POETRY.

AMEN.

I CANNOT say,
Beneath the pressure of life's cares to-day,
I joy in these;
But I can say
That I had rather walk this rugged way
If him it please.

I cannot feel
That all is well when darkening clouds conceal
The shining sun;
But then I know
God lives and loves, and say, since it is so,
Thy will be done.

I cannot speak
In happy tones—the tear-drops on my cheek
Show I am sad;
But I can speak
Of grace to suffer with submission meek,
Until made glad.

I do not see
Why God should e'en permit some things to be,
When he is love;
But I can see,
Though often dimly, through the mystery
His hand above.

I do not know
Where falls the seed that I have tried to sow
With greatest care;
But I shall know
The meaning of each waiting hour below
Sometime, somewhere.

I may not try
To keep the hot tears back, but hush that sigh,
It might have been;
And try to still
Each rising murmur, and to God's sweet will Respond, Amen.

FALL OF MAN.

"WHAT is meant, or what do we mean when we use the term, fall of man?"

G. BEEBE'S SON—DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST JESUS:—I have just received a very interesting letter from Elder James McDonald, of Wasioto, Ky., asking me for my views of the above subject, either by private letter or through the SIGNS OF THE TIMES; and after thinking over the matter a little I have decided, by your permission, to write to him through the SIGNS, thinking there might be some others who are interested in this subject. I am somewhat acquainted with Elder McDonald. I have heard him preach a few times, and I deem him an able, sound and consistent Old School Baptist preacher, wonderfully able in the glorious Bible doctrine of the predestination of all things. There is no doubt in my mind but his mind is much more clear and extensive than mine; yet I do not know that this is sufficient ground for me to withhold my views from him. If I knew it were, I certainly would do so, for I feel so weak, sinful and short-sighted that it is a cross to me, according to the flesh, to write for publication, or even a private letter to one of the Lord's humble followers. But no doubt brother McDonald would say, I am with you in weakness and fear, and in much trembling; neither is my preaching or writing with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and of power. From brother McDonald's letter it seems clear to my mind that the leading thought the brother is inquiring after is the life and nature of Adam as he stood in the garden of Eden, or as he came from the hand of his Maker; therefore I will state the question thus: What life did Adam forfeit when he transgressed God's law, and in what condition did it involve him and his unborn race? The Bible informs us that God made man in his own image, after his own likeness; that he formed him of the dust—dust which the Lord God had created. Hence man is a time being, a being who was created, formed, and had a beginning—began to exist—hence was not eternal; for eternal things never began to exist; neither was there anything spiritual or immortal about him; for "that was not first which was spiritual, but that which is natural; and afterward that which is spiritual."—1 Cor. xv. 46. There is no doubt in my mind but Adam was a sinless being when he came from the hand of his Maker. He was entirely without sin, but susceptible to sin, and liable to fall, and did sin and fall.

I have time and again been asked what it was in Adam that died when he transgressed the law of God his Maker. My answer has been, and yet is, that it was nothing in Adam that died when he transgressed, but it was Adam himself that died; and it was the entire man that died; not a part of him, nor a something in him, but he himself died. When the Lord made man he made him a good earthly man, but not a spiritual man; and he gave to Adam a law in express terms, and said, "In the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." This personal pronoun "thou" denotes or points to the person addressed; and the person here addressed was Adam, the man whom the Lord God had created and made, formed him of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul, or person; that is, a mortal man, a living human being. This breath was the breath of natural life. God does not breathe eternal life into the notsrils. The phrase, "Breathed into his nostrils the breath of life," denotes the mortality of man and his short duration; for it does not say that he breathed the breath of life into Adam through his nostrils, but breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and he became a living soul. Isaiah says, "Cease ye from man, whose breath is in his nostrils; for wherein is he to be accounted of?"—Isa. ii. 22. Adam was a created, mortal man whose breath was in his nostrils; therefore he did not forfeit spiritual or eternal life, for he was not possessed of such a life. There was no eternal life or immortality about him. He was only a mortal man, a living human being, with all the organs and faculties of man naturally, a very noble and exalted creature, being placed as the head and lord of this world, having all the creatures in subjection to him; for it is said, "Thou madest him [man] a little lower than the angels, thou crownedst him with glory and honor, and didst set him over the works of thy hands; thou hast put all things in subjection under his [man's] feet. * * * But now we see not yet all things put under him. But we see Jesus, who was made a little lower than the angels for the suffering of death, crowned with glory and honor; that he by the grace of God should taste death for every man," &c. —Heb. ii. 7–9. Thus we see that when Adam was formed in the image of God, and God breathed the breath of life into his nostrils, and he became a living soul, that he was a perfect and upright man naturally; so the powers and operations of his mind were extensive, uncorrupted and pure; and it was while he was in this state of innocence and uprightness that God gave the law. In this state of moral rectitude Adam was a good, natural, mortal man, whose faculties and powers, either of body or mind, were not in the very least impaired, weakened or defiled; but by sinning against his Maker, in transgressing his divine law which he had given him, he became vitiated, corrupted, debased, both in body and mind; or in other words, he became totally depraved, dead in trespasses and sins, both the understanding and will as totally depraved as any of the other faculties of the man; in fact the entire man was vitiated and debased, sunk down in degradation and sins, totally dead, altogether unable to move himself toward God by thought, word or deed, or in any wise, until quickened by that eternal life which they had in Christ when he (Christ) dwelt in the bosom of the eternal Father, and which had undergone no change whatever; for it is immutable; in fact Christ is himself their life. Hence the life that Adam forfeited was the life of innocence and ease, peace and tranquility of mind; also his excellency and conformity to the divine pattern. He was driven out of this state of ease and uprightness, as the garden of Eden signifies. And as this sin and rebellion of Adam was of universal efficacy, all are equally involved in the transgression. The whole head is sick, and the whole heart faint, full of wounds (made by the fall of man) bruises, and putrefying sores; no soundness in it. For "by one man [Adam] sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned." The entire progeny of Adam virtually existed in Adam's loins as he stood in the garden of Eden; all received the law in him; all transgressed the law in him, and all became dead in trespasses in him, totally depraved in him; or in other words, all the long line of Adam was so related to him that when Adam sinned they sinned, and when Adam was driven out they all were driven out; so that Adam nor any of his progeny ever have or ever will enjoy that life of moral rectitude and innocence which Adam enjoyed prior to the transgression. This he entirely forfeited; so that "man that is born of a woman is of few days, and full of trouble." Neither can a clean thing be brought out of an unclean; or in other words, there cannot be born of the earthly Adam or any of his progeny a being without sin; for they all are shapen in iniquity and conceived in sin. Forasmuch then as Adam was the moral principle of mankind, when he transgressed all was gone, was forfeited; totally dead to the life of ease, innocence and uprightness, it is impossible for him or any of his offspring to live any longer therein. Gone, clean gone forever and ever. Now, dead in trespasses and sin, totally depraved in every faculty, all are sunk down in wretchedness and ruin. But notwithstanding this dreadful dilemma in which Adam sunk himself and his unborn race, the eternal life and heavenly inheritance of the election of grace underwent no change whatever. This was hid with Christ in God, reserved in heaven for them.

Some professors of religion believe and assert that what Christ did for his chosen people by his atoning merits and propitiatory sacrifice of himself, when he offered himself without spot to God, was to place the progeny of Adam back in the standing that Adam was in prior to his transgression. Now, in this life or state, Adam nor any of his race have ever been in or enjoyed since the transgression; no, nor ever will; for they all forfeited that life, became totally dead to it, and never can live that life any more. In fact they have no use for that life any more; it could do them no good. In that life Adam was prepared neither for heaven nor hell, but only for the pleasures of Eden; and if all or any of Adam's race were in this condition now, they could not be saved; for "Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners;" and Adam, prior to the transgression, was not a sinner. So where sin abounded, grace has much more abounded.

NORTH BERWICK, Maine, Dec. 5, 1894.

TO FREEMAN CROKER—MY DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST JESUS:—Your letter was very welcome, for I much desired to hear of your welfare, and of the welfare of the church in your parts (Hopewell Cape, N. B., Canada). There is a sweet satisfaction in knowing that "He that keepeth Israel shall neither slumber nor sleep."—Psalm cxxi. 4. Wherever his people are, the eternal God will ever be mindful of them. Even when they feel to be overwhelmed in the depths of the sea, his hand shall bring them up again.—Psalm lxviii. 22. Then, though you and the dear children of God living around Hopewell Cape are hundreds of miles away, I know that God is as near to you as he is to his people here. Yea, all the household of God, wherever they may be scattered throughout all the nations of the earth, are under his eye; and he will keep them also as "the apple of his eye."—Deut. xxxii. 10. When Solomon had finished building the temple, God said unto him, "I have heard thy prayer and thy supplication that thou hast made before me: I have hallowed this house which thou hast built, to put my name there forever; and mine eyes and mine heart shall be there perpetually."—1 Kings ix. 3. This temple was the type of Christ and the church; and truly in our Lord Jesus, our glorious Head, and all the members of his body, this divine declaration is fulfilled, "Mine eyes and mine heart shall be there perpetually." In the type, the eyes of the Lord saw all the worshipers coming with their sacrifices and peace offerings; poor, sinful Israelites seeking the remission of their sins through the blood. The Lord saw the grateful ones coming with the first-fruits of their increase. He beheld those coming to perform their vows which in times of trouble they had vowed unto the Lord. He beheld also those perplexed ones seeking counsel, and awaiting the sentence from the lips of the priest that should end their controversies and quiet their troubled hearts. "For the priest's lips should keep knowledge, and they should seek the law at his mouth: for he is the messenger of the Lord of hosts." The eyes of the Lord of hosts beheld all the ordinances of divine service. The priesthood, the burnt sacrifices, the shew bread, the incense burning, the blood flowing, and the singers singing, "Praise ye the Lord," yea, every whit of it. "Mine eyes and mine heart shall be there perpetually." It was the place where his honor dwelt, where his justice and his grace were declared, and his glory, which is so great in salvation, was revealed. In this temple was shadowed forth the gracious atonement of his dear Son for the sins of his people; yes, all was fragrant, of a sweet-smelling savor, unto our Father in heaven. Then let us believe, dear brother, that the one eternal God, the Father, the Word and the Holy Ghost, changeth not, and that he still looks upon, and his heart is set upon, all his chosen ones, wherever they may be under the whole heaven. The God of Israel sees them in all their weaknesses; he beholds their conflicts with sin, and the powers of hell, and of the world. He looks upon their afflictions, wherever they rove, whatever their lot; he never turns away his eyes from them. "Mine eyes and mine heart shall be there perpetually." Ah, even when we wander away, when we stray in forbidden paths, we are still under the all-seeing eyes of the Lord our God. When we are left to prove the hidden evils of our hearts, still then we never rove beyond the limits of his love. In our infirmity, like Jonah, we may cry out, "I am cast out of thy sight." But the Lord himself saith, "I have graven thee upon the palms of my hands; thy walls are continually before me." We can never get so low down, or so far away, as to be out of sight of our God. "Whither shall I go from thy spirit? or whither shall I flee from thy presence? If I ascend up into heaven, thou art there: if I take the wings of the morning, and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea, even there shall thy hand lead me, and thy right hand shall hold me. If I say, Surely the darkness shall cover me, even the night shall be light about me. Yea, the darkness hideth not from thee; but the night shineth as the day; the darkness and the light are both alike to thee."—Psalm cxxxix. 7–12. Such knowledge is wonderful, but full of unspeakable consolation to such a tossed about sinner like me. Before it pleased God to call us by his grace, even then, when dead in our sins, he loved us; we were ever beneath his eye of tender compassion. And shall we think that since the time that he has exercised our souls with divine and eternal things, that Jehovah is less watchful and loveth us less?

"When his name was quite unknown,
And sin my life employed,
Then he watched me as his own,
Or I had been destroyed.

Now his mercy seat I know,
Now by grace am reconciled;
Would he spare me as a foe,
To leave me as a child?"

Though sin and temptations bring us into darksome places, and in chastening us God plunges us into the deep, and our chastened souls are afflicted with wave upon wave, when he hath shewed hard things, and hath made us to drink the wine of astonishment, even then the eyes and the heart of our God were upon us perpetually. How graciously our unchangeable and faithful God spake concerning Ephraim, "I have surely heard Ephraim bemoaning himself thus: Thou hast chastised me, and I was chastised, as a bullock unaccustomed to the yoke: turn thou me, and I shall be turned; for thou art the Lord my God. Surely after that I was turned, I repented; and after that I was instructed, I smote upon my thigh: I was ashamed, yea, even confounded, because I did bear the reproach of my youth. Is Ephraim my dear son? is he a pleasant child? for since I spake against him, I do earnestly remember him still: therefore my bowels are troubled for him. I will surely have mercy upon him, saith the Lord."—Jer. xxxi. 18–20. Never was Ephraim forgotten of the Holy One of Israel. "Mine eyes and mine heart shall be there perpetually." The Lord our God knows our abode. "He knoweth our frame, he remembers that we are dust." All our frailties and sinfulness he knows. There are no difficulties, no afflictions, temptations, vexations and griefs that are our heritage in this world, but he knows them all. For they all are in measure, weight and duration as he himself has decreed. All the days of our earthly pilgrimage he says, "I will guide thee with mine eye."—Psalm xxxii. 8. As the land of promise was, so are the people of God. It was "a land which the Lord thy God careth for: the eyes of the Lord thy God are always upon it, from the beginning of the year, even unto the end of the year."—Deut. xi. 12. He beheld the land, and cared for it in its spring, summer, autumn and winter seasons. So,

"In every condition, in sickness and health,
In poverty's vale, or abounding in wealth;
At home and abroad, on the land, on the sea,
As thy days may demand, shall thy strength ever be."

Such revelations of the character of Jehovah our Redeemer, given us in the holy Scriptures, are truly of great consolation to us, poor, tossed about sinners. We sometimes picture to ourselves how much better our spiritual prosperity would be if this, that and the other things were otherwise than they are. But the Lord himself is the Shepherd of his people, and they shall not want. This truth has afforded me some comfort and ease of mind as I have thought over the condition of the two little flocks (churches) of Jesus Christ in New Brunswick. It is in my heart to pray for your health and peace in the gospel, and that it may please the Holy Spirit to build you up to the honor and praise of the Lord. You will tell all who love the truth as it is in Jesus, whom I met when among you, that I have affectionate remembrance of them all. May the gracious Lord bless you all, and make his face shine upon you. The Lord lift up his countenance upon thee, and give thee peace. I am, I hope, your brother in Christ Jesus,

G. BEEBE'S SON—DEAR BROTHER:—I inclose herewith the christian experience of my beloved uncle, Jabez Beard, of South Side, W. Va., which I know will be of deep interest to a large number of the brethren who read the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, and who know my uncle personally. In October, 1883, and also in August of this year, brother Beard visited us here, and spoke many words of cheer and comfort to us, who have been deprived of our crops for the past two seasons, and also the season of 1890, on account of drouth and hot winds. In behalf of the many brethren whom I believe will read his communication with interest, I ask that it be given a place in your much prized paper.

I desire to congratulate you and the brethren who read the SIGNS upon the accession of brethren Jenkins and Chick to the editorial management of the blessed medium through which we poor, scattered sheep, receive almost all the gospel we hear. A little unorganized remnant of us, seven in number, will gladly welcome any wandering Baptist who may be passing this way; and especially would we rejoice should a sufficient number locate with us to enable us to organize and maintain a church.

From an unworthy little one in tribulation,

J. M. AMSBERRY.

SOUTH SIDE, W. Va., Nov. 23, 1894.

WHEN I was quite young I was frequently under conviction that I was a terrible sinner, and that if I should die without a change I would go to torment. Sometimes I would be afraid to go to bed, for fear I would die before morning; but the next morning I would awake, and would feel so glad that I was alive, I would feel quite cheerful till toward evening. But this state of my mind was not continual. When I was about twenty years old, in the year 1849, I was brought under conviction, and was in great distress. I tried to wear it off; but the more I tried to get rid of it the worse I grew, until I became so bad that life was a burden to me; yet I was afraid to die. I remained in this condition until the third day of August of that year. The cholera was very bad in the United States that year, and the President proclaimed a fast on the third day of August, for the purpose of staying the dread disease. I was at work away from home at the time. I quit work and went home on the evening before, for the purpose of observing the day by fasting. I thought on the next morning that if I should eat one bite I would die before night. I went to the preaching, not caring much where I was, for I thought it was my last day on earth. I entered the meeting-house and took a seat on a pile of old lumber in one corner. I cast my eyes over the congregation, and thought I never saw so much gloom in all my life. Everybody seemed like they were in distress. The preacher gave out a hymn, and the congregation sang it, and then I heard the words, "Let us pray." I fell down upon my face in that old lumber pile, and said, "Lord, be merciful to me, a sinner." I immediately felt better. But I remained down during the prayer. When I arose everything seemed changed. I thought I never before saw such pretty people as that congregation were. Everyone seemed to be pleased, and in good humor, and rejoicing. I got out of doors, and everything seemed changed out there. The trees and grass and rocks, in short everything, looked so pleasing and happy. I could walk without any exertion, the road seemed to be so smooth. I had to attend to some business that afternoon for some friends, and it seemed no trouble to do business. I was so perfectly happy that I never felt at all hungry, though I did not eat a bite till after dark. I did not tell it to anybody, and in fact I did not realize what had been done for me. I only knew that I had been in great trouble and distress, and now I was entirely clear of it, and was perfectly happy. Well, to be brief, I gradually got back into my sinful ways, so much so that I believe I was more wicked than I was before. The only change that I could perceive in me was that when I heard christian people talking I would like to listen to them, without being seen by them. I went on in this way for about ten years. At that time I heard a young friend of mine relate his christian experience to the church, and it was so much like my own that I did not believe he was fit to join the church. I so expressed myself to my mother one day, and told her I once got that far myself. She asked me to tell her how far I got, and I told her. She said, "Why, I never heard a better experience." Well, I got away from her as soon as I could, for I thought she was mistaken. I could not believe that a converted person could do as I had done. I finally talked to Barnabez Greenlee in the same way, and he said that he never heard a better experience. I tried to get away from him, but he followed me up. Finally I commenced praying that if I was converted I might feel some evidence of it; but my prayers did not seem to rise higher than my head; so I was in great darkness and gloom. The more I tried to pray, the less effect it seemed to have. Finally I concluded to do my duty, if the church would accept of me. I offered myself to the church, and was accepted, and in June, 1861, was baptized. Then I had another season of rejoicing. I never was happier in my life than I was the day I was baptized. Since then I have had my seasons of rejoicing, and also seasons of despondency, and all the time I feel my nothingness. I know that all my righteousness is as filthy rags, and that without the blood and righteousness of Jesus Christ I am lost. I know that I can do nothing of myself.

JABEZ BEARD.

HAYESVILLE, Iowa, Dec. 2, 1894.

DEAR BRETHREN:—As this is my eightieth birthday, I thought I would try to write something for our dear old family paper, the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, if I shall be able, by what help I may receive through the Spirit, to make it worth reading. I want to be led by the Spirit of truth; for that which comes from any other source will do us no good. When I contemplate the great source of all truth it makes me fear and quake, knowing that I only see as through a glass darkly, and only see in part; and yet my mind has been led to search after the things that are too wonderful for me to comprehend, so that I can only say, as Elihu did, "I also will shew mine opinion."

Paul said to Timothy, "Preach the word." He would himself know nothing among the saints save Jesus Christ and him crucified. He would not tell Timothy to preach that which he would not himself preach; so when he preached Christ he must have preached the word. And John said, "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. The same was in the beginning with God. All things were made by him; and without him was not anything made that was made." Now let us read it, In the beginning was the Christ, and the Christ was with God, and the Christ was God. This does no injustice to the reading of the text. Then this Word, or Christ, was in the beginning, and he must have been there before he began the work of creation; before Adam was formed out of the dust of the ground. Adam was the figure of him that was to come, or made in the image or likeness of the Word, which was God. Now, as the law was given to Adam while his bride was yet in him, so grace was given to the Lamb's wife while she was yet in him. And as Adam loved his bride because she was of his flesh and of his bones, a time relationship, so Christ loved his bride because she was of his flesh and of his bones, an eternal relationship. Adam's generations were all in him when sin and death entered into the world. It is hard for us to see how that which was pronounced good could produce evil without a cause. I must look somewhere else for the cause. Sin entered into the good world which God had created, and death by sin; so death passed upon all Adam's generations, for that all have sinned. None will deny that sin is of the devil. If so, that sin which entered into the world caused Adam to transgress the law, which was sin; for sin is the transgression of the law. Now, are we not the seed of the second Adam, the Lord from heaven, involved in sin and death? Was not Adam the field in which both the good and bad seed are sown? If not, how was the first-born, Cain, of that wicked one, and slew his brother, because his own works were evil, and his brother righteous? The prophet said, by the word of the Lord, "A seed shall serve him; it shall be accounted to the Lord for a generation."—Psalm xxii. 30. This is the generation that was chosen in Christ before the foundation of the world, which Peter calls "a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a peculiar people; that ye should shew forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvelous light." Christ said in explanation of his parable of the tares, "He that sowed the good seed is the Son of man; the field is the world; the good seed are the children of the kingdom; but the tares are the children of the wicked one; the enemy that sowed them is the devil; the harvest is the end of the world; the reapers are the angels." Christ sent his disciples, ministers or angels, to reap that whereon they had bestowed no labor; for the fields were already white to harvest. And the reapers are yet at work in the great harvest, reaping or gathering together that whereon they bestowed no labor. This is all done by the Spirit of that Word which was in the beginning, which was with God, and which was God.

But I have not written as I intended when I commenced writing. I had thought of speaking of that Word, which was God, which came to Abraham, to Isaac and to Jacob, to Moses and all the prophets; that it was Christ who came to all of them, speaking of the work the Father had given him to do. The same Word came to Mary and Joseph, and the Shepherds in the field. This same Word comes to us, his believing children, raises us up, puts a new song in our mouth, even praise to his name; telling us the glad tidings of our eternal deliverance; that he has finished the work he came to do; that he has abolished death, and brought life and immortality to light through the gospel.

A. RICHARDSON.

FRAGMENTS.

A SERMON is often as a "Yes" or a "No" to what has been in the mind before. The sermon that we hear well was in our own hearts before we heard it preached by this man. It is according to what had been written in our hearts by the Spirit of the living God that the sermon to which we listen is long or short to us, tiresome or refreshing, dull or full of absorbing interest.

When a sermon tells over what we have felt, points out the road we have traveled in our experience, describes the deep troubles which we never could tell, and shows out of the Scriptures the very deliverances which we have known, the bringing of our souls out of prison that we might praise the Lord's name, then that sermon is a "No" to all our doubts and fears, to all the temptations of the devil that have made us tremble under the power of unbelief, to all our complaining questions whether the Lord has not forsaken us; and it is a "Yes" to all the sweet hopes which have been raised up in our poor hearts, to all the precious promises which have at times filled us with joy, to the communications of love and peace which we have hoped were from Jesus, and which have quieted the waves of trouble in our souls when all hope of deliverance had gone. That is a good sermon to us, and we can say the best things of it, and of the preacher, however poor his manner of speech may appear to the natural man. He is a good preacher, because he has been sent to us from the Lord.

That part of a sermon which we cannot read in our own hearts as the words fall upon our ears is of no spiritual value at the time.

ADORNING THE DOCTRINE.—Titus ii. 10.

How can we adorn the doctrine of God our Savior? Can a sinful man do anything which shall adorn that which is already perfect? Yet the apostle commands that servants (who have been called by grace) be exhorted to be "obedient unto their own masters, and to please them well in all things; not answering again; not purloining, but showing all good fidelity; that they may adorn the doctrine of God our Savior in all things." By this it appears that the apostle regards an obedient walk on the part of any child of God as an adornment of the doctrine. The doctrine of God our Savior declares that God saves his people by his grace; that he works in them both to will and to do of his good pleasure; that he makes them willing in the day of his power, and leads them by his Spirit in paths of righteousness; that the grace which appears to them in their salvation teaches them to deny ungodliness and worldly lusts, and

INTRODUCTORY TO VOLUME LXIII.

WITH this number we begin both a new year and a new volume of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, and in doing so we extend to our readers our cordial wishes for their prosperity in all things, temporal and spiritual. We wish above all things that you may all prosper and be in health, even as the Lord gives you prosperity of soul.—3 John 2. As we enter upon the beginning of the new year we are reminded of the language of James, and hope that we feel a desire to profit by it in all our undertakings. "Go to now, ye that say, To-day or to-morrow we will go into such a city, and continue there a year, and buy and sell, and get gain: whereas ye know not what shall be on the morrow. For what is your life? It is even a vapor, that appeareth for a little time, and then vanisheth away. For that ye ought to say, If the Lord will, we shall live, and do this, or that. But now ye rejoice in your boastings: all such rejoicing is evil." How solemn and how weighty do these words of James appear when they are compared with our own experience in the temporal things that concern us! They certainly contain a solemn warning to us all of our entire dependence upon God for all our temporal as well as for all our spiritual mercies, and also teach us that to trust in ourselves and to boast of our own power is a sin against God. "All such rejoicing is evil."

In entering upon the labors of this new year we desire to do so in full remembrance that "Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it: except the Lord keep the city, the watchman waketh but in vain." In entering upon our duties, in connection with the SIGNS especially, during this new year, we desire to ever remember that we are dependent upon the God whom we desire to serve for wisdom and strength, that we may know and do his will.

We desire, so far as what feeble part we may take in the conduct of the SIGNS is concerned, to continue to present the same truth that has always been contended for in its columns. This truth has been our comfort and our hope for many years, and so it will be a labor of love to continue to present the same things so far as in us lies. We doubt not that we shall often need the forbearance of our brethren. Our experience of their kindness and forbearance in all our past life seems to us full warrant for believing that we may confidently expect a continuance of the same.

The people of God are a poor and afflicted people; and of the poor and afflicted it is said, "They shall trust in the name of the Lord." From what we trust is a heartfelt experience, we are well assured that nothing can do the poor and afflicted of the flock any good but "the name of the Lord," for in that name is contained all the fullness of every heavenly excellence that they ever need. Therefore to proclaim the name of the Lord must ever be the delight of those who know him, both in those who speak and in those who hear. The poor and afflicted soul can never find aught but death in that proclamation which sets forth any creature power or wisdom or righteousness as a ground of justification and salvation before God; but to proclaim the name of the Lord in his salvation is to that soul life and peace. We desire that the SIGNS during this coming year shall continually be found holding forth the word of life, to the comfort and upbuilding of many who fear his name.

To present the name of the Lord seems to us to involve setting forth something of the character and attributes of Jehovah as revealed in the Scriptures of eternal truth. This includes his eternity, his self-existence, his omnipotence, omniscience and omnipresence, his foreknowledge, predestination and absolute sovereignty, his holiness, justice and truth, his mercy, love and grace, and in short all that he is and all that he does, so far as is revealed to us in his word. These things are all found in the name of the Lord. We desire to ever be found holding forth these things by voice and pen so far as in us lies. In these things is found the security of the people of God, for they shall trust in the name of the Lord; and again, "In his name shall the Gentiles trust." The God in whom we trust inhabits eternity; and yet he hears and helps us, poor worms of the earth, finite creatures, who must die, because we are the creatures of time.

No creature can possess the attributes of Deity. If eternity or self-existence or omnipotence or essential holiness belong to any being, that being is entitled to be worshiped as God. Jehovah only is eternal, or self existent. He alone was not created, and he alone never began to exist. All other beings are but creatures dependent upon him for being and life and all things. This is the God that christians worship. This is he in whom they trust.

Because our God is who he is, therefore every promise that he has made is sure. His predestination is for this reason absolute or certain, for this is what the word "absolute" means. His foreknowledge is not mere guess-work, but is knowledge. His sovereignty is coextensive with the universe; and his work of grace in salvation secures to the heirs of promise all that fullness of blessing which he has purposed to bestow upon them. What hope could we have, what ray of light would ever cheer our pathway, what comfort could we have in trouble, were not our God just what he is revealed to be in the word of truth? The strong, the rich, the self-righteous, we are well aware, feel no need of such a friend. His name contains no sound of delight for them. But when the self-righteous Pharisee, Saul, becomes the sinner, Paul the little, then to him all that is involved in the name of the Lord becomes precious. We therefore hope that such poor and needy ones may continue to find in the SIGNS in the future, as in the past, the meat and milk of doctrine that is suited to each one's need. Far better that the SIGNS should cease, than that it should fail to declare the name of the Lord.

In full harmony with this setting forth of the name of the Lord, we desire that all which may appear in the SIGNS during the coming year shall be for the furtherance of peace and truth among the churches of the saints. We desire to exclude any bitterness of controversy that may arise. We think it right that brethren should confer together, and compare each other's views together; but this does not call for the use of any bitter or unbrotherly words, such as naturally arise out of the flesh. We hope to be ever kept from using such words ourselves, and we desire to give no place to them from the pen of any correspondent of the SIGNS. We can none of us know the truth except by the revelation of God; and therefore it ill-becomes us, if we know any truth, to blame our brother who may not know it, seeing that God has not revealed it to him. We must ever learn by experience. It is but an idle tale to tell us things of which we have no knowledge. If preaching or writing, however, be of things that we have known by heartfelt experience, then indeed our hearts respond, and we have fellowship together through our Lord Jesus Christ. We trust that all who may write for the SIGNS, both editors and correspondents, may speak the things they do know, and testify the things they have seen.

Finally, brethren, we wish you all a new year of blessing from the hand of God. May grace, mercy and peace abide and abound with you all. Farewell. Be perfect, be of one mind, live in peace; and the God of love and peace shall be with you all. Amen.

C.

DIFFERENCE BETWEEN OLD AND NEW SCHOOL BAPTISTS.

NUMBER THREE.

MANY of the New School Baptists, as well as the Old School, profess to believe the doctrine of Election; but there is great diversity among them, in their manner of explaining their belief on this subject. None of them believe it, so far as we can understand them, in any sense that will conflict with free will, free agency, means of grace, and obligations of the unregenerate to make themselves the subject of it. It would be a wearisome undertaking for us, and an unreasonable infliction upon the patience of our readers, for us to write, or tax them to read, all the confused theories which have been avowed, from pulpit and press, and in private conversation by them, on Election. Some specimens of their views must suffice to show the contrast between them and Old School Baptists on this point; we will give a few.

SPECIMEN 1st. Those of the New School who are considered as the most sound, or as less violently opposed to the truth than others, profess to believe that God has chosen a people in Jesus Christ unto eternal salvation, and that this choice was made in the divine mind before the world began. That it is sovereign, discriminating and effectual; but that this doctrine being calculated to stir up the hearts of ungodly men to rage and blaspheme, is rather calculated to make them worse instead of better, and discourage them from seeking religion, and therefore ought not to be publicly preached. While they hold that it may, and perhaps in some cases ought to be believed, the tendency of publishing it is to chill the zeal of christians, make them stupid and sluggish in regard to their walk and deportment, careless and easy about the prosperity of Zion and the salvation of souls, and that it will paralize the churches and cause them to decline and become extinct.

In opposition to this, the Old order of Baptists believe that what the God of heaven has revealed of his eternal purpose in the salvation of his people should not only be believed in the heart, but published with the tongue, pen and press; that it illy becomes us, who profess to hope for salvation, to find fault with the manner in which we believe God has saved us, or to set our wisdom above his wisdom, and determine, of what he has revealed, what may and what may not be preached. We admit that a faithful testimony of the truth as it is Jesus will raise and stir up the enmity of the carnal hearts of ungodly men, that it will make diviners mad, and bring persecution on the people of God, and reproach upon his cause, not only from the openly profane, but more abundantly from unregenerated professors of christianity; but we at the same time feel assured that while it, on the one hand, makes the enemies of God and of his cause belch out the rage and blasphemies of their wicked hearts against the truth, it will feed, comfort, instruct, edify and enliven the heirs of salvation, and thereby effect the purpose of God in separating between the precious and the vile, and make manifest who are and who are not the children of God. The apostles have declared that they are of God, and that they that know God hear them, and they that know not God hear them not: and hereby know we the Spirit of truth and the spirit of error. And in regard to discouraging the ungodly from seeking after God and the salvation of their souls, they have no eyes to see, ears to hear, nor hearts to understand, the things of the kingdom of Christ, or that belong to the salvation of God, until they be quickened by the Holy Ghost; and when this is effected they are invariably discouraged, but completely slain to all hope or expectation of deliverance from wrath and perdition but by and in and through the Lord Jesus Christ, in perfect harmony with the Bible doctrine of eternal personal election.

SPECIMEN 2d. Others of the New order profess to believe God has eternally elected to salvation all who shall in time repent and believe the gospel. These, however, deny that election is personal; they contend that characters, and not persons, are elected. To illustrate, we will give an example which actually occurred in Indiana, not many months since. Brother B., an Old School Baptist Elder, in riding, fell into company with a Baptist minister of the New order, and in conversation asked him, "Do you believe the doctrine of Election?" "Certainly I do," was the reply. "Well, do you believe in eternal election?" "To be sure I do, and preach it constantly," said the New School man. "But do you believe in eternal unconditional election?" urged the Old School brother. "With all my heart I do" responded the New School man. "Well," said brother B., "I have but one question further on this point to ask: Do you believe in eternal, unconditional personal election?" "No!" was the unequivocal reply, "I do not. I believe that God has eternally and unconditionally elected all such characters as shall in the course of time be found repenting, believing and serving him; but that he had chosen any personally, to make them believers, and to give them repentance and eternal life, I do not."

From this description of professed believers in Election, the lovers of truth most decidedly differ, and against their artful deception they most emphatically protest. If Election be not personal, it is not election at all. Instead of God choosing his people because they were holy, he chose them in Christ Jesus before the foundation of the world, that they should be holy and without blame before him in love. Having predestinated them to the adoption of children by Jesus Christ unto himself, according to the good pleasure of his will, to the praise of the glory of his grace, wherein he hath made us accepted in the Beloved. Hence the apostle says, "But we are bound to give thanks unto God always for you, brethren, beloved of the Lord, because God hath from the beginning chosen you to salvation, through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth." They are, therefore, "elect according to the foreknowledge of God the Father, through sanctification of the Spirit, unto obedience and sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ. Not according to what God foreknew or foresaw of faith or obedience in us, to induce him to elect us, but elected unto obedience and purification by the Spirit's work in applying the blood of Christ to us for the cleansing of us from sin.

Paul uses what is written of Jacob and Esau, to illustrate the election of grace: "For the children being not yet born, neither having done any good or evil, that the purpose of God according to election might stand, not of works, but of him that calleth, it was said unto her [Rebecca], The elder shall serve the younger; as it is written, Jacob have I loved, but Esau have I hated." Will any pretend to say that God's love for Jacob and hatred of Esau were not personal? If so, why did God lead about Jacob, and keep him as the apple of his eye, and lay the heritage of Esau waste for the dragons of the wilderness, and decree that Edom should build, but he would throw down, and that they should call them [the children of Esau] The border of wickedness, the people against whom the Lord hath indignation forever? This account of Jacob and Esau, Paul says, is according to Election; therefore the one is just as personal as the other, and equally as irrespective of the good or evil works of the parties concerned or embraced in the choice of God, in the one case as in the other.

SPECIMEN 3d. Some of the New School profess to believe that God's election is personal, but deny that it is eternal, or from before the foundation of the world. These contend that if sinners wait for God to quicken and regenerate them, they will die in their sins and be forever lost; but if they will do what is in their power to commend themselves to the favor of God, by using certain supposed means of grace, repent, believe, pray, attend meeting, contribute to what they profanely call the support of the gospel, they will be the cause of their own election. In short, if the sinner will choose God, God in return will choose the sinner, whose election is thus secured by himself! Of this sort of pretended believers in Election, there is the greatest number among the New School Baptists at this time; hence their preaching, exhorting, and all their inventions to coax, persuade, frighten, command and compel the unquickened sinner to get religion; and hence their various extravagant operations for evangelizing the world.

But the apostolic Baptists, from Paul's day down to the present, have and do believe that God from the beginning chose his people to salvation; that "He has saved them, and called them with a holy calling, not according to their works, but according to his own purpose and grace, given them in Christ Jesus before the world began." The declaration of Paul to the Ephesians is conclusive, "According as he hath chosen [or elected] us in him before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before him in love."

Admit the testimony of an inspired apostle, and the slimsy caviling of Arminian Baptists, and of all other enemies of the truth, falls like Dagan before the ark of God. For if we were, as the apostle asserts, chosen in Christ before the foundation of the world, and predestinated to the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to himself, according to the good pleasure of his will, it follows of course that God did not choose us subsequently to our having chosen him, or in consequence of our having first chosen him, or of our having done either good or evil. And if, as we have quoted, "by Jesus Christ to himself," it is not by us and Jesus Christ to ourselves; and if according to his will, it is not according to our will; and if he has made us accepted in the Beloved, we have not made ourselves accepted, either in or out of the Beloved.

SPECIMEN 4th. There is still another class among the New order, who profess to believe that God has chosen a certain portion of mankind to salvation, such as Enoch, Noah, Abraham and others; but that his election is not so definite as to include all that may be saved, or positively to secure against all possible contingencies the certain salvation of all who are chosen or elected. This description of cavilers make void the election of grace in toto, and make salvation to depend exclusively upon the will and works of men; although Paul has said that God's purpose according to election should stand, "not of works, but of him that calleth." "By grace are ye saved through faith, and that not of yourselves; it is the gift of God; not of works, lest any man should boast." "Not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us, by the washing of regeneration and renewing of the Holy Ghost." "If it be of grace, it is no more of works; otherwise grace is no more grace," &c.

The Scriptures are inexhaustible in the testimony which they afford to meet all windings of wicked men and devils on this subject; and to demonstrate that the Election of grace is, as held by Old School Baptists, sovereign, eternal, unconditional, discriminating, personal and effectual, that in it the eternal salvation and ultimate glory of all whom God has everlastingly chosen and ordained to eternal life is perfectly secured, so that none can be added to it, nor any be taken from it.

We might greatly enlarge and give an indefinite number of specimens of New School divinity, on the subject of Election; but we conclude that sufficient has been said to show that there is no more real harmony between Old and New School Baptists on Election, than between the Old School and any other of the numerous branches of antichrist.

In our next, we propose to consider the difference between the New School Baptists and the people of God on the glorious doctrine of the Atonement.

PRUNING OUR LIST.

ABOUT three months ago we sent notices to all our subscribers whose subscription was not paid beyond 15 December, 1893, and we have now discontinued all who have made no response. It is impossible for us to tell who desires their paper continued after their time has expired unless we can hear from them. Our experience has been that not more than one in five whose subscription becomes more than a year in arrear ever pay at all. Besides, many move from the place at which they were receiving their paper, and through neglect of the postmaster the paper is continued often two or three years, unless we discontinue it ourselves. Our only protection, then, is to do as we have done, and discontinue all from whom we have heard nothing in response to our notices sent them three months ago, and whose subscription is a year or more in arrears. If in stopping these papers we have discontinued any who desire to have their paper still sent them, and who will pay up soon, if they will so inform us we will again enter their names on our list and continue their credit. Or if we have stopped any who are really not able to pay we will place them on the indigent list as long as we can afford to do so.

We shall print extra copies of the first few numbers of this volume, and all who send on before the supply is exhausted will be furnished with back numbers.

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE.

TO MOST of our readers the above mentioned book is too well known to need any introduction or a description by us. While many of the Bibles have a Concordance appended, they are generally so condensed or abridged as to be of little or no use. Cruden's Complete Concordance, however, enables one to readily turn to any passage of Scripture of which they can call to mind two or three words, and in our opinion is the most complete and convenient as a reference book of any published. In addition, it contains many other aids in studying the Bible, as may be seen by reference to advertisement on last page. Remember, both the books there mentioned are CRUDEN'S COMPLETE.

to live soberly, righteously and godly in this present world.

Now, if those who profess to have been subjects of the saving power and grace of God do not walk righteously, but follow the desires of the flesh, then the power and truth of the doctrine they profess to believe and love is denied, and they dishonor it; but every exemplification of the power of that doctrine in the life of a christian is as a jewel hung upon it to set off its beauty. The more apparent opposition there is to a correct walk, the stronger the temptations are to walk dishonestly, the more does the power of the truth appear in the overcoming of them, and therefore the greater is the adornment of the doctrine when truth and purity are maintained in the walk. So the apostle uses this form of speech when speaking of a servant, as in a natural point of view he may be supposed to be more subjected to temptations in various ways to swerve from the strict path of integrity, considering his peculiar condition as one subject to the will of another. So an obedient walk of a servant is spoken of as conspicuously adorning the doctrine, proving its truth, manifesting the power of God which that doctrine speaks of, and causing it to shine forth more gloriously, as these jewels of good works reflect its beauty and loveliness.

SILAS H. DURAND.

SOUTHAMPTON, Pa., Dec., 1894.

WARWICK, N. Y., Dec. 12, 1894.

DEAR BROTHER JENKINS:—Thinking the inclosed letter of more than personal interest, I have asked liberty to submit it for the benefit of the readers of the SIGNS. Doubtless much could be added to the value of the paper in comforting the afflicted and poor people of God if many such private letters were forwarded for publication.

In the hope of life, your brother and companion in tribulation,

WM. L. BEEBE.

FRENCHTOWN, N. J., Aug. 22, 1894.

DEAR ELDER BEEBE:—For some time I have felt that I would like to write to you; but as so many go to you for your kind, fatherly advice, I really hesitate to trouble you with anything I can write or say. How very often do I fear that I can trace some of the feelings of a child of God without being one myself; but if feelings of sinfulness, vileness and just condemnation are some of the feelings of the saints, then I can claim some evidence that I am one for whom Christ died. Or, if > "A daily cross, a stubborn will,

> A heart replete with every ill,
> Affections prone from God to go,
> Are ills which only Israel know,"

then I may claim to be an Israelite. How very well do I remember when I would hear people talk of being sinners, or if a saint the least of all, that it would make me think they were not quite right, for I could not see how any one who had lived a usually moral life could feel such vileness as I heard the Old Baptists talk of; so I concluded they just said it to make people think they were pious. But since that time I think I have been made to know the exceeding sinfulness of sin, and to see myself as one that could not even think a good thought nor do a good deed. All was vanity, and I utterly cast down. I can think of myself only as one wandering in the wilderness, in a solitary way, finding no city to dwell in. Hungry and thirsty, my soul fainted in me. Then the Lord heard my cry, and delivered me from my distress in such a way that I could not tell it; for all I knew I was loving the ones that I had really hated, and I felt all my trust to be in God. This was several years before I became a member of the Old Baptists; and how I did at that time hope the time would come when it would be my privilege to be baptized. When the appointed time came I was given strength to go and tell the church just a little of the sorrows and joys that I had passed through, and they kindly received me. The day I was baptized I felt calm and peaceful, just an assurance that Jesus was leading me; I could not doubt his love. I did not feel but what I should have doubts and fears in regard to myself being a child of God, but really thought that whatever trial should come I could say, "It is the Lord; let him do what seemeth good in his sight." Last fall we had to part with a dear cousin, and I found that I did not bear it with the patience or resignation that I thought I would. Then when we were called to part with that dear girl whom you saw fall asleep [her sister, Miss Abbie Kugler], I think if one were ever filled with murmurings I was. I could not see any justice in God in taking our loved ones. I wanted them here. I did not think of spiritual things, neither did I want to. It would be useless for me to try to tell you one-half the many sad and evil thoughts I had. I cannot imagine another numbered with the Old Baptists to be filled with such selfishness and meanness.

Elder Beebe, it was a terrible place to be in, and I do not know what you will think of me after you have read this. I really think most of the time that I have deceived the church, and it would be just to try to tell them; yet I do not know what I would do if I did not feel that I had their fellowship. Now, am I not a mystery? I think you will readily acknowledge with me that I am. Perhaps I have never known what it is to trust in God, but only thought I knew.

Will you please excuse me for writing to you? But as some people are just to trouble others, I have quite come to the conclusion that is what I am for. May it be your privilege in the future, as it has been in the past, to contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints, whether I am one or not.

Affectionately,

SUSAN R. KUGLER.

NEWARK, Del., Dec., 1894.

DEAR BROTHER BEEBE:—Having recently moved from Batavia, N. Y., to Newark Del., I would be pleased to have my correspondents address me at the latter place.

We, as a family, have never before been able to attend the meetings we all like best, until we came to reside near the old Welsh Tract Meeting-house. I find, on examining the history of the church, that it was really formed in Wales, in the year 1701, before the little colony came to this country. The present church was re-organized in 1703, two years later. For several years they had native Welshmen for ministers and pastors, and after that native Americans. They first worshiped in a log house. The present house was built in 1746, one hundred and forty-eight years ago, and is, at the present time, a neat and convenient place for meetings.

But with the attractions of this old, historical place, what may we say of the brethren and sisters who are members of this church, and the churches near them? If the kind and hospitable reception we, as a family, received on arriving here is a true index of their love and fellowship, surely we may count them as among those precious ones of whom it is said, "And they shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels."—Mal. iii. 17.

It does seem truly wonderful that wherever one may go among the true children of God there is always this manifestation of the love of God among them. It is not only shown to those we hold dear in the flesh, but strangers share equally in the love which unites the hearts of the saints. This love, which is of God, binds all hearts in one bundle of love; and through the truth they have fellowship with each other. "Now therefore ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow-citizens with the saints, and of the household of God." It does not take long for those who have a true spirit of discernment to detect the language of Canaan. When it is found in its purity, there springs up a love and fellowship in the hearts of the saints which is never experienced in natural friendship. It is like two drops of water, whose particles intermingle and never can be separated. So the love of God diffuses itself in his people, and makes them one with him and one with each other. "And we have known and believed the love that God hath to us. God is love; and he that dwelleth in love, dwelleth in God, and God in him."

Yours in fellowship,

B. F. HAMILTON.

HOPEWELL, Pa., Dec. 5, 1894.

G. BEEBE'S SON—DEAR BROTHER IN THE BLESSED SAVIOR:—If I may address you thus. I fear I have no right to claim so sacred a relationship with any of God's dear children; for I think I am the least of all, and am altogether vanity in his pure sight. I am made to fear that I have deceived you all, and that I am nothing but a hypocrite. But God cannot be deceived, and I feel satisfied to trust myself in his tender care; for he is too wise to err, and too good to be unkind. Every one will receive according as he has prepared for them, and not according as we prepare for ourselves. Without him we can do nothing. Through him we live, move and have our being. Is it not good, my dear brother, to trust to the dear Lord, that some day when it pleases him he will take us home to rest? What a great comfort this one little word, rest, contains; rest our weary souls in the bosom of Jesus. O how soothing it is to lean on our blessed Lord for rest. He giveth his beloved rest. O may he, my dear brother, give you and I that rest that cometh to all the dear children of our God. For you, dear brother, I feel that it shall come; but for myself my hope is sometimes faint. There is rest for the weary on the other side of Jordan; there is rest for the weary soul.

I am almost forgetting for what purpose I commenced this letter to you. The object is to send you my subscription money for the dear old SIGNS another year, as I do not wish to be without it; neither do I wish to neglect my duty in sending, when I know my subscription has almost expired. It is certainly a great comfort to me to read its richly laden columns. Often in distress of mind it finds me; but as I read, I am made to cry out, "Bless the Lord, O my soul; and all that is within me, bless his holy name." For it is God who doeth it. He gives his servants richly from their Master's table, and then do they speak comfortingly to Zion.

> "Without thy sovereign power, O Lord,
> No sweets the gospel can afford;
> No drops of heavenly love will fall,
> To cheer the weary, thirsty soul."

I have now written more than I thought for. I know your time is fully taken up without reading my scribble. My health in general is failing, to what it has been, yet I am very thankful indeed that it is no worse. I am blessed far above what I deserve.

Remember me at the throne of grace when it is well with you.

Your humble sister in Christ Jesus our Lord,

LIZZIE HIMES.

LINDALE, Texas, Dec. 8, 1894.

BROTHER BEEBE:—Please give notice through the SIGNS OF THE TIMES that the Big Springs Primitive Baptist Church, of Smith County, Texas, granted an arm of said church at Nebo school-house, two miles east of Lindale, Texas. The regular meetings will be held on the second Sunday in each month; at which time and place we would be pleased to meet any of our brethren, and especially the preaching brethren, who believe in the doctrine of the absolute predestination of God in all things whatsoever cometh to pass; that God chose his people in his Son before the world began; that his people are sons and daughters of Adam, chosen and predestinated unto eternal glory, and not principles in them; and in time they will be effectually called, and born of his Holy Spirit, and be made partakers of the divine nature; not their carnal nature remodeled, or renovated, or modified; but they simply receive a nature they never had before; that is, the divine nature; and to them a new nature; hence the warfare between the two natures. Also, the doctrine of the resurrection and change of our vile bodies; that the same body that returns to the earth as it was, will be raised; not as it was, but will be changed from a natural to a spiritual body, from a corruptible to an incorruptible body, and fashioned like unto the glorious body of the Son of God.

May God help us all to know and love the truth, is the prayer of your brother in hope of a better life after death,

FRANK LODEN.

EDITORIAL NOTICES.

BIBLES OF ALL SIZES.

ON our last page will be found an advertisement of some of the sizes, styles and prices at which we can furnish Bibles. The vast variety of sizes and combinations compiled in Bibles is too great to all be given in our space.

The smaller Bibles mentioned in the advertisement are the ones most in demand, and these we will mail postage paid on receipt of price. The larger or Family Bibles, being too large and heavy to go safely by mail, will be sent by express at our expense. We are prepared to furnish most any size, style or priced Bible. If you do not find what you wish in our list published, write us a description of what you would like to have and we will send you the price.

INDIGENT FUND.

IN calling the attention of our brethren and friends to the necessity of our having assistance in order to be able to continue the SIGNS to those on our indigent list, we wish to emphatically impress on their minds that personally we are not financially profited by their liberality. On the contrary we are, and are willing to be, losers in this matter. The actual cost of supplying the paper to our indigent subscribers always considerably exceeds the total amount of contributions to the fund for that purpose. But were it not for the kindness of brethren and friends in sharing this burden with us we should be obliged to strike from our list many who highly appreciate reading the paper, but who are not able to pay for it.

CHANGE OF RESIDENCE.

SISTER Beebe Blackmon having changed her residence from Zephyr, Texas, to Mill Creek, Chickasaw Nation, Indian Territory, requests her correspondents to address her at the latter place.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

DIED—June 3d, 1894, in Hot Springs, Ark., Judge H. R. Littell, aged 62 years lacking 6 days.

He was the son of consistent Primitive Baptists, and loved the doctrine of their church. He had never joined the church, but had a hope through the mercy of Jesus, which he manifested to all by sterling integrity and uprightness in his walk before men. He was for many years a subscriber and reader of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. He had been at Hot Springs but little more than a week, when death came suddenly.

E. C. PHELPS.

HOPKINSVILLE, Ky., Dec. 17, 1894.

DIED—At her home east of Mt. Pulaski, Thursday night, Sept. 27th, Mrs. Susannah Ludwig Ring, aged 82 years, 1 month and 18 days.

She was the daughter of Daniel Ludwig, of Circleville, Ohio, and was married to George Ring, of Lancaster, Ohio, Sept. 5th, 1832. He dying in 1862, she came with her children to Logan Co., Ill., in 1866, where she lived a useful and conscientious life for twenty-eight years. She leaves four children, ten grandchildren and two great-grandchildren to mourn their loss. She had for fifty-four years been a consistent member of the Old School Baptist Church. In her last illness she was patient and cheerful, bearing her severe pain with the fortitude of a true christian, only longing for the rest of her heavenly home.

Sarah Wright, daughter of Martin and Elizabeth Sayler, was born March 21st, 1813, on the Sayler homestead, near Winchester, Preble Co., Ohio. She was one of a family of eleven children, seven daughters and four sons, of whom she was the sole survivor.

On Oct. 24th, 1835, she was united in marriage to Wm. F. Wright. The fruits of this union were seven children, three of whom are still living. For more than fifty-seven years their wedded life continued, until dissolved by the death of the husband on June 9th, 1893. In the various relations of life she showed herself a good and true woman, and above all things she was a kind and devoted wife and mother. Although not a member of any church, she held to the faith of the Old School Baptists, being a firm believer in the doctrine of foreknowledge, predestination and election. She was well-versed in the holy Scriptures, and was very fond of conversing upon religious topics. The longer and more deeply she studied these subjects, the more confirmed she became in her faith. Full of years, she fell asleep at the age of 80 years, 6 months and 12 days.

The family of the deceased take this opportunity to extend heartfelt thanks to their sympathizing friends, who in so many ways have ministered unto and consoled them in this their time of sorrow and bereavement. The funeral service was held in the M. E. church-house at Winchester, Ohio, where a large company of relatives and friends met to pay the last respects due the deceased, and an appropriate discourse was delivered by Elder Wells C. Cornell, from Revelation xiv. 13. After services the mortal remains of the beloved mother were interred in the cemetery near by.

DEAR BROTHER BEEBE:—I am requested by our venerable and highly esteemed brother, George Lowe, to write for publication a notice of the death of his beloved wife, Mrs. Mary A. Lowe, who was called from these scenes of sorrow and affliction Nov. 12th, 1894, aged 70 years, 2 months and 24 days.

Sister Lowe was a devoted member of the Old School Baptist Church in Salisbury, Md., for more than thirty-six years, having been baptized there April 25th, 1858. She was truly a faithful member. Her seat was never vacant at her meetings, except for sickness of herself or some member of her family whom she could not leave. She was well known to all the brethren who have visited the Salisbury Church for thirty years or more. Her bright face, cheerful smiles and pleasant words, with her many acts of kindness, and her hospitality, which was open-handed and free, all impressed those who came in contact with her, and filled their minds with cheerful thoughts. No one was ever in her company but went away feeling refreshed.

Her spiritual exercises began very early in life, and it was because the Lord led and instructed her that she was an Old Baptist. Her parents were of the Episcopal persuasion (as were also her husband's family); but at the early age of sixteen years she became a searcher of the Scriptures, and soon realized that her hope and faith had placed her in the company of those who fear the Lord, and she with her husband was a regular attendant upon Baptist preaching for several years before uniting with the church. They were both baptized the same day. Sister Lowe, in common with all the Lord's people, met with many severe trials, but all were borne unmurmuringly, she at all times bearing testimony to the goodness of the Lord, and recognizing his hand in all that was laid upon her. Her constant affirmation was of the grace of God in her salvation.

She had been subject for the last few years to spells of sickness, perhaps induced by "La Grippe," of which she had an attack when it was prevailing in her vicinity; but her last illness was of about a month's duration, and for just one week she was paralyzed and unconscious. For some time previous to her last illness she was unusually bright in spiritual things, and friends now recall many expressions from her lips which showed that the Lord was preparing her to enter into her eternal home.

She leaves her aged husband, to whom she had been married nearly fifty years, four surviving children (two, brother Wilson Lowe and Mrs. Georgie Ruark, having preceded her a few years), twenty-one grandchildren, two devoted sisters, besides the church and a large circle of friends, who sincerely mourn their loss of an affectionate wife, loving mother and sister, and kind friend, but not as those who have no hope; as our dear afflicted brother said to me, "It is not for her I mourn, but for myself." But he bears it patiently, and says, "I have one consolation; I shall not be long behind her."

Her funeral was attended on the 14th by many sympathizing friends. Elders Rittenhouse, Poulson and myself were present, each taking part in the funeral services.

A. B. FRANCIS.

WILLARD, Va., Dec. 19, 1894.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—It becomes my painful duty, by request of the friends, and in accordance with my own wishes, to send you for publication in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES the obituary of our beloved sister, Mrs. Elizabeth Shanks, who departed this life on Tuesday, Sept. 18th, 1894, at her home in Turner, Marion Co., Oregon, aged 62 years, 10 months and 28 days.

She was married to our beloved brother, Elder Abner Shanks, July 22d, 1852, and was baptized by Elder John Shanks the same year, in the fellowship of the Paint Creek Church of Regular Old School Baptists, in Carroll Co., Ind. She with her husband and family moved to the state of Iowa, and from there they crossed the plains in the year 1865 with teams, and settled in Marion Co., Oregon, where she spent her life in duties to her God and to her family and friends. She lived a useful life, to the honor of her profession. She was all we admire in noble womanhood, a faithful wife, a loving mother, a friend to the poor and afflicted. The Primitive Baptists found a comfortable home at her house, where she delighted to see them. She was a member of the Union Church at the time of her death. She will be sadly missed at the church where she loved so well to fill her seat and join in singing the songs of Zion; but she is missed more at her home, where she has been so faithful to administer to the wants of an old, afflicted husband, who has been sorely afflicted for the last ten years. He is eighty-four years old this month. Late in the summer she was taken with cancer in the stomach. The best physicians were called in, and her children and step-children did all they could to restore her to health; but her heavenly Father called her home. The writer went to see her one week before she died, and found her perfectly resigned to the will of her Master. She requested me to preach her funeral, and told the family where and how she wanted to be buried. She wished her sons and step-sons to act as pall-bearers, and an artist to take a picture of her grave after she was laid to rest.

On Sept. 20th, 1894, she was taken from the residence to the church where her membership was, where the writer tried to speak words of comfort to a large company of sorrowing friends and relatives, using for a text Psalm cxvi. 15. Then she was laid to rest, to await the resurrection of her body.

May the Lord bless the afflicted husband and the dear children, and prepare them all to meet her in that glory world.

PICTORIAL HISTORY

OF THE

UNITED STATES.

By James D. McCabe.

This work has taken rank as the Standard History of the United States. It is no dry mass of details—no bombastic effort to inflame the national pride, but a clear, vivid and brilliant narrative of the events of our history, from the discovery of the American Continent down to the present time. It gives a most interesting account of the Indians of North America, from the time of the coming of the white men. The voyages of Columbus and the explorations and discoveries of the different nations of Europe are related with graphic power. Every step of our colonial history is traced with patient fidelity, and the sources of those noble and, we trust, enduring institutions, which have made our country free and great, are shown with remarkable clearness. Then follows a clear and succinct account of our great Struggle for Independence, and the establishment of the Federal Union—the events of our career from the close of the Revolution to the administration of Harrison.

The work is printed from plain, new type, on fine calendered paper, and comprised in one octavo volume of 960 pages. It is splendidly embellished with nearly 500 fine engravings, embracing battles and other historical scenes, portraits of distinguished men, views of our principal cities, &c., &c.

CORRESPONDENCE.

HUSBANDS AND WIVES.

"HUSBANDS, love your wives, even as Christ also loved the church, and gave himself for it, that he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the word, that he might present it to himself a glorious church, not having spot or wrinkle or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish. So ought men to love their wives as their own bodies. He that loveth his wife loveth himself. For no man ever yet hated his own flesh, but nourisheth and cherisheth it, even as the Lord the church: for we are members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones."—Eph. v. 25–30.

This direction of the inspired apostle does not deal with love as an emotion, but as a principle; it does not refer to the feeling of love as a passion, but to its proper influence upon our life, to its faithful and steadfast expression in word and action. It is taken for granted that the man loved the woman before he asked her to become his wife, and the apostles here and elsewhere direct and exhort as to the manner of that love after the marriage has been legally confirmed. They speak of the mutual obligations which belong to this holy relationship, and which they who enter into its sacred bonds assume toward each other.

The marriage relation is the most ancient and the most important of all the ordinances of God in this world, and it is fraught with greater and more far-reaching interests than any other institution that exists among men; and under God's blessing it is the source of the purest and most exalted earthly happiness. But the true enjoyment of this sacred relationship, the full experience of its rich beneficence, is made to depend in great measure, if not entirely, upon a due regard to these wholesome and binding responsibilities which it justly imposes upon both the husband and the wife.

The example presented to the husband, in the words I have quoted, for the regulation of his attitude and conduct towards his wife is, in its purity and holiness and absolute faultlessness, infinitely beyond the possible reach of men, except, in so far as they are controlled and led by the Spirit of Christ, the heavenly Husband. But this command, with every exhortation to husbands and wives, is given only to those who have the Spirit of Christ. "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his."—Romans viii. 9. All such are under law to Christ, and desire to obey him, and to "walk even as he walked." It is well, therefore, for husbands to often consider with what manner of love Christ loved the church, and still loves her; to remember how faithful he is to all the exceeding great and precious promises which he gave to her in the day of her espousals, fulfilling them every one; to behold how long-suffering he is toward her in all her waywardness, and how tenderly compassionate and merciful to all her faults, to all her unrighteousness. No ugly conduct on her part toward him, no forgetfulness of his loving commands, no slighting of his wishes made known to her, no ingratitude for his constant goodness, ever causes him to abate in the least degree the manifestation of his tender love and kindness toward her. Here is the perfect example set before all husbands who are subjects of the grace and salvation of our Lord Jesus Christ.

I once heard Elder Robert C. Leachman say, "No husband ever had so fretful, complaining, disobedient and disagreeable a wife as the church is to Christ; and no wife ever had so patient, loving, kind, faithful and forbearing a husband as Christ is to the church."

How liable the most loving husband is to become worried and fretful under pressure of care and trouble, and to be moved, at times, in his manner toward his wife by some hasty, selfish impulse of the flesh rather than by the pure, quiet, unselfish principle of love. How liable he is to grow distant and cold in manner on account of some real or fancied (more likely the latter) opposition to his wishes on her part, or to use sharp and reproachful words to her. For such a course, whatever provocation he may think he has, the example gives no warrant, nor allows the least excuse. Love only, the love which preceded and caused the relation, is recognized in the Scriptures as the proper moving principle of the husband toward his wife at all times, and under all circumstances. If this mark appears at times too high, and impossible to be attained unto, yet it is the holy privilege and solemn duty of the husband to reach forth unto it, and steadily press toward it, striving for its attainment in the fear of God.

If a man has offered marriage to a woman whom he knew he did not love, he has done a great wrong, unless some particular circumstances may be regarded as making a difference. Nevertheless, as a christian he owes her all the amenities of true love, and cannot answer a good conscience with less. If one has mistaken his own sentiments, and did not discover his mistake until after marriage, every principle of true manliness, not to speak of religion, demand of him to quietly bear the consequences of his own weakness. He must be a weak man indeed, if not at heart vile and cruel, who, after having won a woman from her home to be his wife by assurances of love, would tell her, after some months or years of wedded life, that he had discovered that he did not love her, and carry himself toward her as though this were some fault of hers, instead of being the fault of his own insincere and corrupt heart. But what a pitiful spectacle would he present who would publicly proclaim his wife a jealous woman, and how still more would he be regarded with contempt by all honorable men, if he should give this as a ground to justify a cruel desertion of her. The very suggestion by a husband that his wife is jealous of him, instead of justifying him in his ill treatment of her, proclaims to all discerning people that she has cause for jealousy, whether she yields to the painful pangs of the bitter passion, or bravely, in the strength of a woman's love, puts it away, and strives with all her power to keep to herself the love and integrity of her husband. Yes, to charge one's wife with jealousy is about the same as to acknowledge that she has had some appearance of reason to be jealous, at least, if not some good reason. What right has he to even think her jealous? How came he to think of the possibility of such a feeling? Why should he allow the first shade of suspicion to enter her mind. He is all her own; has he given himself fully and unreservedly to her? I venture to say that a jealous wife of a true and faithful husband is rarely, if ever, seen.

A loving wife does not go hunting for causes to be jealous. Such causes must force themselves upon her before she will even look at them. But how many a poor disappointed wife, who can no longer shut her eyes to the thoughtless, if not faithless, conduct of her husband, for the love she still has for him, smothers the bitter feeling, and makes every effort to keep, or win back, the affection that was hers, and preserve all that is possible of the married home, even while she must feel that much of its purity and sweetness have gone. It was her all, and she must be desolate indeed if she is forced to give it up. She is worse than a widowed wife. However thoughtless, indiscreet, or worse she may be who has given a wife any appearance of reason to be jealous of her husband, yet the husband must rightfully bear all the blame, as between him and his wife. He is her head, and the guardian of her peace and happiness in that relation, and he cannot throw the responsibility upon any other.

It is to be feared that there are many married people among the members of the church of Christ who give but little thought to the obligations which the Scriptures present as resting upon them toward each other. Yet these obligations are set forth in the law of Christ just as they are felt in the hearts of all true, right minded husbands and wives. They are binding upon all who are children of God, upon those whose companions are not believers, as well as upon those who are "heirs together of the grace of life;" but their bonds are not irksome, but good and pleasant, to those who are true and faithful. With what dignity and tenderness the apostles present the holy commands and loving exhortations upon this most important subject. "Wives, submit yourselves unto your own husbands, as unto the Lord. For the husband is the head of the wife, even as Christ is the head of the church: and he is the Savior of the body. Therefore as the church is subject unto Christ, so let the wives be to their own husbands in everything." Then, after speaking of the example of Christ as husband of the church, in the sublime language quoted at the beginning of this article, the apostle continues: "For this cause shall a man leave his father and mother, and shall be joined unto his wife, and they two shall be one flesh. This is a great mystery; but I speak concerning Christ and the church. Nevertheless let every one of you so love his wife even as himself: and the wife see that she reverence her husband."—Eph. v. 22–33. See also Col. iii. 18, 19; Titus ii. 5; 1 Peter iii. 1–7. But how can that man love a woman who acts in such an unlovely manner as it appears to us that his wife does? How can that wife reverence such an unworthy, unprincipled man as her husband; and why should she obey one who is far her inferior in mental ability and acquirements? Such questions do not even suggest the true reasons for these mutual obligations. It is not because of any distinguished personal characteristics, not because of marked ability or special goodness, that his wife is commanded to reverence and obey him, but because he is her husband, and God has ordained it so. It is not because of any special grace of person or sweetness of disposition that the husband is to love his wife, and not to be bitter against her, but because she is his wife. It is not because of the mutual attractions of the person which first drew these two together, but because of the relation in which they now stand to each other, that these mutual obligations are to be observed by them in the fear of God.

Many years ago a dear and faithful member of the church, much older than I, said in conversation with me, "If my wife ever gets to feeling cold or vexed toward me, I cannot rest or have any peace till I get her love back again." I knew that his wife easily became angry with him, and I did not think her of a lovely disposition; but I would not have ventured to intimate such a thing to him, for he and I would not have agreed at all upon that subject. But his true love for her, his sublime regard for the holiness of the relationship, his humility and faithfulness in all the requirements of the Spirit of Christ concerning it, and his plain and simple manner of expressing his feelings about it, impressed my mind powerfully. Between two, one of whom was of that character, there could not be any estrangement of long duration, unless the other criminally destroys the integrity of the union.

I knew a sister in the church who was an example of how much a loving and faithful wife can do to preserve the home, and in some little measure to preserve the husband from becoming an absolute wreck. He was in every respect unworthy of her, dissipated and unfaithful, and her friends sometimes urged it as her duty to herself and her children to separate from him. But she said she loved him when she married him, and she loved him yet. While she never weakly excused his wrong doings to himself, she preserved a cheerful manner and kind expression toward him, and gave him all attention, while faithfully endeavoring to restore him, which she did in such measure as seemed possible. Of slender frame and feeble health, yet she seldom missed any meetings of the church, and seldom went without him. Her precious hope and spiritual mindedness were remarkably manifested daily. In this was the secret of her strength to bear and be patient. Under circumstances most trying she was calm, hopeful, cheerful. Her children grew up to love and honor her, and with reason to thank God for such a mother; and when she was called to her heavenly home many years ago, she left her husband in a position to appreciate the blessing she had been to him more fully than he ever had before, and with some deep sense of her wonderful goodness to him. And he has probably shown more of a disposition to resist his gross inclinations than ever for the same length of time before.

This is an extreme case, but it shows a good example of what long forbearance, unfailing faithfulness and unwearied kindness, with a patient and confiding trust in the Lord, can accomplish. She might have regarded the relation as at an end, for he had given her cause. Whether it was her duty to do so I could not judge, and cannot now. But she would have heeded no advice from men. Her heart directed her in the way she went, and her conscience acquiesced.

He who has commanded that the husband shall love his wife, and be not bitter against her; and that the wife shall see that she reverence her husband, and submit herself unto him, as unto the Lord; and that they shall dwell together with each other in the light of truth, "as being heirs together of the grace of life," will give each of them wisdom and strength and grace to fulfill these commands, and to know and do his will when the way is so dark and perplexing that all human wisdom and strength would fail. "Commit thy way unto the Lord; trust also in him; and he shall bring it to pass. And he shall bring forth thy righteousness as the light, and thy judgment as the noonday."—Psalm xxxvii. 5, 6.

"IF ye love me, keep my commandments."—John xiv. 15.

These words of Jesus are so impressed upon my mind that I cannot remove them, so I have taken up my pen to write, to see if I can find relief by so doing. I have not troubled the readers of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES with any of my imperfect letters for nearly a year past, and I do not know but that it would be more profitable for me to remain silent now, than to ask space to speak or write again. I am a poor, ignorant, sinful old man, and feel that "I know nothing as I ought to know" about spiritual things; therefore I hope none of the Lord's children will think that I am writing with a view of being able to instruct them in spiritual things. I feel to be greatly in need of instruction from them. The apostle, speaking of the commandments of Jesus, says they "are not grievous." I understand by this that the Lord never gave one of his dear children a commandment that they could not obey. Upon one occasion one of the scribes asked the Savior, "Which is the first commandment of all?" And Jesus answered him, "The first of all the commandments is, Hear, O Israel: the Lord our God is one Lord: and thou shalt love the Lord thy God," &c. "And the second is like, namely this, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." The question comes up in my mind, Who is our neighbor? I call to mind a time in my life when I lived in a sparely settled part of the country, where I had no one living near me. One of my children sickened and died. While it was sick I cared for it and nursed it for days and nights, without any thought of its being a task. But the greatest task of all my life came when I had to, with my own hands, dress and lay out for burial my own child. Any one under these trying circumstances would naturally desire to have neighbors. A time came when one came and settled by me. He was poor, and I did all in my power to aid him and make his family comfortable for the winter then coming on, even dividing my provisions for my own family with him. It came to pass that this very man whom I had thus befriended came to be my most bitter enemy; and that, too, without a cause.

Upon a certain occasion one of the scribes asked Jesus, "Who is my neighbor?" And the Savior relates to him the circumstances of the man who fell among thieves. Hence I conclude that it is not always the man who joins fences with us that is our neighbor. "Woe unto the world because of offenses! for it must needs be that offenses come; but woe to that man by whom the offense cometh!"—Matt. xviii. 7. Luke records this declaration of the Savior a little different from Matthew. "It is impossible but that offenses will come; but woe unto him through whom they come." This declaration of our Savior is often applied to the world, or the sin and iniquity in the world; but may it not be applied to the Lord's people? I do not believe that there is one of the redeemed family on earth but what at some time in this life they are found walking in disobedience to the commands of their heavenly Master. The Lord blesses his children in their rendering obedience unto him; but he never chastises them while in obedience. It is for their disobedience that he brings the chastening rod upon them. Paul says, "If ye are without chastisement, whereof all are partakers, then are ye bastards, and not sons." Every disobedience of the children of God is, to say the least, an offense against their spiritual enjoyment while here in this life, if not against their Lord and Master. Yet Jesus says, "It must needs be that offenses come; but woe unto him by whom they come." I believe that every child of God who has been brought to the knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus, have been made to feel at times, "Woe is me," because of their disobedience to the commands of their heavenly Master, and have been made to feel that "It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God." They realize this truth while passing under the chastening rod. "Now no chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous," says the apostle; "nevertheless afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteousness unto them which are exercised thereby." Sometimes we are led to doubt our acceptance with God the Father on account of our disobedience to his commands; on account of the manifold trials and chastisements we receive in this life. But we are admonished thus, "My son, despise not thou the chastening of the Lord, nor faint when thou art rebuked of him. For whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth." The children of God are curiously, yea, wonderously constituted, having the mind of Christ, desiring to serve and obey him, while at the same time they have a mind and desire to serve or follow after the flesh: a complex being. "If ye through the Spirit [mind of Christ] do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live." That is, if we subdue the mind which is of the flesh, and through the Spirit are found walking in obedience to all the commands of Jesus, we show that we love him; and not only so, but we enjoy the smiles of his love and his presence with us: thus it is we live. We cannot serve Jesus and the flesh at the same time. "No man can serve two masters." If we love Jesus, and keep his commandments, it is evidence that we are serving him. If we deny Jesus, by disobeying his commandments, it is also evidence that we are not serving him. I pray that all who love the Lord Jesus may be found following him as dear children, and keeping his commandments as he has commanded.

Dear brother Beebe, I have been hindered in writing, and shall have to leave the subject that was on my mind, as it has left me. What I have written is at your disposal. I may not trouble you again, and yet I may. Pray for me, a poor old man, a sinner of Adam's race, who, if saved, must be saved through grace alone. Farewell.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SON—DEAR BROTHER IN HOPE:—I am impressed to write you and tell you in a plain manner of the pleasure that I am afforded by seeing the dear old SIGNS so ably conducted and filled with the solid doctrine of God our Savior. I often pick up the first and second volumes of your dear old father's Editorials; and it does me good to see the same old Bible doctrine now being advocated in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES as Elder Gilbert Beebe held from the commencement to the end of his life on earth. While frequently assailed and persecuted (even by brethren), he would still stand by his colors and contend so earnestly for the faith of the gospel of our God. I am glad to see the same principle of doctrine proclaimed through the columns of the SIGNS now as were in the days of Elders G. Beebe, W. J. Purington, Thomas P. Dudley, and other old, reliable gospel ministers. Now that you have the assistance of Elders F. A. Chick and Benton Jenkins in the editorial department, I want to encourage you, and all the readers of the SIGNS, that we can now be assured of receiving sound Bible doctrine, having no compromising show in shunning all or any parts of the doctrine of God our Savior.

Many brethren have said in my presence that Elder G. Beebe was the ablest man in the Scriptures ever known to them; and I have quickly agreed with such expressions, and do claim that the SIGNS is now very ably conducted; and I do hold and believe that it is the only paper known to me that can be found contending fully in every point of doctrine as taught in the Scriptures. Many objections have been made to the SIGNS because of its ever declaring the doctrine of God's absolute predestination in all things, and also the eternal vital unity of Christ and the church; in which doctrine I have for a long while found all the spiritual food that I feel is necessary to fill my hungry soul. About the year 1870, I first began reading the SIGNS, and have been reading it all the time since, and still read it, and admire the course it yet pursues and the doctrine it yet maintains. While some of its once admirers have withdrawn from its doctrine and are speaking out against it, and that in harsh and heavy denunciations, yet I love the doctrine, together with its editors and contributors, and feel to encourage all true believers in christian faith and hope to aid in its circulation, knowing that many precious souls are fed and built up in the christian faith and hope by the precious doctrine set forth in its columns. Here in eastern Texas, in the Sulphur Fork Association, and other corresponding asociations, the doctrine as proclaimed in the SIGNS is received and loved. I would admonish all these brethren to aid in its circulation among the churches of these corresponding associations. While very heavy charges have recently been brought out against the brethren of the Sulphur Fork and other associations in correspondence, yet we know that these charges are false, and brought against us by designing men, who sooner or later will manifest their purpose and show clearly the evil in them.

Brother W. Lively, of Opelika, Ala., came among us in October and preached some very able sermons, to the satisfaction of the brotherhood, Since his return home he has written a short notice of his visit in Texas, and the brethren here were made to rejoice to read his article, published in November last. Now, before I close, I wish to say to Primitive Baptists everywhere, that we love the doctrine of our Lord, and we believe that the same has been declared in the SIGNS from its birth in 1832, on down to 1894, and will, no doubt, declare it as long as it lives. Let us all do all in our power to circulate it, and help its columns in sending forth glad tidings of joy and comfort to the hungry and needy. This is yours to dispose of.

T. L. MORTON.

ELGIN, Oregon, Dec. 21, 1894.

ELDER BENTON JENKINS—DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST:—I hope you will bear with me while I offer a somewhat different view to yours on the words of the apostle, 1 Peter iv. 18, as appeared in a late number of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. "And if the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear?" Now, my brother, all that you say of the trials and afflictions of God's people, which all who have passed from death unto life have while here in the flesh, is very comforting and instructive; but I think the apostle has reference to sorrow and afflictions that were to be brought upon those christians from without by persecution. In the twelfth verse the apostle says, "Beloved, think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing happened unto you." It seems to me that the apostle was here forewarning his brethren of a trial yet in the future (notice, it is trial, in the singular), and "which is to try you," as though they had not been tried in that particular; and this view, I think, is sustained by the language used in the seventeenth verse, "For the time is come that judgment must begin at the house of God: and if it first begin at us," &c. Does it not appear here that this judgment had not taken place with those christians? I understand it to be persecution. It may be the first persecution brought on the church by heathen emperors. I think this view is farther sustained by the language, "If ye be reproached for the name of Christ, happy are ye; for the Spirit of glory and of God resteth upon you; on their part [the world] he [Christ] is evil spoken of, but on your part he is glorified. But let none of you suffer as a murderer, or as a thief, or as an evil doer, or as a busybody in other men's matters. Yet if any man suffer as a christian, let him not be ashamed; but let him glorify God on this behalf." Now, brother, your definition of christian is, one who is a follower of the Lord Jesus Christ; and we know that only christians in this sense were persecuted, those who were open followers of Christ. "And if the righteous scarcely be saved." This I do not understand to be redemption from sin, for in Christ is "plenteous redemption." By "scarcely saved" I understand is meant scarcely able to endure the suffering to which they shall be subjected. Paul refers to this suffering where he says, "And others were tortured, not accepting deliverance." "And others had trial of cruel mockings and scourgings, yea, moreover of bonds and imprisonment: they were stoned, they were sawn asunder, were tempted, were slain with the sword."—Heb. xi. 35–37. To further confirm this picture please read the 214th and 215th pages of Hassell's Church History. "Christian men and women, covered with pitch, or oil, or resin, and nailed to posts of pine, were lighted and burned as torches for the amusement of the mob." Here is a trial of faith that the strongest and most faithful would scarcely be able to endure. This persecution by Nero is thought to be the time when Peter and Paul were put to death. As Peter said, "And if it first begin at us." Truly these sufferings are awful to think of. How greatly favored are God's people in this day. But do we appreciate it as we should?

I hope, brethren, I have made myself understood, that the righteous "scarcely saved" does not mean that they are not saved, but by grace were enabled to resist unto blood striving against sin. "Where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear?" I do not understand that they are the children of God. The idea seems to me to be that if the righteous scarcely be able to endure these trials for the sake of their principles, where will the ungodly and the sinner be?

I will say no more, although I feel that what I have said has been poorly said. I leave this with you first, brother Jenkins, and if you think it will not be profitable to publish do not do it. May the Lord bless you and Elder Chick in your labors as editors of the dear old SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

In fellowship, your brother,

G. E. MAYFIELD.

EDITORIAL NOTICES.

BACK NUMBERS.

WE have been compelled to strike from our subscription list about one thousand names, most of whom are from one to three years behind with their subscription; but we have and shall continue to print for the first few numbers of this volume several hundred extra copies, and all new subscribers received, as well as old ones whose names are re-entered on our list, will be sent back numbers as long as the supply lasts.

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE.

TO MOST of our readers the above mentioned book is too well known to need any introduction or a description by us. While many of the Bibles have a Concordance appended, they are generally so condensed or abridged as to be of little or no use. Cruden's Complete Concordance, however, enables one to readily turn to any passage of Scripture of which they can call to mind two or three words, and in our opinion is the most complete and convenient as a reference book of any published. In addition, it contains many other aids in studying the Bible, as may be seen by reference to advertisement on last page. Remember, both the books there mentioned are CRUDEN'S COMPLETE.

ALL BIBLES SENT AT OUR EXPENSE.

ON our last page will be found an advertisement of some of the sizes, styles and prices at which we can furnish Bibles. The vast variety of sizes and combinations compiled in Bibles is too great to all be given in our space.

The smaller Bibles mentioned in the advertisement are the ones most in demand, and these we will mail postage paid on receipt of price. The larger or Family Bibles, being too large and heavy to go safely by mail, will be sent by express at our expense. We are prepared to furnish most any size, style or priced Bible. If you do not find what you wish in our list published, write us a description of what you would like to have and we will send you the price.

POSTAL MONEY ORDERS.

BY a recent arrangement of the post-office department nearly every post-office in the United States is now a money order office for at least five dollars; and as it costs but three cents additional to obtain an order of not more than two dollars and fifty cents, or five cents for one not more than five dollars, or eight cents for one not more than ten dollars, and so on in proportion to amount of order, we request that all remittances be sent us by post-office money-order. You simply give the money you wish to send to your postmaster, and he will give you a money-order for that amount. You will inclose the order which he gives you in your letter to us; and if it should be lost in the mail you can get another one from your postmaster without additional charge. Please be sure to have the order made payable at Middletown, N. Y., and never at New York City, as that place is nearly a hundred miles from our place, and it puts us to considerable extra trouble and expense to get them cashed at the New York City office.

As will be seen from the above, an order for five dollars or less can be obtained cheaper than registering a letter, while an order not exceeding ten dollars costs but the same amount; and remitting by money order is a much safer way than sending by registered letter, as the postal department is not responsible for loss of registered letters, but money orders can be duplicated.

INDIGENT FUND.

IN calling the attention of our brethren and friends to the necessity of our having assistance in order to be able to continue the SIGNS to those on our indigent list, we wish to emphatically impress on their minds that personally we are not financially profited by their liberality. On the contrary we are, and are willing to be, losers in this matter. The actual cost of supplying the paper to our indigent subscribers always considerably exceeds the total amount of contributions to the fund for that purpose. But were it not for the kindness of brethren and friends in sharing this burden with us we should be obliged to strike from our list many who highly appreciate reading the paper, but who are not able to pay for it.

JOHN XI. 51, 52.

"AND this spake he not of himself: but being high priest that year, he prophesied that Jesus should die for that nation; and not for that nation only, but that also he should gather together in one the children of God that were scattered abroad."

Our attention has been called to the above Scripture by brother I. M. Darland, of Iowa, who speaks of seeing such evidence of the power of God in it that he desires to have something written upon it through the SIGNS. We certainly should have been glad if our brother had himself written out for publication some of the things that were made so precious to him. Perhaps he may yet feel to do so. Meanwhile we will present some reflections which have long been in our mind upon these words. They have for a long time seemed to us, as they have to our brother, to set forth in a wonderful way the power and sovereignty of our God. Experience has long since convinced us of the impossibility of setting forth any attribute of the God we worship by any human language whatever. We can see but in part, because the finite can never comprehend the infinite; and even the part that we do see cannot be told by any human utterance. Yet in his word, and by a blessed heartfelt experience, our God has been pleased to grant unto his people some glimpses of the eternal things; and of these revelations it is our privilege and duty to speak as they may be presented to our minds from time to time.

Time and space would forbid a complete reference to the connection of the text proposed for our consideration. We will try to call up a few things that seem to us to belong to the text.

First, we would call attention to the contrast presented between the first and last portions of this chapter. In the first part the record is given of the crowning miracle of our Lord in raising up Lazarus from the dead. We have called this the crowning miracle, because in the resurrection of Lazarus there was a greater and more manifest display of the divine power of Jesus than in any other of his miracles. He had indeed twice before raised the dead to life, in the case of the ruler's daughter and of the widow's son; but the one was raised up immediately after the breath had left the body, and the other in a few hours after, as he was being carried to his burial; while Lazarus had been dead four days, by which time decay must have set in, and therefore none could deny that he was dead, and none could deny that a notable miracle had been performed.—See verse 47. This his very enemies were constrained to admit. Yet the fact that in their very sight he had performed such a work did not cause them to believe on him, but rather stirred up their hatred against him. Signs and wonders and miracles never yet begat a soul from death, nor caused a man to love God or believe in Jesus. A miracle wrought before the eyes of man can only surprise and astonish him. If men come to be believers the miracle must be wrought, not in their presence, but in their hearts. What followed the resurrection of Lazarus proves this; and here we come to see the contrast alluded to a little before. It is this: the giving of life to this dead man was the very occasion of stirring up such enmity among the foes of Jesus as led to his betrayal and crucifixion shortly after. The giving of life to another opened the way, humanly speaking, for his own death. His love and pity were returned by the hatred and enmity of men. Some went to the Pharisees and told them what Jesus had done, and then (because of this that they had heard) the chief priests and Pharisees gathered in a council to see what they should do. It fully appeared that for his love and pity and mercy they returned him the gall and wormwood of hatred. As this miracle exhibited the love and power of Jesus in a most wonderful manner, so on the other hand was it the occasion for a display of what is in man of hatred and malice and evil.

Now, during this council the high priest, Caiaphas, uttered these words, "Ye know nothing at all, nor consider that it is expedient for us, that one man should die for the people, and that the whole nation perish not." It is this language concerning which the inspired John wrote the words of the text to which our attention is called; and this brings us to notice the special theme of which our brother spoke, and which also was more particularly in our mind. The sovereignty of God over wicked men, and men who are his enemies, never has had a more striking illustration than is here presented. Let us consider it for a moment. Here is a man, a proud, vainglorious man, a despiser of Jesus and a bitter enemy, whose one object is to compass the destruction of Jesus; who speaks simply that he may shame the people out of their hesitancy, and solidify every element among them in a crusade against Jesus; and who in his hatred counsels them that if Jesus does not die, then the Romans will destroy their whole nation, because they have followed one whom the Roman authority must regard as a traitor to Cæsar; for had he not said that he was born king of the Jews? Yet a man such as this, and meaning such things as these, and knowing nothing of the words and works of God, cannot here say one word without the control of God, or that is contrary to the fulfillment of his design that Jesus should be put to death.

"And this spake he not of himself." He indeed meant his counsel for evil, but God meant it for good. These words were a necessary link in that chain of events which led up to the very end for which Jesus came into the world. Caiaphas was no more or no greater a sinner than are all other men. His heart had no more natural enmity against Jesus than have any of our hearts. While he uttered the natural enmity of his heart, and thus drove a nail into the cross of Jesus, it is equally true that all of us have pierced him in the enmity of our carnal hearts. In all this the high priest but exhibited the natural enmity of all hearts against God. He was no worse afterward than before. He was no worse than other men by what he had done. His hands were wicked before, and no more nor less wicked afterward. He was wicked, and therefore he uttered these words wickedly; and his heart was wicked, and his mind carnal and enmity against God, for precisely the same reason that these things are true of all the descendants of Adam, viz., that he and we alike are the fallen sons of a fallen head.

But here the wonderful display of the complete sovereignty of God appears. Caiaphas is on hand at just the right time, and speaks just the right words, "not of himself," but under the control of God, to fit into the chain of events that led up to the accomplishment of the will of God in the betrayal and crucifixion of the Savior. This is one among thousands of events which since the creation of the world had all been pointing and leading to Calvary. The wonderful sovereignty and wisdom of God are seen in the fact that all these events have been marshaled together in such a way that all have worked together for the one end, viz., the redemption of the people of God through the atonement that was finished upon Calvary; and these words of the high priest fit in their proper place among all the other things that led on to this end. So he spoke this, not of himself, but as high priest God spoke through him, and put a meaning into his words which he knew not of; a meaning which God gave the inspired John to understand and set forth in the words of the text.

But to us it has long seemed that the chief comfort and joy of such instances as this which are recorded in the Scriptures is that we are by them taught that the divine sovereignty is over all things and in all places alike. The special records of the word of God are not solitary stars in a region of darkness, but rather occasional manifestations of a universal truth, given that we may learn that the sovereignty of God is universal; so universal that a Shimei cannot curse a David except God has bidden him, and a Caiaphas cannot speak except as his speaking will subserve the will and purpose of the eternal God. Except Joseph had told his dreams, his brethren had not hated him. Except they had hated him, they would not have sought his life. Except they had sought his life, they would not have sold him to the merchants, and he would not have incurred the enmity of his mistress in the house of Potiphar. Without all this he would not have been in prison when wanted to interpret the dreams of the butler and baker; and except he had interpreted these dreams he would not have been called to interpret the dreams of Pharaoh, and so have come to the very chief authority in Egypt under Pharaoh; and without all this his brethren would not have come to bow before him in fulfillment of his own dreams for which they had hated him. Well might Joseph say to them, "Ye meant it for evil, but God meant it for good." Well may we exclaim, "Great and marvelous are thy works, Lord God Almighty; just and true are thy ways, thou King of saints." "For of him, and through him, and to him, are all things." It seems to us, then, that if the Bible declares the will and purpose of God in one event of the world's history, it is that we may learn that his will and purpose are in every event of the world's history, and so that we may come to rest under the shadow of his hand whatever our lot in life may be. Surely if anything is fitted to comfort our hearts in sorrow, to strengthen us in weakness, to give us peace when the storm is high, to make us bow in submission under affliction, and to be reconciled to every loss, it is a firm belief that the wisdom of God has made the plan, and his good hand has guided it all, so that in all things we may say, "It is the Lord; let him do as seemeth him good." Ought we not to rejoice that his immanence and his power hold the mote which floats in the sunbeam in its own place by just as fixed a purpose (which we call law) as is shown in causing a world to keep its place and not deviate from its appointed path? There is no point of space in all the universe where God is not; and where he is he governs.

"This God is the God we adore,
Our faithful, unchangeable Friend;
Whose love is as large as his power,
And neither knows measure nor end.

'Tis Jesus, the First and the Last,
Whose Spirit shall guide us safe home;
We'll praise him for all that is past,
And trust him for all that's to come."

There are many things in the text suggested by our brother that it would be good to contemplate; but this one thought of the sovereignty of God was the matter suggested, and of this we have felt to write.

We thank God the field is not exhausted. Everything testifies to the eternal power and Godhead of him whom we worship. It is very true that we cannot always trace out the leadings of his purposes in his conduct of the affairs of men; but this need not surprise us, for his ways must ever be a great deep in our eyes. Because we cannot see how he works is no proof that he does not work. Because we cannot see how his will is done is no proof that his will is not done. Because we cannot see how some things can be if our God is a Sovereign in the affairs of men is no proof that he is not a Sovereign. Indeed, such is our view of our own finiteness that we could not feel that worship was due to a God whom we could comprehend. With Job, the servant of God, let us ever say, "Lo, these are parts of his ways; but how little a portion is heard of him? but the thunder of his power who can understand?" It is both wise and blessed to remember, when any deep truth appears to us, that the most Christlike frame of mind is when we can say with the blessed Savior, "Even so, Father, for so it seemed good in thy sight." It becomes us to bow in humble submission and acceptance of all that God has revealed in his word, no matter what conclusions our fallible reason may fancy would result from it. Our reason may be all wrong in its inferences, but God's word cannot be wrong. May not the words apply here as well as elsewhere, "Let God be true, but every man a liar?"

Our concluding thought in connection with the subject of the text is this, that as the sovereignty of God was seen in bringing about all that led up to the crucifixion of Jesus, even to so controlling the words of Caiaphas that what he meant for evil counsel against Jesus should in reality be a grand and God-given statement of the very work which Jesus came into the world to accomplish, so also is that same sovereignty seen in gathering together every child of God that is scattered abroad, according to the closing words of the text. The least of the children of God is as much within the reach of this all-embracing sovereignty of God as were all the circumstances connected with the life and death of the Son of God and the Son of man.

For the revelation of such a glorious truth let every heir of promise "Praise God, from whom all blessings flow," while they together rejoice that he worketh all things after the counsel of his own will.

"My heart is fix'd; my song shall raise
Immortal honors to thy name;
Awake, my tongue, to sound his praise,
My tongue, the glory of his fame.

Be thou exalted, O my God,
Above the heavens where angels dwell;
Thy power on earth be known abroad,
And land to land thy wonders tell."

ISAIAH LXVI. 8.

ELDER BENTON JENKINS:—A subscriber in this city desires that you kindly give your views through the SIGNS on Isa. lxvi. 8, particularly the last clause, "For as soon as Zion travailed, she brought forth her children." A professed minister here has lately stated that through the zeal and activity of the church (ZION) sinners are born again, or "brought forth;" that this is the established order of God, and without which souls cannot be saved; that it therefore behooved them as a church, since the revival season was now on hand, to actively engage themselves in winning souls for Christ.

A FRIEND.

REPLY.

The ones to whom this prophecy is addressed, and who alone are interested in it, are identified in the fifth verse, as those who tremble at the word of the Lord. "Hear the word of the Lord, ye that tremble at his word." They are the same characters spoken of in the second verse, "But to this man will I look, even to him that is poor, and of a contrite spirit, and trembleth at my word." In this connection a striking contrast is presented between the old and new covenants, the typical and antitypical Zion, with their children, and the hatred and persecution of the children of the new covenant by the children of the old covenant. To the children of the antitypical Zion, the new Jerusalem, the new covenant, the Lord declares, "Your brethren that hated you, that cast you out for my name's sake, said, Let the Lord be glorified. But he shall appear to your joy, and they shall be ashamed."—Verse 5. These two Zions, or Jerusalems, with their children, are spoken of by the apostle in his letter to the churches of Galatia. "Tell me, ye that desire to be under the law, do ye not hear the law? For it is written, that Abraham had two sons, the one by a bondmaid, and the other by a free woman. But he who was of the bond woman was born after the flesh; but he of the free woman was by promise. Which things are an allegory; for these are the two covenants; the one from the mount Sinai, which gendereth to bondage, which is Agar. For this Agar is mount Sinai in Arabia, and answereth to Jerusalem which now is, and is in bondage with her children. But Jerusalem which is above is free, which is the mother of us all. For it is written [Isa. liv. 1], Rejoice, thou barren that bearest not; break forth and cry, thou that travailest not; for the desolate hath many more children than she which hath a husband. Now we, brethren, as Isaac was, are the children of promise. But as then he that was born after the flesh persecuted him that was born after the Spirit, even so it is now. Nevertheless what saith the Scripture? Cast out the bond woman and her son; for the son of the bond woman shall not be heir with the son of the free woman. So then, brethren, we are not children of the bond woman, but of the free."—Gal. iv. 21–31.

The prophecy of this and the preceding chapter looked forward to the coming of Christ in the flesh, the passing away of the old heavens and earth, the creation of the new heavens and earth, the abolition of those Jewish ceremonies and types which God had commanded and enjoined upon that typical people until the coming of the Messiah, in whom all should be fulfilled. To perpetuate those rites, ceremonies and types, after Jesus has come in the flesh, is declared an abomination to God, and a virtual denial that Christ has come in the flesh. So the Lord by the prophet here declares, "He that killeth an ox is as if he slew a man; he that sacrificeth a lamb, as if he cut off a dog's neck; he that offereth an oblation, as if he offered swine's blood; he that burneth incense, as if he blessed an idol."—Verse 3. John the Baptist, the forerunner of the Savior, preached to the children of that old covenant, saying, "Repent ye [that is, turn away from these things]; for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." Pointing to the antitype of the victims slain on Jewish altars, he said to the people, "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." What all the offerings according to the law had failed to accomplish, was to be accomplished by the death and resurrection of Jesus, their antitype. By his one offering he should forever perfect all them who were sanctified in him. The blood of Jesus Christ should cleanse his people, Jews and Gentiles, from all sin. This was a stumbling-block to the carnal Jews, who could not understand why a system that God had once authorized and commanded should be abrogated. They could not understand how God could save them unless they did something toward their salvation, by the observance of legal forms and ceremonies. Jesus was truly a stumbling-stone to them, as he is to all in this day who are legalists, and who imagine that God is greatly in need of their help to convert sinners and build up his church and kingdom in the earth. And as the brethren (according to the flesh) of Jesus and his disciples were "zealous of the law," and "ignorant of God's righteousness," they thought God was glorified in their persecution and hatred of Jesus and his disciples. "Your brethren that hated you, that cast you out for my name's sake, said, Let the Lord be glorified." From the days of Constantine to the present time, Rome and her Protestant daughters, who have been engaged in persecuting the saints, have professed to be doing it for the glory of God and the suppression of heresy. Indeed this was the professed object of the carnal Jews in the condemnation and crucifixion of the Redeemer.

"Before she travailed, she brought forth. Before her pain came she was delivered of a man child." This is spoken of the old, typical Zion, and not of the new; for in the next verse the spiritual Zion is said to travail in bringing forth. "For as soon as Zion travailed, she brought forth her children." When the Messiah came, who "sprang out of Judah," and "was made of the seed of David according to the flesh," being "the Root and offspring of David," "the son of David," the Zion under the old covenant were not in travail for him, nor did they recognize him as the long promised Messiah. His coming to earth was sudden and unexpected to them, and when they saw him he was to them as a root out of dry ground, with no form or comeliness, and no beauty in him that they should desire him, as Isaiah had prophesied.—Isa. liii. "He is despised and rejected of men; a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief; and we hid as it were our faces from him: he was despised, and we esteemed him not." Before there were any travail pains by that carnal nation, the heavenly host announced his birth to the shepherds, saying, "Unto you is born this day, in the city of David, a Savior, which is Christ the Lord." Yet he came at the appointed time, in the fullness of time, and in exact fulfillment of the prophecies of the holy men of God. In his birth of the flesh, he was a brother of the children of that covenant that was made in the flesh of Abraham, and embraced all the generations of Abraham until the coming of the Messiah, as the promised seed in whom all the families of the earth were to be blessed. John the apostle says, "He came unto his own, and his own received him not." As a nation they disowned and rejected him. They said, "Away with him, away with him, crucify him."

"As soon as Zion [the antitypical Zion or Jerusalem, which is the mother of all the children of promise, among whom Jesus is the elder Brother] travailed, she brought forth her children." Says the apostle Paul, "Without controversy, great is the mystery of godliness. God was manifest in the flesh." "Who hath heard such a thing? Who hath seen such things?" God was manifest in the flesh of his people. "Forasmuch then as the children [of the spiritual Zion, the new covenant] are partakers of flesh and blood," the Messiah, the Son of God, the life of the church, "also himself likewise took part of the same; that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil; and deliver them, who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage. For verily he took not on him (the nature of) angels, but he took on (him) the seed of Abraham. Wherefore in all things it behooved him to be made like unto his brethren [the children of the spiritual Zion, the New Jerusalem, the new covenant], that he might be a merciful and faithful high priest in things (pertaining) to God, to make reconciliation for the sins of the people." It was as the head of the body, the church, and as the life of that body or church, that Jesus suffered in the flesh. "And he is the head of the body, the church." "When Christ, who is our life," &c. So identified was Christ with his people, and such was the oneness of Christ and his people, that his death in the flesh was their death. Hence the apostle says, "The love of Christ constraineth us; because we thus judge, that if one [Christ] died for all, then were all dead." We understand that the earth was "made to bring forth in one day, and that the "holy nation" was "born at once," in the resurrection of Christ from the dead, who had travailed in pain, who was put to death, being delivered for the transgressions of the members of his body, and was raised from the dead for their justification. That his resurrection from the dead was a birth, in which he and all his members were brought forth from under the law, born from the dead, is declared by the apostle—Acts xiii. 32, 33. "And we declare unto you glad tidings, how that the promise that was made unto the fathers, God hath fulfilled the same unto us their children, in that he hath raised up Jesus again; as it is also written in the second psalm, Thou art my Son, THIS DAY HAVE I BEGOTTEN THEE." Thus in his sufferings and death Zion travailed, and in his birth from the dead the whole spiritual nation were "born at once." The apostle says to the church, "And ye are complete in him [Christ], which is the head of all principality and power: in whom also ye are circumcised with the circumcision made without hands, in putting off the body of the sins of the flesh by the circumcision of Christ. Buried with him in baptism, wherein also ye are risen with him through the faith of the operation of God, who raised him from the dead. And you, being dead in your sins, and the uncircumcision of your flesh, hath he quickened together with him, having forgiven you all trespasses; blotting out the handwriting of ordinances that was against us, which was contrary to us, and took it out of the way, nailing it to his cross: and having spoiled principalities and powers, he made a shew of them openly, triumphing over them in it."—Col. ii. 10–15.

"Hail sacred union, firm and strong!
How great the grace! how sweet the song!
That worms of earth should ever be
One with incarnate Deity.

One in the tomb, one when he rose,
One when he triumphed o'er his foes;
One when in heaven he took his seat,
While seraphs sang all hell's defeat.

This sacred tie forbids their fears;
For all he is or has is theirs;
With him, their Head, they stand or fall,
Their Life, their Surety, and their All."

While it is true, in the sense in which we have viewed the subject, that this holy nation was born at once, and the earth was made to bring forth in one day, when Christ was born from the dead, it is also true that in the development of the members of the body of Christ in this gospel day which was ushered in by the rising of the Sun of righteousness with healing in his wings, they must and shall individually experience the new and spiritual birth, of which Jesus spake to Nicodemus, and of which John speaks, saying, "Which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God."—John i. 13. Says God, of whom they all must be born, "Shall I bring to the birth, and not cause to bring forth?" Says the apostle Paul to the saints, "Being confident of this very thing, that he which hath begun a good work in you will perform it until the day of Jesus Christ." These children of God, who are called the seed of the Redeemer, the holy or consecrated seed, who had sins, and which were borne by the Redeemer, and which were atoned for and put away by him, are brought forth by the alone power of the Almighty God; and when thus brought forth they are manifested as children of God their Father, and of the new Jerusalem, the new covenant, which is the mother of them all. It is not by the labor and travail of the people of God that Zion's children are brought forth, for they have nothing whatever to do with that matter. They cannot hasten the birth of even one of them; for they are born, as we have already shown by the testimony of the apostle, "not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God." How different is this from the manifestation of the children of Hagar, the bond woman, which are brought forth, according to their own statements, "through the zeal and activity" of themselves. While Zion's God works in the hearts of his chosen people both to will and to do of his own good pleasure, the gods of the religious world can only work on the surface, and even then only as their subjects are pleased to permit them. As Hagar, the bond maid of Abraham, brought forth a mocking Ishmael, a child of the flesh, and not a child of God's promise, so all the travail and labor of carnal religionists of the present day bring forth only bond children, children of human effort, who are ever found, like their prototype, mockers of the children of the true Zion of God.

"Some call him a Savior, in word,
But mix their own works with his plan.
And hope he his help will afford,
When they have done all that they can.
If doings prove rather too light,
(A little, they own, they might fail,)
They purpose to make up full weight,
By casting his name in the scale.

If ask'd what of Jesus I think,
(Though still my best thoughts are but poor)
I say, He's my meat and my drink,
My life, and my strength, and my store;
My Shepherd, my Husband, my Friend,
My Savior from sin and from thrall;
My hope from beginning to end,
My portion, my Lord, and my all."

DIFFERENCE BETWEEN OLD AND NEW SCHOOL BAPTISTS.

NUMBER FOUR.

THE next item in which an essential difference of sentiment exists between the Old and New School Baptists, to be considered, is the Atonement. The prominent place which this doctrine holds in the New Testament is second to that of no other embraced in the christian faith. It is identified with every provision of grace, and strikingly illustrative of the perfection of God. In it is illustrated the inflexibility of his justice and truth; the discrimination and power of his love and mercy towards the chosen and predestinated heirs of its saving benefits. In its absence or perversion, election, redemption and regeneration would be spoiled of their charms. None can be sound on other points of the doctrine of Christ who hold erroneous views upon this. There is but little harmony among New School Baptists upon this all important subject; their theories are multiform, incoherent and confused; yet none of them agree with the scriptural doctrine held by all Old School Baptists. Of the many points of difference we will give the following:

1st. Some of the New School hold, with John Wesley and his deluded followers, that the atonement was made alike for all mankind, that its object was to bring the human family into a salvable state, but in reality saving none; that it secures to all a chance to save themselves, but has no power to save any; that millions for whom it was made are now in hell; that the salvation of sinners depends on their own will and works, and not on the redemption or atonement made by Jesus Christ. We could present many passages from the presses and pulpits of the New School to show that they have carried this matter as far as John Wesley or any other Arminian ever did; but it will be soon enough to prove our assertion when those whom we implicate deny what we say. This theory on the subject the Old School Baptists deny in all its parts; and in contradiction of it hold that the atonement and redemption made by our Lord Jesus Christ was for the elect of God, and for them exclusively; that it brings none into a salvable state, but it redeems and reconciles to God all for whom Jesus died; so that not one for whom Christ died can possibly fail to be saved, any more than Christ can fail to be the Son of God.

Although the extravagant views above alluded to are not in form contended for by all New School Baptists, all of them are justly responsible for such sentiments, for holding in their connection and fellowship those whom they know to hold and preach them.

2d. Others of the same fraternity contend that the atonement was not made for sinners at all, but for sin; and by virtue of it all mankind are saved from the consequences of sin; that no sinner shall henceforth be sent to hell for being a sinner, sin being put away by the sacrifice of Christ; that the only ground of condemnation is the rejection of the gospel. They affirm that Jesus, having died for sin, has removed it from the human family, and now requires all sinners to believe that he has done so, on pain of eternal damnation.

This theory is too ridiculously absurd to require a serious refutation; for if the atonement was not made for sinners, but for sin, then sin is reconciled to God; and instead of its making any holy, it would make God unholy, by removing the opposition of his nature from sin. The word atonement means reconciliation or perfect agreement. But all who know the Lord are fully satisfied that sin is as opposite or irreconcilable to God, or to holiness, as though Christ had never died upon the cross. Instead of reconciling sin to God, or God to sin, the mediatorial work of Christ in coming into our world was to save his people from their sins, that they might be holy and without blame before him in love. Old School Baptists also reject the abominable heresy of gospel damnation. Christ came into the world, and lived and died, to save his people; but he came not to condemn the world; for the world was already condemned, and that for sin. "The wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is [not death also, but] eternal life by Jesus Christ our Lord."

Again, if sinners were to believe what this class of errorists would have them believe on pain of damnation, they would believe a lie; for the doctrine is the very opposite of truth. The gospel of the Son of God cannot be believed by an unregenerated sinner; for faith is not the cause, but the effect of regeneration. Christ is exalted to be a Prince and a Savior, to give repentance to Israel, and the remission of sins; consequently as many as were ordained to eternal life believe. The faith of God's elect is the faith which was once delivered to the saints; not a faith originated in the heart of man as a preliminary of salvation. Of this faith Christ is the author and the finisher; it is a fruit of the Spirit and a gift of God.

3d. Another portion of the New School family profess to hold that Christ made no atonement at all while here on earth; that the object of his incarnation was to procure materials out of which he might be able to make atonement after his ascension to heaven; that having made an offering for sin, he took with him the blood of atonement, or necessary for atonement, and is now ready and willing, desirous and anxious, to make atonement for any who will favor him with a call; and that the object of preaching is to persuade sinners to call on him to make an atonement for them; and consequently it is impossible for either God or man to know, until the consummation of all things, how many will be benefited by the atonement. This new-fangled notion was invented but recently, and is among the things which, with our New School neighbors, have "come newly up;" for it certainly never came down.

This together with the previously mentioned heresies, is rejected by the Old School Baptists, as contradictory to the whole tenor of divine revelation on the subject. We might here give the most positive Scripture testimony to prove that these views are false and blasphemous; but our object in these articles is rather to show wherein we differ from them, than to prove that we are right and they are wrong; and we find it necessary to limit the extent of our article. We pass to notice,

4th. Another outrage upon the doctrine of Atonement, from the same quarter, namely, that the death of Christ was only designed to show how much God hated sin; that the penalties of the law and eternal damnation had been provided for this purpose, and that the great object or grand reason sinners were condemned to suffer the vengeance of eternal fire, was to exemplify God's abhorrence of sin; but finding that this exemplification would cost so much, that it would require the interminable misery of so many, the Lord concluded to show his hatred of sin by the crucifixion of his Son upon the cross, and thereby supercede the necessity of sending sinners to hell; and having adopted this expedient, he has issued a general proclamation to the sons of Adam, in which he has given them their choice of salvation or damnation, of heaven or hell, and allowed them the terms of their natural lives to make up their minds in; and if they concluded to be saved, they were to signify the same by complying with some supposed term; but if they would not agree to be saved, they were left at liberty to go to hell. This doctrine, with all its absurdity and extravagance, finds many advocates among the New School Baptists, but is rejected, of course, with all who hold it, by the church of God.

5th. Others of the New Order of Baptists hold that the atonement of Christ was as necessary to procure the damnation of the finally impenitent, as the salvation of those who are finally saved. These deny boldly that God could or had any right in justice to consign sinners to endless punishment for their sins, without first giving them a chance to be saved; but that by the atonement such a chance or opportunity was afforded as left sinners without excuse, and thereby secured to God the right in justice to punish them for their sins.

6th. A still greater portion of the New School Baptists cling to the Fullerite heresy, that the design and effect of the atonement was special and particular, but that the nature of it was unlimited, or universal; that it required as great a sacrifice, as much suffering and blood, to atone for one sinner as for the whole human family; and that an atonement could not be made for those whom God designed should be savingly benefited by it, without making it sufficiently large to meet the full demands of law and justice for the sins of all mankind. The doctrine as taught by Fuller and received by his followers is substantially this, that the atonement was necessarily as much for the damned as for the saved; and that there is nothing but the willful rejection of its application to them that prevents their being equally benefited by it. And although it is written, "No man can come to me, except the Father which hath sent me draw him," it is also written, "Ye will not come to me that ye might have life." It is therefore inferred that the cannot, in the one case, is only the will not in the other; that the only deficiency of power to come to Christ, and share in the atonement, and be saved, is in the will; that if sinners could overcome their own wills they would find abundant access to God, and to heaven, and eternal life, through the blood of Christ. This ingenious perversion of the Scriptures affords the Arminians all the room they can desire to set aside the sovereignty of God in the special salvation of his chosen people, and to hinge the whole upon the will and works of men. Volumes have been written in support of this Fullerite system of refined Arminianism, and volumes in refutation of the heresy; still the lovers of heresy will cling to falsehood rather than truth, because they love darkness rather than light.

It is scarcely necessary to say that this heresy is rejected by the Old School Baptists; and not only the heresy, but also the heretics who contend for it.

Hereafter, if opportunity serve, we may, as we have frequently done before, prove by the unerring testimony of the Scriptures of truth that all the versions of the doctrine of the atonement by the New School Baptists are unfounded in truth, derogatory to the character and perfection of God, and a vile perversion of the gospel. And for a fair statement of the doctrine as held by the Old School Baptists, we refer the reader to the chapters on this subject now being published in this paper by brother Trott, in which we fully concur.

In our next, we propose to exhibit some difference between the two kinds of Baptists on the subject of Predestination.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

"HELP, Lord; for the godly man ceaseth; for the faithful fail from among the children of men." "Surely there is no sorrow like unto my sorrow."

By request of our dear afflicted sister Vanmeter and her almost heart-broken family I have consented to prepare for publication in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES an obituary notice of our much esteemed and deeply lamented brother and father in Israel, Elder Isaac Newton Vanmeter, who quietly and peacefully fell asleep in Jesus at 1:30 a. m. Dec. 13th, 1894, at his late home near Macomb, McDonough Co., Ill.

He was born in Grayson Co., Ky., June 14th, 1815, making him at the time of his death 79 years, 5 months and 29 days old. On Jan. 22d, 1839, he was united in marriage to Miss Lucinda Lawson, who survives him. To them were born eleven children, five sons and six daughters. One daughter died in infancy, and one son died in the army during the Rebellion. One daughter, our dear sister Susie Vanmeter, died nearly four years ago. Four sons, Miles H., of Denver, Colo., Cyrus S., of Macomb township, Hiram, of Gemison, Colo., and David, of the city of Macomb, and four daughters, sister Mary Shields, of Macomb, sister Sarah Runkle, living near her father's home, sister Mattie, unmarried, living with her parents, and Mrs. Hattie Fuhr, living in the neighborhood, were all present at their father's funeral. He was most fortunate in his domestic relations, and possessed the unbounded confidence and esteem of all his family. This feeling was mutual; hence the remark that Elder Vanmeter's was an exceptionally happy family.

In or about the year 1833 he received an evidence of God's love and mercy toward him, and soon afterward united with the Primitive Baptist Church; and straightway he conferred not with flesh and blood, but began preaching, not himself, but Christ Jesus the Lord. After spending more than twenty years visiting and ministering in word and doctrine, to the comfort and edification of the neighboring churches in Kentucky, he settled with his family on the farm where he died in the year 1855. He was not long among strangers, for he soon found the little band of brethren and sisters located at Greenbush, in the Spoon River Association, called New Hope, and commenced preaching for them, putting in his letter, and continued the double relation of member and pastor to the day of his death. He has been prominent and influential in the meetings of the Spoon River Association almost from the time of his coming into her bounds, either serving as Clerk or Moderator, and invariably giving the best of satisfaction in either capacity. His work as Clerk was characterized by the most scrupulous precision, and his rulings as Moderator were seldom called in question. As a man and a christian I think it can truthfully be said that he was as near as it is possible for man to be: vigilant, sober, of good behavior, given to hospitality, apt to teach, not given to wine, no striker, not greedy of filthy lucre, but patient, not a brawler, not covetous, one that ruled his own house well, having his children in subjection, with all gravity. As a counselor to and with his brethren in the ministry he was truly a father in Israel. While he was sensitive, he was always careful of the feelings of others, ready and willing at all times to give such advice as would be profitable, and ever keeping in mind the glory of God and the prosperity of Zion. As a pastor his undivided time was given to the work, and but very few were the times that his churches were disappointed by a failure on his part. Through all kinds of weather and all conditions of roads many times during the earlier part of his pastoral care of the New Hope Church he has traveled on foot from his home to the place of meeting, fifteen miles, and back. Much of the time he had the care of three and sometimes four churches. His gift in preaching and expounding the Scriptures covered the entire range of the gospel, including doctrine, christian experience and practical godliness, often closing his solemn sermon with an impressive exhortation to his brethren and sisters in Christ to walk worthy of the vocation wherewith they were called. As a writer his correspondence and communications published in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES and other Baptist periodicals, and read throughout the United States and Canada, as well as his book called "Walks about Zion," and also his Pocket Hymns, between sixty and seventy in the book containing three hundred and forty-five beautiful and sentimental hymns being composed by himself, besides his private correspondence, all attest the high order of his ability in the field of literature.

His fatal illness was of about three weeks' duration. He attended the meeting of the New Hope Church at Greenbush on the third Sunday in November, but was not able to preach. He soon grew worse, and for the last two weeks of his life could not lie down, but sat in an upright position. His disease was a complication of disorders, culminating in dropsy. He suffered (in his own language) more than tongue can tell, but no murmur or complaint was he ever heard to utter. Neither did he speak of death, but quoted many comforting portions of God's word, often saying, "Not mine, but thy will be done." At the time above mentioned he yielded up his spirit to God, who gave it, surrounded by the members of his family.

The funeral occurred at ten o'clock on Saturday, Dec. 15th, at his late residence, and was attended by a large concourse of neighbors, brethren and sympathizing friends. The services were simple in form. Hymns 15 and 1257, Beebe's Collection, were read, the first one being sung. Prayer was offered by our beloved brother, Elder S. L. Dark. The writer then spoke for a short time, using as a text 2 Timothy iv. 6-8; after which the remains were conveyed to Oakwood Cemetery, in Macomb, and laid in the family lot, to await the resurrection of the just.

SMITH KETCHUM.

ELMWOOD, Ill., Dec. 27, 1894.

T. H. Hudson, son of W. T. and M. A. Hudson, was born in Haskell, Haskell Co., Texas, Oct. 25th, 1892, and died Nov. 25th, 1894, after ten days' suffering from congestion of the stomach, leaving three sisters, one brother, with father, mother and many others, to weep and mourn over their great loss, which we feel to hope is his gain, joy and comfort.

"And now our dear one's sleeping,
And we still sorrow here;
O may we one day meet him,
All free from sin and fear."

I would say to all who loved him, "Be ye reconciled to God." He is out of our embrace, but not out of the Lord's."

May all who love the Lord remember sister Hudson in their most holy devotions in her very sad bereavement.

PICTORIAL HISTORY

OF THE

UNITED STATES.

By James D. McCabe.

This work has taken rank as the Standard History of the United States. It is no dry mass of details—no bombastic effort to inflame the national pride, but a clear, vivid and brilliant narrative of the events of our history, from the discovery of the American Continent down to the present time. It gives a most interesting account of the Indians of North America, from the time of the coming of the white men. The voyages of Columbus and the explorations and discoveries of the different nations of Europe are related with graphic power. Every step of our colonial history is traced with patient fidelity, and the sources of those noble and, we trust, enduring institutions, which have made our country free and great, are shown with remarkable clearness. Then follows a clear and succinct account of our great Struggle for Independence, and the establishment of the Federal Union—the events of our career from the close of the Revolution to the administration of Harrison.

The work is printed from plain, new type, on fine calendered paper, and comprised in one octavo volume of 960 pages. It is splendidly embellished with nearly 500 fine engravings, embracing battles and other historical scenes, portraits of distinguished men, views of our principal cities, &c., &c.

CORRESPONDENCE.

NORTH BERWICK, Maine, Nov. 8, 1894.

MRS N. B. LIBBEY—DEAR SISTER IN THE LORD:—Though unknown to one another in the flesh, yet I feel we are known to each other in the kingdom of Christ our beloved Savior. Though you and your husband, brother Libbey, cannot be with us in presence in our assemblies, as a church of our Lord Jesus Christ, yet it is a source of joy to my heart to know that your affections are still bound up in the truth as it is in Jesus, and in the saints of the most high God. Of late it has been in my thoughts a good deal of the time to pen you a few lines, and now to relieve my mind I have taken my pen, ink and paper to communicate a few thoughts. As I know that no theme is more gratifying to those who love God than Jesus Christ and him crucified, I trust that this will be the burden of my epistle. There is a text of Scripture on my mind which I would like to talk to you about. You will find the words in Heb. v. 8, 9. "Though he were a Son, yet learned he obedience by the things which he suffered; and being made perfect, he became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him." That the eternal God, the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost, should in any wise be mindful of man is indeed wonderful; and when we are brought to contemplate the mysteries of the love and mercies and grace of the everlasting God as declared in the gospel, we may well sing with the apostle Paul, "O the depth of the riches, both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! how unsearchable are his judgments and his ways past finding out!" The Son of God in his eternal Godhead is one with, and equal with, the Father; as he himself said, "I and my Father are one." "We are one." He "thought it not robbery to be equal with God." But in fulfillment of the everlasting covenant, and in the development of the eternal purpose which was purposed in Christ Jesus our Lord, the Father sent forth his Son, who became incarnate. He was "made of a woman, and made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons." In the fullness of time the Son of God came into the world. "Wherefore, when he cometh into the world, he saith, "Sacrifice and offering thou wouldest not, but a body hast thou prepared me." The Son of God "made himself of no reputation, but took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men: and being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross.

I have referred to those things in the holy Scriptures declaring the oneness, equality, of the Son of God with the Father, to prepare us to consider what is the depth of the meaning of the language, "Though he were a Son, yet learned he obedience by the things which he suffered." The doctrine of the personality and eternal Godhead of Christ our Savior is essential and precious to the believer.

"Some take him a creature to be,
A man or an angel at most;
Sure these have not feelings like me,
And know themselves wretched and lost.

"So guilty, so helpless am I,
I durst not confide in his blood,
Nor on his protection rely,
Unless I were sure he is God."

"Though he were a Son." This did not exempt our Redeemer from sufferings; neither was it any cause why the Son of God should withdraw from the work the Father sent him to do; but his meat was to do the will of God the Father, and to finish the work; and at length he was able to say, "I have glorified thee on the earth, I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do. And now, O Father, glorify thou me with thine own self, with the glory which I had with thee before the world was."—John xvii. 4, 5.

In contemplating the Son of God in the form of a servant, being found in fashion as a man, how willingly he served. He exclaimed, "I delight to do thy will, O my God."—Psalm xl. "Therefore doth my Father love me, because I lay down my life, that I might take it again. No man taketh it from me, but I lay it down of myself. I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it up again. This commandment have I received of my Father."—John x. 17, 18.

"How willing was Jesus to die,
That we, fellow-sinners, might live;
The life they could not take away,
How ready was Jesus to give!

"They pierced his hands and his feet,
His hands and his feet he resigned;
The pangs of his body were great,
But greater the pangs of his mind."

In his great love for his body, the church, the Son of God willingly came under the law to redeem her from under the law. He hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us. He gave himself for the church, an offering and a sacrifice to God for a sweet smelling savor, "that he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the word, that he might present it to himself a glorious church, not having spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish."—Eph. v. 2, 26, 27. O, dear sister, how wonderful, glorious and comforting it is to consider the Apostle and High Priest of our profession, Christ Jesus, who was faithful to him that appointed him. Do not our hearts delight to muse on the works of our beloved Redeemer's hands? O how surpassing his love to us poor sinners!

"His love, what mortal thought can reach?
What mortal tongue display?
Imagination's utmost stretch
In wonder dies away.

"He left his radiant throne on high,
Left the bright realms of bliss,
And came to earth to bleed and die;
Was ever love like this?"

When Christ, our glorious Surety, came to pay our mighty debt, and yielded himself up in obedience to all the will of Jehovah the Father, sufferings attended all his steps. For the obedience required by eternal justice of our dear Redeemer was not alone that he obey the precepts of the law, and thus bring in a righteousness for the adorning and justification of his people, but as our Surety, our glorious and living Head, he came to ransom us from the curse of the law, to redeem us from death; and in thus enduring in our room and stead the penalty of our transgressions, all the way he took (until he brought forth his people and presented them before his Father's face, faultless, with exceeding joy) was lined out with sufferings. When we ponder over the life of the Savior, surely he is the man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief. He bare our sins in his own body on the tree, and put them away by the sacrifice of himself. "Surely he hath borne our griefs and carried our sorrows; yet we did esteem him stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted. But he was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities, the chastisement of our peace was upon him, and with his stripes we are healed." Ah, when our sweet Lord Jesus, the glorious Head of the church, journeyed through the vale of tribulation, he was laden with all the imperfections of all the members of his body. They were all laid upon him. Now it is a divine, yea, a marvelous and comforting doctrine, that Christ and his body, the church, are in such oneness that when he came under the law to redeem his people, all their frailties, all their imperfections, were his. All the sins of the members of his body were his. Christ and the church are so joined that they are no longer twain, but one flesh. How clearly and blessedly the apostle Paul declares this doctrine when he says that Christ is "the Head of the church: and he is the Savior of the body. Therefore as the church is subject unto Christ, so let the wives be to their own husbands in everything. Husbands, love your wives, even as Christ also loved the church, and gave himself for it, that he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the word, that he might present it to himself a glorious church, not having spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish. So ought men to love their wives as their own bodies. He that loveth his wife loveth himself. For no man ever yet hated his own flesh, but nourisheth and cherisheth it, even as the Lord the church; for we are members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones. For this cause shall a man leave his father and mother, and shall be joined unto his wife, and they two shall be one flesh. This is a great mystery; but I speak concerning Christ and the church. Nevertheless, let every one of you in particular so love his wife even as himself; and the wife see that she reverence her husband."—Eph. v. 23-33. As then Christ in his relationship to his church had all our iniquities, all our imperfections, imputed to him, he only could be perfected by suffering. The blots, the spots, the blemishes, the wrinkles, the defilements, could only be purged away by his obedience even unto death. The shedding of his own precious blood was the only way to remove the sins of his body, the church. He said, "Go ye, and tell that fox [Herod], Behold, I cast out devils, and I do cures to day, and tomorrow, and the third day I shall be perfected."—Luke xiii. 32, 33. "It became him, for whom are all things, and by whom are all things, in bringing many sons unto glory, to make the Captain of their salvation perfect through sufferings."—Heb. ii. 10. O, my dear sister, how very dear must the church have been to the heart of the Lord our Redeemer, that he should humble himself, and take upon himself the seed of Abraham, and in our flesh give himself up, an offering and a sacrifice for our sins. Truly his gracious and glorious acts for our salvation are precious and comforting to poor sinners like you, and also to me, a poor, wretched, vile sinner. Yes, thy sufferings and atonement for sin, O Savior, have fragrance divine. All thy doings, dear Jesus, are of a sweet smelling savor to a poor sinner like me. And O how consoling and satisfying to know that the sacrifice of thyself for my sins, and the sins of all the elect, is a sweet smelling savor unto God the Father.—Eph. v. 2. O that I could love thee, praise thee, and forever adore thee, my altogether lovely Redeemer!

The mediatorial obedience of the Son of God, we have seen, was through suffering, to present all the members of his body in his obedience, as obedient children unto his Father and our Father who is in heaven. Jesus said unto Mary Magdalene, "Touch me not; for I am not yet ascended to my Father; but go to my brethren, and say unto them, I ascended unto my Father, and your Father, and to my God, and your God."—John xx. 17. He had by the one offering of himself forever perfected all his people.—Heb. x. 14. And having thus by the sacrifice of himself for their sins perfected them, he became perfect; for his people are the church, which is his body, the fullness of him that filleth all in all."—Eph. i. 22, 23. So when the Head of the church ascended on high, and by his own blood entered in once into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us, he could and did (as they were all represented in him) present them before his Father's face holy, unblameable, and unreprovable in his sight (Col. i. 22), saying, "Behold, I and the children which God hath given me."—Heb. ii. 13.

"Since Christ is my Head, this with joy I remember,
His body to which with affection I glow,
Although I'm the most insignificant member,
Can't be full without me, ah never, O no!"

Well, dear sister, does not this precious doctrine suit us, poor, helpless sinners? We know that the labors of our hands cannot fulfill the law's demands.

"The best obedience of our hands
Dares not approach before God's throne;
But faith can answer thy demands,
By pleading what our Lord hath done."

Jesus, our blessed Surety, in his obedience presents us entire and wanting nothing before the Majesty on high. Let me again repeat the glorious truth that the Son of God, who was made under the law to bring in an everlasting righteousness, for the everlasting beauty and justification of his people, had not only to fulfill the commandments of God in the law, but also to atone for our sins, our transgression under the first testament; and nothing less than his death could redeem us from all our iniquities. Did Jehovah spare his only begotten Son and say the church is not worth it? Did our dear Savior shrink back and say, I cannot pay such a price as this for the cleansing and redemption of my people? No. His people, his sheep, his bride, his body, the church, was so dear unto him that he became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. In the atonement that he made for our transgressions, "though he were a Son, yet learned he obedience by the things that he suffered." We had gone astray, but by his stripes we are healed. By his "one offering he hath perfected forever them that are sanctified." Did our beloved Jesus learn obedience by the things that he suffered, and we learn obedience some other way? No! for Christ and his church are one. One of the members of the body of Christ tells us, "Before I was afflicted I went astray; but now have I kept the word."—Psalm cxix. 67. "It is good for me that I have been afflicted, that I might learn thy statutes." All the trials and sorrows of the children of God shall work for their good. All adversities and sufferings are to bring us near to our God. All the corrections and chastenings of our heavenly Father are for our profit, to hide pride from us. "Lord, in trouble have they visited thee; they poured out a prayer when thy chastening was upon them."—Isaiah xxvi. 16. "When he slew them, then they sought him; and they returned and inquired early after God."—Psalm lxxviii. 34. "In their affliction they will seek me early."—Hosea v. 17. Also the Lord our God says, "I will also leave in the midst of thee an afflicted and poor people, and they shall trust in the name of the Lord."—Zeph. iii. 12. The fruit of all the fires and floods, tribulations and storms, is to wean us away from everthing, and to bring us to seek our all in God. "I, saith the Lord, will turn my hand upon thee, and purely purge away thy dross, and take away all thy tin."—Isaiah i. 25. If left to ourselves, how soon we go a wandering from the God we love. But our gracious God says, "As many as I love, I rebuke and chasten." Then, though in the fires we have at times to be, the grace of the Lord enables us to say, "When he hath tried me I shall come forth as gold."

"To his church, his joy, his treasure,
Every trial works for good;
They are dealt in weight and measure,
Yet how little understood;
Not in anger, but from his dear covenant love.

"If to-day he deigns to bless us
With a sense of pardoned sin,
Perhaps to-morrow he'll distress us,
Make us feel the plague within:
All to make us sick of self, and fond of him."

These things your heart, dear sister, knows. The Lord has been gracious to us, and his graciousness is manifested not only in filling us with joy in believing in Jesus, in whom is all our salvation, but also in calling us unto "the fellowship of his sufferings, being made conformable unto his death."—Phil. iii. 10. We shall, if we are the sons of God, learn obedience in these sufferings, even the obedience of faith; not of fleshly works; O no! But our sufferings under our own felt sinfulness, our sufferings under the smarting temptations of Satan, our sufferings under the deceitful allurements of the world, and of false doctrines, our bodily sufferings, pains, sickness, bereavement, yea, our sufferings under the rod of our God, all shall so be managed by our God, who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will, that in the end it shall be found for our good, bringing us to be subject unto Christ, who is the Head of his body, the church. By these sufferings our gracious God will open our ears to discipline, and wean us from the follies of the flesh, and of every false doctrine and way. He will humble us and abase us in our own sight; and though thus brought low, he will not cast us away. O no! he will never give us up, he will never leave us nor forsake us, but he will cause us to cleave unto himself, unto Christ as our only hope and refuge. He will thus shelter us under his wings, and hide us in the secret of his tabernacle. Yes, the pathway of sufferings which they that are Christ's are called upon to endure in following him, will bring us meek and lowly and contrite at the feet of our God. And in being made "partakers of Christ's sufferings" "Always bearing about in the body the dying of the Lord Jesus," we shall learn to crucify the flesh with the affections and lusts, and our yearning souls will cry out, "O send out thy light and thy truth; let them lead me, let them bring me unto thy holy hill, and to thy tabernacles." Our only hope of perfection in the sight of the Lord is in the sacrifice and everlasting Priesthood of Jesus, the Son of God, who being the brightness of his glory, and the express image of his person, and upholding all things by the word of his power, when he had by himself purged our sins, sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high."—Heb. i. 3. "Before I was afflicted I went astray; but now have I kept thy word." We are so foolish, so sinful, that left to ourselves we bring shame upon ourselves. "Foolishness is bound up in the heart of a child; but the rod of correction shall drive it far from him."—Prov. xxii. 15. If we endure chastenings, God dealeth with us as with sons; for what son is he whom the Father chasteneth not?"

"How gracious and how wise is our chastening God!
And O! how rich the blessings are which blossom from the rod!
He lifts it up on high, with pity in his heart;
That every stroke his children feel may grace and peace impart.
Dear Father! we consent to discipline divine,
And bless the pain that makes our souls still more completely thine."

These few lines tell the story that I have been trying to tell you, dear sister, and which I feel you know in your own soul's experience. We prove, and the Holy Spirit will cause us by his heavenly ministrations to continue to prove, that "our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory, while we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen; for the things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal."—2 Cor. iv. 17, 18. Though your earthly habitation is cast where you cannot have that spiritual intercourse with the members of the church, yet our God is not, and will not, be unmindful of you. "As thy day, so shall thy strength be." The church at Oak Woods is, I trust, living in peace and fellowship in Christ Jesus. How much we need his mercies to be over us continually! If the membership of the church knew that I were writing these lines to you, I know they would desire to express to you and to your husband, brother Libby, their fellowship and affection for you in Christ Jesus. I shall be glad to hear of your welfare, and I hope that these lines may find you in health and comfort in the precious Savior of sinners. I am, I hope, your brother in hope of eternal life,

FRED. W. KEENE.

LONGVIEW, Texas, Dec. 25, 1894.

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES—DEAR BRETHREN:—While I seldom fail, in writing or speaking of the things of our Master's kingdom, to fear that what I may say will be unprofitable, on account of my weakness and ignorance in such things, yet this fear does not destroy the desire to show forth such testimony as (I hope) God has given me to the praise of his grace; and while my many short comings confront me often, when endeavoring to "communicate forget not," and exhort to "give the more earnest heed to the things that we have heard, lest at any time we should let them slip," they do not relieve my mind from the impression, nor lessen my duty. My mind this morning is to present a few thoughts for the consideration of those of your readers who may be interested on the subject of love, and the fruits of that love as manifest in the life and walk of those to whom it is given.

There are things spiritual, and there are things natural; things terrestrial, and things celestial; things heavenly, and things earthly; two classes or kinds of things that the Bible teaches us about. If we had not been born of earthly parentage, and been given an earthly nature and intelligence, we would not be subjects of earthly teaching; hence we could not be taught by what the Bible says about these things. In like manner if we have not been born of heavenly parentage, and given a heavenly or spiritual intelligence or understanding, we cannot be taught by what the Bible says on the subject. It is not of the natural love, which is the gift of God in nature, that I desire to write, but of that eternal, spiritual love, of which God is the source and fountain-head. It is said by an inspired writer that "God is love." It is said again, by our Savior, that "God is a Spirit." And again, by another inspired penman, it is said that "the Spirit is life." Then it follows that he that hath the Spirit dwelling in him has God, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost; for these three are one. Hence he has eternal life abiding in him. "He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life."

Eternal, spiritual life was given his people in Christ before this world was formed; and they receive it as God's gift in Christ in time, which manifests them as heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ. Paul evidently rejoiced in this doctrine when he said to his Ephesian brethren, "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ, according as he hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before him in love." And again, when hr says to Timothy, "Who [God] hath saved us, and called us with a holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began." Then life with all its blessed fruits is treasured in Christ Jesus, and is held in reserve, so to speak, for his chosen people, even from eternity, and is given to them, or manifested in them, at God's own appointed time. Of this chosen, redeemed people he has said, "Surely they are my people, children that will not lie: so he was their Savior. In all their affliction he was afflicted, and the angel of his presence saved them; in his love and in his pity he redeemed them; and he bare them and carried them all the days of old."—Isa. lxiii. 8, 9. And again, "The Lord hath appeared of old unto me, saying, Yea, I have loved thee with an everlasting love; therefore with loving-kindness have I drawn thee."—Jer. xxxi. 3. In consideration of this wonderful love of God, so visibly manifest in the life, death and resurrection of his only begotten Son, well might the apostle exclaim, "Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God." And wonderfully great is that love, when in the individual experience of the poor, storm-tossed, tried and perplexed child, he is able to realize it and embrace it as his own. He knows that it is not bestowed for any worth or merit that is in him, for he knows that he has none. He is completely humbled. He looks upon it as a wonderful condescension on the part of the Lord to bestow even the least of favors on him. While blessed with a sense of this love, the fruit of the Spirit is abundantly manifest, "love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance."—Gal. v. 22, 23. The defects of his brethren are all covered from his vision by this love. Or instead of blaming him and blazing his faults abroad, he pities and prays for his brother. While these glorious fruits are being produced, and he is in the enjoyment of them, he is able to bear and suffer ill-treatment at the hands of his brother, and to obey the command of Christ is no task to him. "If thy brother trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone." This love does not constrain its subjects to go and tell a brother his fault in order to receive pay for any wrong done; but because of the love he has for his offending brother, and the cause of Christ, he desires to save his brother from the effects of error, and the cause from stain; and he knows that no other course save that laid down by Jesus can do it. "Charity [another name for love] suffereth long, and is kind; charity envieth not; charity vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up; doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil; rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth; beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things."—1 Cor. xiii. 4–7. "Hatred stirreth up strifes; but love covereth all sins."—Prov. x. 12. When a brother is blazing abroad the supposed faults, or even injuries that he has received at the hands of his brother, it is plain that he is governed by the flesh. The rule by which he should be governed under such circumstances is a plain one, and easily understood. "Moreover, if thy brother shall trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault, between thee and him alone. If he shall hear thee, thou hast gained thy brother. But if he will not hear thee, take with thee one or two more; that in the mouth of two or three witnesses every word may be established. And if he shall neglect to hear them, tell it unto the church; but if he neglect to hear the church, let him be unto thee as a heathen man and a publican."—Matt. xviii. 15–17. If a brother will not follow this rule, but goes directly to the contrary, as I have seen done, and tells all the complaints that he has against his brother to others, he constitutes himself as great a transgressor as his offending brother, even though his brother be guilty of all he has charged him with. It is true that we cannot control this principle, love; but we are certainly given judgment, to some extent at least, to know when we are prompted by fleshly motives; and we are plainly told that if we live after the flesh, we shall die. Again, "If ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live." Many church troubles would be avoided, and many existing could be easily settled, if all parties concerned would follow the rule laid down. It seems to me that when a member of the church, in open violation of Scripture teaching, goes around circulating complaints against his brother, he should be reproved by the church, and admonished; and if he fails to heed, he should be further dealt with, as the Scripture directs. For a failure to exercise Bible discipline, many churches grow weak and sickly. Faithful and prompt dealing, when done in the right spirit, is certainly more apt to save a member than unauthorized leniency. When duty in this line is done by a church in the right spirit, it is never done with a view to hurt the member or the church, but with the hope (at least) of saving both. When a church formally withdraws from a disorderly member, it is but an expression of what already exists. Fellowship has ceased to exist, and it is but a public expression of the same. It is but the carrying out of the divine command, "Now we command you, brethren, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly, and not after the tradition which he received of us."—2 Thess. iii. 6. Many kinds of disorder might be mentioned, but I will desist.

I will close this imperfect scribble with a quotation from the apostle Paul to the Galatians, to which we would all do well to take heed, "For, brethren, ye have been called unto liberty; only use not liberty for an occasion to the flesh, but by love serve one another. For all the law is fulfilled in one word, even this, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thy self. But if ye bite and devour one another, take heed that ye be not consumed one of another."—Gal. v. 13–15.

Your little brother in hope of eternal life,

HANCOCK, Md., Dec. 17, 1894.

ELD. F. A. CHICK—DEAR BROTHER:—I have not forgotten your request, but feeling my unworthiness I have not written. To-day I have attempted to write what I hope the Lord has done for me. It was about four years ago last fall since the Lord brought me to see myself a poor, wretched and undone sinner in the sight of God. I have attended Baptist meetings all my life, as my father and mother were members of the Baptist Church as far back as I can remember, and I always had an opportunity to attend meeting. I have gone to other churches of various denominations, but I found nothing there to satisfy my longing heart. But as years passed on and I grew older I began to feel that the Old Baptists were the true people, and if I ever joined a church it would be the Old Baptist; but I thought I could live satisfied and try to do right outside of the church as well as in it; but that was not God's will. He had other paths for me to travel. I went on in that way until the time above mentioned. In the fall of 1890, as near as I can remember, the Lord brought me to see myself a vile sinner. I was brought to pass through sorrows and disappointments, and could find rest no where. It appeared to me that I did not have a friend in the world; all earthly friends seemed to have forsaken me. Surely I was a poor, miserable creature. I would often seek some quiet, secluded spot, and try to pray God to have mercy on me; but my prayers did not seem to go higher than my head. I was all the while trying to keep my terrible burden of mind to myself. I would often go to meeting and try to listen to the preaching, but then it appeared to me to be stealing something; that is, listening to something that I had no right to, or that was not my own; and I thought those dear people were too good for me to be with. I traveled in this dark pathway nearly two years, when, as I believe, the Lord showed his smiling face to me. All at once things around me grew bright, and everything looked happy, and I became very happy myself. I thought I would never have any more trouble. But alas! troubles to some extent were still mine; but I felt more quiet and resigned to God's will, and in him was all my trust. My constant prayer and heart's sincere desire was to be submissive to his holy will at all times, in every trial and disappointment. Then was the first time I felt that I had a hope, for which I would not take all the splendor, rank or wealth of this world in exchange. I trust God has given it me. But I was not yet satisfied; I wanted to be baptized and have a home with God's dear people; but O! I felt too unworthy to ask a place among so good a people. I felt that I might bring reproach upon them, and dishonor the cause of God; so I thought I would wait a while, and it might be I would be better prepared at some future time; but I have found it just like one dear brother (Elder Hubbell) told me at one time. I never will forget his kind words; he seemed to be so humble and resigned to the will of God. I told him I loved the Old Baptists, and felt as though I would love to have a home with them, but was not prepared. He said in answer to that, "You are just as well prepared now as you will ever be.

1 TIMOTHY V. 5, 6, 24, 25.

MRS. S. ST. LYNN, of Charleston, Mo., has requested our views upon the Scripture recorded in 1 Timothy v. 5, 6, and also upon the 24th and 25th verses of the same chapter.

The theme in these two verses first named is treated by the apostle in this chapter from the second to the sixteenth verses. It contains instructions from Paul to Timothy regarding the treatment of widows by the churches. These things he is to teach and exhort. Before proceeding to consider this subject in a brief manner we desire to call attention to the fact that while times and customs and circumstances may change, the underlying principles of truth revealed in the word of God do not change. The position which widows then occupied in the world may have been very different from what is now the case, but the principles of kindness toward them taught in this connection remain the same; and also the care and discrimination commanded here between those who are deserving and those who are not are still needful. There must still be kindness shown, but the manner of showing this kindness may be of necessity very different under different circumstances. A careful reading of this whole connection will bring out two things prominently. First, a discrimination between the widows themselves; and second, a difference of treatment toward those who are widows indeed, growing out of their different worldly circumstances.

First, a discrimination between those whom the apostle calls "widows indeed" and those who live in pleasure. He describes the "widows indeed" in terms like these: She is desolate (that is, without friends), she trusts in God, and continues in supplications and prayers night and day. She must be well reported of for good works; she must have brought up children; she must have lodged strangers; she must have washed the saints' feet; she must have relieved the afflicted; she must have diligently followed every good work. These are "widows indeed." Of the other class, who are not "widows indeed," he says they are those who live in pleasure; who are dead while they live. These also, when they have begun to wax wanton against Christ, will marry. They have cast off their first faith, they learn to be idle, they wander from house to house; and they are not only idle, but they become tattlers and busybodies, speaking things which they ought not. These are to be refused, because they are not widows indeed.

But even the first class are not to be received to the care of the church unless they have no children or nephews who are able or willing to care for them. The apostle did not mean to enjoin upon the church a course of action that would serve to release children or nephews from the obligation which the God of heaven had placed upon them to care for the aged and feeble of their own families. "If any widow have children or nephews, let them learn first to show piety at home, and to requite their parents: for that is good and acceptable before God." In verse sixteen the apostle shows that in verse four he means believing children or nephews. The church could of course have no jurisdiction over unbelieving children or nephews; but the church must see to it that those who were believers cared, as an act of piety, for the mothers who were widows. All this seems plain from the connection. Some widows by their own conduct cut themselves off from all right to the assistance of the church, and assistance is to be refused to them; while some other widows, whose life and character are worthy of all praise, are yet cut off from the help of the church by the fact that they have believing children or nephews who are able to care for them. The apostle has thus guarded the charity of the church by very strict regulations. He would not have the unworthy made burdensome to the church, and neither would he allow that even the worthy who were not under necessity should be so cared for. The church was not organized, according to this teaching of the apostle Paul, to encourage the idle or the wanton or lovers of pleasure in their folly, nor to relieve those whose natural relations to others place upon them the obligation of caring for them. The church is not in the world for the purpose of disturbing the various worldly relations ordained among men, but instead the church is taught to recognize and enforce all such relations. These relations are ordained of God, and must not be disregarded by men. To disregard them is to bring trouble and disorder into that family or community or nation which may be guilty. Thus as it is the duty of children to care for their parents, and requite them for all past care and kindness as far as they are able, the apostle carefully enforces this obligation by saying that such widows as have believing children are not to be laid upon the care of the church. Such a course would be of harm to the children themselves, because thus they would come to be forgetful of their own duty; and nothing is of greater harm to any man than to turn away from anything that rests as an obligation upon him. It would be to the harm of the widows themselves; because all who were called upon in the church to contribute to the support of such ones would feel that it was not right, and a feeling of censure would of necessity arise in their hearts. It would also be of harm to the cause of truth itself; because all would see that such a course would tend to the loosening of other sacred obligations which God has ordained among men, and also would lay an unjust burden upon the members of the church.

There is nothing in the Scriptures that enjoins what is called indiscriminate charity, which is not real charity at all. True charity is enjoined everywhere, both by precept and example; but also the virtues of industry, frugality, temperance, and a regard for the various relations of this life, are enjoined. One injunction must not be so exclusively regarded as to encroach upon another. It is not charity to help those who can help themselves, except to put them in the way of helping themselves. We have long believed that indiscriminate giving is one of the worst things which can grow up among any people. It simply encourages idleness and a reliance upon others; and idleness is the open door to all manner of evil. Therefore the apostle here forbids that the idle widows shall be maintained in their idleness; because the results of their idleness will be that they will wander from house to house as tattlers and busybodies in other men's matters, telling things which they should not. Such things as these would be a source of reproach to the cause of truth, and would bring the church into evil repute. The honor of the cause of God therefore demanded that these idle widows should not be cared for by the church.

In verse six the apostle sums up the description of such a character by saying, "But she that liveth in pleasure is dead while she liveth." Such a one may be a child of God, and, as the connection shows, a member of the church; but her life is not that of the living, but rather of the dead. By such a life she destroys all her spiritual interest and comfort, and separates herself from her brethren. She walks among the dead rather than the living. She "is dead while she liveth." This is in harmony with Paul's teaching elsewhere. "If ye live after the flesh ye shall die." "He that converteth the sinner * * * shall save a soul from death." We understand the death spoken of in all three of these Scriptures to be the same.

Thus far we have spoken mostly of the restrictions and safeguards with which the inspired apostle protects the churches from imposition and wrong. We desire, however, to call especial attention to the direct obligation resting upon them to care for those who are needy, and also worthy of their bounty. While they are taught to discriminate between the worthy and the unworthy, yet the sacred obligation remains to care for those who are widows indeed. It is an obligation resting upon believers to care for all their needy brethren. Love itself indeed prompts to this; and good will and kindness to the poor are everywhere enjoined upon believers in the Scriptures. Whoso seeth his brother have need, and shutteth the bowels of his compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him? It is an experimental and practical truth that love to God never is disjoined from love to the brethren. Among the first fruits that we see in the church at Jerusalem was abounding love to each other; and among the first proofs of this love was the care of widows.—Acts vi. 1–4. We see the duty and privilege of giving again and again enjoined upon the ground that in doing this to the disciples of Jesus we are doing it also unto the Master.

But now we turn from these reflections to suggest a few thoughts, as our sister has requested, concerning the twenty-fourth and twenty-fifth verses of this same chapter. The words there recorded are as follows, "Some men's sins are open beforehand, going before to judgment; and some men they follow after. Likewise also the good works of some are manifest beforehand; and they that are otherwise cannot be hid."

In brief our understanding of this text is as follows. The apostle urges upon Timothy that in his ministry it becomes him to be cautious and slow to decide. The matters with which, as an evangelist, he would have to do would be by no means things of a trifling nature. It would behoove him to be cautious upon whom he should lay hands, either in receiving them into the churches or in appointing pastors and other officers, where churches were organized under his ministry. If it were true that the sins of all men and the good works of all men were open or manifest beforehand, then no risk would be run by laying hands upon them at once, or suddenly.—Verse 22. But it is not always manifest at first sight what men are. It is true that some men are like an open book: we see at once just what they are, either for good or evil. Some are known by all around them. Their evil life is apparent, and they are already judged of all men if they be evil; and the good works are also not hidden, if indeed they be good.

But since the life of all men is not open or manifest, the apostle enjoins needful caution. Time, he says, will make manifest all things; and time is needed to make manifest many things. Sooner or later light will fall upon all men, and discover the truth concerning them. If a man's secret life be sinful, the secret life will appear to the gaze of men sooner or later. On the other hand, if a man's life be full of secret good works, this also will appear, no matter how great a cloud he may be under at the present time. Timothy was young, and needed such a caution; for when young we are very liable to form hasty judgments. We are often slow to learn that what a man seems is not always what he is. In the important affairs of this present world men learn that it is not well to either decide or act hastily. How much more is it important that care and deliberation should be exercised in all that pertains to the affairs of the kingdom of heaven on earth! It is to be feared that from the want of such caution, and from undue haste, some have been ordained to the work of the ministry in our churches of late years who were not called of God to the work, and some also who were unfit by reason of the manner of their outward life. Observation, therefore, as well as the precept of the apostle, teaches us to "lay hands suddenly on no man." We are of the opinion that a child of God may have weaknesses which should not bar him from membership in the church, but which nevertheless would be a barrier to his holding any place of trust or responsibility in the church. Especially is it enjoined by the apostle that those who preach the word must be of good report of them that are without.

We leave these reflections to our correspondent and to our readers. Both subjects seem to us of importance to be considered. We trust that what is here written may serve at least to call the attention of the brethren to these matters. Every injunction in the word of God is of divine authority, and cannot be disregarded without loss to the disobedient.

C.

DIFFERENCE BETWEEN OLD AND NEW SCHOOL BAPTISTS.

Number Five.

In setting forth the principal difference between the Old and New orders of Baptists on the subject of Justification we shall study brevity. Much may be said and written on this vitally important branch of the christian doctrine which does not belong to the present exposition of difference. It may be the most proper method for us to state what are the sentiments of Old School Baptists, and then what we understand those of the New School to be on the subject.

With the Bible as our standard book, we believe that "In the Lord shall all the seed of Israel be justified, and shall glory." Such was the testimony of Isaiah the prophet, and the New Testament of our Lord Jesus Christ gives abundant testimony that all that was written of him in the prophets is completely fulfilled, even to the most minute jots and tittles.

By the seed of Israel we are not to understand all the natural descendants of Jacob; "for they are not all Israel that are of Israel; neither because they are the seed of Abraham are they all children; but in Isaac shall thy seed be called: that is, they which are the children of the flesh, these are not the children of God; but the children of the promise are counted for the seed." The children of Israel intended in our quotation from Isaiah, are none other than the children of God, children of promise, and counted for the seed. "If ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." "As many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God." "For he is not a Jew which is one outwardly, neither is that circumcision which is outward in the flesh: but he is a Jew which is one inwardly; and circumcision is that of the heart, in the spirit, and not in the letter; whose praise is not of men, but of God."

By the foregoing Scriptures we are warranted in our conclusion that the seed of Jacob interested exclusively in the promise of eternal justification and glory, are the seed of our Lord Jesus Christ, of whom Jacob or Israel was but a type. This conclusion is also sustained by the connection in the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah; for there it is distinctly predicted that "When thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin, he shall see his seed, he shall prolong his days, and the pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hand. He shall see of the travail of his soul and shall be satisfied; by his knowledge shall my righteous servant justify many; for he shall bear their iniquities." And again it is written of Christ, "A seed shall serve him; it shall be accounted to the Lord for a generation."—Psa. xxii. 30. And Peter, by divine inspiration, identifies this seed as "a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a peculiar people." And as a chosen, they are an elected generation of Jesus Christ; not chosen into him, but chosen in him, before the foundation of the world, that they should be holy and without blame (or holy and justified) before God in love. Christ is the seminal Head and progenitor of this seed; and they, by virtue of this relationship to him, shall say as his own body, "In the Lord have I righteousness and strength." In him therefore shall all the seed be justified; not out of him; for their life is hid with Christ in God. Christ is their life, and in him they have redemption and the remission of sins; because he has surely borne their griefs and carried their sorrows. He was wounded for their transgressions, he was bruised for their iniquities, the chastisement of their peace was upon him, and with his stripes they are healed. All they like sheep have gone astray, but the Lord had laid on him the iniquity of them all. He was delivered up for their offenses, and raised again for their justification. By one offering he has perfected forever all them that are sanctified; and therefore it is that all consistent Old School Baptists believe that in the Lord all the seed shall be justified, and shall glory.

Justification, as held by Old School Baptists, is a perfect, complete deliverance from guilt, wrath and condemnation. From first to last it is of God, and not of the creature; that the subjects of it in their spiritual existence are, and always were, in Jesus Christ; but in their earthly natures they were the children of wrath, even as others; and that in the application of the blood and righteousness of Christ to them, according to the eternal purpose and decree of God, they are freely justified from all things, from which they could not be justified by the law of Moses; for by the deeds of the law no flesh can be justified. Justification before God, then, is only in Jesus Christ the Lord; and all those who are in him, and have justification in him, have also glory in him. It is as impossible to separate the state of justification from the certainty of ultimate glory, as it is the work of justification from Jesus Christ. Who then shall lay anything to the charge of God's elect? It is God that justifieth: who is he that condemneth? It is Christ that died: yea, rather, that is risen again, who is even at the right hand of God, who also maketh intercession for them. Who then shall separate them from the love of Christ? Shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword? Nay, in all these things they are more than conquerors through him that loved them. Paul was persuaded that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate them from the love of God (which is precisely where their justification, and righteousness, and strength, and life, and election, is), in Christ Jesus their Lord.

After having briefly stated what we understand to be the doctrine of Justification, as held by Old School Baptists, it may seem quite unnecessary to draw the contrast, by presenting the views of the New School, as none of that order will pretend to claim what we have written as a correct version of their faith upon that subject. Indeed, whatever may be held by them in their written articles of faith, it cannot be denied that in their preaching, exhortations, revival making, and missionary operations generally, they represent the justification and salvation of sinners as resting on some other basis than the blood and righteousness of the Son of God. Should they admit what the Scriptures affirm, that all for whom Christ was delivered up were completely and forever perfected by his one offering, and justified in his resurrection from the dead, they would be compelled either to relinquish their darling system of general atonement, or embrace the doctrine of universal salvation, unless they should prefer a dilemma still more absurd, that a portion of those whom he has justified and forever perfected will at last be consigned to interminable wrath and perdition. To avoid these difficulties, the New School Baptists generally represent justification as they do the atonement, as saving nobody; a mere provision to be offered to all men indiscriminately; and if they reject it, that it is null and void; but if they will condescend to accept it, the merit and efficiency of it consists in their acceptance. Should they admit that the atonement made by Christ, and the justification of his people, are absolute and effectual in themselves, such admission would prostrate their whole machinery of free will and human power, and with it all their New School peculiarities. What would become of all their popular institutions, of Missionary, Tract and Sunday Schools, for evangelizing the world and saving sinners from hell, should they admit the doctrine of a finished salvation, a perfect and effectual atonement for all the sons of God, and their everlasting justification secured beyond the possibility of failure? What would they find left to be secured by their zeal and outlay of capital in the work of salvation? The apostle has assured us that if salvation be of grace, it is no more of works; otherwise grace is no more grace; and if it be of works, it is no more of grace, otherwise work is no more work. It cannot therefore be a mixture of grace and works; it must be either exclusively of the one or of the other. Nor has the same inspired apostle left us in the dark to determine on which salvation is actually founded; for, says he, "By grace are ye saved, through faith, and that not of yourselves; it is the gift of God; not of works, lest any man should boast. For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them.

We have probably said enough to show that the difference between the Old and New kinds of Baptists on the subject of Justification is as great as upon any other of the branches of doctrine upon which we have written.

In our next, we propose to exhibit some difference between the two kinds of Baptists on the subject of Predestination.

O! dear brother Chick, I can never tell you how much good your precious visit with us has done me. It was a time long to be remembered by one so unworthy as I. I suppose you remember the evening you preached at Elder A. Mellott's house. It was there you told my experience, and in a far better way than I have here done it. O! that was what my poor heart had longed for so many years. It seemed that every word of that sermon was spoken expressly for me. How much comfort I derived from it I cannot tell. Dear brother, I can truly say that the things I once loved I now hate, and what I once hated I now love. But when I come to look at my unworthiness, weakness and disobedience, I often fear I have not been born again. O vain one that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death? "We know that we have passed from death unto life because we love the brethren." I love them, but do I love them as I should? If I could always be reconciled to God's holy will, always be at my brethren's feet, esteeming them much better than myself, how good it would be. I do not see how they can fellowship such a poor sinner as I see myself to be. The greatest evidence I have of being born again is the chastening rod for my disobedience. The Bible says, "If his children forsake my law, and walk not in my judgments; if they break my statutes, and keep not my commandments; then will I visit their transgressions with the rod, and their iniquities with stripes. Nevertheless my loving-kindness will I not utterly take from him, nor suffor my faithfulness to fail."—Psalm lxxxix. 30–33. O! what precious words are therein written.

I must close this poor, miserable letter, asking you to excuse mistakes and short-comings, and pray for me, that I may ever grow in grace and the knowledge of God. Dear brother, I will look for a letter from you at any convenient time. I remain your unworthy sister, if one at all,

SUSIE VARNES.

MASON CITY, Neb., Dec. 1, 1894.

SILAS H. DURAND—DEAR BROTHER:—There are a few Baptists in this locality who are in need of the necessaries of life as a result of the crop failures of the past two years. I have been thinking that you might be in a position to render us some assistance by way of soliciting a few of the necessaries of life, which if shipped to Chairman of Relief Committee, Mason City, Custer Co., Neb., will be carried free of charge over at least our road here (the B. & M.). We need clothing more particularly, and if you can render us a little aid at this time I trust that the Lord may bless your efforts abundantly, and I will try and see to it that those needy brethren and their families are conserved to the extent of their needs; afterwards others who are needy.

I would like very much to have a copy of your Hymn and Tune book, and could pay for it; but I can hardly feel it right to indulge in such luxuries when my brethren and friends are so needy. I shall be pleased to hear from you. From an unworthy little one in tribulation,

J. M. AMSBERRY.

SOUTHAMPTON, Pa., Dec., 27, 1894.

DEAR BROTHER BEEBE:—I send this letter to publish in the SIGNS. We will try to send a box next week, and perpaps another later. I learn from other sources that the destitution is very great in that part. I think any Rail Road will carry such goods free of charge; also merchants will sell at reduced rates, I suppose.

Your brother,

SILAS H. DURAND.

SOUTHAMPTON, Pa., Jan. 7, 1895.

DEAR BROTHER BEEBE:—I send you another letter of brother J. M. Amsberry, which will give more particularly the situation of brethren and others in that part of the country. They seem to be very destitute. The Reading R. R. carries a box from here to Harrisburg, Pa., free, and the Pennsylvania R. R. carries it free to Chicago. Thence it goes by the C., B. & Q. R. R. Any rail road will carry such freight for charitable purposes free. The circular brother Amsberry sent me speaks particularly of the very destitute condition of the people, and gives twenty-five or thirty names of a committee that has been organized to attend to supplies. Whatever is sent for our brethren and friends should be addressed to S. B. Thompson, Chairman Co. Relief Committee, Mason City, Custer Co., Nebraska, via C., B. & Q. Railway from Chicago, and the shipping bill should be sent to brother Amsberry, who will see to the distribution. I shall not apologize for not erasing the mention of our Hymn and Tune book, but will ask all our papers, who feel willing, to copy this letter and brother Amsberry's. Your brother in hope,

SILAS H. DURAND.

MASON CITY, Neb., Dec. 28, 1894.

SILAS H. DURAND—MY DEAR BROTHER:—Your kind favor of the 24th inst. is at hand; also your letter and book sent at an earlier date. I want to say right now that the book has been a source of much joy to me, for which I want to thank you, as I have already done a thousand times in my heart. I took the book with me when I went to visit my father and mother last Sunday, and they seemed so eager to examine it that I left it with them. I went back on Christmas day, intending to bring the book home with me; but all the time I was there my father either held the book or looked on while some one else held it. He said he never had seen a collection of hymns he could sing so many of, and almost all the good old hymns he had ever heard he found there; and, being acquainted with the shaped notes he could sing them readily. With all my poverty, I would rather you had sent me this book than a ten dollar bill. My father is almost seventy-one, a faithful old veteran of the cross, and has always read with much interest your letters in the SIGNS and other papers.

Replying to yours of the 24th, I will say that I inclose herewith a circular, which will give you a pretty fair idea of what we need, and how to ship in order to secure free transportation.

To give you an idea of the condition of our people, I will tell you just how I am situated; and by bearing in mind that I am only one of many in the same shape, you will easily understand why we are making this appeal for aid.

I cropped about sixty-five acres of land in 1893, and harvested ten and one-half bushels of wheat, seventeen and one-half bushels of oats, about ten bushels of corn, no potatoes or vegetables worthy of mention. In 1894 I cropped about 75 acres, and harvested nothing but a little fodder, and have no hay nor straw, and not a bushel of grain of any kind. My fodder would not feed my stock longer than 30 days should the weather become severe; but, thanks be to heaven's King, he has "tempered the wind to the shorn lambs," and has given so far, one of the finest winters I ever saw any where. I have seven horses, and am keeping five cows and five hogs. The cows and horses have done fairly well, running at large, so far; but we cannot tell how soon a heavy snow-fall may put a stop to this; besides the range is pretty well nipped off.

Now, dear brother, just send along anything you can collect, that you think we can use, and never mind the freight, as our road, the C., B. & Q., will make no charge, and our people are prepared for any charge that another line may make. Old clothes are all right; and remember that we have plenty of children.

Your brother in hope,

J. M. AMSBERRY.

PROOF TEXTS.

BY the Scriptures alone can any assertion concerning spiritual things be proved to be the truth. In presenting argument for the truth of such assertion the portion of Scripture relied upon as proof of its truth must be quoted, and its application to that point must be shown, as against all other possible interpretations. Sometimes the mere quotation of the Scripture will be sufficient, without a word of further explanation; because as it comes into the argument it is seen at once to be in its right place, and its application and fitness are at once apparent, and the mind of the candid seeker after truth is satisfied. This is the real object one has in the discussion of spiritual subjects, when the Spirit directs him to such discussion. He desires to convince the judgment, not to overawe the mind by an array of eminent names; not to have dominion over the faith, and force submission where there is no conviction.

The reference to a portion of Scripture as proof is never argument. A reference is of no use in a discussion, except as enabling the reader to turn to the portion in the Bible which has been already quoted, or so thoroughly embodied in the discussion that its correct application is shown. A mere reference to a text to prove a declaration, without quoting it, may be a begging of the entire question at issue, as it may all turn upon the understanding of that text. The reference to a text, without producing it, and justifying its use as a proof, is a mere dogmatic assertion that it supports one view, which convinces no one, though it may overawe the timid. The inquiring mind looks at the text referred to, and wonders how the writer would have explained his right to it in his argument if he had said anything about it. Such a reference to the Scriptures is a sign of weakness, and often, I think, of conscious weakness.

A few years ago I asked one who had published a book, and had in the discussion of his subject often followed an assertion with a long list of scriptural references, "Do you think such a Scripture [naming it] has this meaning [repeating his assertion in proof of which he had included this among his references]?" "No," he replied at once and unhesitatingly. I then called his attention to his use of it. He seemed to have selected texts that had certain words in them giving a surface appearance of application to the subject, without having investigated them.

Some seem to think it is very assuming and wrong to say anything about a portion of Scripture upon which eminent men have written, except to submissively repeat what they have said. "The spirit of the prophets is subject to the prophets," it is true; but it is the subjection of life, not of death. The Spirit teaches each directly; and each plant in the kingdom of God grows by the power of the life which is within itself, not by the direction of another plant. Do not be afraid that the Lord's plants will grow upon different plans, and so grow apart. The one life which is in all of them will cause them to grow up alike in all the essential qualities of the plant.

NOT long since I saw in a prominent article by a prominent writer an everlasting task proposed for Fatalists. "How to explain such Scriptures as Deuteronomy v. 28, 29, xxxii. 29, Psalm lxxxi. 13 and Isaiah xlviii. 18, 19, consistently with their favorite theory." Although I am not a Fatalist, if I understand what is meant by that term, yet I took some interest in looking up those texts; and so far as I could understand the difficulty which the writer supposed they would present to the Fatalists, or to any one else, I concluded that he himself must regard them as proving that the Lord does sometimes wish that things and events had been other than they are, and that they might have been. I had good reason to believe that a response was not desired, and would not receive attention.

A MERE quotation of some of the long lists of texts which I have seen referred to in proof of dogmatic assertions would cause even a child to be astonished that they should have been regarded as proving that for proof of which they have been referred to; and upon such an array of figures, naming chapters and verses, wholesale and bitter denunciations have been visited upon those who dare to speak what they believe the Spirit has shown them of the power and beauty of the Scriptures of truth, without first going through libraries to find out whether what they feel and see has ever been expressed before. They are denounced as bringing in dangerous innovations. In all such dogmatic statements of what must and what must not be received as the truth, there is never a statement that bears the mark of having been received by the teaching of the Spirit, no evidence that they speak or write, as John did, what they have seen with their eyes, and looked upon, and their hands have handled, of the Word of life, but only what they have learned of the views of uninspired men.

Such discussions are worse than useless, especially when they are accompanied with wholesale denunciations of those who must honestly and candidly appeal to the inspired record, and show what they believe they have felt of its power. The expression of what some of the most unlearned of the dear, exercised family of God have felt of the power of the word which the Spirit has brought to them in their experience is far more edifying and comforting. This is of value, while the other is hurtful, turning the poor, hungry soul away from the only Interpreter to the vain wisdom and learning of men.

HALLWOOD, Va., Dec. 27, 1894.

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES—DEAR BRETHREN:—The time has now arrived for me to send my two dollars, so that you may be financially enabled to send me our highly prized family paper, the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, another year; and in addition to this if I could but send you even one word of encouragement how very glad I would be. As to whether any word that I might say would be of any benefit to you, I know not. But to view the matter from a natural standpoint this cannot be; for if any word that I might say should prove a blessing to you, the better would be blessed of the less, and not the less blessed of the better, as is always without contradiction the case. But to take the correct view, which is the spiritual, if I, the least of the flock, should be priviledged to drop one word of comfort or encouragement to any of God's believing children, then I am indeed blessed of God; and they, if comforted by what I might say, would also indeed be blessed of God, in that the Spirit of God did bless those words to the comfort of their souls. So we see that all our blessings must and do come from the great I Am, the Giver of every good and perfect gift, and that we of ourselves are nothing, and less than nothing, and vanity; that poor, finite man, whose breath is in his nostrils, has nothing to boast of; that we have nothing to glory in; but, as the apostle hath declared it to be, "He that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord." And this is what all of God's children do, when clothed and in their right mind.

I have been a constant reader of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES eight years, and the truth as it has been contended for in its columns has indeed been a blessing to me. I feel that I have indeed been edified, built up in the faith of God's elect; and while I know there are other periodicals that are good, yet there are none that I like any better than the SIGNS. I feel that if it were God's will to do so, how glad I would be that he would put it into the heart of every subscriber to try and be prompt in sending in their remittances; for sometimes we may grow careless about these matters, thinking that two dollars is not much any way in meeting the expenses of publishing a paper; and this is true; but if hundreds of us think the same way, and act accordingly, we may see into what straits the editors may be thrown. So, brethren, let us, as near as we possibly can, obey the apostolic injunction, "Owe no man anything, but to love one another; for he that loveth another hath fulfilled the law." I am glad, brother Beebe, that you have associated with you such assistants as you have; and now, let me say in conclusion, although I have not the pleasure of a personal acquaintance with any of the three, except Elder Chick, having met with him twice, I feel to have an interest in the SIGNS, desiring its success, and also that God in his infinite goodness and mercy may continue to be with each of you in your labors of love.

Yours unworthily,

MARTIN D. FISHER.

Steers, in the presence of quite a nice company of near friends and relatives, this being the fifth daughter of the same family that I have married.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

SISTER Martha H. Symmonds departed this life Dec. 20th, at 5:25 p. m., at the residence of her daughter, Dessa Stone, about four and one-half miles from home, having been called there to visit her daughter's sick child. She was taken sick on Friday night, the 14th inst., with pneumonia, which was the cause of her death, and which baffled the skill of all the physicians. All the tender care that a loving husband, children and kind friends could administer was of no avail. She was perfectly calm and resigned to the will of her heavenly Father, saying, "If it is his will I shall get up; if not, all is well. I am not afraid to die. My trust is in the Lord."

Sister Symmonds was born in Hawkins Co., Tenn., April 11th, 1834, and was the daughter of Thomas and Nancy Walker. Her age was 60 years, 8 months and 9 days. An appropriate funeral discourse was preached at the house of her daughter on Saturday morning at ten o'clock, Dec. 22d, by brother Amos Reed and Elder James H. Hammons, using as a text Revelation xiv. 13; after which the remains were taken to the Chester cemetery and laid away to await the resurrection. She leaves four brothers, one sister, her beloved companion, four daughters four sons and eighteen grandchildren, together with the church, to mourn their loss; but we mourn not as those who have no hope, for we believe that our loss is her eternal gain.

Sister Symmonds first united with the Old School Predestinarian Baptist Church called Little Flock, in Adams Co., Ill., on the regular meeting day in May, 1854. She moved her membership from thence to Bethel Church, in Hancock Co., Ill., in 1856, and from there to the Providence Church, in Appanoose Co., Iowa, in 1880. She moved to Nebraska in the year 1887, leaving her membership with the Providence Church, until the Lord was pleased to set up his kingdom here in our midst, when she called for a letter of dismission to go into the constitution of the Little Flock Church, in Nuckolls Co., Neb., which she had the privilege of naming. The church has lost one of its most worthy members, whose seat, we feel, can never be filled; but God hath placed every member in the body as it hath pleased him, and removes them at his own good time and pleasure. We feel to say, The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; and blessed be his holy name.

Your unworthy little brother in a precious hope of a blessed immortality beyond the grave,

JOSEPH BRUCE.

STODDARD, Neb., Dec. 30, 1894.

David Baker, Sr., died at the residence of his son Daniel, near Greenville, Washington Co., Oregon, Oct. 16th, 1894, after a short but painful illness, aged 91 years, 8 months and 11 days. He was buried on the 18th, in the burying-ground near Dilley, Elder Daniel Bridges officiating.

Brother Baker was born in the state of Pennsylvania, Feb. 5th, 1803. His parents died when he was young. He afterward went to Parke Co., Ind. On March 3d, 1825, he was married to Miss Sarah Cobb. To them were born ten children, one dying in infancy. In 1831 he obtained a hope that God for Christ's sake had pardoned his sins. On July 12th, 1833, he went to the Mt. Moriah Church, and was received for baptism, and at the next meeting was baptized by Elder Benjamin Lambert. He left Indiana for Keokuk Co., Iowa, in 1846. His companion was a member of the church with him for a long time, and a regular attendant with him. She was taken to her final rest on March 31st, 1858. He was married to Mrs. Pamelia Pulliam on Jan. 15th, 1859; and in 1865 he moved to Washington Co., Oregon, where the writer first met him. He and sister Baker united with the New Hope Church, and were exemplary members, setting an example worthy of imitation. Brother Baker was an ordained Deacon, filling the office to the satisfaction of all. Sister Baker was called to her home above July 12th, 1870, leaving brother Baker lonely indeed; after which he lived with his sons David and Daniel, where all was done for his comfort that loving children could do, their families being kind and affectionate toward him. He had his membership in Pleasant Grove Church, Goldendale, Washington, for a short time, and in Friendship Church, Gilliam Co., Oregon, but returned to the New Hope Church, where he first joined in Oregon. He was looked to for counsel, being well-versed in Scripture and discipline. He was loved by all the brotherhood, and his memory will be cherished by them. He was fond of talking of the goodness of God in the salvation of sinners, and of his goodness to him, always feeling his unworthiness. The church has lost a worthy member, and his children a kind father. O that we may all wait with patience, as he did, for the change to come, is the sincere desire of the writer.

T. G. FLANARY.

GOLDENDALE, Wash.

OUR dear mother, Mrs. Roxanna Borthwick, died on the night of Nov. 20th, 1894. Her maiden name was Crippen. She was born Nov. 12th, 1820, was married to Nathaniel D. Borthwick on Dec. 24th, 1845, and in the spring of 1847 moved on the farm where they lived happily together until separated by death. To them were born four daughters, two having preceded her to the world beyond.

Mother received a hope in Christ in the year 1853, united with the New School Baptists at Rensselaerville, N. Y., and was baptized by their pastor, Lewis Purington, where she enjoyed herself as long as he remained; but with a new preacher came new doctrines and new practices, and she soon found that she could neither fellowship nor support such doctrines. For a number of years she felt that she had no church home, but generally went to Old Baptist meetings. On Nov. 10th, 1877, she told her experience and desires to the Old School Baptist Church of Middleburgh, was received, and baptized the next day by Elder I. B. Whitcomb, where she remained a faithful member until God in his wisdom called her from a world of sin and sorrow, as we believe and trust, to dwell forever with him and all the redeemed family. Very few times was her seat vacant at any of the meetings of the church. She went about eighty miles in September to attend the association, and attended some of the meetings following, where Elder H. M. Curry preached, and enjoyed them all very much. Then she went to our regular meetings on the 6th and 7th of October. That was the last she left the house. Medical aid and willing hands were powerless to stay the disease. She said she desired to wait with patience all her appointed time. We desire to be reconciled to the will of God in all things, knowing that he doeth all things well. She leaves to mourn a husband (who has been a companion almost forty-nine years), two daughters, six grandchildren, the church, and many relatives and friends; but we mourn not as those who have no hope, for we believe that our loss is her eternal gain.

Elder John Clark spoke words of comfort from 1 Thess. iv. 13-18, on Nov. 23d, and her body was tenderly laid in the grave to await the resurrection.

Her daughter,

ADDIE COOK.

RENSSELAERVILLE, N. Y.

DIED—At the residence of her son-in-law, Mr. John H. Barnes, in Fairfax Co., Va., Nov. 5th, 1894, Mrs. Jane Johnson, aged 97 years and 8 months.

She was three times married. First to Herney Summers, who died seventy-four years ago, leaving her with two children. Her second husband was Gabriel Fox, by whom she had seven children, and who died about fifty years ago. Her last husband was Richard Johnson, whom she survived nearly ten years. But three of her children survive her: Dr. Albert Fox, Mr. Amos Fox and Mrs. J. H. Barnes, with whom she had lived for the past few years, and at whose house she died. She leaves twenty-five grandchildren, fifty-five great-grandchildren, and ten great-great-grandchildren. She thus leaves ninety-three descendants, embracing four generations. She died within five miles of the place of her birth, and had spent the whole of her long and eventful life within a radius of ten miles. She never made a public profession of religion, but was ever a firm Old School Baptist in her views. Her house was always open to the entertainment of the brethren, many of whom partook of her hospitality. She was a devoted friend of Elder Samuel Trott, who always found a welcome greeting from her. Her second husband, Gabriel Fox, early became a subscriber to the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, which she continued until within a few years, and was always an interested reader. She was a cripple from a fall she received some years ago, involving a broken limb. Her hearing became poor, but her mental faculties remained clear and bright to the last. Until within a few years she would not acknowledge an experimental knowledge of the truth, but was always fearful and self-deprecatory; but for two years before her decease she loved to talk of spiritual things, and of her own precious interest in them. Truly her last days were her best days. Her last words were,

"Here, Lord, I give myself away;
'Tis all that I can do."

We feel assured that she has entered into rest.

I was well acquainted with Mrs. Johnson for twenty-seven years, and have never known a more devoted adherent to the principles of the Old School Baptists, nor a warmer friend, both personally and to my ministry. I feel indeed that I have lost a true and faithful friend.

By her request, made the day before she died, I attended her funeral on the 7th, and tried to speak to the comfort of the mourners from 1 Cor. xv. 50-58. May the Lord bless and comfort the bereaved in the assurance that their loss is her eternal gain.

PICTORIAL HISTORY

OF THE

UNITED STATES.

By James D. McCabe.

This work has taken rank as the Standard History of the United States. It is no dry mass of details—no bombastic effort to inflame the national pride, but a clear, vivid and brilliant narrative of the events of our history, from the discovery of the American Continent down to the present time. It gives a most interesting account of the Indians of North America, from the time of the coming of the white men. The voyages of Columbus and the explorations and discoveries of the different nations of Europe are related with graphic power. Every step of our colonial history is traced with patient fidelity, and the sources of those noble and, we trust, enduring institutions, which have made our country free and great, are shown with remarkable clearness. Then follows a clear and succinct account of our great Struggle for Independence, and the establishment of the Federal Union—the events of our career from the close of the Revolution to the administration of Harrison.

The work is printed from plain, new type, on fine calendered paper, and comprised in one octavo volume of 960 pages. It is splendidly embellished with nearly 500 fine engravings, embracing battles and other historical scenes, portraits of distinguished men, views of our principal cities, &c., &c.

CORRESPONDENCE.

OLD MEN'S HOME, PAILADELPHIA, Pa., Dec. 13, 1894.

DEAR BROTHER BEEBE:—I have had at times an impression to write to you; but on account of the knowledge of my weakness, ignorance and imperfections, I am kept from either writing or speaking to those whom I do esteem much better than myself; but knowing as I do that you can and do sympathize and bear with the weak ones of the household of God, I make the attempt. I do not feel that I have anything good to write you of myself, for I have a long time realized that in my flesh there dwells no good thing. While reading the third chapter of the Acts of the Apostles, I have been led in some degree at least to meditate on the power of faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, as seen in that poor man who was carried and laid at the gate of the temple which was called Beautiful to ask alms; also to see how dependent he was; no power to help himself. "Then Peter said, Silver and gold have I none; but such as I have give I thee: in the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth rise up and walk." There was the power of faith manifested, that Jesus Christ hath power in earth to forgive sins. So we read in the eleventh chapter of Hebrews of the wonderful fruits of faith. How true is the word of God. By grace are we saved, through faith; and that not of ourselves; it is the gift of God. In reading that third chapter of the Acts of the Apostles, how forcibly the case of sister Mary Parker was brought to my mind, seeing the hand of God manifested thus far in restoring her to her present state and condition. I thank God for putting it in the hearts of his dear people to minister to her several wants in this life. Let God have all the glory.

As I am not gifted, either in speaking or writing, I will close this letter with a request that, if the Lord will, you favor me with your views on that wonderful vision of Peter recorded in the Acts of the Apostles, x. 9–16, and send it to the SIGNS for publication. I hope you still have the desire for the welfare of the household and the fellowship of the dear saints of God while in tribulation. If you feel to have liberty to grant my request it will be thankfully received.

With love to you and family, your unworthy brother in tribulation,

SILAS G. SUPPLEE.

(Reply on next column.)

THE VISION OF PETER.

"ON the morrow, as they went on their journey, and drew nigh unto the city, Peter went up upon the housetop to pray about the sixth hour; and he became very hungry, and would have eaten; but while they made ready, he fell into a trance, and saw heaven opened, and a certain vessel descending unto him, as it had been a great sheet knit at the four corners, and let down to the earth; wherein were all manner of fourfooted beasts of the earth, and wild beasts, and creeping things, and fowls of the air. And there came a voice to him, Rise, Peter; kill and eat. But Peter said, Not so, Lord; for I have never eaten anything that is common or unclean. And the voice spake unto him again the second time, What God hath cleansed, that call not thou common. This was done thrice; and the vessel was received up again into heaven."—Acts x. 9-16.

DEAR BROTHER SUPPLEE:—In compliance with your request for my views on this wonderful vision, the following thoughts are submitted, though doubtless they will fall short of the fullness which has been revealed in your own reflections on the subject.

Before presenting my own views however, I will say that I do not object to the generally received explanation, that this experience was given for the instruction of the apostle expressly, that he might be qualified to understand the purpose of God in sending him to preach to the Gentiles that gospel of Christ which from his traditional education he had thought to be confined exclusively to the nation of Israel. To manifest this truth of the giving of divine favor to the Gentiles, it was needful that Peter should have the revelation of the will of God as it was signified in this vision. So Peter himself declared when called to answer before the apostles and brethren in Judea, as recorded in the following chapter. Of this design of the vision there can be no question. The record thus clearly explains that it was by divine authority that the gospel was first proclaimed to those who were not included in the chosen nation of Israel.

For the comfort of the saints in all subsequent ages there is much more to be seen in this circumstance than the naked history of this incident would convey to the natural mind. Glorious as is the assurance that to the Gentiles God has granted repentance unto life, it is far more important to the afflicted and poor people who hope in divine mercy, to know that God is not limited in the display of his grace by such barriers as appear to finite reason as forbidding its bestowal. Not only all the accepted teachings of Judaism, but the express letter of the covenant which God had given to Israel, forbade the participation of any Gentiles in the religious privileges given exclusively to the children of Abraham. Even the disciples who had been taught by Jesus in his personal ministry, though they had been plainly told of the end of the legal dispensation, were unable to receive the truth that the light of gospel liberty was to shine upon the whole world without distinction of nation or race. Until taught by direct revelation they supposed that Peter had been guilty of serious error in going to the Gentiles to proclaim the glad tidings of salvation by the blood of Jesus Christ. This truth, that the Gentiles should hear the word of life, was not to be learned by studying the Scriptures. It could only be revealed by the Spirit of truth. This revelation was given in the vision shown to the apostle.

Every circumstance incident to this vision was ordered by the sovereign appointment of God, and not one item could be changed. Peter must become "very hungry" just at the moment when the messengers from Cornelius drew nigh to the city where he was. There must be time for him to fall into a trance while they made ready for him to eat. It was not by his own will that he was hungry; nor was it by any human appointment that he must wait for the preparation of food. All this was fixed by the infinite power and wisdom of God. Blind reason can see no necessity that these apparently trivial circumstances should have been just as they were. Yet from the record it is manifest that there could have been no variation in these little points without defeating the purpose of showing the will of God to his servant. Peter could not become very hungry until the messengers drew nigh unto the city. Then he must go up upon the housetop to pray; and at that very instant he must fall into a trance and receive the lesson which God there taught him. Even then he could not comprehend the vision which he had seen; it must be shown him in the subsequent development of the will of God. Not until he had heard the experience of Cornelius did he perceive that "God is no respecter of persons; but in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him." All this is conclusive evidence that the most minute circumstance of temporal events is determined by the unalterable decree of God. Cornelius must send his servants at the very time designed, and Peter must receive this vision just when he was to be sent contrary to his own expectations to preach Christ to the uncircumcised Gentiles. Not one of these events could be one moment earlier or later than it was ordered in the predestinating purpose of God. The united efforts of all the saints among the Jews could not hasten this gracious manifestation; nor could all the combined powers of sin and hell delay the accomplishment of that which God had appointed. "The Lord bringeth the counsel of the heathen to naught; he maketh the devices of the people of none effect. The counsel of the Lord standeth forever, the thoughts of his heart to all generations."—Psalm xxxiii. 10, 11.

Without devoting further remarks to the literal record of our text, it is profitable to consider the bearing of this divine instruction upon the present experience of the afflicted and poor people of God in their every day trials while sojourning in this land of tribulation. Nothing can ever transpire without the will of that God who has commended his love to us in that, "While we were yet sinners, Christ died for us." Well does Paul present this as fully assuring the fact that "Much more then, being now justified by his blood, we shall be saved from wrath through him."—Rom. v. 8, 9. Then, however dark and inscrutable may be the circumstances surrounding them in their temporal state, they who hope in the grace of God which is revealed in Christ Jesus, may well rest in the confidence that "All things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose."—Rom. viii. 28. This, Paul says, "We know." It is nowhere written by inspiration that this is shown to the natural mind of the saints. Our Lord gave thanks to the Father because he has hidden from the wise and prudent all these heavenly things, and revealed them unto babes. If we could at all times remember this essential truth it would deliver us from the snares of doubt and unbelief into which we so frequently fall. Because to our dim reason there is no evidence in confirmation of our hope, we are often ready to conclude that all our trust is a delusion; and under the power of temptation we would give up all hope. But that grace which has been given us in Christ Jesus delivers us out of the temptation by the manifestation that our salvation is secured in the immutable love of God, who is rich in mercy. Since this love is eternal, it cannot be forfeited by any action which may occur in time, whether it be of ourselves or of the cunning craftiness of the adversary. While this truth secures the hope of the saints, it does not justify the wicked suggestion of the carnal mind which would find in it encouragement for indulgence in the lusts of the flesh and continuing in sin. The saints having been by the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus made free from the law of sin and death, are not any longer able to find life in the service of sin. Therefore they hunger and thirst after righteousness, and can never be satisfied until they awake with the likeness of their infinitely holy Redeemer. The freedom and joy for which they earnestly long, is to be delivered from the power of sin, and translated into the liberty of the sons of God. This is found only in the kingdom of God, which is "righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost." Only by the unmerited favor of God can any sinner find entrance into this kingdom. Therefore, the saints must be kept by the power of God, through faith unto salvation, not less exclusively than they must depend upon that divine will and grace for their election unto eternal life through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus.

In the manner chosen by the Holy Spirit for teaching this important lesson to Peter, there is a very essential fact revealed to the faith of the saints. Carnal reason challenges the validity of such instruction as has come to the saints when their natural minds are dormant. Hence they frequently doubt the impressions which they have received in such times as when naturally sleeping. In this case of Peter's, as in many other instances written for our learning, it must not be forgotten that there is clear testimony that the instruction was given while reason was utterly disqualifed from receiving any impression. There is manifest design in the record thus left for the encouragement of those doubting ones who have to trust in evidences given when they were either sleeping, or in some other way disqualified to receive natural instruction. God is not limited to the means of communication necessary for created beings to reach the understanding of their fellows. That word which gives life to the dead has power to instruct his people even though in the depth of sleep, or bewildered with the insanity of fever or delirium. Divine teaching does not come through the channel of the natural mind. It is given exclusively through that faith which is the fruit of the Spirit of truth in those who are born of God.

Another living truth is taught in this record. While at the time it was shown to Peter the vision was incomprehensible to him, when the message from Cornelius came he was directed to go with the men, doubting nothing; and the reason assigned was conclusive, "For I have sent them." While it is true that this authority was needed for the guidance of Peter as an apostle, it is also true that the saints are still dependent upon the same divine guidance in all their pilgrimage through this world. Immediate inspiration showed the apostle the source from which his direction was received. To us every spirit must speak according to the authorized record, or it must be rejected as one of those antichrists of which we are warned by the apostle John. Whether in our sleeping or in our waking hours, we need to remember the caution to try every spirit by this infallible standard. "To the law and to the testimony. If they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."—Isa. viii. 20.

Much more might be written in connection with this instructive circumstance in the experience of the apostle, but perhaps enough has been presented to indicate to brother Supplee the limited view which is given to me. Hoping that he may receive the attempt as indicating my willingness to comply with his request, and uniting with him in asking the expression of the views of others on the subject, this is submitted.

As ever, in the fellowship of suffering, and in the hope of life in Christ Jesus, your brother, KETTERMAN, Mo., Dec. 2, 1894.

G. BEEBE'S SON:—The great mystery connected with the salvation of sinners is so deep and unfathomable that mortals shall never be able to tell its wonders or comprehend the fullness that is in the way of salvation, which was opened by the Son of God. "Great is the mystery of godliness." We at once realize this expression to be true, because "God was manifest in the flesh." How this can be, no created intelligence can explain. Though men have frequently attempted the task, none have been able to simplify this truth to human reason. Even those exercised by the faith of Jesus, who are said to be made wise unto salvation, are made to wonder at the infinite height, depth, length and breadth of this great mystery; so much so that their hungerings and thirstings are not satisfied short of the presence of their Lord and Master, who brings consolation in a way the flesh is not looking for, but which the Spirit is well satisfied with, and there is rejoicing with joy unspeakable and full of glory. There is a great contrast between those who have the faith of God's elect and those who have not faith. While those actuated by carnal desires will not receive anything as true pertaining to godliness without a reason assigned for everything connected therewith, the "poor in spirit" receive the truth as it is Jesus, for the truth's sake, not questioning God's right in withholding the whys and wherefores from them.

"Not Gabriel asks the reason why,
Nor God the reason gives;
Nor dares the favorite angel pry
Between the folded leaves."

How often professed preachers pretend to open heaven, and tell all that will be found there, and what they expect to be when they get there, as nothing short of their vain imaginations will satisfy their carnal cravings for the "uppermost seats" on high. O what vast difference is found among those who have been with Jesus; no thought of the "best places," if there be such, but of the infinite love of God which passeth understanding, and the perfect knowledge of himself as revealed to them, and the fact that they are his, and he is theirs; and with and in him they have all things; and if God be for them, none can be against them. The saints being thus surrounded with such a strong and high wall, what shall make them afraid or dissolve their vital relation with their Head? All power belongs unto the great Head of the church; that is, every power in the universe is submissive, and is controlled by him; for his name is exalted above every name, not only in this world, but also in that world which is to come; and the powers that be are ordained of God; hence we are exhorted to submit ourselves to these powers. The carnal mind of the saints cannot be reconciled to this hard doctrine, for these are "hard sayings," and nothing short of the Spirit of truth manifested in the saints can receive these things, which to the carnal mind are unreasonable; for many temporal powers seem to be evil, and contrary to all that which seems good. That God ordains powers that are evil in themselves, no man will admit, viewing God as holy and altogether righteous, except he be taught of the Spirit. That God predestinated all things, is clearly taught, though Scripture does not say so in so many words; but several places positively express this doctrine in unmistakable terms; for having declared the end from the beginning, and from ancient times the things that are not yet done, saying, "My counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure," I can view God only as a sovereign. Many things that come under our observation are evil, as viewed by the rule given us of good and evil, but designed by God for his own pleasure; and none have the right nor the power to dispute God's right of his own pleasure; nor does he give this right to any of his creatures, but retains it all to himself. He says that he will not give his glory to another, nor suffer his faithfulness to fail. Man has utterly failed to find out or measure the distance between heaven and earth, because it is unfathomable, and beyond his highest comprehension. But as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are God's ways above man's ways, and his thoughts above man's thoughts. "O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and the knowledge of God! how unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out! For who hath known the mind of the Lord, or who hath been his counselor? or who hath first given to him, and it shall be recompensed unto him again? For of him, and through him, and to him, are all things; to whom be glory for ever. Amen."—Rom. xi. 33–36. These are hard sayings, and who can hear them? The truth of God has always been, and always will be, hard sayings to every one who has not been taught his helpless condition and his absolute dependence upon God for life and all that sustains that life. None can hear or receive these hard sayings but those who have ears to hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches. These are qualified to trust alone in Jehovah. Where is there any place found in the Scriptures of the favor of God abounding to any but to him who trusts in the Lord and stays upon his God? Trust, absolute trust, is indispensably necessary for one to have before he can believe what God says, whether it be about himself as an independent God, or about man as a poor, dependent mortal, whose breath is in his nostrils, and who cannot live one moment without the pleasure and power of his Creator. What a blessed thing it is to have trust in God; for they that trust in God shall never be moved, but shall endure forever. Those who trust in God are the characters who "worship God in the Spirit, rejoice in Christ Jesus, and have no confidence in the flesh." It is evident from the teaching of the apostles that some of those professing to have godliness will still have some confidence in the flesh, and are very reluctant to give up all man-power in the worship of God and in the salvation of sinners. It comes close to the church, and is of much interest to her for her to consider what the apostle said about some. "Even of your own selves shall men arise, speaking perverse things, to draw away disciples after them." "For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears." Jude speaks of the same characters, "Beloved, when I gave all diligence to write unto you of the common salvation, it was needful for me to write unto you, and exhort you that ye should earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints; for there are certain men crept in unawares, who were before of old ordained to this condemnation, ungodly men, turning the grace of our God into lasciviousness, and denying the only Lord God, and our Lord Jesus Christ."—Jude 3, 4. Jude here, speaking of "certain men," tells how they got in, "crept in unawares." These same men were "before of old ordained to this condemnation." What for? "Turning the grace of God into lasciviousness." Lasciviousness means looseness, wantonness, lewdness, &c. How appropriate will this be to some even in our day, "turning the grace of our God into looseness." These certain men are always loose about doctrine, and want man to share part of the honor and part of the glory with God; and they virtually deny the "only Lord God and our Lord Jesus Christ." For every spirit that confesses that Jesus Christ has come in the flesh, is of God; but every spirit that confesses not that Christ has come in the flesh, is not of God; for many false prophets are gone out into the world. I understand that to confess that Christ has come in the flesh is to own him as a full complement of all the law and the prophets, a Savior anointed with all the power of the Highest, with full and absolute power over all flesh, to bring unto him from the uttermost parts of the universe all who are called by his name. Is it saying too much that there is a vital or life oneness that ever existed between the Head and the body? Some contend that this doctrine is unscriptural; and there is much opposition to it among Baptists in some localities. If it is unscriptural, I have devoted part of my life to an error; for if there be any point of doctrine which I love above others, this is one. Take away the vital oneness of Christ and his people, and you destroy the relationship; then where is the Redeemer who is the nearest of kin? The Redeemer must not only have the ransom price to settle all legal claims standing against the redeemed, but he must hold the old original title; and most important of all, as declared by the law and prophets, he must be of the same lineage, of the same blood, nearest kinsman. Upon this plea he can assert his right to redeem more than any other; so the promise was to Abraham, and to "thy seed;" not seeds, as of many, but to "thy seed," which is Christ. When his soul was made an offering for sin, he saw "his seed." They were one with him in the atonement, one with him in death, one with him in his resurrection, and are still one with him in his resurrection life. I sometimes hear Baptists speak of Christ in a way which leads me to infer that they hold the Head as being only a substitute for his people; and I now have a Baptist periodical before me which positively asserts that Christ was a substitute in offering himself for his people. Query: Will his people accept him as such?

Perhaps I have written enough for the present. As ever, at your disposal, PSALM CII. 1–11.

"HEAR my prayer, O Lord, and let my cry come unto thee. Hide not thy face from me in the day when I am in trouble; incline thine ear unto me; in the day when I call answer me speedily. For my days are consumed like smoke, and my bones are burned as a hearth. My heart is smitten, and withered like grass; so that I forget to eat my bread. By reason of the voice of my groaning my bones cleave to my skin. I am like a pelican of the wilderness; I am like an owl of the desert. I watch, and am as a sparrow alone upon the housetop. Mine enemies reproach me all the day; and they that are mad against me are sworn against me. For I have eaten ashes like bread, and mingled my drink with weeping, because of thine indignation and thy wrath; for thou hast lifted me up and cast me down. My days are like a shadow that declineth, and I am withered like grass."

How minutely does the psalmist, as he is moved by the Holy Ghost, in this, as well as in all his writings, portray the experience not only of Jesus himself, but of the church, and of each individual saint throughout all time. And when I speak of the experience of the saints, I speak of all the things connected with their mortal pilgrimage, from the time that they first realize that they are sinners, until their mortal career closes. My own experience is that my first impressions in reference to these weighty matters, and even the joy that loomed up in my soul when I first felt that my sins were forgiven, was and is but a very small part of my experience. My first recollection as to my existence here upon earth is that I was a little creature here in this world, about two years old, I suppose; and if I had any trouble then, or for several years afterwards, I have no recollection of it. Indeed I never knew what trouble was until the Lord "lifted me up, and cast me down." The trials and conflicts of my natural life are so connected and interwoven with my spiritual exercises (if indeed I have had any) that I cannot separate them. Therefore I feel just as dependent upon God for temporal blessings as I do for spiritual. But to return, my early experience as a human being was mirth and glee, and childhood happiness, though reared in the "back woods," in a rude log house, with only one door, and no window, and in rags and poverty; but as I began to enter upon life's voyage troubles came; troubles of poverty, sickness, loss of children and earthly friends. From a human standpoint it would now seem that my labor has all been in vain; for when I have succeeded in building up a little, it has been only to stand by and see all my expectations perish and my hopes blasted. So with my christian experience, if I have any. My first experience when delivered was joy and gladness. I then knew nothing of the things recorded in this psalm, and in other places; and if one had then told me that such things were in store for me I could not have believed it. The truth is, we must experience things ourselves before we can know them; and even then they seem to answer only for the time being. If we ever receive any future benefit from these things, we must again experience them in our own hearts. The infant leaning upon its mother's breast receives nourishment therefrom; but this must be repeated again and again; neither can it in after years live upon the milk received from it mother's breast in infancy. No more can the saints live upon what Jesus did for them in their first experience. Then they could live upon milk; but now they must have meat, and "strong meat" at that, because their burdens are now greater, and life's hardships and trials require stronger diet. The repast must come often, else we faint by the way, and get like David again, when he said, "As the hart panteth after the water-brooks, so panteth my soul after thee, O God. My soul thirsteth for God, for the living God; when shall I come and appear before God?" Then the language of their hearts is, "Hear my prayer, O Lord, and let my cry come unto thee. Hide not thy face from me in the day when I am in trouble." Often, while passing through this vale of tears, they are made to say, "My heart is smitten, and withered like grass." O! brethren and sisters, how often this poor worm has been made to say with David, "I am like a pelican of the wilderness, I am like an owl of the desert; I watch, and am as a sparrow alone upon the housetop." Only yesterday, while others were seemingly enjoying Christmas hilarities, I was sorrowful and cast down; and as I sat off upon the steps of a building alone, the language of the poet rushed into my mind,

"Like one alone I seem to be;
O! is there any one like me?"

I repeated them over and over, and as I thought of these things I said, Why is it thus with me? Why can I not enjoy life's pleasures like others? Why am I unlike others? &c. Then would come again,

"Like one alone I seem to be;
O! is there any one like me?"

Finally my mind was directed to this psalm, and I felt impressed to write about it. Is this an experience of grace? Is this the way the Lord leads his people? Can I say with Paul, "God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world?" "Nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me; and the life which I now live in the flesh, I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himself for me." May God's blessing rest upon all his poor and afflicted people.

RIVER VIEW, Ala., Dec. 26, 1894.

NORTH BERWICK, Maine, Dec. 21, 1894.

ELDER W. L. BEEBE—MY DEAR BROTHER IN THE SAVIOR OF SINNERS:—I wish you health of body, and prosperity of soul in the things of the kingdom of God. I have had thoughts of writing you a few lines for months past, being desirous of knowing of your welfare. Life's uneven journey we are treading, with all our steps, ordered by the Lord, shall we not believe that he delighteth in our way, and shall we not also delight in his way? Could we see "the end of the Lord," then all our journey one unending song of rejoicing would spring up from our hearts to the praise and honor of our God. But it is the glory of the Lord to conceal a thing, and thus much of his purposes are hidden from our view; and we often, through the infirmity of our flesh, can only see disaster and shipwreck ahead of us. We see every day new straits attend, and wonder where the scene will end. But the Lord God omnipotent reigneth; and I would believe, yea, I feel I can say that with all my soul's affections I believe, that "all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose." Then even the small affairs of "things that are not" of a worm like we are in the hands of the gracious God, all our life's vicissitude's, are according to the good pleasure of him who sitteth upon the circle of the earth; who saith, "My counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure."

Among the churches I see there is some restlessness in some places upon the doctrine of predestination. Well, all the waves of trouble that break over the beloved Zion of God are numbered. The force with which they come, the affliction and havoc they make, is neither more nor less than what Jehovah himself hath devised. There is a time, which our heavenly Father hath in his own power, when the last wave of trouble shall flow over the church; and then there shall be no more sea, time shall be ended, and every poor sinner redeemed by the precious blood of the Lamb, raised up in the glorified likeness of our glorious Head, the Lord Jesus Christ, shall reign in eternal life by him. Troubles, offenses, heresies, have plagued the dear people of God in times past; it then should not be thought strange if we have some share allotted to us in our day. I feel that word often in my heart, "Take heed unto thyself, and unto the doctrine; continue in them: for in doing this thou shalt both save thyself, and them that hear thee." O for mercy and grace from the Lord to be truly a pastor after his own heart, to feed his people with knowledge and understanding. I would that I might ever be kept lowly, sitting ever at the feet of the Lord; and yet I would be as bold as a lion to proclaim the unsearchable riches of Christ. O that it might please the Lord to give to the household of

SECRET SOCIETIES.

IN the SIGNS, No. 45 of last volume, we printed a letter purporting to be a letter addressed from the Dry Fork Church of Primitive Baptists to the Rock Spring Association, and signed J. W. Fairchild, Moderator, and Wm. Patton, Clerk. As will be seen by reference to the letter, at the end there is a reference to a division. We published the letter because the sentiment contained in it seemed to us in accordance with truth, and also in harmony with the doctrine and order maintained by Old School or Primitive Baptists generally all over our land. Of course, at the time when that letter was published, we knew nothing of the condition of the churches in that association, or in that section of the country, and therefore our only reason for printing the letter was that it seemed to us in accordance with truth.

Since then, however, we have been in receipt of letters from different brethren in that section (Kentucky), showing us that there has been strife and debate there upon the subject treated of in the above named church letter, viz., secret, oath-bound societies. This correspondence is quite voluminous, and it is desired that we should print the several statements in the SIGNS. We desire to always be considerate of the desires and feelings of our brethren. We would not knowingly trample upon the rights of any; but we wish to call attention to a few things, and hope our brethren generally, and especially those now concerned, will bear with us while we do so.

In the first place, would not our brethren who have recently been writing to us upon this trouble in Kentucky themselves feel that it would be hurtful to them to see the SIGNS engaged in publishing the details of troubles that might occur in churches in other sections of the country? When they sit down to read the SIGNS do they not feel that it is far better to find its columns filled with matter that exalts the dear Savior, and that is fitted to comfort and build up his people in all gospel faith and practice? We are sure that this is the case. Are not our brethren in Kentucky hurt and disappointed when they find any of our papers occupied with accounts of bitter controversy? We are sure that this is so also. Now, brethren, remember that as you feel, so do all your brethren all over the land; and we are sure that you yourselves will feel that we should be doing wrong to fill the SIGNS with the details of your controversy. We hope, brethren, that you have a better work to do; and also we hope that the SIGNS has a better mission to fill than to scatter abroad bad news. Let us all ever be found publishing the "good news" instead. We who are engaged in the conduct of the SIGNS cannot claim infallibility of judgment; but we at least desire to ever keep the SIGNS free from the details of strife and debate between brethren. While in the flesh offenses will arise; but surely no good can be subserved by publishing them abroad. To publish the correspondence which we have received would not help the matter any. It would call out rejoinders and rerejoinders, and bitterness would necessarily be increased instead of diminished, while all who read the SIGNS would be put to grief on account of it. We trust that we do sympathize with our brethren in all their trials, and would gladly help them if we could; but it seems to us that to publish the correspondence sent us would injure rather than help. We trust that all our brethren will aid us in the endeavor to keep the SIGNS free from such details of troubles as are named above.

We desire, however, and we think it only right and our duty, to say that our churches and brethren generally, in all the past as well as in the present, have not believed it to be right for christians to unite with secret, oath-bound societies. We will not here stop to present at length the reasons for this, but desire to simply state that the above is the fact. There must, it would seem, be good reasons for a practice which has so universally commended itself to the church of God. This has been the general feeling of the church always; and this of itself ought to have great weight. Christians are pilgrims and strangers in the world; and it is sure that if the full power of this one truth be felt in the heart, it will keep them as far apart from the world as possible. Surely the spirit of christian pilgrimage never did lead any one to unite with such societies. This much at least is true.

We would like in all kindness to further say that it has been impossible for us to understand how a believer in Jesus, and in the words of Jesus, could be willing to go where they are forbidden to use the name of their Savior in calling upon the name of God. Our objection to secret societies has never been so much upon the ground of their secrecy, as upon the ground of the religious rituals connected with them all, so far as we know. Their prayers and thanksgivings, and in brief all their religious forms, are absolutely Christless. The name of the Savior is not once used. It is, in some such societies at least, forbidden to be used. How can a christian pray except as the Lord commands him, in the name of Christ? But every prayer in every such society, that we know anything about, has no mention of the name of Christ. It is, for a true believer, an impossibility to ever think of coming to God except in the name of Christ. To attempt to pray otherwise is rebellion against God. It is a violation of one of his plainest commands. Every time that a child of God joins in a prayer which is not in the name of Christ he is guilty, wittingly or unwittingly, of rejecting Christ. Every time that a child of God attends a meeting of any secret society or other society where there is a prayer offered without the name of Christ, he is guilty of rejecting Christ. How can a christian go where he is forbidden to carry his Savior? How can a christian unite with any society in which there is no room for Christ? Better lie down in the manger with him, than inhabit the palace of a Herod without him. If any of our brethren are united to some such Christless society because they have not before considered the matter in this light, we urge them to do so at once. Do not any longer frequent the inn which has no room for him who is your all.

MELCHISEDEC.

BROTHER J. R. Betts, of Personville, Texas, has requested our views upon the Scripture recorded in Hebrews vii. 1–3.

This Scripture refers to Melchisedec, who is there presented in his priesthood as a type of the priesthood of our Lord Jesus Christ; and we have long felt that the things presented by the apostle in this Scripture were wonderful and glorious, and fraught with lasting consolation to the people of God.

We do not think it needful, however, to write at the present time concerning this subject, because in the SIGNS, No. 48 of last volume, printed in November, is copied an editorial of Elder Gilbert Beebe, written many years ago, upon the same subject, which we cordially approve, and which seems to us better than anything that we could write. We would refer our brother to that number of the SIGNS, and feel sure that he will be fully satisfied when he reads that editorial.

It may be admissible, however, for us to call attention in a few words to one additional consideration concerning this wonderful man Melchisedec. In the narrative recorded in Genesis xiv., from the seventeenth verse to the end of the chapter, there is a striking contrast brought out between Bera, king of Sodom, and Melchisedec, king of Salem. Bera means "Son of evil," while Melchisedec means "King of righteousness." Sodom, over which Bera was king, means "burning, conflagration;" while Salem, over which Melchisedec was king, means "peace." Thus there is a contrast brought out in the very names of these kings, and in the names of the places where each one reigned. The one represents the powers of evil, and the ruler of the darkness of this world, just as certainly as the other is a type of the Prince of Peace, who rules in the kingdom of light.

The narrative also bears out this contrast, just as certainly as do the names of these kings. When Abraham returned from the slaughter of the kings, the king of Sodom went out to meet him, and he proposed to Abraham a division of the spoil which he had brought back from the victory; but Abraham declares that he has sworn before God that he will not take a thing of the king of Sodom, not even from a thread to a shoelatchet, lest the king of Sodom should say, "I have made Abraham rich." Abraham will not owe anything to him, will not receive anything at his hands, will not give him any room to boast. How plainly does Abraham here set forth the truth that none who are of the faith of Abraham can ever receive aid from the powers of this world, and will never ascribe their blessings to that which is of the world. The salvation of the people of God, the children of faith, either for time or for eternity, does not at all depend upon the riches, learning or power of this world.

On the other hand, Abraham received bread and wine and blessing from Melchisedec, and gladly gave him tithes of all. He will have nothing to do with the king of Sodom, either in giving or receiving; but he enters at once into the closest intimacy with Melchisedec. He is ready to give all to him, and to receive all from him. The faith of the believer is strikingly set forth here. It ascribes all to Christ, even as it receives all from Christ.

It seems to us that this, in brief, is the lesson taught us in this inspired narrative. It opens up a wide field, but into this we forbear to enter.

PLEASE BE SURE

IN sending remittances for renewals of subscriptions to give us the same name that the paper is already coming to. If the party is married, and the paper is coming to the wife's name, and we receive a remittance to renew the subscription, and the husband's name is given, we have no means of knowing that it is meant for the subscription in the wife's name; consequently the husband's name is entered on our list, and the paper sent to both parties. Or if the paper is coming in the husband's name, and the renewal is sent in the wife's name, the same thing is likely to occur. It is a good plan to inclose in the letter one of the little pink slips containing the name, taken either from the margin of the paper or from the wrapper in which the paper comes.

DIFFERENCE BETWEEN OLD AND NEW SCHOOL BAPTISTS.

NUMBER SIX.

ON the subject of Predestination, as on other points embraced in the gospel, the new order of Baptists differ very widely among themselves; and it would give us pleasure to be able to say that the Old School were perfectly harmonious. Unhappily there is some discrepancy in the views entertained even by them, or at least in their manner of expressing their views on this branch of the christian doctrine. With some exceptions, the Old School Baptists believe that the whole government of God is administered, and all the works of God in creation, providence and grace, are executed in strict accordance with the determinate counsel and predestination of God. One of the oldest of our sect affirmed by inspiration that God "worketh all things after the counsel of his own will;" and all consistent Old School Baptists subscribe to and rejoice in the affirmation. It is hard for them to conceive how God could declare the end of all things from the beginning, if he did not know from the beginning what the end of all things would be; or how he could know from the beginning what the end of all things would be, or how he could know from the beginning the history and result of all things, if he did not possess that knowledge independently of himself; or how that knowledge could be independent and of himself, if it did not rest upon his own sovereign decision. If all the events in the history and destiny of this world were naked and open to the omniscient eye of God before all time, it could not at the same time be an undecided question with him whether such events should or should not transpire. And if it depended on the decision of God whether the world with all its contents, causes, effects, &c., should exist, that decision by which it was made certain that they should exist, in all their order, variety, connection and circumstances, is what we call Predestination. In the absence of such Predestination, the existence of the world and all the events of time are but the things of chance; and the government of God, so far as relates to them, is but a name for nothing. There can be no medium between skepticism and belief in the predestination of all things. The skeptic renounces divine revelation and denies a supernatural or divine government over the events of time: all events, with him, are fortuitous and result from chance; and to the same conclusion all must be driven who deny the absolute government of the supreme God over all beings, all events and all worlds. If the falling to the ground of one hair of our heads could result from chance, then so might the fall of a sparrow, worth "half a farthing;" and if so, precisely the same of an empire or a world. But God has informed us that his government extends to the flight of sparrows, and to the numbering, preservation and destiny of every hair of our heads. While Old School Baptists, as a general thing, believe what God has revealed in his word on the subject, the New School as generally revile them as hyper Calvinists, antinomians, fatalists, &c., and charge them with making God the author of sin.

Some of the New School will admit that God has predestinated some things, while many others of the same school deny the doctrine alto gether. Those among them who profess to believe the doctrine, so define their views as virtually to deny it. For example, they say that all things which are in themselves good, and all the good actions of men, were predetermined or predestinated of God; but none of the wicked deeds of men or devils were provided for in the predetermination of God. The case of Joseph and his brethren is in point. According to their theory, God predestinated that Joseph should go down to Egypt, but not that his brethren should sell him to the Ishmaelites; that he should have a home in Potiphar's house, but not that he should encounter the wickedness of his mistress; that he should interpret the dreams of his fellow prisoners, but not that he should be thrown into prison; that there should be seven years of plenty, but not that there should be seven years of famine; because, say they, if God has of "the same lump of clay made some vessels to honor and others to dishonor;" if some were "before of old ordained to this condemnation;" if before Jacob and Esau were born, or had done either good or evil, God loved the one and hated the other; if some of the human family as brute beasts were made to be taken and destroyed, while others were from the beginning chosen to salvation, through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth, then God is the author of sin, and men are mere machines, not to blame for their wicked actions. That God spared not his only Son, but delivered him up to die for the redemption of sinners, according to an eternal predetermination, they will admit; but that there should certainly be sinners to be saved, they deny. They cannot believe that Pilate and Herod, the men of Israel and the Gentiles, came together to do what God's hand and counsel had before determined should be done; nor that he was delivered up by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God to be put to death with wicked hands. Predestination, according to their creed, may have provided a great fish to ferry Jonah to the shore, but the necessity for such a miraculous conveyance was accidental; that God created the smith that bloweth the coals, but not the waster to destroy. There are others of the New School who admit that predestination is truly a Bible doctrine, but say that it ought not to be preached; that it is calculated to reflect on the divine character, conflict with the efforts of men for the salvation of sinners, and paralyze the arms of such as would steady the ark of the Lord. So great is the difference between the two parties on the subject that it is as impossible to be a New School Baptist and a consistent Bible Predestinarian at the same time, as it is to be a regular Old School Baptist and not love and feed upon the doctrine.

Predestination has been a rock of offense and a stone of stumbling to the enemies of God and truth from the morning of the creation; from the days of Cain to the present day, men and devils have maintained an incessant war against it; but they have not prevailed, nor can they prevail. But why do the heathen rage? Why do the enemies of truth imagine vain things against the truth, or against the God of truth? Is it not because they hate the government of God, and choose to hold the government in their own hands?

In what we have written on this subject we do not hold all whom we recognize as Old School Baptist brethren responsible. As we have hinted, there is not as perfect unanimity among us on this subject as could be desired; but all, so far as our knowledge of them extends (which is very extensive), glory in the doctrine so far as it has been opened to their understanding by that Spirit of truth whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him. We have not labored to bring the doctrine down to the comprehension of Arminians of the Baptist, or of any other order, nor to so modify or remove from it the offense of the cross as to make carnal men love it. We certainly should never have rejoiced in the understanding of it if God had not by his power subdued the native enmity of our heart, and shed his love abroad in us. We therefore are not permitted to rejoice that it subjects devils to us through our Redeemer's name, but rather that it has inscribed our names in heaven.

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE.

TO MOST of our readers the above mentioned book is too well known to need any introduction or a description by us. While many of the Bibles have a Concordance appended, they are generally so condensed or abridged as to be of little or no use. Cruden's Complete Concordance, however, enables one to readily turn to any passage of Scripture of which they can call to mind two or three words, and in our opinion is the most complete and convenient as a reference book of any published. In addition, it contains many other aids in studying the Bible, as may be seen by reference to advertisement on last page. Remember, both the books there mentioned are CRUDEN'S COMPLETE.

BACK NUMBERS.

WE continue to print for the first few numbers of this volume several hundred extra copies, and all new subscribers received, as well as old ones whose names are re-entered on our list, will be sent back numbers as long as the supply lasts.

ALL BIBLES SENT AT OUR EXPENSE.

ON our last page will be found an advertisement of some of the sizes, styles and prices at which we can furnish Bibles. The vast variety of sizes and combinations compiled in Bibles is too great to all be given in our space.

The smaller Bibles mentioned in the advertisement are the ones most in demand, and these we will mail postage paid on receipt of price. The larger or Family Bibles, being too large and heavy to go safely by mail, will be sent by express at our expense. We are prepared to furnish most any size, style or priced Bible. If you do not find what you wish in our list published, write us a description of what you would like to have and we will send you the price.

POSTAL MONEY ORDERS.

BY a recent arrangement of the post-office department nearly every post-office in the United States is now a money order office for at least five dollars; and as it costs but three cents additional to obtain an order of not more than two dollars and fifty cents, or five cents for one not more than five dollars, or eight cents for one not more than ten dollars, and so on in proportion to amount of order, we request that all remittances be sent us by post-office money-order. You simply give the money you wish to send to your postmaster, and he will give you a money-order for that amount. You will inclose the order which he gives you in your letter to us; and if it should be lost in the mail you can get another one from your postmaster without additional charge. Please be sure to have the order made payable at Middletown, N. Y., and never at New York City, as that place is nearly a hundred miles from our place, and it puts us to considerable extra trouble and expense to get them cashed at the New York City office.

As will be seen from the above, an order for five dollars or less can be obtained cheaper than registering a letter, while an order not exceeding ten dollars costs but the same amount; and remitting by money order is a much safer way than sending by registered letter, as the postal department is not responsible for loss of registered letters, but money orders can be duplicated.

faith faithful stewards of the mysteries of God.

The Lord reigneth! all shall end well. "For whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son, that he might be the first-born among many brethren. Moreover, whom he did predestinate, them he also called; and whom he called, them he also justified; and whom he justified, them he also glorified. What shall we then say to these things? If God be for us, who can be against us?" Ah, Satan, our sins, trials and chastenings may open their mouth against us, they may hiss and gnash with the teeth, and say, "We have swallowed them up: certainly this is the day that we looked for; we have found, we have seen it." But our comfort, dear brother, is that "the Lord hath done that which he had devised; he hath fulfilled his word that he had commanded in the days of old: he hath thrown down, and hath not pitied: and he hath caused thine enemy to rejoice over thee, he hath set up the horn of thine adversaries. Their heart cried unto the Lord."—Lam. ii. 16–18. All our joys and griefs are bounded by the will of our God. All our times shall ever be ordered by his wise decree. "My times are in thy hand," said the sweet singer in Israel; and this precious doctrine is full of heavenly consolation to the believer. I know from experience that it is one thing to give our assent to this doctrine because it is so recorded in the Bible, and altogether another thing to believe it with all the heart. The very enemies of the Lord, and haters of salvation by the grace of God, when things fall out to them to their liking, can in their hypocrisies exclaim, "How providential!" But when the hand of God hands out to us evil, when to prove us, to chasten us, to glorify his name in us, and bring to confusion and nothing all our foes, he gives us to drink of the wine of astonishment, and layeth us in the deeps, even then his hand doth lead us, and his own right hand shall hold us.—Psalm cxxxix. My soul's affections embrace this truth, and it has more than once when in adversities been my stay; and the Holy Spirit, the Comforter, has ministered to my soul sweet, refreshing consolations, in enabling me to believe that our God "worketh all things after the counsel of his own will." But the most astonishing thing that I know of under the heavens is that the Prince of life came into the world to suffer, bleed and die for my sins, and rose again for the justification of such a vile sinner before the throne of Jehovah! I often contemplate the eternal election of the church, and of the eternal provisions made by Jehovah, the Father, Word and Holy Ghost, for his people. I muse upon the love and mercy and grace of the glorious God toward his elect; but while my heart is at times filled with rapture, and glows with adoration of the Holy One of Israel, yet it appears as though it must be a presumptuous delusion for me to believe that I am numbered among the favorites of the Most High. How dare I think that I am a member of the body of Christ? Is it so that I am a member of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones? Well, my dear brother, carnal religionists talk about it being such an easy matter for sinners to believe themselves the loved and redeemed ones of God; but I confess that as regards myself I am a vile, ungrateful worm, and year by year I grow no better. I feel that I become more vile; that it is only by the working of the mighty power of God that I can believe that God loves me. Is it not a wonder of wonders that I should be enabled by the Holy Spirit to sing, "He loved me, and gave himself for me?"—Gal. ii. 20.

As I am made to remember all the way the Lord our God hath led me to the present time, surely his goodness and mercy have followed me. I am daily the recipient of his lo[illegible]ingkindness, and yet continue vil[illegible] If the Lord dealt with us after our sins, and rewarded us according to our transgressions, then I had never known the light of his countenance, but his everlasting frown had been my portion. But the elect are saved, and called with an holy calling, not according to their works, but according to Jehovah's own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began. This doctrine of God is the only doctrine that will suit my case. I am a poor, worthless worm; my fleshly heart is deceitful above all things and desperately wicked. I were indeed a wretch undone without God's sovereign grace. To him every mercy I owe above what the fiends have in hell. O that I could love and bless the name of the Lord for his kindness to me!

"His loveliness has won my heart;
Dear Savior, let us never part;
I'll sound thy lovely name abroad,
My altogether lovely Lord."

Amidst all the corruptions and sinfulness of my life which make me say, "I loathe it; I would not live alway!" (Job. vii. 16) there is an invisible and gracious power in my soul, causing me to yearn after the living God, to hunger after his truth, and to love and delight in that unfathomable and eternally glorious mystery of Jesus Christ and him crucified. Here our hope for salvation centers. Such miserable wretches as we are need the atoning blood of the Lamb.

"Then let us sit beneath his cross,
And gladly catch the healing stream;
All things for him account but loss,
And give up all our hearts to him.
Immanuel for me hath died!
My Lord, my love, is crucified!"

But I will not burden you with my writing. I am thankful to say we are all in health. As a church in these parts we are in peace and sweet fellowship in the gospel, which you may know is a comfort to my heart. With love to you and to all your family that are with you, I am, I hope, your brother in Christ Jesus,

FRED. W. KEENE.

NINETY AND NINE.

"THERE were ninety and nine that safely lay
In the shelter of the fold;
But one had wandered to the hills away,
Far off from the gates of gold."

I have before me the SIGNS of Dec. 19th, in which I have read the article so ably penned by our beloved brother Chick, on the beautiful parable of the lost sheep; and while I heartily indorse our dear brother's views, which he has so ably and beautifully written, with a feeling of brotherly love for him and all of like precious faith I feel like writing a few lines upon the same beautiful subject; not that I shall try to add one word to what our dear brother has written, but a few thoughts that have just come to me in contemplation of the subject. I have in my mind a little flock of the Lord's sheep, containing one hundred sons and daughters of Adam's race, redeemed by grace. From time to time they meet in solemn assembly, in sweet harmony and fellowship, and as with one voice sing the praise of Zion's King. After a time one wanders away into paths of vice. The ninety and nine begin to sorrow. The once happy little family has cause of grief. They talk to the erring one, but he still goes on. They pray for him, but he still goes on, heedless of their admonitions and prayers. They may be ready to give him up in despair. With the very depth of sorrow and humiliation in their hearts they begin to say within themselves, "We shall have to exclude him from our fellowship." What else can they do? They desire peace and harmony in Zion, but here is one who has gone beyond their reach; they cannot restore such an one. "What shall we do?" they cry; "it is like tearing the flesh from our bones; but our peace is destroyed; we shall have to do something." One more effort is made, without the desired effect. All the time the faithful ninety and nine have met from time to time, and each one has told over and again how unfruitful he or she feels themselves to be; how cold, how lifeless, how barren, how unfit to enjoy the confidence and sweet communion and fellowship of the brethren. Each of the other ninety-eight have been a unit in their feelings of love and fellowship for that one who has thus complained of his or her unworthiness, saying within themselves, "That is a heaven-born soul; the marks of grace are so plainly written there. O! if I could only talk as that one talks; if I could have just such an experience of grace." As time goes on, and they speak often one to another, each of the other ninety-eight have the same feelings for the one who thus speaks of his many short coming. But all the while none of them have been seen wandering in the paths of vice; all is peace and harmony, so far as they are concerned. What a happy little family! how they joy each other to meet, to sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus, and tell of his wonderous love to wretched, dying men. All the ninety and nine are walking the King's highway, and none but the ransomed of the Lord shall walk there. But there is still disorder in the family; one of their dear brethren is away from home, yea, in a strange land, perhaps trying to feed himself on the husks that the swine do eat. O! what can we do for him? O! where is he?

"Out on the mountains rough and steep;
I go to the desert to find my sheep."

He has wandered back into the desert of sin. But One who is mighty has left the ninety and nine safely in the shelter of the fold, kept by his own strong arm, with salvation's walls surrounded. He has gone in search of the wandering sheep, has touched his hard and stony heart, and he is melted down as nothing else under heaven could have done. With true and heartfelt sorrow, yea, godly sorrow, such as he could receive only from God, filled once more almost to overflowing with love for those whom he has wronged, feeling that he has sinned against heaven, now with true repentance he is being led back to the fold. He finds the ninety and nine once more in solemn assembly. O what a heavenly place! The house seems full of the glorious presence of him who filleth all in all. He is humbled by the mighty hand of God; he falls at the feet of the brethren; he acknowledges his faults, and pleads with them, that as God for Christ's sake has forgiven him, that they also forgive him. O what joy in heaven, the gospel kingdom. Was there ever such a day? The great Shepherd of the sheep has brought the wanderer home. There is more celestlal joy on that occasion than there was on any former occasion, when the ninety and nine (that went not astray, and had no need of such repentance) did meet and tell of their joys and sorrows; though that was a heaven below, their Redeemer to know. But here is a greater display (if possible) of the everlasting love of God, something they have never seen before. Surely none is able to pluck them out of the Father's hand. The Father is indeed greater than all, and none can pluck them out of his hands. "Fear not, little flock; it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom."

I hope our dear brother Chick, as well as all who have read his precious letter, will pardon the liberty I take in penning these few scattered thoughts, as I assure you I do not in the least wish to cross his view, which has direct bearing upon the parable. It is now three o'clock, Christmas morning. I was awakened about midnight, and these thoughts occurred to my mind. I could not sleep, so I got up to write. May the Lord bless his people everywhere in this unfriendly world. Brethren, if there is anything in the Scriptures, or in our experience, to encourage you to publish the above, do so; if not, cast it aside as a worthless thing, like the writer.

In much distress of mind,

J. A. GRAFTON.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

DIED—At the family residence in Kent Co., Md., Dec. 14th, Mrs. Kate Roe, wife of Mr. Bedford Roe, and daughter of brother Peter Meredith, lately deceased.

Mrs. Roe had been gradually declining for about three years. The strokes of affliction which have fallen upon that family have been heavy and oft repeated. Mrs. Roe leaves a recently widowed mother and a bereaved husband, with the care of a large family of children, to mourn an irreparable loss. She gave evidence in her childhood of an experience of grace, which was confirmed through all her after life. She left the world in the enjoyment of a blessed hope, aged about forty-six years.

The apostle teaches that what we see is only in part, and what we know is only in part, but that there is a part now veiled from our sight yet to be revealed. What wisdom, beauty and grace there must be within that veil, the revealing of which will perfect everything that now so much distresses us, and that comes as sore afflictions, and present them in infinite harmony and perfection, and as holy, just and good.

E. RITTENHOUSE.

DIED—Near Mt. Calm, Hill Co., Texas, Dec. 7th, 1894, of pneumonia, sister R. P. Broom.

Sister Perthena was born in Henry Co., Tenn., Sept. 23d, 1831, her maiden name being Dollahite. She was married to I. F. Findley on June 17th, 1849, in Harrison Co., Texas. They moved to Rusk Co., Texas, and she was received into the Old School Baptist Church at Union. She lived a consistent member until her death. They moved to Panola Co., Texas, where she was left a widow. She then married I. Broom, who died a little more than one year ago.

Her remains were brought back to Rusk County, and laid beside her husband's in Harmony Hill Cemetery. She leaves eight children, five sisters, two brothers and many friends to mourn her death; but our loss is her eternal gain.

M. A. W.

Mr. James Dolloway died at his home near Fair Oaks, Orange Co., N. Y., Oct. 12th, 1894, in the 80th year of his age.

He was not a member of the Old School Baptist Church, but was a warm friend, and held in high esteem by those who were acquainted with him. His companion, who was also a firm friend of the Old Baptists, died on Jan. 24th, 1890. Two sons and one daughter survive them.

The funeral services were held at the family residence on Monday, Oct. 15th, and were conducted by Elder Benton Jenkins, in the presence of a large number of relatives and friends; after which the mortal remains of the beloved father and friend were deposited in the cemetery of the New Vernon Church, by the side of the faithful companion who had preceded him to "the house appointed for all living."

"My faith shall triumph o'er the grave,
And trample on the tomb;
My Savior, my Redeemer, lives,
My God, my Savior, comes."

G. BEEBE'S SON:—Please notice in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES the death of sister Maria Lane Longyear, which occurred Dec. 28th, 1894, at her home in Gilbertsville, N. Y.

The deceased was born in Ulster Co., N. Y., May 10th, 1810, being 83 years, 9 months and 18 days old. She came to Otego, I think, some time in the fifties, and was baptized by Elder A. St. John, in the fellowship of the Otego Old School Baptist Church, where she retained her membership until she was called home. Her home was with her daughter and son-in-law, Mr. Nelson Marsh, whose gentle and kind care to her in the years of her feeble health speaks loudly in their praise. We are at this writing glad to say that she led a life of faith, and also died in that faith, without a stain upon her christian character. One more truly godly is rarely found. Her whole affection was upon the church; and though living at quite a distance from us, she would be present until her failing health and strength forbade. Grace taught her to loathe self and sin, and to greatly love the Lord for his marvelous love to her. May reconciling grace be given the afflicted friends to say, "Thy will be done."

B. BUNDY.

OTEGO, N. Y., Jan. 11, 1895.

DIED—At the residence of her son George, near New Vernon, Orange Co., N. Y., on Monday evening, Jan. 7th, 1895, of pneumonia, Mrs. Mary E. Sayer, in her 67th year.

Mrs. Sayer was a daughter of Joseph Harding, who died many years ago. She was married to Wm. H. Sayer on Sept. 19th, 1846, who died Feb. 4th, 1892. She is survived by four sons, an only daughter having died about twenty years ago.

Mrs. Sayer had never made a public profession of her faith in Christ, but had confessed to some of her friends many years ago that she had a hope in the Savior of sinners. For very many years she attended the meetings of the church at New Vernon, where she was held in high esteem.

Funeral services were conducted by Elder Benton Jenkins on the 10th, and the mortal body was laid away in the cemetery of the New Vernon Church.

"Asleep in Jesus! O how sweet
To be for such a slumber meet!
With holy confidence to sing
That death has lost its cruel sting."

Margaret Redmon Ashbrook was born near Gratiot, Muskingum Co., Ohio, July 9th, 1819, and was united in marriage to Edward P. Ashbrook Nov. 18th, 1839. To them were born six children, two having preceded her. Four were present at her funeral, three sons and one daughter. Her age was 75 years, 5 months and 25 days. She leaves to regret their loss an aged husband (much afflicted), three sons, one daughter, eleven grandchildren, one brother and one sister.

Mrs. Ashbrook was not a professor of religion, but through a long life of usefulness she gave every evidence of being a possessor of that religion which is from above, and is pure and undefiled. She was an affectionate wife, a devoted mother, a very kind, loving neighbor, dearly beloved by all whose favor it was to associate with her. She was a patient sufferer for three years. Often when suffering intensely she could be heard pleading with the good Master to bring the rest beyond. Shortly before her last she appealed to her family kindly not to grieve for her, for it was well with her.

Her funeral was largely attended on the 6th of January, and the writer tried to speak words of comfort to those present; after which she was laid in the burying-ground of Turkey Run, to await the resurrection of the just.

G. N. TUSING.

Levi K. Martin died Dec. 23d, 1894, near Buchanan, Henry Co., Tenn.

He was born in Guilford Co., N. C., Oct. 19th, 1815, and came to Henry County in 1841. He was just twenty-six years old when he bought the farm on which he lived, raised his family and died. In 1844 he joined the Primitive Baptists, and in 1845 went back to North Carolina, and was married to Nancy C. Lemonds, his wife returning with him to this then wilderness country.

Brother Martin was a devoted christian in every sense of the word, a peacemaker in trouble, and a wise counselor in discipline. Although he was neither a minister nor Deacon, yet he was often sought by ministers for counsel and views of Scripture. His ideas of Scripture were bright and full of instruction. He believed that God's purpose, will, election and predestination embrace all things, past, present and future, whether for weal or woe, and that all things work together for good to them that love God. He was faithful in the discharge of every known duty. His place can never be filled here again. In his death the Hephzibah Church has lost one of its pillars and best counselors, the community a good neighbor and friend, the county one of its best and most substantial citizens; but above all his aged wife has lost a most devoted companion, and his children a most affectionate father. He leaves his aged wife, three sons and two daughters, besides grandchildren and other relatives, to mourn their loss, which we hope is his eternal gain. His wife and daughters are members of the Primitive Baptist Church. The writer married his youngest daughter.

Weep not, wife and children, but let us try to live as he did, and may we be as ready to meet death as he was.

"Asleep in Jesus! blessed sleep!
From which none ever wake to weep."

P. P. PULLEN.

BUCHANAN, Tenn.

Benny Lacy, the youngest child of I. B. and sister Levy Lacy, departed this life on Sunday night, Nov. 25th, 1894, near Bloomfield, Loudoun Co., Va.

His death was caused by a horse becoming frightened, upsetting the wagon, throwing him out on his head, on the evening before. When picked up and carried home he was conscious for a short time; then he became very restless, until shortly before his death, when he raised up and lay across his mother's arms, and passed quietly away as one falling asleep. Benny was about eleven years of age, a bright boy, loved by old and young, a favorite with his schoolmates. Being the youngest boy, he was the pet of the family, yet he was not spoiled; very affectionate to his parents, and kind to every one.

This sad and unexpected death almost broke the hearts of our dear sister and her husband, and the brothers and sisters of little Benny. Brother Thomas tried to speak words of comfort to the bereaved family and a large company of sorrowing friends and relatives from the twenty-third Psalm. As the unworthy writer stood by the speaker, looking down on the smiling face, cold in death, I felt that Jesus loved Benny more than we did. He looked as though he had shut his eyes, and was going to open them and tell something pleasing. It seemed that God had left that smile on his face as a comfort to his heart-broken parents, and evidence to our dear sister his love and mercy to her. How hard the thing is to the flesh, and of ourselves we cannot reconcile this sad, sad dispensation, and say, "Thy will be done;" but when Jesus comes with his holy Spirit, and fills our hearts with love, then can we say, "Thy will be done, not ours."

Lovely boy, how brief thy stay!
Short and hasty was thy day;
Ending soon thy journey here,
Pain and grief no more to bear.

Hard it is from thee to part,
For it rends the aching heart;
But an heir of glory's gone,
Let the will of God be done.

ORDINATIONS.

AT the request of the Regular Old School Baptist Church of Jesus Christ called Rock Creek, in Hancock Co., Ill., the following named Elders (R. Harris and L. E. Frazee) and Deacons Solomon Harris, F. M. Burnett, Wiley Jones, B. F. Tucker and Wm. Riley met with the church on Saturday before the third Sunday in December, 1894, for the purpose of ordaining brother W. F. HARRIS to the full work of the gospel ministry, and brother N. W. MURPHY to the office of Deacon.

The presbytery organized by choosing Elder L. E. Frazee Moderator, and A. J. Harris Clerk.

After inquiring of the church as to the moral character and scriptural qualifications of the candidates, brother W. F. Harris related his christian experience and call to the ministry, which being satisfactory, Elder R. Harris made the ordination prayer.

Laying on of hands by the presbytery.

Elder L. E. Frazee delivered the charge.

Elder W. F. Harris was then chosen to a seat in the presbytery.

Brother N. W. Murphy was then ordained to the office of Deacon.

Prayer by Elder L. E. Frazee.

Laying on of hands by the presbytery.

Charge by Elder W. F. Harris.

After which, while singing a song of Zion, the right hand of fellowship was extended to the newly ordained brethren.

PICTORIAL HISTORY

OF THE

UNITED STATES.

By James D. McCabe.

This work has taken rank as the Standard History of the United States. It is no dry mass of details—no bombastic effort to inflame the national pride, but a clear, vivid and brilliant narrative of the events of our history, from the discovery of the American Continent down to the present time. It gives a most interesting account of the Indians of North America, from the time of the coming of the white men. The voyages of Columbus and the explorations and discoveries of the different nations of Europe are related with graphic power. Every step of our colonial history is traced with patient fidelity, and the sources of those noble and, we trust, enduring institutions, which have made our country free and great, are shown with remarkable clearness. Then follows a clear and succinct account of our great Struggle for Independence, and the establishment of the Federal Union—the events of our career from the close of the Revolution to the administration of Harrison.

The work is printed from plain, new type, on fine calendered paper, and comprised in one octavo volume of 960 pages. It is splendidly embellished with nearly 500 fine engravings, embracing battles and other historical scenes, portraits of distinguished men, views of our principal cities, &c., &c.

Bound in Fine Silk Cloth, Plain Edges, $2.00, Post-paid.

CORRESPONDENCE.

GHENT, Ky., Oct. 10, 1894.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS OF THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES:—The loving apostle John says, "God is love."—1 John iv. 8. This great and wonderful truth recorded by that inspired apostle of the Lamb fills the hearts of the redeemed sons and daughters of the Lord Most High with the purest emotions of love, praise and thanksgiving, when they are in the sweet exercise of an ever precious faith. It is then they love God, because he first loved them. While in the downward road that leads to ruin, hatred, variance, malice and unbelief have been your constant companions, and the fear of God was not before your faces. Then the love of God and the love of his dear saints was absent. Then the fading glories of this world were your chief treasures. But when God shined in your hearts and gave you the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ, the great truth that God is love came sweetly home to you and took up its abiding place in your heart. Then you were made to say with the loving apostle, "Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God." Then a complete transition took place with you. Then the world knew you not, because it knew him not. The world knew him not, because the world by wisdom knoweth not God. You were as ignorant of God while in nature's night as any others of Adam's apostate race. Then the fear of God was not before your face, because you knew not God. But when you were led by the power of the Holy Ghost, made spiritually alive, and fitted for the sweet society of the just made perfect, then, and not until then, did you know him, whom to know is life eternal. Then you were made to rejoice, not in the power and wisdom of vain man, but in the love of God, and to know that God is love; to fondly hope and trust that he loved you with an everlasting love, and with loving-kindness had drawn you to him. As you advanced along that peaceful and happy road in sweet meditation you remembered that love must be reciprocal if it is of value to us, and that God manifested that love for you which you now by grace divine are enabled to reciprocate, in the gift of his dear Son, who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works. But how often, dear followers of Jesus, are you made to fear that you are not zealous of good works. Yea, how often in the dark hours of night are you made to mourn the absence of your dearly Beloved, and to weep over the presence and reigning power of sin in your mortal body. Then in darkness, gloom and deep sorrow you cry out with the psalmist, "I call to remembrance my song in the night. Will the Lord cast off forever? Will he be favorable no more? Is his mercy clean gone forever? Doth his promise fail for evermore? Hath God forgotten to be gracious? Hath he in anger shut up his tender mercies? Selah." Ah, dear little ones, it is then the sweet and precious power of prayer is made yours by a loving Lord. It is then you pour out your heart and soul in deep and fervent supplication to your God to be a present help to you in this your time of trouble. You do not then need that any, though high they may be, shall set apart a day by solemn proclamation for you to give thanks and pray. O no! God in his love has by grace led you to see and know your helpless condition, and to know that without him you can do nothing. He has led you in a way you had not known, and in paths you had not seen. But all his leadings have been in love; that love which was his ere time began. When you are in that darkness and gloom, and made to cry out with David, "Make haste, O God, to deliver me; make haste to help me, O Lord," you should remember that he worketh in you to will and to do of his good pleasure. You could never have been able to offer to the Lord the prayer of the true penitent if you had not been made to know the sinfulness of sin. So long as you were relying on your own works you were looking to yourself; you did not diligently seek the Lord; you did not have that faith which works by love. Your faith and confidence were in yourself; therefore you did not have the faith which is the gift of God, and which purifies the heart. All your sorrows on account of sin were given to you in love, that you might hate sin in its horrid deformity, and love holiness. You then loved holiness because your glorious Lord is holy, and your chief desire now is to follow him whithersoever he goeth. You know it is declared that he is exalted to give repentance and remission of sins to Israel. Then by faith you are made to trust and hope that you are part of that great class, that great army that follow him, called spiritual Israel. You then are by grace turned from the vanities of earth, and look through a glass darkly, and behold with heavenly delight the beauties and glories that shine forth in the character of your adored Redeemer. In that character you see, as though written in letters of living light, him who is love. Then you are made to know that he is infinite in all his wonderous attributes; that he has all power, both in heaven and earth, and that his love for his chosen people had no beginning, and will have no end. Then you rejoice that he hath said, "I am God, I change not: therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed." You realize and know that you in your earthly nature are Jacob, a supplanter; but you fondly hope and trust that your name has been changed from Jacob, a supplanter, to Israel, one who prevails with God. Jacob's name was not changed because of his good works, or because of any merit in him. O no! The angel with whom he wrestled changed his name, and said, "Thy name shall be called no more Jacob, but Israel; for as a prince hast thou power with God and with men, and hast prevailed." That power was the gift of God. The apostle said to the church at Colosse, "Strengthened with all might, according to his glorious power." He strengthened Jacob according to his power; and he strengthens you, dear saint, according to his mighty power; and because he is love, and has loved you with an everlasting love, he has changed your name from a supplanter to one that prevails with God. He is not only infinite in power, but he is also infinite in wisdom. He declared the end from the beginning, saying, "My counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure." "The pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hands." The pleasure of the Lord was the redemption of his chosen people. "In his love and in his pity he redeemed them; and he bare them and carried them all the days of old." His love and his faithfulness toward them is from everlasting to everlasting. The psalmist says, "Forever, O Lord, thy word is settled in heaven. Thy faithfulness is unto all generations." The wise king of Israel said, "Wisdom hath builded her house; she hath hewn out her seven pillars." These are the divine perfections of Jehovah, and one of these is love; therefore the apostle could appropriately say, "God is love." That love had an object on which it rested ere time began, and that object was those addressed by an inspired apostle in these words, "Elect according to the foreknowledge of God the Father, through sanctification of the Spirit unto obedience and sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ. Grace unto you, and peace be multiplied." They were sanctified by God the Father, preserved in Jesus Christ, and called; called with a holy calling, not according to their works, but according to God's own purpose and grace, which was given them in Christ Jesus before the world began. Then surely wisdom, associated with love, hath hewn out her seven pillars, and they underlie, sustain and uphold his church, his chosen people. Then let cares, sorrows and afflictions come to them; they are all sent of their Lord in mercy, and work for them a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. Ah, dear little ones, what are all the afflictions and sorrows of time, when compared with that eternal weight of glory that awaits you, which is unalterably secured to you by that God who is love? O let your thoughts and meditations rest on him who is love, and go with this poor, feeble one in sweet meditation upon his mighty works, all wrought out in love for you. Remember, O remember, that your glorious Lord laid aside the glory he had with the Father before the world was, became a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief, and shed his precious blood on Calvary's cross, that he in love and pity might bring in everlasting righteousness and redemption for you, who had sold yourselves for naught; all because he was love, and had loved you with an everlasting love. Remember he was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities, the chastisement of our peace was upon him, and with his stripes we are healed. Yes, remember that "All we like sheep have gone astray, we have turned every one to his own way, and the Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all." The wise king of Israel said, "There is a way that seemeth right unto a man; but the end thereof are the ways of death." In love for you, dear saints, he suffered as declared by the prophet, that he might redeem you from your own ways, which are the ways of death. "By his stripes we are healed." He arose from the tomb with healing in his wings. In love he triumphed over death and the grave, and secured to you everlasting redemption from all your enemies. The last enemy was death. All else had been overcome by his suffering and death; but on the great and glorious morning of the resurrection your last enemy, which is death, will be conquered; for you will come forth from your long resting place in the likeness of him who is your resurrection and your life. He said, "I am he that liveth, and was dead; and behold, I am alive for evermore." In that great and glorious day you will be like your glorious Lord, alive for evermore. While here below the cares and sorrows of earth are yours; but when you are thirsting for righteousness you have in love given to you the river of God's redeeming love from which to slake your thirst. For your comfort the sacred penman hath said to you, "There is a river the streams thereof shall make glad the city of God, the holy place of the tabernacles of the Most High. God is in the midst of her, she shall not be moved; God shall help her, and that right early." Then surely "God is our refuge and strength, a present help in trouble." While here below your God hath given you in love and mercy that strength and that help, and you can sweetly sing,

"But when this lisping, stammering tongue
Lies silent in the grave,
Then in a nobler, sweeter song
I'll sing thy power to save."

Then, dear saints, may the precious thought be ever uppermost in your minds and hearts that "God is love." May your longing eyes be ever turned toward the Zion of our God, the holy habitation of the great King, is the sincere prayer of this feeble and afflicted one.

The brethren editors will dispose of these thoughts as they deem best, and believe me affectionately theirs,

H. COX.

709 CALVERT ST., BALTIMORE, Md.

DEAR BRETHREN:—I will offer a few remarks on Rom. viii. 17-23. "And if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together. For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us. For the earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God. For the creature was made subject to vanity, not willingly, but by reason of him who hath subjected the same in hope; because the creature itself also shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God. For we know that the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now. And not only they, but ourselves also, which have the first-fruits of the Spirit, even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body." It is clear to my mind that the apostle is speaking of men, and not animals, as some writers have supposed. In examining this word "creature" I find it is translated from a different word than that of the animal creature. For man it is rendered in the original ktisis; and for animals nephesh. —Young's Analytical Concordance. In the verses under consideration it is ktisis, or man. Do animals wait for the manifestation of the sons of God? Are they not children of God spoken of in verses 17 and 18? Has the animal a hope? If so upon what is it founded? Is it upon the work of the Spirit? "Because the creature [ktisis] itself also shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God?" Will animals be thus delivered? "For we know that the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now." Is not this the same ktisis, and not nephish, or animal? How do they know that the animal creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together? Do the Scriptures mention it? I have not found it there recorded that animals have any hope, or are groaning in spirit for the manifestation of the sons of God, or that they shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God. It is only found in the writings of commentators, who essay to explain Scripture without looking to the context.

I will now offer some general remarks. I understand the apostle to mean that all the saints, from the days of righteous Abel until now, have had to suffer with Christ. All have come up through much tribulation, as did Moses, who said he was of uncircumcised lips. Isaiah said, "I am a man of unclean lips."

I will now go back and review the preceding chapters, as it all is but one letter, and treats of one subject, man's salvation. In chapter iii. 21-26 the apostle says, "But now the righteousness of God without the law is manifested, being witnessed by the law and the prophets; even the righteousness of God which is by faith of Jesus Christ." This faith, which is the gift of God and the fruit of the Spirit, is the theme of the apostle up to the words of our text. The question now is, Has he changed it for animals? "Abraham believed God, and it was counted unto him for righteousness."—Chap. iv. 3. He pursues the same theme through the fifth chapter. "God commendeth his love toward us, in that while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us." "For if when we were enemies we were reconcilied to God by the death of his Son," &c. In the sixth chapter he speaks of those who are alive from the dead. "But now being made free from sin, and become servants to God," &c., as if he had said, free from death, and free from the reign of sin, by the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus; the same as in the eighth chapter, "For the law of the Spirit of life," or the dominion of the Spirit of life, "in Christ Jesus, hath made me free from the law [or dominion] of sin and death," which he had been speaking of. "Sin shall not have dominion over you [or reign over you]; for ye are not under the law." As if he had said, Ye are led now of the Spirit, and stand by faith, by the promise, and not in deeds of the law. In the seventh chapter, from the thirteenth verse to the end, we find the very same thought. The eighth chapter is a review of the preceding chapters. It is christian experience, and belongs to all. The object of the apostle is to show the reign of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus, and that sin shall not reign. Hence the warfare. "For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God." "The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit that we are the children of God." This is also called faith. "And if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ." Now mark that which follows, "If so be that we suffer with him." This shows that the saints must suffer with him. It is a travailing together in pain. It is the believer that carries about a body of sin and death. Who are waiting but believers? In verse nineteen man is called "the creature;" and farther back in the chapter, "sons of God." When Christ said, "Preach the gospel to every creature," did he mean preach it to men or to animals, or to both? The apostle says that every man that is in Christ is a new creature. "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature." "For in Jesus Christ neither circumcision availeth anything, nor uncircumcision, but a new creature." Hence a new creature is the bestowment of a new life. It is a translation from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God. Now by the Spirit he is in union with God; and thus he helpeth our infirmities, so that grace reigns through righteousness unto eternal life, until the redemption of these vile bodies, and we are brought into the glorious liberty of the sons of God. All the sons of God come up through much tribulation, and learn obedience through the things which they suffer, like their Lord. Yes, they are crucified with Christ. Paul said, "I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me." Thus we have the earnest of our inheritance, until the redemption of the purchased possession. Paul says, "And not only they [who have gone before], but ourselves also, which have the first-fruits of the Spirit, even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body." They were, like us, subject to vanity, and like those who are described here and in the last half of the seventh chapter. But it is not willingly that they are subject to vanity. "Verily every man at his best state is altogether vanity." —Psalm xxxix. 5. Paul prayed that the thorn in his flesh might be taken away. The answer of the Lord was, "My grace is sufficient for thee."

It is said by some that it is the animal creature that is subject to vanity, but not willingly. But what reason have we to suppose that animals are meant, when the apostle is following a spiritual argument to the end of the chapter? How does the apostle know? He says, "For we know," &c. He knew by christian experience; and his whole chain of argument is for believers, and not animals. It is for believers, who carry about a body of sin and death, and groan, being burdened. From the eighteenth to the twenty-seventh verse the apostle shows that the consciousness of God's love rest upon so impregnable a foundation that our trials, nor anything else, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord. The trials and sufferings with Christ are a ground of hope to us who are subject still to vanity, or the bondage of corruption. The future glory will far outweigh the present sufferings. Thus all things work together for good to them that love God. The apostle speaks of the triumphs of God's elect through suffering, and it is founded on the purpose or decree of God, and his infinite and unchanging love for sinners. "In all these things we are more than conquerors," even over our perverse nature. In this chapter we see all the links of that great chain by which we are brought up to heaven, and all the links are inseparable. Each of its parts furnish the most important instruction. If called, we have felt the call, or felt to be a sinner. If elected, we have by the Spirit been enabled to cry, Abba Father. If justified, we have shown our faith by our works. Then let our conversation be in heaven, and let us confess that we are strangers and pilgrims on the earth, waiting for the full redemption of our body. Our redemption was finished when Christ said upon the cross, "It is finished;" but our experience of it is by degrees. The first degree is in this life; the second degree is at death; the third degree is at the resurrection. The first degree is in the remission of our sins. Sin shall not reign over us. At death we have deliverance from all sin. That which we sow is not quickened except it die. At death we are delivered from all sin. Then shall we be enabled to sing that triumphant song, "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" "I will ransom them from the power of the grave; I will redeem them from death. O death, I will be thy plagues; O grave, I will be thy destruction."

I remain yours in hope,

JOHN THORNE.

KINGSTONE, England, April, 1874.

DEAR JOHN:—I am much pleased to see in your last letter that the Lord has enabled you to see believers' baptism to be the only baptism, and the sprinkling of infants nothing but popery. It seems that the Lord gave you a love to the ordinance of baptism, and a desire to attend to it, and boldly to put on Christ by baptism. Previous to that day you were very happy; but the day you were baptized your poor mind became dark, and since then you have not had that light and joy you had before. Now, if you cannot produce in yourself the light and happiness you had before, this is a mark in your favor, so that it was not sparks of your own kindling. It is said of some that they have no changes, and therefore they fear not God. No doubt your poor soul is much cast down because of the roughness of the way. The apostle James says we should count it all joy when we fall into divers temptations.

I think I cannot do better than to give you some account of the way that the Lord led me to attend to the ordinance of baptism. For ten years I could see it was right, and felt a great love to it, but did not like to take up the cross, and still I wished to do so at times; but hearing that some people were going to be baptized at Baydon by that man of God, Mr. Shorter, I purposed to go. When the time came I went, and O what a blessed day it was to my soul! I think I shall never forget it. It was a very fair morning, I think, in the month of May; and as Mr. Shorter went on to speak, the noisy crowd became struck with calmness and attention, and I standing among them did not know where to put my head for shame, as the Lord Jesus Christ in all his dreadful agony and suffering was stretched on the cross. In this state of suffering I saw him, and could not avoid it in any way; and for me, who had been ashamed to confess him before men in baptism. It is written, "They shall look upon me whom they have pierced, and they shall mourn," &c. These are the Lord's shalls and wills, firm as the everlasting hills. I was so blessed in my soul that day in seeing the Lord as my Savior, and so filled with shame in not obeying his command, that I said within myself, I shall not be able to attend another baptism without being a candidate myself. It was about eleven months from that time before I attended to it, and it was scarcely off my mind ten minutes at a time during the whole eleven months. At last I spoke to our minister of the exercises of my mind, and the time was set for me to call at his house to tell what the Lord had done for my soul, so as to be accepted as a candidate for baptism; and the time was appointed, I think, in a month. The ups and downs that I felt few can conceive of. Sometimes I was trying to shift out of it, and reasoning thus: There is Mr. So-and-so, and numbers of others who never attended to it, and they are all good men. I had just come to the conclusion that I would thrust the thoughts out of my mind; but I had no sooner done so than these words came powerfully into my soul, and made me fear to proceed any farther in that course, "Quench not the Spirit; despise not prophesyings." So I was led to see that I was quenching the Spirit, and after that I became more reconciled. From that time up to the time I was baptized the Lord spoke many blessed and encouraging words to my soul. I remember getting up one very cold, frosty morning, and began to sink again in my feelings, as I had been suffering with the toothache, and a very slight cold was apt to bring it on; but the Lord knew my infirmities, and he graciously spoke these words in my heart, "When I am weak, then am I strong. Therefore will I glory in my infirmities, that the power of Christ may rest upon me." And these in connection with it, "He giveth power to the faint; and to them that have no might he increaseth strength." Blessed be God, these words did give me strength; for I then felt that I could have gone, cold as it was, into the water. Surely there is nothing that will enable us to face difficulties like a word being fitly spoken so as to give us the heart-burn. One said, and rightly too, "When thou hast enlarged my heart, then will I run in the way of thy commandments." These words the Lord spoke with sweetness to my soul at another time, "Arise, shine, for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee." I was then in company with my brother Elijah, working in the bake-house. I should have liked to have been alone in the fields, where I could have given vent to my feelings. These words of the Redeemer followed on the others, "No man lighteth a candle, and putteth it under a bushel, but setteth it on a candlestick, that it may give light to all that are in the house." After all I was very ignorant of what it set forth. I used often to entreat the Lord to show me what it set forth. I remember being once in the chamber over the stable, praying to the Lord to show me, and he spoke these words to my soul, "The vision is for an appointed time; in the end it shall speak, and not lie." I was foolish enough to think that I should have such a rich blessing the day I was baptized, as the Lord had made me so happy before; but, alas! what a mistake I had made. I was in the greatest darkness of soul that I ever knew. I did not know how to stand during the service; my knees were ready to smite one another for very weakness. It was a very fine day. I think it was the first Sunday in May; but it had been very cold up to then. When I came to the water I had mightier foes than those who stood around looking on. I felt almost as if all hell were let loose on me. As I ascended from the water the devil roared out these dreadful words, "Pursue him, and take him, for God has forsaken him!" I feared that God would strike me dead, or send some awful judgment upon me, as I feared I was a hypocrite and an impostor. Here the devil now said, "Now see how you are discovered. The eunuch went on his way rejoicing, but you are wringing your hands for very anguish of soul." Monday morning came, and I had to face a sneering world; but I was helped a little with these words, "Also when I cry and shout, thou shuttest out my prayer." This encouraged me a little to hope in the Lord. The third day arrived, and I arose, triumphant over the devil and every foe, by the application of these words, "I have a baptism to be baptized with, and how am I straitened till it be accomplished." Now was I made strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might. The blessed vision had spoken, and shown me more in a few moments what baptism was, and what it was the figure of, than I had ever seen before. I was now led to see that it was a figure to set forth the overwhelming sufferings of the Lord Jesus Christ, by the many passages of Scripture that were brought to my mind with such light and power. I believed I had been taught by the blessed Spirit; and sure I am there is none can teach like him.

I would have you rejoice, dear John, if your path has been dark since your baptism; for we are not only called to believe on Jesus, but also to suffer for his sake, that we may have fellowship with him in his sufferings. When Christ suffered for our sins on the tree there was darkness from the sixth until the ninth hour; and the Father hid his face from him, and all hell was let loose upon him. This was the power of darkness. Read the twenty-second Psalm, and compare it with Mark xv. 23 and verses following. The night before I was baptized I had a very trying dream. I dreamed that I was standing in front of the mill at Kingstone, where I then worked. I became encompassed with dogs, both small and great, and they seemed ready to devour me. I had nothing to defend myself with except the key of the mill door; and what surprised me was that the smaller dogs possessed the same venom as the larger ones. I fought them with all my might with the key, striking them across the nose, till they had torn my fingers in strips. The owner of them stood by, wagging his head, much gratified to see me in such distress; but all at once they disappeared, and I became as bold as a lion. * * *

Yours very affectionately,

THOMAS POUND.

SOUTHAMPTON, Pa., Jan. 16, 1895.

DEAR KINDRED IN CHRIST:—Knowing that many dear, sympathizing friends, as they unfold the SIGNS, are always looking for some word from our dear sister, Mary Parker, I will share with them a portion of a letter written December 31st. I am sure it will be read with deep and tender interest by those to whom her name has become as a household word. Her long years of weary pain and patient suffering, her days of darkness, and sleepless nights of untold sorrow, have served to endear her to her Father's household, and to all who love the precious name so dear to her. Her high notes of praise to him who has been her support and stay through all these years have echoed far and near, vibrating with melodious tones in the hearts of old and young. Her sweetly expressed thoughts have been read by thousands who never saw her face; and words of love, with tokens of remembrance, have come back to her, filling her heart at times with cheer and encouragement. Those who have sorrowed with her will be glad when they read her words of exultant joy, and in heart will praise the Lord for his goodness, and his wonderful works to the children of men. Others who, like her, have been shut in for years, and are still prostrate, will be encouraged by her rich experience to hope on, for the Lord is able to do all things; yes, he can in a moment still the raging waves of the sea, or quiet the tumult in a sin-sick soul. "He will regard the prayer of the destitute, and will not despise their prayer." He satisfieth the longing soul, and filleth the hungry soul with his goodness, making it as a watered garden, and as a spring whose waters fail not. O the wonders of his power and grace! Who can tell it, and who can understand it? He put it into the heart of one who was a stranger, living hundreds of miles away from the afflicted one, to go to her. She went, her heart being filled with the love of Christ. "Behold what manner of love," unselfish, kind, and always abounding in the work of the Lord. He blessed the tender care of this delicate sister (herself almost an invalid) with healing power. Now she has the dear one, to whom her heart turned with the drawing bond of love, in her own home, doing for her as though she were her very own sister. As one said, "It seems she must have been raised up for that very purpose." Happy in each other's society, their union and communion is pleasant to behold. "O give thanks unto the Lord, for he is good; for his mercy endureth forever."

With love to all of like precious faith, your sister unworthily,

BESSIE DURAND.

I DO not know, my dear sister, that I can look back on any year of my life which to me has been more vivid ORIGIN OF THE BIBLE.

BROTHER J. Myers, of Alvinston, Ontario, asks, "How do we know that the Bible is of divine origin?" He adds, "I have asked myself and others this question, but without a full, satisfactory answer."

While we cannot hope to give a full, satisfactory answer, where our correspondent and others have alike failed, yet it seems to us not amiss to present a few considerations which have seemed satisfactory to ourselves concerning this matter. We do so all the more readily because we doubt not that the same question has perplexed others also. The people of God are subject to many temptations. Probably there is no principle of truth that is near and dear to their hearts but what has been assailed at some time or other in their minds by the fiery darts of the wicked one. In the doubt suggested by the above question the enemy strikes at the very root of the christian's hope. As it is declared in holy writ to be true that he who comes unto God must believe that he is, so any fiery dart hurled at this belief must be most painful to the believer. We ourselves know what such sore temptations mean by some very bitter experiences in the past.

We desire to suggest a few things which seem to us true, and which at least have helped our faith in the past; and, first, he who is not born of God cannot know that the Scriptures are of divine origin. Natural men may reason concerning the authenticity and credibility of the Scriptures, and such reasonings may be of some satisfaction to our reason; but to know that the Scriptures are of divine origin requires something more than this. To know the word of God as God's word we must first know God. How utterly useless would it be to reason concerning the existence of light and color to a blind man! We can only bear testimony to him that there is such a thing as light and color, but all our reasoning tells him nothing as to what light and color are. But suppose this blind man receives his sight. Then he knows that such things as light and color exist as well as do we, and then as we reason about these things he begins to understand us.

We have read books written especially to defend the authenticity and credibility of the Scriptures from the assaults of avowed skeptics and infidels. We do not wish to say that such books are useless. In fact, we have derived some information at times from some such books; but we wish to say that the effect in general upon our mind has been chilling and repelling. They have answered some objections to the truth that we had seen urged by others, but had not built us up in faith and hope and love and in humility; and we are sure that no infidel was ever convinced of his error by any such reasonings. We think the child of God will feel, after reading such works, that while they hold forth a truth, yet to read them has been like roaming over a barren waste to him. He has found no food there. Such a one will be still hungry. If he be fed at last, the Lord must speak to his soul.

We trust that our brother from Ontario is one of those who have conversed with the Lord face to face, and have seen things that they cannot utter. If so, he has a witness in himself that the Bible is true, since that which he has himself heard is the same that holy men of old wrote when moved by the Holy Ghost. If we have seen the light, we know whether men are telling the truth when they speak of the light. If we have seen divine things, we know these things as we read the record of them in the Scriptures.

We have thus far been speaking of the truth of the Scriptures, because we suppose that if their truth be admitted it settles the question as to whether they are of divine origin. If true, they must be of divine origin, because they themselves claim to be. "Thus saith the Lord" is written all over the Bible; and on the other hand, if of divine origin, they must be true.

The considerations which have always had most weight with us are the following. First, though written by many different men, widely separated in point of time and place and condition and circumstance, yet they agree in one. They all testify the same things. This would be a simple impossibility unless indeed all these men wrote under the dictation of one all-comprehensive mind. In other words, the harmony in Scripture teaching proves them to have been of divine origin. Second, prophecy and its fulfillment prove the Scriptures to be of divine origin. Only omniscience can know the future. No human intellect is broad enough and acute enough to foretell certainly that any one given event will ever take place; but the Scriptures are full of minute prophecies, descending to the minutest details of events and time, and these prophecies were fulfilled. All fulfilled prophecy must have been of divine origin. Third, the Scriptures tell us the truth about ourselves. It is true of the Scriptures, as was said of Jesus, "Never man spake like this man." To our mind this is the strongest of all proofs that the Scriptures are the word of God, that they know what is in man, and always speak to his heart. When they teach total depravity, believers know that this is true of themselves. Must not that which tells them all things that ever they did be of divine origin? Fourth, we believe the Scriptures are of divine origin because they have endured. They have not grown old. They have the dew of their youth. No other book has so lived; and no other book has been so assailed. Other books grow old and gray-headed and feeble, and their force abates, and they die, and are buried and forgotten; but the Scriptures are not dead. They have not even grown old. They come to us to-day with all the force and power to heal and comfort and help that they have ever had. The weary mourner, the tempted soul, finds in them to-day the same sweet consolations that saints found there centuries ago. Other books suit and serve their day and generation, and then they, like their authors, "fall on sleep;" but this book serves all days and all generations, and never dies. Is it not therefore divine?

We might add many more considerations, but we forbear. We trust these thoughts may be of partial satisfaction to brother Myers at least.

C.

DOCTRINAL PREACHING.

IN his communication in this number on pure and undefiled religion, brother Campbell attributes some defects which he has observed among the brethren, to a general habit of Old School Baptist preachers confining themselves almost exclusively to doctrinal preaching. We know of no gospel preaching that is not strictly doctrinal. All instruction is doctrine; for the word doctrine signifies teaching; and the ministers of the gospel are commisioned to teach and baptize believers, and to teach them to observe all things whatsoever Christ has commanded them. Beyond this there is no divine authority for preaching. It is true, some may dwell too exclusively on certain points of doctrine, to the exclusion of other points of equal importance; but that this is generally the case with Old School Baptists, we think, admits of a doubt. All preachers teach something, and some of them very zealously teach for doctrine the commandments of men; but let the ministers of Jesus teach all things that he has commanded, and we fear not for the result. Workmongers and Arminians dwell as much on doctrine as any other class, only they teach the doctrines of men and of devils; but they are not often chargeable with preaching the doctrine of the gospel. We are aware that theologians divide what they call the gospel into doctrine, experience, exhortation, &c.; but no such distinction was observed by the apostles of the Lamb. The doctrine of Christ is experimentally received by heaven-born souls, and the reception of it expands their hearts with love and gratitude to God, and a well directed zeal for his cause. All the zeal and duty doings extorted from professors who know not the doctrine of Christ by the lash of taskmasters, form but at best a dead carcass, without life or soul.

GOSPEL ORDER.

BROTHER BEEBE:—Is it proper, or have we, or has a regular Old School Baptist church, any authority to invite to a seat at the Lord's table such brethren as are not in standing with an Old School Baptist church, but who still are Old School in doctrine and experience, although they belong to no regular church of that order? To make my question more plain, I will relate a circumstance that occurred yesterday, it being our communion season. A brother presented himself, claiming to be a regular Old Baptist; and yet it is my conviction that though he is an old-fashioned Baptist in doctrine and experience, he is not an orderly one. Some thirty years ago he united with the Baptist church at Northfield, then holding the doctrine which is now held by the old order of Baptists; and although the church has departed from the faith or doctrine it once held, and become an Arminian church, his name is retained among them. Still he has left their meetings, and has not been with them, nor communed with them, nor had any fellowship with them, for eight years; and he stands aloof from all the inventions and delusions of New Schoolism. He claims that he united with an Old School church, and has never been excluded, nor found guilty of any misdemeanor; and having once been a member of an Old School church, and not having departed from the doctrine then held by that church, he is consequently still a member, and has a right to all the privileges of the church. We felt, brother Beebe, as though we had as much fellowship for the old man as for our own selves; yet we feared it would be opening a door for which we had no authority. There are many in like circumstances about us here, and if we admit one we must all. You know we are young and inexperienced, and therefore we ask your views upon this subject.

Your brother in Christ,

E. TIBBALS.

UNION, N. J., March 3, 1848.

REPLY.

THE New Testament of our Lord Jesus Christ contains the only rule of order to be observed by Old School Baptist churches. In strictly adhering to that infallible rule, the Old School churches are distinguished from all other religious communities on earth. Questions may, and undoubtedly do, sometimes arise among the children of God as to a correct understanding and application of that rule in certain difficult cases, when the views of brethren may with propriety be asked for; but we have no pontiff or ecclesiastical dignitary among us clothed with authority or vested with the right to sit as umpire over the saints. Jesus Christ is head over all things to the church, which is his body, the fullness of him that filleth all in all. He is regarded by the Old School Baptists as the Apostle and High Priest of their profession: his law is their supreme standard; and if any lack wisdom, they are instructed by his word and Spirit to ask of God for that wisdom which cometh down from above; and, for their encouragement they have the assurance that he giveth liberally and upbraideth not.

Christ has elevated to thrones of judgment the apostles, who followed him in the regeneration; and when and where the Son sitteth upon the throne of his glory, as we believe he does among the Old School Baptists, then and there the apostles sit on their thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel, or the gospel church. Their judgment is given in the New Testament on all points essential to the faith, order and practice of the church, and from their decisions, as given in the New Testament, there is no appeal. What they have bound on earth is bound in heaven, and what they have loosed on earth is loosed in heaven.

In giving our opinion, according to the request of our brother, we desire to keep the foregoing sentiments in view, and presume only to express our individual understanding of the bearing of the supreme rule upon the subject presented. As we understand the law of Christ, there is "one body," and but one, "and one Spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling: one Lord, one faith, one baptism." To this one body belongs every regular disciple of Jesus Christ; but none can be recognized as disciples indeed except they deny themselves, take up their cross and follow Christ. "Then are ye my disciples indeed, if ye do whatsoever I command you." It must be remembered that these words were not spoken to the world at large, not to all men indiscriminately, but to quickened souls. We infer from the application made, that even those whom we have confidence in as regenerated or quickened souls are not entitled to any of the privileges of the church while they remain disobedient to the commands of Christ.

Now, if Christ has commanded his children to come out and be separated from the world, and from every brother that walketh disorderly to turn away, then a failure to do as he has commanded is disobedience; and disobedience is disorder; and from all who so walk, orderly Baptists are bound to withdraw. The case of the brother referred to by brother Tibbals, is very similar to what was the case of a large portion of the Old School Baptists. They united with what was called the Baptist church before the new inventions of the present age were introduced, and continued to walk with them, or rather to suffer them to be with them, until the majority abandoned the grounds which had been occupied by the Baptists of all preceding ages, from the days of John. When the majority of the Baptists with whom we then stood connected departed from the faith and order of the gospel, and were turned unto fables, we labored to reclaim them from their errors; but finding them determined to walk disorderly, we, in obedience to the great command of our Lord Jesus Christ, came out from among them, turned away from them, and ceased to regard them as any part of the gospel church, as we must persist in doing until God shall give them repentance to acknowledge the truth.

At present the case stands thus: if the Old School Baptists have acted in accordance with the order of the gospel, the brother referred to is not in that order; and if the Old School have acted disorderly, that brother, to be consistent, should not commune with them, nor bid them God speed. Should the Old School, after having thus publicly withdrawn their fellowship from the New School Baptists, receive to their communion, or to any of the peculiar privileges of the church, individuals who still hold a standing in New School churches, they build again the things which they destroyed, and make themselves transgressors. Nothing, by the law of Christ, is suffered to be done by partiality. If we may receive one to the privileges of the church, whose membership is with the New School, to be impartial we should receive all who please to apply; and then where can the line be drawn between order and disorder, between the church and antichrist?

There may be among the Presbyterians, Methodists, Catholics or Mormons some individuals who seem to evince a relish for the truth in some particular points, and to whose experience we have no other objection than that it does not bring them out of their bad company to inquire for the gates of Zion. If those of one denomination with whom we are not in fellowship are received by us, to be impartial should we not also receive all who apply, without regard to who they are or where they belong? The argument used by the member of Northfield, N. J., would have been equally conclusive if used by all the old order of Baptists who have withdrawn from the New School. But, as we understand the matter, his retaining his membership with them after he is convinced they have departed from the faith and order of the gospel, makes him partaker of their iniquity, notwithstanding his preference of truth and order.

If the case mentioned by brother Tibbals were the only case of the kind, we should think it inexpedient to occupy so much space on the subject; but there are many such cases, and it is important that the divine rule be carefully and prayerfully examined by the churches and by the brethren, and that we act as that rule directs. It is desirable that the Old School Baptists act with unanimity; for the action of one or more churches may involve the union of others. To stand entirely disconnected from disorder, we must reject those individuals who hold fellowship with disorderly churches, and also with such churches as receive such individuals. A church, knowing the circumstances, voting deliberately to receive an individual, assumes by the act to justify the course and standing of that individual; and to receive the individual is equivalent to receiving the church; and vice versa.

One word to the brother referred to, and, with him, to all under like circumstances. So far as you have manifested a love for the truth, and a desire to suffer affliction and persecution with the people of God, we congratulate you; and we pray that God may give you grace to enable you to lay aside every weight, and cut loose from every yoke of bondage. Remember, you cannot serve two masters; you cannot eat at the table of the Lord and with devils.

ALL BIBLES SENT AT OUR EXPENSE.

ON our last page will be found an advertisement of some of the sizes, styles and prices at which we can furnish Bibles. The vast variety of sizes and combinations compiled in Bibles is too great to all be given in our space.

The smaller Bibles mentioned in the advertisement are the ones most in demand, and these we will mail postage paid on receipt of price. The larger or Family Bibles, being too large and heavy to go safely by mail, will be sent by express at our expense. We are prepared to furnish most any size, style or priced Bible. If you do not find what you wish in our list published, write us a description of what you would like to have and we will send you the price.

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE.

TO MOST of our readers the above mentioned book is too well known to need any introduction or a description by us. While many of the Bibles have a Concordance appended, they are generally so condensed or abridged as to be of little or no use. Cruden's Complete Concordance, however, enables one to readily turn to any passage of Scripture of which they can call to mind two or three words, and in our opinion is the most complete and convenient as a reference book of any published. In addition, it contains many other aids in studying the Bible, as may be seen by reference to advertisement on last page. Remember, both the books there mentioned are CRUDEN'S COMPLETE.

BACK NUMBERS.

WE continue to print for the first few numbers of this volume several hundred extra copies, and all new subscribers received, as well as old ones whose names are re-entered on our list, will be sent back numbers as long as the supply lasts.

and marked in its events than the one that will soon be past; and when I reflect upon the great change in my physical condition, and think of the Almighty power that sustained me through each critical moment, and has safely led me thus far on my journey, and sometimes, as I trust, caused my soul to drink from the Fountain of living waters, my exaltation knows no bounds, and my thankfulness cannot be expressed. The improved condition of my health is so marvelous that it seems little short of the miraculous, and it certainly could not be brought about save by divine power. I do not believe in "faith cure," as advocated by a certain class of religionists; but I do believe that when God causes us to ask a blessing of him in faith he will grant that blessing. Faith is a gift of God; not a something that we can manufacture ourselves and put on at will, but something he gives, free and unmerited; and without it, we are told, it is impossible to please God. During all the years of my suffering I cannot recall a time when I felt especially impressed to ask my dear, pitiful Father to lighten or to remove the stroke until last spring. All of a sudden there came to me at that time such an intensity of longing toward the dear Master to lighten the burden, to in some way remove the crushing weight, as I cannot describe. It seemed that for weeks my whole being went out to him in one intense pleading for help, very much as we cry for mercy when the soul is under the awful weight of sin. Have I not cause to believe that he in his goodness heard me, and that in his tender mercy he answered my prayer? O! it fills me with joy and gladness too deep for utterance. Although I can never hope for my left limb to be entirely restored by a perfect cure, yet it, as well as the limb not affected, has become almost entirely straight. I have for some time been walking across the bed-room by holding to dear auntie's hand. Last Friday, as we were getting ready for me to try the daily exercise, I asked auntie to let me try to walk with crutches; and to the surprise and joy of us both I walked across my room, and to the farther side of the adjoining room, unaided save by the crutches. I felt as if I must praise God aloud for his great goodness. Auntie and I were both in tears; while a hush and intense feeling that the holy presence of God was nigh so filled my soul that all human utterance, all power to give expression to my emotions, seemed impossible. When I realize his great goodness to me in every way, the unmerited and invaluable friendship that dear sister Rounsavell has so sweetly manifested toward me, how much her wise administrations, under the guidance of infinite wisdom and power, have been the principal factor in lifting the great intensity of bodily pain, my cup of thankfulness is full to overflowing.

TUESDAY MORNING.

I WAS interrupted yesterday, and very pleasantly too, by sister Nettie Dolson, who came in a pretty sleigh to take auntie and me out for a drive. We drove about eight miles over the beautiful snow-covered country roads, keeping in sight of the mountains at every turn, and my enjoyment knew no bounds. The sky was almost cloudless, the full glory of the sun shed its gleams about us, falling like pearls of dew over the snow, and causing the landscape, as it stretched away beyond the blue of mountain and hill, to look one vast crystal sea. As I looked away to the lofty peaks of Sugar Loaf mountain, their snow-capped heads pointing heavenward, the whole delightful panorama kissed by the golden scintillations of the sun, a few purple clouds hanging like a holy benediction between the mountains and the blue dome of heaven, a sacred hush seemed to come over me, and I wished to give my entire being to the heavenly influence of the moment, and for the time all thoughts of an earthly nature seemed undesirable and commonplace. I wondered if of such uplifting emotions one could ever tire. I felt, as I never felt before, while under the influence of this delightful spell that life viewed as a spiritual ideality is very, very beautiful, a picture made perfect by light and shade, the dark clouds of sorrow and suffering being just as necessary in the composition as light and the golden sunbeams. This world is a path that leads alike through the dangers and darkness of the forests and along flower-bordered walks to the portals of eternal day, where the pearly gates ever stand ajar to admit those for whom the Savior bled and died. O how my soul was stirred by this mountain scene; and I wondered not that Jesus so often secluded himself among rural haunts in the garden of Gethsemane, nor that John the Baptist preferred the seclusion of the lone forest. I thought also of Elijah being transported from that secluded mount to the realms of everlasting light unto God, our exceeding joy. The unity of Christ and the church, the sweet relationship between him and his people, seemed to unfold new beauty to me; and the Scripture which says, "Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, God hath shined," seemed to take on a lovelier coloring.

Since last I wrote you I have been favored by a visit from sister Clark, of Connecticut, and also by a brief visit from Elder Vail, of Waverly, Pa., both of which I enjoyed greatly. I was delighted to meet sister Clark, and speak face to face, as we had exchanged some thoughts by letter. It was good to hear how she came to mount Zion, as all must come, with tears and supplication. The relation of her christian experience was deeply interesting to me. She spoke of her love to you, and of how touching were the memories of a night she spent with you at one time in this very room, where she underwent such a deep struggle of soul.

I hope to hear from you soon, and to learn how sister Clarice is. I cannot tell you, dear sister, how much I enjoy my church privileges here under the loving care and teaching of dear Elder Beebe, nor how much I enjoy the society of his daughters and others.

With much love from sister Rounsavell and myself to you all, I am lovingly your sister, MARY PARKER.

THE EARNEST OF THE SPIRIT.

THIS subject the apostle Paul speaks of in several places by different names, but they only set forth the same glorious doctrine in different phases, establishing the complete power of God in sending redemption to his favored people. That there is no mistake or deception about the matter is evident from the language used in 2 Corinthians i. 22: "Who hath also sealed us, and given the earnest of the Spirit in our hearts." As there are several meanings to the word "earnest," I shall take the privilege of using at least two of those meanings, viz., reality; a pledge given in token of a promise made. The earnest of the Spirit is then a reality; it is not fanciful, or in theory alone, but a reality, a glorious reality, a real substance of things hoped for. It also means that it is a certain pledge of something that is to be manifested; and it is spoken of as being synonymous with "the first fruits of the Spirit." Then we understand that that something to be manifested is just like the earnest in kind, but different in degree. Now it is by measure; then it will be in all fullness, to the highest degree of satisfaction to all the saints; for now we see through a glass darkly, but then face to face; now we know in part, but then shall we know even as we are known. Now we have an earnest of the Spirit, or first fruits, as a certain pledge of the harvest or full crop, which will be just like the first fruits, but in greater abundance. This earnest is not of the earth, but of heaven. It is a spiritual principle imparted to the saints, which they did not have before, only as it was treasured up for them in Christ Jesus. What I am speaking about as not belonging to the saints till it is received by them is in the manifestation of it. It ever has been for the saints, for they were predestinated unto it before the world began. We conclude that all who have the earnest of the Spirit are those who are enlightened, who have tasted of the heavenly gift, who are made partakers of the Holy Ghost, and have tasted of the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come. It is said that they are sealed with that holy Spirit of promise, which is an earnest of their inheritance, until the redemption of the purchased possession. The earnest of the Spirit is that holy Spirit of promise, and the saints receive it from God direct; for that which is born of the Spirit is spirit. In this sense we are speaking of the product, or that which is brought forth, and not of the effects produced in man; for in one sense man is unchanged, and in another he is changed. It is represented best to our understanding as a leading. Whereas before this again birth, or born from above, the saints are said to have been led by the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now works in the children of disobedience; but after they are born from above, born of God, they are led by a different spirit. Hence they are changed in walk and conversation, they are turned, their going is in a different direction, and they have nothing to boast of or glory in save the cross of Jesus and the grace of God; for they have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear, but the Spirit of adoption, whereby they cry, Abba, Father. Here again is presented the certain pledge of the crowning work of redemption; for as certain as they have received the Spirit of adoption, just so certain shall they receive adoption, which they are waiting for; and that waiting state seems to be as long as they are sealed with that holy Spirit of promise, which is until the redemption of the purchased possession. By that holy Spirit they are sealed unto the day of redemption. This is the adoption, to wit, the redemption of the body. It is evident that the apostle in speaking of redemption here had reference to the final victory of the saints over all opposition, when death shall be swallowed up of life, when that glory-life shall be fully realized, and they are made complete in the resurrection. This redemption all the saints are waiting for and looking to, and they all shall participate in its glorious triumph; and, we might say, this is the finality of the hope of the saints.

In speaking of the redemption of the body, and that it has not taken place yet, does not detract anything from redemption as it is used in a general sense, but rather establishes or confirms the doctrine as set forth by the servants of God. That the Lord Jesus redeemed his people from under the curse and dominion of the law, and gave ample satisfaction to the justice of God, when he offered himself and died on the cross, is a truth which none can overthrow, so well is it established by Bible authority. When Jesus cried on the cross, "It is finished," we understand that all that was written about this man in the law and the prophets, as well as the redemption of his people, was finished. They were legally and absolutely redeemed, because the ransom price was paid, and that price was the blood of Jesus; and this blood cleanses from all sin. As they were redeemed then and there, we might appropriately say that they were saved; and all that follows after this atonement in the kingdom of Jesus, as pertains to the experience of the saints, is the manifesting of what Jesus did then. It is sometimes said that the work of saving sinners is progressive, that God is still saving sinners, as though they were not all saved in the atonement. What we see and hear in the experience of the saints is only manifesting to them the Lord's redemption and salvation, and that these were for them even when they were dead in sin. The order of the work of redemption, as it is recorded in the Scriptures, is, "Sanctified by God the Father, and preserved in Jesus Christ, and called." From this passage, as well as some others, we learn that the saints are sanctified and saved before they are called with a holy calling; and in that call Jesus is made unto them "wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption." This is their personal experience, and the last mentioned shall not be fully realized until this mortal shall have put on immortality. If his saints have ever experienced God's love and mercy in time, and have been sealed with that holy Spirit of promise, and have been given an earnest of the Spirit, and have received the first fruits of the Spirit, they most assuredly shall be delivered from this bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God. That they shall personally experience redemption is not saying too much for this poor and afflicted people. This is an experience which they are looking for, but which many shall not realize until after their mortal bodies are dissolved and mingled with their mother clay; but there will be a remnant according to the election of grace who shall stand on the borders of the earth in that day, who shall not be put in graves, but who shall be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye. This will be a happy experience for all who are counted worthy to be participants in that glorious change. No less shall the happy change be for all who are in their graves, who are sealed against that great day; for they shall come forth in the likeness of their glorified Redeemer. It does not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that when Christ, who is our life, shall appear, we shall also appear with him in glory, for we shall be made like him, and shall see him as he is, because we shall awake in his likeness, and shall be satisfied.

WAVERLY, Pa., Jan. 18, 1895.

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES—DEAR BRETHREN:—I send you a letter with the consent of the writer to have it published if you think best. I feel that it is excellent, because from first to last it gives glory and power to God. I love to hear the dear children of God speak of his goodness and talk of his power, though I never expect to do more than lisp a little of his praise, if indeed I praise him at all.

"I am so vile, so prone to sin,
I fear that I'm not born again."

I want to say in regard to the SIGNS, I will be well satisfied with it if it continues as in the past; and I have no reason to doubt but what it will. I consider it the old standby, or reliable; not before the Bible however. It is, and should be, highly prized by those who love the plain, naked, unpolished, unadulterated truth as it is in Jesus Christ. Nothing else will do the quickened soul good.

Your sinful brother,

D. M. VAIL.

BRUNSWICK, Maine, Dec. 30, 1894.

ELD. D. M. VAIL—DEAR BROTHER:—I feel like writing to you this evening; and as you have not sent me word not to write to you again, I will enjoy a chat with you. It is not prudent for me to go to Bowdoinham now, that the cold weather has come; but it seems only a short time to look ahead to April or May, when I hope to meet the brethren again face to face. I was permitted to meet with those I love many times this last year; and instead of being weary, I desire more than ever to be with them. I have wished to-day I could listen to a sermon; and if I had never been taught I was a sinner saved by grace, if saved at all, I should be satisfied to hear the preaching which is all around me. But since Jesus was revealed as my Savior, and I saw the plan of salvation by grace, I am not satisfied unless I hear the name of Jesus exalted.

"Hail the Lamb who came to save us!
Hail the love that made him die!
'Tis the gift that God hath given us,
We'll proclaim his honors high."

I would like to write all the thoughts I have had to-day about the gospel, which is such a joyful sound to me. I did work hard at one time to bring myself into the favor of God and cause him to love me; and what rejoicing I had when I was taught "We love him because he first loved us;" that he had loved me even before the foundation of the world, and had chosen me in Christ Jesus, and clothed me with his righteousness. Tongue nor pen can express the song of praise which filled my heart. It is always a "new song" whenever my mind is led over all the way he has led me, and I see his goodness and loving-kindness to a poor sinner like me. I often feel I have never told my experience, of how I was brought from nature's darkness into his marvelous light, and translated into the kingdom of his dear Son. That kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and is "within you." It is joy and peace in the Holy Ghost. I feel the assurance that the peace of Christ has been given me, and it passeth understanding. "All thy children shall be taught of the Lord; and great shall be the peace of thy children." How comforting it is that if we are established in the truth, and give all praise, honor and glory unto God, and love to talk of his power, and sweetly-rejoice that when he speaks it is done; when he commands it stands fast; that nothing was made without him, but for his pleasure all things are and were created. "To everything there is a season, and a time to every purpose under the heaven." He has declared the end from the beginning, so nothing can be hid from his all seeing eye; and he does all things well, so there can be no mistakes with him. We have not learned these precious truths from one another, but God has revealed them unto us. Boasting is excluded when we sing of salvation by grace, and the name of Jesus is more precious to us than gold and silver. We gladly "Crown him Lord of all." My hope of salvation is in the life, death and resurrection of Christ. He came to do the will of the Father; and he says, "And this is the Father's will which hath sent me, that of all which he hath given me I should lose nothing, but should raise it up again at the last day." "And this is the will of him that sent me, that every one which seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life: and I will raise him up at the last day." Jesus finished the work the Father gave him to do. The one offering was accepted, and the sins of his chosen people are forever blotted out; for Jesus shed his precious blood, and the church was presented without spot or wrinkle, or any such thing. The work of redemption was complete; and whether I am included among the chosen people or not, I desire to praise God for his wonderful works. They are great and marvelous. "All thy works shall praise thee, O Lord, and thy saints shall bless thee."

"High as the heavens are raised above the ground we tread,
So far the riches of his grace our highest thoughts exceed."

But I must close now, for I shall want to write again, and hope to hear from you when you have time to spend a few moments to talk with me. We all send love and fellowship to you and sister Vail, and our kindred in Christ whom you meet. May we be found speaking of the righteousness of Christ and the salvation of God's people, is the desire of your loving sister in hope of eternal life, which God, that cannot lie, promised before the world began.

DANSVILLE, N. Y., Jan. 11, 1895.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS OF THE SIGNS:—Please bear with one who feels unworthy to thus address you, while I express my hearty approval and full enjoyment of the grand and soul-cheering doctrine fully set forth and nobly maintained in the columns of the SIGNS. Amidst the perplexing entanglements and attractions of this mortal life I find great enjoyment in perusing its pages, so full of encouragement and instruction. I often question whether I have any right to claim an interest in that covenant which is well ordered and sure, and find myself wallowing in the "Slough of Despond," ready to conclude that were I to succeed in walking out on the dry land I would be so covered with mud and filth that no decent and cleanly person would tolerate my company, and I might as well seek comfort in my wallowings as to offend the nostrils and finer senses of decent people. But O! the filth and stench of this slough, almost suffocated at times, a breath of sweet perfume wafted from the distant shore would revive and encourage me; and fool that I was, I would search among the billows of that pond for its source, but in vain. The heavenly breeze would pass, and leave me wallowing as before. Then would come another reviving breeze of sweet perfume from the pen of Elder Durand, with the assurance that the love of this perfume is evidence of the love of God for such as enjoy it. So then I go into "Doubting Castle" and divide my misery with my doubts and hopes, and wonder if I will ever get out of this miserable slough. Occasionally, however, I do have a temporary respite from the disagreeable and discouraging struggle, when the halo of light which accompanies that perfume reveals to my astonished and rapturous soul the cheering assurance that the mission of Christ upon earth was to save sinners! sinners! Then "hope springs exaltant on triumphant wings," and my soul rejoices in that predestinating love which encircles in its everlasting arms the "remnant according to the election of grace." But why should my hope be so exultant? Is it because I feel the drawing of that love which is the fruit of the Spirit, and leads us to seek the society of the children of God? With this assurance my peace flows like a river, and I rejoice that though my sins are as scarlet, they are made white in the blood of the Lamb. And now, if it were not for that miserable "Doubting Castle" how cheerfully I could go on my way rejoicing. Do any of the readers of the SIGNS have any such experiences as I have described? If so, I would like to know, and also really whether the children of God are so exercised.

With love to the saints, I remain as ever, a sinner saved by grace, if saved at all,

OBITUARY NOTICES.

"HELP, Lord; for the godly man ceaseth; for the faithful fail from among the children of men."—Psalm xii. 1.

When the great Jehovah is pleased to take from our midst some of the faithful in Christ Jesus, we in some degree can enter into the spirit of the psalmist. The fellowship and companionship of those who have obtained like precious faith through the righteousness of God and our Savior Jesus Christ is truly precious.

The church in North Berwick, Maine, has lately been called to part with one of her members in the person of our brother, Thomas Pound, who departed this life December 26th, 1894, aged 79 years and 4 months.

Our brother was born in Bishopstone, Wiltshire, England, and came to the United States in September, 1882. He attended the yearly meeting of the church in North Berwick in 1883 for the first time, and since then has had a place in the love and fellowship of the church in these parts. While yet in England he wrote a precious experimental letter to his son John, which I send with this.

Our brother was one of good understanding in the Scriptures, and his conversation was spiritual and edifying. He died suddenly of heart trouble; and on Dec. 29th, at his home in Dover, N. H., I preached from the words, "Let us be glad and rejoice, and give honor to him; for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready."—Rev. xix. 7. His three children, John, Thomas H. and Charlotte A., survive him. Their remembrance of him is that he was an unselfish, honorable and godly man, which is consolation to them in their bereavement. May the gracious Lord bless them, is the desire of

DIED—At her late residence in Smyrna Del., on Thursday afternoon last, Jan. 17th, Mrs. Ann Jemima Foxwell, in the 74th year of her age.

From general good health, supported by a vigorous constitution, and unusual activity for that age, her death was to all of us distressingly sudden and shocking. A slight cold, without any alarming symptoms, developed into pneumonia, and terminated in a few days fatally. She was received into that church upon a very satisfactory profession of faith nearly thirty years ago. She was evidently ordained to bring forth much of that kind of fruit that remains for a testimony to those that come after. While sitting yesterday, mingling with the weeping family, my mind ran back to recount many interesting incidents of my long travel with that church. I once attended the funeral of an own sister in the flesh to sister Foxwell. It was more than forty-one years ago. The one sister was the first funeral, and the other the last, among the many that I have attended at that place. Not only nearly all the old members are gone, but most of the congregation that I first met there; and nearly half of the members since gathered in are sleeping together their last slumber. Many times have we gathered there to weep for and with each other in bitter sorrow; but the seasons have not all been sad. Many times has that Sun risen upon us that so long ago illuminated the shadows of death; and for a season we could rejoice together, and sing that song which appertains to the land and to the inhabitants of Judea. Nowhere in my travels and labors have I seen so often and so clearly the hand of the Lord in building up his spiritual house. Though many precious gems have been plucked from the earthly building, yet the Lord has pledged his faithfulness that they shall be his in the decisive day. We have not been all the time in the valley of tears, but have known something of that new song which appertains to mount Zion. We should not grieve all the time over what is gone from us, but rather contemplate the heavenly gifts with which we have been favored, and which we were favored to enjoy for so many years. Our departed sister adorned her profession all the years allotted her, gave full proof to all of her holy calling, died in the triumphs of faith, and had no need of further trial, sorrow or suffering to enter the heavenly rest.

I have indulged in some of these reflections to get somewhat away from the tomb and scenes of bitter weeping; to call up and ponder over the sweet communion and fellowship that I have for so many years enjoyed with these precious gems, destined ultimately to be jewels in the royal diadem that crowns their Redeemer.

CORRESPONDENCE.

SOUTHAMPTON, Pa., Jan. 8, 1894.

DEAR BROTHER BEEBE:—I send you the experience of our aged sister, Rebecca Wells, whose name has been seen occasionally in the SIGNS with some very sweet hymns of praise that she has written. She spent the winter of 1890 and 1891 with us, and her daughter, sister Bertha Wells, who was then living here. The pages I now send you for publication in the SIGNS were sent to us from time to time, as she found time and felt at liberty to write. The last one came three or four months ago. While it is very rich, I think, and full of interest to exercised souls, we who have heard her talk can realize how very much that would be fully as interesting she has omitted. While she was with us she was much at liberty in her mind to talk of her wonderful exercises, and the very wonderful circumstances in providence connected with them, which have hardly been alluded to in what she has here written, being, many of them, of a very painful nature, although through them the wonderful works of God were made known to her in most surprising ways. She seemed to have been given great liberty while here, and an experience of fellowship and union of soul with the church, and a freedom and comfort and sweet communion with the brethren, that she had never experienced to that extent before. And she united with this church by experience, having been baptized in the fellowship of the Particular Baptist church in England. We hope, if the Lord will, we may have her with us again before she is called away from these earthly meetings to the assembly of the glorified saints in heaven.

What a comfort and benefit to the church are the presence and communications of those who are so deeply experienced and so filled with the Spirit that they may be said to walk with God. One might think that their richer experience and more full assurance of faith and love would tend to dishearten those whose faith and exercises seem as poor and weak as mine; but on the contrary it is the most encouraging and comforting of all things to such, and seems sometimes to make me forget that the enemy has power to raise up doubts and fears in the soul.

Your brother in the hope of the gospel,

SILAS H. DURAND.

BRANTFORD, Ontario, August, 1892.

MY DEAR AND BELOVED SISTERS AND BROTHER:—It has been on my mind for a long time to write down a few things of what I hope have been the Lord's dealings with me; but feeling my weakness and inability so much, I have put it off from time to time, feeling that I could not give to God the praise and glory and honor due to his most holy name. But as you, dear sisters and brother Durand, with many dear friends, have requested me to do so, the Lord willing, and trusting the Holy Spirit to be my guide, I will now try.

I was born on the sixth day of April, 1817, in the parish of Kyarsh, in the county of Kent, England. My parents did not make any profession of religion, but when they did go to a place of worship it was to the Church of England; but I did not go till I was about twelve years old, when the minister opened a Sunday School, and I went there for about two years. Then I left my home to live out in service. My mother taught us children to kneel down by her knees and say prayers; and from my earliest recollection I had a love for the name of Jesus. But it might have been only a childish love. My brothers older than myself used to sing the hymn commencing,

"See the kind Shepherd, Jesus, stands
With all engaging charms;
Hark! how he calls his tender lambs,
And folds them in his arms."

O how I did love that hymn! and I seemed to understand that they were not literal lambs. There were no other churches near the village where we lived, but there was a Baptist chapel about four miles from there. When I was a little child, indeed long before I was born, there was an old lady who went by the name of Dame Terry, a christian woman, and she used to go to that chapel; and in course of time one and another from the surrounding villages went and were brought into the church. There was one man in the village where I lived who was called the first fruits of the church where I was a member. After he became a member he used to hold a prayer meeting at his house in the week; I do not know how often. One evening a cousin of mine came to our house and said she wanted to go and hear that man, and asked my mother if she would let me go with her, as she did not like to go alone. My mother consented, so she took me by the hand and led me into the house, which was near by. It was more for curiosity than anything else. Soon after we went in, the man took a chair and stood it in the middle of the room, and then knelt in the chair and prayed. Then he read and sang. There was no one there but she and I, and I shall never forget it. That same person was baptized a few months before I was, and one of that man's sons was baptized at the same time as myself, nearly forty years afterwards. As time passed on there were others brought into the church. Then they leased a house on a place in the village where my mother was born and brought up, and they had it made into a chapel. That was the chapel that I was brought into. It stood on the place that was my home, which we left when we came to Canada. That is why I prized it so much, and my husband knew it. When the church was constituted they opened a Sunday School and taught children in the morning, and in the afternoon and evening there was preaching. I went to the school a few times. There used to be three, and sometimes four, men to teach the children. They would give the children spellings to learn during the week, and then they would hear them say them, and then read a little lesson. That was all they did. The rest of the morning the men would read, sing and pray, and I never forgot some words they used in their prayers, which were these, "O Lord, draw nigh unto us, and help us to draw near unto thee." O how I did ponder those words in my mind, as I knew that God would not come down on the earth. Since I have known the Lord I have thought how little we know what is going on in the mind of a child. I used to wonder what those meetings were like, as the people were spoken of as a despised people, as though they met together for something that was not good. O what a wish I had to go! but my mother never would let me. In a very few years, I suppose, the place was too small for them, so they bought a piece of ground about two miles from there, and had quite a large chapel built, and were there quite a number of years. Then there was a division, and the old members came back to the old chapel, not long before I went into it. I have many times thought in what wonderful ways God works for his people, to bring them to himself. I have written these things for you to read, as I feel that you will be interested in them.

Now I will go back to the time when I was about five years old. I may not have been more than four. I cannot tell my age exactly. One night I awoke, and my face was nearly buried in the bed-clothes, and from out of the top of the clothes I saw that there was a very bright light in the room, at which I wondered, as a candle was never taken into the children's room, but was always stood on the mantlepiece in my parents' room. I listened a little while, but did not hear a sound of anything. Then I put the clothes from my face, and O what a sight I saw! As I lay on my bed I faced the east, and from north to south there were tables a little distance apart, and both sides of those tables were filled with people. The tables continued as far as I could see, and died away in the distance, as it seemed to be miles. At one of those tables there sat near me three men. They had white hair and beards, and their countenances looked beautiful. They appeared to be talking lovingly to each other, and it was revealed to me that those three men were Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and the people all seemed to be waiting for something. As I was but a child, I felt a little afraid, and buried myself in the bed clothes again. When I looked out again it was so dark that I could not even see the window. I did not sleep any more that night, but watched for the morning; and when it was light enough for me to see around the room I was so surprised, after what I had seen, to find all things just as they were when I went to bed. I did not say anything about it to any one, but kept it to myself, and pondered it in my mind. No, I did not tell it to any one until I went to Southampton, in 1890, where I believe the Lord led me to unburden my mind. O how I wish I had the ability and strength to write the history of my life! but I feel that I can only touch upon things as I go along.

As I grew in years I would sometimes wish that I were a better girl, as I felt that I must be a great deal better than I was or I could never go to heaven. When in my fifteenth year I went to live out, and the man where I went to live was an Infidel; but I did not know what an Infidel was, until one morning I was horrified to hear him tell his children they were not to read the Bible any more. For about five years and a half I did not go into a church-house more than two or three times, and that was the English Church. After that, for several years, I lived with Church of England people, when I used to go to their meeting once on Sunday, and would feel very tired of the preaching before it was over. After a while I became much dissatisfied, as there seemed to be a something that I wanted, but could not tell what. I mentioned this to an old lady that I used to go to school to, and she said, "Now, Rebecca, you go to church and take the sacrament, and you will feel so comfortable afterwards." But I said, "O dear, I do not feel fit to do that." She said, "Why, you have nothing to do; only when you get into the church, try and think of all the sins that you have committed, and then when you have taken the sacrament you will feel so comfortable." So when the time came I went, and tried to do as she had said, and after that I felt much worse. When I returned home I got the Bible to see what it said, and I read, "He that eateth and drinketh unworthily, eateth and drinketh damnation to himself." That was the way I felt, so that I never went again. Time passed on, and I was married. My husband would often go away of an evening till towards midnight, and leave me alone. I would sew until I got tired, then I would read the Bible. I commenced to read the Old Testament, but did not find much to comfort me, so I turned to the New Testament, which I thought more interesting, although I could not understand a great deal of that. One Sunday afternoon when my husband was in the house I was reading, when I came to these words that Jesus said to the woman, "Neither do I condemn thee; go, and sin no more." I thought, O! if I could have those words spoken to me by Jesus, what would I give? I called the attention of my husband to them, as I thought them so beautiful, and that he would be interested too; but he did not take any notice of them. I had two little children, when my husband was laid by with rheumatism for a long time, and I had very poor health too. I sewed to bring in a living. About this time I had a dream. I thought that I was walking along some place, and there was a dreadful earthquake, the earth opened as close to my feet as it possibly could without taking me in. The shock awoke me, and I felt so glad it was a dream, as I felt I was not fit to die; and it set me working for my life. When some months had passed I dreamed that I was dying. O! the feeling was awful, as I felt myself to be sinking, sinking, sinking, and I thought I was going to the bottomless pit. In the twinkling of an eye I was taken up to the gates of heaven, and at those gates there stood two men alike. One took hold of one of my arms, and the other took hold of my other arm, and led me along an immense archway. The workmanship was magnificent, and the huge pillars were of polished stone. We walked along very steadily, and I was admiring what I saw. Then I looked forward and saw the opening at the other end; and as we drew nearer, there were people there. When we had walked a little farther I saw a great number of people, and Jesus in the midst, raised above the people, and every eye was fixed on him. O how I did long to get there! but before we reached the end I awoke, feeling very happy. I thought O! if that is dying the death of the righteous, I will try and not commit any more sin. So I set to work in good earnese; but, O dear! Some times I would have a piece of sewing that I could not finish until after twelve o'clock on a Saturday night, and then I would think, "O dear! I have broken the Sabbath;" and I found I got worse instead of better. After a while I gave up trying, and thought I would wait till I could have more time to attend to those things. So I struggled along until I had five children, when the youngest, a dear little boy, was taken sick. He was ill a month, and then died. When he had been sick about two weeks, one evening when his father came into the house I had my babe on my lap, and he appeared to be very ill. I said to his father, "Do go and ask some one to come in, as baby is so sick I am afraid he is going to die;" but he said, "I don't know who to ask; and another thing, I can't afford to have any one here." So I thought I was in duty bound to obey him. I was feeling quite sick too, so that I really needed nursing myself. I sat up of a night as long as I could, and then took him and lay down on the bed. Early one morning I saw that he was dying, and I told his father, who then went for a woman. When the woman had come, one of the neighbors, seeing that something was the matter, came to the door to inquire, and the woman told her the baby was dead. I heard her say, "O! never mind the baby; I was afraid it was the woman." I thought, O! my baby was fit to die, but I am not. I was feeling quite sick and weak. When eight weeks had passed away I felt such a desire to go to meeting, and I asked my husband if I might go. He consented, and I got ready and started. But I had not gone far from the house when I felt a great weakness come over me, and I stood still and did not know what to do. I felt I could not walk to the meeting, and I did not want to go back to the house. The Baptist chapel was just across the road from where I stood, and it was their time to commence, so I thought, I will go in there. I will go in at the back door, and it may be I shall not be noticed. When I got to the door the deacon, Charles Capon, commenced to give out a hymn. I cannot tell how I felt. It seemed that that place was so full of something that I could scarcely breathe, and such a weight hung over me that I could not so much as lift up my eyes. The singing seemed very solemn, and yet so sweet. When he gave out the fourth verse I burst into tears, wondering how it was that he gave out that hymn, as no one knew I was coming, for I did not know myself five minutes before. I will write the hymn.

"Now shall my inward joys arise,
And burst into a song;
Almighty love inspires my heart,
And pleasure tunes my tongue.

God on his thirsty Zion hill
Some mercy drops has thrown;
And solemn oaths have bound his love
To shower salvation down.

Why do we then indulge our fears,
Suspicions and complaints?
Is he a God, and shall his grace
Grow weary of his saints?

Can a kind woman e'er forget
The infant of her womb,
And 'mongst a thousand tender thoughts
Her suckling have no room?

Yet, saith the Lord, should nature change
And mothers monsters prove;
Zion still dwells upon the heart
Of everlasting love,

Deep on the palms of both my hands
I have engraved her name;
My hands shall raise her ruined walls,
And build her broken frame."

I cannot tell how I felt during the service. I thought it was a heaven below for those that were there, but not for me. I sat in tears nearly all the time, and when the service closed an old gentleman came to me and held out his hand to me to shake hands. That made my tears flow afresh, as I thought, O! if you knew what a sinner I am you would never take me by the hand. Although he was quite a stranger to me, I felt such a love for that man as I never felt toward any one before. As soon as I had parted from him and turned to go down the aisle these words came to me, "My heart is fixed, O God; my heart is fixed." I felt that I could join with the psalmist, and say with all my heart, O yes, and so is mine. Then followed the words, "A day in thy courts is better than a thousand. I had rather be a doorkeeper in the house of my God, than to dwell in the tents of wickedness." I felt I could say again with the psalmist, O yes, and so would I. I thought it was so strange that those passages of Scripture came to me when I had not been thinking of them. I was loth to leave that place, and lingered around that door to the very last, not knowing when I should be able to go again. I would have been there every time those doors were open if I could. Yes, there my mind was fixed, and I never wished to go anywhere else, as I never had a doubt, but felt sure, that they were the good people spoken of in the Bible. But how they became good I did not know. With these feelings I returned home, but how different from the feelings I had when I went away from home. O how I did think of those people, and wish I could meet with them; or if I could do something for them it would make me feel happy; even if I could only go and sweep up the place for them; and even that I did not feel worthy of doing. On a Sunday evening, when my children were in bed, I would sit and think of those people, and wish that I could go and hear the preaching. One Sunday evening as I sat in that frame of mind, these words came to me, "Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness; for they shall be filled." They came to me so forcibly that I was quite startled, and looked around to see if any one was near me. I thought them beautiful words, but I did not understand them, as I could not think they were for me. I had never heard or read anything about the Lord's people or their experience; but I thought of them a great deal. When some weeks had passed away I heard that my uncle was expected to preach on a certain Sunday, so I asked if I might go and hear him preach once, and I got consent. When the time came I eagerly went to hear him, and to my dismay and sorrow he seemed to cut me off from everything that was good. In his discourse he said, "There are some people who teach their children to say the Lord's prayer, when at the same time they and their children may be children of the devil." Then he quoted this passage of Scripture, "And Jesus said, Ye are of your father the devil, and the lusts of your father ye will do." I felt that I was the guilty one, as all he said seemed to be for me, and his sharp eyes seemed to be on me all the time. I went home feeling cut off and cast down. When the time came for my children to go to bed I told them not to say the Lord's prayer any more, as I thought it was not a proper prayer for little children to say, but only say the verses; and they willingly obeyed. I could not get to chapel again for some time, and my mind was so much troubled I did not know what to do. I wept much, and tried to pray for mercy; but I did not let any one see me weep if I could help it. My husband sometimes would see I had been weeping, and he would be angry, as he thought I had been weeping for my dear baby. Weeks passed away, and I grew worse and worse. My sins appeared before me like mountains, and I could not say anything to any one, as I thought that there was no one in the world so bad as I. I felt this way for some weeks, until I thought that every one could see me just as I could see myself. I thought that even little children looked at me with astonishment. I felt that as long as I lived I should be despised by every one, and when I died hell would be my portion, and a just one, too. O! my dear readers, who can describe the feelings of a poor soul when brought to this stopping place? I answer that it must be felt to know anything about it. In this state of mind one night I went up stairs to go to bed, and before lying down I thought I would try and ask for mercy once more.

So I kneeled down beside the bed, and said, "O Lord, have mercy upon me." Here I paused, as I did not know what to call myself, as I felt myself to be something worse than a sinner; but finally I said, "A poor, miserable sinner." Then I arose from my knees and laid down on the bed. Whether it was immediately after I laid down, or whether I swooned away, I cannot tell, but it seemed that some one bent over me, and spoke with such a voice as I cannot describe, only as a powerful voice, as I felt it from my head to my feet, and raised me up from the bed. The words were, "Thy footstool shall be in heaven, not in hell." I cannot describe my feelings at that time, but I thought it wonderful; and as soon as I came to myself a little, I began to wonder if it had awakened my husband. I turned my head to see, but was glad to find that he was still sleeping. Then I listened if I could hear the children, as I thought that wonderful voice enough to awaken all in the house; but I could not hear a sound, so I lay thinking for some time. Then I fell into a comfortable sleep, and when I awoke those wonderful words were with me. In the morning when I arose everything seemed to be changed; and when I sought for my burden of sin it could not be found. Instead of expecting every moment to be cast into hell, my eyes were raised toward heaven, with a hope that the Lord would forgive me my sins, and take me to heaven when I die. I went along in this way for a little while, then I became very anxious to know who were the elect, as I had read, "For the elect's sake those days shall be shortened." One day I heard one woman say to another, "Was that man a Baptist that preached on Sunday?" She said, "O yes." She said, "I asked you because I did not hear him say anything about election." That caused me to wonder the more. I went to chapel when I could for about nine months before I heard a word about election. Then Mr. Wells, pastor of the S. Tabernacle, London, and Mr. Banks, from London, came to the anniversary; and Mr. Wells told his experience about election, which suited me, and gave me to see who they were; but I did not think that I should ever be one of them. Mr. Banks told some of my feelings as he quoted these words, "Like a crane or a swallow, did I chatter. I did mourn as a dove." "I am like a sparrow alone upon the house top." There was a person attended the meetings who, I afterwards believed, watched me very closely, and when she saw that I had no hymn-book she gave me one. I will call her my friend, as I may have to speak of her as I go along. I soon began to search the book to see if I could find the hymn that I have mentioned, and to my great delight I found it; and while searching for that hymn I came across the one commencing,

"When I can read my title clear
To mansions in the sky."

I thought, Is it possible that any one ever can do that? I thought if I could do that I would be willing to endure all that might follow. But little did I know at that time what there was in store for me. It was but seldom that I could get out to hear preaching, and I did feel to want to go so badly. One Sunday evening in the winter, when it was very dark, so that no one could see me go (as I knew if they did they would tell my husband), I made haste and got my children to bed, and went out very softly; and when I was about half way to the chapel, these words came to me so sweetly, "If I may but touch the hem of his garment I shall be made whole." I thought they were beautiful words, and could not help wishing I had lived when the Savior was upon earth, as it might be he would have spoken a kind word to me. But I did not understand at that time. I went and stood in the back part of the chapel, where no one could see me, and I heard the sermon very sweetly. Then I returned home, and no one knew that I had been away that evening.

I traveled on in this way for some time, with doubts and fears at times, until one day these words came to me so startling, "Every idle word that man shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment." I thought, Alas! alas! poor me! I am lost and undone, as I shall not be able to stand in that great day. I thought at that time that the judgment was after death. For many months O what tears I shed! I cried because it was of no use crying. I often got the hymn-book and read the hymn commencing, "Rock of ages;" and when I came to the verse, "Could my tears forever flow," O what trouble I was in! I went on in that way until I felt myself to be near my grave, and people thought me to be in consumption. No one knew what ailed me. I did so hate my past life, and often wished I were a bird or an animal that had no soul to be lost. I could not bear to think an evil thought or speak an idle word, and I hated to hear any one else do so. I did so wish to be good and try to gain the favor of God. But I lived to prove that all my efforts failed, for when I would do good, evil was present with me, so that I could not do the things that I would. I had not lived in any open sin. I never was fond of dress, or of going to any place of amusement; but it was this wicked and deceitful heart of mine that was the cause of all my trouble. I remember at one time, when I was a young woman, of being told that a young person I knew had fallen into disgrace, and O how I did feel that monster pride rise up within me, as I thought within myself, I am not like that young woman. I have kept myself from falling into disgrace. But, my dear readers, when I was brought to see myself as I stood in the sight of a just and holy God, O how I hung my head in shame. Yes, it was then that I was made to see that it was the Lord that rules on high that had kept me from evil; and adored be his great and holy name for showing me these things.

"Why was I made to hear thy voice,
And enter where there's room?"

This trouble lasted for some months. The idea I had of heaven at that time was this: I knew that there were a people that were ordained to enter heaven, but I did not think they were sinners like myself. I thought they were the righteous, the elect, that are spoken of in the Scriptures, and that they would be nearest to the throne of God and the Lamb; that all the sinners are to be judged at the last great day; that God would be pleased to have mercy on some, and take them to heaven; that they would be round about those others, looking on, but not joining with them in their hymns of praise to God and the Lamb. All the hope I had at that time was that if I might but be one of those I would be satisfied. At length it pleased the Lord to give me a little comfort. One Sunday Mr. Inward, the pastor of the church, in the course of his sermon spoke of the last judgment, in which he said that the Lord's people would not be judged at the last day. I did not feel that I was one of those people, but in some way my mind was relieved, but not fully satisfied for many years afterwards, which I may speak of at some future time.

One night in my sleep I heard some one call, "Timothy," three times, and I awoke, and wondered what it could mean. The next day I got the Bible, and as soon as I could I read all the epistles to Timothy, and was somewhat comforted in so doing. At another time this Scripture came to me, "I see men as trees walking." I again wondered what that could mean; but I was brought to see as that poor man was literally, so it was with me in regard to heavenly things; I could not see them clearly. There is a large field here that I might go over, and speak of my joys and my sorrows, my conflicts and cares, and of the wonderful way in which the Lord appeared for me, so that I might go and hear his word preached. But I must pass them by, as I have done much before. I did love those people and could rejoice to hear the preaching, though it was for others that I rejoiced, and not for myself, as I could not see that I could ever have an interest in so great a salvation. There seemed to be something very mysterious about it all. One Sunday Mr. Inward preached from this Scripture, "He shall feed his flock like a shepherd; he shall gather his lambs with his arms, and carry them in his bossom, and shall gently lead those that are with young." I was so overcome by that sermon, especially the last clause, that I nearly fainted. Some of the people noticed me, and spoke to me on leaving the chapel, but I did not tell them the cause. I did not greatly rejoice, as there seemed to be a great mystery still hanging over it all. At one time I was sick, and my friend asked me if she might wait on me, for which I felt very thankful. Her kindness was very acceptable, as I was situated, having at that time five little ones to provide for. So time passed on for some months, when one afternoon my friend came into the house, and calling me by name, said, "I came to see if I can do a little sewing for you, as I am sure you must have a great deal to do for all your little ones." I thanked her, and gave her a garment to work upon; and as we were sewing and talking together, in some way or other I commenced to tell her of my experience, though not aware that I was doing so. She said to me, "Have you a hope that you are a child of God?" Those words came to me with a great surprise; and as she spoke there was something passed over me like a flash of lightning, and struck me dumb. I tried to answer her, but my lips quivered, and I could not speak. My friend was very busy sewing, so that she did not notice me. Finally I sighed deeply, and then said, "O! I don't know." During the few moments that I was speechless there was much opened up to me of what I had passed through. But I do not believe that it was those words as they fell from that person's lips that made me speechless, but that it was that flash of light that attended them that took away my speech. But when I could speak again my tongue seemed to be loosed, and I at once began to speak of the exercises of my mind. My friend, looking at me with surprise, said, "Why, you ought to go before the church." That was new to me, as I had never heard of such a thing. Then she explained it to me, and I at once felt a desire to be one with those people, but thought that would never be my happy lot, as I was situated. I cannot express the joy I felt at that time, as all things appeared new to me, and it seemed that I could look back and see all the way the Lord had brought me, and how he had made me see wonderful things, and how gloriously he had redeemed his church with his most precious blood. I could rejoice in God as my Savior and my Redeemer, and could now read my title clear to mansions in the skies. O! it was a place of broad rivers and streams to my poor soul. I was like a bird freed from its cage. But I cannot speak of half that I saw at that time. I could understand the preaching better, too; and those dear people seemed nearer to me, and I nearer to them. I passed a few weeks in that happy state of mind; then my friend told me there were to be two persons baptized, and she would so like for me to go, as I had never seen any

THE SABBATH.

WILL Elder F. A. Chick please give his views on Sunday, or the "Sabbath," as it is called? The Seventh Day Adventists are quite brave here. They sent us a pamphlet entitled "Rome's Challenge, or, Why do Protestants keep Sunday?" It was copied from The Catholic Mirror, the official organ of Cardinal Gibbons and of the Papacy in the United States, charging Protestants with following after Catholicism. We wanted to see some able writer upon the subject. Yours in hope,

MRS. T. M. SHEARER.

NORTH YAKIMA, Wash., Dec. 21, 1894.

REPLY.

BY way of introduction to what we desire to say upon the subject proposed by our sister, we desire to copy some extracts from the pamphlet referred to above by her:

A gentleman here [Newark, Ohio] by the name of D. M. Guy, who has been much interested in our meetings [we suppose the writer means Seventh Day Adventist meetings], has written Cardinal Gibbons asking the following questions:

1st. Was the Sabbath changed to the first day?

2d. If so, by what authority, and when?

3d. Did Christ or the apostles declare a change in the day?

4th. Are not Protestants inconsistent in keeping the first day as the Sabbath and not the other feasts?

Mr. Guy received the following answer:

CARDINAL'S RESIDENCE,
408 S. CHARLES ST., BALTIMORE, MD.,
Nov. 14, 1894.

MR. D. M. GUY—DEAR SIR:—Your letter to Cardinal Gibbons is received, and he bids me answer:

1st. The seventh day Sabbath was changed to the first day.

2d. It was done by the sanction and authority of the Catholic Church. At first the custom obtained in some localities. It became general in the fourth century.

3d. There is no declaration of Christ or the apostles on the subject.

4th. Protestants are inconsistent, as you say.

Yours very truly,

C. F. THOMAS, Chancelor.

There is considerable other matter in the pamphlet, but as it does not especially belong to this part of the subject we forbear to quote further. We desire to call special attention to these statements of Cardinal Gibbons. His declarations must be considered as authoritative from the Romish standpoint; and he says briefly and emphatically above, first, that the day was changed; second, that it was done by the sanction and authority of the Catholic (or Romish) Church; third, that Christ and the apostles had nothing to do with this change; and fourth, that Protestants who accept this one feast day of the church of Rome are inconsistent, in that they do not observe the other feasts also appointed by the church. Protestants profess to take the Bible as their only guide; and yet here they follow not the Bible, but the dictum of the church of Rome, which claims her traditions and authority to be equal, and in some respects superior, to the Bible. It seems to us that so far as the charge of inconsistency against Protestants is concerned, the facts fully sustain it.

As far as the controversy between Romanists and Protestants is concerned we have nothing to do. We are neither Romanists nor Protestants; but it is our joy to know that we as a people, under various names indeed, but with oneness of sentiment in all that is essential to the faith of Christ, have never been one with Rome, but ever since the papacy began have not ceased to testify against her as the embodiment of antichrist on earth. All Protestant sects had their origin in Rome, and five centuries ago were one with that apostate church. Out of a false church surely the bride of Christ, the church of God, could not arise. This is one of the main reasons why we can never receive the ordinances nor the ministrations of any Protestant sect. They all came out of Rome, and have no higher authority than Rome. Much of Rome has been retained by those sects which sprang out of her. Baptisms, ordinations and church organizations can never rise higher than their origin. If Rome was antichrist five centuries ago, then Protestant baptisms, ordinations and organizations cannot be such as are authorized by the God of heaven. As Cardinal Gibbons well says, Protestants are inconsistent in receiving the first day Sabbath (as they denominate it) from Rome, and at the same time refusing all else that Rome holds out to them.

But Cardinal Gibbons, if he were interrogated, would also assert another truth concerning the inconsistency of Protestants. He would assert, and with absolute truth, too, that the apostolic baptism was dipping, and that Rome, and Rome alone, is responsible for the introduction of sprinkling to take the place of dipping. Cardinal Gibbons will have no more hesitancy in saying this than he did in saying that the church had changed the Sabbath, because that church owns no allegiance to the Bible more than to her traditions; and her claim is to Protestant ears that most abhorrent one, that she has a right to change times and seasons and ordinances. Protestants take Romish Sabbaths and Romish baptisms, and give them no credit, for their own property. Some would call this, if practiced in the ordinary affairs of life, by a name bordering on stealing.

It is, on the other hand, our rejoicing that we have received nothing from Rome but bitter persecution, and that we owe nothing to Rome except to pray for our enemies, and for all who evil entreat us and despitefully use us. It is our joy to turn to the Scriptures alone for instruction in doctrine and practice, and to the Holy Spirit, and not to the church, either true or false, for the interpretation of the Scriptures. We may well ask, if we must have a college of church dignitaries to interpret to us the words of Jesus, of prophets and of apostles, who shall be found capable of interpreting their interpretations? Let us hear what our Father in heaven says directly, and not through the Babel of human voices, which all alike claim to tell us what our Father above has really said. Let us beware lest those who seek to expound the Scriptures take the place of the Scriptures themselves in our attention. For us all there is a need of warning. We are all so prone to trust in the seen rather than the unseen things. Even an apostle would not be followed any farther than he followed Christ.

But we are well aware that these thoughts are rather out of the line of the inquiry proposed by our sister. We hope, however, that they may not seem out of place. Time and space would forbid that we should enter into any extended discussion of what is called the Sabbath question. It has, moreover, been often handled in this paper. Some time during this past year there was a very complete and very forcible presentation of this matter published in the SIGNS. We do not now recall the number, nor by whom it was written, but think it was sent from Tennessee. We do not, therefore, desire to again cover all that ground, even if we had the ability to do so, which we have not, but will briefly suggest a few things.

The Mosaic law never enjoined the keeping of the Sabbath upon any people but the Jews. However needful for the welfare of man and beast a rest from toil of one day in seven may be, it is certain that in its ceremonial, religious aspect it was enjoined upon that typical people only. While no doubt physical and moral benefit to that people resulted from the observance of the law of the Sabbath, yet its chief object was as a type to point forward to the better spiritual rest into which they do enter who have ceased from their own works. But while the Sabbath pointed to this rest from our own works, and was designed to do so, the carnal Jews so perverted this law, as they did also all the other types, that they made the doing of this law of the Sabbath one of the works by which they hoped to be saved. What a commentary this is upon the utter perversity of fallen man, that he should turn the type of absolute rest from the works of the law into a work of the law by which he must be saved!

Paul found this to be the condition of things among the Jews; yea, it had been his own condition prior to the revelation of Christ in him. But now Christ had been so revealed in him that there was no room left for the types, except as types, by referring to which he could better preach Christ. The substance had so filled the whole mind and heart of Paul that the shadows must flee away. The shadows witness that there is a sun; but nevertheless when the sun appears and bears testimony to its own presence the shadows disappear. Moreover, as Paul went through the churches of Christ themselves he found much of legality still remaining. Many had not been brought out into the clear light of the word as he had been. He found many of whom he had to say, "My little children, of whom I travail in birth again until Christ be formed in you;" that is, until they should be freed from all legal hope, and should come to trust and rejoice only in Jesus.

Paul knew that every type, including also this of the Sabbath day, was fulfilled in Jesus. Jesus had said, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest" (or a Sabbath); and so Paul wrote, "There remaineth therefore a rest [a Sabbath] to the people of God." This Sabbath, unlike the type, shall never end, and give place to another week of toil. This Sabbath, this rest, is forever and ever. This is the christian's privilege and joy. How sweet is this rest which shall not be ended. What a blessing to understand and realize what this rest in Christ means. They who would go back to observing days and times (even Sabbath days) are returning to their toil. They are ceasing to rest. How much this robs them of! How it dishonors him who had given them rest! How completely this would deny the truth which God had declared, that the works were finished! Therefore Paul, while he exhorted to forbearance and love between the weak, who still felt bound to observe the day, and the strong, who saw their rest in Christ clearly, yet was very earnest and bold in testifying that days were nothing, but Christ was all.

Paul exhorted his brethren very earnestly, because he had their interests at heart, and loved them as brethren, to turn away from the bondage of observing days to the liberty of Christ. Their weakness in this matter was a loss to them. Paul desired that they should receive and enter into all the fullness of truth and grace that was in Jesus Christ. He well knew that if Christ were all and in all to any man, that man henceforth would not be subject to ordinances. Some brethren to-day may not see this matter clearly, even as some in Paul's day did not; but as Paul still loved them as brethren, and was only desirous that they should not miss the joy which he had himself found in coming to see in Christ the fulfilling of all Sabbaths to him, so now we hold such brethren in full fellowship and love, and only desire that they may be able to throw off this yoke of bondage through Christ, which strengtheneth them. We would that all our brethren in Christ should have, not one Sabbath day in seven only, but that to them every day should be a Sabbath, since every day Christ is theirs and they are Christ's.

To sum it all up, the Jewish Sabbath of the seventh day was never changed by divine or apostolic authority to the first day of the week. There could be no Sabbath before the six days of labor, because there can never be such a thing as rest until after the toil has made us weary. A first day Sabbath, therefore, would be an absurdity. Cardinal Gibbons tells the truth when he says that the change was made by the sanction and authority of the Romish Church. Still further, the whole spirit and letter of the New Testament teachings is that christians through Christ are free from the law of the seventh day or Jewish Sabbath.

Still further, we as Baptists do not cease from labor upon the first day of the week, or any other day, because the Lord has sanctified it as a holy day, but solely because we must be law-abiding citizens, and because it is needful for man and beast to have rest from toil, and because we desire to meet for the public worship of God at least that often; and the day in which by law we are commanded to abstain from needless toil is the most suitable one upon which to meet for worship.

IMPRESSIONS TO PREACH.

A BROTHER, as will be seen by his letter on the 60th page, desires our advice on that part of his communication which relates to impressions upon his mind relative to preaching the gospel. This is a matter in which we feel a delicacy, especially as we are not personally acquainted with the brother. The work of calling, qualifying and thrusting into the ministry such men as God will approve, belongs exclusively to the Lord Jesus Christ, as Head of his church and Lord of his harvest. In this sentiment we are sustained by the Scriptures and by all Old School Baptists, and opposed by nearly every other religious order of people on the earth. As a general thing we may with propriety not only advise but earnestly exhort every child of God to walk in all things in obedience to the authority of the King of Zion; but to exhort or advise one or another to preach, or to take any special position in the church, is quite another thing. That many have had serious trials of mind about preaching, who, as events have proved, were not called to the work, there can be no doubt; and in many such cases, perhaps, but little encouragement or advising would have palmed them on the church as ministers, whom God had not qualified for any such station. We are confident that those whom he calls to preach will have to preach; there is no retreat. However illiterate or destitute of speaking gifts, if called of God thereto, they shall go unto all to whom he sends them, and whatsoever he commands them they shall speak. We advise no brother to resist such impressions of mind as are in harmony with the account given in the Scriptures of the manner in which those were exercised whom God called in former ages to the great work; but we do think it a brother can comfortably be anything else than a little, despised, unpopular Old School Baptist minister, it is evidence that he is not called. If, however, he can be nothing else, and feels in heart and soul ready to forsake all for Christ, and to endure hardness as a good soldier, and count not his own life dear unto himself, so that he might finish his course with joy, and the ministry which he has received of the Lord Jesus, to testify the gospel of the grace of God, not all the powers of earth can keep him back.

The exercises related by the brother are such as seem to us to indicate that the Lord has him in hand preparatory to sending him forth to feed his sheep and his lambs. We are perfectly satisfied to leave the issue with him.

THE ATONEMENT.

BY one offering Christ forever perfected them that are sanctified. He has, beyond all doubt, put away all the sins of all the children of God; and he is of God made unto them Wisdom, and Righteousness, and Sanctification, and Redemption, and they are complete in him. In none of these respects, nor indeed in any other, can they be still in their sins. So far as the demands of the law and divine justice extended, they died with Christ, and with him arose from the dead. With him they were put to death in the flesh, and quickened and justified in the Spirit. But in an experimental view of the travel of the saints, they are subject to much of what they very improperly call darkness; for what they call darkness is that by which they see the corruption and depravity of their own carnal natures; and our Lord instructs us that whatever maketh manifest is light. When we hear them say their hearts are full of depravity, &c., we understand them to mean that their carnal nature is full of depravity; that in their flesh dwelleth no good thing. Truly it is the privilege of saints to look away from self and nature to Christ, in whom they have redemption and perfection; but there are times when they cannot avoid groaning like the apostle, being burdened, and with him they cry, "Who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" It is consoling to know that through Jesus Christ they shall be delivered, and that with their mind they serve the law of God, notwithstanding with the flesh they serve the law of sin.

one baptized, and that she would do all she could for me, so that I might go. The way was made clear for me so that I was able to go, and O how delighted I was! I thought it most beautiful. I did so wish that I could be baptized, too, but tried to put the thought away, as I could not see how I could ever be made so happy, and felt that I would not dare to mention such a thing. So time passed on for a few weeks. One Sunday Mr. Inward, in the course of his sermon, spoke of Peter following the Lord afar off, and said that he did not think Peter was the only person that followed the Lord afar off, as he thought when one had tasted that the Lord was gracious, and did not follow him in his appointed ways, that person followed the Lord afar off. When he said the last few words there was a sharp pain went through my heart, so that I could hardly keep from crying out. From that time baptism was so impressed upon my mind that I could not rest. I soon felt the power of those words of the poet,

"Through floods and flames, if Jesus leads,
I'll follow where he goes."

I asked my friend if she would speak to one of the deacons for me, as I felt such a desire to be one with them, which she readily did during the week. On the Sunday afterwards I started out to go to chapel, and when I had got about half of the way these words came to me, "Many are called, but few chosen." These words came to me like a blow, and stopped me, and when I came to myself I was standing still in the road, feeling badly. I said within myself, How do I know that I am chosen? I did not know whether to go forward or to return home. But I went to chapel, although I did not get any comfort, as those words were uppermost in my mind, and I felt in a great state because I had thought of going before the church. As soon as I could see my friend I asked her to tell the deacon that I could not come, as I was feeling so very badly about it; but I did not tell her why. For two or three weeks I was in a terrible state of mind. Then these words came to me, "As he was yet a coming the devil threw him down, and tare him." I wondered so much what they could mean. Then it was shown me so plainly that it was Satan that spoke those words to me which stopped me from going to the church. After that my desire to go was greater than ever. I felt, O! if I were to die at a certain time, how could I meet my Lord, not having obeyed his command? About this time I dreamed two dreams. First, I dreamed that I received a letter, and that it came from the Lord; and when I opened the envelope and took out the letter it was cut in narrow strips, not quite asunder, but resembling a fringe; and I thought how shall I be able to read it? Then I laid it on a table and began to place the strips together, and when I had done a little piece I read these words, "Because I live, ye shall live also." I gave such a start for joy that I awoke, feeling very happy. But I could not help wishing that I could have read more. At another time I dreamed that I went outside of the door of the house where I lived, and I looked up at the sky, and there I saw a white lion and a white lamb lying down together, at which I looked and wondered. Then I turned my eyes toward the west, and there I saw a very black cloud rising, and it grew till it got to such an immense thickness that I thought we were going to have a very heavy thunder storm. As I stood looking at the black cloud, there arose up from behind it a very bright, silvery looking cloud, and it grew and spread so fast that I soon lost sight of the black cloud; and as I stood looking at that beautiful cloud, in the midst of it I saw Jesus rising up. Then I thought, O! the world is coming to an end. But I did not feel the least alarmed, but rather rejoiced. Jesus arose higher and higher, until I could see the whole of him, and the sight was glorious. Then Jesus came out from the cloud and descended to the earth, and I walked away to meet him; but in going along I awoke feeling very happy. It brought to my mind the words that Jesus said to Caiaphas, "Hereafter ye shall see the Son of man sitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven." I went on for a few weeks until I could stay away no longer. I asked my friend to speak for me again, and she was pleased to do so. I went before the church and tried to tell them a little of what I have written. When I had told it I was asked to go into the vestry for a few minutes; but how I went there, or what my feelings were while I sat there, I cannot describe. I felt between life and death, as I felt my life hung on what they would say to me. But when the deacon came to the door and asked me to come in, I thought that I could see in his countenance that all was right; so I went in again before them, and they told me I was received, and that I was to be baptized on the last Sunday in the month. O what a relief it was to me. But how I passed the time I cannot tell, as I felt if I could but live to be baptized I would not mind about anything else. And how good the Lord was to me! The mountains were made to depart, and the hills that I so much dreaded were removed, and the way was made plain for me. I did not so much as have to ask permission. O no! that was all done for me by my friend. So at length the time arrived, and we started to go six miles to the chapel. When we arrived who should I meet to dress me for baptism but an old person that I went to school to when I was a little girl. I had lost all trace of her for about thirty years, and when we were made known to each other what a joyful meeting we had. When I was fixed I went and sat in the chapel during the sermon, and then after the service we went to the water, and my heart was so full of love that I dared not look at anyone, or I should have burst into tears; and I did not want to do that. When we came to the water I did so want to sing a verse of a hymn, but felt too full to sing. What I wished to sing was,

"Dear Lord, the ardor of thy love
Reproves my cold delays;
And now my willing footsteps move
In thy delightful ways."

I went down into the water and was buried, and arose again, light and happy. But there was one thing I wanted to feel, that I was buried; but the minister raised me up too quickly for for that. It may have been a strange feeling; I do not know. My joys did not last long, for before the next Sunday I was the subject of many doubts and fears for a while.

After we came to Canada I was very much harrassed by the enemy of souls because we did not find any of the same faith. He would come to me in this way, "Ah! if you were a child of God you would not have been brought out here where there are none of the Lord's people;" and at times I was almost ready to believe it to be so. When we had been in Canada about three years I was very sick the most part of one summer; and one night, feeling very sick in body and troubled in mind, these words fell sweetly into my soul, "All who live to God shall die in God." I said, "Enough, my gracious Lord." Then followed, "But how do you know that you live to God?" And I said, "Because I do not live to the world." I have sometimes wondered how I could speak to the tempter in that way, but I believe that it was given me at that time, as it was ready. I did not have to look for an answer, and the tempter fled; and a sweet peace rolled into my bosom, and there was a great calm. That night I had a comfortable sleep, and awoke refreshed in body as well as in mind. I was not worried so much after that. One night I saw in my sleep a meeting-house with trees around it, and twice I saw the people going in their carriages, rich and poor together in great numbers. But it was a long time before it was brought into fulfillment, so that I began to fear that I should never see it. But the Lord was good, and I have seen it, and it has made me glad.

We came to Canada in the year 1875, and in the year 1884 my son George had a little business to do with Mr. Leitch, who was then quite a stranger to us. In their conversation religion was brought up, and when he heard what we professed he sent me the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. When I opened it and saw the words, "The sword of the Lord and of Gideon," my heart seemed to leap within me; yet I felt rather discouraged when I saw that it came from the States, as I thought there would be no way possible for me to ever hear them preach. I was in very delicate health at that time. I could read but very little, but my son and his wife read it to me, and I shed many tears over it, as I had not heard anything like that for a long time. As soon as I could I sent it to my daughters, and they were equally rejoiced as myself. We subscribed for it. As soon as the weather was favorable I went with Bertha to see Mr. Leitch, and learned about the meetings in Canada. It was after the May meeting that we went to see him, and we had a nice visit. He said the Lobo meeting was the nearest, and he thought that would be the best for us to attend. Bertha felt very anxious for us to go; so when the time drew near she said, "Mother, I am thinking of going to the meeting if I can, and would like for you to go with me if you are well enough." I felt pleased, but was somewhat worried about it, as the thought would come like this, "Now suppose you go all those miles and then not hear the truth, see what an expense it will be to your children." On the Wednesday before we were to go on Friday, as soon as I awoke in the morning these words came to me so sweetly, "Even so, Father, for so it seemed good in thy sight." I was very anxious to get the Bible and read that chapter, which I did as soon as I could, and found those beautiful words; and I was not troubled any more about going to the meeting, as I felt all would be right whether we heard the truth or not. So we went, and blessed be his great and holy name, we did hear the truth as it is in Jesus.

I could write a great deal here about my exercises of mind about writing something for the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, and about going to the meetings in Canada, and of my visit to Southampton; but I have been thinking I better not. What do you think about it, dear friends? Consider it over, and I will just write a few little things now. From the time that I first commenced to read the SIGNS I was so very much edified and blessed that it was impressed upon my mind that I ought to write something in return. But feeling my inability so much I felt I could not.

Now, dear friends, what I have written I will leave with you, and with the Lord to do with as seemeth him good, as I hope it has been with a view to his honor and glory that I have written what I have.

REBECCA WELLS.

MY DEAR SISTERS AND BROTHER IN CHRIST:—As the Lord has spared me to write what I have written, I will now try and write a few lines to you.

At the June meeting I sat down at the Lord's table for the first time since I left Southampton, and I felt very happy for about two weeks. My dear Lord seemed more precious than ever to me. Then in July I was brought down very low in the dust of self-abasement, and in the agony of my soul I cried unto the Lord and said,

O Lord, be merciful to me,
And give me peace within;
Show that thou hast o'ercome for me
The world, death, hell and sin.

Make known thy loving-kindnesss, Lord,
As thou hast done before;
The joys of thy salvation
To me again restore.

And show that thou didst die for me,
In sorrow, grief and shame,
And that in thy fair book of life
Recorded is my name.

O whisper that thou lovedst me
Before the worlds were made;
And in thy spotless person thou
My debt by suffering paid.

O tell me thou didst carry me
Through all the days of old,
And I in heaven shall sing thy praise,
To well tuned harps of god.

Then when the last great day's at hand,
Thou wilt this body raise;
And thee, while endless ages roll,
I'll love, adore and praise.

And, dear friends, after those verses came to me, the Lord drew me out of that horrible pit, and made my soul to rejoice again in his mercy that endureth forever. "Bless the Lord, O my soul; and all that is within me, bless his holy name." A few words that sister Bessie wrote me about the love of the church fell sweetly into my poor soul. It was indeed a word in season to this weary one. Now I will close, with love to you all and all the dear saints of God. Lovingly yours,

REBECCA WELLS.

JANUARY 9, 1892.

DEAR BROTHER:—The apostle Paul in his preaching and teaching came not with enticing words of man's wisdom. In another place he says, "For this cause I bow my knees unto the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named, that he would grant you, according to the riches of his glory, to be strengthened with might by his Spirit in the inner man." No teaching of man here; and, my dear brother, if the dear Lord does not teach us and guide us into the truth, all the confessions of faith in the world will be of no avail to root and ground us in the truth. I feel that I am a poor, weak worm of the dust, unworthy to take the name of the Lord on my sinful lips. Yet I have a hope that I have learned, by oftentimes painful and sometimes very comforting experience, a few of the principles of truth as laid down in the scriptural record; and when any ideas are advanced which conflict with that experience, I cannot receive them. I have no use for any of the sentiments that teach permissive decrees of the Almighty Ruler of the universe; for if he permits one thing, he permits all things, as he does not work under many systems of government; but he rules and reigns "from sea to sea, and from the river to the ends of the earth," and none have any right to say to him, What doest thou? It is surprising to me that those who profess to hold the doctrine of God our Savior, and quarrel with the religious world over their errors, cannot take the plain declarations of his word, without trying to fix it up to suit their own views, or to defend the character of the Almighty God of all worlds, who saith to Pharaoh by the mouth of his servant Moses, "Let my people go, that they may serve me." Nevertheless he said, "But I will harden his heart, that he shall not let the people go." Nine times it is repeated that God hardened Pharaoh's heart. "O!" some say, "that will not do; that would make God the author of sin; but we will say it means that God let Pharaoh harden his own heart." Well, if one fixes Scripture to suit themselves, so may another, and the Arminian has the same right in that respect. Nay, but let me rather accept God's word as it is given, and he will defend himself against all the aspersions of men. He said by the mouth of another prophet, "Now, therefore, behold, the Lord hath put a lying spirit in the mouth of all these," &c. "O!" say some, "he permitted the lying spirits to go." Then why does not the word say so? Men who talk about others being wise above what is written, and about accepting the word in all humility, should be willing to accept these Scriptures as they stand, without questioning; for if words have any meaning they are plain. The apostle did not seem to wish to have any arguments with those who opposed the doctrine of the absolute sovereignty of God; for in taking up the argument of those who said, "Why doth he yet find fault?" (if these things are so, that God's purposes are eternal, and man has neither will nor power in the matter) instead of arguing he simply stands upon the great high pedestral of God's absolute, sovereign right to do as he will with his creatures, and stops the mouths of all gainsayers with "Nay but, O man, who art thou that repliest against God?" Mark well the following solemn words, "Shall the thing formed say to him that formed it, Why hast thou made me thus? Hath not the potter power over the clay, of the same lump to make one vessel unto honor, and another unto dishonor? What if God, willing to shew his wrath, and to make his power known, endured with much long-suffering the vessels of wrath fitted to destruction!" Mark the word "fitted." Some may say they fit themselves; but I ask in all candor, How does that idea fit in with the declaration, "the thing formed," and "him that formed it?" When we seek for the old paths, let us look for them in the oldest book of truth, not muddied by the feet of commentators or theorists who make void the plain declarations of truth. Peter says by the Spirit, that Jesus was delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God, and yet by wicked hands he was slain. How fearfully solemn and mysterious is this declaration; yet it is God's own truth. Shall I try to explain it, and say that God permitted him to fall into the hands of wicked men? Nay; but let me look back, before the foundation of the world, when all the purposes of Almighty God were made sure and immutable as his throne. God says, "I change not." Think of what he said to Moses of himself, "Say unto the children of Israel, I AM hath sent me unto you." To me this is one of the most solemn declarations in the whole Bible. "I AM." Everything in earth and heaven is centered in him. Therefore when he says unto his servant Moses, "I AM hath sent you," it is as if he had said, Do not think anything about the result; that belongs to me; I am ordering and arranging events to meet my purpose. Do not be afraid of anything standing between me and the fulfillment of my purpose; for I am the one who orders and brings to pass every event that ever will or can transpire in time or eternity. Do not be afraid of Pharaoh. I will harden his heart, that I may bring all my great judgments upon Egypt; and I will get me honor and renoun in the salvation of my people, and in the destruction of your enemies. "I AM." How my mind tries to struggle and expand to be able to utter some expression that may in some small degree express the boundless magnitude of that word, I AM. But words, ideas and thoughts all stand and are lost in amazement at the view of him who sits on the circle of the universe, and before whom all nations are but as grasshoppers, and who could with one blast of his almighty power send the universe to oblivion, if it were his will. But my mind is overwhelmed in wonder and amazement in the contemplation of this Being whom we hope is our God. Like one of old I feel to say, "What is man, that thou art mindful of him, or the son of man, that thou visitest him?" Surely this is one of the greatest wonders, that he who rules the universe does condescend to take notice of such worms of the dust, and, as we humbly hope, takes us into fellowship and union with himself, and reveals himself to us, as he does not unto the world. Well may we wonder at such condescension, and be humbled low in the dust, and feel to say, O Lord, do as thou wilt, and let me be as clay in thy hands, to be moulded to thy will, and acknowledge that thou art just and right in all thy ways.

SOUTHAMPTON, Pa., Jan. 31, 1895.

DEAR BROTHER BEEBE:—I want to announce to the friends who have contributed, and those who may intend yet to contribute, for the relief of the destitute in Nebraska, that the railroad companies are now charging freight upon such shipments. The freight agent of the Pennsylvania Company has just written me that they are advised by their western connections that the necessity for forwarding such shipments to Nebraska no longer exists, as sufficient clothing and provisions have been sent into that country to supply the wants of the sufferers, and that they must now apply the tariff rates of sixty-two cents per one hundred pounds from Harrisburg to Chicago. Brother Amsberry writes me that their railroad is now charging, contrary to their promise, and that he has no money left to pay the freight on what is now there. Some money was sent him with which he paid for some. He says the shoes and stockings we sent were very much needed, and will be very helpful. He tells me they are now in very much better condition on account of the help received, and that they are indeed very grateful for it. I have received forty-seven dollars to be used for their relief, most of it coming by mail from friends at a distance. $23.05 of this has been used to get shoes. We sent from Philadelphia thirty-four pairs of shoes, of various sizes, which cost us $22.80, and a firm in Trenton, N. J., gave us more than forty pairs, as I understand, which cost twenty-five cents from there here. The balance of $23.95 I will send to be used in paying freights, and as brother Amsberry thinks will be most beneficial; and I suggest that anything that may hereafter be sent by freight for them should be paid through.

Yours as ever,

SILAS H. DURAND.

GHENT, Ky., Dec. 10, 1894.

BEAR BROTHER BEEBE:—Please find inclosed postal money order for two dollars, drawn on Middletown, N. Y., which is my subscription for the SIGNS OF THE TIMES for 1895. I have been a subscriber and reader of that paper since early in the year 1837, perhaps before any of the present editors were born; but as I near my last resting place the editorials and communications from the pens of your able correspondents become more and more sweet and precious to me. In their communications I read the great truth of the gospel so clearly and ably presented that I am often made to hope that the merciful God is now looking with favor on his Zion, and giving to her faithful and able watchmen, who willingly warn the dear saints of the approach of antichrist, and thus lead them to "the Rock that is higher than I."

Truly and affectionately yours,

H. COX.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Jan. 7, 1895.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SON—DEAR BROTHER:—Find in this two dollars to pay for the SIGNS OF THE TIMES another year. This makes about one-third of a century that I have taken your paper, and it is as ever sound and good, contending for a free grace gospel through a complete atonement made by our Lord Jesus Christ, who is the Head over all things to the church, which is his body, the fullness of him that filleth all things. As ever,

W. A. THOMPSON.

EDITORIAL NOTICES.

ALL BIBLES SENT AT OUR EXPENSE.

ON our last page will be found an advertisement of some of the sizes, styles and prices at which we can furnish Bibles. The vast variety of sizes and combinations compiled in Bibles is too great to all be given in our space.

The smaller Bibles mentioned in the advertisement are the ones most in demand, and these we will mail postage paid on receipt of price. The larger or Family Bibles, being too large and heavy to go safely by mail, will be sent by express at our expense. We are prepared to furnish most any size, style or priced Bible. If you do not find what you wish in our list published, write us a description of what you would like to have and we will send you the price.

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE.

TO MOST of our readers the above mentioned book is too well known to need any introduction or a description by us. While many of the Bibles have a Concordance appended, they are generally so condensed or abridged as to be of little or no use. Cruden's Complete Concordance, however, enables one to readily turn to any passage of Scripture of which they can call to mind two or three words, and in our opinion is the most complete and convenient as a reference book of any published. In addition, it contains many other aids in studying the Bible, as may be seen by reference to advertisement on last page. Remember, both the books there mentioned are CRUDEN'S COMPLETE.

BACK NUMBERS.

WE continue to print for the first few numbers of this volume several hundred extra copies, and all new subscribers received, as well as old ones whose names are re-entered on our list, will be sent back numbers as long as the supply lasts.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

Mrs. Hannah Northrup, wife of Mr. Joel D. Northrup, died very suddenly at her residence in Otisville, Orange Co., N. Y., about midnight of Saturday, Jan. 26th, 1895, aged 74 years, 8 months and 2 days.

About five years ago she was stricken with paralysis, depriving her of the power of speech, although her mind was clear and active until the day of her death, and she much enjoyed the companionship and conversation of her friends. By the aid of her affectionate children, who were generally able to interpret her signs and gestures, the friends who visited her were able to converse with her, and could know her mind on almost any matter. For more than fifty-five years she was the affectionate and faithful companion of her now grief-stricken and bereaved husband, having been joined in marriage on Dec. 2d, 1839, the late Elder James G. Goble performing the ceremony which legalized the union. Besides her husband, two sons and three daughters survive. They are Wm. D. and Joel, of Otisville, Mrs. Homer F. Merriam, of Jersey City, N. J., Mrs. Charles F. Blizzard, of Port Jervis, N. Y., and Mrs. Irena, widow of G. Harvey Tears, who has always lived at the old home.

Sister Northrup was a daughter of Wm. M. and Phebe Bright, and was born on May 24th, 1820. Of her father's family three survive, two sons living at South River, N. J., and the daughter, Mrs. Ruth Ricketts, now living in Washington, D. C., who is an esteemed member of the New Vernon Church, where her sister Hannah's membership has been for about thirty years, the latter having joined there by a letter of dismission from Little Washington Church, South River, N. J., in October, 1865. She was baptized by an Elder Thompson about the year 1842, and for more than half a century has enjoyed the love and confidence of the people of God who knew her. Her hoary head was a crown of glory, being found in the way of righteousness. Her children arise up and call her blessed; her husband also, and he praiseth her.

Funeral services were held at the family residence in Otisville on Wednesday p. m., 30th, and were conducted by her pastor, Elder Benton Jenkins, in the presence of a large gathering of sorrowing relatives and friends. On the day following all that was mortal of the loved one was conveyed to Washington, N. J., and deposited in the family burial p'ot.

"Why do we mourn departing friends,
Or shake at death's alarms?
'Tis but the voice that Jesus sends
To call them to his arms."

ED.

Mr. Robert E. Hoyt died at the residence of his brother-in-law, Mr. Bruster S. Crist, at Howell's Depot, Orange Co., N. Y., on Jan. 16th, 1895, after a protracted illness, aged about 67 years.

He was born in the town of Wallkill, N. Y., and was a son of Archibald and Elizabeth Wheat Hoyt. He was not a professor of religion, but was a warm friend of the Old School Baptists, and was highly esteemed by his neighbors and acquaintances. He is survived by his wife Ruth, one brother, James B. Hoyt, of Jersey City, N. J., and four sisters, Mrs. Hannah M., wife of brother A. D. Loud, of Jersey City, N. J., Mrs. Sarah E. Wheat, of Buffalo, N. Y., Miss Elizabeth H. Hoyt, of Port Jervis, N. Y., and Mrs. Adaline H., wife of Bruster S. Crist, of Howell's Depot, N. Y. A sister, Mrs. Abbie H. Wickham, died in January, 1886, and a brother, Salmon W. Hoyt, died in July, 1889.

The funeral services were held on the 18th at the house where he died, and were conducted by Elder Benton Jenkins. The interment was in the Howell's cemetery, where the mortal remains of so many of his kindred repose, who have laid them down in their last sleep.—ED.

PICTORIAL HISTORY

OF THE

UNITED STATES.

By James D. McCabe.

This work has taken rank as the Standard History of the United States. It is no dry mass of details—no bombastic effort to inflame the national pride, but a clear, vivid and brilliant narrative of the events of our history, from the discovery of the American Continent down to the present time. It gives a most interesting account of the Indians of North America, from the time of the coming of the white men. The voyages of Columbus and the explorations and discoveries of the different nations of Europe are related with graphic power. Every step of our colonial history is traced with patient fidelity, and the sources of those noble and, we trust, enduring institutions, which have made our country free and great, are shown with remarkable clearness. Then follows a clear and succinct account of our great Struggle for Independence, and the establishment of the Federal Union—the events of our career from the close of the Revolution to the administration of Harrison.

The work is printed from plain, new type, on fine calendered paper, and comprised in one octavo volume of 960 pages. It is splendidly embellished with nearly 500 fine engravings, embracing battles and other historical scenes, portraits of distinguished men, views of our principal cities, &c., &c.

Bound in Fine Silk Cloth, Plain Edges, $2.00, Post-paid.

CORRESPONDENCE.

SOUTHAMPTON, Pa., Jan. 25, 1894.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS:—I will send portions of the last two letters received by my sister Bessie from our dear sister, M. M. Hassell, of Williamston, N. C. Her name has been a familiar and loved name to the readers of the SIGNS almost as long as they have been published, and on that account they will be glad to hear from her. Beside this, there is here, as in all her letters and conversation, such an expression of strong faith and abiding confidence in the Lord in times of trial, of patience under affliction, and so sweet a manifestation of unfeigned humility, and of love and devotion to the saints, and to the cause of truth, that it is for the benefit and comfort of the tried and afflicted people of God to read them. We have within some years past received many letters from her, which we value highly. I have felt, as I cannot help feeling often, very unworthy to correspond with such as she, whom I esteem so highly as "the excellent of the earth," but I take great comfort in reading such letters, and in being held in such fellowship as to receive them. I remember hearing of her, and of her husband at that time, Elder D. E. Jewett, through my father and mother, as early as I can remember anything. Elder Jewett began the publication of "The Christian Doctrinal Advocate and Spiritual Monitor" in September, 1837, at Mott's Corners, Tompkins Co., N. Y., and my father took that and the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, the only Old Baptist periodicals then published in this country. After the death of Elder Jewett, Elder Beebe united that paper with the SIGNS. From that time the name of M. M. Jewett, and afterward M. M. Hassell, has appeared more or less frequently in the SIGNS, and in other papers started in later years, and to many of the household of faith who never met her in person she is as a dear and valued companion, from whom they have received much needed help, encouragement and comfort along the way, as they have traveled on together, though unseen by each other's mortal eyes, in the spiritual journey.

She is now apparently nearing the end of her mortal journey, being nearly fourscore years of age; and it seems to me like the drawing calmly and peacefully to a close of a day in which, through cloud and sunshine alike, much of the "good works" of our dear Redeemer have been exhibited and walked in. And it is pleasant to think that the close of this mortal day of experience, of toil and conflict, of affliction and sorrow, hopes and tremblings of faith and its trials, is but the opening of an eternal day of peace and blessedness.

I know it is far from the thought of our dear sister that I should publish this. We have never sent one of her letters for publication, although almost any of them would be suitable for that purpose, and many would be read with especial interest and comfort. But she has been able to write from time to time to the editors herself, and has done so, and we have selfishly kept these sacred personal epistles to ourselves and near by friends. But now it is very difficult for her to write, on account of dim sight, and I feel that I am doing right in sending these latest letters, and that she herself would acknowledge it, if it were any other than herself; and I know she will be resigned to our judgment of what is best to do with her letters, although she requested sister Bessie to burn this last letter, so much does her humility and self distrust increase with the increasing light that shines upon her as she gets nearer to the end of all darkness.

It is a comfort to me to speak a little of what I feel, and what all who know her feel, for this dear sister in Christ and mother in Israel, though I have not used as strong and endearing terms, nor spoken near as much as I want to. I know she will shrink to see her name thus spoken of; but she is at such an age, and has passed through so much, and has been so tried, and is so loved by her kindred in Christ, that she must suffer it. We sometimes write after dear ones have passed away about how we have loved and esteemed them, but I don't want to wait. Besides, I may be the first to go. Whenever I do go, may my faith and trust in the Lord be as strong as that which sister Hassell cannot but manifest whenever she speaks or writes. What afflictions and trials she has at this great age; but they serve to manifest more clearly the tender care and sustaining grace of her dear Savior.

Although sister Hassell is so dim of sight that she cannot read the lines she has written, yet her letters are easily read; and I have wished she would write oftener, and let her pen go back and bring up some of the precious things that she remembers, trials and deliverances alike precious, in the past years. If such as she, who have a long life's work and experience to write about, and all of whose experiences that they could be induced to relate would be eagerly read and highly valued, could overcome in a little measure that timid, retiring feeling, that reluctance to talk about themselves, the readers would be the gainers.

Your brother in hope,

SILAS H. DURAND.

WILLIAMSTON, N. C., Nov. 21, 1894.

MISS BESSIE DURAND—MY DEAR SISTER IN CHRIST:—Your most precious, sweet christian epistle of October 23d, came to me as a dear angel of mercy. It showed your christian, loving heart towards a poor, weary pilgrim, one who is old and feeble. Truly the Lord is good to me, and how shall I praise his most blessed and holy name. I do not feel worthy of such tokens of love as you and other dear ones manifest toward me. I feel that all is from the Lord, and he is to be praised. You said in your former most excellent letter, before the last one, that you would write to me even if I could not write to you. How glad I felt, for it is such a pleasure to me to hear from you and the faithful in Christ. I do not expect to be able to write much more. What I now attempt to do is so poorly done that I feel really ashamed to send a letter off. I do not even expect to do justice to your dear letters. I am still very feeble. I had a chill yesterday, which I have not been subject to. I came home from my daughter's yesterday morning. Mr. Slade keeps very bad, and we are very anxious. My poor daughter is much distressed about him.

Do pray for my dear ones if you find it in your heart to do so, and may the Lord bless you evermore. I feel that trials press me sore in various ways. Yet the Lord is very good, and I have cause to thank him at every breath.

I was glad to hear of your visit to your old home. I know it was pleasant, yet sad. You could go about the resting-place of your dear ones, and have the sweet thought that they are at home with Jesus, and casting their crowns at his feet. So many things in this life are painfully pleasant. We have to remember that we are in a wilderness land, and a dark and thorny desert often to God's dear children; but the bright beyond is glorious. The scenes of glory have never been revealed to mortal vision. What glory will burst upon the enraptured sight of every redeemed soul when delivered from this body of sin and death, and let out of the casket of dull mortality. O, my dear sister, have we a hope in Jesus? then we may trials well endure. All losses and crosses will be made up when we reach that blessed shore, and dwell with Jesus for ever. I desire to be patient, and wait all the days of my appointed time till my change comes.

It seems to me that we have fallen upon times that will eventually be perilous. The great Ruler of all things and all events reigns; and, blessed truth, he will ever reign. Nations may fall and kingdoms may crumble to atoms, but the same great Jehovah rules, and accomplishes his will. So the church of God has nothing to fear in regard to her safety.

I heard brother Durand's letter read that he wrote in regard to the charge against our dear departed brother Purington, of having written error on the subject of predestination. I thought he wrote to the purpose.

I will have to stop, for I cannot write. How I would like to see you; then I could perhaps more fully express my feelings; and I feel that it would be sweet communion. Communion of saints is sweet amid the turmoils of this mortal life. I still feel to be weak and helpless spiritually. I often fear that I am not one of God's dear children. My conflicts are many, yet the dear Savior deals with me very gently. A brother born for adversity is our dear Redeemer. I would love to see you all again, but I hardly ever expect to in this time state. I would fain hope that brother Durand will sometime come to see us all again.

Now, my dear sister, will you overlook all that is imperfect in this scrawl, and remember that I am old, and my vision so dim, and my thoughts I cannot condense? Pray for me, and when you can feel to write to me I shall be delighted to greet your welcome missive.

With much love, your aged sister in Christ,

M. M. HASSELL.

JANUARY 22, 1895.

MY DEAR SISTER IN CHRIST:—Your most interesting letter of the 18th inst. was received. I was glad to hear from you and all your dear ones. I am so glad to hear that sister Durand is improving, and hope and trust that she may continue to do so. It seems that brother Durand, like many others, cannot get entirely free from "La Grippe" having had it once. It is the case with many of us who have had it. We live in a land of sorrow and affliction, a wilderness of woe. I feel that I could wet my paper with my tears, if it would do any good. O, my dear sister, how sweet is the fellowship of the saints. By the grace that is given them they are prepared to sympathize with each other "from the river to the ends of the earth." Our blessed Redeemer was "a brother born for adversity," to bear the burdens and sorrows of his people. He bore their sins on the cross, and he carries all their sorrows; and all who have his Spirit feel to sympathize with the afflicted. Yes, the dear saints feel for each other, and this makes their fellowship dear. I feel that the more I am afflicted in this world the more I am drawn to God's dear people, and long for their fellowship and love. I trust I long more ardently for my blessed Jesus, who is "all, and in all." We know the grace of our precious Savior is sufficient for us in every time of need and distress. I feel to say at times,

"The Lord my Shepherd is,
I shall be well supplied;
Since he is mine and I am his,
What can I want beside?"

I feel that trials and afflictions will never leave me while in this world I stay. They come one after another, and unexpected ones. One trial when it passes prepares us for another. So we will go on until the last one comes and goes. I often have felt that I would sink under the deep and sore trials I have had to pass through. I would bless the Lord with all the powers of my soul if I could. I feel that every breath ought to be praise and thanksgiving to my blessed Lord and Savior, who has delivered me, and upheld me in so many straits. O, my dear sister, can it be that I possess that living faith in God which enables me still to trust him where I cannot trace him? His way is truly in the deep, and his footsteps are not known. I am so vile and full of sin, unbelief so trammels me, I am weak and wayward; and so out of the depths I cry unto the God of my salvation. I cannot go anywhere else, for vain is the help of man. I do at times feel to lean entirely upon him, and feel calm while the waves and billows roll, and almost overwhelm me. I do rejoice that God reigns; I cannot help it. He sways the scepter, and reigns in righteousness, and rules in judgment. I believe that he doth all things well. He is a glorious Sovereign. He will do all his pleasure. I do believe that all things work together for good to all his chosen people, however trying to them, and hat all of their afflictions are light when compared with that glory that is to be revealed in them when they reach that pure and sinless land where Jesus dwells. May we be enabled to rest and still trust in God; and may we, through the abounding love and mercy of our precious God and Savior, meet soon in that blessed land of rest, to cast our crowns at Jesus' feet. How blessed is that hope. Praise ye the Lord.

I would love to see you, my dear sister, but never expect to in this time state. I long for rest, perfect rest in Jesus. I am weary of self and sin. We are passing through deep trials. I am now with my daughter, who is feeble and deeply distressed in mind. Her husband is very feeble, and has been getting worse for weeks, and is much depressed. Sylvester went with him on Monday up to Raleigh. Dr. Curby, an eminent physician, wishes to see him. We hope that some relief may be given him. The Lord only knows. My dear child has been wonderfully sustained. She has gone through so much day and night, she is a wonder to all, as she is very weak at best. Her husband has hardly slept at all for months. I cannot tell you how it is with us. You express your deep sympathy for us is our great trial, and it is greatly appreciated; and we trust your unceasing prayers will ascend in our behalf. I do hope brother Durand will cry unto the Lord for our afflicted ones. I hope the dear Lord will enable us to bow submissively to his will. You have seen and known affliction, and know what it is to have depression of spirit. I write to you thus freely, as I do feel that you have a heart to feel for the afflicted and distressed. Fellowship, how dear it is to my soul, although I am not worthy of it. I know that you feel for the afflicted all over our land. It seems that it falls to your lot to assist the afflicted and bereaved. The Spirit of Jesus works in the hearts of his dear people to do, and it is blessed for them thus to do. I think it is wonderful in regard to sister Mary Parker. We see what the Lord can do. I will be glad to see the article you speak of. I can only read the SIGNS a little at best. My sight is getting worse all the time. You see from my letter how it is. I am sure you will cast the mantle of charity over all. After you read this burn it up out of sight. I hardly expect to be able to write many more letters, but your kind heart says that you will remember me. We all wish to be remembered in love to your brother and family, and to all the faithful in Christ. Let me hear from you when you can. I do not feel worthy of such attention as the dear saints give me.

With much love, I am your aged sister in Christ,

M. M. HASSELL.

P. S.—It is a source of pain to me to see and know that perfect harmony does not seem to be among all of our brethren; but I suppose this is to try our faith, and that we should not trust in man, who is weak. Do these things ever trouble you? May we soon reach that blessed land where all is peace and love.

354 FRONT ST., OWEGO, N. Y., Feb. 1, 1895.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS OF OUR CHOICE FAMILY PAPER:—I have copied some extracts from letters received from dear Edna Parsons, whose obituary was published in the SIGNS of December 26th, 1894. During the spring and summer months of 1894 I corresponded with her, and that, with a few times meeting her face to face, made me love her well. I feel that she has very sweetly written some of her exercises to me, and shown how free indeed are those whom the truth makes free. If in your judgment the extracts will be enjoyed by the dear readers of the SIGNS I would like them published. In a letter dated July 26th, the last I received, she says, "One subject so fully occupies my thoughts that in regard to others my mind seems a barren waste, and I search in vain for one fertile spot." "It seems almost impossible for me to wait until September. I not only feel like improving the first opportunity, but like making an effort to find one. 'This is the way, walk ye in it,' has been shown me very plainly. The way is strait and narrow, and leads through a door or gate. To me that represents the door of the church, and I have an intense longing to go through; but I know that in God's own time the way will be open. For a long time I was troubled lest I should be denied the privilege of entering; but that fear has vanished. Not that I feel less unworthy, for I know myself to be a very great sinner and the least of those that love him; but the wish to enter has become so great that I cannot fear being refused." She related a dream in the same letter, which to her suggested the near approach of death. I felt that I had lost a sweet friend when I knew she was silent in death; and as we were expecting her to visit us previous to our fourth Sunday in September, and go to Waverly with us for baptism, we were sadly shocked to receive notice of her death. She indeed leaves a sorrowing family, and the stricken mother's letter to me since their loss is truly touching and pathetic, yet without a murmur. How healing and soothing is the touch of our God! In love and mercy he takes our choicest treasures, and following close are the "garments of praise for the spirit of heaviness," and there is no lack in his tender mercy.

With a loving New Year's greeting to the poor in spirit, and very best wishes to the editors in their labor of love, I am your sister in hope,

W. A. BEARD.

CHERRY FLATS, Pa., May 6, 1894.

DEAR MRS. BEARD:—Your very kind and welcome letter was received several weeks since. I am quite ashamed of myself for having so long delayed replying. My only excuse is my inability to satisfactorily comply with your request to write my experience. I do not know what I can say that will in any way interest you. My thoughts must seem very meagre to you. I feel so small and insignificant, so utterly unworthy of any notice, when I hear others speak of the boundless love and mercy of an all wise God, and of their joy in being kept in the strait and narrow way. I appreciate your kindness in recognizing me as a sister in the love of the truth; but if you could see me as I so often see myself, the chief of sinners, you might not be willing to accept my companionship on your journey. If I am saved, it must be through grace, for I can do nothing to help myself. When I would do good, evil is present with me. I have never had an opportunity to ask to be admitted to membership with God's people, and were I given the opportunity I might lack the courage, lest I impose upon those whom I love and recognize as the elect. I have recently been made to feel the power, love and mercy of God as I never felt it before. The narrow way has been shown me in a new light, and the words, "This is the way, walk ye in it," have been forcibly impressed on my mind. One thing troubles me very much, and that is, that I so often get out of the way, and go stumbling about in the darkness, falling into "Doubting Castle" and the clutches of "Giant Despair." But when my strength is all gone, and I can bear no more, when I know myself to be utterly helpless, then hope comes with the key to unlock the dungeon doors, and I always find light and joy when I get out. I find it very hard sometimes to do right, even when I know what is right. I have done that which has caused me bitter tears, and have even wished I had done differently; and yet through it all I have the consciousness of having done right. Were it not for that, I should be thoroughly wretched.

JUNE 1, 1894.

THE subject which Elder Beebe so impressed upon me while at the association is constantly on my mind. I cannot get rid of it; I cannot think of anything else; and it is really becoming a burden. I do not know how it will end, but I feel as if I could not put the matter off much longer. Already I am beginning to wish I had done as Elder Beebe suggested, go before the association. Do you remember the conversation as we entered the gate on Wednesday afternoon? "Here is water, what doth hinder me to be baptized? Those words rang in my ears almost every moment while I was at Cammal. During the two nights spent there I think I slept less than three hours. I would almost fall asleep, and again I would hear the words, "Here is water, what doth hinder me to be baptized?" Very near daylight on Friday morning these words came to me, "Not my will, but thine," and in a few minutes I was asleep. I, for some reason, did not feel at liberty to respond when the invitation was given. Understanding matters as I do now, should I go back to that morning I should not hesitate. However, all things work together for good, and the time has not yet come, though I feel that it cannot be far away. "Repent, believe and be baptized." I have obeyed a part of that command, but cannot rest until it is complete.

JULY 12, 1894.

THE matter of baptism weighed so heavily on my mind last week that had it been possible for me I should have gone to Cammal when Elder Vail was there. I feel impatient in waiting until the fourth Sunday in September. See how inconsistent I am! A month ago the opportunity was within my reach, and kind friends who understood my need better than I did, urged me to accept, and I would not. Now, when it is past, and it is uncertain if it will ever come to me again, I wish for the privilege; and yet I think I can see reasons for doing as I did; and one is, that I had a mistaken idea of what the church expects as evidence. Elder Vail made that point clear in his sermon on Monday afternoon. I cannot tell a wonderful story; there has been no abrupt change, and for that reason I have sometimes feared there has been no change at all. It is only by comparing the past and the present, where I have been, and where I am now, that I can be sure of the change. It has been like the dawn of a glorious morning, rather than a sudden change from darkness to light. I can remember a time when I thought sermons preached by Elder Durand and Elder Vail decidedly "prosy." I could see nothing of interest in them, and wondered how anyone else could. I thought it the proper thing to belong to some church, so I tried several times to make myself believe that I should join the New School Baptists. I attended their meetings and Sunday School, and thought I was doing right, but finally became so disgusted with their methods that I gave them up altogether. Then I began to drift into infidelity. I read Ingersol and Paine, and drifted farther and farther into trouble. I reached the bottom of the pit, and knew myself to be lost. I had often been told that God would never compel me to be a christian; that I must take the first step myself; but that was the very thing I could not do. I was helpless. Then, through a sermon by Elder Vail, I learned that the first experience of a child of God is trouble, and a tiny ray of light came to me through those words. Later I learned that the people of God know themselves to be guilty sinners. That tiny ray of light was growing broader, and so it has continued to grow, up to the present time. Often I have been in total darkness; but when I have been permitted to see the light, I have rejoiced to find that it has never grown less. Begging your pardon for taking so much of your time, and hoping to hear from you when you find it convenient to write, I am lovingly yours,

EDNA M. PARSONS.

RUCKER, Tenn., Dec. 26, 1894.

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES:—In the SIGNS of the 19th instant brother Benson, of Grifton, Md., requests my views upon "What is the antitype in the gospel dispensation of which the Jewish Sabbath is the type?" My unworthiness and inability to properly answer this question are only exceeded by my lack of every qualification to wear the title of "Elder." No, my brother, I have never been ordained to that sacred calling. The forbearance of the church is stretched to its utmost tention to carry my name on its rolls in the humblest capacity of an unworthy member. At least I hope I am given this true light to often see it in that way, though my conduct may not always bespeak it. The brother's mistake in this particular has caused me many serious and sad reflections. My simple membership in the church of the true and living God among his dear saints has always given me the most serious misgivings and apprehensions lest I were an impostor in that sacred relation. That any brother should be still further imposed upon, and infer from my scribbling before the public a relation to the church even more responsible than that of a private member, is sufficient to forever bar me from again appearing in the role of a public scribbler, even to the answering of his question, except to disclaim the title he has given me. But by way of still further disabusing the minds of those who may have read my article on the Sunday question, and setting myself right in these premises, it may not be amiss for me to say frankly that I do not claim for the article any deep insight into the subject such as any one of the able corps of writers for the SIGNS would have taken had they written on it, such as Elders Beebe, Durand, Chick, Rittenhouse, and others familiar to your readers. I only presented the hull of the subject, as it were. Much of the kernel appears in the editorial copied from the SIGNS, written, I suppose, by Elder Wm. L. Beebe. And this I was led to originally, in great part, by the political view of the subject that occurred to me as the correct one, and as the necessary one to be impressed upon the public mind. In my opposition to the persecution of the Seventh Day Advents under the Sunday laws that are a disgrace to the code of this or any other State, the last time I was a member of our State Legislature, which opposition, it seems to me, was but intuitive in any Old School Baptist, I naturally asked myself, What about this Sunday or Sabbath question any way? Had I been left to myself, brethren, I have no doubt my investigations would have landed me on the Sabbath side of the question, and I would to day have been a believer in the seventh day as a day to be observed and kept holy by Christians. It seems to me that anyone but an Old Baptist under my surroundings at that time would have landed in that camp. But I verily believe and hope a different light was given me, and I was led to eschew both days as anything in the law of Christ above other days. And when the able editorial in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, in April, 1893, confirmatory of my views on the subject appeared, I determined to write on it, and the petition to my association was the result. In the light of this subject that has been given me, as I trust, the thing prefigured in the gospel dispensation by the Jewish Sabbath, it seems to me, is that final rest from one's own labors or efforts to procure salvation that is alone in Christ Jesus, to be given to his people in his own good time and way, and is in no wise to be found in any merit or effort of the subject saved. That is what he came for, to "save his people from their sins." When all human merit is exhausted in the vain effort to secure salvation, when the whole work-period, represented by the six days of labor, is devoted to that effort, and no rest is yet found, and there seems to be no sabbath, or rest, for the creature, and that rest he so ardently longs for from his sins comes to him, he knows not how or whence, then is given to him a rest, imperfectly mirrored in the day allowed to the children of Israel to rest from their sore travail in the wilderness. This rest, or this salvation, and the day thereof, are treated of in the "Petition," in the paragraph following the quotation from 2 Corinthians vi. 2, "God saith, Now is the day of salvation;" where the question is asked, "Can anyone tell which day of the week that is? The sons and daughters of regeneration rejoice to hope that it is every day for all time with them. It must have been the same day that he (Paul) alludes to when he says, in Eph. iv. 30, 'Ye are sealed unto the day of redemption.' The same glorious day is specifically mentioned by Paul in Phil. i. 6, 'Being confident of this very thing, that he which hath begun a good work in you will perform it until the day of Jesus Christ. What can be more consoling to the children of grace than this confidence of Paul, that he which hath begun a good work in them will perform it until the day of Jesus Christ? O glorious work! O glorious day! To every one of you it is every day; from the day on which you were born again, to the day of final triumph in him who gave you that second birth in the good work he hath begun in you." This glorious work and this glorious day are all one to the children of grace; and they are all, and more than all, the Sabbath could have been to the children of Israel; they are all, and more than all, that could have been typified in that Jewish ordinance. If this is not the correct view of this type in that Jewish law of the things in the law of redemption, and of spiritual life in Christ Jesus, then I hope to be corrected by brother Benson, or some other brother, who, I know, is much abler than I to give the true significance of these deep spiritual things. I have stood all the while open to conviction and correction in this matter. When I presented my petition to the association I said to them, if there was a single one of our ministering brethren who differed with me on the subject, I would withdraw it; or if it was in any wise calculated to engender strife among brethren, I would withdraw it. And that there might be light on the subject, I have requested editorial comments pro or con on it in three of our church papers. The publication of the article or petition in full in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES may have been in answer to this request. I am under special obligations for the brief editorial indorsement. Will some of the brethren please give us the light on brother Benson's question, which I know I have failed to do? Praying the forbearance of the brethren in the weakness disclosed in this scribble, and leaving it for your disposal, brethren editors, I remain your unworthy brother in hope,

WM. P. TOLLEY.

BOWDOIN CENTRE, Maine, Jan. 13, 1895.

ELDER F. A. CHICK—MY DEAR BROTHER:—After reading what you have written in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, No. 2, Vol. 63, concerning the prophecy of Caiaphas, the high priest, it has seemed to bring you so near to me that I have taken my pen to write to you. And I write also because you wrote in your letter that you would be glad of a word from me. And now, my dear brother, as my mind has been brought to this conclusion I feel at a loss for suitable words to write to such a one as brother Chick; nevertheless I feel like thanking our God that he put it into your heart to have me in remembrance; and also, dear brother, for your counsel, for I am persuaded that it is in love. If my letter to you is not grammatical, and every word is not spelled correctly, you are possessed of that grace which never faileth, and will overlook and forgive. You referred in your letter to the time of my ordination, saying that the whole scene was a very sacred, solemn one to you. And so it appeared to me, and also a glorious scene; for my mind seemed to be taken above the things of earth and time, and to dwell for a time where ELDER F. A. CHICK—VERY DEAR BROTHER IN MUCH LOVE:—Is it right to appoint a brother as a Deacon of a church whose wife is not a member of the church, but a moral, grave woman, and probably a christian?

W. J. MAY.

PINSONFORK, Ky., Jan. 4, 1895.

REPLY.

WE desire to be always ready to serve our brethren to the extent of our ability. We desire also to do this in humility, in the fear of God. We do not doubt that a part of this service consists in responding, as far as the Lord gives us liberty, to such requests as the above. We also desire to write and speak not as a teacher, but as a fellow-learner. We have but one Teacher, or Master, even Christ. In what we may say in response to the above request we can but present what seems to us right, and give the reasons which seem to us to justify the views which we have. We made a brief reply to the above request by private letter, but the subject seems to us of sufficient importance to be also considered through the SIGNS. One reason for this is that the place and the work which devolves upon Deacons have seemed to us to be too much ignored in many churches, and by many Deacons themselves. Their office embraces more, and their work in the churches covers a wider field, than in many cases at least has been understood or acknowledged.

The noun Diakanos (Deacon), with its various verbal and participle forms, occurs many times in the Greek of the New Testament. We have ourselves looked up about sixty places where this original Greek word is used in the New Testament. It is, however, translated by the word "Deacon" but five times in the New Testament; once in Philippians i. 1, and the remaining four times in 1 Timothy iii. It is translated by the words "servant," "service" and "serve" very often. The word originally meant "service," "one that serves," &c. Often it is translated by the word "minister," in the sense of a laborer, a ministrant, &c. But wherever the word occurs, and by whatever word it is translated, the general meaning is always the same, viz., that of serving or ministering. Thus the ministry of Timothy is spoken of by Paul, in 2 Timothy iv. 5, as the Diakonian, as is also that of Mark, in verse eleven of the same chapter. Thus it is seen that the word is in the New Testament used many times to designate "service," but is used to designate a particular office but five times, as named above. In the original use of the word all ministers were Deacons, and all Deacons were ministers; but it would seem that after awhile this general use of the word to describe all kinds of service became narrowed down to those who served in one particular capacity in the church.

What was this special work in the church? The title of Deacon amounts to but little. If the title alone be regarded, it will lead at once to the same sort of spiritual pride which had led the carnal Jews to love to be called Rabbi; but the special work of a Deacon is of the greatest importance to be considered. If it involves service or ministration, it is most needful to know what sort of service or ministration is meant. While we do not know that the seven men of honest report, full of the Holy Ghost and of wisdom, who were set apart to the business of serving tables, and to see after the just distribution of the alms of the church, as recorded in Acts vi., were ever called by the official name of "Deacons," yet the word translated in that narrative "ministration" (verse 1), "serve" (verse 2), and "ministry" (verse 4), is the same as that elsewhere translated "Deacon;" and we see no reason to doubt that this was at least a part of the duty laid by the apostles upon Deacons. If this view of the account given in Acts vi. be correct, then the difference between Elders (or Bishops) and Deacons would be that the one would attend to the religious services of the church, while the other would attend to the temporal concerns, such as managing the financial affairs, seeing after the poor, providing for the place and the conveniences of public worship, arranging for the suitable administration of the ordinances, and in short having a general charge of every temporal interest with which the church, as a church, has to do. It is no more meet now than it ever was that those who are called to the ministry of the word should have laid upon them in addition the burden of the temporal interests of the church. Deacons are chosen for this purpose, and Deacons should attend to this work.

The act of passing the bread and wine at the Lord's supper to those who partake, while it would devolve properly upon the Deacons, is after all but a mere fraction of their duty. We allude to this because in some sections (perhaps we ought to say in many) it has come to be the case that the function of a Deacon has been limited almost wholly to this one thing. In some sections it would seem that neither the Deacon nor the church which placed him in his office had the remotest idea that anything more was involved than that he should serve when the supper was administered. This, to say the least of it, has been a very mistaken view, and has resulted in harm to the interests of the cause of Zion. A Deacon should have just as warm and just as constant an interest in the temporal affairs of the church as the pastor has in the ministry of the word and in prayer. It is the Deacon's place to see what is needed in regard to the "tables" of the church, and then use whatever collections the church may provide to the best advantage; and the church should put no one into the office of Deacon unless she is satisfied to trust the funds which may be collected to their discretion.

Out of this broad field of usefulness which belongs to Deacons grows up the necessity of their possessing such qualifications as are named in 1 Timothy iii. A comparison between the duties named above and the qualifications given in this chapter will show at once how necessary these qualifications are. Let us see what they are. We will name them without quoting all the language used by Paul. They must be grave, not double-tongued, not given to much wine, not greedy of riches. They must earnestly believe the truth. They must first be proved, and if found blameless, they may use the office of a Deacon. They must be the husband of one wife, ruling their children and their own houses well. Their wives also must be grave, not slanderers, sober, faithful in all things. In all things they must possess the same qualifications as the pastors of the churches, except that it is not required that they should be apt to teach, nor given to hospitality. At least these things are not named by Paul as being among a Deacon's necessary qualifications.

If the churches and all who contribute their means, whether money or other things, to the support of the temporal interests of the church are to do so willingly and cheerfully, surely the men to whom they commit these things in trust ought to be and must be men of the stamp described by the apostle above. This at least must be their general character. We do not forget that those best qualified for this office would be very sure to conclude that these qualifications were not theirs; but it must be remembered that Paul is not here holding forth a test by which the Deacons are to judge themselves, but by which the church is to judge them.

It is not our purpose to speak of these qualifications except in this general way. It is certain that if a man be not grave (the word means serious, reputable, of good report), if he be double-tongued (that is, unreliable in what he says), if he be intemperate, with all its accompanying weaknesses and vices, if he be greedy of riches or covetous, if he do not honestly hold the truth (that is, is not settled in the faith), if he have never been proved (that is, is an untried man), if he in all his dealings and relations with men is not blameless (that is, not worthy of blame), if he is not seen to manage his own household wisely and well, surely he is not fit to be trusted to manage the affairs of the church, nor to use to the best advantage the contributions of the church.

Those of whom it is true that they do use the office of a Deacon well, being such men as are described by the apostle, do thereby purchase to themselves a good degree and great boldness in the faith which is in Christ Jesus. The words "a good degree" here signify what we would call a good standing; and the word "boldness" does not mean a fleshly courage, but rather it has the sense of weight or influence in the church. All this seems to us to need no further comment. It is all just what would be expected, and what we all would feel to be wise and proper and consistent, and what would lead to the conclusion named by Paul.

We have not all this time forgotten that brother May's request related especially to the wives of Deacons. Concerning this the apostle's teaching is that their wives must also, as well as their husbands, be grave (not light, but reputable), not slanderers (the word here is diabolous). Literally it would be rendered, not devilish. See in what company the apostle places the slanderer! They must also be sober, and faithful in all things. The word "sober" here means, not gloomy, but to be temperate and circumspect, or careful, in all things. It seems very manifest how needful it would be for the wife of a Deacon to possess all these qualifications. If she possess the opposite of these, she can manifestly be of great hindrance, and in many instances entirely ruin her husband's usefulness, and bring reproach and shame upon him and the cause he is serving.

We do not understand the apostle to teach here that a Deacon must necessarily be married, any more than he teaches that a Bishop must be married in the second verse of this chapter; but if married it must be to one wife, and she must possess these certain qualifications. When it is said that Bishops and Deacons must be the husbands of one wife, we understand the apostle to mean of not more than one. Had the apostle meant by this language (the husband of one wife) to convey the lesson that Bishops and Deacons must be married men, he would have simply said so, or else would have said "the husband of a wife," instead of one wife. Polygamy was then frequent among the nations of the earth, and we have believed that the apostle here alluded to this. Whatever might be tolerated for a time among disciples, Bishops and Deacons at least must have but one wife.

But now coming to answer brother May's question more directly, we will say that if Paul teaches first that a Deacon must be a married man, then does he teach also that the Bishop or Elder must be married. If this be the apostle's meaning, it might well be asked, Does the Bishop cease to be a Bishop, or a Deacon cease to be a Deacon, if the wife should die? Second, we would say that if Paul teaches here that the wife of a Deacon must be a member of the church, he also teaches that the wife of a Bishop must be a member, for he says nothing in either case about membership in the church. The wives must bear a certain character, else the usefulness of a Deacon is marred and hindered.

We know of some Deacons whose wives are not members, and yet are just what brother May suggests in his letter. It is to be feared, on the other hand, that some Deacons' wives who are members are largely the reverse of the character described by Paul, and as a result the usefulness of the husband is hindered. If the wife be grave, sober, faithful in all things, and not a slanderer, it seems to us that the church is not authorized to require anything further.

We leave these reflections to the judgment of brother May and the brotherhood. We fully realize that we have done but scant justice to the importance of the subject. We hope others will also write.

MARK XVI. 15, 16.

BROTHER BEEBE:—I am requested to ask your views on two passages of Scripture; one is Mark xvi. 15, 16. "And he said unto them, Go ye into all the world," &c. The other is Rom. x. 13-15. "For whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved," &c. The request is made by one who calls himself an Old School Baptist.

ALMIRA SMITH.

REPLY.

The first subject on which our views are desired is that of the commission given to the apostles by our Lord Jesus Christ, to preach the gospel and to baptize. Although we have repeatedly expressed our views on this passage of Scripture, the importance of the subject, and the general misconstruction of the text by all the Arminian world, are sufficient as an apology for our compliance with the request of sister Smith.

Before giving this great commission, our Lord had not only finished the work of redemption, fulfilled the jots and tittles of the law, suffered the just for the unjust, laid down his life for his sheep, and unsealed his eyes from the slumber of the tomb, and arisen in glorious triumph over death, hell and sin, but he had distinctly expressed to the apostles the change of circumstances and of the position which he occupied from that under which he sank down in the deep waters which came into his soul when all the billows passed over him. According to Matthew, he said to the eleven worshiping disciples, "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name," &c. They had seen him in his humiliation when his judgment was taken from him; they had been with him when a man of sorrow and acquainted with grief; they had but recently, some of them, heard him express the bitter anguish of his suffering soul in the garden; they had seen him violently taken by the mob and treated with contempt and cruelty; and they had traced him to his death on Calvary and burial in the tomb; and when it was announced to them that he was risen from the dead, they seemed incredulous; and even now that they saw and heard him, they even doubted the testimony of their eyes and ears. "Some doubted" the reality of what they witnessed. But he assured them that a new order of things was now ushered in.

"No more the cruel spear,
The cross and nails, no more;
For hell itself shakes at his name,
And all the heavens adore."

No more a man of sorrow; for "Behold, he cometh with clouds; and every eye shall see him, and they which pierced him; and all the kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him. Even so. Amen."—Rev. i. 7. He had finished transgression, made an end of sin, and perfected for ever them that were sanctified, and is now glorified with his Father's own self, the glory which he had with the Father before the world began. All power in heaven, including the omnipotence of the eternal Godhead, and every mighty angel of the upper world, most unreservedly at his command. And all power in earth, as the Man Christ Jesus. Power over all flesh, that he might give eternal life to as many as the Father had given him. Power to control all the events of earth, and make the wrath of man to praise him, and to restrain the remainder of wrath. Power to open the prison to them that are bound, to raise up the dead, destroy death and him that had the power of death, to deliver captives and to triumph over all things. This risen and almighty Prince and Savior had power to set up and regulate all the affairs of his kingdom, to furnish apostles, and to supply all necessary gifts, and in defiance of all opposing obstacles to sustain his ministers until the end of time, or until he shall have accomplished his purpose in them.

And he said, Go. This risen and almighty Prince, this exalted Savior, this King and potentate, in whom is vested all the power of heaven and earth, said, Go. He did not say, Send; for that would have been a surrender of some of his power. The power to designate the men is as essential to his reigning qualification as that to make their ministry what he designed it to be. But to whom did he say, Go? Was it to the church, as we are often told in these latter times? By no means; but "He said unto them," the eleven apostles, every one of whom he had called expressly for the work. It would have been very unlike himself to have said to any body and every body without discrimination, Go. But "Go ye into all the world." Although this was not allowed when he with them were under the law, or before his resurrection and exaltation; then they were to go not in the way of the Gentiles, nor into any city of the Samaritans were they suffered to enter. But now, that old things have passed away, and he who was found in fashion as a man when under the law, now that he has accomplished all that was designed by his subjection to the law, darts forth the radiant brightness of his Father's glory, and stands the express image of his person, says unto them, "Go ye into all the world." No longer restrict your labors to the lost sheep of the house of Israel; but know ye that there is an enlargement of territory. It is a light thing that he shall raise up the throne of David; God has given him the Gentiles also; and he shall be the salvation of God to the ends of the earth. We do not understand that these eleven disciples were personally to travel into every part of the earth; but, as his apostles, they were seated on the thrones to judge the spiritual tribes of the Lord; and wherever one of the election of grace should be located, whether among Jews or Gentiles, bondmen or free, savages or civilized, there should the doctrine and order of the Lamb prevail in God's appointed time, till not one foot or inch of earth remains where the light of the glorious gospel in apostolic purity has not shined; and when this shall be accomplished, and all the elect gathered into the fold of Christ, the commission will be fulfilled, and time shall be no longer.

We have considered the high vocation, the gospel mission, which beyond all controversy was to preach the gospel and to baptize.

To preach the gospel. There is probably at this day as much dissension between the Arminians and the disciples of Christ on the nature of the work as on its object, power, success, &c. To preach, in the scriptural sense of the word, is to proclaim. Thus the prophet of the Lord speaking of Christ applied the prediction to him, and he fulfilled it in the ears of the people, "The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek."—Isa. lxi. 1. And in the synagogue at Nazareth Jesus read this text and preached its complete fulfillment in their ears. Although the preachers of the gospel are qualified to be "apt to teach," that they may feed and instruct the flock of God, preaching is simply proclaiming, and preaching the gospel is proclaiming the message of glad tidings which God has sent to the meek. It does not consist in logical arguments, learned and ostentatious display, nice arrangement of division, and well turned periods; but in the faithful proclamation of eternal truth, speaking as the oracle of God. The object of preaching the gospel is not to make converts to their own flocks, but to feed the flock of God, which he has purchased with his own blood. The same universal power of heaven and earth which is vested in Christ by which he holds it as his exclusive prerogative to raise up, qualify, send forth and sustain gospel preachers, is given him, that he may give eternal life to as many as the Father has given him. The preacher may feed and edify quickened souls, so far as God is pleased to make him useful in the ministry; but he has no power to quicken those whom God has not made alive.

It is strongly urged that the commission is to preach the gospel to "every creature." A creature is a thing created, not self existent, and applies to every created thing, animate or inanimate, rational or irrational, in heaven, earth or hell. If therefore the words every creature in the commission will admit of no limitation of application, the apostles were commanded to preach the gospel as well to the beasts of the field, fowls of the air, fishes of the deep, trees of the forest, &c., as to the sons of Adam. Those who would revile us for restricting the application to the "New Creation," of him who saith, "Old things are passed away, behold, I make all things new," do it with an ill grace while they refuse to apply the same to all the created things of God without distinction. There are three senses of these words in which they are applicable in the text.

1st. "Every creature," as illustrated in the vision which Peter saw when on the housetop of Simon the tanner, by which he was made to understand that this gospel of the kingdom should be preached in all nations; that it should not be like the Levitical priesthood, restricted to the Jews, nor confined to the lost sheep of the house of Israel; but they to whom this commission was given should preach among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ. Because in every nation and tribe of the human family God has a portion of his chosen people, whom he has cleansed, and forbidden that they should be called common or unclean.

2d. To "every creature," in the sense that the apostles preached to mixed multitudes, where some believed and some believed not. It is impossible that the preachers of the gospel should know who are the appointed heirs of salvation until God is pleased to make them manifest; and when he has prepared them to receive the word gladly, the preaching of the gospel will find them out, and they will be made manifest as the proper subjects of gospel baptism. None who are not thus distinguished can possibly receive the gospel gladly, or understand or believe it; for God has hidden these things from the wise and prudent, and revealed them to babes, because so it seemed good in his sight; while at the same time, "He that hath an ear to hear, let him hear what the Spirit saith to the churches."

3d. But in the direct sense of the words of this commission, we are strongly inclined to understand the new creation is intended. This construction agrees with the charges so often repeated to the preachers to "Feed my sheep," and "feed my lambs." "Feed the church of God, which he has purchased with his own blood," &c. None of the epistles written by inspiration of God are addressed to the world, but to the saints, and to the faithful in Christ Jesus. "And if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature," and as such to him belongs the consolation, instructions and promises of the gospel. That part of the work of the gospel ministry which relates to baptism is so clear that no comment of ours can be required to define or illustrate it. "He that believeth;" not he whose parents believe. "As many as were ordained to eternal life believed;" and believers only were baptized on profession of their faith in Christ, by the apostles of the Lamb. The ordinance of baptism, too, is as clearly defined in the New Testament as the subjects of it are. No believer in Christ, with his Bible in hand, can fail to understand that to be baptized is to be buried in the likeness of Christ's death; and that there is no likeness of Christ's death in sprinkling or pouring, or any other method of perverting the ordinance. The commission, as well as the invariable usage of the primitive church, makes it the work of the preachers of the gospel exclusively to administer this sacred rite to believers, in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.

In the nineteenth verse our Lord has given an infallible rule by which his ministers are to know who shall and who shall not be saved. As faith is the gift of God, and as Christ is himself the author and finisher of the faith of God's elect, we have incontestable evidence that all who receive it are subjects of the salvation of God; but as there are many who profess to believe, who do not in reality possess that precious faith, the apostles were instructed in their commission to consider the evidence of salvation incomplete where that practical obedience to the government of Christ which gospel faith is calculated to produce does not follow the profession of their faith. Hence we infer that it is disorderly and wrong for us to admit that any are manifestly the children of God who live in disobedience to the command which enjoins on them to be baptized. And as baptism is the very first command of Christ applicable to a regenerated peason, it properly represents subjection to his authority and the whole life of unreserved obedience to all his commands which follow.

The passage in Romans must be deferred to another time.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y., May 1, 1848.

our great High Priest has been exalted at God's right hand, far above all principalities and powers, and every name that is named. The text that Elder Keene preached from has been with me most of the time since that solemn and glorious day. You, dear brother, doubtless remember the text, "Take heed therefore unto yourselves, and to all the flock over the which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers, to feed the church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood." O! brother Chick, this appears too great for such a poor, ignorant sinner as I am, so ignorant that I do not know how to direct my steps or order my speech. But my heart believes that in Jesus there is an eternal fullness. "And of his fullness have all we received, and grace [not for our works or fitness, but] for grace." How unsearchable are God's ways! O yes, brother Chick, his ways are in the great deep. He brings strange acts to pass. He even makes a wicked Caiaphas to prophesy. He can raise the beggar from the dunghill, to occupy the palaces of kings and princes. Why are these things so? "Even so, Father, for so it seemed good in thy sight." This answer is sufficient for the child of God, for those who have looked from the ends of the earth and have beheld their salvation in the Lord. Yes, they trust in the name of the Lord, for they know that in the Lord Jehovah is everlasting strength. Then they mount up as eagles, run and are not weary, walk and are not faint. Yes, they are those that feed on the Word of God; that Word which was in the beginning, and which was made flesh. Yes, they eat of his flesh and drink of his blood, and are nourished and grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ; not in their own knowledge; for they know nothing of themselves, not even how to pray as they ought. But the Spirit maketh intercession for them with groanings which cannot be uttered; and this intercession is according to the will of God. There is a way that seemeth right to me, but I find the end of this way is death; for this way that seems right to me is from my carnal reasoning; and you know that to be carnally minded is death. No, I do not see Jesus at the end of this reasoning; and where I cannot find Jesus I cannot find life or peace.

My dear brother, in your letter you say that a great responsibility rests upon me. O how I sometimes doubt that I have ever been called to this responsibility. How I shrink from it, and how my faith seems to fail me, so that I cannot trust in God. How many trials my mind finds in the way. I am afraid. O! brother Chick, if it is possible that a mistake has been made in ordaining me to so great and glorious a work as proclaiming the unsearchable riches of Christ, how great is that mistake! and how sad and solemn is my state and condition! I think that I partly realize it is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God. No, brother, I do not fear any nor all the dead gods; but there are times when I do greatly fear and quake before him who has said, "Vengeance is mine." Yes, I meet many enemies of the cross of Christ in the way. The flesh raises up and confronts me, and the world with its allurements and enticements presents itself to my mind. The devil with all his cunning deceptions, and pride also, make their appearance, and it sometimes appears as though I should be overcome and swallowed up and utterly destroyed from the presence of God. But when Christ, who is our life, appears, then all these enemies are overcome, and I find that all these enemies are banished from the presence of God, and I appear with Jesus in glory. O yes, brother, as Paul was, I am also persuaded that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creatures, shall be able to separate the children of God from his love, which is in Christ Jesus their Lord.

I do not know, brother, that this is a very suitable or proper reply to the very welcome letter that you wrote me; but I have written as my mind has been led in the matter. Knowing that you possess that spirit that can forgive its enemy, I pray you may cover all the mistakes with the mantle of charity, and remember me in love and pity for Jesus' sake.

If you should see or communicate with brother Vail, please remember me to him in love and fellowship, and also to all who are in Christ Jesus. May the God of all grace bless and sustain you in your labor of love in declaring the whole counsel of God, both in your ministry and your editorial labors, is the prayer of your brother in hope of the glory of God,

Z. M. BEAL.

BYRON, Neb., Dec. 24, 1894.

G. BEEBE'S SON—DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST:—Once more I desire to write a few lines for the columns of our family paper, the SIGNS, if you deem them worth the space; but do not crowd out better matter for them. I wish to speak of the manifestation of God's love and mercy bestowed upon the Little Flock Church, in Nuckolls Co., Neb.

Yesterday and Saturday before the church received three members, one by letter and two by experience and baptism, while there are others who seem to be deeply interested. We know that where the Lord begins a good work he will perform it unto the day of Jesus Christ. A very deep interest seemed manifest last Sunday while our dear young brother, Elder J. H. Hammons, was preaching Jesus as an all-sufficient Savior. To the Jews he is a stumbling-block, and to the Greeks foolishness; but unto them that are called, both Jews and Greeks, he is the power of God and the wisdom of God. Also brother Amos Reed, of Mill Creek Church, in Washington Co., Kansas, was with us, and preached much to the comfort and edifying of the brethren, so that our poor, drooping hearts were revived and made to rejoice in the hope of salvation in and through the merits of our once humbled, obedient, sin-bearing Savior, who bore our sins in his own body on the cross, and bore them away from us. And what more? He clothed us with his righteousness, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him. No wonder, dear brethren, our hearts are made to burn within us with love one to another, in sweet fellowship one for another. John says that he that loves God loves them also who are begotten of God. What blessed and precious promises the dear Savior has left on record for the comfort and sweet consolation of his humble poor. Listen to what he says, "Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in their midst." O, dear brethren, think of it. Do not forsake the assembling of yourselves together, as the manner of some is, but meet often together, and sing songs of praise; yes, praise with an eye single to the glory of God, while you sit together in heavenly places in Christ. Take that privilege from me and I would have nothing to live for. But, dear brethren, it seems to me that the Lord has blessed me above measure in this privilege; for since the constitution of Salem Church, in Lancaster Co., Neb., on June 15th, 1889, I, poor and unworthy as I am, have been blessed with the privilege of being present at all her meetings, never missing one as long as my membership was with them. Now my lot is cast with the Little Flock Church, in Nuckolls Co., Neb., where I hope to still be blessed with the same good blessing. I do desire to be thankful to the Lord for all his rich blessings bestowed upon me, a poor, unworthy worm of the dust, who often feels to doubt whether he has any interest in the kingdom of Christ; and I would despair if it were not for the testimony of John, who says, "We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren." I do feel that I can truthfully say that I love the brethren, and love to be in their company. Again, Paul gives me great comfort when he says, "O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" When I would do good, evil is present with me; and how to perform that which is good I find not. The things that I would not, them I do. So, dear brethren, as long as we live in this body or tenement of clay we shall be possessors of two natures; that is, the carnal mind, or spirit of the flesh, warring against the spirit of our mind, which is that incorruptible seed that is planted in the heart of God's chil. dren. The one is contrary to the other, and causes a continual warfare. So, dear brethren, we conclude that if the apostle of Jesus Christ by the will of God was thus troubled with doubts and fears, and the Lord told him on one occasion that his grace was sufficient for him, the grace of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ is sufficient for us too. With this confidence let us press on toward the mark of our high calling of God in Christ, who is the author and finisher of our faith, asking him to ever lead us and keep us by the word of his power, ready to be revealed in the last day.

May he enable us to bear each other's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ, is the prayer of your little brother,

JOSEPH BRUCE.

INQUIRIES AFTER TRUTH.

WILL Elder Silas H. Durand give his views on Luke xvi. 9, and oblige his unworthy brother?

J. W. FAIRCHILD.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

Bettie A. Davis died at her home in the city of Kokomo, Ind., August 12th, 1894.

She was born Dec. 10th, 1844. She was a daughter of George M. Napier, and wife of Wm. H. Davis, both of Henry Co., Va., where they lived and reared their families, until a few years ago they moved to their new home in Indiana. Sister Davis was married in early life. She became the mother of seven sons and five daughters. Five sons and five daughters survive her. One child died in infancy, and one in the vigor of manhood.

Sister Davis was taken violently ill on April 11th, and through many months of excruciating pain she endured without a murmur or complaint. She felt that she had a bright home beyond this world. On August 12th she quietly passed away, saying she was willing to die, and felt that Jesus was with her. Many years ago she professed a hope in Christ, and united with the Baptist Church at Red Creek, Henry Co., Va., and was baptized by Elder E. B. Turner. She was a firm believer in the Primitive Baptist faith, and was never more happy than when with the brethren and sisters. I have been intimately acquainted with her from her childhood to the time of her death, and can truthfully say that she was a kind, good neighbor, a dutiful daughter, a faithful and loving companion, and a most affectionate and self-sacrificing mother. She was a kind visitor to the sick, and was often sent for by her neighbors, for whom she did all that she could. She was the bright sunlight in her family, and her house was a pleasant home for her brethren whenever they wished to make it so.

She leaves a kind and tender husband, ten loving, affectionate children, an aged and devoted father, with many other relatives and friends, to mourn the absence of one they fondly loved.

ALSO,

W. T. Davis, son of Wm. H. and Bettie A. Davis, died July 29th, 1894.

He was born in Henry Co., Va., March 8th, 1868. After his parents moved to Indiana, in the spring of 1893 he went to visit them, and spent the summer and fall, returning to his native home in December. On the 14th of February he was happily married to Miss Minnie Hurd, daughter of Mr. O. Hurd, of Henry Co., Va. They lived pleasantly and happily together for a few short months, unmolested by disappointments; but, alas! that much dreaded disease, typhoid fever, made the young husband its victim, and after several weeks of suffering he died in the town of Martinsville, Va., leaving a kind and devoted wife and many friends and relatives to mourn the early departure of one so fondly loved. He had not made an open profession of religion, yet we have a hope that the Lord had blessed him in the pardon of his sins, and made him the happy recipient of his mercy, as he was often heard to call upon God for mercy in his sickness. He was a firm believer in the faith of the Primitive Baptists, and very many times has the writer of this tribute seen the tears trickle down his cheeks under the preaching of the gospel. He was among the kindest and most affectionate sons, ever ready to wait upon his father and mother, and said to the writer that his greatest pleasure was in promoting the comfort of old people. As far as my knowledge extends he was universally beloved.

His funeral was largely attended, and Elder Z. T. Turner preached a very touching and able sermon to weeping relatives, friends and acquaintances, both white and colored, as all seemed to mourn the death of this good young man. His remains were deposited in the church-ground at old Reed Creek, Henry Co., Va., near the spot where he had spent his school-boy days.

E. C. TURNER.

DIED—At his home in Arlington, Tarrant Co., Texas, Jan. 9th, 1895, Elder John S. Collins.

He had come home the day before from a preaching tour, and went to bed as well as usual. He called his family at five o'clock a. m., and told them to let him take another nap. At eight o'clock his wife went to wake him, and found him lying on his side, his eyes closed, and his features natural. He appeared to have died without a pain or a struggle.

He was born in Jackson Co., Ala., Feb. 21st, 1840, and was reared on a farm, and educated at the country school of his birthplace. He professed a hope in Christ in Jackson Co., Ala., in the year 1857, and joined the Missionary Baptist Church. He taught one session of school, and then entered the Confederate Army, in 1861. He was taken prisoner twice, and confined in Rockland prison, and when discharged at the close of the war had been there nineteen months. He preached his first sermon on Jan. 1st, 1867, being then with the Missionaries, and remained with them until the fall of 1867 or the spring of 1868. He then joined the Primitive Baptists at Sardis, Jackson Co., Ala., and was ordained to the full work of the ministry on Oct. 20th, 1873, by a presbytery composed of Elders Peter Maples, Simeon Hanck, Andrew J. Worm and John Butler. He was married to Alzena F. Carter on Jan. 4th, 1863. The fruit of their union was nine children, four preceding him to the grave, leaving his wife, one son and four daughters to mourn their loss. He came to Texas in 1879, and settled in Anderson Co. He taught school and preached until 1885, when he came to Arlington, Tarrant Co. He has traveled and preached through Texas, and most of the southern and some of the northern states. He was apt to teach, an able defender of gospel truth, and shunned not to warn the church when he found the enemy approaching. He was Moderator of the Trinity River Association several years, and was Clerk at the time of his death. He was the seventh son of Archabel W. Collins, and the second son of his father's second wife. His father, A. W. Collins, was a member of the Primitive Baptist Church more than fifty years, and Deacon of his church more than forty years.

Brother Collins' funeral was preached by Elder A. D. Bourland, Moderator of the Trinity River Association, on the following day, to a large and attentive congregation of relatives and friends.

I. D. PARKER.

DIED—At his home in Pine Hill, Texas, June 22d, 1894, Capt. A. W. Buckner, aged 67 years, 5 months and 23 days.

Capt. Buckner was born in Georgia, Dec. 30th, 1828, and moved with his father to Texas in 1849. He was married to Myrtis E. Kilgore, in Claiborne Parish, La., July 14th, 1850. He and his noble wife, who survives him, were blessed with a large family of children, most of whom are still living. He joined the Old School Baptist Church at Mt. Carmel in 1866, in which faith he lived until June 22d, 1894, when, surrounded by his family and friends, he passed away.

Capt. Buckner for almost a half-century had been one of the very first citizens of his country. He was a kind and affectionate husband and father. His had always been a hospitable home, and nothing afforded him greater pleasure than sharing his comforts with his friends. The man of God was always sure of a hearty welcome from him. He remained firm in the teachings of his church.

Capt. Buckner by honest efforts accumulated a competency of this world's goods, but was ever charitable toward the poor and needy. He was a man of positive nature, with the most unswerving devotion to duty to his country, his neighbor and his God. To his country, for when she called him he took up arms and gallantly fought for her defense. To his neighbors, for they were always his friends; he was appreciated wherever honesty commanded it. To his God, in that unfaltering trust in his mercy. It was denied him to tell us during the last hours of his bright hope for the future, but his whole life spoke it more forcibly than any words could have done. However, but a few weeks before his death he told the writer that his whole purpose at that time was to live in peace with all mankind, and be prepared to meet his God.

It was my good fortune to know Capt. Buckner intimately. He was my father's friend, just and true. To me he was almost a father; and I am glad that it is my privilege to speak the praise which he so richly deserves. I can only say to his bereaved wife, You soon shall receive the summons to meet your loving and sainted husband where you no more shall suffer the pangs of parting.

J. E. WATKINS.

BECKVILLE, Texas, Jan. 30, 1895.

Mary Ann Mellott was born July 15th, 1814, and died Dec. 26th, 1894, aged 80 years, 5 months and 11 days.

Our dear sister was baptized in the fellowship of the Old School Baptist Church called Fairview, in Fulton Co., Pa., by the late Elder Thomas Rose, and was a faithful member until her death, though for a number of years she was not able to meet with her brethren. She lived with her son, D. R. Mellott, he and his wife being members of the same church.

Owing to the roughness of the weather, and by the request of the children, the unworthy writer tried to preach a funeral sermon at the house, using for a text Revelation xx. 6. The deceased leaves four sons and two daughters, her husband having been dead quite a number of years. We sorrow not as those who have no hope, our loss being her eternal gain.

ALSO,

Samuel Cutshall was born June 23d, 1833, and died Jan. 10th, 1895, aged 61 years, 6 months and 17 days.

Brother Cutshall was baptized in the fellowship of the Old School Baptist Church called Springfield, Huntingdon Co., Pa., by the late Elder Thomas Rose, about twenty years ago, and was soon afterward ordained Deacon of that church, which place he filled satisfactorily until disabled. His health gradually failed for about four years from the effects of "La Grippe," which ended in consumption. His house has been a welcome home ever since my connection with the church, and all the Baptists found a hearty welcome at his home. The church has lost a faithful and uncompromising member in the death of brother Cutshall. He leaves our dear sister, his companion, one son and five daughters to mourn their loss.

By his request I tried to speak words of comfort to the largest gathering of people ever known at that place on a funeral occasion, from Revelation xiv. 13; after which his body was laid in the tomb, to sleep that blessed sleep from which none ever wake to weep.

Your brother in hope,

AHIMAAZ MELLOTT.

NEEDMORE, Pa., Jan. 26, 1895.

DIED—At the home of his son-in-law, Joseph Lamners, near York, Neb., Nov. 9th, 1894, our dear brother, Thomas S. Stephens, aged 66 years and 11 months.

ALSO,

DIED—At the same place, Nov. 13th, 1894, his wife, sister Sophia Stephens, aged 65 years, 4 months and 3 days.

Brother and sister Stephens were returning home from the church constitution in Nuckolls Co., Neb., and on arriving at Mr. Lamners' brother Stephens was taken with a severe spell of coughing, from which he never recovered, having been weakly for a long time. Sister Stephens, who was also in poor health, after four days followed him to the world beyond.

Brother Stephens was born in Harrison Co., Ind., and was married to Sophia Armstrong on Dec. 5th, 1850. In 1855 they moved to Iowa, and in September, 1867, they both joined the Primitive Baptist Church called Little Flock, in Wapello Co., Iowa. In 1872 they moved to York Co., Neb., and were in the constitution of the church at York. Brother and sister Stephens were orderly-walking and loving disciples of our Lord Jesus Christ, always at their places of appointment when possible. He was also Deacon of the church, and had purchased to himself a good degree in following his blessed Master. They were highly esteemed by all who knew them. They have left a record that they were born of God. They left six children and six grandchildren to mourn their loss, besides the little church and numerous brethren and friends to feel their loss.

The funeral services were conducted by their pastor, Elder C. M. Cooper, with the writer.

J. H. RING.

DIED—At his residence on the farm on which he was born, in Miami Co., Ohio, Jesse C. Line. He was born July 15th, 1817, and died Jan. 25th, 1895, aged 77 years, 6 months and 10 days.

He was married to Harriet Denman on Oct. 10th, 1839. She died August 17th, 1849. He was married to Mahala McKinley on August 11th, 1850. To them were born two sons and three daughters. The sons died in infancy, and one daughter died at the age of eighteen years.

Brother Line united with the Harmony Predestinarian Baptist Church on April 5th, and was baptized April 6th, 1856. He was liberated by the church to exercise his gift in preaching on Jan. 1st, 1876, and was an uncompromising defender of the doctrine of the Bible, and a great friend of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

He left an aged and afflicted companion, two daughters and a host of friends and brethren to mourn their loss; but our loss is his eternal gain.

Elder J. P. Peters (pastor of the church) and the unworthy writer of this notice tried to comfort the sorrowing friends by the use of Job xiv. 14; after which the mortal body was interred in the old church cemetery, to await the appointed time for the change which he so often spoke of. The afflicted widow and daughters have the sympathy of all the brethren.

PICTORIAL HISTORY

OF THE

UNITED STATES.

By James D. McCabe.

This work has taken rank as the Standard History of the United States. It is no dry mass of details—no bombastic effort to inflame the national pride, but a clear, vivid and brilliant narrative of the events of our history, from the discovery of the American Continent down to the present time. It gives a most interesting account of the Indians of North America, from the time of the coming of the white men. The voyages of Columbus and the explorations and discoveries of the different nations of Europe are related with graphic power. Every step of our colonial history is traced with patient fidelity, and the sources of those noble and, we trust, enduring institutions, which have made our country free and great, are shown with remarkable clearness. Then follows a clear and succinct account of our great Struggle for Independence, and the establishment of the Federal Union—the events of our career from the close of the Revolution to the administration of Harrison.

The work is printed from plain, new type, on fine calendered paper, and comprised in one octavo volume of 960 pages. It is splendidly embellished with nearly 500 fine engravings, embracing battles and other historical scenes, portraits of distinguished men, views of our principal cities, &c., &c.

CORRESPONDENCE.

ELLIOTTSVILLE, Ky., Jan. 25, 1895.

EDITORS OF THE SIGNS—DEAR BRETHREN:—I herewith send you the experience of Elder James McDonald, which I am confident will be both interesting and edifying to the readers of the SIGNS. I should have sent it sooner, but having so many things to attend to I neglected it. Elder McDonald is an old soldier who has always been an uncompromising advocate of the faith once delivered to the saints. For nearly three years he and I have been together quite frequently, and there has not been a single difference between us either on faith or practice. To me he is a "true yoke-fellow." I meet so much opposition to the doctrine of the "Absolute Predestination of all things" and the "Eternal Vital Unity of Christ and his Church," and Elder McDonald is so wonderfully gifted in declaring these precious truths to the comfort of God's children that he is doubly dear to me. But I must take heed lest I give honor to man, and not give "honor to whom honor is due." Elder McDonald, like all the rest of us, is a poor sinner, in whose flesh dwelleth no good thing; and all the comfort we receive from his preaching comes from God, as does every good and perfect gift, and to God all honor is due. God forbid that we should engage in "angel worship." I fear the most of us are tainted with it. O may the breathing of our soul be, "Not unto us, O Lord, not unto us, but unto thy name give glory, for thy mercy and thy truth's sake."

J. W. FAIRCHILD.

WASIOTO, Ky., Nov. 22, 1894.

ELDER J. W. FAIRCHILD—DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST:—I will now try in part to comply with your request. I was born in Campbell Co., Tenn., Sept. 21st, 1829. My parents were poor, and I had but little advantage to obtain an education. At that time the country was thinly settled, and our schools, which lasted from one and a half to three months each year, were taught by very illiterate teachers; and as I had to walk three miles night and morning, and work hard to help support the family, I received very little advantage from them.

I was quite young when I can first remember the fear of death coming into my mind with such terror that at times it would make me fear and tremble. I was afraid I would die before I got to be a man. I cannot remember any fear of torment or future punishment, but only of dying before I became a man; for I thought if I lived to be a man I would then get what is called religion and be prepared to die and go to heaven. All this I believed I could do when I got to be a man, so I could do as I pleased and have no one to control me. These thoughts, I am now satisfied, came to me through the fear of death. I could hear people talk of the sting of death, which alarmed me very much and filled me with fear. I wanted to be a man so I could get religion first, and then I could get ready to die. But as I grew in stature these fears in a measure left me. Only occasionally I would think of dying, but the thought was soon gone when I would get into gay company; for I was so vain and wicked that I thought I was seeing all the pleasures I had pictured out to see when I got to be a man. Now I could live until I was old, and then get religion when I got ready. I was not ready now, I had a long life before me, and wanted to take my pleasure and enjoy myself going to balls and cotton-pickings, and to associate with the gay and be their leader. I loved sin, but I did not then know it was sin. I thought if I was honest and respectable in society and did not harm any one I was all right. So I lived this way after I got to be a man (as I have used the term, "got to be a man"), until the Lord, as I hope, stirred up my nest, showed me that I was a sinner, living without hope. I thought I had sinned away the day of grace (as I could then hear preachers say a man could do), and hell was my portion. I believe that when these thoughts came into my mind the very powers of hell gat hold on me, and I could (or can now) witness with David when he said, "The sorrows of death compassed me, the pains of hell gat hold upon me; I found trouble and sorrow."—Psalm cxvi. 3. I think I felt the very torments of hell. My sins rose as high as mountains. My guilt was so great, and God so just in my condemnation, that I felt the very flames of hell take hold on me. Then it was that I cried unto the Lord for mercy, but found none. These feelings in a measure passed off for a while, so my torment was not so great, yet I was continually trying to pray for mercy.

I will here relate a circumstance that took place with me while I was in this trouble of soul. I was taken with rheumatism in my left knee so that I could bend it but very little, nor could I get it quite straight. The pain was so severe that I did not get a good night's sleep for eighteen months. All times in the night I would hallow on account of it. Yet I would go all the time against the better counsel of my father. I knew I would be a cripple, and I was determined to go as long as I could, for I thought I was lost any how, and I would soon be out of the way.

At times I would conclude there was no mercy for me, and almost give up in despair. When such declarations of Scripture as "Seek, and ye shall find, knock, and it shall be opened unto you," would be presented to my mind, it would seem to give me momentary relief; but then the question would come, Are you seeking aright? You have put it off too long. It is too late. There is no mercy for you. Then the very powers of darkness would get hold upon me, and I would sink down in despair, while the breathings of my soul were, "Lord, be merciful to me, a poor sinner." Then his wonderful power, and the blessings the God of all grace had bestowed upon me, would bring joy to my heart, and I could rejoice that he had done great things for me, whereof I was glad. Yet I was burdened because I was a sinner. I wanted to be free from sin, and to know that my sins were forgiven. I would seek some deep ravine, where no eye could see me, and try to pray; but horror which no pen can describe would seize me, and I would be made to hasten out of that place for fear that something would devour me should I attempt to pray. I went on in this way for about three years. Sometimes the weight of sin and guilt was not so heavy, while at others it seemed as though I could not bear it. I thought if I could do my part the Lord would have mercy on me; and now I was determined to do my part. But I could not stay in Tennessee and forsake my companions, so I in company with my older brother left Tennessee for the state of Indianna, where I hoped my trouble and sorrow would end; for there, I thought, would be nothing to keep me from doing my part of the work. I began in earnest to search the Scriptures to see what I had to do for the Lord so he would pardon me. When I read the law, it said, "The soul that sinneth it shall die." I knew I had sinned, the law condemned me, and I must die. The law is just, God is just, and I am guilty, condemned by this just law and just God to die. Heaven and earth may pass away, but not a jot or a tittle of God's word shall fail till all be fulfilled. What must I do? The testimony is against me; the law condemns me. I must pray with a pure heart fervently. But I have no such a heart; mine is a wicked, deceitful heart. Pray, nothing doubting. But I doubt anything in the Scripture being for me. So I am now lost, and only have to wait the final sentence, "Depart." I knew it was just in God to send me to hell. I could not see how he could be just and save such a wicked sinner. I wanted to be saved, wanted God to be just, and wanted his will done if it sent me to hell; yet I did not want to go there. I was now many miles from my father's house, among strangers, except one brother and his wife, and had hired to work for a man about a mile from my brother's, where I made my home. I found no comfort in society, I was so desolate, waiting the sentence of God to seal my eternal destiny, yet pleading for mercy to be extended to one so vile. I went home to my brother's on Sunday, about the first of May, 1855. On that night I, a poor, wretched sinner, lay down on my bed, never expecting to see the sun rise again. Tongue nor pen can ever describe the agony of my poor soul at that time. My pillow was wet with tears, the only ones I remember shedding. My prayer was, "God, be merciful to me, a poor sinner." If I slept any I slept praying. Next morning I arose and started to my work. When about sixty steps from the house I heard a voice say, "Repent and you shall be saved." My load of guilt and condemnation was gone. The next thing I remember I was about half a mile from my brother's. Everything seemed to be praising God, and I was very happy. These words of the poet came to me,

> "Tongue cannot express
> The sweet comfort and peace
> Of a soul in its earliest love."

This same word "Repent," &c., had come to me before, but my load of sin still remained. I tried to repent, but could not, for I did not know what repentance was. But now I realized its meaning. It is Christ that gives power to turn and forsake sin. It is he that removes our guilt and sin, reveals his love in us, gives us a right spirit, and puts his fear in our hearts. I now believe that Christ is the only Savior; that he came to save the lost. O what joy of soul to find I had a Savior! I thought I never would see any more trouble, nor commit any more sin; I was now happy, and would remain so all my life.

The thought now came into my mind that I must be baptized. I began to look for the church of God, or the church that I rather join, for I supposed that the different denominations were the church. I went to hear the Campbellites and Methodists, but they could not tell my travels. I heard the Old School Baptists, and they could begin with my journey and tell every place I had been. In a word, they could tell all my joys and sorrows, my hopes and fears, and point out my duty as a christian. I wanted fellowship with them, but feared I was deceived, and was not fit to be with them, for I could not be free from sin, as I had pictured to do. I would go to hear the other denominations preach, and they would always leave me out; but the Old Baptists would point me out. I feared to offer myself to them, for I was not good, feared I was deceived, and had nothing to tell them that they would receive; yet I wanted to be baptized and live with them. I felt I could not live as I was living. I wanted to do my duty as a christian, if I was not deceived. I went before the Old School Baptist Church at Little Kill Buck, Madison Co., Ind., on the second Sunday in March, 1856, and related some of the things I have here written. I was received for baptism, and on the third Sunday in May, 1856 (if not misaken), was baptized in the fellowship of said church by Elder William A. Thompson. May God ever keep and guard us to the end, is our prayer.

Yours in hope of eternal life,

JAMES McDONALD.

MACOMB, Ill., Jan. 31, 1895.

DEAR EDITORS OF THE SIGNS:—A year has passed away since I wrote for our dear family paper, and now, while sending in my subscription, I feel a desire to write a short letter to the household of faith. But my mind seems so dark and becloud-ed, and I have such a feeling sense of my unworthiness and incompetency, and I am such a vile, sinful creature, that it is in much weakness and fear and trembling that I attempt to write. I am so ignorant of spiritual things, I feel that I cannot say a word to comfort any one. Yet I believe I feel a desire to add my feeble testimony to the cause of truth; for I do hope I love the cause of Christ, and the things pertaining to his kingdom constitute my chief joy. My earnest desire and prayer is for the welfare of Zion, that peace may dwell within her borders, that her dear children may dwell together in unity, that they may meet together in love and fellowship, helping to bear one another's burdens, each one esteeming the others better than themselves, so fulfilling the law of Christ. Much of my time is spent in darkness and gloom, and I am often down deep in the valley, where the waves go over me. I often sink in the "Slough of Despond," where I must cry for help. I think of Paul in his voyage to Rome, when amid the tempest they were compelled to cast overboard everything of hindrance to the ship. So we on life's uneven way must cast away all things worldly, and feel the vanity of things below, before we are enabled to feel that peace which the world knows nothing about, neither can understand. I sometimes have a little hope that I love the good old way, and love to inquire and seek after the old path. And though it may be beset with many trials, temptations, and sorrows and afflictions, we pray to be kept in it. Though the way is rough, and thorns tear our feet, and foes without and fears within is our common inheritance, yet we would not turn back, but fain would press forward on this pilgrimage, looking to Jesus, who will bring us off more than conquerors. Were we left to ourself we would soon be out of the way, and by our sins we would sink in despair. But when we look to Jesus our little hope revives, and we are made to sing,

"Why was I made to hear his voice,
And enter where there's room?"

When we think of Jesus being a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief, we know he will comfort his sorrowing ones.

When my dear father, Elder I. N. Vanmeter, was called away, I felt that I could never go to our church meeting again and see his vacant seat; but when the meeting day came around two weeks ago, the weather was so pleasant and the roads so very nice we felt it was selfish to stay at home when our sorrow was theirs also. So sister Mattie and I concluded to go, and drove in the buggy seventeen miles. We had a good meeting, though a sad one. We were much disappointed in not seeing Elder Ketchum, who was expected to be there; but we were comforted by the coming of our dear venerable brother, Elder Dark, and also brother B. F. Butler, of N. D., who preached much to the comfort of the church. At this meeting resolutions of respect in regard to my father were read, as was also a letter from Elder Purriss, of Ohio, expressing his sympathy and sorrow in the loss of the pastor of the church. Many tears were shed, and sorrow was seen on every face as we all talked of the one that was gone. It was the only time in my life that I had ever been at our church meeting when my father was not present, and it had been very seldom he was ever absent in thirty-seven years. It was with a heart full of sorrow and grief that we beheld his vacant seat, and beheld not his loved form in the pulpit proclaiming salvation, nor hear his voice singing the songs of Zion. But we sorrowed not as those who had no hope, but most of all that we should see his face no more. The brethren and sisters of this church were very kind during my father's sickness, coming a long distance to visit him, bestowing many favors, for which the family were truly grateful. Since then I felt I could never take my pen again; but my dear mother and other members of our family have received many letters from dear brethren, sisters and friends; and as we cannot answer them all, we wish in this way to thank them all for their kind expressions of sympathy in this time of our sad bereavement. We pray God's richest blessings to rest upon you, and that you may have such friends in time of sorrow. These things do not heal the wound, but it soothes the broken heart, and it is a great comfort to know that we have even the fellowship of our brethren. This is beyond price. Those letters are read over and over and are highly prized by us all. My mother deems it a great favor to receive a letter from any one of God's dear children. Not wishing to add anything to what Elder Ketchum has written, I wish to write a few things expressive of my own feelings in regard to my father's illness and death. Many questions have been asked us through letters, and several have expressed a desire that I write something for the SIGNS, giving a more detailed account of his last illness and death. At my mother's request I have consented to do so, and in my weak and imperfect manner will try in this to answer all the questions I can.

For a year past we could see that father was failing. He appeared more broken and feeble, yet he attended all his appointments. During the last fall he visited five associations, and I have heard him say he seldom heard more able or more glorious preaching than at some of these, or ever enjoyed himself better. He had a spell of heart trouble the first part of November, but got better and went to his own church meeting on the third Saturday in November, which proved to be his last. He was taken with a severe pain in his side and breast that day, and was unable to preach, but was able to get home, which he never left again. The pain became so much worse that the family physican was called, who pronounced it neuralgiac rheumatism of the heart. He suffered greatly with this during all his sickness. The second week he had several smothering spells with his heart, from which we did not think he could revive. Two weeks before he died his feet began to swell, and continued to grow worse, passing up into his body and chest, causing much hard coughing and smothering. The skin broke in several places and the water oozed from it. For two weeks he sat upright in an invalid chair, being unable to lie down day or night, not removing his clothes or lying down. The only rest he obtained were a few brief minutes at a time, sitting or leaning a little to one side. Thus he suffered more than tongue can tell till the last. All that a faithful physician, family and friends could do seemed to do no good. His age and such a complication of diseases were all against him; yet he bore it all with the greatest of patience and fortitude. Not a murmur was heard, and not an impatient word. He took his medicine till near the last, submitting to anything that was done for him, patiently and uncomplainingly. He continued to grow worse till the night of the 13th, just four weeks from the time he was taken. He was very restless the first part of the night, suffering very much from shortness of breath till after one o'clock. All at once he began to breathe easier, and closing his eyes like a little child going to sleep, without a struggle or groan he breathed his life away, surrounded by his wife and children, with my husband's and brother's arms about him. A bright smile plainly visible passed over his features while breathing his last breath. Then he was tenderly laid down to rest, after four long weary weeks of suffering. His end was very peaceful and calm, though we did not think of it being so sudden, some of the family only reaching his side a few minutes before all was over. His eyes were only closed about five minutes, he speaking a few words just before. He spoke very little of death during his sickness; but when Elder Dark, his close companion and yoke-fellow in the ministry, visited him he said to him that thus far the Lord had been with him and helped him, and he was in his hands, and whether he lived or not the Lord would be glorified. He said to others, "The Lord's will be done," and only wondered why such an unworthy creature as he was had been permitted to live so long. The last evening he quoted these words, "All things work together for good to them that love God," and spoke of hearing the music. He said he could only wait the breaking of the day. During the last hours we could catch broken words of prayer.

Thus our father passed away. His life work was done, he had finished his course, and like a shock of corn fully ripe he was gathered. He has gone home to receive his reward. He lived at peace with all men, having the love and honor of his family and relatives, the respect of his neighbors where he lived forty years, and the confidence and fellowship of his brethren. He passed through many trials and hardships during his early ministry, walking a good part of the time sometimes a distance of forty miles to his meeting. For many years he was the pastor of four churches, and in after years of three, spending the rest of the time in traveling and visiting other churches. He was of a cheerful disposition, and I can say I never saw him angry.

It was one of my chief pleasures to visit him, where he would greet all with a smile of welcome and spend nearly all the time reading or conversing on things of the kingdom of Christ, which was his chief delight at home or abroad. His life was one of usefulness and honor, and I feel I am unworthy of such a father. I speak nothing in the way of egotism, for I believe he was worthy of all the praise I can bestow. We feel, with many others, that his place will be hard to fill; but while we sorrow, let us not be distressed, for our God still reigns, and declares he will not be without a witness. We know there are many able and faithful watchmen upon the walls of Zion, who will fail not to declare the whole counsel of God; and younger ones are being raised up around us, who are able and precious gifts to the church. Mother and sister Mattie still reside at the old homestead. Some of us stay with them as much as possible, but they are very sad and lonely. Now, to those dear friends who have asked me, I have written this, and to all others who feel interested in reading it. I am so sorry I have made it so long. I fear it will prove to be very uninteresting. But this is one of my great faults, I will write too much. Please forgive me. We would love very much to hear from sister Mary Parker again. With best wishes for the SIGNS, and a sincere prayer for all God's afflicted ones, I remain your most unworthy sister in sorrow,

SARAH E. RUNKLE.

GITTINGS, Md., Jan., 1895.

As there are so many "Christian Endeavor" societies in the world, and all professing to be doing God's service, in "helping Jesus to save sinners," it has occurred to me, Why is this? If they are heartily and sincerely engaged in their work, are we to say, Don't do this? Saul of Tarsus verily believed he was doing God's service when he was preaching the law and persecuting the saints. So these, in doing the works of the flesh, are only doing what Saul did, and what every one of Adam's race has done, and are still doing, until God says, "Why persecutest thou me?" This is the decree of God, that "The soul that sinneth it shall die." The natural man, knowing no better, goes to work to save himself and others; and this, no doubt, is all in the purpose of God; for without this restraint on men there would be no bounds to their evil propensities. It is by the power of God, of course, that they are kept within their bounds. Then, if this is so, why should we find fault with them for doing what all men in nature do? In one sense they are doing God's service. They are the earth that opened her mouth and swallowed up the flood that the dragon cast out of his mouth after the woman, that she might be carried away of the flood. Then, what have we to do with them? Are they not in the hands of God? But let us rather look within ourselves, and not find fault with them. We find that under the old or law covenant a law was given to the Jews, and to them only, and was not binding on any but them, nor applicable to any others. And so, under the new or spiritual covenant, a law is given to spiritual Israel, and is applied to no others, and is not binding on any of Adam's race except those that are born again; and it is a part of the experience of every child of God that they are disobedient; and without law there can be no disobedience. Therefore they are under law to Christ; and this law is given by inspiration. We find this law in the Scriptures. "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable [to the man of God] for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness; that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly [or throughly] furnished unto all good works." If the man of God is perfect, he needs no reproof, no correction, no instruction in righteousness. But we have the evidence in ourselves that we are imperfect, and need all these things; and not only that, but we are evil, and that continually. Paul, in writing to the Galatian brethren, warns them against the works of the flesh. He does not tell them to beware of those that follow the lusts of the flesh, but to not fulfill the lusts of the flesh in themselves; "For he that soweth to the flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption." Do the saints ever sow to the flesh? No others ever do, with a knowledge of reaping of the flesh corruption. Therefore Paul commands the saints and faithful brethren in Christ which are at Colosse to mortify their members which are upon the earth, &c.; "for which things' sake the wrath of God cometh on the children of disobedience." These are the children of God; for no others have ever been commanded to thus obey, or mortify their members which are upon the earth. Paul exhorts Timothy to "Preach the word: be instant in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort, with all long suffering and doctrine. For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine," &c. "And they shall turn away their ears from the truth," &c. For this cause Paul left Titus in Crete, that he might set in order the things that were needed. And among other things, there were "many unruly and vain talkers and deceivers, whose mouths must be stopped." Titus was commanded to rebuke them sharply, that they might be sound in the faith. Others had their mind and conscience defiled. If so, they must have been pure before. You cannot defile that which is already defiled. Peter tells of those that were blind, and had forgotten they were purged from their old sins; who had forsaken the right way, and were gone astray, and had turned from the holy commandment delivered unto them. These few quotations in connection with my own experience, have led me to the conclusion that all the laws and commands written in the New Testament Scriptures belong to the children of God; and all the judgments also; for God judges none without a law, and none others are subject to this law. A wide field opens up here, and I must be brief. I once felt to give all these admonitions and warnings, with their punishments, to those we recognize as worldly religionists. When I was first released from bondage under the law, and seemed to enter into the glorious liberty of the gospel, I felt above every sinful thought, and any light or trifling conversation would sting me to the heart. I felt that I could never again enter into any light or trifling talk. But I soon found in myself much to grieve over, and would be rebuked in my own conscience. But as time passed, I not only found myself engaged in this, but also filled with evil thoughts, which if put into practice would have sent me to the penitentiary or gallows; and I have looked for and felt the fiery indignation of the Lord, and have been cast into hell, and suffered the pangs thereof. I have felt to mourn and lament my own sinfulness and vileness to its full extent. "Yes, but," says one, "you never denied your Lord and Master." But I have, and that many times; and the one solace I find is that Peter denied him, and the prophet said he was vile, and Paul said, "When I would do good, evil is present with me." And I, much worse than they, am so ready to follow the flesh and the lusts thereof. Where then is there hope for me? But there is another side or picture to this scene. There is comfort in the thought that I never was troubled about these things before the burden of the Lord came upon me. I know there was a change of some kind, for before this I was wallowing in the mire, and loved it. I loved my ways then; but now I hate them. Is there not a cause for this? And if it is not grace, I do not know what it is. It may be a hallucination, but now I hate the things which I do, and yet do them; and I love the things I leave undone. This causes me to mourn and sorrow. But here faith comes into exercise, and love to God comes into my soul, and hope springs up and causes my heart to leap for joy; and for a little while I am lifted above the things of this world, above the lusts of the flesh, and Jesus appears as the one altogether lovely, the chiefest among ten thousand. But as soon as he hides his smiling face my own blackness appears, and I feel that I am a well without water, or a cloud carried with the tempest, and cannot cease from sin; having a heart exercised with covetous practice, and feel that if I am a child I am a cursed one. This is what I understand to be the meaning of the words, "after they have escaped the pollutions of the world, through the knoweledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, they are again entangled therein, and overcome, the latter end is worse with them than the beginning." May God in his goodness and mercy enable us to hold fast to that which is good, and keep us from the evil. Nevertheless his purpose will be fulfilled in us, to the end that he may be glorified. When by faith we are enabled to see the ways of unrighteousness, and hate them, and rejoice in the righteousness of our dear Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, then is he honored and glorified in us. We must live by faith on the Son of God, and be "kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the last time."

Brother Jenkins, I have written this hastily, and as my mind was led, and submit it to your judgment.

Yours in tribulation,

NEEDMORE, Pa., Jan. 26, 1895.

DEAR BRETHREN:—Inclosed I send you a letter written to me by our dear sister Lizzie Himes, which I think might be a comfort to others, as it has been to me. Sister Lizzie is wonderfully afflicted, but she has a wonderfully strong faith given her to look beyond her sufferings, realizing what Paul says, "I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us."

Your brother in hope of eternal life,

AHIMAAZ MELLOTT.

HOPEWELL, Pa., Jan. 13, 1895.

ELDER AHIMAAZ MELLOTT—MY DEAR BROTHER IN THE BLESSED HOPE:—Your letter came to me last evening full of comfort and speaking the language of one of those whom our Savior calls blessed; not with this world's goods, but blessed with heavenly treasures, which is by far the greatest blessing ever bestowed on mortal man; neither indeed could there be any greater. Having this, what need we more? Having the assurance that God has called us by his grace, that he is ours and we are his, we should not fear what may be said of us; for they can only wound and kill the flesh, and after that they have no power; but he tells us whom to fear. Fear ye him who after death hath power to destroy both soul and body in hell. Yea, I say, fear him. And what doth belong to them that fear the Lord! His mercy is with us from everlasting to everlasting. Let the enemy persecute us. If God be for us who indeed can be against us? The Lord knows them that are his. It is not all that cry "Lord, Lord," that shall be saved, but they that do his will. When we see them walk in their own works, and hear them boast of what they are doing, and the many souls they are saving, then

DEATH OF ELDER J. R. RESPESS.

It is with sadness that we learn of the death of Elder J. R. Respess, of Butler, Ga. He passed away, we learn, after some months of great suffering and prostration, on Monday, February 4th. He was the founder and one of the editors of the Gospel Messenger and Primitive Pathway. Few men among our ministry have been more widely known or more affectionately loved and revered. We believe that Elder Respess was a truly good man, and that he feared God and loved the cause of Zion. His singleness of mind impressed itself upon all who knew him. He was a man of warm heart and of generous impulses, retiring, timid and unassuming. These characteristics endeared him to all who knew him.

He had never but once visited this section of the country. This was about twenty-five years ago, in company with Elder Gold. It was our privilege to hear him four times from the pulpit. His preaching was experimental and deeply spiritual. A sermon of his at the Delaware Association, upon a subject of which he greatly loved to speak, "Naaman the Syrian," will never be forgotten by any who heard it. We had hoped that some time we should meet him again on earth, but we must bow to the will of Supreme Wisdom.

We would extend our sympathies to the bereaved family, to the churches which he had served so long, and to the readers of the Messenger, for whose columns he had contributed so much. We shall gladly publish a more extended account of his life and death if some one will prepare it.

REFLECTIONS.

What can we render to the Lord for all his benefits toward us? The sweet singer of Israel said, "I will take the cup of salvation, and call upon the name of the Lord: I will pay my vows unto the Lord now, in the presence of all his people." To us all as a nation, as individuals, and, as we trust, the children of God, his bounties have been very great. We cannot even in our thoughts number them all. Many of the tokens of his favor in our blindness and ignorance we are not even aware of; and still they continue to flow down to us in a thousand streams of mercy. Truly we can all say, "He hath not dealt with us after our sins, nor rewarded us according to our transgressions." To us all he has vouchsafed manifold temporal blessings. Life, health, friends, the light of the sun, food, raiment, and shelter from the storm. All these are a few of his temporal mercies. From the Scriptures we learn that these are the daily gifts of his good hand. If any of us are disposed to say that we owe these things to our own wisdom, prudence, industry or frugality, and thus to boast over our fellows who have not received these blessings in such abundance as have we, it will be good for us to remember that these very qualities of wisdom, prudence, industry and frugality are not ours except as God, the Giver of all, has bestowed them upon us. "What have we that we have not received?" as surely applies to these temporal mercies as it does to the richer spiritual blessings of the new and everlasting covenant. "Thus saith the Lord, Let not the wise man glory in his wisdom, neither let the mighty man glory in his might, let not the rich man glory in his riches: but let him that glorieth glory in this, that he understandeth and knoweth me, that I am the Lord which exercise loving-kindness, judgment and righteousness in the earth: for in these things I delight, saith the Lord." Wisdom, strength and riches—these three things sum up all that the natural man can desire or possess; yet in none of these things is there any room to glory. As we therefore, brethren, who possess these things, look back, let us remember who has been the Giver, and let us also remember that they are but for a time, and shall all perish with the using of them; and let us remember above all how greatly we have misused them, and so shall we be humbled, and kept from the great sin of vainglorying and boastfulness before God. If to any of us these things, any or all of them, have been denied, may we be helped to remember that these things do not constitute our life, and that if we have felt some evidence that we understand and know the judgment and righteousness of the Lord we have more than wisdom, strength or riches here, and the promise of an everlasting inheritance beyond.

Turning from this brief review of temporal mercies, we are also constrained to confess our great cause for gratitude as churches. The Lord has given his people within the bounds of our acquaintance as much of peace and prosperity as often fall to our lot on earth. When we consider our perverse natures, our proneness to err, the evil passions of the flesh, such as pride, vainglory, envy, malice, unforgivingness, uncharitableness, anger, emulations, and the thousand evil things which cannot be named, it is a continual marvel of grace that peace and love ever abound among us at all. How great are the Lord's mercies to our unrighteousness every day! Our adversary, the devil, is continually as a roaring lion going about, seeking whom he may devour. We have no might against this archadversary; but we can rejoice that this lion is overcome and put to flight by another lion, "the lion of the tribe of Judah." The God of heaven shall bruise Satan under your feet shortly. It is under your feet, brethren, that Satan is bruised, but the God of heaven does it; and we may well rejoice, because for this purpose was the Son of God manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil.

Above all things, we have reason to rejoice because our God has still kept us steadfast in the truth which has always been dear to our hearts. The general tone of our correspondence has been in full harmony with the doctrine of God our Savior, which has always been contended for in the Signs of the Times. We are glad that our correspondents have shown, as a general rule, a disposition to accept the plain testimony of the word of God, even though they may have felt that that testimony cut off some of the most plausible conclusions of frail, perverted human reason. For ourselves, we have felt these many years to say that we will believe God in his word against the testimony of our own senses, for our senses may deceive us; against the conclusions of reason, for our reason is blinded by sin; and against the teachings of all science, for science is continually changing its conclusions, that being known to be false to-day which was considered incontrovertible yesterday. We freely admit that we may, any of us, be mistaken as to the true meaning of portions of the Scriptures; but when that true meaning is ascertained it must stand against a thousand foes. Let God be true, but every man a liar. We have ever found a disposition in those who are not willing to believe the strong doctrine of election, salvation by grace, predestination, divine sovereignty, foreknowledge, and other equally important principles of truth, when they were confronted with the plain testimony of Scripture bearing upon these things, to say, "O, I do not understand that;" or, "That is too deep for us to understand." Of course the meaning is that the testimony of God in those Scriptures conflicts with the notions of our minds, and therefore such testimony is under a cloud. We are glad that none of our correspondents have adopted this language, or any language similar to it. We indeed cannot comprehend the deep things of God; but we must protest against singling out some Scriptures or some principles of doctrine as being harder to understand than others. Nothing can be, for instance, more profound than the doctrine that God was manifest in the flesh; yet it was so, if we believe the Scriptures, though all human reason and all human science and all our human experience refuses to be reconciled to it. We do not understand it, but we do believe it; and so of every principle of the doctrine of God our Savior. May God forbid that we should be found among those who say, "These are hard sayings; who can hear [understand] them?" We say again that for a child of God the meaning of the Scripture is a legitimate subject for study and investigation; but the fact of the absolute truth of the testimony of the Scripture he must not, dare not question. He may inquire, "What does this text really say?" but he must admit, whatever it does mean, "I know it is truth." O that we all might always bring to our reading of the Scriptures such a reverent, humble, believing spirit as this!

The Lord's mercy toward the Signs has been great. For sixty-two years it has continued to uphold the principles of faith announced in the opening number. We are sure that we need not call for the proof of this. Its readers know its truth. Changes have occurred in its editorial department, but no change has taken place in its principles. Many matters of interest have been discussed in its columns. Sometimes things that were new in the minds of the people of God have come up, and have been written about for a time. If they were true they have lived; if inconsistent with the word of God they have been seen to be so, and have died. We have not doubted at any time that in the end truth would prevail. May the God of peace be with us all.

MATTHEW XVI. 19.

Brother Beebe:—Please give your views of Matt. xvi. 19. "And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth, shall be bound in heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth, shall be loosed in heaven." What I particularly desire is to know what is meant by the keys, the binding and the loosing.

Your unworthy brother,

ROBERT REVENNAUGH.

Muskingum Co., Ohio, May 15, 1848.

REPLY.

In giving instructions to his disciples, our Lord made use of many figures, which were at once calculated to secure the twofold object of hiding the real import of his instructions from the wise and prudent of the world, and at the same time elucidating the things of his kingdom to the subjects of his spiritual dominion. The wisdom of God is displayed in the selection and fitness of the figures employed; they were always plain and familiar, and well calculated to secure the design contemplated. Keys are only used where there are locks; and locks and keys are used to protect and secure treasure from the violence and dishonesty of those to whom such treasure does not belong; hence the figure in this text teaches us that the kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ is a sanctuary, or sacred inclosure, secured by walls and bulwarks which God has appointed to secure it from violence of thieves and robbers. The kingdom of God cannot be seen by any who are not born of God, nor can it be entered by any who are not born of water and the Spirit. In this application of the figure the key (not keys) of the house of David is laid on the shoulder of Eliakim, who was a figure of Christ, of whom it is written, "So he shall open, and none shall shut; and he shall shut, and none shall open."—See Isa. xxii. 22. Christ is the Way, the Door, and the only entrance into the kingdom of God is by and through him. The apostles were never vested with power to regenerate or quicken dead sinners, this work being exclusively the work of God, and performed not by or through the instrumentality of men, but by the quickening Spirit. It has been presumptuously claimed by papists that power to remit sins and bring sinners into the kingdom of heaven was given to Peter as the keys of the kingdom, and that Peter transmitted them to the succession of prelates of the papal order down to the end of time; but Peter pretended to no such power. He preached repentance and remission of sins in the name of the exalted Prince and Savior, and most emphatically declared (Acts iv. 12) that there is no salvation in any other; for there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved.

By comparing the text under consideration with Matt. xviii. 18, we see that Peter had no more power vested in him than the other apostles had, or Paul would have been at least a whit behind him. The power intended by the keys, therefore, we are constrained to believe was that by which they were distinguished as apostles of the Lamb, to act officially in their apostolic vocation; for this power they were directed to tarry at the city of Jerusalem after the ascension of Christ until they should be endued with power from on high. And this power they received when the day of Pentecost was fully come. On that occasion they were baptized with the Holy Ghost and with fire, spake with tongues, and wrought miracles in the name of their risen and exalted Lord. Here they were fairly inducted into their official stations to sit on twelve thrones and judge the twelve tribes of Israel. Not as legislators, but as the constituted judges of the spiritual or antitypical tribes of Israel, they were put in possession of apostolic authority to "Bind up the testimony and law among the disciples."—Isa. viii. 16. With this commission from the exalted Head of the church, and the infallible inspiration of the Holy Ghost, they were fully empowered to establish the order of the kingdom of Christ according to his laws, of which they were constituted the infallible judges. Hence all their decisions were final and conclusive. The doctrine, ordinances, order and regulation of the kingdom were authoritatively established by them and ratified in heaven. No power in heaven or earth can release one of the subjects of the kingdom from their obligation to adhere strictly throughout all time to the faith and practice which they bound on earth. The doctrine of the apostles was gladly received on the day of Pentecost, and steadfastly continued in by the primitive church; that doctrine embracing as it does predestination, election, redemption, justification, effectual and irresistible calling, regeneration, preservation of the saints in grace to ultimate glory, resurrection of the dead, &c., is by all the authority of Jesus Christ through his apostles bound on earth and bound in heaven; and if any man, or if Paul or an angel, should presume to preach any other, let him be accursed.

But their commission was not only to bind, but also to loose. All that they have not enjoined on the saints they have loosed them from, whether expressed or implied. Of things expressed we may name the law from which they are redeemed. "Ye are no more under the law, but under grace." They have decided that the handwriting of ordinances which was against us is blotted out and nailed to the cross, and no man has any right to bind the service of those ordinances on the saints by judging them in meats, or drinks, new moons, or Sabbaths; for the apostles have loosed them from all such obligations and admonished them to stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ has made them free, and not to be again entangled with the yoke of bondage. The apostles have officially loosed the children of God from all obligation to submit to the dictation of any man or set of men in matters of religion. They have bound on earth the obligation on the saints to submit to the governments of the nations or states where they may reside, but in religious matters to die rather than allow any man to judge them.

Our brother will understand us to believe that not Peter alone, but all the apostles, received the keys of the kingdom; and that by the keys, &c., we understand their apostolic authority, being endued or inspired by the Holy Ghost to bind on the saints all that the laws of Christ require them to observe and practice, and to loose them from all other religious obligations of whatever name or pretence they may be. With this key they have in their acts and in their epistles to the churches opened the gates of Zion that all the righteous nation which keepeth the truth may enter in; for God has given them a right to enter in through the gates into the city. And with that key they have locked the gates of Zion against all innovation in doctrine and order, leaving without the walls and gates dogs, sorcerers, murderers and idolaters, and whosoever loveth and maketh a lie.

If our understanding of the subject be correct, no new laws or decisions can ever be required for the government of the church of God. No new doctrines, ordinances or rules, nor any amendment, abridgement or modification of their decisions can ever be admitted. Heaven has registered and the immutable God has sanctioned the faith and order of the gospel church as defined and enforced by the apostles, and none can be regarded as churches of our Lord Jesus Christ which do not hold and walk in that faith and order, to the exclusion of everything else.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y., June 1, 1848.

"HARD TIMES."

NEVER since our connection with the SIGNS OF THE TIMES have we known such a time of general delinquency among our subscribers in paying their subscriptions. The plea almost invariably is the "times are so hard." We are well aware of the "hard times," and each one that holds back his subscription adds just so much the more to our "hard times." The first of this year we discontinued the paper and sent notices to between seven hundred and one thousand who were a year or more in arrears with their subscriptions, and whose aggregate delinquency amounted to about three thousand dollars, but as yet we have received only about three hundred dollars, or ten per cent. on the whole amount. We also still have on our subscription list many hundreds whose subscriptions expired several months ago, and if these would pay up and renew for another year it would be a great help to us in this our greatest time of need. While we can better afford to carry a subscriber a year on credit than to lose his support altogether, we hope that the brethren and the friends of the SIGNS will not, if they possibly can help it, ask us to wait. It is not a matter of "being afraid to trust them," but a question of our ability to get through the volume without the money. Each amount is small in itself, but the aggregate is large, and to be deprived of it makes "harder times" in the SIGNS office than we hope the majority of our subscribers have to experience.

Again we wish to say, if you are but a few months in arrears, or your time is just out, and you cannot send the money just now, but expect to be able in a short time to do so, please do not discontinue your paper until you can pay, for we can illy afford to lose your patronage during the time the paper is discontinued. Please do the best you can for us, brethren, as we never needed your help more since we have been publishing the SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

It is very distasteful to us to have to urge the payment of subscriptions, and if we were not actually obliged to do so in order to meet the expenses of publishing the paper we should be glad to be relieved of the task.

MATHEMATICAL FACT.

"GOOD morning, brother Jones. How are you getting along these 'hard times?'"

Brother J.—"O, I don't suppose I should complain, brother Brown; but the 'hard times' are pretty severe on me."

Brother B.—"Yes, the only thing we can do is to economize. That's what I am doing."

Brother J.—"So am I, in every way I can. One of the hardest things I have had to do was to order my SIGNS OF THE TIMES discontinued. My wife and I have taken so much comfort in reading it for the last thirty years that it will be hard for us to give it up."

Brother B.—"I was thinking of ordering mine stopped; but when I come to consider that I would only economize about half a cent a day by so doing, I concluded that I could better afford to deprive myself of something else, even if it were one meal a month, than do without my SIGNS. Besides, I feel that as the paper is the oldest published in defense of the cause we hold so dear, we should do all we can to sustain the publication."

Brother J.—"That is so, and after all the discontinuing of the SIGNS will economize expenses, as you say, only about half a cent a day; and if I am as careful as that about all my expenses I shall not miss what I pay for the paper. I often read one article that is worth more to me than the price of the paper for the whole year. I shall write on immediately and renew my subscription; and what a happy woman my wife will be when I tell her that I have ordered the paper for another year."

Brother B.—"I am glad I met you."

Brother J.—"I am glad you did. Good morning."

Brother B.—"Good morning."

EXTRAORDINARY OFFER.

WE still continue our offer to send two new subscribers, and credit an old subscriber one year, for three dollars; but we cannot afford to send to one new subscriber, and credit an old subscriber one year, for two dollars. Please do not ask us to do it.

Any one who is already a subscriber is authorized to act as agent for us; and we will send the paper for the first year to any new subscribers they may send us at one dollar each, and they are entitled to retain the other dollar for their commission.

Under no circumstances can new subscribers send to us direct and get the paper for themselves for less than the regular rates.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SON—DEAR BROTHER:—For the present my correspondents will address me at Mattoon, Ill. You will also please change address of the SIGNS from Loxa to Mattoon, and oblige your brother in hope, J. G. SAWIN.

are they doing our Master's will? No. I think the apostle in Philippians iii. 18–21 tells us something. "For many walk, of whom I have told you often, and now tell you even weeping, that they are enemies of the cross of Christ: whose end is destruction, whose god is their belly, and whose glory is in their shame, who mind earthly things. For our conversation is in heaven, from whence also we look for the Savior, our Lord Jesus Christ, who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things unto himself." Thus I have written down four verses from Philippians, and I do not see in them that God will change my good body and fashion it like unto his glorious body. If we have made it good what need has Christ to change it? If we have power to save souls, a Savior is not necessary. But, my dear brother, how many walk in their own strength, their own goodness and their own mercies. But, my dear brother, do you, do I, do any of the dear Lord's children, walk in their own strength? If we do we shall fall, and great will be our fall. No, we all feel the need of our Savior, and without him we can do nothing. It is him who strengthens us; it is him who has brought us safe thus far, and he will take us home. I know, my dear brother, it is just as you say, a wonderful responsibility rests on one who stands as a witness to God's eternal truth; but you stand there, my dear brother, and feel how utterly impossible it would be for you to comfort any except God be with and strengthen you; and he will give you strength to press onward and upward, and contend earnestly against the floods of the world, for they are not of Christ. I would like to come up to the meeting in Friends' Cove, but I cannot, nor do not know if I shall ever be permitted to assemble with you here upon the earth again. This is only known by the dear Lord. But how I was comforted and built up when there before. Perhaps that was the first and last that I shall ever have that privilege; but remember, my dear brother, though my flesh is absent from you, yet my heart is there, and desires that I could be present in the flesh; yet I cannot be there, and as I before stated, may never be there again; but if I am not permitted to meet with you again here on earth I trust to meet you all in heaven, where we shall meet to part no more. I have been very sick of late, and am failing very rapidly. It is with the greatest difficulty I am around any at all in the house. It causes me much pain and distress to walk. I have been much worse since Wednesday, and I have had cause to fear that my time here will soon be over, unless I make a change for the better. On Thursday when the doctor was over he said the quicker I was taken to Philadelphia the better. He said, "It is surely hard to see you suffer so, and I think in your case death would be by far the more pleasant thing. All that I can do for you is to give you medicine for the pain, and in giving that it destroys your system otherwise." We have not fully decided yet as to what I will do, but if I do go it will be soon, for the sooner it is done the better. After we have come to the decision all I will do is go. No preparations whatever will be made. I do not fear the operation, for if it is God's will I shall be restored; if not, then my sufferings here will be over, and I shall know no pain. What have I to fear with Jesus in my view? When you go to the Cove give one and all my christian love. I do not know if I shall be able to write to sister Beckie this week; it just depends on what course I take; for the decision may be made and I in Philadelphia ere another week rolls around. My love to you and yours. Pray for me, my dear brother, that my courage fail not, and that God will lead me as for what is best to do; and I know he will. Write me soon again.

Your sister in the blessed Savior,

LIZZIE HIMES.

DUBLIN, Md., Jan. 24, 1895.

ELDER F. A. CHICK—BELOVED BROTHER IN THE LORD:—Your kind and fatherly words came to hand today by postal card. Few as they are, they were laden with comfort to my poor, benighted soul, and greatly relieved my anxious mind, as I have felt ever since writing the article you speak of as if I would give anything I could give had I not sent it for publication. How presumptuous it seemed to me, after some reflection, to think that I should even dare to write upon a subject which you had so lately written upon. Your words of encouragement have set my mind at rest on that score, for the present at least; and O how I feel to thank the good Lord for putting it into your heart to write so sweetly to me. No poor mortal on earth stands more in need of such encouraging words than this poor worm of the dust. It is needless for me to say that what I wrote for the dear old SIGNS was written from my own experience, as you know only too well the circumstances that called it forth; how that, when I was in far away Oregon, I wrote to the dear brethren and sisters, one and all, at dear old Harford, and how the word came back to my waiting soul that there was weeping (and I do believe for joy) in heaven (and we are told our conversation is in heaven) over the one sinner to whom God had given repentance, yea, even more than over ninety and nine that went not astray. My dear brother, I have learned by this that God is indeed not slack concerning his promise, as some men count slackness; but is long-suffering to usward, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance. Hath he not exalted Jesus a Prince and Savior, for to give repentance unto Israel and remission of sins? But O! this frozen, stony heart of mine. How often I feel the need of repentance! how often I feel the need of prayer! But my prayers seem to fall at my feet.

"O for a glance of heavenly day,
To take this stubborn stone away,
And thaw with beams of love divine
This heart, this frozen heart of mine.
The rocks can rend, the earth can quake,
The seas can roar, the mountains shake;
Of feeling all things show some sign,
But this unfeeling heart of mine."

Thus I am made to grope for the wall as they that have no eyes; and yet I feel that I do know that the Lord's arm is not shortened that it cannot save, neither is his ear heavy that it cannot hear. O! then it must be that it is my sins and my iniquities that have hidden, or come between me and my God. O! this is a wretched place to dwell. The pains of hell got hold of me; I have found sorrow and trouble. With poor old Job I am made to say, "Let him take his rod away from me, and let not his fear terrify me: then would I speak, and not fear him." But it is not so with me. For almost three long, dreary years have I been traveling by night, sometimes ready to give up in despair; at other times saying, "Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him." "To whom shall I go? Thou hast the words of eternal life." And, strange to say, with all my sorrow and affliction I feel that it is all needful, and that God will in his own good time and way make every sorrow yield some good, for his cause and his glory. I feel to be more established in the glorious doctrine of election and predestination every day. I fully believe that our God does nothing in vain, and that he afflicts his children for their good. Job says, "Although affliction cometh not forth of the dust, neither doth trouble spring out of the ground; yet man is born unto trouble, as the sparks fly upward." If affliction and trouble neither come forth of the dust, nor spring out of the ground, whence come they? The Lord chasteneth every son whom he receiveth. Whom he chasteneth not are bastards, and not sons. The wicked are not in trouble as other men. If it pleased the heavenly Father to make the Captain of our salvation perfect through suffering, how can his followers escape? But O! glorious thought, if we suffer with him, we shall also reign with him. Now, no chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous; but afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruits of righteousness to them that are exercised thereby. So I can only conclude by saying with the apostle Paul, "We know that all things work together for good to them who love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose." "If God be for us, who [or what] can be against us, since neither tribulation, nor distress, nor persecution, nor famine, nor nakedness, nor peril, nor sword, nor death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord? Then why do we fear where no fear is? The God of heaven only knows.

I had not thought to trouble you with so long a letter. I only set down to acknowledge the receipt of your very welcome card. I would be happy to receive a letter from you at any time. May the Lord bless you in your labor of love. With love to yourself and sister Chick, I am your unworthy brother in hope of life eternal,

J. A. GRAFTON.

KELLY'S CORNERS, N.Y., Jan., 1895.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS AND READERS OF THE SIGNS:—Having for some time passed some comfortable meditation regarding the wonderful works of God in providence and grace, I thought to give way to some of my exercises by expressing a few thoughts for publication, if in the judgment of the editors they are deemed worthy of a place with more important matter.

First, I will say I think I know something of the meaning of the words, "He that exalteth himself shall be abased," or humbled; and "he that humbleth himself shall be exalted," or established in the truth. So it will prove true, "Great peace have they that love thy law, and nothing shall offend them." All such find it their meat and drink to do the will of their Master which is in heaven. More than mere form or duty is the happy privileges of every child of the living and true God. Though they should follow the dictation of the Spirit of God in their hearts in all that he requires of them, they are in their fellings and exercises but unprofitable servants, having done but their reasonable duty in obeying the Savior's holy injunction, "If ye love me, keep my commandments." "As the Father hath loved me, so have I loved you: continue ye in my love." As a matter of faith only is God the object of true and spiritual worship, when the subjects of his grace realize their entire dependence upon him in all their ways, the eternal and unchangeable God, who works all things after the counsel of his own will. He doeth his will in heaven and earth, bringing everything to pass as he desires. He will not give his glory to another, nor his praise to graven images.

"In heaven, and earth, and air, and seas,
He executes his firm decrees;
And by his saints it stands confessed,
That what he does is ever best."

"Can creatures to perfection find
The eternal, uncreated mind?
Or can the largest stretch of thought
Measure and search his nature out?

'Tis high as heaven, 'tis deep as hell;
And what can mortals know or tell?
His glory spreads beyond the sky,
And all the shining worlds on high.

Each of his words demand my faith;
My soul can rest on what he saith;
His truth inviolably keeps
The largest promise of his lips.

O! tell me with a gentle voice,
Thou art my God, and I'll rejoice;
Filled with thy love I dare proclaim
The brightest honors of thy name."

For "all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose." This has been a matter of study with me for the past thirty-five years; and while as a man naturally I have experienced much tossing about on the waves of time, as a professed believer in our Lord Jesus Christ I cannot say that I have known one incident that has changed my mind materially in connection with the lesson I learned in regard to the wonderful way that God saves lost and ruined sinners, of whom I now feel to be one, and that there cannot be one worse. I am now speaking of my standing before the Judge of the whole earth, who will do right. If none other would or could say it, I certainly say and also feel that it is as true as anything in my belief or knowledge. I would not have one reader of the SIGNS to think it is because of any breaking of the laws of God or man outwardly, but a consciousness of being a sinner of Adam's lost and ruined race. And now I must find a fitting use for the question,

"What was there in me to merit esteem,
Or give the Creator delight?
'Twas even so, Father, I ever must say,
Because it seemed good in thy sight."

I believe there never was a time in which it was more needful that those called to preach, and those called to hear the word preached, should stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made them free. God sends by whom he will, and speaks by whom he will, for the comfort, encouragement and edifying of his afflicted and poor people, whom he has chosen in the furnace of affliction. When tribulations of a fiery nature come upon them for the trial of their faith, nothing but the strong arm of Jehovah is their support, who has said, "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee." None of the most settled and grounded in the truth can expect to find it in any other way than that which Jesus is unto them. All other ways lead away from him and the glory of his presence. I cannot doubt that in their measure every true believer and follower of Jesns is acquainted with the wide gate and the broad way, and not entirely ignorant of the devices of Satan, that he goeth about, seeking whom he may devour; that is, to disturb their peace of mind or destroy their fellowship among the brethren; and when his nefarious work is accomplished, and hearts are rent, he only laughs at their sorrow. I believe it has been so in all the divisions among brethren and churches. Fortunate has been the church that has been so spiritual as to bind only where the Master has bound, and to loose where he has loosed. It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God, whether it be a church or one individual; for at what time he speaks to plant or to pluck up, to build or to tear down, whether it be against a nation or one man, terrible will be the effect.

"He that would to Jesus press,
Must fix this firm and sure,
That tribulation, more or less,
He must and shall endure."

They that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution. I must ever go back to the first half hour of clear shining, to hear the melancholy announcement, destroying all my bright anticipations of the future, "I will make you know what things you shall suffer for my sake." If I never heard one word from outside, or from another person, I would say that my knowledge of self and sin, and inability to keep myself as I think a professed follower of Jesus should live and walk, would prove to me that without Jesus his people can do nothing. I I have often to adopt the language of the late lamented Elder Joseph L. Staton, "Brethren, I am doing the very best I can; and yet how very far short I come of filling my desire." The saying of the patriarch is realized in modern times, offending in many things, and in everything coming short. Yet all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose. As they pass through the fire of tribulation, or waters of adversity, in darkness or in light, in joy or in sorrow, as they remember the way he has led them, looking alone to him, and trusting alone in him, all is well.

J. D. HUBBELL.

SOUTHAMPTON, Pa., Feb. 9, 1895.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS:—The following letter will explain conditions in the needy part of Nebraska. The money alluded to in the letter ($23.95) was sent to him January 31st, and I have five dollars more from a lover of the truth, and one of those referred to in Matthew xxv. 40, to send.

SILAS H. DURAND.

MASON CITY, Neb., Feb. 2, 1895.

ELDER SILAS H. DURAND—DEAR BROTHER:—Your letter of the 28th and postal of the 29th reached me to-day, and in reply I would say that I have been very busy to-day distributing the box of shoes, the shipping bill for which I wrote you last week. Mr. Thompson had it released a few days ago without the shipping bill, but from your letter I infer that we have the bill all right; but the business seems terribly tangled, that is, so far as the railroad agents are concerned.

I received three boxes to-day from a brother Jamison, of Argyle, Ill., which contained many valuable articles, and they have mostly been given out to needy people. I tell you it would do your soul good to see the poor, nearly barefoot, half-clad women and children bidding us good-day, with their bundles of solid comfort under their arms. Those good brethren and friends would fully realize how much more blessed it is to give than to receive could they be out here and see the genuine gratitude with which these goods are received.

So far I have received the large box, the barrel from Trenton, the box of shoes, and three boxes weighing one hundred and ninety-five pounds from Argyle, Ill. I have received assurance that some four or five more, besides those of which you have written me, have been sent. One lady in Iowa paid the freight on her shipment, and I expect to have to pay at least the charges of our own road on all the rest; but I have received nine dollars in cash so far from brethren and sisters, which has paid all the freight so far, and I have something over a dollar left.

As you have left it to me to say what you shall do with what money you have, I will say that you put it in your own pocket. I am fully determined to pay you for those hymn books, and I may die in debt to you for them if I do not pay you now. You have certainly done your part, dear brother, without giving away your salable property. I hope you will fully recover from the effects of that treacherous "Grippe," and that your wife may regain her health. God be thanked, with all my other troubles we have not been troubled with ill health. This is a very healthy climate, and prior to 1890 a crop failure as a result of drought was never known.

Convey our sincere thanks to those of the brethren you meet for the good, substantial gifts with which they have gladdened the hearts of many a poor mortal in this part of the drought-stricken west.

Your unworthy brother,

J. M. AMSBERRY.

INQUIRIES AFTER TRUTH.

I WISH to make a request of our able, gifted brother, H. M. Curry, to give his views on Genesis ix. 25–27. As these are types, will you, brother Curry, please give the antitypical significance of this servant of servants unto his brethren; also the blessed Shem, and the enlarged Japheth, and how he shall dwell in the tents of Shem, and Canaan shall be his servant? Please reply in your own time, and oblige your poor, old brother, if a brother at all, who, as I humbly trust, is seeking to know the truth.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

DIED—In the city of Middletown, N. Y., on Saturday, Jan. 12th, 1895, of pneumonia, Ruth May Hunt, aged 6 months and 23 days.

She was the youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Benj. F. Hunt. The funeral was held on Monday, at half-past one o'clock, Elder Benton Jenkins officiating. The interment was at Slate Hill.

"This lovely bud, so young and fair,
Called hence by early doom,
Just came to show how sweet a flower
In paradise would bloom.
"Ere sin could harm or sorrow fade
Death came with friendly care,
The opening bud to heaven conveyed,
And bade it blossom there."

SUSIE HUNT.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y.

Mrs. Margery M. Hanna died Jan. 3d, 1895, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. M. R. Peregrine, Corning, Iowa, aged 73 years.

She was formerly a member of the Old School Baptist Church at Rock Springs, Pa., and one most highly esteemed and dearly loved by all who knew her. She was a devoted lover of the truth, and a very faithful christian. Many years ago she moved west, and for a number of years her membership has been with the Three Forks of Nodaway Church, Iowa. My wife and I have received letters from her from time to time. Her theme was concerning spiritual things. She was at times thrown among some who differ with the churches of our order in the east on some points of doctrine, but she remained always in full fellowship with us. I have received the notice of her death from her daughter, Mrs. Peregrine, who writes as follows:

"Mother had been ailing for two or three days, but we did not consider her seriously sick until noon Thursday, and she died at 8:45 that evening. Her disease developed from a seeming cold into the most malignant form of pneumonia. Thus has passed away one of the best mothers that children ever knew."

Perhaps some member of her dear old home church at Rock Springs will write something concerning her early experience, and her walk in that church. It would be good.

SILAS H. DURAND.

SOUTHAMPTON, Pa., Feb. 9, 1895.

BY request of a surviving daughter I send you the following obituary notice. At the residence of her daughter, near Granton, Wis., Jan. 24th, 1895, Mrs. Sybil Allen, aged 69 years, 3 months and 10 days.

Sister Allen was a native of the vicinity of Vaughn's Hill, Tenn., and many years ago became a member of that church, from which she never had her name removed. Her husband, Jeremiah Allen, was a member with her, and together they moved west. He has been dead some years, after which she came here to Delaware, and resided a few years among the brethren here, to be esteemed and loved as one of the most sincere and devoted members that we have ever had among us. Much to our regret, she having married children in the west, concluded to go to them. The move was with a full consciousness of the sacrifice she was making, never expecting to see the face nor hear the voice of a gospel minister again while she lived. When taking her leave of us she took in her way the round of the spring associations, to see and hear all she could, and have much to bear away with her to her western home. Her mother, whom I presume you knew, was a sister Marsh, and a mother in Israel indeed. An interesting and excellent letter has been sent me by the daughter with whom she spent her last days, by which she gives evidence of a knowledge of the same blessed faith and hope that characterized her mother. Sister Allen's disease was cancer, from which she suffered for about six years. She was baptized in 1853, more than forty years ago. Blessed life! happy and triumphant death!

E. RITTENHOUSE.

Mrs. Susan Wise (nee Amburgey) was born in Letcher (now Knott) Co., Ky., April 28th, 1860, and died on Sunday, Jan. 21st, 1894, at ten minutes past three o'clock p. m., aged 33 years, 8 months and 23 days.

She was the mother of eight children, seven of whom survive her. She never had good health after the birth of her first child, Sept. 18th, 1881. She was of a lively disposition, loved by all who knew her, and a good neighbor. She took the "Grippe" on Jan. 8th, and her suffering was intense, but borne without a murmur. Bronchitis developed. On the night of the 18th, when we thought that she was dying, and were weeping around her, she said, "Do not grieve after me; I am happy. I do not want to stay here any longer." But she revived again, and appeared to be better until the next night, when she was seized with a croupal hoarseness, and from that on she gradually grew weaker. On Saturday, the 20th, she was delivered of a girl baby, and soon afterward lost the power of speech, though I believe that she was conscious until a short time before she crossed the cold river, to meet on the other shore her infant son, who had preceded her more than ten years, her parents and her brother and sisters, who all died in the triumphs of faith. She received a hope in Christ in 1883, but did not join the church until 1893. She united with the Regular Baptist Church at Mountain Chapel on Sept. 17th, and was baptized on Sept. 21st by her uncle, Elder Tobias E. Smyth.

She was buried on Tuesday, the 23d, many friends being present. Her funeral was preached at the grave by her uncle, T. E. Smyth, from John xi. 25: "Jesus said unto her, I am the resurrection and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live." Elder Ira Wells, pastor of the Mountain Chapel Church, followed with an exhortation.

Yours in hope of eternal life,

W. P. WISE.

MEMORIALS.

WHEREAS, Our heavenly Father, in the exercise of his sovereign will, has seen proper to remove from us by death our gifted, highly esteemed and dearly beloved brother and Elder, I. N. VANMETER, which occurred on Dec. 13th, 1894, at his late home near Macomb, Ill., at the advanced age of 79 years, 5 months and 29 days; and,

WHEREAS, He had been a member and servant of our (New Hope) church since May, 1857, and therefore we as a church have lost a brother dear to us all, and a faithful, devoted and much beloved Elder; and,

WHEREAS, We shall no more hear his voice proclaiming to us Jesus, the way, the truth and the life, and now, behold, we shall see his face no more, but faith tells us that "They who sleep in Jesus will God bring with him;" wherefore comfort one another with these words, treasure up in our hearts his kindly admonitions, provoke one another to love and to good works, bow to the divine will, and be still, and know that he is God.

Resolved, That we tender to our sister and family our profound sympathy, that this tribute of respect be recorded on our church-book, and also that a copy be sent to the SIGNS OF THE TIMES for publication, requesting its exchanges to please copy as a mark of respect and information to the brethren and churches who in times past have been favored with his ministerial labors.

"Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them."

Done by order of the church, Jan. 19th, 1895.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SON, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date. This date denotes the time at which your subscription expires; and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. PICTORIAL HISTORY

OF THE

UNITED STATES.

By James D. McCabe.

This work is no dry mass of details—no bombastic effort to inflame the national pride, but a vivid and brilliant narrative of the events of our history, from the discovery of the American Continent down to the present time. It gives a most interesting account of the Indians of North America, from the time of the coming of the white men. The voyages of Columbus and explorations and discoveries of the different nations of Europe are related with graphic power. Every step of our colonial history is traced with patient fidelity, and the sources of those noble and, we trust, enduring institutions, which have made our country free and great, are shown with remarkable clearness. Then follows a clear and succinct account of our great Struggle for Independence, and the establishment of the Federal Union—the events of our career from the close of the Revolution to the administration of Harrison.

The work is printed from plain, new type, on fine calendered paper, and comprised in one octavo volume of 960 pages. It is splendidly embellished with nearly 500 fine engravings, embracing battles and other historical scenes, portraits of distinguished men, views of our principal cities, &c., &c.

Bound in Fine Silk Cloth, Plain Edges, $2.00, Post-paid.

CORRESPONDENCE.

GHENT, Ky., Feb. 4, 1895.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS OF THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES:—You will please pardon me for offering to you and your readers some of my feeble thoughts on that truly great subject, the origin of the Bible, on which you published an able and interesting editorial in the SIGNS of the 30th ultimo. I have read that editorial with great interest, because it presents a subject upon the true understanding of which all our hopes of a blessed and glorious immortality beyond these scenes of sorrow, care and pain rest. But the investigation of that subject leads the mind into an unlimited field; yet we may hope that as we travel on that field made glorious by the great truth it presents at every step, the truth of God's holy word, we may gather now and then the sweet and precious flowers that bedeck our pathway, made fragrant by the unchanging truths of God's holy word. These truths were given to God's dear people in love, that they might grow in grace and the knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus. An inspired apostle said, "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works."—2 Tim. iii. 16, 17. This is the same Scripture of which our Lord spoke when reproving the unbelieving Jews, saying to them, "Search the Scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life; and they are they which testify of me." Here a wonderful thought arises. If the Bible is not of divine origin, if it was not given by inspiration of God, it is not true, and all of Adam's fallen race are lost forever in the awful vortex of sin, and are left without hope and without God in the world. But the apostle has said, "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God." Paul was not only an apostle, but he was also a prophet; for he has told in the third and fourth verses of the fourth chapter of Second Timothy what we all know has come to pass since his day, and is still coming to pass, when he said, "The time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine, but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears. And they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables." That prophecy has been fulfilled at every moment of time since it was written. The Bible is the only book that has ever been written that contains within its sacred lids unmistakable evidence of its truthfulness. Paul said to Timothy, "The time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine." From the days of the apostles, and especially from the days of Constantine, in 325 of the Christian era, there has been a people who have claimed to be followers of our dear Redeemer, who could not endure sound doctrine, and at no period in the history of the world has that fearful truth been more apparent than at present. In this day millions of those who profess to be followers of the meek and lowly Jesus deny his foreknowledge and predestination; deny his right of choice in electing to eternal life those who were chosen in him before the foundation of the world; yea, deny his sovereign right and power to work in them to will and to do of his own good pleasure. Then surely they cannot endure sound doctrine. To deny any of the great and wonderful attributes of Jehovah is a denial of his existence as God. But the Bible does not leave us without a knowledge of the cause which leads poor, fallen man into this fearful vortex of unbelief. The apostle says to us, "But the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned."—1 Cor. ii. 14. The same apostle says, "Howbeit that was not first which is spiritual, but that which is natural, and afterward that which is spiritual. The first man is of the earth, earthy; the second man is the Lord from heaven." Then it is because we are all of Adam, who was a natural man, and in that condition could not receive the things of the Spirit of God. God is a Spirit, and seeketh such to worship him as worship in spirit and in truth. The natural man does not worship him, because the things of the Spirit are foolishness unto him; and because of that ignorance he knoweth not God, and denies that the revelation he has made to us is of divine origin and is true. Surely the denial that the revelation which God has made to man is a denial of the great and wonderful character of the great Jehovah. When we pause and think of this awful infidelity we are made to realize the great truth that the carnal mind is enmity against God, not subject to his law, neither indeed can be. But, as we have said, the Bible contains within its sacred lids the evidence that it was given to us by inspiration of God and is true. The prophet Jeremiah said, when prophesying of the captivity of the children of Israel in Babylon, "I will give all Judah into the hand of the king of Babylon, and he shall carry them captive into Babylon, and shall slay them with the sword."—Jer. xx. 4. This prophecy was made and was fulfilled. But the time must come when Babylon must drink of the very dregs the fruits of her iniquity. That time came in the year 538 B. C., when Belshazzar, king of Babylon, saw the handwriting on the wall, "Mene, Mene, Tekel, Upharsin." Daniel the prophet said, "In that night was Belshazzar the king of the Chaldeans slain. And Darius the Median took the kingdom."—Daniel v. 30, 31. It will be remembered that Media and Persia had united, and that Cyrus commanded all their armies when they made war on Babylon. It will also be remembered that the prophet Isaiah, one hundred and seventy years before the overthrow of Babylon, foretold the destruction of that great city so minutely that he gave the name of the leader and commander of the armies of the Medes and the Persians. That prophet said, "Thus saith the Lord to his anointed, to Cyrus, whose right hand I have holden, to subdue nations before him; and I will loose the loins of kings to open before him the two leaved gates, and the gates shall not be shut. I will go before thee and make the crooked places straight; I will cut in pieces the gates of brass, and cut in sunder the bars of iron. And I will give thee the treasures of darkness and hidden riches of secret places."—Isa. xlv. 1–3. All these prophecies were fulfilled on the night the king was slain. At the time Isaiah prophesied the overthrow of Babylon, Media and Persia were not united, and were feeble nations, and Babylon was the mistress of the world; and Cyrus, whose name the prophet gives, was not born until more than a century afterwards. But the prophet foretold the destruction of Babylon as being final, complete and forever. Isaiah says, "I will make it a possession for the bittern, and pools of water, and I will sweep it with the besom of destruction, saith the Lord of hosts."—Isa. xiv. 23. Jeremiah says, "Because of the wrath of the Lord it shall not be inhabited, but it shall be wholly desolate."—Jer. l. 13. If profane history is to be credited as true, these prophecies have been literally fulfilled. Babylon is now the home of the wild beasts, the serpents, the owls and the bats.

But let us look a little farther into the great subject of the fulfillment of prophecy. David, when foretelling the things that would occur at the crucifixion of our Lord, said, "They part my garments among them, and cast lots upon my vesture."—Psalm xxii. 18. And Matthew, in recording that most wonderful scene, says, "And they crucified him, and parted his garments, casting lots; that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophet."—Matt. xxvii. 35. It is hardly probable that those wicked men who crucified the Son of God knew that they were fulfilling a prophecy that had been recorded more than a thousand years before, or that any in this day are so vain as to conclude that they knew anything about the true character of him who was then suffering that his redeemed might reign with him in glory. Yet those wicked acts were done that the Scriptures might be fulfilled. Those prophecies and their fulfillment are conclusive evidences that the whole Bible is given by inspiration of God. We might go on almost ad infintim in quoting from the sacred word propehcies and their fulfillment to demonstrate the great truth that the Bible is of divine origin; but that would accomplish nothing, so far as the carnal mind is concerned, which is enmity against God. Peter said, "For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man; but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." And Paul said, "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God." It is also declared that God is a Spirit, and seeketh such to worship him as worship in spirit and in truth. Then it is evident that the natural man does not believe the sacred oracles of God, and for that reason he is ever ready to cavil at their sacred teachings and deny that the Bible is of divine origin. It is those alone who are born of the Spirit who understand and accept the teaching of the Spirit. All the schools of men that have ever been established on the earth have failed, and must continue to fail, to impress upon the mind of the natural man the things of the Spirit of God, for the reason that those things are spiritually discerned. There are thousands now on the earth who are, perhaps through policy, unwilling to say that the Bible is a fiction, yet they criticise its plainest teachings and urge a new translation so as to make it suit their refined literary tastes. Others boldly deny God's foreknowledge and predestination, and in that way deny that the Bible was given to God's dear people in his love and in his pity, that they might be thoroughly furnished unto every good work. The apostle defines the purpose for which the Bible is profitable, when he says, "For doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness." He then defines those to whom it is profitable, when he says, "That the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." Evidently the carnal mind is not profited by it, for that mind is enmity against God. The natural man is not profited by it, for it is foolishness unto him. But it is profitable to the man of God, and he only drinks from that river which makes glad the city of our God. The great fountain of redeeming love declared in that sacred word can only slake the thirst of those who hunger and thirst after righteousness; and none hunger and thirst after righteousness but those who are born of the Spirit, born of God. Then we need not wonder that men attempt to make void the sacred teachings of our God. "For they, being ignorant of God's righteousness, and going about to establish their own righteousness, have not submitted themselves unto the righteousness of God."—Rom. x. 3. Those who are ignorant of God's righteousness are ignorant of his great and wonderful character and do not accept the great truth that he is righteous, and that the Son of God is made righteousness unto his people. If they accepted that truth they would not go about to establish their own righteousness; for by faith they would accept him as the Lord our righteousness, and as the end of the law for righteousness unto every one that believeth. We believe because we are born of an incorruptible seed, which liveth and abideth forever. In that spiritual birth faith is given us, and we are made to know him, whom to know is life eternal, and to believe what God has left on record for our learning. In the absence of that birth they have not that faith which works by love; therefore they go about to establish their own righteousness, thereby denying the record which God has given of his Son, and denying that the Bible was given by the inspiration of God, and treat it as they do the opinions of a court, subject to be changed or amended.

Please do not regard this as a criticism on your editorial. The only objection I had to it was that it was too short, considering the magnitude of the great subject you were discussing, the origin of the Bible. I know that what I have said in these pages upon that great subject is very feeble; and brother Myers, of Ontario, and the readers of the SIGNS generally, if this is published, may appropriately say that I had better have let my pen remain idle.

With love to the household of faith everywhere, I subscribe myself affectionately yours,

H. COX.

CENTERBURG, Ohio, Jan. 31, 1895.

DEAR BRETHREN IN CHRIST:—It is with much weakness of the flesh that I write this morning, as I have been requested, and as I feel impressed, of some of the dealings of God with me, as I hope, in these low grounds of sorrow. I was born in the year 1852. In the year 1867 I first saw and felt the wages of sin, which I had been rolling as a sweet morsel under my tongue. I was made to look within myself and to see myself a sinner. It came to my mind that if I should die I would and should go to hell. I dreaded to think of death. But this feeling would pass away for a time, and would return with more power, that I was a sinner of the deepest dye. Where to go I did not know, or how to shun that awful doom I did not know. I thought if I were only a bird I could fly away to the uttermost parts of the earth and be at rest. I would go into gay company thinking I would have a good time, but wherever I would go it would ring in my ears, "You are an awful sinner." When I would go to my bed thinking I would have a good night's rest, the thought would come to me, "If you were to die before morning where would you go?" I thought I must be doing something to try to save myself, so I went to the New Light meetings which were held near our place. I attended there while they were holding their big meeting, and they called for the prayers of the church for me. I also went to hear other denominations, but they did not reach my case. My father and mother were Old School Baptists as far back as I can remember, and I was brought up to attend their meetings; but I did not want them to know that I had such feelings. I did not want to go to their meetings, as I thought them very old-fashioned, far behind the times, and not popular enough. Yet I thought I had as good a father as ever lived, and I believe he was praying for me all that time. When the brethren would come to see my parents they seemed to enjoy themselves so well in talking of things I could not quite understand. I thought they were very happy, but alas for poor me! where should I go?

In the year 1873 I was married, and that brought me into the family of other denominations. My husband's mother was a Free Will Baptist, and I thought she was a good woman; but she did not feel as I did, for she could help herself and I could not. When I would laugh, try to be gay, and try to skake off my trouble, the words would ring in my ears, "You are a great sinner; how can you ever be forgiven?" When I would try to read the Bible it did not seem for me; for I thought, How could Jesus save such a sinner as I am and yet be just? When I would try to ask God to be merciful to me, a sinner, I would seem to be committing sin. I would get up nights and wander over the house. I thought if I could only get into some small place I would not have such feelings. My husband would get up and hunt for me, and would say to me, "I think you must be crazy." But I did not want to say anything to him. I thought, O! if I were only like the little chickens, so that when I died I would be no more. Thus I was made to wander along. In the year 1875 my husband bought a little farm and we moved on it, close to his people. Still I carried this awful burden, and no relief came until the time appointed of my heavenly Father. One night I went to bed more lively than before, and dreamed that the world came to an end. I thought I saw my doom, that I was going down to hell, and that the earth was crumbling. No tongue can tell what were my feelings when I awoke. I wondered how I could live through another day. I thought I was not fit to die nor to live. I tried to get the breakfast, but thought I never could, for I felt like I was sinking to endless woe. After breakfast I went to milk. The place was some distance from the house, in a pasture field. A grove was along the roadside, and the birds there were singing. I thought if I were a bird I could sing too; but with my heavy burden how could I stand any longer? As I fell down upon my knees to milk I heard a still small voice saying, "Your sins are all forgiven." I looked around to see if some one was not behind me. But my burden was gone, and I thought everything was changed. I felt so happy I thought everything was praising God. I felt as did one of old, that whereas I was blind, now I saw. I went along praising God, singing that song,

"Amazing grace! how sweet the sound!
That saved a wretch like me,"&c.

Something seemed to say "Go, tell thy people what thou hast seen." Then the thought came to me, Who? My near neighbors, which were Methodists? No. Then I thought I would tell my husband when he came in to dinner. But something seemed to say to me, "You may be deceived;" so I did not say anything to him about it; but he said to me, "You look so much different." He also told me there was to be a meeting at the Baptist meeting house that night. I asked him who was going to preach, and he said it was Elder Hanover. Well, I began to think, Is that meeting for me? But then I said to my husband that I reckoned we would not get there, for it was quite a distance, and the roads were bad. He asked me if I wanted to go, and I told him I did. He said, "Well, then we will go." Then I felt the Lord was with me, and blessed me with this privilege, and that they were the ones I would go and tell. But when I got there I could not say anything. I felt, O that I had not come! for I could not keep from weeping, and I did not want to deceive them. I felt that if God had a people upon earth it was these people. I thought I was not fit to be with them, and so I would go somewhere else. I went to hear other denominations, but they spoke of self will so much that I thought they did not feel like I did; for I felt that I would have gone down to my grave without being forgiven if it had not been for God's own purpose; that Jesus in love came down to these low grounds of sorrow to save sinners. As I could not go with those people, I thought I would read and search the Scriptures. I found from Genesis to Revelation they spoke of a chosen generation, who were chosen before the foundation of the world, saved by grace, and not by works. I felt sure that the Old School Baptists were right, for they believed they were saved and called with a holy calling, not according to their works, but according to God's own purpose and grace, which was given them in Christ Jesus before the world began. This doctrine of God is the only doctrine that suits my case.

In the year 1878 we moved back to the old homestead to take care of my father and mother, and I had the privilege of hearing the Old Baptists preach quite often. The members came to visit my parents, and I loved to hear them talk and tell their experiences. Thus time passed on, and in the year 1880 my mother was called home, which left my father alone. I would take him to his church meetings, and would think that when I got there I would have the privilege and would tell them of my travels; but when I would get there I could not say anything, and they looked so happy that I thought I was not fit to be with them, and often thought, O! if I could get under the seats or hide myself from them. In this way I was made to travel along. I would dream of being baptized, and when I would pass a stream of water I would be made to think of what the eunuch said to Philip, "See, here is water; what doth hinder me to be baptized?"

In the year 1885 my father was called home, which left the old home dreary, sad and lonely; for I knew I had lost a kind and good parent. But I had a good companion left, of which I felt the Lord had blessed me still. In the year 1885 I went to the visitation meeting, but little did I think I would say anything; but the Lord's time had come and I could not stay away any longer. I tried to tell the church what I hoped the Lord had done for me, and was received for baptism on the next day.

When we came to the water it looked very beautiful, for I wanted to be there. I longed to be buried with my Savior in baptism. As Elder Hanover led me up out of the water I was very happy, and felt like praising God, from whom all blessings flow. I was received in the fellowship of the Old School Baptist Church called Hartford, in Delaware County, Ohio, where I have my membership yet, unworthy as I am. I thought my troubles were all over, but I have found it different. I find that when I would do good, evil is present with me. The things that I should do I do not. I have been made to know that this is the warfare between the flesh and the Spirit, and we never shall be satisfied until we awake with the likeness of our blessed and lovely Redeemer. Then shall we know even as we are known.

Dear brethren, I believe in the absolute predestination of all things; not in part. We read that many are called, but few are chosen. I believe that Jesus came to seek and to save those which were given him before the foundation of the world. The work is finished. The blessed Jesus has died and risen again, and none who believe on him shall ever perish. I have been cast down and in darkness, but thanks be to God's holy name he has revealed the light more brightly to me, that his promises are sure. "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee." It is by grace we are saved, through faith; and that not of ourselves; it is the gift of God.

In hope of eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord,

ELIZA DAVIDSON.

2 PETER III. 9.

"THE Lord is not slack concerning his promise, as some men count slackness; but is long-suffering to usward, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance."

We speak, if we speak at all, to those who know him as their Lord by experience, to whom he has been manifested as the true Lord God of Israel, the only one able to save, and the only name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved.

The word of God is very specific; so much so that an honest, earnest seeker after truth may find much of the true teaching of the letter, even if he does not experience the power of the Spirit. We cannot find a text but what, if used in its connection, will tell to whom it speaks, and of whom or what it speaks. I do not mean that we can explain every text; but if we know the truth we can tell if the wrong application has been made, or at least that it does not mean to divide the power and glory between God and man. It is so with this text (2 Peter iii. 9). Turn to the first of the epistle and you find to whom it is directed: "Simon Peter, a servant and an apostle of Jesus Christ, to them that have obtained like precious faith with us through the righteousness of God and our Savior Jesus Christ." So it tells plainly who this letter is for, and that they have obtained like precious faith through God's righteousness, not their own. It is this Savior that is the Lord spoken of in the text. It is the same Lord that passed before Moses and proclaimed, "The Lord, The Lord God, merciful and gracious, long-suffering, and abundant in goodness and truth."—Ex. xxxiv. 6. It is the same Lord that said unto the people of his choice, "Unto thee it was showed, that thou mightest know that the Lord he is God; there is none else beside him."—Deut. iv. 35. It is the same Lord which said, "Mine own arm hath brought salvation unto me." It is the same Lord that spoke to you in your experience, making you realize so sweetly that when he speaks it is done. Then, in that day of trouble, you felt that you were safe in him, and established on the Rock of salvation. You certainly saw that you owed a duty to the living in Christ, but that you did not have to work to obtain that eternal salvation. You found that that work was finished when he cried, "It is finished." You no doubt realize that the trials through which you were led and driven were only to show you what your great need was, and what you were or would be if all power had not been given into his hand. Were you not glad that he was the same powerful Lord who said that "none is able to pluck them out of my Father's hand?" This is the Lord that is not slack concerning his promise.

The promise under consideration is the coming of Christ, or "the day of the Lord." Whether it is the coming here in time, as he is often manifested to the children in the Spirit (which is a revelation or foretaste of what the final coming will be), or whether that final coming is what is referred to, it does not matter, since one cannot be experienced without the other. Just so sure as he is manifested to you here in time, so will he come in the final day of the Lord.—2 Peter iii. 10. Do not be discouraged, fearing that he will not come; for we do not look for and expect those of whom we have not heard. The fact that you do long and look for him is proof that you have heard his voice. He is "long-suffering to usward, not willing that any should perish." What any? Just any of those "who have obtained like precious faith." Because he does not wish any of these to perish, is why he is long suffering to them. He leaves us so long at times, it seems, that we may feel our need of him, and rejoice when he comes. When left thus to ourselves we find out our own weakness and sinfulness. When the light shines in our prison-house we are convinced of the sinfulness of our own hearts. Then, seeing the righteousness of Christ, we are brought to repentance. Who are brought to repentance? Only the same ones addressed by Peter, "Elect according to the foreknowledge of God the Father, through sanctification of the Spirit, unto obedience and sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ." And to the same ones to whom Peter spoke, saying, "The promise is unto you, and unto your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." There is no need to be mistaken about these things, for the Scriptures say plainly who they are for. It is only when we grope in darkness, without the light of the Spirit, trying to make the Bible fit some opinion of man, that we fail. We strive often to understand things from our finite standpoint, forgetting that "one day with the Lord is as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day." When a promise is made clear, we realize that God saw the fulfillment of it, and that it would surely be as he saw it; and angels and devils could not hinder. Thank the Lord, brethren, that we do not worship a god willing and wishing some to be saved that he cannot save; but we try to praise that God who is all-powerful, and able to save to the uttermost. Let us try to remember, when it seems that he too has left us to fall into divers temptations, that it is only his long-suffering to usward. Not willing that any should perish, he leads us into the wilderness, that we may learn our weakness and our nature to sin, that we may be brought to repentance. This is the safest place; for when he has brought us (and we can come no other way) we are ready to beg for mercy, and not for justice; for we feel that justice would cut us off for ever. No danger of such an one saying, God is not just to save others and not we. But God, who is great in mercy, and a God of love, not only speaks peace and quiets us like little children by this manifested love, but reveals to poor, cast down sinners, no matter how great the sin, that Jesus has paid the debt, and even justice is satisfied. Poor, tempest-tossed and repentant sinner, whereever this may find you, look up and praise the Lord; for unto such as you he says, "Thy sins, which are many, are all forgiven you." O bleeding heart, this balm is for you, who feel the need of it. O troubled one, may his peace be given you. May you realize truly that he came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance. If you are sorry and repenting, remember it is God who has brought you in this state, not willing that you should perish. Thank him that he has made you feel the greatness of your sin, thus bringing you to repentance; for there are many who spend their lives seeking and enjoying sins that bring them to despised and forgotten graves. May God give you a glimpse by faith of that great, perfect body of Christ ever before him; the great, true church, every member of which was seen by him before the foundation of the world, and that has been ever present with him (for he is everywhere), and sitting together with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob in the kingdom of love. Though only a few are manifested to us, he sees them all, and loves and keeps them as the apple of his eye. So this is the Lord that is "not slack concerning his promise." Thus we have tried to speak of and to comfort the people to whom the promise is made, and also to show that they are a people who come up out of a wilderness of sin, and through great tribulation, with all hope in their own works destroyed, with no confidence in the flesh, ready and willing to trust in his strong arm for salvation. It is then they sweetly realize that God, not willing that any should perish, has brought them up, "long-suffering," to a knowledge of their sins and repentance. As a good shepherd seeks his little lambs, shivering in the cold, and brings them into the fold, so does he, our great Shepherd, seek and save all them that the Father has given him. May God bless the truth.

I trust I am your brother,

DUDLEY G. JOHNSON.

ELDER F. A. CHICK—DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST:—Your letter is received and read with much pleasure, on 2 Peter i. 9, 10. I was more than surprised to received a letter from you, and also delighted, as I am, no doubt, a stranger to you; but you are not a stranger to me, in one sense, as your writings in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES have made me feel that I am personally acquainted with you. I will say that your views on this text have given me some light on it. If you will pardon me I will try and tell you how and why I am a member of the Old School Baptist Church. I was raised a Catholic, in the strictest sense of the word, until I was eighteen years old. I received all the ordinances of that church, and was made to live up to them. I was made to go once every two months and confess my sins to the priest, and then he would give me penance to do for those sins. It would be a prayer to the virgin Mary for at least six days. Then when he had told me the offering to make for those sins, he would give absolution; that is absolute pardon for the sins I had committed from the last time I had been to confess my meannesses. The facts in my case were that I did not know or realize that I was a sinner in the sight of God at all. I never had been made to realize that I was a sinner or in need of a Savior. But these are some of the superstitions of Romanism. I have also waited on the priest at the altar, as they call it, and held up his garments and rattled the bell while he prostrated himself, changing the

MATTHEW V. 16.

SISTER Ada A. Chadbourne, of North Berwick, Maine, has requested that some remarks should be made through the SIGNS upon the words recorded in Matthew v. 16. The Scripture referred to reads as follows, "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven."

We are all the more glad to attempt a compliance with the above request because we have long known the earnest desire of our sister that she might in all things adorn the profession which she made many years ago of her faith in Christ. This dear sister was one among those who more than thirty years ago, when we were but a child in both years and experience, welcomed us to the fellowship of the church at North Berwick; and we have counted her a faithful and steadfast friend ever since, and her words have many times cheered us when we have felt oppressed and cast down. We shall rejoice if it be given us to say aught concerning these words which may prove to be of any interest or help to her.

The general meaning of the text seems plain and clear. We have no doubt that the Savior here meant to enforce upon the minds of his disciples the importance of right living, or of holding their conversation in harmony with the profession which they had made as his disciples. It is the same truth as is taught and enjoined again and again all through the Scriptures of both Old and New Testaments. The apostle has in other language expressed the same truth: "I will that they which have believed in God might be careful to maintain good works." The one purpose for which the Lord has called his people by grace, and has given his Son to die for them, and to live in them, is that they might live to the honor and glory of his name. As the summing up of the parable of the vine Jesus said again, "Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit." This fruit relates to the results of the work of the Spirit of God, both in the hearts and lives of his disciples. There are fruits of faith which can be seen and known only in the hearts of those who possess this faith; and there are fruits of faith which appear in the outward life, and which all men can see. It has seemed to us that these words of our Savior to which sister Chadbourne has called attention relate more to the fruits of the Spirit of God as they appear in what disciples say and do; but yet the more hidden or inward fruit is not passed by without mention. "Let your light so shine before men." The light is kindled in the believer's heart. It burns there; and no one can know its secret presence but he who feels it. But now the Master says, "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works," &c. Paul has taught concerning the indwelling light and its shining forth in words like these, "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling, for it is God that worketh in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure." Here is the inward light, and here also is the shining forth of that light. If we may speak of one form in which this light appears, viz., love, we hear Jesus himself saying, "If ye love me, keep my commandments." Love will always exercise itself in loving works; and love to God produces obedience, a glad, willing obedience to him. Paul in all his epistles seems to follow a plan which should set forth the inseparable union of the light within and its shining without. We say this, because Paul always presents in the opening chapters of his letters to the churches the work of the Lord for them and in them; and then upon this basis he proceeds to the work of setting forth and enforcing the necessity of living out this heavenly life which has been given them. All these Scriptures to which we have been referring set forth in other language the same truth that is taught in the text, viz., the light first, and then the shining.

It need scarcely be said that these words of our Lord were spoken during his discourse to his disciples soon after his baptism, and his calling of them as his disciples, upon the mount. So far as the inspired narrative informs us, it was his first discourse to them after they were called. He begins his discourse by announcing the characters who are really blessed. Not the mighty, the rich, the wise nor the noble can be pronounced really favored or blessed, he says, but the poor in spirit, the mourner, the meek, those who long for righteousness, the merciful, the pure in heart, the peacemakers, the persecuted for righteousness' sake—these are the characters who are really the blessed of heaven. These are qualities of which the world takes small account, except to deride or treat with scornful pity; but still these are the most precious gems of heaven, and blessed indeed is he to whom these gems are given. Here we see what things our Savior counts the best. These are the qualifications which belong to the inhabitants of that kingdom which Jesus came to establish. These are the things that are to be preferred above all riches, honor, glory or fame. These things abide; all that is of the world perishes.

After this brief statement of the things that are in the sight of heaven good and great, Jesus proceeds to identify his disciples as being partakers of this righteousness. "Ye are the salt of the earth." "Ye are the light of the world." Perhaps our readers will suffer a brief suggestion concerning this first expression as we pass on, "Ye are the salt of the earth." Whatever else this may involve, this one thing is certainly true. It is the mission of salt to hold back from decay or dissolution that which is dead. That which has life in it is not salted. If salt is placed upon anything we know that thing is dead. The whole earth is dead. The only reason it has not utterly been destroyed by its own inherent corruption is that the disciples of Jesus are in it. They are, in this sense, the salt of the earth. When the salt is removed what remains but for death to complete his work, and the whole world perish? So the dead city of Sodom would not have been destroyed could five righteous men have been found in it; and Lot, who was the salt of that city, was removed before it was destroyed.

"Ye are the light of the world." May we not say of this that it is as certainly true of the disciples of Jesus in the world as it was true of their Master, that while the light shined in darkness, yet the darkness comprehended it not? The world is full of lights. There have been many teachers and wise men. The world has run after them; but these lights were false. The very light has been darkness. How deep has been that darkness! The disciples of Jesus might be well assured that the world would no more consider them as the light (not a, but the) of the world than it did that Jesus was the true light. He was in the world, and the world knew him not; and so will it always be with his disciples.

Now, if the disciples are the light of the world, if they are the only true light, the only light that is not darkness, what has the God of all wisdom and grace placed them here for? Jesus answers, "A city that is set on a hill cannot be hid." A candle is not put under a bushel when lighted and burning, but upon a candlestick, that it may give light to all in the house. Ye are the city upon a hill. Ye are the lighted candle, which God has set upon a candlestick. Why is this true of disciples? By nature the people of God are in no wise diverse from all the dead world around them. They are not, in and of themselves, a city upon a hill, nor do they have light in themselves. What has wrought such a change in them? Why are they now called the light of the world? Is not this the complete answer? "God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ." In harmony with this language of our Savior the seven churches of Asia were compared to candlesticks; and also in the prophecy of Zechariah the chosen people of God are compared to a candlestick supplied with oil from the living olive trees. However unworthy and unfit the disciples might feel, yet they would understand something at least of what the Savior meant in saying they were to be set upon a candlestick.

Now come the words of the text to which our attention has been called: "Let your light so shine before men." It has long seemed to us that the key, as it were, to the language of this text is found in the little word "so." "Let your light so shine." Is not the Savior's meaning like this? Ye are a city that cannot be hid, because set upon a hill. Ye are a light which your heavenly Father has kindled, and put as it were not under a cover, but upon a candlestick, that its light may shine forth. Ye cannot be hid. Your light will shine forth. Now let your light shine in such a manner that men shall see your good works. It is to be feared that some who are the children of God, true disciples of Jesus, do not thus shine. It is to be feared of some that their light shines after a very dim, cloudy fashion. Are there not some whose views of the truth as it is in Jesus are far from clear, and whose walk is too much after the fashion of the world? Were there no danger that the disciples of Jesus should depart from the truth, either in faith or practice, there could have been no need of exhortation, and no use in warnings.

The addresses to the seven churches of Asia, in the first chapters of Revelation, show how most of them were not shining forth as they ought, and therefore it is said that the candlestick should be removed. If the candlestick gave forth no light what was the use of retaining it? It was but a cumberer of the ground. The letters of Paul to nearly all the churches are full of warnings and reproofs in this very matter. The apostle found many disorders among them; and these disorders he pointed out, and reproved and rebuked them at times very sharply. It seems to us that the command, "Let your light so shine," is simply another way of saying that we should walk worthy of the vocation wherewith we are called. If the life of Christ be in us let us live accordingly. If we live in the Spirit, let us also walk in the Spirit. The order here also is the life of the Spirit first, and then the walk after the Spirit. The light first, and then the shining. The child of God is not hid; he cannot be hid. In some fashion his light will shine. Our works, our words, the whole tenor of our life, must come to the light. Let them be such as will show that the true light burns within us. It seems to us that this is the substance of the Savior's meaning here.

"Before men." The people of God are not to be recluses. There is no place in his kingdom for monks and nuns. Convents and monasteries are and always have been a libel upon the religion of Jesus Christ. As Jesus was in the world, so are his followers to be. Jesus lived among men. He spoke and acted in the full light of day. He was the true light. He went everywhere, in all the assemblies of men. His light shined before men. The light shined in the darkness, though the darkness could not comprehend it. It seems to us that the Savior's meaning is that his disciples are to bear faithful testimony to the faith that is in them by word and deed everywhere, at home or abroad, and before all who know them. We think of some who come into our mind as we write who were known of all men as sound, consistent, orderly Old School Baptists. Even enemies of the truth respected their open, frank and steadfast adherence to what they believed to be scriptural and right. This letting the light shine before men does not mean the boasting and vainglorying of the Pharisee, who magnifies his own righteousness to win the applause of men; but it does mean that calm, settled, steadfast adherence to truth, and that earnest, honest life which becomes the gospel of Christ, and characterizes the true, humble-hearted believer. The publican in the parable was letting his light shine when he confessed his own sins and God's mercy.

"That they may see your good works." This shows that the good works are what is meant by the shining of the light. We cannot, of course, stop to enumerate them. They embrace all that God requires of his people in the way of obedience. They are not such works as men may count to be good, but such as have scriptural warrant. To do justly, to love mercy, and to walk humbly before God, we are told, sums up what God has required.

"And glorify your Father which is in heaven." This does not mean that natural, unregenerate men ever have a disposition to glorify God; but even they can and do see that the disciples of Jesus are not like other men. They can see the difference even when they do not understand the cause. But whether men who see their good works glorify God or not, yet it is still true that their good works do themselves glorify God. We desire to especially emphasize this one truth, "They glorify God." The Pharisee glorifies himself, but the believer glorifies God. God has wrought all his works in him, and when they are finished they are to the praise of their Author; and so all his works praise him, and his saints bless him. There is no command nor exhortation in all the Scriptures addressed to the people of God upon the ground that obedience will be to the glory of the one who obeys. In every instance the one object and motive set before believers is that they should be "to the praise of the glory of his grace." The Savior also clearly set forth this truth when he said, in connection with the parable of the vine and the branches, "Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit." In his prayer to his Father Jesus said concerning his disciples, "And I am glorified in them." Whether it is so understood or not, every time any of the fruits of the Spirit appear in believers, and are noticed and spoken of by men, God is glorified, because he is the author and finisher of that faith of which these good fruits are the result.

How solemn and weighty, then, is the obligation which always rests upon believers to give heed to every word of the Lord! How careful we should all be to maintain good works! How earnest natural men are in seeking their own glory! How much more earnest should believers be in seeking to glorify their Father who is in heaven!

We feel that we have but very faintly and very partially presented this most important subject. We trust, however, that we have not deviated from the truth in what is here written. May it prove of interest and benefit to sister Chadbourne, and to others of our readers also.

C.

BENEDICT'S HISTORY OF THE BAPTISTS.

We have received a copy of this long looked for work, but have not yet found time to give it a full examination; we have examined it sufficiently, however, to satisfy us that the author has no mind to transmit to succeeding generations a fair history of the old apostolic order of Baptists of the present age. We are not disappointed, for we have never looked for a fair and candid history of the church of Christ to be written by her enemies, and since the apostles fell asleep few others have attempted to record the history of the saints. The all important and indispensable part of the history of the Baptists is that which we find faithfully given by inspired men who wrote as they were led by the Holy Ghost, in the New Testament of our Lord Jesus Christ, extending from the days of John the Baptist to the termination of the apostles' labors personally on the earth. Since that time nearly all that we can find of her history has been incidentally sketched by ecclesiastical historians, who in attempting to gloss some popular error and to eulogize some favorite branch of antichrist have occasionally pointed the finger of scorn at a poor, despised, nonconforming people, who worship God in the Spirit, rejoice in Christ Jesus, and have no confidence in the flesh. All ecclesiastics have noticed the existence of just such a people as the primitive saints were, and as the Old School Baptists of the present day are, and that in no age their enemies have been able to expel them from the earth. When the rack, gibbet and stake were in requisition, rivers of blood gushed from the veins of the apostolic order of Baptists, but the united wrath of all their enemies was unable to effect their extermination.

That the Old School Baptists may judge understandingly whether Benedict's history is worthy of patronage, whether they can consistently and conscientiously purchase the work and leave it with their children for their children's children to read as a history of the Baptists of the nineteenth century, we will here copy the following passages:

"The farther down I go into the regions of antiquity, the more fully is the missionary character of all whom we denominate our sentimental brethren developed. Propagandism was their motto and their watchword. They seldom went alone, but two and two was the order of their going out; and such was the ardor of their zeal in their hazardous vocations that no ordinary obstacle could alarm their fears or impede their progress. As nothing of this kind appears among the opponents of the missionary enterprise, I cannot, with my views of duty as an honest historian, apply to them the terms in question, as I fully believe they misapprehend their own character in this matter. And, furthermore, as I do not wish for any controversy with them on this subject, I prefer to say but little about it.

6. I have ascertained for a certainty that in most of the associational communities which are ranked on the anti mission side there are members not a few who are entirely dissatisfied with the restrictions which are imposed upon them by a few of their zealous leaders. Their sympathies are with their effort brethren: they would be glad to have matters otherwise in the churches in which they are located, and from which they are not prepared to separate, and are sorry that so much is said and written about a difficulty which time only can heal.

7. So illiberal, anti-republican and anti-baptist, so frightfully oppressive, so tyrannical and overbearing, are the principles and measures of many of the anti-mission party, relative to all the objects of benevolence, as exhibited in their public documents, and finally such a stretch of power have they assumed over the members of churches where they have majorities, that for the honor of the Baptist name I could wish to place what little I say on this part of their discipline in some obscure corner, where but few of my readers would see it. I would prefer to wrap the whole story in obscurity, rather than to emblazon it to the world.

8. A large amount of their documents are before me, which contain the resolutions and decrees of their churches and referred to above; from these it appears that if any of their members shall unite with any society for the promotion of the cause of benevolence or moral reform, they shall, ipso facto, be expelled from their fellowship and communion; the missionary, Bible, tract, Sunday School and temperance societies are specially named; and generally a sweeping clause is added, embracing all the 'so-called' benevolent institutions of the day. These prohibitions extend not only to actual membership in these bodies, but to any contributions of their own personal funds for their support. No collections for any of these objects can be made in any of the churches where they have the control, nor are their members allowed to cast in their mites when the box goes round in any neighboring congregation in which they may be present.

This, I believe, is a true picture of what are called the Non-fellowshipping Resolutions of the anti-mission party.

This is a yoke we may well suppose could not set easy on the necks of the independent Baptists; many for peace's sake submit to it for a while, but it will not be long endured by any but those who have thoroughly imbibed, esprit du corps, the spirit of the party."

Mr. Benedict has followed the track of those who have preceded him, and dealt out about the usual quantity of misrepresentation and reproach upon those whose attachment to Christ as their Lord, and the New Testament as their only rule in matters of religion, would not allow them to unite with those who have assumed their name. He has, however, used them to swell the numbers of the denomination, and professes to consider the difference between Baptists as a "family difficulty;" but he acknowledges that he is mortified and would choose rather to place what he has to say of them in some obscure corner of his work. And yet, although so mortified that God has such a people on the earth, and that all the powers of darkness cannot prevail against them, he woud gladly wrap the skirt of his cloak over them, that they may count in the statistics of the denomination to which he belongs. With full as much propriety the Presbyterians or Methodists or any other denomination might claim the same kindred with us. In doctrine, he sets us down, as will be seen in the extracts given above, as "high or hyper-Calvinists," and charges us with being tenacious of the old theory of "Particular Atonement."

On page 942 he defines hyper-Calvinism to be what Robert Hall denominated "thick skinned Antinomianism." We shall institute no debate with Mr. Benedict as to the thickness of our skins, seeing we have such as our Creator has provided, and are by no means indebted to the good feelings of the New School for the privilege of retaining them; but as to Calvinism, or hyper-Calvinism, with or without the definition of Mr. Benedict or Robert Hall, we disclaim it. There is no more affinity between the Old School Baptists and John Calvin than there is between them and the New School or Arminian Baptists.

The exulting prediction of Mr. Benedict that before his stereotyped pages could reach the different parts of the country, to say nothing of remote regions, the anti-missionary movement (as he is pleased to designate the movements of Old School Baptists) will be among the things that are past and forgotten! He must be apprehensive of a very tardy circulation of his pretended history of Baptists, or he flatters himself that the truth of heaven is speedily to be borne down so low as to cease to confront and expose the rottenness of modern missionism. In either case we are not alarmed at his prophecy, for there were false prophets among the people of Israel, even as there are false teachers among us of the present age; and such prophets, and such teachers have always been prophesying in the same manner, and always trying to bring their predictions to pass. As they seem to suppose, owing to the thickness of our skins, but as we believe, owing to the sure mercies of David, many stereotyped editions of slang and abuse have circulated throughout the breadth of the earth, and as many more will probably have ample time to follow them, before Mr. Benedict will realize the pleasure which he seems to anticipate.

We have neither time nor space to spare to say all we have to say on the subject; we shall probably before his stereotyped pages have lighted up all the dark corners of the earth, resume the subject. Meantime we demand of Mr. Benedict to establish the truth of what he says he has ascertained for a certainty, in the note on page 936 which he has marked 6, or to retract the falsehood. We are in correspondence with Old School Baptists in every State of the Union, and have been for the last sixteen years, and have never before heard the assertion made that "In most of the associations which are marked as Anti-mission, &c., there are members not a few who are entirely dissatisfied with the restrictions which are imposed on them by a few of their zealous leaders, &c., and whose sympathies are with their effort brethren." We believe this assertion to be an untruth, maliciously uttered; and until Mr. Benedict shall present the positive evidence demonstrating the fact, we hold him responsible for the lie. How far the old man may have been imposed on by his informants, of course we do not know; we do not, therefore, charge him with the fabrication, but we have a right to hold him responsible until he shall expose the real author of the falsehood. We do not believe, should he search from Maine to Georgia, and from the Atlantic ocean to the Rocky mountains, he could find half a dozen individuals, held against their wills in communion with the Old School churches, whose sympathies are with the missionists.

Through a mistake of the compositor a large portion of what we had designed to copy is ommitted in this extract; it shall be supplied, with additional remarks, in our next.

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE.

TO MOST of our readers the above mentioned book is too well known to need any introduction or a description by us. While many of the Bibles have a Concordance appended, they are generally so condensed or abridged as to be of little or no use. Cruden's Complete Concordance, however, enables one to readily turn to any passage of Scripture of which they can call to mind two or three words, and in our opinion is the most complete and convenient as a reference book of any published. In addition, it contains many other aids in studying the Bible, as may be seen by reference to advertisement on last page. Remember, both the books there mentioned are CRUDEN'S COMPLETE.

BACK NUMBERS.

OUR supply of back numbers being about exhausted, we shall now discontinue sending them to new subscribers unless especially requested to supply them.

bread and wine into flesh and blood. In that way the priest would drink the wine, while we, poor sinners, would have to eat the dry bread. Not one drop of wine would we get. But we are taught in the word of God that he leads his people in ways they have not known. He leadeth them beside the still waters and in paths of righteousness for his name's sake.

I left home about the year 1882 and lived among Baptists and Campbellites; but while staying at a Baptist house or family I would not eat meat on Friday for a long time, for fear I would have to go to hell for this unpardonable sin of eating meat on Friday. The Baptists had meeting once a month, but I did not go to their meetings for some time, as I never had been at any meeting but the Catholics'. After a while I went to hear the Baptists, but I really thought it was a mockery in the sight of God. I thought it was equal to Mormonism, or worse. I went to hear the Campbellites, and thought they were nearer right than the Baptists, for they said every man could be saved if he wanted to be saved. The Baptists said or taught that there would be none saved except the sheep, or God's people. The Campbellites said they could take the goats and put them in the fold and make sheep of them. Their platform seemed broad enough to cover the whole ground. I thought I would eat meat on Friday and see if it would not taste as well as on Thursday. It proved to taste just as well, and I continued to use it on Friday. That was the first step against Catholicism. Next I commenced reading the Bible. I read the book of Hebrews, and that overthrew Catholicism with me. I stepped down and out; yet I did not think the Baptists were right. I went on for about two years, when the Campbellites had a protracted meeting and got up a great excitement, and had quite a number unite with them. I attended their meetings every night, and they were working to get me. The minister preached on Catholisism one night, and I went forward and made that good confession, as they call it. Then I was baptized, and had my sins literally washed away, as they called it. But all the difference was I went down a dry sinner and came up a wet sinner. I stayed with them for five or six years. I had been reading the Bible some, and trying to overcome some of the Old Baptists, but I would always come out second best. I would try to find some strong Campbellite text in the Bible, but would fail, as there was nothing that would harmonize with their creed. They got up another big meeting and had one of their ablest ministers from Indiana. He got to so perverting the Scriptures that I got up and left the meeting, and went to a dance that was in the neighborhood, in company with my wife, who had made no profession. I enjoyed myself much better at the dance than I did at the meeting. From that time onward I had no use for Campbellism. I studied the Bible for myself, feeling that I had followed the teachings of men long enough to find out tbat they were not only deceiving themselves, but had pleasure in deceiving others. The more I read the Bible the more the Baptists seemed to be the church of God. This one thing I am now confident of, that the Old School Baptists are right, if we have the right Bible. I united with the Old School Baptists of Indian Grove one year ago, and my wife two months later. We were baptized on the second Saturday in May, 1894, by Elder B. F. Querry, our pastor. This is a small church, and most of the members are very old. In fact there is but one male member besides myself. There are quite a number who hold membership here who have moved away to different states. The Scriptures teach that it is by grace we are saved, through faith; and that not of ourselves, it is the gift of God. Not of works, lest any man should boast. For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them. The Campbellites ask, "Can a man be saved without doing the commandments?" They answer, "No." Is immersion a command? Yes. Is the Lord's supper a command? Yes. Well, is it not just as important as immersion? In this way it proves too much for them. The commandment was not given to save men, but for those who are saved. No lover of Jesus Christ who understands his duty will or should neglect or refuse to be buried with Christ in baptism. It is essential to christian obedience, to church membership, to the lawful approach to the Lord's table, and to the formal washing away of sins, as well as being a symbol of the burial and resurrection of the Son of God, and also a pledge of the resurrection of all the saints. This is my understanding of it.

Dear brother Chick, as I have now written three times as much as I expected when I began, I will bring this scribble to a close, hoping you will pardon me for taking this privilege. If after reading this scribble you see anything in it that would be of any interest to the readers of the SIGNS, which you are connected with, it is at your disposal; and if not, all will be well. Once more I feel under obligations to you for your personal letter and views on the Scripture.

I remain your unworthy brother in hope of eternal life,

J. E. MASTERSON.

SAPP, Mo., Feb. 1, 1895.

ELDERS JENKINS AND CHICK—MUCH ESTEEMED BRETHREN:—I inclose herein the experience of our much esteemed brother J. H. Yeoman, now of Colorado. It is of such comfort to me I thought all the brotherhood would be glad to read the same. Brother Yeoman came from the state of Ohio to Kansas when I lived there, twenty-five years ago. He and I were constant friends and brethren during our stay there together. He was clerk of the Rich Valley Church at the time of my ordination, and I now hold church credentials from under his hand. He was soon afterwards chosen Deacon by said church, and my first official act after my ordination was to ordain him to that office. One year later we parted. I returned to Indiana, and soon he moved to Colorado, and we have never seen each other's faces since; but a sweet correspondence has been held between us almost continuous ever since. Our prosperity and adversity, our joys and sorrows, our fortunes and misfortunes, our doctrinal views and interrogations and answers, have been mutually shared between us as much as a friendly, christian, brotherly correspondence could make it. We are now both getting on the list of old men. There is yet a tender place in my heart for him that pours forth tears of sympathy for him in his far off and lonely condition. If I were to be the judge, he is worthy of a peaceful and quiet home among the people of God, and my wonder is that he remains where he is, in that far off home among the wilds of the west, when he might enjoy better privileges in some of the states where Baptists are plentiful.

Leaving this to your disposal, I remain yours to trust in God forever,

IRA TURNER.

JANUARY, 27, 1895.

MUCH ESTEEMED BROTHER TURNER:—"Come, see a man which told me all things that ever I did: is not this the Christ?" Your letter to me is unanswered, but not because it was not interesting. I doubt if any one loves to read the experience of the Lord's children better than I do, especially if I have that confidence in the relator that the Lord's chosen should have. I have known of some people in my time who were very good neighbors if you did not live too close to them; so also I have known some among the Baptists that I esteemed as good brethren until I became intimately acquainted with them, or lived close to them. The Scripture I have quoted has been on my mind for a number of days, and in my reflections I was led back to the time and place, as I trust, the Lord was pleased to show me that I was a vile sinner in his sight.

I was left a poor orphan boy at the tender age of ten years. There being but seventeen days between my father's and mother's deaths. I was left to grow up without any one to care for, counsel and advise me. Yet I was not a very bad boy, or considered so by all who knew me. The particular time my mind was led to was when I was in my eighteenth year of age. I had been cast down with very gloomy feelings for some time. I felt as though some terrible thing was going to befall me. I was working for one of my cousins, who was a Baptist, and he kept up family prayer. I became so troubled in mind that it worried me no little to be present while cousin was at prayer, so that I began to remain out of doors until he was through with prayer. One evening I walked down the road, it was growing dusk. I walked along quite a distance from the house, until I came opposite an old log barn which had partly fallen down from decay. Just at that moment, in the twinkling of an eye, it occured to me that I there stood before God, a guilty sinner in his sight. In a moment all my sins rose up before me like some high tower, ascending toward heaven. I looked up and stood there viewing my sins until it seemed to me they actually reached the heavens above, when I fell upon my knees in the middle of the road, and for the first time in my life began pleading the Lord to have mercy upon me. While I was pleading for mercy I felt there was no mercy for me; that God was too just and holy to have mercy upon such a sinful creature as I felt I was. I felt that the earth was about to open before me and swallow me up. So surely did this appear to me, that I opened my eyes expecting to see a vast opening or pit in the earth ready to swallow me up. Many sinful things which I had done, that I had forgotten, came vividly up in my mind at that time, so that I feel I can say with the woman of Samaria, "Come, see a man which told me all the things that ever I did: is not this the Christ?" While I was in great agony of soul pleading for mercy it was given me as plain as if spoken in audible words, "Thy sins are all forgiven." So plain it was that I thought some one had spoken it to me. I immediately rose to my feet and looked around, expecting to see some one standing behind me. I then turned my eyes toward the western horizon. It was quite dusky, but the lingering rays of the setting sun lit up the clouds, and a more beautiful sight of nature I never saw in all my life. I looked at the trees on my right, and they, too, seemed pictures of silver. Even the old log barn, which a short time before seemed to frown upon me, looked beautiful. The trees which swayed to and fro in the wind, the grass at my feet, everything my eyes could behold, seemed to be praising God. That was the happiest moment of my life. It does seem to me that if I were in that vicinity now I could go to that very spot, no matter how changed the country might be, where I poured out my soul in prayer to God for mercy. There, brother Turner, is where I first was shown that I was a justly condemned sinner before God. There is where I first received my hope that God for Christ's sake pardoned all my sins. Sometimes I think I have received evidences as I have journeyed through life that strengthens my hope, but when dark, gloomy clouds hover around me, and doubts and fears come thick and fast, so that I am almost ready to give up in despair, I am led back to the time when the Lord gave me to hope and trust in Jesus' name as the Savior of sinners. And although my hope grows very small at times, I would not exchange it for all that this world calls good and great. Often have I prayed the Lord for a brighter hope. Whether I ever receive brighter evidence of my hope or not, if this little hope I have is of the Lord it is sufficient. We no doubt often desire things, yes, and even pray the Lord many times to grant them, which if we were to receive would prove to our hurt instead of our good. We seem to forget that the Lord knoweth what is for our best good, and "no good thing will he withhold from them that walk uprightly."

I have given you but a glimpse of part of what I cling to as my christian experience, if any I have. I feel if I were with you to-night I could talk to you until the rising of to-morrow's sun. You may want to know what became of my text. Well, I referred to it once, and then it left me. Sometimes I think I can take a text and write from it as far as some preachers can preach from a text.

Now, as to my going to Texas. I shall have to remain here this year yet, as I could not arrange to get any one to take my place on the lease I have on this place where I live. My time on lease expires March 1st, 1896. My wife's health is a little better this winter. My health was never better, but age is telling on me. Remember us to your family.

J. H. YEOMAN.

CRAMER, Ill., Jan. 25, 1895.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS:—It is time for me to send on my subscription for the year 1895, and I would like to communicate something to the dear readers of the SIGNS if I did not feel so poor in spirit. Am I indeed one of those beloved characters of whom the dear Savior declares, "Theirs is the kingdom of heaven?" Yes, I do realize that I am poor and needy, and that I do mourn on account of my poverty. I feel all my time to hunger and thirst after righteousness; and it is because I feel so unrighteous, so sin-polluted, that there is no soundness in me; nothing but wounds and putrifying sores. I cry, Lord, cleanse me, and wash me in thy cleansing blood. Lord, wouldest thou remember a poor worm of the dust?

Dear brethren and sisters scattered in an enemy's land, here we have no abiding city. O how we do seek and long to ever be with our blessed Lord, when we feel that we do love those dear ones that have been begotten of God, who write so comfortingly in the SIGNS. Though many of them we have never seen in the flesh, yet our hearts go out in love to them, feeling that they have all been taught by the same Teacher. They tell of the way the good Lord has led them out of bondage, how he brought them to the Rea Sea, where they could see no way of escape, and were made to stand still and see the salvation of the Lord. In that unexpected time he delivered them, and snatched them from the pit. I feel to say, Draw near, all ye dear ones that fear the Lord, and I will declare what he has done for my soul. He hath taken me up out of an horrible pit, out of the miry clay, and placed my feet upon a rock, and established my goings, and put a new song in my mouth, even praise to his glorious name. At such a time we may think we will see no more sorrow. We feel that we have Jesus, and what more could we want? But we must suffer with the dear Master. We find that he was led into the wilderness to be tempted of the devil. He was tempted in all points like unto his brethren, yet without sin. The time came when there was a needs be that he must suffer upon the cross, when the sins of his body, his bride, were laid on him. We hear him cry out, "O my Father, if it be possible let this cup pass. Nevertheless not my will, but thine be done." He was led as a lamb to the slaughter, and as a sheep, dumb before the shearers, he opened not his mouth. In his humiliation his judgment was taken away, and who shall declare his generation? His soul was made an offering for sin, he saw his seed, and was satisfied. He endured the agony of the cross when he cried out, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" He paid the demands of God's righteous law, and his soul was not left in hell, neither did his flesh see corruption. By that one offering he hath forever perfected them that are sanctified; yes, these that Jude speaks of, "Sanctified by God the Father, preserved in Jesus Christ, and called." O what sorrows the dear followers of Jesus have had to endure. The Lord by the prophet declares, "Smite the Shepherd, and the sheep shall be scattered, and I will turn my hand upon the little ones." There were none to help, and his own arm brought salvation. His dear followers who loved him so dearly, and who became so disconsolate, and were even tempted to deny him, did not understand that there was a needs be that he should suffer. Their understanding was not opened. They had thought it was he that should redeem Israel, and their hope seemed to be blasted. But at the appointed time he arose and appeared to the dear ones as they journeyed and were sad; yet their eyes were holden that they knew him not. How glad they were, and how their heart did burn within them as he talked with them as they journeyed. Dearly beloved ones, have we not felt something like they did? Often we are sad, and we feel that our Lord has been taken away, and we know not where they have laid him. Often we feel very poor in spirit; yet the dear Savior says, "Theirs is the kingdom of heaven." His disciples had his presence for forty days after his resurrection. At the appointed time he ascended his mediatorial throne, having commanded his dear ones to tarry at Jerusalem until they were endued with power from on high. His promise was that he would send them the Comforter, who should bring all things to their remembrance that he had commanded them. O what a glorious time was that when Peter was converted. Then he could strengthen his brethren. To all who were pricked, not to the heart, but in the heart, he said, "Repent, and be baptized, every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ." These are the only ones that can do good works and follow the dear Savior, who says, "If ye love me keep my commandments." Follow him down into the liquid grave, be buried with him in baptism, and walk in newness of life. O what a glorious sight to behold them walking in his commandments, taking his yoke upon them. He is meek and lowly in heart, and they shall find rest unto their souls. They now must enter upon a warfare. We know they shall have many fiery trials. They are not of the world. All that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution and be mocked by the children of the bond woman, like Isaac was at weaning time. Ishmael mocked. We are commanded to touch not, handle not, any of the poisonous doctrines that are taught by men to help the Lord. We are commanded to stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ has made us free, and not be entangled again with the yoke of bondage; for if Christ has made us free, then are we free indeed. The dear Savior says, "Fear not, little flock, for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." Remember that strait is the gate and narrow is the way that leads to life, and few there be that find it. If we be persecuted because we are few, let us think of the few that were saved in the ark. I have no doubt that the ungodly mocked Noah while he was building the ark. If they had had the religious zeal at that day that they have now, they would have tried to drive all the wild beasts into the ark, with all the people. But they went in two by two, and the Lord shut them in. The word of the Lord standeth sure, and he knows them that are his. He will bring in every ransomed one, for they shall all return and come to Zion with everlasting joy upon their heads, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away.

I have written as my mind has run. It is poor and scattering. Do as you please with it, and my love shall be the same to you.

Yours in affliction,

E. D. VARNES.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

DIED—Our grandmother, Mrs. Isabella Booher, aged 90 years and 6 days. She died Dec. 28th, 1894, at her daughter's, Mrs. Levina Male, near Greenfield, Iowa.

Grandmother was born in old Virginia, Dec. 22d, 1804, her parents moving to, Ohio when she was a child. Her maiden name was Hillyard. She united with the Primitive Baptist Church at the age of sixteen years, and when nineteen years of age she was married to Isaac Booher, who belonged to the same faith as herself, but who has been dead nearly thirty-three years. They moved to Henry Co., Ill., in 1854, where grandfather died. They put their letters in a church called Spoon River, of the Sandy Creek Association, and their membership was never moved from that church. They were noted as being sound, whole-souled Baptists, ever ready to help where there was need, and delighting to wait upon the brethren and friends. Grandmother was never a stout woman, but was a very great sufferer much of the time during her long life; yet her mind was good considering her afflictions. She was delighted to see one of her faith, and talk of the goodness of God. During the last twenty years she was at her Baptist meeting only a few times, yet her faith was not shaken nor her hope less bright. Her grandson, Francis M. Jordan, preached for her comfort four weeks before she died. She reached out her hand (for she was nearly blind) and stopped him, to show that she enjoyed the sermon. She often sang parts of hymns or quoted passages of Scripture, and when racked with pain begged the good Lord to take her to himself.

Her funeral was preached by one of her faith, brother W. T. Terry, who spoke very comfortingly to the relatives and friends gathered there. She leaves seven children to mourn, five having gone before. We miss her when we think of her long life; but she was a ripe sheaf garnered home. Some things about her early life I could not learn, as she had grown so feeble, and had lost her memory. We feel thankful that the good Lord has taken her home. All that could be done for her in this life was done by her faithful daughter. We know that she is better off, and rid of so much suffering.

MARY J. JORDAN.

EARLHAM, Iowa, Feb. 10, 1895.

DIED—At her home in Morgan, Pickaaway Co., Ohio, on Feb. 4th, 1895, sister Mary Ann Glosscock.

Her maiden name was Leach. She was born near Front Royal, Va., Oct. 4th, 1816, and was united in marriage with John Glosscock in the year 1834. To this union were born nine children, seven of whom are still living, two preceding her to the spirit world. Her age was 78 years and 4 months. She united with the Primitive Baptist Church thirty-two years prior to her death, of which she was a faithful and worthy member, always filling her seat when health permitted, and died as she lived, in peace with God and with her brethren. She was a kind and affectionate companion, a loving and tender mother, a good and kind neighbor, and her house was a home for all whose fortune it was to call upon her, especially her brethren and sisters of like precious faith.

She leaves to mourn their loss, but with good hope through grace begun, an aged husband, seven children, many grandchildren, with the church and many friends. Her funeral occurred on Thursday, the 7th, at the family residence. The writer tried to speak words of comfort to the neighbors and sorrowing ones; after which her remains were placed in the vault in the beautiful burying-ground near Mt. Sterling, to await the blessed resurrection of the redeemed by blood unto eternal glory.

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SON, at Middletown, N. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date. This date denotes the time at which your subscription expires; and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. PICTORIAL HISTORY

OF THE

UNITED STATES.

By James D. McCabe.

This work is no dry mass of details—no bombastic effort to inflame the national pride, but a vivid and brilliant narrative of the events of our history, from the discovery of the American Continent down to the present time. It gives a most interesting account of the Indians of North America, from the time of the coming of the white men. The voyages of Columbus and explorations and discoveries of the different nations of Europe are related with graphic power. Every step of our colonial history is traced with patient fidelity, and the sources of those noble and, we trust, enduring institutions, which have made our country free and great, are shown with remarkable clearness. Then follows a clear and succinct account of our great Struggle for Independence, and the establishment of the Federal Union—the events of our career from the close of the Revolution to the administration of Harrison.

The work is printed from plain, new type, on fine calendered paper, and comprised in one octavo volume of 960 pages. It is splendidly embellished with nearly 500 fine engravings, embracing battles and other historical scenes, portraits of distinguished men, views of our principal cities, &c., &c.

Bound in Fine Silk Cloth, Plain Edges, $2.00, Post-paid.

CHRIST OUR ADVOCATE.

As MY Advocate in heaven
Jesus does for me appear;
Surely I shall be forgiven,
For his plea the Lord will hear.
He is holy,
And I lose my guilty fear.

Christ, my gracious Intercessor,
Now appears before the throne;
True, I am a vile transgressor,
But I trust in him alone.
He pleads for me
He who did for me atone.

THE LAMB'S WIFE.

BEHOLD the fair and beauteous bride,
In clothing wrought in gold,
And raiment of fine needlework!
Her wealth cannot be told.

She is the daughter of a King,
Adorned with jewels rare;
High on her Father's royal throne
She sits a princess there.

Elect in Christ ere time began,
Or earth's foundation laid;
Before he gave the seas their bounds,
Or their proud waves were stayed.

From all eternity he saw
His bride, and loved her well;
So well he gave his only Son
To ransom her from hell.

He can behold no spot in her—
She's glorious within,
Since with this royal seamless robe
He covered all her sin.

This robe was wrought 'mid dying groans,
Though devils will deride;
And when on Calvary's rugged brow
'Twas finished when he died.

Who dares dispute his right to claim
The objects of his love?
They cannot fall, for they shall walk
The golden streets above.

And when he comes to raise the dead
The saints triumphant rise;
Ascending meet their glorious Lord,
In songs beyond the skies.

DIVINE LOVE.

JESUS, to thee I lift my eyes,
And would confide in thee;
But unbelief, that cursed sin,
Oft carries me away.

But when my Jesus comes again,
With light and love divine,
My soul can mount on eagles' wings,
And soar above earth's clime.

But O what love, what sovereign love,
Doth in our Jesus dwell!
But for this love, this precious love,
Our just deserts were hell.

But O, my soul, do thou admire
His sovereign love to thee!
He left his heavenly abode
To die on Calvary's tree.

When Jesus gives me faith to know
My interest in his love,
I straightway cry and shout aloud,
And shout his boundless love.

A few more days, weeks, months or years
I'll from this pain be free,
And in his love forever bask
Through all eternity.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TROY, Ala., April 6, 1884.

DEAR BROTHER:—Some of the brethren and sisters having requested me several times to write a relation of what I hope the Lord has done for me in bringing me out of darkness, I seat myself to make the attempt. But O, vain man that I am, and altogether imperfection! When I look at myself and try to speak of the mysterious manner of God's dealings with me, I shudder at the thought, and my heart quakes for fear that I have been deceived in the whole matter; for so young was I when my experience began that I fear it was all nothing more than the natural change which takes place with all in going through the different changes of mental development. But being willing to let those who may chance to read this be judges, I will proceed to relate to the best of my ability what first awakened a feeling sense of my danger in a state of sin.

I had often heard my father talk of heaven and happiness, and I had also heard and read of a place of torture, which place was pictured out before me in my mental vision as a place for burning all the wicked; and my mind having been aroused sufficiently to cause me to begin to meditate seriously upon these things, I began doing everything that I could that I thought would entitle me to favor in the sight of God, the Creator of all things. And I very soon became a very good boy, as I thought. I read my little Testament, which I carried with me to school, and on Sundays I would read and try to do as near as I could all that my father and my little Testament would tell me to do. I would at almost all times try to obey my father, for I thought this would help me on; and I knew it was my duty, and would often think of that place of torment prepared for the wicked ones. One night I dreamed (I must relate this, as it seems to be the awakening, and beginning link in the chain of my real experience, though some disdain to listen to such relations) that this world was being consumed; and I plainly saw the consummation of all things. Being situated near a door in a building in plain view of these flames, I could see nothing but the consuming flames. I dropped on my knees and prayed for deliverance from the flames; and I thought that there was nothing but Jesus of Nazareth, of whom I had read, that could save me from this torment, and that through my prayers he would save me. I prayed earnestly, and while in prayer I saw a mountain in flames before me, and upon the tip of this flaming mountain the flames gave way and a manly shape stood in the space. He started toward me, the flames giving way before him as he descended the mountain side. He came to the door, and said, "Rise up and follow me." I leaped from my knees to follow, and did follow him to the summit of that mountain, when he disappeared, and I awoke to ponder over what I had seen in the presentment. A travail of mind began. Now he is gone, but had come to me in the personage of a man to tell me to follow him, and I could after death be saved from that horrid place of torment I had seen. I was now assured that it was Jesus, the Son of God.

Now, brethren, I will have to leave you to conjecture a little, and think what you can make of this; but I can but say that it strengthened me in my Arminian belief so much that I thought I knew that I had nothing to do but to continue in obedience to his commandments, and love and fear him. So I floated along in ease for some time, surely as strong an Arminian as ever walked; for I had seen plainly that it was through my own works and prayers that I would be saved eternally, and I went on buoyant as before, attending meetings of almost all orders in the section. Now and then I would hear a text of Scripture quoted that would cross and startle me. I would also read some that crossed me, such as this, "It is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that sheweth mercy." And I also read that it was "not of works, lest any man should boast." I continued attending meetings, and in the mean time began to try to do as the preachers would tell me when I would go to the mourners' bench, and after I would return home. One day while singing and meditating over these things, being between my plow-handles, it occurred to me that I was a terrible sinner, although I had been trying so hard to avoid sin; and alas! while singing, as I plowed along,

"Come, humble sinners in whose breast
A thousand thoughts revolve," &c.,

there seemed to be a general revolution in my feelings, and I began to feel like I was a terrible sinner; and from that time on I was troubled. I would read as before, and would try to do as before, and tried to content my mind, but I could not. I will not attempt to describe all my feelings along here. I became more and more interested, and more and more I saw my imperfections and sinfulness. I began to notice myself and found that I was constantly making vows and breaking them. I would attend social parties and engage in all manner of sports among my associates. I had become so attached to them and our games that I could hardly break myself off from them, and would forget my vows and go into their games with them many times after I had promised my Maker that I would not any more if he would but forgive what I had already done. But the question would arise in my mind, What have I done? And I could but answer myself, Broke my vows again; and in place of remaining at home and reading, I have sinned by breaking my promise. And so I went on, up and down, until I became so troubled that I resolved to break off from the society of my young associates, and that I would attend a meeting at that time going on at old Union Hill, four miles northeast of Troy, a place I always remember when thinking back over my past experience; and some who may read this, that are precious to my memory, will well remember the time and circumstances. While attending this meeting I became so alarmed and troubled in mind that I resolved to break off from attending the meeting and from my associates altogether; for I found that all that I had been doing before and while attending the meeting had failed to relieve my mind, and all my efforts every way had also failed. But yet once more, while in my troubled state of mind, I started to go again to attend night service; but while on my way I met one of the old Quitman Guards (as the company was called) on his way back toward the army to rejoin his comrades in arms. I bade farewell to all precious ones, and turned my steps toward the nearest railroad point, which was at that time at Union Springs, Ala. After reaching that point I was soon on board and rolling off by the rising of the next morning sun. I rolled on and on, bound in mind to seek a new field for pastime; for I had decided that by going into the service and having new scenery and new influences thrown around me I would find some ease of mind and rest to my troubled soul. I very soon began to see new sights and cities, and in seven days rolled into Petersburg, Va., where I began to hear the roaring of musketry and artillery. On leaving the wayside soldiers' home in the morning I very soon reached the camps, where I saw grand sights to me, soldiers over the hills and in the valleys everywhere around. In fact so many sights soon took away from me my former feelings, and for a short time my mind was easy. About five days after, we began to move, marching and fighting. Now I began meeting the terrible hardships of war, terrible for me, as I was a mere boy. For about a month there was no physical rest, though my mind was turned from one trouble to another for a short time. But after going into winter quarters, where I had nothing but guard duty to perform, my mind was very soon running back, and I began reading again, and soon found myself again in deep mourning, going bowed down under so heavy a load of sin that I could see nothing in myself but sin and guilt. I read many things that seemed to condemn me, for I found that I had failed to come up to the law; for it said that the soul that sinneth it shall die; and also he that is guilty in one point is guilty in the whole. There being a chaplain in camps, a series of meetings were soon in progress. A goodly number of the boys confessed, and I tried the mourners' bench again, but only to the increase of my trouble; for the preacher commenced telling the same old story that I had heard in Alabama, calling upon us to do the things which I had tried to do with all my might, and had failed. Though I picked up courage enough to try again, I found no relief; but instead, all my former sins revived, and I went off a most miserable creature. The next night the door of the church was opened and an opportunity offered to all that wished to join to come in, and in my distress I went up and gave my hand. He asked me but few questions, and I was received, which seemed to give me a little relief that night for a short time. The day was appointed for my baptism, and on my return to the quarters it seemed to me again that all my sins revived before me. Arriving at my camp I soon retired, but found no rest for my poor, troubled soul. Rising up early the next morning, I went for wood and water as usual, bowed down in deeper distress than before, but praying all the time. I returned and my messmates soon had our little lunch prepared and I appeared as jovial as usual, but I thought they could see, and they did see, that I was in unusual distress in some way, although I had been trying to keep my trouble hid from them all this time. I would assume as jovial a manner as possible, but alas! I had reached that point where I could no longer restrain my feelings. I again picked up my little Testament, and placed myself on the sunny side of our little chimney; for the sun had arisen by this time in all its beauty and loveliness, the eastern horizon brightening in yellow lustre. O what a difference, I thought, compared with the darkness and miserable state of my poor, sin-sick soul. Here my mind ran over the lines which I often read and sung, not feeling any of the weight that they seemed to carry with them at this time,

"How lost was my condition,
When Jesus made me whole;
There is but one Physician
Can cure a sin-sick soul."

Here it occurred to me that the Jesus which I saw, who was to lead me out of the flames of torment, was the Physician, and that he had given up my case, because I had sinned beyond the reach of his pardon. I arose, went for the woods in the rear of our camps. One of my comrades (whose name and person is yet precious to me) seemed to realize my distressed condition and followed me. I tried to get off from him, and did succeed after awhile, by going away off into a boggy branch, there to pray my last prayer. It seemed to me that my sins were that burning mountain, and that Jesus was not there; but the next thing I knew and saw was that same image, and that he had been crucified, and was risen, to give repentance and remission of sins; and the Scripture occurred to me where he says, "I am the way, the truth and the life." Now I saw him as my Savior, and O what a different feeling rested in my bosom! I saw him as my Savior in the free pardon of all my sins, and it came to me just as the first revelation did; but it made me believe entirely a different thing; that is, that salvation is not of works, but alone through the Lord and Savior Jesus Christ; and the same words came to my mind again, "Rise up and follow me. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for my yoke is easy and my burden is light." Being now relieved of this burden my mind began running over many Scriptures which I had read, and among them was, "Come hither, I will shew thee the bride, the Lamb's wife," which I did not at that time understand, but did see that redeemed throng, I thought, clothed in the righteousness of Jesus Christ, and him as their Savior; and by his doing the thing which I had been trying to do so long and so hard, and showing me that I was incapable of doing it, I was made to rejoice, and I indeed went on my way rejoicing, feeling and beholding the beauties which I saw. Here volumes might be written that would be interesting, and even food to me, were it God's will that some one should be exercised to write on the theme. It was indeed a feast to me at that time. I had seen that I had come to Christ, which was the end of the law. It seemed that I loved everybody, and could pray for them, and my prayers were that God would "Have mercy on all who feel oppression's load,

And his tender pity share;
And let the helpless, homeless poor,
Be his peculiar care.

"Go, bid the hungry orphan be
With thy abundance blest;
Incline the wanderer to thy gate,
And spread the couch of rest.

"Then, bright as morning shall come forth
In peace and joy their days,
And glory from the Lord above
Shall shine on all thy ways."

It seems to me that the glory of the Lord shone around me, and everything seemed to be praising him. I would look around, while off in the forest, at the gentle waving of the branches of trees, and the knock and clatter of the army around all looked and seemed lovely. The sun shined in its glory and loveliness. Indeed and in truth everything was lovely to me then. Yea, brother, I say yet with the poet,

"Love is the golden chain that binds
The happy souls above,
And he's an heir of heaven that finds
His bosom glow with love."

After wandering around awhile and admiring the beauties which I had seen by an eye of faith, I went back to camp, satisfied as to the plan of salvation, and I never have doubted it since. My doubts and fears reached not beyond myself. Yea, soon, very soon, doubts began to assail me, and I thought that I might be deceived, and that I was not one of the few that walked in the strait and narrow way of the redeemed throng marching under the commands of King Emmanuel, clothed in that righteous robe unspotted by mammon's stain. I wished to join this band now, though I was in the service of my country then. I still wanted to enlist and march under different colors to anything I had ever marched under before. Indeed my mind was directed to duty, but no opportunity was there, only to walk in humility, which I took to be the prime ornament of a christian. And now my constant inquiry of my Lord was, "What wilt thou have me to do?" And those same words would roll through my mind, "Follow me." I read on every opportunity, and soon became very anxious to be baptized; indeed I thought it was the first step. My mind ran back to those places I had formerly visited, and I prayed God to guard and protect me, that I might again have an opportunity to visit those churches, resolving at the same time that if I ever had an opportunity to join the church I would do so and be baptized. In the meantime there was a Primitive Baptist in the company who had seemingly taken some interest in me, and I had become wonderfully attached to him; and he having received a copy of the minutes of the Coneuche River Primitive Baptist Association, I managed to get hold of it. I read and reread it, and examined their articles of faith, and the general import seemed to suit me, and I became very anxious to learn something of them. About this time he received a furlough and went home, and I met with him no more until I came home. I tried to inform myself by reading, and carried my supplications alone to Jesus, whom I had seen as my Savior. Thus I went on, sometimes in sorrow, and sometimes rejoicing, until the close of the war, which was very soon, praying God to enable me to endure the hardships which I was at that time having to pass through, marching and fighting almost daily, and to carry me back to my home; promising at that time that if he would bless me with that privilege I would never let an opportunity pass without discharging my duty of joining the church and being baptized, the duty which seemed to mostly bear on my mind at that time. And it is strange, though true, I became fearless and bold, fearing no evil, and thought the war would soon be over, and all strife would cease. On our dreadful march I was strengthened to bear privations and great suffering up to the surrender, and even on until I reached home, May 8th, 1865, being on the march homeward twenty-six days. The first opportunity I had of attending meeting was at old Beulah, on Saturday before the fourth Sunday in May. I daily thought of the time, and wished to see it come, at the same time thinking over the blessings I had received, and how I had been preserved and permitted to return home, while so many thousands had fallen, and among them a dear father and brother, whose remains were left behind. I felt that I had something to be thankful for. I was a prodigal son, but had no father's house to return to. My earthly father being dead, and all his property disposed of, I thought some over it; but I read, and it seemed to come to my mind with force, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you;" and so it has occurred to my mind many times since. I thought that I would under all circumstances love and serve him. Feeling so impressed with the duty of joining the church, and being baptized as was Jesus in Jordan, I prayed for an opportunity, thinking that I would not let another chance pass to offer myself. So when the time rolled around, off to Beulah I went. On reaching the place I saw but few that I knew anything about, though I stood around listening to them talk until services commenced. Their songs were sweet to my poor, hungry soul, and I sat back and looked at them. My mind flew away back to that marshy branch and thicket in Virginia, where I first saw Jesus as my Savior, in the free pardon of all my sins; and I thought over the beauties I saw, and thought these were the people that had been washed and cleansed from all their sins. I became satisfied that I had found the people of God, and I wanted to live with them; for my love ran out to them, though they were strangers. After singing Elder Pouncey arose in the stand and preached the sweetest and really the first gospel sermon I had ever heard, for it seemed to reach my case in full power. Preaching being over, the door of the church was opened, and such feelings as I had no tongue can express. One moment my former promises would come up, and next my unworthiness and unfitness to think of offering to live with them. I had felt my unworthiness before, but not to such an extent as then; so my heart failed me, I faltered, and went away burdened about as badly as when I left my home to go off into the service the year before. I then resolved to go to Pleasant Hill and offer there; and did go, but from some cause unknown to me they did not seem to bear that resemblance of the features of loveliness as I expected to see. My heart was hardened, a careless feeling seemed to enter my bosom, and I went off again. Getting off to myself, I soon fell into deep grief and sorrow over my sins again; for all the vows and promises I had made before getting home, and afterward, came up before me. O! such agony of soul as I had to suffer (it seemed to me) no mortal ever suffered, except the Savior while in the garden of Gethsemane. It is needless for me to say I prayed again, for I was praying all the time, "O Lord, forgive, and let a repenting sinner live." I indeed was repenting in a sense, though I had not yet turned by back on the world by taking the yoke of duty upon me; but I had turned my back upon all the frivolity common among the young, and had no more love for it. But I had had two opportunities since returning home; and as I have said before, I had vowed if it should be the Lord's will to let me reach home and have an opportunity, that I would not let it pass; and I had been taught by my good old father not to lie; but now I had lied to the great "I Am that I Am," and I felt truly that I was lost, and what must I do? Indeed I felt that if I should never live to see the next time for the meeting, and should be taken off from the face of the earth in a moment, as I had seen many only a few months before, it would be nothing but what I justly deserved. And I would cry, "O Lord, have mercy, and pardon again." At times my mind would become a little quiet, and doubts and fears would come like waves upon a tempestuous ocean, and I would think that if it was right that I should do what I was wanting to do, and if I was a fit subject for the church, surely it would not be thus with me. I had seen others around stepping in, and it was a beautiful sight to me to see them immersed in the water. It seemed to me I could see that they were healed, and I was still suffering my afflictions as a just reward for my disobedience. In the mean time I found that I had a companion (a neighbor soldier) in like trouble, and I soon sought his company. We talked together, and I very soon found out that there were a few Old Baptists in the neighborhood that were watching us, and had become somewhat concerned about us, and who would talk to and try to encourage us. It gave me considerable relief to hear them talk, and I never have forgottten the times and places. We agreed together at last to go to old Beulah again the next opportunity, and so we did. When services commenced, it was that same lovely sight I saw before. Elder Pouncey again preached, and it seemed to me that he had found out my condition, though he knew nothing about me in one sense, for I was a stranger to him. But his sermon strengthened me, and indeed it was the sweetest meal I ever ate, handed down by man from the pulpit. The sermon being over they soon offered an opportunity for membership, and while they were singing I and two others went up. We all talked a little and were received. The two brethren talked first, and when my time came I liked to have faltered, for they seemed to be very anxious indeed to hear what I had to say. I thought because I was so very young they had very serious doubts about my reality. So when they began to draw near, my poor frame trembled, for I thought I had nothing to relate that they would want to hear. But when I commenced I was strengthened, and I told in a very few words the substance of what I have here written. The tears began to flow very freely from the eyes of some of the old brethren, and I never will forget some of their remarks, they gave me so much encouragement and strength. It was joy to me to see those tears of sympathy flowing from their eyes, for I thought, They will now pray for me, and I will have an easy time. They heartily received me, and I never will forget the hearty grip of their hands on welcoming us to a place among them. I was baptized the next morning, together with those other brethren, to wit, Charlie McCurley and John McVey. Brother McCurley has long since departed this life and gone to his final rest, above, and brother McVey, if living, is, I suppose, somewhere in Texas. His name is sweet to my memory yet, and if he should read these lines he will well remember some of what I have written. Then for a long time I had a blissful and happy time with some brethren that were fully alive. We were together constantly, and among the little squad was a young preacher who was at that time enjoying rich pastures. He was stout, and could run and leap over hills and mountains, and tells us all the beauties he saw. I tell you, brethren, those were the happiest days of my life, and I pray to see the time roll around again when the family all can meet together in one common brotherhood, and talk of the wonderous works of God, and Christ's kingdom here upon earth, that redeemed throng which were chosen out of the world to be a light to the world. But I expect to see it not until the great God chastises us all for the idolatrous worship of mammon; until we are all willing to forsake our idols and return to the worship of the only true and living God. Let those that have eyes to see look around, and those that have ears to hear, hear what Christ saith to his people, "Follow me."

Yours in humble hope of salvation through Christ,

J. W. HARRIS.

NEW YORK, N. Y., Jan. 22, 1895.

DEAR BROTHER COULTER:—Your letter was received in due time, and would doubtless have been replied to ere this had I opportunity. For the past week we have been busily engaged in moving our business quarters, and the consequent labor and fatigue has made me unfit for anything in the evenings but bed. To-day is the first period of leisure I have had for some time, and I will take advantage of it by paying at least one of my debts of correspondence.

You ask for my views concerning Eph. v. 16. I do not know that I have ever had any special light on that Scripture, and, as Elder Grafton once said, "I find it very difficult to explain something I know nothing about." Yet I am confident of this one thing, the Spirit of truth is not dependent upon impressions I may have, or in my ability to express them, in order to comfort you in assurance that your fellowship is with Jesus Christ in the import of this Scripture. And I am glad beyond expresion that it has never been committed unto me, or any other mere man, to make known the mystery of the gospel. It is alone the Spirit of truth which takes of the things of Jesus and shows them unto us. "No man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost." It seems to me that I do know from experience that the God of truth manifests himself in diversities of operations, dividing to every man severally as he will; also that no man hath power over the Spirit. It seems to me I know this, because I have many times been comforted by this self same Spirit of truth in the utterance of brethren who themselves seemed totally unaware of the unut terable things revealed to me. A word here and a word there of no particular significance to the speaker has ofttimes been blessed to my comfort and profit; therefore I feel less hesitancy than of yore in expressing myself, feeling confident that if the Spirit of truth is ever manifested in my utterance or writing, its gift to profit will be divided according to the pleasure of him who is the God of all grace and comfort. "The preparations of the heart is man, and the answer of the tongue, is from the Lord."

"Redeeming the time, because the days are evil."—Eph. v. 16. The doctrine of "do and live" teaches its disciples that the apostle here imposes his admonitions as a duty for them to perform; that it is through so-called "Christian (?) endeavor" they can only redeem the time. Well, they who can derive comfort from such a burdensome doctrine are welcome to it. One thing, however, is certain, Paul never preached it. Place one obligation upon the church, be it ever so slight, and in that one particular at least its salvation is no more of grace, but of work. The apostle in all his preaching, positively and distinctly asserts that salvation is by the grace of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ; that it is God which worketh in us, both to will and to do of his good pleasure; that Christ in us is the word of God, which effectually worketh in all that believe. Paul's exhortations to his brethren were not given to incite them to effort, but they were to stir up their pure minds by way of remembrance of their high calling in Christ Jesus, and to comfort them in the assurance that these things, being the testimony of our Lord, were confirmed in their experience, if so be the Spirit of Christ be in them. He evidently views it this way when he says, "Ye are manifestly declared to be the epistle of Christ ministered by us, written not with ink, but with the Spirit of the living God; not in tables of stone, but in fleshly tables of the heart."

Though it is a constant question with me whether or not the testimony of our Lord is confirmed in me, yet it is a belief of sweetest comfort to me to feel confident that the church of the living God does shew forth the praises of their King, in conformity to his image; that the life of Christ in them is manifested by their redeeming the time.

The life which we now live in the flesh, we live by the faith of the Son of God; and that life is of the fullness of Christ. If Paul preached Christ, then those things which he exhorted his brethren to follow after must have been the things which Christ himself fulfilled in redeeming the time.

What is time? It is not only the duration of one's life, but it is also absolute or unmeasured duration. Eternal life was given us in Christ before the world began. Separate from him there is no eternal life; he is that life itself. In one sense, then, our time is eternal life, and being eternal it cannot suffer interruption.

To redeem anything, one must have originally possessed it; and this we did respecting eternal life, which is to know the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom he hath sent. The life which we live after the flesh

CHURCH ORDER.

ELDER L. D. Daniels, of Haynesville, Ala., has written us asking the following questions with regard to some points of church order.

Before stating and trying to briefly answer the questions proposed by our brother we wish to say that in his letter to us there is no statement of any trouble, but the questions are simply stated as we shall give them, at least in substance. We desire also to disclaim any wish or intent to interfere with the differences between brethren in different sections of the country, or even to offer advice, save to advise all brethren as much as in them lies to live peaceably with all men.

While the above is our wish and our purpose, we do think that questions of the kind which follow are worthy of a careful and serious consideration, and some remarks concerning them may prove of benefit, or at least be of interest, to others besides brother Daniels. We cannot be too careful in dealing with questions like those proposed by our brother, and with other questions which will continually be arising in the conduct of the business of churches. Our chief object ought always to be to decide such questions in the spirit and letter both of the New Testament. To win a victory in a strife with brethren is nothing; to lose a victory is nothing; but it is everything to have a heart to seek first of all that truth shall prevail, even though its sword shall wound and humble our own selves.

Question 1. In case a church should declare a member excluded without a casting vote, or unanimity, would it be wrong and disorderly, or would it be right, and in accordance with the Scriptures? We suppose the brother means here to simply ask, Is a unanimous vote needful in excluding a member, or, in other words, do the Scriptures require it? We would say in answer that so far as we are informed, the universal practice of all gospel churches has been and is for a majority to decide in all cases of that kind, and in conducting all their business, with one exception. That exception is in receiving members. Here, for a very obvious reason, unanimity is required. To receive a member with whom any one member is not in fellowship would be to introduce an element of discord at once, and this of course would be wholly wrong; but, as we said, in all other business, such as excluding members, calling a pastor, together with the many various items of business which are continually arising in a church, unanimity has not, so far as our knowledge goes, been required. We think that we have heard of one or two instances where the rule sought to be established in all things was that of unanimity; but we were told that the outcome was that two or three members mapped out and carried through everything, and all the main body of members did, and all they were expected to do, was to simply ratify what had already been cut and dried for them; and it came to our ears that if in this case one or more members still dared to vote as they felt, in opposition to the rest, they were disciplined as being unruly members. The outcome of this attempt at unanimity was simply death. It is our judgment that the business of the church could not be carried on at all if this were the rule, or else it would result in an oligarchy in the church, or the rule of the few over the many.

But surely it need hardly be said that where there is a difference of opinion in the church as to the guilt of the accused member, or if acknowledged to be guilty by all, still a difference of opinion remains as to the sufficiency of his confession, or whether he should be still borne with, there should be the utmost forbearance and kindness of feeling and expression on the part of the majority toward the minority. This should be so both while the case is under advisement, and when it has come to a final decision. Each should be sure to give the other credit for at least an equal desire with themselves to know and do the right. Because a brother cannot see as we see in such cases, it does not follow that he is an enemy to Zion or a traitor to her King.

We have long believed that in almost all cases where discipline and exclusion from the church become needful, if proper time be given and proper care be exercised, there will be but little difficulty in coming to one mind about the matter; but when this is not so the minority should feel that they are liable to error through some fleshly feeling. The majority should of course remember this also, and so move forward very softly and carefully; but the minority of one or more should, after expressing their opinion and voting as they honestly feel, then abide by the decision that has been arrived at. If the decision has in any way been wrong, it will surely come to the light when God wills.

We do not know that there is any express scriptural precept with regard to this matter; but we believe that the above view is scriptural, that is, that it is in harmony with the spirit and letter of scriptural teaching. We could not see how any business could be disposed of in the churches if this rule of unanimity were insisted upon. In such a case one member would have power, if he were of a fleshly spirit, to block the progress of business in a church entirely.

Question 2. If the excluded members (and also members of other churches) do not think that the church treated them right, or according to the order of the gospel, could those members bring a contest against said church, and have her called to order for so doing?

Answer. The only tribunal that we know of on earth before which any charge can be brought relative to the order of the house of God is the church herself. But every member of that church should remember that One is their Lawgiver, their Judge and their King; and he will judge all things, and bring to the light every secret thing. It will do the smiting servant good to remember this; and the one who is smitten, also remembering this, will be content to leave his cause with the Master. Instead of bringing a contest, even if there were any tribunal other than the church to which to appeal, those excluded should commit their cause to God, who will lift them up if they have been unjustly cast down; and they should strive in the future to so conduct themselves that no one will believe aught against them, and that their oppressors may be put to shame who have falsely accused them. It is the right of the excluded members, a right of which no one can deprive them, to walk circumspectly before all men; and this would make the best contest possible before earth and heaven. There is no weapon against unjust accusation so potent as right living.

The substance of the third question is this: If this church which has excluded these members, at the next session of the association to which she belongs sends a letter and messengers, stating that she is in peace within her own borders and with her sister churches, and if the excluded members should appear and state that the church was not in love and peace, would it be right for the association to receive said letter and messengers or not?

Answer. If what we have stated in our answer to the second question be true, we cannot see what right the excluded members have to come before the association. The association can have no authority to settle or decide anything in the churches. The churches must act for themselves. They can delegate no authority to associations. The body of brethren gathered at an association are sent there by their respective churches simply and solely to bear and receive messages to and from the churches which sent them. If while together they join in the worship of God publicly, that is right and pleasing to God always; but this they do not as messengers of the churches, but as the children of God gathered together. Any brother or any church may ask the advice of an association about anything of which they stand in doubt, and the brethren gathered together may say what seems right to them, and no gospel order be violated, and no power be usurped over the church; but even here it should be carefully stated that this is but the opinion of the body of the brethren who are there met as brethren, and not as messengers representing the churches which sent them there in this thing. But while this may be justified, we must protest against calling the association by the name of an advisory body; and we have come to think it unwise to propose such queries to the association. Let the association do only what her messengers (not delegates) were sent there for, viz., to give and receive messages from the churches, or from other associations of churches. We have never once in all our experience seen any good grow out of carrying church troubles up to the association. On the contrary, in most cases it has acted as a tempest in scattering firebrands right and left.

It seems to us, in the case named by our brother, that the association could not lawfully even consider the matter. It seems to us that the letter and messengers of the church must be received in the first place. If any brother present from another church has heard that things are not as the church reports, he has a gospel remedy. It is his right to state to the members of this church that he has heard a different report, and ask an explanation. The church for her own sake ought of course to seek to clear herself of the charge of making a false report; but this is church work, and not association work. If any sister church hears things about the exclusion of these members that seem to her so wrong as to demand an explanation, it is her right to convey to her sister church the reports which she has heard, and ask for an explanation.

While all this we believe to be true and scriptural, yet we think as a general rule it is far from wise for one church to interfere with the discipline of another. The church excluding members understands the circumstances best. The church may do a hasty or wrong act, it is true, but yet in the vast majority of cases we believe the excluded members have no right to complain of unfairness; and as said above, if treated unjustly, it furnishes a reason why they should in the future try to so live that all will be convinced of their integrity.

We can but think that the association would do right to receive the letter and messengers of this church. Whatever of wrong there is in the church must be decided elsewhere than at the association. We trust that we have not here darkened counsel with words without knowledge.

C.

BENEDICT'S HISTORY OF THE BAPTISTS.

"OLD SCHOOL, PRIMITIVE OR ANTI-MISSION BAPTISTS.

THESE people generally claim the first two of these appellations as descriptive of their peculiar views, in opposition to those of the friends of benevolent efforts; the last is applied to them by their opponents. Most of them disown the name, while D. Parker and a few others freely admit it as the proper cognomen of their party.

It is one thing to complain of the modus operandi in the collection of funds and the management of missionary affairs at home and abroad, and another to take a dead stand against what is properly denominated the effort system; which, as I understand the matter, is done by the great mass of our denomination who are implicated in these remarks.

It will be seen by those who follow my narrations through the States where all these communities exist, that I make no distinction between them and what are called the effort Baptists in my historical details. If I have been less full in my descriptions of their affairs, it is on account of the backwardness of the people, and because their history could not be obtained.

Again, I have in no case made any reference to the character of Associations, as to the subject of missions, &c., unless some facts in their history required it; and my aim through all my narratives has been to say as little as possible relative to the disputes in different sections of the country on this subject. My reasons for this course are as follows:

1. It is a family difficulty, about which cool observers at a distance feel very different from those who have been immediately identified with it, and I am fully satisfied that my readers generally will derive no pleasure nor profit from any lengthy details respecting it.

2. It has been my settled opinion for a long time past that the cause of missions has had but little to do in this business, so very slender is its hold on the minds of the great mass of our community in most parts of the country, however they are distinguished. This is shown by their doings for benevolent objects. The fact is that personal altercations, rivalships and jealousies, and local contests for influence and control, have done much to set brethren at variance with each other. The mission question is the ostensible rather than the real cause of the trouble in many places. New men and new measures have run faster than the old travelers were accustomed to go, and they have been disturbed at being left behind. A long catalogue of things of this kind might be mentioned.

But doctrinal matters have been at the bottom of all troubles, and predestination has been the bone of contention. The anti-mission party, as near as I can learn, without any exception, are high or hyper-Calvinists, and are so tenacious of the old theory of particular atonement, and have so far run the system up to seed as to persuade themselves that the efforts of modern times are wholly needless, and Arminianism is the bugbear which they profess to fear.

3. The anti-mission movement must of necessity be a short-lived one. It has within itself the elements of its dissolution; and before my stereotyped pages could reach the different parts of the country, to say nothing of remoter regions, it will be among the things that are past and forgotten. Whole churches and associational confederacies are either sinking into oblivion or coming over to the side of evangelical efforts.

4. I am mortified that any Baptists should assume an opposing attitude as to missionary operations and the kindred objects of benevolence; so much so that the fact would not have been named in my work had I not been compelled to do it as a matter of historical veracity.

5. Old School and Primitive Baptists are appellations so entirely out of place that I cannot, even as a matter of courtesy, use them without adding, so called, or some such expression. I have seen so much of the missionary spirit among the old Anabaptists, Waldenses and other ancient sects, so vigorous and perpetual were the efforts of those christians, whom we claim as Baptists, in the early, middle and later ages, to spread the gospel in all parts of the world, among all nations and languages where they could gain access, that it is plain that those who merely preach up predestination, and do nothing, have no claim to be called by their name."

By a mistake of our compositor a large portion of what we had designed to extract from Benedict's history of the Baptists was omitted in the last number, and we have supplied the deficiency in the above extract. The reader will discover that the present extract should have preceded that which was given in our last number, according to the order in which it is found in the history. These two extracts embrace about all that the historian chose to tell succeeding generations of the existence and peculiarities of Old School Baptists of the present age. But of the brevity of the notices taken of us we would not complain, as he, being a religionist of a different and altogether dissimilar order from that of ourselves, we had no claim on him to notice us at all; but of the unfairness, misrepresentations and falsehood of the caricature he has given, we have a right to complain, and to repel the slander. If Mr. Benedict had been ignorant of the real character of the Old School Baptists, why did he essay to give their history until he should become acquainted with them, so far as to know whereof he affirmed? The SIGNS OF THE TIMES has been regularly mailed to him, from the first number of the eleventh volume to the present date. We have also forwarded to him, by his special request, the Minutes of many Old School Baptist Associations every year, besides other documents, including the Address of the Old School Baptists assembled at Black Rock, Md., about seventeen years ago; and he has also received all the Old School periodicals published in the United States. Can it be possible that with every means of information before his eyes he has been so stupidly ignorant or so blindly prejudiced that he has failed to learn our real character? If so, he is not to be relied on as an authentic historian in any other respect. In the above extract he betrays a sly design to identify the peculiar views of D. Parker with the Old School Baptists, and speaks of his admitting the cognomen of anti-mission as the proper cognomen of the Old School Baptists. In the sense in which the appelative anti-mission has generally been used, to signify an opposition to the unscriptural amalgamation of church and world in what are called Mission Societies and mission operations, the Old School Baptists have never objected to its application to them; but the evident design of the extract was not to imply their opposition to Mission Craft, but rather to fasten upon them the odium of D. Parker's Two Seed heresy, which Mr. Benedict knew the Old School Baptists had disclaimed as unequivocally as they had the heresy of modern Missionism.

The next stroke of the historian's pen, in what we have copied above, informs us that "it is one thing to complain of the modus operandi in the collection of funds and the management of missionary affairs, &c., and another to take a dead stand against what is properly denominated the effort system." And this he says he understands "is done by the great mass of the denomination who are implicated in these remarks." But what are we to understand by the effort system? If he means to represent that the Old School Baptists are at a dead stand against the effort made and by the authority of the New Testament authorized to be made by the children of God, to observe and obey all things whatsoever Christ has commanded them, he misrepresents them grossly by the insinuation that they have taken any kind of a stand against such a system; for no one knows better than Mr. Benedict ought to know, that the very ground on which we have withdrawn our christian fellowship from what he calls the missionary Baptists, is that they have departed from that system, and are now, with himself, busily and indefatigably engaged in teaching for doctrine the commandments of men, and making void the laws of Jesus Christ by their own traditions. It matters nothing to us by what modes of operation they carry on their opposition to the government of Christ, or how they collect their funds, so long as we know that their whole speculation is in open violation of the plainest commands of Jesus Christ. It is possible, if we could find divine authority for taking the business of saving sinners out of the hands of Christ, and for organizing societies, composed of cash paying men, women and children without discrimination of character, with presidents, directors, treasurers, secretaries, boards, agents, &c., for evangelizing the world, we might still complain of some part of the modus operandi displayed in their imitation of their ancient type, who loved the wages of unrighteousness, and who was rebuked by his animal on which he essayed to perform his foreign mission operation. But the modus is not the bone of contention. True, we find fault with the numerous wicked tricks expertly played off in the collection of funds; but if this difficulty was not involved, if the Mission Board were now in possession of all the wealth of the universe, so as to require no more funds, that would not relieve the system of its unscriptural and consequently its anti-christian character. The thing itself is an insult to the majesty and wisdom of God, and treason against the King of heaven, and for this reason we take "a dead stand" against it. We protest against murder, theft, drunkenness, &c., not merely to the modus operandi by which these crimes are committed, for we know of no mode by which they can be committed without involving a transgression of God's law; and by the same rule we protest against any and every system of humanly devised missionary operations in which men have undertaken to fill the mediatorial office of our exalted Prince and Savior, Jesus Christ.

Before we pass, we must notice the possessive case of the pronoun our in the connection, "the great mass of our denomination," &c. By what right does Mr. Benedict claim the Old School Baptists as a part of the denomination with which he is connected? He knows that the connection which once nominally existed has been dissolved for more than fifteen years, yet he seems determined to use them by force or fraud to swell the number and respectability of his favorite denomination.

Mr. Benedict assigns seven reasons for avoiding a full account of the Old School Baptists, and for aiming to say as little as possible about the disputes on the subject of missionism, besides one or two implied, such as inability for want of information, and want of inclination, &c.; but after all we very much suspect that he has designedly concealed the real reason for the omission. If he had told his readers that in giving a candid statement of the disputes among Baptists on the missionary subject there was great reason to fear the "truth would out," and people would discover that there is no divine authority for the modern missionary machinery, he might have spared himself the labor of manufacturing the other seven reasons; but as he has chosen to conceal what we believe was a grand reason, we will examine his far fetched and hard labored seven reasons.

1. He considers it a family difficulty, &c., in which there is little or no interest. If the Old School Baptists and the New School or Arminian Baptists are but one family, as he represents them to be, and which they must be if the dispute on this subject is but a family broil, what can be thought of Mr. Benedict as a historian in purposely concealing the fact that the family is a quarreling family, a house divided against itself, and therefore destined to fall? If his position be correct, his character is involved, in giving a garbled, unfair and partial account of them, spreading out on his "stereotyped pages" only the brighter spots of their history. It can only be justly regarded a family difficulty in the sense that those of Cain and Abel, Isaac and Ishmael, and Jacob and Esau, were; for in a gospel sense the whole New School fraternity have gone out from us, that it may be made manifest that they are not of the same family; that they are the strange children of whom David complained in Psalm cxliv.

2. The second reason given is somewhat complicated, and embraces many counts, the first of which is the settled opinion of the historian that the ostensible is not the real cause of the trouble; that doctrinal matters have been at the bottom of all the troubles, "and predestination has been the bone of contention," &c. That missionism involves doctrine we shall not deny; and the presumption with us is that if the doctrine of predestination could be uprooted by Mr. Benedict and his party, the Old Baptists would waive all opposition to the anti-predestinarian schemes of modern missionism, and the old theory of particular atonement, which Benedict by way of ridicule says has run the system up to seed, would fall of itself; for if God has predestinated nothing, he can have no definite purpose in anything, and consequently there was nothing particularly designed or intended by the atonement. But because the Old Baptists believe in the universal government of God, as extending to all beings, all events and all worlds, and rejoice in the strong conviction of their hearts that God in working all things after the counsel of his own will has a purpose in all that he does or suffers to be done in heaven, earth or hell, they are convinced that he had a special and particular design in bruising his Son, and in laying the iniquities of all his people on him; that he had irrevocably ordained and decreed before all time that by the stripes of Jesus all his people should be healed; and by his one offering he should perfect forever all that were originally sanctified by God the Father, preserved in Christ Jesus, and ultimately called; they cannot believe that the final success of Christ's mediatorial work, the object of his death and glory of his resurrection is made to depend upon the unscriptural devices of men; nor that the certain results of Christ's death shall give place to the God-dishonoring and heaven daring projects and stock-jobbing speculations of mission societies, mission funds or mission agencies. And because Mr. Benedict and his fellows can blasphemously ridicule and denounce the sovereignty of the eternal God as a system of hyper-Calvinism, or "thick skinned antinomianism," they can carry out their resistance to God by undertaking to supercede the official work of Christ through their mission projects. Let the reader bear in mind the admission of Mr. Benedict, that to favor modern missionism is to reject predestination and particular atonement. But as Arminianism is the opposite of predestination, Mr. Benedict lets us know that he and his brethren are not afraid of it; with him and them "it is only a bugbear," that is all. Mr. B. speaks figuratively when he calls the predestination of God a "bone of contention," and represents his heterogeneous family as a parcel of dogs quarreling over a mere bone; a family difficulty involving the government of God, to be settled when the strongest dog shall carry off and demolish the bone. But we are inclined to believe that our historian has in some things come nearer the truth than he intended, especially in admitting that new men and new measures have run faster than old travelers have been accustomed to go. They have indeed run greedily after the error of Balaam, and in the way of Cain, and have perished in the gainsayings of Core at such a rate of speed as none of the old travelers of the Baptist order have ever been accustomed to go. But if Mr. Benedict or any of his clan can point out among the Old School any who have left the new order and united with us merely because of rivalships, and local contests for control, in which squabbles they have been unsuccessful, if he will lay his finger on them, we venture to guarantee they shall be sent back to their quarters with but little delay; for such would make very poor Old School Baptists. We have no inclination to detain any such with us one moment. But we must pass to consider his third reason.

PLEASE BE SURE

IN sending remittances for renewals of subscriptions to give us the same name that the paper is already coming to. If the party is married, and the paper is coming to the wife's name, and we receive a remittance to renew the subscription, and the husband's name is given, we have no means of knowing that it is meant for the subscription in the wife's name; consequently the husband's name is entered on our list, and the paper sent to both parties. Or if the paper is coming in the husband's name, and the renewal is sent in the wife's name, the same thing is likely to occur. It is a good plan to inclose in the letter one of the little pink slips containing the name, taken either from the margin of the paper or from the wrapper in which the paper comes.

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE.

TO MOST of our readers the above mentioned book is too well known to need any introduction or a description by us. While many of the Bibles have a Concordance appended, they are generally so condensed or abridged as to be of little or no use. Cruden's Complete Concordance, however, enables one to readily turn to any passage of Scripture of which they can call to mind two or three words, and in our opinion is the most complete and convenient as a reference book of any published. In addition, it contains many other aids in studying the Bible, as may be seen by reference to advertisement on last page. Remember, both the books there mentioned are CRUDEN'S COMPLETE.

is absolute ignorance of God. By reason of wicked works we are alienated from the knowledge of him who is our life, and until he appears we are bankrupt of the price wherewith to redeem our possession. Evidently, then, to know Jesus Christ, who is our life, is redeeming the time. If he is our life, and all our works are wrought in us, then Christ is come in the flesh; and in precisely the measure of the Spirit of Christ there is manifest in us, in just such measure do we walk uprightly and in holiness before the Lord, redeeming the time, showing forth the life of him who of God is made unto us redemption.

What evidences have we to produce that we do walk worthy of the Lord unto all pleasing? What ground have we to hope that Christ is come in the flesh, and that there is therefore now no condemnation to us? The evidences which the Lord's people have to comfort them are manifest in the way and manner of how our Lord himself declared he would lay the foundation of his church, in his death and sufferings. In the behalf of Christ it is given unto us to suffer for his sake; and no other foundation can we have than is laid, which is Christ Jesus our Lord. To reign with him, we must suffer with him; and in the measure of the Spirit of Christ given unto us, in like measure do we manifest fellowship in his sufferings. Is it manifest fellowship with him to feel that the world hates us? And by the world I do not mean that it is necessary for us to discover that hatred in various sects and denominations of people, for I find it at home in the body, in my own household, this body of death. Yes. Did not our Lord say that the world shall hate us? And why? Because the world hated him before it hated us; and being predestinated to be conformed unto his image, we are likewise partakers of his affliction in his endurance of the contradiction of sinners against himself. If the church is in conformity unto Christ, what less can be expected than that she shall feel the relentless opposition and persecution of the world, the flesh and the devil? If it hates the head and foundation, it cannot but hate the body; that which is built upon the foundation. The Arminian (and we do not have to get out of ourselves to find him) says, "If this be true, then, when I am cast down because of the things that are reproved in me, I will remember that these things which are reproved are made manifest by the Spirit of Christ in me, and I will at once be raised above my trouble." All I have to say to such an one is, Try it, and if you succeed I will show you one whose hope is in himself, and in whom no gospel affliction has a part. Ah no. The saints have not so learned Christ. The comfort and peace which is theirs is not as the world gives; they walk not by sight, but by faith. Faith receives, assents to, and rests in, things which in their own nature are absolutely incomprehensible. Faith is the evidence of things not seen; that which makes evident, as by demonstration in our experience, the testimony of our Lord, of which we are not ashamed; but which reason nor sense can possibly comprehend. The more wonderful and glorions these things appear to us, the more objectionable are they to carnal reason and understanding. And the more inaccessible to sense and reason they are, the more we are changed into the image of God. This glorious effect of faith, which transforms the mind into the likeness of God, is as evident and real in many who are naturally of weak and inferior intellect, as it is in those who enjoy the highest attainments in natural wisdom. In the gift of faith God is no respecter of persons. All that natural learning and wisdom can attain to is absolute loss, in so far as it can enable one to assent to and embrace divine mysteries. Only faith does this; and while it renders us in the eyes of the world foolish, weak, base and despised, yet in the sight of God we are rich, in that it makes us like unto him. The greater and more incomprehensible to us the will and wisdom of God is, the more are we in conformity and likeness unto him. Utter helplessness to walk by sight is beholding the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ, and we are changed into the same image, from glory to glory. And why is it that faith receives, assents to, and rests in, things so utterly opposed to sense and reason, so mortifying and crucifying to the flesh? It is because "faith worketh by love." The law of God, which is written in our hearts, is, "Thou shalt love." The love of God which passeth knowledge exercises us in holy obedience and worship. The very sorrows and groanings of the believer show on what his affections are set. He mourns over daily experience of a sinful nature, he writes bitter things against himself, and fears he is destitute of a principle of holiness. But his wretchedness under this experience, his tears, his strivings, however apparently ineffectual, all witness for him, all say for him, more than words, "I delight in the law of God after the inward man." Is not this redeeming the time? And is not his "Woe is me!" because the days are evil?

There is as much difference between the experience of the saints of God, and the unregenerate, as there is between light and darkness. In them who know not God, sin hath dominion over them, and it reigns absolute and alone, in undisputed possession of the whole man. They do as Satan would have them, who is described as "the spirit that worketh in the children of disobedience." They are therefore at ease. Sometimes they may be disturbed in mind by the clamor of reason, which will dictate the advisability of refraining from the pursuit of some desired sin. But the anxiety of their soul is not, How shall I escape from my hated sin? but, How shall I indulge my cherished sin and escape the wages of it? But when God puts his law into our heart, he enters the place where Satan's goods have been in peace.—Luke xi. 21. Sin's dominion is overthrown, its power broken, its final destruction sure. We now hate sin. Satan and his hosts, the lusts of the flesh and of the mind, cannot tyranize as before; but they yield not easily. They "war in the members," and at times they seem for a season to have regained their wonted empire; and this conflict continues to the end. The old man is crucified with the affections and lusts, but he dies not, till we realize a blessed absence from the body and presence with the Lord. I have dared to hope, in times that are past, that I have been thus blessed; haven't you?

Whatever bitter sense the dear saints of God may realize of a want of individual conformity to the law of God, they cannot deny that they "consent unto the law," as the apostle speaks, "that it is good." From this discovery springs conviction of sin, "godly sorrow," which, blended as it always is with believing views of mercy to unrighteousness, "worketh repentance unto salvation, not to be repented of." Sin is now known and felt to be "exceeding sinful," as it is seen in the light of that law of which it is the transgression. "I had not known sin," said Paul, "but by the law; for I had not known lust, except the law had said, Thou shalt not covet." The law of God being written in his heart, he now sees its excellence; but in its excellence he sees his own vileness, and finds nothing but iniquity and rebellion.

If Christ be in us, we shall by faith experience his sufferings. He was tempted in all points as we are, yet without sin. Tempted to doubt his Sonship, even as we are. Tempted to covet wealth, fame and honor in the world, even as we are. Tempted to use his liberty for an occasion to the flesh, even as we are. Yet he sinned not. He endured the contradiction of sinners against himself; and if we have his mind, we also shall partake of the same, by reason of war in our members. He had not where to lay his head. Then we must be like him in our weariness and unrest, wandering in the wilderness, in a solitary way, and finding no city to dwell in; hungering and thirsting; in heaviness and exceeding sorrow; feeding upon the bread of tears, and drinking of tears in great measure, which continually say unto us, "Where is thy God?" Is it not to be like him, to know his agony on the tree, when he cried, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?"

Thank God for electing love which chose us in Christ before the world began, that we should be holy and without blame before him in love: having predestinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to himself, according to the good pleasure of his will, to the praise of the glory of his grace, wherein he hath made us accepted in the Beloved. "By grace are ye saved, through faith; and that not of yourselves; it is the gift of God: not of works, lest any man should boast. For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them." And what are the good works? "Pass the time of your sojourning here in fear." "Take heed lest ye fall." "Set your affection on things above." "Pray without ceasing." Wrestling not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places. These things are redeeming the time, it seems to me, though the mortification of sin in us, which the following after of these things makes manifest, causes us to feel that the days are evil. Our eyes see, and we eat of the bread of adversity, and drink of the water of affliction; and though chastening for the present seemeth grievous, yet afterwards it yieldeth the peaceable fruits of righteousness in them that are exercised thereby; and we realize that the Lord was there, and we knew it not; that in all our affliction he was afflicted, and the angel of his presence saved us.

I have written long into the night; and in view of the fact that I have not touched upon what I started out to write, I almost wish I had stopped before I began. I hope I believe all I have written. Sometimes I am confident I do, and then again, it seems to me, I do not believe anything. And yet, to show you how desperately I am situated at times for some encouragement to hold fast to the hope I have, I have actually realized some comfort in the thought that a deceived person never doubts; neither do they hope. Doubt is an element not consistent with assurance or with deceivableness. Of late, indeed for a long time past, I have been in terribly low grounds. I oftentimes wonder if the end is not near, when I shall be cut off from the living, and marvel at the Lord's long-suffering toward me. Reason and evidences of a good hope within me seem to have disappeared; all there does seem to be in my heart is, "O Lord, thou knowest that I love thee." I think sometimes that it must have been recorded for my special comfort, "No man hath seen God at any time. If we love one another, God dwelleth in us, and his love is perfected in us. Hereby know we that we dwell in him, and he in us, because he hath given us of his Spirit." If I have ever known what love is, I do love the brethren; but O! how unlike them I am, and how unworthy I am to claim their God as my God.

Remember me in love to all your family. I hope soon to make you all a visit. My wife also sends love and greeting.

Let me make a suggestion to you. When you write hereafter, kindly give me your views of the text on your mind, instead of trying to tap understanding where no understanding is. May the Lord graciously bless you in all your ways, and give you to know with all saints the beauty and excellence of his law, which is written in your heart, though in beholding it the days will seem evil because of grief on account of natural enmity. Then is the promise precious, "I will be merciful to their unrighteousness, and their sins and their iniquities will I remember no more."

Yours in love,

JOHN McCONNELL.

G. BEEBE'S SON—DEAR BROTHER:—There is a wrong done you in regard to your liberal offer as to new subscribers which I suppose we will have to submit to, yet I have about made up my mind not to be a party in the transaction. I hope the cases in question are few in number. It is this. Different members of the same family will alternate in succession, so as to hand in a new name, to get the SIGNS for one dollar a year, and in reality it means an old subscriber. I intend to decline hereafter receiving subscriptions that I know are managed in that way. Subscriptions have come in slowly, and I now send to you those paid in since my last remittance. To the new subscriber you may send back numbers from January first if you have them. I inclose a list of what I have paid in, hoping it will reach you all right.

I remain, as ever, yours in fellowship of the truth, ***

REMARKS.—We have for a long time been aware of the imposition spoken of above, but are helpless to avoid it without the aid of our brethren. The object in allowing a new subscriber to be received by our brethren at one dollar for the first or trial year is to enable them to introduce the paper to those who have not taken it, hoping they may be so well pleased with it that they will become regular subscribers. We send out sample copies of the paper free; but we could not afford each number as a sample copy to all our old subscribers, nor would we if we knew it send a sample copy free each number to a different member of the same family. We have especially requested our brethren to not receive a new subscription for one year for one dollar from any one whom they had no reason to believe would become a regular subscriber. We now request that they will do as our brother has said, not receive one dollar from any one who is merely subscribing in a new name, when in reality it is but the renewal of an old subscription.—ED.

EDITORIAL NOTICES.

EXTRAORDINARY OFFER.

WE still continue our offer to send two new subscribers, and credit an old subscriber one year, for three dollars; but we cannot afford to send to one new subscriber, and credit an old subscriber one year, for two dollars. Please do not ask us to do it.

Any one who is already a subscriber is authorized to act as agent for us; and we will send the paper for the first year to any new subscribers they may send us at one dollar each, and they are entitled to retain the other dollar for their commission.

Under no circumstances can new subscribers send to us direct and get the paper for themselves for less than the regular rates.

POSTAL MONEY ORDERS.

BY a recent arrangement of the post-office department nearly every post-office in the United States is now a money order office for at least five dollars; and as it costs but three cents additional to obtain an order of not more than two dollars and fifty cents, or five cents for one not more than five dollars, or eight cents for one not more than ten dollars, and so on in proportion to amount of order, we request that all remittances be sent us by post-office money-order. You simply give the money you wish to send to your postmaster, and he will give you a money-order for that amount. You will inclose the order which he gives you in your letter to us; and if it should be lost in the mail you can get another one from your postmaster without additional charge. Please be sure to have the order made payable at Middletown, N. Y., and never at New York City, as that place is nearly a hundred miles from our place, and it puts us to considerable extra trouble and expense to get them cashed at the New York City office.

As will be seen from the above, an order for five dollars or less can be obtained cheaper than registering a letter, while an order not exceeding ten dollars costs but the same amount; and remitting by money order is a much safer way than sending by registered letter, as the postal department is not responsible for loss of registered letters, but money orders can be duplicated.

BACK NUMBERS.

OUR supply of back numbers being about exhausted, we have now discontinue sending them to new subscribers unless especially requested to supply them.

MARRIAGES.

BY Elder M. L. Jackson, at his residence in Floyd Co., Iowa, on Sunday, Jan. 20th, 1895, Mr. Cyrus Grandy and Mahaly Allen, both of Floyd Co., Iowa.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

DIED—At her home in Olive, N. Y., Dec. 27th, 1894, Mrs. Elizabeth M. Myers, aged 63 years.

Sister Myers was baptized in fellowship with the Olive & Hurley Church several years ago (the exact date I have not at hand), from which time she was a worthy member, ever filling her place when circumstances would permit. She was in poor health for a number of years. At one time she moved to the lower part of the county, when she could meet with the church only occasionally. Then she took the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, which she prized very highly for the truth and doctrine it contains. After the death of her husband she moved back to Olive, which privilege she prized highly, in being again with her brethren and sisters. Just two weeks before her burial she was at the meeting both Saturday and Sunday. Her last sickness was of short duration, being taken with pneumonia.

The funeral was held at the house on Sunday, the 29th, when a sermon was preached by Elder J. D. Hubbell; after which all that was mortal was laid in the tomb until the resurrection morn, when the trump of God shall sound, and they that sleep in Jesus shall come forth, changed from mortality to immortality. May this be our happy lot, through Jesus Christ our Redeemer.

J. V. WINCHELL.

OLIVE, N. Y., Feb. 22, 1895.

SISTER Jane Shelburne died at her home of typhoid fever, after an illness of forty-two days.

She suffered very much during the last weeks of her illness, until God was pleased to call her home, when she fell asleep calmly and sweetly in her blessed Jesus, to sleep that sleep which the poet says is supremely blessed and knows no waking. She was born Nov. 18th, 1840, and died Nov. 11th, 1894, so that at her death she was 53 years, 11 months and 23 days old. Her maiden name was Goodwine, she being the daughter of Eli and Eliza M. Goodwine. She and brother John W. Shelburne were married Oct. 21st, 1858. Six children were the result of this union, three sons and three daughters, all of whom lived to be grown, and all of whom survive her save one (Eliza), who married Mr. James Tickenor, and who preceded her to the home beyond about one month, dying of the same fell destroyer (typhoid fever), this daughter Eliza having lost a daughter some weeks previous by the same disease. Thus we see that the hand of affliction has been laid heavily upon our dear brother by the Lord, and truly we may speak of him as our sorely afflicted and sorrowing brother, he having in so short a time lost a granddaughter, a daughter, and his dear, fond, loving and good companion.

Sister Shelburne embraced a hope in her Savior when quite young, and united with the Primitive or Old School Baptist Church at Beech Creek, in Shelby Co., Ky., in September, 1868. Her husband, brother Shelburne, followed her, and joined the same church at the October meeting. Truly the writer can testify that on every occasion when it was sister Shelburne's privilege to meet with the church he never saw any one of God's children enjoy the worship of God more than she did. Truly sister Shelburne's walk and conversation were such that those with whom she came in contact were constrained to say, Truly she has been with Jesus, and learned of him. Sister Shelburne, I can truly say, possessed all the christian virtues in the highest degree. She was a kind and loving mother, and doubtlessly had no superior as a dutiful and devoted wife.

May we all, who are thus bereft of one whom we loved so much as a christian, a mother, a sister, a companion and neighbor, bow in humble submission to this sad dispensation of God's providence, feeling that while we grieve and mourn our loss, it is her eternal gain. May God bless the dear, sorrowing husband and children.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SON, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date. This date denotes the time at which your subscription expires; and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

PICTORIAL HISTORY

OF THE

UNITED STATES.

By James D. McCabe.

This work is no dry mass of details—no bombastic effort to inflame the national pride, but a vivid and brilliant narrative of the events of our history, from the discovery of the American Continent down to the present time. It gives a most interesting account of the Indians of North America, from the time of the coming of the white men. The voyages of Columbus and explorations and discoveries of the different nations of Europe are related with graphic power. Every step of our colonial history is traced with patient fidelity, and the sources of those noble and, we trust, enduring institutions, which have made our country free and great, are shown with remarkable clearness. Then follows a clear and succinct account of our great Struggle for Independence, and the establishment of the Federal Union—the events of our career from the close of the Revolution to the administration of Harrison.

The work is printed from plain, new type, on fine calendered paper, and comprised in one octavo volume of 960 pages. It is splendidly embellished with nearly 500 fine engravings, embracing battles and other historical scenes, portraits of distinguished men, views of our principal cities, &c., &c.

Bound in Fine Silk Cloth, Plain Edges, $2.00, Post-paid.

CORRESPONDENCE.

HURRICANE BRANCH, Tenn., Feb. 9, 1895.

DEAR AND PRECIOUS BROTHER IN CHRIST:—If one so little and insignificant should be permitted to claim so blessed relationship. I feel sure that one cannot be born of the covenant of grace, and another of the works of the law, and both be heirs of that glorious inheritance beyond this vale of sorrow. But while I have no doubts in your case, nor of those of like precious faith, the question often with me is, "Am I his or am I not?" My only hope of salvation from my many sins is through the finished work of the blessed Lamb of God, who was manifested to take away sin; and in him is no sin; and I humbly hope he had my case under consideration when he died upon the tree of the cross. If so, I was then reconciled to God by the death of his Son. Much more, being reconciled, I shall be saved by his life. And my heart goes out in thankfulness to him for his manifestation to me, and giving me to hope in his mercy. O glorious hope! O blessed thought! that one so vile as I should be given a hope in the eternal redemption that Jesus obtained. But I am often made to cry, "My leanness! my leanness!" But then again my hope revives, and I feel to say, "The Lord is good, a strong hold in the day of trouble; and he knoweth them that trust in him." O what a blessed thing it is to be enabled to trust in the Lord! For "they that trust in the Lord shall be as Mount Zion, which cannot be removed, but abideth forever." I dare not trust in anything that I have done or can do, for I realize that all of my best performances are in the sight of God of no more value than filthy rags; so I am made to cry, Help, Lord, for vain is the help of man. Whether I be one for whom Jesus died or not, I believe that Jesus, the Son of God, did die upon the Roman cross; and did then and there make a full, complete and ample atonement for all the sins of all his people; and his people, in the sense of which I speak, are all the eternal Father chose in his dear Son before the foundation of the world, that they should (not may if they will) be holy and without blame before him in love; and he is just as certain to make them holy as they were chosen to that end.

It was on my mind when I commenced writing to tell you that I like the way you are conducting the SIGNS. I was sorry when Elder Wm. L. Beebe gave up the editorship, but I pray God that he may continue to bless him and keep it still in his mind to write for the columns of the SIGNS. I think all the readers of the SIGNS have great reasons to thank their heavenly Father for the able gift he has given them in the person of Elder F. A. Chick. As he has long been a correspondent in the SIGNS, I think the Old School Baptists know him pretty well. I for one am not afraid that Elder Chick will get on the Arminian horse and run away and mire up in the quicksands of Arminianism. So long as the SIGNS continues to contend for the principles set forth in its prospectus, I believe with all my heart that it is on safe and solid ground. I want to again express my hearty indorsement of the editorial of Elder Wm. L. Beebe published in the SIGNS of January 10th, 1894, on the subject of the atonement. This was especially a good piece to me; also the editorial of the late Elder Gilbert Beebe published in the SIGNS in 1848, and republished in the SIGNS of January 9th, 1895, on the same subject. He most beautifully showed up the difference between Old and New School Baptists on the subject of atonement. And I must not forget to mention Elder Roten Hurst's article on the atonemen, published in the SIGNS of Dec. 19th, 1894. I will say, Write on, brother Hurst, so long as you talk that way on the atonement. This is a glorious theme, which none of us can exhaust. I am personally acquainted with Elder Nathan Hurst, of Springdale, Claiborne County, Tennessee. He is a precious brother and an able minister of the glorious doctrine of election, predestination and special atonement.

I was in Norton, Va., in December last, and I am glad to say that I found there a few that believe and love Old School Baptist doctrine. There is no Primitive Baptist church constituted in East Norton, but I think there ought to be; for if I am a judge there is some good Baptist material in that place. While I was with them, some expressed their desire for a Baptist Church to be constituted there. If such a thing is embraced in the predestinating purpose of him who is too wise to err and too good to be unkind, he will hasten it in his time; and I want to be reconciled to him, who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will.

I want to notice one or two Scriptures that are brought by the Arminians in support of a general atonement. They quote, "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." Yes, I admit that "God so loved the world;" not a world, but the world, &c. Now, this must be a particular or definite world, as there is more than one world spoken of in the holy Scriptures. But if the world that God so loved is Adam and his entire race, then I would ask, Is Esau any part of the world that God so loved? He certainly was of Adam's posterity; and it is written, "Jacob have I loved, but Esau have I hated." I know that it is claimed that God hates sinners until they "close in with offered mercy," and then he loves them. But the god that changes from love to hatred, and from hatred to love, is not the God of Israel. Israel's God has never changed, nor ever will. But he works the necessary change in his people at his own predestinated time, without the aid of any humanly devised means or auxiliaries that the enemies of the cross of Christ have set in motion. But notwithstanding the name Jacob means a supplanter, that is, a sinner, God loved him. For God appeared unto him of old, saying, "I have loved thee with an everlasting love; therefore with loving-kindness have I drawn thee." This is the world that God so loved; yes, all of his chosen people, whether they be Jews or Gentiles. But the advocates of a general atonement tell us, "To say that God loves one and hates another, will make him an unjust God." No difference to us what it makes him, we are not commanded to apologize for God. It is holy writ, "Jacob have I loved, but Esau have I hated." And this was given to us by the inspiration of God, and is profitable. But we do not believe that he is an unjust God in any of his ways, but that he is a just God and a Savior. We hear him say by the prophet, "But thou, Israel, art my servant, Jacob whom I have chosen, the seed of Abraham my friend, thou whom I have taken from the ends of the earth, and called thee from the chief men thereof, and said unto thee, Thou art my servant: I have chosen thee, and not cast thee away."—Isaiah xli. 8, 9. This is the world that God so loved. Then, again he says, "Remember these, O Jacob and Israel; for thou art my servant: I have formed thee; thou art my servant: O Israel, thou shalt not be forgotten of me. I have blotted out, as a thick cloud, thy transgressions, and as a cloud thy sins: return unto me, for I have redeemed thee. Sing, O ye heavens, for the Lord hath done it: shout, ye lower parts of the earth; break forth into singing, ye mountains, O forest, and every tree therein; for the Lord hath redeemed Jacob, and glorified himself in Israel."—Isaiah xliv. 21–23. Nothing is said of redeeming Esau. But notwithstanding the death of Christ on the cross, the advocates of the general atonement heresy make it all to depend on the repentance and faith of the sinner. I wonder what they will do with such cases as Esau's, who found no place of repentance, though he sought it carefully with tears. And I also wonder how they will get along with the dead acting faith. For the faith of God's elect is the fruit of the Spirit. "Now the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, meekness, faith," &c. But the Arminian preaches that the sinner is not as dead as you might suppose, but that he can hear and receive the gospel. Not the gospel of Christ, which Paul was not ashamed of. But sinners are so carnal, sold under sin, that in their vile natures they hear and receive a perversion of the gospel of Christ. Now, the unregenerated sinner is either dead or alive. Arminian, are you willing that the Scriptures shall answer this question? I know that men's wills are so depraved, and their consciences so seared with a hot iron, that they are not willing to bow to a plain "Thus saith the Lord," but wrest the Scriptures from what they say, and put their own constructions on them; for to take them as they stand, comparing spiritual things with spiritual, they begin to see that their craft is in danger, and it is by their craft that they have their wealth. To hold and preach that the sinner is dead, and can do nothing in order to his resurrection or salvation; that it depends alone on God to quicken by his Spirit dead sinners, and that this he will do according to his own sovereign will, without the aid of angels or men; that the atonement was made for the elect of God, and for no one else, and will be specially applied to the elect of God, at God's own predestinated time, and that the whole government is upon his shoulder; I say, to thus hold and preach, the Arminian begins to see that his whole protracted machinery is in danger of being upset, and so the whole Arminian brood will begin to affiliate together, and throw dust in the air, and cry, "Great is Diana of the Ephesians." Yes, they cry out to their goddess Diana, "whom all Asia and the world worshipeth." Yes, the world wondered after the beast, "whose names were not written in the book of life of the Lamb slain, from the foundation of the world." This world that wondered after the beast is not the world that God so loved that he gave his only begotten Son. But this Scripture seems to give us an insight as to whom God gave his Son for. "Husbands, love your wives, even as Christ also loved the church, and gave himself for it," &c. The Old School Baptists are sometimes charged by the Arminians as being "No change Baptists." If they mean by this that we hold that our God never changes, but is always in the same mind and in the same judgment, and having loved his own he loveth them to the end, if that is what they mean by "no change," we plead guilty. But if they mean that we hold that there is no change wrought in elect sinners, we do not plead guilty; but to the contrary, we are the only people that do hold a system of salvation that is sufficient to change a poor, vile sinner. We hold to a special and complete atonement, a finished work, and that it is sufficient and will finally save in the heaven of eternal rest all for whom it was made. It is claimed by some of the work-mongers that Jesus' death on the cross redeemed all the race of man, and placed them back where Adam stood before the fall. Now, if this be true, then men have no need of that repenting and faith acting that they tell us is in order to heaven. Why? Because Adam before the fall was not a sinner; and if all mankind are redeemed; and placed where Adam stood before the fall, repent of what? Be sorry that Jesus has done this? The truth is, Jesus has done no such thing, or at least it is not found on the pages of his book. It is written, "The redeemed of the Lord shall walk there." Not may if they will. Walk where? Not in the garden of Eden, but in an high way; yes, even in the King's highway; and Jesus is the way, the truth and the life. Yes, they shall walk in him, for they are worthy through the shed blood of the blessed Lamb of God. Yes, worthy is the Lamb that was slain; and Jesus and his redeemed people are so closely related that they are worthy in him, and shall equally inherit with Jesus, their elder Brother. If ye be Christ's [not if ye will be Christ's] then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." "Therefore it is of faith [not of works], that it might be by grace, to the end the promise might be sure to all the seed." The seed of promise are those whom Jesus made the atonement for; not the seed of evil-doers.

Brother Beebe, these thoughts are submitted to you. If you see fit to give them a place in our blessed medium of correspondence, the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, please correct all mistakes, and excuse bad spelling and writing. Yours as ever; in christian love and fellowship, in hope of a better world, through the merits of Jesus Christ our Lord,

JAMES C. WALTON.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS:—I send you two letters for publication in the SIGNS, if you think best. They are both from young men, who have not been long members of the church. I feel glad and encouraged to see their minds led, as I believe, by the Spirit into these rich fields of scriptural truth in such an experimental way. Brother Fetter describes many of the peculiar points and features of the pathway of the pilgrims, and those who are travelers in that way will need no other evidence that he has surely bee there. It is a road in which the seems to the traveler a great mar windings and sudden changes, great many very crooked places; and yet it is perfectly straight, a road in which the traveler seems to himse to be often going back, and othei coming again over the same ground and in which, when he is travelin over a particularly pleasant plac he confidently expects to travel t same portion again and again; an yet in truth the traveler never g twice over the same portion, but always goes right on and daily finds new features; a road which often seems to pass through very wild and desolate wilderness places, and through deep darkness; and yet it "is as the shining light that shineth more and more unto the perfect day."

Brother Ker writes of that miracle which has been a very rich subject to me, and I think he has expressed the real figurative meaning of it. From that place where the multitude was fed by the power of God with natural bread, I often think of the two roads by which the same multitude came to Jesus the next day, where he showed them the true bread from heaven, even the doctrine of salvation by grace. One road led through the dark and stormy midnight, and over a heaving sea. The disciples were, and are yet, compelled to take that road. There they learn how vain are all their efforts to deliver themselves from the power of the waves and winds, which are contrary to them; and there Jesus appears to them in his saving power and love, saying, "It is I; be not afraid;" and "immediately they are at the land whither they went;" for Jesus is all they want. He is a place of broad rivers and streams to them. The rest of the multitude wait till daylight, and then go easily and quietly over the sea, hunting for Jesus to give them another good dinner to satisfy their carnal appetite, not with any feeling of reverence and praise because they had seen such a wonderful miracle. When Jesus declared to them the power and sovereignty of God in salvation, and presented himself as the true bread, they did not relish that bread. The truth was, and is yet, a dry and hard crust to them. They said, "This is a hard saying; who can hear it?" But the same blessed doctrine is a sweet morsel to those who have come through dark and stormy midnight sea of trouble, and to whose wondering souls Jesus appeared in his saving power and grace for their help in that time of danger and distress. What Jesus says is just what they want. They cannot think of going anywhere else, for he has the words of eternal life for them.

I left Southampton on Wednesday, the 13th, with my wife and children, for this state. We found very cold weather for the latitude. It has only just become warm as ordinary winter weather here. The "freeze" of Dec. 29th, followed by that of Feb. 8th, have wrought great destruction. The fruit is not only gone, but it seems that the bearing groves are to a great extent killed entirely, and it will probably be some years before there can be a general crop of oranges and lemons here again. Many have lost all they depended upon. But the soil yields quick returns, and they will have to turn their attention to other things beside orange and other sub-tropical fruit. The beneficial effects of the climate are what we come here for, and I am hopeful that, by the blessing of God, my wife will experience them, as she has heretofore. We expect soon to go to De-Land, and to be at Southampton again early in April, if the Lord will.

Your brother in hope,

SILAS H. DURAND.

SOUTHAMPTON, Pa., Jan. 30, 1895.

ELDER S. H. DURAND—VERY DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST:—Several months ago I spent part of one evening talking to you, or rather listening to you talk about those things which I hope interest me far above all other subjects; and you may remember my speaking of a portion of Scripture which had been made very precious and, I thought, plain to me; that is, I saw many beautiful things in it at that time, and during our conversation I told you that I had tried to write a little about it. Then you asked to see it; but I did not have it with me, and I felt glad that I did not, for I felt backward in showing you what one so little and unworthy had undertaken to write about; and in just such a way have I felt almost ever since. But to-day, after I came back from the funeral, a part of it came into my mind again; then I opened the drawer and took the papers out and read what I had written last August upon that portion of Scripture; and if I am not mistaken, I was given a feeling to copy off what I wrote then, and send it to you, and ask you if you would not write more about it for me; for, dear brother, it is indeed precious to me yet; but I cannot express the beautiful things that I have seen in it. It indeed does seem to me yet as it did then, like the pathway of the pilgrims from darkness to light; and as such I headed it then when I wrote. I will copy it.

"And ye shall know that I am the Lord, when I shall bring you into the land of Israel, into the country for the which I lifted up mine hand to give it to your fathers. And there shall ye remember your ways and all your doings, wherein ye have been defiled; and ye shall loathe yourselves in your own sight for all your evils that ye have committed. And ye shall know that I am the Lord, when I have wrought with you for my name's sake, not according to your wicked ways, nor according to your corrupt doings, O ye house of Israel, saith the Lord God."—Ezek. xx. 42–44. The pathway of the pilgrim from darkness to light seems so plain and so wonderful to me in those three verses that I cannot, as it seems, help trying to write a little about it. Though I seldom have but very little liberty in writing my views this has seemed so wonderful to me that I make the attempt, knowing that if I succeed in writing anything it will be through my gracious Savior. In the first clause, "And ye shall know that I am the Lord, when I shall bring you into the land of Israel," how well do all the pilgrims traveling this journey know this when they are brought into the sweet land of Israel, which floweth with milk and honey, not by anything they have done, but by his mercy and grace, which is freely given to them, and of which the Lord speaks, "into the country for the which I lifted up mine hand to give it to your fathers." Yes, and how they were made to rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory, knowing that it was he alone that brought them from nature's darkness into his marvelous light; not by anything they had done, but by his mercy upon them. Seeing their lost and pitiful condition, and taking pity upon them, God sent his own Son into this sin-defiled world to pay their debt by the sacrifice of his own dear Son, who suffered, bled and died that terrible death upon that cruel cross for their redemption, that they might live. God sending him, "his own Son, in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin, condemned sin in the flesh," that he through death might raise them to life from the grave together in his own body, which he sacrificed for them, whom his Father gave him; "That the righteousness of the law might be fulfilled in us, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit."—Romans viii. 3, 4.

"And there shall ye remember your ways, and all your doings, wherein ye have been defiled." O! can we not all see what a vile and sinful state we are in? and do we not remember the terrible situation, and the burden we were under? Surely we were burdened with such a load of sin that we shall never forget it. O! we were made to remember all our wicked ways and doings, when he took us in hand to deal with us; and we were made to cry out for mercy. O! do we not remember? Surely we cannot forget our wicked ways and corrupt doings wherein we were defiled; and as we think of them, and of his merciful goodness and forgiveness to us, we are made to loathe ourselves in our own sight for the evils we have committed.

"And ye shall know that I am the Lord, when I have wrought with you for my name's sake, not according to your wicked ways, nor according to your corrupt doings, O ye house of Israel, saith the Lord God." Does he not bring all his children to know, after he has wrought with them, that he is God, and besides him there is no Savior, and that without him we can do nothing? Were not all the ways that he wrought with us for our good and his glory? It was not according to our wicked ways, nor according to our corrupt doings, but it was according to his great love wherewith he loved us, even when we were dead in sins, that he thus wrought with us. It was for his name's sake, his mercy and grace. O! it was "God, who is rich in mercy, for his great love wherewith he loved us, even when we were dead in sins, hath quickened us together with Christ." "By grace are ye saved, through faith; and that not of yourselves; it is the gift of God." And O! dear brother, I feel it has been freely given to me; yes, to one so unworthy as I feel myself to be; yes, even his great love wherewith he loves all his people, and his forgiveness wherewith he forgave them all their sins and iniquities. I feel that I shall never forget his tender mercy towards me; but yet I am so ungrateful for it all. I feel that I do not praise him as I ought. I many times fear that I do not do as I should do, or feel as I should feel; yet, dear brother, there is one way that I often feel, that is, very unworthy of the least of all the favors that have been bestowed upon me. It indeed does seem that the Lord is graciously good to me; yet at times I am not satisfied with all this. My mind will go wandering into things that I often fear I should not think about. My mind will go wandering and searching into things that I fear are not for me to think about; and I so much of the time also fear that I will do some things that are not for me to do; and then often in such perplexity of mind I feel like crying out, O Satan! God knoweth the way that I take, and the way he desireth me to take. And then, dear brother, at such times I do truly desire to feel that the Lord is leading me. It seems to me that when I feel to be alone, when I cannot feel him leading me, or realize his presence with me, that I am not going in the way that he desireth me to go. Yet I feel sure that he knoweth the way that I take. The darkness of mind and trouble often cause me to feel that I am far from him. Then do I mourn, and desire with a longing desire to be with him; and if such could often be the case, then would I not only feel that "He knoweth the way that I take," but it is the way that he desireth me to take. Then could I sing with joy,

"The Lord my Shepherd is,
I shall be well supplied;
Since he is mine, and I am his,
What shall I want beside?"

Dear brother, the above has been so poorly written, and comes so far short of expressing what I hoped I saw in those verses, that I still hesitate to send it to you; but as it is, I will send it, because I would like you to write some about it for me. But I have made this letter long enough. I hope you will look over all mistakes, and throw the mantle of charity over all my imperfections; for I feel sure that I have made many mistakes, and no doubt there are several things in what I have written that I have not seen the true light of; but as my mind ran so I wrote. May God have all the glory. From a little one in hope,

CASPER G. FETTER.

DELMAR, Del., Feb. 8, 1895.

ELDER S. H. DURAND—MY DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST:—I feel a great desire to talk with you a little concerning a portion of Scripture to be found in the gospel by John, vi. 9–13, hoping you will bear with me in my weakness, for I feel myself very weak in the mysteries of God; but I have a hope that I may grow in grace and knowledge. In reading the Scripture which I have referred to we see that it was a lad who had five barley loaves and two small fishes; a little one; as it is always the little ones who have the blessings and good things given to them. We have no record where the great were ever fed by our Savior; because if great, we need no assistance, but have enough good things of our own. It is always the poor, needy and hungry soul that feels his need of help; and he is always made to know from whence all his blessings flow. They are all treasured in Jesus, and without him the hungry soul receives no food, for surely he has none of his own. The poor servant of God, when hungry, must feel as the disciple did when he said to Jesus, "But what are these among so many?" He must at times feel hungry, and say to Jesus, I have but a crumb to-day, and what is this among so many? But Jesus says, "Make the men sit down." He takes the loaves and fishes, and after giving thanks he distributes to his disciples, and the disciples to them that were set down, and they were filled; and there were twelve baskets filled with the fragments of the five barley loaves and the two small fishes. O what a wonderful and merciful God is he! We see his power and glory in this gospel. I understand this wonderful truth as being a figure of God's word given by him through his servants to his children. The loaves and fishes were given to the disciples by our Savior. Likewise is his gospel given to his servants; otherwise there is no gospel in them. Paul says, "As much as in me is, I am ready to preach the gospel to you." He was speaking of the gospel of Jesus Christ, not the wisdom of men, nor with enticing words, but Jesus Christ and him crucified. When the servant of God feels, "How can I feed my Master's sheep to-day? I have but a crumb, and what is that among so many?" God says, "Feed my sheep." This food is in Jesus, and his hungry servant goes forth, hoping and trusting in his Master for food; and as he gives of his crumb it is increased, and he is not only filled himself, but all the hungry ones are filled, to the nourishment of their souls; and there are many fragments taken up; nothing is lost. I have myself been filled many times, to the comfort and joy of my soul, with a crumb that fell from my Master's table. These crumbs are precious to the hungry soul; how they fill him with joy, and he says, O what precious food this is to my soul! And while he is filled with these good things he has no hunger. All is joy. But our Lord and Master has been pleased in his all-wise providence that one meal of these good things should not be sufficient for his sheep; and as we feel ourselves so well filled, and almost think we will need no more, we are again made to hunger for such food as is given us only through Jesus our Lord, and again we are made to say,

"A crumb of mercy, Lord, I crave, Unworthy to be fed."

Jesus said, "Blessed are ye that hunger now, for ye shall be filled. Blessed are ye that weep now, for ye shall laugh."—Luke vi. 21. There is in this precious promise a glorious hope of comfort to his children when they are made to hunger and weep; for they know he is faithful and just and will fulfill his promise in his own good time. And if the time seems long and weary to us, he never leaves us without hope; and often when we go forth weeping we return rejoicing and singing songs of praise to our God, for he hath again filled us with his love.

I will close, hoping I have not wearied you in reading what has comforted me to write. I hope you and family are well.

Your unworthy brother in hope of life eternal,

H. CLAUDE KER.

WHO IS THE LORD?

THIS question was asked of Moses by Pharaoh, when the message was delivered to him that the Lord demanded that he let Israel go. It is a popular opinion in these days that such a question might very properly have been asked in the days of Pharaoh, but would altogether be out of place now. Because church spires point toward heaven from every village, town and city in all this land, missionaries and evangelists are as numerous as the stars of heaven, Sunday Schools are nurtured and fostered, Bible and Tract Societies are maintained, soul-saving organizations, such as Young Men's Christian Associations, Societies of Christian Endeavor and Epworth Leagues, abound, and now everybody knows the Lord, or, if they do not, there is no excuse for their ignorance. Now, Pharaoh was not ignorant of gods. The gods of the Egyptians he was doubtless well acquainted with, and worshiped in all honesty and sincerity; but he was ignorant of the God of Israel, the God of heaven. So it is at the present day; every one you meet can tell you all about a god, and each one will claim and insist that his god is the true God; but at the same time hardly any two of their gods are alike.

People, too, are sometimes disposed te think that idolatry is a sin of a past age, so far as "christian civilization" extends, because now all sects and denominations, whatever their minor differences may be, all worship the same God. Indeed, this is urged as a plea for liberalism and greater fraternity among the various sects, and it is seriously urged that sectarian differences should be no bar to an exchange of pulpits and the partaking of the Lord's supper together by members of different denominations, because "we all worship the same God." Whereas, in fact, there is more idolatry, that is, idol-worship, in the world now than ever before, because there are more people in it. Now, it is true that people in civilized countries do not make idols of wood, nor stone, nor other earthly material, and fall down and worship them, but they do, in all seriousness, reason out in their minds what kind of a god they would like to serve; they carve him out by their reasoning powers, set him up in the halls of their imagination, and this is the god they serve. Now, if their idea and imagination of God is drawn from the Scriptures, and they attribute to their god just such attributes and perfections as the Bible ascribes to him, it naturally follows that their ideas are correct, and they are worshiping the true God; but if they first build their god, and then take just such Scriptures as suit their idea for proof of their correctness, and are forced to reject, or warp or wrest other Scriptures which do not suit the conception of the god which they have formed, then they are idolaters, and just as

1 PETER IV. 6.

DEAR SIRS:—I would like to have your views on 1 Peter iv. 6, which reads as follows: "For, for this cause was the gospel preached also to them that are dead, that they might be judged according to men in the flesh, but live according to God in the spirit." You know there are many who claim that God so ordained that men should be saved by preaching, and unless men hear preaching there is no way of saving them. Please answer what preaching is for, if it is not to save men. Why did the Savior tell his disciples to go into all the world and teach all nations, if it were not to save them? I hope you will not think me impertinent in asking these questions, as I sincerely desire to understand these things.

Hoping to hear from you soon, I am sincerely yours,

J. E. BUCKNER.

PINE HILL, Texas, Aug. 31, 1894.

REPLY.

IN response to the above letter we desire to submit the following reflections for the consideration of Mr. Buckner and our readers generally; and while we desire to present a few thoughts concerning the text named above, yet our chief design is to treat, as requested, upon the object of gospel preaching. It surely is important not only to know what that gospel is which we are to preach, but also that we understand the object or design of the preaching. We ought not to attribute to preaching what does not belong to it, and neither should we strip it of what does belong to it. In this, as well as in all else that pertains to divine things, the Scriptures must be our rule of faith and practice.

We desire first to briefly consider the text to which our correspondent refers. The first word, "For," claims a moment's attention. It is the connecting link between what precedes and what follows. "For," that is, "because," God is ready to judge the quick and the dead (as he says in the preceding verse), the gospel was "preached also to them that are dead." We do not understand the apostle here to mean by the "dead" those who by reason of the fall are dead in trespasses and sins. We understand him to be speaking of what had taken place before, as recorded in verse nineteen of the third chapter. There the apostle in substance teaches that the blessed Jesus through his servant Noah (who is declared to be a preacher of righteousness) went and preached to the spirits in prison (that is, to those who were in bondage, and felt it to be a prison) during all the one hundred and twenty years in which the ark was being prepared. We understand the apostle in verse six of chapter four to refer right back to what he had said in verse nineteen of the third chapter; but while this seems to us true, we do not doubt that the gospel had been preached at many other times and places. Paul, in Hebrews, referring to the Israelites under Moses, said, "For unto us was the gospel preached, as well as unto them; but the word preached did not profit them, not being mixed with faith in them that heard it." It seems to us that the same general truth is here held forth by Paul that Peter presents in the text. It is as though Peter had said, "The gospel was preached to former generations, who are now dead or passed away from earth." Peter speaks particularly of the days of Noah; while Paul speaks of the time of the exodus, when Israel fell in the wilderness.

It seems to us true that by various means and in various ways the gospel has been preached in all ages. Formerly it was preached dimly, in type and shadow, and then afterward it was set forth in prophecy more directly and plainly; and now in the last days God has spoken to us by his Son; and since the resurrection and ascension of Jesus the gospel has been preached by apostles, and by those ever since who God has called to the work.

"That they might be judged according to men in the flesh, but live according to God in the spirit." This was the effect of gospel preaching then, and it is the effect of gospel preaching now. As the gospel is the same in all ages, so must the effect of its preaching be the same in all ages. We understand the apostle here to speak of those who, when they had heard, received the word preached gladly. The gospel then, as now, when it was received produced certain effects in those who received it. The gospel has a separating power. It separates the precious from the vile. In the fourth verse of this same chapter Peter says that men think it strange that believers will not run to the same excess of riot with themselves, and that because of this separativeness on the part of disciples men speak evil of them; and because of this separating power they are judged and condemned by men who know not the truth. In the second chapter of Luke Simeon is recorded as saying of Jesus, "This child is set for the fall and rising again of many in Israel; and for a sign which shall be spoken against; that the thoughts of many hearts may be revealed." That which was true of the Master must be in his measure true of each disciple. There is something in every one who receives the gospel which acts as a touchstone to reveal the thoughts of men. Men judge them after or according to the flesh. This is because the gospel, when felt in the heart, has power to separate its possessor from his own former life, when he wrought what the apostle calls (verse three) "the will of the Gentiles," and also from all who run after worldly pleasure and vice and folly, and from all those also who trust in themselves that they are righteous. They said of Jesus, "He hath a devil." "He is a gluttonous man, and a wine-bibber, and a friend of publicans and sinners." They called the Master of the house Beelzebub. Jesus himself declared that he came not to send peace on earth, but a sword, and to set men against men, yea, even members of the same household against each other. It seems to us that all these Scriptures set forth in substance the same truth that Peter means to declare in the words, "That they might be judged according to men in the flesh."

Some whose opinion and judgment have great weight with us have thought that this judgment was that which was set up in the heart of each child of God when called by the gospel; that is, that believers were by the inward shining of the true light in their hearts compelled to judge and condemn themselves in the flesh, even while drawn to live according to God in the spirit. We doubt not the truth of the doctrine thus presented. We know by experience, we hope, that this doctrine is true; but still we have not been able to see that this is what Peter means here. It seems to us that he keeps in mind here the consideration of what he has said in the third and fourth verses, viz., that men think strange because christians are separated from them, and will not go with them, and that they speak evil of them on account of it. God will separate his people in such a manner from the world that ungodly men will speak evil of them. His purpose is that it shall be so, just as much as it is his purpose that they shall live according to God in the spirit. The Master said, "Blessed are ye when men shall revile you, and speak all manner of evil against you falsely for my sake." Again, he said, "Woe unto you when all men shall speak well of you!" We have quoted all these Scriptures to show that the purpose of God is to put such a separation between his called and chosen people and the rest of men that they shall be condemned by the world. It is one of the direct results of the setting forth of the gospel that it separates men, and so its followers are judged according to men in the flesh; but in this they may rejoice, because thus did men judge the Savior, and thus have all their brethren in every age of the world been judged.

We will subjoin a few remarks upon the last clause, "But live according to God in the spirit," and then proceed to consider the questions proposed by our correspondent. This sentence involves the great truth that the gospel bears its own proper fruit in the hearts and lives of men. It is the proclamation of the good news of salvation. Paul testified of it after this sort, "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." Notice, it is the power of God unto salvation to the believer, and to no one else. The common teaching of the present day is that it is the power of God through preaching unto the salvation of the unbeliever. Let every one pause and contrast this carefully with what Paul actually does say. Paul uses almost similar language in another place: "It pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe." Contrast this with the common view of the day, that preaching is designed to save men who do not believe by bringing them to believe. We understand that Peter teaches in the sentence upon which we are writing the same thing precisely that Paul teaches in the above quoted Scriptures. The gospel presents Jesus Christ as our all and in all; and as he is presented, the hearts of his people are made to burn within them with love, joy, praise, and all holy desires to follow him. This is to live according to God in the spirit. If these fruits are not found there is no separation from the world, and there exists no reason for the enmity of carnal men. The world will love its own.

In accordance with the request of our correspondent we desire to add some reflections upon the question as to what preaching is for. Our correspondent states very clearly what is the general view of the Arminian or Free-will religious world upon this matter. We do not use these terms, "Arminian" or "Free-will," as terms of reproach at all, but simply to more easily present a generally prevailing sentiment in the religious world. Their claim is that God makes use of preaching, among many other agencies, such as baptism, the Lord's supper, Sunday Schools, parental prayers and teaching, and thousands of various kinds of providences, to save men from eternal damnation. Now, is this true? Does God cause that the gospel should be preached in order to save men from eternal death? This is the question, in substance, proposed by our correspondent.

We are constrained to answer that the preaching of the gospel has no such power in it, and is designed for no such end. First, the term "gospel" would be a misnomer if such were the case. The word "gospel" literally means "the glad tidings." The gospel is a proclamation of something accomplished, of a work done. It is not an offer of something upon the performance of some conditions. If the gospel be simply an offer of salvation upon the condition that we shall do something or believe something by which this salvation may become ours, it is not a gospel of good news; and this is true from the simple reason that we could not perform the condition required to make salvation available. If a man desire salvation, and is told that he may have it if he will do a certain thing, either in believing or working, and he finds that he cannot do that thing, where is there any gospel, any good tidings, in this to him? The true gospel is the gospel of the grace of God. It is a proclamation of the work of God, and not of a work which we must do.

Second. This view of the gospel is a practical denial that men are by nature dead in trespasses and sins. If words have any definite meaning, the Scriptures teach that fallen man is just as dead to God and all heavenly things as are the dead whom we carry to their graves to this world which they have left. As well might the Master at Bethany have stood by the grave of Lazarus, and offered him life upon the condition that he would first turn to God and accept this life, as for men to offer the dead in sin, the dead to God, eternal life if they will first turn to God and accept this life. The true gospel occupies no such ground as this, and is chargeable with no such absurdities. The true gospel proclaims that our God does for sinners dead in sins just what Jesus did for Lazarus when by his word of power he raised him from the dead. "Jesus hath raised him from the dead" was the blessed news that went out from that opened grave. "Jesus hath raised him from the dead" is the still more blessed news that goes out concerning every soul who lives in Zion to-day. "And you hath he quickened [made alive], who were dead in trespasses and sins," is the substance of the true gospel in every age. "The dead are made to live;" "The lost is found." This is the gospel.

Third. This idea of an offered salvation makes small account of the atonement of our Lord Jesus Christ. This conditional gospel, which is not a gospel at all, asserts that the death of Christ actually made nothing certain concerning the salvation of a single soul. It also asserts that the resurrection and life of Jesus, of itself, has no power to work out its own results, but is wholly dependent upon the will of each and every man. As a matter of fact Jesus, according to this theory, when he hung upon the cross, was not and could not be certain that a single one of all the yet future generations of men would ever reap any benefit from his sufferings and death, nor that a single soul of them all would ever join in his praise in the eternal world. Surely a view of the gospel which is chargeable with such results as this cannot be scriptural or true. This conditional gospel declares that the choice of man is of more importance, and has more to do with his salvation, than does the death of Christ. The true gospel leads all who have felt its gracious power to say nothing about creature choice or work, but to sing a new song, saying, "Thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood." What a difference between that gospel which makes the choice of men dead in sins decide the matter of their salvation, and that gospel which declares that it is "according as God hath chosen us!" According to the former all men must perish; for the dead know not anything, neither can they choose anything. According to the latter there is a sure salvation for the chosen of God. Which is the better, the gospel that never can save anybody, or the gospel which presents a finished and sure salvation for the chosen of God? This spurious Arminian gospel has been invented by men who hate the doctrine of God's sovereign election of some of the race of fallen men to salvation. If the gospel of sovereign grace be true indeed, then is election true; and vice versa, if personal election be true, then is the gospel of a finished salvation true. This opens up too broad a field; we cannot enter into it.

But is not the preaching of the gospel designed for salvation? We answer yes, most assuredly so; but what salvation is accomplished by it? Surely it does not wash away sin. The blood of Jesus Christ does that. Surely it does not justify men. Jesus arose for our justification. Surely preaching does not cause the dead to live. That a dead man lives is because Jesus, who is "the life," lives in that man. An apostle even had no power to send the truth which he taught into the hearts of men. Surely he could not do the greater work of sending life into their hearts. We cannot preach to the dead or the deaf; we can only teach the living.

How then does preaching save? What work is it designed to accomplish? In not one single place in the Scriptures is it said that God quickens the dead or makes them live through the preaching of his servants; but the Scriptures declare some things that preaching under the blessing of God does accomplish. Preaching prefers the way of the Lord, gives knowledge of salvation, gives light to them that sit in darkness, and guides our feet in the way of peace.—Luke i. 76–79. It is only to the living that knowledge, light and guidance can be given. Preaching is to open the eyes, to turn men from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God.—Acts xxvi. 18. Surely this cannot apply to the dead, but to the living. By preaching men may be pricked in the heart, and made to cry out, "What shall we do?"—Acts ii. 37. But the living, when pricked in the heart, will cry out, not the dead. "Take heed unto thyself, and unto the doctrine [what thou preachest]; continue in them: for in doing this thou shalt both save thyself, and them that hear thee."—1 Tim. iv. 16. Timothy was already saved, and a called preacher of Jesus Christ; but by taking heed to his ministry he should save himself and his hearers. Manifestly this could not relate to the final glory, but to a present salvation. Right along in line with this is the following, which we will quote, with but a word of comment: "Brethren, if any of you [brethren] do err from the truth, and one convert him; let him know that he which converteth the sinner [manifestly the brother] from the error of his way shall save a soul from death [such death as believers experience if they live after the flesh], and shall hide a multitude of sins."—James v. 19, 20.

Perhaps we have quoted enough to show that preaching of the true gospel is designed to save men, and what salvation it is, and who are saved. It is to save believers from error, from doubt and fear, and from every false way. It is not to save unregenerate men from their state of impenitency and death. The design of gospel preaching was all summed up when the Lord thrice repeated to Peter (the very man who wrote the text at the head of this reply), "Feed my sheep; feed my lambs."

We leave these reflections. We trust that what we have said may prove satisfactory to our correspondent and to others. We have but outlined the subject.

C.

BENEDICT'S HISTORY OF THE BAPTISTS.

3. "THE anti-mission movement must of necessity be a short lived one." Now, this is rather stale, Mr. Benedict. It has been rung in our ears incessantly for many years, and still we live! All your mushroom mission societies, and funds, and agents, and slang, and falsehoods, and ridicule, cannot kill us. We do not wonder that you think our skins are thick, and hard to make an impression on, for you and your party have labored long and hard to rob us of them; but the God of predestination, whom we revere and adore, and whom ye despise and blaspheme, has hitherto defeated your murderous projects, and because our exalted Redeemer lives we also live. Yes, Mr. Benedict, your stereotyped pages will have ample time to scatter far and wide your misrepresentations of the Old School Baptists before the anti-mission movement will be arrested, and your stereotype plates will perish before the Old School Baptists can become extinct. But we pass to the fourth reason assigned.

4. Mortification that any Baptists should oppose the missionary operations, and their kindred objects of benevolence. Mortified that all who are called Baptists have not apostatized and gone after the beast. Mortified that God has reserved a remnant according to the election of grace, from bowing to this modern Baal. But to a more dreadful consternation God has predestined all who have pleasure in unrighteousness and believe not the truth.

5. In the statement of the fifth reason assigned by Mr. Benedict for saying as little as possible about these disputes among the Baptists, &c., his conscience has become very sensitive, and he cannot, even as a matter of courtesy, apply the terms Old School or Primitive Baptists to us without adding "so called," or some such expression. This is somewhat strange, from two considerations; first, from the fact that the name Old School was first applied to us by the advocates of missionism, with whom Mr. Benedict is identified; and second, from the fact that he has himself, in the second item of this very tirade of slang against us, recorded, on his veracity as a historian, that the cause of the division was that "New men and new measures have run faster than the old travelers were accustomed to go, and they have been disturbed at being left behind." Can it be hard to perceive, in the division of the missionary and anti-missionary Baptists, which party have run so fast into new measures, with new men, &c., and who are left behind? In his closing remarks on the history of the Baptists of New York (page 580), he says,

> "We must bear in mind that all were then, (the early history of the Baptists of New York) set down as Arminians who did not come up to the highest point of hyper-Calvinism. Our old ministers in this region, half a century since, would have denounced as unsound in the faith the great mass of our community of the present day, both in Europe and America, Fuller and Hall among the rest."

Fifty years ago the old preachers of the Baptists order were such as had occupied the field fifty years prior to that time, covering at least a period of one whole century, and these are all put down as hyper-Calvinistic, the very appellation which Benedict gives the Old School Baptists of the present day; and from his own account of them they differed nothing from the Old School Baptists. If it be said they did not oppose mission societies, we reply, it was for the very good reason there were none to oppose. The "new men," of whom Benedict speaks, were not then born, their new measures were not at that time invented, consequently neither had commenced their pedestrian pranks of running away from the old travelers.

To us there seems a direct providence of God in restraining the wrath of our enemies whenever they have attempted to misrepresent us on the pages of history. With all their care and craft they have incautiously leaked out some truth which in succeeding generations betrayed them. Mr. Benedict cannot wrong his conscience so much as to allow that we are the Old Baptists, we look so unlike them to him; and yet he himself bears testimony that the Baptists of fifty or one hundred years ago were precisely what he now calls the Old School Baptists, hyper-Calvinists, having no fellowship for Fullerism or Hallism; and to clinch the nail, he avers that the great mass of the new men and new measure kind of Baptists would have been denounced as unsound in the faith, and as Arminian, by the Old Baptists of fifty years ago. Well, verily, if all his reasons had been as weighty as this fifth, he would not have required as many as he has manufactured. But he says he has seen so much of the missionary spirit in the old Anabaptists, Waldenses, and other ancient sects, &c., in the early, middle and latter ages, &c. What a discerner of spirits, to see so much of the missionary spirit, where in practice there was nothing to indicate its existence. They were engaged in publishing the gospel abroad whereever God sent them; the same is true of the Old School Baptists of the present day; and without any disposition to boast, we challenge Mr. Benedict and all his fraternity to produce in all their ranks any who travel more, preach more, or labor more for the propagation of the gospel of Christ, without relying at all upon humanly contrived mission boards and mission funds, than do the Old School Baptists of the present age. And yet he represents us falsely as preaching up predestination, and doing nothing. That the Old School Baptists preach up the Bible doctrine of predestination is equally as true as it is that the New School Baptists hate and revile that doctrine; but if they do nothing, why do the New School find so much fault with them? And why does Benedict contradict his own statement? He charges them with preaching, and in the same sentence with doing nothing. If it is doing nothing to preach, why do the New School exact so high wages for preaching as to require mission societies and mission funds to pay them for doing that kind of nothing? Or is it so much harder to preach Arminianism than truth, that the preaching of one is labor requiring pay, and the preaching of the other is nothing? Will Mr. Benedict tell us wherein the Old School Baptists differ either in doctrine or practice from those Old Baptists of fifty and a hundred years ago who he sneeringly calls hyper-Calvinists or thick skinned Antinomians?

The farther he goes down into the regions of antiquity the more fully, he says, he finds the character of all whom he calls our (new school) sentimental brethren developed. Will he tell us of the existence of a missionary society comprising president, directors, secretaries, executive boards, and members admitted for a stipulated sum of money, among the Baptists of one hundred years ago? Will he find anything of the kind in the primitive or apostolic age? If he will give us the example of the apostles and the primitive church, we will ask him to go no farther into the remote regions of antiquity. Their example shall be our rule, and when that shall be forthcoming our objection to missionary speculation shall cease.

6. In this item he makes a bold declaration of what we know to be without the slightest foundation in truth. He says, "I have ascertained for a certainty that in most of the associational communities which are ranked on the anti-mission side there are members not a few who are entirely dissatisfied with the restrictions which are imposed upon them by a few of their zealous leaders. Their sympathies are with their effort brethren, they would be glad to have matters otherwise in the churches in which they are located, and from which they are not prepared to separate, and are sorry that so much is said and written about a difficulty which time only can heal." We will make no farther remarks on the above extract at this time than to pronounce it unqualifiedly false, and challenge D. Benedict or any other man living to prove that it is not false in every particular.

7. To give to his flourish as many heads as belong to the beast, to which in other respects it bears a striking resemblance, Mr Benedict has added a seventhly to his catalogue; and, but for the gravity of the subject, the reader would smile to read the charge of illiberality, anti-republicanism, and anti-baptism hurled at the Old School Baptists of the United States. Coming as it does from a people so liberal that they will neither preach nor pray for the people without pay, so republican that they are constantly praying the legislatures of the several States and of the general government to grant them exclusive chartered rights, and forming themselves into mammoth monied monopolies under various pretensions; and in their assumption of power, meeting in national convocation to assess the people, and send forth their decrees, commanding their satellites to levy and collect in such quantity and for such purposes as they dictate. These pinks of republicanism can charge the Old Baptists, who have never asked favors from human governments, whose forms of government in all are perfectly equal and republican, with being anti-republican, &c. If our course be, as he charges, "frightfully oppressive," we ask, who besides the missionists have been frightened at our course? And what have we done to terrify the mission folks so much? Reader, can you guess? Why we are so frightfully oppressive and anti-republican that we have refused, absolutely refused, to leave the apostolic order of the church of God, to go into the missionary operations of the day with the New School, and so desperately oppressive that we will contribute nothing to pay others for doing what we cannot conscientiously do ourselves. And what is regarded as still worse than all, we cannot fellowship those who depart from the faith, and give heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils. In short, we have no fellowship with the beast, nor his image, nor his mark, nor with the number of his name. Is this not enough to provoke the wrath and call down on us the bitterest denunciations of all the wire-workers and poppet dancers of modern missionism?

much so as though they bowed daily to stocks of wood or stone.

Again, the Scriptures are a unit; that is, they always teach one and the selfsame thing. They do not teach Tom that the Lord is gold, and teach Dick that the Lord is silver, and teach Harry that the Lord is brass, but they testify to every one the selfsame thing; consequently when two persons meet who have different ideas and opinions as to the attributes and perfections of God, both may be wrong, but one of them is wrong to a certainty, and the one which is wrong is worshiping a false god just as much as though he had it carved out of wood, and standing on the centre-table of his parlor, and bowed down to it morning, noon and night. For instance, the Methodists tell us that their god "is without body or parts;" that many for whom Christ died will be lost, and that the sacrifice of him only made salvation possible. The Old School Presbyterians tell a different story, and describe an altogether different god. The Catholics paint a picture of a god entirely different from either; and so on through the denominations, till we have described to us hundreds of different kinds of gods. Now, the idea of these different denominations all fraternizing and rubbing noses together, and preaching together, and eating the Lord's Supper together, because they all worship the same god, is preposterous. They may do so if they like, because they think the god of one denomination is entitled to as much respect as the god of another; but to do so because they all worship the same god, is not true in fact.

But, "who is the Lord?" Well, "our Rock is not as their rock, our enemies themselves being judges." In the first place, our God is Wisdom. All other gods are gods of wisdom. Mark the difference; our God is not a God of wisdom, that is, very wise; but our God is Wisdom; that is, He knows it all. Past, present, future, good, evil, all are known to him, and were known to him before ever the mountains were brought forth. Before the earth was, without form and void, and darkness covered the face of the deep, before the Spirit of God moved upon the waters, or the morning stars sang together, or the sons of God shouted for joy, then God knew; knew just as much as he knows today; knew just as much as he will ever know; for he is Wisdom, and there is nothing hid from his eyes. Consequently God is never surprised, it matters not what may happen, for he knew it before it occurred. The sin in the garden of Eden was no surprise to him; but knowing all about it before he created Adam or formed Eve, he provided a remedy for his people whom he foreknew before the disease of sin was manifested; for Christ stood as a Lamb slain from the foundation of the world. Likewise all the sins, and each sin, of each of his children, never surprised him. Our sins surprise our friends, they even surprise us who commit them; but not so with God. He knew them and saw them before the foundation of the world; and though they may be new to us, yet they are old with God, and are part of that load which he bore in his own body on the tree. In the second place, our God is Power. Not a god of power, that is, very strong, but he is Power; that is he possesses it all. Some persons have an idea that the Lord is a God of power, and Satan is a devil of power, and that God and the devil are opposing forces, who are engaged in war with each other. They have a hope that God Almighty will some day whip the fight, but that we can aid and assist him wonderfully in his combat with his adversary, the devil; consequently they are out, as they say, "helping God Almighty to save souls," and are exhorting others to do likewise. Well, that is not "Our Rock." The devil is just as much subject to our God as the infant of an hour; he has no power but what our God gives him. The devil fain would have destroyed Job's property, but he was powerless to do so till God gave him the power. He would have smitten Job with boils, but he had no power to do so till God gave it to him; he would have taken Job's life, but God has never given him power so to do. The legion of devils, when commanded to come out of the Gadarene, desired to enter a herd of swine, but they had no power to do so till it was given them by our Lord.

Some persons, too, have the idea that whatever good betides them is of the Lord, but the ill that befalls them is from the devil. Our God has told his people that "in the world ye shall have tribulation;" and he who predestinated and foretold their "tribulation," also predestinated the things which produce it.

On a certain occasion Jesus commanded his disciples to get into a ship and sail across a sea. He went up into a mountain to pray, and a terrific storm swept the sea that night. Skilfully the disciples handled their little ship on the tempest-swept sea of Galilee. But just before day the billow-tossed disciples beheld the vision of a man calmly walking in the storm on the surface of the surging billows. The universal verdict was that it was a spirit, and their hearts were appalled; but the voice of a friend, of Jesus, came out of the darkness and gloom and made their hearts rejoice with the music of, "It is I, be not afraid." Long before that occasion, and ever since, God has been sending his people out on rough and stormy seas, and the child of grace who cannot see God in the storm, as well as in the sunshine, "is blind and cannot see afar off."

We do not know what use God has for evil, for in this life we "see as through a glass darkly;" but in the great hereafter, when "we shall see face to face," and "know even as we are known," it may be that the things which we esteemed as our worst afflictions may prove to be the very largest blessing that our God ever bestowed upon us while tabernacling in the flesh.

One of the most comprehensive of words is the little word all. It includes everything of the subject mentioned. Our God assures us that he works all things after the counsel of his own will, and that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose. So then the child of grace can say, in the midst of the storm, in the midst of the gloom, when overcome by temptation, when tasting the bitterness of defeat, with just as much assurance as though seated on the summit of Pisgah, "It is the Lord;" and, "The cup which my Father giveth me, shall I not drink it?" For "All things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose."

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES:—Not long since I read a communication in the SIGNS from my dear brother, Elder J. Beeman, now of Ketterman, Mo., in which he alludes to the belief and disbelief of certain ideas in the west by Old School Baptists. He correctly represents many of them as disbelieving in the predestination of all things. He then says, "Another error I find prevalent is what is called common salvation." I have had the pleasure of meeting with brother Beeman; and while our acquaintance is not of long duration, and we have not had much conversation with each other, yet I presume we would agree that predestination is not limited. As vile as I know myself to be, I sometimes take pleasure in the contemplation of the doctrine. Yes, I sometimes rejoice that there is a God who controls all things by his almighty power; who works, and none can hinder. Some prefer the term "suffer" to "predestinate." I can see no cause for objection to the word "suffer," as used in that sense, as it is a Scripture term, and to my mind conveys the very same idea. How could the term be used, as it is in the Scriptures, unless it conveyed the sense of full power and control? We say we suffered our children to do thus and so, believing we had the power to have prevented them; but we never say that we suffer them to die, for we have no power to prevent this.

Now, in regard to the salvation alluded to above, and considered an error by our brother, I apprehend no serious consequences by calling his attention to this subject, for I do so with assurance in my own mind that he will pardon me for the liberty I have taken, and receive it in the same spirit that I intend it. I feel that it may appear presumptuous on my part, nevertheless I will venture to call his attention to a few passages of Scripture which to my mind teach a salvation not everlasting or eternal. I am not going to contend particularly for the words "common salvation" as a distinguishing expression, for there are other terms equally appropriate and scriptural. I see in his communication that he uses the words "temporal salvation." I have no objection to this expression, as it appears quite expressive of the distinction I wish to try to point to; for we read, "The things which are seen are temporal, but the things which are not seen are eternal." It is of the salvation which is in time, and can be seen, to which we want to briefly allude.

Paul tells his beloved son Timothy, "beloved son in the faith," things that should come to pass in the latter times. "Some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils." It is noticeable that the plural expression is used here. We, "narrow-minded," "old fogy," "hard shell," "whatever-is-to-be-will-be" people, are content with one doctrine, and would be satisfied to do without a devil, but cannot. After calling Timothy's attention to these things he says, "If thou put the brethren in remembrance of these things, thou shalt be a good minister of Jesus Christ." "Take heed unto thyself, and unto the doctrine [not doctrines]; continue in them: for in doing this thou shalt both save thyself and them that hear thee." Here is a salvation to consider which can be seen, is in time, is the result of taking heed, &c., to what Paul had been admonishing them. He was not guilty of shunning to declare the counsel of God; not whole counsel, as some quote it, for I question whether any mortal could do this. I rather think Paul should be understood to say that he had not shunned to declare to all his brethren the counsel of God. It is to be regretted that some of our preachers do not observe this point that Paul was making. They think it better to shun sometimes, fearing the displeasure of man.

But I am digressing. Peter exhorts them that had been pricked in their hearts to save themselves from that untoward generation. The brethren at Philippi were told to work out their own salvation with fear and trembling; and others, that believed, were saved by the foolishness of preaching. All these, to my mind, refer to a temporal or time salvation, and, in short, is the result of obedience of God's children. To these this language is also addressed, "By grace are ye saved, through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God: not of works, lest any man should boast." This is a salvation which I have called everlasting or eternal, and is not that time salvation of which I have in a very poor way tried to make a distinction. I hope my brother will see the matter that I have just hinted at. If there is anything unscriptural in distinguishing and contending for both I am not aware of it. If I have understood our brethren in this portion of the country, this is their belief in regard to the salvations.

In conclusion I will say to the managers of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES that this is left for their disposal. I shall not attempt any apologies, other than to say that I have had to write under disadvantages and interruptions, and also with a heavy heart.

If not deceived, your brother in hope,

M. B. WEEDON.

EDITORIAL NOTICES.

PLEASE BE SURE

IN sending remittances for renewals of subscriptions to give us the same name that the paper is already coming to. If the party is married, and the paper is coming to the wife's name, and we receive a remittance to renew the subscription, and the husband's name is given, we have no means of knowing that it is meant for the subscription in the wife's name; consequently the husband's name is entered on our list, and the paper sent to both parties. Or if the paper is coming in the husband's name, and the renewal is sent in the wife's name, the same thing is likely to occur. It is a good plan to inclose in the letter one of the little pink slips containing the name, taken either from the margin of the paper or from the wrapper in which the paper comes.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

DIED—At her home near Turners, Henry Co., Ky., sister Isabel Ransdell, in the 60th year of her age.

Sister Ransdell was born in Virginia, Jan. 3d, 1835, and moved in early childhood with her parents to Trimble Co., Ky. She was united in marriage with brother B. F. Ransdell in August, 1863. To them were born five sons and four daughters. She was left a widow for a number of years, with the care and responsibility of raising the family, which she did well. She had been a sufferer and much afflicted for the last ten years or more of her life. She was baptized in the fellowship of the Sulphur Fork Church in 1881, by the late Elder N. A. Humston, where she lived a faithful member in the cause she had espoused. She loved the truth as it is in Jesus, and was an attentive listener when health admitted of her attendance at the meetings. During her protracted illness she exhibited that grace and faith which only can be manifest in those who feel and know grace abounding to the chief of sinners. It was my privilege to visit her during the last days of her stay here. She freely expressed her confidence in him whom she had trusted, that whatever he did was right, whether she lived or died. She sweetly and peacefully fell asleep in Jesus, leaving behind unmistakable evidence to the dear, sorrowing children, brethren and friends that all was well.

Her funeral was very largely attended on the 19th, when the unworthy writer tried to preach Jesus and the resurrection; after which her body was laid in the grave, to await the full consummation of her hope. May the Lord enable all her dear children to give such unmistakable evidence of their divine acceptance in the Beloved as did their dear mother, is my desire.

NEW CASTLE, Ky.

OUR dear brother, Joseph Hillyard, died Jan. 21st, 1895, at his residence in Waverly, Morgan Co., Ill., in the 73d year of his age.

His disease was paralysis. He received his first stroke some four years ago at the place of his church membership, while conducting the services in the absence of the pastor, which he often did. To sum up his life in few words, he was a man highly favored of the Lord, as many can testify. He received a hope fifty-two years ago, which he honored by following his Master in the ordinances of his house. While we could speak of many good deeds and charitable acts performed by our departed brother, we feel to give the praise to God, by whom he was so highly favored. All that could be done by earthly friends proved of no avail, and at the time above mentioned he passed peacefully away, surrounded by his relatives and friends, companion and children, who would have sacrificed anything that would have added to his comfort.

Short services were held at his house at his request, and also at the place of his church membership, conducted by Elders J. A. Conlee and C. C. Purvines.

DIED—On Jan. 31st, 1895, Mrs. Elvira Tuthill, of Waverly, N. Y.

Mrs. Tuthill was born in Orange Co., N. Y., August 29th, 1818. Her father's name was Micah Horton, and her mother's maiden name was Dolly Sprague. She was the second child of a family of ten. She was married to Jacob G. Tuthill in October, 1837. To them were born four daughters and two sons. They moved from Orange Co. to Tioga Co., N. Y., in 1846. Mr. Tuthill died in 1868; and the eldest son, M. Horton Tuthill, died in 1885. Mrs. Tuthill experienced a hope in Christ about the year 1852, and attended Old Baptist meetings ever afterward when not providentially hindered. She loved God's people, and at times rejoiced greatly in the truth as it is in Jesus. About twenty years ago she related her experience to the Old School Baptist Church at Waverly, N. Y., and was received as a candidate for baptism; but her feeling of unworthiness was her plea for not being baptized, and she never was baptized. The writer was personally acquainted with her for twenty years and upward, and has had many pleasant visits with her upon spiritual things. She was well established in the doctrine of Christ, and therefore had no fellowship for the doctrines and commandments of men. She is gone to her eternal home, to rest with Jesus and praise his name forever. Her disease was pneumonia, from which she suffered very much for several days, and finally fell asleep to awake no more on earth. She leaves four daughters, one son and one sister to mourn their loss of an affectionate and kind mother and sister. She was highly esteemed by all who knew her. May her dear children and sister and all mourning friends realize God's sustaining grace to strengthen and support them in their great loss, which is her eternal gain. Her children kindly ministered to her wants, and all that could be done to relieve her sufferings was done. The writer officiated at her funeral on Monday following her death, a large congregation of neighbors and friends being present; after which the remains were buried in the Waverly cemetery.

Mrs. Tuthill's mother was a member of the Old School Baptist Church of Brookfield, Orange Co., N. Y.

WAVERLY, Pa.

Mrs. Mary Stout, daughter of John and Eliza Blackburn, was born in Springfield Township, Hamilton Co., Ohio, May 26th, 1826, and died at her home in Colerain Township, on Thursday morning, Jan. 3d, 1895, at eleven o'clock, aged 68 years, 7 months and 8 days.

She was united in marriage to Andrew J. Stout on Jan. 19th, 1858. Their marriage union was blessed with five children, four sons and one daughter. Three sons and the dear mother have passed over the river to the house not built with hands, leaving her husband, son John and daughter Ida and their families, one brother, James, who lives in Dayton, and two sisters, Mrs. E. B. Rogers and Miss Kate Blackburn, both of Hamilton, to join them soon in the heavenly home, where there is no sorrow. Never was the saying, "Death loves a shining mark," more strikingly exemplified than in her case. She was kind, retiring in her disposition, and esteemed and loved by all. In her home her presence always brought sunshine, and around the hearthstone was joy. For a year her health was in a precarious condition, caused by that dreaded disease, dropsy, and her loved ones had grave apprehensions in regard to the results. Everything was done by kind and loving friends that could be done to keep the monster at bay, but all to no purpose. The family, friends and physician sought to bring back the color to her cheek and prolong her stay; but death could not be drawn from the field, and the result we see in the casket before us. For the past few weeks she had been failing rapidly; but whenever any one entered her room she always smiled and seemed so cheerful that when the angel of death came the labored breathing grew shorter and fainter; no struggle, no groan, and then all was quiet.

The mother's love is indeed the golden cord which binds youth to age. Others may love you when she has passed away; but never again, never while time is yours, shall the love of any but God be to you as that of your mother. A mother's grave is indeed a sacred spot. It may be retired from the noise of business, and unnoticed by strangers; but to our hearts how dear! And so, though the clouds which receive her out of our sight cast a shadow over our lives, we will ever remember that it but lifts her to the glory of her Father's house, and to the crown of everlasting life amid the angel throng that circles the throne of God.

"Asleep in Jesus! peaceful rest!
Whose waking is supremely blest!
No fear, no woe, shall dim that hour
Which manifests the Savior's power."

The funeral services took place at the house on Sunday, at 10:30 a. m., Elder John G. Eubanks officiating; after which her mortal remains were placed in the vault at Bevis, Ohio, until Saturday, Jan. 19th, when her body was laid by the side of her three children in the Mill Creek cemetery.

DEAR BRETHREN:—The foregoing was handed to me by Mr. Starling, son-in-law of the deceased. As I have been visiting the heart-stricken family for four years, I will add to the above that I never knew a more amiable lady than Mrs. Stout. She talked to me of her hope in the mercy of God, and expressed a desire to unite with the church; but she was called home before she did so. May the Lord bless her dear husband in his lonely hours, and sustain the children under this sore affliction, is the prayer of one who wishes them well.

PICTORIAL HISTORY

OF THE

UNITED STATES.

By James D. McCabe.

This work is no dry mass of details—no bombastic effort to inflame the national pride, but a vivid and brilliant narrative of the events of our history, from the discovery of the American Continent down to the present time. It gives a most interesting account of the Indians of North America, from the time of the coming of the white men. The voyages of Columbus and explorations and discoveries of the different nations of Europe are related with graphic power. Every step of our colonial history is traced with patient fidelity, and the sources of those noble and, we trust, enduring institutions, which have made our country free and great, are shown with remarkable clearness. Then follows a clear and succinct account of our great Struggle for Independence, and the establishment of the Federal Union—the events of our career from the close of the Revolution to the administration of Harrison.

The work is printed from plain, new type, on fine calendered paper, and comprised in one octavo volume of 960 pages. It is splendidly embellished with nearly 500 fine engravings, embracing battles and other historical scenes, portraits of distinguished men, views of our principal cities, &c., &c.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE NEW BIRTH.

MR. B. L. BEEBE—MY DEAR BROTHER:—I send you an article from my pen on the new birth, which I would like for you to publish in the SIGNS if you deem it proper. When I sent the manuscript to Elder Potter I neglected placing my signature. That is the reason my name did not appear with the article.

I have just returned from wintering in Florida, and am quite sensitive to our rough March winds, but hope to get through my change without serious trouble.

My churches are in peace, and there are some manifestations of love for truth among the people. You have been in my thoughts much of late. I feel like I want to see you. Nothing would do me more good than a letter from you. Give my kindest regards and christian salutation to sister Beebe, brother and sister Jenkins, and all the friends. Elder and sister Jenkins are especially dear to me.

Yours in all things,

H. M. CURRY.

WHEN Jesus said, "Except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God," he gave a name to a hitherto nameless fact. The doctrine of the new birth as announced by Christ and developed in the New Testament Scriptures was a novel doctrine at that age of the world, and remains a novelty yet. The fact of the new birth, as exemplified in the experience of God's people, is as old and as universal as man himself; but the doctrine had never been named before. The new birth is not stated in the Old Testament, although the effects of it are clearly manifest in the experience of patriarchs, prophets, priests and kings, and many in the humbler walks of life, among both Jews and Gentiles. It is not mentioned in any religious writings, either Jewish or Pagan, before the New Testament. The ancient epics of India, the ethical codes of China, the complicated systems of Egypt, the fanciful philosophy and poetry of Greece, the gorgeous ceremonials and mystic rituals of ancient Mexico and Peru, are all silent upon this doctrine. It came from the lips of Jesus a novelty, an original doctrine, a new name for a hitherto nameless truth, a golden key to unlock the rich mines of Christian experience so long closed by human ignorance, so completely covered by ceremonials, and so deeply buried in tradition, a lamp by which the wonderful works of God in the children of men was to be more clearly understood, the exceeding greatness of his power to usward more fully known, and the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the saints more fully beheld.

The novelty of the doctrine is one of the clearest proofs of the divinity of the great Teacher who was the first to announce it. The most gifted prophet, the most highly favored priest, the great law giver, Moses, nor even the favorite Gabriel, who stands in the presence of God, had ever been blessed to discover this truth or honored with the commission to announce it to men. Thus the novelty of the doctrine gives weight and prominence to its IMPORT.

"Ye must be born again" is the initial statement of the doctrine of Christ, and constitutes the fundamental difference between Christianity and all religions. Take away the necessity of the new birth and Christianity will take its place on the common plane of all other religions, and will be robbed of that which alone entitles it to the distinction of divinity, and will be degraded to a mere system of ethics, a naked code of morals, or to empty, meaningless and vain ceremonials. The fundamental idea in all other religions is man's ability to reform himself into newness of life, based upon the alike false idea of the universal fatherhood of God. The last of these, the universal fatherhood of God, gave birth to the World's Congress of Religions at Chicago; and the first, man's ability to save himself, formed the basis of every system presented, whether by Buddhist, or Brahmin, Mohammedan or Morman, Catholic or Protestant. Hence all of them are loud in their cry for reformation; and the only difference to be found among them is the name and manner in which the end is to be reached.

The superficial notion of religion is deeply fastened upon all men; but it seems that modern Protestantism has a double portion of it. The Jews, in the time of Christ, were extremely zealous for vain traditions, empty formality and hypocritical appearance. They thought that drinking wine and eating with unwashed hands poluted and defiled a man. But the Savior condemned their foolish traditions by the simple axiom, "It is not that that goeth into a man that defileth him, but that that cometh out." It is from the heart that evil thoughts, thefts, murders, and all other wickedness, proceed. Evil thoughts are not in the wine a man drinks. Bad conduct does not come from the food taken with unwashed hands. A man steals because he is a thief; a man kills because he is a murderer, or lies because he is a liar. The theft is in the heart before the hand is put forth to steal; the murder is in the heart before the hand is stained with blood; the lie is in the heart before it rises to the tongue or is coined by the lips. The tree bears fruit after its kind. Cultivating the tree can never change the kind of fruit; the only effects of cultivation are seen in the quality and quantity of the fruit. Can a thorn tree ever be made to produce grapes, or a thistle to bring forth figs? Men are carried away with the notion that through religious instruction, training and favorable opportunities, children or men are made Christians; that men enter the kingdom of God through teaching and moral suasion. Agrippa had this idea when he said to Paul, "Almost thou persuadest me to be a christian," and Nicodemus betrayed the same weakness when he said to Christ, "We know that thou art a teacher come from God." But the answer of Jesus covered the whole ground, when he said, "Except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God." This is as much as to say, "Why, Nicodemus, this is not a mere matter of teaching; there is something vastly deeper; a man must be born again." A man does not have to be born again in order to be religious; he may become infatuated with religion, and be a zealous devotee to creed and ritual; he may be taught to observe most rigidly forms and ceremonies, and to subject himself to the strictest discipline; to mutilate his body and deprive himself of all earthly comforts; to yield perpetual obedience to priestcraft; to pray three times a day and give tithes of all he possesses; take up the sword in defense of his religion, or lay down his life in testimony of his zeal; but except he be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God. A man must be born again in order to receive Christ, or embrace his doctrine in truth and reality. The import of the doctrine leads us to consider its NECESSITY.

"Ye must be born again" is not a mere dogma of theology, but a necessity, arising from deep fundamental, basal principles of biology; hence we shall first consider the biological necessity. "That which is born of the flesh is flesh." The term flesh, here, is generic, and is used in the Scriptures to designate man as a whole, and comprehends him with all his attributes, all his powers, parts and capacities, including body, soul and spirit in their mysterious combination in constituting the human personality. It is equivalent to saying, That which is born of man is man.

Men by nature are dead in trespasses and sins. This death is not merely a moral or ethical condition, but a condition extending far beyond the moral or ethical sphere. It is a biological condition. Take this illustration: Science divides this world into two great kingdoms, the organic and inorganic, or in equivalent terms, the dead and the living. The stone belongs to the inorganic or dead kingdom, the plant to the organic or living kingdom. The difference between the stone and the plant is a biological difference. Again, the organic kingdom manifests different orders of life; animal life and vegetable life.

The difference between the animal and the tree is a biological difference. They belong to different orders of life. Now, just as the animal life is of a higher order than vegetable life, so Christ life is of a higher order than Adamic or natural life. And just as the tree, although alive in its own order, is dead to the presence and voice of the bird that sings among its branches, so is man, although alive to all within his environment, dead to the things of the Spirit of God. This truth, although most persistently disputed, most vehemently opposed and wickedly ridiculed, by professors of christianity, is legibly and indelibly written in the stones and in the trees, in the earth and in the sky, and in the experience of millions of human hearts. Man, then, is cut off from the kingdom of God by the deep, mysterious, impassible gulf that separates the non-living from the living, the organic from the inorganic, the natural from the spiritual. As man enters this world by a birth, just so he enters the kingdom of God by a birth; and as his birth into this world was contingent upon things entirely outside of himself, so his birth into the kingdom of God is contingent upon things entirely outside of himself. This birth is "not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God;" so says the Scripture. Except a man be born he cannot see the world, is a fact which none can deny, and which none would ever think of denying. But how few of all who have read it acquiesce so readily in the conclusive truth of its analogous expression, "Except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God."

We turn now from the biological to the experimental necessity of this birth. Children may be most carefully trained from their youth in the name of Christ and in the precepts of the Scripture and religious observances, but except they be born again they have no more knowledge of Christ than if they had never heard his name.

This birth is the beginning of christian experience, and all that is ever seen, felt, heard and known of grace in this world, or glory in the world to come, is but the development of the life imparted in this birth. All knowledge of Christ is vital or experimental knowledge; this includes all knowledge of the need of Christ. I once thought that the time when the child of grace received his hope and experienced deliverance was when he was born again; but I have come to a different conclusion. Who can remember when he was born naturally? Let the mind run back to childhood, to our earliest recollections, even to the very borders of infancy; but our birth was prior to that. All things fade from our memory, and we are lost in a sea of oblivion, and still the time of our birth is not reached. We grew into the domain of memory, passing through a long stage of which we know nothing at all. Think back over your experience; you came to many Ebenezers, to many mile stones and memorable places; you approach the time when hope came to you, a helpless sinner; but the birth was before this. You pass on to the time when you first realized that you were a sinner indeed; but the birth was before this, and this was only the result of it. How long before you felt the first movements of soul you were born I cannot tell, but it was before. Those who place this birth upon conditions to be complied with by those receiving it, have never seen the necessity of it. If a man can repent of his sins and believe in Jesus before he is born again, then the Scriptures are not true. This notion of religion puts the cart before the horse, puts the fruit before the tree, the effect for the cause. Without this birth sin would never be hated and holiness would never be loved, poverty of spirit would never be felt, and the riches of Christ would never be prized; none would ever hunger and thirst after righteousness, and the bread which came down from heaven would never be desired; the fountain of living waters would never be sought, there would be none to love the truth, and faith would not be found on the earth; the wilderness would never blossom as the rose, and the parched ground would never become a pool; the name of God would be but an empty sound, and his existence a mere matter of speculation, and all worship would be but dry formality and empty mockery.

EFFECTS.

The person effected by the new birth is the Adamic sinner. This needs no argument, for there is no other personality on earth, and personalities in heaven do not need it. The immediate effects make up what is called christian experience, and belong to time; the ultimate effect is to awake in the likeness of Christ, and is realized in the resurrection. The effects are evidences to us that we have been born again. Let us now examine ourselves, and prove ourselves, and see whether we are indeed what we profess to be, or only graceless hypocrites, carnal professors, who have never known the love of Christ or the power of his resurrection. The most momentous question ever propounded to an exercised heart is, Have I been born again? And when we begin to examine ourselves, the evidence that the carnal mind seeks is not found within us; but we are full of things that our traditional notions of religion record against us. The carnal mind is not eligible either to sit as judge or to testify as witness in the trial of a christian, because it is enmity against God, and cannot be subject to his law.

One of the best evidences that any one has ever had that he is born again is that he is personally concerned about his own case. The man who thinks that salvation is by works is never concerned about the new birth; but the heart upon which the import and necessity of being born again have been impressed, is bound to be personally concerned in the matter; but the import and necessity of the birth are only communicated through the birth itself. Let us begin the examination with a question. Do you know that you are a christian? Every exercised heart answers at once, I do not know that I am a christian. Do you know that you are a sinner? O yes, I know that I am a sinner. Do you know that you are saved? O no, I do not know that I am saved. Do you know how a sinner is saved? O yes; a sinner must be saved by grace. How did you find that out? Everybody does not know that. If you know that salvation is by grace, rest assured that you are saved, for that knowledge comes only by experience. None of the princes of this world know that. Human wisdom has never made that discovery. Those who have this knowledge are in possession of that hidden wisdom which God before the world ordained to our glory.

The knowledge of sin is one of the brightest evidences that you will ever have that you have passed from death unto life. Permanent, incorrigible, inherent sinfulness has always been acknowledged by holy men. David said, "I am a worm, and no man," Isaiah confessed that he was a man of unclean lips, and Paul exclaimed, "O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" There was a time in the experience of many of us, perhaps, when we thought that we would never know sin nor sorrow again, but that we would live in the comfortable peace of that sweet deliverance all the rest of our days. But when we began to feel again the power of sin in our members, we sank into a sea of doubts and fears, and disappointment bordering on despair. We thought that one who is born again is free from the motions of sin; and when we found that sin still remained in us, we concluded that we were still in the gall of bitterness and the bonds of iniquity. But we have learned many lessons since that time, and are still learning. We have learned that in the flesh we are ignorant, sinful creatures, no better now than at the first dawn of our hope. I think these lines of the poet express the experience of us all,

"I asked the Lord that I might grow
In faith and love and every grace;
Might more of his salvation know,
And seek more earnestly his face.

"I hoped that in some favored hour
At once he'd answer my request,
And by his love's constraining power
Subdue my sins and give me rest.

"Instead of this he made me feel
The hidden evil of my heart,
And let the angry powers of hell
Assault my soul in every part.

"Yea, more, with his own hand he seemed Intent to aggravate my woe,
Crossed all the fair designs I schemed,
Blasted my gourds and laid me low.

"Lord, why is this? I tremblingly cried;
Wilt thou pursue thy worm to death?
'Tis in this way, the Lord replied,
I answer prayer for grace and faith.

"These inward trials I employ,
From self and pride to set thee free,
And break thy schemes of earthly joy,
That thou may'st seek thine all in me."

Men in nature have most strenuously assailed the doctrine of total, innate, inherent depravity, and have long devised and proclaimed their lying, deceptive and seductive argument against it; but God will make his people know the truthfulness of it by a daily experience of their own sinfulness. A vital knowledge of sin puts to flight every traditional theory of human ability or Adamic purity, and fastens upon the conscience a pungent conviction that man is a sinner, from the cradle to the grave, with no part or capacity reserved. It is not the christian's burden that he only sins by word and deed, but his thoughts are unclean, and above all he discovers lurking like a serpent in the deep recesses of his heart the love of sinful things. This almost drives him to despair, and makes him hate his own life, and trust nothing but the blood and righteousness of the adorable Redeemer.

How prone we are to take comfort in the thoughts of our own hearts, or the state of our own feelings, and to look within ourselves for something good to build our hope upon. How often do we say, "O! if I could only see myself as I desire to see myself I would have some hope then that I am a christian." If you could always see yourself just as you would like to be, would you ever deny yourself? And if you should never deny yourself could you ever be the disciple of Jesus? Did he not say, "If any man will be my disciple let him deny himself?" When Jesus says, "Let him deny himself," denial of self must follow. God said, "Let there be light," and light was. He also said, "Let the earth bring forth," and it was so. Have you not yet been able to translate those feelings of unworthiness that fill your soul, and stand like an impassible wall, an immovable mountain, between you and your ideal christian character that your own imagination conjures up and places before you? They are translated into this sentence, "Let him deny himself." This is the first qualification to follow Christ.

The tempter comes with another plea that we are not the children of God. This plea is our weakness. How often do we consider this suggestion of the tempter and put it on file as evidence againt ourselves. Christ put the tempter to flight by quoting what is written; so allow me to bring the same weapon to our defense; it is written, "Except ye be converted and become as a little child ye shall in no wise enter the kingdom of heaven." What did the Savior mean by this expression? I heard preachers say, in my early exercise of mind, that little children are innocent, pure and sinless, and that we must get like them or we can never be saved. I thought this was true, and set about most diligently to attain unto this child-like purity of character, but failed, utterly failed, failed as completely as Hermes in his search for the philosopher's stone, or Ponce de Leon for the fountain of youth. The more I tried it the more hopeless it seemed to grow, and yet I thought it must be so. O what absurd things will men not undertake in the name of religion! If all the absurdities that have been taught and practiced in the name of religion could be collected and placed before men's eyes, the exhibit would shock the world, and would doubtless surpass in quantity and quality all other follies, whims, caprices and wickedness that the world has ever known. Suppose for one moment that little children do receive the kingdom of heaven upon the ground of their purity of character, and we must become as they, where is hope to be found for any who have grown out of infantile purity? How can a man ever be a child again? We might repeat here the question of Nicodemus. "How can a man be born when he is old. Can he enter the second time into his mother's womb and be born?" Suppose a man could be born when he is old, would he not come forth again in the likeness of his parents? A man might be made a child again, ten thousand times, if such a thing were possible, and still he would never be raised above the nature and likeness of his parents. A corruptible seed can never bring forth an incorrupt object. So if a man should be born again of the same father and mother, would he not come forth the same natural man, and grow up the same blind, alienated, wicked sinner? It is not only necessary to have another birth, but a birth proceeding from an entirely different source, a birth from above, from an incorruptible seed, a birth of water and the Spirit, of that water which is above the firmament. The Savior did not mean that the little child is sinless, and we must become such. Sinless persons have no need of Christ, and he has no blood for them. What is the characteristic of the little child that forms the basis of the Savior's teaching here? It is the helplessness, the weakness of the child, its inability to provide for itself. The child is not only unable to provide for itself, but unable to minister to itself what others may provide for it. Food and drink and rainment might be abundantly provided and placed in the closest proximity to the child, and it left to itself, and it would be none the better off. It would perish as certainly and as speedily as it would if nothing had been provided. The man or woman who has experienced this helplessness in a spiritual sense has become as a little child, or, in other words, has been born again; and the very weakness which he so much deplores, and from which he would daily flee, is the sure and abiding evidence that God is his Father. Our blindness is often urged as an evidence against us, but God says he will bring the blind by a way they knew not, and in strange paths will he lead them. God leads his people as those who are blind, and cannot find their own way. If your travels have been in entirely different ways from what you yourself marked out, if you experience daily the opposite of your own planning, if you are led as one blind in unknown ways, then you are led of the Lord; and "as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God."

Belief in Jesus is an effect of the new birth, and consequently an evidence of it. "Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ, is born of God."—1 John v. 1. What a comprehensive, decisive and conclusive statement! This birth raises men to a knowledge of Christ, and imparts to them the evidence that he is the Christ. The doctrine that men have the capacity to believe in Jesus, and are called upon to believe in him as a condition of salvation, is as fabulous, as illusive and as foreign to the gospel of the grace of God as the grotesque mythologies of the ancient Northmen, the fanciful poetry of the ancient Greeks, or the nonsensical nursery rhymes of Mother Goose. Belief is not a volition of will. We do not have to revert to dusty libraries of philosophy to prove this statement, but to our own minds. Each man knows more about himself than the wisest philosopher knows about him. Belief is a condition of mind produced by evidence; it is an effect, and evidence is the cause. Every day we hear reports that we do not want to believe, and seek in every direction a refuge from the conviction of the truth of the report. Every power of the mind is aroused against it; but facts come, evidence conquers, and we reluctantly, unwillingly sink into a belief of the very thing we tried so hard not to believe. Upon the other hand, how often have we exerted every power of will to believe a certain thing to be true; but notwithstanding our ardent desire and willing efforts we at last had to yield, to lack of evidence or to contrary evidence, and believe against our will to the contrary. Believing in Jesus is brought about by the new birth. It is only by the Holy Ghost that any man can say that Jesus is the Christ, and the man who believes in the only begotten Son may rest assured that he is born of God. "He that hath the Son hath life." It is he that hath the Son that believes on him.

Faith, which is the substance of the christian's hope, is the evidence upon which we believe; and this faith is born of God, is the fruit of the Spirit, and is found alone in the man who has been born again. Believing in Jesus, repentance and faith, are new covenant blessings themselves, instead of being conditions of blessings, and are the fruit of the new birth instead of conditions upon which it is brought about.

The ultimate effect of the new birth is to awake in the likeness of Christ. This birth constitutes the man who receives it a son of God, and consequently an heir of God, and guarantees to him a resurrection in the likeness of Christ, and consequently an eternal and enduring satisfaction. The development of Christ's character is a process begun, carried on and consummated by the inherent, sovereign, unfailing working of Christ-life in the soul. It is an evolution, but a grander evolution than ever Darwin dreamed of; not the process that transforms a monkey into a man, but an evolution that conforms a wretched, wicked, hopeless, helpless sinner into the image of Jesus, the immaculate Son of God. This process is first the blade, then the stalk, and after that the full corn in the ear. The blade and the stalk may appear here, but the full corn in the ear must appear hereafter. Inasmuch as we have born the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly.

This birth originates from above, and is directed alone by sovereign, unconditional election. It comes by virtue of life given us in Christ before the foundation of the world, according as the saints were chosen in him in the ages eternal. We could never be born from above without a life above. This heavenly, eternal, incorruptible Christ-life is implanted in the subjects of God's electing grace, by the sovereign, irresistible, unconditional working of the Holy Spirit. It is imparted in God's own time, whether it be in the babe upon its mother's breast, as was the case with David, or from its very birth, as with John the Baptist, or in the declining days of old age and decrepitude, as may be the case with many; but whether in the babe upon its mother's breast, or in the man in the prime of life, or in old age upon the verge of the grave, the issues are all the same and alike certain in results. All who receive it shall awake in the likeness of Christ.

"NO MAN can come to me, except the Father which hath sent me draw him: and I will raise him up at the last day."—John vi. 44.

These words are upon my mind, and I shall have to write out such thoughts as come to me upon them before I can rid my mind of the text. There are hundreds, yes, no doubt thousands of good and well-meaning people who contradict this plain and positive declaration of the Savior. They tell the people that any man or woman can come to Christ if they will; but Jesus says they cannot, "except the Father which hath sent me draw him." There are some who say that all men and women are drawn of the Father. If this be true, then all men and women will be raised up at the last day. Let us read the following verse (45), "It is written in the prophets, And they shall be all taught of God." All; who are they? All whom the Father draws to Christ, and none others. Then I understand that all whom the Father draws are taught of God, and are sure to come to Christ. Let us read the remainder of this forty-fifth verse: "Every man therefore that hath heard, and hath learned of the Father, cometh unto me." I want to ask a question. What did Jesus come into the world to do? Let Jesus answer: "For I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me."—John vi. 38. In the next verse he tells us, "And this is the Father's will which hath sent me, that of all which he hath given me I should lose nothing, but should raise it up again at the last day." O what great comfort this is to every believer in Jesus! Drawn unto Jesus of the Father; taught of God! Jesus has said, "I will raise him up at the last day." Has Jesus the power to do this? Let us see what he says. "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth."—Matt. xxviii. 18. The apostle Paul declared also that "There is no power but of God."—Rom. xiii. 1. Pilate could neither release Jesus nor give sentence to crucify him without the power were given him from above.—John xix. 11. Jesus designates those given him of the Father as sheep. "My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me: and I give unto them eternal life; and they shall never perish, neither shall any pluck them out of my hand. My Father, which gave them me, is greater than all; and none is able to pluck them out of my Father's hand."—John x. 27–29. I want to call attention here to the quotation that I have made of the twenty-eighth and twenty-ninth verses. I have quoted it verbatim as it reads in my Bible, while nearly all the Bibles or Testaments have the word "man" in these two verses, thus, "any man" in the twenty-eighth verse, and in the twenty-ninth verse the word "none" is made to read "no man." But, says one, this addition of the word "man" does not change the meaning of the Scripture any. I think it does, as it limits the power to man. As it reads in my Bible, "Neither shall any pluck them out of my hand," and "None is able to pluck them out of my Father's hand." This includes man, Satan, or the devil, and all the combined powers of unrighteousness, and agrees with the apostle's declaration when he says, "For I am persuaded that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord."—Rom. viii. 38, 39. Well might the apostle ask, "Who shall be able to separate us from the love of Christ?" Having a Savior who has all power in heaven and in earth, every one who hath heard and learned of the Father is as sure of that inheritance incorruptible and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for them, as that God is seated upon the throne of his own majesty and power.

Let us now turn to the seventeenth chapter of John, and read the prayer of Jesus to the Father, just before he was betrayed into the hands of wicked men to be crucified. "These words spake Jesus, and lifted up his eyes to heaven, and said, Father, the hour is come; glorify thy Son, that thy Son also may glorify thee." The Lord by the mouth of the prophet inquires, "Can a woman forget her sucking child, that she should not have compassion? Yea, they may forget, yet will I not forget thee." The Lord has promised his believing children that he will be with them in all their trouble, and that he will not forsake them. Then is it not reasonable to say that God the Father would hear and grant this last prayer of his own Son, who came into the world not to do his own will, but the will of the Father which sent him? I think so, inasmuch as the Son had already glorified his Father, as he says, "I have glorified thee on the

THE SABBATH.

SOME further questions having been proposed to us with regard to the Sabbath, upon which we presented some thoughts in No. 6, current volume of the SIGNS, it may be well for us to suggest in a brief manner one or two more considerations.

The question has been proposed, Does not the statement in Genesis ii. 3, "And God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it; because that in it he had rested from all his work which God created and made," show that the Sabbath day is still to be observed by men? Even though the Mosaic law concerning it be not binding upon us, still are we not under obligations to keep it because it was blessed and sanctified in the creation?

We in reply would call attention to the fact that there is not the slightest evidence that it was observed or commanded to be observed by any portion of mankind until after Israel came out of the house of their bondage in Egypt. In Exodus xvi. 23–29 is the next reference to a Sabbath, and then there is no injunction for any people to observe it save the Jews. The next reference is in Exodus xx.; and there, and in all other references, it is limited to the Jewish people.

We would also call attention to the additional truth that from Adam to Moses there were also sacrifices made; but this does not prove that sacrifices are still to be observed, or that they ever were commanded of any people save the Jews. The same is true of the Sabbath.

The only references in the New Testament to the creation Sabbath are the following. In John v. 17 Jesus said, "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work." He said this of the Sabbath, which the Jews had just accused him of breaking because he had healed the impotent man upon that day. The Jews were always accusing him of breaking the Sabbath. If language has any force, the Savior's words here mean that the Jewish idea of the Sabbath could have no place in his kingdom nor in the gospel dispensation. Observers of a seventh day Sabbath have relapsed into Judaism.

The only other place in the New Testament in which it is sure that the creation Sabbath is referred to is in Hebrews iv., and there it is clear that the apostle teaches believers that to them it was but a type of the rest which they have in Christ from the deeds of the law. Having the substance, they have no further need of the shadow.

Still farther, no rules are ever given by the apostles for the observance of the Sabbath day, its violation is never denounced by them, and Sabbath-breakers are never included in any list of offenders. Colossians ii. 16 seems to contain a decided argument against regarding the day by christians. The same is true of Romans xiv. 5, 6, and also of Galatians iv. 10, 11.

While the first day of the week is more than once referred to as one of religious observance, it is never once identified with the Sabbath, nor are any prohibitions issued in connection with the first day; while the omission of the Sabbath from the list of things to be observed by Gentile believers (Acts xv. 29) shows that they (the Gentiles) were regarded by the apostles as being free from all obligation in this matter.

Still another question has been asked us in regard to this matter. Why do the apostles allude to the first day if there is nothing sacred in regard to the day? We would say in reply to the above question that besides the places in the four gospels where the first day of the week is spoken of in connection with the resurrection of our Savior, there are but two places in which the first day of the week is spoken of by the apostles. One is in Acts xx. 7, and the other is in 1 Corinthians xvi. 2. In the first text the disciples are recorded as having come together to break bread upon that day; and in the second text believers are enjoined by Paul to lay by in store their liberality, as God had prospered them, upon the first day. There is not the slightest reference in either place to any peculiar sacredness attached to the day; and still farther, the Sabbatic idea (or the thought of rest from toil) is not hinted at. So far as these texts are concerned, they favor the idea of labor rather than of rest; and if there be any symbolism at all attached to the idea of the rising of the Savior upon the first day of the week, it is that of rising from rest to a life of activity and labor.

If anything is clear from the teachings of the apostles, it is clear, first, that for christians the seventh day Sabbath is abrogated, and no longer claims their regard. Second, that the first day does not take the place of the seventh day; and the idea of rest does not belong at all to the first day, but rather life, activity, labor and tirelessness.

We can see a very good reason why christians would meet for worship, and to attend to the affairs of the kingdom of Christ, upon the first day of the week during the first fifty years after the crucifixion, because the Jews were still under the law of the Jews as a nation, and therefore they must still observe the Jewish law of the Sabbath; but the thought of substituting the first day for the abrogated seventh day never once seems to have occurred to them. Certainly the apostles never enjoined a Sabbath day of any sort upon the churches. This was reserved, as Cardinal Gibbons has said, for the Romish Church in later years.

As christians were in the first place driven by circumstances to meet upon the first day of the week for worship, it was but natural that they should afterward continue the custom; but there never was any apostolic admonition requiring it. So far as all but convenience was concerned, any other day would have done as well as the first. There is no proof that the early disciples or apostles laid any stress at all upon meeting for worship upon the first day upon the ground that Jesus arose upon that day. In after years, when superstition abounded over vital godliness, and the Romish Church held the reins of government, laws concerning the first day began to be enacted; and the custom has continued to the present time, even in countries where Rome is not in power.

In our former editorial upon this matter we referred to a very able article upon this subject printed in the SIGNS during last year. It may be found in No. 43 of the SIGNS, printed October 24th. We submit these further reflections to our readers, and to those whose questions we have tried to answer.

C.

WROUGHT RIGHTEOUSNESS AND BROUGHT RIGHTEOUSNESS.

WE had indulged in a fond but ill-founded hope that our views on the distinction between the righteousness of God as an inherent and eternal perfection of Jehovah, and the righteousness of Christ's active and passive obedience to the law of God in doing and suffering what the law required of him as the Head and legal representative of his people, were finally understood by our readers; but such is not the case. In all candor we must acknowledge ourselves as much puzzled to comprehend wherein our brethren differ from us on the subject, as they seem to be in regard to what we have said of wrought and brought righteousness. It seems to be regarded by some of our brethren (for we have received many letters on the subject) as a new theory originated by us to show off how profoundly deep we could be in matters hidden from ordinary minds. Nothing was farther from our intention than the starting of a new theme of debate. When on our visit in Kentucky last fall we incidentally alluded to a very common expression, viz., that Christ had by his obedience to the law of God wrought out and brought in righteousness for his people, &c. In remarking on the subject at Versailles, Ky., we attempted to make a distinction between the righteousness brought in by Christ, and the righteousness of what he had done and suffered while here in the flesh. The former we considered as inherently and eternally identified with his divine nature as the Son of God and Head of the church, and that by which the church is made the righteousness of God in him; the latter consisting in his perfect and complete obedience to that law which he was made under when he was made of a woman, to redeem them that were under the law. Our remarks were without premeditation, perfectly incidental in our discourse. When brother J. W. Dudley wrote us on the subject we supposed that he had perhaps misapprehended our meaning, and we attempted to explain; but our effort to explain only seemed to mantle our views in still greater obscurity.

The remarks which we made on the subject in a former number, to which brother Wright alludes, viz., that the wrought righteousness of our Redeemer cleared his people from the condemnation of the law, and in that respect placed them where they stood in Adam before the fall, we in a subsequent number qualified, as bearing only in point of legal condemnation. We were as free from the condemnation and curse of the law by the wrought righteousness of Christ, as though we had not sinned; but not like Adam, liable to fall from that state of justification; because Christ had by one offering perfected forever them that are sanctified; but still a deliverance from the condemnation of the law and contamination of sin could not prepare us for heaven or spiritual things. It was in illustration of this point we alluded to our state in Adam before the fall; for his standing free from guilt, and consequently from condemnation, did not make him a spiritual man. Brother Wright in this agrees with us; for he says that the redeemed, must be made alive before they can receive the things of the Spirit. Now, if our brother will go one step farther, and say that in being so made alive the life of God is imparted to us, that that which is born of the Spirit is spirit, and that the Spirit that quickens dead sinners is God, he will fully admit all that we do or have ever thought of contending for on this subject, and his irresoluble questions will cease to perplex.

But let us examine these questions. The first of them is thought to oppose the idea that the obedience and sacrifice of Christ has so far delivered from guilt as to make the people of God as pure, upright, harmless and free from sin as Adam was before he fell. The question in brother Wright's mind is, Could Adam have died in that state? We reply, we think he could not. Neither do we believe that God's redeemed people, brought into that state of purity, can die. But we wish it understood that the redemption of Christ has not purified the carnal nature of his children, so as to deliver from that corporal death which is to dissolve our connection with carnal nature; but these bodies of the saints which are made temples of the Holy Ghost shall by that Spirit which dwells in them be raised up from the dead, and then shall they be as pure as though they never had been defiled with sin; and in that state they can no more die than Adam could without sin.

The second question arising with our brother is, Could the stupendous plan of redemption have reached man if he had continued in primeval rectitude? We have no idea that God had provided any second or third way of saving his people. Had the way which he ordained to bring them to glory have failed, we cannot estimate what must have been the consequence. But we feel abundantly convinced that the whole history and condition of man was fully known to God before he gave to him his being. But if man had not sinned, we do not see how he could have stood in need of redemption. Truly he could not die, but in his native innocence there was nothing to be redeemed from; in that state he could enjoy all that Adam did enjoy, but no more. That state would not capacitate him for spiritual enjoyments.

Brother Wright has not found the terms, "wrought out righteousness," in the Bible. This is a good and sufficient reason for doubting the propriety of using them; but he will recollect we did not coin them; and it was our objection to the manner in which they are sometimes used that has led to all this discussion. The terms "wrought righteousness," and "to bring in everlasting righteousness," are in the Bible; the former in Heb. xi. 23, and the latter in Daniel ix. 24.

The passage in Hebrews speaks of those who through faith subdued kingdoms and wrought righteousness; and it gives us a clear and distinct idea of what constitutes wrought or worked righteousness, inasmuch as it is said in reference to what was performed by the children of God. So when we hear our brethren prefix the qualifying term, "wrought," to the righteousness of Christ, we understand them to restrict their meaning to the righteousness of what he did and suffered when here in the flesh. We do believe that he has wrought a righteousness for his people, by which he has delivered them from wrath; but we cannot consent to the theory that his wrought righteousness is all that belongs to him. The angel Gabriel told Daniel, "Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people, and upon the holy city, to finish transgression, and to make an end of sins, and to make reconciliation for iniquity, and to bring in everlasting righteousness, and to seal up the vision and prophecy, and to anoint the Most Holy." That Gabriel spake of the advent and mediatorial work of Christ, we think none will dispute; and that he has finished transgression, made an end of sin, and made reconciliation for iniquity by his active and passive obedience, is equally clear and indisputable; what remains then is to determine whether he brought in or only worked out an everlasting righteousness. Will those who take the position that all the righteousness that he is said to have brought in was only that legal righteousness which the law required as a just equivalent for the sins of his people, tell us in what sense it is said that she has received of the Lord's hand double for all her sins? We understand the terms as used by the angel Gabriel to mean the same as where the accomplishment of the saying of Gabriel is accorded in these words, "Who hath abolished death, and brought life and immortality to light." What he wrought, abolished death; "For the love of Christ constraineth us, because we thus judge, that if one died for all, then were all dead."

Death was not abolished until Jesus had wrought his obedience to the precepts and suffered the penalty of the law; then in his triumphant resurrection he brought life and immortality to light; but through his obedience and death he abolished death, and destroyed him that had the power of death, &c.; yet his resurrection did not originate life and immortality; it only brought them to light, made them manifest; for both life and immortality did exist with Christ in God, and were given us in Christ before the world began. When we read, "This is the name whereby he shall be called, The Lord our righteousness," &c., we understand this to be his name; not merely the name of what he had done; and when it is said in the passage quoted by brother Wright. He is of God made unto us Wisdom, and Righteousness, &c., it cannot mean that he is, of his active and passive obedience, or by what he has done and suffered in incarnation, made thus to us; for he is of God made all things to us. But when it is expressly said that "He hath made him to be sin for us, who knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him," we think there can be no doubt that the righteousness of God is intended.

After all, the point may be settled thus. Had or has Christ any inherent, eternal righteousness as God, or as the mediatorial Head of his church, except that which the law and justice required and he rendered by his obedience and death? Or did he possess a righteousness with the Father before all worlds? If so, was that eternal righteousness included in the gift when God gave him to be Head over all things to the church, which is his body, the fullness of him that filleth all in all? And if it was, did he bring it with him, or leave it behind him, when he came in the flesh, and when we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth; and do we receive of it when of his fullness all we receive, and grace for grace? We say to brother Wright, and to all our brethren, examine this subject; try it by the unerring standard of truth, and if it will not bear that test away with it; but if it be sustained by the Scriptures, and what the Spirit teaches, hold it fast. It is worthy of consideration. May the Lord deliver us from all corruption and error, and lead us into all truth, for his name's sake.

POSTAL MONEY ORDERS.

BY a recent arrangement of the post-office department nearly every post-office in the United States is now a money order office for at least five dollars; and as it costs but three cents additional to obtain an order of not more than two dollars and fifty cents, or five cents for one not more than five dollars, or eight cents for one not more than ten dollars, and so on in proportion to amount of order, we request that all remittances be sent us by post-office money-order. You simply give the money you wish to send to your postmaster, and he will give you a money-order for that amount. You will inclose the order which he gives you in your letter to us; and if it should be lost in the mail you can get another one from your postmaster without additional charge. Please be sure to have the order made payable at Middletown, N. Y., and never at New York City, as that place is nearly a hundred miles from our place, and it puts us to considerable extra trouble and expense to get them cashed at the New York City office.

As will be seen from the above, an order for five dollars or less can be obtained cheaper than registering a letter, while an order not exceeding ten dollars costs but the same amount; and remitting by money order is a much safer way than sending by registered letter, as the postal department is not responsible for loss of registered letters, but money orders can be duplicated.

EXTRAORDINARY OFFER.

WE still continue our offer to send two new subscribers, and credit an old subscriber one year, for three dollars; but we cannot afford to send to one new subscriber, and credit an old subscriber one year, for two dollars. Please do not ask us to do it.

Any one who is already a subscriber is authorized to act as agent for us; and we will send the paper for the first year to any new subscribers they may send us at one dollar each, and they are entitled to retain the other dollar for their commission.

Under no circumstances can new subscribers send to us direct and get the paper for themselves for less than the regular rates.

earth: I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do;" which work was the salvation of his people. "I pray for them [his disciples]: I pray not for the world, but for them which thou hast given me; for they are thine." "Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word." Here we see in this last prayer (that we have any record of) that Jesus prayed unto his Father only for such as the Father had given him. If Jesus has given a single precept, or God the Father a single commandment, that his believing children should pray for the eternal salvation of the world, or any not named in the Father's will, I am unable to find it in the Scriptures of divine truth. We are commanded to love our enemies, do good to them that hate us, and pray for them which despitefully use and persecute us.—Matt. v. 44.

The apostle Paul exhorted Timothy "that, first of all, supplications, prayers, intercessions, and giving of thanks, be made for all men; for kings, and all that are in authority; [what for? that they might inherit eternal life? O no; but] that we may lead a quiet and peaceable life in all godliness and honesty. For this is good and acceptable in the sight of God our Savior; who will have all men [all whom the Father gave to the Son] to be saved, and to come unto the knowledge of the truth." These are the same characters that are taught of God, and have heard and learned of the Father, that should thus pray. If the apostle Paul had been like many of the professed servants of God in this day of boasted reform, he no doubt would have prayed long and labored hard to convert the sorcerer Elymas.—Acts xiii. 8. But instead of praying for him, "then Saul (who also is called Paul), filled with the Holy Ghost, set his eyes on him, and said, O full of all subtilty and all mischief, thou child of the devil, thou enemy of all righteousness, wilt thou not cease to pervert the right ways of the Lord?" Elymas would indeed have been a good subject for many who are going about in this our day professing to be agents of the Lord, to help him convert sinners; but Paul, instead of praying for Elymas, pronounced the curse that should befall him.

Dear editors, when I wrote my last letter to you, and which appeared in the SIGNS, I partly promised you and the readers of the SIGNS that I would not be likely to trouble you or them with any more of my imperfect thoughts. As I said when I took up my pen to write the foregoing, the text was bearing upon my mind so that I felt I must write out some of my thoughts to find relief of mind. I suppose I am the most peculiar or singular creature that you ever knew. A text of Scripture seems to fasten itself in my mind, and I cannot get rid of it until I have written some of my thoughts. Many times after writing I have committed what I had written to the flames; yet, strange as it may seem, when no mortal eye ever read a word of it, a peace of mind would follow. Some years ago I met with a few brethren and sisters, and told them of this fact, when a sister remarked that perhaps I had burned some of my best letters, and that the next one I concluded to burn not to do it, but send it to her. When I began writing I had no thought as to what I should do with this when written. After I had written the fourth sheet, and part of the fifth, the subject left me as suddenly as it came to me. I laid it away for several days, but the subject is gone from me; and upon reviewing it I find that I have left out so many words, and have so many disconnected thoughts in it, that if I had not written the text first no one could tell what I was writing about. My thought was to destroy it, and say it was a waste of time and paper, when it came to my mind what that dear sister had said to me about burning my letters; so I have concluded to send what I have written to you, and if you deem it worthy a place in the dear old SIGNS OF THE TIMES you can publish it. If the good Lord puts it into my mind to write, and I am guided by his Spirit to so write that even but one of the Lord's dear children is comforted, it belongs unto them. I have many friends and relatives who are readers of the SIGNS whom I never expect to meet again in this time world. Many of them hear from me only when I write through the SIGNS. It may be of some interest at least to some of them to know that I am still trying to keep the old landmarks in view.

If the dear brethren and sisters who read the SIGNS could but know my surroundings, how that I am cut off, as it were, from meeting and conversing with those who love the Lord out of a pure heart fervently, I know they would bear with and pity me. It is seldom that a Sunday passes but I think of the many dear saints who are gathering together for the purpose of worshiping God on that day, and listening to Zion's faithful watchmen proclaim the eternal truth of our God. While I am as one alone, in a desolate wilderness, I believe our God to be a God of purpose, and that he had a purpose in casting my lot in this part of the earth, and that I cannot go hence until that purpose is accomplished. Often do I try to inquire of the Lord if I will yet be permitted to pass out, and it once more be my happy privilege to meet with his dear children "where prayer was wont to be made," as in days past and gone. When I inquire of the Lord, Why am I in my declining days cut off from the blessed privilege of meeting with his children? it seems the only response is, "Even so, Father; for so it seemeth good in thy sight."

I know full well that the end of my appointed time upon earth is near. Pray for me, that my faith fail me not, is the desire of one who, if saved, will be saved through grace, and grace alone. Farewell.

GOOD HOPE, D. C., Jan. 21, 1895.

ELDER F. A. CHICK—DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST:—As nothing else seems quite so satisfying, so soul-cheering, as communion with the saints, and having no one to speak to, I often long to write to some one of the dear kindred in Christ. I much enjoyed your last kind letter, and have particularly desired to write to you since reading your two excellent letters in the Monitor. But words fail to express the satisfaction and comfort I have derived from them. They seem to have been written in so much tender and christian feeling. I have read them both a number of times; and while both are comforting and strengthening, I have especially been comforted by the one headed "communion of soul." I have read it again and again through blinding tears; for your tender words reach my aching heart, and you tell my own feelings so much better than I could tell them myself that I am made to rejoice. I have often been comforted by reading the sweet psalms of David. The thought occurs to my mind that if this sweet psalmist, who feared God and walked humbly before him, one so favored of the Lord, could be thus cast down and tempted, is it a wonder that a poor, weak, insignificant and wholly unworthy one like myself should be, who am so destitute of anything that is good or Christlike? While it is my greatest desire to be like him, the greatest wonder to me is that I am ever permitted, like David, to rise upon the wings of faith above these things. O yes, I know something of the experience of this sweet psalmist, both in his grief and in his joy. He is a companion to every poor, tried one. He had, it seems, many enemies, and often prayed for their destruction, that they might receive according to their wicked deeds. I do not question that he was right in this, for no doubt he wanted them destroyed, not merely because they were his enemies, but because they were enemies of his dear Savior. Do not we, too, sometimes feel like asking the Lord to break down, destroy everything that dishonors his name? Yet our prayers are not answered in this, perhaps, because we are not asking according to his divine will and purpose. It would seem best to us, but our ways are not his ways; and as high as the heavens are above the earth, so are his ways above our ways. I remember one time I was rashly censuring and reproving myself because I could not feel a disposition to pray for the eternal salvation of the whole world, when these words of the dear Savior came to my mind with much weight and force, "I pray not for the world, but for them which thou hast given me." I was made to feel easy, and have not worried about it since. If it is not the Lord's will to save the whole human race, he will not put it in the hearts of his people to pray for that end. And while the fervent, effectual prayers of a righteous man availeth much, all the prayers that ever have been or ever will be offered cannot add one to the number of God's family; yet we can but beg the Lord to cause our dear ones to know and love the truth. We are commanded to love and pray for our enemies; that is, as I understand it, we are to pray that their sin against us be not laid to their charge. Your article on "The law of forgiveness" is a heart-searching one indeed, and should be to us all. But O! if there be one who, like David, is daily and hourly being tortured by tantalizing, aggravating words hurled at him of an overbearing nature, would not it, in time of deepest agony, seem almost unbearable? Yet with the power of God's grace in the heart it is not impossible that even these things do not move us. But there are times when the soul cannot feel this sweet, restful and heavenly frame. It is then the soul is most deeply cast down, and the reproaches hardest to bear. Sometimes we are ready to bear all things, endure all things, and to kiss the rod in humble submission. Again, we shrink at every stroke. Surely the world knows nothing of the struggle that is daily going on in the hearts of the Lord's dear, chosen ones. Some, it seems, get along through this world very smoothly; and some who are Old School Baptists have told me that they would not care or feel hurt in the least if their children united themselves with the false, ungodly religionists of the world. Perhaps this is the right spirit, but this poor heart cannot say such things. But O! it does seem to me it would break my heart to see a dear child going after and indulging in things which seem to me so exceeding sinful. If I am wrong in this I wish to be reproved, and would take it kindly. But can we conceive of anything more dishonoring to God, and therefore more sinful, than false, Arminian religion? Then how can we say we do not care, do not feel hurt, if our dear children run after these things? Is it a wonder it would send a pang to our hearts each time we must see them start to such places? Can we imagine that this sweet psalmist could have felt easy under such circumstances? But ever feeling, even amidst the most bitter trial and anguish of heart, that God's grace is, and ever will be, sufficient for us, we are made to exclaim, "Why art thou cast down, O my soul?" yet the soul is cast down. How good and restful it is to feel that our sad afflictions are all blessings in disguise; that they are not chances which have happened unto us, but that they are of the Lord. How beautifully you speak of the soul being shut up unto this faith, which to have is to have all. How sweet and restful is such a state. But, as for me, I know I deserve to be chastened, and feel that these things are the many stripes with which those who know to do right, and do it not, shall be beaten. For years after the way was made so plain, and I was made willing, yet my fleshly feelings refused to walk in it, on account of earthly ties and oppositions. In other words I determined to be anything else but an Old School Baptist. Still I could be nothing else. I loved them dearly even then, and have not in any degree lost that love; yet I was striving to go with another society. I would try to excuse myself and console myself with the thought that there were christians in other denominations, and why could I not be satisfied there? But these words came to me with double force, "They that know to do right, and do it not, shall be beaten with many stripes." But I will not begin on my experience, for my letter is already too lengthy. But, if you can bear with me, I want to tell you of a dream I had about the time I first become deeply concerned upon the subject of religion; not that I think it will be profitable, but my experience reminds me of it. In my dream I thought there was a very great enemy pursuing me, and I was fleeing from it as fast as I could; but I was so tired and weary I could scarcely keep out of its reach. It was gaining on me, and coming so near I could feel its breath (for it seemed as a great beast with many horns); and as I felt exhausted, and almost giving up in despair, I came to a steep and rugged mountain. Behind and on either side was the enemy, and in front this great mountain, which no one could ascend. But just as I gave up all hope of rescue, I was lifted up and went up, up this rugged mountain, I knew not how; but I saw my hands, that they were torn and bleeding. I was taken up till I reached the top, where I was safe, and all was level, lovely and beautiful green pastures. I did not think it was heaven, only a place of safety, where the enemy could not come. I was so relieved and so happy I awoke rejoicing. I have my opinion of what this lovely place of safety meant, but would like to know your opinion of it. But instead of my hands, I have felt that it is my heart that has often been torn and bleeding. It has been many years since this dream, but it is as clear to my mind now as it was then. Though I did not see much of anything in it then, I have felt in my experience to have realized its meaning in full. Your last letter was a source of much satisfaction to me. I was glad to learn that my views and opinions met with your approval. I hope soon to see you at my home. I was glad you spoke of a desire to come, and of your intention to do so.

Yours in a precious hope,

ARAH ALDERTON.

LAMBERTVILLE, N. J., May 3, 1866.

DEAR SISTER HANNAH M. DRAKE:—I arrived home safely from meeting this evening. The rest of the family have gone to bed, but I do not feel like going, and am sitting here alone. It is nearly eleven o'clock. I have been reading the SIGNS, No. 8, and have been very much pleased with it. I have read over twice the letter from G. W. Staton. A great part of it seems to accord so much with what my own feelings have been for years past; and that hymn he mentions, 1033, Beebe's Collection, is the one that suits my case exactly, the first two verses in particular. How often they have been repeated over in my mind. When I read an experience like this I feel somewhat encouraged to find others who cannot tell when a hope first sprang up in their heart; but, like them, I have a hope, though small, that I would not part with for worlds. Then how appropriate the language of the third verse. If I knew a Savior's love would it be thus with me? The whole hymn speaks the language of my heart. When I read the experiences of those who have such a lively hope, and such a sense of the Savior's love, I feel discouraged, and almost think I know nothing about it. I enjoyed the meeting yesterday, and thought in time of the sermon that I would like to offer myself to the church; but when the opportunity was given my heart failed me, for I felt as if I would be going in my own strength. I felt that all my times were in his hand, and all events at his command, and that his time had not come yet. I felt that I could not tell anything that would satisfy the church to receive me; but after I saw Elder Hartwell, and he spoke to me about it, I felt regret that I had not made the effort. O may I be enabled to say, Not my will, but thine, O Lord, be done; and my prayer is that he will make me willing in the day of his power.

Somewhere about two years ago I was working in the garden, when baptism was the subject of my thoughts; but I felt as though it was not my privilege. Then the words of the prophet Elijah came so forcibly to my mind, "Why halt ye between two opinions?" that it almost appeared that some one had spoken to me. Since that time my mind has been more impressed with a sense of my duty. O! if I could only feel it my privilege. I thought I would read a chapter in the Testament, and opened to my favorite one, the seventeenth chapter of John. This brings to my mind how much comfort I had in reading this chapter a little more than a year ago. I was cast down all the forenoon, when it appeared to me that I must read Christ's prayer for his disciples, which I did, and O how beautiful it appeared, and how full of grace and truth. O how I long for the time of the association to come. I enjoyed the one last year very much.

It is now one o'clock, and I must retire.

STONY CREEK, Conn., Feb. 3, 1895.

DEAR KINDRED IN CHRIST:—I have been much edified and strengthened to-day in reading one of J. C. Philpot's sermons on the text, "For God hath not given us the spirit of fear, but of power, and of love, and of a sound mind."—2 Tim. i. 7. I find in it so much of christian experience that the revelation seems like the bubbling of springs in a desert land, unfolding to my hungry soul such beauty and love that I would I could tell the half of the precious things to the dear children with whom it has been my privilege to meet from time to time. At the last association held at Warwick, N. Y., it being the thirtieth anniversary of my meeting with this dear people, there was a feeling of loneliness, the missing of old and familiar forms and faces, which impressed me with a solemnity greater than I had ever experienced before. While I enjoyed the meeting it was not until after my return home that the blessing followed or was received, and for nearly a week I was in the enjoyment of great love and peace of mind that is seldom my lot to enjoy; like the distilling of dew upon the tender herb, so gently did it fall, refreshing and filling my very being with joy unspeakable. Looking backward all these long years, isolated as I have been from the church and the company of the dear kindred, there have been seasons of experience so varied that I have often wondered were there any like me. A deeper sense of unworthiness growing with my years often causes me to cry for deliverance. O how precious have been the seasons, indeed milestones along life's pilgrimage. Such a one has come to me this day. It takes a higher power to lift us out of self and keep our feet in the narrow path. Our poor, sinful hearts are ever leading us astray, and we continually need to look to the author and finisher of our faith for grace to help in every time of need, and listen for that still, small voice that cannot be mistaken by those who have been reedeemed by his precious blood. Could I always feel as now, doubts and fears would flee away; but it is through much tribulation that we enter into rest. After the storm the sunlight appears more beautiful and glorious. So I feel it is good to trust in the Lord at all times. He knoweth our frame, he remembereth that we are dust, and he is able to keep in perfect peace those whose mind is stayed on him. That I may be so kept is the desire of my heart.

Very sincerely yours,

SARAH J. CLARK.

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE.

TO MOST of our readers the above mentioned book is too well known to need any introduction or a description by us. While many of the Bibles have a Concordance appended, they are generally so condensed or abridged as to be of little or no use. Cruden's Complete Concordance, however, enables one to readily turn to any passage of Scripture of which they can call to mind two or three words, and in our opinion is the most complete and convenient as a reference book of any published. In addition, it contains many other aids in studying the Bible, as may be seen by reference to advertisement on last page. Remember, both the books there mentioned are CRUDEN'S COMPLETE.

MARRIAGES.

MARCH 12th, 1895, at the bride's residence, in Cecil Co., Md., by Elder E. Rittenhouse, Mr. James Redgrave and Miss Agnes, only daughter of the late Wm. M. Frazier.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

DIED—At the home of her daughter, Mrs. M. R. Perrigrine, in Corning, Iowa, Jan. 3d, 1895, Mrs. Margery M. Hanna, aged 73 years.

She was born in Lancaster Co., Pa., July 15th, 1822. Her maiden name was Hanna, and her parents were members of the Old Baptist Church at Rock Springs, Pa. In early life, I do not know the date, but it was at God's appointed time, he called her by his grace, and she was joyfully and gladly received by his church, and baptized by the pastor, Elder Thomas Barton. Her seat in the church-house was thereafter always filled in their weekly meetings. Great grace was upon her, whereby she was enabled by a well-ordered walk and conversation to make her calling and election sure to all her brethren. She was of a meek and quiet spirit, but firm in the faith. In the church, her home and the neighborhood she was known as a peacemaker.

She was married Jan. 19th, 1853, and with her husband went to Ohio, and afterward removed to Iowa. She leaves three children. May God comfort them. She had been many years a widow. For her to live was Christ, and to die was gain.

M. E. CARTER.

STUCK, Washington.

DIED—Jan. 27th, 1895, at the residence of her son-in-law, brother J. P. Holcomb, near Lambertville, N. J., my dear sister, Mrs. Ann Eliza Bainbridge, in the 83d year of her age.

It is said in the last chapter of Proverbs, "Who can find a virtuous woman? for her price is far above rubies." She was indeed. Her children did arise and call her blessed; so also did the church of which she was a worthy member for twenty-nine years. She was indeed a mother in Israel. She delighted to hear the gospel preached and the sovereignty of God proclaimed. She always filled her place, unless providentially hindered. She loved to read the Scriptures, and took them for her rule of faith and practice. In the evening she read several chapters in the gospel by John, and retired with the family as well as usual. The next morning, when partly dressed, she sent for her daughter to come upstairs. She went up immediately, and saw her mother fanning for breath. The daughter said, "We will send for the doctor." The mother replied, "It is no use; it is no use," and died as though falling asleep.

She leaves four daughters and two sons, with their companions and children, to mourn their loss; also four brothers and one sister. She was the eldest of eleven children. Her race is run, and her victory won through her dear Redeemer. Her membership was with the Second Hopewell Church, at Harbourton, where a large assembly of relatives and friends met and heard a very able discourse by Elder Wm. L. Beebe, from 1 Thessalonians iv. 13–18.

HANNAH M. DRAKE.

(See communication on this page.)

SISTER Susan Ridley departed this life March 4th, 1895, about three o'clock a. m., at her residence in Shawnee, Johnson Co., Kansas, aged about 72 years.

Mother Ridley's maiden name was Susan Fitzgerald. She was married to brother Simon Ridley about the year 1842. There were born unto them eight children, six of whom survive her, two having died in infancy. Sister Ridley was born in Williamson Co., Tenn., and was married there, and lived there until 1879, when they moved to Kansas. Mother Ridley professed a hope in Christ about the year 1859, and was baptized in the fellowship of the Primitive Baptist Church by Elder J. King. She lived a faithful and consistent member of the church, always filling her seat in order, and died as she lived, in peace with God and with her brethren. She was a kind and affectionate companion, a loving and tender mother, a good and kind neighbor, and her house was a home for all who visited her, especially her brethren and sisters of like precious faith.

She leaves to mourn their loss an aged husband, six children, many grandchildren, with the church and many friends. Her funeral was attended on Wednesday, the 6th, in the church-house at Shawnee, Kansas. The writer, with Elder Davenport, tried to speak words of comfort to the friends and sorrowing ones from Revelation xix. 7; after which her remains were placed by tender hands in their resting place in the beautiful burying-ground near Shawnee, to await the blessed resurrection of the redeemed of the Lord unto eternal glory.

S. P. SMITH.

James S. Farmer, son of Andy and Betsy Farmer, was born in Sequatchie Co., Tenn., Dec. 26th, 1818, and was married to Miss Susannah A. Griffith, daughter of David M. and Mary A. Griffith, May 6th, 1852. After a very useful and eventful life of 74 years, 7 months and 21 days, he died of paralysis of the throat, August 17th, 1893.

Brother Farmer leaves an aged and devoted wife and four children to mourn their loss of a loving husband and a kind and affectionote father. May the same christian fortitude and loving obedience to their heavenly Father be manifested in them, and console them in this their sad bereavement, as was manifested by their dear father through his whole life, and especially during his last illness.

Brother Farmer moved from Sequatchie Co., Tenn., to Boone Co., Ark., in 1871, where he lived until 1889, when he moved to Coke Co., Texas, and thence to Coleman Co., Texas, in 1892, where he lived until death, as above stated. He was baptized in 1866 by Elder George Walker, and was ordained and served as a Deacon of Bethlehem Church, Sequatchie Co., Tenn., for several years, being always faithful to that trust imposed by the church, thus declaring his love for his brethren and his fidelity to the cause of Christ. O how painfully and forcibly do we realize the fact that in the death of brother Farmer the Horde Creek Church, of Coleman Co., Texas, has lost one of its most devoted and faithful members, and the county one of its best citizens.

Brother Farmer was a kind and dutiful husband, a tender, loving and affectionate father, a good neighbor, given to hospitality, a strong believer in the Bible doctrine of the inability of man to save himself from that death incurred by the disobedience of Adam, and hence an uncompromising advocate of salvation by the grace of God, through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus, effected by his righteous life, obedient death, and glorious triumph over death and the grave.

GID GRAHAM.

"A GOOD name is better than precious ointment; and the day of death than the day of one's birth."

These words, I believe, are peculiarly applicable to the life and death of our precious brother, E. C. Trussell, who departed this life Jan. 21st, 1895, at the home of Mr. Wm. Humphrey, near Snickersville, Loudoun Co., Va., at the age of 62 years and 5 months.

Brother Trussell had no home of his own, having never married; but for many years he found a home and kind friends with brother Moore, of this county, until a few years ago, when brother and sister Moore moved to the house of Mr. Humphrey, their son-in-law, brother Trussell accompanying them, and where he spent his last days. He suffered a lingering illness with consumption, with many dark days, wherein his faith was sorely tried; but before the end came the clouds dispersed, the bright Sun of righteousness shone upon him, and not only willingly but gladly he received the final summons. All that kind hands could do was done for his comfort.

Brother Trussell was at one time identified with the New School Baptists, but not finding a home and his Savior there he left them; and after wandering around for awhile in the unsuccessful search, he was led to his Father's house and to his kindred in Christ. He was baptized in the fellowship of the Ebenezer Church in 1866, by Elder R. C. Leachman. My intimacy with brother Trussell for nearly nineteen years has enabled me to know him so thoroughly, and to become so familiar with the workings of his mind and the feelings of his heart, and his walk and deportment in the church and in the world, that should I write as I feel it might perhaps seem like fulsome praise. Suffice to say that his brethren who knew him, and the world of friends and neighbors, looked upon him as an example of the true christian man. A gift of discernment and discrimination, a clear understanding of the doctrine and order of the gospel, made him a very useful man in the church. His gentle manners, his guarded language, his carefulness of the feelings of others, and his fear of offending especially his brethren, as well as his uncompromising love of the truth, his deep, rich gospel experience keeping him meek and lowly like his Master, all endeared him to his brethren. The Scripture quoted at the head of this article, selected by him to be used at his funeral, seems to apply to him in living and in dying. He had a good name among his fellow-men, and his faith was in that Name in which he was called to trust; and the day of his death saw his final discharge from all his warfare, and his entrance into everlasting peace and rest. A few months before his death, by the unanimous voice of the church, he was chosen Deacon.

He leaves two brothers, I believe, and one sister, of his immediate family, and his brethren in Christ, to mourn their loss; and indeed we miss him sadly. May God have mercy upon us; and where he removes faithful witnesses to his truth may he raise up others to fill their places, to the glory of his great name.

PICTORIAL HISTORY

OF THE

UNITED STATES.

By James D. McCabe.

This work is no dry mass of details—no bombastic effort to inflame the national pride, but a vivid and brilliant narrative of the events of our history, from the discovery of the American Continent down to the present time. It gives a most interesting account of the Indians of North America, from the time of the coming of the white men. The voyages of Columbus and explorations and discoveries of the different nations of Europe are related with graphic power. Every step of our colonial history is traced with patient fidelity, and the sources of those noble and, we trust, enduring institutions, which have made our country free and great, are shown with remarkable clearness. Then follows a clear and succinct account of our great Struggle for Independence, and the establishment of the Federal Union—the events of our career from the close of the Revolution to the administration of Harrison.

The work is printed from plain, new type, on fine calendered paper, and comprised in one octavo volume of 960 pages. It is splendidly embellished with nearly 500 fine engravings, embracing battles and other historical scenes, portraits of distinguished men, views of our principal cities, &c., &c.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE COTTAGE IN A VINEYARD.

BELOVED KINDRED IN CHRIST JESUS:—My heart is drawn toward you because of the grace of God that is in you. Your hope and joy is in the truth as it is in Jesus; and as I am made to witness this I cannot but love you for the truth's sake, which I humbly believe has been implanted by the Holy Ghost in my heart, and which we are assured by the inspired testimony shall be with us forever. It is a wonder of Jehovah's sovereign grace that such mortals as we are have been called to know the kindness and love of God our Savior. We are, I am sure, ready to confess that there were no good works of ours to induce the bestowment upon us of the tender compassion of the everlasting God; but all the love and mercy that our guilty souls have tasted has flowed unto us according to the good pleasure of the God of our salvation, according to the eternal purpose which he purposed in Christ Jesus our Lord. Since the time that my heart was first exercised about eternal things I have been a wanderer. Oftentimes I have felt it was in a solitary way; that I was isolated and alone; that there could be none of the dear children of God just like me. Then also I have found quiet resting places that the Lord our Shepherd has provided for even a poor sinner like me. Most sweet and refreshing have these resting places been. The precious promises of God, the blood and righteousness of our Redeemer, the blessed covenant of grace, have been the sanctuary of my wayward soul. In these precious retreats which the Holy Spirit leads the ransomed flock into, my poor, tired soul has been indulged to find moments of sweet, reviving repose. The Comforter has taken of the things of Jesus and spread a table for me, and I have feasted upon the riches of God's grace. O how gracious the Holy Ghost has been! Thus nourished, refreshed, and my strength recruited, I have again been called forth to pursue my way; and now after some years in the house of my pilgrimage I confess with Abraham that I am "a pilgrim and a stranger on the earth." David speaks for all Israel before God, "We are strangers before thee, and sojourners, as were all our fathers: our days on earth are as a shadow, and there is none abiding." In my wanderings I have come upon some strange scenes, full of instruction; and yet for all these I find I am a learner yet, unskilfull, and apt to go astray. A short time ago as I roamed abroad pondering upon the ways of God as manifested in the vicissitudes that my soul has undergone, I came suddenly upon a scene that attracted my attention. As I drew near my heart became the more interested. It was a field with a fence about it. Finding a gap in the hedge I cautiously and prayerfully entered. Here I have been roaming, exploring, and pondering, and my cogitations have much troubled and grieved my spirit. As I am yet stayed upon this spot, and the vision of it all is impressed upon my heart, I will unbosom to you, dear children of God, the burden of my meditations. That I may not keep you in farther suspense you will find a record of this place in Isaiah i. 8. "The daughter of Zion is left as a cottage in a vineyard, as a lodge in a garden of cucumbers, as a beseiged city." As I have been musing over this picture I have felt that in my own life there has been verified that which is here represented. Then again I have looked abroad upon the church of Christ, and have seen that there are times with her that may in truth be said, "The daughter of Zion is left as a cottage in a vineyard." Had you looked upon this spot some time ago quite a different scene would have met your gaze. Then the prospect was delightful, but now desolation and loneliness is spread over all. Ah, as I look upon the forsaken cottage, I mourn in my complaint and make a noise, and my weary heart is sighing, "O that I were as in months past, as in the days when God preserved me." You are interested to know some of the particulars of the history of this vineyard with its deserted cottage. I should like to tell you the story, but feel I cannot tell you all; much of it is past telling. O! could you have visited the vineyard in months past, how glad your hearts had been. Then the charming, inspiring voice of our beloved Savior was heard therein, the vines flourished, and their tender grapes gave a goodly smell, while this poor cottage was made cheerful with the gracious presence of the Keeper of the vineyard. I told you awhile ago that as I was contemplating this scene I felt that in the Lord's dealings with my soul there is reflected both this cottage and the vineyard. From the neglected appearance of everything I need scarcely tell you that "mine own vineyard have I not kept." O! I have made a wretched husbandman in all my attempts to keep my own vineyard. Ah, I now see to my soul's grief that the misery, wreck and ruin everywhere staring me in the face is of my own procuring. As from afar there comes to me a voice that I know, saying, "Thy way and thy doings have procured these things unto thee: this is thy wickedness, because it is bitter, because it reacheth unto thine heart."—Jer. iv. 18. O Lord, have pity upon a poor, sinful worm. I have heard thy speech, and am afraid. O Lord, revive thy work in the midst of the years, in the midst of the years make known, in wrath remember mercy. Come then, ye poor and afflicted daughters of Zion, and wend your steps with me amidst the vines of my vineyard, and I will tell you my story. Let me reherse to you a little of the early history of this vineyard. These vines, as you see, are planted in a very fruitful hill (Isaiah v. 1), called in the song of Moses "The mountain of thine inheritance, the place, O Lord, which thou hast made for thee to dwell in, the sanctuary, O Lord, which thy hands have established."—Exod. xv. 17. O could there be a better spot than this sanctuary for poor sinners to live and to flourish? "Great is the Lord, and greatly to be praised in the city of our God, in the mountain of his holiness. Beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth, is mount Zion, on the sides of the north, the city of the great King. God is known in her palaces for a refuge." In this hill of the Lord, Jehovah's palace, his temple, is founded. Every whit of it speaks forth his glory. The Lord has commanded the blessing here, even life forevermore. In this very fruitful hill the grace and truth of God is revealed, flowing in living streams to the poor and needy, through the righteousness and atonement of the Lord Jesus Christ. This very fruitful hill is nothing less than the good pleasure of Jehovah's will, the eternal purpose which he purposed in Christ Jesus our Lord.—Ephes. i. 5; iii. 11. Yes, this very fruitful hill is the eternal love of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost. O how fruitful is this hill! The eternal purpose and love of the everlasting Jehovah was fruitful in electing his people in Christ Jesus before the foundation of the world, blessing them with all spiritual blessing in him. "Having predestinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to himself, according to the good pleasure of his will, to the praise of the glory of his grace, wherein he hath made us accepted in the Beloved: in whom we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of his grace; wherein he hath abounded toward us in all wisdom and prudence; having made known unto us the mystery of his will, according to his good pleasure which he hath purposed in himself: that in the dispensation of the fullness of times he might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven and which are on earth, even in him: in whom also we have obtained an inheritance, being predestinated according to the purpose of him who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will; that we should be to the praise of his glory, who first trusted in Christ."—Eph. i. 3–12. Ah, before the Holy Spirit experimentally and vitally brought me to this sacred place I felt I was as a root out of a dry ground, a miserable, vile wretch, for whom I feared there could be no mercy from the high and holy One that inhabiteth eternity. The Lord taught me to feel that I was a vile, worthless brand, fit only to be burned up in the fire of the wrath of the almighty God. I felt to be already in that fire; but his own gracious and powerful hand plucked me as a brand from the burning and brought me to this "very fruitful hill." The Holy Spirit brought me to Jesus, the Savior of sinners; thus by a miracle of grace he planted me in this inclosure, and caused even a poor, vile sinner like me to flourish and to rejoice in salvation, in the sure mercies of David. My vines then brought forth tender grapes, which gave a good smell; love and joy and praises to the Lord were brought forth by the Spirit in my soul. Ah, then I believed that the Keeper of the vineyard delighted in me, and that he himself accepted and did eat my pleasant fruits brought forth beneath his smiles and under his own merciful and heavenly husbandry. In those days of my first love I used to sing without a faltering note, "My beloved is mine, and I am his."

"From me he never will remove;
He's mine by faith, I'm his by love;
By oath and vow our hearts conjoin;
Thus I am his and he is mine.

"I am his guest, and he's my food;
I'm his by price, he's mine by blood;
He's my strong elm, and I'm his vine;
Thus I am his and he is mine."

O is not the Redeemer the chiefest among ten thousand, the altogether lovely one? Precious Jesus!

"While we are held in thy embrace,
There's not a thought attempts to rove;
Each smile upon thy beauteous face
Fixes and charms and fires our love."

Ah, ye dear ones that listen to my story, even now as I think upon those delightsome days of my spiritual youth, and of my espousals to the Lamb of God, I mourn over my degenerate estate, and in my heart's yearnings I cry, "Return, I beseech thee, O God of hosts; look down from heaven, and visit this vine." This story of this cottage and the vineyard is a divine mystery, yea, such a mystery, it will ever remain hidden from the world of the ungodly. And while I have contemplated the former and present estate, and the times that have passed over me, my cogitations have much troubled my heart.—Dan. vii. 28. Ah, though I cannot now see the fair countenance of my Savior, the owner and husbandman of the vineyard, and have sometimes feared he would never cause his face to shine upon me again, and that he had given this vineyard over to perpetual desolations; yet I think at times (though he hideth himself that I cannot behold him) he cannot be far off. Perhaps "He hideth behind our wall," and will in due time appear and have mercy upon his heritage, against whom he hath had indignation so long a time. His voice has entered the solitude of my wanderings, saying, "Yet I planted thee a noble vine, wholly a right seed; how then art thou turned into the degenerate plant of a strange vine unto me?"—Jer. ii. 21. His words have cut me to the heart, and have brought all my foolishness to remembrance. I blush and am filled with shame over the sad plight of the vineyard. Yes, those words, "How then art thou turned into the degenerate plant of a strange vine unto me?" have stirred my poor soul to its depths. "I am a desolate wilderness, and mourn unto my God."—Jer. xii. 11. "I planted thee a noble vine, wholly a right seed." In my flesh I know there is nothing noble and nothing right. As I look back to the rock whence I was hewn, and to the hole of the pit whence I was digged, I feel I have nothing in the flesh whereof to glory before the Lord. I acknowledge I am a vile sinner, that I was dead in trespasses and sins, a child of wrath even as others. A Syrian ready to perish was Abraham, the father of us all; and I was ready to perish in the land of Assyria, and an outcast in the land of Egypt. While in this low estate the almighty and gracious hand of Jehovah took hold of me.

"How sovereign, wonderful and free
Is all his love to sinful me!
He plucked me as a brand from hell;
My Jesus has done all things well."

"Thou hast brought a vine out of Egypt."—Psalm lxxx. 8. But you are inquiring, How is it that the Lord saith it was "a noble vine, wholly a right seed?" I do not marvel at your questioning me thus when you witness the ignoble and degenerate condition of the vines in this vineyard. It is a divinely wondrous mystery, and in my present languishing circumstances how unequal I feel to set it forth in truth. Ah, for a long time the clouds have rained no rain upon me, and in the night seasons of my soul I have felt no dew to distill upon my branch. My heart is smitten and withered like grass under the chastenings of the Lord. How then can I tell you that I was a noble vine, wholly a right seed? I should be dumb, and nevermore mention it, only that his voice, that my soul knoweth, saith, "I planted thee a noble vine." O! there is a little hope in my heart that his seed remaineth in me, and that he will yet return and visit this vine. That which constitutes a noble vine is a sinner called by grace, one in whom is the Spirit of Christ, who is a partaker of the divine nature. Such favored sinners are Jehovah's excellent ones, in whom is his delight. Yes, these are heaven's nobility; yet the world knoweth them not, for it knew not our Redeemer, the Prince of glory. The Lord says, "I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts; and I will be their God, and they shall be my people. And they shall teach no more every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord; for they shall all know me, from the least of them unto the greatest of them, saith the Lord; for I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their sin no more." These are the children of the promise, and are counted Christ's seed. They are born again, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God. Being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth forever. These vines then that are "wholly a right seed," are the seed of Christ; and in him, the true and living Vine, they are the seed which the Lord hath from eternity blessed with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ Jesus, according as the Father hath chosen them in him before the foundation of the world, that they should be holy and without blame before him in love.

"The chosen people were of old pure in Jehovah's sight,
And never did he them behold but with a vast delight.
O with what pleasure he surveyed the highly favored train,
Saw Jesus and his honored bride in perfect splendor shine."

Though I have touched upon this divine and melodious strain, I feel as I cast my eyes upon my present degenerate state that such notes are too high for me to sing. O! it is a strange and bitter story to relate to you the answer to that heart-searching question of the Lord our God, "How art thou turned into the degenerate plant of a strange vine unto me?" How can you have fellowship for me if I tell you of my shame and folly that has brought my vineyard into such a woeful plight? But I cannot refrain, for it seems I might find some relief to my sad, sad heart if some one would but listen to me.

When first the Lord planted me in this very fruitful hill I enjoyed a season of fruitfulness. I did indeed! My soul was filled with love and adoring gratitude to the glorious Lord. Such seasons this vineyard of mine has many, many times been blessed with under the tender care of the Comforter; but these times of prosperity have declined, sometimes gradually, and sometimes in a moment; and adversity has set in, but surely there has been no such adversity as that which now has brought my vineyard into such desolation. Ah, my pride and self-wisdom have been my ruin. Instead of living in sweet confidence upon Jesus Christ and him crucified, and looking to the Holy Spirit to minister to my needy soul the riches of God's grace, I thought I could keep and dress my own vineyard, and add other adornments than those with which the heavenly Husbandman had decked this vineyard. These vain thoughts lodged within me; and the Lord, who is a jealous God, knowing the naughtiness of my heart, said, "Because thou hast forgotten the God of thy salvation, and hast not been mindful of the Rock of thy strength, therefore thou shalt plant pleasant plants, and shalt set it with strange slips: in the day shalt thou make thy plant to grow, and in the morning shalt thou make thy seed to flourish; but the harvest shall be a heap in the day of grief and of desperate sorrow."—Isaiah xvii. 10, 11. I have been foolish, like Israel of old. They vainly imagined they might better their estate by borrowing customs and notions from the aliens, till at length they fell to practicing the abominable idolatries of the uncircumcised nations that surrounded them. "Hear, O heavens, and give ear, O earth; for the Lord hath spoken: I have nourished and brought up children, and they have rebelled against me." The only principles that yield health and prosperity to the vineyard of the Lord, are such as spring from Jehovah's sovereign grace. If then "Grace fills the garden of the Lord with blooming joys from heaven," is it any marvel that my heavenly joys have declined when I have attempted to introduce my own fleshly works and inventions into the husbandry of this vineyard? The Galatian brethren began in the spirit, and ran well; their vineyard flourished while Jesus was their only recognized keeper. But when they thought to be perfected by the flesh, instead of perfection their "blessedness" vanished.—Gal. iv. 15. So it has befallen my vineyard. Fleshly works and carnal doctrine, yea, anything that is contrary to sound doctrine, introduced into the vineyard, no matter how pleasant these plants may appear, they are strange slips, and will in due season only mar the beauty of the vineyard of Jehovah's grace, and bitter will the harvest be. "For he that soweth to his flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit, shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting." When churches suffer the introduction of strange slips, unregenerate persons, worldly devices, practices, doctrines, then like poor me their vineyard before long will be in a sad plight. Had anyone told me after I trust the Holy Spirit first led me into the doctrine of the covenant of grace, and feasted me upon the doctrine of eternal love, election, predestination, effectual calling, particular redemption, and the preservation of all the redeemed unto the inheritance of eternal glory, by the gracious work of the Holy Spirit in their hearts, that I should in any degree think that any thought or work of mine could add to the work of God, I should have been indignant. In those days my vineyard flourished; daily, hourly, the Savior walked in the midst of the vineyard; his presence I felt, his tender care, his smiles, his kind sayings, made my heart rejoice, and I could sing in those days, "I am my Beloved's and his desire is toward me." Arminianism in all its hues and shapes I detested, and I thought no such thing would ever be discovered in me. I imagined I was entirely free from such vile, God-dishonoring, creature-exalting principles. But I had to learn that my fleshly heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked. I became proud, elated somewhat. I thought I stood so well and was so firmly founded upon the truth of the doctrine of the grace of God, that I should never degenerate in thought or word or deed from the truth. O that I had given heed to the counsel of the apostle Paul, "Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall." I can see, dear children of God, that I became lifted up with pride in my knowledge of the doctrine of Christ. I thought I certainly know something, and a great deal more than many of the folks around me. I said within myself, I am rooted now in the truth, and see no fear of doubts and fears approaching me. One day I thought, With my knowledge of the Scriptures how can I have any doubts? I shall never be at a loss, let come what will. It is with trouble of soul that I relate these things to you, beloved of God. Ah, I have been and am a miserable, vile wretch; and yet I will confess I feel a sweet hope to which I cling, and which holds me up, that I am a monument of grace, a sinner saved by Jesus' blood. Well, at the time about which I am now endeavoring to tell you, when I thought I knew so much, I had thoughts invade my soul, that it did not matter much if I did indulge myself in the lusts of my flesh; for I said to myself, God has loved me from everlasting, and

I will rest in his love. He knows all my sins, past and future. I cannot add to their number; and in the covenant ordered in all things and sure the Father laid them all on the Lamb, and he has atoned for them, and they will never be charged against me. I will not utter the presumptuous and awful thoughts that I had. Many of these plants were pleasant to my vile flesh, but they were stange slips, and desperate grief and sorrow was my harvest. As I pour forth the story of the woes of my vineyard, may it be an example of warning to you. The Lord by his gracious, but unseen, and at that time unacknowledged power, kept me from outwardly living after the flesh; but my thoughts, O! these vain, vile thoughts, noxious seeds, vile weeds, wild vines, seem to spread themselves all over my vineyard. The days and moments of my life were pestered with them, my flesh lusted after them, and from my spirit my joy and my happiness declined, my communion with the Lord seemed cut off, and I after the inward man felt as though a pining sickness were wasting away my life. The cottage was left. Ah, I need not tell you the consequences. As you gaze around upon my vineyard it will tell you its own story. You see it is all grown over with briers and thorns which have sprung up, and I find it is beyond my strength and skill to keep them down out of sight. Through those gaps in the fence the wild boar out of the woods has entered, and has so ravaged and wasted my vineyard that I have been brought well nigh into utter despair. Alas! I am such a wretched husbandman, I am sure I can never repair the damage of that ruthless beast of the field. If my longed-for Savior would only return and take up his abode in the lonesome cottage, then soon this vineyard would flourish again. Some of you, babes in grace that are yet upon the breast (Isaiah xxviii. 9), may look with astonishment upon this scene of degeneration, and in your hearts are yet inquiring how it all came about. O that I could tell you in simplicity, and that you might be instructed by my story. Of our beloved Savior it is written, "His mouth [palate] is most sweet."—Solomon's Song v. 16. When therefore I was found bringing forth such fleshly, wild, sour grapes, I became as a degenerate plant of a strange vine to him.—Jer. ii. 21. In my degenerate state outward forms have been attended to, prayer and praises have been upon my lips, but somehow, I could not tell how, my heart seemed unmoved, as though it were dead to vital, spiritual religion. All such mere lip services are unpalatable, sour grapes, to the dear Savior. "His mouth is most sweet." Only those clusters of the vine that are brought forth under his own heavenly husbandry are sweet unto him. "From me is thy fruit found."—Hosea xiv. 8. "He that abideth in me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit; for without me ye can do nothing."—John xv. 5. I feel, dear children of God, that the Lord in his chastenings has given me over to well nigh utter desolation, or such abounding evils could not so assail and abound in me. Hear what the God of Israel saith, "And now, go to; I will tell you what I will do to my vineyard: I will take away the hedge thereof, and it shall be eaten up; and break down the wall thereof, and it shall be trodden down; and I will lay it waste; and it shall not be pruned nor digged; but there shall come up briers and thorns: I will also command the clouds that they rain no rain upon it."—Jer. v. 5, 6. This was spoken concerning typical Israel; and during the small moments that Jehovah hid his face from them, and the cottage was left in the vineyard, disorders, evils and miseries abounded throughout the land. Then also the alien nations on every side plucked and vexed and wasted them exceedingly. "Upon the land of my people shall come up thorns and briers, yea, upon all the houses of joy in the joyous city: because the palaces shall be forsaken; the multitude of the city shall be left; the forts and towers shall be for dens forever, a joy of wild asses, a pasture of flocks; until the Spirit be poured upon us from on high, and the wilderness be a fruitful field, and the fruitful field be counted for a forest. Then judgment shall dwell in the wilderness, and righteousness remain in the fruitful field."—Isaiah xxxii. 13–16. I found when my beloved Keeper had withdrawn himself and was gone that my vineyard was uncared for; it was neither pruned nor digged, and the "strange slips" that I had brought into the vineyard grew rapidly, and overran the vines that are the planting of the Holy Spirit. The fruits of the Spirit, such as love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance, seemed to be choked out of existence by those wild, strange, speculative doctrines that in my carnal inquisitiveness and reasonings I had searched out and invented. Pleasant plants I thought them to be, but sour grapes are what they brought forth. Only in the outmost and uppermost branches of the true vines, out of the reach of the boar out of the woods, and all the enemies of my vineyard, a few of the sweet grapes could be found. Ah, as I wander around in my destroyed vineyard, my soul desiring the first ripe fruit, I stretch forth my hands after these "gleaning grapes" (Isaiah xvii. 6), and as I,a poor sinner, am suffered to glean and taste these few remaining grapes, I feel my bitter lot is sweetened, and I indulge the thought that Jesus will again return and visit this vine. Briers and thorns sprang up, as I have told you, in my vineyard. This, as I now know, is always the result when we neglect through the Spirit to mortify the deeds of the body and live.—Rom. viii. 13. As my self-consequence and letter knowledge of the doctrine of Christ had led me on to a very fleshly state of mind, briers and thorns everywhere appeared. I was astonished. I little thought that such things were in me. "He made me feel the hidden evils of my heart." While I was living in sweet dependence upon, and in hourly communion with Jesus, his teaching was the mattock continually digging, and keeping under, in subjection, the lusts of my flesh.—Isaiah vii. 25. Then they were all hidden. But O! I have learned I am vile; I am the chief of sinners. As I look upon these briers and thorns, evil thoughts, &c., spread all over, I say to myself, Can the Spirit of God dwell in such a sinner like me? Instead of my vineyard having the smell of the field that the Lord hath blessed (Gen. xxvii. 27), I fear at times that the Lord hath rejected me, and I am nigh unto cursing, whose end is to be burned.

That wild beast, the devil, has made dreadful havoc by his inroads into my vineyard. While I lived by faith in sweet confidence in the covenant ordered in all things and sure, I was so hedged about that Satan could not touch me.—1 John v. 13. I felt by faith that I was "fenced in with Jehovah's shalls and wills, firm as the everlasting hills." Then I was lowly in my own eyes, and the lovely Savior was the exalted One. We read that Satan answered the Lord, and said, "Doth Job fear God for naught? Hast thou not made an hedge about him, and about his house, and all that he hath on every side?" He had tried every side, and found Jehovah's hedge confronting him, and Job he could not touch. Thus I believe my vineyard to be hedged about.

"'Twas fixed by God, and o'er the brake
No fiend of hell could flee;
'Twas deep as the infernal lake,
And high as God's decree.

"In vain the tempter summoned all
His black, infernal crew;
They ne'er could cause this fence to fall,
Or force a passage through."

But when deceived by self and pride, and my poor heart was turned aside from the simplicity of Christ, then I feelingly lost the comforting security that my hedge afforded me, and I felt as though my vineyard were turned into a common wilderness for the beasts of the field to ravage, and whoever passed by might pluck away my few remaining clusters. O how Satan with his temptations has endeavored to root up and to rend my vines. All my hope, all my soul's experience of divine things, he has tried to devour and lay waste. There have been seasons with me when it seemed that Satan thought I was his lawful prey, and that there was none to deliver. His cruel insinuations and questionings that he has thrust in my soul have been like the boar out of the wood devouring the few grapes yet remaining on my vines. My hope has seemed almost gone; yet in my lowest and most trodden down condition there have been found (from the hidden life, which I trust is in my soul) sighs and moans over my sad and deplorable case, and some faint yet quenchless desires after those happy days when "Jesus all the day long was my joy and my song."

During some of my desolate moments I have suffered beneath satanic tauntings, saying, "Where is now thy God, thine unchangeable Friend? How about your believing that all things are governed according to the unalterable decrees of God, and of all things working together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose? Where is now your heart's fixed rest in the everlasting love of God? Where is his love to you now?" All that passed by plucked my vines and mocked at my sabbaths.—Lam. i. 7. Ah, you are wearied with my sad story of the valley of Achor (Hosea ii. 15), and you are inquiring, Is there any hope of the restoration of this vineyard? Can it ever flourish again? "Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts." O! I have hope. In the depth of my heart I have been thinking upon the name of the Lord. I have been musing upon his immutability, his oath and his precious promises, which never were forfeited yet. I see in my low estate an evil heart of unbelief has wrought much mischief in my vineyard. I have been too ready to listen to Satan's base insinuations against the God of love. He has said, "For a small moment have I forsaken thee, but with great mercies will I gather thee. In a little wrath I hid my face from thee for a moment, but with everlasting kindness will I have mercy on thee, saith the Lord thy Redeemer." And again, it is written, and "the Scripture cannot be broken," "The Lord shall comfort Zion; he will comfort all her waste places; and he will make her wilderness like Eden, and her desert like the garden of the Lord; joy and gladness shall be found therein, thanksgiving and the voice of melody." O blessed be the Lord, there are yet a few "gleaning grapes left." He will return. My heart says he will. He will expel all the intruders; he will build up the hedge by precious faith in my soul, and by his grace he will subdue the briers and thorns. O come, beloved Savior; take up thine abode in the cottage, and care for this vineyard again. Command the clouds that they "pour me down a living and life-giving stream." O let there "be showers of blessing."—Ezek. xxxiv. 26. And lest any man hurt this vineyard, O keep it night and day. Then shall my vines with the tender grape give a good smell, and the praise shall all be thine. Amen.

THE TWO WITNESSES.

SOME time last year a request appeared in the SIGNS that something should be said editorially upon the Scripture recorded in Revelation xi. 3, which reads as follows, "And I will give power unto my two witnesses, and they shall prophesy a thousand two hundred and threescore days, clothed in sackcloth."

In venturing to consider the text thus presented we would not dare to do otherwise than to speak carefully and humbly. We would not presume to speak positively, for we confess that these words and their connection seem very mysterious to us. What we here shall say we would put in the form of suggestions, rather than positive declarations. Some things which we hope to write have seemed in a measure satisfactory to our own mind; but we would not presume to say that the suggestions which we may here make cover the field. The truth of God can be seen by our finite vision but in part. We are also aware that in former years brethren like Elder Samuel Trott, Elder Gilbert Beebe and others wrote much concerning this subject, so that we feel still less like venturing to tread the same paths; but still we will venture to present the following thoughts.

We suppose the chief question in the mind of the writer of the above request was as to the identity of the two witnesses. Who are they? The Lord, in the language above quoted, calls them "my two witnesses." They are God's witnesses because they are clothed with power from God to testify, and because they testify of God. It seems to us that there should be special emphasis put upon the pronoun "my"—"my two witnesses;" and still further, the chief force of the expression seems to us to be that they testify of God. It has also been our thought that the number two is not to be understood numerically, but symbolically, as it is in many other places. It has seemed to us that this number is used to signify the perfectness and certainty and reliability of this testimony of God, let the testimony fall from whatever source it may. It has not seemed to us necessary to try to find just two persons or things which bear this testimony; but rather it is our thought that whatever bears testimony to God, whether it be the Scriptures, the Holy Spirit, or the church, or some other thing, all may be included in the "two witnesses."

We wish to call attention to another thing. In the fourth verse it is declared to John by the angel that these two witnesses are the two olive trees, and the two candlesticks standing before the God of the earth. In Psalm lii. 8 and in Jeremiah xi. 16 the people of God are themselves called olive trees. David said, "I am like a green olive tree in the house of God." Jeremiah said of Israel, "The Lord called thy name, A green olive tree, fair, and of goodly fruit." The one thought in both these texts that we wish to bring out is that the olive tree is a scriptural symbol of the people of God. The olive tree is also used in Romans xi. to set forth some things concerning the people or church of God. Would not these Scriptures, which associate the church with the olive tree, at once arise in the mind of John as he heard this testimony of the angel?

In the fourth chapter of the prophecy of Zechariah we have presented precisely the same thing as in the fourth verse of this eleventh chapter of Revelation. The prophet records that he saw in a vision from God two olive trees, which through two golden pipes empty the golden oil out of themselves into the golden lamp; and the Lord said to the prophet that these two olive trees were the two anointed ones that stand by the Lord of the whole earth. In Revelation xi. 4 they also are said to stand before the God of the earth. It seems to us that there can be no manner of doubt that the two olive trees mean just the same in Revelation that they do in Zechariah. They stood before the Lord in the time of the prophet, and they stood before the Lord in the time of the apostle John. Do they not stand before the Lord yet? Have they not always stood before the Lord? Still further, we must notice that we are expressly told what this vision meant as the prophet saw it. Its testimony was not of human might or power, but of the work of the Spirit of God. They were then God's two witnesses. They were still God's two witnesses when John saw them; and may we not say that they still testify of God?

Still another declaration concerning these two witnesses we ought to notice, which may help us to fix their identity. They are declared in the verse following the text (verse 4) to be not only the two olive trees, but also the two candlesticks; that is, the two olive trees and the two candlesticks present the same characters under different aspects. These two witnesses are like olive trees in some respects, and in others they are like candlesticks. This, to us, seems to confirm the idea that the number two is not to be taken numerically, but as a symbol of perfectness or completeness. If we turn back to the opening chapters of this book of Revelation we shall find the matter settled as to what the candlesticks represent. There the seven golden candlesticks, in the midst of which the Lord walked, represented the seven churches of Asia. In this eleventh chapter of Revelation the number two is used rather than any other number because it represents the certain, full and perfect testimony of all the people of God, or of the general assembly and church of the first-born.

We have seen thus far, first, that the people of God are compared to olive trees in Psalm lii. 8, in Jeremiah xi. 16, and in Romans xi.; second, that Zechariah saw the same vision of two olive trees that John saw, and that the prophet was told that these were the two anointed ones which stand before the God of the whole earth, and that they in both places are said to be God's witnesses, witnessing of him; third, we have seen that the two olive trees represent the same characters as do the two candlesticks; and fourth, we have seen that the church of God is often represented by a candlestick. Is not the conclusion a just one, that the two olive trees, the two anointed ones of Zechariah's prophecy, and the two witnesses of Revelation xi. 3, also represent the full church of Jesus Christ?

Still further, we feel like suggesting that without the living word and Spirit of God abiding in her members the church of God is powerless for bearing testimony. Thus, when we speak of the two witnesses as especially representing the church of God as a witness-bearer on earth, we must remember that it is that church as she stands filled with the Spirit of God, and having his word written in her heart. It is by the Spirit, and according to the word, that the church bears her witness to God. "Ye are my witnesses, saith the Lord." "If they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them." The Comforter testifies of Jesus to his people, and so they also testify of him. We have here called attention to this, because in the third paragraph of this editorial we alluded to the testimony of the Scriptures and of the Holy Spirit, as well as that of the church.

"I will give power unto my two witnesses, and they shall prophesy," &c. The word "power" is supplied here. It is not necessary to the text. A literal rendering would be, "And I will give unto my two witnesses, and they shall prophesy." The word "prophesy" does not here mean predicting future events, but rather teaching, expounding or proclaiming. The subject of their prophecy, as we have seen, is to witness to the name and work of God. The lesson, then, of the text is that teaching, expounding and testifying of the truth is always of the Lord. "No man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost."

Their testimony is said to endure for a thousand two hundred and sixty days. We desire to add but a few suggestions concerning this. We have thought that these were symbolical days, and that the number was also symbolical. We cannot enter into any historical calculation concerning this matter. The minds of some brethren have seemed to be led in that way, and we would not venture to question the propriety and usefulness of such reflections and writings; but we have not been able to look into the matter in that way. To us the one thing of special interest in this Scripture is that the church of God in all ages (which perhaps the twelve hundred and sixty days may mean) has received power from God to testify of him; and that, as her lot has been one of oppression and persecution, she has prophesied, clothed in sackcloth, which is the emblem of sorrow and humiliation.

We leave these suggestions. Concerning much of what follows this text we do not feel that we have any settled opinion; but we are persuaded that it is all in harmony with the view that these two witnesses represent the church of God. If others' minds are led to write of these things we shall be glad. Meanwhile we leave these suggestions to the consideration of our readers.

2 COR. II. 15, 16.

"FOR we are unto God a sweet savor of Christ in them that are saved, and in them that perish: to the one we are the savor of death unto death; and to the other the savor of life unto life. And who is sufficient for these things?"

In reply to the inquiry of brother Fanshier we will submit the following remarks. Whatever might have been the estimation in which the apostles were held by the world or by their brethren, it was consoling to them to know how they were regarded by their God. Paul had, in his first epistle, informed them that their preaching was unto the Jews a stumbling-block, and to the Greeks foolishness; and he had also reminded his brethren of the divisions among them, of which he had been advised by those of the household of Chloe; their several preferences for Paul, for Apollos, for Cephas, and for Christ, and that these preferences and prejudices arose from carnal principles yet remaining in the members of the church. He also told them how they were regarded in the estimation of God, as workers together under God; that while the church was God's building, the apostles were workers together under the supervision, direction and control of God, who was the real builder; and that their labor could not be in vain in the Lord. In the immediate connection of the text under consideration the apostle expresses gratitude to God for causing the apostles always, under all circumstances, however trying, to triumph in Christ, and for thereby manifesting the savor of his knowledge by them in every place. For, says he, "We are unto God a sweet savor of Christ." Like what was prefigured by the sweet savor of the incense offered under the old priesthood, so the savor of what was effected by the priesthood of Christ, through its effects as manifested in the success attending the official labors of the apostles, in which they were always made to triumph, they were to God a sweet savor of Christ; that is, well pleasing to God. And they were thus unto God, not only in regard to the effect of their labors in them that are saved, in edifying and comforting the saints, but were equally triumphant in effecting what God designed to accomplish through them, in reference to the effect their ministry should have on them that perish. To the one, that is, to them that perish, they are a savor of death unto death, and to the other of life unto life. Their ministry had no life in it to them that perish; as he had before said, it was to the Jews a stumbling-block, and to the Greeks foolishness. But as this was the very effect which God had designed that the preaching of his gospel should produce on them, it was a sweet savor of Christ in them, effecting his purpose in them; for he has hidden these things from the wise and prudent, and revealed them unto babes, for the sufficient reason, because it seemed good in his sight. Hence when the apostles preached Christ, and him crucified, and the Jews stumbled, and could not understand it, there was no defeat, no disappointment, no cause for regret, for so it seemed good in God's sight; and therefore, however disagreeable this might be to men, it was a result corroborating the purpose and designs of God, and therefore a sweet savor to God; and the apostle, having the mind of Christ, could with him rejoice in spirit and thank God that it was so. And so far as we have the mind of Christ we shall also rejoice and thank God that the natural or unregenerated man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God. Instead of studying to modify, simplify, or otherwise to accommodate the gospel ministry to the comprehension of dead sinners, rejoice to know, when they stumble at the word, it is that whereunto they were appointed. Whenever and wherever the gospel is preached as the apostles preached it, it will be death to them who having no spiritual life are dead, which is the case of all who perish. They are dead, and to them there is no vitality in the gospel, because they cannot know the things of the Spirit; hence it is death unto death.

But while the preaching of the gospel is a stumbling-block, foolishness and death to them that are dead, it is life to them who, being quickened by the Holy Ghost, are alive; unto them God has given to know the things of the kingdom which are proclaimed in the preached gospel, and which have spirit and life in them to the living; and this while it demonstrates the sovereignty, wisdom and purpose of God, also affords a discriminating testimony by which we know the living from the dead. If when the gospel is preached in truth the natural man could understand it, and derive life and comfort from it, how could we distinguish between the living and the dead? Now, the authorized test is this, "He that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved; and he that believeth not shall be damned." The gospel of the kingdom is to be preached for a witness to all nations, and this is the testimony which it gives. The living receive vital comfort from the gospel preached to them; but the dead receive no life or comfort from it, but revile, deride and blaspheme; and hence the saints shall be able to judge the world, while they themselves are judged of no man. And who is sufficient for these things? Evidently no collegiate training, no excellency of speech which the wisdom of men can teach, can qualify a man for this work. None are of themselves, nor by all that they can acquire from the wisdom of this world, sufficient for these things; but as God has a purpose in the work which none can know but by revelation, so none but God can qualify men for the ministry and make them sufficient for these things. Hence their sufficiency is of God, and they are not as many who corrupt the word.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y., July 1, 1848.

TWO MINDS.

WAS that mind which is enmity to God, and which cannot be subject to the law of God, the same with which Paul served the law of God?

To our understanding this question fully carries the answer on its face; for that mind which is not subject to the law of God, neither can be, cannot be the same mind which is subject to the law and which constantly serves the law of God. A plain unequivocal negative to the question may be sufficient to satisfy brother Trott; but for the sake of others who have not thought so deeply on the subject, something more full and explicit may be required. As in the premises we take the position that the minds spoken of are not the same, it seems to devolve on us to give a reason for considering them different. The apostle has spoken to the church of a carnal and of a spiritual mind. To be governed by the one is death, to be governed by the other is life and peace. If this were the same mind they would need no such qualifying terms to distinguish them from each other, as carnal and spiritual, which with others are used by those who wrote as they were inspired by the Holy Ghost. That they are not one, but two, and that they are radically different as well as distinct from each other, will appear from the following considerations.

1. The one is carnal, that is, fleshly, and of course is common to all men in a natural or unregenerated state; the other is spiritual, and peculiar to such as are regenerated and born of God. Christ has informed us that that which is born of the flesh is flesh, and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit. Our natural birth presents not only our corporal substance and animal life, but also a mind to be developed more fully at a riper age. This mind is identified with the fleshly nature of mankind, so that until nature itself shall be dissolved, and the flesh consigned to the element from which it was taken, that fleshly or carnal mind is inseparably connected with the flesh; and being born of the flesh, is flesh, and therefore properly called a carnal mind. It embraces the whole intellectual power of the man; however educated, polished, refined, modified or reformed, it does not, cannot, rise above itself, or become anything else than a carnal or fleshly mind.

2. The carnal mind is enmity against God, while the spiritual mind is love to God; differing not only in their origin, but in their nature.

3. The carnal mind is not subject to or in subjection or obedience to the law of God, neither indeed can it be. The spiritual mind, being "the same mind which was in Christ," is the mind of God, communicated to and implanted in the saints by regeneration, and cannot sin, or cease to be in full subjection and constant service of the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus, by which they are made free from the law of sin.

4. "To be carnally minded is death." Death is the opposite of life; and therefore however much rational religion or intellectual science of divinity we may have, we are dead. "But to be spiritually minded is life." To have a spiritual mind is not merely an evidence of life, but it is life; and to be governed by a spiritual mind is life displayed, manifested or developed.

5. The carnal mind is susceptible of no cure; it is entirely destitute of ability to serve the law of God. "It is not subject," "neither indeed can be." Train it, instruct it, bring all the power of motive, of argument and of art to bear on it, and it remains as it was, a carnal mind with all its inability, and cannot do that which is good. The spiritual mind is in all these respects the very opposite. It cannot sin, because it is born of God; it is the mind of Christ; it is of the Spirit, and it is spirit.

6. The carnal mind is totally depraved. The spiritual mind is not susceptible of depravity or degeneracy.

7. The carnal mind is at war with God, with holiness and with truth. It is like the troubled sea that continually casts up mire and dirt. But to be spiritually minded is not only life, but it is also peace. It is the opposite of enmity, opposition and war. It is reconciled to God, and rejoiceth in his government.

8. The carnal mind, being enmity to God, is sin. The spiritual mind, being an emanation from God, is holy.

9. The carnal mind is identified with the "old man." The spiritual mind is identified with the "new man, which, after God, is created in righteousness and true holiness."

10. The carnal mind is in all its powers adapted to the affairs of the flesh, subject to be affected by the things of time and sense, to be changed and modified in its developments, but not in its nature or opposition to God and holiness. The spiritual mind is adapted to the things of the spirit, the contemplation of things that are heavenly and divine, and shall remain unchanged in nature when time shall be no more.

We might multiply the number of reasons for deciding that the mind of Paul with which he served the law of God was not the same which he testified was not, and could not be, subject to that law; but the foregoing are deemed sufficient. With this expression of our view it will hardly be necessary to say that we do not believe that the carnal mind is changed, or that the regeneration of the children of God changes their carnal mind. Their carnal minds will remain in their nature, like the Canaanites in the walls, until the earthly house of their tabernacles shall be dissolved and fall. Such a carnal mind was detected by Paul as existing in the saints at Corinth; and such a carnal mind is also found in all the children of God while on earth.

The second general inquiry of brother Trott is in reference to believers sinning, and being wretched, &c. David was a child of God and a believer; he had faith in God and looked for a Deliverer to come out of Zion to turn away ungodliness from Jacob; and David was justly charged with having sinned in the case of Bathsheba and Uriah. David demonstrated and exemplified the existence of a carnal mind in his policy to deceive Uriah and afterwards to slay him, as also in the case of numbering Israel; and for all this David was made to feel a deep conviction of his guilt, and a severe sense of wretchedness on account of it.

So also in the case of Peter. It was not with that mind with which he served the law of God, but with his fleshly or carnal mind that he denied the Lord; and he, although undoubtedly a child of God, an apostle of Jesus, did feel wretched and wept bitterly on account of his sin and folly. Believers are subject to repentance, contrition and bitterness of spirit frequently on account of their departure from the precepts of their Lord Jesus Christ; otherwise we know nothing of the real exercise of christians, or the true import of the testimony of the Scriptures on the subject.

In reply to the third general question, we answer, The Spirit of God's Son in believers is a spirit of holiness, and is the same in all believers; for there is one body and one spirit, even as they are called in one hope of their calling; and that spirit of holiness is always opposed to sin, or it would not be what it is, a spirit of holiness. It is both consistent and avoidable that as a believer should loathe sin in himself and in others, and as he feels more of it in himself than he can see in others, his distress is chiefly on account of what he feels within. The greater and clearer his views are of the goodness of God to him, the more fully and sensibly will he feel and mourn and loathe his inbred depravity; for the goodness of God leadeth him to repentance. Whatever may be the privilege of others, we have to confess that we cannot speak of ourselves but to speak of our poverty, wretchedness and guilt. And we believe it is expedient to so speak of ourselves, in order to illustrate the sovereign efficacy of that "Grace which saved a wretch so vile," as also for the encouragement of others who know the evil of their hearts.

SANCTIFICATION.

SISTER Eliza M. Hollingsworth, of Woodland, California, has requested our views on "Sanctification." In response we will say that in the SIGNS for August 1st, 1894, No. 31, there is a lengthy article from us upon this subject. Our sister speaks of having taken the SIGNS for more than thirty years, and expresses her pleasure in it. We suppose that she has the number to which we have referred. As we wrote so recently upon this subject, we would prefer not to write at this time, as we should cover about the same ground. We desire to comply with any requests of our brethren when it is in our power to do so, but for the reason named above we trust our sister will excuse us now. Surely the children of God must all feel as our sister has written, too poor, too vile and too helpless to ever dare claim any perfection in the flesh while they abide in this world. Job said, "If I say, I am perfect, it shall also prove me perverse." No person claiming perfection can be in fellowship with Job.

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE.

TO MOST of our readers the above mentioned book is too well known to need any introduction or a description by us. While many of the Bibles have a Concordance appended, they are generally so condensed or abridged as to be of little or no use. Cruden's Complete Concordance, however, enables one to readily turn to any passage of Scripture of which they can call to mind two or three words, and in our opinion is the most complete and convenient as a reference book of any published. In addition, it contains many other aids in studying the Bible, as may be seen by reference to advertisement on last page. Remember, both the books there mentioned are CRUDEN'S COMPLETE.

DE LAND, Fla., March 12, 1895.

DEAR BRETHREN:—I send you a letter from brother William Hobensack for publication in the SIGNS. I send it because it expresses a feeling of especial interest in the church, a strong desire for her welfare and prosperity, and a love and fellowship for the people of God, which it is very comforting to the brethren generally to witness in the heart of any one, and especially in the younger members, who are so liable to be led away by the claims of business or pleasure, appealing to the animation of youth, from the superior claims of the kingdom of God. Such feelings of true spiritual zeal and love are not at our command, nor due to any merit or effort on our part, but are the gift and work of the Spirit of God in the heart; and it is a great cause for thanksgiving to the God of all grace to feel them in our own hearts, or see them manifested in others. It is by the power of his Spirit that the dear Savior says to his dear children individually what he has caused to be written of his words while in the flesh, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." When a living soul tries to make other things first, darkness, coldness and death follow. "He gave them their request, but sent leanness into their souls." Then, when they learn the vanity of earthly things, and the terrors of disobedience, and also learn how unable they are to work obedience in their own hearts, in his own time and way he works in them the blessed experience of this word, to will and to do of his good pleasure; and they sweetly realize that heavenly things are first indeed, and are the only source of real comfort and joy.

How many have had a pleasant and promising morning in the church, manifesting love and zeal for the good of Zion, and showing a good gift for usefulness to the household of faith, and then have gradually and almost unconsciously given way, step by step, to the insidious inroads of worldly things, to the advancing claims of business, that made themselves appear very necessary and not at all dangerous, until the place of spiritual things in the affections seemed to be almost entirely usurped by the world, and spiritual joy and peace and love and comfort seemed to be almost driven out of the poor heart by worldly care, and covetous hankerings, and fierce strugglings after worldly advantages, and a vague unrest, and a certain fearful apprehension of evil and danger, knowing that the right way has been turned away from some distance back.

It has been such a comfort and encouragement to me to read this letter, and these sincere expressions of love and anxiety for the church, and to see the evidence that the dear Savior has kept his love from being smothered in the heart by the care and labor of a heavy business, but has given such especial experiences of its power as are here manifested. What a blessing it is to a member of the church of God to be made to remember that a living soul cannot possibly receive any real enjoyment from treasures laid up on earth. The moth and rust and thieves will effectually prevent that. But treasures laid up in heaven, which are the result of every act of obedience to the commands of Jesus, of every church privilege employed and every spiritual duty done, of every portion of time redeemed, because the days are evil, of every expression of love and forbearance and forgiveness, and of every act and word in mortification of the flesh, denying self and taking up the cross, these remain untouched by any destroying power for our comfort and enjoyment; not for the gratification of the flesh, not to cause boasting and pride, but as bringing more and more closely about us the sweet tokens of the Savior's love, and as keeping more in our souls the fragrance of his blessed name and the joys of his salvation.

Brother Will is far from thinking of such a thing as any part of this letter being published; but as it is about things of common interest to all the people of God he will not object to it, though he will feel a great deal of shrinking. May the dear Lord fulfill the wishes here expressed for the good of the church at Southampton, and of all the churches of the saints, and cause them to manifest the graces of the Spirit, love and forgiveness and mercy and forbearance, and to strive together for the faith of the gospel, and to grow up together in him in all things, which is the Head, even Christ.

The unusually cold winter in Florida everybody has heard of, and the general destruction of the oranges and other fruits, and of the trees, and the great loss that has resulted to almost everybody. It is a sad sight. There is general gloom in the community on account of it. The weather has become pleasant of late, and the beneficial effects of it begin to be felt by the sick. I hope to be at home again by the second Saturday in April, the time of our church meeting, if the Lord will. My dear wife and children will be with me, if the condition of her health makes it appear prudent to me; if not, she will delay her return until a later season.

Your brother in the hope of the gospel,

SILAS H. DURAND.

IVYLAND, Pa., March 3, 1895.

DEAR ELDER DURAND AND FAMILY:—Your kind letter came to hand yesterday morning. I have been thinking very much about you, and was very glad to hear from you. I have just been to meeting, and am at present feeling very solemn at heart, thinking much about the welfare of the church of God. Sometimes it seems to me that it is getting very much scattered at Southampton; but my whole desire and prayer is that Zion may be seen there, and that the members at Southampton shall meet more together, and walk in and about her, telling the old, old story of Jesus and his love. We had a very good meeting to-day, but not many there. I hope that Mrs. Durand may recover, so that she will never have to leave us again; and you, too. We feel the loss, especially of our pastor. I often think that I do not appreciate him enough when he is with us; but you know this world is a very busy one, being a continuous tumult, and things transpiring to draw one's mind from the weightier matters of the soul. But I must say that to-night my whole being is filled with that lustrous light which shines brighter and brighter unto the perfect day. What I mean is this, that I am filled with the love of God toward the whole church of God, and that his people, wherever they are, I feel in fellowship with them. There are very few times in my life when I can say this, as most of my time is spent in a feeling of condemnation, and of not being able to think that I have any right to fellowship with God's people; but when the love of God is shed abroad in one's heart it pushes out all malice and bad feeling of any kind whatever, and makes him exclaim with a holy boldness that his only desire is that he may live as the people of God should live, and forgive. O might the love of God be in all our hearts at Southampton, and we be drawn by that love toward one another, so that we might grow up together strong in the faith. But such a worm of the dust am I! The world round about me is doing great things for the Lord, and poor me has to stand still and see what great things the Lord has done for me. The only difference I am able to see is that in my case the great God keeps me going on from day to day, and they keep the Lord going on in his work from day to day. The contrast is great, but so it is with a natural man and a spiritual man. Woe unto the man who tries to steal the power from him who sitteth on the throne, whose power is in his word, and who can make worlds bow to his command.

Very much of late I have been thinking about the great power of God. We do not often think about that in our everyday life, or at least I am prone to wander from thinking about it. He is the mighty God, who ruleth in the heavens and among the inhabitants of the earth, and none can say, "What doest thou?" I was at a funeral here, where the speaker seemed to think we had a very great God, and a God of power; but the trouble with him was that he seemed to think also that man was a little greater, and that he could resist God's calling. I must say that I always am drawn toward one when he acknowledges that God is great and has all power; but it always spoils the thing when he gets man a little higher. That settles the matter with me as to his knowing anything about God's greatness, love and power.

Now, dear brother Durand, you told me something about Florida, but did not write me much about your spiritual feelings. Do not forget to write me and tell me how you feel spiritually. As I said before, I was glad even to hear from you at all. I did not think when I started out that I would say very much, and it may be that I have not. I hope I have not said anything amiss. I hope the Lord will take care of you and your family, and renew their health, and give us your speedy return. We are all very well. Mary and the children send their love to you all.

Your brother in hope,

WM. HOBENSACK.

WILLARD, Va., Feb., 1895.

DEAR BROTHER BEEBE:—The inclosed letter from our young brother Ker I submit to you to dispose of as you may deem best. I will add a few thoughts to what he has so well expressed on the subject.

The walk of a man is always an evidence of his character. If one is found frequenting race-courses, ball-rooms, gambling dens and dram-shops, we conclude that his delight is in those things, and we should not judge him to be a christian; he is not walking with the disciples of Jesus, but after the flesh.

If one walks as a Pharisee, seeking righteousness by the deeds of the law, trusting in himself that he is righteous, his hope of salvation being what he himself does, he, too, cannot be classed with the disciples of Jesus, but with those yet under the law, and consequently yet under its curse, or under condemnation. "As many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God."—Rom. viii. 14. When one is led by the Spirit, his walk is after the Spirit, and the Spirit brings to view the work of Jesus. It reveals a full and complete salvation in him, and his Spirit dwells in them. They are now alive from the dead, and hence turn from dead works to serve the living God, and exhibit in their walk that they have been taught of the Lord; and this teaching gives them knowledge of their sinful and lost condition, through the disobedience of their federal head, Adam. It also reveals their salvation fully secured through the obedience of him who is their life. Their walk and conversation is in evidence of this teaching; for their praise is now of God, and not of men. They sing the new song, even praise to our God.

Your brother in hope,

A. B. FRANCIS.

DELMAR, Del., Feb. 1, 1895.

DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST:—I have been very much impressed for several days with a passage of Scripture which has afforded me great comfort, and I hope you will bear with me while I try to tell you of some precious thoughts which I hope have been revealed to me through these words, "There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit."—Rom. viii. 1. What a glorious comfort there is in this passage of Scripture to a trembling child of God when he is brought to a sense of his utter dependence upon the grace and mercy of God for life eternal. "There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus." If in Christ, then we are freed from the law of sin and death. If so, then we are not dead, but alive in Christ Jesus, who loved us and gave himself for us. He says, "I am the Vine, ye are the branches." Then we are a part of his glorious body, in whom there is no sin, but truth and life. The branch is fed and has all its life through the vine. So is the child of God fed and has his life eternal through Christ Jesus, and without him there is no life in them. He is over all and in all, and without him we can do nothing. "Who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit." We hear the trembling one say, "I am troubled on every side. I feel myself to be a vile sinner, unworthy of God's goodness and mercy. I fear my fleshly lusts and desires will lead me to walk after the flesh rather than after the Spirit." With Paul they say, "What I hate, that I do." It is written that if any hate not his own life he cannot be a disciple of Jesus. I hope we do hate our own lives on account of sin that dwells in our flesh. Fear and trembling, doubt, weakness, sinfulness, unworthiness, trials and afflictions have been the experience of God's children through all ages, and their only hope has been and is to-day in Christ Jesus. This hope is more precious than all else beside. Paul says, "It is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me." What a glorious comfort it is when a child of God in his sinfulness and weakness and unworthiness is made to realize, It is no more I that live, but Christ that liveth in me. How they exalt the precious name of Jesus, and with the poet say,

"If asked what of Jesus I think
(Though still my best thoughts are but poor),
I say, He's my meat and my drink,
My life, and my strength, and my store;
My Shepherd, my Husband, my Friend,
My Savior from sin and from thrall;
My hope from beginning to end,
My portion, my Lord and my all."

The name of Jesus is above all others with the child of God. You hear him say, "It is all of Jesus." "For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death."

I will close, hoping I have not wearied you in reading what I hope the Lord has instructed me to write. Your unworthy brother in hope of eternal life in Christ Jesus,

H. CLAUDE KER.

HAYMON, Ala., March 2, 1895.

MY DEAR BRETHREN IN THE LORD, I HOPE:—It has been a long time since I wrote you, and now I want to give you humble thanks for your kindness to us. We love so much to read your paper, the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, which we have read so long; and we find it still contends for the only truth there is; for there is only one truth given, and only one word of truth. Elder Gilbert Beebe contended for that through the idolatrous storm, and he is now reaping his reward. I hope, if it is God's will, you will reap your reward with him.

Now, brethren and friends who read the SIGNS, I want to talk to you a little, and do not think hard of me. Brother Beebe gives us a heap of good reading matter, and we love to get the paper when we go after it. If we do not we are disappointed; and he loves to get the money when he goes after it. Now, all you who owe him anything, send it right on. You know he needs it. Brethren, all you who have not paid him, sit down and study if you could not have left off some fine clothes, or not went to some place of entertainment, or not made that fine wedding, or not went into some secret idolatry, like I have done, for which I am sorry, and have been beaten with many stripes. You know it takes money to run a paper, and you know brother Beebe gives many papers to the poor saints. Now send on the amount due, and do not beat me too hard for writing this.

Brother Beebe, I want you to publish this, correct all mistakes, and pardon error.

Your humble brother, I hope,

JOSEPH CHANDLER.

COLUMBUS GROVE, Ohio, Feb. 4, 1895.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS OF THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES:—As I have finished the business portion of my letter I feel like adding a word in praise and thanksgiving to our bountiful Father in heaven for putting it into the minds of Elders F. A. Chick and Benton Jenkins to take charge of the editorial department of our dear family paper. I have for years read with much comfort the wonderful truth as it flowed from the pens of these undershepherds. Brethren, all hail! May he who created the boundless universe, and who holds everything in his own powerful hand, continue to so fill you with his Spirit that you may be enabled to henceforth proclaim the wonderful works of God, to the comfort and edifying of God's poor and afflicted saints.

Yours in bonds of love and fellowship, I hope,

DIANA MORRIS.

MARRIAGES.

IN the Old School Baptist meeting-house in Salisbury, Md., by Elder A. B. Francis, March 13th, 1895, Mr. Robert W. Staton and Miss Ida M. Huston, both of Salisbury.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

William Flatford was born Dec. 13th, 1836, and departed this life Oct. 25th, 1894, aged 57 years, 10 months and 12 days.

He leaves a wife, one son and several daughters to mourn after him; but their loss is his gain. The writer has been acquainted with him about twenty years, and believes that he is at rest. His house was always a home for the Primitive Baptists ever since I have known him, but he always said he was unworthy of a name with them. His wife is a true Primitive Baptist. May the Lord protect the family through this unfriendly world, and at last take them to rest around his dazzling throne, to praise him forever, whose mercy endureth forever.

Your unworthy brother in hope of eternal life, which God, who cannot lie, promised before the world began,

D. WESTALL.

GREENBRIER, Ark., Jan. 18, 1895.

Deacon Green M. Swinney died at the home of his son, V. B. Swinney, in Washington Co., Oregon, Feb. 26th, 1895.

Brother Swinney was born in Mercer Co., W. Va., July 21st, 1823, was married to Louisa C. Peters in November, 1852, joined the Primitive Baptist Church called Rich Creek, Mercer Co., W. Va., and soon afterward went into the constitution of a new church called Salem, and was chosen Deacon by that church, which office he filled with credit to himself and the church as long as he lived. In 1868 he moved to Missouri, and in 1879 to Kansas, and from there to Oregon in 1888, settling in Washington County, where he and his wife put their letters in the New Hope Church of Old School Baptists, where they lived honored and beloved members to the day of his death.

I have been acquainted with brother Swinney for three or four years, and there grew up a love between us somewhat like that between David and Jonathan. I never knew a brother that I thought more of than I did of him. I was with him a great deal the last few months of his life, and he would often shed tears when we were compelled to separate. He was only sick a few days before his death, but suffered a great deal up to within a few hours of his departure, but bore it with christian fortitude. I was called to his bedside a few hours before he died, and when he saw me he smiled, which showed that he was glad that I was with him. In a short time he passed away, just like one going to sleep; and indeed it was, for I am sure he fell asleep in the arms of his blessed Master. On the 18th he was taken to the New Hope church-house, where in the presence of many sorrowing friends I tried to speak a few words of comfort from 1 Corinthians xv. 19; after which all that was mortal was laid away to rest until that glorious morn when the trump of God shall awake the sleeping dead, when we hope to meet our brother where there will be no more parting nor shedding of tears. "So shall we ever be with the Lord."

D. W. BRIDGES.

John D. Newton was born in Stafford Co., Va., Sept. 3d, 1822, and died at his home in Pickaway Co., Ohio, March 4th, 1895, aged 72 years, 6 months and 1 day.

He was of southern parentage, and lived at his birthplace until he was ten years old, at which time he with relatives came to Ohio, and settled in Pickaway County, where he resided until his death. He was united in marriage with Miss Laura A. Peters, daughter of Absalom and Famah Peters, on March 9th, 1845. This union was blessed with eleven children, eight sons and three daughters, nine of whom are still living. His long illness and very great suffering were borne with much patience and longing for rest. He made no profession of religion, but was a firm believer in the doctrine of salvation by grace alone, through the righteousness of Christ imputed, and had no confidence in the flesh, nor in a religion that is produced by the creature. "Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ is born of God." His place of attending worship was the Primitive Baptist Church at Turkey Run.

His funeral was on Wednesday, the 6th, and was largely attended by his many friends and neighbors, by whom he was very highly respected as a neighbor and citizen, and as a very upright, honorable and good man. He was a faithful and kind husband, and a loving and indulgent father, whose departure is mourned with much sorrow.

The writer of this notice endeavored to speak words of comfort to the sorrowing friends and neighbors; after which his remains were taken to the beautiful Reber Cemetery, and laid to rest until the trump of God shall awaken them, and they shall come forth in the image and likeness of Christ.

G. N. TUSING.

DIED—At the house of her brother-in-law, A. B. Hankins, our dear sister, Martha Balding. She was born March 2d, 1868, and departed this life Dec. 8th, 1894, aged 26 years, 9 months and 6 days.

She received a hope in Christ when about eighteen years old, and oftentimes thought of joining the Old, Regular Baptist Church. She was deprived of the privilege of going to their meetings, or she would have joined them. She oftentimes expressed how well she loved them. She went to make her home with one of her brothers, where there was no Old Baptist Church, and during the time she was there she was married to John M. Balding. Her maiden name was Bevins. They moved to the Russell Fork of Louisa River, where there was Missionary Baptist preaching, and she joined them. I talked with her on the subject, and in the conversation I asked her the cause of her joining them. She said she thought the preacher preached more like our Old Baptist preachers than any one she had ever heard. A short time after this she was taken sick with consumption, and said all along through her sickness that she would not get well, but was willing to die—willing for the Lord's will to be done. Her husband moved her to her brother-in-law's, in sight of where she was raised, the place where she wanted to die and be buried. She lived about eight weeks after she went there. She bore her sickness with patience and christian fortitude. Notwithstanding she was so weak and feeble, she prayed and praised God daily. I staid with her the last week of her life, and she praised the Lord until the very last. She said, "Do not grieve after me, for I am going to heaven." Near her last she said, "O Jesus, take me home!" and then laid her head on her pillow and fell asleep in the arms of her dear Redeemer. It was heart-rending to give her up; but we sorrow not as those who have no hope, for we are well satisfied that our loss is her eternal gain.

She has left a dear husband, one little daughter, four brothers and four sisters, her father and many relatives, her mother having preceded her to the eternal world many years ago. May the Lord bless this dispensation of his providence to the bereaved friends. Her sister,

MARY RUNYAN.

We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date. This date denotes the time at which your subscription expires; and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. PICTORIAL HISTORY

OF THE

UNITED STATES.

By James D. McCabe.

This work is no dry mass of details—no bombastic effort to inflame the national pride, but a vivid and brilliant narrative of the events of our history, from the discovery of the American Continent down to the present time. It gives a most interesting account of the Indians of North America, from the time of the coming of the white men. The voyages of Columbus and explorations and discoveries of the different nations of Europe are related with graphic power. Every step of our colonial history is traced with patient fidelity, and the sources of those noble and, we trust, enduring institutions, which have made our country free and great, are shown with remarkable clearness. Then follows a clear and succinct account of our great Struggle for Independence, and the establishment of the Federal Union—the events of our career from the close of the Revolution to the administration of Harrison.

The work is printed from plain, new type, on fine calendered paper, and comprised in one octavo volume of 960 pages. It is splendidly embellished with nearly 500 fine engravings, embracing battles and other historical scenes, portraits of distinguished men, views of our principal cities, &c., &c.

SOME REQUESTS.

THERE have been requests made of me from time to time, during many years, both privately and through the SIGNS, for my views on portions of the Scripture upon which, when I came to look at them carefully, I could not feel sure that I had any true light. In such cases I have generally let the requests pass without any public answer, thinking it was better to be silent than to try to send out an interpretation when none had been given to me. It has never been out of any disregard for those making such request that I have been silent concerning them. I am sure that what they desire to know will be revealed to them in the right time, so far as will be for their good, and the Lord will have all the praise.

It is now in my mind to notice a few requests for my views on portions of Scripture, and say what may be in my mind concerning them.

"For therefore we both labor and suffer reproach, because we trust in the living God, who is the Savior of all men, specially of those that believe."—1 Tim. iv. 10.

D. F. Atterbury, of Modesto, Ill., asks me to give my views through the SIGNS upon this, and especially to say in what sense I think our Lord is the Savior of all men. Many years ago I heard a most powerful and faithful preacher of the gospel, long since gone home, preach on this subject; and he spoke of God being the Savior of all men in the sense that he saved them from dangers to the natural life, from sickness, losses, oppression by enemies and the like, while the special salvation to them that believe was the salvation of the Lord's people from their sins by the death of Christ.

The sermon was good and spiritual, and I accepted this interpretation unquestioningly. But of late I have questioned it. While it is true that if any one is saved from any temporal danger of any kind, it is the Lord who saves him, yet that would not warrant the use of the expression "the Savior of all men," in this temporal sense. If there is a war, and ten out of one hundred come through that war safely, having received no bodily harm, while the rest were slain, the Lord was the Savior of those ten men from wounds or death in that war, but he was not the Savior of all men, for ninety were not saved. It can be said that all the men now upon the earth have been saved by the Lord thus far from death, but every moment thousands are dying in one way or another, while other thousands are suffering from various forms of affliction and distress; so that he cannot be said to be the Savior of all men, in this sense, for all men are not saved; and in the end none are saved: all will die.

The title, Savior, has not, that I remember, been assumed by the Lord with reference to temporal hopes and deliverances. Throughout the Old and the New Testaments, it appears to me, when that title is used it has reference to the salvation which is through our Lord Jesus Christ. I have come to the conclusion that the apostle here has reference to this salvation of the elect. The expression "all men" is frequently used by the apostle to represent all the people of God, each case representing some special reason for its use. In this case it appears to me that a distinction is presented between the salvation from sin and death unto eternal life, which has been accomplished for all the people of God, and that special salvation which is experienced as the result of belief and obedience. Such a distinction is clearly presented in all the teaching of the gospel, from the very command of the Savior to his apostles to go and preach the gospel. "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; he that believeth not shall be damned."

Whatever we may think concerning the characters here spoken of who believe not, yet those who believe and are baptized do not include all the people of God, for many of them, at various times, do not believe, and through unbelief come short of gospel rest; and many of them are never baptized. Besides, of those who do believe and are baptized the Savior says, they shall be saved. But all for whom Jesus died are already saved, saved before they are called; and they are proper subjects of baptism because they give evidence that they have been saved. This salvation, therefore, which shall follow as the result of baptism must be the special salvation spoken of in the text The apostle speaks in this same connection to Timothy of a salvation that shall result from a faithful attention to his own walk, to the doctrine and to the ministry of it, both to himself and them that hear him. In many other places, and other forms, he speaks of this special salvation from the bondage of error and delusion, from heresies, from disorders, from the terrors of the Lord, who will visit the transgressions of his people with the rod, and their iniquities with stripes.

The apostle gives as the reason why we labor, and also why we suffer reproach, that "we trust in the living God, who is the Savior of all men, especially of them that believe." To insist that the Lord does all the work of salvation of every kind, is a cause for reproach from the world. Yet that is the reason why the Lord's servants have confidence to labor, knowing that whatever the Lord tells them to do he will enable them to do, and he will bless their labor to the good of his people, and to his own glory; for it is he that works in them. Their labor is "in the Lord," and therefore it is not in vain. It is by his command, and not of their own will.

The natural man says, If the Lord does all the work, what need of you working? We answer, That is just the reason. Some say, The Lord has saved his people, but he has left it with them whether they will enjoy that salvation in this life or not. They say, Your salvation from error, and your enjoyment of the blessings of the gospel, depend upon your own works, upon whether you will believe and obey the gospel or not. That is true, but it will always be known by the favored subject of these blessings, and must not be forgotten by those who discuss this subject, that this belief and obedience are the especial and exclusive work of God in the heart.

"Except the Lord build the house they labor in vain that build it." Some say that this means that unless the Lord does his part of the building, which is to furnish the material, to quicken and make alive, the preachers and members cannot do their part, which is to build up the church organization with the material God has furnished. I have heard our churches told that they must go out and hunt up those who are quickened and bring them in: that this was their work, their part in building the house; that they must not say, as some do, "Let them alone until the Lord's time, and then they will come;" that the Lord's time is when they are first made alive. This would be a partnership work very different from what I think the Scriptures teach. The Lord does not work with his people, but in and through them. If he does not work in the ministers and others who labor in the church, building his house, they labor in vain. Apostles and ministers are all laborers together, not with, but under God. "God's laborers together." All the salvation that there is in acts of obedience, in an orderly walk, is God's work. He is the Savior of the believer from whatever would be his sad state in unbelief and disobedience.

I only know of one way to decide as to when God's time is for anything to be done, and that is, when it is done. If there is any possibility of any child of God failing to come into the church in God's time, I do not think the church would be willing to have them come at any other time.

I hope I attach all importance to gospel exhortations and admonitions. I know it is our privilege and duty to exhort one another daily; and that a part of the duty of the preacher of the gospel is to exhort and teach concerning obedience to all the precepts of the gospel. But I do not understand this necessity for gospel exhortation and admonition as indicating that there is a possibility that any of God's purposes of love and mercy will come short of fulfillment, or that any one will fail to receive the blessings that were given him in Christ before the world began. I cannot find language too strong and comprehensive in expressing my understanding of how absolutely God works in his people, "to will and to do of his good pleasure." Inspired language tells how they who come into the gospel land of Judah sing and make melody in their hearts unto the Lord, in acknowledgment of this sovereign power and grace: "Lord, thou wilt ordain peace for us: for thou also hast wrought all our works in us."—Isa. xxvi. 12.

God is the Savior of all men, meaning, I think, all the men of God, all the redeemed, all of his chosen people, both those who are obedient, who believe and obey the gospel, and those who go on for a time in unbelief and disobedience. All alike are the subjects of eternal salvation, while those who believe what the apostles preach unto them, and obey their teachings, and are "followers of God, as dear children," experience the especial salvation referred to in the text, and in many other places. Those who have been saved from apparent danger of temporal death a hundred times, will finally die; so that God cannot be said to be the Savior of any in this sense, except for a very limited time. But those who are subjects of this eternal salvation are saved. God is their Savior in an absolute sense. Some of these may fall through unbelief, while others believe and enter into rest, ceasing from their own works as God did from his.—Heb. iv. 3, 10. Some of them are disobedient, and are visited with stripes, while others believe, obey and are saved from the rod. Some turn from the commandment which was given unto them, disregard the exhortation, and for one morsel of meat sell their birthright, and go into a region of darkness and death. But they are all alike subjects of the eternal salvation of God; and when all needed trials have been experienced by any of them, and all needed chastisements inflicted, and all needed lessons learned, then they will all alike be brought into that salvation in all its glorious fullness, to the praise of the riches of God's grace. And those who have been saved from the sad results of unbelief and disobedience, to enjoy in this mortal state the comfort of a good conscience, the consolations of the Spirit, the fellowship of the saints, and the peace of God which passeth all understanding, know and confess that God alone has made them to differ from another of the redeemed, and that all they have received of him; that he has been their special Savior in causing them to believe and obey his word spoken to them by his servants, favoring them with precious tokens of his love, and thus saving them from the fearful errors of the wicked, and from the awful desolation and terrors of the "outer darkness." Why God works this special salvation in the hearts of some of his dear children, and not in others, bringing some into the joys and comforts of his salvation, in sweet obedience to his commands, to enjoy a sense of his favor, and stand faithfully and firmly on the true foundation in his house, while others are left to walk after the flesh and die to these spiritual joys, we can no more tell than we can tell why he from the beginning chose some of Adam's race to salvation, while others were left as vessels of wrath; why of the same lump he made some vessels unto honor, and some unto dishonor. The only answer ever given to such questions, or that is ever desired by the spiritual mind, is that which the dear Savior expressed, "Even so, Father, for so it seemed good in thy sight."

We should remember that the Lord's people are not moved in acts of true spiritual obedience by the hope of reward, or fear of punishment. There is a deeper incentive, a purer motive, within them than that which actuates the natural man. The fear of the Lord, which is to hate evil, is within each one of God's children, as "a fountain of life to depart from the snares of death." They have all the fleshly propensities and motives to action, too, and are liable to be led by them, and are often in great perplexity as to which they are moved by, the flesh or the Spirit. They know that "the fear of the Lord is clean," and that no other motive or principle will lead them into that which is clean and pure, "enduring forever."—Psalm xix. 9. The likes and dislikes of the Spirit of Christ which is in them are what move the Lord's people in all work that is acceptable to God, and not the likes and dislikes of their fleshly nature; and it is that divine nature within them that must be appealed to and touched, that pure mind that must be stirred up by way of remembrance of heavenly things, before there can be any true spiritual results. Man cannot reach to this depth by any words of his own, nor can even the child of God, of himself, think of any motive so perfectly pure as to be absolutely separated from any hope of reward or fear of punishment. And therefore some of the dear children of God, and preachers of the gospel, are ready to question and reject an interpretation of Scripture which does not recognize any threat of punishment, or offer of reward, as employed by the Lord in drawing his people to himself, and leading them in the paths of righteousness for his name's sake. There seems to be a fear with some that christians would not follow after righteousness if selfish fear or favor were not appealed to. How little we are apt to truly estimate the power of a divine and endless life, with its pure and holy desires. When God revives his work he touches and stirs up this holy nature which he has put within us. Then what groanings on account of sin, what cries for mercy, what hungerings and thirstings after righteousness, what reachings forth after the things which are before, what hatred and loathing of self, what forgetfulness of the world, and what a longing for the things of God. "The love of Christ constraineth us," says the apostle.

Having written so much more than I intended upon this, I will leave other requests for consideration hereafter. May the Lord lead us into all truth.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS OF THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES:—The apostle said, "Without controversy great is the mystery of godliness: God was manifest in the flesh."—1 Tim. iii. 16. Perhaps I worry the readers of the SIGNS by my too frequent communications to that paper; but I hope they will pardon me. The greatest pleasure I now have is found when I am with my pen or pencil talking to the dear saints and recounting to them in my feeble way the beauties and glories of that great kingdom of which our Lord spake when he said, "My kingdom is not of this world." But that great mystery, God manifest in the flesh, will never be unlocked to the saints till they are disrobed of mortality. It is too deep and profound for human thought to fathom. Our Lord took upon himself that body, that flesh and blood, of which the apostle speaks, saying, "Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part of the same."—Heb. ii. 14. He did not take the flesh and blood of the celestial hosts around the eternal throne, if they had any; but he took part of the flesh and blood of those children who were given to him in the everlasting covenant of redemption, ordered in all things and sure. Hence the apostle says that he took part of the same, that his unity with them might be complete. In viewing this great and wonderful mystery the apostle said, "For he hath made him [Christ] to be sin for us, who knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him." It was in that unity with him that they were made the righteousness of God. He knew no sin; but by reason of that unity he came under the law and was made sin; not made to commit sin, but made to suffer the penalty of sin, which was death; and by that suffering his chosen people were redeemed from under that curse, and made the righteousness of God in him. Without that unity justice could not have been satisfied. Justice cannot be satisfied by the punishment of one who bears no relationship to the offender, the violater of law. It could not be just for brother Chick to be compelled to pay the debts contracted by my wife; nor would it be just, if I were to commit a murder, for the court to adjudge that brother Chick should be executed for that crime; neither would the law be satisfied if my right hand, with which I committed that crime, were to be amputated and offered to the court in satisfaction of that offense; but the relation that my hand bears to my head subjects the head to the penalty of the law which was violated by the commission of that crime. The apostle says, "For the husband is the head of the wife, even as Christ is the head of the church; and he is the Savior of the body." Again, "And hath put all things under his feet, and gave him to be the head over all things to the church, which is his body, the fullness of him that filleth all in all." That church was the fullness of him that filleth all in all; and when Christ, who is the head of that body, the church, suffered the penalty of the law, which was death, and arose from the tomb, justice was satisfied and the body was redeemed from under the curse of the law. The prophet says, when beholding afar off by prophetic vision the complete consummation of the great work of redemption, "As for thee also, by the blood of thy covenant I have sent forth thy prisoners out of the pit wherein is no water." The waters of salvation never flowed in the prison-house of the law till the great Head of the church offered himself without spot unto God for her redemption. He says by the prophet, "The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me; because the Lord hath anointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek; he hath sent me to bind up the broken-hearted to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound." His body, his church, was in the prison-house of the law; and when he, the head of the church, offered himself without spot to God, liberty was proclaimed to those captives and they were made free indeed. "If the son make you free, ye shall be free indeed." Elihu said to Job, when speaking of this great and wonderful ransom, "If there be a messenger with him, an interpreter, one among a thousand, to shew unto man his uprightness, then he is gracious unto him, and saith, Deliver him from going down to the pit: I have found a ransom." That ransom was none other than the great head of the church; and you, dear saints, are the body, and members in particular of that church for whom that ransom price was paid. The apostle says, "What! know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost, which is in you, which ye have of God, and ye are not your own? For ye are bought with a price; therefore glorify God in your body and in your spirit, which are God's." Again, "He [Christ] is the Savior of the body." That salvation will be complete when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality. Then will be fulfilled the saying, "O death [which is the last enemy], where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" Then

"How will our joy and wonder rise,
When our returning King
Shall bear us homeward through the skies
On love's triumphant wings."

But the mystery of God manifest in the flesh still remains. We might talk to each other for ages and centuries about the great and glorious things accomplished by that manifestation, and still remain as ignorant of that mystery as we were when we began. Still the saints in their experiences have a manifestation of that revelation. I have quoted, "What! know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost, which is in you, which ye have of God?" Paul speaks of the mystery which is now manifested to the saints, and says, "To whom [to those saints] God would make known what is the riches of the glory of this mystery among the Gentiles, which is Christ in you the hope of glory." In the spiritual birth Christ is revealed in all his saints the hope of glory; but to them this is a mystery. Our Lord said to Nicodemus, "The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh and whither it goeth; so is every one that is born of the Spirit." The new birth is evidently a revelation of God in his saints. In that birth Christ is revealed in them the hope of glory. That revelation is "not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts." All their might, all their power, has been vainly exerted to secure that wonderous revelation, and when it was made in them it was a mystery; a mystery why God, who is infinitely holy, should reveal himself to them and in them, who were made by the Spirit's power to see and know that they were all over polluted with sin, were in debt a thousand talents and had nothing to pay, and cause them to rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory; yes, rejoice in the manifestation of the love of God in removing from them the load of guilt that to them had long a burden been. The saints while here below are often oppressed by the presence of sin in their mortal bodies, and are made to mourn because of the glorious light revealing to them their sins. Then with Hezekiah they can say, "Like a crane or a swallow, so did I chatter; I did mourn as a dove; mine eyes fail with looking upward. O Lord, I am oppressed; undertake for me." Then to you vain is the help of man, and your cry is, "O Lord, I am oppressed; undertake for me." Your faith causes you to utter that prayer and to look to none other than your glorious Lord, knowing that he is a present help in time of trouble. But still God manifest in the flesh is a mystery to them. They know that all their fleshly desires look to this world; yet they know also that their purest joys, their greatest delights, have been when this world with all its fading glory has receded from their vision, and they have been by grace divine enabled to behold the beauties and glories that shine forth in the character of their dear Redeemer. In days past he was to them as a root out of dry ground, without form or comeliness that they should desire him. But now, when they by the Spirit's power are enabled to behold him as the Lord our righteousness, the Lord our resurrection and our life, they are persuaded that a great change has been wrought in them. But to them that is a mystery. They know that in times past the glories of this world were their chief delights; but now with true joy they turn from the things of a vain world, and in an ecstacy of delight cry out, "The Lord is my Shepherd, I shall not want." They often ask themselves, Why this change? Ah, dear brother, dear sister, the love, mercy and grace bestowed upon the saints is a mystery to them. They know they have not merited any of those glorious bestowments. With one of their ancient brethren they are made to say and know, "In me, that is, in my flesh, there dwells no good thing." This knowledge is a great and wonderful gift to them. It causes them to come to the Lord in the prayer of the poor penitent. The answer to that prayer is, "Fear not, little flock; it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." This also is to you a mystery, and you inquire, Why does my glorious Lord comfort me with the great and glorious promises of the gospel when I am in darkness, sorrow and deep gloom, meditating upon the corruptions of this mortal body? Those sorrows and afflictions work for you a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory; for it is God that worketh in you to will and to do of his good pleasure. It is then that God, the Holy Ghost, that is in you, by his power enables you to see and know the dark deformity of sin; and when you are lowest down, then in mercy are you lifted up. It is thus that you journey onward toward the tomb, sometimes in joy, sometimes in sorrow. But you remember that your glorious Lord was a man of sorrow and acquainted with grief, and journeyed onward to the tomb, and arose a mighty conqueror, and in joy ascended up on high; all, all that you might reign with him in glory. All these things are to the natural man wonders, deep mysteries. But to you, dear saints, the darkness that surrounds those mysteries is often driven back by the light of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ shining in you. That light enables you in an ever precious faith to behold Jesus all glorious in his apparel, walking in the greatness of his strength. Then the mystery of godliness is revealed to your faith, and your joy and rejoicing is to you a mystery, for you know that you merit it not. If you are a mystery to yourselves while in your earthly pilgrimage, is it any wonder that the glorious Son of God, who was manifest in the flesh, is a mystery to you, and will so remain till you are called to lay your armor by and go from these scenes of sorrow, pain, disease and death, to dwell with Christ at home? O may that mystery be more and more unfolded to your spiritual vision as you journey onward, that you may grow in grace and in the knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus, is the sincere prayer of this little one.

Please dispose of these rambling thoughts as you may deem best; and as one standing on the verge of a never ending eternity, oppressed daily by the weight of sin in this poor, mortal body, but sometimes blessed, as I hope, with a faint view of the glories that shine forth in the heavenly home of the children of the kingdom, I remain affectionately yours,

H. COX.

NEAR LEXINGTON, Ky., Feb. 26, 1895.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS OF THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES:—Some years ago I saw in your paper a communication, the writer saying he was willing to give testimony concerning the doctrine the Baptists held. If he had gone a little farther, and said, And of the workings of the Holy Spirit in a sinner, testifying of one Jesus, and the resurrection to life eternal, and stuck to his text, it would have been what I wanted to hear; for I am so deficient in hearing and seeing, and I will say, walking aright, that my poor heart is still demanding and seeking more and more testimony, to know if I am in the right way, the way that leads to God and happiness. But alas! I have failed, by diligent search and a great deal of weary traveling to and fro through this broad land of ours for more than fifty-five years, to get a better evidence of and a surer interest in the atoning blood of Jesus and a blessed resurrection beyond the confines of the tomb. I have thought I had a good hope, and when I could hear a good experimental sermon it would fill me with zeal and strengthen my hope in the workings of the Holy Spirit and the cause of Christ.

"But now my soul in darkness mourns,
For Jesus hides his face;
I read, the promise meets my eyes,
But will not reach my case."

My prayers are but a chattering noise, yet I plead and long for some evidence that it will be well with me at last. Yes, I wish it made plain to my senses or vision; but reason and all else fails to give the evidence I seek. I read that the kingdom of God cometh not with observation; and if it were not for the little hope I have, I would entirely despair. It yet holds me, and leads me back to the hole of the pit whence I was digged, for comfort, consolation and joy. Shall I dare give you a reason of the hope I have of a blessed resurrection? In the summer of 1839 I was made to see myself a sinner of a hideous type, the sight was so terrific. All my sins loomed up before me in an instant, and I was personifying each one in a great panoramic view of them all. Just opposite these, in full view of them, was the most exalted personage and character my eyes ever beheld. I was perfectly ravished with the sight on one hand, and mortified and ashamed on the other, with great confusion, lamentation and sorrow. Horror seized me. It was evident and imminent that hell was my portion, and that something had to be done quickly, else I was gone, world without end. O! the anguish, the heart burnings. I saw plainly I had broken the law of God, and vengeance now had hold of me, carrying me to eternal woe and misery; yet my prayer was, "Save a trembling sinner, Lord." O! the goodness of God was so wonderful, and I so great a sinner, the contrast was awful. To make amends for my past sins was the one all powerful desire; to cleanse myself from sin and its polluting effects was all and in all to me. I strove with mind and soul to be fitted to live and reign with God. I searched the Scriptures, thinking that in them I might find a quietus for all my ills. If I could know I was Abraham's child or descendant, that would be enough, for I read that the promises were to Abraham and his seed. But after reading sacred and profane history of every class and kind for more than two years, I could get no hope or comfort, and things became vague and indefinite, looking and waiting for something to turn up, that my poor, disconsolate heart might have rest. I went far and near to hear all kinds of preaching and doctrine. All of a sudden (I do not recollect whether night or day) I heard distinctly a voice, saying, "Look unto me, look unto me, all the ends of the earth, and be ye saved; for I am God, and beside me there is no Savior." I turned around and saw plainly hanging on the tree of the cross Jesus, a name before this I hated, but now as revealed most precious. The sight suffused me with rapturous delight, and immediately my hope seized him as a propitiation of sin; yea, for life and immortal joys. And here my hope still clings, and will not let up, although I have many a time set it aside, and asked God to give me another evidence, or let me see all this over again, that I may know how and whence it came and whither it went. O! if I could just hold it, and look at it good, then I would know indeed all about it, and would never be uneasy again. Yet I recollect reading that John the Baptist sent two of his disciples and said unto Jesus, "Art thou he that should come, or look we for another?" And Jesus only sent him word, "The blind receive their sight, and the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, the deaf hear, the dead are raised," &c. I would have thought John had evidence enough of his Messiahship; but, poor man! I am like him, want it a little stronger and a little more, to be certain and without doubt. Many a time I wish I could have been there, to have seen all these things for myself, what Jesus and the apostles did. Then I would have no doubt, and would be satisfied. Although I read that many saw the mighty works which Jesus performed, and yet believed not, and frankly admitted that no other man could do them, yet I hardly think it would be that way with me. I feel sure I would be convinced, although the Scriptures are so plain and outspoken that the kingdom of God is not with observation. If I could see it, surely it would be more satisfactory to my faint hope and weak faith. But alas! poor me, I seek and find not the consolation I wish for. Yes, I know the wind blows where it pleases, &c.

But, to return to the subject, finally I went to hear an Old Baptist preacher who, I was told, would preach at an old sister's house in Lexington, where a few of that class met occasionally for worship. In his

AN APPEAL.

WE have been pained to learn that in some sections of the country some churches have been making the doctrine of the predestination of all things a test of fellowship. We have been anxious that brethren should be forbearing to each other, even though they could not see eye to eye upon this matter. We have not heard of any churches who hold this doctrine declaring non-fellowship for those who do not hold it; but we have heard that in several instances churches who do not hold it have closed their pulpits against those who do hold it, and in some instances have declared non-fellowship for ministers who believe and preach it. We can but feel sad at such news; and we can but protest, and beseech brethren to pause and consider all that is involved in this action. While we suppose it is generally known that we personally believe that God has predestinated all things whatsoever come to pass, yet we have never felt like rejecting a brother because he could not see his way clear to accept it. None of our churches that accept this doctrine have ever, so far as we know among all our eastern associations, excluded a brother for not believing it. We therefore think that we can with good ground appeal to those churches of whom we have heard the reports stated at the head of this article to pause and consider all that is involved in what they are doing.

In declaring non-fellowship for those who believe in the predestination of all things they are also declaring non-fellowship for the hundred or more Baptist Churches which by messengers met in London in 1689, and among other good and wholesome things declared the following as their faith with regard to God's decrees: "God hath decreed in himself from all eternity, by the most wise and holy counsel of his own will, freely and unchangeably, all things whatsoever come to pass; yet so as thereby is God neither the author of sin, nor hath fellowship with any therein; nor is violence offered to the will of the creature, nor yet is the liberty or contingency of second causes taken away, but rather established, in which appears his wisdom in disposing all things, and power and faithfulness in accomplishing his decrees."—Hassell's Church History, page 670. We have omitted scriptural references. This was adopted by the Philadelphia Baptist Association in 1742; also the Charleston Association, in South Carolina, in 1751, and the Kehukee Association, in North Carolina, in 1765, were organized upon the basis of this same London Confession.

Are brethren willing to declare non-fellowship for their brethren during these past two centuries in London, in Philadelphia, in South Carolina and in North Carolina? Surely no one has ever stated his faith in the doctrine of predestination any more strongly than in the above sentence, which we quote again: "God hath decreed in himself from all eternity, by the most wise and holy counsel of his own will, freely and unchangeably, all things whatsoever come to pass."

We hope that all our readers will carefully note that we are not here entering into an argument to prove the doctrine true. If this were our object we should not quote the London nor any other Confession as authority, but appeal to Scripture alone. Our only design is to urge upon brethren the fact that in declaring non-fellowship for those who hold this doctrine now, they are also cutting off our former brethren during all these past two centuries.

Coming down to a more recent date, we would call attention to another fact. When, sixty-three years ago, at Black Rock, Md., sound Bible Baptists declared their withdrawal from all the vagaries of Arminianism, which like a moth had eaten the beauty and glory all away from many Baptist Churches, one of the principles of faith expressly laid down was that God had from all eternity predestinated all things that came to pass. This doctrine was then advocated by the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. This paper circulated in all parts of the country, among all Old School Baptists, north, south, east and west. This doctrine continued to be advocated as strongly then as it ever has been since. No protest ever came up against it except from New School sources. It is but fair to presume that it was then believed by all where the SIGNS circulated. Those who believe in predestination now, believe no more nor no less than was then believed by all Old Baptists where the SIGNS circulated. Are brethren prepared to declare non-fellowship for all those who fought then against New Schoolism? The arguments against the predestination of all things sound to us who believe the doctrine just like what we have been accustomed to hear from Arminians all our lives. May we not be patiently borne with if we cannot all at once be convinced that their arguments are sound?

We trust that brethren will pause before going farther in this way. We hope that they will be patient with those who cannot all at once give up the faith which has so long been dear to their hearts. It surely is not a crime to believe this doctrine now, any more than it was for our fathers to believe it. Are brethren prepared to say that they have no fellowship for all the churches and brethren in the past of which we have here spoken? No one, we are persuaded, now believes more than that God has unchangeably and freely ordained all things whatsoever come to pass. If this was not heresy in the London Baptists, in the Philadelphia Baptists, in the North and South Carolina Baptists, in the Baptists all over the land in the early years of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, surely it is not heresy now.

We trust our brethren will bear with us in this appeal, and that it may do good, and not harm.

C.

FLESH AND SPIRIT.

IF it were as easy to give correct and satisfactory answers in all cases as to ask knotty and perplexing questions, we could better afford to devote our time and paper to the elucidation of every query that our readers were pleased to propound; but as it is not, our numerous querists have the advantage ground. Children may ask questions which men may find it difficult to answer.

Question 1. "Is it possible for a man to serve God with his spirit, and serve sin with his flesh?"

Answer. Yes, Paul says, Rom. vii. 25, "So then, with the mind I myself serve the law of God, but with the flesh the law of sin." This text is to the point, covers the whole ground, and settles the question to all intents and purposes. If we were to write a volume on the subject we could not strengthen the testimony. And although we believe that all the children of God who rightly understand the subject can, from their own experience, corroborate this testimony, we choose to rest on this one witness for the correctness of our reply.

Question 2. "According as men understand the terms flesh and spirit, can sin attach to the flesh?"

Answer. It is easier to prove by the Scriptures that sin has attached to the flesh, than to define how men understand Bible terms. We readily acknowledge our incompetency to canvass the understanding or misunderstanding of men on the subject; for although a man may understand the things of a man by the spirit of man that is in him, yet the things of the Spirit of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God.—1 Cor. ii. 11. As the understanding of man is too vague and indefinite to aid us, we will turn to the word and testimony of the good book. Jesus has said, "That which is born of the flesh is flesh, and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit."—John iii. 9. From which we learn that all that is in an unregenerated state is flesh, in a scriptural sense of the term. Adam was of the earth, earthly, and as such he stands the seminal head over all his offspring, and all who by natural generation are born of the flesh as the children of Adam, are flesh. Not merely the particles of matter or material substance which compose our corporal bodies, but all that we are, as intellectual beings in soul, body or spirit, so far as our relationship to Adam extends, we are flesh. And with all the culture of refined education, the polish of human improvement, or reformation, it remains true, and forever must so remain, that "except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." In the absence of a new and spiritual birth he is and must remain a natural man, unable to know or discern the things of the Spirit of God. As flesh and blood do not inherit the kingdom, neither doth corruption inherit incorruption, so man in his natural state, being in the flesh, or existing only in his fleshly nature, is a stranger to all that is spiritual and holy. Need we ask if sin attaches to the flesh, thus defined? An inspired apostle of the Lamb of God shuts out all room for inquiry, and gives himself as an example. "In me, that is, in my flesh, dwelleth no good thing." And this was no vain speculation, for Paul assures us that he knew it to be so. In the absence of all good, can sin attach to the flesh? Sin is a transgression of the law. Men in their fleshly nature were created in Adam, under law to God; that law they have transgressed; sin has therefore by transgression entered, and death by sin, and so death has passed upon all men, because all have sinned. The sting of death is sin, and the strength of sin is the law; and as the wages of sin is death, and death has passed upon all men, so that "all flesh is grass," fading, withering, dying, as a consequence of sin, it cannot be doubted that sin attaches to the flesh.

Perhaps our brother intended to inquire whether the flesh of men, without its connection with the natural spirit or life which animates it, can sin. If this had been the question we should have replied in the negative; for James has told us that the flesh or body without the spirit is just as dead as faith is without works.

It is supposed by some that in regeneration the old natural spirit of man is renewed, reformed, purged and made subject to the law of God, and that the carnal or fleshly mind is new modled in some way, and that this constitutes the new birth; but such is not our understanding of the subject. We do not dispute the full concurrence of the spirit of the flesh in all the lusts and abominations charged to the flesh in the Scriptures. We regard the natural mind and spirit of man as included by Paul when he speaks of the flesh.

That spirit with which Paul himself served the law of God was that in him which was born of the Spirit; not born of Adam, but born of God; and it was that which constituted him a child of God and an heir of glory. This spirit, this life, was given to Paul, and to all the election, in Christ Jesus their spiritual Head and progenitor before the world began, and was communicated to them in and by regeneration. The inevitable conclusion is that that which is born of the flesh is earthly, sensual, devilish, carnal, vile, sinful, and at war with God and holiness; that it is not changed when God's children are born of the Spirit; but although it may be subjected, crushed down, laid in chains, to some extent, yet its nature and propensity to serve sin remains, and shall remain until the sentence of the law shall be executed upon it, and it shall be sown in dishonor, in weakness and corruption. But that which is born of the Spirit is the new man, not made of the old man, but entirely new, is after God, created in righteousness and true holiness, and sin cannot attach to it, for it is born of God; the seed remaineth; it is not under the law of sin, but is Christ in them the hope of glory.

Question 3. Was not Paul, when groaning for deliverance, as in Rom. vii. 23, personifying in himself that state of mind of a quickened sinner before he is made to understand the gospel?

Answer. No. There is nothing in all the connection that will admit of such a construction of his words. Whatever Dr. Adam Clark or John Wesley may have said to the contrary, we are fully convinced that Paul by relating his actual experience as a subject of regeneration gave an example of the real state and experience of every heaven-born soul. If brother Goldsmith has so far triumphed over the flesh as to be no longer annoyed by the corruptions and vanities of it, he has out traveled Paul; for although Paul has now reached the portals of unsullied day, and left all the corruptions of his flesh behind him, he did not attain to that state until he put off his mortal tabernacle. There was indeed one time, and but one, in all of Paul's pilgrimage, that he came so near to that state of deliverance that he could not tell whether he was in the body or out of the body. We conclude he must have realized a short respite from the annoyance of the flesh, or he probably would have known whether he was in or out of the body. In this one remarkable moment of Paul's life he was caught up to the third heaven, &c. But when he returned to the common trials incidental to the christian pilgrim, he was soon reminded that there was still some trouble in his flesh; and again he began to groan in good earnest, and three times he besought the Lord to deliver him from the thorn which was in his flesh. Brother Goldsmith will not contend that in what Paul relates as succeeding his exaltation to the third heaven, he was personifying the state of a quickened soul that did not understand the gospel. Ah, he learned that the power of Christ was to rest upon him, and he could therefore most gladly glory in his infirmities. But why should it be thought that he was describing the state of a quickened but not fully delivered soul? He was writing to a church composed of delivered souls who understood the gospel, and who also understood the language of Paul; and however applicable the language used may have been to quickened souls before their deliverance, it was no less applicable to them whenever brought to feel and combat the corruptions of the flesh throughout their pilgrimage.

Question 4. "Can a man be wretched under the gospel?"

Answer. The gospel does not make the subject of it wretched; but we must remember that the flesh is not a partaker of the gospel, either of its comfort or spirituality. The flesh is not born of the Spirit, and therefore cannot inherit the kingdom or partake of the things of the Spirit. Paul found no more than all the saints have found, a law (or ruling power) in his members, or flesh, warring against the law of his mind, and bringing him into bondage at times. But it is important to consider that the christian, like the Shulamite, presents as it were the company of two armies. While the mind, with which they serve the law of God, delights in it, and lives by faith on Christ, the old man, the flesh, pursues the course of the flesh, in all the lusts and vanities peculiar to the flesh; and while the fruit of the Sririt is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, goodness, gentleness, faith, &c., the works of the flesh are also manifest, which are these, adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, sedition, heresies, envyings, murders, drunkenness, revelings and such like. These are not only the works of the flesh in those who know not God, but these are the works of the flesh in all who are born of the flesh; and hence the admonition of the apostles to the saints to lay aside all malice, guile, hypocrisies, envies and evil-speaking. Peter did not teach them to look for these things, as coming from the new man, but they were to resist them as corruptions of the old man. Nor were such admonitions addressed to young christians only, as 1 Peter ii. 1. But the like admonitions were dealt liberally to all the saints. "Having therefore these promises, dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of the Lord." If christians are so entirely delivered from all these corruptions of the flesh, why were they thus admonished? Although the gospel supports, comforts, feeds and encourages the saints of God, the grace of God that bringeth salvation teaches them that denying ungodliness and worldly lust, they should live soberly, righteously and godly in this present world. And it is no uncommon or strange thing to hear those who have received the gospel, and who know its blessedness, complain, and cry out in bitterness of soul, when conflicting with and crucfying the old man with his lusts, and to hear them use even as strong language as that of the apostle, "O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death?"

Question 5. "Was not the apostle contrasting law and grace?"

Answer. Undoubtedly he was. But this contrast is displayed in the experience of the saints. We have shown that the sentence of the law is yet to be executed upon the flesh; it is not yet delivered from the law. The sentence, "Dust thou art, and unto dust thou shalt return," will pursue our flesh to the sepulchres of our fathers, and close upon it the bars of death and the grave. Until the execution of that dread sentence the carnal mind will continue to be enmity against God, and all the depraved powers of heart and flesh shall continue their warfare against the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus. But a glorious prospect opens to our faith. The Lamb appears upon Mount Zion. Once he suffered the just for the unjust, to bring us to God. Though he was dead, behold he is alive forevermore, and holds the keys of hell and death. In the desperate struggle of the christian soldier, when the flesh momentarily triumphs, the despondING warrior in extremity cries out, O wretched man! Who shall deliver me? But quick as the vivid lightning's flash, light breaks in, the radiant beam from heaven illumes his faith, and rising, swelling gratitude utters the shout that shakes the massy battlements of death, removes the chilling damps of the grave. "I thank God, through Jesus Christ our Lord." So then, with his mind he serves the law of God, but with his flesh the law of sin. A glorious resurrection, a blessed immortality, shall result to every one who can in spirit and in truth adopt the language of this apostle, in that deliverance, which they shall realize through our Lord Jesus Christ; for "If the spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you."

This flesh, now so full of depravity and opposition to the Spirit of holiness, shall then be quickened with a holier life. Not merely resuscitated, but it shall be the subject of a heavenly, a spiritual birth, the life of God in Christ shall possess them. In his image they shall rise and meet him in the air, and so shall be forever with the Lord.

"Arrayed in glorious life Shall these vile bodies shine."

We have, briefly as the nature of the subject would admit, replied to the several inquiries of brother Goldsmith, and here we dismiss the subject for the present.

PRONOUNCING BIBLES.

ON our last page will be found a complete new list of both large and small Bibles. Among the large Bibles we give styles and prices of a new Bible just out, which has all the names of persons and places divided into syllables and accented, so that the reader can give their proper pronunciation without hesitancy. Also may be found a descriptive list of a parallel pronouncing Bible, the same as above, only it has the old King James and the new translation in parallel columns. Added to this will be found a list of regular family Bibles.

THE SMALL OR HAND BIBLES,

Varying in size from 3 1-4x5 3-8 to 6x8 1-2 inches, are of such a vast variety that we can give a list of only a small portion. The Bourgeois size we give is about the medium size type, and larger or smaller sizes cost proportionately more or less than the prices given for Bourgeois size.

Should you not be able to find exactly what you want in our published list, send for catalogue.

BALTIMORE ASSOCIATION.

FOR the information of all those who contemplate attending our eastern associations this spring we desire to say that the Delaware Association, which has been heretofore the second on the list, has now been laid over until October; consequently in the future the Baltimore Association, which is the first on the list, will hold its session in the week formerly occupied by the Delaware, and will be followed by the Delaware River Association. The session of the Baltimore Association will therefore be held this year on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday after the third Sunday in May, instead of after the second Sunday, as was formerly the case.—C.

PLEASE BE SURE

IN sending remittances for renewals of subscriptions to give us the same name that the paper is already coming to. If the party is married, and the paper is coming to the wife's name, and we receive a remittance to renew the subscription, and the husband's name is given, we have no means of knowing that it is meant for the subscription in the wife's name; consequently the husband's name is entered on our list, and the paper sent to both parties. Or if the paper is coming in the husband's name, and the renewal is sent in the wife's name, the same thing is likely to occur. It is a good plan to inclose in the letter one of the little pink slips containing the name, taken either from the margin of the paper or from the wrapper in which the paper comes.

preaching he told my experience better than I could. As he was related to me (he and my mother and father were Old Baptists) I sat back at a distance where no one would observe me. I immediately came to the conclusion that if I were to undertake to join the church, as I thought it my duty, then they would all say I was a hypocrite—that I had learned this experience from the preacher. The thought almost made me frantic. The idea that anybody should think or call me a hypocrite seemed awful. Under those feelings I had rather die than that any one should think that I was deceiving or acting the liar's part to get into the church. Some time after this, however, I became so impressed on the subject of baptism that at every mention or thought of the name of Jesus I would swell with emotion, longing and anxiously wishing to be baptized. I had already selected the one to baptize me. If I could meet him out in some large pasture near a stock pond or pool of water, and I could bind him not to tell anybody, that would suit me. But the opportunity of this sort never came. The preacher was taken very sick, and afterward was convalescing, and for his health purposed visiting the west; but his doctor told him it would kill him. Then my trouble commenced again about baptism. Still I did not dare to breathe it to a mortal. However, one night, by some kind of an accident, if I may so call it, we slept in the same room, and after the lights were out I remarked to him, "I have something to tell you if you will not tell anybody." I do not recollect what he said, for I was so full and so eager for this opportunity. I commenced and told him the exercises of my mind on the subject of religion, I suppose. However, I did not know this was religion, although I was well read and quite a mixer in the world. I had promised myself that before I died I would get religion and go to heaven, and not go to hell, because I had heard much of both places. Finally I went to the church and offered myself for membership, where I could hear my experience told better than I could tell it. I had a great desire to be numbered with them, for all other denominations that I had heard preach with eloquence and fiery zeal were but trash compared with the Baptists. I was received after relating something, I know not what, nor could I recollect what I said. I was baptized and received as a member where I yet live, hoping and fearing and doubting. Frequently my mind runs back for consolation, whispering, You know when and where you were reproved for sin and want of a better righteousness than you have or had to deliver you from the thraldom of sin's galling, heavy load, and the evidence, "We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren." Again, "We know that the Son of God is come, and hath given us an understanding, that we may know him," &c. These and other things are written, doubtlessly, to strengthen our hope and faith. And yet I lose myself philosophising on the subject, and then can only exclaim, "O the depth of the riches, both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! How unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out!" As it is I am left entirely on the sovereign mercy of God for life and immortal joys, nor can I fully see the end, which gives me great uneasiness.

Yours in the best of bonds,

J. W. ROYSTER.

WANGO, Md., Jan. 7, 1895.

ELDER S. H. DURAND—DEAR BROTHER:—You requested me to write to you and tell you of my experience, and I will now try to do so. I began to have serious thoughts about death when I was very young, not more than six or seven years old. The thought that I must die and be buried in a lonely, desolate graveyard, away from my father and mother, caused a feeling to come over me that I cannot express. It was more than horrible, it seemed to me. I would sometimes lay for hours upon my bed, while the rest of the family were asleep, and think about these things. Sometimes I would tremble with fear lest I would be called away before morning. I believed I had a soul that would go to hell, and that it would burn and burn forever. That is what I had been told, and I believed it to be the truth. This trouble did not stay with me all the time, but came upon me once in a while. When any person died in the neighborhood I would think that I would be the next to follow. Sometimes when these thoughts would come upon me I would get out of my bed and go to my mother's bedside. She seldom asked me what the matter was, for she seemed to know very well, and would simply say, "Trust in the Lord." I went on in this way until I was about fifteen years old, when these feelings seemed to wear off. I got to attending Old Baptist meetings, and would sometimes hear some words that would kindly raise me up and cause me to feel and hope that I was an Old Baptist. Finally I got to thinking a great deal of them, and did not want to ever miss any of their meetings if they were near enough for me to attend them. Well, for some reason I could not help but think that I was one of God's chosen people; but the great question was, Where is the evidence that you have been born again? I knew the Bible said, "Except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God," much less enter into it. I remember being at an association at Nassaongo, the last one that was held there, and you said in your discourse that instead of getting to be better we seemed to go down, down, down, all the time. This is the substance; they may not be the same words you used. It came to me very forcibly, and I could not keep the tears back. I felt that was my experience exactly. I went home thinking about that expression, as well as others I heard during that meeting; but I still looked forward for that wonderful change I thought I must undergo before I would have any right to join the church or make a public profession of religion. I knew full well that I could not bring that change about myself; that I could as easily create a world as do it. I knew I must wait the Lord's own appointed time. I went on in that way, desiring to become a christian, until the association at Welsh Tract. That was my greatest desire, and is yet, to be a christian. When Elder Grafton arose in the stand at the close of the association and said, "Throw away the old idea that this old body must become a spiritual body, and be satisfied with the fare the rest have," that old idea left me, and I was brought that moment to see differently from what I had ever before seen, and had a great desire to be baptized. I felt impressed that it was my duty, and began looking forward to the next opportunity when I might offer myself to the church at Welsh Tract, as I lived nearer that church than any other. It was about four weeks until the next meeting day, and I counted the days as they went by. On Saturday before the third Sunday in June, 1893, I presented myself as a candidate, and in a stammering way told my little story. I was received, and baptized on Sunday following by Elder Grafton. I found rest to my soul and experienced the answer of a good conscience toward God. During the summer following it was a time of singing of birds, and the voice of the turtle was heard in the land. We had meeting at Welsh Tract once a month, and I always looked forward to it with great delight. I always expected to have a refreshing season whenever I went to the meeting. It did me good to see Elder Grafton, our dear pastor, even if he did not say a word; and it does yet. But I find that I do not always have a refreshing season when I go to meeting. Sometimes I go away feeling worse than when I went; for I went expecting something, and I did not get it, but was disappointed; yet I think I do not lay the blame on the preacher. No, no. It is because I do not always have the hearing ear. But the good Shepherd knows what is best, and withholds no real good thing. David says, "The Lord is my Shepherd, I shall not want. O what a wonderful thing it is to be enabled to trust in the Lord, and not in the helpless arm of the flesh. How good and condescending the Lord is to choose us and cause us to approach unto him, and to lead us by his Spirit in the paths of righteousness. What for? Why, for his own name's sake. He keeps us by his power, through faith unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the last time. He keeps us by his power, through faith. There is a great deal in that. It is by faith that we can say with David, "I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills, from whence cometh my help. My help cometh from the Lord, which made heaven and earth." It was by faith that Jonah could say, "Yet will I look again toward thine holy temple." Sometimes I have troubles, and sometimes joys. I believe all are for my good and to the praise of the great name of God, my heavenly Father.

If you have an opportunity to write to me I would greatly appreciate a letter from you. I am your little, unworthy brother in hope of eternal life through Christ Jesus,

EDWARD F. ROUNDS.

DELMAR, Del., Jan. 29, 1895.

ELDER F. A. CHICK—DEAR BROTHER IN THE LORD:—I have thought for some time past I would write you a few lines and try to tell you what I hope the Lord has done for a poor sinner like me, but have not felt at liberty until now. In the fall of 1890 I was very much troubled, having at that time a sense of my sinfulness which I never had before. I prayed to God to have mercy upon me, a sinner. I attended meetings of different kinds and of different denominations, but could find no comfort. All seemed happy but myself; no happiness could I find. I began to search the Scriptures to see if I could find anything of comfort to me. I read in John vi. 44, "No man can come to me except the Father which hath sent me draw him; and I will raise him up at the last day." This gave me new food for thought, and at last I was made to say, "Salvation is of the Lord, and of the Lord only." Now, was I drawn of the Spirit? was what I thought of most. I felt my sinfulness and weakness more and more. But still I read the Scriptures, and in Matthew v. 6 I read, "Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness; for they shall be filled." This I thought suited my case, for I hoped I did hunger and thirst for righteousness; and I hope I have this hunger and thirst yet, unworthy to be fed with the precious crumbs which fall from the Master's table. All the churches in our town knew a change had come over me, and I was talked to about religion and works. All I could say was that I hoped the Lord would lead me in the right path. I could get no comfort at their meetings, nor did their preaching do me any good. I would go sometimes to the Old Baptist meetings, and there I would hear some word of comfort. I had a feeling toward the Old Baptists that I never had for any other people, but I could not tell why it was. They treated me very differently from what other denominations did.

While they were kind, they never mentioned religion to me, nor did they invite me to their preaching; yet I would go, and always heard something to my comfort. I thought I had never in all my life seen such spiritual looking people. Notwithstanding the feeling I had toward the Old Baptists, and the comfort I received by their preaching, I fought against it all. In January, 1891, I had a severe spell of sickness; and while sick I was made to feel happy in the Lord. My only hope was in Christ, my all and in all. I was made to say, "Not my will, but thine be done." After six weeks of illness I was restored to health. Then I thought I would join the church, but could never feel that I was worthy of a place among God's people. I related my experience to Elder Francis, and he said he believed God had begun a good work in me. His talk was very comforting to me. I went on in this way, thinking I would be better at some time, and then would go before the church; but I seemed to grow worse instead of better. I talked with some of the Old Baptists of our town, and it seemed that their experience was as mine. I stayed away until I could stay no longer. I went before the church at Little Creek on Sunday, May 20th, 1894, was received and baptized the same day by Elder A. B. Francis. I feel my sinfulness and weakness just as much as I ever did. But I rejoice in the thought that Christ died to save sinners, of whom I feel to be the greatest. I would be glad to hear from you at any time, and hope I have not tired you, as I have tried to tell you part of what I have had a desire to do for a long time.

Yours in hope of salvation by grace,

H. CLAUDE KER.

NORTH YAKIMA, Wash., Dec. 26, 1894.

DEAR BRETHREN:—As I have to send my remittance for our family paper, the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, I wish to say that if any of our ministering brethren are thinking of coming west, we would like one to locate among us. There are eight or ten Old Baptists here, and we are about seventy miles from a church. We have a good country. We hope the good Lord will stir up some one of his under shepherds to come here. We have all kinds of "do and live" systems here, but it is no food for the children of God, who can do nothing of themselves to inherit eternal life, for we read that it is the gift of God. We hope some one will pity us lonely ones and come and see us.

NOTICES.

FOR the benefit of our brethren who sometimes visit the city of Baltimore we publish the following notice:

The Ebenezer Old School Baptist Church (Elder F. A. Chick, pastor) meets every Sunday at 11 o'clock a. m., at their meeting-house on Madison St., just east of Calvert St. If any of our brethren visit Baltimore at any time we shall be glad to have them visit us, and to join with us in our worship.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

DIED—At the residence of her son-in-law, Mr. L. W. Reeder, in Floyd County, Iowa, on March 20th, 1895, our dear aunt and sister, Anna Fellows, after a protracted illness of nearly a year. For the last six months of her life she was confined to her room most of the time with a tumor in the stomach; yet she was never heard to complain of her lot. She was born in the town of Oxford, Maine, and came with her parents to Ohio. She was married to Benjamin S. Fellows in the year 1839. To them were born three sons and six daughters. Two daughters and one son have gone before to that better land. She experienced a good hope through grace in the year 1843, and was baptized by Lemuel Jackson, joining the Primitive Baptist Church in March of the same year. In 1859 she moved with her husband and family to Iowa and joined Little Cedar Church by letter, where she remained a faithful member until removed by death. Her age was 74 years, 6 months and 17 days. She leaves a companion, two sons, four daughters, three sisters and grandchildren, besides many relatives and friends with the church to mourn their loss. She was a loving companion, a kind and indulgent mother, and was loved and respected by all who knew her. We feel that our loss is her eternal gain.

The writer tried to speak words of comfort to the sorrowing ones from Job xiv. 14; after which her remains were placed in the burying ground near Rockford, to await the blessed resurrection of the redeemed of the Lord unto eternal glory.

M. L. JACKSON.

Mrs. Emeline McGrath departed this life at her home in Fruitland, Wicomico Co., Md., on Feb. 4th, 1895, at five o'clock p. m.

Sister McGrath was born Sept. 12th, 1816, and was baptized about the year 1840, by Elder Warner Staton. She was united in marriage to Wm. McGrath on Dec. 10th, 1846. Three children were born to them, one son and two daughters. The son preceded her to the grave, leaving two daughters, Mrs. Catheil and Mrs. Hill, of Salisbury, Md., with their families. Her lonely companion is left to struggle alone in the latter part of this mortal life; but I hope he may feel that he is not alone, but that God is with him his sorrows to soothe. May the Lord fill the place of a companion and a mother to the bereaved. May each be comforted with the thought that God had given to her in early life a good hope, which was her stay until death. She always acted the part of a mother to me, and I hope it was for the truth's sake.

Sister McGrath had been on the decline since the year 1874, having her first hemorrhage of the lungs at that time. Sometimes it seemed that she could not live, but she would revive again. She was prevented from going to meetings the latter part of her life because of feeble health. I do believe that death brought her great relief. I was present by request and preached at her funeral, using the words, "Beloved, now are we the sons of God," &c.—1 John iii. 2.

The sorrowing friends will please accept this as a token of my sympathy for them in their affliction.

MASSEY, Va.

DIED—At the Asylum in Staunton, Va., Feb. 18th, 1895, Mrs. Margaret V. Steers, wife of brother Henry C. Steers, of Prince William Co., Va., aged about 68 years.

A few years ago sister Steers developed a brain trouble, which continued to increase until prudence suggested her removal to the Asylum, about two years ago, with some faint hope that proper treatment might be of benefit. Any such hope proved futile. Not long before her death her nervous system suddenly gave way, and she died of nervous prostration, so writes her physician.

She was a consistent and loved member of the Bethlehem Church, near Manassas, for many years, always at her post and filling her place so long as her health permitted. She manifested that meek and quiet spirit which is so lovely in the followers of Jesus. Her life in the church and in the world was without reproach. She loved the truth, and remained steadfast in it to the end. Having no child of her own, she filled the place of mother to several children adopted into the family, some of whom still live to bless her name. She loved to have the brethren visit them in their home, and it was a labor of love for her to minister to their necessities. Our dear brother Steers is left lonely indeed. He writes me that he feels like Job when he said, "Have pity upon me, O ye my friends; for the hand of God hath touched me." May that same God heal the wounds which he makes, bind up the broken heart, and confirm the faith of his afflicted ones.

J. N. BADGER.

ALDIE, Va., March 15, 1895.

DIED—At her home near Hillsborough, Jasper Co., Ga., sister Lizzie Connor, widow of brother John W. Connor.

She was the daughter of Elder D. L. Hitchcock, and step-daughter of sister Hitchcock. She was born May 8th, 1848, and died March 1st, 1895, her age being 46 years, 9 months and 23 days. She was married to John W. Connor on Feb. 27th, 1868, who preceded her to the grave only thirteen and one-half months. Sister Connor, together with her husband, united with the Primitive Baptist Church at Shoal Creek, Newton Co., Ga., in July, 1872, and was baptized by Elder Wm. L. Beebe, pastor of the church. She was truly a noble, kind-hearted woman, and a humble, devoted christian. It has been my privilege to meet with her often at our meetings, and during brother Connor's life to be at their home and to enjoy their hospitality, which was always very pleasant indeed. It was remarkable to see the interest and pains she would take in trying to make all her friends feel pleasant and happy, and especially her brethren and sisters. Their company was her chief delight. There was nothing she enjoyed so much as to talk of her experience, and the goodness and mercy of God to her. It was a great privilege to be with her, and to hear her talk of spiritual things. Her great desire was to live more to the honor and glory of God. She was a Primitive Baptist indeed, not only in name, but in faith and practice. Her hope was in Jesus, having no confidence in the flesh.

Sister Connor had for a long time been in feeble health. She seemed to take the death of brother Connor very hard, but said she wanted to be reconciled to the will of the Lord, believing that what he did was right. After his death she became very feeble, suffered very much for several months before she died, and was unable to leave her bed, but was never heard to murmur. Truly a good woman has passed away. She was the mother of six children, the youngest (a son) having died in infancy, and five living (three boys and two girls), all grown. I wish to say to them in their bereavement that while it seems hard for them to give up such a good and dear mother, whose love for them can never be filled, they should remember that God has taken her to himself; and while they are grieved and left alone to battle through life's uneven ways, they have the happy assurance that she is free from all her affliction, pain and sorrow, and is entered into that eternal rest beyond this vale of tears. May God in his infinite mercy sustain each one of them, and save them with an everlasting salvation.

Sister Connor was buried at Hillsborough, Jasper Co., Ga., where the unworthy writer of this notice was requested to preach on the occasion, which I tried to do, from the first verses of John xiv., to a large congregation of relatives and friends. After some remarks by brother Glover the services closed. It was sad indeed to see the devoted old father, the children and friends take the farewell look upon the form of one they loved so much. The body was then placed in the grave by the side of her husband, there to rest until God bids it rise a spiritual body, crowned in glory.

FORSYTH, Ga.

SISTER Eliza Hess, wife of Elder Daniel Hess, died Friday, March 15th, 1895, in Columbus, Ga., in the 61st year of her age.

Sister Hess was well known throughout a large portion of the United States, having traveled extensively for many years. Her winters were usually spent in California or the south. She was on her way to Cuba when she was stricken down with paralysis in Columbus, Ga., about the 18th of January. During her illness she had all the care that liberal means and loving hands could bestow. Sister Hess was indeed a good woman. Faith, hope and charity were exemplified in her daily life. She was a member of the Old School Baptist Church, whose order she loved, and whose doctrine she adorned. She leaves a devoted husband, affectionate sisters and many friends to mourn.

The funeral and burial were private, only the near relatives and intimate friends being admitted. The services were conducted in the parlors of the residence of Misses Margaret and Julia Shattuck, at 37 East Seventh Avenue, Columbus, Ohio. The Euterpean Quartette rendered the music, singing "Nearer, my God, to thee," and "Asleep in Jesus." The funeral oration was pronounced by the writer of this sketch from the words, "If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable."—1 Cor. xv. 19.

Flowers, highly emblematic of her pious, prosperous and happy life, were used in great profusion. The body was covered with white roses. A bank of white roses and lilies of the valley was placed at the head of the casket, and a pile of white Easter lilies and a wreath of white carnations and pale pink roses adorned the foot.

Elder Hess in his bereavement has the sympathy of thousands of faithful hearts, and the sustaining grace of his Father in heaven.

H. M. CURRY.

LEBANON, Ohio, March, 1895.

OUR dear sister and mother in Israel, Mrs. Prudence Sayer Horton, entered into everlasting rest on Sunday morning, March 24th, 1895, in the 80th year of her age. She was taken suddenly and violently ill on Monday evening, March 4th, which developed into typhoid pneumonia.

Sister Horton was born Jan. 9th, 1816. Her parents were Eliphalet and Anna Warner. She was one of four daughters, the only surviving one being Lucinda, wife of Mr. Daniel S. Wheat, of this city. The other daughters, who are now deceased, were Betsy Ann, wife of Nathan Slawson, and Hannah, wife of Andrew Albertson, of Waverly, N. Y.

Sister Horton was married to William Harrison Horton on Feb. 2d, 1839, who died March 9th, 1848. To them were born two children, both of whom survive: Jonathan Decatur Horton and Sophronia A., widow of Benjamin Vail, of this city.

Sister Horton experienced a hope in the Savior of sinners, and was baptized by the late Elder Gilbert Beebe, in the fellowship of the Middletown & Wallkill Old School Baptist Church, more than thirty years ago. She was firmly established in the truth as it is in Jesus, and was always ready to contend for the doctrine of salvation by the sovereign grace of God, without the works of the creature. She was naturally of a cheerful disposition, and none who truly knew her could fail to respect and love her. She will be greatly missed, not only by her family and neighbors, but also by the church in this city. We sorrow most of all that we shall see her pleasant face no more in the flesh, nor ever again receive her cordial greeting.

The funeral services were held on Wednesday, the 27th, at her late residence, 53 West Main St., which were conducted by her pastor, Elder Benton Jenkins, in the presence of a large gathering of sorrowing relatives and friends; after which all that was mortal of the loved mother and sister was laid away in Hillside Cemetery, in this city.

May the God of all grace and comfort give beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning, and the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness.—ED.

SISTER Mary Ann Carey died at her residence in this city, March 22d, 1895, aged 48 years, 2 months and 11 days.

Sister Carey was a daughter of James and Mary Jane Linkletter, and was born in the town of Warwick, Orange Co., N. Y., Jan. 11th, 1847. On June 10th, 1866, she was married to Franklin Carey, who died April 3d, 1890. She is survived by her daughter Alice, wife of Benjamin F. Hunt, of this city. One child died in infancy. She is also survived by three sisters and one brother: Caroline, wife of W. H. Seely, of Liberty, N. Y., Sarah, wife of J. C. Seely, of Paterson, N. J., Phebe, wife of D. Carmichael, of Washingtonville, N. Y., and C. Linkletter, of this city.

This dear sister received a hope in Christ, and was baptized in the fellowship of the Middletown & Wallkill Old School Baptist Church, by Elder Benton Jenkins, in September, 1887. She was rooted and grounded in the truth, and by the grace of God was enabled to honor the profession she had made. For a long time she had been in failing health, and was frequently prevented from attending the assemblies of the saints, but her heart was always with them. We believe that for her to live was Christ, and to die was gain.

Funeral services were held at her late residence, 58 Lake Avenue, this city, when a discourse was preached by Elder Wm. L. Beebe, from 2 Corinthians v. 1–4; after which the mortal remains were deposited in the cemetery of the Brookfield Church, after a short service conducted by Elder Benton Jenkins.

May the Lord comfort and sustain by his grace the bereaved and sorrowing relatives.—ED.

PICTORIAL HISTORY

OF THE

UNITED STATES.

By James D. McCabe.

This work is no dry mass of details—no bombastic effort to inflame the national pride, but a vivid and brilliant narrative of the events of our history, from the discovery of the American Continent down to thepresent time. It gives a most interesting account of the Indians of North America, from the time of the coming of the white men. The voyages of Columbus and explorations and discoveries of the different nations of Europe are related with graphic power. Every step of our colonial history is traced with patient fidelity, and the sources of those noble and, we trust, enduring institutions, which have made our country free and great, are shown with remarkable clearness. Then follows a clear and succinct account of our great Struggle for Independence, and the establishment of the Federal Union—the events of our career from the close of the Revolution to the administration of Harrison.

The work is printed from plain, new type, on fine calendered paper, and comprised in one octavo volume of 960 pages. It is splendidly embellished with nearly 500 fine engravings, embracing battles and other historical scenes, portraits of distinguished men, views of our principal cities, &c., &c.

Bound in Fine Silk Cloth, Plain Edges, $2.00, Post-paid.

CORRESPONDENCE.

PSALM CXVII.

"O PRAISE the Lord, all ye nations; praise him, all ye people. For his merciful kindness is great toward us, and the truth of the Lord endureth forever. Praise ye the Lord."

In this short psalm the mercy and truth of the Lord are brought sweetly to our remembrance. This indeed appears to be the object of the psalmist, to call up in our memory the rich mercies which in the past our Lord has so graciously bestowed upon us, and also the truth of God, which is Jesus Christ the righteous One, upon which foundation we securely rest from all our labors. A solemn fear often arises in the heart of the objects of God's mercy, that they have perhaps never praised the Lord, neither shown gratitude for his mercy, nor manifested a knowledge of his truth. The Lord's people do know that all his works do praise him, and they themselves are the work of his hands; but this does not satisfy them. They desire that out of a crushed and bleeding heart they may be enabled to ascribe all power and all glory to his holy name. Their distress of mind is occasioned by the multitudinous array of the hateful lusts of the flesh, which rise up before them, and to which they have become subject, and as "Ungodly men, turning the grace of God into lasciviousness, and denying the only Lord God and our Lord Jesus Christ;" feeling that the "woe" is pronounced upon them, which says, "Woe unto them, for they have gone in the way of Cain, and ran greedily after the error of Baalam for reward, and perished in the gainsaying of Core." Just praise only comes to them who are in some way exalted; not by exalting themselves, but because of some God-given virtue or principle within them, which virtue or principle exalts them above their fellows. One cannot bind up the wounds of him that falls among thieves, if he is possessed only of the characteristics of the priest or Levite. He must possess the principle of the good Samaritan. Our Savior is worthy to be praised, for "Him hath God exalted with his right hand to be a Prince and a Savior, for to give repentance to Israel and forgiveness of sins." Sometimes we feel like praising our brethren because of their gifts of usefulness in the church, forgetting for the time the meaning of the word "gift," that it is something bestowed without regard to merit. And at the same time also we forget the heavenly Giver. If we give praise to the creature, then do we exalt the creature, and abase the Creator, and bring down the Creator to the level of his creation. Neither shall we praise the gift, but alone the Giver. For although the gift of our Lord unto his people is himself, which is eternal life, yet our praise is due to him alone for his wonderful gift. We may rejoice in, and glorify him in the gift, but praise the hand which bestowed it. When we consider the wonderful sacrifice of that wonderful Gift, and his awful sufferings in accomplishing the will of his Father concerning us, we are made willing and glad to praise him for his merciful kindness and the truth of his word. "Wherefore he saith, When he ascended up on high he led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men."

"O praise the Lord, all ye nations." The psalmist not only embraced the nation of Israel, but all nations are to praise him. There is a sense in which all the creation of God do praise him, whether animate or inanimate. The harmony and perfectness with which all created things fulfill the design of the Creator in maintaining and manifesting its usefulness in the sphere wherein it was placed, is the highest (although mute and speechless) praise in a natural way that could be given to the wisdom and omnipotence of God. But, without doubt, the sense in which the psalmist embraced "all nations" to praise the Lord, was that he had in his mind and heart the same sublime truth which John on Patmos heard and wrote down, which voice said in sweetest song, "Thou art worthy to take the book and to open the seals thereof; for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood, out of every kindred and tongue and people and nation." Then truly do all the nations of the earth praise the Lord in that sweet redemption song, their hearts overflowing with praise and thanksgiving and adoration to him who hath redeemed them out of death and despair and the grave.

"Praise him all ye people." We must at once recognize the distinction between all nations and all people; for while the Lord's people (the church of God) are scattered among all nations, and in every clime, whether remote or near, yet they are, at the same time, a distinct and separate people and nation from all other people or nations. By an apostle they are designated as, "A chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people," separated from the sons of Adam by a new birth, emanating from a royal seed, even Jesus, the Head, of which this people is the body; a new creature in Christ Jesus, turned from the fleshly lusts into a new and living way; redeemed from sin and perdition; purchased with a great price, yea, the precious life-blood of Jesus. The same apostle now goes on, and makes apparent the purpose for which this "peculiar people" and "holy nation" are created in Christ Jesus and chosen: "That ye should show forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvelous light; which in time past were not a people, but are now the people of God; who had not obtained mercy, but now have obtained mercy." We cannot wonder, then, that the psalmist called upon "all nations" and "all ye people" to praise the Lord. They voluntarily praise him in the one atonement which Jesus wrought out for them in his humility; and they voluntarily praise him with gladness of heart and with rejoicing, because of the atonement.

"All ye people." They all do praise him, from the least of them to the greatest of them. There are none too small, too weak or too poor, but they shew forth in some peculiar way the praises of him who hath called them out of darkness into his marvelous light.

"For his merciful kindness is great toward us." How deeply do the Lord's children realize the greatness of his merciful kindness toward them every day and every hour, even in every breath they draw, and every step they take. His merciful kindness was made manifest unto them in that, while they were yet sinners, Christ died for them. He was merciful at a time when they deserved no mercy; when they, in all their being, were enmity to him. Truly could the apostle say, "For I know that in me (that is, in my flesh), dwelleth no good thing." And when we sum up the description given by the same apostle of the natural man, who is without hope and without God in the world, we are amazed at the merciful kindness which the Lord has shown unto us. For he says, "As it is written, There is none righteous, no, not one: there is none that understandeth, there is none that seeketh after God. They are all gone out of the way, they are together become unprofitable; there is none that doeth good, no, not one. Their throat is an open sepulchre; with their tongues they have used deceit; the poison of asps is under their lips; whose mouth is full of cursing and bitterness, their feet are swift to shed blood; destruction and misery are in their ways, and the way of peace have they not known: there is no fear of God before their eyes." I am not sure that we can contemplate mercy at all, except where it is undeserved. My own mind must consider deserving mercy as a misnomer, and I feel sure the Scriptures do not teach it. If one deserves kindness from another because of some good act or deed that he has done, then the act of kindness is of debt, or reciprocation, and not of mercy. Mercy implies unmerited favor. If a man fulfill all the requirements of the law, then his own deeds justify him in the sight of the law. Mercy cannot reach such an one, because in his own strength he is exalted above its needs. Our gracious Redeemer was exalted a Prince and a Savior, in that through his merciful kindness to the children of men he fulfilled in them all the requirements of the law which they were under, which in their weakness they were unable to fulfill; by which act of merciful, loving-kindness he delivered them from under a thralldom from which they could not extricate themselves; for had they been able to deliver themselves, they would in no wise have needed a Savior. The man who fell among thieves needed not the office of the good Samaritan until after he had been left half dead by the roadside. Goodness and mercy follow the Lord's people all the days of their life, because they are a poor and afflicted and a needy people, in consequence of which they love the Lord and do his commandments. Worldly religion teaches a "do and live" system. But the lowly followers of the Lamb do know that they never did nor ever could do until after they were made alive. Then their good deeds were made manifest in obedience and love, in walking in the fear of the Lord, by which their praises ascend to the throne of his grace.

"And the truth of the Lord endureth forever." This is cause for multiplied praise and thanksgiving. The blessed and comforting words of our Savior to them who believed on him were, "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." Jesus also said to the same believers, "I am the way, the truth and the life." Then, if we know the truth, and Jesus is the truth, so long as he liveth shall we live also. By that truth which is as a shining light in our hearts, we know that his mercy endureth forever. And as he is the Alpha and the Omega, the beginning and the ending, so his bride, which was chosen in him from the beginning, shall endure in him and with him until the end. What a safe resting-place is the shadow of that rock, which although the floods of error and false doctrine shall hurl all their forces against it, yet it shall endure. So in the shadow of that great rock the travelers on their pilgrimage journey (the Father's casket of jewels) are safe in the bosom of his love.

"Praise ye the Lord." The cry of the burdened, bleeding heart is, If I have no resting-place nor enduring abode in Jesus, to whom else can I go? I was naked, and he clothed me; blind, and he gave me sight; homeless, and he took me in; helpless and sick, and he succored me and cared for me. Recognizing this great truth that Jesus is all things needful to us, is praise to the Father for the wonderous and precious gift of his dear Son. To know him as the only wise God our Father, to exalt the name of Jesus as a Prince and a Savior, who gave repentance unto Israel, and justified us by his grace; to exalt his name as "The only name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved;" to abase the creature as nothing, and less than nothing, and vanity; to sacrifice with the voice of thanksgiving, declaring that salvation is of the Lord alone; this is the highest praise the poor sinner can give to his Creator. Praise to the Lord cometh from the heart that believes on his name, and "out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." Every humble and true follower of Jesus praises him by walking in obedience to his divine commands, and they learn obedience by the things they suffer for Jesus' sake, as Jesus learned obedience by the things he also suffered for them. A frequent source of mourning by the Lord's people comes from the feeling that they cannot praise him enough for his wonderful work to the children of men, and for the hope in his mercy that has been given unto them; not realizing that the mourning itself is praise to the Lord. All unconscious does the conscious sinner manifest praise to the Lord in his daily walk, by pressing toward the mark for the prize of our high calling in Christ Jesus. And thus it is that "Out of the mouths of babes and sucklings God hath perfected praise."

ELDER F. A. CHICK—DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST:—I observe in the SIGNS of the 6th instant, in answer to brother Daniels, of Alabama, on the subject of church order, that there is a difference in the order of the churches within your knowledge and those of the west, and especially on this coast; and as a reason for addressing you this letter I will say that it is for more light on the subject, and not to criticise the article in question. The difference in the order of the churches of your acquaintance and those of mine is in the matter of unanimity of vote. You say that, as far as you know, the universal practice is that a majority decide in all cases of that kind, meaning exclusion, and in conducting all their business, with one exception; and that exception is in receiving members, when unanimity is required. Now, the practice of the churches in California has been, while they existed, a unanimity of vote in the reception of members, calling to ordination of a minister, or to license one to preach wherever God shall cast his lot. In all other matters a majority vote has ruled; and it has been held by all the best disciplinarians that it is the duty of all members to vote, either for or against the question, and that not to do so was an evidence of unfaithfulness, and deserving of reproof. As touching the second question, the church of Jesus Christ is the highest authority on earth in matters of order, the Scriptures being the only rule of faith and practice; and that no church has a right to call in question the acts of a sister church, only so far as mutual consultation is concerned. That is to say, one church is not authorized by the Scriptures to prefer a charge or charges against a sister church before any tribunal whatever, and hence should not destroy the peace of Zion by laying their troubles before the association, which is not the church, nor superior to it.

At the top of the fourth column you say, "Any brother or church may ask the advice of an association." Now, I ask, would it not be more scriptural to ask counsel of a sister church or churches, and keep all cause of strife away from the association, seeing that the true object of the association is for the interchange of tokens of love in the Lord, and such other matters as shall best conserve to that end?

I want to say in conclusion that your article is timely and to the point in answering the brother; and I wish to add that if we could more frequently be reminded of our true position one toward another in the matter of church order we would be better prepared to maintain the peace of Zion in love, and there would be no crying of peace where there is no peace. It has always seemed to me that much of the strife among brethren has been the result of ignorance; for the blind, ignorant leaders of the blind or ignorant are sure to err. Not designedly—O no; but through a zeal without knowledge. It may be asked, Are they the children of God? Yea; for if they are the "little children" that they ought to be they are very helpless in every way, but to cry; and in that, bless God, lies their greatest strength, for they in their dependence cry, pleading the merits of Jesus; and God in his omnipotence hears, and grants them all that will redound to his praise.

Now, brother Chick, I have relieved my mind by this scribble; and though not wishing to be considered an oracle in any matters pertaining to the church, I do love and desire the peace of Zion, and for this end I have written. In hope of a better resurrection by the power of an endless life through Christ Jesus, I am, as ever, your little brother,

A. H. HAGANS.

REPLY.

WE commend the above letter to the attention of our readers, and are glad that brother Hagans has felt free to write what was in his mind. We do not see any real difference between us, and some things in his letter we desire to express our approval of in a special manner.

With regard to the question of unanimity, we do not from our brother's letter understand that the churches in California differ from those in our knowledge in but one thing, and that is in requiring a unanimous vote in licensing or in calling for the ordination of a minister. We do not know that this question was ever raised among us; but we will say that unanimity in such cases is very desirable at least. We have known occasionally of a brother being licensed by a church, who was never able to command the approval of other churches generally. We think that in this, however, as well as in other things, a little time and forbearance go a great way toward producing one mind in a church; but we think that in this, as in other cases, a minority at the last should say, We will cheerfully defer to the opinion of the great body.

We believe that it is the duty of all members to vote if they have become clear in their minds as to what is right. If they are not clear it is their privilege to say so, and ask for more time, and meanwhile abide by the church in her travel. We ourselves have sometimes not been able to decide how we ought to vote, and then have felt that our mouth was closed against any right to find fault in the future with the decision, whatever it was.

We agree with our brother that one church would be very unwise, and more, that she has no right, to interfere in the business of another church, except, as our brother says, that they may consult together or advise.

We agree with what our brother says as regards the inadvisability of even asking advice of the association.. He has well stated the true object of associations; and we have long thought it better, when a church feels at a loss, that she should ask God for wisdom rather than other brethren, or sister churches or associations. Does not the language, "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God," &c., apply to churches as well as individuals? Above all things, let churches keep their troubles at home.

KELLY'S CORNERS, N.Y., Jan. 27, 1895.

DEAR BRETHREN IN CHRIST:—Having been requested by our dear sister, Phebe J. Faulkner, of Margarettville, N. Y., to write some thoughts, as the Lord may give light, from the words in Heb. xii. 24, "And to Jesus, the Mediator of the new covenant, and to the blood of sprinkling, that speaketh better things than that of Abel," I will with your permission submit a few lines to the inquirer, and to the readers of the SIGNS generally. I am reminded in this attempt of a saying one time of Elder Jenkins, in regard to speaking from a text of Scripture by request, that there would be at least one listener. So I think of our dear invalid sister, who wants only the truth as it is in Jesus.

The introduction of a text of Scripture is generally the key to it, and is therefore of importance in its elaboration, to show the sequel. The writer of this epistle takes a general view of the effective work and force of the law on those under its commands, and also its direful consequences on them that were disobedient to its requirements. He rehearses much of the counsel of God in his dealings with his chosen people, from Abel to the coming of Christ, with the assurance that God is not slack concerning his promise, as some men count slackness. Although he was long-suffering to his people while under the law, yet for every transgression he visited his people with stripes and chastisements; for the law never knew mercy, but says, "Pay me that thou owest." "The soul that sinneth it shall die."

Typically all the jots and tittles of the law have their place in the order and government of Zion, as under grace and law to Christ, who is the end of the law, and appears as the antitype to his people, as believers in him, and as their gracious Redeemer, who by his knowledge should justify many. "The foundation of God standeth sure, having this seal, The Lord knoweth them that are his. And, Let every one that nameth the name of Christ depart from iniquity." A sacred and solemn injunction on all believers in and professors of living faith in Christ Jesus, who as such prove in their walk and conversation what is that good and acceptable will of God, and truly find that, being raised up from under the power and dominion of the law, "If the Son therefore make you free, ye shall be free indeed." And yet, though they are called to liberty, they are not to use their freedom for an occasion to the flesh. They are not come, in this freedom, to the mount of commands and certain destruction, but are come unto Mount Zion, and all the glorious benefits bestowed upon her are theirs to participate in. And here, I will say, I have rested comfortably for years, in the thought that the gospel day having come, the things that should come to pass in this day are accomplished, in that Jesus has ascended on high, led captivity captive, and given gifts unto men of his own choosing, and ordained them to go forth and bring forth fruit. And their fruit is being developed still. Though Jesus is in heaven at God's right hand, yet he dwells in the heart of every little one that truly believes in him. They are one, even as Jesus and the Father are one. "That they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I am in thee, that they also may be one in us." Every one coming to Jesus for rest, who have been laboring and are heavy laden, and taking his yoke upon them, find him all in all, God over all, and blessed for evermore. It pleased the Father that in Jesus all fullness should dwell. In Jesus dwells all the fullness of the Godhead bodily, as well as all spiritual blessings in heavenly places, in Zion, and in every believer's heart. As the Father hath life in himself, so hath he given his only begotten Son to have life in himself, and hath given him authority to execute judgment also, because he is the Son of man. For the Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment unto the Son; and the Father hath borne witness of Jesus and the work which he did. It was his pleasure to put him to grief, that in his life of suffering and cruel death justice should have ample satisfaction, and all the sins of all his chosen people should be borne in his own body on the tree. The chastisement of their peace was upon him, and with his stripes they are healed. "In him was life, and the life was the light of men." Though the light shineth in darkness, yet the darkness comprehendeth it not. But when God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, shines in the heart, they who were before darkness itself are light in the Lord. Thus are the better things reserved for the gospel day, the more sure word of prophecy, unto which the child of God does well to take heed. The better things than the blood of Abel are all found consummated in the blood of sprinkling, in Jesus, the Mediator of the new covenant. In these things we find the beginning of the end of our exodus from Egyptian bondage, sin and all its power. Though one may have a place among the people of God, and may humbly hope they are enjoying all gospel benefits, and believe their home is with the general assembly and church of the first-born which are written in heaven, yet the most important of all is, Am I really a subject of God Almighty's grace? Has my heart been sprinkled from an evil conscience by the blood of Jesus? Does the new testament in his blood reach my case?

"I seldom find a heart to pray,
So many things come in my way;
And when I count up all the cost,
Without free grace I know I'm lost."

So

"What I think of Christ is the test
To try both my state and my scheme;
I cannot be right in the rest,
Unless I think rightly of him."

He is in heaven, with all power in heaven and earth in his hand, having but to speak, and it is done, to command, and it stands fast; opening, and none can shut; shutting, and none can open; having removed all things that could be shaken, as things made, as patterns of the heavenly. We rest in the fulfillment of the oath and promise of our God, and say, The heavens declare thy glory, O Lord, and the firmament showeth thy handiwork. Thou art great, and greatly to be feared, greatly to be loved and adored, for thou art King of saints.

I trust my dear, tried sister, and all those who are rooted and grounded in the truth, by reason of their senses being exercised, desire as weaned children the strong meat for their growth in grace and in the knowledge of the truth. There is nothing more comforting than the fact revealed in your exercises and trials that your God is a consuming fire. All things on his eternal will depend, and all will to the greater good finally and eternally end, so far as sin and corruption is felt. I would that all who love and confess Jesus might see that they refuse not him that speaketh from heaven, and that they let brotherly love continue.

ELDER F. A. CHICK—MY DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST:—I came across an old copy of the SIGNS to-day which has a letter in it that was written by my dear father. I will copy and send it to you, and if you think there is anything in it that the dear brethren and sisters would like to read you may republish it.

Unworthily,

ANNA MEREDITH.

WE take pleasure in acceding to the above request, both because the subject matter of the letter is as good and profitable now as when it was written, and because of the high esteem in which brother Meredith was held by all who knew him. He was called to his reward last summer, after many years of great usefulness in the churches at Bryn Zion and Cow Marsh, and in every relation in life which it was his lot to fill. His memory is precious in the hearts of many.—C.

KENTON, Del., Jan. 22, 1866.

BROTHER BEEBE:—I have finished the business part of my letter, and will endeavor to write a few lines, which are at your disposal; please do not let them crowd out better matter. I was solicited some time ago by some of the mothers in our church to write something for publication, but have deferred doing so until now. I know my weakness and inability to write anything that will be of any benefit or comfort to any of the Lord's little ones. I cannot express what my feelings were when the request was made. I thought if the old sisters knew my sinful heart as I knew it they would not have made the request, neither could they fellowship me as a brother. I feel that I am such a sinful and polluted creature, that I am not worthy to have my name enrolled with those whom I believe to be the children of God; but I hope the Lord has opened my eyes, so that I can see things as they are. Well do I remember when I was like the blind man whose eyes Jesus opened. Jesus asked him if he saw aught, and he looked up and said, "I see men as trees walking." I remember when I looked upon the fathers and mothers in Israel as being perfect, and free from all the besetments of their sinful nature. I thought that if I ever became a christian I should be like them, free from sin, and always rejoicing in the light; but I trust the Lord has taught me by his Spirit and by his word that there is no perfection in the flesh. I do not believe, as the modern Pharisees profess, that we can attain to a sinless state in the flesh. The word of God and my experience teach me otherwise; for John says, "If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us." He also says, "If we say that we have not sinned, we make him a liar. and his word is not in us." Ah, dear brethren and sisters, if I could conceive that any of you were perfect and free from sin in this life, alas! there would be no hope for me. I trust that we all shall be perfect in Christ, and be kept by his power unto salvation.

Dear brother, I would like to say a few words in regard to the little lambs that are bleating around the fold. I trust that I know something of the trials which beset them. O how I did rejoice when any of the brethren would preach or say anything that would give me any encouragement to hope that the Lord had begun a work with me; but when some brother or sister would commence to talk to me upon the subject, and some one would say to them, "Let him alone; the Lord will bring him in his own time," this would make me sad. I would think that they were very unfeeling. The psalmist said, "And of Zion it shall be said, This and that man was born in her." If any of you were to see a mother sit quietly and see her infant lying out in the cold, at the mercy of the dogs and wolves, and say, "Let it alone; its father will bring it in in his own time," would you not think her an unfeeling mother? Where is the difference between a mother like this and some who talk the same language? I do not believe that it is the duty of members of the church to persuade any whom they do not believe are born of God to go with them; but do as Naomi did by her daughter-in-law, and say, "Go, return to your mother's house." But if they should say, as Ruth did, "Entreat me not to leave thee, or to return from following after thee: for whither thou goest I will go; and where thou lodgest I will lodge: thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God," then we should give them all the encouragement that we can. When Lazarus was raised from the dead he came forth bound hand and foot, with grave-clothes on; and Jesus said to those present, "Loose him, and let him go." So when we see one who has been raised from the dead in a spiritual sense, bound by the law or any other hindrance, we should loose him and let him go, if the Lord should enable us to do so; for, poor things, they are at their wits' end, and know not what to do. They feel the weight of Christ's commands resting upon them, while they cannot take one of his promises to themselves. If they could be enabled to obey Christ's commands, then he would give them to enjoy his precious promises. I hope the Lord will long enable you and all the rest of his servants to feed his little lambs with the consolation of the gospel.

Your unworthy brother, if a brother at all,

PETER MEREDITH.

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES:—I have received No. 4 of the SIGNS, and also the previous numbers, all filled with the precious truth of the gospel of the Son of God, written by your able correspondents, and which, I believe, has been revealed to them by the Holy Spirit, for the edifying and comforting of Zion; also the editorials written by our brethren, Elders Jenkins and Chick. And when I read the editorials of our old brother, Elder Gilbert Beebe, written so long ago, I feel stronger in the faith. It proves to me that the same God rules, and that the same faith and doctrine is held by the church of God as was contended for when the church was set up on the day of Pentecost. I believe it is the only true church of God on earth, and ever will be. Our blessed Lord and Master said to Peter, "Upon this rock I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." Now, brethren, is it not the same church? Has it not stood the storms of ages? All the powers of earth and hell have not, cannot, prevail against it. It shall stand forever. Persecuted on every side, yet it stands firm as the everlasting hills. Jesus Christ is the head over the body, the church; and it is a Bap-

JOHN VI. 55--58.

SOME time last year a request appeared in the SIGNS that some reflections should be offered upon the words found in John vi. 55–58.

There is not generally so much said about this wonderful and profound and deeply spiritual discourse of our Savior as is said concerning the sermon on the mount (as it is called), and the discourse recorded in the fourteenth, fifteenth and sixteenth chapters of this same gospel, but it has seemed to us to bring to view the deepest mysteries of vital and experimental religion. We have hesitated for a long time before undertaking to say anything about this language of the Savior, because at the best we can only glean a few handfuls from so vast a field. It is true that we see but in part and know but in part the truth revealed in any portion of the word; but concerning some portions of the word we have ever felt that they were so far beyond what we have seen and known that we hardly dare say anything about them, lest we darken counsel by words without knowledge. This Scripture and its connection has ever seemed to us far beyond any thoughts or words of ours.

The occasion which gave rise to this discourse of our Lord, which, properly speaking, begins at the twenty-sixth verse, was the miracle of feeding the five thousand with the five barley loaves and the two fishes. This miracle, with the events that followed and grew out of it, may be called the theme upon which this discourse of the Savior was founded. From the bread thus miraculously provided Jesus was led to discourse to them of the true bread which came down from heaven.

The narrative tells us that when those five thousand men who had been fed would have taken him and made him king by force, he departed again into a mountain alone. Thus again did he show that in no sense was his kingdom of this world. Had it been of this world, then indeed might his servants fight to maintain his claim. What a blow at the claims of the Romish sect, and of almost every Protestant sect as well, to be called the church of Christ! The Master discarded all human power; while these openly claim to depend, largely at least, upon worldly governments or wealth or wisdom for support.

When evening came he entered a ship to go to Capernaum. This night he performed the miracle of stilling the stormy winds and waves. The next day the people followed Jesus; and when they had come to him he said to them, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, Ye seek me, not because ye saw the miracles, but because ye did eat of the loaves, and were filled." Then follows this wonderful discourse, in the midst of which the text occurs. It is manifestly impossible for us to even briefly comment verse by verse upon what follows; we cannot undertake it.

In substance Jesus here contrasts the spiritual with the natural and temporal. He teaches that the former is infinitely superior to the latter. While these are likenesses between the natural and the spiritual bread, yet the contrast is also as broad as is the distance between heavenly and earthly things. The one is like the other, in that both are given to nourish and sustain each the life peculiar to itself, and in that both are given of God, and derive their efficacy from him. They are similar also in that while each may be given, the natural to sustain natural life, and the spiritual to sustain spiritual life, in many different forms, yet in whatever form they are given they are still bread, containing the same elements under whatever form they appear; but while alike in these and other respects, yet the contrast is also great. The one perishes; the other endures. The one is natural; the other is spiritual. The one is temporal; the other is eternal. The one is of the earth, and belongs to the earth, and never rises higher than the earth; the other is from heaven, and is of heaven, and sustains heavenly life in the soul. The one is not bread until its life is crushed out of it; the other is living bread. He who eats the one still must die; he who eats the other shall never die. He who eats the one hungers again; he who eats of this bread shall never hunger. The one is evanescent and fleeting; the other is the true (real, substantial) bread from heaven. Death ends the power of the one; but he who eats the other lives through death and overcomes death, yea, has eternal life. Of the one no living being ever said, "I am that bread;" but of the other Jesus said in this chapter five times, "I am the bread of life," or, "I am the living bread which came down from heaven." These are some of the contrasts between the two breads, as presented in this chapter. Just such contrasts exist between all natural and all spiritual things.

We know what natural bread is. Do we ask what is this spiritual bread, and where shall it be found? We have the answer as given above. Jesus said, "I am that bread of life." "My flesh is meat indeed, and my blood is drink indeed." "And the bread that I will give is my flesh." "The bread of God is he which cometh down from heaven." "He that eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood." The lesson in all this, in part at least, is this, that Jesus in his life, his words, his truth, is the source from whence we draw all that comforts, builds us up in knowledge, faith, hope, love, and all heavenly things, strengthens, encourages and helps us on our way in the christian life and the christian walk. If we are firm, steadfast and strong in our testimony, if we are earnest in labors, patient in distresses and persecutions, and cheerful and resigned in troubles and losses, this Jesus is the bread of heaven which makes us so. All that earthly bread does for our bodies in this natural life, Jesus does for us in the spiritual life; and infinitely more does he do for us than bread can do for our bodies, because if we once eat of his flesh and drink of his blood we shall live forever.

The people said, "What sign showest thou then, that we may see, and believe thee? What dost thou work? Our fathers did eat manna in the desert; as it is written, He gave them bread from heaven to eat." Jesus had just said to them, "Labor not for the meat which perisheth, but for that meat which endureth unto everlasting life," &c. They then appeal to the forty years' miracle of manna in the wilderness. Their thought seems in substance to have been this: Thou hast but a little ago fed us in our hunger; and even this thou dost not encourage us to believe will be repeated. Thou tellest us not to seek such bread as this; but our fathers were fed at the hand of Moses. By this we know that Moses was a man of God. What sign then dost thou show? What dost thou do? What proof dost thou furnish, that we may believe that thou camest from God? We understand not these hard sayings about the meat that perishes and the meat that endures. This is beyond our comprehension. Give us some tangible sign. Thus reasoned the carnal multitude.

Now Jesus says, "Moses gave you not that bread from heaven; but my Father giveth you the true bread from heaven." That is, Moses, Jesus would say to them, indeed gave you the manna, but it was still but earthly food; it was not from heaven. A little farther down in the chapter he said, "Your fathers did eat manna in the wilderness, and are dead. This is the bread which cometh down from heaven, that a man may eat thereof, and not die." Still farther on in this chapter he said, "This is that bread which came down from heaven: not as your fathers did eat manna, and are dead: he that eateth of this bread shall live forever." Jesus seems to say to them in substance, The sign which I give, the work which I work, is not such as Moses wrought. It is spiritual, and not natural. Any man could see and eat the manna in the wilderness; but only the spiritual can see and eat this bread from heaven. Ye who have just eaten of the loaves and fishes, like those who did eat of the manna, must die. My work is above this. The sign which I give is the bread of eternal life. I know ye cannot understand, and ye think these are incomprehensible sayings of mine. This is and must be true of all carnal men; therefore I said unto you that no man can come unto me except it were given him of my Father.

Thus we see clearly presented two of the main ideas of Jesus as set forth in this chapter. First, the bread of life which he is to his people is purely spiritual, and therefore is eternal in its nature and in its effects; and second, that carnal men never can see nor eat this bread. The Lord not only puts a distinction between the two kinds of bread, but he also puts a distinction between two kinds of people. The people of this world and the bread of this world, including even the loaves and fishes with which he had just fed them, and including also the manna which Moses gave their fathers in the wilderness, together with every temporal gift of every sort, must all die and pass away; nothing here endures. Time itself is fleeting, and at the end it shall be said that time shall be no more; but the people of God, to whom the Father has given to come to Christ, and the Christ to whom they have come, who is the true bread, the true manna, which the Father has given them, both shall endure forever.

What utter folly is the claim of the Romish Church, that all this means eating really the body and drinking the blood of Jesus at what they are pleased to call the sacrament of the supper! According to the teaching of Jesus in this chapter, it is as needful to drink his blood as to eat his body in order to live forever; yet they cut off the mass of the people from the hope of eternal life by withholding from them the blood, and only giving them the body of the Lord. To what absurdities and deceits will not a false religion stoop in order to rivet the chains of priestly power upon the people! We wish to speak with the most solemn reverence in what we are about to say. Had they who crucified the blessed Jesus, the Lord of glory, been cannibals, and had they eaten the real flesh and drank the real blood of the crucified one then and there, not one of them would have been any other than what he was before—a sinner dead in sins. In this point of view the flesh and blood of Jesus could have done no more than to satisfy the ferocious natural appetite of savage men. Even more is true: were a christian with deepest reverence to approach that dead body at the foot of the cross, and eat of that flesh and drink of that blood, he also would draw from it no spiritual benefit of any sort or kind.

In verse sixty-three Jesus himself settles this matter forever. "It is," he says, "the Spirit that quickeneth [gives and upholds life]; the flesh profiteth nothing: the words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life." His words were a revelation of the truth. Believing and receiving this truth is eating his flesh and drinking his blood. The multitude then did not believe. The multitude now do not believe. The multitude never will believe. No man will ever believe except it be given him of God—except the Father draw him. This Jesus declares again and again in this wonderful chapter.

It is then the word of truth, the word of Jesus, which he speaks, that he means when he says, "My flesh and my blood." Jesus elsewhere confirms this by his saying, "I am the truth." This is the word that shall endure forever. This is the word which by the gospel is preached unto us. By this word believers are nourished, and upon it are they built up in their most holy faith. It is this word of truth that makes them free, and causes a year of jubilee to live always in their hearts. What fullness of meaning there is in the words of the Master, "The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life." Is it not true, then, that every time that some blessed word of comfort and instruction is applied to the trembling, fearing, hungry heart of some poor child of God, he is then eating the flesh and drinking the blood of the Son of man? Thus the profound mystery of truth contained in this chapter, while it remains a mystery still, is found to be nevertheless the record of the most common experience that falls to the lot of the least of the children of God. May we not be allowed to say, brethren, that in this we have been permitted to rejoice even while we were penning down these words? If anything here written shall rejoice the heart and build up the hope of one little child, it will be to him an eating and drinking of the body and blood of Jesus. It is sure that such an one shall never die.

In responding to the request named at the beginning we did not feel like limiting our remarks specially to the words embraced in verses fifty-five to fifty-eight, for the reason that these words simply present the same general truth which has been presented all along in the chapter, and it seemed to us that we could explain the words of the text best by calling attention to the general subject of the whole discourse. It is because that they who eat his flesh and drink his blood shall never die that Jesus, in verse fifty five, declares that his flesh and blood are meat and drink indeed; that is, true bread and true drink. All meat and drink of whatever kind, and however useful in their place, when compared to this heavenly food become of no value.

In verse fifty-six the Savior states another very precious truth. "He that eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood dwelleth in me, and I in him." Thus Jesus presents the close union and communion that he maintains with his living and believing people. What a precious truth this is to every weak and fearing one, for it assures him that so long as Jesus lives he cannot die. He once was dead, but now in Jesus he lives, and shall never die again. What food this truth is also to every hungry soul; for the hunger is for righteousness, peace, joy and rest, and all these are found in Jesus. We dwell in him because he dwells in us. We live in him because he first lives in us. In all this Jesus is first. The child of God is taught that all things heavenly are found in Jesus. He is full of grace and truth. Grace and truth came by him; and of his fullness all we receive, and grace for grace, that is, corresponding to grace. Every grace that we receive in heart or life corresponds to the fullness of that same grace in Jesus.

We leave these thoughts. May they prove of some interest to the household of faith.

C.

THREE QUESTIONS ANSWERED.

QUESTION First. "Are there any conditions in the gospel, that the unregenerated are required to fulfill?"

Reply. The gospel is not a system of propositions, terms, conditions, means, invitations, nor threatening; but it is a proclamation of "glad tidings" to quickened sinners; it is not addressed to the dead, but to the living; it is to the Jews a stumbling-block, and to the Greeks foolishness; but unto them that are (not shall be) called, both Jews and Greeks, it is Christ, the power of God, and the wisdom of God. It proclaims what God has done to secure the complete and eternal salvation of his people in Jesus Christ their God, and not what sinners must do to save themselves. It proclaims glad tidings to the weak, liberty to captives, the opening of the prison to them that are bound, the bringing of the prisoners out of their prison-houses, the acceptable year of the Lord, and the day and vengeance of our God, and comfort to all that mourn. It proclaims the eternal and indissoluble union and identity of Christ and his church; eternal, immutable, almighty, discriminating love of God to his people in Christ, and its power, when communicated to them, to transform them from the image of the earthly to the image of the heavenly. It proclaims the eternal, unconditional and personal election of all the heirs of salvation in Jesus Christ, unto holiness and heaven, before the foundation of the world. It proclaims their predestination of God to the adoption of children by Jesus Christ unto himself, according to the good pleasure of his will, to the praise of the glory of his grace, wherein he hath made them accepted in the Beloved; in whom they have redemption through his blood, and the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of his grace. It proclaims that God has given Christ to be Head over all things to his church, which is his body, the fullness of him that filleth all in all. It proclaims that Christ has taken on him the seed of Abraham, and that all that are Christ's are Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise; that he has borne their sins in his own body on the tree, and by one offering perfected forever all them that are sanctified. It proclaims that Christ has risen from the dead, and brought immortality to light; that he has ascended up on high, that he has gone up with a shout, that the heavens have received him, that he ever liveth to make intercession for his people; that he is an exalted Prince and Savior, to give repentance to Israel and remission of sins. It proclaims him as the High Priest of their profession, holy, harmless, separate from sinners, higher than the heavens; yet easily touched with the feelings of their infirmities, having been tempted in all points as they are. It proclaims him in his coronation as the King of saints, strong in battle, mighty to save, riding on the heavens in their help, and in his excellency on the sky; having all power, legislative and executive, in himself, and working in them both to will and to do of his good pleasure. It proclaims the Holy Spirit sent down from heaven in his name, to abide in his saints, and to lead them into all truth, and conduct them all to their eternal destiny with Christ in glory; even the Spirit of truth, whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him. It proclaims the quickening power of the Holy Ghost in regenerating, teaching, comforting and sanctifying all the sons of God. It proclaims that God has irrevocably decreed and solemnly sworn that he will be their God and they shall be his people; that he will put his law in their hearts, and that he will be merciful to their unrighteousness, and their sins and iniquities he will remember no more. It proclaims the resurrection of the dead, and eternal glory that awaits the saints. It proclaims the establishment of the kingdom of Jesus Christ, its spirituality, its order, ordinances, government, its provisions, defense, munition, character of its subjects, its destination to break in pieces all other kingdoms and endure forever and ever; for his kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and his dominion hath no end.

From what we have said, if our views be correct, it is easy to see that the gospel is not addressed with or without conditions to the unregenerated. They are in a state of condemnation and wrath as transgressors of the law of God. Nothing that they can do for themselves, or that men or angels can do for them, can appease the wrath or deliver from the condemnation which they are under. A proclamation of justification to them while they are guilty and condemned, of peace while they are at war with God and holiness, of comfort while they are unconscious of trouble, of forgiveness while they are not sensible of guilt, of life when they know not that they are dead, would be inappropriate to their condition; and if all the provision and glory of the gospel should be offered them on conditions to be by them performed, it would involve insuperable difficulties, the following among others:

1. To perform a condition, something must be done, the doing of which implies action or work. They are dead, and the dead can neither act nor work; but if they could, Paul says, "If by works, then it is no more by grace; otherwise work is no more work." We must therefore reject the doctrine of conditional salvation, or deny that salvation is by grace.

2. If the gospel contains conditions to be performed by the dead before they can be quickened, as life must always precede action, sinners are required on pain of damnation to have some life before they have any life, and to do something before they do anything.

3. If the gospel presents any action or volition of the dead sinner, as a condition of salvation, salvation is then made to depend on his performance of that work, and the grace of God and the blood of Christ are of no avail.

4. If what we call the gospel is a system of conditions, it ceases to be gospel; for it can never be good news, or glad tidings of great joy, to be assured that we must perform impossibilities, or be damned.

5. To admit that the gospel contains such conditions, is to reject the testimony of the Scriptures, and embrace infidelity. So far from countenancing this conditional system, the Scriptures positively affirm that God has "Saved us [his children], and called us with a holy calling, not according to our works [or performance of conditions], but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began."

To the first question we answer, There are none.

Question Second. "Are any of the promises or invitations of the gospel applicable to the unregenerated?"

Answer. The gospel abounds with promises, such as, "Because I live, ye shall live also." "I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also." "I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you forever; even the Spirit of truth, whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him; but ye know him, for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you." "I will be their God, and they shall be my people." "They shall all know me, from the least of them to the greatest of them; for I will be merciful to their unrighteousness, and their sins and their iniquities I will remember no more."

The above are a sample of the promises of the gospel, and they are applicable only to the elect of God, and never applied to the unregenerate as such.

As to the invitations of the gospel, we know nothing about them, and therefore can say nothing about them. We have searched the Scriptures to find what men call invitations, but we find none, to either saint or sinner.

Question Third. "Does the gospel condemn any person?"

Answer. The gospel can no more be the ground or cause of the condemnation of sinners, than the law the ground or cause of their justification and salvation. The law is a ministration of condemnation and death; but the gospel is a ministration of life and salvation. On some of the subjects contemplated in the foregoing queries, we might greatly enlarge; but we will let what we have written suffice for the present; we may resume the consideration of them hereafter.

PRONOUNCING BIBLES.

ON our last page will be found a complete new list of both large and small Bibles. Among the large Bibles we give styles and prices of a new Bible just out, which has all the names of persons and places divided into syllables and accented, so that the reader can give their proper pronunciation without hesitancy. Also may be found a descriptive list of a parallel pronouncing Bible, the same as above, only it has the old King James and the new translation in parallel columns. Added to this will be found a list of regular family Bibles.

THE SMALL OR HAND BIBLES,

Varying in size from 3 1-4x5 3-8 to 6x8 1-2 inches, are of such a vast variety that we can give a list of only a small portion. The Bourgeois size we give is about the medium size type, and larger or smaller sizes cost proportionately more or less than the prices given for Bourgeois size.

Should you not be able to find exactly what you want in our published list, send for catalogue.

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE.

TO MOST of our readers the above mentioned book is too well known to need any introduction or a description by us. While many of the Bibles have a Concordance appended, they are generally so condensed or abridged as to be of little or no use. Cruden's Complete Concordance, however, enables one to readily turn to any passage of Scripture of which they can call to mind two or three words, and in our opinion is the most complete and convenient as a reference book of any published. In addition, it contains many other aids in studying the Bible, as may be seen by reference to advertisement on last page. Remember, both the books there mentioned are CRUDEN'S COMPLETE.

tist church. The forerunner who administered the ordinance of baptism was called of God, and was filled with the Holy Ghost from his birth, to make ready a people prepared for the Lord. So John's mission here was not to save souls, as worldly religionists of the present day teach. I do feel to praise and thank God that man's wisdom, nor the teaching of so-called Doctors of Divinity, cannot change the eternal decrees or designs of the Almighty God; for he declared by the prophet, "My counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure." And farther he says, "All thy children shall be taught of the Lord, and great shall be the peace of thy children." So man's wisdom is left out. All the holy Scriptures were written by inspired writers. Holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost. So from the beginning of time down to the present day there has never been any change. God works, and none can hinder. Known unto God are all his works from the beginning of the world; so there is no guess work or chance work. The church is complete. Every member of the body is there in its place as God designed it. Not one will be missing. The Master Builder is a workman. He never made a mistake. His house is built upon a solid foundation, a rock, which is Christ. So, brethren, let us take courage, for Jesus is the Master Builder. Let us sing, "How firm a foundation, ye saints of the Lord." Yes, brethren, sing with melody in your hearts unto the Lord, our Priest, King and Shepherd, who will never lead us astray.

Dear brethren, I have written more than I expected to write. I am still in feeble health, but feel to thank my heavenly Father that it is as well with me as it is. I have passed through many severe trials, and have been at death's door several times; but during these trials my Jesus has revealed himself to me as altogether lovely. For nearly forty years I have been in the warfare, and often feel I will not be here much longer. God has seen fit in his divine purpose to cause me to live and suffer here in this body of flesh. I bless his name for his long-suffering toward me, a poor old sinner. If I am saved, it is by grace, and grace alone. None know what affliction is, nor how to sympathize with the afflicted, except those who are afflicted. It has been ten years since I was taken down. Since then I have been confined to the house, part of the time entirely helpless. I often think of those of God's children who are afflicted, especially sister Mary Parker. I have often read her letters. I am glad she is improving. Sister, remember me in your humble prayers.

Your poor, afflicted, unworthy brother,

E. A. NORTON.

DE LAND, Fla., March 28, 1895.

DEAR BRETHREN:—I send the following letter to you for the information of brethren. I sent five dollars to Elder J. S. Ham, of Hartington, Neb., now moved to Emerson, Neb., who asked for some shoes, if we had any more. He and his family are destitute, and he preaching. Nothing had been sent there.

SILAS H. DURAND.

MASON CITY, Neb., March 13, 1895.

ELDER SILAS H. DURAND—MY DEAR BROTHER:—After a long delay, during which I have been very busy, I will endeavor to answer your kind favor of the 26th ult.

I want to state right here that as there seems to be no limit to your benevolence, it is perfectly fitting that the channel be turned in some other direction. We have come through the winter in pretty good shape, and can get along nicely now, the only thing bothering us particularly being the feed and seed question; but our solicitors sent east have met with good success, and we expect to be at least partially supplied. It seems certain that we will get enough so that we can plant enough to assure us a living for another year in case we get an average season. We have good prospects for a bountiful crop, there having been one fine rain and several snows since the first of the year.

The clothing sent to me has all been distributed to the very best advantage known to me, but you would be surprised to see how small a territory it covered. We have, however, placed one or more articles with thirty-three families, about eight of which we have supplied with practically everything in the line of clothing they needed. Several other families were quite well supplied. I have received about seventy-five dollars in cash, and have relieved several cases of poverty and sickness. I have purchased fifty bushels of seed wheat, at seventy-five cents per bushel, and divided it equally among five families. I have also expended about nine dollars in garden seeds, and shall expend some more for garden seeds, and will buy ten bushels of wheat (or its value in other seed grain) for at least one more family. In the absence of any instructions to the contrary, we have taken the liberty to distribute this money for the most part among the Baptist people. I have paid out about ten dollars for freight and other expenses, which about balances the account; but I have not figured the matter, as I shall when all the data is at hand.

I received a car of ear corn from brother Philemon Stout, of Cotton Hill, Sangamon Co., Ill., which he reported at six hundred and forty bushels; but it weighed out six hundred and forty-eight bushels and ten pounds when we came to unload it. This corn was distributed among eighteen farmers, giving to each thirty-five bushels, and the remnant was given to another family. According to brother Stout's request, this corn was distributed as it was solicited, without regard for politics or religion. The freight on this car, amounting to the enormous sum of $140.58, was paid by the donors.

A conservative estimate of the real value of what we have received and distributed, as a result of our correspondence with you and the publication of those letters in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, places it very close to $700.00. These gifts, while not elaborate, were all substantial and useful, and God is our witness that we have tried to place them where they were most needed.

In behalf of all those who have received these gifts, I want to thank all those who have given, and especially do we feel gratéful to you for your many sacrifices in the matter; and above all, we thank him who is the Giver of every good and precious gift.

Your unworthy brother,

J. M. AMSBERRY.

MATTOON, Ill., Feb. 15, 1895.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS:—As near as I can now remember it has been about thirty-five years since my name was entered on the subscription list of the SIGNS. Since that time the paper has come to us regularly, and very few, it any, numbers have ever been put aside without having first been read. If a short-sighted and imperfect creature like myself should presume to judge, the doctrine and order now contended for in the SIGNS by both editors and correspondents is the very same that characterized its teachings when first I began to feel an interest in those things, and became a regular subscriber and reader of the paper; but what changes have taken place in the social, political and religious world since then! These changes have been faithfully recorded by the historian. The very nature of them forbids that any of them should be overlooked. They are all of the world, and the world loves its own; but what about the things which are not seen—eternal things? No note is taken of such things by the world, except to deride and sneer at them. The simplest gospel truth cannot be comprehended by such as know not God. The SIGNS presents the truth in its simplicity. The poorest as well as the weakest of the flock find encouragement in its heavenly teachings. May the Lord guide each contributor to its columns to speak or write none other things than Moses and the prophets testified should come to pass, to the end that the joy of the household of faith may be full, is my earnest desire.

I wish to repeat my notice of change of residence, and say that letters or telegrams directed to 42 Wabash Avenue, Mattoon, Ill., will be delivered promptly.

Your brother in hope,

J. G. SAWIN.

MT. STERLING, Ky., March, 1895.

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES:—By request of our dear and afflicted grandmother Jones I will forward you a few lines. She is the widow of Elder Samuel Jones, who once so ably preached to the edification of those who assembled in the Bald Eagle church-house, Bath Co., Kentucky. Grandmother is still living with her daughter, Mrs. R. M. Burbridge, where she is well cared for. She is in the ninety-third year of her age, and almost helpless. Her conversation is of Jesus. She seems to be only waiting for the summons to call her home. We sit around her bedside and hear her tell of her travels along the way she has been led by an unseen hand. O that we could be like her! O what perfect faith she has in her blessed Jesus. She talks of death as one having no fear. Her mind has not been so good of late, still her conversation on the Scriptures is a source of great comfort to her children. She is the oldest of the little band that compose Bald Eagle church, situated near Mt. Sterling. She is always ready to respond to any and every call, filling her place so well, being the main pillar in the church ever since her husband's death, and now it seems hard to think of giving her up; yet we must be still and know that the Lord is God. It is by her request I send these few remarks. We all have derived much comfort from your highly esteemed paper, the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. Hoping you may be aided in your good work, and grow in grace, is the wish of your friend, L. P. R.

POSTAL MONEY ORDERS.

BY a recent arrangement of the post-office department nearly every post-office in the United States is now a money order office for at least five dollars; and as it costs but three cents additional to obtain an order of not more than two dollars and fifty cents, or five cents for one not more than five dollars, or eight cents for one not more than ten dollars, and so on in proportion to amount of order, we request that all remittances be sent us by post-office money-order. You simply give the money you wish to send to your postmaster, and he will give you a money-order for that amount. You will inclose the order which he gives you in your letter to us; and if it should be lost in the mail you can get another one from your postmaster without additional charge. Please be sure to have the order made payable at Middletown, N. Y., and never at New York City, as that place is nearly a hundred miles from our place, and it puts us to considerable extra trouble and expense to get them cashed at the New York City office.

As will be seen from the above, an order for five dollars or less can be obtained cheaper than registering a letter, while an order not exceeding ten dollars costs but the same amount; and remitting by money order is a much safer way than sending by registered letter, as the postal department is not responsible for loss of registered letters, but money orders can be duplicated.

EXTRAORDINARY OFFER.

WE still continue our offer to send two new subscribers, and credit an old subscriber one year, for three dollars; but we cannot afford to send to one new subscriber, and credit an old subscriber one year, for two dollars. Please do not ask us to do it.

Any one who is already a subscriber is authorized to act as agent for us; and we will send the paper for the first year to any new subscribers they may send us at one dollar each, and they are entitled to retain the other dollar for their commission.

Under no circumstances can new subscribers send to us direct and get the paper for themselves for less than the regular rates.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

SISTER Sarah A. E. Elliott died May 8th, 1894, aged 61 years and 2 months.

She was a daughter of Deacon Joshua and Sarah Lamden, of the Broad Creek Old School Baptist Church, in Sussex Co., Del. Sister Elliott was twice married, and leaves three children of the first and four of the second marriage to remember a faithful and affectionate mother. Brother Severn A. Lamden and sister Mary L. James, brother and sister of the deceased, and several nieces and nephews, members of the Broad Creek Church, cherish her memory. She was baptized by Elder E. Rittenhouse in 1879, from which time her house was a home for our people, and her manifest desire was for the prosperity of Zion. In her last severe suffering and trial she was sustained by grace, and enabled to say, "It is all right. Lord, not my will, but thine be done."

The writer of this memento desires to bear witness to her christian hospitality with grateful remembrance; and at the funeral, held in the Broad Creek meeting-house, he tried to speak comfortably to the sorrowing relatives and friends who mournfully and affectionately bore our sister to her burial, with a comfortable hope that all is well.

W. W. MEREDITH.

BRETHREN EDITORS:—It is with a sad heart that I write to inform you of the death of my dear old grandfather, John Shephard, which occurred at his home in New Harmony, Posey Co., Ind., Feb. 4th, 1895.

He was the oldest of ten children of William Henry and Mary Terry Shephard, and was born in England in the year 1816. While quite young his parents came to Indiana, and here made their home. In 1837 he was joined in marriage to Miss Nancy Downs, who came from North Carolina. In 1862 they both joined the Regular Baptist Church at Bethany, Posey Co., Ind., and were baptized by Elder Joseph Hume. He was a faithful believer in Christ and his holy works. He was a constant reader of his favorite paper, the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. In his last illness he was patient and uncomplaining, awaiting the will of his blessed Redeemer.

He leaves a beloved wife, aged seventy-eight years, two sons (three dead), several grandchildren, two great-grandchildren and a host of friends to mourn his departure. A beautiful life ends not in death, and we feel that our loss is his eternal gain. The Lord giveth and taketh away.

LAURA SHEPHARD.

NEW HARMONY, Ind., April 3, 1895.

BROTHER John B. Carey departed this mortal life at the residence of his daughter and son-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. George M. Springstead, in the town of Wawayanda, Orange Co., N. Y., on March 2d, 1895, of general debility, aged 79 years, 7 months and 13 days.

Brother Carey was married to Susan Kirby on the first day of January, 1840, who preceded him to the grave about two years. He was baptized in the fellowship of the Brookfield Old School Baptist Church in November, 1846, by the late Elder Gilbert Beebe, in which church he retained his membership until called to his eternal home. He was rooted and grounded in the truth of God, salvation by grace alone, and was always ready to talk of the things of the spiritual kingdom.

"Fearless he entered death's cold flood,
In peace of conscience closed his eyes;
His only trust was Jesus' blood,
In sure and certain hope to rise."

He is survived by one son, J. G. Carey, of the town of Wallkill, and two daughters, Mrs. G. M. Springstead, of the town of Wawayanda, and Mrs. George Hunt, of this city; also seven grandchildren and two great-grandchildren. One son died about five years ago.

The funeral services were held at the Brookfield meeting-house on March 6th, and were conducted by Elder Benton Jenkins, using as a text Psalm xci. 16: "With long life will I satisfy him, and show him my salvation." The mortal remains were then deposited by the side of those of his faithful companion, who had preceded him to "the house appointed for all living."—ED.

Mrs. Louisa F. Seegor was born in Macon Co., Ga., March 5th, 1819, and died at the residence of her son-in-law, Mr. J. W. Latchford, in Houston, Texas, Feb. 22d, 1895.

Her maiden name was Louisa Floyd Sims. She was happily married on Oct. 8th, 1839, to Jerry J. Seegor. They moved to Texas from Russell Co., Ala., in 1858. She was a citizen also of Shreveport, La., for a period of ten years. She reared a large family of children, nine of whom survive their sainted mother. She was a faithful member of the Baptist Church for sixty years. Her last illness was of short duration, and she bore her sufferings with that sweet christian meekness which ever characterizes the children of God.

My friend was one of earth's noble women, a quiet, unpretentious christian, whose light shone not in fitful flashes of brilliant radiance, followed by dim eclipse, but with a steady glow and genial warmth that cheered and encouraged all with whom she associated. Her children have felt that benign influence, and will ever feel the mighty inspiration of her holy life. They feel still the molding influence of her character. God help them to emulate their precious mother's example in loving and serving him the balance of their days. Of course we wept when the light went out, the light of those patient, loving eyes, and were sad when the tongue was hushed into silence, and the hands were folded forever; but they were not hopeless, burning tears, for we know of the land where the eye is undimmed, the tongue sings on forever, and where the hands take hold on immortal things.

May the Lord sustain and comfort by his grace all the loved ones left behind, and finally save them in that sweet home of the soul, where she is now enjoying the blessings of that home which has been prepared for all who love God and keep his commandments.

ONE WHO LOVED HER.

BROTHER Cisero H. Lunsford was born in Newton Co., Ga., August 31st, 1835, and was married Jan. 16th, 1873, to Miss A. Eugenia Ivey, a granddaughter of the late Elder G. W. Malcom. To them were born nine children, four sons and five daughters, five of whom survive him. He obtained a hope in his blessed Redeemer in 1874, and was baptized in the fellowship of the church at Harris's Spring, in Newton Co., Ga., on the third Sunday in August of the same year, by the late Elder I. Hamby. The writer knew him well from a child. He was truly a devoted son, doing all in his power to render his aged, afflicted, widowed mother comfortable as long as she lived. Being a member with him and his pastor for fifteen years, I can say that he was devoted to the cause he had espoused, being sound in the doctrine of God our Savior. I felt that we loved as brethren. He was a kind, loving husband, a devoted father, a good citizen and neighbor. He was confined to his bed about the first of last September with a slow fever, and all was done for him that physicians, friends and a loving wife and children could do, but to no avail. He breathed his last on Sept. 30th, 1894, falling asleep in Jesus. The next day the writer tried to speak words of comfort to the dear bereaved ones, and the large concourse of friends that met at the grave, where his remains were laid to rest.

May the Lord extend mercy to the dear sister and children in their sad and bereaved condition, enabling them to bow in humble submission to his divine purpose in all things, is the desire of yours in affliction,

WM. ADAMS.

COVINGTON, Ga., March 20, 1895.

MY daughter, Mrs. Cora Lee Griffy, was born August 27th, 1871, and fell asleep in Jesus Oct. 17th, 1894.

Her disease was typhoid fever. She was sick but a short time, and bore her suffering with christian fortitude. She had never made a public confession, but was a firm believer in salvation by grace. She leaves her husband and little child, her father, three sisters, one brother, and a host of relatives and friends, to mourn their loss; but our loss is her eternal gain. She was a loving wife, an affectionate mother and a devoted daughter. She told those standing around her bedside that they need not tell her there was no God, as she knew better, for she saw him. It was by the eye of faith that she saw him. Jesus appears unto his people in sickness, sorrow and death. She has gone from this world of sin and sorrow, no more to be buffeted by sin. She is now sitting down with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and all the redeemed that have gone before. She is basking in the smiles of her blessed Redeemer. She is in that clime where moth doth not corrupt, nor thieves break through and steal. There is but one road to that blissful abode, and that is in and through Jesus; for he says that he is the way, the truth and the life, and he that climbeth up any other way the same is a thief and a robber.

"Jesus, while our hearts are bleeding
O'er the spoils that death has won,
We would at this solemn meeting
Calmly say, Thy will be done.

"Though cast down, we're not forsaken;
Though afflicted, not alone.
Thou didst give, and thou hast taken;
Blessed Lord, thy will be done."

ALSO,

DIED—My little nephew, Scott Martin, youngest child of Joseph and Georgia Martin.

He was born Oct. 10th, 1890, and fell asleep in Jesus Nov. 3d, 1894. He had diphtheria. He was taken Wednesday, and died Saturday night. He was a sweet little boy. He told his parents just before he passed away that he was going up to the other home, and that his Savior was with him, bearing him through the valley of the shadow of death. Jesus says, "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of heaven." He takes care of the little ones; he carries them in his bosom. That blessed little lamb is now with his Redeemer in that happy clime, in that celestial city above, where all the loved ones have gone.

J. J. WATERFILL.

LAWRENCEBURGH, Ky.

Elder E. Lionberger died March 10th, 1895, at the residence of Henry Berry, near Edgerly, La., in Calcasieu Parish. His age was nearly 70 years.

He was born in Virginia, moved to Illinois, where he lived some years, and afterward settled in Missouri, remaining there some time, and afterward moved to Jonesborough, Ark. On account of failing health the old brother decided about two years ago to spend at least the summer along the gulf, and travel and preach among the churches and communities adjacent. The first season his health was much improved, but the latter part of last year his health began rapidly to decline; and a hurt or wound which he received in his chest from overlifting seemed to contribute much to his hasty departure.

Elder Lionberger had been a minister of the gospel between twenty and thirty years. He preached in Illinois, Missouri and Arkansas, and for the last two years much of his time has been spent among the churches and communities in southwest Louisiana and southeast Texas. He was an able minister of the new testament, blessed with a splendid memory, and was never at a loss for testimony in support of the gospel and its defense. He earnestly contended for the faith once delivered to the saints, and was truly "instant in season, out of season;" for wherever communities and neighborhoods opened a door for preaching, whether in private houses, school-houses or church-houses, he always responded.

I learn from his companion that they had eight daughters, all of whom are married and living in the different states named in this article. On the day of his death he had made ready his hack and horses, in company with his wife being homeward bound. He turned in to spend the night with brother Henry Berry and family. Later on in the evening he took up a late number of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, in which he was much interested, and continued reading as long as the light held out. Supper being announced, the old brother ate moderately, walked out, and quite soon threw up his supper. A few minutes after seating himself in his chair he was observed easing himself out of his chair to the floor, the first intimation of anything serious. At once he was placed on a couch, when he instantly went off into a sound sleep, as supposed; but it was the sleep of death, for he never afterward spoke nor uttered a groan. He breathed his last in thirty minutes from the time of leaving his chair.

"Asleep in Jesus! blessed sleep!
From which none ever wake to weep."

His remains were tenderly cared for by the brethren and sisters of the Antioch Church, and by the friends who had recently made his acquaintance. At the request of his companion the writer in weakness tried to preach to the congregation attending his burial on the morning of the 12th instant, taking for a text, "Blessed is he whose transgression is forgiven, whose sin is covered."—Psalm xxxii. 1. After the discourse his remains were tenderly laid away in the graveyard of Antioch Church, there to remain until the morning of the resurrection, when all the ransomed host of the Lord will have a full appreciation of the language of David, "I shall be satisfied, when I awake, with thy likeness."

PICTORIAL HISTORY

OF THE

UNITED STATES.

By James D. McCabe.

This work is no dry mass of details—no bombastic effort to inflame the national pride, but a vivid and brilliant narrative of the events of our history, from the discovery of the American Continent down to the present time. It gives a most interesting account of the Indians of North America, from the time of the coming of the white men. The voyages of Columbus and explorations and discoveries of the different nations of Europe are related with graphic power. Every step of our colonial history is traced with patient fidelity, and the sources of those noble and, we trust, enduring institutions, which have made our country free and great, are shown with remarkable clearness. Then follows a clear and succinct account of our great Struggle for Independence, and the establishment of the Federal Union—the events of our career from the close of the Revolution to the administration of Harrison.

The work is printed from plain, new type, on fine calendered paper, and comprised in one octavo volume of 960 pages. It is splendidly embellished with nearly 500 fine engravings, embracing battles and other historical scenes, portraits of distinguished men, views of our principal cities, &c., &c.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE MAMMON OF UNRIGHTEOUSNESS.

In a late number of the SIGNS appeared a request from Elder J. W. Fairchild, of Kentucky, for an expression of my views on the portion of Scripture recorded in Luke xvi. 9: "And I say unto you, Make to yourselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness; that, when ye fail, they may receive you into everlasting habitations."

About twenty-five years ago I wrote some on this subject in response to several requests, and published in the SIGNS. What understanding I now have concerning it is essentially the same as then; but I have never been fully satisfied with what I then wrote, nor with anything I have ever seen written upon it, although I have read some articles written by most highly esteemed brethren with much interest and profit.

So far as I now remember, the view has generally been expressed that money, or material wealth in some form, was intended by the Savior in the use of the expression, "the mammon of unrighteousness." This has never been satisfactory to my mind, although I have truly esteemed those I remember to have expressed that view as of deeper and clearer understanding in the Scriptures than myself. I will now undertake to give some of the reasons for not being able to accept that interpretation; and although I do not know that I will be able to say anything that will be satisfactory to the spiritual reader as to what is meant, it may help some in their efforts to come at the true meaning, if I shall be able to show with any degree of clearness what is not meant.

First. Most of the parables of the Savior present some distinction between the legal and the gospel character, between the children of this world and the children of light. This is clearly the case with the three parables recorded in the preceding chapter. The hundred sheep, the ten pieces of silver and the two sons represent, I think, all of Abraham's house under the law; while the lost sheep, the lost piece and the lost son represent how the children of Abraham by the free woman, the Lord's people, are separately manifested by being lost (experimentally) and found, and how on their return there is a joy and rejoicing which was never known before they were lost; showing that Abraham now receives them into the house of the free woman, the new covenant, the gospel church. I was much gratified to see such a view concerning the hundred sheep clearly and forcibly presented by brother Chick in an editorial in the SIGNS. I think the parable in connection with which the command under consideration was given is for the same purpose, the legal character being represented by the steward, and the gospel character shown in the command given in the text; and I may as well say here that I regard the mammon of unrighteousness to be the legal riches of Abraham's house, the ordinances and service of the first or legal covenant, concerning which the course enjoined upon his disciples by the Savior distinguishes them from "the children of this world," represented by the unfaithful steward.

Second. The steward was accused of having wasted his lord's goods; and the rich man seemed not to question the truth of the charge, for said, "Thou mayest be no longer steward." Not that some of the stewards were unfaithful merely, as was often the case through all that legal dispensation, and wholly so at Christ's coming, but that the legal stewardship itself is found faulty, and must come to an end. The law and the prophets were only until John.

The steward now began to act with reference to his own welfare in the future, when the stewardship should be taken away from him. For this foresight, the wisdom that led him to act in the present with reference to the future, he is commended by his lord. What he did with reference to his own future advantage was unjust and wicked, and for this he is not approved, nor commended as an example. Injustice is never approved by the Scriptures of truth. The wicked acts of men are never commended or justified by the Lord, but always held in abhorrence by him; although not one of them ever has failed, or ever will fail, to fulfill a purpose of God for the good of those who love him, and for his own glory. The wisdom of the children of this world has reference to the evil desires of their generation, and is earthly, sensual, devilish. The wisdom of the children of light is from above, and is pure, unselfish, holy, and leads to a course of conduct directly contrary to that inspired by the wisdom of this world in the unjust steward; so that while his forethought is commended to them, and is said to be greater than theirs, his conduct in arranging for his future benefit is described and referred to in such a way as to show that it is the very thing which is to be especially avoided and abhorred by the children of light, in making to themselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness. The Savior says to his disciples, "Be ye wise as serpents," but he does not say, Be wise like serpents.

Third. The Savior said to the Pharisees, "Ye are they which justify yourselves before men."—Verse 15. In this it seems that they are indicated as those who are represented by the unjust steward, who acted with the purpose of commending himself to the Lord's debtors. They had long wasted their Lord's goods; for ages they had misapplied and misused the rites and ceremonies and ordinances of the law. Moses was a faithful and just steward, but after him the stewardship of the riches belonging to that legal house had been most of the time in the hands of unjust and unfaithful men; and now those who sat in Moses' seat are denounced as hypocrites by the Savior, and are charged by him with all manner of injustice, deceit and wickedness in handling their Lord's goods, in attending upon the service of the legal sanctuary, and ministering its ordinances, as well as in their own doings. They "sit in Moses' seat," he said. "All therefore whatsoever they bid you observe, that observe and do; but do not ye after their works: for they say, and do not."—Matt. xxiii. 2, 3.

Not only were these stewards of legal things hypocritical, walking contrary to their own teachings, but, like the unjust steward, they were dealing unfaithfully with their Lord's goods, allowing his debtors to be discharged upon the payment of a part of the debt; fourscore measures of wheat and fifty measures of oil received in full satisfaction where a hundred are due. He was particular to go through with the form of payment, yet the debt was not satisfied. The debtor, he thought, would thus be made his friend; but the records, even as made by himself, would testify against him as having outraged the goods of that house, as having dealt unfaithfully with the ordinances, and as thus having secured the just enmity of those legal riches through a selfish determination to use the stewardship of them for his own advantage, instead of seeking the interests of his Lord. The Pharisees attended carefully to smaller matters and forms that showed well in the sight of men, but omitted the weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy and faith. While the outward forms of that service were strictly required of others, and attended to themselves with a great show of zeal, the perfect obedience of the heart was not required.

Of course that perfect obedience of the heart could not be rendered by sinful man, who is already condemned; nor could that legal stewardship look into the heart, nor recognize that heart obedience, even if it could be rendered. The law can only condemn for the lack of true righteousness; it cannot call it forth from the sinful heart, nor furnish it for any one. The rites and ceremonies of the law show the requirement of righteousness, and point, as types and shadows, to the fulfillment of all righteousness by the perfect work of Christ; yet in themselves, in all the works of the law, there is no more righteousness than there is of substance in a shadow, or of service in a pattern.

A faithful stewardship of those legal riches will insist upon an absolute rendering of all that is due them, however unable the debtor may be to pay. Moses was thus faithful as a steward over the house of God; but there was no faithfulness in those who sat in Moses' seat when Jesus was in the flesh, nor is there such faithfulness to-day in the conditional system of religion. All conditional systems allow the discharge of the debtor upon payment of a part of the debt, pretending to have authority to give a full receipt in the name of the Lord to those who do as well as they can, however far short they may come of perfection. This system does not honor the ordinances and commandments, which demand a perfect righteousness; nor will it secure the friendship of those legal things for him who thus degrades and abases them before their debtors.

Fourth. The riches of this rich man, if he represents, as I think he does, Abraham as the head of the legal house, and the father of the children of the old covenant, consist in the ordinances of divine service belonging to that first covenant, with everything that pertained to that worldly sanctuary. Now, these are all "patterns of things in the [gospel] heavens" (Hebrews ix. 23); "a shadow of things to come; but the body is of Christ."—Colossians ii. 17. Everything in the legal dispensation, the tabernacle, the sanctuary, the most holy place, the ark of the covenant, the vessels, the ordinances, the offerings, and all the service, signified something in the gospel dispensation. They were patterns, and the reality was in the gospel. They were shadows, and the body that caused them was Christ in his church. They were as guide-posts along the way, pointing to the New Jerusalem. There was no intrinsic righteousness in them, but they pointed to the true righteousness, which dwells forever in the gospel, and in all its ordinances. The contrast is between the legal house and the gospel house. The one is filled with patterns, types, shadows, which were all important while that first tabernacle was yet standing, directing the faith of God's people to the righteousness yet to be made known and established in Christ.

The only value of those legal things was and is in pointing to and setting forth the beauty and glory and righteousness of gospel things. Whoever has at any time used them for any other purpose, or ever has ascribed any other value or any other righteousness to them than as types and patterns of righteous things in the gospel, has been an unjust steward of those riches.

That which these legal things point to and represent in the gospel could truly be called riches of righteousness. May it not be that those legal things are in contrast called riches or mammon of unrighteousness? The marginal reading of the word "mammon" is riches, which term I shall mostly use.

Fifth. Immediately upon the recital of the acts of the unjust steward in the parable, and commending the example of wisdom in acting with reference to what he esteems will be for his best good in the future of this world, while his methods are so described as to show at once that they are to be expressly avoided by the children of light, the Savior gives to his disciples the direction in the words of the text.

I will now present some of the reasons which are against the idea that material riches are meant by the term, "mammon [riches] of unrighteousness."

First. I see no reason why money should be designated by this term. There is nothing righteous nor unrighteous in money. The love of it "is the root of all evil," and it may be employed in either righteous or unrighteous work; but abstractly considered it has no quality that would warrant the application of either of the words, righteous or unrighteous, to it.

Second. I cannot understand any way in which a man could make to himself a friend of wealth that he is employing as a steward for another man, and in which he has no personal interest or right, but only the wages of a hired servant. He might make friends with it by unjustly and wickedly using it in the favor of debtors, and against the interest of his employer, as this worldly-wise steward did; but how could he make friends to himself of it?

Third. As referred to above, we see both by the parable and in the twelfth verse that these riches of unrighteousness, of which they are commanded to make to themselves friends, belong to another man, and can never be their own. I think it has generally been taken for granted that those who are addressed by the Savior can use these riches as they please, and that they are commanded to use them in the way best calculated in their judgment to secure favor for themselves in the time of future need. But we must recognize the fact that these stewards or servants could not exercise their own will or judgment in their use of these riches, but were bound by the will of the owner, and that any departure from his direction in their work would be unjust.

Fourth. The expression, "when ye fail," signifies that all who are the subjects of this command are to fail in that stewardship. I have looked in vain to see how this would apply to the use of worldly riches, and to every one engaged in the use of them, and especially to those engaged in their use as servants of another man.

Fifth. Those who have made friends of these riches of unrighteousness, whatever they are, are to be received by them, upon their certain failure in that service, into everlasting habitations. Here again I see no possible way in which this can be interpreted upon the theory that money is meant by these riches. None of our brethren would consider for a moment the belief of some, that money may be the means of causing those who use it in religious works, and those in whose behalf it is used, to enter into the everlasting habitations of glory. But even then, supposing worldly riches to be a possible means of salvation to the one employing it, and supposing death to be intended as the time when they fail, still it could not in any sense be said that the riches they had employed had now become their friend, and as such received them into heaven. The money, whatever may have been accomplished by it, had no connection in any way, no relationship, with heaven.

Sixth. While the riches of which they are to make to themselves friends is another man's, in which they are employed to serve, the everlasting habitations into which these riches receive them are their own.—Verse 12.

Seventh. I will now present some reasons for believing that by the mammon or riches of unrighteousness the Savior referred to all the things pertaining to the ceremonial law, with all "ordinances of divine service" which the first covenant had. This first tabernacle "was a figure for the time then present, in which were offered both gifts and sacrifices, that could not make him that did the service perfect, as pertaining to the conscience; which stood only in meats and drinks, and divers washings, and carnal ordinances, imposed on them until the time of reformation."—Heb. ix. 9, 10.

I will notice first that while the unjust steward is commended as an example in the fact that he acted wisely in his generation, the children of light are commanded to do just the contrary to what he did. The wisdom of the world directed him to make friends of his lord's debtors by handling his lord's goods deceitfully, and dealing unjustly. The wisdom which is to guide the children of light directs them to make to themselves friends of the Lord's riches, instead of his debtors, which can only be done by handling them justly, giving the Lord full credit for whatever belongs to him, and never allowing any of his goods to be lost through fraudulence, nor wasted by neglect. Justice requires of every debtor full payment of every honest debt. If the debtor cannot pay, the steward is not the one who has the right to forgive the debt, or to abate the payment in the least degree.

AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF THE LATE ELDER JOSEPH L. STATON.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS:—I inclose you the life and spiritual exercises of the late Elder Joseph L. Staton, as written by himself at different times in the latter years of his life. If in your judgment it would be profitable for publication in the SIGNS will you kindly publish it? I am sure the many brethren in whom brother Staton was held in high esteem would be glad to read this memoir. I think it is well for us that we keep in remembrance the life-work of the faithful and true witnesses of our Lord and Master, that we, seeing their footprints, may take courage, and so also let our light so shine that we, too, in our walk may give glory to the praise of the grace of our God. Elder Staton was a true friend and advisor of the writer of this request. We were much together during the last seven or eight years of his life. It was to him I first laid bare the secret desire of my heart after receiving a hope that the sweet mercy of God had been extended even to me. His hand led me into the baptismal waters, and his pastoral watchcare over me was always such that drew me very near to him in the sweetest fellowship. It was my sad privilege to be by his side when he suddenly passed out from this life, at the close of the Corresponding Meeting in Virginia, in August, 1891. How wonderfully solemn and precious is the sight as we witness the dissolving of the clay which binds the spirit of the Lord's people to earth; when by faith we see the freed spirit flee as a bird to the mountain of God's holiness, to praise God in an endless eternity.

B. F. COULTER.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., March 29, 1895.

I WAS born in Worcester County, Maryland, in the year 1836, on the 18th day of June. My parents were both Old School or Primitive Baptists before I was born, my father preaching the gospel before my memory commences, and likely before I was born. I have heard him say he was a bound boy in the state of Virginia, raised at hard work, with but little to eat, and no education. When he was eighteen years old he came to Maryland, and soon after married my mother, Mary Givin. He worked in pleasant weather, and when it was not fit to work he went to school, or studied reading or writing at home, until he could attend to almost any business, and was elected to some prominent and important offices, and entrusted with some very important business. He was of a bright, cheerful disposition, and was an able, sound gospel preacher. He died in May, 1854, being fifty-six years old. My mother was a quiet, unassuming woman. She lived twenty years after my father's death, and died in her eighty-fifth year.

My first thought of leaving this world, and an existence beyond and after this for those who lived in this world, was and is the first thing of interest my mind goes back to, and perhaps as early in life as I was capable of retaining anything. My older brothers and sisters say I was not over three or four years old; at least my oldest sister says she carried me in her arms. One of our neighbors was buried, and my father preached the funeral discourse; or I suppose he did; but I remember nothing till we went to the grave, and the coffin was lowered down in the grave. A strange, lonely, desolate feeling came over me, and I wondered what would become of that man if they covered him up in the ground and left him there. I seemed to have some idea that the man would be very lonely and desolate there, covered in that dark cell, and the people all going away to leave him; and I wondered how he would ever get out of there. Also, a verse of poetry that my father read or quoted at the grave made a lasting impression, indeed sufficient never to leave me. I did not see it or know it was in print for many years after. It was this,

"Hark! from the tomb a doleful sound;
Mine ears, attend the cry:
Ye living men, come view the ground
Where you must shortly lie."

I seemed to realize then and there that it was the way of all the earth, and there must be another world, another place of existence, somewhere for human beings that left this world. Many, many times has my mind gone back to that time and place; and I remember as well today how things appeared to me that day as how they appear to me to-day; and the resurrection of the body is as great a mystery to me to-day as it was that day, although I do hope I have learned many things since then. I have learned in part to obey through the things I have suffered. My life since has been a mixture of joy and sorrow; of sorrow, because of my wickedness; and joy, because sometimes I am enabled by faith to believe that my eyes have been opened to see and know good from evil, and to know that in me, that is, in my flesh, there dwells no good thing.

I have nothing special to say for many years of my life, only one continually wicked and seemingly careless, profane, thoughtless life; but as I now look back in my mind, I know that many were the dark and sorrowful hours, even in my wildest and most thoughtless days and years, that I was constantly doing, saying and thinking things that in themselves appeared hateful, which sometimes gives me the hope that in my youth I partook of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, and became a sensible sinner or transgressor, and had a desire even then to do the things that I found not how to perform.

You will see by dates that I was not eighteen years old when my father died. But notwithstanding all my disobedience and wickedness as a child to my father, his death fell heavily upon me. I then knew that a great blessing to me was gone, never to return, which I did not appreciate rightly while he was living. I still lived with my mother, and can recall many things in my wicked career that I am ashamed to speak of. Even then they gave me much trouble, and I made many resolutions that if I lived to be older and settled in life that I would reform and live very differently; and I even made calculations that a reformation would make me a different man, not only in the sight of man, but also in the sight of God; for I yet believed christians were good people, or at least they were not sinners transgressing the law of God daily, as I was; and I wonder yet sometimes how the good Master above can be reconciled to and with such a sinner as I am, so unreconciled to him, and sometimes almost rebellious. It is indeed a great mystery, God manifest in the flesh. I forget sometimes that God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself, and that he has only given us the word or spirit of reconciliation. We have received the Spirit of adoption, and by that Spirit comes or springs the desire to be reconciled, and to say, "Thy will be done." The Savior whilst here had a mind or will which he says he did not come to do, but the will of him that sent him. After living five years with my mother, giving her a great deal of trouble, and, I must think, not much pleasure, my mind seemed settled to try and get a companion to share with me the sorrows and trials of life, and the joys, if there should be any in store for me. In this I was wonderfully blessed in a helpmate and true companion in life. Her name was Louis J. Tilghman, a true hearted, noble woman. Her mother was a Methodist. Her father made no profession, but seemed to have some understanding of the truth. Not long after this great event in life my wife began at intervals to tell me her experience, which I am now satisfied was the work of the Holy Spirit in bringing her to a knowledge of the truth. She soon became in sentiment a Baptist, received them gladly, loved to see them, and hear them preach and talk. It seems to me now that my nature was such that I could not be as kind to her as I should have been; but the longer we lived together the stronger the tie that bound us seemed to become. We struggled hard together for many years, being blessed with eight children, of which five still live. Our experience seemed to be almost the same as we journeyed in life for years, but we could say but little to each other about the things of the Spirit. For myself I could say almost nothing to her of any trouble or sorrow on account of sin, for I thought she could have no confidence in my sincerity. For the most part of the time we kept up going to Old Baptist meetings, and but little any where else, not knowing why we went or what we went for. I remember one morning we went twelve miles to meeting, when the forest was on fire, and the smoke and sea-fog were so thick it was necessary for me to walk ahead of the horse for miles to feel for the road, and my wife sitting in the carriage could not see me part of the time, although I had on a light coat. I have never seen so dark a time before or since, day nor night; and when we got to the meeting neither of us could tell any one why we were so anxious to go. We knew we loved to see them and hear the preaching, but neither of us yet dared claim a hope in the mercy of God. We continued to go to meeting, and our interest seemed to get deeper and more heartfelt. I was looking forward to the time when we should be given a hope; for I did not once think of having a hope, only (as I would express it sometimes) a hope for a hope. I had a strong desire and a good hope that we should sometime become christians and fit subjects for membership, or to be baptized, and make a profession of christianity. I do not remember in all these years, from 1840 to 1873, that I ever had a single doubt about who or where the church was, or of having a single suggestion to my mind as to joining any other persuasion, or of making any profession, but having the hope of sometime being numbered with believers, and, of course, was looking ahead with some anxiety as to when the time would come. During these long, weary years we had many trials to endure, losses, crosses and disappointments, losing two of our children in the time; but we enjoyed many blessings also. We had reasonable health, and success in business, and had accumulated something of this world's goods, for all of which we felt too unworthy of and unthankful for. It seemed to me that of all men I should be the most thankful, and never murmur again at dissappointment or loss; but all at once it seemed that the greatest and saddest disappointment of all that ever had been or could come in this life was coming, or had already come; for I had been hoping these many long years that I should one day be a christian, and such an one as would be blessed with a name and place among them; but instead of getting nearer the church, as I supposed I should, I was getting farther away all the time, and I had just now come to see it. That was the way things appeared to me; for my idea was to get better by littles, until the fitness appeared for membership, and I would make application and would be received; but to my astonishment, surprise and disappointment I had been and was going backward all the time; and here I seemed to lose all hope of ever being what I had hoped for so long; for I saw that perfect righteousness and holiness was required to see the Lord, or to make a profession of his name, and as I was all unrighteousness, even much worse than I had ever imagined before this view of things; and my sad disappointments, as I remember them, seemed to destroy all hope either in this world or in eternity; yet the desire for holiness remained. If there could be justification and forgiveness of such sins, I longed to know of it. These exercises, I think, were in the year 1871, and about that time, I trust, the eyes of my understanding were opened more clearly to see how sinners could be and were saved, or how the sinner could be and was justified before God, and still be a sinner, even such an one as I was. I thought then that God could be just, and also the destroyer of the ungodly. His righteousness seemed perfect, and perfected in us. It exceded the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees; for they only obey in the letter, whilst he obeyed in the Spirit, and became our Savior. There was really hope for sinners, and it was a lively or living hope; for because he lives, we hope.

About this time my mind was more particularly directed to the Scriptures; not so much to reading them as to meditating on what I had read, as they would come up in my mind, some that I had read and did not understand, and had uttered things too wonderful for me, although it seemed to me I could not make a profession, for I might be deceived; yet there was reason to hope for salvation from sin, and for the vilest of the vile. "If thou wilt, thou canst make me clean." My mind for about two years was almost constantly on the Scriptures, and my own duty concerning them; and whilst I was not ready or willing to make a profession, I found myself exhorting and advising others who seemed troubled like I was. I never shall be able to tell of my deep concern for two years, not only for myself, but also for others. The great moving cause of all things in truth seemed dear to me, and I was constantly trying to tell in my blundering way how things appeared unto me. I frequently thought of preaching the gospel; not with any idea that I should ever be enabled to preach. Really I do not think I had any idea what preaching was; but I keep thinking about it, and of what a glorious calling to be called to comfort those that mourned, and to open the prison doors to them that were bound. Everything else seemed to lose its beauty and interest to me. In my zeal I corresponded with some of the preachers, asking questions about the Scriptures, until they would occasionally say something about my way of preaching, which made me think more seriously about what preaching really was. I soon began to think it was explaining the Scriptures, and applying them in the promises to those who were in trouble and concern about themselves and what the Scriptures contained; to speak comfortably to any one that was lost, was to speak of salvation for such; point them to the Lamb of God; tell them of the way I had found that sinners could be and were saved. I would have liked ever so much to do that, but I could not, for they seemed mysterious. I was constantly making inquiry myself, and could not understand; and certainly what seemed so mysterious to me I could not explain to others. It seemed to me then that the ministers of the gospel understood perfectly all the Scriptures, and it was necessary they should; but I fail to remember the questionings that were in my mind. Many of them have followed me until now, more perhaps than would be interesting in this narrative.

I shall now speak more particularly of my baptism, and of the difficulties and trials after about the first of July, 1873. While reading one evening in the hymn-book my mind seemed particularly drawn to the words,

"Dear Lord, the ardor of thy love
Reproves my cold delays."

I was made willing then and there to ask a place with those that I fully believed to be his followers. The time was fixed, that the first opportunity should not pass; but I was disappointed in my first attempt, one of my children being so sick that it was imprudent to leave home. For two weeks the subject of baptism was on my mind, and then I was privileged to go. I was received

HEBREWS X. 22.

DEAR BROTHER CHICK:—While lying in my bed last night my mind was led to the Scrip e in Hebrews x. 22. Will you please give your views upon it, particularly upon the heart sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water? What is the difference between evil and sin? Job said, "Shall we receive good at the hand of God, and shall we not receive evil?" It would not be the same if Job had said "sin" at the hand of God. I have had some thoughts upon it; but I feel my ignorance, and that I know nothing as I desire to know, and would like your views in an editorial in the SIGNS. With love to all the dear saints of God,

E. D. VARNES.

CRAMER, Ill., Feb. 6, 1895.

REPLY.

WE are glad to comply with the request of brother Varnes as best we can. We have known him personally for quite a number of years, though we do not often meet; and we have been glad that it has been our privilege to be held in his fellowship, and to receive good and spiritual letters from him at different times. The subject to which brother Varnes has called our attention is of great importance in itself considered, and for this reason, as well as on account of brother Varnes' request, we feel disposed to say a few things about it.

We wish to first notice the question, "What is the difference between evil and sin?" Brother Varnes in referring to the language of Job, as quoted by him in his request at the head of this reply, well says, "It would not be the same if Job had said 'sin' at the hand of God." Manifestly the word "evil" in this language of Job does not mean the same thing as Paul means in the text in Hebrews to which brother Varnes refers, the heart "sprinkled from an evil conscience." Evidently Job, by the word "evil," means his multiplied trials, for of this alone he is speaking; while Paul, when referring to the evil conscience, means a conscience defiled by sin. Perhaps we might state the difference in this way. Sin always means the transgression of the law of God. Evil may not mean this at all, though it often does. All sin is evil, but all evil is not sin. We have been looking up in the Old and New Testaments the hundreds of places where the words "sin" and "evil" occur, with the Hebrew and Greek words from which they have been translated. We cannot here go into details, but our conclusions are as follows. Evil is a broader word in its meaning than sin, but sin is more intense in its meaning. Sin is always against God—a transgression of his law. Sin is evil, the greatest, highest evil. Sin is evil in itself, and evil in its results.

On the other hand evil, while in some scores of places it means sin, yet does not always mean that. It often, very often in the Bible means whatever causes pain, loss, sorrow, or whatever disturbs and distresses man. So the losses and afflictions and diseases of Job are the evil of which he says that he has received it at the hand of the Lord. There is the same difference, upon the other hand, between good and holiness. All holiness is good, but all goodness is not holiness. Goodness often relates to temporal blessings, even as evil sometimes refers to trials or afflictions. Now, if the question be asked, How shall we know which meaning to attach to "evil" when we find it anywhere in the Scriptures? we would say that as a rule the context will decide that for us. It is important, moreover, that we keep in mind the fact that sin has been the prime cause of all that is evil in the world. Because of this, with other reasons, sin, as we have said, is the great, the crowning evil. We do not here mean to say that men who have great trials are or have been great sinners, more than others. This would be to assert the truth of what the friends of Job ignorantly charged upon him. Jehovah himself pronounced Job a just man, and one who feared God and eschewed evil, or wrong. But we mean that nothing is more sure than that the whole aggregate of sorrow, pain and woe that the world has ever felt has been the result of the entrance of sin into the world. It is lawful to assert the general truth, but we are too ignorant to make special applications in individual cases. Thus we have tried to sketch the difference between sin and evil, and the difference between the two uses of the word "evil." Sin is the fountain out of which all kinds of evil flow.

We turn now to consider the special Scripture to which our brother refers. It reads as follows, "Let us draw near with a true heart in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water."

We desire, in considering these words, to confine ourself as much as possible to the words especially noted by brother Varnes, the heart "sprinkled from an evil conscience," and the body "washed with pure water." First, "Having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience." Sin is that which separates between man and God; and Paul is in this connection presenting the one only way by which any sinner can approach unto God. In doing this he is all along in this connection calling up the types connected with the tabernacle worship in the wilderness, and afterward with the temple worship. All that he says in this tenth chapter of Hebrews and connecting chapters is full of allusions to the various forms of ritual worship established in the wilderness, and familiar always afterward to the Jews. It is manifestly impossible for us, in the ordinary limits of an editorial, to refer to them all. He refers to the worshipers, the sacrifices, the priests, to the blood, to the holiest, to the high priest, to the veil, and to the sprinklings and washings. These things were all included in the type of the better things yet to come; and we are taught that they were for such a ceremonial cleansing of the transgressor, that through them it was his right to enter once more into all the enjoyments of the sanctuary, and of his citizenship in the land.

The teaching of the apostle here is that spiritual Israel, they who are of faith, though they were sinners, separated from God by wicked works, have by the blood of Christ, the true sacrifice, been cleansed from all their guilt; and that now this same Jesus, as their High Priest, living forever after the power of an endless life, stands presenting his own blood in their behalf before the true mercy-seat in heaven. Therefore, he goes on to say, having right (or, as the text reads, boldness) to enter into the holiest by the blood which has been shed, and having a High Priest over the house of God, let us draw near with a true heart. The address is to those who are sinners, and who feel that sin shuts them out from any coming near to the holiest, but who yet, with all the power of longing that their hearts possess, desire to come near. Paul here assures any of us who occupy this ground that sinners though we be, it is yet our right to come near, even to his throne, because the way has for us been opened through the blood of our sacrifice, and through the intercession of our High Priest. It is by faith that we draw near. Even under the old covenant times he who had trespassed or sinned must have a sort of faith ere he could or would bring any sacrifice to the altar. He must have believed that through the sacrifice thus made he would secure to himself whatever blessing was promised as the result. So now it is by faith that any of us ever come through Jesus unto the throne of grace, or, to keep in view the type, to the mercy-seat; and when any come by faith really, and not by mere profession, they come with a true heart. This sincerity or reality is what the apostle means by the term "a true heart." Such an one, Paul would say, must be, yea, will be sincere. There will be sincere confession of sin, sincere putting aside of all but Christ, sincere prayer for forgiveness and cleansing, and sincere acknowledgment of the holiness and justice of God. The lips will not speak humbly while the heart feels proudly. With such an one all will be true or sincere. Such an one will also be anxious to be sincere. His fear will be lest he be insincere, lest all should be but mere form with him, or at the best but the result of imagination. Such a troubled sinner feels deeply what an awful thing it is to draw nigh to God with the lips, while the heart is far from him. It is thus, as it seems to us, that we draw near with a true heart.

"In full assurance of faith." The word "assurance" here signifies full conviction or certainty of faith; that is, in the full confidence which faith imparts. This is the full assurance of that soul to whom divine things have been revealed. This is such assurance as was begotten in the hearts of the dwellers in the city of Sychar, in Samaria.—John iv. They said to the woman, after they for themselves had heard Jesus, "Now we believe, not because of thy saying: for we have heard him ourselves, and know that this is indeed the Christ, the Savior of the world." Paul would say to his brethren, We know that our sins have been confessed upon the head of the true sacrifice, we know that the sacrifice has been slain, we know that our High Priest has taken the blood, and now appears in heaven for us; therefore we have a right to come boldly, in the full assurance that every obstacle is removed. It is the full assurance of faith. Not in the presumptuous confidence of some fancied good found in self, but in full trust in the name and merit of the crucified one. It may well be said that wherever faith is named in the word, Jesus is at hand as its object, aim and witness. Jesus died, must ever be the soul's only plea. It never needs any other plea; it is a sufficient plea. Here is the full assurance into which we are brought by faith.

"Having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience." This is Old Testament language with a New Testament application. In the type which is here alluded to, the blood of bulls and of goats, and the ashes of the red heifer which had been slain, and whose body had been burned, were sprinkled upon any Israelite who had become defiled, thus cleansing him to the purifying of the flesh. Now, in chapter nine, verse fourteen, the apostle says, "Much more shall the blood of Christ * * * purge your conscience from dead works to serve the living God." This is the blood by which the apostle declares in the text that the heart is "sprinkled from an evil conscience." It is the blood of Christ, applied by faith, that purifies the heart. Sin ever must abide in our conscience unless we realize that it is washed away in his blood. No vows nor promises nor works nor service of ours can remove the evil conscience from the heart. Thousands of the Lord's people have proved this as well as the apostle; and so long as the evil conscience remains no man can draw near to God. Sin must ever shut us out from the most holy place. Sin must be put away first; and the manner of its putting away the apostle declares to be by the sprinkling of blood, the blood of Christ, upon the heart. In the type the sprinkling of the blood proved that the sacrifice had been made, that the offering was completed. Our great sacrifice, Jesus, has been offered; and by the one offering of himself for us our sanctification has been completed. Now by faith the blood is applied to the sin-burdened conscience, and the soul can now approach unto God. How precious this coming is to the one to whom sin has become a burden! What a wondrous message it is, that through the blood of Jesus the sinner is privileged to draw near!

"And our bodies washed with pure water." The language here is also the language of the Old Testament. It refers to the cleansing of the body, which was needful for those who ministered in the sanctuary; and from Ezekiel xxxvi. 25 and 2 Corinthians vii. 1 we learn that this outward washing meant the putting away of an evil life and a filthy speech. It is the same filth of the flesh that Peter speaks of, and of which he says baptism will not put it away. It seems to us that the apostle teaches in these words the truth that not only must there be faith in Christ ere one can draw near to the most holy place, but that also there must and will be a putting off of the old sinful practices, and a walking in the new and living way. Water is the emblem of cleansing. As water cleanses the body, so by his word and Spirit must the outward life be cleansed. There is no room in the worship of God nor in the service of his sanctuary for a foul or ungodly life.

Thus as briefly as we could have we tried to present such reflections as have occurred to us in reply to our brother. We trust they may prove of some satisfaction to him and to others. May God bless his truth to us all.

REQUESTS FOR VIEWS.

WE have received two requests for some thoughts upon the parable of the unrighteous mammon, recorded in Luke xvi. 1–12. One is from brother A. J. Gilbreath, of Burnett, Oklahoma, and the other is from brother J. A. Grafton, of the Harford Church, in Maryland. As brother Durand has written lengthily upon this theme, and his article is now being published, we trust that our correspondents will excuse us for the present at least. We have many requests for views. We will do the best we can to comply with the wishes of our brethren. We hope that brethren will believe, if their requests are not answered, that we mean no disrespect, and that the cause is either want of time or lack of understanding.—C.

COMPARATIVE NUMBER OF OLD AND NEW SCHOOL BAPTISTS.

MR. BENEDICT, in his "Closing remarks on New York," page 580, of his late history, chronicles the following statement:

"This State unquestionably contains the largest Baptist population of any in the Union; and different from the other great States where the numerical strength of the denomination ranks high, they all work together with harmony and efficiency. All the Associations in the State, with the exception of two very small ones, are enrolled in the State Convention Minutes, and lend their support to all benevolent operations at home or abroad. Sabbath schools, Bible classes, and evangelical efforts generally, are encouraged and supported from one end of this great State to the other.

Relative to the doctrinal sentiments which have generally been ascribed to Wickenden, Wightman, and their associates, who were the pioneers of the Baptist cause in the city and vicinity, I strongly suspect that if the truth could be known they were sounder in their faith than has been generally supposed. Valentine Wightman, the founder of the first Baptist church in Connecticut, has always been reported an orthodox divine. The same may be said of Nicholas Eyres, one of the first converts to the Baptist faith under Wightman's ministry, and who subsequently became a distinguished pastor in Newport, Rhode Island.

We must bear in mind that all were then set down as Arminians who did not come up to the highest point of hyper-Calvinism. Our old ministers in this region half a century since would have denounced as unsound in the faith the great mass of our community of the present day, both in Europe and America, Fuller and Hall among the rest.

As to Mr. Wickenden's ministry, about the middle of the 17th century, I have good reasons to believe that by suitable efforts something more may be learnt respecting it than is now known."

We feel no ambition to join issue with our one-sided historian upon the comparative popularity or numerical strength of the two orders of people in this State who are called Baptists. We freely admit that the New School are by far the most popular and more numerous; and the name of their multitude is Legion, for they are many. While the Old order of Baptists, as he admits, were the pioneers of the Baptist doctrine in this State, and such as from the middle of the 17th century to the 19th have occupied the same ground which the Old School Baptists now claim, who hold the bulk of the modern order, including Fuller and Hall, to be Arminians. It is highly probable, if not absolutely certain, that the Baptists of two hundred years ago, in this State and elsewhere, would be stigmatized as the Old School now are, and called "hyper-Calvinists" and "thick skinned antinomians," by the New School order of the present time.

But we designed in this article to show that the comparative numbers of the two orders are not fairly represented by Mr. Benedict. He says that all the Associations in this State, with the exception of two very small ones, are enrolled in the State Convention, &c.; thus holding out the idea that two very small Associations comprise all the Baptists of the State of New York who stand opposed to or disconnected from the New School measures of his party. We would suppose the Warwick, Lexington, Chemung and Allegany Associations would count more than two, if his remarks were confined to Associations in the common acceptation of the word; but if Mr. Benedict does not know that there are more than four times as many unassociated Old School Baptist churches in this State as there are of those associated, and probably five or six times as many Old School Baptist members in the State as the total amount displayed in the Minutes of the four above named Associations, his knowledge of New York Baptists is too limited to allow him to give a history that can be relied upon for accuracy. And we learn from brethren in various parts of the country that his statements generally are but little if any nearer the truth than what he has said of the New York Baptists.

We do not wish to be understood that Mr. Benedict's misrepresentations are regarded as an injury to us, for neither he nor any other enemy of the cause can do anything effectually against the truth, but for it. If the numerical proportion of the Old School Baptists to the New Order were not more than one to a thousand, it would prove nothing against the othodoxy of the minority, or in favor of that of the majority; and although it might draw into the ranks of the New School those who have more regard for popularity than for the truth of God, it would have the same tendency to prevent nominal profession and graceless hypocrites from attempting to impose themselves on the church of Christ.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y., August 15, 1848.

THE SABBATH A DAY OF REST.

"THE case of Specht vs. the commonwealth has at lenght been decided by the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, now in session at Harrisburg. The following are the facts of the case:

The man Specht, who is one of the sect of Seventh Day Baptists, was indicted in Franklin County for working on the Sabbath, and fined by the Court. He appealed from the decision, in order to test the constitutionality of the law under which he was fined. Judge Bell delivered the opinion of the Supreme Court, affirming the proceedings of the Court below, and establishing the constitutionality of the law."

The recent decision of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, that it is constitutional to fine a Seventh Day Baptist for refusing to religiously observe the first day of the week instead of the day which God commanded the Jews to keep holy, is well calculated to startle those who had fondly indulged the delusive hope that the Constitution of the United States secured to every religious sect, and to every individual, equal, civil and religious rights. It is now legally announced, so far as Pennsylvania law is concerned, that the majority of religious sects are to domineer over the minority, and judge them in holy days and Sabbaths, in the face of all the authority of heaven.

We will not subject ourself to the charge of speaking evil of dignities, by uttering a reproachful word against the presiding officers of that court; but on the supposition that the Constitution, the grand Magna Charta of our liberties, justifies their decision, we must relinquish all confidence in that instrument as a shield from legal outrage and coercion in those matters which God has forbidden us to allow any man to judge us in. If our courts of law are empowered by the Constitution to judge for us of the law of God, and to enforce their decision by fines and penalties, then they have not gone far enough. They should compel men by the same means to love the Lord their God with all their mind, might and strength, and their neighbor as themselves. If our executive or judical authorities are to see the laws of God enforced, why do they commute the penalty from stones to shillings? and why execute the penalty through the sheriff, instead of all Israel, as the Lord commanded Moses? And why change the day which God commanded the Jews to observe as a Sabbath, for a day which God has never expressly or impliedly commanded either Jews or Gentiles to observe at all? But if our judiciary has no authority over the consciences of men, how has it happened that a member of the sect called Seventh Day Baptists, is by decision of the Supreme Court fined for non-conformity to a religious tradition which in his opinion would require him to disobey and dishonor the God of heaven? If the constituted authorities of our state or nation have a divine right to establish a religious test in regard to Sabbaths, then have they the same authority to compel us religiously to observe new moons, and all the rites of Judaism, and in such a form and construction of the Jewish code as they may please.

Comparatively it may be deemed a light matter to impose a fine of a few shillings; but we contend that if the civil authorities have any divine power in the matter, then they have all power, and may cause all who kindle a fire on the Sabbath, or who teach a Sabbath school, or peddle tracts, or cause or allow their man servant or maid servant, or their ox or ass, to do any kind of labor on that day, to be stoned with stones till they are dead. While the hitherto despotic nations of the earth which have groaned under the oppressive power of priestcraft and kingcraft are throwing off the chains which have bound them for centuries, America, hitherto regarded as the asylum for the oppressed of all nations, stoops down to pick up the offcast chains and manacles of inquisitorial intolerance, to bind the consciences of her citizens, and forbids them the privilege of worshiping the God of heaven in any other form than that established by her despotic laws.

It may be urged that a Seventh Day Baptist may enjoy the privilege of worshiping God on the seventh, if he will also keep the first day according to the manner and form prescribed by our laws. How can that be? The law which the Seventh Day Baptist regards as the rule, requires him to work six days and do all his labor, and to rest on the seventh day. But the law of Pennsylvania, as defined by the Supreme Court of that State, forbids him the privilege of working the six days which God commanded, and allows him but five days, unless he will labor on that day in which he holds himself bound by God's command to do no labor.

ANOTHER OPERATION.

IN the providence of God I was again called, on Wednesday, the 10th instant, to pass through the unhappy experience of a surgical operation for a stone in the kidney; but God in his great mercy has not permitted me to suffer as acute physical pain as many more worthy saints have been called to endure. One year ago this month a similar operation was performed, and while several large abscesses were found and drained, no stone was discovered; but this time a stone the size of an ordinary hickory nut was found, and being too large to remove whole, had to be crushed. I am encouraged by my physician to anticipate again being able to attend to office duties in about ten days or two weeks. Until then I request my brethren and friends to exercise patience and forbearance if their business correspondences are not answered as promptly as usual.

PRONOUNCING BIBLES.

ON our last page will be found a complete new list of both large and small Bibles. Among the large Bibles we give styles and prices of a new Bible just out, which has all the names of persons and places divided into syllables and accented, so that the reader can give their proper pronunciation without hesitancy. Also may be found a descriptive list of a parallel pronouncing Bible, the same as above, only it has the old King James and the new translation in parallel columns. Added to this will be found a list of regular family Bibles.

THE SMALL OR HAND BIBLES,

Varying in size from 3 1-4x5 3-8 to 6x8 1-2 inches, are of such a vast variety that we can give a list of only a small portion. The Bourgeois size we give is about the medium size type, and larger or smaller sizes cost proportionately more or less than the prices given for Bourgeois size.

Should you not be able to find exactly what you want in our published list, send for catalogue.

and baptized, and became a member of a church that had no stated preaching, but met once a month for prayer and praise. Now came one of the most severe trials of my life. There seemed to be no gift in the church; at least if there was there was none manifest. Some of them would read a chapter, sing some hymns, and go home. Here my mind was directed to the subject of prayer. Many times have I prayed that my mouth might be opened to speak in prayer. I would have given anything and everything for strength to make the attempt, for I wanted to say something; but the meeting would be opened by prayer, and that I could not do, for I felt sure that an effort would prove such a failure as to mortify me and the brethren, and tend to destroy their love and confidence in me, which was very dear to me; and worst of all, it would be but mockery in the sight of God. For about two years I continued to go, hoping all the time to be strengthened to do what seemed my duty, and a great privilege and relief. During this time some of the brethren in the ministry advised me to make the attempt, as the only source of relief. About this time six members, including myself, organized, and a church was constituted in Snow Hill, Worcester Co., Md.; some of them from Salisbury, where my membership was, and some from the churches. We immediately called Elder T. M. Poulson, of Virginia, as our pastor. He accepted the call, and appointed to meet with us one Sunday in each month. He served us as faithfully as possible; but living a distance of twenty miles away, he occasionally failed to come. At such times I generally read a chapter and talked a few minutes, but never attempted to speak in prayer till the church made an appointment for me and urged me to comply with their request. When I consented to do so it was with a vow, if permitted to do so, to open my mouth in prayer. Then came a very severe trial for a short time in reference to my duty. I could think of but little else till the time came, when my mouth was opened, and one of the most sincere, heartfelt, earnest prayers I ever uttered, was then, and I found such relief that I hoped that trial was over; but I was sadly mistaken, for I yet have many misgivings and trials in speaking in prayer. The church continued the appointments for me, and proffered me liberty to go wherever and whenever called for by other churches. This was in the spring of 1879; and during the following summer, by request, some days I attended three appointments, two in the daytime and one in the evening. During this entire year my family was more or less sick, and on the twelfth day of August my dear companion in life was called home, which seemed for the time more than I could bear up under; but the Lord sustained me by his grace, for he had not yet called for me. I was very often sick through the week, but always able to go to meeting when Sunday came. As I remember, I did not miss an appointment on account of my own sickness.

In the fall of 1879 the Salisbury Association met with the church at Snow Hill, where my membership was, and I heeded a previous call from the church for my ordination. The presbytery was composed of a number of brethren, and the following ministers, Elders Gilbert Beebe, Wm. J. Purrington, S. H. Durand, A. B. Francis, E. Rittenhouse, and T. M. Poulson. I was then and there regularly set apart by prayer and laying on of hands to the work of the ministry, and immediately called by the church at Fishing Creek to serve them as pastor, and to preach for them once in two months; which call I accepted, and have served them as the Lord has been with me since.

In the spring of 1880, the church at Snow Hill, New Castle Co., Delaware, called Welsh Tract, sent me an invitation to visit them once a month; and also the London Tract Church, Chester Co., Pa., sent the same invitation, both of which I accepted. I visited them several months, when both churches expressed a desire for me to move my family to Delaware and become pastor of those two churches. In the spring of 1881 myself and family moved to New Castle County, Delaware, and settled on a little farm near Newark, and I began to serve these two churches regularly, in addition to the church at Fishing Creek, Dorchester County, Maryland. During this time, or in the fall of 1880, the Lord blessed me with another companion in life, a good christian woman, and an established Old School Baptist, which has proved a helpmate indeed. I am at this writing, June 8th, 1883, just forty-seven years old with a family of six children, and a second wife, the youngest child being hers. Three of my first wife's children have passed away to be with their dear mother in the immediate presence of the great Judge of all things, and the Giver of all good. I am yet serving those three churches from time to time as the Lord is pleased to be with me.

After speaking somewhat of the churches I serve, and of their present condition, I propose to go back in my mind and speak somewhat of my trials, difficulties and deliverances in the ministry.

The Welsh Tract Church is the first Baptist Church organized in America, and at one time before the division and separation I think it numbered over two hundred members. Since then the church and congregation has been much smaller. When I came here there were fifty-seven members. Since then three have pased away, and three have been baptized, leaving the number the same, but very much scattered, several being old and infirm. Our communicants at our quarterly meetings seldom exceed thirty-seven, and the congregation from 100 to 125.

The London Tract Church was also organized a great many years ago, but has always been small, the present membership being only seventeen, and the congregation from 75 to 100, many in each congregation seeming to love the truth.

The Fishing Creek Church is very small, having since my recollection been sustained with from seven to twelve members, and a congregation of 75 to 100, generally very attentive to the word. The mercy of the Lord and the power of his grace has been wonderfully manifest in sustaining this church under many discouraging circumstances, for years at a time with no male member or deacon, one of the sisters acting as deacon and clerk; yet they never failed to correspond with the sister church, and to keep up their regular church meetings.

One of my greatest conflicts through life has been with my own evil heart of unbelief. I have often thought if sufficient evidence was given me that I was qualified to preach the gospel of the grace of God, it would be a great privilege, and I have often said to myself, I had rather be a gospel minister to the children of God than the chief magistrate of the United States. Indeed I never have desired any office in the gift of the people. I always felt incapable of serving them well in any important office, and hence have had no desire for them. The same feeling of insufficiency to serve the church has made me all through life very timid and backward. Whilst I remember and know that our sufficiency is of God, my nature has seemed to forbid me to trust; hence the conflicts, and slow to believe what I knew must really be so. There is to my mind a great mystery in this, that whilst we know that salvation is of the Lord, yet we are constantly looking for something in ourselves to recommend us to God, and can scarcely understand how a helpless sinner can be saved, when they are the only ones that can be saved; as others have nothing to be saved from. Just so it has been with me in reference to preaching the gospel. While I know that the Lord must fill my mouth, if it is profitable to his redeemed, yet I am always wanting something on hand to say, for fear he will not give it to me when the time comes; but I think this all comes from that evil heart of unbelief, and the doubt that remains in my own mind as to whether the Lord has required this at my hands. I have never felt to censure poor old Jonah much for trying to get away. I guess he was honest and conscientious in what he did, and needed that much more experience to prepare him to pay his vows. In short, I will say that the subject of prayer and praise to God has been to me a very solemn subject, and I have had a great struggle with myself, both in commencing the work and keeping it up. I have spent many sleepless hours, and sweated many big drops, and yet self seems uppermost in the very best of my performances. I know that unless obedience is in the heart, the act is but mere mockery in the sight of God.

ON the seventeenth of this month the good Lord gave us the care of a very promising little boy for a while; we know not how long. This is the second child of my second wife. Since the last writing in this book I have had many conflicts, many dark hours, and some very bright and pleasant ones. The mercy of the Lord still endureth, and my unworthiness is still the same. The brethren seem to understand what I mean to say and do not expect anything of me, only as the good Master above is pleased to grant them through me. If he opens, no man can shut; and truly if he shuts, no man can open. The Lord is good to them that put their trust in him; but alas! man is so prone to err.

At present there are eight regular appointments for me to meet in each month, to preach as the Lord may enable me, and it is a blessing to me that no more is expected of me by the brethren than what he is pleased to give. It is always a blessed privilege to me to deliver a message, if I can feel that it comes from the Lord; otherwise it is a hard, laborious task. The engagement in spiritual things, if indeed that engagement is mine, is more in feeling the power of the Spirit in my own soul than anything else. The company of the saints is very precious at such times; but sometimes the flesh so shuts out the light that I prefer to be alone. Since the last writing I have accepted the call of the Salem Church of Philadelphia, Pa., to meet with them every fifth Sunday, or four times a year.

THERE has nothing of special note occured since the last writing. I am still serving the four churches at stated times, with such ability as the good Lord is pleased to give me; and in them there is ingathering, we believe, according as God is pleased to constrain by his almighty power.

SEPTEMBER 20, 1889.

MANY days have passed since I wrote in this book. Very much of the time has been spent in solitary idleness, seemingly for want of ambition. The congregations and churches I am serving have kept up their usual interest. There have been occasional additions to them, the one in Philadelphia, that I see the least of, manifesting the most zeal of any, and having the most additions to their number, assuring me more and more that the good Master above is adding to the church daily such as shall be saved; that it does not in any sense depend upon my feeble efforts.

JOSEPH L. STATON.

CENTERBURG, Ohio, Jan. 9, 1895.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS:—It has been on my mind for some time to talk a little to those I love in the Lord, through this blessed medium, our family paper, the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. We have entered upon another new year; but how long we will survive we do not know; that is known only to the Father, with whom there is no variableness, neither shadow of turning. But whether our days be many or few, we would live to the honor and glory of our Lord and Master Jesus Christ, having no confidence in the flesh. The many varied scenes we have already passed through we know by experience; but what is yet in store for us must be revealed in the future. The apostle Paul said, "The Holy Ghost witnesseth in every city, saying that bonds and afflictions abide me." And if I am what I hope I am, one of the poor and afflicted ones, I shall have tribulation in this world. "Yea, and all that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution. But evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived. But continue thou in the things which thou hast learned and hast been assured of, knowing of whom thou hast learned them." The question is, Of whom have I learned the things I am trusting in? Am I one of the deceived ones, or one that is being led by that blessed Spirit that will guide the saints into all truth? And now, by the help of that Spirit that I hope I have been trusting in for more than thirty years, I will try to tell you in as few words as I can some of my thoughts. I hope I may not be allowed to hurt one of God's little ones, for then had I better have a millstone hung about my neck and be cast into the sea. My mind is led of late to take notice of how many of our aged, tried and able gifts are being called home.

"Asleep in Jesus! blessed sleep!
From which none ever wake to weep."

Among that number is my dear and aged mother, Mrs. Susan A. Biggs, in her eighty-fifth year. I feel that the precious ones of the earth are fast being gathered. They are the salt of the earth. What did the Savior mean when he said, "Nevertheless, when the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?" The apostle writing to the Hebrews said, "See that ye refuse not him that speaketh; for if they escaped not who refused him that spake on earth, much more shall not we escape if we turn away from him that speaketh from heaven: whose voice then shook the earth; but now he hath promised, saying, Yet once more I shake not the earth only, but also heaven." I believe that we are in the falling away time, and the figure is being fulfilled of which Christ spake when he told his disciples to come out of Jerusalem. I believe that antichrist to-day answers to that Jerusalem; and wherever we find antichrist, even in an Old Baptist church or association, we are to withdraw or come away from that for which we have not a "Thus saith the Lord."

I am truly glad to know that our people are getting stirred up concerning the Sabbath question. I feel that the so much talked of and worshiped Sunday Sabbath day is of Rome. I do believe that the Jewish Sabbath is typical of a rest in Jesus; but is that all?

Dear brethren, I do love the dear SIGNS and the doctrine it advocates, especially the doctrine of predestination of all things. I am glad there are still able gifts to continue to proclaim the doctrine of God our Savior in its purity through this God-given, as I believe, SIGNS OF THE TIMES. We have our Father to thank for it all.

With much love to all the household of faith, I am, I hope, your sister in Christ,

S. C. BOYD.

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE.

TO MOST of our readers the above mentioned book is too well known to need any introduction or a description by us. While many of the Bibles have a Concordance appended, they are generally so condensed or bridged as to be of little or no use. Cruden's Complete Concordance, however, enables one to readily turn to any passage of Scripture of which they can call to mind two or three words, and in our opinion is the most complete and convenient as a reference book of any published. In addition, it contains many other aids in studying the Bible, as may be seen by reference to advertisement on last page. Remember, both the books there mentioned are CRUDEN'S COMPLETE.

EXTRAORDINARY OFFER.

WE still continue our offer to send two new subscribers, and credit an old subscriber one year, for three dollars; but we cannot afford to send to one new subscriber, and credit an old subscriber one year, for two dollars. Please do not ask us to do it.

Any one who is already a subscriber is authorized to act as agent for us; and we will send the paper for the first year to any new subscribers they may send us at one dollar each, and they are entitled to retain the other dollar for their commission.

Under no circumstances can new subscribers send to us direct and get the paper for themselves for less than the regular rates.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

DIED—At her home near Mt. Pulaski, Logan Co., Ill., March 21st, 1895, sister Ashurst. Her maiden name was Ewing. She was born Aug. 11th, 1839, in Scott Co., Ky., was married to Lewis E. Ashurst on Sept. 19th, 1856, and moved to Illinois the same year. Three children were born to them, all living. Her husband died in 1863. She was married to J. J. Ashurst in 1864, who survives her. Two children were born of this union; one died in 1876. She was baptized in 1871 by Elder J. H. Myers, and lived a consistent and orderly member of the Lake Fork Church until death. She was taken sick on Dec. 18th, and said from the beginning that she would never get well. She gradually sank, her disease being lung trouble; not properly consumption, but a filling up of the right lung, which baffled the physician's skill, and all the kind care and tender nursing that fondest affection could give.

The writer was sent for, and spoke words of comfort to the sorrowing family and friends from the text, "And as we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly."—1 Cor. xv. 49.

JOHN DOWNEY.

WENONA, Ill.

DIED—At her home in Middleburgh, Schoharie Co., N. Y., March 3d, 1895, sister Juliett Gurnsey, widow of brother John Gurnsey, in her 70th year.

Our dear sister was baptized in the fellowship of the Old School Baptist Church of Schoharie Hill, N. Y., May 28th, 1843, by Elder Hare, in which church she remained until death ended her mortal life; and from a long personal acquaintance with her we can safely say that she walked in a humble manner with God and his people, was a sincere lover of the doctrine of God her Savior, and discarded with holy contempt any and all of the man-made theories and principles as being dishonoring to the character of the God of all grace. She was greatly beloved by all the dear brethren and sisters; and the writer of this can truly say that he feels sensibly that he has lost another good friend. Her health was not good for many years, but she was suddenly called away by heart failure. She leaves one sister, four children, several step-children and the church to mourn their loss.

The writer attended her funeral, and tried to speak of the comforts and glories of the gospel from Philippians ii. 6–11. May grace be ministered to the afflicted, that they may feel that their loss is her gain.

ALSO,

DIED—Feb. 26th, 1895, at his son-in-law's, Mr. John Miller, West Brook, Delaware County, N. Y., our much beloved brother, Jerry Birdsall.

He was afflicted many years with paralysis, which caused him to suffer much, so that he was able to do but little labor; but his faith was ever firm and unshaken in the fact that all things must work together for his good. He was baptized in the fellowship of the church at Otego, by Elder S. H. Durand, about twenty years ago, and by his firmness in faith and doctrine won the full approbation of all. He had a very good gift in exhortation and prayer, and we sadly miss him from our number.

He leaves his aged companion, our dear sister, who is in feeble health, and the church, with eight children, to mourn their loss. His age was seventy-six years. The burial was on March 29th. I being away, a stranger officiated at the funeral. Although we know that our loss is great, we would say, Thy will, O Lord, be done.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SON, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date. This date denotes the time at which your subscription expires; and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE MAMMON OF UNRIGHTEOUSNESS.

(Concluded.)

I WILL now take the order of the reasons I have stated for not regarding material riches as intended by the unrighteous mammon, and show that each of those reasons are in favor of the view that the things of the law are meant.

First. While I can see no reason for calling material wealth the riches of unrighteousness, I can see some suitability of the term to the rules and ceremonies of the law, which are the riches of the legal house. While money, or its equivalent in any other form of wealth, has no intrinsic relation to, or connection with, either righteousness or unrighteousness, all those legal things have. The very existence of everything pertaining to the covenant of works, which we have spoken of as Abraham's legal house, has reference to righteousness. With a view to that all legal ordinances were established. Only in the light of righteousness, and as connected with its manifestation in the world, is any one of them seen as having any existence whatever. In this is their quality which entitles them to be called riches. They are all that the lord of the legal house, the rich man of the parable, possesses. In the possession of them only is he a rich man. But these things are types and patterns and shadows of righteousness, not having any intrinsic righteousness in themselves, but only pointing to it. The true riches of righteousness are seen only in the gospel, and these patterns of gospel things have no value except as patterns and shadows. There is no more true righteousness in them than there is of the virtue of a garment in the pattern of it, or of substance in the shadow of a tree, or of the buildings and people of a city in the guide-board which points the way to it. These legal things cannot, therefore, be called the mammon, or riches, of righteousness; for that term would apply only to gospel things, which are evidently the "true riches" spoken of in the eleventh verse. But they are riches in which there is no righteouness. There is no true righteousness in their works and righteousness cannot come to any one by the employment of them. They are valuable to show the unrighteousness of men. By this measurement it is revealed that all men come short of true righteousness. "By the law is the knowledge of sin." Every ordinance, every ceremony of the law, says to the faith of God's elect, "Righteousness is not here: righteousness is not in these works; righteousness is not in you; but yonder, beyond the sight or knowledge of this world, is true righteousness."

These legal ordinances and works are truly called riches, because they are of infinite value to manifest the unrighteousness of men and of all their works, and to show the only way of righteousness through the works of Jesus Christ. This may be the reason for calling them the riches of unrighteousness.

I do not think the unjust use of these legal ordinances by the Pharisees could present any reason for the application of this term to them. They ascribed to legal works an intrinsic righteousness, and claimed to be righteous themselves because of their attendance upon these forms, and thus wickedly served themselves instead of the Lord in their worship. But this could not affect the character of the forms of service and cause them to be unrighteous. If it is they that are meant by this term, it is because of their character and use as appointed by the Lord, and imposed upon the children of the first covenant. I do not understand it to mean that obedience to that legal service was wrong, or that the ordinances were of a sinful nature. Those who understand worldly wealth to be meant would not give as a reason for its being so called that it is intrinsically evil, and its use necessarily unrighteous or wrong. The term is applied to that which belonged to a system whose use was to discover unrighteousness, condemn it, and point to the true riches. The things spoken of as unrighteous riches are patterns, contrasted with realities, shadows contrasted with substance, forms of service that have no intrinsic merit, but point out the things of real value, and are thus valuable as riches in that legal house, contrasted with the true riches of righteousness which they represent. Without the faith that sees them as types of the perfect works of Christ, these legal works were utterly valueless. Their appointment for that people by the Lord, and that alone, made it the right and duty of that people to do them; and to those who had the gift of faith to see their true meaning, they were truly riches, though consisting of things that were destitute of righteousness in themselves.

I wish again to call especial attention to the truth that all must acknowledge, that the Savior does not imply, cannot imply, by the use of this term, that what he speaks of is an unrighteous thing, in the sense of being evil and wicked, although we have undoubtedly been accustomed to receive the expression, "Mammon of unrighteousness," in that light. It could not be that, for the Savior never did teach his people, either by precept or example, to seek the friendship or favor of a thing that was unrighteous in that sense, but always has commanded such things to be hated, rebuked and avoided by his people.

Second. I have already intimated my understanding of what those who are under that legal covenant are to do in order to make to themselves friends of its ordinances and ceremonies, and all the things pertaining to it, which are its riches. They are to deal justly with them, acknowledging with strict honesty every claim they may show against us. Those to whom the Savior spoke these words were yet under the first covenant, and the distinction between those who have life and those who have not is shown here, as it is everywhere in his teachings. His commandments are all pure (Psalm xix.); and as he gives them unto his people, writing them in their hearts, they cause them to love truth and holiness above all things, and to desire justice to be done, though it condemns them. The honor of God's name is henceforth more to them than any selfish considerations. They may often doubt whether this is so of themselves, seeing so much of the evil and deceit that is in their carnal natures. But it is in the Spirit, and not in the flesh, that these pure and holy desires are; and they only make the impurity and selfishness of the carnal mind appear more abounding and more hateful.

The Lord's people who are quickened are in a sense stewards of what belongs to the law, while they are at the same time its debtors. The dealing with those legal riches between the steward and the debtor goes on within their poor hearts, and the Savior's words, which are spirit and life, cause them to deal with perfect integrity, both in the character of steward and debtor, looking alone to the interest and honor of the Lord of those riches. As stewards they claim the full payment of every debt, and as debtors they frankly and humbly acknowledge the justice of the claim, and submit themselves to the penalty, since they cannot render what is due to the law in any other way. In no other way can the friendship of those things that represent the claims of justice be obtained than by acknowledging every jot and tittle of the claim, and submitting to it. There can be no true comfort for an honest soul in any proposed settlement that would disregard any part of a just debt.

That is a dark night in the poor debtor's soul when the judgment is rendered against him, and is seen by him to be just; for he sees only the darkness and terror of an endless imprisonment before him. But it is that night of sorrow which will surely be followed by the morning in which everlasting joy cometh. The poor debtor had no thought that he was doing what would turn to his favor when he felt compelled to acknowledge his just condemnation, yet he thus made to himself friends of all those riches of the worldly tabernacle; and their friendship will appear for his salvation in the time of his greatest extremity, filling his soul with wonder, joy and love. It is in this way that the Lord's people are brought by the reigning power of grace, through righteousness, unto eternal life by Jesus Christ our Lord.

Third. The three verses following the text show comparisons and contrasts that do not appear to have any application if money constitutes the riches referred to, but which do apply to the view I have suggested. "He that is faithful in that which is least, is faithful also in much; and he that is unjust in the least, is unjust also in much." The types and patterns are least, and that which they represent is much; and the one has reference to the other, and always leads to it, which is not true of money and righteousness.

"If therefore ye have not been faithful in the unrighteous mammon, who will commit to your trust the true riches?" Here the unrighteous mammon is shown as necessarily and invariably preceding, and preparing for, the true riches. This certainly is in no sense true of material wealth, for very few of the Lord's people have more than is needed for their absolute wants from day to day; and many of the saints have to receive even that supply as a gift. But the work under the law always precedes the experience of gospel blessings, whether in Jew or Gentile, and it is while still under the condemnation of the law that true faithfulness, the work of God's Spirit, is manifested, which leads one into the riches of gospel gifts and blessings.

"And if ye have not been faithful in that which is another man's, who shall give you that which is your own?" This can only be true of legal and of gospel things. Under the law one works always as a steward or a servant, working by the will of another, and strictly by his directions. He is an agent, bound by the commands of the one for whom he acts. But when gospel blessings are given we receive them as our own through Christ, and are made to know that they were our own before we received them, even before the world began. And the will by which we work is our own will, which God wrought in us of his good pleasure.

Fourth. There comes a time of certain and absolute failure in the stewardship of every quickened sinner under the requirements of the law. He cannot obtain as a steward, because he cannot give as a debtor that perfect obedience which is required. "Be ye perfect," the Lord says, "even as I am perfect." When he realizes that he has failed, then instead of witnessing against him, as he thinks must be the case, and sending him to the punishment he deserves and expects, these same riches to which he is a confessed debtor to an infinite extent, these same ordinances of the law which have witnessed to his continual failure to answer their just demands, now open to his astonished soul the doors of mercy and grace, and receive him into the everlasting habitations of the gospel.

Fifth. I know of nothing else that is spoken of as everlasting habitations in the Scriptures, or that would answer to that description, but Jerusalem, the gospel church. The tabernacle, the temple, and all the forms of worship under the law, were to be removed; but Jerusalem is "a quiet habitation, a tabernacle that shall not be taken down." The offerings of the law were only for the sins that were past, remitting the punishment, and had to be repeated continually. They were thus only a limited shelter from fleshly punishment, and presented no habitation as a shelter from sin. But the gospel presents salvation from sin and its consequences forever in Jesus, who is the eternal dwelling-place and refuge of his people.

And how can the ordinances and ceremonies of the law be said to receive the Lord's people into the blessings of the gospel? By our faithfully dealing with them as patterns and shadows; not using them as having righteousness in themselves, nor claiming merit on account of observing them, but looking upon them in their true character as types, and regarding through them the righteousness they set forth. Then, to the faith that can see their true import thus, does the glorious reality appear.

Follow the shadow faithfully and it will lead you to the substance. Follow the pattern faithfully, deal honestly with it, let no change be made, no part of the form be turned out of sight or disregarded, and when its purpose and use is accomplished you will have the substance. The pattern is inseparably associated with the reality, though not at all partaking of its nature, but itself of worthless and vile material. By the pattern the measurements are made, the accounts are kept, the reality is discovered. The pattern is of things that are seen, receiving us by faith into things that are not seen. Only by faith can the likeness of gospel things be seen in legal forms of service. Only by faith can those ordinances of the law, so valuable in their character as types, but worthless in themselves as the worthless material of a pattern, be estimated truly, not as able to make one righteous by observing them, but as leading to, and receiving into, the righteousness of Jesus Christ; therefore entitled to be called riches; but unrighteous in themselves, therefore unrighteous riches; belonging to a dispensation which was a ministration of condemnation and death, but pointing, and leading to, a dispensation which is a ministration of life and righteousness.

In every ordinance of the law the need of the sinner, and the way of righteousness for him, are seen. In a faithful regard for them the quickened soul shows his sense of the justice of his condemnation, and his sole reliance upon the atoning sacrifice of Christ, which was a mystery, hid from the ages and generations of the legal dispensation under those forms of service, as wheat while growing is hidden under the chaff, but which is made manifest to the saints in the gospel; the riches of the glory of which mystery is, "Christ in you the hope of glory."

The Pharisee, relying upon his observances of legal forms, proudly recounting them before God, and esteeming himself righteous because of them, is held to a strict accountability, and is condemned; while the publican, acknowledging his just condemnation by the law, and crying only for mercy, is justified. What a mystery is here; what an apparent contradiction. But the publican has honored the law, with all its exacting forms by acknowledging his just indebtedness to it. And it is just at this time of his failure that the riches of the law, to which he is so great a debtor, appear as his friends. Search their records now for authority to send the poor sinner away, and, behold, no charge can be found against him, nor will one ever be found again. It is just then that the blessed name of Jesus appears as having cancelled the debt, and blotted out his sins forever. The righteousness of the law (that which the law requires, as shown by all its forms of service) is now shown to be fulfilled in him, although it was never wrought by him.

These legal riches, their accounts, the ordinances of the law, alone had any charge against him. By them only was the knowledge of his sins. So they that condemned him are now the very ones to declare his deliverance. The riches of that law in which was no righteousness, but only a constant demand for righteousness, are now all his own, all held in his favor. The mammon or riches of unrighteousness show all righteousness fulfilled for him, and receive him into the holiness of the gospel. The judgments that stood against him now as firmly stand for him, as the waters of the Red Sea, which opposed the flight of the Israelites, now stand like walls of brass on either hand in their defense.

The law is our shoolmaster unto Christ. When the poor sinner has been thoroughly taught his inability to pay the debt he owes, and has utterly failed, then this schoolmaster's work is done, and the glorious mystery of the gospel is unfolded to our astonished and enraptured view. The ordinances of the law, the riches of that legal house, which held so heavy an account against us, now declare themselves paid and satisfied by our glorious Surety, and they themselves open the door from a debtor's gloomy prison into the everlasting habitations of the gospel. Then their work is done, and they exist no longer. As they receive us into these blessed good things of the gospel heavens, for which work they were made, the types and shadows fade away. They have all "perished with the using."

Sixth. The Savior's declarations following the text, and in immediate connection with it, confirm the view I have suggested. "No man can serve two masters." "Ye cannot serve God and mammon." This is not true concerning labor in earning material wealth. A man may work diligently and steadily to gain a support for himself and family, and that he "may have to give to them that are needy," and still serve God as a faithful christian. He is not serving money. A christian may, through covetousness, work so that he will become choked with the cares and riches of this world, and lose the enjoyment of spiritual things, and even to the extent of selling his birthright. Yet it cannot be said of him that he hates God. There are such gradations in this wandering of a child of God from the right way through covetous desires, that we can lay down no rule as to how much time, and care, and work, may rightly be given to the acquirement of worldly gain. The Spirit must direct each one as to his worldly work according to his needs and circumstances. But in that which the Savior here presents there in an absolute prohibition of that service of mammon; there is no allowance, no gradition, but a rigid line that cannot be crossed. Those who serve the mammon or riches referred to here, are haters of God. The next verse explains the mystery.

"And the Pharisees, who were covetous, heard all these things, and they derided him. And he said unto them, Ye are they which justify yourselves before men; but God knoweth your hearts; for that which is highly esteemed among men is abomination in the sight of God." The Pharisees regarded their own works in obeying the carnal ordinances of the law as their righteousness, not seeing Christ as the one of whom Moses spake through all these ordinances, and to whom they pointed. They worked to be seen of men, whose esteem they sought, and whose praise satisfied their carnal desires. It is the same to-day. Those of the same class will deride one who declares, as Jesus did, that there is no merit in the works of men, except as they are caused by the power of God's love and grace in the heart; that there is no righteousness in the acts themselves, even of true obedience; but they manifest that the righteousness which is of God by faith is in the hearts of those who do them. All that formal service, then and now, is serving the carnal riches, serving in the sight of men, and is abomination in the sight of God, except as inspired by that faith which sees Christ in and through all the legal forms, and without which, therefore, "it is impossible to please God."

"The law and the prophets were until John; since that time the kingdom of God is preached, and every man [of God] presseth into it." Thus the same subject is continued, and the end of that ministration of the mammon of unrighteousness is shown to have come with the coming of the kingdom of God, wherein dwell the true riches of righteousness. The law and the prophets had steadily enjoined a faithful continance in the observance of carnal ordinances, although they were in themselves so absolutely destitute of true righteousness that without the express command of God the mere offering of a sacrifice was a crime.—Isa. lxvi. 3. But John, the last and greatest of the prophets, began openly to proclaim the coming of him to whom all those legal things pointed, and the power and coming of that kingdom is felt in the hearts of living souls.

"But it is easier for heaven and earth to pass, than that one tittle of the law should fail." Jesus fulfilled all that the law required of all his people; and the sweet and glorious and loving figure of the marriage relation, with its legal bindings and requirements, closes this peculiar cluster of illustrations, which show the absolute and perfect deliverance of all his dear children from every obligation of the law by his own perfect work.

Seventh. If one has ever experienced rest from the works of the law, it is an evidence that every tittle of the law has been fulfilled in his behalf. A just God would not give that rest while one stroke of labor, that was necessary "to fulfill all righteousness" for him, remained undone. If one has ever once experienced in his soul an entrance into the gospel habitations, he may rest assured that he will never be called upon to render any further account of his stewardship under the law; for he never could have entered these habitations while there remained even an appearance of dissatisfaction with him in that legal house; no, not until every jot and tittle of those legal riches, so exacting and unmerciful in their accounts, had become absolutely and eternally his friends.

If one has ever felt a touch of the love of God in his soul, drawing him with an irresistable desire into his sweet service, he may be assured that he can never wholly lose it as the constraining motive in his life; that he can never again be contentedly engaged in the service of legal ordinances, however much he may at times fear that only fleshly motives are moving him; for he cannot serve God and mammon. The two kinds of service are under two different dispensations, which cannot exist together, for they are contrary the one to the other. The one must end as the other begins; and when the yoke that binds one in the legal service is broken, it is broken forever. One who has been called into the spiritual service of the gospel dispensation can never again enter that of the law, even though he is left to walk after the flesh, and to have a carnal desire to serve the beggarly elements of the world. He may seem to lose all appearance of life, and may become dead to spiritual obligations and privileges, and to the fellowship of the church, for a time; but he can never become alive to the law again. He can never again render service there, for he has become dead to that law and its service by the body of Christ, and thanks be unto the blessed name of the Lord, he can never be alive to it, or in it, again.

If one has ever felt the tokens of heavenly favor, the whisperings of Jesus' love in his soul, there will never be any further claim from the former husband, the law, whose relationship to the church as her husband was ever the cause of fear and trouble to her, with never a token of favor, or a moment of peace. But now all those obligations have been legally removed by the death of that husband. How do we know that he is dead, and that his stringent and unloving requirements will never again be upon us? We know it because Jesus, the Lord of life and glory, has said unto our souls, "I am thy husband. I have betrothed thee unto myself." He who is the God of the whole earth, whose name is holy, has whispered the precious secret of his love in our souls, and has made us feel its truth and power, by drawings that we could not resist. Now he declares that it is unlawful to marry a woman who has been put away. This is to teach us for our comfort that if we had not been honorably delivered from the law of our first husband the dear Savior would not have raised up in our hearts a hope of a betrothal unto himself, nor would we have been made even to desire it; if we had still owed a wife's devotion to another, we would not have felt one whisper of love from him who is pure and holy, and all of whose "works are honorable and glorious." We are assured, therefore, by his having told us of his everlasting love for us, by his having made us feel it, that he who knoweth all things knew that there exists no legal hindrance to the full and free enjoyment of that love by us. We are thus assured that we do not stand in God's sight as a wife who has been put away in shame and dishonor, but as one whose obligations to her husband have all been righteously fulfilled. It is this heavenly Lover himself who brought about our honorable discharge from the law of that husband, so that being dead to the law by the body of Christ we could "be married to another, even to him who is risen from the dead, that we should bring forth fruit unto God."—Rom. vii. 1–4.

Thus this last of these wonderful illustrations by which the dear Savior has shown the necessity of an honorable discharge from every claim of the law before one gospel blessing can ever be desired, much less received and enjoyed, it is very encouraging and comforting to the poor sinner who has had a trembling hope that Jesus has been manifest to him as the lover of his soul, and yet who often fears that he has no right to that sweet and holy love; fears that the law has put him away in dishonor, with unsatisfied claims upon him, and that he may yet be called to a terrible account for his unfaithful stewardship. This glorious truth concerning the binding nature of the marriage relation, coming just at this time from the dear Savior's own blessed lips, sets him at rest from these harrassing fears; and with a new sense of joy and praise unto God, and with an overwhelming glow of love in his soul, he hears this blessed declaration from the Lord, "And I will betroth thee unto me forever; yea, I will betroth thee unto me in righteousness, and in judgment, and in loving-kindness, and in mercies. I will even betroth thee unto me in faithfulness; and thou shalt know the Lord."

"And I gave her space to repent of her fornication; and she repented not."—Rev. ii. 21.

G. BEEBE'S SON—MUCH BELOVED FOR THE TRUTH'S SAKE:—Elder W. S. Weddington, of White Post, Ky., some two or three years ago requested me to write through the SIGNS OF THE TIMES on the above text, but I have deferred it until now. I had fears then, and do now, that I cannot write anything in regard to this text that would be to the glory of God and to the comfort of his people; but I have concluded to sit down this afternoon and suggest some thoughts that have occurred to my mind in regard to this text, and some connecting and corresponding Scriptures, and send them to you to dispose of as you may deem best. I am well aware of the fact that Arminians often resort to this to strengthen or confirm the flimsy idea that everybody has a chance to be saved, and that God proposes to save everybody on condition of their repenting; that he makes such propositions as this to everybody, and gives them space to repent and time to comply with the overtures of mercy; during which time and space the Lord is wooing and beseeching them to exercise faith, and come to him, and comply with these extended and continual proposals of life and salvation; that after all this is done and said, if they will be obstinate and rebellious, the Holy Spirit becomes insulted, and turns away from them, and lets them plow the fiery mains of eternal woe and misery. Now, this idea of this text is extant among a great many strict professors of religion, and some of the Lord's little ones are oftentimes inclined to accept this exposition of this text and similar ones; therefore the minds of a great many of them are often perplexed.

This address was to the angel (pastor) of the church in Thyatira, who seems to have been very faithful in the most of things that were enjoined on him as a pastor or Moderator of the church; but he had failed in some things, and especially in this one particular, as is asserted in the following language, "Notwithstanding I have a few things against thee [the pastor], because thou sufferest that woman Jezebel, which calleth herself a prophetess, to teach and to seduce my servants to commit fornication, and to eat things sacrificed unto idols. And I gave her space to repent of her fornication, and she repented not." That is, she repented not of her fornication. This is what space was given her for; it was to turn away from this act of fornication, and seduction of the Lord's servants. Nothing else whatever is either expressed or understood.

This pastor of the church at Thyatira had suffered this woman Jezebel to teach and seduce some of the servants of God to commit fornication, and to eat things sacrificed unto idols; and she was given space (room) to repent, turn away, or cease from this abominable act of fornication and seduction; and she repented not thereof. "Behold, I will cast her into a bed, and them [the Lord's servants] that commit adultery with her [Jezebel] into great tribulation, except they repent of their deeds;" that is, of their deeds of fornication and seduction with or by Jezebel.

Now, there is a point here I will call special attention to, and that is, that the Lord does not cast his transgressing servants into the bed with Jezebel, but he casts her into a bed, and his transgressing servants into great tribulation, except they repent of their deeds. There are conditions on the part of his servants who had been seduced by Jezebel, but none on her part whatever; but the language is, "Behold, I will cast her into a bed;" and also, "I will kill her children with death."

As to the nature of this fornication to which some of the Lord's servants had been seduced I shall not untertake to describe, but will quote one passage of Scripture as a proof that the Lord's servants are led sometimes to commit fornication or adultery in divers ways. "Ye adulterers and adulteresses, know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity with God? Whosoever therefore will be a friend of the world is the enemy of God."—James iv. 4. This text has in it the idea clearly that some of the Lord's people commit adultery by marrying the friendship of the world; and in all probability this might have been the prime cause of this pastor of Thyatira suffering this woman Jezebel to teach in the church. It might have been, I say, to incur the friendship of the world in some way and for some cause. I have known some instances among us where the pastor of churches has suffered, and even invited, ministers of other denominations to preach to their churches; and it has always seemed to me that it was to gain the friendship of the world in some way. When the Lord came to reckon with the pastor of the church at Ephesus, after reminding him of the things in which he had been so faithful, says, "Nevertheless I have somewhat against thee, because thou hast left thy first love. Remember therefore from whence thou art fallen, and repent, and do the first works; or else I will come unto thee quickly, and will remove thy candlestick out of his place, except thou repent." The clause, "Thy candlestick," denotes possession or ownership; which, with other corresponding Scriptures, causes me to believe that there is a sense in which a church as an organized local body belongs to the pastor thereof; that is, he has the oversight and care of it, and the safety, welfare and soundness, both in a doctrinal and disciplinary sense, depend greatly upon the soundness and faithfulness of their pastor, and in this sense the church at Ephesus was spoken of as belonging to and in possession of the pastor. "Thy candlestick," or organized church at Ephesus, of which you have the oversight and care, and are responsible therefore, and which I will remove from under your pastoral care unless you repent of your departure from your first love and faithfulness. I will now refer to one or two texts that seem to me to convey the idea that I have suggested in the above.

SIX QUESTIONS ANSWERED.

A DEAR brother in the ministry, who does not wish his name to be used, has written us a private letter with reference to our editorial in the SIGNS, No. 14, present volume, entitled "An Appeal," making some statements, and proposing some questions which he desires to see answered through the SIGNS. It may be remembered that the editorial referred to was an appeal to brethren to pause and consider some things which we referred to before withdrawing fellowship from us who believe the doctrine of the predestination of all things whatsoever come to pass; and the letter which we have received relates to this matter. We desire to reply as clearly and concisely as possible to the questions presented by our brother.

Question 1. "Is our time salvation, that is, our present comfort and joy and prosperity, conditional upon our obedience?"

Answer. We think that it is as true to-day as when Paul wrote it, that if we sow to the flesh we shall of the flesh reap corruption, and if we through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body we shall live. It is true still that if we live after the flesh we shall die. The commandment never has been changed which declares that the willing and obedient eat the good of the land, while the disobedient are beaten with many stripes; and the word of God still abides which declares that if the children of God forsake his law he will visit their transgressions with the rod, and their iniquities with stripes. We believe all this with all our heart. We suppose that this is what our brother means by the question, "Is our time salvation conditional?" Manifold blessings always result from obedience to the commandments of God, and, on the other hand, sorrow and trouble of soul abide with those who are disobedient. This is not only a matter of Bible testimony; it is also a matter of everyday christian experience. But if we ask whence arises the obedience with which such blessedness is connected, in response every child of God will through the Spirit say, "Thou hast wrought all our works in us." "It is God that worketh in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure." If left to himself he disobeys. His obedience is of God. His disobedience is out of his own evil heart. The wages of sin is death (we earn or deserve it), but the gift of God is eternal life (we do not earn or deserve it). We would not like to use the word "conditional," as our brother does, but do not doubt that the above is what he means by it. All the conditions necessary to our salvation from sin and death were met and fulfilled in our Lord Jesus Christ. Jesus once completed the atonement for us. Jesus now completes an experimental work within us. Grace crowns all the work. If we do not sin in word or deed, we have to bless the God of all grace for it. Let us live out the life of Christ which is within us. We have ever felt no hesitancy in using exhortation, warning or reproof, nor in pointing out to the brethren the evil results of transgression, and the blessed results of obedience.

Question 2. "If a man steals, &c., has he a right to say that God made him do it?"

We have no hesitancy in answering, No. The inspired James settles this matter once for all. He says, "Let no man say when he is tempted, I am tempted of God: for God cannot be tempted with evil, neither tempteth he any man: but every man is tempted when he is drawn away of his own lust, and enticed." Surely this question needs no further answer. The man who would, when charged with theft or any other sin, turn and say, "God made me do it," would prove himself a total stranger to the holiness of God. The man who once has a revelation of God, henceforth abhors himself and loves holiness.

Question 3. "Did God create sin and put it into Adam?"

Answer. Sin is declared in the Scriptures to be transgression, and is nowhere said to be a creation. Sin is the transgression of the law. Where is there any one who would make such an absurd statement as is implied in the above question? It is the express scriptural testimony that "God hath made man upright; but they have sought out many inventions." It is the truth to say that all the inventions of men have been evil. Such an assertion as the above question implies is sustained in no part of the Scriptures.

Question 4. "Is preaching practical godliness Arminianism?"

We answer unhesitatingly, No. If so, we have been guilty of preaching Arminianism ever since we have been in the ministry. If so, then Paul and all the apostles, and the Master himself, and John the Baptist, and all the holy prophets, were Arminians. Arminianism consists in exhorting the dead to live, and in telling men that they can be saved by their own choice or their own works. It is not Arminianism to exhort the living to walk and act as becomes living men.

Question 5. "Will any man, when led by the Spirit of Christ, if he has done wrong, say, 'I have done the best I could?'"

We are compelled out of our own experience to answer, No. We have never been able, in looking back over one day of our life, to say that we had that day done the best we could. If a brother who had been rebuked for idle speech or a light manner, or any other thing unbecoming the gospel of Christ, should reply, "I could do no better," and so seek to shield himself from censure, we should feel that he was lacking in humility, and in the fear of the Lord. We have felt abased too often and too much at the thought of our own vileness of life and nature, to undertake to shield ourselves in any such way. All we can do is to bow our heads, and confess that we have sinned.

Question 6. "If a man sins in any way, by lying, stealing, drunkenness, can he shield himself on the ground that God had predestinated his wicked actions, and therefore he had to do them?"

Answer. The doctrine of the predestination of all things that come to pass is most blessedly true. Nothing is or can be left to chance in all the universe of God; but this doctrine furnishes no cloak for sin in any man. We understand our brother, in all these former questions, to have been leading up to this. We have heard all our lives Arminians, believers in a chance world and a chance salvation, urge against the doctrine of predestination the assertion, "Then men are not accountable for their sins, men cannot help sinning, and therefore are not to be blamed," &c. But we have never in all our life met any one who believed and loved this doctrine who ever said, upon this ground, "I am not blameworthy for my sins." We will still further say, if in any church with which we are connected a brother had sinned in any way, and when arraigned before his brethren he should deny their right to censure him, upon the ground that his act was predestinated, and therefore he could not help it, we should consider that he had turned the grace of God into lasciviousness; and if before we would have voted to bear with him, we would vote that way no longer. His first wrong act might have been merely a faltering and stumbling, for which we should pity more than we should blame him; but the fact that he could plead such an excuse as this would prove an entire lack of humility in him, and would show that he had no proper appreciation of what sin is. It would argue a proud and stubborn heart, rather than a humble, penitent one.

It is utterly in vain to charge such consequences as the above upon the doctrine of the predestination of all things. Carnal minds will draw evil conclusions out of any principle of the doctrine of God our Savior. To carnal minds the doctrine of election is as horrible, and fraught with fully as terrible consequences, as is the doctrine of predestination. The same is true also of the doctrine of foreknowledge, of God's omnipresence, omniscience and omnipotence, and also of his universal sovereignty and unchangeability. If we let the terrible results which Arminians have in all ages pictured out drive us out of our belief in God's predestination, straightway the very same difficulties confront us, if we take refuge in the citadel of any other one of these attributes of Deity. If we give up predestination, we shall be forced directly out of all these other principles of truth. They stand or fall together; and it is a fact that where men become afraid of predestination, almost immediately we find them saying less and less about election, foreknowledge of God, his immutability, sovereignty, omnipotence, omnipresence and omniscience. One reason why we have always felt to cling to the doctrine of the predestination of all things so firmly has been that it has seemed to us that if we gave it up we should have to give up also our belief in election, foreknowledge, divine sovereignty, and all the other attributes of Deity. Can any one blame us for clinging to this doctrine, since if we gave it up we have always felt that we could find no standing room this side of a universe of chance, uncontrolled and uncontrollable by any power within or above it?

But while this has been our faith, we have ever held in the utmost abhorrence the consequences which men have tried to fasten upon it. We may not be able to show the harmony, nay, more, the absolute unity or oneness, between the predestination of God and the accountability of man; and it is not needful that we should. The only proper question is this, Are both true? If any man who calls himself a brother is to-day striving to shield himself from censure behind predestination, we have some Scriptures to present for his consideration.

Because Joseph's brethren did what God had predestinated when they sold him a slave into Egypt, did therefore Joseph blame them any the less, or did they themselves plead this fact in extenuation of their fault? While God meant it for good, they meant it for evil. God's predestination did not make them any less blameworthy. They did not say, "We could not help it, and we should not be censured." It is a wonderful mystery, yet they were guilty.

Did Jehovah censure Pharaoh any the less because he did the very thing for which God had raised him up? Pharaoh did what God had purposed, and yet he sinned. See, right here, Romans ix.

Could those who crucified the Lord of life and glory take shelter behind the fact that it must be so, because God had predestinated it? We need not here quote the language in Acts ii. 23, nor in Acts iii. 18, nor in Acts iv. 27, 28. The language of these Scriptures is plain and clear. If any language can say anything definitely, these Scriptures say that God had from all eternity predestinated the very things which they had done; and yet they did it with wicked hands, and against the Lord. Let no wrong-doer to-day think that he can do what those who crucified Jesus could not do, viz., plead that they are not blameworthy for doing that which is evil, though it be what God hath before determined to be done.

Could Judas plead exemption from blame because the Lord had said, "The Son of man goeth as it is written of him: but woe unto that man by whom the Son of man is betrayed?" Luke says, "The Son of man goeth, as it was determined," &c. If it be asked how we can reconcile these two things, we very frankly answer that we can no more do so than did Paul in the ninth chapter of Romans. No stronger objection has ever been urged against the doctrine of the predestination of all things than Paul had to face there. How familiar it sounds, "Thou wilt say then, Why doth he yet find fault? For who hath resisted his will?" It seems as though many to-day have been learning lessons from opposers of the doctrine in Paul's day. But notice, Paul does not at all undertake to meet and solve this objection, and still less does he allow it to drive him into any modification of his doctrine. But he says that those who could say such things were replying against God; and by the very strongest form of asseveration he asserts that God has power (right) to do as he pleases with all men, and none have any right to even question or find fault with his ways. We would say, then, let any or all who would say, when they have done wrong, "It was predestinated; I could not help it; I am not to blame," settle the matter with Paul, or with the Holy Ghost, who spoke through Paul. Again we say that we could not fellowship the man who excuses his wrong in any such way; but true believers in predestination do not say such things.

Still farther, if any brethren, because of the disgust which they feel when those who commit sin seek to shelter themselves under predestination, are inclined to give up the doctrine which they have loved, and which has been their comfort and joy, let them pause and ask themselves the question, Has my own belief in predestination ever become an excuse or cloak for my own sin? Has it had a tendency to make me careless in my conduct? On the contrary, the strongest believers in this doctrine have also been in all ages the sternest opponents of sin in every form, and the firmest advocates of practical godliness. Countries or neighborhoods where the prevailing faith is what is commonly known as Calvinistic are to-day more strict and stern in their morality than are countries where Arminianism is the prevailing sentiment. The man who really loves predestination also loves the God of predestination; and he who loves God must hate his sins, and abhor himself because of his sins, and will never excuse his sins by his belief in predestination.

Again, let such brethren pause and consider another thing. If these evil uses of predestination by ungodly men ought to make them disbelieve and oppose the doctrine, why should they not in turn give up their faith in the foreknowledge, sovereignty and unchangeability of God, since evil men also draw equally terrible conclusions from these principles of truth?

Predestination does not imply that God makes men sin. God did not make Joseph's brethren sell him. God did not make Pharaoh oppress and deceive Israel. God did not make Judas betray his Lord. God did not make the rulers and the people crucify Jesus. It is blasphemy to say so. Yet nothing is more sure than that God did before determine that all these wicked acts should be done; but while God predestinated these things, men did them wickedly, with wicked intent, meaning not to carry out God's will, but their own evil passions. In all this the predestination of God is exalted, while man is condemned in his wickedness.

As in the Scriptures God commends men for doing the good which he has predestinated (and all believe, we suppose, that all our obedience is predestinated), so he condemns men for doing the evil, though what they have done is but fulfilling his own decree; and as exhortation and prayer are not inconsistent with the fact that all that is good has been foreordained of God, so they are not inconsistent with the predestination of all things that come to pass.

We have tried to state as strongly as we could our abhorrence of that spirit which would make predestination a cloak for their sin. We cannot express ourselves too strongly upon this theme. We are glad to say that while Old School Baptists with whom we have been associated all our lives have with two or three exceptions held firmly to this doctrine, yet we have never known of one who sought to excuse his sins by it. If any in the section from which our brother wrote do make this use of it we are sorry indeed. The churches cannot tolerate a spirit of that sort.

We have not desired to discuss the doctrine of predestination in the SIGNS, but our brother's letter seemed to call for a reply. We hope that what is here written may do good, and not harm. We have not written for controversy, if we can judge our own motive.

C.

ROMANS V. 13, 14.

"FOR until the law sin was in the world: but sin is not imputed when there is no law. Nevertheless death reigned from Adam to Moses, even over them that had not sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression, who is the figure of him that was to come.

Although we have on a former occasion, if we mistake not, expressed our views on the text proposed for consideration, we feel disposed to gratify our brother Buck, with whom we sincerely sympathize in consideration of his privations and loneliness. The existence of sin in the world, and death reigning by sin from Adam to Moses, or until the giving of the law in its preceptive form by Moses to the children of Israel, proves that the human family were created in Adam, under law to God; for if there had been no law, sin could not have been imputed. Sin is the transgression of law; and death is the consequence and penalty of sin, or of transgression of the law of God; therefore both sin and death bore incontestable evidence that during the 2,300 years intervening between the creation of the human family in Adam, and the dispensation of the law in form to Israel by Moses, mankind were as absolutely under law to God as subsequently to that dispensation. For until or prior to the giving of the law by Moses, sin was in the world; but sin, which is the transgression of law, is not imputed in the absence of law. Nevertheless, death reigned before the time of Moses, and from Adam to Moses, even over them that had not sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression. A similitude is a likeness; and Adam's transgression is a similitude, in two respects, as expressed and implied in our text. Paul says that Adam was a figure, similitude or likeness of him that was to come; and in this connection with the subject of his transgression, he calls him a figure, &c. He also has elsewhere greatly enlarged on this figure or similitude. Adam was not deceived; neither was Christ. The woman, being deceived, was in the transgression; so it was also with the church. When Eve had transgressed, the sentence of her God would separate her from Adam's society forever, if he had not followed her into the transgression; for she could not regain her original innocence; therefore it was that the woman which God gave to Adam to be with him, she gave him, and he did eat. It is not difficult to trace through all this the similitude of Adam's transgression, as the figure of him that was to come. But, as we intimated, there is another sense in which we are to consider the similitude of Adam's transgression. The declaration that death reigned over them that had not sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression, fully implied that some have sinned after that similitude. Adam sinned as an intelligent being, against the expressed authority of his Maker; but from Adam to Moses, as the law in its precepts had not been given to the sons of men, they had not after that manner, likeness or similitude sinned. Yet death reigned over all, without discrimination. Those who sin without law do not, as we understand, sin after the similitude of Adam's transgression; yet by union and relationship to Adam, death maintains its dominion over them; and this was the case from Adam to Moses.

Brother Buck will observe that the theme of the apostle is the two distinct headships; Adam the head of all the human family, and figure of him that was to come, namely, of Christ, who is the Head of the church or spiritual family. By the transgression of the one, all the human family are made sinners; even so, by the righteousness of the other, all the spiritual race or family are made righteous. It did not require a development of the depravity of the human heart, by actual transgression of the law of God, to constitute the sons of Adam sinners. Neither is the law of God the cause of our depravity. When lust is conceived, it bringeth forth sin; and sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death. The law was not made for a righteous man. But by the law is the knowledge of sin; and the law entered, that the offense might abound, or, in other words, that sin might appear, as it really is, exceedingly sinful; that every mouth might be stopped, and the whole world appear guilty before God. "I had not known lust," says Paul, "except the law had said, Thou shalt not covet." The law did not make Paul covet; but it detected his covetousness, and exposed him as a sinner. So that, when the commandment came, sin revived, and he died.

VALID BAPTISM.

BROTHER BEEBE:—I wish you, or some of your correspondents, would answer through the SIGNS the following question:

Is it right for the church of Jesus Christ to receive into their fellowship, as a visible member, a man without baptizing him, of whom they have sufficient evidence to satisfy them that he is a regenerate person, but who has been baptized (and is satisfied with his baptism) by a person who was not a visible member of the church of Christ?

S. WILLIAMS.

LEBANON, Ohio, Sept. 19, 1848.

REPLY.

It is not our wish nor desire to anticipate any reply which our correspondents feel inclined to make to the above query; but as we have on former occasions given our views on the subject, and finding no good reason for changing our opinions, we now, as formerly, record our opinion in the negative. If we could believe, as some have asserted, that baptism was only instituted to answer the mind and feelings of the candidates, we would feel bound to admit the validity of anything for baptism that would satisfy them. But while we regard christian baptism as a command of Jesus Christ, enjoined on all heaven-born souls, as a test of their loyalty to him, we can conceive of no circumstance or contingency under which the church has a right to modify that command, or to recognize as obedience to it any partial compliance with the injunction. If our Lord, in commanding his followers to be baptised, had left them in the dark as to the meaning of the word baptize, the subjects or the authorized administrators of the ordinance, we might with some plausability conclude that the mode, subjects or administrators were not essential to the due observance of the rite. But so far from leaving the subject mystified in perplexing obscurity, he has, by his own personal example, not at, but in the River Jordan, exemplified what the ordinance is, how, and by whom, and unto whom, it is to be administered.

By his example we see that baptism is immersion in water, a going down into the water, and there being buried in baptism, planted in the likeness of his death, and raised up out of the water in emblematic conformity to his resurrection. "Thus," said Jesus, "it becometh us." No other way, we infer, is becoming the saints. The plural pronoun us, together with his command given to the apostles to baptize believers, and the practice of the apostles in the primitive church, in obedience to this command, shows with sufficient clearness that believers exclusively are gospel subjects of baptism, and that to the exclusion of all others. The administrators competent to perform this sacred rite must be such as are duly authorized, as was John, who came from God, with the highest possible authority to administer; for he was sent to preach and to baptize in the name of Jesus. Throughout the New Testament we can find no authority given to any to administer baptism, but to those who were also authorized to preach the gospel. Preaching the gospel and baptizing believers are invariably connected as the work of the gospel ministry under the reign of Jesus Christ, the King of saints. By what authority any church of Christ can receive as administrators of the ordinance of baptism, or of the Lord's supper, such as they cannot consistently regard and fellowship as ministers of the gospel, we cannot conceive. If the church claims to have the right to abridge any part of the law of Christ, on this or on any other subject, what more has the church of Rome ever claimed? Has an Old School Baptist church any better right to change the administrator of the ordinance than the Old Mother of Harlots or any of her daughters have to change the mode or the subjects of it? If she has, where is that authority to be found, and from whence derived? These are hard questions, but they must be met. To call ourselves Old School Baptists, and to claim the New Testament for our rule, will avail us nothing if we walk not according to that rule. A departure from truth in theory or in practice is no less offensive, but rather aggravated, when committed by those who profess extraordinary conformity to the divine rule.

From what we have written above, it will, we trust, be understood that as an Old School Baptist we cannot consent to receive to membership in the church of God, nor to the communion of the church, which is the same thing substantially, any person, under any circumstance, who has not on profession of faith in our Lord Jesus Christ been duly baptized by a minister of the gospel standing, at the time of administering the ordinance, in full communion with the church, and acting in her fellowship as the servant of the church. If any of our brethren can find divine authority for differing with us in this matter, they are called on to produce it.

According to this position we say to all men that we regard it as disorderly, and a departure from gospel rule, for any gospel church to receive to her communion those who have been immersed by Mormon, Campbellite, Methodist, Free Will, Seventh Day, or New School Baptist administrators. We have no more authority for dispensing with a gospel administrator, than we have for dispensing with the mode, the element into which they are to be buried, or a proper subject.

We regret to learn that some who claim to be Old School Baptists have in this matter departed from the faith and order of the New Testament, and have thus, as we conceive, defiled the temple of the Lord. We submit the above reply to our beloved brother Williams, and to all our brethren in the faith; and we affectionately entreat our churches and ministers, and all heaven-born souls who wish to obey Jesus, and to honor him, to consider what we have written on the subject, and try it by the infallible rule, the New Testament.

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE.

TO MOST of our readers the above mentioned book is too well known to need any introduction or a description by us. While many of the Bibles have a Concordance appended, they are generally so condensed or abridged as to be of little or no use. Cruden's Complete Concordance, however, enables one to readily turn to any passage of Scripture of which they can call to mind two or three words, and in our opinion is the most complete and convenient as a reference book of any published. In addition, it contains many other aids in studying the Bible, as may be seen by reference to advertisement on last page. Remember, both the books there mentioned are CRUDEN'S COMPLETE.

"Thus saith the Lord, Behold, I am against the shepherds [pastors] and I will require my flock at their hand, and cause them to cease from feeding the flock; neither shall the shepherds feed themselves any more; for I will deliver my flock from their mouth, that they may not be meat for them."—Ezek. xxxiv. 10. "Feed the flock of God which is among you, taking the oversight thereof, not by constraint, but willingly; not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind; neither as being lords over God's heritage, but being ensamples to the flock."—1 Peter v. 2, 3.

Now, these texts, with several others, seem to me to be corroborating testimony to the idea I have advanced in regard to removing the candlestick; that a church here in her organic state, in a subordinate sense, belongs to the pastor, and their safety, welfare, peace and tranquility are in a great measure required of and depend upon him. And as I have neither time nor space now to refer to the pastors of all the churches of Asia, I will briefly speak of one more of them that my mind has been called to of late, and that is the pastor of the church in Sardis; and the Lord says of him, "I know thy works, that thou hast a name that thou livest, and art dead." This text shows plainly that he had the name of a pastor, and stood in that relation, and yet was dead. Only a name to live by, and yet dead, and probably was living off the church, while they were dying out for want of good pasture, gospel food and fatherly care; for the following Scripture demonstrates that the members were dying or in a perishing state. "Be watchful, and strengthen the things that remain, that are ready to die; for I have not found thy works [as pastor] perfect before God." Notwithstanding, "Thou [the pastor] hast a few names even in Sardis [the church] which have not defiled their garments; and they shall walk with me in white; for they are worthy." This fourth verse conveys the idea that the greater number of the church at Sardis had defiled their garments, that is, their professional garments, and that they were caused to do so through the unsoundness and unfaithfulness of their pastor, who only had the name and place of a pastor; hence at that time he was a thief and robber, whether he had been all the while or no; as there are some who steals into this relation, and do not come in through Christ, the door. Hence all pastors of churches who climb up some other way, or steal into the pastoral care of a church in this sense, are thieves and robbers; therefore they rob the flock of the rich and fertile pasture or wholesome gospel food which they would have received from a pastor who had entered in through Christ, or whom the Holy Ghost had made an overseer; for Christ is the door through which faithful pastors enter into their pastoral care; as Jesus says in John x. 9, "I am the door: by me if any man enter in, he shall be saved, and shall go in and out, and find pasture." The clause in this text, "any man," I do not think means any individual man or member of the church, but any pastor or shepherd, as is used in the context. That is, if any man enter into the pastoral care of a church through or by Christ, or in other words, if the Holy Ghost makes a man an overseer or pastor of a church, he (the pastor) shall be saved; and he (the pastor) shall go in and out before the flock; and he (the pastor) shall find pasture for them, and also in every sense of the word be an example to them, in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity, &c.

Now, in all these things the pastor that enters into the pastoral care through Christ, goes in and out before the flock, and they follow him; but a stranger who climbeth up into the pastoral care some other way than through Christ, they will not follow, for they know not the voice (doctrine) of strangers.

So this repentance in the text has no allusion whatever to that repentance which is a saving grace wrought in the soul by the Spirit of God, whereby a sinner is made to see and be sensible of his sins, and is grieved and humbled before God on account of them; but to turn away, or cease from her act of fornication and seduction of God's servants. Hence, if she had turned away, or repented of this act of fornication, it would in no wise have fitted her for heaven. It would only have saved her from being cast into a bed, which in this text means pain, torment and tribulation. "But unto you [the pastor] I say, and unto the rest in Thyatira, as many as have not known this doctrine [the doctrine of Jezebel], and which have not known the depths of Satan, as they speak, I will put upon you none other burden."

HERNDON, Va., Jan. 20, 1895.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS:—Inclosed find two dollars to pay for the SIGNS for this year. The paper never fails to come regularly every week, bringing glad news from our Father's family scattered far and near, all over our land. Many times it comes finding me low down in the valley of despond, with scarcely a ray of light to base my hope upon. But many times in looking over our family paper I find a letter from some dear brother or sister telling me my own feelings better than I can express them myself. At such times my little hope revives and I am made to rejoice for a little season. A dear sister some time ago expressed a desire that she might read a letter from me in the SIGNS, telling how I am getting along in this low ground of sin and sorrow. Now I will say right here that if that dear sister could only know what a blunderer I am at writing, and how ignorant I am at best, she would never expect to see a letter from me in the dear old SIGNS. I feel to be like the salt that has lost its savor, good for nothing but to be cast out from the fellowship of God's dear children. In fond memory my mind reverts back to bright seasons when I could rejoice with many of my brethren, and also those that were near and dear to me by the ties of nature; but many of them have passed to their eternal home, never again to be seen or heard in this time state. Dear ones, their voices are hushed forever here. Time moves on, and our days are swifter than a weaver's shuttle. Who of us can tell who will be called next? O the trials that await the children of God! "Man that is born of a woman is of few days and full of trouble. He cometh forth like a flower, and is cut down; he fleeth also as a shadow and continueth not."—Job. xiv. 1, 2. Life is short here on this earth, and many trials and tribulations await the children of God. Jesus has said, "In the world ye shall have tribulation." Not may have tribulation, but shall have tribulation. O that I could be more submissive to his holy will. But instead of being submissive to his will I often find a murmuring within, and "see another law in my members, warring against the law of my mind, and bringing me into captivity to the law of sin which is in my members. O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" Arminians sometimes tell me that Paul meant he was a wretched man before he was converted. But Paul has it in the present tense, and not in the past. "O wretched man that I am!" "This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners, of whom I am chief." And again, "By the grace of God I am what I am."

I will now bring this scribble to a close. Do with it as seemeth good in your sight.

Your brother, I hope,

JOHN F. OLIVER.

SISTER MARY PARKER.

BY request of our greatly afflicted sister Mary Parker, I wish to explain to the kind friends who have written her without receiving any reply.

While under the care and nursing of sister Rounsavell, sister Parker has been marvelously relieved, and her sufferings have been in a material degree ameliorated, yet she has been severely afflicted under complications of disease which still remain. Intense pains in her face led her to have all her teeth extracted; yet the suffering was not alleviated. She has had several hemorrhages which have exhausted the little strength she had gained, so that she is now unable to write or even dictate letters. She wishes to express thanks to each of those who have kindly remembered her in her affliction; and this morning, while prostrated beyond the power of ordinary speech, she faintly whispered, "All is well. The hope which has sustained me in the past is still my support. I have the sweet assurance of the presence of Jesus now." Her strength did not allow her to say more; but it was abundantly evident that the Lord himself was bearing her up. Unless there is a material change it is not probable that she can remain long in the body. Surely she may well say, for her to depart, and to be with Christ, is far better than anything which this world can give. May the grace of God still be her support through whatever changes yet await her in time, and bring her to eternal rest through the redemption that is in Jesus!

While giving expression of her thanks to all who have contributed to her relief in the past, I wish to say that from present indications it will not be long that she will need their aid. How highly favored are those who have the mind and power to minister unto a sufferer in whom the Spirit of Christ is so clearly manifest as it has been for years in this dear child of God! Unquestionably she is one of those of whom it is written, "Hath not God chosen the poor of this world rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which he hath promised to them that love him?"

Perhaps before this note is published she may be released from the bondage of the body of this death. What a divine joy is this prospect!

MARRIAGES.

BY Elder T. M. Poulson, on March 26th, 1895, at the Nassaongo meeting-house, Wicomico Co., Md., Mr. Wm. M. Sirmon and Miss Cordelia E. West.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

IT is with sadness that I write of my father-in-law's death. John Garrett was born in Huntingtonshire, England, June 24th, 1827, came to America in 1852, and married Hannah Hewitt in 1853. Five children were born to them, four of whom, with their mother, survive him. His was an exemplary life, adhering to the faith and doctrine of the Bible, ever firm for the truth, living and dying in the glorious hope of salvation by grace alone. He had no faith in a man-made salvation, but alone in the power of God. His home was ever open to God's people, as many who read this can testify. He was sick only five days, and was ready and willing to go. When asked about it he said, "The Lord's will is my will." He exclaimed at one time, "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" Surely death's cruel sting was taken away, and the grave holds no lasting victory over him. O may it be our happy lot to pass away as securely and confidently as he did, our hope and faith as firm as his. We will miss him in our assembly for worship; but we sorrow not without hope, believing that he is "Safe in the arms of Jesus,

Safe from corroding care,
Safe from the world's temptation;
Sin cannot harm him there."

We would not extol the man, but the grace of God which shone through his life. "Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright; for the end of that man is peace."

Father died Sunday morning, March 31st, 1895. The funeral services were conducted by Elder Blake, assisted by Elder Gill. We laid him peacefully and quietly away.

"Dearest father, thou hast left us,
And our loss we deeply feel;
But 'tis God who has bereft us,
He can all our sorrows heal."

May God comfort and sustain, is my desire.

SARAH A. GARRETT.

WATERLOO, Iowa, April 4, 1895.

DIED—At her home in Henry, S. D., Feb. 3d, 1895, Sarah F. Jeffers.

She was the daughter of Dan and Annie Butler. She was born in Grant Co., Wis., Dec. 9th, 1847, and was married to Albert N. Jeffers Dec. 25th, 1865. She was the mother of ten children, six of whom are living, and were present at her death. She had been a great sufferer for more than a year, caused by a tumor. She went to the Hospital in Minneapolis, Minn., for treatment one year ago last August, had a surgical operation, and came home, but never entirely recovered. She seemed to be better for a time, but grew worse, and went back last January; but the doctors informed her that there was no earthly help for her, and that she could live but a little while, so she came home to die. She told her family that she was not afraid to die, and would soon be with her Savior. She made all the arrangements for her burial, and gave minutest instructions how her remains should be buried.

She never united with any church, but left a bright evidence of the work of grace in the heart, and died in the faith of the Old Baptists. Her husband is a cousin of the writer, and requested me to write this notice. Her funeral was held on the 7th, at the Methodist church-house, and a discourse was preached by the pastor to a large congregation.

May the God of all grace comfort and reconcile all to his will, and that husband and children may follow her example in an orderly walk as she did in life (none knew her but to love and respect her), is the humble prayer of the writer.

E. A. NORTON.

HAMPTON, Iowa.

DIED—July 2d, 1894, Mrs. Priscilla Jones, widow of Thompson Jones, aged 56 years.

She joined the Bald Eagle Church in 1874, and was a faithful member. She was a great sufferer for two years, but bore it patiently, and rejoiced that she was going home to be with her Savior and at rest. She leaves two children, Mrs. George Duckworth, and a son, Charlie Jones, to mourn their loss, besides many other relatives and friends. She was a tender, loving mother, generous, unselfish, and the most devoted of friends, always ready to comfort and cheer those who were cast down. O how I miss her comforting words and warm welcome! She was not only a mother to her own, but had several step-children, whom she raised to manhood and womanhood. They all respect her memory, and feel that they each have lost a dear friend. The blank, the void which she has left can never be filled.

"Past is all the gloom and sadness,
Greater joys around her shine;
Turned is sorrow into gladness,
Death is changed to life divine."

LILLIE JONES DUCKWORTH.

JUDY, Ky., April 13, 1895.

Benjamin C. Mason died at his home near Buena Vista, March 5th, 1895, aged 76 years.

He was a member of the Baptist Church at Walnut Grove. He was paralyzed two days before the Lord called him up higher. He was married to Marion R. Foster on Sept. 8th, 1853, and for forty-two years made her a good and devoted husband, caring for and revering her mother, who for nineteen years before her death made her home with them. He visited the sick, and did what he could in the Master's service, and we believe that he has gone home to reap his reward.

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SON, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date. This date denotes the time at which your subscription expires; and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

CORRESPONDENCE.

DEAR EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES:—I am in receipt of a letter from sister L. P. Patterson, of Utica, W. Va., in which she asks me to give through the SIGNS OF THE TIMES my views of the ordinances, baptism and the Lord's supper. I hope I duly appreciate the confidence reposed in me by sister Patterson as indicated by that request; but I will say to her, and to all others, that the vast field all over which is standing in rich clusters the great and glorious truths of the gospel is too wide for one who wields as feeble a pen as I do to attempt to present the great and precious truth that shines forth in the character of him who in love and mercy gave those ordinances to his church, to build up his dear people in their faith, hope and love while journeying through this wilderness land. If our great Redeemer has given to us any knowledge of those great truths that might add to the joys of sister Patterson, or any others of God's dear people, I evidently have no right to retain within my own mind and heart that knowledge. The great stock of spiritual knowledge and wisdom which is given by our Lord to his saints, whether I have any or not, is the gift of God to them, and is given for a great and glorious purpose, which is the edification of each other. When we turn our thoughts and meditations to that great subject, one ever glorious scene rises before our vision, and that is the baptism of our Lord by John in the river Jordan. When we turn our thoughts to it a bright halo of glory shines about and around it, to which earth had ever been a stranger; and when we call up in memory the meaning of that name Jordan, which is judgment, deep sorrow and mourning overshadow us. We are thus overshadowed with gloom, because we know that his baptism was a true symbol of his burial and resurrection; and we know his burial was the culmination of the judgment against his people, who had sinned; and we know that it is written in the sacred oracles of God, "The soul that sinneth it shall die." He being the head of that church, that people that were given him by the everlasting Father, in the great covenant of redemption, must suffer the judgment which was against that body, which was death; and his death, which was in fulfillment of that judgment against his people, must precede his burial. When we in deep thought stand at that sepulchre we are made to know that death had taken down into that tomb one against whom the judgment of God had rested, because of his unity with his body, his chosen people. But when he came to Jordon unto John to be baptized of him, John forbade him, saying, "I have need to be baptized of thee; and comest thou to me? And Jesus answering said unto him, Suffer it to be so now; for thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness. Then he suffered him." Then in symbol he went down into the darkness of the tomb, and arose into the glorious light that now shines forth in his kingdom; for he in symbol arose to walk in newness of life, just as he did when he burst the bars of death and came forth from the darkness of that tomb. Then that judgment that was against his people, and against him by reason of his being their head, was fully met and cancelled. He then walked in newness of life, for he was alive for evermore. But he had by his baptism only given in symbol what would follow. The evangelist says, "And Jesus, when he was baptized, went up straightway out of the water; and lo, the heavens were opened unto him, and he saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove, and lighting upon him; and lo, a voice from heaven, saying, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." Here is presented the opening of the gospel heaven, the dawning of that great day in which the Son of righteousness should arise with healing in his wings. Of the announcement of his birth to the shepherds, Luke says, "And the angel said unto them, Fear not; for behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people; for unto you is born this day in the city of David a Savior, which is Christ the Lord. And suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host, praising God and saying, Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men." He whose birth caused the heavenly host to leave their happy abode in the realms of eternal day and unfading glory, and come to earth and proclaim in sweetest notes to dying men, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men," is the same who was baptized by John in Jordan, and is the same of whom the prophet speaks, saying, "Unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given, and the government shall be upon his shoulder; and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The mighty God, The everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace." His mission to earth proclaimed by the heavenly host was peace, and the prophet spoke of him as the Prince of Peace. To fit him to accomplish that great mission fully, he must go down into the tomb and rise again, which is strikingly symbolized by his baptism. The apostle in speaking of this subject says, "How shall we that are dead to sin live any longer therein? Know ye not that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death? Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death, that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life." His being raised up from the tomb by the glory of the Father was symbolized in his baptism. And you, dear saints, who have been buried with him by baptism into his death symbolize by your baptism the burial and resurrection of your glorious Lord, and your own death to sin, and resurrection to newness of life. After his resurrection he went forth in newness of life; for he was alive for evermore. And you by your baptism in symbol declare that you are dead to sin, and have arisen to walk in newness of life. While you were under the law you were dead in sin, and the law made you know your condition; for "by the law is the knowledge of sin." But by the death and resurrection of our Lord you were freed from the law, and made alive in Christ; and when you arose from that burial in baptism you symbolized that you were alive in Christ, and were exhorted by the apostle to walk in newness of life; not go back or attempt to go back under the law to hear again the thunderings of Sinai; not to attempt to raise the remains of your old husband, the law, and live with his dead body; for ye are dead to the law and alive in Christ, your new husband; not attempt to unfold the old heaven, for it is rolled as a vesture; for the old heaven and the old earth have passed away, and there is no place found for them in the gospel heaven. Under the old, the typical people, the children of Israel had their numerous ceremonies, washings and offerings; but they were all shadows of good things to come; but now by faith you take hold of Christ, which is the substance, and he is your life—that life in the newness of which you should walk after being buried with him in baptism; for he is the way, the truth and the life. When you call up in fond memory the day of your espousals, when you entered by baptism into his organized church, and took his name, which is "The Lord our Righteousness," then you should remember that "Ye are not your own; ye are bought with a price," the shedding of his blood, his burial and resurrection, all of which are symbolized by the two ordinances which he established in his church here below.

This leads us to look to the ordinance of the supper. Matthew xxvi. 26–28 introduces this great and wonderful ordinance which should be a memorial to the saints through all coming time. He says, "And as they were eating [the passover supper], Jesus took bread, and blessed it, and gave it to the disciples, and said, Take, eat; this is my body. And he took the cup, and gave thanks, and gave it to them, saying, Drink ye all of it; for this is my blood of the new testament, which is shed for many for the remission of sins." Thus was a perpetual ordinance established by our Lord in his church. The apostle after rebuking severely the church at Corinth for their apostacy and want of understanding of the true intent of this ordinance, says to that church, "For as often as ye eat this bread and drink this cup ye do shew the Lord's death till he come." It was thus clearly manifest that the inspired apostle looked to that ordinance as a symbol declaring the Lord's death till he come a second time, without sin unto salvation. His broken body and spilt blood are clearly symbolized by that ordinance, as his burial and resurrection are symbolized by the ordinance of baptism. But the crucifixion and death of our Lord on Calvary, and his burial and resurrection, the two greatest events ever witnessed by mortals, are so interwoven, so close together, that we cannot contemplate one without looking to the other. So it is with those two ordinances. They both belong to the house of the Lord, which is the true church. Into that church none can enter without being baptized, and thus bearing testimony to all around of their full belief in the great truth of the burial and resurrection of their glorious and risen Lord. And by being baptized they in their faith go still farther. They in that symbol declare their full belief and faith in the resurrection of all the redeemed in the last day, when this mortal must put on immortality. Evidently the baptism of our Lord prefigured his burial and resurrection, which secured the resurrection of all his saints when he shall come again and call them from the cold confines of the tomb, to dwell with him throughout a never-ending eternity. And you, dear saint, put on Christ in baptism; for in it you declare your death to sin and your resurrection from the power and dominion of the law, to walk in newness of life. Your Lord was alive evermore after his resurrection, and you are spiritually alive even now, if you have arisen from under the curse and dominion of the law; and hence you walk by faith, beholding him who is the end of the law for righteousness unto you. Being clothed with his righteousness you are clad in the garments of salvation, and are made able by grace divine to walk in newness of life; all, all by reason of the death, burial and resurrection of your glorious Lord, which are prefigured by these two ordinances established in his church. Then why do men cavil about the mode of baptism? If that ordinance prefigures a burial and resurrection, evidently no other mode is baptism but immersion. Certainly the dead cannot be buried by throwing a few clods of dust upon them. But that would approach as closely to a burial as throwing a few drops of water on a believer would approach a baptism. If baptism does not prefigure a burial, why did the apostle say, "Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death?" But I hope I am not talking to cavilers who fail to see in these ordinances so much of the truth of the gospel symbolized. The great truth that Jesus was baptized in Jordan by John, and went up straightway out of the water, and the other great and wonderous truth that he suffered and died on the cross, was buried in Joseph's new tomb, and arose from that tomb, are symbolized by those two ordinances, which stand as two witnesses to the faith of all the spiritually minded sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty. To them those ordinances were given by the great Head of the church that his saints looking through them by faith might behold the wonderous works of our God in their redemption, and thus have their faith revived, their hopes strengthened, and their love to him and to all the blessed children of God made perfect, and in joy run the race set before them, ever looking to Jesus, the author and finisher of their faith. Their faith is the gift of God to them when they are made spiritually alive in Christ; for it is a fruit of the Spirit, and is often strengthened, and they made to rejoice greatly, beholding in symbol his broken body, his shed blood, his burial and resurrection, without all of which they would be without hope and without God in the world, and must go down forever under the awful curse of a violated law. Then how awfully solemn to the true believer are those two ordinances, and how often do the dear saints greatly fear that they have not beheld in them their true interest and meaning, and thus have practiced them unworthily, not discerning the Lord's body. In baptism the burial and resurrection of the body is symbolized, and in the supper that broken body and that shed blood for the remission of sin is symbolized. Then, dear saints, what an awfully solemn truth have you declared in obeying the command of our Lord in being baptized and partaking of that supper. May you be blessed abundantly with the faith which will enable you to rejoice in those great truths while traveling onward toward your future and eternal home, is the sincere prayer of this little one.

If these feeble thoughts should be published, sister Patterson and all God's dear people who read them will please accept them as a little token of my love for the precious truth of the gospel, and for them both individually and collectively, which I fondly hope will remain until the dear saints meet to part no more.

THE IMPOSSIBLE WORK.

NOTWITHSTANDING that the children of God Almighty's grace are sometimes permitted to drink from the wells of Elim, and partake of joys which seem to be almost a foretaste of heaven, yet it is a fact, a fact attested by the experience of each and every one of them, that they are children of sorrow. They occasionally get a draught from the sweet wells of Elim, but they are also compelled to drink of the bitter waters of Marah. If permitted to enjoy a foretaste of the joys of heaven, they also know what it is to have the very pains of hell get hold upon them.

Every child of grace is a burden-bearer in this life, and the only way to the crown is by the way of the cross. No doubt but that each one of God's little ones would if it could cast all its troubles behind its back, and pursue its journey along flowery paths of ease; yet, were it possible to do so, the child of grace would find that in casting away its sorrows it had also cast away its brightest evidences of a change from nature to grace. Our Lord has said that in the world ye shall have tribulation; and the apostle John, gazing with enraptured vision upon that great multitude which no man could number, clothed in white raiment, and with palms in their hands, learned in answer to his interrogatory that "these are they which came out of great tribulation;" and to be partakers of that tribulation decreed by our God is a glorious evidence that we shall also be partakers of that glory which shall be revealed.

But let us inquire how the christian's troubles arise, and from whence they come. In an unregenerate state a man has no spiritual troubles. By nature he is opposed to God, opposed to God's ways, and is continually of one mind. Questions come up before him for decision, and are decided without any consideration as to whether God Almighty is pleased or displeased, honored or dishonored, but solely in accord with his natural ideas of business, prudence, caution and self-interest; what the Lord may think about it does not enter into the calculation at all. The unregenerate man is also satisfied with himself. If his reason should perchance adjudge him a sinner, his heart sets the verdict aside, and justifies him by referring to the conduct of others who have in its estimation done worse. His own sins are not obnoxious to him; and his efforts to avoid them are only because of their effect on his social standing, their injury to his business, or to escape their legal penalties. In fact, about all the sins for which he professes abhorrence are those which he sees committed by some poor, hobbling child of grace, and to these he delights to call attention in order to divert attention from his own. The unregenerate man is of one mind—a carnal mind, and that is enmity against God.

But as soon as the life-giving Spirit of our God shines in the unregenerate sinner's heart, and opens his blinded eyes, what a wondrous change is wrought! The sinner sees, but sees not the sins of others, for his own sins seem to rise mountains high, and shut him off from God forever. So far now from criticising the imperfections of christians, the worst, vilest sinner he knows seems to be so much better than himself that he would gladly exchange places with him. His wretched, burdened heart acknowledges its guilt, and cries out in agony and anguish, "Lord, be merciful to me, a sinner." But the star of hope appears to the poor, terror-smitten sinner to be steadily setting, lower and lower, until brought to a full realization of the enormity of his sins, and his utter and entire helplessness. Then comes, he knows not how, a great peace to his troubled soul, and he feels that God is his friend. The burden rolls from his soul, the dark clouds that obscured his sky are broken, and through their rifts the glory of God as reflected in the face of Christ Jesus shines in his soul, and gives him a feast of joy and gladness. Happy experience! Wonderful change! The sinner now could not cry out in bitterness, "Lord, be merciful to me, a sinner," to save his life; but he can say, "Bless the Lord, O my soul; and all that is within me, bless his holy name." Why, sinner, what is the matter with you? O, he has done great things for me, whereof I am glad. The poor sinner can sing, as he never sang before,

"Amazing grace! how sweet the sound!
That saved a wretch like me."

In this experience there are two things for us to consider. First, what the sinner thought was done for him; second, what God actually did do for him. The sinner thought that God had actually cleansed him and made him clean, soul and body. He just knew that he would never sin any more, and would not want to commit sin; but his exultation was of short duration, for he soon discovered that he possessed the same carnal nature, with all its lusts and appetites, that he possessed before. Then he doubted his experience, doubted being a child of grace; and his hope, which shortly before seemed large enough were he called to die, began to shrink and shrivel and dwindle, till it became so small as to be scarcely of any consequence.

What our God actually did for him, however, was to give him a new nature. Not to remodel or rebuild or renovate or create anew his carnal nature—not that; not to touch his carnal nature, which he inherited from Adam, but to give him an entirely new nature—the nature of Christ. Not to take the old, carnal nature away, and put a new one in its place—not that; but to leave the old, carnal disposition just where it was, and give the sinner a new and another and an entirely different one. So here is one difference between an unregenerate sinner and a child of grace: the unregenerate sinner has only one nature—that which he inherited from Adam; while the child of grace has two—the one he inherited from Adam, and which was born of the flesh, and the other which is born of God. "And these are contrary the one to the other, so that ye cannot do the things that ye would."

Now then, the carnal nature is not a subject of God's law, never has been and never will be, for it cannot be.—Rom. viii. 7. It will always be "enmity against God." The new nature, on the contrary, is in perfect accord with God; it delights in the law of God, and cannot sin, because it is born of God. The new nature will always serve and honor God; the old nature will always hate and dishonor God. What Paul said of himself applies to each one of the family everywhere, namely, "So then with the mind I myself serve the law of God, but with the flesh the law of sin."

Now then, the impossible work which the children of grace try to accomplish is to make their carnal nature subject to God's law, and because of such failure they grieve and mourn and load themselves with bitter reproaches. Sometimes we go farther, and are so overcome by our own carnal nature that we will find fault with brethren for not always gaining the victory over theirs. The victory, brethren, which overcometh, is not subjecting our carnal nature to God's law; it is not in always keeping that nature in submission, but the victory that overcometh is "our faith," faith in God. I am a helpless sinner, but God is a mighty Savior; with the flesh I am serving the law of sin, yes, but with the mind I am serving the law of God; and of this faith we have naught to boast, for it is the gift of God.

I know that God's children are often in transgression, that their life is a continual warfare, and many times when assailed by temptation's power they go down in the dust of defeat; but, brethren, do not be discouraged. The mark of a brave soldier is, not that he never knew defeat, but that he is always ready to do battle notwithstanding his defeats. Do not be disheartened because the devil operating through your carnal nature sometimes obtains the victory. Honorable scars are no disgrace. Should a gray haired man appear in one of our assemblies to-day with one arm gone, a leg missing, an eye out, and his visage marred with many a rude and rugged scar, it would no sooner be learned that he is a veteran of the war and was thus maimed in defense of his country, than we all would delight to do him honor. His maimed and mutilated body would receive from us double honor, while his honorable scars, even though received in defeat, would glow with beauty and glory.

I believe that God's children in their warfare in this life are doing the best they can under the circumstances that surround them; and it may be, my brethren, that in the great hereafter, when the secrets of all hearts shall be revealed, and everything that is hid shall be manifested, some, who because of their defeats in trying to make their carnal natures subject to God's law were lightly esteemed here by brethren and churches, may have an abundant entrance ministered to them by our God; and while the mud-bespattered raiment of earth is being exchanged for the snow white garments of glory, the music of "Well done, good and faithful servants," may fall upon their ears and make sweetest melody in their souls.

Your brother in tribulation,

EDITORS AND FRIENDS OF THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES:—While remitting for renewal of my subscription I desire to say a few words to express my gratitude to God and to the various writers in the SIGNS during the year past, since it first reached me, because of the pleasure and profit I have derived from its perusal, and in studying, in connection with God's word, the various truths and matters set forth by the editors and correspondents, though unable to entirely agree with some of the writers; because, as it seems to me, in some cases mere assumptions are built on as facts, to the unnecessary increase of divisions amongst the true children of God, and to their discomfort, if not loss. This, indeed, is a great source of trouble with us all, as it has been, and seems likely to be. O how fervently we need to pray, with the psalmist, "Open thou mine eyes;" "Give me a good understanding of thy precepts;" "Incline my ways unto thy testimonies." It is error, departure from God's precepts, that alone and entirely causes division, strife and evil contention amongst God's people. His truth is one, indivisible, non-conflicting; but error is illimitable in its divisibility. The truth can take but one course; but innumerable courses stretch out every way to error. God's little ones desire with an every increasing intensity and eagerness to see and know and walk in only the strait, narrow way of God's truth. They crave "the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth." It is sweeter to their taste than honey. In it they take great delight. It is to them as rivers of water to a thirsty soul in a desert. But the very air is full of discord and noise of battle between contending hosts, all claiming to have and to be contending for the very truth of God, like Saul as he went to Damascus. Is it not like a very Babel of religious tongues and confusion? But the multitudes of them are not Baptists of any kind, much less the Predestinarian kind of Baptists. But the "strong meat" which has been served up in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES in the time named has been to me satisfying, stimulating and comforting to a good degree. Indeed the gospel would be no good news to me were the teaching of God's sovereignty, the eternal foreknowledge and predestination, according to his own good pleasure, of all things, and especially of every one of his elect individually and unconditionally to eternal life and to good works, according to his eternal purpose in Christ Jesus, be left out; for without that I could have no confidence that a single human being would be eternally saved. The rather I should feel certain that not a single one would be saved, if there was any condition whatever about it. But as the Scriptures and various writers in the SIGNS proclaim God's new covenant, my soul bursts out involuntarily, Glory to God! Salvation is free, without money and without price. It is not of works, but by grace, from beginning to end, first to last, in blotting out the crimson, scarlet past, and creating a clean heart, in giving both grace for the time of need and glory also in its proper time. It is meet to ascribe all and everlasting glory to the matchless grace of God, and none of it to any other thing or being, much less to ourselves; for there is no natural difference between men; all are lost; not one can save himself, much less any other lost one. It must be all of God or not at all. It is also as clearly set forth that but a portion, not all of mankind, are to be eternally saved. And fearful as it is that a very large part of them are to be, will be, lost, this God's word teaches. Thus the editors and other writers in the SIGNS teach, while an increasing number of professors of religion and religious journals are teaching Universalism, so fulfilling the words of God's Son, who said of a similar class of teachers and men, "Let them alone; they be blind leaders of the blind; and if the blind lead the blind, both shall fall into the ditch." "Let them alone." Thus the Lord declares it to be a delusion sent by him into the minds of both the leaders and the led; because they did not like to retain God in their knowledge, and because they were thus proving themselves to be not of his sheep; though "the Lord knoweth them that are his," independently of all fruits and proofs; for he knows thoroughly every tree, and so what fruit it will bring forth, because he has ordered or ordained that everything shall bring forth fruit after its kind, and every fountain send forth a stream like itself, of itself. It is as men only we are obliged to judge of the tree by its fruits; and every man is by nature, in his fallen nature, an "evil tree." Not one in his carnal state can possibly "bring forth good fruit." Only by being grafted by another and competent hand into a good root, stock, tree or vine can he bring forth good fruit. He cannot graft himself, any more than a tree or a vine can; neither can he any more change his fruit, than can a tree change its fruit, or an Ethiopian change his skin, or a leopard change its spots, or a Lazarus come forth from his grave of himself. But though none have power to make themselves or others, God has both the power and the will to make the "dry bones," even though so "very dry," to arise and bring forth fruit; and in every age he reserves to himself "seven thousand men [less or more, according to his will] who have not bowed the knee to Baal," but whose delight is to bow only to him and do his will; who "hunger and thirst after righteousness; whose righteous souls, like Lot's in Sodom, are vexed within them at the ungodly abominations of their wicked neighbors; but which reserved, chosen people are like their Redeemer and Lord, because they are so reserved and chosen; and to the degree that they are like him, are they treated by they world, the flesh and the devil; just in substance as he was treated by the powers of darkness and error; that is, with most bitter, most cruel and relentless opposition, hatred and persecution, intended to destroy or annihilate; and whom, indeed, none but the Almighty Arm, guided by infinite wisdom, with omniscient eye, inspired by infinite and eternal love, could save from such a mighty host of such mighty foes as combine their malign forces as one man against one and all the little ones who are such a "feeble folk," as all these true little ones not only feel themselves to be, but as they really are, both in numbers and in power. For the mighty host of foes without have a most mighty ally within, who would most surely betray every one of them to the enemy, if left to themselves; and just as far and as often as they are left "for a small moment" to themselves, like Moses at the rock, like David with Bathsheba, like Peter in his denial, and his subsequent dissimulation as to circumcision, and as the constant experience of God's people demonstrates, at once they fall by the way, and discover anew their entire dependence on God's grace, mercy and strength for salvation from self, as well as from foes without. How inexpressibly sweet and comforting and glorious then is the thought, the strong confidence that the love wherewith our Redeemer hath loved us is an eternal love; that he will never forsake those who were chosen in him from the foundation of the world, and were given to him in the everlasting covenant; and who, though so incomplete and even filthy, offensive by nature and in themselves, yet, glory to God, are perfectly complete in him, and their shame of nakedness covered and hidden by the perfect white robe of his righteousness; or, as set forth by another figure, cleansed away by the washing in the fountain opened to the house of David for sin and uncleanness; having their robes made white in the blood of the Lamb, unto whom they shall ascribe all the honor, glory, majesty, dominion and praise; not to the devices, the willing and running, nor anything of men or angels, but altogether and always to God and the Lamb.

But though my soul loves and never wearies of this glorious theme, yet necessity compels me to cease, lest others be wearied, or all that I say be rejected and cast into the basket. I intended and desired to speak of various other things; but I must not trespass farther now, except to express my great delight in reading the communications of Mrs. Rebecca Wells, a mother in Israel. Thank God for such a testimony, for such an experience; and may the guiding and sustaining grace of God be ever with all the Israel of God, is my prayer as a lover of and seeker for this truth.

MATTHEW V. 23, 24.

"THEREFORE if thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there rememberest that thy brother hath aught against thee; leave there thy gift before the altar, and go thy way; first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift."

Our dear brother, Elder James M. True, of Kansas, Ill., has written us a most kind and cordial letter of fellowship and encouragement, and in it expresses a desire that we should write editorially upon the above quoted Scripture. Brother True's request in the matter would of itself be sufficient to create in us a desire to comply. In addition to this, however, the text itself seems to us of deep importance; and for this reason also we desire to suggest a few things concerning it. We should have been still better pleased, however, if brother True had himself written upon this text.

In the two preceding verses our Savior enforces a solemn truth upon the minds of those who heard him. "Ye have heard that it was said by them of old time, Thou shalt not kill; and whosoever shall kill shall be in danger of the judgment."—Verse 21. The expression, "in danger of the judgment," here means "deserving of the judgment." This the Mosaic law had declared. He that sheds blood, his own blood shall be shed, is the declaration of the law. This law could go no farther than the actual commission of murder.

Now (verse 22) Jesus says that something more than this is also true. He declares to them that God judges the heart rather than the act. "Whosoever is angry with his brother without a cause shall be in danger [or is deserving] of the judgment." We believe that the Savior means here the judgment of that God who can see the secret anger, as well as the act of murder to which, if unrestrained, it will lead. "And whosoever shall say to his brother, Raca, shall be in danger [here again the meaning is deserving] of the council." That is, according to the judgment of God he is as deserving of condemnation as are those great criminals who were brought for judgment before the great council, or Sanhedrim of the Jews. The word "Raca" means vain, empty-headed fellow. The spirit that could apply such epithets to another is here condemned. "But whosoever shall say, Thou fool, shall be in danger of [worthy of] hell fire." The word "fool" is used here, we believe, as it is often in other places, to express the idea of vice or crime, as though one would call another by some evil name. In the sight of God such a spirit is worthy of hell fire. The word "hell" here is Gehenna, which signified in the first place the valley of Hinnom, where mothers had once compelled their children to pass through the fire to Molech; and which afterward was a place accursed in the eyes of every Jew, and which was used to burn the filth and offal of the city of Jerusalem. It became a figure in the thoughts of the Jews of the final doom of the ungodly. The substance of these two verses is, it seems to us, that not only is he who kills his fellowman guilty in the sight of God, but he that is angry without a cause, he that holds others in such light regard as to call them vain and empty, and he who is ready to heap accusations and charges upon others, are also guilty of wrong against their brother and of sin against God. Surely it needs no argument to prove that all these things are of the flesh, and entirely foreign to the spirit of the gospel of the Son of God.

Verse twenty-three begins with the word "therefore." This shows that what follows is a conclusion which the Savior is about to draw from the statements preceding. Since these things are so evil, and he who is guilty of them is so deserving of condemnation, the following course of conduct in any one who may have been guilty is necessary.

"If thou bring thy gift to the altar." This is Old Testament language with a New Testament meaning. Under the old covenant there was an altar, to which Jews brought their offerings and gifts of various kinds. Under that law those who brought their gifts must be ceremonially clean. All who heard these words of the Savior would understand the allusion. Now, christians also have an altar; and christians also have gifts to bring. Prayer, praise, singing, testimony, service of any and every kind, such as preaching, exhortation, visiting the sick, feeding the hungry, and all that may be in their way to do, are the gifts which they bring to the altar of God through Christ.

"And there rememberest that thy brother hath aught against thee." We desire to emphasize one consideration in connection with these words. The Savior does not mean to say, And there rememberest that thy brother is angry with thee, or has made a charge against thee, or thinks that thou hast treated him wrongly; but rememberest that he has real cause to be offended at thee, because thou hast been angry with him without a cause, or because thou hast spoken lightly of him, as of a vain, empty fellow, or hast called him by some calumnious name. The brother may never have known that the other has had any wrong feeling toward him, or has spoken injuriously of him; or if he has known of it, he may have freely forgiven and forgotten it all. That makes no difference to the offender who brings his gift to the altar. His sin is in the way of his gift. No one else may know it, but he knows it. Sin lies at his door, and must be met. If it has never found him before, it finds him at the altar of God, and, coming up before him, he cannot offer his gift with any comfort or sense of acceptance. The Savior here speaks for the benefit of the wrong-doer rather than the wrong-sufferer. He who has suffered the wrong, and forgiven it, may freely come to the altar with his gift. There is nothing in his way; but how much is in the way of the wrong-doer! Read the fifty-first Psalm, to see where the wrong-doer stands. Jesus pities him and counsels him. He who remembers, not that a brother feels wrong toward him, but that he has sinned against him, and remembers it, as David remembered it when Nathan came to him, can bring no gift to God's altar. We heard of a brother who had grievously sinned, and when charged with his sin denied it. While the brethren were in great perplexity considering the case, a brother said, "I would like to hear the accused brother pray." The Moderator said, "Brother, you will pray with us." He arose to his feet and said, "Brethren, I cannot pray; I am guilty." He was compelled to leave his gift before the altar.

"Leave there thy gift before the altar." We have already anticipated most that we would say with regard to this clause of the text. It is of but secondary importance to bring the gift to the altar. God does not need it. The command to bring the gift is simply because it is for the advantage of him who brings it; but there is something still more important than the gift. The brother himself and his welfare is most important of all. If he who brings the gift is not accepted, neither will his gift be. If sin lies at the door he will not be accepted; and if he has thus sinned against his brother, neither he nor his gift will be accepted. Therefore if he has sinned against his brother he must leave his gift. The Lord does not say he must carry it away, and never offer it, but that he must suspend the offering of it until his sin is removed.

"Go thy way; first be reconciled to thy brother." Jesus does not say, Reconcile thy brother to thee, but be reconciled to him. This seems to us an important distinction. When we go to the one whom we have wronged it shows at once that we are sorrowful and penitent. God must break our heart before we can go. He must cause us to remember that we have sinned. Then, out of this sense of our sin and our vileness, we shall come to esteem others, even to the brother with whom we have been causelessly angry, or whom we have counted lightly, as a vain fellow, or whom we have charged with sin, the greatest folly of all, as better than ourselves. Then we shall love him; and loving him, we shall desire to be reconciled to him. It does not matter whether he will forgive us or not, so far as the feeling of the heart goes, at such a moment as that. We must go to him. We must be reconciled to him. We must by confession of our wrong remove the barrier that shuts us out from the brother, and shuts us out from the altar of God. Perhaps the brother never has been unreconciled to us. Perhaps he has always loved us. Perhaps he has only pitied us, because we were being led by such an evil spirit. Perhaps he has prayed for us, that we might be saved from our sin and its consequences. All this may be true; but we have been wrong, and unreconciled to him, and we need reconciliation. Do not these words of Jesus, from this point of view, take on a deeper, richer meaning? How, when thus understood, they melt and break the heart! What love and pity are seen in them to the wrong-doer! Go and be reconciled to thy brother. The blessing is not so much in that he loves you, but that you love him. This is your evidence of life divine. By this you know that you love God, and that he loves you, when you love your brother and are reconciled to him. Now we can offer our gifts, but not before.

So Jesus said, "And then come and offer thy gift." Now the gift can be laid upon the altar. Now the disciple will gain the evidence that God accepts it; and this is the witness that he himself is accepted. The wrong-doer may indeed sing and pray and preach, and put on zeal in a thousand ways; but all these gifts are not really laid on the altar. The great high priest does not present them. There is no witness in the heart that God accepts them. How vain is the form when the spirit is absent! Of what use is the shell when it is empty?

These are very solemn words of the Master. We have but caught a few glimpses of his meaning. Some things have seemed to us unspeakable as we have been writing. May God seal his truth to the hearts of all his people.

C.

FEED MY SHEEP.

WHEN our Lord gave this charge to Peter, he first interrogated him in a most impressive manner, "Lovest thou me?" Not that we are to suppose for a moment that he was ignorant of the state of Peter's mind, the reality, or amount, or sincerity of his love; but rather to teach us that without a supreme love to him no man is competent to feed the flock of God. Peter's reply, "Thou knowest that I love thee," not only demonstrated the sincerity of his love, but establishes the position we have taken, that it was not for the purpose of being informed himself (for knowing all things, he knew that Peter loved him), but that his church might know that none are called to preach the gospel in whose hearts the love of God has not been shed abroad. In the absence of supreme love to Jesus Christ, even if a man possess all other qualifications for preaching, by this established rule he must be rejected. "Though I speak with the tongues of men and angels, and have not charity [love], I am become as sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal. And though I have the gift of prophecy, and understand all mysteries, and all knowledge; and though I have all faith, so that I could remove mountains, and have not charity, I am nothing." Without this indispensable qualification men would enter the work from defective and unworthy motives, and in the work nothing short of that love can nerve them for the fiery trials to which they are to be exposed, or incline them to take the oversight of the flock in love, and not for filthy lucre's sake. Neither would those who are destitute of that governing principle while preaching to others, however soundly, reduce to practice themselves the principles of the gospel.

On the subject of Peter's knowledge of divine things, including of course that with which he was to feed the sheep and lambs, Christ had also examined him in a similar manner, and found him well instructed in all that he was required to preach. In counterdistinction to the creeds of men, Peter knew that Christ was the Son of the living God. This he had not learned of men, but it was a revelation to him from God. His faith in Christ could not therefore be superficial or speculative, for it had come from the right and only fountain of divine knowledge. "Blessed art thou, Simon Bar-jona; for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven."—Matt. xvi. 17.

By this examination and decision in regard to Peter's knowledge of Christ, the church of God should be admonished that this qualification is also an indispensable prerequisite to the work of the ministry. To preach without these is to make the gospel ministry, or to attempt to make it, a mere mechanical business, or at least a learned profession. Peter on examination then was found duly qualified in both these important prerequisites; all that he now lacked was the authority, commission or command.

Christians may possess not only a supreme love to Jesus, but also correct knowledge of the truth, by revelation, and yet lack a call of God to the work of the gospel ministry, and therefore be incompetent for the work. But in the words which we have placed at the head of this article the authority is duly expressed. The prerogative of Christ, as Head of his church, to judge of the qualifications and to send forth into his harvest whomsoever he will to labor, is fully recognized. No other authority is sufficient. No king or potentate, no church or ecclesiastical council, no pope or bishop, no mission board or mission society, has any such authority; and it is a presumptuous and daring usurpation, most insulting and treasonable in its nature, for any attempt to gtve either the qualifications or the command, but Christ alone. God's people are divinely warranted to "pray the Lord of the harvest to send forth laborers," but they have no authority to furnish them, nor to recognize, support, listen to, or in any wise countenance any whose qualifications and calling are not manifestly from the Lord. But we designed to notice more particularly the import of the words, "Feed my sheep." The members of the kingdom of our Lord are figuratively called sheep; and Jesus Christ is their Shepherd, whose own the sheep are. He therefore uses the possessive case, "my sheep," to distinguish his church and kingdom from all other flocks. It is not our purpose at this time to elucidate the legitimate grounds of his claim on them, but rather to show that the commission has a special and discriminating reference to the people of God, as the flock which is to be fed. It is not, as frequently represented, the work of Christ's ministers to modify the gospel testimony so as to make it palatable to dogs, wolves, or goats, nor to hold it as any part of their business to feed carnal or unregenerated men. The words of the command are not, multiply my sheep, convert sinners to God, evangelize the world, win souls, nor anything of that kind; but the work is to feed the flock of God, which he has bought with his own blood. The great and good Shepherd will himself gather them with his arm (Isa. xl. 11), and give unto them eternal life, and none shall pluck them out of his hand.—John. x. 28. It is important that the ministers of the gospel should understand their vocation, therefore the instructions given them by their Lord are clear and explicit. God has not only provided such food for his flock as shall nourish, invigorate and promote the growth and health of his sheep and lambs, but he has also provided them with appetites to relish the food which he has provided for them. The business of feeding does not require that experiments should be tried to see what the sheep will eat, or what kind of food they may be starved to, but the food is provided; and it is no more the work of the ministry to provide food or appetites, than to provide sheep and lambs to eat it, or than it is for the flock to provide pastors for themselves. God will give them pastors after his own heart, or according to his own counsel and wisdom, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding.

In modern times, in which the inventions of men have become so numerous and so astounding in arts and sciences as to almost revolutionize the world, lightnings are tamed, and thunderbolts harnessed for the use of man, the thoughts of professed teachers of Israel are turned to the subject of improving the institutions of the gospel of our Lord; but God has admonished us that he will take vengeance on all such inventions. His ministers shall not be allowed to turn away their ears from the truth, nor turn them unto fables. That course of ministry which was instituted by our Lord and exemplified by his ministers in the primitive age of the church is to be continued until time shall be no longer. It becomes us then to go back to the apostolic age for instruction and example in regard to the great work of feeding the Lord's flock.

The flock of Christ is to live by faith upon the Son of God; they are to eat his flesh, and to drink his blood. He is the Bread of Life which came down from heaven. His flesh is meat indeed, and his blood is drink indeed, to all his flock. All who eat this food have everlasting life; no man hath life who does not eat his flesh and drink his blood. To give or feed Christ to dead sinners is not the work of the gospel minister, as we have demonstrated from the divine record. "It is the Spirit that quickeneth." It is God alone who has power to reveal his Son in the heirs of salvation and first make them partakers of the bread that came down from heaven; and when this work is wrought in them by that almighty power which brought from the dead the body of our Lord Jesus Christ, that new and heavenly life given them in regeneration requires evermore to be supplied with this living Bread. We learn then, that out of Christ there is no food for the saints to be fed upon. Hence Paul was determined to know nothing else among them. We do not understand that the ministers of Jesus have power to dispose of the body or blood of Christ, but in the preaching of Christ and him crucified, they shall so exhibit him to those who have passed from death unto life as to feed them, in the sense of the text with which we began this article. And we wish to impress upon our brethren, ministers and all others, that no preaching but the preaching of Jesus Christ and him crucified, that which was, and is, and always will be, to the Jews a stumbling-block, and to the Greeks foolishness, can be unto them that are called, of both Jews and Greeks, Christ the power of God, and the wisdom of God. This preaching is then, to all who are called of God, Christ; and Christ is to be preached, and the preaching of Christ is ordained of God to be the food of his living children. It is death unto them that are dead, but life to them that have life. It is food to the regenerated; but the natural man, or unregenerated, receiveth it not; it is foolishness to him.

The experience of the saints of God abundantly proves that the same manner of preaching Christ that fed the sheep and lambs of the flock of God in the apostles' days, continues to be approved of God for the feeding of his sheep and lambs at this day. No improvement or innovation upon what they established by precept or example can be allowed, without disorder and confusion.

When the apostles preached Christ and him crucified, and the resurrection and triumph that followed his crucifixion, on the day of Pentecost, there were present a multitude of hungry sheep and lambs, who gladly received the word; and as evidence that they were fed, comforted, strengthened and established, they were baptized, and added to the church, and continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, &c. Now for a pattern of gospel preaching ordained to feed the flock, let us examine this example. What kind of preaching shall we call it? Was it doctrinal, experimental, or practical? Beyond contradiction it was a preaching of Christ; Christ was the theme, the sum and substance of the whole discourse; and it was doctrinal, experimental and practical; it embraced all the elements of gospel preaching that should ever be required to the end of time. It was

1. Defensive preaching. These men are not drunken, as ye suppose. This is that which was spoken by the prophet Joel, of what God had purposed and promised, and of what he has now brought to pass. The work of God's Spirit in quickening dead sinners was then, as now, disputed, and attributed to some other cause; it was supposed to have resulted from something which these men had been doing, rather than from the outpouring of the Spirit according to what God had long before purposed and promised. The heresy of the people was repelled and the truth of God defended in the preaching on the day of Pentecost.

2. It was emphatically preaching Christ, "Jesus of Nazareth, a man approved of God among you, by miracles and wonders," &c.

3. It was doctrinal, and what is now regarded as the most offensive kind of doctrine by all classes of carnal religionists. Predestination, determinate counsel, foreknowledge, and wicked men acting contrary to their own designs, in perfect harmony with what God had before determined should be done; their wrath praising him, and the remainder of their wrath restrained. A kind of preaching this which wise men of our day think illy calculated to promote revivals of religion.

4. It was pointed, plain, honest preaching. "Him, being delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God, ye have taken, and by wicked hands have crucified and slain."

5. It was resurrection preaching. "Whom God hath raised up, having loosed the pains of death; because it was not possible that he should be holden" of it; and this doctrine of the resurrection and complete victory of Christ over sin, death and hell, he proves to be in fulfillment of what was promised concerning him in ages that were past.—See Acts ii. 25–28.

6. It was experimental preaching; for they preached what had been experimentally taught to the prophets, the psalmist, and to the apostles and primitive saints.

7. It was practical preaching; for they enjoined on all that gladly received the word to be baptized.

8. It was discriminating preaching; for it applied with unspeakable joy to those on whom God had poured out his Spirit, and produced in them the very results that had been long predicted, and made all others mad.

9. It was confirming preaching; for those who received it gladly, being divinely prepared of God thus to receive it, continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine, &c.

We might go on to analyze the preaching of the apostles on that day, and speak of their presenting and applying the promises of God, and of their restricting the application of them to "as many as the Lord our God shall call," but our limits admonish us to be brief. We now appeal to the household of our God, especially to his children of the present day, Is there any kind of preaching that can feed, and comfort, and build you up in the truth, like what we have found embraced in the preaching of the apostles of the Lamb? We are painfully aware that there are those who profess at this day to be sheep and lambs of Jesus, who greatly prefer to eat their own bread, and wear their own apparel; who are better suited with a system of duty religion; who say virtually, "Give us Barabbas." Give us a popular, flesh-pleasing kind of preaching, which will rob Christ of his crown, God of his glory, and all the saints of their comfort; and "away with Jesus; let him be crucified!"

Carnal reasoners often profess great concern for the cause. They tell us that this doctrine, although true, is unprofitable, is attended with direful consequences, especially if it be not mixed with something more palatable to the world. The objections to it are chiefly these,

1. "It will preach the church to sleep;" for we have seen the sheep and lambs, immediately after eating heartily of this kind of food, lay down in green pastures, just as though they had nothing to do but rest; while actual experiment has proved that those professors who never eat this kind of food, but live on a "do and live" system, instead of laying down in green pastures, are like the troubled sea, that cannot rest, but continually casteth up mire and dirt.

2. "If the saints be fed only on this hard doctrine, it will lead them to indulge in sin;" that they must be kept under the lash of vigilant taskmasters of the Egyptian school, or they will be idle, and resist the orders of the pious Pharaoh, and think it a hard thing to make brick without straw.

3. It will make them close fisted and illiberal, so that they will contribute nothing to the benevolent funds out of which to pay large money to those who are employed to bear false witness against Jesus, and to hire soldiers to guard his tomb, and other objects of benevolence which have become popular in this day of refinement.

4. It never fails to make them uncharitable towards professors of other denominations. We have never known it to fail, when they have drank of this old wine, they have repudiated our new wine, and even declared that the old was better.

5. This way of feeding the flock fixes the rack too high for some, and too low for others; and, finally, none can get fat on this old, flinty corn, but just as many as the Lord their Ged shall call; and a great many pious and respectable sheep whose grinders are worn out, and young cubs whose teeth are better adapted to devouring much flesh, than eating old corn, cannot remain with comfort among them; these get discouraged, and go off, and finally become bears and wolves, because the preaching of the cross in this old, rough way of preaching it, had no charms for them. Finally, it is urged, if you would have a large and respectable flock, if you would have peace with the aliens, be honored by the world, and spoken well of by all men, you must abandon this old, apostolic fashion of feeding the flock, and fix your rack on wires, so that it can be elevated or settled to accommodate all; and let the corn be such as all can eat without hurting their teeth.

But the experience of the church of God in all ages has proved that the provisions of God's house are perfectly suited to the spiritual state and circumstances of his children; and those strange children, who cannot eat the hard corn, who find the rack too high or too low, had better tarry at Jericho than to come into the sheepfold to revolutionize the order of arrangement which the great Shepherd and Bishop has established.

If we have any among us on whom the preaching of the gospel in its primitive fullness, plainness and faithfulness has a tendency to looseness of habits and licentiousness of practice, it is because they are not born of God, do not belong to the family, and such should be put away.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y., Oct. 15, 1848.

was exhibited by this "Reverend" gentleman while trying to tell the people listening at his words, how they could find the Lord and call upon his name. I am compelled to say in the very outset of my remarks that I am ignorant, weak and crooked by nature, and have come fully to the conclusion that the Preacher who penned the words at the head of this article knew better what my condition is than the gentleman I heard tell the people how to "find the Lord," and how to forsake their ways that are unrighteous. I trust it was shown me fifty-two years ago next month that my crooked nature could not be made straight by any deeds done by this crooked heart of mine. It was then for the first time shown me what the meaning of the language is where it is said by Job," "Thou inquirest after mine iniquity, and searchest after my sin." The one that has ever been shown their crooked nature, and the utter wanting of things to be numbered to their credit, is not expecting to find the Lord near them, in the way of striving with them to let him have their heart, and thinking that he may be found by their turning their own heart to him. No, like one of old, they all can say that God "will bring the blind by a way they know not; I will lead them in paths that they have not known; I will make darkness light before them, and crooked things straight." As Jacob was found in the wilderness, and the Lord alone did lead him, so is every one that is numbered and found to be "crooked." They must be taken in hand by him who has said, "Remember the former things of old; for I am God, and there is none else; I am God, and there is none like me. Declaring the end from the beginning, and from ancient times the things that are not yet done, saying, My counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure."—Isaiah xlvi. 9, 10.

It is very seldom I ever go to hear the teachers of these self-made, so-called christians, speak; and when I do go I am almost sure to wish I had remained at home; yet sometimes I have felt a strengthening in the faith that I hope is given by God, and in that way feel that I may have been benefited.

While listening on the occasion above alluded to, I was made to feel a deep down sympathy for my neighbors that were there listening to this "blind leader." I was also made to call to mind the words of Paul, "Not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began."—2 Tim. i. 9. I was enabled to draw comfort in thinking of these words, and similar expressions recorded in the Bible.

While there listening, the words also came in my mind as used by Solomon, the son of David, called in Ecclesiasties "the Preacher," and these were some of my reflections. Did the King know the interpretation of the words written by the hand on the wall on the night of his revelling? Nay, verily; but Daniel could tell him that he was "weighed in the balance, and found wanting." So it seemed to me that until the Lord made known "that which is wanting," a knowledge of him, one "cannot be numbered." Again, this passage came into my mind, "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned." Paul said, when he came to the Corinthian brethren, that he "came not with excellency of speech or of wisdom, declaring unto you the testimony of God." We may well ask, What is the testimony of God? Jesus said, "No man can come to me, except the Father which hath sent me draw him; and I will raise him up at the last day." This "divine" that I listened to said any man could forsake his wtcked ways and unrighteous thoughts, if he would, and that God was nigh them that night, and that all they had to do was to seek the Lord while he was nigh them; and he assured his hearers that he was nearer to them that night than he ever would be again; forgetting the wonderful and glorious truth of God's omnipresence.

But let us turn from this stagnant pool of self-righteous deeds and man-taught religion, to the great ocean of God's unbounded love and eternal salvation wrought by Jesus Christ, the only begotten Son of God, full of grace and truth. Isaiah could say, "Who is this that cometh from Edom, with dyed garments from Bozrah, this that is glorious in his apparel, traveling in the greatness of his strength? I that speak in righteousness, mighty to save. Wherefore art thou red in thine apparel, and thy garments like him that treadeth in the winefat? I have trodden the winepress alone, and of the people there was none with me," &c. Here the poor "crooked" sinner can, by an eye of faith, view the glorious Lord in his mediatorial work, and can fully testify to the truth that he did the work alone, and cut it short in righteousness. The question has been brought forward by some in very recent years, that this one that is so beautifully set forth by the prophet as the glorious Head of the church, is only a substitute for his people. If this were so, why say, "In all their affliction he was afflicted, and the angel of his presence saved them; in his love and in his pity he redeemed them; and he bare them and carried them all the days of old?" Paul in the Hebrew letter says, "Thou madest him a little lower than the angels; thou crownedst him with glory and honor, and didst set him over the works of thy hands." "For it became him, for whom are all things, and by whom are all things, in bringing many sons unto glory, to make the Captain of their salvation perfect through sufferings. For both he that sanctifieth, and they who are sanctified, are all of one; for which cause he is not ashamed to call them brethren." "Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part of the same," &c.—Heb. ii. Surely these passages do not look much like something had been substituted by God to come as a Savior, but looks much to my feeble mind like the language of "wisdom," where it is said, "I was set up from everlasting, from the beginning, or ever the world was. When there were no depths, I was brought forth; when there were no fountains abounding with water, before the mountains were settled, before the hills, was I brought forth," &c. "Then I was by him as one brought up with him; and as I was daily his delight, rejoicing always before him; rejoicing in the habitable part of the earth; and my delights were with the sons of men."—Prov. viii. This all looks much like there is an eternal connection or relationship between Christ and his people, and that it is, and ever has been, and eternally will be, vital.

In concluding this, which may be my last written testimony, I desire to say, I am trusting alone for life and salvation in the sovereignty, omnipotence and omnipresence of God, and the full and complete work of Jesus Christ in atoning for my sins, and shedding abroad in my poor heart the sweet communion of the Holy Ghost. Hoping that I am not deceived in the evidence that has been given me that Jesus Christ is my elder Brother (and if so I shall as surely live throughout eternity with him as that he is now seated on his mediatorial throne), I desire with the poet to say,

"Wait, O my soul, thy Maker's will;
Tumultuous passions, all be still;
Nor let a murmuring thought arise;
His ways are just, his counsels wise.

"He in the thickest darkness dwells,
Performs his work, the cause conceals;
But though his methods are unknown,
Judgment and truth support his throne."

Tremblingly yours,

JAMES M. TRUE.

MARRIAGES.

March 20th, 1895, by Elder A. B. Francis, at the Little Creek meeting-house, Sussex Co., Del., Mr. Wm. K. Truitt, of Worcester Co., Md., and Miss Gertrude W. Hearn, of Sussex Co., Del.

March 20th, 1895, by the same, at the residence of the bride, Mr. Joshua T. Hearn and Miss Annie Hearn, both of Sussex Co., Del.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

Mrs. Sophia Smith departed this life March 25th, 1895, at nine o'clock a. m., at the residence of her son, John Smith, Esq., near Salisbury, Md. I was present and saw her breathe her last, like a lamp going out, without a single emotion.

The subject of this notice was born Oct. 13th, 1813, and was baptized in fellowship with the Old School Baptist Church at Nassaongo, Wicomico Co., Md., in the year 1840. She was married to James E. Smith in 1846, and was left a widow with three little boys, the oldest about five years of age; but by the help of God she struggled through life's uneven ways, and raised her children well, much to her credit, now leaving them and their families to think of her hard trials and anxious cares for their welfare; but we hope their sorrows may be soothed with the thought that she has ended all the conflicts of sin and mortality, to rest sweetly in Jesus, whom she had professed about fifty-five years ago, and who was her rock and refuge in all the battles with the world, the flesh and the devil.

Death is making an inroad upon the little church at Nassaongo. Her sister in the flesh, and also in the Spirit, departed this life March 5th, 1895. While we sorrow, it is not without hope. We can but trust that the Lord will fill the broken ranks with precious, lively stones, to show forth his praise.

I was present, and by request tried to speak for the comfort of those present, using as a text, "I shall be satisfied, when I awake, with thy likeness;" after which all that remained was laid away in the cemetery in Salisbury, Md. Will the families please accept our sympathy?

"Remember how short my time is: wherefore hast thou made all men in vain? What man is he that liveth, and shall not see death? Shall he deliver his soul from the hand of the grave?"—Psalm lxxxix. 47, 48.

Our much esteemed friend, Amor C. Jenkins, was called away in the fifty-sixth year of his age. The deceased made no profession of religion; but judging from the interest he manifested in the little church at Rock Springs, both in lodging them and aiming to make them comfortable at his hospitable home, we are led to think that he felt an interest in the things of the kingdom, always seeing something he could do for the comfort of others. He was probably as well known among the Baptists of Delaware as many who are identified with the church. Having known him for thirty-five years, I can speak from my long-continued and uninterrupted friendship all these years. His loss is great to the family, the church and neighborhood. He leaves two brothers and one sister, who still reside at the old homestead, now much broken up, especially the sister, who watched over him by day and night, hoping for his recovery; but the Lord took him.

The time appointed for the funeral was the third day of April, 1895, and interment at Rock Springs. Elder Francis was present, and made some appropriate and comforting remarks to the bereaved; also some remarks were made by the writer, after which the mortal remains were gathered unto his people.

WM. GRAFTON.

Forest Hill, Md.

"Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil: for thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff they comfort me."

The expression of the psalmist of his confidence in the God of his salvation was the comfort of our dear friend, Mrs. Juliet A. Moore, widow of Thomas P. Moore, who departed this life Feb. 13th, 1895, at her residence in Hopewell, N. J.

She was a constant attendant upon the meetings of the First Baptist Church of Hopewell, but did not make a profession of her faith in Jesus. Her walk and conversation was that of a lover of the truth and a professed follower of Christ, always manifesting a deep interest in the welfare of the pastor and in the prosperity of the church. During the past four years she was unable to walk on account of an injury from a fall, but when her health permitted was carried from the carriage to her chair in the meeting-house, a touching scene of devotion and affection of sons and grandson for their highly favored mother and grandmother, who was blessed with a calm temper, a sweet and kindly disposition, and was beloved by all who knew her.

The funeral was attended in the meeting-house where she had so long enjoyed the ministration of the gospel from gifted ministers who had preceded her to their eternal rest. A large concourse of relatives and friends assembled to perform the last rites of sepulture for a dear mother and loved friend, sorrowing that they should see her sweet and lovely face no more among them.

Elder Bogardus, of New York, conducted the services, and spoke words of comfort to the bereaved family and friends. Her remains were laid in the adjoining cemetery beside loved companions in life, but now companions in death.

ELIJAH LEIGH.

Hopewell, N. J., March 25, 1895.

W. P. Watkins was born in Gwinnett Co., Ga., Nov. 25th, 1822, and died at his home in McGregor, Texas, Feb. 12th, 1895.

He was married Nov. 21st, 1844, to Nancy Hopkins, who with five sons and two daughters are left to mourn his absence. He with his companion united with the Concord Church of Primitive Baptists, in Rusk Co., Texas, in 1849. He first emigrated to Alabama, thence to Rusk Co., Texas, in 1846, and thence to Coryell Co., in the fall of 1873, where they cast their lot with the Salem Church soon afterward. From his earliest history as a Baptist he lived an exemplary life, his walk ever attesting that he had been with Jesus. The dear old brother was one of the pioneers of this portion of Texas, one among our best citizens, and a strong advocate of the doctrine of salvation by grace, as taught by our Savior and his apostles. He derived much comfort from the teachings of Elder Gilbert Beebe and sons through the Signs of the Times, having been a subscriber to that periodical for more than fifteen years. He had been in failing health for two or more years, during which time he could not attend his church meetings as regularly as he wished, for it was his habit while in health to always be at his post in the Master's cause. Brother Watkins will no more meet in the assemblies of the saints on earth, but has ceased from his labors here below, and his works do follow him.

On the day of his death he ate dinner, and, accompanied by his youngest son, J. B. Watkins, went to the barn, and while there he fell, and expired within a few minutes, never speaking again. He died of heart failure. May God in his infinite mercy and goodness comfort the bereaved but precious sister, although kindly and tenderly cared for by her affectionate children; yet the presence of him who had been her constant companion for more than fifty years will ever be wanting during the remainder of her stay on earth. Indeed, one of Salem's supports has fallen, and others are tottering. Who will be next? Dear sister, look upward. Brother Watkins has but just entered real life. The cold hand of death has unlocked for him the portals of eternal life; and although his body rests in its bed of earth, his soul reclines in the Savior's bosom.

O! heaven is closer than mortals think
When they look with trembling dread
At the misty future that stretches on
From the silent home of the dead.

Yet oft in the hours of holy thought
To the thirsting soul is given
That power to pierce through the mist of sense
To the beauteous scenes of heaven.

Then very near seem its pearly gates,
And sweetly its harpings fall,
Till the soul is restless to soar away,
And longs for the Savior's call.

I know when the silver cord is loosed,
When the vail is rent away,
Not long and dark shall the passage be
To the realms of endless day.

PICTORIAL HISTORY

OF THE

UNITED STATES.

By James D. McCabe.

This work is no dry mass of details—no bombastic effort to inflame the national pride, but a vivid and brilliant narrative of the events of our history, from the discovery of the American Continent down to thepresent time. It gives a most interesting account of the Indians of North America, from the time of the coming of the white men. The voyages of Columbus and explorations and discoveries of the different nations of Europe are related with graphic power. Every step of our colonial history is traced with patient fidelity, and the sources of those noble and, we trust, enduring institutions, which have made our country free and great, are shown with remarkable clearness. Then follows a clear and succinct account of our great Struggle for Independence, and the establishment of the Federal Union—the events of our career from the close of the Revolution to the administration of Harrison.

The work is printed from plain, new type, on fine calendered paper, and comprised in one octavo volume of 960 pages. It is splendidly embellished with nearly 500 fine engravings, embracing battles and other historical scenes, portraits of distinguished men, views of our principal cities, &c., &c.

CHRISTIAN EXPERIENCE.

WHILE wandering far away from home,
In sin's dark maze I rambled on,
Led in the way of sin and thrall,
Lost in the ruins of the fall.

I did not know my sinful state,
And Satan did me captivate;
Made me a willing captive, too,
By luring me his will to do.

My mind was filled with vanity,
And I with kindred company
Roamed down that broad, frequented road,
That leads to doleful death's abode.

I was indeed a Pharisee—
No higher standard could I see;
I thought my works, though not quite true,
Were nearer right than many do.

In slippery paths my feet did roam
Until I was to manhood grown;
And on destruction's brink I stood,
Averse to God and all that's good.

At length the Lord (O wondrous grace!)
Released my soul from sin's embrace;
Through loving-kindness I could see
My days had been prolonged to me.

The light of Jesus shining in Revealed my heart a sink of sin;
I saw my misdeeds all were known
To him who sits on justice' throne.

My sins appeared like mountains high;
In deep distress my soul did cry
For mercy, if it could abound;
But justice echoed, "Cut him down!"

I felt my load of sin so great
I feared repentance was too late;
When to the law I trembling fled,
It poured its curses on my head.

All hope of heaven was lost to me;
I dreaded endless misery;
I felt the Lord was just and true,
And hell was righteously my due.

But on a time, clear in my view,
In eighteen hundred fifty-two,
It was in June, the twentieth day,
That all my anguish passed away.

Loaded with sin, engaged in prayer,
A light shined round about me there;
Jesus appeared to me from heaven,
And said, "Thy sins are all forgiven."

All nature in harmonious sound
Seemed hymning praises all around;
My soul in rapture did rejoice,
And anthems flowed from heart and voice.

I tried to tell to all around
What a dear Savior I had found;
How he had died on Calvary's tree,
And shed his blood to set me free.

I now thought all my troubles past,
That peace and joy would always last;
But Bible truth brought to my view
That I must fight my journey through.

The flesh, the world, and Satan, too,
Will mar our peace and mischief do;
That we may conquer on the field,
We're furnished armor, sword and shield.

Our weapons, not of carnal make,
All false, delusive holds will break;
Our Captain reigns in righteousness,
Through him we'll conquer by his grace.

But self-denial's from us due,
As we our journey here pursue,
Helping our neighbor by the way,
And faithfully Christ's law obey.

Dear fellow-pilgrims, old and young,
My journey here will soon be done;
My age is more than threescore years,
And I feel greatly in arrears.

My enemies have labored long,
And oft for me have been too strong;
But hope is anchored in the vail,
And faith and charity prevail.

My faith is stayed on Christ, my Friend,
To keep me safely to the end,
And take me his dear face to see,
All glorious in eternity.

CORRESPONDENCE.

BOURNEVILLE, Ohio, Jan. 6, 1895.

ELDER F. A. CHICK—DEAR BROTHER:—This beautiful Sunday morning finds me deeply impressed to again address you. I am aware that I am somewhat early in response, but if you will pardon me for this one time I shall try to not write so often in the future. When I last wrote you I was in trouble; my soul was filled with many sorrows, doubts and fears; I was tempest-tossed. But this morning at the dawn I awoke, and my whole soul was filled with love to God and to his dear children. I was so happy that I felt I would like to tell the whole world of my joy, of the dear Savior's love and many mercies to me, the least, very least of all. I do not believe I have, ever since the day I was buried beneath the yielding waves in obedience to God's command, been so very happy, felt such a perfect trust in God, as this morning. I just wish I could tell you what I feel in my heart. May God help me to pen down some of those things, in honor to his dear and ever to be adored name; for of myself I am nothing. As I have had some deep and sore troubles to endure for some time past, the cry of my heart has been, day and night, "O for a perfect trust in God!" And this morning I was made to truly feel that God had heard my prayer, for never in my life have I felt such a perfect trust in God as this morning; and every trouble I have ever had seemed to roll from my mind as fast as the dew vanisheth away beneath the rays of the sun; and I now feel to say, "The Lord is my Shepherd, I shall not want. He maketh me to lie down in green pastures; he leadeth me beside the still waters; he restoreth my soul; he leadeth me in paths of righteousness for his name's sake. Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil; for thou art with me: thy rod and thy staff they comfort me. Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies; thou anointest my head with oil; my cup runneth over. Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life, and I will dwell in the house of the Lord forever." Although all those words are so precious to me just now, yet the words, "I will fear no evil, for thou art with me," are doubly precious. When our trust in the Lord is perfect, our happiness is great; and this morning I felt my trust in the Lord was perfect; yes, I said, "I know in whom I trust; I know in whom I believe." Jesus is my Savior. "My Redeemer liveth." I had not a doubt or fear as to Jesus being my Savior, and I said, "I will fear no evil, for thou art with me." How sweet to feel the presence of the Lord, to feel that he has forgiven every sin we ever committed against him. And not only this, but we feel such a perfect trust in him that we feel he is able to bring us off more than conquerors, and present us before the Father, holy and blameless. Yes, we will fear no evil. Nothing shall be able to separate us from the love of God. "Shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword? Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors through him that loved us. For I am persuaded that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord."—Rom. viii. 35, 37, 38, 39. I have often read the above passages of Scripture, but never before could I embrace their fullness, the blessed assurance that we have in Jesus as our perfect trust, our perfect stay, as I can to-day. I see myself a great sinner, but Jesus is a great Savior, and his blood hath full atonement made. His blood availeth for me, even me. I cannot at this time doubt the truth of this assertion. Last night I was talking with a friend upon the subject of religion, and finally upon experience, and I began away back, at the time when I was a stranger to grace, but thought my works sufficient to save me; and as my mind ran along all the way in which I most humbly trust the Lord has led me, I seemed to revive from the morbid state I have of late dwelt in, and I just exclaimed to my friend, "I cannot tell you all the Lord has done for me. I have passed through many heart-rendering sorrows, dwelt in great darkness, been made at times to doubt and fear and tremble, and could not think that God loved a great sinner like me. I have felt alone, and an outcast, and the very offscouring of the earth. I felt all my friends had turned against me, and God did not know me. I wandered to the silent grove, to weep and lament, to beg of God for mercy; and at one time I thought I was losing my mind, and had to beg of God to allow me to keep my right mind. O! I cannot tell all; no, never; but I will sum it up in few words. I am a great sinner, and Jesus is a great Savior; and as my sorrows have been great, very great, so also have my joys in the Lord been beyond expression at times. During our conversation, or rather when I told my experience, I seemed to behold the awful depth to which I had sunk, ere a hope in Jesus was given me; and I saw so plainly it was the hand of God that raised me up, and placed my feet upon a rock, and established my goings. Yes, he hath ever since led me and kept me by his power. And is it any wonder that we cannot keep silent, but must declare his righteousness? To think that he, the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth, holy and sinless, whose home was in the heavens, that bright, fair city whose streets are paved with gold, and the gates set with pearls, where there is no night, no sorrow, sickness, pain or death, where all is love; that he should leave those courts of glory, and come to this world of sin and gloom, of sorrow and darkness, and dwell here among sinners! And O! what he suffered. They mocked him, and spat upon him; they placed a crown of thorns upon his lovely head; they nailed him to the cross, there to suffer and die, that we might live, and live forever! And why did he do all this? Because of the love he had for us. In his love and in his pity he hath redeemed us. Then, O then, let us show love one to another. If Jesus hath done so much for us, ought we not try to honor his dear and lovely name while we sojourn here? I am often sorely grieved because I am so sinful, so disobedient; but in times of trouble and deep distress I have gone to my God in prayer, and in due time he heard my prayers, and came to my relief, and

I was enabled to go on my way rejoicing. There is a blessing in trying to honor our Savior, in walking in his commands. "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." That is applicable to us to-day, the same as when we were laboring to free us from our burden of sin, ere a hope was given us. Was it not Jesus who gave us rest at that time, by putting away our burden of sin, and giving us a hope in him? But many times since then we have become burdened. How weary we became from long laboring to be free from our burden. At length a voice said unto us, "Come unto me, and I will give you rest." And what a sweet rest it is—sweet as the holy Sabbath day after six days of hard toil (if you will allow me such a comparison). After we have found this rest spoken of in Matt. xi. 28, it seems to me he commands such characters as have found this given rest, rest in Jesus, free from all their sins, to be up and doing at once; for he has no sooner said, "I will give you rest," when following comes this command, "Take my yoke upon you." What for? I have already found rest, Jesus is my Savior, heaven is my home, what need I further? Why, we need to obey God's commands, and honor and serve him while we live; and in order to do this, as it is pleasing in his sight, we must walk in his footsteps. Where do they lead us? Through "Jordan's waves;" and it is only by going beneath the yielding waves that we can take his yoke upon us. As we arise from the liquid grave we again receive a rest that cannot be received in any other way. We truly realize that baptism is not the putting away of the filth of the flesh; because we felt before we were baptized that Jesus' blood had washed away all our sins, which was our first rest; and because he had done so much for us, we wished to honor and glorify his name in the world. We wanted to own him as our full and complete Savior, so we were baptized in obedience to his command. Believe, and be baptized, and you shall be saved. Yes, we received the answer of a good conscience toward God; and what a sweet rest we found!

"On the wings of his love
We were carried above
All sin and temptation and pain;
Nor could we believe
That we ever should grieve,
That we ever should suffer again."

After we have taken Christ's yoke upon us, have we then no more to do? The world says the Old School Baptists are a lazy, do-nothing class of people; that after they join the church and are baptized they then sit down upon the stool of do-nothing, and remain there with folded arms. While we may appear thus to the world, God is our Judge. They are such a busy people, ever trying to help the Lord save sinners, and save many entirely without the Lord knowing anything about it; for he hath said in Matt. vii. 22, "Many will say to me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name cast out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works? And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you; depart from me, ye that work iniquity." So then, if we, Old Baptists, keep our arms folded, and sit upon the "stool of do-nothing," we will not be found among the many who will hear the awful sentence, "Depart from me, ye that work iniquity." The reason we keep our arms folded is because we believe the work is all done, the debt is paid, and there remaineth no more sacrifice for sin; for he hath forever perfected them that are sanctified.—Col. ii. 13, to close of chapter. "And you, being dead in sins, and the uncircumcision of your flesh, hath he quickened together with him, having forgiven you all trespasses; blotting out the handwriting of ordinances that was against us, which was contrary to us, and took it out of the way, nailing it to his cross," &c. But, as I said, after we have taken Christ's yoke upon us, have we then no more to do? The very thought of having a yoke upon us shows us we are to work. Study to show thyself a workman approved, rightly dividing the word of truth. Yes, there are many things for us to do. First, forsake not the assembling of yourselves together, as the manner of some is. If we do not meet with God's children at their house of worship, we are living in disobedience, and God will not bless us in disobedience. We should not fail to meet with the brethren at each time of meeting, unless providentially hindered. We should not stay away from meeting to attend to worldly affairs; for if we love Jesus, let us try to prove it by our works. Another duty is to look after the needs of our ministering brethren, and the poor and needy of the flock, if any. I fear we sometimes grow careless in this matter. I have thought much about this of late, and may God help me to do my duty in this respect. When I see ministers who will forsake all, leave their families, often in sickness, and not well supplied with the necessaries of life, go sorrowing, yet rejoicing, because they are counted worthy to suffer for Jesus' sake, and preach the truth in its purity, not caring to please the flesh, but their one aim is to try to do their Master's will, it is then I feel the church should see that that minister and his family are not allowed to suffer for the necessaries of life; for if the church have been made partakers of their spiritual things, their duty is also to minister unto them in carnal things. May God impress the duties we owe him more deeply upon our minds, and in obeying we shall find rest, peace and joy. We then would be firmly bound together as one body, there would not be so many schisms, so much contention and strife, so much hatred, envy and jealousy, that so often mar the peace of Zion. We have no time to be idle. "Watch, and pray that ye enter not into temptation." O that God would help me to live as he has commanded, is my prayer. I want his will (not mine) to be done at all times; but in trying to do God's will I find it ever to be against the flesh. "The flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh," so that "when I would do good, evil is present with me." But "the Lord reigneth," not only in heaven and among the inhabitants of the earth, but in us, and by his strength we are enabled to subdue every foe. "By the grace of God I am what I am." Let us look to Jesus in every time of need, for he will not forsake us; and that is why I am so happy to-day, because I feel that Jesus has come to me in my hour of grief and trouble, when I wanted to do as he has commanded, and found I had no power of my own to do so; but Jesus came to me, and strengthened me, and then I could say, "I will fear no evil, for thou art with me." No, I will no longer fear because of the weakness of the flesh, for the Lord is my strength, my all. Last week these words came to me, "I will not leave you comfortless; I will come to you." I did not take any great comfort from the words at the time they were given me, but this morning I felt the Lord had come to me, and then what great beauty I saw in those words.

My dear brother, I cannot find words to tell you of my joy in Jesus; it is too great, too wonderful; but you know this dear Savior. From your precious letters I have gathered many morsels, and know you have at times dwelt very near him, and dwelt in the fullness of his love; and it does me good to write to God's children; for when my feelings of sorrow or joy are too great for utterance, they know whereof I speak, and can enter into the depth of grief or joy with me. Therefore we can weep with those who weep, and mourn with those who mourn, and rejoice with those who are happy in the Lord.

"Our faith, our hope, our joys, are one,
Our comforts and our cares."

I wish that we could at all times feel this oneness.

I will come to a close, hoping you will bear with me in my many imperfections; and if I have written anything untruthful, I hope the Lord will forgive me. I have greatly enjoyed writing to you, for the reason that you seem to take great pleasure in the things pertaining to our spiritual welfare; and you have shown much kindness toward this poor, sinful worm of the dust, for which I feel thankful to the Lord; and may he greatly bless you, is my earnest, heartfelt desire for you. Will you accept thanks for your kindness to me, and remember me in your prayers? I will not ask a reply to this, neither will I expect one, as I am aware your time is all taken up. It has given me much joy just to have the privilege of writing you this letter, knowing at the same time it is a very imperfect scroll, illy composed. There are times I cannot be still, and to-day has been one of those times.

Your sister in a most precious hope in the dear Redeemer,

MINNIE CHESTER.

SALVATION.

THIS subject, the most important of all subjects that ever occupied the mind of man, rests upon my mind to write such views as I have, and present them for the consideration of my brethren, trusting that I know by experience that all the views of man fall short of expounding the Scriptures, and are only worth the evidence they present according to Scripture testimony. The theme of salvation is one that has dwelt upon the mind of man from the days of Abel down to the present time; a subject in which life and death are set forth before the mind of man. To my mind there seems to be two kinds of salvation presented in the Scriptures; the first one a temporal or time salvation; the second one a spiritual or eternal salvation; the first one a natural or law salvation; the second a gospel or spiritual salvation. The apostle in his letter to the Ephesians (ii. 8, 9) says, "For by grace are ye saved, through faith; and that not of yourselves, it is the gift of God; not of works lest any man should boast." I understand the apostle by the language here used to mean spiritual or eternal salvation, by which we are saved, by grace, through faith, which is to my mind a separate and distinct salvation from a natural or law salvation; for the apostle in the declaration of Scripture excludes self and the works of man. The apostle by his own experimental knowledge of these things knew the difference between law and gospel; for we hear him say in explicit language to the churches to whom he wrote, that by the deeds of the law no flesh could be justified in the sight of God; although in another place he says, "The law is spiritual; but I am carnal, sold under sin." The law of Moses, I understand, was spiritual in the sense that it was given by God unto the children of Israel as a moral code to govern that people; which law if fully obeyed would insure to them great earthly blessings and the favor of God as a nation upon the earth; which law, to my mind, is a moral code to-day, binding upon the children of men, for the government and rule of life while sojourning in the flesh. Remove that law and society would be destroyed, and there would be no curb upon the evil passions of man; therefore the law is good and wholesome, and a protection to the law-abiding throughout the world. But when we come to eternal salvation, the washing away of sin, the transgression committed by our fallen head, the law is weak, and cannot save the keeper thereof, because by the deeds of the law no flesh can be justified in the sight of God. Justification can only be attained by paying the full penalty of transgression, which is the death of the transgressor. Therefore, unless a man dies to all hope of salvation by the deeds of the law, and is spiritually raised from the dead, he cannot stand justified before divine justice. We see that Jesus, who was without sin, and kept the law perfect in all its requirements, had to suffer the penalty of death before he could secure eternal salvation to the members of his body, the church; for he came into the world as the head of his body, not a substitute, as some would have him; taking upon him their flesh and blood, thereby becoming as one of them; bone of their bones, and flesh of their flesh, subject to the temptations of the flesh. Therefore, to redeem them, he must suffer the full penalty of the law of transgression, which was death, before he could be justified in the sight of God. Thus we see that justification can only come by paying the full penalty of transgression, which, when paid, divine justice is satisfied, and the transgressor stands before God justified in spirit, the law having no farther claim upon him. In this condition his only hope is grace, which I understand to be divine favor, or the mercy of God; as the apostle has said, "For by grace are ye saved, through faith; and that not of yourselves; it is the gift of God; not of works, lest any man should boast." The subject of grace realizes his own condition when he becomes dead to the law, and his only hope of salvation is in the mercy of God. In this state of death Jesus is revealed unto him as the way of salvation, the only name given under heaven or amongst men whereby he can be saved. He sees Jesus the head of his body, suffering the penalty of transgression on the tree of the cross, bearing the sins of all the members of his body. Divine justice demands perfect obedience to the law of transgression, and as the head of the body he yields up life, an atonement for their sins, and cries, "It is finished," and gives up the ghost. The frowning heavens witness the scene, the rocks are rent, and the graves of them that slept are opened. Death has no further claim upon them. Hear the prophet Isaiah (xxvi. 19) saying, "Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise. Awake and sing, ye that dwell in dust; for thy dew is as the dew of herbs; and the earth shall cast out her dead." The fulfillment of this prophecy, I understand, took place at the resurrection of Jesus. Justification in its full sense before God the Father was seen in the resurrected body of Jesus. All the penalty of transgression had been fully paid, and eternal salvation secured to every member of his body; for the apostle says, "And without controversy, great is the mystery of godliness. God was manifest in the flesh, justified in the Spirit, seen of angels, preached unto the Gentiles, believed on in the world, received up into glory."—1 Tim. iii. 16. This mystery of salvation by grace, I understand, is only known by the revelation of God; for without revelation we know nothing about salvation by grace, through faith; because the apostle says that faith is the gift of God. Then, if a gift, it is by revelation; for we are told, "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them." We talk about a time salvation; and I agree that there is a time salvation that men can teach and preach to the children of men; and if they are satisfied with it, I should not complain. God has appointed all the ways of man, and even chosen their delusions. Why then should I complain if they teach good morals, which is about all they can do? Why not commend them for it, for the good of society? Paul said (Phil. i. 15), "Some indeed preach Christ even of envy and strife, and some also of good will. The one preach Christ of contention, not sincerely, supposing to add affliction to my bonds; but the other of love, knowing that I am set for the defense of the gospel. What then? Notwithstanding every way, whether in pretence or in truth, Christ is preached, and I therein do rejoice, and will rejoice."

Now, coming back to the crucifixion of Christ, I wish to talk a little about that scene; for it seems to me there is shadowed forth in the atonement he made for his people upon the tree of the cross, the full payment of that transgression committed by Adam, the federal head, in the garden of Eden. When God placed Adam in the garden of Eden, he gave him commandment that of all the trees of the garden he could freely eat, except of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, with the penalty that "In the day thou eatest thereof, thou shalt surely die." The apostle in speaking of this transgression says that Eve was beguiled by the serpent when she took the fruit and did eat; but Adam knew what he was doing when he received the fruit from her hand; therefore Adam knowingly sinned against the law of God, by which transgression he entailed upon himself and all his posterity the penalty of death, for which there was no forgiveness, and, I may say, committed the unpardonable sin; the truth of this penalty resting upon all his seed, from the day he transgressed in the garden of Eden down to the present time. No one will dare deny that all the offspring of Adam are the subjects of death. We talk about the unpardonable sin from which there is no forgiveness. We have it right before us in the transgression of our federal head in the garden of Eden. No man or woman can say they are exempt from that penalty. We read that Enoch and Elijah were translated, and of Elijah going up in a chariot of fire. What mortal flesh could live in that element, unless it were by the special command of God, as the three Hebrews in the fiery furnace? But they afterward had to pay the penalty of death. So I judge that all that was mortal of Elijah was consumed in the chariot of fire. When God appeared unto Moses, he appeared in a burning bush of fire on the mount, and told him that no man could meet him face to face and live. So I suppose Enoch passed through the death of his mortal body in the translation. Thus I conclude that all the seed of Adam must pass through the throes of death, even as did Jesus, the Son of God, who was born of a woman, begotten of the Holy Ghost, and made under the law. Hear him when he sweat great drops of blood in his agony before his crucifixion, saying, "Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me. Nevertheless not my will, but thine be done." Did God repent? No; repentance was hid from his eyes. There was no forgiveness. Divine justice must be satisfied, and the decree of God fulfilled to the letter of the word.

The subject I intended to dwell more particularly upon when I commenced my letter was salvation by grace, through faith, as recorded in Eph. ii. 8, 9; for it seems to me there are treasured up in these two heavenly gifts untold blessings to the poor sinners of Adam's race, so great that not all the gold of Ophir or the cattle of a thousand hills can purchase these gifts. So great, it seems to me, is the value of these heavenly gifts, that I am lost in wonder and admiration when I contemplate their worth, and that God through his abounding mercy to the chief of sinners has bestowed these gifts upon the favored sons and daughters of Adam, as vessels of mercy, of his own will and choice. The question so often arises with me, Am I included in that number which was chosen in Christ Jesus before the foundation of the world? Such a thought is lost in unspeakable joy, and language that natural wisdom cannot understand, nor the carnal mind comprehend; for when I look within, I find nothing but sin, the lusts of the flesh, and worldly desires, an appetite longing for the things of time. No wonder the apostle Paul said, "By the grace of God I am what I am." That favored apostle, who once was a persecutor of the saints, thinking he was doing God service, is now a penitent sinner, preaching salvation by grace, through faith; for he says, "By grace are ye saved, through faith; and that not of yourselves; it is the gift of God; not of works, lest any man should boast." Certainly Paul's testimony is the experience of every conscious sinner, who has seen the folly of his own works as a way of salvation, and the inquiry arises within his own heart, Do I know anything about this salvation by grace, through faith, and what evidence do I have to rest my salvation upon? Grace I understand to be divine favor, unmerited by the one on whom it is bestowed; for if it were by merit it would not be grace, but reward. The question now arises with me, Have I been the recipient of this grace, which I understand to be the divine favor of God? I will answer, So far as any merit on my part, I know I have none to offer, and if I am saved at all it must be by grace. There are some few things the poor sinner knows; the most prominent one is, that by nature he is the offspring of a fallen head, and a subject of death, and unless saved by grace he must be eternally lost. He can testify to this truth. The old patriarch Job said he knew his Redeemer lived, and in the latter day would stand upon the earth. I understand Job spake by faith. I say I know if I am saved it must be by grace, through the blood and righteousness of Jesus Christ; for there is no other name given under heaven amongst men whereby we can be saved. This I speak by experience; for I find within me, that is, in my flesh, dwells no good thing; therefore if I am saved it must be by grace. The apostle speaks of being saved by hope; and hope that is seen is not hope; for what a man seeth why doth he yet hope for? That is about my experience. My evidence is that I hope I am a subject of salvation, and upon this hope I have been resting these many years, between doubts and fears, trusting I am a subject of grace.

Now I want to talk a little about faith; for we are told that by faith the ancient worthies did many wonderful things; that Abel by faith offered a more excellent sacrifice than Cain; that by faith Enoch walked with God; that by faith Noah built an ark, to the saving of his house; and Abraham by faith left the land of his father's house, and went into a strange country, to seek a habitation; that by faith he obeyed God in offering his son Isaac; that by faith he received the promise that in his seed all the families of the earth should be blessed; and his faith was counted to him for righteousness. Also, many other things, too numerous to mention. Isaac and Jacob, Moses and Joshua, David and the prophets, and many others, all died in the faith.

The apostle in defining the word faith says, it is "the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." We, poor sinners, understand what is the substance of things hoped for. It is Jesus, our Savior. He is the substance of all things. By him all things in heaven and earth were made, and by him all things consist. The apostle also says that faith is the gift of God. Then, if faith is the gift of God, no man has faith unless God gives it unto him. Jesus said unto his disciples, that if they had faith as a

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

WE have many requests from brethren and sisters for answers through the SIGNS to questions proposed, and for views upon various portions of the word. We hope that those who have thus written to us will not feel worried should there be some delay in responding to these requests. Concerning some of them, at least, we feel wholly incompetent to say anything that would be of profit. Concerning some texts we do not feel that we have any light. We have tried to respond to some such requests by private letters, because there were so many that to write upon them editorially would delay our response too long. Such as we feel that we can write about we will answer as soon as possible. Meanwhile we hope that brethren will be patient with our delay, and also with our shortcomings when we do respond. An editor does not know everything, nor understand all mysteries; at least we know of one who does not. There are several requests before us now to which we wish to give brief answers.

Sister Sarah Runkle, of Illinois, wishes our views upon impressions to write for publication. Should we suppress these feelings, or write to ease the conscience?

We believe that the Lord often speaks to his people through what are called impressions; that is, he impresses by his Spirit some duty upon the minds of believers. This is also true of the comforts and consolations of his word. Whenever any duty or any comfort or any reproof or any admonition from the Lord rests with weight upon the mind, that is an impression—an impression from the Lord.

But there are also impressions made upon the mind by the evil one, or by the temptations of the world, or by some fleshly passion, such as pride, anger, vainglory, jealousy, &c. Therefore we may say concerning impressions, as the beloved apostle John said concerning the spirits (1 John iv. 1), Try the impressions, whether they be of God; and this trying of the spirits or of the impressions must be by the word of God. "To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."

We feel sure that if any one is impressed to speak or write concerning the worthy name of Jesus of Nazareth, and to exalt him above all besides, this is from the Lord; and this impression must not be stifled. To do so is at our peril. Every spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is of God. To refuse to bear this testimony is to grieve the holy Spirit of God. We believe that every child of God will feel like speaking to the honor of his King, even though his tongue or pen be halting. Out of the mouth of (such) babes and sucklings God hath perfected praise.

We believe that we have had for nearly thirty-five years an abiding impression to testify of the power and grace of Jesus by tongue or pen, as the way has seemed to be opened before us. We have not thought it right to wait for a special impression to be given us before attempting at any time to speak or to write; but we have tried to follow the abiding impression of our mind. We have at times had special impressions of mind which we believed were of God; but we have not believed it right to refuse to speak or write when we had not such an impression.

In direct response to our sister's question we would say, by no means suppress the impression or the desire to write in exaltation of the name of the Lord. It is a good thing always to speak of his goodness and talk of his power. It is good for those who thus speak, as well as for those who hear. We trust that our sister will be often impressed to write of the things which she has seen and felt and learned in her pilgrimage.

A CORRESPONDENT from Modesto, Illinois, whose initials are "D. F. A.," asks the following question: "Of what were the dry bones mentioned in Ezekiel xxxvii. a type? Was the prophesying essential to their resurrection?"

We are expressly told in the eleventh verse of this chapter that these dry bones are the whole house of Israel; and farther on in verse eleven we read, "Behold, they [the house of Israel] say, Our bones are dried, and our hope is lost: we are cut off for our parts." That is, it is our portion to be cut off. We will quote the next three verses as a still more full explanation of this most wonderful vision: "Therefore prophesy and say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God: Behold, O my people, I will open your graves, and cause you to come up out of your graves, and bring you into the land of Israel. And ye shall know that I am the Lord, when I have opened your graves, O my people, and brought you up out of your graves, and shall put my Spirit in you, and ye shall live, and I shall place you in your own land: then shall ye know that I the Lord have spoken it, and performed it, saith the Lord."

This surely decides at once as to whom the dry bones in the vision were emblematical of. It was the time of the seventy years' captivity of Israel in Babylon. Their national life was lost. Their bones were very dry. Babylon was to them as a grave. They were cut off. Their hope was wholly perished. The bones were not only dry, but very dry.

Could these dry bones live again? Could Israel come forth out of her grave once more? Could she be restored from her captivity, and her national life be renewed? By this vision the Lord declares that this miracle can take place. Israel can live once more. In the sight of the people all hope was lost. Even Ezekiel must say, in answer to the question, "Can these bones live?" only this, "Thou knowest."

If they shall live again it must be of God. "Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord." God says, "I will open your graves." "I will cause you to come up out of your graves." "I will bring you to the land of Israel." "I will put my Spirit in you, and ye shall live." "Then shall ye know that I am the Lord." When they were restored to their land again, according to these words of the Lord, they were prepared to say, "The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad."

Who are these dry bones? Not Gentiles, who nationally were not the people of God, but the whole house of Israel who were in captivity among the Gentiles. Therefore the work wrought among them was not a bestowing of national life and existence, but a reviving of what was before possessed. Jehovah did not say to the prophet, Can these Gentile nations become my people? but, Can Israel be revived again? Can Israel's dry bones live, and stand upon their feet again?

Of what was all this a type? It was an emblem of Israel in their seventy years' bondage at that time. It is a type, together with the whole narrative, of the spiritual people of God in all ages, but especially in this gospel age, when they have gone into captivity for any cause, and are in a state of drought and mourning. This is not a type of that work by which sinners dead in sin are made alive to God, but of that work by which believers are lifted up out of that low estate into which they so often fall by reason of weakness and transgression.

How often have we ourselves said of the church in her times of desolation and death, Can these dry bones live? How often all of us have said, at the view of our own coldness and deadness, Can these dry bones live? How often have we realized that God only knew; and when we have been once more revived, and have come out of our graves, and stand once more upon our feet, how sure we have been that this was the work of God, and how marvelous it has been in our eyes!

"Was the prophesying essential to their resurrection?" We would say in response to this question of our correspondent that it has pleased God often to visit and revive his people through the ministry of his servants. He did so in old time by prophets and apostles. It pleases him to do so still through the ministry of his servants as they preach his word. This he does continually; but he has never once quickened a dead sinner into life by preaching or prophesying. In the vision it was to the dry bones of Israel that Ezekiel was to prophesy, not to dead sinners of the Gentiles. So preaching to-day subserves a thousand purposes of grace and mercy and blessing to the dry bones in Israel, but it never has quickened a dead sinner.

When men know and can say, "Our bones are dried, and our hope is lost," they are not dead in sin. Such as these gospel preaching revives. Ezekiel was to prophesy to these complaining bones.—Verses 11, 12. Preaching is for the complaining ones to-day. God can comfort his people without preaching, and he can also revive them by it. When, and only when, he chooses to comfort them by preaching, is preaching essential. God is not dependent upon it.

SISTER S. A. Ellis, of Dye, Texas, wishes our views upon Zephaniah iii. 12; especially she desires to know who is meant by the pronoun "thee" in the text. This Scripture reads as follows, "I will also leave in the midst of thee an afflicted and poor people, and they shall trust in the name of the Lord."

In this chapter woes are denounced upon Jerusalem and her inhabitants. She is denominated a filthy and polluted and oppressing city, who obeyed not the voice of Jehovah, nor received correction, nor trusted in the Lord. From the first to the seventh verses of this chapter the Lord sets forth the iniquities of Jerusalem. He had bestowed upon Jerusalem care that he had not given to other nations (verses 6, 7), and yet they soon corrupted all their doings. In verse eight the Lord, against whom they had sinned, announces the judgments which should come upon this city.

In the next five verses he sets forth the objects of this chastisement. It is not to destroy, but to correct them. Out of this sinful city, and through the discipline of these judgments, the Lord declares that he will turn to the people a pure language, that they may call upon the name of the Lord, and serve him with one consent, and bring offerings to God, even those who had been dispersed because of their sin. The effect of these judgments (verse 11) will be to sift out those who rejoice in their pride, and are haughty, and who transgress. Then they shall be ashamed no more, because the cause of shame will be removed.

This sifting will leave a remnant (verse 13) who will not do iniquity, nor speak lies, nor use deceit; and this remnant shall feed and lie down, and none shall make them afraid. This is the general theme of the chapter.

Now, to refer directly to the question proposed by sister Ellis, we would say that the "thee" spoken of in the text was the literal Jerusalem that then was. In this city, which was so prone to wander from the right way of the Lord, and which was so often haughty and arrogant, there should be a few still who should trust in the name of the Lord; and they should be, not the rich, the arrogant, the boastful, the self-righteous, but a poor and afflicted people, whose one peculiar mark should be that they should trust in the name of the Lord.

The chief fault of Jerusalem had always been that they had trusted and boasted in themselves. It was so in the days of the Savior. This had been their undoing. As they did not trust God, so they did not serve him. As they trusted in themselves, they served themselves. But there should be a remnant of the afflicted and poor who should trust in the name of the Lord; and these should serve him. This we understand to be the direct meaning of the text to which our sister refers.

But we desire to also say that in all ages, among the great mass who have professed religion, it has been true that a few poor and afflicted ones have been the true servants of God. The great advantages which God gave Jerusalem as a city and Israel as a nation did not turn the hearts of the people to the Lord. It still remains true that every multiplied form of religion may abound, and the heart still remain arrogant and boastful. None truly trust in the name of the Lord but the poor and afflicted people. No amount of teaching, though it be the teaching of the Scriptures themselves, yea, more, though it be the very duty of humility itself, will ever make the heart of a man humble, but rather puff it up with religious pride and arrogance. It has always been true that "knowledge puffeth up, but charity edifieth." In the heart of the poor and afflicted ones the Lord sheds abroad this charity. Love, perfect love, is the twin sister of humility and the destruction of pride; and only they who love God trust in him.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

DEAR BRETHREN AND FRIENDS:—Unpleasant as it is to us, we are compelled to make a special appeal for assistance to enable us to continue the publication of the SIGNS. Never have we received as small a per cent. due us on subscriptions as we have this year. We have on our list thousands of dollars due us, but owing to hard times it is withheld from us, until we are now that close pressed for money to continue the publication of the paper that we have either to borrow the money or, failing in that, to cease the publication. It is very humiliating to be compelled to publish this notice; but we are writing to our brethren and friends, and we feel positive that could they but know our real stress they would send us the amounts due us, even though it might cause some inconvenience to do so. We are not actuated in making this appeal by a desire to add to an accumulated surplus, but to enable us to meet our business obligations now overdue.

ON TESTAMENTS.

BROTHER Trott, in responding to the request of "A humble brother," who desired his views on Matt. xxiv. 27, has found occasion to dissent from the views of some of his brethren on Heb. ix. 16–28, in which the inspired writer has illustrated the necessity of the shedding of blood in order to the remission of sins, by the necessity of the death of a testator, to bring in force his will or testament. Having ourself held such views of this subject, perhaps, as brother Trott objects to, we feel inclined to review the subject. And first, lest any should regard a discussion of this subject in the light of contention for mastery, or as indicative of any unfriendly feelings between the parties to the discussion, we wish to say we fully appreciate the motives of brother Trott, and so far from a disposition to strive for mastery, to elevate himself above his brethren, or exalt himself at their expense, we believe he would as readily yield any view that he may entertain, if convinced that it is unwarranted by the standard of divine truth, as he would have us to do so, if condemned by the same standard. A careful examination of the subject may however find us not so far apart in our views as he has supposed. So far as he may allude to our views of the subject, brother Trott has stated our position correctly in these words, viz:

"That the 27th verse, 'And as it is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment,' has reference to a will or testament; that the appointment once to die has reference to the laws and customs of men, which require that the testator should be first dead before his heirs can claim the execution of his will; and the after judgment to be the decision of the judge of probates, as to the validity of the will."

This we admit to be substantially the position taken by us, and which we still think is fully warranted by the connection. But we wish to give a fair and candid hearing, and reply to the objections of our brother. We claim for ourself no infallibility, and no brother's opinion against us can do more to shake our confidence in our own than that of brother Trott. His objections to our position are,

First. It belittles this portion of Scripture.

Second. It is viewed as degrading, that the eternal God should have appointed his Son unto death, or offered him MERELY in conformity to the laws and customs of men concerning testaments, that the testator must first die before his will is of force, &c.

Third. It sets aside the whole doctrine of the cross, as held by Old School Baptists, &c.

These are serious objections, and coming from a brother who is greatly our senior in years, and far in advance of us in his general understanding of the Scriptures, demand of us due consideration.

The first objection will be fully sustained if the other two are established; for we freely admit that no erroneous comment on the Scriptures can fail to derogate from the excellency of the Scriptures. As they contain the truth of God, it is impossible to improve them by any view which they do not warrant, nor to exalt them by any embellishment of human invention or providence. It is not necessary to discuss the first objection, as it must stand or fall with those which follow it.

The second objection will be more than half demolished by striking out the word "merely," which we have placed in capitals, that it may be distinguished as the author of the confusion, or of the apparent difficulty between us. It is no where said in the position charged upon us, and admitted as correct, that "God had appointed his Son to die merely in conformity to the laws; nor indeed did we design to embrace the idea that God had any reference at all to the laws or customs of men in the appointment of his Son to die. But our position assumes that, in the illustration of the subject of testaments, the apostle has referred to the manner in which wills or testaments of men are made, and also to what is required to give them force after they have been made. We will now review the subject as presented in Heb. ix. 15–28.

"And for this cause he is the Mediator of the new testament." For what cause? The cause is stated in the 14th verse, to "purge your conscience from dead works, to serve the living God," he having, as stated above, by his own blood entered into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us; or as farther explained in what follows, "that by means of death, for the redemption of the transgressions that were under the first testament, they which are called might receive the promise of eternal inheritance. Here then we have the cause of his being the Mediator of the new testament, or the executor of the last will. Had he come to execute the first testament, we could only have received what was legally provided for us in that will—condemnation, wrath and hopeless bondage, or the just recompense due to the transgressions which were under the first testament; but he is the Mediator of the new testament. "In that he saith, A new covenant, he hath made the first old. Now that which decayeth and waxeth old is ready to vanish away."—viii. 13. As Mediator, he by means of death legally delivered us from the old testament; and as the making a last will necessarily annuls all prior wills, so the redemption of the transgressions which were under the first testament opened the way for that testament in which the heirs of salvation receive the promise of eternal inheritance. The necessity of Christ's death to open the way for the promise, and the claim of the heirs being based on that promise of eternal inheritance, which is the sum of the new testament, shows very clearly the importance of the sacrificial death of Christ for redemption; and as a still stronger illustration of this, reference is made to the nature of wills as generally understood among men. Not that God has been swayed or governed in the formation of his purpose by the custom or laws of men, but rather that God, who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will, has provided among the incidents of human usages many things by which he is pleased to illustrate eternal things to us. Did not the inspired writer, in confirmation and illustration of these views, say, "For where a testament is, there must also of necessity be the death of the testator; for a testament is of force after men are dead; otherwise it is of no force at all while the testator liveth?" Did Paul, or whoever wrote this epistle, belittle the subject or degrade the purpose of God in giving his Son, by bringing forward, for illustration or confirmation of the doctrine, the will or testaments of men, and their utter want of force while the testator was living? If not, then how can we involve such consequences by making the same use of the same figure? Paul did not say that Christ died merely to conform to the laws or customs of men; neither did we. Such an idea would change the whole force of the subject. But because Christ's death was not merely to conform to such law and custom, by no means forbids the anology of the figure. It is true of all testaments and wills. "Whereupon, neither the first testament was dedicated without blood." The necessity of the death of Christ to establish the claim of the heirs of promise to their inheritance provided in the new or last will and testament, even of eternal inheritance, is farther confirmed by referring to the dedication of the first testament by the shedding of the blood of calves and goats, and saying, "This is the blood of the testament which God has enjoined unto you. And almost all things are by the law purged with blood; and without the shedding of blood is no remission." But brother Trott concludes that the apostle has dropped his allusion to wills, and now has the doctrine of redemption as a distinct subject in hand. He will pardon us for differing with him in that conclusion. His allusion to testaments is inseparably connected with his presentation of redemption, purification, remission of sins, and eternal inheritance. To leave any of these out would equally belittle or disparage the subject. To show the necessity of the death of Christ to redeem his people from the transgression under the first testament, and to apply to them the promise of eternal inheritance provided in the new testament, and to give them as heirs a right to claim their inheritance, and that the first testament might truly prefigure the new one, it was dedicated by blood, and by the shedding of blood; and by its application, as the blood of that testament, that testament was enjoined unto them by God himself; and the necessity of the death of Christ is thus fully set forth in the patterns of the things in the heavens. But although the patterns could, according to the provisions of the old will or testament, be dedicated with the blood of calves and goats, yet the heavenly things themselves, of which these were only the figures or types, must be dedicated with better blood, or better things than those used in the patterns. "For Christ is not entered into the holy places made with hands [where the priests under the first testament carried the blood of the victim slain by them], which are the figures of the true; but into heaven itself, now to appear in the presence of God for us." Here observe in the pattern, first the death of the victim, then the blood is carried into the holy places by the priests of Israel, there to appear presenting blood before God within the veil; so Christ was once offered, as we shall have occasion to notice. The Jewish priests were required to repeat their service every year; but not so with Christ, "for then must he have suffered often since the foundation of the world; but now once, in the end of the world, hath he appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself. And as it is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment, so Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time, without sin unto salvation." We will not dispute the views taken of this passage by brethren Trott, Marshall and others, that as the general sentence of death is passed on all men, and that sentence requires of each living man that he shall once die; and that that appointment is fully executed by man's dying once; and that after the once dying there is to be an execution of the righteous judgment of God on every individual, either to justification or condemnation; and that so Christ died; that is, he was by the law that he came under required to die but once, and that the judgment of justification would follow and be manifested by his resurrection; or of condemnation, if he did not arise, as Paul said to the Corinthians, "If Christ be not risen, ye are yet in your sins." And that Christ having thus been once offered, and having arisen from the dead, the judgment is settled unalterably and forever, that all for whom he died are legally, finally and forever justified in him who was delivered up for their offenses, and raised again for their justification; and that it is on this ground that they who look for him have the blessed assurance guaranteed that they shall not be disappointed; he shall appear unto them, without sin unto salvation. Now, we have no objection to all this; we believe it all, we rejoice in it all, we glory in it all. We do not see that it conflicts with our position as agreed upon in this article. This is, according to our view of the subject, but an extension of the view we took of the passage. Only with this difference, brother Trott objects to any reference being made in the 27th verse to the subject of wills or testaments, mentioned in the 15th, 16th and 17th verses of the chapter; while we as confidently hold that the figure of the testament, as used by the apostle, is extended throughout the chapter. This difference of construction, however, does not lead to a different issue as to the doctrine of the subject, or we fail to discover wherein.

Our position assumes that "Where a testament is, there must also of necessity be the death of the testator; otherwise the testament is of no strength at all, while the testator liveth." Nothing short of the death of Christ could redeem us from the transgressions which were under the old testament, or annul that testament, or remove the legal impediments which the old will imposed to our being recognized as the heirs of the promise of eternal inheritance. Instead of our receiving that inheritance independently of Christ's death, he himself was held responsible to the law, and the law continued in full force until he as our testator died; its eye was not dim nor its natural force abated. It therefore behooved Christ to suffer, and to die, and then to enter into his glory. Hence, as in establishing the validity of the will of a testator, as well as in the general sentence of mortality which is passed on all men (the first of which only is mentioned in any part of the connection of the subject), there is an appointment once to die; for otherwise the testament is void; "but after this [the death of the testator] the judgment. So Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many," even all the transgressions which were under the old testament; and the judgment must follow. The validity of the last will and testament is established; the obstacles and impediments of the old testament are cancelled, annulled and removed; the will is proved. The executor or Mediator has by and with his own blood appeared in the presence of God for us; the will itself is presented by the Executor, "Father, I WILL that all that thou hast given me be with me where I am, that they may behold my glory," &c. The will is approved, the heavens receive the Executor of it, until the restitution or fulfillment of all things; the Holy Spirit is sent down, the legitimate heirs of glory are by the Holy Spirit testified in due time, and the promise of eternal inheritance is given to and received by them. Nothing in the old will, not all the flame or smoke of Sinai that Moses saw, or Israel feared, can alienate them; their eternal inheritance is incorruptible, undefiled, and cannot fade away; it is reserved in heaven for them, who are kept by the power of God, through faith unto salvation, and ready to be revealed in the last time; and as this eternal inheritance is in Christ, and is Christ, to them who look for him shall he appear the second time, without sin unto salvation. The challenge is given, "Who shall lay anything to the charge of God's elect? It is God that justifieth! Who is he that condemneth? It is Christ that died [making valid to us legally the will, and annulling all legal impediments], yea, rather that is risen again, who is even at the right hand of God, who also maketh intercession for us." The testament is proved, approved and confirmed, and the Mediator of it ever liveth to make intercession for the heirs of salvation. Who shall disinherit them? Who shall separate them from the love of Christ? We cannot perceive wherein this application of the figure belittles the Scripture or degrades the purpose of God in the gift of his Son. Neither can we discover wherein it conflicts with the doctrine advanced on the subject by brother Trott. We do see the want of harmony in our views in tracing the figures, but in summing up the testimony we come to the same conclusion. Brother Trott makes a distinction between the covenant and the testament, in the argument, and has the apostle dwelling on them in this connection alternately, dropping one and taking up the other, but keeping them distinct. We have not made that distinction in our remarks on the subject, nor can we tell what he means by the old testament, if he does not mean the old covenant; we regard them as identical; and so also have we understood the new testament and the new covenant to mean the gospel; but, be that as it may, if the apostle dropped the subject of the covenant on which he had been treating in the preceding chapter, and took up the testament as a distinct subject, and then dropped the subject of the testament, and resumed that of the covenant, we find him again dropping the covenant, and resuming the subject of the will, in the 7th, 8th, 9th and 10th verses of the next chapter; announcing Christ as the Executor of the will, as annulling the first, that he might establish the second. "By the which WILL we are sanctified through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once," to be repeated no more.

If we have met and obviated the second objection of brother Trott, the first and third will cease to exist.

As to the final resurrection of the dead at the last day, and the execution of the righteous judgment of God, the reception of all the heirs of glory, soul and body, into life eternal, and the everlasting perdition of the ungodly, there is no controversy between us that we are aware of. We do not regard men as probationers in this life, nor do we believe that the decision of God as to who are his children, and who are not, who shall be saved, and who shall be damned, is suspended until after the resurrection of the bodies of the human family at the last day; but we believe "the foundation of God standeth sure, having this seal, The Lord knoweth them that are his." We have no faith in the notion that the saints which are now in glory, nor that the enemies of God who, with the inhabitants of Sodom, are now suffering the vengeance of eternal fire, will meet at the resurrection in a promiscuous assembly to pass an examination in order to a decision as to which place they belong; neither do we understand this to be the view of brother Trott, nor any other consistent and enlightened Old School Baptist.

We wish to be open to conviction if we err, and we hope ever to appreciate the kindness of brethren who may labor to shew us wherein they think we err; and we hope brother Trott, if he still thinks us wrong, will not be deterred from a full investigation of this, or of any other subject, through fear of giving offense, or of wounding our feelings, or mortifying our pride. Truth is precious; it is worth searching for; let us buy it, and sell it not.

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE.

TO MOST of our readers the above mentioned book is too well known to need any introduction or a description by us. While many of the Bibles have a Concordance appended, they are generally so condensed or abridged as to be of little or no use. Cruden's Complete Concordance, however, enables one to readily turn to any passage of Scripture of which they can call to mind two or three words, and in our opinion is the most complete and convenient as a reference book of any published. In addition, it contains many other aids in studying the Bible, as may be seen by reference to advertisement on last page. Remember, both the books there mentioned are CRUDEN'S COMPLETE.

grain of mustard seed, they could say to yon mountain, Be thou removed into the midst of the sea, and it would be done. He also said unto them, "O ye of little faith." Therefore it seems the apostles had little faith, not so large as a mustard seed. Then, how small is the poor sinner's faith. I know by experience that my faith, if I have any, is very small indeed. I believe that if it is the will of God that I should be a subject of grace, I will be saved through faith; for faith is the gift of God. But what evidence do I have that it is his will? The apostle says, that faith is the evidence of things not seen. Then where shall I go to find evidence? We are told, "We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren." That was about all the evidence I had when I came before the church to tell of the Savior's love. But O how my faith has been shaken since that time! I truly did love the brethren, and I love them now. But what have I witnessed since that time? I have seen Satan, as a roaring lion going about, seeking whom he may devour. I have witnessed brethren who profess to love one another with all their heart in the fellowship of the gospel, rent asunder, and the love they once professed turned into hatred, saying evil things about them, seeming to delight in enmity one towards another. Thus you see my evidence of passing from death unto life hangs on little faith. The apostle says that faith is the evidence of things not seen. Now, I have told you what I have seen, which makes me fear and tremble while I journey through life; and if it were not for the evidence not seen, I would about come to the conclusion that my profession as a believer in Jesus was only an imagination of the mind; but I find within my soul a desire to love holiness for holiness' sake; and though all men may forsake me, yet I trust the God in whom I have believed will keep me unto the end; for my faith in his atoning blood is not shaken, though earth be removed, and the mountains be cast into the midst of the sea. I believe and know that if it has pleased God to reveal Jesus unto me as my Savior and Redeemer, all the powers of hell and the assaults of men and devils cannot deprive me of my inheritance amongst the saints. This little faith, though it be evidence not seen, has kept me thus far, and I hope it will keep me until the end, when I hope mortality will be swallowed up of life, and I shall see Jesus as he is, and be satisfied.

Dear brethren editors of the SIGNS, I send you these thoughts for inspection, and if you think proper you can correct and publish the same. I have had quite poor health this winter. I have been suffering considerable from the effects of a severe cold, but feel now somewhat improved in health. May God direct all things after the counsel of his own will, and comfort the afflicted.

Affectionately yours,

JOSEPH BRODERS.

ALEXANDRIA, Va.

REMEMBER!

To write plainly your Post-office, County and State in every letter you write, and write very plainly your name, so that no one can mistake a letter in your name. It is astonishing how often the name of the writer and of the post-office are so obscure that they cannot be made out by the one addressed.

When you ask a minister for his photograph that probably from one hundred to five hundred others have made the same request of him within the year, do not let him be at the expense of complying with your request. None of his friends would feel warranted in asking him to give them half a dollar. He wants to oblige you, but very likely is not able to do so without injustice to himself and his family. When you make such a request do not hand him less than a best photograph will cost.

When you require the services of a minister of the gospel upon any extra occasion, take care that he does not have to bear the extra expenses required to serve you himself. Do not wait for him to mention it to you. Others whose services you require are expected to send you their bills; but he will give you no hint, although he may have to work hard and carefully to pay the money he has borrowed on your account.

MARRIAGES.

APRIL 24th, 1895, by Elder Silas H. Durand, at the house of the bride's sister, Mrs. S. Algernon Weart, near Stoutsburgh, N. J., Mr. B. K. Burke, of Philadelphia, Pa., and Miss Kate Fisher, of Stoutsburgh, N. J.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

GILBERT BEEBE'S SON—DEAR BROTHER:—Inclosed I forward you a clipping from the Girard Gazette concerning the death of dear old brother S. R. Boggess. He had read the SIGNS OF THE TIMES for more than forty years, and had acted as agent for that paper many years. He served the Concord Association as Clerk for seventeen years, and served the Otter Creek Church as Clerk from 1861 until March, 1895, the time of his death. The church has lost one of her most faithful members. He died as he lived, believing that salvation is alone of the Lord. This, he had always claimed, is what is taught both in christian experience and in the Bible. His experience, as written out by himself, was published in the SIGNS of August 15th, 1887. Thus has passed from earth one who, we have the evidence, loved the Lord and his dear people, the Old Baptists:

"Died—On Monday, March 18th, 1895, Samuel R. Boggess, at the residence of Jefferson Stone, in North Otter Township.

"The deceased was one of the oldest citizens in the county. He was born in Prince Edward Co., Va., March 31st, 1805, and at the time of his death was 89 years, 11 months and 18 days old. When a child eleven years old he with his parents moved to Christian Co., Ky., where he grew to manhood. He was united in marriage to Miss Mary R. Bradley, in Kentucky, Oct. 18th, 1832, by Elder John Bobbit. In the fall of 1833, with his wife, he moved to Morgan Co., Ill. In the fall of 1834 he moved to Macoupin Co., and in May, 1853, moved to Girard, when the town was first laid out by his brother, Barnabas Boggess, and was the first innkeeper of the town (now city) of Girard. His beloved wife was called home by death March 23d, 1881. Since that time he has made his home at the residence of Jefferson Stone, in North Otter, where his death occurred. On August 29th, 1850, he with his wife united with the Predestinarian Baptist Church known as the Head of Apple Creek Church, and were baptized by Elder John Record. He remained a bright light and a leader in the denomination until May, 1861, when he united by letter with the Head of Otter Creek Church, at Girard. During the years connected with the two churches he held the position of Clerk, and had often represented his church in foreign church meetings as messenger. In early days he furnished his house to hold meetings; and it was not until a few years ago that their church-house was built in the city of Girard, of which he was one of the principal builders. While a citizen of Girard, and in his younger days, he filled several positions of public trust for a number of years, among them Police Magistrate. He was a true christian from early manhood. His life was that of a christian man. Not having any children of his own, he was a father to the orphan, assisting his wife in the rearing of eight children from infancy. He was a grand, noble man, and resigned to the will of his Master. He was a deep thinker and a well-read man, beloved by all who knew him. The good Master had permitted him to remain in this sinful world many years, and he longed for the day when he would pass over the river and meet the loved ones gone before.

"The funeral services were held on Tuesday, March 19th, 1895, at the residence of Jefferson Stone, by Elder B. F. Querry, of Raymond, assisted by Elder Conley; after which the remains were laid to rest in the Girard cemetery, beside his wife, there to await the resurrection promised all true christians."

ALSO,

DIED—C. A. Jackson, at the house of E. Hall, Macoupin Co., Ill., Jan. 6th, 1895, after an illness of about three months.

Brother Jackson was born somewhere in the state of Virginia, but was raised in the state of Kentucky, where he received a hope when about twelve years old. He at that time joined the New School Baptists, and remained with them for many years; but being fully satisfied that the New School Baptists did not preach the gospel, and being fully convinced that the Old School Baptists did preach the gospel, he left his former church relations and joined the Otter Creek Church of Primitive Baptists, about the year 1872, where he remained a faithful and beloved member until his death. At the time of his death he was almost eighty years old.

His funeral was preached at the house of brother E. Hall, by Elders B. F. Querry and S. R. Williams. We then followed him to the Girard cemetery, where he was laid to rest to await the summons of his Master. The church has lost a faithful and beloved member. Brother Jackson left no family, his children having died in early life. His blood relations are scattered throughout the southern states.

E. HALL.

GIRARD, Ill., April 20, 1895.

B. L. BEEBE—DEAR BROTHER:—Please publish the death of sister Sarah Russell, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Eliza Welch, in St. Clair Co., Mo., of paralysis, April 10th, 1895, aged 77 years, 10 months and 20 days.

Sister Russell was the daughter of Elder Nathaniel Case, and was born in Wayne Co., Ind. She was married to William Carter on Dec. 28th, 1836, by whom she had two daughters, Mrs. A. B. Foutck, of Verdon, Neb., and Mrs. Nancy Stuart, of Rising Sun, Iowa. Jan. 16th, 1841, she was married to George Kesler, by whom she had two daughters, Mrs. Eliza Welch, above named, and Mrs. Sarah J. Smith, of Neosho, Newton Co., Mo.

Sister Russell joined the Old School Baptist Church in Wayne Co., Ind., in her youth, and lived a consistent member until death opened the gate to eternal joys. She came to Nebraska in the fall of 1866, and united by letter with the Little Flock Church, in Richardson Co., June 30th, 1877, of which church she remained a member to the end. Her four daughters and their families survive to mourn their loss, as well as the church and numerous friends. I have no record of her marriage to Mr. Russell. May the good Lord sustain her family in this bereavement.

She was laid away in the cemetery near Verdon, Neb., after funeral services at the house of brother and sister A. B. Foutck by her pastor.

PICTORIAL HISTORY

OF THE

UNITED STATES.

By James D. McCabe.

This work is no dry mass of details—no bombastic effort to inflame the national pride, but a vivid and brilliant narrative of the events of our history, from the discovery of the American Continent down to thepresent time. It gives a most interesting account of the Indians of North America, from the time of the coming of the white men. The voyages of Columbus and explorations and discoveries of the different nations of Europe are related with graphic power. Every step of our colonial history is traced with patient fidelity, and the sources of those noble and, we trust, enduring institutions, which have made our country free and great, are shown with remarkable clearness. Then follows a clear and succinct account of our great Struggle for Independence, and the establishment of the Federal Union—the events of our career from the close of the Revolution to the administration of Harrison.

The work is printed from plain, new type, on fine calendered paper, and comprised in one octavo volume of 960 pages. It is splendidly embellished with nearly 500 fine engravings, embracing battles and other historical scenes, portraits of distinguished men, views of our principal cities, &c., &c.

CORRESPONDENCE.

GHENT, Ky., April 2, 1895.

DEAR BROTHER CHICK:—I have read with deep interest your editorial in the SIGNS of the 27th of March, on the two witnesses; and while I am not in the slightest degree inclined to criticise unfavorably what you have written upon that profoundly interesting subject, yet I hope you will pardon me for offering to you some of my thoughts and meditations, which have been called up by reading that editorial. When I read it my thoughts were turned to the first three verses in the fourth chapter of the prophecies of Zechariah, which are in these words, "And the angel which talked with me came again, and waked me as a man is wakened out of his sleep, and said unto me, What seest thou? And I said, I have looked, and behold a candlestick all of gold, with a bowl upon the top of it, and his seven lamps thereon, and seven pipes to the seven lamps, which are upon the top thereof; and two olive trees by it, one upon the right side of the bowl, and the other upon the left side thereof." It occurs to me that these two olive trees represent the two witnesses, of which I may, if it is the Lord's will, hereafter speak.

Sometimes it perhaps is the case with you, when you enter the pulpit, that you are asleep on the bed of carnality, and in that condition are asleep and blind to the theme to which your thoughts are turning; but by the power of the Spirit you hear these words, "What seest thou?" Then, quick as thought, the answer is given you, "I have looked, and behold a candlestick all of gold." Then you see Jesus, made a little lower than the angels for the suffering of death. You see him in his humanity, as John saw him, "Behold the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world." You see him in that body which was prepared him. Then you are awake, and behold the beauties and glories that shine forth in his character, and proclaim to the dear saints what a dear Savior you and they have found. The prophet presents him in his humanity by the figure, "A candlestick all of gold." It will be remembered that gold is the only metal found in its pristine state perfectly pure. So our glorious Lord in his humanity was holy, harmless, undefiled. When he was offered to make atonement for sin the offering was perfect and in strict accord with the demands of the holy law of God, as prefigured by the lamb offered under the law in the morning and evening sacrifice. Those lambs were without spot. So was this great offering without spot or defilement from sin. That was emblemized by the purity of the gold of which that candlestick was made. When light shines on gold it reflects the purest light that ever met the human eye. So with the dear saints when they are awake on beds of carnality and are enabled by grace divine to behold their dear Redeemer as he trod the green plains of earth without the pollutions of a sin-defiled world, their visions are not marred, but they gaze with heavenly delight upon one who to them is the chiefest among ten thousand and altogether lovely. Then how beautiful and forcible the figure, "A candlestick all of gold." But it will be remembered that a candlestick does not give light or reflect light in the absence of a light which shines upon it. But the prophet said, "I have looked, and behold a candlestick all of gold, with a bowl on the top of it, and his seven lamps thereon, and seven pipes to the seven lamps which are on the top thereof." Evidently the seven pipes and seven lamps are for the purpose of giving light to all in the household. But none are in that household but those to whom spiritual and eternal life is given. When that life is given, and they are awakened from the stupor of carnality, they have the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ. It is in his face that light shone, and that light gave them joy and rejoicing; because in that light they behold Jesus as both God and man. Behold him by the figure of the candlestick all of gold in his humanity; and by the bowl on the top thereof, with his seven pipes and seven lamps, in his divinity. In him dwelleth all the fullness of the Godhead bodily. In the Scriptures number seven is treated as a perfect number. The prophet does not depart from that rule when in that great and wonderful figure he presents the seven pipes and seven lamps, which evidently presents all the great and wonderful attributes of our God, all of which are manifested to the saints in his glorious redemption and final glorification of his chosen people. The prophet uses the words, "And his seven lamps thereon." The personal pronoun his is used, which is declarative that the seven lamps prefigure that which peculiarly belongs to his great and wonderful character. He is the true light. The prophet Isaiah says, "Arise, shine, for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee." That light shines in and upon all the redeemed, and reflects the light of the Sun of righteousness, which arose with healing in his wings. Hence our Lord said, "Ye are the light of the world. A city that is set on a hill cannot be hid." It is light that makes manifest; and the light that emanates from those seven lamps is made manifest by the Holy Spirit in the great work of regeneration, and is sweetly enjoyed by the dear saints when in the exercise of precious and living faith. It is then they anxiously search the Old Testament Scriptures which present to them the offerings made under the law, which typified the great offering made on Calvary, by which the chosen people of God were redeemed from the curse of the law and made a peculiar [illegible]. And with equal anxiety [illegible] and the great truths recorded by the prophets, which declare the advent to earth of him who was both God and man; who as such was figured by the golden candlestick with a bowl on the top thereof. Those two taken together are a witness, in which they have great confidence. But when they turn to the New Testament and learn from its sacred pages that he came in strict accord with those prophecies, and shed his blood, as prefigured by the shedding of blood under that typical dispensation, they have another witness. The testimony of these two witnesses fills them with rapture, increases their faith, strengthens their hope, and perfects them in love to God and all the household of faith. These two witnesses are evidently typified by the two olive trees, one upon the right side of the bowl, and the other upon the left side thereof. The olive tree is an emblem of peace; and our Lord said, "Peace I leave with you; my peace I give unto you." When he suffered on Calvary he secured perpetual peace for all his redeemed; and when they in faith accept the testimony of these two witnesses they have peace and joy in the Holy Ghost.

But the prophet, in the twelfth verse of that chapter says, "And I answered again and said unto him, What be these two olive branches, which through the golden pipes empty the golden oil out of themselves?" Here the prophet changes the number from seven to two, thus evidently representing the golden candlestick, which was one, and the bowl upon the top thereof was the other. These two olive branches emptied the golden oil out of themselves. That golden oil would have been of little value if it had not been emptied out, for it prefigured the saving grace of our glorious Lord, manifested in all the children of promise by the Holy Spirit. When that grace is manifested in them they have eyes to see, ears to hear, and hearts to understand. They then, by the light given them by the seven lamps, are enabled to look upon him in whom dwells all the fullness of the Godhead bodily; that fullness that filleth all in all. When they behold all his divine perfections united and blended in perfect harmony in the work which was before him when he came to earth, their joy is perfect; for they see Jesus, who was made a little lower than the angels for the suffering of death, crowned with glory and honor. What more, dear follower of Jesus, can you or ought you to desire than to be enabled by precious faith to behold him who is your life, your righteousness, your wisdom, your sanctification, your redemption, your resurrection and your eternal glory? Then, when thus beholding him, your heart is filled to overflowing with love to God and love to all his saints, and you cry out, "If any man glory, let him glory in the Lord." Then those two witnesses, the Old and New Testaments, are declaring to you the wonderful works of God, in which his power (omnipotence) and wisdom (omniscience) are made manifest to your astonished vision in the works of creation. Read the first testimony of this witness, recorded for your learning, in the first chapter of Genesis. No other witness that ever testified on earth ever imparted so much wisdom as is found in that chapter. The apostle declares, "For by him were all things created that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers: all things were created by him and for him." And the psalmist says, "The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament sheweth his handiwork." It is thus these two witnesses, the Old and the New Testaments, come to us declaring the power and wisdom of our God made manifest in the works of creation. But it is in grace that these two witnesses bear to the saints the testimony that fills them with joy and rejoicing. The olive tree on the right side of the bowl, representing the Old Testament Scriptures, speaks to the saints in no mistakable way on the subject of their redemption. That witness says by the prophet Isaiah, "But he was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities, the chastisement of our peace was upon him, and with his stripes we are healed. All we like sheep have gone astray, we have turned every one to his own way, and the Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all." And the psalmist declares the accomplishment of that great work, when he in prophetic vision says, "Thou hast forgiven the iniquity of thy people; thou hast covered all their sins."

The witness prefigured by the olive tree on the left side of the bowl comes to us and declares the fulfillment of the prophecies and the things prefigured by the law. It declares our Lord's birth, his ministry, the wisdom with which all his teaching abounds, his wonderful miracles, his suffering and death, his burial and resurrection, and his triumphant ascension to that great white throne where he ever liveth to make intercession for us. And still more, that witness declares his second coming in this language, "And while they looked steadfastly towards heaven, as he went up, behold, two men stood by them, in white apparel, which also said, Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? This same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." That witness has left on record the ordinances to be observed in the house of the Lord, and they bear testimony to the faith of all the saints the glorious work of the Lord, which lies at the foundation of all their hopes of a blessed immortality beyond these scenes of sorrow through which they are journeying, toward their future and eternal home. They have, while they are thus journeying, these two witnesses, about whose testimony none have a right to doubt. The spiritually minded sons and daughters of the Lord Most High read with great delight the testimony which has been given, and which is recorded for their learning. That golden oil could never be found in the wide expanse of created or uncreated worlds; no where but in Jesus; for in him dwells all the fullness of the Godhead bodily. It sheds the light of divine grace into the hearts and spiritual minds of the dear saints in all lands and climes while in their earthly pilgrimage. Ah, dear brother, when you have stood before the children of God, proclaiming to them the unsearchable riches of Christ, that light has shone in your inmost being, and in rapture you have pointed to that unchanging light which lighteth every man that cometh into the spiritual world. These two witnesses are then given to you, and from their sacred testimony you are enabled to proclaim the unfading glories that shine forth in your and their Redeemer. It is then that you feed the church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood. But alas! how often are the dear saints made to mourn when they hear poor, polluted mortals attempting to pervert the testimony of these two witnesses. The angel said to John, "And I will give power unto my two witnesses, and they shall prophesy [teach] a thousand, two hundred and three score days, clothed in sackcloth. These are the two olive trees and the two candlesticks standing before the God of the earth." They prophesied in sackcloth, which means in Scripture a cloth or garment worn in mourning, distress or mortification. It is written, "Mordecai rent his clothes and put on sackcloth with ashes, and went out into the midst of the city, and cried with a loud and bitter cry."—Esther iv. 1. Those two witnesses were to prophesy a thousand, two hundred and three score days in sackcloth, in garments of mourning. When poor, sin-polluted man perverts the teachings of those two witnesses, the Old and New Testaments, and teaches for doctrine the commandments of men, all who behold with joy and by the eye of faith the glorious light of Zion, are made to mourn. I repeat that the number seven is a perfect number in Scripture; and evidently the one thousand, two hundred and three score days represent a perfect period of time; evidently that period of which the angel spoke, "And sware by him that liveth forever and ever, that there shall be time no longer."—Rev. x. 6. Then, dear saints, you in sorrow may know the great and glorious truth of the gospel will be perverted by man upon the earth till that period of time will have fully come, when time will be no longer. Then, O how earnestly should all the dear saints seek to know the truth as it is in Jesus, and not be led about by every wind of doctrine.

But I omitted saying that one thousand, two hundred and three score days, or twelve hundred and sixty days, in which the two witnesses would prophesy in sackcloth, if divided by seven would give one hundred and eighty, without a remainder. Therefore it presents a perfect period of time; but as to that period being determined by our mode of calculating time, I have very great doubts; but as to its reaching to the end of time I have no doubt; for while unregenerate men remain on the earth they will be claiming that they have the power to help the God of the vast universe to do his work in the regeneration of poor, helpless sinners, who are dead in trespasses and sins. Because of their ignorance and wickedness, the two witnesses are prophesying in sackcloth. When you hear men proclaiming that they in their ministry are instrumental in the salvation of sinners from the awful curse of the law, and thus making themselves equal with God, you are made to mourn, because you see that the testimony of those two witnesses is shrouded in sackcloth. In their testimony it is declared, "I am God, and beside me there is no Savior."

You will please pardon me for having extended this letter to so great a length. My only apology is, to me the subject on which I have so feebly written is deeply and profoundly interesting. This may be the last time I will worry you with my poor, feeble thoughts, as I daily realize that I am approaching closely the end of my appointed time on earth. Dispose of this as you may deem best, and pray for me, that my departure may be in peace and joy; and believe me affectionately yours,

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES—DEAR BRETHREN IN CHRIST:—The following letter from sister Morse was sent to me for the church of Gilboa, of which she is a member. It came to me in much sweetness, as I had been in a terrible state of mind the fore part of the day. I found the proverb true, "A word fitly spoken is like apples of gold in pictures of silver." And it was more cheering as coming from a mother in Israel, whose ornament is the hidden man of the heart, and she has often washed the saints' feet spiritually.

Yours in hope,

D. S. ELLIOTT.

BIG INDIAN, N. Y., Jan. 10, 1895.

DEAR BROTHER DAVID S. ELLIOTT:—I am in recept of your most welcome letter, and in trying to reply I do not know of anything more appropriate at this time than to tell you all, as a church, some of what I trust are the Lord's dealings with me. The first recollection I have of being a sinner was at the age of seventeen years. At that time my father died, and my mother's health being poor she seemed to lean on me for support. I felt to be such a sinner that I thought, How can I be any comfort or support to her? I thought it might make my case better by being obedient to her. Being poor, we had to go at something to keep the family together. Soon after the reformation commenced in the Lexington Old School Baptist Association, I thought I must do something to better my condition, in order to be saved. I will pass over many things that might be tedious to you, and would make a long letter. My mother was exercised in mind over the loss of my father, and wished me to read to her from the Bible, which was a great pleasure to me, for I did wish to read it on my own account; but in reading it for her I thought she would not think I cared to do so, except for her sake. If I read or felt sad, I thought people would think it was on account of the grief for my father; so I made a cloak of that to hide my real grief. I think it was three years I lived in this way. I gave up all for lost, and thought I would not live long. I felt I could not be saved by my own works. I gave up going into young company, and did not wish to be seen anywhere but at meeting. Sometimes the trouble would leave my mind and I would not feel concerned about myself; but it would always come back with more force to my mind that I must be lost. Many of my young associates united with the Old School Baptists at that time. Three of Elder James Mead's daughters were to be baptized in one day. I felt that I must leave my work, and go home. I felt so sad that I could not work, but I did not like to tell what the trouble was. I spent three very sad and lonely days. A short time afterward eight were baptized in one day. In some way my burden left me, and I was feeling very happy. The day my mind was set at liberty, it seemed like night until in the afternoon. I gave up work, for I could do no more. This passage came to my mind, "The promise is to you; and to make it steadfast God has confirmed it by an oath, by two immutable things, in which it is impossible for God to lie." The joy I felt at that time it is impossible to tell. I think this was in the fore part of the week. I could hardly wait until church meeting day. I wished to be with the church.

"There my best friends, my kindred, dwell,
There God my Savior reigns."

I was baptized on the following Sunday, and my brother and my four sisters united with the church soon after. My cup seemed full and running over. I am now in my eighty-sixth year. I have seen many dark hours. I can say now, Come, welcome death, I am ready and willing to go. I have been a member of the Old School Baptist Church for sixty-five years. The Lord has kept me thus far, and I trust he will keep me to the end. A few more days of sorrow here and I shall be here no more. "Whether many or few, all my days are due." To the church at Gilboa, I bid you adieu. I wish you to remember me, and not cross off my name. There is scarcely a night but I think of you. I do not expect to see any of you again, unless you call here to see me. My health would not admit of it. So, dear friends, farewell. When any of you wish to see me, sit down and write to me. It would be like a visit to me. I have omitted many things in my experience. Many passages of Scripture time after time come to my mind to assure me of the goodness of the Lord to me.

From your sister, I trust, in the Lord,

MRS. ALBA C. MORSE.

WHITE HOUSE, N. J., March 5, 1895.

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES:—I take your valuable paper, and it contains good news to poor me. I believe that all Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works. There are none who understand the Scriptures except those who have been taught of God, and been brought to see how sinful sin is, and themselves as lost and depraved creatures before God. I believe God drove this man out of the garden of Eden, and placed there cherubim, and a flaming sword which turned every way, to keep the way of the tree of life. I believe that the whole family of Adam became utterly depraved through his fall; for we are the sons of Adam. I believe that God foreknew all things before time was spoken into existence; for he declared the end from the beginning, saying, "My counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure," in heaven, and among all the inhabitants of the earth; and none can stay his almighty hand. I believe he has a people that he chose in Christ before the foundation of the world, that they should be holy and without blame before him in love; that he formed them for himself, and that they shall show forth his praise. I believe that the whole family of man became dead in sin. I believe that God will quicken whom he will; for he declares that he will have compassion on whom he will have compassion, and whom he will he hardeneth. "Hath not the potter power over the clay [that is what the sons of Adam are composed of], of the same lump to make one vessel to honor and another unto dishonor?" What if he is willing to make his power known upon the vessels of wrath fitted to destruction? I believe the heart of man is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked. Who can know it? I believe God will "bring the blind by a way they knew not; I will lead them in paths they have not known; I will make darkness light before them, and crooked things straight. These things will I do unto them, and not forsake them." "Be of good courage." "Fear thou not; for I am with thee. Be not dismayed; for I am thy God. I will strengthen thee; yea, I will help thee; yea, I will uphold thee with the right hand of my righteousness." God is in the midst of his people, he will help them, and that right early. I believe he will give his people one heart, and put a new spirit within them. He will take away the stony heart out of their flesh, and will give them a heart of flesh, that they may walk in his statutes, and keep his ordinances, and do them. "They shall be my people, and I will be their God." "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." This old sinner is in fear that these promises are not for him. They are only for the redeemed of the Lord. He knows all that fear and love him, and have no confidence in the flesh. But he tells me to be still, and know that he is God, and beside him there is no Savior. I have no where else to go but unto him that loved us, and gave himself for us. If I am one of his, then am I saved; but if not, I am lost, and that eternally. I believe that man in his best estate is nothing but vanity. O vain man that I am! who shall deliver me from this body of death? There is none righteous, no, not one; there is none that understandeth; there is none that seeketh after God; they go astray as soon as they are born, speaking lies. Their poison is like the poison of a serpent. It is written of them, that the thoughts of their heart are evil, and that continually; they cannot do good; they cannot cease from sin; they cannot repent. Man is not only a depraved and helpless creature, as a fallen sinner, but he is also a condemned criminal, having sinned and come short of the glory of God. Thus the polluted sinner goes laden with guilt and heavy woes down to the regions of the dead, with endless curses on his head, dead in sin, enmity against God, in love with sin, raging and blaspheming. Here we will leave the dead sinner, in this miserable state and condition. Now, it is evident that man must be born again or he cannot see the kingdom of God. "It is the Spirit that quickeneth, the flesh profiteth nothing." This truth is scoffed at by the Arminian tribes, but it will stand the test of time, for God has spoken it. There is not one jot or tittle of his word that will fail till all is fulfilled. We find the Arminian's absurdities concerning the agency of the creature in regeneration put to silence by the word of God; for "The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh and whither it goeth; so is every one that is born of the Spirit." This is a hard doctrine; who can hear it? I live in a barren land; there is no gospel preaching here. The "do and live" people turn the word of God upside down, and read it to suit themselves. They preach that it is of him that willeth, and of him that runneth; that God will not show mercy unless men run right into their idol worship, which is the worst kind of infidelity. If the Bible is true, they will go down like a millstone, to rise no more forever. "We have not so learned Christ." "Let God be true, and every man a liar." They worship, they know not what. They put on the form of godliness, but deny the power thereof. I am a member of the visible church, but am not worthy to be numbered among them; for

"I am so vile, so prone to sin,
I fear that I'm not born again."

But,

"Why, mourning soul, why flow these tears?
Why thus indulge these doubts and fears?
Look to the Savior on the tree,
Who bore the load of guilt for thee.
There's none can mourn while dead in sin;
Thine are the marks of life within."

Dear brethren editors, do with this as you think best, but do not crowd out better matter, and all will be right with this sinner saved by grace, if saved at all.

In love to all the brethren in the Lord,

OLIVER KUGLER.

WILLIAMSTON, N. C., May 1, 1895.

ELDER F. A. CHICK—MY DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST:—I take my pen in hand to just drop you a few lines in expression of the pleasure I had in perusing your last editorial, in answer to the six questions proposed to you. I was glad to hear it read, and to read it myself. I trust it may have its influence for good. We are living in trying times. The enemy of truth is on the alert, and the cold, surging waves are to be seen and felt round about Zion; yet, blessed be the name of the Lord, he is in the midst of her, and she cannot be moved. The waves and billows cannot destroy her. She is to be a qu[illegible] habitation, wherein dwelleth rig[illegible]teousness. God will help her, and that right early. It is a great thi[illegible]g to trust in the living Lord; an[illegible] in nothing else is safety to be fo[illegible]d. He is the Rock of ages. I a[illegible] a worm, but on this Rock do [illegible]e to rest. To it do I desire to [illegible], and nowhere else.

[illegible]y dear brother, you are called to occupy a responsible station as a minister of Christ and an editor. May great grace and wisdom be given you. May you be made wise as a serpent and harmless as a dove. May you hurt neither the wine nor the oil, but be enabled to pour oil on the troubled waters. We know that the Lord has promised good concerning Zion; and he will restore her waste places, and cause her sons and daughters to rejoice. Her watchmen shall see eye to eye, and speak the same things, all in glorious harmony crying aloud, speaking the one message of salvation.

When God's dear people are found sitting at the feet of Jesus, learning of him, then love and unity are sure to abound. When the love of Christ is realized, then peace and good will are felt. Then striving about words to no profit will cease. Then each one will desire to be taught of Jesus; and like little children, they will leave all with the divine Teacher, and not seek to look into things too deep for them. Deep, deep are the mysteries of God. They cannot be fathomed by men nor angels; and no spiritual knowledge can be attained to only by revelation through the power of the Holy Spirit.

When the dear people of God are united in the truth and in love, the love of Jesus flowing from heart to heart; I say, when this is experienced in the household of faith the exclamation will go forth, "Behold how these love one another." Then to the world and antichrist they are terrible as an army with banners. May that blessed day again come. May the dear Lord make you, my dear brother, a peacemaker in harmony with the cause of truth. May you not fear the reproaches of men, but ever cling to the cross of Jesus, and his banner will be over you, to shield you from all harm; and when your work is done you will have a full discharge, and be received to dwell with your dear Master forever, and be like him, and that will be enough.

My dear brother, many trials and afflictions await us all. I dwell upon the borders of the eternal land. I feel weary. My spirit does thirst and pant for that which this world cannot give. I trust it is Jesus for whom I pant and sigh. I thirst for that refreshing which can alone come from him. His precious love can invigorate our cold hearts. His love shed abroad in our hearts enables us to endure trials and temptations, and to press forward. Pray for me, I am so weak and helpless.

As ever, your sister,

M. M. HASSELL.

REMARKS.—How good and excellent are such letters as the above! How cheering, like good news to all the pilgrims to that better country! We do feel glad that such a one as our aged sister Hassell can approve what we have written. It must be of the Lord. To him be all the glory. How unworthy we are, and yet how needy of such prayer for us as the above letter contains. The language of the heart is better than the language of the head. This dear aged sister has spoken from the heart. May her desire and prayer be fulfilled. May great grace be hers in all her remaining years. O that the great Peacemaker might be with us all, as he has ever been with this dear sister. If righteousness shall prevail, then the work of righteousness shall be peace and quietness and assurance forever.—C.

WOODBURN, Va., April 2, 1895.

DEAR ELDER BEEBE:—I hope you will not be too busy to read a few lines from me; not that I can, nor would if I could, talk to you upon any special portion of Scripture, for I know that God has revealed to you that which he has not to me. I only want to talk to you as we used to talk when we met; and I hope, if it is God's will, that we may again during our mortal lives. You know that last Saturday and Sunday was a time when Elder White gives his especial attention to our little flock at Hughesville; and while we had some sad things to mar our pleasure, I feel to say that God liberally blessed us. As I sat feasting on the good things which I heard I could but marvel and say, What manner of man is this that speaketh? Sure-

"LET your women keep silence in the churches."

Sister Rebecca Harris, of Hudsonville, Miss., has requested some thoughts upon the above Scripture. Perhaps in attempting a brief reply to this request it will be best to quote the words in connection with the text, and also from other places in the New Testament which seem to bear upon this subject.

"Let your women keep silence in the churches: for it is not permitted unto them to speak; but they are commanded to be under obedience, as also saith the law. And if they will learn anything, let them ask their husbands at home: for it is a shame for women to speak in the church."—1 Cor. xiv. 34, 35. No doubt the law referred to above is that given in Genesis iii. 16, where the Lord declared that the husband should rule over the wife. But every woman praying or prophesying with her head uncovered dishonoreth her head.—1 Cor. xi. 6. "Judge in yourselves: is it comely that a woman pray unto God uncovered?"—1 Cor. xi. 13. "Let the woman learn in silence with all subjection. But I suffer not a woman to teach, nor to usurp authority over the man, but to be in silence."—1 Tim. ii. 11, 12. Aquilla and his wife Priscilla expounded to Apollos the way of God more perfectly.—Acts xviii. 26.

These are all the New Testament Scriptures that we have been able to find bearing directly upon the subject named above. Perhaps the last quotation, relating to Aquilla and Priscilla, does not bear especially upon this subject of public speaking or teaching, for they seem to have expounded the word of God privately to Apollos. At least it shows this, that women were, sometimes at least, capable of imparting instruction as well as men; and still farther, it shows that women had a place of usefulness in the church as well as men.

The Scriptures to which we have referred above would on the face of them perhaps seem somewhat contradictory; but when closely examined we are sure this seeming contradiction will disappear. The Scripture recorded in 1 Corinthians xiv. 34, 35, and that recorded in 1 Timothy ii. 11, 12, present in substance the same thoughts; and these two portions of Scripture taken together would seem to contradict what is implied in the language recorded in 1 Corinthians xi. 6, 13, and also that recorded in Acts xviii. 26; but really there is no contradiction. With the exception of the language in Acts xviii. 26, all the above references and quotations are the language of the same apostle Paul. Even though they had been written by different apostles, still the Holy Ghost could not have contradicted himself by giving to the church at Corinth and to Timothy contradictory instructions.

The language in 1 Corinthians xi. 6, 13, certainly does imply that women did in some way and sometimes speak in the churches; and Paul does not condemn that certain way of speaking, whatever it was, but recognizes it, and tacitly approves of it by giving directions as to the deportment of women when they pray or prophesy in the church. This he said to the same church and in the same letter in which farther on he says, "Let your women keep silence in the churches." We would suggest, then, that whatever the text suggested by our sister may mean, it does not forbid the kind of praying and speaking regulated by Paul in the eleventh chapter. We would still farther suggest that if the Scripture to which our sister refers, 1 Corinthians xiv. 34, 35, and 1 Timothy ii. 11, 12, means that under no circumstances are women entitled to speak in the meetings of church, then our practice in receiving members is all wrong; for all churches require a narration publicly of christian experience from the women as well as from the men. It may be asked if this kind of speaking in the church is lawful once in a woman, why may it not be lawful any number of times? Experience and growth in the truth do not stop when one has become a member. Why should not new exercises and new revelations of truth be spoken of in the church as well as at the time of their reception to membership? It seems to us that this kind of speaking and praying by women is in these Scriptures approved by the apostle; only he says let the head be covered, that is, let these things be done modestly, in subjection, and not as though designing to usurp authority. If this be not the apostle's meaning, and women are not to be heard from at all, would not they be cut off from writing for our papers also? What are our papers but a sort of big conference room? Wherein is the real difference between speaking by the tongue or by the pen?

It seems to us that the key to the apostle's meaning in saying, "Let your women keep silence in the churches," as in 1 Corinthians xiv. 34, 35, and in 1 Timothy ii. 11, 12, is found in the words, "They are commanded to be under obedience;" and in the language in Timothy they are not "to usurp authority over the man." They may pray or prophesy, but it must not be as one claiming superior authority or a right to rule. It seems to us that the church is like a family. The children, even the smallest, have a right to speak in any family conversation upon any theme; but the children nevertheless must speak in their place of subjection to their parents, and not with authority. Is not this at least something like what the apostle teaches in the Scriptures which we have been considering? The meaning is that all things must be done decently and in order. If the woman speaks or prays it must be in the place of subjection, and not the place of authority or of bearing rule. In this relation we understand the apostle to mean that it is her right to pray or prophesy in the churches.

As to why the woman's head must be covered at such times, we have understood the apostle to simply refer to what appeared seemly among men. Christians have no right to so disregard the ordinary customs of life as to shock those among whom they dwell. To do so would be to needlessly wound the cause that they love. It is not now seemly for men to speak with the head covered, nor for woman to speak with her head uncovered. That God may be glorified and his cause exalted should be our aim at all times and in all that we do.

C.

INVITATIONS.

A BROTHER desires of us an explanation of what we have said on a former occasion in regard to "gospel invitations." He says he does not know how to understand us, in saying that we have searched in vain to find what men call invitations in the gospel, addressed to either saints or sinners. He refers us to our Lord's words, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden," &c., with a number of others of similar import, which he has always regarded as invitations, addressed to the living children of God.

In reply we assure our brother that we also regard these Scriptures as addressed exclusively to the children of God, and applicable to no other characters, but we do not understand them as invitations.

1st. Because they are no where in Scripture called invitations.

2d. Because all invitations are addressed to the will of the person or persons invited, and they are at perfect liberty to accept or not, just as they choose, without giving any just reason of offense to him from whom the invitation comes. For example, in the text referred to, Jesus calls the weary and heavy laden to come to him and find rest. Jesus is the King of Zion; and where the word of a king is, there is authority; but there is no authority expressed nor implied in a mere invitation. When Jesus says, "Come," there is authority expressed, and the weary and heavy laden are commanded, not invited. If they come not, they disobey; whereas it would not be disobedience to decline an invitation. If our brother should say to his child, or to his servants, "Come to me," he would call, and they would not be at liberty to disobey; but if he should say to his neighbor, "I would be happy to receive a visit from you," both would understand this last address to be a mere invitation, left wholly to the volition of the neighbor, to do as he pleases about accepting.

The question is, Does the King of saints address his subjects in any case, leaving them at perfect liberty to do as they please in regard to what he tells them to do? If he does, we again confess our ignorance as to where such invitations are to be found. When he said to Lazarus, "Come forth," did he call him, or only invite him? The difference is, there is power and authority expressed in calling, but there is none in an invitation. Now, we appeal to our brother, was there any more power or authority expressed or implied in the words, "Come forth!" as addressed to the dead Lazarus, than in the words, "Come unto me," addressed to quickened, weary and heavy laden souls? If the latter was an invitation, then the promises connected with it were yea and nay, or conditional promises. As though he had said, I leave it to you to do as you please; if you choose to come, I will give you rest; and I farther invite you to take my yoke, and learn of me, &c.; and if you will do as I invite you to do, I will, in consideration thereof, give you rest; but if you will not accept of my invitation, why then my promises are nay promises; that is, you shall not find rest to your souls, and I will give you no rest. We will be apt to find yea and nay promises as often as we find invitations in the gospel; but we can find neither.

REVELATION XVI. 13.

"AND I saw three unclean spirits like frogs come out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet."

Had brother Morris required of us a clear, full and satisfactory explanation of this text, we should have declined the undertaking, and confessed our consciousness of incompetency; but as he has only requested our views, such as they are we will not withhold them. Brethren who have clearer light on the subject may feel disposed to favor us with a more lucid exposition. What we shall write is only designed as an expression of our view, or as some reflections on a subject which we do not clearly understand.

To us it has seemed that the dragon in this text is the same that is described in chapter xii., which stood before the woman, to destroy the child as soon as it should be born, and whose tail drew the third part of the stars and cast them to the earth; which also, with his angels, fought with Michael and his angels, but did not prevail, but was cast out of heaven, and his angels with him; and which, when he saw that he was cast into the earth, persecuted the woman, and cast water out of his mouth, as a flood, after the woman, that he might cause her to be carried away; and failing in this enterprise, was wroth with the woman, and went to make war with the remnant of her seed, which keep the commandments of God, and have the testimony of Jesus Christ. This dragon was red, which is generally understood to denote his cruelty in persecuting and slaying the saints of God. It is generally understood that this great red dragon signified the Pagan antichrist, or the great church and state embodiment of power to persecute the church of God, embracing the religion of the Pagans, enforced by the imperial power of the Roman government. The beast is understood to mean the papal antichrist, the number of whose heads and horns and crowns corresponds with those of the dragon, and unto which the dragon gave his seat, which was Rome, and his power and great authority, which embraced all the power of the Roman empire. The false prophet mentioned in our text is by general consent understood to mean Mahomet. In these three prominent characters we have presented the most formidable organizations of secular and ecclesiastical power that have ever been arrayed against the church of our Lord Jesus Christ, and these may represent all minor organizations as growing out of them, that the saints have already or may hereafter have to encounter.

The next things to be considered are the three unclean spirits like frogs, which in the next verse we are informed are the spirits of devils; but coming out of the mouth of these three grand embodiments of religious opposition to the cause of Christ, they must be the spirits of religious devils. The number three corresponds with the number of mouths out of which they came; not, however, to signify that the dragon, the beast and the prophet each produced one unclean spirit like a frog, and in the aggregate the number three; for the same three spirits came out of the mouth of each of these embodiments of antichristian church and state establishments. The same unclean spirits which came from the mouth of the dragon came also from the mouth of his successor, the beast, and out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet. As these three unclean spirits were to go forth unto the kings of the earth, it is very natural to suppose that they were missionary spirits; and as they were to act in concert in their work it is equally clear that they belong to the union of effort class of missionists. And as a prominent part of their business was to work miracles, we are compelled to infer that they were deceitful, deceiving and lying spirits; and as their business was with the kings of the earth, or constituted governments of the nations, it is evident enough that the grand object of their negotiations was to effect a permanent connection of church and state amalgamation in every nation under heaven, so far as it could be brought about by their signs and lying wonders. And as they were to gather all the kings of the earth and of the whole world to the battle of that great day of God Almighty, it is not difficult to perceive that the whole consolidated power of earth and hell in politico eccliastic union is to be marshalled against the cause of truth and holiness, and a final demonstration made of what this abominable confederacy, led on by the unclean spirits of wonder-working devils, can effect. The peculiar description of these spirits must not be overlooked.

First. They are unclean spirits; by which we cannot infer that there are clean or pure spirits of devils; but in the description of those which our Lord cast out, in the days of his incarnation, some were said to be dumb devils, and others unclean devils, and one kind we recollect went out only by fasting or being starved out. The spirits in our text described cannot be dumb, or they would not answer for missionaries to the kings of the earth; and they are not the kind to be starved out, as, like the frogs, they can live in the water or in the air, on the grass or in the mud. But as their mission is to corrupt the governments of the earth through the kings or other agents of human governments, they are distinguished as unclean spirits.

Second. They are spirits, and, as we have hinted, missionary spirits. Devils are called spirits also; but these are spirits of devils, from which we not only infer that they emanated from hell, but that they embody all the peculiar enmity, malice, fraud, hypocrisy, deceit, power and falsehood of devils, and that they fitly represent all the powers of darkness.

Third. They were like frogs. It is probable that brother Morris particularly desired our views on this particular point.

The frog is certainly not the most beautiful or perfect specimen of the animal creation, nor in loquacity or locomotion do they excel; but still the frog possesses traits peculiar to its kind, and on account of which it was undoubtedly used as a figure in this case. If we are correct in supposing that these were missionary spirits, we may learn something of the suitableness of our figure by demonstrations which were made in Egypt about 3,340 years ago, when God sent them as a plague into that land, and when the magicians also produced them by their enchantments. Observe, first, they were sent as a plague to scourge a guilty land. Second, they could be produced and operated on by the enchantment of the magicians. Third, they manifested as little diffidence in obtruding upon the premises of Pharaoh and his servants, into his palace, house, kneeding trough and oven, as our modern missionists do in penetrating our Congress Halls, State Legislatures, private cabinets, executive chambers, and all other places where loaves and fishes may be found.

As an amphibious animal, capable of living in either of the two elements, water or air, the frog may well illustrate those unclean spirits which are equally adapted to the ecclesiastical or secular departments, easily leaping from one to the other as occasion may serve. But the frog, whether regarded as a creature of the land or of the water, as beast or fish, is unclean to Israel; as beast, they neither divide the hoof nor chew the cud; and as fish they have neither fins nor scales, so there is no way they can be regarded as clean; hence the three unclean spirits are in this respect like frogs; it is sin for the Lord's Israel to eat of them.

Frogs are very fond of lying about our springs of water, and often when we approach to drink they will leap in[illegible]ance to the bottom and so stir u[illegible] mud from the bottom as to con[illegible]l themselves from sight by the dirt with which they roil the water; in this respect they are not unlike those filthy shepherds who were charged with fouling the waters with their feet, so as to prevent the Lord's flock from drinking. In how many places where in time past the sheep and lambs of our Lord's flock have fed in green pastures by the still waters, has the modern missionary spirit leaped in and so stirred up mire and dirt that the flock has been deprived of its wonted privileges.

But the frogs are peculiar in another respect which we will name; the incessant, unintelligible jargon with which they rend the air with their croaking and noise. However intelligible their senseless notes may be to themselves, the sounds to intelligent ears are susceptible of as many constructions as the language of the workmen engaged in building the tower of Babel. This is equally true of the mission spirit of devils to whom we have applied the figure; their preaching some have construed to be grace, others works, but most who hear them are compelled to understand that they want money, power and dominion over the consciences of men.

ly this is not the intrepid "Col. White" whom you once knew, now so tender, so trusting, so devoted to his God, so willing to leave all things in his hands, realizing his wisdom and power, hoping, trusting in his love, so firm in the faith. I said in my heart, "Glory to God for his goodness!" for I realized that I was in the presence of one of the shepherds, as of old. "Peter, lovest thou me?" "Feed my sheep." Truly our little flock was fed on sweet, soul-comforting promises. God in his mercy and in his own due time summoned from the elect here Elders Leachman and Furr, and the spirit of the poor, sorrowing ones felt lost and undone, wondering who would comfort them and be with them in the many trials that they felt sure would come; and their souls mourned in darkness. God in his goodness raised up brother White, and put him over his people, and filled his mouth with words which he well knew would comfort his people. Thanks to his holy name.

Elder Beebe, inclosed you will find a letter from a dear old brother whom I had never heard of; yet he wrote this letter to me. It did me so much good that I had it read before the church last Saturday at Hughesville. Elder White expressed a wish that it be printed in the SIGNS. Please do with it as you feel directed to do. Should you publish it, and the dear brother comes to know it, I hope he will not think hard of me. I only hope that some others of our flock may be benefited by it as I have.

Now, my dear brother, I am drawing near the end of my letter, and feel to say that it would do me much good to meet you and hear you contend for the truth, that blessed truth which buildeth a hope upon a foundation that is solid as a rock. May God be with you and your household through all life's journey, making you to feel that you can rest upon him in all things, is the hope of your humble brother,

J. L. BALL.

DUNKIRK, Ind., March 12, 1895.

MR. J. L. BALL:—Well, will you allow me to call you brother Ball? The Lord leads his people in ways that they have not known, yea, he leads them about, and instructs them, and keeps them as the apple of his eye; and this is the testimony that he deals with them as with sons. If he allows us to go on in crooked paths it is sure that we are not taught of God; for his children are all taught of the Lord, and great is the peace of his children; for it shall be so, saith the Lord. I do feel incompetent to speak or write on this so much controverted subject; yet it is so much the more necessary to cry aloud, and spare not, and cause the house of Israel to know her sins, and Jacob his transgressions. As you have seen in your experience, even among the so-called Baptists many are very zealous in teaching what God has not spoken; and they have a host on their side, and have the praise of men for their reward; but every true disciple of Christ has his name cast out as evil to-day, for they dare not swear by the sin of Samaria, saying, "Thy god, O Dan, liveth," and "The manner of Beersheba liveth." But when the Lord scatters his children among their enemies, for their good, how they hate their own garments that are spotted with the flesh; yea, they abhor themselves, and repent even in dust and ashes before God. Like Lot of old, God bids them to flee for their lives, yea, to the mountains; for the Lord hath said, "Come out of her [Babylon, or place of confusion], my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues." It is a consolation to the child of God to know that God rules in the armies of heaven and among the inhabitants of the earth, and none can stay his hand. He also setteth up over them whomsoever he will, even the basest of men. This we can see to-day in our own land. Yea, in our own house a man's enemies shall be those of his own house. Five shall be divided, two against three; the father against the son, and the son against the father; the mother against the daughter, and the daughter against the mother; the daughter-in-law against the mother-in-law; and the mother-in-law against the daughter-in-law. Yet I could say, I could have no greater joy than to know that my children are walking in the truth. But the coming of the Lord is even at our doors. Read the twenty-fourth chapter of Matthew, commencing at the twenty-seventh verse. It is said that the sun and moon were darkened on May 20th, 1780. Well do I remember the falling of the stars in November, 1833. And surely the spiritual heavens have been shaken all these years. "And then," Christ the Lord said, "shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven." Please read. "For this generation shall not pass till all these things be fulfilled. Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away." And to this also agreeth many other portions of holy writ, which should convince us of its truth to-day, since antichrist has set her throne on high, compelling the honor of all the world for their Sunday worship, and would deceive the very elect, if it were possible. So let us wait on the Lord, for he will do all his pleasure, in this dark and cloudy day. Feeling to be one of the least of all the flock, and looking to God for light, I close.

S. MOORE.

SAPP, Mo., March 29, 1895.

ELDERS JENKINS AND CHICK—DEAR BRETHREN:—There are so many great truths recorded in the Scriptures that I see a beauty and glory in, but am unable to get them properly collected in my mind to give expression to them, that I put them on the list of things inexpressible and full of glory. Such has been the case with me for a number of years on the subject of the "two witnesses." I was a reader of the "Messenger of Peace" for several years, and many brethren from time to time were speculating with their best endeavors to locate the (my) two witnesses numerically. I looked and read with deep interest and prayerful heart for some light from some of God's humble servants; but none was forthcoming, and I was left in darkness and ignorance upon that subject, until I would turn my eyes away whenever I would see an article headed "two witnesses," as some other man's vague speculation. At length I thought I had the root of the subject symbolically, and saw great beauty in it, but never was able to collect my thoughts and get the subject in bodily shape. When the SIGNS came into my room this evening I laid it aside, and thought my wife might read it at her leisure. At a late hour I picked it up and opened to the editorial, and saw the same old, monotinous subject, "The two witnesses." I came to nearly laying it down, but something impressed me to read it. What could it have been? I, with trembling fear to venture to say. I read those humble suggestions, written in fearfulness, and was reminded of Paul's going first among the Corinthians in fear and trembling. I had not read far until all my mind-travail of the past began to collect. The g[illegible]of the Lord's presence lighted [illegible]y soul. I could see the perfect[illegible] of God's work in the two witnesses, the perfections of Diety in the midst of the golden candlesticks, seven in all, which also denote perfection; and these witnesses standing as "the two olive trees," representing beauty, perfection and sweetness, opened up to me a subject upon which I will not speak further; that these witnesses of God have power given them to testify of him in word and deed, sowing the seed in the morning, and not withholding their hand in the evening; for we know not which will prosper, this or that, or whether both alike. If we strictly testify of God, and observe the rule given us by him, we will have no time for idolatry in any form. Every moment taken up or spent in any idol system should rather be spent in doing what God requires, which would be testifying of God.

Yours in tribulation,

IRA TURNER.

BRUNSWICK, Maine, March 31, 1895.

EDITORS OF THE SIGNS—DEAR BRETHREN:—It has been in my mind for some time to write to the household of faith and express my satisfaction with what I find in the columns of the SIGNS. Its pages are full of the truth in its purity, and I am fed and strengthened as I read each communication. The editorials republished have been full of fat things. It seems to me that the churches here in Maine are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, and the same truth is declared boldly and with rejoicing. All the power, wisdom and glory belong to our God. "He is the Rock, his work is perfect." When my mind has been led to contemplate the work of redemption, how perfect it is, there has been a song to rise up in my heart like this, "Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty, which was, and is, and is to come." Jesus is the head over all things to the church, which is his body, the fullness of him that filleth all in all. It is not recorded in the Scriptures that Jesus made a way possible whereby we could be saved if we would accept of offers of mercy; but it is plainly declared that Jesus finished the work the Father gave him to do. "This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners." There is a people chosen in Christ before the foundation of the world, redeemed by the precious blood of Jesus, saved in the Lord with an everlasting salvation, holy and without blame before God in love. No power can reach them to harm them. "Because I live, ye shall live also." Those who have had Jesus revealed unto them cannot find any earthly music so sweet and joyful as the song of praise to God when it fills the heart. We forget our vileness and imperfections while we sing of Jesus and salvation by grace.

"Let Zion in her songs record
The honors of her dying Lord,
Triumphant over sin.
How sweet the song there's none can say,
But he whose sins are washed away,
Who feels the same within."

The precious blood of Jesus cleanses us from all sin. If I had to perform one good deed or think one good thought without sin mixed in it all, in order to be saved, I should know I was without hope; I would be lost forever. But I have not so learned Christ. Jesus has died, yea rather, is risen again. These words of Jesus come with sweetness to me, "Let not your heart be troubled; ye believe in God, believe also in me." I sensibly realize at times that I am a sinner, and unless I have been made to believe in Jesus Christ, which is the work of the Lord, I cannot be numbered with the redeemed. Faith, which is the gift of God, the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen, springs up in my heart, so the Comforter takes of the things of Jesus, and shows them unto me, and I sing,

"We claim no merit of our own,
But, self-condemed before thy throne,
Our hopes on Jesus place.
In heart, in lip, in life, depraved,
Our theme shall be, A sinner saved,
And praise redeeming grace.

"Prepared of old, at God's right hand,
Bright, everlasting mansions stand,
For all the blood-bought race.
And till we reach those seats of bliss
We'll sing no other song but this,
A sinner saved by grace."

Surely I am a sinner saved by grace, if saved at all. It is now more than twenty-three years since I was made to speak and write of salvation by grace, and the theme is always new. I hope it will be my theme as long as I dwell in this body.

"My remnant of days would I spend to his praise,
Who hath died my poor soul to redeem;
Whether many or few, all my days are his due,
May they all be devoted to him."

I hope the Lord will bless your labors, brethren editors, so the SIGNS OF THE TIMES will continue to be the family paper, filled with the dealings of the Lord with his people. "And he brought forth his people with joy, and his chosen with gladness." May we be made to speak often one to another of the wonderful works of the Lord, how he has led us about and instructed us, placed the everlasting arms underneath us, and will be our Guide even unto death.

If this is not worthy a place in the SIGNS, cast it aside, for you know I shall be satisfied with your judgment.

Your unworthy sister in hope of eternal life,

ATTIE A. CURTIS.

WARWICK, N. Y., May 7, 1895.

ELDER BENTON JENKINS—DEAR BROTHER:—Sister Mary Parker has been suffering very intensely for several days, until last evening, when she became easier, and slept well last night. She was still comparatively easy this morning when I saw her. Her mind seemed clear, though she was very weak. It is wonderful how much suffering she has endured, and I can form no idea of how much more she can bear. She is sustained by an unfaltering assurance of faith, and only under excruciating agony does she groan for deliverance.

It might be well to state the substance of this in the next SIGNS, as she cannot answer the many private letters of inquiry which come from all parts of the country. She is not now able to write at all; and the care of her occupies so much of sister Rounsavell's time that she cannot write for sister Mary.

With unabated love and fellowship I am as ever, in the hope of life in Christ Jesus, your brother and fellow-servant,

WM. L. BEEBE.

NOTICES.

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES:—Please publish the following notice.

The churches composing the Chemung Old School Baptist Association have unanimously decided to disband as an Association. There will not be any meeting, as expected, in June. The churches are in full fellowship, and expect to hold a number of yearly meetings in the bounds of the fourteen churches belonging to the Association. Appointments for yearly meetings will be arranged, I expect.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

IT is with a sad and sorrowful heart that I undertake to write a few lines concerning the lifa and death of my beloved father, Elder Elijah S. Casey.

The subject of this notice was born Dec. 20th, 1823, and died March 26th, 1895, aged 71 years, 3 months and 6 days. He was the son of Elder Jesse Casey, was born in Tennessee, and came with his parents to Arkansas when a small boy. He received a good hope through grace in his seventeenth year, and was baptized by his father in the fellowship of the Primitive Baptist Church at Mulberry, Jackson Co. In his eighteenth year he was married to Nancy Wilkins. The fruits of this union were eight sons and three daughters, only three sons and one daughter now living. Father moved to Marion County in 1853, and was one of the constituent members of Enon Church in 1854. He was ordained to the gospel ministry in 1859, and was a faithful minister, not counting his own life dear to himself, but undergoing many trials and hardships and deprivations, glorying in tribulation, and rejoicing that he was counted worthy to suffer for the cause of his Master; always patient, never murmuring, but content to trust all to the care of Jesus. Father had the care of from one to three churches during most of his ministerial life. He was an experimental preacher, able in church order, a great peacemaker, and in all the trials and divisions among the Baptists he stood firm, contending for the faith once delivered to the saints, believing in salvation by grace, and having no confidence in the flesh. He solemnized the rite of matrimony for many persons, and administered the ordinance of baptism many times. He was always humble, feeling his unworthiness to engage in such a solemn work. Father's membership was in Enon Church from its constitution until 1893, with the exception of three or four years, when he had his membership with Macedonia Church, in Boone Co., Ark. He moved to Texas in 1893, and joined the Walnut Creek Church by letter. His last sickness was only from Friday night until Tuesday evening. His disease was kidney trouble and paralysis of the bowels. He suffered untold agony, but never complained nor murmured. He said that he suffered greatly, but it was all right; that our dear Savior suffered more than this for him, and for all his children. He took mother by the hand and said, "Many long years we have lived together, and many joys and sorrows we have tasted for each other. Often I have left you, and often you have seen me return; but now I must leave you never to return. But you can surely come to me, where parting will be no more." He exhorted his children and grandchildren who were present to be kind one to another, and to live morally. He spoke of his two children, referring to myself and brother Jesse N. Casey, and said he was sorry for such sad news to come to us; for he loved us as children, and we loved him as a parent. But there was a love existing between us superior to that of parents and children. When the doctors gave him medicine to ease his suffering and misery he said he was afraid that he would be restored, and have to suffer as he had for several years; but he said, "The Lord's will be done, and not mine." He died in the full triumph of living faith, leaving his aged companion, four children and many other relatives, together with the church, to mourn. But we mourn not as those who have no hope, for we believe that we will meet him in a better world than this; not as parents and children, but in a higher relationship, there to join in singing praise to God and the Lamb forever and ever.

May God in his mercy comfort all the bereaved relatives, and especially our dear old mother, is the prayer of your unworthy brother in hope of a better resurrection,

WM. J. CASEY.

LEAD HILL, Ark., April 21, 1895.

DIED—March 15th, 1895, at his home in Bevis, Hamilton Co., Ohio, brother Jesse B. Bevis, aged 75 years.

Brother Bevis was born April 7th, 1819. On Oct. 27th, 1842, he was married to Nancy Williamson. They had nine children, five sons and four daughters, all of whom, except one daughter who died in 1861, remain to comfort their mother. He also leaves fourteen grandchildren, two great-grandchildren, three sisters and two brothers.

In August, 1871, he and sister Bevis were received and baptized in the fellowship of the Mill Creek Baptist Church, by Elder J. A. Johnson, who then served the church as pastor; and never has a church been blessed with a more faithful member than brother Bevis proved himself to be in the twenty-four years which have followed, during most of which time he has served as both Deacon and Clerk. He was a man of sound judgment and clear understanding, and very firm in what he considered was right; yet his kindly disposition made him careful not to wound the feelings of others. Nothing pleased him better than to meet with his brethren, and to entertain them in his home; and many will remember and can testify to the hearty welcome and open hospitality he so freely bestowed. His enjoyment of the church meetings was very manifest. It was enough to revive one's drooping faith to just watch the look of happiness on his face when he joined in singing his favorite hymns. I do not think the hymns, "Children of the heavenly King" and "On Jordan's stormy banks I stand," will ever sound quite the same to us without "Uncle Jesse," as every one so familiarly called him, to join in the singing.

Nine days before his death he was taken with "La Grippe." He seemed to partially recover from that, but heart trouble set in, and it soon became evident that his time on earth was short. At first he had a great desire to recover, for he was of a cheerful disposition and enjoyed life; but as his illness increased he seemed willing to depart, saying many times it was all right, and that he was ready to go if his time had come, and the Lord thought him worthy to take him home. He suffered greatly, yet in the midst of it all remembered those about him with kindly messages and parting advice. Everything which love could suggest was done for him by wife and children, who fain would have kept him with them a little longer; but on the afternoon of March 15th he quietly passed away.

The funeral services were held in the meeting-house near his place, and the large attendance of neighbors and friends gave evidence of the high esteem in which he was held in the community where he had lived all his life as a true citizen and kind neighbor. Elder Eubanks preached the funeral sermon, speaking words of comfort to the sorrowing family; after which kind hands laid the body in its last quiet resting place in the adjoining cemetery.

It is not given to many men to be missed as he will be. His dear companion, with whom he had lived so happily for more than fifty-two years, will be very lonely now, even though surrounded by the children who will tenderly care for her. His children will miss the counsel of a loving father, and we in the little church will long mourn the loss of his familiar face; yet we would say in truth,

"Weep not that his toils are over,
Weep not that his race is run;
God grant we may rest as calmly
When our work, like his, is done."

HANNAH E. DANKS.

DIED—April 22d, 1895, of pneumonia, in the city of Brooklyn, N. Y., at the residence of her son-in-law, Mr. J. W. Rosencrans, my dear mother, Mrs. Prudence M. Coleman, in the 84th year of her age.

She was born July 9th, 1811, and was the daughter of Josiah and Elizabeth Cole, of near Coleville, Sussex Co., N. J. She was united in marriage to my father, the late Joshua Y. Coleman, on Christmas Day, 1831, who died Nov. 18th, 1869, since which time she has resided with her children, five in number, two sons and three daughters. To know her was to love her, for by her unaffected kindness and gentle, winning manners she won the hearts of all with whom she was associated; and the patience and christian resignation with which she bore her last sickness is the best commentary on her sincere and genuine piety. She never united with the visible church, but her hope in the merits of her Redeemer was her joy and her song, as she said to the writer a day or two before she died, "I am waiting patiently the hour when I shall be released from this mortal body, and can go to my Savior to sing glory, glory, glory; where

"'We've no less days
To sing God's praise
Than when we first begun.'"

She retained her consciousness and talked until death gently closed the eyelids, like one falling asleep.

Her funeral occurred on the 24th, at the residence of her son-in-law, D. F. Winfield, in Port Jervis, N. Y., and was conducted by Elder Wm. L. Beebe, who preached a very comforting sermon from the following passage, selected by the deceased, "Many are the afflictions of the righteous; but the Lord delivereth him out of them all."—Psalm xxxiv. 19. Then all that was mortal of the loved mother was laid to rest by the side of her co anion in Laurel Grove Cemetery. the Lord comfort our sorrowing s. Her daughter,

HATTIE A. WINFIELD.

PORT JERVIS, N. Y., May 4, 1895.

Elder S. P. Smith died April 10th, 1895, at his residence, Halifax, Kansas, aged 60 years and 10 days.

He was born in Kentucky, and lived there until 1864. He moved from there to Stevenson, Alabama, and lived there fourteen years. He moved from there to Halifax, Kansas, joined the Regular Primitive Baptist Church in the year 1856, and was baptized by Elder Harinton. He was licensed and ordained on June 5th, 1871, and was a faithful believer in Christ and his holy works. He was a constant reader of his favorite paper, the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. He was an able minister of the New Testament, blessed with a good memory, and was never at a loss for testimony in support of the gospel and its defense. He earnestly contended for the faith once delivered to the saints, and was truly instant in season and out of season; for wherever communities and neighborhoods opened a door for preaching, whether in private houses, school-houses or church-houses, he always responded. He was in bed seven days, and said to his wife that he would never get up. His last words were that he was done with troubles, and was going where there was peace. He was married in the year 1858. There were born unto them fourteen children, three daughters and eleven sons, of whom five sons survive him. He also leaves a loving wife, two grandchildren, one brother, two sisters, many other relatives, churches and friends to mourn their loss; but we feel that our loss is his eternal gain. The Lord giveth, and he taketh away.

The funeral was on Saturday, the 13th, and was largely attended by brethren, friends and neighbors, by whom he was very highly respected as a neighbor and a good man. He was a very upright, honorable citizen, a faithful, kind husband, and a loving and indulgent father. His funeral was preached at the house by brother I. King, Elders J. Davenport and E. Ridley, whose text was Galatians v. 1; after which his remains were laid in their resting place to await the glorious morn when the trump of God shall awake the sleeping dead, when we hope to meet our brother where there will be no more parting nor shedding of tears. "So shall we ever be with the Lord."

E. H. BRADLEY.

ASSOCIATIONAL.

THE Baltimore Old School Baptist Association is appointed to be held with the Ebenezer Church, in the city of Baltimore, on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, May 22d, 23d and 24th, 1895.

We desire to extend a cordial invitation to our brethren and friends generally to meet with us at that time and join in the worship of God. We would further say that all who reach Baltimore on Tuesday before will call at the residence of Dr. John Thorne, No. 709 North Calvert St., where they will be entertained, or directed to places of entertainment. All who come to the city on Wednesday will come directly to our place of meeting, which is on Madison St., just east of Calvert St., about one square from Dr. Thorne's, where they will be welcomed and cared for. We trust that we may have a good gathering and a profitable meeting.

PICTORIAL HISTORY

OF THE

UNITED STATES.

By James D. McCabe.

This work is no dry mass of details—no bombastic effort to inflame the national pride, but a vivid and brilliant narrative of the events of our history, from the discovery of the American Continent down to thepresent time. It gives a most interesting account of the Indians of North America, from the time of the coming of the white men. The voyages of Columbus and explorations and discoveries of the different nations of Europe are related with graphic power. Every step of our colonial history is traced with patient fidelity, and the sources of those noble and, we trust, enduring institutions, which have made our country free and great, are shown with remarkable clearness. Then follows a clear and succinct account of our great Struggle for Independence, and the establishment of the Federal Union—the events of our career from the close of the Revolution to the administration of Harrison.

The work is printed from plain, new type, on fine calendered paper, and comprised in one octavo volume of 960 pages. It is splendidly embellished with nearly 500 fine engravings, embracing battles and other historical scenes, portraits of distinguished men, views of our principal cities, &c., &c.

Bound in Fine Silk Cloth, Plain Edges, $2.00, Post-paid.

NOTHING TO PAY.

Luke vii. 42.

WHEN a stranger to grace in sin's paths I trod,
Grew deeply in debt to the almighty God,
It was seldom I thought of a reckoning day,
How then I should do who had nothing to pay.

But through reigning grace I was brought to a stand:
"Pay what thou owest!" was the law's loud demand.
My sins and transgressions upon my heart lay,
A poor, wretched bankrupt, with nothing to pay.

My eyes the Lord opened, and made my heart feel
My needs they were great, and my poverty real;
I righteousness needed my soul to array,
But how could I buy it, with nothing to pay?

I fell at his feet, and my guilt there confessed;
My soul yearned for pardon, I longed to be blessed.
O that my vileness were all washed away!
I'm a poor, helpless sinner, with nothing to pay.

In prison I languished, and never could see
How my debts I could pay and my soul be set free;
But Jesus, my Surety, at length came that way,
And showed pity to me, who had nothing to pay.

Hungry and thirsty, and fainting for food,
I wandered in deserts, and cried unto God;
He heard me, he fed me, he gave me that day
The sweet Bread of life—there was nothing to pay.

Jehovah, the Spirit, revealed to my sight
The obedience of Jesus, so spotless and white.
O let me be found thus arrayed, Lord, I pray!
O clothe me, have pity! I've nothing to pay.

He regarded the cry of a destitute one,
In his beauty he decked me, outshining the sun;
With his righteousness robed all my fears fled away,
Filled with praises was I, who had nothing to pay.

He showed me that he had procured my discharge
Through his sufferings and death, and set me at large.
Who then shall condemn me? who aught 'gainst me lay?
For Christ died for one who had nothing to pay.

It was Jesus who paid my debts on the tree;
He saved me from sin, from the curse set me free.
As my Surety on him mine iniquities lay,
And me he redeemed, who had nothing to pay.

The Savior's the storehouse of all that is good,
In him is salvation, our health, wealth and food;
The rich and the full he sends empty away,
But welcomes the poor, who have nothing to pay.

To grace I'm a debtor, this freely I own,
For I nothing could do my sins to atone.
What streams of rich mercy have flowed to this day
Unto a poor sinner, with nothing to pay.

Thus far he hath helped me, my needs all supplied;
For all my life's journey he'll surely provide.
I'm so helpless and poor, he's all my soul's stay;
How kind he's to me, who had nothing to pay.

And when I am brought to the portals of heaven,
Through Jesus' rich blood shall an entrance be given;
The portals of bliss will be open that day
To a sinner redeemed—there is nothing to pay.

I sing now the sweet song, then louder I'll sing
The rich, reigning grace of Jehovah our King;
I'll join the melodious, triumphal lay
Sung by those brought to glory, who had nothing to pay.

CORRESPONDENCE.

CONFERENCE OF BRETHREN.

I KNOW of no uninspired man whose writings are not the proper subject of critical examination. It ought not to be regarded as a personal indignity to any one to have his publicly expressed sentiments carefully reviewed, for there has never been a man since the apostles whose name was sufficient authority for the truth of his declarations upon spiritual subjects. We ought to deal candidly with an author, recognizing his real meaning, if we can get at it; never distorting it, never taking advantage of an unfortunate expression to construe it to his disadvantage; never "making him an offender for a word;" never using personally offensive language, or applying personally offensive epithets. A firm contention for what one believes to be true ought to command our respect, instead of causing us to regard him as wishing to usurp authority, as a pope, and lord it over God's heritage.

I wish whatever I write or speak publicly to be carefully examined by brethren. I take it as a kindness. It is their duty also to "prove all things" before accepting or rejecting. If what I write cannot bear that searching it ought not to be received. I do not know what comfort or gratification there could be in having one agree to what I present if it has not been commended to his heart and conscience. If it has he cannot well throw it aside. I do not think a servant of God will ever need to defend himself; but I shall endeavor always to defend anything I write against any criticism I deem unsound, so far as I think any additional word is needed to show more clearly and unanswerably to the child of God the truth of my position. And where brethren in faithfulness point out errors in what I write or speak, as has been done, and as, undoubtedly, might oftener be done, I hope I shall candidly acknowledge the error, and the kindness of the faithful brother; and that I shall profit by the criticism, and not take offense, even though it be made in an unkind and unbrotherly manner, as will sometimes appear to be the case.

I do not think there should be such fear and hesitancy, as we often feel, about expressing contrary views to those of [illegible] We might not to hesitate to show why we regard some sentiment of his erronious, or some public course of his wrong, lest we offend him, or hurt the feelings of brethren. Our fellowship and love must be of a very weak nature if they cannot bear faithful dealing. Paul did not hesitate to speak to Peter before all the brethren concerned in the matter, faithfully showing him his error in sentiment and conduct. He used plain language, but no irony or harshness; and I venture to say that neither of them was angry with the other. And if Paul had been mistaken in his charge, or had made it in an improper or imperious manner, I have no doubt he would have been shown it by his brother apostle, and would have acknowledged it.

It is to be presumed that every one writes with a sincere and earnest desire for the spiritual good of the brethren, and that his motives are kind, even when he charges his brethren with gross and dangerous errors. But that is no proof of the correctness of his position, nor is it any reason why his charges should be received unchallenged. And it is positively wrong for me to claim that I am suffering wrongfully when brethren in faithfulness and love examine my position, and question the correctness of my conclusions, and to contend that I am taking ill treatment patiently, as the Savior did, when I refuse to notice the brethren's reasons for holding as truth what I denounce as error. If it is right for me to state plainly what I believe to be erronious in my brother's publicly expressed views, it is certainly just as much his right to set forth his reasons in defense of them. The truth is more important than the reputation of any man. Indeed we should not have the man especially in view, but his utterances. We should not write either to praise or to blame any one, but to open the truth, so far as it is given to us, for the comfort of the Lord's people, and for his own declarative glory. In this sense we should "know no man after the flesh." I have no right to prevent examination of my views by claiming that it is a personal injury to myself when they are rejected. No one has a right to throw himself or his motives into the scale at all, nor any assertion as to the belief of any man, or of any majority of men. No such considerations can have the least possible weight in commending the sentiments we express to any man's conscience in the sight of God. I do not want to be hampered by the insistence on the part of my dearest brother that I must consider his sentiments more favorably because they are his; nor, above all things, do I want anything I say to be considered more favorably because I have said it. There it is. Examine it. Is it according to the oracles of God? Does it agree with the teaching of the Spirit in your experience? That is all you have to consider. I am sure of my desire that no personal consideration of myself should influence any one in the consideration of the sentiments I have expressed. Look alone to the Lord, for no one else can tell you what to believe. That which is given you by the heavenly Teacher will come into your soul with power, and will be edifying and nourishing. It will be strengthening to the inner man, and it will lead your soul to the praise of God, and not to wonder at the ability of the earthen vessel. And to that which you have thus tasted and handled of the word of life will be confirmed in your soul by the answering testimony of the Lord's people, by the breathings of their inner, spiritual life, as you hear them speak what they have felt, or read what they have written out of the fullness of their hearts. I would feel, I think, that I had been the cause of real injury to that one of the Lord's little ones who had been influenced by personal considerations of myself to adopt a sentiment that had not been commended to his heart and conscience in this sweet way, as living bread. I have been much inclined to accept unquestionably as truth what was presented by those I esteemed as the Lord's servants, especially those of great age, and experience, and reputation, whom I loved and served in the first years of my ministry, such as Elders Gilbert Beebe, C. B. Hassell, J. F. Johnson, Gabriel Conklin, Samuel Trott, and many others in whose company it was my privilege to be a great deal in those years, who have long since gone home to glory. But as my mind was much exercised in spiritual things at that time, it occasionally occurred that some sentiment or view of some text which I had thus received, was clearly shown to me to be erronious, as the power of divine life in my own experience led me into the true meaning of that portion of the word. At such times I was filled with wonder, and hesitated to believe anything could have been shown to me that such men had not yet seen. I always embraced the first opportunity to speak with them alone on such subject; and the greatest wonder of all was to see in such mighty and unyielding soldiers of the cross, such deep and clear sighted ministers of the gospel, a frank, glad, and humble acknowledgement of the view that was thus brought to their notice. I have never seen more wonderful instances of true humility than in those men I have named; and how gently and lovingly they listened to the younger ministers, whom they encouraged to speak freely of their exercises upon scriptural things. I thought it no wonder that we should hear from them new and wonderful things out of God's word every day; but that they should hear new things from us, and especially that they should acknowledge to ever receive correction of an error through us, seemed a great wonder to me. But they knew more fully than we how "the Spirit divideth to every man severally as he will."

I have sometimes seen so clearly, as I thought, an error in a brother's views or course, and have been so apprehensive of injury to the cause on account of it, that I have felt impressed to write or speak to him privately on the subject. Not with the desire to draw him into a controversy, but that he may consider my reasons for objecting to his view, and may show me wherein they are wrong, or acknowledge their correctness, and so the correspondence be for our mutual benefit, and for the good of the cause.

Sometimes I am impressed that it is my duty to present such objections publicly to a brother's publically expressed views, for the consideration of the brethren. Again there are occasions when I fear the hurt to the tender feelings of some by an appearance of warfare between brethren, or when I have reason to believe that any question concerning the absolute correctness of the brother's views will not be well received, nor the reason be considered, that I have discussed the principles involved in a general way, being particular in my allusions only sufficiently to call attention of those whose minds have been engaged upon the subject to the differences, and to the reasons for differing.

An open, fair and brotherly correspondence upon scriptural subjects is much more to my mind. Where there is an allusion to some one not named, the conjecture of the reader will often rest upon one not intended by the writer; and sometimes where one alludes to a class of writers, one will take all that is said as meant for himself. However, the main thing is that the various sentiments shall be considered and proved, and that which is good held fast. So far as we are influenced by the name, character or reputation of the one expressing the sentiment in our consideration of it, or rather, in our acceptance of it, we are upon unsafe ground. The wisest and most truly spiritual of the men of God since the apostolic age have differed on some important points of doctrine and order, and concerning the meaning of certain portions of the Scriptures. Therefore some of them must have erred. Who shall have the right, then, to dictate a position upon such controverted points, and say, "This you must accept, because such and such wise and good men held it." That is no part of the reason why it should be accepted by the saints. Yet what those good men have said of their exercise of mind upon such points may be just what we feel to be the truth, and so may commend it to our hearts in the sight of God. Not that they held it, but why they held it, is what makes them confirming witnesses to our souls.

The Scriptures must be appealed to always and every time as the rule of our faith and practice, as the only test of the truth of any man's assertions and views. To refer to the chapter and verse without quoting the Scripture is no proof, as I said not long since in the SIGNS. The Savior and the apostles often quoted the language of the Scripture without referring particularly to the place where it might be found, but they never made a reference without repeating the words. Many good writers have had the habit of following some declaration with a list of references, and I am not finding fault with them. But I feel now, as I have always felt, that it is not argument. The Scriptures are always good, and I have interested myself sometimes in looking up such texts as have been referred to. But when in an important discussion a list of references is given the subject was left where it was. The very point at issue may turn upon the interpretation of the very first text referred to. The reference to it assumes that it has a meaning which I cannot see in it at all, as I think could be easily shown. There is a liability in this kind of writing that the reader will abate some necessary care in examining the Scriptures referred to, taking it for granted that they do prove what the writer has thus declared they do. Lately I noticed a certain text thus referred to which I did not think had any application to the subject in proof of which the references were made. Afterward I noticed in the same periodical a very clear exposition of that text by another brother, in which it was unanswerably shown that it does not at all apply to the subject for which the first brother had referred to it as proof. Yet the last brother made no allusion to the use of the text in the former article, and may not have thought of it when writing.

In expressing these views, which I have held for many years, I knew that I could not be understood by any thoughtful and candid mind as expressing any lack of regard for the Scriptures as the only proof of any assertion concerning doctrine or order, but rather as magnifying them.

An argument by any one who is entitled to a hearing by the Lord's people should be considered by those interested in the investigation of the subject. If the argument is so clearly wrong as to be of no weight it ought not to be difficult to show it. I have been astonished, at times, to see one engaged in the consideration of important scriptural subjects, coldly and dogmatically dispose of the honestly entertained and carefully and thoughtfully expressed views of brethren as, "Fine spun theories," "airy nothings," "brilliant discoveries," "New and dangerous innovations," without even a word of explanation to those brethren who had expressed them, and those who had been comforted by them, as to wherein they differed from the divine rule.

May the Lord make his servants tender in their feelings and words toward those who differ with them, careful in their words of reproof, where such are needed, meek in their instructions to them that oppose themselves, self-forgetful in their ministration of the word, perfectly fair and candid in stating what they understand to be the erronious views of others, gentle and loving in all their intercourse with the household of faith, and with all men, as much as in them lies; and may they forbear one another, and be kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven them.

SILAS H. DURAND.

SOUTHAMPTON, Pa., May 7, 1895.

STATE ROAD, Del., May, 1895.

DEAR BRETHREN:—I will try to collect and arrange some reflections that have occupied my mind more or less of late, hoping to find some consolation for myself in the effort, even if I should fail to interest or profit others.

The apostle, in writing to the Corinthians, in the thirteenth chapter of his first letter, speaks of the imperfection of all the gifts that we possess or are capable of possessing here in this time state. Our knowledge, much as we think we know, shall all vanish away. It will ultimately appear that we had no perfect knowledge of anything. The gifts of tongues and prophesying shall cease and pass away; because all these gifts are limited, and our knowledge is restricted, we only seeing in part and only knowing in part. After speaking of the disadvantages we labor under by knowing only in part and prophesying only in part, he goes on in the tenth verse to say, "But when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away." All those things appearing to us so wrong and imperfect are only partially seen. They are all perfect, and will ultimately so appear to us. Then no event would trouble us, or call for the exercise of faith. The events under the control of Providence are and have always been right, and no imperfection about them; but the sight and knowledge of that perfection has not yet come to us. He compares our ignorance and short-sightedness to that of children, whose knowledge is limited, and their capacities not yet matured. When he was a child he spake as a child, he understood as a child; but he became a man. "For now we see through a glass, darkly; but then face to face: now I know in part; but then shall I know even as also I am known." What is here called a glass, in other places is represented as a vail, which shuts out from view pretty much whatever is within or beyond the vail. I presume that clear glass, through which objects could be distinctly seen, was unknown at the time when these things were written. The suggestion certainly is that all is dark beyond, and we are and must remain ignorant of the perfection of those things that now are so trying and afflictive to us. We see only a part, and that is why so many things trouble us, and appear so wrong, and cause so much weeping and distress. We can hardly say that we have seen anything perfect, and we can hardly be said to know how anything that was perfect would appear. We have all our lives been in contact with imperfect things; and if we cannot say with the psalmist that we had seen an end of all perfection, it would nevertheless be true of us, and more than that we have seen no perfection at all. That which is perfect has not come.

"Here the dark vails of flesh and sense
My captive soul surround;
Mysterious deeps of providence
My wondering thoughts confound.

"When I behold thy awful hand
My earthly hopes destroy,
In deep astonishment I stand,
And ask the reason why."

While we encounter so much disorder and distress in the world, the apostle's declaration appears to be that we have seen and known but a part, and that there is another part, unseen by us, fitting to what we do see, that renders it perfect. I do not understand him that there will be a change in the divine government, and that all imperfect and distressing events will be superseded by events that will not distress any more; but the divine government has been right all the time, only we saw only a part. The perfection that characterizes every event will appear and come to our view when perfect knowledge comes. When the perfection of everything comes to our sight and knowledge will be when we see as we are seen and know as we are known. It will be then, when we see things as they are, and know them as they are, that the knowledge of their perfection will come. How much there must be that is yet unseen and unknown to us! How much of wisdom, of power, of love and of compassion is yet hidden within and beyond that vail! There is a time when weeping will cease, and there shall be no more pain. Not that there will from thenceforward be no more cause for weeping and pain, but to see and know that there never had been cause for either. If every dispensation and event of providence is right and perfect, and we see it and know it to be so, why should we mourn and weep? There was much weeping at the grave of Lazarus, and it is said also that Jesus wept, but with the rest it was because they only saw in part and knew in part; but when they had seen the power and glory of God made manifest in him there was rejoicing instead of weeping. The weeping of Jesus was certainly not the result of distress because of the death of him who shonld be raised from the dead. He speaks of that perfection as coming. It has been hidden. It was a long way off, and entirely out of our sight; but it will come into view, and then will the glorious and eternal perfection of all events, both in providence and grace, appear. We cannot doubt the perfection of that knowledge which our Creator has of us. He sees and knows us with a perfect comprehension, though we have but limited knowledge of ourselves. A more forcible expression could not have been used than what the apostle has here called into requisition to show the perfection of that vision by which we shall ultimately see and know the perfection of everything from out the Creator's hand.

It must have afforded the apostle strong consolation when he could look at things that were not seen, and his faith could penetrate within the vail and see all things working to one end, for the glory of God and the ultimate glorification of his people. How much there must be yet to reveal! How much of sorrow and sighing will flee away when the perfection of all things shall be made fully to appear! Verily he is a God that hideth himself, and keeps his gracious designs hidden; but nevertheless he is a just God and the Savior. Our hope is said to enter into those unrevealed things within the vail. We find a conception and knowledge of things that we are not in possession of in the hungerings and longings of our own hearts, as we do not and cannot desire things and long for them of which we have no conception. We are said to hope for that which we see not; but certainly some knowledge of those things inspires the hope. We learn of things, their value and preciousness, more in being deprived of them, and suffering on account of being thus deprived, than we do in the possession and full enjoyment of them. The law and the legal dispensation, and its long and faithful administration, made nothing perfect, but left everything as imperfect as it was before the bringing in of a better hope did; that is, I presume, the bringing to view the warrant and grounds of a hope that everything would yet be made perfect, and made so to appear. It doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we do know that Christ will yet appear to those that love his appearing; and to those that look and long and wait for him he will appear to fully, finally, and forever satisfy their longings, and leaving nothing to be desired or hoped for any more forever. The vail has at times seemed more dark and dense than at other times, but in the passing away of those darker shadows we sometimes get some glimpses of those things within and beyond. Either the vail has become thinned and the glass less darkly, or else our vision has been strengthened by the long-continued hiding of the light from us. "At evening time it shall be light."

THE RAINBOW.

THE rainbow is a token to men of God's covenant that the world shall not again be destroyed by a flood. The flood from which Noah and his family were saved in the ark was a type of the flood of religious superstition and idolatry in the "Dark Ages" that destroyed the earth. "Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven, and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken: and then shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven: and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory. And he shall send his angels [ministers] with a great sound of a trumpet [the gospel], and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other."—Matt. xxiv. 29–31.

What a beautiful description of the coming of Christ in the time of the reformation. After the long, dark night, in which the sun failed to shine, and the light of the law (the moon) had been put out, when the powers of heaven had been shaken, and the stars had fallen, the Son of man comes in the power of his kingdom, sending forth his ministers to gather his chosen ones into the fold. That there may be no mistake as to what was signified by the flood in the days of Noah, the Master (in verses 37–39) continues, "But as the days of Noe were, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be. For as in the days that were before the flood they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until the day that Noe entered into the ark, and knew not until the flood came, and took them all away; so shall also the coming of the Son of man be." From this flood his chosen few were saved in the ark in which he had placed them. "And they that went in, went in male and female of all flesh, as God had commanded him: and the Lord shut him in."

To assure his trembling creatures that such a horrible destruction should never again be visited upon them God placed his bow in the cloud, and informed them that it was a token or sign unto them that the waters should never destroy the earth again. Now, the rainbow depends upon a certain law of nature, and always indicates a rent in the cloud. Whenever, then, we see a rainbow we know that the cloud is broken, and that the sun is shining through. We may feel assured, so long as our eyes rest upon the beautiful bow, that the power which rends the clouds still exists, and is at work, and still resists and prevents a recurrence of the flood. We know that the inexorable law of nature's God still exists, and we feel safe. Since the destruction of the great power of antichrist, which the Master destroyed with the brightness of his coming, the chosen of God have never had more cause to look upon the beautiful bow with profound admiration than now. While all the hosts of antichrist are marshaling their forces and straining every point to effect a general union and cooperation, we look upon the bow as the token of the immutable counsel of the Most High which thwarts and restrains their madness. While they lament and mourn over the rent, divided and discordant condition of so-called christianity, it is one of the most delightful things which the children of the Most High have to contemplate. In it alone consists their security from the prison, the rack, the dungeon and the stake. An effort is being made to unite. Three unclean spirits must go forth and gather Gog and Magog together. The number of these is as the sand of the sea; and when gathered together they will encompass the camp of the saints. Their object is war, of course; but our King will send fire (divisions) among them and consume them. They may lament the divided state of so-called christianity, since the confusion of tongues among them prevents the building of the city and the tower that should reach to heaven; but the people of God may rejoice that their enemies are divided. To them the rainbow is the most beautiful thing in nature.

With love to all who love the truth,

DEAR BRETHREN IN CHRIST:—I have been so filled to-day with the glory and beauty that is contained in a passage of Scripture to be found in the gospel according to John iii. 8, that I feel I must write of my joy and comfort, and I hope the Spirit of Jesus is guiding my thoughts.

"The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh and whither it goeth: so is every one that is born of the Spirit." There is not only embodied in this passage of Scripture the truth and power of God, but the glorious gospel as it is in Jesus. The wind bloweth where it listeth, and we as worms of the earth have no power over it. We can see, hear and feel its effects. The wind is controlled only by the Creator and Preserver of all things, both spiritual and temporal. When the wind ceases to blow, we have no evidence that it will ever blow again; only this fact, we know it has blown in the past; and as we feel our need of it, we hope it may blow again, to our need and comfort. But strive as we may, it does not make it blow. But at a time when we least think of it, it blows, and we are refreshed thereby; and as we are refreshed, and feel ourselves blessed by the effects of the wind, it ceases to blow. It was only for a season, and we are again left in hope.

"So is every one that is born of the Spirit." We have no power over the Spirit. It comes to us as God directs. It comes to the poor sinner when he least expects it, and when his last hope is gone, and he is filled with comfort, and his grief is turned to joy, and to the praise of Jesus; and in his joy he says, O! that I could be filled with such a blessing always. He reads with understanding, and sings songs of praise to his God, the glory of his soul. But alas! poor child of God, these comforts and joys are not at our command. It has pleased God in his all-wise providence that it should not be so. And when we cannot feel the existence of the Spirit in our hearts, then we are made to hope for a return of such a glorious blessing, which is only in Jesus, our Savior. For it is written that our life is hid with Christ in God; and he reveals himself to us as he will. And what a comfort there is in the hope of another reve-

WHAT DO THE SCRIPTURES SAY CONCERNING SATAN?

Two correspondents have recently written to us proposing some queries in relation to this matter. One is brother T. Bridges, of Attica, Iowa, who asks concerning John viii. 44, and says, "When was the beginning of the devil there spoken of?" The expression of the text is, "He was a murderer from the beginning." The other request is from sister Eva Ashley, of Noank, Conn. This sister desires our views upon Satan's origin. Is he a fallen angel, who before his fall was equal to Michael the Archangel? Were the cherubim over the ark symbolic of the position held by Michael and Satan before Satan was cast out? She says that she heard this idea advanced lately, and that Ezekiel xxviii. 11–19 was quoted to prove it. Our sister further says that for her part it undermines the whole foundation to consider that any of the holy inhabitants of God's abode could lose their holiness, or that God's purpose could be thwarted, as it must have been if Satan were once an archangel.

We desire first of all to respond with a hearty "Amen" to this last sentence written by our sister. God's purposes cannot be thwarted; and any conception of Satan that involves the idea of any disappointment upon the part of Jehovah must of necessity be false.

In the endeavor to reply to some of these questions we do not desire to speculate, nor to discuss long-mooted questions which finite minds can never solve. Neither do we desire to say anything but what is clearly said in the Scriptures of eternal truth; neither can we in the space at our disposal call attention to all that is there said. We do regard what the Scriptures teach concerning the devil or Satan as being for our learning, and that it is a legitimate subject for our thought, else the Scriptures would have been silent upon the subject; and we have a right, and it is our duty, to inquire as to what they do say. In reply to our correspondents we can only say what the Scriptures say. Men have formed many theories concerning this matter from the earliest times to the present time. John Milton, in his poem "Paradise Lost," presented the theory that Satan was once an angel in heaven, but that he had fallen through pride and ambition. We know of no higher authority for this theory than John Milton himself; and we will say that his testimony concerning the matter is just as good and reliable as that of any other man, seeing that neither he nor any other man knows anything about it. With this or any other theory advocated by men we desire to have nothing to do, farther than to turn aside from them, to rest alone upon what the Scriptures teach.

We will turn at once to the questions which have been proposed; and in response we desire to speak carefully. We do not wish to present extreme views, nor to use rash statements in anything that we may say, but to speak carefully and soberly, and above all to say no more than the Scriptures warrant.

The first request relates to John viii. 44, and the special reference is to the expression, "He was a murderer from the beginning." When was this beginning? It seems to us that the meaning of this language is just this, that the devil never was anything but a murderer. The first manifestation that he ever made of himself was that of a liar and murderer both; and Satan was a liar and murderer before he had either lied or murdered. What any being is, that he does. A man must be a thief in order to act the thief. Satan must be a murderer in order to do murder. We do not understand the expression, "from the beginning," to refer to the beginning of time, or the beginning of the world; but, as we said before, it means that he always was a murderer. He "abode not in the truth [said the Savior], because there is no truth in him. When he speaketh a lie, he speaketh of his own: for he is a liar, and the father of it." Surely if language can mean anything definite, this means that the devil in his very being is essentially false and vile. Because of this evil nature of his he does all evil things. His works did not make him to be evil, but his works are the results of his being evil. The text seems to us to say that evil has always been inherent in his very nature. This text has no bearing at all either for or against the question of the devil's origin, or whether he is an eternal being. Whatever other Scriptures may say about this matter, this text at least does not bear upon it. It only says that he always has been a liar and murderer. He never was anything else.

Sister Ashley desires to have something said about Satan's origin. To this we are compelled to give the reply that we do not know. We know that he is. We know that he is the great enemy of God and man, of happiness and holiness, and that he has power to tempt and hurt men, and that he is under the restraining power of God. All these things the Scriptures declare concerning him, and therefore we are sure of these things; but to us the Scriptures seem absolutely silent upon the question of his origin. No one can know any more than the word of God has declared upon this subject. The Scriptures tell us of his existence, his character and his work. This is all we need to know. What good would it do us to know of his origin? Because it could be of no use to us, therefore are the Scriptures silent. Concerning this subject the child is as wise as the man of gray hairs; the simple are as wise as the learned. If any one knows more about Satan's origin than this, we will listen while they speak.

Is he a fallen angel, who before his fall was equal to Michael the Archangel? The only authority that we know of for saying so is John Milton. The Scriptures nowhere expressly say so. Inferences have been drawn from certain Scriptures, which, if allowed, would seem to prove that he is a fallen angel. Some of these Scriptures we wish to allude to; not as proving or disproving that he is a fallen angel, but to show that these Scriptures at least do not relate to the matter at all. The chief passage upon which all the vast fabric of tradition and poetry concerning the fall of Satan has been based is Revelation xii. 7–9, which speaks of Michael and his angels as fighting against the dragon and his angels, till the great dragon, called the devil and Satan, was cast out into the earth. Whatever may be the meaning of this passage, it is certain that it cannot refer to the original fall of Satan. The book called Revelation treats of things which must "shortly come to pass," not of things which had been before. The only other passage which speaks of the fall of angels is 2 Peter ii. 4: "God spared not the angels that sinned, but cast them down to hell, and delivered them into chains of darkness, to be reserved unto judgment," with the parallel passage in Jude 6. We admit that these passages are mysterious, and will not attempt any exposition of them. For our present purpose it is enough to say that they cannot refer to Satan, for he is but once in the Scriptures represented as being in chains; and in no place is he spoken of as being guarded till the time of judgment, but rather as a tempter and adversary and a roaring lion, going about seeking the harm of men. Leaving these passages, we will refer to Luke x. 18: "I beheld Satan as lightning fall from heaven." A careful consideration of this language will show, we think, that the force of the passage is that it is an expression of triumph growing out of the report which the disciples had just brought, that "even the devils are subject unto us through thy name;" and if it be still insisted that there is some sort of force in the Savior's language beyond a mere expression of triumph, we would be compelled to believe that the expression means the same as the passage before referred to in Revelation xii. 7–9, where the heaven spoken of cannot mean the final abode of the righteous, nor the time any past event, but that which must shortly come to pass. Our object, as said before, is not to present what these Scriptures mean, but rather to confine what we say to showing that they do not teach the popular idea of the fall of Satan. It may be true; but if so, the Scriptures do not teach it.

Of late we have seen Isaiah xiv. 12 referred to in proof that Satan is a fallen angel; but this only shows that those who seek to make this use of the text are very careless readers. The whole of this chapter relates to the king of Babylon, as a reference to the fourth verse will show, and not one word in it refers to Satan. The name Lucifer (verse 12) is the same as Luke in the New Testament, and both mean "a bearer of light."

Sister Ashley says that she heard Ezekiel xxviii. 11–19 quoted to prove that Satan was once equal to Michael the Archangel, and that they both were symbolized by the cherubim that were placed over the mercy-seat. If this is the best evidence that can be brought to sustain this theory, our sister need not fear that the doctrine of the divine sovereignty will be very soon undermined. Any one who desires to know the truth can turn to the passage referred to in Ezekiel, and reading the twelfth verse see that the king of Tyre is the person referred to. Here, as well as in the fourteenth chapter of Isaiah, very lofty and exalted language is used to set forth the exaltation of heathen kings, who were enemies to Israel, in order that the terrible fall which awaited them might be the more sharply and strikingly presented. In neither connection is there one word that can be twisted into an appearance of reference to the arch-adversary of men.

Perhaps we have bestowed more time upon this matter than is profitable, but we felt like showing as far as we were able how baseless is the notion that Satan was once an archangel from the standpoint of the Bible. The Bible does not say anything about the origin of Satan, or of evil or sin in any form. For ourself we must say that we know no more than that Satan is, and that sin is in the world. It seems to us that there would be no profit to any man if we could know more. This we are sure of, that God has revealed all that could have profited us concerning this matter. We ask to know no more. It is presumption for us to strive to be wise above what is written. Revealed things belong to us, but secret things are the Lord's. As ministers of the gospel we are not called upon to discuss the origin of evil or sin or of the devil. We are only called upon to preach the gospel of salvation to the burdened hearts who feel these things to be terrible realities. To the called, both Jews and Greeks, we preach Christ crucified the power of God and the wisdom of God. This is our one message. We have no time to lawfully devote to anything else.

When we read that sin entered the world by one man's transgression, and death by sin, and so death passed upon all, for that all have sinned, we have read all that can be known of this great mystery. Here let us rest. If the Scriptures had declared anything concerning the primal cause of sin, then we should be bound to receive it; but this in turn would only open up still wider fields for questioning and vain speculation. Finite minds cannot grasp the infinite, and must not attempt it. Concerning many things that the Scriptures do reveal our minds ask a thousand questions which the Scriptures do not answer. It seems to us our right to weigh carefully what the Scriptures say before we attempt to prove this or that by them; but when we do once know their meaning there is no appeal. Their record is true. Beyond all is misty and dark, and to try to explore it is to lose ourselves in countless errors and absurdities. We hope ever to be given grace to let such vain speculations alone, and to preach simply the gospel of salvation for perishing sinners through Christ. What is every speculation concerning the origin of the devil worth compared with this one great truth, "For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil?"—1 John iii. 8.

TRIALS ABOUT PREACHING.

IN a former number of this volume we made the following remarks, "That many have had serious trials of mind about preaching who, as events have proved, were not called to the work, there can be no doubt;" and, "We are confident that those whom he calls to preach will have to preach; there is no retreat." These remarks drew from a brother the inquiry, "Do you believe the children of God have those serious trials of mind to which you allude? If so, from what source do they come? And what is the cause of the same?"

To the first of these questions we reply, We certainly did allude to the children of God, and to such trials of mind as none but heaven-born souls are subject to on that subject. Fully sensible though we are that many thousands engage in the work of preaching whom God has never called by his grace from death to life, much less to the important work of the ministry, we have yet to learn that such have any serious trials of mind on the subject. The ability to preach, is by such regarded in the same light that men regard the qualification for any of the learned professions of the world. The trials, therefore, of such men in regard to the undertaking are only such as they would have if they contemplated engaging in the profession of law or medicine; consequently their trials are not what we denominate serious. True they may feel perplexed to know which profession will prove the most respectable or lucrative, or in which they can show themselves off to the greatest advantage; but having neither the fear of God before their eyes nor the knowledge of his truth in their hearts, they are strangers to those deep seated trials which often wring the hearts of God's children with the most severe anxiety, and lead them in the fullness of their hearts to cry, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" But from brethren in whom we have discovered the most satisfactory evidence that they were born of God, we have frequently been informed of serious trials which they had experienced on the subject of preaching the gospel; and some of these have made frequent attempts, and as frequently failed, until they were at length convinced that they had been mistaken in regard to the calling. Others have for years labored under such trials, and finally have died, and, we believe, gone to heaven, without ever coming into the work of the ministry; hence, as we before remarked, events have proved that God had not called them to the work as Aaron was called to the priesthood. Indeed we have supposed that it was very common for christians, especially in the early part of their happy exercises, to entertain thoughts seriously about preaching.

To the second inquiry we reply, We have never doubted that those trials have come to them from the same source from which all their serious trials come. God has chosen his people in a furnace of afflictions, and by his apostle has bidden them "count it all joy when ye fall into divers temptations." They are informed that their fiery trials are all divinely appointed for their good, and are precious for the trial of their faith. Although Satan and ungodly men, and their own carnal natures, have an agency in harrassing their minds and trying them, yet not one single shaft can cause them pain beyond what their faithful and all-wise God designs to overrule for their good and his glory.

In defining the source we show the cause of all the trials of God's dear children. We feel them because our God has graciously determined "To polish and refine us from worthless dross and tin,

And to his heavenly kingdom bid us enter in."

It has, and still does, appear to us that all the children of God have some gift for the general profit of the whole community of the saints, and God in wisdom has diversified these gifts as to him it has seemed good. These are all of the same Spirit, and all promote the same end, the edification of the body, &c., until we all come in the unity of the faith.

While upon this subject we will take occasion to say that we see no better reason one brother has for neglecting to improve the gift that is in him than another brother has. We do not mean to say that every brother has a gift for speaking, but among those who have such gifts for public exercise is it not lamentably true that many have concluded that they must either preach or be silent in the public meetings of the church? Is it true that the church has become so well established in faith and practice as no longer to need the gift of exhortation? Do the saints no longer require that the pure minds of the brethren be stirred up by way of remembrance? Is the commission, "Speak ye comfortably to Jerusalem," confined to the preachers of the word? We have thought, and we submit it to our brethren to judge whether we be right or wrong, that one fruitful cause of many of the trials complained of in regard to impressions about preaching, is in the prevailing custom of brethren and churches of depending almost exclusively on their preachers to do all the public speaking. Brethren who feel strongly impressed to speak, conclude that if they cannot sermonize they ought to remain silent; and because no other kind of public speaking is common in the churches, they construe their impressions into exercises indicative of a call to preach.

It seems to us that a door should be opened by the churches for every brother to improve his gift as he may feel impressed, and then let the churches determine what is the nature of each gift. Those who have the requisite qualifications for preaching will be sure to be discovered, and those whose gifts are edifying in exhortation or prayer will be known. Let all speak who are so led by the Spirit, one by one; and as one speaks, the rest shall judge.

As a general thing, we believe that those whom God has called in reality to the work of the gospel ministry are made to entertain such humbling views of themselves, and such an exalted view of the great work, that they are by far the most ready to avail themselves of every plausible excuse to keep silent.

ADOPTION.

"AND because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying, Abba, Father."—Gal. iv. 6.

Much has been said and written on the subject of the adoption of the children of God, and many of the dear people of his choice have been bewildered in reference to the subject. The great question, "Am I his, or am I not?" which seems to be the point of deepest interest to the disciple of Jesus, is so intimately connected with the subject under consideration that there are probably very few of the people of God who have long been on their pilgrimage and have not had their attention drawn to it. Yet, if we mistake not, there are some whose ideas on the subject, either owing to the traditions which have been taught to them from their earliest infancy, or from some other cause, are very vague and inconsistent with the faith once delivered to the saints.

The idea seems very prevalent among the professed religionists of the present day that the purpose of God is not yet fully determined as to what shall be the effect or who shall be the objects of his adoption. Hence the world and carnal professors of religion have thought it necessary to seek out many inventions for the purpose of bringing the heathen into the embrace of the christian faith, thinking thereby to effect their adoption as the sons of God, and joint-heirs with Jesus Christ. Although those who are engaged in this business of evangelizing the world are generally bitterly opposed to the doctrine of divine sovereignty, and can form no just conceptions of the power and love of God displayed in the glorious plan of salvation, and consequently know nothing of the way in which God can be just and be the Justifier of him that believeth in Jesus, yet they seem to think that if men can only be persuaded to profess a belief in Jesus that is all that is requisite to render them children of God, and that God is bound to justify all such and screen them from the demands of law and justice. What then becomes of the justice of God? Mercy cannot prevail at the expense of justice, neither can the law pass away until it has been fulfilled and all its precepts magnified and made honorable. There is no failure in the divine arrangement for the justification of sinners through the blood of the once crucified but now risen Savior; nor yet can the people chosen of God before the foundation of the world, and ordained unto eternal life, be delivered from the demands of the law of God until every demand of that law shall have been met and canceled on their part. But in themselves considered they were sold under sin and involved in transgression as deeply as any others of the human family; hence the apostle says, 1 Tim. i. 15, "This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners." And again, Mark ii. 17, Jesus says, "I came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance." The people of God could never have delivered themselves from under that law which held them under condemnation in common with all mankind; neither could the law admit of anything being received as an atonement for their transgressions short of the absolute fulfillment of its utmost demands. Nor could the righteousness of God be imputed to them in any other way than by the relationship in which they stood connected with him in the peculiar position of his sons. Nor is that relationship based upon the fact of their being the creatures of his hand; for in that respect all are alike the creatures of one common Creator; and if that relationship were sufficient in the case of one, it would be sufficient in the case of all. But there is a vital relationship existing between the Lord Jesus, and as the Only Begotten of the Father, and all the redeemed of the Lord; hence the apostle assigns as a reason of the sending forth of the Spirit of his Son into their hearts, crying, Abba, Father, "Because ye are sons." Not in order that ye may become sons, but because ye are sons. Now this being the cause must precede the sending forth of his Spirit, crying, Abba, Father; therefore we see the absurdity of any effort on the part of the creature to render himself a recipient of that Spirit, since such efforts are nothing more or less than attempts to constitute himself a son of God.

The apostle has been, in the preceding chapters, exposing an error which had crept in among the Galatians, in that they had supposed that the gospel consisted in a mixture of law and grace. It seems to have been very much such a theory that had bewitched them as is most popular in the world at this day; and in exposing the fallacy and falsehood of that theory, the apostle explains the application of the promises as being not to Israel according to the fleshly descendents of Abraham, but to them that are in Christ, both Jews and Gentiles; which leads him to comment on the relationship of Christ and his people. But although this relationship existed perfect from eternity, yet the people of God had become involved in the bondage of the law, from which they must be delivered before their adoption could be manifested to them; therefore Christ, who was the Surety and only responsible Representative of his people, being the Head and Life, was delivered up to satisfy the just demands of the law upon them, as his body, for which he alone was responsible; not that he was received by the law as simply a vicarious offering for their sins, which might have been made as well for any others as for them, but as being their Life, the very identical thing which the law demanded, and which alone could satisfy its demands; hence the utter impossibility that this cup should pass from him. For him alone it was prepared, and he alone could drain its dregs of bitterness. His people were under the curse of that law, and it was necessary for their redemption that he should be made a curse for them. This was the cause of the agony in the garden of Gethsemane when he sweat as it were great drops of blood falling to the ground; not that he suffered such agony in anticipation of his sufferings on the cross, but the weight of almighty vengeance which lay heavy on his soul oppressed him with a burden which none other but himself could bear. Yet all this was necessary for their redemption, which must be accomplished before their heirship could be made manifest in their adoption.

lation; and hope is our only comfort when his Spirit in us is not visible to us. I do not understand that a child of God is ever without the Spirit of Jesus; for he says, "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee." I do believe he at times shuts out the light from our view. This he does, that we may be in darkness. Then we realize there is no light in us, but all light is in Christ. When in darkness we see ourselves as we are, vile sinners, and unworthy of his goodness and mercy. And when he bids his marvelous light to shine in us, we see him as he is, the Savior of our souls, over all and in all; and with the poet we are made to say,

"My Spirit looks to God alone,
My Rock, my refuge is his throne;
In all my fears, in all my straits,
My soul on his salvation waits."

These words of the poet are beautiful to the child of God; for in them is expressed what he hopes the Lord in his grace and mercy hath revealed unto him. Hope in Jesus.

Yours in this precious hope,

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES—DEAR BRETHREN:—I read the SIGNS with profit and encouragement, and each issue seems to unfold some precious truth which is always profitable to the saints. I feel so barren that I do not think I could offer anything of any profit to the saints; but there is a word in the New Testament which I have thought a great deal about, and have searched for the meaning and import. I was reading the other day a book written on the subject of Phineas and his javelin, or the javelin of Phineas, and submit the writer's definition. The word is Nicolaitans. There are various opinions about the meaning, and the doctrine held by them. In Revelation ii. 6, 15, we read, "But this thou hast, that thou hatest the deeds of the Nicolaitans, which I also hate." "So hast thou also them that hold the doctrine of the Nicolaitans, which thing I hate." There were advocates of this doctrine both in the church of Ephesus and Pergamos. The book to which I refer is written by William Lincoln, of England, published in 1863. He gives as the Greek meaning of the word Nicolaitans, "Those who put down or conquer the laity or people." In fine his definition is clerical dominition; and he quotes such passages as, "I wrote unto the church; but Diotrephes, who loveth to have the pre-eminence among them, receiveth us not. Wherefore if I come I will remember his deeds which he doeth, prating againt us with malicious words; and not content therewith, neither doth he himself receive the brethren, and forbiddeth them that would, and casteth them out of the church."—3 John 9, 10. "But Jesus called them unto him and said, Ye know that the Gentiles exercise dominion, and they that are great exercise authority upon them. But it shall not be so among you; but whosoever will be great among you, let him be your minister; and whosoever will be chief among you, let him be your servant."—Matt. xx. 25–27. Again, in 1 Peter v. 3, besides other references, set forth the spirit of the doctrine which Jesus said he hated. Clerical or ministerial dominition over the brethren, self-superiority, and a certain caste, which is abhorrent to the Lord, seems to be his definition of the word, and the doctrine of the Nicolaitans. Watchfulness in this seems to be enjoined in the Scriptures of truth, both in the ministry and all the church.

Yours in hope,

W. LIVELY.

DEAR BROTHER BEEBE:—Allow me to say that I am well pleased with the SIGNS. I am pleased with brother Chick's editorial work. I am more than pleased with your course in republishing the old editorials of your illustrious father; every one of them is worth the subscription price. I consider his writings of more value to lovers of truth than any productions of the pen extant, the Bible alone excepted.

I would say to the many brethren who have written to me for my views upon different portions of the Scriptures that I have found it impossible for different reasons to comply with their requests. An endeavor to write upon all the subjects suggested would monopolize too much of the paper; besides, I cannot devote all my time to writing; but the most prominent reason of all is my inability in the knowledge of spiritual things.

I have been struggling with unbelief more for the past year than at any other period of my life. I have so little satisfactory evidence that I have ever known the truth. Please insert this beautiful hymn, which expresses sentiments that I am sometimes brought to feel:

"Away, my unbelieving fear!
Fear shall in me no more have place.
My Savior does not yet appear;
He hides the brightness of his face.
But shall I therefore let him go,
And basely to the tempter yield?
No! in the name of Jesus, no!
I never will give up my shield.

"Although the vine its fruit deny,
Although the olive yield no oil,
The withering fig tree droop and die,
The fields elude the tiller's toil,
The empty stall no herd afford,
And perish all the bleating race,
Yet will I triumph in the Lord,
The God of my salvation praise.

"Barren although my soul remain,
And not one bud of grace appear,
No fruit of all my toil and pain,
But sin, and only sin, is here;
Although my gifts and comforts lost,
My blooming hopes cut off I see,
Yet will I in my Savior trust,
And glory that he died for me.

"In hope believing against hope,
Jesus, my Lord, my God, I claim;
Jesus, my strength, shall lift me up,
Salvation is in Jesus' name.
To me he soon shall bring it nigh,
My soul shall then outstrip the wind,
On wings of love mount up on high,
And leave the world and sin behind."

I expect to be in New York some time this summer, if the Lord will. I hope you will all have a pleasant and profitable time at your coming association.

Yours most sincerely,

H. M. CURRY.

POSTAL MONEY ORDERS.

BY a recent arrangement of the post-office department nearly every post-office in the United States is now a money order office for at least five dollars; and as it costs but three cents additional to obtain an order of not more than two dollars and fifty cents, or five cents for one not more than five dollars, or eight cents for one not more than ten dollars, and so on in proportion to amount of order, we request that all remittances be sent us by post-office money-order. You simply give the money you wish to send to your postmaster, and he will give you a money-order for that amount. You will inclose the order which he gives you in your letter to us; and if it should be lost in the mail you can get another one from your postmaster without additional charge. Please be sure to have the order made payable at Middletown, N. Y., and never at New York City, as that place is nearly a hundred miles from our place, and it puts us to considerable extra trouble and expense to get them cashed at the New York City office.

As will be seen from the above, an order for five dollars or less can be obtained cheaper than registering a letter, while an order not exceeding ten dollars costs but the same amount; and remitting by money order is a much safer way than sending by registered letter, as the postal department is not responsible for loss of registered letters, but money orders can be duplicated.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

Mrs. Mary A. Holman departed this life Jan. 5th, 1895, at the residence of her daughter, Mrs. Jennie Cyrus.

She was born in Holt Co., Mo., March 30th, 1823. She was united in marriage with Francis M. Holman on August 22d, 1839, with whom she crossed the plains to California in 1852, where they resided nine years. They then removed to Texas, where they remained until the close of the war, when they started to Missouri. On the way her husband was killed by a band of robbers, who despoiled them of nearly all their earthly possessions, and she reached her father (Samuel Crowley) in Missouri in nearly a destitute condition. In 1869 she came to Oregon with her father and brother, where she resided until the time of her death.

Although she had been a patient sufferer for many years, and had been disabled by rheumatism so that she had been unable to walk for nearly six months prior to her death, yet her last illness was quite sudden and of short duration, when she passed away calmly and peacefully into the arms of her Savior, leaving two daughters, Mrs. Jennie Cyrus and Ella Curl, to mourn their loss.

She united with the Primitive Baptist Church in early life, and was a faithful and consistent christian until death. Our loss of a dear mother is to her a great and eternal gain, and these words comfort us, "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them." "Blessed are the pure in heart; for they shall see God."

"THE days of our years are threescore years and ten; and if by reason of strength they be fourscore years, yet is their strength labor and sorrow; for it is soon cut off, and we fly away."—Psalm xc. 10.

I again feel under obligation to send for publication through the SIGNS OF THE TIMES the departure of another out of this world, Miss Elizabeth Lowe, in the 92d year of her age, who was generally known in the neighborhood of Rock Springs, Lancaster Co., Pa., where she lived, I believe, all these years, as "Aunt Betsy," making no public profession, although while able she attended meeting at Rock Springs. Having fallen a number of years ago, she was disabled, and was never able afterward to walk. She was confined to her bed, but was in the hands of kind friends, where every attention was given her by her nephew and wife. She was the last branch of that generation to which she belonged, leaving, I believe, two nephews and a niece. She was much respected where known, having lived long on the earth, and passed through many sore trials which lay in her pathway, until life became a burden. Worn out with age and infirmities, she often expressed a wish, if it were the Lord's will, to take her away. She was of a patient and quiet disposition, having no harm to say of or about any one, which indeed was characteristic of the entire generation. She passed quietly and, I understand, suddenly away when the time came; but the truth embraced in the verse quoted at the head of this notice was, I think, fully realized by her.

The writer of this notice was requested to attend on the occasion of her funeral; and after some remarks at the meeting-house in Rock Springs she was gathered unto her people, to await the changing of this vile body, and the fashioning of it like unto the glorious body of the Redeemer.

WM. GRAFTON.

FOREST HILL, Md.

DIED—At her home in Herndon, Fairfax Co., Va., April 10th, 1895, Mrs. Courtney A. Hutchison, aged 62 years, 7 months and 11 days.

Sister Hutchison was baptized in the fellowship of the Mt. Zion Church, Loudoun Co., Va., in June, 1867, by Elder R. C. Leachman. Her death occurred very suddenly, apoplexy being the cause assigned. Not more than half an hour after her son, Mr. Andrew Hutchison, and his wife had left the room where she was employed about her household duties, and apparently in her usual health, they returned and found her lying upon the floor quite dead, without any sign of struggle or suffering. Though thus suddenly cut off without warning, we are assured that she was prepared, as all the Lord's people are prepared, not by her own works and righteousness, but by the grace of God and faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. Sister Hutchison was a faithful member of the church, loving the assembly of the saints, and filling her place in that assembly when able to do so. Her love of the truth was uncompromising, and every point of it was dear to her. Those only were her brethren, in the rich fullness of the term, who were built together with her upon the doctrine and order of the gospel, Christ himself being the chief corner. Such members are very useful in the church, and are sadly missed when called away. In early life sister Hutchison was left a widow with one child, a son, who to-day witnesses to a mother's faithful love and tender care, and who sadly feels his loss. May the grace of God sustain him, and the brothers, sisters and many friends who are left in this land of the dying.

Affectionately yours,

J. N. BADGER.

ALDIE, Va., May 3, 1895.

SISTER Susannah Dunlap was born in Carter Co., Tenn., April 15th, 1819. In October, 1828, when but nine years of age, she moved with her parents to Sangamon Co., Ill., where she has since resided. On May 15th, 1835, she was united in marriage to Benjamin F. Brown, with whom she lived happily until Feb. 21st, 1866, when death claimed him as his own. During their period of married life seven children were born to them, five of whom are now living, namely, Mrs. Minnie Allen, of Humphreys, Mo., Mrs. Kate McClelland, of Watson, Kansas, Mrs. Sarah McClelland, of Springfield, Ill., Mr. John Brown, of Eureka Springs, Ark., and Mrs. Anna Taylor, of Cantrall, Ill., with the latter of whom she had made her home for the past twenty-eight years. She was one of a family of ten children, Mrs. Edna Brown, of Chicago, being the only one surviving her. Her death was very sudden, although she had been in poor health for the past three years. She became a member of the Old School Baptist Church about nineteen years ago, whose rules and discipline she lived by faithfully until her death. Her last illness was very brief. Dur her last hours she was wholly unconscious. She passed away quietly at seven o'clock Tuesday morning, April 30th, 1895, at the age of 76 years and 15 days. She leaves many friends and relatives, who will mourn their loss as that of a mother.

The funeral services were held at the house of Mrs. Taylor, at ten o'clock a. m., May 2d, 1895, and were conducted by Elder John L. Scott, of Pleasant Plains, Ill., who preached from 1 Corinthians xv. 55–57. Our departed sister was truly devoted to the love of Christ and his church.

In hope of eternal life,

JOHN L. SCOTT.

Adam Ficas, the subject of this notice, was born in Greenbrier Co., Va., July 17th, 1799. His parents moved to Henderson Co., Ky., and died there, leaving brother Ficas to care for his sister when young. In 1818 he with his sister came to Boone Co., Mo., and while living there he was married to Miss Susan McDonald. In 1824 they moved to Indiana, and in 1836 to Johnson Co., Mo., where he remained until death. His wife died in 1875, and he afterward was married to Elizabeth Bowman, who survives him.

Brother Ficas joined the Regular Predestinarian Baptist Church called Charity on the fourth Saturday in June, 1847, and was baptized by Elder James Fuel on the fourth Saturday in July following. The remainder of his life was spent in looking forward to the time when God would say, "Come up higher," and that was on Jan. 6th, 1895, when he bade farewell to all the troubles of this life. On the 8th the writer met the bereaved family and a large assembly of friends gathered at the meeting-house on his farm, and tried to speak words of comfort to them; after which we laid his body away in the graveyard a short distance from the house to await the glorious morn of the resurrection. We feel that our loss is his gain, and may God enable us to be submissive to all his work, for it is right.

J. T. BARNES.

BROTHER William Lindsey died at his residence in Middletown, N. Y., on Friday a. m., May 10th, 1895, of kidney disease, in the 72d year of his age.

Deceased was born in Trowbridge, England, and came to this country nearly fifty years ago. He was married to Miss Jane Rogers in December, 1849, who died August 9th, 1894, while the husband and only daughter were visiting relatives and friends in England. They are survived by two sons and one daughter. Brother Lindsey and his companion united with the Old School Baptist Church many years ago, and at the time of their death were members of the church in this city, loved and esteemed by all their kindred in Christ.

The funeral services were held at his late residence on Sunday, the 12th, and were conducted by his pastor, Elder Benton Jenkins, in the presence of a large gathering of sorrowing relatives and friends; after which all that was mortal of the loved one was deposited in the cemetery here, known as "Hillside," by the side of his faithful and loving wife, who preceded him only about nine months. May the Lord comfort the sorrowing and bereaved ones.—ED.

Mr. Charles Merchant died at the home of brother James and sister Fannie Baldwin, near Mt. Gilead, Loudoun Co., Va., March 24th, 1895.

"Uncle Charley" had reached the age of ninety-four years, passing all the changes from childhood to tottering age without an enemy among men, known only as an honest man, a faithful friend and a good citizen. Could fairer wreath by human hand be placed on any tomb? For two years he had weekly waited for the summons, suffering much, but bearing all with sublime patience. His hope in the life eternal was strong, and when the boundary line was reached he entered the mystic shadow of the better land in the full faith of the redeemed of the Lord.

M.

Mrs. Deborah Wallington, widow of Edward Wallington, passed from this life at her home in Ann Arbor, Mich., on Tuesday, April 30th, 1895.

She was born Feb. 8th, 1813, at Ludgershall, England, where she passed her early life. She was married to Edward Wallington in 1834, a few months after which both husband and wife united with the Old School Baptist faith, to which she adhered until her death. Her husband passed away Oct. 8th, 1867. They came from Ludgershall to Lodi in 1847, where they lived until 1852, when they moved to a larger farm near Saline, where she lived until 1868. She then moved to Ann Arbor to live with her daughter, Mrs. R. L. Speechly, remaining there until the angel of death bore her away to the better land above.

She leaves three children to mourn their loss: Mrs. Thomas Blake, Mrs. R. L. Speechly and Leouard C. Wallington. She was a modest, unassuming woman, always showing her kind, loving, gentle christian character.

PICTORIAL HISTORY

OF THE

UNITED STATES.

By James D. McCabe.

This work is no dry mass of details—no bombastic effort to inflame the national pride, but a vivid and brilliant narrative of the events of our history, from the discovery of the American Continent down to thepresent time. It gives a most interesting account of the Indians of North America, from the time of the coming of the white men. The voyages of Columbus and explorations and discoveries of the different nations of Europe are related with graphic power. Every step of our colonial history is traced with patient fidelity, and the sources of those noble and, we trust, enduring institutions, which have made our country free and great, are shown with remarkable clearness. Then follows a clear and succinct account of our great Struggle for Independence, and the establishment of the Federal Union—the events of our career from the close of the Revolution to the administration of Harrison.

The work is printed from plain, new type, on fine calendered paper, and comprised in one octavo volume of 960 pages. It is splendidly embellished with nearly 500 fine engravings, embracing battles and other historical scenes, portraits of distinguished men, views of our principal cities, &c., &c.

Bound in Fine Silk Cloth, Plain Edges, $2.00, Post-paid.

SALVATION.

"We have a strong city; salvation will God appoint for walls and bulwarks."—Isa. xxvi. 1. "Violence shall no more be heard in thy land, wasting nor destruction within thy borders; but thou shalt call thy walls Salvation, and thy gates Praise."—Isa. lx. 18.

Brother E. D. Varnes, of Cramer, Ill., has requested me to give my views on the following Scripture, "Therefore we ought to give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard, lest at any time we should let them slip. For if the word spoken by angels was steadfast, and every transgression and disobedience received a just recompense of reward, how shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation; which at the first began to be spoken by the Lord, and was confirmed unto us by them that heard him?"—Heb. ii. 1–3. In attempting to give views on any portion of the testimony of the word, it is highly important to be sustained by the testimony itself, proving Scripture by Scripture; and the words of Jesus and the apostles, as well as the prophets, are of vital moment in considering what any portion of Scripture may mean. I think this book called Hebrews is a wonderful book, unlike any other book in some particulars, and no doubt particularly adapted to the believing Jews, to whom it is supposed to be addressed. We notice that there are many things contrasted throughout this epistle. First, the writer speaks of God as speaking unto the fathers by the prophets, and hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things, by whom also he made the worlds. Here the prophets are contrasted with the "Messenger of the covenant," showing the great superiority of the person speaking, in that he is so much better than they, and by inheritance has obtained a more excellent name. In the further perusal of this book we find the law held up in contrast with the gospel; the priesthood of Levi with that of Jesus Christ; the offerings under the law or old covenant with that of the new covenant, and of the efficiency of the offering of our Lord once for all his people; and by that one offering he hath perfected forever them that are sanctified. Seeing we have such an High Priest, who is also our King and Lawgiver, the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth, whom the angels are commanded to worship, and who, being the brightness of God's glory, and the express image of his person, "Therefore we ought to give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard, lest at any time we should let them slip." Not be like those wicked husbandmen to whom was let the Lord's vineyard, who would not receive nor hear the Lord's servants, but evil entreated them, until the Lord sent his only begotten Son and Heir as a last resort, and as one they ought to hear; but the result was the same. They thought to take the vineyard or kingdom by force; and as a crowning work in their favor, as they thought, they said, "This is the heir; come, let us kill him, and let us seize on his inheritance." But in their zeal, which was not according to knowledge, to build up for themselves an inheritance or house, they were disobedient in every instance, rejected all that had rightful authority over them, even to the builder and the head stone of the corner. But in this is exemplified the manifold wisdom and power of God; and his decrees are manifested, and his prophecy fulfilled, that the wrath of man shall praise him, and the remainder he will restrain. In that, "The stone which the builders rejected, the same is become the head of the corner. This is the Lord's doing, and it is marvelous in our eyes." What they thought to do for their own advancement was turned to their discomfort, and they were thwarted in the purpose which they had in view. In all cases when man is left to his own judgment, and standing in his own strength, he will be full of selfishness, and will act according to selfish motives; and nothing short of the grace of God will ever restrain man from doing evil, or constrain him to deny himself, take up his cross, and follow Jesus. That is, to "present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service." Crucify the old man, and put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness. The apostle uses the words, "more earnest," in relation to heed, as if it were of the utmost importance to heed the things which we have heard. It is sometimes thought, or spoken of, that we all have heard and know the will of God; that God has commanded us through the Scriptures, and we can simply read what God says to us; but I do not understand that to be a command. When God speaks to us experimentally, it is his command to us. We may read and re-read in the Scriptures what he says about persons and things, but until the written word has life in it to us, it remains dead to our conscience, and we cannot obey its precepts; hence God gives the word, and with it the power to obey; for "to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams." Obedience, or to heed what God has said by the mouth of his Son, is a happy and joyful privilege; and it is evident that if we be able to give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard, that they will not slip, because they are lettered by the finger of our God in the fleshly tablet of our hearts, and cannot be erased. This is the holy record, "A seed shall serve him, and it shall be accounted to him for a generation."

"For if the word spoken by angels was steadfast, and every transgression and disobedience received a just recompense of reward." The law exacted perpetual obedience; and as the law was a shadow of things to come, shall the substance be less exacting or more imperfect? Nay. "For by one offering he hath perfected forever them that are sanctified." The law was holy, just and good, because it emanated from God; and for the purpose for which God designed it, it was good and holy and just. Paul says, "The law made nothing perfect; but the bringing in of a better hope did." If the law required constant and exact obedience, and made nothing perfect, what did it do? Among the things under the law we find the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but not of the purifying of the conscience. The things promised under the keeping of the law were all temporal. And more than this, we find that it was the ministration of death. Not that death was not in the world, but that sin was in the world before the law was given by Moses; and the law entered that offenses might abound. In the ministration of death there was glory so bright that the Israelites could not behold the face of Moses. How much more glorious is the ministration of life through Jesus Christ our Lord. There were no things under the law that shadowed forth things in the gospel but that they were inferior to the things which they represented in the substance; and as the shadow is compared to the substance, which substance is the cause of the shadow, so are the things pertaining to the law dispensation compared to the things pertaining to the kingdom of grace. Now, if every transgression and disobedience received a just recompense of reward, and the kingdom of grace requires as much or more as pertaining to obedience, where is there any hope for a mortal to obey? Yet, there is one way, and only one, and it is through Jesus, who is the way, the truth and the life. There is a sense in which perfect obedience was rendered, and all his members were with him in that obedience. "For both he that sanctifieth and they who are sanctified are all of one, for which cause he is not ashamed to call them brethren." But in the sense in which we desire to speak more particularly to-day it is in heeding his commands and walking before him in the fear of the Lord. We are weak; we have no strength to perform that which is well pleasing to our mind; for to will is present, but how to perform that which is good we find not. Jesus comes to us and says, "Without me ye can do nothing." Do we believe this? I sometimes fear that we are forgetful where our strength is, and begin to think, and even to teach, that we have a great deal of strength delegated to us, so that there is no mystery connected with the salvation of sinners, or of their obedience in the kingdom of grace, and that we can simply do any and all things written in the Bible for the saints to do, or what good men tell us to do, because of the fact that we are living children. Now, this seems very reasonable; and if we could confine spiritual things to human reason, it seems to me that there would be no warfare in the flesh of the saints, no wrestling for the mastery. But the flesh lusts against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh, so that ye cannot do the things that ye would. If there were no warfare, and we could do all things as they appear to us which should be done, we would have a sufficiency, and would be forgetful of our Master; but as it is, we are weak, and are forced to the throne of grace, or we never would get there. It is the same old, old story, "poor and afflicted people, and they shall trust in the name of the Lord." It is evident that they never would trust in the name of the Lord if they were left to their own choice in the matter. They trust him because they cannot help it. I know that there is much objection to some things that I am speaking about, and some will readily say, What is the use of exhortations if we cannot obey, only as God gives us power to obey? The fact of our obeying is evidence that the Lord is with us; and the testimony holds good, and nothing is lost from its teaching, that we should walk in the Lord's appointed way. I am now reminded of an expression by Elder Durand in a late number of the SIGNS, which I think is to the point. He says, "To insist that the Lord does all the work of salvation of every kind, is a cause for reproach from the world. Yet that is the reason why the Lord's servants have confidence to labor, knowing that whatever the Lord tells them to do he will enable them to do; and he will bless their labor to the good of his people, and to his own glory; for it is he that works in them. Their labor is in the Lord, and therefore it is not in vain. It is by his command, and not of their own will." What the saints are enabled to do, that pertains to this "great salvation," is because they worship God in the Spirit, rejoice in Christ Jesus, and have no confidence in the flesh; for to be carnally minded is death; but to be spiritually minded is life and peace. Of what use are all our outward works, if we only obey through the letter, and not through the Spirit? I conclude that a child of God may do the things contained in the law without realizing the force or pleasant enjoyment attached to the same things that are done by another child who at the time of doing feels the weight and holy privilege of thus obeying from the heart the things indelibly written there at that moment. I do not entertain the idea that we have power delegated to us in spiritual things; but it is thus with us, "day by day," here a little, and there a little. "Day unto day uttereth speech, night unto night sheweth knowledge." The outward man perisheth, but the inward man is renewed day by day. In Jesus' instruction as to how his disciples should pray, he says, "Give us this day our daily bread;" teaching us that we are as babes, dependent upon his bounty for sustenance, and without his pleasure and power we are in darkness. Then how important it is for us to have a right conception of him and of his glorious character; and not, as some who are vainly puffed up by their fleshly mind, not holding the Head, from which all the body by joints and bands, having nourishment ministered, and knit together, increaseth with the increase of God.

Our brother wishes to know particularly, What salvation is meant by the phrase, "great salvation?" The latter clause of the same verse explains it better than I can. "Which [great salvation] at the first began to be spoken by the Lord." What is this salvation but that salvation which Jesus taught? He came to seek and to save that which was lost. He came down from heaven, not to do his own will, but the will of the Father who sent him. "And this is the Father's will which hath sent me, that of all which he hath given me I should lose nothing, but should raise it up again at the last day."—John vi. 39. "For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world, but that the world through him might be saved."—John iii. 17. "My meat is to do the will of him that sent me, and to finish his work."—John iv. 34. "And if any man hear my words, and believe not, I judge him not; for I came not to judge the world, but to save the world."—John xii. 47. "For the Son of man is not come to destroy men's lives, but to save them."—Luke ix. 56. Many other passages of Scripture might be adduced as the language of Jesus, to show that he spoke of that "great salvation" of sinners, and that he was the one who saved; the Savior.

"And was confirmed unto us by them that heard him." From this we understand that the same doctrine of the salvation of sinners, which was spoken by the Lord, was confirmed unto the saints in the early days by them that heard Jesus speak of this great salvation. "God also bearing them witness, both with signs and wonders, and with divers miracles, and gifts of the Holy Ghost, according to his own will."—Heb. ii. 4. There are probably some of our people who think that the above quotations have reference alone to the eternal salvation that is in Christ, and which shall appear to our advantage in the future, and does not have reference to the salvation mentioned in the text. I may be allowed to speak of the opinion of others freely, as I am giving mine. Some make two salvations, and some three. I find that the word save from which this word salvation is formed occurs a great many times in the Scriptures, more than one hundred and twenty-five times; and the word salvation occurs above one hundred times. Both words are variously used. The word salvation, however, has in most instances reference to the work of the Lord in delivering his people from the power of death, or preserving his people unto his heavenly kingdom. The word save, meaning to save, frequently has reference to temporal deliverances, in the Old as well as the New Testament. We might mention a few instances where it seems that the saints have the power to save themselves from evil ways, but with few exceptions the connecting words qualify the same passage, so that the underlying power is readily discovered as really not belonging to them. There is a cause for all the good works of the saints. The true worshipers are the only persons that can be said to bring forth good fruit; and they cannot of themselves produce a single worthy act. There must be a sense of true worship, or else all outward forms are vain and empty. Even the Lord's people are not always permitted to worship in spirit and in truth; but when "in the Spirit on the Lord's day," they realize that they are poor and needy, and desire to give God all the glory, and feel to repeat the closing sentence of the prayer which Jesus taught his disciples, "For thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, forever. Amen." I think the admonition of the apostle in the text, about neglecting so great salvation, has reference to the things pertaining to or in relation to that salvation; for no doubt the persons addressed had the knowledge of the salvation of the Lord, as it is in the Lord Jesus; and as they had been instructed in the law obedience, and of its importance, and as the gospel far excelled the law and the ordinances, so they ought to give the more earnest heed, and not neglect the things spoken by Jesus and them that heard him; that they should not trample on his ordinances, or count his blood an unholy thing; for they had not come unto the mount that might be touched, and that burned with fire, nor unto blackness, and darkness, and tempest; "But ye are come unto Mount Sion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an innumerable company of angels, to the general assembly and church of the firstborn, which are written in heaven, and to God, the Judge of all, and to the spirits of just men made perfect, and to Jesus, the Mediator of the new covenant, and to the blood of sprinkling, that speaketh better things than that of Abel." Seeing we are justified by faith, and not by works (for faith is the evidence of things not seen, the substance of things hoped for), and are in company with all the holy prophets and patriarchs of old, in experience and trials, and are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, "Let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith; who for the joy that was set before him endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God."

KETTERMAN, Mo., April 14, 1895.

LONGVIEW, Texas, Feb. 15, 1895.

DEAR BRETHREN:—I inclose you a couple of letters written by Elder T. Peterson of Ark., which have been (I hope) both comforting and instructing to me, and I have his consent to forward them to you to publish in the SIGNS, if in your judgment they are suitable. One of them was written in 1890, but I conclude that is none the less interesting. May the good Lord continue to give you grace, understanding and wisdom to conduct the SIGNS to the best interests of Zion. Your little brother in hope,

H. B. JONES.

DALARK, Ark., Sept. 26, 1890.

ELDER H. B. JONES—DEAR BROTHER:—Your good and affectionate letter of the 9th instant was by some means delayed so that I did not receive it until the 19th. I was then on the way to attend the South Arkansas Association. I embrace the first opportunity to write since my return. We had a peaceable and enjoyable meeting, and there were present with us ten ordained ministers. The preaching, so far as I heard it, was sound and good. Several of our churches were not represented. But am I rightly thankful to the Giver of all good for the peace which we now enjoy? This is a question that I am not capacitated to answer.

Surely it is not necessary for me to tell you that your good letter was appreciated by me. But it was the more highly appreciated because you treat of a subject that, in time past, has so deeply engaged my own attention, the subject of the old and new man; and because it came from yourself, one who I have come to love, and from whom I was permitted to hear the same principles of divine truth proclaimed that I in my weakness have been trying to contend for during so long a time. Dear brother, you complain of your inability to interest any of the Lord's little ones; but I am trying to write under the feeling that if I could write as interestingly as you can, brother Jones, I would not mind trying. Dear brethren and sisters have inquired of me why I do not write for our papers; but my feelings in regard to my capacity for interesting and instructing in that way are such that they seem to forbid. But it seems necessary, after all, for us to have these feelings, otherwise our old man would become puffed up, and we would begin to strive for the mastery one over another. Besides, we are witnesses of the truth; and in order to bear true testimony it is necessary for us to know the truth. A great many things are believed and proclaimed as truth that are not known. But in order to be a true and competent witness, it is necessary to have personal knowledge of the things testified. Now, in order to testify that all power is of God, we must have personal knowledge of human weakness. We must be personally prepared to testify that there is no power in man, before we can truly testify that God has all power. This we must see and feel for ourselves and in ourselves before we can have the necessary personal knowledge. When the poor sinner first begins to recognize this fact for himself, he thinks the wrath of God is coming upon him; for he knows not yet that it is the goodness of God that leads men to repentance. And, after all these years of (as I hope) spiritual experience, when I am made to feel my own fleshly weakness, deeply and forcibly, I am sometimes ready to conclude that I am deceived in all the claims that I have made before the Lord's people, and fear that I only await the time when the wrath of God will be poured out upon me without mixture. By our experience of weakness being often repeated, we are not permitted to forget that which we have learned. As I have already said, a great many things are believed and testified, or taught, that are not known; and we ourselves, though we assume to know, and sometimes receive such blessed assurance, yet in our hours of spiritual darkness are left to doubt every point of our spiritual experience, except that we are sinners. I have never heard of one denying, nor do I believe that one of God's little ones who has been taught by his Spirit the corruptions of his own human nature, will ever deny their sinfulness, weakness and inability to satisfy God's perfect justice. This is one point of spiritual experience that is so perfectly learned, it seems to me, as never thereafter to admit of doubt. It is known, and may be testified of by him that is exercised therein. A felt sense of this sinfulness, weakness and corruption often comes up to interfere with the poor saint of God, and makes him feel that he is unfit for and incapable of performing the spiritual duties and privileges that fall to his lot. But while he for the time being may feel that he suffers loss through this knowledge of his own condition, yet he is thereby emboldened in his testimony that all power is of God, and that all blessings are of his mercy, and that sinners are saved alone by his free and unmerited favor, or grace. But this, though very important, and, as we have before said, necessary knowledge, is only negative testimony. By this knowledge we testify that we are not our own savior; that we have no power to further our own salvation, much less that of our fellow-man. If our knowledge stopped here, what we would say further would not be testimony, but reason. Then we would reason that, not being able to save or redeem ourselves, if saved or redeemed it must be by another; and as this power belongs not to man, that other known as the Savior or Redeemer must be of higher quality and greater power. But all this further reasoning admits of doubt when I or you or any of God's dear people attempt to apply it to ourselves personally. "If saved," implies doubt; but in the light of the knowledge of our sinfulness this is all we can say. There is a further knowledge necessary in order that we be able to say with the old servant, "I know that my Redeemer liveth." That which was from the beginning, which we have heard, which we have seen with our eyes, which we have looked upon, and our hands have handled, of the Word of life; that which we have seen and heard declare we unto you, that ye also may have fellowship with us; and truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ."—1 John i. 1–3. Now, brother Jones, if I had time to write, this would be my text; but as my sheet is nearly full, and my time nearly up, I must be content with only a few more words, believing you will thereby understand what I mean to convey. Of course I do not think that we see him, and hear his voice, and handle or feel his body, as John and the other apostles did. But each of these expressions has its fulfillment in our inner, new or spiritual man. So that, with us, it is that which we have seen and heard and felt that we declare of the Word of life. There are five senses. People differ very much in two of them—taste and smell. But in seeing and hearing and feeling there is far more general agreement; so that these three senses give the strongest kind of testimony. Apply this to the spirltual man, and may we not thereby give positive (not negative) testimony, and say, "I know that my Redeemer liveth?" And it is by the declaring of this testimony that we have fellowship one with another. To have fellowship with one another is blessed, but O how much more blessed to feel the force of that declaration, "And truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ."

Write soon and often. Give my love to all the brethren and sisters. Yours in much love,

T. PETERSON JR.

DALARK, Ark., Jan. 30, 1895.

DEAR BROTHER:—I received your kind and very welcome letter a week or ten days ago, and now attempt to reply. While I was truly glad to get your letter, and was enabled, I hope, to draw spiritual comfort therefrom, yet it produces a feeling akin to sadness when I attempt a reply, feeling that I have nothing cheering to write; yet almost all my writing is done under just such a state of feeling; and when thereafter I receive a missive from some good brother or sister who, I am unwilling to believe guilty of flattery, commending what I have written, and expressing themselves as comforted thereby, I am led to acknowledge that I do not know when I am in frame for administering comfort. But when I read your request to be allowed to have one or more of my letters put in print, I was made to inquire, What have I written that is worthy of a place in one of our old Baptist periodicals? Of course I cannot remember what I may have written four or five years ago, and so am not prepared to pass judgment on it; and I have often thought that almost any other brother was better able to judge a communication rightly than its author. I have never written anything for publication, because I have never felt the ability to edify and instruct that seems to appear in the writings of most of those of our brethren and sisters whose communications appear in print. But, while that is true, I do not wish to withhold anything from the dear brethren and sisters that will minister to their spiritual comfort; so if any of the Lord's people with whom I correspond find in my poor writings anything that they deem worthy of publication, they have full liberty, as far as I am concerned. I trust, dear brother, that I am humbly thankful for your expressions of appreciation, confidence and fellowship, or rather for the feeling from which those expressions are derived, though much of my time I feel unworthy of the fellowship bestowed upon me. I think you know, dear brother, that that feeling is reciprocated.

After devoting about a page of your letter to a statement of your sense of unworthiness by reason of sin and imperfections, and of the plenitude of God's mercy in your deliverance, all of which so fitly describes my feelings and condition, I was really tempted to copy it and return as a part of my letter, because I could find no words that so exactly set it forth as it is. You ask, "How is it with you, my dear brother?" How can I find words to state myself to one who knows and can tell my every state and condition so well? Yet it is this likeness of feelings that, when set forth so truly that there is no denying it, constitutes the message of comfort, the bond of our union. O! my brother, I can find no words by which I can tell you perfectly how much of my time or how deeply I realize the truth of Paul's language, "If ye live after the flesh, ye shall die." I, too, would long since have fallen, have been a castaway, except that God who changes not and is full of mercy had upheld. Born a sinner, a rebel by nature, that nature is so abundantly manifest in me that I am sure, if saved, it is by the abounding of grace. Nor has grace yet cured or killed my evil nature. While I trust it is grace, or the Spirit of God operating by grace, that has awakened a new and divine life in me, which life is as much allied to righteousness and at war with evil as the old, Adam life is in love with sin and indisposed to righteousness; and thus by contrast and comparison I am by grace taught my evil nature; yet it remains for the old man to die, and thus cease to be a sinner. "For the wages of sin is death." The carnal nature or disposition will not be changed until the life, the sinful life, ceases to exist. But, O glorious thought! what a change, when we shall be raised up by the power of, and enlivened wholly by, that Holy Spirit whose animating and soul-cheering influence I sometimes feel so powerfully while trying to minister to God's dear people and declare his word, as to cause me to inquire, when I have come back a little towards self, Am I beside myself? In consequence of the opposite and warring character of these two living principles I am very much at war with myself. I am either living after the flesh, and so dying, or else I am mortifying the deeds of the body, and humbly trusting that I shall live; and sometimes it seems as though there is a mortal struggle as to which I shall do. "O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" I thank God, who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ.

My health has been very bad of late. My wife also is sick. May God bless you and yours. My love to all the brethren and sisters.

T. PETERSON JR.

P. S.—I have some idea of spending a good portion of next spring and summer in Texas. If I do, I hope to see you all again.

FAIRBURY, Ill., March 20, 1895.

ELDER JENKINS—DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST:—I send you a letter for publication in the SIGNS, if you think best. It contains Elder Chick's views on 2 Peter i. 9, 10. As it has been of interest to me, it will no doubt be of interest to the many readers of the SIGNS. This Scripture is used by Arminians to try to prove that the child of God may fall from grace. The Campbellites teach that a man can be a child of God to-day, and to-morrow a child of the devil, and so on until death. If so, the Savior does not know whether one is his or not, although he died for him; that there is a chance for the devil to beat him out of some of those he purged with his own blood. The apostle says, "For it is impossible for those who were once enlightened, and have tasted of the heavenly gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Ghost, and have tasted the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come, if they shall fall away, to renew them again unto repentance." If the apostle is here correct, which he is, the Campbellite fabric is false, and they teach an impossibility.

MR. J. E. MASTERSON—DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST:—Your request for views in the SIGNS upon 2 Peter i. 9, 10, has been forwarded to me. If you will pardon me, I feel like responding to your request by private letter. My only reason for doing so is that I have very many such requests on hand, and time and space both forbid that I should try to get them all into the SIGNS. I hope you will allow me to write a little upon the text you have named by private letter, and not think hard of me. I trust that you will also remember that I am but a very weak, ignorant man, and liable to misunderstand the Scriptures; yet I have some reflections upon the Scripture that you have named, and feel willing to speak of them.

The apostle Peter is speaking of that which is proper and right for a

THANKS!

IN our issue for May 8th, 1895, on page 149, we published an appeal to our brethren and friends, announcing the necessity of immediate assistance to enable us to sustain the expense of continuing the publication of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. Since then we have received some response from our delinquent subscribers, as well as three donations to sustain the paper, viz.: Philemon Stout, Cotton Hill, Ill., $5; W. H. Barlow, Hobart, N. Y., $1; and Mrs. J. M. Burgher, West Shokan, N. Y., $5. For which we return our sincere thanks.

MATTHEW XXVII. 46.

DEAR FRIENDS:—Will Elders Chick or Jenkins present such views as they have upon that portion of Scripture found in Matthew xxvii. 46, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" for the benefit of the readers of the SIGNS, as well as myself? I desire the truth, not wishing to argue. Yours sincerely,

IRA T. DOLSON.

REPLY.

WE do not feel that we can pass by the above request from our friend, and yet shrink from attempting to write upon the above named Scripture. Next to the last words of the dying Jesus, "It is finished," these words have ever seemed to us most deeply fraught with the weighty things that pertain to our salvation. What wonderful mysteries do these words contain! They were not the mere expression of a feeling of despair extorted from the Redeemer's dying lips by the crushing weight of his sufferings. If they were to be considered in this light only, then we need attach no definite meaning to them, but simply consider them as being merely a cry of pain.

But they were more than this. Jesus uttered them in fulfillment of a prophecy of Scriptnre. By the Holy Ghost speaking through David they were thought worthy of record hundreds of years before.—See the first verse of the twenty-second Psalm. This whole Psalm relates to the promised Messiah, who was expected by the Jews for hundreds of years before he came in human flesh; and the opening verse contains the most fearful and pregnant truth of all those declared in this Psalm. How wonderful is the wisdom of God, the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, and how great he is in working, that he could declare before it came to pass the very words of Jesus as he hung upon the tree! This was not a mere coincidence—a chance fulfillment. Jesus did all things "that the Scriptures might be fulfilled." Neither is this a mere accommodation of the words of the Psalm to the act. It is never so when in the New Testament it is said that these things were done that the Scriptures might be fulfilled. It is a true prophecy and a true fulfillment that we see in all such instances; and so these words in the twenty-second Psalm were not quoted by the Savior because they fitted his case, but they were Jesus' own words, prophesied by David so long before. They were words that must be spoken. The Scripture would not have been fulfilled had they not been spoken.

But we suppose our friend desires especially to know what these words mean. We feel our incompetency to answer this question, but yet we will submit a few considerations. While it seems to us certain that these words meant more than a simple cry of suffering and trouble, yet we have not been able to see that they meant a real withdrawal of the divine nature from him, so that he was at that moment but a mere man. We cannot suppose this, because then it could not have been said that God "laid down his life for us."—1 John iii. 16. Still farther, Jesus could not have truthfully said, "I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again."—John x. 18. Still farther, had the Father so forsaken him that at that moment he was but a man, the offering of his body would have been valueless as an atonement for sin. God must be manifest in the flesh in order that there could be any efficacious atonement at all. Still farther, had he been forsaken of God in such a sense that he was no longer a partaker of the divine nature, then there could have been no sense of loss within his breast, and consequently the awful cry would not have been uttered, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?"

It seems to us that we shall find some light upon these words if we turn back to the twenty-second Psalm, where they were first used. A careful reading of the Psalm shows that it is a full description of the sorrow and shame of the suffering Savior. The Psalm is the language of Jesus himself; yet in some sense David himself could feel the power of these words. The Son of God did not use David as we are now using the senseless pen, which has no fellowship with the writer nor with what is written; but he was in spirit in David, and spoke through David as one who in his measure felt the same things. While holy men of old spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost, yet they themselves also spoke and thought and felt and wondered and searched what the meaning of the Holy Spirit was. As Jesus in former days spoke through men by the Spirit, be so lived in them that they felt in their measure what he felt in the days of his flesh. It seems to us that David when he wrote of Christ, also wrote of himself and of all the people of God as well. Jesus and his people are not disjoined in anything. It need not be thought essential that David at all times knew the full meaning of his own words. Often he might mean to relate but his own experience; but when he did so the Holy Spirit was guiding him to infallibly express the sufferings or the joys of another. We may not know how much of this wonderful twenty-second Psalm David felt to be his own experience. Let that be as it may, it was his own experience in common with all the people of God, in fellowship with the Savior, of whom he wrote. Let these words to which our friend has called our attention be regarded in this light. There may be more in them than that experience which David and all the people of God share, but here at least we feel sure that we are standing upon solid ground.

The oneness of experience between the suffering and victorious Savior and his people has ever been a delightful theme to believers. The one experience grows out of the one life. This life Jesus gives his sheep. This life he is to his chosen. Jesus alone is the quickening Spirit; and so he quickens the dead, and has a right to say, "Because I live, ye shall live also." It is not our purpose to discuss this one life by which every member of his body is made to live in union and communion with him, and which is the life eternal, which once having they shall never die; but we desire to speak of the one experience to which this life gives rise. In doing so let us turn to David again, and read again his language in the Psalm. "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? why art thou so far from helping me, and from the words of my roaring? O my God, I cry in the day-time, but thou hearest not; and in the night season, and am not silent. But thou art holy, O thou that inhabitest the praises of Israel." These words all express a time of trouble and overwhelming distress. The soul is deeply tried and greatly perplexed. There is no felt sense of the presence of God. To the tried one the hardest part of the trial is that God is not near, and that his crying does not seem to be heard. Yet there is perfect confidence in God. Under all the mighty burden and the crying, yet the confession is that God is holy. In it all there is no complaining of injustice. The soul is fixed on this, "God is holy." This was also the spirit of Job. Though tried to the full extent, yet he did not curse God. He could say, "Blessed be the name of the Lord." If we apply the words of this Psalm first of all to David, we see a soul struggling to come nigh unto God, who feels the absence of God to be the greatest trouble of all; who cannot understand why it is thus with himself, but who yet clings fast to the one grandest truth of all, "God is holy." How many troubled, questioning hearts have been quieted by this truth. He is righteous in all his ways, and holy in all his works. He is doing what is right; yet the soul mourns an absent God, and cannot be comforted, except as he shall reveal himself again.

All this goes on in the exercise of the child of God himself. This must be so; for Jehovah is not a man, that he should move from place to place. He is always everywhere present. In him we live, move, and have our being. Whither shall we flee from his presence? If we make our bed in hell, he is there. So that this language, as it relates to man, does not mean a real personal going away of the Almighty from him; but our eyes are holden, and our hearts are sealed, that we cannot see him. Every child of God believes in his omnipresence, and yet how often we complain that he is absent. Just this, we believe, David experienced and recorded here.

Now, because this seems to us true of David, and true at times in the personal experience of every child of God, we are persuaded that it was also true of the spiritual David, our elder Brother. Of him does the apostle bear testimony through the Holy Spirit that he was tried and tempted in all points like as we are, and yet without any sin being found in him. In order that the Captain of our salvation might be made perfect in our salvation, he must suffer also as we do. Thus, and thus only, could he learn obedience, and become the author of eternal salvation to his chosen; and now in the hour of his extremity, when the hour of darkness had come, and its powers were gathered against him to assail him, he learns yet another trial which belongs to his people. The face of God is hidden from him. It was a part of the cup which he must drink, which he came to drink for us; but as in the garden he in weakness had prayed, "If it be possible, let this cup pass from me," so now he cries out, "Why hast thou forsaken me?" He came to meet this very hour, and yet through the weakness of his flesh he would fain be saved from this hour; but as in the garden the cry of his feebleness was soon changed to the victory which could say, "Not my will, but thine be done," so here on the cross the cry, "Why hast thou forsaken me?" was changed to the glad and exultant cry, "It is finished!"

O how it should and does at times rejoice the heart to know that Jesus knows all our trials, all our darkness, all our feebleness and all our temptations in the one only way in which they can be known, the way of real, personal experience!

One thing more we would call attention to. Though Jesus cried, "Why hast thou forsaken me?" yet the spirit of communion with God still lived, and would not deny nor be denied; therefore he said, "My God, my God." Thus also in the very darkest hour each one of the children of God has in his heart the spirit which ever cries "Abba, Father." They mourn, and are full of questionings often. They cannot see any good; but still they are the children of God, and the spirit of sonship within them continues to bear witness that they are the children of God. The cry of distress is very personal, and so also is the cry of confidence and faith. "Why hast thou forsaken me?" is preceded by the personal cry, "My God, my God."

We would not be understood as claiming that this is all of what these words of Jesus meant. Perhaps some of the richest lessons of the text we have not even had a glimpse of. We have written as far as we felt sure that we were presenting the truth.

We leave these reflections with our friend. We should rejoice to hear from others upon this solemn subject. We trust that our friend knows by experience what the fellowship of Christ's sufferings means. It is our desire that he may also know the joy of this fellowship.

C.

OFFICIAL AUTHORITY OF MINISTERS.

WE rejoice to witness a growing disposition among our brethren to examine well the authority for every practice which has been regarded as belonging to the order of the church of God; but we regret that in doing so any should become wounded by the gibes and unkind insinuations of brethren, whom they love, and from whom they should receive encouragement. While such remarks as "the big head" may be thoughtlessly made by inconsiderate brethren, without designing either to injure the reputation and usefulness of the brother at whose expense they are made, or the cause, we cannot on reflection fail to see that such is the inevitable tendency; and not only so, but also to gender strife, alienation of affection, and sometimes retaliation. If brethren cannot freely express the conviction of their minds without exposing themselves to ridicule, the timid among them will be induced to act insincerely, by seeming to approve those things which in reality they are dissatisfied with, instead of opening their minds so as to receive the benefit of a fair discussion of such doubtful matters. If it were as easy for us to come up to the perfect standard ourselves as to see defection in the walk or productions of others, we might boast over them.

There are six questions proposed on which the opinion of the brethren is desired; and as allusion is made to our published views on the same subject, brother W. may expect from us, as well as others, a candid reply. There are, however, so many subjects submitted by other brethren that we have room only for a very brief reply.

1. To the first query we are certain we shall express not only our own, but also the united decision of all the church of God, when we say, The church has no right to originate or adopt rules for the government of her members which are not authorized by the New Testament.

2. It was right for the apostles to baptize believers wherever they found them. But it must be observed that the ministers in the church at this day are not all apostles, setting on the twelve thrones and judging the twelve tribes. The apostles commenced baptizing before the gospel church was organized; but even then it is presumed they availed themselves of the concurrent judgment of their brethren in regard to experiences, wherever it was practicable. A few brethren together at one place, or in a house, were considered a church, without any formal organization, and candidates were admitted to the ordinance with the full concurrence of their united judgment. Peter, at the house of Cornelius, submitted the question, "Who shall forbid water?" &c. As none appeared to forbid or object, he administered. Those baptized on pentecost were steadfast in the apostles' doctrine. The apostles, or any one of them, were competent to determine whether their doctrine was received by the candidate; but as many brethren as can be convened for the purpose are not too many now to determine whether a candidate is in the apostles' doctrine or not.

3. In many instances we think it is wrong for the ministers at this day to baptize candidates wherever they may find them. Should the writer of this reply be traveling in the vicinity of Lebanon, O., and there meet with one or more, who gave him satisfactory evidence of regeneration, and he without consultation with the church and pastor of that place should proceed to baptize them, we should expect the Lebanon church and their pastor to conclude that we had some symptoms of the "big head." Or if in the vicinity of any other church of our order, or any number of the brethren and sisters of our order, we should feel that it was due to such church or such brethren to ask if any could forbid water.

But brother W. demands, "If wrong, point to the divine rule violated." This is demanding negative proof; still we are much mistaken if even the negative rule cannot be found in the admonitions, "Be of one mind." "Let nothing be done through strife or vain glory." "Let all things be done decently and in order." Where a minister will persist in acting on his individual responsibility and refuse the concurrence of his brethren, we candidly think some if not all the divine rules above mentioned are violated.

4. The church is to judge. If she gives the right hand of fellowship to Saul and Barnabas to go out as itinerant ministers into distant parts, remote from the church or any brethren of the faith, she confides to them, as her servants, authority to judge of the evidences of conversion to the faith, and, if satisfied, to baptize them; but when did the church ever give such authority to her pastor, as such, whose peculiar work is to take the oversight of the flock, and minister in her immediate connection, and under her immediate supervision? It has been the practice of our ministers, so far as our information extends, when traveling as itinerant preachers into distant parts where there are no churches or brethren of our order, to baptize such candidates as gave them satisfactory evidence that they were the proper subjects of that ordinance. But when a church or any number of brethren can be convened to hear and judge, it has always been considered the safer and more scriptural way, and much better calculated to secure harmony and peace in the churches.

5. The apostles, though setting on thrones of judgment over the spiritual tribes of Israel, were servants of the churches, and in no instance acted independently of the churches, where the concurrence of the churches could be obtained; from which we infer that it is far more becoming in the ordinary ministers of the gospel to show that respect to the churches.

6. We have no instance recorded, as we have before intimated, where the apostles acted without the concurrent judgment and decision of the church, when it was practicable for them to receive it. And in those extraordinary cases, we find even the apostles returning to the church with a report of what they had done, which was submitted for the approval and concurrence of the church.

It may be well to inquire what would be the practical effect if the pastors of our churches should take on them the sole responsibility of hearing and judging experiences, and of baptizing all such as they could approve, and then leave all such as they baptize to apply for membership afterward. Should the church fail to be satisfied with the experience or faith of the applicant, a difficulty arises between the church and the pastor, as also between the pastor and the rejected baptized person; or else the church must yield up the whole business of receiving members to the judgment and decision of the pastor. In either case confusion and disorder would inevitably ensue. We have known instances where candidates have been examined before the church, and the pastor has expressed his full satisfaction; but the church, failing to be satisfied, have rejected the applicants. If, according to the order of our churches, unanimity is essential in the reception of members (and we would give but little for the harmony of a church where that is not the case), the church must have a voice in deciding upon the confession of faith and evidence of regeneration made by the applicant for baptism.

POSTAL MONEY ORDERS.

BY a recent arrangement of the post-office department nearly every post-office in the United States is now a money order office for at least five dollars; and as it costs but three cents additional to obtain an order of not more than two dollars and fifty cents, or five cents for one not more than five dollars, or eight cents for one not more than ten dollars, and so on in proportion to amount of order, we request that all remittances be sent us by post-office money-order. You simply give the money you wish to send to your postmaster, and he will give you a money-order for that amount. You will inclose the order which he gives you in your letter to us; and if it should be lost in the mail you can get another one from your postmaster without additional charge. Please be sure to have the order made payable at Middletown, N. Y., and never at New York City, as that place is nearly a hundred miles from our place, and it puts us to considerable extra trouble and expense to get them cashed at the New York City office.

As will be seen from the above, an order for five dollars or less can be obtained cheaper than registering a letter, while an order not exceeding ten dollars costs but the same amount; and remitting by money order is a much safer way than sending by registered letter, as the postal department is not responsible for loss of registered letters, but money orders can be duplicated.

INQUIRIES AFTER TRUTH.

WILL Elder Wm. L. Beebe give his views through the SIGNS upon the Scripture found in Luke xiv. 28–32, and oblige an inquirer after truth?

J. A. TEAGUE.

LAMONTE, Mo.

ELDER BEEBE—DEAR BROTHER:—Elder John Martin wants you to give your views through the SIGNS on Luke ix. 57–62. He is at war with Arminianism, and wants you to help him. I hope the Lord will give you light and understanding.

Yours in hope,

WM. G. HOWARD.

CALEDONIA, Mo.

DEAR BROTHER WM. L. BEEBE:—Will you be so kind as to give your views on Matthew x. 34, and oblige a poor, unworthy little brother?

A. H. JETER.

BRECKENRIDGE, Texas.

child of God to remember and do. He is (verse 5) to be diligent in the divine life, to add to it the things properly belonging to that life; and (verse 8) if these things be in us and abound, we shall be neither barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of the Lord. In other words, this means that there is a manner of life which is becoming to a follower of the Lord, and we should follow after it. If the principles of the gospel of Christ named in verses five, six and seven be in our hearts, let us live them out. All these things are such as become the gospel of Christ.

But if there be any one who in his daily life lacks these things, virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness and charity, and we may say, I think, all that belongs to a child of God, he is blind, he cannot see afar off, and he has forgotten that he was purged from his old sins. "He is blind." We say sometimes of a man who has done foolishly, "He is blind to his own interests." So here a child of God who is not diligent to add the things named above to his faith is very foolish and blind. He is blind to his own spiritual welfare, blind to his privileges in the house of God, and blind to all the obligations that rest upon him. He "cannot see afar off." He is just living for the present. Esau could not see afar off when he sold his birthright for a mess of pottage. In his hunger he regarded the present only. So the believer who does not attend to his daily obligations cannot see what will be the result; at least he acts as though he took no thought for the consequences. In the spring-time he has no thought of a coming harvest-time, and therefore he does not sow his seed. Such an one does not see that as he sows, so shall he reap. He "has forgotten that he was purged from his old sins." He acts in that way. He forgets his high calling. That Jesus has died for him does not seem to have much weight with him. He lives as do men of the world who know not the grace of God at all. He is a child of God, he has been purged from his old sins, but now he acts as though he had forgotten all about it. This is all wrong. It is dishonoring to the holy name which they have confessed, and it is harmful to themselves.

"Wherefore the rather, brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure." The word "sure" has the meaning here of firm, steadfast. It does not mean that the calling or election either has been conditional; but being elected and called by grace to the life of faith, virtue, knowledge, &c., give diligence to make that life a firm, steadfast one. With the election and calling themselves the God of heaven alone had to do. These are his works, and, like all his works, done forever; but this life which testifies to this election and calling may be perverted and wavering. Therefore, brethren, give diligence to live as the people of God ought to live. This includes watching unto prayer, lest we enter into temptation. Thousands of darts from the wicked one fly all about us. Thousands of snares are before our feet, and we are weak ourselves; therefore be diligent in these things. Make your calling and election sure, or steadfast, in your practice, in your words and works.

Now, doing this, the apostle says believers shall never fall; that is, they shall not fall from this sureness, this steadfastness of life and conduct. As John says in Revelation, these become pillars in the temple of God, and go out no more forever; and thus (verse 11) they have ministered unto them an abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior. This is in experience here. These grow in grace and knowledge. These become as little children, and so enter the kingdom. There is nothing in this whole Scripture for the conditionalist. It all relates to the believer's life here; and it is profitable for believers to solemnly consider it and meditate upon it.

I have but sketched a few thoughts. I trust that at least they may interest you, and that they may not prove vain words.

I remain your brother in the hope of the gospel,

F. A. CHICK.

WILLIAMSTON, N. C., March 3, 1895.

ELDER F. A. CHICK—MY DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST:—Your welcome, precious letter of Jan. 2d came duly to hand. I greatly appreciate your letters; they are to me rich and comforting. I am an older pilgrim than you, yet I feel that you are far ahead of me in the divine life; but I feel that I can say Amen to what you write. My own emptiness and poverty are so great that I need not express it; for, as you say, if I did it would be all the while; for truly I am poor and needy. But, sweet and blessed truth, our dear Savior, our precious Redeemer, is rich and is perfect, and behind his cross may all his dear afflicted ones hide. His righteousness is their righteousness; and when we can look to him, and trust in him as our all and in all, we find a sweet resting-place. If our life is hid with Christ in God, all is well; and when he shall appear, we shall appear with him in glory. Blessed hope in Jesus! And when we can feel to exalt him, and glory in his cross, his perfect and complete salvation, how blessed. I do desire at times to be more fully absorbed in the love of Jesus. He is worthy of all our affections and desires; yet we are so helpless in ourselves, like a helpless infant; so I need this precious, almighty Savior all the while to teach me and lead me all along my pilgrimage. I feel that he has sustained and upheld me even down to old age, and may I not still hope in his mercy and love, although so unworthy? I do feel that I am nearing my journey's end. I can say truly that the world in itself looks empty and vain. It has no real charms to me. Yet the works of God look wonderful as I look abroad upon earth, and above to behold the starry heavens, and I am lost in wonder and admiration, and feel ready to exclaim, "What a God is our God!" And these words are in my mind so much by day and by night of late, "Trust in the Lord forever; for in the Lord Jehovah is everlasting strength." We may well trust in him and praise him evermore. We have had much snow for us within four weeks past, and as the snow would fall the words of the prophet would rush into my mind with much force and sweetness, "As the rain cometh down, and the snow from heaven, and returneth not thither, but watereth the earth, and maketh it bring forth and bud, that it may give seed to the sower and bread to the eater, so shall my word be that goeth forth out of my mouth; it shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it." What encouragement to all God's servants to go forth and preach the word. In the hands of their divine Master it will accomplish all he designs. How precious to have that word fall into our hearts! It often encourages and cheers the poor, disconsolate child of grace. The precious word of God does at times drop into my mind with sweet force and consolation, and I hope it is by the Holy Spirit, whose prerogative it is to take of the things of Jesus and show them unto his people. I often inquire, "Is this from the Lord, or have these words just come to me as those I have read?" Do you ever thus question, my dear brother? It often seems that the tempter tries to destry the peace of God's people, thrusting his fiery darts to distress the troubled soul. My mind was much oppressed one morning last week, thinking of my surroundings and my dear ones who are afflicted. I took the Testament with a desire that I might open to something, if it were the Lord's will, to comfort me. I opened to Psalm cxv., and the first words on which my eye rested were these, "Ye are blessed of the Lord which made heaven and earth." Then I cast my eye above to the next verse, "The Lord shall increase you more and more, you and your children." I was filled full, and my eyes overflowed with tears, and I inquired, "Lord, is this for me?" O! my dear brother, am I the Lord's, or am I not? is the question with me. I do not feel like writing, as I am too barren to write to you whose mind is so richly laden. I trust you will pardon my folly and cast a mantle of charity over all. We are much troubled and afflicted. I am now staying with my dear daughter.

My dear brother, how pained I am to see or hear of any discord among God's dear people, who should be of one heart and one mind. May the blessed King of Zion appear by the power of his Holy Spirit and pour upon his church the showers of love and peace and harmony in the truth, and may brotherly love fill every heart, to the glory of his blessed name. I think we have fallen upon trying times, both politically and religiously. Do you not think so? I am glad, dear brother, that you are connected with the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. I trust great wisdom may be given you; and may you, with all the servants of Christ, be "wise as serpents and harmless as doves." Write me, dear brother, when you feel that you can. I am always glad to hear from you. Excuse this, I beg, as I can hardly see. Pray for me.

Your aged sister in Christ,

M. M. HASSELL.

DANSVILLE, N. Y., April 16, 1895.

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES:—The question often occurs to me, Do I love the Lord? And when I apply the text, "This is the love of God, that we keep his commandments," I find the evidence against me; for I find myself coming so far short of that obedience which is the fruit of love that I involuntarily consign myself to the ranks of those who receive not the things of the Spirit of God, neither know them. Then, I ask myself, why is it that I so frequently find myself in mental contemplation of the mysteries of grace and of redemption from sin? It cannot be because I have any personal interest involved in it, but, more likely, because of a worldly, prying curiosity, common to the restless intellect of human nature. Thus I reason with myself and come to various conclusions in regard to whether I know anything experimentally of the Spirit's work in my heart. When I contemplate the works of creation it seems quite reasonable that some infinite power with equal intelligence must have originated the universe and continued its existence, controlling and directing its movements in all its multifarious details, so that nothing transpires without his knowledge or contrary to his eternal purpose, which he purposed in himself before the world was. How it can appear otherwise to any rational being is difficult to conceive. When I contemplate that important tragedy in the garden of Eden, with its fatal consequences to the family of man, I cannot separate it from other events transpiring under the immediate control of him who declares the end from the beginning, and says, "My counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure." His watchcare is over all his works alike, both in the realms of nature and of spirit; and no surprise or disappointment resulted from the disobedience of our first parents, but proved an opportunity to inform the parties of the enmity that should exist between the seed of the serpent and the seed of the woman, and to give a premonition of his purpose of grace toward fallen man, in the declaration that the seed of the woman should bruise the serpent's head, and "thou shalt bruise his heel." Subsequent history records innumerable manifestations of that enmity, not only in the constant persecutions to which the saints have been subjected, from the murder of Abel down to the crowning act of infamy in the crucifixion of Christ, but by the constant warfare waged against the saints in all their earthly pilgrimage and experience, thus verifying the declaration, "Thou shalt bruise his heel." These declarations indicate to my mind that there is a scheme by which man is to be rescued from the jaws of death, and from the condemnation under which he fell by his disobedience. This view is substantiated by the prophets and apostles in subsequent ages, and no reasoning mind can come to any other conclusion, if the Bible is accepted as testimony on the subject.

The foregoing fragmentary specimens of my meditations are submitted to your consideration and disposal, with a desire to know whether it is or is not possible for one not born of the Spirit to reason in the same line of contemplation. I sometimes think it is, and yet I hope it is not. Thus I find "Doubling Castle" a very uncomfortable abode, still I subscribe myself,

Yours for the truth,

P. WEST.

WAVERLY, Pa., May 20, 1895.

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES—DEAR BRETHREN:—I am requested by several to make a statement through the SIGNS, giving the reasons why the Chemung Association has dissolved or disbanded.

One important reason is that it covers so much territory. There are fourteen churches, and from extreme points, east, west, north and south, they are from two to three hundred miles apart. When the Association was held with the churches in extreme points but few were able to attend; at least but few did attend, and bore the burden of the association mainly. Another reason is, we believe that three or four two-days meetings in the bounds of the association will be far more beneficial to all concerned than the association, and with much less formality or business.

We think that these two reasons are sufficient to satisfy all, though we have several more if needed. We hope that the brethren of our former correspondence will continue to come amongst us as heretofore. Our love and fellowship for you is the same, and we desire the love and fellowship of our dear brethren everywhere. When convenient come and worship with us. The following churches will unite to hold a two-days meeting in the eastern section of what was the Chemung Association, to wit, Brookdale, Utica, Delphi, Otego and Abbington; the said meeting to be held in October, as established by the Otego Church several years ago. We hope that the other churches will arrange meetings as soon as convenient.

Primitive Monitor, Zion's Landmark and Gospel Messenger please copy.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

Mrs. Nancy Jones, widow of Elder Samuel Jones, of Bath Co., Ky., was born in Virginia, March 18th, 1802, and at the age of three years was brought by her parents to Kentucky, where she spent a long, eventful and useful life, which was brought gently and peacefully to a close through the triumphs of faith in the city of Mt. Sterling, Ky., April 22d, 1895, at the age of 93 years, 1 month and 4 days.

At the age of twenty-six years she was married to Elder Jones as his second wife, and was to him a true and faithful companion forty-seven years, when he received his discharge and was called hence to be at rest. There were born unto them seven children, three sons and four daughters. They had twenty-seven grandchildren and twenty-three great-grandchildren. At the age of twenty-seven years sister Jones was received into the fellowship of the Old School or Particular Baptist Church at Bald Eagle, Bath Co., Ky., and was baptized, I think, by Elder Thomas P. Dudley. Through the faith which was delivered unto her she was a prominent and useful member, both in the church and in the association and its correspondence. She was given a liberal measure of faith and grace, which made her a fit companion for her husband and the servant of the most high God, which he was. She was made of God unto him a helpmeet indeed. She was in a sense the bright side of his life, the embodiment of hopefulness and good cheer, ever ready to speak a word of comfort and encouragement; in fact, she was truly called to the work of the ministry, and did well her part, as did certain women in the days of Paul. She was a woman of strong intellect, both spiritual and natural. She was truly spiritually-minded, was versed in the Scriptures, and was clear and strong in the faith and doctrine of the gospel. Her convictions of the truth were so clearly defined that she stood firm against the various winds of doctrine which at different times during her pilgrimage produced dissension and division among the Baptists of Kentucky. She was among the oldest readers of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, and was firm in the doctrine held by it.

Sister Jones lived in the town of Bethany, and her home was a Bethel indeed, where she delighted to sing the song of songs, where Jesus dwelt much, and where the weary servant of God found a welcome resting place. During a widowhood of twenty years she was esteemed as a mother in Israel, whose counsels were good and wholesome, and whose admonitions were apt, in season and efficacious. During the last few years of her life her mental and physical powers gave way, but her spiritual faculties remained remarkably sound and active, by which she dwelt much upon Jesus, his love and his mercy, up to within a few hours before she passed away, at which time she passed into a peaceful, childlike slumber, finally falling asleep in Jesus, to awake with his likeness in the paradise of God.

Services held in her memory by the writer were attended by many of the brethren and friends. Portions of the fifteenth chapter of First Corinthians were read, and some remarks were made reflecting the doctrine which she believed and loved; after which she was tenderly put away in the cemetery at Sharpsburg.

I must desist from farther pursuing this feeble attempt to portray upon paper what she by her life has indelibly written in the minds, hearts and affections of those who knew her, and, while she sweetly sleeps in Jesus, commend her precious memory to the tender affections of her children, brethren and friends. "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints."

P. G. LESTER.

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES—DEAR BRETHREN:—I take the present opportunity to ask you to publish the departure of my only sister from these scenes of sorrow.

Mrs. Adelia D. Shepherd died April 30th, 1895, in the 72d year of her age. Her disease was pneumonia. She was sick only a few days, when death came to her relief. Her home had been many years in Waverly, Iowa, though born in Otego, N. Y. She had been away from home to visit friends, and came back as far as Waterloo to attend meeting with the church under the care of Elder Wm. Blake, and thence home on Monday. She was baptized by Elder S. H. Durand, in the fellowship of the church at Otego, more than twenty years ago, and was ever beloved by all for her soundness in the faith and her upright walk, giving full evidence of her spiritual standing in Christ. While we sadly feel our loss of one ever dear to us by ties both spiritual and natural, we would bow in submission to him who is the sovereign Ruler of all beings and things. For many years she had trodden the lonely path of the widow. She leaves two sons, two brothers, three grandchildren and many dear friends to mourn.

Her funeral was attended on May 2d, when Elder Blake preached to the comfort of the living. May the Lord resign us all to his will, and bless this stroke to our good.

Yours in tribulation,

B. BUNDY.

OTEGO, N. Y., May 10, 1895.

DIED—April 25th, 1895, at her home in Charleston, Tioga Co., Pa., sister Sally S. Ely. She was born August 10th, 1820, in Sullivan Township, Tioga Co., Pa., and was a daughter of Deacon Daniel Rose. She was married to Frederick H. Ely on June 16th, 1844, who died June 9th, 1884. She leaves four brothers, one sister, four daughters and one son. Her last sickness was the effect of "La Grippe," with which she was taken in the winter, and from which she never fully recovered, but was about the house, and occasionally rode out. Wednesday morning she had a paralytic shock, after which she seemed to lose consciousness, and died Thursday morning. She united with the Old School Baptist Church about fifty-four years ago, and was baptized by Elder Eli Gitchel, and was a consistent member of the Cherry Flats Church for a number of years (I do not know how long). She had taken the SIGNS OF THE TIMES many years, and heartily indorsed its contents. But our dear old sister has gone to her heavenly home, sweet, sweet home, eternal rest. May the dear Lord bless the children and friends with grace to sustain and support them under his afflicting hand, is my desire, for Jesus' sake. Amen.

D. M. VAIL.

Asahel Hancock passed from this time state April 8th, 1895. He was born in Lawrence Co., Ill., Sept. 30th, 1830, and has lived in Fayette County forty-five years. He was a member of the Baptist Church about forty years. By a previous request or his, father preached at his funeral, and also visited him during his last illness, and found him resigned to the will of the Lord, willing and ready to depart and be with Christ. Thus "Friend after friend departs!

Who hath not lost a friend?
There is no fellowship on earth
That hath not here an end."

In the midst of all these shifting scenes, when everything of this life gives way, O how our souls long to grasp something firm, lasting and substantial! Thanks to the name of Jesus, our souls can cling to the Rock of ages, that firm, abiding, unchangeable Friend, who never grows weary. May our souls ever rest and abide in him, is our desire.

SARAH A. GARRETT.

MY wife, Mrs. N. J. Watkins, died April 29th, 1895, of paralysis. She had her first stroke in March, 1893, the second stroke Feb. 24th, 1894, and the third stroke April 24th, 1895. She all the time said after the first stroke that her time was not very long for this world, and she believed that the Lord would provide a way for her. She was entirely unconscious after the last stroke until death. She all the time said that she wanted to go and live with Jesus; that there was only one thing she regretted, and that was leaving me so lonely. We never had any children.

She was born in Marion Co., Iowa, March 15th, 1847, and we were married March 22d, 1868. She joined the Old School Baptist Church in 1871, and lived a faithful christian until her death.

EDITORIAL NOTICES.

WHAT CAN WE DO?

ON our list of several thousands of subscribers occur the names of persons of all dispositions and temperaments. Some are so sensitive that if we discontinue their paper at the expiration of the time paid for they will take offense. Others, if we continue the paper to them after the expiration of their subscription, and they become indebted to us for their paper, will censure us, and repudiate the account on the ground that they did not order it continued on credit. We print plainly next to the name of each subscriber the time at which their subscription expires; and if each will take the trouble to look at this date next to their name on the little pink slip pasted either on the margin of every paper they receive, or on the wrapper in which their paper comes, they can plainly see at what time their subscription expires, or has already expired. If any fail to notify us to discontinue their paper when the time is out, and continue to take the paper from their post-office, it is their christian duty to pay for it. There is no justice in holding us responsible for their neglect. Will each one after reading this notice please turn to their date on the little pink slip mentioned above, and if they find their time has expired, and they do not wish to continue the paper after their time is out, please remit for their back dues and order their paper discontinued?

We never intentionally continue sending the paper to a person longer than they desire to receive it; but how are we to know by looking over our list of thousands of names, scattered all over the United States, just which ones wish their paper discontinued, and which will be offended, and think we stopped their paper "because we were afraid to trust them?" For nearly sixty-three years the paper has been sent to its patrons regardless of the date to which their subscription was paid; but within the last few years we have had so many thousands of dollars worth of accounts repudiated on the ground that "they never ordered the paper continued after the time paid for had expired," that we are seriously embarrassed by the loss. We have tried to bear these losses patiently, and do not now wish to complain; but the matter has become so serious that it actually threatens the life of the publication.

Nearly all debts due us are in small amounts, of ten dollars or less, and may appear of minor importance to each one; but the debts we owe are for large sums, and to those who would not hesitate to sue us, even though in doing so they compel us to discontinue the publication of the paper.

Brethren, once again we ask you to consider us, and at the earliest possible day send on your remittance.

CORRESPONDENCE.

North Berwick, Maine.

Beloved in the Lord:—May the Lord lift up the light of his countenance upon you. Have we not found by experience that all is dark in our spiritual life unless the Lord illuminates (Heb. xi. 32) our souls? His precious doctrine ministered by the Holy Ghost enlightens and animates and strengthens us? If there be with us the vain thought that we will enlighten our path by any of our own fancied goodness, it amounts to nothing. We grope in the darkness and stumble in the night. But though from various causes our way be gloomy, when but a ray of heavenly sunshine is given us we are cheered, and become hopeful, and longings go forth from our hearts for the darkness to be altogether past, that without any intervening clouds we may delight ourselves in the everlasting God. Vanity and vexation of spirit is written on all things under the sun; and if we are the dear children of God, at some time or other we shall learn it to be true. This time state and all earthly things are not our rest and inheritance. All terrestial things tarnish, fade and perish. Our portion is in Christ Jesus our Lord. In him are unsearchable riches, all the treasures of wisdom and prudence. In him and with him we are blessed with an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, and which is reserved in heaven for us. Far above all perishable joy is that happiness secured to the saints by the everlasting covenant and oath of God, flowing to us poor sinners through the atonement of the Son of God, of which we are given at times sweet foretastes by the Holy Spirit, the Comforter. Then our hearts are blest to feed upon the doctrine of God our Savior. There is a very important and very precious point of the doctrine of Christ that it is good for us to have in remembrance in all our relations and dealings with the great and glorious God. O how forgetful, how often unbelieving and dim-sighted I am! In all our intercourse, all our communion, all our worship, in all things pertaining to God, we have a merciful and faithful High Priest, even Jesus, made an high priest forever after the order of Melchisedec. —Heb. ii. 17, 18. Carnal religionists think that by the performance of a few outward, self-imposed observances that they can keep on a peace-footing with the Almighty. They are so well contented with the "doing of their part" in the matter of their soul's salvation that they look upon those who neglect this "chance of being saved" as either fools or such incorrigible sinners that deserve to be doubly damned for not falling in with what they style the overtures of mercy. Like the Pharisees of old, a whitewashed outside appearance is pleasant enough in their own eyes, and in the eyes of their fellow-men; and this is all they aspire to, with the vain, delusive thought that their religion held in such esteem among men will also gratify the Lord of hosts. But we know that God looketh upon the heart. He searches the reins of the heart.—1 Sam. xvi. 7; 1 Kings viii. 39; Rev. ii. 23. Yea, "All things are naked and opened unto the eyes of him with whom we have to do." Look at the words of this precious psalm, "O Lord, thou hast searched me, and known me. Thou knowest my downsitting and mine uprising; thou understandest my thought afar off. Thou compassest [margin reads, "Thou winnowest" seperating the chaff from the wheat] my path and my lying down, and art acquainted with all my ways. For there is not a word in my tongue, but lo, O Lord, thou knowest it altogether."—Psalm cxxxix. 1–4. We are under the eye of our gracious and pitiful God. Whatever is our estate, wherever we may be, in adversity or prosperity, in the midst of perplexities, sore conflicts, or at rest, whether we are walking in obedience to his revealed will, or walking after the flesh, whether we are sighing and grieving over our internal vileness, and mourning after our dear absent Savior, or rejoicing in salvation, and our hearts lifted up in the ways of the Lord, whether we are humbled and walking in lowliness of heart, or walking in self-sufficiency and haughtiness of heart, all is naked and opened unto the eyes of him with whom we have to do. How then can such poor, sinful, helpless, worthless worms be acceptable in his sight? O Lord my God, mine Holy One, thou art of purer eyes than to behold evil, and canst not look on iniquity. The best obedience of mine hands dares not approach before thy throne. The seraphim veil their faces while they cry, "Holy, holy, holy is the Lord of hosts; the whole earth is full of his glory."—Isaiah vi. 3. Moses hid his face; for he was afraid to look upon God.—Exod. iii. 6. Elijah wrapped his face in his mantle.—1 Kings xix. 13. Ezra cried, "O my God, I am ashamed, and blush to lift up my face to thee, my God." And that one who cried, "God, be merciful to me, a sinner," would not lift up so much as his eyes unto heaven.—Luke xviii. 13. How then shall such a poor sinner, one so worthless and vile as I, lift up my face unto God? Must I forever hang my head in my guilt and shame? O! dear children or God, it is with the high and lofty One that inhabiteth eternity, whose name is Holy, that we have to do. The more the Holy Spirit leads us into contemplations upon the being and attributes of Jehovah, the God of Israel, the more insignificant we shall see ourselves to be, and the more contemptible will all the righteousness of our flesh be in our sight. We shall esteem such apparel as filthy rags, but dung and dross, to be cast away. By divine teaching our souls refuse the best of all our doings. All is unsatisfying. We cannot feast upon our creature righteousness, for it is not bread. We care not to be housed in it, or to be found clothed with it; but rather with the apostle Paul we would be found in Christ Jesus our Lord, not having our own righteousness, which is of the law, but that which is through the faith of Christ, the righteousness which is of God by faith. Seeing that there is nothing in us or proceeding from our flesh but what under the teaching of the Spirit of truth we utterly refuse, and is a loathing to our souls, for all is defiled by our sinfulness, how then shall such worms worship God acceptably? Wherewith shall we come before the Lord, and bow before the high God? If he should contend with us, we could not answer him one in a thousand.—Job ix. 3. Job says, "He is not a man, as I am, that I should answer him, and we should come together in judgment; neither is there any daysman [umpire, one that should argue] betwixt us, that might lay his hand upon us both. O that one might plead for a man with God, as a man pleadeth with his neighbor." This One whom Job longed for is Jesus, the Son of God, the Mediator of the new covenant, the Mediator between God and man. Through him all the inheritance, all the blessings, graces, mercies, the eternal and unspeakable fullness of the everlasting covenant, ordered in all things and sure, flow unto all the heirs of the covenant; and by him all the worship of the children of God ascends and comes with acceptance before the throne of the Majesty on high. "God is a Spirit, and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth." Paul says, "We are the circumcision, which worship God in the Spirit, and rejoice in Christ Jesus, and have no confidence in the flesh."—Phil. iii. 3. Such ones are the true worshipers, whom the Father seeks to worship him. This brings me, dear child of God, to the thought that I mentioned awhile ago, which is so needful, precious and comforting to have treasured up by the Holy Spirit in our remembrance; that is, that we have "a merciful and faithful high priest in things pertaining to God." Under the old testament Aaron was a type of Christ, and concerning him we read, "Thou shalt make a plate of pure gold, and grave upon it, like the engravings of a signet, Holiness to the Lord. And thou shalt put it on a blue lace, that it may be upon the mitre, upon the forefront of the mitre it shall be. And it shall be upon Aaron's forehead, that Aaron may bear the iniquity of the holy things which the children of Israel shall hallow in all their holy things; and it shall be always upon his forehead, that they may be accepted before the Lord."—Exod. xxviii. 36–38. So imperfect, tainted with their sinfulness, were all their acts of worship, that thus the Lord instructed his chosen that they could only come acceptably before him through the high priesthood of Aaron. This self-same doctrine the Holy Spirit speaks by the mouth of the apostle Peter, "Ye, also, as lively stones, are built up a spiritual house, an holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ." —1 Peter ii. 5. These spiritual sacrifices are the fruit of the Spirit brought forth in us.—Gal. v. 22. Our prayers and sighs, and longings after God and the things of God, the praises, thanksgivings and adorations of our souls before the Lord, ah, how imperfect, how poor, are all our offerings! Our sinfulness we feel is mixed with all our worship; we see it thus polluted. Must it not be despised and rejected by the holy One of Israel? But though we are humbled, seeing how unprofitable we are, and how far short we come in rendering that worship unto God which is his due, O how reviving and consoling it is to be led to look unto Jesus, our Mediator. Such an High Priest became us, who is holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners, and made higher than the heavens."—Heb. vii. 26. He has entered into heaven itself with his own blood and maketh intercession for transgressors. God says, "There I will meet with thee, and I will commune with thee from above the mercy seat, from between the two cherubim which are upon the ark of the testimony, of all things which I will give thee in commandment unto the children of Israel."—Exod. xxv. 22; Num. vii. 89. The blood-sprinkled mercy-seat within the veil is where God and his people meet, and there our Mediator, Jesus Christ, our Savior, our great High Priest, abideth continually. Then also it is very comforting and encouraging to our tried souls to know that he is touched with the feeling of our infirmities.—Heb. iv. 16. He is our merciful and faithful High Priest in things pertaining to God, and hath made through his own blood reconciliation for our sins. It is he that takes our sighs and cries, and groanings that cannot be uttered, and presents them before the throne of God, perfumed with sweet smelling savor of his sacrifice that he made for our sins.—Eph. v. 2; Rev. viii. 3, 4.

How very small, how very mean our praises, thanks and love to our God appear! Blessed Mediator, it is through thee that we worship the Father. The apostle says, "By him therefore let us offer the sacrifice of praise to God continually, that is, the fruit of our lips, giving thanks to his name."—Heb. xii. 15. "Giving thanks always for all things unto God and the Father, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ."—Eph. v. 20. In all our troubles and griefs, to whom can we repair but to our God? Take a glimpse of Job in his sorrows, how he longed for the felt presence of the Mediator. He said, "Even to-day is my complaint bitter, my stroke is heavier than my groaning. O that I knew where I might find him, that I might come even to his seat! I would order my cause before him, and fill my mouth with arguments. I would know the words which he would answer me, and understand what he would say to me. Will he plead against me with his great power? No; but he would put strength in me. There the righteous might dispute with him; so should I be delivered forever from my Judge. Behold, I go forward, but he is not there; and backward, but I cannot perceive him; on the left hand, where he doth work, but I cannot behold him. He hideth himself on the right hand, that I cannot see him. But he knoweth the way that I take; when he hath tried me, I shall come forth as gold." As this dear old saint could not get along without the Daysman (Job ix. 32–35; xvi. 21) so we our dear Redeemer need. He is our Advocate with God, and ever liveth to make intercession for us. He listens to our groans.—Psalm cii. He knows our afflictions.—Exod. iii. 7. He knows we are tried, that our sins grieve us, that Satan harrasses us with cruel temptations. He knows we are abased oftentimes because of our iniquities, our worldliness, our carnality; and we grieve because we feel we are unlike our God. "The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit; a broken and contrite heart, O God, thou wilt not despise." Often have I to make my secret moan over my hard, unfeeling state. I accuse myself of my carnality; I chide my heart because of its unmindfulness of God; my ingratitude stares me in the face; Satan also accuses me before my God. O how helpless! What a poor worm! Not a thought, not an emotion of grief or joy, of prayer or praise, can I produce. O Lord, I were a wretch undone without thy sovereign grace! Jesus, our Mediator, our merciful High Priest, makes intercession for transgressors; so relief in due time comes from the throne of God. The accuser is cast down, "which accused them before our God day and night. And they overcame him by the blood of the Lamb, and by the word of their testimony; and they loved not their lives unto death."—Rev. xii. 10, 11. Our service, our worship, all we are and all we have, is only acceptable to Jehovah, our God, through the blood and righteousness of the Lamb.

"He is precious indeed to my soul,
Amidst all my changes and grief;
While on him my burden I roll,
He graciously gives me relief.

"I call him my Lord and my God,
To whom as my refuge I flee;
And sing even under the rod,
He saved a sinner like me."

We are poor and insignificant; how can we be pleasing in the eyes of the holy One? What have we ever thought, what have we ever done, to merit his esteem?

"Nothing in my hand I bring,
Simply to thy cross I cling."

O for that precious faith to sing,

"My beloved Intercessor stands before the throne of God,
Pleading for a vile transgressor his atoning, precious blood.
Precious Jesus, peace and pardon flow from thee."

FOREST HILL, Md., April, 1895.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS:—I send the inclosed letter for publication through the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. You will, of course, discover that it is a private letter to me, and I have no authority from brother Coulter to have it published; but I know his letters have been read with interest by the readers of the SIGNS, and I believe this will be also. I will run all risks if you will give it a place.

WILLIAM GRAFTON.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., March 29, 1895.

MY DEAR BROTHER GRAFTON:—Yours of March 23d is at hand: you may be sure I was glad to hear from you. Your visits to Philadelphia always remind me of a gentle summer shower, always welcome, and always bringing with them a season of refreshing. You said in your letter that the gifts which belong to the church do not themselves know their own value and usefulness; but the church is given the spirit of discernment, to whom the fruits of the gift are made manifest. You probably realize as little of your own value and usefulness as any member of the family of God that I know of. And it does seem to me that the smaller one is in his own estimation, the larger he becomes in usefulness to his brethren and to the church. The Lord's people are not capable of judging their own qualifications in the church, as they are able to do in ordinary business affairs of every day life. When man (who is born of woman) enters upon this natural life, he possesses certain capabilities, bestowed upon him by his Creator, which are peculiar to himself, and which mark out his career in life. Each man is different from every other man; his individuality is distinct, as well as his capabilities. He has within himself in the beginning of his natural life all that goes to form and make up his character during the years of his earthly sojourn, while the circumstances and conditions of his earthly surroundings are but the elements which bring into manifestation the hidden resources already belonging to him. The grain of wheat in embryo contains in its life-principle all that is afterwards manifested from it; as, when it falls into the ground and dies, the life is brought into a manifestation by the downward and upward growth, going on to its perfection, gathering strength and proportions from the surrounding elements, until the full fruition is reached. So with the natural man; he has his limit, both as to length of days and mental or physical capacities. And while his necessities are all drawn from his natural surroundings, so his mind can only grasp or comprehend natural things, he cannot ascend, neither can he descend, beyond the atmosphere of the natural life into which he was born. Now, how different and how directly opposite in every way is that same Adamic creature, who having the life-principle of an incorruptible seed implanted in him (even the Word of God), is made manifest by a new birth, through which avenue he enters the kingdom of God. And although the natural is a type, no doubt, of the spiritual, yet it is manifested in a different and more wonderful mystery; as the natural man enters this life rich and full, in the material which is afterward developed, a sinner by nature, or by reason of a natural birth from a corrupt seed, but not by knowledge, so he that it is born of the Spirit enters the kingdom entirely destitute. He is blind, deaf, crippled, naked, hungry and thirsty, poor and wretched, without strength and without hope. Instead of being born into a land of full and plenty, he is in a wilderness land. He seeks water, "and there is none;" and he goes on seeking till his tongue faileth for thirst. This poverty and destitution is only apparent to himself. When those of like precious experience look upon him, they do not pity him, but they are glad and rejoice; for well do they know that he has come into greater possessions, more abundant riches and vast wealth than the gold of Ophir or the mines of India. He is not yet aware that he is joint-heir with him who possesseth all things. He does not yet know that having forsaken the perishing things of this life, the world and its vanities, "he shall receive an hundred fold, now in this time, houses, and brethren, and sisters, and mothers, and children, and lands, with persecutions; and in the world to come eternal life." And until he realizes in his own experience that Jesus has come in the flesh (his flesh), he is without even the vestige of a hope, and without God in the world. So poor and low and undone is he that he feels the mercy of God cannot reach him, save at the expense of justice; and even when he has gotten out of the wilderness, crossed over Jordan, and come into a land flowing with milk and honey, he still feels himself to be less than the least of all saints; and although he is called and qualified, and has preached the gospel for five and thirty years, to the comfort of God's afflicted poor, and to the consolation of Israel, as you have done, yet is he poor and needy, and feels his long service to the churches has apparently been in vain. In his own estimation he is useless and a hindrance. What a profound mystery! And all the while this one has an indistinct knowledge of unbounded wealth, and his precious inheritance, and the very hope of things to come leads him to press forward, looking neither to the right hand nor to the left; for with the indistinct knowledge that he has, he is well aware that when he has opened his mouth the Lord has filled it; that each step in all his journey of life has been directed of the Lord. He has witnessed the word of the Lord to prosper whereunto he sent it. He has seen the seed which was sown on good ground to bring forth and bud and yield precious fruit. He has rejoiced in giving, and rejoiced in receiving. He has been raised as a dead Lazarus from the grave of fleshly lusts, well knowing how that lust when it is conceived bringeth forth sin, and sin when it is finished bringeth forth death. To me it seems strange and incomprehensible that you, who have been active so long in your dear Master's service, should not yet be able to calculate the value of the service; yet I am glad it is so; for what a rich and convincing evidence it is that it is all embraced in the gospel mystery. The things that we can unravel by carnal reason do not emanate from the Spirit of Christ. "Even so the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God." Your reward is not in the carnal consciousness of great sermons preached, or mighty works wrought out by you, but in the answer of a good conscience toward God, in the privileges you enjoy in the assembly of the saints, in the knowledge that you love them and the gathering together of the evidences in life's pathway, which strengthen your hope in the mercy of God to you. Your reward does not come as a recompense for the service you have rendered to your Master and your Master's brethren; but the reward is in the service, because you love the service, and seek no earthly recompense; and above all, because you love Jesus, who is the author and finisher of your faith and work. All such faithful stewards are strengthened day by day of the Lord, by the power of his might, in the inner man. How truly wonderful are the works of God as he works in the children of men.

We are all in the enjoyment of usual health. We all join in love to yourself and family. You have met with a great loss at Rock Springs in the death of Amer Jenkins. We want to hear from you when you have time to write.

Affectionately your brother,

B. F. COULTER.

KINSMAN, Ill., Dec. 20, 1894.

DEAR BRETHREN:—As I have been asked by several of my Baptist correspondents to write what I hope have been the Lord's dealings with me, and send the same to the SIGNS, with trembling hand and heart I will try to do so, and ask you to use your better judgment about publishing it. I trust it has not been that I was ashamed to confess my Lord and Master in this way that I have not attempted to do so before; but knowing my inability to express myself as I would like, and being fearful lest I might be mistaken, and might deceive others, I have delayed.

I recollect having serious thoughts about death and eternity as far back as I can remember anything, more especially when I heard ministers and others talk of coming persecution, or of the end of time; but I would often try to get rid of that trouble by thinking I was too young to understand or be so alarmed about such things. While it would gradually wear off, yet I never could enjoy the pleasures of the world as much as other young people appeared to; and often when I would try to appear as one of their lively company their pleasure seemed foolishness to me, and I would feel like one alone. Yet I would often find myself laying plans as to what great things I was going to do, to try to become rich and be somebody in the world when I was grown; but almost as often the thought would strike me with sadness that this world is not my home. Lay up for yourself treasure in heaven, where moth and rust do not corrupt, and where thieves do not break through and steal. Yet I did not realize myself to be a lost and ruined sinner in the sight of a just and holy God until I was fifteen years old. Then I would often try to be as good as I could, and to merit God's favor; but I found that I could not live a day as I wanted to. Several times when heavy storms were coming I would slip out behind the trees toward the storm and beg the Lord to forgive my sins; for I felt that he was controlling the approaching storm, and was near to protect his people from harm. For about three years it seemed that he was deaf to my cry; yet I could not help begging for mercy. All this time it seemed like I could not miss a meeting-day for anything; yet I did not know that any one noticed it, until my good old grandmother, who is also a Baptist, said one muddy Sunday morning, "What has taken you all at once? You act like you would go through fire or water to get there." It may be she thought I wanted to go for a ride. I could not make any answer, for I did not want any one to know that I was concerned about religion at all. I went on horseback and alone a few times when the roads were bad, hoping each time that I would get a word of comfort for myself, or might claim one promise; but it was not for me. It all seemed to embrace the church, who were so much more deserving of it than I; yet I loved to be among them. One day, when I felt that I had come, as it were, to the end of the earth, when all hope seemed gone, and I felt doomed to destruction, my brother came in so pleasantly, telling me how nicely his new machine was running; but I had to turn from him in tears, without making him any answer. O! I thought, if you only knew the awful burden that is crushing me down, you would know that I could not take any interest in that nor anything else in the world. For a few days it seemed like I could not live; for I felt that the Lord would never have mercy on me, and I knew that I had no power of myself. Then I gradually grew easier about it, and in a day or two my burden was all gone. It was not instantly removed, as some have experienced, but I could not get it back again to see how it would go, that I might feel more certain. I felt to realize that Christ had died for me, and a calm, sweet peace was mine. That fall brother Knibbs, while coming home from the Sandy Creek Association in company with myself and others, was taken very sick, and stopped at our house, and after a few days died here. I induced my folks to ask him if he did not want to see Elder Bradbeer, the pastor of our church, hoping he would say yes, and that I might have the privilege of going after him, a distance of fourteen miles, and hoping that he would talk on the subject of religion coming home; for I soon began to doubt whether I had really experienced a change or not, and I hoped he would show me where I stood. It all worked as I had planned. The roads were heavy, and I was glad of it, for I thought he would have all the longer time on the road to talk. He soon began talking on religion, and asking questions concerning my state of mind, to my surprise, for I did not know that I had manifested any interest noticeable to him concerning it. He gave me a great deal of encouragement, and I felt well paid for my trip. He asked me if I would not like to join the church. I could not help answering, "Yes, if they would receive me," for it was almost continually on my mind. But it was only a short time until I was again filled with darkness, doubts and fears, as I had not been given a view by faith of Jesus suffering on the cross for me, as some had. I had no promises applied to me, as others had, to be so confident of. I stood looking to the ground, and thought, Well, I cannot go to the church in this way, for they will not receive me, and how can I stay away? While I stood wondering if it were the Lord's work at all that I had been thus led, or was it all a delusion, these words were applied to me as if spoken by some one, "Lo, I am with you alway." I felt to say, Lord, it is enough. Every shadow of doubt was driven away. The presence of the Lord seemed continually with me for two weeks. It seemed like I should never doubt again. I felt like I was walking on holy ground. The love, joy and peace that I then felt toward the Lord and his people none can know but those who pass through it.

"Tongue cannot express
The sweet comfort and peace
Of a soul in its earliest love."

When an opportunity was offered the next meeting-day, which was October 16th, 1886, I went forward and tried to tell a little that is written here. To my pleasure I was received, and baptized the next day, in the fellowship of the Ebenezer Predestinarian Baptist Church of Verona, Grundy Co., Ill., by our beloved pastor, Elder Bradbeer. I have passed through many dark seasons since then, and, as I trust, a few pleasant ones, and feel to be the weakest of all who ever claimed a hope in God's mercy. I have no good works to plead.

"Nothing in my hands I bring;
Simply to thy cross I cling."

I do not feel that I am any good to the church, but can say, as did Ruth of old, "Entreat me not to leave thee, or to return from following after thee: for whither thou goest I will go; and where thou lodgest I will lodge: thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God."

Yours in hope of a glorious immortality beyond this vale of tears,

JENNIE GILBERT.

SOUTHAMPTON, Pa., Aug. 6, 1894.

EDITORS OF THE SIGNS—DEAR BRETHREN:—Many times since I received a hope I have felt it to be my duty to write and tell the dear household of faith the reason of my hope; but when I would do good, evil is present with me. It has been, I think, nine years since I found a place and home among the dear people of God; so if you will bear with me I will try in my feeble way to tell you of my many downsittings and uprisings.

During our Association at Southampton this last spring, while Elder White was preaching, my mind was stirred, and my early experience was brought vividly before me, and a feeling that I must write and tell my thoughts came over me. In my mind I was telling the whole story; but by the time he was through preaching the impression was gone in a measure; yet I cannot get rid of the feeling that it is my duty to write; and as I am in a lonely frame of mind, I feel more and more that I want my brethren to know what a thorny path I have to tread. When I would do good, evil is present with me, whispering something like this, "You had better never write and expose your ignorance, and have the brethren ashamed of you;" and then I would try to quiet myself by thinking, Well, there are so many who are quite able to write who do not. Then I would think, Why, yes, it would be presumption in me to think of such a thing. But we do know that God is able to bring into subjection every evil thought, and every wicked imagination; and if the dear Lord will lead my mind away from self, that base thing, and grant me his favor that I may speak the things I have known, and not let me trespass on any other ground, I will tell what great things the Lord has done for me. I have had many fears lest I might write or say things that were not mine, or, in other words, copy. I do hope I may be kept from that weakness. I know I shall fall far short of expressing my feelings, but if I give you a few outlines, you can judge me.

I think it was in the year 1889 I first came into the neighborhood of the Old School Baptists at Southampton. I went to live with the sisters Miles, but with my mind fixed not to go near their meetings, as I had heard they were a peculiar people and did not believe any were saved but themselves; that they were the chosen, and something more like that. I did not go near them for six weeks, when one Sunday Miss Mary said to me, "You will go to meeting with us?" There was no excuse for me, so I went, and to my surprise instead of seeing a fierce people, they were O so very different; and when Elder Durand took his place in the pulpit and began to preach, well do I remember how he looked to me like one high and lifted up far above this world,

JEREMIAH XVIII. 4.

SISTER E. H. Boggs, of Raton, New Mexico, has requested us to write some reflections upon Jeremiah xviii. 4: "And the vessel that he made of clay was marred in the hand of the potter: so he made it again another vessel, as seemed good to the potter to make it."

In Isaiah xlv. 9 the same truth substantially is presented as above, and under the same figure of a potter and a potter's vessel; and in Isaiah xxix. 16 the sovereign power of God is also set forth under the figure of a work which is performed by some man. The best commentary that we know of upon these passages of Scripture is to be found in the ninth chapter to the Romans. Concerning this commentary there can be no question, because it is an inspired commentary. Our God through Paul tells us just how this figure of the potter and the clay in his hand is to be applied. Paul does not refer to this Old Testament language as a matter of accommodation of language to suit the matter of which he has been speaking. Paul's exposition of the meaning is clear and definite. The circumstances which existed when Paul used this figure might be somewhat different from what they were when written by Jeremiah, but the principle remained the same.

The greater portion of the ninth chapter of Romans might be referred to as leading up to the immediate quotation of the text from the Old Testament, but we will quote but a few verses. "For the Scripture saith unto Pharaoh, Even for this same purpose have I raised thee up, that I might show my power in thee, and that my name might be declared throughout all the earth. Therefore hath he mercy on whom he will have mercy, and whom he will he hardeneth. Thou wilt say then unto me, Why doth he yet find fault? For who hath resisted his will? Nay but, O man, who art thou that repliest against God? Shall the thing formed say to him that formed it, Why hast thou made me thus? Hath not the potter power [the word "power" here signifies privilege, authority] over the clay, of the same lump to make one vessel unto honor, and another unto dishonor?" If language can assert anything, the apostle does certainly here assert that our God has a right to do as he will with all men. He asserts that no man has any right to even question God's ways. He says that as the clay has no right to reply against the potter, so we are clay in the hand of God, and have no right to question his will; and he asserts that God raised up Pharaoh to do the very thing which he did do, and for which he was condemned, and in all which Pharaoh had no right to reply against God. Now this is all a commentary by Paul upon the use of the language in the Old Testament.

In Jeremiah xviii. Israel is said to be as clay in the hand of the potter. The prophet was to be instructed as to the manner of God's dealings with his national people. He was told to go down to the potter's house, and there he beheld the potter at his work. The vessel that he made was marred; that is, it was imperfect—not up to the standard that was required. The cause of it being marred is not stated. The simple fact is stated that it was marred. Now the potter exercises his right to do as he will with the marred vessel. He does not remodel or reform it, but of it he makes another vessel, designed for a different use.

Now, the word of the Lord to Israel is, "Cannot I do with you as this potter? saith the Lord. Behold, as the clay is in the potter's hand, so are ye in mine hand, O house of Israel." Israel, by reason of her unbelief and pride and hypocrisy and disobedience to God, was comparable to a marred or corrupted vessel. He had dealt with them as he had with no other people. He compares them elsewhere to a vine which he had dressed; but when he came to eat the fruit, behold, wild grapes. He calls them a degenerate vine. So in the figure before us. The potter had done his work faithfully and well; but what miserable clay they were! By reason of their self-will and pride the vessel was marred.

Now the Lord says it is his right and in his power to do with them as he will. He will cease to do them good. He will now turn against them. As they have corrupted themselves, he will now turn against them. He will make another vessel out of them. He will give them up to uncleanness of heart, and to a reprobate mind. Instead of being a vessel to honor, they shall be a vessel to dishonor. The Lord says (verse 11), "I frame evil against you, and devise a device against you." In verse seventeen he says, "I will scatter them as with an east wind before the enemy; I will show them the back, and not the face, in the day of their calamity." The Lord will make this untempered clay into another vessel as it shall please him.

This, in brief, is what we understand the text referred to to set forth with regard to the dealings of God with national Israel; and in like manner to this time it is true that we are as clay, and the Lord is our potter. We are sinful; and sinners have no right to question the dealings of God with them. Anything short of everlasting woe is an act of mercy to sinners. Though all should perish, the justice of God cannot be impeached. God does not make men sinners, but he does make sinful men accomplish his purpose; and their wrath shall praise him, and the remainder he will restrain. The clay is all evil, and Jehovah has the right to do with sinners as he will, and he cannot be accused of any injustice. If sinful men work out the purpose of God with evil intent, still God is just in their condemnation; therefore he will have mercy upon whom he will have mercy, and whom he will he hardens.

SOLOMON'S SONG VI. 8, 9.

SISTER Keturah R. Myers, of Waterloo, Nebraska, requests our views of Solomon's Song vi. 8, 9.

We are aware that there have been various views among those who have been led to speak or write upon the Scripture named above. We will endeavor, in compliance with our sister's request, to present such thoughts as have seemed to us to belong to the subject. In this we do not mean to assail the views presented by other brethren; neither have we any idea of exhausting the subject, for this we are not able to do with reference to any portion of the word of God. The text reads as follows, "There are threescore queens and fourscore concubines, and virgins without number. My dove, my undefiled, is but one; she is the only one of her mother, she is the choice one of her that bare her. The daughters saw her, and blessed her; yea, the queens and the concubines, and they praised her."

It has always been believed by the people of God in all ages since the church of God was organized on earth that the one design of this Song of Solomon was to set forth the union and love of Christ and the church under the figure of the marriage relation. We have no doubt that this view is right. We believe that the Holy Ghost inspired this Song for that very end; and still farther, the whole of the vivid imagery presented in this Song of songs is drawn out according to the customs and thoughts of the time that then was. In the verses to which sister Myers refers this is especially the case. Solomon himself had many wives and concubines. The language of the text presents this thought. The bridegroom here speaks. In presenting the feelings of his heart toward the one bride he declares that she is more to him than all the other wives and concubines and virgins that dwell in his palace. We are not to understand by this that our Lord Jesus Christ has many brides; but these striking figures of speech are used to set forth the great truth that in his heart none can compare with the church, the Lamb's wife, his bride. As a king or noble or rich man, with his many wives and concubines and virgins, yet loves one supremely, and holds her as being the one more lovely and desirable than all the rest, and sets his affection upon her; so our Lord Jesus Christ, the Creator and Upholder and Preserver of all, and the bountiful Benefactor of all that he has made, yet has set his love upon the church, his bride, and rejoices over her with gladness and singing. There may be, there are, many beautiful, many useful, many noble and sublime things in his universe. Angels and all the hosts of heaven have the glory and beauty which their Creator gave them, and with all his works they show forth his praise; but the blessed Master turns from them all to rejoice in the presence and beauty of the church. To him she is fair as the moon, clear as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners, and is as the morning when she looks forth. To what a glorious state has the Lord raised his church! She is exalted above all the glorious works of his hands. Among thousands of glorious things she is the most glorious. He says, "Thou art all fair, my love; there is no spot in thee." There is but one in all the universe of whom he says, "My dove, my undefiled, is but one." His heart is not divided toward her; he loves no other. Even as there must be no rival in her heart, so in his heart there is but one. There the church is held supreme. How wonderful! how consoling! The poor, despised church is yet all glorious in his eyes; and what we say of the church we must remember is equally true of each individual believer. Such wonderful things as these are said of each and all those who are redeemed, and have been made to know the Lord.

It has never seemed to us that the numbers named in the eighth verse, that is, threescore queens and fourscore concubines, and the virgins without number, had any special signification beyond the idea of setting forth the fact that in the eyes of her Lord the church is more than all besides. As in her heart Jesus, the Bridegroom, is the chiefest among ten thousand, and the one altogether lovely, so to him the church is all lovely; and like the sun, before whose glory all other lights fade and disappear, to him there is none besides her. Things lovely in themselves are no longer lovely when the beautiful church appears.

So in the ninth verse Jesus calls his bride "My dove, my undefiled;" and of her he says that she is the only one whom he desires. She is the only one of her mother. Here again we are not to understand that the church is one among many daughters; but as the literal bride, though she may have many sisters, is to the bridegroom the only one, so the church is by this figure represented as being all and in all to her Lord. Thus the church is the choice one of her mother.

All things are represented as bending to do homage to the beauty and glory of the church. In the natural figure the idea is presented that this one choice bride is in all things possessed of such superlative excellence that even the many queens and concubines and virgins are compelled to praise her. The one thought is kept in view, and urged out into prominence all through the text, that the church is all fair within, and that she can have no rival.

Now, whence has this church all this beauty and glory? It is not hers by nature. She confesses that she is black. She says, "Look not upon me, because I am black, because the sun hath looked upon me." Yet she is comely. She is all fair. There is no spot in her. How is it that she who is black can be so lovely? The testimony of the Scripture concerning this matter is well expressed in the words of the poet,

"Jesus, thy blood and righteousness
My beauty are, my glorious dress!
'Midst flaming worlds, in these arrayed,
With joy shall I lift up my head."

Imputed righteousness is the sinner's only plea, his only sure and certain hope. Jesus always sees his bride clothed in this robe of his own providing; and while she must ever confess her blackness, yet Jesus testifies sweetly to her heart, "There is no spot in thee." "Thou art all fair." What greater comfort could any poor sinner have than this!

The church is exalted, but in her exaltation Jesus is exalted over all. Imputed righteousness puts the crown upon the head of the Bridegroom. The testimony of the bride concerning her glorious dress is, "It is my Lord's gift. By his grace I am what I am."

C.

JOHN III. 16.

"For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

At the request of a brother we offer a few brief remarks on the above passage. We are aware of the frequent perversion of this text by will-worshipers and Arminians, who have labored hard to make it favor the doctrine of conditional salvation; but we shall find the plain signification of the text to be in perfect harmony with the whole tenor of divine revelation on that, and on all other subjects. The term "world" is in this and many other passages of the Scriptures used to signify Jews and Gentiles, in distinction from the notion formerly cherished by the former, that salvation was provided only for the Jews. Thus it was said by the Jews, "Behold, the world is gone after him!"—John xii. 19. Butterworth shows fourteen senses in which the word "world" is used in the Scriptures, as applicable (1) to the whole universe. —John i. 10. 2. The posterity of Adam.—Rom. v. 12. 3. All believers.—John vi. 33, 51. 4. All the elect.—1 John ii. 2. 5. The non-elect.—John xiv. 17; xvii. 9. 6. The present life.—1 Cor. vii. 33. 7. The earth.—Matt. iv. 8. 8. Pomp and glory.—Gal. vi. 14. 9. Carnal wisdom.—1 Cor. ii. 12. 10. Celestial happiness.—Luke xx. 35. 11. Great multitudes.—John xii. 19. 12. The Roman Empire.—Luke ii. 1. 13. The Gentiles only.—Rom. xi. 12. 14. Riches, honors, dignitaries.—1 John ii. 15.

What confusion would be produced by an unwarrantable transposition of the sense of this word. There can certainly be no authority for confining the sense of the word to Adam's posterity, except where the connection justifies that exclusive application. All things, as well as beings, animate and inanimate, are sometimes included; but the term, like many others, is frequently used in a very limited sense, as we could more fully show if our present space would admit. For us to so construe the term as to make this passage contradict or oppose the sovereignty of God and the discriminating character of his love to his people in Christ Jesus, would be to turn the truth of God into a lie.

The most prominent development of God's love to the world, or to any of the inhabitants of it, ever made, was in the gift of his Son; and that only begotten Son was and is given to be the Head over all things to his church, which he has redeemed out of all the kindreds and nations on the earth. The object of this gift, according to our text, was definite and specific; it was to secure the salvation and prevent the condemnation of a people therein described. The people to be secured by the gift of God's only begotten Son are distinguished from all other people, as believers in him, whosoever or wheresoever they may be. For the promise is unto "all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." Their believing in him is not a cause or condition of their salvation; for all the saints are saved and called, not according to their works, but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given them in Christ Jesus before the world began. And the faith or believing of God's people is an effect dependent on a prior cause. "As many as were ordained to eternal life believed." "Unto you it is given on the behalf of Christ, not only that ye should believe on him," &c. "But we are bound to give thanks always unto God for you, brethren, beloved of the Lord, because God hath from the beginning chosen you unto salvation, through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth." The words in the text, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life, are equivalent to saying that whomsoever God has chosen to salvation, through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth, or whomsoever God has ordained to eternal life, should not perish, but have everlasting life.

We are taught by the text that as all who are saved by Christ were destitute of any other salvation, they must be saved by him, or perish. And we also learn that the design of the gift was to secure the eternal salvation of all believers in the Lord Jesus; and as none but his elect are ever so characterized, it was therefore the design of God to save with an everlasting salvation all his chosen people. As God is properly the Father only to such as he has begotten, and as Christ, according to our text, is the only begotten Son of God, none can stand in the relationship of children to God but such as were begotten of God in Christ; these being ordained to eternal life are made the subjects of regeneration, and faith follows; hence, as many as were ordained to eternal life believe, and their salvation is secured, and their perishing prevented effectually and eternally by the gift of God's only begotten Son.

The connection of this text not only strengthens but confirms the view we have given. See John i. 12, 13. The relationship of sons is not of blood, nor the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God. Power to become sons, in an experimental sense, is given to as many as receive him; that is, as many as he has chosen and predestinated to the adoption of children by Jesus Christ unto himself, according to the good pleasure of his will. The reality of this is realized in the work stated and illustrated by our Lord in this chapter, iii. 1–12. The lifting up of the serpent in the wilderness was for the bitten and dying Israelites; even so the lifting up of Christ on the cross was for the salvation of whosoever believeth in him, that he should not perish, but have eternal life. The bitten Israelite was a type of the spiritual or antitypical Israelites; and this type is not applicable to any unto whom this faith is never given. Do any of us feel the weight of the inquiry whether we are included in the redemption of Christ, we have to inquire whether we believe in Jesus Christ; for if we are believers in him, the matter is settled. Christ was given for us—was lifted up for us. If we believe in him, we are passed from death unto life, and shall not come into condemnation.

Middletown, N. Y., Feb. 1, 1849.

WHAT AN OLD SCHOOL BAPTIST SHOULD BE.

First. He should be a quickened sinner, regenerated and born of God; for "Except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God." Whatever he may possess of morality, zeal, knowledge, benevolence, or circumspection of life and conversation, if destitute of the regenerating work of the Holy Spirit he is still an alien to God and under condemnation and wrath.

Second. He should give evidence of his regeneration by discipleship to Jesus Christ; for except a man deny himself and take his cross and follow Christ, he cannot be his disciple; but, then is he his disciple indeed if he does whatsoever Christ has commanded him. An external form of obedience to what Christ has commanded his poople to do will not constitute an unregenerated man his disciple; for none can be truly so until regenerated.

While the sinner is in his unregenerated state, the commands of the law are upon him; he is a delinquent to that law which convicts of sin and consigns to wrath, and has no part nor lot in the commands which Christ, as King of Zion, has given to the subjects of his kingdom. Hence for an alien, or an unregenerated person, to be baptized, profess faith in Christ, and engage in those devotional exercises which are enjoined on the saints, so far from constituting him a disciple of Christ, is hypocrisy and abominable wickedness. But when a man is born again, and is enabled to see the kingdom of God, then he, having ears to hear, may hear what the Spirit says to the churches. The evidence required then to prove that a man is born of God is given only by manifestation of his spiritual state, his love to God, to the truth, to the saints, and to the order of the kingdom of Christ; a devotedness to the cause of God, and readiness, at whatever expense, to follow Christ through evil and through good report, and to honor him by a cheerful obedience to his commands.

Third. He should be sound in the faith. By this we mean something more than a professed attachment to and belief of the truth. Too many there are ready enough to attach their name to an orthodox creed, and enlist all their energies in its defense, so far at least as words and arguments are concerned, who at the same time in their works deny the faith, and in some instances are worse than infidels. Fruit may be fair on its exterior, but if soft and defective at the core it is unsound. Our flesh is not sound when here and there may be detected a spot of leprosy, however small; neither can we consider the faith of any man sound who exhibits spots of heresy. The apostle tells us of those who are weak in the faith, and that they should be received; but there is a wide difference between weakness and corruption, when applied to the faith of saints. Brethren may be duly qualified for communion with the Old School Baptists whose views of divine things are very limited, and whose ability to expound or even to comprehend the great system of salvation is small indeed, and yet in a gospel sense be sound in the faith; as far as they are instructed, their views are in perfect harmony with the Scriptures and with the experience of the saints. None but such as are in this sense sound in the faith should connect with the Old School Baptists.

Fourth. They should speak the things which become sound doctrine. God's people are to be identified by their dialect. The Lord has promised to turn to them a pure language; and the purity of their language is to be tested by the New Testament as the established standard, and not by popular tests or prevailing usage. A form of sound words, words which have no rottenness in them, words that express definite and clear sentiments, and are not of double meaning, are indispensable; and not only words which may be articulated by our natural organs of speech, but is that language which "speaks louder than words."

Fifth. It is as important that a christian, in all his life and deportment in the church and before the world, throughout the week as well as on Sunday, should deport himself according to the rules of action laid down in the New Testament for his guide, as it is that he should advocate sound doctrine in other respects. The example as well as precepts of our Lord Jesus Christ are to be observed, strictly observed, and practiced. If we obey him not, if we do not copy his examples, how can we claim to be his followers or disciples? Vain are all such claims or professions so long as our Lord's words ring in our ears, "Whosoever doth not bear his cross and come after me, cannot be my disciple." How important then that all who protest against the unwarrantable practices of the New School, and who have felt constrained to withdraw from every brother that walketh disorderly, who have assumed the name of "Old School Baptists," to express their adherence to the primitive faith and order of God's house, should in practice as well as in words go back to the original pattern showed them in the mount.

The divine rule for the conduct of the saints presents all that adorned the profession of the primitive saints. It teaches us that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously and godly in the present world. Let that rule be laid aside, and what will remain to distinguish us from those Baptists with whom we were once identified, and from whom we separated because of their departure from the faith and order of the gospel? True, it may be said that we contend for sound doctrine, whereas they have abandoned the doctrine which characterized the church in the days of the apostles; so far we may differ; but is this all that is requisite to form the character of a consistent Old School Baptist? Certainly not. If only in our professions of sound doctrine we can be distinguished, may we not fear that we shall be found identified with those who with their lips draw near the Lord, while their hearts are afar off from him?
