ashamed of me and of my words, of him shall the Son of man be ashamed when he shall come in his own glory, and in his Father's, and of his holy angels." What the apostle declared in the beginning of this epistle applies in every age, as well as that in which Christ was first preached. And while there is nothing in reality in the gospel to cause shame, yet there is something in it which is not acceptable amongst men as a body; but, on the contrary, it is generally hated and despised among men. Because the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; for they are foolishness unto him. They run counter to his carnal ideas of independence, and abase as in the dust all his self-reliance, or as he calls it, "free agency," which is a highly absurd expression; for whoever is an agent is not free. And the word agent is not in the Bible. And such being the fact, the things of the Spirit, when faithfully set forth, awaken all the enmity of the carnal mind. No other religion is so offensive to the pride of man; no other system awakens shame in the minds of its votaries; and yet every false system, though sustained in appearance by learning and eloquence, contains more or less of what is positively absurd, irrational and disgraceful.

Having made these general remarks as the introduction, I will now come to the text of "a little one," as soon as the chain of connection in the Scripture will bring us to the subject; for I am fully convinced in my mind why that Scripture has been selected; and by the grace of God sustaining me, I intend to elaborate that subject in accordance with the divine declarations of the Scriptures.

The place for us now to consult is Genesis (Hebrew, beginning); for there we find the record as to man's origin. "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth." In these ten words, embracing forty-four letters, is contained that which all the scientists who have ever lived on earth have not been able to fathom, nor all the openly avowed atheists have been able to overthrow. It is well for us to ever bear in mind that the word create is from the Hebrew word bara, to call into existence. Then, after creation, formation took place, which is from the word yatsar, to fashion, form, &c. And the last formation was the creature man, not a son of God. "And God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness," &c. And in the next, or second, chapter of Genesis, the matter is declared in very positive language, "And the Lord God formed [yatsar] man (of) the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul." Not a spiritually holy being, for he is not called that in the Bible anywhere. And the inspired apostle settles that, for he says, "The first man is of the earth, earthy: the second man is the Lord from heaven." In the fifth chapter of Genesis it is declared that God "called their name [not names] Adam, in the day when they were created." "And the Lord God commanded the man, saying, Of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat; but of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil thou shalt not eat of it; for in the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." In the margin, "dying thou shalt die." He did eat, and death was the consequence; and the untold millions who have been upon the earth have been fallen Adam multiplied or developed, just what fallen man is to-day. The infant and the adult, the wise and the ignorant, the rich and the poor, the high and the low; for during the thousands of years which have passed since man's transgression, have all been born in this world judicially dead. "Behold, I was shapen in iniquity, and in sin did my mother conceive me." "The wicked are estranged from the womb; they go astray as soon as they be born, speaking lies." "And God saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth, and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually."

Now we will come, presently, directly to our subject, and in so doing we will first quote what the apostle says concerning the transgression. "Wherefore, as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin, and so death passed [dierchomai, to go through entirely, from end to end] upon all men, for that all have sinned." Margin, in whom, the one man, all have sinned. Concerning the race of mortal men the apostle says, "And hath made of one blood all nations of men, for to dwell on all the face of the earth; and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation." This declaration settles one important truth, viz., that whatever race, tribe or nation, all are under the curse; and whether they have ever known anything about the law written upon tables of stone or not, they must die; and surely the millions of infants who have died knew no more about the written law than the most ignorant tribe upon the earth. And it will not do to place this upon the ground that the "ignorantly wise" do, that infants are not sinners; but it is a sui generis; that is, of its own kind; therefore a discipline. Admitting that death is the discipline, Christ is not their Savior. But what an unrighteous view of sin and transgression does such a position manifest; for such teachers either do not know the meaning of the letter of the Scripture, or else they willfully pervert the same; for they make no distinction between sin, and the open manifestation of the same; and they certainly have not read understandingly what Paul said, "For the good that I would, I do not; but the evil which I would not, that I do. Now if I do that I would not, it is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me." I have felt it necessary to be thus particular, for it will be again referred to before closing this communication.

"For until the law, sin was in the world; but sin is not imputed where there is no law." Now what law is meant when it is said, "until the law?" Certainly not that which the apostle declares the church to be free from; for said he, "The law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death. For what the law could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh, God sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin, condemned sin in the flesh, that the righteousness of the law might be fulfilled in us, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit." Reader, do you not see that the law of sin and death is something deeper and of more awful import than the written law upon tables of stone? for that was the transcript of God's righteous requirements. The other law, of the Spirit of life, was never written upon tables of stone, "but in the fleshly tables of the heart." And let us remember that it is a law in both cases; for the term is from lath, in the Old Testament, and nomos in the New Testament; and in both Testaments it means fixed, established, set, &c. "And this I say, that the covenant that was confirmed before of God in Christ, the law which was four hundred and thirty years after cannot disannul, that it should make the promise of none effect. For if the inheritance be of the law, it is no more of promise; but God gave it to Abraham by promise. Wherefore then serveth the law? It was added because of transgressions, till the seed should come to whom the promise was made: and it was ordained by angels in the hand of a mediator." How carefully we should read and particularly notice that the written law was not given to cause transgressions, but on account of transgressions; for there is a vast difference between a cause of sin openly, and an occasion to sin openly; and these two things are often confounded. The written law did not cause any to sin, but the principle is in our depraved nature; and the restraints of the letter of the written law at times awaken in men the deep-seated hatred they have to the law of God. The law was simply to the apostle an outward formality until "the commandment came, sin revived, and I died. And the commandment, which was ordained to life, I found to be unto death. For sin, taking occasion by the commandment, deceived me, and by it slew me. Wherefore the law is holy, and the commandment holy, and just, and good." In this quotation we have the just meaning of the word occasion; for it is from aphorme, excitement, impulse; and cause as from various words in both Testaments; but its radical, true or just meaning is origin, source, fountain, beginning, &c.

Enough Scripture has been adduced to show the vast difference between the written law, as a transcript, and the vitality of the law of sin and death, under the dominion of which we all are in our natural state.

"Nevertheless death reigned from Adam to Moses, even over them that had not sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression, who is the figure of him that was to come." The first word in the text should be carefully considered, for it is composed of the three words, never, the and less, and signifies literally, in spite of that, death reigned from Adam to Moses. During that period of about two thousand and five hundred years, multitudes of Adam's posterity died, just as they did after the law was given to Moses; for "he gave unto Moses, when he had made an end of communing with him upon Mount Sinai [enmity—showing that Israel was under the law of God before it was written on tables of stone; and the breaking of those first tables showed that those Israelites had not kept its precepts], two tables of testimony, tables of stone, written with the finger of God." "The tables were written on both their sides: on the one side and on the other side were they written." Pharisees, who trust in what they term morality, which means their outward appearance, have never read that carefully, so as to notice that the law was on both sides of the tables. "For when the Gentiles, which have not the [written] law, do by nature the things contained in the law, these having not the law, are a law unto themselves: which shew the work of the law written in their hearts, their conscience also bearing witness, and their thoughts the meanwhile accusing, or else excusing, one another."

Enough divine testimony has been adduced to fully show that the written law did not cause the death of one of Adam's posterity; but it clearly showed what the cause of death was; and the apostle says, "Moreover, the law entered that the offense might abound. But where sin [not the written law] abounded, grace did much more abound; that as sin hath reigned unto death, even so might grace reign, through righteousness, unto eternal life, by Jesus Christ our Lord." Believers know the meaning of these powers in their experience; yet were it not for sin, the death of the body would not take place. Does the law of a state or nation which punishes the swindler, the counterfeiter, the thief, or the murderer, cause the crimes? No; but it is enacted that there may be just authority to inflict the penalty for transgression.

"Even over them that had not sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression." The word even would seem, if emphasized, to give the idea that there must be some difference in the classes of men; but that is not the apostle's meaning; for his words embrace all who died during that long period of time, when as yet the written law had not been given. Suffice it to say, there has never one of the untold millions of Adam's posterity sinned after his similitude; notwithstanding the theory of carnal teachers that Christ by his righteous life, bitter and agonizing death, and triumphantly glorious resurrection, placed man just where Adam was before he fell; but such a theory has no support in the Scriptures of divine truth.

"Who is the figure of him that was to come." I have no doubt but that this last clause of the verse is that which "a little one" had in view when he made his request; therefore I desire his particular attention to the figure, as the subject is dwelt upon. We will first attend to the literal meaning of the term figure. As used here, it is from tupos, a type, an impression. "And so it is written, The first man Adam was made a living soul; the last Adam was made a quickening Spirit. Howbeit, that was not first which is spiritual, but that which is natural; and afterward that which is spiritual. The first man is of the earth, earthy; the second man is the Lord from heaven. As is the earthy, such are they also that are earthy; and as is the heavenly, such are they also that are heavenly. And as we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly." Now let us keep distinctly before the mind the important fact that there are two Adams; and it is a peculiar fact that the name Adam is the Hebrew word for man, signifying earthy, red, firm ground, &c. And that one man was the federal or seminal head of the untold millions who have been upon the earth. I wish now in kindness and love to ask "little one" if those untold millions were all living children in Adam when he was made a living soul? Or was their life given in Adam, and they to be developed by ordinary generation? Could Cain be seen by mortal vision until he was born? Could Abel be known until he was born? What did those two sons inherit? Nothing but the corrupt nature of their father, Adam, and the depraved nature of their mother, Eve. And from that time to the present day, the progeny of Adam inherit his vileness, his corruption, his depravity, and his mortality; for the vast host of mortals who have been on the earth, are now upon it, or ever will be, is but Adam multiplied or developed; therefore he can impart nothing but his corrupt nature, as no stream can rise higher than the fountain.

"The last Adam was made a quickening Spirit." Now we must remember that the last Adam was manifested, not by ordinary generation; for the declaration is, "The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee; therefore also that holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God." "Even so we, when we were children, were in bondage under the elements [rudiments] of the world; but when the fullness of the time was come, God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons. And because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying, Abba, Father." "Verily, verily, I say unto you, Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone; but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit." Right here we will say to "a little one," that the connection of Scripture in which Jesus uttered that, shows that the "corn of wheat" applied to himself. "Jesus answered and said unto them, Destroy this temple, and in three days I will raise it up. Then said the Jews, Forty and six years was this temple in building, and wilt thou rear it up in three days? But he spake of the temple of his body." "For he hath made him (to be) sin for us, who knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him." "For the love of Christ constraineth us, because we thus judge, that if one died for all, then were all dead; and that he died for all, that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto him which died for them, and rose again."

We have quoted a sufficient number of passages of Scripture to show why "the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us." "For in that he died, he died unto sin once; but in that he liveth, he liveth unto God." "Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, And to seeds, as of many; but as of one, And to thy seed, which is Christ." Supposing that we take the liberty to read thus, "Now to Abraham and his eternal, spiritual children were the promises made," what would become of the glorious figure? For it has already been shown that Adam's progeny was, now is, and will continue to be, developed by ordinary generation. And what is said concerning the development of the spiritual seed? "Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ, is born of God; and every one that loveth him that begat, loveth him also. that is, begotten of him." Can it be possible that any real lover of God's truth desires to change these words so as to detract in the least from their awful majesty? Said Paul, "And as I may so say, Levi also, who receiveth tithes, paid tithes in Abraham. For he was yet in the loins of his father when Melchisedec met him." Were any of the tribe of Levi then manifested? No; but their life was in their progenitor, Abraham. In prophecy it is recorded, "A little one shall become a thousand, and a small one a strong nation. I the Lord will hasten it in his time." Doubtless the "little one" spoken of in this prophecy is the same in meaning as the "corn of wheat" spoken of by Christ. I ask my inquiring brother, who signs himself "a little one," How do we increase the unit one to a thousand? Is it not done by annexing three ciphers (000) to the unit one (1)? If we take away the one, how much value have the ciphers? Not any whatever. So the progeny of Adam have no spiritual life separate from Christ; for "if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." Also, "For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God." "And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ; till we all come in the unity [not simply union] of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ." That little one spoken of in Isaiah will come to the thousand, or perfect man; and the corn of wheat will bring forth fruit until the last elect vessel of mercy is made manifest.

Now, in closing the remarks upon this glorious subject, I desire to say to all who may have patience to read this, if published, that we should always be careful when writing or speaking concerning any portion of Scripture, not to attempt to "bend" such Scripture to suit some wild fancy of ours. The two Adams upon which we have dwelt represent exactly what the Scriptures declare concerning them. All our natural ability, as well as our vileness, we receive from our natural head, Adam; but we have to be born to manifest it. And our federal head in nature being depraved, we inherit the same. And excellent brethren often speak of our human nature; but the word human is not in the Bible. The adjectives which describe our nature are earthly, sensual, fleshly, devilish; all of which we inherit from Adam. The last Adam, our Lord Jesus Christ, our dear Redeemer, the immaculate Son of God, is the Head of the church, his body, the fullness of him who filleth all in all. He imparts to the vessels of mercy every just principle of truth, brings them to a knowledge of their entire ruin in their Adamic head; and the virtue of his life, death and resurrection will be known only to and by his chosen and redeemed people. It does seem remarkably strange that there is so much unwillingness to let the Scriptures give the just interpretation concerning the two Adams; and some theories now extant, if carried to their logical consequences, would represent redemption as a myth; in fact, no redemption at all.

A question or two, then I am done. If a man has a choice grape vine, can he in the season when it is stripped of its foliage and blossoms see any grapes? Certainly not. But is not the life in the roots and branches of that vine, to produce grapes in the proper season? Do not the grape vine and the thorn bush, standing in the same soil, receive nourishment from the same ground, sunshine and showers? Certainly they do. But who can comprehend the mystery? There may be two men of equal capacity, receiving daily the same temporal blessings: the one a blasphemer, the other praising and adoring God for his daily blessings. What has made the difference in the two men? We will have Paul answer, "By the grace of God I am what I am." And be it remembered, that grace was given him in Christ, and manifested at the appointed time.

May our God so lead us that we may say, as did the psalmist, "Lord, my heart is not haughty, nor mine eyes lofty; neither do I exercise myself in great matters, or in things too high for me. Surely I have behaved and quieted myself as a child that is weaned of his mother; my soul is even as a weaned child."

JESUS.

"SWEETEST note in seraph's song,
Sweetest name on mortal tongue,
Sweetest carol ever sung,
Jesus, blessed Jesus."

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—I have been thinking so much on this theme recently that I will send you some of my thoughts, submitting them to you for your inspection. They may be from the little book of "I think so," but in this matter they amount to a belief; and I will tell you why I believe so. I will try to keep to the subject, though I may not write connectedly and learnedly. I hope and trust that I may write the truth, and that it may comfort those of the household of faith who may read these lines.

I want to say something about this Jesus. I know it is a wonderful, inexhaustible theme. I can only glean, but I may glean something to strengthen, cheer and comfort some dear child of this King.

"In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God." "All things were made by him, and without him was not anything made that was made." "And the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us (and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father), full of grace and truth." "For unto us a child is born, unto us a Son is given; and the government shall be upon his shoulder: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The Mighty God, The Everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace." I want to speak of some of the titles of this Jesus, and let us try to think what they mean, for they are not mere empty ones. They are big with meaning. I want to speak of the character, mission and work of this adorable Jesus. We are not left in the dark in reference to these things. The angel of the Lord appeared to Joseph in a dream, and said, "She shall bring forth a son, and thou shalt call his name Jesus: for he shall save his people from their sins." This Jesus is called Christ, Immanuel (God with us), Son of God, Son of man. He is our Prophet, Priest and King. He is called the Branch, our Savior, the Way, the Truth, the Life, the Light of man, the Lamb of God, the Lord our Righteousness, our Brother, Bread of Life, Water of Life, the Corner Stone, the Foundation Stone, the Vine, the bright and morning Star, the Dayspring from on high, the Lion of the tribe of Judah, the Head of the Church (his body), the Shepherd of the sheep, the Bishop of our souls, the Husband and Maker of the church (his bride or spouse), our Example. He was made sin for us. He is our justification, our propitiation, the just One, our Ransom, our Surety, our Redeemer, our Atonement, our Peace Offering, our Sanctification. He is one with the Father. "I and my Father are one." He is eternal, immortal, without beginning or ending of days. He alone hath immortality, dwelling in the light. He is omnipotent, omniscient and omnipresent. He is unchangeable; the same yesterday, today and forever. These titles, with all they mean, are so interchangeable, so interlinked, so comprehensive, so full of meaning, that the field only widens and extends immeasurably as we attempt to contemplate their import, and try to understand the height and depth, the length and breadth, of Jesus' love to man. "In him dwelleth all the fullness of the Godhead bodily." Jesus says, "To this end was I born, that I should bear witness unto the truth. Every one that is of the truth heareth my voice." "The sceptre shall not depart from Judah, nor a lawgiver from between his feet, until Shiloh come; and unto him shall the gathering of the people be." So says the prophet. The angel said, "He shall save his people from their sins." I love to think of these plain, positive declarations, coupled as they are with such full, rich and blessed promises. Yes, full of blessed truth, full of comfort and consolation. What a full promise! It means so much to his people. It means sinners. I am so glad that he came to save sinners. He came not to call the self-righteous. "While we were yet sinners, Christ died for us." His loving-kindness is great to usward. The prophet speaks of his loving-kindness (and to make it still stronger), of the multitude of his loving-kindnesses. Jesus taught as never man taught. He spake as never man spake. He swept away all self-righteousness, free agency and free will of puny, fallen man, with the one declaration, "Ye must be born again." Let us search the Scriptures, for they testify of this Savior, and we can learn of his sayings and teachings. The Bible is replete with Jesus' doctrine. His teachings, his doctrine, embrace so much. Why, the very words election and redemption are so far-reaching that they mean the necessity of Jesus' advent into the world, his birth, his obedient life, his death, resurrection and ascension. And we hear so much about the gospel, and the necessity of sending it to the heathen. Now I will say something of the gospel of our blessed, risen and exalted Savior. It may not be in harmony with the views of the Doctors of Divinity, but I will quote from the earliest preachers of the gospel of God. The testimony of the apostles Paul and Peter is good. Paul was a learned man; Peter was a poor, unlearned fisherman. Paul says, "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth, to the Jew first, and also to the Greek. For therein is the righteousness of God revealed from faith to faith; as it is written, The just shall live by faith." Paul's epistle to the Romans is a most wonderful piece of testimony. No one can refute his argument. His logic is irresistible—it is God's truth. Then let us receive it in meekness, in joy, and in the love of it. The apostle Peter, in the first chapter of his first epistle to the saints, elect of God, tells them they were redeemed by the precious blood of Christ, born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth forever. He tells them that it is by Christ they believe; that they are kept by the power of God, through faith unto salvation; and he closes the chapter thus, "For all flesh is as grass, and all the glory of man as the flower of the grass. The grass withereth, and the flower thereof falleth away; but the word of the Lord endureth forever. And this is the word which by the gospel is preached unto you." All that disproves and refutes the prevailing idea of an offered salvation, of a conditional salvation. It contradicts the idea of man's free will.

But I will desist, although I have scarcely touched upon the matter that this theme suggests to my mind. I have felt that, with your permission, brethren Beebe, I would furnish something more in the near future for the SIGNS. I have thought of pursuing this theme, for I love to meditate upon it. It is worthy of our thoughts in all time, and will be the sweet employ of the redeemed and ransomed of the Lord in eternity.

Yours in the best of bonds,

MACOMB, ILL., Feb., 1889.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—I have been requested by brethren in another state in the west to give my views through the SIGNS OF THE TIMES upon the subject of church discipline in general; and as I know and esteem some of these brethren highly, I feel it to be a duty I owe them to try to comply with their request.

In doing so, however, I wish them to understand distinctly that I am not apprised of the nature of any trouble that may exist among them sufficiently to speak of it particularly, even if it were prudent to do so; and as volumes have been written on church discipline by able brethren in modern times, and through our periodicals recently, I do not feel competent to investigate the subject so as to shed any new light upon it. I remark also that I write with difficulty on account of a lame shoulder, and, upon the whole, I shall be very brief on each point I may notice.

I believe, dear brethren, if we should always try to do right, we should seldom do wrong in our church relations. Were we always governed by the love and fear of God, and by true charity toward our brethren, the New Testament alone would be sufficient for our rule of decorum; and it is sufficient, but our understanding is defective, and we are yet in the body, and offenses will come.

1. I believe a church may be organized by mutual consent of legally baptized persons, without other counsel, provided none is within reasonable reach, and provided they have an ordained minister as one of their number; but that it is better to have outside counsel where it can be had.

2. A church may be legally constituted by a proper council, though no ordained minister belongs to the newly constituted church; provided it can procure the services of one from another church.

3. A gospel church, while standing in order, is competent to execute all the laws of Christ, and to perform all the ordinances of the gospel, and is the highest ecclesiastical authority on earth, subject only to Christ, her head.

4. A church is not infallible, and may err; and if some of her members become grieved with her proceedings, and cannot be reconciled, a council should be called from one or more sister churches to sit with her and settle the case as to points of order; but such council cannot force a church to fellowship one she has expelled, and has lost confidence in.

5. A church cannot receive a person upon baptism performed by any one who was not at the time it was performed an ordained minister in fellowship with a church of our faith and order; but otherwise she is a competent judge of the qualification of her members.

6. Unanimity should prevail among all the members present in the reception of members into fellowship by experience, by letter, and by restoration of one excluded, and, if practicable, in all her proceedings; but if one or two only out of a goodly number object to a reception they should be required to give their reasons for dissenting.

7. Members should attend the meetings of the church regularly if practicable, and if they do not she should learn the reason of their non-attendance.

8. Personal and individual offenses should invariably be attended to as commanded by our Lord in Matthew xviii. 15-18; but offenses of a public nature against the church and the cause of God, either in her presence, or before the world, may, and should, be dealt with by the church at her first opportunity, and the offender rebuked before all (1 Cor. v. 1-5; 1 Tim. v. 20); for there is a difference in the nature of offenses under the law of Moses and the law of Christ.—See Lev. xxiv. 20, 21; 1 John v. 16, 17; Jude 22, 23.

9. In dealing with erring members in all ordinary cases the object should be to heal, to reclaim, and hence the admonition of the apostle should govern us in all such cases.—See Gal. vi. 1; Eph. iv. 31, 32.

10. Members removing out of the reach of the church should apply for letters of dismission, or give satisfaction to the contrary, and while holding such letters the bearer of the same is amenable to the church which gave it.

I might notice many other things in relation to the conduct of those connected with the church of Christ, for much of the New Testament might be copied or cited for that purpose, to which precious guide, and to the throne of grace, I would exhort the children of God to go, and if you lack wisdom ask of God.

I have thus, in few words, stated my views on a few points of gospel order, without reasoning or arguing on the subject touched, but will submit the same to the editors to dispose of.

In hope of life eternal, I remain,
I. N. VANMETER.

WOODSONVILLE, Ky., Jan. 3, 1889.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—I have often thought of writing for the SIGNS OF THE TIMES; but what am I, that I should presume to stand in the company of the able correspondents of the oldest and ablest Old School Baptist paper in the United States? Here comes up Proverbs xxvi. 3: "A whip for the horse, a bridle for the ass, and a rod for the fool's back." Before the late war I wrote sometimes for the SIGNS, but I got such a drubbing on one occasion that it set me back some distance in one direction, but not further than it put me forward in another direction. Here I am reminded of Psalm cxli. 5: "Let the righteous smite me; it shall be a kindness," &c. "It is good to be zealously affected always in a good thing;" but there is a zeal not according to knowledge; and that knowledge puffeth up and prepares us to cast a brother off for a word. It is a good thing to get knowledge, and with all our getting to get wisdom; for wisdom is the principal thing. It is good to take heed unto the doctrine of God; and it is also good to take heed unto ourselves, that we may be saved from contempt and loss of fellowship. We may press doctrine so as to discourage the weak, and mar the fellowship of God's people. I have seen in my day some who would become offended if an idea was advanced that they had not known. We should not be wise in our own conceit. We may know the truth, but we do not know all the truth. All who have passed from death unto life know the truth; and then we enter the school of Christ, and are learners of truth. Paul prayed for such, that God might give unto them the spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of Christ.—Eph. i. 17. Also, Paul says, "And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets;" "for the perfecting of the saints;" "till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God." If we all know all the truth, why then the different gifts? In passing from death unto life none is heard but he who only can give life, and who alone can lead; but after we are born into the kingdom of God we may follow others, and be carried about with every wind of doctrine, and, as Paul said to the Galatians, may be bewitched, and trust in something we have done or may do, and thus fall from grace, that blessed state of trusting alone in the meritorious sacrifice of Jesus Christ. Such will grow but little in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ while they thus remain. There are little children here, young men and fathers; so it is in the kingdom of God. One declares the other, as the servant did declare the servant of God. Little children cannot live on strong meat; but the fathers may, if they are healthy. Doctrine may be in some sense the foundation of our religion. Without it we are driven with the wind and tossed; and yet one may make a show in doctrine, and know nothing of the passage from death unto life. Such characters cannot learn the path that leads from death to life, for it is hid from the wise and prudent, and revealed unto babes. We read with pleasure much of the Scriptures as figures, especially Genesis; therefore we are well pleased with your views of Eve. "Therefore every scribe which is instructed unto the kingdom of heaven is like unto a man that is an householder, which bringeth forth out of his treasure things new and old." The old things kept secret, or hid for ages, are brought to light by the Spirit, and manifested as new in the gospel day.

Your brother in much affliction,
A. L. WOODSON.

DAVENPORT, N. Y., Feb. 18, 1889.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—The inclosed check is to cancel arrears and continue the visits of our much loved family paper. To-day marks the twenty-sixth anniversary of our married life; and as I look back over those years, I feel that I have very, very much to be thankful for. Our family with ourselves have been wonderfully and mercifully watched over and preserved in health and a reasonable degree of strength. True, those years have not all passed without leaving their impress. I am not so vigorous as then, and feel it more when deprived of the privilege of hearing the truth proclaimed as it is in Jesus, as I often am, for long periods of time, as we live so remote from any Baptist Church organization. But inclemency of the weather, family cares, or any of the many hindrances to my going, prevent not the ever-welcome appearance of this faithful comforter. Fresh from the pen of the porters of the chambers and treasuries of the house of God, it is always on hand, replete for our spiritual necessities with the fine flour, the wine, the oil, the frankincense, and the spices. In fact, it seems to be just what we need, and I think I have never missed a number since I first commenced taking it, over twenty years ago. And now I enjoy getting it weekly, and hope you will not suffer financially by the change. It would afford me great pleasure to be able to extend your subscription list, but cannot in this locality. I have long since learned that "It is not in man that walketh to direct his steps," yet I often fail to bear it in mind, and have to be reminded again and again. I find myself making appointments and devising plans, and disappointed when they do not take place as I purposed. But I am always made to feel that it is better, and thankful that I am not left to the freedom of my own will, that we hear so much about.

I did not design to trouble you with a long letter; and as I find the sentences abrupt and clumsily constructed, and I fear the ideas are obscure, I will close, begging your pardon.

Yours in christian love,
HARRIET N. HARKNESS.

PHARAOH RAISED UP FOR THE PURPOSE OF GOD.

"For the Scripture saith unto Pharaoh, Even for this same purpose have I raised thee up, that I might shew my power in thee, and that my name might be declared throughout all the earth."—Rom. ix. 17.

By request of a sister in Iowa, we submit some thoughts in connection with the declaration of this text. The context clearly shows that the infinite sovereignty of God is one point prominently set forth in this example cited from the inspired record of the dealings of God with the chosen nation of Israel. This inspired declaration is introduced in confirmation of the principle asserted in the immediately preceding verse, that "It is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that sheweth mercy." The same absolute sovereignty of God appears in the declaration of our Lord Jesus in answer to Pilate, "To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world, that I should bear witness unto the truth. Every one that is of the truth heareth my voice."—John xix. 37. There is nothing which will more certainly arouse all the enmity of the carnal mind than the clear statement of this essential principle; nor is there any point of truth more indispensable to the comfort and assurance of those who hope in the salvation of God as it is revealed in Christ Jesus. So essential is it that this truth shall be settled in the faith of the saints that it is written in the divine record in such unmistakable language as is used of no other point in the Scripture. "Wherein God, willing more abundantly to show unto the heirs of promise the immutability of his counsel, confirmed it by an oath; that by two immutable things, in which it was impossible for God to lie, we might have a strong consolation, who have fled for refuge to lay hold upon the hope set before us."—Heb. vi. 17, 18. This peculiarly strong form of expression is not more than is needful for the purpose declared, that is, for the consolation of his saints. If the eternal purpose of God could be changed by any event, or by any action of his creatures, whether good or bad, then there could be no certainty of the fulfillment of any promise which God has given. Hence the declaration sent by the last prophet under the legal dispensation, "For I am the Lord, I change not; therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed."—Mal. iii. 6. Much trouble and anxiety result to the saints when they lose sight of this cardinal principle of the truth which God has given as the foundation of their hope in the salvation revealed in Christ Jesus.

While the volume of inspiration contains no apology for the exercise of the attribute of sovereignty by the infinitely holy God, it is clearly declared throughout the whole revelation which God has given that he is the only self-existent Sovereign. There is no uncertainty in the declaration, "Surely the wrath of man shall praise thee; the remainder of wrath shalt thou restrain."—Psa. lxxvi. 10. To the limited view of finite reason every manifestation of the wrath of man appears to detract from the praise of God; and even the saints themselves, when looking at the things which are seen, are often ready to doubt the application of this truth to their immediate surroundings. In the case of Pharaoh, it is now manifest that the part he took in the oppression of Israel was the necessary cloud upon which is inscribed the rainbow of divine faithfulness and mercy in the deliverance of the chosen nation from captivity. The tyrant's wrath would have defeated the divine purpose; but only so much of that wrath was developed as was needful for the manifestation of the power of God in the deliverance of Israel from the house of bondage. The remainder of that wrath God did restrain. The sunlight is just as clear without the cloud; but the darkness is indispensable for the purpose of showing the beautiful colors of that light, so that they may be seen by finite vision. So the holy perfections of our God can only be manifested to our capacity as they are reflected upon the thick darkness of those clouds which to us are full of evil. Without the wickedness of the brethren of Joseph, it is not revealed how they would have survived the famine. God meant to save much people alive; and used the wickedness of Joseph's persecutors for the fulfillment of his design. So, also, his sovereignty ruled in his providential government when "Both Herod, and Pontius Pilate, with the Gentiles, and the people of Israel, were gathered together, for to do whatsoever thy hand and thy counsel determined before to be done."—Acts iv. 27, 28. In this, as in many cases recorded in the Scriptures, God made use of the wickedness of men for the accomplishment of his purpose of goodness and mercy, yet the wickedness of the men so controlled was not less because their evil designs were overruled by the power of God to their own defeat. Although the Lord Jesus was delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God, he was taken and crucified and slain by wicked hands.—Acts ii. 23. Nothing less than the omnipotence of God can thus use the very enmity of man for the manifestation of his love to his chosen people. The fact that he does this is established by his own express declarations in the Scriptures, as well as by the many instances therein recorded. In the recognition of this truth the saints are strengthened to endure all the tribulation appointed for them, since they are assured that their severest sufferings are given them by the same infinite love by which they were chosen in Christ Jesus and saved from sin by him. When they are led by their natural reason to doubt this essential doctrine, they are therefore robbed of that sweet rest which is found in the unquestioning confidence of faith in the immutability of the counsel of God.

While natural reason is not able to comprehend the perfections of the eternal God, and even the plain declarations of inspiration cannot be understood by any amount of mental training, it is yet true that there is no consistency in any theory which does not accept the infinity of all the attributes of God. This much being admitted, there is no ground for the objections urged by carnal pride against the testimony of inspiration, by which it is declared that "Our God is in the heavens; he hath done whatsoever he hath pleased." "Whatsoever the Lord pleased, that did he in heaven, and in earth, in the seas, and in all deep places."—Psalm cxv. 3; cxxxv. 6. After his terrible humiliation, Nebuchadnezzar was prepared to bless the Most High, and confess that in his account "All the inhabitants of the earth are reputed as nothing; and he doeth according to his will in the army of heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth; and none can stay his hand, or say unto him, What doest thou?"—Dan. iv. 35.

Even if there were no other instruction written in the Scriptures upon this point of the doctrine of God our Savior, the dying testimony of our Redeemer, as already quoted from his reply to Pilate, establishes beyond cavil the omnipotence of the purpose of God in all things. His holiness is untarnished when he turns man to destruction, as when he blots out iniquity and makes guilty sinners holy and without blame before him in love. However the ignorance of creatures may fail to comprehend his way in the clouds and darkness which are round about him, yet "Righteousness and judgment are the habitation of his throne." Our Lord confesses this truth in his deepest suffering. Not even that agony under which the beloved Son of God learned obedience by the things which he suffered, could change the immutable purpose of God. How preposterously absurd is the doctrine which represents the will of God as subject to be changed by the prayers of polluted sinners! The very fact that such a desire should arise in the heart is conclusive proof that the mind of Christ does not rule there at that time, since he always prayed as he taught his disciples to pray, "Thy will be done!"

In the declaration of Jesus that he was born and came into the world that he should bear witness unto the truth, it is not simply that his words should proclaim the doctrine which is true; although that testimony is included in the witness which he bears. The divine truth unto which he bears witness is displayed in his whole work as he was manifested to take away our sins. When as the eternal Word he was made flesh, in that very humbling of himself he bore such witness unto the eternal truth of God as could not have been borne by all the angels in glory. In every word and thought he bore the same perfect witness. It was in him alone that all the holy requirements of the law of God were manifestly shown to be strictly and perfectly true; for he alone of all to whom the commandment came, was able to magnify it by answering its utmost demands. His testimony is borne in the experience of every conscious sinner, when he is made to see the justice of his own condemnation, and then receives the revelation of righteousness in the perfect work of the Redeemer. As the testimony of this truth is the food upon which the saints are nourished, they have need that this infallible Witness should ever abide with them. Accordingly he dwells in them, and walks in them.—2 Cor. vi. 16. By this unerring seal God has marked every one of those who are included in his salvation. "Now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." "For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God."—Rom. viii. 9, 14. It will not be questioned by any believer of the Bible that the gift of the Holy Spirit is bestowed alone by the sovereign grace of God. Hence the only ground of hope for salvation from sin through the grace which is in Christ Jesus, is in the unmerited favor of that God who is absolutely sovereign in extending his mercy as well as in the execution of his justice. Certainly no works of creatures can secure the indwelling of the Spirit of God.

While we must continue to earnestly contend for this essential principle of the doctrine of the gospel, it is not our desire to condemn any believer in Christ because he may not be prepared to indorse our manner of expressing the truth. So long as Jesus is acknowledged as the only hope of salvation from just condemnation, even though the believer may be unable to say anything more of him, we have fellowship for such a character as being in the faith, though weak. But when one is found disputing the plain declaration of inspiration on this or any point, we are forbidden to receive such an one. It is not heresy to reject our views; but it is opposition to the truth when any word of revealed Scripture is disputed. "Let God be true, but every man a liar."—Rom. iii. 4.

SOLOMON'S TEMPLE SPIRITUALIZED.

BY JOHN BUNYAN.

CHAPTER XLVIII.

Of the golden censers belonging to the Temple.

THERE were also golden censers belonging to the temple; and they were either such as belonged to the sons of Levi in general, or that were for Aaron and his sons in special, as in Numbers xvi. 16-18.

The censers of the Levites were types of ours; but the censer of Aaron was a type of Christ's. The censers, as was hinted before, were for this use in the temple, namely, to hold the fire on which incense was to be burned before the Lord.—Lev. x. 1.

These censers then were types of hearts. Aaron's golden one was a type of Christ's golden heart, and the censers of the Levites were types of other worshipers' hearts.

The fire also which was put therein was a type of that Spirit by which we pray; and the incense that burned thereon was a type of our desires.

Of Christ's censer we read, Revelation viii., which is always filled with much incense; that is, with continual intercession, which he offereth to God for us, and from whence also there always goes a cloud of sweet favor, covering the mercy-seat.—Lev. xxi. 13; Heb. vii. 25; Rev. viii. 3, 4.

But to speak of the censers, fire and incense of the worshipers; for they were all put under one rule; that is, to be according to the law. Yet oftentimes, as were the worshipers, such were the censers, fire and incense.

Hence the two hundred and fifty censers with which Corah and his company offered are called the censers of sinners; for they came with wicked hearts then to burn incense before the Lord.—Num. xvi. 17, 37.

Again, as the censers of these men were called the censers of sinners, showing that they came at that time to God with naughty hearts, so the fire that was in Nadab and Abihu's censers is called strange fire, which the Lord commanded them not.—Lev. x. 1.

This strange fire was a type of that strange spirit, opposed to the Spirit of God, in and by which, notwithstanding, some adventure to perform worship to God.

Again, as these censers are called the censers of sinners, and this fire is called strange fire, so the incense of such is also called strange, and is said to be an abomination unto God.—Ex. xxx. 9; Isa. i. 13; lxvi. 3.

Thus you see that the censers, fire and incense of some are rejected; even as the heart, spirit and prayer of some are an abomination unto God.—Hosea vii. 14; iv. 12; v. 4; Prov. xxviii. 9.

But there were, besides these, true censers, holy fire and sweet incense among the worshipers in the temple, and their service was accepted by Aaron, their high priest. And these were a type of true gospel worshipers, who come with holy heart, the Holy Spirit, and holy desires before their God, by their Redeemer. The prayer of the upright is his delight. Their prayers go up like incense, and the lifting up of their hands as the evening sacrifice.—Ex. xv. 8; Psa. cxli. 2.

Let them that pretend to worship before God in his holy temple look to it that their censers, fire and incense, heart, spirit and desires, are such as the word require; lest, instead of receiving gracious returns from the God of heaven, their censers be laid up against them; lest the fire of God devour them, and their incense be an abomination to him, as it happened to those made mention of before.

But it is said that the censers of Corah and his companions were hallowed. So is God's worship, which is so by his ordination. Yet even that very worship may be spoiled by men's transgressions. Prayer is God's ordinance; but all prayer is not accepted of God. We must then distinguish between the thing commanded and our using of that thing. The temple was God's house, but was abused by the irreverence of those who worshiped there, even to the demolishing of it.

A golden censer is a gracious heart; heavenly fire is the Holy Ghost; sweet incense is the effectual fervent prayer of faith. Have you these? These you must have if ever your persons or performances be of God accepted.

CHAPTER XLIX.

Of the golden spoons of the Temple.

THE golden spoons belonging to the temple were in number, according to Moses, twelve; answering to the twelve tribes. But when the temple was built, I suppose they were more, because of the number of the basins.—Num. vii. The spoons, I suppose, were for the worshipers in the temple to sup that broth withal wherein the trespass offerings were boiled; for which purpose there were several cauldrons hanged in the corners of that court called the priests', to boil them in.—1 Sam. ii. 13, 14; Ezek. xlvi. 19, 20.

Now in that he saith there were spoons, what is it but that there are also babes in the temple of the Lord? There was broth for babes, as well as meat for men, and spoons to sup the broth withal. True the gospel, being more excellent than the law, changes the term, and instead of broth saith there is milk for babes. But in that it saith milk, it insinuates there are spoons for children in the church. Paul saith to them at Corinth, "And I, brethren, could not speak unto you as unto spiritual, but as unto carnal, even as unto babes in Christ. I have fed you with milk, and not with meat; for hitherto ye were not able to bear it, neither yet now are ye able."—1 Cor. iii. 1, 2. So here was need of spoons. Milk is spoon meat. For here were those which could not feed themselves with milk. Let them that are men eat the strong meat. "For every one that useth milk is unskillful in the word of righteousness: for he is a babe. But strong meat belongeth to them that are of full age, even those who by reason of use have their senses exercised to discern both good and evil."—Heb. v. 13, 14. So then, though the babe in Christ is weaker than the man in Christ, yet he is not by Christ left unprovided for; for here is milk for babes, and spoons to sup it with. All this is taught us by the spoons; for what need is there of spoons where there is nothing to eat but strong meat? Babes, you know, have not only babyish stomachs, but also babyish tricks, and must be dealt with as babes. Sometimes they cry for nothing, yea, and count them their foes who rebuke their childish toys and ways; all of which the church must bear, because they are God's babes; yea, they must be fed too. For if he has found them milk and spoons, it is that they may be fed therewith and live.

Incense, I told you, was a type of prayer; and the spoons, in the time of Moses, were presented at the temple full of it. Perhaps this was to show that God will, with the milk which he has provided for them, give it to them as a return of their crying to him, even as the nurse gives the child the milk.

But what were those golden spoons a type of? I answer, The milk is the juice and consolations of the word. Then the spoons must be those soft sentences and golden conclusions with which the ministers feed their soul. Compare 1 Peter ii. 3; 1 Cor. iii. 2; 1 Thess. ii. 7.

Who is most stout was once a babe. He that can now eat meat was sometime glad of milk and to be fed with a spoon. Babes in Christ therefore must not be despised nor overlooked. God has provided them milk, and spoons to sup it with, that they may grow up to be men before him.

CHAPTER L.

Of the bowls and basins belonging to the Temple.

AS THERE were spoons, so there were bowls and basins belonging to the temple. Some of these were of gold, and some of silver; and when they were put together, their number was four hundred and forty. These you read of, Ezra i. 10.

The bowls or basins were not to wash in, as were the sea and lavers of the temple; they were rather to hold the messes in, which the priests, at their holy feasts, did so use to set before the people. This being so, they were types of that proportion of faith by which, or by the measure of which, every man receives of the holy food for the nourishment of his soul. For if a man had a thousand messes set before him, he eating for his health, cannot go beyond what his stomach will bear; so neither can the child of God, when he comes to worship in the temple of God, receive the good things that are there, beyond the proportion of his faith; or, as it is in another place, according to the ability which God giveth.—Rom. xii. 6; 1 Peter iv. 11.

And hence it is, at the self-same ordinance, some receive three times as much as others do; for that their bowl, I mean their faith, is able to receive it. Yea, Benjamin's mess was five times as big as was the mess of any of his brethren; and so it is with some saints, while they eat with their brother Joseph in the house of the living God.

There are three go to the same ordinances, and are all of them believers, who, when they come and compare notes, do find their receiving are not of the same quantity. One says, "I got but little;" the other says, "It was a pretty good ordinance to me;" the third says, "I was exceedingly well there." Why, to be sure, he that had but little there, had there but little faith; but great faith in him would have received more. He had it then according to the largeness of his bowl, even according to his faith, even as God hath dealt to every man the measure of faith.—Rom. xii. 3.

Mark, faith is a certain measure, and that not only as to its degree, but for that it can receive, retain or hold what is put into it. So then, here it is no matter how much milk or holy broth there is, but how big is thy bowl, thy faith. Little bowls hold but little, nor canst thou receive but as thy faith will bear (I speak now of God's ordinary dealing with his people); for so he saith in his word, "According to thy faith be it unto thee."—Matt. ix. 29.

If a man goeth to the ocean for water, let him carry but an egg shell with him, and with that he shall not bring a gallon home. I know indeed that our little pots have a promise of being made like the bowls of the altar; but still our mess must be according to our measure, be that small, or be it great. The same prophet saith again, the saints shall be filled like bowls, as the corners of the altar; which, though it supposes an enlargement, yet it must be confined to that measure of faith which is provided for its reception.—Zech. ix. 15; xiv. 2. And suppose these bowls should signify the promises; though the saints, not the promises, are compared to them; because they, not promises, are the subjects of faith; yet it is the promises, by our measure of faith in that, that is nourishing to our souls.

When Ahasuerus made a feast to his subjects, they drank their wine in bowls. They did not drink it by the largeness of the vessel whence they drew it, but according to their health, and as their stomachs would so receive it.—Esther i.

Thy faith then is one of the bowls or basins of the temple, by, or according to which, thou receivest thy mess, when feasting at the table of God. * * * *

CHAPTER LI.

Of the flagons and cups of the Temple.

THE next thing to be considered is the flagons and cups of the temple; of these we read 1 Chronicles xxviii. 17; Jeremiah iii. 19. These were of great use among the Jews, especially on their feasting days, as of their sabbaths, new moons, and the like.—Lev. xxii. 13; Num. xxviii. 7; 1 Chron. xvi. 3; Isa. xxv. 6; lxii. 8, 9.

For instance, the day that David danced before the ark he dealt among all the people, even to the whole multitude of Israel, as well to the women as to men, to every one a cake of bread, a good piece of flesh and a flagon of wine.—2 Sam. vi. 19; 1 Chron. xvi. 3.

"In this mountain," that is, in the temple antitypically, saith the prophet, "shall the Lord of hosts make unto all people a feast of fat things, a feast of wines on the lees, of fat things full of marrow, of wines on the lees well refined."—Isa. xxv. 6.

These flagons, therefore, were types of those feastings, and of those large draughts of divine love, that the Lord Jesus draweth forth, and giveth to his spouse in those days that he feasteth with them. For then he saith, "Drink abundantly, O beloved." This he does to cheer her up under her hour of sadness and dejection; for now "new corn makes the young men cheerful, and new wine the maids."—Prov. xxxi. 6, 7; Psa. cxvi. 13; Jer. xvi. 7; Song v.; Zech. ix. 17.

As there were flagons, so there were cups; and they are called cups of consolation, and cups of salvation; because, as I said, they were they by which God at his feastings with his people, or when he suppeeth with them, giveth out the more large draughts of his love unto his saints, to revive the spirits of the humble, and to revive the hearts of the contrite ones. At these times God made David's cup run over. For we are now admitted, if our faith will bear it, to drink freely into this grace, or to be merry with him.—Psa. xxiii. 5; Luke xv. 22-24; Song v. 1; vii. 11, 12; John xiv. 23; Rev. iii. 20.

This is that to which the apostle alludeth when he saith, "Be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess; but be ye filled with the Spirit; speaking to yourselves in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs; singing and making melody in your hearts unto the Lord."

For the cups, as to their use in general, understand them as of the bowls made mention of before. For assurances are the blooms and flowers of faith; not always of it, though usually on feasting days it is so. So the degree of the one is still according to the measure of the other.—Eph. x. 18; James v.; Rom. xv. 13.

MARRIAGES.

MARCH 13th, 1889, by Elder A. B. Brees, at the residence of Elder J. G. Ford, the bride's father, Mr. Lue E. Lee and Miss Mary J. Ford, both of Putnam County, Ohio.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—The inspired psalmist said, "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints." By request of our dearly beloved brother, Elder Thomas Swartout, I record the death of his beloved wife, Elizabeth Swartout, on the morning of March 2d, at her home, being sixty-one years old the day before.

She was the daughter of Benjamin and Cathern Turk, and was born in Delaware Co., N. Y. She came with her parents to Michigan in 1846, and was married to our dear and much esteemed brother October 6th, 1847. To them were born four lovely children, one daughter and three sons, all of whom they had to give up to the last enemy, death, many years ago, leaving them lonely and sad. It seldom becomes our painful duty to pen the last tribute of respect to one more deeply in the affections of all than the subject of this very imperfect sketch. The dear sister united with the Columbia Baptist Church in 1848; and when the great division took place she firmly went with the Old School Baptists, contending for the faith once delivered to the saints. She possessed in a great degree all the virtues of wife, mother, friend and neighbor; and a life of over forty years devoted to the Master's service places her name on the roll of those who have washed their robes in the blood of the Lamb. There is much more in her character and life as a christian than the mere event of her death, notwithstanding the scene was one of complete and holy triumph. She was called, not alone to do, but to suffer. Disease fastened upon her in the most dreadful form. What she endured no living one can say. For over forty years she was a constant sufferer, yet always patient and submissive. From my first acquaintance with her I always remember her pale face, but cheerful countenance. O how we shall miss her lovely form in our midst! but we know that the God she trusted in has taken her to himself, there to reign with him forever. She had been not only called in her frail and sickly life to part with her lovely children; but to pass through other great and sore trials. Twice she was thrown from a buggy and taken up for dead. She lay for months in a very critical condition; but "Not a single shaft can hit

Till the God of love sees fit."

All who were at our association last June will remember her pale face, and how she was sustained by the everlasting arms underneath her. She continued in the same frame all summer; and in the fall and winter she felt a little better, so she came to meeting on pleasant days. Two weeks before her death she seemed to take cold, which settled on her lungs, and in a few days took what little life she had. She leaves our sorrowing brother, an aged mother, three sisters and two brothers, with the little band of brethren and friends of the church, to mourn her departure; but we know that it is her unspeakable gain.

She and her dear companion were ever ready to mourn with the bereaved and sorrowing. Well does the writer remember the words of comfort and sympathy in all our sad ordeals. Our dear brother has preached the funeral sermons of six lovely children of the poor, unworthy writer. Few can say as much.

Our much beloved brother, Elder L. B. Hanover, of Ohio, was called on the solemn occasion, and spoke words of comfort to our sorrowing hearts, which caused us to rejoice in the consolation of the gospel, from 1 Cor. xv. 55, 56. We laid her peacefully to rest beside her children, to await the morn of the glorious resurrection, when Jesus shall come to call these vile bodies from the grave.

"Jesus, thou Prince of life,
Thy chosen cannot die;
Like thee, they conquer in the strife,
To reign with thee on high."

M. P. LEWIS.

KELLY'S CORNERS, Michigan.

WITH sadness of heart I write the notice of the death of Elder Wm. A. Campbell, of Cammal, Lycoming Co., Pa.

He was born April 26th, 1845, and died March 12th, 1889, and therefore would have been forty-four years old in April. His disease was of the kidneys, from which he suffered more or less for several years, it finally taking the form of dropsy. He was about and labored most of the time with his brother making railroad ties, up to within a few days before he died. The day he died he quoted the hymn, "Rock of ages, cleft for me," or a portion of it, and frequently would quote Scripture. Several times during the last afternoon he asked for the time of day, and then he would say, "There will be meeting at five o'clock;" and truly there was, for at five o'clock he breathed his last, and we believe that he met his dear Savior, without a glimmering veil between. Glorious meeting! where congregations never break up, and praises never end. He expressed a willingness to go, and said that he had no fear of death—it was bright beyond the grave.

He was married in the year 1885, I think, to sister Libbie Alexander, daughter of brother John Alexander, of Utica, N. Y. She died about one year afterward, leaving brother Campbell with a little infant son. The stroke was very heavy, and but for the grace of God his reason would have been dethroned. But, blessed be the name of our God, his grace is sufficient for his people in every trial, affliction and temptation. I do not know when he began to hope in the mercy of God; but he united with the Old School Baptist Church of Cherry Flats, and was baptized by Elder S. H. Durand, in the year 1878. He was given license to exercise a gift in 1880, and not long afterward was ordained to the ministry of the gospel. Soon after his ordination he was chosen pastor of the church at Cammal, Pa., where he served until his death. He had traveled some among the churches in several associations, and was held in high esteem by those who knew him. He was very candid and plain in preaching, setting forth the doctrine of sovereign grace in a clear manner, so that every one who heard him could say of a truth, "Elder Campbell is a Predestinarian Baptist preacher." Jesus Christ and him crucified was his theme, not regarding what the world would say. Can we say this of all who profess to preach the gospel? But he has gone to his home above, and we feel to say that he has fought a good fight, he has finished his course, he has kept the faith, and has received an honorable discharge as a faithful soldier of the cross.

In this dispensation of God's providence the Chemung Association has lost a faithful brother and minister, the church that he served has lost a good pastor, a son is left an orphan (but with those who will care for him as their own child), an aged mother has lost a kind and generous son, and brothers and sisters have lost an affectionate brother; but their loss is his eternal gain. How mysterious are the providences of God! May the dear Lord by grace divine enable each to say, "Thy will be done."

The unworthy writer of this notice tried to preach the gospel to a large and attentive congregation at his funeral, using John xvii. 1-4 as a text; after which the remains were laid in the grave.

D. M. VAIL.

WAVERLY, N. Y.

DIED—Jan. 18th, 1889, sister Keturah Risler, at the residence of her son-in-law, Mr. Sidney Johnsons, in Hunterdon Co., N. J.

Our dear sister was baptized Sept. 17th, 1826, in the fellowship of the church called Kingwood, where she remained a member, beloved by all her brethren and sisters, till called away by death. Her walk before the church and the world was as the gospel requires, and her examples were worthy of imitation. She adhered firmly to the doctrine of God her Savior, never was absent from the meetings of the church, except when providentially prevented, was an attentive listener to preaching, and readily detected any deviation from the truth. It was her delight to attend the associations, which she did until (I think) last June, at Southampton. Thus she had an extensive acquaintance with the Old order of Baptists, and they in return were ever glad to seek shelter under her hospitable roof, where they were ever welcome.

She leaves two sons and two daughters, with numerous other relatives, to mourn their loss. Her age was eighty-one years, three months and eighteen days. May the Lord bless the church where she so long kept her home, and give grace to the afflicted. Her funeral was attended on January 22d, by the writer.

ALSO,

DIED—At her home in Tompkins, Delaware Co., N. Y., Feb. 11th, 1889, sister Ann Jenkins, aged seventy-nine years.

She was sick but a few days, having had a stroke of paralysis, which deprived her of her speech; but for a long term of years she had been a sincere and devout lover of her Savior, and was baptized in early life by Elder David Mead, ever maintaining an unblemished christian character. She was not carried about by every wind of doctrine, but was steadfast to the end. My familiar acquaintance with her for many years makes me feel now that another of my good and faithful friends is gone. Surely, if she had an enemy I do not know it.

She leaves her aged companion, brother Horace Jenkins, to travel the path of life solitary and alone; but the same grace which supported and cheered her, we are sure, will be his staff and stay the remaining days of his pilgrimage. Also, three sons and two daughters are left to mourn the loss of a fond and ever-loving mother. Her funeral was attended by the writer at Teedville, Delaware Co., N. Y., Feb. 13th, 1889. May the Lord overrule this stroke of affliction to the good of her many friends and kindred, and make their end like hers, calm and peaceful.

ALSO,

DIED—Of paralysis, at the residence of her son-in-law, in Sidney, Delaware Co., N. Y., Feb. 19th, 1889, my aunt, Phebe Bissell, aged eighty-four years.

Aunt Phebe was made to hope in the Lord in her youthful days, and to know that salvation is alone of him. She was a member of the Baptists before the split, and when the church at Sidney disbanded she chose to remain alone. Her mind was clear to the last, and her hope firm. She had trodden the lonely path of a widow, uncle having died many years ago. Two daughters are left, who feel that for her to depart was far better. Her funeral was attended February 21st, 1889, by the writer.

B. BUNDY.

OTEGO, N. Y., Feb., 1889.

DIED—At his residence near Port Burwell, township of Bayhan, Elgin Co., Ontario, Jan. 24th, 1889, Thomas Hamilton, in the sixty-sixth year of his age.

He died of typhoid pneumonia. His sickness lasted only ten days. The deceased was the husband of Eliza McGill, who survives him, and also one son and six daughters, one daughter and one son having preceded him. He never joined any church, but the writer of this notice has talked with him on the subject of the precious Savior, and found he was firm in the faith—that if not saved by grace, he would be lost. I feel sure that he has joined the church triumphant. Our dear mother has lost a kind husband, and we have lost a good father; but we trust our loss is his eternal gain. His remains were taken to Ekfrid, his former home, his widow, four daughters and a large number of relatives and old neighbors following him to his last resting place in the Baptist cemetery. He was a firm believer in the doctrine of the Old School Baptists, and has been a reader of the SIGNS for many years. We miss his instructions very much. Of late he has spent his spare time in reading and explaining the Scriptures, and also in getting new subscribers for our favorite paper, the SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

The following is a letter written by him to Mr. Leatherdale in the year 1877, which the family would like you to give a place in the SIGNS.

MARY HAMILTON.

PORT BURWELL, Ont., Feb. 19, 1889.

As I AM sitting here alone, I thought about you; so I thought I would draw the picture of the old and new man, and lay them side by side with Christ, who was humble. The old man is proud, but the new man is humble and meek. The old man is violent and passionate, but the new man learns of him who was meek and gentle, forgiving and benevolent. The old man is selfish, but the new man learns of Jesus to care for others' welfare as well as his own. He loved his Father, but the old man is alienated from him. The new man loves his God, seeks his glory, and is heavenly minded. The old man is earthly and sensual, but the new man sets his affections on things above. He is holy, but the old man is altogether sinful. The new man follows after holiness. Thus the christian is a new creature—new in principles, feelings, disposition, conduct, pursuits, hopes, joys, fears, sorrows, prospects and convictions. Whether wrought gradually or suddenly, it renders him who experiences it, as to his character and state in the sight of God, a new creature. I believe this is your picture. You may add the proof and make it complete.

I remain yours very truly,

THOMAS HAMILTON.

DIED—Near Horseheads, Chemung Co., N. Y., Dec. 19th, 1888, sister Lucinda Banister, wife of Sanford Banister, with whom she had lived happily for sixty-two years, lacking nine days.

She was baptized about sixty years ago, at Brookfield, Orange Co., N. Y., and remained a member there until she went west, many years ago, where she united with the church. She told me that she gave out the hymn, to be read,

"Let worldly minds the world pursue,
It hath no charms for me;
Once I admired its trifles too,
But grace has set me free."

She was a woman of deep convictions, sound in the faith of God's elect. She was a daughter of Deacon Elihu Carey, and a sister of Wm. P. and John B. Carey. She had been in failing health for some years. On Sunday, Nov. 18th, she was taken with dizziness, followed by difficult breathing, on account of the action of the heart, with which she suffered most of the time during her sickness, and was not able to talk much. She asked one of her daughters, who had come to see her, to sing; and she joined her in singing, "O land of rest," &c., all through, with quite a strong voice. But she is gone to meet those who are gone before, father, mother, four sisters and two brothers, all of the same faith. Behind are left an aged husband, two daughters at home, and five who are married live not far away. I always loved her as a sister.

MARY CAREY.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y.

DIED—At his home in Jasper Co., Ill., January 4th, 1889, Mordecai Bartley, aged seventy-one years.

Our dear father baptized him more than forty years ago, I think, and his only trust for salvation was in Christ. He was an upright man, a pleasant brother, and much esteemed. He left a widow, and many relatives and friends.

ALSO,

James Bartley died at his home in Jasper Co., Ill., Feb. 6th, 1889, aged about forty years.

I baptized him many years ago, and he lived a humble and devoted follower of Christ. He was the eldest son of my deceased brother John. His widowed wife and mother, five or six children, three sisters, one brother, and many loving kindred and brethren, are left to sadly miss him. His youngest son died a few weeks before him, and his brother George, a worthy youth, two years before.

ALSO,

Oscar Bartley, brother of James Bartley, died at his home in Jasper Co., Ill., Aug. 10th, 1888, aged about twenty-five years.

He was a humble believer in Christ, but not baptized, dearly beloved by all, and the comfort and light in his mother's home.

"These all died in faith," and sleep in Jesus, and God will bring them with him. Only last June I spoke on Hebrews ix. 27, 28, at the house of my dear younger brother Johnson, and he and all the others (except George) heard me; but now they no more abide in the flesh. Soon I shall follow them, and be with Christ, which is far better.

In tribulation and hope, yours,

D. BARTLEY.

SISTER Emma Rinehart (Williams that was) died of consumption at her home near Boyd's Station, Montgomery Co., Va., Feb. 25th, 1889.

The deceased was born in Stafford Co., Va., June 8th, 1854, and was baptized in the city of Alexandria, Va., by Elder Jos. L. Purington, about twelve years ago. She was a member of the Alexandria Church up to her death. The writer attended her burial at Bealville Cemetery, having also visited her during her sickness. Her pains, she told me, were great, greater than she could ever tell; and she longed to go home and be at rest. I felt that it was a sweet and holy privilege to be with her. No one need ever regret visiting the poor and afflicted. Her sister Virginia was her constant companion, and administered day and night to her wants.

Your brother, I hope,

E. V. WHITE.

LEESBURG, Va., March 4, 1889.

DIED—On Sunday night, Feb. 10th, 1889, at the residence of his parents, in Wilmington, Del., R. E. Lee Alexander, in the twenty-fourth year of his age.

This promising young man was the son of brother George and sister Susan Alexander, and grandson of Elder Thomas Barton, deceased. The stroke is heavy and afflictive upon the family, as he was devoted to the interest and welfare of the household, and very kind and affectionate. All his acquaintances became devoted friends, and the final parting was a sorrowful scene. He was taken with malarial fever on the first of the month, which developed into typhoid, and in a few days closed his earthly pilgrimage. The family have met with several bereavements before. We may hope that the Lord, in whose salvation they have been enabled to hope, will sustain and comfort them.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date, this date denotes the time at which your subscription expires, and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

CORRESPONDENCE.

PRAYER.

DEAR BRETHREN:—Some time since I saw in the SIGNS a request from brother H. J. Redd for some reflections on the subject of prayer. Since then I have received two or three private letters urging the same request, and proposing several questions regarding it. Brother Redd, however, made me hesitate much by the scope of his request. He desires me to write upon it in all its bearings, private, public, and in the family; and a sister requests answers to the following questions: "How should we pray? When should we pray? What should we pray for? Should Christians always pray, whether they feel like it or not, just from a sense of duty, or should they pray only when in the right spirit, or when a feeling sense of devotion takes hold of them?" This sister wishes her name withheld. As will be seen, the field is very broad and full. At best I can but glean a few handfuls. I suppose that both brother Redd and the dear sister mean by their questions the outward form of prayer, rather than the spirit of prayer within; and this I shall in this letter confine myself to.

Over the spirit of prayer in the heart we have no control. Its expression in forms and words, however, seems to be a proper subject of inquiry, advice and admonition.

I want to begin by saying that personally I have had all my life more trouble about prayer than I ever did about preaching, or anything else, except being a sinner. I have seemed to have so little of the spirit of prayer most of my time. There have been but few times when I have felt compelled to bow my knees and in words call upon God when alone. There have been now and then seasons when I have felt drawn, while in secret, to express my desires before God, either in formal conscious thought or in words; and sometimes I have then felt that I had my desire. I knew even then that our Father knew and had provided for all my need before I asked of him; but still I felt that it was a sweet privilege to thus talk with God and tell him all my wants. But it has been a great grief to me that I have so little of my life realized this nearness to God. In prayer, in my family and in public, the same reasons have urged me on, viz., that in both cases I hoped some could feel that we were in union, and were filled with one desire, which was being imperfectly expressed by my lips, and so be built up and comforted; and I have never felt that my feelings should hinder me from engaging in this service in either case. Yet many times it has been a real cross to me, because I have feared that I was but giving utterance to a form of words that had no life or spirit in them. Often when I have thus tried to pray my words have been on the surface only. I have not been able to pray in words for what I really most felt the need of; and down out of sight, eluding all my attempts at expression, have been the real desires of my heart. Sometimes I have gone through a form of words, and prayed for many things, when after all I was only conscious in my mind of one desire, and that was that God would teach me how to pray.

I remember once in my life, and that but a few years ago, some reflections of this kind came into my mind, and led me to a conclusion which at the time was satisfactory to me, and which for a time gave me rest. I had been thinking, Why should I always respond to the call for public prayer, in our pulpits or in our homes, and yet pray so little when by myself? Is not my effort at public prayer all a mockery and an abomination to God? Why should I not express my desires to God when alone, as well as when with others? If I do not have seasons when I bow the knee in secret prayer, how can I know that my public prayers are any more than a mere form? These questions perplexed me for a long time. What was my duty and privilege with regard to secret prayer? At last I was helped in this way. It occurred to me that prophets, apostles and disciples, all had seasons devoted to secret prayer; and these were not stated times, but were enjoyed just when they were moved thereto, in time of need, by the Spirit of God. Jesus also, in the days of his flesh, as a man with men, had seasons when he went apart to pray. Once it is said that he went into a mountain to pray; and this he did, not because his Father was any nearer in spirit to him there than elsewhere, but for his own sake, that he might not be disturbed by the multitude. And Jesus and his disciples found spiritual refreshment in such seasons. Now this I felt to be a good pattern to follow; and I came to the conclusion that when I felt impressed in heart so to do I would retire to myself and try to pray. I would not make stated seasons for so doing, as some do, at morning, noon or night; but whenever I felt any burden on my spirit, or any desire to commit my cause to the Lord, in that way I would do so. But I want to confess that while I still believe this is right, I have not always done so, but have often gone out into the world, rather than into the closet with my Lord.

These have been some of my feelings and exercises in regard to prayer. I do not claim that they are all right exercises; indeed, I am inclined to believe that much is of the flesh. Still, what I have here said may be the exercise of some other heart; and if so, they may find by this that another feels as they do. It should always be remembered that our exercises and impressions are not authority upon any Bible subject, but the Scriptures alone must decide every question. What do they teach about the expression of prayer?

First I will say that they teach more by example than by precept concerning prayer. I have been able to find some thirty-five or thirty-six examples of special prayers in the Old and New Testaments. Some of them were private and some were public. There are a hundred or more direct references to prayer in the Bible. In a few places in the New Testament prayer is directly enjoined upon believers. In some places it is spoken of as a joyful exercise to the child of God. Bear in mind that I am here speaking, not of the spirit of prayer in the heart, but of the outward form or expression of prayer.

It would seem to be undoubtedly true that if the spirit of devotion and earnest desire be in the heart, the soul will feel at times that it longs to speak forth its desires, and that the voice of prayer and praise will therefore be heard; but how is it when the soul feels dead and cold? Shall we then never seek to come to God in prayer? The sister who wrote me asks this question. I will suggest, in reply, that it may be that we are in a more prayerful frame when we are lamenting our lack of a devotional spirit, than at other times, when we are better satisfied with ourselves. I do not think that we are safe judges of our own selves, any more than we are of others, at times. If our frames and feelings are to decide when we shall pray and when we shall not, then half the time I, for one, would omit the attempt to pray in my public exercises; and if feelings only should control, many times I should not try to preach. My views of family worship are based upon the same ground as my views of any other form of public worship. I know that many times I have realized the presence of the Spirit of God as sensibly while praying in my family, as when engaging in the same service in a more public way.

The sister says, "How should we pray?" I would answer that the Scriptures teach us that we should pray humbly and in submission to the will of God. Surely the arrogance of some men, who would seem to dictate to Jehovah himself what he shall and what he shall not do, can find no place in the petition of the humble-hearted believer. We should always pray, "If it be thy will." Jesus himself set us the example of this; and the end and aim of all prayer is to bring us at last to this, "Thy will, and not mine, be done." This is the best prayer that a soul can ever utter or feel. This is submission to the will of God.

Our sister also says, "When should we pray?" I answer, Jesus said that "men ought always to pray, and not to faint." I know of no place or company or business in which it is proper for a Christian to be found at all, where prayer is not a suitable guest; and we always need help and strength from God to do rightly anything we undertake. If we feel that we are prone to wander, we shall in all circumstances have need that God should set a guard upon our lips, our lives and our thoughts. For this it is proper that we should ever pray.

Our sister also says, "For what should we pray?" I answer, The apostle says, "In everything make known your requests unto God." It seems to me that this includes all things that we feel the need of, whether they be temporal or spiritual things. We have in the Scriptures many instances of prayer for both; and there are many instances of favorable answers to both. I have as often felt that I was heard when I have tried to pray for some temporal mercy, as when some spiritual gift was especially my desire. Our God is as certainly and as much the God of providence as he is of grace. The good gifts are from him, as well as the perfect gifts. We are as dependent upon him for temporal as for eternal things. We need his presence to sanctify temporal blessings or trials to us; and he knows what it is best that we should receive. There is no gift, spiritual or temporal, in the hand of God that is not a proper subject of prayer.

Some other reflections occur to me, of which I wish to speak. The Lord said, "If any two of you shall agree as touching anything that ye shall ask, it shall be done unto you." This has often been used as authority for "praying bands," "evangelical alliances," and for the idea that a multitude united are more certain to prevail against the Almighty than a few. All such notions are based upon the idea that God can be prevailed upon by importunity to grant what he would not think of bestowing otherwise; and so men come to an agreement among themselves that at a certain time they will all unite in asking for a certain thing, and suppose that they shall therefore obtain their desire. But Jesus did not say, "If any two of you shall come to an agreement;" but, "If any two of you shall agree." The two things are as wide apart as the poles. God sees the heart, and not the lips merely. No man can tell what it may be in his heart to ask of God to-morrow. A believer may force his lips to frame a petition for a certain thing, when at the same time God sees the real need of his soul, and hears the pleading of a tried and broken heart. While men may force themselves into a concert of pronunciation, they cannot come to an agreement in prayer. If there be agreement, God has by his Spirit produced it, and they have been acted upon unconsciously. One of the number is impelled to speak forth what is in his heart in prayer; and, behold, his brother, who has been sitting silent, finds that the words are taking up his own desire, so that he can respond "Amen" to it all. Here is agreement, and God is its author; and he will grant the desire which he has implanted. This is the meaning of the promise of the text.

Does God always hear and answer his people when they pray? I answer, Yes; but not according to their short-sighted view of the matter. It was so when Paul prayed that the thorn in the flesh might be removed. It was not removed, but yet his prayer was heard and answered: "My grace is sufficient for thee." "My strength is made perfect in weakness." Paul felt that he had received the best answer possible, and said, "Most gladly therefore will I rather glory in my infirmities, that the power of Christ may rest upon me." Our God looks down from heaven, from the height of his sanctuary does he behold the earth, to hear the groaning of the prisoner, and to release those that are appointed to death. From these Scriptures we may be sure that our God does hear and answer prayer at all times; but it is in his own way and time. Paul has furnished us with a key to this matter, it seems to me, when he says, "We know not what we should pray for as we ought; but the Spirit itself maketh intercession for us, with groanings which cannot be uttered."

And he knoweth what is the mind of the Spirit, because it maketh intercession for the saints according to the will of God. Notice, first, that we know not what to pray for as we ought, and then, second, that the Spirit does know. Our words are not always answered, but the real cry of the Spirit is always answered, because it is in accord with the will of God.

Suppose our child is hungry. He sees a stone, and cries for it, supposing it is bread. If we gave it to him, it would break his teeth. It sees a serpent, and cries for it, supposing it to be a fish. We do not grant its wish, because it would minister death rather than life to the child. It sees some pretty red berries by its path, and strives to pluck them; but we withhold its hand, for they would cause him pain. Now we have not given the child just what it fancied would be best for it, but we do take pains to satisfy its hunger with real bread and fish and wholesome fruit. So our God deals with his children. He grants them full supplies for all their need.

What is the object for which God has given us the privilege of prayer? Is it that his will may bend to ours, or that our wills may be conformed to his? Which is best? We encourage our children to come to us at all times and tell us all that is in their hearts. Is it, or should it be, our object that they may thus control and direct our wills according to their wishes, or that they may in the end be conformed to our will? We do not always grant the particular request that the little child may make, because it would not be wise to do so. Yet we do not censure the child for asking, nor mean to discourage it from coming again and again with its requests; and we do grant it what we consider to be the best things. Thus we commune with it, and encourage it to commune with us, until it comes to see things as we see them, and to want the things that we want. So our God has given us to commune with him, and he communes with us, that we may grow up into him in all things, and that we may prove what is his good and acceptable and perfect will.

I have been convinced for a long time that the true end and aim of all prayer is to come at last to say, "The will of God be done." When we can truly say this, we are desiring the best things, for his will is always most holy and blessed. When we can truly say, "Thy will be done," we shall have perfect peace, and nothing will disturb us, for his will is always done. All our conflict and unhappiness arise out of opposition to his will. Yet our Father pities our weakness and ignorance, and hears our complaints, and does not chide us when we come to him with our often foolish prayers. "Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him: for he knoweth our frame, he remembereth that we are dust." This is often a comfort to me.

I leave these reflections with those who may read them. They are but broken thoughts at best. I hope others may write upon this subject. It is a vital one.

I remain, as ever, your brother in hope,

F. A. CHICK.

THE TOUCH OF FAITH.

Luke viii. 43-48; Matt. ix. 20-22; Mark v. 25-34.

"AND a woman having an issue of blood twelve years, which had spent all her living upon physicians, neither could be healed of any, came behind him, and touched the border of his garment: and immediately her issue of blood stancheth. And Jesus said, Who touched me? When all denied, Peter and they that were with him said, Master, the multitude throng thee and press thee, and sayest thou, Who touched me? And Jesus said, Somebody hath touched me: for I perceive that virtue is gone out of me. And when the woman saw that she was not hid, she came trembling, and falling down before him, she declared unto him before all the people for what cause she had touched him, and how she was healed immediately. And he said unto her, Daughter, be of good comfort: thy faith hath made thee whole; go in peace."

In all the multitude that thronged and pressed the dear Savior as he walked that day on his errand of mercy, only one is recognized by him as having touched him. This woman represents the condition of all who feel the need of salvation; and in the relation of the interesting and touching incident is shown the seeking of that salvation, the experience of it, and the teaching of the Savior concerning it. She had a disease which was surely wasting her strength, and in this she well represents the condition of one who has come to know the most terrible of all diseases, sin; a disease which saps the foundation of our life, and continues its wasting and weakening effect until we are left "without strength," and "ready to perish." She had sought the help of many physicians, and had suffered many things of them, and had spent all her living upon them, and was nothing bettered, but rather grew worse. So the convicted sinner seeks help wherever there appears any prospect of obtaining it; and will continue to look unto men, and to strive according to the teaching of earthly wisdom to obtain a cure until all his living is spent, and he is left helpless and destitute. Those who have never experienced the fatal power of this disease, who only know sin by the teaching of men, can follow the advice of these worldly physicians and be satisfied. Whatever disturbance of conscience they have is only natural, and can be quieted by natural remedies. There are, it is to be feared, great numbers who are deceived by these physicians, these teachers of a natural religion, and are made to believe that they are the subjects of salvation, when they have never known what it is to be lost; and are persuaded to profess themselves followers of Christ when they have never known him, and do not love his doctrine, nor desire that he should rule over them. Such are rejected by the dear Savior, with all their works. But those who have been made to feel the sentence of death in themselves by the condemnation of the holy law of God, find their worldly teachers to be physicians of no value, when they have spent all their living upon them and have still grown worse, and are left at last utterly destitute. What mourning there is within them. How many sighs and cries go up from the depths of the heart on account of their sad state, when they do not feel worthy even to cry to the Lord for mercy.

In his own time the dear Lord will call into exercise that faith within them which will surely lead them to Jesus. From the ends of the earth, from the depths of darkness and trouble, they will come with unerring certainty, though to them the way seem ever so crooked, until he is found of them. This woman appears to have been unnoticed in the midst of the throng by any of those who surrounded Jesus. But she could not at any time be unnoticed by him, for he had seen her long before she came into that throng, as he saw Nathaniel while he was under the fig tree, before that Philip called him. He had seen all her suffering, knew all her vain efforts to obtain a cure; and when her soul was sinking in despair it was he who raised up within her this secret, wonderful, reviving principle of faith, by which she was turned in this new direction, stirred and animated by the trembling thought that was now coming from some mysterious depths unto her heart, "Perhaps there may yet be help for me." And straight to Jesus she went, for this faith brought her by the most direct way, and softly, silently she crept in among the people that surrounded him. How they crowded around him, and pressed against him, as they do to-day, seeing the man, and speaking his name often, yet having no knowledge of him as the Savior of sinners, nor coming near to him in his true character. How they gather, and crowd about his sacred person, and surge along, with loud talking, and suggesting, and giving advice, and disputings, and protestations of zeal and devotion, and of ardent desires to work the works of God. And yet, with the exception of the few that he had called, there was no communication between him and them, no real contact, no walking together, even; for "how can two walk together except they be agreed?" And even his few disciples, how far they were from him most of the time; how far from a knowledge of his secret suffering, of his glorious power, of the wonderful work he was doing. Though called to be with him in his temptations, yet they were not given to understand the nature of his work until after he was crucified; and how they wondered at every display of his power, saying, "What manner of man is this?"

But here in the crowd comes this sick woman, this poor, helpless soul, urging her weak and tottering footsteps secretly and silently forward, and reaching out her trembling hand toward the swaying border of his garment. O what tremulous hopes rise up in her poor heart, almost stopping her breath. What tumultuous feelings of mingled longing and expectation and fear throb within her as she comes so near to him in the press. "If I may but touch his garment I shall be whole." What is this that speaks with such confidence in her soul, rising above all her fear and doubt, and expressing only unquestioning certainty? This is the holy assurance of faith. In the midst of all apparent impossibilities, in the midst of a sense of just condemnation, in the midst of the oppression of this awful malady of sin, in the midst of doubt and fear and almost despair because of vain endeavor and failing strength, there comes this still, small voice within the deepest recesses of the being, breathing no uncertainty, no doubt, no fear, but rising in mysterious power above all such things. This is the faith of God's elect. It is the faith of which Jesus is the author and finisher, and it leads with absolute precision to him. This is the faith which brings the poor sinner to the throne of grace. There can be no prayer, no coming unto God, except as moved and directed by this faith. It called forth the cry of the publican for mercy, and the prayer of the dying thief. It was not the light, timid touch of the weak and wasted hand merely that the dear Savior felt, causing him to turn about in the crowd and say, "Who touched me?" but it was the strong, unquestioning touch of faith. Strong hands had pressed against him, but he heeded them not, for no faith prompted the pressure, and they called no virtue out of him. But at this soft, trembling touch instantly virtue went out of him, and the woman knew in herself that she was healed.

She touched only the border of his garment, only the hem. No presumption in this, no intrusive boldness. Timid, meek, feeling so unworthy that she wished to be hidden from view, yet urged by the pressure of the terrible malady, and drawn by the irresistible power of faith, she approached softly, gently, as near only as was necessary, keeping as far away as possible, so that she might but touch the extreme edge of his garment. So very far away from so holy a being she felt herself to be in her undone condition; and yet how near she was in her desires, in her longings, in her wonderful confidence, in her deep and abiding love. Just so near is every poor soul who feels to be utterly unworthy of the favor of God on account of the awful disease of sin, and yet who longs for his salvation, and feels assured that he is able to do all that we need if he only will. In himself such a one appears to be at the ends of the earth, farther off from God than any one else; and yet how near he is in his thoughts, in his desires. He cannot keep his mind away from the dear Savior, nor withdraw his longings, but still follows him, though afar off, as it appears to him. His very breathings are cries for mercy, for grace to heal his sicknesses and wash away his sins. This is the nearness of faith. All who have such desires and such feelings are as near to Jesus as the poor woman was, and will as surely receive healing virtue from him.

Of those who were healed or otherwise favored by the dear Savior while in the flesh, some were surprised by receiving what they had not expected nor asked for of him, nor even thought of as possible; as the man who was born blind, the lame man at the pool of Bethesda, the man possessed of a legion of devils, and the widow of Nain; while others received what they earnestly and persistently sought. The spiritual attitude of all who sought favor is the same, however the circumstances differ. All ask on the ground of mercy, manifesting a feeling of unworthiness; yet all are persistent, evidently sure of his ability to do for them what they require, and in spirit saying with Jacob, "I will not let thee go except thou bless me." The Syrophenician woman pleaded the favor shown even to dogs, who are allowed to eat of the crumbs that fall from the master's table. The poor leper knelt and simply acknowledged the power of Jesus to heal him if he would. The centurion likewise acknowledged and pleaded that power, and seemed to feel sure of its being exerted in his behalf, although he felt unworthy even to come unto Jesus. The publican stood afar off, with eyes cast down, smiting upon his breast, while he uttered that cry which expresses the felt need of the poor sinner throughout all ages: "God, be merciful to me, a sinner." The dying thief acknowledged the justice of the penalty he was now suffering, while the mysterious power of faith within impelled him to say, "Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom." And this is the feeling of all who come to Jesus. Drawn by the power of God, they come with weeping, and with supplication he brings them.—Jer. xxxi. 9.

This woman could not be hid after she was healed. There must be an open acknowledgment of the work which she knew had been done in her. "Fearing and trembling, she fell down before him and told him all the truth." That which is heard and felt in secret must be declared openly before the true followers of Christ, for the work of Jesus cannot be hidden from them. It is with fear and trembling, yet with very sweet comfort, that the salvation which God works in his people is worked out by them, appearing in their walk and conversation. It is to Jesus that the confession of salvation is made when we try to tell to the church what we hope he has done for our souls. This is all that we can render unto the Lord for all his benefits unto us, to take the cup of salvation and call upon the name of the Lord; to pay our vows unto the Lord in the presence of all his people.—Psalm cxvi. 12-14. The fear and trembling with which this humble but glad confession is made is very different from the self-confidence and brazen boldness of those who believe they have done that which merits the favor of God. But what sweet thankfulness, what tender contrition and trembling joy fill the heart while we are permitted to tell him what we feel has been wrought in us, and to speak of the healing mercies and loving-kindnesses of our God.

"And he said unto her, Daughter, be of good comfort: thy faith hath made thee whole; go in peace." Thus Jesus gives instruction concerning the salvation which he has wrought. By this manner of address he declares the tenderest relationship, and implies that all care for the poor, trembling soul, every necessary provision for help and sustenance, is taken upon himself, and thus sweetly and powerfully forbids doubt and questioning, and commands the blessing of comfort. He tells what has been done for her, and how it was accomplished. He does not say, "I have healed thee," nor does he speak of her coming to him as having been the cause of her cure. He simply says, "Thy faith hath made thee whole." Faith is here, as in all other cases, made very prominent by the Savior. "O woman, great is thy faith."—Matt. xv. 28. "I have not found so great faith, no, not in Israel."—Luke vii. 9. "According to your faith be it unto you."—Matt. ix. 29. "But I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not."—Luke xxii. 32. "Yea, the faith which is by him hath given him this perfect soundness in the presence of you all."—Acts iii. 16. No works of men, no zeal, no energy, no goodness on the part of the creature, is ever mentioned as having caused healing mercies to be given. Nothing but faith is ever spoken of as of any value in this regard; for, "Without faith it is impossible to please God." How thoroughly this withdraws salvation from within the reach or power of man, and shows it to be alone within the purpose and power of God. Faith is his gift. Like every good and perfect gift it "is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning."—James i. 17. It "is the substance of things hoped for," bringing within the soul the very power and blessedness of Jesus, and causing us to realize his presence; and therefore it "is the evidence of things not seen." Upon this evidence we are enabled and constrained to believe; and as the mighty power of God raises up this belief in the soul, so the wonders of that mighty power are experienced through this belief. "He that believeth," said the dear Savior, "though he were dead, yet shall he live; and he that liveth and believeth in me shall never die." What God is to us, and what the dear Savior has done for us, we see and know only by this divine principle of faith. To this faith, and to this alone, the revelation of heavenly things is made. It is the fruit of the Spirit. It is born of God, and is therefore itself the victory which overcometh the world.—1 John v. 4. Through this faith we receive the salvation which is by grace. Through and by this faith the wonderful power of God is experienced, and his works are wrought by his dear people. By it mountains have been removed, the violence of fire quenched, the mouths of lions stopped, kingdoms subdued, mortal diseases healed, blind eyes opened, deaf ears unstopped, and by it mothers have received their children raised to life again. All these are the works of God, and are ours by faith as manifested to and experienced by us.

In regard to this wonderful principle of faith the one who possesses it is entirely passive; so much so that it is spoken of as possible to be possessed by one that is dead: "though he were dead, yet shall he live." By it one looks on in wonder and sees things which are impossible with men wrought for him, and accomplished within him—sees himself girded with invincible strength, and overcoming enemies mightier than he. This faith is distinct from the natural understanding, for by it Isaac blessed Jacob with the blessing which God had predestinated for him to receive, while he thought he was blessing Esau. The faith which is by Jesus made the lame man at the Beautiful gate of the temple whole in the presence of all the people; and none was more astonished by what his own faith had done than he. It was this faith which is by Jesus that made this woman whole of her plague; and the same faith, received from the same source, heals every poor sinner who ever comes to feel sin as a plague upon him. Thus Jesus declares how the healing comes, and teaches concerning the absolute certainty and abiding character of the cure that is felt within the soul, and bids the one who has been the subject of such a wonderful experience to "Go in peace, and be whole of thy plague."

Whenever one's mind is drawn to a certain portion of the written word with a hungering and thirsting for its meaning, the Lord will surely sooner or later cause that portion to become as bread to his soul, and as a well of refreshing water. How often the Lord's little ones who have been thus exercised, and drawn out in desire and prayer to God for knowledge and wisdom, have been surprised to hear the same portion which had been upon their minds spoken of by some of the Lord's servants with comfort, or have read something upon it which has been satisfying, or have had it most sweetly opened to them when alone. The Lord is the most watchful, attentive, tender and faithful of all shepherds, and those who are given faith to say, "The Lord is my shepherd," will surely be enabled by the same faith to say, "I shall not want."

SILAS H. DURAND.

SOUTHAMPTON, Pa., March 21, 1889.

NEWPORT, N. C., Feb. 25, 1889.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—This evening I feel a desire to sit in conference with the readers of the SIGNS. For about two months or more I have been cast down very low, and have felt that the good Lord had taken his mercies from me, and that he would no more return. I found no rest by day, and was much disturbed at night. All desire for singing was gone, and I seldom found a word to utter in prayer. I could look back on my past experience, and see the many times that he had visited me in distress, and made my poor heart to rejoice; but all this did me no good, my heart was so cold and hard. Thus I mourned day and night, and sometimes could not help shedding bitter tears, because of my sore darkness; for I felt that I was surely cut off from before his eyes. But the Lord heard the voice of my supplications, and my weeping came up before him, and he has delivered me once more; for I have been enabled to feel his divine presence once more in my heart. Now I am made to wonder that the glorious Lord should condescend to dwell in such a heart as mine. It seems to me that every day of my life I see more and more vileness in my own heart. It is not necessary for me to go abroad to find a hateful sinner. No, I find one at home. Then what a mercy that the Lord should ever have taken any account of me, who was really a perfect stranger to all his ways. Not one thing did I know of him, nor any of his mercies, though he had surrounded me with so many.

My parents and grandparents were Baptists, and I went regularly to preaching, and with the natural ear heard the truth, yet knew nothing of it spiritually. How convincing is this that God reveals his word by his Spirit with power in our hearts, and that we receive it from no other source. Even so in all my experience it has been the case, that I could not learn the way of the Lord, however much I might plead for it, and mourn for it, only as he has been pleased to reveal it to me by his Spirit. Oftentimes I walk in darkness, and desire with all my heart to see the light; but not one ray of light can I find.

I read the Bible, but it is sealed. I read the communications of the brethren and sisters, but all that would be comfort in them is also sealed. I go to preaching, and try to proclaim the goodness of the Lord, but find no comfort in that. I see the Lord's little ones coming into the church, telling of the mercies of the Lord to them, and see others weeping tears of joy; but I am not moved. O such a heart as mine! But at a time when I am not expecting nor at all looking for anything, and generally when I have almost given up in despair, a light bursts in upon or in my heart, and I am filled with praise, and everything seems to be goodness from the Lord. That has been my condition of late; but this evening I feel that the Lord has again visited me, and given me some comfort, and enabled me to sing, with the spirit and understanding, some words of praise to his gracious name. Surely there is no God like our God, none that can deliver after this sort. I feel that he was with me in my darkness, or I should have fallen. We cannot hide from his face, even though we try, in the thick darkness; for the darkness is light about us: the darkness and light are both alike unto him. We get under a cloud, but God sees through it; for it is only his chariot, and he rides upon it, in the strength of his majesty. How he makes his children witnesses that he is a covenant-keeping God, and that he is slow to anger, and full of mercies. Surely he is long-suffering to usward, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance. If God is not willing that we should perish, we cannot perish. We cannot perish, however much we may feel at times that we are perishing; for he feeds us continually. It may be that we have at times to eat the bread of affliction, but it is holy bread, and sustains life. Just think that all that we receive to sustain us comes through the head; and Jesus, the head of the church, is in heaven, far above all things that are corrupt; and therefore all things that we receive through him are pure, and by them we live and are sustained. Afflictions and darkness are a great part of our experience here, but they are God's blessings to us, and are therefore the best for us; yea, we could not hope for the better joys of eternal bliss without these. Then again, by these things we are weaned from the world, and are made to feel that it is not our continual abiding place. There is no center here for us to look to. The Jews used to look to Jerusalem as a center for their worship, but our Jerusalem is not here. If the Lord had remained on earth in his natural body, there would have been a center here. But he would have us look away from this world, and all things that perish with the using; look away from this place, where moth and rust corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal, and look to the eternal abode of the eternal God, whither the Forerunner is for us entered, and where our hope is; and we are safely anchored, secure from all the storms of time. What a precious hope is ours, and how brightly it shines when we can look at it in the face of our blessed Jesus. We know that it cannot fail as long as we are kept by the power of God, through faith unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the last time.

Your brother in this precious hope,
L. H. HARDY.

CIMILARIO, Colfax Co., N. M.

G. BEEBE'S SONS:—Since seeing the letter of sister Lizzie Scott, and the mention made of it, first by brother Kercheval, and then by brother J. H. Yeoman, asking her address, and saying he had it in his mind to visit this country next summer, in company with Elder R. Flournoy, I have been impressed to write to brethren Kercheval and Yeoman personally; and after receiving the precious letter I did from brother Kercheval, it has made me feel like encouraging all who are impressed to write for the SIGNS. Do not hesitate, as I have done many times, from the feeling of imperfection, to edify the brethren. But few know how very many they reach, as sister Scott did, by renewing an acquaintance of many years ago. Not only this, but the Lord's dear people are a scattered people, and many only have intercourse with their brethren by periodicals.

Was it not a comfort to one of that tribe when the apostle James wrote "to the twelve tribes which are scattered abroad, greeting?" Is it not a comfort to a stranger, as he may feel himself to be, when he reads from the apostle Peter, "to the strangers scattered throughout Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia and Bithynia?" I now know what it is to be far separated from my dear mother, sister, brother, relatives and friends, and how good it is to hear how they fare at home. I also hope I have realized in a measure what a cheering word from my spiritual relatives does in my soul. They send glad tidings of what they have felt and do now feel. They speak of their Father's presence, and their mother's joy; how the children sit at the table, eat the food the Father has provided, are satisfied with the fatness of this provision, give honor to his care, lie down under his protection, where none can molest or make them afraid. The soul that knows a father's love, has desire for his household; and he, like Joseph, falls on his brethren's necks, kisses them, and asks, "Is my father yet alive?" To him he was not, yet he was. To his brethren there was joy. So to all the promise is sure. In the hour of greatest need there is greatest joy. At times, O how I long to unbosom my soul to my nearest of all friends, and implore of him grace sufficient for my day. He hath truly set the solitary in families. One may be in the midst of a throng, and yet be alone. He can be alone, yet be in most enjoyment. He can be separated from his brethren, and yet be with them. Tribulation, famine, nakedness, peril or sword, never have separated from him, neither can separate, one of his children. Can one be so tried, lack bread or clothing, be in danger, or have an instrument of death so poisoned, that the Almighty's arm cannot turn the shaft of harm, and make the wrath of man to praise him?

"In heaven, and earth, and air, and seas,
He executes his firm decrees;
And by his saints it stands confessed,
That what he does is ever best."

Fellowship is a precious boon. The more we feel the sacred tie, the more we rejoice. What can make darkness light but the light itself? He alone is the light; and when once enlightened, who can make it dark? For he is light, the believer's light, that light that must shine through life, through death, in and through eternal victory. Do I glory in tribulation, that I may know patience? That light must enlighten me, to show me the end of my trial. Does this give me experience, that when I am tried I may come forth as gold? Yea, hope maketh not ashamed.

"I'm in a world of hopes and fears,
A wilderness of toils and tears;
Where foes alarm, and dangers threat,
And pleasures kill, and glories cheat."

"I remember the days of old; I meditate on all thy works; I muse on the works of thy hands. I stretch forth my hands unto thee: my soul thirsteth after thee, as a thirsty land. Selah." How wonderful is that truth of the wisdom of the Son of God. He knoweth the Father, and blessed am I if the Father has revealed him unto me. Was he not in the beginning? And was I the gift of the Father, that he might remember me? The remnant in a land of bondage, under sin and iniquity, servants to the world and worldlings, are remembered in the covenant ordered in all things and sure. "Whoso offereth praise, glorifieth me: and to him that ordereth his conversation aright, will I show the salvation of God." Is this covenant my refuge and my portion? Do I know how poisoned with the serpent's sting is all creature remembrance? Are the things of old the burden of my supplication? Has my heart failed within me, in ordering my conversation aright? Have I declared the greatness of the Lord? Do I look upon my daily life as a pilgrimage in a stranger's land, whose children's mouth speaketh vanity, and whose right hand is a right hand of falsehood? Am I bowed down with a burden of daily and hourly sin? Does my mouth speak the praises of the Lord? Do I know that man that is born of a woman is of few days and full of trouble? Do I render evil for evil? Do I love my enemies, and deal justly and love mercy? Do men persecute me, and speaking evil of me falsely? Do I remember the wormwood, and therefore have hope? Am I at times left to myself, in a land wherein is no water? Does it cause me to hunger and thirst after Jesus? Do I know that by the grace of God I am what I am? Have I heard the sweetness of that still, small voice, My grace is sufficient for thee? Is my separation from my brethren a constant trial, and would I offend one of the little ones whom Jesus feeds? Would I have the rich of this world to judge me or my brethren? Am I moved when I or my brethren are forgetful of being purged from the old sins? Can I eat meat offered to idols of this world? Such are some of my emotions of mind; and if any mortal has such feelings as these, I would be glad to converse with him or her. I am not always thus humbled; but when I am, my glory is consumed like smoke.

If this is considered worthy a place before your readers, please give it to them.

In the love and fellowship of the truth, I would subscribe myself your brother in hope,

G. M. FETTER.

WAVERLY, N. Y., Feb. 8, 1889.

BRETHREN EDITORS OF THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES:—For some reason I feel inclined to drop a few lines to you, and if you think advisable you may publish them. Do as you think best about it. The subject of salvation is of deep interest to the dear saints of God. It always has been, and ever will be, inexhaustible. Though millions of years may be in the future, and millions of saints may rejoice in this salvation, its fullness is ever the same. The great orb of light which God placed in the literal heavens to give light and heat, has been enjoyed by many millions of men, women and children, yea, by every living thing, for six thousand years or more; yet it shines in all the brightness, beauty and warmth that it did when first beheld. In Christ Jesus all fullness dwells, and the saints are complete in him, who is the fullness of him that filleth all in all. Jesus Christ is the same yesterday, and to-day, and forever. Every good and perfect gift comes down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning. I rejoice in believing that in Jesus is a balm for every wound, a cordial for all our doubts and fears, a blessed promise suited for every condition that the tempest-tossed, afflicted, mourning subject of God's mercy ever will be placed in while in these low grounds of sin and sorrow. When all other refuges fail, God is our refuge. When weak and helpless, he is our strength. In all our trouble and sorrow he is a present help. When the enemy comes in like a flood, he will lift up a standard. When fiery darts from the enemy come thick and fast from every quarter, he is their shield and hiding place. His name is a strong tower, into which the righteous run and are safe. He is a hiding place from the wind, a covert from the tempest, as rivers of water in a dry land, as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land. This is but a drop of the boundless ocean of God's great mercy and goodness, as revealed to poor, sinful worms of the dust, through Jesus Christ our Savior. How little we realize that great love wherewith he loved us, even when we were dead in sin. "Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God." Wonder of wonders, that we have been made to hope in the mercy of the mighty God of Jacob. We have been given the assurance that we are heirs of God, and joint heirs with Jesus Christ, to an inheritance which is incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away; reserved in heaven for those who are kept by the power of God. Precious truth to weak and helpless sinners, who realize that they cannot keep themselves one moment. The power of God! that power that spoke the world and all things into existence; that power which controls the proud waves of sin and destruction, saying, "Thus far shalt thou go, and no farther, and here shall thy proud waves be stayed." Well might the psalmist declare, "Happy is he that hath the God of Jacob for his help, whose hope is in the Lord his God, which made heaven and earth, the sea, and all therein is: which keepeth truth forever: which executeth judgment for the oppressed." He giveth food to the hungry, looseth the prisoners, openeth the eyes of the blind, raiseth up them that are bowed down, preserveth the strangers, relieveth the fatherless and widow, but the way of the wicked he turneth upside down. God, the God of all grace, keepeth all his saints from putting their trust in princes (great men), or in the sons of men, in whom there is no help; but may they trust in the Lord, for in the Lord Jehovah is everlasting strength.

I want to say in conclusion that the SIGNS OF THE TIMES is to me a herald of truth, as it has been from the beginning. The doctrine contained in the prospectus is the same as is contended for by the editors and writers now, as far as I am able to judge. Brother Jenkins, your article on the subject of teaching children was to my mind plain, naked truth. Write again. Plain preaching is what we need in this day of darkness and delusion. Dear brethren in the ministry, the truth cannot be preached too plainly or too strong for the health of God's people. The very moment a minister begins to apologize for God, or tries to please men, he ceases to be a servant of God. Their calling is to feed the sheep, and not the goats. Jesus said to Peter, "Feed my sheep," "Feed my lambs." The apostle said, "Feed the flock of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood."

Two more thoughts, and I will close. First, a genuine Old School Baptist is one because he cannot be anything else. Second, one that has been connected with a sound Old School Baptist Church, and afterward joins one of the daughters of the "Mother of Harlots," and feels at home there, never was a genuine Old School Baptist.

Yours in hope,

G. BEEBE'S SONS:—Please find inclosed money for renewal of my subscription to the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. I thought I would do without it; but I cannot well dispense with it, as we have no good preaching here. There is a great deal of pretended preaching; but I cannot believe it is consistent with the Bible. I wish I could hear a Primitive Baptist preach. There is none of that faith here. I have not heard one since I was a child; therefore I do not know anything about them except through the SIGNS. I do not know why I want to hear one preach. I do not belong to any denomination; I am simply an outsider. No one here believes as I do. Some tell me if I continue in my belief I will go to hell. I do not know where I will go when I die; but I know that I cannot get religion of myself. The good Lord alone can change me from nature to grace. It is nothing that I can do. O! how I wish to be a christian! But I am so wicked and ignorant it seems that every one is better than I am. I feel myself to be alone. It would be a great privilege to talk to some one who could understand me; but it seems there is none. Please tell me what is a Nazarene? I dreamed that I was one. Please explain the meaning of the word. It is often on my mind, and I would be glad to know. But why should I trouble you with my questions? I am nothing—less than nothing. Please look over my ignorance, and remember me in your prayers.

SALLIE J. UNDERWOOD.

DUNKERTON, Iowa, Feb. 14, 1889.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—I see you have made a reduction in the price of your hymn books. How much better it would be if all Old School Baptist Churches would use one kind of book; and as singing is part of worship, it is necessary to have sound hymns. How many hymns give uncertain sounds. It is impossible to use all other books with yours, as in many books the authors' words have been changed. Some books have less verses than others; others more than yours. I must say that your book is the best book used, and is free from Arminianism.

Your brother,

THOMAS BLAKE.

WHAT IS A NAZARENE?

IN reply to the inquiry of Mrs. Underwood, on this page, we might say that her dream gave all the information for which she seeks. The very sense of unworthiness and self-aborrence manifest in her letter, identifies her as a follower of the glorious Redeemer, who was called a Nazarene as a term of reproach, by reason of the humble place of his abode as a child. It is recorded that after Jesus was born in Bethlehem of Judea, according to the Scriptures, Herod sought to destroy him. God defeated that wicked design by sending a dream to direct Joseph and Mary with the young child to go down into Egypt. In a dream also he forbade the wise men to return to bring information to Herod. These dreams served a very essential purpose in the fulfillment of definite declarations of prophecy, written many hundreds of years before the persons were born who were used for the execution of the things which were by the hand and counsel of God determined before to be done. While there is no truth in those filthy dreams which originate in the polluted imaginations of men, the Scriptures give many illustrations of the fact that God is not confined to the waking hours of men in the revelation of his truth. So Elihu says, "For God speaketh once, yea twice, yet man perceiveth it not. In a dream, in a vision of the night, when deep sleep falleth upon men, in slumberings upon the bed; then he openeth the ears of men, and sealeth instruction, that he may withdraw man from his purpose, and hide pride from man."—Job xxxiii. 14-17. Many dear children of God are troubled with doubts and fears of the genuineness of their experience, because some of the most important revelations they have received were given them while they were naturally sleeping. Yet every one who is taught of God must know that his natural mind can no more receive the revelation of divine truth when awake than when asleep. All spiritual instruction is received through faith, and that fruit of the Spirit is not less capable of beholding divine truth when the saint is naturally sleeping than when he is awake.

The literal meaning of the word "Nazarene" is, a native of Nazareth. That was a small city of Galilee; and it was regarded by the Jews as a term of reproach to be called a Nazarene. This is evident from the answer of the Pharisees to Nicodemus, "Art thou of Galilee? Search and look; for out of Galilee ariseth no prophet."—John vii. 52. So when accusing Paul before Felix, Tertullus charged that he was a ringleader of the sect of the Nazarenes.—Acts xxiv. 5. In the way of reproach this epithet was applied to the disciples by their enemies in the primitive age, as they are called in this day by such opprobrious names as Hardshells, Iron Jackets, and other terms of contempt. Indeed, it was by the malice of their persecuting adversaries that they were first called christians in Antioch.—Acts xi. 26. To be a Nazarene was to incur all the hatred and persecution which the popular religious world heaped upon the followers of Jesus. In this way the wrath of man is made to testify to the fact that the saints in the present day are indeed followers of the Lord Jesus.

When this question is considered in its individual application to the saints in their own experience it is not so easily settled. While every conscious sinner is anxious to know whether he is really a Nazarene, in the sense of being truly a follower of Jesus, the corruptions of his own heart so bear witness against him that he is ready to give up in despair. The good which he would do he cannot accomplish, and he constantly mourns that he does the evil which he would not do. Looking at his own works, he sees that they all testify against his claim to be following the sacred footsteps of the perfect Redeemer. In himself he finds nothing to indicate that he is led by the Spirit of Christ; and therefore he is made to hate his own life as being the very reverse of what he would have it. No Jew ever despised the Galileans of Nazareth, as he hates the evil of his own heart. He most earnestly desires to be like Jesus and to follow in his footsteps; yet he cannot understand that in the fulfillment of that desire he must be shown his utter destitution of righteousness in himself. As Jesus had nowhere to lay his head in his humiliation, so his followers must know by experience the vanity of all dependence upon any earthly hope. They can enter into the kingdom of rest in Jesus in no other way except by following him "through much tribulation." If they could know that they were following Jesus, no affliction would be tribulation to them. Hence it is appointed unto the saints that they must walk by the faith of the Son of God, and not by the direction of natural reason. Every one who is led by the Spirit of God is obliged to cross all the directions of his own fleshly mind. It is in this way that the followers of Jesus must take up their cross. By faith they walk in his footsteps, while even their own reason denies the testimony of faith that they are his disciples. Thus they are made to despise themselves and have no confidence in the flesh, while they endure "as seeing him who is invisible." This experience is peculiar to the true disciples of Christ; and therefore every one who bears this mark is in the true sense of the word a Nazarene.

Throughout the inspired record of the Scriptures the characteristic marks are clearly written, by which the peculiar people of God are identified. They are an afflicted and poor people. Job confessed before God, "Behold, I am vile; what shall I answer thee? I will lay mine hand upon my mouth. Once have I spoken; but I will not answer; yea, twice; but I will proceed no further." Jeremiah also complains of the same distress, "See, O Lord, and consider; for I am become vile."—Job xl. 4, 5; Lam. i. 11. This is a feature of the spiritual Nazarene. Yet those who bear this distinguishing family mark are not able to see it as such in themselves. This may be indicated in the fact that the servants of God are sealed with the name of the Lamb in their foreheads.—Rev. vii. 3; xxii. 4. No one can see his own forehead, yet each can see the mark in others. Those who bear that mark are only such as are found sighing and crying for all the abominations that are done in the chosen city of Jerusalem.—Ezek. ix. 4. No such mark is set upon those whose mourning is for the sins which are committed by the outside world. Each individual mourner finds in himself the occasion of his grief. All who bear this mark are Nazarenes. This is that witness which the true believer has in himself. So long as this sighing and crying on account of indwelling sin is found in the heart of any sinner, there is unmistakable evidence of that hunger and thirst after righteousness which identifies the subjects of that blessing which Jesus has spoken. "Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness; for they shall be filled." As in nature no one can desire to suffer hunger and thirst, so it is impossible that any one should desire to bear the marks by which the true subjects of divine grace are identified. It is not under the control of any one either naturally or in spiritual things to hunger and thirst. When ready to perish from want of food and water, no consideration can keep the suffering one from hunger and thirst; on the other hand, when nature is satisfied, no inducement can prevail upon him to really desire food and drink. Thus the absurdity of the popular system is manifest in their exhortations to those who have no consciousness of sin, urging them to desire righteousness.

It is not strange that our inquiring friend wishes to know what is a Nazarene. The Spirit of Christ declares by the psalmist, "I am as a wonder unto many; but thou art my strong refuge." This cry unto God goes up from every Nazarene, in the full realization of the fellowship of the sufferings of the dear Redeemer. Every one who feels this cry in truth, is certainly manifest as a follower of Jesus in his afflictions. The outward circumstances surrounding the saints are very different from each other. Most of them are literally poor in this world's possessions, and have to eat their bread in daily toil; their necessities drive them far away from earthly loved ones. This is used by the tempter often as a ground for questioning the genuineness of their hope in the grace of God. But it is rather an evidence in their favor. "Hath not God chosen the poor of this world, rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which he hath promised to them that love him?"—James ii. 5. But there are some of his chosen ones to whom he has committed more of temporal wealth. Abraham, Job, David and Solomon had worldly possessions; yet they were "poor and needy." Earthly treasures and honors cannot satisfy the desire of those who mourn on account of sin in themselves. They are still poor though they have all the jewels of a thousand mines. These cannot give the righteousness for which they long. Wherever such a poor and needy one is found, there is a Nazarene. In following Jesus they must feel the poverty which oppressed him, and be made partakers of his sufferings. There is no other way in which his disciples can manifest their devotion to their Lord but by rejoicing in the privilege of suffering affliction with his chosen people. It is by the leading of the Spirit alone that any one can thus rejoice. Left to the direction of their own carnal mind, even the saints will always shrink from the sufferings which are the portion of the followers of Jesus while here in this world. But when they are by the Spirit enabled to see Jesus in the path of poverty and reproach, then they joyfully choose to suffer the loss of all things for the sweet privilege of resting in his infinite love; and all the treasures and glories of earth fade into utter worthlessness in comparison with the far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory experienced in the fellowship of the sufferings of Christ.

Every subject of the salvation which is in Christ Jesus must suffer the portion given him of the tribulations promised his disciples in the world; by this mark they are clearly distinguished from all the self-righteous religionists of the world. All who love our Lord are thus separated from the world, although many of them may never by a public profession confess their trust in him. The adversary has many devices by which to hinder the saints from returning to give glory to God by openly uniting with his organized church. In some cases, as with our inquirer, they may be far from any company of believers, with whom they might unite in observing the appointed ordinances which would proclaim their submission to the injunctions of the gospel of Christ. Many are conferring with flesh and blood in consulting their own carnal wisdom, and fall into the snare of trusting to their own caution, rather than walking in simple dependence upon the command of the Lord, which speaks to all who love him. Whether they are walking in obedience to the ordinances of the gospel or in disregard of them, every one who hopes for salvation through the blood of Jesus, has in that hope named the name of Christ; and all such are commanded by his authority to depart from iniquity. Disobedience to the law of the Lord in whom they trust, is iniquity to every one who loves Jesus. All who desire to love Jesus and to bear his image, are certainly in spirit already his disciples, and such will find peace and rest in openly acknowledging themselves as Nazarenes.

SOLOMON'S TEMPLE SPIRITUALIZED.

BY JOHN BUNYAN.

CHAPTER LII.

Of the chargers of the Temple.

IN the tabernacle they had but twelve of them, and they were made of silver; but in the temple they had in all a thousand and thirty. The thirty were made of gold, the rest were made of silver.—Num. vii. 84.

These chargers were not for uses common or profane, but, as I take it, they were those in which the passover and other meat offerings were dressed up when the people came to eat before God in his holy temple.

The meat, you know I told you, was opposite to milk; and so are these chargers to the bowls, and cups, and flagons of the temple.

The meat was of two sorts, roast and boiled. Of that which was roasted was the passover, and of that which was boiled were trespass offerings. Wherefore, concerning the passover, he saith, "Eat not of it raw, nor sodden at all in water, but roast with fire; his head with his legs, and with the purtenance thereof."—Ex. xii. 9.

The roast meat was a type of the body of Christ, as suffering for our sins; the which, when it was roasted, was and is dressed up in chargers and set before the congregations of the saints.

But what were the chargers a type of? I also ask, In what charger is our gospel passover now dressed up and set before the people? Is it not in the evangelists, the prophets, and epistles of the apostles? They therefore are the chargers, and the ordinance of the supper. In these also are the trespass offerings with what is fried in pans, mystically prepared for the children of the Highest.

And why might they not be a type of gospel sermons? I answer, I think not so fitly; for, alas! the best of sermons in the world are but as thin slices cut out of those large dishes. Our ministers are the carvers, good doctrine is the meat, and the chargers in which this meat is found are the holy canonical Scriptures, &c., though, as I said, most properly the New Testament of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. In these is Christ most truly, lively and amply set before us as crucified, or roasted at the fire of God's law for our sins, that we might live by him, through faith feeding upon him.—2 Cor. iii. 12; Gal. iii. 12; Acts iii. 18-22; xiii. 4; xxvi. 22; 1 Peter i. 10; Acts vii. 42; xv. 15; xxviii. 23; Romans xvi. 26; Revelation x. 7. * * *

All these are set forth before us in the holy Scriptures, and presented to us thereby, as in the golden chargers of the temple. He that will scoff at this, let him scoff. The chargers were a type of something; and he that can show a fitter antitype than is here proposed for consideration, let him do it, and I will be thankful to him. * * *

CHAPTER LIII.

Of the goings out of the Temple.

AS TO the comings into the temple, of them we have spoken already, namely, of the outer and inner court, as also of the doors of the porch and temple. The coming in was but one straight course, and that a type of Jesus Christ; but the goings out were many.—John x. 9; xiv. 6.

Now, as I said, it is insinuated that the goings out are many, answerable to the many ways which the children of men have invented to apostatize from God. Christ is the way into, but sin the way out of the temple of God. True, I read not of a description of the goings out of this house, as I read of the comings in. Only when they had Athaliah out thence she is said to go out by the way by which the horses came into the king's stables; and there she was slain, as it were upon the horse dunghill.—2 Kings xi. When Uzziah also went out of this house for his transgression, he was cast out of all society, and made to dwell in a kind of pest-house, even to the day of his death.—2 Chron. xxvi. 20, 21.

Thus, therefore, though these goings out are not particularly described, the judgments that followed them that have for their transgressions been thrust out thence, have been both remarkable and tremendous; for to die upon a dunghill, or in a pest-house, and that for wicked actions, is a shameful, a disgraceful thing. And God will still be spreading dung upon the faces of such, and no greatness shall prevent it. * * *

But what are we to understand in gospel days by going out of the house of the Lord for or by sin? I answer, If it be done voluntarily, then sin leads you out; if it be done by the holy compulsion of the church, then it is done by the judicial judgment of God; that is, they are cut off and cast out from hence, as a just reward for their transgressions.—Lev. xx. 18; xxii. 3; Ezek. xiv. 8; 1 Cor. v. 13. * * *

But if their sin be not unpardonable, they may by repentance be recovered, and in mercy tread these courts again. Now the way to this recovery is, to think seriously what they have done, or by what ways they went out from the house of God. Hence the prophet is bid to show to the rebellious house, first the goings out of the house, and then the comings in. But, I say, first, he bids show them the goings out thereof.—Ezek. xliii. 10, 11. And this is of absolute necessity for the recovering of the sinner. For until he that has sinned himself out of God's house shall see what danger he has incurred to himself by this his wickedly going out, he will not unfeignedly desire to come in thither again. * * *

CHAPTER LIV.

Of the singers belonging to the Temple.

HAVING thus far passed through the temple, I come now to the singers there. The singers were many, but all of the churches, either Jews or proselytes. Nor was there any, as I know of, under the Old Testament worship, admitted to sing the songs of the church, and to celebrate that part of worship with the saints, but they who, at least in appearance, were so. The song of Moses, of Deborah, and of those that danced before David, with others that you read of, were all performed, either by Jews by nature, or of such as were proselyted to their religion.—Ex. xv. 1; Judges v. 1, 2; 1 Sam. xviii. 6. And such worship then was occasioned by God's appearance for them against the power of the Gentiles, their enemies.

But we are confined to the songs of the temple, a more distinct type of ours in the church under the gospel.

The singers were many; but the chief of them, in the days of David, were David himself, Asaph, Jeduthun and Haman, and their sons. In David's time, the chief of these singers were two hundred fourscore and eight.—1 Chron. xxv. These singers of old were to sing their songs over the burnt offerings, which were types of the sacrificed body of Christ, a memorial of which offering we have at the Lord's table, the consummation of which Christ and his disciples celebrated with a hymn.—Matt. xxvi. 30.

And as of old they were the church that did sing in the temple, according to institution, to God, so also they are by God's appointment to be sung by the church in the new. Hence they are said to be the redeemed that sing. The song that they sing is said to be the song of their redemption.—Rev. v. 9, 10. It is a song that no man can learn but they.

They were of old appointed to sing that were cunning and skillful in songs. And answerable to this, it is said that no man could learn our New Testament song but the hundred and forty and four thousand which were redeemed from the earth.—1 Chron. xv. 22; Rev. xiv. 3.

These songs were sung with harps, psalteries, symbols and trumpets; a type of our singing with spiritual joy, from grace in our hearts.—1 Chron. xxv. 6; 2 Chron. xxix. 26-28; Col. iii. 16.

The singers of old were to be clothed in fine linen; which fine linen was a type of innocency, and an upright conversation. Hence the singers under the New Testament are said to be virgins, such in whose mouth was no guile, and that were without fault before the throne of God.—1 Chron. xv. 27; Rev. xiv. 1-6. See also Rev. vii. 9-16; Psalm xxxiii. 1.

The songs sung in the temple were new, or such as were compiled after the manner of repeated mercies that the church of God had received, or were to receive; and answerable to this is the church to sing now, new songs, with new hearts, for new mercies.—Psa. xxxiii. 3; xl. 3; xcvi. cxliv. 9; Rev. xiv. 3.

New songs, I say, are grounded on new matters, new occasions, new mercies, new deliverances, new discoveries of God to the soul, or for new frames of heart, and are such as are most taking, most pleasing, and most refreshing to the soul.

These songs of old, to distinguish them from heathenish ones, were called God's songs, the Lord's songs, because taught by him, and learned of him, and enjoined to them, to be sung to his praise. Hence David said that God had put a new song in his mouth, even praise to our God.—1 Chron. xxv. 7; Psa. xlvii. 6, 7; cxxxvii. 4; xl. 3.

These songs were called the songs of Zion, and the songs of the temple.—Psa. cxxxvii. 3; Amos viii. 3. And they are so called as they were theirs to sing there. I say, of them of Zion, and the worshipers in the temple. I say, to sing in the church, by the church, to him who is the God of the church, for the mercies, benefits and blessings which she has received from him. Zion songs, temple songs, must be sung by Zion's sons and temple worshipers. The redeemed of the Lord shall return, and come to Zion with songs, and everlasting joy upon their heads: they shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall fly away. Therefore they shall come and sing in the height, or upon the mountains of Zion, and shall flow together to the goodness of the Lord. Break forth into singing, ye mountains, and let the inhabitants of the rock sing.—Isa. xlv. 23; xlii. 11. * * *

CHAPTER LV.

Of the union of the holy and most holy Temple.

THAT commonly called the temple of God at Jerusalem, considered as standing of two parts, was called the outward and inward temple, or the holy and most holy place. They were built upon one and the same foundation; neither could one go into the holiest, but go through the holy place.

The first house, namely, that which we have been speaking of, was a type of the church militant, and the place

most holy a type of the church triumphant. I say, of the church triumphant as it is now. So then, the house standing of these two parts, was a shadow of the church both in heaven and earth. And for that they are joined together by one and the same foundation, it was to show that they above, and we below, are yet one and the self-same house of God. Hence they and we together are called, "The whole family in heaven and earth."—Eph. iii. 14, 15. And hence it is said again, that we who believe on earth are come to Mount Zion, to the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, to an innumerable company of angels, to the general assembly and church of the first-born, which are written in heaven, and to the spirits of just men made perfect, and to God, the Judge of all, and to Jesus, the Mediator of the new covenant, and to the blood of sprinkling, that speaketh better things than that of Abel.—Heb. xii. 22-24.

The difference then between us and them, is now that we are really two, in divers places. True, we are below stairs, and they above; they in their holy day, and we in our working-day clothes; they in harbor, and we in the storm; they at rest, and we in the wilderness; they singing, as crowned with joy; we crying, as crowned with thorns. But I say, we are all of one house, one family, and are all children of one father. This, therefore, we must not forget, lest we debar ourselves of much of that which otherwise, while here, we have a right unto. Let us therefore, I say, remember that the temple of God is but one, though divided, as one may say, above stairs and below; or holy and most holy place. For it stands upon the same foundation, and is called but one, the temple of God, which is builded upon the Lord our Savior.

I told you before, that none of old could go into the most holy, but by the holy place, even by the vail that made the partition between.—Ex. xxvi. 33; Lev. xvi. 2, 12, 15; Heb. ix. 7, 8; x. 19.

Wherefore they are deceived that think to go into the holiest, which is heaven, when they die, who hate the holy place while they live. * * *

OBITUARY NOTICES.

Ruth A. Pocock was born in Warren Co., Ohio, June 17th, 1814, and died Feb. 27th, 1889, aged seventy-four years, eight months and ten days.

Her maiden name was Lamb. She came to Butler County with her parents when five years of age, and was united in marriage to Reuben Pocock, Feb. 7th, 1839, the result of this union being one child, a daughter. Her husband died Sept. 10th, 1876. Sister Pocock united with the old Fairfield Baptist Church, near Princeton, Ohio, about eleven years ago, and was baptized by Elder Levi Bavis. As they came up out of the water she told the brother that for thirty-six long years she had longed to see the waters move for this cause. She was a most devoted believer in salvation by grace, and strong in the faith once delivered to the saints. Her last sickness covered a period of five months, during which time she had been constantly confined to her bed. She was conscious until the last, fully realizing her condition, and with the apostle she would say, "For me to live is Christ, and to die is gain." During her entire sickness she was never heard to murmur, but bore her afflictions cheerfully, with the patience of a saint, and they that keep the commandments of God and the faith of Jesus. We visited sister Pocock during her illness; and while we looked upon her we felt with the poet to say,

"Lord, when we see a saint of thine
Lie gasping out her breath,
With longing eyes and looks divine,
Smiling and pleased in death," would we desire her to stay? No, no; for what is our loss is her eternal gain. Her soul left this mortal land fearlessly when the great Master gave command. Her faith governed death, and she lost by degrees mortal things; and as the shores of time lessened, her joys arose, devotion broke the prison walls, and hastened her last remove.

To the church the loss is almost irreparable; but may Zion's King still reign in righteousness. Her funeral took place from the home of her son-in-law on Saturday, March 2d, where assembled a vast concourse of friends to pay the last sad tribute of respect. The writer of the above tried to speak from Revelation xiv. 12, 13; after which the solemn procession was formed, and we took up the line of march for the city of the dead, at Hamilton, where all that was mortal was laid to rest. May God abundantly bless the sorrowing and afflicted ones, and save us all, for Jesus' sake.

DIED—On Wednesday morning, March 6th, 1889, at her late residence, Hender-son, Md., Esther L. Meredith, aged forty-eight years and one month.

Sister Meredith and her husband, Wm. W. Meredith, have long been connected with the church at Cow Marsh. She was baptized June 22d, 1877, having witnessed a good confession before many witnesses. Since then she had shown a life of constant devotion to the cause, adorning her profession, and presenting a worthy example to all around of meekness, of sincerity, and steadfastness in the truth. She was complaining about three weeks, but there was no particular alarm until the last three or four days. It seemed to be a complication of diseases. I cannot convey to those who had never shared the hospitality or enjoyed the fellowship of this family in their home much idea of the virtues of this spiritual minded sister, or the loss that the family and the church have sustained. We had fondly hoped that she had many years yet to serve her generation as a mother in Israel. The blow has fallen upon the family suddenly and with crushing weight. The world is not capable of making up their loss. I learn from the family that she was fully aware that the time of her departure was drawing near, and that she seemed to enter somewhat into the realities of the eternal world while yet clothed with mortality. The presence of a child that had been called away some time before seemed to be near, whose voice, with that of the Savior, was calling her to a happier home. While able to sing she repeatedly sang, "There is a place of hallowed peace

For those with care oppressed,
Where sighs and sorrowing tears shall cease,
And all be hushed to rest."

Instead of indulging in continual sorrow for the loss of those who were so dearly loved while here, we have cause for gratitude for the boon that has been given us to enjoy for a time. A bright and worthy example has been left to us.

The bereaved family, the husband and three children, have the sympathies of the entire community, while they sorrow not without the assurance that the wife and mother has gone to receive the end and consummation of her faith and hope.
E. RITTENHOUSE.

Mr. John H. Elliott died near Concord, Sussex Co., Del., Feb. 13th, 1889, aged sixty-nine years, two months and sixteen days.

His widow is a member of the Broad Creek Old School Baptist Church. Mr. Elliott was not a professor, but rather a confessor, and manifested a love for the truth by his kindness and hospitality to those of our faith and order, and by his request that if no Old School Baptist could be obtained to conduct the funeral services, he wanted no other service held. He was twice married, and has left a widow, eleven children and twenty-three grandchildren. He was highly esteemed as a citizen, as was manifested by the large and respectful attendance at his funeral. He was consigned to rest in the church-yard of the Asbury Methodist Church, in whose meeting-house services were conducted by the writer.

W. W. MEREDITH.

DELMAR, Del.

OUR beloved sister, Mrs. Frances O. Dewey, of Havana, Schuyler Co., N. Y., departed this life Jan. 19th, 1889, aged thirty-five years, one month and eleven days.

She was baptized in the fellowship of the Old School Baptist Church at Burdett, N. Y., Sept. 3d, 1871, by Elder St. John, and remained a firm believer in the doctrine of salvation by grace until her death. She had one son, DeHart A. Dewey, aged five years, five months and eleven days, who has gone on before her. The funeral was held in the meeting-house at Burdett, and I spoke to a large congregation of mourners and friends.

She leaves a kind husband, a son, an aged mother, brothers, sisters, and many friends, to mourn their loss. May God bless and comfort them in their afflictions.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date, this date denotes the time at which your subscription expires, and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

CORRESPONDENCE.

UTICA, N. Y., Feb., 1889.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—The inclosed by brother H. Cox, of Kentucky, finding a responsive "Amen" in our hearts, and having obtained consent of the writer, I forward you for publication in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, should it meet your approval, that others of like precious faith may be comforted and instructed therewith. Brother Cox has other texts under consideration, which when arrived at I hope he will at once send to you for insertion in our dear family paper.

Also, will brother Wm. L. Beebe please give his views on Job xix. 25-27, especially the twenty-sixth verse?

L. ALEXANDER.

GHENT, Ky., Jan. 27, 1889.

DEAR SISTER LYDIA ALEXANDER:—Yours of the 18th instant is at hand, in which you wish my views on Matthew xii. 43-45, which reads as follows: "When the unclean spirit is gone out of a man, he walketh through dry places, seeking rest, and findeth none. Then he saith, I will return into my house from whence I came out; and when he is come, he findeth it empty, swept, and garnished. Then goeth he, and taketh with himself seven other spirits more wicked than himself, and they enter in and dwell there: and the last state of that man is worse than the first. Even so shall it be also unto this wicked generation."

The closing words of that paragraph are, "Even so shall it be also unto this wicked generation." The unbelief of that generation, which evidently were the Jews, with whom our Lord was daily surrounded, is clearly declared by him in that chapter. Their unbelief was fully made manifest when they said, "Master, we would see a sign from thee." But he said to them, "An evil and adulterous generation seeketh after a sign; and there shall no sign be given to it, but the sign of the prophet Jonas." That is the generation of whom our Lord speaks, "Even so shall it be also unto this wicked generation." That generation was the unbelieving Jews, that people who witnessed the wonderful miracles wrought by our Lord; yet they would not believe that he was the promised Messiah. Although they witnessed his wondrous power in healing the sick, making the dumb to speak, the blind to see, the lame to walk, and the dead raised up, yet they cried out,

"Away with him! crucify him! crucify him!" That was the generation of which our Lord spoke, saying, "When the unclean spirit is gone out of a man, he walketh through dry places, seeking rest." The inquiry arises, What was that unclean spirit that went out of the unbelieving Jews? It will be remembered that the Jews were, at the time our Lord appeared upon the earth, divided into three classes, the Scribes, Pharisees and Sadducees; the latter of which our Lord called hypocrites, because they claimed to look to the law and the prophets, which taught the doctrine of the resurrection of the dead. They were Jews yet when they claimed to hold as true all things taught in the Old Testament Scriptures, which declared the coming of our Lord, his death, burial and resurrection. They denied that resurrection. Then surely they were hypocrites. But the two other classes were no better than those hypocrites. The Scribes were the most highly educated class among the Jews, and claimed, by reason of their great literary attainments, to know and understand the law more perfectly than any others, and to comprehend more fully the teachings of the prophets; but when our Lord appeared, their utter ignorance of both the law and the prophets was made fully manifest by their denial of him of whom Moses in the law and the prophets did write. They demanded a literal construction and carrying out of the law. An eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth was demanded by them. If the offender plucked out the right eye of his enemy, his right eye must be plucked out; and if he extracted the front tooth of his enemy, his front tooth must also be extracted. But that class failed, notwithstanding all their education, to know anything about the spirituality of the law; and they failed, notwithstanding their great learning, to comprehend the teachings of the prophets. They regarded the Pharisees as being greatly beneath them, and looked upon the Sadducees with contempt. They regarded the Pharisees as being in great error because of their liberal construction of the law. The Pharisees were willing to accept fines in money from offenders, instead of the exact penalty named in the law. All three of these classes claimed to be par excellence righteous; hence they pretended to thank God that they were better than others, that they paid tithes of all they had, and kept the law. They all were a very religious people, but their religion was a mixture of Judaism and Paganism. At the time of the coming of our Lord a great controversy was going on between these three classes. The law was read every sabbath in the temple, and each heard and placed his own construction on it. Their constructions were drawn from their carnal minds, which were enmity against God. Hence, when our Lord appeared, in fulfillment of the law and the prophets, they knew him not; and their enmity against him was made manifest in their uniting with Pagan Rome in the persecution and crucifixion of our Lord and his disciples. Yet many of them followed him during his ministry, but they followed him for the loaves and fishes. While they were thus following him they were walking in dry places. Those places were dry, for there was none of their natural religion before or with them. They could drink of the wine at the marriage feast in Cana of Galilee, and they could eat of the loaves and fishes in the wilderness; but they could not, by all their natural powers, understand the power which wrought such wonderful changes in natural things. At that period of the world's history a sort of religious chaos seemed floating over all civilization. It was a combination of Judaism, Paganism and infidelity. The latter predominated, as is evident by all joining in the persecution of the innocent Son of God and his feeble followers, who were as sheep among wolves. Then surely all except the followers of Jesus were walking in dry places, seeking rest, and finding none. You, my dear sister, no doubt have long since been made to know that there is no rest but in the name of Jesus. When the unclean spirit, which was the spirit of persecution, had gone out of those who drank that wine and ate of those loaves and fishes, their natural religion left them; and while they, no doubt, were filled with natural wonder and astonishment when beholding those God-like displays of his power, yet love for him and for the wonderful truth he taught was absent—found no lodgment in their hearts. Then they surely were walking through dry places, seeking rest, and finding none. There is no rest, as we have said, but in Jesus. Carnal professors are now, as they have ever been, seeking rest outside of Jesus, outside of the great truth of the gospel, which centers in Jesus; but they find none, for the reason that the unclean spirit of idolatry, persecution and unbelief has not been cast out of them. But at times it may have gone out of them. If that spirit could go out of a man, it could return; and when it returned to this natural man, and took possession of that man (that house), it found it swept and garnished. Yes, the last vestige of those feelings and impressions made upon the natural heart and mind by visible demonstrations of the power, goodness and mercy of God, is swept out. Then he is in condition to take with himself the seven spirits, which mean all the corruptions of the flesh, adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, envyings, murders, drunkenness and revelings. The word "seven" is a perfect number in the Scriptures, and it fitly represents the condition of him who once spiritually was walking through dry places; not where there were streams of living water flowing from the throne of God, which represent the saving grace of our God, which gives rest to the weary pilgrim all along the journey of life; gives rest to the dear saints, whose God is the Lord, and who pray day by day for grace to overcome those evil spirits. It is in that grace they find that victory which they so much crave and desire—a victory in which they are made to lie down in green pastures, beside still waters; not in dry places, but in that glorious, spiritual Canaan. There the glorious Lord will be unto us a place of broad rivers and streams, wherein shall go no galley with cars, neither shall gallant ship pass thereby. Ah, my dear sister, what a wonderful contrast between that man who is walking through dry places, seeking rest, and finding none, and him who by grace divine can say, "There the glorious Lord will be unto us a place of broad rivers and streams." The dear saints often hunger and thirst after righteousness; but they have the blessed promise that they shall be filled. They often feel, as Achsah said to her father Caleb, "Thou hast given me a south land; give me also springs of water." They realize and know that in this south land, this land in which they in years gone by walked through dry places, seeking rest, but finding none, they found no rest till Jesus gave them the upper and the nether springs, from which they drank freely the waters of salvation, that water which is in them a well of living water, springing up into everlasting life.

"The last state of that man is worse than the first." Here our Lord draws a striking and forcible comparison. That man represented the Jews, who had been greatly blessed, to whom had been given the oracles of God; but they heeded them not. They received not the wonderful truths recorded in the law and by the prophets. Their carnal minds were enmity against the great Giver of that law, against him who had inspired the prophets, and enabled them to foretell the coming of the Messenger of the covenant to his temple, in which he would make one great and perfect offering for the sins of his people. In their corrupt minds they looked for the appearing of a great temporal prince, who would conquer all the enemies of Israel, and establish that nation above all the nations of the earth; hence their pride and unbelief. What a contrast between the carnally minded and those who by regenerating grace are enabled to look into the spirituality of the law of God. They are prefigured by the sabbath named in that law, that rest which is secured to all the redeemed. They do not walk in dry places, but in the paths of peace and rest; that rest which they find only in him who is the end of the law to them, to all who are made spiritually minded, and thus prepared to worship their God in spirit and in truth. Our Lord said, "The last state of that man is worse than the first. Even so shall it be also unto this wicked generation." Having attempted to show that the unbelieving Jews, with whom our Lord was surrounded during his ministry, were specially referred to by the words, "wicked generation," let us turn our thoughts to what their last state was. Our Lord said to that generation, "Behold, your house is left unto you desolate." In this language, as well as when he said, "The last state of that man is worse than the first," he uttered a prophecy of the overthrow of Jerusalem. He was looking in prophetic wisdom upon that period when their city would be overthrown, their temple destroyed, and that generation driven into exile and captivity. He also said, in describing the last state of that generation, "For then shall be great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time, no, nor ever shall be." Solomon said, "The wicked is driven away in his wickedness; but the righteous hath hope in his death." That language applies to that wicked generation which was driven from Jerusalem. They were driven away in their unbelief, to suffer the tortures of a complete separation from the land they loved, from that land which had been given to their fathers, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, for them. They had been greatly blessed by the Almighty in that land; but now they had entered upon their last state, which was surely worse than the first. But how solemn the thought, that in their fearful overthrow they are compared to all the generations which know not God; all who, like that wicked generation, live upon heaven's bounties, and die in unbelief. But Solomon said, "The righteous hath hope in his death." This language of that wise king makes a rift in the clouds that overshadow us, when our meditations are upon those who know not God. Ah, my dear sister, were it not for that hope, all would be darkness, gloom and sorrow! "The righteous hath hope in his death." The believing Jews had loved their land and their great city; but when the period came for its destruction, their God in whom they trusted opened a way for them to escape to the mountains from their doomed city. So God is a present help in every time of need to his people. He says to them, "When thou passest through the waters, I will be with thee; and through the rivers, they shall not overflow thee: when thou walkest through the fire thou shalt not be burned, neither shall the flames kindle upon thee. For I am the Lord thy God, the holy One of Israel, thy Savior." In him, dear sister, let us trust; for he is the hope of his people, the rock of their salvation, and to his great and wondrous name is due all the glory.

You will please excuse the length of these feeble and rambling thoughts, and accept them as a token of my christian love. I greatly sympathize with sister Kendall in her affliction, but hope that she has the presence of our glorious Lord to comfort her. I may at some future time offer you some thoughts on the other texts to which you called my attention.

Please write me when you have leisure, and believe me affectionately yours,

H. COX.

KELLY'S CORNERS, Mich., Feb., 1889.

DEAR BRETHREN:—I send you this letter of brother Jones, which, as he says, is submitted to your judgment. I was greatly pleased that any of the dear brethren should notice my request. When I reflect that for the offense of one person in one tribe of Israel the Lord plagued and troubled the whole camp, I can but feel that it was a matter that concerned them all. I have often thought of the case of Phineas, to which the brother refers. It would seem a strange act for which he should receive the "covenant of peace." The idea that is generally carried of a "peacemaker," is one who does not meddle nor trouble himself about the affairs of others, so long as he keeps out of trouble himself. But I truly feel that we learn that that which pertains to the peace of Jerusalem is the affairs of every one who loves her.

Your sister in gospel bonds,
KATE SWARTOUT.

GLENWOOD, Tex., Jan. 25, 1889.

MRS. KATE SWARTOUT—DEAR

SISTER IN CHRIST:—Some time early in the fall I noticed a communication in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES over your signature, in which you referred to the affiliation by church members to the secret institutions of the day, and in which you requested Elder Wm. J. Purington, or some other brother, to write on the subject. I felt interested in the subject, and hoped to see something from brother Purington, or some other brother, on it; but if anything relative to the subject has appeared in the SIGNS, I have failed to notice it. I am fully agreed with you that members of the church who attach themselves to secret orders should not be held in fellowship with the church. They should be no more allowed to bring their institutions into the church, than was an Israelite allowed to bring into the camp of Israel a daughter of Moab. This is my understanding of the Scriptures, which I will proceed to bring to bear. I believe that, when in the proper spirit, it is the chief desire of all the children of God to be like the Captain of their salvation, Jesus. They are safe in putting their footsteps wherever they see the footprints of Jesus; but where they do not see his footprints, it is certainly unsafe for them to go. When arraigned before a council of the Jews, on trial for his life, in answer to the chief priest, who asked him of his disciples and his doctrine, "Jesus answered him, I spake openly to the world: I ever taught in the synagogue and in the temple, whither the Jews always resort; and in secret have I said nothing."—John xviii. 20. Then if our Savior said nothing in secret, what authority has any of his children to bind themselves together with a society who do their teaching in secret? How strange that any who have any love for Jesus, or for the peace and harmony of his church, would desire to be "unequally yoked together with unbelievers." "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers: for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness? and what concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel? and what agreement hath the temple of God with idols? for ye are the temple of the living God; as God hath said, I will dwell in them, and walk in them, and I will be their God, and they shall be my people. Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty."—2 Cor. vi. 14-18. If we could bring to bear no other Scriptures, it seems to me that the above would be sufficient to show that it is wrong for the people of God to unite with those orders. In doing so, they yoke themselves together with unbelievers, and defile the temple of God. Many, if not all, of these institutions have their forms of religious service, and their chaplain to conduct them. The chaplain may be an immoral or even a wicked man, or a religious hypocrite, as no doubt is sometimes the case; and some of them are no doubt infidels. Thus the believer enters the lodge, being under the same yoke with the wicked, hypocrite, or infidel, and goes through the form of services (often, probably, without any faith in it; and that which is not of faith is sin), and enters into their counsels, planning for their own interests, and often planning against the interests of others, which is directly contrary to the spirit of true christianity, which is "Love your enemies, do good to them which hate you, bless them that curse you, and pray for them which despitefully use you. And unto him that smiteth thee on the one cheek, offer also the other; and to him that taketh away thy cloak, forbid not to take thy coat also." "And as ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise." In participating with the religious worship of those institutions, the believer is going directly contrary to the teaching of the word, which says, "If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed; for he that biddeth him God speed is partaker of his evil deeds."—2 John 10, 11.

It is sometimes argued that those institutions, or at least some of them, make one more charitable or benevolent. In answer to this, I once asked a prominent Mason if his obligations to his society brought him under any more obligations to be charitable than he was previously under to his Creator and to his fellow-man. He said they did not. Then said I, "If a man is more charitable because he belongs to the masonic fraternity, he is showing more respect for his obligations to a body of men than he is to his God." If a believer joins, one of those institutions for worldly advantage, he shows a lack of confidence in his Master, who has said, "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee." "Consider the lilies how they grow: they toil not, they spin not; and yet I say unto you, that Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these. If then God so clothe the grass, which is to-day in the field, and to-morrow is cast into the oven, how much more will he clothe you, O ye of little faith? And seek not ye what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink, neither be ye of doubtful mind; for all these things do the nations of the world seek after; and your Father knoweth that ye have need of these things. But rather seek ye the kingdom of God, and all these things shall be added unto you."—Luke xii. 27-31. In all this the believer is told that the nations of the world seek after all these things. And the world hates the disciples of Jesus, because he has chosen them out of the world.—John

xv. 19. So they are commanded to seek first the kingdom of God, and such things as they have need of shall be added unto them; for their Father in heaven knoweth what they have need of. In seeking the kingdom of God, they are far from seeking the interests of secret institutions. "For the kingdom of God is not meat and drink; but righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost."—Rom. xiv. 17. Instead of bringing joy, peace or righteousness, either to the church or the participant, it always brings trouble, confusion, &c., for members to persist in participating with those orders. Any Primitive Baptist who does not desire the peace and harmony of his church above the benefits of worldly institutions, does not deserve membership in a church. It seems to me if I could see no other harm in uniting with those institutions, I would consider it a great wrong for me to do a thing so contrary to the feelings and judgment of the majority of my brethren, and I do hope I may ever be kept willing to sacrifice all worldly things for the peace and harmony of the church, as far as is necessary to that end. Now I know something by sad experience of the evil effects of church members persisting in uniting and affiliating with secret institutions: not that I have ever belonged to one; for I never have, since I had a name among that people that I believe to be the church of the living God, felt any desire to belong to one. But I have known of a few instances where a great deal of trouble has been caused, and especially one instance, where a preacher of considerable influence, together with several members of churches of his charge, united with a sort of an insurance society, which has caused a coldness, barrenness and alienation that has been felt for several years, and to all human appearance will be felt for many years more, notwithstanding said preacher has moved away, and most of the churches have no fellowship for his course. Jesus, in giving instructions with reference to his kingdom, as to who should be greatest, &c., says, "Woe unto the world because of offenses! for it must needs be that offenses come: but woe to that man by whom the offense cometh. Wherefore if thy hand or thy foot offend thee, cut them off, and cast them from thee: it is better for thee to enter into life halt, or maimed, rather than having two hands or two feet to be cast into everlasting fire. And if thine eye offend thee, pluck it out, and cast it from thee: it is better for thee to enter into life with one eye, rather than having two eyes to be cast into hell fire."—Matt. xviii. 7-9. The above quotation is given, I understand, to teach the kingdom or church of Christ the necessity of the exercise of strict discipline. In speaking of offenses, he certainly does not mean the stirring up of their natural passions; but one becomes an offense to the body of Christ when he walks disorderly; and one of God's children is certainly walking disorderly who goes into things for which there is no command or example laid down in the New Testament. Now we are given this command by the great apostle to the Gentiles, "Now we command you, brethren, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, that ye withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly, and not after the traditions which he received of us."—2 Thess. iii. 6. Now the apostle Paul tells us, in more than one place, that the church of Christ is his body, and he is the head of that body.—See Eph. i. 22, 23. "For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body, whether we be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free; and have been all made to drink into one Spirit. For the body is not one member, but many. If the foot shall say, Because I am not the hand, I am not of the body; is it therefore not of the body? And if the ear shall say, Because I am not the eye, I am not of the body; is it therefore not of the body?"—1 Cor. xii. 13-16. I quote the above to show that the church is spoken of as a body, having an eye, a hand, an ear, foot, &c. Now Jesus, the King in Zion, and her supreme Lawgiver, gives the remedy, should any of these members offend the body; and should they fail to observe his law, the consequence is, invariably, they (the church) are cast into hell fire; that is, confusion. I understand this to be a case where one becomes an offense to the body by continually persisting in any disorderly course, and stubbornly refuses to repent or turn from his course. Persisting in such a course, he casts a reflection on the cause of his Master, as well as casts a stumbling-block before his weaker brother, and offends him, or causes him to do something detrimental to his own peace and happiness, and thus sometimes causes the weak brother to perish (lose his spiritual happiness and church privileges), for whom Christ died. Sometimes a member of the body, even the smallest member, becomes affected with a sore, is diseased, or wounded, and needs medical attention; and sometimes it reaches that stage that amputation is necessary, in order to save the body. If we fail to do our duty towards this one member, the whole body suffers, and sometimes sickens and dies. So it is with churches, as observation has taught me; and no doubt but you have learned the same sad lesson, my sister, long before this. One thing forbidden national Israel was, that they should take to themselves daughters of other nations for wives; when they did so, it invariably brought the chastening rod of their God upon them, as in the case of Baal-peor, when Balaam taught Balak to cast a stumbling-block before the children of Israel, to eat things sacrificed unto idols, and to commit fornication.—Rev. ii. 14. For that cause four and twenty thousand of them fell in the plague.—Num. xxv. 9. Now, to my understanding, the institutions of the day ("daughters of men") are to spiritual Israel just what the daughters of other nations were to national Israel; or in other words, the one is a type of the other. And as those daughters were calculated to lead the children of Israel into idolatry, so these institutions are calculated to lead the children of God in this day into idolatry. One thing that "he which hath the sharp sword with two edges" had against the church in Pergamos was, that they had "there them that hold the doctrine of Balaam." Then how careful should every church be that they hold not them that hold the doctrine of Balaam. Faithful Phineas was blessed of the Lord (and so was all the congregation of Israel) for a faithful performance of his duty, when Zimri brought into the camp of Israel a Midianitish woman; for he slew them both.

I once knew a brother to join an institution called the "Knights of Honor." His case was neglected for some time, which, I believe, was the cause of another joining. When his case was taken up by the church (for the act was a violation of one of her Rules of Decorum, as is the case with most of the churches in this country), he undertook to justify himself; and in making his defense, he wished to read the Constitution, &c., of his institution, which looked a little like the case of Zimri bringing in the Midianitish woman; but he was cut off (killed to church privileges), as was Zimri, which proved a blessing to the church; for none of her members since that time have done as he did; and he afterwards was made willing to forsake his Moabitish wife, and come back to his brethren, and was restored.

Dear sister, the above thoughts, together with many more of like nature, have been many times running through my mind since I read your letter, and I have often had it on my mind to write to you on the subject; but in the hope of seeing something in the SIGNS more to the point, and partly for want of opportunity, I have failed to do so until the present time; and now, if it proves satisfactory, and you think it worth your trouble, you may submit it to the editors of the SIGNS; but if not, all will be right, for I feel that it is far from being perfect. Somehow it got on my mind, and I have written for relief of the same. If it should prove of any good or comfort to you, or others of the household of faith, I shall be amply rewarded for my pains. These are about the only apologies I have to offer for intruding on your time and patience.

I am, as ever, your little brother in hope of eternal life, which God, that cannot lie, promised before the world began,

H. B. JONES.

CAMPBELL'S FORD, Tenn.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—I have been called upon to answer the following questions: "If God has an elect people which he will absolutely call to life, and save with an everlasting salvation, regardless of means, as you Baptists claim, why do you preach, and for what purpose did God ordain preaching?"

God has an elect people. "Who shall lay anything to the charge of God's elect?"—Rom. viii. 33. "According as he hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world."—Eph. i. 4. From these Scriptures it appears beyond all doubt that God has an elect people in this world. Was their election based upon foreseen good works in them, which moved God to make that choice, and to call them to life? To the law and to the testimony. "The children being not yet born, neither having done any good or evil, that the purpose of God according to election might stand, not of works, but of him that calleth, it was said unto her, The elder shall serve the younger. As it is written, Jacob have I loved; but Esau have I hated."—Rom. ix. 11-13. "Who hath saved us, and called us with a holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began."—2 Tim. i. 9.

Thus it appears that God has an elect people, and that they were not chosen because of their good works, as Arminians would have it.

Was it from choice of their own that they are born of the Spirit? "Which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God."—John i. 13. "So then it is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that sheweth mercy."—Rom. ix. 16.

Is it not at an unexpected time that this new birth takes place? It seems that it was so with the apostle Paul. "And as he journeyed, he came near Damascus: and suddenly [which is unexpectedly] there shined round about him a light from heaven." Now, brethren, can we not testify to the same? As we journeyed, suddenly something took hold of us, which showed us our lost condition before God; and the more we tried to get rid of it, the more we were impressed with it.

Now to the question, "Why do you preach?" If God has commanded a thing, that is sufficient. Whether it appears to accomplish anything or not, it is our duty to do it, without asking the why, or, "What doest thou?" But we will endeavor to show why we preach. "And he said unto them [the apostles], "Go ye into all the world [among all languages, kindreds and tongues of the earth], and preach the gospel [not the commandments of men, but the gospel, which is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth] to every creature.

[Undoubtedly these are the spiritually alive, as the dead can neither hear nor witness; and unregenerate sinners are dead in trespasses and sin.] He that believeth and is baptized [not if he will, but is] shall be saved [preserved from false doctrines, &c.]; but he that believeth not shall be damned; that is, condemned; not sent to hell, but subjects of chastisement, or liable to be beaten with many stripes, as I understand.—Mark xvi. 15, 16. "Go ye therefore and teach all nations [undoubtedly those who are made alive, as the dead cannot receive instruction], baptizing them [not part of them, as the pronoun them, it seems to me, must include all that are to be taught] in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them [all] to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you."—Matt. xxviii. 19, 20. Paul told Timothy to preach the Word; and John says, "The Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us." It seems to me that this ought to be sufficient to satisfy any one why we preach.

I will now notice another part of the inquiry; and in doing so, I will ask a few questions. To whom was the word of this salvation sent? "Men and brethren, children of the stock of Abraham, and whosoever among you feareth God, to you is the word of this salvation sent."—Acts xiii. 26. Now should I, Arminian-like, start out to find some one who is not of the stock of Abraham, and does not fear God, and tell him that God has sent me to set life (which is the word of this salvation) and death before him, and for him to choose which he will have? We will notice what our Lord said to Peter, that we may know his purpose in preaching.—Read John xxi. 15-17. He here commands him three times to feed his lambs and sheep, but says nothing to him about feeding anything else. He undoubtedly had reference to Peter's ministry. Now suppose that Peter had started out with the food which his Master had provided him with to feed his lambs and sheep, or his elect people, and had begun to call the dogs, wolves and goats, and to tell them (unregenerate sinners) that God had sent him to feed them; would he not have gone contrary to God's command? Would he not have been a transgressor? Would he not have been trying to do more than the Master told him to do? It appears then that the preaching of the gospel is intended for the benefit of God's people. "And as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so [notice that] must the Son of man be lifted up."—John iii. 14. Now if Moses commanded the heathen to look upon the serpent, even so should the ministry command them to look to Christ. But it seems that Moses only commanded the children of Israel who were bitten by serpents to look upon the brazen serpent. In like manner is the Son of man to be looked upon. In like manner the ministry are to direct those who feel the need of Christ to look to him; those who are born again; those who are mourning his love to know; those who are weary and heavy laden; because Jesus is able to save to the uttermost all that come unto God by him. But Jesus says, "No man can come to me, except the Father which hath sent me draw him."—John vi. 44.

It seems now that God's purpose in the preaching of the gospel is to benefit his quickened people, who are born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the Word of God.—1 Peter i. 23. "For after that in the wisdom of God the world by wisdom knew not God, it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe."—1 Cor. i. 21. Not one word is here said about quickening sinners. Why not? Because "It is the Spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing."—John vi. 63.

It now seems to me that I have not dodged the question, but have fairly met it, and answered it by the Scriptures of truth.

It seems to me that from the reading of the Scriptures it is the duty of the ministry of the word to take the oversight of the flock of God (not the world), and to feed the sheep (not goats), to strengthen the brethren (not the bastards), to warn them of the sword, to warn them of the enemy, and to officiate in the house of God.

And now, brethren, as I am young in the cause, and as this is the first time I ever tried to write upon a religious subject, and being unlearned, I will say to you, Do with this as you think best. If there is anything in it that would be edifying, you will please give it a place in your paper, the SIGNS OF THE TIMES; and if not, all will be right with me. I believe that God must prepare the ground on which to sow his seed, although some seed falls by the wayside. God opens the heart to receive the word. He must open the eyes and unstop the ears before any can receive instruction. Then comes in the work of the ministry; and it has an effect upon them that are prepared for the Lord. John the Baptist came to make ready a people prepared for the Lord.—Luke i. 17.

Yours in hope of eternal life,

P. N. MOYERS.

TIFFIN, Ohio, Jan. 20, 1889.

BRETHREN BEEBE:—An unusual crowd of work for several months has delayed a few things beyond their season, and among these is my subscription for the SIGNS. Now, confined to the house by a disabling accident, I find time to think of these things. I was interested and comforted by the communication of Elder Chick in the last number of the SIGNS. His idea of a judgment day seems to me to be in harmony with the Scriptures and christian experience. How many a doubting soul has sought to stand a second time before its righteous Judge, to make more sure of the sentence for past sins; but having once declared, "Thy sins and thy iniquities will I remember no more forever," his promise is faithful to the end. Since reading Elder Chick's views I have been led to think by the words of a distinguished skeptic, Ingersol. After deploring the cold, unfeeling, aristocratic cruelty of the ruling classes in Europe and America, which secure for them ease, luxury and dominion, while the many are degraded and impoverished, he concludes: "Society is corrupted, because the laurels, the titles, are the gift of the corrupters. Christianity is not an enemy of this system; it is in harmony with it. Kings reign by divine right, and priests are appointed by the same authority," &c. The fact of general industrial bondage and oppression, with a resulting concentration of wealth and power, may be candidly admitted; but is christianity the cause? If kings and priests bear unjust, oppressive rule, is there any warrant for it in the New Testament? Nay, verily. He who was led as a lamb to the slaughter for having preached the gospel to the poor; who had driven from the temple the avaricious money-changers; who, instead of consorting with the rich and mighty of earth, was poorer than the birds and the beasts, having not where to lay his head; who became poor, that the poorest might be made rich; shall he be accused of instituting a religion that is in harmony with the unholy methods of kingcraft and priestcraft? God forbid! Why do men of intelligence charge these sins of covetousness and the lust of power to christianity? Because the popular, so-called christian churches are after spoils, making merchandise of gold and silver, precious stones, horses and chariots, and slaves and souls of men. Voltaire and Thomas Paine hurled their shafts of censure and criticism at the "christianity" of their day—the christianity that allied itself with the secular power for the sake of spoils; that kind of christianity which persecuted and burned at the stake the true followers of Christ as heretics and destroyers of the souls of men. No wonder that men like these—men with a natural love of justice, should denounce such christianity as a delusion and a fraud. History is repeating itself. King and priest are still like the leopard, who cannot change his spots, intent upon spoils and dominion; but their methods have been cunningly changed from force to mere guile. The end sought is the same, the spirit the same, the fruits the same—the enslavement of mankind. As the Papal power was permitted to rule until its cup of iniquity was full, so will the present systems of oppression, until in his own way God shall stay the tide. We are evidently nearing a crisis in human affairs, and also in the condition of the kingdom of Christ on earth. Cold formality must yield to spirituality—a spirituality proving itself by its fruits of "love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance." The same fountain cannot send forth, at the same time, both sweet and bitter water. But come what may, God will be glorified, whether in the humbling of the proud and haughty, or in the exalting of the meek and lowly. As he brings the blind by a way they knew not, so will he vindicate his majesty and demonstrate his infinite love in a way not seen by men. As once went forth the cry, "O Liberty! what crimes are not committed in thy name!" so might we ask, "What deeds and works of darkness and unrighteousness have not been performed in the name of Christ!" Instead of pointing in derision at the practices of the so-called "Christian Church," let skeptics assail either the doctrine or the life of him who is exalted a Prince and a Savior, "to give repentance to Israel, and forgiveness of sins," and their shafts fall harmless as upon a triple coat of mail. But alas for those who, with the noise of many hammers, saws and smoothing-planes, are trying to erect a temple to the living God! The arrows of truth, though sent from the bow of an unbeliever, will cut to the heart. Those whose trust is in the grace of God alone can say, with the poet,

"I know not what the future hath
Of marvel or surprise;
Assured alone that, life or death,
His mercy underlies.

"And if my heart and flesh are weak
To bear an untried pain,
The bruised reed he will not break,
But strengthen and sustain.

"No offering of my own I have,
No works my faith to prove;
I can but give the gifts he gave,
And plead his love for love.

"And so, beside the silent sea,
I wait the muffled oar;
No harm from him can come to me,
On ocean or on shore.

"I know not where his islands lift
Their fronded palms in air;
I only know I cannot drift
Beyond his love and care.

"O brethren, if my faith is vain,
If hopes like these betray,
Pray for me, that my feet may gain
The sure and safer way.

"And thou, O Lord, by whom are seen
Thy creatures as they be,
Forgive me, if too close I lean
My human heart on thee."

If saved, a sinner saved by grace,

JUDGMENT OF THE SAINTS.

(Concluded from last number.)

"OUR God shall come, and shall not keep silence; a fire shall devour before him, and it shall be very tempestuous round about him. He shall call to the heavens from above, and to the earth, that he may judge his people. Gather my saints together unto me; those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice. And the heavens shall declare his righteousness; for God is judge himself. Selah."—Psa. l. 3-6.

"He shall call to the heavens from above, and to the earth, that he may judge his people." Let it not be forgotten that it is of our God that this declaration is recorded. He does not call in vain, as men often do; but his call is always effectual in the accomplishment of his will. It is not left to finite intelligence to guess at this important truth; God has plainly declared it by the inspired prophet. "As the rain cometh down, and the snow from heaven, and returneth not thither, but watereth the earth, and maketh it bring forth and bud, that it may give seed to the sower, and bread to the eater; so shall my word be that goeth forth out of my mouth; it shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it."—Isa. lv. 10, 11. His call is not a mere supplication. Even when he calls to the heavens that call comes "from above." Such a call can come from no other source but from the mouth of the Lord, whose throne of glory is above the heavens. All created beings are below the heavens, and their call must therefore be from beneath. But in the declaration that he shall call "from above" to the heavens the absolute authority of his word is signified, as is expressly declared in the quotation from Isaiah. It is a very limited application of this wonderful announcement of the truth of God, to understand it as referring to the firmament of the starry canopy which is over our heads. Since "The eyes of the Lord are in every place, beholding the evil and good," to his omnipresence there can be no locality either above or beneath his own abode. It is as he is revealed in Christ Jesus exalted with the right hand of God, and "made higher than the heavens," that our God shall call to those heavens from above, and his word shall command obedience. Under the typical dispensation given by the hand of Moses, the divinely ordained law was the heaven over their heads, and the nation of Israel was the earth. That people to whom that legal covenant was given had no more power to change one of the ordinances given to them than in nature the earth has power to change any of the ordinances of the Creator in the natural firmament. Yet the God who ordained that legal dispensation did not surrender his own supreme authority and omnipotence. He added that law "because of transgressions." But even that heaven and the material universe, as well as all others works of our God, are created by our gracious Lord, and all are subservient to his great purpose of love in saving his people from their sins. In their deepest afflictions and in thickest darkness, let the saints never forget that "Our God" calls from above to the heavens, whether of the material creation, of the holy law, or of his providential government, and that his word has all the power of the self-existent Jehovah to secure its fulfillment. His eternal truth is pledged that it shall be obeyed.

The object of this wonderful appeal to the heavens and to the earth, is "that he may judge his people." Not even in the display of his loving-kindness to his saints, has our God violated the sacred principle of his own infinite holiness. He displays the glory of his truth and justice in the salvation of his people from their sins, and his holy law is magnified in the deliverance of every lawful captive, who is saved from his sins, "Being justified freely by his grace through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus." It is in this way that our God calls "to the heavens from above, and to the earth, that he may judge his people." They rejoice in the assurance that he is righteous in the exercise of mercy; and that justice is satisfied in the salvation of the subjects of electing love. So the psalmist sings, "Justice and judgment are the habitation of thy throne; mercy and truth shall go before thy face." The blessed people who know this joyful sound, are judged not according to the law of sin and death, but according to the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus. They receive chastening in every departure from the pathway of obedience to their Lord, and learn that "It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God;" but they cannot lose that eternal life which is hid with Christ in God. The awful weight of this judgment of his people is signified by the solemn appeal in the text. It is no ordinary occasion when our God thus calls from above to the heavens and to the earth. In the execution of his judgment, the sinless Redeemer must be made a curse for the redemption of that people. That dreadful work he has fulfilled. Now, all the subjects of his redemption are delivered from the curse which fell upon him, and can never more come under its condemnation; but they are still under the law to their Redeemer. His law is in the new heart which he gives to every one whom he calls by his grace, so that it is their highest privilege to keep his commandments, because they love his law. No mere observance of outward forms of obedience is acceptable in the sight of God. "Love is the fulfilling of the law."—Rom. xiii. 10. Where this heavenly fruit of the Spirit is in exercise the judgment of our God is always in assurance and comfort to the humble saint; where it is found that one of this peculiar people has become lukewarm and indifferent, the judgment of our God will visit his iniquity with stripes. He is just as well as merciful. His faithfulness is manifest in his chastening rod as well as in the sweet comforts which he ministers to his obedient children. It is a very unfavorable indication for any professed follower of Jesus, if he can disregard the commandments of our Lord without experiencing severe chastening. On the other hand it is written that "Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth."—Heb. xii. 6. "Blessed is the man whom thou chastenest, O Lord, and teachest him out of thy law; that thou mayest give him rest from the days of adversity, until the pit be digged for the wicked."—Psa. xciv. 12, 13. The judgment of his people by our God is not to determine whether they are his people; but because they are certainly his. The fact that he does hold them to answer at his judgment seat continually, is positive proof that he recognizes them as his own chosen people. In the type he says to the nation of Israel, "You only have I known of all the families of the earth; therefore I will punish you for all your iniquities."—Amos iii. 2. In the strict visitation of his just rod upon them in all their wanderings God himself bears witness to the genuineness of their hope in his salvation. For the revelation to them of that assuring testimony, our God commands his law, as their heavens, to bear its part in showing his righteousness and his wrath against sin. To those who have been made to hunger and thirst after righteousness it is not enough that they should be saved from the punishment due to their transgressions; they want to be freed from the pollution of sin. This deliverance can come from no other source but from that word of our God which is omnipotent to save to the uttermost them that come unto God by the precious Redeemer. On their behalf our God in judging his people sends forth his sovereign command even to the heavens and to the earth; and his holy law, with all the rites and ceremonies which are included under it, must obey his word.

"Gather my saints together unto me; those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice." This is the irresistible call which comes down from our God to the heavens, and to the earth. Can there be any uncertainty in regard to this call being obeyed? Certainly such a question cannot trouble those who are sure of the infinite power which is in the hand of our God.

"He is power, and can fulfill; He is love, and therefore will."

There can be no question of the gathering of all his saints unto him, so long as he is able to do his will. The heavens and the earth obey the voice which sends forth this majestic call. Neither can there be any uncertainty as to the very characters who shall be gathered. They are expressly designated not only as being the saints of our God, but another peculiar description marks them. They are "those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice." Notwithstanding this express designation of the subjects of the gathering here commanded, it is strange that every saint is troubled with anxiety because he can find no other way in which he can claim an interest in the covenant except by sacrifice. Realizing his utter destitution of merit in the sight of divine justice, the tempted saint is ready to concede the truth of the charges brought by the adversary against his hope; for he has to confess that in himself dwells no good thing. But what is this in our text, specifying "a covenant with me by sacrifice?" A sacrifice includes the confession of sin and unworthiness. One has no use for sacrifice so long as he is able to negotiate upon equal terms with him whose favor he seeks. The fact that this covenant is made by sacrifice proves that all who are included in this description are such as are conscious of their own sinfulness. It is plain that none are to be gathered unto our God but those who are cut off from all claims of merit in themselves. Their only hope is in the one offering by which our perfect High Priest has "perfected forever them that are sanctified." This sanctification is through the offering of Jesus Christ once. These are all the saints who are to be gathered in obedience to the call of our God to the heavens from above, and to the earth. They are filled with dismay and terror when they look upon the clouds of thick darkness from which they hear the thunder of condemnation against sin. Each of them confesses in his heart the seal of his own condemnation. But to those hopeless ones there is revealed the salvation of our God in that covenant which is made by sacrifice. These prisoners are by the blood of the covenant of their Redeemer sent forth out of the pit wherein there is no water; and to them he says, "Turn you to the stronghold, ye prisoners of hope."—Zech. ix. 12. The blood by which this covenant is sealed is the precious blood of Christ. This blood cleanseth us from all sin. Therefore every glorious perfection of the Holy One unites in the command that they who are thus cleansed shall be gathered unto our God. The perfection of the sacrifice is already declared by the eternal Judge. Without the full satisfaction of every demand of infinite justice, our great atoning Sacrifice could not have risen from the death which he endured in bearing our sins in his own body on the tree. That complete satisfaction is attested by the resurrection of our Redeemer. In this everlasting covenant is secured all the salvation of every one included in its provisions of love and grace. So the last words of David proclaim the confidence of faith in the same great Sacrifice. "Although my house be not so with God; yet he hath made with me an everlasting covenant, ordered in all things, and sure; for this is all my salvation and all my desire, although he make it not to grow."—2 Sam. xxiii. 5. As there is no change in the everlasting purpose of our God, this covenant by Sacrifice ever did and ever shall embrace every one of his saints. So this command of our God secures their being gathered together unto him. For this purpose he created the heavens and the earth, together with all that is in them. In his providential government of the universe, he calls to the heavens and the earth in bringing to pass the manifestation of his eternal purpose in thus gathering together in one unto himself all whose names are written in the heaven of that everlasting covenant, which is made by sacrifice, and not by their individual works of righteousness. This was illustrated in the sacrifice for Israel which was made by their high priest. Every Israelite was included in that sacrifice. So in the case of the spiritual Israel, every one of the saints is included in the accepted offering of our Redeemer. The power and justice of our God, as much as his love and mercy, are engaged for the fulfillment of this great command which he has thus solemnly uttered.

"And the heavens shall declare his righteousness; for God is judge himself. Selah." In this positive assertion of the accomplishment of the purpose of our God in the declaration of his righteousness by the heavens, it is important to consider that this can only result from the execution of his sovereign will according to that which he shall call to them from above. Whether it is understood of the natural universe, or of the legal dispensation, or of the revelation of the glory of God in the gospel, these "heavens shall declare his righteousness." It is not dependent upon any contingency in time whether this result shall be accomplished. Because the mouth of the Lord has spoken it, there can be no failure in the fulfillment of his word. This declaration could not be made if his call to the heavens from above were unable to secure the performance of his will. It is only in obedience to his call that the heavens do declare his righteousness. His omnipotence secures this result in the gathering of his saints together unto our God.

No effort of the carnal mind can attain to the knowledge expressed in the latter clause of this verse. While man is willing to believe that God sits in judgment over the creatures of his hand, no argument can convince man that God himself is judge in the sense of determining all things by his own sovereign will. The pride of man claims to dictate to the God of heaven what shall be the standard by which he shall judge. If he shall not be governed by that dictation, then men will assume the right to decide that he is not just. In this they deny that "God is judge himself." If under any circumstances or conditions God is subject to the judgment or condemnation of any other being in earth or in heaven, then he is not judge himself. So those who thus charge God manifest that they are under the control of that man of sin, the son of perdition, "Who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshiped; so that he as God sitteth in the temple of God, shewing himself that he is God."—2 Thess. iii. 4. When such suggestions arise in the mind of one of the saints they are certainly presented by the enmity of the carnal mind, which is so much like the devices of Satan that it is hard to distinguish between them. Remembering that "God is judge himself," the saints are not left to reason even in regard to their own hope in the salvation which God has revealed through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus. That hope is established upon the sure foundation of this covenant made by their great Sacrifice. It cannot be seen by reason; it is revealed alone through faith, which is the gift of God. This establishes their heart in the immutability of the eternal counsel of God, and is inseparable from the doctrine of salvation exclusively by grace according to the election of our God.

The closing word of our text, "Selah," is an original Hebrew word, which is not translated from the fact that its exact meaning is not understood. Some suppose it to be a musical term; others have understood it to signify "eternally, forever." This definition seems appropriate to the connection in which it is here used. Certainly our God is eternally and forever judge himself both in the kingdom of his grace, and in the universe of his creation. To him be glory and dominion, majesty and power ascribed by all his saints through Jesus, our Redeemer. Amen.

SOLOMON'S TEMPLE SPIRITUALIZED.

BY JOHN BUNYAN.

CHAPTER LX.

Of the floor and walls of the inner Temple.

THE floor of the oracle was overlaid with cedar, and so also were the walls of this house. "He built twenty cubits on the sides of the house: both the floor and the walls with boards of cedar. He even built for it within, for the oracle, for the most holy place."—1 Kings xvi.

In that he doth tell us with what it was ceiled, and doth also thus repeat, saying, for the oracle, for it within, even for the most holy place, it is because he would have it noted that this only is the place that thus was done.

Twenty cubits, that was the length and breadth and height of the house; so that by thus saying, he teacheth that thus it was built round about.

The cedar is, if I mistake not, the highest of the trees.—Ezekiel xxxi. 3-8.

Now in that it is said the house, the oracle, was ceiled round about therewith, it may be to show that in heaven, and in nowhere else, is the height of all perfections. Perfection in the church on earth, but not such as is in heaven. * * *

Now heavenly glory is, that which goes beyond all perfection on the earth, as the cedar goes beyond all trees for height. Hence God, when he speaks of his own excellency, sets it forth by its height. The high God, the most high, and the high and lofty one, and the highest.—Psa. xcvi. 9; cxxxviii. 6; Gen. xiv. 19-21; Dan. iii. 21; v. 18; Psa. xviii. 13; lxxxv. 7; Luke i. 30; vi. 35; Psa. ix. 2; lvi. 2; xcii. 1; Isa. xiv. 14.

These terms also are ascribed to this house, for that it was the place where utmost perfection dwelt. I take therefore the cedar in this place to be a note of perfection, even the cedar with which this house was ceiled. For since it is the wisdom of God to speak to us, oftentimes by trees, gold, silver, stones, beasts, fowls, fishes, spiders, ants, frogs, flies, lice, dust, &c., and here by wood, how should we by them understand his voice, if we count there is no meaning in them? And the cedar of the house within was carved with knops and flowers. All was cedar. There was no stone seen.—1 Kings ix. 18.

All was cedar; there was no stone seen. Take stone in the type for that which was really so, and in the antitype for that which is so mystically, and then it may import to us that in heaven, the antitype of the holiest, there shall never be anything of hardness of heart in them that possess it forever. All imperfection ariseth from the badness of the heart, but there will be no bad hearts in glory. No shortness in knowledge, no crossness of disposition, no workings of lusts or corruptions will be there; no, nor throughout the whole heavens. Here, alas! they are seen, and that in the best of saints, because here our light is mixed with darkness; but there will be no night there, nor any stone seen.

The floor of the house was overlaid with gold.—1 Kings vi. 30. This, like that of which we read of the new Jerusalem, from God out of the heaven, says the text, the street of the city was pure gold; and like that of which you read in Exodus. "They saw under the feet of the God of Israel, as it were a paved work of sapphire stone, and as it were the body of heaven in its clearness."—Rev. xxi. 21; Ex. xxiv. 10.

All the visions were rich, but this the richest, that the floor of the house should be covered or overlaid with gold. The floor and street are walking places, and how rich will our steps be then! Alas! here we sometimes step into the mire, and then again stumble upon blocks and stones. Here we sometimes fall into holes, and have our heel often caught in a snare; but there will be none of these. Gold! gold! all will be gold, and golden perfections, when we come into the holy place.

CHAPTER LXI.

Of the ark of the covenant which was placed in the inner Temple.

IN the word I read of three arks, to wit, Noah's ark; that in which Moses was hid; and the ark of the covenant of God.—Gen. vi. 15; Ex. ii. 3, 5. But it is the ark of the covenant of which I shall now speak.

The ark was made of shittim wood; two cubits and a half was the length thereof, and one cubit and a half the breadth thereof, and a cubit and a half the height thereof. It was overlaid with pure gold within and without, and a crown of gold was made for it round about.—Ex. xxv. 10, 11.

This ark was called the ark of the covenant; as the first that you read of was called Noah's, because, as he in that was kept from being drowned; so the table of the covenant was kept in this from breaking.

This ark, in this, was a type of Christ. For that in him only, and not in the hand of Moses, these tables were kept whole. Moses brake them, the ark keeps them.

Not only that wrote on two tables of stone, but that also called the ceremonial, was put into the ark to be kept. The two tables were put into the midst of the ark, to answer to this, "Thy law is within my heart;" but the ceremonial was put into the side of the ark, to show that out of the side of Christ must come that which must answer that; for out thence came blood and water; blood, to answer the blood of the ceremonies; and water, to answer the purifyings and rinsings of that law.

The ceremonies therefore were lodged in the side of the ark, to show that they should be answered out of the side of Jesus Christ.—Ex. xxv. 16, 17; Deut. x. 5; xxxi. 26; Psa. xl. 8; John xix. 34; Heb. x. 7.

The ark had the name of God upon it; yea, it was called the strength of God, and his glory, though made of wood. And Christ is God, both in name and nature, though made flesh; yea, more, made to be sin for us.—2 Sam. vi. 2; 2 Chron. iv. 14; xiii. 6; John i. 14; Rom. ix. 5; 2 Cor. v. 21.

The ark was carried upon men's shoulders this way and that, to show how Christ should be preached by his apostles and ministers into all parts of the world.—Ex. xxv. 14; 1 Cor. xv. 15; Matt. xxviii. 19, 20; Luke xxiv. 46, 47.

The ark had these testimonies of God's presence accompanying it, as it had no other ceremony of the law; and Christ had those signs and tokens of his presence with him as never had man, either in law or gospel. This is so apparent, it needs no proof. Now for a few comparisons more.

It was at that that God answered the people when they were wont to come and inquire of him; and in these last days God has spoken to us by his Son.—1 Chron. xiii. 3; 1 Sam. xiv. 18; Heb. i. 2; John xvi. 23, 24.

At the presence of the ark, the waters of Jordan stood still, till Israel, the ransomed of the Lord, passed over from the wilderness of Canaan; and it is by the power and presence of Christ that we pass from the wilderness of this world to heaven.—Joshua iii. 15-17; John xi. 25; Rom. viii. 37-39; 1 Cor. xv. 54-57.

Before the ark, the walls of Jericho fell down, and at the presence of Christ shall high towers, and strongholds, and hiding places for sinners, be razed and dissolved at his coming.—Isa. vi. 20; xxx. 25; ii. 1-6; 2 Peter iii. 10; Rev. xx. 11-13.

Before the ark, Dagon fell, that idol of the Philistines; and before Christ Jesus devils fell, those gods of all those idols; and he must reign till all his enemies be put under his feet, and until they be made his footstool.—1 Sam. v. 1-4; Mark v. 12; 1 Cor. xv. 25; Heb. x. 13.

The Philistines were also plagued for meddling with the ark while they abode uncircumcised, and the wicked will be most severely plagued for their meddling with Christ with their uncircumcised hearts.—1 Sam. v. 6-13; Psa. l. 16; Matt. xxiv. 15; xxv. 11, 12; Luke xiii. 25-29.

God's blessing was upon those that entertained the ark as they should; and much more is, and will his blessing be upon those who embrace and entertain his Christ, and profess his name sincerely.—2 Sam. vi. 11; Acts iii. 26; Gal. iii. 13, 14; Matt. xix. 27-29; Luke xxii. 28, 29.

When Uziah put forth his hand to stay the ark, when the oxen shook it, as despairing of God's protecting of it, without a human help, he died before the Lord; even so will all those do (without repentance) who use unlawful means to promote Christ's religion, and to support it in the world.—1 Chron. xiii. 9, 10; Matt. xxvi. 52; Rev. xiii. 10.

The ark, though thus dignified, was of itself but low, but a cubit and a half high. Also Christ, though he was the glory of heaven and of God, yet made himself of no reputation, and was found in the likeness of a man.—Ex. xxv. 11, 12; Phil. ii. 6-11.

The ark had a crown of gold round about upon it; to show how Christ is crowned by his saints by faith, and shall be crowned by them in glory, for the good he hath done for them; as also how all crowns shall stoop to him, and be set upon his head. This is shown in the type, Zechariah vi. 11, 14; and in the antitype, Revelation iv. 10; xix. 12.

The ark was overlaid with gold within and without; to show that Christ was perfect in inward grace and outward life; in spirit and in righteousness.—John i. 12-14; 1 Peter ii. 22.

The ark was placed under the mercy-seat, to show that Jesus Christ, as Redeemer, brings and bears, as it were upon his shoulders, the mercy of God to us, even in the body of his flesh, through death.—Ex. xxv. 12; Eph. iv. 23; v. 1, 2.

When the ark was removed far from the people, the godly went mourning after it; and when Christ is hid or taken from us, then we mourn in those days.—2 Sam. vii. 2; Mark ii. 19, 20; Luke v. 34, 35; John xvi. 20-22.

All Israel had the ark again, after their mourning time was over; and Christ, after their people have sorrowed for him awhile, will see them again, and their hearts shall rejoice.—John xvi. 1-3, 20-22.

By all these things, and many more that might be mentioned, it is most evident that the ark of the testimony was a type of Jesus Christ; and take notice a little of that which follows; namely, that the ark at last arrived at the place most holy.—Heb. ix. 3, 4. That is, after its wanderings; for the ark was first made to wander like a noninhabitant, from place to place; now hither, and then thither; now in the hands of enemies, and then abused by friends; yea, it was caused to remove from place to place, and that of which the world was weary. I need instance to you for proof none other place than the fifth, sixth and seventh chapters of the first book of Samuel; and answerable to this was our dear Lord Jesus posted backwards and forwards, hither and thither, by the force of the rage of his enemies. He was hunted into Egypt so soon as he was born.—Matt. ii. Then he was driven to live in Galilee, the space of many years. Also, when he showed himself to Israel, they drove him sometimes into the wilderness, sometimes into the desert, sometimes into the sea, and sometimes into the mountains, and still in all of these places he was hunted by new enemies. And last of all, the Pharisees plot for his life, Judas sells him, the priests buy him, Peter denies him, his enemies mock, scourge, buffet and much abuse him. In fine, they get him condemned and crucified and buried; but at last God commanded, took him to his place, even within the vail, and sets him to bear up the mercy-seat, where he is to this very day, being our ark to save us, as Noah's did him; as Moses' did him; yea, better, as none but Christ doth save his own.

CHAPTER LXII.

Of the placing of the ark in the holiest or inner Temple.

THE ark, as we have said, as the text declares, when carried to its rest, was placed in the inner temple, or in the most holy place, even under the "wings of the cherubim." "And the priests brought in the ark of the covenant of the Lord unto his place, to the oracle of the house, unto the most holy place, even under the wings of the cherubim."—Ex. xxvi. 33; xxxix. 35; 1 Kings viii. 3; 2 Chron. v. 7.

Before this, as was said afore, the ark was carried from place to place, and caused to dwell in a tent under curtains, as all our fathers did. To show that Christ, as we, was made for a time to wander in the world.—2 Sam. vii. 1, 2, 6; Heb. xi. 9; John i. 10; xvi. 28; iii. 13.

But now, when the ark was brought into the holiest, it is said to be brought into its place. This world then was not Christ's place, he was not from beneath, he came from his Father's house; wherefore, while here, he was not at his place, nor could until he ascended up where he was before.—John viii. 23; xvi. 28; vi. 26; iii. 13. Christ's proper place, therefore, is the holiest. His proper place as God, as Priest, as Prophet, as King, and as the Advocate of his people. * * *

It is said the ark was brought to the oracle of the house. Solomon was not content to say it was brought into the holiest; but he saith his place was the oracle, the holy oracle, that is, the place of hearing. For he, when he ascended, had somewhat to say to God on the behalf of his people. To the oracle, that is, to the place of revealing; for he also was there to receive, and from thence to reveal to his church on earth something that could not be made manifest, but from his holy oracle. There therefore he is with two tables of testimony in his heart, as perfectly kept; he also is there with the whole fulfilling of the ceremonial law in his side, showing and pleading the perfection of his righteousness, and the merit of his blood with his Father; and to receive and to do us good, who believe in him, how well pleased the Father is, with what he has done in our behalf.

Into the most holy place. By these words is shown whither also the ark went, when it went to take up its rest. And in that this ark was a type of Christ in this, it is to show, or further manifest, that what Christ doth now in heaven he doth it before his Father's face. Yea, it intimates that Christ even there makes his appeals to God concerning the worth of what he did on earth, to God the Judge of all. I say, whether he ought not for his suffering's sake, to have granted to him his whole desire as Priest and Advocate for his people.

"Wilt thou," said Festus to Paul, "go up to Jerusalem, and there be judged of these things before me?"—Acts xxv. 9. Why this our blessed Jesus was willing, when here to go up to Jerusalem to be judged; and being misjudged there, he made his appeal to God, and is now gone into the holy place, even to him that is Judge of all, for his verdict upon his doing; and whether the souls for whom he died, to bring them to glory, have not by him a right to the kingdom of heaven. * * *

NOTICE.

1910 N. 22d St., PHILADELPHIA, Pa., }
April 9, 1889.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—Will you please notify the readers of the SIGNS that the Salem Church, of Philadelphia, have changed their place of meeting to 1325 Columbia Avenue? We meet every Sunday morning, and will be glad to have the brethren from other churches (who may be stopping here) meet with us. We also extend a cordial invitation to the ministering brethren, who may be passing through Philadelphia, to stop over with us; and if they will send us word when they will come, we will gladly arrange an appointment for them on any evening or Sunday morning.

B. F. COULTER.

MARRIAGES.

At the residence of Samuel Dennison, New Castle Co., Del., April 4th, 1889, by Elder J. L. Staton, Leslie J. Walker and Mary C. Harlan, both of New Castle Co., Del.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

DEPARTED this life March 24th, 1889, sister Sallie M. Adkins, aged thirty-four years.

She was the daughter of Zedekiah and Gertrude Truitt, of Snow Hill, and the wife of Elijah J. Adkins, of Salisbury. She was baptized in the fellowship of the Indiantown Church in 1876, and removed her membership to Snow Hill, where her name remains. All who knew her can call to mind the ever-pleasant and gentle spirit which she possessed. She was married to my brother four years ago, and came to live with us; and we can truly say that she was always gentle and kind, and was loved by all who knew her. About a year ago her health began to fail, and for the last two months she kept her bed most of the time. Her disease was consumption, mostly of the stomach. She was very patient, and always careful to take the medicine as directed, having a strong desire to get well, and seemed to believe that she would get better, until the day before the hand of death came. On Friday morning, the 22d, we found that she could not live, and in the evening her two mothers talked to her of death. She said she thought she wanted to live, but if it was the Lord's will she was willing to go. Her mind seemed clouded. She said she wanted to think of Christ, but could not control her thoughts. She wanted them to talk, and they tried to speak words of comfort. On Saturday morning the cloud seemed to have passed, and she seemed like a little child. When we asked how she felt she replied, "I feel good. It is all right." She breathed her last at sunrise on Sunday morning, and we believe she awoke in that glorious morn of eternal joy.

She leaves a husband and two children, Frank and Winifred. The little girl was one year old the day her mother died. We all miss the presence of her who was ever ready to speak a kind word and cheer us with a pleasant smile; but we must not question the purpose of God. May we be enabled to say, "Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven." The funeral was preached by Elder Poulson, to our comfort, and that of many sympathizing friends.

"Brief life is here our portion,
Brief sorrow, short-lived care;
The life that knows no ending,
The tearless life, is there."

ELLA C. ADKINS.

SALISBURY, Md., April 10, 1889.

Michael Schneider died at his residence near Oelwein, Fayette Co., Iowa, on Sunday morning, March 31st, 1889.

The deceased was born in France, Nov. 19th, 1831, and was married to Elizabeth Shelton, Aug. 23d, 1855, to whom were born five sons and four daughters, seven of whom survive him, and were present at the funeral. Sister Schneider preceded her husband to the better land about three years. He married his second wife in 1886. He was ever kind and hospitable to all (especially to God's ministers), his home being always open; and to attend to the brethren seemed to be his chief delight. His seat in the church was never vacant except when prevented by sickness. How much he will be missed, we cannot tell, but all who knew him can feel. The association was to be held at his place in June, and it was with fond anticipation that he was preparing for it; but the final summons bade him leave the militant church for the church triumphant. He died quite suddenly, of heart disease, aged sixty-seven years. He joined the Old School Baptist Church in 1880, and the church deeply feels her loss. May the Lord sanctify this dispensation of his divine will to the good of his people, and enable the sorrowing ones to trust in him in this sad hour of trial. The writer was called upon to officiate at the funeral, and used John xiv. 2, 3, as a text; after which the remains were laid in the Oelwein cemetery.

ALSO,

Mr. Lorenzo Jackson, son of brother M. L. Jackson, died at Nora Springs, Iowa, aged thirty years, three months and twenty-six days.

He was sick about one year, and died of consumption, March 14th, 1889. He leaves a wife, three children, father, mother and sister to mourn their loss. The writer spoke at the funeral, at the request of the family.

THOMAS BLAKE.

DUNKERTON, Iowa.

On Friday evening, March 8th, 1889, at his home in Warwick, N. Y., Mr. Wm. Ellison Sayer suddenly expired while conversing with his wife and child. He had been confined to his house most of the time for several months with something like rheumatism, but had shown no immediately alarming symptoms. He had lain down for the night, and was cheerfully talking, when his wife noticed that he did not answer her, and found his eyes and mouth closed as if in sleep, and he had ceased to breathe. The doctor attributes his death to obstruction of the heart.

Mr. Sayer was one of the warmest and most generous friends of the Old School Baptist Church in this place, though he had never made a public profession of hope in Christ. Those who have attended the association at this place within the last thirty years will remember his liberal hospitality in entertaining visitors. In his death his widow has to mourn the loss of a most indulgent husband, his children will ever feel the want of his kind care, and the church and neighborhood will miss his ready assistance in every deserving cause.

His funeral was very largely attended, and the hymn, "O land of rest! for thee I sigh," was read by request of the family, who had found it in his handwriting among his private papers. The text used was Phil. iii. 20, 21. His first wife, the mother of sister M. Eva Sayer, was a beloved member of this church until called home to the church triumphant in everlasting rest.

May the grace of our Lord Jesus comfort and support the mourning family in their great bereavement, and enable them to say, "It is the Lord; let him do what seemeth him good."

My sister, Leone Keller, who died in Toone's Station, Hardeman Co., Tenn., March 15th, 1889, was the ninth child, in age, of twelve, four boys and eight girls, four of whom are yet living, two girls and two boys.

Our father, Munford S. Marsh, was a member of the Old School Baptist Church since my earliest recollection. He died in 1883. Our mother, Caroline Marsh, was also a member of the same church. She died in 1879.

Leone Keller was born March 4th, 1847, and was nearly forty-two years of age. She professed a hope in Christ several years ago, and united with the church at Antioch on Saturday before the fourth Sunday in August, 1886, where she remained a faithful member until death. We fully believe that the good Lord has taken her to everlasting rest. She leaves a husband and seven children to mourn their loss. Her sickness was that horrid disease, consumption, which had been preying upon her for a number of years; but she bore it with great fortitude, never complaining nor murmuring through all the years of her illness.

W. T. MARSH.

DIED—Feb. 6th, 1889, after a few days' illness (said to be croup), Elva Cook, only daughter of George and Anna Cook, aged four years, nine months and fifteen days.

A bright bud of promise and hope has been suddenly snatched away, and left a cheerful home gloomy and desolate. The family residence is not far from Bryn Zion Church, at which place sister Cook is a worthy member. I have seldom seen as much sympathy manifested with an afflicted family as was shown at the funeral of this interesting child.

"Why did death's grim angel enter
O'er their threshold with his darts,
Bearing from their home the centre,
Sunlight, anchor of their hearts?"

The boon was given where it seemed to be needed. Why is it that it was given only to be so soon taken away? I suppose it is best always for us all if we can say, with one of old, "It is the Lord; let him do what seemeth him good." If he cause his face to shine upon them, they can be sustained.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date, this date denotes the time at which your subscription expires, and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

POETRY.

HEAVENLY GUIDANCE.

O, my God, thy way is hidden
From my feeble, human sight;
Yet I walk as thou hast bidden,
Trusting where there is no light.
Life before me darkens ever,
But, O God, with thee is light!
And my steps shall falter never,
Through the wildest, roughest night.
Thy right hand shall safely hold me,
For a Father's hand it is;
Thy strong arm will sure enfold me
From each ill thy wisdom sees.
Weak I am, yet thee embracing,
I am strong, and all secure;
Fearless every danger facing,
Naught can daunt, and naught allure.
Meek and lowly, humbly learning
From thy blessed lips the way;
To thine own my eyes upturning,
Thou wilt never let me stray.
Thou hast promised grace and glory,
Leading here, rewarding there;
Help beside and joy before me,
O, my soul, how can I fear?
I will trust thee, onward hasting,
All thy will I welcome here;
Father, on thy promise resting,
"Perfect love shall cast out fear."

SOMETIME, SOMEWHERE.

UNANSWERED yet the prayer your lips have pleaded,
In agony of heart, these many years?
Does faith begin to fail? Is hope departing?
And think you all in vain those falling tears?
Say not the Father hath not heard your
prayer:
You shall have your desire sometime,
somewhere.
Unanswered yet! Though when you first presented
This one petition at the Father's throne,
It seemed you could not wait the time of asking,
So urgent was your heart to make it known.
Though years have passed since then, do not despair:
The Lord will answer you sometime,
somewhere.
Unanswered yet! Nay, do not say, Un-granted:
Perhaps the work is not yet wholly done—
The work began when first your prayer was uttered,
And God will finish what he has begun;
And he will keep the incense burning there;
His glory you shall see sometime, somewhere.
Unanswered yet! Faith cannot be unanswered;
Her feet are firmly planted on the Rock.
Amid the wildest storm she stands undaunted,
Nor quails before the loudest thunder shock.
She knows Omnipotence has heard her
prayer,
And cries, It shall be done sometime,
somewhere!

CORRESPONDENCE.

REISTERSTOWN, Md., April 2, 1889.

DEAR BRETHREN:—Some time since some thoughts from me were published in the SIGNS upon the common idea of the future general judgment, in which I tried to show that for believers at least the judgment was already past. Since then I have received several requests to write more fully concerning the same theme, and some texts which are commonly supposed to refer to the future judgment have been presented, and my views upon them solicited. I had already intended to write additionally upon this theme, and in the same direction that has been suggested to me. To-day I will try to fulfill my desire and that of others in this matter.

In my former letter I tried to show that the saints could stand in no danger of a future judgment, since it was expressly declared in the word that they should not come into judgment; also, that the finished work of Jesus forbade it, and that the types could not otherwise be fulfilled. I do not purpose going over all this ground again, but wish to consider some of those Scriptures that have been generally understood as sustaining this common idea. It will at once be evident that I cannot in one letter take up and consider every portion of the word which might be supposed to sustain the popular view of this matter, but I will try to consider a few of the texts which are more commonly appealed to. A brother in Arkansas wrote me referring to two such Scriptures.

The first was Hebrews ix. 27, 28. It reads as follows: "And as it is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment; so Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation." Aside from the fact that the Savior expressly declared that his people should not come into judgment (for the word condemnation means judgment, in John v. 24), and that all Scripture must be interpreted in harmony with itself, a careful consideration of the text itself will, I think, show that here is no reference to what is commonly called the future judgment. Careful examination of the reading of the text will show that there is a double comparison presented by the apostle. First, "As it is appointed unto men once to die," is set over against, "So Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many." The second is, "But after this the judgment," set over against, "And unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation." The first comparison seems plain. Man is appointed to die because he has sinned; and unless redeemed he must forever abide under the sentence of death. So in order to redeem his people Christ must once be offered, which is equivalent to saying that he must once die. As it is appointed to man once to die on account of sin, so Jesus, the sin-bearer, must likewise die. This, it seems evident, is the meaning of the first comparison. Upon this I will not enlarge.

Now let us see if we can find the point of comparison in the second clauses. First I will say that we shall strive in vain to find any similitude between a future general judgment which shall send some to endless woe and receive others to glory, and the blessings of salvation secured at the appearing of Jesus for them that look for him. Yet in the second clauses of each verse there is a similitude, as well as in the first clauses, else all the laws of language in the construction of sentences are wholly untrustworthy. Where then is the comparison? What, let us ask, always takes place when men die? I answer, Just that which makes the natural a true figure of the spiritual. After the death or offering of Jesus, those who look for him, his disciples and heirs, receive the spiritual inheritance secured to them. So after the death of men naturally, the estate which they leave passes the judgment of the court and is settled finally, and so passes to their children or heirs. The words of the text might be paraphrased and their true meaning brought out in this way: "As it is appointed unto men once to die, and after this comes the settlement of the estate, so Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for him shall he appear, bringing to and bestowing upon them the rich treasures of the heavenly inheritance of which they are heirs." This opens up a rich field for reflection as to how and when these blessings are bestowed, and what they are; but I desire to consider some other texts, and so will confine myself to brief remarks upon each.

The brother in Arkansas also referred to Revelation xx. 12. The verse reads as follows: "And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God; and the books were opened: and another book was opened, which is the book of life: and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works." In the fifteenth verse of the same chapter we read, "And whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire." I want to say first that no child of God need fear the language of this text; for not only "the books" have been opened, but "another book" has also been opened—"the book of life." By "the books" I have no doubt is meant the books of the law of God, which judges all men, and which always condemns all men. When they are opened the judgment of all men is seen. When any soul sees himself as these books speak of him, that soul reads his own condemnation there, and also, like Isaiah, sees that all men are guilty and lost; but the "book of life" is then opened before the trembling sinner, and in it he sees the record of what Jesus has done for him, and of all that work of salvation which he so much needs provided for him by the free and full love of God, which was set upon him from all eternity. The books are opened now to the convicted sinner, he is judged and condemned now, and the book of life is opened to him now. In this hour of judgment the soul finds no excuse, but pleads only the mercy of God. The language of the whole book of Revelation is highly figurative, and much of it has always seemed very dark to me; but it is evident that there is nothing in this text to sustain the idea of the judgment combatted in my former letter.

The text in 2 Corinthians v. 10 is sometimes supposed to teach the common idea of the future judgment. It reads, "For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ; that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad." I want to say, in the first place, that this language belongs to believers only. The epistle is addressed to "the church" and "the saints." The pronoun "we" in the text means no more and no less than these characters. In the second place, "the judgment seat of Christ" is for none but those who belong to him; and the judgment seat of Christ is where he dwells, and he dwells within each saint and in his church. In ourselves and in the church, then, is the judgment seat of our Lord; and here saints are judged, and here they receive according to their deeds, whether good or bad, that is, whether of the Spirit or of the flesh. Paul knew the terror of the Lord in this judgment, and so he persuaded men, and besought his brethren to be reconciled to God. To the same end the Master spoke when he said (Matt. xii. 36), "But I say unto you, That every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment."

Another text often used is found in Matthew x. 15, xi. 24, and in other places in substance: "But I say unto you, That it shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom in the day of judgment, than for thee" (Capernaum). Now I want to call attention to the fact that here cities are named, and not individuals; also, that in those cities were infants as well as men. The judgment which fell upon Sodom for its wickedness they knew, and we all know. Fearful as it was, the judgment of God upon Capernaum should be less tolerable still; and no one ever read Josephus's "Wars of the Jews" without feeling (if he thought of these words at all) that Jesus spoke what was true. It is evident that there is not the slightest reference here to future judgment, nor to degrees of punishment in that world. The sole reference is to God's temporal judgments upon nations for their wickedness. Our God is a God of providence, and holds the balances to a hair's breadth; and what men sow, sooner or later shall they reap. There are a whole class of texts which come under the same head with this one, of which I cannot now speak. Surely thus far we have found nothing which contradicts the view I have given of this matter in my former letter, but much that sustains it. I will briefly consider one more text and leave the subject.

In Matthew xxv. 31-46 we have a lengthy parable of our Savior, which is generally supposed to depict the scene that shall be realized at the end of the world. It is more lengthy than I have room to quote. It is what is known as the parable of the sheep and the goats. Let all turn to it and read it. It will appear, first, that this parable occurs at the end of several parables, commencing with the parable of the ten virgins, all of which related to the setting up of his kingdom here on earth at the end of the old or Jewish dispensation. The parable of the ten virgins begins with the word "then," an adverb of time, meaning either "at the time" or "just succeeding the time." Before that the Savior was speaking of the destruction of Jerusalem. Then in all the parables that follow some great truth in relation to the setting up of his kingdom on earth is stated and enforced. In the parable under consideration it is said, "When the Son of man is come in his glory." While he was speaking these words he was yet in his humiliation—his glory was veiled; but soon the cross would be past forever, and the time of his glory would dawn. We find it so hard to disassociate the glory of the Lord Jesus from material things. The natural mind sees no glory unless it be in numbers, wealth, dignity, and worldly influence. Consequently the carnal mind does not and cannot see that Jesus entered into his glory when he ascended on high, and led captivity captive, and received gifts for men. But this is his glory, and he is even now sitting on the throne of his glory; and now all nations are gathered before him, now they are being divided, now he is receiving one and rejecting another. I will not undertake to point out all the precious things that this parable contains. My object here is simply to present one thing, viz., that the parable contains no reference to a future judgment. I think what has been said will show that. I will leave the theme. May God lead us into all truth.

I remain, as ever, your brother in hope,

F. A. CHICK.

"THE Lord will give grace and glory."—Psa. lxxxiv. 11.

As there is great similarity and coincidence in the development and presentation of the kingdoms of nature and grace, as preliminary to the latter I will first notice the former; and as man forms an important part in the great scale of being and action, I will trace him in some of the vicissitudes of life. In the inspired word we learn that there are two seminal heads, representing their respective families, Adam and Christ; that in the first, natural life with all its attendant blessings were given each of his offspring, and by virtue of a natural birth they possess and enjoy all the blessings and suffer all the evils that attend it. To illustrate, I have received that very life, with all its qualifications, physical and mental, peculiar to me as a man; all of which, combined, distinguish me from every other person under the sun. Not that I am a singular instance of God's creative and preserving power, but the same is true of all others. I further believe, and so I understand the Scriptures to teach, that all the blessings enjoyed and evils suffered were allotted me in weight, measure and duration by the all-wise, holy and sovereign God, and will issue in his glory and my good. Then it is not reasonable to suppose, as a different view of the subject would indicate, that our great Creator would give his creature man life, which he receives by a natural birth, in which he was entirely passive, and exercised no agency whatever, and in the further progress of his life turn him loose as the sole architect of his own destiny. Such a view of the subject is not only absurd in itself, but at variance with the inspired word of God; for in that we learn that there is "a time to every purpose under the sun;" that is, a fixed time for the accomplishment of all God's eternal purposes; and among them "a time to be born, and a time to die."—Ecc. iii. 1, 2. Then if the beginning and ending of human life was appointed of God, all the intermediate steps, from the starting post to the final end, including all the circumstances, causes, effects and events to which each stands related, were appointed of him. This being true, there was not only a certain time as to the day, week or month, to be born and to die, but also a certain era or age of this world. Thus George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, John C. Calhoun, Henry Clay, Daniel Webster, Andrew Jackson, and others, could not have filled the offices and conducted to the inauguration and preservation of a republican form of government in America, if they had lived one hundred years sooner, or a hundred years later, or in a different part of the world. If these lived at the time appointed, and filled the offices assigned them, so has, does and will every person that ever has, does now, or ever will, live in the world; for our God is no respecter of persons in this particular. As he has determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of the habitation of his creatures, none excepted, then there is not only a destined time to be born and to die, but also a destined place for each one of his creatures to spend that life; for it is in God we live, move (or are moved), and have our being; so that, notwithstanding our boasted powers, physical and mental, we are just as dependent upon our great Sovereign for the preservation of our lives, as we were in their reception at first.—Acts xvii. 26-28.

A careful consideration of the following texts, I think, will throw light on the subject in hand. "The preparations of the heart in man, and the answer of the tongue, is from the Lord." "A man's heart deviseth his way, but the Lord directeth his steps." "Man's goings are of the Lord; how can a man then understand his own way?" "O Lord, I know that the way of man is not in himself: it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps." "There are many devices in a man's heart; nevertheless the counsel of the Lord, that shall stand."—Prov. xvi. 1, 9; xix. 21; xx. 24; Jer. x. 23.

From these texts we learn that the internal thoughts, as well as the outward acts, of men are under the direction of the Lord, whether morally good or evil. And as the king's heart, like rivers of water, is turned whithersoever the Lord will, and as he has appointed, or cut out channels, for the rivers to run in, so he has for the thoughts and actions of his creatures; for one of his creatures is as much under his control and direction as another. Though man seems to move of his own accord, in contriving and executing his plans, yet his goings in all their minutia are from the Lord, and he succeeds in his enterprises only when there is a favorable concurrence of circumstances with his endeavors, resulting from the unseen yet unceasing agency of divine providence. How then can he understand his own way? As the counsels of heaven are eternal, and as such the great regulator of human affairs, all the actions and transactions of time are merely an evolution of the determinations of God in eternity; for the actions of mere creatures in time cannot possibly form a basis for the counsels and determinations of eternity to terminate on. This seems fully evinced in the proper distribution of persons and things, with their relative positions, from the creation of the world down through the successive generations of time, by reason of which all have conducted to what has been, what is, and what will be, in their respective generations. This sublime harmony in the works of our God is the direct result of a well concatenated series or chain of circumstances, causes, effects and events, and were, as the covenant of grace, ordered in all their parts, and sure of accomplishment; so that, blot out of the book of life the most obscure person that has lived or does live in the world, with all the circumstances of that life, from birth to death, and it would produce a chasm. To add one, would be a redundancy; for the face of things would be materially changed. And if we suppose we can have discord in the parts, and harmony in the sum total, of human affairs in the government of the world, why not in systems of art among men? It is owing to the happy concurrence of the parts of this vast and stupendous system, in every minutia of its operations, that we may either hope for or ever anticipate a glorious and happy result. And in this view of it, all God's works praise him, and the host of heaven worship him; and in this view it is that the holy apostle, with emotions of the most profound reverence and gratitude, exclaims, "O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! How unsearchable are his judgments [or decrees], and his ways [or providence in their execution] past finding out! For who hath known the mind of the Lord? or who hath been his counsellor? or who hath first given to him, and it shall be recompensed unto him again? For of him, and through him, and to him, are all things: to whom be glory forever. Amen."—Psa. cxlv. 10; Neh. ix. 6; Rom. xi. 33-36.

Having shown in a very limited way that a well connected chain of harmonious events prevails in the kingdom of nature, I will now, in the light of revelation, see whether the same prevails in the kingdom of grace, in the matter of eternal salvation. In order to get at the correct meaning of the term grace, I will refer to the inspired word. Paul, an inspired apostle, says, "To him that worketh is the reward not reckoned of grace, but of debt. But to him that worketh not, but believeth on him that justifieth the ungodly, his faith is counted for righteousness." Again, "If by grace, then it [salvation] is no more of works: otherwise grace is no more grace. But if it be of works, then it is no more grace: otherwise work is no more work." The same apostle, after enumerating a long catalogue of sins or crimes of which sinners are guilty, says, "Being justified freely by his grace, through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus."—Rom. iv. 4, 5; xi. 6; iii. 24. Now as the subjects of salvation are said to be ungodly, and destitute of good works, and to be justified freely by grace, and as the apostle shows that grace and works antagonize each other, it follows that grace in its very nature, and as displayed in the work of salvation, is absolutely sovereign and free; consequently it never interposes in conferring favors upon the deserving or worthy, as inviting its donations; for when favors are conferred as conditioned upon the worthiness of its object, it proceeds and is received, not upon the principle of grace, but proceeds and is received upon the principle of equity, in payment of a debt. Grace and works being antagonistic in their very nature, can never co-operate in the matter of salvation; for in the work of salvation grace is absolutely free, or it is not at all. Then grace bestowed in time is glory begun; and the highest sense of glory is grace made perfect, or crowned in eternity. And though this grace is bestowed and received in time, it was given the election of grace in eternity, according to that declaration of the apostle, "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ, according as he hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world." "Who hath saved us, and called us with a holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began."—Eph. i. 3, 4; 2 Tim. i. 9. When the apostle, in Ephesians ii. 5, says, "By grace ye are saved," we do not understand him to mean that grace has merely provided the way, and proposes terms of acceptance, and eternal life, as suspended on works of obedience on the part of the dead sinner. Of this the context will not admit; as those Ephesians, who were dead in trespasses and sins, were by grace quickened into divine life. And owing to the riches of God's mercy, his love in Christ was settled on them, and on all the election of grace, from eternity. Therefore they are quickened together with Christ, and saved by grace. As the heirs of salvation were chosen in Christ before time, their good works in time could not be a condition of their salvation, nor their sins of time a bar to it. Then the mercy and grace of God are displayed in all their fullness of sovereign efficacy when brought in contrast, and to bear upon the sins of his people, and their utter removal or blotting out.—Isa. xlv. 22. Grace reigns then in the work of salvation, in its beginning, progress, and final consummation in glory. Sovereign grace reigned in electing a special, peculiar and favored people to grace unto glory; and invincible grace will, sooner or later, call with a holy calling all the objects of God's eternal love, from sin and misery, to God and happiness, or holiness. And as grace reigns through righteousness unto eternal life by Jesus Christ our Lord, its reign is irrespective of the works of the saved, whether morally good or evil. As in Adam natural life, with all its after developments, was given each of his offspring, so eternal life, with all spiritual blessings necessary to its manifestation, continuance and perfection in glory, was given each of the members of his body in him, as their spiritual head. Of his (Christ's) fullness each member, sooner or later, receives, and grace for grace; that is, in my view of it, there was special grace given each heir in eternity, to be received and enjoyed in time. To illustrate, if I have been brought under the dealings of grace at all, I received (as in my natural life) that special grace which in its actings distinguishes me from all others of the elect of God. For "unto every one of us [that is, to the elect of God] is grace given according to the measure of the gift of Christ."—Eph. iv. 7. Although there is one body, and one Spirit by which all the members are baptized into that one body, and are mutually dependent and obligated to each other, in order to the edification of the whole body, yet there is a distinct personality, and consequent responsibility, individually, each having a special place in the body, as the head, eye, hand, feet, &c., each having gifts conferred, to enable them to discharge the duties peculiar to their office, as ministry, teaching, exhortation, and so on.—Rom. xii.; 1 Cor. xii. Although the same harmony prevails, both in its parts and operations, in nature as in grace, yet there is this difference in the manner of their manifestation: grace flows from God as a principle of his nature or character; whereas all created existence is merely under his control and distinction, as being separate and distinct from himself; for though he is the Creator of all things, and moves and directs the things created, yet he is not mixed with any of them. In this sense sin as a principle, nor in its operations, is no farther removed from him than other creatures, as all creatures are equally (that is, infinitely) inferior to and removed from him.

On reviewing this scribble I find many defects; but I will send it for your inspection and disposal. If you publish it, I hope to write on the operations of grace as realized in the experience of believers.

JAMES WAGNER.

BLANCO, Texas, April 5, 1889.

172 EAST 74TH ST., NEW YORK, N. Y.,
Jan. 20, 1889.

IT IS with much fear and trembling that I seat myself this morning to commune with the scattered members of my Father's household. Since learning the results of willful disobedience in past experience, I dare not seal my present inclination to tell you some of the dealings of God with my soul. I have been requested to write on this subject by some dear ones, and have promised that if my mind should lead me to do so, I would. This was an easy way to evade further questioning; yet I felt confident in my own mind that such an impression would not rest on me, as I have never been able to relate what I claim as an early experience of my sinful condition, the weight of guilt that bowed my young heart, like an overburdened tree, until in utter despair I could only say, "Lord, save, I perish;" nor of the manifestation of the forgiving Jesus. If I could not tell it, how shall my pen portray it to others? Since the opening of the new year a feeling of responsibility has rested with me, and the subject does not leave my mind. Realizing my own weakness, I am admonished by the apostle, "Be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you, with meekness and fear." I dare not claim the spirit of meekness at this time. I do not know that I have ever possessed it, I feel so far from its influence. But I do know that I come in fear, not of the scoffing or criticism of unjust readers, for I stand only before those who know of the hidden things that are revealed to the spiritual understanding of God's elect.

Being born of strict religious parents, and reared in all the observance of religious works, I do not recall a time that I did not desire to be a christian, and to know something of God and heaven. At the age of ten years I saw myself a condemned sinner, lost and undone, without an interest in the blood of Christ. I attended various meetings, asked the prayers of those I esteemed as christians, told my mother I was a vile sinner, and asked her to pray for me. I well remember the confident feeling that entered my childish heart, Mother will know how to ask God. He will answer her. But relief did not come in that way. I tried to read my Bible, to pray, to exercise faith, and would say, "Lord, I believe." "God, be merciful to me, a sinner." The words only added weight to my burden. At times I could get away from the sadness. It did not rest with me so constantly then. I would resolve to live a very good life, make vows to do as a christian should, but all in vain.

At the age of eleven years I was again terrified to find my heart a bottomless pit of sin. I knew I was considered an ordinary good girl, and this thought caused me to feel that the eye of God penetrated far beneath the surface, seeing the thoughts that never found expression. I did not wish to escape his omnipotence, for I now realized that all my help must come from him. I heard others rejoice in the knowledge of the new birth. I constantly grew worse, or my sins seemed to far outweigh my years. One night, after attending a prayer meeting, I was afraid to fall asleep. I could neither pray for myself nor ask others to pray for me. I had said and done all that they had told me to do, and yet I was not comforted. I felt that if God in heaven did not hear my cry, I was lost forever. I knew it was just, for there was no goodness in myself. What I had loved so much in the daily walk of my mother, I felt I could never possess. I cried, "Lord, be merciful to me," and fell asleep. When I awoke I was in a new world. The trees seemed clothed with praises, and the birds seemed to be singing notes of love to their Creator. The sun shone on me with a new light. I did not understand this change. I was filled with joy and gladness. I ran to my mother and asked her what had caused this great change. "Jesus has appeared to you, the one altogether lovely," was her reply, her own heart shouting praises. My first thought was to carry the joyful news to my young associates. I thought they could see the same change in nature that I saw, and I would declare to them that God was in it all. But I found not one to rejoice with me. Then the tempter came and told me that it was only a dream; that if it was truly of the Lord, it would not come in this manner; that I would know when my burden left me; that I must get it again, and watch where I lost it, and then it would be genuine. I did try, but I have never recovered it. My next trial was, I had mentioned it to others, and now I must confess to them that it was all a delusion. My mother saw the cloud and inquired the cause. I buried my face in her lap, and told her all, and asked if God would forgive me for telling such terrible lies. I do not remember where she read from, but she explained the cunning devices of the adversary, and also told me that it was impossible to impart the truth to the natural mind. But she said I must tell it to the church—New School Baptist. I did so, was received, and was immersed. Then work begun. I must be faithful to perform all duties, be ever ready to speak or pray in the meetings, as my influence would be extended to the older members; and that would be letting my light shine. If I did not do so, I would be denying my Lord. I grew into womanhood, a devoted slave to all these things. "Having a zeal of God, but not according to knowledge." It was my chief joy to be engaged in church work, visiting the poor, and gathering children into the Sunday School. I continued in this path for about twenty years. In the providence of the covenant-keeping God my home was directed to Middletown, Orange Co., N. Y., where I first learned of the Old School Baptists. I did not then understand the difference between them and the New School Baptists. My first impressions were that they were the aged ones, who preferred to meet by themselves. This prompted me to learn something of them. Soon after making the acquaintance of some of them, my struggle began. They preached salvation by grace alone. My heart responded to the same precious doctrine. Examination soon proved that I was not satisfied with my standing in the church. I could not find Scripture authority for their practices. As I had never been a "liberal" Baptist, I had thought that the fault rested with myself. But now I understood that the New School had departed from the old paths, and my experience traveled back to the sure foundation from which they had fallen. I very soon hungered for the doctrine as the Old School Baptists only presented it, with a "Thus saith the Lord." Two years of conflict followed, in which time I learned the warfare between carnal reasoning and spiritual truth. One idol after another fell into dissolution. At last only one remained—my Sunday School. I loved it so much, and for the sake of my family I wanted to cling to it. But he who speaks, and it is done, and who commands, and it stands fast, made bare his arm. I was left without a single prop of man's works to build on. I must look to the Rock, from whence cometh all my help. I now made known my position to my New School Baptist friends. After laboring with me, they granted my request and excluded me, as not being in fellowship with them as a denomination. This severed the nearest natural ties. Not one could understand why I should leave those I had associated with all my life, to mingle with the despised few who were all strangers to me in the flesh. After attending the Warwick Association at New Vernon, in June, 1880, I was privileged to attend a church meeting on the Saturday following, at Middletown. As I listened to the relation of experience of three others who had walked in a desert place about the same length of time I had, my heart responded to the truth,

"God moves in a mysterious way,
His wonders to perform."

I was asked if I wished to talk to the church and tell of my exercises. O how pure the church was before my mind at that moment. I saw it indeed as the bride, the Lamb's wife, and myself a poor, imperfect, sinful creature. I dared not ask a place among them, feeling I had so little to say, and that they would not find the mark in my forehead, which I could so plainly see in every one of them. I really imagined that their natural faces wore a different expression from other people. But I was willing to tell them how I had enjoyed the meetings, and ask them to permit me to follow after them. I opened my mouth, but have never known what I said that gained their christian fellowship. They received me, and the next day, in company with the three above mentioned, I was led into the watery grave by our much loved brother, Elder Gilbert Beebe, being the last candidate he buried in the likeness of him he so faithfully proclaimed to be the resurrection and life of his people.

I realize that I am covering much paper with words; but I have not written the smallest portion of what I sometimes claim as experience. That little hope given me in my tender years is all I cling to now. I must trace all to that anxious hour when helpless I did cling to the arm of Jesus. While I wandered so long in the wilderness, that same star guided my way, till it came and stood over where the young Child was. I yet feel unworthy to have a name and place with the children of God; but where could I go, if cut off from them? I often feel that it requires much patience on their part to bear with my ignorance and many short-comings; but hitherto the Lord has sustained them. With them I hope to spend my days, and when done with the things of time, to be changed into the glorious image of him who is the first fruits of them who sleep.

If this comes to the eyes of my brethren and sisters, some may say, The half has not been told. Neither can I tell it. It is too wonderful, that I should be given a precious hope in the blood of the risen Savior. It is even so, Father, for so it seemed good in thy sight.

H. M. HOBBS.

DAYTON, Wash. Ter., Jan. 27, 1889.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—I am pleased to get the SIGNS weekly, and usually read all the communications and the editorial before reading any other matter on hand, and always find a feast of fat things. O what a privilege it is to read those expressions of love and fellowship from all over the United States and Canada, from dear brethren and sisters whom I have never seen, nor ever will, perhaps, in this vale of tears and mortality; but their cheering epistles are a prophecy of a universal meeting and greeting on the shores of blissful immortality, where we shall know even as we are known, in the identity of that one body of our Redeemer. In the resurrection we shall not carry the image and likeness of the first Adam. Our sins, our deformities, our aches and pains, sighs and groans, will all be left behind. But the body that is sown natural and corruptible, shall be raised incorruptible, and befashioned like unto the glorious body of our Lord Jesus Christ. O what a change! But it shall come to pass, for the Lord hath spoken it. The prophets of the Lord inquired no further than this, What is the word of the Lord?

What hath the Lord spoken? Human wisdom and philosophy cannot answer such a problem as this, "If a man die, shall he live again?" Solomon, the wise man, could trace man no further than the grave, by any knowledge he had by all things under the sun. Thomas Paine called death a leap in the dark; and it is a leap in the dark to all uninspired intelligence. Mr. Ingersoll says he does not know whether there is any God or not, or whether there is any hereafter. Even Solomon inquires, "Who knoweth the spirit of a man that goeth upward?" That is, who knoweth by anything under the sun, or by the histories of past ages, or by the lessons of the present, or by the predictions of the future? The ages answer no one. Present time and events answer none. The grave answers in silence none, no, not one; but revelation answers that the spirit of man ascendeth to God. As to the body, revelation answers, "Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise." For Jesus hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel, not the law. Faith, not science, answers, "It shall come to pass, for the Lord hath spoken it." And faith rejoices in the assurance that the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ hath begotten his chosen people again unto a lively hope, by the resurrection of the Lord Jesus Christ from the dead. Therefore if we be dead with Christ, we believe that we shall also live with him. Now Abraham's faith was of this character. He believed that what God had promised he was able to perform; therefore it was counted to him for righteousness. And it (faith) shall be imputed to us also, if we believe on him that raised up Jesus from the dead: who was delivered for our offenses, and raised from the dead for our justification.

This quotation exhausts the subject, as to the ground of justification before God, without works. But good works always follow, according to the declaration of James. "Was not Abraham our father justified by works, when he had offered up Isaac his son upon the altar?" Thus he demonstrated the faith which he had long years before, by which he had stood justified all the while since the promise. But to return. Abraham believed that what God had promised he was able also to perform. This is just the point. This is what distinguishes the faith of all God's people; yes, of every sound Old School or Regular Predestinarian Baptist. If, like Daniel, they are blamed, it is for their confidence in the power of their God. Here let me inquire, How may it be known that he is able to perform all his will. I answer, First, he is Sovereign of the universe, doing his pleasure in the armies of heaven, and among the children of men. "Hear, O Israel; the Lord our God is one Lord." This is the first of all commandments. Therefore God is not divided against himself. All his adorable perfections are in perfect harmony. And being before all things, he is obligated to none, and by him all things consist. Therefore he created all things, and consequently predestinated all things; and holding all contingent and connecting powers in his all-powerful grasp, his purpose is absolute, without any helping word to make it so. This view of God and his power is calculated to sweep every doubt that can be raised, and clear every darkness that may hover over the mind of his believing children, and light up with undimmed effulgence the clammy vaults of the tomb of his saints. From the cross alone comes the hope of immortality and life from the dead. "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him. But God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit: for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God."

In fellowship of the truth, I trust,

UNION, New Jersey.

DEAR BRETHREN:—This will inform you that we are yet here, waiting our appointed time, according to the Lord's will, who rules in this and all other places. When last I wrote to you, I paid my subscription till January, and requested you to stop sending me the SIGNS after that date if you did not hear from me, but you kept on sending it, and I am glad that you did. You know I have taken the paper ever since your dear father began its publication, and I love the precious truth as well to-day as at the first. I am now old and worn out, being about eighty-two years old, and must soon follow those I started with, almost all of whom are gone. I must say that I thought Elder Jenkins' sermon was worth more than the price of the SIGNS for one year. I might mention many other names, all of whom are taught in the same school, and who give the trumpet a certain sound. "Blessed are the people that know the joyful sound."

Yours in the best of bonds,

WM. H. JOHNSON.

CHANGE OF RESIDENCE.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS:—Please change the address of my SIGNS from Orrsburg, Mo., to Hopkins, Nodaway Co., Mo., and publish my change of residence to the latter place.

"LET THE DEAD BURY THEIR DEAD."

DEAR BROTHER WM. L. BEEBE:—As I have just become a subscriber to the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, I have been made to wonder how the writers can find so much to interest the many readers of the paper. Surely it is the Lord's doing, and it is marvelous in our eyes. Would you oblige a poor, weak brother, if one at all, by giving your views on Matthew viii. 21, 22? What I desire to know is how the dead can bury their dead, and of what death our Lord was speaking.

The "Old Fogies," as we are called by our Arminian friends, seem to be on rising ground in this country.

Your unworthy brother,

G. A. BAGWELL.

MONTGOMERY Co., Ark., Jan. 31, 1889.

REPLY.

"AND another of his disciples said unto him, Lord, suffer me first to go and bury my father. But Jesus said unto him, Follow me; and let the dead bury their dead."—Matt. viii. 21, 22.

The literal circumstance recorded in this text is also written Luke ix. 59, 60. In both cases it immediately follows the discouraging reply of our Lord Jesus to the scribe who volunteered to follow him. Instead of presenting flattering inducements to attract this willing follower, "Jesus saith unto him, The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests; but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head." There is no further account of that voluntary follower. Then the supreme authority of our Lord appears in the calling of his disciples with power, and without consulting their convenience. It would seem that if there could be any worldly duty which should take precedence of implicit obedience to the command of Jesus, surely the filial respect which would bury a dead father might be such duty; but even this must be held secondary to the direction of the King in Zion. When it is considered that among the Jews there was no virtue more highly esteemed than reverence for parents, which was inculcated in the divine law, it is evident that the case of this scribe is the extreme of what nature could claim. Yet the Lord did not grant the delay asked for.

The request of the disciple was for the privilege of burying his father in a literal sense, as is the common practice of those who have lost by death a natural father. There was nothing wrong in the performance of this work itself, nor was it inconsistent with the profession of devotion to the following of Jesus; but it was contrary to the commandment of Jesus for the disciple to give any duty precedence of obedience to the direction of his word. When he by his Spirit applies to the heart of one of his people any commandment, it is not to be regarded as a matter concerning which that one has any right to consult his own choice or convenience. He ever teaches as one having authority. To his disciples he says, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you." The things included in this promise are those temporal supplies which are needed for the support of the natural life of the disciples. Not the most urgent necessity of nature can be regarded as justifying a saint in delaying obedience to the command of the Lord. "Where the word of a king is there is power; and who may say unto him, What doest thou? Who so keepeth the commandment shall feel no evil thing; and a wise man's heart discerneth both time and judgment."—Eccl. viii. 4, 5. Regard for the honor of our divine King forbids that we should stop to reason in reference to keeping his commandments.

Literally, they who are physically dead certainly can neither bury others, nor can they have any dead to bury. In the sense in which the apostle has defined the subject, all the family of Adam are dead, since he says, "By one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned."—Rom. v. 12. There is nothing in the law of Christ which would authorize the disciples to forbid those who are thus dead in trespasses and sins, if they are disposed, to bury their dead with all the pomp and ceremony which superstition and idolatry have devised. The commandment of Jesus is addressed exclusively to such as love him. Those who are destitute of that love are already under the power of death, and cannot deliver themselves from that condemnation which rests upon them. This fearful truth is not understood by the natural mind, and much perplexity results even to the saints from their failure to remember it, although it must have been shown to them when they first saw their own justly condemned state. When this solemn fact is understood as settled, there is no room for any system of conditional salvation to be introduced. Certainly from those who are already dead in the sight of divine justice no acceptable service can be rendered to that justice. This is true even of the finite laws of men. The convicted murderer can do nothing which will release him from his guilt. If he is pardoned he is still a murderer, although delivered from the penalty of his crime. Much less can the justly condemned sinner release himself from the curse of the holy law of God. When the abounding grace of God is revealed in the deliverance of such a lost sinner from the power of darkness and bondage of sin, and his translation into the kingdom of the dear Son of God, there is a display of omnipotence in cleansing of the vile criminal from all sin, and making him holy as God is holy. This is just what is done for every sinner who is saved from his sins by the blood and righteousness of our Lord Jesus Christ. Well does Paul exhort such characters, saying, "I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service."—Rom. xii. 1. Certainly it is consistent with sound reason that those who are redeemed from sin and condemnation by the precious blood of the Son of God, should hold every other obligation or duty as secondary to their obligation of obedience to their gracious Redeemer. Since all his saints are bought with a price, even the life of the spotless Lamb of God, it is clearly their highest privilege and duty to express their gratitude by implicit and immediate obedience to his commandments in preference to every other claim upon their service.

In its application to their daily experience, the direction given by our Lord in the subject suggested by brother Bagwell, is of great importance for the guidance of the saints not only in their intercourse with the world of their fellow-men, but in their own feelings and the thoughts of their own hearts. There is much of their bewildering doubt and unbelieving fear which has its origin in the dead traditions which have been received from the reasoning and devices of men. In following Jesus all these must be left to the dead, with whom they originate, and to whom they belong. There would be no hesitancy on the part of the saints to obey this direction, if they could clearly see the error of those dead notions to which they have been taught to cling. But so deceitful are the devices of the adversary that they are honest in their devotion to erroneous ideas until the light of the Spirit of truth reveals their falsehood. Thus they are dependent upon the grace of God to work in them both to will and to do of his good pleasure.—Phil. ii. 13. When they are enabled to leave all such dead notions and dead works, and in childlike humility to follow the Lord by obedience to his word, they are raised above earthly considerations, and realize that sweet communion with the Lord which is found only in the answer of a good conscience toward God in keeping his commandments. This has been proved in the experience of every saint who has been brought to renounce cherished errors by the revelation of divine truth. In comparison with truth every error belongs to the realm of death. No efforts of men can make falsehood become truth. Therefore let all such dead things be left to the dead to whom they belong; they who are called by the grace of God to be followers of the Lord Jesus are to let the time past of their earthly life suffice to have wrought the will of the Gentiles, when they walked in all the abominable idolatries suggested by their carnal minds. Following Jesus, they must of necessity leave all such dead things to them who are still dead; they are called to take their portion with the living, and this requires that they arise from the dead. As the voice of Jesus brought again from the dead the buried Lazarus, so by the same almighty word all his saints are made spiritually alive, and in obedience to his commandments they do arise from the dead, and walk in newness of life. As there is no death in the glorious kingdom of our triumphant Savior, his followers are called to an infinitely higher vocation than the burying of the dead. It was provided under the typical dispensation that every Israelite who should touch a dead body was thereby rendered unclean.—Num. xix. 11. So in the antitype, every true follower of our Lord Jesus must refrain from all contact with the dead works of legal righteousness. Their very touch is contamination to the saints. The unclean person in the type was still an Israelite, and the law made provision for his being cleansed; so, under the gospel dispensation, the disciple who is contaminated with the pollution of trusting in legal works of his own for righteousness, is not thereby cut off from the grace of God which is revealed in Christ Jesus; but he is separated from the enjoyment of the comfort and fellowship of the saints who are walking in the light of the liberty of the sons of God.

In answer to the special inquiry of our brother, we understand the Lord as denying the request of the disciple whom he had called to follow him. Clearly the disciple wished the liberty of first literally burying his father, before obeying the command of the Lord. This was making the authority of Jesus secondary to the demands of natural relationship. In the direction to let the dead bury their dead, the Lord instructs such as he has called, to leave all earthly duties and obligations which conflict with obedience to his word. Those things can be attended to by such as are dead to the higher vocation wherewith he has called his saints. As we understand the instruction of our Lord in the text, immediate and implicit obedience is enjoined upon those who love him. Not even the most urgent duties of a temporal character can justify delay in rendering that obedience. That there is such a thing as the children of God walking in disobedience is clearly taught in the Scriptures; and also that the Lord is faithful to visit their transgressions with his chastising rod. This is one of the most unquestionable assurances of their recognition by him as the children of his love. It is indeed a fearful thing for them to fall into the hands of the living God in the way of receiving his just chastening; yet it is the certain proof that they are indeed his children.

When one of the saints is called of God to do a certain work, as to tell the church of the hope which God has given him, or to speak in the church of the goodness and love of God as it is revealed to him, it is a very common thing for carnal reason to suggest many things which stand in the way of obedience. Such was the case with the one whom Jesus called in the text; but Luke records that the Lord commanded him imperatively, "Go thou and preach the kingdom of God." He was qualified to preach the absolute power and authority of that kingdom by the very experience of the necessity which was laid upon him in being thus sent forth. So, those who are called of God to preach his gospel must still leave all their most highly esteemed earthly obligations when they are found to conflict with obedience to the command of their Lord. When he commands one of his saints to speak in his name he will always open a door for obedience to that command; and there will be some of his people prepared to hear the word spoken. In the case of Barnabas and Saul, the Holy Ghost spoke to the church, saying, "Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them."—Acts xiii. 2. It is very questionable whether God ever calls one of his people to the work of the ministry without at the same time speaking in this way to the church. When one is thus called, he is not at liberty to allow any temporal duty to stand in the way of obedience to the commandment of the Lord.

COMPLETION OF THE SERIAL.

WITH this issue we complete the serial, "Solomon's Temple Spiritualized." We anticipated running other articles in serial form, but as far as we can learn they do not give as general satisfaction as original matter; and as we have quite a supply of communications from the brethren and sisters, we shall for the present discontinue the serials.

BACK NUMBERS.

WE have now discontinued sending back numbers to the first of the volume to new subscribers unless especially ordered. We still have quite a number of each issue on hand, and can supply them if desired.

LARGE HYMN BOOK FOR A DOLLAR SIX FOR FOUR DOLLARS AND A HALF.

We have had bound in cloth, the same style as the "Editorials" or "Church History," a few hundred of our large type Hymn Books, which we will send post paid at the above prices. These books are especially adapted for aged people, or for pew racks, to be used in churches.

A SMALL ONE FOR SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS, OR SIX FOR THREE DOLLARS.

We also have the small type book bound in cloth, which we will send post paid at price stated above. Cash must always accompany the orders. Address,

SOLOMON'S TEMPLE SPIRITUALIZED.

BY JOHN BUNYAN.

CHAPTER LXIII.

Of the mercy-seat, and how it was placed in the holy Temple.

THE mercy-seat was made in the wilderness, but was brought up by Solomon after the temple was built, with the rest of the holy things.—2 Chron. v. 2-10.

The mercy-seat, as I have shown, was but low. Two cubits and a half was the length, and a cubit and a half the breadth; but the height thereof was without measure. The length and breadth of the mercy-seat is the same with that of the ark; perhaps to show us that the length and breadth of the mercy of God to his elect is the same with the length and breadth of the merits of Christ.—Ex. xxv. 10, 17. Therefore we are said to be justified in him, blessed in him, even according to the purpose which God purposed in him.

"And thou shalt," says God, "put the mercy-seat above upon the ark." Thus he said to Moses; and this was the place which David assigned for it.—Ex. xxv. 21; 1 Chron. xxvii. 11. It being by God's ordinance placed thus, doth teach us many things.

First. That mercy's foundation to us is Christ. The mercy-seat was set upon the ark of the testimony, and there it rested to usward. Justice could not have suffered us to have any benefit of mercy had it not found an ark, Christ, to rest upon. "Deliver him from going down to the pit: I have found a ransom."—Job xxxiii. 24.

Second. In that it was placed above, it doth show that Christ was of mercy's ordaining; a fruit of mercy. Mercy is above, is the ordainer. God is love, and sent of love his Son, to be the Savior and propitiation for our sins.—John iii. 16; 1 John iv. 10.

Third. In that the mercy-seat and ark were thus joined together, it also shows that without Christ mercy doth not act. Hence when the priest came of old to God for mercy, he did use to come into the holy place with blood; yea, and did use to sprinkle it upon the mercy-seat and before it seven times. Take away the ark, and the mercy-seat will fall. So take away Christ, and the floodgate of mercy is let down and the current of mercy is stopped.

Fourth. In that the mercy-seat was set above upon the ark; it teacheth us to know that mercy can look down from heaven, though the law stands by and looks on. But then it must be in Christ, as kept there and fulfilled by him for us. Christ is the end of the law for righteousness; and if that be true, the law for that can look no farther, whoever comes to God by him. Then let them that come to God for mercy be sure to come to him by the ark, Christ. For grace, as it descends to us from above the mercy-seat, so that mercy-seat doth rest upon the ark.

Wherefore the thus placing of things in the holiest is admirable to behold in the word of God; for that indeed is the glass by and through which we must behold the glory of the Lord. Here we see the reason of things. Here we see how a just God can have to do, and that in a way of mercy, with one that has sinned against him. It is because the law has been kept by the Lord Jesus Christ. For, as you see, the mercy-seat stands upon the ark of the covenant, and there God acts in a way of grace toward us.—Ex. xxv. 17-23.

CHAPTER LXIV.

Of the living waters of the inner Temple.

ALTHOUGH in the holy relation of the building of the temple no mention is made of these waters, but only of the mount on which, and the materials with which, the king did build it, yet it seems to me that in that mount, and there, too, where the temple was built, there was a spring of living water. This seems more than probable, from Ezekiel xlvi. 1, where he saith, "Afterward he brought me again unto the door of the house; and, behold, water issued out from under the threshold of the house eastward: for the forefront of the house stood toward the east, and the waters came down from under, from the right side of the house, at the south side of the altar." Again, Joel iii. 18, "And a fountain shall come forth of the house of the Lord, and shall water the valley of Shittim." Nor was the spring, wherever was the first appearance of these holy waters, but in the sanctuary, which is the holiest of all (Ezekiel xlvi. 12), where the mercy-seat stood, which in Revelation xxii. 1, 2, is called the throne of God and the Lamb.

This also is that which the prophet Zechariah (xiv. 8) means when he says, "Living waters shall go forth from Jerusalem, half of them toward the former sea, and half of them toward the hinder sea," &c. They are said to go forth from Jerusalem, because they come down to the city from out of the sanctuary which stood in Jerusalem.

This is that which in another place is called a river of water of life, because it comes forth from the throne, and because it was at the head of it, as I suppose, used in and about the temple worship. It was with this, I think, that the molten sea and the ten lavers were filled, and in which the priests washed their hands and feet when they went into the temple to do service; and that also in which they washed the sacrifices before they offered them to God; yea, I presume all the washing and rinsing about their worship was with this water. This water is said, in Ezekiel and Revelation, to have the tree of life on the banks of it, and was a type of the word and Spirit of God, by which Christ himself sanctified himself, in order to his service as High Priest. And also this water is that which heals all those that shall be saved; and by which they, being sanctified thereby also, do all their works of worship and service acceptably, through Jesus Christ our Lord. This water is therefore said to go forth into the sea, the world, and to heal its fish, the sinners therein. Yea, this is that water of which Christ Jesus our Lord saith, that whosoever drinketh of it shall live forever.—Ezekiel xlvi. 8-10; Zech. xiv. 8.

CHAPTER LXV.

Of the chains which were in the oracle, or inner Temple.

AS THERE were chains on the pillars that stood before the porch of the temple, and in the first house, so like unto them were chains in the holiest, here called the oracle. These chains were not chains in show, or as carved on wood, &c., but chains indeed, and that of gold; and they were prepared to make a partition before the oracle within.—1 Kings vi. 21; 2 Chron. iii. 16. I told you before that the holiest was called the oracle; not because in a strict sense the whole of it was so, but because such an answer of God was there as was not in the outward temple. But I think that the ark and mercy-seat were indeed more specially called the oracle. "For there will I meet with thee," said God, "and from above that will I commune with thee." When David said, "I lift up my hands towards thy holy oracle," he meant not so much toward the holiest house, as toward the mercy-seat that was therein; or, as it saith in the margin, "toward the oracle of thy sanctuary."—Psalm xxviii. 2.

Wherefore he saith, "Before the oracle," he means these chains were put in the most holy place, before the ark and mercy-seat; to give Aaron and his sons to understand that an additional glory was there; for the ark and mercy-seat were preferred before that holy house itself, even as Christ and the grace of God are preferred before the highest heavens. "The Lord is high above all nations, and his glory above the heavens."—Psa. cxiii. 4.

So then the partition that was made in this house by these chains, these golden chains, was not so much to divide the holy from the place most holy, as to show that there is in the holiest house that which is yet more worthy than it. The holiest was a type of heaven, but the ark and mercy-seat were types of Christ and of the mercy of God to us by him; and I trow that any man will conclude, if he knows what he says, that the God and Christ of heaven is more excellent than the house they dwell in. Hence David said again, "Whom have I in heaven but thee?"—Psa. lxxiii. 5. For though that which is called heaven would serve some, though God himself were out of it, yet none but the God of heaven will satisfy a truly gracious man. It is God that the soul of this man thirsteth for. It is God that is his exceeding joy.—Psa. xlii. 2; lxiii. 1; cxliii. 6; xvii. 15; lxxiii. 25.

CHAPTER LXVI.

Of the high priest and his office in the inner Temple.

WHEN things were thus ordained in the house most holy, then went the high priest in thither, according as he was appointed, to do his office, which was to burn incense in his golden censer, and to sprinkle with his finger the blood of his sacrifice for the people, upon and above the mercy-seat.—Ex. xxx. 7-10; Lev. xvi. 11-15. Now for this special work of his he had peculiar preparations. He was to be washed in water; then he was to put on his holy garment; after that he was to be anointed with holy oil; then an offering was to be offered for him, for the further fitting of him for his office. The blood of this sacrifice must be put, some of it upon his right ear, some on the thumb of his right hand, and some on the great toe of his right foot. This done, some more of the blood, with the anointing oil, must be sprinkled upon him, and upon his garment; for after this manner must he be consecrated to his work as high priest.—Ex. xxix. His being washed in water was to show the purity of Christ. His curious robes were a type of all the perfections of Christ's righteousness. The holy oil that was poured on his head was to show how Christ was anointed with the Holy Ghost unto his work as Priest. The sacrifice of his consecration was a type of that offering Christ offered in the garden, when he mixed his sweat with his own blood, and tears and cries, when he prayed to him that was able to save him, and was heard in that he feared; for with his blood (as was Aaron with the blood of the bullock that was slain for him) was this blessed One besmeared from head to foot, when his sweat, as great drops of blood, fell down from his head and face and whole body to the ground.—Luke xxii. 44; Heb. x. 20.

When Aaron was thus prepared, then he offered his offering for the people, and carried the blood within the vail.—Lev. xvi. The which Christ Jesus also answered, when he offered his own body without the gate, and then carried his blood into the heavens, and sprinkled it before the mercy-seat.—Heb. xiii. 11, 12; ix. 11, 12, 24. For Aaron was a type of Christ; his offering, a type of Christ offering his body; the blood of the sacrifice, a type of the blood of Christ; his garments, a type of Christ's righteousness; the mercy-seat, a type of the throne of grace; the incense, a type of Christ's praise; the sprinkling of the blood of the sacrifice upon the mercy-seat, a type of Christ pleading the virtue of his sufferings for us in the presence of God in heaven. "Wherefore, holy brethren, partakers of the heavenly calling, consider the Apostle and High Priest of our profession, Christ Jesus." "Seeing then that we have a great high priest, that is passed into the heavens, Jesus the Son of God, let us hold fast our profession. For we have not an high priest which cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities; but was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin. Let us therefore come boldly unto the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need. For every high priest taken from among men is ordained for men in things pertaining to God, that we may offer both gifts and sacrifices for sins: who can have compassion on the ignorant, and on them that are out of the way; for that he himself also is compassed with infirmity."—Heb. iii. 1; iv. 14-16; v. 1, 2. This then is our High Priest; and he was made so, not after the law of a carnal commandment, but after the power of an endless life. For Aaron and his sons "were made priests without an oath; but this with an oath, by him that said unto him, The Lord sware and will not repent, Thou art a priest forever after the order of Melchisedec: by so much was Jesus made a surety of a better testament. And they truly were many priests, because they were not suffered to continue by reason of death: but this man, because he continueth ever, hath an unchangeable priesthood. Wherefore he is able also to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by him, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them. For such a high priest became us, who is holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners, and made higher than the heavens; who needeth not daily, as those high priests, to offer up sacrifice, first for his own sins, and then for the people's; for this he did once, when he offered up himself. For the law maketh men high priests which have infirmity; but the word of the oath, which was since the law, maketh the Son, who is consecrated forevermore."—Heb. vii. 21-28; viii. 1-5; ix. 11-14, 24-28.

CHAPTER LXVII.

Of the high priest going into the holiest alone.

AS IT was the privilege of the high priest to go into the holiest alone, so there was something of mystery also, of which I shall speak a little. "And there shall be no man in the tabernacle of the congregation when he goeth in to make an atonement in the holy place, until he come out, and have made an atonement for himself, and for his household, and for all the congregation of Israel."—Lev. xvi. 17. The reason is, for that Christ is Mediator alone. He trod the wine-press alone, and of the people there was none with him to help him.—Isa. lxiii. 3; 1 Tim. ii. 15. Of the people there was none to help him bear his cross, or in the management of the first part of his priestly office. Why then should there be any to share with him in his executing the second part thereof? Besides, he that helps an intercessor must himself be innocent, or in favor, upon some grounds, not depending on the worth of the intercessor. But as to the intercession of Christ, who can come in to help, upon the account of such innocency or worth? Wherefore he must do that alone. Hence it is said that he went in alone, is there alone, and there intercedes alone. And this is manifest, not only in the type, Aaron, but in the antitype, Christ Jesus.—Heb. vi. 19, 20; ix. 7-24. Let us grant Christ the pre-eminence in this, as also in all other things; for he is intercessor for his church, and make it for them in the holiest alone. It is said that he dwelleth in the light which no man can approach unto.—1 Tim. vi. 16.

CHAPTER LXVIII.

Of the high priest going in thither but once a year.

AS THE high priest went into the holiest, when he went in thither, so to do that work he went in thither but once a year.—Lev. xvi. 2. And as he was to go in thither but once a year, so not unless clothed and adorned with his holy robes. Then he was to be clothed, as I hinted before, with holy robes, the frontier of gold upon his forehead, the names of the twelve tribes upon his breast, and the bells upon the skirts of his garment; nor would all this do, unless he went in thither with blood.—Ex. xxviii.; Lev. xvi.

Now this once a year the apostle taketh special notice of, and makes great use of it. "Once a year." That is, to show that Christ should once, in the end of the world, go into heaven itself, to make intercession for us. For by this word "year" he shows the term and time of the world is meant; and by once in that year, he means once in the end of the world. "Nor yet that he should offer himself often, as the high priest entereth into the holy place every year with blood of others; for then must he often have suffered since the foundation of the world: but now once in the end of the world hath he appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself."—Heb. ix. 25, 26. And having thus once offered his sacrifice without the vail, he is now gone into the holiest, to perfect his work of meditation for us: not into the holy places made with hands, which are the figures of the true, but into heaven itself, now appearing in the presence of God for us.

Now if our Lord Jesus Christ is gone indeed, now to appear in the presence of God for us, and if this now be the once a year that the type speaks of, the "once in the end of the world," as the apostle says, then it follows that the people of God should all stand waiting for his benediction. Wherefore he adds, "Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time, without sin unto salvation." * * * *

Thus you see something of that little I have found in the temple of God.

ON April 14th, 1889, by the same, at his residence, Mr. James B. Fowler and Miss Lizzie A. Stout, both of Hopewell, N. J.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

Oliver B. Coplen, son of Elder J. B. and Ellen Coplen, departed this life January 12th, 1889, aged about two years.

May the God of all grace comfort the bereaved parents with the assurance that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose. The Lord gives, and the Lord takes away; blessed be the name of the Lord.

J. T. BARNES.

ELMWOOD, Saline Co., Mo.

DIED—March 9th, 1889, Mr. Harry Bouton, of paralysis, at his home on Hubbell Hill, Delaware Co., N. Y., aged seventy-four years.

Brother Bouton joined the Old School Baptist Church many years ago, and continued strong in the faith once delivered to the saints. The last words he was heard to utter on the subject of hope were, "Because I live, ye shall live also." He leaves a sorrowing wife, one son and two daughters, with other relatives and the church, to mourn.

ALSO,

VERY suddenly, March 15th, 1889, at his home in Roxbury, Delaware Co., N. Y., Mr. Ephraim B. Hinkly, aged sixty-eight years.

Mr. Hinkly was not a professor of religion, but I believe he had a good hope. He was a well-wisher of the Baptists, and often when at meeting the tears would steal down his face as he listened to the preaching of the word.

His family, consisting of his wife, one daughter and son-in-law, with brothers and sisters, are plunged into sorrow by his sudden death. His funeral was largely attended at our meeting-house.

ALSO,

VERY suddenly, March 23d, 1889, at her residence in Roxbury, Delaware Co., N. Y., Mrs. Maria More, aged fifty-eight years.

Sister More made a public profession many years ago, uniting with the Second Old School Baptist Church of Roxbury, of which she remained a firm and steadfast member until her death. She died four days before her husband, who was taken sick a week before her with lung difficulty, and followed her so soon, leaving the house in which they lived lonely and the neighborhood sad. As a sister in the church we shall miss her much, for her seat was generally occupied when she could be in it; but such are the Lord's dealings with his people. In love he gives and takes away, and still his name is blessed, and what he does is ever best. She leaves one son, her aged father, two sisters and two brothers to mourn.

Elder Benton Jenkins preached a very comforting discourse on the occasion of her burial to a large concourse of friends and neighbors from these words, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto my Father."

ALSO,

MARCH 23d, 1889, of lung difficulty, a five year old daughter of brother David F. Sanford, of Hubbell Hill, Delaware Co., N. Y.

In this the afflicted parents have again learned that what they are and have is only loaned to them for a time, to be taken again. This little girl seemed very active, and will be much missed by the parents. May the Lord sanctify all afflictions to the good of the afflicted ones, is my prayer.

J. D. HUBBELL.

KELLY'S CORNERS, N. Y.

Daniel Baldwin died March 28th, 1889, at his residence in Lincoln, Ill., of catarrh of the stomach, gradually declining all winter. His age was seventy-four years, seven months and one day.

He was born in Boone Co., Ky., and moved to Illinois in 1833. He followed farming for a business until 1870, when he bought in the city limits a parcel of land, built a nice home for his family, and ended his days, being a member of the Lebanon Church, of Logan Co., Ill. His was an active life. He was a leading member of the church, and always at his place, having the confidence of all who knew him as a man of good intentions, and desiring the good of the church. He filled the office of Deacon for many years, as well as being Moderator of the church meetings. He was married first to Huldah A. Allen, of Logan Co., Ill., in 1841, who died in 1844, leaving one child, who soon followed his mother to the other world. In 1846 he was married to sister Sarah (Reed) Allen. Of this union remains sister Frances Strode, the only heir to his estate. May the good Lord direct her in the way, and may she know that while her parents are gone before, it is only for a little time.

The church has lost an excellent member, the community has lost a good citizen, and Frances and her little family have lost a good father and grandfather. May the Lord raise up others to fill his place in the church, and still continue his witnessing in Lincoln to his name's glory. May the dear brethren be strengthened to bear this loss, and look to their Father in heaven for strength, is the prayer of the unworthy writer.

J. H. RING.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date, this date denotes the time at which your subscription expires, and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

CORRESPONDENCE.

REISTERSTOWN, Md., April 10, 1889.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—Some time since, by private letter, brother Hugh Caldwell, of Crawford Co., Ill, requested that I should write through the SIGNS on the words found in Psalm cxi. 12; and to-day I feel like trying to comply with his request. The text reads as follows, "I know that the Lord will maintain the cause of the afflicted, and the right of the poor."

This is a psalm of David. It has been supposed by some that the first eleven verses contain a prayer for deliverance from Saul and Doeg, the Edomite who was chief of the herdmen of Saul, and who informed against Abimelech the high priest for giving David the shew bread, when he fled from the madness of the king; and that in these last two verses he is comforted in remembering God, his friend and helper. Whether this be true or not, it is evident from the whole psalm that David felt himself in danger from the anger of his foes, and that all his refuge was in God. His foes were many and mighty, while he was poor and afflicted; but yet one friend remained to him. In God was his trust; and in the text he expresses his confidence and assurance that God will maintain his cause and his right.

First he says, "I know." He could only know this by knowing God; and he could know God only by revelation. Paul afterward said, "He that cometh unto God must believe that he is, and that he is the rewarder of them that diligently seek him." It is by faith that we know that God is. Paul again said, "I know in whom I have believed, and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed to his charge against that day." He knew God first; and knowing him, was persuaded of his power to keep him. When Peter said, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God," the Lord said, "Blessed art thou, Simon Bar-jona: for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven." Thus men are brought to know God; and knowing him, they come to know his character and attributes, his power, faithfulness and love, and his dealings with the children of men. So David here speaks as one who knows God, and who knows that he cares for the poor and afflicted ones. God had been revealed to him as a just God and Savior, who would at all times do right, and who would bring to naught the counsels of the wicked, making even the wrath of man to praise him. Men might be unjust and oppressors of the poor; but God would interfere in their behalf, and nothing should harm them. This was his confidence in all his present afflictions; and so, though cast down, he was not destroyed; though sorrowful, he could rejoice. How calm, peaceful and steadfast could he be with his feet on this Rock! Let us emphasize the personal pronoun, "I know." He speaks from personal experience; and I want to say right here that he does not say, "My new man knows," but, "I know." Emphasize also the word know. It is not guess-work; he was assured of it.

"The Lord." Not man, nor human power, nor kings and rulers, but the Lord. He is a just God and Savior. He arises for the help of his people. They may be afflicted, and men may oppress them; but why should they be troubled? Jehovah, who made heaven and earth, and who neither slumbers nor sleeps, is their Friend and Advocate and Judge. He has proved himself a Friend in many a time of need. David found him so; and so have all his people in a thousand trials and oppressions and afflictions.

He "will maintain the cause of the afflicted." He is an Advocate of those who cannot plead for themselves, and his advocacy is always effectual. He is a champion for all the hosts of Israel, and in him they always find the victory. They cannot fight their own battles, and are at the mercy of every foe; but the Lord, the Lord mighty in battle, is their defense. David could not at this time defend himself; but he had the assurance that his cause was the Lord's. He had been anointed king by a prophet of the Lord. It had been made known to Samuel that he was the one chosen of God. David had not sought the place; it was all the appointment of God, and he was the chosen of God. The immediate result had been the hatred and bitter persecution of Saul. Distress and danger now abounded. He was a fugitive from his home and friends. Surely all was against him. But he looked to the Lord in prayer, and committed his cause to him; and in his prayer came a blessing. God gave him such an answer in his soul as led to the confident confession of the text, "I know that the Lord will maintain the cause of the afflicted."

"And the right of the poor." This was strong assurance indeed, and under its influence we see that David never would lift his hand against Saul. He fully recognized that he and the king were both in the hand of God. God had said he should be king, and he could trust in God to bring it to pass. It was his right to be king, but it must be in God's own time and way. Therefore he took no steps toward securing the throne, and raised no rebellion against Saul, even when the king sought his life. What sublime confidence is here expressed! What perfect quietude and rest must he have felt! He could at this time fully realize what in another psalm he has given utterance to, "It is vain for you to rise up early, to sit up late, to eat the bread of sorrows [margin, anxieties]: for so he giveth his beloved sleep."

Thus far I have written concerning David personally under his manifold trials, and surely it is most interesting to thus view the matter; but now let us remember that the same language belongs to us in our trials and temptations, if indeed we be the people of God. It is the language of Jehovah through the prophet Zephaniah, "I will leave in the midst of thee an afflicted and poor people; and they shall trust in the name of the Lord." "Afflicted and poor!" Just the two words descriptive of David in the text! This has been descriptive of the people of God in every age. None others are ever called by such titles. They have passed through the world afflicted, tormented, persecuted, poor, a people scattered and peeled. Why have they not perished at once from the earth? Why have they remained steadfast in the faith? The Lord has maintained their cause and their right. Had not the Lord been on their side, their enemies had swallowed them up quick. Let my brethren who may read this speak. They will all testify that in manifold sorrows they have been upheld of the Lord. Inward foes and outward temptations would have wrought their fall and destruction had not the grace of God been their defense. All must join in the confession of the apostle when he said, "Having obtained help of God, I continue unto this day, witnessing both to small and great, saying none other things than those which the prophets and Moses did say should come."

But in addition to these reflections, which to me are pleasant, we must not forget that David stands forth as the most striking type of Christ. This is so whether we regard his sorrow, distress and poverty on the one hand, or his kingly and prophetic glory on the other. Our Jesus was also a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief. He had his days of humiliation and reproach and grief. "Ought not Christ to have suffered these things, and to enter into his glory?" he said of himself. Jesus also lived in communion with God, and, like David, expressed his confidence in his Father above. When reviled, he reviled not again. When assailed, he appealed not to the sword, but committed his cause to him who judgeth righteously. In the days of his flesh he offered up supplication, with strong crying and tears, unto God, and was heard, in that he feared; and God gave him deliverance out of all his troubles, and set him as king on his holy hill Zion. As he was above all others afflicted and poor, so is he now crowned above all others in glory; and of him it is especially true that God maintained his cause and his right.

What was his cause? It was that in righteousness and truth he might redeem his people. His cause was just; he was only defending his right. The word "cause" here takes in all that belongs to Jesus as the Redeemer of his people, of glory and praise and honor. Jesus came into the world to accomplish a work—to win a heritage. From his birth in Bethlehem to the end, all the hosts of earth, all the power of darkness, all the rage of the great enemy, were combined to defeat him. We often find him oppressed and distressed. He was hungry, thirsty, friendless, homeless; yet he pressed on, never faltering. Why? Because the work was great, and the joy that was set before him was immeasurable. He had come to redeem his people; they were his. His honor and glory, his very name, were wrapped up in them; and his strength and joy was, while he struggled in his weakness, that the Lord would maintain his cause and his right, so that, though crucified through weakness, he should live by the power of God. Some of the things that he could plead were that these people were his, and that they had been given to him in the covenant of redemption by his Father. As he said, "Thine they were, and thou gavest them me." So he could plead a right of redemption in them. In this claim he was sure of the approval of his Father. This was his cause and this was his right.

Let us remember that David's cause and David's right were also those of all his people. Their blessing was in him. As a nation they stood or fell in him. So our cause is the cause of Jesus our King. If he reigns not, neither shall we. If he reigns, all his people shall reign with him. This gives us a living interest in the work of Jesus, even as Israel had a vital interest in the work of David. Their fortunes rose and fell with his. His victory was theirs. They had a mutual interest with him in the kingdom, in the throne, in the God who placed him there. His cause was their cause, and his right was their right. They could have no sorrow that did not reach him, and their joys were his also. Once they all came to David at Hebron, and said, "We be thy bone and thy flesh." All this is most wonderfully and blessedly true of Jesus and his people.

But still another view of this subject presents itself. The people of God, each by himself, feels to be and is poor and afflicted. They are destitute of righteousness, and they are afflicted with manifold sorrows because of sin and temptations to sin. In themselves they are nothing; yet they have a cause before the court of heaven, and a just cause. They have rights which must be maintained. O how often do these poor and afflicted ones feel that their cause is lost, that they can have no rights before the court of heaven, before the just Judge of all the earth. In their own conscience how often arises the cry of "Guilty and unclean!" They look within, and all is dark and vain and wild. They are filled with unbelief and sin. Their thoughts wrong, their words wrong, their actions wrong, themselves wrong, all wrong. What can they say? What, but the plea of David, "Pardon mine iniquity, for it is great." But yet there is one who maintains their cause. He is their Advocate with the Father. One of his glorious names is "Counsellor." Vile though they be, he yet maintains their right. It is just that they should be blessed—just as well as merciful. Jesus pleads their cause, not upon grounds of human merit, but upon his own work in their behalf. In him have mercy and truth met together, righteousness and peace have kissed each other. In him are reconciled all things in heaven and in earth. By faith the precious truths are brought home to the heart of these troubled ones, and they are strengthened, and enabled once more to read their title clear to mansions in the skies. What security is realized by even the feeblest child! The believer is sometimes made happy in this assurance, even when he at the same time feels the most sinful. He is a sinner vile indeed, and yet saved. If such a joy be ours while yet we are only too conscious of our vast imperfections, what will be the measure of joy when, as David says again, "we awake with his likeness!"

"If such the sweetness of the stream,
What must the fountain be Where saints and angels drink their bliss Immediately from thee!"

"If I in thy likeness, O Lord, may awake,
And shine a pure image of thee,
Then I shall be satisfied when I can break
The fetters of flesh, and be free."

I leave these remarks with brother Caldwell and the readers of the SIGNS. I realize full well that the theme is but just glanced at.

I remain, as ever, your brother in hope of life eternal,

F. A. CHICK.

LEONARDSBURG, Ohio, Oct. 9, 1888.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR FELLOW-LABORERS IN THE GOSPEL OF CHRIST:—By your permission I will try to write the further exercises of my mind, spoken of in the postscript of my first communication, for the consideration of my brethren.

The day I was baptized, my prayer unto the Lord was that he would keep me from bringing reproach on the profession of Christ or his church. When in deep and anxious thought, these words came to my relief, "Go with them, nothing doubting; for I have sent them." I then felt it was right to go into the water and be baptized, and did so, after which the brethren returned to brother J. Main's house, where the church had appointed to hold their communion that day, on the account of convenience. After our pastor had given the right hand of fellowship to myself and wife, welcoming us to all the privileges of the church, on her behalf, and to the watchcare of our brethren, while preparation was being made for the administration of the Supper, these words were presented to my mind, "He that eateth and drinketh unworthily, eateth and drinketh damnation to himself." I thought, O what will I do? I know I am unworthy. Must I leave the room, or what shall I do? I do not want to eat and drink damnation to myself. While thus harassed in my mind, my father, being pastor of the church, began speaking on the order to be observed in coming around the board to eat and drink at the Lord's Supper; that we were to examine ourselves and see whether we were in the faith, and so eat of that bread and drink of that cup. He spoke of the disorder the Corinthians were in when Paul had used the words that were troubling me; and what he understood the apostle meant by their use was, in not discerning the Lord's body; but one being hungry, and another drunken, their coming together was not for the better, but for the worse. Paul praised them not in such conduct in the church. Father spoke of a trial which he had passed through on the same Scripture when he united with the church, and how he had been delivered. This brought relief to me in my distressed condition. It appeared to me that the Lord had sent his word to him, to comfort me with the same comfort wherewith he had been comforted of God. Then for a short period of time joy and rejoicing, with but few fears, seemed to be my lot. Then I wanted to tell to all around me what a dear Savior I had found, and to point to his redeeming blood as the way to God. When in this frame of mind I greatly desired the company of my brethren, and to be at the meetings of other churches, and felt like I wanted to visit them; but I feared that they might ask me to return thanks at the table, or render some service in the way of worship. I went along this way for some time, feeling as though I ought to honor the profession I had professed before God and man, by letting my light shine, or by bringing forth fruits meet for repentance, or performing christian duties, or let it be seen that I was really a christian man. But then I thought I would disgrace myself and dishonor the cause if I should attempt to pray or engage in any service whatever. The words of the disciples to Jesus would come into my mind, "Lord, teach us to pray, as John also taught his disciples." I thought I was too ignorant, and that it would not do; yet I felt that I would, after awhile, know more and do better. But instead of becoming more fit, or feeling better prepared, it grew worse and worse all the while, until it was a burden that made me wretched indeed. Then, Jonah-like, I thought it was better for me to die than to live. The darkness was Egyptian, and could be felt. I went with my head bowed down like the bulrush, and could not lift it up. I was cast into the deep, and made to feel the power of Satan in deceiving mother Eve with his subtilty in the garden of Eden, telling her, "Ye shall not surely die." But the Lord God commanded the man, "Of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat; but of the tree of knowledge of good and evil thou shalt not eat of it; for in the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." "Cursed is the ground for thy sake: in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life." "By the law is the knowledge of sin." "Where there is no law, there is no transgression." "Was then that which was good made death unto me? God forbid: but sin, that it might appear sin, working death in me by that which was good, that sin by the commandment might become exceeding sinful. For we know that the law is spiritual; but I am carnal, sold under sin. For that which I do, I allow not; for what I would, that do I not; but what I hate, that do I. If then I do that which I would not, I consent unto the law that it is good. Now it is no more I that do it, but sin, that dwelleth in me. For I know that in me (that is, in my flesh), dwelleth no good thing: for to will is present with me, but how to perform that which is good I find not. For the good that I would, I do not; but the evil which I would not, that do I. Now if I do that I would not, it is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me. I find then a law, that when I would do good, evil is present with me. For I delight in the law of God after the inward man. But I see another law in my members, warring against the law of my mind, and bringing me into captivity to the law of sin which is in my members. O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death? I thank God, through Jesus Christ our Lord. So then with the mind I myself serve the law of God; but with the flesh the law of sin." These expressions of the apostle are more expressive of the way I have been led than any I could present of my own choosing. Once, when in doubt of my having any interest in the things of the kingdom of God, I told the church it was all a delusion with me, and that if they only knew me as well as I knew myself they could not fellowship me. At one time I left my seat while the church communed; but, my dear brethren, I never have wanted to again have such awful feelings. The friends out of doors asked me, "Are you sick? What is the matter? Something is wrong." I sneaked off and crouched down in a corner of the road fence. If I had been sentenced to the state prison I could not have felt more confused. My thoughts ran fast. If my wife had been out of doors, I would have gone home immediately; but I had to wait. When the brethren came out of the house I did not want to be spoken to by any one. "Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth. If ye be without chastisement, whereof all are partakers, then are ye bastards, and not sons. If ye endure chastising, God dealeth with you as sons." The Lord chastened me, and I was chastised as a bullock unaccustomed to the yoke. "Turn thou me, and I shall be turned; for thou art the Lord my God. I smote upon my thigh, because I did bear the reproach of my youth." I went back when the church met again, and was sharply rebuked. But I continued to follow after my brethren as best I could, but in deep trouble. One Saturday, at the close of our covenant meeting, our pastor being absent, our deacon asked me to close the services. If he had shot at me I could not been more pained. It was like thrusting a dagger through my proud heart. I said to him, "No; you close the meeting." But "The voice said, Cry. What shall I cry?" followed me wherever I went. The answer would follow the voice, "All flesh is grass, and all the goodliness thereof as the flower of the field. The grass withereth, the flower fadeth, because the Spirit of the Lord bloweth upon it. Surely the people is grass. The grass withereth, the flower fadeth, but the word of our God shall stand forever." "And this is the word which by the gospel is preached unto you." My experience agreed with the voice that said, Cry. But my father was a preacher, and I was opposed to a man leaving his family alone and being away from his business. I had made up my mind, when a boy, never to do such a thing while I lived, and I was bound to keep my vow. "The flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh; and these are contrary the one to the other, so that ye cannot do the things that ye would." "Cry out and shout, thou inhabitant of Zion, for great is the holy One of Israel in the midst of thee." "Comfort ye my people, saith your God. Speak ye comfortably to Jerusalem, and cry unto her, that her warfare is accomplished, that her iniquity is pardoned: for she hath received of the Lord's hand double for all her sins." When the Lord was pleased in his infinite wisdom to open my understanding, that I might understand the Scriptures, there was a glory gilded the sacred page, majestic like the sun. Then I wanted to speak of his power and talk of the glories of his kingdom. Then I would be encouraged, and think I would try to speak in the name of my God to his afflicted and poor people. But when at meeting with my brethren I would tremble with fear lest I might be called upon to speak. During this time I listened with anxiety when any one spoke of being called to labor in the ministry of the word, or wrote in the SIGNS on the subject. I remember reading a piece written by brother Bundy, and also one by brother Badger, that met my mind, and was particularly suited to my condition. "Ye are our epistle, written in our heart, known and read of all men; for we have you in our hearts to live and to die." Your labor, brethren, was not in vain. Go on to know the Lord, and edify one another, as also ye do. Pardon the personating, my brethren, and I will proceed with my exercise. The words of Jesus to his disciples were presented to me with power, "All power in heaven and in earth is given unto me." It seemed to lift my mind above everything of an earthly nature. I felt I could go and leave all with him. But ere long I was groveling in the dark; yet his word followed me to the field, or wheresoever I went. I sometimes wanted the brethren to ask me to speak, or at least to try and see if that would relieve my burdened soul. Elder C. Kauffman, now deceased, with whom I often met and took sweet counsel, was a nursing father to me. Though he was nearly ninety years of age, he would sit and tell how he was led of the Lord into the gospel ministry, and of the troubles and trials he had passed through in preaching Christ and him crucified. But when brother Kauffman would get through preaching he would say, "Is there any brother present who will read a hymn and close by prayer?" He was blind, and had not been able to read for many years. He would tremble from exhaustion after speaking, and then to think I could not close the services for the old soldier of the cross was too unbecoming. But I would reason thus, There are older brethren than I, and why don't they close? But the time came when the first brother spoken of asked me again to close the meeting. Without replying, I arose and began speaking to the brethren of the new and living way which Jesus hath consecrated for us through the vail, that is to say, his flesh; and that he that was dead is alive, and lives forevermore, and is the High Priest of our profession, Jesus Christ, the righteous. "The Lord swear, and will not repent, Thou art a priest after the order of Melchisedec." "But this man, because he continueth ever, hath an unchangeable priesthood. Wherefore he is able also to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by him, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them." I spoke on the subject a few minutes, but never could tell what I said; but when I looked around at the members of the church, some were weeping. All seemed much affected, which made me wonder. What could be the cause? Was it pity, sorrow or shame I had caused them? But I read a hymn, and tried to pray. After resuming my seat, the brother who asked me to close the meeting arose to his feet, praising the Lord for the gift to the church, telling the brethren that the Lord was still raising up witnesses to his truth. But instead of my getting relief, as I had hoped, it was like adding fuel to the flame. I had publicly exposed myself. I could not preach, and what to do was more than I knew. I could not see the wisdom of God in choosing one so ignorant as I knew myself to be, to preach the gospel of his Son. But the words of the apostle would be presented to my mind, "For ye see your calling, brethren, how that not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are called. But God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty; and base things of the world, and things which are despised, hath God chosen; yea, and things which are not, to bring to naught things that are, that no flesh should glory in his presence. But of him are ye in Christ Jesus, who of God is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption: that, according as it is written, He that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord. Therefore let no man glory in men; for all things are yours, whether Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas, or the world, or life, or death, or things present, or things to come; all are yours, and ye are Christ's, and Christ is God's. We preach not ourselves, but Christ Jesus the Lord; and ourselves your servants, for Jesus' sake." My exercises lead me to believe that it is my duty to serve the church with that ability the good Lord sees is for her good and his declarative glory. Though less than the least of all saints, it is the greatest desire of my mind to be in obedience to my heavenly Father's will in all things. But I feel that I am the most unworthy and rebellious of all his servants, if one at all. The church saw proper, after hearing me for some length of time, to grant me liberty to speak wheresoever my lot might be cast in this world, which gave me some encouragement that the church recognized my gift. My brethren would sometimes express themselves as being comforted by my labors among them, which would be a satisfaction for all the mortification my poor, proud nature had to endure, in my feeble efforts to serve them.

From the time the first act of the church was taken, which was unexpected to me, and caused no little uneasiness, I could hardly think of anything else. I was like Gideon, poor, with a family dependent upon my labor for a living. It required all my time to keep them supplied. I thought there must be a mistake about the matter. It troubled me night and day. In the first place, I could see no qualification in myself for the position. Then the thought would come into my mind, You are to pass an examination. The council will determine whether you are fit for the position or not. Wait and see what they will do in your case. But I could not, until the circumstance of Abraham's offering of Isaac came to my mind. "And Abraham called the name of that place Jehovah-Jireh. As it is said to this day, In the mount of the Lord it shall be seen." It appeared this way to me. The Lord will provide for me, as he did for Abraham. He sees and knows all my needs. The mount of danger is the place where you shall see surprising grace. I then could sleep and rest. But I felt, "How dreadful is this place!" The Lord was in it, and I knew it not. These feelings continued with me all the time.

The day came for ordination, and I was given strength to tell something of how the Lord had been leading me, as I humbly hoped, into a knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus; after which my father told brother Weaver to excuse him, on the account of natural feelings, but for him to ask me all the questions he might think proper. His reply was, "I have no questions: he has the experience, doctrine and government in his relation. I am satisfied." I felt to submit myself to my brethren. My last hope to be excused had vanished. The council proceeded, by laying on of hands, with prayer by our pastor. The charge was given by brother G. S. Weaver in a sermon on the following day.

BRETHREN BEEBE:—This scribble was written some time ago, and laid aside, but not forgotten. I have had many suggestions with regard to sending it to you for the SIGNS; but when reading the communications of my dear brethren and companions in tribulation and affliction, then I feel like bearing the burden of the word of the Lord, in response to the witness within, though I meet derision, and am made a gazing stock, both by affliction, and reproaches in becoming companions with them so used.

PALESTINE, Texas, March 7, 1888.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—I feel like it is my duty to let you know that I have received the hymn books. I am well pleased with mine. Also, I am well pleased with the Church History. The SIGNS OF THE TIMES also comes regularly, laden or filled with that which is a feast to me. As well as I recollect, I have been reading the SIGNS eight or ten years, during which time many very important questions or subjects have been discussed and sent abroad through this medium; and while some have gladly and joyfully received your sentiments, others have put them away. I began to take the SIGNS in your father's days; therefore I have some of his writings, which to me seem to be the best of all. When I began to take the SIGNS, the brethren were discussing the eternal child question, as it is called here. The next question of importance was the eternal vital unity, or union, of Christ and the church; and next the resurrection; and next and last, which is still on hand, is absolute predestination of all things. Now what can I say to these things? Well, I can but say that I am satisfied with the decision, or conclusion you have arrived at; for if the foreknowledge of God and his predestination of all things could be set aside, as many even among us would have it, our foundation would be as rotten or sandy as any Arminian's. For I see predestination and revelation so much akin that I can hardly discern between them; that is, they both alike acknowledge the foreknowledge of God. So I cannot understand one when he says he believes in revelation and the foreknowledge of God, and at the same time denies or objects to predestination of all things. Brethren, if I understand it, the true sense of revelation, or in other words, what revelation is intended for, is to show us the true sense of the written word; that is, in this one particular; for we, as natural men, know it naturally. And if some of us are so ignorant that we do not know it, we can know it if we will turn to Webster, or some other man.

Now, brethren, bear with my weakness and ignorance while I try to tell you there is another sense in which the written word is to be understood; that is, there is a natural sense to the written word, and also a spiritual sense; and as I have already said, men without the Spirit can know it naturally, or historically. But to know the spiritual import or sense of the written word is by revelation; and this is to those who have the Spirit, and no others; and even many of these are slow to understand. Why? Because God is not pleased to make known things to them by revelation. When God reveals something to one, it is to their spiritual understanding, and not to their natural understanding; because the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit. And the Adam man is yet natural, soul, mind and body. It is this inner or inward man, which Paul talked so much about, that knows the things of the Spirit; and the same is he that receives revelation. Now, brethren, I have said that revelation and predestination are very nearly the same; and they are so nearly the same that where one is the other is. Now if there is any difference, it must be in the order of things. Then which of the two is first in order? Well, it appears to me predestination is; for there is sense, or it makes sense, to say that God predetermined to reveal thus and so; but there is no sense in saying that God revealed to predestinate. So I believe that some things which God has predetermined, he shows to his people by or through revelation; while as to other things, predestination is its own interpreter.

Dear brethren, I know I am one of the weak ones, and feel that I know the least of any. Although I believe in revelation, I often wonder if God has ever revealed anything to me. Many good brethren dodge at unlimited predestination, and they cannot help it; so if we know this, we must bear with them. And why I say they cannot help it is because I have been along there myself, and would then have fought the oldest man in the world that would have argued that God had predestinated the wickedness of wicked men and devils; for then I even thought it wicked of a man if he said God made the devil. Well, why is it thus and so with us? It is not altogether because we have no education, nor altogether because we have not read the Bible; because education cannot call down revelation. I notice that the best educated men we have in these days know the least of spiritual things. It is not because we do not devote all our time to reading the Bible, for I might get the letter of the Scriptures by heart, so that I could compete with any learned man, and at the same time know as little of the Spirit that brings all things to our understanding, as does the learned man. Now, brethren, I must tell you that I have read in the SIGNS much from you on predestination, and have been well pleased with it, but it appeared all the time to me like there was a little something dodged or kept back; and when I get through, you may say, Well, he dodged it too. It may be that if your language had been very common, simple and plain, such as I can understand, I would not have thought thus. Brother Wagner on predestination was very nearly plain. But I want you, in speaking of what the devil did in the garden, and of Adam's sinning, to tell of a cause for both. I am going to try to tell it; and if you see I am wrong, as brethren tell me of it.

God is and was the sole cause of both, and had a noble purpose in it. Sometimes I can see some of the purpose, and well enough understand it to rejoice in it. I understand the death and resurrection of Christ to be that which God predetermined; so if the devil had not done what he did do, and Adam had not sinned, there would not have been any necessity for the coming of Christ. So I believe that God foreknew all things. Then it follows that God predestinated all things. If God had predestinated the suffering and death of Christ, it was for something, and this something was the condition his elect or chosen people were in. This was nothing strange to God, for he foresaw it; and not only saw it, but predestinated it to be so. See, brethren, how little we knew of God before the devil deceived our mother; that is, see how little account we have of God previous to this. I am of the opinion that this is all the account there would have been. But now the work of the devil opens up the way, as it were, for a mighty display of the power of almighty God, and then we have the Bible account of it, and we believe it. And it is the work of God that we do believe. All this I understand to be predetermined of God. As I have already said, predestination and revelation travel together hand in hand. Some things we know by direct revelation, while we know many other things to be so because they turn out or come to pass just as they were predestinated.

Now, brethren, these are my sentiments, with the understanding I have. When you examine it, do with it as seemeth good unto you. I assure you I will not be offended if you throw it away. If I know my own heart, I do not want to advocate anything which the Bible will not sustain.

CAMP'S FORD, Tennessee.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—I thought I would try to pen a few thoughts as they make their appearance to my mind; and as I have no particular subject on my mind, I will try to give you some of the ideas that I have of the great I AM. I do not look upon God as being a mere machine, that acts as acted upon, or as a God that cannot do all his pleasure without the help of some individual, or the consent of sinful men and women; but I see him as a God that has all power in heaven and in earth (Matt. xxviii. 18); who will do all his pleasure; "who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will;" who hath said, "My counsel shall [not may] stand, and I will do [not try] all my pleasure;" who can open the sinner's heart, and none can shut; and who can shut, and none can open, or lawfully say, What or why doest thou? I look upon him as being all-wise (not very wise), all powerful, unchangeable, from everlasting to everlasting, without variableness or the shadow of turning. Those whom he first loved, he loved to the end, and will save with an everlasting salvation, without the loss of one. "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." So I believe that God is able to save his people, and will save them, regardless of men or devils.

I will now notice the condition of man when God made him of the dust of the earth, and breathed in him the breath of life, and man became a living soul. Notice the point; God said, "In the day [not after that day, as some men would have us believe, but in the day, the same day] thou eatest thereof, thou shalt surely die." The devil said, "Thou shalt not surely die." Now, did man die or not? is the question. God said, "Thou shalt surely die." The devil said they should not surely die. Paul said, "You hath he quickened, who were dead in trespasses and sins." Also, "But God, who is rich in mercy, for his great love [not for what we had done] wherewith he loved us, even when we were [not will be, but were] dead in sins, hath quickened us together with Christ. By grace ye are saved."—Eph. ii. 1, 5. And our Savior said, "He that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation, but is passed from death unto life. Verily, verily, I say unto you, The hour is coming, and now is, when the dead [notice that] shall hear the voice of the Son of God; and they that hear shall live."—John v. 24, 25. Now if the sinner is dead, he is destitute of any power. God has all power in heaven and in earth. But the devil said, "Thou shalt not surely die." And the Arminians say they are not dead, but can repent and believe the gospel, and live a holy life until death, and that God is under obligations to save them. Now, if the sinner is dead, when did he die? God said, "In the day thou eatest thereof, thou shalt surely die." Paul said, "Wherefore, as by one man [Adam] sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned." "But not as the offense, so also is the free gift; for if through the offense of one [not many] many be dead, much more the grace of God, and the gift by grace, which is by one man, Jesus Christ, hath abounded unto many." "For the wages of sin is death."—Rom. v. 12, 15; vi. 23. All have sinned, therefore all are dead. Now would it not be inconsistent to say that dead sinners can do anything to reinstate themselves in the favor of God, when it is said that they that are in the flesh cannot please God? It is also said, "Without faith it is impossible to please God." Faith is the gift of God. Can a man have it before God gives it to him? Christ said to Nicodemus, "Ye must be born again." "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." It seems that he could not procure that birth. Why not? Because "Without me," says our Savior, "ye can do nothing." And in speaking of our unregenerated state, the apostle says that at that time we were strangers, without hope, and without God in the world. But it is said that sinners are all taught of the Spirit; but that some put it off, and finally go to hell. But our Lord taught it in this way, "Every man therefore that hath heard and hath learned of the Father, cometh unto me."—John vi. 45. "And I will raise him up at the last day." Some also say that all men are led by the Spirit of God; but Paul says, in Romans viii. 14, "For as many [not any more, nor any less] as are led by the Spirit of God, they are [not will be, nor can be] the sons of God." Therefore, dear reader, think not for one moment that unregenerated men and women are led by the Spirit, as Arminians tell you. None are led by the Spirit until they are born of the Spirit, or quickened into life; and that life is eternal. It is said, "Being confident of this very thing, that he which hath begun a good work in you will perform it until the day of Jesus Christ."—Phil. i. 6. Then, in view of these things, our Lord rightly said, "No man can come unto me, except it were given unto him of my Father."—John vi. 65. Why not? Because "Jesus answered, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God."—John iii. 5. Then we see that we must be born of the Spirit into this kingdom. "Created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them."—Eph. ii. 10. It seems that good works are to follow the new birth, and cannot go before it. Why not? Because our Savior says, "A good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit; neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit."—Matt. vii. 18. Positively cannot; such as repentance toward God, and belief in our Lord Jesus Christ, and love to our brethren; for "love is of God." And whosoever loveth is born of God, and cannot sin. Why not? Because it is said by inspiration, "Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin; for his seed remaineth in him: and he cannot sin, because he is born of God." Some tell us that men are not born of God until death (natural); but John tells us by inspiration that "Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ, is [not will be, nor can be] born of God." He does not teach that we must believe in order to be born; but the belief itself shows that we are born of God. Jesus says, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that believeth on me hath everlasting life." Now, dear brethren, it seems to me that the belief could not be prior to the life; but it seems that life is given before anything is required at the poor creature's hand; and that life is Christ, and nothing short of him. For it is said, "He that hath the Son, hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God, hath not life."—1 John v. 12. And now, brethren, I would just say to you, Would it not be inconsistent to exhort a poor, ungodly and unregenerated sinner to do something to procure eternal life, when it is said, "Without me [Jesus] ye can do nothing?" Now, in conclusion, I will say that poor sinners are saved by grace, if saved at all, and not by works, lest any man should boast.

Brethren, do with this as seems best in your better judgment. May the grace of God and the communion of the Holy Spirit rest and abide with you, and all the true Israel of God, now and forever, is the prayer of your brother in Christ, I hope,

P. N. MOYERS.

"God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble."—Psalm xli. 1.

There is much comfort to the poor, helpless soul when he is brought to feel that the foregoing applies to his case. The Lord is Lord of lords and King of kings, who inhabiteth eternity. The Lord is Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the ending, the first and the last, and possesses all power. In him is everlasting strength. In him is the dwelling place of his saints. He is the great Shepherd and Bishop of our souls. There is comfort in the word "our." In the prayer that Jesus taught his disciples to pray, he uses the expression, "Our Father." Father implies children: and if he is "our" Father, we are his children, and heirs to all he possesses. Then if heaven and immortal glory are his, they are ours too. "For all things are yours, and ye are Christ's, and Christ is God's." There is a relationship between the father and child; and no one has the right to claim God as his Father unless he is born of God. Hence those that David included were God's children. Are we not glad that we, poor sinners, have such a blessed hope in our glorious Redeemer and Savior? These "our" are the ones who were chosen in Christ before the foundation of the world. "The Lord is our refuge." A refuge is a stronghold, or place of safety, to fly to in time of danger, where men may be protected, and escape the enemy.—Num. xxxv. 27. Christ is a refuge in his righteousness and blood.—Isaiah xxxiii. You remember that there were cities of refuge prepared for the security of those who might kill a man, &c. But the refuge that we have under consideration is indeed a secure dwelling place for the saints; for before one can touch the inmates, they must first destroy the refuge. It is "I in them, and they in me." "I am in the Father, and the Father in me." Yea, he is a good stronghold to the saints. He is good, a stronghold in the day of trouble, and knoweth them that trust in him. "The eternal God is our refuge, and underneath are the everlasting arms." The saints do not want any more secure place than in him; for he says, "They shall never perish," and the saints believe what he says is true. All the strength of the saints is from him.

Hence he says, "Trust ye in the Lord forever; for in the Lord Jehovah is everlasting strength." Yea, that strength is everlasting; for, "As thy days, thy strength shall be." We are weak, but he is our strength, and present help in trouble. If friends and all seemingly forsake us, there is help in him in time of trouble. He is a present help; he is there with you, and will not leave you nor forsake you. He was a present help to Elijah when by the brook. He was a present help to the poor woman to whom Elijah was sent. He was a present help to the Hebrew children in the fiery furnace, to Daniel in the lions' den, and to Mephibosheth, who was lame in both feet. Jesus was a present help to the poor, the halt, the deaf, the blind; yea, and he was a present help to us when he came to us, when we had given up all for lost; and he revealed to us what he had done for us over eighteen hundred years ago. He could say, "Son, or daughter, thy sins are all forgiven." We find him a present help now, when we are made to pray to him for our daily bread. "The Lord is my Shepherd: I shall not want. He maketh me to lie down in green pastures." I feel the need of this refuge daily; and of his strength and help; for I am so poor, and such a great sinner, I cannot keep myself one hour.

O that I could ever be under the guidance of his holy Spirit in all my walk and conversation, for it is pleasant to walk in the light of his countenance. Brethren, pray for me, that I may not prove an injury to the blessed cause of Christ. Let us all endeavor to get back or keep in the old paths, and bear one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ. I do rejoice in dear brother Purington's communication, for that is the way I hope it was revealed to me nearly twelve years ago, and it is the way I have been trying in weakness to preach it. I felt when I read it that it would certainly have a tendency to unite God's children on those points, and cement them together in love.

Love to the dear saints who may read this. Be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord.

Yours affectionately,

LEE HANCKS.

ROXBURY, N. Y., 1889.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—Inclosed you will find two dollars for the renewal of the SIGNS. May you long be spared to wield the sword of the Lord. It has been on my mind for some time to write what I hope has been the work of the Lord with sinful me.

When about fourteen years old my health was so poor that I did not expect to live long, which caused me to have serious reflections about death, and what would become of me after death. But as I got better these feelings wore off in a measure; yet from that time until I was about twenty-four, by times I would have such a view of my sins as I cannot describe. I remember one day of thinking that perhaps the reason the Lord would not hear my cry for mercy was because I had not used some form, such as kneeling down. So I went into another room and knelt down, but dared not raise my eyes toward heaven. I do not think I spoke one word, but the desire for the Lord to have mercy on me was in my mind. Well, I got up very quickly, and it seemed to me the devil was right behind me, ready to take hold of me, and I think I cast my eyes over my shoulder, expecting to see him. Then it seemed to me I had committed "the unpardonable sin." I was there taught,

"Not all the outward forms on earth,
Nor rites that God has given,
Nor will of man, or blood, or birth,
Can raise one soul to heaven."

When I read the Bible I could find precious promises to the christian; but I was not a christian, but a poor sinner, justly condemned before God. I had a great desire to be a christian. Sometimes I would be in great trouble on account of my sins. Then again I would become careless and unconcerned. In this way about nine years passed. Then I had such a view of my sins that I was made to cry,

"Here on my heart the burden lies,
And past offenses pain my eyes."

The words of the poet would run through my mind, "Here, Lord, I give myself away." But I did not feel that I had power to give myself away. I was so helpless I felt to say,

"Lord, if my soul were sent to hell,
Thy righteous law approves it well."

I plainly saw the justice of God in my condemnation. Now here is where my experience differs so much from most of those I have heard or read. Some can tell of some certain time or place, some word coming to them, or seeing a light, and feeling suddenly relieved of that burden of sin. I cannot tell of such bright manifestations, and it has been a source of great trouble and many doubts whether I am what I profess to be. My burden left me, but how, when, or where, I could not tell. Then I thought I was worse off than before, for I had no evidence that God had pardoned my sins. I thought then if I could have that trouble again I could be more watchful how it left me; but I have never been able to get it back. Christian people seemed near to me, but I did not feel worthy to be in their company. These words would often come to my mind, "We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren." They did look to me like the excellent ones of the earth. I lived in this way for some time, wondering if there was ever one like me. One day I went to hear Elder I. Hewitt preach, and during his discourse he said (in speaking on experience) that some were delivered suddenly, the burden rolling off all at once; while others were like a man carrying a bundle of sticks—one after another would fall, until all were gone. Then they knew all was gone. I thought that was my case. A hope sprang up in my heart at that time that has been as an anchor to my soul. On the last Saturday in September, 1854, I related some of my exercises to the church, was received as a candidate for baptism, and on Sunday was baptized by Elder I. Hewitt. I have been an unworthy member of the First Baptist Church of Roxbury since that time.

Now, brethren Beebe, I leave this at your disposal. If you throw it into the waste-basket, I shall be satisfied.

Your unworthy sister, if one at all,
PEACE BALLARD.

LOUVALE, Ga., March 12, 1889.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN IN THE LORD:—The SIGNS of the sixth of March is interesting; and having read your editorial, I desire to reiterate the sentiments contained therein. I feel more inclined to do so on account of the fact that I was once entangled in those meshes, and was so badly deceived that I verily thought I was doing God's service, from the fact that I was brought up and trained in that way, and all my education was in that line. But God, who is rich in mercy, saw fit to deliver me from those shackles, where I could enjoy the pure liberty of the gospel of Christ. And now how vain and delusive do such things appear to me. When the Old School Baptists used to attack those things, I laid it to their ignorance, prejudice and narrow-mindedness; that they were behind the times, and nothing better could be expected of them. But when it pleased the Lord for me to come to years, and then to refuse to be called "the son of Pharaoh's daughter," and to choose rather to suffer affliction with the people of God than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season, esteeming the reproaches of Christ greater riches than the treasures of Egypt, it was then that the eye of faith detected the enormous errors of missionism; and I am now prepared to say that the god of modern missionism is no better than the fish god of the ancients. In the Apocrypha we read an account of the deceptions that were practiced anciently by the worshipers of Bel, who had his princes, and whose duty it was to get up sacrifices for Bel. And even the king himself was deluded, and made to believe that Bel consumed the sacrifices put upon the tables in the temple. Daniel told the king he was deceived, and that Bel was no god. And they went into the temple, and all the sacrifices were placed on the table, and Daniel and the king went in and came out, and locked the temple door; and they had it sealed with the king's seal. Daniel sprinkled ashes on the floor, and the next morning, when the king and Daniel came in and saw that all the sacrifices were consumed, the king looked upon Daniel, for his life was at stake. But Daniel said, "Hold, O king! Whose are these? I see the tracks of men, women and children." When the matter was ferreted out, there were trap doors through the floors, and they came up after the door was shut, and took the sacrifices, and consumed them. And so is it until this day. This mission board god is an idol, worshiped by men's hands. The very spirit of it is contrary to the word and spirit of the gospel of Jesus Christ; for it is a money scheme, worked by men, and how many thousands of dollars have been squandered in that direction no one knows. The fruitlessness of the system is manifest to any investigating mind, and the saints of our God should be fully apprised of the fact, lest they turn aside to such vain follies in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Some are saying, "Lo here," and some, "Lo there." Some are testifying that it is a grand success, and some that it is a failure; but facts now coming to light, which cannot be hid, will apprise all true inquirers that it is of men, and will come to naught. I think your editorial timely, and brethren elsewhere who also know of these things will cast in their mite into the treasury of the Lord, and the riches of his honor will be set forth, that salvation is by grace, through faith, and that not of ourselves, nor by money, nor means, nor men, nor all these things combined, but by the Spirit and power of the God of Daniel and Elijah, the only living and true God, the God of heaven and earth, who quickens whom he will, when he will, and does his own "pleasure in the armies of heaven and among the inhabitants of the earth, and none can stay his hand, nor say, What doest thou."

Yours in hope,

W. LIVELY.

A MAN WHICH HAD NOT ON A WEDDING GARMENT.

BROTHER BEEBE:—If you are disposed to comply with the request of an old brother, unknown in the flesh, but I hope acquainted in the spirit, please give your views on the portion of the parable of the Marriage Supper, recorded Matthew xxii. 11-14. It has been on my mind very often. Please be explicit in describing the garment.

From him who loves you for the truth you maintain in your editorials.

JAMES MCINTYRE.

REPLY.

"AND when the king came in to see his guests, he saw there a man which had not on a wedding garment; and he saith unto him, Friend, how camest thou in hither not having a wedding garment? And he was speechless. Then said the king to his servants, Bind him hand and foot, and take him away, and cast him into outer darkness; there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth. For many are called, but few are chosen."—Matt. xxii. 11-14.

In the parable of which this text is a portion, our Lord spoke to the chief priests and Pharisees, declaring unto them the end of that dispensation under which they had been the favored recipients of the law of God; and in this declaration, although it was spoken as a parable, those opposers of the doctrine of our Savior "perceived that he spake of them." It is not our purpose at present to speak particularly of the very many different ways in which any parable may be correctly applied in the illustration of different points of divine truth. It is only needful in answering the inquiry of our esteemed brother that we carefully observe the fact that this language of Jesus was declared by inspiration to be a parable, and that it was addressed to unbelieving adversaries of the truth.

It seems evident that in the preceding portion of this parable, the nation of Israel is signified as "them that were bidden to the wedding." In their disregard for the injunctions of the legal covenant which was given to them, they did refuse to hear the message which was sent to them by the hand of Moses and all the prophets. Jesus himself says of the legal and prophetic Scriptures, "They are they which testify of me." In their testimony none ever saw Jesus, however, unless he was revealed by his Spirit in their hearts. The bringing in of the outcasts from the highways, fitly portrays the gathering in of the Gentiles and publicans and sinners, who were manifested as the chosen vessels of mercy, while the favored nation of Israel was cast out.

It must not be forgotten that the parable is continued in the verses to which our brother calls attention. It is evident from the mere letter of the text that those who were gathered together by the servants of the king, were furnished with suitable apparel for the occasion. So it is reported by tradition that it was the custom anciently for rich garments to be furnished by bounty of kings and nobles to those who were honored with the privilege of attending their feasts. Hence, when one was found in such a company without the garments thus specially furnished to all who were properly bidden, the question of the king was unanswerable, therefore "he was speechless." In its primary application, we understand this parable as showing the impossibility of any one partaking of the rich provision of gospel grace while wearing the robe of self-righteousness. There is but one garment which is accepted as the uniform of all those who ever can enjoy the wedding supper of our King. This garment is freely furnished by his bounty, and he has given full instruction as to how it is to be worn. The direction is, "All of you be subject one to another, and be clothed with humility; for God resisteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble."—1 Peter v. 5. In such clothing as this the saints are well prepared to confess their own unworthiness, and give all the glory of their salvation to the sovereign grace of God. If any one can find in himself anything to merit the favor of God, it is evident that at that time he has not on the garment of humility. When clothed with this heavenly grace, each saint esteems others better than himself.—Phil. ii. 3. This can be done by none but those who are included with the apostles as "The circumcision which worship God in the spirit, and rejoice in Christ Jesus, and have no confidence in the flesh."—Phil. iii. 3. The very same light of divine grace by which they see the perfect holiness of the Lord Jesus, reveals also their own sinfulness. The effect of this revelation is felt in the realizing sense of their utter destitution of any claim upon the favor of God. They then can honestly pray, "God, be merciful to me, a sinner!" In every such earnest prayer this lovely characteristic of the wedding garment is manifested. Without this heavenly garment no sinner ever can feel his need of infinite mercy for the pardon of his sins, and desire the gift of divine righteousness for his justification before God.

The works of righteousness in which all legal religionists trust, are not represented by a wedding garment. They are more fitly likened to the clothing of toilers. There is no possibility of rest being attained by such works, much less can there be any entering into such rejoicing as is symbolized by the royal wedding supper in the parable. Self-righteousness can never furnish an acceptable garment in which any sinner may appear before the King of glory. This fact forever settles the claims of all who trust in themselves that they are righteous. The only garment which is approved by our gracious Redeemer is that robe of spotless purity which he gives to every one whom he calls by his grace. So far as the doctrine of the gospel is concerned, those who are taught of God will generally be ready to acknowledge that their only hope of salvation is in the unmerited favor displayed by the grace of God to them as guilty sinners in his sight. Yet they are easily entangled by the artful suggestion of the tempter that there certainly should be some good thing found in themselves to justify their claim to hope in the revelation of grace in Christ Jesus. This was the bewitching doctrine taught to the churches in Galatia. They had begun in the Spirit, and were seeking to be made perfect by the flesh. This foolish error has troubled many of the bewildered children of God since the apostle reproveth it in the Galatian churches. It is very common for the saints to mourn their inability to weave for themselves a garment in which they may stand approved before the justice of God. To show that this parable does not signify any such requirement as this, it is only necessary to observe the literal statement given by our Lord. In obedience to the command of the king his servants "gathered together all as many as they found, both bad and good." Their being gathered thus, was all the qualification required to constitute them welcome guests at the supper to which they were brought. It is not said that any one of them was sent to purchase for himself a wedding garment. If this man which had not on a wedding garment, had been one of them who were thus gathered, he could have answered at once when asked how he came in. Every one of them came because they were brought in by the power of the commandment of the king. Not one could claim any credit to himself for being present. Peter and James and John followed Jesus because the power of his word called them from their nets. So the other apostles were effectually called by the commandment of the Lord. That holy calling gave the wedding garment which authorized their being gathered together as disciples of Jesus. No claim of wisdom or righteousness in themselves could have thus clothed them. Those who wear this wedding garment find in themselves no good thing. They all confess, "We are all as an unclean thing, and all our righteousnesses are as filthy rags; and we all do fade as a leaf; and our iniquities, like the wind, have taken us away."—Isaiah lxiv. 6.

In its application to the experience of the saints, there are frequent illustrations of the principle of truth which is declared in this parable. Very often the Lord visits his saints with the light of his presence, when such as are found walking in the Spirit, are favored with a season of refreshing, while those who are carnally minded and have forgotten that they were purged from their old sins, are shut out from the enjoyment of the answer of a good conscience toward God, which is experienced by spiritually minded saints. In this application of the parable, the saints are manifestly clothed with the garment of salvation in the fulfillment of the law of Christ as it is written in them by the Holy Ghost which is given unto them. Individually, they learn the joy of being found of the Lord at his coming in peace, being clothed with the garment of obedience to his injunctions; and also in living after the flesh they can testify that "It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God." It was the prophet Jeremiah, whom the Lord sanctified before his natural birth, who poured forth that bitter lamentation, "I am the man that hath seen affliction by the rod of his wrath." And it is written that "If ye endure chastening, God dealeth with you as with sons." "For whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth."—Heb. xii. 5-7. Of course, it will be understood that in the chastening endured by the disobedient children of God they are not cut off from the salvation which is secured in Christ Jesus to as many as were ordained unto eternal life. Indeed they have no stronger assurance that God recognizes them as the children of his love than the fact that he does visit their transgressions with the rod, and their iniquities with stripes. They often seriously question the reality of their more joyful experiences; but they cannot doubt that they have indeed suffered the visitation of the chastening rod. After the angel had touched the hollow of Jacob's thigh, his halting bore continual testimony of the reality of the revelation in which he received the new name, Israel. So all who are blessed with the evidence of their election in that new name, have the abiding witness of that blessing in their own halting and helplessness. This is one peculiarity of the acceptable wedding garment.

Full instruction is given to the saints and faithful brethren in Christ Jesus, in regard to the wearing of this wedding garment. It is very important that these directions should be carefully observed by them. Paul says, "Put on therefore, as the elect of God, holy and beloved, bowels of mercy, kindness, humbleness of mind, meekness, long-suffering; forbearing one another, and forgiving one another, if any man have a quarrel [or, complaint] against any; even as Christ forgave you, so also do ye."—Col. iii. 12, 13. The whole connection of this quotation is very clear in defining the garment which is becoming for the saints to wear in the presence of their heavenly King. There is no time when they are not in his sight. When they most sensibly feel to desire his appearing, that very desire is conclusive evidence that he is even then with them, and that his Spirit abides in them. It is only as led by the Spirit of God that any sinner can desire to be clothed in the holy garment of the justifying righteousness of Christ. All who are truly moved by that desire must necessarily hate their own life as being sinful and polluted, just as they love the perfection of holiness revealed to them in Christ Jesus. In the gift of the Holy Spirit which they have received of God, all the saints have the fruit of that Spirit abiding in them, which is manifest in their hunger and thirst after righteousness. Clothed in this garment, they are well prepared to enjoy the rich provision of divine grace with which the manifestation of the presence of the Lord satisfies the desire of every living thing. "Wherefore, beloved, seeing that ye look for such things, be diligent that ye may be found of him in peace, without spot, and blameless." Such garments of salvation are the only clothing approved by the King for those who are favored to partake of the feast of gospel grace. The more deeply they mourn their own vileness, so much the more clearly they declare the riches of that grace in which they are made holy and without blame before God in love.

In the wedding garment as signifying the clothing of the approved saints, every item of exhortation and admonition might well be regarded as included in the illustration. There is not a single unnecessary direction addressed to the saints in the Scriptures. All are profitable in the application given by the Spirit of truth. But the saints should remember that there is no appeal written in the Scriptures, in which dead sinners are exhorted to desire life; neither is there any intimation that the saints can by any possibility lose their eternal life which is in Christ, and which is inseparable from his own immortality. All the life which depends upon their obedience, is the present enjoyment of the answer of a good conscience toward God. All the death which they can suffer in disobedience, is the present experience of the rod of chastisement.

MAILING THE WEEKLY.

THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES is always mailed from this office on time; and if there is any delay in its reaching subscribers the fault is with the U. S. Mail Service, and beyond our control. We are not in receipt of any complaints that the paper is tardy in reaching subscribers; but we merely make this announcement, in case there should be any delay, that our readers may know that it is through no fault of ours. When we started the SIGNS weekly we increased the force sufficiently to keep the work on time, although there is about twice as much to do as when we issued it semi-monthly.

BACK NUMBERS.

WE have now discontinued sending back numbers to the first of the volume to new subscribers unless especially ordered. We still have quite a number of each issue on hand, and can supply them if desired.

LARGE HYMN BOOK FOR A DOLLAR SIX FOR FOUR DOLLARS AND A HALF.

We have had bound in cloth, the same style as the "Editorials" or "Church History," a few hundred of our large type Hymn Books, which we will send post paid at the above prices. These books are especially adapted for aged people, or for pew racks, to be used in churches.

A SMALL ONE FOR SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS, OR SIX FOR THREE DOLLARS.

We also have the small type book bound in cloth, which we will send post paid at price stated above. Cash must always accompany the orders. Address,

G. BEEBE'S SONS.

ORDINATIONS.

THE Primitive Baptist Church at Zion Hill, Parker Co., Texas, at her regular church meeting in February, 1889, agreed to ordain brother JAMES A. RUTLEDGE to the full functions of the gospel ministry on Saturday before the second Sunday in April, 1889, and agreed to send to Blooming Grove and Denton Creek Churches for their ordained authority and council to assist in the ordination.

On Saturday before the second Sunday in April, 1889, the church met. After attending to other business, the reference was called for in regard to the ordination.

The churches were then called for, and responded.

The church was then asked if she was of the same mind as when she made the request, and answered in the affirmative.

Elder John S. Collins, of Mount Zion Church, being present by invitation, was invited to take part.

A presbytery was formed consisting of Elders Samuel McKelvey, A. D. Bourland, Wm. Flannagin, James Staggs and John S. Collins.

Elder James Staggs was chosen Moderator, and A. D. Bourland Clerk.

The candidate was then questioned on his doctrinal views; and his answers being satisfactory, the presbytery proceeded with the ordination.

Ordination prayer by Elder Samuel McKelvey.

Charge by Elder John S. Collins.

Laying on of hands by the presbytery. Right hand of fellowship by the presbytery and church.

JAMES STAGGS, Mod.
A. D. BOURLAND, Clerk.

MARRIAGES.

MARCH 21st, 1889, at the home of the bride's parents, by Elder B. Bundy, Mr. Arthur B. Thomas and Miss Minnie H. Winter, all of Utica, N. Y.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

Mary Gholson departed this life March 30th, 1889, at the residence of her son-in-law, Roland Burbridge, in the town of Rush, Jo Daviess Co., Ill. Her maiden name was Hudson, and she was born in the state of Kentucky, Oct. 11th, 1809. Her father emigrated to the southern part of Illinois at an early day, and there she married the late Elder James Gholson, Oct. 25th, 1825. To them were born eight children, five girls and three boys, of whom two girls and one boy are still living. She obtained a hope in Christ at the age of fifteen years, and united with the Old School Baptists. She and her dear husband obtained letters of dismission and moved to Jo Daviess Co., Ill., in the year 1845, and united with Little Flock Church. On April 22d, 1850, her husband died, leaving her and her dear children to mourn their loss.

I will add that I have been personally acquainted with her for about forty-four years, and if there is such a character as a mother in Israel in this day, she was one. She manifested a meek and quiet spirit, always ready to encourage and instruct the weak, and striving for peace. To sum up her religious character, she filled the place of a widow indeed. The writer of this, in company with Elder W. A. Thompson, of Tonica, Ill., tried to preach a discourse on the occasion of her funeral from Matthew i. 21, at the Equal Rights school-house, in the town of Rush, to the church and a large congregation of sympathizing friends; after which her remains were deposited in what is known as the Minor Cemetery, to await the order of her God, in whom she had trusted for sixty-four years. May God by his grace enable the church and her surviving children and grandchildren to be reconciled to his will, believing their loss to be her eternal gain.

BENJAMIN SALLEE.
WARREN, Ill., April 4, 1889.

DIED—In the city of St. Joseph, Mo., Feb. 29th, 1888, William Plank, aged nearly sixty-two years.

Brother Plank was born in Claiborne Co., Tenn., in June, 1826, emigrated to Missouri in 1843, and went to California in the period of the great emigration to that state, but returned to Missouri in a few years. He afterward resided for quite a while in Kansas; but the greater part of his life since 1843 was spent in Missouri. He joined an Old School Baptist Church in Buchanan Co., Mo., in 1856, and was baptized by Elder Shelton J. Lowe. The writer became acquainted with him soon after he was baptized, and enjoyed his love and fellowship until his death. Brother Plank suffered many afflictions and sore trials, but was kept steadfast in the faith of the gospel, believing in the truth declared by sound Old Baptists, and having no confidence in the doctrines and commandments of men. He suffered much in his last sickness, but acknowledged the hand of the Lord, and said that whether he lived or died it was all right; the will of the Lord be done.

The wife of his youth, the partner of his prosperity and adversity for about forty years, still survives. Her maiden name was Fetney Hurst, also of Tennessee. She was a member with the Old Baptists before him, and the people of her youth are the people of her old age. They had no children; hence she is left a widow indeed, desolate, but, I believe, trusting in the Lord. Brother Plank leaves also to follow him in the last great journey, I believe, three or four brothers and two sisters, some of whom are in affinity with the Old School Baptists, and love the doctrine of God our Savior, together with a large number of relatives and friends. May the Lord gather in his redeemed, leading them to the fountain of all good, and to the glorious victory over sin and death.

R. M. THOMAS.
ST. JOSEPH, Mo., April 12, 1889.

Jonathan B. Teddicord was born in Davis Co., Ky., March 25th, 1815, and was married to Minerva P. Barnard in 1836. They lived in Ohio Co., Ky., eleven years, at the end of which time six children had been born unto them, four of whom died and were buried there. They then moved to Illinois, in 1847, settling in Sangamon Co., bringing their two remaining children with them. He improved the farm he first bought to be one of the finest stock-farms in central Illinois. He retired from farming in 1881, and moved to Champaign City and bought property, where he ended his days. His disease is not known. He was in his usual health until about three hours before he died. He was without pain, and perfectly conscious, knowing that his time had come. He told his dear old companion that he was not afraid to die, and passed away quietly, as if going to sleep. He requested that his body be taken back to his old home and buried among his old neighbors; accordingly, on the next day, his body was conveyed by railroad to Springfield, where it was met by old neighbors and friends and taken to the old homestead. The next day it was taken to Salem, Sugar Creek meeting-house, where a discourse was preached by the writer, assisted by Elder W. J. Wheeler, Elder C. C. Perviance being present, to a very large, solemn and sorrowing congregation of friends and neighbors. But we sorrow not as those who have no hope; for although Mr. Peddicord had never joined the church, his works showed him to be a firm and true believer in the doctrine of salvation by grace. He will be remembered by many of the Old order of Baptists, as his house was always a home for them. Many of us remember the hearty welcome of Uncle Jonathan, as he was called; and many said at his funeral, "A good man is gone to rest." He was so quiet, so considerate, so good to everybody, and such a model husband and father; truly a husband to the widow and a father to the fatherless.

He leaves a dear old companion, who has long been a member of the church, three daughters, two sons, seventeen grandchildren and six great-grandchildren, together with the whole community, to mourn their loss; but our loss is his eternal gain. God bless the aged widow, and all that mourn, is our prayer, for Jesus' sake.

W. A. THOMPSON.

TONICA, Ill., April 11, 1889.

DIED—In Berwick, Maine, Feb. 28th, 1889, Mrs. Abigail Hurd, aged seventy-seven years.

She was our cousin. Her husband died nearly forty years ago, leaving her with four children; and she being a kind and affectionate mother, cared well for them until they could care for themselves. She was a fine woman, but never made an open confession of her faith in Christ; but in her last days the Bible was a precious book to her, and she said that it was sweet to her. She leaves her four children to mourn.

ALSO,

In North Berwick, Maine, April 1st, 1889, Mr. Hollis G. Ham, aged forty-two years.

He was confined to his bed but seven days, and his sufferings most of that time were severe, death being the only thing that could relieve him. He was naturally an honest man in all his dealings with men, and was highly respected by all. He has left his kind companion, five children, seven brothers and sisters, an aged mother-in-law, and many others, to mourn. It has been said by many that there could not have been any other one taken that could have been any more missed than he. At his funeral there were a large number of people, and all seemed to feel sad.

ALSO,

In Dover, N. H., April 16th, 1889, sister

Anne Pound, wife of brother Thos. Pound, aged seventy-one years.

They were raised in England, but came to this country some years ago. She gave good evidence that she was born a spiritual birth in her youthful days, and that her mind was led very clearly into the doctrine of grace; for she saw that if her eternal salvation depended in the least upon any good thing for her to do, there was no hope for her. But learning in the school of Christ that Christ came into this world to save them that did see themselves to be the chief of sinners, and she feeling herself to be one of them, she did reach forth the hand of faith while she felt that she was sinking, and grasped hold of the promises of God, and felt that was enough. With that experience she was a decided Old School Baptist. She and her husband, living in Dover, about fifteen miles from our church, not long since united with us, and have been at our yearly conference every year for a number of years, and enjoyed them much. She had a great memory, and while sick repeated many of Watts's hymns and portions of Scripture; but she has gone to her eternal rest. She has left her husband and three children to mourn.

I preached at the above funerals.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date, this date denotes the time at which your subscription expires, and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

CORRESPONDENCE.

WILLARD, Va., April 17, 1889.

DEAR BROTHER JENKINS:—I have been very much interested in the articles written by yourself and brother John Thorne on the subject of teaching. As there is a question on my own mind, suggested by the discussion, I will state it, and present a few thoughts. Not that I care to engage in the discussion at all, nor do I wish any controversy; yet I do not think a discussion of any subject relating to our duties and privileges as professed followers of Jesus at all improper. Indeed, when conducted in a christian spirit, it may be productive of much good in the way of bringing about a better understanding among the saints.

The question on my mind is, Have the people of God under the gospel dispensation a religious duty to perform toward their children? Or, can the followers of Christ so instruct their children as to influence them in after life in the formation of religious opinions? In the discussion, you and brother Thorne have taken what appears to the casual observer opposite ground, and yet to the careful reader there are many things which you both seem to hold in common. I have not understood brother Thorne to intimate that we could teach our children spiritual things, or that by training them we can make children of God of them, or train them in the faith and order of the gospel; but he takes strong ground that it is the duty of parents (who are believers) to so guard their children while under their care that they may not be led into error, and snared in those traps which are constantly spread for the purpose of entrapping them into making a false and hypocritical profession, and thus becoming mockers of the religion of their parents, and open and avowed enemies of the cross of Christ. I have noticed that Arminian teachers take especial pains to entice the children of Old School Baptists into their Sunday Schools, and eventually into their churches. They "compass sea and land to make proselytes," &c. Now the question is, Shall we or can we counteract that? Can we so train our children that they will be our friends (religiously) instead of our enemies? I thought I saw this in brother Thorne's argument, and only this. I can fully and heartily indorse your views. I believe you fully sustained your position from the Scriptures, so far as the inability of parents to communicate any knowledge of spiritual things is concerned. I may differ with you in some minor points, but they are unimportant. In all discussion involving points of doctrine or the order of the house of God, the Scriptures are our rule, and our only rule. What we think is of no value. "To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them." I desire then to speak according to the rule.

In this age of error and delusion the Lord's people need to be always on the alert, that the enemy get no advantage; yet it is not more so than it ever has been. Jesus told his disciples that they would deceive the very elect, if it were possible. It is the watchful, guardian care of their heavenly Father which "Preserves them safe from every snare,

And every hurtful lust."

The entire work of salvation, from its inception to its consummation, is of the Lord. In his purpose and counsel (when he counseled with himself) he determined the eternal salvation of such as he chose, and appointed all the ways and means to the accomplishment of the end determined upon, "declaring the end from the beginning," &c. That is the truth, and no carnal reasoning can possibly overturn it.

The effectual calling unto a knowledge of God's purpose concerning them is also arranged. God has reserved this to himself, as his especial prerogative. He quickens the dead, and brings them forth out of the regions of death, from death unto life, from darkness to light, from the power of Satan into the kingdom of his dear Son; and they are "kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation," &c.

Now it may be asked, What has all this to do with your question? I answer, A great deal, inasmuch as I would be distinctly understood as holding to the doctrine of God's absolute government, and an especial display of his sovereignty in all that concerns the salvation of his people. I have no idea that there is the slightest conflict with this glorious truth in the fact that God commands his people, and not in order to make them his people; but we cannot say that their obedience does not manifest that they are his people, and are led by his Spirit to obedience. The giving the law to Adam in the garden was a test, and Adam's transgression proved that God's Spirit was not upon him. Had such been the case he would not, yea, I assert, he could not, have sinned. A further law was given by God from Sinai; but the apostle tells us that it was "added because of transgression, till the seed [Christ] should come to whom the promise was made." The promise was first, and the law afterward; and the law could not make the promise of none effect. But it made the offense to abound; that is, it gave the knowledge of sin. It is said to be "our school-master." It is a perfect transcript of the just and holy God. "The wrath of God is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men," &c.; and I take it to be in the law that this is done. God said to Israel, "Ye shall be holy; for I the Lord your God am holy." Now the righteousness necessary to fulfill this command is God's righteousness, God's holiness. "Except your righteousness exceed the righteousness of the Scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven." God's righteousness alone will suffice. This law is fulfilled in his people. Christ of God is made unto them "wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption." In short, he (Jesus) is their all in all. He is everything; they are nothing. Neither is aught required of them to add unto God's perfect work; but they are God's workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that they should walk in them. What are "good works?" Obedience to God, and that only; and this obedience consists in doing just what God requires of us, and no more nor less. Said Samuel to Saul, the king, "To obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams." Whatever God has required of us is written in his word. That word by inspiration contains all that is necessary for us to know and for us to do. "The man of God" is "thoroughly furnished unto all good works."

I cannot find in the Scriptures that God has ever committed the care of a soul to any being, earthly or angelic, in order to fit it for heaven and eternal glory, as the Arminian argues; but an inspired apostle exhorts believers in regard to their walk and conversation, how they shall deport themselves toward all men, and also toward their own children. I cannot understand how a believing father can bring up an unbelieving child in the "nurture and admonition of the Lord" in a spiritual sense; but there is a natural sense in which this will apply. The word "nurture" is defined by Webster, "To educate; to train up." The question is, Does the apostle mean natural children—our children after the flesh? I incline to the opinion that he does, but the exhortation is to believers in every case, whether he exhorts parents or children, husbands or wives, masters or servants; and the chief end of his exhortation is that believers may so deport themselves in the sight of all with whom they are brought in contact as becomes the children of God. Hence the exhortation, "And ye fathers, provoke not your children to wrath, but bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." In other words, You, fathers, have received nurture and admonition of the Lord; now so bring up your children, so deport yourselves to your children, as those who have been taught of God, &c.

While we fail to find any command in the Scriptures to the effect that we should have a Sunday School, and turn over our children to those who may be made teachers in them, in order to have them instructed in morals or religion, it is certainly inconsistent for Old Baptists to even allow their children to attend the schools and be taught those things which are contrary to their own convictions. I feel that I owe it to myself and to my children not to allow them to go in the way of those who will teach them that which I believe is false, and thus destroy the respect which I have a right to demand of them. Moreover, I feel it my duty to warn my brethren and sisters in Christ of the consequences of sending (or even allowing) their children to be taught those doctrines and practices against which God has commanded his servants to "cry aloud," &c. I have witnessed in the course of my ministry, with a feeling of sorrow, the children of Old Baptists uniting themselves with the various religious denominations in the vicinity, and have been told by the parents that they had seen no evidence of a work of grace in them. Why is this? In the majority of cases it is because of the early associations formed and impressions received by the consent and, we may say, approval of their parents. It may be true that the parents did not send the child to the Arminian Sunday School; but is it not true that they permit the children to go? In most cases the parent yields, weakly, to the importunities of the child, not thinking what the consequences may be; and there are many instances that have come under my observation in which Old Baptist parents seldom, if ever, take one of their children to meeting with them. I witnessed a short time ago an Old Baptist lady, the mother of several children, on a beautiful Sunday morning going alone to her meeting, not very far distant from her home, while her children at that very hour were attending a Methodist Sunday School, and, we may reasonably suppose, were being taught the things which are likely to develop a disposition to turn their own mother's faith into ridicule. Where, I would ask, will those children be likely to seek companionship when grown? It would be rather strange for them to seek it at Old Baptist meetings and in Old Baptist congregations, where they have not had the opportunity of forming associations and acquaintances. I have also observed that in the cities it is extremely rare for the children of Old Baptists to attend worship with their parents, and as a result they do not as much as show proper respect to their parents' company in many instances. It is true that in many cases, when called by divine grace, they are brought out triumphantly; but what sore trials have they been called to pass through ere they have been released from the snare!

One may say, "Well, what does it matter where they go? If they are of God's chosen he will take care of them." That is true; but we are not writing of that, having already fully considered that subject in the first part of our article. My proposition is that it is far better, naturally, for us to have our children as friends than as enemies; and the question is, Can we do it? Certainly there is a better prospect of this if we begin the practice of taking the children with us, when young, to our meetings, and continuing the practice through their childhood. When they arrive at manhood and womanhood, their associations having been formed there, they will naturally attend the meetings, and the parents will enjoy the satisfaction of having the friendship and assistance of their children in entertaining the brethren and sisters. You, as well as I, know how pleasant it is to visit a house and find all the members of the family, both old and young, ready to receive and glad to see us, and to have all sit together in the evenings, the children giving respectful attention to the conversation of their parents and the visiting brethren. You can also, it may be, recall some occasion when all the pleasure and comfort of your visit has been destroyed by some young member of the family intruding his or her religious opinions, and drawing you into an argument in which your flesh has been stirred up, greatly to your annoyance at the time, and afterward when recalling the incident.

Now of course these things do not relate to or affect the spiritual interests or the eternal salvation of any of the Lord's chosen, and, so far as that is concerned, neither do any of our doings, for that is "not according to our works;" yet at the same time we are not to continue in sin that grace may abound, nor do evil that good may come. One may ask, "What must we do? Shall we have Sunday Schools, and teach our religion to our children?" O no, my inquiring brother; I should be afraid that we would run into (indeed it would be) the very error against which we constantly declaim. I do not see the necessity of any such thing; besides, the remedy would prove more fatal than the disease. All that seems to me lawful for us to do is to exercise parental authority, and keep our children under our own care and tuition. Make arrangements, if possible, to take them to our own meetings with us, and leave the result with the Lord. I have no objections to interesting the children in the letter of the word; but my own experience is that unless one has a revelation of the glorious truth contained in the Scriptures he cannot comprehend their true meaning, and it is impossible to interest one in that which presents to him nothing beautiful or desirable.

What I have here written has been much on my mind for many years, and I have occasionally called the attention of brethren to the matter. I submit it to your consideration and disposal.

As ever, your brother in the hope of eternal life,

A. B. FRANCIS.

GLENWOOD, Texas, Oct. 5, 1888.

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES—
DEAR BRETHREN:—As our beloved SIGNS still comes with communications and editorials laden with those comforting truths so calculated to build us up in the faith, confirm our hope and brighten our evidences, coming from so many different parts of this broad land as they do, testifying to the truth of one of the inspired prophets, "All thy children shall be taught of the Lord, and great shall be the peace of thy children," I sometimes feel like I wanted to write a few lines for the consideration of its readers; also feeling that it is hardly fair that I should read so many good things, and communicate nothing. Yet I feel assured of the fact that unless guided by the unerring Spirit of truth, I shall not be able to write anything that will be comforting to God's children, or glorifying to his name. It seems from the signs of the times that we are living in "the last days." The apostle Paul tells us "that in the last days perilous times shall come; for men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy."—2 Tim. iii. 1, 2. The same chapter sets forth many other characteristic traits of "the last days," that are in all parts of the country, in this degenerate and fanatical age, growing more and more manifest. Hence the absolute necessity of all who would "save themselves from this untoward generation," to heed the admonitions of the inspired writers; to "do good and communicate, forget not;" to "hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering;" and to "consider one another, to provoke unto love and to good works. Not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is, but exhorting one another, and so much the more as ye see the day approaching."—Heb. x. 23-25. And especially to "give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard, lest at any time we should let them slip."

Fanaticism (religiously) is the monarch of the age. It regards no man's wisdom, no man's ignorance. Its universal sway extends from the beggar in his rags to the king upon his throne. This is indeed a smoky day. There are many "lo heres" and "lo theres;" a day in which the blind lead the blind; a day in which many are drunk on the wine of the fornication of Mystery, Babylon. Many professed followers of the meek and lowly Jesus (a large percentage of almost all religious denominations) are so grossly ignorant of the true principles of christianity, and of the teachings of the Scriptures, that they seem bent on ingrafting their religious principles into the organized law of the land. This element, aided and urged forward by another, not so ignorant as designing, together with still another (political element), seeks, and is gradually tending toward, the unity of church and state. It is no uncommon thing to find in the Minutes of conventions, and other religious meetings, such committee reports as the following from the "Baptist General Association of Texas," for the year 1885.

"To the officers and members of the Baptist General Association of Texas:—We, your committee on temperance, respectfully submit the following: In view of the wide-spread, blighting and demoralizing effects of intemperance upon the social and religious interests of our country, it becomes the imperative duty of this association to express its voice in unmistakable terms of condemnation of this body and soul-destroying evil. Therefore be it resolved, first, that it is the sense of this association that the churches be recommended to enforce temperance among their members. We earnestly recommend to all christians that they give their support to the cause of prohibition, which is not only the cause of religion, but is also the cause of humanity."

The following from the "Soda Lake" Missionary Baptist Association, for 1883:

"In view of the crying, withering and soul-destroying evil of intoxicating drinks, from time to time our associations and conventions have passed resolutions condemning its use. It is a lamentable fact, its destructive influence upon the morals of both old and young, the blighting influences upon our churches, still are seen and felt all over our land to an alarming extent. Resolved, that we will personally plead with our brethren and friends to abstain from the use of intoxicating drinks. Resolved, further, that we as a body, and as individual churches, petition our Legislature to pass prohibitory laws to drive it from the state."

In accordance with the above from many religious bodies (which, no doubt, flooded the Legislature with petitions), the Legislature of Texas submitted an amendment to the State Constitution, proposing to prohibit the sale, manufacture or exchange of spirituous liquors, except for medical, mechanical, scientific and sacramental purposes, to be decided by a vote on the fourth day of August. At that time a large majority voted against the proposed amendment. The campaign was opened early in the spring by the Prohibitionists, with a tirade of abuse upon all who dared oppose their fanatical ideas. I have never before in all my life witnessed such a display of wild fanaticism, often opening their meetings for speaking, &c., with religious exercises, such as singing and prayer. Preachers in all directions were stump-speaking the country, employed for that purpose by the Prohibition Central Committee, the chairman of which himself was a New School Baptist preacher. Below I give a few quotations from different papers, speeches, &c., which will suffice to show in part the fanaticism and blind zeal manifested.

"This is the Lord's fight, and christians should vote as they pray." "Christians will rule Texas." "We pay three times more for poison drink than for bread, and two hundred and seventy dollars for this broth of hell, to every dollar for home and foreign missions ["here's the rub"], for the salvation of immortal souls." "In short, this hellish trade is the father of all crimes, the sum of all villainies, the devil's best friend, the poor man's worst enemy. Poor men, rich men, men who love your fellow-man, men who fear God and expect to render to him an account, what are you going to do about this matter?" "Think of it. Five liquor saloons to each church, and these saloons sustained by the votes of the people. Is it strange that the power of the church is not what it should be, when there is such a golden wedge among her voting members? One place devoted to the building up of christianity, and five times as many for its destruction. What will the harvest be? Will we, as christians, pursue this course any longer? God help the followers of Christ to come out from among the world, and with spotless garments do their whole duty. Then will we see Zion prosper and souls returning to God," &c.

Now what does all this argument mean? It shows that some think that they can legislate people to heaven, or pretend to think so. It shows an effort to weld the connecting link between church and state, which idea is continually expanding, gaining grounds, little by little, though to many its movement seems imperceptible. Underneath are the designs and cunning work of the designing, ambitious and avaricious clergy. It shows another stride towards the downfall of those rights secured to us by our Revolutionary sires, to worship God according to the dictates of our own consciences; for let none suppose that, should they carry this measure, they would be satisfied; for upon the same principle, that by abolishing evil by law they can benefit the church and "save immortal souls," they may establish what they call "good" by law, to "save immortal souls;" such as Sabbath Schools, for instance, or tract, or other societies, to be supported out of the public treasury; or to support the ministry, by taxing the people, and raising a fund for that purpose. Could this people (but with all their wisdom they cannot) understand the words of the meek and lowly Jesus, when he said to Pilate, "My kingdom is not of this world: if my kingdom were of this world, then would my subjects fight, that I should not be delivered to the Jews," they would cease to try to advance his kingdom in a way he has never authorized nor given the least example.

I see in a New School Baptist paper, in a number published some time early in the spring, the question, "Should we use wine, or the unfermented juice of the grape? [at the communion table] is a question now deeply agitating the churches of the north, and is being introduced into the south, by the Women's Christian Temperance Union," &c. When this question is decided, should they conclude to use the unfermented juice of the grape, and should they succeed in getting law-power on their side, which they are continually seeking, where then will be the privileges the true church has enjoyed these many years? Will she forsake the laws of her King for the laws of man? No; she will then, as she has ever done in those things, bow alone to him who is "King of kings and Lord of lords." In consideration of the movement, I am forcibly reminded of the predictions of some of the faithful servants of the Lord about the time of the rise of the various societies that caused so much trouble in the Baptist ranks, and was the final cause of the division of the Baptist family.

In the Primitive Baptist, published in 1839, over the signature of Vachal D. Whatley, I find the following: "I will add a sketch of the proceedings of the society folks. They are now running to and fro through the county and state, with petitions, getting all to subscribe that they possibly can, to petition the next Legislature to do away with the retail system [of the sale of spirituous liquors] in the state of Georgia." Speaking of the condition of the petitioners, he says, "If I am any judge of drunken men, men in a state of intemperance, they are the beast-worshipping petitioners of Georgia: not drunken with spirits, but drunken with anger, envy and wrath; drunken with pride and arrogance, bombast and parade; drunken with lying falsehoods; drunken with pernicious error; drunken with tyranny and oppression; drunken with abominations, and drunken with the wine of the wrath of that cursed whore of Babylon, the Mother of all the religious isms in the world, and priestcraft, which in my humble conception is striking at the root of republican principles." He further says, "And that religion, that man, or that denomination, that asks law sanction, law power, to compel people to give in to their religious tenets, I set down to be the religion of the devil. The devil was the beginner, is the carrier on, and will be the finisher of all such stuff. This kind of religion is aiming a death blow at our great republic; and I awfully fear that it will be the scissors that will clip the cord of our Union, and sacrifice republicanism upon the altar of despotism, and the pen that will write on the shattered and broken walls of liberty, Ichabod forever!" Little more than twenty years after the above was written, the writer had as testimony to his convictions and judgments the record of a four years' bloody war, the result of that very spirit he was opposing.

By reference to the second volume of the book of Editorials of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, page 146, we find the following, in the proposition of debate between Elder G. Beebe and J. J. Pierce, Esq., in 1843: "That the temperance doctrines as held by the said society, in which the pledge to total abstinence is made a test of church fellowship, and also of political preferment, are subversive of the principles of democracy and of true religion, and they constitute a connecting link uniting church and state; and, co-operating with kindred institutions of human invention, are calculated to overthrow those civil and religious rights for the establishment of which the patriotic blood of our Revolutionary sires was poured forth." It is truly encouraging for one to know that he occupies precisely the same ground of the fathers of fifty or seventy-five years ago, when those isms first sprang up, and the same ground of the true church in all ages, and especially that of Christ and the apostles. While it affords no pleasure to see disaster and calamities come upon us as a nation, as well as a church, yet to see the gradual fulfillment of the predictions of our forefathers gives encouraging and consoling evidence that even in this latter day the Spirit of the Lord is with his people, and that his word is being fulfilled. In no age of the world has the true church sought to sustain her doctrine by the strong arm of the law, but, in obedience to the teaching of her divine Master, renders "unto Cesar the things that are Cesar's, and to God the things that are God's." One truly born and taught of the Spirit knows that nothing but the power of God can make a christian; and if that law that God says "he will put in their hearts, and write in their minds," fails to keep them sober and in duty's path, then it would be folly to appeal to the laws of man to do so. Were it not for a firm belief in that eternal God who has created all things, and who works all things after the counsel of his own will, the children of God might have reason to despair. But give them to understand that "All things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose," and all is well. Even in the late great effort of religious fanaticism in Texas, the hand of the Lord is seen in driving from the ranks of the daughters of Babylon some of the dear children of God, while the tendency has been to manifest nominal professors in Zion. It seems to me that the rapid development of the second beast, in the last years, indicates a terrible storm, which will thoroughly try the faith of God's elect. I take as an evidence of this that the idea is gradually gaining ground that religious tenets should be established and enforced by law. On this idea the ruling element in all the Arminian denominations seems agreed; and as they gradually gain law-power, they are by degrees coming nearer together; for all now, with little exception, acknowledge each other to be "a branch of the church." Another evidence with me is the fact that there are within that body that bears the marks of the true church of Christ, different elements that are contending against the true principles of the doctrine of Christ. Hence the necessity of that purging that they in other ages, under like circumstances, have had to undergo. Those storms have always had a tendency to drive out those who from sinister motives have crept in unawares, to spy out our liberties; while on the other hand the patience of the saints amidst persecution and afflictions has shined forth as an evidence of the genuineness of their profession, so that many of God's children have been enabled to see their way out of the meshes of Mystery, Babylon, where they have been entangled.

Dear brethren editors, while the above scribble is not altogether what I would like for it to be, yet I have concluded to submit it to your judgment, to be disposed of as you think best. I have often thought it our duty to leave upon record, for the benefit of those who come after us, our views of all such questions as I have treated upon. I know I have been very much interested, and I hope benefited, by reading the views of those who have written in days long past.

With love to all the household of faith, I remain your brother in a humble hope,

H. B. JONES.

SABINE COUNTY, Tex., March 26, 1877.

DEAR BRETHREN IN CHRIST:—I have concluded to write a few of my ups and downs, though I feel very weak. But Paul said, "When I am weak, then am I strong."

I was born in Tippah County, Mississippi, in the year 1845. In 1850 we moved to this state. My father being a poor man, I did not go to school much. My parents gave me good counsel, and taught me that there was a great God, and that it was my duty to reverence and obey the moral precepts of his law. At the same time they told me that salvation was by grace, and not by works of righteousness which I could do. But I was naturally an Arminian, and thought I could do something to merit the blessing of God. I was not ready then, but thought that when I had seen enough of the pleasures of this world I would repent of my sins and ask God to save me. This I thought he would do, believing it was his desire to save all men. Thus I was at ease, in a sleepy or dead condition, yea, dead in trespasses and in sins, having no knowledge of my lost and ruined condition. I did not know that I was a lost sinner, already under the sentence of the law of a holy and just God, until I was about seventeen years old. One day, while in a fit of anger, and using profane language, as was customary with me when in that condition, from some cause I was brought to see that I was a sinner against God, and that if I died in that condition, where God and Christ were I never could come. A burden came upon me, and I determined to do better. I did not want religion, but I resolved to put away my evil practices, and at some future time get religion. I then thought I was too young; that if I were to become a christian I would get tired of it, and probably would fall from grace. I thus thought to ease my mind; but I soon found that my nature was prone to sin; that when I would try to do good, I only did evil. I found that when I would make promises, I would only break them. I became very uneasy, and my burden increased, which led me to go to God's law for justification. But the law was holy, just and good, and condemned me. I was a sinner, and the law could not show mercy. Thus I began to mourn on account of my wretched condition. I went on in sorrow, and tried to pray the great God to have mercy on me, a poor, lost sinner, day after day, and night after night. Sometimes I would read the Bible, thinking to find comfort; but the gracious promises therein, I thought, were for others, and could not reach my case; for I could not see how God could remain just and save such a poor, hell-deserving wretch as I was. I saw while reading the Scriptures that the quickening of a poor sinner was of God, that he alone was the giver of life, and that those who were made alive by him were the only ones who could lay hold upon the blessed promises therein contained. My case seemed to be an outside one. In this condition I often wandered in the forests, looking for comfort, but no relief could I find. Yet at the same time my soul seemed to be engaged in prayer to almighty God to make bare his holy arm in my behalf, quicken me into life, and enable me to truly mourn; for I saw that the blessings were to such characters alone. Thus I went on for about three years, in this sorrowful condition, until I was forced to give up all hope. I thought I should sink in despair, and that the time was close at hand when I should go the way of all the earth, to meet the just judgments of almighty God. While in this awful condition, and at a time unexpected by me, I was enabled by faith to view Jesus on the cross, as the Redeemer and Savior of poor sinners. I thought I could see justice and mercy embrace each other, in the person of Jesus. Thus my load of condemnation left me, and I was enabled to rejoice in hope of eternal life. I cannot express the joy I experienced on this occasion, nor the thankfulness of my poor heart. I thought my sorrows, troubles and trials were forever ended, and that I should see them no more, but that during the remainder of my life I should enjoy pleasure. But alas! doubts and fears came upon me. Sometimes the tempter would tell me that the great comfort I had received was only a delusion. This caused me great trouble; and as I did not understand how my trouble left me, I sought to get it back, that I might see where it went; but I could not. Sometimes I would try to pray God to have mercy on me, a poor sinner; yet I could not feel the condemnation I had once felt. Finally I felt a desire to join the church and be baptized; but O how unworthy I did feel! I was afraid I would deceive the church, or else that my experience was so little the church could not receive me. About three weeks after I was made to rejoice in hope of eternal life, I went with my parents to the church where their membership was, they being Old School Baptists. Brother H. L. Power was the pastor of the church. He preached an experimental sermon, which was very comforting to me. Then the door of the church was opened, and I went forward, and tried to tell them what great things the Lord had done for me, which gave me a name among the poor, despised people known as the Primitive Baptists. I was baptized, and hope I received the answer of a good conscience toward God; yea, I had great comfort. It seemed to be the most pleasant time I had ever witnessed.

Dear brethren, I have tried to give you some of my travels, and something of what I hope to be the dealings of God with me, which, if your better judgment deems worthy of a place in your paper, you are at liberty to place therein. At some future time I will try to give what I regard as a minister's experience; for I am now trying to discharge a duty of that kind. Nothing more at present.

I remain your unworthy brother,
J. K. P. BURNS.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—Being at home this lovely Sunday, being deprived of the liberty of going abroad to meet the dear brethren and sisters, I desire to speak a few words to them through the columns of our much esteemed paper, the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. For a rallying point I will call attention to the words, "Let us therefore follow after the things which make for peace."—Rom. xiv. 19. These are the words of one of the inspired men of God; and like the rest of his writings, they are addressed to the chosen subjects of salvation, and as such I will try to confine my remarks to the household of faith.

How are we to obey the admonition? I will say that we cannot, unless guided by the Spirit of the living God. And if we are thus guided, we will feel within us the prompting of the Spirit to brotherly love, which will incline the dear children of God to follow after the things which make for peace. How hurtful it is to my poor heart to see strife among those professing to be the Lord's little ones, which proves that there is a failure on the part of some to obey the admonition of the text.

LEESVILLE, La., Dec. 9, 1888.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR EDITORS:—The above are some of the writings of my dear departed father, whose obituary was recently forwarded for publication in the SIGNS. The last scrap is a portion of a letter left by him, with other things, unfinished. He was called from this unfriendly world on June 5th, 1888.

Yours sincerely,

J. W. BURNS.

SOUTHAMPTON, Pa., Jan. 7, 1889.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—It is with fear and trembling that I attempt to write a few lines in relation to my travels through this waste, howling wilderness of sin and sorrow. I know not that I can write anything to comfort the children of our heavenly Father who are sojourners in this vale of tears. I feel that I am unworthy to be counted among them, much less to write for them; yet I feel that I ought to speak, being, as I hope, of the one body, suffering with those who suffer, and rejoicing with them in their rejoicing. The Scriptures tell us, "Then they that feared the Lord spake often one to another." To fear the Lord is to hate sin. I feel that I do hate sin, although I know that I do things I should not, and leave undone things that I should do. I think my brethren and sisters know what these feelings are, this warfare between the flesh and the Spirit. But I trust that our heavenly Father will give us strength, and be our Captain and Leader in this warfare, that we may come off conquerors through him who loved us, and gave himself for us.

I have often felt that I could express my feelings better with the pen than by word of mouth. I was at one time with those who think they can do something to help the Lord. I thought, when a captive in Babylon, that I was in the right way, and could do something to help the Lord, and thus work out my own salvation, not with fear and trembling, but with good works, and thus buy a passport to the heavenly kingdom. But thanks and praise to the holy name of him who reigneth in heaven and over the inhabitants of the earth, he opened my blind eyes to see, as I trust, that in and of myself I could do nothing. When the chains of Babylonian captivity were broken, I felt that I could live outside the church, and that I would not tell to any church my feelings, but would go and hear the children of God talk. Yet I longed for something, I could hardly tell what. I felt that I wanted to tell some one of my feelings, but where could I go? I could not go back to Babylon. I was not of Babylon, and I was not with the Israelites, or God's dear children. O how I longed to know what I was and where I belonged. Yet I did at times enjoy the promises of him that died on Calvary to redeem his people from their sins. One promise was applied to my mind, which at the time afforded me great comfort, "In six troubles I have been with you, and in the seventh I will not forsake." This was while I was traveling with my comrades in arms, just before a battle, when I was sunk low in spirits, knowing that I might not again return to my home and those I had left behind. Those were temporal troubles, but yet the promise was for me, and after its application I could tramp along with my companions with a light heart, feeling that I would be spared to return to my home and friends. I had the promise that God would not forsake, and through his mercy I returned again to my home and friends. But yet there was something I wanted. There was an aching void that the world nor worldly things could fill. I traveled in Egypt until the Lord in mercy appeared to me, to show me that I was traveling in forbidden paths and trusting in carnal security. I trust that he showed me the debt I owed and could not pay. I was in a strange land and among strangers. O the terrible distress and dark despair that seized my soul in this strange land, and among strangers, and doomed to death. O! could it be that there was a release for poor, sinful me, who had broken the law, and deserved nothing but eternal banishment? Now I could only cry, "Lord, have mercy." Silence reigned, and then the words were wafted to my ears, "Stay thy hand: I have paid his debt. Release the prisoner and set him free, and give a full receipt." Great was my joy. No tongue can tell nor pen describe it. It was joy unspeakable and full of glory. Then I longed to know whom my deliverer was. I could not see nor did I know who it was, until he said to me, "Child, come home." Then I saw who my Savior was, even him who died that his people might have everlasting consolation. Then it was made clear to my mind what my duty was, to appear before the church and tell them of the dealings of the Lord with me, which I did, and was received by them. But now I travel much of my time in darkness, doubts and fears fill my soul, and I fear at times that I have been deceived and have deceived others. Yet I feel that I love the brethren, and also feel to say that though I walk in darkness I shall fear no evil. I know that it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps. Thus far the Lord has led me on, and I trust that he will still lead and guide me through life's journey. I feel to say that I am the least of all God's dear children, if one at all; that it is all of grace from first to last; for by the grace of God I am what I am, a sinner saved by grace, if saved at all.

I feel to say a few words more to those who are sojourning with me on life's tempestuous ocean, tossed on the waves of tribulation on account of sin, filled with doubts and fears, at times being raised on the crest of the waves, and then plunged into the depths of woe. In the sixty-first chapter of the prophecy of Isaiah, he says, "The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me; because the Lord hath anointed me to preach," &c. I feel to ask the question, as did the eunuch, "Of whom speaketh the prophet this? of himself, or of some other man? Then Philip opened his mouth, and began at the same Scripture, and preached unto him Jesus." Now as Isaiah was anointed to preach he was told by inspiration what to preach, and to whom to preach. He was to preach glad tidings. To whom were those glad tidings proclaimed? To all the people? No; for all people cannot hear. Only as our heavenly Father gives ears to hear can any hear. They are proclaimed to the meek; to those whom the Lord has brought to hear; to those who have learned of him, and have been brought to see that in and of themselves they can do nothing; those who have been taught by experience that it is only through him who bore our sins in his own body on the tree. These are the meek, to whom the glad tidings are proclaimed. What are the glad tidings? It is the gospel, which was first preached to the Jews, and then to the Gentiles. When we hear our brethren tell of Jesus, and of the Lord's dealings with them, we hear good tidings. When we hear Christ preached, and all praise given to him, who has all power in heaven and earth, when he is exalted and man abased, then the meek, God's chosen ones, feel that it is indeed glad tidings.

"He hath sent me to bind up the broken-hearted." Who are the broken-hearted? Those who go on and revel in sin, rolling it as a sweet morsel under their tongue, trusting in self and self-righteousness? No; but those in whom God has begun a good work; those who have been made to feel the burden of sin and their own weakness, and who go mourning through the land, bowed down, feeling that they must surely be lost in the darkness that covers their path. These are the broken-hearted ones, as I see it. Now anything broken needs a bandage. Here is a bandage for the broken heart, "My sheep hear my voice, and I know them." When a broken-hearted soul hears that still, small voice, and is brought to look to him, and him alone, who died on Calvary, then the promises become bandages to the heart that is broken on account of sin, and they can rejoice with those that rejoice, and give God all the praise.

"To proclaim liberty to the captives." Where is the poor soul that is held a captive in sin, fears and doubts, that does not long for liberty? Here is a poor, captive soul who feels that all hope is gone, and that he shall go mourning all his days in darkness and captivity. To all such liberty is to be proclaimed. Here is good tidings; and when the Lord appears to the poor, tempest-tossed soul, and whispers, "I am his," there is a proclamation of liberty to the captive, and he feels that he is free. Then he can rejoice in the God of his salvation, and sing praises to him, who reigneth forever on high.

He not only proclaims liberty to the captive, but also the opening of the prison doors to them that are bound. When a poor soul feels that he is in prison, shut out from all the enjoyment of God's mercy, and behind the bars and bolts of God's justice, and a sinner of the deepest dye, it is then that he is in prison. Now the Lord came to open the prison door, when he was a babe in Bethlehem, and when he died on the cross he broke the bands of those that were bound, and therefore proclaims glad tidings to the meek, binds up the broken-hearted, proclaims liberty to the captives, and opens the prison doors to them that are bound.

Now, dear brethren, this has been on my mind for some time. I feel that I am a poor, miserable sinner, not worthy to be numbered with God's dear children, and feel to say with the apostle that I am the chief of sinners, and less than the least of all saints. Do as you think best with this. I feel that it is not worth a place among the writings of God's people.

Yours in bonds of brotherly love,
GEORGE M. LEEDOM.

TUCKER COUNTY, W. Va., Aug. 12, 1888.

MY DEAR BRETHREN:—I have thought to pen a few lines of what I hope have been the dealings of the Lord with me. I was born in Tucker County, West Virginia, and was married to Albert G. Phillips on March 18th, 1865, and went to Barbour County. In the year 1872 the Lord made me see myself as a sinner. My parents were Methodists, and I believed the Methodist doctrine. My husband held to the Baptist doctrine, his parents being Old School Baptists. I thought my parents were right. I kept my trouble to myself until the winter of 1883, when my burden came upon me with double force. The Methodists were to hold a protracted meeting about four miles from where we lived, and my mind was made up to attend it; but my husband was opposed to it. When I said I was going, he consented and went with me. I thought I would be all right if I could get religion. I verily thought that a person could get religion within themselves; but O what a mistake I found it was. I went to the mourners' bench, and the people gathered around me, and prayed for me; but their prayers did me no good. The next night we went back to the meeting, and to my surprise I found it the same, for their prayers did me no good. These words would still be on my mind, "If you are saved, it is alone by the grace of God." The meeting was closed, and we returned home, with those words rushing through my mind. I do not think I slept any that night, for I thought I was doomed to sink in despair and go into everlasting torment, on account of my sins. I tried to pray, and all that I could say was, "Lord, be merciful to me, a sinner." And I hope the Lord pardoned my sins, while I was drooping about, the next morning, and these words came to my mind, "Keep my commandments." The meeting was to begin at two o'clock that day, and I went and gave my name to the so-called church. I was tied to my people so closely that I thought I was surely right. These words kept running in my mind, "Keep my commandments; for nothing but the grace of God will stand." They held a class meeting, and it seemed to me that they told lies; for they said they had not sinned for so long a time, and that they were determined to go to heaven. I said, "O Lord, am I deceived?" For I felt that I was a great sinner. I felt that if I was saved it would be by the grace of God, and not of works. The next Sunday they had prayer and class meeting, and my husband and I went. I got up and spoke with the others. When the meeting was closed and we had started for home, O how sorry I was that I had gone. But I thought I would keep that to myself, as I knew my husband was such a strong Old School Baptist, and I was drawn to my people so closely. He said the meeting did him no good. The first thing I knew I was telling of the hope that I had, and of the reason why I did not like their ways. He said, "You are an Old Baptist." O how that shocked me, to think that I was pleading the doctrine I had always despised. Then these words rushed into my mind, "I will lead the blind by a way that they knew not." So I said, "If I am an Old Baptist, the Lord has mademeone." I said that if it was the Lord's will I would go to their meetings, and see if their doctrine corresponded with the way I had been brought to see that I was a sinner. So I went, from March until the fourth Saturday and Sunday in July, and found them to be the very people that my soul loved; that they had been taught by the same Spirit that I had. After the preaching by brethren David and James Murphy, the door of the church was opened to receive members, and my husband and I went forward. We were baptized the next day by Elder J. W. Cross, and a more happy day I have never seen. I thought my troubles were forever gone; but O how sadly mistaken I was! The thought soon came into my mind, You are deceived, and have deceived the church. Yet they were the people that I loved. I do not understand how the church received me, as I felt myself to be such a sinner. I do not know what I told the church. I looked around and saw the others so pure and good, and myself so bad, I said, "Lord, keep me, and I will be kept: lead me, and I will run after thee." But O what dark places I have been in!

Some of my people would tell me my preachers preached infants in hell not a span long, and that we did not believe in a free salvation. But I soon found that we were the only people that did set forth a free salvation, and I heard none of them preach infants in hell. I thought if any one did so, it was those who preached salvation by works; for I knew that infants could not work. Then they would tell me that we had no preachers, only some old cripples. I said, "Thanks be to God, they preach the truth." Thanks be to his holy name, I trust in him, and not in poor, puny man. My trust is in him that brought me to see my sinful condition, and I believe he will lead me in the way I should go, and into all truth, for he is my Keeper. I know that he has power over all things, and that he has created all things for his own glory.

My people told me that the Old

Baptists did not pray, and that they sat upon the stool of do-nothing. O how those things troubled me. But when the Lord was present with me, all was well. In this way I was led along for some months, and my people found that I was strong in the faith of the gospel, the belief of the Old Baptists, and these troubles with me ceased. I felt to pray, Lord, have pity on them.

ALMARINE PHILLIPS.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—The above is a part of my wife's experience. She began to write it, but it was the Lord's will to call her from worldly cares to a mansion on high, as we have no doubt.

ALBERT G. PHILLIPS.

PINE BLUFF, Ark., Oct. 7, 1888.

DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS—

The elect on the earth, according to the foreknowledge of God the Father, and preserved in Christ Jesus, according to the eternal purpose which he purposed in Christ Jesus before the world began, and called in time. It has been on my mind to write for the SIGNS OF THE TIMES for a long time. Being at home to-day, I concluded to write you a few lines on the doctrine of God our Savior. I believe he declared the end from the beginning; and will it not be as he said it would be? Surely it will. Is not this then absolute predestination? If not, I do not know what predestination is. God declared the end from the beginning, saying, "My counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure." This means all time things; and God has said just how they shall go. O yes, he said that all nations shall be gathered together before him, and he will separate them as a shepherd divideth the sheep from goats. He has said that he will say to those on the right, "Come, ye blessed of the Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." But to them on the left he will say, "Depart from me, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels." Will this be so or not? I say, God is not slack concerning his promises, but all will come to pass just as God has said. Well, dear brethren, does this mean only the church? I say, No; it means all things; for God works all things after the counsel of his own will; and all things work together for good to them that love the Lord, and are the called according to his eternal purpose which he purposed in Christ Jesus before the world began. I say that our God declared the end from the beginning. He determined it to be just like he declared it would be. If this is not absolute predestination, I wish you would tell me what it is. Well, some will say, I know that is so, but it will not do to preach it. Does not God command to preach the truth? Others will say, If what you say is so, you make God the author of sin. But not so: that is what you say. I say, Not so. I will give you another

REPLY.

"In that day shall there be upon the bells of the horses, HOLINESS UNTO THE LORD; and the pots in the Lord's house shall be like the bowls before the altar. Yea, every pot in Jerusalem and in Judah shall be holiness unto the Lord of hosts; and all they that sacrifice shall come and take of them, and seethe therein; and in that day there shall be no more the Canaanite in the house of the Lord of hosts."—Zech. xiv. 20, 21.

In endeavoring to comply with the request of our inquiring friend, it is not our design to attempt to explain all that is hidden in the strikingly figurative language of this text. Being included in the inspired record of the Scriptures, it is certainly the testimony of Jesus. As such it is of vital interest to every one who has received a hope in that salvation which is revealed in our Lord alone. No amount of study can enable even one of the saints to comprehend the glorious mystery of godliness which is hidden in this divine testimony. Hence, when the correct view of a text is presented by any one it is not to be understood that it was attained by dint of study, nor yet that it entitles the one by whom it is presented to credit for superior powers of discernment in divine things. Even Solomon the king had no understanding but what was given him of God, and the feeblest child of grace has just the measure of wisdom which he has received by the same gift of God. Thus the pride of man is humbled in the dust, while the glory of God is magnified in every revelation given of his truth. All the learning of the Chaldeans was unavailing to read the handwriting on the wall of the palace of Belshazzar; but God was pleased to reveal to Daniel the hidden wisdom by which to translate the dreadful sentence. So the natural man is incapable of comprehending any revelation of the spiritual things of God; but they are made known by the manifestation of the Spirit of truth. In thus concealing his truth from the discernment of the wise and prudent while he shows it unto babes, God has purposely stained the pride of man, so that no flesh should glory in his presence.

"In that day shall there be upon the bells of the horses, HOLINESS UNTO THE LORD." Throughout the prophetic Scriptures there is continual reference to that day which should be revealed when the Sun of Righteousness should arise with healing in his wings. That day is clearly indicated in this text as the time when the shadows of night should all be banished by the clear shining of that glorious Sun in the heaven of gospel light and perfect righteousness. As in the record of the material creation, it is written that "The earth was without form and void; and darkness was upon the face of the deep;" so darkness thick and impenetrable as that of Egyptian night, was upon the deep of hopeless condemnation under which the sinful race of Adam were by that nature which they inherited from him. From the very denunciation of the primal curse upon the guilty sinner, however, there was the promise of that day which should make the darkness itself glow with everlasting light. The Seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head. In this divine assurance is declared the certain triumph of righteousness and light over sin and darkness. Indeed, incomprehensible as it is to finite intelligence, it is expressly for the manifestation of the glorious day, that the darkness of night was created. The same sovereign God forms the light, and creates darkness. It is as the Lord that he does all these things. He claims infinite power and perfect holiness as his own exclusive attributes. It is not that he does wrong in the exercise of his sovereign power. Nor does he work inconsistently when he makes peace, and creates evil. His love and mercy are magnified in the dispensation of his inflexible justice; and truth and righteousness shine forth in the gracious display of his great love in saving his people from their sins. His sacred perfections are never in conflict. The same light which makes manifest the exceeding sinfulness of sin reveals the infinite beauty of holiness. The glorious display of divine grace in the salvation of his people from their sins, also shows the strict justice which condemns them as sinners. The light of the full glory of the gospel day was reflected in every type and ordinance of the legal night of the Mosaic dispensation.

In order to understand the figure of the bells of the horses it is necessary to consider the use of the reference to the horses in prophetic language. As the sheep is the symbol of helpless innocency, the ant of provident industry, the dog of uncleanness, and the locust of destruction, so the horse is the symbol of ability to wage war. In the day of gospel glory, there shall be continually victorious warfare. The Prince of peace has already gotten the victory over all enemies to the salvation of his people, and he gives that victory to his followers when they are convinced of their own utter weakness. The revelation of this provision of his grace, by faith is shown to every saint in his time of need. Thus it is made the strength of the Lord to them who are without strength of their own, and they can witness to the appropriateness of the triumphant war horse as the symbol of that glorious victory which is given them by the favor of the Captain of their salvation. This will more clearly appear when the "bells of the horses" are considered. In the marginal rendering of the text this word is translated "bridles." No doubt this is the reference designed in the figure. As the horses are used to represent victorious warfare, the bridles signify the skill which directs all the incidents to the final development of that victory. The helpless and ignorant little child feels that he is incompetent to guide the power which might give him the victory over the fierce enemies which surround his path. Simply to put the bridle in his hand, and leave him to guide the power represented by the horse, is not sufficient for his comfort and assurance. The carnal mind of the saints frequently desires to draw the bridle in the direction indicated by natural feelings and reason; but the mercy of God has provided some better thing for them, in that the bridle is controlled by the perfection of HOLINESS UNTO THE LORD. Left to their own wisdom and inclination, the conscious insufficiency of the saints would cause them to despair of conquering their fierce and mighty foes; but the guidance of their steps to victory is entirely under the direction of that glorious power which is upon the bells, or bridles, of the horses which sustain them. So it is written, "The steps of a good man are ordered by the Lord; and he delighteth in his way. Though he fall, he shall not be utterly cast down; for the Lord upholdeth him with his hand." "A man's heart deviseth his way; but the Lord directeth his steps."—Psa. xxxvii. 23, 24; Prov. xvi. 9. While to the pride of that heart which claims ability to choose for itself, this truth is very repulsive, it is sweetly comforting to such as know their own destitution and ignorance. David speaks the prayer of all such when he says, "In thee, O Lord, do I put my trust; let me never be ashamed: deliver me in thy righteousness. Bow down thine ear to me; deliver me speedily; be thou my strong rock, for an house of defense to save me. For thou art my rock and my fortress; therefore for thy name's sake lead me, and guide me."—Psa. xxxi. 1-3. To those who know their own weakness there is nothing more desirable than that the Lord would choose all their changes, and lead them in his own right way through all this wilderness world. This desire necessarily involves the submission of their own will to the purpose of God. So Jesus taught his disciples to pray, "Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven." When the fervent wish of any sinner is that which is expressed in this petition, it is posi-

text, which you can find if you will read your Bible. God "is before all thing, and by him all things consist." "All things were made by him, and for him." Dear brethren, did God make all things, and have no eternal purpose in view? Will you come to the text that says he declared the end from the beginning, and say with me that it will come to pass just as he said it would? Well, dear brethren, if God made all things, where did sin come in? Sin is an act of a thing. The Bible tells us that by the disobedience of one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned. So you see Adam is the author of sin, and not God. If you make sin a thing, then you make God the author of sin. It was the act of Adam in transgressing the law. Some will ask, Did God know that before he made man? Surely he did, or he could not have declared the end from the beginning; for we learn from the Scriptures that God made all things before he made man. He then formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and he became a living soul. He placed him in the garden of Eden, and gave unto him the law, saying unto him, "In the day thou eatest thereof, thou shalt surely die." Did God know he would eat of the fruit of the tree? He surely did, or how could he have declared the end from the beginning? We learn that Jesus Christ was a "Lamb slain from the foundation of the world." And again, "Why did the heathen rage, and the people imagine a vain thing?" Of a truth they were gathered together against the holy child Jesus, to do whatever God's hand and counsel determined beforehand to be done. Jesus Christ was delivered by the determined counsel of God into wicked hands, was killed and buried. But God raised him from the dead, and set him at his own right hand. "Let all the house of Israel know this." That which God has said by all the prophets and the apostles, and his Son, will come to pass; yea, everything. As he declared the end from the beginning, so shall all things come to pass. Let all the house of Israel know this, that he has declared the end of all things, even when time shall be no longer, saying, "Surely as I have thought, so shall it stand; and as I have purposed, so shall it come to pass." "I am God, and beside me there is no Savior." "Declaring the end from the beginning, and from ancient times the things which are not yet done, saying, My counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure." So fear not, dear brethren. It is your heavenly Father's pleasure to give you the kingdom, which he has prepared for his dear children. Stand fast in the faith, and endure hardships as good soldiers of Jesus Christ. When the chief Shepherd of the sheep comes, he will carry you home to rest forevermore.

tive proof that such a sinner is led by the Spirit of God, and he is therefore clearly declared to be a son of God. "For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God."—Rom. viii. 14.

It must not be overlooked that our text declares that HOLINESS UNTO THE LORD shall be upon the bells of the horses. It is not merely as a motto that these words are to be inscribed upon those bells. The very principle of perfect consecration unto the Lord is that which is to be upon the bells or bridles. This is fulfilled in the followers of Jesus, when they "earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints." Very probably these words were prominently inscribed upon the garments of those scribes and Pharisees whom Jesus denounced as hypocrites.—Matthew xxiii. 5, 13. There is a wide difference between wearing the words upon the garments and having the principle of perfect devotion to God abiding upon ourselves, and prompting our hearts to "hunger and thirst after righteousness." Every secret aspiration after conformity to the perfection which is revealed in Jesus is an indication that the Spirit of Christ has sanctified the longing one with the anointing that consecrates him to the Lord. Every unutterable groan for deliverance from sin attests the indwelling of the Spirit of holiness, whereby the ransomed children of divine grace are sealed. No bridle but consecration to the Lord can restrain the pride and rebellion of the carnal mind, and cause those hands which once kept the raiment of those who slew the martyr Stephen, to labor earnestly for the comfort of those who hope in Christ for salvation from sin. The very same breath which was pouring forth slaughter, is now engaged in the proclamation of the truth. The bells of the horses are the same as they were when they were not thus consecrated; but now they are wholly devoted to building up that same truth against which they formerly strove. The anointing of the Spirit of truth has made this great change in these bells, or bridles, by which the powers of hand and tongue, which formerly opposed the truth, are now found earnestly contending for that truth.

A further declaration of the glory which shall be revealed in that gospel day, is that the pots in the Lord's house shall be like the bowls before the altar. Under the typical law it was necessary that there should be vessels employed in their ceremonies which were made of brass, for use in contact with the fire. There is no further use for such inferior vessels under the gospel dispensation. Every pot in Jerusalem and in Judah is now holiness unto the Lord. This signifies that the ordinances of this spiritual kingdom and priesthood of our Redeemer contain nothing which needs to be purified by contact with fire. Since by one offering our great High Priest has perfected forever them that are sanctified, there is now no further need of the blood of beasts for the purging away of the sins of those whom he has redeemed. Hence, there is not an inferior pot or vessel "in the house of God, which is the church of the living God, the pillar and ground of the truth." Every cup of cold water ministered unto one of these little ones which believe in Jesus, is sanctified by the perfect holiness of our Lord himself. He says, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." Every injunction which our Lord has given to his followers is a golden bowl of rich consolation and comfort to every one who is led by the Spirit to come and take of them, and feast upon their rich contents.

The closing declaration of our text is that "In that day there shall be no more the Canaanite in the house of the Lord of hosts." This is in strong contrast with the old legal dispensation. Throughout the whole period of their residence in Canaan God had determined that they should not cease to be annoyed by the Canaanites who were left in their land in consequence of their disobedience to the direction of their Lord.—Josh. ix. So under the legal dispensation there was no distinction between the true subjects of grace and the carnal Israelite. In the day of which this prophecy is written, there shall not be even the carnal mind of the saints to pollute the land of gospel purity in which they dwell. Their flesh can never enter that blissful abode.

In thus briefly complying with the request of our correspondent, we feel that much has been omitted which might have been included in the consideration of the text. May the grace of God enable her and all our readers to see the truth of the gospel in this sublime prophecy, and to our Redeemer be all glory evermore. Amen.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

DIED—At his home in Middleburgh, Schoharie Co., N. Y., July 1st, 1888, our dear brother, Adam Mattice, aged eighty-four years, nine months and sixteen days.

Brother Mattice was baptized in the winter of 1843 by Elder I. Hewitt, in the fellowship of the church at Schoharie Hill, N. Y., where he retained his membership until called to his home above. His walk was becoming his profession, as a man born of God, and as one that knew the grace of God. The Scriptures were his guide, and he delighted much to search them. He was favored in gathering, by industry and economy, a reasonable amount of this world's goods, which he was free to use in the cause of truth for the benefit of his brethren. His companion, sister Mattice, who also was a member with him, was called home many years ago, and of them it can truly be said that they walked in the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless. He leaves one son and two daughters to mourn, besides numerous friends and relatives.

By request I was present at his funeral, and tried to speak comfortably to the afflicted ones. May the Lord comfort and console them according to his will.

ALSO,

DIED—Nov. 23d, 1888, in Colesville, Broome Co., N. Y., sister Abigail Knickerbocker, aged eighty-eight years.

The subject of this notice was baptized in the fellowship of the First Church of Roxbury, by Elder Warren, at the early age of about eighteen years. She was ever ready to speak of the precious hope she had so long enjoyed in the Savior, and which had been such a strong anchor through the multiplied storms of her mortal life; and as her end of days drew near she was greatly sustained by the gentle and strong arm of the Lord, and we are well assured that her end was peaceful. She leaves behind five children and many relatives and friends to mourn.

Her funeral was attended by the writer at her son-in-law's, brother Corbin Scuders, where she had lived several years. May the Lord grant grace to the afflicted, is the desire of the unworthy writer.

ALSO,

DIED—In Tompkins, Delaware Co., N. Y., April 5th, 1889, sister Mary Boice, aged eighty-two years.

She was the happy recipient of divine and saving grace in her youth, and together with her dear husband united with the Missionary Baptists; but after living with them several years they were made to hear the voice of the Lord, saying, "Come out of her, my people," and obedient to the voice, came to the Otego Church, told of the Lord's dealings with them, and were baptized by Elder Durand when they were past threescore years of age. Our dear sister was strongly and lovingly attached to her brethren, and, by thus proving her faith by her works, was much beloved by the church.

Her funeral was attended at Little York, April 8th, 1889, by the writer. She spent most of her years at the home of her son-in-law, where she also died, and where every care was bestowed to make her life happy. She leaves several children, relatives and friends to feel their loss.

ALSO,

DIED—At Osborne Hollow, Broome Co., N. Y., March 31st, 1889, Mr. Augustus Reynolds, aged fifty-one years.

He was ill but eight days, and suffered much until a short time before death came to his relief. He had never professed a hope in a public way, but had in many ways given evidence of being born again, so that we had looked for him to come to the church, as he was a declared friend of the Old Baptists; but the Lord had ordered differently, and took him to himself.

He leaves several children and his companion, together with (I think) one sister and two brothers, to mourn their loss of a kind husband, an affectionate father, and a beloved brother. May this heavy stroke be overruled to the good of the dear family and friends. His funeral was attended at his home by many sympathizing friends, when the writer spoke to the people from Philippians i. 6.

ALSO,

DIED—March 12th, 1889, at her home in Unadilla, Otsego Co., N. Y., another of our precious members, sister Matilda Heliker, aged seventy-nine years.

She had been a greatly beloved member of the church at Otego for nearly fifty years, having been baptized by Elder David Crain, and always stood firm in the doctrine of reigning grace. She was ever ready to speak in praise and honor of the perfect work of the Lord in saving sinners; and truly can we say of her that she led a quiet and peaceable life, in all godliness and honesty. She stood unmoved in the time of the split with the Baptists here, choosing rather to battle with her brethren in defense of the truth than to travel on with those with whom she had no fellowship. I saw her a short time before her departure, and she expressed great resignation to the will of the Lord to go when he should call. She had been a widow several years, and leaves three children, two brothers and numerous relatives to feel their loss. Her funeral was attended at Otego, March 15th, at which time the writer spoke to the people from 2 Cor. iv. 17, 18.

B. BUNDY.

OTEGO, N. Y., March 15, 1889.

Mrs. Parthenia McCormick, relict of John McCormick, deceased, was born in Green Co., Ky., Aug. 27th, 1804, and departed this life at the residence of her step-son, T. B. McCormick, near Colchester, McDonough Co., Ill., April 16th, 1889, aged eighty-four years, seven months and twenty days.

The subject of this notice was a daughter of Robert and Anna Ball, and when she was but a girl joined the Baptist Church, the date of which I have not at hand, but she must have been a member of the visible church of Christ for nearly seventy years. She was the second wife of brother McCormick, and the mother of one child, a daughter, and the tender and faithful step-mother to several children. I have known sister McCormick about thirty-one years, having been the pastor of the church where she held her membership during that length of time, and can testify that I have known no sister in Christ who was more faithful and devoted to the cause of God, or more firm and unshaken, than she. I have known her to walk more than three miles to her meetings since she became old and afflicted, when she could not get to ride; and to see her tall and tottering frame wearily wending its way over the hills to the house of God on Saturday, and to receive the hearty and earnest grasp of her withered hand at our meetings, inspired our hearts to esteem her as one of the precious ones of earth. What a contrast between the deportment of such a faithful disciple, and that of some others who upon some frivolous excuse can stay away for months at a time!

This dear old sister fell at the door of her step-son one night and injured one of her hips, and lay about eleven weeks, suffering extremely, and never recovered from the shock. I visited her once, fourteen miles from me, while she suffered; and when I alluded to her faithful and exemplary life, she remarked, with much earnestness, "Talk not about me, nor what I have done, but talk about Jesus, my blessed Lord; for I dare not mention the best act of my life, and my only trust is in his boundless grace." She was very kindly and faithfully nursed by friends and neighbors until she fell asleep in Jesus.

By her request I spoke on the day of her burial to the surviving friends and brethren from Ecclesiastes vii. 1: "A good name is better than precious ointment; and the day of death than the day of one's birth."

MACOMB, Ill., April 23, 1889.

Mrs. Rhoda Outlaw died suddenly of heart disease at about three o'clock a. m., Oct. 30th, 1888.

She was born in Wilkinson Co., Ga., April 8th, 1825. Her parents were named Thomas and Cintha Deason. She was married to John Outlaw, in Stuart Co., Ga., March 23d, 1855. His parents were named Jeremiah and Sena Outlaw. They emigrated from Georgia to Alabama, and about twelve years ago she professed a hope and united with the Methodist society, there being no other order convenient. They moved to Pratt Mines about six years ago. She obtained a letter, but held it until death, although there were good opportunities to unite with the same. She told Mr. Outlaw that she would go with him to his choice at any time that he would go. He has never gained courage to unite with any order, but seems to be firm in the faith of the Primitive Baptists, and is greatly attached to the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. The New Testament and the SIGNS are his daily companions at his place of business. Mrs. Outlaw was a helpmeet indeed to her husband, and a mother indeed to her children, of which they had four, two sons and two daughters, all grown and married. One of the two daughters died about four years ago, which caused them great sorrow of heart. She was a kind and generous neighbor, and was held in high esteem by her many friends at Pratt Mines and vicinity.

On October 31st she was taken to the Methodist house of meeting, where the writer tried to comfort the bereaved and weeping family and friends from the text, "But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope."—1 Thess. iv. 13. Her remains were then laid away in the Pratt Mines cemetery to await the morning of the resurrection of the dead. "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the Archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first," and be clothed with the immortality of the Son of God.

P. J. POWELL.

PRATT MINES, Ala., April 22, 1889.

By request I send for publication in the SIGNS a notice of the death of B. H. Toland.

The deceased was born in Marshall Co., Miss., Sept. 27th, 1849, was married to M. J. Starns Sept. 12th, 1878, and died Jan. 2d, 1889. Mr. Toland never made a public profession of religion, but was blessed with a good hope through grace. I was called to see him a few days before his death. He gave me the reason of his hope, and regretted very much that he had not united with the church. During his sickness he manifested an abiding trust in God, being resigned to the divine will. His disease was of the lungs and throat. He bore his sufferings with much patience and fortitude. He leaves a wife (who is a member of the Primitive Baptist Church), two children, besides other relatives. May Israel's God sustain them.

DIED—April 13th, 1889, at Paterson, N. J., of diphtheria, Orlando L. Brands, the youngest son of O. M. and Ada M. Brands, and grandson of Mrs. M. Hellings, aged four years and six months.

ASSOCIATIONAL.

THE Baltimore Old School Baptist Association will be held with the church at Tuscarora, Juniata Co., Pa., commencing on Wednesday, May 15th, 1889, and continue the two following days. Brethren and friends are affectionately invited.

Take tickets for Mifflin, via Pennsylvania R. R. Said station is fifty miles west of Harrisburg, Pa.

We would say to all lovers of the truth who wish to come to the association that they need have no fears about being entertained, thinking we are few and scattered. All will be cared for. All trains will be met on Tuesday, and also on Wednesday morning. The meeting-house is only one mile from the station. In behalf of the church.

A. B. FRANCIS.

THE Delaware Old School Baptist Association will hold her next annual session, if the Lord will, with the church at Rock Springs, Lancaster Co., Pa., to begin on Wednesday before the fourth Sunday in May (22d), 1889, and continue until Friday evening following.

THE Delaware River Old School Baptist Association will convene, the Lord willing, with the church at Hopewell, Mercer Co., N. J., on Wednesday before the first Sunday in June (May 29th), 1889, and continue three days.

I would say to all who may attend the meeting of the association, appointed to be held with the First Baptist Church of Hopewell, that a number of trains leave New York City daily for Hopewell, Liberty Street, Bound Brook Route, and come directly to this place; also leave Philadelphia, Ninth and Green Streets, and Third and Berks Streets. Be sure and purchase tickets for Hopewell. Should any come from other directions, all will connect somewhere with the New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington Line, which passes through Hopewell village. The brethren and friends will be met at the depot, and places of entertainment prepared for them, on Tuesday afternoon, May 28th. A cordial invitation is extended to all brethren and friends who can visit us at that time.

WM. J. PURINGTON.

THE Warwick Old School Baptist Association will meet, the Lord willing, with the church at New Vernon, Orange Co., N. Y., on Wednesday before the second Sunday in June (5th), 1889, and continue in session until Friday evening following.

THE Chemung Old School Baptist Association will be held, if the Lord will, with the Vaughan Hill Church, Bradford Co., Pa., on Wednesday before the third Sunday in June (12th), 1889, and continue in session the two following days.

THREE DAYS MEETINGS.

A THREE days meeting is appointed at Hughesville, Loudoun Co., Va., to begin on Friday before the second Sunday in May, 1889.

Trains leave Alexandria at 4:50 p. m., and Washington at 4:45 p. m., Washington & Ohio R. R. Friends will be met on Thursday, at Hamilton Station. By addressing Samuel Paxon, Hamilton, Va., or Henry Furr, Hughesville, Va., any other trains will be met. We affectionately ask our brethren and sisters to attend.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date, this date denotes the time at which your subscription expires, and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

CORRESPONDENCE.

BURDETT, N. Y., April 14, 1889.

BROTHER JENKINS:—I have a letter from sister Abbie Coddington, and thought I would send it to you. As it was a comfort to me, it may also be a comfort to others. The Lord has said, "Comfort one another." "Who comforteth us in all our tribulation, that we may be able to comfort them which are in any trouble, by the comfort wherewith we ourselves are comforted of God." I remain unworthy of the least notice, but am hoping and trusting in him who made all things for himself. The letters in the SIGNS are to me a feast of fat things, when I can understand what I read; but I am so cold and blind that I can hardly claim the promises.

A. WHEAT.

FREMONT, Neb., March 10, 1889.

DEAR BROTHER AND SISTER—According to the flesh, and, I also hope, in the Spirit:—I have many times since our return here thought of writing you, as I thought perhaps you would like to know, and wonder how I am getting along, both in body and in that which I hope most concerns us both, the spiritual travel. For what is our life if we look only on the things that appear? For the things which are seen are but temporal; but the things which are spiritual are eternal. We sometimes hope that our afflictions work for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. But why should I hope? Surely we have no cause to do so if we look only on the things that do appear. John, in writing to the little children, says, "All that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world. And the world passeth away, and the lust thereof; but he that doeth the will of God abideth forever." Truly can we say with the apostle Paul, "If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable." For when we would do good, evil is present with us. "To will is present with me, but how to perform that which is good I find not." While we find that all our ways are evil, we still find another law in our members, and we desire to be led to the Rock that is higher than any earthly power; a mind to be hid in the shadow of the great Rock, to lean on the outstretched arm of the eternal God, and to rest under the shadow of his almighty wing. What a safe place to rest, while the enemy (the flesh and the alluring vanities of this world) passes by. My dear brother and sister, when I took my pen and sat down in my far distant home, separated as I am from all my earthly kindred, with the exception of my own immediate family, from some cause I felt a strong desire to commune with some one who, I hoped, would understand me if I should be enabled to tell of some, if it be only a small part, of the way in which I hope sometimes I have been led by the wonderful and mysterious providence of God. With the psalmist we say, "Many, O Lord, are thy wonderful works which thou hast done, and thy thoughts to usward: they cannot be reckoned up in order unto thee. If I would declare and speak of them, they are more than can be numbered." If we receive instruction in the secret place of the sanctuary, alone with our God, what wonderful teachings are we made to realize. How fully have I been made to realize in the year that is passed that this is to us indeed the valley of the shadow of death. O the darkness and gloom that have surrounded me, while it has seemed that not only God, but nature also, has frowned upon me, for it has seemed that nothing but blackness and darkness had settled around me. I could turn no way for solace or companionship. Did I attempt to find peace in the things of this life, I could find no pleasure in them. There is nothing under the sun to satisfy my desire; and to be shut out from both God and man, is but to make one's heart sink within them. Who but the soul that has passed through these dreadful trials can know what it is to be brought into such a strait that they are compelled (as has been the poor, tried, afflicted writer of these lines) to stand still, clothed in sackcloth? We dare not so much as raise our eyes to that holy God who has been so merciful to us, in preserving our lives, and still leaves us on the side where mercy can be extended to us. Great God! Only these words have many times been our cry, for we sensibly realized that it was our own sins that separated us from God. We dare not murmur; we dare not complain. Justice and judgment are the habitation of the throne of him who is too wise to err, and too good to be unkind. What a wonderful God is ours! Truly he is a God that hides himself when he please. He spreads a cloud before the face of his throne, and none can say, What doest thou? He himself says, "I form the light, and create darkness. I the Lord do all these things." Then who dares to complain? Dare mortal man, whose breath is in his nostrils? Rather let us do that which now becomes us, and that which we have a desire to do, however short we may come of performing it. Let us endeavor to thank him that it is as well with us as it is. Surely goodness and mercy have followed me all my days. I have no desire to complain. It is true, as you well know, that I have had my share, and sometimes it has seemed to me that a double portion of affliction has been laid on me, and this poor body could hardly be raised above the dreadful weight that was crushing me to earth. Yet all this has been good for me. Not one trial too many has been laid on me. To-day I thank God that I have been led to see that it is in the right way he has led me all my days. He has known me better than I could possibly know myself. Where and to what extent would I go, if not hindered by the restraining power of him who keeps watch over all the works of his hands? All things work together for good to them who love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose. All that we can really know of God and his dealings with us is what is made known to us by experience. Surely experience teaches much, both in sorrow and in joy. Why I have been led to drink so deeply from the fountain of both, seems very strange to me at times. Sometimes like one of old we remember the wormwood and the gall. Therefore we have hope, and thank God that he hath brought us up out of the horrible pit of mire and clay, and set our feet upon the Rock; and again is brought to our remembrance the water that gushed out of the rock when we thirsted and were ready to perish. We are naturally very forgetful creatures concerning things of this life, and often forget our most cherished interest in this world. But this one thing have we learned to perfection, for we trust and hope it is indelibly written on the fleshly tables of our heart by the finger of God dipped in life-giving blood that cleanses from all sin, never to be erased by the mighty washing and surging of the billows of time, that "Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it.

Except the Lord keep the city, the watchman waketh but in vain." "Draw me, and I will run after thee." When he bid us seek his face, then, and not until then, will the heart respond and say, "Thy face, Lord, will I seek." One thing have I desired of the Lord, and that have I sought after, that I might dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of my life, to behold the beauty of the Lord, and to inquire in his temple, and give unto him the glory due unto his name, and worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness. The one that wandereth out of the way of understanding shall remain in the congregation of the dead. And the slothful man sayeth, There is a lion without; I shall be slain in the street. But the prudent man foreseeth the evil, and hideth himself in the Rock. "Lead me to the Rock that is higher than I." But who can say, I have made my heart clean, I am pure from sin? Vanity of vanities, saith the wise man: all is vanity. Therefore he hated his life, and all under the sun was grievous to him. How like him are we. How hateful and distrustful do we appear in our own eyes. With the poet we often say, "I myself can hardly bear." We become so subjected, so under the control of an evil, unbelieving heart, that we are often made to cry aloud, and there appears no ear to hear us in our despair. Ah, whither shall I flee? In which direction shall I turn? Where is the place suited to me? Surely not in the assembly of the chosen people of God, who so trustingly look to him in every hour of danger, and fail not to find him whom their soul loveth; while I am but a poor alien from God, and a stranger to grace, not meet to be in the assembly of the saints, but only fit to be cut down and trodden under foot of men. Neither is it with those who delight in and are so easily satisfied with the flatteries of the gods of this world, and live and feast upon the meats offered to their idols. It is not my meat and drink; I cannot live upon it. May our God save us from the inventive genius of mistaken, deluded and corrupted men. Except we eat the flesh and drink the blood of the Son of man, we have no life in us. This is meat they know not of who serve the tabernacle. "If any man will be my disciple, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me." "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed." But what is it to follow Christ? Where do we find it written in all the sacred rule that is laid down for the guidance of those who would live godly in Christ Jesus, that it is to go before him, and form plans for him, for the building up of his kingdom, which is not of this world? Neither is it in meats and drinks, but joy and peace in the Holy Ghost. Then how earnestly does every true follower of Jesus pray, as he taught his disciples to do, "Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done." And I must believe it is done. If I had no other reason than this, it would be enough to assure me that the will of God is done in all things, from the fact that he so taught his disciples to pray. Is it consistent to think he would instruct them to pray for that which he did not expect to perform? But how apt are we to forget that the place of a disciple of the Lord is in the rear, and attempt to go on before, and dictate to him, and suggest to him that he lay aside his wisdom and plans for what we in our ignorance and blindness suppose would be an improvement on his ways, and that he follow on and bless us for our superior judgment and valor. Is it possible that such an one can be a disciple of the Lord? The law says, "The soul that sinneth it shall die." But grace and truth (which is since the law) says, "I will be merciful to your unrighteousness, and your sins and iniquities I will remember no more forever." Nevertheless he will visit our transgressions with the rod, and our iniquities with stripes. Is it any wonder then, the manner in which the Lord often displays his hand in purging by his righteous judgments those who in their folly depart from the law of the Lord, being filled with their own ways? But when sufficiently humbled under the mighty hand of their covenant-keeping God, he in his great mercy displays his holy arm in bringing again the captivity of his people, bringing them up out of Babylon, whither they have been captivated, under the influence of an ambitious and worldly spirit, so contrary to the spirit of truth and holiness. But they are only captivated. Is there any danger of their being annihilated? Let us see. The Savior says, "I give unto them [his sheep] eternal life, and they shall never perish; neither shall any pluck them out of my hand." Their life is hid with Christ in God. They are his members, his flesh and his bones. The psalmist says, "Thine eyes did see my substance; and in thy book all my members were written, which in continuance were fashioned, when as yet there was none of them." "Israel shall be saved in the Lord with an everlasting salvation." "For Jacob my servant's sake, and Israel mine elect, I have even called thee by thy name." "I have covered thee in the shadow of my hand, that I may plant the heavens, and lay the foundations of the earth, and say unto Zion, Thou art my people." "This people have I formed for myself; they shall show forth my praise." Before the heavens were planted, or the foundation of the earth was laid, they were known to him. Of them he has said, "O thou afflicted, tossed with tempest and not comforted, behold, I will lay thy stones with fair colors." "No weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper."

This is strong meat; and strong meat belongs to those of full age. But I hardly dare to hope that I am even a child in the kingdom; and certainly, if one at all, I am less than the least of all, and scarcely dare to claim one morsel of the children's bread with which to satisfy my hungry, famishing soul. For more than one whole long year have I went with my head bowed down like a withered, frost-bitten plant that has not life and vitality enough to raise its drooping head. O whither am I going? Where do my weary feet carry me? Is my face Zionward, or do my steppings each day still carry me farther down into the land of darkness? So it does seem to me at times. O God, thou knowest. While I do most assuredly believe that all Israel is saved in the Lord, and he will perform his promise to Jacob, I have many questionings in my mind as to whether I am so favored as to be numbered with that people who have access through the Spirit unto the Father; whose names are written in the Lamb's book of life from the foundation of the world; who are no more strangers or foreigners, but fellow-citizens with the saints, and of the household of God, builded together for a habitation of God through the Spirit, according to the eternal purpose of God, which he purposed in Christ Jesus our Lord. Is anything able to separate such from the Father? Paul says that nothing is able to separate them from the love of God. O that I might have this one thing forever settled in my mind, that I am God's, so there would be no more cause for anxiety on this account. It seems I could then glory in tribulation. Is it possible that one whose trust is in the eternal, all-wise and powerful God, and who feels that the oil in their lamp of life has burned very low, would be so fearful of their light going entirely out, and would be seeking in vain for a resting place? I fear not. Is this slavish fear, the fear that hath torment? I would be willing to give worlds, did I possess them, to know this one thing, or to be reconciled to the will of God in all things. Away with silver and gold with which to buy of him who holds all things in his own hand; who has but to speak, and it is done; and what he does, he does forever; whose voice was able to raise a sleeping Lazarus, and bring again that life, to the wonder of the beholders. But have my ears ever heard the life-giving sound? Are the dreadful grave-cloths still wrapped about a lifeless form? Much of the time in the year that is past have these words been in my mind, That he might deliver them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage. As I have meditated on them, I have been made to wonder if these were the bonds that have so tormented and afflicted me. If so, then, O my soul, pass under the rod. These bonds will prove to be but silken cords to thee. No affliction for the present is pleasant, but grievous, but afterwards yields the peaceful fruits of righteousness. "I will leave in the midst of thee an afflicted and poor people." Is not this sufficient to strengthen the weakest lamb of the fold? Surely it ought to be.

When I last saw Elder Jenkins in Middletown, he said to me, "Don't forget us." He meant that I should again write something more for our paper. So also did Elder Beebe, while at the association. I think I appreciate their kind forbearance with me in the past; but I am sure they do not see me as I am, or they never could fellowship me or accept anything I do or say. I am so cold, so lifeless, so destitute of love, that I am like a withered, lifeless branch. But I thought of the children of Israel when they sat beside the cold streams of Babylon, with their harps hung upon the willows, and when they who had captivated them required of them one of Zion's songs. They answered, "How can we sing the Lord's song in a strange land?" But I hoped if I must sing that it might be to the praise of the glory of the grace of God which bringeth salvation. "For by grace are ye saved, through faith; and that not of yourselves; it is the gift of God." Then thanks be to God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ. It is for some, but it is seldom I can claim it for myself.

Well, I have written a long letter to you, and very many things have been said by me that I had no idea of saying when I commenced this; but I have left out much which I did intend to say. I really do think I am a strange creature at all times; but if it is manifested more at one time than another, it is when I have taken my pen to write. It seems to me that all my weakness then gets the better of me. I feel that if I should copy and revise this, I might throw out much of it; but when I have told you something of how we are getting along otherwise, I will send it just as it is, and leave you to judge of its merits and demerits.

We had quite a comfortable journey in coming out here, as much so as could be expected under the circumstances. It is never a pleasant thought to me to know that I am leaving for a long time, and perhaps forever, the place of my nativity, the land of my birth, and so many things that are peculiarly dear to me, all my kindred, who are near and dear to me by the ties of nature. How many things may transpire, both with them and us, while we are far separated, in which we will need each other's love and sympathy. It is sad for us to think of these things, as we often do; and we often long to see the dear familiar faces and forms, and to mingle with them once again. But whether it will ever be our privilege again, only God in heaven knows, and it is right as it is. I stood the journey fully as well as could be expected, considering the condition of my health.

We left Middletown on Monday night, and reached Fremont on Thursday at night. So you see it is quite a tiresome journey for one who is not very strong. I can hardly look upon it as a reality that I have been back to New York state. It all seems so strange to me, like a dream. I must have been either sleeping or very dumb, as I did not really know enough to appreciate the privileges I ought to have enjoyed. But I must stop, or I will make you tired of listening to my sad complaints. I wish I might have written you a more cheerful letter; but I have followed the dictates of my mind, and hope you will answer this when you get time. But do not try to cheer me on my weary pilgrimage by telling me of many of the precious promises to Israel, for I know them all; that is, the letter of them. But just listen to me one moment more, while I repeat a few words that speak more to my mind than all this scribbling that I have done.

"Guide me, O thou great Jehovah!
Pilgrim through this barren land;
I am weak, but thou art mighty,
Hold me with thy powerful hand:
Bread of heaven,
Feed me till I want no more.

"Open thou the crystal fountain,
Whence the healing streams do flow,
Let the fiery, cloudy pillar,
Lead me all my journey through:
Strong Deliverer,
Be thou still my strength and shield.

"When I tread the verge of Jordan,
Bid my anxious fears subside;
Death of death, and hell's destruction,
Land me safe on Canaan's side:
Song of praises
I will ever give to thee."

Now I will close. May the grace of God save you and us, with all his Israel, for the suffering Savior's sake.

ABBIE CODDINGTON.

JUSTUS, Pa., Dec. 30, 1888.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—As it has been impressed upon my mind to write my experience, the Lord being my helper I will try to tell you some of the Lord's dealings with me, and what I hope the Lord has done for my soul.

In my boyhood I felt that I was a sinner. My parents sent me to Sunday School to be taught how to be good, so that the Lord would be pleased with me, and have mercy upon me, and save me. I had a great fear of death, and said my prayers every night on retiring, because I thought it might better my condition. I would make promises to the Lord that I would do better and try to keep his commandments, thinking that if I did the best I could as long as I lived I would be saved. But I broke every promise that I made. There was a time when I was much troubled about my condition.

Thus time passed until I was thirteen or fourteen years old, when I was attending school at the Soldiers' Orphan School, at Harford, Susquehanna Co., Pa., my father having died in the late war. While at this school I was troubled about the world coming to an end, and for several nights could not sleep. I was in great fear. All I could say was, "Lord, be merciful to me, a sinner." When I arrived at the age of sixteen years I had to leave the school, and worked out by the month. The people where I worked were Methodists, and so were they of the whole township, so far as I knew. During the following winter there was a revival meeting held in the neighborhood, and with others I attended, and tried to get what they called religion; but I was not troubled at times about my condition, nor could I do anything to bring conviction of sin upon myself. There were several who went to the anxious seat with me at that time, and some of the old members got down on their knees with us, and prayed for us with all their might. The first night I went forward I burst out into crying. I wanted to be a christian, but could not. I heard some of the seekers tell their experience, and I told mine. There was not much difference between their's and mine, and they received us candidates, and we were sprinkled. But I did not see the Bible in any different light from what I had before, nor did I feel any different. This was in Auburn Township. I continued in this place three years, and went to meeting occasionally, and took part with the members in speaking, telling as they did that I was trying in my weak way to serve the Lord, which I intended to do the rest of my life.

Thus time passed on, and I was trying to do right. I was saying my prayers every night on retiring, and at the same time fearing the wrath of God. At one time I dreamed of seeing a great head, and feared that everlasting destruction was my doom. I saw this vision the second time, and was very much troubled on account of it. What could be the meaning of it? A great head, with no body to be seen. I dreamed that I was in a dark dungeon. It seemed that I was beneath all else, and that I was closed up in it, with no place to get out, and no one could hear my cry. No one knows what it is to be in such a place unless they have been there. This troubled me very much, and I cannot forget it as long as I live. I believe the Lord showed me what I have seen.

In the spring of 1879 I came down to this neighborhood, now called Justus, to work by the month. The most of my relatives live here, and the most of them are New School

Baptists. There is a church here of that persuasion. I attended the meeting and Sunday School here quite regularly through the summer. The following winter they held a protracted meeting, which I attended, having given up the idea that I had ever experienced religion. I thought I would make a new start and try it once more. The preacher requested all to stand up who wanted to be prayed for, and with a number of others I stood up. Almost all who stood up related their experience, I with the rest. The old members told me they believed I had met with a change. I was received as a candidate for baptism, with others, and became a member of the New School Baptists. But I was not a very faithful member. My heart did not go out after sinners, to bring them in and have them converted, as many of the members said their hearts did. My mind was not drawn to read the Bible much. I much preferred reading any newspaper. I had been a member with them about two years when the Lord, as I believe, showed me that I was a sinner, I was caused to read the Bible, to see if I could receive some comfort; but no comfort could I find. I read the Bible because I knew that no other book testified of the death and sufferings of the crucified and risen Savior, for the sins of his people. I tried to banish evil thoughts, and to keep the whole law. I thought my salvation depended upon what I did, and that therefore I had a great work to do. But it was all for myself, for I did not feel able to help save others. In reading the Bible, which I now did more than at any time in my life before, I saw passages that contradicted what the people had told me and what their preachers preached. It seemed that I could not be satisfied with their preaching, so I concluded to go over to the school-house, a few rods from the meeting-house, and hear Elder Pitcher, an Old School Baptist. I saw that there was a great difference in the preaching. I then went to the New School, and then again to the Old School. My mind would first be on one side, and then on the other. I was weighed in the balances, and found wanting. I prayed the Lord that if I was deceived to undeceive me. I was there shown what a great sinner I was. I saw the Almighty sitting upon his throne, with his arm made bare; and a mighty arm it is. I cried for the rocks and mountains to fall upon me, to hide me from the face of him that sits upon the throne. I wished that I had never been born, and was minded to put myself to death. Then the thought came to me, I cannot hide myself from him that sitteth upon the throne, and what can I do? I could do nothing. I had to let my case rest in the hands of the great Judge of all the earth. It seemed that hell was my doom, and that there was no hope for me. I wished that I could have been a beast of the field, for they seemed much better than I. It seemed that certainly there was no one so wicked as I. All that I ever did came up before me, and very wicked my deeds all seemed to me.

"And if my soul were sent to hell, God's righteous law approved it well." I did not expect that I could sleep when night came; but the Lord caused me to sleep and rest quite well that night. But the wrath of God still rested upon me, for the Lord had not yet spoken peace to my soul. I was yet thinking about my doom, which made me tremble. The people where I was working were members of the same church that I was, and the thought came into my mind to tell them about my condition; but soon the thought came to me, I will not; I will keep it all to myself; and I did so. I thought, It is well with these people, but alas! poor me. Hell is my doom. I would have given worlds like this to have been in their place, had they been mine to give. The next night I had a dream that I was surrounded by fire, and that the only way to get out was to go through the fire. I dreamed that I came out of the fire safely, without the smell of fire about my garments. This was fresh in my mind the next morning, and I wondered what it meant. Something immediately told me to come out from the New School, and go to the Old School. I was then and there made willing to do so by the power of God. The New School was no longer a home for me. I went to the Old School Baptists, who seemed to me to be the best people I had ever met with. There was that love for each other that I never before had seen in any denomination. I could see that the Old School Baptists were the church of the true and living God, and were like a city set upon a hill, which cannot be hid. I could hardly wait for Sunday to come, that I might go to hear Elder Pitcher preach. Although I did not feel fit to be with such good people, yet I could not stay away from them. The school-house in which they met seemed to me like a heavenly place in Christ Jesus. Indeed those were happy days to me, and that was what I wanted. But I was soon in "Doubting Castle," and doubted as to whether what I had passed through was real. I would almost come to the conclusion that it was a delusion. I wanted to walk by sight. The word declares, "We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren." Why should I doubt? The Old School Baptists explained passages of Scripture to me that the New School knew nothing about.

When the Lord revealed to me what my dream meant, I felt that my load of sin was gone, and I was made to rejoice in God.

After the death of Elder Pitcher the Lord was pleased to send our beloved brother, Elder Marvin Vail, to serve in his stead, and to "feed the flock of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood." About two and one-half years after I received a hope the church was in order to receive such as desired a home with them. There was a covenant meeting held on Saturday, September 6th, 1884, when I told to the church a part of my experience. I was received as a candidate for baptism, and was baptized the following Sunday by Elder Marvin Vail, our pastor, and became a member of the Abington Old School Baptist Church, over which Christ is the great Head. That great Head that I saw in my dream, I believe, represents Christ; and the church is his body, the fullness of him that filleth all in all. Soon after I was baptized I felt that I was a hypocrite, and had deceived the church, and was minded to have my name crossed off from the church book; for I felt I was not fit to have a name among such a good people. My path has of late years been quite a level, smooth one, with not much affliction, which has caused me to doubt my being a child of God. "If ye are without chastisement, whereof all are partakers, then are ye bastards, and not sons. For whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth." I wished that I could be afflicted. Then I could believe that I was a child of God. The greatest affliction I have had is the loss of my wife, which happened the third of May, 1888. It did seem for a long time that my affliction was greater than I could bear. She was a member of the same church that I am. But I trust the Lord has made me reconciled, and that my loss is her eternal gain. I feel that in love and mercy the Lord has afflicted me. One has first to be caused to mourn, before he can be comforted. If it were not that I have been given a hope of a blessed immortality beyond the grave, I would sink in despair. O that I may always have my trust in the Lord, and trust him where I cannot trace him. I have to say, "Bless the Lord, O my soul; and all that is within me, bless his holy name."

From your unworthy brother, if one at all,

ISAAC PHILLIPS.

LOUVALE, Ga., Feb. 14, 1889.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—I read with pleasure and (I trust) profit the SIGNS, and it has come into my mind to write something about preachers and preaching. We all, I trust, understand what preaching is, whether we all can realize the responsibility and the sublimity of it or not. I have been trying to preach for several years, and often fear I know but little about it. Sometimes it appears so to me, and I am made to tremble, and to say, "Who is sufficient for these things?" When I hear a gospel preacher, who is in the Spirit, it affords me much consolation, for I trust I know the joyful sound, and hope there is a blessing in it. Christ is the only true "preacher of righteousness." Noah was a type of Christ. And if Christ does not do the preaching now, it is not fit for the church. Often do we hear brethren say they try to preach, and so they do; but how glad we are when they fail, and the Lord speaks, through lips of humble clay, the words of this life. We also realize that no man taketh this honor to himself, to be a mouth for God, but God selects whom he will. And although Moses is educated in all the manners and customs of the Egyptians, yet the Lord said he would make Aaron his spokesman. He does this, doubtless, that no flesh shall glory in his presence. God has ordained that the gospel shall be preached, and has chosen men of like passions as we are, and made some able ministers of the New Testament. How consoling to be permitted to hear them preach in the name of our God, the wonderful power and wisdom of God as manifested in Christ, the Savior of sinners, as we feel ourselves to be.

We believe that God chooses and prepares them to preach his word; and I do not know that we would err if we should say that every gospel sermon preached is a miracle of our God performed in this our day. Is it possible that any of God's children should become so blind and past feeling as to lose sight of this glorious fact? If a call to the ministry is not the highest call that we can conceive of here, I would like to know why it is not. If it is, how can people who are of God lose sight of that fact? I write this because I have been made to shudder when I think of it, and then think how unfit I feel for it. I used to think I wanted to be a preacher, until I found out what it was; and ever since my eyes were opened, I have feared and shrank in my feelings, and have rather tried to avoid it. Were it not for that "belly of hell," I would refuse to try to preach, or to be called a preacher. How often do we worry because we cannot preach, and cannot quit. To be a preacher means to be crucified to the world, with its affections and lusts. To be a preacher means to be grave, serious, and temperate in all things; not only in drinking, but in eating. It means sobriety and moderation. It means to be blameless; that means strict integrity, upright at home and abroad; honest, straightforward in all things. It means to have a discerning eye, like the eagle, who sees her prey afar off; able to discern the enemy of the church; for he is a watchman to watch, and take the oversight of the flock where the Spirit may lead him. It means he shall have the face of the ox or calf; sacrificing, his life is a sacrifice for the elect's sake. In order to serve them he must forsake all at home, and go; and as he goes, he must preach, saying, The kingdom of God is come. He has the face of a lion, bold and fearless. He is to expose error, speak the words of truth and soberness, reprove, rebuke and exhort. He is to have the face of a man. He is to be all things to all men. He has sympathy, intelligence and reason. He is to be faithful in his office. He is to look to the Lord for wisdom, faith, and all things, even to his temporal support. I have seriously thought of these things; and now, for the first time since I have been trying to preach, at the most inopportune time, it seems to me, the demand is made upon me to go forth trusting in the Lord. I have for a long time felt the force of Paul's words, to give myself wholly to these things, to be not entangled in the affairs of this life; and the words of the Master, "The workman is worthy of his meat." I have tried to get rich, and preach, and support my family too. But feeling rebuked by the gentle admonitions of my Lord and the apostles, I have found faith in this trying time to trust in the Lord; and now I am giving myself wholly to these things, that the profiting may appear to all. I was for fifteen years among the New School, or what are called the "Missionary" Baptists. I was as a preacher among them, but I opposed and fought many things among them, and especially the moneyed system of salaries. I felt that it was a sacred matter, and opposed the money-changers and tables, knowing that God's house should be a house of prayer, and not a den of thieves.

The subject is inexhaustible, and if the Lord wills, I will write more, should you think this worthy a place in the SIGNS.

Yours in hope,

W. LIVELY.

"HOWBEIT he meaneth not so, neither doth his heart think so; but it is in his heart to destroy and cut off nations not a few."—Isa. x. 7.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS:—One who subscribes herself "a little sister," requests my views upon the above text. I do not feel to be expert in defining the Scriptures, but I have had some thoughts upon this text since the request was made, and I feel impressed to pen them down in my stammering way, and submit to your judgment whether they are worth any space in the SIGNS or not.

To my mind this whole chapter is one among many that plainly shows that God makes wicked kings and nations subserve his purpose and will, and at the same time they are ignorant of the fact. In order to help us to arrive at the meaning of this text, let us begin at the fifth verse to read. "O Assyrian, the rod of mine anger, and the staff in their hand is mine indignation. I will send him against a hypocritical nation, and against the people of my wrath will I give him a charge, to take the spoil, and to take the prey, and to tread them down like the mire of the streets." It seems from this reading that the Assyrian is the pronoun "he" in the text. "Howbeit he [the Assyrian] meaneth not so, neither doth his heart think so [to be the rod and staff of the anger and indignation of the Lord, to perform his work upon mount Zion and Jerusalem. See verse 12]; but it is in his heart to destroy and cut off nations not a few."

Carnal reason would dictate that if the Assyrian were fulfilling the will and purpose of God in going against mount Zion and Jerusalem, to take the prey and tread them down like mire of the streets, although it was in their hearts to destroy and cut off nations not a few, it would be unjust in God to punish the fruit of his stout heart. But I care but little, and the Lord cares less, for the opinions of men; and the Lord shows his independence and authority in the verses succeeding the text. He says, "Is not Calno as Carchemish? is not Hamath as Arpad? is not Samaria as Damascus? As my hand hath found the kingdoms of the idols, and whose graven images did excel them of Jerusalem and of Samaria; shall I not, as I have done unto Samaria and her idols, so do to Jerusalem and her idols? Wherefore it shall come to pass that when the Lord hath performed his whole work upon mount Zion and on Jerusalem, I will punish the fruit of the stout heart of the king of Assyria, and the glory of his high looks." It seems to me that the king of Assyria and his host are identified with Joseph's brethren. They did not mean it to be so, neither did their hearts think so, to be the rod and staff of the Lord, to send Joseph down to Egypt to lay up corn for Israel; but it was in their hearts to destroy and cut him off from among themselves. They acted according to the dictates of their wicked designs, without any knowledge of the purpose of God in the matter; and the Lord visited them, to punish the fruit of their stout hearts, when Joseph required of them to bring Benjamin down into Egypt. "And they said one to another, We are verily guilty concerning our brother, in that we saw the anguish of his soul, when he besought us, and we would not hear; therefore is this distress come upon us."—Gen. xlii. 21. And the Jews did not mean it to be so, neither did their hearts think so, to be the rod and staff of the Lord, to crucify the Savior; but it was in their hearts to destroy and cut him off from among themselves. They had no knowledge that they were performing the will of God in crucifying Jesus. Paul says, "But we speak the wisdom of God in a mystery, even the hidden wisdom, which God ordained before the world unto our glory; which none of the princes of this world knew; for had they known it, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory."—1 Cor. ii. 7, 8. Peter refers to this crime, and says, "And now, brethren, I wot that through ignorance ye did it, as did also your rulers."—Acts iii. 17. Although they were ignorant that he was the Son of God, and ignorant that he was delivered to them by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God, he promised to punish the fruit of their stout hearts, and held them responsible for the blood of all the prophets which was shed from the foundation of the world, from the blood of Abel, unto the blood of Zacharias, who perished between the altar and the temple. "O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! how unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out!" He is Lord of lords and King of kings. He is Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end, and is under no law but his own sovereign will, and works all things after the counsel of his own will, and none can stay his hand, or say unto him, What doest thou?

I am aware that in the vicinity where this little sister lives there is some strong opposition to this God, and some are trying to set limits to his predestination, and declare non-fellowship for her, and for all others who are not so presumptuous; and it may be that some one has tried to wrest the text submitted, so as to make it a witness on their side. I am not certain that I have properly defined the text, but I am certain that there is no Scripture, when quoted in its proper connection, that will disprove God's predestination of all things. This little sister may be a little perplexed upon this subject; and to be brief upon the subject I will say that all I understand it to mean is, that God made the world, and all things in it; and the world, and everything, and all things, are just as he intended (predestinated) they should be. If this is not so, who can, and who will, tell in what particular he is disappointed? And if he is disappointed in the smallest event that comes to pass, how can his foreknowledge and sovereignty be manifested?

But I will desist. What I have written looks very much like myself, weak and imperfect, and I may have missed the mark on the text; but I am subject to correction, and desire to be corrected in the proper spirit.

In hope of eternal life, I am one of the least of all,

P. J. POWELL.

PRATT MINES, Ala., April 23, 1889.

ROYALTON, Ohio, Jan. 18, 1889.

ELDER M. VAIL—DEAR BROTHER IN THE LORD—If I may be allowed to use the phrase. It is true I have a name and standing among that sect that has been, is now, and will be to the end of time, spoken against;

and what is still more strange, I am recognized where known as an "Elder" in and among that sect. But these facts are not sufficient to allay my fears, to drive off grim despair, that sometimes like a strong giant holds me in an icy dungeon, till "all feeling sense seems to be gone," and until the only sign of life that is left is a sense of pain and misery. In such dilemma, what avails it to be told by brethren and sisters that I am enrolled in the fair book of life? Did not Judas once have a standing as one of the twelve? Were there not false prophets among the people? and are not false teachers to come among the disciples? I once imagined the christian's day to get brighter and brighter, and to end in a flood of light for many years, perhaps, before he left the world. If such be the fact, then surely I am on the wrong road; for "Worse and worse I seem to be,

Yet hope the Lord remembers me."

Some one might ask, Was it always thus with you? That is, were you born a conscious sinner? No; for though I could, parrot-like, say I was a sinner, yet I never knew feelingly that I was a sinner till I was about twenty-seven years old. I had been coveting earth's riches, and for some three years my mind was wholly devoted to their acquisition. But one day, suddenly, when all alone in a field, I heard a voice saying, "Now you have sold your interest in the Lord Jesus Christ for paltry gold." In a moment I knew I was a sinner. In my feelings I sunk in utter despair. Like a bird soaring high in the air, having its wings suddenly cut off, I fell to the ground. For about two long, tedious, miserable years I dwelt in the caverns of despair. The pains of hell got hold of me. I was an outside case indeed. I often envied the brute creation. The meanest crawling worm seemed in a better condition than poor me. I was shut up, and could not come forth. But relief came; how or when, I cannot tell, but my burden disappeared, and I could not find it as before; but no joy took its place. There was a blank in my feelings, and it gave me trouble. I mourned because I could not mourn. I seemed to be given over to a state of hardness and reprobacy.

"Of feeling all things showed some sign,
But this unfeeling heart of mine."

At length a day star arose, a faint light surrounded me, and as says Solomon, "Truly the light is sweet." Hope appeared. My mind was directed to Proverbs, first chapter. When I came to the words, "My son," I felt in spirit to be owned as a son. What an inexpressible joy succeeded! It was a heaven below indeed. I felt to be tuned in unison with the heavenly hosts, and to be a partaker of their joys, though in a faint degree. Now what shall I say further? I thought my joys had begun, never to end. O how bitter the disappointment that followed! From that time till now what a strange voyage I have made! What strange depths of my weakness and depravity have been fathomed from time to time! Yet my sounding line has not touched bottom. I am constrained to believe in the doctrine of total depravity, and with Paul can say, "In me (that is, in my flesh) there dwells no good thing." If I have gained any knowledge, it has been balanced by much sorrow. The balance sheet is not in my favor. I die daily. Every day brings its sorrows. "O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" But hope, sweet hope, reaches into the far beyond. We are saved by hope—saved from despair. To think that such a wretch should presume to stand as a watchman on Zion's walls, I feel to shrink from it. Why was such confidence reposed in me by God's people? Why did I respond, as I did, knowing myself so well? I cannot fully understand some, who against the encouragement of their brethren are so anxious to fill a pulpit. I always go into it with a sense of shame and unfitness; and were it not that I sometimes am blessed with great joy while speaking I could easily quit the field.

I have now said enough, perhaps too much, about myself, and will only add to it that I inclose you the photograph of self that was but lately obtained. This is in response to a like favor from you. Pardon the delay. I am glad that the photographer's art cannot picture the inward parts. If he could, I would have had none taken. It is only when we are placed before the divine camera that such image can be taken.

I was much pleased with Elder Chick's letter in the SIGNS of January 9th, especially the fourth and fifth columns. Surely God constrains and restrains the wicked. The devil himself has no warrantee nor quit claim deed for any part of God's universe. God is sovereign over all; for all things were made by him and for him. He is infinite in all his ways and in every direction. How small a part can we comprehend! All we can see or know are but parts of his ways. We might as well try to comprehend or measure infinite space.

"His essence is a vast abyss,
Which angels cannot sound;
An ocean of infinities,

Where all our thoughts are drowned." How comforting when we are enabled to cast all our cares on him, who careth for us; to sit in his pavilion, and by the telescope of faith bring eternal beauties near.

"Think, O my soul, if 'tis so sweet
On earth to sit at Jesus' feet,
What must it be to wear a crown,
And sit with Jesus on the throne?"

Yours in gospel bonds,

THOMAS COLE.

DUART, Ont., April 28, 1889.

ELDER BENTON JENKINS—DEAR BROTHER:—In accordance with the promise I made you last October, I shall try to write you of what I hope have been the dealings of God with me.

The first serious thoughts I remember having was when I was about five years old. I attended a church meeting with my parents, at Holly Spring, Ga., where I heard a gentleman relate his experience. At the time I wished that I could be like he was, and afterwards at different times I was much troubled about my eternal salvation. When I was nearly thirteen, I began to see what a sinner I was, and thought I must do something in order to be saved; but I did not know what to do. For some time I would read a chapter in my Bible every night, and try to pray; but instead of getting better, I seemed to grow worse and more sinful every day. For about four years I kept struggling to free myself in some degree from my sins, but I kept getting more entangled all the time. One evening I went to hear a New School Baptist minister preach. His text was, "Turn ye, turn ye, from your evil ways; for why will ye die, O house of Israel?"—Ezekiel xxxiii. 11. He entreated all of his congregation who were not saved to "turn from their evil ways" that night. I went home more troubled than ever, for I had been trying to do this for years, and could not. Being away from my father at the time, I wrote home about it, and he replied by referring me to Jeremiah xiii. 23, and to Ephesians ii. 8, 9. After reading these passages of Scripture, I was troubled no more about trying to save myself. In reading my Bible I had found that the people of God were all "an afflicted and poor people," and also that "In the world ye shall have tribulation." Knowing that I had very little, if any, "tribulation," I feared that I could not be one of those to whom Jesus promises, in the same chapter and verse (John xvi. 33), "peace" in him. If I ever prayed earnestly for anything, I prayed that if it were God's will I might have that "tribulation." Shortly afterwards, when I was taken sick, and became unable to walk, or even sit up, I felt that my prayer had been answered, and I dared not pray to have one pain made less severe. All I could do was to ask for patience to bear it. The promises, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest," and, "As thy days, so shall thy strength be," were a great comfort to me, as were also the hymns 751, 667 and 1247 (Beebe's Collection). After I had been ill for about thirteen months, during which I had had all the care and attention that kind friends could give me, I was taken to a sanitarium in Hamilton, Ont., for treatment, such as I could not have at home. Part of the treatment was complete isolation from my friends and relatives; and the entire sense of loneliness I felt when left all alone with nurses who were perfect strangers to me, cannot be described.

One day, after I had been there nearly a week, I was feeling particularly desolate, when I heard the words, almost as plainly as though they had been spoken audibly, "Lo, I am with you alway." At the time I did not know that they were in the Bible. Though it was strictly against the rules of the institution to read at all, my Bible was where I could reach it, and after turning over a few leaves I found the precious words, in the last verse of the twenty-eighth chapter of Matthew. After that I could not be lonely, for I felt the presence of a Friend who could not be banished by any human power. Three months later I had so far regained my health and strength as to be able to visit my father in Warwick, N. Y. Soon after I went home he asked me to tell him what I have written you. He then wanted me to tell it to the church. I prayed that I might do what was right, and the next church meeting I was received by the church, and the next day my father baptized me. That night I was too happy to sleep, and the next month was the most peaceful and the happiest I have ever known. I feel that I cannot be sufficiently thankful for all the mercies I have received.

"The best returns for one like me,
So wretched and so poor,
Is from his gifts to draw a plea,
And humbly ask for more."

Yours in hope of a better life,
LARUE E. BEEBE.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—I feel constrained to pen you a few lines. Our God has so abundantly blessed us with his divine presence that I cannot forbear to mention it to the lovers of truth, that they may rejoice with us. I moved to this (Jones) county eleven years ago. At that time there was not a Primitive Baptist Church in this county, neither in Wayne nor Jasper Counties. But thanks be to the name of Israel's God, there are now two in Jones, two in Jasper, one in Wayne, and a bright prospect for one other in Jones. I have been blessed with the pleasure of assisting in the constitution of four churches, and assisted in the ordination of one preacher and four deacons. All the churches save one seem to be in a prosperous condition. I have been, ever since I was ordained, trying to preach in this county and those adjoining. I have the care of two churches at present. Our church numbers about forty, and I hope I am thankful to the God of all grace that we are in peace and fellowship with each other, and with sister churches. All our churches stand firm in the doctrine of the absolute predestination of all things. I have many adversaries, being the first preacher of the Primitive Baptist faith and order that has lived in this county since the division. I have experienced many temptations and persecutions, but the God of all mercies has given me grace sufficient to bear me up under them, and sometimes I can rejoice that I am counted worthy to suffer shame for his blessed name. In spite of all persecution, many are obeying the call of the great Shepherd of the sheep, who says, "Come out of her, my people." As soon as the Lord sends forth the Spirit of his Son into their hearts, because they are the sons and daughters of God, they receive the witness that can testify to the truth, and condemn error; or, in other words, they are born of the Spirit, and can no longer feed upon the husks which the swine do eat, but desire the pure manna that comes down from heaven, through the gospel of Christ. Yes, we can say, The Lord has done great things for us, and we are glad. And I know, brethren Beebe, you can rejoice with us. Although I have never seen you, yet I am satisfied, from the comforting things I have read in your valuable paper, that you are zealous in the cause of your Master. I am rejoiced to find you boldly and earnestly contending for the truth as it is in Jesus. May the Lord bless you, as he has and will, to stand with sword in hand, and enable you to fight his battles, that when you are called to lay your armor by you may say with the apostle, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day: and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing."—2 Tim. iv. 7, 8.

Your brother, I hope, in Christ,
S. BUSHY.

OTEGO, N. Y., March 6, 1889.

MR. EUGENE GASS—MY DEAR BROTHER IN THE LORD:—I feel to thus address you, from reading your letter to-day in the SIGNS. Truly can I say, If ever I have known the way in which the Lord leads his people, the way in which you have been led is that way. The evidence that you are born of God is too clear to be doubted; and as I read along, the thought came to me that I was reading the experience of a member of long standing; but before finishing the excellent letter, to my surprise I found my mistake. But when you say that if you were worthy, &c., it would be a pleasure to be baptized, I felt glad, and could extend to you the hand of fellowship. Now I wish to say to you, "Come in, thou blessed of the Lord; why standest thou without?" If you tarry till you are better, you will never come at all. Your father was right in saying that our nature is not changed in the new birth. I think I once met a brother of yours, living west, who was a member. I was present at Jefferson when your father baptized sister Jennie. My mind was led to write you, to express my delight in your experience of grace, and it would be cheering to me to hear of your being led to the house of your Master's brethren. I know of no church of Old Baptists nearer to you than Utica. They have meeting each Sunday, and I attend there the fourth Sunday of each month.

Yours in fellowship,
B. BUNDY.

G. BEEBE'S SONS:—The within was written by myself, and sent to the friend Gass, to express my approval of his exercises; but it did not reach him, and came back to me. If you see fit to give it a place in the SIGNS, perhaps he will see it.

Yours, &c.,

B. BUNDY.

CLINTONVILLE, Ky.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—The time for me to remit has again rolled around, and I am one year older, but am not willing to do without our dear family paper. I feel as anxious for it, and more, than I did in its infancy. I have been reading it since the first number, and intend to continue as long as I can read. I am now seventy-eight years old, and very seldom get to meeting. My SIGNS is good company for me, for I feast on the able letters from our dear brethren and sisters. I wish I could write as I feel. How I enjoyed our dear brother Durand's communication in the SIGNS, "Unto what and unto whom the saints are come!" My pen cannot describe the joy I felt; and I feel yet to rejoice, for I hope I have experienced Mount Sinai's dreadful flames, and the blackness and darkness roared against me, so that I did exceedingly shake and tremble. I passed through similar feelings last spring. My darkness was such as could be felt. I called to mind our dear brother Durand's glorious Mount Zion, and how glorious it appeared to me. I wish I could tell it as I felt it, but my trying to write spoils the joy I felt when I viewed the glory of Mount Zion.

Dear brethren, the editorials I love to read. Brother Chick's letters, I think, savor of a christian spirit. Old brother Cox is deep in the Scriptures. I am greatly edified in reading his letters, and hope he will continue to write.

I rejoice to know that an all-wise Sovereign rules in the army of heaven and among the inhabitants of earth. Inclosed find two dollars for one more year. I think every time I send on it will be the last. I am looking for the summons daily and hourly. While I live and can read I will have the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. I believe it is the soundest paper in my knowledge. I only write this poor scribble to send for the paper.

Your true friend and, I hope, sister in Christ,

CAROLINE ASHBURN.

WHY THEY BELIEVED NOT.

DEAR BRETHREN:—Please give your views on John xii. 40, and oblige one who wants to know nothing but the truth.

I. M. DARLEN.

AUDUBON, Iowa.

R E P L Y .

"He hath blinded their eyes, and hardened their heart; that they should not see with their eyes, nor understand with their heart, and be converted, and I should heal them."—John xii. 40.

The truth declared in this text is quoted by the inspired apostle from the prophecy of Isaiah, and is by the direction of the Holy Ghost applied as being spoken of Jesus. No ingenuity of carnal reasoning can so distort this plain statement of divine truth as to avoid the clear expression of the sovereignty of God in the case of the characters of whom it is written. In the quotation in verse thirty-eight, the only believers of the report of those who spoke as they were moved by the Holy Ghost, are those to whom the arm of the Lord had been revealed. Of such as had not received that revelation, it is expressly written, "Therefore they could not believe, because that Esaias said again" what is recorded in our text. We are not at liberty to conclude that this is merely an admission of something deplorable which is necessarily connected with the testimony of Jesus. Immediately following our text is the statement, "These things said Esaias, when he saw his glory, and spake of him." As Isaiah was moved by the Spirit of Christ to write this positive and unconditional prophecy about seven hundred years before any of the individuals designated were born, it cannot be understood that they were defeating the purpose of God by their unbelief. Neither did their failure to believe bring upon them the curse of divine justice; for they were already under the just condemnation of God as sinners against his holy law. So John the Baptist said, "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life; and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him."—John iii. 36. In abiding on the unbeliever the wrath of God only remains where it was before the unbelief was manifested. "For the wrath of God is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men, who hold the truth in unrighteousness; because that which may be known of God is manifest in them; for God hath showed it unto them."—Rom. i. 18, 19.

The two principles which are ever presented in the Scriptures as identifying the opposing powers of truth and falsehood are distinctly marked, in that while truth ascribes all power and sovereignty to God, all opposers of truth unite in claiming that power and sovereignty as in the hands of man. In this radical difference is found the origin of all the various systems and theories of religion which are advocated in the world. The mind of man cannot recognize the fact that God is the very essential principle of truth and justice; so that his will is the source and standard of righteousness. For this reason men will sometimes say that if God does not do as they think he should do, then he is unjust. No clearer evidence that they are ignorant of the true God could be given by men, than the expression of such a sentiment. It is as if one should say, If truth is not as I think, then truth is false. Only those who confess that God is the embodiment of all righteousness can acknowledge his infinite sovereignty. Created beings are dependent upon him for the standard of justice, as well as for the revelation of every attribute of his perfection. All the knowledge we can have of God and righteousness is that which he has revealed in the face of Jesus Christ; "For by him were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers; all things were created by him, and for him; and he is before all things, and by him all things consist."—Col. i. 16, 17. The declaration of the doctrine of God, as it is given by inspiration in the Scriptures, is the only divinely authorized testimony of Jesus; and "There is none other name given under heaven among men, whereby we must be saved."—Acts iv. 12. Therefore every one who honestly desires to know the truth must submit all his own thoughts and feelings to the decision of that infallible test, and "Let God be true, and every man a liar; as it is written, That thou mightest be justified in thy sayings, and mightest overcome when thou art judged."—Rom. iii. 4. Whether we can understand his word or not, the Spirit of Christ which is in his saints always confesses that all is truth which bears the seal of the inspiration of God.

The confession of the immutability and unlimited sovereignty of God, at once sweeps away every refuge of that false doctrine which represents salvation as in any sense dependent upon the will or works of man. Denial of this fundamental truth involves the overthrow of all the hope of salvation for sinners. God has promised to save his people from their sins through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus, as his name declares, and that promise is just as secure as his truth and immutability. But if he is not sovereign, some circumstance may defeat his design of love and mercy. His own eternal will is the only revealed source of the salvation of all who were chosen in Christ before the foundation of the world. No sinner who hopes in that salvation can afford to be robbed of the assurance that the will of God is sovereign and immutable. The eternal God has not required of mortals that they should vindicate his character against the charges which carnal enmity may suggest; much less has he authorized any one to apologize for what he has expressly declared concerning his doings. Nothing is more clearly asserted in the Scriptures than the full sovereignty of God, both in the condemnation of sinners, and in the salvation of his own elect people. The rejection of this essential testimony of God involves the denial of all inspired revelation, and of all the Scriptures which are given by inspiration. Yet men often profess to accept the Scriptures as true while violently opposing the very substance of their testimony.

The declaration of our text, that God himself has blinded the eyes and hardened the heart of that people who have no love for his truth, is in perfect accord with the grateful expression of our Lord in which he says, "I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, because thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes. Even so, Father; for so it seemed good in thy sight."—Matt. xi. 25, 26. His gratitude was not less for the hiding of these things from the wise and prudent, than for their revelation unto babes. Both alike seemed good in the sight of the Father. In the sight of the carnal mind neither is approved; but that only shows the opposition of sinful nature against the perfection of God. In this difference of estimation of the divine appointment, the line is clearly drawn between those who are led by the Spirit of God to love his holiness, and those who have not that love. Without the Spirit of Christ it is impossible that any sinner should even desire to love and rejoice in the sovereign holiness of God. In this fact there is rich comfort for those who hunger and thirst after righteousness. Where that desire arises in the heart of one who feels the justice of his own condemnation before God, it is certain that the light of life has shown him that justice. He realizes at once his changed condition. He knows that he was blind, and that he now sees. Until this change is wrought in the case of any sinner he never can desire to see the glorious revelation of the things of which Jesus spoke in the grateful prayer above quoted. The heart is hardened in every one whose eyes are blinded; so that they cannot wish for the revelation of "the arm of the Lord." They never can have any inclination to believe the truth until they are manifested as chosen vessels of mercy by the indwelling of the Spirit of God. Hence it is an evidence that one is a subject of salvation when he has the desire to see and know the truth.

It is important to observe that there is no conflict between the attributes of perfection which are revealed as belonging to God. His truth and love, as well as his inflexible justice, are magnified in the hiding of these things from the wise and prudent. However we may be unable to comprehend this mystery, the truth remains that "He is the Rock, his work is perfect; for all his ways are judgment; a God of truth and without iniquity, just and right is he."—Deut. xxxii. 4. In this declaration the whole of the glorious fullness of the Godhead is included. His love and mercy are not in conflict with his justice and judgment. So the psalmist says, "Justice and judgment are the habitation of thy throne; mercy and truth shall go before thy face." God alone can show the perfect harmony of these glorious perfections which are revealed nowhere but in himself.

It is strange that the natural mind of man cannot receive the direct assertion of prophecy, as applied and explained by the inspired apostle, in our text; yet men will claim to believe the Scriptures, while positively denying this doctrine, without which there could be no certainty of the fulfillment of any prophecy. Assuming, for illustration, that the wickedness of men and devils is not included in the purpose of God, then Judas might not have sold the Master for the price which was declared by Zechariah about five centuries before the traitor was born; Herod and Pilate might have rendered just judgment in shielding the sinless Jesus from the envy of his persecutors; and even the scribes and Pharisees might have confessed that he was the very Christ. Thus they would have failed to do what the hand and the counsel of God "had determined before to be done." Unquestionably, Jesus had power to command the hosts of heaven to protect him in that awful hour; but he asks, "How then shall the Scriptures be fulfilled, that thus it must be?"—Matt. xxvi. 54. If the infinite sovereignty of God, over the wicked as well as the just, be eliminated from the inspired Scriptures, there will be nothing left but the blank paper.

The impossibility of those carnal Jews believing, did not result from the fact that Esaias had written these words; but Esaias wrote the truth which God had established before he wrote. It is stated as plainly as language can express it, that the purpose of God in blinding their eyes, and hardening their heart, was, "that they should not see with their eyes, nor understand with their heart, and be converted, and I should heal them." It certainly does evince a great degree of audacity for any one to claim in the face of this assertion, that God is very desirous to have more sinners converted than he does bring to experience his healing power. If that were true, the hope of every saint must fail, for each would feel that his own case was the very extreme of the sinful race of Adam; therefore, if the desire of God was for the salvation of but one individual who was beyond the reach of his grace, each conscious sinner would at once sink in despair as that lost one. But such is not the case. Our dear Redeemer says, "All that the Father giveth me shall come to me; and him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out." It is written that Esaias said these things when he saw his glory, and spake of him. "So every one of his saints must receive the same revelation of the glory of our Redeemer, in order to speak thus assuredly of him. May every one who loves the Lord be enabled by divine grace so to speak and talk of the power and glory of our God. Resting in the belief of this testimony of Jesus, the saints may well afford to endure hardness as good soldiers of Jesus Christ, knowing that in all their afflictions they have the witness of the fellowship of his sufferings, and the support of his Spirit of grace.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

Henry Perkey, Sr., departed this life March 18th, 1889. He was born April 17th, 1805, in Fayette County, Pa. He belonged to that grand old race of men who are fast disappearing from earth. Endowed with wonderful physical powers, he was none the less strong in his convictions of right and wrong. Honest and upright himself, he was incapable of comprehending the meaner traits of humanity. He was thus more quick to detect the good than the evil in his fellow-man. In early youth he prescribed for himself a manly course to follow through life, and he was possessed of sufficient strength of character never to deviate therefrom. In 1819 the family emigrated to Ohio, settling in the southwestern part of Perry County, where for two years they underwent the hardships and privations of pioneer life. In 1821 they moved to Lancaster, Fairfield County, where they resided for many years. In 1836 he found in Miss Mary Long an estimable wife, who for nearly sixty-three years shared with him life's trials and triumphs, and still survives. In 1826, in the township of Bloom, Seneca County, Ohio, he purchased land and improved the same, where he reared a large family, and continued to reside until his removal to Michigan. Here, in Seneca Co., Ohio, to use his own language, was the brightest spot in his pilgrimage through life. Here his eight children, four sons and four daughters, were born and passed the sunny hours of childhood. It was here, he said, that he received a well-grounded hope of salvation and glorious immortality beyond this world. He was a devoted Baptist of the Primitive order. He was baptized in the fellowship of Honey Creek Church, by (I think) Elder Lewis Seitz, he being pastor of the church. The writer has been acquainted with brother Perkey for the space of forty-five years, and I think I have seldom, if ever, formed an acquaintance with any man who so adorned his profession in all things, both spiritual and temporal. His house truly was the pilgrim's home, as well as to the poor of this world. Not only the brother who has departed this life, but also the large family which he and his companion have raised, without the exception of one, are people we like to associate with. There seems to be safety in their society. They mourn, but the father has gone home, where sorrow cannot enter. The number of years since he was baptized we have no way of ascertaining, but presume to say it is half a century. Since he moved to Michigan his membership has been in the church called Columbia. He was laid away in the cemetery of the city of Charlotte, seven grandsons acting as pall-bearers. He and his wife have been living with their daughter, Mrs. Bretz, where they have had the best of care. Brother Perkey has been a constant reader of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES for perhaps forty years, and highly appreciated the contents of the same. He had been gradually failing for about three months. I visited him some two weeks before he died, and said to him, "Brother, thou hast almost the victory." He replied, "Yes, over death. Jesus gives the victory." It appeared that he welcomed death, and did not dread its sting. The morning of his death, after breakfast, he walked out on the lawn, a funeral procession passing at the same time. He returned into the house, ate some dinner, and then said that he would lie down and rest, which he did. After a short time his daughter went to his bed and found him breathing quite short, and after a few more breaths he expired. He died as he had lived, a true man, at peace with God and men.

AMOS DILLIN.

CHARLOTTE, Mich., April 12, 1889.

OUR beloved brother, Elder J. G. Jackson, departed this life Feb. 13th, 1889.

The subject of this notice was born in North Carolina, Sept. 30th, 1818. In what year he came to Indiana I am not informed. He was baptized in the fellowship of the Mt. Carmel Church in 1841. He was married to Hannah McQuary, May 6th, 1841, and to them were born six children, four having preceded him to that bourne from whence no traveler ever returns. He was liberated to preach in January, 1854, and was ordained to the full functions of the ministry in September, 1855. He was truly a faithful minister of the New Testament, holding the doctrine of absolute predestination of all things, the eternal vital oneness of Christ and his people, and that that which is born is just like that which it is born of. He has been connected with the Baptists, and all the commotions that have disturbed them here in Indiana and Kentucky, since the Mission or New School split, and would have nothing to do with those who went off from us, holding, as John did, that they were not of us; and truly he could say, with Jeremiah, "For I heard the defaming of many, fear on every side. Report, say they, and we will report it. All my familiars watched for my halting, saying, Peradventure he will be enticed, and we shall prevail against him, and we shall take our revenge on him."—Jer. xx. 10.

His disease was pleuro-pneumonia, and it was with great difficulty that he talked; but as I sat by his bedside he said to me, "Death is not what I thought it was." I said, "Brother Jackson, has it the terror or dread that you thought it had?" "No, not a bit of it."

The unworthy writer spoke on the occasion to a large concourse of neighbors and sorrowing friends. He had fought a good fight, he had finished his course, he had kept the faith; and I feel like saying, There is laid up for him a crown of righteousness.

Yours in hope of a blessed immortality,
GEORGE S. WEAVER.

FISHER'S SWITCH, Ind.

SISTER Sarah Bond departed this life Feb. 5th, 1889. She was born in Virginia, Nov. 17th, 1831, and was married to Stephen Bond in 1846. She was a member of the Primitive Baptist Church for many years. At the time of her death she was a member of Wolf Creek Church, Iron Co., Mo. She was sound in the faith of the elect of God, and her seat at church was never vacant on Saturday or Sunday when able to go. She thought it a high privilege to entertain the saints of Christ Jesus, and they all felt at home when in her house, as the writer can testify to. She worked in the vineyard of her Lord, not in order to be saved, but because she was saved by the work of Christ, who put away sin by the sacrifice of himself.

She leaves her husband, three sons and two daughters. By request, the writer made a few remarks at the sister's late home, trying to comfort the sorrowing relatives and friends by preaching Christ and him crucified; after which they took her to her last resting place.

R. S. BANKS.

DIED—Feb. 20th, 1886, in this city, Mrs. Elizabeth Spears, aged eighty-one years.

She was born April 27th, 1805, was married January 27th, 1827, and joined the Primitive Baptist Church in May, 1832. Thus another veteran of the cross has gone to try the realities of the beautiful world above. She was the consort of our aged citizen, A. C. Spears, Sr. For sixty years, and even since girlhood, she had been a devout christian. She was born in Twigg Co., Ga. For the past twenty years she has been a resident of Johnson Co., Texas. Her remains were gently consigned to the grave on Sunday afternoon. The bereaved family have the sympathy of the entire community.

ASSOCIATIONAL.

THE Delaware Old School Baptist Association will hold her next annual session, if the Lord will, with the church at Rock Springs, Lancaster Co., Pa., to begin on Wednesday before the fourth Sunday in May (22d), 1889, and continue until Friday evening following.

To the brethren and friends who contemplate attending the Delaware Association, appointed to be held with the church at Rock Springs, Lancaster Co., Pa., and to convene on Wednesday before the fourth Sunday in May, 1889, we extend a cordial welcome.

Those coming from Philadelphia and places along the line of the P., W. & B. R. R. should take the train which leaves Broad Street station, Philadelphia, at 2:02 p. m., on Tuesday. Those coming from Baltimore will leave Calvert Street station at 2:35 p. m. All will reach Perryville about 4:00 p. m., where they will change cars for Conowingo, Cecil Co., Md., where conveyances will be in waiting to take them to the neighborhood of the meeting. We hope to have with us a goodly number of our ministering brethren and lovers of the truth.

GEORGE JENKINS.

THE Delaware River Old School Baptist Association will convene, the Lord willing, with the church at Hopewell, Mercer Co., N. J., on Wednesday before the first Sunday in June (May 29th), 1889, and continue three days.

I would say to all who may attend the meeting of the association, appointed to be held with the First Baptist Church of Hopewell, that a number of trains leave New York City daily for Hopewell, Liberty Street, Bound Brook Route, and come directly to this place; also leave Philadelphia, Ninth and Green Streets, and Third and Berks Streets. Be sure and purchase tickets for Hopewell. Should any come from other directions, all will connect somewhere with the New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington Line, which passes through Hopewell village. The brethren and friends will be met at the depot, and places of entertainment prepared for them, on Tuesday afternoon, May 28th. A cordial invitation is extended to all brethren and friends who can visit us at that time.

WM. J. PURINGTON.

THE Warwick Old School Baptist Association will meet, the Lord willing, with the church at New Vernon, Orange Co., N. Y., on Wednesday before the second Sunday in June (5th), 1889, and continue in session until Friday evening following.

Those coming from the east or west by the New York, Lake Erie & Western R. R. will be met at Howell's Depot on the arrival of the way train from the west at 1:00 p. m., and on the arrival of the Orange County Express from the east, which leaves foot of Chambers St., New York, at 4:30 p. m., arriving at Howell's at 7:15 p. m., on Tuesday.

A cordial invitation is extended to all our brethren and friends to meet with us.

BENTON JENKINS.

THE Chemung Old School Baptist Association will be held, if the Lord will, with the Vaughan Hill Church, Bradford Co., Pa., on Wednesday before the third Sunday in June (12th), 1889, and continue in session the two following days.

YEARLY MEETINGS.

A YEARLY meeting will be held, if the Lord will, with New Hope Church, in Greenbush, Warren Co., Ill., beginning at four o'clock p. m. on Friday before the third Sunday in June, at which meeting, on Saturday, a council is expected to convene for the ordination of brother H. E. Puris to the gospel ministry, if thought advisable. The friends of the cause of Christ are invited.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date, this date denotes the time at which your subscription expires, and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

POETRY.

UNDER THE CROSS.

I CANNOT, cannot say,
Out of my bruised and breaking heart,
Storm-driven along a thorn-set way,
While blood-drops start
From every pore as I drag on,
"Thy will, O God, be done!"

I thought but yesterday
My will was one with God's dear will,
And that it would be sweet to say,
Whatever ill,
My happy state should smile,
"Thy will, my God, be done!"

But I was weak and wrong,
Both weak of soul and wrong of heart,
And pride in me alone was strong,
With cunning art,
To cheat me in the golden sun
To say, "God's will be done!"

O shadow, drear and cold,
That frights me out of foolish pride!
O flood, that through my bosom rolled
Its billowy tide!
I said, till ye your power made known,
"God's will, not mine, be done!"

Now faint and sore afraid,
Under my cross, heavy and rude,
My idols in the ashes laid,
Like ashes strewn,
The holy words my pale lips shun,
"O God, thy will be done!"

Pity my woes, O Lord,
And touch my will with thy warm breath;
Put in my trembling hand thy rod,
That quickens death,
That my weak faith may feel thy sun,
And say, "Thy will be done!"

HE LEADS US ON.

"AND I will bring the blind by a way that they knew not; I will lead them in paths that they have not known; I will make darkness light before them, and crooked things straight. These things will I do unto them, and not forsake them."—Isa. xlii. 16.

He leads us on,
By paths we did not know.
Upward he leads us, though our steps be slow.

Though oft we faint and falter on the way,
Though storms and darkness oft obscure
the day,
Yet when the clouds are gone
We know he leads us on.

He leads us on,
Through all the unquiet years.
Past all our dreamland hopes and doubts and fears
He guides our steps. Through all the tangled maze
Of sin, of sorrow, and o'erclouded days,
We know his will is done;
And still he leads us on.

And he at last,
After the weary strife,
After the restless fever we call life,
After the dreariness, the aching pain,
The wayward struggle which here proved in vain,
After our toils are past,
Will give us rest at last.

CORRESPONDENCE.

REISTERSTOWN, Md., May 1, 1889.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETH-REN:—For a day or two past I have been thinking much over my ministry in the past, and have been recalling some of my early impressions and thoughts concerning the preaching of the word; and now I feel like committing them to paper and sending them to you, and, if you think best, to the readers of the SIGNS. I do not write my early impressions and trials of mind concerning preaching as though I would set up a standard.
No one experience can be a standard for another; for while God, who calls and qualifies his servants for the ministry, is one, and his work one, yet no two persons are alike. In imparting his gifts to men, there is one Spirit, but a diversity of operations. I say these things, because I used to take the experience of others as a standard, and was much perplexed and troubled thereby. I want to say right here that the Scriptures are the only standard by which all gifts are to be tested; and the best evidence that a man is called to preach the word is that he does preach it.

I remember that I had very serious thoughts about preaching Christ even before I became a member of the church. To some degree this was, I think, a stumbling-block in the way of my coming to the church for membership among them. I cannot say that I feared I should have to preach, because it did not amount to a fear;
but there was a solemn, weighty feeling on my mind with regard to its importance, and also that it must be the most glorious work in which a mortal man could be engaged.
Even then I think that I recognized the fact that it was the solemn duty of every one born of God to confess him before men upon every suitable occasion. Let a believer's ability be what it might, I thought that he should use his gift, and not bury it;
but while I felt thus, and while I recognized the solemn nature of any offering of testimony in the name of the Lord, there was yet a feeling of peculiar awe when I thought of the call to the special work of the ministry of the word.

After I was received into the church at North Berwick, Maine, these thoughts and reflections returned with renewed force. I was accustomed from the first to speak in the meetings of the churches wherever I might be. I felt no special hesitancy in doing so, because it was there the custom for all the members to speak in the conference meetings and at other times. In these meetings I found much strength and encouragement; but I began to find that almost always when called upon to speak my mind would be led to some words in the Scriptures; and I would have to speak upon the truth which I thought to be connected with the text. I will say here that this is the case with me still. I cannot speak without some subject in my mind.

As I spoke on in this way I felt great peace of mind, and wished for no greater privileges. I did not think of calling this manner of speaking preaching; and I do not know that any one else called it preaching.
I felt content to speak as opportunity was given me and as liberty was afforded me. I remember often being ashamed of myself because I could speak no better; and this I feel yet.
At times I shrank from speaking in the meetings because I feared to be too forward, and older brethren often would not speak, and they had a better right to speak than I. But still, when called upon, I felt that I had no right to decline if there was anything on my mind to say; and for several months my mind traveled much in the word of God.

Now I want to speak of a few things which for years gave me much trouble of mind. During all this time I never felt to say, "I will not preach." I felt unworthy and unfit and unprepared. I felt that I had no evidence of being called to this work; but still I dared not say, "I will not preach." If I could only have the evidence that the Lord had called me to this work, I fully believed that he could and would qualify me; but I feared I was not called. I feared running before I was sent. O could I only know that this was the will of the Lord, with what joy would I go forward! Nothing seemed to me so delightful a work as to spend my life preaching the word. In after years, when I read of so many ministers of Jesus who spoke of saying "I will not preach" in their earlier trials, I feared my experience was wrong, and, as I said, it gave me much trouble of mind. I remember, some years afterward, hearing your father conversing on the cars with brother Wm. J. Pur-ington, I think; and speaking of his own ministry, he said that he never felt to say, "I will not preach," but rather longed to preach Christ, if only he could know that God had called him. I can never tell what a joy this was to me. I have never dared to say at any time since, "I will not preach." I have never felt willing to preach when other ministers were present if I could avoid it; but I have felt that it would be a grievous sin to positively refuse to speak in the name of the Lord when it was desired, and no one else would.

I had a deep sense of the importance of the work during all the months of which I am speaking. It all seemed solemn and awful to me; and this feeling has grown with the years as they passed. Whatever exercises of mind I had then still follow me. I have as great a sense of weakness, of unfitness, of lack of ability, of the solemn nature of the work, and of uncertainty whether I am a called minister of Jesus now, as I ever did in my earlier exercises of mind; yet I was willing to go forward and speak as best I could. I believed this at least was my right, and my duty, and blessed privilege.
I did not know as it could be called preaching; and this I am no more sure of now than I was then. I remember thinking many times that I need not be careful about this matter. I could receive nothing except God gave it; and whatever gift he had given he would strengthen me in using. It might be a preaching gift, and it might not. This was not my business to inquire about. I only needed to be anxious to be in my place, and to walk obediently and humbly before God.

One other thing I desire to speak of in this connection. I do not recollect that I ever felt a moment's uneasiness for fear that my gift would not be recognized among the brethren at its full value. I felt sure that if God had called me to any work, and had bestowed upon me any gift, he would assign me my place in his vineyard, and my gift would make room for itself. I think I felt content to just go on quietly speaking as I found opportunity. I did not feel that I need be anxious about what place I should fill in the future.
In all this time a deeper and still deeper sense of solemnity in the work seemed to rest upon me. My meditations at my labor by day and when wakeful by night were upon the word of God. With this opening up of beautiful things, of holy things, came also a constantly deepening sense of my personal vileness and unfitness for the work of the ministry. I was humbled daily, as I thought of the mercy and goodness of God. Many times I could only say, "Here, Lord, I am, a poor, finite creature, and a sinful worm, but do with me as thou wilt."

At last the church began to talk about giving me a license to speak. I did not see any necessity for it. I had then all the liberty I wanted; but it was represented to me that soon I was going out of the bounds of the church, and that this would show that my church approved of my gift, and were willing that I should speak elsewhere if any one desired it. Upon this view I consented to receive such a writing of recommendation as they might judge right to give me. I was not licensed "to preach," but given liberty to exercise my gift wherever it might be desired. I was satisfied with this. I should not have been satisfied had the writing been a license to preach. I did not feel any more confidence or boldness in my speaking afterward than I had before. I kept on speaking as I had before. I was often shut up, and could not come forth. I often felt that my life was so inconsistent with my trying to speak of better things, that what I said could have no weight; and this is one of my chief troubles yet. I have always felt that to preach in our lives was far better than the ablest sermonizing. Of course I had, in these two or three years before I was ordained, many ups and downs that I cannot recall or speak of here. I nearly always felt that my speaking was poor, and yet I desired to leave even that in the hands of God. I sometimes felt willing to be small, if only I might feed and comfort the Master in some one of his disciples.

I recall some dear old brethren and sisters who stood by me, and counseled and advised and strengthened me. They knew I was weak, and they dealt tenderly with me. They did not criticise me, but lovingly held up my hands. I recall with deepest tenderness of feeling Deacon Johnson, brother Butler and brother Hall, with others of the church at North Berwick, who were friends and brethren indeed. As I think over all these things, my mouth is closed from much criticism of others who are beginning to speak in the name of the Lord. Remembering my own small beginnings and small increase, I cannot throw stumbling-blocks in the way of any who feel called upon to bear testimony in the name of the Lord. I have never felt that the eyes of the Lord were dim, so that he could not keep the unbidden out of the ministry. Surely we may trust him to close the door as well as to open it. If it is sure that he will call his servants out, it is also sure that he can guard against those whom he has not called to the work. To say the least, I think that a little anxiety on our part to encourage is as needful as so much anxiety to discourage. I have desired to deal as gently with beginners as I was dealt with by the old brethren whom I have named. I have much desired that I might never throw a stumbling-block in any brother's way who has even one talent which his Lord has committed to him. I have felt to say, "If his speaking does me no good, it may others;" and if it be so, in God's name let us bid him go on. If his gift be not preaching, it may be exhortation, or something else; and whatever it is, the Lord has given it to him, and the Lord has need of him and it.

After my ordination I was soon called to take charge of the churches where I am still living. I felt that I had but few pastoral gifts. Yet my heart was drawn to the people here; and here I found true and steadfast friends, dear brethren and sisters. Looking back over the more than twenty years that I have lived in their midst, I realize that they have done more for me than I have for them. I see great weakness and great ignorance on my part, and there have been many failures. I have never been able to become such a pastor as I ought to be—as any pastor ought to be. When I first thought of taking charge of the churches I felt that to go into the pulpit and preach Sunday after Sunday was but a small part of a pastor's duty. To visit the sick and the bereaved and the mourner, to speak to those inquiring the way to Zion, to seek out those who might desire christian conversation, and yet be too timid to say so, to encourage the humble ones to bear their Savior's yoke in baptism, and then in all the ordinances of the church—all these things I believed to be a pastor's duty. The work seemed very great, and I was not sufficient for it; and I never have been sufficient for it. Of late I feel more insufficient than ever. Can I be allowed to say, with the apostle, "Who is sufficient for these things?"

Brethren, I leave these retrospective thoughts with you. In all this way the Lord has guided my steps, I am sure. I have gone as it was appointed for me; and so it must be a right way, and meant for good in some way.

I remain, as ever, your brother in a precious hope,

F. A. CHICK.

GHEENT, Ky., Feb. 17, 1889.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—It is written, "And straightway the father of the child cried out, and said with tears, Lord, I believe; help thou mine unbelief."—Mark ix. 24.

Sister Lydia Alexander, of Utica, N. Y., has asked my views in regard to what is taught in the above quoted text, and requests that whatever I may write on that subject may be submitted to the editors of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES; and if they believe that it is worthy of a place in that paper, she desires it published.

It will be remembered that there was a man in that country who had a son that had a dumb spirit. That man said, "Master, I have brought unto thee my son, which hath a dumb spirit. And wheresoever he taketh him, he teareth him; and he foameth and gnasheth with his teeth, and pineth away: and I spake to thy disciples that they should cast him out, and they could not." After our Lord had reproved his disciples for their seeming want of confidence in the power bestowed on them by him, he said unto the father of that child, "If thou canst believe, all things are possible to him that believeth." Then comes the text, which is replete with meaning and comfort to the afflicted saints, and has been so since it was written. It is evident that the wonderful miracles wrought by our Lord were not merely for the purpose of demonstrating to the natural mind his power: if so, all who witnessed the healing of that poor and greatly afflicted boy would have believed; yea, and all others who witnessed the manifestations of his power to heal the sick, raise the dead, and feed thousands, until their hunger was abated, with a few loaves and fishes, would have believed, and would have cried out, "Lord, I believe; help thou mine unbelief." But they did not, because the natural mind receiveth not the things of the Spirit; and the carnal mind is enmity against God. The failure to understand his wonderful character, as he in whom all the fullness of the Godhead dwelt bodily, was because they were natural, and were looking upon him by their natural vision. But, my dear sister, you will remember that those wonderful miracles wrought by our Lord while on earth had a spiritual meaning, or a spiritual import. That afflicted child had a dumb and deaf spirit. So spiritually have all the children of the first Adam. Eyes they have, and see not; ears, and hear not; hearts, and do not understand. The apostle says, "As it is written, There is none righteous, no, not one; there is none that understandeth; there is none that seeketh after God. They are all gone out of the way, they are together become unprofitable; there is none that doeth good, no, not one. Their throat is an open sepulchre; with their tongues they have used deceit; the poison of asps is under their lips; whose mouth is full of cursing and bitterness. Their feet are swift to shed blood; destruction and misery are in their ways; and the way of peace have they not known: there is no fear of God before their eyes."—Rom. iii. 10-18. The condition naturally of that poor and afflicted son is an apt figure of the condition spiritually of all those whom the apostle so forcibly describes; for they are dead in trespasses and sin. He was dead to all natural enjoyments. They are dead to all spiritual enjoyments. But our Lord by his mighty power cast that spirit out of him, and restored him to the enjoyment of natural things. He by that power was made alive. When the spirit came out of him he was as one dead. "But Jesus took him by the hand, and lifted him up, and he arose."

Our Lord said, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, The hour is coming, and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God; and they that hear shall live." They who were described by the apostle were dead to all spiritual things. Jesus says, "I am the way, the truth and the life." As they were without spiritual life, they must remain in that condition unless that life be given them by one that had the power. None other but Jesus that ever trod the green plains of earth had the power to give eternal life. But he said, "I give unto them eternal life, and they shall never perish." He gives eternal life to his people, because they are dead to the law, and their life is hid with Christ in God; and they are assured that when he shall appear, they also shall appear with him in glory. That poor and afflicted boy was dead to all the enjoyments of home and friends; but when he was restored by the power of Jesus, he could enter the home circle with perhaps greater joy than any others of the household. That, no doubt, my dear sister, was your condition when you heard the voice of the Son of God, and was lifted up. Then you could enter the home circle, the church of the Lord Jesus Christ, with great and inexpressible joy; for you were healed of the malady of sin; you were made spiritually alive from the dead, and enabled to recognize and know the members of that circle, and to rejoice with them in your cleansing. Then your joy was perfect, for it was in Jesus, and in all the household of faith. Then you, with all that household, cried out, and said with tears, "Lord, I believe; help thou mine unbelief." These tears were the outpouring of hearts filled with that precious faith which works by love, implanted in your heart by the power of God in your regeneration from under the direful curses and afflictions of sin, which are so aptly prefigured by the condition of that afflicted boy. Then you had the glorious assurance that you had passed from death unto life, because you loved the brethren. You loved all the members of that family circle. You then in fond hope was lifted above the vanities of earth, and enabled by faith to behold some of the beauties and glories of the inheritance of the saints, and in joy and in rejoicing to say with one anciently, "I know that my Redeemer liveth."

But how often the dear saints, when rejoicing in the manifestations of the power, goodness and mercy of God in bringing from death unto life the objects of his mercy, are made with that father to say, "Lord, I believe; help thou mine unbelief." They then witness in their own hearts the evidences of that precious faith which was given them in days perhaps long passed. Yes, they witness it from the lips of those little, trembling ones that have been lifted up by the precious hand of Jesus. Those little, trembling ones who in the sweet accents of the new-born love of God, and in abiding faith in his power to heal and make alive the objects of his mercy, tell of the sorrows and afflictions that sin brought upon them; yes, tell how, like that poor boy, they pined away; how, when they were healed, they were as one dead—dead to the law, but made alive in Christ; lifted up from that state of death, to a life of joy and peace in the Holy Ghost; a life in which they were no longer to wander among the tombs (the evidences of death); a life in which they were no more to be afflicted and torn by that deaf and dumb spirit; for then they knew that it had no more power over them to make them the slaves of sin and rebellion against God, and unbelief in his power to heal the poor, sin-sick soul. But often the fear of the return of that deaf and dumb spirit that once enslaved them causes them to cry out, "Lord, I believe; help thou mine unbelief."

But, my dear sister, you ask me to give my views especially upon the last clause of that text, "Help thou mine unbelief." I realize that my views would be less than dust and vanity if they were not in strict accord with the teachings of the holy Scriptures and the experience of the dear saints. Those Scriptures are given by the inspiration of God; and the apostle says, "The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit that we are the children of God." John says, "He that believeth on the Son of God, hath the witness in himself: he that believeth not God, hath made him a liar; because he believeth not the record that God gave of his Son." That record is the sacred Scriptures. Our Lord said, "They are they which testify of me." If that record is disbelieved by any, they have not the witness within them that they are the children of God. But when the dear saints have the witness within them that God is true, they have two witnesses to sustain their faith, and both those witnesses are given them of God. Their prayer is that God may give them a greater understanding, a clearer view of his great and wonderful character. They realize daily their ignorance of the glorious attributes of our God, and the weakness of their faith in him. Hence their cry is, "Lord, I believe; help thou mine unbelief." If the dear saints could continually have before their spiritual vision the superlative glories that shine in that name called Wonderful, they would soar far away from sublunary things, and be like that man of whom the apostle speaks, "I knew a man in Christ above fourteen years ago (whether in the body, I cannot tell; or whether out of the body, I cannot tell: God knoweth); such a one caught up to the third heaven. And I knew such a man (whether in the body or out of the body, I cannot tell: God knoweth); how that he was caught up into paradise, and heard unspeakable words, which it is not lawful for a man to utter." I have no doubt the old apostle was telling his own experience. But the wonderful things there revealed to him were not in after years before him, for he often speaks of his body. In that sweet and precious vision he knew nothing of the body, but with his spiritual ears was listening to heavenly words, spoken in the paradise of our God. Neither mortal tongue nor the sainted lips of the redeemed can ever utter those words while they are clothed with mortality. Those words are the language of the quickened soul, when God shines in them, to give them the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ. Although the saints may by faith be enabled to rejoice in the quickening power of God's Spirit, yet they often cry out, in the language of David, "Restore unto me the joy of thy salvation, and uphold me with thy free Spirit." He had said, "He brought me up also out of a horrible pit, out of the miry clay, and set my feet upon a rock, and established my goings. And he hath put a new song in my mouth, even praise unto our God." After experiencing these wonderful manifestations of the goodness and power of God, his prayer was, "Restore unto me the joy of thy salvation." He craves more of that faith which works by love, and in the language of that mourning father could say, "Lord, I believe; help thou mine unbelief." O yes, unfold to me more and more of thy great and glorious character, teach me to know more and more of the preciousness of redeeming love; then the joy of thy salvation will be restored to me, and unbelief will cease to obtrude its horrid form before my spiritual vision. Although Peter tells the dear saints that they are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the last time, yet he says to them, "Wherein ye greatly rejoice, though now for a season, if need be, ye are in heaviness through manifold temptations." In that heaviness, amidst those temptations, their prayer is, "Help thou mine unbelief." Surely those strangers to whom Peter was writing had strong assurance that they were the children of God, and heirs to an inheritance which was incorruptible and undefiled; yet they were in heaviness through manifold temptation, that the trial of their faith might be found unto praise and honor and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ. In all the trials of their faith through which God's dear people are called to pass, they often in sorrow pray for greater faith, saying, "Lord, I believe; help thou mine unbelief."

I have just read in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES of the 13th inst. a profoundly interesting and instructive article from the pen of Elder Wm. J. Purington, in which he says, "I think I have never doubted the truth of that inspired declaration of the angel of the Lord, since I used it for a text, but have doubted many times whether I am one of the redeemed of the Lord." When those doubts arose in his mind, no doubt his prayer was, "Lord, I believe; help thou mine unbelief." Ah, my dear sister, if that man of God could feed the church of God, as you and I know he has often done, yea, if he could go forth from 1849 to the present time proclaiming the everlasting gospel, and thereby comfort and feed the humble poor of the flock of our great Shepherd, and then say, "I have doubted many times whether I am one of the redeemed of the Lord," surely such a little and ignorant one as the writer of these feeble and rambling thoughts knows himself to be, knowing that for nearly fifty-eight years that has been his mournful experience, might take courage in his weary way, and say from the deepest recesses of his heart, "Lord, I believe; help thou mine unbelief." Ah, my dear sister, no doubt the times have been with both you and brother Purington when you could use the language of that man that was caught up to paradise, and say, "I heard words that were not lawful for a man to utter." When led into the glorious light of Zion, by the power of God's regenerating Spirit, your poor language was too feeble to express the joy that pervaded your inmost being. It was not within your power to describe with mortal tongue the ineffable beauties and glories that were revealed to your spiritual vision, when you were enabled to say, "Mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of hosts." But while on earth, the saints are in a desert land, in a land where there are no springs of living water to satiate their thirst when they hunger and thirst after righteousness. O no; this sin-cursed world can never afford them spiritual joys. It often occurs with them that the healing rays of the Sun of righteousness are obscured by the dark clouds of a sin-polluted world. Then they cry out, "By night on my bed I sought him whom my soul loveth: I sought him, but I found him not." The bride could then have appropriately said, "Lord, I believe; help thou mine unbelief." This truly is the road that all the dear saints are traveling while on these low grounds of sin and sorrow; and may you all ever have the light of God's regenerating grace shining in your hearts, enabling you to pray for an increase of that precious faith which works by love, is the prayer of this little one.

H. COX.

ELMIRA, N. Y., April 24, 1889.

ELDER WM. L. BEEBE—DEAR BROTHER:—As you had to listen to me while in the great darkness, I now feel as if I would like to tell you a little of the light; and I wish to speak somewhat of the darkness, that the light may be more manifest that it was wrought in God. About three years ago, taking a retrospective view of the way the Lord had led me, and the many deep and sore trials I had passed through, I involuntarily said, "What next?" At once came this answer, "Behold, I will shew you what great things thou shalt yet suffer for my name's sake." I give it as it came to me. I then felt I was to be given into the power of the wicked one, to be sifted as wheat. Yet I could not hear, "But I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not," though I listened intently for it; and, indeed, my faith never was so near being wrecked, seemingly to me. It seems a little strange now, as I think of it, that about the same length of time I was on the mount of blessedness, without a doubt, with the full assurance of faith, as I have written before, so about the same space of time I should be under the power of the evil one. I did not know what was coming, but it was soon made known to me, when the absolute predestination of all things came to be agitated. I thought I believed in the predestination of all things, but it had never come to me before that the evil was included in the "all things." I could not, if I would, portray the awful depths I was led into, or the terrible sufferings I endured. I will only speak of one phase as my mind was led. Many things in nature come by contrast, light and darkness, heat and cold. "Who can stand before his cold?" Or extreme heat, who can endure it? Then perfect black and purest white are perfect contrast; also heaven and hell. If the miseries of the lost are in comparison to the happiness of the blessed, what must it be to be there? I carried a lost world for a time, if such a thing were possible. It so seemed to me. Being of a highly sensitive and imaginative nature, with deep sympathy, I was capable of the keenest suffering, and my pity and compassion were very great for the lost. I saw only the God of power. It was not that he did not have a right to rule as he pleased; as he had all power; but where was the justice (as we understand the meaning of the word) to create helpless beings for such suffering? Heaven and hell were both from the beginning; and whether absolute or permissive, made no difference now to me. Both were, and subjects were made for each. My heart was so hard that I could not pray, and I thought I never could even try again. What was the use? I verily thought it was not possible for me ever again to see God in the exalted, glorious and adorable character I had been wont to see him at times. How I wished I had died before I ever saw such a time as this! As these thoughts were passing through my mind, I heard in a very impressive way, as if spoken in an audible voice, "Can the creature have a greater sense of justice than the Creator?" I at once said, "No, it could not be." I was not so severely tried more, but was not released. Hitherto in the trial the Lord Jesus had been out of sight; but now I found myself invariably separating the God of power from the Lord Jesus. But one day I had a glimpse of the Savior in his pity and compassion, and the words again came, "Can the creature have a greater sense of pity and compassion than the Creator?" O what a revelation! The tender, merciful, loving Jesus was the Creator of all things; and I saw I had not seen nor understood it aright, and that mortals could not comprehend the awfully sublime Being in this creation; for in the awful depths I had been in, there arose questions in my mind which no mortal could answer, and I was willing then to leave it with the One who alone does understand it. I have since been enabled to say, "In wisdom hast thou made them all." Thus gradually I was released from the power of the evil one, and one day the words kept repeating in my mind, "The days of thy mourning are ended." I could not think what they meant, till the gathering began. I stood, in the hardness of my heart, looking for judgment, and expecting nothing else, when lo, mercy-drops fell, then such showers of blessings, that my soul was humbled within me, when I remembered all my rebellion and sin. I was melted into such contrition, prostrate I fell at his feet, and there my guilt confessed, while in great gentleness and tenderness came the words, "I, even I, am he that comforteth you." Then I could but feel that the weakest lambs have the largest share of the tender Shepherd's care.

In the midst of the trial came these words, "For a small moment have I forsaken thee, but with great mercies will I gather thee." I could not, in the hardness of my heart, receive them as for me; but with what mercy has he gathered me! Also, in the SIGNS, volume fifty-five, page eight, under head of "Extracts," I read, as if written for me alone, so powerfully was I impressed at the time it came, that it would all be verified to me. I will speak of the second paragraph, where in temporal mercies recently, where great interests were at stake, and every human prop I had looked to for advice and counsel was taken away, and I had to look to the Lord alone. The whole paragraph was literally verified in a most wonderful manner. The strength he gave me to trust him alone, and the assurance from his written word, was truly wonderful; and he accomplished what no earthly power could have done. But none the less, yea, far more wonderful, has the first paragraph been verified in a spiritual way. I have realized the Holy Spirit's presence and power as never before, and been enabled to drink deep from the wells of salvation. He hath brought me into a wealthy place. "I will make mention of thy righteousness, even of thine only." While I lay resting on my bed, my soul arose on high; and while musing, the fire burned, and I soon found I had royal company, and was looking to see if I was properly robed for such company. I felt I had not on a robe of pride and vanity, for I felt too much humbled. I was not fit for such honor. I did not have on the robe of self-righteousness, for I was too unworthy to have such an One to come under my roof. I saw I must have on the robe he wrought for me, even me, and the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, or he would not abide with me as he did; and instead of being entertainer, I was being entertained. Such a royal feast, rich with heaven's choicest dainties, grace abounding to the chief of sinners. "He brought me into his banqueting house, and his banner over me was love."

"In the midst of affliction my table is spread with blessings unmeasured. My cup runneth over. O what can I ask of thy providence more?" "As healing balms from bruised flowers flow," so out of my bruised and contrite heart may the perfume of praise and thanksgiving ascend for the matchless goodness of my covenant-keeping God. The rain is just as necessary as the sun. As much deeper in the awful depths as I had to go, so far more glorious and adorable than ever before has he appeared unto me. But how futile to try to express all the soul feels when in the presence of the glorious Redeemer, where is fullness of joy, and where there is no place for anything, but to silently wonder and adore. A minister of God once said that although he had tried to, yet he felt he had never preached up to a certain time, when he was liberated. So I felt in regard to prayer. It seemed as if I never had access before. At one time recently, having an especially melting time at the throne of grace, I was hushed for a moment to hear, "Ask of the Father what thou wilt: it shall be given thee." I for myself could only ask to lie at his feet, to learn of him, to know no will but his. It was the most unquestioning assurance of the Holy Spirit's presence I ever had; for I never would have dared to think such a thought of myself. Having been through the fire, I am not cheated in the sun to say, "Thy will be done," but am being taught of him to say, "Thy sweet will, Lord, thy sweet will," even though that will remove all of earth I most prize. While Jesus lives, I cannot be alone. "I shall behold his face in righteousness: I shall be satisfied, when I awake, with thy likeness."

Dear brethren, I have felt thus freely to unburden my strongly impressed mind to you. I hope I have not wearied you. May heaven's choicest blessings rest on you in your arduous labors, and all who have the conduct of the SIGNS.

In christian love,

C. M. HERRICK.

"BUT our God is in the heavens: he hath done whatsoever he hath pleased."—Psalm cxv. 3.

In the midst of many of the sons of Adam's fallen and depraved race I have lately been associated; and among the subjects discussed, the subject of God's unlimited power has been prominent, and with almost a single exception man's freedom to do good or evil has been advocated by those who are connected with Arminian organizations. Although the Presbyterians, and perhaps some others, have in their confessions of faith expressed good sentiments in a few items, showing from Scripture the predestination of God concerning all things and all events, in perhaps as strong language as any Baptist could desire, yet but few of them are tenacious for this principle; and the few who pretend to believe in the all-prevailing power of God give heed to and mingle with teachers of the most erroneous doctrines in practice among men.

There has been a great deal said through the SIGNS about the "absolute" predestination of all things, and many portions of Scripture have been cited as conclusive evidence that God's predestination relates to all time, all events, and all things. Yet I am aware that very many Primitive Baptists reject the word absolute; first, because it is not found in the Bible; and lastly, because its meaning as used in connection with predestination, as they understand it, makes God the author or beginner of sin. Also, that the foreknowledge of God is quite a different thing from predestination. There is one place, that of Romans viii. 29, which seems to favor this sentiment. But even admitting it, in this place, it is only one step removed from predestination; and both here, no doubt, have special reference to the Lord's people, and the language sets forth his abundant care for them. If we are enabled to receive the strong expressions of holy writ in child-like simplicity, we shall be found contending for the faith once delivered unto the saints, without questioning any of the great acts of Jehovah as being under the law of reason, or any other law given unto men; for they that are under the law shall be judged by the law. Now the saints that believe in Jesus as their Savior do not desire to be judged by the law of Moses, because they are not under that law, but are under grace; and by grace they want to be saved, because they can be justified only by the law of faith. Even here we see that we lack proper discernment in dethroning our Lord and Master, and bringing him under the authority of his own law, a creature of time. Some have referred to the wicked acts of holy men of old as proof of a common fallacy among men that holy men can sin with impunity. But did God approve of them? We think not; but he loved them notwithstanding their sins, and chastened them for their transgressions.

The Scripture at the head of this article is in striking contrast with the expression of the heathen, who would say, "Where is now their God?"

"But our God is in the heavens." What a power this language conveys to a sensible sinner, who is born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible. Our God, who is infinite, all-wise, immutable, omnipresent and invisible, "is in the heavens." All human approaches, avenues or lanes cannot reach him or unfold his designs; neither can his works be known by eye, ear, or the heart of man. Natural discernment can comprehend natural things, but it takes spiritual discernment to see or understand spiritual things. But we must bear in mind that it is by revelation, which indicates special work; and only such things are revealed as the Lord of lords and King of kings is pleased to reveal; for he has the key, and he alone has the power to open, and none shall shut; and he shall shut, and none shall open. We know in part, because it has pleased God to so order it for our good. Often it would be differently with us if we possessed the power to bring God under obligation to us. We then would be like many wise men of modern times, who are not satisfied with a knowledge of a part of God's designs, but would acquire all knowledge of all things, and reverse the testimony of inspiration, and say, "It is no mystery." How well satisfied we should be when we reflect upon the solid truth that "Our God is in the heavens: he hath done whatsoever he hath pleased." "None can stay his hand, or say unto him, What doest thou? All the inhabitants of the earth are reputed as nothing. He doeth according to his will in the army of heaven, and among the inhabitants of earth."—Dan. iv. "Whatsoever the Lord pleased, that did he in heaven, and in earth, in the seas, and all deep places."—Psalm cxxxv. 6. "The nations are as a drop of a bucket, as the small dust of the balance;" also, "less than nothing, and vanity." "He taketh up the isles as a very little thing."—Isa. xl. "When he giveth quietness, who can make trouble?"—Job xxxiv. 29. "He taketh away, who can hinder him? Who will say unto him, What doest thou?"—Job ix. "I form the light, and create darkness; I make peace, and create evil: I the Lord do all these things."—Isa. xlv. 7. "Shall a trumpet be blown in the city, and the people not be afraid? Shall there be evil in a city, and the Lord hath not done it?"—Amos iii. 6. "He declareth unto man what is his thought."—Amos iv. 13. "Wherefore doth the way of the wicked prosper?" "Thou hast planted them, yea, they have taken root, they grow [or go on], yea, they bring forth fruit: thou art near in their mouth, and far from their reins."—Jer. xii. 1, 2. "They that provoke God are secure; into whose hand God bringeth abundantly." "In whose hand is the soul of every living thing, and the breath of all mankind."—Job xii. 10.

The Lord also says that the wicked were created for the day of evil; that the wrath of man shall praise him, and the remainder of wrath he will restrain. Of the wicked he declares that he will send them strong delusions, that they may believe a lie, and all be damned. Jesus taught that not a sparrow falls to the ground without our heavenly Father, and that the very hairs of the saints' heads are numbered. Aside from the Scriptures, many will argue that God does not notice small or "unimportant things," but only the most prominent and important things. But I think the Bible furnishes full and complete evidence of his providence over all time, and all events, and all things.

What I have written may be of but little profit if it should be printed; but I wish to quote a little from the apostle, which I think accords with the Old Testament quotations. "For of him, and through him, and to him, are all things: to whom be glory forever. Amen."—Rom. xi. 36. "For it became him, for whom are all things, and by whom are all things."—Heb. ii. 10. "For by him were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible; whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers: all things were created by him, and for him; and he is before all things, and by him all things consist."—Col. i. 16, 17.

As ever, in fellowship,

MOUNT BRIDGES, Ont., April 3, 1889.

G. BEEBE'S SONS.—DEAR BRETHREN:—Having in my possession several letters from the late Elder Thomas McColl, of the township of Dunwich, Ontario, I think an extract from one written in March, 1864, on the kingdom of God's dear Son, would be interesting to many of the readers of the SIGNS, especially those in Ontario, who had the privilege of being personally acquainted with him, and in whose hearts there still lingers a grateful remembrance, not only as to his christian humility, but also as an able defender of the truth.

I have been a subscriber for the SIGNS since 1858. For about two years brother J. C. Bateman (now deceased) and I took it together; then we each subscribed separately, and so I have continued it ever since. I look upon such a medium of correspondence as a great privilege to the people of God in their pilgrimage here below, and many times I have been greatly edified in reading communications from those I have never seen in the flesh, and most likely never shall. It was twenty years last October since I united with the Covenanted Baptist Church of Canada; and while acknowledging my many infirmities, my brethren have still borne with me, and the grace of God has sustained me through many trials and temptations, and I have been ready to say with David, when he "said in his heart, I shall now perish one day by the hand of Saul."

I think, if I know myself, that my desire is for the welfare of Zion. "Pray for the peace of Jerusalem: they shall prosper that love thee," says the psalmist.

And now, brethren Beebe, I shall conclude with my best wishes for your welfare and the prosperity of the SIGNS, and that it may be continued both ably and fearlessly in the defense of truth.

Yours in tribulation,

JOHN THOMPSON.

DUNWICH, March, 1864.

THE kingdom of God's dear Son is a kingdom of grace. He sitteth on the throne of grace. What a crowd of needy petitioners every moment surround his throne; what urgent wants and woes to redress; what cutting griefs and sorrows to assuage; what countless prayers to hear; what broken hearts to bind up; what wounded consciences to heal; what earnest prayers to grant; what stubborn foes to subdue; what guilty fears to quell; what clemency, what kindness, what long-suffering, what compassion, what mercy, what love, and yet what power and authority, does this almighty Sovereign display. No circumstances are too trifling, no petitioner too insignificant, no case too hard, no difficulty too great, no sinner too importunate, no beggar too ragged, no bankrupt too penniless, no debtors too insolvent for him to notice and to relieve. Sitting on his throne of grace, his all-seeing eye views all, his almighty hand grasps all, and his loving heart embraces all whom the Father gave him by covenant, whom he himself redeemed by his blood, and whom the blessed Spirit has quickened into life by his invincible power. The hopeless, the helpless, the outcasts, whom no man careth for, the tossed with tempest and not comforted, the ready to perish, the mourners in Zion, the bereaved widow, the wailing orphan, the sick of body, and still more sick in heart, the racked with pain, the furred consumptive, the wrestler with death's last struggle. O what crowds of pitiable objects surround his throne, and all needing a look from his eye, a word from his lips, a smile from his face. The kingdom of God is a kingdom of life. A living king needs living subjects. The dead in sin, the dead in profession, have neither part nor lot in the matter. "Death cannot celebrate thee." "The living, the living, shall praise thee, as I do this day" (Hezekiah). Jesus is "the way, and the truth, and the life," and as such says to his people, "Because I live, ye shall live also." This life quickens, animates and sustains the church of Christ as she comes from the wilderness, leaning on her Beloved. Thence come all her union and communion with her risen Head. It is a kingdom of light, of liberty, of love, of peace and holiness. But its peculiar characteristic and chief glory is that it is an inward kingdom. "The kingdom of God is within you." "The King's daughter is all glorious within." It is righteousness, peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost. It is "not in word, but in power." It requires a new, spiritual birth to see it and to enter into it. It is entered into through much tribulation. It suffereth violence, and is taken by force. And when received in faith, it is a "kingdom that cannot be moved." It is therefore not a kingdom of outward grandeur, but of inward grace; not of temporal majesty, but of spiritual authority; not of visible pomp and show, but of invisible influence. It is a holy, heavenly, spiritual reign of the Lord of life in a broken heart, a contrite spirit, and a tender conscience. Happy are those who are illuminated from above and made alive unto God by divine life, and not to be imposed upon by the baubles of an empty religion.

THOMAS MCCOLL.

PENN YAN, N. Y., March 11, 1889.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—As the time is at hand for me to renew my subscription for the SIGNS, I will write a few humble thoughts of what I hope have been the Lord's dealings with me, a poor worm of the dust. I have no bright experience to tell of, as most of the brethren, and am therefore many times lost in doubts and fears of not being one of the sheep. It was in the winter of 1885 that I hope the Lord made known unto me what a great sinner I was. It was at the house of brother May, after evening meeting was over with. I felt greatly troubled on account of the many sins which arose before me like mountains. I went to my bed, but could not sleep. All that night I cried and mourned, and could not find rest. Thus I went on till in the fall of 1886, when there was a two days meeting at brother May's house. The next day after the meeting, as I was at work, these words came with great force to my mind, "Blessed are they that mourn, for they shall be comforted." "Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled." My burden seemed to have disappeared, and I saw Jesus as my perfect Savior and Redeemer, and was made to praise and glorify his holy name. I longed to tell every one what Jesus had done for my poor soul; but here I was stopped as by some one saying, "How do you know that you are not deceived?" I did not mention my great joy to any one, for fear I might be wrong. I loved the doctrine the Old School Baptists preached, and to hear them talk about their wonderful Redeemer, who saves those who are not able to save themselves. I thought if I ever joined any church, it will be the Old School Baptist; but I did not feel that I would ever be worthy of a place among them. I had often been wishing to go to Burdett to meeting, and when the first opportunity came I did go. If I remember right, it was in the month of November. I got there in time for the church meeting on Saturday; and when Elder Vail had told his sorrows and joys, he had told my experience far better than I will ever be able to tell it. When the brethren and sisters got through telling of the Lord's goodness and mercy to them, brother Vail asked me if I had anything I would like to say. My heart seemed too full to say anything; but I did say a few words of what I hope had been the Lord's dealings with me. The church received me, and the next day, Sunday, I was baptized. I felt that to be the happiest day of my life.

I will now close this imperfect letter, and leave it to your better judgment. If published, please correct mistakes. May the Lord keep and guide the editors of the SIGNS, and all its readers, is the prayer of your unworthy brother, if one at all,
ALFRED JENSEN.

PLYMOUTH, Ill., Jan. 19, 1889.

DEAR BROTHER IN THE LORD:—I feel like I wanted to write a little about our dear little church called Providence, in Hancock County, Ill., as I have not seen anything written and printed about it, and the precious meetings we have been having; but I feel my weakness and inability, and it almost makes me tremble to attempt; for I am the least of all creatures on earth that ever ventured to claim a place among the Old Baptists. I wonder if there ever was another so tossed, as it were, with all manner of fears and doubts, ups and downs, as I am. Truly I want to be more pure; but I find that in me, that is, in my flesh, dwells no good thing. But we have some sweet meetings that I enjoy very much. Brother Purres, of Greenbush, Ill., was here, and preached at Providence in October. It seemed to revive us very much, and I think I can truly say we all went home feeling it was good to be there. I took my old father in a buggy, and went. On our way back we were talking about the good meeting we had had. He said to me, "Well, Belle, it seems to me I enjoyed this meeting more than any I have been to for a long time. But it may be that I was better prepared to receive it." After he was gone, there came one by the name of Dobbs, from Clay County, Ill. After he had gone, there came another from Raymond, Ill., by the name of Querry. I went to hear them all, and never was more delighted, as I felt their preaching was the sincere milk of the word. Our hearts have been made to rejoice by the coming of those ministers among us, as we believe, commissioned by our King to preach the gospel in its purity among us. We desire a continuance of their christian and friendly visits; for there are many like myself who love the precious word of truth. Their preaching was in demonstration of the Spirit. It has caused me to have pleasant recollections of them. I told them we had such a good time altogether, I was afraid that after it was over with me I would have a cold season for awhile. And sure enough, at our meeting on the first of this month, on Saturday, we had no preacher, and I felt very badly about it. Well, I can hardly tell how I did feel; but as near as I can tell, I felt like I had been on a long journey, without food or drink. I was so disappointed that I did not enjoy the meeting. I saw a letter from my sister, Mrs. E. J. Grove, wondering if any one ever was so disappointed as they were when they had no preacher. I think I can sympathize with her, for I think we were. But on Sunday a few of us went back, and our dear young brother Frazee was there, which made us feel some better, and that they had not forgotten us altogether. Our dear old pastor, brother Warren, was not able to come, as he is old and feeble, and cannot go in all kinds of weather. He is pastor of four churches. Although his constitution is much impaired, the call seems as yet equally binding. May the Lord bless him, for the advancement of his gospel, and for the comfort of his people, the remnant who are so much hated by the world.

MRS. BELLE IRWIN.

CHESTER, Connecticut.

THESE words, dear brethren, "Comfort ye my people," came to me very forcibly upon emerging from a season of darkness. I had been for some time in a state of indifference and worldliness, so low down that the evidence that I was really a child of God seemed very faint. I would think of our Savior's words, "Ye are not of the world," and would think, If I am really not of this world, why am I so worldly, so little like a child of grace? And I feared that I did not hate sin as I ought to, and as I would if I were really a christian. But the Comforter came, and then I could see to what a depth I had fallen, and what a poor, miserable creature I was when left to myself. "For if when we were enemies we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son, much more, being reconciled, we shall be saved by his life." I felt that I was once more reconciled, and amply repaid for my season of darkness. "Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning." When we feel the presence of our Lord, then our troubles are forgotten for the time, and we feel glad that we have been passing through them, and are counted worthy to suffer for his sake. "For whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth." "If we suffer with him, we shall also reign with him." When after a season of coldness and indifference the blessed Sun of righteousness has again shined in our hearts, how much better we can give glory to God. We feel then that there is no good in us, and it is entirely of his own loving-kindness that he remembers ours sins and iniquities no more. When we have sinned against heaven and in his sight, and deserve nothing but wrath, what do we hear him say? "Bring forth the best robe, and put it on him: and put a ring on his hand, and shoes on his feet: and bring hither the fatted calf, and kill it, and let us eat and be merry: for this my son was dead, and is alive again: he was lost, and is found." It seems very presumptuous in me to try to say anything to comfort God's people, when I am so little and so needy myself; but as I said, those words came to me, and would not leave me. I did not want to write, and felt that I could not think of the least thing to write; but I did not feel easy until I had resolved to take my pen and paper the next day, and if God should bring anything to my mind to write it. I wish I could tell you how much I enjoy reading the SIGNS. It contains the pure language, unmixed with worldliness, and is just what we need to help and encourage us, especially we, who have no preaching, and not one Old School Baptist near, that we know of.

You may do as you please with this.

NELLIE H. HALLOCK.

LEBANON, Ohio, Nov. 4, 1888.

DEAR BRETHREN:—As I feel impelled to write a few of my thoughts during my affliction, I thought it might be some comfort to some poor, weak creature like myself. It is with the greatest reluctance I undertake to write, as I feel my utter inability to write anything connectedly or intelligibly for any one to read. But the Spirit helps our infirmities, and without his help I know it will be in vain to try. I have been prostrated with a nervous disease, and perhaps some that read this may have some sympathy, as they know, if they have been afflicted in that way, the sufferings that attend that disease. When I was first taken sick I did desire the Lord to fill my heart with joy and peace in believing. I had been living by faith and hope, but now I wanted to realize more of the joy of that salvation. My soul looked around to the streams where I had been used to drink, but now I could not draw any comfort from anything I could think of. The former streams were all dry, and not a drop for my thirsty soul could I find in all the streams where I had received comfort before; but, as the hymn says.

"When all created streams are dry,
Thy fullness is the same."

So I hope the Savior was leading me away from all created streams, to himself, telling me to cast all my care upon him, who careth for me.

And for a time I did seem to cast my care on Jesus. How sweet it is to lie passive in his arms, and know no will but his. It is through the blessed Savior all our comforts flow. If we could keep the eye of faith on Jesus, our sorrows would be turned into joy. If the Lord withdraws his presence from us for awhile, how weak we are. I feel I am all weakness. But Paul says, "When I am weak, then am I strong." And when we are thus weak, we look about for something to lean upon. An arm of flesh, I have found, is a poor thing to lean upon. Where shall we lean but upon that blessed Savior who says, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest?"—Matt. xi. 28.

"O land of rest, for thee I sigh!
When will the moment come
When I shall lay my armor by,
And dwell with Christ at home?"

A few more days or years we may have to battle with the world, the flesh and the devil, and then, if we are of that little flock, the Lord will call us home to be forever with him. O may these thoughts of going home comfort us; and though we get weary and sad, and feel sometimes like giving up, O let us think what a friend in Jesus we have, that sticketh closer than a brother, and that we can go to him at all times and tell him all our troubles. He never turns away without a kind word or look. That Friend is always the same. We have earthly friends that are not always the same. One day they may be very kind, and perhaps the next day very unkind, so we can put no confidence in the flesh. And the hymn (809 of Beebe's Collection) beautifully expresses the thought,

"Where must a weary sinner go,
But to the sinner's Friend?
He only can relieve my woe,
And bid my sorrows end."

This hymn has been a great comfort to me. It expresses my feelings.

I did not expect to write so much when I commenced. I do not know whether it is worth publishing or not; but perhaps some of my friends may see it, who would like to hear from me. Pardon what you see amiss in it, knowing it comes from one who feels unfit for the duty or privilege of this kind.

I am your unworthy sister,
S. A. CULY.

SORROW TURNED INTO JOY.

"VERILY, verily, I say unto you, That ye shall weep and lament, but the world shall rejoice; and ye shall be sorrowful, but your sorrow shall be turned into joy."—John xvi. 20.

One peculiar mark of all the instruction given by divine authority is that it is always hidden from the comprehension of the natural mind even of those who are taught of God. Reason cannot receive the testimony which is revealed by the Spirit in the personal experience of the subjects of that grace which is exclusively in Christ Jesus. As natural light can manifest nothing to those who are destitute of the sense of sight, so the clearest exhibition of the light of revelation is hidden from the discernment of the natural mind. The most favored saint can know nothing of the way in which he is led by the hand of the Lord except as it is shown him by that revelation which is received by faith alone. Since reason belongs to the natural mind it cannot comprehend any spiritual instruction. Hence there is necessarily continual contradiction between the assurance of faith and the unbelief which has its origin in the blindness of the natural mind. Between these contending powers the subjects of divine instruction are kept in constant tribulation. When they would rejoice in the assurance of that hope of life which is given them by faith, the blindness of their reason denies the ground of their confidence, and they are made to fear lest they may have been mistaken in claiming the exceeding great and precious promises as being applicable to themselves. Under this constant state of controversy they are indeed "Troubled on every side, yet not distressed; perplexed, but not in despair; persecuted, but not forsaken; cast down, but not destroyed." Thus experimentally they may say, We are "Always bearing about in the body the dying of the Lord, that the life also of Jesus might be made manifest in our body."—2 Cor. iv. 8-10. Looking at the things which are seen, not even their own reason can discover satisfactory evidence that they are the chosen people of God. It is not strange therefore that they are not recognized as such by the unbelieving world. It seems inconsistent to acknowledge as the especial objects of the love and favor of God such an afflicted and poor people. Not even the plain declarations of our Lord and his inspired servants, as written in the Scriptures, can satisfy the natural mind that they are indeed

"heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ." For their comfort and encouragement our Lord has given the rich treasure of his inspired word to corroborate the testimony of his Spirit in their own hearts, bearing witness that they are the children of his grace. They have need of all this provision of grace for their support in their pilgrimage of conflict through this world of sin.

In the solemnly impressive words of our Redeemer now under consideration, there is important significance in the repeated confirmation, "Verily, verily." Words from his sacred lips would rationally appear to need no confirmation; but in many instances his infinite knowledge of the weakness of the little ones for whose benefit he spoke, graciously gave the strongest form of expression for their consolation. Thus it is written that "God, willing to shew unto the heirs of promise the immutability of his counsel, confirmed it by an oath; that by two immutable things, in which it was impossible for God to lie, we might have a strong consolation, who have fled for refuge to lay hold on the hope set before us."—Heb. vi. 17, 18. This impressive form of expression is used not to add anything to the certainty of the truth of God, but for the more full establishment of the confidence of his saints in that truth. So this expression in our text gives assurance that the weeping and sorrow of his followers should not be any unforeseen trial which they must encounter; but that it was included in the great purpose of eternal love for their good and for the manifestation of the glory of God in their salvation. In thus positively declaring the trouble which was appointed for his disciples, Jesus does not express regret that it must be so; but in the same conformity to the will of God which appears in all his own personal sufferings, he comforts them with the assurance that their weeping and lamentation shall be turned into joy. This does not simply mean that their affliction shall pass away and joy shall follow, as in nature sunshine follows after the dark clouds are dispelled; but the very bitterness of their sorrow shall itself be made joy to them. In this experience they are made to count it all joy when they fall into divers temptations, knowing that the trial of their faith worketh patience. The Spirit of Christ leads them to "Glory in tribulation also; knowing that tribulation worketh patience; and patience, experience; and experience, hope; and hope maketh not ashamed; because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost which is given unto us."—Rom. v. 3-5. All this is realized by faith alone, and consequently it is not understood by the natural mind. Blind reason in the mourning saints always counts every form of tribulation as testifying against the genuineness of their hope in the salvation of God. In the light of divine revelation alone, faith sees the heavenly joy of the fellowship of the sufferings of Christ in being made conformable to his death by partaking of his afflictions. Without drinking of the bitter cup of affliction they could never know the sweetness of such joyful assurance. Thus their sorrow itself is turned into joy which the world could never give. The rainbow of eternal love is thus inscribed by the power of faith upon the dark cloud of their deepest distress, and their bitter tears are made to them as springs of living water, yielding them sweet consolation in the parched desert of their earthly pilgrimage.

Under the power of temptation the saints cannot afford to forget that it is Jesus who says unto them that they "shall weep and lament." Unbelieving doubts are ever ready to suggest that their Lord has forgotten to be gracious unto them when they are sunk in deep waters of affliction. When passing through the much tribulation appointed as their entrance into the kingdom of the joyful presence of their Lord, they tremblingly ask, "Will the Lord cast off forever? and will he be favorable no more? Is his mercy clean gone forever? doth his promise fail forevermore? Hath God forgotten to be gracious? hath he in anger shut up his tender mercies?"—Psa. lxxvii. 7-9. This infirmity is common to all who are in fellowship with the inspired psalmist. It is only as they are blinded by their carnal reasonings that they can so lose sight of the strong consolation of the gospel as to weep and lament under the "light affliction, which is but for a moment," to which they are subjected in their earthly sojourn. When by faith they can see in their tribulation the seal of their fellowship with the dear Redeemer, no affliction can disturb their heavenly joy. By that revelation they are made to rejoice in their very weeping and lamentation. So is their sorrow turned into joy. Thus they experimentally receive the comfort of the word of Jesus, "Blessed are they that mourn; for they shall be comforted."

There is important significance in the declaration of our Lord in connection with the mourning of his saints, that "the world shall rejoice." A clear line of demarcation is here drawn between the saints and the world. The peculiar mark set upon the followers of Jesus is in strong contrast with that which characterizes the world. Not only is it a seal which cannot be counterfeited, but it is a characteristic which no natural mind can possibly wish to bear. However desirous hypocrites may be to appear in the sight of men to mourn, they cannot wish in reality to "weep and lament," in true mourning. To such voluntary pretenders the Lord says, "Behold, in the day of your fast ye find pleasure, and exact all your labors."—Isa. lviii. 3. This is true of all the mourning in which it is possible for men to engage in their own will. The weeping and lamentation of the saints is not only involuntary, but more than that, it is of necessity. They weep and lament because they feel their destitution of that perfect righteousness after which they hunger and thirst. This is the definite peculiarity of all the subjects of the divine blessing. The world as used in our text includes all whose religion is founded upon their own works. All such do rejoice in their imaginary success in such works as they choose to count for righteousness. While the afflicted and poor people of God "weep and lament" because "the waters of a full cup are wrung out to them," the world of the ungodly have no such grief. They rejoice in their own works of righteousness, and increase in riches of self-confidence.—Psalm lxxiii. It is inconsistent with the wisdom of this world that the subjects of electing love should have to endure such sorrow on account of their own sinfulness. Even their own reason counts this as an evidence against their hope. For this cause they are sorrowful, while the very occasion of their sorrow produces the rejoicing of the world. When the Spirit of truth shows their sorrow to be the witness of their being true followers of Jesus, their sorrow is turned into joy, which the world cannot take away from them. As the world cannot know our Lord, so it is impossible for the evidence of his Spirit in his followers to be seen by the natural man. Knowing that all power is in the hand of the Lord, reason cannot comprehend why the children of his love should be an afflicted and poor people. Therefore even their own heart condemns all those who know the power of sin by bitter experience. Their sorrow is not a transitory emotion; they "weep and lament" because of the bondage of corruption under which they are held. Feeling their utter inability to deliver themselves, they earnestly cry out of the depth unto God. He always hears the prayer of such destitute ones, and reveals his salvation unto them. Then the Spirit of truth shows them in their very sorrow the unquestionable evidence that they are indeed the chosen heirs of immortality in the salvation which is in our Lord Jesus Christ. Thus their sorrow is turned into joy.

The world, including their own carnal mind, exultingly rejoices in the sorrow of the saints when they mourn the hiding of their Redeemer's countenance. The world, the flesh and the devil, the combined enemies of the mourning saint, then say, "God hath forsaken him; persecute and take him; for there is none to deliver him." He feels his weakness, and cries in spirit, "O God, be not far from me; O my God, make haste for my help."—Psa. lxxi. 11, 12. When thus reduced to the utmost depth of sorrow, the Spirit takes the precious truth of Jesus and shows it unto the distressed one, saying, "I will gather the sorrowful for the solemn assembly, who are of thee, to whom the reproach of it was a burden."—Zeph. iii. 18. In the comfort of that sweet revelation, the sorrowful experience through which it came is made to shine with heavenly radiance, as the bright cloud of divine testimony by which the immutable promise of God was manifested in its application to the sorrowful one.

"Then sorrow, touched by love, grows bright
With more than rapture's ray;
As darkness shows us worlds of light
We never saw by day."

NOTICE.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., March 19, 1889.

BRETHREN BEEBE:—Will you please give space to this notice in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES?

It is agreed and expected that brethren in the ministry, Elders Lively, of Georgia, Powell, of Alabama, and Curry and Parsons, of Kentucky, the Lord willing, will meet here on Friday before the fourth Sunday in May, 1889, to make an investigation and organize a church here, freed from idolatrous worship and practices. Meeting will continue several days. Brethren Chick, Rittenhouse, Purington, Durand, Thornberry, and other sound ones, who have a mind to do so, are cordially invited to come over and help us. You, brethren Beebe, are included. Dear brethren, we feel poor in every sense, and very unworthy; but if you come, and think me worthy, come in and tarry. If you have any word of exhortation by letter, say on. Your letter can be read in the meeting. We trust our God to own and bless. At any time, in passing this way, call and see how we do.

A lover of truth in trials,

L. H. HOWSE.

[Owing to an oversight on our part, the above notice was mislaid until this late date. We trust our brethren will pardon us, as we are not often guilty of such neglect of notices.—ED.]

OBITUARY NOTICES.

Harvey N. Gott was born in Shelby Co., Ky., July 20th, 1825, and moved with his parents when four years old to Montgomery Co., Ind., and from thence to Linn Co., Iowa, in 1846. He was baptized in the fellowship of the Old School Baptist Church, by Elder Cottrell, in May, 1859, and was joined in marriage with Miss Martha Parker in 1870. He died of inflammatory rheumatism and heart disease, April 26th, 1889. He leaves a wife, two daughters, two sons, two brothers and one sister to mourn their loss; but they sorrow not without hope, knowing that their loss is his everlasting gain.

Of brother Gott we can truly say that he was one who ever contended earnestly for the faith, never tolerating any of the modern inventions of men, but gloried alone in the doctrine of salvation by grace. He loved to talk on the things of the kingdom, and was ever ready and willing to care for God's children. He was a worthy member and Clerk of Green's Grove Church, where his place was never vacant while well enough to go. He adorned his profession by an upright walk and godly conversation. We feel that the church has lost a worthy member, the family a kind husband and father, and the community an honorable citizen and neighbor. May they be comforted by the thought that he is at rest in the realms of bliss.

"Where those who meet shall part no more,
And those long parted meet again."
I spoke on the occasion from John xi. 23: "Jesus saith unto her, Thy brother shall rise again."

ASSOCIATIONAL.

THE Delaware River Old School Baptist Association will convene, the Lord willing, with the church at Hopewell, Mercer Co., N. J., on Wednesday before the first Sunday in June (May 29th), 1889, and continue three days.

I would say to all who may attend the meeting of the association, appointed to be held with the First Baptist Church of Hopewell, that a number of trains leave New York City daily for Hopewell, Liberty Street, Bound Brook Route, and come directly to this place; also leave Philadelphia, Ninth and Green Streets, and Third and Berks Streets. Be sure and purchase tickets for Hopewell. Should any come from other directions, all will connect somewhere with the New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington Line, which passes through Hopewell village. The brethren and friends will be met at the depot, and places of entertainment prepared for them, on Tuesday afternoon, May 28th. A cordial invitation is extended to all brethren and friends who can visit us at that time.

WM. J. PURINGTON.

THE Warwick Old School Baptist Association will meet, the Lord willing, with the church at New Vernon, Orange Co., N. Y., on Wednesday before the second Sunday in June (5th), 1889, and continue in session until Friday evening following.

Those coming from the east or west by the New York, Lake Erie & Western R. R. will be met at Howell's Depot on the arrival of the way train from the west at 1:00 p. m., and on the arrival of the Orange County Express from the east, which leaves foot of Chambers St., New York, at 4:30 p. m., arriving at Howell's at 7:15 p. m., on Tuesday.

A cordial invitation is extended to all our brethren and friends to meet with us.

BENTON JENKINS.

THE Chemung Old School Baptist Association will be held, if the Lord will, with the Vaughan Hill Church, Bradford Co., Pa., on Wednesday before the third Sunday in June (12th), 1889, and continue in session the two following days.

THE Turkey River Association will hold its annual meeting with Otter Creek Church, Fayette Co., Iowa, at the house of M. Schneider, three miles north of Oelwein, beginning on Saturday before the first Sunday in June, and continuing three days.

Friends will be met on Friday at Oelwein, which is very accessible by railroad. A cordial invitation to lovers of the truth is extended.

P. SOHNER, Clerk.

YEARLY MEETINGS.

A YEARLY or two days meeting will be held with the Clovesville Old School Baptist Church, the Lord willing, on the fourth Saturday and Sunday in June (22d and 23d).

A cordial invitation is extended to all lovers of the truth, and especially ministers of our faith and order. Those coming by rail will stop at Griffin's Corners station, where they will be met with teams and conveyed to the place of the meeting.

O. F. BALLARD, Church Clerk.

A YEARLY meeting will be held, if the Lord will, with New Hope Church, in Greenbush, Warren Co., Ill., beginning at four o'clock p. m. on Friday before the third Sunday in June, at which meeting, on Saturday, a council is expected to convene for the ordination of brother H. E. Puris to the gospel ministry, if thought advisable. The friends of the cause of Christ are invited.

I. N. VANMETER, Pastor.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date, this date denotes the time at which your subscription expires, and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

CORRESPONDENCE.

"Who, when he came, and had seen the grace of God, was glad, and exhorted them all, that with purpose of heart they would cleave unto the Lord."—Acts xi. 23.

In the religion of our Lord Jesus Christ the praise of God is declared. Those who are the subjects of this religion will find it both doctrinal, experimental and practical. Blessed are we if we are partakers of the truth as it is in Jesus. Let us consider for a little while some of the things set forth in the above Scripture.

First. What Barnabas saw. "When he came [to Antioch], and had seen the grace of God." If he had seen the brethren shy of one another, if he had found them at strife one with another, if there were contentions, envyings, wrath, strifes, backbiting, whisperings, tumults, in the church at Antioch, would these things declare the grace of God? Instead of being "glad," we believe Barnabas, like Paul, would "bemoan" over such things showing themselves in the brethren.—2 Cor. xii. 21. "The disciples were called christians first in Antioch."—Acts xi. 26. This is the secret of the source of that gladsome sight that Barnabas saw. They were christians. What is it to be a christian? It is to have the Spirit of Christ. "Now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his."—Rom. viii. 9. To be a christian is to be enabled with the apostle Paul to say, "Christ liveth in me."—Gal. ii. 20. "For for me to live is Christ."—Phil. i. 21. It is to be "made partakers of Christ."—Heb. iii. 14. "We," saith Paul, "have the mind of Christ." We are partakers of his Spirit, of his life: and if so, our life, at least in some things, will bear some faint likeness to that of our dear Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. "They took knowledge of them, that they had been with Jesus."—Acts iv. 13. Is this, dear children of God, the way we are taken knowledge of? Just to the extent that we "are manifestly declared to be the epistle of Christ," we shall be called upon to suffer for his name's sake, to "suffer with him," to "suffer as a christian." "Yea, and all that will live godly in Christ Jesus, shall suffer persecution." Christ in you, then, is the fountain, the source, the cause, of what was witnessed by Barnabas in Antioch. For grace came by Jesus Christ, having been given to us in him before the world began. Those whom it hath pleased God to call by his grace and to reveal his Son in them, will, we are confident, be brought to most willingly confess, "By the grace of God I am what I am." We have a hope that his grace bestowed upon us was not in vain. "For the grace of God that bringeth salvation hath appeared to all men, teaching us that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously and godly in this present world."—Titus ii. 11, 12. If therefore we "know the grace of God in truth," it is established according to the testimony of the Scriptures that there will be "fruit" brought forth in us, manifesting the grace of God. He that hath clothes will surely wear them, and not be seen naked. Men talk of their faith, repentance, and love to God. These are precious graces; but why do not such persons let us see these graces walking abroad in their daily conversation? Surely, if such guests were in thy soul, they would at least sometimes look out at the windows, and be seen out of doors, in the exercise of gospel duties.

O, dear kindred in Christ Jesus, while I penned the above lines, my heart sighed over the consciousness of my own frequent short-comings. O for grace to glorify God in my body and spirit, which are his.

Barnabas saw the grace of God. Where the grace of God is manifested, there will be the love of the truth as it is in Jesus, and there will be manifest that desire to walk even as Jesus walked.—1 John ii. 6. And where God's dear people are found walking in obedience to the precepts of the gospel, it is because great grace is upon them. Look at this picture, dear children of God, contained in the following Scripture, "Let all bitterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamor, and evil speaking, be put away from you, with all malice; and be ye kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you."—Eph. i. 31, 32. Where such a state of things prevails, how brightly the grace of God shines! "Put on therefore as the elect of God, holy and beloved, bowels of mercies, kindness, humbleness of mind, meekness, long-suffering; forbearing one another, and forgiving one another, if any man have a quarrel against any: even as Christ forgave you, so also do ye. And above all these things put on charity, which is the bond of perfectness."—Col. iii. 12-14. The fact that such words are on record to stir up the pure minds of the saints by way of remembrance, is an index of the various frailties and infirmities to which we are subjected, and the constant need we have of receiving grace that we may walk as children of light. "Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven."—Matt. v. 14-16. "Brethren, if a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual, restore such an one in the spirit of meekness; considering thyself, lest thou also be tempted. Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ."—Gal. vi. 1, 2. Yes, where our behavior in the church of the living God, the pillar and ground of the truth, is according to the law of Christ, it will show forth the praise of God; but where the neglect of this is, or where any other rule is substituted in the place of "the rule," we do not show forth the praise of God. But when a church of our Lord Jesus Christ is found contending for the faith once delivered unto the saints, and walking in love one toward another, looking after the welfare of each other, praying always with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit, and watching thereunto with all perseverance and supplication for all saints, endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace, then truly the grace of God most sweetly appears. Of ourselves alone no such things can ever exist; but if left to our natural wisdom, if the fleshly mind has the sway, O what dismal, heart-rending sights will then appear! "Divisions among you," "wars and fightings," "debates, envyings, wraths, strifes, backbitings, whisperings, swellings, tumults." This will be the bitter result.

Another precious indication of the grace of God in the churches is recorded in 2 Corinthians viii. 1-4. Let us read it. "Moreover, brethren, we do you to wit of the grace of God bestowed on the churches of Macedonia; how that in a great trial of affliction, the abundance of their joy and their deep poverty abounded unto the riches of their liberality. For to their power, I bear record, yea, and beyond their power they were willing of themselves; praying us with much entreaty that we would receive the gift, and take upon us the fellowship of the ministering to the saints." All this was the fruit of the grace of God. Is it thus with us, or are we stingy and covetous?

Do we say to our brother, "Depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled; notwithstanding we give them not those things which are needful to the body?"—James ii. 16; 1 John iii. 17, 18. Covetousness does not declare the grace of God. With such brethren who are persistently covetous, we are commanded "not to keep company; with such an one no not to eat."—1 Cor. v. 11. If we in our walk in other matters show forth the grace of God, and thus it is manifested that God hath called us by his grace, and that we know the grace of God in truth, O for the grace of God to "abound in this grace also."—2 Cor. viii. 7. "God is able to make all grace abound toward you; that ye, always having all sufficiency in all things, may abound in every good work."—2 Cor. ix. 8. Many other pleasing features showing the work of grace in his people, the Lord has made known in the Scriptures, and much might be written upon this subject of the visible grace of God.

Second. How Barnabas felt. When he had seen the grace of God, he "was glad." Parallel instances are recorded in the following Scriptures: "I rejoiced greatly that I found of thy children walking in the truth, as we have received a commandment from the Father."—2 John 4. "Your obedience is come abroad unto all men. I am glad therefore on your behalf: but yet I would have you wise unto that which is good, and simple concerning evil."—Rom. xvi. 19. "But now when Timotheus came from you unto us, and brought us good tidings of your faith and charity, and that ye have good remembrance of us always, desiring greatly to see us, as we also to see you: therefore, brethren, we were comforted over you in all our affliction and distress by your faith: for now we live, if ye stand fast in the Lord. For what thanks can we render to God again for you, for all the joy wherewith we joy for your sakes before our God?"—1 Thess. iii. 6-9. "For the administration of this service not only supplieth the want of the saints, but is abundant also by many thanksgivings unto God; while by the experiment of this ministration they glorify God for your professed subjection unto the gospel of Christ, and for your liberal distribution unto them, and unto all men; and by their prayer for you, which long after you for the exceeding grace of God in you. Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift."—2 Cor. ix. 12-15. "Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity! It is like the precious ointment upon the head, that ran down upon the beard, even Aaron's beard: that went down to the skirts of his garments; as the dew of Hermon, and as the dew that descended upon the mountains of Zion; for there the Lord commanded the blessing, even life forevermore."—Psa. cxxxiii. If we have ever had the love of God shed abroad in our hearts, we cannot but feel glad, and rejoice in the grace of God as witnessed in others. "Charity rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth."—1 Cor. xiii. 6. When we behold the people of God feasting upon the doctrine of Christ; when we hear them declare what great things God hath done for their souls, and speak of the honor of his kingdom, and talk of his power; when we witness how they love one another, not in word only, but in deed and in truth; when we see the patient, tender care, that watchfulness over one another for good, and seeking to edify one another, that kind solicitude manifested for the prosperity of each other in the things of Jesus Christ; and when a brother is overtaken in a fault, the meekness and gentleness of Christ appearing in the dear people of God who are hurt and mourn over his backsliding, and who seek to save their brother, and not destroy and kill him; and when it is needful, no matter how painful it may be, strictly, righteously, according to the order and the law of Christ alone, according to his sacred and precious rule, dealing with all unruly and disorderly members; yes, when as the subjects of Christ's kingdom the children of God honor their King, and their behavior in all things is such as becometh the gospel; if we are partakers of the grace of God how can we be any otherwise than glad when we thus see the grace of God in others? Barnabas was glad. Much is recorded for our instruction and profit in the first three chapters of Revelation, and there we see how our God deals with his churches. None of the seven churches were without their trials and troubles; but some were neglectful of their duty in attending to such disorders: they tolerated evils, and winked at the erroneous doctrines and wicked practices that arose in some who were in their midst. These were spots in their feasts of charity (Jude 12); and the dear Lord does and will chasten his people for such things. But O how precious, what a glad sight, how it fills the heart with praise to God, to see such a church of Christ as the church in Smyrna, and the church in Philadelphia.—Rev. ii. 8; iii. 7. O may "great grace" be upon all the churches of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Perhaps some reader of these lines may have known what it is to feel glad in beholding "the order and steadfastness of the faith in Christ," of the people of God. You have felt your heart all of a glow with pleasure in witnessing the love and fellowship among them, the sacred delight that they showed when hearing preached, or when in conversation with one another they proclaimed, the doctrine of the grace of God, the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. But you say, I am not a member of the church; I am nothing; I am an alien, an outcast; I have no portion with them; I am not fit to be with them; I am such a sinner, loathsome to myself, and I should be so to every one of God's people, did they know what a miserable sinner I am; and though I have often wished I was like the children of God, and have longed to feast upon the truth as I see them do, yet I fear it will never be so with me. But yet I must acknowledge that I am glad to see the blessed, the happy and exalted state of the church of Christ. But I am sunk down in the shame and vileness of my condition, as a guilty, condemned sinner before the holy God. When I know of any hard feelings arising between these brethren, and when the church has had troubles, it has made me sad. If this be where you are, dear reader, blessed art thou. You are described in Isaiah lxvi. 10, and precious things are in store for you. This shows that you love God's children; and this love declares that you "have passed from death unto life," that you are "born of God," and loved of God with an everlasting love. "He which hath begun a good work in you will perform it until the day of Jesus Christ."—Phil. i. 6. The Lord will perfect that which concerneth thee, and you shall yet praise him for his wondrous and gracious dealings with thy soul. "The vision is yet for an appointed time, but at the end it shall speak, and not lie: though it tarry, wait for it; because it will surely come, it will not tarry."—Habakkuk ii. 3.

Third. What Barnabas did. "He exhorted them all, that with purpose of heart they would cleave unto the Lord. For he was a good man, and full of the Holy Ghost and of faith: and much people was added unto the Lord." Was such an exhortation as this needful among such a people, where the grace of God so blessedly shone? Yes, at all times it is good to trust in the Lord. The subject of the grace of God is subject to so many snares, so many conflicts and assaults of the enemy, who appears in so many forms, that we are only in safety when we cleave to the Lord. Some forsook the Lord, and walked no more with him. Then Jesus said unto the twelve, "Will ye also go away? Then Simon Peter answered him, Lord, to whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life." The true disciples of our Lord Jesus have in reality nowhere else to go. He only is our Rock and our Refuge. All the elect of God will in God's own time know what it is to cry, "As the hart panteth after the water brooks, so panteth my soul after thee, O God." "My soul followeth hard after thee." With Thomas they shall say, "Let us also go, that we may die with him."—John xi. 16.

David and Jonathan clave to each other; Elisha clave to Elijah; Ruth clave to Naomi. These are delightful illustrations; but O how gracious, how desirable, to cleave to the Lord, ever looking to him for counsel and strength. Earthly friends fail. All things but our God are a "vain help." Egypt, horses and chariots will only be a woe to us when we look to them for help in our times of need. But our God is a very present help in time of trouble. Trials of various kinds the church of God must have. God has ordained it so. Such troubles will befall us that we in no wise expected, or ever thought could come upon us, so that our life will be pressed down almost continually in sad and bitter perplexities. This I know, and find but very few to whom in such seasons I can tell one-tenth part of the troubles of my soul. But the Lord knoweth, and O how I have earnestly desired that I might cleave alone to the Lord. How is it with you, dear children of God? Is yours a smooth pathway? But whether our way be rough or smooth, joyful or sorrowful, Jehovah is our Guide, and he will bring us safely through, and we shall triumph in his name. Through God we shall do valiantly, for he it is that shall tread down our enemies. But sometimes discouragements from every quarter so beset me, from within and without, that I say like one of old, "I am ready to halt."—Psalm xxxviii. 17. Those who fear not God are waiting for our halting, desiring it.—Jer. xx. 10. O could they know the extremities we are brought into, could they but witness the bitter cries, the tossings to and fro, the daily pain of heart over so many evils that abound, the plague of our heart that we feel, our misgivings, doubts and fears, the weakness we feel, our utter insufficiency to continue, so often felt, and times when our soul faints within us, then they would certainly judge, We shall witness his halting in a short time: what we have been expecting and prophesying is not far off: and so would we have it! Well, it certainly is a wonder, dear children of God, as far as I am concerned, that I have not come to a dead stop, and have utterly given up the matter, so low do I sink sometimes. But I do hope it is the Lord who is on my side; and through the tender mercy and compassion of the Lord my hope revives, and I am then bold enough to raise my Ebenezer and say, "Hitherto hath the Lord helped me." "Cleave to the Lord." "Draw me, we will run after thee."—Sol. Song i. 4. For when we do not cleave to the Lord, what befalls us? We do not enter into rest; we seem to come short of it.—Heb. iv. "Take heed therefore, brethren, lest there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God.

But exhort one another daily, while it is called To-day, lest any of you be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin. For we are made partakers of Christ, if we hold the beginning of our confidence steadfast unto the end." Israel in the wilderness was a type of God's dear people in all ages (1 Cor. x.); and as Moses said unto the tribes of Israel, "Ye that did cleave unto the Lord your God are alive every one of you this day."—Deut. iv. 4. So the antitypical, spiritual Israel find it to-day. In cleaving to the Lord with full purpose of heart they live: in forsaking him, the fountains of living waters, they languish and die.—Jer. ii. 13. So the apostle writing in Romans v. 6, 13, says, "To be carnally minded is death; but to be spiritually minded is life and peace." "If ye live after the flesh, ye shall die; but if ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live." Of old, when Israel clave to the Lord, and had no other gods, then they prospered, overcame their enemies, and peace and tranquility reigned within their borders. But when "they chose new gods, then was war in the gates."—Judges v. 8. Their adversaries soon exacted upon them, disasters befell them, famine and pestilence raged in their borders, they were put under tribute to their cruel foes, and taken into captivity. What a vision we have in Ezekiel xxxvii. of their sad condition: a valley full of dry bones. "Then he said unto me, Son of man, these bones are the whole house of Israel: behold, they say, Our bones are dried, and our hope is lost: we are cut off for our parts." But Jehovah nevertheless wrought for his own name's sake, and they found that the Babylonish captivity worked for their good; for our God had the working of it: for he worketh all things after the counsel of his own will, and appointed this chastening, in sending them to Babylon for their good. "Thus saith the Lord, the God of Israel, Like these good figs, so will I acknowledge them that are carried away captive of Judah, whom I have sent out of this place in the land of the Chaldeans for their good. For I will set mine eyes upon them for good, and I will bring them again to this land: and I will build them, and not pull them down; and I will plant them, and not pluck them up. And I will give them a heart to know me, that I am the Lord; and they shall be my people, and I will be their God: for they shall return unto me with their whole heart."—Jer. xxiv. 5-7. O what wondrous and gracious things the Lord has done for us! Well may we then cleave unto him. He only knows the future, and all the straits into which we shall be brought. O that our cleaving to the Lord and to his doctrine may not simply be with our lips, but may we manifest our love to our dear Lord in our loving and willing obedience to all his revealed will concerning us; and though it may be our lot to encounter cross providences, though men rise up against us, and we are called upon to endure their taunts and evil-speakings, through evil report as well as good report, through tribulation's thorny maze, may we be so favored as to ever "cleave to the Lord with full purpose of heart." Then we shall not be ashamed, but shall have many a triumph to tell to the praise of our God. "Blessed is that man that trusteth in the Lord, and whose hope the Lord is. For he shall be as a tree planted by the waters, and that spreadeth out her roots by the river, and shall not see when heat cometh, but her leaf shall be green; and shall not be careful in the year of drought, neither shall cease from yielding fruit."—Jer. xvii. 7, 8. May this, dear kindred in Christ Jesus, be our heritage.

From your brother, I hope, in Jesus,

FRED. W. KEENE.

SUTHERLAND'S CORNERS, Ontario.

TAYLORS, Miss., May 12, 1889.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—Some time since I received a request from sister L. E. Bennet, of Lincoln, Ala., for my views, either through the SIGNS OF THE TIMES or privately, of 1 Corinthians xv. 22-25. To-day I received another card from sister B., reminding me of my promise to comply with her request, which I now feel to try to do, and submit it to you for publication in the SIGNS. I feel my inability to elucidate the subject embraced in this portion of the inspired word, and shall only present such views as I have, hoping they may be blessed to the comfort of sister B., and all who may read them.

Here is the quotation: "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive. But every man in his own order: Christ the first fruits; afterward they that are Christ's at his coming. Then (cometh) the end, when he shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father; when he shall have put down all rule, and all authority and power. For he must reign till he hath put all enemies under his feet." And the twenty-sixth verse reads, "The last enemy (that) shall be destroyed (is) death."

In this whole chapter the apostle is treating upon the death in and by the "first man Adam," and the "resurrection from the dead" in and by the "last Adam," the Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. He is here addressing the saints at Corinth. He speaks to them, and of them, and to all who were chosen in Christ before the foundation of the world, whether Jews or Gentiles, whether bond or free, male or female. "For ye are all one in Christ Jesus." "Ye are Christ's, and Christ is God's." I have not understood the apostle to have any reference to the resurrection of the wicked in this chapter. He is treating wholly upon the certainty of the resurrection of the saints. And he tells us, "If the dead [saints] rise not, then is Christ not risen." "And if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain. Yea, and we are found false witnesses of God; because we have testified of God that he raised up Christ; whom he raised not up, if so be that the dead rise not. For if the dead rise not, then is not Christ raised. And if Christ be not raised, your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins. Then they also which are fallen asleep [dead] in Christ are perished. If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable. But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that slept." Thus the apostle forever puts a quietus to the doctrine of "no resurrection of the dead;" showing that if there is no resurrection of the dead, then Christ is not risen, that preaching is vain, faith is vain, and ye are yet in your sins; and that those who preach a risen Savior are "false witnesses of God," having testified that he raised up Christ; whom he raised not up, if so be that the dead rise not. The resurrection of the saints from the dead is a fundamental principle of the gospel, and underlies the whole hope of a blissful immortality beyond the grave. Destroy this glorious doctrine of the Bible, and it saps the very foundation of the hope of every poor and afflicted saint. Indeed, without it there is no such thing as "eternal salvation." When Paul was arraigned before the council, he said, "Of the hope and resurrection of the dead I am called in question." In the apostles' day the people were "grieved because they preached through Jesus the resurrection from the dead." So the apostle shows in this chapter that sin and death came by the disobedience of the "first man Adam," and that salvation or deliverance from sin and death came by and through the obedience of "the last Adam," "the Lord from heaven," who is "a quickening Spirit." The apostle says of him, "Who hath abolished death, and brought life and immortality to light through the gospel." "He was manifested to take away our sins; and in him is no sin." He has "appeared once, in the end of the world, to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself," and has "destroyed him that had the power of death, that is, the devil."

"For as in Adam all die." The Lord God said, "In the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." This transaction of Adam brought death, in all that the term death means. No life whatever in this transaction. "The wages of sin is death;" and but for the triumphant resurrection of the Lord of glory, the iron gates of everlasting death would have forever closed upon the whole race of the first Adam, and all hope of a glorious life in the world to come would have been forever cut off. Not only did the transgression of Adam insure death to his posterity, but that fearful edict is still in force. In the relation of the saints to the first Adam they are sinners, and in him they must pay the penalty annexed to that law, and it is "in Adam" that they "all die." I believe that the apostle here has more particular reference to corporeal death, which follows as the result of Adam's transgression; and, of course, one of Adam's posterity is just as much included in the results of that transgression as another. But the apostle is not addressing the "whole world" that "lieth in wickedness," but the living children of God, who have "passed from death unto life;" and it is those that he addresses when he says, "For as in Adam all die."

"Even so in Christ shall all be made alive." One is no more sure than the other. Just as sure as the saint dies in Adam, so sure will he or she be made alive in Christ. They die in Adam, and at the same time fall asleep in Christ. And the apostle says, "If we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." They fall asleep in Christ, and awake in his glorious likeness; and then they "shall be satisfied."

"But every man in his own order: Christ the first fruits; afterward they that are Christ's at his coming." Notice the apostle defines the characters that are to be made alive in Christ. They are "they that are Christ's at his coming." Nothing is said about those who are not Christ's. It may be that they too will be raised up. I am not so sure about that. But if they are, it will not be to life in Christ; it will be to the "resurrection of damnation," and to "everlasting shame and contempt;" while those who are in Christ will be made alive in Christ. For Christ has said that he would "raise them up at the last day." "I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me. And this is the Father's will which hath sent me, that of all which he hath given me I should lose nothing, but should raise it up again at the last day." Here we see that Jesus will lose nothing of all that the Father hath given him, but will raise it up again at the last day. Martha said of Lazarus, "I know that he shall rise again in the resurrection at the last day." The Scriptures do not justify the conclusion that all that die in Adam will be made alive in Christ, "but afterward they that are Christ's at his coming." "For if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you." The apostle in one place prays God that "your whole soul and body and spirit be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." To my mind there is not the shadow of a doubt as to the resurrection of the bodies of the saints. The apostle says, "Who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body." In this place, as well as in others, it is shown that Christ will come again in the future. The term, "shall all be made alive," shows that it is to be in the future; and "they that are Christ's at his coming," shows the same thing. It is written, "And as it is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment, so Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time, without sin unto salvation." Now, notice that Christ was (in the past) once offered "to bear the sins of many," and "unto them that look for him [in the future] shall he appear [in the future] the second time [showing that he has appeared once in the past], without sin unto salvation," or deliverance from death, the wages and consequences of sin. Surely those that "look for him" are "Christ's at his coming."

The apostle shows in this connection that Christ died and rose again, that he has ascended into heaven, that he is on his Mediatorial throne, where he reigns victorious as "King of kings and Lord of lords." "Let all the house of Israel know assuredly that God hath made that same Jesus [italics mine], whom ye have crucified, both Lord and Christ." He is sitting "upon the throne of his father David, and of his kingdom there shall be no end." But the apostle says, "Then (cometh) the end;" showing that there is to be an end to all this, a glorious consummation of the work begun, "when he shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father; when he shall have put down all rule, and all authority and power. For he must reign till he hath put all enemies under his feet. The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death." In the twenty-eighth verse he says, "And when all things shall be subdued unto him, then shall the Son also himself be subject unto him that put all things under him, that God may be all in all." Thus it is shown that the Son of God, the man Christ Jesus, in whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge, and in whom dwells all the fullness of the Godhead bodily, reigns, and will continue to reign, victorious over heaven and earth most glorious, going forth conquering and to conquer, till he has put all enemies under his feet; and that there is not a single enemy to him or to his people but that shall be effectually destroyed. But even death itself, that grim monster, that so often frights the people of God, and to which we must sooner or later succumb, shall be destroyed; for he is "death of death, and hell's destruction," and he will "land us safe on Canaan's side." When he shall have destroyed the last enemy, which is death, he will deliver all things up to his Father, and the Son himself shall be subject unto the Father, that God may be all in all. Finally, the apostle says, "Behold, I shew you a mystery: we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed. For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality," &c. When all this shall be accomplished, "Then [and not till then] will be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? The sting of death is sin, and the strength of sin is the law. But thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

My sister, I know not when all this shall be, but I certainly look for its accomplishment; and if I never see you again on earth, I hope to meet you in that day.

Yours in gospel bonds,

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS—BELOVED BRETHREN IN THE LORD:—Time with all of its joys and sorrows is passing, and to me there is nothing more true than the words of Jesus, "In the world ye shall have tribulation."—John xvi. 33. Then should we not, as the people of God, consider the cause, which is sin? For by man came death, which is the result of sin. The people of God are in the world, and yet they are not of the world. To be of the world is to be in love, union, harmony and agreement with the world. In short, man in nature is of the world; but man in Christ is not of the world. And as we see in the sacred history given of Christ, while he was in the world, that his life which he lived in the flesh was a life of tribulation and of suffering, even so is the life which the Lord's people live in the flesh a life of tribulation. They are heirs of God, and joint heirs with the Lord Jesus Christ. And this joint heirship is first realized by the children of God in the flesh, or in the world. Then when we truly realize the great sorrow, grief and tribulation that we are passing through, let us remember that Jesus passed through it all. Yes, in all our afflictions he was afflicted. O wonder of wonders! It is but just for us to suffer; but when I look at the innocent Son of God, and see how he suffered, I am lost in admiration, and ask, Was it just for him to suffer, the just for the unjust? O yes. Let me tell every poor, suffering child of God that it was just. "Ought not Christ to have suffered these things?" He was one with his people, of the same seed, under the same law, under the same curse, and must suffer and die. "He shall see of the travail of his soul, and shall be satisfied." O! dear child of God, you think of your sore travail, and say, Surely my sorrow is greater than any! But not so. When you think of your sufferings, you realize that sin is the cause of it, and that it is your own sins that grieve you. But here on Jesus you see all the sins of all his people in his own body; and you see him in the world, but not of the world, compassed about with all our infirmities. "Himself took our infirmities, and bear our sicknesses." O what a travail in Edom, with dyed garments from Bozrah, this that is glorious in his apparel, traveling in the greatness of his strength, mighty to save. Should we not then rejoice that though he was brought as a lamb to the slaughter, yet he was the "Lion of the tribe of Judah," "The mighty God, The everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace," and that in his death he was numbered with the transgressors, lived with them, died with them, and for them, and rose for them? Hence he can say, "Be of good cheer: I have overcome the world." And so we walk by faith, in the complete victory of Jesus Christ, as having abolished death, and put away sin by the sacrifice of himself. And as he once suffered with us, and for us, in the world, he has overcome the world for us. Then be of good cheer. The life which we now live in the flesh, we live by the faith of the Son of God. And there is no tribulation in this life; that is, the life of faith; for when we first received Christ in our experience, we received him as the end of the law for righteousness, as believers in Christ. So then he that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation, but is passed from death unto life. Then as we have spoken of the joint heirship in the flesh, in suffering, let us remember that we shall also be glorified together. For he was made to be sin for us, who knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him. So then it is a glorious thought that we can glory in tribulation; for when we see that all the motion of sin is yet in our members, we are made to mourn; and it is not a voluntary thing on our part, for the cause does really exist which is the result of mourning. And now in our pilgrimage how closely allied to Jesus we feel to be, even in Bozrah. It is alone by his omnipotent hand and mighty power that we are sustained and upheld in all our tribulations. Could we travel alone? O no! Jesus must be with us. "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world. Amen." If we could speak to all the children of God, even in their times of greatest grief, and assure them that Jesus is with them, all would be well. The fire shall not kindle upon them, neither shall the waters overflow them. No weapon that is formed against them shall prosper, and every tongue that rises against them in judgment they shall condemn. Blessed is the nation whose God is the Lord, and the people whom he hath chosen for his own inheritance. Then be of good cheer: Jesus has overcome the world. And if we suffer with him, we shall also reign with him. Herein it is made manifest that we are saved by hope; for not all the trials we have can destroy that hope which we have in Jesus. When he appeared unto us, sin was forever put away.

Yours in hope,

F. M. CASEY.

GERMANTOWN, Neb., Jan. 3, 1889.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—I will, if you will allow me a little space in your columns, write a few lines. This is the first time I ever undertook to tell my travels from nature to grace, if I ever have had an experience of that kind. Sometimes I am led to doubt whether I have or not.

From the first I can remember, I always had a desire to be better and lead a better life. I thought I had the power at any time to leave off my bad habits and become a Christian. But I would make promises to myself, only to break them almost as soon as made. Three years ago last August, as I was attending a teachers' institute held in Seward, one evening there were several of us young folks at a gathering, and we were joking and jesting. Finally our conversation turned to making fun of the preachers. There was one young man there, I took notice, that did not take part in the conversation, till finally he said he could not sit still and listen to such talk any longer. It seemed as though I had done one of the worst things I ever had done. I went to my boarding place and went to bed, but not to sleep. It seemed as though morning never would come. I thought if I could go to him and ask him to forgive me, it would be all right. The next morning I went to him, and asked him if he could forgive me. He said he could. But this did not do me any good, for it seemed to me as though I was the worst mortal on earth, and that I had wronged God instead of man. I went on in this way for some time; but at last, after I had given up my own self, and seen that I could do nothing but trust in Christ, I could say with the poet,

"And if my soul were sent to hell,

God's righteous law approves it well."

My troubles grew lighter, and in November I was at New Hope Church. On Sunday there were two baptized. When we went to the water, instead of being back in the crowd, as was generally my place, I was standing by the water. I do not know why, for I had never felt any desire to be baptized, or to be in the church. When Elder True took off his overcoat he handed it to me to hold. It seemed an awful load for me to hold. When he led them into the water I thought I could not stand it any longer. It seemed to me as though I was standing between two spirits. One said, Go on; and the other told me I was not fit, and to stand back. It seemed the next month was long. I thought if I lived to get another chance I would offer myself to the church. On Saturday something prevented me from going, but on Sunday I went. It seemed to me as though I never heard as good preaching in my life. When the opportunity was given I went forward and offered myself, and was received for baptism. I was to be baptized in January; but when meeting day came it was so stormy there was no meeting. At the Little Flock Church, two weeks later, at the evening meeting on Saturday, after preaching by Elder McKnight, their pastor, the opportunity was given those who felt like it to give a relation of their hope, and tell of their travails through grace. It was the first time I had heard any one tell an experience, and it seemed to me as though I had none, for every one could tell of a certain time when they could say they felt entirely relieved of the burden of sin. I cannot say that I felt that way. My burden gradually got lighter. This was more trouble to me. I thought that at the next meeting I would tell the church I had deceived them, and would ask them to withdraw my name; but when the time came I could not do it. I had no other home, no other place where I could enjoy myself, and so I let it pass. On account of deep snow we could not get to the water until in March. At the March meeting it was decided that by the next Sunday the snow would be gone enough so that we could get to the water. When the time came for me to be baptized, it seemed as though I could not. There were four others baptized at the same time. I was troubled from that time on. At times I would hear persons tell their experience, and they could date when their troubles commenced and when they left them. In December, 1887, Elder Skelton, from Iowa, was at the Little Flock Church, and in his preaching he told his experience. It agreed with mine, and it seemed as though that sermon did me more good than any I had ever heard. That night he went where I was boarding. I had a long talk with him, and it seemed as though I never wanted to talk with any one so much. From that time on I have been doubting, and it seems as though my darkness is the most.

Now, brethren, do with these lines as you think best. If you think there is anything in them that any of the little saints would like to read, print them; if not, throw them aside, and it will be no offense to me. I like the SIGNS better since it has changed to a weekly, and I hope you may prosper in the good work. May the SIGNS long live, is the prayer of your unworthy brother,

A. E. HAWKINS.

LOUVALE, Ga., May, 1889.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN IN THE LORD:—I would drop you a line or two on experience, with a few comments on the SIGNS, which seems to grow in excellence, and serves as a great edifier to comfort and strengthen us in our journey and pilgrimage.

We have been made to pass through some gloom and sorrow since last I wrote you, peculiar to us, as it was the first death that ever occurred in our immediate family. We were married in September, 1877, since which time we have had born unto us six children, all girls. The youngest, little Lucy Green Lively, died on the tenth of April last, at six o'clock, after an illness of about ten days; but up to that time her health was fine. We never had to get up during the night since she was born, which was on the twenty-fourth day of last November. She was a good, precious darling, the pet of the entire family. She was taken with capillary bronchitis, and died with congestion of the brain. She suffered much. We did all we knew, but her time had come to depart, and the Lord took her. While bending over her little cradle, when I saw that she must go, the subject of infant salvation appeared to me as it never had before. While she seemed to suffer so much before she died, she reminded me of the Sufferer on Calvary, the blessed Son of God, who suffered the just for the unjust. While she was not guilty of actual transgression by commission, yet by nature she was a sinner, and she paid the penalty of death. There was, it appeared unto me, a sense in which she suffered with Christ; and I have the blessed and humble hope that she reigns with him. How heart-stricken I felt as I saw her draw her last breath! how grieved and bowed down! I did not know how I could stand it to see my precious little one buried beneath the cold ground. Living some distance from the place, my wife wished it to be buried at the family burying ground, thirty-two miles distant. Only enough conveyance for my wife and five children could be procured, so I had to take it around by rail, a distance of two hundred and seventeen miles, which I did alone. I was very nervous, and almost prostrated, and had a hard rigor the morning I was to leave. But after I started, I sought the Lord, asking his mercy upon my wife and little ones, and the kind neighbor who carried them through, and for grace to be reconciled to his providence, and for a fair day for the burial, and for the natural appearance of the corpse at the grave, which was all granted me; for when we left the grave I felt reconciled that she had been planted, and that in the glorious morning of the resurrection she would rise among the redeemed of the Lord, to give praise to her Redeemer, who had washed her from her sins in his own blood. Whether I shall ever know her in person or not, I trust I will know her in spirit, as a part of the redeemed host of God, and as one of the multitude which no man can number. The Lord by his grace, from my heart, I trust, has enabled me to say, The Lord giveth, and the Lord taketh away: blessed be the name of the Lord. And, Thy will, not mine, be done. Here my flood of tears dries up, and my sorrows flee away; for our God works all things after the counsel of his own will. "All things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose." Truly have I been made to say, "The Lord is good, a stronghold in the day of trouble." He is our refuge. The precious one is "Asleep in Jesus! blessed sleep! From which none ever wake to weep."

I must say, brethren Beebe, that the SIGNS is an excellent paper, and I am glad you have decided to furnish the readers with live matter; for I believe the Lord will impress brethren who are able to write things that will tend to edify. Now, in this our day, those things seem dead, and there is not that spirit in them as there is in the pen of the living communicator of our day. But from the pen of the living in Jerusalem there comes a freshness and warmth, needed by the household of faith who read the SIGNS so regularly. I must speak of the particular excellence of your editorials; also of the writings of brother Wagner. His articles always interest me; also those of brethren Coulter, Chick, Durand, and others; also sisters Swartout, Coddington, and especially sister Mary Parker. I have tried to pray the Lord to bless her, and if in his will, to heal her, and give her strength, as she writes such glorious, comforting letters. Brother Keene's letters also are read with interest, and brethren Rittenhouse's and Vanmeter's. I would like to see a letter from brother W. M. Smoot, as I know him, and he has been to my house. Others, whose names are not here, have also been a benefit to me in my experience as a pilgrim on the journey, as I trust, to the celestial city of light, where darkness nor storms shall ever come.

Yours in hope,

W. LIVELY.

FULFILLING THE ROYAL LAW.

"If ye fulfill the royal law according to the Scripture, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself, ye do well: but if ye have respect to persons, ye commit sin, and are convicted of the law as transgressors."—James ii. 8, 9.

The epistle in which this text is recorded was written by "James, a servant of God and of the Lord Jesus Christ, to the twelve tribes which are scattered abroad." It must be observed that while there are different classes of people included among the tribes addressed, they are all alike called "brethren" of the apostle who was inspired to leave on record this letter. There is not one of them excluded from that address of earnest endearment, when he calls them "My beloved brethren." Yet they are charged with showing partiality and becoming judges of evil thoughts. Then calling their serious attention, he asks, "Hath not God chosen the poor of this world rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which he hath promised to them that love him?" This question implies not only the assertion that this is the choice of God, but also that this choice is well known to those beloved brethren to whom the letter is addressed. But for this gracious choice what hope could there be for any of these scattered twelve tribes? They are all painfully conscious of their destitution, and every one of them who loves the salvation of God can say with David, continually, "The Lord be magnified; but I am poor and needy; yet the Lord thinketh upon me."—Psa. xl. 17. No earthly treasures nor attainments can relieve their distressed condition. Gold is utterly worthless in supplying that which their perishing situation demands. Yet by his infinite grace God has manifested his choice of these poor and needy conscious sinners. David upon the throne of Israel was in this sense as destitute as the beggar at the rich man's gate.

It is true that among those who are manifestly called to follow our Lord, there are not many whose worldly possessions would enable them to rank with the rich. Of the twelve apostles Peter said, "Behold, we have forsaken all, and followed thee." There is no account that any of them ever afterwards had as much as thirty pieces of silver, except Iscariot; and it did not seem to be much satisfaction to him. At the gate of the temple which is called Beautiful, Peter and John confessed that they had none of that sort of treasure.—Acts iii. 6. Even the Lord Jesus had not where to lay his head in the world which was made by him. So Paul says, "Ye see your calling, brethren, how that not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble are called; but God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty; and base things of the world, and things which are despised, hath God chosen, yea, and things which are not, to bring to naught things that are; that no flesh should glory in his presence."—1 Cor. i. 26-29. None of those things which are so highly esteemed among men can avail anything in the everlasting kingdom of our Redeemer. The omnipotent grace of our God is able to call his chosen ones from every rank and station among men. Some instances are left on record for our comfort, in which this grace has been manifested. The wealth of Job and of Abraham was no barrier in the way of that grace of God which bringeth salvation. The wisdom of Solomon did not forbid his trust in the preserving power of the Lord which is over the simple. But the very first lesson taught by the Spirit shows that all those things which are accounted valuable and meritorious among men are utterly valueless in the sight of God. No more power of God is requisite for the salvation of a bloody Manasseh, or a polluted Mary Magdalene, than for the proud and exemplary Saul of Tarsus, or the devout Simeon and Anna.

From the connection in which our text is written, it is evident that the partiality which is reproved is in contrast with the requirement of the royal law here quoted. The Spirit of Christ never leads any one contrary to the inspired direction of this royal law. Hence, it is evident that the principle which would discriminate against the poor, as stated in the opening of this chapter, is not in harmony with the injunction of that law which bears the seal of divine authority. There is indeed in the carnal mind that selfishness which would have men's persons in admiration because of advantage. When walking after the flesh, the saints are not free from the power of this carnal and covetous principle. In its indulgence they sow to the flesh, and of the flesh they shall certainly reap corruption. It is not only in favoring such as are richly clothed and in despising those who are less gorgeously clad, that the saints are liable to be found transgressors of this perfect law. It may be that they are led by carnal preferences to attach undue importance to the words or sentiments of one whom they personally esteem, while on the other hand they may reject the truth of God when it is proclaimed by one against whom they have become prejudiced. This is transgression of the royal law.

The Scripture cited as harmonizing with this royal law is quoted from Leviticus xix. 18, where it is written among the typical injunctions given to national Israel. It is there said, "Thou shalt not avenge, nor bear any grudge against the children of thy people, but thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself: I am the Lord." None but that Servant of the Lord who was upheld by the right hand of God, ever was able to obey this perfect law. Indeed, in all its injunctions that law which was given by the hand of Moses, but foretold the perfect righteousness of the Lord Jesus. In him and in him alone it was fulfilled in all its jots and tittles. When his Spirit rules in the heart of his saints it is just as perfectly holy in them as when it was manifest in himself. Then they do fulfill this royal law by loving one another with a pure heart fervently. The love of the saints is the fruit of the Spirit, and it embraces every one in whom the image of Christ is manifested. No effort can extend this love to one who does not bear this divine seal, nor can one who is led by the Spirit withhold the affection of fellowship from one in whose conduct and conversation Christ is revealed. Love always discriminates, and it can only flow out to those whose walk and profession attest that they have been with Jesus. That is but hypocrisy which professes indiscriminate love to everybody and everything which claims the name of religion. Even to the saints the exhortation is addressed, saying, "Let brotherly love continue." Nowhere in the law of Christ is there any direction requiring that brotherly love should be originated, or that the saints should begin to love either the Lord or one another. That love is the vital breath of all who have the Spirit of Christ. In letting it continue the saints do not have to force love to go out to those whom they regard as brethren. If you must try to love your brother you have not the love of Christ. True fellowship and love flow out involuntarily to those who have "obtained like precious faith with us through the righteousness of God and our Savior Jesus Christ." Just in proportion as we see the evidence of that Spirit dwelling in our brother, exactly to that degree will our love be developed toward that brother. So that it is proof of the reality of the love of Christ in that saint who cannot love all the saints alike. When all alike manifest the Spirit of Christ then brotherly love can alike embrace all.

This law is distinctly called "the royal law," in contrast with that "law of a carnal commandment" which was given by the hand of Moses. Of this royal law all the saints are made willing subjects by the work of God in them. It requires no slavish obedience to arbitrary demands. Indeed, it recognizes no unwilling service. The only acceptable obedience to this royal law is that which is rendered in spirit and in truth. Such service is the most delightful privilege of those who are led by the Spirit of God. No others can even desire to yield obedience to its holy injunction. The natural children of Jacob were by their birth of the flesh entitled to all the privileges and under all the obligations written in that law which was given to them as a people. It was not needful that they should have the faith of Abraham to secure those blessings which were given in that law. But it is written of that law that it made nothing perfect.—Heb. vii. 19. Neither the blessings nor the curse of the law given by Moses extended beyond this earthly state of existence. Its rewards for obedience were temporal blessings, and its penalties for disobedience were temporal calamities. The "royal law" is the antitype of that law which was indeed holy, but which had no life-giving power. Every one in whom this law is revealed is made free from the law of sin and death; for this reason this law is called "the perfect law of liberty." It is "the royal law" as being directly put in the heart of his people by the King of glory, whose Spirit makes them willing in the day of his power. They are not held under the hard and merciless requirements of that law which was graven in tables of stone; for there was no liberty under that dispensation. They are called to liberty by that almighty voice of God which delivers them from the power of darkness, and translates them into the kingdom of his dear Son. By this perfect law of liberty they are judged. The secret thoughts of the heart are discerned in this judgment. They stand before the judgment seat of Christ continually, and are judged by the law of liberty. This law cannot be deceived by outward forms of obedience; it requires truth in the inward parts. Love must be in the heart, otherwise its profession is hypocrisy. In letting this love continue, the saints do well. None can know anything of this love without the Spirit of Christ dwelling in them. Its existence in the heart works in them obedience to this royal law; they make manifest that work when they work out that which is thus wrought in them. Thus they fulfill the royal law.

On the other hand, there is such a thing as the saints violating the royal law by having respect to persons. In so doing they commit sin, and are convinced of the royal law as transgressors. This respect to persons is in contrast with the perfect love which is commended in the preceding verse. Often the tempter accuses the little children of God, charging that they commit sin in failing to feel the same love to every one whom they believe to be saints. This expression of James is perhaps suggested in support of such accusation. But in this, as in every case when the adversary quotes scriptural words, by perverting their application he turns the truth of God into a lie. The love of Christ cannot be extended to one in whom there is no manifestation of the Spirit of Christ. Those who claim ability to love all alike, either deceive themselves or betray ignorance of the true love which is the fruit of the Spirit.

The sin which the saints commit in having respect to persons is not a violation of the law of sin and death, for they are not under that law; but the law which convinces them as transgressors is the royal law of liberty, which God has put in their inward parts, and written in their hearts. That law provides the chastening rod as evidence that God deals with the transgressor in paternal love and mercy. The liberty of the saints is not freedom to continue in sin, but deliverance from the love of sin. If any professed disciple of Jesus can excuse himself in sin by pleading his belief in salvation by grace, the evidence is clear that he is not led by the Spirit of Christ and the love of holiness. So, when one is mourning under the consciousness of his own weakness, and longing to be free from the hateful bondage of sin, it is manifest that the love of holiness dwells in him.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

W. C. Medill died March 6th, 1889, aged twenty-eight years and some months.

A relation of the Lord's gracious dealings with this dear brother will be found published in volume IV., number 21, of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. Although we never saw this brother, yet in him truly was manifest how the Lord teaches his people his own doctrine; and in the midst of a gainsaying world he was enabled to declare his love, and to earnestly contend for the doctrine of God our Savior. The following was written by his mother:

"He has been poorly for the last two years, but only kept his bed for the last two weeks. His sickness turned into ulceration of the bowels, and he was a great sufferer, but bore it with christian patience. The last night he was here on earth I was sitting by his bedside, and felt sorry to see him suffer so much. I got up and bent over him, and told him to ask the Lord to take him out of pain. His answer was, 'I must wait the Lord's time.' Regarding his religious views, he never claimed any doctrine but that of the Old School Baptists, although he was never baptized. He was a strong believer in their doctrine, but would not have a Regular Baptist minister (New School) baptize him, for he thought they were not right; and he could not get an Old School Baptist preacher to baptize him, for there are no Old School Baptists in these parts. He belonged to no church, but I believe he was one of God's chosen. He longed to be where there were some Old School Baptists. He felt happy to leave this world of sorrow and go to a better, that is, a heavenly."

He wrote the following a little time before he died:

"Weakened, wounded, sick and lame,
All unholy, all unclean;
Worse and worse myself I see,
Yet the Lord remembers me."
"What was there in me that could merit esteem,
Or give the Creator delight?
'Twas even so, Father, we ever must sing,
Because it seemed good in thy sight."
"Put this on a plain slab over the earth that covers me, 'Beneath this lie the mortal remains of one who was polluted and corrupted in sins.'
"Depraved and corrupted, than worse
there was none,
Redeemed by God in Christ Jesus his Son;
Whose only hope was in electing grace,
His Redeemer God his resting place.
His body, though dead, yet shall live, Clothed in immortality if Jesus shall give."

FRED. W. KEENE.

Mercy Thompson, relict of Elder Henry Thompson, departed this life in Philippi, W. Va., Sept. 5th, 1888, at the residence of her daughter, Mrs. Jane Wilson, aged eighty-eight years and fifteen days.

She was born Aug. 21st, 1800, in Hampshire County, Va., and emigrated to the western part of the state when quite young. The family of Mr. Perrill had been trained toward the Methodist persuasion, but this had but little effect when the light of revelation from the Savior of sinners was made manifest in her christian experience, and the love of God was shed abroad in her heart to the knowledge of Jesus Christ, whom to know is life eternal. This was after she was united in marriage to brother Thompson. She immediately inclined after the Baptists, they being all one in that day. She loved their company and their preaching, and was willing to live and to die with them. She came before the church and related her experience, and was baptized the next day by Elder Benjamin Holden, which was on the fourth Sunday in November, 1835, one month before her husband came. Sister Thompson filled her seat in the church for more than half a century, with but little exception. She was a firm believer in the doctrine of election, predestination, and salvation by grace through the blood and merits of her adorable Redeemer. Her last days seemed to be her best days, and were mostly devoted to reading the holy Scriptures. She had strings and slips of paper to mark the places she wanted to find. One of her favorite hymns was No. 700, Beebe's Collection. Nearly all her talk was about heavenly things, and the perfect poverty on the part of poor, fallen man. She said those were poor company for her who believed in the legal system doctrine. Her whole soul seemed fired with the prospects of a better world, and longed to depart and be with Christ. She much desired before her dissolution to see her oldest son follow the Lord Jesus in baptism; and the time came when she sat on the bank of the river and saw him put under the water and raised up out of the water, to her great satisfaction. Three of her five children are members in her church, one a Deacon. She died easily, lasting but a few minutes after she was paralyzed. She was interred in the cemetery near her church house, by the side of her husband, to await the great resurrection day, when this mortal shall put on immortality, and death be swallowed up in victory. Peace and the riches of God's grace be on the children.

J. S. CORDER.

PHILIPPI, W. Va.

DIED—At her home near Oak Grove, in Prince William Co., Va., March 7th, 1889, Mrs. Julia Posey, aged thirty-two years.

The deceased was a friend of our people, regularly attending our meetings whenever she had the opportunity. Her death is a testimony of the uncertain character of all that relates to this mortal life. Young in years, and, a short time previous to her death, apparently in excellent health, she was suddenly called from time to eternity, leaving her husband and children, together with her mother, who is a member of the Occoquan Church, and other relatives, to mourn their loss in her death. I attended her funeral at our meeting-house at Oak Grove, March 9th, speaking to a large congregation of brethren, relatives and friends. The family have our sympathy.

From far and near we hear of death and affliction among our people. We know that he who holds all destinies in his eternal hands directs every shaft that flies from the quiver of death. In every affliction his purpose is displayed. With supreme confidence in him, we wait in patient, fervent hope the unfolding of his will.

WM. M. SMOOT.

OCCOQUAN, Va.

My husband, Samuel R. Cooper, died May 2d, 1889. He was as well as usual that day, went to the post-office in the morning, came home and ate his dinner, and went to his office to do some writing, being Justice of the Peace. He came in toward evening and said to our daughter, Mrs. Beardsley, with whom we have lived since last October, that he wanted a fire, as he felt chilly, and thought he had taken cold. He ate his supper, talked awhile with the family, and then went to our room and read some in the SIGNS. He requested me to read one piece, and then said he felt like lying down, which he did for a few moments, when he said he had hard pain. We gave him some medicine, and he lay still for a moment, then groaned aloud, breathed two or three times, and was still. Thus he passed away. His age was eighty-two years, four months and fifteen days.

My husband was born in Olive, Ulster Co., N. Y., Dec. 18th, 1806, moved with his parents to Caroline, Tompkins Co., N. Y., in 1815, and we were married Nov. 18th, 1827. We have had three daughters and one son, all married; also, twelve grandchildren and one great-grandchild. He leaves three brothers and three sisters. We came to Bourbon, Douglas Co., Ill., in 1870. He never made a public profession of religion, but has been a firm believer in the doctrine and order of the Primitive Baptists for fifty years. At the time of the division of the Baptists he was confused for awhile. His parents went with the Missionary Baptists, and mine went with the Old School. He then took the Bible and studied it night and day, until he was established in the doctrine, and went with the Primitive order, being always ready to defend the cause and support it until his death.

Elder Wm. Luce preached a short discourse on the funeral occasion on the subject of the resurrection, which was always a glorious theme with him. Although I feel lonely, I feel to praise the Lord for his goodness in sparing him so long. We lived together sixty-one years, and then the Lord took him quietly, to rest forever. He had no trouble about his temporal affairs, but talked a great deal about the departures of some from the doctrine of the Bible. No one was ready to talk with him on the Scriptures, as there are none in the neighborhood except our own family who love the doctrine we believe; but we have good neighbors.

Dear brethren, the SIGNS has been a great comfort to us, especially during the last year, as we could not get to our meeting often, and but few of our order come to see us. I wish Elder D. Bartley, and many others I could mention, could come once more; but I do not expect to be here very long, as I am in my eighty-eighth year.

MRS. S. R. COOPER.

BROTHER O. R. Williams died at his home in Shelby Co., Ky., March 6th, 1889, in his eighty-sixth year.

He took a cold, and lived but eight or ten days after he was taken sick. He was born July 21st, 1803, in Clark Co., Ky., and was the second son of Wm. W. and Margaret Williams. He was twice married. His first wife was Nancy Robinson, daughter of John Robinson, of Lafayette Co., Ky. She died in 1831, leaving one daughter and one son. The daughter is the wife of the writer. Her brother has been dead over thirty years. His second wife was Mildred Flinn. They were married in 1833, in Clark Co., Ky. To them were born eight sons and five daughters. Eight of them are yet living.

The subject of this notice was baptized by Elder J. F. Johnson. Brother Johnson preached at his house, and baptized him in the creek near by, having previously joined at Bethel, where he attended regularly as long as he was able. Being very feeble for the last two years, and living about fourteen miles from the meeting-house, he could not attend. He was an orderly and consistent member of the church, a kind husband, a good neighbor, upright and prompt in all his dealings with his fellow-men. By his request there was no funeral service. He was buried in the family grave-yard in the garden, all his children being present but one, with a number of his grandchildren. His last wife has been dead nearly twenty years. May we all walk in the footsteps of his christian walk, is my prayer.

J. A. MONEY.

B. F. Watson was born in Adams Co., Ohio, March 5th, 1841, and died in Miami, Saline Co., Mo., March 20th, 1889.

He was united in marriage with Miss Sarah E. Hawk in December, 1859, and emigrated to Missouri in September, 1872, living some time in Carroll Co., and afterward in Saline Co. He was a son of our dear brother, the late Deacon Joseph M. Watson, formerly of Ohio, but who died a few years ago in Wakenda, Carroll Co., Mo., and his beloved consort, our venerable sister Watson, who now lives in the same place. I was informed that Mr. Watson suffered greatly during his last sickness, which continued more than two weeks, but bore it very patiently, and expressed himself as being not so much troubled about earthly things (though having many strong ties to bind him to earth) as concerned about his future state and heavenly things. He had not professed religion, but spoke many things, and seemed exercised in such a way as to lead us to indulge in the fond hope that a good work was begun in him; and if so, "we are confident of this very thing, that he which hath begun a good work in you will perform it until the day of Jesus Christ." May the Lord comfort the bereaved ones.

He leaves the wife of his youth, with ten children and five grandchildren, to mourn the loss of husband and father; also his aged mother, who is blind, desolate and afflicted, but trusting in the Lord, and as bright an example of patient waiting on the Lord with sweet confidence and humble resignation as I ever knew. May the Lord continue to show himself unto her better than husband and sons, and unto her give in his house and within his walls "a place and a name better than of sons and of daughters," yea, an everlasting name, that shall not be cut off. He leaves also four sisters (one of them helpless and afflicted), several nephews and nieces, with many other kindred, to follow in the last solemn journey. May the Lord "so teach us to number our days that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom," and "make us glad according to the days wherein thou hast afflicted us, and the years wherein we have seen evil."

R. M. THOMAS.

St. JOSEPH, Mo., May 9th, 1889.

Mrs. Mary Shields, relict of Nathan V. Shields, was born in Harrison Co., Ind., April 9th, 1815, and departed this life Dec. 22d, 1888, aged seventy-three years, eight months and thirteen days.

Her maiden name was Kingery, and on March 5th, 1835, she was united in marriage with Mr. Shields. The next year they came to Illinois, and located in Woodland Township, Fulton Co., where she resided until her death. She united with New Providence Church of Regular or Primitive Baptists in the winter of 1853, in which faith she lived a humble disciple of Christ until her death. This dear sister was so conscientious and honest in her profession that, many years after she became a member, she requested the church to allow her to be baptized, as she had been led to believe that her first baptism had not been legal. Her request was granted, and I baptized her. I have known this dear sister for more than thirty years as a humble and devoted follower of her Lord and Master, whose house was ever open to entertain the brethren and to feed the poor, and who was a faithful wife and an affectionate mother. She had ten children, six of whom survive her.

Her last sickness did not last over two days and a night; and the weather being bad, and I out of reach, the family postponed her memorial services until last Sunday, when I met a large audience in the village of Summum, and spoke to them concerning Christ and the resurrection. May the Lord bless the sorrowing children and relatives with resignation to the divine will.

I. N. VANMETER.

MACOMB, Ill., May 2, 1889.

DIED—At the house of her father, near Rock Springs, Lancaster Co., Pa., Laura F. Jenkins, in the twenty-ninth year of her age.

The deceased was a daughter of brother George and sister Susan Jenkins, both members of the church at Rock Springs. They, together with their entire family, attended our meetings at that place while they remained at home. The deceased was not a member of that church, as were five of the sisters, but was surely in possession of the same blessed hope, the reason of which she was enabled to express by her interesting letters to the writer of this notice, as well as to others, on the subject of the Lord's gracious work in her heart. Her regular attendance at our meetings gave us opportunity to notice the growing interest in the things of the kingdom. The pleasures of the world, which are generally enjoyed by the world, seemed to have but little attraction for her; but she had a hungering after righteousness, and a great desire to be among that number who are accounted the people of God. She was much beloved and esteemed at home and abroad where she was known. Gentle in her disposition, patient and forgiving, she manifested great patience and calmness in the closing days of her life. When told that her case was alarming, she with more calmness than those around her replied, "I am willing to go." And to further questions she answered, "I have a Savior, in whom is my trust." Her disease seemed to be of the stomach and bowels. After suffering severely about the space of twelve days, enduring patiently, she fell asleep on April 20th, 1889. The funeral took place on the 23d, and was attended by all the family except one son, who is at a great distance from home; also by a large gathering from the surrounding neighborhood. The interment was at Rock Springs, with some remarks on the occasion by the writer.

Those who depart are often more composed than those who remain. She leaves eight sisters and two brothers, together with her parents, a little longer to remain on these earthly shores. May the Lord bless them.

WM. GRAFTON.

FOREST HILL, Md.

DIED—At her son's residence, while visiting, near Fossil, Gilliam Co., Oregon, my wife, Jane Hale, on March 2d, 1889, in the sixty-second year of her age.

She joined the Regular Baptist Church in Cass Co., Mo., in 1847, and was baptized by Elder W. M. Ousby. Her membership at the time of her death was in Friendship Church, at Mayville, in the vicinity where she died. She was a great sufferer for many years from disease of the liver and kidneys. She was firm in the faith of God's predestination and election, which was the only ground of her hope. Notwithstanding her sufferings were great and her speech difficult, yet in the very extremities of death she could exclaim, in a strong, clear voice,

"There's not a cloud that doth arise
To hide my Jesus from my eyes."

And again, "All will soon be light, brethren and sisters. It's enough! it's enough!" Blessed be God, who will be with his chosen in life, and in death will not forsake them.

I remain your little brother,

H. J. HALE.

THE above was written by our beloved brother Hale. I will add that I have been personally acquainted with our dear departed sister for nearly two years, during which time I have had the pleasure of meeting her often in "the house of God." Her faithfulness in filling her seat is worthy of imitation. I have seen her there frequently when she was hardly able to be out of bed, and had to be helped into the house. She delighted to hear the glorious tidings of salvation through Jesus, and to converse with her brethren on the glories of his kingdom. Hence we feel that though there is one less to adorn the church on earth, there is one more added to the church triumphant. Peace to her slumbering dust, till she awakes in his likeness. Your brother in hope,

JAMES C. TURNIDGE.

MAYVILLE, Oregon.

SISTER Annie Garrett, after long and painful suffering with consumption, departed this life April 23d, 1889, in the forty-ninth year of her age.

She bore her affliction patiently, and was conscious in her last sickness that her departure was at hand, and longed to depart and be at rest. Sister Annie was baptized in the fellowship of Ebenezer Church, in this (Loudoun) county, by Elder Leachman, several years ago, and continued a worthy and highly esteemed member, adorning her profession by a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price. Thus another one of the little flock at Ebenezer has been called to her long home, and we are left to mourn; but we sorrow not as those who have no hope, feeling assured that our sister is not dead, but sleepeth. "For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him" in the morning of the resurrection.

Sister Annie leaves many relatives and friends, by whom she was beloved, and to whom we extend our sympathy, praying that the Lord may sanctify this afflictive dispensation to their good, and give them resignation to his righteous will.

E. C. TRUSSELL.
PAXSON, Va., May 2, 1889.

Elizabeth Johnson departed this life, after a serious illness of three weeks, on April 12th, 1889, aged seventy-six years and twenty-one days.

Her health had been remarkably good all her life up to the time of her last sickness. She was born in Hardin Co., Ky., and at the age of about eighteen years she removed from thence with her parents to Indiana, and settled almost within sight of where she lived and died. She was twice married, her first husband dying soon after their marriage, leaving her with two children, one of which soon died, the other surviving to the age of twenty-four years. Soon after the death of her first husband she again married, by whom she had five children, four of whom survive her. Her last husband died May 9th, 1874. She united herself with the Regular Baptist Church at Bethlehem, near where she lived, over forty years ago, when her only way of going was on horseback, carrying as many as three small children with her, the distance being about five miles; but she was seldom absent. I think Elder Joel Hume baptized her, who still survives at quite a ripe old age. She was much devoted to the reading of the Bible and the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, and to the cause of religion in general, and the poor and afflicted always received a helping hand. Our affections are great, but let God's will be done.

SISTER Manerva J. McDonald died Feb. 23d, 1889, aged sixty-eight years, six months and eighteen days.

Sister McDonald was born in Lee Co., Va., of humble parents, her maiden name being Shumate. She professed a hope in Christ at the age of twelve or thirteen years, and joined the Primitive Baptist Church at Big Springs, Claiborne Co., Tenn., and afterward, by letter, Union Church, Union Co., Tenn., and lived a faithful and orderly christian until called home. Sister McDonald was confined to the house for many years before her death, not being able to walk a step. She was able to sit up in her chair and read her Bible, which was her great delight. Her husband, who preceded her but a few years to his reward, was a faithful and able minister of the gospel. She leaves five children, four girls and one boy, with many relatives and friends, to mourn their loss; but our loss is her eternal gain. We mourn not as those who have no hope; for we believe that when Christ shall appear, those that sleep in Jesus God will bring with him.

JAMES McDONALD.
SHARP'S CHAPEL, Tenn.

LITTLE Charlie W. Green, infant son of Charles W. and Sallie R. Green, and grandson of Peter and Sarah C. Meredith, departed this life Feb. 20th, 1889, aged seven months.

Just as the tender blossom was opening into life to gladden our hearts, and to enliven the family circle with his sweet smiles, it was plucked by the rude hand of death and borne in triumph to the grave. This makes three little ones that we have lost inside of three years. May the Lord, who gave, and who also hath taken away, sanctify the heavy stroke to the good of his bereaved and sorely chastened parents, and enable us to realize that it is God, and that he doeth all things well; and may we bow to his holy will and say, "Thy will be done."

Those coming from the east or west by the New York, Lake Erie & Western R. R. will be met at Howell's Depot on the arrival of the way train from the west at 1:00 p. m., and on the arrival of the Orange County Express from the east, which leaves foot of Chambers St., New York, at 4:30 p. m., arriving at Howell's at 7:15 p. m., on Tuesday.

A cordial invitation is extended to all our brethren and friends to meet with us.

BENTON JENKINS.

THE Chemung Old School Baptist Association will be held, if the Lord will, with the Vaughan Hill Church, Bradford Co., Pa., on Wednesday before the third Sunday in June (12th), 1889, and continue in session the two following days.

YEARLY MEETINGS.

PLEASE publish a yearly meeting to commence at four o'clock p. m. on the 7th day of June, being Friday before the second Sunday in the month, to be held with the New Hope Church, in Dwight, Butler Co., Neb., on the line of the Free-mont, Elkhorn & Missouri Valley R. R.

This meeting is for the purpose of preaching and consultation as to the advisability of organizing a yearly meeting compact for some of the churches in this part of the state.

A cordial invitation is extended by the brethren of New Hope Church for all that can to meet with us on this occasion.

JAMES M. TRUE.

A YEARLY or two days meeting will be held with the Clovesville Old School Baptist Church, the Lord willing, on the fourth Saturday and Sunday in June (22d and 23d).

A cordial invitation is extended to all lovers of the truth, and especially ministers of our faith and order. Those coming by rail will stop at Griffin's Corners station, where they will be met with teams and conveyed to the place of the meeting.

O. F. BALLARD, Church Clerk.

A YEARLY meeting will be held, if the Lord will, with New Hope Church, in Greenbush, Warren Co., Ill., beginning at four o'clock p. m. on Friday before the third Sunday in June, at which meeting, on Saturday, a council is expected to convene for the ordination of brother H. E. Puris to the gospel ministry, if thought advisable. The friends of the cause of Christ are invited.

I. N. VANMETER, Pastor.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date, this date denotes the time at which your subscription expires, and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

THE BIBLE.

DON'T tempt me to leave it,
For in it I find
Ten thousands of blessings,
And comfort of mind.

There's no other volume,
Wherever I look,
Can teach me the doctrine
As this blessed book.

Such wholesome instruction
Is found on each page!
O that it at all times
My mind would engage!

It warns me of danger,
And points out the way
The christian should travel
While prisoned in clay.

It tells me of heaven—
Abode of the blest,
The great resurrection,
The pilgrim's sweet rest.

O go away, skeptic,
And stop your vile war.
Your words are like poison,
Your talk I abhor!

I know that you'd love it,
And read it the more,
Fall down in contrition,
Your Maker adore,

If once you could see him,
And know him as I,
A God of great mercy,
Above you so high.

Once, like you, I labored
To prove it absurd;
But then for the reason—
I never had heard

The voice of sweet Jesus,
Who quickens the dead,
And turns them from Satan,
By whom they are led.

GEORGE A. BRETZ.

ALBION, Ind., May 22, 1889.

I AM BLACK.

THE astonished bride exclaims, Can it be true?

Can he a vile and sinful worm renew,
And cleanse and beautify and love me so?
Then haste, my soul, make speed, unto him go.

But if he can, O tell me if he will;
Or I am lost, undone, and wretched still.
I know where'er he loves he will be true;
But I have spurned his love and mercy too.

I would not listen to his gentle voice,
But made the world and death and hell
My choice.

Depraved in life, defiled in every part,
In thought, in lip unclean, deceitful is my heart,

A filthy mass of foul, polluted rags;
Hide me, ye rugged rocks, beneath your crags.

My heart is hard, and like your flinty stone;

Sure I could not be thus if I am one
On whom his everlasting love was fix'd;
How can such filth and purity be mix'd?
His blood, I know, can wash the foulest stain,

And ease the broken heart of all its pain;
But I can only cry, "Behold, I'm vile!"
My heart like unto adamant the while.

CORRESPONDENCE.

"AND I saw three unclean spirits like frogs come out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet. For they are the spirits of devils, working miracles, which go forth unto the kings of the earth and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty."—Rev. xvi. 13, 14.

DEAR BRETHREN:—I have had a view on the above Scripture for some time, but never felt like expressing it till I read the editorial of March 6th, in which the missionary subject was discussed by you, with quotations from Mr. Taylor, of England, in which are set forth missionary labors in a light that is not commonly received. As I believe the above Scripture has a bearing on that subject, I will try to write a little, and leave it to your disposal.

First. What is meant by the dragon, beast and false prophet? I believe the religion of the world is here represented. The dragon represents Pagan religion—a religion without Christ, and founded on good works, good morals, &c. The original word signifies wild beasts, or animals. As this religion is without any particular training, culture or profession, it is not necessary to subscribe to any particular creed or form; but if a man is good, and does the best he knows, he is all right for heaven. This division embraces a large portion of the earth, and many individuals in what are called "christian lands," and some organizations, such as Unitarians, Free Masons, and some others.

Second. The beast represents a religion with the name of Christ—seven women laying hold of one man, but eating their own bread, and wearing their own apparel, only wishing to be called by his name, to take away their reproach. This division embraces the Roman Catholics, Greek church, and the image of the beast, which represent the daughters of Mystery, Babylon. The original word from which beast is translated signifies domestic, trained beasts, or animals (if I remember rightly, I have this translation from brother Purington's writings), and represents the training that is necessary to make a profession, subscribe to a creed, or comply with conditions. Hence the great zeal of the votaries of the beast for training the young. When this training is accomplished the dragon gets up, and the beast sits down in his seat; as it was when Pagan Rome gave way to "christian" Rome. Hence they worship the dragon, and they worship the beast. The beast that came up out of the earth, which made an image to the first beast, had horns like a lamb, but spake as a dragon. I have heard the same preacher, from the same desk, on funeral occasions, worship the beast and the dragon. For instance, the subject was a professor of religion, and he will be saved, because he joined the church, had the necessary training to comply with the conditions; but not one word about entire dependence on the merits of Christ as the only hope. Perhaps the next will be a non-professor, and he will be preached to heaven because he was a good, upright man, and dealt justly with his neighbor. Not one word about Christ. Herein is where the beast that came up out of the earth spake more like a dragon than the beast that they made an image of; for the Catholics claim no salvation outside of their church. Here is why Masons differ in regard to theirs, being a religious institution, while those that have never joined the beast or his image say it is just as good religion as they want; and those that have accepted the beast's training say it is not a religion at all, but a moral institution: hence it is a mixture of dragon and beast.

Third. The false prophet represents Mohammed, who has about two hundred million followers.

Three unclean spirits like frogs. Having identified, as I trust, the characters out of whose mouths the three unclean spirits came, I will say that I believe the missionary spirit of modern times is represented by the frogs. Unclean spirit, in the Scriptures, frequently represents a spirit of idolatry; and anything short of the true, spiritual worship of God is idolatry. False religionists have always been very zealous and anxious to convert people. Our Lord said to certain characters, "Ye compass sea and land to make one proselyte; and when he is made, ye make him twofold more the child of hell than yourselves."—Matt. xxiii. 15.

If I am right in my application, then there is some adaptation of modern missionism to the natural habits of frogs. The frog is an amphibious creature, and can live in water and out of water, and uses both. So the unclean spirits like frogs can go in the water and immerse, or stay on land and sprinkle or pour. There are some frogs that never go near the water, except to lay their eggs. These represent the Catholics, and some of her daughters, who refuse to immerse. Their eggs represent the seed of false doctrine; and when hatched out they are a tadpole, which is all head and tail. The head represents natural reason, and the tail false instruction. There are six stages from the tadpole to the frog. Then it has lost its tail, and has legs, and is ready to propagate its species. So the unclean spirits have their degrees, from the nursery up to probation, and then confirmation, &c. When they do not need instruction they have lost the tail, and have legs to get around, and give false instruction, and thus raise a brood like themselves.

Now in order that these unclean spirits may lay their eggs in quiet waters, to insure a good hatching and good success, it may seem necessary to them to send the sword before them to subdue the nations, or import handcuffs to terrify. The sword was Rome's first method of "christianizing" the world; and also Mohammed, the false prophet, used the sword to convert to his faith. But this was succeeded by fawning Jesuits, begging money to send missionaries to the heathen, which was the start of modern missionism.

"For they are the spirits of devils, working miracles, which go forth unto the kings of the earth and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty." The Protestant or two-horned beast that came up out of the earth, "he doeth great wonders, so that he maketh fire come down from heaven on the earth in the sight of men, and deceiveth them that dwell on the earth by the means of those miracles which he had power to do in the sight of the beast; saying to them that dwell on the earth that they should make an image to the beast, which had the wound by a sword, and did live."—Rev. xiii. 13, 14. We see the features of the beast in the image; but they have not the power to send forth the sword and handcuffs.

"For they are the spirits of devils." The devil working in and through the depravity of the human heart is the source of all false religion; and the endless, bottomless, depravity and corruption of the natural heart is the bottomless pit, out of which the dragon and beast ascended, and also the spirit of the false prophet. The unclean spirits, like the locusts, that came out of the smoke of the bottomless pit, "had a king over them, which is the angel [god of this world] of the bottomless pit, whose name in the Hebrew tongue is Abaddon, but in the Greek tongue hath his name Apollyon."—Rev. ix. 11.

When we think of the persecutions and diabolical things that have been carried on in the name of religion, we may conclude it is the spirits of devils, that go forth to the kings of the earth, to prepare them for the great day of God Almighty. "And he gathered them together into a place called in the Hebrew tongue Armageddon." "And there were voices, and thunder, and lightning; and there was a great earthquake, such as was not since men were upon the earth, so mighty an earthquake, and so great. And the great city was divided into three parts [dragon, beast and false prophet], and the cities of the nations fell [subdivisions into sects]: and Babylon came in remembrance before God, to give unto her the cup of the wine of the fierceness of his wrath."—Rev. xvi. 16, 18, 19.

It seems, according to Mr. Taylor's account, quite expensive to make "christians" out of the heathen—in northern India, nearly one million dollars per head; China, over four thousand five hundred dollars; in Ceylon, nearly three thousand dollars. Blind zeal! Not one of these converts has ever been shown their helpless, sinful condition in the sight of God. But if God should open the blind eyes of one of them, they would soon get away from modern missionary teaching, which at best can only convert from one error to another. One grand reason why they fail is because they have not got general control of the education of the young; for they have but little influence with the adult. But if they could get control of the young, to sow the seed of false instruction, they would soon hatch a brood of tadpoles, which would soon become unclean spirits, like frogs. This is what caused the leaders in proselyting to seize the Sunday School, and change it from a secular institution to the great auxiliary of their churches, to fill them with graceless professors. "Who is like unto the beast?" Who is able to make war with him? "And all that dwell upon the earth shall worship him, whose names are not written in the book of life of the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world."—Rev. xiii. 8.

The foregoing was written some time ago, and laid aside through the pressure of business; but I have concluded to add a little more, and send to you to read, and do with as you may think best.

It is generally conceded, I believe, that the great red dragon, having seven heads and ten horns, represents Pagan Rome; and the beast that John saw coming up out of the sea represents "christian Rome," so-called. But it is the spirit of these things that I am considering. "For they are the spirits of devils, working miracles, which go forth unto the kings of the earth and of the whole world." Now I believe the spirit of the dragon is that natural, universal, inherent principle or belief in man that he can do some "good thing to inherit eternal life." This is a child of the devil, and is ever ready to devour the "man child," and believes what the serpent said, "Ye shall not surely die." Hence, according to that, man is not dead in trespasses and sins. "And I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed." "And there was war in heaven [Jewish heaven]; Michael and his angels fought against the dragon [Pagan idolatry]; and the dragon fought, and his angels."—Rev. xii. 7. So the dragon-spirit, that comes out of the heart or bottomless pit, tells men they can do something to be saved; and the beast tells them what to do to be saved; and the ignorance of the dragon gives way to the instruction and culture of the beast. "And the dragon gave him his power, and his seat, and great authority." Thus the teaching of the beast leads men to hate and persecute the truth more than before they made a profession. But the seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head; and that, too, in every vessel of mercy. "In that day the Lord with his sore and great and strong sword shall punish leviathan the piercing serpent, even leviathan that crooked serpent; and he shall slay the dragon that is in the sea."—Isa. xxvii. 1. When that is the case, they are driven away from the refuge of lies, and know of a truth that man is dead in sin, and now believe what God said, "In the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." Such characters know they cannot give life to the dead, and that if God wanted to send the gospel to heathen lands he would do it in his own time and way, independent of the modern frog-system.

VARNA, Ill., April 30, 1889.

LOUVALE, Ga., May 8, 1889.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—I wrote you not long since on the subject of preaching, and felt then that I would finish it up; but now I do not really know exactly what points were presented. I have been exercised in mind of late more upon that subject than any other; and without remembering what has gone before, I will write again. I have just read brother Moyers' letter in the last issue of the SIGNS. The prevalent notion with many seems to be that preaching was designed to quicken souls dead in sins and trespasses into divine life, and to save souls eternally from hell. But when we go to revelation and experience, we find it contradicted. We find, however, a salvation in preaching; yet not an eternal salvation, but a salvation to believe in Christ; as it is truly said by the apostle that the promises of God are yea and amen in Christ Jesus, to the glory of God the Father. But out of Christ we do not find any promises; for it is only in, through and by him that we have life and salvation.

I have understood that God ordained preaching for a purpose, and I believe there is a special purpose in preaching. I feel like I am prepared to say that if preaching is to quicken dead sinners into life, I am no preacher, for I have no knowledge of one ever having been quickened by my preaching. I believe there is a sense in which gospel subjects are quickened in hearing and practicing that which is enjoined upon them in the gospel of Christ; but it is a quickening to obedience, and not into divine life. That, we understand, comes alone by the Spirit of God, who quickeneth the dead. The voice of Jesus alone gives life, while the proclamation of the promises of God does stimulate and arouse the true believer to activity and obedience. Paul could say, "Awake, thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light." This belongs alone to the believer in Christ, and not to the world of the dead in sins and trespasses. I believe that preaching is now one of the chief blessings today bestowed upon the household of faith; and it affords me much comfort to know that there are a great many of the heirs of grace who appreciate preaching, and are ready to hear it and heed it. Whether we all conceive the grandeur and glory of it or not, there are some who seem to so esteem it that they can find time to forsake all and go and hear it. I have traveled a good deal lately, trying in my feeble way to present the word of life in preaching, and many have attended the meetings, and the Lord has seemed to bless me with utterance, to speak comfortably to Jerusalem, and to preach the cross of Christ; not with wisdom of words, lest the cross of Christ should be made of none effect. Then I would ask, If it is not to be preached with the wisdom of words, what is the use of these so-called theological seminaries? Paul seemed to believe that the words which the Holy Ghost taught were the proper words; and I wonder if the Holy Ghost has exhausted the vocabulary, and calls on men to supply, out of the scanty store of human learning of the sciences, things for the kingdom of God. We may well ask in this age, What is preaching? Discoursing on a religious subject is the broad meaning of the word, and its common acceptation. But now we ask again, What is preaching the gospel of Christ? Our understanding is different from that of all others. I believe the church has judicial ability touching this momentous question. Judgment is given her. She judges them that are within; and the gospel is within the church, and she is the proper judge; and by reason of divine wisdom, she can tell the difference between the true preaching of the gospel of Christ, and that which is called preaching the gospel of Christ. Sometimes even the ministry preach the gospel only in letter. She is the judge of that also. They preach it in the letter and spirit. She is the judge of that also. And we know that the letter killeth, but the Spirit giveth life. The church often hears what is called preaching, but she can well distinguish between a good moral lecture, and good advice, and preaching the gospel of God, not in word only, but in the power and demonstration of the Spirit.

Samuel Jones, and Mr. Talmage, and a whole host of such, can never have any encouragement from the church of God; for the church knows that what they preach is but slang, and vituperation, and denunciation, and moral lectures, and literary production, which rise up out of the earth, which are sensual and devilish, not having the Spirit. While Mr. Talmage is free from slang, there is not to the true, humble saints of God a bunch of gospel grass in his preaching. It is full of literary bulrushes and historical weeds, fit only for a goat pasture; and we believe the goats feed therein and fatten upon it. But the church of our God needs a heaven-prepared pasture; not the wisdom of this world, but the wisdom which comes from heaven, the gift of God, through Jesus Christ our Lord. If judgment was entered into with those two characters, they need have no fears about being indicted for preaching the gospel of Christ. They would both come clear and go free. I regard the preaching of Samuel Jones to be the brass bell of hell and damnation, and the preaching of Mr. Talmage to be the itching ear preaching spoken of by Paul the apostle. The church of God is not bothered with such, nor could they gain the ear of the true church. She knows what is preaching; what it is for, as well as what it is. While we criticise these things, do we not obey the injunction to save ourselves and them that hear us from such vain delusions? We know our God has said that they would deceive the very elect, if it were possible. But, thank God, they cannot deceive them. God has so arranged, having planted the Spirit of eternal truth in the heirs of promise, that that Spirit will by no means commune with error. He that believes in Christ hath the witness in himself. That witness is true; and no lie is of the truth. Hence you see there is no communion between Christ and Belial, nor fellowship between light and darkness. We understand that the gospel, in the letter and spirit, is of God. Hence the Lord promised to be with the ministry; and every true gospel sermon preached, the Lord is the author of. He is there. Truly may the ministry of Jesus say, What do we here, O Lord, without thee? Jesus said, "Without me ye can do nothing." And in our experience we feel to say, "Truth, Lord." The Lord, it is said, gave the word, and great was the company of them that published it. Jesus to-day is in the midst of the church, and speaks through such as he has chosen the will of God the Father. The pure minds of the saints are stirred up, and they are put in remembrance of these things, though by the new birth and the anointing they know all things, and are established in the present truth.

He who preaches Christ must be called of God, as Aaron was; and no man taketh this honor unto himself. They are in the hands of the Lord, and he turneth them about whithersoever he will. Jesus walks in the midst of the seven golden candlesticks, holding the seven stars in his right hand. The seven stars are the angels of the seven churches in Asia. He said, "Here am I, and the children which thou hast given me." He also said that he was one with his people. He sticketh closer than a brother. "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." Of God also it is said, "Who maketh his angels spirits, and his ministers a flame of fire." They are sent often as fire-brands, to consume the stubble of such as build straw pens on his sacred mountain. When people will build with wood, hay and stubble, they ought to know that the fire from heaven will consume such stuff as arises from men's carnal notions. God's word is compared to water, and also to fire; showing the perfection there is in God, who is the author and finisher of our faith. So we understand that, in a sense, preaching the gospel is compared to the two-edged sword. So we believe that true preaching also serves as the sword placed at the tree of life in the garden to keep the way of the tree of life, lest man should put forth his hand and eat, and live forever. We understand that God calls whom he will, and qualifies them to preach his word; and we believe the true qualification to be faith, and the revelation and Spirit of God; that carnal reason does not figure in this, but all is to the praise and glory of his grace, who has called us to glory and virtue. Paul said, from an inward consciousness of the obligation on him, "Woe is unto me if I preach not the gospel." He was called. He first partook, and afterwards ministered in those things he had partaken of. Isaiah also felt the same woe in refusing to speak that which God bade him speak. God prepares them as he will. He caused Paul to turn aside into the Arabian desert for three years before he was fit to preach. He there, by revelation, learned how to count all his earthly wisdom but dung, that he might win Christ, and be found in him, having a righteousness by faith, which was not a law righteousness, but a revealed righteousness. How solemn it is to hear the gospel of Christ indeed. It is the oracle of God. And how solemn to speak his word. Paul said that he came with fear and trembling, and his speech was that which the Holy Ghost taught, comparing spiritual things with spiritual. "Not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and of power; that your faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God." Ezekiel seems to have had a correct view of gospel preaching in his vision of the living creature which was in the wheel. I believe the brazen laver with the four oxen, with their faces, represents the word of the Lord; and I believe every true gospel sermon looks in every direction; for the truth is perfect. Also, that the four beasts spoken of by John and Ezekiel mean the same thing, and illustrate the character of those who are called of God, as Aaron was.

Blessed are the people that know the joyful sound; for the sound shall go forth; and the word of the Lord shall go forth from Jerusalem. Who can stop or hasten the work of the Lord in his word? "For as the rain cometh down, and the snow from heaven, and returneth not thither, but watereth the earth, and maketh it bring forth and bud, that it may give seed to the sower, and bread to the eater: so shall my word be that goeth forth out of my mouth: it shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it."—Isa. lv. 10, 11. "Is not my word like as a fire? saith the Lord; and like a hammer that breaketh the rock in pieces?"—Jer. xxiii. 29. The washing of water by the word has a meaning. The Bible teaches something about the fuller's soap. So we believe that when the word of God is preached, soap and water are used in cleansing. I think I have seen the flock going up after they were washed by the word. "Now ye are clean through the word which I have spoken unto you," said Jesus. That cleansing is now going on by God's order. Preaching the gospel saves the believer from the snares of men and the gins of deceitful workers. Where the pure gospel of Christ is preached, it delivers the flock from their fears; and during preaching, God descends in blessings on the heads of his flock, and they are kept out of error thereby, saved from the institutions of men, the errors of the wicked, who would rob Christ of his honor and glory. The thief steals men's money; but these religious thieves try to steal Christ's glory; and they are the meanest of all thieves, claiming the honor of saving souls by their preaching which they have invented. But God's dear people are delivered from such evils.

I have written a few things, but have merely touched on the subject. It may be that some one else will also feel inclined to write upon the same subject.

Yours in hope,

W. LIVELY.

WOODSTOCK, Mich., April, 1889.

DEAR BRETHREN:—When our highly esteemed brother, Elder L. B. Hanover, was at our place to attend the sad burial rite of our late lamented sister Elizabeth Swartout, he talked to me of the meaning of some portions of Scripture, and suggested that if I should feel like writing upon them, I should do so. But the Scriptures referred to have not been in my mind at all; and I told the dear brother that I never ventured writing upon a subject unless it had been in some measure working in my mind. But he also gave me another subject, which has kept somewhat in my thoughts; and in respect to his wishes for me to write, I will try to express the thoughts I have, subject, of course, to your disposal.

The words referred to are these, "Let him that is taught in the word, communicate unto him that teacheth in all good things." Quite a number of passages of Scripture occur to my mind which are given something after the same manner as the one just written; such as, "Let your communication be yea, yea; nay, nay; for whatsoever is more than these cometh of evil." "Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts; and let him return unto the Lord; and he will have mercy upon him; and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon." We cannot think the Lord made any mistake when he gave us the record for our learning, instruction, &c. I have thought the admonitions, reproofs and corrections in the Bible are greatly needed by me, if by no other one, and often these things are made a comfort to me.

But I will return to the words repeated to me by the brother. He seemed to carry the thought that he, being a teacher, and I, being taught in the word, could communicate unto him some spiritual good thing. This was a little astonishing to me, and after a little reflection I told him that I could give him the general idea of the Scripture repeated, and that was, "Let him that is taught in the word [spiritual things], communicate [of worldly things] unto him that teacheth." Just the same as Paul speaks of when he says, "If we have sown unto you spiritual things, is it a great thing if we shall reap your carnal things?" But the dear brother did not seem to fully receive that explanation, so I have been trying to find what else it can mean. Yet I still truly believe this to be one meaning or a part of the meaning of the words, although there may be other considerations attending it. "To do good and to communicate, forget not; for with such sacrifices the Lord is well pleased," is what we read. But if these are all worldly things or goods, I would have to beg pardon for interpolating a word, and say, all (temporal) good things. But as the subject works in my mind, I have come to the conclusion that the "all good things" here refer to the teaching, and not to the communicating. We truly feel that it is a great wickedness to give a wrong coloring or shade to the Scriptures; and that is not what I am trying to do, but I am writing my honest impressions in the matter. Paul says of carnal things that they are no great things, nor great consideration if he should reap them of his brethren. He never seemed to set a very great price upon worldly goods. So I hardly feel that we could call them "all good things." I fear I do not make myself understood. It is like this, "Let him that is taught in the word, communicate unto him that teacheth in all good things." It does not say anything about the bad things. The teaching is in all good things. Are not these truly good things of the kingdom of our God? Let him that is taught in the word communicate unto him that teacheth in all these things. We must still think that temporal things are a part of the communicating here referred to; yet there may be variations in the case, or other things also included, for one may be truly taught in the word, and yet have no temporal things to communicate. "It is required of a man according to that which he hath, and not according to that which he hath not." Yet if one hath nothing to give in carnal things, and is yet truly taught in the word, he can acknowledge the same. He can assure the faithful teacher that he hath been taught, built up, strengthened, edified, altogether blessed in receiving the spiritual teaching; thus encouraging his pastor, in giving him to know that his labor is not in vain in the Lord. He may not selfishly close his mouth and show an indifference to so great a blessing as a teacher in the gospel. He can let him know that his soul has feasted and been made glad by the heavenly messages brought out of the store-house of our God, and that the teaching is appreciated. We can give him the humble hospitality of our home, making him feel that he is a most welcome guest; can receive him indeed as an angel, or messenger, of the Lord, ministering to his necessities with our feeble hands as best we can, feeling that we can never repay him for the precious and priceless gift of edification which the Lord has bestowed upon him for our benefit. The queen of Sheba could say of Solomon, "Because the Lord loved his people, therefore made he thee king over them." We know that it was for the love God had to his people that he gave them his Son to die for them; and in him, and for his sake, are all blessings given unto us. "Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning." When the Lord wished to bless his people, he gave them pastors after his own heart; gave them teachers which they could understand. In our sorrowful journey here, let us turn back in our minds and remember what a great favor the Lord has bestowed upon us in the gospel ministry; how nearly all our life we have been favored with the joyful sound, with the glad tidings of great joy, and with the blessing of knowing the joyful sound. In our highest days of spiritual light we have been carried into the height, even into the mansion of the Lord, by the gifts of the teaching ones that the Lord has given unto us. We never can express to them the joy and comfort they have given us. They have welcomed and given us a place in the house of our God, through the ordinances as administered by them unto us; and when the dark hours have fallen upon us, when could we need them more? They have ever been ready to give us encouragement when spiritual darkness was ours; patiently have they borne our murmurings and our peevishness by the way. When the time has come that the Lord has seen fit to remove the light of our eyes from us, when death hath taken our precious ones away, then they have spoken to us words of the better life, of the better country, the heavenly. Only one year ago my aged father was called away, and it is yet present to my memory how my saddened thoughts were carried away with the hope of the better resurrection. Now again another one, a choice one of the little flock, has gone, leaving us sad and lonely. O how precious and lovely do they seem toward the last, as they are moulded more and more into the image of him who was meek and lowly in heart. What a strange spiritual beauty and grace adorns them, far surpassing all natural loveliness. Nearer and closer do they draw to us; and when we know that the natural tie is breaking, yet the strong, sweet spirit of love is growing stronger and stronger; and when at last they are gone, how it does cheer us in our desolation to have the coming of a faithful servant of God, to bring us sympathy, comfort and consolation, telling us of the life that never dies, of the final victory, carrying our minds from earthly to the heavenly things, so that in faith we almost say, "O grave, where is thy victory? O death, where is thy sting?" Also, bringing to our minds with such a realizing force that it is but a little while we are to stay here, but a little while to mourn; that the dear ones are not to return unto us, where all is mourning and death, but we are to go to them, where all is joy and life, even to be with Jesus, and see his glory, which he had with the Father before the world was.

Asking brother Hanover to receive the above as an endeavor to communicate, I remain a very unworthy sister,

KATE SWARTOUT.

OTEGO, N. Y., Jan. 16, 1889.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS:—I believe January is the month that for several years I have written a little for our dear family paper, the SIGNS, and for some little time the desire to do so has been continually before me; and now, if the Lord is pleased to give me suitable words to express my feelings, all will be well, and it may be that some one of the little ones may be comforted the same as we have been while reading the excellent communications from our dear kindred scattered over this widespread country. I am not afraid of my dear brethren and sisters, who have been taught of the Lord to know their own nothingness, and the vileness of their carnal, depraved heart, the temptations of Satan, that monster of all wickedness, who is ever ready to break up any comfort that is given to the trembling ones. It has been quite a battle for me to withstand the unbelief which came like a flood into my mind while thinking of casting in my little tribute of praise and thanksgiving to the God of all grace for his mercy and goodness in standing in and by his servants, keeping them on the sure foundation, so that our family paper, the SIGNS, comes forth clear clean from all creature works and notions. Praise his holy name, and shout aloud for joy, The Lord reigns; let all the earth keep silence. We have just entered upon another year, the events of which are known only to the Creator of all things. But alas! how little we know or understand of the mighty works of him who speaks and it is done; who said, "Let there be light; and there was light." If our mind can go back to the creation, we can trace the work of the Lord's hand in putting down rulers and nations, and in leading the little flock safely on until the gospel day, and the coming of the Messiah. Then the glory of the Lord shone with splendor, so that the shepherds who watched their flocks by night were guided by the star to where the holy child Jesus was cradled. Dear, humble soul, think of the plainness that surrounded the child Jesus. There was no room for him or the parents in the inn, nor is there to this day; but the heaven-born souls can find their own experience in every line. Simeon and Anna waited to clasp the child Jesus to their bosoms; and their joy was so great, their hearts so full, they were ready to depart, for their eyes had seen God's salvation. Let us, dear brethren and sisters, look back over our journey and see if we, though feeling so poor, and sinful, and vain, can look at the place where our hearts have been knit together in love, when the blessed Jesus has talked to us by the way. It may be when we are at meeting, and the little lambs have come to the fold, to lisp forth in broken accents the dealings of the Lord with them, how they have been led from one place to another. Perhaps they have come clear from Babylon. It is a tedious journey for some, especially when they bring their robes with them. Better leave them for the natives of that city to wear. Nothing but the strength of him who is mighty to save can release the captives and let the prisoners go free. Our God has said that he will bring his sons from far, and his daughters from the ends of the earth, even as many as the Lord our God shall call. And they shall sit down with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob in the kingdom of God, to go no more out forever. Can the Lord's children find any rest or comfort outside of this kingdom? Do they not at times by faith see, as it were, the promised land, and while assembled together to testify of the goodness of their covenant-keeping God, feel that Jesus is in their midst? I know your hearts will respond, Yes, and the world with all its allurements put under our feet. What exalted strains flow from the heart when touched by the finger of God's love. I believe that at our June meeting this feeling of love was truly manifested. The King sat with his subjects, fed them through the earthen vessels, and told them they were his. Why should we ever complain at our lot, or the roughness of the way? Our Savior has passed through it all, and paid our debt with his own precious blood while bleeding on the cross. O that we may honor him in our daily walk and conversation, so that we may never bring reproach upon his holy cause. May our robes be kept white, and not be tarnished by going after the devices or fables of men. How needful it is for the true witnesses to stand firm in the faith which was once delivered to the saints. It means, does it not, that it never has changed nor ever will? What emotions thrill the heart while a poor sin-sick soul is enabled by sovereign grace to claim and hold those great and glorious things which are hid from the wise and prudent, but revealed unto the babes. Nothing is so helpless amongst all of God's creatures, or dependent, as babes. How well they represent the family of God. It may be said of us that we boast over others. No, that is not so. I can truly say that, for it has been a wonder to me ever since I first felt it, or it was made known to me, the work which I believe the Lord had commenced, and showed me what a sinner I was. It is a wonder still, and all I can say is, For so it seemed good in his sight. He does not ask vain mortals if he may save them. No. The record of his will says that they were chosen in him before time began, and are made manifest in time, as all his creatures are the work of his own hand. Abel was the first representative of the royal family, born of the Spirit as well as the flesh. Could he boast over his natural brother? It was nothing that he could do, but he was brought into the warfare, and despised by his brother. The carnal mind has always hated the chosen of God, especially if it dwell in the same tent. Is it not a comfort oftentimes when we feel that we were born to die? The separation is taking place continually. Our friends, natural and spiritual, are being called home. Their warfare is then ended here below. No more chilly winds or cloudy sky to disturb them; but they see Jesus, their loved one; yes, see him as he is, and are made like him. May the Lord, who led Israel of old, lead his Israel now in paths of righteousness for his name's sake, and keep them from errors which are flooding our land; and when earthly scenes with them are over, he has promised to gather them as his own dear family, to surround the throne of God and the Lamb forever and ever.

We are very much pleased, and desire to be thankful to him who has, we believe, sustained the SIGNS OF THE TIMES for fifty-six years; and now to have it weekly seems like a miracle. How many isolated ones, who cannot hear the pure gospel proclaimed, are fed and raised up when they trace their own experience in reading from the pen of others, who are strangers to them in the flesh. But what a union in spirit! Surely God's children are all taught of the Lord, and great is their peace in being thus taught. I used to say in gone-by years that I could get some good things from good readers who professed to preach; but I believe the Lord showed me his servants, who were called by him to feed his sheep and lambs. We only have to look at the apostles to know who they are. In those days their pockets were not lined with sermons which they lent to each other; but the Lord told his servants that he would give them words to speak, and that he would supply all their needs. As he has spoken thus, he will surely do. I did not expect to write so much. Desiring your forbearance, I leave this to your better judgment, desiring of the Lord that as he has sustained our brethren editors, so he will continue. I know that each one of our little band would join in love to all the readers of the SIGNS.

As ever, your sister in hope,

C. L. FRENCH.

DAYTON, Wash. Ter., April 30, 1889.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—I have thought for some time of submitting to your better judgment and clearer spiritual vision my views on a certain text of Scripture, which I prefer to quote from Mark, as his statement is more enlarged on one point than the others, I believe, in stating the cause or foundation of the reply of Jesus on the subject, that of the sin against the Holy Ghost, commonly called the unpardonable sin. The passage referred to is in Mark iii. 29, 30: "But he that shall blaspheme against the Holy Ghost hath never forgiveness, but is in danger of eternal damnation: because they said, He hath an unclean spirit."

Now that you may be able to understand the idea I wish to convey, I will state it here; and it is that there is no unpardonable sin; or, in other words, all sins are pardonable. And now, to prove this hypothesis, I will cite you to the twenty-eighth verse of the same chapter, "Verily I say unto you, All sins shall be forgiven unto the sons of men, and blasphemies wherewithsoever they shall blaspheme." Now you see I have transposed the order in which this passage stands in the book, because I wish to use it as proof of the statement I have made; for when I begin to take the measure and to weigh the Lord's "verily," I find it outmeasures the heavens, and is more ponderous than the earth. Yea, it is deeper than hell, and higher than the satellites of glory. But that we may understand the Lord's meaning, it will be necessary to know the subject of which he is speaking. Then we must remember, first of all, that he said he was the Son of God; to prove which, he had been working the most astounding of miracles, of which a master in Israel had said that no man could do except God were with him. And to escape the logic of facts transpiring before their eyes, they said, "He casteth out devils by Beelzebub," or as in the twenty-ninth verse as above, and which saying of theirs forms the basis of Christ's saying, as in verse twenty-nine.

Now let us reason on the foregoing a little. Well, if the Lord had power to cast out devils or perform such miracles, then, according to Nicodemus, a master in Israel, he was of God; and this admitted, he could not lie. And the Lord's saying, "I am the Son of God," being true, the miracles which he wrought demonstrated that truth.

But if this position be disputed, then another reason or cause must be sought. And if no man could do such works, the cause must be supernatural; and therefore it being denied by them, the Jews, that Jesus was or is the Son of God, they said he cast out devils by the prince of devils. Well now, the claim of Jesus being the truth, all sins are pardonable. But on the other hand, if (hypothetically) Christ had only cast out devils by Satan, Satan's kingdom was dead; and also, there was no Mediator, and Christ was not the Son of man, as Mediator between God and men. Hence his language about sinning against the Son of man, and of forgiveness. But if the supposition of the Jews be the true one, then all sins would be unpardonable, because against God as a Spirit, without a Mediator between. And himself being the only one that could fill this place, they, as well as all men, would be left without hope. But if the fact remains that he with the finger or Spirit of God cast out devils, as said Jesus, then surely "the kingdom of God is come unto you." And so this claim of his being the truth, that he was the Son of God, and had power to cast out devils, it follows that all sins are pardonable; for grace abounds to the chief of sinners, and his blood cleanses from all sin.

CIRCULAR LETTERS.

The Baltimore Primitive Baptist Association, assembled with our sister church at Tuscarora, Pa., May 15th, 16th and 17th, 1889, sends greeting unto the churches composing the same.

DEARLY BELOVED IN THE LORD:—In addressing you this Circular we feel first to thank the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ for every blessing of the past and present, and especially that we as an association are at peace, with no disturbing elements, no wrangling over words to no profit, neither a disposition to make a brother an offender for a word; and we realize "how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity." We have been taught by experience and the written word of God that the church of Jesus Christ is composed of sinners saved by grace, who have been brought to feel the sinfulness of sin, and their lost condition, and their need of salvation. While realizing that they are sinners, they also have hope that Christ Jesus came into the world to save such. Paul says (and so does every quickened sinner), "This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners." Some may object to the expression, "quickened sinners," as not being in the Scriptures; but Paul tells his Ephesian brethren, "And you hath he quickened, who were dead in trespasses and sins." The very same "you." Therefore sinners are the recipients of this great salvation, and experience in their hearts a knowledge of it. "We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren." The sinner saved by grace has this knowledge, and therefore has hope. There is no hope nor need of hope except for the sinner. The man that sinned is the same that is to be saved, or is saved. Man became a sinner by transgression. "The soul that sinneth it shall die," which necessitates a sacrifice; and that sacrifice must of necessity be in the likeness of sinful flesh. "For what the law could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh, God sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin, condemned sin in the flesh: that the righteousness of the law might be fulfilled in us, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit." "For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God." The apostle is evidently here talking to sinners saved by grace. "To all that be in Rome, beloved of God, called saints." Grace and peace from God the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ are pronounced upon them. "Therefore being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ." But except a man be born again he can have no part nor lot in this matter, neither any knowledge of salvation. To be born is to make manifest that which existed before. As we have been born of the flesh, manifest as children of Adam, we must also be born of the Spirit, manifest as children of God, heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ Jesus; objects of his love and care, who are kept by his power through faith unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the last time. These are an elect people, begotten again unto a lively hope, to an inheritance reserved for them who are thus kept. The child of God, the sinner saved by grace, the same that was lost, but is now found, that was blind, but now sees, is kept. Jesus said unto the two disciples that John sent, "Go and show John again those things which ye do hear and see; the blind receive their sight, and the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear, the dead are raised up, and the poor have the gospel preached to them." This certainly is a marvelous change. When Lazarus came forth from the grave a living man, he was the same man, only raised from death to life; and Lazarus was a living witness to the fact. So was every one that was healed of any disease; and so, we understand, is every one that is born again, born of the Spirit, having Christ in them the hope of glory, and are living witnesses of this great change. This power is within, controlling and working in them to will and to do, causing them to walk after the Spirit. "There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit."—Rom. viii. 1. The words now and then seem to convey an important idea in this connection. "There is therefore," because in his experience the apostle realized his love for good, and his hatred for evil; and finding a law, that when he would do good, evil was present with him, he cried out, "O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the [not this, as some have it] body of this death? I thank God, through Jesus Christ our Lord." Being delivered, there is now no condemnation to them (the same that were under condemnation) which are in Christ Jesus. Being freed from the law, there is now no condemnation. While under the law we were under condemnation; but Moses is now dead, and we are married to another, even to him who is raised from the dead, that we might bring forth fruit unto God. This then is the same man that was under condemnation who is now in Christ Jesus, "who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit." Some suppose there is a condition expressed here—that is, if you walk after the flesh you are brought under condemnation; but if you walk after the Spirit you shall be free from condemnation; but the language is peculiar, as is all Scripture language. This expression presents the evidence that they are in Christ Jesus. It is not a condition, as though it said, If they do. If you walk after the flesh you manifest that you are under condemnation; but if you walk after the Spirit you manifest that you are in Christ Jesus. "For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death." If then we are in Christ Jesus, and Christ is in us, there is such a mingling or unity that there can be no separation. "God manifest in the flesh." Not that the fleshly mind does not sin, because it is as prone in that direction as ever; but it is kept by the power (Christ) within. "Sin shall not have dominion over you; for ye are not [now] under the law, but under grace." "For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God." "For ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear; but ye have received the Spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father." There is evidently some one here receiving; and it is not the Spirit of adoption, for that is what is received. Therefore we conclude that these same sinners that Paul was talking to were the recipients of this Spirit of adoption, "whereby we [Paul including himself] cry, Abba, Father." This same man, who before was called Saul of Tarsus, but now is called Paul, realized the change, and immediately goes to work to build up the things he once destroyed. With this witness comes hope; for we think the creature does hope. In Romans viii. 19, 20 we read, "For the earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God. For the creature was made subject to vanity, not willingly, but by reason of him who hath subjected the same [the creature] in hope." "The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit [experimentally] that we are the children of God." Now, having the first fruits of the Spirit, the Spirit of adoption, we wait for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body. We cannot in any sense separate the we, our or I from that which the Spirit helps, keeps, directs, supports and saves with an everlasting salvation. There is a witness that gives power and glory to God, and loves, honors and obeys him. A spirit cannot be obedient unto itself, but a subject can be obedient unto a king or a spirit. If then we be the subjects of God's grace, mercy and love, we as sinners saved by grace will be subject to his laws and commands, and obey them in love.

Now, dear brethren, we feel constrained to exhort you to watch and pray, lest ye fall from that steadfastness which is in Christ Jesus, and that you may be kept from every evil way. "Now I beseech you, brethren, mark them which cause divisions and offenses contrary to the doctrine which ye have learned; and avoid them." When we hear of the goodness and mercy of God toward you, in keeping you from every wind of doctrine of men, and establishing you in the truth as it is in Jesus, we feel to take courage, and continue to put our trust and confidence in him who is able to keep you and us from falling, and to present us faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy. Amen.

CORRESPONDING LETTERS.

The Baltimore Old School Baptist Association, in session with the church at Tuscarora, Juniata Co., Pa., May 15th, 16th and 17th, 1889, to the several associations and meetings with whom she corresponds, sends greeting.

DEAR BRETHREN:—According to our custom, with pleasure we embrace this opportunity to address you again, that we may inform you of our affairs, how we are faring in our wilderness pilgrimage. We desire to say that we as an association are dwelling in perfect peace and harmony. We are not aware of any difference whatever among us with regard to the doctrine and order of the gospel. We hold the same precious truth that our fathers believed, and that we learned in our own early experience. We feel that it is perhaps at this time of more than usual importance that we state distinctly the faith which we hold with regard to the salvation of men. We believe, lovingly and steadfastly, in the completeness of the redemption that is in Christ Jesus, so that nothing either great or small remains for us to do as a condition of our salvation; but that good works will surely follow redemption and faith begotten in our hearts. We wish also to distinctly state that we believe in the salvation of sinful men; that Jesus died for sinful men; that he arose for the justification of sinful men; that by his Spirit he comes and reigns in them; that men and women are the subjects of his grace in the birth from above, without which no man can see the kingdom of heaven; and that sinners, dead formerly, are now made alive unto God, and translated out of the kingdom of darkness into the kingdom of God's dear Son. This the Bible warrants us to believe, and this we have been taught by experience.

In the receipt of Minutes and messengers from sister associations there are some asking correspondence with us, which we greatly appreciate, and with whom we are in full fellowship; and while we greatly admire the christian spirit which they have manifested in the difficulties in which they have been involved, and deeply sympathize with them, after a careful consideration of the matter we have concluded that for the glory of God and the peace of Zion it is best to lay the matter over for the present, or until this association more clearly sees the right way. We are glad for the coming of your Minutes and messengers, and greatly rejoice in the love and fellowship manifested by them for us, and in the doctrine they advocate; and we desire and solicit a continuance of your correspondence.

We also desire to inform you that at our last association a motion was adopted asking a renewal of correspondence (temporarily suspended) with the Juniata Association. A letter and messenger were sent by the association, which were received gladly and lovingly by them. Our messenger informs us that while there he witnessed a reuniting of that association upon principles of mutual forgiveness and love. We rejoice with them in the reunion; and we as an association are fully satisfied with the manner and form of their action as reported to us, believing that the hand of the Lord is in it all. We also rejoice that we have been accorded a kind and brotherly reception with correspondence renewed.

Our present session has been one of peace and comfort, and we feel that the presence of God has been with us in our deliberations upon all the matters that have come before us; and we feel to praise God that a spirit of forbearance, concession and love has been manifest among us.

Our next meeting is appointed to be held with the church at Harford, Harford Co., Md., to commence on Wednesday before the third Sunday in May, 1890, when and where we hope to meet and greet your messengers again.

THE DAY OF VISITATION AND PERPLEXITY.

"Woe is me! for I am as when they have gathered the summer fruits, as the grape gleanings of the vintage: there is no cluster to eat: my soul desired the firstripe fruit. The good man is perished out of the earth; and there is none upright among men: they all lie in wait for blood; they hunt every man his brother with a net. That they may do evil with both hands earnestly, the prince asketh, and the judge asketh a reward; and the great man, he uttereth his mischievous desire: so they wrap it up. The best of them is as a brier; the most upright is sharper than a thorn hedge: the day of thy watchmen and thy visitation cometh; now shall be their perplexity."—Micah vii. 1-4.

In compliance with a request from a sister in Alabama, we submit for the consideration of our readers the following remarks in connection with this text. From the whole record of this prophecy it is plainly evident that the literal fulfillment of its denunciations was inflicted upon the natural children of Israel. Their departures from the covenant which God had given them brought upon them the chastening which was promised in that covenant. Even in the type, the rod of divine judgment against the iniquity of his people was terrible; it is found by his spiritual people that the type was not too strongly presented.

"Woe is me!" No peculiarity of the chosen subjects of grace is more clearly manifest than their being an afflicted and poor people. They are called to follow their Lord in the fellowship of his sufferings. In the very outset of their experience of the leading of the Spirit of Christ they must deny self. This includes the crucifying of the flesh with the affections and lusts.—Gal. v. 24. It is needless to say that there can be no crucifying of anything without suffering. In this first expression of our text is found not only the personal grief of the prophet, but the unutterable groaning of every conscious sinner who is enabled by grace to see the exceeding sinfulness of sin in himself. Under the leading of the Spirit of truth the same groaning which cannot be uttered is in the heart of all the saints. Paul refers to the same thing when he exclaims, "O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" Another inspired saint says, speaking of the desolation of the chosen Zion of our God, "All her people sigh, they seek bread; they have given their pleasant things for meat to relieve the soul: see, O Lord, and consider; for I am become vile." Even though

Job was declared by God himself to be "a perfect and an upright man, one that feareth God, and escheweth evil," yet he had to answer the Lord, saying, "Behold, I am vile; what shall I answer thee? I will lay mine hand upon my mouth. Once have I spoken; but I will not answer: yea, twice; but I will proceed no further." The effect of seeing "the Lord sitting upon a throne, high and lifted up," was to cause Isaiah to cry with this prophet, "Woe is me! for I am undone; because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips: for mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of hosts." Such woe as this is peculiar to the subjects of that grace by which they are made to love the righteousness of God, and hate their own sinful life. Others may have woe which results from the fear of future punishment, or from the disappointment of their selfish desires; but in such woe they find no occasion for self-condemnation. It is an evidence of the indwelling love of holiness, when one feels to groan under the realizing sense of his own pollution and sinfulness. All who thus hunger and thirst after righteousness are already blessed.—Matt. v. 6.

In the reason assigned for his woe, the prophet tells the experience of every one who sees himself justly cut off from hope for acceptance with God. The illustration of the gleanings of grapes after the vintage is done, as it is used in Isaiah xxiv. 13, is here presented as showing the utterly desolate feeling of such as would ask, with the psalmist, "Will the Lord cast off forever? and will he be favorable no more? Is his mercy clean gone forever? doth his promise fail forevermore? Hath God forgotten to be gracious? hath he in anger shut up his tender mercies?"—Psa. lxxvii. 7-9. When they have gathered the summer fruits the branches which bore those fruits are left desolate and bare. The grape gleanings, the scattering berries which are left after the vine has been stripped of its fruits, can afford no cheering prospect to the hungry one who seeks a supply for his craving appetite. They rather seem to mock the hunger of the perishing one. He finds not even one cluster to satisfy his longing desire. Those who have felt their utter destitution of righteousness to commend them in the sight of divine justice, will confess that in that time of bitter need they found no cluster of consolation which they could appropriate to their own support. As the soul of the fainting one desires the first ripe fruit, so the conscious sinner faints for some evidence of justifying righteousness which can be approved in the sight of the infinitely holy God. Nothing less than perfect holiness can satisfy this longing, yet the hungry one can find no cluster to eat. It is not necessary to enter into a discussion as to what the soul itself may be; those who have the experience of the desolation described in the text will not need to be convinced that the prophet was moved by the Spirit of Christ to write just what they know personally. They may at times question the reality of their comfortable and joyful exercises, but they know they have in their very hearts felt the plague of sin dwelling in themselves. Of its presence they are painfully conscious in all their sojourn in the body of this death. That holiness which satisfies the demands of justice is well represented by the first ripe fruit. Under the typical dispensation the first fruits were claimed by the Lord as his own; and this is the only fruit with which the holy law can be satisfied. It is the fruit of the Spirit as described by the apostle, who says, "The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance." The first-named fruit here is love; and it is recorded for our instruction, "Love worketh no ill to his neighbor; therefore love is the fulfilling of the law."—Gal. v. 22, 23; Rom. xiii. 10. The soul of every one who has the Spirit of Christ does desire this "first ripe fruit." This is the peculiar mark which distinguishes between those who are led by the Spirit of God and such as are governed by their own carnal mind.

In the next clause of our text the deplorable condition of the earth is described. The good (as rendered in the margin, "godly, or merciful") man is perished out of the earth. This is in perfect accord with the truth that the earth with all its natural products is polluted by sin and under the curse of God. So Isaiah says, "Behold, the Lord maketh the earth empty, and maketh it waste, and turneth it upside down, and scattereth abroad the inhabitants thereof." This is true of the natural world as being destitute of anything which can satisfy the appetite of those who hunger and thirst after righteousness. But the primary application of the words we understand to embrace particularly that world of the Mosaic dispensation, with its typical heaven of the legal requirements and ceremonies, and the earth of that natural people who were the fleshly children of Abraham. In the time when this prophecy was fulfilled in its application to the closing of that old dispensation, our Lord himself pronounced the dreadful doom which had come upon the world of that fleshly covenant people, saying, "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets, and stonest them which are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not! Behold, your house is left unto you desolate."—Matt. xxiii. 37, 38. In this desolation there remained no more in that earth one who was good, or merciful, or godly. The great Shepherd had gathered out of that people all of his own chosen sheep, and now there remained none among them but such as were in the love of sin, and who could not even desire to be free from the power of darkness. On such the wrath of God abideth. They are already "dead in trespasses and sins." From this death there is no resurrection but that which is revealed in our Lord Jesus Christ. Without the quickening power of that Spirit of life which he alone can give, there is no possibility that such a dead sinner should ever even wish for life. Death is the element of all who are yet in the love and under the power of sin; so that it would be just as inconsistent for one of that number to wish for deliverance from death as for the fish to seek to escape from the water, which is its element, or for the bird to desire to be freed from the air. Therefore it is a clear evidence that one has already been quickened by the power of God when he feels the justice of his own condemnation, and longs to be delivered from the bondage of sin. Indeed, it is only to such as have received the love of holiness, that sin can be in reality called a bondage. When it is only the desire to gain a reward, or the fear of punishment, by which one is deterred from revelling in wickedness, it is manifest there is no real distress to such a character in abiding in sin. Instead of feeling sin as a chain of bondage, he feels that it would be a desirable thing if he might with impunity indulge his sinful inclination. This is a very clear mark of distinction between such as are led by the Spirit of God and such as abide in death. God has given a new heart to his redeemed people, in which is the fear of the Lord. Those who have this heart hate sin as abhorrent to them in itself; they would desire to be free from its power even though they were assured that they should be delivered from its penalty. They hunger and thirst after righteousness, because it is desirable to them of itself, aside from all consideration of future consequences of reward or punishment. Where this love of holiness prevails in the heart, there is no desire for liberty to indulge in sin; but such a character groans with most earnest longing to be free from the bondage of corruption, whose very element is sin. One who truly loves righteousness needs no terrors of hell to drive him to the path of holiness, but rather feels that nothing could be such joy to him as to be able to live free from the pollution of even one foolish thought.

Fearful as is the description given in our text, it is in exact accordance with the account given in other portions of the divine testimony, when portraying the true condition of those who are the children of wrath, and who are not delivered from the reigning power of sin. This is most vividly presented by Paul in the third chapter of his letter to the saints at Rome. It must be remembered also that in connection with that terrible description of the condition of sinful man, the apostle expressly and most forcibly declares that those saints together with himself were not less vile than the worst of those described. He asks, "What then? are we better than they? No, in no wise; for we have before proved both Jews and Gentiles, that they are all under sin; as it is written, There is none righteous, no, not one; there is none that seeketh after God." The awful description of our natural condition, which Paul here quotes from the Psalms, does not exaggerate the case of every sinner who has been taught of God by the revelation of his own sinfulness. When the commandment in its heart-searching power came to them individually, saying with convincing emphasis to each one, "Thou art the man!" he was ready to say with Paul, "Sinners, of whom I am chief." In that hour the inspired indictment was not too strong in its specification of his own lost condition. The old carnal heart is not better now than it was before the manifestation of its pollution. This is continually shown to the saint in his everyday conflicts with the sin which doth so easily beset all who seek to walk in newness of life.

TO OUR DELINQUENTS.

AS WE have stated before, one of the most unpleasant duties connected with publishing the SIGNS OF THE TIMES is having to call the attention of our brethren and friends to their delinquency in paying their subscription, and for that reason we always delay doing so as long as possible. It will doubtless be a surprise to many of our readers when we tell them that our loss from non-paying subscribers averages over two thousand dollars a year.

It is impossible for us to tell who intends to pay for the paper and who does not. It frequently happens that we continue a paper for a year or two after the time paid for expires, and then, when we send a bill for the amount due us, we will receive an answer from them that they did not authorize us to continue the paper after the subscription expired, and therefore they do not intend to pay for it. For the information of all such we will state that the law not only holds any one liable who takes the papers from the post-office, but also considers them guilty of theft if they refuse to pay for them. Of course we never appeal to the law in settling our accounts with our brethren, but only quote the above to show what is considered justice by the law-makers. It is an easy matter for a subscriber, when his time is out, if he does not wish his paper continued, to refuse to take it from the office, and that will relieve him of all responsibility. We could not at this late date establish the rule of discontinuing all subscriptions at the time they expire without ruining our business.

We have now on our list several hundred whose subscriptions expired some time ago, and all can tell for themselves how their subscriptions stand by referring to the date next to their name on the slip pasted either on the margin of the paper or on the wrapper containing it; and if all who find by the date that their time has expired will forward the amount for its renewal, they will greatly relieve us financially.

Publishing the paper weekly has increased our expenses hundreds of dollars, and we must insist upon our subscribers paying their subscriptions promptly in order to enable us to continue it. It is much easier for the subscriber to pay promptly than to let it run behind; for it has been our experience that after we have indulged subscribers in their delinquency for one or more years, nine out of ten discontinue their paper when they do pay up.

Now, brethren, let every one as soon as he reads this turn to his date and see how much of it belongs to him, and if in arrears attend to the matter immediately.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

Our dearly beloved sister, Judah Sexton, died in Sevier Co., Tenn., August 20th, 1887, aged ninety-five years.

She belonged to the Old School Baptist Church sixty-five years. She was born in Virginia, moved to North Carolina, lived there some years, then moved to Greene Co., Tenn., and then to where she died. She was a firm believer in salvation by grace. She was a kind neighbor and a worthy sister. She leaves two sons and four daughters to mourn their loss. When asked if she wanted to send any word to them, she said to tell them that she was going home to Jesus.

JOHN CHANDLY.

Mrs. Rebecca Oldham died at the home of her niece, Mrs. Isam Moore, three miles southwest of Fairburg, Ill., on Friday morning, March 7th, and was buried on Saturday afternoon in the Baptist cemetery, six miles south of town. Her funeral sermon was preached by the writer on the second Sunday in May, at the time of our regular church meeting, at Indian Grove Church, where a very large congregation of brethren, sisters, relatives, neighbors and friends gathered for the occasion.

Sister Oldham was born in the state of North Carolina in 1802, was married in Kentucky to Nathan Oldham in 1831, and moved to this community six years ago. She was a member of the Baptist Church about sixty years. She has been in poor health several years, and was not able to walk for more than a year before her death. She was a sister of Mr. William Spence, of Indian Grove, Illinois, and a sister-in-law of Elder John Darnell, of Oregon. She leaves many other relatives, together with the church, to mourn their loss. She lived an exemplary life, and exhibited great christian patience during the long months of her illness; but all is well with her now, and may we all say, "Thy will, O Lord, not mine, be done."

W. A. THOMPSON.

TONICA, Ill.

OUR beloved and venerable brother, Joseph Daniel Biggs, a member of the Primitive Baptist Church at Skewarkey for sixty-three years, and Assistant Clerk or Clerk of the Kehukee Association for the same period, and Clerk of his own church for sixty-one years, after an illness of little more than a week, during which he did not suffer much pain, fell gently asleep in Jesus at his residence, one mile south of Williamston, N. C., about nine o'clock Saturday night, May 18th, 1889.

He was born Nov. 29th, 1808, and was thus in his eighty-first year. His father was Elder Joseph Biggs, pastor of the church at Skewarkey for thirty-eight years, and Clerk of the Kehukee Association for the same time, and writer of the history of the association from 1803 to 1883; and his mother was Chloe Daniel. Asa Biggs, U. S. Judge and Senator, and Kader Biggs, a Commission Merchant of Norfolk, Va., were his brothers; and Louisa Biggs was his sister. His occupation was that of a farmer. He was Trustee of the Williamston Academy fifty-one years, and Secretary of the Board of Trustees the most of that time. For a long series of years, both before and after the Civil War, he was Chairman of the County Court, and of the Inferior Court, and of the Board of Commissioners of Martin County. His first wife was Elizabeth Davis, of whom one child, of the same name, is still living. His second wife was Mrs. Fannie Latham, whose maiden name was Crawford, who, with their children, Joseph and Chloe, survive to mourn their irreparable loss.

In a pre-eminent degree our dear brother was a living epistle of Christ, known and read of all who were acquainted with him. From his eighteenth year, when he first experienced a hope in the sin-atonement blood of the Lamb, to the last day of his long, useful and honorable life, he was a most humble, consistent and devoted follower of Jesus. He carried his religious principles with him everywhere and at all times, and exemplified them in his daily walk and conversation. He was a man of strong constitution, fine health, noble bearing, sound judgment, and incorruptible integrity—in the highest sense of the word, a gentleman of the old school, who could not be induced by any motives of apparent self-interest to compromise truth in the slightest degree, or to swerve a hair's breadth from what he believed to be right; and yet he was kind and gentle in all the relations of life. My father and brother Biggs were intimately associated the most part of their lives. They were cousins, and their first wives were sisters. They were closely connected as officers of Skewarkey Church and the Kehukee Association, and daily companions, and remarkably united in their sentiments and principles; and it is no wonder that father's death nine years ago left a vacuum in brother Biggs's heart that no one else could fill. He never ceased to mourn the departure of his beloved pastor and friend. Increasing financial embarrassments troubled him during his last years, and the cloud seemed to grow darker and the burden heavier every day, and the trial became so great that he longed for the coming of rest. He was a subscriber to the SIGNS OF THE TIMES and to Zion's Landmark, I suppose, from their first publication, and diligently read and highly valued them and the Church History; but the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments were his constant companion and guide and delight. It is doubtful whether any person ever read them more. While the carnal mind constantly and insatiably longs for new things, our brother thought nothing else so wise, so interesting and so valuable as the inspired volume, and its old-fashioned religion of the heart and life.

Ever since I have known him, and especially since he heartily welcomed me to the cross of Christ twenty-five years ago, I have loved and venerated him; and most especially since the death of my father I have regarded his companionship as an inestimable privilege. Few sermons ever touched me as much as the most humble, tender and tearful manner in which he often read in public the letters addressed to the church and the association, and in which he poured forth his soul in thanksgiving and supplication to the God of Israel in family and social worship and in our church conferences. He believed in exercising strict discipline in the church, and in the prompt exclusion from her membership of every one who willfully brought reproach upon that hallowed name that was above every other in his heart; and yet he cordially and joyfully welcomed every poor sinner, of every color, who came with meekness and weeping to the gates of Zion. He lamented the ungodliness and indifference of human beings to eternal things, and earnestly desired to see a sincere, profound and widespread revival of the work of grace in the hearts of the children of men. A few days before his death he asked his daughter Chloe to find in Matthew the momentous words, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness," and to read to him several chapters there, which she did. The day he died he exclaimed to her, "What a glorious thing it is to be reconciled to the will of God!"

On the night of the 7th inst. he had an attack of colic, from which a dose of calomel relieved him. In the afternoon of the 10th he had an attack of vertigo, and had to take his bed. After the 12th he had but little fever, and scarcely any pain. He ate heartily, but did not regain his strength. After eating with relish his supper Saturday night, the 18th, he was assisted to walk to another bed, and when upon it, lay back, and instantly breathed his last. So peacefully did the dear Lord give his beloved sleep! so softly did his sanctified spirit pass into that glorious and eternal rest that remaineth for the people of God. For such a godly life and such a peaceful death, my soul would fervently bless the Lord, the Author of all grace and comfort.

In the presence of a large attendance of friends, both white and colored, the remains of our brother were interred at Skewarkey, on Monday, May 20th.

ASSOCIATIONAL.

THE Chemung Old School Baptist Association will be held, if the Lord will, with the Vaughan Hill Church, Bradford Co., Pa., on Wednesday before the third Sunday in June (12th), 1889, and continue in session the two following days.

Those coming from the south will be met at Wyalusing on Tuesday afternoon and evening before the meeting. Those coming from the north will take the same railroad (Lehigh Valley) and get off at Rummelfield station on Tuesday afternoon and Wednesday morning.

D. M. VAIL.

YEARLY MEETINGS.

A YEARLY or two days meeting will be held with the Clowesville Old School Baptist Church, the Lord willing, on the fourth Saturday and Sunday in June (22d and 23d).

A cordial invitation is extended to all lovers of the truth, and especially ministers of our faith and order. Those coming by rail will stop at Griffin's Corners station, where they will be met with teams and conveyed to the place of the meeting.

O. F. BALLARD, Church Clerk.

A YEARLY meeting will be held, if the Lord will, with New Hope Church, in Greenbush, Warren Co., Ill., beginning at four o'clock p.m. on Friday before the third Sunday in June, at which meeting, on Saturday, a council is expected to convene for the ordination of brother H. E. Puris to the gospel ministry, if thought advisable. The friends of the cause of Christ are invited.

I. N. VANMETER, Pastor.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date, this date denotes the time at which your subscription expires, and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

CORRESPONDENCE.

FREMONT, Neb., April 17, 1889.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—Inclosed you will find two dollars, for which you will please continue to send to me that ever-welcome messenger, the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. I think it will be needless for me to say that I appreciate it very much, and more so since it has become a weekly; and I cannot think of doing without it so long as I can manage to find the money to pay for it. I think sister Parker, of Scribner, Neb., is rather more courageous than I am, and has more faith in the people of her place than I have of the Ishmaelites who dwell in this city, where there are some ten or twelve thousand inhabitants, when she made the endeavor to get some of them to subscribe for our paper. Why, my dear sister, do you realize that it is as one casting pearls before swine to ask such a thing? They will only turn and rend you for your trouble. The same thought has occurred to me sometimes in my anxiety to have the circulation of our paper enlarged, that of trying to see if there was not some one here who would like to take it beside myself. But the next thought would be, Why, just as soon have gone into the streets of Sodom or Gomorrah to find faith, perhaps, as to start out on such an errand here in this idolatrous city, where their Babel towers are to be seen in every conspicuous place. And those who bow the knee to the image of Baal grow more and more numerous. But I would ask any enlightened child of God, What is there about this that is at all surprising? I think it is plainly a fulfilling of the Scriptures. Men shall wax worse and worse. Peter tells us there shall be false teachers, even as there were false prophets. And this is only another evidence to us that the Scriptures were written by inspiration of God, who saw the end from the beginning. But these only bring upon themselves swift destruction. And many shall follow their pernicious ways. These are but temptations laid in the way, whereby they deceive the simple. And when I consider my own foolishness, the more I wonder that I also have not forsaken the right way, and followed in the way of Balaam. But the Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptation. Peter concludes his epistle to the beloved saints, to those who have obtained like precious faith as himself, through the righteousness of God and our Savior Jesus Christ, saying, "Beloved, seeing ye know these things before, beware lest ye also, being led away with the error of the wicked, fall from your own steadfastness." But where is our victory? Paul says, "Thanks be to God, who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." Whose adorning is not the outward adorning, as of the plaiting of the hair, and of the wearing of gold, or of putting on of apparel, but of the hidden man of the heart, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness, which if nourished and cherished bringeth forth fruit unto God. What garment is there so beautiful as the garment of salvation? or what crown so lovely, so much to be coveted, as the one adorned with the priceless jewel of Christ's own righteousness, the pearl of great price?

It is now nearly a year and a half since I have made an attempt to say a word to the few scattered saints of God who are still struggling along through this wilderness of sin and temptation, many of whom are longing for the time of deliverance from this world of confusion and sin, yet in their own hearts saying, God's will in me be done. Hush and still, O our Father, every murmuring thought that may arise in our vile hearts; subdue everything in us that is contrary to thy will, so that at thy coming we may be found of thee in peace. And while we remain, may we glorify thy holy name; and may we not sin against thee, thou righteous Judge. This is the prayer that almost constantly goes up from this poor, tried and sinful heart of mine, my dear kindred in Christ, I sometimes hope. How little do you know what has been the suffering of this poor sojourner through this valley of the shadow of death, since I laid my pen aside more than a year ago. Is it possible, I often ask myself, that one poor mortal could pass through so much sorrow of mind in one short year? I almost forget to reckon time. It really seems to me that ages have passed since then. Like Job, many times has my complaint been, O why was I ever born? or with Jeremiah, "Behold, and see if there be any sorrow like unto my sorrow."

I want to say to those from whom I have received letters, asking me to write for our paper, who do not know of my condition in life, that I have been utterly unfit through sick-
