We wish not to accuse our brethren, nor do we believe that in regard to a conformity to the gospel in their general deportment they are second or inferior to any other order of religionists on earth; but still it strikes us with irresistible conviction that if, as a general thing, the Old School Baptists did not adhere more closely to sound doctrine in theory than they do to a circumspect and godly conversation, there would be much complaint and noise about heresy among us. When we look at the state and condition of our churches, our ministers and our brethren, do we not find them much nearer to the divine rule in what they profess to believe, than they are in their practice?

Pardon us, brethren, if we particularize a little. Are our churches as thorough in exercising the discipline of the house of God upon those who walk disorderly as they should be? Is not sin suffered to rest on some connected with us, without that faithful labor and rebuke which the laws of Zion demand at our hands? If a brother forsakes the assemblies of the saints, as the manner of some was in Paul's day, is he labored with as readily as though he had advanced some unsound sentiments in regard to the system of salvation? If any are indulging in a worldly, covetous and penurious spirit, and withholding their time, talents and earthly substance, where the rules of the gospel require that they should be applied, is this objected to as readily and as faithfully as though they departed from the gospel rule as far in regard to what they profess to believe? Once more, and we must press our inquiry a little farther. Are there not to be found some who stand nominally connected with us who exult in their soundness in the faith, who at the same time can spend ten times as much for carnal gratification as they are willing under any circumstances to lay out for the aid of poor saints, or any necessary expenses connected with the church, such as building convenient places for worship, or supporting him who is among them to labor in word and doctrine? It is a lamentable truth, and we blush while we write it, there are churches whose visibility is lost, or nearly so, by their wide departures from the order of the gospel in matters of discipline. Members are in some cases (we hope they are few) more devoted to their carnal appetites than to the cause of God and truth. Can such be Old School Baptists? No. Yet they are loud in their professions of othodoxy, and ready to stone a brother who will insist on a correct deportment, as an Arminian; and in some cases they are suffered to retain the name until the churches to which they stand connected sink down under such weight and become disbanded. And where churches are so negligent in regard to the order of the gospel as to suffer these things to go on unreproved, we must say that the sooner they are disbanded the better.

In showing what some are who profess to be Old School Baptists, we only present the contrast of what we conceive Old School Baptists should be, and we do desire to see a disposition on the part of those who are spiritual to look at these things.

In conclusion we will suggest the inquiry to our brethren in the ministry, Has not our attention been drawn away from the internal condition of the Zion of God, and all our energies concentrated too exclusively against the external foes or enemies outside the walls of Zion? We appeal to brethren, and leave them to decide as their superior judgment shall enable them, Is the church at this day in as great danger of suffering from heresy in doctrine as from corruption and disorder in practice? And one question more, and we have done. As watchmen on the walls of Zion, does not the present state of the church demand of us that we labor more abundantly than we have hitherto to stir up the minds of the saints to the importance of walking worthy the high vocation wherewith they are called?

PLEASE BE SURE

IN sending remittances for renewals of subscriptions to give us the same name that the paper is already coming to. If the party is married, and the paper is coming to the wife's name, and we receive a remittance to renew the subscription, and the husband's name is given, we have no means of knowing that it is meant for the subscription in the wife's name; consequently the husband's name is entered on our list, and the paper sent to both parties. Or if the paper is coming in the husband's name, and the renewal is sent in the wife's name, the same thing is likely to occur. It is a good plan to inclose in the letter one of the little pink slips containing the name, taken either from the margin of the paper or from the wrapper in which the paper comes.

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE.

TO MOST of our readers the above mentioned book is too well known to need any introduction or a description by us. While many of the Bibles have a Concordance appended, they are generally so condensed or abridged as to be of little or no use. Cruden's Complete Concordance, however, enables one to readily turn to any passage of Scripture of which they can call to mind two or three words, and in our opinion is the most complete and convenient as a reference book of any published. In addition, it contains many other aids in studying the Bible, as may be seen by reference to advertisement on last page. Remember, both the books there mentioned are CRUDEN'S COMPLETE.

and did not preach like any other I had ever heard. He did not preach, "If you will, the Lord will," but just declared the truth as it is in Jesus. This struck my poor heart with awe, and I remember how I wondered at it all, until he came to speak of election, and that God had a chosen people. Of course I felt to be left out, and it fell like ice on my poor, sin-cursed heart, and I went home grieved; but from that time to the present I have always wanted to hear them preach. I went on for six months in great trouble, until it pleased the dear Lord, so I hope, to reveal to my poor heart the glorious gospel, which sets his prisoners free. I was so exercised about myself that I felt I must have a talk with Elder Durand, to know if indeed these were the exercises the Lord's people felt. I went to his house, not knowing whether it was the proper thing to do or not. I did not expect to see Mrs. Durand, as she was not well; but to my surprise she bade me come into her room and wait until Elder Durand came home; so in the presence of sister Durand and sister Bessie Durand I told my little story. Elder Durand said to me, "Your place is before the church;" but I thought I could never go before the church, as I had never seen any one give in their experience, and I felt I did not know how to address them. I thought I could not call them brethren, and I did not know whether it was right to call them friends; but while pondering over these things on my way home from Elder Durand's, these words dropped into my heart, "Take no thought what you shall say; for it will be given you in the self-same hour what you shall say;" and all trouble was gone. I found myself talking with the church, telling them what great things the Lord had done for me, and how he had brought me out of darkness into his marvelous light. I went before the church the following Saturday and tried to tell them what I hoped the Lord had done for me, as I thought I had felt the Savior's love shed abroad in my heart. They received me, and I was baptized. I thought my troubles were all gone, and I had nothing to do but talk of the goodness of God to poor, perishing sinners, of whom I am chief. I think these words were the language of my heart, "This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners, of whom I am chief."

After six months of rejoicing, the time came for me to be tried. It seemed that the Lord had quite forsaken me. I was left, as I thought, to be consumed in darkness. All was darkness. I can never describe that awful time when the question came, "Where is your God? You thought you had a good hope; where is it?" I could not see the first ray of light, all was so black. I felt I was all wrong, and that my hope was gone. Elder Durand has described my feelings at this period better than I ever can. I thought if I was mistaken in that hope, it was of the Lord; and if it was not, I felt I could never hope to receive a hope; and, indeed, I felt that I was the most miserable creature on the face of the earth. I felt that I was worse than a vagabond, without God and without hope.

As I cannot tell the anguish of my soul, let me try to tell how peace came while on my pillow. O! so softly came the still, small voice, saying, "My Redeemer liveth! my Redeemeth liveth!" All comfort was in those few words. The heart that was all crushed with sorrow, was healed in an instant; and if that was not the still, small voice, or the healing balm, then I know nothing about it. I thought the trouble too great; that I could not bear it; but I would not have had it one stroke lighter.

I feel that I am falling far short of half expressing my feelings. It seems to me that it is all too wonderful for me to write about.

A few things my heart has felt and known. I cannot give all the connections or circumstances that brought all these feelings. What my heart has felt is like this, Lord, help my unbelief. I fear I shall surely fall some day. "Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him." "It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God." "God is not mocked." I do know he is not mocked; for if we sow to the flesh, we shall reap corruption.

I feel that my trials are peculiar to my brethren, and I hope I have their fellowship; for if I were without that, I should be most miserable.

There were many new thoughts given me during our Association, as the brethren spoke about the great difference between being cut to the heart and being cut in the heart; also about the light that shines into the heart, and the light that shines in the heart. There have been great questions with me at times whether that light shines in my heart; but of that my my brethren are the judges. I feel they have too much confidence in me. They manifest so much interest in me, which often makes me feel ashamed of myself. If they could see how awfully deceitful my heart is, they would despise me. I feel sometimes that there is no soundness in me; that rottenness has entered my bones; that I am nothing but a loathsome lump of sin.

It has been a long time since I wrote this, and laid it aside, thinking I would burn it sometime, as there was nothing in it; but I have not felt that I could; for as I read it I feel it is all I can ever say. I feel it is very imperfect, but how could I expect anything else of myself, who am all imperfection? So, dear brethren, if you think this scribble worthy a place in our dear family paper, it is at your disposal.

Your sister in hope,

L. SCHIEFER.

MARRIAGES.

MAY 19th, 1895, by Elder H. J. Redd, at River View, Ala., Mr. B. F. Logan and Miss Ophelia Myhand, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Myhand, all of River View, Chambers Co., Ala.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

MY father, James Robins, was born Sept. 17th, 1817, and died March 21st, 1895, being 77 years, 6 months and 4 days old.

RANSOM ROBINS.

WATERVILLE, Minn., May 16, 1895.

Louisa Hard was born in Fairfield Co., Ohio, Jan. 25th, 1818, and moved to Franklin County with her father, Elder Mahlon Peters, when in her childhood, where she has ever since lived. She was united in marriage to Aaron Hard in 1840, and to this union were born two sons. She departed this life March 31st, 1895, aged 77 years, 2 months and 6 days. She with her husband united with the Old School Baptists in the year 1862, at the Clinton Church, near Columbus, and lived a consistent member. She leaves to mourn one son, two daughters-in-law and three grandchildren, with her brethren and sisters in the church, all of whom will miss her sweet counsel and noble character. She was a true companion, a good mother, a kind neighbor, and a friend to the poor.

The funeral services were conducted by Elder Shumaker at the residence of her son, and the body was laid away in the beautiful cemetery near Columbus to await the summons from on high.

R. W. PETERS.

DIED—Sunday evening, May 5th, 1895, in the city of Galesburg, Ill., Samuel Archibald Brown, youngest son of Elder John M. and Mary E. Brown, aged 16 years, 9 months and 28 days.

The cause of his death was undoubtedly a severe injury received by a fall from a horse about three years ago, from which he partially recovered; but other troubles set in, and he failed gradually, until Friday, May 3d, the mumps set in, and his life soon went out. He told his parents that he was not afraid to die, and was willing to go.

His funeral occurred May 8th, services being held in the Old School Baptist meeting-house of the Henderson Church, near Rio; after which the casket containing the broken vessel, wreathed in flowers, was gently borne to the cemetery by six of his former comrades and committed to its mother earth, to await the pleasure of the Lord.

The exercises were conducted by your unworthy brother in gospel bonds,

S. KETCHUM.

ELMWOOD, Ill., May 21, 1895.

DEPARTED this life in Fairfield, Mich., May 9th, 1895, Mr. Garrott M. Brees, aged 43 years, 10 months and 25 days.

He was a son of Lewis and Betsy Brees, she being a member of the Old School Baptist Church in this place. She left us for her home above in July, 1882, the father following in 1889. Garrott was the first one taken from us out of a family of six brothers and three sisters. He leaves a wife and two small children. He never made a profession of religion, but he always said he thought the Old School Baptists the nearest to the truth of any. Once I heard him say that if he ever got religion he would get it right, and not make a fool of it. He was a hard-working man; but his labor is done, and he is laid to rest. God has taken a dearly loved one. How we miss him none can tell; but we will try to bow submissively, knowing that he doeth all things well.

J. M. BREES.

FAIRFIELD, Mich., May 18, 1895.

B. L. BEEBE—DEAR BROTHER:—Please publish the death of sister Mary Sager, who departed this life March 17th, 1895, near Hillsdale, Kansas, aged about 38 years.

She moved from Huntsville, Ala., to this country, and was baptized in the fellowship of the Little Flock Church, where she lived a loving member until called away. She was a faithful and true member, always willing to fill her seat in the church, and her presence is greatly missed. Her last words to her husband and family were, "Do not grieve after me, for I am going to a place of rest, where there is no more sorrow and trouble." She leaves a babe about fourteen months old, a loving husband and five step-children to mourn their loss, with the Little Flock Church. She was baptized by Elder D. Sayers. Her funeral sermon was preached by the same, the text used being Hebrews iv. 9: "There remaineth therefore a rest to the people of God."

ALSO,

Elizzie Sims departed this life March 22d, 1895, aged about 70 years.

Her maiden name was Elizzie Sayers. She moved from Tennessee to this country in 1874, and was baptized in the fellowship of the Little Flock Church, Spring Hill, Johnson Co., Kansas, where she lived a faithful member until death, always filling her seat in the church when convenient. She had been for several years almost helpless. She was a member of the New School Baptists for some time; but after hearing the doctrine of salvation by grace set forth she said that was what she understood to save a poor, sinful worm, as she felt herself to be, for if she were saved it was not by anything of her own merit. She left it with her husband for Elder D. Sayers to attend her burial service, and Elder J. Alston to assist. We want to try to attend to it on the second Sunday in June, 1895, if the Lord will. She was baptized by Elder D. Sayers, the pastor of the Little Flock Church at that time.

She leaves a loving husband, three children and a number of grandchildren, with the church, to mourn their loss. I tried to preach for her at her house a few days before she died. The church will greatly miss her, but our loss is her gain.

Yours in a good hope,

D. SAYERS.

BLUEJACKET, Ind. T., May 17, 1895.

IN harmony with the wishes of the deceased it becomes my duty to send a tribute to the memory of George Wareham, who died May 28th, at three o'clock p. m., in the 74th year of his age.

He suffered a little more than three years from inflammatory rheumatism, and his suffering cannot be described, though we never heard a murmur of complaint. Surely he manifested Job's patience. No mortal could have borne the suffering which he bore had it not been for the glorious presence of Christ, which bore him above this world, and allowed him a foretaste of the kingdom of heaven; and by grace given he could say, "I know that my afflictions are for a wise purpose," and was always ready to praise the name of the Lord. His estimate of himself was very humble, and he counted himself a poor sinner saved by sovereign grace alone.

He united with the Congregationalists at the age of eighteen; and as years passed by he told me that the more he tried to merit Christ's favor the farther from the throne of grace he seemed to be, and the more sin he could see in his daily walk. He went to hear other preaching, but never heard anything that he could have full fellowship for. He sent for different publications, but all to no avail. He said that he went on in this way for years, and never saw any one who had experienced a hope in salvation by grace, "not of works, lest any man should boast." He said that many a time when in darkness he was made to cry to the Lord, "Is there any one like me?" Alone in the world he seemed to be, thinking he must give up in despair; but he said, "The Lord never deserted me, though when my little hope seemed almost gone I thought he would."

Some years ago a Mr. Walters, of Iowa, sent some copies of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES to his daughter, Mrs. Frank Bain, who was living in Montana, and a neighbor to Mr. Wareham. She sent them to him to read. "O," he said, "it was like manna to the children of Israel traveling through the wilderness, or like finding one of your own country in a far-off land. I have not power to express the feelings of joy which took possession of me as I read one article after another." He would often say, "Those papers and the precious Savior are my only companions." I did not get acquainted with him until last winter, though we lived only twenty-five miles apart. From that time I was there quite often, but was not present at the time of his death. How much good it did me to hear him tell of his trials; and how much it strengthened my little hope to see one off in the world alone, I may say, for he was the only thorough Old Baptist that I have ever met out here. I have heard him earnestly refer to the words of the hymn,

"Nothing in my hand I bring;
Simply to thy cross I cling."

At times, after suffering excruciating pain, he would say, "The sufferings of this world are nothing to be compared with the glory of the next." It was not his privilege to have his name written in the church-book, but I wish I had the same assurance that my name is in the book of life that I have that his is. The night before he died he said, "I shall soon be at rest." He lost the power of speech soon afterward, and when the end came he looked up and smiled. The evening before the end came he asked those near the bedside if they could hear the singing, and said, "Such music I never heard before."

He was born Jan. 27th, 1821, in Huntingdon Co., Pa., where he lived thirty-three years, and was married. His wife died, leaving five children, three of whom survive. In 1854 he moved to Iowa, and in April, 1855, he married Jane Robbins. This union was blessed with ten children, nine of whom are living. The family came to Montana in 1875, and in 1878 his oldest son was killed by the Indians. In 1889 he came to Fergus County, where he lived until his death. He was a kind husband, a loving father, and those who knew him longest say that he had not an enemy in the world.

PICTORIAL HISTORY

OF THE

UNITED STATES.

By James D. McCabe.

This work is no dry mass of details—no bombastic effort to inflame the national pride, but a vivid and brilliant narrative of the events of our history, from the discovery of the American Continent down to thepresent time. It gives a most interesting account of the Indians of North America, from the time of the coming of the white men. The voyages of Columbus and explorations and discoveries of the different nations of Europe are related with graphic power. Every step of our colonial history is traced with patient fidelity, and the sources of those noble and, we trust, enduring institutions, which have made our country free and great, are shown with remarkable clearness. Then follows a clear and succinct account of our great Struggle for Independence, and the establishment of the Federal Union—the events of our career from the close of the Revolution to the administration of Harrison.

The work is printed from plain, new type, on fine calendered paper, and comprised in one octavo volume of 960 pages. It is splendidly embellished with nearly 500 fine engravings, embracing battles and other historical scenes, portraits of distinguished men, views of our principal cities, &c., &c.

Bound in Fine Silk Cloth, Plain Edges, $2.00, Post-paid.

CORRESPONDENCE.

PATTONSVILLE, Va., Feb. 3, 1895.

MR. MCPHEARSON:—I received an answer from you a few days since, in reply to my letter directed to brother David Bledsoe. You claim to have answered my questions, but you only referred to two or three of them, and very slightly at that, which shows very plainly that you could not answer them in harmony with your theory of doctrine. After having slightly noticed one or two, you turn off and say there are two sides to this question. If there are two sides to it I have no more use for my Bible. I contend that there is only one side to it, and that is a limited atonement. I cannot see how any man clalming to be a Paimitive Baptist can believe anything else and believe the Bible. I wish to state in the outset that the doctrine of a limited atonement saves every soul that ever has any true desire to be saved. It includes the weary and heavy laden, the hungry and thirsty, the poor in spirit; in fact it is high enough, broad enough and deep enough to take in all believers, or all who sincerely repent of their sins. It includes the whole ransomed church of God the world over. Is not this sufficient? You answer my questions by saying, "They all refer to the church." I acknowledge that the most of them refer to the church; and you will find that nearly all Scripture is addressed to the church, because the church is all that Christ came to save, as I will prove very clearly before I get through.

What does your first answer refer to? I asked, "What did Christ accomplish in his death?" Here is your answer, "By his death we are reconciled to God, and by his life we are saved." Was not that written to the church? What does the pronoun "we" refer to? To the church. Your theory teaches that the whole world is reconciled to God; but Paul says the church is reconciled to God. If you or any other man will prove that the world is reconciled to God, then I will believe it; but you can never do it; because if Christ reconciled the whole world to God, the whole world will be saved. Does not the world stand in the same relation to God to-day that it did before Christ came, so far as their fallen nature is concerned? In other words, are not men saved to-day in the same way they were before the days of our Redeemer's incarnation? I think you will answer yes. I consider you did not at all answer the questions I propounded. Did Christ reconcile the whole world of mankind to God? If he did, in what sense is our fallen nature changed from what it was before Christ came to earth? Have we any better chance to be saved now than we had then? If so, God has changed, and loves his people better now than he did then. Do you not see there is no truth in such a theory? If the atonement is universal, man is not dead in trespasses and sins. It would be unreasonable in God to offer salvation to a dead sinner. The total depravity of man is taught on almost every page in the Bible. If you deny the total depravity of man, I will give you a few quotations of Scripture which you will please harmonize with your theory. Please consider them carefully, for these are solemn things and deserve our careful consideration. "What then? Are we better than they? No, in no wise; for we ha[ve] before proved both Jews and G[en]tiles, that they are all under [sin]. Now, if there is no difference [be]tween the Jews and Gentiles as [to] their sinful nature, did not Ch[rist] reconcile all those heathen nations to God which existed during the legal dispensation, just the same as he did those nations which existed during the days of Christ in the flesh, and since, if your theory of a universal atonement be true? If he did, he never gave them the benefit of it, for he did not allow them to mix or mingle with the Jews. So we see how inconsistent such a theory is. Now I will proceed with my quotations. "As it is written, There is none righteous, no, not one; there is none that understandeth; there is none that seeketh after God; they are all gone out of the way; they are together become unprofitable; there is none that doeth good, no, not one. Their throat is an open sepulchre; with their tongues they have used deceit; the poison of asps is under their lips; whose mouth is full of cursing and bitterness; their feet are swift to shed blood; destruction and misery are in their ways, and the way of peace have they not known; there is no fear of God before their eyes. Now we know that what things soever the law saith, it saith to them who are under the law; that every mouth may be stopped, and all the world may become guilty before God."—Rom. iii. 9–19. If this does not teach the total depravity of the human race, language does not teach anything. And if you will read Rom. v, you will find what brought man into this deplorable condition. If man can deliver himself out of this death in sin your theory is true; but if he cannot, my position is true. You say the whole matter is left with the sinner whether he will accept salvation or not; that if he accepts it he will be saved, and if he rejects it he will be lost. Does not this leave the matter with the dead sinner? It looks so to me. Now let us hear what Paul says to his Corinthian brethren on this subject. "But the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; [Why, Paul?] for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned." Now, if [the] things of the Spirit are foolishness unto the natural man, and he cannot even discern them, how can he accept the offered terms of salvation," as you say? Your theory is that he can hear the gospel and yield to its teachings. But Paul says he cannot even discern the things of the Spirit. If he cannot discern them how can he receive them, how can he yield obedience to them? Can you yield to a principle, a doctrine that you can neither understand nor receive, and which is nothing but foolishness unto you? Can you ask your better judgment will consent to? You cannot. You certainly will acknowledge that an alien sinner has no spiritual life in him, and that he has no power to ask for a thing that he has no knowledge of. You would not say that God enlightens a sinner in order to give him a chance to yield to the terms of the gospel, and, if he fails to yield, to withdraw that knowledge; because the apostle says, "Being confident of this very thing, that he which hath begun a good work in you will perform it until the day of Jesus Christ." Moreover, God does not enlighten a man without quickening him; because enlightenment means to instruct or teach; and you cannot instruct a dead sinner. Paul says the whole race of mankind is dead in trespasses and sins until they are born into the spiritual kingdom; and until they are born of the Spirit they can never receive instruction from the spiritual King. So you certainly must see how absurd and foolish it is to talk of an alien sinner yielding to the teachings of the gospel until quickened by the grace of God and born into the spiritual kingdom of Christ. Read Eph. ii. 1–5 and you will find how God brings a sinner from a state of death into his spiritual kingdom. Paul says, "And you hath he quickened, who were dead in trespasses and sins." Here he says they were dead in trespasses and sins, and then says that Christ quickened them. What was the first thing he did? To quicken or give life to them. This means the same as to be regenerated and born again. And who is the author of regeneration? Can a man regenerate himself? Can he beget himself? Then who must do the first work? Peter says that God does the first work. Hear him. "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, to an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you."—1 Peter i. 3, 4. It seems to me that Peter here settles the whole matter. He says we are begotten by God the Father, through our Lord Jesus Christ, unto a lively hope, and to an inheritance incorruptible and undefiled, and that fadeth not away. Does not this sound like it was all the work of the Lord, independent of anything man can do? You certainly will acknowledge that after a person is begotten unto a lively hope he is a christian. Who did this work? Peter says God did it. Then if God begets us unto a lively hope, where does your "yielding to the terms of the gospel" come in, in order to produce this birth? I think you will have to exclude all your conditions, or erase the words of Peter from the Bible. Let us hear Paul again. In Eph. ii. he first states the total depravity of those he was addressing, and says they were by nature the children of wrath, even as others. He then tells how they were translated from the kingdom of darkness into the glorious liberty of the children of God. "But God, who is rich in mercy, for his great love wherewith he loved us, even when we were dead in sins, hath quickened us together with Christ." Paul says God loved them when they were dead in trespasses and sins, and it was on account of that love that he quickened them. Now, if his love for the whole human race had been the same, or if the whole human race had been reconciled to God, he certainly would have done to all alike; that is, he would have quickened all; and he could not possibly quicken them without giving them life or spiritual understanding; and if God begins a work in a man, he declares that he will perform it until the day of Jesus Christ. Paul goes on to say, "For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them." If I say to you that a certain building is the workmanship of Mr. A., would I mean that the building had any voice in its erection? Would I not mean that Mr. A. had conceived the plan of the building and carried it into execution? Certainly I would. And this is the very thing that Paul teaches in this Scripture. Have we the power of creation? Have we any voice in our creation? Paul ascribes all this work to God, and the place where it was accomplished, in Christ Jesus. And the effects of this work, he says, are good works. He then says that God foreordained that we should walk in them. But you say that the alien sinner must yield to the gospel in order to become a child of God, or in order to produce the new birth. Jesus says the Father has given him power over all flesh, that he should give eternal life to as many as the Father hath given him.—John xvii. 2. How many did the Father give to Christ? You say he gave the whole world to him. Christ says, "All that the Father giveth me shall come to me." But if your theory be true all the world will come to Christ and be saved. Christ says, "Every one therefore that hath heard, and hath learned of the Father, cometh unto me." You say every one can hear the gospel and be saved. Christ says, "As the Father raiseth up the dead and quickeneth them, even so the Son quickeneth whom he will." But your theory says that a man can raise himself from the dead, or impart spiritual understanding to himself. Now, if Christ has to quicken the sinner, you must certainly acknowledge that the sinner has nothing to do with that quickening. Christ says, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation, but is passed from death unto life." Here Christ teaches the same thing, that man is first dead, and then passes from that dead state into a living state. And in the next verse he says, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, the hour is coming, and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God; and they that hear shall live." Did he mean that all the race of man should hear the voice of the Son of God and live? If your theory be true he did. He says the dead shall not only hear, but shall live. Your theory leads only to Universalism. Read the first chapter of Ephesians and see whether Paul advocates your theory of a universal atonement. He says, "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ [Now notice how he blessed us], according as he hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world [why], that we should be holy and without blame before him in love; having predestinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to himself, according to the good pleasure of his will." And he goes on to say, "That in the dispensation of the fullness of times he might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven and which are in earth, even in him." He then says they were "predestinated according to the purpose of him who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will." You say this refers to the church. I say so too. And if God predestinated the church unto eternal life, does not that teach a limited atonement? For if he predestinated the church unto eternal life, he left the rest to eternal condemnation. You certainly will not deny this plain truth. Moreover, Paul goes back before the church had her natural existence in the world, and explains the whole plan of salvation, and how the members of the church are all brought into the fold; not by anything they done or could do, but by the counsel and purpose of God. preaches this same doctrine Romans, when he says, "A know that all things work to for good to them that love G them who are the called accor his purpose. For whom he know, he also did predesti conformed to the image of that he might be the firs among many brethren. Mor whom he did predestinate, the also called; and whom he c them he also justified; and wh justified, them he also glorifie Rom. viii. 28–30. Paul here s that every one that God forek.ew (and he foreknew all his people), he predestinated, called, justified and glorified. If this does not fix the number definitely that compose the church of Christ, language cannot fix anything. And if the number is fixed, and cannot be changed (and if you acknowledge the foreknowledge of God you know that it is), you are compelled to acknowledge a limited atonement. Now read the eighth chapter of Romans carefully and see what Paul is teaching in reference to the plan of salvation. Paul knew that the Jews were the chosen people of God, and had been peculiarly favored by God down to the christian dispensation. Paul was preaching that only a portion of the Jews could be saved; and for fear the people would believe that the word of God would take no effect, he explains to them why they will not all be saved. Hear him. "They are not all Israel which are of Israel; neither because they are the seed of Abraham are they all children; but, In Isaac shall thy seed be called."—Rom. ix. 6, 7. Thus showing very plainly that because they belonged to national Israel they could not claim an inheritance with the children of God. Paul then shows what the word of promise is, or in other words, God's plan of saving his people. "For this is the word of promise, At this time will I come, and Sarah shall have a son. And not only this; but when Rebecca also had conceived by one, even by our father Isaac (for the children being not yet born, neither having done any good or evil, that the purpose of God according to election might stand, not of works, but of him that calleth), it was said unto her, The elder shall serve the younger. As it is written, Jacob have I loved, but Esau have I hated." He then asks, "Is there unrighteousness with God" for loving Jacob and hating Esau before they were born, or had done either good or evil? He answers, "God forbid." "For he [God] saith to Moses, I will have mercy on whom I will have mercy, and I will have compassion on whom I will have compassion." Paul then says, "So then it is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that sheweth mercy." I understand Jacob to represent the elect of God, and Esau to represent the non-elect; because in the twenty-second verse Paul points out two classes of people: one class fitted to destruction, and the other class afore prepared unto glory. The former Paul calls the vessels of wrath fitted to destruc-on, and the other class the vessels mercy afore prepared unto glory. en us, whom he hath called, not ue Jews only, but also of the ntiles." Thus showing very plain- that those vessels of mercy included all of God's people in all ages of the world. Now, if Paul preached a general atonement, why did he use such strong and forcible language in this chapter, to both Jews and Gentiles, in favor of election and a limited atonement, and even ask the question, "Hath not the potter [God] power over the clay, of the same lump to make one vessel unto honor, and another unto dishonor?" Now let us see whether Peter preaches the same doctrine that Paul preaches. "Peter, an apostle of Jesus Christ, to the strangers scattered throughout Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia, and Bithynia, elect according to the foreknowledge of God the Father, through sanctification of the Spirit, unto obedience," &c. He says they were elect according to God's foreknowledge, unto obedience. Now, if God chose all these unto obedience, or in other words, chose them that they should be obedient, the choice certainly was made before they were obedient. God did not wait until after they became obedient and then choose them, but he chose them unto obedience. Hence they had nothing to do in this choice, but were, as Paul says, "vessels of mercy afore prepared unto glory."

You next quote, "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world," and then exclaim, "The world is reconciled to God by the death of his Son!" But you failed to bring forward any proof on that point. Now I will give you a little explanation of the word world as used in the Bible. When used with reference to salvation, it is always used in a limited sense, and is very seldom addressed to the unregenerate portion of mankind. When John said, "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world," he meant the sins of his chosen people, who were in the world. When Jesus said, "That the world through him might be saved," he meant the church. You will ask me to prove this. To be brief, I will prove it in this way: Christ came into the world, and preached his own everlasting gospel, and established his ordinances, and called and qualified his ministers to expound them. We have to take their interpretation of the Scriptures. When John says, "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world," and when Paul and Peter teach conclusively that Christ died to redeem the church only, we are forced to the conclusion that the word world means the church of God only. If you make the word world in those Scriptures to refer to all mankind, you make the language of Christ contradict the teaching of his apostles, whom he called and qualified to be the interpreters of the Scriptures.

UPPER CLINCH, Tenn., Feb. 7, 1895.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS:—It has been on my mind to suggest a few thoughts on the following quotation of Scripture, "And you hath he quickened, who were dead in trespasses and sins."—Eph. ii. 1. The apostle is here addressing the church at Ephesus, and all the faithful in Christ Jesus, and his language on this occasion proves conclusively that the characters whom he was addressing had been dead in trespasses and sins, and were by nature the children of wrath, even as others. But God, who is rich in mercy, for his great love wherewith he loved them, had quickened them together with Christ. The sinner was dead to righteousness, but has been made alive to holiness. How can the sinner who is dead to righteousness obey the commandments of God, when he is "free from righteousness?"—Rom. vi. 20. If free from righteousness, righteousness has no power over him, because he is under the law of sin and death; therefore he is the servant of sin, and cannot serve two masters. "When a strong man armed keepeth his palace, his goods are in peace; but when a stronger than he shall come upon him, and overcome him, he taketh from him all his armor wherein he trusted, and divideth his spoils."—Luke xi. 21, 22. The devil or sin is the strong man, and Christ is the stronger than he. As long as the devil or sin has control over a man, the man has no desire to sarve God; but when Christ binds the strong man, he is known as the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth, to the Jew first, and also to the Gentile. Therefore we are to preach salvation to them that were afar off and to them that are nigh. Peter preached, "For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call."—Acts ii. 39. And Paul says, "And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose. For whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son, that he might be the first-born among many brethren. Moreover, whom he did predestinate, them he also called; and whom he called, them he also justified; and whom he justified, them he also glorified."—Rom. viii. 28–30. What I understand by the above Scripture is that God calls, justifies and glorifies all his people, and sets them apart for the Master's use, to serve God in the Spirit. Therefore Paul says, "Ye are not in the flesh, but in the Spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you." No man can serve God or yield obedience to his commands until quickened by God's grace into a new and spiritual life; for "the carnal mind is enmity against God, for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be. So then they that are in the flesh cannot please God."—Rom. viii. 7, 8. Paul also says, in 1 Cor. ii. 14, "But the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned." The conclusion then is plain, that the sinner must first be quickened into spiritual life before he can receive the things of the Spirit. Then, blessed is the man to whom the Lord imputeth righteousness. It is the righteousness of Christ imputed to us that characterizes us as the righteous in the sight of God. The righteousness of man is as filthy rags in the sight of God. The evil tree cannot bring forth good fruit, neither can the good tree bring forth evil fruit. The sinner is an evil tree, and brings forth evil fruit, until quickened by the grace of God, and then he brings forth good fruit. Therefore Jesus said to the Pharisees, "Either make the tree good and his fruit good, or else make the tree corrupt and his fruit corrupt; for the tree is known by his fruit." "Now the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance; against such there is no law."—Gal. v. 22, 23. "Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth." So we, according to nature, are corrupt, dead to righteousness, dead in trespasses and sins. Then the work of grace is to quicken or make alive the dead sinner. After the sinner has been made alive to God and to righteousness, he is a proper subject to receive the commandments of Christ. For this purpose Christ has chosen his ministers, and ordained them, and commanded them to preach the gospel to every creature; and he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved. The gospel cannot be received by the unregenerate portion of the human race. Only those who are quickened by the grace of God can receive the gospel, because they only have spiritual ears and spiritual hearts to hear and understand the gospel. Christ's ministers are commanded to feed the flock, or the church of God, over which the Holy Ghost has made them overseers, and which Christ has purchased with his own blood. Therefore the preaching of the gospel by God's ministers is not for the purpose of quickening dead souls, but for the purpose of feeding the lambs and sheep with the sincere milk of the word, and collecting them into the church of God on earth, where they can enjoy all the spiritual food of the gospel. And when the ministers have done the bidding of their Master, they have only performed the duties assigned them by him, and have nothing to glory of, but should count themselves but unprofitable servants. They should sow the seed in the morning, and not withhold their hands in the evening, for they know not which will prosper, or whether all will be good.

I will close my scattering rem for fear I weary your patience. is the first time I ever wrote publication. If you see anything in this worthy a place in the SIGNS you may publish it; if not, cast it in the waste-box, and all will be right.

Yours to serve in the gospel,

GEORGE EDENS.

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES—DEAR FRIENDS:—Some time ago I went to Illinois on a soliciting tour for seed grain, in behalf of the destitute farmers of this community. I was told that I could do but little, as so many had preceded me on the same mission. I thought so too; but after stopping at a number of places without success, and as I was passing through St. Augustine, I decided to inquire of a man for Old School Baptists. His answer was, "Yes sir, I know a number of them. My father is one, and they have a church five miles from here. Tomorrow is their meeting day, and two preachers from abroad are expected to attend." Well, I was going to get off the train there, when I was advised by this man, Mr. Simmons, to ge to Avon, the next station, which would give me a surer chance to ride out to the church, which is in the village of Greenbush. It had been some time since I attended an Old Baptist meeting, and I was very anxious to get among them. I got to Mr. A. W. Simmons' place, and soon Elder Smith Ketchum, of Elmwood, Ill., arrived. I had a pleasant visit that night, and went to the meeting next day, where I met Elder Samuel Dark, of Macomb, Ill., and a number of the members. I told them my mission, and they discussed the matter among themselves, and on Sunday Elder Ketchum announced a meeting to be held on Monday in the interest of my charge. The meeting was held as announced. Subscriptions began to pile up, a number volunteered to go out soliciting, and by the help and influence of the members of Greenbush church six hundred bushels of grain were collected and shipped to Mason City, where it was distributed by my brother, J. M. Amsberry. Later on I visited Mr. Philemon Stout, of Cotton Hill, who had, with his neighbors, sent a car of grain last winter, in response to the letter written by my brother and published in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. Mr. Stout took me around among his neighbors, and we received seventy-five dollars in money, with which Elder Ketchum purchased grain and shipped to us. I was liberally assisted by Mr. C. C. [illegible]ey, a friend of Mr. Stout, and [illegible] G. Walker, of Avon, rendered [illegible]ble assistance in getting up [illegible]r sent from that place. What [illegible] good people did for us in this [illegible]as done much good, and their [illegible]olence will ever be remembered [illegible]e forty-two farmers who re[illegible] share of their contributions, [illegible]ll others who love kind [illegible]ay it please God to add to prosperity and happiness as have added to our welfare, is [illegible]rayer of one who feels himself unworthy to be called by the [illegible]e of their Master.

SHAWNEE, Kansas, Feb. 13, 1895.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS:—I have often thought to write you, but have felt so little and poor in spirit that I feared to start, lest I should worry you; but it remains in my mind to say something in the dear family paper, the SIGNS, from which I so much comfort gain, and have my feelings told by so many of the dear ones, who seem to have my feelings. I am glad that I am able to witness to them, for I feel to know that they are the children of God.

Now I must try to tell you something of what I hope have been the Lord's dealings with me, a poor, helpless worm. In the year 1872 the good Lord showed me my miserable condition. When I was quite young it came into my mind that I ought to try to pray, and to be as good as I thought I could, as I thought I had not sinned much, and that I would soon be a christian; but when the good Lord showed me my condition I felt to be of all sinners the meanest. I felt that I was justly condemned, and was made to cry, "Thy will, O Lord, be done." That burden of condemnation which I had so long carried, it pleased our God on the first Sunday morning in March, 1872, to remove, and to raise my bowed down head, and to fill my heart with praises to his most holy name. Everything seemed to be praising the name of our God. I felt that I was a new creature. All old things had passed away, and I was made to cry, "Come hither, and let me tell you what the Lord has done for my soul." He had taken my feet out of the miry clay, and placed them on the Rock that lay in Zion, the chief corner stone. I was made to know that I loved the children of God. I thought my troubles were over, and that I would be happy the remainder of my life; but O, my dear brethren, how sadly mistaken I was. I have seen many dark days since that time. I have been made to weep and moan, and to wonder, Is there any one like me?

I remain your sister in hope of eternal life,

E. H. BRADLEY.

CORRESPONDING LETTERS.

The Baltimore Old School Baptist Association, in session with the Ebenezer Church, Baltimore City, Md., May 22d, 23d and 24th, 1895, to the associations and churches with which we correspond, sends greeting.

IT is with a feeling sense of humility and thankfulness that we have been assembled together in love and fellowship, and to receive your messengers and messages of love, which to us is an evidence that we all are led and kept by the same God, who is exalted above every creature; and all the preaching has been to tell of the wonderous word and work of God, that glorious subject that God is truth, and outside of him there is no truth. The proclamation of that truth does honor, exalt and glorify him in his love and mercy in the salvation of his people; and this has been the burden of the preaching. God's people everywhere are a believing people, and believe that salvation is entirely of the Lord. We hope your messengers will continue to come with your sweet messages of love and fellowship in the gospel.

Our next meeting will be held with the Warren Church, in May, 1896, if the Lord will. Farewell.

MARK XVI. 15, 16.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS OF THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES:—I have been reading your paper for some time, and have enjoyed it much. I would be glad for you to give me your views upon the following Scripture, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned."—Mark xvi. 15, 16. Did not this make the plan of salvation plain for all who desired to be saved? Will we be held accountable for not sending the gospel to the heathen? Will they be saved without the gospel? If it were foreordained for some to be saved, and a certain portion to be lost, why was it necessary for Christ to die for the world, that whosoever believeth on him shall have everlasting life? If a man were foreordained to be lost, under the free gift of salvation can he be saved if he so desires? If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness. I do not ask this in any spirit of argument, but desire an explanation of it. Yours truly,

WM. A. MURROW.

RUTLEDGE, Ga., April 10, 1895.

REPLY.

THERE never has been anything more plainly revealed in the Scriptures than what the gospel is; and yet few things have been so much misunderstood and perverted in the minds and by the teachings of men. We desire, in replying to the above questions, to consider the theme of what the gospel is, and what its object is, and what the design of preaching it is. The very word "gospel" carries its own meaning with itself. The simple meaning of the word "gospel" is never anything more nor less than the good news, or good tidings, or good word. To preach the gospel is to preach or proclaim the good news. It is not a gospel, but the gospel. There are many sorts of good news, but this is the good news above all others. To the captive but one thing can deserve to be called good news, and that is deliverance; and so to the conscious sinner but one thing can be good news, and that is the news of salvation. The Scriptures use the term "gospel" to describe that salvation which has been wrought out and finished for sinners. To proclaim the gospel is to proclaim a finished salvation for the lost.

The gospel, then, is simply good news concerning salvation. To preach the gospel, then, is simply to declare the good news of salvation. We desire to emphasize the definition "good news;" and first, the gospel of a finished salvation is not good news to all men. It is good news to the man who feels his lost condition and his need of salvation; but to the unconvicted, careless sinner, and to the Pharisee, it is not good news. It is not good news to the unconscious, unconvicted sinner, because he is not aware of his lost estate. It is not good news to the Pharisee, the legalist, because he feels himself already safe in and on account of his own goodness. Such an one not only has no use for a salvation that saves sinners, but he thinks such teaching immoral, and calculated to lead men to grow careless about sin and salvation; therefore a finished salvation is not good news to him. Good news to the careless worldling would be that he should enjoy carnal pleasures to his fill forever. Good news to the Pharisee would be that a great reward awaited his own righteousness. The preaching of a finished salvation seems to each of these classes as an idle tale. To the Greek it is still foolishness, and to the Jew it is still a stumbling-block. All the children of God who believe in Jesu[illegible] once belonged to one or the o[illegible] these two classes. We are per[illegible] that thousands of our reade[illegible] witness to the truth of what w[illegible] been saying. There was a tim[illegible] the gospel of a finished rede[illegible] was not good news to any of [illegible]

But to whom is it goo[illegible] The Scriptures describe [illegible] tion of sinners under variou[illegible] trations. They are lost, the[illegible] dead in sin, they are conde[illegible] they are enemies to God by w[illegible] works, they are lame, halt, [illegible] blind, sick and leprous, and the[illegible] without strength. All this and [illegible] the Bible testifies concerning all [illegible]n by nature. More than this, men do not know their own vileness or undone condition; but when by the Holy Spirit the sinner is enlightened to behold the truth concerning himself, then he knows and feels his need of a way of salvation that does all for him, and requires no atonement of him. Now the good news, the gospel, declares to him that there is a way of salvation just suited to his need. It presents Jesus full of truth and grace. It declares to the condemned sinner that all fullness dwells in Christ. It tells him what to him is most wonderful and blessed, that he is not saved by works of righteousness required at his hand, but by the finished work of another. It tells him that there is salvation in no other, and that there need be none, because there is a perfect fullness in Jesus. Such an one has found that he can do nothing to save himself; and now the wondrous truth breaks in upon his gaze that he need do nothing—that all is already done. The gospel tells him of Calvary, and the cross, and the bleeding Lamb of God; and nothing more does he need.

Would a conditional salvation be good news to the poor sinner? If the sinner could perform the conditions such a gospel might be good news; but to the sinner who is without strength the gospel of conditions would be evil news instead of good news. Error is, in a sense, consistent with itself. We mean that those who believe in a conditional salvation also believe in human power or merit, and do not believe what the Scriptures teach concerning the fallen, depraved condition of man. In the view of the followers of a conditional salvation men are not dead in sins, but only in a stupor or asleep. Such as these can speak to the glory of self and human nature, and not to the glory of Christ. But to the man who has no merit and no strength a conditional system of salvation, that is, a system that saves men upon the ground of terms and conditions which they must comply with, is the proclamation of death rather than life.

The gospel is not an offer of salvation. To preach the gospel is not to preach that God offers to save men, but that he has saved men. Jehovah does not offer to save anybody. If the gospel were but an offer of salvation, and all men are left to accept or reject it as they will, then men would all choose darkness rather than light. By nature all men love darkness rather than light, because [illegible]heir deeds are evil. Unless a man [illegible]ls his need of salvation, salvation [illegible]ld present no charms to him; [illegible] without the revelation of the [illegible]y law of God to the soul no man [illegible]r feels his sins or his need of a Savior. The gospel is not an offer of salvation; and if it were, it could not possibly benefit anybody. The gospel is simply the good news of a salvation finished for sinners who are lost.

This is the gospel which the disciples were bidden to preach to every creature. Who will gladly receive it and believe in it? On the day of Pentecost, a few weeks after this commission was given by our Lord to the disciples, one of the disciples, Peter, preached the gospel; and it was gladly received by those who had been pricked in the heart, and who cried out, "What shall we do?" Such ones always gladly receive it. Such ones have been prepared to receive it. Such preparation is by the Spirit of God. Such as these shall be saved. Such as these are saved. To believe or gladly receive the gospel is not a condition of being saved, but it is an evidence that the man or woman is saved. To not believe or gladly receive the word of this good news is, on the other hand, evidence that the soul has not felt its need, and that the work of salvation is not begun in that heart. Baptism is but the evidence that the word has been believed. It is the fruit of living faith, and the evidence of it.

We have presented this general view of the gospel, and of the text to which our brother refers, in order to pave the way to the saying of a few things in direct reply to the questions which he has proposed.

Question 1. "Did not this make the plan of salvation plain for all who desire to be saved?"

Answer. We are not sure that we fully understand the meaning of the above question, but suppose that the meaning is to inquire whether this text is not a clear presentation of the way of salvation to all who desire to be saved, or to know how sinners are saved. If this be the meaning of the question we would answer yes. If those to whom these words were first spoken understood the meaning of the term "gospel," as used here by the Savior (and we do not question that they did), then to them his words contained a clear, plain statement of the way of salvation. They were bidden to preach, not an offer of salvation, nor any conditions of salvation, nor a salvation as yet imperfect or incomplete, nor a salvation that depended upon any human effort or will or choice, but simply the good news of a finished work, which made salvation sure to all the chosen vessels of mercy. This is the gospel; nothing else is the gospel. Those who are asking, "How can I be saved?" have here an answer that tells them that they are already redeemed and justified through Christ. We would lay especial stress upon the last five words of the above question, "who desire to be saved." To them the good news of the gospel belongs. They are prepared to receive and understand it; but it is not plain to those who desire to save themselves. No man can desire to be saved until he has learned the utter folly of expecting to save himself. To the former the good news is plain; to the latter it is foolishness.

Question 2. "Will we be held responsible for not sending the gospel to the heathen?"

We have heard assertions such as are implied in this question all our life. We presume that our brother has heard the same, and therefore asks the above question. These assertions are to the amount that heathen souls are descending into hell every instant because christians have been so careless, selfish and stingy that they would not provide means to send men into heathen lands to preach the gospel to them. Such an assertion as this, in effect, denies sovereign grace, election and the new birth, and puts human means and efforts before the atonement of Christ. To say that one soul is lost eternally through the neglect of another is to put salvation upon the basis of human work and effort, and to rob Jesus and his atonement of all their glory. How inconsistent men are at times! Those who make such assertions as the above also teach that millions are in hell simply because they have rejected what they call the gospel. Many of them also teach that God cannot condemn men justly unless they have first had the gospel preached to them, and have rejected it. If these things be all true, then the greatest curse that could befall the heathen would be to have the gospel preached to them. If they have no light at all they cannot be condemned, say these followers of a false gospel. If they have light sent them, and reject it, they will perish. Thus they make the gospel the means of destruction instead of salvation to nine-tenths of all the heathen who hear it. God forbid that any of the children of God should be led to believe such a libel upon both the justice and mercy of God.

If our brother had asked the question, "Are we under obligations to proclaim the gospel of the Son of God wherever God calls us to do so?" we should say unhesitatingly yes. If the question should be, "Are not all who believe in Jesus under obligation to bear witness in all places to his power and grace?" we should also say yes. But if the question be asked, "Are not christians responsible if the heathen are lost by reason of not having heard the gospel?" we cannot too emphatically say no! If any man is lost, the sole reason is sin, which condemns the guilty in the sight of the divine law and the divine justice. No man is lost because of the neglect of another. No man is lost because he rejects the gospel. It would be far nearer the truth to say that he rejects the gospel because he is lost. But we desire to be understood as objecting to the words "accept" or "reject," if either is understood to imply an offered salvation.

Question 3. "Will they [the heathen] be saved without the gospel?"

We suppose the question means, Will they be saved without having heard the gospel? No man can be saved without the gospel; for Paul expressly testifies of it (not of preaching it) that the gospel is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth, to both Jew and Greek. But if the question simply means, Will any among the heathen be saved without having heard the gospel preached? we can only say that it seems to us that the Bible is silent upon that point. It is sure that not one vessel of mercy shall be lost. Whoever our God has chosen in all the lands of the earth shall surely be among his jewels at the last; but God only knows his own elect. Sometimes he is pleased to reveal his work in some man or woman in such a way that others can behold it and say, This is a child of God; but he alone knows the hearts of men. We may say that it has been a thought with us that our God had so arranged in his eternal purpose that where he performs his quickening work upon the hearts of any, there he will also have servants of his to unbind the grave-clothes and let them go. If the question is meant to imply that preaching the gospel is a means of saving sinners in the sense of quickening them from the dead, and that therefore the heathen cannot be saved without it, we have no hesitancy in replying no!

Question 4. "If it were foreordained for some to be saved, and a certain portion to be lost, why was it necessary for Christ to die for the world, that whosoever believeth on him shall have everlasting life?"

Answer. We should first of all protest against this statement of our belief, or of what we understand Bible teaching to be. The doctrine of God's eternal purpose of love and mercy is not to be stated in that way. Election is not responsible for the final destruction of any man. Election does not cut any man off. Election is unto salvation. Men are lost by reason of sin. Without election all would perish, and perish justly. If men perish, sin, and not election, is responsible for it. Election regards men from the standpoint of sinners, and it is a choice of sinners.

We should also protest against the expression that "Christ died for the world." "He saves his people." "He gave himself for his sheep." "He gave himself for the church." These and similar expressions are frequent in the Scriptures. If it be true that the God of heaven did choose a people out from the rest of the world of sinners whom he purposed to finally save, then we may well ask, Why was it necessary f[or] Christ to die for the world? [I] know of no greater absurdity t[han] the assertion that Jesus died for [all] the world, when at the same time he designed to save but a part of mankind. But it was necessary that Christ should die for his elect, because only thus could sin be put away, justice satisfied, and his holy law magnified. As justice would be violated were any sinner saved without an atonement, so on the other hand it would be an equal outrage against justice were any for whom Christ died to finally perish. Jesus could not die in vain. Sin cannot require a double price. Justice exacts only even measure. If Jesus has paid the debt once, no man can be called upon to pay it again. If Christ has died for any man, that man cannot perish.

Question 5. "If a man were foreordained to be lost, under the free gift of salvation can he be saved if he so desires?"

Answer. As in reply to the fourth question we entered a protest against this statement of our faith and of Bible teaching, so here again we enter the same protest; but if the question simply means, Can the non-elect be saved if they so desire? we would reply that here also is an absurdity. The non-elect cannot desire to be saved; and this is true simply because those dead in trespasses and sins do not know their need of salvation. If a man is mourning over his lost condition, and his prayer is for holiness and salvation, these things are proofs that he is a chosen vessel of mercy. In the heart of such an one the work of salvation is begun. It shall be performed to the day of Jesus Christ. We trust that some who may read this may be among those who desire to be saved. If so, they show that the work of God is begun in their hearts; and of such as they Jesus said, "Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness: for they shall be filled." This blessing is for those who feel their need of salvation.

We have perhaps written too lengthily already, and will leave these remarks to the consideration of our brother Murrow and all our readers.

C.

THE ANNUNCIATION.

"AND she shall bring forth a son, and thou shalt call his name JESUS; for he shall save his people from their sins."—Matt. i. 21.

There are many things connected with the miraculous conception and birth of our Redeemer which not only excite our admiration, but demonstrate beyond all contradiction that he is the Son of God. In his a[dvent] to our world the Scriptures, w[hich] had predicted that he should [be] born of a virgin, required to be [fu]lfilled literally fulfilled. We can[not] fail to be profitably impressed [by] considering the incidents connected [with] his coming, with a sense of [the] wisdom and overruling govern[ment] of God in bringing to pass [that] which was written on the sub[ject] in the Scriptures of the Old [Testa]ment. Even the jealousy and [cru]el edict of the wicked Herod [was] made to subserve the righteous [pur]pose of God in affording occasion [for] the flight to Egypt, the sojourn [at] Nazareth, the lamentation of Rachel, and all those incidents which in themselves might have appeared to be accidental and unimportant, when regarded as the perfect fulfillment of prophecies going before, are of the most vital importance. Had any of the minute jots or tittles of prophecy been suffered to fail, such failure must have weakened most essentially the testimony of his being the very Savior which was ordained to turn away ungodliness from Jacob. But favored as we are to see that every circumstance connected with his advent, life, death and resurrection had been predicted thousands of years, and that all the predictions were fulfilled to the letter, we are constrained to acknowledge that all these circumstances were provided, laid out and ordained in the counsel and wisdom of God before the world began. But to the words of our text, "And she shall." The very individual provided and ordained for the purpose; no other person in the whole universe would answer the purpose of God. She had been particularly designated; every link in the chain of her ancestry had been provided with special reference to the Savior's advent. He must spring out of Judah, and from the very branch of that numerous family which God had ordained. "And she shall bring forth a son." There could be no failure in this; it was the decree of God. The whole purpose of grace and salvation was involved in this decree, therefore it must come to pass. It was the sovereign will of God; it was his purpose, his promise, and the word had gone out of his mouth in righteousness and could not fail. As she had conceived by the immediate power of God, the Holy Ghost, independently of all or any instrumentality, and contrary to the laws of nature, so without the least dependence on means or instrumentalities she should bring forth a son. No power in heaven, earth or hell existed that could possibly thwart that purpose of God or make void that promise; for the mouth of the Lord had spoken it.

"And thou shalt call his name JESUS." The angel did not say, And thou art requested, or commanded, or expected, to call his name Jesus; but "thou shalt." It would have been as possible for Joseph to change the ordinances of heaven, or hurl Jehovah from his throne, as to disobey this order of the Lord. It was not said, "thou shalt," in the mere preceptive form of law, but in the decretal inflexibility of an order from the throne of God; as when he said, "Let there be light! and there was light."

The reason why his name should be Jesus, the suitableness of the name in its application to him, is also stated by the angel of the Lord, "For he shall save his people from their sins." The name Jesus signifies a Savior, as the name Emmanuel signifies God with us; and as the name Christ signifies Anointed, and the suitableness of the name Jesus consists in the certainty of his accomplishment of the work which that name signifies. If he had come to make salvation possible for men, or to bring them into a salvable state, leave them to avail themselves of his aid, &c., then his name might have been something else. Or if he had come to save or to try to save any other than his people, this name would have been inapplicable to him. His name as well as his person came down from heaven, not to be altered or contaminated on the earth. All that name implies was assigned him in heaven, nor can he be deprived of it any more than he can be deprived of his indwelling Godhead; nor can it be made to mean anything more or less than God has said it should mean, namely, that he shall save his people from their sins. The whole election of grace, the whole family (of God) in heaven and on earth, are named in him, and hence "His people" are embraced in the name Jesus; but they are so embraced as to show that in themselves, in their standing in Adam, and in relation to the law, they are sinners; and not only sinners, but lost sinners; for he who shall save his people came only to save that which was lost; not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance. His name implies and includes them; for it would not be Jesus if he had no people to save. His property in his people is established by the words of the angel of the Lord, "His people." They are his portion, his inheritance. "The Lord's portion is his people, Jacob is the lot of his inheritance."

The words of the angel of the Lord to Joseph establish the following points beyond all controversy, viz:

1. That Christ is the Son of God.
2. That he has a people.
3. That his people were lost and helpless sinners.
4. That he came to save them from their sins.
5. That his coming and saving them from their sins did not make them his people, because they were his people when he came to save them; yet we are dependent on other testimony from heaven to inform us how he has saved them, in what manner he could and did bear their sins in his own body, and how by his stripes his people are healed.

In the complete accomplishment of the object of his mission and import of his name, he has done and suffered all that law and justice demanded at his hands on their account. His being made of a woman brought him under the law which his people had transgressed, and the legal relationship in which he stood to them made him responsible to the law for all their delinquencies. Their iniquities were laid on him, and he bore them all; and, although they crushed him beneath their weight down to the regions of the dead, yet he had power to take up his life again. He was delivered up for the offenses of his people, and raised up from the dead for their justification. Happy must be the reflection to all his people, who are enabled to say, "He gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works." "For by one offering he hath perfected forever them that are sanctified."

The exclusive nature of the redemption of Christ for his people, to save his people from their sins, has occasioned much murmuring among those religionists who dare to challenge the justice and righteousness of God for working all things after the counsel of his own will, without consulting with, or taking counsel of, his creatures. Although they find it so written, yet they resist, deny and oppose the doctrine. But with as much propriety may devils complain that they are not included in the provisions of redemption, as wicked men. If God had been bound in justice to redeem any of us, as his creatures, the work would have been counted of debt, and not of grace; but even to his own people he was under no such obligation. It was in his love and in his pity to his people, and on the ground of a prior spiritual relationship in which they were connected to Christ as their spiritual Head, that he redeemed them. Hence it is written, "For by grace are ye saved, through faith; and that not of yourselves; it is the gift of God. Not of works, lest any man should boast." Boasting is excluded, not by the law of works, but by the law of faith.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y., May 15, 1849.

CIRCULAR LETTERS.

The Baltimore Old School Baptist Association, convened with the Ebenezer Church, in the city of Baltimore, Md., May 22d, 23d and 24th, 1895, to the several churches of which she is composed, sends greeting in the Lord.

DEAR BRETHREN:—It has been a commendable and profitable custom for many years, when we have gathered in an associational meeting, to send you a letter, in which your attention has been called to some principle of truth pertaining to the doctrine of Christ our Savior, concerning the order which as established in the house of G It seems meet to us to conti e custom at this session of our tion, and so we think it well your attention to the sut christian fellowship. We ne no apology for doing so, nothing can be more for God and the good of his peo a right understanding of this ship. Its importance may ferred from the frequency wit it is referred to in the New ment. Perhaps it is not too to say that all the faith and o of the churches as laid down the New Testament are connected with it, either as its source or as its result. The word "fellowship" itself is used in the Acts and in the epistles frequently having the sense of "communion." It is called the fellowship of the apostles, the fellowship of Christ, the fellowship of the mystery of the wisdom of God, the fellowship of the sufferings of Christ; and it is said to be in the gospel, and of the Spirit, and with the Father, and with one another as believers. Thus it is seen to enter into the very life of the child of God. In fact, there can be no such thing true as that a man may be said to be a child of God, and yet be destitute of this experience of fellowship or communion with God and his people through Jesus Christ our Lord.

This leads us first to remark that its source is the Spirit of God.—Phil. ii. 1. Without the indwelling of the Spirit of God there can be no experience of this fellowship. The unregenerate man can know nothing of it. He has not the Spirit of Christ, and is none of his. It is called the communion of the Holy Ghost.—2 Cor. xiii. 14. This evidently means not only communion with the Holy Ghost, but that the Holy Spirit is its source.

Second. It is a fellowship with God, the Father and the Son.—1 Cor. i. 9; Phil. iii. 10; 1 John i. 3, 6. How highly are poor, sinful mortals exalted! How wonderful the translation which has befallen them! They are raised up from darkness, sin and death, to light and holiness and life. From having been aliens and strangers and enemies by wicked works, they are now brought nigh by the blood of Christ, and are fellow-citizens with the saints, and of the household of God. To them it is now given to behold the glory of God, and to abide in his tabernacle; and to them the Lord shows his covenant. To them it is given to speak with God as one speaks with his friend. They are become his children, and are put among the children. They are heirs of God, and joint heirs with Jesus Christ. To them the dear Lord imparts strength and hope and peace, and blesses them with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ. All this, and how much more than all this, fellowship with God signifies no human tongue can tell.

Third. It is the fellowship of saints with each other. Its only restriction is the number of those who have fellowship with God through the Spirit.—See Acts ii. 42; Gal. ii. 9; Phil. i. 5; 1 John i. 3, 6, 7. To sum he matter all up, it appears from ese and other scriptural testimo- s that christian fellowship is not work of the flesh, but of the Spirit of God; therefore it is not subject to the will of man. No man can create it nor destroy it in his own breast. It rests where and only where the Spirit which created it bids it to rest. It is above and beyond all fleshly sympathy or admiration. It embraces and is bound to embrace all who manifest the image of Christ, all who give the evidence that they are the children of God. It cannot deny itself. It seeks to give expression to itself in every way that is consistent with the will of God.

This fellowship is not based upon natural good of any sort or kind. It is heavenly in its origin, spiritual in its nature, and holy in its effects. It rejects all falsehood, all that is evil and earthly, and looks to God alone, and is not satisfied except with God. Thus Philip expressed the true longing of this fellowship when he said, "Lord, show us the Father, and it sufficeth us."

Christian fellowship implies, first of all, life. The fellowship of Christ means that the life of Christ exists. The divine order is, first life, then fellowship. To have fellowship with Christ, and in the Spirit, means that we have the life of Christ in our hearts. There can be no communion without union; and there can be no real union without the possession of the same one life. Sinners dead in sins are without the life of Christ, and therefore have no union nor communion with him. Jesus gives to his chosen eternal life, his own life; and they now live because he lives, and live with him, and rejoice in him.

Now, having the same one life, believers have also the same experience. As natural life leads to an experience of natural things, so the possession of spiritual life leads to an experience of spiritual things. As these two lives are distinct, so the two resulting experiences are also distinct. The one is an experience of things suited to natural life; the other is an experience of things suited to the spiritual life. The one life fits men to see, feel, know and enjoy natural things; the other prepares him to whom it is given to see, feel, know and enjoy spiritual things. As all natural experience enables men to commune together in regard to natural things, so this one common spiritual experience is the foundation of the communion of saints. In this experience the saints of all ages have been one. In it they have seen eye to eye. True, there have been diversities of operations; but yet in this diversity there has been oneness or unity. Therefore one can tell the experience of another in telling his own. In this one experience is the witness of fellow-citizenship. In this experience believers recognize each other as brethren.

This one experience leads into a common faith. They who taste, see, hear, feel and handle the same things must know and believe the same things; and this faith is a moving force. It is not a dead, theoretical belief of the letter of the word of Bible testimony, but such a faith as is said to work by love, and to overcome the world. The difference between a mere assent, or a belief based upon the testimony of others, and this personal, living, vital, active faith, is well expressed by those of the city of Sychar (John iv. 42), who said unto the woman, "Now we believe, not because of thy saying: for we have heard him ourselves, and know that this is indeed the Christ, the Savior of the world."

This fellowship of which we speak with Christ and with each other is more than a mere agreement. It is the fellowship of the members of one body. The hands, head, limbs and feet of the natural body are not in communion with each other because on some former day they agreed to come together and live together in unity and concord; but they live thus together because they are already one, made so by forces acting upon them. In like manner the people of God have not agreed to be one, and to walk in fellowship with each other, but they are one by the power and grace of God; and being one in the Spirit, they walk in mutual union and communion. It is the communion of the body of Christ.

This oneness with Christ is not barren of results. As the branches abide in the vine they bear fruit. The branches bear the fruit, but it is the fruit of the vine. The vine bears fruit through the branches. It produces the branches, and then the fruit. To this very end God brings his people to feel and know this fellowship with Jesus, that they may bear much fruit to the honor and glory of God. He is in them, and they in him, and he is glorified in them. This fruit is not artificial, but grows naturally, shall we say, as the result of spiritual oneness with Christ. The divine life works out its own fruits, just as necessarily as the earthly life produces its proper results. The natural life may be cultivated so as to produce much fruit. So also may the spiritual life; but let it not be once forgotten that in the latter case "our Father is the husbandman." How immeasurably superior is the fruit of life freely produced in the possessor of this life, to the forced legal righteousness by which men strive to exalt themselves to high seats in the heavens! The one is liberty, the other is slavery.

One peculiarity of this fellowship is that in it we are led to follow Christ, not men. "Be ye therefore followers of God as dear children." "Be ye followers of us, as we follow Christ." These and many similar expressions occur in the New Testament. Jesus himself said, "Follow me." It is not, then, one man nor another, nor a mere theory concerning the Scriptures or concerning anything, but Christ himself who is to be believed on and followed. All this is plainly set forth by Paul in 1 Corinthians i. 9–17. The inspired apostle there rebukes that portion of the church which said, "I am of Paul," as sternly (and with more fullness of detail) as he rebukes those who said, "I am of Apollos, or Cephas;" and those among them who claimed to be christians, par excellence, saying, "I am of Christ," also shared in the rebuke. Not because they were followers of Christ, but because they by thus saying would arrogate to themselves a certain sort of superiority above the rest. Having this factional spirit, they were as guilty of making divisions as were the others; and so while claiming much, they were not really followers of the meek and lowly one at all. To have fellowship with Christ is to have the Spirit of Christ; and that Spirit is always meek and lowly. It is such a spirit as esteems others better than ourselves. We all have need to take this warning in 1 Corinthians i. to our hearts, because we are all prone to follow some man rather than Christ. The record of the church in every age proves this. The events of to-day prove it. A look into our own hearts proves it. O that we might all "see no man, but Jesus only!"

This personal fellowship between believers and all other believers is essential to walking together in mutual love. Upon the basis of this personal fellowship the people of God are drawn to walk together, helping and encouraging one another to obey the Savior's commands. The fellowship of a common experience of a common salvation leads to the fellowship of obedience upon the part of each one to the commandments of God. Thus the people of God come to be baptized, and united in church relationship, and to walk in mutual love and helpfulness. This fellowship, we trust, has brought us together in this place, that we may worship God together, and learn of each other's welfare.

In closing we would call attention to the warfare which the world and Satan are continually waging against this fellowship. Because there is such a warfare, believers are enjoined to endeavor to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. Because the flesh, when its dictates are followed, always leads to dissensions, therefore saints are exhorted to strive for the things which make for peace, and things whereby they may edify one another. May the Holy Spirit make us careful in all that we say and do, lest this holy fellowship be marred. It is a fearful thing to turn away from our Father's children. May we be followers of God as dear children, and walk in love, as Christ also hath loved us, and given himself for us, an offering and sacrifice unto God for a sweet-smelling savor.

Finally, brethren, farewell. Live in peace, and the God of peace shall be with you.

POSTAL MONEY ORDERS.

BY a recent arrangement of the post-office department nearly every post-office in the United States is now a money order office for at least five dollars; and as it costs but three cents additional to obtain an order of not more than two dollars and fifty cents, or five cents for one not more than five dollars, or eight cents for one not more than ten dollars, and so on in proportion to amount of order, we request that all remittances be sent us by post-office money-order. You simply give the money you wish to send to your postmaster, and he will give you a money-order for that amount. You will inclose the order which he gives you in your letter to us; and if it should be lost in the mail you can get another one from your postmaster without additional charge. Please be sure to have the order made payable at Middletown, N. Y., and never at New York City, as that place is nearly a hundred miles from our place, and it puts us to considerable extra trouble and expense to get them cashed at the New York City office.

As will be seen from the above, an order for five dollars or less can be obtained cheaper than registering a letter, while an order not exceeding ten dollars costs but the same amount; and remitting by money order is a much safer way than sending by registered letter, as the postal department is not responsible for loss of registered letters, but money orders can be duplicated.

EXTRAORDINARY OFFER.

WE still continue our offer to send two new subscribers, and credit an old subscriber one year, for three dollars; but we cannot afford to send to one new subscriber, and credit an old subscriber one year, for two dollars. Please do not ask us to do it.

Any one who is already a subscriber is authorized to act as agent for us; and we will send the paper for the first year to any new subscribers they may send us at one dollar each, and they are entitled to retain the other dollar for their commission.

Under no circumstances can new subscribers send to us direct and get the paper for themselves for less han the regular rates.

DIED—July 22d, 1894, sister Sarah E. Vannatta, wife of the late Samuel Vannatta, in the 61st year of her age.

Sister Vannatta experienced a good hope through grace abounding to the chief of sinners, joined the church at Old Bethel in July, 1876, was baptized by the late Elder John F. Johnson, and lived a faithful member to the day of her death. Though much afflicted, and a great sufferer during the last few years of her life, yet she always seemed to bear it with pa[illegible]e, and filled her seat at the meetir[illegible]en possible to do so. But she is g[illegible]o more to meet on earth, but with t[illegible]rch triumphant.

[illegible]g away at the time of her death, [illegible]eral was appointed to be preached [illegible]irst Sunday in November. Elder [illegible] being present, spoke on the occa[illegible]eaching the blessed gospel of the [illegible]d, in which she rejoiced in life. [illegible]rd keep us, that we may wait [illegible]hange come.

P. W. SAWIN.

NEW CASTLE, Ky.

ON Sunday, May 26th, 1895, we laid to rest the mortal remains of our aged brother in Christ, Lewis Bowles, of Des Moines Township, Jefferson Co., Iowa.

He was born in Granville Co., N. C., March 10th, 1810, and was married to Elizabeth Rush, of the same place, Dec. 28th, 1841. Afterward he removed to Montgomery Co., Ill., where he resided until the spring of 1865, when he located on the farm where he died. He had long years labored under the convictions of the regenerating Spirit of newness of life, but from a deep sense of unworthiness did not offer himself to the church until the year 1880, when he was baptized in the Des Moines River Primitive Baptist Church, where he has ever since lived a devoted and consistent member. He had always been of industrious, frugal, honest and upright habits, raised his family with the affection of a kind, devoted and indulgent father, lived to see them all married and settled down away from home, and died at peace with the world. His affliction seemed to be loss of vitality from old age, followed by dropsy. He arose as usual the morning before he died, but complained of being weak, and began sinking away. At ten o'clock that night he breathed his last peacefully and painlessly. He previously expressed himself that if it were the Lord's will he desired to go.

An immense concourse attended the funeral, whom the writer of this addressed from 1 Corinthians xv. 53; after which his body was consigned to the church cemetery,

"There to remain in sweet repose
Till the Lord bids that time shall close;
With raptured joy 'twill then arise,
And meet its Savior in the skies."

ELDON, Iowa.

ON Feb. 23d, 1895, sister Minerva Lockhart departed this life to find rest in her Savior's presence. She was a life-long Primitive Baptist, and a subscriber to the SIGNS OF THE TIMES for more than forty years, which she loved next to her Bible.

This mother in Israel was born in Tennessee, April 22d, 1813. Her parents, Anderson and Celia West, in her early childhood moved to Alabama, where on Jan. 20th, 1833, she was married to Thomas Lockhart. In 1836 they moved to Holmes Co., Miss., where she resided until her death, her husband having preceded her many years to the spirit land. Sister Lockhart was an everyday christian, and during her long and useful life held to the doctrine of salvation by grace, through the imputed righteousness of Christ. While she believed strongly in the doctrine enunciated by her church, she was not so sectarian as to believe that none others would be saved. She believed they would come up from every kingdom, nation and tongue, and that God's people could and did live in error as to doctrine. The writer was intimately associated with her for many years before her death. O that he may have a glorious record such as hers of a bright, humble, consistent christian life to leave behind him. She was always humble, with less self-righteousness about her than any one I ever knew. She bore her afflictions with christian fortitude, relying on the goodness and mercy of the sovereign God. She told the writer a short time before she died, "I know, my brother, that I cannot remain long in this tabernacle; and when I am called to the bar of God I can only say, No merit in me; it is alone the merit of Christ if I am permitted to enter in." She was a faithful wife, a devoted mother, and a reliable friend. She scorned pretense and hypocrisy, and had a noble sense of humility and self-sacrifice. No heart so cold but was warmed by contact with the sunny brightness of her nature. May she rest in peace. Your brother,

A. H. C.

THREE DAYS MEETINGS.

A THREE days meeting will be held with the Zion's Rest Church, at the Red Oak school-house, commencing at eleven o'clock on Friday before the third Sunday in July, 1895. This meeting will be held fifteen miles northeast of Lexington, Oklahoma, and seven miles southwest of Burnett, in Cleveland Co., Oklahoma. All Old School Baptists are cordially invited to attend.

PICTORIAL HISTORY

OF THE

By James D. McCabe.

This work is no dry mass of details—no bombastic effort to inflame the national pride, but a vivid and brilliant narrative of the events of our history, from the discovery of the American Continent down to thepresent time. It gives a most interesting account of the Indians of North America, from the time of the coming of the white men. The voyages of Columbus and explorations and discoveries of the different nations of Europe are related with graphic power. Every step of our colonial history is traced with patient fidelity, and the sources of those noble and, we trust, enduring institutions, which have made our country free and great, are shown with remarkable clearness. Then follows a clear and succinct account of our great Struggle for Independence, and the establishment of the Federal Union—the events of our career from the close of the Revolution to the administration of Harrison.

The work is printed from plain, new type, on fine calendered paper, and comprised in one octavo volume of 960 pages. It is splendidly embellished with nearly 500 fine engravings, embracing battles and other historical scenes, portraits of distinguished men, views of our principal cities, &c., &c.

JOHN says that Christ "taketh away the sin of the world." What sin was that? You say it was the sin of the whole race of mankind. Paul says, in speaking of the same thing, that "by one offering he hath perfected forever them that are sanctified," and that he "obtained eternal redemption for us," or the church. Now, whose interpretation will you take, yours or Paul's? Suppose we admit that Christ took away the sin of all the world. If he did, he left the world in a justified state before God. If Christ redeemed all mankind from their fallen state, they all stand justified before God, and never can commit another sin. So you must see such is not the case.

You next quote, "Christ so loved the world," &c., and then say, "The word world in this passage means the whole human race." The word "so" explains the meaning of the above quotation. That is, God's love for the world was such that all those who compose the church of God shall be saved. He does not say that his love extended to every individual; but he does say in various places that it extends to the church, or elect of God. I will give you a few quotations to prove this. Paul says, "Husbands, love your wives, even as Christ also loved the church, and gave himself for it." "Feed the church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood." "God, who is rich in mercy, for his great love wherewith he loved us [the church], even when we were dead in sins." This proves that he loved the church, even when she was dead in sins, and that was the reason why he quickened her.

Your next quotation is, "God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world, but that the world through him might be saved." This Scripture simply means that Christ is the only Savior, or the only medium through which any man can be saved. Christ does not state here that the atonement extends to every individual of mankind, but simply that he is the only medium through which the world (or such portion of mankind as shall be quickened by the grace of God) should be saved. If these Scriptures refer to the whole world, what will become of all the millions of people that never heard the gospel preached? Millions of the race died before Christ came into the world, and a very small portion ever heard the gospel preached. Then how did Christ redeem all the nations of the earth, and reconcile them all to God, and then not provide the means for the gospel to be preached to them, but let millions for whom he shed his blood, and redeemed to God, go down to an endless hell without having an opportunity to yield to "the offered terms of mercy," as you say? I think you must certainly see that the word world is used in a limited sense in these quotations; because this doctrine is so plainly set forth in almost every chapter of the Bible, that they restrict these passages to simply mean the church; first, in her unregenerated state, and then in her regenerated state.

You next ask, "Why is the gospel preached to the world?" I answer, It is not preached directly to the unregenerate part of mankind. The office work of the Spirit is to quicken God's people, and then the gospel reaches them. The gospel never reaches a sinner until after he has been quickened by the grace of God. The ministers of the gospel do not know upon whom the Spirit of God is moving, and hence they are commanded to preach the gospel to every creature; but only those who have been quickened by the grace of God will receive it, and be saved. Now let me prove this assertion. Paul says, "For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth."—Rom. i. 16. He here defines the gospel. Does he say the gospel is preached to the believer, or to the unbeliever? If the gospel is to be preached to the unbeliever, your theory is true; but if to the believer, my position is true; for according to your doctrine the gospel is the means of quickening dead sinners; and if it be not the means, why do you hold your long protracted meetings, have your mourners' benches, and put forth so many efforts in trying to convert souls to Christ, as you say? But if Paul gives a correct definition of the gospel, it is the power of God unto salvation to the believer, and not to the unbeliever. Why did Paul give this plain, unequivocal explanation of the gospel if he did not mean exactly what he said? You say the gospel is preached unto all the world, and that all the world can hear it; but Paul says it is only preached to the believer. Let us question Paul a little farther. He says, "We preach Christ crucified, unto the Jews a stumbling-block, and unto the Greeks foolishness; but unto them which are called, both Jews and Greeks, Christ the power of God and the wisdom of God." Here Paul, if anything, gives a more lucid explanation of the gospel than in the first quotation. If the gospel is to be preached to all the world alike, why did Paul say it was a stumbling-block to the Jews and foolishness to the Greeks? You say the gospel is to be preached unto all the world; but Paul says it is foolishness unto a part of the world. But he goes on and points out a people to whom the gospel is not foolishness, but to whom it is the power of God and the wisdom of God. Now, who were they? He tells us who they were: "But to them which are called, both Jews and Greeks." Paul says that the preaching of the cross is the power of God and the wisdom of God to all the called of God. And to this agree the words of Peter when he says, "The promise [or gospel] is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." Paul and Peter here bear testimony to the same fact that the gospel is preached only to those whom God calls and quickens by his grace. Another proof: "The preaching of the cross is to them that perish foolishness; but unto us who are saved it is the power of God." And in the next chapter we have this language, "But the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them; because they are spiritually discerned."

Now, it does seem to me that I have said enough to prove to any reasonable man that the gospel is not preached to the unregenerate portion of mankind, but is foolishness unto them.

You then quote, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned," or condemned. We all agree to that; but what causes a sinner to believe? Paul says the things of the Spirit (or the gospel) are foolishness unto the natural man, and he cannot even discern them; and if so, how can he believe them? I answer emphatically that he cannot, until he has been quickened by the Spirit of God, and translated from the kingdom of darkness into the spiritual kingdom of Christ. It requires evidence to produce belief. When a man is born into the natural world he is governed, controlled and influenced by natural things, and knows nothing of any other state of existence, until he has been born in another kingdom. You say that man's salvation depends upon his belief, and his condemnation depends upon his unbelief. Your idea is that the alien sinner has the power to believe the gospel. Belief is the fruit of the Spirit; and an alien sinner has not the Spirit, hence cannot believe; because every tree bringeth forth fruit after its kind; and the fruit of the natural mind is sin and unbelief. Belief is rather a result of salvation; that is, it is an evidence that one is saved from the wrath to come. You say that a sinner's condemnation depends upon his not obeying the gospel; but the Bible says he is already condemned, whether he ever hears the gospel or not. What brought this condemnation upon sinners; their disobeying the gospel? No. What then? Their fall in Adam. I think you certainly must see that the condemnation of the sinner is not the result of disobeying the gospel; because hundreds and thousands of the Adam race never heard the gospel, and they stand equally condemned before God. You ask, "How can a man believe a thing until it is presented to him? I answer, He cannot. But the gospel is not offered to the unregenerate, as I have already shown. You say that belief is a condition to be performed by man. I say it is not. Now I will prove that belief is not a condition. Suppose you were to see me kill a man, would it be in your power to disbelieve it? The very evidence itself forces you to believe that I killed him. Could you possibly disbelieve it? So you must see that belief is not a condition. When God reveals himself to a sinner, the sinner has the evidence within himself that he is a child of God; and this evidence produces belief. The Bible says that Christ is "exalted a Prince and a Savior, to give [not offer] repentance unto Israel and forgiveness of sins." But you say that "if the limited atonement doctrine be true, God is tantalizing the world by offering them peace and pardon." God never has offered peace and pardon to the world, and you, nor any other man, can ever prove it. Jesus says, "Every man therefore that hath heard, and hath learned of the Father, cometh unto me."

You next refer to Mark viii. 34, where Christ was preaching to a mixed multitude, and said, "Whosoever will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me." I have already stated in this letter that the gospel is to be preached into all the world, and to every creature; but only those who have been quickened by the grace of God can receive it, because they are the only class of people that have ears to hear. An unregenerate man has no cross; hence this Scripture would not apply to him. How did you answer the question, "What did Christ come into the world to accomplish?" Here is your answer, "He accomplished all that he came to accomplish." Is that the way Christ answers the question? He says he came to save his people from their sins. "I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do." And Paul says that Christ "obtained eternal redemption for us," the church. And, "By one offering he hath perfected forever them that are sanctified." The question is certainly answered as plainly in these quotations as it could be. Christ accomplished all this in his life, death and resurrection; and as time rolls on he manifests himself to each member of his body, or to each of the heirs of promise.

How did you answer my explanation of the field? You acknowledge the "field is the world," and that the pearl is the church. You say that man had a say in this purchase. When was this contract made; when Christ was here on earth? If so the majority of mankind had already lived and died, and certainly had no voice in it; and millions had never yet been born, and they had no voice in it; and very few who lived during the days of our Redeemer ever saw him, and they had no voice in it; so you must certainly see that man had nothing to do with this purchase. What was the stipulated amount, or the price paid? I answer, The life, death and resurrection of Christ. Now, if this is the price paid, what did man have to do with Christ's coming into the world and paying the debt or making a contract. Did Christ consult the church as to whether he would come into the world and redeem her from the law and all the penalties thereof, or was it the great love he had for her that brought him into the world? Paul says, "Who hath saved us, and called us with a holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began." Does not this prove that the whole plan of salvation was complete before time began, and cannot be altered or changed by anything that man can do? But you say the alien sinner can hear the gospel. If he can, he has spiritual ears, spiritual eyes, and a spiritual heart; for you very well know that he stony heart has to be taken out of the sinner, and God has to give him a heart of flesh, before he can believe. God has to give him spiritual eyes to see, and spiritual ears to hear, and a spiritual heart to understand, before he is a subject of gospel address. The psalmist says, "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul." What law is this? Paul answers the question. He says, "The law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death." Paul says he was first under the law of sin and death, and that the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus freed him from the law of sin and death. You say that a man in that dead state has the power to free himself, or in other words, "yield to the terms of the gospel," and the Lord will set him free. You certainly must see the fallacy of such a course of arguments. You must have the sinner alive, or you must have him dead. If you have him alive, he would not have to be delivered from the law of sin and death. If you have him dead, he could not "yield to the terms of the gospel," because "the dead know not anything." You ask, "How can God judge the world except upon the promise that peace and pardon are offered unto all men equal?" When God created man he created him good, and very good, and gave him a law. Man violated that law, and became dead in trespasses and sins, and now stands guilty and condemned before God, having brought upon himself all the sin and corruption to which he is guilty by the fall. Now, as the church had her natural existence in Adam, she fell under the condemnation of the same law. Jesus Christ came into the world and redeemed that church, his body, the bride, the Lamb's wife, from the law of sin and death, and she now stands justified before God; and in the dispensation of the fullness of times they will all be called, quickened, born of the Spirit, and be judged worthy of everlasting life; while the remaining portion of the race of Adam will be left in their just condemnation and judged worthy of everlasting punishment.

You next quote, "Whosoever will, let him take of the water of life freely." Did you not know that this is written to the church in her backslidden state, admonishing her to live up to her duty? As I stated in the outset, every one that has a will or desire to be saved is included in the plan of salvation.

You next quote, "Look unto me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth." But who are told to look or come unto Jesus? Your answer is, "Dead sinners." But Christ says it is the hungry and thirsty, the weary and heavy laden, those who are of a poor and contrite spirit, and who tremble at the word of the Lord. It would look unreasonable for God to tell a people to look unto him, unless he first gave them spiritual eyes to see, spiritual ears to hear, and a spiritual heart to understand.

You next refer to the first chapter of John, and say that he "lighteth every man that cometh into the world." What you mean is that God gives spiritual light to every man to yield to the teaching of the gospel and live. If you will read the whole chapter, and also the sixth chapter, you certainly will not believe such an absurd theory. "In him was life, and the life was the light of men." This life or light that John speaks of is in Christ. Paul says, "Ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God." So we see that this is the light or life of christians that John speaks of. "He was in the world, and the world was made by him, and the world knew him not. He came unto his own, and his own received him not." But you say the whole world knows him. John says the world knew him not. But John tells us who knew him and who received him. "But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name." To whom did he give power to become the sons of God? Those who were born of blood? No. To those who were born of the flesh? No. To those who were born of the will of man? No. Who then? Those who were born of God. So we see clearly that John in this first chapter teaches that a man must be born of God before he can receive Christ and believe on him. Now read the tenth chapter of John, and you will find that on one occasion when Jesus was addressing the Jews he told them that they did not believe, and then told them the reason why they did not believe, which was, "Because ye are not of my sheep. My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me." Jesus says again to them, "Why do ye not understand my speech? Even because ye cannot hear my words;" yet he was talking to them at the very time, and they could not hear him. Does not this prove too plainly to be contradicted that the unregenerate portion of mankind cannot hear the gospel until after they have been quickened by God's grace?

You say that light has come into the world, and men love darkness rather than light? Why do they love darkness rather than light? "Because their deeds are evil." Every created being delights to live and be in its own element; and that is the reason why a sinner delights to live in sin, because that is the element he is born into; and he cannot delight in any other until he is born into a different element.

Now I will ask some questions and when you answer them in harmony with your theory and the doctrine of the Bible, I will accept your theory at its full value. What is the book of life? Whose names are writen in that book? When were they written there? John says that no one shall enter into the New Jerusalem except those whose names are written in the Lamb's book of life. And he tells us when they were written there. "And all that dwell upon the earth shall worship him [the beast], whose names are not written in the book of life of the Lamb slain, from the foundation of the world." "Whose names were not written in the book of life from the foundation of the world." Now we have these questions plainly answered. John says that all the names of those who are to enter into that city not made with hands, had their names written in the book of life from the foundation of the world, and that all the rest of mankind are to worship the beast, or the false doctrines and theories of men. If this does not fix the elect and non-elect definitely, then language can express nothing.

I have written a long letter, and have only glanced at this doctrine. Much more could be said, but I think I have brought forward more proofs in defense of a limited atonement than you or your colleagues can answer in harmony with your doctrine. Now, please read this carefully and impartially, and compare it with the word of God, and I certainly think you will have to renounce your universal atonement theory.

ROTEN HURST.

WARWICK, N. Y., June 8, 1895.

ELDER JENKINS:—We have just received this excellent letter from brother Coulter, which we would like to see in the SIGNS. Sister Mary is no better; in fact, we think the end is fast approaching. She is very restless and full of suffering; but her mind is clear, and she so longs to be with Jesus.

Your little sister,

M. M. ROUNSAVELL.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., June 6, 1895.

MISS MARY PARKER—MY PRECIOUS SISTER IN THE LORD:—I kept on hoping that I might find an opportunity to go to the Warwick Association, and at the same time visit you; but Mrs. Coulter and myself were both disappointed. How often it is in this life that no fruit is born of our earthly hopes. We lay our plans with great earnestness and confidence, not even considering the will of the Lord concerning us. But I am glad that the Lord's people do not pout and sulk in their disappointment, but are willing to say, "Thy will, O Lord, be done." It is very pleasant and very gratifying when our designs are in harmony with the Lord's designs; then are we never disappointed. How beautiful in my eyes was your sweet resignation to the divine will in putting you again upon the bed of languishing, of suffering and of pain. Your whole life, my sister, as recorded on the indelible pages of the past (to all who pass and read), is an incontestable evidence of the reality of the Savior's love, of the truth of God, and of the fulfillment of all his precious promises; a history that makes plain to us the way and plan of salvation, through Jesus our dear Redeemer; showing first the bright dreams of happy childhood, and the fond hopes and aspirations which entrance us in the time of budding into man and womanhood, when all things put on the golden hue, and cares and anxieties are a thing almost unknown. But, alas! too soon the glamour of this beautiful world perishes with the using. We enter into the realities of this natural life, with its stern demands, its anxieties and cares, its conflicts and defeats, its pain and sorrow, its hope deferred till the heart is sick; and in your case, my precious sister, you were shut in from the brightness of this world's pleasures, you came to the ends of the earth in a gracious experience, and you were favored to see Jesus, who was made a little lower than the angels for the suffering of death, and in his pity and his love he had taken you by the hand and led you out of darkness into his marvelous light. Before, you had looked upon the handiwork of God in nature as surpassingly lovely and beautiful; but now you have beheld the loveliness and beauty and worth of your gracious Redeemer, which surpasses far beyond your highest conception. With eyes of faith you have beheld the holy city, the new Jerusalem, whose light is far above the brightness of the noonday sun; for God and the Lamb are the light thereof. The world cannot understand that your lot is a happy one, that Jesus is your constant companion and dearest friend, that he pours oil into your wounds, and soothes your aching brow. Blessed Jesus! happy saint!

Affectionately your brother,

B. F. COULTER.

CHURCH AND STATE.

IN these United States of America we have no State religion, and we are all glad that it is so. When Constantine, a Roman politician, who happened to be Emperor, made Christianity the State religion, he gave it a blow from which it has not recovered to this day. If Constantine was truly converted, he made the mistake which has since so often been made by Christians who had zeal without wisdom, by adopting carnal weapons in spiritual warfare, forgetting that the gospel of Christ stands not in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God. On the other hand, if Constantine was not a genuine convert (and the more I study his life the more I am led to doubt it) his was one of innumerable instances in which the livery of religious zeal was stolen for the service of political ambition or other selfish ends. The State religions are crumbling all over the earth. Some of them are already buried, and others are nearly ready to be put into their coffins. This unnatural union of Church and State has uniformly corrupted both. The State religions have been so mixed up with political intrigues and scandals and wrongs that in breaking their chains it has usually happened, as might have been expected, that reaction against the unholy alliance has given the liberated peoples an impulse in the direction of unbelief and irreligion. Look at France; look at Italy; look at Germany, and Denmark and Sweeden. And but for the conservative influence of a sturdy and growing dissent, we might add, look at Great Britain and Germany. The signs of the dissolution of this union of Church and State are multiplying rapidly in our day; and when the last State religion shall perish, from the Church of Christ will be lifted an incumbus under whose weight it has staggered during all the centuries of its struggle. This deliverance must come. We must be patient a little longer. It may be true, as John Bright has said, that the British State Church has roots, but so has had every other hoary abuse and evil that has been, or ought to be abolished. But this evil must go, and the time of its departure, let us hope, is at hand.

We want no union of Church and State in this country, and we will have none. We are all agreed in this.—Exchange.

MEMORIALS.

(By the Delaware River Association.)

WHEREAS, The unsearchable God, who doeth all things according to his sovereign will, has called to his eternal home our beloved and faithful brother, Elder WM. J. PURINGTON;

Resolved, That as a member of this association for more than a quarter of a century he gave unmistakable evidence of unswerving devotion to the great and glorious cause of our adorable Redeemer. As a preacher he commanded during his ministry the admiration of all, and the warm approval of those who know the truth. Waiting congregations have felt the force and truth of his utterances, and have been impressed with the solemnity and sublimity of his expositions of the word of inspiration. His frequent published communications have received widespread and universal commendation. We mourn his absence from our solemn feasts, and his wise counsels in the business of this association; but with profound sorrow we bow in submission to the divine will, realizing the soul-cheering truth that his life gave clear evidence of his interest in the heritage of glory in Christ Jesus.

Resolved, That this Memorial be spread upon the Minutes, and published in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

EXTRAORDINARY OFFER.

WE still continue our offer to send two new subscribers, and credit an old subscriber one year, for three dollars; but we cannot afford to send to one new subscriber, and credit an old subscriber one year, for two dollars. Please do not ask us to do it.

Any one who is already a subscriber is authorized to act as agent for us; and we will send the paper for the first year to any new subscribers they may send us at one dollar each, and they are entitled to retain the other dollar for their commission.

Under no circumstances can new subscribers send to us direct and get the paper for themselves for less than the regular rates.

CIRCULAR LETTERS.

The Warwick Old School Baptist Association, in session with the church at New Vernon, Orange County, N. Y., June 5th, 6th and 7th, 1895, to the several churches of which she is composed, sends greeting.

DEAR BRETHREN:—In addressing you at this time we desire to be directed by the Spirit of truth, so that our communication may be suited to the condition and need of every stranger and pilgrim on the earth to whom it may come. Since this peculiar people cannot be satisfied in any earthly habitation they must ever seek a country which is superior to this sin-defiled world. Their abiding home is in that kingdom of God in which the perfect law of liberty secures the blessed reign of righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost. Clearly such a people must have nothing of conformity to this world in the law by which they are led. While they are in the world they are not of the world; hence, whenever they are attracted by the alluring vanities of earth they forsake their own divinely precious mercies. They are called to a continual warfare in which they find no moments of rest and no cessation of the deadly conflict. No precautions of human wisdom can secure immunity from the assaults of the adversary by whom they are constantly beguiled. So Peter admonishes them to unceasing humility and watchfulness, and assigns the sufficient reason for the admonition. "Humble yourselves therefore under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you in due time; casting all your care upon him; for he careth for you. Be sober, be vigilant; because your adversary the devil, as a roaring lion, walketh about, seeking whom he may devour; whom resist steadfast in the faith, knowing that the same afflictions are accomplished in your brethren that are in the world." This is not merely a suggestion of prudence as a defense against possible danger; it is the direction of divine wisdom for the protection of the saints from the snares and temptations which they must encounter in their sojourn in this wilderness of sin. If there had been no possibility of their being deceived by the temptations of their wily adversary there would have been no need of this inspired warning. But it is appointed for those who follow Jesus that they must encounter temptations, and be assailed by all the fiery darts of the adversary. Therefore they have need of the whole armor of God, which is provided for them in the testimony of Jesus, and stored in the word of inspiration.

One constant source of trouble to the afflicted and poor people of God is their inclination to seek in their own natural hearts for evidence of their possession of divine life. In this search they invariably find that their heart condemns them. So far is that mind which is of the flesh from conformity to the spirit of truth that it is enmity against every principle of divine holiness. For this cause those who are called to follow after the righteousness which is of God in Christ Jesus, must ever meet the opposition of their own reason in addition to the sinful inclination of that natural heart which is deceitful above all things and desperately wicked. It is not strange, therefore, that the continual experience of the tried disciples of Jesus teaches them that they have no ground for hope when looking to their own works or trusting in their own merits. By this severe tribulation and conflict they are cut off from boasting, and learn that it is exclusively by grace they are saved in the daily conflicts of temporal trials as well as in their eternal redemption. Natural reason never can comprehend this spiritual truth. Although they know by faith that they are saved without their own works, yet reason ever seeks in themselves for some works of righteousness by which they can claim to have merited salvation. Failing to find such occasion for glorying in their flesh, they are led to question the reality of their hope in the salvation of God.

Instead of regarding this unceasing strife in their own hearts as a testimony that they have the life of Christ in them as the foundation of their hope, and therefore feeling inclined to glory over others, the invariable effect of this conflict is to produce that very humility which is enjoined upon the saints in the admonition quoted from the divine record. Thus God works in them both to will and to do of his good pleasure. Yet this wonderful way in which they are led is not the way which would seem right to the wisdom of man. No efforts of the natural mind can comprehend this hidden way. Only as they are brought by it can the saints themselves ever know that this is the way of holiness.

The carnal mind is satisfied with such voluntary humility as may be assumed in the sight of men, and such is the deceitfulness of sin in the flesh of the saints that they are sometimes puffed up with pride in their success in putting on this humility. Such is not the humility to which the apostle exhorts the elect strangers to whom he writes. Only that humility can be acceptable to God which is wrought in the subjects of his grace by his Spirit dwelling in them. The more of this humility they have the more they feel their own utter destitution of everything in which to claim the favor of God. None is ever exalted by the mighty hand of God while one thing remains in which he can claim merit in himself. Only the utterly destitute have the promise that God will regard their prayer. When brought to this extreme poverty those who are thus lost can have no confidence

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

WE have received requests from two or three correspondents for some thoughts upon the expression, "Many are called, but few chosen." Sister Shepherd, of Trenton, is one of these, and Mrs. A. Campbell, of Selton, Ontario, is another. Sister Shepherd also desires some reflections upon Matthew xviii. 7–9.

With regard to the first expression, "Many are called, but few chosen," we do not feel like making any extended remarks at this time, because some few years ago, as a correspondent for the SIGNS, we wrote somewhat lengthily concerning this expression; but we will briefly present our understanding of its meaning.

It occurs twice in the New Testament; once in Matthew xx. 16, at the close of the parable of the laborers in the vineyard, and again in Matthew xxii. 14, at the close of the parable of the marriage of the king's son. These parables are recorded only by Matthew; and this particular expression, so far as we know, does not occur elsewhere in the Bible. We must therefore gather its meaning from an examination of the parables which are connected with it.

The language seems to us to have been a sort of proverb in general use at that time, and now used by the Savior as a sort of summing up of his teaching in these parables. It is true that these parables present different truths concerning the kingdom of heaven; yet both agree in this one thing, viz., they draw a dividing line between different classes of professors of religion. These parables do not, either of them, set forth the difference between those who serve God and the utterly careless world. In the parable of the laborers in the vineyard all are in the vineyard, and have been laboring there, and the parable simply sets forth a distinction of spirit and motive in these laborers. In the parable of the marriage of the king's son all are represented as having been bidden; while here also is presented a distinction in the spirit and behavior of those who were present. The one parable relates more to the motive of the service, the other more to the conduct of those bidden.

It seems to us that a careful study of these parables will show that Jesus is in both cases speaking for the instruction and warning of his own disciples, lest, as in the parable of the laborers, they should grow to be legal in the spirit and motive of their service; or lest, as in the parable of the marriage of the king's son, they should behave themselves unseemly in the house of God.

From this hasty sketch of the two parables where this language occurs it seems very plain to our mind that this language does not refer at all to the effectual call by which sinners are made alive unto God, and by which they are visibly separated from the world; and neither does the word "chosen" refer to the election of grace, by which men and women are chosen to be heirs of glory. Neither is there the shadow of a justification for the common Arminian interpretation of this language, viz., that God calls all who hear the gospel to accept it and be saved, and in the end chooses such as comply with the call. The two parables manifestly do not relate to this subject; and the words of which we are speaking are a part of these parables, and must be interpreted as a part of them, and in harmony with them.

In the one parable the choice is among the laborers themselves, not of some men to be laborers where others do not enter. In the other parable the choice is not of some to be guests, but it is a choice among the guests themselves. It is a choice among the Lord's servants themselves in the one case; it is a choice among the Lord's guests in the other case.

To sum the matter up, it has long seemed to us that the language means that here in the everyday life of believers there is to be found a very great distinction between themselves. Some, like Peter, say, "We have left all and followed thee: what shall we have therefore?" How few are free from this legal spirit. All are called in the gospel to a free, glad, spontaneous, willing service; but how few have fully entered into this spirit. "Many called, but few chosen." The word "chosen" has the meaning of "choice ones" here, as it seems to us. In the other case all who are bidden to the wedding of the king's son ought to conduct themselves in the king's house as he has required; yet how many, like the fine gold, have become dim! How few walk soberly, righteously and godly in the sight of God! How many seem to be careless as to their behavior in the house of God! How many, like the man in the parable, presume to sit at the feast regardless of the laws of the king! They have not put on the garment which he requires them to wear. These are his own bidden ones, his own favorites; and yet here also "many are called, but few chosen."

We do not know how our brethren regard this language, but for many years this has been our view of it. We submit what we have written to their judgment. We desire to say that we wish all our readers to understand that we claim no infallibility in our views of the Scriptures, and trust that all will feel free to present their own views, whether they agree with us or differ.

THE second Scripture to which sister Shepherd called our attention (Matthew xviii. 7–9) reads as follows, "Woe unto the world because of offenses! for it must needs be that offenses come; but woe to that man by whom the offense cometh! Wherefore if thy hand or thy foot offend thee, cut them off, and cast them from thee: it is better for thee to enter into life halt or maimed, rather than having two hands or two feet to be cast into everlasting fire. And if thine eye offend thee, pluck it out, and cast it from thee: it is better for thee to enter into life with one eye, rather than having two eyes to be cast into hell fire."

We do not purpose, nor do we think it needful, to enter into any extended review of this subject, but will try to present briefly what we understand the Savior to mean in this Scripture.

The whole connection of the text referred to is of interest and importance to be considered by the people of God. It shows that even disciples of the meek and lowly and unselfish Jesus may be so unlike their dear Master that they exhibit pride and selfishness even in the things which pertain to the kingdom of heaven. We find them inquiring, not who should be the least in the kingdom of heaven, but who should be the greatest. By the example of a little child Jesus rebukes them, and tells them that such a spirit would not only prevent them from being great in that kingdom, but would keep them from even entering it; and still farther, he says that a disciple had better be hopelessly drowned in the midst of the sea than to manifest such a self-seeking spirit as this. Nothing could be of greater offense to the "little ones" than a spirit to be great; nothing could be more contrary to the spirit of the Master himself.

Now, at the beginning of the text, still pursuing the same theme, Jesus says that such offenses must needs come. Woe should fall upon the world because of them; and woe should be to that man by whom they should come. As we said, we understand the Savior to be pursuing the same theme. In his view the chief and most deadly offense of which his disciples could be guilty is possessing and harboring that spirit of emulation and ambition and self-seeking which is so opposite to the humble, childlike spirit of the Savior. Such offenses must needs come. They belong to the carnal nature; they spring up out of it. What greater woe could befall a child of God than to harbor this deadly lust of pride which wars against the soul! Such offenses, while we remain in this state of warfare, must be—they belong to the weakness and imperfection of the flesh; but woe to that man by whom they come! They work great harm everywhere; but the chief harm is to the guilty disciple himself.

The word "offend," in the eighth and ninth verses, has the force and meaning of "cause to offend;" and we may certainly say with truth that nothing can be more offensive to a true disciple of Jesus than that which would cause him to offend. No matter how near and dear that thing may be, though it be a foot, a hand or an eye, yet if it be leading us into sin of any kind it is better that that thing should be cut off and cast aside, though the result to us be that we become lame or crippled for the rest of our lives. Nothing can be such an evil to us as sin. It is better to sacrifice everything than to be led by a spirit of pride or envy or emulation. Nothing can compare in importance with the possession of that meek and lowly spirit which in the sight of God is of great price.

We must not understand the Savior as meaning that an occasion would ever arrive when literally disciples would be required to cut off the hands or feet, or to pluck out the eyes; in fact, these things might be done literally, and by such an act the very spirit of pride against which the Savior is here warning his disciples be only increased by it. The Savior is rather speaking of the spirit which is becoming in his disciples, and which glorifies God. Anything that will cause his disciples to offend, anything that serves to foster pride, emulation, self-glorification, or any kindred evil in them, had better be cut off and cast away, though its loss cripple them, and though that thing be as dear to them as a foot or a hand or an eye.

We do not understand the Savior here to be speaking of members of churches under the figure of a hand, foot or eye, but of things that we as believers have to do with personally. If there were no organized churches, still these words would apply to each individual believer. They apply just as entirely to that child of God whose lot it is to dwell alone, as to those who are gathered in churches. All the children of God have things which are near and dear to them, but which yet are a temptation and a snare to them, and which cause them to stumble and offend. It is better that these things be cast away from them, than that having them they should be led into sin, and as a result fall into grief and shame and sore chastisement, here compared to hell fire.

These words may be made to apply very well, and without doing them violence, to the discipline of the church, though, as said before, we do not understand the Savior to directly mean this. If any member of a church, no matter how near and dear and useful and important he may seem to be, is led by such a spirit, and so conducts himself that he is causing others to offend, such a member of the body, if he cannot be healed, must be cut off; for it is better for that church to go on her way crippled than to become corrupted, and fit only to be burned, as is refuse matter and filth.

The whole connection, as we understand it, grows out of the dispute of the disciples, recorded at the beginning of the chapter, as to whom should be the greatest. This the Savior proceeds to treat of; and he makes humility the chief thing on the one hand, and on the other the thing that is most offensive is pride and self-seeking. This, in and of itself, leads into wrath, debate, emulation and strife. Whatever, then, ministers to this pride and vainglory must be cut off; and when the Savior tells his disciples to cut these things off, he means no more nor less than when Paul exhorts his brethren to put off the old man with his deeds.

We leave these reflections for our sister and our readers generally. We trust that they may be found in harmony with the word of God.

C.

INFIDELITY.

By common consent the word infidelity is used to signify a disbelief in divine revelation, especially a disbelief of the divine inspiration of the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments. The term is also used frequently by certain dogmatists and bigots as an epithet of reproach applicable to those who deny their peculiar tenets; or more commonly in modern times is it hurled spitefully at those who doubt the divinty of the modern improvements which have been made during the present century on the doctrine and ordinances of the New Testament.

But in whatever light we may regard the term, it is generally conceded that infidelity is in the first sense of the term, as stated above, alarmingly on the increase. Forty years ago, a person of ordinary intelligence could scarcely be found in our country sufficiently bold in skepticism to avow himself an unbeliever in the divine inspiration of the Scriptures; now our land is inundated with skeptics of almost every variety. Their lecturers itinerate the breadth of our land, and their presses teem with invectives against the record God has given of the truth. The object of this article is to inquire, or rather to point out some of the causes of its prevalence.

Poor, depraved human nature has undergone no material change since man was driven out from the garden of Eden; but the developments of the depravity of man have varied from time to time like the ebbing and flowing of the sea; and these developments have been as intimately associated with circumstances as the motion of the sea has been harmonious with that of the moon.

In all countries, and throughout all time, wherever science and religion have been in the popular mind identified, the way has been paved for open and avowed infidelity; and in the very nature of things it is impossible, without divine interposition, that it should be otherwise.

To sustain this proposition it is not necessary to impugn either religion or science, nor to show that the one, when rightly regarded, is hostile to the other; for as that religion which is a pure revelation from God is the greatest spiritual blessing, so education and science are among the greatest temporal blessings we are capable of enjoying. The fatal error lies in confounding them together, or in substituting the one for the other. The notion has been more prevalent for some years past than formerly, that the religion of the Bible may be taught as a science; that infant schools, Sunday schools, Bible classes and Theological schools can impart a knowledge of God and of the things of his Spirit to children and adults by which they may become christians, has had the unavoidable tendency to increase open and disguised infidelity. The multiplication of the number of professors of religion, without the vitality of religion, must necessarily degrade the profession by bringing into it graceless characters whose hearts have never been pricked. But this is not all; those who are taught to regard christianity as a mere human science tangible to the natural intellect of men, capable of being taught and learned like any science in the schools, very naturally infer that, as a science, they have a right to test its correctness by their reason; and if it be a mere science they certainly have that right, and they ought to do so. But in bringing the various systems of modern religion, which are taught as sciences in the schools, to the test of reason or common sense, every intelligent person must be convinced that there is defection somewhere; for those who are trained by Catholics become Catholics, those by Protestants become Protestants, those who are trained Presbyterians, or Methodists, or Universalists, so far as their training has effect, become disciples to the creeds of those by whom they have been discipled. And very few are so stupid as to believe that true religion could lead men into such extremes of opposition to the opinions and religion of each other.

But there is another reason why infidelity prevails, worthy of serious consideration. The great majority of all the religionists of the day have been educated into their religion without any experimental knowledge of God; and regarding religion as they do any science or natural thing, they feel a necessity devolving on them to sustain their religion, as the pagans do the sacredness of their idols and rites; and each, jealous for his peculiar theory, will go (in many instances) into the meanest systems of fraud and extravagance to sustain it. We have not room in this article to enumerate the schemes, such as fairs, lotteries, raffles, shows, mite societies, and hundreds of other contrivances to shave and gull the people. Those who have the independence to think for themselves on these subjects, are satisfied that a holy God cannot approve such monstrous wickedness, nor be the author of a religion which requires it for its support; and such of them as have no experimental knowledge of that religion which is a pure revelation from God, are very naturally led like Payne and Voltaire to regard religion itself as a delusion.

One thing more we would name in this connection. In all ages of the world, when men have assumed the prerogatives of God, and undertaken to evangelize the world, &c., their efforts have resulted in the increase of open infidelity.

PLEASE BE SURE

In sending remittances for renewals of subscriptions to give us the same name that the paper is already coming to. If the party is married, and the paper is coming to the wife's name, and we receive a remittance to renew the subscription, and the husband's name is given, we have no means of knowing that it is meant for the subscription in the wife's name; consequently the husband's name is entered on our list, and the paper sent to both parties. Or if the paper is coming in the husband's name, and the renewal is sent in the wife's name, the same thing is likely to occur. It is a good plan to inclose in the letter one of the little pink slips containing the name, taken either from the margin of the paper or from the wrapper in which the paper comes.

in the flesh; and therefore they are humbled under the mighty hand of God. Then they do cast all their care upon God; and this is for the very cause that God careth for them. None can obey this admonition but those for whom God has the peculiar care by which they are cut off from all confidence in the flesh.

Sobriety and vigilance are wrought in the saints by the same Spirit which produces in them the humility and trust by which they cast all their care upon God. So, also, they must receive strength from the same source to enable them to resist their adversary the devil. Left to the protection found in their own care and watchfulness they are helpless in the hour of trial. No other resistance can avail in the warfare in which they are engaged but that resistance which is steadfast in the faith. By this faith alone do they know that the same afflictions are accomplished in their brethren that are in the world. Reason always decides that the afflictions of each one of the saints are peculiar to himself; and by the natural mind they are always assured that they have afflictions which are not endured by any other saint. Hence, it is only as they are experimentally under the protecting care of the God of their salvation that they can resist their persistent adversary, the devil; and when they are by faith made to stand against his assaults he will never be able to get the victory over them. By this living faith every follower of Jesus is able to vanquish the adversary in every assault, saying, "The Lord rebuke thee, O Satan; even the Lord that hath chosen Jerusalem rebuke thee!" This everlasting victory is not attained by the valor and strength of the saints in contending against their enemy; it is the gift of that same love which chose the saints in Christ Jesus before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before him in love.

Just in the same measure in which the saints are led into the knowledge of their perfect deliverance from the power of sin, they are made to realize the exceeding sinfulness and corruption of their own carnal nature and their destitution of power to resist the temptations which beset them in this mortal state. Hence they are made to cry out of the depth unto God, and to confess themselves entirely dependent on the infinite grace of our Lord Jesus for every claim upon the favor of eternal justice. In the light of this divine revelation they do indeed humble themselves under the mighty hand of God, and of necessity they call with heartfelt earnestness upon him for daily support and comfort, as well as for confirmation of their hope in the blood of Jesus, by which they are delivered from the bondage of sin and death. Only as they are steadfast in the faith can the saints know that they are suffering the same afflictions which are accomplished in their brethren that are in the world. Reason confirms the suggestion of the adversary that their suffering is entirely different from the afflictions of those who are truly subjects of redeeming grace. But the testimony of faith cannot be overcome by reason, nor can the devices of the tempter prevail against the abiding witness of the Spirit of truth by which the saints are kept from falling under temptation. By this omnipotent witness alone can the feeble saints resist and overcome the combined powers of the world, the flesh, and the devil. May you ever dwell in the secret place of the Most High, and abide under the shadow of the Almighty. In every trial his grace is your sufficient refuge, and he gives the victory in every conflict. Therefore ascribe greatness to our God for evermore.

The Elders and messengers of the churches composing the Delaware River Old School Baptist Association, in session with the First Hopewell Church, at Hopewell, N. J., May 29th, 30th and 31st, 1895, to the churches whose messengers we are, send christian salutation.

BELOVED BRETHREN:—The people of God in their lives as fallen, degenerate sons of Adam, dead in trespasses and sins, walking in their own strength, and trusting in works of righteousness which they in their blind infatuation think they can do at will and pleasure, to cancel the debt of sin charged against them, pass on in carnal security until God sends an arrow from his quiver, piercing their heart, and bringing them to a knowledge of themselves, and of the only true and living God, the sovereign Ruler of the universe; which knowledge enables them to see themselves as sinners condemned, the wrath of God abiding upon them, and to feel the weight of their guilt sinking them down to endless night. But as the dark shadows of despair close around them, the light of the Sun of righteousness beams forth, and Jesus, who was made a little lower than the angels for the suffering of death, appears the atoning sacrifice. Then with Thomas they cry out, "My Lord and my God," and inquire, "Tell me, O thou whom my soul loveth, where thou feedest, where thou makest thy flock to rest at noon: for why should I be as one that turneth aside by the flocks of thy companions?" The answer comes, "If thou know not, O thou fairest among women, go thy way forth by the footsteps of the flock, and feed thy kids beside the shepherds' tents." "For, lo, the winter is past, the rain is over and gone; the flowers appear on the earth; the time of the singing of birds is come, and the voice of the turtle is heard in our land; the fig tree putteth forth her green figs, and the vines with the tender grape give a good smell."—Song i. 7, 8; ii. 11–13. With thankfulness and praise the pardoned sinners enter this delightful season, rejoicing in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made them free, and who leads them in the footsteps of the flock, to feed their kids beside the shepherds' tents. The kids, which may represent the desires of the spiritual or heavenly mind, feed and thrive beside the shepherds' tents; but how soon "the foxes, the little foxes," appear, "that spoil the vines; for our vines have tender grapes." The fox is cunning and destructive, and may represent the evil propensities of our natural mind, which is at war with the spiritual. "For the carnal mind is enmity against God; for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be." When led by the Spirit to reflect upon the glorious plan of salvation by grace the heart leaps for joy, like the putting forth of the tender vine, and we inhale a good smell. We see the fruit in embryo appear, and hope soon to satiate our longing appetite upon the luscious grapes, ripened by time and experience in our advance to the goal of happiness, and sweetened with the sunshine of the presence of our Savior, as we travel in spirit through the flowery fields of divine truth revealed to our thirsty soul, gladdening our heart with the singing of birds and the voice of the turtle. O how pleasant then to feed our kids beside the shepherds' tents! The feet of them that bring glad tidings of peace are beautiful to us; and we are watching for our Beloved, who came from Edom, with dyed garments from Bozrah. Then no storms, no business nor worldly pleasure will prevent us from attending the appointments of the church. We realize that the Savior's yoke is easy, and his burden light. We run, and are not weary. How we are pained when brethren turn aside or fall out by the way. Love constrains us to admonish them, and to strive with them for the things which make for peace, and pray the Lord to restore unto them the joy of his salvation. Then how frequently we visit our brethren and our pastor. It is our meat and our drink to do the will of our God. But while in the enjoyment of the rich repast, in our travel in the christian course to a more perfect walk, the little foxes appear, to spoil the vines; for our vines have tender grapes. In an unguarded moment our hasty temper (one of the little foxes) causes us to speak in a manner unbecoming the cause of Christ. A little rain, a slight cold, or some worldly business, prevents us from meeting with our brethren in public worship, and coming around the table of the Lord and participating in the blessings of the gospel, as promised in the assembling of ourselves together for the worship of our God. These are all tender grapes that the little foxes would spoil. These things clearly represent our complex being, as natural and spiritual; the first man, with all his faculties, earthly, carnal, and opposed to the second man, which is the Lord from heaven, or Christ in us the hope of glory. When in the Spirit, we delight in the worship of God, and in exalting his great name for that great salvation which he reveals to frail worms of the dust, exalting them as kings and priests unto God, and giving them seats with all the redeemed in the kingdom of his dear Son. We delight in the law of God after the inward man, and it becomes us to crucify the flesh with the affections and lusts. In so doing we take the little foxes that spoil the tender vines. In our walk and conversation we should endeavor to fulfill the law of Christ by precept and example, making straight paths for our feet, that the lame be not turned out of the way. The little foxes are the emissaries of the great adversary of souls; and when his hideous form would readily be seen and avoided he employs the cunning fox to spoil the tender vines. The new wine is in the cluster, and one saith, "Destroy it not, for a blessing is in it." Our Savior, with all the blessings of the gospel, is represented by the vine and its fruit. "I am the vine, ye are the branches," says the Savior. The rich clusters of grapes and the wine bring to view the table which the Lord has spread for the sustenance of his people as they journey through this wilderness world; and we have his promise that he will enable us by his Spirit to take the little foxes, that the vines be not spoiled or robbed, but that fruit in abundance may appear, that we may not be cut off from our brethren, or prohibited from that table where a full supply of bread and wine of the kingdom fills the board, and that we may eat and drink without money and without price, rejoicing in Christ our Savior, who is the Captain of our salvation, and will bring us off conquerors over every foe, and give us a place at the right hand of his Father forevermore.

CORRESPONDING LETTERS.

The Warwick Old School Baptist Association, in session with the church at New Vernon, Orange Co., N. Y., June 5th, 6th and 7th, 1895, to the associations and churches with which we correspond, sends love and fellowship.

DEARLY BELOVED BRETHREN:—We feel to praise our God for this privilege of again meeting with the brethren, whose messages of love have indeed been sweet to our hungry souls, and out of whose mouths has been the utterance of the one great truth, salvation by grace through our Lord Jesus Christ. This is our only hope of life and immortality. God, who is rich in mercy, hath redeemed his people out of every nation and kindred under the whole heaven, calling them by name. Jesus says, "My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me."

Your messengers have come to us in love, and the truth has been proclaimed with no uncertain sound. We desire a continuance of your correspondence by messengers and Minutes. Our next session is appointed with the church at Middletown, N. Y., to begin on Wednesday before the second Sunday in June, 1896, when and where we hope again, if it is the Lord's will, to meet your messengers and receive your messages of love and fellowship.

The Delaware River Old School Baptist Association, in session with the First Hopewell Church, to the associations, corresponding meetings and churches with which we correspond, Greeting.

BELOVED BRETHREN:—The love and kind providence of God, that brought us together in this appointed meeting, in the fellowship of the gospel and love of the brethren, called for songs of praise and thanksgiving from those so highly favored. We united in heavenly anthems to his name, and experienced the blessing of sitting together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus, and received the comfort in the promise made to them that dwell together in love.

Your messengers and ministers we received in the love of the truth, and feel encouraged by the representation from so many states; and we rejoiced in the unity of spirit and peculiar power in the preaching, that touched our hearts as with a live coal from the altar, and gave the glory of our salvation to the author and finisher of it.

The churches of the association are reported as enjoying peace, and living in the order of the gospel. The business of the association has been conducted in harmony, and in a manner that becomes the professed followers of Christ.

Our next session is to be held with the Kingwood Church, at Locktown, Hunterdon Co., N. J., commencing on Wednesday before the first Sunday in June, 1896, at ten o'clock a. m., where we hope to greet your messengers and receive your communications of love.

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE.

TO MOST of our readers the above mentioned book is too well known to need any introduction or a description by us. While many of the Bibles have a Concordance appended, they are generally so condensed or abridged as to be of little or no use. Cruden's Complete Concordance, however, enables one to readily turn to any passage of Scripture of which they can call to mind two or three words, and in our opinion is the most complete and convenient as a reference book of any published. In addition, it contains many other aids in studying the Bible, as may be seen by reference to advertisement on last page. Remember, both the books there mentioned are CRUDEN'S COMPLETE.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

Mrs. Alice J. Harrison died at the home of her father, Black Rock, Baltimore Co., Md., May 1st, 1895, aged 26 years, 5 months and 6 days.

She was the daughter of brother Peter and sister Kate Kessler, members of the church at Black Rock. Her disease was consumption, with which she suffered for several months before death came to her relief. She leaves a husband and two little children, parents, brothers and sisters, to mourn what to them is a great loss. This dear family has been sorely bereaved and greatly blessed within the past two years. A noble son and affectionate daughter have been called away by death, and in that time a son and daughter have entered the fold of Christ by baptism; and in the death of this dear daughter and sister they do not know whether to sorrow or rejoice most. It is seldom that poor mortals so gloriously triumph over disease and death as was the case with Mrs. Harrison.

It has been our privilege within the past year to see the dear daughter, sister and wife very frequently at her father's home, and before that at the meeting at Black Rock. We have never witnessed a greater manifestation of solemnity and earnestness and carefulness to express no more than was true than was displayed in all that Mrs. Harrison said. The fellowship which sprang up in our first conversations with her continued to increase to the end. A solemn humility, and yet a humble trust in the merit of Christ, was manifest in her whole deportment. When we spoke to her about confessing her hope she would speak of her desire to be with the people whom she loved and believed to be the people of God, but then would express her sense of great unworthiness. This was before she became ill, and while yet able to get to the meeting. After the wasting disease began to make more rapid inroads her faith and hope brightened, and she became more and more clear in her testimony of Jesus.

Concerning her last days we can do no better than to subjoin a portion of a letter written us by our sister, Dora Kessler, her sister in the flesh:

"When she was first taken sick she said, 'I would love to live to raise my children, if it is the Lord's will; but if it is his will to take me he will make me willing when the time comes.' She said the good Lord did not see as we see, and his ways are not our ways. From a child she wanted to be a christian, but thought she had to do some great work to become one. Last spring the Lord made it plain to her, and that she was a sinner saved by grace, and that meant saved by God alone. On Friday before she died she called mother to her side and said, 'I am going to die. Do not be afraid to tell me, for I am not afraid to die. I have prayed the good Lord that I might be free from pain, so I could talk. Now I am free from pain, and I want to talk about heaven.' She repeated the first line of the hymn, 'Asleep in Jesus,' &c., and asked it to be sung at the house before leaving for the meeting-house. She also asked for the hymns, 'Jesus, lover of my soul,' and ''Mid scenes of confusion,' to be sung at her funeral. The last named had been a great comfort to her during her sickness. She said to her mother, 'Some people do not want to die; but here I am waiting, anxious to go. I may be too anxious, but I will wait the Lord's time.' When told that the end was near she smiled three times, and those around her never had witnessed such smiles. She prayed the Lord to comfort her husband, and kissed her little girl goodnight, telling her that when she awoke she might not have a mamma, for she might be asleep in Jesus; but grandma would be her mamma."

To the above we can only add that the sympathy of all who knew her goes out to the dear family in their bereavement, and all who love God rejoice to feel sure that this dear one is at rest. At her funeral the hymns she had named were sung. The text was 1 John v. 4.

C.

Our aged and beloved sister, Mary Carrick, was born at Bexhill, Sussex Co., England, Oct. 27th, 1808, and exchanged earth for a home with her Savior March 7th, 1895. She died at the residence of her daughter, Mrs. G. Gilbert, Kinsman, Ill., aged 86 years and 4 months.

She was married to Charles Carrick in September, 1825, and came to America in 1833. They both united with the New School Baptists in Buffalo, N. Y., in 1845. Her husband died in 1875. After this the Holy Spirit wrought a deep work in her soul. She was brought to see the utterly depraved state of her nature, and the entire hopelessness of doing anything to render herself acceptable in the sight of a just and holy God; but as a poor, ruined sinner she was led to Jesus as the only hope and foundation of her salvation, when she could no longer walk with the New School. She then united with the Predestinarian Baptist Church at Riker's Hollow, N. Y., and was baptized by Elder Hewitt. Her feet being now set on the Rock, Christ, her song from that time was,

"I am a fallen sinner still,
And grace must reign alone."

In 1883 she came to live with her daughter, and put in her letter with the Predestinarian Baptist Church called Ebenezer, near Verona, and was a consistent and highly esteemed member for ten years. Of five children, three had died before her, leaving a son and daughter, with several grand and great-grandchildren, to mourn their loss, as also does the church.

Much might be written about her, as she was a saint of great research and strength of mind. Besides her much-read and well-worn Bible and hymn book, the Signs of the Times, Gospel Standard, &c., she had a library of books of gospel truth by the best English and American preachers. Her conversation at all times showed that she was deeply taught in doctrine, experience and practice. She received nothing that did not lay the sinner low, and highly exalt her glorious Redeemer.

She was taken sick a week before she died. She knew her end was near, talked much of her hope, said it was in the blood and righteousness of Christ alone, and was all-sufficient. Then she said, "I want to see and know everything clearer. I want stronger manifestations to my soul." She then talked of the twelfth chapter of Isaiah: "I will trust, and not be afraid." Once she said, "I want to be in heaven." A little time before her death her granddaughter, sister Jennie Gilbert, was reading and talking with her. She read Romans v. 1: "Therefore being justified by faith, we have peace with God," &c. She laid her trembling hand on the book, grasped Jennie's hand with the other, smiled and said, "Yes, yes, yes." The Holy Spirit seemed to rest on both of them with power. Soon after this she quietly passed away.

The funeral service was held in Verona. A discourse was delivered by the writer from Proverbs xiv. 32, and her body was laid in the grave to await the resurrection morn.

S. BRADBEER.

Gardner, Ill.

By request of sister Mary Black, of London, Ontario, I send for publication in the Signs of the Times the obituary notice of her husband, brother Daniel Black, who died Jan. 7th, 1895, in the 76th year of his age.

Brother Black was for more than fifty years a member of the Covenanted Baptist Church of Canada. I have no particular date of the time of his conversion, but he was quite young when he united with the church. He was baptized by Elder Dugald Campbell, who was pastor of the church at the time. He was first married to Christiana Ferguson, daughter of James Ferguson, of Port Stanley. She was for many years a consistent member of the church, and was truly a helpmeet for him. Some years after her death he married his second wife, Mary McBrayne, daughter of Malcom McBrayne, of Jarmouth, who is a devoted member of the church.

Brother Black for some years lived on a farm, which he sold and moved to the city of London, where he resided many years, his house being a home for Old Baptists, and especially ministers who visited the quarterly meetings. On passing through the city he made appointments for them at his house, where they were hospitably entertained by him and sister Black. He was a most kind and generous brother, always ready to help those in need.

About the first of January he went out one evening for a walk, and when a short distance from his house he was taken with paralysis, and fell on the street He was carried into his house in an unconscious state. He lingered a few days, and on the 7th his spirit returned to God who gave it. He was buried in the St. Thomas cemetery. As a proof of the esteem in which he was held, the funeral procession was one of the largest ever seen in the city.

Our dear sister has the sincere sympathy of the church in her sore bereavement; but in humble submission to the divine will she can say, with Job, "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord."

D. T. McCOLL.

Wallacetown, Ont., May 31, 1895.

By request of the bereaved family I send you for publication a sketch of the life of our beloved and esteemed brother in Christ, Elder Aaron Wood, who in the providence of God was removed from earth on April 10th, 1895.

Aaron Wood was born in Fayette Co., Ind., April 11th, 1823, lacking but one day of being seventy-two years of age at the time of his death. He was first married to Isophena Baker, August 30th, 1843, this union being blessed with five sons and four daughters, of which number three sons only survive the father. Having lost his dear companion, he married Jane Canine, Nov. 20th, 1866, who lived but a short time, and he was thus bereft a second time of his earthly companion. He subsequently married Bethiah J. Davis, April 27th, 1869, who survives him, and with whom he lived until his death.

Our dear brother united with the Primitive Baptists on the second Sunday in July, 1842, and in after years, manifesting an evidence of a gift of the Spirit, was ordained to the full functions of the gospel ministry, on the 10th and 11th days of July, 1865, and for about thirty years has been one of the Lord's faithful watchmen on the walls of Zion, proclaiming the unsearchable riches of the gospel of the Lord Jesus with such ability and understanding as it pleased our God to give him; and although he was a man of much meekness and humility, and often keenly felt his weakness and imperfections, yet he did not shun his duty in declaring the word of truth, and of being a faithful guardian of the flock, over the which the Holy Ghost had made him overseer, greatly to the comfort and edification of the dear children of God.

He was a beloved member of Ebenezer Church, in Mahaska Co., Iowa, and had been for many years prior to his death. He had been afflicted for one or two of the last years, his eyesight being nearly gone; but he bore it all with courage and patience, often speaking of the time of his departure being near, and that he felt as though all would be well. So it proved at the close of his eventful voyage on life's tempestuous sea, his life going sweetly and peacefully out, in full triumph of redeeming grace. He was a quiet, unobtrusive, exemplary citizen, greatly esteemed by all acquaintances, a loving husband and indulgent father; and our humble prayer is that the Lord in his infinite wisdom and tender mercy may comfort and edify the bereaved companion, our dear sister in Christ, and the surviving sons.

The writer was sent for to conduct a funeral service at the time of his death, but not receiving the word in time, was not present, and so, by request, tried to deliver a discourse in honor of his revered memory to a large and attentive congregation on the occasion of the regular meeting of Ebenezer Church, on the third Sunday in May, using for a text 1 Corinthians xv. 56, 57.

M. W. BYRAM.

Our dear father, James M. Thomas, died Feb. 25th, 1895, of pneumonia, at his home, Herndon, Saline Co., Mo.

He was born in Guilford Co., N. C., in 1818, and was married to Miss Jane Hill about the year 1848. Twelve children were born to them. Four sons and one daughter preceded him to the grave. He leaves our dear mother to mourn her great loss. Seven children, fifty grandchildren and five great-grandchildren are yet living. He joined the Old School Baptist Church at Towns Creek, Franklin Co., W. Va., and was baptized by Elder E. B. Turner in 1856. He moved to West Virginia in 1866, and united with the Providence Church, Lincoln County. He moved to Missouri in 1883, and united with Goshen Church, Saline Co., and afterward with Zion Church, in same county, where he lived a faithful member until called home. He always filled his seat with the church, and was always glad to meet his brethren. His funeral was preached at his home by Elder W. M. Startzman. He was confined to his bed five days, and sang his favorite hymns as long as he was able to speak, the last one being,

"Lord, submissive make us go,
Gladly leaving all below," &c.

A place is vacant in our home which can never be filled.

By his daughter-in-law,

MARTHA THOMAS.

Brother Henry Morris departed this life at his home in Martin Co., Minn., on Thursday, May 30th, 1895, at about ten o'clock p. m.

Brother Morris came here from Ohio about four years ago, where his membership was with the Old School or Predestinarian Baptists. He was baptized on Nov. 7th, 1877, and was 52 years, 5 months and 27 days old when he died. He was one whom we esteemed sound in the faith and doctrine, believing in the foreknowledge, predestination, creation and government of all things by that God in whom we trust. The writer visited him in his last illness, but was prevented by poor health from attending his funeral. Brethren in Ohio who knew him, when you read this contemplate with us his glorious change, and mingle your tears, sympathies and prayers with ours for his bereaved wife and family.

May God in his infinite wisdom, mercy and power bless this dispensation of his providence to the good of his little ones, is our prayer.

PICTORIAL HISTORY

OF THE

UNITED STATES.

By James D. McCabe.

This work is no dry mass of details—no bombastic effort to inflame the national pride, but a vivid and brilliant narrative of the events of our history, from the discovery of the American Continent down to the present time. It gives a most interesting account of the Indians of North America, from the time of the coming of the white men. The voyages of Columbus and explorations and discoveries of the different nations of Europe are related with graphic power. Every step of our colonial history is traced with patient fidelity, and the sources of those noble and, we trust, enduring institutions, which have made our country free and great, are shown with remarkable clearness. Then follows a clear and succinct account of our great Struggle for Independence, and the establishment of the Federal Union—the events of our career from the close of the Revolution to the administration of Harrison.

The work is printed from plain, new type, on fine calendered paper, and comprised in one octavo volume of 960 pages. It is splendidly embellished with nearly 500 fine engravings, embracing battles and other historical scenes, portraits of distinguished men, views of our principal cities, &c., &c.

CORRESPONDENCE.

ST. THOMAS, Ont., Feb. 2, 1895.

ELDER BUNDY—VERY DEAR BROTHER IN THE LORD JESUS CHRIST:—If one so unworthy as I can claim such a sweet and heavenly relationship to the Lord's dear people. My dear wife and I were very much pleased when we heard, as your letter stated, that you and dear Elder Vail arrived home safely to your dear loved ones. Well, dear brother, I have started to write, and my query is, What shall I write? I feel at a loss what to say or how to say it. I feel that if I were to write you of the things of time and sense, you would not be satisfied, nor feel any comfort of love in your soul, nor would you feel to call upon your soul saying, "Bless the Lord, O my soul; and all that is within me, bless his holy name." But on the other hand, dear brother, if by the goodness of God I should be enabled to write as one that has been with Jesus and learned of him, the meek and lowly Lamb of God, giving you a reason of the hope that is within me, then, methinks, your soul would go out in thankful praise and adoration to God, saying, or at least feeling, "Not unto us, not unto us, O Lord, but unto thy name be all the praise." It is about twenty years ago that I was running in that broad road that leads to destruction, caring not for God nor myself, when God, as I humbly hope, called me by his grace. Yes, the appointed time came, not to propose (and O how thankful my poor soul has often been that the God of all the earth does not propose), but call by grace. True, at that time I did not think or feel that God was dealing with me in mercy, but rather in awful justice. And under my heavy and awful load of sins I set to work, as I believe, in earnest, to work out a righteousness that would take me to heaven and save me from hell. That was all the kind of doctrine or practice I knew of. Yes, it was the doctrine of my carnal nature, which was, and is yet, enmity against God. And although I "went to church," read my Bible, and tried to pray, yet I found with unspeakable sorrow and trouble that the more I strove against sin's power, I sinned and stumbled but the more; and, I think, three or four times I gave up in despair of ever becoming fit for heaven by my own works; yet I had no doubt in my own mind that the only way anyone would get to heaven was partly by their own works, and partly by the mercy of God. Each time that I would give up trying to live a good life, I would go down deeper and deeper in sin, trying to stifle a guilty conscience. But then again the terrors of death and hell would come into my soul, and, poor slave that I was, I would set to work again, to work for life. Then again I would try earnestly to please God and gain his favor. I would read nothing but the Bible and prayer-book. As my parents were "Church of England" people, I was brought up that way. But through some unguarded word or angry passion I would be cast down, and would despair again. Then I would not look at the Bible or anything good, but the contrary. On one occasion, when I was reading a story paper, my mother asked me how it was that sometimes for a time I would go to meeting, read the Bible, and live good, and then again I would not look at the Bible, but would read story books and papers. I am utterly unable to describe what were my feelings when she asked me the above questions. I went to my room and stood beside my bed, when a terrible fear took hold of me, and it did seem that if I should go to bed without praying I would awake in hell; yet I felt that it was mockery for me to take God's holy name upon my lips. But, to be brief, the time came when I saw and felt myself to be the vilest of the vile. I verily believed that God could have mercy upon all mankind, but not upon me. I felt and reasoned with some of my Methodist brethren (for I had joined the Methodists on probation) that I could not see how God could be just and have mercy on me. But that very day, I feel to hope, God gave me to experience his loving-kindness and tender mercy, so that I could not help but sing,

"O happy day that fixed my choice
On thee, my Savior and my God."

I felt that after such a manifestation of the goodness of God to me I should never sin again. My poor soul was feasting upon his love. But I did not understand doctrine. I could not digest anything stronger than milk. For about six weeks I remained in this way, lifted up above myself and my surroundings. About this time I went to live with a man that my Methodist friends spoke of as being a strange man, and they left the impression on my mind that he was a bad man, and warned me against him. Up to this time I had not heard of any other doctrine or preaching but that of "do and live." I did not know that the above referred to man was a professor of religion. I went to work for him, and the first night that I stayed with him he sat down to read before going to bed. He read a chapter in the book of Isaiah. The chapter I cannot remember; but what I was shown that night, while listening to the word read, I shall never forget; for I was given to see that God loved his people in Jesus from eternity. In a word, it was given me to believe in the everlasting love of God to his people, in the doctrine of election, predestination, and the final bringing home to glory of every subject of grace. It was a glorious revelation to me, and the man never opened his lips to speak, except to read the chapter. And although of a quiet and shy disposition, yet such was my surprise and astonishment at what was revealed to me that I asked the man if that was the Bible that we read out of—meaning myself and my Methodist brethren; for it came to my mind what they had said about the man. I thought, Surely he is a strange man, and reads out of a different Bible from what I do. He answered me by saying, "Yes, that is the same Bible that you read out of;" and he reached me the book to see for myself. The man's name was William Knifton, and had been an ordained minister in England of the Strict or Particular Baptist Church. He had moved to Toronto, Canada, and then to Muskoka, where I met and worked for him. He has preached at Alborough, Ekfrid, and, I think, Dunwich meetings, a time or two. What I trust the Lord gave me to see in his word that night, while listening to the reading of his word, I shall never forget. It took such a hold upon me that I could not get away from it, though I tried hard, and to some extent I was forced to search the Scriptures to see if those things were true; and to the praise of him who has said by his apostle, "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, who giveth to all liberally, and upbraideth not," my blind eyes were opened and my ears unstopped, so that I was given to learn line upon line, and precept upon precept, here a little and there a little; and the love of God to his people, his great salvation, his unchanging faithfulness, seemed so unspeakably great that I felt it could not be for me. I felt that a people, the subjects of so great salvation, surely were different from me; for I felt to be the chief of sinners, and not worthy to cumber the earth; and it did seem to me that the devil in hell could not be worse than I was. At this time I was working in the bush, chopping a good part of the time; and if I went to a stream of water to take a drink, I was forced often to stop, lest that awful feeling I felt within would break out to curse God and die. Often when chopping a tree down I have had to stop and put my hand over my mouth to keep the awful curses and bitter feeling from breaking out. The above named temptation and trial was, I think, the sorest that I have ever passed through, and lasted for some months. For about three years I was sometimes beholding wonderful things in the word of God, and finding sweetness, joy and pleasure in contending for the truth as it is in Jesus. More than once have I been beseiged by those who were strong and wise in their own conceit, and often has the Lord at such times given me light and heavenly wisdom, so that the truth was to me sweeter than honey and the honeycomb. Often during those three years would I have given worlds to know if that great salvation, which I found such great sweetness in contending for, was for me. On one occasion when a number of the Methodists tried to show me that I was wrong, they asked me if I knew I was saved or not. I answered with much inward feeling that whether I was saved or not I could not say, but that if ever I was saved it would be in accordance with the truth that I tried to contend for; that it was the only way whereby God could be just and the justifier of the ungodly; that if ever I was saved, I desired to be saved in righteousness and truth. On another occasion they tried to show me how vain it was for me to think that I was right, and that they, with all the great and mighty of the religious world, were wrong. I sank down in my feelings, and left them, and went along the lonely forest road to my home; and O how foolish did I see myself to be, to think that I, a poor worm and no man, knew the truth, which gave the lie to all the preaching of great men; yes, great, and so far as I could see, good men, who had grown greyheaded in preaching a lie, if what I believed was the truth. I felt, O! it cannot be that they are all wrong and I am right. I was in despair, until I was led to think of the Scriptures, and there I was given to see that the prophets, the psalmist, and all the New Testament saints, told the same glorious story of salvation by grace, from first to last; and I was enabled to go on my way rejoicing that it was the truth of God I believed in. I had some time previous to the above requested that my name be taken off their church-book, as I could not walk nor live with them. One of them tried to show me that I was doing wrong, and pointed me to that Scripture which says, "Not forsaking the assembling of yourselves together, as the manner of some is." I answered him by saying that when the apostle used those words he was speaking to the church of God. The man got quite angry, and asked me if I dared to say that they were not the church of God. I was taking the "Gospel Standard" at the time, and O what comfort I got in reading! It was sweet indeed, and if I could have gone to England I would have done so, to hear the glorious gospel of the Son of God, so great was my desire to find a people or a person of truth. But my enemies declared that I would never find a people who believed as I did, and I was afraid that I would not. One day while chopping in the woods, with my mind on these things, the question came as plainly and as forcibly as if asked audibly, "What are you staying here for?" I was given to see that, unknown to myself, I was thinking more of making a home for myself than I was of finding the children of God; and I felt to beg of the Lord that, if it was his will for me to leave that part of the country, he would guide me. To be brief, I will pass over a space of time. I left Muskoka and visited my dear friend, Elder Knifton, in Toronto, and stopped two or three days there, and then went west one hundred and twenty miles, to London, the home of my mother and the rest of the family. I went to work in the car shops, and hunted for a place of truth, but could not find it. I sometimes attended a New School Baptist place, where I sometimes heard the letter of truth preached, and while seeing them baptize two or three persons I was led to see a great beauty in it. I felt a strong desire to follow the Lord, so that for a time I thought of, and waited outside of the meeting-house, to ask the minister if he would baptize me; but while waiting, the thought occurred to me, Even if he baptizes you, can you live with them? I had to admit that I could not; so I had to abandon the thought. As I was alone, and had walked alone for about six years, I felt very lonely. But I am going too fast, and am slipping over a period that to me was, and is yet, very sweet. About the end of the first three years I was sitting in an orchard on a Sunday. I was reading the Bible, and came to the words, "O thou afflicted, tossed with tempest, and not comforted." They seemed to enter my very soul and to completely describe the condition I was in. It did me good for a day or so, and gave me to hope, though it seemed to be hoping against hope. Then darkness prevailed for two or three weeks, until one night I was sitting at the table reading the Bible; but the book, chapter or verse I have never remembered; but it declared the everlasting love of God to his people. Although only a few minutes before this I was the most forlorn creature in the world, and my case seemed to be the most hopeless of all, yet now something seemed to speak it into my very soul that God had loved me when I cared not for myself; yes, when dead in sin, he loved me, and with everlasting kindness he was drawing me. So full was my poor soul with the love of God that I felt it to be too good to be true. My soul went out to the dear Lord, and I thought, Can it be that thou hast loved me and saved me? I was so fully persuaded that it was true that I felt to say, "Lord, it is enough!" for I felt that I could not live and endure the greatness of his love as I felt it that night. I have never since entirely lost the sweetness and comfort of that night. Then, again, one Saturday evening I went home to see my mother, intending to walk back on Sunday evening; but my mother wanted me to stay until Monday morning, and she would be sure to have me up early to walk seven miles to my work; so I stayed. In the morning I started on the seven miles, and got to m[illegible]o go with him; but he was so anxhome before the family were out[illegible]ous for me to go to work for him bed. That was a glorious morning to me indeed; for all nature seemed to be quiet; and I was given, while walking along the road, to behold by the eye of faith the dear Savior of sinners as dying, the just for the unjust, and through death destroying him that had the power of death, that is, the devil. The feeling of my soul was, "O death where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" O how gladly would I have died then, feeling that the terror of the grave was gone. Yes, I felt to welcome the tomb. Since the Savior has lain there, I dread not the gloom. But I was not to die then. I had to learn more of my awful depravity, and the great mercy and long-suffering of that God who is not willing that any should perish, but that every subject of his love shall know him, from the least to the greatest. O how my poor soul has gone out in grateful praise to God for giving me in any measure to know and be established in his glorious truth. I have often felt that next to my soul's eternal salvation is a knowledge of the truth, and it has saved me from the cunning craftiness of men, whereby they lie in wait to deceive. I felt that I must look for the church and people of God, feeling that I could not live without them. I started from London against the wishes of my friends, my mother and sister. I had heard Elder Knifton say something about preaching west of London, so I took a train for Longwood, about twenty miles west of London, and my soul's desire and cry to the Lord before leaving was that he would guide me and give me to find his people; at least to find employment with one of his children. When the train arrived at Longwood Station, rain was falling and I had to stay over night; so I made inquiries of the people if there was any Old School Baptist meeting-house in that part of the country; but I did not get the desired information. I started the next morning for the village of Melbourne, and made inquiries along the way, but to no purpose. I stood on the street corner, and it seemed to me that I was the gazing-stock of every eye, and the biggest fool that ever lived, to leave my work and my home and start out, not knowing where. There were four ways to go, and which way to go I did not know; but after a little time I felt to go west from where I stood. After going about one quarter of a mile I met a man, and to start conversation I asked him if he knew anyone who wanted to hire a man for harvest work. He said he did not know of anyone but himself, and he was very anxious to hire me; but I felt I could not hire with him, nor anyone else, until I knew where I was. So I asked him if he knew where there was an Old School Baptist Church or meeting-house in that part. He said he did not know of any, so I did not want that he said his wife was a Baptist, and perhaps she would know where there was a meeting-house of the Old School Baptists. So I agreed to hire with him for half a month, and to let him know in three days whether I would stay through the whole harvest or not. Those three days included one Sunday. I found out from the man's wife that there was an Old School Baptist meeting-house over four miles from them, and there was to be meeting there the next Sunday; so I started out that morning early to go to the meeting, but my feelings I cannot express. Several persons drove past me, going, as I supposed, to the Baptist meeting, and I thought, those dear people are all Old Baptists. These are the people I have looked for, for the last six years or more. As I had plenty of time to walk I did not want anyone to ask me to ride with them; therefore I hid my face with my umbrella. But there was one rig with one man and one woman in it, and they insisted on my getting in with them, so I got in. The woman asked me if I was the schoolteacher. I answered her no. Then she asked me where I was going. I said I was going down to the Baptist Church. She then asked me what I was going there for. I answered that I was going to see if I could hear the truth there. She then asked me where I came to know the truth. I told her that the only man I had ever heard preach the truth was a Mr. Knifton, in Muskoka. She was interested at once, as she was anxious to know how Mr. Knifton was, having heard him preach. However, I went and heard Elder Pollard preach the truth of the gospel, and I mingled with the dear children of God. Within a week afterward I was living at the same place, with the above named dear old sister who was so inquisitive at our first meeting. The next Sunday was the time of the quarterly or June meeting, when I was favored to hear Elders Pollard, Durand and Beebe, and was favored in my soul, and felt that God had abundantly answered my cry in giving me to find a gospel church and to live in the house of one of his children. I seemed to be satisfied, and, as far as I remember, had no thought of uniting with the church for two or three months. I felt to want to know beyond all doubt that I was a proper subject before I would ask for a name or place with the dear children of God. But I read an article in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES by old Elder Beebe, and was given to see that I was wrong in looking for what I was. Then dear Deacon Bateman (who is now in that world where sickness, pain and death cannot enter) and myself were going to Lobo to meeting, and he questioned me about joining the church. I felt quite alarmed at the thought, and told him that I would like to wait longer; that I had had so much trouble in leaving the Methodists that my mind was to be fully satisfied before I would unite with another people. We went and heard Elder Pollard preach, and toward the latter part of the service I felt that if the Lord would enable me I would offer myself to the church a month from that time. On our way home I told Deacon Bateman my mind, and he told me that he had told Elder Pollard he thought I would come to the church a month from then, which surprised and humbled me. On my way home these words came very sweetly to me and gave me much comfort, "In keeping his commandments there is great reward," and my soul went out to the Lord. Yes, "in keeping;" not for keeping. I felt that I had done right, and in the midst of doubts and fears during the following month these words came often, and urged me to come before the church, "If ye love me, keep my commandments." So I went to the church and tried to tell them what the Lord had done for me. But it seemed that I could not say anything that I thought I ought to say, and I felt sure that the church could not and would not receive me. O the pain and trouble it gave me, when that dear old sister Scates said she felt to say, "Come in, thou blessed of the Lord." The church received me, and I spent the most of that day in sore trouble, asking myself, "What have I said to deceive those people?" I was baptized about a month from that time in Lobo. My mind was mostly dark, and I had no particular joy or comfort. As the water met or closed over me, these words came with some hope, "All thy waves and billows passed over me."

So I found the people whose God is my God, whose joys and sorrows are mine; a people who are not ashamed of the gospel, feeling it to be the power of God unto salvation. I have been in the church now about twelve years, sometimes feeling the joy of God's salvation, but more often filled with darkness, unbelief and sin, and often have felt, "I would not live alway, thus fettered by sin." Death, which puts an end to mortal life, will also put an end to sin. I have heard a goodly number of ministers from the States preach here, and have felt to thank the dear Lord for sending us so many able ministers of the new testament, who rightly divide the word of truth, giving to each their portion.

When I started this letter, dear Elder Bundy, I had no thought of writing my experience; but I found myself at it before I was aware. As you know, I have very little time to write. I have written in a rambling way, but have tried to show forth the praise of God in calling me from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God. If after carefully reading this you feel that it would be of any comfort to the poor and needy of God's house, and to the praise of God, you can send it to the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. But let me ask you, dear Elder, to read it carefully and correct my mistakes, which I feel are many. I feel if I had not sent you the letter when I did, you would not have it now, feeling it to be a very imperfect scribble.

I remain, as I humbly hope, your brother in the hope of the gospel,

RICHARD CASE.

GRAIN VALLEY, Mo., April 12, 1895.

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES—DEAR BRETHREN:—I have been requested to write for the SIGNS OF THE TIMES my experience. The Lord willing, I will try, and it will be with you to publish or not. I know I have an experience, but whether I have an experience of grace or not the Lord knows. I hope I have, and I would not exchange that hope for the world. I never have been without a hope of heaven from my earliest recollection. In my boyhood days my hope was based on what I was going to do for the Lord, in order to obtain heaven; but now my hope, I trust, is based on what the Lord has done for me. That I call a good hope through grace.

I will first give a little history of my life in an unregenerated state. My mother says I was born in McMinn Co., East Tennessee, and the family record shows my birth to be on the 14th day of December, 1850. My parents moved to Missouri before I was quite three years old, and settled in Ray County, where I was raised to manhood. My parents moved here poor in this world's goods, but began to accumulate a little, when the late war came on, and the 22d day of February, 1865, my father died, leaving a poor widow woman to battle through life alone, with five little children to care for; and I, being the eldest, just turned into my fifteenth year, had to work hard to help support the rest of the family, they being all girls except the youngest one. I can say to the praise of my mother that, though poor, she raised her children in honor to herself. My advantages for a scholastic education were poor. I was taught morality, and to be honest, and can say (not boastingly) that there is not a person living that ever heard me swear an oath. I never visited a ball-room, never made a practice of visiting saloons nor places of amusement. So, by the way, I was a Pharisee. My thoughts and resolutions were pretty much the same as all others in a state of nature. The thoughts of death and the grave were a terror to my mind, and I realized when quite young that death and the grave was my certain doom. Also, I believed there was a place called heaven, and a place called hell; that all good people would go to heaven when they died, and all bad people would go to hell; and, of course, my intentions were to be good, that is, make peace with God before I died; for I thought God was willing to save me when I got willing to be saved. Of course my will was the motive power, for it was my will that was to regulate God's will; and that which regulates is greater than that which is regulated. Such a view as this I believe to be about as good a conception as carnality ever had of the great Sovereign of the universe. I somehow never could get willing; it was always in the future I was going to do. When I became grown, I got acquainted with a young man, and he and I became intimate friends. He belonged to the Campbellites, and from him I began to learn the Campbellite doctrine, which agreed with my natural thoughts; so in the course of time he and I attended one of their protracted meetings, and during this meeting I was almost persuaded to be a Campbellite. The preacher told what an awful thing it was to die without religion. He pictured out hell with all its horrible scenes, and how willing God was to save the sinner; all of which was a very serious matter with me. I became very attentive to reading the Scriptures, for I thought the Lord required that of me; and I thought I believed that Jesus Christ was the Son of God. I have wondered why I did not join their church, but I hope the Lord reserved me, and kept me from bowing the knee to their image. Hence it was but a short time after the meeting closed that I left off reading the Scriptures, and drove those serious thoughts from my mind; for I felt I was too young, and at the same time promising myself and the Lord that when I got older I would attend to it. I thought that if I would marry and settle down then would be a good time to make the necessary preparations for heaven; so on the 30th day of July, 1872, I was married to Miss Lettice Odell, and we have shared each other's joys and sorrows ever since. But I was not yet ready to begin the work; the time was yet in the future. I would sometimes come to the conclusion that there would be time enough just before I come to die, and of course I thought I would know when that was. I thought all I would have to do would be to become very penitent, ask the Lord to save me, and all would be well; for I could not see how God could remain just and do otherwise. Poor, blind mortal! not conscious of the depraved nature of man, that in the sight of God his heart is as a cage of unclean birds. But time passed on, and I slumbering in the death sleep of sin, with an occasional fear of hell, (which is the cause of the world's religion), until in May, 1873. One evening I had been to a little country store, and was returning home; the sun was getting low in the western horizon, when suddenly my mind seemed to be clothed in thick darkness. The sun seemed not to shine as bright as it had a few minutes before. Everything seemed to be away off. O how dark the future looked to me! The tears began to flow from my eyes, for all was not well with me. I felt condemned, and being possessed of that pharisaical nature, I began to try to make peace with God. I began to read the Scriptures to try to find relief for my troubled mind; but they seemed to be sealed; I could get no comfort from them; and the very things that I had thought all along would be to my salvation, I found to be to my condemnation. When all other efforts had failed, I thought I must try to pray in a formal way, not knowing that I was then praying. So one evening about dusk I left my house, and after getting away a little distance I found (as I thought) a suitable place, and there I dropped on my knees to pray, for the first time in my life. O! imagine a poor, guilty wretch, dumb before the God of the whole earth. I do not remember that I uttered a word, but I left there one of the most miserable beings on earth. I thought I would certainly never try it again; but in this I was deceived, for it was often that I resorted to some lonely spot to try to plead with God for mercy. Before this I thought that justice was what I wanted; but now I saw if justice was meted out to me, hell was my doom. I had been accustomed to attending Old Baptist meetings from my earliest recollection, my father being a member of that church before I could recollect, and my mother a Baptist by faith. So now I went to hear them preach, to see if I could get a word of comfort. But alas! their preaching left me out. The doctrine proclaimed by them was a mystery to me; and when they would describe the characteristic of a mourning soul, I could travel along with them until they were enabled to embrace Christ as their Savior, and there I was left. I longed to know that I was a mourner, as I knew there was a promise of a blessing to the mourner; but I could not claim the promise. Thus I mourned because I could not mourn. It was almost a year that I was led along here, and the breathing of my soul was, "Lord, have mercy." (In these three words I believe is the greatest prayer ever uttered by mortal man.) These were my thoughts by day, and my dreams by night. I would sometimes think I would drive all from my mind, and not study about it; but I could not. I regretted that I had ever been born and I would have given the world, had it been mine, to believed the Infidel's doctrine that I would cease to exist when I should come to lay down in death; but I could not believe it. It seemed I was doomed for misery and woe. I would envy the brute creation, and look at the little worm crawling in the dust, and think, O that I were just like it! It was innocent, it had never sinned; but here I am, a poor, condemned, sinner, doomed to death, and after death to eternal punishment. Yet the very breathing of my soul was almost continually, "Lord, have mercy."

I now come to a period of time which I shall never be able to describe what I did see or feel. About two o'clock p. m., I was meditating over the deplorable condition I was in, realizing the justice of God in my condemnation. In a moment the whole burden of guilt that had been weighing me down for almost a year was rolled off, the prison-doors unlocked, and the captivated soul set at liberty. O what joy sprang up in my heart! It was heaven before, behind, and all around me, and I seemed to be swallowed up in love. How long I had been standing where I was I cannot tell; but when I became conscious of my surroundings I was standing with my face to the north, looking upward. That was the first time in life that I had ever seen any beauty in election. This was all seen and felt, not by my natural senses, but, I hope, with the inward eye. I went on in my meditations on the power, glory and grandeur of God, one of the happiest persons on earth. But when I betook myself I began to hunt for my old burden. It was gone; and here began the warfare with me. I wondered if I might claim what I had just passed through as religion. I knew it was not as I expected, but that burden was gone, and I never could feel it as I had before. And

ANSWER TO INQUIRIES.

ELDER F. A. CHICK—DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST:—I have been asked of late the following questions, which I am not able to answer. If it is consistent with your will, please give us your views about the matter through the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. The questions are as follows:

If man is dead in sin, and cannot do anything to save himself (that is, to give himself eternal life), and God gives it to whom he will, and if everybody is under God's just and holy law, and all stand either justified or condemned in the sight of God; if, as I have said, all this is true, and all men are not saved, whose fault is it? To make it short, if man cannot save himself, and God will not save him, whose fault is it if he is not saved?

The above has been asked me, and I must confess that it is too deep for me. I very greatly desire you to write upon it if you feel to do so. Also please give your views, when you feel to do so, upon a portion of Scripture in 1 Peter iii. 18-20. What I desire to know most about is what is meant by Christ preaching to the spirits in prison. I am not writing merely to ask questions, but I greatly desire to know the truth.

Your brother in hope of eternal life,
ELDON BARTLETT.

REPLY.

WE trust that for many years we have had no greater desire than to help the people of God in any way that we could, and we feel still the same desire as much as we have ever done. Especially have we desired to minister to any who are perplexed by the wiles of the enemy of truth, because we ourselves know what such sore temptations mean. We must never forget that not our reasonings, but the Scriptures of truth, must be allowed to settle all our disputes, and all our questions and doubts. There is not a single truth revealed in the word of God, and precious in the hearts of the children of God, but what has been assailed by the sophistry of human reasoning and the assertions of a vain philosophy. Such questions as have perplexed our brother have been common in all the ages since the doctrine of grace was first revealed. Salvation by grace, and every cognate truth, have ever been charged with making God unjust with leaving an open door for men to run into riot and licentiousness, and with doing away with all use or necessity for good works in any way whatever. The very grace that magnifies the sovereign mercy of God, and makes his justice shine forth with resplendent lustre, that puts into the hearts of men a love of holiness, and that shuts them out from licentious living, and that shuts its recipients up to all good works and ways, is maligned and abused as an evil thing, simply because it will give no praise to vain, boastful, self-righteous man, and persists in putting the crown upon the head of Jesus. Salvation by grace is hated because it will not acknowledge that any man can by his own exertion make himself a better man, or succeed in putting God under any obligation to save him in the future.

In the suppositions stated by our brother there are some things true; there are some things sustained by the word of God. We will state them first. It is true, and the Scriptures do teach, that man is dead in sin, that he cannot do anything to save himself, that he cannot give himself eternal life, that God gives life to whom he will, that all men are under the just and holy law of God, and that all men stand either justified or condemned in the sight of God. More than this, it is true, and the Scriptures teach, that all men are not saved, that man cannot save himself, and that God will not save all men. These things are all true, and abundantly sustained by the Scriptures of eternal truth. We suppose that all Old School or Primitive Baptists will at once accept these declarations as containing what they understand the Scriptures to teach. We suppose that our brother has in conversation been asserting these things as his faith, and that some one has met this, his confession of faith, with the question, Whose fault is it, then, if everybody is not saved? This question is not so very dissimilar from the question which Paul rebukes as a replying against God, in the ninth chapter of Romans. If wicked men by their wicked actions are but carrying out the will of God which he has purposed from all eternity, as Paul there asserts is the case, the carnal mind replies, Then whose fault is it that they do this, and what reason has God to find fault with man? So here with regard to salvation; when the Bible asserts that it is all of grace, and not at all of the work or the choice of the sinner, men say, Then it is the fault of Jehovah that all men are not saved. It would seem as though the thoughtful natural mind even would shrink from applying the word "fault" to the holy God, the Creator of all. How can the name Jehovah be used in the same breath as the word "fault," or "faulty?" But without further criticising the word "fault," we will proceed to consider the idea which we suppose is intended to be conveyed by the question, "Whose fault is it?"

The true question is, How and why are men lost? The question, Whose fault is it? would not be propounded at all if there were any clear understanding of the fallen, sinful, lost and condemned condition of all men without the exercise of saving grace or mercy. We wish to emphatically say that the Scriptures do not teach that man is in danger of being lost, or that man may be lost, or is going to be lost; but they do teach that man is lost. We cannot emphasize this too much, nor make it too plain, because in our view the whole plan of salvation is hinged first of all upon the condition in which man is placed by the fall in Adam. Man is already lost. In proof of this we need only refer to the saying of the Master himself, "The Son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost."—Matt. xviii. 11; Luke xix. 10. Jesus did not come to keep men from being lost; he came to save men who were already lost. When the Scriptures speak of men as being lost, they mean that men are sinful and depraved, or dead in sin and justly condemned, already condemned, and exposed to the wrath of God. Man is under the curse of the law already, and already has the sentence of death been passed upon him. We desire to insist upon and emphasize this. One of the ideas implied in the question which has perplexed our brother is that men are not yet lost, but are in danger of being so. We cannot too earnestly combat this theory, because it is a denial of the Savior's own testimony as quoted above.

The question is not, Whose fault is it if a man is lost by-and-by? There is no room for this question, seeing that man is now lost. But if the question be asked, Whose fault is it that man is now lost? we answer upon Bible testimony that sin, his own sin, is the cause of his lost and condemned condition. "By one man's disobedience many were made sinners."—Rom. v. 19. "By the offense of one judgment came upon all men to condemnation."—Rom. v. 18. "By one man's offense death reigned by one."—Romans v. 17. "Through the offense of one many be dead."—Rom. v. 15. "By one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned."—Rom. v. 12. "Sin hath reigned unto death."—Rom. v. 21. We might refer to many more portions of the word, but surely enough has been quoted to convince all who hold the word of God in reverence that man is fallen, lost, condemned, and already lost, and that sin is the cause.

We might pause here, and say that the question is fully answered, Whose fault is it if men are lost finally? It has been shown from Bible testimony that sin alone is responsible; and this sin is man's transgression against the law of God. We say that we might pause here, and claim that the question proposed to our brother has been fully answered; but we desire to consider one or two other matters which are also connected with this subject.

The idea is so ingrained in the minds of men that man is not lost yet, that he is in a state of probation, that his future destiny depends upon what use he shall make of this state of probation, and that somehow man has a claim upon God to give him what is called a chance to be saved, and that God is unjust and unkind if he does not give to every man a chance to save himself, if it be by no more than simply accepting an offer of salvation, that we trust that we will be excused if we pursue the theme a little farther. Most of these ideas enter into the question, Whose fault is it if any man is not saved?

If, as we have seen, man is already condemned and lost, he is not in a state of probation, and his future destiny does not therefore depend upon what use he shall make of his time and opportunities. Still farther, if man is justly condemned for sin, then it follows that God is under no obligation to man in any sense of the word, and he is not unkind and unjust if he does not give to man any chance (as it is called) to either be saved or save himself. If it be true that all have sinned, and come short of the glory of God, then justice can only demand the execution of the penalty announced in the law against sin. That penalty is everywhere in the Scriptures declared to be death,

If man has violated the law of his Maker, and incurred the penalty, death, what obligation can God be under to save that man, or to give him a chance to be saved? Indeed and in truth, after man had sinned, the God against whom he had sinned might have left all men to perish, and no stain of injustice would ever have marred the immaculate holiness of his throne. Sin lay at the door, and no man could plead exemption from its penalty. Aside from the infallible testimony of the Scriptures, every christian experience teaches the truth of the just condemnation of the sinner. In this experience the question of the heart is not how God can justly condemn the sinner, but how can God be just and save the sinner. The justice of our God is magnified when by reason of sin men are condemned and perish. His justice and holiness would have still been magnified had he left all men to perish. No fault could have been laid to his charge.

If men have a right appreciation of the truths which we have thus briefly stated, instead of asking whose fault it is if men are lost, they will begin to ask about the wonderful grace and mercy that could save anybody. Paul had once been in a condition of mind concerning himself which led him to believe that it would be the fault of Jehovah if such a good man as he were lost; but the time came when he could only magnify the grace of God for saving a sinner like him. We trust that those whose questions confused the mind of our brother may by the grace of God come to magnify great grace in their own salvation. We trust also that what we have written may help set the matter in a clearer light before our brother himself. We shall have to leave the text referred to for consideration, if the Lord will, at some future time.

EPHESIANS VI. 12; MATTHEW V. 23--26.

"For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places."

It is highly important that the nature of the christian warfare should be well understood by those who are called to be soldiers of the cross; and the inspired apostle has been very particular in pointing out for their instruction the enemies they are to confront, the cause of the war, the manner of combat, all the necessary panoply of the warriors, the discipline of the army, certainty of ultimate victory, how achieved, &c. In this connection the apostle treats on the relative duties devolving on christians as citizens of the world, in common with their fellow-men, which are not invalidated by their connection with the church of God. Among these he has noticed the abiding obligation of wives to their husbands, and husbands to their wives; of children to their parents, and parents to children; of servants to their masters, and of masters to their servants; none of these relations or obligations being changed or abridged in the least by our conversion to christianity or allegiance to Christ as our spiritual King; for his kingdom being spiritual, and not of this world, does not interfere with the policy of civil governments. As a good and sufficient reason why the saints in their religious capacity should not make war upon the established laws which regulate our relative duties as members of the human family, the apostle shows in our text that it would be incompatible with the nature of their warfare. "For we wrestle not against flesh and blood." We struggle not as christians to dissolve the rights, duties, or the privileges of wives, husbands, parents, children, servants or masters; such a contest would be one of flesh and blood, in which we are not as christians called to be engaged. If our Master's kingdom were of this world then would his servants fight, aye, fight, or wrestle against flesh and blood; but as it is, we are to make war neither upon the persons, property, privileges nor characters of our fellow-men; a nobler cause is ours. We are marshalled against the spiritual wickedness of high places, and our armor is adapted only to the peculiar kind of warfare to which we are called. Our weapons are not carnal, as they would require to be if designed for fighting against flesh and blood.

The helmet of salvation, the breastplate of righteousness, the shield of faith, the girdle of truth and the sword of the Spirit are incapable of being used for the injury of mankind; but in the spiritual conflict with sin and Satan they are mighty in bringing down the strongholds of the devil.

By principalities and powers, and the rulers of the darkness of this world, and spiritual wickedness in high places, against which the soldiers of Jesus are called to contend, we understand principalities to mean the organized antichristian confederacies against the cause and kingdom of our God and his Anointed, whether Pagan, Papal or Protestant, as well as the kingdom of darkness in its more general or universal acceptation, as embracing all whose names are not in the book of the Lamb, organized in their opposition to God, with Satan at their head. With all the organized forces of antichrist the saints are called to wrestle. The powers of darkness are all brought to bear against the gospel, whether these powers be hidden in the horns of the dragon, or of the seven headed beast, or the two horns which were like a lamb, or in that power which should give life to and be developed in the image of the beast. We, the christian church, wrestle with all these powers whenever we meet with them; and we wrestle also with the powers of corruption in our own depraved nature, and with the temptations of the devil. These powers are all too potent for us; but we are made conquerors, and more than conquerors, over them all, through him that has loved us. By the rulers of the darkness of this world we may understand,

1. All the princes, potentates and legislators of this world who interfere with ecclesiastical matters in any way or shape.

2. All those teachers of divinity who regard the religion of Jesus Christ as a mere science, and who, by their machinery of Sunday schools, theological seminaries, tracts, &c., exert an influence in giving direction to the darkness of this world, which they call light.

3. They include all the presidents, directors, executive boards and agents of all voluntary religious societies. All these in general, together with an antichristian clergy in particular, are rulers of the darkness of this world; and all are brought to bear against the cause of truth and righteousness, and all the children of God have to wrestle with them. By spiritual wickedness we understand that kind of wickedness which has to do with religious profession, in distinction from that which consists in a mere development of the depravity of the human heart, where no pretense is made to religion; and by high places, we understand unauthorized ecclesiastical councils, synods, presbyteries, conventions, associations, &c., where power is usurped over the heritage of the Lord, or the peculiar prerogatives of Christ are assumed by men. And we also regard the high places of civil authority, whether thrones, parliaments, congresses or state governments, both legislative and executive, as being included, when they interfere with the institutions of the church of God.

Such, in short, are our views of the passage proposed for our comments; and the closing remarks of the apostle in this epistle to the Ephesians, we think, go to confirm the view we have taken of the text. May we all take the admonition contained in this sixth chapter, from the 13th to the 18th verse inclusive, and fight the good fight, finish our course with joy and receive the crown of righteousness which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give on that day to all who love his appearing.

The passage in Matthew v. 23–26, is found in the discourse of our Lord to his disciples on the mountain. With them our Lord retired from the multitude, and opened his mouth and taught the disciples exclusively; and the 5th, 6th and 7th chapters of Matthew contain a record of the instructions then and there given. It will be observed that he was himself at this time with his disciples, under that law which he had come to fulfill in all its jots and tittles, and to suffer its penalties, and ultimately to redeem his people from its curse and dominion, that he might set up his spiritual kingdom. Until this work was accomplished his disciples as well as himself were required to observe and perform the service which the law required; and that, in the exceeding broadness of the commandment, as extending to the thoughts and intents of the heart. As being angry with a brother, in the spirit of the law, disqualified the Israelite for offering gifts on the altar, until the evil was put away, so we learn that in the order of the spiritual kingdom of Christ no member can profitably or acceptably exercise his gift in the church of God for the edification of the saints while he is angry with his brother. Whatever may be his gift, he is to leave it unoccupied until he takes the steps required of him to effect a reconciliation, and then come and offer his gift. While the matter of difficulty is between the offended and the offender, the one stands in the attitude of an adversary to the other. In the first steps of labor he is "in the way with him." Take heed lest the adversary, or offended brother, deliver thee to the judge, or church, and the church deliver thee to the officer, or discipline, and thou be cast into prison, or your liberty in the church taken away, by withdrawal of church fellowship, and when this is done the offender can enjoy no liberty in the church until he has made perfect satisfaction, or canceled the last farthing.

now my thoughts were turned in a different direction to what they ever had been. I had new ideas and new desires. I desired above all things to be baptized, and be numbered with those I believed to be the people of God. I would read my Bible, and go, every opportunity I had, to hear the Old Baptists preach; and when I would read and hear the servants of God tell of the beauty of baptism, it concurring with my desires, the exclamation was, "O that I were worthy! how readily I would submit." I would go to meeting thinking, Surely I will offer myself to the church, and let the church decide my case, and that will settle it. I went time and again with the same resolution, but would go away with a guilty conscience. But the time came, which was the third Saturday in July, 1874, when the Lord gave me strength to go to New Garden Old School Baptist Church, and in a poor way relate what I hoped had been the dealings of God with me. I was received for baptism, and the same evening, together with my mother and a brother, we were baptized by Elder Allen Sisk in the fellowship of the Old Baptist Church.

I now come to record one of the darkest periods of my life. It seemed, immediately after I was baptized, I was led into the wilderness, where darkness was so great that it shut out every ray of light, and the tempter began to tell me what an awful hypocrite I was. Finally night came, and the very moment I law down upon my bed to rest the pain increased, and it seemed if there had been a fifty pound weight lying on my breast, it could not have been heavier than the weight that was on my mind at that time. The night was spent in sighs and groans, and tossing myself about in bed. Some time in the night (I do not think I was asleep; if I was, I was conscious of my troubles) there appeared one of the muddiest places I had ever seen; I never saw anything to excel it for filth; and there appeared in the midst of it a very small stream of water, as clear as crystal. As the stream got larger it all disappeared, and I was conscious again of my surroundings. Since then, this vision (if I might call it a vision) has been a comfort to me in my meditations. I have thought the mud (as the water did not change the mud, neither did the mud seem to have any effect on the water) represented the flesh, and the troubled state of mind, and the water was the grace of God, or that pure water flowing out from the throne of God and the Lamb. Next morning I arose feeling O so wearied and disconsolate. My wife prepared breakfast, but when I came to the table my appetite, as well as my sleep, had failed me. I could not sleep nor eat. I told my wife I did not think I could go to my meeting. I left the house, went out into the cornfield, and dropped on my knees and tried to pray. About all I remember saying was, "Lord, have mercy." I arose, went back to the house, and sat down by the table on which my Bible was lying. I picked it up, hardly realizing what I was doing, and without any effort upon my part it opened at the tenth chapter of Matthew. The first words my eyes fell on were in the 38th verse, which reads, "And he that taketh not his cross and followeth after me, is not worthy of me." I did not read another word, neither did that ease my aching heart; but it produced a willingness to go to my meeting. When I got to the meeting-house the congregation was gathering. I felt so miserable and unworthy I did not feel like going up among my brethren, so I took a seat to myself. Elder W. T. Brown came to me, and greeted me with, "How do you feel this morning, brother Newton?" Language was too poor to describe to him how I did feel. He tried to comfort me by telling me how Satan tempts the little ones of our Redeemer's kingdom. Brother Sisk said a hypocrite never had any fears of being deceived. But none of that did me any good. My Beloved was gone, and they could not tell me where he was. I sought him on my bed at night, in the secret chambers. I went about the city and in the broad ways seeking my Beloved. The watchmen tried to tell me where he was; but I had to pass all of these; and the third day, in the evening, about sunset, I found him whom my soul loveth; but it was when the mist of darkness was rolled away. Then he appeared as the one altogether lovely. The great waves of trouble ceased to dash against my little bark and threaten my destruction. Here was a soul at perfect rest. O how calm my feelings were! It did not seem I ever should get so low in the valley of despond again; but alas! the warfare had just begun. I am there a great portion of my time. If I ever had any impressions to tell, or rather try to tell, of the beauties of Christ and his kingdom, it began with my experience. The impression bore with such weight on my mind that it caused a trembling and a dread; yet it seemed it would be a relief to my mind to make the attempt. I thought that perhaps every one that had an experience of grace at first had a great zeal for the cause, and a desire to tell of God's mercy, and it might be the impression would leave me after awhile. But from the time I was baptized it seemed some of my brethren knew my impression; yet I never intimated to them that I ever thought of such a thing as preaching. I was very timid, and would argue with myself that I was ignorant and unlearned; yet that did not remove the weight off my mind. As best I can express my thoughts, it appeared that I had to try to preach; yet it seemed away in the future; and when I would be called on, I would refuse; but my conscience would condemn me for refusing, and at the same time I would think I was not able for the task. So time moved on until Sunday after the third Saturday in February, 1879, when I made my first effort. I read the language of David in First Samuel xvii. 29, "Is there not a cause?" Just think of a poor, ignorant boy taking one of the greatest texts in the Bible. From my effort there, I hardly know how my brethren kept from silencing me then; but they encouraged me to go on, and it seemed, if possible, they would have put words into my mouth. I certainly did (and do yet) realize my weakness, and it was through much fear and trembling that I continued to try to preach. Finally my ordination was called for, and on the third Saturday in December, 1880, I was ordained to the full work of the gospel ministry by Elders Isaac Odell, W. T. Brown, Allen Sisk and R. M. Ogle, all of them sound and orderly walking Baptists and able defenders of the truth. Old brother Odell has since gone to his reward. I was, soon after my ordination, called to take the care of Mt. Pleasant Church, Clay Co., Mo., and served them with the ability God gave me, if my memory serves me right, eleven years. I have tried to serve from two to four churches ever since. I have the care of four churches now. I have never used flattering words to tickle the fancy of the carnal mi[illegible] nor modified the truth so as to get the applause of the unregenerate. God's servants are all made willing, for they feel a dispensation of the gospel of Christ is laid upon them, and "woe is unto me if I preach not the gospel." It pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save the believer, or the church. It takes every principle of the doctrine of Christ to make all the counsel of God, and I believe God gives each of his servants the ability to preach all that he requires of them. Whether my preaching has been edifying to the church, my brethren who are acquainted with me know. My prayer is that God will keep me by his power, that I may never disgrace the cause that is dearer to me than everything else on earth. O how often I have thought what a deplorable condition I would be in if I were to be deprived of the fellowship of my brethren.

This poor, imperfect letter is too long now, but I have only given the outlines of what I hope have been the dealings of God with me. If you see fit to publish it, I want to say to my brethren, Praise God for his wonderful works with the children of men; for his mercy endureth forever.

H. W. NEWTON.

GARFIELD, Ark., April 16, 1895.

DEAR BROTHER BARTLEY:—I will try, if the dear Lord will direct my mind, to write some of what I hope have been my travels from nature to grace. How blessedly is the story told of the work of the Spirit in the favored sinner's experience who is called by the grace of God, of the comforting revelation of the dear Lamb of God, and of the heavenly effects and fruits felt and brought forth in God's elect, who know the grace of God in truth. It is the marvelous grace in Jehovah in making known his salvation to a poor sinner like me. When the set time is come, not to propose, but call by grace, Jehovah the Spirit sendeth forth his arrows as lightnings.—Zech. ix. 14. Not an arrow misseth its mark, for the archer is the Almighty.—Job vi. 4. No armor that the sinner has arrayed himself in is of any avail; he cannot ward off the piercing arrows of the Lord. No matter how much he may have hardened himself in sin, and have flattered himself that he was proof against all the lightnings of the thunder of God in the law, God causeth the arrows of his quiver to enter into his reins.—Lam. iii. 13. Who was more sinful, more hardened, than I? With others I ran in pursuit of fleshly lusts, fulfilling the desires of the flesh and of the mind, by nature a child of wrath, even as others; but in the time appointed the Holy Ghost sent forth an arrow that hit me, even me, the chief of sinners. O what amazing grace, what love divine, what tender mercy, this was the proof of! I was a stricken sinner. As I review all the dealings of the Lord of hosts with my soul, how sovereign are all his acts of grace, and how distinguishing his love and mercy to a vile sinner like me! O that I could love and praise the precious and glorious name of God my Redeemer for his marvelous loving-kindness to my soul! The Lord wounded me. His electing love and sovereign mercy singled me out, and I truly found his arrows sharp in my heart; and I felt in my soul, O! what a sinner I am, a rebel, an enemy of God, a hell-deserving sinner. "God is against me." "The arrows of the Almighty are within me, the poison whereof drinketh up my spirit; the terrors of God do set themselves in array against me." As Job thus expresses himself, so I found it. That Scripture, "Boast not thyself of to-morrow, for thou knowest not what a day may bring forth," dashed me to the earth. My contemplated life in the pleasures of sin was blighted. My sins, so many and so great, as sharp arrows of the law wounded me. I was stricken through and through by my sins. The law of God to me, a transgressor, I found to be unto death. It was the ministration of condemnation and death in my soul. My sin, taking occasion by the commandment, deceived me, and by it slew me.—Rom. vii. 11. Sin revived, and I died. The commandment which was ordained unto life, I found to be unto death. I was stricken—stricken by the Lord. I felt that I must perish, for the arrows of eternal justice pierced me, and the poison thereof drank up my spirit. They were deadly arrows indeed. Jehovah's just and holy condemnation convicted my soul of guilt; his terrors made me sore afraid. I said in my heart, Hell and the damnation of hell is surely my destination, and justly my portion. O what pain and grief possessed my soul! I remember one day when in the midst of my distress I sat in anguish of mind pondering over my awful condition, so vile and abominable did I feel. I was such a mass of sin that I was well nigh plunged into utter despair, and felt there could be no mercy for such a vile transgressor. On every hand I could see that which brought my sins to view, and the law that I had transgressed poured forth its curses upon my sinful head. What was I to do to assuage my wounded heart, filled with anguish because of my sin? My poor heart fainted within me. Thus the Holy Spirit made me know my lost and undone condition. While in this state little did I know the mercy, the rich mercy, in store for my soul. The wounds which God's truth made in my heart I could not heal, and I judged they were forerunners of my eternal destruction, and that now the Lord was about to destroy me utterly. The ways of the Lord are hidden from our view. His ways and thoughts are higher than ours. I could not see how mercy could reach me. How could the high and holy One that inhabiteth eternity pardon my sins? But when Jesus found me O what a revelation of mercy and salvation I beheld in him, while on my knees there, in my grief and wounds! A sinner stricken with sin, with many arrows deep infixed I was on my knees, imploring the Lord to pardon my sins, when Jesus, the dear Savior, was discovered to me. There was presented in my mind a vision of Christ crucified. I saw by faith the dear Redeemer on the cross; and while I gazed upon him a voice in my soul said, "Salvation is of the Lord." Then for the first time was salvation revealed in my soul, as one perishing. My heart went forth in cries and sighs and bitter weeping unto Jesus to save me. I saw indeed that he was the one who had himself been hurt by the archers. In his side he bare and in his hands and feet the cruel scars. Never shall I forget the sight which the Holy Spirit gave me of the crucifixion of the Son of God. I saw the dear Savior extended on the cross in agonies and blood. It was Immanuel, our Lord Jesus Christ, who was the one that was hurt by the archers. He was stricken by the arrows of eternal justice. "For the transgressions of my people was he stricken."—Isa. liii. 8. While thus at the feet of the crucified one, longing for some word, some glance to heal my painful wounds and save me from my sin and misery, I thought the dear Redeemer looked down upon me from the cross with such compassion and tender love in his countenance that it seemed to my soul that he was with gentle force satiating the darts that lacerated my poor heart. I felt to cast my all on him, to repose myself alone in his sufferings and blood to save me from my perishing condition, to heal all my wounds. O the depth of the riches of his grace to me! O that I could utter his praises! He looked with such ravishing love upon me, and said in my heart, "I suffered for thee; I did this for thee." The arrows that stuck fast in me, his own kind hand of salvation drew them forth, and healed and bade me live. O what mercy to a vile sinner like me! What comfort and rejoicing filled my heart! My wounds were healed, my pain and anguish were gone, and I believed in him by the mighty power of God. A beseeching cry went forth from my heart to him who sees in secret, and knows all our thoughts, which are vanity in his sight, "Create in me a clean heart, and renew a right spirit within me." Since then, with few associates, in remote and silent woods I wander, poor and afflicted, a disobedient child, if one at all.

Your brother in a blessed hope through grace,

S. P. RICHMOND.

TOUCHET, Wash., June 11, 1895.

G. BEEBE'S SON—DEAR BROTHER IN THE LORD:—To-day I took in two dollars and fifty cents in money, the first I have taken in for three months or more. Two dollars of it I inclose to you, to be credited on my subscription to the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. I hope I shall be able to catch up and get ahead on my subscription before the close of the present year. The inclosed pays up to the present year. I may be able to send you a little more in a month or two. I hope you will not have to encumber yourself with extra expense on account of the negligence of our brethren, as well as unfortunate ones like myself who have not been and are not yet able to get around with the pay in the proper time. I am greatly surprised at brethren allowing the paper continued after the time for which they had paid for it, and then refusing to pay for it because they did not order it continued. We might expect worldlings to do such things, who are not strictly honest, but we can hardly account for a brother doing such a thing, unless it be gross ignorance of what is right and honest between man and man. We would be sorry to believe there are many such on your subscription list. I have been a reader of the SIGNS since the year 1850, and have taken it as a subscriber since 1854, the most of the time, and hope it is God's will to enable me to take it through the remaining days I may have to remain on earth, which cannot, according to the course of nature, be many years. I am pleased with your editorial staff. I believe the Lord's hand was with you in the selection; and I hope the SIGNS OF THE TIMES may continue to be what it always has been. May the Lord be with you, is my prayer.

Yours in hope,

R. CUMMINS.

LOS GATOS, Cal., June 10, 1895.

MR. B. L. BEEBE—My dear and esteemed friend in the faith:—I have heard with pain your Macedonian cry for help, but until now have been unable to respond; but now I feel thankful, I trust, that the blessed Lord has graciously enabled me in my feebleness to remit my dues to help you in your distress. You will therefore find $1.50 inclosed. I wish I could double the amount. You have been very kind to me, and I feel confident that the Lord has put it into your heart to remember and pity me in the past. It would indeed be a sorrowful day to the people of God if the SIGNS OF THE TIMES should ever be obliged on account of the apathy and delinquency of its patrons to suspend publication for even one week. But I entertain an abiding hope and trust that he who knows the end from the beginning, and who will do all his pleasure, and none can hinder, will never suffer the venerable SIGNS OF THE TIMES, which has never been found wanting in fearless and unwavering defense of the truth, to go down so long as it continues in that defense or time endures.

Hoping that the present political oppression and darkness may be lifted before our once-prosperous country shall go down in financial and social gloom, and that by the help of the Lord you may be able to weather the storm, I beg to remain, as ever, your sincere friend and well-wisher for both your spiritual and temporal prosperity,

HENRY S. STIPP.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

ON Monday, June 17th, 1895, at 9:40 p. m., at the age of 46 years, 9 months and 14 days, our beloved sister, Mary Parker, ended her weary warfare here, was released from her sufferings, and entered into everlasting rest and bliss.

It is not our purpose to write an extended obituary, as brother Durand will shortly prepare a suitable memorial. When the end came it found her anxious and ready to go. The immediate cause of her death was a cancerous tumor. She underwent an operation for the same at a hospital in Philadelphia last August, which was successfully removed, but it shortly afterward returned, and developed rapidly. On Sept. 5th she was taken to the home of our noble, generous and self-sacrificing sister, Mrs. M. M. Rounsavell, at Warwick, N. Y., who had visited and cared for her at the home of her brother, Mr. John Parker, New Holland, Ohio, and later was brought by her to the hospital, and finally to her comfortable home in Warwick, arriving there on Sept. 5th, where all that loving hearts and willing hands could do was done to make her last days as comfortable and pleasant as possible. As the end approached the sufferings of the loved one were very great, but were borne with that quiet submission to the will of God which had characterized her through all the weary and painful years of her sufferings. Her cheerfulness and trust in her God and Savior throughout all her years of suffering was truly sublime and wonderful, and proved how wonderful is the grace of God in supporting his children under the most trying circumstances. With the psalmist she could say, "My flesh and my heart faileth; but God is the strength of my heart, and my portion forever."

On the morning of the last day sister Rounsavell said to her, "Do you know that you are dying?" Sister Mary replied, "Do you think so?" Sister Rounsavell replied, "Yes, Mary." Sister Mary then clasped her hands and exclaimed, "I'm so thankful!" As cold water was given her to slake her intense thirst she would say, "I shall soon drink at the everlasting fountain." As no opiates had been administered to her since she came east, her mind was strong and clear until about thirty minutes before the end came, when to all appearances she sank into an unconscious state, which continued until her ransomed spirit took its flight to the God who gave it.

Funeral services were held at the Old School Baptist meeting-house in Warwick on Wednesday p. m., which were conducted by Elders Silas H. Durand and Benton Jenkins, Elder Wm. L. Beebe being on a visit to Canada. At four o'clock p. m. of the same day sister Rounsavell started with the mortal remains of the loved one, expecting to arrive with them at New Holland, Ohio, at six o'clock p. m. the following day, where another funeral service was appointed at 10:30 a. m. on Friday, and the body consigned to its last earthly resting place, by the side of her beloved father and mother, Elder John Parker and wife, and amid the scenes of her early childhood and riper years.

BENTON JENKINS.

AT the request of our sister I send you the obituary of her daughter, Mrs. Etta Thompson, wife of W. A. Thompson.

Mrs. Thompson was born to Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Harvey, March 29th, 1875. She was married to W. A. Thompson, March 22d, 1893, and died at her home in Monroe Co., W. Va., March 31st, 1895. She was not a member of any church, but from the evidence she left we hope that she is now enjoying the presence of Jesus, where pain and death cannot enter. She regretted to die only because she would leave her husband and friends in trouble for her. She said she knew that Jesus was her blessed Savior. What better anchor could one have? Jesus is all the Savior one needs. Then, friends, dry your tears, and think of her only as an angel, or as one gone from the evil of this world. Though she was beautiful, gentle and loving here, she is far more beautiful there. Could you, fond husband, see the light of her face, glowing with the presence of Jesus, you could not wish her back. Though she was the pleasure of your life, it would be far more pleasure to see her basking in the sunshine of Jesus than suffering here with that terrible consumption, which for ten months was weaning her from earth, and preparing her to say, "I do not care to die."

She leaves a husband and little son, mother, brothers and sisters, with many fond friends, to mourn their loss; but we hope that our loss is her eternal gain.

S. E. BROYLES.

WIKEL, W. Va.

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES—DEAR BRETHREN:—By request of the children it becomes my duty to ask you to publish the obituary notice of my wife's mother, Asenath J. Miller, a dear sister in Christ, who was called from these scenes of sorrow and tribulation May 28th, 1895.

Her parents came here from New York in February, 1827. She was born near this place, May 28th, 1827, and was sixty-eight years old on the day of her death. In October, 1845, she became the wife of Rufus C. Miller, who departed from this life Nov. 10th, 1885. They united with the Abbington Old School Baptist Church July 26th, 1863. She had been a sufferer for more than thirty years from a disease which caused her death, but by grace divine was enabled to bear her suffering without murmuring, and since the death of her husband had often expressed a desire to depart. She leaves five children, who mourn their loss of a kind and loving mother; also several brothers and sisters, who were deeply attached to her by natural ties, and the church of which she was a worthy and beloved member for many years. Although she was very weak, and unable to speak a word distinctly, a short time before her death she was given strength to speak to those around her of the precious hope she felt in Jesus as her Savior.

Her funeral was largely attended. Elder D. M. Vail spoke to the comfort of the living from the words, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

PICTORIAL HISTORY

OF THE

UNITED STATES.

By James D. McCabe.

This work is no dry mass of details—no bombastic effort to inflame the national pride, but a vivid and brilliant narrative of the events of our history, from the discovery of the American Continent down to thepresent time. It gives a most interesting account of the Indians of North America, from the time of the coming of the white men. The voyages of Columbus and explorations and discoveries of the different nations of Europe are related with graphic power. Every step of our colonial history is traced with patient fidelity, and the sources of those noble and, we trust, enduring institutions, which have made our country free and great, are shown with remarkable clearness. Then follows a clear and succinct account of our great Struggle for Independence, and the establishment of the Federal Union—the events of our career from the close of the Revolution to the administration of Harrison.

The work is printed from plain, new type, on fine calendered paper, and comprised in one octavo volume of 960 pages. It is splendidly embellished with nearly 500 fine engravings, embracing battles and other historical scenes, portraits of distinguished men, views of our principal cities, &c., &c.

Bound in Fine Silk Cloth, Plain Edges, $2.00, Post-paid.

THE EVERLASTING TASK FOR ARMINIANS

By Elder William Gadsby, late of Manchester, England. Many thousands of these pamphlets have been scattered throughout England and America, and read with intense interest by the lovers of the truth, and still the demand has increased to such a degree as to induce us to present to the public this edition, which we will send (postage paid by us) to any post-office address in the United States or Canada at the following rates, viz: a single copy for 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00; 25 copies for $2.00; 50 copies for $3.00; 100 copies for $5.00. PRECIOUS JESUS.

Jesus, how sweet thou art,
So full of love and grace!
Take me unto thy heart;
O let me see thy face.
Smile, and my fears shall all depart,
Sweet peace and joy shall fill my heart.

O Christ, thou art my Love,
My soul is drawn to thee!
Enthroned in heaven above,
I long with thee to be.
O my soul's hope, I thee adore,
And want to love thee more and more.

Wonderful is thy love,
Beauteous is thy face;
Thou meek art as the dove,
Abundant is thy grace.
Thou art so excellent, so fair,
There's none that can with thee compare.

My heart by love is won,
By that dear love of thine;
O Jesus, fairest One,
Round thee my heart entwine!
O let me never from thee rove,
But ever dwell in thy sweet love.

Jesus, thy mercy's sweet
To a poor worm like me;
In thee I am complete,
From sin and wrath set free.
Thy blood did all my sins atone,
Faultless I stand before the throne.

When wandering far from thee
I was by grace sought out;
Grace made me bow the knee,
I could not do without
Thy mercy sweet. To me 'twas given,
Which raised my soul from hell to heaven.

When drawn I came to thee,
Thou didst not cast me out;
From sin I was made free,
My foes were put to rout.
Now 'neath the shadow of thy wings
My soul in peace and comfort sings.

WHAT I AM AND WHERE I HAVE BEEN.

I'm a sinner, all vile and polluted,
With no goodness in which to appear,
Unless the dear Savior has wrought me a robe
Of his righteousness spotless and pure.

I am travel-stained, footsore and weary,
Often thirsty and hungry for bread,
With the pathway all hedged up before me,
And clouds lowering dark o'er my head.

I've been down to the foot of the mountains,
All enwrapped and entangled with weeds,
And no voice in the desolate silence
Came to answer my desperate needs.

I've been where my feet had no standing,
In a pit filled with miry clay,
And my garments are soiled and bespattered
With the rubbish and filth by the way.

I have wandered around in thick darkness,
Like the valley and shadow of death,
With billows and waves dashing o'er me,
And treacherous quicksands beneath.

I have cried in my sorrow and anguish,
With spirit all broken and sore,
Hath God forgotten to be gracious?
Are his mercies clean gone evermore?

I've been often cast down and discouraged,
Yet never forsaken outright;
For before overwhelmed in the darkness
There has come a small glimmer of light.

And I sometimes dare hope, when earth's sorrows,
Its sins and temptations are o'er,
To share with the ransomed in fullness of joy,
Where are pleasures forevermore.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A SABBATH DAY'S JOURNEY.

The declaration of the apostle that "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine," &c., should be received in all the fullness of its import. When "all" is mentioned in the Bible, it clearly means every one—every one of which the inspired writer has in view. If we conclude that portions of the inspired writings, either in the Old or the New Testaments, are unprofitable or unnecessary, merely because it appears to us not to be so, then do we greatly err, and fall short of the solemn truth of Jesus' words, that "They are they that testify of me." I often go back in sad remembrance to a time when I did read the Scriptures merely as pages of history, or as a performance, for the merit of which I would reap a reward, and would often look upon some expressions as superfluous; for instance, in the expression of our Savior, "Verily, verily, I say unto you," &c., my own mind decided that one "verily" was sufficient. But I am glad that I now believe that every word in the Bible was placed there (by its compilers) because the Lord ordained that it should read just as it does, and that each scriptural passage has its special significance, and indeed, also, every separate word in the passage. Each literal event or circumstance as recorded in the Bible points to its antitype in the christian experience. And as Jesus is revealed in the heart's exercises, so at the proper time and in the proper place the literal circumstance or event appears in that exercise as a testimony to which the troubled or glad heart may witness. I love to think of natural Israel (with her types and shadows, her laws and ceremonies, her wanderings, and all that pertained to her travel) as in everything typical of the work of grace in the heart of spiritual Israel. "Pay me that thou owest," is a just demand of the law to every one who has become its debtor. This was required of the carnal Israelite, and because of his inability to fulfill the requirements of even one point of the law, he was adjudged guilty under the whole law. Jesus, having come in our flesh, possessing a full measure of grace, was able to fulfill every requirement of the law to which we were subject; and having the right to redeem, because he was the husband of the guilty one, he freed his people from under the law, bringing them into the liberty of the gospel. Under the Jewish dispensation the laws were rigid and binding. Special laws governed special occasions, and especially strict and binding were the laws governing the Sabbath. "Six days shalt thou labor and do all thy work. But the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work," &c.—Exod. xx. 9, 10. Sabbath signifies rest, or a cessation from all labor. As God rested upon the seventh day from all his labors, having created and brought into existence and manifestation all things necessary for his purpose, so he blessed and sanctified the day. Because in it he rested from all his labor, therefore it became the Sabbath. The literal observance of the seventh day as a day of rest was kept by the Jews only. We have no record that the surrounding nations had any law governing them to observe a seventh day as a holy and sanctified Sabbath. It is well to keep in mind the difference between the literal Jewish Sabbath (the day which the Lord blessed and sanctified, and which was strictly observed in the legal dispensation) and the day which is now observed and erroneously called by the religious world "The Sabbath." Not only have they ignored the literal Sabbath of the Jews, but without authority they have instituted a day, other than the seventh day, which like all their creature or idol worship, they have themselves set apart, and are actually doing more work on that day than on any one of the six others. And even the type they have set up holds good in setting forth an entire want of knowledge of the spiritual import of the true Sabbath, or rest, which remaineth to God's people by the course they so ignorantly follow. There were some in the days of the apostles who set up an altar "To the unknown God," and to them Paul said, "Therefore whom ye ignorantly worship, him declare I unto you." But they of to-day profess to worship the God of Abraham, while in truth they know him not, neither Abraham, nor his seed, nor the rest (or Sabbath) into which they (Abraham and his seed) have entered.

"Sabbath day." The Jewish day began at sunset, and ended at the next sunset, following the circle of time, as is recorded, "And the evening and the morning were the first day," &c. This applies to all the seven days alike, as setting forth the ushering in of the night or law dispensation, which continued until the rising of the Sun of Righteousness. Not a new thing, for its reflection shed a lustre through the long, dark night. But its manifestation in the eastern horizon blotted out the old heavens and earth, and a new heaven and a new earth was created. The gospel day shone resplendent, a day of rest and peace, a veritable Sabbath. Six days had been spent under the law, six days of hard labor and weary toil. And now the dead works, the laws and the ceremonies, have ceased and are buried, as was Moses buried by the Lord, and no man knows to this day where he was buried, neither hath any man seen his grave. In the great sacrifice upon Calvary a spiritual Joshua leadeth the hosts of Israel out of the wilderness into a land of milk and honey, into the gospel pasture, where he "maketh his flock to rest at noon, the rest that remaineth to the people of God. In contrasting the six days of labor and toil under the law with the seventh day, or day of rest, and in considering the real substance which it sets forth in type, let us enter into the secret chambers of the heart exercised by grace, and in the working out through a daily experience that which was wrought in by the power of the Spirit, and perchance we may find the spiritual significance of "A Sabbath day's journey." Literally a journey always suggests travel from one place to another, while the travel in the christian journey implies the going out of one condition into another. A day's journey under the Jewish law was about twenty-four miles, meaning a weary travel from sun to sun. But the "Sabbath day's journey" is neither suggestive of toil or labor, but rather of restful exercise, it being less than a mile. Indeed all that pertains to the Sabbath, points to rest, not only of body, but mind and soul and spirit. The works of the creature are not confined to physical force alone, but to mental strain as well. The body is subject to the decisions of the mind, therefore the body is an instrument under control of the mind, the mind being the active working power. In the working out of salvation which God has wrought in his people by the spirit of grace, the whole of the seven days is experienced. First, the six days of labor under the law, and afterwards the seventh day, made holy by the presence of our Redeemer King, who having come in our flesh has set up his kingdom in our hearts. Each one of us may readily call to mind those dreadful days of unrest and anguish after we had been brought into a knowledge of our totally depraved nature; how sin became unto us exceeding sinful, and how we now hated and loathed that which before we rolled as a sweet morsel under our tongue; and how we resorted to every means within our reach to extricate ourselves from our sad and awful dilemma, working all the day long, accomplishing the full day's journey, within fearful proximity to the mutterings and thunderings of Sinai, and at night tossed upon a sleepless bed of sorrow for sin, with groanings unutterable, having in full view all the time the justice of our condemnation under the law, while all our efforts were futile to satisfy its demands. We remember, as each effort failed, how we resorted to other means, until we had gone through the whole six days of toil and sorrow. And as we came to the end of the sixth day we found the law was as rigid and relentless as on the morning of the first day. Like Moses, who at the age of one hundred and twenty years, "His eye was not dim, nor his natural force abated," we had sweated and worked and journeyed and fretted, until every creature effort was exhausted, and each had failed; yet the law remains unsatisfied and inexorable. Its natural force abated not at all, neither its eye grown dim. Our strength is all gone, we fall helpless and undone. Yet, like "As the hart panteth after the waterbrooks, so panteth my soul after thee, O God." And now, when all hope seems to be gone, every creature effort found useless, condemned already, black as the tents of Kedar, a guilty criminal, a vile transgressor, yet the cry comes out of a burdened heart, "Lord, save, I perish." Such a cry could not have come before, because the burdened one did not realize his perishing condition. But hark, "The vision of Obadiah. Thus saith the Lord God concerning Edom, We have heard a rumor from the Lord, and an ambassador is sent among the heathen. arise ye," &c. The ends of the earth having come to us, "We [now] see Jesus, who was made a little lower than the angels, for the suffering of death, crowned with glory and honor." With John, we see "The holy city, the new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband." Jesus reveals himself to us as an all-sufficient Redeemer, whose blood shed for us on Calvary cleanseth from all sin. We are now made to see clearly how all our sins are washed away in the blood of the Lamb, and every just demand of the law satisfied. That which we ourselves with carnal hands could not accomplish, and "what the law could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh, God sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin, condemned sin in the flesh, that the righteousness of law might be fulfilled in us, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit." This is glorious news, and this the heavenly rumor that comes from the Lord, as in the vision of Obadiah, concerning Edom. The sun has set upon the six days of labor. The law and the prophets were until John, and have now accomplished all that was in the mind of the Lord concerning them. The old legal heavens have departed and disappeared as a morning mist. The new heaven has appeared in the majesty and glory and peacefulness of the Sabbath morning, made glorious and bright by the presence of Jesus, who is our sun and our shield. In the winding up of that dark dispensation, when all things were being prepared, leading to the finished work on Calvary, the ordinance of the supper was instituted; and wherever or whenever it is observed by the Lord's people it is a solemn time. Jesus blessed the bread and brake it, emblematic of his broken body. He also blessed the wine and gave to his disciples. And after this solemn ordinance, it is recorded, "When they had sang an hymn they went out unto the mount of Olives." The distance between Jerusalem and the mount of Olives is the only record of "A Sabbath day's journey;" hence its significance. The mount of Olives is a place of weeping and sorrow, while Jerusalem is the "perfection of beauty, the joy of the whole earth." When king David fled from Absalom his son, he "went up by the ascent of Mount Olivet, and wept as he went up, and had his head covered, and he went barefoot, and all the people that were with him covered every man his head, and they went up weeping as they went up." On this mountain Christ wept over Jerusalem. From this mountain he ascended unto his Father, leaving behind the sorrowing disciples. Weeping and sorrow are therefore associated in our minds with the mount of Olives. While Jerusalem is the dwelling-place of God on the earth, as the old temple in Jerusalem was built for that purpose, so the antitype in the New Jerusalem was set up in the hearts of his people that he might dwell there. Now, whosoever dwelleth in Jerusalem is even in the presence of Jesus; for the glory of God does lighten the city, "And the Lamb is the light thereof." In the experience of the Lord's people, when the presence of Jesus is manifested unto them, they realize perfect peace. But alas! those precious moments are few and very short. While the gospel day is a day of rest unto the saints, yet it is full of sorrow and tribulation. A continual warfare is kept up, the flesh lusting against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh. This seems paradoxical, yet it is true. For while there is a continual sense of unrest, there is also a continuous and sure resting-place, "a covert from the storm," the day star of hope, established in the heart by faith. When we experimentally partake of and feed upon the broken body and spilt blood of our gracious Redeemer, as the emblematic supper typifies, we are in Jerusalem; and those are the few and short precious moments that we live in his presence and realize perfect rest and peace. But "when they had sung an hymn they went out unto the mount of Olives." How wonderfully sweet and precious are those delectable moments in the presence of Jesus in Jerusalem. And when they went out they went a Sabbath day's journey, to the mountain of sorrow and weeping. Truly the journey is short, but full of marrow and fatness, for we have seen Jesus, and in this short journey we feed upon the wonders of his love. Of a truth, then, the Sabbath day's journey is a transit of loving and grateful remembrance of the banquet of rich and heavenly food partaken of in the guest-chamber of our King. And when we have taken that short but precious journey, are we not prepared by an abundant grace, which has been ministered unto us, to ascend the mount of weeping? For every tear we shed for Jesus' sake, we realize that he also wept; and we also know that he took upon himself all our infirmities. Inasmuch as we are weak, and ignorant, and poor, and afflicted, and wretched, and miserable, and blind, so also did he become all things for us, "That we might be made the righteousness of God in him." To suffer for Jesus' sake is a consummation in our experience greatly to be desired, although the flesh ever shrinks from suffering. For, "If we suffer, we shall also reign with him." The Sabbath day's journey from the banqueting house of our heavenly Lover, to the mountain of weeping, it will be remembered, is a transition from the full fruition of God's matchless love, not to the valley of weeping in Achor, neither to the valley of weeping in Baca, but to the mountain of Olives, which represents a godly sorrow for sin. David wept on this mountain because of the treachery and want of filial love (because of sin) in that son whom he so dearly loved. It was godly sorrow for sin that caused Jesus to weep over Jerusalem, for the sins and iniquities of its people had become a stench in the nostrils of the Lord. The disciples no doubt wept with godly sorrow for the sin that bound them to the earth when the Savior had disappeared from the mount of Olives, and ascended to the Father, to be seen of them no more, so long as they remained in mortal flesh. As the gospel Sabbath implies a gospel rest, so the "Sabbath day's journey" is restful in the sweet assurances it gives of the heavenly inheritance, so dear and precious to the heart of each true believer.

GOD'S PROMISES TO HIS PEOPLE.

THIS afternoon I will try to comply with a request from sister Lucinda Patton to write for the SIGNS on the above subject. We seldom, if ever, read a chapter in the Scriptures without finding some of God's promises to his people recorded; but we can derive no comfort from them unless they are also written in our hearts. The Lord says, "I will put my laws into their mind, and write them in their hearts: and I will be to them a God, and they shall be to me a people: and they shall not teach every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord." God's ministers cannot teach his people anything that has not first been put into their mind and written in their hearts. This promise must be fulfilled before we can embrace any of his promises as ours, or joy in his goodness. The servants of the Lord can only tell us what the Spirit has first wrought in us. Only that "which we have heard, which we have seen with our eyes, which we have looked upon, and our hands have handled, of the Word of life," can we understand and embrace as our own; and unless we can see his promises fulfilled in our own experience we can draw no comfort from them; but when the Comforter takes these things of the Father and shows them unto us we live upon them. The Lord does not leave the teaching of his people to preachers. "And they all shall be taught of God." The anointing which we have received of the Father abides in us, and we need not that any man teach us; but this same anointing teaches us all things. The apostle, taught by this anointing, lived "in hope of eternal life, which God, that cannot lie, promised before the world began." The Lord declared the fulfillment of this promise when he said, "I will pour upon the house of David, and upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem, the spirit of grace and of supplications: and they shall look upon me whom they have pierced, and they shall mourn for him, as one mourneth for his only son, and shall be in bitterness for him, as one that is in bitterness for his first born."—Zech. xii. 10.

The spirit of grace and supplications is promised to none but the house of David and the inhabitants of Jerusalem. "For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." It is "sure to all the seed," and includes no others. When this spirit is poured upon the heirs of promise it enables them to see Jesus pierced by their sins. This spirit or life, being the light of men, reveals to them the corruptness of their hearts, and causes them to mourn, and be in great bitterness of soul. Like a crane or a swallow, so do they chatter; they mourn as a dove; their eyes fail with looking upward; and they cry out, "O Lord, I am oppressed; undertake for me." They feel rejected by the Lord, despised, and forever banished from his presence, when it is only his promise fulfilled in them. If the cause is promised, the effect must be promised too; so it is as much God's promise that we should mourn and be in bitterness, as it is that he should pour upon us the spirit of grace and of supplications. His promises embrace our trials, conflicts, persecutions and tribulations, as well as our deliverance from them. It is as much God's appointment that "in the world ye shall have tribulation," as that ye shall have peace in Jesus. The Lord promised his disciples that men should deliver them up to the councils, and scourge them in their synagogues; that they should be brought before governors and kings for his sake, and for a testimony against them and the Gentiles. But when we see ourselves hated of all men for his name's sake; when our brethren betray us into the hands of our enemies; when tribulations, distresses, persecutions and perils of every kind overwhelm us; when the sorrows of death compass us, and the pains of hell get hold on us, we doubt having an interest in his promises, and often cry out, "Will the Lord cast off forever? and will he be favorable no more? Is his mercy clean gone forever? doth his promise fail forevermore? Hath God forgotten to be gracious? hath he in anger shut up his tender mercies?" But we must learn that his promise gives darkness as well as light, evil as well as good; and that it is he who commandeth, and raiseth the stormy wind that lifteth up these waves. He forms the light and creates darkness; he makes peace and creates evil.

"If light attends the course I run
'Tis he provides those rays;
And 'tis his hand that hides my sun
If darkness clouds my days."

"When he giveth quietness, who then can make trouble? and when he hideth his face, who then can behold him?" Our times are in his hand, and we may well ask, "Shall we receive good at the hand of God, and shall we not receive evil?"

We have shown that the Lord has promised his people persecutions, temptations and afflictions; but he has also promised to be with them and uphold them in all their trials. For every conflict he has promised a victory. He said to Jacob, "Fear not. * * * When thou passest through the waters I will be with thee; and through the rivers, they shall not overflow thee: when thou walkest through the fire thou shalt not be burned; neither shall the flame kindle upon thee."—Isa. xliii. 2. It matters not how billowy may be the waters of tribulation, nor how turbid and boisterous the rivers of distress, neither how hot the fires of temptation and flames of persecution through which the child of God must pass; he shall neither be swallowed up nor consumed, for the Lord his God, the Holy One of Israel, his Savior, is with him. This promise made to Jacob embraces all the heirs of salvation, for "Jacob is the lot of his inheritance."

The church of God has always been surrounded by enemies; and not only surrounded by them, but they dwell in her tents. "The Lord hath commanded concerning Jacob, that his adversaries should be round about him: Jerusalem is as a menstruous woman among them."—Lam. i. 17. But what is the character of the enemies that surround us now? Let Paul tell. We are living in the last days; and he says that in them "men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce-breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God: having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof."—2 Tim. iii. 2–5. These heady, high-minded traitors and false accusers, who despise those that are good, are continually taking counsel together, and bearing false witness against the children of God; but their witness agrees not, because the Lord has said, "Take counsel together, and it shall come to naught; speak the word, and it shall not stand: for God is with us." So, dear child of God, fear not; for "he will keep the feet of his saints: and the wicked shall be silent in darkness; for by strength shall no man prevail." Some trust in chariots, some in horses, and think their great number will deliver them; but by their strength they shall not prevail. So "be not afraid of them, neither be afraid of their words, though briers and thorns be with thee, and thou dost dwell among scorpions: be not afraid of their words, nor be dismayed at their looks." They will hide a snare for thee, and spread a net for thy feet by the wayside; yea, they will bend their bow, and lie in secret to shoot at thee. Yet they shall not prevail against thee; for our God, who is not slack concerning his promise, has said, "No weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper." These proud blasphemers and false accusers, who speak lies in hypocrisy, will lay to your charge things which you knew not. They will devise deceitful matters, and open their mouth wide against thee, saying, "Aha, aha! our eyes have seen it." But be not terrified at all this; for the Lord our God, who neither slumbers nor sleeps, and whose eyes are in every place, has said, "Every tongue that shall rise against thee in judgment thou shalt condemn." The apostle challenges this world and all the infernal powers of darkness to lay anything to the charge of God's elect. Truly we have a strong city; for God hath appointed salvation for walls and bulwarks, which is a sure defense against all the attacks of the enemy.

But we have enemies more heinous than those which revile, persecute and falsely accuse us. While we dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips, and are commanded to "Take ye heed every one of his neighbor, and trust ye not in any brother: for every brother will utterly supplant, and every neighbor will walk with slanders," still we can find at home something more deceitful than these. Do you ask what it is? No; the children of God know too well to ask that. "The heart [and every tried soul is constrained to say, "My heart"] is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked." The enemies which annoy us most are those which dwell within us.

"But of all the foes we meet,
None so oft mislead our feet,
None betray us into sin,
Like the foes that dwell within."

It is these inward foes that prevent us from doing the things that we would, and cause us to do the things that we hate. When prompted by the Spirit of God to do good, they rise before us to turn us from our purpose. They bring us into captivity to the law of sin, and then make us cry out, "O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" Is deliverance from these foes included in God's promises to his people? Are we to be delivered even from the corruptions of self? Yes; for Paul, in telling who shall deliver him from this body of death, says, "I thank God, through Jesus Christ our Lord." It is written, "There shall come out of Sion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob." Again, Paul tells us that "the creature itself shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God." But as long as we live in the flesh we must suffer the temptations and oppressions of these inward foes. We will never be able to drive them out of the flesh, but when led by the Spirit we bring them under subjection; and God has promised that he "will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with the temptation also make a way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it." This promise, as all others, is based upon God's faithfulness, as it begins with, "God is faithful;" hence it cannot fail until God fails to be faithful. But we often feel that it is not for us, for our temptations seem more than we can endure, and there is no way to escape from them; but the Lord has not promised that he would make a way for us to escape temptation, but will with the temptation make a way to escape from the snare. This very temptation, which we feel to be our destruction, is the means of our escape. So we know that all things, even our trials and temptations, work together for our good if we are the Lord's.

God's promises are all sure and unchangeable. He makes no yea and nay promises. "For all the promises of God in him are yea, and in him Amen, unto the glory of God by us." When he speaks it is done; when he commands it stands fast. The certainty of his promises depends upon his universal government. Convince me that the absolute predestination of all things is not true, and I will be ready to admit that some, if not all, of God's promises may fail. Though he says to Jacob, "Fear not," yet what evidence could Jacob have that he need not fear if the devil and his infernal train are left to carry on their own affairs, and not governed by God's decrees? But when the Lord opens our eyes, and enables us to see that all things are under his control, that "hell is naked before him, and destruction hath no covering," that devils must have his consent before they can even go into a herd of swine, that he "worketh all things after the counsel of his own will," and that his counsel shall stand, and he will do all his pleasure, then when he says, "Fear not," all the combined powers of earth and hell cannot make our souls afraid. As he that has promised is faithful, and cannot lie, and is also able to perform it, we cannot fail to receive all his promises to us. May the Lord enable us to embrace these glorious promises as ours, and feast upon them day by day. I am so full of unbelief that I am continually doubting his promises; yet sometimes I can say, "Lord, I believe; help thou mine unbelief."

I will say no more upon this subject at present, trusting that what I have written will comfort some downcast soul.

GOING HOME.

To the home-loving it is something sorrowful, something sad, to be a wanderer; to be, as it were, alone in the world; to be outside the place where the family dwell together; to not be reckoned as one with them. When the Master said to one, "Go home to thy friends and tell them what great things the Lord hath done for thee," it was to one who was indeed afar off in his mind; yet in body he was not far from those friends or from that home.

LIFE INSURANCE.

ELDER F. A. CHICK—DEAR BROTHER:—I have read your writings with profit and with satisfaction, and do not wish to tax you with difficult questions and knotty problems, nor with mysterious passages of Scripture; but there is a question that I would like you to answer, and that is as to life insurance. Is it right for a Baptist (and when I say Baptist I mean Old School, for I believe they are the true Baptists) to insure his life, or take out a life policy? It is a question of importance, and is agitated in certain sections of the country, and has given me much concern. Is there a "Thus saith the Lord" for it? I would like you to write on the subject. I know some among us who practice it, and say it is right.

Yours in hope,

W. LIVELY.

REPLY.

IN reply to the above request of our dear brother Lively we desire first to say that it is always our wish to write or speak carefully and candidly as the matter may appear to our mind. Especially does it become us to do so wherever there may seem to be differences of judgment concerning any matter among brethren. With regard to the question proposed by brother Lively, we do not desire to say anything purposely to hurt or wound any brother who may not see as we have been led to see in this matter. We believe that the people of God desire above all things to do right and to be right. We do not think there can be any danger of strife growing out of our response to brother Lively's request, even though there may be some difference of opinion. The servants of God should strive together for the faith of the gospel; and if this be the supreme motive there is little room for strife among themselves, save in emulation of each other in striving to know and do the truth.

We have never heard the question of the right or wrong of life insurance discussed among our brethren in this part of the country. So far as we know it is regarded as being like any other business arrangement, whereby a man strives to secure a competency for his family after he has passed away from them. It had not occurred to us to think of it in any other way until we were told that in some sections brethren were disposed to think it wrong. We desire to respect the honest scruples of every one. We should think it a sin to needlessly do violence to the convictions of any brother or sister. Yet we have not been able to see any more wrong in life insurance than in any other business which requires the association together of a number of people.

We will call attention to a few considerations. First, life insurance does not mean that anybody makes an attempt to insure people against death. On the contrary, life insurance expressly recognizes the certainty of death, and the uncertainty of the duration of any man's life. We mean its uncertainty to us; with God nothing is uncertain. Life insurance is not a charitable organization. It is purely a fair and equal business transaction, as much so as fire insurance, marine insurance, or any other method which men may take to save themselves from loss and their families from want. It is business pure and simple.

When a man has his property insured against damage by fire or lightning or wind or water, it does not mean that the company with which he is insured undertakes to guarantee that his property shall not be destroyed; but they do say that upon consideration of the fact that he pays into the common treasury a certain amount every year to help others who may suffer loss, he also shall be reimbursed out of the common fund if he shall himself suffer loss. Not one in a hundred may ever have his buildings burned; but by paying a certain amount to help others in their time of loss, he has a certainty of similar help if he shall be burned out. We suppose that all this is fully understood by all, and that all admit the propriety of the business of fire insurance.

Now, we have understood life insurance to occupy the same ground. A hundred men or a thousand men or a hundred thousand men agree together that they will pay into a common fund each of them so much every year or oftener, which shall go toward paying the families of those who die a certain sum to help them on their way after the death of the husband and father. Each man pays in a certain sum annually as long as he lives, and when he dies his family draws out of the treasury of this company a certain sum, proportioned to the amount which he has paid in yearly. All is thus far fair and honest and above-board. While, as we said, life insurance is not charity, but purely business, yet those who are paying in their dues have the satisfaction of knowing that they are daily helping widows and orphans, who otherwise would be needy and suffering, and also of securing to their own wives and little ones a generous bounty if God should call them away at any time.

Life insurance, as well as fire insurance or any other business, may be badly or dishonestly or extravagantly managed, but this does not affect the right or wrong of the business itself. So a man may be covetous in spirit; but this does not affect the right or wrong of any business, in itself considerate, in which he may engage.

We have heard the objection urged that to take out a life insurance policy showed that the man who did so was guilty of distrusting the providential care of God. It is true that we all are no doubt guilty in this regard, and have reason to confess our guilt before God daily and hourly; but we cannot see that life insurance is any greater evidence of this than is fire insurance, or than when a mechanic or farmer or merchant or physician strives to save something against old age or sickness for his family to fall back upon. One of the most commendable things in any man is that he be industrious, frugal and saving, looking on to the time when he may be disabled from providing for himself and family by old age or disease or death. This is not distrusting God; it is simply using our God-given faculties in such a way that with the blessing of God upon our efforts we may not become a charge upon others, to be supported by their charity. Life insurance seems to us to be one way of investing surplus savings to that end. We are not here arguing for the advisability of this special way of saving. We would say nothing about the wisdom of this way; each one must decide for himself about this. We are only expressing what seems to us true, viz., that life insurance is not a sin against God, any more than it is a sin to invest money in a savings bank, in houses or land, or in anything that seems to us safe and prudent.

To be miserly, selfish and grasping is always wrong. It is condemned in the word of God, it is contrary to his will, and opposed to the very spirit of Christ. The believer is enjoined to be kind and considerate of the poor, and to minister to the needy as often as he shall find them; and this forbids a selfish, grasping spirit. It is also enjoined upon believers to be just and liberal in all their dealings with those in their employ, and with all men. "Owe no man anything, but to love one another." All the above is true; yet the Bible has enjoined upon all diligence in business, and thoughtfulness to care for our families, and to provide things honest in the sight of all men. Selfish greed is condemned in the Scriptures; but we know of no instance where men were condemned for an honest effort to accumulate a share of this world's goods for their families, or against the time of want for themselves. As said before, this does not argue any distrust of God, nor want of confidence in his providential care over us.

The religion of Christ is not a lazy, idle religion, neither does it lead to idleness or carelessness or wastefulness. On the contrary, pure and undefiled religion will stir up its possessor to the practice of every good word and work. If it is of any worth at all, it will make him a better husband, father, brother and son, a better neighbor, and a more honest, careful, frugal and industrious man. It will make him kind and thoughtful of others, especially of those whom God has laid upon him in the family relation. All this, we doubt not, will be admitted by all who know the grace of God in truth. We are not able to see that life insurance in any way is out of harmony with these general truths, nor with Bible teaching.

If brother Lively or any brother sees this matter in a different light we respect their views, and hope they will believe that we desire to be right and do right as well as they. We submit this in love to all.

ISAIAH LIV. 5-15.

THE prophet had been speaking of the barren and widowed state of the church under the legal dispensation; but by virtue of the redemption so vividly presented in the preceding chapter, the church is called on to break forth into singing, and thus express her joy and gratitude to God for her deliverance and enlargement. From the first to the fourth verse inclusive, assurances are given her that she shall be cared for, all her reproaches wiped away, and she completely shielded against shame and reproach. But as the children of God have always been more or less afflicted with a propensity to doubt and distrust the promises of God, and as these tidings to the church, after she had been so long accustomed to shame, reproach, widowhood, &c., would seem to be too good to be true, the admonition is given in the fourth verse, "Fear not!" These promises are of God in Christ, and they are Yea, and in him Amen, to the glory of God by us. There is no occasion for the church to fear a failure on the part of God to fulfill all that he has promised, nor to fear a repetition of those evils from which her God has delivered her. And to sustain this admonition, and encourage and confirm the faith and confidence of the church, he adds, "For thy Maker is thy Husband." Never were the nuptials of so unequal a match before announced. She that was refused in her youth while blooming in her greatest personal attractions, she who stood degraded, poor, afflicted, friendless and a widow, loaded with the curses of the law of God, pursued by vindictive justice, and unable to deliver herself, joined in holy wedlock to him who is holy, harmless, separate from sinners, and higher than the heavens. In these connubial bands she is identified manifestly with her Maker. Her husband has made her. Her spiritual existence was in his from everlasting; her life is hid with Christ in God; and this makes her one with him, even as he is one with his Father. He has made her all that she is, in form, condition, relationship, and in prospect. "This people," he says, "have I formed for myself; they shall shew forth my praise." In form,

"He forms her beauty like his own."

And in regard to her condition, she is by him elevated; for

"He calls and seats her on his throne."

In relationship, she is one with her Lord, vitally, legally, experimentally and indissolubly, and this truth should forbid her fear. But the character and perfections of her Husband are such as to confirm her faith and confidence in him; "The Lord of hosts is his name." The commander of all the hosts of heaven; the "King of kings and Lord of lords;" "The God of the whole earth shall he be called." His dominion extending to the Gentile nations, and spreading from the rivers to the ends of the earth; possessing all power in heaven and on earth, angels and principalities being subject to his government. This Maker, Redeemer, holy One of Israel, this Lord of hosts and God of the whole earth, has taken his bride by the right hand, and said unto her, "Yea, I have loved thee with an everlasting love; therefore with loving-kindness have I drawn thee." "Return unto me, O backsliding daughter, for I am married unto thee." "I will betroth thee unto me forever; yea, I will betroth thee unto me in righteousness, and in judgment, and in loving-kindness and in mercies; I will even betroth thee unto me in faithfulness; and thou shalt know the Lord." And the Lord God hath said that he hateth putting away. In his marriage he has assumed all the responsibilities of a husband, to love and cherish her as the bone of his bones and flesh of his flesh; to protect and support her to the full extent of his almighty power; to feed her with the bread of heaven, comfort her with apples, and refresh her with flagons of wine. He has pledged himself that he will never leave nor forsake her; and he will put his fear into her heart, that she shall not depart from him.

"Hail! sacred union, firm and strong!
How great the grace! how sweet the song!
That worms of earth should ever be,
One with incarnate Deity."

Though a woman may forsake her sucking child, yet the Lord will not forsake his bride; she is engraved in the palms of his hands, and her walls are continually before him.

"For the Lord hath called thee." Not, however, when she had rendered herself amiable, beautiful and lovely; not when she was rich, and increased in goods, and had need of nothing; but "As a woman forsaken and grieved in spirit, and a wife of youth when thou wast refused, saith thy God." It was customary in Israel for parties to be espoused to each other by their parents from infancy; but there was a provision by which the espoused husband could refuse his espoused bride, when they came of age; and this was often done; but the refused wife of youth, or of espousal, was subjected thereby to reproach and grief of spirit, and few grooms of respectable standing were willing to marry one who had been thus publicly degraded or refused. Such was the case of the church, espoused from the ancients of eternity, and the time appointed for the celebration of the marriage in time; but during the law dispensation she was refused, alienated, degraded and reproached. And when John the Baptist came and raised the midnight cry, "Behold, the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him," darkness covered the earth, and gross darkness the people. Under such circumstances she was called; so she has the assurance that he commended his love, in that while she was involved in sin and shame, he gave himself for her, that he might redeem her from all iniquity, and purify to himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works.

"For a small moment have I forsaken thee;" during her bondage under the law, until the impediments should be legally removed; until she should become dead to the law by the body of Christ, that she should be married unto another, even to him who is raised from the dead, that she should bring forth fruit unto God. "But with great mercies will I gather thee. In a little wrath I hid my face from thee for a moment; but with everlasting kindness will I have mercy on thee, saith the Lord, thy Redeemer." This is certainly a most precious assurance to the dear church of God. She shall not only partake of his mercy, even of his great mercies, but these mercies shall be ministered to her in everlasting kindness. And for her security she has the word of her God, the Lord, her Redeemer. And in addition to this word of promise, for her strong consolation, her God has graciously added his oath, in the following words, "For this is as the waters of Noah unto me; for, as I have sworn that the waters of Noah shall no more go over the earth, so have I sworn that I would not be wroth with thee, nor rebuke thee." Is this not enough for Zion's faith to rest upon under all circumstances? Can she need more than the word, the promise and the oath of her God, who cannot lie? But her God has given her more. "For the mountains shall depart, and hills be removed; but my kindness shall not depart from thee, neither shall the covenant of my peace be removed, saith the Lord that hath mercy upon thee." To such gracious promises may the church respond, "God is our refuge and strength." "Therefore will we not fear, though the earth be removed, and though the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea; though the waters thereof roar and be troubled, though the mountains shake with the swelling thereof."

"O thou afflicted, tossed with tempest, and not comforted." God's people are an afflicted and poor people. In the world they shall have tribulation. By the swelling and roaring of the waters, the saints are often tossed with tempest, and often need to be comforted; often feel the need of strong consolation, and a firm foundation to rest upon. Conscious of her utter inability to protect herself when thus tossed, she is stripped of all confidence in the flesh; and she is ready to inquire, By whom shall Jacob rise? But her faithful God replies, "Behold, I will lay thy stones with fair colors." He is the Builder of Jerusalem, and he will bring all her stones from the dark quarries where they are hidden, and he will quicken them, and build them up of lively or quickened stones, with fair colors, as those precious stones described in Rev. xxi. "And thy foundations with saphires. And I will make thy windows of agate, and thy gates of carbuncles, and all thy borders of pleasant stones." The foundation on which the church shall rest shall be such as no man can lay; for strength and beauty it shall be worthy of the Man whose name is "THE BRANCH."—Zech. vi. This stone which the builders refused is made the head of the corner, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against the church which God hath builded on this Rock. Her windows are the avenues through which light is communicated; these may signify gifts which God has bestowed on this church, especially apostolic gifts, and through them he has poured floods of living light into his church. Her gates are very clearly described in Ezekiel's vision, and all her borders of pleasant stones. "Salvation will God appoint for walls and for bulwarks."

"And all thy children shall be taught of the Lord, and great shall be the peace of thy children." Our divine Monitor has given us a most blessed comment on this text: "Every one therefore that hath heard, and hath learned of the Father, cometh unto me." None can come to Christ except the Father draw them; but all of Zion's children shall be drawn, shall come, and shall not be cast out. Great shall be the peace of all who are taught of God; for Christ is their peace, and they shall experience peace in their souls, and such peace as the world cannot give nor take away.

"In righteousness shalt thou be established." Not at the expense of justice, truth or law, but in harmony with all the perfections of Jehovah is the church established. Established in Christ her Righteousness, she shall be far from oppression; for she shall not fear; and from terror, for it shall not come near her. From these assurances, however, we are not at liberty to infer that the church shall have no enemies to encounter while in her militant state; for, "Behold, they shall surely gather together, but not by me." Not by any authority which he has given them; and he has provided, therefore, that "Whosoever shall gather together against thee, shall fall for thy sake." The God and Husband of Zion has created the manufacturers as well as the users of means and instrumentalities; and as they can have no power or wisdom beyond what he has given them, they are incapable of inventing any manner of instruments which can prosper against the church; for he hath also created the waster to destroy. Consequently, no weapon formed against her shall prosper, and every tougue that shall rise against her in judgment she shall condemn. "This is the heritage of the servants of the Lord, and their righteousness is of me, saith the Lord."

We have not attempted a full explanation of all that is embraced in the chapter.

May the bride thus happily wedded to Christ, and secured from all harm, appreciate her privilege and walk worthy of her high vocation.

PLEASE BE SURE

IN sending remittances for renewals of subscriptions to give us the same name that the paper is already coming to. If the party is married, and the paper is coming to the wife's name, and we receive a remittance to renew the subscription, and the husband's name is given, we have no means of knowing that it is meant for the subscription in the wife's name; consequently the husband's name is entered on our list, and the paper sent to both parties. Or if the paper is coming in the husband's name, and the renewal is sent in the wife's name, the same thing is likely to occur. It is a good plan to inclose in the letter one of the little pink slips containing the name, taken either from the margin of the paper or from the wrapper in which the paper comes.

But his poor mind was in such a state that he regarded neither friends nor home; but when he became clothed and in his right mind, then he could sit at Jesus' feet, could understand and receive the commandment at his mouth, and could discern his kindred and his home. So of the dear ones who have been brought to Jesus' feet in this way; to all such is the word applied. How well we remember how long we lingered around the fold, the church, the home, sometimes feeling unworthy to even be around her; often thinking to attend her solemn feasts, to just follow in the footsteps of the flock, was more than enough for us; to just behold the beauties of the vineyard, the garden inclosed, and inhale the fragrance thereof, to grow as a plant outside the wall, was everything to us. But if this were to satisfy us all, there would be no visible church, no laborers in the vineyard, no home for the cheerless wanderer; so we must be made to feel the longings for home, even a place at the Master's table. And there must be dwellers under the home roof; there must be someone to spread the feast; all things must be in order at the Father's house. O how much there is in having everything in readiness at home. How do we know when some absent or wandering one may be coming homeward and suffering? If everything should be in confusion, and the mother not ready to receive and entertain the returning one, would it not be most sad and disappointing? The anxiety and care and sorrow is not always with the absent children; yet when I was such an one I truly thought it so. I thought no one could have such trouble as I. I wanted to get home, but did not find how to do it. I could see the anxious, expecting faces of those who were looking for me, but I regarded them not. I thought all happy at home, while I was outside lonely, desolate and afflicted. Sometimes I felt literally to say, "Lord, bid them that they help me." I felt that they might do it in some way; and as I now look back I can remember the many encouraging words, the many things that did seem to help me; yet there were things I must do myself, trusting alone upon him who said, "Fear not; I am with thee." But many days have gone by since then, and now I know what it is to dwell in the home and earnestly look for the children to come home. I know now just how my father and mother, who were in the church, as well as all the fathers and mothers, brethren and sisters there, felt when they were so long waiting and looking for me. What honorable mother does not have every one of the family in her mind? Is there one absent? It is the first one in her thoughts. Is there one astray, or in captivity? It is the one subject of most earnest prayer. Is there one who has forgotten home and friends? The mother does not forget him. Possibly the light is, or should be, kept burning all the time, so that the wanderer may see the light of home. So with the church, when she is as she should be, as "a city set on a hill, whose light cannot be hid." When she is like this, the homeless one can find her, though she may be far from his place of sojourning. Especially when we see the fathers and mothers, when we see them going to the home beyond, how desolate we feel; how earnestly we look for the dear children of God to come in to fill the vacant places. And when we appoint a feast, when we arrange at such a time to meet, and invite all who wish to come, we have them all in mind, wondering if each dear face will greet us again; and often at such times the mind goes back to the sweet by-gone times when these things have been such a chief part of the sacred pleasures allotted us in this life; for we can truly witness that

"The hill of Zion yields
A thousand sacred sweets,
Before we reach the heavenly fields,
Or walk the golden streets."

Our mind goes back in memory of those times as we prepare for those before us. Before us will rise those held in such sacred remembrance; for then father was here, mother was here, expected ministers were here, and friends from abroad. These were the first our eyes sought as we entered the dear assemblies of the saints. But now they are gone; and yet we meet dear ones still; dear in the same bond of love that binds the children together.

Before our last annual meeting I received a note from a dear one in a distant city, asking the time and wishing to know the way to our place of meeting. I readily knew it was one away from home, and gave her such welcome as I was enabled to do; and when the time came it found me sick, as is often the case. I was full of sadness on account of myself, and many things made me fear that we would be a disappointment to her, and others who were expected to visit us. But I am so near the place of meeting and baptizing that I am much favored in these things; and when the dear ones came the meeting commenced, and I could feel and catch the spirit of it all. I knew by the glowing faces of the dear ones who came in to see me at intervals that the Lord was with us; and what more could we want? And feeling that, the sickness I could forget; but the dear delights of the meeting would be lasting with me. I rallied all my little strength and attended the morning sermon on Sunday, and for the first time listened to Elder A. F. Dove, from Ohio. How thankful I was to be there. Then I went to the baptizing, when not only the sister whose dwelling was far away, but also a brother who had always been near us, received the ordinance according to the command of the Master. How I love to go to the water remembering that "He who came our souls to save,

In Jordan bowed his head."

How peaceful, quiet and beautiful was this scene. Toward the close of the feast-day how beautiful the autumn tints of earth and sky, the crystal waters, the voice of prayer and praise, the felt happiness of the obedient ones, and above all that deep peace from above, witnessing the divine approval. Why all these sacred blessings, if it were not necessary to observe these solemn rites? Why the burden of disobedience that rests upon us so great that we are constrained to leave all for this? Why so happy in obedience? Why this deep felt joy in the church, the home, when the dear children come to her? Surely it is the Lord's own way, marked out for us to follow. Again, when dark November came with its cold and dreariness, a dear young brother, a nephew of mine, whose heart was warm with love to God and home, also came to us, was baptized, and I was favored to be present. There was unusual love and peace in the family at that time. And all the long, dark, cold winter I tried to get well enough to write this letter and tell you these good things, so you might rejoice with me; for with me the heart is as an harp that sings, when lifted by some sweet, heavenly influence, or is fanned by soft zephyrs, or moans under some heavy weight, or swept by some withering blast. So I breathe out these things to you; else how could you rejoice with those who rejoice, or mourn with those that mourn? But I could not get well enough to write, and much of the time I have been looking for the boatman, listening for the dip of the oar, to bear me to the other shore. How earnestly I tried to sight that shore. But all was dark. I learned I must watch, must wait awhile yet; and I have truly been blessed in the waiting. After the dear sister who came to us returned to her home she told her husband of the little church she had found, told him of her joyful acceptance at the home here, so that he was constrained to write and tell me of his exercises in the time long gone by, and of his desires to also come home to the people, as we trust, who love the Lord. Surely I gave him the welcome of the church, and at our May meeting he came; and although for months I had not left my room, I was enabled to again attend the morning sermon on Sunday. As the air became as warm as that of my own room, and all things were so favorable, I again went to the water, and how beautiful and solemn it was to me. Then we returned and sat together at communion, where I saw the brother and sister who came to us, sitting together in this most solemn observance. I could but think of Zechariah and Elizabeth, who walked together in the ordinances of the Lord's house blameless; but I could but feel that the Lord had also some special favor and blessing for them. And often, so often, do I think of the final "going home," of that sweet, eternal home, unalloyed by all the things that may distress us here. When the time comes we know that every ransomed one will be there. Father and mother will be there; all the children will be there. And where is it? It is where the Father is. It is where the Son is; and his words are, "Here am I, and the children which God hath given me." How sure it is, how good it is, and all through the blood of the everlasting covenant. Nothing but the blood of the Lamb could span the gulf between the holy God and sinners born to die. Nothing else will do for me. In nothing else can I hope for an entrance to the home of glory.

"There saints of all ages in harmony meet,
Their Savior and brethren transported to greet;
While the anthems of rapture unceasingly roll,
And the smile of the Lord is the feast of the soul."

KELLEY'S CORNERS, Mich.

HERNDON, Va., March 8, 1895.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS:—I inclose you a letter which I received a short time ago from brother A. B. Lester, of Mason City, Iowa. It was a sweet comfort to me, and I thought I would send it to you for publication in the SIGNS, if you think it would be profitable. Brother Lester is a stranger to me in the flesh, but I hope he is not a stranger in the Spirit. I have received many precious letters from him in the past two years of our correspondence. It is a great blessing indeed from the Lord that his people are enabled to communicate with one another though they may be miles apart. "Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity. It is like the precious ointment upon the head, that ran down upon the beard, even Aaron's beard; that went down to the skirts of his garments." When this precious ointment is put upon us we are made for a little while to forget our old, sinful nature, and are given that joy which is unspeakable and full of glory, and are made to exclaim, in the language of "the Song of Songs," "Let him kiss me with the kisses of his mouth; for thy love is better than wine. Because of the savor of thy good ointments thy name is as ointment poured forth, therefore do the virgins love the." The name of Jesus is indeed sweet to our souls. He is the chief among ten thousand and altogether lovely.

Your brother, I hope,

J. F. OLIVER.

MASON CITY, Iowa, Feb. 1, 1895.

MY DEAR BROTHER AND SISTER OLIVER:—I find myself this cold, stormy day seated with pen in hand to write a reply to your precious letter, which was read with great pleasure. But I know that if I am not led with a higher and more holy spirit than that which is in man my writing will do you no good. Your letter I feel to indorse from the beginning to the end. You complain of coldness and darkness of mind. I feel to sympathize with you in that; but can you not sometimes see a ray of comfort in those dark, gloomy seasons? A person that is nuturally blind knows no difference between light and darkness, until some mighty power gives him the light. Then let that light be taken away and how quickly they will discover the darkness. How was it with you before Jesus found you and opened your blind eyes? Were you troubled on account of being in the dark? I think I hear you say no. But shortly after you found him whom your soul loveth. You discovered that your whole being was contaminated with sin; that your heart, which you had thought was as good as any one's, was as a cage of unclean birds. So these dark and gloomy seasons are only a manifestation of the light that shineth in darkness, and has shined in our hearts, to give us the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ. Jesus, our Leader, was led into the wilderness, and we must needs follow in doubts and darkness. Job said, "He hath fenced up my way that I cannot pass, and he hath set darkness in my paths." God speaks by the mouth of Isaiah, saying, "I form the light, and create darkness: I make peace, and create evil: I the Lord do all these things." Again, "For a small moment have I forsaken thee, but with great mercies will I gather thee." Again, "In a little wrath I hid my face from thee for a moment, but with everlasting kindness will I have mercy on the, saith the Lord thy Redeemer." O! have we not great reason to rejoice in such tribulation, knowing that God's people through all times are led in the same way? James says, "My brethren, count it all joy when ye fall into divers temptations; knowing this, that the trying of your faith worketh patience." Then, dear brother and sister, when these doubtings and darkness seem to entirely obscure the rays of light of the Sun of righteousness, let us with patience wait the coming of the dawn. Isaiah says, "They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run and not be weary; and they shall walk and not faint." But, dear brother and sister, be not confounded by worldly religionists in their interpretation of the word wait. To wait for a thing does not mean to reach forward and "take it by storm," as they do. They say, "There is no need of anyone being in the dark. Wait upon the Lord; pray and exercise faith." Poor, deluded mortals! They are ignorant of the faith of God's elect. They know not that faith is the gift of God, and works by love. They mistake the effect of the "strange fire" that they have kindled, and are walking by the sparks thereof, and call it the love of God shed abroad in the heart, in payment for what they have done, which is consistent with the rest of their theory. When we say anything to them about our troubles, their reply is, "Why don't you pray?" That question goes to show that they are strangers to the covenant of promise, and have never been brought to see their helpless condition, and to realize the fact that "By the deeds of the law no flesh shall be justified in his sight." Neither do they have a realizing sense that it is by grace we are saved, and not by works, or they never would have asked such a question. The constant desire of the heart of God's chosen people is that God would remove the dark clouds from their sky and cause the light to break forth as in times of yore. Sometimes the cloud becomes so heavy and dense that they come into gross darkness and conclude that they never knew anything about God by an experimental knowledge, and perhaps conclude that this is the reason why they do not enjoy the preaching. "O! can it be?" they say. "Yes, I believe I am deceived. And more than all else, I have deceived the church." Yet, at the same time, the breathing of their soul is, "O that it were with me as in days that are past, when the candle of the Lord shone round about me." "God, be merciful to me, a poor, lost sinner." But like the children of Israel at the Red Sea, they have to stand still and see the salvation of God; yes, "wait upon the Lord." And he will assuredly renew our strength. We shall mount up with wings as eagles, to soar on Pisgah's lofty heights, there to bask in the smiles of our dear Redeemer, and hear him once more assure us, "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee." Thus for a short time only are we permitted to rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory, when we again behold our imperfections, and that this nature is just as prone to wander as it ever was; that when we would do good, evil is present with us. Are not these fearful trials a manifestation of that light that shined out of darkness, that has shined in our hearts, that has revealed all this mass of inbred corruptions? That which we have mistaken for darkness is a manifestation of light. It has not only revealed to us that our own righteousnesses are as filthy rags, but it has revealed unto us that Jesus is made unto us wisdom; that when we speak or write upon this glorious subject, led by the Spirit, it will be to the edification of his children. Righteousness; yea, he is our righteousness, sanctification and redemption, our all and in all. O what a glorious rest for the people of God! and entering into that eternal gospel sabbath day of rest, prepared for his chosen sons and daughters, where they cease from their labors (legal works) as God ceased from his. There they lie down in green pastures, beside the still waters, relying on the glorious promises revealed to them by him who has all power in heaven and on earth, saying, "My counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure." Then, my dear brother and sister, what more can we want? A few more rising and setting suns, and the last enemy will be conquered, which is death. And when this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, "Death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?"

But I must close. My wife joins in love to you both. Please cast over this the mantle of charity, and write soon.

A. B. LESTER.

STONEVILLE, N. C., June 24, 1895.

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES—VERY DEAR BRETHREN:—I wish to pen you a few lines to express to you the great pleasure and enjoyment that I had in attending the Delaware River Association of Old School Baptists, held with the church at Hopewell, N. J. I have long had a desire to visit the Baptists in that section, but have never been able to do so until this spring. There I met with many of the ministering brethren whom I had never had the pleasure of seeing before, and heard them preach the gospel as taught by our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. My heart was made to run over with joy to hear the same gospel proclaimed from the stand there as I hear in this country. I felt like I knew that I was with my Father's children. I heard no new doctrine, but the old Bible doctrine of salvation by grace, and grace alone, from first to last. I feel to hope to visit that people again in the future, if the Lord will. As I went out north I stopped over at Front Royal, Va., and attended a union meeting at that place, ending on the fourth Sunday in May. I heard the same doctrine preached there, if I am any judge, that I heard at the Delaware River Association, and it seems to me that those good people ought to be in full fellowship, as God's people are the same north and south, east and west.

Yours in hope of life eternal,

F. J. STONE.

POSTAL MONEY ORDERS.

BY a recent arrangement of the post-office department nearly every post-office in the United States is now a money order office for at least five dollars; and as it costs but three cents additional to obtain an order of not more than two dollars and fifty cents, or five cents for one not more than five dollars, or eight cents for one not more than ten dollars, and so on in proportion to amount of order, we request that all remittances be sent us by post-office money-order. You simply give the money you wish to send to your postmaster, and he will give you a money-order for that amount. You will inclose the order which he gives you in your letter to us; and if it should be lost in the mail you can get another one from your postmaster without additional charge. Please be sure to have the order made payable at Middletown, N. Y., and never at New York City, as that place is nearly a hundred miles from our place, and it puts us to considerable extra trouble and expense to get them cashed at the New York City office.

As will be seen from the above, an order for five dollars or less can be obtained cheaper than registering a letter, while an order not exceeding ten dollars costs but the same amount; and remitting by money order is a much safer way than sending by registered letter, as the postal department is not responsible for loss of registered letters, but money orders can be duplicated.

EXTRAORDINARY OFFER.

WE still continue our offer to send two new subscribers, and credit an old subscriber one year, for three dollars; but we cannot afford to send to one new subscriber, and credit an old subscriber one year, for two dollars. Please do not ask us to do it.

Any one who is already a subscriber is authorized to act as agent for us; and we will send the paper for the first year to any new subscribers they may send us at one dollar each, and they are entitled to retain the other dollar for their commission.

Under no circumstances can new subscribers send to us direct and get the paper for themselves for less than the regular rates.

YEARLY MEETINGS.

DEAR BROTHER BEEBE:—Please announce in your paper that the Soldier River Church, of Monona Co., Iowa, will hold her yearly meeting on Saturday before the fourth Sunday in July, 1895.

T. A. DENTON.

A YEARLY meeting is appointed to be held with the Clovesville Old School Baptist Church, of the Lexington Association, on the first Saturday and Sunday in July (6th and 7th), 1895.

A cordial invitation is extended to all lovers of the truth as it is in Jesus to meet with us, and especially brethren in the ministry. Trains will be met at Griffin's Corners and Fleischmann's Station.

O. F. BALLARD, Clerk.

THREE DAYS MEETINGS.

A THREE days meeting will be held with the Zion's Rest Church, at the Red Oak school-house, commencing at eleven o'clock on Friday before the third Sunday in July, 1895. This meeting will be held fifteen miles northeast of Lexington, Oklahoma, and seven miles southwest of Burnett, in Cleveland Co., Oklahoma. All Old School Baptists are cordially invited to attend.

PICTORIAL HISTORY

OF THE

UNITED STATES.

By James D. McCabe.

This work is no dry mass of details—no bombastic effort to inflame the national pride, but a vivid and brilliant narrative of the events of our history, from the discovery of the American Continent down to thepresent time. It gives a most interesting account of the Indians of North America, from the time of the coming of the white men. The voyages of Columbus and explorations and discoveries of the different nations of Europe are related with graphic power. Every step of our colonial history is traced with patient fidelity, and the sources of those noble and, we trust, enduring institutions, which have made our country free and great, are shown with remarkable clearness. Then follows a clear and succinct account of our great Struggle for Independence, and the establishment of the Federal Union—the events of our career from the close of the Revolution to the administration of Harrison.

The work is printed from plain, new type, on fine calendered paper, and comprised in one octavo volume of 960 pages. It is splendidly embellished with nearly 500 fine engravings, embracing battles and other historical scenes, portraits of distinguished men, views of our principal cities, &c., &c.

"THE SWORD OF THE LORD AND OF GIDEON."

VOL. 63. MIDDLETOWN, N. Y., WEDNESDAY, JULY 10, 1895. NO. 28.

CORRESPONDENCE.

SOUTH PASADENA, Cal., April 25, 1895.

DEAR BROTHER CHICK:—Your very kind letter came to hand some three days past, and I will now try as I have light given me to give an expression of my views of Rev. xi. 1–8.; and in so doing I will in my clumsy way answer your kind letter, and show why I see the beauty and glory of this mystery as I do. And first of all I will say that I have been an attentive reader of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES since 1855, and have noted carefully the views of Elders Trott, Dudley, Stipp, and others; also I have heard Elder Thomas H. Owen preach and talk on the subject. They all differed on some points. It was a subject of great magnitude to me, so much so that I was much exercised on the subject. Elder Owen and I have talked, argued and corresponded on the subject for several years, and finally he gave up the argument and accepted my views for the most part. I will say that to my mind almost all the views presented either directly or indirectly rob God of the glory and praise that seems to me to be his due as the sovereign Ruler of all things; but while I so understood the views of those able brethren, let not any conclude that it is my purpose or design to say that any of them so intended; but I do say that we only see in part, and know in part; and while to my mind the Scriptures plainly prove my view to be correct, to another it may appear different. With this preface I will in my clumsy way present some thoughts for your perusal; and if you think them worth the space, or of any value to the brethren, you are at liberty to publish them, either with or without criticism, as you may think best; for if they are truth, rubbing will not hurt them, but make them shine all the brighter. And farther, in presenting these thoughts I repeat, it is not for the mastery, but that God may be glorified, and the church be the recipient of the blessing.

The first thought to present is the office, purpose and use of these witnesses, which is called prophecy in this chapter; and also this prophecy is called testimony.—Verse 7. And this must be for a purpose, which is, we will say, to testify to the truth of God and his Christ. The first two verses of the chapter, to my mind, should be considered as the introduction to the subject under consideration. We find that the angel signified to John, the servant of Jesus Christ, these things to the seven churches; which signifies or means the church in all its beauty, glory and perfection throughout all time. And in thus signifying what should shortly come to pass, John is given a reed or rod, and commanded to measure the temple of God, and the altar, and them that worship therein. "But the court which is without, leave out, and measure it not; for it is given unto the Gentiles," &c. Here we are shown a discriminating difference between the children of the married wife and the bondwoman; and as this measurement is a matter of life and death, and none could be condemned without the corroborative testimony of two witnesses under the typical law. Num. xxxv. 50; Deut. xvii. 6, 7; xix. 15; 2 Cor. xiii. 1; Matt. xviii. 16; Heb. x. 28. These witnesses to the truth of God and his Christ witness that all men are dead in trespasses and sins; and their testimony is a savor of life unto life, and of death unto death; hence the measurement; and hence the prophecy in sackcloth (the flesh). Now, as the great discrepancy and inconsistency among brethren seems to be as to what these two witnesses are, or who they are, I will go to the law and the testimony. Isa. viii. 20. Consistency as well as Scripture seems to place the Spirit of Christ as the first witness. 1 Peter i. 1–12. "Of which salvation the prophets have inquired and searched diligently, who prophesied of the grace that should come unto you; searching what, or what manner of time, the Spirit of Christ which was in them did signify, when it was testified beforehand the sufferings of Christ, and the glory that should follow." Again, Rev. i. 5; xxii. 16, "I, Jesus, have sent mine angel to testify unto you these things in the churches."—Rev. xix. 10. We here are informed that the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy; and in Acts xx. 23 we are informed that the Holy Ghost witnessed to Paul that bonds and afflictions awaited him in every city or place; and in John xiv. 16–26, and xx. 26, 27, we read, "But when the Comforter is come, whom I will send unto you from the Father, the Spirit of truth, which proceedeth from the Father, he shall testify of me." "Nevertheless I tell you the truth; it is expedient for you that I go away; for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you; but if I depart, I will send him unto you. And when he is come, he will reprove the world of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment; of sin, because they believe not in me; of righteousness, because I go to my Father, and ye see me no more; of judgment, because the prince of this world is judged."—John xvi. 7–11. This prince I understand to be the god of the earth, of verse four. And in Zech. iv. 14 is presented the Lord of the whole earth, by whom these anointed ones stand; rendered in the margin "sons of oil." Now we know that a lamp without oil in the vessel is useless, as in Matt. xxv. 1–13. And we know that the oil here represents the essence of life or light (eternal), which is spirit, and by it prophecy, teaching, testifying, witnessing, all, all are manifest, and the world is reproved, and the church is approved of God; and [illegible] her this life or light and [illegible] manifest; and the god of [illegible] standing by or before them shall, when they shall have finished their testimony, as a beast ascend out of the bottomless pit, and make war with them, and overcome them, and kill them—the vessels or clothing of these witnesses. The term sackcloth here in this place is very significant, and not only represents the flesh as such, but also its vanity, its vileness, and yet manifesting all the love and humility of a servant of God, through whom God is manifest; and the only character that can be a witness in the sense of the Scriptures, and do and suffer as therein described. Therefore I will pass to notice the olive trees; and while I accept the fact of the olive tree being used as a figure of the people of God, both in the Old and New Testaments, I hold that in this instance, if in none other, it or they represent the principle of life or light, the spirit of prophecy, as manifested in them, and in connection with the two candlesticks, which in some sense I am free to admit prefigures the church, but only so far as to show the embodiment of these two witnesses, keeping in mind the fact that the number of these witnesses is not without importance in the economy of God. In the fifth we are informed that "fire proceedeth out of their mouth and devoureth their enemies; and if any man will hurt them, in this manner he must be killed." Under the types and shadows of the law every disobedience received its just reward, and in some extreme cases fire did consume the enemies of truth.—See Lev. x. 1, 2. Here are the two sons of Aaron offering an insult to Jehovah, a hurt to the witnesses of truth, and fire devoured them.—Num. xi. 2. Here the complainers, though of the house of Israel, are destroyed by fire from the Lord. And the disciples understood that it was the power of God that controlled these things, for they asked the Master (Luke ix. 54) if they should command fire to come down from heaven and consume his enemies. And as an illustration of the power and vengeance of God on his enemies, the Master calls the attention of his disciples to the flood, and the destruction of Sodom by fire, and leaves an admonition to all his followers, "Remember Lot's wife." And in Luke xii. 49 we read, "I am come to send fire on the earth; and what will I if it be already kindled?" The sixth informs us that "these have power to shut heaven, that it rain not in the days of their prophecy."—See 1 Kings xvii.; and many other places to the point. And farther, they have power over waters to turn them to blood, and to smite the earth with all plagues, as often as they will." Who, I ask, is not able to say that nothing short of the power of Omnipotence is able to do these things? None, I answer, but the dead. We are next informed that they are (the witnesses) to be overcome and killed; and, as I understand, it is by the god of this world, the beast that ascended out of the bottomless pit, called also "the prince of the power of the air, the Spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience," "the devil and Satan." And the eighth verse informs us where we may look for the dead bodies of these witnesses, and the period of time that they are to remain dead, and the name of this city, and that our Lord was crucified there. We have a type of this city very early in the history of Israel, in the account given of Jericho; and we are informed that this city was destroyed. Space forbids enlargement, and I will only say that this is the city of antichrist, spiritually called Sodom and Egypt, where our Lord was crucified. The period of time required for the witnesses to finish their testimony appears to be the same as that which the woman was to be preserved in her place in the wilderness (Rev. xii. 6, 14); and also the time for the bodies of these witnesses to lie in the streets of this city is three and one half days. Now, the beginning or ending of all these periods has not been made manifest to my mind, only on this wise, that all these things, as well as that which follows relative to the different beasts, all point to the second coming of Christ, which I understand is the crowning glory of the wonderous plan of the salvation of sinners; and no man knoweth, not even the Son, but the Father, when these things shall be. But when you see the fig tree budding you know that spring is near; even so come, Lord Jesus. I cannot forbear adding here that the signs of the times are ominous of the end, and that all would do well to heed the admonition of our Lord and Master, "What I say unto you I say unto all, Watch." Here is a good opportunity to adopt that purest, noblest and best confession of faith ever given a form of words, "Our Father who art in heaven." No matter where that heaven is, either in unmeasurable space, or the church, it is in the presence of God the Father, though visible only by faith. Who can say, "our Father," but the living? and they only can render perfect praise, as to say, "hallowed be thy name. Thy kingdom come, thy will be done in earth as in heaven." Do the dead desire the bread of heaven? Nay, but bread of earth, the loaves and fishes. "Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil." O! my brother, the glory and beauty of this theme is too wonderful for such a poor, sin-defiled worm to contemplate. Bless the Lord, O my soul; all within me, bless his holy name.

After closing my lengthy article (which you will pass by as one of my imperfections), I picked up your letter and read your suggestions on the three points. Your first and second are sufficiently noticed; but one thought touching the third seems necessary; that where the church as a body is referred to it is typified both in the Old and New Testaments by the number seven, viz., as a place of rest; the seventh day, week, month, year; and the perfect rest by the fiftieth year, or year of Jubilee. As a source of light, by seven lamps or candlesticks; and as a source of power, seven spirits; all signifying perfection. Hence to me the two candlesticks (Rev. xi. 4) signify not the perfection of prophecy or testimony, but its power in a given case to accomplish the determined end; for as the law required two witnesses to establish a fact, so also under the gospel God is pleased to give the same as he required in the pattern; and hence he was pleased to signify these things to the seven churches by their seven angels.—Rev. i.

Now, brother Chick, I hope you may be enabled to see the glory and beauty of this grand mystery, which (blessed be his holy name) is hid from the wise and prudent, but revealed unto babes, of which I certainly am one of the least; and when I pause and consider myself according to nature, I shrink back from the seeming presumption of offering any of my reflection to the church, either by word of mouth or by pen and paper. Hoping that you and the brethren editors will reject these thoughts if found not in harmony with the Scriptures (for if so found they had better find the waste basket, box or pile), and in the hope of a better resurrection by the power of an endless life, I am, as ever, your little brother for the peace of Zion,

A. H. HAGANS.

SOUTHAMPTON, Pa., May 17, 1895.

DEAR BRETHREN:—I have our dear sister Hassell's consent to make such use of the following letters as I think best, and I think they will be of especial interest to many dear brethren and sisters if published in the SIGNS, so I send them to you.

Your brother in hope,

SILAS H. DURAND.

WILLIAMSTON, N. C., Feb. 16, 1895.

ELDER SILAS H. DURAND—MY DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST:—I feel unworthy thus to address you, yet I cannot help it. You are to me a dear brother in the Lord, and a faithful servant of Jesus, whom he has called to preach his everlasting gospel. All our perfection is in Christ Jesus, so in him we may glory. He is the only perfect man that e[illegible]r lived on this earth. I was [illegible]ed when I received the last [illegible] of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES [illegible]ur letter in regard to unworthy me. I cannot tell you how I felt. I wanted to hide out of sight, I felt so small. Behind the cross of the bleeding Lamb I would hide, and beg for his blood to wash all my guilty stains away; for I am vile and full of sin. "When I would do good, evil is present with me." "The good that I would, I do not; but the evil which I would not, that I do." But let us exalt the Lord in the house of his friends. Is this not right? I do not see, my dear brother, how you could write as you have about me. You do not know what a perfect blank my life has been; but wondrous grace and mercy have followed me all the days of my life. In hearing your letter read it brought many things to my mind that, like a panorama, passed before me. Had I power to condense my thoughts I could tell many wonderful things of God; but as it is, I cannot. One thing in particular that came forcibly to my mind was a precious visit from your dear departed father and mother at my home, when my first dear husband was living. They came to attend an Old School meeting, and it was a precious one. Love abounded at that time in the hearts of the dear saints, and their meeting together was delightful, a heaven below. From this scene my thoughts went on and took in such a multitude of things, until the last farewell word and look came from my dear departed one, and after a few weeks I had to go alone hundreds of miles to see him placed in the cold and silent grave. Such trials and depths I have passed through; but the mercy and love of my dear God and Savior, his sustaining power, I cannot tell. Let us bless his holy name. The fellowship of saints, O how dear to me. It has been wonderful to me through all my afflictions, from east to west, from north to south. My four years of widowhood were years of deep trial and changes, as my dear departed one sacrificed his all for the cause of his blessed Master. And a wonderful, mysterious providence brought about the union and my relation with my last precious husband. We lived together in perfect union, passing through many cares and trials, both in peace and in war. I have been blessed with two of the best husbands that have fallen to women to have. No unkind words or hard sayings ever passed from either of my dear ones to me. I have been a widow nearly fourteen years since my last dear one passed away, and I feel as lonely and sad as ever, and ever expect to realize this while I remain a pilgrim here below. I cannot tell you, my dear brother, how precious to me is the fellowship of the dear people of God, although I feel so unworthy of their blessed fellowship and love. Why God should thus bless me I have felt to wonder ever since I was made to feel the need of Jesus, when I was but a child. When I professed his name, when I was but twelve years old, like Moses I felt, I chose rather to suffer affliction with the people of God than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season; and I feel that this is my desire at the close of my pilgrimage. But I so often fear that I do not know Jesus and the power of his resurrection. Am I a child of grace, or am I not? Have I taken the shadow for the substance? It is a great and wonderful thing to be made an heir with Jesus, a joint-heir with him in all his glory and perfection.

I have received a precious letter from your dear sister Bessie, who is a precious child of grace. I learn through her that you expect to leave very soon for Florida, on account of sister Durand's health. I trust, the Lord willing, it will benefit you both. Our life and health are in the Lord's hand; all our times are in his hand; and it is truly blessed when we are enabled to sink into his will. Grace alone can make us truly submissive. My own health is tolerable, considering my age. I feel much of the anxious cares of this mortal life. It is truly a world of trial. Trials and afflictions are the common lot of man; as Job says, "Man that is born of a woman is of few days and full of trouble." I think the afflictions which are the common lot of man, sickness, pain and death, the train of mortal woes, have a different effect upon the child of grace. All are to wean him from earth and draw him to Christ. And with all these, he has the world, the flesh and Satan to contend with. All are mighty foes. * * * *

I hope I do love the peace of Zion's children, and it is painful to see at any time a want of perfect union. We know the blessed Spirit alone can teach and lead us into all truth and in perfect harmony. In the kingdom of Christ there is but one Lord, one faith and one baptism; but antichrist has many. May our labors of love be for the peace of Zion, and may your labors be blessed of the Lord. I trust you will pardon all you see amiss in me. My own faults are so manifold that they hide the imperfections of others. Pray for me. We are in much sorrow at present, yet the Lord holds us up. Write me if you ever find time and feel so inclined.

In christian fellowship,

M. M. HASSELL.

WILLIAMSTON, N. C., Feb. 26, 1895.

ELDER SILAS H. DURAND—MY DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST:—I received your welcome letter of the 22d instant. I was truly glad to hear of your safe arrival at your destined place in Florida. I was pained to hear of sister Durand having La Grippe with her other troubles, and do hope she is better ere this. Truly the ways of God are past finding out. "His footsteps are in the great deep," but his ways are perfect, he reigns in righteousness, and rules in judgment. He doeth all things in perfect harmony with his divine will and holy purpose. His power is great, his wisdom is unsearchable, and his love is without bottom, brim or shore. All his purposes of grace are embraced in the covenant of love and mercy toward his dear, chosen people. His faithfulness and love will never fail toward his people. The blessed Jesus, who gave his life a ransom for them, will never leave nor forsake them. In all their afflictions he is afflicted, and the angel of his presence will sustain them. All their afflictions will work for their good, whatever their character or degree. In sickness or in health, in poverty's vale, or abounding in wealth, in all their conflicts with the world, the flesh and Satan, yes, my dear brother, in every age, in every clime, God will be a refuge to all his dear people. He is as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land, a strong hold in the day of trouble. I know this to be true, whether I am a child of grace or not. I can but exalt him, and encourage others to trust in the mighty God of Jacob. He is so faithful and true, when we are so unfaithful and so distrustful. His loving-kindness never fails. How sweetly does the blessed Jesus come to his weary, disconsolate ones, and whisper some sweet word of peace and love to cheer the sinking, fainting soul, like he did to dear sister Durand, with the words, "The darkness and the light are both alike to me." I have often realized so many such sweet whispers, and for a few weeks past they would come to me one after another, by day and by night. I love to dwell on them. But what do you think, dear brother? The question often comes into my mind, "You do not know that these precious things come to you by the impartation of the Holy Spirit. It may be they have come to you as words that you have read or heard." And like a fiery dart it will often try the soul. Have you ever been thus troubled?

I will have to stop my roving thoughts. I wrote you, my dear brother, last week. I fear that I may trouble you too much with my scribbles. I felt that I desired to acknowledge your last letter, and hope I may not do wrong in so doing. I feel unworthy to address you or to take your time to read my letters. But Jesus is worthy to be exalted, so we will hide behind his cross and leave all there. If you knew me as I do myself you would not have written about me as you did in your letter to the SIGNS. All tends to make me feel lonely. I trust the dear Lord will be with you and strengthen you abundantly by his gracious peace, and give you abundant grace amid all your trials and cares. I trust you may be benefited in health, as well as sister Durand. We know that the trials of this mortal life are manifold. I truly feel that this is a wilderness land, one of sorrow. How blessed when we are enabled to trust in a God of all power. Do we not see, the longer we live, that this world is but an empty show? The nations of the earth have corrupted their ways before God; but he reigns and holds the sceptre in his own right hand. His works are glorious in nature. Let us behold the starry heavens, the sun and the moon, and we are lost in wonder. And then all his manifold works are wonderful. O that I could bless the Lord with all the powers of my soul, and leave all my sorrows and trials in his blessed hands, and trust him evermore, in darkness and in light; but I am so weak and helpless, a poor, vile sinner.

We most deeply feel and appreciate, dear brother, your sympathy and feeling for us in our new deep trial. We cannot tell you how troubled we are. Pray for us. The fellowship of saints is so precious, even if it comes from the isles of the sea. My love goes with you both and your little ones. I feel that God will ever bless you. I know and feel that the mantle of charity will still be extended to me. May we all be enabled to wait upon our Father's will.

If you can write me again please do so. In christian fellowship from your sister in Christ, I hope,

M. M. HASSELL.

APRIL 7, 1895.

I AM glad to hear that sister Durand is improving some. I hope ere this she is much better. * * But all is of grace; so let us give glory to God for the riches of his grace, which abounds to the chief of sinners. So, my dear brother, the strong must bear the infirmities of the weak, and I am sure that you will bear with all my weakness.

My poor letters are yours when they fall into your hands, so I leave them with your wisdom and judgment, with all their weakness, hoping you will pardon my trespass upon your time to send them. I greatly enjoy your letters when I get them and read their contents. Communion of saints, how precious! Their joys and sorrows are one; their trials and temptations are in a measure alike. Some go down into very deep waters, while others may not so deeply wade; and the light of such may be greater; but all by the same divine teaching. All is to show that power and grace of God which brings salvation. All is "for the lifting of Jesus on high." How blessed and glorious when Jesus is exalted and men abased. May we be made to rejoice in seeing the Lord's work revived, and the communion and fellowship of God's dear people more fully abound "from the river to the ends of the earth." Then would go forth the precious words, "Behold how these love one another." Zion would more manifestly appear the perfection of beauty, and out of it God more manifestly shine.

I do love to review in my meditations the days gone by in my pilgrimage journey. How many precious seasons have I enjoyed with God's dear children; how many favored spots does my mind go back to, which seemed like a little heaven below, in this wilderness land. Many a stone could be erected where there was a Bethel, and the precious memory cheers our hearts even down to old age. So many hundred of those dear ones who thus met and communed together are now gone; their earthly caskets taken down, laid aside, and their glorified spirits are basking in the ineffable glory of the sinless land where Jesus dwells. No thought can reach the glory and blessedness of that inheritance which God has in reserve for those that love him. O! my dear brother, the wonders of the unseen world have not been revealed to mortal sight. It is a spiritual world. The things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal. What blessedness and glory will burst upon the enraptured vision of every redeemed sinner, when he is called to leave this body of sin and death.

I cannot tell you, dear brother, how highly I appreciate your letters. I feel that the dear Lord inclines your heart to remember me, a poor, tried and afflicted pilgrim. I feel that every such token of love and mercy is from the dear Savior, who by his blessed Spirit leads you and others to write me such dear, spiritual letters. You send many a messenger of mercy to the afflicted child of God. You take many precious moments from your many cares and labors. You, like many other faithful servants, do not waste precious time. Your rest will be glorious when your work is done, and your Master calls you home to dwell with him. Your last letter was especially rich in experience. It is deep. I feel that I can testify to the blessed truth you wrote, but all seems so much greater than mine. I often inquire, Do I truly know anything about these deep spiritual things, so wonderful and mysterious? I wish I could write and tell how I feel and view the wonderful works of God. The way of salvation is so wonderful and mysterious. It is without bottom or shore. I feel, my dear brother, that if I possessed all the wealth of this world, and it was mine to use, it would be nothing. Jesus and his love is untold riches, and wealth unknown. Jesus "is all and in all." I feel assured that you are an heir of God, and a faithful servant of Christ. May you still be strengthened and long spared to preach the word. May grace abound toward you in all of your trials. God's ministers have to battle with the world. They of course have worldly thoughts and many anxious cares which control them, and they often feel sick of self. I know something of their trials. I have watched their anxious groans from trouble and care. I feel that I have been a companion of two in tribulation. They are now at rest, and I am still in these low grounds of sorrow.

I would be glad to know that you went to Wilson. I would be so glad to meet you and sister Durand. I do sincerely hope she will reach home much better off, and yourself and children also. Sylvester returned to Wilson yesterday. I would have been so glad you could have met.

I was pleased to read those letters you sent of those dear brethren in the SIGNS. God will have witnesses for his cause and truth. He takes away some and raises up others. His name is exalted.

My dear ones are not well, but so as to be up. I am pained to tell you that my dear son-in-law writes that he is no better. Yet we have hopes that he is a little better. I am feeble. I have had two chills the present week. My love to sister Durand and sister Bessie, and a kiss to your little daughters. When you get home and rested and have a moment to spare I would love to hear from you and yours, although I still feel unworthy of such favors.

With much christian regard, I am still your aged sister in hope,

M. M. HASSELL.

MARY PARKER.

THE sufferings of this dear sister are ended, and she has entered into rest. The obituary notice which appeared in the SIGNS of June 26th tells the last of the story of her mortal life, so far as it can be told. The former portions, to the time of her last sickness, have appeared in the SIGNS from time to time during the past six or seven years, and more fully in the book of "Reminiscenses and Letters," which was published in 1891, and of which a few hundred copies remain unsold. The story is one of peculiar and touching interest to any thoughtful any sympathetic person, because of the peculiarly painful and oppressive bodily afflictions which she endured; the unflagging energy she manifested while she was able to go about; the patience and fortitude with which she bore the pain and the varied distress caused by her peculiar maladies; the persistence with which she carried on her immense correspondence, writing when she could only write a few words at a time without having to lay down her pen and change her position; and because of the clear, simple and pleasant way in which she has told the incidents of her life. But to those who are spiritual the chief interest of this sad history of suffering is because of the grace that was given her to put her trust so wholly and implicitly in the dear Savior, and the spiritual joy and consolation which she experienced at times in the very darkest hours of the many dark and wearisome months and years that were appointed unto her, and of which she loved to speak to her kindred in Christ.

Two weeks before her departure, as I sat by her bed talking with her, she said, "I wonder why I am here so long, so perfectly useless. I can be of no use to anybody, but have been such a burden to all my friends." I replied in substance as follows, "You cannot judge in that way of your usefulness. Every one in the church has an appointed work to do, some of one kind and some of another. You have had great affliction and suffering to endure, and you have been given grace and strength according to your day, and have been enabled to trust in the Lord, and to feel his dear, supporting and comforting presence; and you have been given liberty to write of these experiences in such a way that very many of the Lord's dear people have been comforted and strengthened by what you have said. And more than that, many cases of great affliction similar to yours have become known beyond the circle of their immediate friends, through what you have written, and have received comforting and substantial tokens of sympathy from members of their Father's family whom they never saw. You also have been the means of stirring up the grace of charity in many a heart, which is always a blessing to a child of God. It is a great blessing to have one's heart touched with a feeling of thoughtful and helpful sympathy for the afflicted. This is why it is more blessed to give than to receive." She seemed to be comforted by the evidence

MATTHEW XXIII. 37--39.

BROTHER R. C. Newport, of Conway, Missouri, some time last fall requested our views in behalf of his aged sister, Sally Bennett, upon the Scripture recorded in Matthew xxiii. 37. He says that his sister is very aged and deaf, and can hardly make out manuscript, and for this cause he wishes an early reply. In the winter a request came to us from brother Hiram Stanly, of Stony Knoll, N. C., for our views upon the same Scripture. We hope that both the brethren will pardon the delay in replying, as we have been much pressed for time all the past winter and spring. We feel now like trying to respond to these requests.

The Scripture referred to reads as follows, "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets, and stonest them which are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not! Behold, your house is left unto you desolate. For I say unto you, Ye shall not see me henceforth, till ye shall say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord."

We suppose that our correspondents may have heard perversions of this Scripture, as we also have all our life, which may be the main reason why they desire that something should be said about it. When carefully considered there is in this Scripture no warrant for saying that the God of heaven desires to save men from sin and death and endless punishment, but cannot because they will not let him. There is in this Scripture positively no reference whatever to the salvation which is in Christ from sin and death and hell. Jerusalem is not the spiritual, but the literal Jerusalem that then was, and upon which the Master was looking when he spoke these words. It was this city of Judea, which had in former generations killed the prophets, and stoned those whom God had sent unto them. By Jerusalem is not meant the houses, temples, streets and walls upon which he was gazing, but the people who dwelt there. They had from the days of Solomon, who built the temple, ever been a rebellious nation, continually slighting and disobeying the word of the Lord. For their disobedience they had often received chastisement. Often they became a people scattered, and peeled and ground under the heel of the oppressor; yet God had dealt with them in great mercy. He had borne their ill-humors, their pride and headiness, and had proved himself compassionate and long-suffering toward them. He had sent them prophets, wise men and scribes, rising up early (he says) and sending them. For all this they would not hearken, but had gone on in the pride and rebellion of their hearts, and had in their vain imagination even limited the Holy One of Israel.

Now all this had been true of that national people, and of the dealings of God with them; but in all this there was to them no promise of eternal life on the one hand, nor threat of eternal death on the other. The blessings promised to that people for obedience were all temporal; the curses for disobedience were also temporal. The blessing was in basket and store, in the increase of their flocks and herds, and the curses were also of the same sort. In all that Jewish economy there was not one promise of eternal life for obedience, nor of eternal death for disobedience. God dealt with them as a nation, and the commandments and the blessings and curses all related to their national life. Some who obeyed the letter of the law in their outward conformity to its requirements, yet did not enter into eternal life. Saul of Tarsus in his natural state is an instance of this. Yet the blessing of outward obedience fell upon them.

We understand that Jesus in the language of the text which we are considering refers to all these past centuries of patience and pity and long-suffering which God had shown toward them. We would not say that he does not include the years of his own public ministry among them, which in a sense were the culmination of the work of prophets, wise men and scribes which had been sent to them from time to time; but we feel sure in our mind that the Lord here has chiefly in mind the centuries of the past. When he says, "How often would I have gathered thy children," it is a clear proof of his divinity, for he is speaking of the dealings of God with them. Thus this language is full proof of his divine nature.

In the parable recorded Matthew xxi. 33–40 Jesus teaches the same things. There the householder is the Lord of hosts. The vineyard is the people of Israel. The husbandmen are those who had committed to their care this vineyard. The servants who were sent to the husbandmen were the prophets, wise men and scribes who had been stoned and killed. The son of the householder is the Lord Jesus Christ, who also was crucified and slain by the carnal Jews. Here the work of the son is presented as a continuation of the work of the servants, and, as said before, we are sure that in a sense it was; but it is manifest that this whole parable, as well as the text itself, relates to that people as a nation, and not to the personal eternal salvation of any man. There is no reference to the new man in Christ, the new nature, or to eternal life, or the new birth. All relates to the national life and the national welfare of that Jewish people. By the mouth of his prophets the Lord rebuked them and warned them and instructed them through all their former generations.

The illustration or comparison which the Savior uses is very striking, "As a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings." It is as though he had said, As a hen shelters her chickens close beside herself from danger, from the cold, and from every foe and fear, and nourishes and cherishes them there, even so would I, O Jerusalem, have sheltered, nourished and cared for thy children [the Jewish people or nation], as has been made manifest by the word of my servants whom I have sent unto you. Israel had departed from the Lord in disobeying his word, and in seeking other help, and so had forfeited the blessings which nearness to him secured to them. He had called them to obedience of his word, and to a firm reliance upon him. This was calling them together to himself. But the whole history of that rebellious people is a sad commentary upon the expression, "But ye would not." Called to trust in him alone, they trusted instead in other gods, or in men who were weak as themselves. Called to obedience, they broke all his commandments in turn, and were declared to be the most stiff-necked and rebellious of all people. They were his chosen people, and their priests and teachers he had ordained among them, with all the order and ordinances of that Jewish house; yet they were rebellious. As his people, he would have gathered them to himself, as he had shown them. We have heard it said, and well said, that as the hen gathers her chickens, not to make them hers, but because they are hers, not to make them chickens, but because they are chickens, so the Lord does not gather his children together to make them his children, but because they are his children; and if Israel in the sense of the text is not gathered, she is none the less Israel, even as if she be thus gathered she is no more Israel than before. But how much better off are the chickens sheltered and nourished together under the mother's wings. Even so the trustful and obedient Israel are much better off than Israel in her transgression can be. To again sum the matter up, it seems to us that the expression to "gather together," used by the Savior here, means that he often by the word of his prophets called Israel to forsake their idols and their wanderings, and serve and trust him, but their leaders and rulers and guides always caused Israel to err.

Now he says, "Behold, your house is left unto you desolate." See verses thirty-five and thirty-six, just preceding the text. There he says that upon the generation which then was should fall all the blood shed from Abel down. In this generation should culminate all the wickedness and rebellion of that people in all their generations. As said in the parable (chapter xxi.), when they have slain the son, the commandment should go forth to smite and destroy that city. Soon Jerusalem would fill up the full measure of the iniquity of their fathers, and upon them should fall the vengeance of God in full measure. In chapter xxiv., verse 21, Jesus says, "For then shall be great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time, no, nor ever shall be." This is what the Savior meant by the words, "Behold, your house is left unto you desolate." Still, national Israel is meant; and in that time of woe the innocent suffered with the guilty. The babe at the breast perished with its mother. As a nation Israel was destroyed. Her homes and her altars were desolate forever.

Since that awful day God has never dealt with Israel as he had before. He has never sent them since then prophets, wise men and scribes. They have been a people desolate and forsaken. Thus has been fulfilled his word, that they should see him no more until God had wrought such a change in their heart that they could say, "Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord." Some among them, like Saul of Tarsus, have seen him, and have been made to rejoice at his coming, and have blessed the name of the Lord; but to them as a people he has never come as before. Israel still walks in darkness, and still hates the name of the Son. As their fathers killed that just one, so would they; and now no message from the throne ever reaches their ears. No vision of God is ever vouchsafed to them; and this is but the fulfillment of the Savior's words, "Ye shall not see me henceforth." But the heart of one here and there has been prepared to say, "Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord," and to such the Lord reveals himself. All such bless the Lord for all his wonderful grace and mercy. This is of course true of all believers; but we are speaking especially of the Jewish people, as the Savior in the text was doing.

But the question may occur to the minds of our correspondents, Is there no application of this Scripture in the present time, and to the real spiritual people of God? We would answer that we doubt not that all things under the old covenant are types of things under the new covenant. We believe that God deals with his spiritual people according to the type given of old. It seems to us still true that the disobedient suffer chastisement, while the willing and obedient eat the good of the land. In gospel times the house of God's people has at times been left unto them desolate for their transgressions. Witness most of the seven churches of Asia, as recorded in the opening chapters of Revelation. God's people to-day may despise his commandments, reproofs and warnings, and so be left desolate of all spiritual joy, peace and comfort. This is true of churches, and it is true of individuals also. We have dwelt almost wholly upon the dealings of God with literal Israel, as the text related to that; but it has seemed to us that the lessons to be learned from it all were applicable to all the people of God who are disobedient to-day.

The text is not an appeal to the dead in sin. It belongs to the living in Jerusalem, the antitype of the Jerusalem that then was. It does not relate to that salvation which is secured to every heir of promise in Christ, but to this present daily salvation which the people of God experience. Whatever of warning the text contains is for the benefit of the erring believer who sows to the flesh rather than to the Spirit. We trust that while writing the above we have ourselves felt something of the power of this word applied to ourself. We trust it may be of use to others also, and to our correspondents especially.

C.

RIGHTS OF CHURCHES, AND LEGITIMATE SPHERE OF ASSOCIATIONS.

It is generally conceded that every regular church of our Redeemer has an undisputed right to regulate all her own affairs, so far as order, discipline and church government are concerned, by what she understands to be the divine rule laid down by authority of the Head of the church in the New Testament, without the interference of any other church or religious body of any kind whatever. It is true, neither churches nor individuals have any right to do that which is not in itself right; but each church must be, in her own case, most competent to judge what the divine standard recognizes as right. The Baptists in all past ages, so far as we know, have contended that each church is, to a certain extent, an independent body. By independence, however, they simply mean to deny that they stand amenable to any other ecclesiastical body or power on earth; but it is not claimed that any church has a right to act independently of the laws of the kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ. Whilst each church stands as an independent community in itself, the duty and privilege of maintaining an intercourse with all sister churches of the same faith and order has been duly acknowledged; and in order to keep up such correspondence it has been found necessary for each church to give such expressions of her faith and order as to satisfy sister churches that there is unanimity in faith and order, which is indispensable to a general fellowship. Each church is, of course, to judge for herself in what manner the divine rule requires her to exhibit her faith and order; and her sister churches, on hearing of her affairs, or on beholding her order, have the right to judge of it, and extend or withhold from her the expression of their fellowship according to their judgment. In addition to the exhibition made from their pulpits, and their public administration of ordinances, it has been common to write a summary of their faith, or of what their faith apprehends to be taught in the Scriptures, as the grand and fundamental doctrine of the gospel, and the order which they believe to be essential to the church of God. We are fully aware of the evils sometimes attending what are called Articles of Faith; and when they are placed between the disciples and the Bible we repudiate them as involving a principle of idolatry. But we see no necessity for making a written statement of what we as churches or as individuals hold to be Bible doctrine or order, to stand between us and the Scriptures as the only inspired and infallible rule. We have witnessed many of the evils to which a brother has made allusion, and with him we deplore them; but it really seems to us that written articles, when simply to set forth the sentiments which distinguish the churches of our fellowship from all other professed churches, are not chargeable for the bad use which some misguided persons make of them. For instance, we are known as Old School Baptists. Well, what kind of Baptists are they? The terms "Old School Baptists" are used to distinguish those churches and individuals who are so called, from the New School, Campbellite, Free Will, or Seventh Day Baptists, and to distinguish them as holding certain definite views of doctrine and religious order. And when it is demanded of us, we hesitate not to publish to the world what doctrinal sentiments and gospel practice distinguish us from all other kinds of Baptists or other professors of religion.

If Articles of Faith are however used to supply what is supposed to be a deficiency in the Bible, or are to be clung to when we perceive that they are not in harmony with the Scriptures, their tendency cannot fail to be evil. And for all that we can see, what we may publish in the SIGNS, or what we preach from the pulpit, is liable to the same abuse. If the decision of the editor, or of any brother writing in this paper, should come to be regarded as a standard for the faith or practice of all the readers, the consequence would be a departure from the infallible, and an adoption of a fallible guide; and the same would, in our estimation, be the case were our views expressed in the pulpit or elsewhere. We have never been any stickler for what are called creeds, and we have been, and still are, decidedly opposed to formulas to be taught as theories of religion, whereby unregenerated persons are aided into a religious profession; but we should not know how to decide in favor or against the reception of a member into the church, who only professed to believe the Scriptures, unless we, with the church to which we belong, had some definite understanding of the distinguishing doctrine and order of the gospel. Whether such distinguishing understanding were written on paper, or only distinctly understood by all the members, would not change the nature of it. The sentiments of the church being written or unwritten is not what constitutes the faith or belief of the church. Great care should be observed by all christians and churches to guard against an unjustifiable reliance on written expressions of faith, and all other uninspired writing, lest we should by them be swerved from the Scriptures as our only infallible guide and standard.

By associations, we understand our brother to mean the voluntary association of the churches of our order together for the purpose of mutual correspondence and edification. It is not claimed by any that associations are essential to gospel order, or that they are formed in obedience to any specific command of our Lord found in the divine record; but they are, and have been, regarded like other voluntary gatherings of God's people for the worship of God and the general edification of one another, as lawful privileges of the saints. As to their legitimate sphere, they have, in our estimation, no more power than any other collection of christian brethren have who are thrown into each other's company, and mutually agree to spend the time in religious worship and edifying conversation.

If we regard associations as many good brethren do, to be the creatures of the churches, still they have no powers except such as the churches have given to them, as messengers. If brethren are sent only as messengers to meet and associate with messengers sent in like manner from other churches of the order, then they have power to carry the messages which are sent by them, and to make a fair report to their churches of the manner in which they have discharged their duty. With us the term delegate is very objectionable when applied to brethren sent by the churches, because we know of no power the church has to delegate to any of her members, and because that term implies a representative, whereas none can represent the church of the living God in that sense. This term is not used among the churches in this section of country, because our messengers are not empowered to act as delegates, or to use the power of the church for any purpose, only as messengers to act in obedience to the authority of the churches to which they severally belong. Associations deriving all the authority they have from their churches, can have no authority to lord it over the churches, as the churches have no such power to delegate to them, and as they have no power from any other source. Yet it is certain that many associations, especially those of the New School, have virtually converted themselves into ecclesiastical councils and legislative bodies, and at their sessions gravely discuss questions of expediency, pass decrees, levy taxes, concoct measures, employ agencies, and assume a general supervision of the churches; and any church refusing to be bound by their decisions is branded as heterodox and disorderly. The associations in this vicinity disclaim being even advisory councils; they simply hold their annual meetings for the worship of God, and to cultivate an acquaintance with each other by intercommunication and christian correspondence. But there are very many others in various parts of the United States which profess to be advisory councils. Where they are so, this sphere, of course, embraces the duty of giving advice to the churches, when called on to do so.

We know of no good reason why any christian should not give advice to his fellow-christians on all proper occasions, especially when asked for it; but the formation of an ecclesiastical council for that or for any other purpose is of more doubtful propriety or utility. Churches and christians generally, if they lack wisdom, should ask it of him who giveth liberally, and upbraideth not; and if in any unusually trying case a church desires to be favored with the wisdom of sister churches, it has the undoubted right to invite such churches to send faithful brethren to sit with (not over) them in their regular church meetings, where they can have full opportunity to let their light shine.

PLEASE BE SURE

In sending remittances for renewals of subscriptions to give us the same name that the paper is already coming to. If the party is married, and the paper is coming to the wife's name, and we receive a remittance to renew the subscription, and the husband's name is given, we have no means of knowing that it is meant for the subscription in the wife's name; consequently the husband's name is entered on our list, and the paper sent to both parties. Or if the paper is coming in the husband's name, and the renewal is sent in the wife's name, the same thing is likely to occur. It is a good plan to inclose in the letter one of the little pink slips containing the name, taken either from the margin of the paper or from the wrapper in which the paper comes.

that the Lord had made her to be of some help to others, even though it were through her afflictions.

I saw sister Mary first in September, 1868, at the home of her father, Elder John Parker, in Logan, Ohio, having some appointments in that neighborhood. She was then twenty years old, and had been a member of the church two years. She appeared in perfect health, so far as I can remember, though she speaks in her "Reminiscences" of the terrible disease having then already begun to manifest itself. The next time I saw her was May 12th, 1890, in the home of her brother, J. B. Parker, in New Holland. Nearly twenty-two years of time, together with the fearful malady, had made a great change in her appearance. The letters in which I spoke particularly of this visit, and the three visits subsequently made, were published in the SIGNS, and the first one is in the book, page 224; I will not therefore dwell upon them here. That Monday afternoon I spoke in the house, looking from the hall where I stood, out upon the porch and lawn where many friends and neighbors were seated, into the parlor at my right, which was also filled, and into her room at my left, where she sat, helpless, unable to lie down even, unable to stand, and almost unable to sit, with three or four friends by her. She had not heard a gospel sermon, she said afterward in a letter to sister Bessie, in eleven years. She listened as though her hungry, thirsty soul was being refreshed with the bread and water of life. I will not here dwell upon the terrible condition of suffering in which her poor body then was. The descriptions given in her letters are startling, but not exaggerated. Extracts from letters that give a very comprehensive description were published in the SIGNS, and in the book on page 215. It did not then appear as though she could possibly live more than a few weeks.

The liberality of brethren and friends, and the sale of the book, were very helpful to her, making her condition more comfortable.

Sister M. M. Rounsavell, of Warwick, N. Y., who had been a great sufferer herself, was especially stirred up in behalf of sister Mary. Only a very special exercise of mind could account for the complete self-abnegation of this dear sister, and the devotion of her time and means to this one object. For a time sister Mary's suffering condition was on her mind so that she could not sleep. She made two other visits, and remained for a time as special nurse. Last spring she went with a fixed determination to break up the habit of taking morphia, which physicians had inaugurated, and which they and everybody else thought was essential to the continuance of life. She set about that work and accomplished it, against the judgment of all, and the opposition and piteous protestations of the poor sick one. No wonder the brother speaks of her as an angel of mercy to his sister. She also healed the ulcerous sores on the limbs, that had baffled the skill of physicians for some years, and one of which was so terrible in appearance that few could bear to look at it when I was there in 1890.

I was ready to hope for much, but when sister Rounsavell telegraphed me that she was going to start with sister Mary at a given time for Philadelphia, and that I should arrange for entrance into a hospital, although the suggestion to come, if possible, had gone from us, I was immeasurably astonished and startled. But they came, and after treatment at the University Hospital, everybody was further startled by the declaration of sister R. that she was going to take Mary home with her, though she could not stand, and there was no prospect that she ever would. But she did get so as to stand and to walk with crutches.

Some letters of hers tell of the comfort it was to her to have her mind free from the effect of drugs, to meet the dear brethren and sisters who came to see her while in the hospital, to be be able to stand and move along with crutches, to enjoy rides out along the roads in the beautiful Warwick valley, and to go again into a meeting-house and hear the gospel preached, and join with the church in the worship of the true and living God. She heard brother Wm. L. Beebe, I think, several times, and also some others. Sister Bessie and my wife and children saw her in the hospital, which was a great satisfaction. They, with many others who saw her there, had never met her before, though well acquainted by correspondence. We hoped to have her at our home, but that was not to be. They never saw her again in life. I did not see her until two weeks before her departure.

The funeral was a quiet one, on a quiet summer afternoon, in the quiet old meeting-house that stands on a pleasant hill in the village of Warwick. A number of brethren and sisters and friends were present, all of that place except brother and sister Jenkins and sister Bessie and myself. I thought of the little family of three who were waiting for her in her home in the village of New Holland, nearly five hundred miles away, and of the large company of neighbors and friends who would be together at her funeral there within two days, and of the great number scattered throughout the whole country, who would in a few days see her name in the list of the departed, and would feel that a very dear sister had gone, and would involuntarily rejoice that she had reached the end of her appointed months of weariness and pain, and had gone to a home of eternal rest and blessedness.

Brother Jenkins read the 77th Psalm, and how fittingly it seemed to apply to the life of a poor, suffering pilgrim here below, and to the swallowing up of that mortal life in the glory and praise and immortality of God, when he has led his flock like a shepherd, out of all the thorny wilderness below, into the fields of everlasting peace and joy above.

SILAS H. DURAND.

P. S.—As the book was published for the benefit of sister Mary, and she needs our help no longer, I will sell the remainder for enough to cover the cost of them, which will be about fifty cents. I will send by mail, postpaid, for sixty cents, or by express, at the cost of the purchaser, for six dollars per dozen. I think there are about four hundred left. It is spoken of very highly by those who have read it, as of special interest.

I would be glad if this article should be copied by our publications.

SOUTHAMPTON, Pa., July 3, 1895.

DELMAR, Del., March 28, 1895.

ELDER A. B. FRANCIS—MY DEAR BROTHER:—I hope you will please pardon me for troubling you to read a few thoughts which have been presented to my mind upon the subject of the will of God. Yet I feel myself so weak and ignorant in spiritual things that it seems almost useless for me to try to write anything of this holy and righteous will; but I have the desire, and will make the attempt to relieve my mind.

It was the will of God that he create the heaven and earth. It was God's will that he form Adam of the dust of the ground and breathe into his nostrils the breath of life. It was God's will to cause a deep sleep to fall upon Adam, and to take one of his ribs and make a woman. It was God's will to plant the garden of Eden, and to create all that was therein, even the tempter in the shape of a serpent; and it was his will to give the serpent power. It was his will to place the tree of knowledge of good and evil and its fruit in the garden, for the purpose which it accomplished, although this fact is denied; for it is said by some that Adam and Eve were put in the garden with good and evil; that if they chose evil it was their will to do so, and not the will of God, because God would like for all to choose godliness, and if they do not it is contrary to his will. But the God in whom I hope I trust says, "I am the Lord, and there is none else, there is no God besides me." He worketh all things after the counsel of his own will, and not the will of man. It is recorded, "It is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that sheweth mercy." Here we see God's will. Jesus says, "I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me." What was that will? "That of all the Father hath given me I should lose nothing." Thus we see it was God's will that not one of his should be lost. But now comes the question in the heart of every one of his children, Am I a child of God? Can a poor, helpless, unworthy sinner, such as I know myself to be, be mentioned in the will of God? These are the subjects of his grace, and are mentioned in his will, as heirs of God and joint-heirs with Jesus Christ. It is the poor and needy sinner that is heir to the glorious inheritance. "Blessed are the poor in spirit; for theirs is the kingdom of heaven." "Blessed be ye poor; for yours is the kingdom of God." These are the words of Jesus to his disciples. Whose will is it that the children of God should be poor in spirit, and know themselves to be sinners? Is it not the will of God? It is said by many that man has the will or power of receiving or rejecting the Holy Spirit. Jesus says, "No man can come to me except the Father which hath sent me draw him; and I will raise him up again at the last day." Again, some say that all men are drawn of the Father. Jesus says, "Every man therefore that hath heard and hath learned of the Father cometh unto me." God says, "I will put my laws into their mind, and write them in their hearts; and I will be to them a God, and they shall be to me a people." Now the question may be asked, Who are they? They are those who were chosen in Christ before the foundation of the world, according to the will of God. Jesus said, "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth." Does not this include the will power of man? Then what power has man, only as it is given him from above, as it was with Pilate? How boastful it is to say, We have power to reject the Spirit of God. God speaks, and it is done; he commands, and it stands fast. How wonderful is the power of God, and how sure are his promises to his chosen according to his purpose. As Jesus said to his disciples, "Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you." Here we see that it was God's will that they were chosen, and not the will of those who are the chosen. The choice of the people of God was made before man was created. What is man? God tells us that he is of the dust, and to dust he shall return. Let us for a moment try to see what dust is, and of what value it is, and what strength it possesses. Dust is powdered earth, and is in itself of no value. It has no strength. It can be given strength by adding something that has power and strength in it. So we see that dust is powerless in itself. So is man. What would he be without the power and will of God? Jesus did not do his own will while on earth, but the will of him that sent him. When he prayed he said to his Father, "Not my will, but thine be done." When he taught his disciples to pray he taught them to say, "Thy will be done." I do not understand that anything ever existed, or ever will exist, that was or will be contrary to the will of God. He says, "I form the light, and create darkness; I make peace, and create evil. I the Lord do all these things."—Isa. xlv. 7. All power is his, and it is impossible for anything to exist or transpire that he does not will to be so. If God had power to speak a world into existence, as all admit, and at that time there was no man to help him in his work, how ridiculous it seems for one to say he has not the power to speak anything out of existence, or to prevent from existing anything that is contrary to his will, but instead must have man, a poor, helpless worm of the earth, to assist him to perform his will. This idea or thought is also in accordance with the will of God. Jesus said, "I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, that thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes: even so, Father, for so it seemed good in thy sight." All men think because they cannot help thinking; for surely we cannot control our thoughts. This is also denied by some, as it is said that we are commanded to forsake our wicked thoughts. This is true; but we are nowhere commanded not to have them, but rather that we should not love and cherish them. When Jesus said that except a man forsake father and mother, wife and children, he could not be his disciple, he did not mean that we should not have any father or mother, wife or children, but that we should love him with all our soul, mind and strength, and keep his commandments, which he will put in our minds and write them in our hearts. The sinful thoughts of the child of God are a great source of trouble; and instead of loving and cherishing them, he hates them; they are a burden to his very soul, and he says, O that I might never have them again. But still they come; and why? Because he cannot control them. This is also according to the will of God. Again, we are asked, Why? Because it shows the weakness of man and the power of God. "I am the Lord, that is my name; and my glory will I not give to another, neither my praise to graven images."—Isa. xlii. 8. So we see that instead of being able to control and perform the things of God, we are not able even to control ourselves. Man is full of pride and vanity; but when taught of God what is he? He withers like the flower of the field when parched by the sun, and is so troubled because of sin that dwells in his flesh that he is made to cry unto God, as the poor publican did, "God, be merciful to me, a sinner." And now his only hope is in the finished work of Jesus, and no longer in the fruits of his own labor. "For by grace are ye saved, through faith; and that not of yourselves; it is the gift of God: not of works, lest any man should boast."

May it be God's will to bless the truth and build up Zion.

Your unworthy brother in hope,

H. CLAUDE KER.

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE.

TO MOST of our readers the above mentioned book is too well known to need any introduction or a description by us. While many of the Bibles have a Concordance appended, they are generally so condensed or abridged as to be of little or no use. Cruden's Complete Concordance, however, enables one to readily turn to any passage of Scripture of which they can call to mind two or three words, and in our opinion is the most complete and convenient as a reference book of any published. In addition, it contains many other aids in studying the Bible, as may be seen by reference to advertisement on last page. Remember, both the books there mentioned are CRUDEN'S COMPLETE.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES:—By request of his daughter, Miss Georgia Hixson, I send you the obituary of John H. Hixson. He died on March 9th, 1895, aged 76 years, 6 months and 14 days. His remains were laid beside his devoted wife's, who preceded him seven years, in the family burying-ground at Dover, Va.

Uncle John (that is what I always called him) was a noble man in many respects, with a deep, conscientious regard for all the relations of life. What a rich legacy he has left to his children, an honorable man, a kind and loving husband, a devoted father, a true friend to those he admired. He loved the Old Baptists, and would ride miles, though a constant sufferer, to hear them preach and to be with them. I am informed that he suffered with rheumatism since he was seven years old, and very much crippled for many years. He bore his sufferings with wonderful fortitude, never willing to make another feel sorry for him. He finally died with heart trouble, having the most tender care from his loving and devoted children and friends. His daughter writes that he was conscious of his condition, and said he wanted to go home, and how happy he would be. He took leave of his family five days before his death. He leaves five daughters, one son and many friends to mourn his departure.

Dear children, he is in the hands of the God of the whole earth, who will do right. Faith in him is the only consolation the christian heart can know. May it please our heavenly Father to give you this blessed faith.

Your friend,

E. V. WHITE.

LEESBURGH, Va., July 2, 1895.

DIED—April 15th, 1895, after a lingering illness of a pulmonary nature, Mrs. Sarah Carroll Barlow, wife of Mr. Wm. Barlow, of Hobart, Delaware Co., N. Y., aged 55 years.

Mrs. Barlow was not a professor of religion, yet we believe that she gave evidence of the possession of a good hope through the grace of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. Nothing seemed more to her liking than to attend the meetings of the Old School Baptist Church when able so to do, to hear the gospel of Christ proclaimed; and as she drew near the end of her mortal life she longed for the hour of her departure, to be with her redeeming Lord, believing that for her to die would be gain. The good will of the neighborhood toward her was shown by the large attendance at her funeral.

She left besides her husband three lovely daughters, three sons, one brother and one sister, with numerous other relatives and friends, to mourn. May the Lord comfort the lonely and sorrowing ones.

ALSO,

DIED—April 17th, 1895, in Roxbury, Delaware Co., N. Y., after a short illness from a paralytic stroke, Mr. Nelson Mead, in the 59th year of his age.

Mr. Mead was not a professor of religion, but usually attended the M. E. meetings, where his wife was a member. His health and strength had been gradually declining for some time before he was afflicted with the stroke of paralysis, yet he was able to be about until three days before he died. His family and friends were suddenly plunged into grief and sorrow. He was a very upright and moral man, a good husband and father, and I was led from conversation with him to believe that he was a subject of the grace of God.

He left his wife, two sons, one daughter, his aged mother and two sisters, with other relatives and friends, to mourn. May the mercy of the covenant-keeping God abound with them.

ALSO,

DIED—May 2d, 1895, our dear sister in Christ, Mrs. Sabre O'Connor, wife of brother Frank O'Connor, after a lingering illness of several years, aged 59 years.

Although death is the end of all sorrow and pain to the afflicted saint of God, by this sad stroke our dear brother and his children are plunged into grief and sorrow untold, and the church has met with the loss of one of its worthy members. In the spring of 1888 our sister was low down on a sick bed, her friends fearing for her recovery. I was persuaded from her desire to be baptized that she would be restored to health sufficiently to go into that solemn and joyful ordinance. She was so much restored as to be privileged to follow her dear Lord and Master's example, and enjoyed different seasons with the church. Meanwhile her youngest daughter also was brought out to enjoy church fellowship, and to be a companion in tribulation; and now that she is called home, to die no more, although husband and children mourn, we trust that they mourn not as those without hope.

Our dear sister left her husband, one son, two daughters, two sisters and several brothers, with many other relatives and the church, to mourn. May the gracious Lord sanctify this affliction to their good and his name's glory.

J. D. HUBBELL.

KELLY'S CORNERS, N. Y.

DEAR BRETHREN:—Please publish by request of the Second Church of Roxbury and friends that sister Julia M. Hewitt, widow of Elder I. Hewitt, departed this life Feb. 15th, 1895. Her age was 88 years, 1 month and 15 days.

She was born in Putnam Co., N. Y., in 1806. She was the daughter of David and Hannah Weld, and the oldest of fourteen children. She moved with her parents when about three years old and settled in Middletown, Delaware Co., N. Y., when the country was new, and was united in marriage in 1830, by Elder David Mead, she and her husband both being members of the church at that time. They settled about two miles from the home of her parents. She always stood unshaken in the doctrine of grace, and in the rule and order of the gospel, choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God than to have the esteem of the world; and it can truly be said of her that she continued steadfastly in the doctrine and in fellowship with the same order of Baptists that she united with about seventy years ago. For the last two years of her pilgrimage she had a great desire to visit all the churches in the Lexington Association, which the Lord gave her strength to do, or nearly every one. The Second Church of Roxbury had her last yearly meeting held at Halcottsville, on the 5th and 6th days of last January. At that meeting she spoke of the surety of that people whom the Lord had formed for himself, that he would be their God, and they should be his people. Her words were with comfort to the weak, in which they were made strong; and at the close she wished the brethren to sing hymn 751, Beebe's Collection:

"How firm a foundation, ye saints of the Lord,
Is laid for your faith in his excellent word," &c.

On the 19th of the same month I attended their church meeting at Halcottsville, and also on Sunday, Elder Clark going in my place to the Jefferson Church, as I had a mother older than sister Hewitt was, very poorly, to care for at home, so I could be home at night. That meeting, the 19th and 20th, was the last she ever met with the church militant. At that meeting on Sunday she wanted the 948th hymn (Beebe's Collection) sung, "O thou in whose presence my soul takes delight," &c. Four weeks from the above-named Sunday I was called to attend her funeral, Elder Sanford also taking part in the services, to a very large congregation. She had a shock, and never spoke afterward, but passed quietly away from the troubles of this world, leaving one sister and many friends to mourn.

Yours in hope of a blessed immortality beyond the grave,

JAMES MILLER.

GRIFFIN'S CORNERS, N. Y.

Emily Dix departed this life March 16th, 1895. She was the daughter of Reuben and Margaret C. Thomson. She was born Sept. 8th, 1869, and was married to Mr. E. Dix in September, 1889. One babe preceded her to the spirit world, and she left one infant child behind. She was taken away in early life, which reminds us that death is a sovereign king, and that no age nor condition in life is exempt from his sway. She, with her husband, was a member of the "Christian Church;" yet she had an experience of grace, in which she learned the true condition of a sinner before God, and her absolute helplessness. She was perfectly willing to go, and trusted wholly in her Savior.

It is hard to give up our dear and precious friends; but when we give them up with the sweet assurance that they are better off, it does so lighten the burden. She left behind husband and babe, father and mother, brothers and sisters, with many kind and dear friends, to mourn their loss. May the dear Lord enable all to sweetly and submissively say, "Thy will be done," and to set our hearts and affections on our eternal home beyond the grave.

PICTORIAL HISTORY

OF THE

UNITED STATES.

By James D. McCabe.

This work is no dry mass of details—no bombastic effort to inflame the national pride, but a vivid and brilliant narrative of the events of our history, from the discovery of the American Continent down to thepresent time. It gives a most interesting account of the Indians of North America, from the time of the coming of the white men. The voyages of Columbus and explorations and discoveries of the different nations of Europe are related with graphic power. Every step of our colonial history is traced with patient fidelity, and the sources of those noble and, we trust, enduring institutions, which have made our country free and great, are shown with remarkable clearness. Then follows a clear and succinct account of our great Struggle for Independence, and the establishment of the Federal Union—the events of our career from the close of the Revolution to the administration of Harrison.

The work is printed from plain, new type, on fine calendered paper, and comprised in one octavo volume of 960 pages. It is splendidly embellished with nearly 500 fine engravings, embracing battles and other historical scenes, portraits of distinguished men, views of our principal cities, &c., &c.

CORRESPONDENCE.

North Berwick, Maine.

My Dear Brother and Sister in the Blessed Hope of the Gospel of Christ:—What a wretched, hopeless plight we should be in were it not that our Redeemer has brought life and immortality to light through the gospel. Miserable, vile transgressors of the law, how could we justify ourselves before the throne of God? How should we be able to escape the damnation of hell? The world that lieth in wickedness believeth anything but the truth. They have strong confidence in their own supposed ability in some way or other to make their peace with God, and thus get to heaven, and escape the damnation of hell. But to such characters the Son of God said, "Ye are from beneath; I am from above; ye are of the world; I am not of this world. I say therefore unto you, that ye shall die in your sins; for if ye believe not that I am he, ye shall die in your sins." Strong delusion is sent them that they believe a lie. They receive not the truth, but delight in all the deceivableness of unrighteousness in them that perish. They glory in that idol they call "free will," and boast of liberty, and yet are slaves to the corruptions of their vile flesh. In their damnable doctrines they exalt themselves above all that is called God, or that is worshiped. For they blasphemously affirm that God has done all that he can do to save sinners, and that he cannot save them unless they will consent, and yield themselves up to him, and open their hearts, and let him in. They speak of the Lord as being an offended and grieved being because that men in the hardness of their hearts will not yield to his persuasions and threatenings, and let him save them. Well, as these sinners would not let God save them, antichrist says, God will have to damn them. As they would not come unto him and be saved all the while he was drawing them by the strivings of his Spirit, he will say unto them, "Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels." But would it not be consistent, according to such doctrines, for these sinners to refuse to depart, and say, "We will not go into hell?" If God could not save them against the will of the flesh, could he damn them against their will? But enough of this, for such doctrines pertain to the kingdom of darkness. Have we been translated into the kingdom of God's dear Son? If so, how were we translated? Was it of our will, or of the will of God, that we have come to the light, and now behold the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ? Who maketh us to differ from others?—1 Cor. iv. 7. Is it the result of our own endeavors, or does it spring from the reigning grace of God? I am persuaded, my dear kindred, that it is not hard to find our answer. Our willing souls confess that Jehovah is God. It is he that hath made us, and not we ourselves.—Psalm c. 3. The Lord doth put a difference between the Egyptians and Israel.—Exod. xi. 7. While we are led to meditate upon the kindness and love of God our Savior that has appeared to us, do we not feel to fall at the feet of our gracious God, and pour out grateful praises, ascribing blessing and honor and glory and power unto God and the Lamb for evermore? As our years glide by with the appointed joys and sorrows, temptations and conflicts, we are increasingly confirmed that by the grace of God we are what we are. All the manifestations of grace to us, poor, unworthy sinners, prepare us to sing,

"O to grace how great a debtor Daily I'm constrained to be."

As we trace the streams of grace to their fountain head we see that grace was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began.—2 Tim. i. 9.

"Before thy hands had made the sun to rule by day,
Or earth's foundations laid, or fashioned Adam's clay,
What thoughts of peace and mercy flowed
In thy dear bosom, O my God."

The eternal election of the people of God in Christ Jesus is that which puts a difference between the Egyptians and Israel; and this election is most blessedly declared to be the election of grace.—Rom. xi. 5. "The election hath obtained it, and the rest were blinded." This doctrine is as an axe to the tree of creature boastings, and stains the pride of all pharisaical glory.

"What was there in you that could merit esteem,
Or give the Creator delight?
'Tis even so, Father, you ever must sing,
Because it seemed good in thy sight."

Cite the children of the bond woman to this doctrine, they are offended, and some of them will boil over with rage against the God of truth. They bear witness that they are the seed whom the Lord has given over to strong delusion, to believe a lie. They are of too great a consequence in their own eyes to bow before the throne of the Majesty in the heavens, to own themselves to be vile, and but dust and ashes.—Gen. xviii. 27; Job xl. 4. Being corrupt in their minds, and destitute of the truth (1 Tim. vi. 5), they do always resist the Holy Ghost speaking to his people.—Mark xiii. 11; Zech. vii. 12; Neh. ix. 29, 30. As their fathers do, so do they.—Acts vi. 51; xiii. 45. But let us consider what our dear Savior has taught us. "It is given unto you to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven; but to them it is not given." The apostle Paul also writes, "Who maketh thee to differ from another? and what hast thou that thou didst not receive? Now if thou didst receive it, why dost thou glory as if thou hadst not received it?" Distinguished by the distinguishing grace of God, O may we never glory over our fellow-creatures as though we had not received every blessing of the new covenant freely, bountifully, according as our heavenly Father, the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before him in love." It is all of the love of God that we have been brought to love and to fear the name of the Lord. "We love him because he first loved us." It was his right hand and the light of his countenance that brought us from under the law, into the comfort and blessing of the gospel of Christ. It was not our goodness and creature efforts that translated us from darkness into Christ's marvelous light. In darkness we were ignorant of experimental truth, a prey of divers lusts, with a poet I must confess I was

"At peace with hell, with God at war,
In sin's dark maze I wandered far;
Indulged my lusts, and still went on,
As far from God as sheep can run."

But,

"O love, how high thy glories swell,
How great, immutable and free!
Ten thousand sins, as black as hell,
Are blotted out, O Love, by thee.

"Loved when a wretch defiled with sin,
At war with heaven, in league with hell;
A slave to every lust obscene,
Who living, lived but to rebel."

But in the time decreed from everlasting by Jehovah, he called even me by his grace. When I was first conscious of this calling I did not know it was grace, but I felt and judged it was nothing less than an enraged God who had become wearied with my vile ways, and had now apprehended me, and was bringing me to the judgment of eternal damnation. "Verily thou art a God that hidest thyself, O God of Israel, the Savior."—Isaiah xlv. 15. Poor, miserable, mistaken wretch that I was, I looked for hell, and he brought me heaven. And through the riches of his grace he shined on me his smiling face. Chasing my fears and guilt away, he turned my darkness into day. It was in Christ and him crucified that I found deliverance and comfort, light and joy. In him we have redemption and forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of his grace. But this was none of my procuring, or applying, or ministering. O no! So sinful, so helpless, was I, I was powerless to minister a grain of comfort and relief to my sin-stricken soul. But the gracious ministry of Jehovah, the Holy Ghost, brought me forth to the light, to behold the imputed righteousness of Christ as the beauteous robe, presenting a poor sinner like me with acceptance before the throne of God. "He," saith our Redeemer, "shall glorify me; for he shall receive of mine, and shall shew it unto you." Since then all my hope and comfort in divine things has flowed from the communion of the Holy Ghost.—2 Cor. xiii. 3. O sweet, refreshing, much desired communion! How often I languish as in a waste wilderness, all my defenced cities are laid low in the dust, my sins and the Lord's chastenings have hushed the melodious strains of my tabrets, my inward vileness and hellish temptations have so crippled me, that instead of dancing I have hobbled along with painful steps. With sighing, weeping, and with supplications, God has led me, until the set time to favor Zion has come. Then the Spirit of truth has been poured upon me from on high, and my wilderness has been transformed into a fruitful field.—Isaiah xxxii. 15. The Holy Spirit has tenderly ministered to me, out of the unsearchable riches of Christ, all that my soul has needed, and I have proved that word to be true, "God shall supply all your need, according to his riches in glory by Christ Jesus." O the blessedness of the communion of the Holy Ghost!

"Thy sweet communion charms the soul,
And gives true peace and joy,
Which Satan's power cannot control,
Nor all his wiles destroy."

O! I am not a wit more able to get along without the Comforter than I was the time I first experienced his divine ministrations. When turned aside from my God by the world, the flesh and the devil (as I have told you before, my dear brother and sister), I find before long how poor and desolate is my estate; and in my soul's darkness, nakedness and manifold miseries, who can bring relief but one? Ah, more than once in spirit I have sighed, "The Comforter that should relieve my soul is far from me."—Lam. i. 16. But he who pours forth the spirit of grace and of supplications has in due season restored my soul again to a comfortable hope in the Savior of sinners. In all our trials, afflictions and vexations, amidst all the turmoil attending our earthly sojourn, when the Holy Spirit in covenant faithfulness draws near and blesses us with his communion, then we are revived, and lift up our smiling and grateful faces to the Lord. We are strengthened, and leap over a stone wall, and run through a troup of foes. Yes, then we tread the world, sin and Satan beneath our feet, and triumph through Jesus Christ our Lord."

"He sweetly unfolds the great mysteries of heaven;
Forbidding the sinner to fear;
Gives faith to believe all his crimes are forgiven,
And helps him to wrestle in prayer.

"The blood and obedience of Christ he applies,
When Satan comes in like a flood;
And through his anointing the christian relies
On the covenant purpose of God."

But the self-pious among men would revile all this, and gainsay all that pertains to the life and godliness of God's elect. They have so high an estimate of their own powers and righteousness to make their peace with God, and to worship him, that when they hear that the Redeemer of God's elect hath done all things for the salvation and eternal glorification of his people, they belch forth their gainsayings, as Korah did, saying, "Ye take too much upon you, Moses and Aaron."—Num. xvi. 3. But as Korah and his company perished in their presumptuous gainsayings, and ungodly attempt to usurp the priesthood of Aaron (Num. xvi 30–34; Jude 10, 11), so all the gainsayers of the doctrine of Christ in the present time will eternally perish, if God does not give them repentance. When vain, deluded mortals claim to do their part in the work of eternal salvation, is this not gainsaying the doctrine of Christ, who cried on Calvary, "It is finished?" Is this not saying to the Son of God, the antitype of Aaron, "Ye take too much upon you?"

The love of the truth is the evidence in our hearts of salvation. We love the truth because he hath put it in our inward parts. The glory is thine, O Lord! None by nature love God, his people and his truth. "He that loveth is born of God, and knoweth God." There was a time when my poor soul was destitute of this love; but O! I must, I will (no matter how Satan roars), confess I love my God, even Israel's God.

"O! thou merciful Redeemer,
Help me more thy name to love;
Love thee with intense affection;
Love thee as thy saints above."

I am persuaded, beloved ones, that the above verse expresses your heart's longings. Often we sigh, bemoaning the meanness of our love to God. Our unthankfulness and forgetfulness bring us very low, so that we feel that we are but dust and ashes before the Lord.

"Lord, it is my chief complaint,
That my love is weak and faint;
Yet I love thee and adore;
O for grace to love thee more."

May the Lord bless you, and bring you into nearness to himself, is the heart's desire of yours affectionately in Christ Jesus,

FRED. W. KEENE.

CAMPBELLSBURG, Ky., May, 1895.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS:—Inclosed you will find a letter written to me by our dear brother Power. Believing it will be interesting to the readers of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES I herewith send it to you for publication.

J. G. EUBANKS.

FLEMINGSBURG, Ky., April 2, 1895.

DEAR BROTHER EUBANKS:—It has been nearly four months since I have seen you or heard any preaching, such as I call preaching; and indeed it appears to my mind as if it has been a much longer time. The cold weather has been so unusually severe, and my health at best not very good, that I could not meet to try to worship with you at May's Lick this winter. Unworthy as I am, my mind and heart have been with you, though absent in person.

Now that I have written this much, I feel that I want to say something of what I trust and believe are the Lord's dealings with me; but in doing so I feel that I am so sinful, and realize that I am so ignorant of the blessed things that pertain to Jesus and his righteousness, that it is with great diffidence I approach the subject. While I feel that I have no right to obtrude myself, my sins and troubles, upon you, as you doubtless have enough of your own, yet I have had some dark seasons of late, and I feel that it would do me good to talk to you. From my childhood up I have been accustomed to hear the Old Baptists talk of and confess their sins, their unworthiness and proneness to evil; but there was a time when I thought that these were phrases that they had to use to distinguish them from other denominations. I thought all were sinners, because the Bible and the preachers said they were; but I could not understand how very nice, clever and good people, as they appeared to me, and who really were naturally, could be so corrupt and vile as they confessed themselves to be. But since, as I trust, the scales have dropped from my eyes, and I have seen the perfection and holiness of Ged, and the righteousness of Christ as contrasted with my own sinful nature, I can understand it all. Others may talk about their being able to comply with the conditions of the gospel, of being free moral agents, able to choose good or evil, but I find that if left to my own inclinations I should do nothing but evil. I am already evil; I do not have to choose it. In the face of all this I have a hope that God for Christ's sake has pardoned me, that my robes have been washed and made white in the blood of the Lamb. Not that he saw or found any merit in me, for I know by bitter experience there is none; but that he found me when I sought him not; that he snatched me as a brand from the burning; that he took me out of the miry clay, and placed my feet upon a rock; that he put a new song into my mouth, even praise unto God. While I will and must cling to this hope, small as it is, in spite of all the doubts and fears that the devil puts into my mind, still I feel that it is very presumptuous in one so wicked as I know myself to be to lay claim to an interest in the atoning blood and righteousness of the dear Redeemer. When I reflect that Jesus said that he came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance, I take hope and rejoice; not that I am a sinner; God forbid; but that he has made me to see and to mourn my sins, and to hunger and thirst after righteousness. We have this promise, "Blessed are they that mourn; for they shall be comforted. Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness; for they shall be filled." It may be wicked, and I think it is, but often in times of darkness and trial I wonder if I shall ever feel that I am filled with the righteousness of Christ. Still it is blessing enough and infinitely more than I deserve, for the Lord to cause me thus to hunger and thirst. It is an assurance at least that after this earthly pilgrimage is ended I shall not only be filled with the glorious righteousness of Christ, but shall awake in his likeness. Then these earthly longings shall cease, and I can then say with the psalmist, "I shall be satisfied, when I awake, with thy likeness."

From my youth I believed the Old Baptist doctrine as a theory, even including the doctrine of Predestination; for I could not believe that anything came by chance; but I now know that I did not know anything of its spirit; because I had not then been made to see myself as a helpless sinner, lost to all eternity, but for the merit of the atoning blood of Christ. The doctrine of Predestination, which the world dislikes so much, instead of regarding it as a theory, I now regard as the very design and purpose of God, as one of the essential elements and doctrine of the religion of Jesus. "And thou shalt call his name Jesus; for he shall save his people from their sins." Blessed thought, there is predestination here. He shall save his people in spite of their sins. Then, if I am not mistaken in my hope that I am one of his people, one of his sheep of his pasture, I have a pretty good prospect of inheriting a throne and of reigning with Christ in a kingdom that shall never be destroyed.

When I became of years sufficiently mature to think about my future state, while I recognized I was a sinner, in theory at least, yet I thought I was not a very bad sort of a fellow. I thought religion was a good thing to have, for I knew that I must die sometime, and I did not want to go to hell; so I thought I would enjoy the pleasures of the world until I got ready for religion, and then I would get it. But I thank God for showing me my folly. The time came when I found to my dismay that the religion which I could get was as flimsy and worthless as the fig leaves with which our first parents clothed themselves after their transgression.

While I feel at times, at least when I am in the sunshine of God's grace, which is sometimes the case with me, that my spirit bears witness with your spirit that I am a child of God, yet, like brother Curry, I cannot fix the precise time when I received this witness; I cannot fix the exact time of my spiritual birth, if I am so born at all, any more than I can describe the manner of it. But this I know, the things I once loved I now hate, and the things I now love I once hated; and that whereas I was blind, I now see. When the time did come that I realized that I had an interest in the atoning blood of our crucified Lord, I fondly hoped and vainly thought that I would be comparatively free from sin, and consequently should enjoy almost uninterrupted peace. How vain was the hope I soon learned, to my sorrow. I presently found that the man of sin was still with me, and that he had only lain dormant for a time to recruit himself for renewed warfare, which must continue to rage, the flesh against the spirit, and the spirit against the flesh, until I get my discharge.

I have passed within the last few years and am yet passing through some dark and gloomy seasons, the loss of dear little babes, and other troubles of which it is not necessary to speak; but my own sins have given me infinitely more trouble than all the rest combined. While these experiences are bitter, I sometimes think I can see in them the chastening hand of God, if such a thing were possible that I am worthy to be chastened of him; for the chastening would imply that I am his child, and that I am loved of him. Another thing I have experienced. Sins that I loved to indulge, and which I rolled under my tongue as a sweet morsel, I am now afraid to indulge. I am afraid to fall into the hands of a just God.

Another thing has given me trouble. Times have been hard and collections difficult, and I have not been able to do my duty in contributing to the support of the gospel and to the needy brethren and sisters. This is one of the principal uses I have for money, next to the support of my own family. I hope, if it is consistent with his will, the Lord will bless me in this regard, so that I will be able to contribute as I so much desire to the above named objects. I am satisfied that some of the members, and perhaps all to a certain extent, do not always know how to appreciate the difficulties of the ministering brethren.

I look forward with pleasure to our next meeting, when I hope I will be permitted to be with you again, and together with the other brethren and sisters try to engage in the worship of our merciful God, and join in praising his holy name. These meetings are refreshing seasons to me; for my wife is the only person in our town, since my mother's death, with whom I can commune about the precious things of Jesus and his love.

I cannot be thankful enough that my wife has been called out from among the Arminians, and has been taught in the school of Christ that salvation is alone of the Lord. Isolated as we are from the brethren, I do not know what my wife and I would do if it were not for the SIGNS OF THE TIMES and the Landmark. The sentiments contained in the communications of the brethren and sisters, and the able editorials of these papers, together with the experiences of the dear saints as to the Lord's dealings with them, come to our hungry souls as refreshing showers upon the dry and thirsty ground. Of such were the letters of the aged sisters Hassell, Duerson and Wells, and the writings of the venerable brother Cox. These writings should remove all doubts as to the reality of the christian's hope, if any should exist. May the Lord by his grace sustain the brethren having charge of these periodicals, and cheer their hearts in this glorious work; and further, may he put it into the minds of those who enjoy the fruits of their labors, to give them that material aid as will enable them to continue this work.

I have intruded myself upon and troubled you too much already, yet I am constrained to say in conclusion that in spite of my doubts, fears, unbelief and sin, I will believe in Christ, and will cling to my hope, and believe there is something in it for me. If it were not so, brother Eubanks, what would become of us, or what would we have to sustain us amid the trials, temptations and vicissitudes of this imperfect and unsatisfactory existence? Disappointed expectations, decayed friendships, homes broken up, the death of friends, and more than all, the burden of our own sins, would weigh us down and drive us to despair, if it were not for this hope, that after this earthly house of our tabernacle is dissolved we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens; that though our earthly homes be broken up, we have a heavenly home, and that Jesus has gone to prepare a place for us in his Father's house of many mansions.

My Father's house on high!
Home of my soul how near!
At time's foreseeing eye,
Thy golden gates appear.

Really, brother Eubanks, you must pardon me for writing you this long and uninteresting letter, as I feel it must be; but I have felt that I must tell these things to you, and have just taken the liberty of doing it.

Remember me in your prayers. Your brother by hope in Christ,

JOHN S. POWER.

GITTINGS, Md., June 19, 1895.

DEAR BROTHER CHICK:—It was with much pleasure and satisfaction that I read your views on the parable, "Many are called, but few are chosen," and also in regard to "offenses." There are many things coming up in my mind daily which seem to me different from what I have read and heard from others, which has at times caused me some trouble of mind, because of differing from what I have heard; but I cannot turn away from what is forcibly presented to my mind, and so applied in my own experience that I become so settled in this view that it would take more than the argument of man to turn me from what I feel has been revealed. I have advanced ideas on the Scriptures that have been objected to by dear brethren, which has caused me to tremble, lest I was deceived; and if deceived in this, I might be deceived in all; but afterward I have had the assurance given me that I was right. This subject mentioned was one on which my mind was made clear a long time since, from which I have not swerved one iota, neither can I. It would be denying the power and revelation of God to do so. It has been my lot in this warfare to pass through very, very dark and trying times spiritually, with a few bright and sunny days, and have learned more in those dark times than I ever learned in the bright seasons. In the dark times I could pray, and my heart yearned for the light, "more than they that watch for the morning." In this frame there is a searching of one's self; and in this great anxiety of mind, when there seems no hope that light will come, God reveals his word, and there is a calm. In this frame there is no prayer in our heart nor on our lips, but praise. No need then of prayer; therefore we cannot pray. Then there is a frame into which God's people get wherein they neither pray nor praise. They have no need of anything, but are asleep to all sense of need or care, and often are found enjoying the pleasures of this world, with no time to attend to the things of the kingdom. There are so many ways that God's people are led into things which, if not in themselves evil, have the appearance of evil, and should be shunned, that it would be useless to attempt to enumerate them; they are legion. I am not bringing a charge against my brethren and sisters, for I am the man; and I sometimes feel blessed in that I know this much, if nothing more. I am sorry for that one who does not or cannot at some time or other feel this condemnation. Not that I want them to do that which appears evil, but I do not believe there can be a child of God who has not felt to his sorrow that he has not walked in accordance with what God has commanded. I find so much in the Scriptures that condemns me that I get into such dark places, yes, in cold places, I really almost if not entirely deny that there is a God at all. But O what a state to be in! No God? Then certainly there is no hope. And what is our life? We would then be miserable creatures; and of what account would all this experience be? Toil and sorrow for naught. But, blessed be God, he is. We are his creatures, molded in his care and kept by his power. Christ is revealed in us the hope of glory. When he appears in his glory he is altogether lovely. There is no denial then; infidelity is banished by his presence.

I intended to write but a few lines, to tell you how glad I am that you have written as you have on this great subject; but I never can stop in reason.

Yours in love and hope, all I have to cling to,

MILTON DANCE.

WE suppose the above letter from brother Dance was intended to be a private one, but we are sure he will pardon us for publishing it. His kind words are appreciated indeed. His references to perplexities of mind, we are sure, many of the children of God know something about. His hesitancy to express views which are impressed upon his mind, which seem different from those generally held by brethren, we can well understand, for we have felt the same, and often have entirely held our peace at such times. It is a great blessing to be "swift to hear and slow to speak." If we do not find time to write brother Dance privately he will know that the reason is not a failure to appreciate and enjoy his good, experimental letter.—C.

EDITORS OF THE SIGNS—DEAR BRETHREN:—It is on my mind to write a few things in reference to the late Elder G. Beebe's editorials, and the clear manner in which he has presented the truth of God. In reading them sometimes I am struck with the thought that the Lord certainly raised him up for his day and time, and directed his pen to write the things he wrote. His use of language and his clear way of presenting the truth made him a teacher of good things; and though he is dead, he yet speaketh, and speaks with a certain sound, with that force which carries the conviction that he certainly knew the truth of God. His knowledge of the Scriptures and his just application of the same caused him to be held in high esteem, and justly so. Indeed, he was apt to teach, using forcible words in the right place. Moreover, his last editorials seemed as strong and pointed as his first, and in all his life he was steadfast in the faith. He was also fearless, and seemed to have the tongue of the learned. He was a faithful man all through his life. His yea was yea, and his nay was nay. Like the prophet of God, he spoke the word of the Lord, whether men would hear or forbear. He swerved not, but testified of the gospel of the grace of God. He was at war with error, and fearlessly denounced error, here and there, as he came in contact with it. The Lord was certainly with him. As we read his articles to-day they have a saving influence upon the household of faith. His example and his life were consistent with what he taught in all his writings. He was kind to his brethren, and reproved their wrongs in a gentle manner, as did James when he said, "Do not err, my beloved brethren." How liable we are to err; but when properly reproved how it causes us to think upon our ways, and turn unto the testimonies of the Lord. How we are made to repent each day, and how far short we come of living as we desire to live. Some have said that they never preached a sermon which fully satisfied them. Imperfection is seen. We can further say that we have never been satisfied with a day's living, but wrong is seen here and there, and we live and repent each day, seeing how far short we come of that perfect standard of the word of truth. There is that thorn in the flesh, the messenger of Satan, to buffet us. Why is all this? Why is all this warfare? "The flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh." We cannot excuse ourselves, nor can we remedy it, but have to go on, reminded of it every day. I was struck forcibly with a remark made by Elder Mitchell at a meeting at Lake Street chapel, in Opelika, last Sunday evening, when he said, "We are all wrong about some things." What is the matter? Yet he is a godly man, full of grace, full of the desires of righteousness, desiring the advancement and spiritual growth of the church of God. How do we live? Answer: Far below the glorious privileges of the gospel of Christ. How many of them we abuse by the improper use of them. I have thought that Mary and Martha represented the children of God, two classes; one cumbered about much serving, encumbered with earthly things, to the exclusion of heavenly things; attaching more importance to things of the earth than belongs

THE HORN OF SALVATION.

"AND hath raised up a horn of salvation for us in the house of his servant David."—Luke i. 69.

Brother T. G. Harris, of Fort Robinson, Nebraska, requests our views upon the above Scripture. It has been a delight to us for many years to speak as best we could of Jesus and his salvation. We can but testify to that which we have seen and felt and known of this salvation. Our sorrow has been that we could no more worthily exalt the great name of him who has saved his people from their sins. What Jesus is and what Jesus does must ever engage the wondering attention of angels and redeemed men in all the ages to come, even as this theme filled the vision of patriarchs and prophets in the ages past. "The testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy." This means that the very life and substance of all that the prophets wrote was Jesus and his salvation; for Jesus and salvation cannot be disjoined. The very name "Jesus" means the "Savior;" and we are told that the prophets did search diligently what and what manner of time the spirit that was in them did signify, when it testified beforehand of the sufferings of Christ, and the glory that should follow. The prophets wrote of many things, yet the aim and burden of all they said was Jesus. This glorious person filled their vision. They were not intent upon describing places or events, but upon testifying of him who should come. They did indeed write of places and events, but they did this only in subservience to this one great work which God had assigned them. Now, may we not say that this blessed Name, this exalted One, is still the theme of all who know the meaning of redemption? What is all christian experience and all christian testimony now but an "Amen" to that which prophets and apostles wrote? To the power, goodness and grace of Jesus there is no limit. The praise rendered to the best and greatest of men grows wearisome after awhile. There is a limit to their capabilities. We can grasp and comprehend them when we grow intimate with them; but no one has yet measured the fullness of this man. The praise of his name goes on with ever-increasing delight from the hearts of those who know him; and those who know him best are more and more filled with wonder at the uncomprehended fullness of his holy nature. There can be, there is, no such thing as growing weary of his name, nor weary of his praise. The people of God sorrow that they cannot be more like him, and praise him better.

We believe that something of this feeling filled the heart of Zecharias when he looked upon the child that had been given to him and Elizabeth, and realized that this child was to be the prophet of the highest, to go before the face of him who was to come, and prepare his way before him. The joy which he felt was not the natural joy which any man would feel that a son had been born to him, but it was the joy of salvation. The thought of redemption filled and exalted his soul; and his joy in this child now born to him was most of all that it was to be his lofty privilege to be called the prophet of the Highest, and to go before his face to prepare his ways, and to give knowledge of this salvation unto his people by the remission of their sins. What a wonderful work of grace it is to so prepare the heart of a fallen man that he shall have no joy in anything only as it shall be for the exaltation of Jesus. This preparation of heart was found in Zecharias. Such a preparation of heart is always the work of the Spirit of God. It is expressly said (verse 67) that Zecharias "was filled with the Holy Ghost, and prophesied."

Every word of the wonderful prophecy which follows is worthy of full consideration. It all sets forth the purpose and work of God in redemption in loftiest strains. But it is manifest that in the limits of an ordinary editorial we cannot even glance at the beauties found in each of these inspired sentences; and so, after these general remarks, we will try to briefly comment upon the words of the text proposed.

"And hath raised up." The preceding verse declares that it is the Lord God of Israel, who visits and redeems his people, that hath done this. Jesus came according to the will of God at the time and in the way appointed. It is expressly said that he came in the fullness of time. He was raised up for the accomplishment of this great salvation. The Lord raised him up. For another and altogether different end the Lord had generations before raised up Pharaoh for the fulfillment of his will also. The word is the same in both cases, "raised up." It means that the Lord had appointed and prepared and given Pharaoh for the work which he wrought; and so also it means in the text that the Lord had appointed and prepared and given Jesus to do his Father's will in the redemption of his people. Behold the love of God here! That God whose every word we had broken, against whom also we were still striving, yet loves us so that he gives us salvation in his own dear Son. O that we might never forget that God gave his Son to die for us. Let us never forget that he did this not for friends, but for his foes. In this, the apostle expressly testifies, the love of God commends itself to us, "that while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us." Let every word be emphasized. God gave his Son to die for his enemies, to redeem his rebels unto himself. Because Zecharias had by the Holy Ghost some view of this most wonderful of all truths, therefore he spoke forth these sublime words. His heart was inditing a good matter; he spoke of things touching the King. As the word, like a living fountain, bubbled up in David (for this is the literal force of the word "inditing" in Psalm xlv. 1), so in the heart of Zecharias these words sprang up as the spontaneous expression of the truth which he saw, and which was in him as fire in the bones. At such times we are weary of forbearing, and it is a joy to speak.

"A horn of salvation." The symbolical meaning of the word "horn" in the Bible is power, might; and the word is used here to express the power of that salvation which is in Christ Jesus. God hath raised up for us a power that can save to the uttermost. "He is able to save." Of all the words which might be used descriptive of this salvation the Holy Ghost, speaking in Zecharias, lays hold upon this one, "the power of salvation." Paul afterward, having experienced this salvation of power, could say, "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth."

Christians in every age have delighted to speak of the power of God. The first testimony of faith in every renewed and troubled heart is that Jesus, if he will, is able to save. "Lord, if thou wilt, thou canst make me clean." "I am not worthy that thou shouldest come under my roof: but speak the word only, and my servant shall be healed." Jesus in both these cases bore testimony to the faith which thus spoke. Every soul that believes that Jesus is able to save even himself or herself, and who so believes it that they can but leave themselves in his hands, has faith. Faith lays hold upon the power of God, and bears testimony to it. Together with the love of God, it holds the most prominent place in the mind of every child of God. It must be so; for next to the desire to know whether our God loves us, we cannot rest unless we also know that his power is sufficient to overcome every obstacle, even to our own proud hearts, and to secure us a final victory. How can a child of God keep from extolling his divine power? Zecharias must testify of the power of salvation. In his view it was no uncertain thing, so weak that its ends might never be accomplished. It would do to trust and rest in it. There was power in it. If we, like Zecharias, have through the indwelling of the Holy Ghost felt this power of salvation, then we also must speak and bear our testimony that God hath raised up to us, even to such sinners as we, a horn of salvation. We shall rejoice to speak of his goodness and talk of his power.

We would like also to call attention to the fact that those who love best to speak or hear of the power of Jesus are they who feel themselves to be the weakest of the flock. Weakness requires strength, and rejoices in strength, and glories in the source from whence it comes. If any man is strong to work out a righteousness of his own, he will have but little interest in hearing of a "horn of salvation." Such a one may even say that to preach concerning the power of Jesus will have a discouraging effect, and therefore, even if true, it is better not to preach it; but we have never known any of the weak, helpless, sin-burdened ones to be discouraged by such preaching. On the contrary, if there be anything consoling and strengthening to such weak ones it is to hear that they have a strong city, whose walls and bulwarks are salvation. To them who have no might it is most blessed news to hear that to such the Lord increaseth strength. This horn of salvation is "the arm of the Lord" spoken of in Isaiah liii. 1. This word "arm" also signifies power; power in use or in exercise. Here too it is seen that Jesus, the suffering, smitten, bruised, dying Savior, is "the arm of the Lord," full of glory and power. The carnal heart of man leads him to desire to exalt himself, and causes him to believe what he wishes true, viz., that the God of heaven, and Jesus the Son of God, are limited in power and might; but the poor, trembling sinner rejoices to believe that all power is given unto Jesus in heaven and earth, for here alone is his security and salvation.

"For us." It is not needful for us to suppose that Zecharias fully understood all the meaning of his own words. We ourselves repeat and embrace these words; but yet who of us all could dare say that we comprehend all their meaning? So also those who were divinely moved to write these things yet saw but in part. Perhaps Zecharias did not see clearly the meaning of this expression, "for us." His mind might have seen but little more in the words than a reference to the building up again of literal Israel. We know that even the disciples, who walked and talked with Jesus during all the three years of his public ministry, saw but little more than the mistaken view that Jesus came to restore again the kingdom unto Israel. But while this was probably true of Zecharias, yet we know that the words "for us" embrace each vessel of mercy whom God before the foundation of the world chose to salvation. The one special thought which seems to us to be connected with these words is that the work of the Lord is special and definite.

This "horn of salvation" was not raised up without a special object in view. Jesus came not to make the way of salvation possible for all, or for an indefinite number of men, but to "save his people from their sins." Each subject of redeeming grace has the blessed assurance in his very experience that "Jesus loved me, and gave himself for me." If the Scriptures plainly teach anything, they do certainly show that the work of salvation is for special individuals of the human race. Christ came to die for persons. He did not die for sin in the abstract, but for sinners; and each one can say, "For me." Much more is contained in this expression "for us," but this is the one consideration that we desired to emphasize.

Of the closing expression, "In the house of his servant David," we think it needful to say only this, that Jesus was literally of the house of David. It had been declared in prophecy that he should be, and so it was, that the Scriptures might be fulfilled. It is a very consoling testimony to the power and wisdom of God that all the Scriptures concerning Jesus were fulfilled. In this is the pledge that all the Scriptures which testify concerning the people of God will also be fulfilled. In the full assurance of this truth we can all join in the praise of this "horn of salvation."

HEBREWS XII. 28, 29.

"WHEREFORE we receiving a kingdom which cannot be moved, let us have grace, whereby we may serve God acceptably with reverence and godly fear: for our God is a consuming fire."

Among many other subjects on which we have been desired to give our views, and which from a variety of causes we have been compelled to defer, the subject embraced in the text at the head of this article may be reckoned.

A brother has called our attention specially to the word "fear," as it occurs in the text; but we feel inclined to take a more general range, and, as far as our limits will allow, offer some remarks on the character of the kingdom received, show who are the recipients, and on what ground it is given and received; and then, in noticing the solemn admonition of the text, we shall have occasion to show that grace, reverence and godly fear are indispensable qualifications for serving God acceptably.

1. The kingdom spoken of is the kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ, a spiritual kingdom, and not of this world. The peculiarities of it consist not only in its being the kingdom of Christ, and the only kingdom over which he presides in his Mediatorial character, and its being spiritual in all its parts, having a spiritual king, spiritual subjects, laws, provisions, ordinances and territory, and all these particulars differing from all other kingdoms; but in this text the inspired writer shows that in its perpetuity and immovable steadfastness it is unlike any other. All other kingdoms of which we have any knowledge rise to their limited elevation and then crumble back to dust; but this is an everlasting kingdom, and a dominion that hath no end. It is the same that was spoken of by Daniel, which the God of heaven should set up, and which should never be destroyed, and which shall not be left to other people; but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever.—See Dan. ii. 44. Those professed churches which are set up by man, means and human inventions are not the kingdom of Christ; for his kingdom is set up by the God of heaven, and can neither be set up nor thrown down by men, angels or devils. In it Christ is known as the only and blessed potentate, who only hath immortality; and of him God has said, "I have set my king upon my holy hill of Zion;" and unto his Son the Father has said, "Thy throne, O God, is forever and ever; the sceptre of thy kingdom is a right sceptre."

2. The recipients of the kingdom and government of the Redeemer are recognized in this epistle as "Holy brethren, partakers of the heavenly calling," &c. Brethren to and with the apostles, children of Jerusalem that is above and free, sons of God and heirs of glory, who have come experimentally and practically into the order of the church of God; no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow-citizens with the saints and of the household of God, built upon the foundation of the apostles, &c. These have received and are now receiving the kingdom or government of Christ. It is the Father's good pleasure to give it to his little flock, and hence they receive it, enter into it, and enjoy the privileges of it. The citizens are all regenerated; for except a man be born again he cannot see it: except he be born of water and of the Spirit he cannot enter into it,

> "Its holy gates forever bar
> Pollution, sin and shame;
> None can obtain admittance there
> But followers of the Lamb."

To them Christ has said, "I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto me." According to this appointment the saints receive the kingdom and inherit it; not as a purchased possession, but as an inheritance founded on relationship; and they are chosen heirs of the kingdom.—James ii. 5. Born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God. These are delivered from the curse and dominion of the law; for they could not be at the same time under two distinct governments. Christ has redeemed them from the law which gendereth to bondage, and brought them under law to himself, having fulfilled in them the righteousness of the law. They are not therefore now come to the mount that might be touched, and that burned with fire, nor unto blackness, and tempests, and the sound of a trumpet, and the voice of words, &c.; but they are come unto Sion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an innumerable company of angels, to the general assembly and church of the First-Born, which are written in heaven, and to God, the Judge of all, and to the spirits of just men made perfect, and to Jesus, the Mediator of the new covenant, and to the blood of sprinkling that speaketh better things than the blood of Abel. Children not of the bondwoman, but of the free; not of Mount Sinai in Arabia, or the Jerusalem which was then; but they, as Isaac was, are the children of promise.

3. God does not give nor do we receive this heavenly kingdom on the principle of works, either good or bad; for if it be of works, it is no more of grace. It is not by works of righteousness which we have done, and certainly not by works of unrighteousness; but of his mercy he hath saved us, by the washing of regeneration and renewing of the Holy Ghost. None can see or enter this kingdom except they be born again; yet the birth required and indispensable is not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God.—John iii. 3, 5; i. 13. If we have an interest in this kingdom, that interest is the result of our Father's good pleasure to give it to us, as his little flock. And the good pleasure of God is displayed in his having elected and loved us in Christ Jesus before the foundation of the world. "Who hath saved us, and called us with an holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began."—2 Tim. i. 9. "Having predestinated us unto the adoption of children, by Jesus Christ unto himself, according to the good pleasure of his will, to the praise of the glory of his grace, wherein he hath made us accepted in the Beloved. In whom we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of his grace; wherein he hath abounded towards us in all wisdom and prudence."—Eph. i. 5–8. The inspired apostle has in this epistle very clearly demonstrated the impossibility of approaching unto God by works of obedience to the law, or in any other than that new and living way which our God has consecrated through the vail, which is Christ's flesh, and that Christ is abundantly able to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by him, seeing that he ever liveth to make intercession for them; and in this chapter we are told that these very characters who receive the kingdom have come to God; hence the conclusion that they have come by Christ, as the only way, is inevitable; for no man cometh unto the Father but by him.

4. The admonition. To serve God is to obey; for his servants ye are to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey. We cannot serve God by doing anything that he has not commanded. God must be honored as the Commander in all acceptable service. Christ must be honored as the King and supreme Legislator of his kingdom. When Israel of old had no king they did every man that which was good in his own eyes; and a very large portion of modern professors seem to think they can serve God acceptably by that which seems good in their own eyes without waiting for the sovereign mandate from the throne of Zion. But the saints can never be so situated; Christ abideth in his government forever; his dominion hath no end. God, the Father, has set his King on his holy hill Zion, and in an audible voice from the cloud at the transfiguration on the mount commanded his disciples to hear him. No other service can be acceptable to God, as no other can be in obedience to the Father, who has commanded us to hear Christ; nor to Christ as the King of saints; and as no service unacceptable to God can be directed by the Holy Ghost working in the hearts of the children of the kingdom, they cannot be acceptable to God, as Father, Son or Holy Ghost, in any sense whatever. The service to which the recipients of the heavenly kingdom are admonished in our text is not designed to procure, increase or secure to them the grace of God, nor to entitle them to the kingdom; for the Holy Ghost has in this text, as in all other Scriptures, placed grace before works. The apostle does not say, let us serve God acceptably, whereby we may have grace; for that would be a perversion of the gospel. Works cannot procure grace; but works of obedience to God must and will assuredly follow grace, as a consequence, but it can never be the cause. The text does not teach that we are to receive the kingdom for our services; for it is upon the ground that we have received and are receiving the kingdom that we are admonished to serve God. The workmonger will say, "If the kingdom and grace of God are positively and immutably secured to us, where is the incentive to good works?" They can see none, because they are blind, and because they are to every good work reprobate; but this security is itself an incentive. Here grace reigns (it does not serve the creature); it reigns over its subject; and in the absence of grace it is impossible to serve God acceptable. Whatever creatures may do with a design thereby to secure salvation or escape punishment, is a service rendered to themselves, in which they work for themselves; but service acceptable to God must result from far different motives. It is only by grace that we have the faith that works by love and purifies the heart; and without faith it is impossible to please God; hence the utter impossibility of serving God acceptably without the pre-existence of grace reigning in our hearts. That men may perform what they believe is service to God while destitute of saving grace, is implied in the qualifying terms acceptably, with reverence and godly fear. Saul verily thought he ought to do many things contrary to Jesus. And men still think they are doing God service in persecuting and even slaying his children. And even christians may render what they consider service to God, which God will not accept, or why are they directed to serve him acceptably? There were many among the Jews who worshiped God in a way that was not acceptable to him; and perhaps the most common method of doing so was by teaching for doctrine the commandments of men: such worship could avail nothing; for God has declared it vain. And we have no reason to conclude that that kind of worship is any better now, or any more pleasing to God now, than it was two thousand years ago, or that it is any more acceptable from professed christians than it was from carnal Israelites. God has not only commanded us to worship him, but he has also restricted us to the way and manner in which we shall perform his worship.

5. That service of God which results from reigning grace in our hearts will be invariably attended by the two distinguishing marks which are given in the text under consideration, namely, reverence and godly fear. The word reverence in our language is defined to mean respect, love and veneration. To serve acceptably, we must revere him, be humbled under a deep sense of the infinite disparity between him as a God, and us his humble worshipers. He is not to be trifled with by ostentatious parade, vain show, and such empty forms as men may offer to their equals by way of compliment. God is a Spirit, and they that worship him worship him in spirit and in truth. Not even the tones of the most accomplished choirs of vocalists, with the flourish of fiddles and organs, to tickle the ears and effect the passions, or excite the applause of carnal men, can constitute that homage and devotion to God which grace prepares us for, and which the Spirit dictates. God is respected in his holy character, in all his adorable perfections, as the object of our love, veneration, praise and most profound devotion. Not with a false notion that God is to be profited by our service, but rather should our souls be impressed with a sense of the inexpressable favor and sovereign goodness of God, that we poor, vile, polluted worms have by his special grace been so redeemed from pollution that we are permitted to fall down before him in prayer, thanksgiving, confession and adoration, and that through his unspeakable favor we may approach him through Jesus, our consecrated Prince and Savior, and not to be consumed.

And godly fear. There are different kinds of fear spoken of in the Scriptures, as the fear of God, the fear of men, and such fear as devils are subject to; the latter kinds are condemned, and the former is commended. They differ widely in their nature, origin and effects. The fear of men has its origin in guilt; it arises from the corruption of our depraved nature, and betrays alienation from God, want of confidence in his protection, power and providence. Thus Cain was afraid that all who met him would slay him. Christians are sometimes plagued with it, and they learn by experience that the fear of man bringeth a snare. Christ has instructed his disciples not to fear men who can kill the body, and afterward have no more power. Peter felt its effects when he was charged with being a disciple of Jesus, and he denied that he knew the man. This fear is common to all human beings, except when and where it is subdued by grace. Perfect love casteth out this kind of fear. The fear which devils have arises from a conviction that they are to be tormented. It makes them afraid of God, and hence it is said that they believe and tremble. The fear of both men and devils is slavish, and leads them to endeavor to shrink from the divine presence, like Adam and Eve when they attempted to hide themselves among the trees of the garden. But the fear of the Lord, which is distinguished from all other kinds of fear, in our text, by the qualifying term godly, is altogether different. It is called godly fear; first, because it is implanted in the heart by God himself. "And I will make an everlasting covenant with them, that I will not turn away from them to do them good; but I will put my fear in their hearts, that they shall not depart from me."—Jer. xxxii. 40. It is godly fear, because its tendency is to godliness, to prevent the children of the new covenant from departing from the Lord. And it is godly, because that it is in agreement with all the principles of holiness which are wrought in the children of God by the Holy Spirit. Perfect love, even the perfect love of God which is shed abroad in the heart, does not cast out this fear of the Lord; for it is a filial fear, and perfectly harmonious with the love of God. Its tendency is to impress its possessor with a profound respect and reverence for what God has said. They that fear the Lord tremble at his word. They cannot regard any part of his word as unimportant; nothing that he has enjoined or commanded can be by them treated as non-essentials. As dutiful children they from the effect of godly fear lay all their human reason and worldly wisdom and policy in the dust, and ask wisdom of him that giveth liberally and upbraideth not. Godly fear makes God's children social and communicative. "Come and hear, all ye that fear God, and I will declare what he hath done for my soul."—Psa. lxvi. 16. "Then they that feared the Lord spake often one to another," &c—Mal. iii. 16. It is godly fear, because it has God's honor in view, and it leads the saints to watch and pray that they enter not into temptation, or be overcome with evil; because they fear to do that which God does not approve of. It does not lead them to distrust God, or doubt that he will fulfill all his promises; nor do they fear that he will withdraw from them his grace, or his pledge that they shall inherit eternal life. They are not afraid of going to hell after having tasted the joys of the world to come; but what is to them of paramount importance, they fear that they shall not suitably and fully shew forth his praises; that they may fail to glorify him in their body and spirit, which are the Lord's. Indeed, we can see but little difference in the signification of the two words used in the text, reverence and godly fear. One cannot exist in us without the other. If we fear the Lord in the sense of the text, we shall respect his laws, his institutions, and ask of him for grace to help in every time of need to serve him acceptably.

This admonition is urged upon the citizens of the kingdom, not only from a sense of the majesty of that God whose voice once shook the earth, and who has promised again to shake not the earth only, but also heaven, and to remove all worldly matter which has or may accumulate, as of things that are made; as he has done in the removal of the ceremonial dispensation, the temple worship, the worldly sanctuary and the carnal ordinances, in the setting up of this heavenly kingdom; but also because "Our God is a consuming fire." Not God out of Christ is a consuming fire, as it is sometimes misquoted; for we have no revelation of God out of Christ. Christ is the only medium through which God reveals himself to his children. He hath shined in their heart, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ. But "Our God," even as he dwells bodily in Christ, "is a consuming fire." "He is like a refiner's fire, and like fuller's soap; and he shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver, and he shall purify the sons of Levi, and purge them as gold and silver, that they may offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness."—Mal. iii. 2, 3. This text clearly illustrates how our God is a consuming fire, and what he will consume, and what he will purify. His furnace is in Jerusalem, in his church and kingdom; he will consume our alloy, dross and corruption, and purge away the filth of the daughter of Zion. He will purify the sons of Levi, or the children of the spiritual priesthood, and thus prepare them to offer their service or offerings in righteousness, and serve God acceptably. Every man's work in the house of God shall be tried; and he that builds hay, wood, stubble, shall suffer loss, yet he shall be saved, so as by fire. When we consider how searching is the element of fire in detecting the dross and alloy that is in the precious metal, and learn that the people of God, the sons of Levi, are in the crucible, and all our service is to be tried with fire, we cannot fail to feel the importance of having abundant grace, whereby we may serve God acceptably, with reverence and godly fear—whereby we may offer on his altar an offering in righteousness. But it is cheering to know that however painful may be the fiery trials through which the saints must pass, and however much of unacceptable service the saints shall have burnt up in the trial, that our God has not left the business of refining and polishing his jewels to any other. He sits himself as a refiner, with his steadfast eye upon the fining pot, and will not suffer the smallest particle of the pure gold to be consumed or lost. And when the process of refining shall be over, God's people shall come forth pure as the virgin gold that has been seven times tried in the fire. Think it not strange, then, concerning the fiery trials we are passing through, as though some strange thing had happened; the work of God is going on, and Christ will purify to himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works. Let us then not say a confederacy to all to whom the world shall say a confederacy; neither fear their fear, nor be afraid. Sanctify the Lord of hosts himself, and let him be your fear, and let him be your dread. And he shall be for a Sanctuary; but for a stone of stumbling, and for a rock of offense to both houses of Israel; for a gin and for a snare to the inhabitants of Jerusalem; and many among them shall stumble, and fall, and be broken, and be snared, and be taken. "Bind up the testimony, seal the law among my disciples."—Isa. viii. 12–16.

PLEASE BE SURE

IN sending remittances for renewals of subscriptions to give us the same name that the paper is already coming to. If the party is married, and the paper is coming to the wife's name, and we receive a remittance to renew the subscription, and the husband's name is given, we have no means of knowing that it is meant for the subscription in the wife's name; consequently the husband's name is entered on our list, and the paper sent to both parties. Or if the paper is coming in the husband's name, and the renewal is sent in the wife's name, the same thing is likely to occur. It is a good plan to inclose in the letter one of the little pink slips containing the name, taken either from the margin of the paper or from the wrapper in which the paper comes.

to them, and esteeming divine things as of less importance. Mary sat at the feet of Jesus, hearing the gracious words that fell from his lips. Of all places on earth the most desirable is to be indeed at the feet of Jesus. It is the best and only safe place for believers. How often did Jesus rebuke his apostles. "O fools, and slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have written." He said to Peter, "Get thee behind me, Satan." "Thou savorest not the things that be of God, but those that be of men." He rebuked the disciples, and taught them not to seek, like the Gentiles, after certain things, assuring them that they should be clothed and fed. "O ye of little faith." When we see our own conduct we can justly say and earnestly cry, Truth, Lord; yet, Lord, increase our faith; help thou our unbelief. Then, when we see what faith has wrought in the witnesses of God in ages past, and what it still works in his children, and contemplate the power, nature and glory of it, may we not be encouraged to hope in God, trust in him, and look unto him for life, and salvation from all these things? We are sure that resolutions will not do. We have tried them, and they are soon broken. But the light breaks upon us, and we know that through faith we can work righteousness, and through faith we shall overcome at last, and triumph over those things which give us so much trouble, mar our joys, and break our greatest pleasures in time; that faith which raises us to the highest conception of duty, and then arms us with power to do those things which are pleasing in God's sight; thus illustrating that without faith it is impossible to please God. "Faith helps our feeble hope to rest upon a faithful God."

"Lord, give us such a faith as this,
And when our time shall come
We'll taste e'en here the hallowed bliss
Of our eternal home."

Yours in hope,

W. LIVELY.

HANNIBAL, Mo., June 20, 1895.

MY DEAR BROTHER BEEBE:—I am yet a monument of the goodness and mercy of our dear Lord, in the eighty-third year of my pilgrimage; and though almost helpless, I am still able to read the dear old SIGNS OF THE TIMES, which through your generous kindness comes to me free once a week, laden with the same precious truth which it has set forth from the beginning, and throughout the last sixty-three years. Many of them I have been an unworthy subscriber and an agent; and now, and for some time past, as I have said, by your liberality I have enjoyed the same inestimable privilege. I am the same poor, old, afflicted and helpless sinner, and at times it looks that I will be here but little longer; but I desire to be reconciled to the blessed will of the Lord. As you can see, I can barely write, and this is likely the last you will ever receive from me. I will be glad if you will give it a place in the SIGNS, that my dear brethren may know why I do not acknowledge their epistles of love. I hope they will continue them, though I am unable to respond. I want to say that I am still unable to walk, except a very little with supports, and am unable to attend our church meetings. It was July 3d, 1892, that the railroad cars ran over me, and I have not been able to walk since; but I have been wonderfully blessed of the Lord. It looks wonderful that such an old sinner as I should have the precious fellowship of the saints which seems to be accorded me. I would that I could walk worthy of it.

I will submit these few scattering thoughts to you, brother Beebe, and associates, and the dear brethren, readers of the dear old SIGNS. Farewell, dear brethren, one and all.

I am, as I hope, your brother and companion in tribulation,

W. F. KERCHEVAL.

FAIRBANKS, Ind., April 22, 1895.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS:—Our little church at Fairbanks is living in peace, and the Lord is doing great things for her, leading sinners out of darkness into the light of his dear Son. Christian friends, when you talk about traveling in the dark I can witness with you there. Forty years ago in May I professed a hope in Christ. Darkness had disappeared, and I received joy for mourning. I could not see how I ever could see any more trouble. I traveled on in this happy condition for quite a while; but while on my way from meeting one day a feeling came over me like this, You are deceived; this is all a delusion; you are yet in your sins. I was completely enshrouded in darkness again; and that is the way I have gone along from that time until now. Sometimes the way looks bright and lovely, and sometimes the way looks so dreary that my faith grows weak. I have passed through many dark seasons; and during them I have had to wait until the Lord revived my drooping spirits, and then all was well again for a season. I have long since learned that I can do nothing in and of myself. I verily believe that the hand of the Lord is leading his people all the while, through the darkness as well as in the sunshine. I know that sometimes we feel like we are left alone; but we know the blessed Savior told his disciples that he would never leave them nor forsake them; but when he hides himself we feel lonely and desolate. Then we have to walk by faith, and not by sight, until he reveals himself again. Dear brethren, may we travel on, feeling that we are in the hands of one who is able to keep us to the end. Let us contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints, let come what may. We may expect persecution; but if the Lord is on our side all will be well. A few more days, or years at most, and our warfare will all be over. Our blessed Savior will come by and by and cheer our drooping hearts. He will lead us through the pearly gates into the New Jerusalem, to sing praises to God and the Lamb for evermore. Sometimes in meditating upon these things I seem to be carried away in the Spirit, so much so that it seems I can hardly wait until my change comes. But I do not want to murmur. I want to live to the honor and glory of God. May he give me grace sufficient for my day and trials, is the prayer of one who loves the truth.

Look over this scribble, and if it is worth anything use it; but if not, burn it.

ELIZA A. TRUBLOOD.

UPPER CLINCH, Tenn., March 22, 1895.

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES:—I thought I would write a few thoughts concerning the faith of the gospel, or the faith of the Son of God, or of God's elect. Faith is called the faith of the Son of God, because Jesus is the author of it. It is called the faith of God's elect, because they are in possession of it. It is called the faith of the gospel, because the gospel teaches faith in Jesus Christ. Faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen. Faith is not human opinion, or something that man manufactures, or something that parents teach their children; but it is a substance. It is as real in its nature as the sun; but it is a spiritual substance, of divine origin. It is the gift of God, as a medium through which the children of God receive grace, or daily bread; for it is by grace that ye are saved, through faith; and that not of yourselves; it is the gift of God; not of works, lest any man should boast. There are many creeds that are believed by the religious world, but there is but one faith that justifies a sinner in the sight of God. That is the faith which Paul speaks of when he says, "Therefore being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ." Jesus Christ being the one and only Mediator between God and man. A mediator is not a mediator of one, but God is one; and the one Mediator is the Mediator of two, that is, God and his people. The people of God are those whom he has chosen, both of the Jews and Gentiles. Those he hath chosen were chosen in Christ, and that before the foundation of the world; not because of any works of righteousness which they have done, nor because they are Jews or Gentiles, but because he loved them; and because of the great love wherewith God loved them, he gave his Son to redeem them. Therefore Paul says, "Ye are not your own, ye are bought with a price." Jesus paid the redemption price for us. Therefore, brethren, I write these things for your consideration; dispose of them as you see fit. I have never been in the habit of writing. I have many times thought of writing, but I am a poor speller, and for this reason have withholden my scribbling from the public. If there is anything in this worth publishing, please correct the spelling and mistakes; if not, let it go into the waste-box.

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE.

TO MOST of our readers the above mentioned book is too well known to need any introduction or a description by us. While many of the Bibles have a Concordance appended, they are generally so condensed or abridged as to be of little or no use. Cruden's Complete Concordance, however, enables one to readily turn to any passage of Scripture of which they can call to mind two or three words, and in our opinion is the most complete and convenient as a reference book of any published. In addition, it contains many other aids in studying the Bible, as may be seen by reference to advertisement on last page. Remember, both the books there mentioned are CRUDEN'S COMPLETE.

MARRIAGES.

ON Wednesday evening, July 3d, 1895, at the residence of the bride's parents, in Butler, Baltimore Co., Md., Mr. George W. Myers, of Baltimore city, and Miss Dora Kessler, by Elder F. A. Chick.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

BROTHER Benjamin S. Fellows was born in the town of Wilkes Barre, Pa., August 21st, 1818, and lived there with his parents until he was ten or eleven years old, when he came with his parents to Crawford Co., Ohio, and settled in the town of Galion. He was united in marriage to Miss A. J. Reed, Oct. 10th, 1839, and to them were born three sons and six daughters. They moved to Cerro Gordo Co., Iowa, in the year 1859, where he was living with his son in his last illness. He died June 21st, 1895.

The funeral services were held at the house of his son, where he died, on the 22d; after which his body was taken to the Rockford cemetery and laid by the side of his wife, who died three months before, and whose obituary was published in the SIGNS of April 3d. (The name of her daughter and son-in-law is Reed, and not Reeder, as was given in her obituary.) He leaves two sons and four daughters to mourn their loss, besides many friends and neighbors; but our loss is his eternal gain.

The writer tried to speak a few words of comfort to the bereaved children and friends from John xi. 25.

M. L. JACKSON.

NORA SPRINGS, Iowa.

DIED—At his home near Causey, Morehouse Parish, La., Robert Russell Newman Jr., of typhoid fever, aged 20 years, 7 months and 7 days. He was born Oct. 12th, 1874. He seemed to partially recover from the fever, but heart trouble set in, and it soon became evident that his time on earth was short. At first he had a great desire to recover, for he was of a cheerful disposition, was young, and enjoyed life; but as his illness increased he seemed willing to depart, saying many times, "Lord, have mercy on me, a poor sinner." He was ready to go when his time had come, and the Lord thought him worthy to take him home. He suffered greatly, yet in the midst of it all remembered those about him with kindly messages and parting advice. Everything which love could suggest was done for him by mother and sisters, who longed to keep him with them a little longer; but on the afternoon of May 19th he quietly passed away. He leaves many friends, his dear mother, two sisters and two brothers, to mourn their loss; yet our loss is his eternal gain.

"Weep not that his toils are over,
Weep not that his race is run;
God grant we may rest as calmly
When our work, like his, is done."

His loving sister,

M. NEWMAN.

ASSOCIATIONAL.

WE desire to say to the readers of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES in Texas or elsewhere who may be interested that the Fellowship Association of Primitive or Predestinarian Baptists is appointed to be held with the Fellowship Church, Upshur Co., Texas, ten miles northwest of Longview, and twelve miles southeast of Gilmer, to begin on Friday before the second Sunday in September, 1895.

Visitors will be met at Longview on Thursday before. If any should wish to come to Gilmer by rail they should notify us by letter or card. We extend a cordial invitation to brethren, sisters and friends. Those who have read (and who feel interested in the matter) charges against us, published some time in October last, would do well to come among us and see for themselves as to the truth of the statements, the greater portion of which we deny, as having no foundation whatever in fact.

H. B. JONES, Clerk.

THE Spoon River Association of Regular Baptists will be held with the New Hope Church, in Greenbush, Warren Co., Ill., commencing on Wednesday before the first Sunday in September, 1895, at 10 o'clock a. m., and continuing the two following days, the same being August 28th, 29th and 30th.

Those wishing to attend, and coming from the west, will be met at Roseville, on the Rock Island Branch of the C., B. & Q. R. R. Those coming from the north, south and east will be met at St. Augustine and Avon, on the Quincy Branch of the C., B. & Q. R. R., on Tuesday evening before the meeting. The brethren are cordially invited to attend, especially ministering brethren.

S. H. HUMPHREY, Clerk.

THE next session of the Staunton River Old School Baptist Association is appointed to be held with the church at Galilee, in Pittsylvania Co., Va., five miles west of Chatham, on the Southern R. R., commencing on Friday before the second Sunday in August.

We would be pleased to have some of our northern brethren meet with us, especially ministering brethren. Those coming by rail will be met at Chatham on Thursday before. Those wishing conveyance will write to me.

J. C. SHELHORSE, Clerk.

TWO DAYS MEETINGS.

A TWO days meeting is appointed to be held with the Otego Church, at Otego, N. Y., on the last day of July and the first day of August, commencing at 10 o'clock. All lovers of the truth are cordially requested to attend with us.

This meeting is to take the place of our former yearly meeting, held in October. This is the first of a series of meetings to be held in place of the Chemung Association.

G. M. FRENCH, Clerk.

YEARLY MEETINGS.

DEAR BROTHER BEEBE:—Please announce in your paper that the Soldier River Church, of Monona Co., Iowa, will hold her yearly meeting on Saturday before the fourth Sunday in July, 1895.

DEVOTED TO THE OLD SCHOOL BAPTIST CAUSE,

PUBLISHED EVERY WEDNESDAY,

AT TWO DOLLARS A YEAR,

BY GILBERT BEEBE'S SON,

MIDDLETOWN, ORANGE CO., NEW YORK,

To whom all letters should be addressed, and money orders made payable.

EDITORS:

BENTON JENKINS, Middletown, N. Y. F. A. CHICK, Reisterstown, Md.

B. L. BEEBE, Middletown, N. Y.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SON, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date. This date denotes the time at which your subscription expires; and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

PICTORIAL HISTORY

OF THE

UNITED STATES.

By James D. McCabe.

This work is no dry mass of details—no bombastic effort to inflame the national pride, but a vivid and brilliant narrative of the events of our history, from the discovery of the American Continent down to the present time. It gives a most interesting account of the Indians of North America, from the time of the coming of the white men. The voyages of Columbus and explorations and discoveries of the different nations of Europe are related with graphic power. Every step of our colonial history is traced with patient fidelity, and the sources of those noble and, we trust, enduring institutions, which have made our country free and great, are shown with remarkable clearness. Then follows a clear and succinct account of our great Struggle for Independence, and the establishment of the Federal Union—the events of our career from the close of the Revolution to the administration of Harrison.

The work is printed from plain, new type, on fine calendered paper, and comprised in one octavo volume of 960 pages. It is splendidly embellished with nearly 500 fine engravings, embracing battles and other historical scenes, portraits of distinguished men, views of our principal cities, &c., &c.

Bound in Fine Silk Cloth, Plain Edges, $2.00, Post-paid.

POETRY.

COMPLETE IN JESUS.

All, all imperfection,
Not fit for inspection,
My deeds are, and this life of mine;
But so satisfying,
My soul beautifying,
O Christ, is that dear life of thine.

Often am I sighing,
For there's no denying
That I'm vile, so sinful am I!
On Jesus relying,
'Twill sweeten e'en dying;
His merits shall raise me on high.

In him all's completeness,
In him is my meetness
To partake with the saints in light;
To his righteousness clinging,
I hope to go singing
To heaven in robes fair and white.

There's no condemnation!
O sweet contemplation!
Redeemed by the Lamb's precious blood!
O what a bestowment,
The blood of atonement,
That brings a worm nigh unto God!

In robes of salvation,
I've strong consolation,
For who shall lay aught to my charge?
Jesus died to redeem,
Is my soul's joyful theme,
From sin and the curse set at large.

O! grant that believing,
Sweet mercy receiving,
I ever may cleave unto thee;
To me be it given
An entrance in heaven
Through the blood shed on Calvary's tree.

O'er sin all victorious,
Triumphantly glorious,
All trials and storms to outride;
The blest resurrection
Shall declare the perfection
Of Christ and his own ransomed bride.

Sweet anticipation,
Hope's bright consummation,
To dwell with the ransomed above!
To go out, no, never!
But worship forever
The Lord God of eternal love!

BEREAVED.

God gave, and he hath taken
Away a precious gift;
Yet we are not forsaken,
Though unto him we lift
An eye bedimm'd by sorrow,
A heart in all its pain:
The light will come to-morrow,
The rainbow after rain.

Poor is the life that never Hath sorrow in its lot;
There's something lost forever
To him who hath it not.
A gracious interleaving
Within our book of days
Of moments sad with grieving
Gives many years of praise.

In sorrow's chair reclining,
Why wrap in robes of woe?
Why shrink from the refining
That makes the silver glow?
"Lo, I am with you alway!"
The very word of God,
To light the darken'd hallway
Where silent death hath trod.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE PLANT OF RENOWN.

"And I will raise up for them a plant of renown, and they shall be no more consumed with hunger in the land, neither bear the shame of the heathen any more."—Ezek. xxxiv. 29.

This was a promise given unto God's chosen people by God himself, showing his wonderful care for his people in preserving them as their great deliverer. God by the mouth of the prophets gave many assurances of his will and ability to care for his chosen and peculiar people, and he speaks of the wonders that he will do for them in bringing to pass what he had declared from the beginning. Among those things spoken of the principal one is the King promised unto them, who is so perfect, and different from any other king or potentate, as to be set forth as "The Desire of all nations." None in all the broad expanse of heaven, earth and hell could be found like unto him, or so desirable as he, to whom "shall the gathering of the people be." A prophet hired to curse Israel testified that "The shout of a king is among them," hundreds of years before its fulfillment. The most sublime language in all the law and the prophets is concerning the promised King and his spiritual kingdom. He is frequently set forth in many beautiful figures, of things found on the earth; for instance, when illustrating his strength and durability he is represented as a rock. When he is spoken of in regard to his exaltation and high abode, he is said to be in the top of the mountains; for "His foundation is in the holy mountains."—Psa. lxxxvii. "And it shall come to pass in the last days, that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills, and all nations shall flow unto it."—Isa. ii. 2. "The hill of God is as the hill of Bashan; an high hill as the hill of Bashan. Why leap ye, ye high hills? This is the hill which God desireth to dwell in; yea, the Lord will dwell in it forever."—Psalm lxviii. 15, 16. Isaiah speaks of him, as touching his incarnation, as a nail in a sure place. Ezra and Zechariah both speak of the same nail; and Zechariah says that the nail shall come forth out of Judah; thus pointing directly to the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ in the flesh of his people; thus cementing, binding or nailing his people forever in his everlasting embrace. This figure is one of interest and comfort to the "poor of the flock;" and though he is the great Shepherd of the sheep, and has great power and glory, he will turn his hand upon the little ones, to care for the helpless, strengthen the feeble knees, and tenderly lead them that are with young. No feeble lamb of his fold is too low, mean or weak for his tender care and sympathy. He is spoken of as "The Branch," "The Branch of righteousness," "The Righteous Branch," and "The Branch of the Lord." These figures portray him as a rod coming from the stem of Jesse; bringing to mind a tree that is planted deep in the earth, and which represents his people, they being called "trees of righteousness, the planting of the Lord, that he might be glorified." They are also called plants, and planted by his right hand planting. "Thy plants are an orchard of pomegranates, with pleasant fruits, camphire with spikenard, spikenard and saffron; calamus and cinnamon, with all trees of frankincense, myrrh and aloes, with all the chief spices."—Cant. iv. "For the vineyard of the Lord is the house of Israel, and the men of Judah his pleasant plant," or plant of his pleasures.—Isa. v. 7. "The righteous shall flourish like the palm tree; he shall grow like a cedar in Lebanon. Those that be planted in the house of the Lord shall flourish in the courts of our God."—Psa. xcii. 12, 13. Jesus says, "Every plant which my heavenly Father hath not planted shall be rooted up."—Matt. xv. 13. "They shall inherit the land forever, the branch of my planting, the work of my hands, that I may be glorified."—Isa. lx. 21. Among these plants of the Lord is one that excels them all, a plant of renown; and though it is spoken of that "He shall grow up before him as a tender plant," yet he shall increase beyond the measure of any plant heretofore known; for "A little one shall become a thousand, and a small one a strong nation." The increase and fame of this plant is like unto the stone which Nebuchadnezzar saw in his dream, which was cut out of the mountain without hands, became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth. The cedar branch mentioned by Ezekiel, also in a certain sense prefigures the increase and dominion of this plant of renown, from, as it were, a small beginning; but here, as everywhere, the hand of the Lord is manifest. "Thus saith the Lord God, I will also take of the highest branch of the high cedar, and I will set it. I will crop off from the top of his young twigs a tender one, and will plant it upon an high mountain and eminent; in the mountain of the height of Israel will I plant it; and it shall bring forth boughs, and bear fruit, and be a goodly cedar; and under it shall dwell all fowl of every wing; in the shadow of the branches thereof shall they dwell."—Ezek. xvii. 22–24. It is with same misgivings that I have placed the above quotation as having reference to the holy One of Israel; but in his incarnation, and as the Son of man, I have thought that the cedar twig here spoken of, as coming from the topmost branch of the high cedar, and planted in the mountain of the height of Israel, could not well represent any other character; also, as it is used in the singular number, hence could not represent his people, a multitude. The place where it is planted, "In the mountain of the height of Israel," has a signification, and one of vast importance, one which the pen of inspiration has been careful to record many times. Here is where his people were and are commanded to worship and serve him, and nowhere else. "For in mine holy mountain, in the mountain of the height of Israel, saith the Lord God, there shall all the house of Israel, all of them in the land, serve me: there will I accept them, and there will I require your offerings, and the first-fruits of your oblations, with all your holy things."—Ezek. xx. 40. "But in the last days it shall come to pass that the mountain of the house of the Lord shall be established in the top of the mountains, and it shall be exalted above the hills; and people shall flow unto it."—Micah iv. 1. The blessings of this poor and afflicted people are in "the mountain of the height of Israel." For, "As the dew of Hermon, and as the dew that descended upon the mountains of Zion: for there the Lord commanded the blessing, even life for evermore."—Psalm cxxxiii. 3. Upon the "mountain of the height of Israel," the "mountains of Zion," is where this plant of renown is known; and this place is a fruitful field. Bashan is as the hill of God; and the literal meaning of Bashan is soft, rich soil; the best soil earth can afford to supply plant-food. So here in this one word we find the first essentials to a fruitful field. "And they shall be no more consumed with hunger in the land." Here, in this mountain, "the righteous are not forsaken, nor his seed begging bread." "They shall not hunger nor thirst, neither shall the heat nor sun smite them; for he that hath mercy on them shall lead them, even by the springs of water shall he guide them. And I will make all my mountains a way, and my highways shall be exalted."—Isa. xlix. 10, 11. "They shall be abundantly satisfied with the fatness of thy house; and thou shalt make them drink of the river of thy pleasures."—Psalm xxxvi. 8. "The Lord is my Shepherd, I shall not want. He maketh me to lie down in green pastures, he leadeth me beside the still waters."—Psalm xxiii. 1, 2. "They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more; neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat; for the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living fountains of waters."—Rev. vii. 16. "Neither bear the shame of the heathen any more." The children of Israel were often destroyed by their enemies, the heathen, their land polluted, and their ancient high places in the possession of their enemy. Then they rejoiced over Israel, and mocked him, saying, Where is now your God in whom ye trusted? As though they could hold them in perpetual bondage and captivity; but the Lord would not suffer his people always to bear the shame of the heathen, but has declared that the heathen shall henceforth bear his own shame and everlasting contempt; for his own arm hath gotten him the victory, and Zion's enemies shall no more rejoice over her; for the decree has gone forth that no weapon that is formed against her shall prosper, and every tongue that shall rise against her in judgment she shall condemn. "This is the heritage of the servants of the Lord, and their righteousness is of me, saith the Lord." Trusting that the Lord will abundantly bless us with his precious grace, I am, as ever, in fellowship,

PINSONFORK, Ky., June 12, 1895.

DEAR BROTHER CHICK:—I see in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES for May 29th your views on the following text, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?"—Matt. xxvii. 46. Also, I see in the conclusion that you have expressed an earnest desire for the views of others on the same subject; therefore I have concluded to express a few of my thoughts on one point only, for I heartily concur with you in your views on every point you have made save this one, and that is where you say, when speaking of Christ's agonies and cries, "We have not been able to see that they meant a real withdrawal of the divine nature from him, so that he was at that moment but a mere man." In the way that you have qualified this assertion I do not know to my full satisfaction just what you meant. You say, "A real withdrawal." Also, you say, "So that he was a mere man," &c. Your language seems to have in it here the idea that there was a withdrawal of the divine nature from the human nature at that moment, but not in such a manner as to leave him a mere man. While I believe that the divine nature did withdraw from the human nature at that moment, or in other words, that the Godhead forsook the manhood, that it might die a victim to the law, &c., yet I do not believe that he was nothing more than a mere man; for the singular advancement of the human nature in Christ seems to us far above that of any other person, it being filled with an unparalleled measure of divine graces, in which respect he is said to be anointed above his fellows. "Therefore God, thy God, hath anointed thee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows."—Psalm xlv. 7. But I have thought this (and do now), that when the Godhead forsook the manhood, that it might die a victim to the law, at that time Christ had no more power to resist the death he died than any other man has to resist the death that he dies. Also, I have thought for many years (and think so yet) that Samson was an eminent type of Christ; and if so, doubtless this awful moment of Christ was typified by the seven locks of Samson's head being shaven off, and his strength going from him, and he being weak as any other man. I will quote from Judges xvi., beginning with the sixteenth verse: "And it came to pass, when she pressed him daily with her words, and urged him, so that his soul was vexed unto death; that he told her all his heart, and said unto her, There hath not come a razor upon mine head; for I have been a Nazarite unto God from my mother's womb: if I be shaven, then my strength will go from me, and I shall become weak, and be like any other man. * * * And she made him sleep upon her knees; and she called for a man, and she caused him to shave off the seven locks of his head; and she began to afflict him, and his strength went from him." Doubtlessly Christ in his mediatorial person had two natures, human and divine, and in this capacity was perfectly God and perfectly man; and in his divine nature he as God had power to do and did do everything on the part of God; and in his human nature he as man had power to do and did do everything on the part of man, in the reconciliation of his people. Hence he had all power both in heaven and in earth; therefore he is the author of a complete, perfect, all-sufficient and eternal salvation.

"My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" Brother Chick, this language has in it the idea clearly and distinctly that there was at that awful moment a forsaking or a withdrawing; and it does seem to me that the phrase, "My God, my God," does allude to the Godhead, or divine nature, and that the pronoun "me" does allude to the manhood or human nature of Christ. But be that as it may, or rather as it is, there was a forsaking or a withdrawal; and the question is, "Why hast thou [the Father] forsaken me," the Son, or why has the divine nature forsaken the human nature? It has been my idea for many years that why the divine nature forsook the human nature was that it might die a victim to the law; for we know that Christ died for our sins, died to the law, &c. I do not see how the divine nature could die; for it seems to me that the divine nature or character alluded to by the phrase, "My God, my God," was equivalent to eternal; and if so it could not die, for that which is eternal cannot die. I will quote a text in the prophecy of Isaiah which I think, in a part at least, corresponds with the text under consideration: "Yet it pleased the Lord to bruise him [Christ]; he hath put him to grief: when thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin, he shall see his seed, he shall prolong his days," &c.—Isa. liii. 10. I have thought of this text in this way, that the soul was offered, and the body sacrificed; although this view may be wrong, and if so I am not only willing for you to correct me, but greatly desire you to do so, and also with my general idea on this point, as you can readily see that my idea is that it was the divine nature that forsook the human nature at that awful moment when the Lion of Judah's tribe in awful groans cried, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" As I have not written you a letter for a long time, I thought I would make use of this opportunity, and let you know my thoughts on this sublime subject. I have in a hurried way embodied a few of them, and they are for your criticism and correction. Hoping to hear from you at your earliest convenience, I remain yours in love,

W. J. MAY.

REMARKS.—We commend the most kind and brotherly tone of brother May's letter in response to the editorial of which he speaks. We are glad indeed for brethren to feel free to express any dissent from our views which they may have, as well as when they agree with what we write. The subject to which our brother refers is awfully sublime and mysterious, and we ought to speak of it carefully and reverently. Our brother speaks with care, and evidently feels as we do, that it should be well considered. We are glad to ask the brethren to read brother May's views with candid consideration; yet at the same time we cannot quite agree with his view as we understand it. We do not wish to say again what we said in the editorial regarding the reasons why we could not think there was a personal, actual departure of the divine nature from the human nature, or rather, as we should prefer to say, a departure of the Godhead of Jesus from the man Christ Jesus; and we do not now desire to enter into any controversy. The theme is too sacred for that. But we wish to still farther suggest one thought. Jesus said, "I have power to lay down my life, and I have power to take it again." He laid down his life; he gave his life. It seems to us that had there been an actual, personal withdrawing of the divine nature, it could not have been true that he laid down his life, and took it again. A man could not have this power. In 1 John iii. 16 it is expressly said that God "laid down his life for us." Could this have been true had there been a real, personal departure of the Godhead from him before he expired upon the cross? We suggest these reflections in reply to brother May's kind and thoughtful letter. We believe that he and we alike desire to know the truth as far as it may be revealed to us, and that we would neither of us seek to be wise above what is written. Nothing but the truth can make us free. Nothing but truth can abide.—C.

FRANKLIN FORKS, Pa., June 13, 1895.

ELDER F. A. CHICK—MY DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST:—Although a stranger to you, I feel moved to try to write to you as the God of all grace and the Father of all our mercies shall move me by his holy Spirit, I hope. I have often thought that I would love to write to the editors of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, telling as best I could what the dear Lord has done for poor me; but as many times I have excused myself by saying it would do no good, for they never would notice it, or at least would not put it in the paper. Dear brother, although I am a member of the Old School Baptist Church, in some things that I have been taught I am made to differ with them; and for this very reason am I at this time compelled to write to you, because of some remarks in your piece in the SIGNS of June 12th. Will you allow me to speak freely concerning wherein I differ from you? I feel that you would say, Speak. I thought Elder Durand's piece in the SIGNS a short time ago excellent, about patiently bearing one with another, &c. Please patiently bear with me, for I am of a stammering tongue, and unlearned, and well understand your superiority to myself.

I feel that you have made some statements that are errors. I only dare to say so because I am made to feel that the Lord our God hath revealed unto me, even me, that you with all the rest who thus believe have taken the letter of the word instead of it having been revealed by the Spirit unto you. For several years in my experience I believed the same, but in God's own time he taught me better. I know that I cannot teach another, but I am made to contend for the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, what hath been revealed unto me; but I know so very little. You say we should also protest against the expression that "Christ died for the world." Also, you say, "We know of no greater absurdity than the assertion that Jesus died for all the world, when at the same time he designed to save but a part of mankind." Perhaps you will say to me, as others have said, that I disconnect Scripture, and pick out here and there a passage to establish my belief; but should you? I should have to answer you as I have others, Do you not condemn me for what you allow in yourself? Had I not most powerfully been convinced that it was true, and daily convinced and established more and more, I should not dare to thus boldly speak. "My little children, these things write I unto you, that ye sin not. And if any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous: and he is the propitiation for our sins: and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world."—1 John ii. 1, 2. "Therefore, as by the offense of one judgment came upon all men to condemnation; even so by the righteousness of one the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life."—Romans v. 18. "Among the gods there is none like unto thee, O Lord; neither are there any works like unto thy works. All nations whom thou hast made shall come and worship before thee, O Lord; and shall glorify thy name."—Psalm lxxxvi. 8, 9. "The next day John seeth Jesus coming unto him, and saith, Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world."—John i. 29. "For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through him might be saved."—John iii. 17. Many more Scriptures I might quote similar, but forbear. Still another comes to my mind, "And we have seen and do testify that the Father sent the Son to be the Savior of the world."—1 John iv. 14. While I am made to feel that by grace, through faith, I am saved, and that not of myself, but it is the gift of God, and that Christ Jesus hath been formed within me the hope of glory, the sinless child, the pure, the perfect, the spotless and undefiled, just as assuredly am I made to know that in me, that is, in my flesh, dwells no good thing; possessed of a carnal mind, which is enmity against God. I know that I have still a mortal, corruptible body, which is a vessel of wrath fitted to destruction. The vile and the precious are both with me in one, yet separate: one a child of God, the other a child of the devil; "for he that sinneth is of the devil." The one is the beloved of the Father; the other is hated of him. I have experienced that to be carnally minded is death, but to be spiritually minded is life and peace and joy unspeakable. I know that God is able to bind the strong man, sin, and reign over us and rule us by his holy Spirit, if he please, and none can hinder him; but how many times when I would do good, evil is present with me. The good that I would I do not; but the evil which I would not that I do. I am established in the truth that man's ways are not in himself; that it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps. God will have mercy on whom he will have mercy, and whom he will he hardeneth. I have experienced it. At times I am made to feel how great is the mercy of God to me, and with David experience and declare, "Thou, O God, hast delivered my soul from the lowest hell;" and with Jonah have I been made to cry unto God out of the belly of hell. I have been taught, and made to know that it is the truth, that the earth is the Lord's, and the fullness thereof; the world, and they that dwell therein. Our God is the only true and living God, the God of heaven and of the whole earth, the mighty God, yea, the almighty God, the powerful, the all-powerful. He speaks, and it is done; he commands, and it stands fast. He is King of kings and Lord of lords. He sent his dearly beloved and only begotten Son into the world to seek and to save that which was lost, and I am fully persuaded that he failed not in his mission; he "who gave himself a ransom for all, to be testified in due time;" and the time appointed of our God for me to see and testify to it has come.

I hope, I trust, that you will not be offended with me. In love have I written this. As I write, more and more do I think, but feel that I must close.

SOUTHAMPTON, Pa., June 22, 1895.

DEAR BRETHREN:—I send you for publication in the SIGNS a letter from one of our young members to her husband's father and mother, brother and sister Lefferts, of this place. She now lives near a hundred miles from here, and so cannot often be with us; but I am thankful that her mind is toward the church, and that she has a desire to communicate with the brethren and sisters. She and her husband are far from those whom they believe to be the church of God, but it is an inexpressible blessing to have a love for the church and for the truth, which I believe they both have. They who love Jerusalem are commanded (what a precious command) to rejoice with her.—Isa. lxvi. 10.

SILAS H. DURAND.

NUTLEY, N. J., June 9, 1895.

DEAR FATHER AND MOTHER:—I shall on this lovely morning try to write to you. I suppose you are all getting ready for meeting. O how I wish I could be there to go with you. I cannot tell when I have had such a great desire to go. On meeting days I always think how much I would like to attend; but the feeling with me is not always the same as it is this morning. I feel that if I could only be permitted to hear a gospel sermon it would be like bread to a hungry one, or as pure water to the thirsty. I have been in utter darkness for a great length of time, and not seeming to be interested in anything except that which is of the world. At times it has troubled me to know why it is so. I have felt that I was going down into a horrible pit where there is no standing, and at times I have almost been made to feel that there was a little something I should do, and would resolve to try and walk differently. But alas! when I would do good, evil is present with me; and the very thing I would not do, that I do. Then how plainly that Scripture comes up before my mind, "Not of works, lest any man should boast." "By grace are ye saved, through faith; and that not of yourselves; it is the gift of God." I have felt many times since I received a hope, and united with the church at Southampton, that it was my duty to write a piece for the SIGNS, so that the dear children of God might know what reason I had for asking a place with them; but I feel very much my inability to write. It is just five years to-day since I was baptized and received a place among the dear saints of God, and it was just such a morning as this, everything so beautiful, and peace reigned in my heart. I felt so completely lifted up above the things of this world that I thought I would never be in darkness again. Previous to the time when I received a hope I had traveled along in darkness. I would try to pray, but all I could say was, "Lord, have mercy on me, a sinner." And as I was about to give up, fearing the Lord did not hear my cry, O how sweetly it came to me that morning as I stood ironing, feeling that I was forever lost, and everything about me was so dark that I could scarcely see to work, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." It was a sweet sound to me. In the twinkling of an eye everything seemed changed. The sun shone around me, and the singing of the birds was most sweet. I had to stop my work and go into the sitting-room, where my aunt was, and tell her of my feelings. I remember that she told me I could go with her to the next church meeting, and if I felt like it I could tell my feelings to those dear children of God. But when the day came I felt that I could say nothing. I was in a state of doubt, and continued in that state until the time of our association at Kingwood, which I attended. The preaching came so sweetly to me, especially dear Elder Bundy's, from Solomon's Song v. 16. And Elder Thompson, who preached for us the first Sunday after the association, spoke of the mark in the forehead; and it was while listening to him that I felt impressed to tell the dear saints how much I loved them, and to ask for a place among them, which I did at the next Saturday meeting, and they received me. How strange it seems to me; for my walk is so far from that of a child of God, and I feel unworthy of a place among those dear people. But I love this people, and none other. I am made sometimes to wonder why it is that I love them so much; but I know that without them and the hope I have I would surely die.

Now, dear father and mother, I do not understand how I came to write as I have, for when I sat down I meant to tell you about our new home and how we are getting along; but as my thoughts ran so did my pen write. All join in sending love to all at home, and to the many dear friends.

Your loving and unworthy one,

LIZZIE C. LEFFERTS.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, Ind., June 9, 1895.

DEAR EDITORS OF THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES:—I hope the dear Lord will sustain you in these trying times. What could we do without the SIGNS? It is like a dear, tried, familiar friend. No matter how busy I am when it makes its weekly visits to my home, I must stop a moment and look over the familiar names. I know Elder Chick will always give us a taste of good, wholesome food. I feel sure the dear Lord raised him up to fill this important place. And Fred. W. Keene, how my heart bounds with joy when I see his name. He has the pen of a ready writer, and should not weary in well doing, but write for every paper. This number (June 5th) contains many precious letters. Some names are strange to me, but O what sweet fellowship I have for the writers! One especially touched me, whose experience runs in the same channel as mine, giving me renewed hope that I, too, have been taught of the Lord. Dear sister L. Schiefer, I, too, have traveled in that dark and thorny desert, when the darkness was so great it could be felt, and the same question came to me, "Now, where is your God? You thought you had a good hope, but where is it?" For three weeks I dared not open the Bible, for it condemned me. This was after I had joined the church. I felt like I stood alone, that no professed christian could have such feelings and thoughts. When I did in despair open the Bible it was in the book of Job, and there were words just fitting my case. I staid there for days, reading what I had never noticed before. They seemed placed there expressly for me. Dear old Job, how I did love and pity him, just as I do this dear sister who wrote, and thought to burn her writing; but it was preserved for other poor, faltering ones, like poor me to read. I will send her a sheet I wrote and laid aside some months ago. If you have room you may publish it. I never see anything meritorious in my writings; they DID JESUS DIE FOR ALL MEN?

WHILE we desire to commend the kind and christianlike tone of the letter of sister Turrell, on page 234, yet we feel that we must present a few thoughts in reply to some statements which she has made. We can heartily respond, from our own experience, to many things which she has said, and feel sure that she has been taught to know the plague of her own heart, and that salvation is of the Lord. We can from her letter but believe that the Lord has been teaching her, and all such have peace in him; but yet, as we said, we could not publish her letter without calling attention to one or two things, and especially to the Scriptures which she has quoted. We do this all the more willingly because these are among the Scriptures which have been used for many years past by believers in the theory of a general atonement to sustain their theory. This idea of "a general atonement and special application" is as old as Andrew Fuller, of England, who flourished among the Baptists there near the close of the last century. We know not whether it is any older than the day mentioned, but we do know that the apostles of the Lamb did not teach such a theory, as we hope to show ere we close this article. We understand this theory to be that while Christ died for everybody, at the same time the God of heaven did not purpose that everybody should reap the benefits of his death. It seems to us to amount to this, that Christ meant to save every one, but the purpose of the Holy Spirit was to save but a part of mankind. The atonement covered the sins of all mankind, but the Holy Spirit applies the blood of the atonement to but a portion of men, according to this theory.

The expressions to which our sister has called attention, as will be seen by reference to her letter, were used by us in an editorial. We said that we must protest against the expression that "Christ died for all the world," and that we knew of no greater absurdity than the assertion that "Christ died for all the world, when at the same time he designed to save but a part of mankind." When we wrote those expressions we had in mind this theory of Andrew Fuller to which we have just now alluded. It has ever seemed to us absurd to say that Christ paid a redemption price for more than he meant should be his. Why should he die for the non-elect? Why shed his blood for those who were fitted for destruction, whom he knew never could be saved, or be washed in that blood? Is it conceivable that God before the world was should choose out from among mankind some whom he would love and finally redeem, and yet in the supreme act of this redemption, the atonement, change his purpose, and in the atonement embrace everybody? If he meant to save everybody when Jesus hung dying on the cross, then he always meant to save everybody, and he still means to save everybody; for the Scriptures testify that he is "in one mind, and none can turn him." One part of the work of redemption can embrace no more than another part of it. God's purpose in the atonement is just as broad as his purpose in the effectual calling by his Holy Spirit. This must be so, or Jehovah is divided against himself, and his Son Jesus Christ means one thing, while his Holy Spirit means another. We do not have any idea that our sister Turrell would assent to such things as we have been saying, but yet they are the necessary result of this theory of a general atonement and a special application. This theory must always be, to say the best of it, hopelessly confusing to the mind.

Andrew Fuller invented this theory in order that he might have an excuse for addressing all men as gospel subjects, and telling them that they could be saved if they would. Out of this grew up among Baptists every phase and form of the modern effort system, including mourners' benches, protracted meetings, and all the multiplied machinery by which it is sought to convert men. It is safe to say that the aiders and abettors of such "means of salvation" (as they are called), not one of them, really believe in salvation by grace alone, or in election, or in the effectual calling by the Holy Spirit. There is not one of them but feels himself called to a work beyond that which the Master once assigned to Peter, viz., "Feed my sheep," "Feed my lambs." This theory is a joy and delight to those who love to praise man rather than God, and who will be greatly grieved if they do not have the highest seat in heaven, and wear a crown bedecked with more stars than any of their companions. Because sister Turrell feels, as she has said, to be a great sinner, saved by grace alone, and fitted for heaven by the power of God alone, we desire her to see what the results of this theory that Christ atoned for the whole world are. We are persuaded that she, as well as all those who are as the chief of sinners saved by great grace, will start back with abhorrence from a theory which involves such horrible and God-dishonoring results.

Before noticing the Scriptures to which our sister has referred we desire to in all faithfulness and love call attention to another thing. Our sister speaks of this having been revealed to her. We desire to caution her, and all who love the Lord, against accepting anything as a revelation from God unless it be found to be in harmony with the Scriptures. No matter how clear the view may be, nor how much it may be borne in upon our minds, if it be not in harmony with plain testimony of the Scriptures we must not accept it as being from God. "To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them." If our sister's revelation that Christ died for the whole world be of God, then we shall find the proof in the Scriptures. If the Scriptures do not say so, then the "revelation" is not from God, but is either a figment of our own brain, or else we have it from the enemy. No man's view, not even our own, is the standard. We are all liable to err in all things. We doubt not that such a man as Dr. Gill, for instance, who was no doubt an able minister of the new testament, was often mistaken in his view of many things. So we would urge upon sister Turrell, and upon all who may read this, to beware of any testimony save the testimony of the Scriptures. Do not trust your own experience any farther than you have the law and the testimony.

But now we will come to notice the Scriptures referred to in her letter. The first text referred to is 1 John ii. 1, 2. If the "whole world" in this text means all mankind, or every individual of the human race, then there is no escape from the doctrine of universal salvation; for it is said, "He is the propitiation." This means that he is what appeases, or propitiates; and nothing can be clearer than this, that if the work of propitiation has been accomplished for all men, then all men are saved. The expression, "the whole world," cannot mean every individual of the human race without involving too much for anybody but the man who is ready to accept the doctrine of universal salvation. We doubt not the phrase, "the whole world," here means what it does in many other places, viz., the fact that Gentiles as well as Jews are to receive the blessings of the gospel covenant. Christ died not for the Jews only, but also for his people all over the world. There is no other propitiation for any man than Jesus.

In the second text (Romans v. 18) the term "all men" is used. A careful reading of the connection of this Scripture will show that the apostle is not arguing that all men are saved, but that men are saved freely by grace, through the merit of Jesus Christ. Here the term "all men" also, if used in its broadest sense, would prove universalism to be true. If the free gift has come upon any man through the righteousness of Christ unto justification of life, what more can be done for that man? He is saved beyond a peradventure. This use of the language of the apostle would prove too much, unless, as said before, the doctrine of universalism be true. The evident meaning of the apostle is that as all men who are condemned are so through the transgression of one man, Adam, so all men who are justified and saved are so through the obedience of one man, Christ.

The third text referred to is Psalm lxxxvi. 8, 9. It seems to us only needful to say that the psalmist is here setting forth the same glorious truth so often prophesied of, viz., that under the coming gospel day all nations, as well as the Jews, should share the blessings of the covenant of grace. Surely our sister can see clearly that it is not true that every individual of the human race bows down before the Lord and worships him.

The fourth text is John i. 29: "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." The fifth text is John iii. 17: "But that the world through him might be saved." It seems to us to require but little more to be said than has been said concerning the other texts. If the sin of every one of the race of men has been taken away, they are all saved now, and nothing can hinder their final glory. If each individual of the human race is meant in John iii. 17, then, as said before, universalism is true. The "world" in each text, unless we admit universalism, must be understood to mean just this, that Jesus' work was not for the Jews only, but for the Gentiles as well; and the reason this is so frequently enforced and restated in the New Testament arose from the fact that the Jews claimed the Messiah that was to come as their own exclusively. Even those who received and believed in Christ as the Savior found it hard to believe that the Gentiles should be fellow-heirs in the kingdom of heaven. Therefore the terms "all men," "the whole world," &c., were used to break down this prejudice, and to enforce the hope of the Gentiles in the gospel.

Perhaps we have said enough in response to the letter of the sister. We have tried to write briefly but plainly, and in all kindness, and with regard for the truth of the Scriptures. It is sure that all for whom Christ gave himself are freely justified and saved. No charge can ever again be urged against that man for whom Christ has died, because God has justified him freely by his grace from all things from which he could not be justified by the law of Moses.

If our sister has felt the power of the atoning blood of Christ in her own experience (and we doubt not she has), then upon that account, as well as from the testimony of Scripture concerning the efficacy of his blood, she must know that in no case could that blood be shed in vain. But if Christ died for anybody who shall not finally be among his jewels, then for that one his blood was shed in vain; and if for one, why may it not be true for all? and what certainty is there of the final salvation of any one? How can our sister rejoice in such an unfinished salvation as this?

We leave these reflections for the consideration of all who may read them, and trust that they may be blessed to the instruction of many of the Lord's people, as well as to our sister herself.

HEBREWS VII. 3.

"WITHOUT father, without mother, without descent, having neither beginning of days, nor end of life; but made like unto the Son of God; abideth a priest continually."

In a former volume we have given our views on the subject embraced in this text; but as brother Welch may not be able to put his hand on the number containing our remarks, we will briefly notice the subject again.

In illustrating the peculiar nature of the priesthood of our Lord Jesus Christ, the inspired apostle has in this epistle distinguished it from that of Aaron and his sons, which was after the law of a carnal commandment, by showing that it is after the order of Melchisedec, and according to the power of an endless life. The sons of Levi were not suffered to continue in the priesthood by reason of death; but this priest, who is after the order of Melchisedec, because he continueth ever, hath an unchangeable priesthood. Wherefore he is able also to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by him, seeing that he ever liveth to make intercession for them. In the elucidation of the subject of the priesthoods, it was not the design of the apostle to describe either Aaron or Melchisedec as men, for as men they were like all other men; but it was important that he should describe them as priests, and it is as priests of their respective orders that he dwells on their peculiar characteristics in this chapter and connection. Aaron could not fill the office of a priest under the law of his priesthood, without a father, for the law made it indispensable that he should be a Levite. Hence Aaron and all his sons were subject to an order which required that their descent should be reckoned; and unless they could reckon their descent from Levi, they could not be priests. In this the priesthood of Aaron and his sons failed to set forth the power of an endless life, which is embraced in the priesthood of our Lord Jesus Christ. It is unimportant that we should know anything more of Melchisedec as a man than just what is written of him in the Scriptures. The record of him as a priest embraces every peculiarity necessary to make him a brilliant type of the great High Priest of our profession, Jesus Christ. As a priest, Melchisedec's descent is not reckoned in the Scriptures, nor have we any account of his descent as a man; but as a man we have no reason to doubt that he had a father and mother according to the flesh, and that he died like all other men, after he had served his generation; but as a priest he had no father or mother, neither had he any successor—his priesthood was unchangeable. In all the account given of him, he was a priest of the most high God, and king of Salem, or king of righteousness. When he met Abraham returning from the slaughter of the kings, which is all the account we have of him, he was then both king and priest. And this much is said in the divine record of him, to make him like the Son of God; that is, to make him as a type, a complete one. Christ is not a priest by virtue or lineal descent from any family of priests, neither is his priesthood hereditary.

"It is evident that our Lord sprang out of Judah, of which tribe Moses spake nothing concerning the priesthood." But to fill the office of a priest, after the order of Melchisedec, he was not required to conform to the requisitions of Moses concerning the priesthood.

The seeming difficulty in understanding the text is obviated when we understand the apostle to be treating on the priesthood, and not on the person of Melchisedec.

We submit these brief remarks on the subject to the consideration of brother Welch, and any others who may feel interested, desiring him and them to regard these only as our understanding of the subject, and, like our views on all other doctrinal points, to be received no farther than they are sustained by the word of the Lord.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y., Jan. 15, 1851.

MATTHEW XXIV. 13.

"BUT he that shall endure unto the end, the same shall be saved."

These words were used in reply to questions privately propounded to our Redeemer on the Mount of Olives by his disciples, concerning the destruction of the buildings of the temple, the signs of his coming, and of the end of the world, and in their primary design referred to those disciples of our Lord who should endure all the trials that should come upon the saints immediately before the destruction of Jerusalem; and the salvation implied had reference to their deliverance from the temporal calamities to which Jerusalem was doomed. But as we have ever regarded that Jerusalem to be figurative in its whole history of things of a spiritual nature, we are led to the conclusion that even in the latter days of its existence, and the circumstances and manner of its awful destruction, we may glean important lessons of instruction and solemn admonition, to which we would do well to take heed.

Jerusalem was once the consecrated place for the worship of the God of Israel, and in it stood the temple, the altar of the Lord, the ark and the mercy seat, and thither the holy tribes went up to worship the living God. But when the purpose of God in the founding of that city and the building of the first and second temples, together with the instituted service to which they were devoted, was accomplished, the flood gates of iniquity were opened, and the iniquity abounded in the once holy place. The law of God was made void by the traditions of Judaism, the city overrun with idolators, and the temple made a den of thieves; so that when Christ, for whose advent the Jews professed to be looking and praying, came in the flesh, that city had no room for him; and when he gathered from among them his primitive disciples, they were soon driven out of Jerusalem, and went everywhere, being scattered by the persecution which arose in those days; and, in the filling up the measure of their iniquities, the popular voice of the degenerate temple worshipers was given for his crucifixion, and that he should suffer without the gates of their city.

When our Lord was crucified, the vail of the temple was rent in twain from the top to the bottom, and all the sacred things within the vail in the most holy place made common with the things of the outer temple, showing that Jewish rites and ceremonies were now and henceforth forever abolished, and that the grand antitypical era had begun. Jerusalem, now filled with her abominations, sinks from her typical relation to the living church and kingdom of our Lord, and as the hold of hateful and unclean birds now assumes her position as the type of antichrist, deserted of God, deserted of his children, whom he collected before her destruction, as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and the abomination that maketh desolate now standing in the holy, or once consecrated place, showing that her judgment was near at hand, as when the fig tree putting forth her blossoms we know that summer is nigh. Yet before the total overthrow of Jerusalem the disciples of Christ were subjected to the most severe trials, that they might be made manifest who they were, and also that by the signals which should be given them they might have opportunity to flee from the devoted city before its inhabitants were to be plunged into irretrievable ruin.

The peculiar signals that should indicate the near approach of that great day of the Lord to his disciples were given them in this private interview on the mount, as recorded in the preceding connection of our text. But these signs of the coming of the Son of man to execute judgment on Jerusalem were such as should subject them to the most severe afflictions, persecutions and deprivations. So great were their trials to be, as we may infer from our text, many nominal professors of the religion of Christ would be exposed, and would not endure. "But he that shall endure unto the end, the same shall be saved."

If we are correct in supposing there is any analogy between Jerusalem as thus deserted and doomed, and the Sodom and Egypt where the two witnesses were slain, and where also our Lord was crucified, those solemn warnings given to the primitive saints to retire from Jerusalem and flee to the mountains must agree with the admonitions given in the word to God's people to come out of antichrist, or Babylon, and partake not of her abominations, that they be not partakers of her plagues.

But the coming out from Jerusalem when the warning was given was attended with much perplexity, peril and difficulty, so much so that the tribulation should test the fidelity of those who professed to be the disciples of Christ; even so the coming out from antichrist, in all its diversified forms, pagan, papal and protestant, has been in all ages since the revelation of the man of sin, and still is attended with such tribulations, persecution, reproach and proscription as to try men's souls, or rather try their religious professions, so as to make manifest such as are not in reality the saved people of our God. Nominal professors, however noisy, zealous, orthodox, or extravagant in their pretentions, will not endure the trial; nor will they be saved from a participation in the plagues which God has in store for mystery, Babylon. "But he that shall endure unto the end, the same shall be saved." Not only shall they be saved from the temporal calamities which shall be visited upon Babylon, but they shall be saved with an everlasting salvation. If we trace the account given in the word of the endurance of the tried saints when fleeing from the face of the dragon, God prepared for them wings of a great eagle (Rev. xii. 14), with which to fly to a safe retreat. And so also in flying from the beast, though many thousands sealed their testimony with their blood, yet all of them were saved from the judgments which awaited the beast; and now those who in this nineteenth century are standing aloof from the image of the beast, must endure hardness as good soldiers of Jesus. The tribulations and trials which are brought upon them shall make manifest who they are, and by what power they are enabled to endure, and by what power they shall triumph over the powers of darkness. As the saints overcame the dragon through the blood of the Lamb and the word of their testimony, so we may infer that the saints of God shall triumph over all conflicting powers by the blood of Christ and the testimony of the gospel.

The church of God is now in a very tried condition. True, the members are not frequently at this day cast into prisons, dragged before secret inquisitions, held by papists in caverns of the earth; nor are they subjected by the puritan or other protestant powers to have their ears cut off, their tongues bored through with hot irons, or tied to the cart-tail and whipped through the streets of Boston, as some of the Old School Baptists have been under the puritanic reign of terror in our own country; but the manner of the trial, though changed, shall be equally effectual in taking forth the precious from the vile. Instead now of the gibbet, the prison, the Spanish inquisition, the cart-tail, the red hot iron or the knife, the enemy is suffered to employ flatteries and bribes on the one hand, and reproach, calumny, ridicule and proscription on the other, by which they have not been entirely unsuccessful in drawing after them some who were once supposed to stand firmly in the doctrine and order of the gospel.

The signs which indicated the near approach of the destruction of Jerusalem were, among others, these, viz: A strong effort to deceive, if possible, the very elect. Wars and rumors of wars, and earthquakes in divers places, pestilence and famine. The abomination that maketh desolate standing in the holy place, and a strong effort to proselyte, by saying, "Lo, here is Christ; and Lo, there; and, Lo, he is in the desert," &c.

Even so now these signs in the very spirit of them appear. Never, perhaps, were stronger or more successful efforts made by men in sheep's clothing to deceive men than at this time. Wars and rumors of wars, in regard to the affairs of what is called the church, are very common; and such earthquakes as are sinking the papal and protestant interests, both in the old world and in America. The abomination which maketh desolate stands in high repute among the religionists of the age, and a general famine, not for bread, nor for water literally, but for hearing the word of the Lord, prevails. Beside all these signs, the sun seems to be darkened in our spiritual heavens; that is, the saints are not now enjoying the fullness of light and comfort which they have in seasons past; and the moon does not give them her accustomed light, and some of the stars of heaven, or those whom we have regarded as ministers of Jesus Christ, are fallen and now falling, and the powers of the heavens, the church, are shaken. There are unusual convulsions now shaking the fellowship and confidence of the members of the church for and in each other.

These we regard as days of tribulation, in which many shall be offended in Christ, with his doctrine, his ordinances, his laws and his people. And they shall, and do in some instances, insinuate themselves into the confidence of the saints, but to betray them and their confidence. Such appears to us to be the prevailing signs of the times, and the next sign that we look for is that of the Son of man in heaven. True he is now in his church, but he will, as we confidently hope, be soon more signally made manifest in his church, so that we shall see him in the clouds of heaven, or in the cloud of his witnesses in connection with his church, and all the tribes of the earth shall mourn and wail because of him; but he that shall endure unto the end shall be saved. May God grant us grace and patience, fortitude and resignation, to bear his cross, to encounter the storm, and to make us more than conquerors through him that has loved us. And may we, who are Old School Baptists from principle, and because we cannot conscientiously be anything else, listen to the important admonition of our subject, and watch for the coming of our Lord. We trust that the night is far spent, and that the morning will soon break on the church of God, and "He that is to come will come, and will not tarry." May we be prepared to say, "Even so; Come, Lord Jesus; come quickly. Amen."

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y., Feb. 15, 1851.

CHURCH LETTERS.

As it may interest some of the readers of our family paper, the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, we desire, if it does not crowd out more interesting matter, to insert the following.

In the providence of God, according to appointment, the little band of worshipers, of the Old School Baptist order, called the Beulah Church, met in the school-house within a few miles of Alvinston, Ontario, on Saturday before the fifteenth day of June, 1895. Our beloved brother, Elder Wm. L. Beebe, who has visited us yearly since our organization, "in the fullness of the blessing of the gospel of Christ," preached unto us the unsearchable riches of Christ. We had two discouses on Saturday. On Sunday morning we met in the same place, when a large congregation assembled to hear the gospel proclaimed in its purity, from the words recorded in the gospel according to John, twenty-first chapter, commencing with the fifteenth verse, which to many was "a feast of fat things, a feast of wines on the lees, of fat things full of marrow, of wines on the less well refined." The whole congregation manifested a deep interest in listening to the proclamation of the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, free grace exalted, and man's ability abased. A goodly number convened in the afternoon to hear the same theme, salvation by grace, preached to the poor and needy, to those who have no money or price, to those who are without strength, to the hungry and thirsty, and to those perishing sinners whose only hope of salvation is the Lord God. After the services the church met to commemorate the death of our dear Lord, who died for our sins, and was raised again for our justification, and by whose stripes we are healed. As we feel ourselves poor and afflicted we do hope that we are among those whom the Lord through the prophet described when he said, "I will also leave in the midst of thee an afflicted and poor people, and they shall trust in the name of the Lord."—Zeph. iii. 12. And with David we feel sometimes to say, "Although my house be not so with God, yet he hath made with me an everlasting covenant ordered in all things and sure; for this is all my salvation and all my desire, although he make it not to grow."—2 Sam. xxiii. 5. Our meeting was characterized with peace, love and fellowship, for which we feel grateful to him who is our peace and our all.

Our next yearly meeting we purpose holding in the same place, on the third Sunday of June, 1896, when we desire to meet with our ministering brethren, brethren and friends.

We meet every fourth Sunday in each month to speak of our joys and sorrows, our trials and triumphs, our riches and poverty, and singing praises to him whom we believe is made unto us wisdom and righteousness and sanctification and redeption, our deacon, M. McAlpine, leading at such meetings. We desire the prayers and fellowship of the people of God everywhere, that we may be found walking in all the commandments of the Lord blameless.

Yours in hope of eternal life,

ARCHIBALD McALPINE, Clerk.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.

MRS. BEEBE ELLIS (nee Blackburn) having changed her address from Texas to Mill Creek, Chickasaw N., Ind. Ter., requests her correspondents to address her at the latter place.

BROTHER Thomas C. Williams having changed his address from Washington C. H., Ohio, to Westville, Champaign Co., Ohio, requests his correspondents to address him at the latter place.

BOOK NOTICES.

LARGE HYMN BOOK FOR A DOLLAR

SIX FOR FOUR DOLLARS AND A HALF

We have had bound in cloth, the same style as the "Editorials" or "Church History," a few hundred of our large type Hymn Books, which we will send post paid at the above prices. These books are especially adapted for aged people, or for pew racks, to be used in churches.

A SMALL ONE FOR SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS, OR SIX FOR THREE DOLLARS.

We also have the small type book bound in cloth, which we will send post paid at prices stated above.

These books contain eight hundred pages, and thirteen hundred and eleven carefully selected hymns, together with an index to first line of each hymn.

Cash must always accompany the orders. Address,

LINA W. BECK.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, Ind., March 24, 1895.

THIS is a beautiful, warm, spring morning. I have been shut in doors for five week to-day with La Grippe. I feel very weak and helpless now, but have had an impression for several days to write some of my feelings while I was bedfast. One night, after I had been sick about ten days, while restless with a burning fever, some one seemed to touch me and say, "The Master is come and calleth for thee." I opened my eyes, and saw no one; but I spoke aloud, "I am going to die; I must get ready." Then I said, "Poor fool! your head is cut off and lying beside you, and you cannot move hand or foot; and worst of all, you are a vile sinner and can do nothing." Then some one seemed to cover me with a beautiful robe, and said to me, "Your sins are blotted out, your iniquities are covered." Then Jesus was presented to my view as a complete Savior, and I felt so secure in his hands. I was going to leave this vain world without a regret, or fear, or shudder. Death had no sting. Words will not express the rapture I felt. I was glad to leave every care, and rest in my Savior's arms. For several days I felt the halo or rapture of that experience, and I repeated many times,

"O! stay thou near me while I live,
And when life's day is past,
Lay thy dear hands, thy pierced hands,
Upon my head at last."

About four days afterward I was moved into my daughter Lucy's room to be more quiet. I was lying where she suffered so long, and died. I was thinking of her patience and sweet ways, when I cried aloud, and said, "I must see my Lucy! She has been gone almost four years. It is hard to wait longer." Then the thought came to me, a few days ago, when I had a foretaste or glimpse of heaven, I did not see my precious child, nor my sainted father or mother, nor the last dear one gone, sister Mary. Jesus seemed enough. "His train filled the temple." He was "the chiefest among ten thousand, the altogether lovely." There was a singing in my heart like this, Jesus, Jesus, Jesus." For forty years one of my great desires has been to love my blessed Savior above all else supreme. Often while in an agony of doubts and fears about having any right to pray at all, or say, "Our Father," even then I would cry, "Lord, help me; teach me to love thee."

"Let me love thee more and more,
If I love at all, I pray;
If I have not loved before,
Help me to begin this day."

Now I had another season of security. I seemed to know I did love Jesus supremely. He was my all in all. But alas! now

"I have sunk exceedingly low,
Just ready to give up."

It seems too much for me to hope. A poor, defiled worm dare to claim such a Savior? My Savior must be complete, for I have no righteousness to plead. It is only filthy rags. Lord, thou knowest my heart's desire is to live near thee, and away from the vain and foolish things of this world.

I have been reading this morning the Savior's prayer in the 17th chapter of John, and it seemed sweeter to me than ever before. Jesus says, "I pray not for the world, but for them which thou hast given me; for they are thine," &c. O how safe his children are! If he died for me I am secure. These words have been often in my mind since I am getting better and find I have come back to stay in this vale of tears longer.

"O when shall I see Jesus, and reign with him above,
And from the flowing fountains drink everlasting love?
When shall I be delivered from this vain world of sin,
And with my blessed Jesus drink endless pleasures in?"

I am all sin, but I hope I trust in God's mercy. "His mercy endureth forever."

"Abide with me! fast falls the even tide,
The darkness deepens, Lord, with me abide!
When other helpers fail and comforts flee,
Help of the helpless, Lord, abide with me."

Yours tremblingly, for sister L. Schiefer,

LINA W. BECK.

NEWARK, Del., June 9, 1895.

DEAR BROTHER BEEBE:—Do any of the readers of the SIGNS remember the time in their experience, as christians, when they felt that their hope was so small, and they were so sinful and unworthy, that they would like to give it all up and be once more at ease in the world? Before we are brought to see the sinfulness of the flesh, we seem to glide along easily in life, apparently having our own way and seeking our own pleasure; but when the new life, wrought in us by the Spirit of God, is manifested in the flesh, we begin to learn the meaning of the words, "The flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh; and these are contrary the one to the other, so that ye cannot do the things that ye would."—Gal. v. 17. Especially to a young christian is this contest a surprise, and sometimes a source of great discouragement. He is quite apt to think that his hope in Christ is vain, and, worst of all, that he has deceived his friends. The adversary, the devil, as a roaring lion, walking abount, seeking whom he may devour, and suggests to the mind of such tempted one that no person that sees himself so sinful and wretched can be born of God. The adversary is very careful not to tell him that this very spiritual knowledge of sin is an evidence of his new birth. Unbelief makes his days and nights full of doubt and trouble, so that he can say with the psalmist, "But as for me, my feet were almost gone; my steps had well nigh slipped."—Psa. lxxiii. 2. Although the experience may be bitter, the time is now come in which he is to be tried. When a soldier enters the army at first it seems pleasant enough, and the duties often fascinating; but when he meets the enemy face to face, then he soon learns whether he has the strength and courage for the contest. There is quite a difference between the soldier in the army and he who is engaged in this spiritual warfare. The one must go into the contest in his own strength and courage, while the other has the help and strength of the Lord. As the psalmist says, "The Lord is my strength and my shield." The young believer soon learns that he is led in ways that are not of his own choosing; and many times they are so contrary to his wishes, and become so grievous to him, that he stubbornly resists them. But just here arises an unequal contest, that is sometimes sharp and short, and sometimes long and stubborn; but the end is the same. He who is all powerful, and full of love and goodness, brings down the proud heart and subdues the most willful, so that the humbled soul is stripped of self-confidence, and learns to his great profit that his strength and righteousness are in the Lord. The true believer may soon learn also that the hope he would cast aside is not so easily destroyed as he at first supposed. "The hope set before us," "we have as an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast." We all know that it is the anchor that holds the ship, and not the ship the anchor. Christ is our hope, and if the believer has Christ, he has a hope which will endure to the end. These chastisements, which at the time seem so grievous, are truly and only for the profit of those who are exercised by them. And as their value is manifest, he who hopes in Christ would not have them different; for he learns that they are all for his good, and not meeted out to him as punishments. Surely if the full penalty of the broken law were laid upon us as a punishment there would be no hope for us; but Christ has once for all borne the penalty for his people and set them free; although he chastises them for their profit. As the profit is manifest, the child of God would not have the ways of the Lord otherwise; because he knows they are truly ordered wisely in love. The sacred Scriptures abound in expressions of comfort and encouragement for the children of God. One of the greatest things, after being born of God, is to be established in the truth; and this is brought about in God's own time and way. Even if it is through trials and tribulations, it is worth more to us than a thousand worldly blessings. "My son, despise not thou the chastening of the Lord, nor faint when thou art rebuked of him." Surely the reason given for this is full of encouragement, and a wonderful assurance of our being children; "For whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth."

Yours in hope of eternal life,

B. F. HAMILTON.

TRENTON JUNCTION, N. J., Mar. 15, 1895

DEAR BRETHREN:—I do feel so thankful that our dear family paper comes to us regularly, bringing untold comfort and glad tidings to our lonely hearts, the same as it always has from the first of its publication, defending the truth as it is in Jesus, fearing no evil; and as the Lord has sustained it in the past, so may we trust him to sustain and uphold it in the future and to the end. And may our Lord put it into the hearts of his dear people to give liberally and pay up their dues, so that our dear family paper may be continued to the comfort of his people. I feel so glad that our Lord rules all things, and in him we trust, fearless of the raging waves that seem to be sweeping over us sometimes; but at the darkest time then is the day-break near. Let us speak often one to another, and may the Lord be with his children in every time of need, and his name have all the glory. Amen.

Your sister in hope,

MRS. GEORGE R. YARD.

IN sending remittances for renewals of subscriptions to give us the same name that the paper is already coming to. If the party is married, and the paper is coming to the wife's name, and we receive a remittance to renew the subscription, and the husband's name is given, we have no means of knowing that it is meant for the subscription in the wife's name; consequently the husband's name is entered on our list, and the paper sent to both parties. Or if the paper is coming in the husband's name, and the renewal is sent in the wife's name, the same thing is likely to occur. It is a good plan to inclose in the letter one of the little pink slips containing the name, taken either from the margin of the paper or from the wrapper in which the paper comes.

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE.

TO MOST of our readers the above mentioned book is too well known to need any introduction or a description by us. While many of the Bibles have a Concordance appended, they are generally so condensed or abridged as to be of little or no use. Cruden's Complete Concordance, however, enables one to readily turn to any passage of Scripture of which they can call to mind two or three words, and in our opinion is the most complete and convenient as a reference book of any published. In addition, it contains many other aids in studying the Bible, as may be seen by reference to advertisement on last page. Remember, both the books there mentioned are CRUDEN'S COMPLETE.

MARRIAGES.

ON Sunday evening, July 14th, 1895, by Elder Benton Jenkins, at the residence of Mr. Emile Guermonprez, in the city of Middletown, N. Y., Mr. Charles E. German and Miss Alwalda Langley, both of Wurtsboro, N. Y.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

DEPARTED this life on the morning of April 17th, 1895, at the home of his son-in-law, James Watkins, near Philomath, Benton Co., Oregon, Robert B. Burch.

He was born in Virginia, July 11th, 1797, and moved with his parents, John and Elizabeth Burch, to Barren Co., Ky., about the year 1817. He was married to Annie Nichols in May, 1821, who preceded him to the spirit land nearly twelve years. To this union were born eight sons and four daughters, eight of whom survive him, two sons living in Nebraska, one in Iowa, two sons and three daughters in Oregon. He also leaves, as near as can be ascertained, fifty-one grandchildren, fifty-three great-grandchildren, and four great-great-grandchildren.

The last ten years of his life were spent at the home of his oldest daughter, Mrs. James Watkins. He had been confined to his bed nearly six years, and during that time was almost helpless. He could at his best times help himself in and out of bed. He lost his eyesight several years ago, and at the time of his death could only distinguish daylight from darkness. He never made a public profession of religion, but was a firm believer in the Old School Baptist doctrine, and took great delight in entertaining Baptists, thus making his home their home. My mother being a member of the Baptist Church, they often had preaching at their house, and when living in Kentucky they entertained several associations. He was a kind husband and father. His last sickness was "La Grippe." He bore all his afflictions with great patience, often expressing a great desire to be relieved of his sufferings. I will say that I never witnessed such reconciliation as he manifested during all his afflictions. Death seemed no terror to him.

His remains were taken to the cemetery near Scio, and laid beside those of our dear mother. O how we miss him in our home! But we must bow to the will of our heavenly Father, and say, "Thy will be done."

M. E. WATKINS.

PHILOMATH, Oregon, July 9, 1895.

Charlotte Jacobs McGinnis was born near Loami, Sangamon Co., Ill., Jan. 20th, 1836. She was married to W. W. McGinnis on April 2d, 1857, by whom she had six children, one dying in infancy. She departed this life for a new and heavenly one on June 25th, 1895, making her 59 years, 5 months and 5 days old.

She leaves her companion, three sons and two daughters to mourn their loss of a kind and affectionate mother, but not without hope. May they feel that their loss is her gain. She was a kind companion and loving mother, and highly esteemed by all who knew her. All was done for her that husband, loving children and kind friends could do; but her appointed time had come. On June 27th her remains were followed by a large concourse of friends and relatives to the "Christian" church-house in Loami, where funeral services were conducted by Elders C. C. Purvines and W. A. Thompson, of Springfield. After the services her remains were tenderly laid away in the Sulphur Spring cemetery. Peace be to her.

ASSOCIATIONAL.

THE Old School Baptist Conference of Maine will be held, the Lord willing, with the Old School Baptist Church in North Berwick, York Co., Maine, commencing on Friday, August 30th, 1895, and continuing three days.

We shall gladly welcome all who love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity, and especially brethren in the ministry who feel it in their hearts to visit us. Those who come will be met at the North Berwick R. R. depot on Thursday before the time appointed for our yearly conference.

FRED. W. KEENE.

THE Des Moines River Association of Regular Predestinarian Baptists will convene with the Cedar Creek Church, ten miles northeast of Ottumwa, in Wapello Co., Iowa, on Friday before the third Sunday in August, at 10 o'clock a. m., and continue three days, being the 16th, 17th and 18th days of August.

The church-house is within one hundred yards of the railway station at Highland Center, on the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul R. R., and all will stop at the above station. Those coming from the east or west will have to change at Ottumwa or Hedrick. A cordial invitation is extended to all brethren, and ministers especially.

R. SPEIRS, Mod.

M. W. BYRAM, Clerk.

THE Mate's Creek Association is to be held with Little Hope Church, Pinsonfork, Pike Co., Ky., to begin on Friday before the first Sunday in September (which will be August 30th), and continue the two following days.

Williamson, W. Va., on the N. & W. R. R., is the nearest railroad station, twelve miles from the place of the association.

W. J. MAY, Clerk.

THE next session of the Staunton River Old School Baptist Association is appointed to be held with the church at Galilee, in Pittsylvania Co., Va., five miles west of Chatham, on the Southern R. R., commencing on Friday before the second Sunday in August.

We would be pleased to have some of our northern brethren meet with us, especially ministering brethren. Those coming by rail will be met at Chatham on Thursday before. Those wishing conveyance will write to me.

J. C. SHELHORSE, Clerk.

YEARLY MEETINGS.

A YEARLY meeting is expected to be held with the church at Bryn Zion, at the usual time, the third Sunday in August, Saturday included. A cordial invitation is extended to friends abroad to visit us and enjoy a good meeting with us.

Those coming by rail from the southward will please get tickets to Clayton. Those coming from the northward had better get their tickets to Kenton, changing cars at Clayton. The Mail trains both ways on Saturday morning will be the proper trains, and friends will be met and cared for. The north-bound train reaches Clayton at 10 a. m. The hour for meeting on Saturday is 2 p. m.

E. RITTENHOUSE, Pastor.

TWO DAYS MEETINGS.

A TWO days meeting is appointed to be held with the Otego Church, at Otego, N. Y., on the last day of July and the first day of August, commencing at 10 o'clock. All lovers of the truth are cordially requested to attend with us.

This meeting is to take the place of our former yearly meeting, held in October. This is the first of a series of meetings to be held in place of the Chemung Association.

DEVOTED TO THE OLD SCHOOL BAPTIST CAUSE,

PUBLISHED EVERY WEDNESDAY,

AT TWO DOLLARS A YEAR,

BY GILBERT BEEBE'S SON,

MIDDLETOWN, ORANGE CO., NEW YORK,

To whom all letters should be addressed, and money orders made payable.

EDITORS:

BENTON JENKINS, Middletown, N. Y. F. A. CHICK, Reisterstown, Md.

B. L. BEEBE, Middletown, N. Y.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SON, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date. This date denotes the time at which your subscription expires; and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

PICTORIAL HISTORY

OF THE

UNITED STATES.

By James D. McCabe.

This work is no dry mass of details—no bombastic effort to inflame the national pride, but a vivid and brilliant narrative of the events of our history, from the discovery of the American Continent down to thepresent time. It gives a most interesting account of the Indians of North America, from the time of the coming of the white men. The voyages of Columbus and explorations and discoveries of the different nations of Europe are related with graphic power. Every step of our colonial history is traced with patient fidelity, and the sources of those noble and, we trust, enduring institutions, which have made our country free and great, are shown with remarkable clearness. Then follows a clear and succinct account of our great Struggle for Independence, and the establishment of the Federal Union—the events of our career from the close of the Revolution to the administration of Harrison.

The work is printed from plain, new type, on fine calendered paper, and comprised in one octavo volume of 960 pages. It is splendidly embellished with nearly 500 fine engravings, embracing battles and other historical scenes, portraits of distinguished men, views of our principal cities, &c., &c.

Bound in Fine Silk Cloth, Plain Edges, $2.00, Post-paid.

POETRY.

COME, LORD JESUS.

LET us view thy lovely glory!
Come, thou loving Jesus, come!
Let us now rejoice before thee,
Like the ransom'd round the throne.

Let the poor and heavy laden
Cast their burdens all on thee;
Let them joy in thy free pardon,
Set the lawful captive free.

Let it be a time to favor
Thy dear Zion for their good;
Let them see a suff'ring Savior,
And their pardon sign'd with blood.

Let us see our names engraven
Deep within thy loving breast;
Let us taste the joys of heaven,
Earnest of eternal rest.

Be to us the Bread of heaven,
Fill our souls with precious love,
Till we reach the quiet haven,
Round the blissful throne above.

PSALM XLI. 11.

"By this I know that thou favorest me."

FAVORED of old, ere time began,
According to the covenant plan,
Loved and elect with God to be,
By this I know thou favorest me.

Chosen and blest in God the Son,
In Jesus loved, accounted one,
I taste the streams that flow from thee,
And thus I know thou favorest me.

O wondrous grace! my sins to lay
On Christ, who bore them all away!
Them he atoned on Calvary,
By this I know thou favorest me.

By precious faith it is I know
This token sweet thou dost bestow,
In my poor heart by faith I see;
By this I know thou favorest me.

Faith and repentance, prayer and praise,
My love, my hope, joy in thy ways,
All is thy gift, all springs from thee;
By this I know thou favorest me.

When from our gracious God I stray,
And wander from the King's highway,
By chastenings I'm brought back to thee;
By this I know thou favorest me.

When I have smarted 'neath thy rod,
And in affliction's paths I've trod,
As a loved child thou scourgest me;
By this I know thou favorest me.

In Achor's vale, amidst my grief,
My contrite heart has found relief,
My chastened soul has yearned for thee;
By this I know thou favorest me.

When with temptations I'm beset,
And sins and Satan my heart fret,
Christ is my hope of victory;
By this I know thou favorest me.

My foes come in just like a flood,
To drive my soul away from God.
Thy blood, O Christ, doth make them flee;
By this I know thou favorest me.

Often I fear I'm not a saint,
Wandering in deserts, weak and faint,
Goodness and mercy flow from thee;
By this I know thou favorest me.

Sheltered beneath thy healing wings,
I fear no ill, my glad heart sings;
When sorely pressed I flee to thee,
And sweetly prove thou favorest me.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE NAME OF THE LORD COMETH.

"BEHOLD, the name of the Lord cometh from far, burning with his anger, and the burden thereof is heavy; his lips are full of indignation, and his tongue as a devouring fire; and his breath as an overflowing stream, shall reach to the midst of the neck, to sift the nations with the sieve of vanity; and there shall be a bridle in the jaws of the people, causing them to err."—Isaiah xxx. 27, 28.

In compliance with a request from a sister who is deprived of the privilege of meeting with the church regularly, the following thoughts in connection with this text are submitted. She specifies the last clause of the text as the portion on which she is more particularly desirous to have light; but it does not seem consistent to separate this clause from the sentence in which it is written by the inspired prophet. Therefore, in considering it as the word of God to his people it should be taken as one message. From the context it is evident that it was designed to announce the coming of the day of gospel liberty to the spiritual Israel, and the removal of the legal heaven and earth of Judaism. There can be no question that the light of gospel liberty is foretold in the immediately preceding context, and the song which is promised in the following expression is certainly the same song which is written in the twenty-sixth chapter of this prophecy. It is important to notice that the declaration is positive and unconditional, both in the announcement of the light and blessing which is promised, and also in regard to the denunciation of divine anger and terrible indignation. The unlimited sovereignty of God renders certain the fulfillment of every purpose which he has declared, whether in visiting his just condemnation upon the guilty sinners whom he has appointed unto wrath, or in securing the infinite blessedness of eternal salvation for the subjects of his electing love. If the saints could bear in mind at all times that it is by grace they are saved, it would protect them against many of the cruel assaults of their wily accuser. Their own sinfulness can interpose no obstacle in the way of that salvation which is entirely by divine grace. It is the peculiar glory of the gospel of our God that through the blood of Jesus Christ his people are saved from their sins. This is far more than the mere remission of the penalty due to their transgressions.

"Behold, the name of the Lord cometh from far." To the natural mind this expression conveys the idea of earthly distance; but the subjects of spiritual instruction have learned a vastly more important sense in which this declaration is true in their own experience. When sunk beyond the reach of hope under conscious guilt and condemnation, they felt that they were infinitely removed from the peace and safety which are found in the strong tower of the name of the Lord. The distance between them and that name was no less than the awful chasm between sin and holiness, between light and darkness, or between heaven and hell. They could never climb to that name by any works which they might perform, since all their righteousnesses are as filthy rags. But the grace of God bringeth to lost sinners salvation in the righteousness of Jesus, by which they are made holy and without blame before God in love. This glorious name is not polluted by being reconciled to sinners, as the popular religious teachers of the world assert; but while his people are saved from their sins through the name of the Lord, that name is still immaculately pure and holy. He condemns sin in the very manifestation of his grace in saving sinners. This wonderful name of the Lord cometh from far beyond all the thoughts of created intelligence. Only as it pleased God to ordain peace for his people in that name can it ever be seen or known by any sinner. But unto every subject of electing love that name comes in all the majesty of infinite holiness, showing that God is just and having salvation. There is no other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved.

"Burning with his anger, and the burden thereof is heavy." The very purity which is revealed in the perfection of holiness that is always seen in the name of the Lord, invariably visits condemnation upon those to whom that name is manifested. None ever saw the holiness of God without feeling the infinite distance between that divine purity and the corruption of sin in their own hearts. Thus the name of the Lord is a consuming fire when it shines in the experience of the quickened sinner. The first gleam of that pure light effectually burns up every vestige of trust in the works of the law for justification. Then the question of Job is the all important consideration in the mind of the despairing one who hears the awful name of the Lord. "How should man be just with God?" In this light of the fire of divine holiness confidence in creature works for acceptance in the judgment of God is utterly consumed. The sinner is convinced that "By the deeds of the law there shall no flesh be justified in his sight; for by the law is the knowledge of sin."—Rom. iii. 20. This truth is taught in the experience of every one who is brought by grace to hope in the sovereign favor of God for salvation from sin by the blood of Jesus Christ. As revealed in his holy law the name of the Lord is indeed a consuming fire. The sinner is slain by its purity. No longer can he hope for acceptance by any righteousness to which he can attain by keeping the precepts of a perfectly holy law. The terrors of Sinai but faintly represent the dreadful sound of that thunder which destroys every ray of hope by works of righteousness to be performed by the lost and condemned sinner. No natural sound can compare with this terrible burden of despair which is found when the name of the Lord is sounded in the heart of the conscious sinner.

"His lips are full of indignation, and his tongue as a devouring fire." This is but a further expression of the revelation of just condemnation which drives the sinner from finding refuge in the obedience of legal righteousness. The law knows no mercy, and can accept no compromise for the failure to keep one of its requirements. Nothing but the life of the sinner can satisfy its inexorable demand. Not even the chosen vessels of divine mercy can be saved from the condemnation due to their sins by the sacrifice of any requirement of infinite justice. The immaculate holiness of God is not less magnified in the salvation of his people than is his love and mercy. The recognition of this truth destroys every device of man for the establishment of any conditional theory of salvation. Those who are quickened by the Spirit of truth must know that there is no hope for them but in the immutable truth and inflexible justice of God. As it is written, "For I am the Lord, I change not; therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed."—Mal. iii. 6. False teachers are accustomed to say that God out of Christ is a consuming fire. But there is no inspired authority for any such assertion. On the contrary, it is expressly declared that in him (Christ) dwelleth all the fullness of the Godhead bodily.—Col. ii. 9. Therefore there can be no God out of Christ. The wonderful mystery of salvation is that God is just and the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus.—Rom. iii. 26. None of the systems devised by the wisdom of men can even pretend that they teach that God is just in saving sinners. They universally represent that God is so merciful that he has offered to save the best sinners by turning aside the sword of justice. This is according to the wisdom of man, and consequently men are ever ready to accept it. But it is important that those who love the truth of the gospel should reject all such perversions of the testimony which God has given by revelation. Remember, dear believer, that your hope is in the God who is just and having salvation.

"And his breath, as an overflowing stream, shall reach to the midst of the neck, to sift the nations with the sieve of vanity." None who know the true God can doubt the truth which his prophet was here moved to record. His omnipotence is seen in the very first revelation given to every one who has heard his voice. The illustration used will not appear to such as being too strong; nor will they question the strict justice of the decree which signifies the utter helplessness of those upon whom the holy name of the Lord falls with such irresistible power in cutting them off from all the false refuges in which they had trusted. As human efforts prove futile in resisting the rushing current of an overflowing streem, so the breath (or, Spirit) of the Lord can encounter no obstacle by which its terrible condemnation can be averted. When by this inflexible standard the nations are tested, all are exposed as utter vanity. It is not needful that they who have seen their own just condemnation in the sight of divine holiness, should look further for the fulfillment of this denunciation of all nations as vanity. As one perishing in a torrent reaching to the midst of the neck has no power to deliver himself, so all the nations of men are shown to be but vanity by the breath of divine truth under which all the world has already been pronounced guilty before God.—Rom. iii. 19.

"And there shall be a bridle in the jaws of the people, causing them to err." As our sister specifies this expression in her request, it may be that some carnal reasoning has bewildered her mind in perverting its meaning as if it implied that God caused man to sin. A little care in observing just what is here declared, will show that this is not the meaning of the text. The prophet was moved to declare the coming of the name of the Lord in visiting his anger upon the sins of those of his chosen nation of Israel who were trusting in Egypt. This was rebellion against that covenant which God had given them by Moses, and under that covenant they were justly condemned. Their own sins were the bridle in the jaws of the people, by which they were caused to err. Thus it is declared again, "Can the Ethiopian change his skin, or the leopard his spots? then may ye also do good, that are accustomed to do evil."—Jer. xiii. 23. While it is indeed true that the immutable purpose of God has fixed every event in time, including the most abominable wickedness of those who murdered the sinless Lord of life, it must not be forgotten that in fulfilling that purpose of God men never design to do right, or to obey the law which he has given them. Pharaoh and the raging Jews did nothing but what God had determined before to be done; yet enmity against God was their only motive in all their action. Thus the sin in them was no less than it would have been if they had power to defeat the will of God. To the saints it is written, "Let no man say when he is tempted, I am tempted of God; for God cannot be tempted with evil, neither tempteth he any man. But every man is tempted, when he is drawn away of his own lust, and enticed."—James i. 13, 14. The love of God never leads anyone to continue in sin. While the wrath of man must attest the praise of God, it is not the less sinful in those who commit evil deeds. As well might men claim credit for the failure of their wrath to do those things from which the hand of the Lord restrains them, as to plead the will of God as an apology for the sins which they from their own corrupt inclinations have committed. This is but one form in which the enemies of God are compelled to confess his dominion over all opposition. While the wicked act without compulsion, they can go no farther than the limit which God has set. Herein is his praise manifested.

Since sin came in the disobedience of the first Adam, the adversaries of truth and righteousness have never ceased to contend that death did not surely result from the transgression of the command of God. So Cain offered the fruit of the ground in sacrifice, thus denying that the curse had already come upon the ground. This is the basis of all natural religion with which the earth has been afflicted since that first development of the idolatrous worship of self among the children of men. Only when the name of the Lord cometh in the revelation which is given by the Spirit of truth, can any sinner ascribe salvation to any other power but self. Thus all sinners are idolators. None are saved in their sins. The saints are saved from their sins by the cleansing virtue of the blood of Jesus Christ. Hence they must ascribe all the glory unto that sovereign grace by which our God chose them in Christ before the foundation of the world, that they should be holy and without blame before him in love. This truth is the only hope of the saints, and it has ever been the impregnable rock against which all the powers of hell have unceasingly raged in vain.

There is much which might profitably be said in considering the application of this prophecy to the disciples of Jesus under the law of Christ in the liberty of the gospel. This testimony of Jesus is the essential spirit of all prophecy. But for the present this must be left to the reflections of those whose minds are led into the investigation of the mystery of godliness in their individual experience. Hoping that what is written may meet the approval of the sister at whose request it has been prepared, I must leave the subject.

To those who have requested my views through the SIGNS, I wish to say that I am not indifferent to their wishes; but other duties have so fully occupied my time that no opportunity has yet been afforded for complying with their requests.

With love to all who know their lost condition as sinners, and whose only hope is in the blood and righteousness of our Redeemer, I am, as ever, in hope of life,

WM. L. BEEBE.

SALADO, Texas, May 23, 1895.

ELDER F. A. CHICK—BELOVED BROTHER:—I hope I am not actuated by the flesh in addressing you, knowing that there is no confidence in the flesh. I have long had a desire to write you, but have declined until now. I have been reading your communications in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES regularly for five years, and at intervals for about twenty years, and cannot now call to mind any one article of yours more acceptable than one containing your several answers to the questions put by a brother whose name by request is withheld. There are many questions similar to those answered in your article frequently asked, all of which may be answered in very much the same way. I have been taught by the Bible to believe the doctrine of predestination of all things, and until a few years past never heard it questioned by any Baptist. I am sure that the Baptists of 1689 believed it; yes, and even back to the date of 1643. In their confession of faith in 1689 they declare to the world that they believe that "God hath decreed in himself from all eternity, by the most wise and holy counsel of his own will, freely and unchangeably, all things whatsoever come to pass, yet so as thereby is God neither the author of sin, nor hath fellowship with any therein; nor is violence offered to the will of the creature; nor yet is the liberty or contingency of second causes taken away." I rejoice in the belief of the above. I believe that God has decreed all things, which is the same as to say that he has predestinated all things; yet he has done so in a way that the sin of any does not attach to him. He predestinated the death of Christ by wicked hands, or wicked men. Then it was not God's decree that made them wicked, but their wickedness of heart prompted the act of murder, and their wickedness was a result of the transgression of law. Their sin was purely their own sin; and although in relation to the foreknowledge and decree of God, the first cause of all things that come to pass, immutably and unchangeably, or infallibly, so that there is not anything that befalls any by chance or without his providence. But yet, and after all, by the same providence he ordereth them to fall out according to the nature of second causes. Hence in the murder of Christ those men were actuated by and under the influence of a second cause, which was their depravity. But how came their depravity? By their transgression of law. Love to evil in the heart of Adam prompted Adam's transgression of law, by which the whole human family became corrupt and depraved, root and branch. God decreed it all; yet he decreed that it should fall out after the nature of second causes, so that man is responsible for his conduct, both in word and deed. "The almighty power, unsearchable wisdom and infinite goodness of God so far manifest themselves in his providence that his determinate counsel extendeth itself even to the first fall, and all other sinful actions, both of angels and men; and that not by a bare permission." So teach the Baptists in the "London Confession," and we believe the sentiment; but we do not believe that God (notwithstanding God has in his determinate counsel decreed all things that come to pass) is the author of sin. He is too wise to err, and too good to be unkind. He doeth according to his will, both in the army of heaven and among the inhabitants of earth; and none can stay his hand, or say unto him, What doest thou? "I am God, and there is none else; I am God, and there is none like me, declaring the end from the beginning, and from ancient times the things that are not yet done, saying, My counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure." For God to decree the death of his Son by wicked men, put nothing of wickedness into them. They knew nothing of God's decree; "for had they known it, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory." Some of our brethren tell us that what God has decreed he doeth. Well, we know that he decreed the death of Christ, and as well know that there is a sense in which he did not do it. Still there is a sense in which it may be said that he did. "For," says Jesus, "no man taketh it [my life] from me, but I lay it down of myself. I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again." God's purpose incorporated with absolute certainty the selling of Joseph; but his brethren sold him, not God. His brethren sold him; God sent him. Their selling him was prompted by their enmity of heart, but was God's means of sending. They meant what they did for evil; God meant it for good. Both had a hand in it. God's purpose in all things ripens to maturity, while man's often falls to the ground, and invariable so when in opposition to God's purpose. "For the Lord God of hosts hath sworn, saying, Surely as I have thought, so shall it come to pass; and as I have purposed, so shall it stand."

Now, my brother, I know that you can and will excuse me for my boldness in writing you, and also my use of the pencil, and more especially my incorrect spelling, and above all my great blindness concerning spiritual things. If you have an opportunity answer my badly and worse dictated letter. I shall be glad to read a letter from you. Please correct me in whatever you may see in my letter that is incorrect.

Your poor and humble brother, I hope,

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES—DEAR BRETHREN IN CHRIST:—I have in my possession a letter from our brother, Elder J. W. Putman, of Lovelace, Texas, which I think would be very comforting to the saints; for in it he expresses all our feelings when we are groveling here in darkness, and are made to see our nothingness, and to see and realize that we are powerless to expel the darkness. After you have looked it over, and in your judgment think it would be of any benefit or comfort to the household of faith who read the dear old SIGNS, you can publish it. If otherwise, all will be right. Though I have not his consent to copy and forward it for publication, I think it will all be right with him.

As ever, yours in afflictions and doubts,

W. L. MCPHERSON.

LOVELACE, Texas, Feb. 28, 1895.

DEAR BROTHER AND SISTER:—I write you in answer to yours just received. I was glad to hear from you, but sorry to hear you were in the dark, neither cold nor hot. The Scripture says, Return unto thy first love, or I will spew thee out of my mouth. How strange it is to hear any one complaining of being in the dark. I did not think any one could be in that condition half as much as I am, for I am most of my time in that deplorable condition. Sometimes I am made to cry out, "Lord, help me to humble myself in dust and ashes; for I know my unfaithfulness causes me to be in that condition. The Lord says, "I will visit their transgressions with the rod, and their iniquities with stripes; but my loving-kindness I will not utterly take away, nor suffer my faithfulness to fail." How comforting are these words to the wayworn traveler while traveling through this thorny maze, almost always in the dark, with the world, the flesh and the devil to contend with. O how the poor pilgrim is made to tremble. It calls my mind back to when I first felt that the Lord found me in a waste howling wilderness, and made me see how just he would be to banish me into everlasting pain and misery. And I am glad that he saw fit to reveal Christ to me as my Savior, a very present help in time of need. It calls my mind back to what Bunyan says, that the bitter must come before the sweet; which makes the sweet sweeter. So we can but groan in darkness, with that hope that the sunshine of God's eternal love will break out in the future and dispel the dark cloud that has been so long hovering around us and over us. Then we can say in the language of the poet,

"When I can read my title clear
To mansions in the skies,
I'll bid farewell to every fear,
And wipe my weeping eyes."

Dear brother, you see this is nothing but a thorny maze we are passing through, looking forward to that blessed hope when Jesus shall come in the sunshine of his glory, and set the world on fire. I am often made to say, like the psalmist, "Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil; for thou art with me. Thy rod and thy staff they comfort me." He is on my right hand, that I should not be moved, and on my left, that I should be holden up.

Dear brother, I may never be permitted to write you again, and I want you to bear in mind that I firmly believe that we bring dark clouds over our pathway by our disobedience, and by our disobedience the good Lord hides his face from us for a time, to bring us to know our dependence on him for every blessing, both spiritual and temporal. I cannot believe he ever ceases to love his children; but the trouble with me is to be satisfied that I am one. If I could be fully satisfied I am one, it appears to me I would not want to stay here any longer; but doubts and fears are strewn along my pathway, so that I realize the condition of the children of Israel in Babylon when the Babylonians tormented them, and said, "Sing us one of the songs of Zion." They said, "How can we sing the Lord's song in a strange land?" Their harps were hung on the willows. That is about my condition at this time. I sit here at home with no one to give me a word of comfort. I cannot get out anywhere, and feel like I am forsaken on every side, and hardly can claim to be a child of God. My way seems to be hedged around, and I sometimes feel like I have not a friend on earth. I can hardly say brother or sister. This is a sad condition to be in. But sometimes I feel to have that little hope that I can look by an eye of faith beyond the vail, whither the forerunner has entered, even Jesus.

Dear brother, I feel like I have written so lengthy and unprofitably that it will weary you; but it seemed like I could not help it. Excuse me for this imperfect scribble, and when it goes well with you remember me at the throne of grace.

I remain your unworthy brother in hope,

J. W. PUTMAN.

CRAMER, Ill., March 14, 1895.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS:—I have just received a letter from our dear brother Haynes. It has done me much good and I have read it over several times. Indeed it gave me hope and comfort to think that one like him, who bears indeed the marks of a child of God, is led so much like myself. He is now well on in his seventieth year, and can but say with one of old, "Few and evil have the days of the years of my life been." I thought I would send the letter to you to publish, if you think it will be of any comfort to those who walk in darkness and feel to have no light. May such trust in the name of the Lord and stay upon their God.

Yours in love,

E. D. VARNES.

OAK HILL, Ill., March 10, 1895.

E. D. VARNES—DEAR BROTHER:—In thus addressing you I do greatly fear that I am claiming a relationship that does not belong to me. You, no doubt, wonder at my long silence in not writing to you, for I think I am owing you a letter; and that bundle of papers I received a few days ago reminds me of it; so, contrary to a resolution which I have been trying all winter to adopt, to quit all correspondence except with my children, I now sit down to try to write you a few lines; and first, I will say that myself and family are all in tolerable health, except colds. I thought that my own was better this winter than last. Before I forget, let me thank you kindly for the reading matter you sent; and now what shall I say more? I better not say anything, perhaps, for it seems to me that all I say or write about spiritual things is only from a head knowledge, so to speak. I have been looking over some of my old work in the SIGNS, and it seems so empty, so void of any real spirituality, that I am led to wonder why it was put in print.

The past winter has truly been a very cold and dark one to me in more than one sense. I have had plenty of time to read, and have read a great deal; and though I have read the Psalms of David and all the prophets, and all of the New Testament, and much of Leviticus and Deuteronomy, in search of some light, of something as a foundation for hope, yet as a rule all has seemed dark to me. I have also read the SIGNS (they come regularly), and only now and then would I find anything that seemed to strike an answering chord in my burdened soul. The doctrinal part I could say amen to, as a rule; for the doctrine of God's absolute sovereignty over all things, and consequently his absolute (certain) predestination of all things, it seems, are so vividly set forth in the works of his hand that I cannot doubt it. The glorious harmony in the order of nature, and the fitness of things which he has made, seems also to set forth a purpose or end to be accomplished, so that I cannot doubt that he is a God of purpose. But, after all, are not these conclusions that any thinking man that can reason from cause to effect come to, with no other light than his own reason? Ah! that is the question. But the prime purpose, the glorious purpose, the one that includes all other purposes, is not revealed in the works of his hands, the works of nature, speaking after the manner of men; but we must go to the precious volume of his inspiration for that. And here again it seems that the careful reader, though unregenerate, might, if divested of preconceived opinions, learn from the letter of the word that God's prime purpose in all things was to glorify himself in his Son, by making in him a full display of the Godhead, and glorify his Son by glorifying his church in him; and that all events and circumstances of time are to further the accomplishment of this one comprehensive purpose. Whether I have ever been taught these things by the Spirit of truth or not is now the question with me—not the truth of them. Whether I have a part with the happy, glorified throng or not, I have at times, in the years that have fled, been enabled to draw some sweet comfort and consolation from a contemplation of these glorious truths; but now I seem either to walk or sit down in the dark, and wage a continual warfare with uprisings of my poor, sin-defiled nature, and can only resign myself to the hands of a holy and just God, and say that "If my soul were sent to hell,

His righteous law approves it well."

Well, dear brother, here is another mixed up mess. I surely have followed the lead of my thoughts, and you certainly will be able to decide whether it is prompted by a good or evil spirit. Do you pass through such fires? Do you ever wish that you could drop out of sight and be forgotten by the brethren, just because you feel that you are so low down that you are no honor to them, and entirely unworthy of their fellowship and sympathy? I think not—I hope not.

When it is well with you at the throne of grace remember a poor, unworthy sinner walking in darkness.

PARABLE OF THE TALENTS.

WILL you please give your views through the SIGNS OF THE TIMES on the parable of the talents, Matthew XXV.? Especially I want to know what became of the unprofitable servant. Do you think he was utterly lost? By so doing you will confer a great favor upon a stranger.

REPLY.

THE answer to the above request has been unavoidably delayed until the present time; and here again we desire to take occasion to say that our correspondents must not think us unmindful of them should such requests remain unanswered for some time, because we have many such requests, and we cannot respond to all at once. We wish to say that concerning some we have but little light, which is another reason for delay. In no case does delay mean any indifference to such requests, or to brethren and sisters who request our views.

We can undertake to say but a few things with regard to the parable named above. We wish first to say, with direct reference to the question, "Was the unprofitable servant utterly lost?" that we do not understand that the parable relates to the final state of any. We do understand that the Savior spoke of things true in the kingdom of heaven now. We think the Savior was here setting forth great principles which belong to the kingdom of heaven here on earth at all times, and which are as true to-day as they ever have been or ever will be. We mean that these principles are in active operation, and rule in the kingdom of heaven every day throughout all this gospel dispensation. The parable does not say the old dispensation, the Jewish people, the legal covenant, but "the kingdom of heaven" is as a man traveling, &c. So far as we know, the expression, "the kingdom of heaven," always means that concerning which John the Baptist said that it was at hand. It had not been before, but it was to be. It was at hand. The law and the prophets had been before; they were until John. Then the kingdom of heaven was preached. It never had been said to be at hand before. John the Baptist spoke of it as a new thing. Jesus and the apostles spoke of it as a new thing. It was a new thing.

The parables related to the "kingdom of heaven." They describe not the old dispensation, with its forms and ceremonies, which under it had been commanded by God himself, but they describe the new order of things. Let it not be forgotten that the beginning of this parable is "the kingdom of heaven." The parable, then, does not relate to the passing away of the legal covenant, with its rites and ordinances, and the ushering in of the new, but simply and solely to things that belong to the kingdom of heaven; and that which in the Scriptures and by the apostles is said to be the kingdom of heaven exists now on earth, and the parables concerning it are being fulfilled now. God deals according to the lines laid down in the parables with his people in his kingdom now.

The narrative of the parable of the unprofitable servant, as it is called, is very plain and simple. A certain man travels into a far country. Before taking his departure he calls his servants, and commits his goods to them to use for his benefit until he shall return home again. To one he gave five, to another two, and to still another one talent. His rule of division was the several ability of his servants. The one to whom five had been allotted made good use of them, and gained other five, as did also the one to whom two talents had been given; while he to whom one talent was given hid it in the earth. After a long time the lord of those servants returned, and called upon his servants to give an account of their service. He to whom five talents had been committed brought the five, with five more which he had gained, and was approved, in that he had done well, and was made ruler over many things, and was received into the favor of his lord. So also was it done unto him who had two talents committed to him. But when he who had one talent came, he had made no gain. He brought the one talent, and excused himself for having made no gain by accusing his lord of being a hard, grasping man, saying that therefore he was afraid, and so he buried his talent, and now rendered it back just as he had received it. But his lord turns his excuses against him, and says to him, Seeing that thou knewest all this, thou oughtest to have put my money to the exchangers, that when I came I might receive my own with usury. Therefore his talent is taken from him, and given to the one with ten, and he himself is cast into outer darkness.

This is the substance of the narrative as given in the parable. The kingdom of heaven is like this. In a brief way we would present a few reflections that have occurred to us connected with the parable. The lord of the servants who travels into a far country is the Lord Jesus Christ. The servants are all his disciples in every age. What is meant by his going away is explained in the first part of the fourteenth chapter of the gospel written by John, and by other inspired men in the New Testament, who declare that he has gone into heaven, from whence we look for his appearing; and of the time of his appearing no man knows the day nor the hour. The talents which he delivers unto his servants do not represent what we mean when we speak of a man as being talented, or having personal ability, for the narrative expressly says that the talents were given to the servants "according to his several ability." It is evident, therefore, that what we call ability is one thing, and the talents another. This view is strengthened by the fact that the one talent was taken from the servant who had it, and was given to the one who had ten; which could not be true if by the talents the ability of men were meant. We understand the talents to mean whatever may be committed to the charge of each servant in the kingdom of God. If a minister of the word, it may be that the talents would represent the church or churches committed to his oversight. The talents would include the officers of the church, including bishops, deacons, pastors, teachers, evangelists, and all others. They would include all that God has committed to our charge to be used for his honor and glory. All the stores of wisdom and knowledge, of strength and riches, which God has bestowed upon us, ought to be so used as to redound to the glory of that God who gave them.

The coming of this man again is after a long time. The servants do not know when it will be. In every parable or statement in which his coming again is alluded to in any way this one feature is always kept in view, its unexpectedness. No one knows when. It is always like the thief in the night, always like the lord's return, at an unexpected time. God has not given to his servants to know the times or the seasons. His determinate purpose is known by them only in its fulfillment. It is wise and merciful that it is so. The promise is sure, but when is not known. If the good man of the house had known at what hour the thief would come he would have watched; but he did not know. Here was the trial of his faith and constancy, of his care and watchfulness. The people of God are thus taught to be watchful at all times. Their spirit, their whole attitude, is to be one of constant waiting and expectancy. They know not when it shall please the Lord to come to them. They are assured that he will visit his people, to revive, to comfort, to reward, to commune with them, or to chide, to reprove, to rebuke or to chastise the wayward; but they do not know the times nor the seasons. These God has kept in his own hand; therefore he says, "Be ye also ready; for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh."

The Lord in his kingdom here on earth has given to each a portion of his goods as he has deemed best. He has assigned to each his place. He has had regard to their several ability. He did not put Paul in Peter's place, nor commit to Peter the field assigned to Paul. He has committed to some of his servants more than he has to others. This he has done according to his own will. He has not consulted his servants as to where they shall go, nor what they shall do. He needs not to take counsel with any. It would indeed be a sad thing for his servants did their Lord take counsel with them. How good it is that his own will reigns in all these things! His sovereign power indeed reigns, but reigns not alone. Grace, wisdom, love and mercy are all equal partners with his divine power. The sovereignty of God is in harmony with all that is holy, pure, true and merciful. In all this gospel day God has set in the church not only the gifts, but the persons of those to whom these gifts have been committed. Each minister, each member, has been put to serve where it has pleased God, and such things have been committed to each one as has seemed good to the Master. John the Baptist said, "A man can receive nothing except it be given him from heaven." Here, in this kingdom of heaven, then, there is no room for emulation, or strife, or debate, or envy, or jealousy, or ambition, or any other worldly passion to enter. Each one receives what is assigned him to occupy until the Lord shall come. No one must ask, "And what shall this man do?" To each one in whose heart such a question may arise is it said, "What is that to thee? Follow thou me." No one is lord over another. All are servants of the one Master.

We do not understand the parable to teach that all the servants of God to whom five or two talents are given are faithful, nor that all to whom but one is given prove to be unfaithful. We understand the one design of the parable to be to set forth in striking contrast two classes of the servants of God; and we have not been able to see any special reason why he who had the one talent should be selected to represent the unfaithful or slothful servants, except that, as less was committed to him, he would appear to have less excuse for not using what was committed to him, and his failure would stand out more prominently. It is true, we believe, that many of the Lord's servants neglect the gift that is in them, including some with five talents or two talents, as well as those with one. In these matters we are not the judge. It is not for us to judge either ourselves or others. We are not to decide who has the five, the two or the one talent. We are not the judges either as to who has failed or as to who has been faithful. The Lord reckons with his own servants. It is a heart-work, a work in the conscience first of all; and sometimes the Lord reveals his judgments either for approval or disapproval by committing more to the care of his servants, or by removing them from the field which they had seemed to have. This parable is written for our learning. It is a heart-searching parable. It is well calculated to make us each ask very solemnly, How am I using my Lord's goods?

There is no intimation in the parable of a difference in the standing of the servants, except a difference in ability. We see no statement there that some were real servants, while others are merely nominal professors. If the fact that the servant with but one talent misused it proves that he was merely a servant in name, then how many of the erring, trembling children of God will feel themselves cut off by it. If none of the real servants of God ever bury their talent, or call the Lord a hard Master, or ever get into outer darkness, then we ourselves must at once despair. They were all his servants. They all belonged to him. They were not hired servants. They were all parts of his household. This would be in harmony with eastern customs. We repeat that we see no warrant for believing that the servant with one talent represents a merely nominal, outward professor, while the others represent true children of God. It is a solemn truth that the true servants of God may be faithless and wicked and slothful. It is true in all ages that his children may forsake his law, and walk not in his statutes; and it is always true that such ones shall be beaten with stripes.

Was the wicked and slothful servant utterly lost? We suppose that our sister means, was he finally banished from the presence of God? We answer that the very terms of the parable would not admit of this conclusion. Let us look again at the parable. The master owns his servants. They belong to him. They are not hired servants. The master has property interests in them. He will not destroy his own interests. He will not send the servant away forever. His regard for his own interests will forbid this. But he will chastise his slothful servant. He will cause him to feel his displeasure. As the master has returned from a long journey, there will be gladness and rejoicing and feasting for all. He will distribute presents among his servants. He will be glad to meet them, as they are glad to welcome him. They have been faithful. "Blessed is that servant whom his lord when he cometh shall find so doing." But the slothful servant, who has incurred his lord's displeasure, shall not share in this feasting and rejoicing. He knows about it, but he is cast out. As he realizes what he has thus lost there is weeping and gnashing of teeth. His lord's house is all ablaze with light, but he is cast into outer darkness. He is still his lord's servant, but he is under censure. He is in outer darkness, and he may be beaten, and be held in prison and in chains. All this seems to us to be true of the parable.

Let us repeat, the kingdom of heaven is like this. The blessed Lord chastens his disobedient and slothful servants. He chastens them not to destroy them, but for their own profit. He is angry with them for a small moment, but with great mercies will he gather them. He shows his displeasure by the discipline which he inflicts upon them. Sometimes they are merely shut out into outer darkness. They cannot enter into the joys which he brings with him when he comes to his waiting and watching servants. There is a time of refreshing and joy in his house, but into it they cannot enter. At such times they realize that their transgressions are brought up in judgment against them. Sometimes the chastisement is still more severe. They are not only shut out from comfort and joy, but they are beaten with many stripes, and sit in chains within the prison walls. They then remember the past mercies; and after a time their soul is humbled within them, and they return unto the Lord with full purpose of heart. Then is he graciously pleased to pardon their iniquity, and restore unto them once more the joys of salvation; and then they realize a song of thanksgiving and praise in their hearts, the burden of which is that his mercy endureth forever. Thus it will be seen that we believe that the servant who was slothful was really a servant, and if so he cannot be finally lost.

With one more reflection we will leave the subject, which we have already made too lengthy. How perfectly is the disposition of fallen man described when the slothful servant, charged with his wickedness, begins to excuse himself by accusing his lord. Let us hear what he says: "I knew thee that thou art a hard man, reaping where thou hast not sown, and gathering where thou hast not strewed: and I was afraid, and went and hid thy talent in the earth." The nature of man has remained the same in all ages. Adam said, "The woman whom thou gavest to be with me, she gave me," &c.; and here the servant would excuse his own folly by charging his master with injustice and hardness. He seems to imply that he thought that when the day of reckoning came as much would be required of him as from the one to whom five talents were given. How prone we are to charge our faults upon God! We always shall do so until grace humbles us. Then we shall see our own guilt, and then shall we magnify the infinite holiness of God. All that we can say at such times is, "I have sinned." Those who love the service of God only grieve that they cannot serve him better. They are never satisfied with themselves. But when led by the flesh we are never satisfied with God. If we would justify ourselves, we shall be found charging God with folly and injustice at the same time.

In the parable the master does not seek to clear himself from the charges of the slothful servant, but turns those very charges into an additional ground of condemnation. He seems to us in substance to say, If I be a hard man, reaping where I have not sown, and gathering where I have not strewn, this is but a still more urgent reason why thou shouldest have put my money to the exchangers, that when I came I might receive my own with usury. If I be a hard man, all the more certainly will suitable chastisement be visited upon thee for thy neglect. But, as said before, the lord does not seek to justify himself. Is not this the very same teaching as is found in the ninth chapter of Romans, where Paul does not at all presume to justify the Almighty in his decrees, but simply reaffirms them, and declares that man has no right to even question the decrees of God concerning him? How humbling to human pride are all the teachings of the Scriptures! O that we all might be found confessing our sins, and the "dread supremacy of Jehovah."

C.

APOSTOLIC ADMONITION, AND THE EXAMPLE OF PRIMITIVE SAINTS.

THE apostles and primitive saints, in using the gifts of the spirit which were bestowed on them for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, and for the edifying of the body of Christ, manifested a strong solicitude for the comfort of the saints generally, and for the declarative glory of God. They labored to confirm the brethren in the truth, as it is in Jesus, and as it had been revealed by the Holy Ghost. The numerous admonitions to stand fast in the liberty of the gospel, in that liberty wherewith Christ has made them free, shows that the faith of God's elect was at that time strongly contested, and that the people of God were even then, and should in subsequent ages be, exposed to many temptations and sore trials, and that they were in danger of being entangled again with the yoke of bondage. But trying as were the circumstances of the saints at that day, they were admonished that greater trials awaited the saints of latter times. The spirit expressly signified, that in the latter times some should depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils. And that in the last days perilous times should come, &c. Such times and such days have indeed made their appearance, and many, according to the word, have apostatized from the faith and order of the gospel; and those who have not so fallen are exhorted not to be high minded, but to fear; they are directed to put on the whole armor of God, and to contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints.

At this day of conflict, should not every child of God stand on his watch tower? Ought not every gift to be employed in confirming the feeble, strengthening the hands, and confirming the feeble knees? We do not believe that there was more danger of departing from the faith in times of bloody persecution than at the present time. At this time the fagot does not blaze, nor are the prisons crowded, or the blood of saints made to flow as in former ages in the history of the church; but can we say that there is at this time a smaller number of apostacies than when these things were realized by the followers of the Lamb? Fables are now the order of the day with fashionable religionists. The world allures, the flesh is predisposed to vanity, and the devil is busy, with all his legions, in spreading the most deceptive bates in the way of the children of God. A denial of the christian faith may be effected without renouncing any particular creed; if we, as professed christians do not walk orderly, if we neglect the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is, or if we deny not ourselves of ungodliness, if we take not our cross and follow the Lamb, we as effectually deny the faith as though we were to renounce the peculiar doctrine of the Scriptures. Let us then take heed to ourselves, and let us exhort one another, and much the more as we see the evil day, or day of trial, approaching.

DIVERSITY OF SPIRITS.

"BELOVED, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God: because many false prophets are gone out into the world."—1 John iv. 1.

Perhaps a more weighty admonition than the one embraced in this text cannot be found in the Scriptures, or one to which professors of christianity should more earnestly take heed. It is important, first of all, in ascertaining the validity of our own hope in Christ, and the course which we are called to pursue as christians, in regard to our faith and practice; and, secondly, in establishing the bounds of our fellowship for the persons, doctrines and practice of others.

The God of heaven has, through this apostle, and in this text, informed us that there are many false prophets in the world, and admonishes the saints not to believe them. False prophets we understand to be those which assume or pretend to be something which they are not, and which incline them to believe and do things which are false and delusive.

In the demonstration of a good hope through grace, there is but one spirit that can be relied upon; and as there are many spirits that cannot be believed, we should search the divine record to learn from the high authority of God himself what are the peculiar marks by which we are to test the spirits. If we are born of God, the Spirit of God, the Spirit of adoption, will bear witness with our spirit that we are the subjects of that heavenly birth; but if we have not the Spirit of Christ, we are none of his. In every essential point the Spirit of Christ is opposite to all other spirits. It is holy, while all others are unholy; it is true, while all others are false; it leads into all truth, while all others lead into heresy and falsehood; it leads the child of God to love God supremely, and to love his word, his doctrine, his ordinances and his people above everything else, while all false spirits exert an opposite bearing. The true and infallible Spirit leads those on whom it is bestowed to trust only in the living God, to worship him in spirit, to rejoice in Christ Jesus, and to have no confidence in the flesh. But the false spirits, directly or indirectly, openly or covertly, incline their dupes to trust in something short of God, to rejoice in the works of their own hands, and to pretend to worship God in lifeless forms, and teaching for doctrines the commandments of men. The Spirit of truth is a spirit whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him; but all false spirits can be received by the world. The true Spirit is the Spirit of God; the others are spirits of the world and the spirits of devils.

God's people are admonished to try the spirits, because they are liable to be deceived by the false spirits, as was evidently the case with them when the Lord told them that they knew not what manner of spirit they were of. Peter was troubled with one of them when he savored the things of men, &c., and we conclude that the saints of God at this age have still greater cause to beware; for the spirit speaketh expressly, that in the last days perilous times should come, and many should depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils.

Men may have a kind of religious spirit about them which they may mistake for the Spirit of truth and holiness, and which has been often so mistaken. The Scribes and Pharisees were under this fatal delusion. Saul of Tarsus was led by it to verily believe that he ought to do many things contrary to Jesus of Nazareth; and Christ told his disciples that the time should come when men should believe they were doing God's service in slaying them.

Men, under the dictation of a false, lying and seducing spirit, in thousands of instances at this day are led to set up their inventions, theories, rites, ceremonies, ordinances, frames and feelings, as a standard of truth and righteousness, without regard to what God has authorized in his word as the rule and standard for his children to be governed by. In testing the validity and vitality of our hope, by the spirit that predominates over us, we should watch whether it elevates our affections from earth to heaven and heavenly things; whether it gives us exalted conceptions of the power and majesty of Jehovah; whether it leads us to lay aside our own wisdom and righteousness as a ground of reliance, and trust alone to God's method of salvation by grace; whether it directs our faith to apprehend safety in relying alone on the blood and righteousness of our exalted Redeemer for justification and eternal deliverance from wrath, and on the quickening operation of the holy Spirit to qualify us for the enjoyment of God and heaven, and all spiritual things. Frames and feelings, when produced by the Spirit's work on us, will always be in harmony with the divine standard of christian experience and spiritual exercise. Our frames and feelings, however pleasant or painful, are not to be trusted as a rule for our conduct, nor an evidence of our adoption, any farther than they accord with the divine rule laid down in the New Testament. If even christians were authorized to regard their feelings as a rule for their conduct, they would not have been reproved for an inclination to pray for fire from heaven to consume their enemies; nor would Peter have been subjected to the sharp rebuke which he received, in the case before alluded to. Christians have sometimes been grossly deceived by their feelings, and by them misled into serious difficulties, in regard to their conduct. Equally unsafe and unreliable are our feelings in determining the validity of our hope in God. How often do all our present feelings forbid us to hope that we are born of God. How often did David, and many others of God's dear children, feel as though the Lord's mercies were clean gone forever, and that he had forgotten to be gracious. Zion also said, The Lord has forgotten me. Jonah felt as though he did well to be angry even unto death, and good old Job was led by his feelings to curse the day on which he was born.

On the other hand, how frequent are the instances given in the Scriptures of men who have evinced strong feelings of a religious character, and were still destitute of the power of vital godliness in their souls. They were astonished at the gracious words which Jesus uttered, and felt inclined to take him by force and make him king; but in the next hour they conspired to murder him. The Pharisee felt very religious when he prayed with himself, and ventured to appeal to God that he had done so many religious acts.

Hypocrites and nominal professors are frequently among the most feeling people on earth. Arminians can get up an excitement of animal feelings at pleasure. They can and do appoint times beforehand to agonize, to fast, and afflict their souls; and they also have their times and places and means appointed for raising a revival; and they contend that it is their privilege to enjoy a shouting season whenever they please. But it is not so with the children of God; when they are depressed and sorrowful they must wait God's own appointed time for their deliverance. When they are shut up they cannot go forth.

The apostle in our text evidently admonished the saints to try the spirits of those who did or should claim their fellowship—men who should apply for membership in the churches of the saints. It is not sufficient to know that they have a spirit, but we must try the spirit, whether it be of God. And when men come unto you in sheep's clothing, while inwardly they are ravening wolves, try them by the infallible standard. It is not enough that they talk of feelings, or that they put on their hypocritical imitations of humility, and talk with feigned words, with sanctimonious tones, with moistened eyes, and in such manner as is calculated to steal upon the carnal sympathies of our nature. Test them by the more sure word of testimony. "To the law and to the testimony; if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."

POSTAL MONEY ORDERS.

BY a recent arrangement of the post-office department nearly every post-office in the United States is now a money order office for at least five dollars; and as it costs but three cents additional to obtain an order of not more than two dollars and fifty cents, or five cents for one not more than five dollars, or eight cents for one not more than ten dollars, and so on in proportion to amount of order, we request that all remittances be sent us by post-office money-order. You simply give the money you wish to send to your postmaster, and he will give you a money-order for that amount. You will inclose the order which he gives you in your letter to us; and if it should be lost in the mail you can get another one from your postmaster without additional charge. Please be sure to have the order made payable at Middletown, N. Y., and never at New York City, as that place is nearly a hundred miles from our place, and it puts us to considerable extra trouble and expense to get them cashed at the New York City office.

As will be seen from the above, an order for five dollars or less can be obtained cheaper than registering a letter, while an order not exceeding ten dollars costs but the same amount; and remitting by money order is a much safer way than sending by registered letter, as the postal department is not responsible for loss of registered letters, but money orders can be duplicated.

ALWAYS SEND DIRECTIONS.

WE have received of late quite a number of postal money orders without any letter of directions. It is much better to always send directions how you wish the amount of the order credited.

Ohio, Feb. 22d, 1843, my father dying when I was quite young, leaving my mother with four small children, I being the oldest, and having to work hard. In 1857 we moved to Fulton Co., Ill., where I grew to manhood. I cannot remember a time when I did not have serious thoughts of death, and wondered what would become of me if I should die; but I never was convicted of sin until a short time after I was married, which was in December, 1865. All at once there came a gloom over me that I could not account for, nor could I get rid of that feeling. I had just begun to see myself the chief of sinners. Often I would slip away from the house and try to pray. While all the young folks seemed lively and enjoying themselves, I would wonder why I could not be like them. Time passed on until my wife's mother was taken sick with quick consumption, and died on April 1st, 1866. She was a good christian woman, and I dearly loved her. She bade us all farewell, and hoped we would meet in heaven. She seemed to take a deep interest in me, and made some special remarks about me; that she loved me as one of her own children, and thought it would not be long until it would be made manifest that I was a child of God. All this increased my weight of trouble, for I thought I had deceived that dear mother. She requested Elder Vanmeter to preach her funeral discourse, but as he could not come at the time of her interment it was put off for two months, until in June. It seemed that I dreaded for that day to come, for my burden grew heavier every day. When the time came the relatives and friends began to arrive, and it seemed that my heart would burst. When the Elder began to preach I shook from head to foot, and could not control the fast falling tears. I was glad when he got through speaking, for I thought I could then become quiet; but such was not the case. Tears of remorse would flow. After dinner my wife wanted me to go out with a number of young people who were leaving. She was worried to see me grieving so, and tried to draw my mind to different scenes; but nothing did me any good. Finally we went back to the house, and my wife told her dear old father to go out and talk to me; for I could not go into the house, there were so many people there, and I wanted to see nobody. When her father came he asked me if I was sick. I told him yes, that I was sin-sick. He broke down so that he could not say much, and only commended me to Jesus. Finally my wife said she was ashamed of me, or the way I acted, and wanted me to go to the stable with several others to sleep, as the house was crowded, and she thought I would feel better after a night's rest. When I got there I threw myself on the hay, expecting never to rise again.

I said, "Dear Lord, take me as I am; it is all that I can do. If my soul is sent to hell, thy righteous law approves it well." All at once a bright light shined around me. I raised up on my elbow in amazement, and began to praise God with what little strength I had left, for there was not a dry thread on me. I looked north of me and there was the graveyard, with the beautiful light shining, and the marble that marked the sacred spot of the dead. I looked south, and there I beheld the moon, and it seemed like it was shining on a plate of silver. The hills that I had walked over so many times looked beautiful. My burden was all gone. I wanted to go to the house and tell the glad tidings of great joy. I was helped down and led to the house, as I was too weak to walk without assistance. As I am making this too lengthy I will just say that in October of the same year I offered myself to the Mount Zion Church, was received, and was baptized by Elder Rigans. Many times since then I have had doubts and fears, but my mind often goes back to the haymow in the old log stable where I believe that God for Christ's sake pardoned my sins. I love that dear old hymn,

"Amazing grace! how sweet the sound!
That saved a wretch like me;
I once was lost, but now am found,
Was blind, but now I see."

Your little brother in hope of eternal life,

A. MORNINGSTAR.

CAMMAL, Pa., Jan. 23, 1895.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS:—Will you please publish the inclosed letter of sister Fackenthall? It was read to the church here at the last covenant meeting, and the friends wish to have it published.—C.

HAZARD, Wash., Nov. 2, 1894.

MY DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS IN THE LORD:—My mind seems impressed to write to you. We are told to speak often one to another. It is a duty and also a sweet privilege. We love to speak of the glorious plan of salvation by grace, and to tell each other of our trials and sorrows as we journey through this weary land. But, dear brethren, I feel so ignorant, I know so little about spiritual things, I am fearful lest I should utter words without knowledge and to no profit. But if the Spirit of God has given me this desire it will accomplish the purpose whereunto it is sent; for the Lord says his word shall not return unto him void. I feel that the dear Lord deals very bountifully with me, so much more than I deserve. I feel to be the most miserable sinner on his footstool; but I hope that God for Christ's sake has forgiven my sins; not for any good that I have done or can do, for of myself I cannot even think one good thought. Sin is mixed with all I do.

"There's nothing in me to merit esteem,
Or give the Creator delight:
'Tis even so, Father, I ever must say,
For so it seemed good in thy sight."

So if I am one of the Lord's dear children it is all of free and sovereign grace. I feel to be less than the least of all saints, and of sinners the chief. "It is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners, of whom I am chief." It is written that Jesus was made sin for us, who knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him. "Their righteousness is of me, saith the Lord." No wonder Paul was made to exclaim, "O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! How unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out!" Although I feel to be the most vile and ignorant of all, yet I feel to admonish you to forget not the assembling of yourselves together, as the manner of some is; for there is a comfort in the sweet communion of saints. His children are all taught of the Lord, all taught by the same Spirit, and he teaches as never man taught. They are all taught the same glorious truth that salvation is of the Lord alone. How helpless, and how dependent they are on him for everything, both temporal and spiritual. He watches over them, keeps them as the apple of his eye, and leads them about and instructs them, here a little and there a little. He says he will never leave them nor forsake them, but will be with them alway, even unto the end of the world. What manner of persons ought we to be? "Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God." We are joint-heirs with Christ. O that I could praise and adore his holy name.

Dear brethren, although I am deprived of meeting with you in your meetings, I remember the time of your meetings, and trust I am with you in spirit if not in bodily presence. May you all remember me when it is well with you, and may we all be kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the last time. May we walk as dear children, keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace, walk worthy of the vocation wherewith we are called, and his name shall have all the praise in a world without end.

Your poor, unworthy sister,

M. J. FACKENTHALL.

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE.

TO MOST of our readers the above mentioned book is too well known to need any introduction or a description by us. While many of the Bibles have a Concordance appended, they are generally so condensed or abridged as to be of little or no use. Cruden's Complete Concordance, however, enables one to readily turn to any passage of Scripture of which they can call to mind two or three words, and in our opinion is the most complete and convenient as a reference book of any published. In addition, it contains many other aids in studying the Bible, as may be seen by reference to advertisement on last page. Remember, both the books there mentioned are CRUDEN'S COMPLETE.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

ON the evening of July 6th, 1895, the spirit of our dear sister, Phebe Burley, left its weary tenement of clay, returning to God who gave it.

This dear mother in Israel came to the grave in a full age, like as a shock of corn cometh in its season. She lived eighty-seven years; and few who read these lines can know what busy scenes and christian living were crowded within those fourscore and seven years. If we might trace the deeds of kindness, her zeal, her patience, her devotion and faithfulness to God, our prayer would be, "Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his." Her love was unfeigned, her hospitality unbounded, and her home was literally the home of her brethren. She ministered to all with a sister's or a mother's hand. Such was her generosity that she gave homes in her family, first and last, to seven orphan children, caring for them as her own. But words cannot describe such a life as hers. Much of the heroism that charms the world pales before such true, quiet lives, in out-of-the-way places, of those who are hid with Christ in God.

Sister Burley came to this country in 1831, from Kentucky, where, with the maiden name of Fisher, she married James Montgomery, of a most worthy family, and their union was blessed with children. Her first and second husbands, like herself, were worthy members of the Primitive Baptist Church of Crawfordsville. Her life was a round of activity and usefulness, until the infirmities of age made the strong arm weak and the step uncertain. Although an invalid the last few years of her life, her brave heart failed not under trial, and the dark valley had no terrors for her soul. She was wonderfully sustained by divine grace, and looked upon death as a friend. Her constant desire was to depart and be with her Lord, and be at rest. She felt that Jesus was present, and that heaven was in view. O faith divine! precious gift of God! What a mountain of strength it is, what an anchor of safety, what a well-spring of joy! Her life had been as a hymn of gladness, a labor of love; and the end was peace, followed by a crown of glory that fades not away, eternal in the heavens. O, my brethren, what is the value of such a life—of such a death? While we water her memory with our tears may we learn from her example how to live. May her unstained walk be a blessing to our souls, her busy hand and abiding trust encourage us by the way. Are we drifting from the sweet simplicity, the heavenly fellowship and godly constancy that characterized the whitened saints over the land that are passing to their reward? The dear Lord help us to consider our way as we look upon these holy lives that bind us to the past, and may we be thankful for the evidences that the Lord's presence is yet in our midst.

Elder Oliphant ministered to our sorrowful hearts at the funeral, having traveled a night and a day to be with us. The wasted body of our sister was laid away, in the hope that the mighty God will in due time raise the sleeping dust; that that which was sown in dishonor shall be raised in glory, when it shall be said that death is swallowed up in victory.

S. B. LUCKETT.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, Ind.

DIED—At the residence of his son-in-law, G. W. Lewis, in Philadelphia, Pa., on Sunday, Feb. 3d, 1895, Mr. Aaron Pierson, Sr., aged 89 years.

Although feeble from the infirmities of old age, he retained his faculties until the last, only being sick three days, with congestion of the kidneys. He first joined the Presbyterian Church, but was never quite satisfied. He happened to hear an Old School Baptist sermon while standing outside of a school-house, which seemed to remove all doubts at once. He soon went to Southampton meeting, and was baptized there by Elder Bowen on August 18th, 1839, and ever afterward was a worthy and consistent member, and one of the strongest in the faith that I ever met. Since the death of his dear companion, just seventeen months before, he seemed to have but one desire, and that was to attend the association at Southampton in 1894. His wish was granted. We took him there two days. He said of all he ever attended that was the sweetest. He often spoke of the beautiful visions he had; and only a short time before his death I was helping him dress one morning, when he said, "I don't believe I will ever forget what I saw last night." "Well," I said, "tell me about it; what was it like?" He said, "I cannot explain to you, only it is all right with me; it is all right." From the beautiful smile on his dear face as he slept his last sleep, which Mr. Durand and others said was wonderful, it is easy to believe that it is all right with our dear one, and that he is now enjoying fully the salvation by grace in which he was such a firm believer.

Elder Durand conducted the funeral services, and spoke comfortingly and beautifully from the deceased's favorite text, "I have fought a good fight, I have kept the faith," &c. He also read his two favorite hymns, "Jesus, lover of my soul," and "Sovereign Ruler of the skies;" after which all that was mortal of a loved father was taken to the Southampton grave-yard and buried by the side of his faithful and loving wife, whom he had never ceased grieving for. They cannot come to us, but we can go to them, is the earnest hope of his daughter,

E. B. FETTER.

IVYLAND, Pa., July 18, 1895.

DIED—At her home in Pontiac, Ill., on July 5th, 1895, Mrs. Nancy A. Butterworth, aged 70 years, 9 months and 27 days.

She was born at Charlsworth, England, where her father, Mr. Beard, was an Old School Baptist minister. She joined the Baptists in her girlhood, before coming to America. She was married to John Butterworth on May 17th, 1852. They came to this country in the year 1856, settled in Kendall Co., Ill., and lived there until 1873, when they moved to Ford Co., and lived in and around Cabery until a year ago, when she with her son George moved to Pontiac. Her husband died in 1884. Two sons and two daughters survive to mourn their loss. The remains were interred in the Clayton cemetery on Sunday, the 7th.

W. H. Darland died at the residence of his youngest son, Isaac N. Darland, in Spokane, Washington, aged 72 years, 8 months and 19 days.

He was an Old School Baptist, and at one time a licensed minister. He was born April 4th, 1822, in the state of Indiana, and joined the Primitive Baptists at the age of about thirty-five years. He was a great sufferer in his last sickness, and when he could get no relief from pain he would say, "What shall I do? Lord, have mercy." His old friend and brother in the church, Wright Rushing, was with him constantly until the last, rendering every possible assistance.

ISAAC N. DARLAND.

Eliza Ann Dunham was born in Warren Co., Ohio, Sept. 1st, 1816, and died July 10th, 1895.

She united with the West Lebanon Predestinarian Baptist Church, and was baptized by Elder Wilson Thompson on the second Sunday in May, 1834. She retained her membership in that church until her death.

In the absence of her pastor, Elder H. M. Curry, who is now in the east, the writer was called to attend the funeral, which took place on the 12th, at the Baptist meeting-house in Lebanon, Ohio. The text used was, "The righteous shall hold on his way."

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SON, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date. This date denotes the time at which your subscription expires; and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

PICTORIAL HISTORY

OF THE

UNITED STATES.

By James D. McCabe.

This work is no dry mass of details—no bombastic effort to inflame the national pride, but a vivid and brilliant narrative of the events of our history, from the discovery of the American Continent down to the present time. It gives a most interesting account of the Indians of North America, from the time of the coming of the white men. The voyages of Columbus and explorations and discoveries of the different nations of Europe are related with graphic power. Every step of our colonial history is traced with patient fidelity, and the sources of those noble and, we trust, enduring institutions, which have made our country free and great, are shown with remarkable clearness. Then follows a clear and succinct account of our great Struggle for Independence, and the establishment of the Federal Union—the events of our career from the close of the Revolution to the administration of Harrison.

The work is printed from plain, new type, on fine calendered paper, and comprised in one octavo volume of 960 pages. It is splendidly embellished with nearly 500 fine engravings, embracing battles and other historical scenes, portraits of distinguished men, views of our principal cities, &c., &c.

Bound in Fine Silk Cloth, Plain Edges, $2.00, Post-paid.

THE SABBATH.

"He that regardeth the day, regardeth it unto the Lord; and he that regardeth not the day, to the Lord he doth not regard it."—Rom. xiv. 6.

Having carefully read the petition to the Elk River Association, in the Signs of October 24th, 1894, I felt a desire to examine for myself whether the Scriptures gave any light on this subject of a generally received day. The thoughts I here present have not been copied from any known authority, nor have I inquired of any one as to their view of the matter. As a subscriber to the Signs I have learned to value its contributions; but still I feel above all things, in spiritual matters, a strong desire to be perfectly honest, for they have to do with the things which accompany salvation, both in time and eternity. My mind is not exercised for the mere date of the day, but on the question, Had the early believers any day, after separation from the Mosaic dispensation, that they held in common, which might be considered as the antitype of the Jewish Sabbath? If they had, was it the first day of the week? In order to condense as much as possible, let me divide the passages used as proofs against the present Sunday into three branches, beginning with the "Lord's day," and what is meant by it; next the Jewish Sabbath, kept by "Seventh Day Baptists," and then, scanning the line of prophetic and New Testament clauses in which the term "day" is used, in connection with our inquiry. One thought here as to the idea conveyed by the word day itself. It must of necessity, according to the rules of language, set forth in its strict sense a given and definite portion of time; although spiritually it may signify one eternal period of heavenly glory or unbroken judgment; still its proper use is confined to the life of man, where it becomes in the same natural sense, by its rising and setting suns, a divider of his life into sections, either used or neglected by him. Perhaps it would be simpler to examine the texts where the word day is used, first by turning to 2 Peter iii. 12. "Looking for and hasting unto the coming of the day of God, wherein the heavens being on fire shall be dissolved, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat." The figurative language of Scripture has always formed a ground of debate between its students, the larger number understanding this verse as referring solely to the closing epoch of this earth's history. When we reflect how that the Jewish holy land was really the type, of which the framework of the christian church that now is must be the antitype, it will lead us to place the natural blessings and natural judgments where they properly belong; that is, under the covenant of works. The Mosaic dispensation was called a "worldly sanctuary," and all its appointments "beggarly elements of the world;" that is, in contrast with the spiritual kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ, manifested at Pentecost and still existing. The expression "day of God," here is equivalent to "day of the Lord," in verse ten; whereby the unity of God as Creator, and God as Savior, or as Father and Son, is incidently brought out in their work of judgment; and thus it might be written, day of judgment or vengeance. The circumstances of its writing were these: to the natural Jew the Lord had not come, for Christ was simply an impostor whom they had crucified. They were still looking forward to a Prince who would break the Roman yoke from off their neck and raise Judah to more than former glory. To the spiritual Jew the Savior had come in the person of the lowly Nazarene, who had passed through death without seeing corruption, being raised again in glory, and shed abroad the powers of the world to come in their hearts. They were looking for the destruction of this natural Jerusalem, the breaking down of pharisaical power and pomp, and the emancipation of the church of Christ, that she might flourish in all lands. The tardy progress of events in those last days, between the dawning and the day, tried the faith of the persecuted handfuls, while it afforded ground for Judaizing teachers, whose real object was to maintain a yoke of bondage over the flock, and to cry, "Where is the promise of his coming?" To all this the apostle replies, that deliverance to the one and judgment to the other was as secure as the word or decree of God could make it, time being nothing to him; for a thousand years was but as a day, but to his children under the sun-time was a reality; it was for trial, and for the salvation of his flock. Even the last sheep must be gathered out of the wilderness of Judaism ere the fall of judgment and natural destruction could quench its altar fires. Yet the time would come when the church militant should be found clothed in the finished righteousness of Christ, instead of the robes of Solomon's temple. The main thought is that each should be hasting to that day by growing in grace and the knowledge of Jesus Christ. Now, as regards manifestation, it is clear that no special day, but a series of days, had to transpire in carrying out those purposes which by the inspired writer are shortly described as "the day of God;" the "great and notable day" of Acts ii. 20; the "terrible day" of Joel ii. 11; the "dreadful day of the Lord," of Malachi iv. 5; all of which point to scenes of suffering and vengeance, extending over many days; while the day over which Abraham rejoiced was doubtless the complete work of his true Isaac, as manifested from his birth in the manger to his glorious exaltation above the heavenly hosts as the Redeemer of his church. The epistles are filled with warnings to the different churches that they should not look back to the works of the law, the church in the wilderness, for salvation, but ever maintain and ever be glad in the perfect light of the great gospel day of grace.

Next, briefly on the texts supposedly favoring the Jewish Sabbath. The general impression seems to be that our Lord himself set aside the seventh day before his decease, forgetting that such would convict him of offending in one point at least of the Mosaic law, and thus make him guilty of all. Now, his express mission was to magnify the law and make it honorable, that all his saints might wear it as a finished robe of life, ere its natural and dead vesture could be rolled up and honorably and openly pass away. Hence we find him strictly obedient to all its details, even from infancy. Likewise also his Jewish disciples after his death still clung to their old Sabbath without a forbid. Only in the vexed question of Gentile obligations to Jewish customs was the Sabbath also omitted with other outward forms. The passages supposed to teach that Jesus himself abrogated it are Matt. xii. 1–13, Mark ii. 1–12, Luke xv. 18–27; also Luke vi. and xiii. 11–18, John v. 1–18, and ix. Concerning the Jewish Sabbath the view taken in the article is that the people were to refrain from all outward forms of worship and abide strictly in their tents. Not being familiar with the passage quoted, Exodus xvi. 29, I turned to it. The quotation is, "Abide ye every man in his place; let no man go out of his place on the seventh day." But when these words are read with their surroundings they fail to convey to me the meaning given. As far as my own observation goes there is no more misleading way of quoting Scripture than to wrest it from its connection. Take for a sample our Lord's statement in John ix. 3, "Neither hath this man sinned, nor his parents." Read without the narrative which gave rise to it, see what a fundamental error it would teach. The subject treated in the Exodus account was daily duty; that is, the gathering of the manna, which was equivalent to the Israelites to work for the bread that perisheth. Only on the Sabbath was this labor to be omitted, the deficit being supplied by a double portion the previous day. The special command to abide in their tents was called forth by the lack of faith and consequent disobedience of some of the people who went on the seventh day as on other days to gather, but found not the manna. In Exodus xx. the plain command to rest from all secular toil is given at length, the Sabbath being holy to the Lord. In Exodus xxxv. 3 the same injunction is emphasized. No fire was to be kindled in all their habitations. But this had no bearing on the altar fires for the consuming of sacrifices in the temple. Our Lord speaking (in Matthew xii.) on this point says, "Have ye not read in the law, how that on the Sabbath days the priests in the temple profane the Sabbath, and are blameless?" Why were these services held if the people were not to be present? Again, illustrating his subject, he refers to David as having taken the shew bread in time of need; thus justifying his disciples, still under the law, for satisfying the cravings of natural hunger by plucking corn on the Sabbath day as they walked through the field. Also, he reminds them that they themselves would save the life of an ox or an ass that had fallen into a pit, and were guiltless. He closes by the clear affirmative that "it is lawful to do well on the Sabbath days;" and these cases covered secular matters. In Numbers xii. 48, when the princes brought their offerings to Moses for the service of the tabernacle, we find no break made on the Sabbath by the offerer remaining at home; for on the seventh day the prince of the children of Ephriam brought his offering to Moses, and was not even rebuked. Again, in Acts i. 12 the fact is recorded that Jerusalem was from the mount of Olives a Sabbath day's journey; showing that even traveling within certain limits was practiced. The question would be, How did Jesus himself understand the injunction of Moses? His actions must surely be the interpreters of his mind. In Luke iv. we read that his custom was to go into the synagogue on the Sabbath day and read. In the full account given in Matthew he never once rebuked the crowds for being found either in temple or synagogue. His teaching is condensed in a few words, "The Sabbath was made for man." Did this refer to his body only, without taking any thought of his soul? Again, "The Son of man is Lord also of the Sabbath day." Did he decide to break the law of Moses when he and his disciples were found in the temple or synagogues, taking the opportunity to heal some sick person, or open up some passage of the Old Testament Scripture? I cannot think so. What he did do was to rebuke the spirit of Phariseeism which perverted this command, as it did all others, to cover its own hypocrisy. No breaking of either jot or tittle of the law of God even in its given form was ever committed by his Son; nor was that ceremonial shadow rent apart by divine command till the vail of the temple was rent in twain. Yea, though Jesus the malefactor cried, "It is finished," not till Jesus the glorified had risen was the seal of approbation manifestly placed on his head as the acknowledged conqueror of death.

Our next turn will be to Rev. i. 10, which is the passage commonly associated with the first day of the week. The two verses, which seem to me connected in substance, read thus, "I, John, who also am your brother, and companion in tribulation, and in the kingdom and paence of Jesus Christ, was in the isle that is called Patmos, for the word of God, and for the testimony of Jesus Christ. I was in the Spirit on the Lord's day, and heard behind me a great voice, as of a trumpet." Now, is the clause, "on the Lord's day," here, a parallel one with the passages before noticed, "Day of the Lord," "Day of God?" None of these, as we have seen, could signify less than a cluster of days; but the words here used point to a definite time, that is, one day. John was in a definite place when he saw the vision, and that vision was unfolded at a definite time—on the Lord's day. If we are simply to understand John's state of mind, as I have heard it put, that being in the Spirit made it the Lord's day to him, then words have no force. It would have been quite sufficient to say, I was in the Spirit, and heard behind me, &c. Neither can we conclude that it refers to the whole gospel period, or day of grace; for John has long since passed over the river; and if he had not, even he would scarcely have claimed so exalted an experience on earth without a break in it. The brother who writes says, "The time of this vision could have no reference to a day; but the whole thing is spiritual;" and he quotes from Rev. x. 6, "that there should be time no longer." But so far as I can understand that passage with its clause, it does not refer to the time when John saw the vision, but to certain facts set forth in that vision itself; principally the passing away of the legal time, to give place to the fullness of times, when the mystery or secret of God should have been finished, by the death and resurrection of his Son. This had already been accomplished by Jesus, the Head; but the fruitage of living branches had yet to open in the atmosphere of a spiritual dispensation. It flashes on my mind as a mate to Paul's experience on a different occasion, when he says, "As I made my journey, and was come nigh unto Damascus, about noon, suddenly there shone from heaven a great light round about me."—Acts xxii. 6. To each was given the needful vision at the needful time and place. Paul was traveling to oppose Christ. John was a prisoner for the testimony of Christ. Paul was smitten down. John was comforted and fed with heavenly revelations. I will here ask in my way, Do the verses in Revelation bear any internal seal that connects them with the first day of the week? My own experience seems to whisper the subject of John's mind, separated from his brethren. Would not the little companies of saints, meeting with the assurance that where two or three were gathered in his name there he would be in the midst of them, rise lovely and lovable in his memory? O the harmonies of Zion! not of natural voices, but the throbbing of spirit, stirring the souls of living sons and daughters, even down to old age. But John was away from them. Have you felt what it is to be away from them? But suddenly that trumpet sounds, and, turning, he beholds the glorified, majestic person of his risen Lord. Yes, it is a Lord's day now, and a first day; not in figure merely; for God himself has come to him, and wiped for the time all tears from his eyes. Now the messages to the seven churches are burnt into his soul. Now all his loneliness has fled away before a descending heaven. Even so may all earthly services begun in the fear of God widen into vestibules of glory by the appearance of Jesus in the midst. It is evident that no written statement is made declaring that the Lord's day and the first day of the week are one. God has graciously left fillings up of bare indications now and then in holy writ for our spirits to ruminate upon, and often through differences of opinion more enlarged conceptions of his wisdom have grown up within us. It will be my object simply to point out what unites them in my own mind; so for a little time let us turn to Luke xxiii. as introductory. We are reminded here that the Jewish days were reckoned from sunset to sunset, or from evening to evening. The Sabbath then had closed with Saturday's setting sun; on which day, according to commandment, the disciples had rested; showing that as yet no abolition of the seventh day was known among them. But very early in the morning, while it was yet dark, on the first day of the week, the women came with their spices to continue the sad office of embalming the body. No one spiritually taught will suppose that a redeemed soul becomes more precious by reason of the casket that contains it, whether it be male or female. But so perfect is Scripture, even in its types, that the first appearance of Christ is to women; Mary first, and the other women also, told these things to the disciples. Whether it be Jerusalem under the law, typified by Hagar, or Jerusalem above law, set forth by Sarah, it is always the church that catches the first glimpse of her heavenly Husband, the risen Lord of eternal day; and it is she who always tells out the glad tidings to each doubting watcher. The first day of the week then may truly be called the second or spiritual birthday of the great first-born from the dead. His first birthday ushered him into the world as a sinner under law, made such for his body, yet without sin; for "he shall save his people from their sins." His second birthday was the seal of release from death and all the claims of a once broken but now fulfilled and honored law on behalf of all those given to him by the Father. Hence this first day became more honorable than the second; for the one was a restful reminder of God's work of creation; but its glorious antitype, this dawning from out of the darkness of the legal day, became more than a pause in God's great plan; it was the anticipatory note of joyful triumph which should always sound forth the perfect work of the redemption of the holy seed by their living Head. Paul, writing of his law righteousness, says, "Circumcised the eighth day." But here the whole body, with and in its Deliverer, arose a new creation, never more legally to be charged with sin. Later on in this same first day was celebrated the first communion in the kingdom of grace; typifying, to my thought, Christ and his church. There were but two present. (Jew and Gentile united in Christ.) It was on this wise: as these two traveled to a village called Emmaus, their thoughts and conversation ran on the hope that had filled them with expectation. Then Jesus himself drew near and went with them, though they knew him not; and when they had rehearsed their sorrows to him he expounded to them in all the Scriptures the things concerning himself. This resurrection sermon from Jesus begat in them such heart longings that they constrained him to abide with them, for the day was far spent. And as he sat at meat with them he took bread and blessed it, and gave it to them; their eyes were opened, and they knew him, and he vanished out of their sight. Filled with the joy of this feast, they returned to Jerusalem the same hour, found the eleven gathered, the doors being shut, for fear of the Jews. To them they rehearsed the wonderful event, when lo, Jesus stood in their midst, and said, "Peace be unto you." Then he calmed their fears, ate with them, farther instructed them, breathed on them, and said, "Receive ye the Holy Ghost," and gave them their great commission as witnesses for him. Thus we have three notable appearances on this first day. His next appearing is thus mentioned, John xx. 26, "And after eight days." This expression becomes simple when we remember that they wrote as Jews, their seventh day closing with the sunset hours. The first eighth day when he appeared would be counted in with this second eighth, or first day; the clause, "after eight days," showing that it was again past their day proper, but still in reality only the evening time, as we call it, though with them the next day had begun. Why they should be again gathered on this recurring evening we are not told. Surely it is not too much to say that they must have been guided by the Spirit, especially as unbelieving Thomas was with them. The fact that he had declared he would not believe unless he saw for himself, would indicate that some hope of another visit from their Lord drew them together. Whether or not, he stood again in their midst, giving Thomas all the evidence he desired. There is another break. Then we are told, "After these things Jesus shewed himself to his disciples at the sea of Tiberias." Conjecture may be indulged in by any one as to when this was, but no statement as to the day is given; still there is one item worthy of notice, John xxi. There were seven of them together, and it must have been evening again. Whatever caused their gathering, whether the hope of seeing Jesus, there seems in the reading to be a blank, which Peter fills by declaring, "I go a fishing;" and the others said, "We also go with thee." Were they all disappointed? However that may be, they toiled all that night, but caught nothing. But in the morning Jesus stood on the shore. What morning was this? Had they met as Jews on their Jewish Sabbath, or as Christians on the first day? However this may be, Jesus here under the figurative catching of fishes shows them the gospel field in which they were so soon to labor, and tests Peter's love by appointing him, in answer to the threefold inquiry, "Lovest thou me? as a feeder of his sheep. It seems like a repetition of his former lesson when he said to Peter, "From henceforth thou shalt catch men."—Luke

v. 10. John in recording this visit says, "This is now the third time Jesus shewed himself to his disciples." Plainly this gathering was classed with the other two, when Jesus so quietly appeared in their midst. Following the gospel of John we have the Acts of the Apostles. I may be wrong, but to me there seems quite a different phase of apostolic character set forth in the Acts to what appears in the Gospels. In the Acts they are brought before us as manifested sons of God, knowing in whom they had believed, and filled with the power of the Spirit; whereas they all seemed more or less to travel the cloudy land of uncertainty, up to that greater pouring out of the Holy Ghost promised by Jesus just before his ascension. The acts recorded are more or less all connected with service in the Master's vineyard, and consequently worthy patterns for the flock, who are exhorted to follow them, insofar as they followed Christ. In the first chapter we have the memorable ascension of our Lord, having been seen of the disciples forty days after his passion; that is, from his resurrection to his ascension. During this time he shewed himself alive at various times and places to his disciples, samples of which had been given in the Gospels. A little computation will show that his last assembling together with them, which took place at Jerusalem, was about forty-three days after his crucifixion, bringing us once more to the first day of the week as his ascension day. It was then he renewed their commission, and told them to tarry in Jerusalem until they should be endued with power from on high. He led them out to Bethany, and blessing them, was carried up out of their sight. O that it might be given us to share in some degree in that ascension blessing. Then how light would the passing trials of time appear. Following the command of their now glorified Lord without hesitation, the company of believers returned to the holy city, continuing with one accord in prayer and supplication. There they transacted their first regular church business by electing Matthias to fill the place from which Judas fell, and there on the day of Pentecost the fullness of blessing equipping them for the gospel kingdom was poured out. On this memorable day, after Peter's sermon, the embryo church might be said properly to be constituted, and no less than three thousand souls were added to the church after baptism. Truly the net was filled, but God drew it to the shore in the warmth of first love, so that sweet harmony and rejoicing prevailed. This early harvest day also was on the first day of the week, a very Pentecost indeed. Let any who doubt this turn up Scripture and count, as I did, and they will find it so. How long this sacred daily fellowship continued we know not; but we know that on the glorious mount of transfiguration Peter said, "Lord, it is good to be here." Yet he was not suffered to build the three tabernacles his soul desired, but to return again to the fellowship of sorrow and the ignominious death of the cross. In acts iv. 20 we find the return of Peter and John to their own company, with the relation of their examination by the high priests and persecution because of the miracle they had performed. Thus showing that though they continued to attend in the temple for public acts of worship, they had a spiritual house gathering of their own. Passing along we come to Acts xx. 7. The text reads, "And upon the first day of the week, when the disciples came together to break bread, Paul preached unto them, ready to depart on the morrow, and continued until midnight." If these words do not set forth that it was their custom so to meet, what do they imply? Also the preceding verse shows that Paul had been there seven days; yet this is the first public meeting we read of. Lastly, 1 Cor. xvi. 2. "Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come." Clearly the object of this exhortation is unity of purpose and order of action. If Paul merely desired each one to bear their share, the words, "on the first day," are just as needless as "on the Lord's day" in Revelation. He had already found it necessary to admonish this church on several points relative to their public gatherings; and "Let all things be done decently and in order" was the basis of his method; and this we see in God's plan of salvation; for while it is all of grace from first to last, that grace has fashioned every step and every purpose under the sun, to transpire in its set time and appointed form. As the body without the spirit is dead, so the spirit without a body would be only terrifying to us. Hence Jesus says to poor, doubting souls, "Handle me, and see that it is I myself." And David says, jubilant, "O taste and see that the Lord is gracious."

From these portions of New Testament Scripture it is conclusive to my mind that though no express command is recorded, the practice of early christians was to observe the first day of the week as a fitting memorial of the new dispensation to which they belonged. No other day could have been so fitting. The day of Christ's crucifixion would be to worship him as under the curse; the seventh, as having the legal stone of a worldly sanctuary still unremoved from his grave. The eighth sets him before us as the circumcised Son of the heavenly Jerusalem, rejoicing as a strong man to run his race of triumph over death and hell, till this his purchased bride shall all be folded in the pure chambers of his eternal love. Whether this eighth is one with "the Lord's day" of Rev. i. 10, each must decide for himself. To me it is the same, only associated with him whose blessed name is King of kings and Lord of lords.

A word on what is to my soul the Spirit's teaching on this controverted point. In Rom. xiv. 6 it reads, "He that regardeth the day, regardeth it unto the Lord; and he that regardeth not the day, to the Lord he doth not regard it." Gal. iv. 10, 11, reads, "Ye observe days, and months, and times, and years. I am afraid of you, lest I have bestowed upon you labor in vain." Finally, Col. ii. 16, 17, "Let no man therefore judge you in meat, or in drink, or in respect of a holy day, or of the new moon, or of the Sabbath days, which are a shadow of things to come; but the body is of Christ." We can hardly fail to see that in this ceremonial question the individual conscience is left to guide the believer according to the measure of light bestowed upon it. The body or substance of all shadows is that they in some points, like rays of light, lead our spirits quietly up to the Sun of righteousness himself. The purpose of all outward forms is for the building up of the children of God. Take the church itself; it is described as the house of God, the pillar (support) and ground (place of proclamation) of the truth. Now, God can save a soul without a visible or organized body, but it is not his way. He has planted a family on earth; he desires them to love each other; he has put in them a nature that directly it meets its fellow it leaps for joy. Now, how strengthening are these little gatherings in the wilderness. Not many forms now; the baptism, the Lord's supper, and to me, the Lord's day also; all days are pure and free for worship, but this with such heavenly associations, so universally known, so fitting an antitype, so kindly free, not as of constraint, but of love. I know that Babylon has no right to make laws for God's people, or turn his golden vessels into her treasury; but I am glad she holds this one, even if it be because of sin, by the power in her right hand. I want to keep it as clean as I can, and even when forced to break its letter, rejoice in its spirit. The trouble with the early church was, as now, the flesh will always want to serve the creature, and either do away with all forms, and pamper the body, or set up the form and make a Dagon of it. But Jesus says, "Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart; and ye shall find rest unto your souls."

MRS. J. STREET.

GHENT, Ky., June 12, 1895.

DEAR SISTER ANNA LAYTHAM:—Perhaps when you open the envelope which contains this letter you will feel astonished and somewhat mortified, since you will be in receipt of a letter that you will readily conclude will not interest you. Why I write to my dear brethren and sisters, which I frequently do, I cannot tell. I know that I love them too well to desire to worry or annoy them; and still I often find that they are troubled when they attempt to read my poor thoughts, written with a trembling hand, and very difficult to read. I am now in my eighty-fourth year, and know that a few more days will close my stay amidst these scenes of earthly sorrow, care and disappointment. Job said, "Man that is born of a woman is of few days and full of trouble." The many years that I have lived on the earth fully attests the truth of that language of that ancient servant of the most high God. When I call up in fond memory scenes, trials and afflictions through which I have passed I am made to say with the wise king of Israel, "Vanity of vanities, all is vanity." Surely the aged who are standing on the brink of the tomb, as I am, accept that language as true, so far as it applies to earth and earthly things. But when by grace divine they are enabled to see the King in his beauty, and behold the land that is very far off, mourning, sorrow and gloom are displaced, and a bright halo of glory surrounds them. Their glorious Lord has said to his saints, "Sing and rejoice, O daughter of Zion; for lo, I come, and I will dwell in the midst of thee." Then they can say with the psalmist, "I will both lay me down in peace and sleep; for thou, Lord, only makest me dwell in safety." By faith his saints behold him as their hiding place from the storms and as a covert from the tempest that sin and Satan cause to rage and howl around and about them. But amidst the cares, afflictions and trials through which the dear saints are called to pass, while in these low grounds of sin and sorrow, the psalmist has said to them, "They that trust in the Lord shall be as Mount Zion, which cannot be removed, but abideth forever. As the mountains are round about Jerusalem, so the Lord is round about his people, from henceforth even forever." And the Lord has said to them by the mouth of his servant Moses, "The eternal God is thy refuge, and underneath are the everlasting arms." In a fond and precious faith they in joy behold him as the King of saints, riding upon the heavens in their help, and in his excellency on the sky. Then in ecstacy of delight they cry out, "Great and marvelous are thy works, Lord God almighty. Just and true are thy ways, thou king of saints." It is thus they travel onward toward their eternal home, sometimes in joy, and sometimes in sorrow; but they know that their sorrows and afflictions are but as the small dust of the balance when compared with the sufferings and sorrows through which their Redeemer passed and endured when accomplishing their redemption from under the awful curse of a violated

CHURCH MEMBERSHIP.

SHOULD OLD SCHOOL BAPTISTS HOLD THEIR MEMBERSHIP IN THE CHURCHES WHERE THEY LIVE?

FROM various causes this question has been presented to our mind with more than usual force of late, and we feel like now presenting a few reflections upon it. The theme is not new to us. It has forced itself upon our attention more or less ever since we have been connected with the church. Several things have compelled us to form a very definite conclusion concerning it; and this conclusion we have held for a great many years. When it was first presented to our attention we did not think it so important as of late years it has seemed to us to be. Circumstances have led us to believe that it is well worth our close and candid consideration. We now desire to call attention to it, and give such conclusions and reasons as seem to us to be connected with it.

In direct response to the question above we would say that it seems to us that the answer must be in the affirmative. We suppose that very few, in fact, will directly deny or dispute this; yet in many instances of which we know brethren and sisters for various reasons are not members of the churches where they live. We think, however, that in most such cases, if the matter were once called up, and the many reasons why our membership should be in the churches where we live were presented, this state of things would no longer continue.

In most cases that we have known where our brethren have continued to hold their membership in the church with which they at first united, after having moved into the bounds of another church, the reason has been either that they have never thought about it, or they have a very natural feeling of preference for the old church which first received them and gave them the hand of fellowship, or their natural kindred still are members there, or the pastor who baptized them dislikes to have their name removed from the roll of his own church; or, as we have known in some cases, the reason is the less worthy one that they do not feel so much at home in the companionship of the brethren and sisters among whom they are now living; or, as we have once or twice known to be the case, the reason has been the still less excusable one of avoiding all responsibility in the travel of the church where they live. We have heard the reason urged, "O, there is not perfect harmony here, and there are prospects of trouble," &c.

Before considering the direct reasons why each one should hold their membership where their lot in life is cast, we wish to briefly show how little weight the things named above really ought to have. It is truly natural that each one should have a feeling of peculiar warmth for the pastor and members by whom they were first received. But it is only natural; it is not spiritual. It is a good kind of natural feeling in itself; but it ceases to be good if it gets in the way of our duty, or of the best good of the cause of God and truth. In such a case it must be condemned, as was the natural love which led Peter to say that the Master must not be crucified, and which called out from the lips of the Master the rebuke, "Get thee behind me, Satan: thou art an offense unto me: for thou savorest not the things that be of God, but those that be of men." No natural thing can be more lovely than love, that love which would hold its object free from all pain or suffering; but yet this love in Peter was rebuked, because it put him into the attitude of opposition to the will of God concerning Christ Jesus, his dear Son. So even this feeling of preference for the old church may not be according to the mind of God; and if not, then it also becomes an offense. It is an offense in that it is natural, and not of the Spirit of Christ. We ourselves have ever felt it our duty to have our name where we live, but we confess to a feeling of special love and nearness toward the church where our first membership was. We do not think this feeling of special love is blameworthy in itself; but if it should keep us from holding our membership where we live, then it would be blameworthy.

If the reason be because one's relatives or friends are still members of the old church, then it is still more manifestly after the flesh; and while we can and do sympathize with such natural feelings, yet we cannot think they should be yielded to in such a case as this. Would not the Savior's words, wherein he bids us forsake father, mother, brothers and sisters, and so on, apply here also? Even the dearest of natural ties have no place in the kingdom of heaven, and ought not to be regarded by the disciples of the meek and lowly one.

If the reason be that the pastor or other members of the church object for any reason whatever, then they are unwise; and while it is right to treat with deference the wishes of a beloved pastor, and of loving brethren, yet even their natural feelings must be in the end disregarded if they cannot be overcome.

If the reason be that they do not feel at home in the church where they now live, we would suggest that perhaps the chief reason for this is the very fact that they have not shown the brethren there the fellowship implied in bringing a letter and asking a home among them. A visitor cannot feel as much at home as a child in the family.

Or if the reason be the one which we named last, viz., that there is coldness and alienation, and the prospect of trouble in the church, we would reply, For what do we become members of the church? Is it that we may be dandled upon her knees, and pursue our journey on "flowery beds of ease?" or is it that we may endure hardness as good soldiers of Jesus Christ? Are we unwilling to share in the burdens and cares and crosses and trials of our brethren? Do we want to sit at the table, and eat and drink of the corn and the wine, and yet not share in the burden and heat of the labor? Do we desire to be with our brethren in their joy, and say, "O, we are not members here; their trouble does not concern us?" Of one thing we may all feel sure. If we are not willing to share in the sorrows, we shall not be permitted to enter into the joys of the church. The deepest, truest fellowship that we have ever known anything about has been the outgrowth of a mutual sharing of tribulation. Paul was with his brethren not only in their joys, but in their sorrows. It was in his heart to die with them, as well as to live with them. Is not such a spirit greatly to be desired by us all?

In still farther considering this subject we desire to call attention to a few more considerations of a general nature. Do not the Scriptures teach that the body of Christ is one? There are visible church organizations here and there, gathered together for the administration of the affairs of the kingdom of Christ, each in its own locality; but after all the people of God are one; the kingdom of Christ is one. No matter where the name of a brother may be held, when he united with that church he became a member of the one visible body of Christ. Wherever he meets the children of God he is one with them. It seems to us that the Spirit of Christ leads every one in whom it dwells to love the people of God everywhere. When any one moves from the company of one band of brethren to the neighborhood of another band of brethren, he has not left the body of Christ. If he be actuated by the Spirit of Christ, his heart will go out to the new company of Christ's people as it did formerly to his old companions. He will have to say, "I am still in my Father's house and among my brethren." He will feel that their interests are his, and that to him must fall a share in all their joys and sorrows. Above all, the love of Christ will still reign in his heart; and when this love reigns it always leads its possessor into a desire to first of all things follow the Lord in all his ways, and to obey all his commandments. Where the love of Christ reigns there will also be love for all his people, and a desire to strive together for the faith of the gospel.

It is still farther true that our God has seen fit, for the good of his people and the glory of his name, to put the children of God together in families, which are called churches. Had not such organizations been needful, it is sure that they would not have been ordained of God. His people are thus put together that the best interests of each one in his kingdom may be subserved; and the good of all is in his measure the good of each one. To these bodies of believers, known and recognized as the churches of Christ, is committed the administration of the affairs of his kingdom in their various localities. Our God holds his people to strict account in thus doing. Witness the epistles to all the churches, and the several addresses to the seven churches in Asia, in the opening chapters of Revelation. From this responsibility the churches cannot absolve themselves if they would. From his or her share of this responsibility no member can be absolved. All who live in the bounds of any church, and make its assemblies their place of meeting, must be to a degree responsible to God for what is done there. It is utterly vain to say that we are in no degree responsible because our membership is not there. If we have the love of God reigning in our hearts we shall feel that we are concerned in all that concerns the church where we live, whether our name is there or not; yet if our name be not there we must necessarily feel less free to act and speak as we might deem right. This is one reason why our membership should be where we live.

Again, we need the watchcare of our brethren. It is manifest that a church a hundred miles or more away cannot see after us as can the church where we live. If we do wrong, that wrong must be carried to the knowledge of a people at a distance before it can be settled, either by confession and forgiveness or by exclusion. Thus two bodies of people are troubled needlessly. We say needlessly, for if our membership were where we live, then only the brethren there would need to know about it. Surely this in itself is a sufficient reason why our membership should be where we live.

Again, if our membership is not with the church where we live there will be, there must be, a divided interest in us, which too often results in no interest at all. While the people of God will rejoice in the peace and prosperity of Zion everywhere, yet it is manifest that our own labor to that end must always be mainly where we live. Is it not far better, and far more likely that we shall labor to that end right where our home is, if our membership be there? Not only is this true, it seems to us, but while we thus show but a half-hearted interest among the people with whom we live, we naturally infect them, for no one lives to himself in the kingdom of God; and our coldness, as regards the interests of the church by our side, can but have a bad effect in every way, both as regards ourselves and also our brethren. We are too far away to share in the cares and burdens, the comforts and joys, of the church where we retain our membership, and we do not share these things where we live; and so we miss the highest privileges of the Lord's house for ourselves, and rob our brethren of what they have a right to expect from us. Let our membership be where we live, or at the church where we can best attend the meetings; and then let us each remember that we have obligations resting upon us in the house of God from which we cannot free ourselves if we would, and ought not if we would.

These are some of the reflections which have had weight with us, and we leave them for the consideration of our brethren, trusting that they will do good, and not harm, in the churches, and redound to the glory of God.

DISCONTINUANCE OF ONE DOLLAR SUBSCRIPTIONS.

AFTER September first, 1895, we shall be obliged to discontinue our terms of one dollar a year for new subscribers. As frequently stated, our object in making these terms was to induce those who were not acquainted with the paper to take it the first year on trial at one dollar, on the same principle that we send sample copies free. Experience has taught us, however, that no matter how well the subscribers may be pleased with the paper, if they get it for one dollar the first year, they are less willing to pay the full price for a continuance of their subscriptions than if they had not had it the trial year at a reduced rate. Another serious difficulty that we have met with is that many old subscribers discontinue the paper in their own name, and have another name sent on for them as a new subscriber, while practically it is one and the same subscription. This of course thwarts the whole design we had in making the "Extraordinary Offer;" therefore we are obliged to discontinue it after the first day of next month.

MINUTES.

AS THE time for the fall associations is drawing near, we wish to call the attention of our brethren to the fact that any patronage they can give us by way of printing their Minutes will be especially appreciated at present. Our long experience in the business has, we think, particularly qualified us for this work; and as it costs but a few cents to mail the manuscript to us, we hope they will remember us when they have the work ready.

THE CHRISTIAN'S RULE.

"AND as many as walk according to this rule, peace be on them, and mercy, and upon the Israel of God."—Gal. vi. 16.

In this portion of Scripture we have not only the divinely instituted rule by which to measure and regulate our own conduct, but also a limitation imposed for the restriction of our fellowship and bowels of compassion or mercy in a spiritual or christian point of view. There were in the apostles' days many unruly and vain talkers, and those loquacious chatter-boxes were then, as now, principally of the work-mongrel order, especially of the circumcision. They were not condemned, however, for talking merely, nor even for much talking, but because they were governed in their talk by feelings and impulses, and carnal reason and carnal passions, and did not regulate their religious communications by the divine rule given in the New Testament; and hence the deception and mischievous effect of their conversation. Unruly talkers and deceivers are not to be detected by the sound of their voices, nor the length of their faces; for they, having no certain rule, are sometimes loud and stubborn, and then anon with much fair speech they force their victims. Their faces may be disfigured and drawn out to any length and distorted to any shape that may to them seem best calculated to answer their deceptive purposes. The wise man has told us that they will wink with the eye, speak with their feet, and teach with their fingers, while they have frowardness in their hearts.—Prov. vi. 13. "He shutteth his eyes to devise froward things; moving his lips, he bringeth evil to pass."—Prov. xvi. 30. And the inspired psalmist speaks of those whose words are smoother than butter. Certainly it is unsafe to trust to the impressions which their words of seduction and hypocrisy are calculated to make on our feelings, but rather rein them up to the infallible rule. Test them by the standard of unerring truth. There is a rule for talking as well as for walking. Let your yea be yea, and your nay nay; for whatsoever cometh more is evil. They that feared the Lord spake often one to another; but, in the fear of the Lord a reverence is always felt for his word; "they that fear the Lord tremble at his word."

The rule insisted on by the apostle in our text is the gospel rule. By it we are to walk, and talk, and judge. It is like all righteous rules, an exact measure, a true standard—it is just so much, and no more. It is a spiritual rule, for they that conform to it walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit. The flesh, in distinction from the Spirit, is to be known by its works; for the works of the flesh are manifest, which are these, adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, wrath, strife, sedition, heresies, envyings, murders, drunkenness, revelings, and such like; and the divine rule provides that they who do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God. The rule expels them from the fellowship of the saints, and from the privileges of citizenship in the church of Christ. But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness (do not forget that), temperance: against such there is no law No rule to condemn these productions of the Spirit. These fruits are unto holiness, and the end everlasting life. They are in harmony with the heavenly rule. A child of God may indeed be overtaken in a fault, a departure in practice from this rule, and in such a case it is presumed that his heart still adheres to the rule, and he needs the kindly office of his steadfast brethren. Ye who are spiritual restore such a one in the spirit of meekness, considering thyself, lest thou also be tempted. Bear one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ. For if a man think himself to be something, when he is nothing, he deceiveth himself. This divine, unerring rule leads the saints to glory only in the cross of Christ, by whom the world is crucified to them, and they to the world; for in Christ Jesus neither circumcision availeth anything, nor uncircumcision, but a new creature. "And as many as walk according to this rule." Making it their polar star, their standard, the man of their counsel, and the compass by which all their movements are guided. So many will walk circumspectly, not as fools, but as wise, and on them the apostolic benediction of our text will rest, "Peace be on them, and mercy." But the rule is inflexible, and will allow the orderly sons of Zion to make no peace with any others. "Peace be on them;" but we are not allowed to make a treaty of peace with any who disrespect or transgress the rule; and if we cry, "Peace! peace!" where our God has not spoken peace in his word, which is our rule, then we also ourselves become unruly, and partakers of the iniquities of others. Neither for peace nor for mercy have we a right to fellowship the disorderly or the unruly. Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them. Mark them who cause divisions contrary to the doctrine—contrary to the rule, and have no company with them. And "if any come unto you [contrary to this rule], and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed; for he that biddeth him God speed is a partaker of his evil deeds."—2 John 10.

THE RELIGION OF CHRIST NOT A SCIENCE.

"AND the Jews marveled, saying, How knoweth this man letters, having never learned?"—John vii. 15.

Of all the numerous systems and theories of religion with which the world is deluged, we know none save the religion of our Lord Jesus Christ that cannot be comprehended by the natural intellect of man, by the aid of education. All the cunningly devised fables of heathen mythology, all the delusions of the pagans, papists and protestants of ancient and modern times, have been and now are taught and learned in the schools of men. No supernatural qualifications were required in heathen mythology to enable the pupil to learn the mysteries of their gods; nor is there now required in any of the religions named above any such qualifications to make the student a proficient in the popular divinity of the various classes of worldly religionists.

The religion of the Jews, although divinely instituted and authoritatively enjoined upon the children of Israel under the old dispensation, differs widely from the religion of Jesus in this respect; for it was a religion of ceremonies, figures and shadows, adapted to the fleshly state of the sons of Abraham, requiring their males to be circumcised, and enjoining on them the law of carnal commandments until the time of reformation, or until the Messiah should come. They worshiped in a worldly sanctuary, and were required in their religious service to perform carnal ordinances. Their laws and all that belonged to their religious instruction was by an order from God himself to be taught, as lessons of human science are taught, by parents and preceptors to the rising generations. No grace was required to entitle the male Israelitish infant to the rite of circumcision, or to any of the privileges that his fleshly birth entitled him to. If he were of the tribe of Levi, and of the family of Aaron, perfect in his mental and physical parts, he was eligible to the priesthood, although like most of the Jewish priesthood he may have been an utter stranger to a work of the Holy Spirit in regeneration.

The kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ is a spiritual kingdom, totally invisible to the world. Except a man be born again he cannot see it: except he be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into it. As the kingdom of Christ is spiritual, so are all its appurtenances, its laws, ordinances, doctrine, promises, munitions, gifts and provisions; and being spiritual, the unregenerate man, however learned, cannot know them. For "the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned." Indeed the invisibility of the church of God is one of her most distinguishing characteristics. In no other point does she differ more widely from all other churches, kingdoms or communities; nor in any other particular does her religion differ more from that of all other religionists, than in this very discriminating peculiarity.

For this distinguishing mark she is indebted alone to the wisdom and decree of her sovereign God. He has hidden these things from the wise and prudent, and revealed them to babes, because so it seemed good in his sight. The hiding of these things from the one class, as well as the revelation of them to the other, is equally provided for in the purpose and pleasure of the unchanging God. "Israel hath not obtained that which he seeketh for; but the election hath obtained it, and the rest were blinded." Not blinded for the want of learned teachers to instruct them; for Moses was read to them in their synagogues every Sabbath day; nor for the want of missionaries, mission funds or missionary zeal; for in that business they were charged by our Savior with compassing sea and land to make converts to their religion. By what power then were they blinded? Allow the apostle to reply in the next verse to that quoted above. "According as it is written, God hath given them the spirit of slumber, eyes that they should not see, and ears that they should not hear unto this day. And David saith, Let their table be made a snare, and a trap, and a stumbling-block, and a recompense unto them; let their eyes be darkened, that they may not see, and bow down their back always." This kingdom, in all its parts, is hidden from the scrutiny of all unregenerate human beings. None of the princes or rulers of this world knew the King; for if they had known him, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory. The life of all the subjects of this kingdom is hid with Christ in God; they dwell in the secret place of the Almighty, and abide under his shadow. And because they are not of the world, therefore the world knoweth them not, for the world knew him (Christ) not. "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him:" and all the things of the kingdom are prepared of God for them that love him; to whom he says, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." All these prepared things have always been so completely hidden from the world that no mortal eye has seen nor mortal ear heard; hence it is certain that they can only be known by the immediate revelation of God. And thus the apostle testifies, "But God hath revealed them to us." Not by our ministers, their preaching, or by our tracts, or school-books, nor even by our Bibles. O no. By none of these, nor by all of them put together, has any poor, unregenerate sinner since time began ever been brought to the knowledge of the things of the kingdom, or things of his Spirit. The natural man, as we have proved, cannot know them, because they are spiritually discerned. "But God hath revealed them to us by his Spirit." God hath revealed these things by his Spirit unto babes, which he has hidden from the wise and prudent. "The secret of the Lord is with them that fear him; and he will shew unto them his covenant."—Psa. xxv. 14. And in shewing them his covenant, he shews them what things the New Covenant contains for them. "Jesus therefore answered, and said unto them, Murmur not among yourselves. No man can come to me, except the Father which hath sent me draw him; and I will raise him up at the last day. It is written in the prophets, And they shall be all taught of God. Every man therefore that hath heard, and hath learned of the Father, cometh unto me." Hence we see that the words of Jesus to Peter are also applicable to all that have heard and learned of the Father. "Blessed art thou, Simon barjona; for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven." No truth is more clearly recorded in the Scriptures than that of the inability of man, short of the direct, immediate and independent revelation of God himself, to either know Christ or any of the things of the Spirit of God; yet, perhaps no truth is less regarded by the modern teachers of the age. It is virtually assumed, as the very basis of all Missionary, Tract, Sabbath and Theological School operations of the present age, that God himself cannot or will not regenerate sinners unless the way be prepared for him by some human instrumentality. That the preaching of the gospel, or the circulation of tracts, or instructions of Sunday schools, or the circulation of Bibles, can, must and does first make some impression on the dead sinner, preparatory to his being quickened by the life-giving Spirit of God. It is even assumed by some theologians of our day that an education or knowledge of letters is indispensable to salvation.

"The Jews marveled, saying, How knoweth this man letters, having never learned?" nor has the marvel ceased to this day. How Peter and John could preach as they did without a classic education could only be accounted for by the fact that they had been with Jesus. And still the wonder grows, for down to the present day all fashionable religionists regard education as a key to the mysteries of the kingdom of God. Even Baptists, or rather those who have clandestinely assumed the name, regard it as a very essential preparation for the work of the gospel ministry. The Baptists of all preceding ages, since the days of the apostles, until the present century, have regarded the wisdom of this world as being foolishness with God; and however highly they valued human learning, to qualify men for usefulness in this world, and to give them an understanding of the things of this world, they have ever contended that it cannot enlighten the natural understanding of mankind in regard to the things of the kingdom, which God has hidden from the wise, and which he has and does reveal to his children by his Spirit. Neither the Jews nor the heathen philosophers of ancient, nor the religious philosophers of the present time, can discover any absurdity in the idea that Christ should have come into this world to learn from the wise men of the earth what message they would have him communicate to them in his Father's name. With modern theologians now it is thought perfectly consistent that men professing to be sent to men with a message from God, should learn of those very men unto whom they profess to be sent what message they are to deliver, and how, and when, and where, and to whom, and for how much lucre they shall deliver it. Is it God's message they bring when they have learned their doctrine in the schools of men? Are they his ministers who are sent of men? Do men who come with collegiate diplomas, in the excellency of speech which man's wisdom teaches, show, like Peter and John, that they have been with Jesus? A man of erudition, with ordinary natural talent, may make an impressive speech, and with fair words he may beguile the simple, without a spark of grace; but men unlearned and rude must be divinely taught and sustained if they can feed the flock of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood.

law. He said, "The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests; but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head." "He was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities, the chastisement of our peace was upon him, and by his stripes we are healed." Then, dear sister, why should we murmur and complain? We know that it was in love and pity he suffered, bearing the cross and despising the shame, that he might bring in everlasting righteousness and redemption to his chosen people. But how often do the dear saints mourn because of the vacant seats in their solemn assemblies; yet they should remember that he hath said to them, "Fear not little flock; it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." O what a gift! In it is embraced the life that now is, and also that which is to come, with all its seraphic glories. In that gift to his people is embraced the glorious triumph over death and the grave, when this mortal must put on immortality, and this corruptible must put on incorruption. Then why, dear sister, should we repine when age overtakes us in our earthly pilgrimage, and pains rack our mortal bodies, and the shadows of the tomb are obscuring our pathway and gathering all around us? We know that our glorious Lord passed through the sorrows of Gethsemane, and suffered the tortures of Calvary, and went down into the darkness of the tomb; but we also know that he arose a mighty conqueror from that tomb, and brought life and immortality to light through the gospel. That immortality was secured by his resurrection to all his redeemed, in which you, dear sister, and this poor and afflicted one who now writes you, if we are among the blessed children of God, will be enrobed throughout eternity. Then let us run with patience the race set before us, ever looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith, to whose great and wondrous name be all the glory.

My wife and I are both in feeble health and have but little hope of ever meeting again on earth the dear saints in their solemn assemblies. Please tender to all the dear brethren and sisters at May's Lick our warmest christian love and salutation, and say to them that we most earnestly desire that they remember us in their solemn invocations at the throne of grace, that our departure may be in peace, in joy, and in the triumphs of a precious faith. My wife joins in love to you all. Please write us when you have leisure, and pardon me if you think I have erred in giving to you on paper some of my feeble thoughts upon the greatest of subjects, the religion of our dear Redeemer, and believe me affectionately yours in the sweet and precious bonds of abiding faith and hope,

H. COX.

OPELIKA, Ala., July 11, 1895.

EDITORS OF THE SIGNS—DEAR BRETHREN:—The subject of faith has been one of interest to me, and in the eleventh chapter of Hebrews we have the subject defined and gloriously illustrated as to its nature, effects and glorious triumph, accomplishing the same in all the varied conditions of the elect of God as manifested in time. There are no conditions nor circumstances out of which God's people have not been delivered by the glorious power of faith. The work of faith and labor of love is referred to in the Scriptures. The apostle says that "faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." This is a simple definition which is opened up to the children of God. While all the vocabularies of men might be exhausted to find a definition, yet to the saint in his experience, by the revelation of the Spirit and faith itself, he understands what faith is in its exercise in him as an heir of grace, a child of heaven, of the high descent of the royal throne of God. That relation brings ability to understand things that are mystical otherwise. Faith is a principle, an abiding principle, like its author, and is the gift of God specially to the elect of God. The apostle says, "All men have not faith;" and, "Without faith it is impossible to please God." If I should undertake to tell about this faith, like the apostle I would have to say that time would fail me to to tell of Gideon, and of Barak, and of Samson, and of Jephthah, and of the prophets. But the thought of faith is wonderful in its effects as exhibited in the heirs of grace. Jesus said, "If ye have faith as a grain of mustard seed, ye shall say to this mountain, Be removed, and it shall be so." How comforting is this. Look at the chains which tied Moses to the throne of Pharaoh, and the great mountains of difficulties which lay in his way to the deliverance; and yet so wonderful was the working of this principle of faith in him that he refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter, and chose rather to suffer affliction with the people of God rather than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season. Faith seems always to be coupled with love, fear and wisdom; and it works by love, purifies the heart, and overcomes the world. Faith in the Syrophenician woman was equally as marvelous, for the mountain of Jewish prejudice and Gentile exclusion was between her and Jesus, and was removed by faith. How discouraging the words of Jesus as to her being esteemed a dog, who came to the table of the children; but faith could take no denial, and she admits the fact, and desires to be fed. She hungered and thirsted after righteousness, and by faith she found it. So the same marvelous faith was exhibited in the centurion, and he was humbled under its mighty working; and by it he showed the highness of Jesus, its author. He felt he was not worthy that this Captain of salvation and King of glory should come under his roof, but said, "Speak the word, and my servant shall be healed." This marvelous principle showed to Abel a proper sacrifice that would be acceptable with God, and he offered a lamb, a fit emblem of innocence and purity, and as viewing the Lamb slain he is accepted in him, and worships in spirit and in truth, and approaches God in the only way he can be approached. We are told that there is one Lord, one faith, and one baptism; so that one principle moved Abel, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Enoch, Moses and Elijah, and the apostles of our Lord Jesus. In the saints in the ages past, as well as the saints of to-day, the same principle produces, the same effects, whether it is in the first or last century. We cry, as did the disciples, "Lord, increase our faith; help our unbelief." O! the distrust which disturbs our breasts, and causes us so much trouble; trusting in an arm of flesh, in money, and in horses and chariots. O that we could all say, and say it truly, Some trust in horses, and some in chariots; but we will trust in the Lord.

Yours in hope,

W. LIVELY.

NOTICES.

WILL you notice in a few numbers of the SIGNS that "Reminiscences and Letters of Mary Parker" is now reduced to sixty cents, sent by mail post-paid? There are a few hundred copies left on my hands, and I wish to dispose of them, and so I give the friends an opportunity to get a most interesting book at half-price.

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE.

TO MOST of our readers the above mentioned book is too well known to need any introduction or a description by us. While many of the Bibles have a Concordance appended, they are generally so condensed or abridged as to be of little or no use. Cruden's Complete Concordance, however, enables one to readily turn to any passage of Scripture of which they can call to mind two or three words, and in our opinion is the most complete and convenient as a reference book of any published. In addition, it contains many other aids in studying the Bible, as may be seen by reference to advertisement on last page. Remember, both the books there mentioned are CRUDEN'S COMPLETE.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

DIED—Near Locktown, N. J., March 12th, 1895, Miss Mary A. Sutton, aged 76 years.

Ever since my first visiting the Kingwood Church, many years ago, the subject of this notice was a constant attendant at all the appointments of the church, and was a sincere friend to the Old School Baptists and the doctrine held by them; and although not a member of the visible body, yet she was held in the fellowship of the church as one born of God, and who knew by sweet experience the joy of God's salvation. She was kindly cared for by her niece and husband, sister Amy Steenebaugh, with whom she had lived several years. She had been for many years a subscriber for the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, and was a careful reader of the same.

Her funeral was attended at Locktown by the writer on March 16th, when many relatives and friends met and followed her to her last earthly resting place. May the Lord bless this dispensation of his will to friends and relatives, that they may be taught in this that the Lord he is God.

B. BUNDY.

OTEGO, N. Y., July 25, 1895.

DIED—June 30th, 1895, at the resideace of her brother, Capt. Marcus Hicks, of Dorchester, Westmoreland Co., N. B., Theresa Hicks, aged 48 years, the beloved daughter of the late Charles and Eliza Hicks, who were highly esteemed members of the church of Christ here. Of a family of thirteen children, six sons and one daughter, Mrs. Amos Harris, survive to mourn the departed. Her disease was cancer of the stomach, from which she suffered severely at times, but was wonderfully patient through all her illness. Three weeks before her death I visited her, and conversed with her on the subject of entering into eternity. I saw that her mind was much exercised on the things of God. She said she had a hope in Christ, and the great desire of her heart was that the Lord would increase her faith, that she might enjoy more assurance. She was a woman very highly esteemed by all her acquaintances, and the large attendance at her funeral was evidence of it.

It was the writer's privilege to try to speak a few words of comfort and consolation to the sorrowing relatives and friends from John xi. 26.

ALEX. BARNETT.

EDGETT'S LANDING, N. B., July 27, 1895.

DIED—Mrs. M. E. Sissel, on Friday evening, July 26th, 1895, at the home of her husband, James Sissel, in Kansas, Edgar Co., Ill., after a prolonged and terrible suffering with internal cancer.

The subject of this notice was born in Ohio, June 30th, 1846, being 49 years and 26 days old at death. She was born again, or born of the Spirit, about the year 1861, and about two years later united with the Predestinarian Baptist Church called Nettle Creek, being baptized by Elder Samuel Williams. About twenty-five years ago she moved with her father, our dear old brother, Isaac Kite, to the vicinity in which she has lived since to the date of her death. It can truthfully be said of her that she adorned the doctrine of God our Savior by an upright walk and godly conversation. It was the sad (though sometimes made pleasant by her words) duty of the writer of this, in company with his companion, to visit her during her protracted suffering. She was at all times very patient, the Lord filling her heart with his grace, giving the spirit of praise during all her suffering. The writer and other brethren frequently held prayer and speaking services at her humble abode during her illness, she at times, when strength was sufficient, joining in the singing. On one occasion specially she entered fully into the praise while the good old hymn was being sung which commences,

"Poor and afflicted, Lord, are thine,
Among the great unfit to shine," &c.

Several months before her death she wrote a note to the writer of this, requesting him to preach her funeral. She sealed up the note and laid it away, telling one of her sisters who was then with her where she could find it at her death. It was handed to me on the day she died, and upon opening it full directions were found for the conducting of the funeral services. She had selected the words recorded in John iii. 8. She had also selected three hymns to be used on the occasion, Nos. 262, 282 and 280, of Goble's little book.

In compliance with her request I spoke to a very large collection of sorrowing relatives and friends, in a beautiful grove in the public park of our town, on Sunday, July 28th, Elder S. H. Moffett taking part in the service, as requested by the departed sister. After the service was closed her body was laid away in the city cemetery to await the resurrection from the tomb.

ASSOCIATIONAL.

THE Roxbury Association of Primitive or Predestinarian Baptists is appointed to be held with the Olive & Hurley Church, in Olive, Ulster Co., N. Y., on the first Wednesday and Thursday in September, 1895.

Those coming from the east will be met at Olive Branch, and those from the west at Shokan and Brown's. We extend a cordial invitation to brethren, sisters and friends to meet with us, especially ministering brethren.

By order of the church.

ALVAH BOGART, Clerk.

THE Siloam Association of Regular Predestinarian Baptists of Oregon will be held (the Lord willing) with the church called New Hope, in Washington Co., Oregon, at brother Levi Martin's house, near Dilley, Oregon, commencing on Friday before the second Sunday in September, 1895, and continuing the two following days.

Those coming by rail will be met at Dilley on Thursday by teams and conveyed to places of entertainment. All lovers of the truth are invited to attend.

W. S. MATTHEWS, Mod.

N. J. SHANKS, Clerk.

THE Oconee Baptist Association is to be held this fall with the church at Rutledge, Morgan Co., Ga., and is to commence on Tuesday after the second Sunday in October, instead of Saturday before, and continue three days.

Rutledge is on the Georgia R. R., and brethren coming by rail can come either way on Monday, and can come down from Atlanta on Tuesday morning. Ministering brethren especially invited. Inquire for W. F. Streeter, Warren Ivy or Mr. Studard.

F. M. McLEROY, Mod.

WE desire to say to the readers of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES in Texas or elsewhere who may be interested that the Fellowship Association of Primitive or Predestinarian Baptists is appointed to be held with the Fellowship Church, Upshur Co., Texas, ten miles northwest of Longview, and twelve miles southeast of Gilmer, to begin on Friday before the second Sunday in September, 1895.

Visitors will be met at Longview on Thursday before. If any should wish to come to Gilmer by rail they should notify us by letter or card. We extend a cordial invitation to brethren, sisters and friends. Those who have read (and who feel interested in the matter) charges against us, published some time in October last, would do well to come among us and see for themselves as to the truth of the statements, the greater portion of which we deny, as having no foundation whatever in fact.

H. B. JONES, Clerk.

THE Spoon River Association of Regular Baptists will be held with the New Hope Church, in Greenbush, Warren Co., Ill., commencing on Wednesday before the first Sunday in September, 1895, at 10 o'clock a. m., and continuing the two following days, the same being August 28th, 29th and 30th.

Those wishing to attend, and coming from the west, will be met at Roseville, on the Rock Island Branch of the C., B. & Q. R. R. Those coming from the north, south and east will be met at St. Augustine and Avon, on the Quincy Branch of the C., B. & Q. R. R., on Tuesday evening before the meeting. The brethren are cordially invited to attend, especially ministering brethren.

S. H. HUMPHREY, Clerk.

THE Old School Baptist Conference of Maine will be held, the Lord willing, with the Old School Baptist Church in North Berwick, York Co., Maine, commencing on Friday, August 30th, 1895, and continuing three days.

We shall gladly welcome all who love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity, and especially brethren in the ministry who feel it in their hearts to visit us. Those who come will be met at the North Berwick R. R. depot on Thursday before the time appointed for our yearly conference.

FRED. W. KEENE.

THE Des Moines River Association of Regular Predestinarian Baptists will convene with the Cedar Creek Church, ten miles northeast of Ottumwa, in Wapello Co., Iowa, on Friday before the third Sunday in August, at 10 o'clock a. m., and continue three days, being the 16th, 17th and 18th days of August.

The church-house is within one hundred yards of the railway station at Highland Center, on the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul R. R., and all will stop at the above station. Those coming from the east or west will have to change at Ottumwa or Hedrick. A cordial invitation is extended to all brethren, and ministers especially.

R. SPEIRS, Mod.
M. W. BYRAM, Clerk.

YEARLY MEETINGS.

A YEARLY meeting is appointed to be held with the Harford Church, Harford Co., Md., commencing on Saturday before the first Sunday in September, 1895, at ten o'clock a. m., to continue two days.

Those coming by way of Baltimore will take the train at the North Avenue station, B. & L., or the Narrow Gauge R. R. at four o'clock p. m. on Friday before, for Long Green or Forest Hill. A cordial invitation is extended to lovers of the truth, especially ministering brethren.

NATHAN GRAFTON, Clerk.

A YEARLY meeting is expected to be held with the church at Bryn Zion, at the usual time, the third Sunday in August, Saturday included. A cordial invitation is extended to friends abroad to visit us and enjoy a good meeting with us.

Those coming by rail from the southward will please get tickets to Clayton. Those coming from the northward had better get their tickets to Kenton, changing cars at Clayton. The Mail trains both ways on Saturday morning will be the proper trains, and friends will be met and cared for. The north-bound train reaches Clayton at 10 a. m. The hour for meeting on Saturday is 2 p. m.

B. L. BEEBE, Middletown, N. Y.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SON, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date. This date denotes the time at which your subscription expires; and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

PICTORIAL HISTORY

OF THE

UNITED STATES.

By James D. McCabe.

This work is no dry mass of details—no bombastic effort to inflame the national pride, but a vivid and brilliant narrative of the events of our history, from the discovery of the American Continent down to the present time. It gives a most interesting account of the Indians of North America, from the time of the coming of the white men. The voyages of Columbus and explorations and discoveries of the different nations of Europe are related with graphic power. Every step of our colonial history is traced with patient fidelity, and the sources of those noble and, we trust, enduring institutions, which have made our country free and great, are shown with remarkable clearness. Then follows a clear and succinct account of our great Struggle for Independence, and the establishment of the Federal Union—the events of our career from the close of the Revolution to the administration of Harrison.

The work is printed from plain, new type, on fine calendered paper, and comprised in one octavo volume of 960 pages. It is splendidly embellished with nearly 500 fine engravings, embracing battles and other historical scenes, portraits of distinguished men, views of our principal cities, &c., &c.

Bound in Fine Silk Cloth, Plain Edges, $2.00, Post-paid.

POETRY.

REVELATION XV. 3.

"Great and marvelous are thy works, Lord God Almighty."

ETERNALLY did God foreknow
The number of his sons,
The children that should heir his throne,
His loved and chosen ones.

Whom he foreknew, them did he call,
And also justified;
Raised in the likeness of his Son,
They shall be satisfied.

When morning stars together sang
His love did them embrace;
Ere they had sinned, or Adam fell,
They were the heirs of grace.

They were with him when he rejoiced
Before his Father's face;
In vital union with the Lamb,
Which devils can't erase.

A body was prepared for him;
Behold, what wondrous love!
That he should drink the bitter cup,
And leave his home above.

Born in a manger! O, my soul,
See what humility!
That he who holds the ponderous earth
Such lowliness should see.

God did determine and decree
Men should with wicked hands
The Lord of life and glory slay,
To pay the law's demands.

We were with him when on the cross,
With him down in the tomb,
With him arose and left the dead,
And triumphed o'er the gloom.

He set his seal, he knows them all,
Freed from the law's demands;
They are engraved upon his heart,
And graven on his hands.

Their very hairs are numbered all,
He knows their every thought;
He finds them in a wilderness,
And comes to them unsought.

His is the power; there's none can thwart
His purpose and decrees.
He says, "I will in heaven and earth
Do whatsoe'er I please."

The star-gemm'd curtain of the sky
He spreads o'er land and sea;
And the fair moon her course pursues
By his all-wise decree.

The glorious sun, the king of day,
The flowers that deck the hills,
All nature moves at his command,
And executes his will.

The awful monsters of the deep,
That spout the waters high;
At his command they hide with fear,
Sink out of sight and die.

His is the kingdom; he doth reign;
His subjects him adore;
They crown him King and Lord of all,
Now and forevermore.

His is the glory; let us bow,
To him all glory give;
We shall through vast eternity
With him forever live.

MRS. H. TUTTLE.

ADRIAN, Michigan.

CORRESPONDENCE.

NORTH BERWICK, Maine.

DEAR SISTER IN CHRIST JESUS OUR LORD:—Upon arriving home I read your letter with heart-felt pleasure, because it contained those things in which our fellowship one with another and with the church of God consists; that is, the knowledge of ourselves as poor, helpless sinners, and by divine teaching being drawn forth unto the everlasting God, in sighs and longings to be like him, and to taste that he is good and gracious. The religion of Jesus Christ is a divine mystery! The religions of the world are no mystery, except that they have their origin and are held in the embraces of the "mystery of iniquity." Carnal religion is all reasonable to the natural man. Indeed men glory in what they term "the reasonableness of their religion." But "great is the mystery of godliness. Vast and deep, unsearchable, are the ways of God therein. Here the whole Diety is known. The attributes of the Lord of hosts shine forth so harmoniously, gloriously, that to eternity the ransomed host will never become weary in their delightful contemplations of the God of our salvation. "The things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God." All things that pertain unto life and godliness are so beyond what is merely natural that it is no marvel that the world understands them not, or that even the dear children of God fail to comprehend with their natural powers the things of the Spirit. It is only by divine teaching, by the revelation of the Spirit, by the mind of Christ that is in us, that we in any measure apprehend the gracious ways of God. Wonderful and glorious are his dealings with the children of men. Our own internal secret life is a continual mystery. "Lord, what a riddle is my soul." This has been my language most of the time since I have had a hope in the Savior. Our life is a continual panorama of paradoxes. Look how the apostle Paul expresses it, 2 Cor. iv. 7–11; vi. 9, 10, "As having nothing, and yet possessing all things." Taking an inventory of all our possessions in nature, weighed in the balances of the sanctuary, the value of the whole sum is less than nothing and vanity. The Scripture saith, "Verily every man at his best state is altogether vanity. Self-righteous professors do not bow to this statement, but are vainly puffed up in their fleshly minds. But, my dear sister, is it any wonder that you feel this to be true, and bow before the throne of the high and holy One that inhabiteth eternity, confessing your nothingness? "All nations are counted unto him less than nothing and vanity." The Holy Spirit has taught you (and I trust he has taught me also) what no creature can teach another, that we are poor sinners, just nothing. Our God hath chosen and called the things that are not, to bring to naught things that are.—1 Cor. i. 28. Were you found parading yourself as something, with your own fancied goodness, how that sweet fellowship, as poor sinners believing alone for salvation in the blood of the Lamb, subsisting between you and the church of Christ, would be marred. "If a man thinketh himself to be something when he is nothing, he deceiveth himself." Poor, and empty, and sinful, not one good thing, not one good thought, we ever to Jehovah brought. He knows our frame, he remembers we are dust. Yet, O how matchless is his grace, how surpassing is his love, in bringing salvation to such worthless worms.

By nature how far off from God,
Depraved and vile, are we;
Yet in Emmanuel's righteousness
We hope his face to see.

Poor, empty, naked, vile, we nothing can bring to Jehovah our King, our souls to reconcile.

O! this is the work of our Savior and Friend,
Whose love from eternity never will end;
With his blood he hath cleansed us, from sin we are free;
My fair one, he cries, there is no spot in thee.

It is in our beloved Redeemer that we possess all things. "For all things are yours; whether Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas, or the world, or life, or death, or things present, or things to come; all are yours; and ye are Christ's; and Christ is God's." —1 Cor. iii. 21–23. Christ's unsearchable riches supplies all our needs. We are so enriched in him that we possess more than all this world could afford us. "He of God is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption." Earthly riches and possessions tarnish, fade, and pass away; but in Christ, the wisdom of God, we have "durable riches and righteousness."—Prov. viii. 18. Our treasure is immense in Christ Jesus our heavenly Husband and King. God our Father hath made us joint heirs with Christ. His joy and glory all the saints shall share. Where he is, there are we predestinated to be also. Though often as beggars we plod along in our pilgrimage, yet our enthronement day will come, when in eternal glory Christ shall seat us at his own right hand, and we shall reign forever with him, far above all principality and power. Sin hath reigned, temptations often have cast us down, and have trodden us under their feet; Satan has harrassed us, and the powers of darkness have exercised their sway over us; but the victory we shall gain; we the triumph shall know; God shall bruise Satan under our feet shortly; we shall overcome by the blood of the Lamb; we shall overcome the world; we shall overcome at last; we shall be more than conquerors through him that loved us.

"O! think with what rapturous shouts we shall rise,
To join with the glorified choirs,
When Jesus' bright chariot appears in the skies,
And death at his coming expires."

O! what a blessed hope is this! Lacking all things in ourselves, we have no lack of any good things in Jesus. He is our unfailing spring of every comfort. In him we have redemption and the forgiveness of sins. In the Lord have we righteousness and strength. Our joy, our peace, our everlasting consolation, flow from the dear Lamb of God. O how great was his compassion to us, poor sinners, that for our sakes he became poor, that we through his poverty might be rich. What poverty he underwent for our sakes, no mortal tongue can tell. Our sins were laid on him, our shame and woes he bore. He was bereft of joy and bliss, and crushed under our griefs, under our guilt, under the curse of the law, hounded out of the world amidst the mad cries of his betrayers and murderers, "Crucify him, crucify him." A prey to the malice and powers of hell, the vengeance of our sins he bore. He yielded up himself a sacrifice for his body, the church. Was ever sorrow like his? Was ever love like his? All for our sakes, our peace to make, that we might partake and share with him his joy and riches in glory. O that we could love him, and trust in him, and ever feast our eyes upon our Beloved. O! is he not the chiefest among ten thousand, and altogether lovely? We are nothing, having nothing, but Jesus is our all, and in all. Out of his fullness have all the members of his body received, and grace for grace. We shall find it sufficient all our life's journey. Abounding grace shall provision our way, and safely he will bring us through every temptation, through trials and darkness, to eternal day. Our perplexities will then be over, all our sorrow be ended, no more shall we grieve over sins and temptations, but beyond all annoyance, base intruders shut out, in righteousness and peace we shall be eternally shut in with the ransomed in glory, to worship Jehovah forever and ever. We have been gathered out of the world, to feel our need of, and to desire to taste the blessedness of, that hope in these things; and though we are buffeted by temptations, the gracious Spirit does not suffer our hope to fail, but we hold on our way, hoping, trusting in and yearning after divine things, sustained by the invisible yet gracious and effectual ministrations of the Holy Spirit. It is a miracle to see a spark in the ocean live, to see a bush in the midst of the flames of fire, and the bush not consumed. So the dear children of God in afflictions and temptations, through the floods and fires, are kept, and come forth to the praise of our God. The remembrance of his mercies to us in times past reproves our distrust in the God of our mercy.

"Will he now his grace deny,
Lay his wonted kindness by?
Will he, can he say, Depart,
To the humble, contrite heart?
No, our Christ is still the same;
Endless blessings on his name."

All your sickness of self and sin is needful, dear sister. The whole have no need of a physician.

"Precious is my dear Physician;
Oft I prove his power to heal;
Curing every sad condition,
When he does his love reveal.
Precious Jesus! much I need thy healing power."

As I have read and reread your letter I feel I know all your exercises of soul, your feelings of unworthiness, that shadow that we feel comes over our hope, and delight in eternal things, as our own failure of a life looms up before us. Ah, so unlike it is to what we would have it. There is nothing in it that we see to be lovely; we are far from feeling that we have reason to be boasting therein before God, or even before our fellow-creatures. Boasting is excluded. By what law? Of works? Nay; but by the law of faith. Our faith is in the merits of the Lamb of God. Our trust, our heart's affections, are set upon the loveliness of the precious Christ. O the loveliness of his meekness and lowliness of heart, of his obedience even unto death, of his griefs and sorrows, when bearing our sins he descended under the curse of the law unto death. In unutterable sorrows he poured forth his soul unto death, and purged our transgressions away in that tide of his precious blood. It is recorded of the soldiers at the crucifixion of Christ, that, "sitting down they watched him there."—Matt. xxvii. 36. How blessed it is when we are favored by the Holy Spirit, by precious faith, to sit down at the foot of the cross.

"Love and grief my heart dividing,
With my tears his feet I'll bathe;
Constant still in faith abiding,
Life deriving from his death.

May I still enjoy this feeling,
In all my need to Jesus go;
Prove his wounds each day more healing,
And myself more deeply know."

Let me, dear sister, receive a few lines from you again soon, and perhaps I will not trouble you with so long a letter in reply. May the Holy Spirit build up your soul upon "the sure mercies of David."—Isa. lv. 3.

I am your brother in Jesus,
FRED. W. KEENE.

SANDUSKY, Ala., July, 1895.

DEAR BROTHER BEEBE:—The SIGNS continues to come to us here every week, still declaring the wonderful works of God in the salvation of his people, independent of their own works. The promise is sure to all the seed of Christ in every dispensation, and Abel and Paul, and all the church of the First-born, are saved by the same grace. The changing of the priesthood and the law made no change in the plan of salvation, and the preachers can do no more to save souls from perdition than Noah and the prophets could. The prophets did not make Irsael of old, and the preachers now do not make saints. The preacher does a good work to find the saints when God has called them. They are commanded to feed the church of God, but no where are commanded to use the church and its worship as a machine for saving souls and making saints; and when they go into such they are sure of a good crop of Ishmaelites that will soon begin to mock at the feast for the children of the promise; and I am glad to know that the ministers of our order are averse to all such idolatry; and because they will not turn aside to the right hand or to the left after any of the new ways that have been planned by Adam's children, they have to suffer some reproach in different ways. I see of late some of our able writers have had to contend with some of these complicated theories and heard questions from the opposite side; but they have done well in their replies. If there are any of our people bewitched and spoiled any in their minds and feelings by the vain philosophy of any of these rulers of darkness, they ought to read these plain and pointed replies. They show much of the fallacy in the arguments set forth by the wisdom of this world. Ever since Adam transgressed the law he has been hunting for some kind of covering, and been trying to find fault with his Maker. He thinks the doctrine of election makes God very unjust and faulty. But let us try his doctrine a little, and see if it is any better. Suppose the Father sent the Son to be the Savior of the world, and he did not save the world, "Whose fault is it?" If it is actually necessary for the gospel to be preached to men in order to be saved, and God does not send it to all in time to save them, "Whose fault is it?" God has of one blood made all nations of men. If some are easy to save by the gospel, and some are too hard, "Whose fault is it?" Some die in infancy, and some are insane, and some are born deaf. If these are all lost, "Whose fault is it?" If these questions were properly answered, we can see that it leaves the blame of man's condemnation all upon God, where Adam tried to fasten it from the beginning. Adam's preachers harp much upon those Scriptures that speak of "the whole world," and "all men," and "every man;" but none of them, when properly understood, will help to sustain the conditional theory, if the Father sent the Son to be the Savior of the whole world, including all men and every man indiscriminately. The Son says to the Father, "I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do;" and on the cross he cried, "It is finished." No conditions in it. And Christ did not come to save the rich man, or Judas, or those who are suffering the vengeance of eternal fire, and those whom John saw cast into the lake of fire. Jesus tells us, "I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me. And this is the will of him that sent me, that of all he hath given me I should lose nothing, but should raise it up again the last day." This was the whole world of the saints, all the church, Jew and Gentile, all men and every man that had a primary or spiritual existence of eternal life in Christ, and chosen in him before the foundation of the material world; his sheep, his bride, his love, his dove, his undefiled; all washed and cleansed and justified by him. But those Adamic preachers have but very little to say to their people about election and this eternal life in Christ, and would have us all believe that Jesus came to save the whole world of Adam's family, but did not quite complete the work, and sent them to finish it for him; and they make heavy charges for their services. They tell us that the Spirit is at work and striving hard with all, and if we are too obstinate it will take its everlasting flight. Yet they visit the chain gangs and jail-houses, and try to get the worst criminals to believe the Spirit had never given them over. They say that God loves all men, and died for all; and they also say that he is very angry with the wicked. Just how he loves all, and is angry with some, would be hard to tell. The way they talk about God, and try to represent him to the people, is enough to make us believe they do not know the God of the Bible. Jesus says, "No man can come to me except the Father which hath sent me draw him." They say, "All can come if they will." Jesus says, "Many shall seek to enter in, and shall not be able." They say, "Every one can get in that will try." Jesus says, "How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of God." And, "With men it is impossible." But they say, "It is possible for all men to get in. Jesus made the way possible for all." They ask the people here to come out on the Lord's side. If the people were to obey them, they would be left alone. But all the world wanders after the beast, and they lead the way, and take sides with him, and try to confirm his testimony. Satan said to the woman, "Ye shall not surely die." And these say, "Ye are not dead; ye can believe the gospel, repent, mourn, pray, exercise faith, pay the preacher, and be saved; or ye can resist God, and disbelieve the gospel, and refuse to repent, and mourn, and pray, and exercise faith, and fail to pay the preacher, and be lost." This is about the weight of their system; and it did not come from God. But here I will drop them for the present; they trouble us here but little with their complications or hard questions; but their system ought to be exposed for the benefit of the people of God who may be caught in their nets and put into bondage by them. Jesus commands the weary and heavy laden children of God to come unto him, and he will give them rest. But if they make the mistake and get in with the other party, they will have to go to work. Even the poor old widows and little boys and girls will get no rest. The money must come. Their god is so helpless he cannot run a little Sunday School without money; and sometimes when they need him worst he cannot be called up.

I want to say Amen to brother Chick's appeal. I think brethren would do well to weigh it well and take heed. Those lines of nonfellowship against Old Baptists do not look well, and so far as my knowledge extends they are gotten up by aspiring and jealous men who want a little fame and notoriety as "leading" or "big" preachers; but about all they get for their trouble is the name of "Slab off" and "New lights." Sometimes there is too much of old Cain in these breakers. "He that hateth his brother is a murderer." I believe our deacons ought to watch the Elders very closely when they discover this aspiring spirit about one; and when they begin to lampoon their brother Elders about a point of doctrine, and go so far as to publicly give the lie, the deacons ought to sit them down, and so save more confusion.

I think I had better close for the present. I have had a lame back for ten days, and I write this in different positions, sitting up any lying down. I want to say to all the contributors to the SIGNS, Write on; you are doing me and many others much good. The grace of our Lord be with you all, and also the editors.

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES:—Inclosed herewith I send you a letter written by that faithful old soldier of the cross, Elder R. F. Haynes, of Oak Hill, Ill., to his daughter, our much esteemed sister in the faith of God, Mrs. Cynthia A. Stratton, of Dawson, Nebraska. Though not written for publication, yet at my solicitation sister Stratton consented that I should send it to our dear family paper, the SIGNS, for insertion in its columns. The thoughts expressed in it on the glorious subject of the unlimited predestination of all things by God, the Creator and Preserver of all, I fully and heartily indorse. My little hope is fixed and rests upon a faith in a God infinite, and consequently unlimited, in all his attributes. The erudite but faithful Jerome of Prague once said, "Give me an unlimited God, or no God." It seems to me that complete resignation by the little, tempest-tossed and weary children of God could not be had outside of a firm belief in this God-honoring doctrine. May I be allowed space to say that I rejoice to see the SIGNS standing firm for the truth as it is in Jesus. May God continue to give you strength to wield "The sword of the Lord and of Gideon."

Your little brother, I hope, in the faith of God's elect,

A. W. BLOOMFIELD.

OAK HILL, Ill., Feb. 17, 1895.

DEAR DAUGHTER:—I think I do feel a degree of gratitude for the manifold blessings which I am the daily recipient of at the hand of the great giver of every good and perfect gift, both temporal and spiritual; and though it seems to be my lot to walk so much of my time in darkness, without a feeling sense of his divine presence, which, when felt, causes joy unspeakable, and peace beyond measure, yet he does give me a faith that enables me to "trust in the name of the Lord and stay upon our God." I say he gives it, for Paul says that "faith is the gift of God;" and I know that it cannot be the product of human reason or intellect; for though man may by scanning the works of his hand, the things that are made, come to a knowledge of his "eternal power and Godhead," it does not in the least resign him to the universal, immutable and unlimitable sovereignty of God; or, to put it in other words, his absolute (certain) predestination of all things; for "the carnal mind is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be;" and we can account for the hatred of mankind to this glorious and fundamental truth upon no other ground than the natural darkness and depravity of the human heart; for it is the very foundation principle of all human progress, and the one upon which all intelligent beings act. As disobedient children are prone to rebel against, and find fault with, the predestinating purposes of their earthly parents, though all intended for their good, so we, in our carnal nature, are rebellious against the decrees of our God, because we cannot see the end or design of them. The Arminian rejects this doctrine because, as he says, it destroys the idea of "free moral agency," but he forgets that "free moral agency" is a doctrine yet to be proved. We say it is a meaningless phrase, or at least a contradictory one; for if one is free, he is under no restraint; but an agent is under a restraint, and therefore not free. Again, the doctrine, if true with respect to our eternal salvation from sin and all its dire effects, would save no one; for if free to choose, as they tell us man is, he would surely choose the wrong, because he is all wrong of himself, and would not choose the good if not influenced by something distinct from himself; and if so influenced, then he is not free. We, (that is, the whole race) are the servants, yes, slaves of sin, and therefore cannot possibly be "free moral agents."

But I will now leave the Arminian, and come to some of our very worthy and estimable brethren; and right here we must proceed with caution in the use of words and phrases, lest we mar the feelings of those we love most.

Some believe that God predestinated and elected his people, but they "don't know" about other things. If he predestinated the wicked acts of men and devils, does not that make him the author of sin? We answer, No; but we confess we cannot tell why it does not; but we refer to the history of Joseph and his brethren, to the false prophets sent to deceive Ahab, to Pharaoh, to Shimei cursing David, to Herod murdering the sucklings, and last, but not least, to the wicked crowd that gathered around our dear Lord and Master at Pilate's bar to do whatsoever God's counsel determined before to be done. If he tells us these things on the part of man are wicked, though foreordained by him, though he also says he is a just and holy God, can we not believe him? We are called to "adorn the doctrine of God our Savior," but no where in the word are we called upon to defend him against the charges brought against him as the supposed consequence of his revealed truth. Again, if God could predestinate the wicked acts of the crucifixion, and not be the author of sin, could he not with equal right and justice have determined all the wicked acts of all men? The answer must be, Yes. Again, if the predestinating the wicked acts of men throws the blame on him (and that is what the unregenerated Jews claimed; for, say they, "Why doth he yet find fault? for who hath resisted his will?" "Nay but, O man, who art thou that repliest against God? Shall the thing formed say unto him that formed it, Why hast thou made me thus?") then the scenes of Calvary made him the author of sin, and we do not know how to avoid the conclusion? Our dear brethren will have to, with us, accept it, and we presume will find it just as difficult to find a way out of the dilemma for our God as we would be. Let us accept the blessed truth as God reveals it to us, remembering that upon this fundamental doctrine rests all the precious promises of the gospel. Upon this foundation the apostle could say, "We know that all things work together for good," &c. I am persuaded that neither life, nor death, principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus. "All things are yours, whether Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas, or the world, or life, or death, or things present, or things to come; all are yours, and ye are Christ's, and Christ is God's."

One thought more, and this I should have said at the outset, as preface, but I did not at the start know what I was going to say; it is this, We should keep in mind, when in search of divine truth, that God is the fountain of all truth; that he has revealed himself in his word as Father, Son and Holy Ghost, and these three are one; and the Son, personating this glorious trinity, said, "I am the way, the truth and the life." The Holy Ghost in personating the three is to lead us into all truth; and God the Father is to justify the ungodly through his truth. To this invisible, self-existent God is ascribed in the Scripture of divine truth the attributes of power, wisdom, knowledge, justice, mercy, truth and love; and these perfections of his divine character are co-eternal, and necessarily as infinite and immutable as his throne. To him is also ascribed a purpose; and as he is from everlasting to everlasting the same, without variableness or the shadow of a turn, it necessarily follows that what is his purpose today was his from eternity; so there is no new purpose or plan with him. All his divine attributes must and do harmonize in working out his purpose for his own glory. But I must stop.

Yours in hope of eternal life, which God, who cannot lie, promised before the world began.

DEAR EDITORS OF THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES:—Inclosed you will find a letter by our beloved brother Cox, which was written some time since; and yet it will be food for the hungry, as all his writings are. Brother Gold will please copy. The little flock at Elk Lick has no preacher, but truly hope the visiting brethren will not forget us. If I know anything of the love of Jesus, it is my delight to be with our Father's dear children, and have them in my humble home. May the good Shepherd guide, guard and direct us all in that meek and lowly way that becomes his children, and enable us at all times to crown him Lord of all, is the prayer of your weak sister,

E. THEOBALD.

To the Licking Association of Particular Baptists, when met with the Elk Lick Church, on the 24th of August, 1894.

VERY DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS:—The weight of years and the hand of affliction which are resting upon me forbid my enjoying the sweet privilege of meeting you and joining you in praise, adoration and thanksgiving to him "who rideth upon the heavens in thy help, and in his excellency on the sky." While this privilege is not mine to enjoy, yet I should feel truly thankful to the great Giver of all good for the measure of reconciliation which he has bestowed upon me. Many of the dear saints with whom I met in love and sweet fellowship at this association in my earlier days have been called away from the cares, trials and afflictions of a sin-cursed world to rest in their heavenly home. Yet I through the grace and mercy of our covenant-keeping God am permitted to still remain, and now and then to have a glimpse of that land of rest to which you, dear saints, are hastening; and sometimes a faint view is given me of the superlative glories that encircle on every side the ever-precious name of Jesus, our Lord and King, whose name was borne to earth by a heavenly messenger, which name means "a Savior." That messenger declared, "His name shall be called Jesus; for he shall save his people from their sins." O what an undertaking that was when he became clothed with mortality, when he took that body which was prepared him, in which he suffered, that you, dear saints, might reign with him in glory. He said, "Ought not Christ to have suffered these things, and to enter into his glory?" He wept in Gethsemane and suffered on Calvary that he might bring in everlasting redemption and righteousness to his elect, his chosen people. They were his, given to him in the everlasting covenant, and to them he says, "All that the Father giveth me shall come to me." He has all power in heaven and earth, and says, "My counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure." The prophet said of him, "Yet it pleased the Lord to bruise him; he hath put him to grief: when thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin, he shall see his seed, he shall prolong his days, and the pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hand." "He shall see of the travail of his soul, and shall be satisfied: by his knowledge shall my righteous servant justify many; for he shall bear their iniquities." He bore our sins in his own body on the tree, that we, being dead to sin, should live unto righteousness. Then, dear

PARABLE OF THE WHEAT AND THE TARES.

Matthew xiii. 24-30, 36-43.

"ANOTHER parable put he forth unto them, saying, The kingdom of heaven is likened unto a man which sowed good seed in his field: but while men slept, his enemy came and sowed tares among the wheat, and went his way. But when the blade was sprung up, and brought forth fruit, then appeared the tares also. So the servants of the householder came and said unto him, Sir, didst not thou sow good seed in thy field? from whence then hath it tares? He said unto them, An enemy hath done this. The servants said unto him, Wilt thou then that we go and gather them up? But he said, Nay; lest while ye gather up the tares, ye root up also the wheat with them. Let both grow together until the harvest: and in the time of harvest I will say to the reapers, Gather ye together first the tares, and bind them in bundles to burn them: but gather the wheat into my barn."

"Then Jesus sent the multitude away, and went into the house: and his disciples came unto him, saying, Declare unto us the parable of the tares of the field. He answered and said unto them, He that soweth the good seed is the Son of man; the field is the world; the good seed are the children of the kingdom; but the tares are the children of the wicked one; the enemy that sowed them is the devil; the harvest is the end of the world; and the reapers are the angels. As therefore the tares are gathered and burned in the fire; so shall it be in the end of this world. The Son of man shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity; and shall cast them into a furnace of fire: there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth. Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father. Who hath ears to hear, let him hear."

We have not quoted this parable with the intention of commenting upon it all, nor with the expectation of solving every difficulty which may seem to be connected with it; but there are some things said by the Savior here which have seemed clear and plain to our mind, and of these we desire to speak. From various causes this parable has been much on our mind for a number of years past. Much of that time we have not felt that we had much understanding of it. It has, however, all along seemed clear to our mind that when rightly understood it would be seen to be in perfect harmony with what all the Scriptures teach concerning the great mystery of redemption. We have never been able to accept any explanation of this parable that would contradict what was plainly taught elsewhere in the Bible. We have never thought it safe to found a statement of doctrine upon a parable, but have desired to see the truth that was plainly stated elsewhere illustrated and explained in the parables.

Jesus says, in introducing this parable, that the kingdom of heaven is like unto a man which sowed good seed, &c. We are not, then, left in the dark as to what this parable sets forth. The kingdom of heaven in some ways is like this parable. Jesus spoke in many parables the things of the kingdom of heaven. The whole Bible by direct teaching, by illustrations, by parables, is employed in setting forth this kingdom of heaven which now was being preached, and into which every man was pressing. It seems clear to our mind that the kingdom of heaven as it is now is set forth in this parable. From the time when it began to appear on earth to the time when it will be on earth no more, it seems to us that it will bear all the characteristics of all the parables which Jesus spake concerning it. All through this gospel day the kingdom of heaven is manifesting the various glories set forth concerning it in the pages of holy writ.

We do not desire to dwell upon the parable itself. To do so would seem like vain presumption, seeing that the Savior has himself given us its explanation from verses 37-43. It is of the Master's interpretation of the parable that we desire to speak, occasionally referring to the parable itself. The narrative seems upon the face of it plain. A man, who is a farmer, and who is able to have servants, sows a field in wheat. After it is sown he rests. This man has an enemy, who under cover of darkness enters his field, and in it sows tares among the wheat; and so subtle is he that he sows that which when small so much resembles wheat that it cannot be safely assailed and rooted out. The enemy is a religious enemy, not an openly profane one. Such weeds as these could be discerned at once; but weeds that grow in the guise of wheat are more dangerous, because they may be taken for wheat, and nourished as such. The servants discover the tares, and bring word to the master. He replies at once, "An enemy hath done this." The servants say, Wilt thou that we root up the tares? But to this the master's reply is, Not so, lest ye also root up the wheat. Let them both grow until the harvest; then they shall be separated and the tares burned. This narrative is all plain and clear, so far as it describes what might at any time take place among men. Everything in it is true to this natural life, with all its manners and customs; and it is in perfect harmony with the ordinary thoughts, feelings and conduct of men. No man could ever speak so true to even natural things as Jesus spoke. "Never man spake like this man."

Now, Jesus says, this sets forth the kingdom of heaven. The kingdom of heaven is like this everyday event of human life; and in his explanation he tells his disciples just what the wheat and tares, the field, the sower of good seed, the sower of tares and the harvest all represent.

Two things we desire to call special attention to. First, the master did not sow the tares. "An enemy hath done this." Whatever was meant when God said to the woman, "I will greatly multiply thy sorrows and thy conception," it is sure that these words set forth something altogether different from what is presented in this parable. In the parable the tares are declared to be sown by an enemy, and that enemy the devil; while in the text in Genesis the Lord said, "I will greatly multiply thy sorrows and thy conception." In the one case it is the work of the devil, while in the other it is the work of the Lord that is set forth. We wish, while thus alluding to these words from Genesis, to add one more reflection. Children are everywhere in the Scriptures regarded and spoken of as a blessing from the Lord. They are to be desired, and in very many instances were desired and prayed for by those who served and worshiped God. It is said, "Happy is the man that hath his quiver full of them." If these words in Genesis signified that after the transgression the Lord added to the descendants of Eve the lost, the children of the devil, then what blessing is there in having children, and how could David say, "Happy is the man that hath his quiver full of them?" The truth is, this expression is but a Hebraism; that is, it is only a mode of speech in the Hebrew language, signifying that the sorrows and trials of conception should be increased. If the Scriptures to which we have referred are true, the multiplication of children is a blessing, and not a curse; but be this as it may, we repeat again that the parable under consideration does not set forth the same thing, and is as diverse as is the work of the devil from that of the Lord. "An enemy hath done this."

The second thing is this. The Lord said, "The field is the world." The word translated "world" all through this parable and its explanation is not kosmos, but aion. Kosmos always signifies this material universe upon which we gaze, while the word aion is more properly translated "age," or "dispensation." This is not simply our own opinion; it is known to be true by all who know anything about the Greek language, in which the New Testament was written. The field, then, is the age or dispensation. There is therefore no reference to this natural creation, or to the beginning of the natural world. An age or period in the affairs of men is meant. Something with reference to God's dealings with men at a particular age in the world's history is meant. For this reason it is plain that the parable does not refer to the beginning of time. It has no reference whatever to what took place in the garden of Eden. There may be room for difference of opinion as regards what age or dispensation is meant, whether the law or the gospel dispensation; but none can claim with any reason that the patriarchal age or the Edenic time is meant. As intimated at the beginning of this editorial, our own view is that the phrase, "the kingdom of heaven," shuts us up to the view that the gospel age or dispensation is meant. We do not recall that John the Baptist or the apostles were ever sent to preach that the kingdom of heaven had been or was already, but simply that it "is at hand." It is coming, and is near.

A third matter we wish to notice now. In this field, or age, or dispensation, the Son of man sows wheat. "The Son of man." Does not this expression necessarily relate to Jesus in his manifestation in human flesh? We do not now recall that he is ever spoken of as the Son of man except as referring to his ministry under the gospel. This expression of itself, then, would seem to put the matter beyond dispute that the age referred to was that which was ushered in by the coming of Jesus in the flesh. He who was the very embodiment of the kingdom of heaven came, and of him John the Baptist testified, "The kingdom of heaven is at hand." Here in the coming of the Son of man was the fulfillment of all the types and of all prophecy. It had not been fulfilled before.

The Son of man in this gospel age sowed wheat, the children of the kingdom; the children of the kingdom of heaven. It is said concerning the gathering and burning of the tares that they mean not only those who do iniquity, but also all things that offend. The evil doctrine and practice, as well as those who teach and do these things, are meant by the tares. In fact, false doctrine and practice are always embodied and displayed in some man or men; and in this parable they are blended, and sometimes the people who hold the doctrine, and sometimes the doctrine or practice, are more directly spoken of. So it is said that those who do iniquity, and all things that offend, should be gathered out and burned. As this is true of the tares, so is it true also on the other hand of the wheat. It also means not only good men, but also the good things manifested in them who should be gathered into the garner. So also is all this true in the sowing. Jesus sowed good seed. It was the seed of his truth sown in the hearts of men, by which they were separated from the world, and became his professed disciples. It was the truth in them that made them wheat; and on the other hand, the truth could appear only as it dwelt in them, and flowed out through them into all their life here on earth. The truth in its manifestation can never be separated from those who manifest it. Divine life by itself is not a child of God. Men and women by themselves are not children of God; but the man or woman possessing this divine life is thereby a child of God. The wheat is men and women, but men and women who possess the qualities of wheat, or in whom dwells the Spirit of him who is life and truth.

Jesus came to sow what was good. He preached his own doctrine. It was the word of God. In the highest sense of all Jesus was himself the word of God. He not only preached the word to men, but he came to them; he lived in them. As he lived in them, and only because he lived in them, were they the sons of God. "The good seed are the children of the kingdom." Jesus continues to sow good seed. In every generation all along this gospel age has the truth been revealed in men. These men were like all other men until the truth was revealed in them. Jesus Christ, the Son of God, is the truth. Paul said, "When it pleased God * * * to reveal his Son in me." The children of the kingdom are good seed only because the good seed of the word and life of Jesus dwells in them. How wonderful it is that men should be thus sown! How wonderful that men should be prepared to be thus sown! The parable does not teach that men were sown in this natural world at the beginning of time, but that men, sinners, lost men, are by the grace of God made partakers of the divine nature, and come to possess the truth, and as such are sown in this gospel age.

But as some one has well said, "The Lord never revives his work, but straightway the devil revives his also." It was so when the gospel age was ushered in. Scarcely was the mystery of godliness begun to be manifested, when the mystery of iniquity began to work. The master, in the broad light of heaven, sowed the good seed. Under the darkness of night, when men slept, the devil sowed the tares. As referred to before, the chief peculiarity of the tares was their early resemblance to the wheat. The wheat did not mean mere outward, moral goodness, nor merely moral, kindly, generous men, but religious things, godliness and godly men. On the other hand, the tares were religious tares. They resembled the wheat. They were not openly wicked men or wicked things, but "cheats." From the very beginning there had been open and avowed infidelity, vice and crime in the world. To sow these things would be nothing new. There would be no difficulty in these things, in separating the precious from the vile; but with the tares, or "cheat," as it is sometimes called, it is not so. In every age since the gospel was ushered in has there been an embodiment of false doctrine and unscriptural practice in men who have made loud profession of christianity. Often it has been well-nigh impossible to discern the true from the false.

The tares are evil principles embodied in wicked men. These are the children of the wicked one. So far as we now recall, the expression, "the children of the devil," does not occur in the Scriptures except in connection with the subjects of a false, Satanic religion. Men and women, even fallen men and women, we believe, are not called children of the devil except as they become filled with the spirit of a false religion. Gallio cares for none of these things, but Caiaphas is filled with hatred. Such as these are the children of the wicked one.

The enemy that sowed them is the devil. He is the sower of all false doctrine, and he fills the minds of men with it. Just as the Son of man has sown in his kingdom all things that are good, and has put the children of God in his kingdom that they may exhibit these good fruits; so Satan bas sown there secretly all that offends, and has tempted men who are evil to set forth all these pernicious principles and practices.

The servants of God see these things and are troubled. They are anxious to have them removed; but for a wise purpose, too deep for us perhaps to understand, the master says they must grow together until the harvest. The reason given is that if the servants undertake to eradicate the tares they will pull up the wheat also. We know of no better reason for the existence to-day of all that is wrong and that offends in the kingdom of God than this. The master has said so, and so it must be. If we are burdened at the reproach of Zion, let this comfort our hearts; and let us farther be comforted as we read that in the end all things that offend and all that do iniquity shall be gathered out and consumed. It is said that he will send his angels to do this. Whatever this may mean besides, this much is sure, that our God here declares that he will work in his own time and in his own way and by his own means in the sure fulfillment of his purposes.

In conclusion we would say that we think it is clearly evident that this parable contains no comfort for the monstrous dogma that by nature some men are the children of God and some the children of the devil, sown in the earth at the beginning of its history; and farther, that it is full of comfort to the tried children of God, in that it contains the promise of a sure deliverance from all that is evil and can offend in God's own good way and time. How good it is to be able to trust in a sovereign God, who does his pleasure, and whose gracious thoughts toward his people are sure of a fulfillment!

C.

THE ARMOR OF GOD, OR THE CHRISTIAN UNIFORM.

"Finally, my brethren, be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might. Put on the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil. For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places. Wherefore take unto you the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day, and having done all, to stand. Stand therefore, having your loins girt about with truth, and having on the breastplate of righteousness; and your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace: above all, taking the shield of faith, wherewith ye shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked. And take the helmet of salvation, and the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God: praying always with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit, and watching thereunto with all perseverence and supplication for all saints."—Eph. vi. 10-18.

In this epistle to the saints at Ephesus, and to the faithful in Christ Jesus, the apostle has very clearly stated the sublime and fundamental doctrine of salvation by grace, the relationship in which the saints are identified with Christ as the Head over all things to his church; and he closes his letter with these admonitions and exhortations of which the subject offered for consideration is a part. These admonitions do not, to our mind, seem restricted in their application to ministers, or to any particular class of church members, but to all the saints in general. This we infer, not only from the broad address in the commencement, "to the saints at Ephesus, and to the faithful in Christ Jesus," but also from the tenor of his instructions in the fifth and commencement of this sixth chapter, to wives and husbands, children and parents, servants and masters, &c., by which we see that the apostle recognized as members of the body of Christ those who were called by divine grace of every class, station and grade in which they existed as members of the human family. And after showing them severally that although in Christ Jesus they are all one, and on an equal footing as the subjects of his great salvation, yet as citizens of the world they were bound to observe the same obligations which they were under in all their relative stations before their conversion to the faith of the gospel. The duties of wives and husbands, parents and children, masters and servants, being obligatory on them in their fleshly relations, were still binding on them; and they are exhorted with the more abundant fidelity to discharge them faithfully, so that the gospel should not be blamed or subjected to reproach on their account. Then, in a general summing up of the arguments and admonitions given, he says, in the text proposed for our consideration, "Finally, my brethren, be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might," &c.

Let us here observe that the apostle does not exhort his brethren to fortify themselves with human strength or might, for he well understood that all their strength was weakness, and all their wisdom was folly. Nor were they to rely on the strength of other men, kings, potentates, armies, or carnal weapons; for "cursed be the man that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arm." They were not to intrench themselves with the favor of the world, for that is deceptive and treacherous; nor by multiplied societies, accumulated funds, or legislative enactments for their defense; but he would have them to be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might. This strength they can only realize when conscious of their own weakness; for, says this same apostle, "When I am weak, then I am strong;" and he gladly gloried in his infirmity and weakness, that the power of God might rest upon him. The exhortation seems to imply an obligation on the part of the saints to obey the injunction. But, says the saint, How am I, who am nothing but weakness, to obey, and be strong in the Lord? To such we reply, first, by ceasing from man, whose breath is in his nostrils; by reposing no confidence in the flesh; and, secondly, by waiting upon the Lord; for "They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles," &c. By waiting on the Lord, we understand, a submission to him, and a patient waiting for him to manifest his power and grace in our deliverance or defense, as our case may require. Thirdly, a contemplation of, and a firm reliance on, the oaths and promises, the immutability and faithfulness of our covenant God. The power of God is pledged for the safety of the saints. The eternal God is her Refuge, and underneath her are his everlasting arms. He rides upon the heavens in her help, and in his excellency on the sky; and she is made a partaker of that strength in her union to Christ. She dwells in the secret place of the Most High, and she shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty. To be strong in the Lord is to trust in him; for "They that trust in the Lord shall be as Mount Zion, which cannot be removed."

"Put on the whole armor of God;" not the armor of Scribes, Pharisees or hypocrites; not the armor of free will or creature righteousness; not the armor of the will-worshiper or legalist, but the armor of God; that armor which is of God, and not of men. It is ample for the protection of the head, the heart, the hands and the feet of the saints. Not a part of it; the whole is none too much. Put it on, "that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil." It is devil-proof; his wiles cannot harm the saint who has on the whole armor of God. In it they shall be able to stand when earth and hell oppose. "For we wrestle." In wrestling we know how important it is to be able to stand; for if the antagonist can get us off our feet we fall. For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, as do those who join battle with carnal weapons in the field of carnage; nor do we contend merely against the corruptions of our own flesh, or carnal natures; but the enemies which are to confront us and dispute every inch of the ground with us, are formidable and artful and numerous, comprising principalities and powers, and the rulers of the darkness of this world, and the spiritual wickedness of high places. Principalities signify combined and organized forces, disciplined and drilled for the attack. Powers also of various kinds the saints encounter; the power of persecution, reproaches, slander, popularity, wealth, numbers, worldly wisdom, and a thousand other influences, are brought in array against the soldiers of the cross. "The rulers of the darkness of this world." The darkness of this world is what ungodly men call light. That kind of religion which the unregenerate can be instructed in, by Sabbath Schools, Theological schools, &c., is in the Scriptures denominated darkness, and it is here called the darkness of this world. Of this darkness Satan is the prince, and his emissaries who promulgate his doctrine and labor in his service are rulers. As Nicodemus was a ruler among the Jews, being a teacher of the Jewish religion, so the ministers of Satan are rulers of the darkness of this world; and they are, all of them to a man, drawn up in battle array against the saints of God. The saints wrestle with them, and also against spiritual wickedness of high places. The common corruptions of depraved human nature are wicked, and the heart from whence they break forth is desperately wicked; but these are no where in the Scriptures characterized as "spiritual wickedness." The natural wickedness of men is manifested in the works of the flesh, such as murder, adultery, hatred, wrath, &c.; but spiritual wickedness, in a scriptural sense of the word, we understand to mean religious wickedness, and in the usurpation of the spiritual concerns of men; and in exalting itself above all that is called God, and in claiming the prerogatives of God, it is said to be spiritual wickedness in high places.

The man of sin described in the epistle to the Thessalonians, is said to thus exalt himself above all that is called God; and certainly the modern antichrist is no less daring at the present day. Volumes might be written on the spiritual wickedness in high places which has marked the dark ages which are past, in the development of the red dragon, the first and second beast, and the image of the beast, described in Rev. xiii., and the scarlet beast and its distinguished rider, as stated in Rev. xvii.; but we have more particularly to do with the present age. We need not go back to ages that are past; the present affords abundant exemplification of the wickedness of high places. We see men organizing themselves into religious societies for the professed purpose of saving souls, of converting the heathen, and of evangelizing the world; while our Bible declares that salvation is of the Lord, and our God declares to us that besides him there is no Savior. We witness at this degenerate day the assumption of authority to call, qualify and send forth ministers to preach what is called gospel, to appoint to their ministers the fields of their labor, and the amount of their remuneration; and we witness the pretentions of those who have grown bold in daring blasphemy, announcing to men that if they will come to their altars and receive the benefits of their prayers they will insure them the salvation of their souls. When we see all these things displayed throughout the breadth and length of our land, we need not search the history of past ages to find out the meaning of spiritual wickedness of high places. High places correspond with the high hills where the idolatrous Israelites built their groves; and it may also signify the high and extravagant pretentions which are made by those who not only profess to be able to accomplish that which God alone can do, but even more; for while the modern workers represent that God's power and grace, and the blood of Christ, and the ministry which he has established, have failed to save the world, they claim to have hit upon plans by which they can save them, and at the very moderate rate of about from one to three dollars for each soul.

The saints are called to wrestle with these, and all the other powers and principalities named in ths text; hence Paul repeats the exhortation to the saints, to put on the whole armor of God, that they may be able to stand. There is no encouragement to believe that they can stand in the day of trial without this whole armor for their protection; but in it they are invincible. Having extended this article to considerable length, we shall for the present defer a description of the various parts of the christian armor; but, if opportunity serves, we will resume the subject soon—perhaps in our next number.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y., May 15, 1851.

MINUTES.

AS THE time for the fall associations is drawing near, we wish to call the attention of our brethren to the fact that any patronage they can give us by way of printing their Minutes will be especially appreciated at present. Our long experience in the business has, we think, particularly qualified us for this work; and as it costs but a few cents to mail the manuscript to us, we hope they will remember us when they have the work ready.

POSTAL MONEY ORDERS.

BY a recent arrangement of the post-office department nearly every post-office in the United States is now a money order office for at least five dollars; and as it costs but three cents additional to obtain an order of not more than two dollars and fifty cents, or five cents for one not more than five dollars, or eight cents for one not more than ten dollars, and so on in proportion to amount of order, we request that all remittances be sent us by post-office money-order. You simply give the money you wish to send to your postmaster, and he will give you a money-order for that amount. You will inclose the order which he gives you in your letter to us; and, if it should be lost in the mail you can get another one from your postmaster without additional charge. Please be sure to have the order made payable at Middletown, N. Y., and never at New York City, as that place is nearly a hundred miles from our place, and it puts us to considerable extra trouble and expense to get them cashed at the New York City office.

As will be seen from the above, an order for five dollars or less can be obtained cheaper than registering a letter, while an order not exceeding ten dollars costs but the same amount; and remitting by money order is a much safer way than sending by registered letter, as the postal department is not responsible for loss of registered letters, but money orders can be duplicated.

DISCONTINUANCE OF ONE DOLLAR SUBSCRIPTIONS.

AFTER September first, 1895, we shall be obliged to discontinue our terms of one dollar a year for new subscribers. As frequently stated, our object in making these terms was to induce those who were not acquainted with the paper to take it the first year on trial at one dollar, on the same principle that we send sample copies free. Experience has taught us, however, that no matter how well the subscribers may be pleased with the paper, if they get it for one dollar the first year, they are less willing to pay the full price for a continuance of their subscriptions than if they had not had it the trial year at a reduced rate. Another serious difficulty that we have met with is that many old subscribers discontinue the paper in their own name, and have another name sent on for them as a new subscriber, while practically it is one and the same subscription. This of course thwarts the whole design we had in making the "Extraordinary Offer;" therefore we are obliged to discontinue it after the first day of next month.

ALWAYS SEND DIRECTIONS.

WE have received of late quite a number of postal money orders without any letter of directions. It is much better to always send directions how you wish the amount of the order credited.

saints, hoping, trusting and believing that your dear Redeemer hath by his own blood redeemed you from the curse of the law, given you by grace that spiritual and eternal life which was treasured in him before time began, and by that grace made you heirs of God, and joint heirs with the Lord Jesus Christ, to the glorious inheritance of the saints in light, O may you while traveling in these low grounds of sin and sorrow ever have the presence of your glorious Lord to lead, guide and uphold you amidst all the cares of earth, and finally bring you off conquerors, and more than conquerors, through him that hath loved you and given himself for you, is the sincere prayer of this old and afflicted one.

But, dear brethren and sisters, it is my heart's desire that your meeting at Elk Lick may be a sweet and happy convocation of saints, where love, joy and sweet fellowship may reign and rule among you all, and that you may feed and feast in the banqueting house of your Lord and King on the ever-precious truth of the gospel, and thereby have your visions lifted above the vanities of earth to your future and eternal home, where you will be enabled with unbeclouded eyes to behold with seraphic delight the beauties and glories that shine forth in your risen and exalted Redeemer, to whose ever-precious name be all the glory. Remember me in all your supplications at the throne of grace, that my few remaining footprints on earth may be made in joy and rejoicing—rejoicing in the power, goodness and mercy of our God.

H. COX.

KINSMAN, Ill., June 2, 1895.

DEAR KINDRED IN CHRIST:—I feel impressed to write a few lines concerning the pleasant and enjoyable yearly meeting I was permitted to attend last Saturday and Sunday with the Salem Church, in Marshall County. Elder Thomas Blake, of Waterloo, Iowa, came laden with good things of the kingdom. Also Elder Downey, their beloved pastor, was given to speak many words of comfort and encouragement to the poor, tried pilgrims and strangers here below, who are looking alone to Jesus, from whence cometh our help. While listening to them I felt to say, "Lord, it is enough."

"My willing soul would stay
In such a frame as this,
And sit and sing herself away
To everlasting bliss."

O how far above all earthly pleasures do I esteem this privilege of occasionally being permitted to meet with the dear saints, to sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus, and to hear the unsearchable riches of Christ proclaimed by the Lord's under-shepherds; to hear him exalted a Prince and a Savior, the fairest among ten thousand and altogether lovely; who is able to save to the uttermost all that come unto God by him, who is the way, the truth and the life. Dear ones, to whom else can we go? When we come, as it were, to the ends of the earth, when all creature help failed, when our sins were as mountains before us, and our own strength utterly failed, and we saw that in and of ourselves we could do nothing, we could then but say, "Lord, save, or I perish." And I trust he does save those who are given to see their need of a Savior, and that he is all-sufficient. "Lord, to whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life."

"O! could I speak the matchless worth,
O! could I sound the glories forth
That in my Savior shine"

I can say to my dear kindred in Christ, as did Ruth of old, "Entreat me not to leave thee, or to return from following after thee; for whither thou goest I will go, and where thou lodgest I will lodge; thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God." For

"There my best friends and kindred dwell,
There God my Savior reigns."

Yours in hope of eternal life,

JENNIE GILBERT.

NORA SPRINGS, Iowa, June 30, 1895.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS:—I like to read your paper, for I believe it advocates the truth as taught in the Scriptures, and the truth is all that will do us any good. May the good Lord bless you, that you may boldly speak the words of truth, for these are trying times. The mystery of iniquity is abroad in the land, "Only he that now letteth will let, until he be taken out of the way"—the man of sin. What a precious thought it is that there is a God who has all power in heaven and on earth, and who works all things after the counsel of his own will, for the purpose of his own glory. His eyes are ever over his children, and his ears open to their prayers. He is schooling them here in these low grounds of sorrow, where we have our troubles, trials and afflictions on account of sin. The apostle says, "Where sin abounded, grace did much more abound," that is, grace is the stronger, and that is what saves the sinner, for it is by grace we are saved. If we have ever tasted that the Lord is gracious, we shall surely come into the possession of that inheritance which the good Lord is keeping for his children, and which will be given them in the morning of the resurrection.

NOTICES.

WILL you notice in a few numbers of the SIGNS that "Reminiscences and Letters of Mary Parker" is now reduced to sixty cents, sent by mail post-paid? There are a few hundred copies left on my hands, and I wish to dispose of them, and so I give the friends an opportunity to get a most interesting book at half-price.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

Elizabeth Gist Howard was born in Brooks Co., W. Va., May 7th, 1821, and was married to Abraham Howard Oct. 17th, 1839. She received a hope in Christ, and was baptized in the fellowship of the Falls of Licking Baptist Church, by Elder G. N. Tusing, May 13th, 1876. She died July 22d, 1895, in the 75th year of her age. Sister Howard's parents were formerly residents of Baltimore Co., Md., and were SIGNS readers. The funeral sermon was preached by the writer from the words, "The time of my departure is at hand."

FRANK McGLADE.

Asher B. Rood died at his home in Elkhart, Ind., August 13th, 1894, in the 53d year of his age.

He was born in Wayne Co., N. Y., and at the age of seven years his parents moved with him to Michigan. Nov. 19th, 1867, he was married to my youngest sister, Miss Augusta Livesay. The sickness which terminated his mortal existence was Bright's disease, by which he was confined to the house several months, and suffered greatly. He was not a member of any church, and made no profession whatever, yet he held the Old Baptists in high esteem, and loved their company. His wife being a member of the Old School Baptist Church, they often had meetings at their house, and with tears running down his pale and sunken cheeks he would listen seemingly with great interest to the gospel as it fell from the lips of the dear servants of God. At an early age he began working for the railroad company, and at his death had been a passenger conductor for a number of years. He had a great desire to get well, and everything was done for him that could be done, his wife sending for all kinds of medicine that she could hear of; but it was of no avail. The sands of life had run, his appointed time had come, and he had to obey the summons of him who speaks and it is done, who commands, and it stands fast.

His funeral was held at his home in Elkhart, and the sermon was preached by Elder Lines, of La Fontaine, Ind.; after which his remains were brought to Adrian, his old home, where they were met at the train by a large concourse of friends and relatives and conveyed to Oakwood Cemetery, and there amidst green trees and beautiful flowers were laid to rest beside Georgia, his mourned, beloved and beautiful daughter, who preceded him nine years to the spirit land. The ceremonies then closed with prayer by Elder T. J. Wyman. He leaves to battle with life his wife and one son, Clarence.

MRS. H. TUTTLE.

ADRIAN, Michigan.

Mrs. Susan Payne departed this life on the evening of July 6th, 1895, at the home of her son, Hawthorne, Passaic Co., N. J., her age being 64 years and 6 days.

She was born in New Vernon, N. Y., June 30th, 1831, and was united in marriage to Wm. H. Cahill on Jan. 1st, 1855, by whom she had two children, both of whom are living. After the death of her first husband she was united in marriage to Hiram Payne, Dec. 27th, 1862. The result of their union was five children, three of whom survive her, two girls and one son. Hiram Payne, her last husband, departed this life Feb. 23d, 1888. Both were members of the Old School Baptist Church, their membership being at Middletown, N. Y. Formerly they belonged to the New School Baptists, but feeling dissatisfied with that people, were led of the Lord to unite with the Old School Baptist Church. On June 12th, 1881, Hiram Payne was baptized in the fellowship of that church; and on June 11th, 1882, she also was led into the baptismal waters. Both were baptized by Elder Jenkins, of Middletown, N. Y. They were staunch Old School Baptists, and fervent lovers of the truth as it is in Christ. Truly it can be said of her that she lived a faithful life, and that she hath done what she could.

Her last sickness came upon her in November last, which was cancer of the spleen. For ten months she suffered indescribable pain, but her patience endured to the last. Her hope was in God. In her agony she would remark, "The Savior suffered; why should not I suffer also?" During the last days of her stay on earth she was almost entirely free from pain, and on the evening of the date before stated she passed sweetly and quietly away. Her last words were that she wanted to be taken home.

On July 9th a large company of her friends and relatives assembled to pay their last respects to one who had been a faithful wife, a dear mother and a kind neighbor. The funeral was conducted by her pastor, Elder Benton Jenkins, who spoke comforting words from 1 Cor. xv. 16-20. Hymn 1257, Beebe's Collection, was sung:

"Asleep in Jesus! blessed sleep!
From which none ever wake to weep."

After the service her body was taken to its last resting place on earth, the Laurel Grove Cemetery, of Paterson, N. J.

She is sadly missed from the home circle, but why should we mourn or wish her back? She has gone to a better and more enduring home. Her son,

R. L. PAYNE.

HAWTHORNE, N. J.

DIED—At her home near Charter Oak, Iowa, on the morning of Dec. 21st, 1893, Jemima A. Weed.

Jemima A. Garberson was born in Holmesville, Holmes Co., Ohio, Sept. 25th, 1840. She was of English and Welsh parentage, and was the seventh child in a family of eight. At the age of thirteen her parents emigrated to Iowa, and settled on a farm in Franklin Township, Story County. The family afterward moved to Boonesborough, Boone County. On March 14th, 1867, she was married at this place to Charles A. Weed, then of Story Co., Iowa, to which place they removed after their marriage. In June, 1869, they moved to Charter Oak Township, Crawford County, where her home has been ever since. They were among the first settlers of the Soldier Valley, where Mrs. Weed, a true helpmate to her husband, through years of patient industry and separation from relatives and friends, nobly assisted her husband in acquiring and managing one of the largest farms in Crawford County, and in rearing and beautifying their palatial home.

Mrs. Weed was the mother of eight children, seven of whom survive her, and were present at the time of her death. On the 10th of last July she was suddenly stricken with heart disease. A few months later dropsy set in, and in spite of the most eminent medical skill, and all the care and comfort that wealth and love could procure, she breathed her last on the morning of July 21st. Some few days before her death she expressed to her husband and some of her children the wish that she might be permitted to live until after Christmas; "but," she said, "I am not afraid to die, and if it is the Lord's will I am ready to go at any time." She was baptized in the Regular Baptist faith by Elder W. S. Dickenson. She was a faithful and consistent member of the church for many years, and by her presence and support contributed to its welfare. In joining and upholding this faith she followed in the footsteps of her father, who was a minister of the gospel in the Predestinarian Baptist Church. She was a kind and affectionate mother, obliging to friends, affable to all, and ever ready to help the needy and destitute ones. It seemed to be her delight to make every one around her happy. She had a large circle of friends, all of whom deeply mourn their loss. Her husband watched over her to the last, and by acts of kindness and love sought to soothe her hours of pain. The family has the heartfelt sympathy of the community, and one and all feel that they have lost a personal friend. May the Father who doeth all things well comfort the husband and family in their sorrow.

Respectfully,

ELIZABETH LOYD.

ASSOCIATIONAL.

THE Mount Pleasant Association of Old School Baptists is appointed to meet with the Mount Pleasant Church, at Pleasureville, Henry Co., Ky., beginning on Friday before the second Sunday in September, and continuing three days (6th, 7th and 8th).

Those coming by rail will buy tickets at Cincinnati, Louisville and Lexington for Pleasureville, via L. & N. R. R. Leave Cincinnati at 2:40 p. m., change cars at La Grange, getting to Pleasureville about eight o'clock Thursday, where they will be met.

THE Licking Association of Old School Baptists will meet with the church at Bethel, Shelby Co., Ky., on Friday before the third Sunday in September, and continue three days (13th, 14th and 15th).

Those coming by rail will buy tickets at Louisville and Lexington, via Louisville Southern, for Busey or Hemp Ridge, where they will be met on Thursday, the 12th. In behalf of the churches we extend a cordial invitation to our brethren and friends, lovers of truth in the gospel, to meet with us.

P. W. SAWIN.

THE Sandy Creek Association will meet on Friday before the second Sunday in September, 1895, with the Salem Church, in Marshall Co., Ill.

Those coming by the Illinois Central R. R. from the south will stop at Rutland, and those from the north on the same road will stop at Wenona. Those coming by the Santa Fe R. R. will stop at Toluca. Conveyance will be at each place to take people to the meeting. All lovers of the truth are invited to meet with us.

JOHN DOWNEY, Clerk.

THE fourteenth annual session of the Big Creek Association of the Regular Primitive Predestinarian Baptist faith and order will be held with the Salem Church, eighteen miles southeast of Mexia, Texas, on the Houston & Texas Central R. R., commencing on Saturday before the first Sunday in October, 1895.

Brethren and sisters, and preaching brethren especially, are invited to visit us. They will be met at Mexia, on the Houston & Texas Central R. R., on Friday before; or they will be met at Jewett, on the I. & G. N. R. R., on Friday before. If any should come to Jewett they should write to John Bishop, Farrar, Texas; or if they should come to Mexia they should write to I. R. Betts or R. O. Beene, Personville, Texas.

As there is and has been some trouble among the Baptists in Texas about the predestination of all things, we would be glad for some of our eastern brethren to visit us and see us, and find out what we believe.

JOHN BISHOP, Clerk.

WE desire to say to the readers of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES in Texas or elsewhere who may be interested that the Fellowship Association of Primitive or Predestinarian Baptists is appointed to be held with the Fellowship Church,

Upshur Co., Texas, ten miles northwest of Longview, and twelve miles southeast of Gilmer, to begin on Friday before the second Sunday in September, 1895.

Visitors will be met at Longview on Thursday before. If any should wish to come to Gilmer by rail they should notify us by letter or card. We extend a cordial invitation to brethren, sisters and friends. Those who have read (and who feel interested in the matter) charges against us, published some time in October last, would do well to come among us and see for themselves as to the truth of the statements, the greater portion of which we deny, as having no foundation whatever in fact.

H. B. JONES, Clerk.

THE Roxbury Association of Primitive or Predestinarian Baptists is appointed to be held with the Olive & Hurley Church, in Olive, Ulster Co., N. Y., on the first Wednesday and Thursday in September, 1895.

Those coming from the east will be met at Olive Branch, and those from the west at Shokan and Brown's. We extend a cordial invitation to brethren, sisters and friends to meet with us, especially ministering brethren.

By order of the church.

ALVAH BOGART, Clerk.

THE Mate's Creek Association is to be held with Little Hope Church, Pinsonfork, Pike Co., Ky., to begin on Friday before the first Sunday in September (which will be August 30th), and continue the two following days.

Williamson, W. Va., on the N. & W. R. R., is the nearest railroad station, twelve miles from the place of the association.

W. J. MAY, Clerk.

THE Spoon River Association of Regular Baptists will be held with the New Hope Church, in Greenbush, Warren Co., Ill., commencing on Wednesday before the first Sunday in September, 1895, at 10 o'clock a. m., and continuing the two following days, the same being August 28th, 29th and 30th.

Those wishing to attend, and coming from the west, will be met at Roseville, on the Rock Island Branch of the C., B. & Q. R. R. B. L. BEEBE, Middletown, N. Y.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SON, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date. This date denotes the time at which your subscription expires; and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

PICTORIAL HISTORY

OF THE

UNITED STATES.

By James D. McCabe.

This work is no dry mass of details—no bombastic effort to inflame the national pride, but a vivid and brilliant narrative of the events of our history, from the discovery of the American Continent down to the present time. It gives a most interesting account of the Indians of North America, from the time of the coming of the white men. The voyages of Columbus and explorations and discoveries of the different nations of Europe are related with graphic power. Every step of our colonial history is traced with patient fidelity, and the sources of those noble and, we trust, enduring institutions, which have made our country free and great, are shown with remarkable clearness. Then follows a clear and succinct account of our great Struggle for Independence, and the establishment of the Federal Union—the events of our career from the close of the Revolution to the administration of Harrison.

The work is printed from plain, new type, on fine calendered paper, and comprised in one octavo volume of 960 pages. It is splendidly embellished with nearly 500 fine engravings, embracing battles and other historical scenes, portraits of distinguished men, views of our principal cities, &c., &c.

Bound in Fine Silk Cloth, Plain Edges, $2.00, Post-paid.

CORRESPONDENCE.

FRAGMENTS.

THERE seems to have been a difficulty in the minds of some as to who are meant by the apostle in Rom. v. 14, who "had not sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression." I have thought he meant by that expression all who lived from Adam to the giving of the law to Israel by the hand of Moses. To sin after the similitude of Adam's transgression one must transgress a law given expressly to himself, as Adam did. From Adam to Moses no such law was given to any man or people; yet death reigned over all, showing that sin was in the world before the law of Moses was given. This proves the apostle's declaration (12th verse) that sin entered into the world by one man, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned. "But" (although sin was in the world until the law) "sin is not imputed when there is no law." The law of Moses was given that sin might be imputed, "put on account," as the word means, made manifest, made to "abound." "By the law is the knowledge of sin." Then, as if to keep the mind attentive to the fact that it is not by the transgression of the law of Moses that sin and death come upon any one, the apostle says, "Nevertheless death reigned from Adam to Moses, even over them that had not sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression, who is the figure of him that was to come." This is important; for if by the offenses of many death reigned by many, then how could we have received the atonement by one? If it had been by the transgression of the law of Moses that sin and death came, then each must be held for his own guilt. There would be different degrees of guilt, and some might not have transgressed, so that the atonement made by the obedience of one would not cover the ground. Besides, in that case this sin and salvation would all have been restricted to Israel, to whom alone the law was given, and the Gentiles would have forever been "without God and without hope in the world."

It is to be noticed that the declaration in the twelfth verse is the first part of a most important comparison, in which the salvation of all his people by the obedience of our Lord Jesus Christ is clearly shown; and that what immediately follows the first part of this proposition is in parenthesis, for the purpose of thoroughly proving the truth of the declaration that sin and death came upon all men by the offense of one man. This is done with great care in the 13th and following verses so that the application of the figure of Adam to the character and work "of him that was to come," which is Christ, may be perfectly clear. Then repeating in another from the declaration of the 12th verse, which forms the first part of the comparison, he brings to view the glorious reality to be thus illustrated and established. "Therefore, as by the offense of one judgment came upon all men to condemnation, even so by the righteousness of one the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life. For as by one man's disobedience many were made sinners, so by the obedience of one shall many be made righteous." This is the only ground of hope for a poor sinner. In the sight of the law all are equal offenders, for "through the offense of one many are dead" in sin; and so the free gift of grace by one man is "of many offenses unto justification;" for all the different offenses are really as the offense of the one man Adam. "For if by one man's offense death reigned by one, much more they which receive abundunce of grace and of the gift of righteousness shall reign in life by one, Jesus Christ."

"IF so be that ye have heard him, and have been taught by him, as the truth is in Jesus."—Eph. iv. 21. Quite often the expression is used, "The truth as it is in Jesus." This would imply that the truth as it is in Jesus might be different from the truth as it is some where else. But the expression is not correct. The apostle simply declares that the truth is in Jesus; and if you have heard him, and have been taught by him, you have learned that truth of him which shows you the falsity of those who walk in the vanity of their minds. You cannot learn the truth of them, nor of any man, for the truth is in Jesus, and it is known only by those who have learned Christ.

"BE not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap. For he that soweth to his flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting."—Gal. vi. 7, 8. Good seed is often sown in cold, unpleasant weather, and there is also a "winter before harvest." But the reaping of that which is sown in tears is always in joy. The reaping of that which has been sown to the Spirit is the crowning joy of the poor sinner in this mortal state. And it is always a surprise; for such a joyful harvest is never looked for by the poor soul when he is sowing thus to the Spirit. It is not with this sowing as it is with the sowing of grain in the earth, that the one who sows looks forward with confident expectation to the abundant harvest that shall reward him for all his labor. He who sows to the Spirit does not see the time of harvest, though his whole soul is turned with ardent longing toward the spiritual fields. He is breathing out his very soul's desire in prayers and supplications for the favor of God; for help to resist evil, and to deny ungodliness and worldly lusts; for the forgiveness of his sins; for the manifestation of Jesus as his righteousness, and for the enjoyment of the blessed privileges of the church of God. His desires are also expressed in act. He seeks the things he desires, and is found waiting at the posts of wisdom's doors. He seeks the company of those who talk of spiritual things, and thinks it no sacrifice or self-denial to attend upon the ministry of the blessed word of God; though instead of taking credit for so doing, he often doubts his right to intrude upon the privileges of the Lord's people. He loves the company, and would feel it a precious privilege to give even a cup of cold water to one of them. In all this he is sowing to the Spirit, though he is far from thinking of himself in that light. He is not acting with a view to a future reward, but is moved by the force of the longings and hungerings that are now within him. There is a greater comfort to him even in the cries and supplications and afflictions of his soul, and much more in the company of God's people, and in seeking heavenly things, than he can see in all that this world could give. But to every one who is thus exercised there come blessed reaping seasons, times when he reaps life everlasting, reaps the holy comforts and exalted joys of that spiritual life, and tastes the sweetness of that pure and healthful "fruit of the Spirit," which the flesh knows nothing of. These are times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. But those of God's people who sow to the flesh have a pleasant sowing time, as they think, while sowing the evil and dangerous seed. With the sowing, however, the pleasure ends. The reaping time comes soon, and it is a sad harvest, and often continues long. It is a time of trouble, and darkness, and self reproach, and coldness of heart, and felt worldliness of mind, with a sense of God's displeasure, and of being shut out from the joys of salvation, and from the fellowship of the Spirit, and from the blessings and comforts of the church of God. How often when seeking something which is entirely of the world, and after having obtained the object of our worldly ambition, we strive to persuade ourselves that we are not blameable in what we are doing, but are rather to be commended for our diligence; and how often such as are thus engaged in worldly work to such an extent that they deem it necessary to neglect the church for a time, will try to make themselves and others believe that they really have commendable motives in their extreme devotion to their work, and that they are thus preparing themselves to be more useful in the church and in the world. But though they deceive themselves, "God is not mocked." Those who have divine life, and who thus sow to their flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption.

"The path of the just is as the shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day."—Prov. iv. 18.

Christ is the path of righteousness, the true and living way,
The way from sin to holiness, from night to endless day.
In him alone are any just; by him came truth and grace,
He only can present us pure before his Father's face.

This is a glorious highway, and yet a secret path;
'Tis hidden from the carnal mind, but clearly seen by faith.
'Tis hidden from the prudent man, from wisdom's keenest sight,
But unto little helpless babes 'tis as the shining light.

Our Jesus is the Shining Light by which himself is seen,
As the highway of holiness to wretched,
sinful men;
No man can see how sinful man can e'er
be just with God,
Till this Light shows him washed from sin in Jesus' precious blood.

Then as the Light shines more and more,
still more sin's depths appear,
And darkness, by the Light revealed, fills the poor soul with fear;
But fear and godly sorrow cause the supplicating cry,
Which never fails to bring God's grace and mercy from on high.

O thou, most blessed, precious Way, thou glorious Shining Light!
O, come into my soul with power, and bless my longing sight!
O, may I know thee as my Way, and feel thee as my Truth,
And in thee, as my Life, rejoice, as in the days of youth.

Still keep me walking in thee, and along my journey shine;
Make darkness light before me, and may heavenly peace be mine;
May I know that griefs and troubles are but my faith to prove,
And that sorrow ever marks the path to better joys above.

And as sin's painful mystery is still more revealed to me,
In the mystery of godliness may I rejoice to see
The victory over sin and death, the new and living Way,
The Light that shineth more and more unto the perfect day.

SILAS H. DURAND.

SOUTHAMPTON, Pa., Aug 4, 1895.

HOPEWELL, Pa., Aug. 9, 1895.

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES—MY DEAR BRETHREN:—I herewith send you a letter from our dear brother, Dr. B. F. Coulter, which to me has been a great comfort. If you think best I would like to see it in the dear old SIGNS, for it speaks the language of a heaven-born child. How wonderfully encouraging it is to me to receive those dear, sweet messages of peace and love, and how they revive my fainting heart as they come to me laden with the good things of our Master's table. I feel very unworthy of them, and feel that it is all through the goodness and mercy of our covenant-keeping God that they speak or write to me at all; for I am fretful, I murmur and complain, and my thoughts often are, Hath a child of God such a wretched, complaining heart within them as I have? My decision often is, No. Surely I am none of his. But then comes the thought that Jesus died not for the righteous, but for sinners, of whom I am chief. On Wednesday night I fell asleep, and it seemed as though some one came into my sick room and cried, saying, "Can the Ethiopian change his skin, or the leopard his spots? Can the deaf hear, or the blind see? Can the dead hear, or canst thou form a man out of clay and breathe life into it? Canst thou remove a mountain?" "Ah, no," was my answer. I opened my eyes and found myself alone. How utterly impossible it is for us to go to God, except he draw us; and then can we exclaim, Salvation is of the Lord. Not that he will give it if we will let him, but that it is of the Lord, and he will give it to all his redeemed, for when he suffered, bled and died, he cried, "It is finished," and gave up the ghost. I have been very ill for several weeks, and have been prostrated three weeks, and have thought at different times that my time had come to go home to Jesus and see him as he is; and not my thoughts only, but those who have been by me have thought I had crossed the valley of the shadow of death, and have laid me back on my pillow, with the exclamation, "She is gone!" I have now commenced to improve, and if it continues I hope for the doctor to tell me to-day when I can get up. If it is the Lord's will I hope to be around again in a few days. Pray for me, that I may be found watching when the Lord cometh. My christian love to you. My desire is that the dear SIGNS will continue to come with the rich clusters from our Master's table, as in former years. Yours in hope of a better world,

LIZZIE HIMES.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., April 6, 1895.

MRS. LIZZIE HIMES—MY DEAR SISTER IN A BLESSED HOPE:—Your letter of March 28th was duly received, and read with much enjoyment and comfort. The love of God that is shed abroad in the hearts of his people constrains them to tell to each other the joys and sorrows that is their portion in the soul's experience, although there are ofttimes revelations of Jesus which the saints of God are favored to behold, that are so sacred and so filled with the reality of the divine life that it is impossible for us to attempt to utter with our polluted lips. It is recorded of Mary that after the angel had revealed unto her great and wonderful things concerning him who should be born of her, and cradled in a manger, all they that heard the marvelous things told them by the shepherds wondered, "But Mary kept all these things, and pondered them in her heart." But our uprisings and downsittings we are privileged to tell one to another. How wonderfully encouraging it is when we can witness to a brother's or sister's experience, from a like faith. You speak of being annoyed and impatient because your servant was not good to the children. Could you be otherwise and be human? It is only another evidence that the carnal mind is not made over, or purified in the regeneration. But "that which is born of the flesh is flesh," and always will be, undergoing no change. Your fear that you have not been born again, because you still manifest impatience, is an evidence in your favor; because, had you been as you once were, the fact of the annoyance causing impatience would not have given you a passing thought. The very desire to be pure and sinless, is an evidence of purity; and the sorrow in being still subject to the works of the flesh, is also the very clearest evidence that there is another principle within which is working the work of the Spirit, binding the strong man and spoiling his goods. Sometimes we talk about our little hope. Well, we talk about it that way because we cannot see the length and breadth and height and depth of the hope that is within us. But when we realize that longing desire of the heart for heavenly things, and a desire to be a follower of Jesus, all of which has taken the place of worldly desires and aspirations, we can see how this new and holy desire is born of the Spirit of God ("That which is born of the Spirit is spirit"), and embraces the whole of the salvation of the lost and ruined sinner, dead in trespasses and sins. The desire is the first fruit of the love of God shed abroad in the heart; the fruit also of the understanding which that precious love has engendered; for it has brought the dead sinner into a live and conscious condition. "God is love," and the implantation of his Word (Jesus) in the sinner's heart brings in that new and heavenly birth, life, and light, and consciousness, wisdom and understanding, hatred of evil, and a knowledge that the natural heart is "deceitful above all things and desperately wicked;" while embodied in this new generation is the light of faith, which points to the beauties and glories beyond this sin-cursed world, and which is held up to your vision, in your views of the golden sunset, taking the mind away from this world, where we have "no continuing city," but to that wonderous city "which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God." Now, my sister, has it not been your experience that many, many times you have no apparent foundation for your hope, save a longing desire to enter into the joys of the kingdom of God's dear Son? And because the desire is in you heart, you continue to hope. Oftentimes we do not know whether we truly love the brethren or not; and at such times that avenue of knowledge, that "we have passed from death unto life," is closed against us. If the preaching that we sit and listen to is as a dull and empty sound, we immediately conclude that our hope is vain, and that what we thought to be a reality is but a wild delusion. But after all, we can hardly ever lose sight of the fact that it is only the Lord's dear people that have such conflicts, such doubts, and such discouragements. But even when we know that, we decide against ourselves, in the conclusion that while this is true of the saints of God, yet ours is an outside case. The cry of our heart is, that we be delivered from these uncertainties and perplexities; and again, for a little moment, we are encouraged with a whispered word of comfort, that the children of this world are not in doubt, neither do they fear; therefore they need not, neither do they, desire deliverance. The Master has promised us that all the blessings and mercies that come to us through the riches of his grace shall be accompanied by persecutions. If we hope to get into the kingdom of righteousness by an easy and flowery way, other than that traveled by the saints, then are we bastards, and not sons. If we truly desire to follow Jesus, then we want to go just where he went; otherwise we should lose sight of his dear footsteps. Poverty is a portion of his followers; for he declared, "The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests, but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head." Sorrow and grief is their portion also; for he was "a man of sorrow and acquainted with grief." We read at least in one instance where "Jesus wept," but I do not recall a time recorded of him when he laughed. He went into death. Surely we must take part of the same, or how could we rise with him to newness of life?

I would like to write at greater length, but you are aware how little opportunity I have for writing lengthy letters. We talk about you very often; you continue in our minds and in our hearts. We have reason to be thankful that hospitals are part and parcel of our "Quaker City." Dear sister Mary Parker flitted across our pathway by way of a hospital, and away again, leaving sweet memories of precious conversations, with lasting affection. You also, with a willing good by, as a lithe bird, hopped off the hospital steps, spread your wings, and lit on our door-sill. How sweetly and securely are the lives of the saints interwoven. We all join in love to you, and desire that the Lord's will concerning you may bring you a speedy recovery.

Affectionately your brother,

B. F. COULTER.

OPELIKA, Ala., July 12, 1895.

ELDER F. A. CHICK—MY DEAR BROTHER:—I reached home Tuesday, and read your editorial in answer to my request. What you have said or written, as a matter of business in connection with other business matters, seems to be morally right; but the main thing in my mind was a "Thus saith the Lord" for the practice of life insurance. This was the question, and what I wanted to know was, Is it strictly in harmony with the faith of the gospel, or the faith of God's elect? Now I will submit a few things, and will ask you to answer these questions.

First, is obtaining a life insurance policy laying up treasures on earth or in heaven? Which looks the most like life insurance, the conduct of Lot, who pitched his tent toward Sodom, or Abraham, who lived by faith in the mountains? Can we carry out the will of Jesus by joining the worldly institutions of men? When we thus join men do we beware lest any man shall spoil us through philosophy and vain deceit, after the traditions of men, after the rudiments of the world, and not after Christ? Is it not departing from Christ, and joining ourselves to a citizen of this country? Is there any authority from Christ for christians to bank their money, and accumulate fortunes, and their brethren really in need, whom they profess to love? Is that in harmony with the teachings of Paul, who wrote Timothy, "That they do good, that they be rich in good works, ready to distribute, willing to communicate; laying up in store for themselves a good foundation against the time to come, that they may lay hold on eternal life?"—1 Tim. vi. 18, 19. If Baptists would spend the same amount in line with what Jesus teaches, would it not be better for them and their children? Jesus said, "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." What do the Scriptures mean when they teach us to keep ourselves unspotted from the world? Can we cover under these things, and then be clean as christians, and show the spirit of Jesus, who, though he was rich, yet for our sakes became poor, that we through his poverty might be rich? Paul said, "Having food and raiment, let us be therewith content." Jesus said that his apostles were not to be as the Gentiles, who thought more of these things than anything else.

Now, I would like to add a few words. There was always something about it that led me to question the righteousness of such a course. That is my own inward feeling about it. Somehow or other it seemed wrong to me; but I may be in ignorance, and may be wrong about the whole matter, and I want you and others to know that I am writing for information upon the subject. That is all I write for. I want to be right. Elder Mitchell has for years refused to have his life insured, from the fact that he felt that his example would ensnare his brethren in it. An insurance company offered to insure his life free of charge; but there was something in his breast that forbade it. I asked Elder Respess what he thought of it. He said it might be right for some, but he felt that there was something in his bosom that forbade it. Also, brother J. R. Battle, a Deacon, and the Moderator of the Harmony Association, felt the same way about it; and many others are in the same line. So you see that I am not alone in this matter. Some of our brethren have been hurt about it; yet some of our brethren in the ministry and in the church have life policies. Elder Isaac Jones, of North Carolina, said that if brethren in his section joined it they would lose the fellowship of the church.

Now you can see why I wrote you, for I had great faith in you as an honest, faithful, able, humble and zealous minister of Jesus, and hold you in the same esteem now, and would be glad if you would write again. If you desire you can write privately; but I would rather you would write through the SIGNS, as many brethren are interested in it. I hope you fully appreciate my position, and that you will not construe it that I am an antagonist; for I want truth and information, both for my own sake and the sake of brethren. It seems to me that the narrow way and strait gate cuts off some things, while the broad way and wide gate admits many things.

Yours to serve in love and in the faith of the gospel,

W. LIVELY.

LIVINGSTONVILLE, N. Y., March, 1895.

DEAR BRETHREN AND ELDERS WHOM I ESTEEM FOR THE TRUTH'S SAKE:—As I have read so many experiences of the children of God with so much comfort and joy, I would like to cast in my little mite with them. I felt many years ago that I would like to write and tell of the dealings of the Lord with me; and I did commence, but felt there were so many who had learning and could tell their feelings so much better than I could, that I threw it away. I am the same poor scholar to-day; but the Lord knows them that are his, and why should I fear?

I was born in December, 1816. I always felt to respect and obey my parents. The first I remember thinking about religious meetings was when Mr. Ichabod Crippen died. He was deacon of the Baptist Church here. He died in May, 1828. I was anxious to go to the funeral, at which Elder Ephraim Crocker preached. I was anxious to hear what he said, but there was a large congregation, so I could not hear much. He read two hymns, the first one beginning, "Show pity, Lord; O Lord, forgive." The other was, "Hark! from the tomb a doleful sound," &c. My mother was a weaver, and I had to wind quills. I put the hymn-book in the quill box and learned the hymns. In the year 1831 they celebrated the fourth of July at Huntersland, and a man by the name of Becker was killed there while loading a cannon, and I thought very much about it, for one to die so unexpectedly. My parents, James and Dalinda Borthwick, had made no profession at that time, but went to meeting occasionally. On the tenth day of July, 1831, Elder Crocker preached in our school-house, and in his talk said he saw a man who said that he must go to hell, as there was no mercy for him, he was such a sinner. The feeling came over me that I was as great a sinner as he was. I do not remember of ever before thinking I was a sinner. The thought followed me, but I tried to put it out of my mind. I was young, I thought, and there was time enough for me yet. My parents never said much about religion, and I did not want them to know how I felt. I tried to keep the subject out of my mind, but the more I tried the worse I felt. There were meetings two or three times a week, and there was quite an excitement. I attended the meetings, and finally thought I would like to have religion, but did not want anybody to know it. As time passed on my feelings got to be such that I could not hide them. I would take my Testament in my pocket, and hide myself in the corn field, and try to find something to relieve my feelings, for I thought I could not live; but there was nothing for me. About the middle of August the Presbyterians got a man from Albany by the name of Pepper to come and help them. After meeting he came to me and said, "Do you feel any better?" I told him I did not know that I did. He then said, "Why don't you?" I replied, "Because I cannot." He then said, "Yes, you can give up your heart as easily as you can take this book." He had a hymn-book in his hand; but I would not have taken his book for the world. I thought I held nothing dear in this world, but I wanted to feel differently. On the twenty-third day of August Elder Streeter preached about a mile from my father's house, and I went to hear him, but do not remember much about the preaching; but I felt that I could never get home. When I did get home I went up stairs to my bed, but dared not lay down. I do not know how long I sat up in my bed, but I thought if I should fall asleep I would surely awake in hell. While I sat there all my sins appeared to me, even things that I had said and thought little of at the time. I felt that I justly merited hell, but I desired to praise God even there. After a time I felt calm, and lay down and fell asleep. When I awoke in the morning the first thing that came to my mind was,

"Awake, my soul, in joyful lays,
And sing thy great Redeemer's praise."

O what a change I felt! I wanted to tell my father and mother, for everything looked so pleasant. Then the thought came that perhaps it would not last long, and I had better keep it to myself; so I said nothing about it. After a few days Elder Seth Paddock preached in our school-house. His text was, "What think ye of Christ?" I felt that I had never heard any preaching before. While going home I was walking on one side of the road and Mr. Crippen was walking on the opposite side. He said to me, "Do you feel any better?" I replied, "I think I do." Then something seemed to say to me, "There you are, trying to make folks believe you are a christian already." O! I wished I had not said it, for I thought that perhaps it would not last long. But I feel that same God is my God to-day. There were Presbyterians, Methodists and Baptists around me, and I thought I would like to be a Presbyterian, as my grandparents were such, and they took great pains to take me to their meetings. I went with them to Livingstonville, and we had to cross a stream of water. It was clear as crystal, and I felt that I could not pass it. I felt somewhat as did the eunuch, "See, here is water; what doth hinder me?" My grandmother Borthwick went twenty-five or thirty miles on horseback to have her children sprinkled, and my father was one of them. But I had to go into the water after a time, and so did my father. Time passed on until October, and the Baptists held a church meeting in the house in which I now live. I found myself on my feet and telling my little story before I hardly knew what I was doing. They received me and I was baptized on October 2d, 1831. The morning before I was baptized I had not slept, I was so afraid I would bring a wound on the cause. When it began to be light I got up, took my Testament and went out at the east end of the house. It was a bright morning, and the light reflected against the house so I could see to read. I opened the book to the twelfth chapter of Hebrews, and read, "Let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us." I read the whole chapter, and felt that joy which cannot be described. Elder Crocker baptized Eunice Wightman and myself on that same day in the little lake. I have had many pleasant remembrances since that time.

In the year 1832 or 1833 there was a two days meeting in Elder Crocker's meeting house, and the two Elder Meads were there. One of them preached from Ezekiel, about the valley of dry bones, where bone came to its bone. The other preached about David and Jonathan, whose hearts ran together like two drops of water, which could not be separated. My cup was full and running over.

"'Tis religion that can give Sweetest pleasure while we live;
'Tis religion must supply
Solid comfort when we die."

That same God is my God to-day. He is a God that has all power. There are many things that are fresh in my mind about the division of the church, but I have already made this letter too lengthy, so I will close. The name of the Lord is a strong tower; the righteous runneth into it and are safe.

I hope you will correct all mistakes, for I feel incompetent to write anything for publication; for I feel to be the least of all saints, if one at all.

"The Lord can clear the darkest sky,
Can give us day for night;
Make drops of sacred sorrow rise
To rivers of delight."

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES—DEAR BRETHREN:—Inclosed you will find a letter from our highly esteemed brother, Elder W. M. Perkins, which I would be glad to have published if you think best. I have not his permission, but I know he will forgive me this time.

With love to all and christian sympathy for our invalid sisters,

MARY J. CANNON.

EDGERLY, La., April 15, 1895.

MRS MARY J. CANNON—DEAR SISTER:—Your kind and interesting letter of March 31st came to hand some time ago, but owing to ill health I have posponed answering it until now. You speak of the many trials through which you have passed since we met in the congregation of the saints at Pilgrims' Rest, some ten years ago, and especially of the loss of your little son. Now call to mind the language of one of old, "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken

LIFE INSURANCE.

WE willingly publish the letter of Elder W. Lively in this number, on page 266, and desire to add some suggestions of our own. We commend with all our heart the kind and christianlike tone of his communication. We truly desire to emulate that spirit in this reply. Nothing is so good as a spirit of meekness and mutual forbearance in conferring together concerning things regarding which there may be a seeming difference of view. It is most certainly true of us all that we see but in part and know but in part. It is sure that wisdom will not become extinct when any of us die. Therefore we ought to be able to confer together in all kindness. Above all things, our object should always be to learn and do the truth. We desire to farther say that we would shrink from needlessly wounding the feelings of any one who may read what we write, and hope that we have not done so by any harsh or unconsidered word.

We desire, before proceeding to say a few things with regard to the matter of brother Lively's letter, to expressly say that we are not making ourself the champion of "Life Insurance" as a business, nor as a good way of providing for the future temporal interests of our families. It is outside of our province here to especially recommend this or any other kind of investment. We have not thought it our province to treat in the SIGNS upon purely worldly business interests. The only question that we understood brother Lively to propose in his former letter, to which our editorial was a reply, and the only question that we tried to answer, was whether the business of life insurance was an unlawful or sinful one in itself considered, so that it would be a sin for men to engage in it; and we cannot see that it differs from any other mode of trying to provide for the future of one's family, so far as the right or wrong of it is concerned. It should be a question with us as believers before we enter into any business, and a question which should be decided, too, Is it right or wrong? This is a legitimate subject for our consideration through the SIGNS, as it seems to us. We would not wish to discuss any business through the SIGNS, except as to its being a sin against God or not. We understood brother Lively in his first letter to ask just this, and to this we tried to reply in such a way as seemed to us right. We have written thus far by way of explanation, and will now proceed to say a few things in reply to the questions of brother Lively in his letter which we now publish.

It seems to us that the question in brother Lively's mind, in his letter in this number of the SIGNS, is not so much as to whether life insurance is right or wrong, as it is whether it is right for a child of God to try to save or put by money for the future in any way; and this opens up a wide field for our consideration, and presents a subject which is important, and concerning which very much may be said. We feel as though it is right to consider this matter in the light of the Scriptures, and of the teaching of the Spirit of God in our own hearts. It seems to us, we will here say, as right to strive to provide for the future of our families by a mutual agreement among ourselves to pay out a certain sum to our families from a common fund whenever any one of us shall die, as it is to provide for them by putting money in a bank, buying bank stock, or railroad stock, or bonds, or government bonds, or by investing in real estate, for the sake of securing an income to our families. It seems to us that if one is right all these methods are, and if one is wrong all are. This is all that we meant to say in our former editorial. Brother Lively in his letter seems to feel in about the same way.

We certainly do esteem the feeling of men like Elder Mitchell, the late Elder Respess and Elder Isaac Jones very highly. We have had some acquaintance with them all. Elder Respess was known all over the land among our people as a lovely, true, earnest, spiritual man. We frankly say that his feeling concerning any matter, as well as that of the other brethren named, would go very far with us. We should feel that anything concerning which they had doubts required careful consideration at least. It is good to have such a desire to honor God as to make us careful about what we engage in as to the business of this world. Yet, as we said, we cannot see that providing for the future of our families by way of mutual agreement among men to help each other (which is all that life insurance is, so far as we know) is any more wrong than to provide for their future in any other way that is honest and lawful. We should hesitate long before entering upon the saving of money in any way that we have named if we found that our brethren generally thought it wrong; but, on the other hand, the brethren ought to give the matter a very candid, a very careful and a very prayerful consideration before they censure a brother who may be thus striving to provide for his family after it shall please God to take him away.

We fully agree with brother Lively that we as brethren and fellow-pilgrims ought to at all times consider the poor and needy. It certainly is true that the love of God in the heart will tend to open our hearts and hands to the needy. We can conceive of circumstances in which it would be sinful to withhold anything for ourselves; and we are only too well aware of the hardening effect of a strife to accumulate riches. We have to lament over our own worldly mindedness daily. Yet while we are commanded to consider the poor, and to be willing to distribute, and to labor with our hands, that we may have to give to him that has need, there is no condemnation in the word for those who by honest industry, carefulness and frugality seek to secure for themselves and those dependent upon them a competence of this world's goods; and it certainly seems to us a more noble and unselfish thing to seek to provide for those dependent upon us than to provide for ourselves. Those who invest in life insurance can reap no benefit from it. On the contrary, it must be a tax upon them to the end, as a rule. Their loved ones alone reap the benefit.

In all the instances and texts to which brother Lively refers from the Scriptures great and spiritual lessons are taught us. In them all we have it clearly set before us that for the believer this world is not a home. The Spirit of Christ reigning in a man will cause him to seek the things that are above, and not things on the earth. By the example of Lot and Abraham we truly have set before us the great distinction between that child of God who walks by faith, and that one who looks to the things that are seen. The world, in all that belongs to it, is full of snares for the believer's feet. Even the most blessed of relations in this world, such as parents and children, husbands and wives, present many temptations before us. The child of God must walk softly before the Lord all the days of his life. The cares of this life and the deceitfulness of riches are always ready to choke the word sown and hinder its growth. Jesus is indeed the great example as well as the life of his people, and we all have to lament that we are in our whole life so little like him. It is not right to be grasping and selfish. We ought always to consider the poor; and no doubt we are most of us too often guilty of shutting up our compassion from them. To all these things which brother Lively has said we can and do give a hearty "Amen." We would be glad to possess the unworldly spirit of which he writes, and to live and do as a pilgrim, and not as a citizen of this world. We should be glad to see more written and to hear more said in this direction. We ourself are compelled with shame to confess our own worldliness; and we know that the Spirit of Christ and the spirit of the world cannot both together thrive in the same heart. In all this we feel to be in full agreement with brother Lively, and to lament that we ourselves set so poor an example of what a christian ought to be in these respects.

Yet to hold and to accumulate a portion of the goods of this world is not in any place condemned in the word, so far as we remember. Injustice, sordid grasping, selfishness, and grinding the face of the poor, are all condemned. To feed the hungry and clothe the naked is enjoined upon all who have this world's good. Diligence in business, carefulness, frugality, prudence, are all commanded or commended in the word. A man cannot be a miser and be a follower of Christ; neither can a man waste his living and follow Christ. It seems to us that all that we can do is to present the letter and spirit of God's word, and each believer must stand or fall to his own Master in these things. The Lord loves a cheerful giver; while he who withholds more than is meet tends to poverty. The member of the church who has this world's goods, and is not liberal to the poor, and who can allow his pastor to come and preach for him, and yet not liberally help him, reaps poverty of soul. He sows to the flesh, and of the flesh reaps corruption. Yet to accumulate and save this world's goods within rightful bounds does not seem to us to be condemned in the Scriptures. In all these matters the chief thing is love. If love reigns we shall not go far astray.

It does not seem to us that banking or fire insurance or life insurance or merchandising or savings banks are wrong in themselves. They are all simply methods of doing the business of this world. But a hard, selfish, grasping spirit is wrong; and dishonest practices in any of these things are all wrong. The institutions of men are all worldly, and to avoid them altogether we must go out of the world. Christians, wherein they have to do with any worldly thing, should deal honestly and truthfully with men. Government, national, state, county, district, all forms of government, are worldly institutions. A company of men for merchandising, manufacturing, railroading, for the practice of law or of medicine, are but worldly institutions. With some of these things we all must have to do; and it is often very hard to be in the world and yet not of it. None of these things seem to us wrong in themselves; but we may make wrong out of them; that is, we may let them control us, and lead us into wrong. This, it seems to us, should be our care, lest we be swallowed up by the world. We are fully persuaded that in this we see eye to eye with brother Lively; and we do not think brother Lively would take the ground that any and all forms of business that require the association of men, whether of two or ten or a thousand, are therefore wrong, and to be avoided by believers. Diligence in business is not incompatible with fervency of spirit and the service of the Lord. Diligence is better than slothfulness; and any form of business necessarily involves association with our fellow-men. Jesus did not pray that his disciples should be taken out of the world, but that they might be kept from the evil that is in the world. It is not wrong to engage in the business of the world, but avoid the dishonest practices of the world.

Perhaps the question may occur to brother Lively and to others, Why then should christians avoid the various secret societies of the world? We answer, Because of the false religious service which all of them engage in. But the matter of religious service does not enter at all into the things of which we have been speaking. They are all purely methods of conducting the business of the world; and all that religion has to do with them, as it seems to us, is to exhort the followers of the Lamb to deal honestly and in the fear of God in them all. We have not confined ourself to a presentation of life insurance in this editorial, because brother Lively's letter took a wider range. We hope that what we have written may be found according to truth.

Perhaps we may say that we have received several letters both approving and disapproving of our editorial to which brother Lively has replied; but as we cannot publish all, and as brother Lively has presented the substance of all, and as he first wrote requesting our views, we have thought best to give his letter and make this reply to it, and hope the other brethren will feel satisfied with this course.

We hope also that we have written in the fear of God, and that all will read with kindness, and judge what we have written by the word of God. All must stand or fall by that. If any expression in this editorial shall sound abrupt or unkind or harsh, we have not meant it so.

MINUTES.

As the time for the fall associations is drawing near, we wish to call the attention of our brethren to the fact that any patronage they can give us by way of printing their Minutes will be especially appreciated at present. Our long experience in the business has, we think, particularly qualified us for this work; and as it costs but a few cents to mail the manuscript to us, we hope they will remember us when they have the work ready.

ALWAYS SEND DIRECTIONS.

We have received of late quite a number of postal money orders without any letter of directions. It is much better to always send directions how you wish the amount of the order credited.

1 CORINTHIANS VII. 14-16.

"For the unbelieving husband is sanctified by the wife, and the unbelieving wife is sanctified by the husband; else were your children unclean; but now are they holy. But if the unbelieving depart, let him depart. A brother or a sister is not under bondage in such cases; but God hath called us to peace. For what knowest thou, O wife, whether thou shalt save thy husband? Or how knowest thou, O man, whether thou shalt save thy wife?"

Such light as we have on this or any other portion of the word we are ever willing to communicate to our brethren.

The beginning of this chapter shows that the text proposed for our consideration is part of a reply made by the apostle Paul to inquiries which had been submitted by the Corinthian church. That church at the time was in a tried and disordered condition, and many strange excesses were indulged in by some of her members, of which we have not time now to speak; but among other things which seem to have agitated them was the question whether a believing wife or husband was or was not by their conversion to the faith of the gospel bound to adhere to their conjugal vows, or whether the believing husband or wife in renouncing the world with its vanities should not also leave their unconverted companions. And again, in cases where the unbelieving husband would leave his believing wife, on her making a profession of her faith, or where the unbelieving wife would leave her believing husband on his professing his faith, whether the believing party were in such cases to yield to the dictation of the unbelieving party, or were they to profess their faith and walk in the order and ordinances of the gospel, even at the sacrifice of their unbelieving partners. The apostle gives his judgment in the 13th verse, that if the unbelieving husband is pleased to dwell with his believing wife, let her not leave him. And as a reason for this decision he argues in the text before us that he, the unbelieving husband, is sanctified by the believing wife; that is, that he is legally married to her and set apart by and in the marriage covenant as her husband. To sanctify is to set apart, to consecrate, devote, dedicate, &c; and the husband, however unbelieving, is nevertheless her set apart, consecrated and wedded husband. And the case is the same where the husband is a believer, and the wife the unbeliever. This cannot annul the marriage sanctification of the parties each to the other. "Else were your children unclean," that is, illegitimate, or bastards; "but now are they holy," that is, legitimate, lawful children of wedlock, heirs in a lawful sense. To be holy in a legal sense, is to be all that the law requires. And to be lawful children, requires that the parents should be legally sanctified or set apart to each other by marriage.

But if the unbelieving depart, let him depart. The believing wife, even to retain her husband, is not at liberty to renounce the faith, nor depart from the order of the house of God. The marriage covenant enjoins on the wife that she shall obey the lawful commands of her husband; but the law of matrimony gives neither the husband nor the wife the least control over the faith or conscience of the other party. "If he will depart, let him depart." The believing wife is not responsible for his wrong in deserting her; and if she suffers his displeasure, and the loss of his society, and of the support which he is bound to render, she is to suffer this for Jesus' sake. "A brother or a sister is not under bondage in such cases." That is, the believing is not bound to retain his unbelieving wife against her will, to compel her to live with him; nor is the believing wife bound to retain her husband, if he will depart; yet the departnre of the unbelieving party does not give the deserted party any right to contract marriage with any others; for the parties are sanctified to each other as long as they both live, whether they dwell together or apart.

For what knowest thou, O wife, whether thou shalt save thy husband? This salvation spoken of in the text, of course, does not mean the eternal salvation of the soul from sin, death and hell; for every believing wife and husband knows that there is no other name under heaven given among men whereby sinners can be saved, in that sense of the word, but the name of Jesus Christ. But although the wife knows that she cannot change the heart nor deliver the soul from wrath and damnation, still she is not to depart from him if he is willing to abide with her; for she knows not but she may save him as her husband; she may convince him that her faith in Christ and obedience to the gospel does not disqualify her for the duties of a faithful, constant and affectionate wife, and by her course of unremitting attention she may pacify him and save him. If he departs, he is lost to her; still if he will depart, let him go; but by no means do anything to encourage or provoke his departure.

The believing husband may not put away nor desert his unbelieving wife; for neither his unbelief nor his faith can dissolve the relationship of husband and wife; and he does not know that he must lose her as his wife because she is a pagan, or a Jewess, or an unbeliever in the Christian religion.

The Christian religion changes not the relations in which as members of the human family we stand to each other; the parent, the son, the daughter, the husband and the wife, the master and the servant, the magistrate and the citizen, all continue to sustain the same relationship the one to the other; and all obligations involved in those several relations are the same, whether we be believers or unbelievers.

The instructions in this case given by the apostle to the Corinthians have an important bearing on cases which sometimes occur in the present age. The principles laid down are evidently these, that all matters of region and conscience are wholly between God and each individual. No king, governor, magistrate, husband, father or master has any authority over the conscience of those who in temporal things are under them. While, therefore, wives are bound to obey and honor their husbands in regard to all that is legitimately involved in the relationship between them, and children to obey their parents, and servants their masters, these obligations do not release them from any obligation to obey God. No husband, master or magistrate has a right to infringe upon the rights of conscience in matters of religion, or to impose their authority in dictating what religious course those under them shall pursue. As individuals we are answerable alone to God for our religion; if it be good or bad, no other person can answer for it to the Supreme Judge. And hence, if a wife or a husband, a parent or a child, be called by grace, it is his or her duty to obey God in attending to the ordinances which he has enjoined, let the consequences be what they may. If a husband will abandon his wife because she has become a follower of Christ, let him depart; but let her not neglect her duty from fear of consequences. And if a wife be so bitter against the cause of Christianity that she will desert her husband in the like case, let her go; but let him not fail to do all things whatsoever Christ has commanded.

Let us not forget that he who would save his life (by avoiding the cross), shall lose it; and he who would lay down his life for Christ's sake, shall find it.

Middletown, N. Y., May 15, 1851.

THE ARMOR OF GOD, OR THE CHRISTIAN UNIFORM.

In closing our remarks on Ephesians vi. 10–18, we intimated our purpose to continue the subject, and to offer in this number some remarks on the exhortation of the apostle to the saints, to take to them the whole armor of God, &c. That God has provided for his saints a whole armor, shows conclusively, not only that he has purposed the safety, defense and ultimate victory of all his saints, but also that he knew from the beginning what would be the opposition of the world, the flesh and the devil, that his saints in their militant state should encounter.

It is consoling to the soldiers of the cross, in the midst of the tumult of war and clash of arms, to know that the great Captain of our salvation is perfectly aware of all the straits and conflicts to which they are exposed. This consolation they have from their knowledge that he has provided for them a full suit of armor, and also from the express testimony of the Scriptures. "In the world ye shall have tribulation," &c. If the Lord had designed to lead his people in ways that they had known, and in paths they were perfectly familiar with, it is possible that they might have been competent to select armor for themselves; but such was not the case. Their faith and confidence in God was and is to be severely tried, and this trial would not be a fair test of the quality of the faith he has given them, if they were not led in paths that they had not known. We could never know the virtue of any medicine if we were strangers to disease; nor could we realize the blessings of peace if we were strangers to war; nor could we appreciate the worth of light if we never walked in darkness. Our God is too wise and provident to allow that "precious faith" of which he is the author and the finisher, to dwell for any time untested in the christian heart. Its value could never be known by us if we were not subjects of such trials as are sure to develop its astonishing virtues. God's perfect knowledge of all the conflicts of his saints is manifested by the perfect adaptation of every part of the armor he has provided for us, and this will more fully appear if we contemplate the various pieces of armor which belong to this perfect set. In the order which Paul has called our attention to these in our subject we shall first notice the girdle. "Having your loins girt about with truth." In the catalogue the girdle is first named, not only to show that in its importance it is second to no other part of the uniform, but because no other armor can profit us in the day of battle without it. A girdle of leather was sufficient to bind to his person John's garment of camel's hair, but nothing short of the truth as it is in Jesus can serve as a girdle to the church of God. The ancients considered the girdle a very essential item of their equipage; it not only served to brace their bodies, and enable them to endure fatigue, and to run with greater speed, but in their girdle they carried all their weapons of offensive warfare; and while for these uses it was indispensable, it also served a valuable purpose in securing their garments, which were bound to their bodies by the girdle. This important item of the oriental soldier's equipage is used by the inspired apostle as emblematic of "the truth." How strikingly illustrative! How pleasingly instructive is the figure! In the absence of truth, what would all the weapons of our spiritual warfare avail us? Our preaching in its absence would be fabulous, vain, delusive, false; our doctrine, if untrue, could not protect us in the struggle, nor secure to us the ultimate triumph that we anticipate. Without the girdle of truth our hope would be vain, our "faith of God" like that of the old Pharisees, not according to knowledge; our singing and praying, presumptuous mockery, for God must be worshiped in spirit and in truth. The garments of praise and deliverance would fly to the winds in the day of combat, if not girded about us with truth. The christian soldier also carries all his weapons in this belt; for let him meet the enemy, and attempt to fight him with any weapon or argument that truth does not encompass, and he will fare as Samson did when shorn by his treacherous Delila of his locks.

It is the truth of our faith, hope and doctrine that makes them invincible; it is the truth that insures to them the certain victory; and the truth shall make them free.

But we may consider this part of the armor of God, in its application to the church, collectively as well as to her members individually. The church is a body, of which all the saints who have the armor on are members; and to keep a body of so many members together, as a unit, a strong girdle is very important. There must be a common bond of sufficient strength and durability to bind them together; such a bond can be found in nothing short of the truth of God. All the religious organizations which have ever been associated have possessed in them the very elements of their decay, because they have been strangers to the girdle of truth. No other religious body than the dove, the undefiled of our Redeemer, have ever been permitted to wear the girdle of truth. They may some of them wear the girdle of plausibility, self-interest, covetousness, love of fame or popularity in the eyes of the world; and some have made them bands of "iron and brass," like those of the king of Babylon; and they may have felt themselves strongly girded by legislative protection, kingly patronage and worldly influence; but being strangers to "the truth," they associate only to be broken; for "The enemies of the Lord shall be broken to pieces; out of heaven shall he thunder upon them." Their covenant with death God will disannul, and their agreement with hell shall not stand; for God will sweep away their refuge of lies. The church of God, as the body of Christ, is beautifully set forth, Rev. i. 13, clothed with a garment down to the foot, covering all his members, and girt about his paps with a golden girdle. This girdle of truth is truly a golden girdle; it is of the precious and pure truth of God; and, like the gold, it will bear the fiery trial, and in the crucible retain its intrinsic value; and the more fiercely it is tried, and the harder it is rubbed, the more brightly it will shine. With this blessed girdle, the gospel church was organized at Jerusalem on the day of Pentecost, and her constituents were chosen of God from the beginning, through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of "the truth." They were all taught of God, they all received the truth, and the truth made them free. They continued in the apostles' doctrine (which was the truth) and fellowship; for the bond of christian fellowship is truth. The unity of the Spirit can only be kept in this girdle, for it is the bond or girdle of peace. To prove this, let error or heresy be introduced among the saints of God, and how soon there will be war in the camp. "Having your loins girt about with truth." As a girdle about the loins must necessarily encompass the whole body, so the truth must be the complete girdle of the church of God. If she would enjoy internal peace and security, if she would be invulnerable to all her enemies, and if she would know her God and Savior, and fight the good fight, let her "buy the truth, and sell it not."

We hope to be understood as contending for truth, not only in word and in deed, but also in the spirit and experience of it. If we profess in theory a creed which is sound and orthodox, it cannot profit us, unless that truth has a place in our experience, a dwelling in our hearts. To profess the truth, and even to contend for it, when we know it not in experience, is a violation of its distinguishing characteristic. But let this girdle be buckled on to the saint, or the church of God, and its beauty will be displayed, in doctrine, in experience, in the ordinances of God's house, and in all our walk and conversation; and however offensive it may be to the world, to antichrist, or to our carnal nature, it will outlive all opposition and reflect immortal honor to God and the Lamb forever and ever. Amen.

We will notice other parts of the heavenly armor as soon as opportunity shall serve—perhaps in our next number.

DISCONTINUANCE OF ONE DOLLAR SUBSCRIPTIONS.

AFTER September first, 1895, we shall be obliged to discontinue our terms of one dollar a year for new subscribers. As frequently stated, our object in making these terms was to induce those who were not acquainted with the paper to take it the first year on trial at one dollar, on the same principle that we send sample copies free. Experience has taught us, however, that no matter how well the subscribers may be pleased with the paper, if they get it for one dollar the first year, they are less willing to pay the full price for a continuance of their subscriptions than if they had not had it the trial year at a reduced rate. Another serious difficulty that we have met with is that many old subscribers discontinue the paper in their own name, and have another name sent on for them as a new subscriber, while practically it is one and the same subscription. This of course thwarts the whole design we had in making the "Extraordinary Offer;" therefore we are obliged to discontinue it after the first day of next month.

away; blessed be the name of the Lord." It should ever be a comfort to us to know that the little children received special attention by our Savior, and upon them he pronounced his blessing, declaring, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven." I have traveled, my sister, the same road and have had to bear a similar stroke from the hand of my heavenly Father; but thanks be to God I realized that his grace was sufficient for me. As thy day thy strength shall ever be. It is, no doubt, a great loss to you in being cut off from church privileges and having no opportunity of meeting and mingling in worship with the saints of the Lord; but all our times are in God's hand; our dwelling places as pilgrims and strangers here on earth, our habitations, are appointed of the Lord. We are told that it is through much tribulation we must enter the kingdom of God. John saw all the redeemed host coming up out of great tribulation, having washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. So sorrows, afflictions and persecutions have been the heritage of the children of God through all ages. While I do not know that I have any special light on the verses mentioned by you in the thirteenth chapter of Revelation, it however seems clear to my mind that John was pointing out for long ages to come the character of governments that would arise; that they would be professedly religious, but it would be only the religion of the dragon; for all the world wondered after the beast, whose power, seat and authority were received from the dragon. These reigning powers, united and working to the same end, that is, to the spread of falsehood, error and delusion, and the persecution of the saints, should continue forty and two months. I believe that these forty and two months cover the reigning time of the old Catholic hierarchy, and that the time is closed; that the second beast, out of the earth, is already up, the Protestant beast, compassing sea and land to make proselytes, swelling their ranks by thousands, by whose numerical strength and power the image to the first beast will be complete, which had the wound by a sword and did live. Mystery, Babylon, according to history, always sought the aid of governments and the powers that be, to enforce their decrees, dogmas and religious tenets, and by the sword fire and fagot they have always propagated their religion. Well might John describe these antichristian powers by calling to view the leopard, the bear and the lion, the most ferocious beasts of the forest, kings of the animal tribes. Now we see a similar spirit among the Arminian hosts to-day, a grasping after law power; days and weeks devoted to prayer by organizations, for the purpose of establishing by law the Sabbath. Once established, the next thing will be to regulate every man's conduct accordingly, limiting what may and what may not be done on that day. This image of the beast is to have life, and also speak. It represents a moving, living, organized body, backed up with all the power necessary to cause that as many as will not worship the image of the beast shall be killed. Now, as law power was necessary to carry out the behests of antichrist under the reign of the first beast with seven heads and ten horns, it is fair to conclude that it will be called into requisition under the reign of the second beast and the image. The willing subjects of this beast and image seem to be composed of all classes, quite a motley crowd, small and great, rich and poor; not, however, poor in spirit. These characters are all to receive a mark, by which, I suppose, they will be recognized very readily. This mark will answer either in the right hand or in the forehead. It is worthy of notice that the mark is not in the heart, where God marks all his children. "I will put my laws into their minds, and write them in their hearts." This sign or mark of the beast will answer well for the workmongers, for with the hand they perform labor, and with the head they scheme and plan and devise means and organize societies, such as fairs, guilds, sociables, Sunday schools, picknics, &c. It is said in the thirteenth verse, "And he doeth great wonders, so that he maketh fire come down from heaven on the earth in the sight of men." What will answer better to this description than many of the scenes witnessed in the large protracted meetings? The heat of the fire often becomes so fierce, kindled by excitement, that many of the subjects fall prostrate and go off into a frenzied state. In the fourteenth verse it is said that these are deceived by the means of those miracles which he had power to do in the sight of the beast. Now, my sister, if you know of any religious people on earth claiming that sinners are saved from a burning hell by means, agencies and instrumentalities, instead of the blood and righteousness of the Lord Jesus Christ, I consider they will answer well for the characters who are to wonder after the beast.

Unworthily your brother in Christ, I hope,

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES—DEAR BRETHREN IN CHRIST:—I have just received and read a precious letter from our dear sister Bolt, of Canada, Ky., and it is so very interesting to me, and I think will be to the household of faith generally, that I have concluded to forward it to you, and hope you will give it a place in the columns of the SIGNS. The dear sister has both suggested and explained some interesting points that I hope we may all prayerfully consider.

Yours to serve,

W. J. MAY.

CANADA, Ky., June 24, 1895.

ELDER W. J. MAY—DEAR BROTHER IN LOVE OF THE TRUTH:—I seat myself this morning to drop you a few lines and let you know how much I have been thinking of you during the past two weeks. I have thought of you almost every hour, and have thought of writing to you, but feel so unworthy to write to such a humble and obedient child of God as you are. I enjoyed our meeting very much, and thought I never had seen anything carried on so nicely as you did the Lord's supper, or the sacrament. In administering the Lord's supper you followed the Bible, and that is what caused it to look so nicely. I do believe with all my heart that the presence of the Lord was there, whether he was with me or not. I could not help rejoicing, and really I rejoiced in heart until Monday evening. But ever since that time I have been in so many doubts and fears and much darkness; for I fear that I burdened the good brethren and sisters with my clattering tongue; but I had held my peace and had suffered so much that I felt like I was out of duty. I was so uneasy that I was almost startled at every noise I heard, and really was afraid. I have been trying to hold my tongue for some time, on account of the brethren and sisters; but it seems to me that I am dying, like a good many others. The Scriptures had almost left my mind. I had no mind to read, and I read but little. So I have come to the conclusion to try to discharge my duty as far as I can, by the help of the blessed Savior; for I do believe with all my heart that every one has a duty to perform in some way, some one thing and some another. When I joined the church I knew nothing about when I commenced praising the Lord; but when I came to myself I was praising him, who had done so much for me; and when I thought I was going to the lake, and the blessed Savior appeared to my view on the cross, the first I knew I was praising the Lord. And that is not all yet; I can call to mind several times in the past when I felt like praising him, away back, when I was quite young. I remember one time, when I was about fourteen years old, as well as I remember about my age, that I was at home alone at my father's house, sitting on the stair steps, praying the Lord to pardon my many sins, and the first I knew I was praising the Lord. I know I did not do this to be seen of men, for there was no one near. This I have never before told to anyone; but I have often thought about it, and sometimes have feared it was of the flesh. Of late I have thought more about it than ever before. I reckon when we are suffering in the flesh we cannot help seeking for ease, and also in like manner in spiritual things. Brother May, I am daily thinking of the brethren and sisters, and of the good cause of God; for I do esteem them above everybody else on earth, and the cause of God above all other causes. It does my poor heart good to hear the children of God give him all the honor, praise and glory, for he is worthy of it all. He leadeth in the way of righteousness, in the midst of the paths of judgment. When we do righteousness it is the Lord that causes us to do so; but when we do wrong it is Satan that causes us to do so, for he is in all wrong doing, and there is no good in him. There are only two ways; one is right, the other is wrong. And while there are only two ways, there are only two vines, but many branches. There is the good vine and its branches, and the bad vine and its branches. Christ says, "I am the true vine." And again, "I am the vine, ye are the branches." "Every branch in me that beareth not fruit he taketh away; and every branch that beareth fruit he purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit." When we get out of our duty, and do not abide in Christ (doctrinally and disciplinary), we are cut off. In this sense we are commanded to abide in Christ. "Abide in me, and I in you. As the branch cannot bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine, no more can ye, except ye abide in me." So if we abide in Christ, and he in us, we bring forth much fruit; for without him we can do nothing. O! it does seem to me that we ought to love him more, and also love one another more than we do. We do not manifest our love one to another as we ought. We ought to care for each other more than we do, and be humble at each other's feet, and not be so timid and easily touched. I have written you before that we ought to be at each other's feet for conviction; for we are all in the flesh and liable to err. This is the way I tried to explain feet washing at sister Nevada Runyan's last summer. It came to me in that way while we were reading and talking there; but I was too weak to explain it understandingly, so I said nothing about it to anyone but my husband. I am glad that someone else can explain it to our satisfaction.

I will now close, for I have written more then I had any idea of writing when I commenced. You may get tired of so much scribbling, but I feel to believe that you cast the mantle of charity on my weakness. We send our love and best wishes to you and your dear companion, and also grandma and the children.

Your weak sister,

SARAH E. BOLT.

NOTICES.

WILL you notice in a few numbers of the SIGNS that "Reminiscences and Letters of Mary Parker" is now reduced to sixty cents, sent by mail post-paid? There are a few hundred copies left on my hands, and I wish to dispose of them, and so I give the friends an opportunity to get a most interesting book at half price.

JOHN DOWNEY, Clerk.

WE desire to say to the readers of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES in Texas or elsewhere who may be interested that the Fellowship Association of Primitive or Predestinarian Baptists is appointed to be held with the Fellowship Church,

Upshur Co., Texas, ten miles northwest of Longview, and twelve miles southeast of Gilmer, to begin on Friday before the second Sunday in September, 1895.

Visitors will be met at Longview on Thursday before. If any should wish to come to Gilmer by rail they should notify us by letter or card. We extend a cordial invitation to brethren, sisters and friends. Those who have read (and who feel interested in the matter) charges against us, published some time in October last, would do well to come among us and see for themselves as to the truth of the statements, the greater portion of which we deny, as having no foundation whatever in fact.

H. B. JONES, Clerk.

THE Roxbury Association of Primitive or Predestinarian Baptists is appointed to be held with the Olive & Hurley Church, in Olive, Ulster Co., N. Y., on the first Wednesday and Thursday in September, 1895.

Those coming from the east will be met at Olive Branch, and those from the west at Shokan and Brown's. We extend a cordial invitation to brethren, sisters and friends to meet with us, especially ministering brethren.

B. L. BEEBE, Middletown, N. Y.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SON, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date. This date denotes the time at which your subscription expires; and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

PICTORIAL HISTORY

OF THE

UNITED STATES.

By James D. McCabe.

This work is no dry mass of details—no bombastic effort to inflame the national pride, but a vivid and brilliant narrative of the events of our history, from the discovery of the American Continent down to the present time. It gives a most interesting account of the Indians of North America, from the time of the coming of the white men. The voyages of Columbus and explorations and discoveries of the different nations of Europe are related with graphic power. Every step of our colonial history is traced with patient fidelity, and the sources of those noble and, we trust, enduring institutions, which have made our country free and great, are shown with remarkable clearness. Then follows a clear and succinct account of our great Struggle for Independence, and the establishment of the Federal Union—the events of our career from the close of the Revolution to the administration of Harrison.

The work is printed from plain, new type, on fine calendered paper, and comprised in one octavo volume of 960 pages. It is splendidly embellished with nearly 500 fine engravings, embracing battles and other historical scenes, portraits of distinguished men, views of our principal cities, &c., &c.

Bound in Fine Silk Cloth, Plain Edges, $2.00, Post-paid.

POETRY.

OUR RIGHTEOUSNESS.

JESUS, "The Lord our righteousness,"
My Father-God, my King,
My Savior and my Prince of Peace,
Thy praises will I sing.

Thou hast redeem'd my soul from death,
And sav'd me from my sin;
Thou art my life, my joy, my health—
God ever thou hast been.

Thou hast unstopp'd my deafen'd ears,
And open'd my blind eyes;
Thy soft hand wip'd my falling tears,
Thy love hast sooth'd my cries.

Thou hast adorn'd my naked soul,
And made thy glories mine;
My broken spirit hast made whole—
Be all the glory thine.

D. BARTLEY.

LONGING FOR GLORY.

I LONG for the appointed hour to come
When my dear Lord will call me home,
To dwell with him forever.
This longing heart will then rejoice
To hear my Savior's welcome voice
While passing through the river.

There I shall meet the Lord of hosts,
The exalted Lamb and Holy Ghost,
To part no more, no, never;
With saints and angels join to sing
The praises of my God and King
Forever and forever.

To this vain world I'll bid adieu,
To sorrow, sin and suffering too,
To afflict no more, no, never;
But see my Jesus on his throne,
And join in praises all his own,
Forever and forever.

CORRESPONDENCE.

HENDERSON, Md., July 15, 1895.

MY DEAR CHILDREN:—I am, as you know, getting along somewhat in years, and have been thinking for some time that I would write you my experience, as you would be likely to appreciate it, so I will now make the attempt.

I was born of Methodist parents, in the year 1826, and was brought up under very strict discipline, they both being conscientious, and my father a minister of that profession.

At a very early age I had many serious impressions; and if any one died I would think, What if I should die; what would become of me? for I was taught that if I was bad I should go to the "bad place," but if I was good I would go to heaven. But alas! how could I be good? I would get angry, and do and say things that were wrong, which caused me much grief. About that time the Millerites came out, saying that the world was going to be destroyed by fire. This was in, I think, my eighth year; and I became so excited that I dreamed that the world was on fire, and that some one took me up and carried me to a great, deep place full of fire, and was going to put me into it. I awoke in affright, and it worried me very much. I was a very delicate child, with nearly always some matter of complaint, and when I would feel worse I would think I was going to die, and that I should have to go to that awful place, because I was so naughty. I would go off by myself, and promise to be good, but they were promises soon broken; and when my health was better my trouble would leave me for awhile. I would not tell any one of my trouble, for I did not want them to know how bad I was. In this manner time passed on until my thirteenth year, when there was a protracted meeting going on near [illegible] and I attended it with my parents. Many were going forward to be prayed for, and professing religion, and as I felt I was a sinner, [illegible] also thought their prayers would help me, I went forward when they urged me, telling me if I would go forward and seek the Lord I had only to believe, and God would bless me. So I tried to praise him, and had my name put on the class-book. I knew nothing of any other denomination. I had not read any other books or papers but Methodist, except the Bible. Often they advanced ideas that I did not believe, and I used to tell my father so; but he said it was because I did not understand their illustrations. At the age of twenty-one I was married, and heard for the first time a different denomination, viz., the Old School Baptists. I thought it a hard doctrine, yet I was not prejudiced against it. Your father and I often talked on different passages, and of course I thought I had abundance of Scripture to prove my point; but when I looked them up I found they did not read as I had thought. About that time old Elder Staton preached in the neighborhood, and I went to hear him; and it pleased the Lord, as I humbly hope, to give me a hearing ear, and to open my eyes to see my true condition as a sinner; that I had a name to live, and was dead. O! the agony of this tempest-tossed soul. I think it was about this time that a candidate came before the church for baptism, and I witnessed the ordinance. To express my feelings was beyond my power; but I promised myself that I would never witness another. But the Lord's ways are not like our ways, nor his thoughts like our thoughts; and he says, "I will bring the blind by a way that they knew not, and will lead them in paths that they have not known; I will make darkness light before them, and crooked things straight. These things will I do unto them, and not forsake them." Sometimes my trouble was so great it seemed as though I must sink under it. But it pleased the Lord in his loving-kindness and tender mercy to speak peace to my soul, and let the light of his countenance shine in this poor heart, and I was made to rejoice in his love. This was in the spring of 1853; and when I went to meeting with your father, as had then become usual, they all looked so happy, and manifested so much love for each other, that my heart went out in love to them, desiring a home with them, yet fearing I might be deceived and deceive them. I had many doubts and fears, lest I had grasped the shadow and missed the substance; but on the second Saturday in August I was enabled, though with much fear and trembling, to go before the church to tell them what I hoped the Lord had done for me, a sinner, and ask a home with them. I was received, and was baptized the next day by Elder Peter Meredith, in fellowship with the Cow Marsh Church, where I still have my membership, though I feel so unworthy to be numbered with God's children. So much of my time I feel cold and barren, and have so many doubts and fears, that I seem shrouded in darkness, and the cry of my heart is,

"O! drive these dark clouds from my sky;
Thy soul-cheering presence restore."

I see so much of sin mixed with all I do, that I have to say with Paul, "For I know that in me (that is, in my flesh) there dwelleth no good thing." It is through Christ's righteousness alone that I plead for mercy. "For there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved." "One thing have I desired of the Lord, that will I seek after; that I may dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of my life, to behold the beauty of the Lord, and to inquire in his temple." My prayer is, Give me a pure heart, and create within me a right spirit, O Lord, that I may walk humbly before thee; and suffer me not to stray from thy paths, but continue thy watchcare over me, lest I fall through the weakness of the flesh. My desire is to follow in his footsteps, and keep his commandments; but alas! I come so far short; yet there are times when I feel to say, "Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him." When he makes us feel that his grace is sufficient for us, then do we bask in the light of his countenance, and cast all our care on him, and rest in his love at his feet. It has been nearly forty-two years since my name has been counted among the children of God; and when I look back over my past life, and see how far short I have come from what seems to me the life of a christian, I cry, Lord, if I am deceived, show it to me, and teach me thy will to know. But again, he is pleased to reveal himself as the one altogether lovely. Then does my heart rejoice, and I wonder how I can ever doubt again. But my strength and boldness, while he leads me, are turned to perfect weakness. When he withholds his presence, then I see where my strength lies. I hear dear brethren and sisters tell of the dark moments and trials through which they pass, and I wonder if it is possible that those upon whom I look as living a consistent life have to contend with the same conflicts that I do.

"When I turn my eyes within
All is dark, and vain, and wild;
Filled with unbelief and sin,
Can I deem myself a child?"

But, thank God, it is "by grace ye are saved, through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God." I am so glad that my salvation is not left to me, who am too weak of myself to feed upon the crumbs which fall from the Master's table; for he alone can prepare the heart to receive and feed upon those precious promises. O how good he is to me in all my wanderings to remember me in mercy; but his mercy endureth forever, while I have been so unfaithful in keeping his commandments.

"'Tis a point I long to know
(Oft it causes anxious thought),
Do I love the Lord or no?
Am I his, or am I not?

"If I love why am I thus?
Why this dull and lifeless frame?
Hardly, sure, can they be worse
Who have never heard his name.

"Could my heart so hard remain,
Prayer a task and burden prove,
Every trifle give me pain,
If I knew a Savior's love?"

"Dear Lord, if indeed I am thine,
If thou art my sun and my song,

Say, why do I languish and pine,
And why are my winters so long?"

I desire to be submissive to thy will, O Lord, for thou knowest what is best for me. Enable me to put my trust in thee, O God; for thou hast said that they who put their trust in thee shall never be confounded, world without end.

Much love to you all. From your mother,

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS:—I send you a letter I received from brother Keene. It was a blessed comfort to me, and feeling that it might be the same to others, if published, it is at your disposal.

Yours in hope,

W. F. CROCKER.

NORTH BERWICK, Maine, March 28, 1895.

TO FREEMAN CROCKER—DEAR BROTHER IN THE COVENANT OF GRACE:—We are assured that this covenant is ordered in all things and sure; and I feel assured that all the election of grace will find even to the countless ages of eternity all that they need therein. Provision is made by our God for all life's journey, and for our eternal felicity at his own right hand. All the unnumbered mercies of this covenant are sure to all the seed. Not one good thing shall fail the heirs of promise. For the covenant is signed and sealed and ratified, in all things ordered well. There are two very precious bequests in this new covenant to the heirs of the covenant that afford my soul some sweet satisfaction at the present time. I feel I must confess that I have a good hope through grace that my name is written in heaven; written in the Lamb's book of life; written in the new testament that Jesus sealed with his precious blood. This I know, dear brother, is a great statement to make concerning myself. Yes, it is wonderful to me a poor sinner, that such a worm as I am blest with proofs of Jesus' love, and hope to dwell with him above. The blissful period soon will come when I shall call the heavens my home. Though I am the chief of sinners, unworthy of the slightest thought of the glorious and gracious God, yet I must not deny, but I acknowledge, I trust, with adoring gratitude, that the Lord has been gracious to a sinner like me. I feel I can say with the psalmist, "I love the Lord, because he hath heard my voice and my supplications; thererore will I call upon him as long as I live." Let me now mention to you, dear brother, those two things that are the present comfort of my soul. Jehovah speaks in the new covenant, saying, "This is the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel after those days, saith the Lord; I will put my laws into their mind, and write them in their hearts; and I will be to them a God, and they shall be to me a people. And they shall not teach every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord; for all shall know me, from the least to the greatest. For I will be merciful to their unrighteousness, and their sins and their iniquities will I remember no more."—Heb. viii. 10–12; Jer. xxxi. 33, 34. There was a time when the law of God was not in my thoughts, and had no place in my affections. But in the dispensation of the fullness of times there was a time decreed of God when he purposed to call me by his grace and to reveal his Son in me. Our God, who quickeneth all things, quickened my soul into divine life, and with his Spirit wrote his law in my heart. The apostle says, "Forasmuch as ye are manifestly declared to be the epistle of Christ ministered by us, written not with ink, but with the Spirit of the living God; not in tables of stone, but in fleshly tables of the heart."—2 Cor. iii. 3. It is because of this work of the Spirit in us that we exclaim with the apostle, "I delight in the law of God after the inward man. We hunger and thirst after righteousness. "Hearken unto me," saith the Lord, "ye that know righteousness, the people in whose heart is my law."—Isaiah li. 7. The ministration of death written and engraven in stones was glorious; but the ministration of the Spirit exceeds in glory the ministration of the law. When our new covenant Head, Christ, the Son of God, came into the world for the salvation of his people, he saith, "Lo, I come: in the volume of the book it is written of me, I delight to do thy will, O my God; yea, thy law is within my heart."—Psalm xl. 7, 8; Heb. x. 4–10. The ark of the covenant contained the two tables of the law; not the broken ones. Ah, no, but the unbroken, the entire ones; and in the ark they were thus kept entire. Jesus is the fulfillment of this typical ark. He magnified the law and made it honorable. It is in him in all its fullness that believers see the ministration of righteousness, which excelleth in glory the covenant of works, the ministration of condemnation and death.—2 Cor. iii. 3. O yes, it is in our beloved Redeemer, in his finished work for our salvation and justification, that the superlative glory of God is revealed. His glory is great in salvation. It outshines in excellence the heavens, the sun and moon and stars, and the earth, that sheweth the handiwork of the Creator. It surpasses the glory of the Lord even in the damnation of the wicked. It so far excelleth all other glories, they are eclipsed by "the glory that excelleth."—2 Cor. iii. 10. In the cross of Christ we glory.

"Here the whole Deity is known,
Nor dares a creature guess
Which of the glories brighter shine,
The justice or the grace."

In Jesus mercy and truth are met together, righteousness and peace have kissed each other.—Psa. lxxxv. 10. All the perfections of Jehovah are revealed in the cross of Christ in sweetest harmony. When blessed, dear brother, with a view of this by precious faith, which is of the operation of God, how consoling and satisfying it is. Such poor sinners as we are need just such an atonement as the Son of God has made, in which he presents us holy and unreprovable and unrebukable before his Father's face.

"When I stand before thy throne,
Dressed in beauty not mine own;
When I see thee as thou art,
Love thee with unsinning heart;
Then, Lord, shall I fully know,
Not till then, how much I owe.'

But I have perhaps wandered from the thoughts that I wanted to tell you of. It is indeed a wonderous gift of grace to me, a poor, vile sinner, that the Holy Ghost has written in my mind and heart the law of the Lord. After the inward man my thoughts and affections are set upon the gracious will of our covenant God. I love my God; my soul thirsteth for God, for the living God; but I find another law in my members, warring against the law of my mind, bringing me into captivity to the law of sin that is in my members. This brings me to feel the need of that rich mercy of the Lord so blessedly promised in the new testament. "I will be merciful to their unrighteousness, and their sins and iniquities will I remember no more." Were it not for this gracious provision in the covenant I should be a wretch undone. But our God does abundantly pardon. Then I find, dear brother, these two things in my life, that with my "mind I myself serve the law of God; but with my flesh the law of sin."—Rom. vii. 25. Thus there is a conflict within; but

"My conquest is sure through his blood,
Though now there's a warefare within;
And Satan comes in like a flood,
To draw my poor heart after sin.

Fresh succor from Christ I receive,
Who did all my conflicts forsee;
And, through his rich grace, I believe,
He saved a sinner like me."

I am glad to learn of the welfare of the church at Hopewell Cape, and I hope that your love and fellowship in the gospel of Christ may continue and abound yet more and more. Though you are small and despised, and on every hand surrounded with errors, which would engulf you, yet the Lord is your Rock, and he has said, "They shall be ashamed, and also confounded, all of them; they shall go to confusion together, that are makers of idols. But Israel shall be saved in the Lord with an everlasting salvation: ye shall not be ashamed nor confounded, world without end."—Isaiah xlv. 16, 17. I hope you will not be found forsaking the assembling of yourselves together, as the manner of some is. The word of our beloved Redeemer is true, "There am I in the midst of them." "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life."

Having affectionate remembrance of you all in Christ Jesus, and still desiring your prosperity in divine things, I am your brother in the truth as it is in Jesus,

FRED. W. KEENE.

STATE ROAD, Del., August, 1895.

BROTHER BEEBE:—I have been requested quite earnestly by a ministering brother to write out my views on the two witnesses, spoken of in the eleventh chapter of Revelation. I presume that the request was not with the expectation of getting any new light on the subject, but rather to procure farther indorsement and confirmation of such letters already published as were worthy of confirmation.

There is a great deal said about testimony all through the Scriptures, and there can be no doubt of its having an important place to fill. One general characteristic might be given to it all. It is a testimony of the Lord's work in the salvation of his people, and is to them for their comfort and the strengthening of their faith; and it is also to him, to give him the glory due unto his name. He has never left himself without witnesses.

It seems that as to who and what are intended by the witnesses that Christ settled that matter himself beyond all controversy. He says to his disciples, "Ye are my witnesses; and ye shall bear witness of me." As to the various conjectures and efforts to fix upon some two particular things, as the Old and New Testaments, and Christ and the Holy Spirit, it will be enough to say now that the beast which rose out of the sea has not made war with Christ and the holy Spirit of God to overcome them; neither have they nor will they, nor the Scriptures either, have dead bodies to lie in the streets of spiritual Sodom. I know that Christ is called a witness, and a faithful witness, and that he bore witness to the truth; and the Holy Ghost is also called a witness, confirming the testimony of the disciples; but all this does not clash at all with the declaration of Christ that he has witnesses who shall bear witness of him. There is probably no other point of truth established with a greater number of testimonials than this, that his believing people are and shall be his witnesses. Even the persecution of enemies is a testimony; and it is on both hands an evident token of perdition to persecutors, but to them of salvation, and that of God. Witness may be borne to the great and important work of the salvation of sinners by many events and from different quarters, none of which require any anointing. These witnesses that the Lord Jesus has called and qualified to bear witness of him are repeatedly said to be anointed, without which they would not be competent witnesses. This same apostle John tells us that they have an unction (anointing) from the holy One, and that they know all things; and the anointing which they have received of him abideth in them, and they need not that any man teach them, but as the same anointing teacheth them of all things, and is truth, &c. —1 John ii. 20, 27. Christ himself was the subject of this anointing in a more abundant measure and to the same end, that he might preach good tidings to the meek, and bind up the broken-hearted, &c.; and it is expressly said that this anointing was with "the Spirit of the Lord God." In further confirmation of this we have the apostle's declaration, "Now he which establisheth us with you in Christ, and hath anointed us, is God; who hath also sealed us, and given the earnest of the Spirit in our hearts." This anointing of God by his Spirit, while it enables all the subjects of it to bear testimony of Christ, there is quite a diversity in its operations. So there are prophets, and apostles, evangelists, pastors, and those having the gifts of healing, and of working of miracles, and helps in church government and discipline. "But all these worketh that one and the self-same Spirit, dividing to every man severally as he will." It seems to be plain enough that all the Lord's people are subjects of this anointing, and whatever differences may appear in its operations that it is the same Spirit. There is a great variety in the testimony to be borne, and each and every one must be qualified to bear a part. This apostle says, "We speak that we do know, and testify that we have seen." In another place he says, "There was a man sent from God, whose name was John. The same came for a witness," &c. Again, "He whom God hath sent speaketh the words of God;" and "that which he hath seen and heard that he testifieth." It is all very plain, then, that these witnesses are to declare the word and work of God, and that they must have seen and heard that which they testify. Nothing will do but to speak that they do know, and testify that they have seen. God hath sent them, and he hath given them an experience in their own heart and life of the things of which they are to testify. In the victory that awaits the Redeemer's cause and kingdom revelation has coupled together with the blood of the Lamb the word of that testimony of these witnesses. If we are at all conversant with the sufferings, privations and persecutions that these witnesses encountered for the word's sake, and the almost uniform rejection of their testimony by the world, we can readily enough see why they should be said to be clothed in sackcloth. In that respect they had not, during all the time that Papal Rome reigned over the kings of the earth, been favored with a change of raiment. The length of time particularly prophesied of was from the time of the establishment of a state religion by Constantine, the Roman Emperor, and incorporating it in the Empire, until the Reformers (as they were called) broke the power of the Pope (ecclesiastical power, I mean), which period of time will be found to accord exactly with this prophecy. The woman was no longer confined to her wilderness hiding place. Strictly speaking, men are not witnesses until called to testify. Others may have as thorough knowledge of the case, but are witnesses only when they give in their testimony. A person may be killed as a witness by some ruling of the court, without any violence to his person. In order, then, to a person bearing witness, there must of necessity be a witness-stand, and an opportunity for the testimony to be heard. The church organization answers this end; and while she has men endowed with gift and knowledge to speak for her, they speak in obedience to her call, and as her mouthpiece. So it is really the church herself bearing testimony. While individuals die and pass away, power is given to the church to continue; and though driven into the wilderness by persecution, never once faltering in her testimony.

I will not now pursue the subject farther. An editorial in the SIGNS of the 27th of last March so fully covered the ground, and was so entirely in accord with what I understand the Scriptures to teach, that I should not have written at this time only as particularly requested.

The above is respectfully submitted.

DEAR BROTHER JENKINS:—I inclose you a letter from Elder W. Lively, which he wrote, as he says, for my comfort especially; nor did he labor in vain. Thinking others are just as much interested as I am, you will please give it a place in our dear old paper, if it meets your approbation.

While I sorrow for the departure from our midst of such a wonderful exhibition of God's grace as was manifest in sister Mary Parker, I am glad for her sake that she is gone.

Your brother, I hope,

E. V. WHITE.

OPELIKA, Ala., June 20, 1895.

BROTHER WHITE:—I have just been exercised in mind upon a subject which is of considerable interest to me, and will submit a few thoughts, and it may get on your mind and you may pursue and follow it out closer than I can do. It is the general and special providence of God. People will freely admit God's general providence, but how slow they are to admit his special, particular providence. His purpose is also general and special and particular. We will think so if we remember that he said the hairs of our head are all numbered, and not a sparrow falls without your Father. How people can believe in the general great things, and leave out the special and particular things, seems a mystery. The book of Esther, when closely studied, and just conclusions are drawn, will present the truth so clearly that a wayfaring man, though a fool, shall not err therein. That theory or system that removes God from the works of nature, providence and grace, must be a system originating in the darkness and blindness of the fallen nature of corrupt man. The man who views God by faith sees him in everything. The prophets, the psalmist and apostles thus saw God in everything, and could say of God that he is God, and beside him there is none else. From the motion of the microbes and animalcules, and atoms which float in the sunbeams, to the motion of the planets, and the stormy winds and the mighty earthquakes, all fulfill his word, and move in harmony with his will, which he doeth in the army of heaven and among the inhabitants of the world; and none can stay his hand, nor say, What doest thou? To attempt to follow out all the concatenations and the apparent clashings is not for us to do, but to accept what he says, and wonder, admire and believe. Why all these things on the stage of action? Why sin, death, sorrow, trouble, afflictions, darkness, and all the ills of life? What are they for? Why are they here? Jesus said, "I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, because thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes. Even so, Father, for so it seemed good in thy sight." Why has God formed the light and created the darkness? "Even so, Father, for so it seemed good in thy sight." Why has he by his hand formed the crooked serpent? "Even so, Father, for so it seemed good in thy sight." He said by the prophet, "I have created the waster to destroy." "Lo, these are parts of his ways; but the thunder of his power who can understand?" "The Lord has made all things for himself, yea, even the wicked for the day of evil." Why did he put a lying spirit in the mouth of Ahab's prophets? It seemed good in his sight. Why were the Jews thrown into the kingdom of Persia under Ahasuerus? Why did that king have a feast? Why did he divorce Vashti? Why was it kept back about Mordecai being a Jew; also Esther? Why and how did Mordecai save the king's life? Why was he not rewarded before? Why did Esther come to the kingdom at the time? Why did Haman refrain himself from the great envy to Mordecai? I tell you, brother White, when we look into this book we have the history of the world and the church in miniature, and we can see the hand of God in it all. We see there men acting out their own malicious wills, and yet the truth clearly shone that the wrath of man shall praise God, and the remainder of wrath he will restrain. When we really believe God, there is no ground for caviling. If we in a finite state could perfectly understand him, it would prove he was finite like us. Moses saw the hinder parts of the Lord as he passed by. What must be the face and mind of God, if we see only parts of him in his stately steppings in creation, providence and grace? How wonderful must he be! He is in all things; in the shining of the sun, in the air, in the seas, in the heights and depths. He fills the immensity of space. In him we live and move and have our being. We are the offspring of God. I am inclined to believe that often, yea, always, when people oppose the doctrine of God's purpose or predestination, it is for want of the knowledge of God in a true sense. "This is life eternal, that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent." By faith we understand the worlds were made; and by faith we see God, and see the wonders he hath wrought on the land and on the sea; and the psalmist could truly say, "O that men would praise the Lord for his goodness, for his wonderful works to the children of men." When men begin to limit God, we know there is something wrong; and it is because they are blinded by the god of this world, that vain philosophy which is nurtured and taught in the vain schools of men. "Beware," said the apostle, "lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain decent, after the traditions of men, after the rudiments of the world, and not after Christ." There is so much of that doctrine that tends to hide God and show man, that I have learned to hate it, and to try to use all the force and power the Lord has given me against it; that is, any doctrine that contradicts the doctrine that God is God, and besides him there is none else. It is wrought in me, and stands first and foremost with me. God, I trust, has so taught me, and in it I stand, and love it better than my daily food, and esteem it above everything, to know God and his Son Jesus Christ. What else need we here? And the glorious hope of the perfection of it hereafter animates us with new zeal. Then we shall know as we are known. I know, brother White, you believe this, and I am writing for your comfort especially, and hope it may come to you as it has to me, and God will enable you to take delight in the same. The knowledge of Jesus is excellent; as Paul said, "Yea, doubtless, and I count all things but loss, for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord; for whom I have suffered the loss of all things, and do count them but dung, that I might win Christ, and be found in him, not having mine own righteousness, which is of the law, but that which is through the faith of Christ, the righteousness which is of God by faith."

I must close. I could write a

WHAT DID CHRIST DIE FOR?

BROTHER W. R. Dedman, of Alabama, asks the following questions, to which we desire to give brief answers.

1st. "Did Christ die for the man of clay? If so, why did Jesus tell Nicodemus that he must be born again?"

In response to the first question we would say, if our brother means by the "man of clay" that man who was formed of the dust of the ground, and into whose nostrils God breathed the breath of life, so that he became a living soul, we answer unquestionably yes. This was the man who sinned, and who therefore needed an atonement. If anything is scriptural and reasonable, it certainly is that the sinner is the man who needs an atonement. We have never been able to find a Savior for anybody but a sinner. The Bible testifies that Christ died for sinners; and it does not testify that he died to save anything more than sinners. Still farther, we do not read of, and are not concerned in, any salvation that may be provided for any sinner but a sinner of Adam's race. We are a sinner of that race ourself, and we are therefore interested in this great salvation.

Why then must men be born again? Because the atonement is not the new birth. By the death of Christ upon the cross the sins of his people were all washed away, and the demands of the law of God against them were all met and canceled; but they were still dead in sin. These redeemed sinners, redeemed from the curse of the law, must now be made alive unto God. The Scripture in Romans v. 10 explains and settles the whole matter. We will quote it and leave this question. "For if, when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son; much more, being reconciled, we shall be saved by his life." Here the matter is summed up. We were reconciled, we shall be saved. Reconciled by his death, we shall be saved by his life; and to receive and be saved by his life is to be born again. It is the same man who partakes of both: the salvation by his death and the salvation by his life. Both are needful if we are saved in the Lord.

2d. "Is there an outward man and an inward man? If so, which one has the promise of eternal life?"

The Bible expressly declares that there is in the believer an outward man (2 Cor. iv. 16), and that there is an inward man.—Rom. vii. 22; 2 Cor. iv. 16. We have never read, however, that eternal life was ever promised to either the outward or the inward man; but eternal life is promised to the sheep, who bear about with them both the outward and inward man. When the Scriptures speak of salvation and eternal life as the gift of God, they speak of it being given to the man or woman who was destitute of it before. If the Bible anywhere declared that eternal life was to be given to either the inner or outward man, then we could make some assertion concerning it; but as the Scriptures are silent as regards this question, we are compelled to be also silent. But we feel safe in saying that eternal life was promised before the world began, by that God who cannot lie, unto the elect servants of God, because we read that this was so in the word of God.—See Titus i. 2; iii. 7; 1 John v. 11, 13, and many other places.

3d. "Why did not Paul see Jesus until he was born out of due time?"

Answer. Paul says (1 Cor. xv. 8), "And last of all he was seen of me also, as of one born out of due time." Paul does not say that he was born out of due time, but sets forth the wonderful condescension and mercy of God toward him by using the expression, "As of one born out of due time;" and the only reason why Paul or any one ever sees Jesus and comes to believe on him is that it seemed good in the sight of God. We know of no other reason why Jesus was revealed to Paul last of all the apostles but this. It seemed good in the sight of God to so ordain.

4th. "Paul says, 'Jerusalem which is above is free, which is the mother of us all.' Is there any other mother to the children of God?"

Answer. As subjects of grace, as men born of God, they have no other mother. "Of Zion it shall be said, This and that man was born in her." Men and women are born here. This is the new birth. This Jesus declared to Nicodemus when he said, "Ye must be born again." But Paul says to his brethren, "Ye have had fathers after the flesh," &c. We suppose that Paul would not deny that they also had had mothers after the flesh; and we notice that Paul urges believing children to honor and obey their parents, mothers as well as fathers. So that they have mothers, as the non-elect also do. But spiritually speaking, they are said to have but one mother, the Jerusalem which is above.

We trust that these brief answers may be of some satisfaction to our brother, and to other readers as well. We have tried to write as clearly as possible what the Scriptures teach.

C.

CALLING UPON THE NAME OF THE LORD.

BROTHER I. M. Gentry, of Tennessee, has requested some remarks from us upon Acts ii. 21: "And it shall come to pass, that whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be saved."

We will not here call special attention to the connection of these words, farther than to say that they stand at the close of a very wonderful prophecy quoted from Joel, which Peter declared was now fulfilled. The prophecy related to the ushering in of the gospel dispensation, and described the glories which belonged to it. The scenes enacted upon the day of Pentecost were the fulfillment of this prophecy. By this declaration of Peter we do not understand that this prophecy pointed out nothing beyond that particular day, or the scenes witnessed that day; but we feel convinced that the whole of the gospel dispensation is included in the prophecy, and that it signified the coming and work of the Spirit, or the Comforter, who should be sent after Jesus had ascended to his Father.

Now, in this gospel dispensation it is declared to be true "that whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be saved." This is a plain and simple statement, and yet what profound mysteries are connected with it. This declaration of holy writ enters into the very life of all christian experience. It is inseparably connected with the hope of every child of God. These words lead our minds into the mystery which had been kept hid from ages and from generations, that the Gentiles should be fellow-heirs with the Jews of the kingdom of heaven. This is signified by the word "whosoever." They also present the mystery of prayer; such prayer as is true and heartfelt, existing in and arising from the soul of every child of God. This is presented in the words "shall call." They also present the only being who can hear and answer prayer, and who alone can create in the heart the spirit of prayer. This is set forth in the words "on the name of the Lord." These words also present the theme of which the Bible is full, and which is also the chief concern of every one who truly prays, the salvation of sinners. This is presented in the words "shall be saved." Three times in this short text is the fixed certainty of the purpose and work of the Lord declared by the use of the word "shall." Thus it is seen at a glance that the text, though made up of few words, contains a vast volume of meaning. We do not know just what was in the mind of our brother Gentry with regard to this text, but desire to call attention to two things which have for many years been in our mind concerning it.

The first thing is calling upon the name of the Lord. This is prayer; and a true calling upon his name is meant. Nothing is more of an abomination in the eyes of the God of heaven than to call upon him with the lips, while the heart is far from him. It is a knowledge of this truth that causes the people of God such tremblings of spirit when they attempt to pray, lest it should be but lip service. O how often when attempting to pray, either in secret or in a public manner, are believers well-nigh overwhelmed and frightened away from the throne of grace by this fear, and also by the coming up into their minds of all manner of foolish, light, trifling, or of vile, blasphemous thoughts. Prayer to such ones is not a light thing. It is an awfully serious thing in the view of a child of God to attempt to pray.

But even though they fear and hesitate to pray, yet they do pray; and they pray without ceasing. They must pray; their necessities compel them to pray. The poor sinner whose lips are so unclean that he cannot pray or speak, yet prays all the time. His very confession of uncleanness, and of his inability to pray, is prayer. It is the very spirit of prayer. The chief trouble and burden of such an one is sin. Sin lies at the door, his own door. Sin, his own sin, finds him out. Turn where he will it meets him. It is mixed with all he does; nay, more than this, it dwells in his heart and fills his whole being. It has to such an one become a most grievous reproach and shame and burden. From this burden he cannot relieve himself, and no friend can help him. He has tried such strength as he has, and it has utterly failed him. Now such an one must cry for help; and because there is no other help he calls upon the name of the Lord. He is driven to thus call; he must call. Nothing can prevent his calling. Sore need is pressing hard upon him. His cry is sharp, earnest, poignant. It is real; it cannot be imitated. Yet not a word or sound may fall from his lips. It is the intercession of one who does not know what to pray for as he ought, but in whose heart the Spirit is making continual intercession with groanings which cannot be uttered.

This is prayer; prayer such as God hears and loves. It is such prayer as God himself begets in the soul. It is the vital breath of the soul. The soul cannot stop breathing. We can teach others to repeat words which may in themselves be good and right words, if the one who utters them feels them; but we cannot teach any one to pray. We cannot teach our little children to pray. If we put words into their mouths, and have them kneel down by our side and repeat those words, it is not prayer. If we teach them that this is prayer we deceive them. It is not prayer unless they really feel what they are taught to say.

It is a solemn question, Have we ever thus truly called upon the name of the Lord? Do our sins and our troubles so press us that as a cart burdened with sheaves we groan?

We believe that thousands of our readers know what it is to be so burdened that they cannot help crying. This is calling upon the name of the Lord. This is prayer.

The second thing we desired to notice was the assurance given that such as call upon the name of the Lord "shall be saved." In one sense they are saved. It is an evidence of salvation to call upon the name of the Lord. The first evidence that the disciples had concerning Saul of Tarsus that he was a changed man, a true disciple, was when the news reached them, "Behold, he prayeth." But those who call upon the name of the Lord out of a past experience of guilt and sorrow desire what they call for, and their desire shall be granted; they "shall be saved." So the leper was cleansed, and the issue of blood was stopped, and the blind received sight, when they called upon the name of the Lord; and there is no exception; there is no failure. "Whosoever" is the word. That means the poorest, the weakest, the vilest, the most sinful. It means the beggar as well as the rich. It means the slave as well as the free. It means whosoever has need, whosoever shall truly call upon God. But it does not mean the formalist, the legalist, the ritualist. It means God's humble poor.

In this text is settled the great question that is in every believer's heart, Am I a child of God or not? Have I any evidence of my salvation? How plain and simple is this testimony! "Whosoever shall call." This means the feeblest groan from the feeblest child who needs mercy. Such shall be saved. Here is the evidence. They call upon God; his name is all their trust. If, brethren, you can recall seasons in your life in the past, if it be so now with you, that you have called upon God in your distress, then this joyful news belongs to you; you "shall be saved." God has spoken it. He cannot lie; he cannot deny himself. Your glorious foundation stands. The Lord knows his own; and his word is pledged to save you finally. May we not bid you rejoice, for the day of your redemption draws nigh? What you most desire and long for shall be yours. As these truths have from time to time comforted our own heart, so may they comfort the heart of our brethren who may read what is here feebly written.

MINUTES.

AS THE time for the fall associations is drawing near, we wish to call the attention of our brethren to the fact that any patronage they can give us by way of printing their Minutes will be especially appreciated at present. Our long experience in the business has, we think, particularly qualified us for this work; and as it costs but a few cents to mail the manuscript to us, we hope they will remember us when they have the work ready.

THE ARMOR OF GOD, OR THE CHRISTIAN UNIFORM.

THE next piece of armor to be considered is the breastplate of righteousness. There is a divine harmony in the parts which constitute the "whole armor of God." The girdle, as we have already noticed, is truth. Could truth have a more suitable companion than righteousness? How closely they are associated in the whole economy of grace, in the attributes and perfections of the great and adorable Author of salvation, in the work of redemption, in the principles and doctrine of the gospel, and in the experience of the saints. Truth and righteousness must and do appear in every display of God's power and goodness, and in every emanation from him. And as the "whole armor" of the christian is of God, the girdle is truth, and the breastplate is righteousness. Men may "hold the truth in unrighteousness," but such an armor leaves too much room between the joints of the harness, and the warrior who contends for truth, and walks in unrighteousness, will be sadly exposed to the arrows which are "shot at venture," and, like Ahab, find to their cost that it will not do. The ancient warriors wore the breastplate as a protection of the parts which it was made to cover, including the vital parts of the body, the heart and the lungs, which cannot be disabled without seriously jeopardizing the whole body. And Aaron in his official character as high priest, representatively embodying the whole family of Israel, wore a breastplate of exquisite workmanship, provided by God himself; and on that plate were many very significant devices, and among them the names of all the tribes which he represented, showing not only that the atonement which he made was special and particular, that it was for those exclusively whose names were written on his breastplate, but also to show that all the spiritual Israel of our God are personally and collectively interested savingly in the righteousness as well as the sacrifice of the great High Priest of our profession, Jesus Christ.

But in considering the breastplate of righteousness, as a protection to the people of God, we must notice its adaption to, and utility in, defending them from the shafts to which they are exposed.

First, we may name the arrows or demands of the holy law of God. As sinners, we are by nature exposed to the wrath and condemnation of the law, and nothing short of a perfect and perpetual righteousness can protect a single soul of the human family from the deadly arrows of the law and justice of Jehovah. The righteousness of man, in his fallen, depraved state, falling short of the purity of the law, or failing to cancel its demands, will not answer for a breastplate. "If a law had been given which could have given life, then verily righteousness should have been by the law." But such was not the case, for no such law was given. "By the deeds of the law," therefore, "no flesh living shall be justified." But Christ has met all the demands of the divine law, honored and obeyed in all its precepts, and in his own body borne all its penal demands for the sins of his people. He has put away their sins by the sacrifice of himself, and by one offering perfected forever them that are sanctified. He has, on the behalf of his people, "Finished transgression, made an end of sin, and brought in everlasting righteousness" for them. And he "is of God made unto us wisdom and righteousness and sanctification and redemption." And as the prophet declares, he hath clothed his church with the garments of salvation, and covered her with the robe of righteousness, as a bridegroom decketh himself with ornaments, and as a bride adorneth herself with her jewels.

But we need not only to be freely justified by his grace, through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus; this will truly satisfy all the demands of law and justice, and completely shield us from death and hell, and secure for us an immortal inheritance among them that are sanctified; but while here on earth, in a militant state, we require protection from the assaults of those enemies with whom we have to be so continually in conflict, the world, the flesh and the devil, with all their hosts and batteries, their fiery darts and poisoned arrows. The armor contemplated in our subject has more especial reference to these conflicts; for the saints at Ephesus, and the faithful in Christ Jesus, unto whom this exhortation is addressed, were already brought into the experimental enjoyment of their complete and everlasting deliverance from the demands of the law and justice of God; but they were, nevertheless, in an unfriendly world, and often encountered foes without and fears within. In successfully contending with the world, the flesh and the devil, it is important that the christian soldier should have on the breastplate of righteousness. Or, in other words, that in all his conflicts he should be found fighting on the right side, in a right manner, and in the use of right weapons; for he cannot be crowned with success unless he strive lawfully. The old Pharisees had much zeal, but it was not according to knowledge; and they were destitute of this breastplate, and went about to establish a breastplate or righteousness of their own. The pagans and the papists, and many of the protestants, have drenched the earth with blood in their religious warfare; but none of them were right, consequently they had not on them the breastplate of righteousness. And if christians did not sometimes attempt to fight without being sufficiently careful to examine their armor, and especially their breastplate, the apostle would not have given the solemn charge in our text. The Scriptures are the standard by which the saints are required to test both the truth and the righteousness of their equipage. If they are girded with truth, the Scriptures will confirm them in it; and if they have on the breastplate of righteousness, the Scriptures will bear them witness that they are indeed soldiers of the cross of Jesus. But if led on to battle by impulse, by feelings, by human reason, by our own judgment, or by any other influence, we may be subjected to the reproof which our Lord gave to his disciples when they knew not what manner of spirit they were of. Peter, with all his love and zeal, had not on the breastplate of righteousness when he smote and cut off the ear of the servant of the high priest. The disciples when contending one with another who should be the greatest in the kingdom, were sadly negligent concerning the breastplate. And it is to be greatly feared in this day that much of the unpleasant contention and bitterness among brethren arises from want of conformity to this divine rule. All wrath, strife and bitterness among the saints would be avoided if we always had on this breastplate. But if our brother be in the wrong, and we encounter him, or his error, without being ourselves right, our contention will be unprofitable. When we would fight the good fight, then let us see that we are contending for the truth as it is in Jesus, and let this be demonstrated not by popular opinion, nor by the traditions of men, but by the Scriptures of eternal truth. And having looked well to the girdle (that is, to the truth of our cause), let us next examine our breastplate, and see that it is righteousness; for we shall vainly fight, even for the truth, when we fight with an unrighteous breastplate on.

May the Lord graciously strip us for the race, and harness us for the battle, and then shall one chase a thousand, and two shall put ten thousand to flight.

"And your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace." Having noticed the girdle and the breastplate, we come now to speak of the shoes required by the soldiers of the cross.

There are several good and sufficient reasons why the followers of the Lamb should be well shod. The pathway of the christian is not always smooth; there are some rough and thorny places in the wilderness through which he has to travel, and if his feet are not well protected his progress in the divine life will be retarded; for all tender-footed christians have to hobble painfully along, and at a very slow gait. But shoes are not only required for the comfort and progress of the saints, but also as a protection from the snares and gins which are secretly laid by their enemies to turn them aside from a straightforward march, and also that they may be in uniform. The Lord has graciously provided them for all his soldiers, and they are to be found in the preparation of the gospel of peace.

When the inspired prophet of the Lord caught a glimpse of the rank and file of the army of Israel, he cried out in rapture, "How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace, that bringeth good tidings of good, that publisheth salvation, that saith unto Zion, Thy God reigneth!"—Isa. lii. 7; Rom. x. 15. And in the revelation made to John, he saw the head and body and feet of him who is Head over all things to his church, and the representative and embodiment of all the church of God; and in his word he informs us that the garment with which he was clothed extended down to his feet, and that his feet were as fine brass, as if they burned in a furnace.—Rev. i. 13, 15. The feet, or those members of our Lord's body which come in contact with the earth, seem truly to be in a furnace, for God has chosen his people in a furnace of affliction; but being shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace, their feet, like the fine brass, are fireproof, the flames can no more consume them than they could consume the bush that Moses saw, or the Hebrews in the fiery furnace on the plains of Dura.

May we not infer from the natural import of the figure that not only the shoes are indispensable to a complete set of armor, but that the very first step cannot be taken in the heavenly warfare without them? If the apostle has attached so much importance to the shoes, is it not important that we should examine the unfallible record with diligence to see what kind of shoes it is safe for us to stand in? Thousands have presumptuously ventured into the field with their feet shod with some kind of human preparation, such as self-righteousness, voluntary reformation, pious resolutions, long prayers, and benevolent donations, &c., and some, like the Gibeonites, with the "old shoes" of pious parentage, and newly "clouted" by the assumption of the vows of their "sponsors;" but none of these could ever endure hardness as good soldiers; they would soon evince a painful degree of tenderfootedness when approaching anything like gospel ground. Of this sort were those who followed our Lord while they were fed plentifully on the loaves and fishes; but as soon as the discriminating doctrine of Christ and the order of his kingdom were held forth, they could walk in that path no farther; their shoes would not answer. We have had examples among the Old School Baptists of those who attempted to mingle with us; but although they seemed to run well for a time, their shoes not being of the right kind, they soon flew from the track, some declaring that they should freeze if they continued in the cold regions of Old Schoolism, and others protesting that if they could not be allowed to "clout up their old shoes" of means, long faces, and pharisaic righteousness, they could go with us no farther. And it will always be the case with all who attempt to travel the christian road without the preparation of the gospel of peace. To be thus shod, an experimental knowledge of the gospel of peace is indispensable; but where the gospel of peace is received, all its provisions are presented. The subject of grace is like the poor prodigal son, stripped of his rags, and the new suit is furnished from his Father's ample wardrobe. The gospel of peace proclaims, by the Father's special command, "Bring forth the best robe and put it on him, and put shoes on his feet." These shoes are not furnished at his expense; but they are provided by the Father, and presented in the gospel of peace; and before he can sit down to partake of the fatted calf he must have them on. By the shoes provided for the christian soldier, we understand the doctrine, order and ordinances of the gospel of peace, in which every child of God must stand. Such shoes can never wear out nor need "clouting;" like those of the children of Israel in the wilderness, they cannot "wax old," and with them on the saints shall be able to tread on serpents and scorpions, and to tread on the high places of their enemies, and to crush the eggs of the cockatrice, and receive no injury. In these shoes they shall run and not be weary, and walk and not faint. With these shoes the flames cannot kindle upon them, nor the waters overflow them. With these shoes their feet shall never slip; planted upon the everlasting Rock, they shall stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ has made them free, and be not again entangled with the yoke of bondage. They shall stand firmly in the day of conflict, while thousands shall fall arround them; and having done all, they shall stand.

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE.

TO MOST of our readers the above mentioned book is too well known to need any introduction or a description by us. While many of the Bibles have a Concordance appended, they are generally so condensed or abridged as to be of little or no use. Cruden's Complete Concordance, however, enables one to readily turn to any passage of Scripture of which they can call to mind two or three words, and in our opinion is the most complete and convenient as a reference book of any published. In addition, it contains many other aids in studying the Bible, as may be seen by reference to advertisement on last page. Remember, both the books there mentioned are CRUDEN'S COMPLETE.

little volume, but must now cease; yet my mind is still traveling in these glorious things of his blessed kingdom. May the Lord give you glory and delight in the meditation and reflection upon these things. I would be glad to get a long letter from you when you feel inclined to write to me.

Yours in hope,

W. LIVELY.

TOUCHET, Wash., July, 1895.

DEAR BRETHREN:—I feel a desire to give the brethren, readers of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, a short sketch of my travels from nature to grace, if I ever had any.

I was born July 4th, 1830. My mother died while I was in my tenth year, so I was left without the instructions of a dear christian mother. My father was a christian man, and brought up his children in strict morality and with reverence toward God as our Creator and Preserver; but he did not attempt to teach his children religion after any sect. I was not considered a bad or mischievous boy, as some others were. I seldom if ever used bad language, and had but few of what were called bad habits. While in my eighteenth year my father moved from Indiana, my native state, to Iowa, and settled for a short time in the neighborhood of an Old School Baptist Church. Here I had the privilege and attended their meetings quite regularly, although I cannot say that I felt any special intrest in the meetings for at least a year and a half after I commenced attending them. During this time I had thought my chances for salvation were very good, and far better than many of my associates. I believed it only required a little effort on my part to obtain forgiveness for the few little sins I felt myself guilty of; yet I enjoyed the society of my associates in the pleasures of the world, and could never get my consent to make the little effort to get religion. About this time I was taken down sick with a bad fever while at my uncle's house, and was kept down some four weeks. During this sickness I thought much about death, and what the result would be. I felt that I was unprepared for such a change, and that I had neglected the privilege while in health to make my peace with God. But as my health returned these serious thoughts left me, and I was as willing and ready as ever to enjoy the pleasures of the world. In the month of March, 1850, it pleased the Lord to give me a little insight of my real condition by nature. What a strange feeling it brought over me. I felt myself to be one of the most wretched characters in the world. It seemed that destruction and misery were in all my ways. I set to work with all my mind, strength and soul to try to gain the favor of God; but every effort I made only served to sink my hopes deeper in despair. I would frequently try to pray the Lord to have mercy upon me, a poor worm of the dust; but my prayers appeared all vainity to me. Four months of time passed with me, and much of the time I was in this distressed condition. I could see the justice of God in my condemnation, and could not see how he could save such a desperate sinner as I felt myself to be. My health failed fast. My relatives and friends became very much concerned about it, and some of them could see the despondency of my mind; but they supposed it was on account of my bad health, as I told no person about my feelings and trouble. In July of the same year I was plowing corn for the late Elder J. H. Flint, and was alone in the field. My burden at this time became so great that I felt I could bear it no longer, and I stopped the plow in the middle of the field. I had lost all strength, hope and confidence in myself, or in anything I could do to merit God's favor. In this condition I felt a desire to acknowledge God's justice in my condemnation, and to plead once more for his mercy. I bowed my face to the ground, and in the language of the publican cried, "God, be merciful to me, a sinner." In this last extremity I was brought to see Jesus as the one altogether lovely, and the Savior of even the chief of sinners, as I felt myself to be. How long I remained bowed down there I cannot tell. The first I remember I was again at the plow handles, praising God for his mercies, and viewing the beauty and holiness of God. Everything seemed to be praising his holy name. No tongue or pen will ever be able to describe the ecstacy of joy which I there experienced. I then felt that my troubles were all gone, and that I would be able to go through the world in peace and happiness. But, poor soul, how I was deceived; for it was not more than fifteen minutes before the tempter had me in charge, telling me what an impostor I was, and how I was deceived in what I realized to be a change from nature to grace. O how I longed to get my burden back again, that I might see more clearly how it went from me, and that I might receive a clearer view of my acceptance and the pardon of my sins by my dear Savior; but I have never been able to get it back. The greater portion of my time I have been made to travel in much sorrow; but the dear Lord has delivered me from time to time, as it seemed good to him, and I feel assured that his loving-kindness he will not utterly take away from me, nor suffer his faithfulness to fail.

Four years of time wore away while I was trying to see myself fit to be numbered with those whom I believed to be the children of God, and finding myself no better prepared. I presented myself to the Moravia Church of Predestinarian Baptists, in Appanoose County, Iowa, and was baptized by the late Elder Joseph Armstrong, then pastor of the church.

Brethren, I have made this little sketch of my travels as brief as possible; should you choose to publish it for the inspection of the brethren it is at your disposal; but if not, all is well.

I remain yours in hope,

R. CUMMINS.

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES—DEAR BRETHREN:—I forward you the experience of sister M. A. Walker. I feel that it will interest others, as it has interested me. Her experience is a Gibraltar against the great cry of the day, that thousands are perishing for the want of the gospel, which they say can be given them by loosing our purse-strings and giving liberally of filthy lucre. We ask, Who but God alone did this work? We must say, No human aid, but God alone; and it was well done, as many can testify, she being a good and orderly sister, the wife of Deacon W. A. J. Walker.

D. RICHARDSON.

JASPER, Texas, April 22, 1895.

DEAR BROTHER RICHARDSON:—You ask me to write my experience, and I have at times had an impression to write to you; but on account of the knowledge of my weakness, ignorance and imperfection I have been kept from either writing or speaking to those whom I esteem much better than myself. But knowing as I do that you can and do sympathize with the weak ones of the household of God, I now make the attempt. I do not feel that I have anything good to write you of myself, for I have for a long time realized that in my flesh there dwells no good thing; and if I am saved it is by grace, and not of myself. I will in my weakness try to tell you some of the Lord's dealings with me, hoping he may direct my pen.

I was raised in Barbour County, Alabama, within about a mile of the Chattahoochee River. When I was about twelve years old my father moved on the Cowaggy Creek. I think I was in my thirteenth year when it pleased God to show me my condition. I was dancing in our hall. I never had been to a dance, but I was full of mirth. My mother and her cook were going to the smoke-house, when the cook saw me dancing. She stopped and spoke to me, and said, "What would become of you if you were to die?" It was almost like a dagger to my heart. I went mourning day after day, and found no rest. I felt like I wanted to pray, but knew no more about prayer than a babe. Finally I decided to ask the cook how people prayed, but not letting her know anything about my condition. She told me they had to ask the Father to have mercy upon them for the sake of his only begotten Son, who came into the world and died for sinners. I repeated those words over and over, but it did me no good. I decided that I would ask the same old negro to pray for me, and followed her to the garden; but I could not ask her. I went and hid myself in my father's potato-house, where I had often gone before, but could get no relief; but I resolved to go once more, and ask the Lord to have mercy upon me. When I arose and went outside the little house I had never felt so happy in my life. I felt like I wanted to praise my God. My dear brother, I will say to you that at that time if I ever had seen a Bible I did not know it. There never was a Bible in my father's house while I lived with him. I know nothing about what he believed at that time. I had never heard my mother speak on the subject of religion. I knew nothing about an experience of religion, for I had never heard one related, nor had I ever seen any one baptized. I have always felt like it was the work of God with me.

Time rolled on until I was grown, and my father moved to Texas. I went to hear the Methodists preach, but did not like them. The people told me there was an old preacher who preached in the country. They said he would hunt on Sunday, and in fact was a bad man. Well, I had no desire to hear him. After I was married my husband and I went to hear preaching, and to my surprise who should I find but old brother Gibson, the so-called Sunday hunter. I paid good attention to him. He was the first one I had ever found that could tell me my feelings. Instead of finding one that I would hate, I found some that I loved. In March, 1865, I was made willing to go to the church. Owing to my sense of unworthiness I said but little, but was received. I have gone through many changes since then. I have had some sweet moments of joy and hope, and many doubts and fears.

"Mixtures of joy and sorrow I daily do pass through;
Sometimes I'm in a valley, and sinking down with woe;
Sometimes I am exalted, on eagles' wings I fly;
I rise above my troubles, and hope to reach the sky.

"Sometimes I'm full of doubting, and think I have no grace;
Sometimes I'm full of praising, when Christ reveals his face;
Sometimes my hope's so little I think I'll throw it by;
Sometimes it seems sufficient if I were call'd to die."

These lines express my feelings better than I can myself. I will bring this scribble to a close, for I fear you will tire of reading this. You must forgive all imperfections, for there is no good in me.

Your sister,

M. A. WALKER.

OPELIKA, Ala., Aug. 15, 1895.

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES—DEAR BRETHREN:—Will you please publish this letter at once, as I expect, the Lord willing, to be in Texas in September; and as I have been charged with preaching two-seed doctrine. I deny the charge. I will not define two-seed, as all know what is meant by it. It is further charged that I visit disorderly Baptists in Texas who hold the same doctrine. I also deny that. The Conecuh River Association, of Alabama, of which I am a member, is in correspondence with the Sulphur Fork, and the Sulphur Fork with the Fellowship, and the Fellowship with the San Marcus, of which Elder James Wagner is a member, and Elder James Wagner is a minister of God, who has been set at naught on account of his faith in God. I am satisfied that if the San Marcus was near enough she would be in correspondence with our eastern brethren, for she holds the faith as they do, and with the Baptists in Georgia and Alabama. Elder Pate, who went from Georgia, was the pastor of Mt. Olive, one of the churches in San Marcus Association, for sevaral years. I consider the churches sound in the faith. I expect to be at Mt. Olive, in Lavaca County, the fourth Sunday in August, and Saturday before; near Waco on the first Sunday in September; at or near Cherokee the second Sunday; near Palestine on the third Sunday; at Hopewell, near Winsboro, the fourth Sunday.

It is a kind of practice in Texas, if one reads the SIGNS, to call him an Arian, Two-seeder; and it seems that some think it a perfect confession of faith to hate the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. I have believed and enjoyed the SIGNS, and now read it, and expect to do so until it changes its faith and denies the Lord; then I will drop it, and advise others to do so; but as long as it stands firm upon the solid rock I will continue to read its columns and commend it as a medium of correspondence among the Baptist family. If for reading that I am denounced, I will have to suffer for the truth's sake.

Yours in the precious faith and hope of the gospel,

W. LIVELY.

DISCONTINUANCE OF ONE DOLLAR SUBSCRIPTIONS.

AFTER September first, 1895, we shall be obliged to discontinue our terms of one dollar a year for new subscribers. As frequently stated, our object in making these terms was to induce those who were not acquainted with the paper to take it the first year on trial at one dollar, on the same principle that we send sample copies free. Experience has taught us, however, that no matter how well the subscribers may be pleased with the paper, if they get it for one dollar the first year, they are less willing to pay the full price for a continuance of their subscriptions than if they had not had it the trial year at a reduced rate. Another serious difficulty that we have met with is that many old subscribers discontinue the paper in their own name, and have another name sent on for them as a new subscriber, while practically it is one and the same subscription. This of course thwarts the whole design we had in making the "Extraordinary Offer;" therefore we are obliged to discontinue it after the first day of next month.

APPOINTMENTS.

PROVIDENCE permitting, Elder Vail, of Waverly, Pa., will preach at Clovesville on Friday p. m., Sept. 6th, 1895, at one o'clock; at Union Grove on Saturday p. m., Sept. 7th, at one o'clock, and also on Sunday morning at eleven o'clock; at the yellow meeting-house on Tuesday, Sept. 10th, at 11 a. m. and 2 p. m.

J. D. HUBBELL.

ASSOCIATIONAL.

THE Concord Association of Regular Primitive Baptists will convene (the Lord willing) on Saturday before the second Sunday in September next, with the church called Head of Apple Creek, three miles south of Waverly, Morgan Co., Ill.

Trains will be met with conveyance at Waverly on Friday evening and Saturday morning. Also, the train will be met with conveyance on Saturday morning at Rohrer, on the Bluff Line R. R.

J. R. SPIRES, Clerk.

THE Licking Association of Old School Baptists will meet with the church at Bethel, Shelby Co., Ky., on Friday before the third Sunday in September, and continue three days (13th, 14th and 15th).

Those coming by rail will buy tickets at Louisville and Lexington, via Louisville Southern, for Busey or Hemp Ridge, where they will be met on Thursday, the 12th. In behalf of the churches we extend a cordial invitation to our brethren and friends, lovers of truth in the gospel, to meet with us.

P. W. SAWIN.

THE Ocohee Baptist Association is to be held this fall with the church at Rutledge, Morgan Co., Ga., and is to commence on Tuesday after the second Sunday in October, instead of Saturday before, and continue three days.

Rutledge is on the Georgia R. R., and brethren coming by rail can come either way on Monday, and can come down from Atlanta on Tuesday morning. Ministering brethren especially invited. Inquire for W. F. Streeter, Warren Ivy or Mr. Studard.

F. M. McLEROY, Mod.

THE fourteenth annual session of the Big Creek Association of the Regular Primitive Predestinarian Baptist faith and order will be held with the Salem Church, eighteen miles southeast of Mexia, Texas, on the Houston & Texas Central R. R., commencing on Saturday before the first Sunday in October, 1895.

Brethren and sisters, and preaching brethren especially, are invited to visit us. They will be met at Mexia, on the Houston & Texas Central R. R., on Friday before; or they will be met at Jewett, on the I. & G. N. R. R., on Friday before. If any should come to Jewett they should write to John Bishop, Farrar, Texas; or if they should come to Mexia they should write to I. R. Betts or R. O. Beene, Personville, Texas.

As there is and has been some trouble among the Baptists in Texas about the predestination of all things, we would be glad for some of our eastern brethren to visit us and see us, and find out what we believe.

JOHN BISHOP, Clerk.

THE Bowdoinham Old School Baptist Association of Maine will convene, the Lord willing, on Friday, Sept. 6th, 1895, and continue three days.

All lovers of the truth are cordially invited to attend with us. It is hoped that a goodly number of our ministering brethren will meet with us. The association will be held with the Bowdoinham Church. Those coming by rail will be met at the Bowdoinham station on Thursday and cared for.

THE Siloam Association of Regular Predestinarian Baptists of Oregon will be held (the Lord willing) with the church called New Hope, in Washington Co., Oregon, at brother Levi Martin's house, near Dilley, Oregon, commencing on Friday before the second Sunday in September, 1895, and continuing the two following days.

Those coming by rail will be met at Dilley on Thursday by teams and conveyed to places of entertainment. All lovers of the truth are invited to attend.

W. S. MATTHEWS, Mod.

N. J. SHANKS, Clerk.

THE Mount Pleasant Association of Old School Baptists is appointed to meet with the Mount Pleasant Church, at Pleasureville, Henry Co., Ky., beginning on Friday before the second Sunday in September, and continuing three days (6th, 7th and 8th).

Those coming by rail will buy tickets at Cincinnati, Louisville and Lexington for Pleasureville, via L. & N. R. R. Leave Cincinnati at 2:40 p. m., change cars at La Grange, getting to Pleasureville about eight o'clock Thursday, where they will be met.

THE Sandy Creek Association will meet on Friday before the second Sunday in September, 1895, with the Salem Church, in Marshall Co., Ill.

Those coming by the Illinois Central R. R. from the south will stop at Rutland, and those from the north on the same road will stop at Wenona. Those coming by the Santa Fe R. R. will stop at Toluca. Conveyance will be at each place to take people to the meeting. All lovers of the truth are invited to meet with us.

JOHN DOWNEY, Clerk.

WE desire to say to the readers of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES in Texas or elsewhere who may be interested that the Fellowship Association of Primitive or Predestinarian Baptists is appointed to be held with the Fellowship Church, Upshur Co., Texas, ten miles northwest of Longview, and twelve miles southeast of Gilmer, to begin on Friday before the second Sunday in September, 1895.

Visitors will be met at Longview on Thursday before. If any should wish to come to Gilmer by rail they should notify us by letter or card. We extend a cordial invitation to brethren, sisters and friends. Those who have read (and who feel interested in the matter) charges against us, published some time in October last, would do well to come among us and see for themselves as to the truth of the statements, the greater portion of which we deny, as having no foundation whatever in fact.

H. B. JONES, Clerk.

THE Roxbury Association of Primitive or Predestinarian Baptists is appointed to be held with the Olive & Hurley Church, in Olive, Ulster Co., N. Y., on the first Wednesday and Thursday in September, 1895.

Those coming from the east will be met at Olive Branch, and those from the west at Shokan and Brown's. We extend a cordial invitation to brethren, sisters and friends to meet with us, especially ministering brethren.

By order of the church.

B. L. BEEBE, Middletown, N. Y.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SON, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date. This date denotes the time at which your subscription expires; and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

PICTORIAL HISTORY

OF THE

UNITED STATES.

By James D. McCabe.

This work is no dry mass of details—no bombastic effort to inflame the national pride, but a vivid and brilliant narrative of the events of our history, from the discovery of the American Continent down to the present time. It gives a most interesting account of the Indians of North America, from the time of the coming of the white men. The voyages of Columbus and explorations and discoveries of the different nations of Europe are related with graphic power. Every step of our colonial history is traced with patient fidelity, and the sources of those noble and, we trust, enduring institutions, which have made our country free and great, are shown with remarkable clearness. Then follows a clear and succinct account of our great Struggle for Independence, and the establishment of the Federal Union—the events of our career from the close of the Revolution to the administration of Harrison.

The work is printed from plain, new type, on fine calendered paper, and comprised in one octavo volume of 960 pages. It is splendidly embellished with nearly 500 fine engravings, embracing battles and other historical scenes, portraits of distinguished men, views of our principal cities, &c., &c.

Bound in Fine Silk Cloth, Plain Edges, $2.00, Post-paid.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE CALL.

"COME unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."—Matt. xi. 28.

Sister Watie Beard, of Owego, N. Y., asked me last winter by letter to write upon this portion of Scripture, and it has been my wish to comply with her request if I could have liberty and opportunity at the same time. These words of the dear Savior were made precious to me soon after I was baptized, and I spoke of them, and of my comfort in them, the next time I was at a meeting of the saints. When the church of which I was a member afterward called upon me to exercise the gift which they thought was in me, and preach before them, I laid up this text for that important occasion, thinking that if I could preach at all I could do so from this language which had been opened to my mind so wonderfully, and whose sweet power I had felt and meditated upon through almost the whole of one night. When the appointed time came I read my text, but to my wonder and dismay I could not see or feel anything in it, no life or power. The handling of it was like handling dry, dead leaves. I could only talk a little while in a dry, formal way, and then sat down, weak and helpless and disheartened, doubting whether I knew anything at all of spiritual things. Those doubts did not stay with me long at that time, as they have many times since, for my soul was in the power and freshness of spiritual youth; but it was a dark and bitter experience for me. I learned then, what I have wished to remember but have often forgotten, that I cannot keep the life and power of spiritual things in my memory; but that the message which I am to deliver to the Lord's people must be given me at the time I am to speak it. All through the painful hours of that wakeful night that followed my first attempt to "preach," my soul was in anguish as I tossed upon my restless bed. I then resolved that if I must preach, as the brethren had expressed their minds to that effect, I would never again lay up anything to be used upon a future occasion, nor ever try to arrange beforehand what I would say, but that I would trust in the Lord, and if he ever gave me a message for his people I would try to deliver it as with the ability that he should be pleased to give me. But that resolution has been broken many and many a time, and always with the same result, a lack of liberty in what I had tried to prepare; though the Lord has sometimes surprised me, as my own way was hedged up, by opening a new way into new things that I had not seen before, which were for my own comfort as well as for that of the brethren.

Sister Beard and her husband, brother James C. Beard, were among the many dear followers of the Lamb whom it was my privilege to baptize in the fellowship of the church at Waverly, N. Y., and the other churches of the Chemung Association, between twenty-two and twenty-five years ago. My mind and heart have been much with those churches and brethren since I ceased to labor among them. We had many times of severe affliction and trial together, and many seasons of refreshing from the presence of the Lord, which those of us who are left will not forget until we shall follow the dear ones who have gone into the light of that glorious presence to go no more out forever.

Those churches are very dear to me. Some of them were raised up while I was serving in that association, in places where the gospel had not previously been preached, or not for many years. As the members were gathered in I was with them in the joys and sorrows of their early exercises, and in the varied experiences of their later christian journey, and with some of them in the closing days and hours of their earthly pilgrimage, till they passed on beyond our mortal view, where faith only can see them in realms of everlasting blessedness. I think of them a good deal, those that were there when I first came into the church, those whom the Lord gathered while I was with them, and those who have since been brought into the banqueting-house. My anxieties and sympathies are with them in their afflictions and sorrows, and my desires and prayers are for their relief and comfort, and that they may be given reconciliation to the Lord's will; and I am comforted exceedingly when I hear of spiritual prosperity among them, and know that they are faithfully served in the things of the gospel by the Lord's servants, who are made unselfish in this work, however unspeakably selfish they may feel themselves to be by nature. The Lord's servants "are called and chosen and faithful." They are earthen vessels, and in their earthly nature they are vile and corrupt; but they are also partakers of the divine nature, and in that nature they are pure. They have the gospel treasure within them, and they are made so anxious to minister this to the church that they cannot hesitate at any sacrifice, nor even count their own lives dear unto themselves, so that they may finish the ministry which they have received of the Lord Jesus, to testify the gospel of the grace of God. The one whom the Lord has made a minister of the gospel has no choice in this matter. The word is in him as a fire shut up in his bones. He might as well decide not to breathe as not to preach and serve in the gospel. Neither is it for him to choose where he shall labor. "Feed the flock of God which is among you." The command is in their souls, and they must go forward. They may complain and fret and struggle, but they must preach. And I rejoice that the Lord is stronger than they, and always does prevail. Where he sends them there they shall go, and what he bids them that they shall speak.

I felt sorry when I learned that the Chemung Association had ceased to be. I had been absent from only one session of that association in thirty-one years. The churches are so far from each other, since eight were added to the six that before composed the association, and some have become so few in numbers, that there appeared some reason for disbanding. But I much regret the necessity. I cling to old things, and I yet hope I may again attend a meeting of the dear old Chemung Association some time.

But how my mind and pen have run on along this pleasant road that leads among the memories and associations of by-gone years. A pleasant visit which I was lately privileged to make in the home of brother and sister Beard in Owego, N. Y., has brought these past scenes and seasons freshly before me, the labors and afflictions, and the times of rest and joy that were given us to suffer and to enjoy together, and the experience through all, in times of trouble as well as in times of peace, of "how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity." I was going to say that my heart knows why a dear brother or sister, bearing a heavy burden of care, and sorrow, and loneliness, and of anxiety for dear ones, and laboring under the heavier burden of a felt depravity of nature, a sinful heart and worldly mind, and longing for the company of dear kindred in Christ, and for the communion of saints, should feel a peculiar, restful power and sweetness in such words as those I am asked to write about, and having felt their power should desire to hear or read what some of the Lord's servants might be given to say in opening up their spiritual meaning.

I have written and spoken a number of times about some of the precious things I have seen and felt in this text, when it did not appear like dried leaves in my hand, but rather like fresh, sweet-smelling flowers and rich and fragrant fruit. When the Spirit has brought it to my mind it has always unfolded some new instruction and beauty, and led me into new fields of gospel truth; but when I have taken this or any other portion of the word of myself, it has proved but a desert where I could find no fruit. It is often a very serious question with me whether I have chosen a text of myself, or whether the Lord has chosen it for me. Sometimes it is given me to know.

The Savior had just been talking of things that pertain to the kingdom and power and grace and salvation of God. At the close of this discourse "Jesus rejoiced in spirit, and said, I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, because thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes. Even so, Father, for so it seemed good in thy sight." As I write these words there is much in my mind that I would like to say concerning them, they seem so full of the wonderful wisdom and grace of God in salvation. But for the present I only note particularly that these things are hid from the natural mind, that they cannot be found out by searching, that they are only known by revelation, and that this revelation is to babes; and that this is so important and so glorious a truth that Jesus rejoiced in spirit as he declared it, which is not said of him on any other occasion during his life of sorrow and grief in the flesh. The very thing which contradicts the foundation upon which worldly religion rests, which sets aside as worthless in this respect all the wisdom of man, and which is therefore hated by the world, is that which caused the dear Savior to especially rejoice; and it is the salvation and joy of his people. "In the wisdom of God, the world by wisdom knew not God." Then Jesus said, "All things are delivered unto me of my Father; and no man knoweth the Son, but the Father; neither knoweth any man the Father, save the Son, and he to whomsoever the Son will reveal him." The Son reveals the Father to those of his choice. This revelation is within them; it is their experience of sonship to God; therefore it is to babes, born of God, and made to know in their souls the relationship of children, and to feel the love of their Father. "Because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying, Abba, Father." "No man hath seen God at any time; the only begotten Son, which is in the bosom of the Father, he hath revealed him."

How is this revelation of the Father made to men? In what sense are those men, to whom these things of his power and kingdom are revealed, babes? The answer to these questions is in the sweet and precious language which he uttered next, and which we are more particularly to consider. This call is the revelation, or, the revelation is in the call; and the condition of those called is clearly expressed; laboring and heavy laden; without strength or knowledge or wisdom to perform the work; helpless as babes under its heavy burden.

There is a preparation necessary in order that the Lord's people may receive this revelation, and this preparation the Lord only can give them. He begins by setting the poor soul at work to keep the holy law of God. As fast as he seems to make any progress some new requirement seems to appear, and some new obstacle is revealed. As the law shines down into the depths of the heart it shows depths of depravity there that had not appeared before; and he who flattered himself that he was very successful in keeping the commandments, now sees disobedience to every one of the precepts of the law down in the depths of his heart, and staining all his life. Now he not only labors, but he is heavy laden. A man cannot truly be said to be heavy laden until he has more than he can do, a burden heavier than he can carry. While he can do a day's work in a day, though he have to exert all his strength, he is not heavy laden, for the burden of work is steadily thrown off at the required times. But when he can only do half a day's work in a day, the other half still rests upon him; and that unfulfilled task steadily accumulates until he is borne down to the earth under it.

Now there comes a time when the poor soul is made to see that all his work has been in vain; that he never has, with all his labor, thrown off the least part of the burden that is legally lying upon him. Instead of keeping the law, and coming into the favor of God in that way, he now sees that by the law his sins have only been made known to him, and their full weight made to press upon his soul, until it seems they will crush him to everlasting death. He is already condemned, and one who is condemned can do nothing but bear the penalty. He now sees that the wages of sin is death, and the wages are his.

Here is one who is weak as a babe before the law. He has no wisdom to see how one who is justly condemned can be justified, or how a sinner can be holy; and "without holiness no man shall see the Lord." He has no strength to meet and fulfill the law's demands, but must die under its curse. He is also as a babe in tenderness of feeling, in crying for help, and in longing for such comfort as only a mother can give. No matter how desperate and impossible of help the case appears, yet, like an ignorant little babe, he will still stretch out his hands and cry to be taken up and fed. And he has pure desires, and hungerings after righteousness, and in this sense bears the character also of the little babe, that is yet innocent of defiling words and actions. In the divine life, which now constitutes him a babe, he is pure and innocent, and the sinfulness he feels in himself is on that account an unbearable distress and grief. And although this tender, weeping babe does not know it, there is a promise to him of just the kind of mother-help and mother-comfort he is crying for. "As one whom his mother comforteth, so will I comfort you, and ye shall be comforted in Jerusalem."

Now is the time for this revelation of the Father, in his gracious power and tender care, to the babe: "Come unto me." This is the gracious call, and it is with power. How came this to ever be spoken of as an invitation? An invitation implies equality, and leaves the one invited at perfect liberty to decline. There is neither authority nor power of any kind belonging to an invitation, nor can there be salvation in it. What would an invitation do for a helpless babe, or for a man "without strength?" The most ignorant of mothers would be wiser than such theology, and would throw to the winds the doctrine of "invitations" and "offers" of salvation upon conditions, when her babe lay in danger. The Scriptures have not furnished this word for our use in this way, and yet "the man of God" is "thoroughly furnished" by them "unto all good works." No one is warranted in going beyond that furnishing.

"Come unto me." This is not a mere call or command addressed to the natural mind, and submitted to the judgment of the one called for decision as to the expediency or necessity of obeying it. I call some one, it may be a child, whom affection as well as parental authority would prompt to obey, or a servant, who would feel obliged by duty or self interest to obey my call, or a stranger, who would not acknowledge my right to command his approach, yet who might come from some other motive. In each of these cases the one called decides whether to come or not. But in the case of my call we must also consider our relative situations and conditions. There may be obstacles of distance, situation or condition that neither of us can overcome so as to make obedience to the call possible. The one called may be at the base of a perpendicular cliff, while I am at the top, or on the opposite side of an impassable river, or on a sick bed, or lying wounded and half dead in the depth of a forest, or bound in prison awaiting the execution of a just sentence of the law. In such cases the words of a call, falling upon the ear and received in the natural mind, would only aggravate the distress by making more clearly apparent the impossibility of deliverance from it. In such a call there is no more salvation for those who are "without strength" than in an invitation.

"Come unto me." This is the call of one who has been given "all power in heaven and in earth;" of one who has been given "power over all flesh, that he should give eternal life to as many as the Father hath given him." It is the call of him who has obtained power over death and the grave. It is the call of Jesus to his redeemed, bringing them from darkness to light, from bondage into liberty and joy. It is the call of the Shepherd, which is heard by his sheep wherever they may be, and which has power to "gather them from all the places where they have been scattered in the cloudy and dark day," and make them to lie down in the green pastures of his love and grace. No sound of words has fallen upon the ear, no form has appeared to the natural vision, no proposition or command has been received into the mind. The struggle under the burden of legal work has still continued, even though all hope of becoming righteous by anything we can do has gone. The anxieties and cryings under a feeling of guilt still go on, and the hungerings for mercy and grace, though we can see no possible way in which salvation can come to one justly condemned, or rest to one whose work is all yet undone. But what wonderful change of feeling is this down in the depths of the soul? Instead of gloom and sorrow and fearful apprehension there is now light and joy and quietness. We do not know how or when the darkness and bondage went, but they are gone, and no burden lies upon us. We feel for the burden, but it has, in some mysterious way unknown to us, disappeared. No task is before us, no work waits to be done. Where are the sins which so harassed our souls? Where are our guilt and shame? All gone, we know not how or when or where; we only know that our conscience does not feel the sting and weight of them now, but is clear and pure; and we are lost in wonder, and melted in thankfulness, to realize a holy feeling of purity and righteousness within us, and a peace that passeth all understanding resting with solemn delight upon our heart.

"Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." This tells the cause and unfolds to our spiritual understanding the secret of what we have felt. These words have been spoken to us, and it is their power that has wrought this wonderful change in our souls. Our natural ear did not hear them, and they were not in our mind at the time of our mysterious deliverance; but their spirit and life were within us, and now they tell that experience as no other words can do. It was that sweet and loving and powerful "Come unto me" that we felt, and which brought us unto Jesus, and caused us to enter into his rest. The poor, laboring and heavy laden soul has no more to do in considering this call, in deciding whether or not to obey it, and in bringing about his own obedience, than Lazarus had when "Jesus cried with a loud voice, Lazarus, come forth; and he that was dead came forth, bound hand and foot with grave clothes, and his face was bound about with a napkin." The word of Jesus did all the work; brought him from death to life, lifted him up, moved him out of the grave, and gave him strength to stand, bound as his feet were together, until, by the command of Jesus, willing hands loosed him and let him go. So at this call the poor, laboring and heavy laden sinner comes at once from his darkness and bondage to Jesus. Only Jesus could have released us from that bondage, for he had done the work. To feel that freedom is to realize the presence of Jesus. We are with him, our thoughts are toward him, and a holy love for him is in our souls.

The best evidence, the only evidence that Jesus has called us with this sweet gospel call is that we feel this gospel rest; for only he who has finished the work for us could give this rest. This rest is, indeed, our first knowledge of the call. It is made known in its fulfillment, as the first knowledge we had of the law of sin and death was when the commandment came, and sin revived, and we died. He first works his salvation in us, and then interprets to us his own work.

If we have seen Jesus his own call brought us to him; and in the sense that we see him we are with him in his holy place, for none can see him but his own; none can see him but those who are born of God. "If we know him that is true, we are in him that is true; even in his Son Jesus Christ." His love felt in our hearts is an evidence of this relationship, for "he that loveth is born of God." This experience of what is expressed by these words of Jesus is the revelation of the Father by the Son to his chosen ones; it is the experience of sonship in the child, the revelation of heavenly things to the new born babe, whose desires and longings and cries are now for the things that belong to his Father, and to his heavenly kingdom. By this rest which is given us from the vain labors of the law our heirship to heavenly things is made known to us. The works of the law were finished by the dear Savior for us, that we might come into that inheritance in his kingdom. Caused by his power to believe, "we enter into his rest," and entering into that gospel rest we "cease from our own works, as God did from his." Henceforth our days upon earth are a holy Sabbath of the Lord unto us, in which we are not to do our own work any more, but rest in the blessed work of Jesus, and render unceasing and undivided praises unto his glorious name forever.

This gospel rest is not a slothful, idle state, but one of lively animation and activity. It is a rest from legal works, and from the harassing bondage of sin, but it is an entrance into the field of gospel work, the "good works which God has before ordained that we should walk in them." Those who have felt this gospel rest, who have rejoiced in the forgiveness of their sins, realize now a burden of a very different nature. It is a desire to follow Jesus, to tell of his goodness and glory, to work out their own salvation, which he has worked in them, by obedience to his sweet commands. This rest which he has given them fills them with holy zeal, and they want to do what he would have them do. They feel "under law to Christ," and it is a pleasant bondage. All this is because of his further command, "Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart; and ye shall find rest to your souls; for my yoke is easy and my burden is light." He thus calls them into his holy service, in which they shall henceforth find their true delight. The holy yoke of his fellowship is therein. In every act of gospel obedience they take this yoke upon them, and they do indeed find it easy. When we think of being called to take any part in the holy service of God, or engage in any of those holy and important works that belong to his church and kingdom, it does indeed seem to any one who is truly called to such things as though the yoke would be too hard for so poor and ignorant a creature to bear, and the burden of it so heavy that we should sink under it. But when his power has prevailed over our weakness and fears, and we have taken up the work, how surprised we always are to see how different it is from what we feared. Instead of a wearing, dragging, toilsome work, it is a joy and comfort, no matter what apparent sacrifice of worldly ease it may cost us. Even in its afflictions we find a holy peace and joy; and we are glad when we are counted worthy to suffer for his sake. When we learned of the world we were led into darkness, for that learning led us to seek our own. But now the command is upon us, "Learn of me," and this leads always into true light, and into things that are good and blessed. We feel a desire in our souls to hear what he will say to us, and to be always obedient unto him. When our rebellious nature turns away from his teaching to the vain, earthly, selfish wisdom of the world, we are soon again in darkness and trouble, and realize the desolation and want promised to those who trust in an arm of flesh. But when we are constrained to obey this command, and learn of Jesus, then fears subside; earthly cares press upon us more lightly; disappointments are more easily borne; duties in the church are felt as privileges; anger and all evil passions in our hearts are easily put away, and are met, when manifested toward us by others, with kind forbearance and forgiveness; anxieties and griefs weigh less heavily upon us; the burdens and responsibilities of our daily life are taken up more cheerfully, and carried along more hopefully; for that meek and lowly spirit of our dear heavenly Teacher has in some wonderful way been given to us, and that has taken away the hardness of our toil and labor, the bitterness of sorrow, the crushing heaviness of care; for it has kept us, in all our work and walk and suffering, under his yoke, which is easy, and has made every kind of a burden that is laid upon us to be his burden, which is light. So light, indeed, and so easy are his yoke and burden, that they are still our chief comfort in this world; and when we are privileged to bear them, instead of being hindered and weighed down by them, they cause us to "mount up with wings as eagles, to run and not be weary, to walk and not faint." We do not find rest to our bodies from labor and pain, nor rest to our minds from care and anxiety, nor rest to our hearts from sorrow and grief; but we find rest to our souls, deep, abiding rest amid all earth's turmoil and strife; rest that is established deeper than the foundations of the earth, and is given from beyond the turbulent shores of time, and which, therefore, nothing that shall ever transpire in this world can ever disturb or destroy, rest in the Lord.

How often in the toilsome journey of this mortal life the child of God, struggling under the difficulties of the way; mourning under the sad burden of a depraved nature; sorrowing because of sins and wanderings in heart and lip and life; almost ready to faint by reason of the hardness of the journey, though still feebly pursuing; hopeless of becoming any better in the flesh, though longing to be pure; perplexed and almost in despair, cast down and almost destroyed; hears again in the depths of his soul the dear Redeemer's voice calling in these well remembered words, and again proves in his experience their loving, glorious power to bring the soul away from every burden, and give the weary rest: "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS OF THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES:—I inclose a letter from sister Cooksey. I feel that it will commend itself to many of the Lord's poor and afflicted people. She has not stated why she was prompted to write to me, nor do I question her; for it is not often that any one can tell why their minds are impressed in that way; yet it is very often so. Sister Cooksey is a member with us at Bethlehem, and, like many of the afflicted and poor people, lives some distance from the place of meeting. Being blessed with very little of this world's goods, and in an isolated place, with very poor health, and a cannot meet with us very often. I am acquainted with her life all the great many more hindrances, she way through, and was also acquainted with those mentioned in her letter, and her lonely life and sickness while living down on the river she alludes to. To know this is to awaken sympathy in the hearts of all the poor and destitute, having their hearts touched with that knowledge of sin and condemnation dwelling there. But as such a view of self is proof of the spiritual life dwelling in that aching breast, we can look on with joy in the evidence we thus obtain, and say, "Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning."

Your brother in fear and hope,
ELI T. KIDWELL.

CLIFTON, Va., April 1, 1895.

DEAR BROTHER KIDWELL:—I will write you a few lines to let you know that all are well except myself. My health has been so bad that I have not been able to get out to meeting since the association last fall. As the poet expresses it, "Like one alone I seem to be," &c. I often wonder if there is any one like me. I sometimes think if I could attend meeting regularly I would live a better life; but it seems that sin is mixed with all I do. Truly am I made to realize that in my flesh there is no good thing. But our God works all things after the counsel of his own will. For years it has been my greatest pleasure to attend the meetings with those I love for the truth's sake; for I love my home in the church more than all the world. I sometimes feel that it is good for me to be afflicted; yet we know that afflictions are not pleasant to the flesh. But when we are weak, then are we strong. The happiest hours of my life were those spent on a sick bed. I have had a desire for a long time to write, but a feeling sense of unworthiness has kept me back. My desire was and is to tell you of some of the Lord's dealings with me, a poor sinner, in leading me from darkness to light, revealing himself to me as a loving Savior, and causing me to praise his gracious name; for I know that I had nothing to do with it, only to enjoy it, coming in a way I least expected it. I was raised up in the Methodist Church, and never heard a Baptist preach until I was grown. Then I went to hear Elder R. C. Leachman whenever I could, until he passed away, when I heard no more Baptist preaching; for we soon afterward moved down on the Potomac river, where there was nothing but New School Baptist and Methodist preaching. I attended generally attendant on such occasions their meetings, but the excitement took no effect on me, my heart seeming at such times as hard as a stone. I often felt that I would like to be a christian, but thought I had a great work to do, and would wait until I was old, as then would be time enough. I lived a very careless life until September, 1874, when I was taken sick, and was compelled to keep my bed all the winter. I had trouble, but my greatest desire was to get well. About the first of April, I think, I was able to sit up in a chair a little, when an old Methodist minister and his wife came to see me. He prayed and seemed to be very good; but he could not reach my case, for I was dead in sin. He asked me if I ever read the Bible, and I told him I did, for I was ashamed to let any one know that I did not. But after I had told him I was very sorry that I had told a falsehood, and that, too, while I was sick. When he was gone I felt that I had committed a great crime in telling a falsehood about the Bible, and it troubled me very much. I dreamed on one occasion that I was traveling in a wagon a long distance, and came to a large house, upon whose sides were growing red flowers, and I jumped out and stole a handful of them. When I reached the road again I was alone, and turning to the right hand I beheld a garden full of flowers, and in the center was the loveliest one I ever saw. It was very large, and white as snow. I did not go near it, but while I stood admiring it I awoke, thinking, O! if I only had a flower like that. It seemed before me all the time. After a short time I was taken sick, or rather worse than I had been, and thought I should die in my sins; but I felt that God would be just in it. My dream seemed to me to be the sign of my death, and therefore I was greatly troubled, and seemed to get worse, until a voice said, "Be still, and know that I am God." I then realized that I was in the hands of a just and holy God. My trouble seemed to cease, I had no power to help myself, I was weak, but wanted to be alone. I felt myself sinking and helpless, and kept sinking until I CANNOT SIN.

ELDER F. A. CHICK—DEAR BROTHER:—If it is not asking too much of you, please explain through the SIGNS OF THE TIMES the words recorded in 1 John iii. 9, which reads as follows, "Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin; for his seed remaineth in him; and he cannot sin, because he is born of God." Is he a repenting sinner, or does he sin at all? I have heard it explained that he did sin, but not unto death, and God forgave him. In what way does he sin according to this text? Please answer as soon as you can, and greatly oblige your unworthy brother, if one at all,

ISAAC H. HARRIS.

REPLY.

Concerning some portions of the word of God it has seemed to us far easier to tell what they do not mean than what they do mean; and concerning some Scriptures we have felt that we had a clearer understanding than we have been able to put into words. The Scripture to which our brother has called our attention is among those to which we have now referred. In addition to the hesitancy which we feel in endeavoring to consider this text from the above reasons, we also hesitate because we are aware that good and thoughtful and spiritual brethren have differed widely in their interpretation of it; and still farther, there are difficulties which confront us with regard to the text no matter what view we may take of it. But we have had some reflections concerning it, and do not feel at liberty to withhold them from our brother. We will endeavor to write what seems to us true concerning these words, and leave what we say to the judgment of our readers.

There are some things that the text does not and cannot mean; and to some of these things we desire first of all to call attention. First, the text furnishes no standing ground for the believer in what is called holiness or sanctification in the flesh. That is, there is no support here for the notion that a man can attain to a state of sinlessness in this present life; because the word not only is "doth not commit sin," but it also is said, "cannot sin." We have never heard that the most extreme sanctificationist ever claimed that he could not sin; but according to the text, in whatever sense he that is born of God does not commit sin, in that same sense he cannot sin. This proves too much for the believer in fleshly holiness, and therefore he cannot use this text.

Second. The text does not read "whatsoever" nor "that which" is born of God, but "whosoever." Whatever the text may signify, the word "whosoever" means the same as the expression "little children," in verse seven, and the pronoun "our," in verse five, and as "the sons of God," in verse two, and as the phrase "one another," in verse eleven; and these expressions are used by the apostle just as we or as any of our readers would use them to-day, meaning the persons, the men and women, whom we might be addressing. The relative pronoun "who" fixes and settles the matter as to this in the text. It is "whosoever," not "whatsoever," is born of God. Furthermore, if in verse four "whosoever committeth sin" means men and women, if "whosoever sinneth" in verse six means men and women, and if "whosoever doeth not righteousness" in verse ten means men and women, we should be wresting and doing murderous violence to language to assert that the word "whosoever" in the text meant anything else but men and women. Thus upon two grounds, first, that the word is "whosoever," and not "whatsoever," and second, the use of the word "whosoever" all along in the connection, we are shut up to the conclusion that men and women, and not something besides, are meant in the text.

Third. The structure of the text itself forbids any other view than the above. Let us analyze the text closely. The pronoun "whosoever" in the first clause, the objective pronoun "him" in the second clause, and the pronoun "he" twice used in the third clause, all refer to precisely the same person or thing. Let any one examine this closely, and they will be convinced of its truth. Now, according to the text, the seed of God remains in whosoever is born of God. If therefore the pronoun "whosoever" means not men and women, but a nature or life or spirit or seed within the man or woman, we are shut up to the absurdity that the seed remains in the seed, and we have a seed within a seed; and if anybody can tell what this would mean they are wiser than we are. But accepting the plain meaning of "whosoever" as being simply men and women who believe in Jesus, this absurdity disappears, and we have the plain scriptural, experimental statement that the seed of God remains where it has once been implanted, and does its work there; and this is true to all christian experience, as well as in harmony with general Bible testimony. Thus three considerations at least compel us to believe that the word "whosoever" must have its common, plain meaning, just such as we give it when we speak of our fellow-men.

But now the question of our brother recurs: In what sense can it be said that the believer does not and cannot sin? That he does sin in some sense of the word John himself in this very epistle testifies in the most emphatic manner.—See the first chapter and last three verses. We will quote: "If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us. If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness. If we say that we have not sinned, we make him a liar, and his word is not in us." Surely we need not comment upon this. If anything can be settled, it is settled here that even a child of God does sin.

Now, it seems evident that this apostle did not contradict himself; and when he says that whosoever is born of God doth not and cannot sin, he does not mean the same thing that he does in the language just quoted. God's people who are born of God do sin; and they are deceived, and the truth is not in them, if they say they do not. If the truth be in a man its clear shining will compel him to see that he is still sinful. But yet we must not forget that this same writer declares that he who is born of God cannot sin.

Thus far the way has seemed clear. It seems evident that the things of which we have spoken cannot be signified in the text. To state and present the negative has never seemed difficult in our own mind. Concerning these things we have been satisfied for years; but now when we come to present some things concerning what we think the apostle does mean we desire to write very carefully, and without any desire to even appear indifferent to the views of brethren who may differ from us.

First. It has for a long time been our conclusion that John here means no more nor no less than does Paul when he says (Romans vi. 2), "How shall we, that are dead to sin, live any longer therein?" Or in verse six, "That henceforth we should not serve sin." Or in verse seven, "He that is dead is freed from sin." Or in verse fourteen, "For sin shall not have dominion over you: for ye are not under the law, but under grace." Or in verse eighteen, "Being then made free from sin," &c. Or in verse twenty-two, "But now being made free from sin." It has long seemed to us that Paul in Romans vi. was treating substantially of the same things of which John was treating in this third chapter of his first epistle. The language and the figures of speech differ, but the theme is the same, as it seems to us. The one difference between Paul and John seems to us to be this. Paul refers more to the reign of sin being broken in the outward life, while John speaks more of the inward life. John talks about loving and hating, which are emotions of the heart, while Paul speaks more with reference to the two lines of conduct to which these emotions give rise. With this one difference they seem to us to teach the same things.

If John says, "Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin," Paul says in response, "Henceforth we should not serve sin," and that we are "freed from sin." If John says that he that is born of God cannot sin, Paul also says that sin shall not have dominion over us, and "How shall we, that are dead to sin, live any longer therein?" Paul and John, on the other hand, both assert that the child of God does sin. If there be anything contradictory and hard to reconcile in this language of John, so there is also in the language of Paul; but it is sure that however much we may fail to understand, there is no contradiction.

It has seemed to us that the key to this whole matter, and the sum and substance of all that Paul means in all his language quoted from the sixth chapter of Romans, is found in the words, "Sin shall not have dominion over you." "Let not sin therefore reign in your mortal body, that ye should obey it in the lusts thereof." "Free from the law [dominion] of sin and death."—Romans viii. 2. It is the dominion, the tyrannical rule of sin over men, of which Paul speaks. He himself, while thus speaking, also testifies to the presence of sin, and to the warfare which it wages against the Spirit in his own bosom; but yet he expressly testifies that it does not and shall not and cannot reign. There is certainly a difference between a rebellion which may distress and disturb and annoy and hinder, but which yet does not prevail and come into the dominion in the kingdom, and the power to reign unhindered on the other hand. Sin may and does strive and wound and hinder the christian's peace, but it shall not and does not reign, according to Paul; and every christian's daily experience testifies the same. It seems to us that this testimony of Paul is clear, and that those who are spiritual find it true for themselves.

Now, what Paul says in the language quoted above seems to us to be precisely what John has said in other language in the text and in its connection. It seems to us that it is in the sense of sin reigning, or being the ruling, governing power in a man, that John speaks. As we said before, it seems to us that while Paul refers more to the outward life, John refers more to the deep well-springs within. John uses the words "love" and "hate" to set forth the difference between him who serves God and him who does not. Love and hatred are in his view the two opposites, and all are actuated by one or the other. All who will read the connection of the text carefully will see that this is true. Love, on the one hand, leads to every work of obedience of which John speaks. Love is the fulfilling of the law. Hatred, on the other hand, is the root of all that is contrary to God in the life of men.

Bearing in mind these two opposite principles of which John speaks, it seems to us that we present the true meaning of John in the text when we speak of it in this way: Whosoever is born of God doth not hate, for his seed remaineth in him; and he cannot hate, because he is born of God. In perfect harmony with this are many expressions in this same chapter. Some of them we will refer to. "Whosoever doeth not righteousness is not of God, neither he that loveth not his brother."—Verse 10. In this expression we have set before us, in the first clause, love to God; in the second, love to our brother. Love is the theme. "That we should love one another."—Verse 11. "We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren. He that loveth not his brother abideth in death."—Verse 14. "Whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer: and ye know that no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him."—Verse 15. "Let us not love in word, neither in tongue; but in deed and in truth."—Verse 18. Thus in all this chapter, as in the whole epistle, John goes to the very root of all obedience to God, and all service of each other, and says it is love, love to God and to each other; and on the other hand he goes to the root of all disobedience to God and all neglect of each other, and calls it hate. It is in strict harmony with all this general line of argument that in the text he declares that there is as broad a distinction wrought by grace between him who is born of God and him who is not, as there is between love and hatred. He that is born of God must love God and his people, and cannot hate them. In this sense it certainly is true that the man born of God does not and cannot sin. If a man does not love God and his brother he is not born of God. If he be born of God, the love of God is shed abroad in his heart, and the righteousness of the law is thus fulfilled in him. The law of God is summed up in these two commandments, love to God and love to the neighbor; and in the man born again this righteousness of the law is fulfilled. Paul testifies this in Romans viii. 4; and John only testifies to the same thing in the text. Looking at the matter in this way, is there any more difficulty in this text in John than there is when Paul says similar things? If it be hard to understand how John could say that whosoever is born of God doth not and cannot sin, when at the same time he also says, "If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us," is it not equally hard to understand Paul also when he says, "The righteousness of the law is fulfilled in us," and yet declares that we cannot do the good that we would?—Rom. vii. 15–25.

Does not Paul throw still further light upon this doctrine and this experience when he says (Rom. vii. 16, 17), "If then I do that which I would not, I consent unto the law that it is good. Now then it is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me." Does not this clearly state how it can be true that he who is born of God doth not commit sin? "It is no more I that do it, but sin."

Thus Paul and John are seen to sit down together in the kingdom of heaven. Thus the watchmen see eye to eye; and in this experience in the kingdom of heaven we who believe have come to the spirits of just men made perfect, and can witness to the same things.

There is nothing in this text thus compared with the other Scriptures to discourage any child of God. There is nothing here but what is true with all who love the Lord. The child of God loves, and does not and cannot hate; and yet because he loves, and only because he loves, does he mourn and lament that he sins so much. Words fail to set forth this great mystery of experience; but the experience is real. I sin, says Paul; yet I do not sin, but sin that dwelleth in me. John says no more than this in this text. How glorious the truth that he who is born of God has the divine nature or life abiding in him, and abiding forever!

Thus we have presented the matter as it has long seemed to us true. John, it seems to us, is not writing about an atonement, but about the new birth. He is not speaking of a law fulfilled for us, but of a law fulfilled in us; and he that is born of God fulfills the law, in that he loves. He that is born of God must love, for God is love; and whosoever loveth is born of God. To not love is to commit sin; and as he who is born of God must love God, therefore he does not and cannot sin, as John declares in the text. That is, we repeat, he cannot hate God or his people.

C.

THE ARMOR OF GOD, OR THE CHRISTIAN UNIFORM.

THE next piece of armor to be considered is the shield of faith. The quality, use and importance of this shield is stated in the text; with it the christian soldier shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked; hence, "above all," the apostle directs that it shall be taken.

By the shield of faith we understand faith itself, which, if the right kind, is a shield to those that possess it, to protect them from all fiery darts.

There are many kinds of faith in the world; we read of faith even of devils; but neither the faith of devils nor the faith of men can protect the children of God from the assaults of their numerous and violent enemies. We have not room in this article to comment largely on the various kinds of faith entertained by the different classes of the professing and non-professing world. Each kind may be known by the works which it produces; for instance, those who hold the Papal faith will confide in the Pope, say mass, and pay the priests for pardoning their sins; those who hold the Arminian faith, as all ungodly men do, will fight against the truth, ridicule the sovereignty of God, and go about to establish a righteousness of their own; hence a man's faith is known by his works; and the Papal, Pagan and Arminian faith is just as good as any religious faith that can originate with men. All these kinds are earthly, sensual and devilish. But the faith which is a shield to the saints, belongs to the armor of God, which comes from God, which God has provided, and which he has once delivered to the saints. Of this faith Jesus Christ is both the author and the finisher. It is the substance of things hoped for, and the evidence of things not seen. It is numbered by the inspired apostles among the things which he denominates "the fruit of the Spirit," in opposition to the works and lusts of the flesh. The faith of God's elect differs as widely from all other kinds of faith, as holiness differs from sin, as the spirit of the gospel differs from the carnal passions of depraved human nature.

> "Faith, 'tis a precious gift,
> Where'er it is bestowed;
> It boasts of a celestial birth,
> And is the gift of God."

None but heaven-born children possess it or know its peculiar qualities or value. As none can possess it until born of God, so none can be born of God and not possess it. Without it, it is impossible to please God; yet none can have it only as a gift of God; so we infer that the indispensable qualification to please God must come from him as a sovereign favor, before we can enjoy his approbation. It being a production of the Spirit, it cleaves to things that are spiritual. Those who know its power are by it constrained to trust alone in God, and have no confidence in the flesh. It lays hold upon his word, relies upon his promises, and trusts alone in* him for ultimate victory and glory. Its wonderful achievements and victories are many of them recorded in the eleventh chapter of the epistle to the Hebrews. Abel possessed it, and God was pleased with him, and graciously accepted his offering. Cain was destitute of it, and to him and to his offering God had not respect. Abraham had this faith, and it was counted to him for righteousness; and having it, he staggered not at the promise which God had made to him. He by it rejoiced to see the day of the Redeemer, and saw it, and was glad. It ever has been, and still is, the distinguishing evidence of spiritual vitality, and all pretentions to piety and godliness in its absence are nothing else but delusion and vanity.

But in the immediate sense of our text faith is brought figuratively to view as a shield, by which the soldiers of the cross shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked. Before we speak of its efficiency in quenching the fiery darts, it may be well to offer a remark or two on the darts to be quenched, and the certainty that such darts shall be hurled at the children of God so long as they remain encamped in this militant state. Like the lily among thorns, and as the bush in the midst of the flame that Moses saw, is the church of God in the world. Her God has chosen her in a furnace, and for his own glory and the best possible good of all his chosen people the faith which he has given them must be tried. Indeed the trial of it is much more precious than the trial of gold that perisheth; and in the process the dross shall be burnt up, and the pure metal shall come forth at last like gold that is seven times tried. The christian is constantly besieged by the world, the flesh and the devil; in each of these departments a mighty host of enemies to the faith of the gospel are to be encountered. The flesh, which is of the earth, earthy, leads the van with all of its corruptions, propensities, lusts, prejudices and desires in rank and file; and all these have full quivers of arrows, poisoned with the most deadly opposition to a life of godliness and the working of that faith which is after godliness. The world leads on another wing of the combined army of the aliens. In flatteries, baits, snares, gins, allurements, frowns, persecutions, proscriptions and delusions; all these also bend their bow to dart their envenomed missiles, to disturb and distress the saints of God. And the devil also, with his legions of false spirits, false doctrines, false teachers, false interpretations of the dealings of the Lord with his children, false applications of his words, promises, instructions and admonitions, and ever ready, going about as a roaring lion, or in the guise of a very disinterested friend, but always on the same business, seeking whom he may devour. Thus situated, it is not strange that the christian should be constantly assaulted with a shower of fiery darts; and his life and eternal salvation would be greatly jeopardized if it were not for the provisions of grace and mercy which God has made for his ultimate triumph over all opposition. The darts of the wicked are called fiery darts, not only to express their violence, but also to illustrate the effect which they are calculated to produce when they hit or pierce the christian. Some of the savage tribes of warriors have been in the habit of tinging the points of their arrows in deadly poison, that when they strike their victim they may prove more effectual; and the apostle seems to have had this savage practice in view. All the arrows which are hurled at the saints are poisoned with some kind of inflammable poison, that when they strike the christian they may inflame his passions, set on fire the course of nature, and if possible set it on fire of hell. The effect of these darts has been but too painfully known in the experience of the saints. How often have they given the most gratifying signs to the enemy that they have received the poison of the arrow. For instance, when the arrow of flattery has taken effect, though it be but a flesh wound, yet how soon the poison takes effect, the wounded soldier forgets what manner of person he is of; becomes heady, high minded, vainly puffed up, and begins to imagine himself some great one. Or if the arrow be that of persecution, if it be not quenched by the shield, will inflame the patient, and lead him to think his lot a very hard one. If it be an arrow from the full quiver of temptations, unless the shield of faith be interposed, the arrow will enter somehow between the joints of his harness, and by the temptation he is led to doubt his adoption; or, if that be not doubted, he is tempted to cast himself from the pinnacle, or to run into some excess, whereby some evidence is given that the dart was fiery, and that his carnal nature is fully susceptible of its dire effects. In how many thousand ways the execution of the darts of the wicked may be illustrated. When the christian soldier is caught napping, how easily, and sometimes almost imperceptibly, is he wounded by an arrow, which, for the time being, consumes his zeal in the cause of truth, shuts up his lips in regard to the improvement of his gifts in the church; and sometimes he becomes so desperately crippled that he neglects the assembling of the saints, as the manner of some is. His place is vacant in the house of prayer, and the world or some carnal gratification has intervened between him and the privileges which he once so dearly loved. The poisoned dart may take effect upon his carnal appetite; inflamed by its poison he seeks the intoxicating bowl, eats with the glutton and drinks with the drunken, brings distress upon his brethren, reproach upon the precious cause of religion, and barrenness into his own soul. Among the arrows hurled at christians, perhaps none are more common than heresy; let the poison of this arrow be drank in by the christian, and the peace of Zion is disturbed, divisions, bickerings, bitings and devouring follow as a matter of course.

We might swell this article to an unreasonable length in treating on this part of our subject, but we are admonished to hasten it to a close. The shield of faith is what the christian requires to enable him successfully to resist not only the fiery darts described in this article, but all the darts of the wicked. But it may be asked, Is not the christian always in possession of this faith? Certainly he is; but it is equally certain that he has it not always on or in exercise as a shield. Hence the admonition, above all things to take it. If this faith were always in exercise, and in use as a shield, how easily would it quench the dart that challenges our hope in God. With this precious faith gazing on the uncreated beauties of the Savior, what poisoned dart of Satan would induce us to dismiss the heavenly vision? In full possession of this glowing faith, how much rain, or snow, or mud, would be required to prevent us from mingling with the brethren in the social worship of God? Faith would quench the poison of the darts, and they would fall harmless at our feet. Without this shield we shall never be able to contend successfully with the wicked. Paul, who gives the admonition in our text, knew whereof he wrote, for he fought the good fight; but never until he had finished his course did he lay aside this part of his armor. He "kept the faith," and in the end of his warfare, when called to ground his arms at the feet of his triumphant Leader, he knew that a crown of glory awaited him; and not him alone, but all who love the appearing of the Lord.

"O for a strong, a lasting faith,
To credit what the Almighty saith,
To trust the merits of his Son,
And call the joys of heaven our own.

Then should the earth's old pillars shake,
And all the wheels of nature break;
Our steadfast souls would fear no more Than solid rocks where billows roar."

"And take the helmet of salvation, and the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God." The helmet is that piece of armor which protects the head, and is probably the most conspicuous of all the armor displayed by the soldier. It is the covering as well as the protection of the warrior. The helmets used in carnal warfare may be made of any material that is thought to be proof against the weapons of the enemy, but the christian soldier can confide in nothing short of the salvation of God, which is Jesus Christ; and he is not only the covering of his peole, but the Head over all things to his church, which is his body, and the fullness of him that filleth all in all. By taking this helmet, we understand an admonition to reject and discard every other confidence, and to rely alone on that salvation which Simeon embraced when he exclaimed, "Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, according to thy word; for mine eyes have seen thy salvation." What a perfect protection this helmet affords to all the redeemed of the Lord. However much the saints may be tempted, bruised, wounded, stricken and afflicted in their warfare, this helmet secures to them ultimate victory, and they shall be more than conquerors through him that has loved them. "And the sword of the Spirit." Carnal weapons, whether offensive or defensive, will not answer, because we fight not with flesh and blood; ours is a spiritual conflict, with principalities and powers, and the rulers of the darkness of this world, and against spiritual wickedness in high places. Carnal weapons have been and still are relied upon by antichrist to support church and state religion, and even the legislatures of our states and nation have resorted to them in taxing the people at large to support such religious establishments as the Chaplaincy, their Sabbaths, Divinity Schools, &c.; but our Lord has admonished the subjects of his government that He that taketh the sword (that is, the carnal sword) shall die by it. The word of God is the sword of the spirit. The Holy Ghost makes use of this sword in putting to flight the armies of the aliens. It is quick and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, to the dividing asunder of joints and marrow, of soul and spirit, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart. It is the sword of the Spirit, because the Spirit always directs the saints to use it in all their combats with the enemy.

Our carnal passions may lead us to use human policy, carnal reasoning and worldly wisdom in defense of our faith and hope in Christ; but in their use we fall before our enemies; but when we are led by the Spirit of God, that Spirit directs us to fight only with the sword of the Spirit; all the execution we can do must be in pleading what God has said. When our Redeemer encountered the archenemy of his people he used this sword. He met all the temptations of the devil by quoting what God had said. And thus when Satan tempts us to doubt the evidences of our adoption, or to deny our faith, or to run into iniquity, or whatever may be the nature of the temptation, if we can meet him or any of his messengers with a "Thus saith the Lord," we are sure to put him or them to flight. But as the word of God is the sword of the Spirit, we cannot wield it successfully unless we are in the Spirit; but when governed by the Spirit we are able to not only stand in the day of trial, but one shall chase a thousand, and two shall put ten thousand to flight.

"My Captain sounds the alarm of war;
Awake! the powers of hell are near!
To arms! to arms! I hear him cry;
'Tis yours to conquer or to die!

Roused by the animating sound,
I cast my eager eyes around;
Make haste to gird my armor on,
And bid each trembling fear be gone.

Hope is my helmet, Christ my shield;
Thy word, my God, the sword I wield;
With sacred truth my loins are girt,
And holy zeal inspires my heart.

Thus armed, we venture on the fight,
Resolved to put our foes to flight;
While Jesus kindly deigns to spread
His conquering banner o'er our head.

In him we hope, in him we trust;
His bleeding cross is all our boast;
Through troops of foes he'll lead us on
To victory and the victor's crown."

"Praying always, with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit." No prayers can avail us anything which are not in the Spirit; for we know not how to pray as we ought. We often ask, and receive not, because we ask amiss; and God in mercy withholds from us things which we ask him for, because the prayer has only expressed the desire of the flesh, and the things prayed for, if granted, would only be consumed on our carnal lusts. But the Spirit helpeth our infirmities, and directs our desires according to the mind of God. This Spirit searcheth all things, even the deep things of God; and when we pray with all prayer in the Spirit we have an assurance that God will grant us our petitions. "And watch thereunto with all perseverance, and supplication for all saints," &c. We have great reason to watch our prayers, as well as our walk and general deportment, lest we be found carrying to the throne petitions which are not in the Spirit, or consonant with the teaching of that spirit of grace and supplication which God has promised to pour out on his children.

ALWAYS SEND DIRECTIONS.

WE have received of late quite a number of postal money orders without any letter of directions. It is much better to always send directions how you wish the amount of the order credited.

CARD OF THANKS.

TO THE MANY FRIENDS who sent us tokens of remembrance on the twenty-fifth anniversary of our marriage, August 23d, 1895, Greeting.

Dear Friends:—It is with feelings of deep humility, and, we hope, gratitude to the great Giver of all good gifts, and to the many dear friends from whom we received tokens of remembrance on the above occasion, for the most pleasant surprise accorded us. We had not expected to in any way celebrate the event, which made it all the more pleasant for us to receive from all over the country, extending from New York to Nebraska, and southward to Delaware, Maryland, Virginia and Kentucky, so many warm expressions of love and fellowship, with the many substantial tokens inclosed. We trust that we feel thankful for the love and fellowship of the Lord's dear people, and that we are thankful to that strong hand that has guided us in safety through the many vicissitudes of a quarter of a century of married life. It has not been without its sorrows. We have verified the truth of the apostle Paul's declaration, "They that are married shall have trouble in the flesh." But we have also realized a full measure of the happiness that falls to the lot of humanity, in a sense of contentment with our lot; and a desire to fulfill the duties of life, from a sense of the solemn obligations that we are under to our God. Our prayer to God is that he may remember you, and bestow upon you the testimony of his grace and love for his own gracious name's sake. Amen.

A. B. & L. P. FRANCIS.

knew nothing. How long I remained in that condition I know not, but the first I did know was a realizing sense of my Savior's arms under my head. I was afraid to move lest he should leave me. O! I was so happy. I felt little, and light as a feather, and ready to fly away and be at rest. Suffering and trouble were all gone, and I felt easy. My little boy came into the room, and I wondered if he could be mine. I felt so little and new that I could scarcely realize I had ever lived before. I loved my Savior above everything. He was my only friend. Everything seemed praising God. I was filled to overflowing with his love. But "Tongue cannot express

The sweet comfort and peace,
Of a soul in its earliest love.
When my heart first believed,
O what joy I received,
What a heaven in Jesu's name."

"'Twas a heaven below
My Redeemer to know;
And I could not believe
That I ever should grieve,
That I ever should suffer again."

For I thought my troubles were ended. I scarcely thought about getting well, for I felt happy and free, and a perfect resignation to the will of the Lord. Then my dream broke in upon my mind again, and trouble came. I begged the Lord to tell me what it meant, and I believe he did. It came to me like some one talking to me, saying, The flowers you stole were the falsehood you told about the Bible, and the white flower you admired so much was the Redeemer. O what a relief this was to me. I felt that the Savior had paid all the debt I owed. I was not troubled any more on that point. I soon so far recovered from my sickness that I could sit up. Then my Bible was my daily companion. I read it through, and still found a desire to read it. It seemed a new book to me. I spent many happy hours alone. I was not lonesome, for Jesus was then near me, and my Bible also was company for me. I often feel to say, O that it were with me as in the days that are past, when my Savior smiled on me by day and night. Then I walked in the light of his countenance and feared no evil. I was at ease until the impression came to my mind to be baptized. Then trouble arose. I did not know what to do. My friends wanted me to join the New School Baptists, and one of their order came and asked me to let him baptize me. I told him I had not made up my mind; yet I then felt I must go somewhere, but knew not where to go. I could not go with the order above named, for they believed in their own good works, and I had none. My heart was with the Old School Baptists, but my going to them looked impossible, because I knew not where they were. I had never heard any one relate what is commonly called an experience, and had never seen the Old Baptists baptize any one. I was not even acquainted with any of them, and they were called by hard names generally. I felt truly to be alone. But truly our God leads in a way we know not, and in paths we have not known. We had a hired man, and he brought me two numbers of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, the first I had ever seen, and their contents were like cold water to a thirsty soul. O how I loved the writers! I soon found they were my Father's children, and O how I longed to be with them. I besought the Lord to lead me in the right way, in the path that I should tread. The answer came, "If you love me, keep my commandments. Leave all and follow me." I then felt that I could leave the whole world. My mind was placed on the Old Baptists, and I felt that I could go nowhere else. As soon as I was able to travel I left my home and went to Clifton, my brother's home, thinking I might get to hear some preaching, for I was very hungry for it. But my brother's family being of the New School order were very little company for me, so I soon left them and went to my cousin's home, and he told me he would take me to Bethlehem on the first Sunday in the month, that being their meeting day. I told him I did not know any one there. He said he did, and that gave me some relief. I felt like the day would never come; but the time at last rolled around and we set out on horseback, the distance being about seven or eight miles. This was on Saturday before the first Sunday in September. I did not expect to be baptized there, because at that time I lived near Alexandria; but when we reached the meeting house I looked around, and they all looked very happy; yet there were no faces that I knew, and I felt sad and lonely; but I enjoyed the sermon at first, and then it seemed I was carried away from self and my surroundings. When the door of the church was opened for the reception of members, ere I was aware of what I was doing I was on my feet. I had not so intended that day, for I felt that I had nothing to say; but I now feel that the Lord talked for me, and to this hour I know not what I did say, and often wonder what I told the chnrch. To my surprise I was received for baptism on the next day, the first Sunday in September, 1875. After the meeting closed my cousin introduced me to sister Emily Johnson, who proved a mother to me. She took me to her home, attended to my needs, and on the day above mentioned Elder Joseph L. Purington led me down into the solemn, liquid grave, in obedience to the command of my Lord and Savior. I felt sad that morning, but when I came up out of the water I was happy and free. I enjoyed the sermon, and felt that it was good to be there. I received the kindness of brethren and sisters with astonishment, for I had been told they were a selfish people; but they were so good to me that the language of Ruth was mine, "Entreat me not to leave thee," and the acknowledging of their God to be my God, and their last resting place as mine. When the parting time came I felt that I was leaving home and friends. I never saw Elder Purington any more, and heard no preaching for a long time.

But I must close, for I know, dear brother, I have wearied you. I have not written this for publication, but to relieve my mind of a burden that I cannot carry any longer; yet if you see anything in this scribble that would be of any comfort to others, do as you like with it. Please pardon me for writing, and pray that I may be kept by the power of God through faith to the end.

MRS. F. L. COOKSEY.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

DIED—On the 31st day of July, 1895, at her home near Hartford City, Indiana, Caroline Skillman, at the age of 86 years and 7 months. She joined the Regular Baptist Church at the second Hopewell Church, New Jersey, over sixty years ago, and was baptized by Elder Stout. She adorned the profession she had made of an interest in the atonement of Christ by an humble and exemplary walk and conversation in the doctrine of salvation by grace. We shall see her here on earth no more; and although she is removed from us, she still lives in the memory of the children of God who had the pleasure of her acquaintance.

The funeeal was preached by Elder Jacob Richards, and she was laid away at the Harmony burying-ground.

A. A.

DIED—In the village of Trumansburg, N. Y., July 25th, 1895, Cora A., wife of John W. Morgan, aged 30 years.

The circumstances of this death are especially sad. Mrs. Morgan leaves a husband, and an infant but a few days old. She had been ill some weeks with nervous prostration, and in her weakened condition could not rally; and notwithstanding the unremitting attention of her attending physician, and her sister, she passed away. The remains will be taken to Canton, Pa., her former home.

During her residence here Mrs. Morgan has made many warm, personal and business friends, whose sympathy is extended to the bereaved husband in his great affliction. The subject of this notice was the daughter of brother David and the late Morgann Scudder, of Canton, Pa., and sister of the writer. We deeply mourn the loss of our loved sister, but trust that our loss is her gain. She professed a hope in Christ, and was ever found walking in his footsteps. She was next to the youngest of ten children, and the first to be called to try the realities of another world. Our family circle is broken. We little know how soon another may be called; but we bow submission to his will and realize he doeth all things well. She leaves a husband, an aged father, brothers and sisters and a dear little infant daughter to mourn her early departure.

AUGUSTA J. VERMILYA.

Elder Rowland Flournoy was born in Jackson Co., Mo., Jan. 12th, 1834, and was married to M. A. Hornbucle Feb. 9th, 1860. He received a hope in Christ, and together with his wife united with the Pleasant Grove Church, in Jackson Co., Mo., about the year 1868, and was baptized by Joseph Warden. He was licensed to preach on the third Saturday in February, 1870, and was ordained on the fourth Saturday in May, 1871. He was in the constitution of a little church in Jackson Co., Mo., called Big Blue, which was constituted in 1870. He moved with his family from Jackson Co., Mo., to Johnson Co., Kansas, Dec. 1st, 1873. Big Blue Church was moved from Missouri to Kansas in 1874, of which he was a member and its pastor until his death, which occurred at his home in Johnson Co., Kansas, August 8th, 1895. His health had been failing for two or three years. He was confined to his bed about a month before his death, and suffered greatly, but bore it patiently. He often expressed a desire to be reconciled to the Lord's will. All that an affectionate wife and loving children could do to relieve his suffering was done. The doctors told the family some time before he died that they could do him no good. The appointed time had come for him to die, and he passed peacefully away. He was a faithful servant of the churches among whom he labored, and was deeply taught in the Scriptures. But his labor is over; and while we so greatly miss him in the little assemblies of the saints in this country, we feel to humbly bow to our heavenly Father's will, being fully assured by the testimony which our dear brother left that our loss is his eternal gain.

The funeral was conducted by the writer and Elder L. Grimsley, at his late residence in Johnson Co., Kansas, a goodly number of his neighbors and friends being present; after which his remains were laid to rest in the neighboring burying-ground. May our heavenly Father comfort the bereaved family in their great sorrow.

ANTIOCH, Kansas.

MY dear old aunt, Irene Waterfill, was born Jan. 20th, 1812, and was married to J. C. Waterfill Oct. 18th, 1833. Her disease was scrofula. She had been afflicted for years, and was confined to her bed three years or more. She fell asleep in Jesus Dec. 15th, 1894, aged 82 years, 10 months and 25 days.

She bore her suffering with christian fortitude. She joined the church at Salt River, Anderson Co., Ky., on the second Saturday in August, 1828. She attended her meetings regularly, unless providentially hindered, up to the time that she was afflicted. She was a firm believer in the doctrine of God our Savior, always looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of her faith. He was her Daysman, her Friend and Savior, the one in whom she put her trust. She was a friend to everybody, especially the Old Baptists. Her door was always open for them, and she treated them cordially and with kindness, for she knew nothing but kindness to all. She leaves her husband, one son, four daughters, thirty-four grandchildren, several great-grandchildren, one brother, one sister, and a host of other relatives and friends, to mourn the loss of her; but our loss is her eternal gain. She is now basking in the smiles of her blessed Redeemer, no more to suffer the afflictions or the turmoils of this world of sin and sorrow. She has gone to that happy clime, to that house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens, to be with her Savior, and with all the redeemed of the Lord that have gone before; for none but the redeemed ever enter that blessed abode.

"In hope of life eternal given,
Behold, a pardoned sinner dies,
A chosen, blood-bought heir of heaven,
Called to her mansion in the skies.

"She left this world, with all its toys,
For better, brighter world on high;
Her faith embraced substantial joys,
Soaring beyond the starry sky."

The Lord giveth, and the Lord taketh; blessed be the name of the Lord.

Your brother in the Spirit, I hope,

J. J. WATERFILL.

LAWRENCEBURGH, Ky., Aug. 20, 1895.

ASSOCIATIONAL.

THE Lexington Old School Baptist Association will convene with her sister church at Gilboa on the third Wednesday and Thursday in September (18th and 19th), 1895.

We desire a goodly number of our brethren and friends, especially brethren in the ministry, to meet with us. Those coming by the U. & D. R. R. will take the 7:40 a. m. train at Rondout, and arrive at Grand Gorge at 11:11 a. m., or the 2:55 p. m. train, arriving at Grand Gorge at 6:17 p. m., where they will be met on Tuesday before the meeting and cared for. If any should miss the 7:40 train, and should not be met, inquire for the Tuttle House, Gilboa.

D. S. ELLIOTT, Church Clerk.

THE Virginia Corresponding Meeting will be held, the Lord willing, with the New Valley Church, Loudoun Co., Va., to begin on Wednesday before the third Sunday in October (16th), 1895, and continue three days.

THE Salisbury Old School Baptist Association is appointed to be held with the church at Little Creek, Sussex Co., Del., to begin on Wednesday before the fourth Sunday in October (23d), 1895, and continue three days.

THE Pilgrim's Rest Association of Primitive Baptists is appointed to meet with the Gilead Church, in Miami Co., Kansas, at two o'clock p. m. on Friday before the second Saturday in October, 1895.

Those coming by rail will be met on the morning of the meeting at Gardner, a station thirty-three miles west from Kansas City, on a branch of the Santa Fe R. R. We earnestly desire as many as can to meet with us at that time, as we are few in number, an afflicted and poor people.

S. P. RAMEY.

THE Licking Association of Old School Baptists will meet with the church at Bethel, Shelby Co., Ky., on Friday before the third Sunday in September, and continue three days (13th, 14th and 15th).

Those coming by rail will buy tickets at Louisville and Lexington, via Louisville Southern, for Busey or Hemp Ridge, where they will be met on Thursday, the 12th. In behalf of the churches we extend a cordial invitation to our brethren and friends, lovers of truth in the gospel, to meet with us.

P. W. SAWIN.

THE fourteenth annual session of the Big Creek Association of the Regular Primitive Predestinarian Baptist faith and order will be held with the Salem Church, eighteen miles southeast of Mexia, Texas, on the Houston & Texas Central R. R., commencing on Saturday before the first Sunday in October, 1895.

Brethren and sisters, and preaching brethren especially, are invited to visit us. They will be met at Mexia, on the Houston & Texas Central R. R., on Friday before; or they will be met at Jewett, on the I. & G. N. R. R., on Friday before. If any should come to Jewett they should write to John Bishop, Farrar, Texas; or if they should come to Mexia they should write to I. R. Betts or R. O. Beene, Personville, Texas.

As there is and has been some trouble among the Baptists in Texas about the predestination of all things, we would be glad for some of our eastern brethren to visit us and see us, and find out what we believe.

JOHN BISHOP, Clerk.

B. L. BEEBE, Middletown, N. Y.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SON, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date. This date denotes the time at which your subscription expires; and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

PICTORIAL HISTORY

OF THE

UNITED STATES.

By James D. McCabe.

This work is no dry mass of details—no bombastic effort to inflame the national pride, but a vivid and brilliant narrative of the events of our history, from the discovery of the American Continent down to thepresent time. It gives a most interesting account of the Indians of North America, from the time of the coming of the white men. The voyages of Columbus and explorations and discoveries of the different nations of Europe are related with graphic power. Every step of our colonial history is traced with patient fidelity, and the sources of those noble and, we trust, enduring institutions, which have made our country free and great, are shown with remarkable clearness. Then follows a clear and succinct account of our great Struggle for Independence, and the establishment of the Federal Union—the events of our career from the close of the Revolution to the administration of Harrison.

The work is printed from plain, new type, on fine calendered paper, and comprised in one octavo volume of 960 pages. It is splendidly embellished with nearly 500 fine engravings, embracing battles and other historical scenes, portraits of distinguished men, views of our principal cities, &c., &c.

Bound in Fine Silk Cloth, Plain Edges, $2.00, Post-paid.

CORRESPONDENCE.

CRAMER, Ill., March 25, 1895.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS OF THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES:—I send you the inclosed letter from brother J. A. Grafton. It was much enjoyed by me, and I believe it would be enjoyed by the brethren generally.

Your unworthy brother,

E. D. VARNES.

DUBLIN, Md., March 17, 1895.

E. D. VARNES—MY PRECIOUS BROTHER IN SORROW AND AFFLICTION:—Your very welcome letter and Minutes of Spoon River Association came duly to hand, both of which have been carefully read, with comfort to my poor soul. How good of the dear Lord to put it into the hearts of his dear saints to think on one so vile, so unworthy, as I, and remember me in my affliction and my misery.

"'Mid scenes of confusion and creature complaints,
How sweet to my soul is communion with saints."

How different indeed are the Lord's afflicted and poor people from the rest of the world of mankind. As was said of the children of Israel of old, "The Lord doth put a difference between the Egyptians and Israel." When in cruel bondage, pressed down under cruel taskmasters, the great God of their temporal salvation heard their cry and came down to deliver them. Surely no nation on earth were as oppressed as they, neither was any nation so favored of the Lord; yea, their very bondage proved a great blessing in disguise; for God had said unto their fathers, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, that he would bring them (their seed) again to possess the land from which they should journey, and dwell in a strange land four hundred and thirty years as bond men and bond women. And all the plagues were sent upon the Egyptians, even to the destroying angel that should kill the first-born of all the Egyptians, and all the first-born of their cattle. But we are told that none of the plagues that came upon the Egyptians came upon the Israelites, neither in the land of Goshen where they dwelt. In this last great plague that our God did send upon the entire kingdom of Pharaoh, it was said, "But against any of the children of Israel shall not a dog move his tongue, against man or beast; that ye may know how that the Lord doth put a difference between the Egyptians and Israel." My dear brother, hath not our God put even a greater difference between the world and his church to-day? I mean the gospel day. Has he not placed a great gulf between them, so that they who would pass from the one to the other cannot pass over? Yea, we may say to the world, "Their rock is not as our rock, our enemies themselves being judges." The world testifies that the God they serve only meets them on half way ground, and they are left to accept or reject as they choose. But methinks the children of Israel, whose cruel bondage grew heavier and heavier, did not require much persuasion when once the way was opened for their escape; nor did the apostle Paul need any persuasion from man. When the commandment came, sin revived, and he died. Now, instead of the bold boasting Pharisee, breathing out threatening and slaughter, and believing that he was doing God service, and that he was perfect in the Jews' religion, having been brought up at the feet of Gamaliel, and as touching the law righteousness was blameless, we now hear him saying, "I know that in me (that is, in my flesh) there dwells no good thing. For to will is present with me, but how to perform that which is good I find not. For the good that I would, I do not; but the evil which I would not, that I do. Now if I do that I would not, it is no more I that do it, but sin which dwelleth in me." Why, Paul, what do you mean? The world tells us that we must live without sin, in order to gain eternal happiness. O what a vast difference the Lord hath put between Paul and the Judaizing teachers of our day. Let us for a moment hear what the prophet Isaiah says. "Woe is me! for I am undone; because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips; for mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of hosts." Here, my dear brother, seems to be the great difference that the good Lord has been pleased to put between the world and his people, even this glorious revelation of himself. Isaiah in the beginning of this sixth chapter says, "In the year that king Uzziah died I saw also the Lord sitting upon a throne, high and lifted up, and his train filled the temple." O what a glorious revelation! And, my brother, I do believe that is what every child of God sees. When the commandment comes, sin revives, and he dies; dies to all his former goodness, all his former dependence upon the arm of flesh, and now sees, as Isaiah did, the Lord Jesus Christ high and lifted up; and not only lifted up, but lifted up for his or her poor, guilty, sinful self; to lift them, the needy, from the dust, and as beggars from the dunghill, and set them among princes, even among the princes of the people. Thus do they abhor themselves in dust and ashes, and cry, "Woe is me! for I am undone." The experience of one is the experience of all God's people. None lack their share of suffering. And if we suffer with our Lord, we shall also reign with him. O what a difference the Lord hath put between the church and the world! "Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we [vile sinners] should be called the sons of God." "Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be." Well may the apostle say, "What manner of love." Loved with an everlasting love. Loved when dead, and deaf, and blind. Loved when enemies to the cross. Loved when without strength, when Christ in due time died for the ungodly. Not after we had reconciled ourselves to God by giving our hearts to him. "Yea, the Lord hath appeared unto me of old, saying, I have loved thee with an everlasting love; therefore [because I have loved you] with loving-kindness have I drawn thee." Love is stronger than death. God is love. Love, eternal love, burst the prison doors of death, hell and the grave, and set the prisoners, the election of grace, free, rode triumphantly to the skies, to sit on the right hand of God, where he ever liveth to make intercession for the saints, according to the will of God, and not according to the will of man; all because they were chosen in him before the foundation of the world, that they should be holy and without blame before him in love; which never could have been had not divine justice been satisfied; had not our covenant Head bowed the heavens and come to earth, been made under the law, to redeem his people who were under the law. He took away the handwriting of ordinances which was contrary to us. Jesus is our Covenant. The only covenant that our God has promised to make with the house of spiritual Israel in this day is, "I will put my laws into their mind, and write them in their hearts; and I will be to them a God, and they shall be to me a people. And they shall not teach every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord; for they shall all know me, from the least to the greatest; for I will be merciful to their unrighteousness, and their sins and their iniquities will I remember no more." O glorious thought! for had the Lord dealt with us according to our iniquities, alas! who could stand? But see the great difference between Egypt and Israel. The whole Arminian world (and I see no difference in the fundamental principles of their doctrines) claim to have power to make themselves children of God; while the poor, trembling child of the only true God humbly hopes his name was recorded in the Lamb's book of life before the foundation of the world.

Now I will try to talk of another vast difference, and I still have my mind on the words I quoted at the start. The Lord's people are an afflicted and poor people; while of the others we are told that they have more than heart could wish; yea, their eyes stand out with fatness. They feel to have righteousness enough, and some to spare to help the Lord along. They can even pray thus, with themselves (mark, not with God), "God, I thank thee that I am not as other men," &c. Not as the publican that stands afar off. O how near the Pharisee feels to be to God. But how different the Lord had made the case of the poor publican, who dared not so much as lift up his eyes to heaven. O how often the poor, tempted, tempest-tossed, afflicted and sorrowing child of the gracious Redeemer feels that his prayers are but idle words, and they even fall at his feet, while his eyes are cast down within his poor, sinful heart, which seems so far from God. He is made to say,

"So far from God I seem to lie,
Which makes me often weep and cry;
Like one alone I seem to be;
O! is there any one like me?"

I write in this way, my dear brother, because you speak of a cold, lifeless condition, which is my almost constant dwelling-place. "Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning." There is no night without its morning. There is no dark cloud without its silver lining. When Jesus spake to the doubting disciples on the tempestuous sea, saying, "It is I, be not afraid," and commanded the sea to be still, they were immediately at the land whither they went. And I have reason to believe they were still in the midst of the sea; but Jesus was there, the land to which every poor, afflicted and tried child would go. Though surrounded by many a foe, there can be no fear where Jesus is. May the Lord give us to realize that he is indeed a strong hold in the time of trouble, and that he is a covert from the tempest, and the shadow of a great rock in a weary land. May he give us to hope that our house is built upon that sure foundation, the Rock of ages, so that though the storms and floods, the fiery attacks of Satan, and all the enemies of truth, may beat upon our house, our hope is that through the power of God we shall be brought off more than conquerors, through him that loved us and gave himself for us. Yea, if we suffer with him, we shall also reign with him. Is it not more to reign with him than only to suffer with him? Did he not pray the Father that we should be one with him, even joint-heirs with him? The inspired apostle tells us so. Then, my dear brother, though a great complainer myself, why should we shrink at the sufferings of the present evil world, or at what men or devils can do to us here? We have a glorious High Priest who was tempted in all points like as we are, yet without sin. Now we have not an High Priest who cannot be touched with a feeling of our infirmities, but one of whom it could be said, hundreds of years before he came in the flesh, "In all their afflictions he was afflicted, and the angel of his presence saved them: in his love and in his pity he redeemed them; and he bare them and carried them all the days of old." O then for faith to look ever unto Jesus, who is the author and finisher of our faith. God forbid that any of his children should glory, save in the Lord. And when we are called to lay aside this earthly form, with all that is earthly (thanks be to God), may we by his Spirit be enabled to say, with the apostle Paul, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith. Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." Now, my dear brother, I will ask, Do you love his appearing? I know you do. Then you shall as surely receive that crown of righteousness; yea, as surely as there is an eternal God in the eternal throne of his glory. And as the gates of hell shall not prevail against his church, so shall the gates of hell not prevail against your eternal inheritance in Christ. Your life is hid with Christ in God. O, my brother, think of the security of the redeemed ones of our God. As soon could hell conquer heaven as one of these could be lost. But O how low down and how little our hope appears at times, so that with one of old we say, "My hope is perished from the Lord." But why despair?

"Our Jesus is the christian's hope,
Wrought in us by God's power;
It holds the weak believer up
In the distressing hour.

The darkest cloud hope pierces through,
And waits upon the Lord;
Expects to prove that all is true
Throughout the sacred word.

True hope looks out for blessings great,
And though they're long delayed,
Yet hope's determined still to wait
Until they are conveyed.

Hope long will wait, and wait again,
And ne'er can give it up,
Till the blest Lamb that once was slain
Appears the God of Hope."

So now, my precious, afflicted brother, remembering our first meeting, when you spoke so much of coldness and leanness, I have written the above from my own sad and mournful state, with a heart burdened almost to overflowing with impressions to speak or write, and at the same time feeling that Satan hindereth me; but out of the fullness of the heart the mouth speaketh. If my heart is full of evil at this time, I have only multiplied words without understanding, and thereby only darkened counsel; so judge by your own pure mind as to what I have here written, as to whether it has been indited by the right spirit. If it contains a word of comfort for you give God the praise, and make use of it as your better judgment may dictate. Have it published in the SIGNS if you see proper, provided the editors will accept it. We are but poor pilgrims on our journey home. With me at times the way seems long and cheerless, and I am made to say, in the language of Job, "Wherefore is light given to him that is in misery, and life unto the bitter in soul; which long for death, but it cometh not; and dig for it more than for hid treasures; which rejoice exceedingly, and are glad, when they can find the grave? Why is light given to a man whose way is hid, and whom God hath hedged in? For my sighing cometh before I eat, and my roarings are poured out like the waters. For the thing which I greatly feared is come upon me, and that which I was afraid of is come unto me. I was not in safety, neither had I rest, neither was I quiet; yet trouble came."—Job iii. 20–26.

In conclusion I will ask you to pray for me in my distress; and may the God of all grace give us to know what is the hope of our calling, and to be still, and know that he is God. May we realize through his abundant mercy that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose. May he give each one of his meek and lowly followers to hope that they love God, and are the called according to his purpose. My health is poor—nervous prostration. I only work by fits and starts, working hard some days, and dragging through as best I can on other days. Life is to me a burden, but it will soon be over, when I through the merits of the blessed Lamb of God hope to dwell with him, to awake in his likeness, and be satisfied. There is no satisfaction here. My family are reasonably well, for which I feel to thank God, and at times for tribulation also. Your letter was an agreeable surprise to me. Write again.

Your brother in affliction,

J. A. GRAFTON.

THE UNPROFITABLE SERVANT.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS:—With your kind permission, "I also will shew mine opinion" of our Lord's parable of the talents and servants.—Matt. xxv. 14–30. The gentle reader will please observe that it was spoken just after the parable of the ten virgins, in illustration and confirmation of it. Therefore it commences with the connecting word "for." "For the kingdom of heaven is as a man traveling into a far country, who called his own servants, and delivered unto them his goods." This was the Lord, and his servants were the people of Israel, whom he called into his kingdom in Canaan, and to whom he committed the oracles, the covenants and the promises, and of whom, as concerning the flesh, Christ came. And the coming of "the man Christ," in the beginning of the gospel kingdom, was the fulfillment of the "long time," when he came to reckon with them. They were all his own people and servants in that first covenant and kingdom, which was typical of better things to come. Some of them were faithful, as was Moses, and embraced the promises, worshiped God in heart and spirit, believed on Jesus as the promised Messiah, the Son of God, received him and entered into the kingdom spiritual with him. These were the wise virgins, the good and faithful servants. John the Baptist baptized many of them, and Jesus, by his apostles, baptized more of them than John. About three thousand were added to the new kingdom on the day of Pentecost, and following after, multiplied thousands of faithful servants. Believing children of Israel were baptized and received into the gospel kingdom, and into the joy of their Lord. These were the remnant in Israel, according to the election of grace, and the sheep of the Jewish fold, who knew the voice of the good Shepherd. In the gospel house, the blessed kingdom of grace, they received of the Lord's hand double for all their sins, and their privileges and joys were greatly enlarged. For they were in the relation and place of servants in that first kingdom, which was ceremonial and legal; but when the man Christ came in the end of that world, and reckoned with his servants, to them who received him and believed on his name he gave power to become the sons of God. "Wherefore thou art no more a servant, but a son; and if a son, then an heir of God through Christ." These are the "better things" which our Father-God has given his dear children in the new kingdom of gospel grace, more and better far than his servants of old received, although they also were greatly favored and blessed of God, who made with them the covenant, and made them a kingdom of priests. So that Moses said to them, "Happy art thou, O Israel; who is like unto thee, O people saved by the Lord!" But not all Israel believed on the Lord; therefore their own faithful Isaiah asks, "Who hath believed our report? and to whom is the arm of the Lord revealed?" "For they are not all Israel which are of Israel, neither because they are the seed of Abraham are they all children; but, In Isaac shall thy seed be called," says Paul. Therefore our Lord's instructive parable presents the solemn fact by the unprofitable servant, as also by the foolish virgins. And Paul says, "Israel hath not obtained that which he seeketh for; but the election hath obtained it, and the rest were blinded." For he had just said, "Even so then at this present time also there is a remnant according to the election of grace." He also shows why they as a people had not attained unto righteousness; "Because they sought it not by faith, but as it were by the works of the law." Now the law pertained only to temporal or earthly things, and was not of faith, nor by promise of One who should come and redeem them from its curse, but depended upon their own legal works. This was shown by the foolish virgins, who went away to buy oil for themselves. Jesus said to them, "And ye will not come to me, that ye might have life. Ye have not the love of God in you. I am come in my Father's name, and ye receive me not: if another shall come in his own name, him ye will receive. Do not think that I will accuse you to the Father; there is one that accuseth you, even Moses, in whom ye trust." The last clause ("in whom ye trust") shows that they were destitute of faith in Jesus, although they were Israelites, to whom the Lord had committed the law and the service of God as his servants, yet that was all they had. This answers to the one talent. They were Jews outwardly, in the flesh, and worshiped God in the letter of the law, but not in heart and spirit, nor in faith and hope and love. So, when last of all, God sent forth his Son, they received him not, but slew him and cast him out of the vineyard. Will the dear reader please read Matt. xxi. 33–43? In this parable of the householder, vineyard and husbandmen, which our Lord himself applied to the Jewish kingdom and people, we have a clear illustration of the parable of the talents. To his wicked, unbelieving enemies, the Jews, who put him to death, he said, "Therefore say I unto you, the kingdom of God shall be taken from you and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof." In Matt. viii. he says,

"And I say unto you, That many shall sit down with Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, in the kingdom of heaven: but the children of the kingdom shall be cast out into outer darkness: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth." In Matt. xxv. he says, "Take therefore the talent from him, and give it unto him which hath ten talents. For unto every one that hath shall be given, and he shall have abundance: but from him that hath not shall be taken away even that which he hath. And cast ye the unprofitable servant into outer darkness: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth." In these three parallel Scriptures our Lord teaches that the children of the kingdom, the wicked husbandmen or Jews, from whom the kingdom of God should be taken, and the wicked and slothful servant were the same. As the covenant people and visible kingdom of God, to whom he committed his laws, worship and service, this favored nation not only proved itself unfaithful and unprofitable, but "wicked and slothful," as Jesus shows in the parable of the talents. Therefore the talent was taken from them; that is, the kingdom, with its ordinances and services, even all that God had given them in that first covenant, and they were cast out and dispersed, even unto this day. In Romans xi. Paul says, "Because of unbelief they were broken off." They were not only unbelieving, but also earthly and carnal, violent and cruel; for they persecuted their own prophets, John the Baptist, Jesus the Son of God, and his apostles. But yet they jealously guarded the holy Scriptures, which testified of Jesus, while they neither believed nor obeyed them. Thus this stiff-necked people, to whom the oracles of God were committed, hid the one talent in the earth, proving themselves unprofitable, wicked and slothful, as the Lord Jesus testifies in this parable. So the sacred trust was taken from them, and they were no longer the repository and guardians of the divine treasures, ordinances and service, but were rejected from being the Lord's stewards, and ceased to be the people of his covenant and kingdom. And until this day this once highly favored people of God continue in unbelief, and are, as the unprofitable servant, cast into outer darkness.

D. BARTLEY.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, Ind., Aug. 9, 1895.

"LET brotherly love continue."—Heb. xiii. 1.

Having recently read an article published over the signature of our much esteemed brother, Elder S. H. Durand, on "Conference of Brethren," and having felt to be benefited by its perusal, I have since then at times had a desire to say a few words in the same line of thought.

"Now I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment."—1 Cor. i. 10. This epistle was written by one "called to be an apostle of Jesus Christ," and addressed to not only the church of God at Corinth, but also to us who now live, if we are what we profess to be, saints that "call upon the name of Jesus Christ our Lord, both theirs and ours." It is with painfulness that we sometimes witness in the writings of some of our brethren, as well as occasionally in speaking by some, a spirit of a dictatorial nature, and a tendency at least of proscription against others, even at times leading to contentions among us. Now, who is "blameless in the day of our Lord Jesus Christ?" Is it not well for us, dear brethren, to consider what manner of creatures we are? Is Christ divided? Was Paul crucified for you? Or were ye baptized in the name of Paul? If not, if Christ is not divided, ought his children to be separated? Surely not. Then let us each and all, as Paul said, "lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us." I hope I have learned a half-century ago that I am full of sin, and am easily beset; but, dear brethren, we also hope that we have learned that we are not our own, but have been bought with a price; yea, and how great a price is it, even the blood of Jesus Christ. If this is true we should not offend one another. The Savior has said, "I am the vine, ye are the branches." Again, he says, "These things I command you, that ye love one another." Now, brethren, let us not refer in our writing or speaking to some portion of Scripture without even quoting its words, and say that that is the standard or test of fellowship, and also say, If you do not adopt that idea you are not correct or sound in faith. It is proper to quote Scripture in proof of positions taken; but let us quote the words therein contained, and not simply cite to book, chapter and verse for proof. The citation may be a correct proof text, and it may not. It may, if copied or written out, prove something entirely foreign to the subject attempted to be established. Besides, many of us cannot correctly call to mind in reading these citations of book, chapter and verse what is referred to. Let us not make a long list of quotations, as stated, by simply telling where they are, but let us, as our dear Savior did when quoting from other records, give the substance at least of the words.

The apostle whose words we have quoted has said, "For ye see your calling, brethren, how that not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are called: but God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty."—1 Cor. i. 26, 27. As a writer or speaker I surely know that I am weak; and when I see the spirit of wisdom exhibited by some one that has had worldly advantages and education, and observe a tendency to overawe the weak brother, I am at once made to feel in my heart, Who hath made thee to differ? We do not intend to speak disparagingly of education, but on the contrary commend it. If it were the Lord's will, all his servants should be as Paul was. Though he had been born in Tarsus, a city in Cilicia, yet brought up at the feet of Gamaliel, and taught according to the perfect manner of the law of the fathers, yet he declared to the Corinthian brethren, when he went to them on one occasion, "I, brethren, when I came to you, came not with excellency of speech or of wisdom, declaring unto you the testimony of God." Is not this much more comforting to God's dear little children than to claim that by reason of deep research and great study we can give a better understanding of the Scriptures than otherwise we could do? Is it not much better to realize the truth that "though ye have ten thousand instructors in Christ, yet have ye not many fathers?" Peter said, "Wherefore laying aside all malice, and all guile, and hypocrisies, and envies, and all evil speakings, as new-born babes, desire the sincere milk of the word, that ye may grow thereby; if so be ye have tasted that the Lord is gracious."—1 Peter ii. 1–3. Is not this preaching as good for us in our day as for the saints in Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia and Bithynia? Paul says (2 Cor. x. 3–5), "For though we walk in the flesh, we do not war after the flesh (for the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds); casting down imaginations, and every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God, and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ." How beautiful this is, how debasing of human pride and self-boasting, and how God-honoring and glorifying of his holy name! I also am reminded of some more of the apostle's words. "Would to God ye could bear with me a little in my folly." John says, "He that saith he is in the light, and hateth his brother, is in darkness even until now. He that loveth his brother abideth in the light, and there is none occasion of stumbling in him."—1 John ii. 9, 10. Again, we read the words of Christ himself, "The light of the body is the eye: if therefore thine eye be single, thy whole body shall be full of light. But if thine eye be evil, thy whole body shall be full of darkness. If therefore the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness!"—Matt. vi. 22, 23.

I might enumerate Scripture after Scripture on this same line, to the exclusion of boasting, and showing that all things are of God, for the good of his people that are exercised by the Spirit of Christ. In conclusion I quote the caption, "Let brotherly love continue."

JAMES M. TRUE.

KANSAS, Ill., June 21, 1895.

MINERAL WELLS, Texas, May 22, 1895.

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES:—To those who have been enabled by the direct and infallible power of the Spirit to discern the things of the Spirit, I would write; for I realize the fact that it would be inconsistent to write the truth to a people who do not know it when they read it. We read of a people who do take the truth for a lie, and a lie for the truth. It seems that to such a people it would be as well to write them a lie, as it would answer for a truth to them. A large majority of the people in these parts are teaching that the inspired writer was misled by the Spirit when he recorded the words, "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned." They are, they imagine, teaching spiritual things; but the fact that their teaching is received, known and discerned by the natural man, is proof that their teaching is not the things of the Spirit of God, but carnality. The carnal man will and can accept carnal teaching; but it is as imposible for the spiritual mind to receive carnal things, as it is for the carnal mind to receive spiritual things. We see that the spiritual man in the first place must have an existence before the things of the Spirit can can be recieved and discerned. We also see, from the plain teaching of the Scriptures, that the spiritual man is produced by the spiritual birth; and it is also as plainly taught that the carnal man, the carnal mind, is not consulted in the spiritual birth, as it is on this wise, "Born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, but of God." If these expressions do not exclude all human effort, human agency, human means or instrumentality, which we find promulgated all over our land, then words have no meaning. I see from reading the Missionary papers that they have a savior set up that beats our Christ in saving the people, and his name is Sunday School. They give a table showing the number saved by Sunday Schools, and without such schools, thirty to one; so it is plain that their school system professedly saves more people than does the Christ system. Their idea of the new birth is about like that of Nicodemus, who thought it was the natural man born over again. The Arminians go to work with the dead, blind, deaf and dumb sinner, and through their process of teaching, preaching, admonishing and praying, they profess to spiritualize the carnal man; that at first he has a carnal or natural mind, but when they get through with him he is spiritually minded. Then the natural man is born again through their

SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

"CAN Old School Baptists allow their children to attend the Sunday Schools of the enemies of the truth consistently with allegiance to the God of heaven?"

The above question has been proposed to us of late, and our views asked concerning it. In reply we feel first of all like saying that we have believed that we should be committing a sin against God should we allow our own children to attend the Sunday Schools which are all around us. We dislike to speak of ourself directly in any way, but perhaps we shall be pardoned if here and now we say that we have not and do not send or allow our children to go to any of the Sunday Schools in the village where we have lived for twenty-seven years. We do not mean to say that they have never been in a Sunday School as visitors. Perhaps once or twice a year they may have been present in this way, just as now and then they may go to hear Arminian preaching. We say this by way of personal explanation. Our children know, and we think fully understand, that we think it wrong for them to go where we would not go ourselves.

It seems to us clear beyond all question that if it be wrong for us as Old School Baptists, who believe that we are the church of God on earth, to hold Sunday Schools of our own for the instruction of our children in the letter of the truth, it is a much more unspeakable wrong to help sustain a Sunday School where false and fleshly doctrines are taught by sending our children to them. We hardly know how to go about arguing this matter, it seems such a self-evident proposition. It certainly is wrong to encourage and help sustain anything that is wrong. If Sunday Schools in themselves were not wrong, certainly false teaching in them is wrong; and to sustain or encourage what is wrong is to be a partaker of that wrong.

So long as we believe in salvation by grace, and in all those principles of truth that are necessarily connected with it, we must believe that to teach children or any one else that they can of themselves repent and turn to God, that salvation depends upon man's own work or choice, that salvation is offered for man's acceptance or rejection, that by teaching children or men can come to know and serve God and finally be saved, that the Sunday School is the true and proper nursery of the church of God, and that by Sunday Schools or any other training children can be prepared for heaven, is to teach falsehood of the deepest dye. Such are the things impressed upon the children's minds in every Sunday School in our land. How then can we, who believe in and love salvation by grace, consent to in any way whatever support that which at every step denies our faith? If our children, whom God has placed under our charge, are allowed by us to attend upon such teaching, we are encouraging it and helping to sustain it. We are denying the Lord, to whom and to whose finished work this sort of teaching gives the lie direct.

Still another reason forces itself upon our attention. Sunday Schools, as well as all other things, need money to help them along. The children are all asked and expected to bring at least a penny every Sunday. True, a penny is but a small thing in itself; but we remember once when two mites were more than great riches. In as small a thing as a penny a great principle may be involved. We have no more right to contribute a penny toward the support and advancement of untruth than we have to contribute a thousand dollars. If our children attend a Sunday School they will not want to appear mean. If other children bring their penny, so will they desire to do; and the pennies must come from their parents. How can we, as consistent Old School Baptists, pay our money to support what we do not believe in? If men believe in the Sunday School as a good thing, then let them do what they can to support it; but let us not violate our own conscience by helping on what we believe to be falsehood. We do not seek to interfere with those who believe the Sunday School to be right, except that we would show them the unscripturalness of their teaching if we could; but we do feel like urging that we keep our own skirts clean in this matter.

We have heard it urged by some who have allowed their children to attend such places in defense of their course that it can do them no harm to go. With this we must take direct issue. To be taught and to embrace falsehood of any kind injures anybody. We think it better that our child should be a Gallio, who cares for none of these things, than a Caiaphas, filled with false religion, and therefore with deadly enmity to the Savior and his cause and people. False religious teaching turns a Gallio into a Caiaphas; and we remember that Jesus once said to the religious professors of his day, "Ye compass sea and land to make one proselyte; and when he is made, ye make him twofold more the child of hell than yourselves." Is it no injury then to be made twofold more the child of hell than their teachers? We have always felt glad that we were not allowed when we were a child to be subjected to such proselyting influences, and we owe a debt of gratitude to our parents in this respect which we never can repay or express. How can we say that it will do our children no harm to be subjected to the influence of falsehood, unless we are also ready to contend that it is no harm to a person to be made twofold more a child of hell than his teachers? We do not pause here to consider what this language of the Savior in Matthew xxiii. 15 may mean. At all events it is something harmful and to be deplored.

We have heard it said by those who would justify their course in this matter, "The Lord can bring them back, and if he has chosen them to salvation he will in his own good time." Thanks to the mercy and grace of God, this is true. A Saul of Tarsus is not beyond the power and grace of God. The Pope of Rome himself could be humbled by the grace of God. There is nothing too hard for the Lord. He can even give repentance to his erring and disobedient people. All this is true, and we have reason to bless and praise his holy name for this great truth every day of our lives; but shall we therefore presume upon his power and grace? O may it ever be our prayer, "Keep back thy servant also from presumptuous sins; let them not have dominion over me." Because God can save our child from ruin, shall we therefore hurl him over the precipice, or suffer him to fall over if we can prevent it? The only question for us to consider in this matter is this, What is the will of God? How shall we glorify him? It is not what can God do, nor what will he do, but what is right for us to do. Is it right for us to allow our children to attend the Sunday Schools of the enemies of God and truth? We say no! thrice no! If it is right, let some one show that it is. Is it right to let our money and influence go to the support of the wrong? So that the enemy gets our name and our money, he laughs at our declamations against him. Actions speak louder than words. We can never tell how pained we have been once or twice in our lives, when we were presenting our views upon the question of Sunday Schools, to be met with the remark in reply, "You are extreme. So-and-so is a good Baptist, and his children attend our Sunday School." Even our enemies see the inconsistency of preaching against Sunday Schools, and at the same time sending our children to them. There can be no half-way about this matter. If they are wrong they are wrong; and if it be wrong to let our children go into any wrong thing, it is also wrong to allow them to go into this wrong thing.

Still farther, if we desire that our children shall grow up despising us and our religion, the best and easiest way to go about it is to send them to our enemies to be taught. If we have any regard to the future comfort and peace of our households, if we desire that our children shall be a source of pleasure and comfort to us in the future, we shall avoid, as we would the deadliest foe, that which will fill them with the spirit of persecution of our holy religion. The deadliest foes that we know of to-day to the cause of God and truth are the children of some Old School Baptist parents who were raised in the Sunday Schools of their enemies. They have become a thorn in the sides of their parents, regarding them and treating them with no respect. What a man sows that shall he reap. We have heard of some such children saying, "Father and mother are opposed to Sunday Schools, but they let us go all the same." In other words, the children mock their parents, and learn to despise their profession. The enmity of the natural heart of man is sufficient of itself, without being fanned into a flame of persecution by being subjected to false religious teaching.

For these and other reasons that could be alleged we must say that Old School Baptists sin when they encourage or support the Sunday Schools of the enemies of truth, either by allowing their children to attend them, or by contributing of their means to their support.

As for the excuses that we have heard alleged, such as, "My children must have society, and it is lonesome for them at home, and they think it hard if they cannot go with other children," they are not worth considering. They do not furnish the shadow of a justification for allowing our children to engage in this wrong thing, any more than they would justify us in allowing our children to go into any other wrong thing. If to do this thing is wrong, that is the end of it. Nothing can justify it.

C.

AN ABLE MINISTRY.

IN a New School Baptist paper we find a long article commenced, and to be continued, on the subject of "an able ministry." The article purports to be written by a certain piece of bloated mortality, identified by the title and name, "Rev. James M. Pendleton." From some expressions in the article we suspect the writer is laboring to show what is necessary to constitute an able minister of Jesus Christ; but, poor fellow, he pokes about miserably in the dark. The elements most essential in his estimation seem better adapted to qualifying ministers of state, or performers for the stage, than for those who are to be the humble ministers of the lowly Lamb of God.

The three requisites to constitute an able ministry by this writer, are, first, "Mental capacity," the lack of which has been wofully felt by the New School. Since they have depended on their educational machinery for ministers, their schools have turned out upon community a greater percentage of learned blockheads than can be found among any of the professions of the age. The second is learning. To the necessity of learned men for the ministry, much of his long, windy article is devoted; and the third, last and least of the trio is called "Ardent, elevated piety." Nothing is hinted of a work of grace to be wrought by the Holy Ghost on the heart. Not a word of a call or preparation by the God of heaven. In reference to these the writer says that "The day of inspiration is past, and men know nothing but what they learn." If the day of inspiration is past, and God has ceased to teach his people by the Holy Spirit, and nothing henceforth is known except by that kind of teaching or learning which is independent of and distinct from the inspiration of the Spirit, then woe to the world, and woe to the church of God in the world. And this is the position taken by the writer. Consequently the "ardent, elevated piety" which he pretends to think necessary is only a science, an art, a something learned independently of inspiration, and, of course, without regeneration. Piety is a term used by antichrist as equivalent to true religion; but it is almost universally by them applied to a form of religion where the power of vital godliness is denied. The qualifying terms, ardent and elevated, shows that they have so many degrees of piety that they must distinguish the various kinds by as many qualifying terms. For instance, their "laity" may have benevolent piety, confiding in their learned ministers, scratch about and collect funds, and lay their goods at these false apostles feet; but their clergy requires a piety elevated, a priestly kind, a clerical piety, a sort that will make them reverends, right reverends and divines, and so by an elevated king of religion raise their reverences a head and shoulders above the common people. And "an able ministry" must have an ardent piety, a hand-working, laborious, toilsome kind of religion; such a kind as the prophet Isaiah describes, that "cannot rest, but is continually casting up mire and dirt." He says,

"The day of inspiration is past, and men know nothing but what they learn. There have been professed ministers of Christ (there may be some still) who seemed to consider themselves specially commissioned to decry learning, and by consequence exalt ignorance. If there are advantages in ignorance, men of this class most disgustingly exemplify them. They suppose that God does not need the learning of his ministers in the advancement of his cause. What a pity that they are not intelligent enough to know that a distinguished theologian has said with caustic and eloquent severity, 'If God does not need our learning, much less does he need our ignorance.' This class of preachers would have no texts from which to preach if learned men had not translated the Bible from Hebrew and Greek into English. From such antinomian, anti-missionary, anti-education ministers may the churches everywhere be delivered.

'From such apostles, O ye mitred heads,
Preserve the church! and lay not careless hands
On skulls that cannot teach, and will not learn.'

The idea that God sanctifies ignorance and makes it subservient to the accomplishment of the objects of the ministry cannot be found in any 'canonical book,' and it will be a happy day for the church and the world when it becomes an 'obsolete idea.'"

Here we have evidently a dash intended for the old School Baptists. The prayer of the writer for the annihilation of those whom he calls antinomian, anti-missionary, anti-education ministers, shows that the Old Fashioned Baptists are intended; for upon no other class do the New Order deal out these epithets; and these are charged with decrying learning and exalting ignorance. But is this true? When, where, and by whom, among the Old Baptists, has learning been decried, or ignorance exalted? Human learning for human or temporal purposes is not without its advantages to mankind, and the Old Baptists would rejoice if we had schools in our country free from sectarian influence, where our children might drink deeply at the fountain of erudition; but we protest against the theory that it can qualify any man to preach the gospel of Christ. The Old Baptists do not object to ministers that are learned, provided their learning is not substituted for the work of God's holy Spirit in qualifying them for the work of the ministry. Our position is this, that the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ is a divine revelation, and not a human science; that no man, however learned in the wisdom of this world, can call Jesus Lord, but by the Holy Ghost; and that a revelation of Jesus Christ is made by the Holy Ghost to and in the ministers of Jesus, and in all the members of his kingdom, whether learned like Saul, or unlearned like Peter and John. The classical and theological studies of Saul only made him a persecutor of the church of God; and although a proficient in the religion of the schools, and a graduate from the highest of them, and possessing abundance of "ardent, elevated piety," he was totally ignorant of the person, doctrine and gospel of Jesus Christ, until he was taught it by revelation of Jesus Christ, by that God who had separated him from his mother's womb. And it is the same now; a provision of the new covenant which God has made with his people, provides, with all the certainty of the sure mercies of David, by the oath and promise of Jehovah, by the two things wherein it is impossible for God to lie, that his people shall be all taught of God, and that they "shall no more teach every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord; for they shall all know me, from the least of them unto the greatest of them, saith the Lord." Not from the greatest of them to the least, but from the least unto the greatest of them. Then let such mad men as Pendleton rave. Let them protest that the day of inspiration and revelation by the Spirit is past, and that nothing more is to be known of God, of heaven, of immortality, only as the sciences of this world are learned. God has told us otherwise, and all who are of God will respect his declaration, though it make every man a liar.

"The eloquent severity" which Mr. P. considers so caustic from this favorite Rabbi, does not touch the people to whom he directs it. They have never contended that God was in "need of learning or ignorance;" they have contended that God is in need of nothing, not even money, or men, or power, to spread his gospel and to gather in his elect, and accomplish all his purpose in earth, as his will is done in heaven. God is far above necessity or want. But we challenge Mr. Pendleton, or his "caustic theologian," to prove that God needs much less our ignorance than our learning. The assertion is untrue; God is no more in need of learning for his ministers than he is of ignorance. We distinctly and emphatically deny that God is in need of either, or of anything else; consequently he cannot need either more or less than he does the other. But we do affirm, without fear of contradiction, that God has chosen the unlearned in preference to the learned; the ignorant in preference to the wise and prudent; and the weak and base things of this world hath God chosen, while he has hidden the things of his Spirit from the wise, the learned and the prudent, "that no flesh should glory in his presence." That God does magnify the glory of his might through the weakness of his children, and glory of his gospel through the most illiterate and simple of his ministers, can be found recorded in all the "canonical books" of the New Testament. The absence of educational embellishment in the preaching of Peter and John gave convincing evidence that they had been with Jesus; but the literary display of our modern graduates give evidence only that they have been at school. There is not, among all the lambs of the flock of Jesus, one to be found, however weak, illiterate or ignorant of the sciences taught by men, who cannot confound in fair argument all the sons of Gamaliel that have ever been belched forth upon the Baptist profession, on matters of a spiritual and experimental import; and if Mr. Pendleton doubts this assertion, let him test the truth of what we say by actual experiment, and he will find that one of the Lord's poor, illiterate, despised disciples, can chase a thousand, and two of them can put to flight ten thousand of such "able ministers" as emanate from the schools of men.

process of teaching. So we see they had practically the Nicodemus idea to the letter. But that which is born of teaching is teaching, and "that which is born of the Spirit is spirit." The Missionaries, Methodists, Campbellites and Presbyterians have a god or savior set up in our midst, and his name is influence. The popular idea is that a person can get religion through the influence of some other person, of course, and join the supposed church, and live so dutiful, so prayerful, so godly, and let their light shine so brightly, till through their magnificent influence they win souls to heaven. So it is plain that where people hold such an idea they are of the antichrist spirit; for Christ must be accepted as a complete Savior, otherwise we have no Christ. The apostle John speaks of two classes of preachers. He says of one class, "They are of the world, therefore speak they of the world, and the world heareth them." The Arminians boast of their preaching to the world, and that the world hears them. John then speaks of another class, in which he verily expresses the primitive manner of preaching. He says, "We are of God; he that knoweth God heareth us; he that is not of God heareth not ns. Hereby know we the spirit of truth, and the spirit of error." Thus we see the two spirits, of truth and of error. One is preaching to the world, just like the Missionaries, Campbellites, &c., and the others are the same old "sheep feeders," called by the great Shepherd of the sheep. The idea of preaching to those only who know God is preposterous to the Arminians. John calls these antichrist, which is the right name, for they believe that the salvation of the world depends on their teaching the effort of man, the exercise of the human will. They talk of means and instrumentalites; but all the means and instrumentalities we have any account of is the independent and in all cases effectual power of the Spirit. The Missionaries teach that the work of the Spirit in regeneration is coextensive with their preaching, and the Spirit acts through the gospel; and of course they claim to have the true gospel; so, according to their idea, there is no salvation except where they preach; but they have lacked in a wonderful degree of preaching to all the world. They also teach that God has offered salvation to all the world; but when we come to examine their system, salvation has only been offered to a limited part of the world. Arminians generally say they believe in the total depravity of the sinner; but when we come to examine their preaching we find they do not believe in depravity at all; for if the dead, blind, deaf and dumb sinner can do what they claim and imagine he can, there is no such thing as depravity, as their idea is that the sinner in a state of nature is a subject of gospel address; that he must hear and obey the preaching of the gospel. God says he is deaf; but they say he must hear in order to be made alive. They will not allow that the Spirit must give life in order that they hear the things of the Spirit. The true gospel is a message to be delivered, a spiritual message, a message of the Spirit, or by the Spirit. Now comes the point, Who are we going to deliver the message to? It is plainly taught in the Scriptures that the natural man, the dead man, the deaf man, receiveth not the things of the Spirit; so we see we cannot deliver it there. Is it not a fact that the sinner must be made alive before he can receive this message of the Spirit? Is there anything that can precede life? The sinner has natural life, which only enables him to receive, know and discern natural things. There must be spiritual life before the acceptance of spiritual things. How is the spiritual life produced? It must be by the spiritual birth; and if there is anything plainly taught, that birth is produced exclusivly of the Spirit, as we read, "That which is born of the Spirit is spirit." "It is the Spirit that quickeneth [maketh alive], the flesh profiteth nothing." "The Son quickeneth whom he will." Now, it cannot be possible that any amount of teaching, or preaching, or exhortation, to the dead sinner, will induce the Spirit to do its work. Arminians are teaching all over our land that God so desired the salvation of the whole race of mankind, that in the effort to save them he gave his only Son to die. In the effort to accomplish his desire and purpose, they think he made a wonderful effort to save the whole race of mankind. Then they teach that there are thousands lost eternally whom God did desire and purpose to save. Yet they read in the Scriptures, "Whatsoever his soul desireth, even that he doeth." Also, "As I have purposed, so shall it stand; as I have thought, so shall it come to pass." So it is an evident fact that if God gave his Son to die for the whole race of man, their salvation was embraced in his purpose and desire and thought. Then they would have a universal salvation of the whole race, and their general atonement idea, unless they impeach God's positive declaration in what he says he will positively do. When God desires to save a sinner, he just simply does it. "What his soul desireth, even that he doeth." The term "try" will not apply to God. As an infallible Being he does not try to do anything. He invariably does what he desires to do. But according to the Arminian's idea of him he only does a very little of what he desires to do, or purposed to do, or thought to do.

A. P. SMITH.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., July 23, 1895.

MY DEAR BROTHER JENKINS:—Were I one of those that walk in the light, and not in the darkness, it would be reasonable that I should write to you for instruction in righteousness; because you are often in company with him who hath told you all things that ever you did; who knoweth all things, and who, by the fullness and power of his grace, is able to keep you from falling. How wonderfully favored is the one who is often in the manifest presence of Jesus. And when such divine favor is bestowed that one is at the time like him, meek and lowly of heart, and possessed of a quiet spirit, sitting at his feet and learning of him. He is tasting that his Lord is gracious, and realizing that he is also merciful. He is ready to say with one of old, "How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace." Yet it seems to me more reasonable, inasmuch as I dwell in the darkness, that I should appeal to you, who are in the light; for I am aware that you have (in the times past) had to pass through great and thick darkness, to be placed just where you are, upon the walls of salvation. Were I satisfied that the darkness which envelops me is that real darkness which is a part of the experience of the saints, I could then, no doubt, feel more at ease. But all the darkness that enshrouds my mind and soul appears to be so thoroughly natural, I mean so like that which I see in the world, and so unlike that encountered by those whom I am sure are the church of God. The experience of the Lord's people is characterized as a like or common experience; that is, each one who has entered the kingdom can testify to the truth of a work of grace in his brother's heart, by the things which he has also tasted and handled of the word of life; so that the pilgrims of Zion all travel in the same direction, encounter like difficulties, meet with the same enemies, and conquer with the same Captain of their salvation, or rather through him. But I seem to be one alone. I feel to hope that I have turned my back upon the world; it is no longer my home. My heart's desire is toward Jerusalem. Mine eyes wander to the little flock whom Jesus feeds. I long for their company and their love. Yet I am so lame and so halt that I cannot catch up to them; and, indeed, I am painfully aware that could I do so I would not be fit company for them. I am tossed upon the billows of my own inordinate lusts. I become stranded in the sands of my own depravity. I sleep while my brethren are awake. And if I make any progress at all, it is backward, and not forward. I am troubled, but I am too stupid to understand the cause of my trouble. I am alone. I find none like me. So often the question arises in my mind, Can one learn the things that I hope I have learned by any natural means? Can one love the things that pertain not to this world from a worldly source? Can one love the church of God, its solemn assemblies, its ordinances and its divine law, behold its beauty, and taste the sweetness of communion with the brethren, and yet be devoid of grace? These things are the foundation upon which I build my hope; and my hope is above price; I cannot value it. If these things are real with me, why am I not like you and the other precious brethren? I sat down with the hope that I might be given something to write that would interest you. My heart went out to you in that chief desire, but alas! true to nature, self is first and last and intermediate with me. When Paul determined to come to his brethren knowing nothing "save Jesus Christ and him crucified," he was free from selfishness; his eye was single to his Lord's glory. I would like to go to you, my brother, in the same spirit. Who, indeed, is like unto our Lord? All the riches of wisdom and knowledge are treasured up in him. If the life we now live, we live by the faith of the Son of God, then shall we know Christ, and him crucified, as the apostle also knew him. But how do we know that we know him? John says, "And hereby we do know that we know him, if we keep his commandments." And again, "He that saith he abideth in him, ought himself also to walk even as he walked." His commandment is a commandment of love. Our love to the children of God is an evidence that we walk even as he walked; for we could attain unto that love only as grace attunes the heart to sing the praises of her Lord. The knowledge that has come with the light of truth (and which has established us in the faith, so that we walk thereby) extends not only to the Christ that taught, and administered, and wrought miracles under the law, but also to a crucified and risen Redeemer. "Christ and him crucified" is the day-star of our hope. Had he not died, we could not live. Having fulfilled the the law in us, we arose with him in newness of life. Now, in his glorious kingdom, the same love that constrained the Son to do the will of the Father, and to suffer the ignominy of the cross for his body (the church), also fulfills the law of a new commandment, "That we love one another." We have knowledge that we fear God and hate evil, because our love for the brethren is stronger than our love for the world; for where sin abounds, grace doth much more abound. At this moment my prayer is to be kept from presumptuous sin; and it does seem presumption in me to try to write to you as I do. May the dear Lord continue the bestowal of his choice blessings on you in the days to come, as has been his pleasure in the days gone by.

Your brother in hope,

B. F. COULTER.

SOUTHAMPTON, Pa., June 24, 1895.

DEAR BRETHREN:—I send you a letter from Elder P. H. James, for publication in the SIGNS, hoping it will be a comfort to some. In regard to the language which he used, and to which some took exception, I do not see how it can be objected to, so far as our eternal salvation, or our everlasting condemnation, is concerned. All were made sinners, and brought under condemnation and death by the disobedience of one man, Adam; and all who shall ever be made righteous will be made so by the obedience of one man, the Lord Jesus Christ.—Rom. v. 19.

Your brother in hope,

SILAS H. DURAND.

PRESCOTT, Ark., Feb. 11, 1895.

ELDER SILAS H. DURAND—DEAR BROTHER IN THE LORD:—Yours of the 18th ult. is at hand. I was glad indeed to hear from you, though sorry to hear you and wife were not well, but hope ere this you have recovered. "O give thanks unto the Lord; for he is good; for his mercy endureth forever." Our old bodies are subject to decay, and heirs to all the diseases common to man, which often produces excruciating pain and affliction; but such afflictions work for our good, though at the time we seldom feel or see that such is for our good. After we are relieved of pain, affliction and care, and anxiety for some loved one, then are we prepared to see the goodness and mercy of our God. "God is rich in mercy," and he doth not willingly afflict. His children are often tried as gold is tried in the fire, for the purpose of separating the dross from the pure metal; and the process of separating the gold from the dross will continue to the end of this mortal life; for they are "chosen in the furnace of affliction," and "our God is a consuming fire." But the blessed promise is that he will deliver them out of all their afflictions. "Many are the afflictions of the righteous; but the Lord delivereth him out of them all." "In all their afflictions he was afflicted;" and "as he was, so are we in this world." How glad I am to hear that you and your dear wife have such implicit trust in the Lord while passing through such sufferings. "Trust ye in the Lord forever; for in the Lord Jehovah is everlasting strength." Of late I have had some good seasons. I have been made to rejoice in the inner man, while meditating on and trying to tell of the glorious plan of salvation as it was purposed and fixed before the world began, and the great and glorious finished work of Jesus, by which he effectually accomplished the salvation of the whole elect body. Although I have often before had absorbing and sweet meditations on these glorious truths, yet never before was I made to feel such power as attended these exercises of mind; and by the same power I was made to see the fixed certainty of the eternal redemption of every one that was chosen in Christ Jesus before the world began, even the redemption of these vile bodies from sin and corruption, to be fashioned like the glorious body of Jesus. I often have doubts and fears, but the older I get (when blessed with such visitations) the more I am confirmed in this glorious doctrine, and all the argumentative effusions of the combined Arminian world could not convince me that the Primitive or Old School Baptists are wrong. And the reason is, dear brother, I feel to be so fully established, or rather believe this to be an eternal truth, is that I did not receive this tuition of man, but hope I was taught it by the revelation of Jesus Christ. I was raised in the midst of Arminians, therefore surrounded by Arminian influence, and they endeavored to teach me the traditions and commandments of men; but how thankful I was unto the Lord about fifteen years ago, and am yet, that he delivered me from their burdensome laws and commandments, and enabled me, I hope, by his Spirit to see the new and living Way in all his beauty. And now, dear brother, when I look back over my fifteen years of experience, I am bound to exclaim, O what a crooked path I have traveled! The Lord's way is straight, but how crooked mine is. But his "mercy endureth forever." Although I have been blessed with only a meagre allowance of this world's goods, I can sometimes exclaim, "Surely goodness and mercy have followed me all the days of my life." I have been sinful and disobedient, and do not feel that I have ever merited the least of his favors; yet mercy is still extended, and in him I still live, move and have my being. You say you often wonder where the scene will end with you. Dear brother, I hope the scene will end in peace, and that you may be prepared to say with Paul, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith," and that you may receive the crown of righteousness, with all those that love the glorious appearing of our Lord. May the God of all grace bless you and yours, and all the dear children. May you be kept by his power unto an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, is the prayer of your very unworthy brother, if indeed one at all. Remember us at the throne of grace.

Yours in love,

P. H. JAMES.

P. S.—I would like to have your view on a certain point. Some time back I publicly made the assertion that we were not saved for our own good deeds, neither were we damned or condemned for our bad deeds. After I made such assertion I went on briefly to explain myself. Now, without giving you my view, or explaining myself, I would like you to give me your view. Was I right or was I wrong in making such assertion? One person objected to the above, and said that he believed the creature (natural) could accept Christ or reject him. Please write me as soon as you have opportunity.

Yours affectionately,

P. H. J.

CENTERBURG, Ohio, April 27, 1894.

ELDER F. A. CHICK—DEAR BROTHER:—As I feel impressed by the Spirit of God, I hope, I should speak, if I can, a word of encouragement to the little flock. We are commanded to speak often one to another, and so much the more as we see the end approaching. We should stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ has made us free, and not be entangled again with the yoke of bondage. I believe that to deny God's predestination of all things is to deny the only true God. There are some I hear of who are turning back, who have been walking with the Old Baptists. We read that at one time when Jesus was talking, some said, "This is a hard saying, who can hear it?" Many therefore of his disciples, when they had heard this, went back, and walked no more with him. Then Jesus said unto the twelve, "Will ye also go away?" Peter answered for the twelve, "Lord, to whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life." So we see that all did not turn back, for some went on with him. I believe there has been a little flock in all ages that has followed him, as there now is, and ever will be. These will look to and depend upon him for all things, both in heaven and on earth. Take away God's predestination and the foundation of the christian's hope is gone; for there would then be nothing sure. Some say that to admit God's predestination of all things would make God the author of sin. Now, I think this expression is only borrowed from carnal religionists to scare the more tender ones. I understand that sin is the transgression of the law. What law is God under? Is there any law outside of himself? I think there is not. Man is a creature, but sin is not a creature. Sin is the act of the creature. Some ask, Why did God make man so he could sin? I would say, O God, thou knowest.

I want to say to you, brother Chick, that I am glad you are steadfast in the doctrine, and what I believe to be the doctrine of the Bible. Paul said, "For I know this, that after my departure shall grievous wolves enter in among you, not sparing the flock. Also of your own selves shall men arise, speaking perverse things, to draw away disciples after them." He warned his brethren night and day with tears, and said, "I commend you to God, and to the word of his grace, which is able to build you up, and to give you an inheritance among them that are sanctified." The wolves have been howling around, and have entered the flock, and would destroy it. Some of the little lambs they are worrying, and the weak ones they are crippling; but God watches over them all, and will take care of his sheep. The good Shepherd will deliver them from their enemies. Let us look back to the history of Israel at the Red Sea, when their enemies were after them, and about to touch them. But God commanded Moses to smite the waters, and the waters were divided, and the children of Israel went through on dry land; but their enemies, following in pursuit, the water came together, and they were buried in the depths of the sea. Just that way it shall be in the last days. I say last days; for I firmly believe that we are in the last days, which God has told us of. The enemies will press hard upon the truth, and evil men shall wax worse, and the evil shall be so great, the days shall be shortened for the elect's sake. All shall come forth on the final resurrection morning, and God shall say to the blessed, Come forth, and to the wicked, Depart. Jesus said, "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away."

Yours in fellowship,

ELIZA DAVIDSON.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

James Henry Jannigan departed this life on the morning of June 17th, 1895, at the home of his parents, Elder A. J. and Sarah M. Jannigan, at Rosa, Linn Co., Oregon. He was born April 28th, 1887, in Marion County, Oregon. He was the only child of his bereaved parents, and was very bright. He was afflicted with epilepsy six years ago, and required great care and attention. On the 10th of June he was taken with inflamation of the bowels, and died on the 17th, at five o'clock in the morning. He said he was not afraid to die. He kissed all farewell, and fell asleep in Jesus, that blessed sleep from which none ever wake to weep. His funeral was preached by Elder George Ganard and John Osborn, from the words of Job, "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord." Afterwards his mortal body was followed to the Providence cemetery by a large concourse of sympathizing friends and relatives, and his grave well strewn with rich flowers by his young friends, who all loved him.

ALLEN J. JANNIGAN.

Susan Davis, daughter of brother and sister Pierce and Charity Perry, was born Dec. 26th, 1832, in Kentucky, and moved with her parents to Illinois when she was about two years old, where she was married to A. B. Davis, Feb. 22d, 1849. In 1861 she with her husband united with the Old School Predestinarian Baptist Church called Crow Creek, in Marshall County, Ill., being baptized by Elder R. F. Haynes. They moved to Clark Co., Iowa, and then to Page County, Iowa. On Saturday before the fourth Sunday in July, 1883, they united by letter with the Old School Predestinarian Baptist Church called Three Forks of Nodaway, where her membership remained until she was called home. She died Aug. 1st, 1895, of paralysis, aged 63 years, 7 months and 5 days. She was the mother of fourteen children, nine still living to mourn the absence of their mother. The writer of this notice has been personally acquainted with sister Davis ever since the year 1883, they living on my farm for five years. She was always kind, respected by all, faithful in all the duties of life, firm and unwavering in the doctrine and order of the house of God, well established in the faith of God's elect. Her greatest delight was to meet with those of like precious faith and join them in praise and thanksgiving to the God of all grace, and ascribing unto him all the glory. She had been afflicted for some time with paralysis, but bore her affliction with wonderful patience and resignation. She often said she was just waiting until her time should come to die. Death was no terror to her. I asked her a short time before she died if she was resigned to the will of the Lord. She replied with a smile, "Yes." She tried to talk much, but we could only understand a word now and then. She lay about twenty-four hours as one asleep, and sweetly fell asleep in Jesus. Her mortal remains were laid away to await the great resurrection morn, when, as we believe, her body will be raised incorruptible; for this mortal shall put on immortality. O blessed hope, that all the redeemed family of our God will be housed safely in heaven above, in that house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens.

Brother Davis and children, together with the church, mourn the absence of a loved one; but we mourn not as those who have no hope. We feel to bow in humble submission to God's most holy will, and say, "Thy will be done."

THOMAS SHEARER.

ELDER BEEBE'S SON—DEAR BROTHER:—It is with sadness that we chronicle the death of our beloved sister, Martha S. Pinkerton, who was born Nov. 8th, 1852, in Cherokee Co., Ala.

When sixteen years of age she professed a hope in Christ and joined the Old School Baptists, and was baptized by Elder Benjamin Turner. She lived a devoted life, and remained firm in the faith until death, always trusting Jesus as her Friend and Savior. She was ever humble, having no confidence in the flesh, but delighted in the doctrine of salvation by grace. She was a loving wife and a kind-hearted mother. Her disease was congestion. She was a great sufferer, and after an illness of twelve days passed away, on July 31st, 1895. She was reconciled to go, and said she was going home to her dear Savior, rejoicing at the thought of leaving this low ground of sorrow. She begged us not to grieve for her. She leaves a husband, four small children, three sisters and one brother to mourn their loss; but we mourn not for her as for those who have no hope, for we believe that she is now at rest in her long-sought home.

She moved to Prairie Co., Ark., in 1889, and joined the Mt. Pleasant Church, where she remained until she died, when she was laid away in the Mt. Pleasant grave-yard. The last time she went to meeting she took me to the grave-yard and selected her place to be buried, saying that she was not going to stay with us long.

"Weep not for me, dear friends," she said,
As her voice grew soft and low;
"When my body's numbered with the dead
My soul to God will go.

"Don't grieve, dear friends," she said again,
"Death has no sting for me;
From earthly sorrows, toil and pain
My soul will soon be free.

"The Master's call I must obey,
The summons O how grand!
My soul shall live through endless day
In that bright and happy land.

"To that happy land I long to go,
From sin I'll soon be free;
I gladly leave this world below,
To dwell, my God, with thee."

Her sister,

BETTIE OLIVER.

ASSOCIATIONAL.

THE Oconee Baptist Association is to be held this fall with the church at Rutledge, Morgan Co., Ga., and is to commence on Tuesday after the second Sunday in October, instead of Saturday before, and continue three days.

Rutledge is on the Georgia R. R., and brethren coming by rail can come either way on Monday, and can come down from Atlanta on Tuesday morning. Ministering brethren especially invited. Inquire for W. F. Streeter, Warren Ivy or Mr. Studard.

F. M. McLEROY, Mod.

THE Lexington Old School Baptist Association will convene with her sister church at Gilboa on the third Wednesday and Thursday in September (18th and 19th), 1895.

We desire a goodly number of our brethren and friends, especially brethren in the ministry, to meet with us. Those coming by the U. & D. R. R. will take the 7:40 a. m. train at Rondout, and arrive at Grand Gorge at 11:11 a. m., or the 2:55 p. m. train, arriving at Grand Gorge at 6:17 p. m., where they will be met on Tuesday before the meeting and cared for. If any should miss the 7:40 train, and should not be met, inquire for the Tuttle House, Gilboa.

D. S. ELLIOTT, Church Clerk.

THE Virginia Corresponding Meeting will be held, the Lord willing, with the New Valley Church, Loudoun Co., Va., to begin on Wednesday before the third Sunday in October (16th), 1895, and continue three days.

THE Salisbury Old School Baptist Association is appointed to be held with the church at Little Creek, Sussex Co., Del., to begin on Wednesday before the fourth Sunday in October (23d), 1895, and continue three days.

THE Juniata Association of Old School or Primitive Baptists will meet, if no preventing providence, with the Springfield Church, Huntingdon Co., Pa., on Wednesday after the first Sunday in October, 1895, and continue Thursday and Friday.

We extend a cordial invitation to all lovers of the truth. Those coming by railroad will come on the Central Pennsylvania to Mount Union, and there change cars for Three Springs, where they will be met on Tuesday evening. Should any one come, and no person there, inquire for Mordecai Chilcote, as he lives in the place.

AHIMAAZ MELLOTT.

THE 131st annual session of the Kehukee Primitive Baptist Association is to be held, if the Lord will, with the Kehukee Church, one mile south of Scotland Neck, Halifax Co., N. C., beginning on Saturday, October 5th, and lasting three days.

Visitors from the north should come by way of Weldon and Halifax to Scotland Neck on Friday, Oct. 4th. Those who come by the railroads from Plymouth or Kinston can reach the association in time on Saturday morning. A cordial invitation is extended to all the ministers and members of our correspondence, and to all others who may desire, to attend our meeting and take part in our worship.

B. L. BEEBE, Middletown, N. Y.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SON, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date. This date denotes the time at which your subscription expires; and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

PICTORIAL HISTORY

OF THE

UNITED STATES.

By James D. McCabe.

This work is no dry mass of details—no bombastic effort to inflame the national pride, but a vivid and brilliant narrative of the events of our history, from the discovery of the American Continent down to the present time. It gives a most interesting account of the Indians of North America, from the time of the coming of the white men. The voyages of Columbus and explorations and discoveries of the different nations of Europe are related with graphic power. Every step of our colonial history is traced with patient fidelity, and the sources of those noble and, we trust, enduring institutions, which have made our country free and great, are shown with remarkable clearness. Then follows a clear and succinct account of our great Struggle for Independence, and the establishment of the Federal Union—the events of our career from the close of the Revolution to the administration of Harrison.

The work is printed from plain, new type, on fine calendered paper, and comprised in one octavo volume of 960 pages. It is splendidly embellished with nearly 500 fine engravings, embracing battles and other historical scenes, portraits of distinguished men, views of our principal cities, &c., &c.

Bound in Fine Silk Cloth, Plain Edges, $2.00, Post-paid.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE STRAIT GATE.

"ENTER ye in at the strait gate; for wide is the gate and broad is the way that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat: because strait is the gate and narrow is the way which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it."—Matt. vii. 13, 14.

Do not imagine, dear reader, that in commenting on the sacred truth revealed for our learning in this text I propose to preach to you an Arminian sermon and tell you that by your natural powers and earthly wisdom and learning you can enter that strait gate, and thus by the exercise of those powers make yourselves heirs of God and joint-heirs with our Lord Jesus Christ to all the ineffable glories of the redeemed. Let it be remembered that the text quoted at the head of this article was given to you by him who is King of kings and Lord of lords; and where the word of a king is there is power. Matthew says, "And seeing the multitude, he went up into a mountain; and when he was set, his disciples came unto him; and he opened his mouth and taught them." Then the words above quoted were addressed to his disciples, and not to the multitude, and we have no right to give the children's bread unto dogs. He said to his disciples, "Enter ye in at the strait gate." He had called them from their worldly vocations, and had prepared them to receive their wise teachings. When he commissioned them to go and preach his everlasting gospel, he said to them, "Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you; and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world. Amen." In the fifth, sixth and seventh chapters of Matthew is recorded the wonderful teachings of our Lord to his chosen disciples, in which he said to them, "Enter ye in at the strait gate." This was a command, and he who gave it was clothed with power to enforce it; for he has all power both in heaven and earth. He says by the prophet, "And I will bring the blind by a way that they knew not; I will lead them in paths that they have not known; I will make darkness light before them, and crooked things straight. These things will I do unto them, and not forsake them." The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God. They are groping in darkness, under the law of sin and death. While thus enveloped in darkness the glorious Sun of righteousness shines in the hearts of God's people, and by his life-giving power he gives them the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ. He says, "These things will I do unto them, and not forsake them," which is the same blessed assurance that Jesus gave to his disciples when he said, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." While groping in earthly darkness they know nothing of that strait gate and narrow way; but when light is given them, by which they are enabled to behold the beauties and glories that shine in and upon that strait gate and narrow way, they enter into that rest which remaineth to the people of God. Jesus said to Thomas, "I am the way, the truth and the life: no man cometh unto the Father but by me." Then evidently Jesus is that way. But perhaps some will inquire, Why is it called a narrow way? Perhaps it will not be amiss here to say the glorious gospel of the Son of God is that strait gate. Jesus is the sum and substance of that gospel, and no man can come to the Father but by him. He says, "I am the door. By me if any man enter in he shall be saved, and shall go in and out, and find pasture." The gospel presents Jesus in all his great and wonderful fullness. Now I say to you, dear minister of the gospel, that you can but point the little ones and tell them of the superlative glories that surrounded you when you entered by that strait gate experimentally into that narrow way, and were made to rejoice in the light sent forth from that strait gate, all along that narrow way. That light revealed to your astonished vision the glories that shine in him, and are manifested to your great joy when your ears are unstopped, and your blinded eyes are opened, and you are enabled to both see and hear the great and glorious truth of the gospel. You cannot preach the gospel without preaching Jesus, and you could never preach him as our Redeemer until you by the power of the Holy Spirit had been led into the unfading glory of that light which gives joy and rejoicing to the dear saints when they hear the watchmen on the walls of Zion proclaiming the unsearchable riches of him who is King of saints, and reigns in all her borders, and will continue to reign until all her enemies are conquered. Tell me not, dear herald of the cross, that you can mix a little of the "do and live" system, a little of the means system, and proclaim to the dear saints that they are necessary to enable them to enter that strait gate and enjoy the healing rays that emanate from the preaching of the gospel. Dear little one, how often when you for days, like this poor little one, have been groping in darkness, but have been permitted to read in the SIGNS and other papers the glorious gospel as it is found in its richness and beauty in the communications, given you by the pens of brethren and sisters, have you been made to say that you want no attempted mixing of the truth of the gospel with the works and means of poor, finite mortals, who lie in wait to deceive the very elect, if it were possible.

I have said the gospel cannot be preached without preaching Jesus as the only hope of his people. If anything else is preached the saints are left to wander in gloom and darkness over the sterile plains of a sin-polluted world, amidst thorns and thistles. But the Lord has said by the prophet to his saints, "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee." Then "fear not, little flock; for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." And in that great and wonderous gift is embraced a sound ministry, who will not shun to declare the whole counsel of God.

I have said that this text fell from the lips of our dear Redeemer, and was addressed to his disciples. They were soon to witness his ascension, and to go forth as sheep among wolves, and proclaim the everlasting gospel. Surrounded by unrelenting enemies, composed of their kindred in the flesh, the Jews, and a great and powerful nation of idolaters, the Romans; but they were sent forth by him who had all power both in heaven and on earth, and he clothed them with power, and said to them, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." They were commanded by him to enter in at the strait gate, the gospel gate. They were to make no compromise of the truth. They were not to compromise the gospel with the law, but were to preach Jesus as the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth. Ah, what an undertaking! Perhaps no twelve men that ever trod the green plains of earth had ever had such a responsible duty made to rest upon them as those dear disciples had. But they went forth in the name of Israel's God, and filled the measure of that glory which was given by him who said by his ancient prophet to them, "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee." That gate stands as permanently at the entrance of the true gospel church to-day as it did when our Lord gave that command to enter in at the strait gate, and the true minister of the gospel has no more right to mar its beauties or eclipse its effulgent light, by preaching a false doctrine, than those to whom it was said by our Lord, "Enter ye in at the strait gate." Hence no man ought to preach for doctrine the commandments of men. But poor, sinful man, before whose eyes there is no fear of God, perverts the truth of the gospel by proclaiming to the world that they by a system of their own invention are the chief cause of millions of dying souls being brought into the fold of Christ and saved with an everlasting salvation. These are false shepherds. But the prophet says of them, "Woe to the idol shepherd that leaveth the flock. The sword shall be upon his arm, and upon his right eye. His arm shall be clean dried up, and his right eye shall be utterly darkened." The apostle Jude very clearly describes that class of false teachers when he says, "But these speak evil of those things which they know not; but what they know naturally, as brute beasts, in those things they corrupt themselves. Woe unto them! for they have gone in the way of Cain, and ran greedily after the error of Balaam, and perished in the gainsaying of Core. These are spots in your feasts of charity, when they feast with you, feeding themselves without fear: clouds they are without water, carried about of winds; trees whose fruit withereth, without fruit, twice dead, plucked up by the roots; raging waves of the sea, foaming out their own shame; wandering stars, to whom is reserved the blackness of darkness forever." It is thus the sacred penman describes the false teachers, who urge that money, the love of which is the root of all evil, is absolutely necessary to enable the great God of the vast universe to carry out his will and purpose in the great work of regeneration and bringing into his church those for whose redemption Jesus shed his precious blood on the cross. Surely they are raging waves on the great sea of time, foaming out their own shame. Surely they are wandering stars, to whom is reserved the blackness of darkness forever. Surely their eyes are blinded by the god of this world, and all their false zeal is prompted by the love of money and earthly fame. Let all the dear saints whose chief desire is to give God all the glory for the redemption and final glorification of his people, shun them and their pernicious doctrines as they would deadly poison.

Let us now, dear reader, turn our thoughts and meditations to the words of our Lord when he said, "Wide is the gate and broad is the way that leadeth to destruction, and many there be that go in thereat." We have spoken of that strait gate around and all over which is shining in heavenly beauty and grandeur the glorious light of the gospel. Error and false doctrine have been in close proximity, through all the past ages, to the truth of the gospel as taught, expounded and enforced by the precepts and examples of our glorious Lord and his disciples. That contrast is illustrated by the strait gate and the narrow way which leadeth unto life, on one side of the picture, and the wide gate and broad way which leadeth to destruction, on the other side. The history of each on the earth demonstrates this mournful truth that "men love darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil." It evidently is evil for men to deny the sovereignty of God and the infinity of his great and wonderous attributes. By doing so they deny his character, and make manifest their unbelief in him, who says, "My counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure." In that wide gate and broad way they enter as natural men into the affairs of earth; and they, as natural men, receive not the things of the Spirit of God. The great contrast between the things of the Spirit and the natural things has never been discovered to them. For that reason they speak evil of those things which they know not; and their carnal mind, which is enmity against God, leads them into persecuting those who have been taught of the Spirit. That persecution has existed throughout all the past ages; consequently the gate has been wide, and that way has been broad, wherever men have lived upon the earth. King Solomon said, "There is a way that seemeth right unto a man; but the end thereof are the ways of death." That way is evidently the broad way, and unnumbered millions have walked therein, while their leaders have glorified in their shame. Pagan Rome crucified our Lord and put his disciples to death by the most cruel tortures, and subjected to similar sufferings thousands of the saints because they refused to bow to the gods of this world. Pagan Rome was in that broad way, and maintained her position as long as it was popular. But in the year 325 of the Christian era she gave her seat and great authority to the beast, which represented Papal Rome. Then Pagan idolatry as the religion of the Roman empire was exchanged nominally for the Christian religion. To do so, Constantine the emperor called a council, which met at Niece that year, and declared by a pompous edict that the Christian religion should be the religion of the Roman empire, instead of Pagan idolatry; and he provided farther that no person should hold office unless such person accepted the doctrines of Christianity. Thus by a sweep of the pen that idolater and his council converted from idolatry to what they called Christianity near one hundred millions of people. Surely our modern missionaries should feel ashamed when they know that in near a century they have only converted a few hundred from idol worship to the doctrines of modern missionism, notwithstanding the vast efforts they have made and the vast amount of money they have by various means obtained from the people with which to carry on what they call their missionary enterprises. But the evidences, if we look to the Bible, are overwhelming and indisputable that Constantine's converts, as well as all made by modern missionaries, remained in that broad road and wide gate which leadeth to destruction. Our Lord said, "My kingdom is not of this world," and, "Upon this rock I will build my church;" while Constantine's church was built by him and his council in Rome, one of the most corrupt governments that the world has ever known. Our Lord said by the prophet Zechariah, "This is the word of the Lord unto Zerubbabel, saying, Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts." And the apostle says, "It is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that sheweth mercy." "Not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us, by the washing of regeneration and renewing of the Holy Ghost, which he shed on us abundantly through Jesus Christ our Savior." Again he says, "Be not thou therefore ashamed of the testimony of our Lord, nor of me his prisoner; but be thou partaker of the afflictions of the gospel according to the power of God; who hath saved us, and called us with a holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began." But the modern system preached by missionaries is that the work of Christ does not of itself save sinners; that the labors, efforts and money of poor, sin-polluted man, "the creature of an hour, enslaved by passion and corrupted by power," must be employed to give life to those who are dead in trespasses and in sins; thus denying the Lord, who said, "There was none to help." "Therefore mine own arm brought salvation unto me." The apostle gives a graphic description of fallen man, whose aid is invoked in these modern times to help the Lord of hosts to save those whom he by the shedding of his blood redeemed from the curse of a violated law. In that description he says, "There is none that understandeth, there is none that seeketh after God. They are all gone out of the way, they are together become unprofitable; there is none that doeth good, no, not one. Their throat is an open sepulchre; with their tongues they have used deceit; the poison of asps is under their lips; whose mouth is full of cursing and bitterness; their feet are swift to shed blood; destruction and misery are in their ways, and the ways of peace have they not known; there is no fear of God before their eyes." "All have sinned and come short of the glory of God." From that awful condition in which his people were involved by reason of sin, he came to earth to redeem them. They were dead in trespasses and sins, and it required an offering that was fully equal to the demands of justice to secure their redemption from that state of death. To accomplish that great undertaking, he laid aside the glory he had with the Father before the world was, and took upon himself a body composed of flesh and blood. The apostle says, "Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part of the same." The children, his chosen people, were dead in trespasses and sins; and when he took that flesh and blood, that body that was prepared him, he was brought into a condition which completely fitted him to suffer death, which was the penalty of the law his people had violated. When he suffered on the cross that penalty, and when he in triumph arose from the tomb, those children, those people were forever redeemed from the penalty of that law, and justice was completely satisfied. It was in contemplation of this great and wonderous work that the angel said to Joseph, "And she [Mary] shall bring forth a son, and thou shalt call his name Jesus; for he shall save his people from their sins." Now this inquiry arises, After this great offering for sin was prepared in infinite wisdom, and was fully made in satisfaction of infinite justice, is it true that he who is clothed with all the great and wonderful attributes of Deity is dependent on finite beings, such as we are, to aid him in bringing into the full enjoyment of that eternal rest, peace and joy secured to his redeemed by his suffering and death? Such a thought, such an assumption, is a denial of the existence of Deity, and is blasphemy; for to deny the Lord that bought us is blasphemy. Where were the missionaries when he laid aside the glory he had with the Father and came to earth to accomplish the work that was before him? Were they there with their means and money to aid him in the accomplishment of the great work before him? Where were they upon that great and glorious morning when he broke the bars of death and came forth from the darkness of the tomb a mighty conqueror over death, hell and the grave? Were they there to help the angel of the Lord to roll back that great stone from the door of the sepulchre, and when he had risen to offer him their missionary enterprises and money to aid him till he would reach the mount, and from there ascend to the Father in holy and everlasting triumph over all the enemies of the redeemed? They were absent then, and are still absent when the Almighty in the accomplishment of his purposes gives spiritual life to his redeemed, his chosen people, and in love and mercy and by his power leads them into his church, his fold, to go in and out and find pasture, till he calls them from the dark and gloomy scenes of earth to the full enjoyment of that eternal rest, for the enjoyment of which he in love has prepared them, without the aid of sin-polluted, finite mortals. But few there be that find that narrow way. The love of earthly fame and glory has led millions into what they call the work of the gospel ministry. To fit and qualify them for their work they are educated in the schools of men; and hence it is the wisdom of this world which they preach, which is foolishness with God; for the world by wisdom knoweth not God. But the apostle says of his ministry, "But I certify you, brethren, that the gospel which was preached of me is not after man; for I neither received it of man, neither was I taught it, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ."—Gal. i. 11, 12. Thus we see the vast multitude that enter that wide gate, and the few that declare to God's dear people that they are determined not to know anything among them save Jesus Christ and him crucified. They have been led into the strait gate, and with heavenly delight they behold the light and effulgent glories that shine forth in the gospel, and they in rapture proclaim to all in that narrow way the unsearchable riches of Christ, and give unto the Lord the glory due unto his name.

Soon after I began to commit these thoughts to paper I was taken dangerously sick, as my physician seemed to think; but as I began to recover, this great subject came back with such force as to lead me into a further contemplation of its sublime beauties. Then with great physical weakness I resumed the work of putting those thoughts on paper. But if my mental powers while writing them were as feeble as my physical, surely the dear editors of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, to whom I propose mailing them, will decline to give them publicity. But I leave it with them to act as they believe will redound to the glory of God and the comfort of his saints, feeling strongly assured that this may be the last time that I will trouble them with my feeble thoughts, as I have been doing for more than fifty years. Pray for me, dear saints, that my departure may be in peace and joy.

PORTLAND, Ind., July 25, 1895.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS:—The following Scripture rests upon my mind much of late, and whether what I may write will be edifying to the household of faith judge ye.

"And to make all men see what is the fellowship of the mystery, which from the beginning of the world hath been hid in God, who created all things by Jesus Christ."—Eph. iii. 9. The reason of this was, "To the intent that now unto the principalities and powers in heavenly places might be known by the church the manifold wisdom of God."—Verse 10. The fifth verse reads, "Which in other ages was not made known unto the sons of men, as it is now revealed unto his holy apostles and prophets by the Spirit." This Scripture is a declaration of God's mystery unto the Gentiles. Verse six reads, "The Gentiles should be fellow heirs, and of the same body, and partakers of his promise in Christ by the gospel." As to whether God intended by this Scripture to convey the idea of the salvation of all men individually, will be determined by the subject. First, "To make all men see what is the fellowship of the mystery." This Paul did not do to all the generations of men prior to his day, nor since his day, and to but few in his day. That hidden mystery was that the Gentiles should be fellow heirs, and of the same body.

Second. Paul said that the gospel "was preached to every creature which is under heaven."—Col. i. 23. This must be qualified, the same as the above quotations. The subject in each case was the great truth that unto the Gentiles also God had granted repentance. Many stagger at the words "all men" and "every creature," as though they meant something more than the calling of the Gentiles; but a close observation reveals the simple fact of the calling of the Gentiles, who had been strangers and foreigners from the covenant of promise, and who were without hope and without God in the world. It was not possible for Paul to make all men individually see the mystery of the breaking down of the middle wall of partition between Jews and Gentiles, nor to preach the gospel to every creature man. If it be asked whether the words "all men" have a limited application in the Scriptures, we answer, Yes. Because the subject under consideration, in which these words are used, was confined to those who had been quickened, who had been dead in trespasses and sins. It had direct reference to the great gospel day, the fulfilling of the legal covenant, and the ushering in of the covenant of grace, and that by the mouth of Paul the Gentiles should hear the gospel and believe, a hidden mystery.

It is impossible to reconcile the Scriptures and give a universal individual application of the words "all men;" for in Mark v., when Jesus had healed a man, and he departed and began to publish in Decapolis how great things Jesus had done for him, "all men" did marvel. When Jesus asked of the baptism of John, "all men" counted John that he was a prophet indeed. Jesus told Peter, James and John that they should be hated of "all men." When John was preaching in the wilderness, "all men" mused in their hearts whether he was the Christ. They which used curious arts burned their books before "all men." Ananias said to Paul, "Thou shalt be a witness unto all men." Jesus is said to be the Savior of all men, specially of them that believe. Space will not suffice to cite farther the Scriptures where the words "all men" are used, and where the subject in connection therewith will not admit of anything but a limited application, and qualified as applying to the household of faith. Christ gave the full application and meaning of the text under consideration by sending his apostles into all the world to preach the gospel, this hidden mystery, unto all nations, saying, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; and he that believeth not shall be damned." "And as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up; that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life." Christ and Paul are not teaching different doctrines. Both applied the benefits of the gospel to the believers, both of Jews and Gentiles; for Paul says to the Jews, "Seeing ye judge yourselves unworthy of eternal life, lo, we turn to the Gentiles," &c. "And when the Gentiles heard this, they were glad, and glorified the word of the Lord; and as many as were ordained to eternal life believed." Paul herein gives honor to the declaration just quoted from Christ. He says, "Unto me, who am less than the least of all saints, is this grace given, that I should preach among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ." "That the Gentiles by my mouth should hear the word of the gospel and believe." It was foretold by David that Christ should come, that to him should the Gentiles seek, and also that unto him should the gathering of the people be. Jesus said, "Go ye into all the world." "Go teach all nations." "Go ye rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel." Peter said, "I perceive that God is no respecter of persons; but in every nation he that feareth him and worketh righteousness is accepted with him." The whole tenor of the Scriptures is that all these declarations relate to the ushering in of the kingdom of Christ. "The kingdom of heaven is at hand." It was not to be confined unto the Jews, for God has a people in every nation, kindred, tongue and people; therefore he is no respecter of persons, but in every nation he that feareth him and worketh righteousness is accepted with him. "As many as were ordained to eternal life believed." The apostle was here treating upon the great mystery that had been hid from ages, and from the foundation of the world; that God was not the God of the Jews only, but of the Gentiles also. Jesus purchased a field for the treasure that was in it. "The election hath obtained it, and the rest were blinded." Paul and the other apostles preached Christ and him crucified, unto the Jews a stumbling-block, and to the Greeks foolishness; but unto them that are called, both Jews and Greeks, Christ the power of God and the wisdom of God. "The preaching of the cross is to them that perish foolishness; but unto us which are saved it is the power of God." God has a people in every nation, kindred, tongue and people, or among "all men;" for this is the meaning of it. The disciples were first sent to preach to the Jews, and a small remnant believed. It was necessary that Christ should first be preached unto them, but now unto all men, or all tongues, or all nations.

HOPEWELL, Pa., July 26, 1895.

ELDER F. A. CHICK—MY DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST:—I have just finished reading your editorial on "Did Jesus die for all men?" After reading sister Turrell's letter I immediatly turned to the editorial reply, and my hungry soul could not read fast enough. When I had finished my head sank in my pillow and my glad soul exclaimed, "Glory to God in the highest!" And O may it go to her as it came to me. As dew or rain from heaven did it refresh me, and my glad heart was made to say, "Blessed are they to whom the dear Lord reveals his mercies." O how plain to me it is that Jesus, yes, dear Jesus, will bring to himself all for whom he died, as I remarked to a very dear lady who came into my sick-room this morning. She in her dear, kind words to me said, "After you have undergone so much, still you are sick." My reply was, "Yes, God, who is rich in mercy, has a just cause in it; for he declares that he does all things for good to them who love him. He makes his power known in many cases, and here is one. The doctors have claimed their power to cure me, but they have failed thus far, and God's power is greatest." Yes, it is so, or their power would have been finished long ago. O! what weak, dependent creatures we are. How could we go to Christ except he draw us? and he will raise us up at the last day. We should stop and consider, compare our experience with the sacred book of God, and see if it is in harmony with what is recorded therein; and if some things are hidden, let them rest. We should not say there is unrighteousness with God. God forbid. "For he saith to Moses, I will have mercy on whom I will have mercy, and I will have compassion on whom I will have compassion. So then it is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that sheweth mercy." It has always been the case that many oppose the truth of God, and it always will be so till the end of time. O how often has it been the case with me that the Scriptures have been closed against me, and my narrow mind almost flags and fails me, insomuch that the tempter comes and says, "There is no God." But, O blessed hope! there is a God, a God who rules heaven and earth, and thunders when he please; a God who is rich in mercy, and whose ways are past finding out. Such is the God I love to think upon. Such is our God, whom we love to worship, the God who has bound us together in christian love and fellowship, which no carnal weapon that man forms can sever; a love that has no end; yes, a peculiar love which, when clouds of distress, losses and crosses come, and the night is cold and dreary, forsakes us not, but encircle its loving arms around us, and so hushes our troubled minds that nothing can separate us from it. I am passing many weary nights, with no rest to my weary soul. My dear brother, you cannot know how weary I am; and were it not for that hope of a better world beyond this sin-cursed earth I would be of all most miserable. But the dear Lord strengthens and sustains me, and lifts my wandering mind far above and beyond this troublesome world where sickness is not known. How could I reach and grasp these hidden treasures were it not for the goodness and mercies of the Lord? Yes, Jesus loves me, and has laid down his precious life for me, that I through him may live; and not only me, but also all for whom he died the shameful death on the cross and cried, "It is finished!" All will come to him that the Father hath given him, and he will in no wise cast them out. That he loves me, seems to be too precious for me. Yet I can feel the healing power, and can hear the sweet whisper, "Yes, he loveth thee, even thee; and what hast thou to fear?" I need no more. Having this I have all. Though I have dear earthly friends, and some are bound very closely by natural ties of friendship, and some are very good and kind, and cease not to come daily to see me, and bring me things, and beg of me to eat and drink, for they have prepared it; and while my heart's desire is not to offend anyone, yet my craving is, "O that I could be in the midst of my dear kindred in Christ; then would my hungry soul be fed and my thirsty lips be cooled from the living fountain that God has given to each to comfort each other as we pass through the desert land. My appetite for food is poor. I crave nothing but drink. I relish apples, and that is the most

GOD'S LOVE AND HATE.

BROTHER T. Hatchett, of Alabama, writes us that he desires to see something from our pen upon the words recorded in Romans ix. 13, or rather concerning what is said there about Jacob and Esau. He says a friend with whom he was talking about the predestination and foreknowledge of God said to him that this was all the place in the Bible that he could see where Old Baptists could find any foundation for their doctrine, and that he had asked a Campbellite to explain this Scripture, and that he had made it so plain that he could not see much in that, and that God did not bless the one that he aimed to.

We do not purpose writing at length upon this subject, but feel to say a few things that occur to our mind. Any man who could make the last remark quoted from the letter of our brother, and which he repeats from the lips of his friend and the Campbellite preacher, betrays an absolute ignorance of the holy and unchangeable nature of the God of the Bible, and also of the plainest testimony of holy writ; for it is the express testimony of Paul that although the children, Jacob and Esau, were not yet born, and therefore neither had done good nor evil, but that the purpose of God according to election might stand, it was said unto the mother that the elder should serve the younger. See also Genesis xxv. 23, from which Paul quotes this language. The unbelief of Rebekah, leading her as it did to falsehood and trickery to gain for Jacob what God had promised, and the fact that through this fraud Isaac was deceived into granting the blessing, does not in any way disturb the fact that all went on according to the before determined purpose of God, and that God blessed just the one he had meant to bless. All this is but plain scriptural testimony. It would seem that the language is so clear that none need mistake its meaning; but the natural enmity of fallen man to the sovereignty of God, and to his purpose and will, to foreknowledge and predestination, to his right to do as he will with his creatures, is such that they often will not regard plain scriptural testimony, and when confronted with it will impatiently say, "O, I do not understand that," or, "I would not worship such a God," and other blasphemous expressions. It is not right to fashion our conception of God out of our own ideas, and then reject the Scripture which may conflict with our notion. Rather let us accept reverently the word of God first, and confess that every thought of ours which stands opposed to that testimony is wrong. There is no portion of the word of God more plain or simple than is this ninth chapter of Romans, and nothing in the Bible is clearer than what Paul here says concerning Jacob and Esau. We could have but little respect for the ordinary common sense of a man who could read this chapter, and compare it with the narrative in Genesis, and then say that Jehovah did not bless the one that he aimed to bless; and what shall we say of the lack of reverence for the word of God betrayed in such an expression? It is either made recklessly, without any care to examine the word, or else it is made with a knowledge of the fact that it gives God the lie in his word. We would fain hope that the Campbellite preacher referred to did not mean by his words all that is involved in them. What sane man could dare to say that the purpose of God was not fulfilled in the face of the testimony of his own Spirit in this ninth chapter of Romans?

As regards the assertion that believers in sovereign grace, and in all the principles of doctrine necessarily involved in the truth of sovereign grace, have no place in the Bible to stand upon save this ninth chapter of Romans, we will say but this. If the ninth chapter of Romans be the testimony of a man who wrote as he was moved by the Holy Ghost, it is true testimony, and nothing in all the rest of the Scriptures can be contradictory of what is recorded here. It is manifest that in this brief editorial we cannot quote the whole Bible. Let some one, if they desire, quote some Scripture which they are willing to say does contradict this ninth chapter of Romans. The man who would say that the Bible contradicts itself is, to say the least of it, not a believer in revelation, or in the inspiration of the holy Scriptures.

We now desire to say a few things concerning the text itself which has been referred to by our brother, Romans ix. 13. It reads as follows, "As it is written, Jacob have I loved, but Esau have I hated." These words are quoted by Paul from Malachi i. 2, 3; and the apostle quotes them as being scriptural proof of the assertion which he had just made, that it was the purpose of God according to election that had made the difference between Jacob and Esau. Paul's language explains and enforces the declaration made in the prophecy of Malachi; and on the other hand Paul, by quoting this Scripture, shows that he is here advancing no new thing, but a truth also stated in the Old Testament. Election has always been true, and has always been declared to be true from the beginning. It would be well for our readers to turn to the first verse of Malachi and read carefully. There, as will be seen by careful readers, God meets an unbelieving question on the part of Israel by the plain statement that they had the best proof of his love to them in the fact that he had rejected not only all the rest of mankind for them, but also had rejected Esau, Jacob's own brother, and that too when Esau was the elder, and according to ordinary rules among men was entitled to the blessing. There could be no reason urged as to why God had loved and chosen Jacob above even his own elder brother except the principle of election. Paul by the Holy Spirit, which moved him, declares here in the ninth chapter of Romans that it was upon the ground of God's purpose according to election, and upon this ground only. But surely we need not take time to argue the truth of the doctrine of election. It is too plainly stated here to need any argument. If any are disposed to assail this doctrine, their controversy is not with us, but with the Spirit of truth, by which men were inspired to make such declarations.

We would also add that the argument, so far as the apostle Paul is concerned, remains the same, whether we understand Malachi to refer to Jacob and Esau as individuals, or to the two peoples that descended from them. In either case it was before the children were born that it was declared that the elder should serve the younger; and we understand the prophecy in Malachi, "Jacob have I loved, but Esau have I hated," to mean that this was so before they had any national existence. The Lord here shows that his love of Jacob and hatred of Esau was not based upon the ground that Jacob was better than Esau. If it had been stated that Jacob was the better man, or his descendants the better people, then the whole life and force of the reasoning in Malachi is destroyed; for were God's love to them based upon this, they might well say, "Wherein hath God loved us?" seeing that they were the most perverse of all nations. Thus it is seen that election pure and simple makes all the difference, and that God has mercy upon whom he will, and leaves in their natural hardness and impenitency whom he will; and the only reason is his will. There is no half-way ground between this simple statement of an election by the will of God, and the boldest conditionalism and Arminianism. If anything, then, can be plainly stated, these Scriptures in Romans ix. and Malachi i. do state that God loved Jacob because he would do so, and hated Esau, whether as a man or a people, simply because he would do so. His own will was the sole arbiter in the matter; and elect vessels of mercy to-day can of right boast over the non-elect no more than Jacob could boast over Esau. If all boasting be excluded from the saved in Christ, then salvation must be solely according to the sovereign will of God, without any reason in man why he should love one and not another. It is manifest that the love and choice of God is not based upon any good in us from the still further consideration of the fact that if there be any good in any man, it is the result, and not the cause, of electing grace.

We desire to add one further reflection before leaving this brief presentation of the theme. By the words "love" and "hate" we must not understand that our God is the subject of human passions, such as rage, anger, and so forth. Our God is not the subject of anything. Men are subject to their passions; and no man can love, hate, and so forth, simply because he wills to do so. God is not moved by love, hate, anger, nor by any emotion. On the contrary, he moves his love or hate, and places each where he wills to place them. His will, and his will alone, decides all things. He will have mercy upon whom he will have mercy, and whom he will he hardeneth. This doctrine is taught not only here, but in every place where salvation by sovereign grace is taught this doctrine is involved. If a man is saved by his good words or his good choice, then grace has nothing to do with it. If, on the contrary, he be saved by grace, then the will of God has all to do with his salvation. Which is better, to trust in the choice of our own totally alienated and depraved hearts, or in the choice of God, who does not change

In conclusion we will add, whatever law and custom among men may have decided was Esau's right with regard to the blessing, it is sure that he had no claim upon the God who gave him life and being and all things. Esau had no claim upon God for anything. He was not wronged when God laid his mountains and heritage waste. He had no claim upon God for his love to be set upon him; and the same was true of Jacob. The same is true of every saved soul to-day. Sovereign mercy alone is seen. There is no partner with grace upon the throne. Human merit shall not be once named in the kingdom of heaven. The gospel sound is clear and certain, "Salvation is of the Lord."

MINUTES.

AS THE time for the fall associations is drawing near, we wish to call the attention of our brethren to the fact that any patronage they can give us by way of printing their Minutes will be especially appreciated at present. Our long experience in the business has, we think, particularly qualified us for this work; and as it costs but a few cents to mail the manuscript to us, we hope they will remember us when they have the work ready.

LUKE VI. 38.

"GIVE, and it shall be given unto you; good measure, pressed down, and shaken together, and running over, shall men give into your bosom."

By example, as well as by precept, the dear Redeemer taught the doctrine of gospel benevolence to his disciples, as peculiarly becoming them who professed to be his followers. As there is nothing in the spirit and nature of the gospel of a sordid, selfish or covetous tendency, the spirit and life of the gospel was calculated to inspire its recipients with noble, generous and sympathizing feelings and actions towards their fellow men, and especially towards their brethren and sisters in the Lord. And they were taught to the extent of their ability to do good to all men, especially to them who are of the household of faith. Not, however, as we understand the apostle, that those of the household of faith are as the creatures of God entitled to special sympathy; but from the fact that they were more oppressed and persecuted than any other class of men, they were more especially in circumstances requiring the sympathy and aid of their brethren. But wherever suffering humanity presents itself, Christ has enjoined on his disciples, according to their ability, to give to its relief. James has defined pure and undefiled religion before God and the Father to be this, to visit the fatherless and widow in their afflictions, and to keep himself unspotted from the world. In adopting the rule which our Lord gave the disciples in our text, so far as the giving of temporal things is concerned, their faith and confidence in God is to be tested. When the young man who had great possessions was told to sell what he had and give to the poor, he went away sorrowful, for his heart was set on his earthly possessions. The kingdom of Christ is not of this world; nor is it, or any part of it, to continue long in this world; and hence they are admonished to lay not up treasures on the earth. The most judicious and scriptural disposition of our worldly possessions is to use them in relieving the destitute and suffering; and were this rule universally adhered to, all would be the gainers. All amounts so given might be regarded by the donors as safe investments against the time of need, with the best possible security that it should be given back into their bosom in good measure.

In this admonition to give, we are not to understand that the people are commanded to give to the professed ministers of the word, for this command was given to the apostles and primitive disciples; and according to the spirit and letter of the injunction, we find the disciples from time to time, by the direction of their Master, giving of their scanty store to the needy around them. We do not infer, however, that the people are free from a solemn obligation to contribute of their temporal things to those who minister to them in spiritual things. But we do understand that the ministers of the gospel, as well as all others, are required to impart of what they have to the necessities of those around them, whether in the church or out, as the case may be. The object of giving was not to build up religious institutions which God had not authorized, nor to endow a purse-proud aristocracy of religious professors, but in all cases to so give as to secure temporal comforts to the suffering around us, by feeding the hungry, clothing the naked, providing also for the sick and the distressed.

A sister inquires what these disciples had to give. Of temporal things, we believe, they had very little at the time he sent them out without much of an outset; and up to the time that Peter and John met the lame man at the beautiful gate of the temple, they had not been able to lay up enough to have a sixpence in their pocket, for silver and gold they had none; and we believe that all their cotemporaries in the ministry, after the death of Judas, were equally destitute of silver and gold. At that day the preaching of the gospel had not got to be a money making business. But, although poor in regard to temporal things, and followers of him who had not where to lay his head, they nevertheless had something to give. Peter said, "Silver and gold have I none; but such as I have, give I thee. In the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, rise up and walk!" They had something more precious than silver and gold, of which Jesus had said to them, "Freely ye have received, freely give." This invaluable treasure Peter refused to sell when Simon offered money for it. Peter did not regard the gifts of the Holy Ghost as capital to speculate upon, as the modern clergy regard their ministerial diplomas, or he would have availed himself of the opportunity of receiving the ready cash offered by Simon, who, like thousands in our day, are panting for the work to which the Holy Ghost has never called them.

However poor the saints may be, they in most cases can find opportunity to carry out the principle of kindness which this text inculcates, by visiting the sick and sympathizing with the afflicted, where they may be unable to administer temporal supplies. The spiritual gifts of the Holy Ghost are freely bestowed on the members of the body of Christ, for the general benefit of all the body. In these gifts those persons on whom God has bestowed them are to be exercised. In the morning they are to sow the seed, and in the evening withhold not their hand. Be instant in season, out of season, and ever ready to give the reason of the hope that is in them, to him that asketh, with meekness and fear. The ministers of Jesus are to give themselves wholly to the work, casting all their care on him who careth for them; and in their unreserved devotion to the work whereunto the Holy Ghost has called them, "Feed the flock of God, which he has purchased with his own blood." And while thus engaged in administering that which they have freely received of the Lord, to comfort, instruct and feed the saints, their Lord has graciously provided that they shall receive again in good measure. Their oil shall not waste from the cruse, nor their meal be exhausted from the barrel, before God will renew their stock. Their supplies are to be sent them in such a way as to teach them their constant dependence on God, and lead them to pray unto him, "Give us this day our daily bread." And those who are fed and comforted in the reception of their spiritual things, are also commanded to minister to them of their carnal things; and we do believe that much leanness and barrenness is sent into the souls of many of God's children as a chastisement for withholding from the ministers of the gospel what Christ has commanded them to communicate. But where the saints have come up to the heavenly rule, and without grudging freely ministered of their substance according to the divine rule, we believe that a case has never yet been known where they have failed to receive in return good measure, pressed down, and shaken together, and running over.

We cannot confine the application of the solemn charge in the text to the primitive disciples, unto whom it was primarily addressed; but as it stands recorded in the New Testament, we regard it as divine authority to all apostolic christians throughout all time. It is therefore binding on New Testament saints to give of such things as they have to relieve the wants of those around them, as opportunity presents, and to be kindly affectionate one towards another, ministering freely to the necessities of the saints, bearing one another's burdens, and so fulfilling or obeying the law of Christ. And as they are specially charged not to muzzle the mouth of the ox that treadeth out the corn, they should never suffer those who labor among them in word and doctrine to go their warfare at their own charges. But while they are thus charged to administer to those whom God has sent to preach, they are to try the spirits, by the word, and see that they do not bid them God speed whom God has not sent, lest they become partakers of their evil deeds. Whatever christians may give to false teachers, as to their enemies, to relieve their sufferings, they can give them nothing as ministers of Jesus, or as implying fellowship, without transgressing the law of Christ. Yet, if their enemies hunger, feed them, give them drink, &c., but see that it be not given as an expression of fellowship. By their fruits the saints shall know them; they shall gather neither grapes nor figs from their ministry. "If there come any unto you," says the apostle, "and bring not this doctrine [the doctrine which Christ and the apostles preached], receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed; for he that biddeth him God speed is partaker of his evil deeds." —2 John 10, 11. Or, "if there arise among you a prophet, or dreamer of dreams, and giveth thee a sign or wonder, and the sign or the wonder come to pass whereof he spake unto thee, saying, Let us go after other gods, which thou hast not known, and let us serve them; thou shalt not hearken unto the words of that prophet or of that dreamer of dreams; for the Lord your God proveth you, to know whether ye love the Lord your God with all your heart and with all your soul."—Deut. xiii. 1–3. There are many marks laid down in the word by which God's children are to discriminate between the ministers of Jesus and the messengers of Satan. The latter are, and the former are not, greedy of filthy lucre. The ministers of Christ feed the flock; those of Satan feed themselves of the flock. Gospel ministers, having food and raiment, are therewith content; the others are greedy dogs, that can never have enough.

PLEASE BE SURE

IN sending remittances for renewals of subscriptions to give us the same name in which the paper is already coming. If the party is married, and the paper is coming in the wife's name, and we receive remittance to renew the subscription, and the husband's name is given, we have no means of knowing that it is meant for the subscription in the wife's name; consequently the husband's name is entered on our list, and the paper sent to both parties. Or if the paper is coming in the husband's name, and the renewal is sent in the wife's name, the same thing is likely to occur. It is a good plan to inclose in the letter one of the little pink slips containing the name, taken either from the margin of the paper or from the wrapper in which the paper comes.

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE.

TO MOST of our readers the above mentioned book is too well known to need any introduction or a description by us. While many of the Bibles have a Concordance appended, they are generally so condensed or abridged as to be of little or no use. Cruden's Complete Concordance, however, enables one to readily turn to any passage of Scripture of which they can call to mind two or three words, and in our opinion is the most complete and convenient as a reference book of any published. In addition, it contains many other aids in studying the Bible, as may be seen by reference to advertisement on last page. Remember, both the books there mentioned are CRUDEN'S COMPLETE.

I have partaken of the last ten days, although something is constanly by me, prepared by some one, thinking that perhaps I could eat it. What I appreciate most of all is that I am remembered by those whom I think must have become tired of me ere now. I am glad that I met you and heard you proclaim the unsearchable riches of Christ. That was the last gospel sermon I have heard; and how far from home was I when I heard it. It was there I learned how good it was to be in the midst of the people of God. Even if my treatment in the hospital was not permanent, I was fed with the good things that fell from my Master's table. How pleasant it is for me to meditate on this pleasant meeting of the dear children of God in Philadelphia.

I have had many trials at this letter, and it has been written while lying on my back. I beg to be excused for taking up your precious time in reading my poor letters; but I have no excuse to offer for writing, save a desire to express my joy in your editorials. With love to you and yours, and with a longing desire for an interest in your prayers when it is well with you, your sister, I trust, in Christ,

LIZZIE HIMES.

RIDGEWOOD, N. J., Aug. 30, 1895.

DEAR BRETHREN:—Yielding to the repeated requests of a few who have read of the exercises of my mind, some time since, I will continue the account of what I trust were the Lord's dealings with me. I feel to reiterate this with increased confidence, because I had mapped out such a different path for myself, and because, although nearly a quarter of a century has elapsed since the day I first heard gospel preaching, my feelings are still stirred within me at the recollection. O the satisfying home feeling I enjoyed in realizing that the Lord still had a people who worshiped him in the Spirit, having no confidence in the flesh. Although I was a stranger, and their faces new to me, I never felt more at home than on that Sunday in December, 1870, at our present meeting-house in New York City. I continued to attend there regularly through the winter; but having been so much disappointed with those I had joined, I concluded never to join with any any other organization. I continued on in this way until March of the following year, when I was much disturbed with a sense of my unfitness to meet with this dear company, who seemed to be separated from the world. I could see that they possessed the fruit of the Spirit, whereas I was nothing but a worldling, and had no right to intrude. O what a sad, homesick feeling overcame me, and in my distress I cried out, "Must this isolation continue to the end?" Then these words came, I trust, to keep me from despair, "And thou shalt hear a voice behind thee, saying, This is the way," &c. My attention was arrested, so that I could not shake it off. "This is the way," "This is the way," continued with me, I think, for seven weeks, when I bethought me to look if it were in the Scriptures, for I had not thought it before. So I found it, and read it many times in Isaiah xxx. 21. Then I began to question, "Why has this passage of Scripture clung to me? Can it be that I will be permitted to walk in this way?" No, I dare not indulge such a thought. I, who had been so carefully trained and educated in the Calvinistic doctrine, so called, and who had the reputation of being so religiously inclined, O what a farce my life had been. I felt so condemned, I was overwhelmed with grief. O the agony of that hour, when sweetly came these words, "Thy sins are forgiven thee." I could not believe. I was alone in the room, and I said aloud, "How can God be just and save me?" Immediately the answer seemed spoken in an audible voice, "I do as I will with the armies of heaven and the inhabitants of the earth." My duty then was made clear to me, my burden had left me, and in the following August I was baptized, just twenty-four years ago. For a few short weeks I enjoyed the answer of a good conscience. I felt that in obedience, not for, there is great reward. I had a sweet realizing sense of God's protecting care! But alas! murmurings and doubts returned, so that I began to fear the experience I had passed through was all imaginary; so I must needs be brought through deep waters and fiery trials, my idols must be shattered, and then I must be driven, as it were, to acknowledge the God of heaven and Jesus my Redeemer. O that we may all live in his fear and die in his favor, is my prayer for his name's sake.

Dear brethren, I have written these lines for the SIGNS, if you care to publish them. I have tried to condense as much as possible; but the half is not told, nor can it be told. Wonderful are the ways of the Lord.

M. HILLINGS.

DEWAR, Iowa, July 24, 1895.

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES—DEAR FRIENDS:—For a long time I have felt a desire to write you, and several times have made the attempt, only to look over what I had written, and see in it so many imperfections and blunders, like there is in its author, and to consign it to the flames. But Elder Downey in his sermon last Sunday so described my feelings that I have felt my faith strengthened, and feel like telling as I tried to tell him, what great things the Lord has done for me. Being blest with God-fearing parents, and having been surrounded with christian influences, it was only natural, as I loved them, to have a great regard and reverence for the things they enjoyed. I cannot tell when I first had serious impressions and deep concern for my soul's salvation. But I secretly thought the Old School Baptists the oddest and most isolated people living, and wished our people would not entertain them so often or travel so many miles to be in their company. I thought, When I get religion (for I vainly supposed I could get it at my own will and pleasure) I will belong to a more popular church. Time passed along, and I attended many revival meetings and different places of worship, but did not take much interest, only just to have a place to go, until a year ago last winter, when a great protracted meeting was held in our vicinity. A great many of our friends were uniting, and seemed much interested and happy in the work they were accomplishing. I felt anxious to go, but in some way the preaching did not satisfy me, and I began to feel very despondent. My sins seemed to rise as mountains before me, and the more I tried to extricate myself and live above sin the deeper I plunged into its depths. When I would do good, evil was ever present with me. I wished I could be as happy and contented with myself and enjoy religion as others did. One evening while pondering over my life, and remembering how mercies had attended me, and what an undeserving creature I was, I got a glimpse of myself as wretched and undone. I could but cry for mercy and pardon, and earnestly begged the Lord, as I picked up my Bible, to direct me to something that would afford comfort to my poor, benighted heart. Immediately my eyes fell on the sixth verse of the twenty-first chapter of Revelation. The latter clause reads thus, "I will give unto him that is athirst of the fountain of the water of life freely." O! I thought, that verse is for me, for I am so hungry and faint for spiritual food. I was filled with joy unspeakable, and felt like I would never be downcast again, but would always be praising and adoring the dear and once crucified Savior. That was over a year and a half ago. But how different I have been most of the time since. Heavy clouds and darkness have encompassed me, and something would tell me that I had been deceived. Then again I felt that were it not for that little hope I would be most miserable.

This is at your disposal. Pardon me if I have intruded. I used to read your paper when at home, as it was a regular visitor at my father's house; but I have not seen a copy of it lately.

Very truly,

BELLE G. GARRETT.

CIRCULAR LETTERS.

The Roxbury Old School or Primitive Baptist Association, in session with the church of Olive & Hurley, Ulster Co., N. Y., Sept. 4th and 5th, 1895, to the churches in our fellowship, sends christian greeting.

BELOVED BRETHREN IN CHRIST:—As another year has passed, it is again our high privilege as an association to address you through a Circular Letter, that our pure minds may be stirred up to the remembrance of our interest and obligation to and in one another as witnesses to the truth in Jesus. As a subject for consideration briefly we will call your attention to these words, "And this is the confidence that we have in him, that if we ask anything according to his will he heareth us: and if we know that he hear us, whatsoever we ask, we know that we have the petitions that we desired of him."—1 John v. 14, 15. Confidence in God is of the utmost importance to all who believe in him; for all who come to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him. Prayer is the first expression of confidence in God. This disciple of Jesus declares plainly and conclusively the import of reliance and trust in the work of the Lord, and the necessity of obedience to his commands, and of an orderly walk and godly conversation, being the proof to the Lord's people that in keeping his commands there is great reward. The preparations of the heart as well as the answer of the tongue being from the Lord, only those who feel their need of the help of the Lord will ever be able to appreciate the blessedness there is in the answer of prayer, which is sensed in the humility of soul as the cry goes up from their poor hearts for mercy, this being the fullness of their plea; thus showing a full satisfaction, not only of confidence in God, but in rest of soul, because of belief that they are heard of him who answers prayer, even him who will not despise the prayer of the destitute, as they feel themselves to be. Even though they rise high in their estimation of the love and mercy of God, and sink ever so low in their own estimation, their willingness to cry out, as well as their ability to cry out, when in trouble, darkness and doubt, proves a full satisfaction and rest in the promises, substantiating the word of the man of God. Although the cry may have been with unutterable groaning, it proves to have been the Spirit's intercession, and in agreement with the will of God, which no mortal tongue can fully express, nor sigh or groan fully signify. The expression of the tongue, the deep felt sigh, the stifled groan, declare plainly confidence in God, who is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that the tried and tempest-tossed ones are able to ask or think, according to the power that worketh in them; for it is God that worketh in them both to will and to do of his good pleasure; and this is his pleasure, that they confide in him, and call upon his holy name, and receive in their measure the answer from his throne, as the sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty. Therefore, dear brethren and sisters, take courage in times of trouble, believing that if your trials humble you before your God, in whom you confide as you call upon him, he hears you; and, believing that he hears your cry, you have the answer to your petition. May grace so abound by living faith in the hearts of God's afflicted and poor people, who confide in him, and have one heart and one judgment in regard to prayer, that they may not be looking for an answer to their humble petitions to-morrow or next year, but in confidence acknowledge him who has said, "They shall not labor in vain, nor bring forth for trouble; for they are the seed of the blessed of the Lord." "And it shall come to pass that before they call I will answer, and while they are yet speaking I will hear." Therefore let us come boldly to the throne of grace, not to be heard of men, but with confidence in our God, believing that he hears us as the contrite ones who believe that there is none other who has the words of eternal life. May our God bless us with a rest in him from all murmurings. Amen.

CORRESPONDING LETTERS.

The Roxbury Old School or Primitive Baptist Association, in session with the Olive & Hurley Church, Ulster County, N. Y., Sept. 4th and 5th, 1895, to the associations and corresponding meetings with which she corresponds, sendeth christian salutation.

DEARLY BELOVED BRETHREN IN THE LORD:—Through the goodness of the covenant-keeping God we are permitted again to meet together in an associate capacity, to essay to worship God, and to hear from each other while on our pilgrimage through this world of sin and sorrow. We cannot inform you of any changes, except the loss of some of our dear ones, who have been called during the past year to their eternal home, where sin will no more trouble them. We desire to say to you that through the love and mercy of our God we are at peace and in fellowship among ourselves, maintaining the doctrine and order of the house of God as taught in the Scriptures, not following the lo heres and lo theres, but desiring to walk in that way which is a high way, which the vulture's eye hath not seen, nor the lion's whelp trodden; but the redeemed shall walk there.

We can truly say that the coming of your messengers has gladdened our hearts, in that they have come in the fullness of the blessing of the gospel, preaching Christ and him crucified, the way, the truth and the life. With the poet we say,

"Blest be the tie that binds
Our hearts in christian love;
The fellowship of kindred minds
Is like to that above."

We desire a continuance of your christian love and fellowship, hoping the Lord will enable you to meet with us again, at our next association, which will be held, the Lord willing, with the sister church, the First Church of Roxbury, Delaware County, N. Y., on the second Wednesday and Thursday in September, 1896, commencing at ten o'clock a. m.

NOTICES.

WILL you notice in a few numbers of the SIGNS that "Reminiscences and Letters of Mary Parker" is now reduced to sixty cents, sent by mail post-paid? There are a few hundred copies left on my hands, and I wish to dispose of them, and so I give the friends an opportunity to get a most interesting book at half-price.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

Merrelender Ann Burgess was born eight miles below Cumberland, Md., Feb. 12th, 1816, and died Sept. 3d, 1895.

When thirteen years old she came to Ohio, where, on April 21st, 1831, she was married to Wm. Chenowith, to which union were born three sons and two daughters. One son and one daughter still live (the daughter being the only relative present at the funeral to mourn her loss), besides her brethren and sisters of the Turkey Run Church, Fairfield Co., Ohio, where she and her husband belonged, her husband dying in 1870. Poor in this world's goods, but rich in faith, she awaited her departure from a world of sorrow to scenes of joy evermore. All her funeral expenses were defrayed by her brethren and sisters in the church of her membership, to the church-house of which she was conveyed in her coffin, where by request on the day following her death a discourse was delivered by the writer from Matthew v. 17; after which the body was laid in its dusty bed, to await the voice that shall bid it rise in another form.

THOMAS COLE.

DIED—Sept. 2d, 1895, Carroll Grafton, second son of Jacob A. and Emma V. Grafton, at the age of 4 years, 3 months and 10 days.

Our darling little boy had been afflicted since he was fifteen months old. His disease and the cause of the same remained a mystery to us, as well as to the physicians who attended him at intervals during his three years' illness. He was a loving and affectionate child, and very patient and quiet, though never able to walk alone, nor to talk but little. His very affliction drew him near to his parents, and to all who knew him. When I think of David mourning over Absalom, I also feel that I could have died for my poor child; yet I feel I do know that what God appoints is always best. I trust that I do desire to be reconciled to his most holy will, and with Job to say, "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord." The sweet comfort and peaceful assurance that came to my soul a few moments after he died gives me to hope that he was a chosen vessel; and if such be the case, I know that he is now in that "land of pure delight, where saints immortal reign."

The funeral, which was well attended by sympathizing relatives and friends, took place here on Wednesday, the 4th inst. The services were conducted by our beloved uncle, Elder Wm. Grafton, who preached a very able and comforting sermon from the words, "And their sins and iniquities will I remember no more."—Heb. x. 17.

With love to all the saints, in sorrow,

JACOB A. GRAFTON.

DUBLIN, Md., Sept. 8, 1895.

DEPARTED this life August 10th, 1895, after a long illness, Mrs. Zek. Robins, of Boiceville, Ulster Co., N. Y.

Mrs. Robins was not a professor of religion, yet a believer in the doctrine of reigning grace. She had passed through severe trials in the loss of two dear children, one being a grown daughter, on whom her heart was set. From overmourning and disease her mind was affected. Although measurably reconciled to the loss of her daughter, her mourning turned to a view of herself, feeling to be left without comfort; yet afterward she again was made to rejoice in hope of the glory of God. While her place is vacated, and her husband left alone, we trust that for her to die was gain. She left a number of sisters and other relatives to mourn.

ALSO,

DEPARTED this life August 15th, 1895, in Roxbury, Delaware Co., N. Y., after a short illness, brother George Dart, in the 84th year of his age.

Brother Dart united with the Second Roxbury Old School Baptist Church when quite young; and after more than half a century had passed, with all its changes and divisions, he stood unwavering in the truth and peace of the gospel of the Son of God, his only hope being a sinner saved by grace. As his health had been failing for several years back, he was not often at our place of worship; and now that we shall see his face no more we mourn, yet we have hope. Our dear aged sister is left lonely and sad, yet I trust she feels that the Lord is her strength and righteousness. Also one son and three daughters, with their families, are left to mourn. God bless them all.

J. D. HUBBELL.

KELLY'S CORNERS, N. Y.

Elder James B. Hattaway died at his home in Pike Co., Ala., on the evening of Sept. 23d, 1894, after a bedridden illness of fifty-three days, of typhoid fever.

He was born April 6th, 1859, received a hope in Christ in 1876, and was baptized in the fellowship of the church at Pleasant Hill on Sept. 2d, 1877, by Elder John E. Carter. He was married Jan. 11th, 1880, to Miss Martha P. Faulk, daughter of Joseph T. Faulk. Through this union seven children were born unto them, five of whom are still living to feel their loss of a kind father. He was ordained April 2d, 1892. Though his work in the ministry was short, it was highly acceptable with the brotherhood, especially with the churches which he served as pastor. During his long sickness his mind was with the churches, and he often spoke of them. He was meek and humble, yet a bold, fearless and uncompromising defender of the truth. His labors were rendered with that degree of faithfulness and devotion as to secure to him the confidence and esteem of the entire brotherhood. But his labor is ended; and while we so greatly miss him in the little assemblies of the saints in this country, we feel that our loss is his eternal gain. During his sickness he had all the attention that kind and loving hands could render; but the time had come. God's purpose with him here had come to an end; so we feel to humbly bow to our heavenly Father's will.

MEMORIALS.

By the Spoon River (Ill.) Association.

WHEREAS, The great and supreme Ruler of the universe has in his infinite wisdom removed from among us our dearly beloved brother, Elder I. N. VANMETER; and,

WHEREAS, The long and intimate relation held with him in the faithful discharge of his duties in this association makes it befitting that we record our appreciation of him; therefore be it

Resolved, That the wisdom and ability which he exercised in the aid of our association by his service and counsel will be held in grateful remembrance.

Resolved, That the sudden removal of such a life from among us leaves a vacancy that will be deeply felt by all the brethren and friends of this association, and will prove a loss to us all; yet we feel that our loss is his eternal gain. We feel that he is reaping the just reward that is prepared for all God's children. Be it further

Resolved, That with deep sympathy with the bereaved family of the deceased we bow our heads in submission to the will of our Father, who doeth all things well, and feel that all his dealings are just.

Resolved, That a copy of these Resolutions be spread upon the records of this association, and that a copy be printed in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES and the Macomb Journal, and all other papers of our faith and order will please copy.

ASSOCIATIONAL.

THE 131st annual session of the Kehukee Primitive Baptist Association is to be held, if the Lord will, with the Kehukee Church, one mile south of Scotland Neck, Halifax Co., N. C., beginning on Saturday, October 5th, and lasting three days.

Visitors from the north should come by way of Weldon and Halifax to Scotland Neck on Friday, Oct. 4th. Those who come by the railroads from Plymouth or Kinston can reach the association in time on Saturday morning. A cordial invitation is extended to all the ministers and members of our correspondence, and to all others who may desire, to attend our meeting and take part in our worship.

S. HASSELL, Mod.

M. T. LAWRENCE, Clerk.

THE Pilgrim's Rest Association of Primitive Baptists is appointed to meet with the Gilead Church, in Miami Co., Kansas, at two o'clock p. m. on Friday before the second Saturday in October, 1895.

Those coming by rail will be met on the morning of the meeting at Gardner, a station thirty-three miles west from Kansas City, on a branch of the Santa Fe R. R. We earnestly desire as many as can to meet with us at that time, as we are few in number, an afflicted and poor people.

S. P. RAMEY.

THE fourteenth annual session of the Big Creek Association of the Regular Primitive Predestinarian Baptist faith and order will be held with the Salem Church, eighteen miles southeast of Mexia, Texas, on the Houston & Texas Central R. R., commencing on Saturday before the first Sunday in October, 1895.

Brethren and sisters, and preaching brethren especially, are invited to visit us. They will be met at Mexia, on the Houston & Texas Central R. R., on Friday before; or they will be met at Jewett, on the I. & G. N. R. R., on Friday before. If any should come to Jewett they should write to John Bishop, Farrar, Texas; or if they should come to Mexia they should write to I. R. Betts or R. O. Beene, Personville, Texas.

As there is and has been some trouble among the Baptists in Texas about the predestination of all things, we would be glad for some of our eastern brethren to visit us and see us, and find out what we believe.

JOHN BISHOP, Clerk.

THE Virginia Corresponding Meeting will be held, the Lord willing, with the New Valley Church, Loudoun Co., Va., to begin on Wednesday before the third Sunday in October (16th), 1895, and continue three days.

THE Salisbury Old School Baptist Association is appointed to be held with the church at Little Creek, Sussex Co., Del., to begin on Wednesday before the fourth Sunday in October (23d), 1895, and continue three days.

THE Juniata Association of Old School or Primitive Baptists will meet, if no preventing providence, with the Springfield Church, Huntingdon Co., Pa., on Wednesday after the first Sunday in October, 1895, and continue Thursday and Friday.

We extend a cordial invitation to all lovers of the truth. Those coming by railroad will come on the Central Pennsylvania to Mount Union, and there change cars for Three Springs, where they will be met on Tuesday evening. Should any one come, and no person there, inquire for Mordecai Chilcote, as he lives in the place.

AHIMAAZ MELLOTT.

THE Oconee Baptist Association is to be held this fall with the church at Rutledge, Morgan Co., Ga., and is to commence on Tuesday after the second Sunday in October, instead of Saturday before, and continue three days.

Rutledge is on the Georgia R. R., and brethren coming by rail can come either way on Monday, and can come down from Atlanta on Tuesday morning. Ministering brethren especially invited. Inquire for W. F. Streeter, Warren Ivy or Mr. Studard.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SON, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date. This date denotes the time at which your subscription expires; and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

PICTORIAL HISTORY

OF THE

UNITED STATES.

By James D. McCabe.

This work is no dry mass of details—no bombastic effort to inflame the national pride, but a vivid and brilliant narrative of the events of our history, from the discovery of the American Continent down to the present time. It gives a most interesting account of the Indians of North America, from the time of the coming of the white men. The voyages of Columbus and explorations and discoveries of the different nations of Europe are related with graphic power. Every step of our colonial history is traced with patient fidelity, and the sources of those noble and, we trust, enduring institutions, which have made our country free and great, are shown with remarkable clearness. Then follows a clear and succinct account of our great Struggle for Independence, and the establishment of the Federal Union—the events of our career from the close of the Revolution to the administration of Harrison.

The work is printed from plain, new type, on fine calendered paper, and comprised in one octavo volume of 960 pages. It is splendidly embellished with nearly 500 fine engravings, embracing battles and other historical scenes, portraits of distinguished men, views of our principal cities, &c., &c.

Bound in Fine Silk Cloth, Plain Edges, $2.00, Post-paid.

"THE SWORD OF THE LORD AND OF GIDEON."

VOL. 63. MIDDLETOWN, N. Y., WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 25, 1895. NO. 39.

CORRESPONDENCE.

GHENT, Ky., July 20, 1895.

DEAR BROTHER DURAND:—A train of thoughts has been given to me in my meditations this morning, which I propose to offer to you, although they may neither be profitable nor interesting to you. I was thinking of the history of Constantine, the great emperor of Rome, who reigned in that most eventful year 325 of the Christian era. I say eventful, because in that year the greatest bloodless revolution recorded on the musty pages of antiquity was accomplished. You will remember that pagan idolatry had been the law-established religion of that great empire for ages and centuries. That religion had been established by law, and was perpetuated by the sword and the most cruel edicts issued by the corrupt and tyranical emperors who had preceded Constantine. But the day had dawned upon the world in which a great and wonderful change must take place in the history of that corrupt people. Not a change in the interest of true and vital religion, but a change fixed in the mind of him who says, "My counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure." That change was the beginning of that beast of which John speaks, saying, "And I stood upon the sand of the sea, and saw a beast rise up out of the sea, having seven heads and ten horns, and upon his horns ten crowns, and upon his heads the name of blasphemy."—Rev. xiii. 1. It is evident that the change in the world's history then about to be recorded was not in the interest of the religion established by our ever to be adored Redeemer; for upon the heads of that beast was the name of blasphemy. But Rome had made her conquests in Asia, Africa and Europe, and part of the trophies of her victories were the idol gods of the conquered provinces, which were taken to the capital of Rome and placed in a great temple; and with them a great number of slaves were taken to the capital; but all were permitted to worship their own idols respectively; and when they entered that temple each knelt to the idol of his own nationality. The wisest among the Roman sages beheld this strange scene daily. They had studied what they called the immortality of the soul, and they held as sacred that doctrine. But this question forcibly presented itself to them, How can that in man which has an eternal existence be benefited and made happy by the worship of their gods, which possessed no vitality, no life? Then doubts arose in the minds of those philosophers as to man's existence, and his being in any wise after death different from the lowest type of animals. Their religion was a denial of the existence of one great, almighty, supreme Being who was the Creator of the universe. Then Rome religiously was but a seething caldron of infidelity. That condition existed at the time our Lord appeared upon the earth in his great mission to save his people from their sins. But to the Jews God had given the law and the prophets and the temple service, as well as the many great and wonderful manifestations of his protective care over his chosen people; yet they naturally were no better than the Romans, and readily and actively joined the idolaters in their cruel persecutions of our Lord and his chosen disciples. Those facts demonstrate most clearly the truth revealed by the apostle in the third chapter of his epistle to the church at Rome, in which he describes poor, fallen man in these words, "There is none righteous, no, not one; there is none that understandeth; there is none that seeketh after God. They are all gone out of the way; they are together become unprofitable; there is none that doeth good, no, not one. Their throat is an open sepulchre; with their tongues they have used deceit; the poison of asps is under their lips; whose mouth is full of cursing and bitterness; their feet are swift to shed blood; destruction and misery are in their ways, and the way of peace have they not known; there is no fear of God before their eyes." It is true that all now living, all that have lived, and all that will live on the earth, have descended from the same parents, and hence naturally possess the same characteristics. Then it is not strange that both Romans and Jews joined in those wicked persecutions. Their feet were swift to shed blood. This being the condition of the human race on the earth, they "sought out many inventions." Among those inventions was an effort to blend natural and spiritual things; an effort that is being as vigorously made now as at any other period in the history of the world. The principle that infidelity is native in the human heart, and nothing but the power and grace of God has ever been able to dislodge it from its corrupt abode, is clearly demonstrated by the history of man on the earth. Even the immediate disciples of our Lord believed that his mission to earth was to restore Israel to its former earthly glory. The two mourning disciples as they journeyed from Jerusalem to Emmaus, while conversing with their risen Lord and speaking of his crucifixion, said, "But we trusted that it had been he which should have redeemed Israel." The Jews then were in bondage under Rome, and redemption from that bondage was their chief desire. These disciples did not understand the great truth declared by our Lord when he said, "My kingdom is not of this world." Nor do natural men now believe that great truth. As I have said, nothing but the power and grace of God can remove unbelief from our natural minds and hearts.

But we learn from history that Constantine, the emperor of Rome, in the year 325 of the Christian era called a council composed of the wise men about his court, which met at Nice in June of that year, and declared by a solemn decree, signed by the emperor, that the Christian religion should be the religion of Rome, instead of pagan idolatry, and provided by heavy pains and penalties, as well as rewards for the enforcement of that decree. In that way they established a kingdom which was of this world, and totally unlike that kingdom of which our Lord had spoken, and of the setting up of which Daniel had prophesied, when he said, "In the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed. And the kingdom shall not be left to other people." The prophet in prophetic vision beheld a kingdom which should endure forever. Excuse me for saying that sometimes I have thought that I beheld in sweet and precious vision that kingdom arrayed in all its heavenly glory after the resurrection, when all its chosen subjects will be brought into it, clad in immortality, to go out no more. Surely that kingdom is like its heavenly builder. It is eternal, and was founded in infinite wisdom and unchanging love. Its subjects are all prepared while here below by the great Master Workman, for their peace within its sacred walls. "Salvation will God appoint for walls and bulwarks," is the language of the prophet. But their places in that kingdom here below are soon made vacant by death of the body; but it being an eternal kingdom, the monster death can never impair or lessen the number of its blessed inhabitants. "All that the Father giveth me shall come to me," is the language of our Lord. Ah, dear brother, when you from the sacred desk are proclaiming the unsearchable riches of Christ, that great King, it is then by sweet and precious faith you are enabled to see the King in his beauty, and proclaim to his saints the riches of their inheritance, all of which are found in that kingdom. But while here below, gloom and sorrow and mourning are often their companions by reason of sin; but when disrobed of mortality and brought into that glorious and heavenly and triumphant kingdom above, all these sorrows and afflictions will have passed away, and in the sweetest notes they will sing the praises of their ever to be adored Lord and King, for that kingdom shall never be destroyed.

But the infidelity which had taken deep root in the minds of the Roman philosophers at the commencement of the Christian era aided Constantine in his movement to change the religion of Rome. No doubt he was a man who was possessed of great natural powers. No doubt he had seen with deep regret the decline of Rome, which had begun a century before his day; and to put a check on that decline was his highest purpose; and to change the religion of Rome he no doubt believed would be a step in that direction. He knew that in the worship of idols there was no vitality. All their idols were composed of inanimate matter. No doubt can be entertained as to his knowledge of the history of the advent of our Lord, his life, his death, his resurrection and ascension. That knowledge no doubt presented to his philosophical mind the great contrast between the worship of inanimate matter and the worship of one in whom existed life and power to impart life. The philosophers of Rome had for ages been deeply imbued with a loathsome skepticism. But when Constantine presented to them a religion that was founded on one in whom life was one of his highest characteristics, and told them of his resurrection, as he no doubt had found in the history of our Lord as he had read it, he with ease could overcome their skepticism and make a radical change in their philosophy. When that council convened at Nice perhaps a large majority of its members were called from the ranks of those philosophers, who were selected because of their great learning. They were in session over two months, and perhaps the great and fatal errors that pervaded pagan idolatry had never before been so clearly presented as they were by Constantine and the converts to his new system of religion. So forcibly were those errors presented to the council that less than twenty out of three hundred members voted against the edict which established Christianity instead of pagan idolatry in Rome; and it may be that those who voted in the negative were controlled by their opposition to the establishment of a system of religion that was to be governed and regulated by the laws of Rome, instead of the sacred laws given by the King of saints for the government of his kingdom, in which "A King shall reign in righteouness, and princes shall rule in judgment."

Now, dear brother, this train of thought leads us to look upon the contrast between the kingdoms and forms of government established on earth by men, and that kingdom which was set up by the God of heaven, of which Daniel prophesied, which is governed by laws that came from a source which was and is infinitely holy, just and wise. "The law is holy, and the commandment holy, just and good," is the language of the apostle. The children of that kingdom are often in sorrow and mourning when they compare themselves by that holy law; but the Lord says to them by the prophet, "O thou afflicted, tossed with tempest, and not comforted, behold, I will lay thy stones with fair colors, and lay thy foundations with sapphires. And I will make thy windows of agates, and thy gates of carbuncles, and all thy borders of pleasant stones. And all thy children shall be taught of the Lord, and great shall be the peace of thy children. In righteousness shalt thou be established." All they who are brought into that kingdom shall be established in righteousness, and in it shall dwell safely, for it is surrounded by salvation's walls. It is an eternal kingdom, which shall never be removed; while the kingdom over which Constantine ruled, with its system of law religion, has long since been removed and destroyed; but it filled its cup of iniquity to the brim before it was consumed. Then we reach this conclusion, that the kingdoms of this world rise, fall and fade away, while the kingdom of God's dear Son will endure forever. And we reach this further conclusion, that all religious organizations which depend in whole or in part upon the works and wisdom of men, or the contrubtions of property, money, or other things, are as certain to fall and fade away as was the church of which Constantine was the founder and head, and the empire over which he reigned. Then let the saints look alone to Jesus for help in every time of trouble.

Now, brother Durand, my reason for addressing this long letter to you was that I knew God had blessed you with ability to readily detect error, let it appear in whatever form it might; and when you have read these feeble thoughts you will please point out all the errors into which my thoughts and meditations have run. I am in my eighty-fourth year, and was quite sick a few days since, and my physical system is now quite weak; and if my mental is on a parity, as politicians say, with my physical, I know you will not be rewarded for the trouble of reading this long letter. Please tender my warmest christian salutation to sister Durand and sister Bessie, and believe me affectionately yours in the hope of the gospel,

H. COX.

DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST:—I received your pleasant and welcome letter, and was pleased to know that you had not forgotten me; for I must say I am unworthy of your notice, or of any of the Lord's dear people; but in writing of your indifferent condition in regard to spiritual things you wrote what gave me more comfort than even the pleasing statement of the addition to your numbers, though I did feel a pleasure to hear that also. What strange beings we are to take comfort in hearing each other tell of what poor, helpless creatures we are; and also in reading in the Scriptures how often we turn, as it were, instinctively to those parts in which the writers tell about their wretchedness and misery; and sometimes I feel if it were not for such writings therein inscribed there would be no use of my taking it up at all; and indeed sometimes whole weeks pass that I seem to have no desire to look upon its pages; and if I feel constrained, as it were, from a sense of duty to read it, it seems as if there was no meaning or profit in it, let alone comfort or pleasure; and yet I can read other literature with interest and all the keenness of the natural man, and can be interested in all worldly affairs, but dead to eternal and spiritual subjects. I suppose the Lord knows that it is best for his children to be left to themselves at times, that they may realize and feel that not only is all their help in him, but that also all good things are treasured up in Christ, our living Head, and it is only as he is pleased to supply us out of his abounding fullness that we can taste one morsel of that food that we hope we know something about. In all my coldness, indifference and selfish worldliness, and even in the midst of a feeling sense of the depravity of my depraved nature, I know and realize that there is something I need that can change all this scene of woe and misery, and make me rejoice in hope of the glory of God. But O how far away it seems, and how impossible it is for me to reach out and grasp what there is an undefinable longing for. What is it that sustains me during these long, dark, weary years that I spend in groping around for some support? Why don't I go to work and try to do something to get comfort? Here are those on the right hand and on the left that say, "Come along with us, and we will do you good. See how prosperous and happy we are; and you can be the same if you only will. Why not try it in your perplexity and darkness?" The thought comforts me a little as I realize that some power has taught me (with an experience and thoroughness that I feel I can never forget) that I am different from them, and know they are wrong; that the dead are there, and that there is a great gulf between them and me that all the inventions of men can never bridge; and this gulf is God's eternal purpose of love and mercy towards his chosen people, predestinating them to be different from all other people on the face of the earth; calling them to a knowledge of what they are, and also giving them a knowledge of himself in all his glorious character, so that they cannot and dare not bow down to the false gods of the nations among whom they dwell. How often have I read, with feelings that I could not express, the account of the three Hebrew children who, though surrounded by all the pomp and power of the heathen nation, and standing before the king who had so favored them in worldly affairs, and who stood ready to destroy them if they did not obey his mandate to bow to his towering but powerless image. "And if it be so, be it known unto thee, O king, that we will not serve thy gods nor worship thy image." I have a great fear of death, but there have been and are times when I feel that I could not bow down and serve the gods of the heathen nations (for such are all they that know not God), even if death were the consequence of refusal. O! how could I deny him who has been better to me than all my fears, and whom I humbly hope has shewed me a little of the exceeding greatness of his glorious character as the wonderful I AM, before whom even eternity is naked and open, and in whom the whole universe is centered? I feel that I am lost in such a meditation, and words fail; and yet I believe I love to think on just such a God; and O! if he is mine, and I am his, what can I want besides? But alas! I doubt and fear, and think, How can it be? I am so vile, so little restrained by his power, that I fear it is all a delusion I have felt, or at best only the imagination of the natural mind.

Now, dear brother, I am afraid you will be tired of all this scribbling, and I will not further trouble you.

Yours for the truth's sake,

S.

DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST:—I have felt that I wanted more than anything else some one to talk to that could tell of being poor, and weak, and out of the way, and in darkness, and did not know where to go or which way to turn to find comfort, and was like those characters that came to David, who were in debt and distress, and were guilty of all sorts of wrong doings, and were not worthy of being in good society, but felt like as though they were outcasts of the very worse sort, and could not think of a good deed they had done, nor even think a good thought, and yet, amid all this scene of gloom and confusion, could feel that nothing would do for them but the firm and solid foundation of salvation by grace, and the unchangeableness of the purposes of God; that everything that has happened or ever will happen was settled and ratified long ere time began; that God is not as man, who has to suit his purposes to circumstances, but that all circumstances are but the result of his purposes. And when I view him as the eternal God, it is that everything is embraced in him, and there is nothing outside of him, and that in the course of events it is as if he were merely unfolding his purposes and manifesting them for his own glory. Everything has this end in view, the glory of God. Sometimes I wonder what kind of a God some, even of those who profess the truth, do worship. It is not a god of all power, for they do not honor him with all the power, but want some of the power given to another being. But I must not find fault, for if they have not the understanding of these things how can they accept them? and what have I that I have not received? But I hope at times that a thrill of holy solemnity fills my mind as I contemplate the awful character of him who fills the universe with his presence, and with whom there is no time, no future, no past, but before him everything is as one eternal present. But here the poor, finite mind of man is lost, and he can only grasp with the faith that is given him the wonderful character of such a being and such a salvation. But I do believe when the saints of God shall have changed these vile bodies for spiritual bodies, and are risen in the likeness of their glorious Lord and Savior, that they will there comprehend and understand all the infinite mysteries, not only of salvation, but of God himself; for the apostle says, "We shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is;" and if like him we shall have his knowledge. O! wonderful thought. How dare such a poor, defiled, ignorant creature like me ever dare to hope that such a glory will be mine? and yet I feel that nothing else will satisfy the longing in my soul but to be like Jesus. I shall be satisfied, when I awake, with his likeness. But how can I hope for it? and yet I must. I cannot throw it away, and I do not want to either. Excuse my scribbling, as I have already written too much,

Unworthily,

S.

DEAR BROTHER:—Your very welcome letter was received and read with pleasure and comfort, and I was glad you answered so promptly, as I had misgivings about sending my letter. I am painfully aware of my own infirmities and depravities, and could write a long letter on them, that would make you ashamed to call me brother; and yet the dear Lord has in a measure restrained me from vile and outbreaking sins, so that I have retained the confidence of the brethren in some degree, which is a most unspeakable mercy; for at times it seems to me that I stand, as it were, on the very brink of ruin and destruction. But thanks be to God, who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ. Often I feel like David when he said, "I shall surely fall one day by the hand of Saul;" and certainly it did seem that the poor, hunted outcast had but a poor chance for his life, with all the power of a nation arrayed against him; but the appearances were not more against them than they are against me, with all the power of hell in league, with the depravities of my own heart against me; and there are times when I have a hope that all the powers of darkness cannot sever the tie that binds me to life and salvation, and that he who holds the universe in the firm grasp of his almighty power will hide me in the pavillion of his love, as secure as his eternal throne. I love to think of his power, as knowing no limit or bounds; and while I cannot even attempt to comprehend such an awful infinity of power as possessed by him, yet, like an infant in its mother's arms, it seems like resting in something that we feel is secure against all the power that can be arrayed against us.

It is not often that I get a letter that has done me as much good as your last; not that it is better than others you have written, perhaps, but it seemed like I was just ready for such a letter, and it seemed to fall like the showers upon the grass. You know what that means better than I can describe it. I have had many crosses of late that I need not mention; but it seemed to me when I read your letter that I felt they were all necessary; and while I often think, O! if I could be humbled in some other way I would be better able to bear it; but I find the Lord does not consult us as to how he shall humble us; but he does lead us to see at times that his ways are right and good, and just what we need. I know how proud and rebellious I am, and if left to my own way would soon come to destruction. I was reading the sermon of Mr. Hallet's in the SIGNS this evening, and much object to one expression at least, and that is where he says, "Unless a supernatural power attends the word preached, it is not effectual to the conviction and conversion or salvation of ruined man." If he means eternal salvation, then he brings forward a most erroneous principle, as preaching has nothing to do with that; neither do I believe it is true what he quotes from the poet,

"The heart uplifts with God's own gifts,
And makes e'en grace a snare."

Grace always humbles, never exalts; no, never. I think I understand the poet's meaning, but it is very wrongly expressed, in my humble judgment; for when grace abounds in the heart there is no room for pride or vain glory; but, on the other hand, we feel ourselves less than the least, and unworthy of a name or a place among the people of God, and do not feel that we can think little enough of ourselves. I do not think I ever get into that enviable frame of mind, but I feel that the apostle expresses what I am most if not all the time, "hateful." I do not feel that I can write you anything to interest or profit, and will not tire you any more at present, but hope to be favored with a few lines from you again soon.

Your unworthy brother, if one at all,

S.

DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST:—I received your letter of July 12th, and while your letters are always welcome, and I always look forward with pleasure to receive them, yet this last one has made me feel rather sad. I do not feel that I can write anything to comfort or edify you, as I have been in a very cold, dead frame of mind for a long time, and often wonder if it is always to be thus. This morning before I arose I lay for some time trying to think on spiritual things; but I was helpless, and no good thing would come to my mind; and then I began to realize that I was different from those who can do good and be good just as they wish, and that I had some of the feelings of the apostle, who said that when he would do good, evil was present with him; and the good that he would do, he could not; and so, having a little fellowship with the apostle in his feeling, was comforted. But then I began to think of his actions and sufferings for the cause of truth, and here I was far away from him; for what had I ever done to show I had any love for Jesus or his cause? Here again I realize that I have been made to walk in a way that is contrary to all that the world esteems and loves. I have associated myself with that poor, despised few who hold the truth that is everywhere spoken against, and have no desire to run after the Lo heres and Lo theres that are abroad in the world. I sometimes feel that I could give up all that I have, yea, even life itself, rather than bow to the false gods that are worshiped by the great multitudes of professors in our day; and thus while I do not feel that I have that comfortable evidence that I should like, of being born again, yet I feel that I have hope that being so different from the world I must belong somewhere; and the only place I could feel at home is among the poor and afflicted people of God. The land of Israel or Canaan was a land of hills and valleys; and so it seems that the Israel of to-day dwell in a land of hills and valleys, that are watered by the dews and rains of heaven, and not by any artificial means; and no power of man can unstop the bottles of heaven during a drought, neither have we any power to level these hills and valleys, but must dwell either on the hills or away down in the valleys. On the hills we can look over the landscape, and enjoy light and liberty; but in the valleys we may bring forth more fruit than on the hills. But, be that as it may, we know that we are dwelling in a land of hills and valleys, and that the blessed rains of heaven must come to furnish water for our thirsty souls and satisfy our thirst for the water of life, which Jesus only can give, and which we must have or die. Totally dependent, helpless creatures we are, and our total helplessness is our comfort and our hope.

I will not further weary you with my scribbling. When you speak of my letters being good, I really feel as if you could not write honestly about them.

Your unworthy brother for the truth's sake,

S.

DEAR BROTHER:—For fear you may think I do not care to write you any more, I will do what I can to remove that impression, though I feel that I have nothing to write that will be of any benefit to you. I often wish that I could see you face to face and talk with you, as it is a lame way of expressing one's thoughts on paper at best, and much more so when the heart is dry, barren and cold in spiritual things; and it does seem as wintry in my soul as does nature outside, so that it seems as if I must write dry sentences if I write at all. Yet the Lord says by the mouth of one of old, "I will give waters in the wilderness, and streams in the desert;" and if he did so of old he can do so still, and make the wilderness blossom as the rose, and make the lame man to leap as a hart. I know that nothing else but the power of God can do this, or even give the desire that it should be done. There are many times that I cannot say for certain that I even desire the spiritual manna from on high, and it just seems I do not have any life or spiritual feeling at all. Do you ever get in such a state as this? If you do, then you can understand how I spend much of my time, as far as spiritual things are concerned. I am always alive to the world and its vanities, and can take an interest in the things of the world. Does this not seem most wonderful, in the light of past experience? I can remember well when I felt if I was only delivered from my load of guilt and sin I would forever be grateful, and praise the Lord for his mercy and goodness. I can remember, too, when I would have some comforting word come to me, how I felt I could forever praise and adore the God of my salvation, and shed tears of gratitude for the hope set before me in the gospel, and how I felt in the language of the poet,

"And prisons would palaces prove,
If Jesus would dwell with me there."

But if the Lord has a purpose in leaving me to the devices of my own heart, and to coldness, and deadness, I know his purposes will all be fulfilled. He left his people of old to go after strange gods, and then brought them to their senses by fierce chastisements. While I believe that many of the Lord's dear children are not tried and afflicted as others are, yet I feel much stronger fellowship for the ones who have passed through the fires of tribulation and been led very deeply into the knowledge of the depravity of their own heart; who have had feelings and thoughts arise in their hearts, yea, and even nourished and cherished them time and again, that we would not tell to the friend of our bosom; yea, and we loathe ourselves for them, and wonder that the Lord can ever bear with us as he does. But our God is not man, that he should lie, nor the son of man, that he should repent. He changes not, therefore I am not consumed, as I would most assuredly be if he were the God represented to be by the millions of the professing world. I was reading this morning of Mary washing the dear Savior's feet with her tears, and O! I thought, how appropriate for one who is a sinner, and who feels their sins, and who has known the long-suffering of God toward them, to wash the dear Savior's feet with their tears. How little do I feel of this meekness and gratitude, and how seldom do I feel as I should toward the family of God. Yet I hope I know a very little of the truth of what Jesus said to the Pharisee on that occasion, "To whom much is forgiven, the same loveth much." What a depth in those words! These characters not only love him, but they love his honor, and will not worship other gods. I think now, as I often do when I think on the subject at all, of the three Hebrew children, and of their bold declaration to the great king, "And if not [that is, if our God will not deliver us], be it known unto thee that we will not worship nor serve the gods which thou hast set up." Is not this the feeling of the Lord's children at the present time? Amidst all the charms that the religionists of the day put forth to allure and deceive, there is a spirit in God's children that leads them to feel that even if our experience is all

GENESIS II. 17.

"FOR in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die."

Brother W. M. Freeman asks our views upon the above Scripture, and proposes the following questions: "Did they all die? If so, in what sense did Christ die for them? In what sense did he redeem them from death, hell and the grave?" Brother Freeman also asks our views upon the first and second resurrection.

Concerning the last request we would say that at present we have but little travel of mind upon it, and would ask some brother to write upon it for the benefit of brother Freeman and of us all. We have tried during the past few months to respond to many requests from brethren as best we could, but we wish to expressly disclaim having any idea that it is ours to explain all mysteries and answer all deep questions. The things that we do know seem to us to be but as the small dust in the balance, compared with the things which we do not know.

Concerning the text to which brother Freeman has called our attention, we would say in the first place that it seems to us that the best commentary upon its meaning that we know anything about is to be found in the narrative which immediately follows. Whatever the words in the text may mean, they were fulfilled to the letter. To say otherwise is to discredit the word of Jehovah, and that upon the most solemn and momentous occasion. It is sure that in the day that they did eat they did also die, as God had said. We would call attention to the fact that the literal rendering of "thou shalt surely die" is "dying, thou shalt die." This is a mode of speech in Hebrew, which intensifies the force of the idea sought to be presented. Here it signifies the absolute certainty of the word of God to our first parents. We repeat, whatever the death denounced upon them for transgression signified, it fell upon them just when God had said it should. "In the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die."

We now return again to consider our remark that the events which follow, as recorded in the narrative in Genesis, are the best exposition of what the text means. In this narrative it is shown how God fulfilled his word toward our first parents in their guilt. That which took place with them was what he had called death. Before calling attention to a few things which are named in the narrative under consideration, we would call to the remembrance of those who may read what we are writing the fact that death does not mean destruction, nor annihilation, nor a cessation of being or existence, but simply separation, or a cutting off from other things. Thus "dead to the law," "dead to sin," "dead to God," all mean separation from these things. When we say of a friend, "He is dead," we do not mean that he has ceased to exist, but that he has gone out from us, and from this world, and is separated from the things he has been at home with. In like manner the word "death" in the text means a cutting off or a separation from that which had before belonged to our first parents as sinless beings. "Thou shalt surely die," then, does not mean that they should cease to exist, but that they should cease to live the life which they had lived before. It seems to us that this much at least is plain, and that it will not be disputed by any thoughtful reader.

From something, then, our first parents were separated. In some sense they died when they partook of the forbidden fruit. Two things seem clear in our mind from the testimony of the Scriptures, and we can know no more about it than the Scriptures testify. One thing is that the penalty included what we ordinarily call death. This seems clear to us from the consideration of the fact that in the atonement which Jesus Christ made for the sins of his people he died a physical death upon the cross; and this physical death upon the cross is the very thing that in every place is declared to be the atonement, the ransom price, which was demanded, and which he must pay. Certainly Jesus was called upon to lay down no other life than that which was demanded as the proper penalty of sin. Also, from a careful reading of Romans v. 12–21, and of 1 Corinthians xv. in general, and more especially the twenty-first and twenty-second verses, we think it is plainly to be understood that what we ordinarily call death was and is at least included in the penalty, "Thou shalt surely die."

The second thing is that our first parents did not die to or become separated from a state of spirituality, because they were not created spiritual beings, but natural beings. The spiritual man in the Bible is the man who partakes of the divine nature, who is born of God, to whom is given eternal life. However high and lofty the state of man in his creation was, he was not a son of God, he was not a partaker of the divine nature, he did not possess eternal life. This is manifest; for the Savior's testimony is that they who have eternal life "shall never perish." But we need not reason about this matter at all. We have plain testimony from an inspired apostle concerning this very thing. Let us quote from 1 Corinthians xv. 45–48: "And so it is written, The first man Adam was made a living soul; the last Adam was made a quickening spirit. Howbeit that was not first which is spiritual, but that which is natural; and afterward that which is spiritual. The first man is of the earth, earthy; the second man is the Lord from heaven. As is the earthy, such are they also that are earthy: and as is the heavenly, such are they also that are heavenly." Now concerning this Scripture we desire at this time to remark only this, that it settles the question that Adam cannot be spoken of truthfully as a spiritual man in his state by creation. Whatever might have been true of him, this was not true. He was a living soul, not a quickening spirit; he was natural, not spiritual; he was of the earthy, not of the heavenly; and such are all his descendants. If any man is now spiritual he is so through Christ, the quickening spirit.

Many questions may arise concerning this matter, and many questions which are not answered in the Bible, and such questions we cannot undertake to answer. The above, however, is plain Bible testimony, and settles once for all that upon which it treats, viz., the fact that man was not created spiritual, but natural. Therefore we are compelled to conclude that Adam did not die to a spiritual existence, since it is evident that he could not forfeit a life which he had not possessed.

These two things, then, seem to us plain: first, that what we ordinarily speak of as death was included in the penalty of the transgression; and second, that Adam did not die what is commonly called a spiritual death.

But we said a little ago that it seemed to us that the best explanation of what the God of the creation meant by the words, "In the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die," is to be found in the narrative of what actually followed the transgression. Let us briefly turn to this narrative. We find in it, first, that man was pronounced very good, as was all the creation which God had made. We find further that God talked with Adam, and had other dealings with him.—See Gen. ii. 19. We further find that God gave Adam a law, a commandment, and announced to him a penalty for the violation or transgression of that law. Adam then occupied such a place in creation, and such a relation to God, and was so made, that he had converse with the God who had made him. Still further, a home was assigned him in the "garden eastward in Eden," that he should dress and till it; and in this garden grew no briers nor thorns. It is plain scriptural testimony that we thus present. This was the happy estate of our first parents.

But by transgression this was lost. Sin entered the world, and by reason of sin they were driven out from all that was involved in their former blessed estate. It seems to us that this was the death denounced against our first parents in the transgression. It included the sentence, "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return," or temporal death (Gen. iii. 19); and it included also banishment from their former happy estate, with all that was included in it. At once they were driven out of the garden, out from the presence of God, and out from the peace and joy which had been theirs. In the day that they did eat, in that day they also died. Sin always produces death. Death or separation from all that is good and just and holy and happy always follows sin. A man cannot sin and live. "Thou shalt surely die." Sin must separate between man and all goodness and God. The flaming sword of eternal truth and righteousness turns every way against sin and the sinner. This is death. Still further, God announces that as the inevitable result, the man thus dead, thus separated from God, shall return to the dust. As he is dead to God, so shall he also die temporally. As in mind and heart and soul and will and affections he is dead, so shall also the body die. Is not this the testimony which God himself gave to the meaning of the sentence, "In the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die?" Is it not to be driven out from the garden in Eden (Gen. iii. 24), and also to return to the dust from whence he is taken?—Gen. iii. 19.

If anything more or less than this is meant in the curse we have not yet seen it. Thus far the Scriptures speak, as it seems to us. If they speak still further we have not been given to see it, and we must not reason beyond what we have seen in the Scriptures. To do so would be for us but speculation. It is not the province of any man to inquire into the origin of evil. At the very threshold of such an inquiry we are checked by the fact that we have no light beyond. The Scriptures do not guide us one step beyond the fact that "by one man's transgression sin entered into the world, and death by sin." Believers to their sorrow and shame find this to be true; and as they find this to be true they feel the need of a remedy. In the gospel is this remedy revealed; and it is ours to preach the gospel. It is not part of the work of the gospel ministry to go or to seek to go one step beyond the fact that sin is in the world by one man's transgression. Sin is here. Can the sinner be saved? How should a sinner be just with God? Through Jesus Christ we are justified. These are the themes that belong to the ministry of the word. To the drowning man the question as to how he came to fall into the water is of but little concern compared with the question, How can I be saved?

Brother Freeman asks, "Did they all die?" If brother Freeman means all the elect sons and daughters of Adam, we reply unquestionably yes. If he means all the descendants of Adam, both elect and non-elect, we still respond yes. The children of God were by nature children of wrath, even as others.—Eph. ii. 3. "And such were some of you."—1 Cor. vi. 11. In the transgression all fell alike. The only reason that all do not finally perish alike is the mercy of God in election. What a blessed truth election is! Without it no one could be redeemed and saved. Why should men hate election and sovereign grace? No soul in all the universe can ever say that it has wrought him any injury. How many millions must forever testify to its praise for saving them!

Brother Freeman asks, "If they all died, in what sense did Christ die for them?" We do not know that we fully comprehend what was in brother Freeman's mind; but as the same question has in past years been presented to our own mind, we will speak of it as it was presented to us. It has seemed clear to us that Jesus did not come to keep men from dying, but to redeem the dead from death. We think it a misstatement to say that Jesus came to keep men from being lost; he came to seek and find those already lost. It was not his mission to keep men from being condemned, but to satisfy divine justice for those already condemned. Men are dead, are lost, are condemned. How can they, any of them, be saved? Jesus saves his people. How can he save his people? Must it not be by coming where they are? They are dead; therefore he must die. They are lost; therefore he must go also into the wilderness. They are condemned; therefore he must come under condemnation also. So he gave himself, the just for the unjust, the living for the dead, that we might be brought unto God and live. Because we were dead he must die. Because he lives again, and only because he lives again, can we live. "Because I live, ye shall live also."—John xiv. 19. This is in brief the substance of what we have thought upon this subject.

It seems to us that this also answers brother Freeman's third question, "In what sense did he redeem them from death, hell and the grave?" Experimentally we would say that every believer feels himself to be thus redeemed; redeemed from death, redeemed from hell, redeemed from the grave. How glorious the truth that in Jesus Christ redemption is complete! The work is done, the atonement is made, the law is magnified, justice, truth and holiness are satisfied. It is finished, and all in Jesus Christ.

JEREMIAH XVII. 10.

"I THE Lord search the heart, I try the reins, even to give every man according to his ways, and according to the fruit of his doings."

It is important that we should understand that this declaration of our God was made concerning Judah, or that division of the family of Israel which adhered to the house of David, after the ten tribes had revolted and established themselves nationally under a separate organization. The two and a half tribes which remained, although true to their allegiance to the throne of David, were guilty of disobedience to the laws of God, and charged with sins which were written with a pen of iron and with the point of a diamond. They had departed from the living God, and were charged with idolatry.

Jeremiah was sent to them with a message from that heart-searching and rein-trying God, whose people they professed to be, to announce to them the righteous judgments which were in store for them, as a punishfor their transgressions, and to declare to them that the day of reckoning was at hand, when they should be plucked up as a nation, and their inheritance discontinued; which predictions were literally fulfilled when Jerusalem was taken by the Romans and the temple service abolished.

It is worthy of observation that while God chastized the children of Israel and of Judah for their idolatry and disobedience to the covenant of works, he winked at the abominations of the Gentile world; thus clearly showing that the whole family of Israel stood in a different relation to him, as a covenant people, from that in which the heathen nations stood as merely the creatures of his creation and subjects of his power and providence. Israel were, but the Gentile nations were not, typical of the spiritual kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ; and their degeneracy, idolatry and disobedience to God, together with their propensity to conform to a popular kind of religion, and to trust in an arm of flesh, instead of trusting alone in the mighty God of Jacob, and the exemplary punishment visited on them, was evidently figurative of the waywardness of the professed disciples of Christ under the gospel dispensation, and the chastisement which God will inflict on his people when they depart from the laws and institutions of his spiritual kingdom.

The Jews nationally had to do with a God that could not be deceived with their solemn mockery and vain formalities. With their lips they drew nigh unto God, but their hearts were far from him; and when the Messiah came in the flesh, he charged them with making void the law of that covenant under which they stood, by their own traditions; and although they fasted often, prayed long, loud and publicly, disfigured their faces and stood in the market places and at the corner of the streets, to convince the world of their "ardent" piety and zeal for the Lord, and although they compassed sea and land in their missionary zeal to make converts or proselytes to their faith, yet were they denounced as a generation of vipers, a seed of evil doers, by him who searcheth the hearts and trieth the reins; and they were also challenged to show how they could escape the damnation of hell.

The church of God has been instructed by divine authority to regard those things written aforetime as written for their learning; and it becomes the children of God at this day to receive the instruction and admonition of the subject.

As the antitypical Israel of God, the church stands in a peculiar covenant relationship to God, a relationship which no other beings in heaven or on earth sustain; not in the same covenant of works which carnal Israel stood in, which was figurative and typical, but in the covenant of grace, of which all former covenants were typical.

As those institutions, laws and ceremonies which were embodied in the old covenant were enjoined exclusively on the people embraced in the covenant, and they dealt with in all cases according to the provisions of the covenant, so we may learn that christians are accountable to their covenant God for every departure from the laws and regulations of his spiritual kingdom, which is the gospel church.

According to the type, christians have found themselves under the gospel dispensation more strongly beset to depart from God as their only hope and confidence for spiritual life and prosperity, and to conform to the fashionable and popular notions of worldly religionists, than on any other points.

The present condition of antitypical Israel seems to us to present a very plain exemplification of the type. Like national Israel, the Baptists formerly stood as one family, but they have become separated; the majority of them have departed from the government of the house of our spiritual David, and have chosen the mountains of Samaria for their location; and in their alienation from the house of David they have built groves, and set up idols under every green tree and on every high mountain. The old order of Baptists, like the little remnant which remained, continue on the old apostolic platform of doctrine and practice, at least so far as to distinguish them from all other people under heaven; but still it may be that even the old order of Baptists, who are unquestionably the only people on earth that do hold the doctrine and order of the primitive church, have, like Judah, sins written with the pen of iron, and with the point of a diamond. It certainly appears to us that the true church of Christ was prefigured by Judah, unto whom this message from the Lord was directed; and if so, the admonition is peculiarly applicable to the Old School Baptists, and it becomes us to lay the weighty considerations of our text to heart. The sins charged upon Judah, some of them open and obvious to all beholders, such as their idolatrous conformity to popular religious customs, worshiping at other altars than the true altar of the Lord, and remembering their altars and their groves by the green trees upon the high hills; while other sins charged upon them were only known unto him who searcheth the heart and trieth the reins. It is a solemn consideration to the saints of the Most High, that "All things are naked and open to the eye of him with whom they have to do." And however circumspect may be our walk and conversation before men, and in the view of ourselves and of our fellow men, God cannot be deceived. The thoughts and intents of our hearts, the secrets of our reins, are always open to his view. Well did the apostle admonish the church of God, "Be not deceived; God is not mocked; whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." If we sow to the flesh, we shall of the flesh reap corruption.

In the fourth verse of this chapter it is declared that Judah should discontinue from his inheritance, and that he should serve his enemies. How terrible was the execution of this word of the Lord when Jerusalem was literally overthrown and Judah scattered abroad to serve the heathen nations of the earth; and how striking have been the examples where churches and individual christians, whose inheritance was once in the order of Christ, where they have confessed with joy and gratitude, "Our lot has fallen to us in pleasant places, and we have a goodly heritage," that by their departure from the simplicity of the gospel, by trying some experiments of their own, to enlarge their borders, to remove from them the offense of the cross, to gain the approbation of men, or to secure some temporal object, that they have been dispossessed of their standing in the order and fellowship of the church of God, and driven away from their former gospel privileges, to sit down and weep in a strange land, by the chilling streams of Babylon, where the songs of Zion are never heard.

"Cursed be the man that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arm, and whose heart departeth from the Lord; for he shall be like the heath in the desert, and shall not see when good cometh; but shall inhabit the parched places in the wilderness, a salt land and not inhabited. Blessed is the man that trusteth in the Lord, and whose hope the Lord is; for he shall be as a tree planted by the waters, and that spreadeth out her roots by the river, and shall not see when heat cometh; but her leaf shall be green; and shall not be careful in the year of drought, neither shall cease from yielding fruit." Thus speaketh God by his prophet, in our context; and he also adds, "The heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked; who can know it?" Then follow the words of our text, "I the Lord search the heart, I try the reins, even to give every man according to his ways, and according to the fruit of his doings." The Lord will judge his people, and he will rebuke and chastise them in righteousness; for as many as he loves he rebukes; and it becomes them, at his rebuke, to be zealous and repent. In his rebukes, God deals with his children according to their ways, and according to the fruit of their doings. For they who depart from him in heart or in practice, they who observe lying vanities and forsake their own mercies, shall be "As the partridge sitteth on eggs, and hatcheth them not, so he that getteth riches, and not by right, shall leave them in the midst of his days, and at his end shall be a fool." This has been fully exemplified in those who have gone out from the apostolic church, to gather converts, or fame, or money, or for any other purpose; they have not realized their expectations. We could give the names of many who within the last twenty years have been decoyed away from the standing which they once held in the fellowship of the apostles and of the apostolic church, who have been unable to hatch out their eggs. True, some of them have succeeded in hatching cockatrice's eggs, but from them they can produce no partridges; and that which is crushed breaketh out into a viper. —Isa. lix. 5. Many have been decoyed by the wily arts of the New School, and led to believe that they were going to blaze like comets, who no sooner sacrificed the fellowship and confidence of the Old School Baptists than the New School have laid them on the shelf, or, in other words, have given them to understand that they have no honorable station for them to fill; they may be tract peddlers, Sunday School teachers, or hewers of wood or drawers of water, but in their end they are fools; and painfully do they realize, if they possess one spark of grace, that they have been miserably fooled by attempting to gratify their vain ambition.

The church of God is to judge her members by the New Testament rule, according to their walk, in faith and practice, and to extend or withhold her fellowship accordingly; but the God with whom we have to do searcheth the heart and trieth the reins; and however deceitful the heart may be, he knoweth the thoughts and intents of it. It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God. Yet David desired to fall into his hands; and all the saints, who are the circumcision that worship God in the Spirit, rejoice in Christ Jesus, and have no confidence in the flesh, will say with the poet,

"Is there ambition in my heart?
Search, gracious God, and see;
And turn each cursed idol out
That dares to rival thee.

Lord, search my heart, and try my ways,
And make my soul sincere;
Then shall I stand before thy face,
And find acceptance there."

CORRESPONDING LETTERS.

The Maine Old School Baptist Conference assembled with the church of Christ at North Berwick, York Co., Maine, Aug. 30th and 31st, and Sept. 1st, 1895, to the sister associations and churches with whom she corresponds, sends greeting in the Lord.

BELOVED OF GOD:—Once more it is our privilege to address you, and to convey tidings to you of Jehovah's unfailing goodness to us. Thus far the God of Israel hath led us, and with cheerfulness we confess that not one thing hath failed of all the good things which the Lord our God hath spoken. Our hearts would join with the psalmist, saying, "I will sing of the mercies of the Lord forever: with my mouth will I make known thy faithfulness to all generations. For I have said, Mercy shall be built up forever: thy faithfulness shalt thou establish in the very heavens." As we review our own lives, sighs escape from our contrite souls over our manifest unfaithfulness here and there to our beloved God and to the cause of our dear Redeemer. But notwithstanding all our short comings, what strong consolation is afforded when the Holy Spirit presents for our contemplation the faithfulness of our God. "O Lord God of hosts, who is a strong Lord like unto thee, or to thy faithfulness round about thee?" The eternal salvation of God's elect declares that he is faithful that promised; that his counsels of old are faithfulness and truth. In the everlasting covenant, Jehovah the Father promised eternal life unto his chosen people in his dear Son. He is God, that cannot lie; therefore in the fullness of time he sent forth his Son to accomplish his will, and the pleasure of the Lord prospered in his hand. To his oath and promises he was faithful. Like himself, his word and oath are immutable. The thoughts of his heart stand fast unto all generations. "Forever, O God, thy word is settled in heaven." As God the Father hath manifested his faithfulness in sending forth his son, so the Son of God was faithful to him that appointed him."—Heb. iii. 2. In the noblest and most glorious sense we may say, "Beloved [Savior], thou doest faithfully whatsoever thou doest."—3 John 5. All that he came into this world to do was fully done. "Wherefore when he cometh into the world, he saith, Sacrifice and offering thou wouldest not, but a body hast thou prepared me. In burnt offerings and sacrifices for sin thou hast had no pleasure. Then said I, Lo, I come (in the volume of the book it is written of me) to do thy will, O God." Righteousness was the girdle of his loins, and faithfulness the girdle of his reins. Thus he went forth for the salvation of his people, traveling in the greatness of his strength, mighty to save. Look at what he was appointed of the Father to do. It may be summed up in that word of the Lord by the mouth of the prophet Daniel, "To finish transgression, and to make an end of sins, and to make reconciliation for iniquity, and to bring in everlasting righteousness." Was not the Son of God faithful to accomplish this in behalf of his people? Yes, indeed! He is our merciful and faithful High Priest in things pertaining to God, to make reconciliation for the sins of the people. In his obedience and sufferings and blood he magnified the law and made it honorable; and he is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth. He by himself purged our sins, and reconciled us unto God by his precious blood. As our faithful Surety he paid all our debts and brought us liberty. O! at what a cost he hath ransomed us from the power of the grave and redeemed us from our sins! Contemplate, beloved of God, that precious fifty-third chapter of Isaiah, and say, Was not the love and mercy and grace of God exceeding abundant and eternally glorious, that our dear Savior should willingly undertake such work and finish it to Jehovah's eternal praise? "He was faithful to him that appointed him." Nothing was slighted, nothing left unfinished. Not one jot or tittle failed. But in immortal beauty, unblameable, unreprovable and holy, without spot, or wrinkle, or blemish, he brought forth his chosen ones from sin and the curse, from Satan, death and hell, and presents them faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy. In his priesthood, and by the sacrifice of himself for our sins, he hath perfected forever them that are sanctified. "There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus." The voice of our own beloved Emmanuel says, "Thou art all fair, my love, there is no spot in thee." Contemplate also the faithfulness of the Holy Spirit in the everlasting covenant. By him the elect of God are convinced of sin, and of righteousness, and judgment. The Son of God saith, "When the Comforter is come, whom I will send unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of truth, which proceedeth from the Father, he shall testify of me." "He shall guide you into all truth: for he shall not speak of himself; but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak: and he shall shew you things to come. He shall glorify me; for he shall receive of mine, and shall shew it unto you. All things that the Father hath are mine; therefore said I, that he shall take of mine, and shew it unto you." —John xv. 26; xvi. 8–15. The communion of the Holy Ghost, so desirable, the sweet inheritance of the children of God, declares the faithfulness of the Comforter.

"How glorious Jehovah the Spirit appears
To all that in him confide;
Endeared by each personal name that he bears,
A Comforter, Witness and Guide.

His power and Godhead most fully are known
By all the election of grace,
Who to him, as one with the Father and Son,
Ascribe equal honor and praise.

He quickens the dead by the word of his grace,
He opens the eyes of the blind;
Then leads to the Savior for pardon and peace,
And blessings of every kind.

He sweetly unfolds the great mysteries of heaven,
Forbidding the sinner to fear;
Gives faith to believe all his crimes are forgiven,
And helps him to wrestle in prayer.

The blood and obedience of Christ he applies,
When Satan comes in like a flood;
And through his anointing the christian relies
On the covenant purpose of God.

And when the great day of departure shall come
From all that at present oppose,
E'en then God the Spirit shall lead us safe home
To the throne of eternal repose,"

Having traced, beloved of God, some of the features wherein the faithfulness of the one eternal God, the Father, Son and Holy Ghost is established in the very heavens, how desirable it is that we should have grace to trust in our God, and to commit the keeping of our souls to him in well doing, as unto a faithful Creator. As we are made to review the past generations, amidst the prosperity and afflictions that the Zion of God has experienced, our language surely is, "Great is thy faithfulness, O God." And in our individual experience how kind and faithful our heavenly Father has been! Though we have proved inconstant, and often it may be have in various ways denied him, "If we believe not, yet he abideth faithful: he cannot deny himself."—2 Tim. ii. 13. Having betrothed his people unto him in faithfulness (Hosea ii. 19, 20), in his faithful love he does not cast us away; his loving-kindness is not utterly taken away from us. O no! But he chasteneth us in love for all our backslidings, and he will bring us by his discipline lowly and contrite at his feet, to acknowledge that in faithfulness he hath afflicted us.

To the end of life's journey we surely shall prove
That Jehovah is faithful and rests in his love;
Having loved and redeemed us, and called us by grace,
We are blest and secure in his faithful embrace.

There's no power can ungrasp the kind hand of our God,
And thence pluck his dear saints whom he purchased with blood;
They're his loved ones, his chosen, his portion, delight;
In the Lamb they're all glorious, all fair in his sight.

We desire, dear brethren, a continuance of your correspondence, and hope to see your messengers with us at our next session, which we have appointed to be held, the Lord willing, on Friday, Saturday and Sunday before the first Monday in September, 1896.

a delusion, yet we cannot worship the gods of the world.

I think that I better not tire your patience much longer with my scribbling, as I have at least let you know that you are not forgotten by us, if that can be any pleasure to any one.

Unworthily your brother,

WOODSTOCK, Mich., Aug., 8, 1895.

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES—ESTEEMED BRETHREN:—I have a dear loving epistle that I would like to see in print, if in your judement you see fit to publish it. It was written to the church after the dear brother was baptized. He formerly lived in Canada, and has many dear, loving friends living there who will be glad to learn of his enlistment under the blood-stained banner of King and Prince Immanuel, and of his having been made to drink at the fountain, his peace like a river flowing to the great fountainhead. He was made to rejoice and sing praises to Jesus, the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world.

With great love for the dear, loving household, and the readers of our dear, old family paper, I remain as ever, I hope, Zion's friend and companion in tribulation, with Jesus as my only hope.

M. P. LEWIS.

KALAMAZOO, Mich., May 23, 1895.

DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS:—It is with a great deal of confidence that I dare to address you, one and all, as Christ's dear little flock. I can but say it from my very heart; for when I arrived among you, dear people, my very soul was made to cry out, "Lord, is this my people?" As we went into the little church-house on Friday evening and heard Elder Lines proclaim the gospel's sweet tidings, my very heart and soul cried out, saying, "Not my will, but thine be done." I longed for a home among God's little ones. As the dear Elder introduced me to a goodly number I was made to rejoice with joy unspeakable. Surely have I waited all these years patiently for the Lord's dear ones. My mind was led to the fortieth Psalm. We were so kindly entertained, and on Saturday in the afternoon we repaired to the church-house. I greatly feared that my mouth would be closed, so as to condemn me forever; but, dear people, before the Elder got through preaching all my fears were gone, and my tears almost went dry, giving praise to God in my very soul for his goodness to one so vile and so sinful, all these many years of disobedience. O! what sweet exaltation. Then these beautiful words came,

"Chained to his throne a volume lies,
With all the fates of men;
With every angel's form and size,
Drawn by the eternal pen."

Am I one of his? is the question with me. When it was announced that on Sunday there would be baptism after the morning service, I thought, Surely not me, so very unworthy of the notice of one of God's little ones. Truly it seemed too great for unworthy me. As I came out of the water these words came to my mind, "Be thou faithful to the end;" and one of the dear ones said, in taking my hand, "God bless you. How deeply you were buried." I felt that it was a heaven below my Savior to know; and meeting with the dear brethren and sisters at the Lord's table I was reminded of the words,

"How sweet and awful is the place,
With Christ within the doors,
While everlasting love displays
The choices of her store."

O may God wipe out all recollections that would trouble the little band or flock. O! be faithful in all things, and thou shalt receive a crown of life, and come off more than conquerors through him that has loved you before the world was. May we have grace given us for our day and trial. O! do remember me at the throne of grace in this far off city, that I may through grace finally be crowned in glory.

Your brother in Christ Jesus, our divine Lord and Master. I would be glad to hear from you, one and all, dear brethren and sisters.

D. D. MCALPINE.

OREGONIA, Ohio, May 15, 1895.

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES—DEAR BRETHREN:—As my time is up I will send on my remittance for the SIGNS another year, and will also write some thoughts for its readers, to relieve my mind. If God will guide my pen I will write the dear brethren and sisters of some of the way the Lord has led me along. It does seem to me that the children of God are the only enlightened people there are in the world. I love to converse with such, but many times my mouth seems closed, and I cannot, even if I try ever so hard, express my feelings. Arminians talk much about this enlightened age of the world; that the doctrine of the Old School Baptists is old fogyism, away behind the times. Although the world is given to change, God declares that he changes not. He is the same God now that he was in the days of Paul, who exclaimed, "By the grace of God I am what I am." I do believe that the world is no more enlightened upon the subject of religion than it ever was. The religion of Christ is not of the world, even as he is not of the world. I cannot ascribe praise to any other save God, who is the author and finisher of our faith. He is God, and besides him there is no Savior. But I have for the last six months been in such darkness that I have of late even doubted that there was a God. I am filled with doubts and unbelief. Can I deem myself a child? But I know of nothing to do but wait upon the Lord, and to wait for the return of my Beloved.

"Like one alone I seem to be;
O! is there anyone like me?"

Dear brethren and sisters, may you be enabled to continue to write loving epistles through our good medium of correspondence, the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, to the meek and lowly followers of the Lamb, earnestly contending for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints, not shunning to declare all the counsel of God. May we ever be found inquiring after the old paths, and following the example of our Leader, who, when he was reviled, reviled not again, but was ever ready to forgive.

Yours in love and sweet fellowship,

EFFIE M. VANHORN.

EDITORIAL NOTICES.

MINUTES.

AS THE time for the fall associations is drawing near, we wish to call the attention of our brethren to the fact that any patronage they can give us by way of printing their Minutes will be especially appreciated at present. Our long experience in the business has, we think, particularly qualified us for this work; and as it costs but a few cents to mail the manuscript to us, we hope they will remember us when they have the work ready.

APPOINTMENTS.

ELDER W. J. May will, by divine favor, preach as follows:

Mt. Sterling, Sept. 26th, at night.
Little Flock, fourth Saturday and Sunday.
Goshen and Salt River, week following, as brethren Dudley and Johnson may arrange.
Beech Creek, Friday, Oct. 4th.
Bethel, first Saturday and Sunday.
Turners, second Saturday and Sunday.
May's Lick, third Saturday and Sunday.

P. W. SAWIN.

MARRIAGES.

JUNE 12th, 1895, at the house of the bride's father, by Elder Silas H. Durand, Mr. Lawrence V. Studdiford, of South Branch, N. J., and Miss Mary Ellen Sutphin, of Stoutsburg, N. J.

AUGUST 20th, 1895, at the house of the bride's father, by the same, Mr. Casper G. Fetter and Miss Elizabeth P. Leedom, both of Southampton, Bucks Co., Pa.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

DIED—At his home, four and one-half miles northwest of Barnard, Kansas, Sept. 8th, 1895, Henry C. Tatum, aged 70 years, 9 months and 2 days.

The deceased was born in Estill Co., Ky., removed to Illinois with his parents when two years old, and later to Floyd Co., Iowa, and finally settled in Salt Creek Township, Mitchell Co., Kansas, in 1879, where he resided at the time of his death. He was married to Miss Jane Brooks on Nov. 10th, 1844, and was the father of eight children, seven of whom survive him, and were present at the time of his death. They all reside in Mitchell and Lincoln Counties, Kansas, except one daughter, Mrs. J. W. Blair, who lives in Ness City, Kansas. He leaves a wife, four sons, three daughters, four brothers and a host of friends to mourn his earthly departure. He was buried in the Saltville cemetery Sept. 9th. His death was caused by an abscess near the heart. He was resigned to die, and was conscious to the last moment. His last words were, "Rest, beyond, after." He never joined any church, but was a believer in the Predestinarian Baptist doctrine, salvation by grace, and not by works.

ASSOCIATIONAL.

THE 131st annual session of the Kehukee Primitive Baptist Association is to be held, if the Lord will, with the Kehukee Church, one mile south of Scotland Neck, Halifax Co., N. C., beginning on Saturday, October 5th, and lasting three days.

Visitors from the north should come by way of Weldon and Halifax to Scotland Neck on Friday, Oct. 4th. Those who come by the railroads from Plymouth or Kinston can reach the association in time on Saturday morning. A cordial invitation is extended to all the ministers and members of our correspondence, and to all others who may desire, to attend our meeting and take part in our worship.

S. HASSELL, Mod.
M. T. LAWRENCE, Clerk.

THE Pilgrim's Rest Association of Primitive Baptists is appointed to meet with the Gilead Church, in Miami Co., Kansas, at two o'clock p. m. on Friday before the second Saturday in October, 1895.

Those coming by rail will be met on the morning of the meeting at Gardner, a station thirty-three miles west from Kansas City, on a branch of the Santa Fe R. R. We earnestly desire as many as can to meet with us at that time, as we are few in number, an afflicted and poor people.

S. P. RAMEY.

THE fourteenth annual session of the Big Creek Association of the Regular Primitive Predestinarian Baptist faith and order will be held with the Salem Church, eighteen miles southeast of Mexia, Texas, on the Houston & Texas Central R. R., commencing on Saturday before the first Sunday in October, 1895.

Brethren and sisters, and preaching brethren especially, are invited to visit us. They will be met at Mexia, on the Houston & Texas Central R. R., on Friday before; or they will be met at Jewett, on the I. & G. N. R. R., on Friday before. If any should come to Jewett they should write to John Bishop, Farrar, Texas; or if they should come to Mexia they should write to I. R. Betts or R. O. Beene, Personville, Texas.

As there is and has been some trouble among the Baptists in Texas about the predestination of all things, we would be glad for some of our eastern brethren to visit us and see us, and find out what we believe.

JOHN BISHOP, Clerk.

THE Virginia Corresponding Meeting will be held, the Lord willing, with the New Valley Church, Loudoun Co., Va., to begin on Wednesday before the third Sunday in October (16th), 1895, and continue three days.

All friends are cordially invited to attend, especially our ministering brethren.

Trains from Washington will be met at Leesburg on Tuesday, and on the same day at Point of Rocks up to one o'clock p. m.

E. V. WHITE.

THE Salisbury Old School Baptist Association is appointed to be held with the church at Little Creek, Sussex Co., Del. to begin on Wednesday before the fourth Sunday in October (23d), 1895, and continue three days.

THE Juniata Association of Old School or Primitive Baptists will meet, if no preventing providence, with the Springfield Church, Huntingdon Co., Pa., on Wednesday after the first Sunday in October, 1895, and continue Thursday and Friday.

We extend a cordial invitation to all lovers of the truth. Those coming by railroad will come on the Central Pennsylvania to Mount Union, and there change cars for Three Springs, where they will be met on Tuesday evening. Should any one come, and no person there, inquire for Mordecai Chilcote, as he lives in the place.

AHIMAAZ MELLOTT.

THE Oconee Baptist Association is to be held this fall with the church at Rutledge, Morgan Co., Ga., and is to commence on Tuesday after the second Sunday in October, instead of Saturday before, and continue three days.

Rutledge is on the Georgia R. R., and brethren coming by rail can come either way on Monday, and can come down from Atlanta on Tuesday morning. Ministering brethren especially invited. Inquire for W. F. Streeter, Warren Ivy or Mr. Studard.

F. M. McLEROY, Mod.

TWO DAYS MEETINGS.

A TWO days' meeting is appointed to be held with the First Church of Roxbury, Delaware Co., N. Y., on the first Wednesday and Thursday in October, 1895.

WM. BALLARD, Clerk.

YEARLY MEETINGS.

THE yearly meeting is appointed to be held with the church at Indiantown, near Powellville, Wicomico Co., Md., on Wednesday and Thursday after the second Sunday in October (16th and 17th), 1895, instead of as formerly on Wednesday and Thursday after the first Sunday. The yearly meeting at Messongoes, Va., will be held at the time that has formerly been appointed for our meeting, on Wednesday and Thursday after the first Sunday in October, 1895.

We trust the friends who are interested in our welfare will not forget that we appreciate their attendance at our place of meeting, and we will welcome them at our homes.

L. A. HALL.

A YEARLY meeting is appointed to be held with the Old School Baptist Church of Columbia, Jackson Co., Mich., commencing on Saturday before the first Sunday in October, 1895.

Those coming will be met at Napoleon and Woodstock on Friday before the meeting. A cordial invitation is extended to brethren and friends to meet with us.

WM. L. BROWN, Clerk.

APPOINTMENTS.

THE Lord willing, Elder D. M. Vail, of Waverly, Pa., will preach at brother J. Banks' house, or some place near, in Beaverkill or Hardenburgh, Ulster Co., N. Y., on Saturday evening and Sunday morning, Oct. 12th and 13th, 1895.

B. L. BEEBE, Middletown, N. Y.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SON, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date. This date denotes the time at which your subscription expires; and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

PICTORIAL HISTORY

OF THE

UNITED STATES.

By James D. McCabe.

This work is no dry mass of details—no bombastic effort to inflame the national pride, but a vivid and brilliant narrative of the events of our history, from the discovery of the American Continent down to thepresent time. It gives a most interesting account of the Indians of North America, from the time of the coming of the white men. The voyages of Columbus and explorations and discoveries of the different nations of Europe are related with graphic power. Every step of our colonial history is traced with patient fidelity, and the sources of those noble and, we trust, enduring institutions, which have made our country free and great, are shown with remarkable clearness. Then follows a clear and succinct account of our great Struggle for Independence, and the establishment of the Federal Union—the events of our career from the close of the Revolution to the administration of Harrison.

The work is printed from plain, new type, on fine calendered paper, and comprised in one octavo volume of 960 pages. It is splendidly embellished with nearly 500 fine engravings, embracing battles and other historical scenes, portraits of distinguished men, views of our principal cities, &c., &c.

Bound in Fine Silk Cloth, Plain Edges, $2.00, Post-paid.

POETRY.

THE TURN OF THE YEAR.

BY ROSE TERRY COOKE.

THE days are brief, and dark, and cold,
The barren fields are brown and sere;
The world is chill, the world is old,
And speeds the flying year.

The birds and flowers are gone away,
Or sleep in mother earth's warm breast,
But I amid the storms must stay,
And toil and never rest.

Hush, heart unquiet and dismayed!
Soon shall the sun in strength return;
Why dost thou mourn? of life afraid?
Soon the black year will turn.

The darkest day precludes the light,
However man its depth bewails;
After the longest, loneliest night,
The morning never fails.

What if thy year be near its end;
If failing heart and flesh be faint;
What if thy lovers, kin and friend,
Be deaf to thy complaint?

Even as turns the faithful year
In the slow days of storm and gloom,
And Spring begins her journey here
To cause the earth to bloom;

So shall thy Sun unveil his face
And all these mists in radiance burn.
Wait but his hour; take heart of grace;
Thy year begins to turn!

CORRESPONDENCE.

STANTON, Neb., Jan. 31, 1895.

DEAR BRETHREN IN CHRIST:—I have been impressed for some time to write a few lines for the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, but a sense of my ignorance and limited education has kept me from doing so. I see those around me every day whom I have reason to believe are born of God, but are living out of duty, and are wandering off into Babylon, without a home. We have no power to change one from nature to grace; for that work is alone with God; but he may give us power to convince them of an error, and has made it our duty to encourage them to come to the fold. We believe there are some waiting for a brighter evidence, and some who feel too unworthy to come. "We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren." The world loses its charms for us; we are willing to give it up, and to bear its frowns and hatred, to be a follower of Jesus and enjoy his blessing. We can sing,

"'Tis so sweet to trust in Jesus,
Just to take him at his word;
Just to rest upon his promise,
Just to know, Thus saith the Lord."

We are willing to take up our cross, although the world may despise us. I feel that there are some at this time who have felt that love in their hearts, but are still living in the world, away from the people they love and hope to live with when the troubles of this life are over. How can you live away from them when you hear your Father calling, "Child, come home?" This is your Father's house, and these are his children, your brethren and sisters. They are waiting with open arms to receive you; they love you, and you love them. The tears I sometimes see stealing down your cheeks tell the story. Why do you stay away? You surely are not ashamed of the cross of Christ. I hear you say, "No, but I am not fit; I am too unworthy." I will just say to such,

"If you tarry till your better,
You will never come at all."

And there are those among different denominations who are not satisfied. They have been baptized by ministers of other denominations, and are satisfied with their baptism, but not with the people where they are. They believe the Primitive Baptists to be the church that Christ set up, but think they are wrong in this one matter of baptism. According to my understanding such ones have a misunderstanding of what baptism is. I was in that situation once myself, and know how to sympathize with such. It was some eighteen years ago that I was brought to see myself a sinner in the sight of God. We were holding what we called a union meeting. The country was new, and there were but two organized denominations there, the "United Brethren" and the "Winebenarians." I could not live with either of them, but thought the Missionary Baptists were the people of my choice. I felt I must be baptized. The minister told us who wanted to be baptized he would baptize us, and that we need not go into their organization if we did not want to. I asked my husband if it would hinder me from going into the Missionary church. He said it would not hinder me from going into any church except the Primitive Baptist. I thought I did not want to go to that church then. Not long after that a Missionary Baptist was sent to preach to us, and organized a church, and I went in with them. All was peace for some time. Finally trouble began to arise. Some wanted to practice things that the others did not believe in, which ended in breaking up the church. Then they sent for a Primitive Baptist, old brother Hughes, of Iowa. He came and preached the doctrine of the Primitive Baptists, and organized a church of three members. The others could not believe it was right to be baptized over. The doctrine all seemed plain and right, except that one thing. It seemed almost like death to me that I must be separated forever from the church, those whom I loved, for I had all I wanted of the Missionary Baptists. It was then I began to search the Scriptures. Christ said, "Search the Scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life; and they are they which testify of me." It seemed the more I searched the worse I got. I told the members they could not find it in the Bible where anyone was ever baptized twice. But I had to give that up, and will just refer to the nineteenth chapter of the Acts of the Apostles. Now I view baptism in quite a different light. I do not now believe that feeling satisfied has anything to do with it being right. Solomon says, "There is a way that seemeth right unto a man; but the end thereof are the ways of death."—Prov. xiv. 12. Paul was satisfied he was doing God service when on the road to Damascus to persecute the church of the living God; but while on the way he was taught differently, and finally went on his way rejoicing, and preached unto them Jesus. Now I will try to explain as clearly as I can the way I believe it to be, and if I am wrong I hope some good brother or sister will correct my mistake and teach me the way more perfectly. If it were not for this Scripture I might not attempt to write a word; but "God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty."—1 Cor. i. 27. I believe there is but one church on earth that is the true church, the church that Christ set up while here on earth. When he gave unto Peter the keys of his kingdom, he said unto him, "Upon this rock I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven."—Matt. xvi. 18, 19. There are two kingdoms spoken of, and it requires a close observer to distinguish them; one is the eternal kingdom, and the other is the kingdom here on earth. I believe it is the duty of every one, when they have been called by grace, to look for this church. One may ask, How are we to know which is the true church? I will just answer, We have Christ for our example, and the Bible for our guide. Take no man's word. Follow Christ; walk in his footsteps. If he chose the wise and learned to be his followers, let us go to them. If we find him setting up Sunday schools, temperance societies, tract societies, &c., let us go there. If not, let us follow him; go down with him into the water and be baptized, in the likeness of his burial and resurrection; identify ourselves with the church and partake of the Lord's supper. He says, "This do in remembrance of me." When Christ set up the church he set it up alone. We have no account of his organizing a Sabbath School, a temperance society, a Mission board, &c. When we see these added to the church, for the saving of souls, beware. Men will come to you in sheep's clothing, while inwardly they are ravening wolves. Ye shall know them by their fruits. I believe the church of Christ will stand as long as the world shall stand. We should study to know what the church is that is founded on the Rock.

When Christ set up the church,
He set it all alone;
He added nothing to it then;
What use have we for more?
He then declared the church would stand;
It never did decay;
He still protects it by his hand,
And is the same to-day.

I believe the church is a body of believers, independent of all other organizations, to transact the business of the kingdom or church, and to encourage and strengthen each other, and to bear one another's burdens. Christ set us a pattern. He went down into the river Jordan and was baptized; and he says, "Follow me." I have heard it said that if we take that for a pattern we must go to the river Jordan. But that is impossible. He has not put more upon us than we are able to bear. I believe he meant to show us that we must go to a flowing stream of water, and not to a "baptistry" or a cup. In order to be a proper subject we must give evidence that we are born of God. When the eunuch asked baptism of Philip, Philip said to him, "If thou believest with all thine heart, thou mayest." None were baptized by the apostles except those who gave evidence of faith and repentance. We are told that they who gladly received the word of the apostles were baptized. And the same day there were added to the church about three thousand souls. There must also be a proper administrator of the ordinance, one who is called of God and set apart by the church by ordination. No other body but the church of Christ has any right to baptize any one in the fellowship of the church. Baptism is a door into the church, and any one who comes in any other way is a thief and a robber.

Your unworthy sister in Christ,
MRS. S. R. McFARLAND.

FRAGMENTS.

I BELIEVE I can truthfully say with the prophet, "O Lord, I know that the way of man is not in himself: it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps." Yet I find myself continually trying to direct my steps, and feeling greatly disheartened and gloomy at times because I fail. It is not so much with reference to temporal things that I am so anxious to find the way in myself, and to proceed in that way. This was once my ambition and determination, to do great things for myself; but the Lord, who gave me a hope of salvation, has given me some degree of contentment with my earthly lot. But in regard to my spiritual condition I do not feel that contentment when I am not enjoying spiritual riches; I do not find myself as easily reconciled to be "poor in spirit" as to be poor in worldly things. I often try to direct my steps into the "place of broad rivers and streams" which the Lord is unto his people when they are favored to enter into "Zion, the city of our solemnities," and the holy comfort of which I have known by a blessed experience; but I have never yet succeeded. When I am not enjoying the Savior's presence I search in vain to find him. My weary, thirsty soul is unable to find the still waters of his refreshing truth, or to lie down in the green pastures of his love and grace. I often strive, or think I do, to enter in at the strait gate, and walk in the narrow way that leadeth unto life, but by no efforts of my own can I find them.

It is always with me as it was in my first experience of a hope, a surprise, a revelation. I had sought in vain to find the way of righteousness in myself. I seemed to get farther away from the Lord by everything I did, farther away from a hope of salvation, and at last I came to the end of the earth, to the end of all my earthly strength and righteousness and wisdom. In my mind I seemed to be standing still, though still longing more than ever, if possible, to be free from sin and condemnation. Then to my wonder and joy the dear Savior was revealed to me as the Way, the Truth and the Life, in the words, "Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness; for they shall be filled." From that day to this every effort of mine to come into the presence and favor of God, to remove coldness from my heart and darkness from my mind, and to enter into the joy and comfort of the Lord, has resulted only in showing me more clearly that the way of man is not in himself; it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps. Yet, if I have life, I must and will long and strive and seek until the dear Savior does appear.

GOOD hymns and spiritual songs are a great comfort to me. I think a good hymn is a poem in which scriptural truth, or some striking experience of spiritual things, or some feeling of praise, is expressed in a poetical form, and in suitable poetical language. All good writers of prose cannot write poetry, and all good poets cannot write hymns. To be able to write good poetry one must be a poet, must have a poetical feeling, a vivid imagination, and an aptness for rhythm and rhyme. To be able to write hymns one must have not only the poetic talent, but an experience of grace.

There are some poems published in Baptist papers sometimes which are really so bad as to be almost unreadable, when if the same sentiments had been expressed in plain prose it would have been good and interesting. Sometimes we come across a poem in which there is no good attention paid to rhythm, rhyme, reason or common sense; and why one wants to write such poetry, and why an editor will publish it, is more than I can see. The worst of all is to see a poem in which a warfare is carried on, a false doctrine ridiculed, or an adversary attacked, lampooned, mauled and demolished. As soon as I have read enough of such a piece of writing to know what its character is, I stop reading, and put the paper out of sight. I like to have "our papers" lying in a convenient place and in plain sight, so that any caller can look at them, if so disposed. I know they will not do any body any hurt, and may do good. But I try to be careful that lampooning articles and doggerel poety shall not be found in that pile. I am ashamed of such, as I am proud of all simple and pure expressions of true doctrine and experience, however lacking in education the writer may be. There is a dignity which belongs to sacred subjects that must be regarded. Hymns that I love I love so well that I soon come to have them in my memory as well as in my heart. Every line is precious, and when I see a line of one of those sweet hymns of Watts, Cowper, Steele, Newton, and a host of other hymn-writers, reset in some new hymn, I recognize it, and feel that it is out of place. I often notice a hymn signed by some one, occasionally one with whom I am acquainted, and sometimes one of prominence as a writer, in which lines from other well known hymns frequently occur. I have a short hymn now before me, that has been published in more than one paper, in which several lines are taken from familiar hymns, and not quoted. I wonder when I see such a thing. First, it is not honest to knowingly publish even a line of what another has written as my own. Second, it shows the poorness of the rest of the hymn by contrast; for a hymn written by one who would knowingly do so must be poor. A diamond will look well any where; but if it is set with pebbles and tin it makes them look all the poorer. Some good people, who would not do a wrong or mean thing if they knew it, will be apt to copy a line in this way without knowing that it comes from their memory. Such should submit the hymns they may write to some well informed friend before publishing.

I do not think one should never write and publish a hymn because he cannot write like the grand old poets whose sweet hymns are in our hymn books. In that case I would never be able to write one myself. Sometimes it seems good to express some strong feeling that swells my heart in this way; and I read hymns with comfort that many dear brethren and sisters have written from their hearts. What ambition prompts to write will lack spiritual power; but what comes honestly from an exercised heart, with a desire to honor God, will find a place in other exercised hearts, and will fill such hearts with the melody of a hymn of praise, though hymn-compilers should not place it in their catalogue of choicest hymns.

IN his blameless life, in his guileless speech, in reviling not when he was reviled, and threatening not when he suffered, but committing himself unto him that judgeth righteously, our dear Savior has left us an example that we should follow in his steps.—1 Peter ii. 21–23. His Spirit will lead us to follow this example, and by this test we may know whether his Spirit is controlling us on any occasion. And if we follow the flesh instead of the Spirit at any time, and so do not walk in his steps, by the effect of such disregard of his example upon us can it be known whether we have the Spirit of Christ or not. "Now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ he is none of his; but as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God." If we can turn from that holy example, and act out our carnal passions when reviled and ill-treated, and feel no condemnation for so doing, but self-complacency rather, and a willingness to defend our course, this would be strong ground for question whether we have the Spirit of Christ. "God is not mocked," and if we are his children we shall surely be visited with the rod of chastisement when we "forsake his law."—Psa. lxxxix. 30–32.

It is in his walk and conversation that Christ left us an example, not in his work of salvation. That work was all done for us, and its results are given unto us in his own good time. In a sense we did those works in him. In his death all his people died in a legal and mystical sense under the sentence of the law, and in his resurrection they were raised up together with him from under the law and from under the power of death. So the apostle says, "Our old man is crucified with him." "He that is dead is freed from sin. Now if we be dead with Christ, we believe that we shall also live with him."—Rom. vi. 6. In the communication or revelation of this blessed truth to us we are made to know in our experience the power of his resurrection and the fellowship of his sufferings, in some measure, in the same measure "being made conformable unto his death." And when that glorious moment shall come that our vile bodies shall be changed by him, that they may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, then we shall know, as we can never know here, that Jesus is "the Resurrection and the Life."

HOLMES, N. D., March 7, 1895.

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES—DEAR BRETHREN:—Inclosed please find the amount of my subscription, which is past due; and the only excuse I have to offer is that I have been from home eleven weeks, and only recently returned from a tour of almost three thousand miles. I found my family in as good health as when I left, for which I hope I am truly thankful to the Giver of every good and perfect gift. I shall ever have in grateful remembrance those of like precious faith whom it was my pleasure to meet in Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri and Illinois. I found them all earnestly contending for the faith once delivered to the saints, notwithstanding they are surrounded by the lo heres and lo theres who will deceive many, and if possible, the very elect. The Lord will not be left without witnesses. It is plainly manifest that the work of regeneration is going on silently, but in no uncertain way, and when the Lord's set time is come his children will arise and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads. It was my high privilege to hear a goodly number of the Master's servants preach the gospel of God's dear Son, all lifting up their voices, as the voice of one man, declaring that salvation is of the Lord, in demonstration of the Spirit and of power. I desire to speak particularly of that valiant soldier of the cross, Elder S. L. Dark, of Macomb, Ill., who lost his true yokefellow in the death of Elder Vanmeter. They had stood shoulder to shoulder for almost forty years, without a jarring note or a discordant sound. Although in his eighty-seventh year, and nearly blind, he yet ably defends the truth as it is in Jesus. It was my privilege to hear him preach five able and edifying discourses. May his mantle fall on some one whom the Master will bless, to the upbuilding of his church and people in their most holy faith; for the harvest truly is great, but the laborers are few. May the church be given the spirit of prayer to the Lord of the harvest to send servants into his vineyard, as that is the only way they are given, being called as was Aaron. I would be much pleased to receive a letter from any of our heavenly Father's children who have it in their hearts to write; for as cold water to a thirsty soul, so is good news from a far country. Trials and disappointments cement us together in one bundle of love, and we more fully realize that we are that "afflicted and poor people" whose only trust is in the name of the Lord. Space is pratically annihilated, for the far north, south, east and west are brought in touch, and sit down in the kingdom of heaven with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and we are made to feast at the banqueting table, with the banner of love unfurled over us. May we all grow in grace and in the knowledge of the Lord, each esteeming other better than themselves.

Unworthily yours,

B. F. BUTLER.

CIRCULAR LETTERS.

The Licking Association of Particular Baptists, in session with the church at Bethel, Shelby Co., Ky., to the several churches of which she is composed, sendeth christian love and salutation.

DEARLY BELOVED IN THE LORD:—The great Head of the church in his grace, love and mercy hath blessed us with another privilege of meeting and joining in songs of praise, adoration and thanksgiving to him who rideth upon the heavens in the help of his redeemed, and of greeting each other in love and sweet fellowship, and of speaking to each other of his great and wonderful works of compassion and mercy toward the children of men. Our first parents were driven out of Eden, that land of purity, because of sin. From that dark and dreary day their children have been wandering over the plains of earth in the pollutions of sin and corruption, where thorns and thistles have continued to grow, as evidences to them that they are sinners. While here below they have no abiding place, no city of refuge into which they by their natural powers can flee and be free from the awful consequences of sin. But, dear brethren and sisters, we fondly hope, trust and believe that you by the quickening power of the Holy Spirit have been brought into a knowledge of the awful depravity of the monster sin, and enabled by grace to behold him of whom the apostle speaks, saying, "For he hath made him to be sin for us, who knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him."—2 Cor. v. 21. Again, the same apostle says, "But of him are ye in Christ Jesus, who of God is made unto us wisdom and righteousness and sanctification and redemption."—1 Cor. i. 30. Then "he that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord." It is by faith that you have been enabled to behold him who of God is made unto you righteousness; and that God is the author and finisher of your faith; for it is the fruit of the Spirit. And love is also a fruit of the Spirit; and the redeemed love him because he first loved them. That love was made manifest when he gave himself for them, that he might redeem them from all iniquity. In the words "all iniquity" is embraced all manner of sin. But our God is the Rock. His work is perfect. For all his ways are judgment. A God of truth, and without iniquity, just and right is he. And the apostle says to the saints, "For in him dwelleth all the fullness of the Godhead bodily. And ye are complete in him, which is the head of all principality and power." Then in him dwells in heavenly unity all the attributes of Deity, and they are all united in the choice and redemption and final glorification of all the elect of God, all his chosen people. The apostle says, "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ, according as he hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before him in love." Then, dear saints, when you look back to the awful deformities and consequences of sin, and then by grace are enabled to look forward and in faith behold in Jesus all things needful for you while in your earthly pilgrimage, and to fit you for the society of the just made perfect in your future and eternal home, are you not prepared with old Jacob to say, "It is enough?" That old patriarch greatly desired to see Joseph his son; and you desire to see Jesus, the glorious Son of God, with unbeclouded eyes, arrayed in his heavenly glory, and behold with seraphic joy and delight the redeemed of every land and clime, who have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. But amidst the sorrows and gloom of earth you sometimes sing,

"O land of rest, for thee I sigh,
When will the moment come
When I shall lay my armor by
And dwell with Christ at home?"

But while you are here below there is one thing you greatly desire, and that is to be free from sin. Yet you daily realize that you are in a warfare, and you have no assurance that you will, while clothed with mortality, be able to lay your armor by. "For the flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh; and these are contrary the one to the other, so that ye cannot do the things that ye would."—Gal. v. 17. The apostle said, "There was given to me a thorn in the flesh, the messenger of Satan, to buffet me, lest I should be exalted above measure. For this thing I besought the Lord thrice, that it might depart from me. And he said unto me, My grace is sufficient for thee." Then, dear saints, while you know that in regeneration your flesh was not changed, was not made spiritual, yet you know that it was in accordance with the wisdom and purpose of your God; therefore you should glory in tribulation, knowing that tribulation worketh patience, and patience experience, and experience hope; and hope maketh not ashamed, because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost. While you know that the flesh is not born of God, not born of the Spirit, but remains the same in all the regenerated sons and daughters of the Lord most high, while they are clothed with mortality, and in it dwells no good thing, yet you rejoice to know that our glorious Lord is made to all his redeemed righteousness, and that he has given to them evidences that they are born of the Spirit, in which birth is freely given to them the fruit of the Spirit, which is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, meekness, faith, temperance, the reigning power of which causes the warfare, the flesh lusting against the Spirit. In that warfare you must go on, dear saints, while here below. But O how your hearts should pulsate with the purest love and gratitude to the great Head of the church for having clothed you with the armor of God, that you may be able to withstand in the evil day. Many evil days, many hours of sorrow, are yours on account of sin, while you sojourn here below. But you have the blessed assurance that you will be brought off conquerors, and more than conquerors, through him that loved you and gave himself for you, that he might redeem you from all iniquity. In that redemption is secured to you throughout a never-ending eternity all the great and ineffable glories of the inheritance of the saints. All those great and wonderful bestowments are made yours, not because of works of righteousness which you have done, but because of the love and mercy of your covenant-keeping God, to whose great and wonderous name it is your joy and your chief delight while in your earthly pilgrimage to give all the glory, hoping and trusting that when you have laid your armor by your sainted voices will be attuned to the melodies of the skies, and in the sweet and unbroken anthems you will join the redeemed from all lands and climes in praise and adoration to him that sitteth on the throne, and to the Lamb forever and ever, and thus crown him Lord of all.

Now, dear brethren and sisters, farewell. Live in peace, and in the sweet fellowship of the gospel, not fearing the slanders of the children of the bond woman against you, is the sincere prayer of this Association.

The Powell's Valley Primitive Baptist Association, convened with the Big Pigeon Church, Cocke County, Tennessee, September 6th, 7th and 8th, 1895.

VERY DEAR BRETHREN:—In compliance with the order of the Association last year, we will write for your inspection a Circular Letter; and if we are guided by the all-wise God, we will be comforted together. There are none now living who aided in the constitution of this Association seventy-seven years ago, but are gone to their reward in heaven, while all those that survive them are compassed about by the same enemy our forefathers had to encounter. Trials and tribulation are appointed unto us by our God while passing along the pathway of time. Jesus says, "In the world ye shall have tribulation; but in me ye shall have peace." So tribulation and peace are both the appointment of God. There is no peace for us in the world, no comfort, no hope, nothing but trouble; but in Christ all is peace, love, joy and happiness. "My kingdom," says Christ, "is not of this world." It is the church of God, the ground and pillar of the truth, the home of the christian, where he can live and reign with Jesus, who bare all our sins in his own body on the tree, and put them away; redeemed us from all iniquity, and purified unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works. The christian is likened to a wise man that dug deep and built his house on a rock; and when the rain descended (reign of terror), and the floods came (persetion), and the winds blew (winds of doctrine), and beat upon that house, it fell not, for it was founded upon a rock. That house is the christian's hope. Dig into the doctrine of unlimited predestination, unconditional, personal and eternal election of all the saints of God. Dig deep into the sovereignty of God, who controls all things, men and devils, according to his own will and purpose. Build your house (hope) on this doctrine, on this rock, and it cannot fall. That rock is Christ. This doctrine has been tried in fire, at the stake, in prisons, in banishments, and is today advocated by God's true ministers, who are suffering the persecution and scorn of the world. The world hates election, predestination and sovereignty of God. The world does not believe the doctrine of the Bible, and Jesus tells us the reason. He says, "Ye believe not, because ye are not of my sheep. My sheep hear my voice, and they follow me;

THE MINISTRY OF RECONCILIATION.

WHEN convenient will you give your views through the SIGNS upon the following Scriptures in the fifth and sixth chapters of 2 Corinthians? In the eighteenth verse of the fifth chapter as to the ministry of reconciliation. In the twentieth verse as to "ambassadors," and "we pray you in Christ's stead." In what sense are they ambassadors? Also, in the first four verses of the sixth chapter as to the words "workers together with him," and "giving no offense in anything, that the ministry be not blamed," and as to receiving the grace of God in vain, and as to the seeming link of connection left out, where in the fourth verse the apostle turns to his afflictions.

N. TOMLINSON.

REPLY.

This request was received some time ago. We trust our brother will pardon our delay in responding. He has certainly presented a very large field. It has seemed to us so large that we have hesitated about undertaking to reply at all; but still we do not feel willing to pass the request by unnoticed. This is especially so because the subject is of great importance to be understood, both as regards what it does not involve, as well as on account of what it does. When we have shown that it does not mean what the advocates of the "means system" assert that it does, we have not half done the work. It is also incumbent upon us to try to see what it does mean.

Perhaps it may help us much in our endeavor to learn the true meaning of these Scriptures to remember first of all that it all relates, not to unregenerate men in any sense of the word, but to that relation which in the gospel exists between the ministry and the people of God. This whole epistle is addressed to the church at Corinth, and to "all the saints which are in all Achaia," as may be seen by turning to the first verse of the epistle. It is giving the children's bread to strangers to seek to apply the contents of this letter to the world. The church is not the world, and neither are saints unbelievers. When in chapter five, verse twenty, we read, "As though God did beseech you by us," and, "We pray you * * * be ye reconciled to God," the pronouns "you" and "ye" mean the church and all the saints in that region, and do not mean the world or any that are yet in unbelief; and so in the first and second verses of the sixth chapter.

If, then, ministers are ambassadors for Christ, if they have the ministry of reconciliation, if they are workers together (but not with God, for the words "with him" in the first verse of the sixth chapter are not in the original, but were placed in the text by the translators, and really change the true force of the language), it is to the saints, and for their benefit. This is borne out by the apostle when he speaks of the various orders of the ministry as gifts to the church, and in another place tells them that apostles as well as all other things are theirs.

If this shall be borne in mind, we believe much of the difficulty which spiritual minds have seen in all this Scripture will disappear. The difficulty has been this. The people of God are taught and believe that "salvation is of the Lord," that quickening from the dead is the work of God's holy Spirit, and that it is no part of the work of the ministry to appeal to the dead in sin, who are the enemies of God, to repent and believe as the conditions of a salvation which the unregenerate can never feel the need of until they are quickened from the dead, and then convicted by the power of the word and Spirit of God. This is the teaching of their own experience, as well as of the Scriptures. But this Scripture referred to by brother Tomlinson is used against the above truths, and sometimes to the distress of those who believe these truths. For this reason, we have said, to remember that all that Paul has here said relates to the work of the ministry in the church and among the saints of God, and to nothing outside of this, will remove much of the difficulty which has seemed to exist in this portion of the word. Remembering to whom the language is addressed, and for whose benefit it is written, it will be seen at once that there is nothing here out of harmony with the doctrine of salvation by grace, without any creature help whatever.

We desire now to give a brief comment upon the Scriptures to which brother Tomlinson has referred. In the limits of an editorial we must of course be brief. In chapter five, verse eighteen, Paul says that God hath reconciled us to himself by Jesus Christ, and hath given to us the ministry of reconciliation. Here is the work of Christ; he "hath reconciled us to God." Here also is the work of the servants of God. Whatever may be said of it, whatever it may include, it does not include the work which Paul declares Jesus Christ had done. He has reconciled us to God. This is no part of our work; it is entirely his. It was by his death; and by nothing less could we be reconciled. It is ours to proclaim the finished work of Christ for the hope and comfort of perishing, convicted sinners. This is all that we can do, proclaim to every sin-burdened soul the truth that Jesus by his death hath reconciled all such ones to God. This is the ministry of reconciliation. What pleasing tidings are ours! How delightful the work to proclaim salvation in Jesus' name! Ours is not the sad and unhappy duty to say to men that salvation depends upon themselves; but the joy of our ministry is to say to the praying, penitent, hopeless sinner that for him the work of reconciliation is complete in Jesus Christ. We do not reconcile or save men by our ministry. We only declare the name of him by whom reconciliation and salvation have been finished. The ministry of reconciliation (verse 18) is the same as the word of reconciliation.—Verse 19. The word is committed to us, and we minister it to those who have ears to hear.

Verse 20: "We are ambassadors for Christ." Ambassadors to the saints, not to the world. We have a message from the Lord. He has committed to us the knowledge and the ministry of eternal truth. We bring this message when we proclaim the gospel of a finished salvation. This is the office and work of an ambassador. As ambassadors we have no choice as to our message; yet we rejoice that we are sent on no errand of vengeance, but on an errand of peace. We proclaim to the trembling sinner not Sinai's thunder, but the message of the blood of sprinkling. To the church of God the message is sent; and in this message we entreat you, brethren, to be reconciled to God. You know far better than any words of ours can describe how your proud hearts revolt at the humbling doctrine of the cross. All of us want to find some good thing in ourselves. All of us want some room for glorying in self. The natural heart turns away from God. Every child of God is aware of this warfare in his own breast. He cannot do the good that he would. How often and how much are believers helped by preaching—gospel preaching, we mean. The burden of it is always, "Be ye reconciled to God." The testimony of a finished salvation comes to the heart that feels the burden of sin, and that is condemned already, with an appealing power. In such a soul, when the message is heard, arises the spirit of reconciliation to God in the salvation which he has thus made known to him. It may be said that this language of the apostle would also apply to the people of God in their afflictions and losses. This no doubt is most blessedly true in itself; but still we think the apostle was speaking of the atonement, or the reconciliation in Christ.

"Workers together with him."—2 Cor. vi. 1. As we remarked before, the expression "with him" is not in the original Greek in which this epistle was written. We do not charge the translators with any willful perversion of the word in supplying the words "with him;" but still the words are not needful to the completion of the sentence, and do change its meaning. But even though the words "with him" belonged in the text they still would not imply that man had any hand in the redemption of men from sin, death and hell. They would mean no more than the language in 1 Cor. iii. 9, where no words are supplied, and which reads as follows, "For we are laborers together with God: ye are God's husbandry, ye are God's building." The language in both places does not relate to the work accomplished by the atonement in the justification of sinners, but to the building up of the people of God in their most holy faith, and in every good word and work. In this sense the apostle is pleased to use the language, "For ye are laborers together with God." But in the text 1 Cor. vi. 1 we need not consider this, since the language without the supplied words does not imply it. It is simply, "We then, as workers together." And when in the Spirit, all who are called to labor in the church at all are given a spirit of oneness with each other in the Lord; and so, because there is a fellowship in the Spirit, there is also a fellowship in the labor.

"That ye receive not the grace of God in vain." We again insist that the theme of the apostle is not the justification and final glory of the sinner through the finished work of Jesus, but what we sometimes speak of as the present salvation. In the sense of the atonement there is no such thing as receiving the grace of God in vain; but there is such a thing as disobedience. The grace of God teaches always the denial of ungodliness and every worldly lust, and that we should live soberly, righteously and godly in this present world. If we are not found denying unrighteousness and worldly lusts, and if we do not live soberly, righteously and godly, is not this receiving the grace of God in vain, in the sense of the text? The meaning of the expression, "receive not the grace of God in vain," is further made clear by the explanatory cause in the third verse, "Giving no offense in anything." In Heb. xii. 18 there is a similar expression, "Looking diligently, lest any man fail of the grace of God." And in Hebrews the whole connection shows that the theme of the writer is the outward life of the believer. Paul speaks doubtfully of his brethren in one place, saying that he feared he had bestowed labor upon them in vain. That is, he feared that they had not heeded and treasured up his admonitions and instructions. They were not walking in the truth which they had learned. John, on the other hand, testifies, saying, "I have no greater joy than to hear that my children walk in truth." Such do not receive the grace of God in vain. Under the old covenant Israel, like a vine, had been dressed, and digged around, and enriched, and pruned; but when the Lord came to gather the grapes, behold, wild grapes. All this favor of God had resulted in no fruit. In this sense they had received the grace of God in vain. It is in this same sense, it seems to us, that we may receive the grace of God in vain to-day.

"That the ministry be not blamed." The apostle here states a fact with which all observation and experience is found to be in harmony, viz., that when disorders and evil living appear in any of the churches, one of the most common things that will be said is, What kind of a pastor have they? It seems a natural thing for the thought to arise, Surely they have had an unfaithful pastor. If false doctrine abounds in the church we are all apt to think that they have had an unsound ministry. If a careless life abounds we think the ministry must have failed to warm, reprove and rebuke. And while this is not always the case, yet it is true often enough to justify such a conclusion in general. Paul desired his brethren at Corinth to give no offense in anything, for many reasons; and the one special reason which he urges here is that he does not want his ministry, and that of others among them, to be charged with leading to a careless or improper life. The enemies of truth were ready enough to say that the doctrine of grace led to licentiousness. He would have his brethren so live that there would be no room for such a charge. How important it is for believers in the grace of God to so live in the sight of men that there shall be no room for them to say, These men believe in salvation by grace alone; therefore they believe that they can live as they list, and be finally saved. And those who are public teachers are blamed when any one goes astray, as though they were responsible for it, or at least have encouraged it by their teaching. Paul was very jealous for the credit of the ministry of the word. He loved the doctrine of a finished salvation, and he was anxious that his brethren should bring no discredit upon it.

We have not been able to see a connecting link left out here in the apostle's argument, and so we trust that brother Tomlinson will excuse us from saying anything about it. The word "approving," in verse four, is set right over against the word "blamed" in verse three; and then there logically follows all those many circumstances under which he desired his ministry to be approved.

We have thus briefly sketched some thoughts. They are incomplete and imperfect, but we trust they may in a measure satisfy the mind of our brother, and other inquiring ones.

C.

2 TIMOTHY III. 14, 15.

"BUT continue thou in the things which thou hast learned and has been assured of, knowing of whom thou hast learned them; and that from a child thou hast known the holy Scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation, through faith which is in Christ Jesus."

The great commission given to the apostles was to "Go and teach [or disciple] all nations," and the things which they were authorized to teach were clearly specified in the words of the commission, "Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded." This was the extent of authority vested by our Lord Jesus Christ even in his immediate apostles, unto whom he had given the keys of the kingdom, that what decision they should establish in all matters of faith and practice, in regard to the church of God, should be binding on earth and in heaven, so that from their decision there should be no appeal. The term disciple signifies a learner, or one who is learned and learning. A disciple of Christ is one who has learned of him, who is meek and lowly; or one who, in other words, is taught of God; for every one that has learned of the Father cometh unto Christ. None can know Christ experimentally unless they are taught of God. And God teaches or communicates this knowledge of his Son only by revelation. None can know the Son but they unto whom the Father shall reveal him. "When it pleased God, who separated me from my mother's womb, to reveal his Son in me," &c. In all the things which are taught by God to the heirs of immortality, there is an assurance given to disciples, or learners, of their eternal reality. Hence the apostle, in this case, admonishes Timothy to "Continue in the things" which he had learned, and of which things he had "been assured;" and the assurance in this case consisted in his knowledge of his divine and infallible instructor. If Timothy had learned his theory or divinity of men in the schools of men, he would have still been uncertain in regard to the reality of the things learned; for in the theological schools of men a great variety of things are taught for truth, and so heterogeneous and conflicting that they cannot any two of them be right. In such schools men are taught to be Catholics and Protestants, Arminians and Predestinarians, &c.; and as the same process of study is required in the acquisition of all sorts of humanly taught theology, a diploma from such institutions is no assurance that the learned graduate has the least particle of saving knowledge of God, of the way of salvation, or of his own state and condition in the sight of God. But the instruction Timothy had received being of God, was liable to no such uncertainty. God's word had come to him in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance.

For the sum of the things which Timothy had learned of God, he is referred to the holy Scriptures, which from a child he had known. All that God teaches his children under the gospel dispensation is contained in the holy Scriptures. He makes no new revelations, or revelation of things concerning the way of life, which are not found in the holy Scriptures by all those who have the faith that is in Christ Jesus. Hence when prophets or dreamers of dreams, or any other characters, come to us with signs and wonders declaring to us things new or old, which are not found in the holy Scriptures, we are bound to reject them, as we love God and regard the cause of truth and righteousness. And instead of running into new theories, or new religious practices, simply continue in the things which we have learned of God, and which we find divinely authorized in the holy Scriptures. It is true the christian may learn many things which are new to him, while he continues in the school of Christ; for Christ has sent the holy Comforter to take of the things of his and to shew them unto them; but in all cases, such new manifestations must and will accord with and be sustained by the holy Scriptures. And it is in this sense that we understand that the holy Scriptures are able to save us, or make us wise unto salvation, through faith that is in Christ Jesus. The Scriptures have no power to originate life in one that is dead; for it is the Spirit that quickeneth; it is God alone who can give life to the dead; but Timothy was not dead; he had passed from death unto life; and the holy Scriptures which he had known from a child were able to save him from uncertainty, speculation, and from disorder and heresy, through faith that is in Christ Jesus; for Paul had testified that this faith had dwelt in Timothy's grandmother, Louis, and in his mother, Eunice, and he was persuaded that it now dwelt also in Timothy. And while the holy Scriptures are a sealed book to all graceless persons, who are destitute of saving faith, they were, through the faith of Jesus Christ as developed in the members of Jesus Christ, able to make them wise unto salvation. Upon this very principle Paul thus exhorted Timothy (1 Tim. iv. 16), "Take heed unto thyself, and unto the doctrine; continue in them; for in doing this thou shalt both save thyself and them that hear thee." Whereas Peter affirms, "If these things be in you, and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. But he that lacketh these things is blind, and cannot see afar off, and hath forgotten that he was purged from his old sins. Wherefore the rather, brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure; for if ye do these things, ye shall never fall."—2 Peter i. 8–10. This is the assurance and the salvation of which Paul speaks in our text. Salvation in no other sense could have been applicable in the case of Timothy, for he was already "Saved, and called with an holy calling."—See 2 Tim. i. 9. Neither could Peter, speaking to his "brethren," whom he says in the first verse of the same chapter, that the brethren had already, at that time, "obtained like precious faith with us;" and in the text quoted from his epistle he speaks of their having been "purged from their old sins."

The ability of the Scriptures to make Timothy wise unto salvation, through the faith of Jesus Christ which he already possessed, is fully explained in the next succeeding verses of the chapter. "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God [not the unquickened sinner] may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." Those who have faith and confidence in God will regard the holy Scriptures, which he has inspired, as a perfect standard of faith and practice, embracing a divine warrant for every work which they are at liberty to consider good; and by their faith in the Scriptures as a perfect, thorough and complete rule, they will be saved from the delusion, idolatry and abomination of those religious practices and institutions for which there is no authority in the Scriptures. But, on the other hand, those who are destitute of the "faith that is in Christ Jesus," spoken of in our text, although they may profess the greatest respect for the Bible, will receive from it no such saving benefits. Its doctrine, ordinances, precepts, examples, reproofs, instructions in righteousness, &c., will all be to them as a dead letter, "not being mixed with faith in them." And for the lack of that faith which is in Christ Jesus, which none but regenerated persons can possibly possess, they will run greedily into the error of Balaam, go in the way of Cain, and ultimately perish in the gainsayings of Core.—Jude 11.

As Timothy had been, from a child, familiar with the holy Scriptures, and as he had been assured of their infallibility and eternal excellency, by the teaching of the Holy Ghost, "Even the Spirit of truth, whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him," he is admonished to continue in the things which he had learned. His business was not to add to them, diminish from them, nor attempt to improve them, but simply to take them as his all-sufficient guide and directory in all things pertaining to the kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

From this apostolic admonition let all Old School Baptists learn the necessity of a strict conformity to the divine rule. We cannot honor our Lord and Master by any attempt to change the things which have gone out of his mouth. If we would shew forth the praises of him who hath called us out of darkness into his marvelous light, let us learn all our doctrine, receive our reproof, our correction, and our instruction in righteousness, from the holy Scriptures; and let us continue therein, under all circumstances, and in our practice as well as our theory proclaim aloud to all mankind that we are by them thoroughly furnished unto all good works, and that we consider no religious works good, or acceptable to God, for which the Scriptures furnish no warrant. Then shall we, through faith that is in Christ Jesus, be saved from heresy, from shipwreck, from disorder, from confusion, and from dishonoring the profession which we have made before many witnesses.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y., Oct. 15, 1851.

POSTAL MONEY ORDERS.

BY a recent arrangement of the post-office department nearly every post-office in the United States is now a money order office for at least five dollars; and as it costs but three cents additional to obtain an order of not more than two dollars and fifty cents, or five cents for one not more than five dollars, or eight cents for one not more than ten dollars, and so on in proportion to amount of order, we request that all remittances be sent us by post-office money-order. You simply give the money you wish to send to your postmaster, and he will give you a money-order for that amount. You will inclose the order which he gives you in your letter to us; and if it should be lost in the mail you can get another one from your postmaster without additional charge. Please be sure to have the order made payable at Middletown, N. Y., and never at New York City, as that place is nearly a hundred miles from our place, and it puts us to considerable extra trouble and expense to get them cashed at the New York City office.

As will be seen from the above, an order for five dollars or less can be obtained cheaper than registering a letter, while an order not exceeding ten dollars costs but the same amount; and remitting by money order is a much safer way than sending by registered letter, as the postal department is not responsible for loss of registered letters, but money orders can be duplicated.

MINUTES.

AS THE time for the fall associations is drawing near, we wish to call the attention of our brethren to the fact that any patronage they can give us by way of printing their Minutes will be especially appreciated at present. Our long experience in the business has, we think, particularly qualified us for this work; and as it costs but a few cents to mail the manuscript to us, we hope they will remember us when they have the work ready.

and I give unto them eternal life, and they shall never perish." Jesus came to save his people, and he did what he came to do. He completed his work, he satisfied the law, he redeemed his bride. He redeemed her because he loved her. He loved her before the foundation of the world. He loved her with an everlasting love. His love is eternal. God did not only eternally love his church, but he blessed her with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ, according as he hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before him in love. Yet men say there was nothing to choose until after Adam was created. Whether there was anything or not, God said by Paul, that he did choose the saints at Ephesus and faithful in Christ Jesus, and that the choice was made before the foundation of the world; and so we believe, and so we preach. God made the choice for himself. He rules all things. Nothing can take place independent of him. He holds the wind in his fist. He has his way in the whirlwinds. He sits on the circle of the earth, and the inhabitants thereof are as grasshoppers. He works all things after the counsel of his own will. We are chosen in the furnace of affliction. God is not going to afflict us more than we deserve. Afflictions keep us at the feet of Jesus; they are good for us. David said, "Before I was afflicted I went astray." God is in all the dark clouds that cover us, yet we cannot realize it until the clouds are passed and the darkness is gone. Then it is that we can see the hand of the Lord in all our troubles. For he will not suffer us to be tempted above that we are able to bear, but will with the temptation make a way for our escape. He enables us to triumph in our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ over all our enemies. For in him we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins. Therefore we have in Christ all that it takes to make us holy, sinless and pure in his sight, and to stand acquitted at the bar of God in the court of heaven. Christ is made unto us wisdom, righteousness, sanctification and redemption. So there can no sin come against the child of God which Christ did not atone for. O how humble and obedient we should be in walking in his commandments. Let us love one another with a pure heart fervently.

Brethren, while we have been called to pass through trials and troubles in our pilgrimage here, Christ has been our Leader, and has brought us safe into the port of peace. Our Association is in peace, and fellowship, and christian union, and one in doctrine. To the all-wise God be all the glory and dominion, now and forever. Amen.

JAMES C. WALTON, Clerk.

The Lexington Old School Baptist Association, in session with the Gilboa Church, in Schoharie Co., N. Y., on the third Wednesday and Thursday in September, 1895, to the several churches composing the same, sends christian salutation.

DEAR BRETHREN:—Through the abounding goodness and mercy of our covenant-keeping God we are again permitted to meet in our associate capacity, for which we desire to be thankful; and as you will expect from us an epistle of love and correspondence we desire to call your attention to the epistle of James, first chapter and twenty-fifth verse. "But whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, this man shall be blessed in his deed."

The apostle evidently had understood that mercies and blessings came through obedience to the law given to national Israel; but when the light of sovereign grace revealed to him Jesus, who is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth" (Rom. x. 4), he was brought to see a perfect law of liberty assured to and experienced by every member of the body of Christ, the church; a law that was satisfied in all its demands by the Maker and Husband (see Isa. liv. 5), upon whom was laid all their transgressions, and by whose stripes they are healed.

"And continueth therein." Here we understand the apostle to exhort the character that has been brought to see and feel release, to faithfulness in the house of God, the church. No excuse is accepted by the Master, or Father. No difference is made as to what place we are called to fill. Whether we have one talent or five, all are equally necessary and important.—See 1 Cor. xii. 14–20.

"He being not a forgetful hearer." Here we are called upon to keep in memory the teachings of the Captain of our salvation, who has so mercifully forgiven us our sins and opened to our understanding his word, as we read in its sacred pages, lest we through the deceitfulness of the flesh and the vanities of the world be found turning aside and neglecting our privileges in the church, leaving our seats vacant and our voices unheard in her courts.

"But a doer of the work." God has called into his vineyard laborers, pastors and teachers, who are to take heed to themselves, and to all the flock over the which the Holy Ghost has made them overseers, to feed them with the sincere milk of the word—the truth. They are not to cry peace and safety when God has not spoken it, or daub with untempered mortar, but to rightly divide the word, giving to each their portion of meat in due season; saying to the righteous that it shall be well, but woe to the wicked, for they shall receive the reward of their doings. Nor are they permitted to lord it over God's heritage, but as servants of the church to admonish, to comfort, to encourage the weak and feeble, to seek and search after the scattered ones of the flock, ever mindful that we are rewarded not for doing, but in doing. The children well know by experience what a joy and satisfaction there is in walking in their heavenly Father's commands, how they are fed and comforted in reading his word, mingling with the Father's family, and conversing one with another. No language can express the comfort felt in doing the will of the Captain of our salvation. Dear brethren, let us be mindful of the admonition, and try to keep in memory the order and ordinances of the house of God, each content with our lot and station, striving for the unity and fellowship of the brotherhood, praying that brotherly love may continue.

CORRESPONDING LETTERS.

The Licking Association of Particular Baptists, now in session with Bethel Church, Shelby Co., Ky., Sept. 13th, 14th and 15th, 1895, to the several associations with which we correspond, sends greeting.

GOD in his infinite mercy and unchanging purpose has spared us, and enabled us to meet once more in an associated capacity. Our meeting has been crowned with peace and harmony, all desiring to ascribe praise and dominion to Jesus, the Prince of peace; ascribing majesty unto him that loved us and washed us from our sins in his own blood, while the hosts of antichrist are striving to keep abreast with the improvements of the age. How cheering and how pleasant for the Lord's portion to follow Jesus in the perfect pattern as shown on the day of Pentecost. Then they all heard in their own tongue the wonderful works of God; and they were controlled and moved by the blessed Spirit; and there is no worship that is acceptable to God, and never will be as long as time lasts, except as the Spirit actuates; for they that worship Almighty God must worship him in spirit and in truth.

By the coming of your messengers and messages of love we have been refreshed, and feel to take courage, and press on toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus. We desire a continuance of your messages and christian correspondence. The ministering brethren have been enabled to bring forth things new and old, and to preach Jesus as the ever new and living way. We can indeed say, "I sat down under his shadow with great delight, and his fruit was sweet to my taste."

Our next Association will be held, the Lord willing, with the church at Mount Carmel, Clark Co., Ky., commencing on Friday before the second Saturday in September, 1896, when and where we hope to meet your messengers and receive your tokens of love.

B. FARMER, Mod.
J. T. McCOUN, Clerk.
J. W. WALLIS, Ass't Clerk.

The Powell's Valley Association of Primitive Baptists, now in session with the Big Pigeon Church, Cocke County Tennessee, on Friday before the first Saturday in September, 1895, and two following days, to the Associations with whom we correspond, sendeth greeting.

VERY DEAR BRETHREN:—We have been blest again with the privilege of meeting together in an associated capacity, to hear from the Zion of our God. We were glad to hear from you, and to meet with some of your messengers, and to learn that we are all in peace among ourselves. May the great Head of the church still preserve peace and harmony among us. We desire in the future, as in the past, to keep up a christian correspondence with you. Our next Association will be held (the Lord willing) with the Hance's Creek Church, Bell County, Kentucky, eight miles east of Roost, on the L. & N. Rail Road, to commence on Friday before the first Saturday in September, 1896, where and when we hope to meet with some of you. Brethren, pray for us. We have chosen our beloved brethren whose names you will see in our Minutes to bear this our epistle of love to you, whom we hope you will receive to sit with you in council. May the grace of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ be with you, is our prayer.

The Lexington Old School Baptist Association, in session with the Gilboa Church, Schoharie Co., N. Y., Sept. 18th and 19th, 1895, to the associations with whom we correspond, sends greeting.

DEARLY BELOVED BRETHREN:—Through the tender mercies of our God we are spared as an Association, and he has brought us once more together, we hope, to worship him. We are glad to receive your messengers and Minutes, and pray that the Lord may bless them, and make them feel that their coming is not in vain. We have had a goodly attendance, and we think we see unmistakable signs of love, peace and sweet fellowship among us. There have been six added by baptism, and some that had wandered away have been restored, so that our hearts have been made to rejoice.

Our next session is appointed with the Second Church of Roxbury, in Delaware Co., N. Y., on the third Wednesday, and Thursday following, in September, 1896, where we hope to receive your messengers.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

DIED—Sept. 14th, 1895, Mrs. L. C. Bogart, wife of Wm. L. Bogart, of Tustin, Orange Co., Cal., aged 42 years and 7 days.

The deceased was the daughter of J. C. and Mary S. Ham, of Missouri. She leaves a family of ten children and a husband to mourn, together with a large circle of friends; but they mourn not as those who have no hope, for they feel assured that their loss is her eternal gain. She had never made a public profession of her faith in Christ, but her daily walk and conduct in life was that of one of God's little ones, a babe in Christ.

The writer of this addressed a large number of the relatives and friends at the residence of the deceased; after which the remains were laid to rest in the cemetery, there to await the morning of the resurrection. "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord." Amen.

A. H. HAGANS.

TUSTIN, Cal., Sept. 16, 1895.

DIED—At his home near Regency, Mills Co., Texas, Sept. 4th, 1895, J. J. Aldridge, aged 77 years, 6 months and 26 days.

He was born in Mississippi, where he was married to Mary A. Russell, October 10th, 1841. They moved to Texas about 1845. He and his wife received a hope and joined the Primitive Baptists in 1859, and were baptized by Elisha Price. His wife died April 12th, 1862. He was married to C. A. Allen on June 10th, 1863. She was baptized by M. M. Gibson about 1880, in the Primitive Baptist Church. She is still living. He leaves five sons and two daughters, all of whom are Baptists. He was sick thirty-five days with slow fever. He was anxious to go and be at rest. He was a strong believer in the Primitive Baptist doctrine.

T. R. WILCOX.

CENTER CITY, Texas, Sept. 21, 1895.

SISTER Elizabeth Gulick, of Pleasant Mills, Adams Co., Ind., was born Sept. 4th, 1828, and died Sept. 11th, 1895, aged 67 years and 7 days.

She was a native of the state of New York, and came to this state in early years with her parents (Ackers), and married Amos Gulick on Jan. 1st, 1846, who died more than ten years ago. They had seven children, four of whom still live. They are Samuel, Rosetta, Iva Ann and Amos Wilson, the last two still single. Catharine Elizabeth, Eldora and James Wilson are dead.

Sister Gulick united with the Baptists in early life, and for the last twenty-five years I have occasionally visited that section, and always found her as faithful as the circumstances of life allowed. She always manifested great love for the doctrine of salvation by grace alone.

Her funeral was perhaps the largest I ever attended. Brother J. G. Ford not receiving the telegram in time to answer, they sent for me just in time to reach the train, and I could scarcely realize that she was dead. Only two weeks previous she was at our association, and seemed to enjoy it so much. It still seems but a dream, that one so apparently vigorous in life should be with us no more. But God's ways are just with man, and I often realize that this will be the case with all. We must die; and it does not seem to disturb me so much as to how I die as to how I live.

Our sister's sickness was inflammation of the stomach and bowels, followed, it was thought, by a stroke of apoplexy. She spoke once of not getting well, but passed away without special demonstrations to her friends. The large audience was very attentive to the subject spoken upon: "Wherefore I praised the dead which are already dead, more than the living which are yet alive."—Eccl. iv. 2. May God sustain the families in their bereavement, and, if in harmony with his will, lead them to an understanding of his grace.

A. B. BREES.

SPENCERVILLE, Ohio.

DIED—At the residence of her daughter, in Frenchtown, N. J., on the evening of Sept. 14th, 1895, Mrs. Emeline Slater, in the 66th year of her age.

She was born and raised near the scene of her death, but for the past eight years resided in Marion, Ind. Her decease resulted from a complication of diseases, from which she suffered greatly the last few years of her life. In early life she joined the Methodists, continuing with them until a few years ago, when their ungodliness became so apparent to her that she forsook them entirely. She was a firm believer in the doctrine of salvation by grace alone; none other, she told the writer, could fit her case. Few opportunities were afforded her to associate with Old School Baptists, but she loved them dearly, and longed to have a name with them. A few weeks ago she undertook the journey back to her old home, hoping that the Lord would increase her bodily strength sufficiently for a time to allow her attendance at a meeting of the Kingwood Church, and of being baptized. Her strength failed rapidly, however; but she bore the disappointment meekly, believing that the Lord doeth all things well. Expressing herself as "O so tired," she fell asleep, awaking in that land of rest for which she had sighed so continually, "where the wicked cease from troubling, and the weary are at rest." "All that the Father giveth me shall come to me." "And I give unto them eternal life; and they shall never perish." "My Father, which gave them me, is greater than all; and no man is able to pluck them out of my Father's hand. I and my Father are one."

Elder Bundy conducted the funeral service, and preached comfortingly to the brethren and friends from Hebrews v. 8, 9.

Flora E. Ford, the beloved wife of Henry Ford, died at Sanford, Maine, Sept. 16th, 1895, aged 31 years and 5 months.

Some weeks before her death she gave birth to a baby girl. From the time of her confinement her health rapidly failed, until in death the Lord released her from her sufferings. On Sept. 4th the little babe was taken from this world of sorrows. During the last days of this departed one I visited her, and found in a peaceful and happy frame of mihd, as a poor, helpless sinner, she was trusting alone in the merits of the Savior, and longing for the time to come when she should be called home. It was very comforting to witness her joyousness in hope of immortality. Amidst her sufferings I spoke to her of the sufferings of the crucified One when he made atonement for our sins, and she exclaimed, "O how he must have suffered!" Several days before she died she bade her near kindred farewell, and expressed her wishes regarding her funeral. The last hours of her earthly sojourn were hours of great suffering. She has left of her near kindred her husband, mother, four sisters and one brother to mourn her departure; but our consolation is that the gracious Lord has removed her from these scenes of suffering to dwell with the saints in light, where "there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain; for the former things are passed away." At her funeral the writer preached from Phil. i. 23.

CHURCH NOTICES.

THE brethren and sisters living in the vicinity of Lindale, Smith Co., Texas, will meet in the town of Lindale at 11 a. m. on Saturday before the third Sunday in October, 1895, for the purpose of constituting a regular Old School or Predestinarian Baptist Church. Brethren and sisters generally invited.

FRANK LODEN.

ASSOCIATIONAL.

THE Delaware Association is appointed to be held with the Cow Marsh Church, commencing on Wednesday, Oct. 30th, and continuing the two following days.

Those wishing to attend and coming by rail will take the train on the Delaware R. R. Tuesday afternoon, leaving Delmar at 2:26, and Wilmington at 2:50. From Delmar get tickets to Felton; from the north to Woodside. It is desired to have some eight or ten from the northward get tickets for Hartley and Henderson, on the Maryland Branch, changing cars at Clayton. I would suggest that whatever company starts from Philadelphia and from Wilmington take this route, but they will need to take the morning Mail train. I now expect to be able to furnish orders for excursion tickets. The trains above named will be met, and all visiting friends cared for.

E. RITTENHOUSE, Pastor.

THE 131st annual session of the Kehukee Primitive Baptist Association is to be held, if the Lord will, with the Kehukee Church, one mile south of Scotland Neck, Halifax Co., N. C., beginning on Saturday, October 5th, and lasting three days.

Visitors from the north should come by way of Weldon and Halifax to Scotland Neck on Friday, Oct. 4th. Those who come by the railroads from Plymouth or Kinston can reach the association in time on Saturday morning. A cordial invitation is extended to all the ministers and members of our correspondence, and to all others who may desire, to attend our meeting and take part in our worship.

S. HASSELL, Mod.
M. T. LAWRENCE, Clerk.

THE Pilgrim's Rest Association of Primitive Baptists is appointed to meet with the Gilead Church, in Miami Co., Kansas, at two o'clock p. m. on Friday before the second Saturday in October, 1895.

Those coming by rail will be met on the morning of the meeting at Gardner, a station thirty-three miles west from Kansas City, on a branch of the Santa Fe R. R. We earnestly desire as many as can to meet with us at that time, as we are few in number, an afflicted and poor people.

S. P. RAMEY.

THE fourteenth annual session of the Big Creek Association of the Regular Primitive Predestinarian Baptist faith and order will be held with the Salem Church, eighteen miles southeast of Mexia, Texas, on the Houston & Texas Central R. R., commencing on Saturday before the first Sunday in October, 1895.

Brethren and sisters, and preaching brethren especially, are invited to visit us. They will be met at Mexia, on the Houston & Texas Central R. R., on Friday before; or they will be met at Jewett, on the I. & G. N. R. R., on Friday before. If any should come to Jewett they should write to John Bishop, Farrar, Texas; or if they should come to Mexia they should write to I. R. Betts or R. O. Beene, Personville, Texas.

As there is and has been some trouble among the Baptists in Texas about the predestination of all things, we would be glad for some of our eastern brethren to visit us and see us, and find out what we believe.

JOHN BISHOP, Clerk.

THE Virginia Corresponding Meeting will be held, the Lord willing, with the New Valley Church, Loudoun Co., Va., to begin on Wednesday before the third Sunday in October (16th), 1895, and continue three days.

All friends are cordially invited to attend, especially our ministering brethren. Trains from Washington will be met at Leesburg on Tuesday, and on the same day at Point of Rocks up to one o'clock p. m.

E. V. WHITE.

THE Salisbury Old School Baptist Association is appointed to be held with the church at Little Creek, Sussex Co., Del. to begin on Wednesday before the fourth Sunday in October (23d), 1895, and continue three days.

THE Juniata Association of Old School or Primitive Baptists will meet, if no preventing providence, with the Springfield Church, Huntingdon Co., Pa., on Wednesday after the first Sunday in October, 1895, and continue Thursday and Friday.

We extend a cordial invitation to all lovers of the truth. Those coming by railroad will come on the Central Pennsylvania to Mount Union, and there change cars for Three Springs, where they will be met on Tuesday evening. Should any one come, and no person there, inquire for Mordecai Chilcote, as he lives in the place.

AHIMAAZ MELLOTT.

THE Oconee Baptist Association is to be held this fall with the church at Rutledge, Morgan Co., Ga., and is to commence on Tuesday after the second Sunday in October, instead of Saturday before, and continue three days.

Rutledge is on the Georgia R. R., and brethren coming by rail can come either way on Monday, and can come down from Atlanta on Tuesday morning. Ministering brethren especially invited. Inquire for W. F. Streeter, Warren Ivy or Mr. Studard.

F. M. McLEROY, Mod.

YEARLY MEETINGS.

THE yearly meeting is appointed to be held with the church at Indiantown, near Powellville, Wicomico Co., Md., on Wednesday and Thursday after the second Sunday in October (16th and 17th), 1895, instead of as formerly on Wednesday and Thursday after the first Sunday. The yearly meeting at Messongoes, Va., will be held at the time that has formerly been appointed for our meeting, on Wednesday and Thursday after the first Sunday in October, 1895.

We trust the friends who are interested in our welfare will not forget that we appreciate their attendance at our place of meeting, and we will welcome them at our homes.

L. A. HALL.

A YEARLY meeting is appointed to be held with the Old School Baptist Church of Columbia, Jackson Co., Mich., commencing on Saturday before the first Sunday in October, 1895.

Those coming will be met at Napoleon and Woodstock on Friday before the meeting. A cordial invitation is extended to brethren and friends to meet with us.

WM. L. BROWN, Clerk.

APPOINTMENTS.

THE Lord willing, Elder D. M. Vail, of Waverly, Pa., will preach at brother J. Banks' house, or some place near, in Beaverkill or Hardenburgh, Ulster Co., N. Y., on Saturday evening and Sunday morning, Oct. 12th and 13th, 1895.

B. L. BEEBE, Middletown, N. Y.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SON, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date. This date denotes the time at which your subscription expires; and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

PICTORIAL HISTORY

OF THE

UNITED STATES.

By James D. McCabe.

This work is no dry mass of details—no bombastic effort to inflame the national pride, but a vivid and brilliant narrative of the events of our history, from the discovery of the American Continent down to the present time. It gives a most interesting account of the Indians of North America, from the time of the coming of the white men. The voyages of Columbus and explorations and discoveries of the different nations of Europe are related with graphic power. Every step of our colonial history is traced with patient fidelity, and the sources of those noble and, we trust, enduring institutions, which have made our country free and great, are shown with remarkable clearness. Then follows a clear and succinct account of our great Struggle for Independence, and the establishment of the Federal Union—the events of our career from the close of the Revolution to the administration of Harrison.

The work is printed from plain, new type, on fine calendered paper, and comprised in one octavo volume of 960 pages. It is splendidly embellished with nearly 500 fine engravings, embracing battles and other historical scenes, portraits of distinguished men, views of our principal cities, &c., &c.

Bound in Fine Silk Cloth, Plain Edges, $2.00, Post-paid.

CORRESPONDENCE.

MEN NOT THEIR OWN SAVIORS.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS:—I send you a sermon by Augustus Toplady, M. A. It is my desire that the brethren should read it, and I have concluded to send it to you for publication. If the reading of it shall be accompanied with such a blessing to them as it has been to me, your labor will not be in vain. This precious sermon was preached about the time that Arminianism began to show its cloven foot, and has increased down to the present time. But I am glad to say that the Lord has a few witnesses left to publish and preach the same glorious truth now in the midst of a sinful and adulterous generation. May the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob bless you, and all who write for the SIGNS, is my desire.

Your unworthy brother,

THOMAS BLAKE.

WATERLOO, Iowa, March 14, 1895.

"NOT unto us, O Lord, not unto us, but unto thy name give glory, for thy mercy, and for thy truth's sake."—Psalm cxv. 1.

Some expositors have supposed that this psalm was penned by the prophet Daniel, on the occasion of the miraculous deliverance of Shadrach, Meschach and Abednego, when they came out unhurt from the burning fiery furnace, into which they had been thrown by the command of king Nebuchadnezzar. And, indeed, there are not wanting passages in the psalm itself which seem to countenance this conjecture. As where we read, at the fourth verse, speaking of idols of the heathens, and perhaps with particular reference to that golden image which Nebuchadnezzar commanded to be worshiped, "Their idols are silver and gold, the work of men's hands; they have mouths, but they speak not; eyes have they, but they see not."

I dare say that in such an auditory as this a number of Arminians are present. I fear that all our public assemblies have too many of them. Perhaps, however, even these people, idolaters as they are, may be apt to blame, and indeed with justice, the absurdity of those who worship idols of silver and gold, the work of men's hands. But let me ask, if it be so very absurd to worship the work of other men's hands, what must it be to worship the works of our own hands? Perhaps you may say, "God forbid that we should do so." Nevertheless, let me tell you that trust, confidence, reliance and dependence for salvation are all acts, and very solemn ones, too, of divine worship; and upon whatsoever you depend, whether in whole or in part, for your acceptance with God and for your justification in his sight, whatsoever you rely upon and trust in for the attainment of grace or glory, if it be anything short of God in Christ, you are an idolater to all intents and purposes.

Very different is the idea which Scripture gives us of the ever-blessed God, from that of those false gods worshiped by the heathen, and from that degrading representation of the true God which Arminianism would palm upon mankind. "Our God," says the psalm, verse the third, "is in the heavens; he hath done whatsoever he hath pleased." This is not the Arminian idea of God; for the free-willers and chance-mongers tell us that God does not do whatsoever he pleases; and that there are a great number of things which God wishes to do, and tugs and strives to do, but yet cannot bring them to pass. They tell us, as one ingeniously expresses it,

"That all mankind he fain would save,
But longs for what he cannot have;
Industrious thus to sound abroad
A disappointed, changing God."

How does this comport with that majestic description, "Our God is in the heavens!" He sits upon the throne, weighing out and dispensing the fates of men, holding all events in his own hand, and guiding every link of every chain of second causes, from the beginning to the end of time. Our God is in the heavens, possessed of all power; and, which is the natural consequence of that, "he hath done whatsoever he hath pleased;" for, as the apostle expresses it (the words are different, but the sense is the same) "he worketh all things after the counsel of his own will." Therefore it is that we both labor and suffer reproach, even because we say (and the utmost we can say upon the subject amounts to no more than this) that our God is in heaven, and has done whatsoever pleased him. And, do according to his own sovereign pleasure he will, to the end of the chapter, though all the Arminians upon the earth were to endeavor to defeat the divine intention and to clog the wheels of divine government. He that sits in heaven laughs them to scorn, and brings his own purposes to pass, sometimes even through the means of those very incidents which evil men endeavor to throw in his way, with a mad view to disappoint him of his purpose. "All things," saith the psalmist, "serve the." They have all a direct tendency to carry on his unalterable designs of providence and grace. * * * *

I remember a saying of the great Monsieur Du Moulin, in his admirable book, entitled, "Anatome Arminianism," viz., "That the wicked, no less than the elect, accomplish the wise, holy and just decrees of God; but with this difference, God's own people, after they are converted, are led to do his will from a principle of love; whereas they who are left to the perverseness of their own hearts, these persons who cared not for God, nor is God in all their thoughts, resemble men rowing in a boat, who make toward the very place on which they turn their backs. They turn their backs on the decree of God, and yet make toward that very point without knowing it."

One great contest between the religion of Arminius and the religion of Jesus Christ is, who shall stand entitled to the praise and glory of a sinner's salvation? Conversion decides this point at once; for I think that without imputation of uncharitableness I may venture to say that every truly awakened person, at least when he is under the shining of God's countenance upon his soul, will fall down upon his knees, with this hymn of praise ascending from his heart, "Not unto me, O Lord, not unto me, but unto thy name give the glory. I am saved, not for my righteousness, but for thy mercy and thy truth's sake." This, moreover, holds true even as to the blessings of the life that now is. It is God that sets up one and puts down another. Victory, for instance, when contending princes rage war, is all of God. The race is not to the swift, as swift; nor the battle to the strong, as such. It is the decree, the will, the power, the providence of God, which effectually, though sometimes invisibly, order and dispose of every event.

At the famous battle of Agincourt, in France, where, if I mistake not, 80,000 French were totally defeated by about 9,000 English, under the command of King Henry V., after the great business of the day was over, and God had given that renowned prince the victory, he ordered the foregoing psalm, that is the 114th, and part of this psalm whence I have read you the passage now under consideration, to be sung in the field of battle, by way of acknowledging that all success, and all blessings of what kind soever, come down from the Father of lights. Some of our historians acquaint us that when the triumphant English came to these words which I have taken for my text, the whole victorious army fell down upon their knees, as one man, in the field of conquests, and shouted with one heart and with one voice, "Not unto us, O Lord, not unto us, but to thy name give glory, for thy mercy, and for thy truth's sake." And thus it will be when God has accomplished the number of his elect, and completely gathered in the fullness of his redeemed kingdom. What do you think your song will be when you get to heaven? "Blessed be God that he gave me free-will; and blessed be my own dear self that I made good use of it?" O! no, no. Such a song as that was never heard in heaven yet, nor ever will while God is God and heaven is heaven. Look into the book of Revelation, and there you will find the employ of the blessed, and the strains which they sing. They "cast their crowns before the throne, saying, Thou art worthy, for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood, out of every kindred and tongue and people and nation." There is discriminating grace for you! "Thou hast redeemed us out of every kindred," &c.; that is, from among the rest of mankind. Is not this particular election and limited redemption? The church below may be liable to err; and if any visible church on earth pretends to be infallible, the very pretension itself demonstrates that she is not so. But there is a church which I will venture to say is infallible. And what church is that? The church of the glorified, who shine as stars at God's right hand; and upon the infallible testimony of that infallible church, a testimony recorded in the infallible pages of inspiration, I will venture to assert that not one grain of Arminianism ever attended a saint into heaven. If those of God's people who are in the bonds of that iniquity are not explicitly converted from it while they live and converse among men, yet do they leave it all behind them in Jordan, in the river of death, when they go through. They may be compared to Paul, when he went from Jerusalem to Damascus, and the grace of God struck him down; he fell a free-willer, but he rose a free-gracer. So, however, the rust of self-righteous pride (and a cursed rust it is; may God's Spirit file it off from all our souls), however, I say, that rust may adhere to us at present, yet when we come to stand before the throne and before the Lamb it will be all done away, and we shall sing in one full, everlasting chorus, with elect angels and elect men, "Not unto us, O Lord, not unto us." And why should we not sing that song now? Why should not we endeavor, under the influence of the Spirit, to anticipate the language of the skies, and be as heavenly as we can before we get to heaven? Why should we contemn that song upon earth which we hope ever to sing before the throne of God above? It is to me really astonishing that the Protestants and "Church of England" men, considered merely as rational creatures, and as people of common sense, who profess to be acquainted with the Scriptures, and to acknowledge the power of God, should have any objection to singing this song, "Not unto us, O Lord, not unto us, but unto thy name give glory, for thy mercy, and for thy truth's sake." Still more wonderful and deplorable it is that some who even make profession of spiritual religion, and talk of an inward work of God upon their hearts, should so far lose sight of humility and truth as to dream either that their own arm helped the Almighty to save them, or at least that their own arm was able to have hindered him from saving them. What can reflect deeper dishonor upon God than such an idea? And what can have a more direct tendency to engender and to nourish that pride of heart which deceiveth men?

It pleased God to deliver me from the Arminian snare before I was quite eighteen. Antecedently to that period there was not (with the lowest self-abasement I confess it) a more haughty and violent free-willer within the compass of the four seas. One instance of my warm and bitter zeal occurs just now to my memory. About a twelvemonth before the divine goodness gave me eyes to discern and a heart to embrace the truth, I was haranguing one day in company (for I deemed myself able to cope with all the predestinarians in the world) on the universality of grace, and the powers of human free-agency. A good old gentleman, now with God, rose from his chair, and coming to mine, held me by one of my coat buttons, while he mildly addressed me to this effect: "My dear sir, there are some marks of spirituality in your conversation, though tinged with an unhappy mixture of pride and self-righteousness. You have been speaking largely in favor of free-will; but from arguments let us come to experience. Do let me ask you one question. How was it with you when the Lord laid hold on you in effectual calling? Had you a hand in obtaining that grace? Nay, would you not have resisted and baffled it if God's Spirit had left you in the hand of your own counsel?" I felt the conclusiveness of these simple but forcible interrogations more strongly than I was then willing to acknowledge. But, blessed be God, I have since been able to acknowledge the freeness and omnipotence of his grace times without number, and to sing, what I trust will be my continual song when time shall be no more, "Not unto me, O Lord, not unto me, but unto thy name, give all the glory."

We never know so much of heaven in our own souls, nor stand so high upon the mount of communion with God, as when his Spirit, breathing in our hearts, makes us lie low at the footstool of sovereign grace, and inspires us with this cry, "O God, be mine the comfort of salvation, but thine the entire praise of it!"

Let us briefly apply the rule and compass of God's word to the several parts of which salvation is composed, and we shall soon perceive that the whole building is made up of grace, and of grace alone. Do you ask in what sense I here take the word grace? I mean by that important term the voluntary, sovereign and gratuitous bounty of God, quite unconditional by, and quite irrespective of, all and every shadow of human worthiness, whether antecedent, concomitant or subsequent. This is precisely the scriptural idea of grace, to wit, that "it [salvation in all its branches] is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth; but of God, who sheweth mercy." Thus it is that grace reigneth unto the eternal life of sinners, through the righteousness of Jesus Christ our Lord.

1. In canvassing this momentous truth, let us begin where God himself began, namely, with election. To whom are we indebted for that first of all spiritual blessings? Pride says, "To me." Self-righteousness says, "To me." Man's unconverted will says, "To me." But faith joins with God's word in saying, "Not unto us, O Lord, not unto us, but to thy name, be the whole glory of thy electing love ascribed. Thou didst not choose us on supposition of our first choosing thee; but through the victorious operation of thy mighty Spirit we choose thee for our portion and our God in consequence of thy having first and freely chosen us to be thy people." Hear the testimony of that apostle who received the finishings of his spiritual education in the third heavens. "There is a remnant," says he, "according to the election of grace. And if by grace, then is it no more of works; otherwise grace is no more grace. But if it [election] be of works, then it is no more of grace; otherwise work is no more work." Let us sift this reasoning, and we shall find it invincible. There is a "remnant," some of fallen mankind, who shall be everlastingly saved through Christ. This remnant is according to election. God's own will and choice are the determinate rule by which the saved remnant is measured and numbered. This election is an election of "grace," or the free, sovereign and unmerited act of God. The apostle would not leave out the word "grace," lest people should imagine that God elected them on account of something he saw in them above others. "Well, but," some may say, "admitting election to be by grace, might not our foreseen good works have had a little hand in the matter? Might not God have some small regard to our future good behavior?" No, answers the apostle, none at all. If election be by "grace," of mere mercy and sovereign love, "then it is no more of works," whether directly or indirectly, in whole or in part; "otherwise grace is no more grace." Could anything human, though ever so little, be mixed with grace, as a motive with God for showing favor to Peter, for instance, above Judas, grace would evaporate and be annihilated from that moment. For as Austin observes, "Grace ceases to be grace, unless it be totally and absolutely irrespective of anything and of everything, whether good or bad, in the objects of it." So that, as the apostle adds, were it possible for election to be "of works," then would it be "no more" an act of "grace;" but a payment instead of a gift; "otherwise work is no more work." On one hand, "work" ceases to be considered as influential on election, if election is the daughter of "grace;" and on the other hand "grace" has nothing at all to do in election, if "works" have any concern in it. Grace and conditionality are two incompatible opposites; the one totally destroys the other; and they can no more subsist together than two particles of matter can occupy the same individual portion of space at the same point of time. Which, therefore, of these contrary songs do you sing? (for all the art and labor of mankind united can never throw the two songs into one.) Are you for burning incense to yourselves, saying, "Our righteousness, and the might of our own arm, hath gotten us this spiritual wealth?" Or, with the angels and saints in light, do you lay down your brightest honors at the footstool of God's throne, with, "Not unto us, O Lord, not unto us, but to thy name give the glory, for thy loving mercy, and for thy truth's sake?"

Certainly, election is the act, not of man, but of God, founded merely upon the sovereign and gracious pleasure of his own will. It is "not of works, lest any man should boast," but solely of him who has said, "I will be merciful to whom I will be merciful, and I will have compassion on whom I will have compassion." God merits of us, not we of him; and it was his free-will, not ours, which drew the impassible line between the elect and the pretermitted.

2. God's covenant love to us in Christ is another stream flowing from the fountain of unmingled grace; and here, as in the preceding instance, every truly awakened person disclaims all title to praise, puts it away with both hands, and not only with his hands, but with his heart also, while his lips acknowledge, "Not unto us, not unto us, but to thy name give glory!"

How is it possible that either God's purposes or that his covenant concerning us can be in any respect whatsoever suspended on the will or the works of men, seeing both his purposes and his covenant were framed, fixed, not only before men existed, but before angels themselves were created, or time itself was born? All was vast eternity when grace was given us in Christ ere the world began. Well, therefore, might the apostle, in the very text where he makes the above assertion, observe that the holy calling with which God effectually converts and sanctifies his people in time, is bestowed upon us according to God's own free purpose and eternal destination.

Repentance with faith, new obedience and perseverance are not conditions of interest in the covenant of grace, for then it would have been a covenant of works; but they are consequences and tokens of covenant interest. "For the children being not yet born, neither having done any good or evil, that the purpose of God according to election [which is the standard of covenant mercy] might stand, not of works, but of him that calleth, it was said unto her, The elder shall serve the younger. As it is written, Jacob have I loved, but Esau have I hated." Now, whether you consider this passage as referring to the posterity of Jacob and Esau, or to Jacob and Esau themselves, or, which is evidently the apostle's meaning, as referring to both, the argument will still come to the same point at last, namely, that the divine counsels and determinations, in whatever view you take them, are absolutely irrespective of works, because God's immanent decrees and covenant transactions took place before the objects of them had done either good or evil. Of course, all the good that is wrought in men comes from God, as the gracious effect, not as the cause of his favor; and all the evil is subservient to promote, instead of interfering to obstruct, the accomplishments of his most holy will.

3. To whom are we indebted for the atonement of Christ, and for the redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of sins? Here, likewise, "Not unto us, O Lord, not unto us!" It was God who found a ransom. It was God who provided his own justice with a Lamb for a burnt offering. It was God who accepted the atonement at our Surety's hand, instead of ours. It is God who freely imparts the blessings of that completely finished redemption, to the comfort and everlasting restoration of all those who are enabled to trust and to glory in the cross of Christ. Against such persons divine justice has nothing to allege, and on them it has no penalty to inflict. The sword of vengeance having been already sheathed in the sinless human nature of the Son of God, becomes to them that are enabled to believe, a curtana, a sword of mercy, a sword without a point. Thanks to the reconciling mercy of God the Father, and to the bleeding grace of our Lord Jesus Christ! Human free-will and merit had nothing to do with the matter from first till last.

4. As pardon exempts us from punishment, so justification (God's acceptance of us as perfect fulfillers of the whole law) entitles us to the possession of the kingdom of heaven.

Now, the great inquiry is, whether God be indeed entitled to the whole praise of his unspeakable gift; whether we should, as justified persons, sing to the praise and glory of ourselves, or to the praise and glory of God alone. The Bible will determine this question in a moment, and show us that Father, Son and Spirit are the sole authors, and consequently should receive the entire glory of our justification.

It is God the Father who justifieth, who accepts us unto eternal life, and that freely by his grace, through the redemption which is in Christ, and through the imputation of Christ's righteousness, without works, without being moved to it by any consideration of the good works, and without being restrained from it by any consideration of the evil works, wrought by the person or persons to whom Christ's righteousness is imputed, and who are pronounced just in consequence of that imputed righteousness.

Justification is the act of God the Son, in concurrence with his Father. Paul expressly declares that he sought to be justified by Christ. Now let me ask you, Did you assist Christ in paying the price of your redemption, and in accomplishing a service of perfect obedience for your justification? If you did, you are entitled to a proportionable part of the praise; but if Christ both obeyed, died and rose again, without your assistance, it invincibly follows that you have no manner of claim to the least particle of that praise which results from the benefits acquired and secured by his obedience, death and resurrection. The benefits themselves are all your own, if he give you faith to embrace them; but the honor, the glory and the thanks you cannot arrogate to yourself, without the utmost impiety and sacrilege.

God the Holy Ghost unites in justifying the redeemed of the Lord. We are declaratively and evidentially justified by the Spirit of our God, whose condescending and endearing office it is to reveal a once broken-hearted Savior in the broken heart of a self-emptied sinner, and to shed abroad the justifying love of God in the believer's soul. Herein the adorable Spirit neither needs nor receives any assistance from the sinners he visits. His gracious influence is sovereign, free and independent. We can no more command or forbid it than that of the shining of the sun.

LEOTA, Scott Co., Ind.

DEAR BRETHREN IN THE LORD:—I venture to give a few thoughts on the condition of man in an unregenerated or unsaved state. He is represented in the Scriptures as being dead in trespasses and sins, walking according to the course of this world, fulfilling the desires of the flesh and of the mind, and by nature the children of wrath. Both Jews and Gentiles are all under sin. There is none righteous, no, not one. There is none that seeketh after God. They are all gone out of the way. They are together become unprofitable.—See Rom. iii. 10–19. "What the law saith, it saith to them that are under the law, that every mouth may be stopped, and all the world become guilty before God." If this testimony in regard to man's natural and corrupt condition be true, he must indeed be in an unsaved state, and unable either in whole or in part to extricate himself from that state of sin and bondage. Who then shall undertake for man's salvation? The Arminian says it is by terms and means. The difficulty with the Arminian world is that they place good works where they do not belong. They tell the dead sinner that he must go to work to get life or religion, while we contend that life must be before action; for action is a manifestation of life. Then the dead sinner must be made alive before he can perform good works. Jesus said, "The hour is coming, and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God; and they that hear shall live." —John v. 25. And he further said, "It is the Spirit that quickeneth, the flesh profiteth nothing." Then there is nothing short of the life or power of God that is able to quicken the dead sinner into life; and life must be before action. But says the Arminian, "We do not believe that sinners are quite so dead as the Old Baptists contend they are. We think there is a spark of life, and by accepting terms and using means, together with the aid of the preacher, they can attain to eternal life." Hear the words of Jesus, "No man can come to me, except the Father which hath sent me draw him; and I will raise him up at the last day." —John vi. 44. Hear the prophet Jeremiah, "Can the Ethiopian change his skin, or the leopard his spots? Then may ye also do good, that are accustomed to do evil."—Jer. xiii. 23. Again, we hear Solomon saying, "The preparations of the heart in man and the answer of the tongue are from the Lord." Paul says, "By grace are ye saved, through faith; and that not of yourselves; it is the gift of God; not of works, lest any man should boast. For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them." Then, dear brethren, we conclude that God had a purpose to accomplish, which was the redemption of his people from under the dominion of the law; and in due time Christ came into the world, was made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law; not to offer them life, but to redeem them, that they might receive the adoption of sons. All this was according to the eternal purpose which he purposed in Christ Jesus our Lord. God's goodness and mercy were manifested to his creatures, or children, when Jesus gave up the ghost upon the tree of the cross, dying for the sins of his people, and rising for their justification. We are saved, and called with a holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began. In the dispensation of the fullness of time he gathers together in one all those who have an inheritance through the atoning blood of Jesus. His righteousness is imputed to them, who had no righteousness of their own. "Being predestinated according to the purpose of him who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will." They are heirs of God. They are sons of God; and because of this sonship God sends forth the Spirit of his Son into their hearts, crying, Abba, Father. It is in this way the eyes of their understanding are enlightened. It is through this gracious work of the Spirit that we become identified or manifested as members of the heavenly family, and are put in possession of those peculiarities by which the heirs of promise are distinguished from all the families of the earth. For these people, and these alone, have experienced a resurrection from that death in trespasses and sins in which they were involved as violaters of God's holy law. Being thus made alive spiritually they are enabled to see and know something of the truth, holiness and justice of God and his holy law, and to feel and know something of the impurity, corruption and deep depravity of their own heart and nature, and from the principle of life within to mourn, lament and repent before God, and cry to him in the language of all the heaven-born family who have gone before, "Lord, save, or I perish." "God, be merciful to me, a sinner." Nor do they find rest or comfort until led by that same blessed Spirit to view by faith the Lord Jesus as the only medium of a sinner's acceptance with God. In seeing this they believe, and in believing they rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory. They are here enabled to make a full surrender of all they have and are into the hands of the Lord. They now love him because he first loved them. They enter his service from a principle of love and of choice, and are brought into possession experimentally of all the fruit of the Spirit. "The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance." By faith they have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ. By faith they are made to understand that the right of Christ to redeem them from sin and death was founded upon pre-existing relationship or unity with them, their near kinsman, in whom the right of redemption was secured. Hence they are led to admire and adore their blessed Redeemer, whom they receive as the Head over all things to the church, which is his body, the fullness of him that filleth all in all. They are led by the Spirit to contemplate their oneness with Christ as of vital importance. His Spirit dwells in them, his love is shed abroad in their hearts, and his righteousness presents them without spot or blemish before the throne of God. In Jesus dwelleth all the fullness of the Godhead bodily, and they are complete in him, who is the Head, from which all the body by joints and bands having nourishment ministered, and knit together, increaseth with the increase of God.—Col. ii. 19. Then, what shall separate us from the love of Christ? Shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword? Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors through him that loves us. For I am persuaded that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost, which is given unto us.

In conclusion, dear brethren, may our union to him, our love to his people and to the order of his house, appear more abundantly in our conversation and in our devotion before our brethren and before the world.

G. BEEBE'S SON—DEAR BROTHER IN A PRECIOUS HOPE:—Once more I have a desire to write a few lines to relieve my mind and tell of the many blessings that our covenant-keeping God has so richly bestowed upon his poor and afflicted people in this desolate and barren land of southern Nebraska and northern Kansas during the last few years; a portion of county where the Old School Predestinarian Baptists were never known until quite recently; where the buffalo and the red man of the forest and the broad prairie roamed uncivilized and unmolested, perhaps, until the last half century; but now it is thickly settled with a civilized population of good natural people of almost every nation, tongue and people of this world. But God's people, we

AN UNGRATEFUL, DISOBEDIENT WIFE.

SOME time ago brother Durand, writing through the SIGNS, made use of the expression that no wife ever had been so ungrateful and so disobedient as was the church, the bride of Christ, while no wife ever had so kind, patient and loving a husband as was Christ to the church. We are giving the substance, though not the exact language, as we are quoting from memory.

Since then our mind has often recurred to this expression, which at the time seemed to us very striking, and most sadly true. We desire now to enlarge a little upon this thought, and show how it is and how it has been true all along since the gospel age was ushered in. It was true of the immediate disciples of Jesus. Though for three years they walked and talked with him, and heard his gracious words, and saw his wonderful miracles, yet they were unbelieving and headstrong and doubtful and self-seeking often. One of them betrayed him, and one denied him, and all forsook him. Often the Savior chided them for their unbelief. They were the visible followers of Jesus on earth, but yet they were unbelieving and unmindful of his words. So little of his spirit did they manifest at times that they disputed which should be greatest in the kingdom of heaven. How unfit a bride were they for the meek and lowly Bridegroom! Yet they were his, and the objects of his tenderest love and care.

We shall see how ungrateful and disobedient was the bride if we recall the record of the churches of Christ as given in the Acts, in the epistles, and in the book called Revelation. There was no church free from blemish. All needed the constant word of warning and exhortation and reproof. The church at Rome was divided and disorderly with regard to meats and days, and were inclined not to receive each other because of differences upon those things. Paul therefore wrote them with reference to these things to bear with each other. The church at Corinth was divided between men, each claiming to follow Paul or Apollos or Cephas. Some of its members had gone to law with others. One had his father's wife. Some denied the resurrection. Some had prostituted their bodies to evil, forgetting that they belonged to Christ; and as a body they had entirely perverted the Lord's supper, and had conducted the administration of it after the pattern of a heathen feast. The apostle's testimony is that every one took before another his own supper, and one was hungry and another drunken. The churches of Galatia had given heed to Judaizing teachers, and had become perverted from the gospel of grace to the works of the law; and besides, a spirit of biting and devouring had grown up among them, against which they were expressly warned by the apostle Paul. Not to be too tedious, against all but one of the seven churches in Asia, addressed at the beginning of the book of Revelation, there were serious charges brought, coupled with the declaration that without repentance their visibility as churches should be lost. This is the record of the first fifty years of the history of the church of Christ. Some have thought this the golden age of the church. We have not ourself thought so. But be this as it may, the record is sad enough. It proves how perverse the people of God were in the very dawn of the gospel day. It was thus shown that men had become no better in themselves than they had ever been. As the patience and forbearance of Jehovah were shown almost without limit to Israel in former ages, so now were the patience and long-suffering of the Bridegroom shown unto his spiritual Israel.

We feel like adding, still farther, that the record of the church of God in all ages has been the same. We mean not the record of the church of Rome, the mother of harlots and abominations in the earth, nor that of her Protestant daughters, but the record of the true churches of Jesus Christ. Of none of them could it be said at any time that they were perfect. Sometimes it has been one thing and sometimes another that has been wanting; but it is sure that there never has been a church perfect in her order nor in her doctrine. When we come to consider ourselves as individual members of the church of Christ, we all must confess to our coldness and luke-warmness and barrenness and ingratitude and disobedience to the One who is altogether lovely, and who is kinder than any earthly husband ever was.

Some reflections have arisen in our mind out of these considerations. First. If our heavenly Husband and King has been and is so patient and loving and forbearing, it is sure that we ought also to exhibit the like spirit toward each other. The Lord Jesus is not only our Redeemer, but he is also our pattern in all things. If each of us feels that it is true that we are so continually erring and headstrong and disobedient that it is sure that we need the patience and forbearance of the Savior more than any one else can, then surely we shall feel that we must bear and forbear and forgive until seventy times seven, if need be. If it be asked where, with the believer, does forbearance cease to be a virtue, we answer that we have never yet been able to fix the limit. If others have found the limit they have gone farther than we. What solemn words are these which Jesus taught his disciples to pray, "Forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive those who trespass against us." Did he not mean that our forgiveness should be without limit toward each other, even as was his toward us?

How ought we to be humbled beneath a sense of all his goodness and mercifulness to our unrighteousness! We not only have not deserved the least of all his blessings, but we have positively deserved his frowns and his chastisements. What can we then do but fall at his feet and confess all our sin and unbelief, and magnify his goodness toward us? It is because he is God, and does not change, that we are not consumed.

We ought also to be very slow to declare non-fellowship against a church or a brother, lest we do so toward one of the Lord's people, or a church of his planting and watering. We have long meditated upon the fact that Paul regarded the church at Rome, and the one at Corinth, and those of Galatia, as still being churches of Christ, and worthy of his fellowship, even though the grossest disorders existed among them both in faith and practice. Paul did not once intimate any loss of fellowship or confidence in them as brethren even when he rebuked them most sharply for their folly. We recall now and then an instance in which he gave direction that certain ones should be cast one side, to the end that repentance might be given them and their backslidings healed. When Paul rebuked his brethren he did it as their brother who loved them. He would not seek to cast them off, but rather to heal the wrong. In all his writing to the church at Rome, the church at Corinth, and those in Galatia, he chided and rebuked them, but he never once intimated that if they did not mend their ways he should forsake them. In spite of all their wrong-doing he still loved them, and claimed them as his brethren.

We have long thought that it was a duty always when a brother or church goes astray to warn and to rebuke; but even though the fault should continue, it was not demanded in every case that we should cast that brother or church overboard. The expression, "Withdraw thyself from every brother that walketh disorderly," does not mean always a withdrawal of our fellowship from him, for one or two or a half-dozen offenses. If so, Paul would have at once withdrawn from the churches to whom he was writing. The word is "walketh disorderly," which means a continuance of such a course as a stated, constant thing; and neither is it every disorder that is included in this exhortation; for in the connection of these words in 2 Thessalonians it will be seen that the disorderly walk spoken of referred especially to the manner of their outward life before men. Such things as, if practiced, would bring reproach upon any man, whether a member of the church or not, were what the apostle alluded to. The apostle, while he warned and exhorted and rebuked, yet did not withdraw his fellowship from those even who had turned the Lord's supper into a drunken feast. Had he been present when they thus perverted the supper he no doubt would have withdrawn from them in the sense of refusing to partake with them in such a disorderly way.

It seems to us that forms, after all, amount to but little in such things. When we are actuated by the Spirit of Christ many things that now appear very important will appear but small, while things that now seem unimportant will appear chief. We may ourselves tithe mint, anise and cummin, and neglect the weightier matters of the law, such as judgment and mercy. We all come short of the glory of God. Instead, therefore, of biting and devouring one another, let us strive to heal each other; and if a brother refuses to be healed, let us not imagine that it is our duty to kill him straightway. Perhaps the trouble may not be so much in him as in ourself. How important to remember the mercy and long-suffering of our Head and Husband!

C.

ACTS III. 19-21.

"REPENT ye, therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord; and he shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you: whom the heavens must receive until the times of restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began."

In the context we are informed of the miraculous cure of the lame man at the gate of the temple; and all the people, including those addressed in our text, saw him walking and praising God; and they were filled with wonder and amazement, and they ran together to Peter and John, in the porch that is called Solomon's greatly wondering. And Peter discovering that the people regarded the miracle as being done by himself and John, disavowed all right to any credit, as though by their own power or holiness they had made the lame man whole. But he declared to them that the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, the God of their fathers, had glorified his Son Jesus, whom they (to whom he was preaching) had delivered up and denied before Pilate; and in doing this they had denied the holy One and the Just, and desired a murderer to be granted to them; and he charged that they had killed the Prince of life, whom God had raised from the dead, and declared that it was by the name of this crucified and risen and exalted Jesus that this lame man was made whole. He also explained to them the predestination of God in this matter, and that he had now fulfilled only what he had before shewed by the united testimony of all his prophets, in regard to the sufferings and death of Christ, and that the agency they had had in the whole matter was through ignorance on their part. And as Peter thus in the Spirit testified, and declared the sovereign power and overruling providence of God, about five thousand of his hearers were divinely convicted of the truth of his testimony, as we are told in the next chapter and fourth verse.

Having this knowledge of their condition, Peter was prepared to preach to them in the language of our text, saying, "Repent ye, therefore." The word "therefore" in the text refers to the preceding doctrine and arguments as the ground on which he founded his admonition to repent and be converted because of God's sovereignty and power, his decrees and his providence, and their ignorance and wickedness, of which they were now deeply convicted.

But of the nature of the repentance and conversion which he enjoined upon this convicted multitude it may be proper that we should speak more particularly. The word repent, in our language, according to Webster, signifies, 1st. To feel pain, sorrow or regret for something done or spoken. 2d. To express sorrow for something past. 3d. To change the mind in consequence of the inconvenience or injury done by past conduct. 4th. In regard to the Supreme Being, to change the course of providential dealings, as Gen. vi. 5, &c. In the Scriptures the term is used in a variety of senses of the word. It is sometimes applied to God, and sometimes to men; sometimes to regenerated, and sometimes to unregenerated men; sometimes in reference to spiritual, and sometimes in reference to temporal things. God's repentance that he had made man upon the earth, or of the evil that he had signified that he would bring upon Nineveh, expressed but a change of providential administration; not a sorrow or mutability of his nature, counsel or purpose; for he is not a man that he should, in that sense, repent. The repentance of Esau was a regret that he had foolishly sold his birthright, and a disposition to recant; but there was nothing in it of a spiritual or godly character; and it was so also with that of Judas. Christians who stand in church relationship together, when one has offended another, he is to turn again, repenting. And there is mention made in the Scriptures of what our theologians call evangelical repentance; this is, we are informed, the product of godly sorrow, which worketh repentance unto life, which needeth not to be repented of. This godly sorrow must proceed from a godly source; it cannot flow from an unrenewed or unquickened sinner; for however much of regret, remorse or selfish fear he may feel for or in view of the consequence of being a sinner, all his regrets and sorrow are of a worldly nature, and the Scriptures declare that they work death. But that repentance which is unto life always flows from life; and we are informed that this very Christ whom Peter and John were here preaching to the multitude, is exalted to be a Prince and a Savior, to give repentance unto Israel, and the remission of sins. The unquickened sinner, in his natural or dead state, can no more originate this repentance in himself than he can remit or forgive his own sins; for Christ is exalted to give him, if he be an Israelite in the true sense of the word, both the one and the other.

The repentance urged in our text on those convicted Jews, we understand to be the same which John the Baptist preached in the wilderness of Judea, and in the regions round about Jordan, to a people whom God had prepared, and unto whom he sent John to make them ready; which repentance signified a turning away from legal works and ceremonial rites as a ground of hope for acceptance with God, and a cordial reception of the doctrine, provisions and ordinances of the gospel. John preached to them repentance; but in what language did he preach it? "Saying unto the people, that they should believe on him that was to come," which was Christ. This was John's manner of preaching repentance to a people which God had prepared for the reception of his mission. How did they obey this preaching? We are informed, "And when they heard this, they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus;" and thus John baptized them with the baptism of repentance.

On the day of Pentecost also, Peter preached repentance to those Jews whom God by his Spirit had pricked in the heart, saying, "Repent and be baptized, every one of you, in the name of the Lord Jesus, for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." And, as in the case of John the Baptist's preaching repentance, and the Jews whom God had prepared, obeying by being baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus, so also at Pentecost, when Peter commanded those whom God had pricked in their hearts to repent and be baptized, "They that gladly received his word were baptized," and thereby obeyed the command. In these cases, as well as in the case recorded in our text, repentance evidently signified a public recognition of our Lord Jesus Christ as the Messiah which was to come, and the acknowledgement of the error of themselves and their countrymen in denying him; a coming out from Judaism, and an embracing of the gospel, as their only hope for salvation. Their repentance and their conversion had reference, not to their being quickened, for they had in all these cases given satisfactory evidence that they were quickened before they were commanded to repent and be baptized. A conversion is a change from one thing to another. Thus Peter himself, after he had become an apostle, and after he had been sifted as wheat, was converted from his error, and comforted the brethren; and thus Jesus taught his disciples, who were already regenerated, that they must be converted and become more childlike. The conversion in our subject refers to the change from Judaism to Christianity; and their repentance, an abandonment of their workmongrel notions of being justified by the deeds of the law; an acknowledgement of Christ, and a submission to his government.

"That your sins may be blotted out," &c. The gift of repentance, and the remission of sins, as we have already proved, can only come from the exalted Prince and Savior; hence we cannot regard them as resulting from anything that the creature can possibly perform. But inasmuch as both repentance and forgiveness of sins are gospel gifts, neither of them can be received under the law. The law can neither give nor accept of repentance. It is inflexible and unabating in its rigid demands on all who are under it, for perfect and perpetual obedience to all its precepts, and consigns to wrath and damnation for the least failure to do all that it requires. Sorrow and repentance can by no means satisfy its demands; it has no power to remit or forgive the offender. Hence the apostle shows that such as are prepared of God, pricked in the heart, by the quickening Spirit of God, or made to believe, as in the text under consideration, in order to receive and enjoy these gospel privileges, must come out from Judaism, and under the new covenant realize the blotting out of the handwriting of ordinances of the old covenant, and with them the blotting out of their sins. And this is only to be experienced by the regenerated, at God's appointed time, namely, "When the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord." Thus the apostle hinges the whole upon the sovereign will of God. It is not for the creature to resolve upon the time, place, manner and circumstances of this deliverance; but it depends on the sovereign God to send times of refreshing from his divine presence.

"And he shall send Jesus, who before was preached unto you." That Jesus who had been preached or set forth unto the tribes of Israel in all the types and shadows of the law, in all the predictions of the prophets, and in all that holy men of old had spoken by the Holy Ghost under the Old Testament dispensation. Jesus had also been before preached unto these Jewish converts to the Christian faith; that is, before they were commanded to repent and be converted. The Spirit of Christ was in all the prophets, as a Quickening or life-giving Spirit to all the children of God, from Abel to the time our text was spoken. And this Jesus shall God send. Not bodily, as when he came in the flesh. Although he is indeed to so descend in the clouds of heaven, in like manner as he ascended; but this will not be until the last day, when he shall come to raise the dead and to judge the world. These converts were not to wait until the last day for the blotting out of their sins, or for the experimental evidence of their being blotted out; for he, God the Father, shall send this Jesus, as the Quickening or life-giving Spirit, in every age, into every land, unto every kindred under heaven where he has elect vessels to gather in; and on all such displays of his power and grace, times of refreshing from the presence of God shall be enjoyed by the saints, and repentance and remission of sins and blotting out of the transgressions shall be dispensed and realized by the heirs of immortality.

"Whom the heavens must receive, until the times of restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of his holy prophets since the world began." The heavens must receive him as the divine Mediator and representative of all his elect; for by his own blood he enters the holiest of all; and having done and suffered all that law and justice could exact of him as the legal Surety of his people, and secured the grand design contemplated in the eternal counsel of heaven, he goes up with a shout and with the sound of a trumpet. The everlasting gates are opened, and the everlasting doors lift up their heads, and the King of glory enters in. God, by the mouth of all the prophets since the world began, has spoken of the restoration of all the heirs of glory from their captivity. They shall return, and come with singing to Zion. The honors of the law he has restored, which he took not away; but he shall, in the fullness of the dispensation of times, gather together in one all things in Christ, whether they be things in heaven or things in earth, even in him. God has spoken by the mouth of his holy prophets of the resurrection of the bodies of his saints, of the swallowing up of death in victory; and as the last enemy to be subdued is death, and that event is to be executed in the resurrection, Christ in his glorified risen body shall be retained in the heavens until the perfect accomplishment of the work of restitution shall be fulfilled; and then shall he appear with a shout, and with the voice of the Archangel, and shall be revealed in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know him not, but to be admired in all them who love his appearing. Even so come, Lord Jesus. Amen.

CIRCULAR LETTERS.

The Maine Old School Baptist Association, in session with the church in Bowdoinham, Sagadahoc Co., Maine, Sept. 6th, 7th and 8th, 1895, to the several churches of which she is composed, sends greeting in the Lord.

DEAR BRETHREN IN THE LORD:—In writing you this our annual epistle we desire to be led by that Spirit which is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart, so that our communication shall be such as shall touch the heart of every one who has been made to know the law of God, and also been made to know Christ, who is the end of the law; for only those who have been made to know the truth, which shall set us free, can rejoice in a complete Savior. "Because the carnal mind is enmity against God; for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be. So then they that are in the flesh cannot please God." If we have been made to know Christ, who is the end of the law, we have also been made to know that our carnal mind is enmity against God. "If Christ be in you, the body is dead because of sin." Once, dear brethren, we rolled sin under our tongue as a sweet morsel; but now sin has become exceeding sinful. Once we only knew of natural religion, which the world is so full of. Then we thought we were strong in ourselves, and could do something to bring God into subjection to our natural wants and wishes; but now we hope we have been made weak in ourselves, and strong in him who is the end of the law. We have been made to mind the things of the Spirit of God, and to hunger and thirst after righteousness, and to glorify God, who is our all and in all. By the law is the knowledge of sin. We feel that we are daily chastened because of sin. This gives us hope, because we are told that if we are without chastening then are we bastards, and not sons. But we find that the chastening of the Lord is not joyous, but grievous. The knowledge of this is the teaching of the Spirit of God. "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." We know, dear brethren, that sometimes we doubt that we ever have been made to know anything about that Spirit, the fruit of which is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness and temperance, or that faith that overcomes the world. But these anxious thoughts and doubts are evidences of life. When we are weak in ourselves, then are we strong in the Lord. We must become as a little child or we cannot enter the kingdom of heaven. It is when we are brought low that the Lord helps us. Our carnal nature is proud. The flesh loves its own; it does not hunger and thirst after righteousness; neither is it in harmony with God's law, nor anxious for the upbuilding of God's kingdom, nor the welfare of God's people. Satan appears as an angel of light, and would have us believe that there is no God, and that the religion of Jesus Christ is all a delusion. But God's grace is sufficient for us. While we are weak in ourselves we are strong in the Lord, and are made to rejoice that "there is no power but of God: the powers that be are ordained of God." We are made to realize, after all our trials of unbelief, that we are kept by the power of God unto salvation. He leads us in a way we knew not, and in paths we have not known; and while we know that his ways are not our ways, shall we not be glad, knowing that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose? Therefore, dear brethren, let us take courage and pray that we may be led by the Spirit of God into all truth, even that truth which shall make us free. "As many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God. "Ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear; but ye have received the Spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father. The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit that we are the children of God. And if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ." What a glorious thought, when brought home to our hearts, that nothing can separate us from God's love. We love him because he first loved us. May we be made to so love him that we may keep his commandments and walk in peace.

CORRESPONDING LETTERS.

The Mount Pleasant Association of Regular Baptists, in session with the Mount Pleasant Church, at Pleasureville, Henry Co., Ky., Sept. 6th, 7th and 8th, 1895, to the several associations and meetings with which we correspond, sends greeting in the Lord Jesus Christ.

BELOVED BRETHREN AND SISTERS IN THE LORD:—Again we address you a letter of continued love and fellowship. We have the privilege of meeting once more in an associated capacity, and of talking face to face of the welfare of the Zion of our God. The letters from the several churches all speak of peace and harmony among them; all dwelling together in unity, bowing alone to Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith, who causes all things to work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose. Your ministers proclaim the unsearchable riches of Christ and him crucified, in the fellowship of the gospel.

Dear brethren, as an Association we shall discontinue; not on account of any trouble existing in our midst, for peace and love as a mighty river flows to each, and to you, dear brethren; but on account of the weakness of some of our churches, and many brethren growing old, and unable to attend, we have by vote concluded to disband. Your visits, dear saints, and your fellowship, we still desire. You will be gladly received among us, so that we can bear each other's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ. We pray for the welfare of Zion, and that the God of all grace and love may lead, guide and direct you and us into all truth. This is our prayer for Christ's sake. Amen.

P. W. SAWIN, Mod.
E. F. RANSDELL, Clerk.

HAVING been appointed by the association to write the above letter to sister associations in correspondence with us, and have it published in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, I am also requested to have annexed the following notice:

The vote of discontinuance taken on Saturday, Sept. 7th, 1895, by the Association, not proving entirely satisfactory to the majority of the brethren and sisters, it is requested that all the churches in the above named Association take the matter under consideration at once, and report by messengers at a meeting to be held with Sulphur Fork Church, Henry Co., Ky., on the fourth Saturday and Sunday in March, 1896, for the purpose, if expedient, of again reorganizing the Association, or to make some other arrangement for worshiping together as churches.

I am your brother in christian love, and in the hope of life eternal,

E. F. RANSDELL.

The Maine Old School Baptist Association, in session with the church in Bowdoinham, Maine, Sept. 6th, 7th and 8th, 1895, to the associations and churches with which we correspond, sends greeting in the Lord.

BELOVED BRETHREN:—Our Association met at the time and place appointed, and your messengers came to us laden with the blessed gospel of Jesus Christ our Savior, and we have been made to rejoice in God our Savior. Nothing has been heard among us but Christ and him crucified, and everything has been done decently and in order.

Our next Association is appointed to be held with the church at Whitefield, Maine, to begin on Friday before the second Monday in September, 1896, when and where we hope to receive your Minutes and messengers again.

understand, are a peculiar people, a chosen generation, separate from all other people. Yes, it is said that they are the salt of the earth. That being the case they are not numerous or thickly sprinkled among the nations of the earth; but here we find one, and there another, who seem to be traveling alone through these low grounds of sin and sorrow, seldom meeting one with whom they can take comfort in telling of their joys and sorrows, trials and afflictions, while dwelling here in this tenement of clay. The religion of the world is like all other counterfeits. Its followers outstrip the religion of Jesus Christ in every particular. They claim perfection, and that too by their own works, and that they reconcile God unto themselves, bringing God under obligation to them for what they have done for him; while the poor, little child of God is made to understand that "God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself." Yes, Jesus has declared that none can come to him except the Father which sent him draw them. Worldly religionists claim that if they had not made the start they would still be sinners. The children of God claim that they are sinners saved by grace, if saved at all, and have many doubts and fears.

"Sometimes they go to meeting,
And wish they'd stayed at home;
Sometimes they find a blessing,
And then they're glad they came.

Sometimes they shun the christian
For fear he'll speak to them;
Sometimes he is the neighbor
They most desire to see."

Thus the poor child is made to hobble along, mourning over his sins and shortcomings, often afraid to claim the least of the precious promises which the dear Savior has recorded for the comfort and sweet consolation of his humble poor. Often we are made to exclaim,

"I am a stranger here below,
And what I am 'tis hard to know;
I am so vile, so prone to sin,
I fear that I'm not born again."

But Paul tells us that we are saved by hope. But hope that is seen is not hope; for what a man seeth why doth he yet hope for? If we could say, "I know that I am saved," we could then have no hope that God for Christ's sake had pardoned our sins.

But, dear brethren, I am not writing what I thought to write when I began. Worldly religionists tell us that if they believed as we do, that God for Christ's sake has pardoned our sins, they would go and take their fill of sin. Poor, deluded people! They do not know that the poor, trembling child of God has taken his fill of sin, and mourns because he cannot cease from sin, and cannot see anything but imperfections in his flesh; that sin is mixed with all he does; that it is only through the mercies of God he is blessed with the blessings he daily receives from his hand.

I wanted to speak of some of the precious seasons of rejoicing we have had here of late. The last of May I received a letter from a dear neice in Smith County, Kansas, fifty-two miles from here, who said she had not heard one of God's servants preach for over twenty years, and that if I could possibly get Elder J. H. Hammons to come, to do so, that she might have the privilege once more of hearing the gospel preached by one of God's servants. We went to see her, and Elder Hammons preached three times, much to her comfort; and in July she come to our little church and related her christian experience, desiring a home with the church, and the privilege of following her dear Savior in the ordinance of baptism, which had long been impressed upon her mind. She was received, and baptized the next day, being the fourth Sunday in July, which relieved her of a long felt duty that rested upon her. She now feels that she has entered into that rest which remains to the people of God while here in the flesh. She said she had long prayed for the time to come when she could discharge her duty, and the Lord has heard her prayers. She requested Elder Hammons to visit her again, on the third Sunday in this month, which he did; and we met many brethren from different parts of the country, some from Thayer and Nuckolls Counties, Nebraska, Washington, Republic, Jewel, Smith and Osborn Counties, Kansas. O what a feast we had, coming as we did from the east, west north and south, to sit together in heavenly places in Christ, worshiping God in spirit and in truth, having no confidence in the flesh. On Monday morning we all took our leave for home. But there was an old sister Thompson, nearly eighty years old, living four and a half miles from sister Taylor, where the meeting was, who left special word for Elder Hammons to visit her. Seven of us stopped to see her on our way home. She was an entire stranger to us all in the flesh, but she was a dear sister in the Spirit. She spoke of her old age, and how that in looking back she could not see any good thing she had ever done; that she was nothing but a poor old sinner saved by grace, if saved at all. She requested us to sing some of the songs of Zion, and that Elder Hammons engage in prayer, as it might be the last time she would ever be permitted to hear one of God's children pray. We sang three songs for her, viz: "You may sing of the beauties of mountain and dale," &c., "I know that my Redeemer lives," &c., and "Blest be the tie that binds," &c. Dear brethren, that hour seemed one of the shortest hours of our lives, believing, as we certainly do, that the presence of the Lord was with us. When we bade her farewell she wept like a fond mother bidding her dear children farewell for the last time on earth. There we surely had the cream of our comfort and joy, to meet with such a precious mother in Israel, who was so resigned to the will of God in all things. May the rich blessings of our God remain with her to comfort and strengthen her in her declining days, and all who love our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, is the prayer of one of the least of all, if a saint at all.

Your unworthy brother in the precious hope of a blessed immortality beyond the grave, through the sufferings, death and resurrection of the once humbled but now highly exalted Savior, who died for the sins of his people, and arose for their justification, and will bring them home without the loss of one.

JOSEPH BRUCE.

MARRIAGES.

SEPT. 25th, 1895, by Elder G. N. Tusing, at his residence, Mr. Zebulon Taylor and Miss Daisy Ann Schleppi, all of Franklin Co., Ohio.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

MY dear brother, Joe Lindsey, died June 16th, 1894. I feel too unworthy to write anything concerning his sickness and death. I feel to know that he was a child of God. Through all his long years of sickness there was never a murmur escaped his lips. In a letter to me, dated March 1st, 1893, he said, "You ask if my health is any better. I cannot say that it is; but I do not any more trouble myself about my infirmities, but rather look upon them as a blessing. Paul says, 'Tribulation worketh patience, and patience experience, and experience hope; and hope maketh not ashamed, because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost, which is given unto us.' Our God also declares, 'I will never leave thee nor forsake thee;' and he never will. Sooner or later 'we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ, that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad;' and woe to that one who is weighed in the balance and found wanting. 'Our God is a consuming fire.' His wrath is terrible, but his mercies are as boundless as space."

I remain, as ever, your unworthy sister,

EUNICE LINDSEY.

SCIOTO, Ohio, Sept. 24, 1895.

Sadonia H. White passed peacefully from this world of tears and of sorrow to that world where the inhabitants say no more, "I am sick," on July 4th, at her home in Moberly, Mo., aged 80 years, 4 months and 19 days.

She was a native of Bourbon Co., Ky., where she was born Feb. 14th, 1815. In December, 1833, she was married to John P. White, her maiden name being Dickerson, the daughter of John and Nancy Dickerson. She was the mother of ten children, four of whom died in infancy, and two others died in more mature life, leaving two boys and two girls to mourn their loss, together with her aged husband, who was eighty-four years old on the day of her death.

Sister White united with the Primitive Baptist Church in 1835. In the Scriptures she was well-versed, always able to give a reason for the hope within her, which reached on and on to the mansion which the Master had gone to prepare for those who love him and wait for his appearing. As a home christian she lived the life she professed. As a church member she was always in attendance upon its service when possible to be present. As a neighbor she was kind and obliging. As a friend she was true. In her departure we can truly say that a good woman has passed away.

A funeral discourse was preached by her pastor, W. A. Rothwell, from the words, "There remaineth therefore a rest to the people of God."

Mrs. Sallie A. Ensor, wife of Melville Ensor, and daughter of John H. and the late Elizabeth C. Ensor, departed this life on the morning of Sunday, Sept. 22d, 1895, aged 41 years, 3 months and 11 days.

She had been ill for three months of a complication of diseases, but finally the heart and lungs became affected, and after weeks of intense suffering she was called to her heavenly home.

We had known the deceased from girlhood intimately, and in every relation in life she was worthy of all praise. Of her it may truthfully be said, "No better woman ever lived." If she ever had an enemy her friends never knew it; and certainly she was the friend of all. Her counsel to all was for peace and kindness. The Lord began a work of grace in her heart at an early age. Her convictions were deep and abiding for a long time; but at last the Lord was pleased to appear to her in mercy, and a hope in Christ sprang up in her heart, for which she never felt that she could praise him enough. While before this she avoided speaking as much as possible, now her tongue was loosed, and she could and did speak freely of the love and joy that filled her heart. Her conviction had been deep, and now her hope was strong and clear; and it was a joy to the brethren at Black Rock to hear the expressions of faith and love that fell from her lips as they would meet and converse with her.

Sixteen years ago last August she, in company with a cousin to whom Jesus had been revealed as a Savior but a few days before, came to the church at Black Rock, and was received, and it was our privilege the next day to baptize them both in the fellowship of that church. When we say that she has been a faithful member in all the years since, we say all that can be said. In her the grace of God was magnified in the sight of all her brethren. It is good when it can be said of one of the Lord's children that they have worked out what God hath wrought within them. Of our sister this was true. The grace of God was her trust, and in her this grace was manifest; and yet she ever felt unworthy.

Nearly nine years ago she was married to Melville Ensor, who with one child survives her. During her long illness her sufferings were constant, and at times excruciating; yet they were borne with unvarying patience and submission. Ourself and wife, who was her only sister, spent the three months of her illness with her, and at times it seemed as though she could not live another day; and we who were present will never forget the words of peace, joy and assurance that fell from her lips when she as well as we thought that the end was near. We would be glad did the reasonable limits of an obituary permit to transcribe the many things that she said at different times concerning her hope in Christ, and in the way of striving to comfort her husband, father, sister, brothers and friends who were by her side. It has never been our privilege to witness a more complete evidence of the power of divine grace to give the victory over pain and over death itself than the Lord was pleased to show in her.

Her funeral was attended at Black Rock on Tuesday, the 24th, by a very large concourse of people, whose presence and whose many tears testified to their sorrow at their loss. Brother Grafton came at our request, and spoke beautifully and comfortingly to the friends concerning the trials of the people of God, and the benefit of these trials. Owing to our near relation to the deceased we did not feel that we could conduct the service, and so brother Grafton kindly came.

The husband is sorely bereaved, and how great is the loss to the motherless little girl. An aged father, one sister, brothers and many friends related more distantly will long miss her presence and her words of kindness. May God comfort all their hearts, and help them to bow submissively to his will.

CHURCH NOTICES.

THE brethren and sisters living in the vicinity of Lindale, Smith Co., Texas, will meet in the town of Lindale at 11 a. m. on Saturday before the third Sunday in October, 1895, for the purpose of constituting a regular Old School or Predestinarian Baptist Church. Brethren and sisters generally invited.

FRANK LODEN.

ASSOCIATIONAL.

THE Delaware Association is appointed to be held with the Cow Marsh Church, commencing on Wednesday, Oct. 30th, and continuing the two following days.

Those wishing to attend and coming by rail will take the train on the Delaware R. R. Tuesday afternoon, leaving Delmar at 2:26, and Wilmington at 2:50. From Delmar get tickets to Felton; from the north to Woodside. It is desired to have some eight or ten from the northward get tickets for Hartley and Henderson, on the Maryland Branch, changing cars at Clayton. I would suggest that whatever company starts from Philadelphia and from Wilmington take this route, but they will need to take the morning Mail train. I now expect to be able to furnish orders for excursion tickets. The trains above named will be met, and all visiting friends cared for.

E. RITTENHOUSE, Pastor.

THE Virginia Corresponding Meeting will be held, the Lord willing, with the New Valley Church, Loudoun Co., Va., to begin on Wednesday before the third Sunday in October (16th), 1895, and continue three days.

All friends are cordially invited to attend, especially our ministering brethren. Trains from Washington will be met at Leesburg on Tuesday, and on the same day at Point of Rocks up to one o'clock p. m.

E. V. WHITE.

THE Salisbury Old School Baptist Association is appointed to be held with the church at Little Creek, Sussex Co., Del. to begin on Wednesday before the fourth Sunday in October (23d), 1895, and continue three days.

All lovers of the truth are cordially invited. Those from the north had better come on Tuesday. Trains leave Philadelphia at 7:20 and 10:20 a. m. and 3:30 p. m. Ticket for Delmar, via Delaware R. R. Those from the south, via N. Y., P. & N. R. R., can come Tuesday on the Express arriving at Delmar at 2:20 p. m., or Wednesday on the Mail train at 8:00 a. m. These trains will all be met and friends cared for.

A. B. FRANCIS, Pastor.

THE Oconee Baptist Association is to be held this fall with the church at Rutledge, Morgan Co., Ga., and is to commence on Tuesday after the second Sunday in October, instead of Saturday before, and continue three days.

Rutledge is on the Georgia R. R., and brethren coming by rail can come either way on Monday, and can come down from Atlanta on Tuesday morning. Ministering brethren especially invited. Inquire for W. F. Streeter, Warren Ivy or Mr. Studard.

F. M. McLEROY, Mod.

YEARLY MEETINGS.

THE Old School Baptist Church of Schoharie, N. Y., has appointed her yearly meeting to be held in her meeting-house on the fourth Sunday and Saturday previous in October (26th and 27th), at 10 o'clock a. m. each day.

Brethren and friends of our faith and order, and all who love the truth, are cordially invited to meet with us. Those who come on the cars will be met at Howe's Cave on the day before the meeting (Friday) and cared for.

G. W. GUERNSEY, Clerk.

THE yearly meeting of the Welsh Tract Church, at Newark, Delaware, is appointed to commence on Saturday before the third Sunday in October, 1895, at ten o'clock a. m., and continue two days.

Those coming from Philadelphia and Wilmington will come via B. & O. R. R., on train leaving Philadelphia, Twelfth and Market Sts., at 7:55 Saturday morning. Those coming from Baltimore will come via B. & O. R. R. Friday afternoon or Saturday at 8:55 a. m. All will be met at Newark, Delaware. We extend a cordial invitation to all who love the truth, and desire some of the ministering brethren who may be on their way to the Salisbury Association to meet with us.

P. M. SHERWOOD, Clerk.

THE yearly meeting is appointed to be held with the church at Indiantown, near Powellville, Wicomico Co., Md., on Wednesday and Thursday after the second Sunday in October (16th and 17th), 1895, instead of as formerly on Wednesday and Thursday after the first Sunday. The yearly meeting at Messongoes, Va., will be held at the time that has formerly been appointed for our meeting, on Wednesday and Thursday after the first Sunday in October, 1895.

We trust the friends who are interested in our welfare will not forget that we appreciate their attendance at our place of meeting, and we will welcome them at our homes.

L. A. HALL.

APPOINTMENTS.

THE Lord willing, Elder D. M. Vail, of Waverly, Pa., will preach at brother J. Banks' house, or some place near, in Beaverkill or Hardenburgh, Ulster Co., N. Y., on Saturday evening and Sunday morning, Oct. 12th and 13th, 1895.

(ESTABLISHED 1832.)

DEVOTED TO THE OLD SCHOOL BAPTIST CAUSE,

PUBLISHED EVERY WEDNESDAY,

AT TWO DOLLARS A YEAR,

BY GILBERT BEEBE'S SON,

MIDDLETOWN, ORANGE CO., NEW YORK,

To whom all letters should be addressed, and money orders made payable.

EDITORS:

BENTON JENKINS, Middletown, N. Y. F. A. CHICK, Reisterstown, Md.

B. L. BEEBE, Middletown, N. Y.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SON, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date. This date denotes the time at which your subscription expires; and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

PICTORIAL HISTORY

OF THE

UNITED STATES.

By James D. McCabe.

This work is no dry mass of details—no bombastic effort to inflame the national pride, but a vivid and brilliant narrative of the events of our history, from the discovery of the American Continent down to the present time. It gives a most interesting account of the Indians of North America, from the time of the coming of the white men. The voyages of Columbus and explorations and discoveries of the different nations of Europe are related with graphic power. Every step of our colonial history is traced with patient fidelity, and the sources of those noble and, we trust, enduring institutions, which have made our country free and great, are shown with remarkable clearness. Then follows a clear and succinct account of our great Struggle for Independence, and the establishment of the Federal Union—the events of our career from the close of the Revolution to the administration of Harrison.

The work is printed from plain, new type, on fine calendered paper, and comprised in one octavo volume of 960 pages. It is splendidly embellished with nearly 500 fine engravings, embracing battles and other historical scenes, portraits of distinguished men, views of our principal cities, &c., &c.

Bound in Fine Silk Cloth, Plain Edges, $2.00, Post-paid.

POETRY.

MATTHEW XI. 28.

"Come unto me," the Savior calls,
"All ye that labor, come;
I'll give you rest from all your toils,
And will conduct you home.

"Come, take my yoke, and learn of me,
I'm of a lowly mind;
Ye shall find rest, and I will be
A covert from the wind.

"My yoke is easy, and I'll make
My burden to be light;
Then follow me, and for my sake
Keep all your garments white.

"He that would my disciple be
Must daily bear his cross,
Deny himself and follow me,
And count the world but dross."

SIGHING AND SINGING.

All, all is so dreary,
I'm sin-sick and weary,
I sigh, dearest Lord, after thee;
For temptations annoy,
Sin my peace would destroy,
O come and have mercy on me!

In deserts I wander,
And here much I ponder,
'Midst conflicts, trials and grief;
Lord, I'm brought very low,
And my heart's filled with woe,
O wilt thou not grant me relief?

O I'm tossed to and fro,
And I've nowhere to go,
This world can afford me no rest;
Unto thee, Lord, I cry,
In compassion draw nigh,
And pillow my soul on thy breast.

Lord, I'm sinful, I own,
But didst not thou atone,
Dear Lamb, all my guilt on the tree?
O heal my backslidings,
O speak the glad tidings,
That I'm thine, thou still lovest me.

I'm as one veiled aside,
After thee have I cried;
O where is thy peaceful retreat?
Draw me to thy resort,
Where thy loved and blood-bought
Dwell in comfort at thy dear feet.

'Tis thy voice that I hear
That removes all my fear,
Day dawns 'neath the smiles of thy face;
My heart's to thee clinging,
Thy praises I'm singing,
To me thou hast shown wondrous grace.

In Jesus abiding,
Upon thee confiding,
I shall by thy grace overcome;
Satan oft doth assail,
But no power shall prevail
To rob me of glory, my home.

My Beloved is mine,
And thou sayest I'm thine,
Then onward and upward I move;
There's nothing shall sever,
Ah, never, no, never,
My soul from Emmanuel's love.

THE LAW OF FORGIVENESS.

Matthew vi. 12.

[By request of brother D. M. Leonard, of Broome Centre, N. Y., we copy the following article from the Gospel Messenger of August, 1884.—Ed.]

That forgiveness is the most important part of the law of Zion is apparent from the many times it is enjoined upon the people of God in the New Testament, and from the fact that it is one of the things named in what is called commonly the Lord's prayer, upon which we are to hinge our prayer to be forgiven. For this reason let us examine what is meant by it, and speak about some things connected with it.

And, first, it is very important that we have a clear understanding of what is the exact meaning of the word itself as used in the Bible. Words are of no value except as signs of ideas; and so it is requisite that we know just what idea the word signifies. In the Greek of the New Testament the word has precisely the same signification that is given in Webster as the definition of it. And its literal meaning is "to pass over," "to remit," "to put away." This is the meaning of the Greek verb aphiemi, translated "forgive," and it may be defined literally as meaning "to send an offense away from an offender," or "not to impute an offense to the one committing it." Therefore, the command to forgive means that we shall not in any way count an offense against him who has committed it. We shall so separate the offense from the guilty one in our hearts that we shall not think of it in connection with him, nor act toward him as though we remembered it. According to the meaning of the term, we have not really forgiven the offender so long as we feel that is any bar to our intercourse with him, or our kind feeling toward him. To feel and act toward the offender as though we are sore, or wounded, or resentful, is not to forgive. To say, "I want no more to do with the one who has offended me; let him go his way, and I will go mine," is not to have forgiven him. I think, to sum it all up, forgiveness means that we feel and act toward one who has injured us as though he had not done so. To act that way is not enough, but we must love him as well as ever.

Second. There is a difference between "being wronged" and "being offended." Many a time was Jesus wronged, abused, ill-treated; but where or when did he take offense at it, or exhibit resentment? Stephen was stoned, and yet he was not offended. He prayed for those who so abused him. This was practical forgiveness. Many a man has continued his bounties to the ungrateful and disobedient children who had despised his bounty and defied his just authority. This is forgiveness. And many a Christian, hated and persecuted by the world, has yet striven to do good to his bitterest foes, praying for them and weeping over them. This is forgiveness. We cannot hinder the wrong that is done us. That is the act of another. But our business is to watch and pray, lest the wrong done arouses any resentment in our breasts, lest we take offense. As long as we feel offended we have not forgiven. O for such a spirit in us, leading and controling us, as would enable us to be offended at no personal slight or injury!

Third. The importance of forgiveness may be seen from the frequency with which it is enjoined, both in the Old Testament and in the New. I have just counted up twelve times in the Old Testament and forty-two times in the New, that the word "forgiveness" in some of its forms is used. And this is not all the number. But it is enough to show of what importance the Holy Ghost considered it. It is enjoined in the Old Testament as a mutual duty.—Gen. l. 17. It is enjoined by the Savior upon the ground of being forgiven.—Matt. vi. 12; Luke xi. 4; Matt. xviii. 23–35. It is also enjoined by the apostles.—2 Cor. ii. 7. Certainly then it is a theme of which we ought to speak and write, and upon which we ought to meditate. And above all things it is important to have this heaven-born and heaven-sent guest to come and dwell in our hearts. How delightful is the place and the hour when gentle forgiveness makes its presence felt in our souls! Who that has ever known its sweetness would exchange one hour of its presence for years filled with enmity, ill-will, hatred and revenge?

Fourth. Its origin is not of earth. Its birthplace is in heaven. It is among the fruits of the Spirit, and is worthy to stand beside the lovely graces of faith, hope, love, humility, patience, &c. What human face to us is lovely, what human memory is pleasant, if it be not that of one whose heart is ready to forgive and slow to take offense? Who of us all can find pleasure in gazing upon the face of him who is filled with anger and resentment against his enemy? All things beautiful and pleasant, and of good report, are heavenly in their origin; and so forgiveness is from heaven, and is lovely without blemish. The fallen, natural heart of man breathes resentment and revenge when it fancies itself injured. In some cases men have considered revenge a religious duty. And the language of every unrenewed man is, "I will not allow myself to be trampled upon. I will show proper resentment." And the world at large applauds the man who "will not allow himself to be insulted or injured," and despises the man who bears injury meekly and patiently, and is not provoked. But the things despised by the world are in the sight of heaven of great price. Which are we most anxions to please, heaven or the world? To bring the question closer still, do we in this seek to please ourselves or God? To revenge ourselves is man-like; to forgive is Christ-like. As its origin is heavenly, if our conversation is in heaven we shall seek to be conformed to the heavenly in this also. To this end let us consider for a little some reasons why it should be easy to forgive, and which may incite in us the spirit of forgiveness.

And so, fifth, we may consider the following things: We, as believers, have had the assurance that God has forgiven us. If the one who has trespassed against us be our brother in Christ, how can we refuse to forgive the few pence which he may owe to us, since our Master has forgiven us such a vast debt? If he be not our brother in Christ, is not his doom in the next world fearful enough without our holding resentment against him? It becomes us to pity his fate, rather than to revenge ourselves upon him. O that we could feel more deeply how much we have been forgiven! Then should we learn to possess a little more of the spirit of forgiveness.

Consider, also, that we do still sin, and still have need to pray, Forgive me my trespasses. Can we have confidence to pray "forgive me," when, at the same time, we will not forgive? Consider, also, that we not only sin against God, but we sin against our brother, or against our fellow-man. Have we done another no ill, that we can demand such exact satifaction from all? Are our hands clean? O! if my brother or my friend can forgive my failures toward him, certainly I can forgive what he has done amiss toward me.

Let us remember again that God, the just Judge, has forgiven our brother all his sins. Can we then refuse to forgive the small portion of those sins that were to our harm?

Remember, also, that as he is our brother we expect to live with him to all eternity. In that world there will be no strife or revenge. If we now have the spirit that is heavenly, let us begin to exhibit it while here.

And, lastly, do not fail to consider well that at the worst the injury can endure but a short time, while eternity is unending. The wrong, and the suffering caused by it, is but for a moment's space, and then it will be in our experience as though it had never been. What is the use of a long absent child, when journeying home, stopping to quarrel by the way? Why should he mind the selfishness of a fellow-traveler, or the rudeness of those who hate him and his father? He will soon be beyond it all at home.

Sixth. In the prayer referred to at the head of this article, the expression is, "forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors." And in the comment afterward made by our Savior himself, he said that except we should forgive others their trespasses against us, neither would our heavenly Father forgive our trespasses. This is a matter of experience. No one of us, when we cannot forgive our brother, can possibly at the same time feel what sinners we are ourselves. Consequently, in our pride and boastful self-sufficiency we exalt ourselves above our brother, and refuse to bow with humble confession before God. And as those only who confess their sins find Him faithful and just to forgive them their sins, this one receives no forgiveness, and his soul is still in a state of alienation and opposition to God, and he experiences no joy or pardon. God forgives those who confess their sins. Only the humble in spirit ever really confess their sins. And such as these find it easy to forgive others their trespasses against them, seeing they are obliged to count their own so great. If, then, a man is in such a state that he can forgive others against him, he is also in a proper frame to be forgiven. So we can with encouragement and confidence, rather than fear, pray, "Forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors." If we can really pray for forgiveness, it is in our hearts at the same time to forgive.

Seventh. But if to forgive means to feel and act toward the offender as though he had not offended, is it not impossible to keep this command? As the Savior once himself said, "It is impossible with men, but with God all things are possible." This does not mean that God in his absolute power can do all things, but it means that by his grace we ourselves can do what in and of ourselves we cannot do. God gives grace to help us keep his commandments. If it were impossible for the believer to forgive, then God would have given no such command. It is true, as Paul said, "I can do all things through Christ, which strengtheneth me." We do despite to the spirit of grace, and heap the reproach of ignorance upon the All-wise, and turn the grace of God into lasciviousness, when we seek to excuse our hardness and revengefulness by the plea that God has not given us grace to overcome these things. God forbid that the Christian should ever say, "God has not given me grace to forgive." On the contrary, if we realize the enormity of our offense when we do not forgive, we should be found with sighs and tears begging God for forgiveness from his throne, and to create in us a clean heart and renew within us a right spirit.

Eighth. I know, as an actual fact of experience, that God can strengthen us so that we can and do forgive in just the sense I have been presenting. I remember once when I had thought that a brother had not treated me right, I shortly afterwards heard him preach. I desired to hear him gladly and with hearty sympathy, as I had many times before, and I could not. I was conscious of a feeling of resentment within me that would not let me receive the word at his hands. I was ashamed of myself, and humbled. I was grieved at my hardness of heart and lack of the spirit of forgiveness. While he was yet preaching I tried to lift up my heart in prayer for us both—for myself that I might be made to feel right, and for him that he might preach with liberty and power; and I was shut up from prayer. I can never tell how I was ashamed and grieved. I thought, Is it possible that I cannot forgive? But yet, hard and stubborn as my heart then was, in less than six hours afterwards I was softened in feeling, and felt at perfect peace with that brother, and as entirely one with him as I had ever been. This feeling lasted, and the next four days were days of happiness beyond measure. The feeling of oneness to that brother, and of perfect forgetfulness of all the injury which I thought I had received, has never left me, and the next week I heard him preach again with all the joy that I had ever done. So I know that forgiveness is not a grace beyond what we may feel in our daily experience, the grace of God being our helper.

I will speak of one more instance of the power of forgiveness in the heart, and then close this too lengthy letter. I had preached one Sunday somewhat on the theme of forgiveness, and among other things had said that some would say when injured, O, I can forgive the wrong, but then I can never have confidence again. I never want to see that one; let him go his way, and I will go mine," &c. I said, "This was not forgiveness at all. Suppose the Lord Jesus forgave us that way, what should we do? To forgive, we must have come to love and desire the fellowship of that one as much as before the wrong was done." Some three months afterwards a sister, now gone to her home, who had been baptized by me some six months previous, while riding with me to meeting one day, referred to this sermon. And then she said, "I knew that you did not mean me, because you did not know the circumstances which at once came to my mind; but the sermon was a heart-searching one to me." She then went on to tell me about having had a difficulty with a step-daughter a few years previous, when she had felt herself ill-treated, but that (as she supposed) she had forgiven her step-daughter; "only," she had said, "I do not care for her to come here often; and when she does come, I will see as little of her as possible." "But," she added, "I thought I had forgiven her, else I never could have come to the church when I did; but your sermon has shown me that I have never known what forgiveness means." She then went on to tell me about hours of anxiety and grief over her hard heart and unforgiving spirit, and of the bitter struggle which she had to write to this step-daughter and make confession of her wrong feelings toward her, and of falling upon her knees in prayer one day, and for how long a time she did not know, agonizing there for God's blessing to help her forgive really and truly, and of how God heard her, and answered her, and took away all the bitterness, so that she felt that she could take the step-daughter in her arms and love her without a hinderance between. She said, "I can never tell you the perfect peace that filled me when the conflict was ended and God gave me the victory over my hard heart." She said this step-daughter had visited her since, and the day passed, and she never even thought of the old trouble. This seemed to me to be a wonderful display of the grace of God, and I felt like praising God on her behalf. We have also a Bible example of forgiveness, in the case of Joseph toward his brethren.

But I must close this letter. May God make us willing to forgive, and willing to be forgiven, which I have found the hardest of all, because of the three little words that are very hard to say, "I am wrong." The writing of this has been profitable, I think, to me, and if published I hope that it may prove so to others also.

As ever, I am your brother in hope of life eternal.

DEAR BROTHER JENKINS:—I have obtained permission from the writer to submit the inclosed good letter to the readers of the SIGNS. It will doubtless find many hearts responsive to the sentiments of fraternal love with which it so richly abounds. On our recent visit to Maine was the first time that I had been favored to meet the writer, although I had long felt acquainted with her from reading her writings. I hope she may feel impressed to write often for the comfort of the tried saints.

In the hope of life in Christ Jesus, as ever, your brother,

WM. L. BEEBE.

BRUNSWICK, Maine, Sept. 22, 1895.

ELDER WM. L. BEEBE—MY DEAR BROTHER:—I am not able to go to Bowdoinham to-day on account of a bad cold; and as you are in my mind, and I have not the least fear of you, I feel it will be pleasant to me at least to talk awhile with my pen. When I enjoy two meetings as much as I did this fall, I like to speak of it when I write to any who were there, or meet any of them face to face. It is joyful tidings to hear the name of Jesus exalted above every name that is named. I am happy when I am in the company of the saints, for that same love fills my heart which was given me as an evidence that I had passed from death unto life. There was something so real in this place of my experience, I have not been troubled as many have whether I did love the people of God or not. When my night of weeping was past, and the love of God was shed abroad in my heart, there was such a change I have not felt to question whether it was the Lord's work or not. I knew it was something beyond my own efforts. I knew I had no part in it at all. All the praise belonged to God, and every time I have written or spoken of it I have tried to declare plainly that it was the Lord's work. The Lord makes the tongue of the stammerer speak plainly, and I hope he has enabled me to do so. That joy which filled my heart after the night of weeping was given me many years, until it was time for me to learn by trial and sorrow what I could not know while walking in the light of his countenance. I must ever say, the Lord leads me in just the right way to honor and glorify him. I am made at times to feel the weakness of the flesh so forcibly and keenly, I am completely helpless. Sunday at North Berwick, when mother had an ill turn, was one of the times when I was in its grasp. The Lord sent Elder Keene to me with a few words of comfort when I was sitting on the stairs feeling so helpless and crushed. "The race was not to the swift, nor the battle to the strong." There have been many instances in my life when the goodness and loving-kindness of the Lord was manifested plainly. He did not leave me comfortless. At our Association I do think I was as happy as I can be and remain in the body. For nine years I had carried a burden of sorrow on account of the disorderly walk of my home church; but in August the Lord enabled us to confess our fault and turn from it. It did seem so good to have the burden removed from me. I could not help rejoicing that we were once more walking in gospel order. I hope the Lord gave me a feeling of thankfulness. I hope he will make us more careful in the future, and make us kind one to another. It is a sure evidence of our being in the wrong when we find fault with our brethren. When love, joy and peace fill our hearts there is no room for an unkind feeling toward a brother or sister; no matter if we have felt we were under their feet, we wanted to not move for fear of hurting them. If I had never been guilty of finding fault with my brethren, and right in the midst of it been made to see the difference between the works of the flesh and the fruit of the Spirit, I could not speak as confidently as I do now. It has made me more fearful of myself than any one else. I have no time to be looking for wrong in my brethren, as I see so much in myself it keeps me busy. I often find myself praying for it to be taken away; I seem to forget that "My grace is sufficient for thee." The thing I dread and fear most is rebellion against the will of God. I have been so richly blessed all the days of my life, and his goodness and loving-kindness have been round about me every moment. I have enjoyed so many seasons of refreshing from his presence, and felt that fullness of joy which his presence gives. He has applied his great and precious promises to my heart with power, so I have found him to be the shadow of a great rock in a weary land, a hiding place, a covert from the tempest. The name of the Lord has been a strong tower. I have run into it and was safe. He has given me the joy of his salvation, so my cup has run over. It fills me with sorrow and shame to see rebellion rise up against such a wise and loving God. I am glad I do not have to look to my own strength to keep it in subjection. It is done by the power of God. I wonder if in your life a storm of rebellion has overcome you as completely as it has me. If you know it by experience, how quickly your heart will respond to what I am trying to write. It has been a comfort to me, when writing or speaking to those of like precious faith, of the way of the Lord has led me, that the witness within them would testify to what I was trying to express, and would supply all I left out. The preaching of the gospel has been full of sweetness to me ever since I heard the first gospel sermon. I had been to every meeting-house in the city of Bath, except the Catholic and Episcopal, desiring to hear something to satisfy me, and came away unsatisfied. When I went to hear Elder Campbell I expected to hear the same God spoken of. I shall never forget how the first hymn drew my attention, nor how I feasted upon the sermon I heard. It seemed as if I had always believed it. I thought I could make every one understand it just as I did. I tried it, and from that day to this I never felt to attempt it again. I found it could only be known to those to whom the Lord revealed it. The natural man could not receive it, for it was spiritually discerned. The more my mind has been led into the truth and established, the greater has been my joy in hearing, "Salvation is of the Lord." I have never listened to a sermon by one of God's ministers when I had a thought of time, and many times have been forgetful of my surroundings. Do you wonder, my brother, as I tell you these blessings, that I often feel I cannot praise God enough, and desire to be found speaking of his goodness to a sinner like me? Jesus is the all-sufficient Savior, and without him we can do nothing. In him we are complete. I would like to hear Elder Beal preach to-day what I have been writing about. If you should wish that I had not written such a long letter to you, and will tell me, I will not be offended, and would not do it again. I am very glad I have seen you, and should feel sorry to offend you in any way. This is the first time I have had an opportunity to converse with you; for, as you said when here, I was "on the wing" most of the time. I wanted to greet each one, and it gave me no time to converse long with any one alone. I hope you will find your mind turning this way again next year. My parents join me in love to you and your family. If you do not want another letter, you must let me know, for I may write again soon. If I felt as I have to-day I should not deny myself the pleasure. It certainly is a pleasure to speak of the things I have written about. May our God make us submissive to his will, is the desire of your sister in hope of eternal life,

LA GRANDE, Ore., July 21, 1895.

DEAR EDITORS:—I send you a letter written by our highly esteemed sister, Louisa A. Mayfield. I have her consent to have it published in the SIGNS if you think best. She has recently left the Missionary Baptists and united with the church of God at this place. She left behind her all the garments of Babylon. The letter was written to a relative, in regard to a piece published in a Missionary paper, and sent to her for her her special examination and benefit, I suppose. I believe her letter would be of interest to the readers of the SIGNS.

J. C. TURNIDGE.

JUNE 10, 1895.

DEAR BROTHER FRANK:—I feel like writing to you this morning. I received your paper and read the piece your Missionaay brother wrote. He said he could not go Hardshellism, for it destroyed human accountability. I cannot go Missionism, for it denies the power of God in the salvation of sinners; for if Christ came into the world to save sinners, and did not save them, but only made a way possible that they might save themselves, he has not all power in heaven and on earth. The angel said to Joseph, "And she shall bring forth a son, and thou shalt call his name Jesus; for he shall save his people from their sins." Not if they will accept of this salvation. No, for there is not an if in the matter. He does not consult the sinner as to whether he will be saved or not. I believe that when Jesus cried upon the cross, "It is finished!" the salvation of his people was perfected; "for by one offering he hath perfected forever them that are sanctified." "He entered in once into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption." "For it became him, for whom are all things, and by whom are all things, in bringing many sons unto glory, to make the Captain of their salvation perfect through suffering."

Your brother quotes, "Ye will not come unto me that ye might have life," and then says, "They do not will to come; have no heart, no desire, no inclination, to come." That is just it; and they never will have until God quickens them by his Spirit. "It is the Spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing." The inspired writer of the epistle to the Hebrews says, "He that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him." Then, if he believes this, he is a born again; for John says, "Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ is born of God." Now, he is not born of God because he believes it, but he believes it because he is born of God. "Except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God." And he cannot do anything to bring about this birth, no more than he could the first birth. Jesus says, "No man can come to me, except the Father which hath sent me draw him; and I will raise him up at the last day." They are just as sure to come when he draws them, as they are to not come until he draws them. He says, "All that the Father giveth me shall come to me; and him that cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out. For I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me. And this is the Father's will which hath sent me, that of all which he hath given me I should lose nothing, but should raise it up again at the last day." "As thou hast given him power over all flesh, that he should give eternal life to as many as thou hast given him." There was a people given to the Son, and it was not the whole Adamic world, or he would have given them all eternal life; for he says, "I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do." He also says, "I pray for them; I pray not for the world, but for them which thou hast given me; for they are thine." "Holy Father, keep through thine own name those whom thou hast given me; that they may be one, as we are." "Those that thou hast given me I have kept, and none of them is lost, but the son of perdition, that the Scripture might be fulfilled." Paul says, "For whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son, that he might be the first-born among many brethren. Moreover, whom he did predestinate, them he also called; and whom he called, them he also justified; and whom he justified, them he also glorified. What shall we then say to these things? If God be for us, who can be against us? He that spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how shall he not with him also freely give us all things? Who shall lay anything to the charge of God's elect? It is God that justifieth." "Therefore being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ." "When we were without strength, in due time Christ died for the ungodly. For scarcely for a righteous man will one die." "But God commendeth his love towards us, in that while we were yet sinners Christ died for us. Much more then, being now justified by his blood, we shall be saved from wrath through him. For if when we were enemies we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son, much more, being reconciled, we shall be saved by his life." "For by grace are ye saved, through faith; and that not of yourselves; it is the gift of God. Not of works, lest any man should boast. For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them." So then we see that it is not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us, by the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost, which he shed on us abundantly through Jesus Christ our Savior, who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works. For he hath made him to be sin for us, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him. Then who shall separate us from the love of God? Shall tribulation, or distress, or nakedness, or persecution, or famine, or peril, or sword? As it is written, For thy sake we are killed all the day long, we are accounted as sheep for the slaughter. Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors through him that loved us, and gave himself for us. "O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God!

CHURCH DISCIPLINE.

WHAT IS THE OBJECT OF THE DISCIPLINE WHICH GOD HAS ESTABLISHED IN HIS CHURCH?

THIS question has been proposed by brethren often, and it has been much upon our mind of late. It seems to us to be an important one, inasmuch as the spirit which we shall manifest in endeavoring to administer that discipline, and the manner in which we shall go about it, depends very largely upon the answer to this question. It will be at once manifest that if the object be to cut off, to kill, or to destroy, our spirit and our manner will differ greatly from what would be the case if the object be to restore, to heal, or to save the soul from death. Therefore the object becomes of vast importance for us to consider.

What is the object of all enforcement of church discipline as presented in the Scriptures? It is clear that we must go to the Scriptures for the answer. If they do not answer this question it is sure that we cannot do so; but it seems to us that the Scriptures do again and again answer this question, and that too plainly to be misunderstood. Some of them we desire to quote ere we close this editorial. Before doing so, however, we wish to notice the expression "church discipline" itself. It is not a Bible expression. We have found but one place in the Bible (Job xxxvi. 10) where the word "discipline" is used at all. There it means chastisement, instruction; and there it is said to be the work of God himself. We do not know how the word came to be used in connection with the maintenance of that order which God has established and revealed in the New Testament for the good of his people and his own glory. Sometimes we have heard the expression used in a way that has made it sound harsh and legal to us. We are not finding fault with the expression, but simply calling attention to the fact that in the only place in which the word is used in the Bible it is declared to be the Lord's work. As it contains the sense of correction and chastisement, it must be the work of the Father alone, for it is sure that he has not set his children at the business of chastising each other. We do not object to using the term "church discipline," only let us understand what we ought to mean by it. While the words themselves may have a broader meaning, yet we have come to use them in the limited sense of our dealings with the disobedient or unruly or disorderly members of the church; and this is what we desire to speak of now. The true question then is, How ought we to deal with the unruly and erring members of the church, and what object ought we to have in view in thus dealing with them?

Here, as we said before, we must and ought to appeal to the Scriptures alone. Is it declared to be the chief object of the enforcement of the law of Zion to cut off, to punish, or to exact full measure of satisfaction from the one who has erred? We fail to recall any testimony to this effect in the New Testament. Cutting off is sometimes spoken of, but it is always as a last resort, and when it is seen to be impossible to heal the diseased member. The motive is not hatred nor anger nor revenge; and the object is not to demand the last farthing, nor to humble the offender at our feet, as though, being ourselves righteous, we can sit in judgment upon him, a sinner. We are all sinners against God together, and must confess that we are no better than the worst. If we reprove and rebuke, it should be under the influence of this feeling; and if led by this spirit our reproofs and warnings and rebukes will be an excellent oil, which shall heal rather than wound the wrong-doer.

It seems to us that the spirit we manifest and the object which we have in view is well-nigh everything in this matter. If the spirit be right, it will clothe itself in a form that will appear mild and lovely. If the spirit and object be wrong, no amount of effort will make the manner of what we do right. If our motive be to cut off or destroy the offender, our manner sooner or later will be harsh and cruel. If our object be to save and heal, then the substance of what we say and do will have the sweet savor of love and mercy in it. It is a most important question, then, What does the Bible teach, and is our spirit, our object, in conformity to its teachings?

The eighteenth chapter of Matthew has often been called our book of discipline. We do not object to this, unless it be meant that no other part of the New Testament contains any lessons for us concerning this matter. But what is the whole spirit and object of the labor set forth in this chapter? It is reconciliation. First, if our brother has offended us, by every means possible we are to strive to reconcile him to us; and second, if we remember that we have offended him, we must not delay, even for the purpose of laying our gift upon the altar, but must go and be reconciled to him. Reconciliation, then, is the whole meaning of this chapter; and each one is to strive for this, and every effort is to be put forth to this end. If our brother has trespassed against us he is still a brother, whom we are to still love and try to save. If he has trespassed against us we do not need any salvation, so far as that matter is concerned, but he does. If he has knowingly trespassed against us, it must be that he does not feel as a brother toward us. His wrong act is an evidence of a wrong feeling. We do not need to be saved from his wrong act, but he needs to be saved from his wrong feeling. His act will not kill us, but his feeling may kill him. If we love him we shall not want to lose him; we shall want to save him.

Every step enjoined upon us in the chapter is the one best fitted to that end. Going to him alone is to save him. Afterward, if we are at first unsuccessful, taking one or two more is another step in the same direction. We are to take one or two more; not to gain witnesses against him, but that they with ourselves may strive to win him from his evil course; and then afterward, when we come to tell it to the church, it is not that we may be justified before the church, but that he who has done the wrong may be saved from his wrong. Surely the spirit of all this is love, and the object is to save. In this chapter it seems as though the offenses spoken of by the Savior are more largely what we call personal, that is, injuries aimed at one person, and which may be settled between them, and kept hidden between them, and which need never see the light of day, and which ought never to be made public, to bring scandal and reproach upon the cause, and grief to every believing heart.

But all offenses are not of this personal kind. Indeed, a man may sin against God, and no man but himself be injured at all. All sin is against God, but all sin is not against man. When Paul said to Timothy (1 Timothy v. 20), "Them that sin rebuke before all, that others also may fear," we do not understand him to refer to the same thing as is meant in Matthew xviii. Paul in the second chapter of Galatians illustrates his own meaning by his course, as narrated there, toward Peter. In verses eleven and fourteen we are told that he publicly withstood Peter, and rebuked him. Peter sinned in the full light of day, and all knew it; therefore, lest others should be carried away, he must be rebuked before them all. Here also the object was to save both Peter and the brethren with him. There are sins to-day of which the people of God may be guilty, which all men know. In such cases the rebuke must be made public, in order to save not only the offender, but others who may be corrupted by his evil course as well. The object is still to save.

In 1 Corinthians v. 5 we read, "To deliver such a one unto Satan for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus." In 1 Timothy i. 20 Paul says of Hymeneus and Alexander, "Whom I have delivered unto Satan, that they may learn not to blaspheme." Now, whatever may be meant by "delivered unto Satan," the object is clear. It is to save—to save from sin and the death which follows. The expression "delivered unto Satan" may sound harsh, but when we read that the object is to save it sounds harsh no longer.

In Gal. vi. 1 we read, "Brethren, if a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual restore such an one in the spirit of meekness, considering thyself, lest thou also be tempted." The word "overtaken" here signifies two things in the original Greek. It signifies a public fault, and a fault unpremeditated. Now, though the fault be public, yet our object must be to restore, not to destroy.

We will here refer to but one more text, though many might be addressed which teach the same thing. In James v. 19, 20, we read, "Brethren, if any of you do err from the truth, and one convert him," &c. Here, to save, to convert the sinner from his sin, is spoken of as the thing that is to be sought for by all his brethren, and we are stirred up to this by the most solemn and weighty considerations of which we could conceive. By so doing we "shall save a soul from death, and hide a multitude of sins."

This, it seems to us, is all plain and clear. The Bible declares the object of all church discipline to be to save the wrong-doer. It only remains for each of us to ask ourself the question at such times, Is our spirit and object in harmony with the Scriptures? One thing is sure at least, if we love our brethren as we ought, this will lead us to act in harmony with the Scriptures. If we find, on the other hand, that our object is not to heal, to restore, and to save, then we may know that love does not reign in our hearts, either toward God or his people, and it is full time that we should pause and consider our own selves rather than others.

If we love our brethren, and our object be to save, we shall not be suspicious of them, nor doubt the honesty of their confessions, nor make the way of returning any harder for them than we can help. We shall feel as Paul did when, in 2 Cor. ii. 7, he wrote to that church to forgive and comfort a wrong-doer, lest he should be swallowed up of overmuch sorrow, seeing that his punishment had already been sufficient. We have very little doubt that Paul here alludes to the same thing to which he refers in 1 Cor. v. 1–5. By reference to this Scripture it will be seen that the brother's sin was fornication, and fornication of a peculiarly vile order, unknown even among the Gentiles, that one should have his father's wife. This man had, as Paul directed, been subjected to the discipline of the church, and had professed penitence. Now, Paul directs that his confession be received, and be not only forgiven, but comforted. We know of no rule in the New Testament that bids us be suspicious of a brother, and doubt the sincerity of his confession, and put him on probation, before receiving him again to our fellowship and the privileges of the church.

Let it not be forgotten that the spirit of all scriptural teaching is to help the erring one one to turn away from his sin. We are to remember that he is weak. We are to remember that he has not sinned against us, but against God. If God has forgiven him and loves him, who are we that we will not forgive him, and love him too? At all events we have the precept and example of Paul in the instance named just above.

And, lastly, we would say, that while fallen nature remains what it is, we shall always have more occasion to watch against undue severity and hardness toward those who trespass against us, than against undue leniency. We are more likely to put fleshly resentment in the place of righteous sorrow for a brother's fault, than we are to be too forgiving. It is well for us to watch unto prayer in these things, lest we be led into temptation.

C.

FREE AGENTS.

WE have always considered the expression "free agent," in its application to the human family, in a religious point of view, as a contradiction of terms. An agent is in all applications of the word an actor, whether the term be applied to animate or inanimate things, whether to men or machines; hence all beings or things which are capable of acting are in the true sense of the word agents. The word "free," in this connection, has reference to volition, and signifies that the agent that is free can act at pleasure, do as it pleases, without restraint or aid. In the agencies of machinery, none will contend for volition, as machines have no wills, consequently no volition; therefore they are not free. They act as they are acted on, and produce the results designed by the engineer or machinist.

The application of the word "free" to the agency or action of men, signifies that the man who claims to be a free agent claims the right and ability to do whatever he pleases, without the least restraint. A man, to be a free agent, cannot be bound by law; for if he is restricted to the rules of any law, human or divine, he is not free to do as he pleases. If Adam had been a free agent in his first estate he could not have sinned; for if free, he had a right to do as he pleased; but as he was created under law to God he was bound to obey that law or suffer its penalty; hence he was not free. As an agent he was not "left to the freedom of his own will," asserted in the Westminster Catechism; but he was held to a rigid accountability to God for his agency. If under the superior or control of his Maker, or if subject to any other restriction, he was not a free agent; and if there be a creature in earth or heaven that is a free agent we have not been informed of its existence.

This hackneyed term is a favorite with Arminians and will-worshipers, to signify that men possess the power to will and work their way to heaven or hell; that, being in a fallen state, the Lord has endued them with all requisite power to secure their own salvation. But the Holy Ghost has declared by an inspired apostle that "It is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that sheweth mercy." "Not of works, lest any man should boast;" thus proving beyond all cavil that salvation is neither of the will nor works of man. That man is an agent or actor we admit; but that he is unrestricted and unrestrained in his actions, we by Scripture authority deny. He is a restricted agent, and for his agency he is accountable to God. Ungodly men are not free, unrestrained agents, for the remainder of their wrath God restrains; neither can christians be free actors, for to will is present, but how to perform they find not; and Paul says, "So that ye cannot do the things that ye would."

If brother Harris has free agents, or those who claim to be such, in his vicinity, he may test the truth of their pretensions by requiring them by taking thought to add to their stature one cubit.

THE MAMMON OF UNRIGHTEOUSNESS.

FIRST. This parable being spoken to the disciples in connection with the parable of the prodigal son, which our Lord had just spoken to the Pharisees and scribes, may have been designed to admonish them that the Jewish dispensation was about closed, and shortly they should be utterly broken up and scattered abroad among the Gentile nations, and that it would be wise in them as Jews, according to the flesh, to rather cultivate a greater degree of friendship with the Gentiles, that when Jerusalem should be destroyed, and all the people of Israel driven forth to the four winds of heaven, the Gentiles should give them in return a more hospitable reception.

The Jews nationally had, like the steward, wasted the Lord's goods; they had desecrated the ordinances and made void the commandments of God by their own traditions. They had one who accused them to their Lord; it was even Moses in whom they trusted; and now they were called to a solemn reckoning, and informed that they were to be removed from their stewardship; or, according to another similitude, the vineyard was about to be taken from them and let out to others who would render to the Lord the fruits of it. They were to be driven out and utterly dispersed abroad among the Gentiles. Now, as they were so soon to be cast upon the hospitality of the Gentiles, was not this parable calculated to suggest that, instead of exacting circumcision, and a strict adherence to the laws of Moses, and the traditions of the fathers, as a condition of eating with them, it would be more wise to take the bill, and write fifty or four score? It will be recollected that both these parables were occasioned by a murmuring which arose on account of our Lord's receiving and eating with them. The Jews had long held the Samaritans as sinners, because they had departed from the house of David and from the temple worship of Jerusalem, and those who continued to worship held them as their Lord's debtors on this account; but now it was announced that neither in Jerusalem nor in the mountain of Samaria, but the time was coming, and had come, in which the true worshipers should worship in spirit and in truth. While as Jews they were stewards of the house, they exacted the full account; but the ceremonial economy was now closing, and they were to provide for a home when their house should become desolate.

Secondly. We have thought the parable might be applied thus: from the peculiar state of things, all who at that day openly avowed themselves the disciples of Christ were cast out of the synagogue; they were accused of wasting the admonitions of Moses' law, and departing from his ordinances, &c., on which account they were subjected to severe persecution; they were outlaws, their property was confiscated, and they were driven away in poverty and wretchedness. Now, although they were children of light in regard to spiritual understanding, being taught of God, yet in regard to temporal things the children of this world had generally outwitted them. If this view of the parable be correct, we may understand the instruction given them to make friends of the mammon of unrighteousness (or riches, which is the idol of the unrighteous) to imply that while in the possession of their worldly substance, and knowing that they should soon be deprived of it, that they should do as our Lord directed the rich man, "Go sell all that thou hast, and give to the poor, and come and take thy cross, and follow me," &c. The principle implied in this view was certainly afterwards acted on when the disciples sold their real estate and laid the money at the apostles' feet, and they had all things common.

The worldly substance or property of men is what is generally understood to be the mammon of unrighteousness; and although God's children are generally poor, in respect to the possession of much of it, yet they have some, and they are required to so use as not to abuse it. They are not to make an idol of it by covetousness, or by trusting in it; nor are they to overlook the mercy and goodness of God in making them the possessors of it. Make friends of it, give of it to the needy, the destitute and the poor, that when thou art poor, needy and destitute, others may act on the same principle towards thee. "That when ye fail." We have shown that the Jews were to fail, when broken up in their national character, and that the converted Israelites were to fail when driven by persecution from their houses and homes into distant and strange places, &c. The Jews have thus failed, and have been received into the everlasting (not eternal) habitation of the Gentile nations. The Jewish converts did fail when their possessions were confiscated, and they were received into the everlasting habitation of their brethren, to partake of their hospitality. And the maxim holds good even in the present day; those who have property should impart generously to relieve the poor saints, and when they become poor, share the bounty of their brethren in like manner.

MINUTES.

AS THE time for the fall associations is drawing near, we wish to call the attention of our brethren to the fact that any patronage they can give us by way of printing their Minutes will be especially appreciated at present. Our long experience in the business has, we think, particularly qualified us for this work; and as it costs but a few cents to mail the manuscript to us, we hope they will remember us when they have the work ready.

BOOK NOTICES.

LARGE HYMN BOOK FOR A DOLLAR

SIX FOR FOUR DOLLARS AND A HALF

We have had bound in cloth, the same style as the "Editorials" or "Church History," a few hundred of our large type Hymn Books, which we will send post paid at the above prices. These books are especially adapted for aged people, or for pew racks, to be used in churches.

A SMALL ONE FOR SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS, OR SIX FOR THREE DOLLARS.

We also have the small type book bound in cloth, which we will send post paid at prices stated above.

These books contain eight hundred pages, and thirteen hundred and eleven carefully selected hymns, together with an index to first line of each hymn.

Cash must always accompany the orders. Address,

G. BEEBE'S SON,

Middletown, Orange Co., N. Y.

NOTICES.

WILL you notice in a few numbers of the SIGNS that "Reminiscences and Letters of Mary Parker" is now reduced to sixty cents, sent by mail post-paid? There are a few hundred copies left on my hands, and I wish to dispose of them, and so I give the friends an opportunity to get a most interesting book at half-price.

SILAS H. DURAND.

SOUTHAMPTON, Pa.. July 27, 1895.

How unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out! For who hath known the mind of the Lord? or who hath been his counsellor? or who hath first given to him, and it shall be recompensed unto him again? For of him, and through him, and to him, are all things: to whom be glory forever. Amen."

Well, Frank, I guess I have written enough for this time. I would like for you to answer this; and if you have any more Missionary pieces send them along, and I will read them, as they only make me more firm in the Old Baptist faith. I believe we should earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints; and I believe the Primitive Baptist faith is the faith that Christ and his apostles taught; that is, that it is by free and unmerited grace we are saved, and not by works of righteousness which we have done. I will close by hoping the Lord will enable us all to know the truth, for nothing but the truth will do us good. Write soon, and let me know what you think of this Scripture.

LOUISA A. MAYFIELD.

HARLEM, Clay Co,, Mo.

DEAR BRETHREN:—If it is not asking too much of you I would like for you to give me a little corner in your paper to speak for myself. I received a few lines not very long ago from a very dear brother, of Blue Springs, Jackson Co., Mo., saying, "When I was over in Clay County I heard that you were getting soft; but I did not believe it." I will just say to that brother that I was raised a slave, and always thought I had more right to obey my master than any other man. Now, my dear brother, Christ says, "I am the way," and I am satisfied that no other way is right. If I believe that Christ is the way, why should I in my old age, after my days are well nigh spent on earth, contend for some other way? No, my dear brother, I am no softer, no harder, than the word of God. Christ said to Peter, "Upon this rock I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." So upon that rock I build my hopes, or hope, and will in no wise be led off by man if he has not a "Thus saith the Lord." It has been over thirty-four years since your dear old father led me down into the water, and to-day it is as fresh in my mind as if it were yesterday. What is in man that I should follow man? What is in Christ that I should follow Christ? To follow man is death. To follow Christ is life everlasting. I have never found, nor do I want to find, any way to change the word of God to suit anything that man may get up, or that has not a "Thus saith the Lord." So, if Christ is the way I do not want any other way. All other ways lead astray. O for more grace to keep me in the way; to keep low at the foot of the cross; to strengthen me in time of weakness; to lead me in the right way; to live as becomes a follower of Christ; to turn away from everything that gives God the lie; for to disbelieve and dispute his word is giving him the lie. If I do not understand his word I have no right to say it is not true. If God reveals something to my brother that he has not revealed to me, I have no right to fall out with my brother because he can see things I cannot see. How many of the apostles saw the things that John saw on Patmos? They did not disbelieve John's testimony because they had not been shown the same great mysteries he saw. Now, my dear brother, I must go back to John iii. 3. "Jesus answered and said unto him, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God." We all know that we had to be born into this world before we could know things of this world; and it is an evident fact that we must be born of God before we can see the kingdom of God. Let that stand just as Christ said it. May the blessings of God rest upon you and all the household of God.

As ever yours,

RICHARD WALLER.

MANORKILL, N. Y.

G. BEEBE'S SON:—I will send the subscriptions of a few whose names are already on your list, so you may know there are a few names that stand firm. I hope it may please the all-wise God to put it into the the hearts of your subcribers to send on their dues in time, to cheer your weary hands. It does seem that the most of them might do so if they love the cause above self. O that the Lord would revive his work in the midst of the years, in the midst of the years make known, and in wrath remember mercy, and not leave us to ourselves in this dark and cloudy day. I know we are not worthy, but Jesus was and is worthy to take the book and to unloose the seals thereof. When he opened the prison doors to us poor sinners we did praise him and say, "He has done great things for us, whereof we are glad." Then our heart leaped for joy at the sight of him who was made sin for us. Truly our heart did burn within us as he talked to us by the way. Then we could say, "He brougbt me to his banqueting house, and his banner over me was love." How we did rejoice in our Savior, and felt to say, "Come and hear, all ye that fear God, and I will declare what he hath done for my soul." Then we could run and not be weary, and walk and not faint. But how is it now, dear brethren, with some of us? Have we become weary in well doing? Could we not watch one hour, or to the end of our pilgrimage journey, when we are made the happy recipients of such a costly prize that it even cost the life of God's beloved Son to raise us up and make us fit companions to dwell with him eternally? John rejoiced greatly in hearing the Bridegroom's voice. So did you and I. Did we not say, Was there ever love like this? Was ever grace so free?

"This be my constant joy and bliss,
That Jesus died for me."

I can say this was my case.

"Although I have him oft forgot,
His loving-kindness changes not."

Then let us buckle on the armor and contend for the faith once delivered to the saints. This is our only hope; this is our life. Jesus having loved his own that were in the world, loved them to the end. How consoling to know that we have a Friend who loves at all times. We who have been a long time in this warfare know that "The peace is his, and not our own;

Our heart no better than before."

Certainly we are made to feel, when we almost lose sight of him, and he shines in our heart, and we feel its hardness depart, that he has loved us with an everlasting love, and with loving-kindness has drawn us. May we then say, "Draw us; we will run after thee."

"He gently leads my soul along;
His loving-kindness O how strong!"

The SIGNS are a great comfort to me. I had fears often, when your dear father left the field; but, blessed be God, he is always better to us than our fears. Seeing the mantle has fallen upon Elders Jenkins and Chick, I can say like Paul, I thank God and take courage.

D. S. ELLIOTT.

HIGHLAND, N. Y., Feb. 22, 1895.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SON:—I am living in a town among the "do and live" people, and some even claim to be without sin, and call themselves "sanctified christians." I feel to praise God that he has led me in a different path, a poor, sinful, depraved creature as I am. O may I ever be kept humble and trusting in my God for all things. But alas! to my sorrow I am so many times putting trust in an arm of flesh, when I am brought to the very depths of despair, and all hope seems to be gone. Then am I made to cry out, O Lord, have mercy on my poor soul. He alone can find the poor, downcast souls and speak peace to them. He can save. What a blessed thought it is to me that we have a Friend that changes not. I cannot say like some among the dear chosen ones that I get away upon the mountain top. I am most of the time in the valley, and so often do I wonder if it can be that I am one of God's chosen vessels of grace and mercy. Many times come the thought and words, "Many are called, but few are chosen." Am I not one left out? Many sad thoughts I have had, and many bitter tears I have shed, over my black, sinful heart. If I am a saint I am the least of all. Yet, depraved as I feel myself to be, I feel to say with Ruth, "Entreat me not to leave thee, or to return from following after the; for where thou goest I will go, and where thou lodgest I will lodge; thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God." The SIGNS is my only comfort at times, as I am alone in spiritual things, having no preaching that will find its way to my heart. Will some of you, if you think it worth while, please give your views on the words, "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling," &c. They have been on my mind for nearly two months, and I would like them explained. When I sat down I only intended to write for the renewal of my subscription, but my mind has wandered quite a long way, and all is as poor and imperfect as the writer. If I am saved it is by the grace of God, and not by works. I feel to say with the poet,

"'Tis grace has brought me safe thus far,
And grace will lead me home."

I was up to Shokan and heard Elder Hubbell preach the unsearchable riches of Christ. It seemed so good to sit under my own vine and fig-tree and hear the truth proclaimed as it is in Jesus, his glory and our depravity. None but God, the blessed Father, can teach us such wonderful things. Blessed be his holy name. When I think of the grand hymn,

"Keep silence all created things,
And wait your Maker's nod,'" &c.

it seems to lift my whole soul above.

Dear brethren, if one so unworthy as I feel myself to be may call you by that blessed name, pray for me when it is well with you. Please pardon this long, imperfect scribble.

MRS. J. B. COONS.

ACTON, Texas, Jan. 11, 1895.

DEAR BRETHREN:—The time has come for me to renew my subscription for the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. The good Lord in his tender mercy to a poor, worthless being like me has been pleased to spare my life to the close of another year, for a purpose best known to himself, as he is an independent Sovereign over all his works. All things, visible and invisible, were created by him and for him, and will serve the purpose he created them for. And all things work together for good to them who are the called according to his purpose. But O how often this poor worm of the dust feels that he has never been called by his mighty power out of darkness into the glorious light of the gospel, which is his mighty power. Yet sometimes I can rejoice for a little season that Jesus has died for me, and paid the debt of sin I owed, as well as all who were given him in the covenant of redemption. He will, by his own mighty power, without the help of man or means, make himself known unto them; for they are one with him in his life, death and resurrection. I understand that the whole human family had their standing in Adam in a natural relationship, and by his disobedience sin entered into the world, and so death passed upon all, for that they all sinned in Adam. So by the obedience of Christ all that were chosen in him shall be made righteous; for he is the life of his people. I believe it is necessary for us to have dark seasons; and when our God removes the darkness and gives us the light we can then more fully appreciate the light.

I remain as ever yours, sometimes in hope that when a few more griefs I have tasted I shall lay my armor by, to inherit that everlasting rest above. Farewell.

W. L. McPHERSON.

DELMAR, Del., May 3, 1895.

ELDER F. A. CHICK—MY DEAR BROTHER:—The subject of "belief" is upon my mind, and I will try to write a few thoughts in my weak and ignorant way, which I hope have been presented to me upon the subject. There are two kinds of belief; one natural, and one spiritual. We must have positive evidence before we can positively believe. We cannot believe as we please, as is said by some; but that which we see and feel we know and believe, and no one can make us believe differently. When it is cloudy, and no sun to be seen, could the world make us believe the shining of the sun is visible to us? Of course not; because we have positive evidence to the contrary. So in spiritual belief. We must have evidence before we can believe; and if we have seen or felt nothing, we have no evidence, and consequently cannot believe. We could not know when the wind blows if we could not see, hear or feel its effects. Neither could we know the operations of the spirit of Jesus, except we are made to see, hear or feel them. We cannot believe that Jesus is the true bread of life which came down from heaven, except we are partakers of that bread." "No man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost."—1 Cor. xii. 3. "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." I do not understand belief to be the spiritual birth, but an evidence of that birth. When we are born of the Spirit we love the things we once hated, and hate the things we once loved, and believe the things we could not believe, although they had been declared unto us. When God gives us an ear to hear, and a heart to understand, then we believe God has saved us with an everlasting salvation in Christ Jesus. It is said by many that we are all created alike, with the same nature and the same capacity, and can all believe alike; and that all we have to do is to make up our minds, and we can believe at any time. But "the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them; because they are spiritually discerned."—1 Cor. ii. 14. Again, "But we preach Christ crucified, unto the Jews a stumbling-block, and unto the Greeks foolishness; but unto them which are called, both Jews and Greeks, Christ the power of God and the wisdom of God."—1 Cor. i. 23, 24. So we see all men cannot believe alike, because all men are not born of the Spirit and called. We cannot see, hear nor understand spiritual things except we are born again; then our eyes are opened, our ears unstopped, and our hearts made to understand the mysteries of God; and then we say, How wonderful are thy works, O Lord, and how just are thy judgments. Belief comes without any effort upon our part. When once we do believe, who can change our belief and hope in Jesus; for if Christ be for us, who can be against us? "That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit." Do we not have to be born of the flesh before we can understand and believe natural things? So do we have to be born of the Spirit before we can understand and believe spiritual things. Who of us have tried to believe anything which we never had any evidence of? But how many of us in our early experiences have tried to disbelieve that which we knew to be positively true? But instead of being able to disbelieve, we were only made stronger in our belief and hope which is in Christ Jesus our Lord. Jesus said, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." How comforting are these words to the dear saints of God; and in them they are made to rejoice. When in doubt, fear, temptation and affliction, Jesus is our only hope and refuge, and our only hope of eternal life is in his precious blood. May the God of peace be with you and all his saints.

Your unworthy brother, if a brother at all,

H. CLAUDE KER.

MARRIAGES.

BY Elder T. M. Poulson, Sept. 18th, at the Forest Grove meeting-house, Mr. Vergil Gray, of Worcester Co., Md., and Miss Edith Riley, of Wicomico Co., Md.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

DIED—In Prince William Co., Va., May 27th, 1895, Miss Mary Y. Gulick, aged 69 years, 4 months and 11 days.

Sister Gulick was baptized in the fellowship of Mt. Zion Church, in Loudoun Co., in October, 1860, and died in full fellowship with the church, and in the love and confidence of her brethren. She never married, but found a home among her kindred and friends, and when she could attended the meetings of the saints, which was her delight. She was faithful to her obligations to the church, and until stricken by disease was ever found in her place at its meetings. She suffered uncomplainingly for many years, being cared for by a sister and her kind family. Paralysis deprived her of speech many months before her death, but she apparently closed her earthly career with joy, and fell peacefully into that sleep which knows no waking. Those of her kindred who remain cannot grieve for her, for after years of hopeless suffering she is at rest.

J. N. BADGER.

ALDIE, Va., Oct. 7, 1895.

"THE righteous perisheth, and no man layeth it to heart: and merciful men are taken away, none considering that the righteous is taken away from the evil to come."—Isaiah lvii. 1.

It is with sadness that I now attempt to answer the request of an afflicted and bereaved daughter, and sister in the church at Rock Springs, Pa., to ask a place in the SIGNS for the notice of her father's death, our esteemed brother, Solomon Gregg, who died Sept. 26th, 1895, aged 70 years.

Our brother was baptized in the fellowship of the church at Rock Springs, June 11th, 1871, by the writer of this article, and surely continued in full fellowship until his discharge from the conflict attending life's journey. Our brother was possessed of more than ordinary ability as a business man, as related to church matters, and was also sought to by the neighborhood on account of his superior judgment. In the church he was a quiet, orderly and consistent member. The circumstances connected with his uniting with the Old School Baptists I have a distinct recollection of, being naturally rather violently opposed to the doctrine, which by grace he was afterward made to love and see as the only ground of hope for a poor sinner; always low in his own eyes, having nothing to recommend him to God in himself, but looking for justification through Christ. In his last sickness, which seemed to be some heart trouble, he seemed to have no wish to live, and indeed often spoke of his departure out of this world, while in health, with great composure of mind; also, that he would not be long here. The closing scenes of his life were peaceful. He quietly fell asleep at the appointed time, leaving four sons and one daughter, all raised and in comfortable circumstances, so far as this world is concerned, devoted to their father, and sensibly feel their loss. So also the church has met a great loss of a prominent member, having lost most of her male members.

The funeral was largely attended by a solemn congregation, and some remarks were made by the writer; after which the remains of our brother were gathered unto his people at Rock Springs, to await that day when all who are in their graves shall hear the voice of the Son of God and come forth.

WM. GRAFTON.

FOREST HILL, Md.

DIED—At his son-in-law's, H. F. Sanders, near Knoxville, Crawford Co., Ga., July 29th, 1895, our much loved brother, Thomas G. McCowen.

He was born in Morgan Co., Ga., June 7th, 1842, making his age at the time of his death 53 years, 1 month and 22 days. When quite young he moved with his parents, Duncan and Mary McCowen, from Morgan to Monroe Co., near Forsyth, Ga., where he was raised and spent most of his life. He enlisted in the late war, receiving a wound in his left arm, which made him a cripple for life. About the close of the war he was united in marriage to Miss Marietta Fletcher, with whom he lived and raised a large family of children. Our brother united with the Primitive Baptist Church of Christ at Smyrna on May 21st, 1870, and was baptized by Elder James Stuart, who was then pastor of the church. Brother Thomas from that time until his death lived with the Baptists, a consistent member. But few knew so much of him as the unworthy writer of this notice. We being the youngest two boys, raised and schooled together, our ties were very closely knit. He had his faults, as all other men have. His temper was such that at times it was hard to control; but he had a kind disposition and a tender heart, and always had some words of mirth or comfort for those who seemed to be despondent or troubled, which enabled him to make many friends. But after all this, often have I heard him speak of his own unworthiness, saying, "O wicked man that I am! how can I expect to remain in the favor and love of a righteous and sin-avenging God? If saved at all, it will be a poor sinner saved by grace." In speaking of his trials and troubles, and the goodness of God to him, he repeated these lines, as applying to his case,

"While sorrows encompass me round,
And endless distresses I see,
Astonished, I cry, Can a mortal be found
Surrounded with troubles like me?"

He then made this remark, "After life is all summed up, outside of Christ it is not worth living;" meaning that without Christ the world had but few charms for the child of God. He would say sometimes, "I think I ought to have more credit for what few things I do right, than others who seem to serve and obey God so easily, while it is so hard for me." But now these earthly trials are over, and we have the happy assurance that he is free, and enjoying the presence of the blessed Savior.

He had been in feeble health for some time. On Thursday before he died he was taken much worse, and on Saturday fell into a stupor, and remained so until two o'clock Monday, when he breathed his last, leaving a dear wife and six children to mourn their loss. May God in his infinite mercy bless them in their bereaved condition, and finally save them in his kingdom, is my desire.

His remains were interred the next day in the cemetery at Culloden, Ga., when and where Elder D. G. McCowen preached a short discourse from the first portion of the fourteenth chapter of John, to a large congregation of relatives and friends. May the good Lord sanctify this dispensation of his providence to the good of us all, is our hope.

J. A. McCOWEN.

MACON, Ga., Sept. 28, 1895.

SISTER Sapphronia Digby was born Sept. 22d, 1825, was married to the late Deacon A. J. Digby on Sept. 22d, 1842, united with the church at Mt. Gilead on Oct. 21st, 1866, and was baptized by Elder W. M. Mitchell. She was the mother of nine children; six still live to mourn their loss of a devoted and loving mother. She departed this life July 7th, 1895. She was stricken with paralysis June 30th. I was well acquainted with her, and was her pastor while she was a member of Bethel Church. To know her was to love her, possessing such qualities and the graces of the Spirit of God, modest, meek, gentle, loving and forgiving. What a beautiful life! Are we surprised to learn her last words? "Don't grieve for me."

"Jerusalem, my happy home,
O how I long for thee!
When shall my sorrows have an end?
Thy joys when shall I see?"

How beautiful the language, "Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his." God grant that her dear children may be able to tread in the steps of their dear mother, whose bright example and precepts still live.

We could add much, but this is enough. She trusted in God, she loved Jesus; and that charity which believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things, was manifest in her life, and doubtlessly she could realize, "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" "Thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

TWO DAYS MEETINGS.

A TWO days meeting is appointed to be held with the Abbington Church, at Justus, Lackawanna Co., Pa., on Wednesday and Thursday, November 13th and 14th, 1895.

We invite all who feel a desire to meet with us. Those coming by way of the D., L. & W. R. R. will be met at Glenburn on Tuesday. Those coming by way of the Delaware & Hudson R. R. will please write me at what time they expect to arrive at Olyphant, where we will meet them on Tuesday.

G. W. GOODRICH, Clerk.

THE Lord willing, the Burdett Church, Schuyler Co., N. Y., will hold a two days meeting, commencing at 10:30 a. m., Nov. 6th and 7th, 1895.

H. B. ELLIOTT, Clerk.

ASSOCIATIONAL.

THE Delaware Association is appointed to be held with the Cow Marsh Church, commencing on Wednesday, Oct. 30th, and continuing the two following days.

Those wishing to attend and coming by rail will take the train on the Delaware R. R. Tuesday afternoon, leaving Delmar at 2:26, and Wilmington at 2:50. From Delmar get tickets to Felton; from the north to Woodside. It is desired to have some eight or ten from the northward get tickets for Hartley and Henderson, on the Maryland Branch, changing cars at Clayton. I would suggest that whatever company starts from Philadelphia and from Wilmington take this route, but they will need to take the morning Mail train. I now expect to be able to furnish orders for excursion tickets. The trains above named will be met, and all visiting friends cared for.

E. RITTENHOUSE, Pastor.

THE Salisbury Old School Baptist Association is appointed to be held with the church at Little Creek, Sussex Co., Del. to begin on Wednesday before the fourth Sunday in October (23d), 1895, and continue three days.

All lovers of the truth are cordially invited. Those from the north had better come on Tuesday. Trains leave Philadelphia at 7:20 and 10:20 a. m. and 3:30 p. m. Ticket for Delmar, via Delaware R. R. Those from the south, via N. Y., P. & N. R. R., can come Tuesday on the Express arriving at Delmar at 2:20 p. m., or Wednesday on the Mail train at 8:00 a. m. These trains will all be met and friends cared for.

A. B. FRANCIS, Pastor.

YEARLY MEETINGS.

THE Old School Baptist Church of Schoharie, N. Y., has appointed her yearly meeting to be held in her meeting-house on the fourth Sunday and Saturday previous in October (26th and 27th), at 10 o'clock a. m. each day.

Brethren and friends of our faith and order, and all who love the truth, are cordially invited to meet with us. Those who come on the cars will be met at Howe's Cave on the day before the meeting (Friday) and cared for.

G. W. GUERNSEY, Clerk.

THE yearly meeting of the Welsh Tract Church, at Newark, Delaware, is appointed to commence on Saturday before the third Sunday in October, 1895, at ten o'clock a. m., and continue two days.

Those coming from Philadelphia and Wilmington will come via B. & O. R. R., on train leaving Philadelphia, Twelfth and Market Sts., at 7:55 Saturday morning. Those coming from Baltimore will come via B. & O. R. R. Friday afternoon or Saturday at 8:55 a. m. All will be met at Newark, Delaware. We extend a cordial invitation to all who love the truth, and desire some of the ministering brethren who may be on their way to the Salisbury Association to meet with us.

PICTORIAL HISTORY
OF THE
UNITED STATES.
By James D. McCabe.

This work is no dry mass of details—no bombastic effort to inflame the national pride, but a vivid and brilliant narrative of the events of our history, from the discovery of the American Continent down to the present time. It gives a most interesting account of the Indians of North America, from the time of the coming of the white men. The voyages of Columbus and explorations and discoveries of the different nations of Europe are related with graphic power. Every step of our colonial history is traced with patient fidelity, and the sources of those noble and, we trust, enduring institutions, which have made our country free and great, are shown with remarkable clearness. Then follows a clear and succinct account of our great Struggle for Independence, and the establishment of the Federal Union—the events of our career from the close of the Revolution to the administration of Harrison.

The work is printed from plain, new type, on fine calendered paper, and comprised in one octavo volume of 960 pages. It is splendidly embellished with nearly 500 fine engravings, embracing battles and other historical scenes, portraits of distinguished men, views of our principal cities, &c., &c.

Bound in Fine Silk Cloth, Plain Edges, $2.00, Post-paid.

CORRESPONDENCE.

SOUTHAMPTON, Pa., Sept. 28, 1895.

DEAR BROTHER CHICK:—I have read your editorials in the SIGNS quite uniformly with that interest and gratification that is comforting to feel. My mind has followed you, as a general thing, with a perfect accord in the views and sentiments you have expressed. But some of the articles have been especially commended to my conscience, my understanding and my heart, by their manifestation of the truth in your manner of handling the word of God, by the directness and definiteness with which you have divided law from gospel, and by the searching out and witnessing to my experience in things that you have expressed. Of this kind I might mention the article I have just read in the number dated September 25th, in regard to the sentence of death upon Adam; that in September 18th upon "God's love and hate;" in August 28th in regard to "Calling on the name of the Lord," and others of still more interest farther back. I take pleasure in expressing to you my regard for what you have written, because of the more public and apparently more responsible position you now occupy as editor of the SIGNS. I may entertain the highest regard for the writings of brethren, on account of the instruction and comfort I have received through them, and not feel impressed to speak of it publicly, and, perhaps, not even privately.

If I should notice a difference between the views expressed by you editorially and those entertained by myself, on a point which I consider very important, I should unhesitatingly present my own views on the point of difference for your consideration, and that of the brethren at large, as I have done heretofore, and as you have done; and I should not consider an apology necessary for so doing. It is my belief that each one interested in a subject which is under mutual consideration, in a church, in a company of brethren engaged in conversation, or among correspondents of a periodical, should express his views upon it faithfully, if he has any, if he finds an appropriate occasion, and if he can do so in a kind and courteous manner. It ought not to be thought that one is inclined to find fault, and is unmindful of the feelings of the writer, and has not truly appreciated the many unquestionably good and comforting things that have been expressed, if he does not mention them, but speaks directly upon the point of difference.

It is pleasant in conference to speak of the comfort we have received through the communications of each other; but we do not write or speak for mutual commendation, but to do what seems given each of us to do in bringing forth the truth to the view of all, for our mutual instruction and comfort.

But my object in writing this letter is to speak of your editorial in the SIGNS of September 4th, entitled "Cannot sin." I read it with care and anxiety, for it has been a subject full of mystery to me, and yet one of the utmost importance. I could find no fault with your arguments and considerations as I went along with them. They seem to take up the questions fairly, and bring many excellent things to our minds. But when I read these two sentences, "He that is born of God must love God and his people, and cannot hate them," and, "The child of God loves, and does not, and cannot hate" (the Italics are mine), I said to myself, There must be something wrong, some mistake, something left out, in the consideration that will allow of these expressions. That would leave me out; for if I have not actually hated my brother I have been angry with him, and anger is a near kin to hatred. I have therefore concluded to ask you to look over the subject again and see if those expressions cannot be modified. I do not know as I can help you, for I have never been able to map these things out to my own satisfaction, and have never heard or seen what just answered my mind and feelings from any one but once, and that was when brother Balas Bundy preached upon the text, "Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin," &c., at the Baltimore Association many years ago. All the brethren, some of whom had expressed diverse views from each other on the subject, fell in with him, and rejoiced together in the truth he preached. But I cannot write what he preached. It has gone from my memory; but it did then, and has often since, I hope, watered my soul. I think there must be some distinction intended by the inspired apostle between the flesh and the spirit, and that he, like Paul, speaks sometimes of the man in his fleshly nature, and sometimes of him in his spiritual nature and standing. This apostle records these words of Jesus, "That which is born of the flesh is flesh, and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit." Mr. Philpot, the editor for many years of the Gospel Standard, often in speaking of this subject uses the expression, "The flesh, which is born of the flesh, and the spirit, which is born of the Spirit." I think such an expression is warranted by the language of the Savior quoted above. The christian is possessed of both flesh and spirit; the one manifested in his natural birth, born of the flesh, and the other manifested in his spiritual birth, born of the Spirit. The man, the Adamic man, in being born again, or from above, as the word "again" in that place means, is given a new, divine life, is quickened by that life, and is born, or brought forth, in that life of Jesus, from under the law of sin and death, into the liberty of the gospel. He now has the two natures in full, the one that was born of the flesh, and the one that was born of the Spirit; but "the elder shall serve the younger." "That was not first which is spiritual, but that which is natural; and afterward that which is spiritual." That which is spiritual shall henceforth be the true life of the man, the controlling principle, whose rule shall be ever manifest in its binding power upon the Adamic man, causing the christian to realize joy in the paths of obedience, or sorrow and death in a fleshly walk, until the power of "the last Adam," who "was made a quickening Spirit," over "the first Adam," who "was made a living soul," shall be fully and gloriously made known in changing "our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things unto himself."

Now the works of the flesh and the fruit of the Spirit are radically different, as the children, who "are partakers of flesh and blood," and also of the divine nature, sadly know. It is possible for the children to live after the flesh and die. The flesh is a region of death to them who have divine life, and while abiding in that they are separated from spiritual joys. It must be possible for a child of God to yield to the evil passion of his flesh and hate his brother, or else would the apostle have said, "He that hateth his brother abideth in death?" Only one who has been born of God has any brother to hate in this sense. In yielding to any of the fleshly lusts and evil propensities one is walking after the flesh.

I might hesitate to say I have ever really hated a brother. It hardly seems so. But I have been angry with one, and anger must be a near relation to hatred. While under the control of such a feeling there has never been any enjoyment of spiritual life, but a very bitter taste of death. With my flesh I was then serving the law of sin, but not with my mind the law of Christ. It must certainly be, as you say, that Paul and John refer to the same truth and the same experience in their different forms of expression. After Paul has enumerated the black list of the works of the flesh he says, "They which do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God." Can we understand the apostle as there teaching that no one will ever, after having been born of God, be overcome by any one of the works named there, wrath, strife, drunkenness, envyings, or any such like? I cannot think so. But he declares that there is no life to a child of God, but death, in such things. While walking thus they abide in death. "Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God;" and they who yield to the lusts of the flesh cannot at the same time enjoy anything of that spiritual inheritance. All of those evil works are in the flesh of every child of God, causing the warfare; so that the Lord's people "cannot do the things that they would," not being able to see in their fleshly natures the clearness of motive and desire which they long to, but seeming to see their best efforts and best thoughts tainted by the corruption of their natnres. It is not simply, as some have said, the literal flesh only, and not the mind and heart, of a child of God that is corrupt. A review of the list of evil works named by the apostle (Gal. v. 19–21) will show to any one that a mind and heart are involved.

But the apostle says, "Walk in the Spirit, and ye shall not fulfill the lusts of the flesh." And again, "If ye be led of the Spirit, ye are not under the law." When he has named the sweet cluster of the fruit of the Spirit he says, "Against such there is no law." Then he exhorts thus, "If we live in the Spirit, let us also walk in the Spirit," and exhorts the saints not to provoke and envy one another. Now, all this appears to me to indicate that the apostle regards the child of God, or the christian, as liable to walk after the flesh, to fulfill its lusts, to envy and hate and devour one another, and thus to subject himself to the stripes which are promised to disobedient children (Psalm lxxxix.), and to that fearful looking for of the judgments which the law denounces upon offenders; for only when led by the Spirit are we assured that we are not under the law. While in subjection to the flesh we "abide in death."

"They that are Christ's have crucified the flesh, with the affections and lusts." Crucifixion is a painful, lingering death. Every movement of the crucified one, every indulgence of the flesh that is crucified, causes the christian to feel excessive pain. "Our old man is crucified with Christ;" therefore the old man should be put off as a leader, for he can only lead into sorrow and death. The new man is created in righteousness and true holiness, and has no part in the sinful thought or act. When we put on the new man, are directed by the divine life, walk in Christ, we do not, cannot sin. Our walk and conversation are then pure and holy. Does not the apostle refer to the child of God in his spiritual nature when he says, "He cannot sin," and to the same child of God in his Adamic or carnal nature when he speaks of him as having sin? Viewed in that spiritual life the christian cannot sin, because "the holy seed" (Isa. vi. 13) "remaineth in him, and he cannot sin, because he is born of God." Also in this divine nature, viewed as in Christ, he is not under "the law of sin and death," having been delivered from it by "the law of the Spirit of life which is in Christ Jesus;" therefore he cannot sin against that law. This seems to be the meaning in 1 John iii. 4, 20; Gal. v. 18; Rom. vi. 14. But this same man is spoken of by both apostles as sinning. Do they not thus refer to him as in the fleshly nature, to which he is liable to yield, and to become for a season subjected to his sorrow and pain? Paul charges the Corinthians with being carnally minded; thus showing, as he does in other places, that the christian has a carnal mind. But "the carnal mind is enmity against God." The worst of lusts and evil propensities are in it. Therefore "to be carnally minded is death" to a christian. It was a child of God whom Paul told the Corinthians to "deliver unto Satan for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit might be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus."—1 Cor. v. 5. John says, "He that committeth sin is of the devil." All sin is from, or caused by, the devil. But the apostle must be talking for the comfort of a child of God, who has been, or is liable to be, brought under the power of guilt and sin, suffering in his conscience under an account of having been overcome by the works of the devil manifested in his flesh, and of having been controlled by the wisdom of the world, which is "earthly, sensual, devilish;" for he says, for the comfort of such an one, "If our heart condemn us, God is greater than our heart, and knoweth all things;" knoweth us in Christ, in the "everlasting covenant ordered in all things and sure," from which even sin and the devil can never remove us; at the same time he shows how much happier is our present condition when our hearts do not condemn us for sins and transgressions. He also says, for the comfort of those who have been led away by the wiles of the devil to commit sin, "If any man sin, we have an Advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous." We, when tempted of the devil, are liable to be overcome in our own earthly nature, and sin. But Jesus endured all the fullness of the devil's power to tempt, and was not overcome in his earthly nature, but remained pure and spotless in "the likeness of sinful flesh" in which he was made, without one sinful thought or one unholy emotion, though feeling every weakness, every infirmity, every temptation, that any of his people shall ever feel, and also all the guilt and terror and filth of their sins. His holy life, his resistance of Satan's temptations, his death under the curse, his resurrection from the dead, his triumph over sin and death, his everlasting righteousness and glory, are given to his people, and are seen and felt by faith while they are here, and are all in that Spirit which he gives us. This is our Advocate. And the apostle says, "The blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth us from all sin;" and, "If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." When Paul says, "It is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me," he would seem to be speaking of the things which the christian constantly sees in himself of sin in thought and word and deed, on account of which he "cannot do the things that he would," causing him often to cry, "O wretched man that I am!" and from the trouble of which he can only realize deliverance when Jesus is revealed to his faith as his righteousness and salvation. When he is dealing with such transgressors as the one in the Corinthian Church, or the sinners who are to be "rebuked sharply," "rebuked before all," he uses language that comes down upon them as a rod of correction. They have yielded to the flesh, are walking in the counsel of the ungodly, have sold their birthright, have gone to sleep, have built hay, wood and stubble in their religious work. The works of the devil are clearly seen in the one who committeth sin. His power is seen in our flesh when we do his works. But "Jesus was manifested to destroy the works of the devil," and his power is, and shall be, gloriously seen and felt by the poor soul who has in his earthly nature gone so far in transgression. In God's own time the divine nature in him shall shine forth in all its power; and when God with rebukes corrects him for iniquity, the beauty of his flesh shall be made to consume away like the moth (Psalm xxxix. 11); it shall wither and fade like the grass, when the Spirit of the Lord bloweth upon it. Humble and contrite, feeble and sore broken, he shall be gathered again to the fold, and shall realize with tender thankfulness the great mercy that has given him a sure dwelling place in Christ, in the covenant of love and salvation, from which even sin and a vile nature shall never utterly take him away; that has for him destroyed the works of the devil, made an end of sin, and brought in everlasting righteousness.

I do not regard what I have written as at all controverting the views you have expressed. I have no controversy with them. I do not know that I have thrown any additional light upon the subject, but some of the thoughts I have expressed may be helpful to others in time of trial, as they have been to me. My only suggestion of an amendment would be to say, "The child of God, in his spiritual nature, cannot hate." This might be better for those who have fearful doubts at times when they see all the works of the flesh, named by the apostle in Gal. v., within themselves, and especially when they see some of them worked out, to their dismay and sorrow.

Your brother in christian love and fellowship,

SILAS H. DURAND.

EDITORIAL REMARKS.—We gladly and cordially commend the above letter from brother Durand to all readers of the SIGNS. We doubt not that it will be carefully read, and that it will prove a source of true spiritual joy to many. We trust that its reading has been blessed to us. In the editorial to which brother Durand refers we said that difficulties seemed to us to meet any and every view of the text upon which we were writing, that we had ever seen; and we did not think that we had solved all difficulties. Is it not true that when we undertake to set forth the meaning of any Scripture in any other words than those of the Scripture, we always find difficulties in the way? At the best we see but in part, and know but in part, and therefore we can speak but in part.

We certainly do not object to the amendment proposed by brother Durand near the close of his article, "The child of God in his spiritual nature cannot hate." We think it needful to add that in the editorial referred to our object was to present the ruling principle. We sought to say that while a child of God might and did feel every evil passion within him, including anger, hatred, &c., yet sin did not reign. Sin had once reigned indeed unto death, but now grace reigns through righteousness unto eternal life. In other words, love reigns in the child of God, and not hate.

Brother Durand says that he does not have any controversy with what we wrote in the editorial; and as we have read and re-read his excellent letter, we are sure that we have no controversy with it.

We cannot close these remarks without saying that we are not worthy of the kind words which brother Durand has used toward us in his letter. We do thank God and take courage. His letter found us low down in feeling, and it has cheered us. C.

CRAMER, Ill., Sept. 1, 1895.

VERY DEAR BROTHER CHICK:—I have just received the SIGNS for August 28th, and read your editorial, "Calling upon the name of the Lord," which gave me much comfort and uplifting in my little hope; so much so that I felt constrained to lay the paper down and write a few lines to you. I do feel to thank and praise God for the comfort and consolation he has given his dear children, in enabling you to comfort his poor and afflicted people that he has left here in this world of affliction and sorrow. I believe that I never before have read or received so heartfelt a witness within me as I did when I read that. I could say Amen in my poor soul. While I have always felt, since I received a hope, that I have no gift in prayer, yet, in your precious words, I am praying all the time, from sore need. Often when I go bowed down, groaning in this tabernacle, being burdened, I am continually calling upon the Lord; yet often not a sound escapes my lips. A broken heart and a contrite spirit he will not despise. Yes, as you say, I feel to be such a poor sinner, and my lips are so unclean, how dare I attempt so great a matter? I have often been called upon by my dear brethren to call upon the Lord in a public manner, and I have always feared and trembled, as it is so solemn a matter. I feel that the Lord has given me no gift for that. I can only smite upon my breast and cry, "Unclean." "God, be merciful to me, a sinner." I feel to shrink, for which I often feel to condemn myself. I think, Surely I can have no hope, or it would not be so. Yet I do feel that I pray always as I travel along from day to day. I am the least and vilest of all, if it is possible that I am a saint. But I now feel much encouraged with my little hope. I feel to praise God's holy name for the precious gifts he has given his people for their edification and comfort throughout all time, apostles, prophets, pastors and teachers. I often receive comfort in reading the Scriptures, the experience of the saints of old, of the sore trials they endured. So I need not think it strange concerning the fiery trials. They are all needful; and if we are without them, then are we bastards and not sons. I often think, Why should we doubt our hope so much, when we have so much testimony in the Scriptures that we are born of God? Do we not know of a truth that we love the brethren, all those that have been taught of the Lord? All have the same parents, being born of God, of that incorruptible seed. Then behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us! It is a free gift to poor, hell-deserving sinners. What a comfort it is when the dear children get together, and their dear heavenly Father is with them. O what love! Their tongues cannot express it. They are filled with praise. There are no big ones among us, but each esteems others better than themselves. They tell of the love and tender mercy of their heavenly Father. Can we not say at such a time, "We know that we are of God, and the whole world lieth in wickedness?" And, "I know that my Redeemer liveth;" and that when this earthly house of our tabernacle is dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. We know that we once were blind, but now we see. We see and feel our need of a great Savior. When there was no eye to pity, when we felt we must forever perish, he appeared as the chiefest among ten thousand, and the one altogether lovely.

"O for such love let rocks and hills
Their lasting silence break."

He has taken us up out of a horrible pit, and has put a new song in our mouth, and has given us a new name. And we have not grown tired of hearing of that new song, salvation by sovereign grace. He is our all; we have nowhere else to go. "There is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved." This glorious song we love to sing and talk of. All these are taught of the Lord, and great is their peace. It is a heaven below their Redeemer to know. There is so much beauty in their dearly beloved Savior that they have no desire to seek any other.

I have just returned from our association, Spoon River. We had a glorious sitting together in a heavenly place. The gospel was preached very ably by the ministers whom God has called and placed on the walls of Zion. All was peace. We felt that it was good to be there. We drank freely of that glorious fountain, and felt to rejoice that our God liveth.

Dear brother I feel ashamed of myself. I intended to write but a few lines when I sat down, but my pen and mind have run to what you see. You will please pardon the length. I feel that I can encourage you that your labor is not in vain in the place you now stand as an editor. I have no doubt but the good Lord has put you there. May he keep you, so that you may not waver to the right or left, but stand firm, ever contending for the faith once delivered to the saints. I feel to love you for the truth's sake. The spirit you manifest is very Christlike. When he was reviled, he reviled not. A meek and humble spirit is of great price. I feel that the Lord has put this spirit in you, and greatly blessed you, so that you have comforted many of God's poor, little ones. May the Lord keep us all in his fear, contending for the faith, and may we not fall out by the way. Farewell.

E. D. VARNES.

REMARKS.—Such letters as the above from brother Varnes are very encouraging. We do not doubt that the children of God, all of them, have more or less just such trials and joys as he has experienced. The things of which brother Varnes writes are such as pertain to vital godliness. We most truly desire to possess the same meek and humble spirit. We trust that it is also our prayer to be guided in the way of true wisdom in our relation to the SIGNS; and in this we speak for brother Jenkins and brother Beebe, as well as for ourself. We desire brethren to feel free to expres any dissent from what we may write, which they may feel, as well as when they can agree. We desire to be right, but have to confess that we have often found ourselves mistaken.

GHENT, Ky., Feb. 13, 1895.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS OF THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES:—With this I mail to you a letter from brother E. F. Ransdell. To me it was deeply interesting, because it points out the road in which all the dear people of God are led while on their earthly pilgrimage, and brother Ransdell gives to God all the glory for leading them in ways they have not known, and in paths they have not seen. Surely when called from the vanities of earth, and enabled by grace divine to behold and know that Jesus is the way, the truth and the life, they were led in a way they knew not. Then they were made to know that the law is holy, and the commandment holy, just and good, but they are carnal, sold under sin. But glory to the exalted name of Jesus, that is the way that leads to God. Then they give to him the glory due to his name, and their chief desire is to be able to bring an acceptable offering into his courts. Before led in this heavenly way they ascribed the glory to themselves, and made all their offerings to the law, and relied upon their vain attempts to keep that law. But when the spirituality of that law was made manifest to them they learned that by the law is the knowledge of sin. It only revealed to them the knowledge of sin, and therefore had no saving power. Then, beholding Jesus as the end of the law for righteousness unto every one that believeth, they were led into a new and living way. That is the way about which the poet sings most sweetly,

"This is the way I long have sought,
And mourned because I found it not;
Till late I heard my Savior say,
Come hither, soul, I am the Way."

I mail to you brother Ransdell's letter for publication, trusting that some feeble one like I am may read it and take courage by the way as I have. But my chief object in writing was to say to brother Ransdell that an attempt on my part to comply with his request to give to the readers of the SIGNS a sketch of my life and experience, with a few historical facts that have occurred among the Baptists, as relating to churches and associations, I am satisfied would prove of little value. During the long period, now sixty-four years, in which I have had a name among the Baptists, many divisions have occurred among the churches and associations, all of which were productive of trouble and sorrow, and to recount those troubles would not be productive of enjoyment to the saints; and a sketch of my poor, uneventful life, and of my experience, if I have any in sacred things, would be even less in value. When I read the dealings of the Lord with his dear saints, given in their published experiences, I am often made to fear that I know nothing of the Lord's leading of his people out of nature's night into the glorious light and liberty of the gospel, and to say,

"I am so vile, so prone to sin,
I fear that I'm not born again."

Affectionately yours,

H. COX.

NEW CASTLE, Ky., Feb. 5, 1895.

H. COX—DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST:—Your letter is to hand, and after a long delay I will endeavor to answer. I assure you I was indeed glad to hear from you, as your letters always come laden with the good things of the kingdom of our God. This life is short at best, and you are now nearing the end of your earthly pilgrimage. Before you go hence I desire, my dear brother, to express to you in writing, as I do not get to see you often in person, my sincere thanks for all your labors by pen to me, and also through our beloved paper, the SIGNS OF THE TIMES; and I know that all will heartily subscribe to the same. I believe it has all been directed by the Spirit's power and the love you entertain for the children of the blessed Master. I have never read a communication from your pen but that I could see Jesus in it, and gather a crumb of the good things that fall from the Master's table. I again ask a favor, if not too much trouble, to give through the SIGNS a short sketch of your life and experience, with a few historical facts that have occurred among the Baptists during your identification with them, as relating to churches and associations. May God direct you in all things the remainder of your days, and comfort you by his Spirit's power, and at last receive you with "Well done, good and faithful servant; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

Now, dear brother, I believe God is an almighty Sovereign, the governor and director of all things, so as to promote his own glory, and the comfort and happiness of the church of Christ; for "The eternal God is thy refuge, and underneath are the everlasting arms." I believe it is God by his holy Spirit that quickens and makes alive the sinner who is dead in trespasses and sins. This is true, for Paul says, "You hath he quickened, who were dead in trespasses and sins." This quickening or life-giving power is beyond the reach of the arm of poor, mortal man, or anything that we can do to obtain it; for "the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." It is "hid with Christ in God," "ready to be revealed in the last time." When Christ is preached in the Spirit's power the child of God has a knowledge of God, its Father, by that Spirit that dwells in him. "Christ in you the hope of glory." When Christ, who is our life, appears, we are bound to give all honor and praise unto him for leading us out of darkness into his marvelous light. We rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory, for Christ dwells in our hearts by faith, and strengthens us with might by his Spirit in the inner man. Jesus is revealed to the eye of faith; and when we see him we realize his power, gladness takes the place of sorrow, and we rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory. "For it is God which worketh in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure." "All thy children shall be taught of the Lord, and great shall be the peace of thy children."

Dear brother, I hope I have been taught by the great Teacher, and that Chriet dwells in me the hope of glory. For by this I have a knowledge of sin, and trust in Christ as the way of life and salvation, and have no confidence in the sinful flesh of Adam; for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be; that I am a wretched sinner indeed; that none are so vile as I; that I trust all to Jesus for life and salvation. This, my brother, I think is God's predestination; and when the Lord's afflicted ones are led in the right way they trust alone to him, and abide by all things as the God of the whole earth sees fit to bestow upon them.

Lest I weary you I will close, hoping to hear from you again. I am your brother in christian love,

ERNEST F. RANSDELL.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS:—I will try to pen a few thoughts which have been comforting to me upon the following Scripture, and if you think they will be of any benefit to any one you may publish them; if not all is well.

"They say unto him, Lord, that our eyes may be opened. So Jesus had compassion on them, and touched their eyes; and immediately their eyes received sight, and they followed him."—Matt. xx. 33, 34. How these words of the blind men bring

FROM EGYPT TO CANAAN.

SOME time last spring, while in conversation with Dr. Emory, of Middletown, N. Y., the subject of the spiritual import of the journey of Israel from Egypt through the Red Sea and the wilderness to Canaan came up, and after some pleasant interchange of thought he requested that we should present some thoughts through the SIGNS upon it. This we feel like now doing, begging brother Emory to excuse our seeming neglect of his request, and also to excuse this response if it should seem fragmentary and unsatisfactory. Of course but a mere sketch can be expected of us in considering a subject so vast.

From our childhood this journey of Israel from the "house of their bondage" has seemed wonderfully interesting to us. All the types and shadows of that shadowy dispensation have rested much upon our mind. We recall with what delight we used to hang upon the words of the late Elder W. J. Purington when he would discourse upon the types, as all who were accustomed to hearing him know that he loved to do. While we have sometimes written and spoken of them, yet we have never felt that we had much understanding of them, and have ever felt compelled to speak diffidently of them. Of late years we have felt to speak less confidently as to the meaning of some of them than we used to in former years. But still we trust that now and then we have been favored with some glimpses of their meaning; and in our conversation with brother Emory, referred to above, we felt as though we were enabled to gain some instruction concerning the subject named at the head of this editorial. We will briefly sketch the matter as it has appeared to us; and we would be more than glad if the minds of other brethren were stirred up to also write concerning it.

It has seemed to us that there is a connected chain in the narrative of Israel's journey from Egypt to Canaan which will compare link for link with every personal experience of the grace of God. Egypt, the Red Sea, Sinai, Jordan, Canaan, with Moses from Egypt to Jordan, and Joshua through Jordan into the possession of Canaan, all these are links in this chain, of which we wish to briefly write.

Egypt with its bondage and death stands at the head and opens the narrative. It is the home of the Egyptians, but the house of bondage to Israel; and it is of Israel in her relation to Egypt that the narrative speaks. Egypt sets forth this world, which is such a delight to those who belong to it, and who are of the world. Carnal men eat of its flesh-pots, of its leeks and onions and garlic, and are satisfied. If they want anything more it is a still greater abundance of what Egypt produces. But there are a people here who are not of Egypt. Moses was a representative of this people. All that Egypt could afford of its very highest and best was his. So far as we read, until faith came he was content, and felt no bondage. But faith separated him from Egypt, and from all that had been his delight; and while he might continue to abide for a time in Egypt, yet he could nevermore be of it in feeling or desire. So God has a chosen people in the world; yet they are not of the world, in the sense that they are the Lord's elect people. Yet, until faith comes, they are content to be called the children of the world, and to grow and thrive upon what the world has to give. They, as well as the non-elect, eat and drink of the world and its delights. They are by nature children of wrath, even as others.

But there came a time when Israel began to be in bondage, when Egypt was no longer home to them. Now began a new experience to them. They could no longer rest. Enmity sprang up against them in Egypt. Their tasks grew heavy, and their supplies less. It was the work of God; it could not be helped. Their nest must be stirred up. They must be driven out of Egypt; they must find another home. Egypt cannot help hating Israel. Cain hated Abel, and slew him. Thus the people of God must be separated. Thus they must come to realize their high and holy birthright. Thus they must learn that Canaan is their true home. In all this there is a setting forth of the beginnings of that experience which separates the people of God from the world, and brings them at last to inhabit the land of gospel rest.

Thus they begin their journey out of Egypt. The going out of Israel in outward life is but the result of a work in their hearts, completed before it is seen in action. Experience must precede conduct. Faith must precede works. They are made first to want to go out, and then comes the going; and then the Red Sea. God will first of all teach his people that "the way of man is not in himself; it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps." Israel must learn to know that it is the Lord who triumphs gloriously, who overthrows the horse and his rider in the sea. Israel is led by the guidance of God to the Red Sea. It is not by their will or choice that they come thither. The purpose of God brought them to the sea, and the purpose of God brought them through. The one was no more his purpose than the other. He brings them to the Red Sea, that he may show them his power, and that he may fulfill his purpose concerning Pharaoh. They do not know why he has brought them to this place until afterward. We never do know why the Lord works as he does until afterward. Moses could see only his back parts. Of one thing we may be sure: the Red Sea represents a difficulty, an obstacle that is insurmountable to Israel's puny efforts. The people of God in experience must learn the lesson of entire dependence upon God. Sooner or later as they come up out of Egypt they must learn their own entire insufficiency. They must learn that they must stand still and see the salvation which God bestows. We do not know how many such places the people of God may meet where they learn that the Lord brings his people out with a high hand and an outstretched arm; but there comes a time at last to all when the Egypt of this world presents itself to them no longer as a friend, but as a deadly foe, pursuing them to destroy them, and when they cannot fight against it nor flee from it, and there seems to be no escape. This is christian experience. This each child of God comes to feel for himself. The world never seemed so dreadful as now. All its vain delights are gone; all is forbidding and full of frowns. This is the final step in the separation from the world. Israel is driven out. She wants not the world, nor does the world want Israel. Now God delivers Israel. The Red Sea, which was their greatest difficulty, now becomes the destruction of their foes, and the everlasting barrier between them and Egypt. "The Egyptians that ye see this day ye shall see no more forever." The child of God can never live in the world again; he cannot go back. God has spoken, and the work is done. No matter how fleshly or worldly he may become, he can dwell in the Egypt of this world no more. He may lust after the leeks and onions and garlic, but God has called him to higher things. He can no longer live upon this bread. The heavenly manna is now his proper food.

Thus far they have seemed to know little about themselves, except that Egypt had become a place of bondage, and nothing at all about the law of God; but now Israel must be taught to know themselves. The Lord will prove them, to see whether they will keep his commandments or not. He does not need this proof, but Israel does. The Lord knew what was in their hearts, but they did not. He knew how stiff-necked and rebellious they were, but they were in ignorance of themselves; therefore God will search them and prove them, that he may humble them, and cause them to take their true place before him as sinners, and confess that he is holy in all his judgments. Therefore they must visit Sinai. Therefore they must hear his law; and amid thunders and lightnings and clouds of darkness the law was given by Moses. It was not given them to keep, but to prove them, to reveal them. By the law was the knowledge of sin. By it their rebellion of heart was disclosed.

We said that the law was not given them to keep or to fully obey. It was the perfect will of God revealed, which fallen man could not keep. The substance of it, repeated by Moses again and again, was, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy powers, and thy neighbor as thyself." This law was holy and just and good; but they were carnal, sold under sin. Jehovah knew that they could not keep it, and he would have them know it also. They were vile, and God would make them to know that they were. He would teach them their rebellion, so that they might learn their need of his mercy. Paul has defined the use of the law when he declares that it could not give life, but that by it was the knowledge of sin.

As Israel then must meet the law, so must Israel now. It is a needful part of all christian experience. In most instances there begins to be a restlessness, an unhappiness, a cutting off from the world, so that the soul hardly knows what is the matter. The world loses its charms, and yet the soul feels to be a captive to the world. Then, as the time of separation comes, and the soul feels that it can never be of the world as it has once been, there begins this new experience of sin and guilt. The soul must hear the law of God; and the law reveals sin. The law also teaches the soul its weakness, that the commandment is so exceeding broad that its requirements can never be met by fallen man; and so the soul is brought to the further experience of becoming dead to the law. "For I," says Paul, "through the law am dead to the law." We must know the law, that we may become dead to the law. But the law is not evil; the law is not our enemy. Sin is the one evil thing; sin is our enemy. So Paul can testify that the law is good; that it is not made death to us, but that sin deceives and slays us. So David could say, "O how I love thy law." Yet we become dead to the law, and learn that we cannot be saved and justified by it, but by grace only. Therefore we have become dead to the law by the body of Christ, that we might live unto God. So we learn the lessons taught at Sinai; and having before been cut off from the world, we are now cut off from the law.

Israel had already begun their journey before the law was given, but henceforth it would abide with them through all the wilderness to the brink of Jordan. All this weary way God proved them again and again, and always to the shame and reproach of his people. They were still under the law, and often its vengeance fell upon them. God cared for them; and while he chastised them, yet they could not perish. They were the Lord's own treasure. What a volume of experience the narrative of the forty years' journey sets forth! Some things are plain. Their folly and the forbearance of God toward them, their unbelief and God's faithfulness, their rebellion and God's love to them, are seen in every page of the narrative. This is all the work of the law. The law never could give them rest, because they could never fulfill it. There is coming a land of rest, but they have not found it yet. They cannot find and enter it while Moses lives. There is no entering into rest under the law; and so they toil on, and their carcasses fall in the wilderness, until the appointed day draws near. All are more or less familiar with this narrative of literal Israel in the wilderness. It seems to us to be a type of a time of wandering which each quickened soul experiences under the law, by which they learn to know the pride, worldliness and rebellion of their own hearts. Israel's wandering lasted forty years. Ours may be but a day in point of time, but yet it is long enough to prove us before God, and show us how rebellious we are, and prepare us for entering into rest when it shall be revealed. Thus far Moses has been our leader.

But now a change is at hand. Jordan lies just before them, and between them and the promised land. It will be seen that we are but giving a hasty sketch of such thoughts as we have concerning this matter, and so we will briefly suggest some things with reference to Jordan. It lay between Israel, in the wilderness of their wanderings under the law, and the promised land of their inheritance, the land of Canaan. Notwithstanding the sentiment of the hymn so familiar to all, "On Jordan's stormy banks I stand," &c., which makes Jordan an emblem of death, and Canaan a type of heaven, yet it is a fact that Jordan is not an emblem of death, nor Canaan a type of heaven. Jordan means not "river of death," but "river of judgment;" and Canaan could not be a type of heaven, because there will be in heaven no Canaanites to dispute its possession with the redeemed. Canaan is a type of that rest into which those who believe in Jesus enter by faith, in which nevertheless there is a life-long warfare to be waged against the lusts of the flesh, the world and Satan, the Canaanites which dwell in our land. Moses (the law) could not lead Israel into their rest. Joshua (the Hebrew name for Jesus) must bring Israel through this river of judgment. Joshua alone could stay its waters, so that Israel should not be overwhelmed with its flood. It was at its full flood when they arrived at its banks. The full volume of its waters was ready to destroy all who should come to cross. Israel unassisted could not cross over; but at the bidding of God, when the priests, bearing the ark of the covenant, stepped down to its brink, the waters were stayed. Under Joshua their leader Israel crossed over in safety; not one perished. Then the ark was borne on up out of Jordan, and the waters rolled on as before. No other people ever crossed it as Israel did; and Israel never crossed it in that way again. Canaan is entered, and Israel's rest there is begun.

Some things seem clear to us in this. We learn that the law cannot lead any man into rest. Jesus only can do this. Moses can be the leader of Israel no farther than to Jordan's bank. Israel cannot enter rest without meeting and crossing this river of judgment. The judgment of God shuts them out from rest, and overwhelms all who feel the power of its waves. But there is a covenant ordered in all things and sure, which has power to arrest this Jordan; and there is a leader who can bring us safely through. The waves of this Jordan of judgment can do Israel no harm now. The atonement, the finished work of redemption, the fulfilled covenant, stands secure. Not one of Jordan's waves shall roll over it; and while it stands no chosen vessel of mercy shall perish. When the soul in experience approaches the brink of this judgment, and beholds its swelling tide, it may well start back affrighted; but how is this alarm changed into joy and confidence and praise when by faith God is pleased to show to them this completed redemption, this fulfilled covenant, and that Jesus their leader is before them. Thus experimentally do they pass through this judgment and enter their home. As Israel never was called to thus cross over Jordan again, so the saints of God shall never be called to face the judgment of God again. As Israel could not pass over by any power of their own, so believers first cease from their own works, and then through Jesus they enter into rest; and as Israel after entering into this rest must all their life fight against the Canaanite, so must the child of God, like Paul, experience a warfare as long as he retains this house of flesh.

We have but sketched a few thoughts. They present but mere outlines of the subject. We trust that they are according to truth, and that they may prove of interest to brother Emory and others. The field is very broad, and we have but gleaned here and there a little from it. Few as are our gleanings, we trust they are gleanings of wheat, and not of tares.

C.

JOHN XII. 32.

"AND I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me."

In the next succeeding verse we are told in a parenthesis that "This he said, signifying what death he should die." His being lifted up therefore must relate to his being crucified on the cross. The manner of crucifixion was to nail the hands and feet of the victim to the cross, and then raise up the cross to a perpendicular, and insert the foot of it into a hole made in the earth. It seems that his allusion to this mode of suffering was readily understood by the people to whom he had addressed the words of our text, for they answered him, "We have heard out of the law that Christ abideth forever; and how sayest thou that the Son of man must be lifted up?" This figure of speech also accords with his allusion to the lifting up of the serpent in the wilderness by Moses, as a type of himself.—See John iii. 14, 15.

As we apprehended no difficulty in understanding the illustration of the text thus far, we will pass to notice the certainty that he was to be thus lifted up. The "if" which occurs in the text, under other circumstances might imply a doubt whether he should certainly be so lifted up; but in this case it implies no such doubt. The connection shows that the people addressed understood him to signify that the Son of man must be lifted up; and these are his very words in John iii. 14, "Even so must the Son of man be lifted up." Nothing can be more clearly demonstrated by the Scriptures than the fixed certainty of his crucifixion and all the circumstances connected with its manner, &c. His murderers came together to do what God's hand and counsel had before determined should be done. And he was delivered up according to the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God. His own exposition of the sum of all that was written in the law and the prophets and in the psalms showed that "Thus it behooved him to suffer, and to rise again on the third day," &c.

The next thing to be considered is the declaration, "I will draw all men unto me." In a literal point of light this was fulfilled when he was crucified, as we find established, Acts iv. 26–28. Both Herod and Pontius Pilate, with the Gentiles and the men of Israel, were gathered together on this occasion; and as the Jews and Gentiles represented all men, they were there all represented. But in our view of the subject there is a far more important sense in which these words hold good. It was provided in the divine arrangement that when he should be thus lifted up, when he should pour out his soul unto death, he should see his seed prolong his days, and the pleasure of the Lord should prosper in his hands. His seed should be known among the Gentiles as well as the Jews; and when he should see of the travail of his soul and be satisfied, all his seed from every tribe, kindred and tongue under heaven must be there assembled and represented in him. They were one with him in his death, and one with him in his resurrection. Nor came they to him by any other power; the centre of attraction was in him. "I will draw all men unto me." This language was applicable unto those who were personally present, and to their children, and unto all that were afar off, "even as many as the Lord our God shall call." In the 24th verse he said, "Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone; but if it die it bringeth forth much fruit." As the germ of vegetable life is in the corn of wheat, so all the spiritual life of his church was in him; so that when he died they were all dead; and for their redemption, deliverance and final manifestation as the sons of God it was as expedient for him to die, as in the figure employed, for a corn of wheat to fall into the earth and die.

But, in the third place, we understand the declaration, "I will draw all men unto me," to express a certain pledge that he would in an experimental sense draw the subjects of this redemption unto him. In regard to the limited sense in which the words "all men" are here used, the apostle has fully settled the matter, 1 Cor. i. 22–24, wherein he speaks of the preaching of the lifting up or crucifixion of Christ, and the effects of it on both Jews and Greeks, or Gentiles, that it is to the former a stumbling-block, and to the latter foolishness; but unto them which are called, both Jews and Greeks, Christ the power of God and the wisdom of God. When the Son of God calls and makes the dead hear his voice, he quickens them; and being thus made alive, they first discover the purity and spirituality of the law, and by it they are slain. They feel and acknowledge the justness of their condemnation by the law, and are cut off from all hope of being saved by works of righteousness which they can do; and they sink down in hopeless despair, until the Son of man, "lifted up," is presented; not as some have said, "on the pole of the gospel," for the gospel has no pole to it; but on the cross—Christ and his cross. Christ and him crucified is revealed to them as their Savior, and they are drawn to him by the attractive power which he possesses. They are drawn away from every legal system, from looking for salvation to their own wills, or works, or cries, or tears, or prayers; drawn to him as the only name given under heaven among men whereby they must be saved.

Once more, these words may also embrace the doctrine of the final resurrection of the last day. "All that the Father giveth me shall come to me." "No man can come to me except the Father which hath sent me draw him, and I will raise him up at the last day."—John vi. 44.

Finally, we understand that the salvation of all the people of God, whether Jew or Gentile, of whatever tribe or tongue, depended on the lifting up of the Son of man, and that his lifting up has secured their redemption effectually and forever. His intercession for them is also founded on the offering that he has made for them in being thus lifted up from the earth. "I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do." "Glorify thou me with thine own self, with the glory which I had with thee before the world was." "Father, I will that they also whom thou hast given me be with me where I am, that they may behold my glory." He shall be satisfied, and they shall be with him, and they shall see his glory and enjoy his presence for evermore.

PRONOUNCING BIBLES.

IN addition to the list of Bibles published on last page we wish to call especial attention to the PRONOUNCING BIBLES, containing Old and New Testaments, King James Version, with marginal references. All the proper names of every person or place in these Bibles are divided into syllables, and accented as they should be pronounced, enabling the reader to readily pronounce correctly the most difficult names of persons and places.

These books are 11x13 inches, and range in price from $5.50 to $20.00, according to binding, the contents of all being the same. The books being too large and heavy to be sent by mail, we will express them at our expense at the following prices, viz.:

No. 51. Bound in American Morocco, Arabesque, gilt edges, $5.50.

No. 53. French Morocco, padded, round corners, gilt edges, $8.00.

No. 55. Extra Morocco, beveled, rolled edge, gilt edges, $12.00.

No. 59. Levant Morocco, padded sides, raised bands, silk sewed, round corners, red under gold edges, $20.00.

For pulpit use these Bibles are especially adapted, and our brethren in the ministry would find it a great convenience to have one on the desk.

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE.

TO MOST of our readers the above mentioned book is too well known to need any introduction or a description by us. While many of the Bibles have a Concordance appended, they are generally so condensed or abridged as to be of little or no use. Cruden's Complete Concordance, however, enables one to readily turn to any passage of Scripture of which they can call to mind two or three words, and in our opinion is the most complete and convenient as a reference book of any published. In addition, it contains many other aids in studying the Bible, as may be seen by reference to advertisement on last page. Remember, both the books there mentioned are CRUDEN'S COMPETE.

to view the experience of God's children when they in their sorrow and grief called upon Jesus in the same words. How they remember the anguish of their souls when made to realize their blindness; and after all human skill had failed to give them sight, Jesus passed that way, touched their eyes, and immediately they received sight, and beheld his glory. None have ever beheld his glory but those who have received sight, as the blind cannot see; and none have ever received sight without his grace and mercy. Nicodemus said to Jesus, "No man can do these miracles that thou doest, except God be with him." How true are these words. We will see that the miracles Jesus wrought in healing the sick were beyond all human skill. All those incurable diseases are figurative of sin, of which Jesus is the only physician. The leper was never cleansed, nor the withered hand restored, nor the dead raised, nor did the blind receive sight, but by him; nor did ever the devils obey the command of any man except this "man Christ Jesus," to whom all glory, praise and honor is given by those whom he has healed. All power and honor is his, in heaven and in earth. When Jesus taught his disciples to pray to the Father, saying, "Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven," I understand the earth spoken of here to have reference to his people, who are of the earth, and to the same they must return. "Thy will be done in earth," in me, O God, has never come from the heart of any but those whom Jesus has taught to pray. There is none who can pray except as taught of him. This truth is set forth in the "two men who went up into the temple to pray; the one a Pharisee, and the other a publican. The Pharisee stood and prayed thus with himself, God, I thank thee that I am not as other men are, extortioners, unjust, adulterers, or even as this publican. I fast twice in the week, I give tithes of all that I possses. And the publican, standing afar off, would not lift up so much as his eyes unto heaven, but smote upon his breast, saying, God, be merciful to me, a sinner." The publican recieved his sight, and his redemption was complete in the precious blood of Jesus. This prayer of the publican was characteristic of every child of God. The publican had been taught of God. How wonderful are the teachings of God, and how vain are the teachings of men, and how abominable their works in the sight of God, whose grace and mercy has forever redeemed the sinner, and not the works of men, lest they should boast. How different is the experience of those who boast in their own works, from that of the psalmist when he said, "In God we boast all the day long." In God we boast; not in the corrupt works of our sinful flesh.

Now one says, "If the blind men had not asked, they would never have received their sight." God gives the faith, teaches to pray, prepares the heart, and says, "Ask, and ye shall receive." And when we realize our blindness all the powers of earth and hell could not restrain that cry, "God, have mercy upon me."

"And the multitude rebuked them, because they should hold their peace; but they cried the more, saying, Have mercy on us, O Lord, thou son of David." So Jesus had compassion on them, and gave them sight. But one says, "We must work, because we are commanded, 'Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven.'" This is true; but what are these works? They are in no wise a means of grace whereby sinners may be saved, but that we should glorify God; that our walk and conversation should characterize Jesus; that we should deal justly, love mercy, and walk humbly; that we should visit the widow and orphan in their time of affliction, and keep ourselves unspotted from the world. These should be the works of every child of God.

"And they followed him." These words bring to mind the travel of God's people after receiving their sight, how they follow Jesus. No longer did they enjoy the company and companionship of the earthly physicians, who had failed in every attempt to give them sight. Their only hope and confidence is in Jesus, and they desire to follow him. To follow Jesus is to go where he went. Then it is necessary that we should follow him into the watery grave and be buried with him in baptism. It is necessary that we should be led into the wilderness and tempted of the devil, to be without food, and to hunger; for if we never hungered we never could be thankful for food when it pleases God to supply our need. It is also necessary that we should be despised by the world, be persecuted, to have afflictions, sorrow and grief, as he was likewise partaker of the same. He says his people shall be willing in the day of his power, and he by his kindness, love and mercy makes us willing to follow him; and while we have him in our view our souls are filled with his love. But when he hides his face from us, O the anguish we feel! What doubts, fears and temptations we have, and how we are tossed to and fro with the winds and waves of sorrow; and when almost in despair Jesus appears, saying unto us, "Be of good cheer, it is I: be not afraid;" and immediately the storm is calmed, we are again made to realize his power, and behold his glory and his love; and "greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends."—John xv. 13. Peace be with you all that are embraced in this love.

Your unworthy brother,

H. CLAUDE KER.

UPPER CLINCH, Tenn., July 24, 1895.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS OF THE SIGNS:—I will address a few scattering thoughts to you, and to the children of God scattered abroad, on the following words of Scripture, "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, to an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you."—1 Peter i. 3, 4.

It appears to my mind that the apostle Peter in this language gives God the Father all the praise and glory, as he had done all for the accomplishment of our salvation. Now, if God has done all for us to accomplish our salvation, what is left for us to do in this work? Paul says, "All things are of God, who hath reconciled us unto himself by Jesus Christ."—2 Cor. v. 18. If all things that pertain to our eternal salvation are of God, what is left that is of man, or of us? It is said in the Scriptures that in the begining was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God; that all things were made by him, and that without him was not anything made that was made.—John i. 1-3. Then we understand that God made a covenant of grace with Christ, his Son, before the foundation of the world, and the salvation of his covenant people, the church, the bride, the Lamb's wife, is the fulfillment of that covenant; and if that covenant should fail to be fulfilled it would prove to be faulty, and that God and the Son neither understood the nature of the covenant, nor had the power to carry it out. It would be just like the covenant of works which God made with Adam. Therefore Peter says, "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again unto a lively hope;" that is, a living hope in Christ, not in works. We see that God begat us to this lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead. If this be true, we must have been dead with Christ. Paul says that if we be dead with Christ, we believe we shall also live with him.—Rom. vi. 8. Therefore, in order that we shall be dead with him, we must have had our existence in him before he died; for we could not be dead with him unless we had our existence with him or in him. We were first created in Adam, who represented us in sin and death. In like manner we were created in Christ, who represented us in righteousness and true holiness. Now, brethren, it is evident that we have two representatives—Adam and Christ. We were created in Adam, our first representative, who represented us in sin and death; for we could not have had our existence without that creation; and there could not have been a creation without a creator, no more than there could be a law without a lawgiver, or a house without a builder. Now, God is the Creator and Builder of all things, both in heaven and earth. Hence we conclude that God created us in Adam, and also created us in Christ Jesus. We know that we were created and had our spiritual standing in Christ before the world began. Therefore the same Creator that created us in Adam also created us in Christ Jesus. Hence Paul says, "We are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them;" that is, good works. To prove that we were created in Christ Jesus before the world began, Paul says, "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ, according as he hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before him in love."—Eph. i. 3, 4. And in another place Paul says, "Who hath saved us, and called us with a holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began." Now, if these two quotations from Paul be true, we were all saved in Christ Jesus before the world began, and as time rolls on God is carrying out that covenant made with his Son before time began; that is, he is revealing himself to each one of the heirs of promise at the appointed time. Paul says, "God, who is rich in mercy, for his great love wherewith he loved us, even when we were dead in sins, hath quickened us together with Christ." "For by grace are ye saved, through faith; and that not of yourselves; it is the gift of God." And James says, "Of his own will begat he us with the word of truth, that we should be a kind of first fruits of his creatures." Therefore being begotten with the word of truth, born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth forever, we are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the last time. Therefore, brethren, in hope of that final redemption we stand in this grace, and rejoice in the hope of our redemption, even the redemption of our bodies.

As ever, yours to serve in the gospel,

GEORGE EDENS.

DAYTON, Wash., Oct. 14, 1895.

ELDER F. A. CHICK—DEAR BROTHER AND EDITOR OF THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES:—As I have a remittance to make I will make use of the opportunity to write you a private letter. I wish to say to you, without flattery, that I am highly pleased with your editorial labors in the conduct of the SIGNS. I have been acquainted with you as a correspondent in that highly prized paper, I think, since about the year 1856; and I can say with heartfelt joy and emotions of love and fellowship for you that in all I have read in the SIGNS from the year 1856 down to the present time you, more than any other writer, have given the clearest expression of my understanding of the inspired word of God, so far at least as I have been given an understanding. It does seem to me that on every point of doctrine wherein brethren have seemed to differ in understanding, and you have written on the same, your views and mine, whenever I have had an opinion, were the same on the point in controversy. This fact, perhaps, more than any other, by the grace of our common Lord, has drawn me closer to you than to many of the contributors to the SIGNS. But I do hope and trust that I love all the brotherhood in the truth of the gospel. I will here only name our aged and, I believe, divinely enlightened brother Cox. What a scope of spiritual vision that venerable and precious brother has. It seems to me that vast fields of heavenly meditation are open before him, as if he stood on some eminent mountain, with a field-glass before his eyes; and as he sees the adjacent hills and valleys he records in the simplest forms of speech the scenes that lie before him. And now I am reminded of the words of the martyr Stephen, "I see the heavens opened, and the Son of man standing on the right hand of God." Brother Chick, have you not sometimes had a faith view of that world whereof we speak, and could see, in a measure, the depths, lengths, breadths and heights of that hidden wisdom which God ordained before the world unto our glory?

I. N. NEWKIRK.

[THE above letter was sent to us at Middletown N. Y., and has not been seen by brother Chick, and we publish it without consulting him.—B.]

PERSONAL.

ANY one knowing the present address of Elder Allen B. Turner, of Texas, will please send the same to L. E. Turner, Harper, St. Clair Co., Mo.

NOTICES.

WILL you notice in a few numbers of the SIGNS that "Reminiscences and Letters of Mary Parker" is now reduced to sixty cents, sent by mail post-paid? There are a few hundred copies left on my hands, and I wish to dispose of them, and so I give the friends an opportunity to get a most interesting book at half-price.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

DIED—At his home in Gause, Texas, on July 14th, 1895, little Willie Thornton Kilpatrick, infant son of G. W. and T. B. Kilpatrick, aged 19 months and 17 days.

The immediate cause of his death was congestion of the lungs. I could have died for my precious babe, but I desire to be reconciled to the will of God. Elder Hudson, of Maysfield, preached on the funeral occasion, Sept. 29th.

"Dear, dying Lamb, thy precious blood
Shall never lose its power
Till all the ransomed church of God
Be saved to sin no more."

T. B. KILPATRICK.

DIED—At his home in the village of Peaster, Texas, on July 25th, 1895, Ray Sauls.

Brother Sauls was born in Johnson Co., N. C., May 27th, 1821, and moved with his parents to Henry Co., Tenn., when fourteen years old. On Jan. 25th, 1849, he was married to Miss Quintina I. Bowden. To them were born nine children (eight girls and one boy), all living and having families but one daughter. He professed a good hope through grace in 1871, and joined the Primitive Baptist Church at Springville, Henry Co., Tenn., and was baptized, together with his wife, by Elder Robert Veary, and lived a christian life in all meekness. His home was always a resting place to the Baptists. He was a constant reader of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, and loved to talk of God's goodness to poor sinners. He leaves, besides his aged companion and children, fifteen granddaughters, twenty-five grandsons and three great-grandchildren to mourn, but not without hope, knowing that it is far better for him to depart and be with Christ.

The unworthy writer of this notice, assisted by brother J. G. Ellis, tried to speak words of comfort to the relatives and a large concourse of friends, on July 26th, from Psalm cxvi. 15: "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints;" after which his body was laid away to await the resurrection morn. May God give us all to say from the heart, "Not my will, but thine, be done."

ORDINATIONS.

MINUTES of the council held with the Olive & Hurley Church, of the Lexington Association, to examine the gift of brother J. MATTHEWS.

The council organized by choosing Elder John Clark Moderator, and John A. Morse Clerk.

The churches were called on, and the following messengers were present:

Lexington—Elder R. W. Sanford, B. F. Bartlet, J. E. Moore, F. Mackey and C. E. Bellew.

Second Roxbury—Elder John Clark, J. S. Carroll, James Avery and W. W. Scudder.

Halcott—Elder James Miller.

Olive & Hurley—B. Secor, D. M. Secor, J. Bogart, I. Delemeter, Wm. Winn and J. Deboice.

Schoharie—Elder John Clark and G. W. Guernsey.

Jefferson—Elder James Miller.

Middletown—Elders J. Miller, R. W. Sanford, brethren R. W. Hull, J. Abner Morse and John A. Morse.

Gilboa—Elder John Clark and D. M. Leonard.

Middleburg—Elder J. Clark.

Andes—Elder R. W. Sanford and A. Jenkins.

Clovesville—Elder James Miller.

The church accepted the council and presented the candidate.

He related his experience, call to the ministry and doctrinal views.

The council retired to deliberate, and found that he was of good report without, and held in high esteem by the community, and decided to have him ordained.

The presbytery, composed of Elders James Miller, John Clark and R. W. Sanford, proceeded in the following order:

Laying on of hands.

Prayer by Elder Miller.

Charge by Elder Sanford.

Right hand of fellowship by Elder Clark.

JOHN CLARK, Mod.

JOHN A. MORSE, Clerk.

TWO DAYS MEETINGS.

THE Lord willing, the Burdett Church, Schuyler Co., N. Y., will hold a two days meeting, commencing at 10:30 a. m., Nov. 6th and 7th, 1895.

H. B. ELLIOTT, Clerk.

A TWO days meeting is appointed to be held with the Cammal Church, at Cammal, Lycoming Co., Pa., on Saturday and Sunday, November 9th and 10th, 1895.

The place of meeting is near the railway station at Cammal, on the Pine Creek R. R., where the brethren will meet those coming by rail. A cordial invitation is extended to all lovers of the truth.

D. M. VAIL.

A TWO days meeting is appointed to be held with the Abbington Church, at Justus, Lackawanna Co., Pa., on Wednesday and Thursday, November 13th and 14th, 1895.

We invite all who feel a desire to meet with us. Those coming by way of the D., L. & W. R. R. will be met at Glenburn on Tuesday. Those coming by way of the Delaware & Hudson R. R. will please write me at what time they expect to arrive at Olyphant, where we will meet them on Tuesday.

G. W. GOODRICH, Clerk.

ANY one desiring to attend the three above meetings can do so, as there is plenty of time to get from the one to the other. Burdett, Cammal and Abbington are not more than one hundred miles apart.

D. M. VAIL.

ASSOCIATIONAL.

THE Delaware Association is appointed to be held with the Cow Marsh Church, commencing on Wednesday, Oct. 30th, and continuing the two following days.

Those wishing to attend and coming by rail will take the train on the Delaware R. R. Tuesday afternoon, leaving Delmar at 2:26, and Wilmington at 2:50. From Delmar get tickets to Felton; from the north to Woodside. It is desired to have some eight or ten from the northward get tickets for Hartley and Henderson, on the Maryland Branch, changing cars at Clayton. I would suggest that whatever company starts from Philadelphia and from Wilmington take this route, but they will need to take the morning Mail train. I now expect to be able to furnish orders for excursion tickets. The trains above named will be met, and all visiting friends cared for.

E. RITTENHOUSE, Pastor.

YEARLY MEETINGS.

THE Old School Baptist Church of Schoharie, N. Y., has appointed her yearly meeting to be held in her meeting-house on the fourth Sunday and Saturday previous in October (26th and 27th), at 10 o'clock a. m. each day.

Brethren and friends of our faith and order, and all who love the truth, are cordially invited to meet with us. Those who come on the cars will be met at Howe's Cave on the day before the meeting (Friday) and cared for.

G. W. GUERNSEY, Clerk.

PICTORIAL HISTORY

OF THE

UNITED STATES.

By James D. McCabe.

This work is no dry mass of details—no bombastic effort to inflame the national pride, but a vivid and brilliant narrative of the events of our history, from the discovery of the American Continent down to thepresent time. It gives a most interesting account of the Indians of North America, from the time of the coming of the white men. The voyages of Columbus and explorations and discoveries of the different nations of Europe are related with graphic power. Every step of our colonial history is traced with patient fidelity, and the sources of those noble and, we trust, enduring institutions, which have made our country free and great, are shown with remarkable clearness. Then follows a clear and succinct account of our great Struggle for Independence, and the establishment of the Federal Union—the events of our career from the close of the Revolution to the administration of Harrison.

The work is printed from plain, new type, on fine calendered paper, and comprised in one octavo volume of 960 pages. It is splendidly embellished with nearly 500 fine engravings, embracing battles and other historical scenes, portraits of distinguished men, views of our principal cities, &c., &c.

Bound in Fine Silk Cloth, Plain Edges, $2.00, Post-paid.

CORRESPONDENCE.

North Berwick, Maine.

My Dear Sister in the Precious Savior:—May the Holy Spirit still graciously bless you with the comforts of "the sure mercies of David." We need the mercies of our God, without which we know how vain, unsatisfying, are all things else. So needy are we kept that we are soon withered, droop, and are "ready to die," unless the doctrine of God our Savior drop upon us as the rain, and his speech (in the night seasons) distill as the dew upon our hearts. No one but our beloved Jesus can nourish and cherish us, and this shows how inseparable is the union between Christ and our souls. He is the Head of the body, the church, from whom all the members are nourished. He is the true Vine, and we are the branches.

"Quickened by thee, and kept alive,
I flourish and bear fruit;
My life I from thy sap derive,
My vigor from thy root.

I can do nothing without thee;
My strength is wholly thine;
Withered and barren should I be,
If severed from the Vine."

As then our spiritual health and prosperity is centered in and flows from the Son of God, the fountain-head of all our grace and blessedness, while he endures, while he lives, we shall live also, for our life is hid with Christ in God. He speaks for our consolation, saying, "I give unto them eternal life, and they shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand." The streams of earth may fail, and human friendship wither.

"Change and decay in all around I see;
O thou who changest not, abide with me."

The Lord is the Fountain of living waters."—Jer. ii. 13. None of the Israel of God will ever rise up and say the Lord hath been a wilderness and a land of darkness unto them.—Jer. ii. 31. But our poor hearts have been turned aside at times from our gracious Lord. The trifles of earth, its pleasures, its baits, its cares and vexations, with an evil heart of unbelief, have done us much damage. The vile insinuations of Satan against the Lord and his providences have brought us into doleful, dark places; fears and misgivings and painful unrest have been our sad heritage. But through all these vicissitudes of our souls the Lord our God is immutably the same. He is our gracious God, healing all our backslidings, and loving us freely. He turns us unto himself again and again to find that he, and he only is our blessedness. He has prepared of his goodness for the poor, whom he satisfies with good things; but the rich he sends empty away. You know, my dear sister, and I also, what poverty is; to feel we are destitute. We have, we feel, no possessions to parade before our fellow creatures, like the Pharisees. There are seasons when all our beautiful garments of praise to God, the robes of righteousness and salvation in the Lord, seem to be stripped off us, and then we feel we have no covering to beautify us in the eyes of the Lord. We are all forgetfulness of his past mercies, all unthankfulness. Hard-heartedness gets possession of us. The Bible becomes a hard book to read. I have found it sometimes a veritable task to read a chapter in the Holy Scriptures; and when I have done so, and have come to the end, my thoughts have been so fugitive that it has been impossible for me to be able to remember a word that I have just been reading. I have even read aloud the Scriptures, and so flooded has my mind been with vain, earthly thoughts that not a thought have I had upon what I was reading. This I know is an humbling thing for a child of God to experience. Some might think it was no use then to read the Scriptures while in such a state. Yes, it is of use, even if only our own spiritual helplessness, the worldliness of our mind, is thus discovered to us. It is our privilege and our duty to read the holy Scriptures, and our frames and feelings should not be suffered to step in and sway an authority over us to say when we should read the Bible, or attend to any of those things that become us as the children of God to do, and which are set forth by example and commandment in the gospel. It is one of the devices of Satan to cheat believers of their heritage, when he insinuates that we had better wait till we are more spiritual minded; that it would be no use; that we are not fit to engage in those things to be observed by the household of God. How often have I taken my Bible to read, in a very careless state of mind; perhaps I have read for some time unmoved, indifferent of what I was reading; then the Holy Spirit has sovereignly and graciously opened up some word, my heart has become interested, a little season, sweet and precious and reviving, has been given me while I have been indulged to muse upon the truth as it is in Jesus. But I have sometimes while in a comfortable state of mind began reading the Bible; and instead of becoming more spiritually minded, a cloud has come over me, the Bible is a sealed book, and my season of blessedness appears to have gone up from me, and I am dull and lifeless again. I am rehearsing these simple things in my life to you, dear sister, because I feel you will not despise them. My frames and feelings should not, and do not, regulate the times when I shall read the Scriptures. Neither have my frames and feelings the authority to say when I ought or ought not to preach. Can you believe it that I have before to-day gone into the pulpit in a devilish state of mind? And just before speaking thoughts like these have plagued my soul, "You know you are carnal and devilish, and in a bad spirit, and yet you will get up and talk so humbly, and talk about how precious Jesus is, and the children of God will think you are a saint meek and lowly; and thus you deceive God's people, and act the hypocrite." I do not think that there is any of the ministers of Christ so tossed about and so unfit to preach as I feel I am. But more humbling things still my poor soul has experienced, and it has been shown me that all my righteousness is as filthy rags. I have hated myself, and have branded myself as a wicked hypocrite. I confess that there have been times when engaged in prayer, in the midst of my family, and even when in public before a congregation, professedly in prayer to the everlasting God, so wandering has my mind been, far, far off from God, I have uttered words, without a thought of God. His name has been upon my tongue, the form of supplication and thanksgiving has been the language of my lips, but all the while not a thought of God, but vain, earthly, shall I say, sensual thoughts, have taken me captive, and have carried me away. I now remember a time when it was thus with me; and just before uttering a few closing words I came to myself, it dawned upon me how that I had not been thinking of the Lord at all, but pride, creatures, vain thoughts only, had occupied my mind. O how my heart appeared to sink within me! I felt I should sink down bodily to the floor where I stood. O what fearfulness and trembling and humiliation were mine. I sat down, feeling I was a mocker, a hypocrite. I felt, How can I, how dare I, now rise up to preach to the people the unsearchable riches of Christ, after such awful mockery as I have been guilty of? O the unuttered groanings and sighs, cries and lamentations that filled my poor heart! I have cried to my God to have mercy upon me, to show compassion to a poor, vile worm. I have learned in other ways also what a poor, destitute sinner I am. I have gone sometimes to some quiet spot with my Bible, to contemplate, if it should be granted me, the things of Christ. But spiritual meditations I could not bestow upon myself. I have endeavored to muse, but muse upon divine things I could not. I am so poor, my sister, that I cannot think a spiritual thought. I am so destitute, I am so helpless, I cannot bring forth of myself a note of thankfulness, nor produce a sigh even over my sinful, unspiritual wilderness condition. At times I feel to be bereft of all emotions, and I am powerless to create them. O! is there any one like me? "He will regard the prayer of the destitute, and not despise their prayer. This shall be written for the generation to come; and the people which shall be created shall praise the Lord."—Psalm cii. 17–18. Surely this was written for one like me. I have proved it true that Jehovah hears the cries of the afflicted ones. The Holy Spirit in due season turns again my captivity, and sighs and cries issue forth from my tried and desolate soul. I have mourned unto my God (Jer. xii. 11) to revive me again and to bring me out of my distresses. My heart has craved, though it be but a crumb of his loving-kindness.

"A single smile from Jesus given,
Will lift a drooping soul to heaven."

Christ Jesus is our storehouse of all spiritual blessings. "Of his fullness have all we received, and grace for grace." It has pleased our heavenly Father that in Christ, the Head of the church, all fullness should dwell. He of God is made unto us wisdom and righteousness and sanctification and redemption, that according as it is written, He that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord. It is our repeated experience to be made to feel our emptiness, and thus find how vain is all our life, except when the Holy Spirit takes of the things of Jesus and shows them unto us. Then are we rich in faith, and have foretastes of the blessedness and riches of the kingdom which God hath promised to them that love him. The mere natural knowledge of points of doctrine, our natural remembrance of past experiences in divine things, does not suffice in our times of extremity to extricate our soul. It is the ministry, "the communion of the Holy Ghost" alone, that assuages our griefs and brings us up out of our straits, to find rest and comfort and plenty in our beloved and precious Savior Jesus Christ.

"Come, my transported soul,
With grateful wonder fall
Before the Lord, for now he shines,
Thy everlasting All."

We are nothing. I know I am nothing. It is now nearly twenty-five years since I first felt to hope in the mercy of God, and mercy still I need. I am still that needy one, needing the exceeding abundant grace of God, with faith and love that is in Christ Jesus. My conscious sinfulness and poverty forbid that I should boast in the flesh; yet amidst my destitution and cravings I feel within after righteousness and mercy and nearness and communion with the holy One of Israel. All this is mine when by faith my heart is trusting in the dear Lamb of God. O to be looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith!

Having penned you these lines, let me in return hear of your welfare. You know that your welfare is in my heart, and I believe that we both have a place in the heart of the Redeemer of sinners. I am your brother and companion in tribulation, and in the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ,

FRED. W. KEENE.

GRAIN VALLEY, Mo., Aug. 20, 1895.

ELDER F. A. CHICK—DEAR BROTHER:—I have been a constant reader of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES for several years, and have been much edified in reading your views on various portions of the word of God. I feel that you are far my superior in every particular; that the Lord has committed to your trust much of his goods; and I sometimes hope he has given to me one talent. If so, it is as much a gift of God as if it were five talents, and it is as much my duty to prove the one talent as it is the duty of the one who has five. Believing you to be a man that will bear with the infirmities of the weak, and who will cast the mantle of charity over my imperfections, I feel to write you a few lines, and you may publish them if you please. I have read your editorial in the SIGNS of August 14th, 1895, on the "Parable of the wheat and the tares," found in Matthew xiii. I see that your views are that the heaven there spoken of by our Savior is the gospel heaven. That is, he is likening the gospel heaven to a man which sowed good seed in his field, &c. I have for years looked at it differently; but I agree with you in its not having any allusion to this world or the formation of Adam; but I am inclined, from other portions of Scripture, to believe he had under consideration the legal or Jewish heaven. We see in this thirteenth chapter of Matthew, beginning at the twenty-fourth verse, that our Savior has spoken six parables, and my understanding is that he spake interchangeably; that is, in the first of these six he had reference to the Jewish heaven, and in the second the gospel heaven. I believe he meant the Jewish heaven when he said, "The kingdom of heaven is likened unto a man which sowed good seed in his field," &c. The sowing of this good seed I understand to be the beginning or setting up of the Jewish heaven. When the Lord called Abram from his native country he let him know that his covenant was already established, fixed. Here is the kingdom of heaven, as it were, in embryo. The good seed is now sown. The blades began to spring up, which showed themselves in the persons of Isaac, Jacob and the patriarchs. And then began to appear the tares, which I understand were wicked men of Belial. These all lived or grew together with the wheat during the Jewish dispensation; and each legally belonged there, and in obedience all received the same blessings; no difference, so far as natural blessings are concerned. Now, I understand that some of the wheat was in the loins of these wicked men, and to destroy them would destroy or root up some of the wheat. And when asked by his servants (prophets) the privilege to take them out, he said, "Let them grow together until harvest."

Verse thirty-seven, "The kingdom of heaven is like unto leaven," &c., which denotes fullness. The forty-seventh verse explains the whole. "Again, the kingdom of heaven is like unto a net that was cast into the sea, and gathered of every kind," &c. This I believe to be in keeping with the twenty-fourth verse. I cannot see how the gospel heaven can have any resemblance to a thing that is full of both good and bad; but to my understanding it answers exactly to the Jewish heaven, for it was full of both good and bad, both wheat and tares. "The which, when it was full, they drew to shore." "The end of the world," in which our Savior appeared to put away sin. Now, at the preaching of John, a separation began, which certainly was the beginning of harvest; that is, the fields were white to harvest.—John iv. 35. When John saw many of the Pharisees and Sadducees (tares) come to his baptism, he called them a generation of vipers; showing conclusively that they had no right in the kingdom of heaven then at hand; for said John, "There cometh one after me," &c., "whose fan is in his hand, and he will thoroughly purge his floor, and gather his wheat into the garner; but he will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire." Here is the destroying or rooting up of the tares, without injuring the wheat; for the time for that purpose had come. I also understand our Savior to be setting forth the same in the beginning of the twenty-fifth chapter of Matthew, only using different language to convey the same idea. Surely the ten virgins here is the legal or Jewish kingdom of heaven. They all went forth to meet the bridegroom, the foolish with the wise. There is a very prominent feature to be noted here; that is, the difference between the virgins; but the difference is no greater than between wheat and tares. Five were wise, and five were foolish. The wise had oil in their vessels with their lamps. Oil in their vessels; vessels of mercy which God had afore prepared unto glory, for that purpose. The foolish were vessels of wrath fitted to destruction.—Rom. ix. 22, 23. They had no oil, but lamps. Lamps are only a profession. At the very time light was needed, their lamps were gone out. It was at midnight. Midnight is between two days; hence between the legal and gospel day. When the cry was made they were all asleep, the wise with the foolish. "And at midnight there was a cry made," &c. John came preaching (crying) in the wilderness. All ten of these virgins came to John's baptism; but John baptized only such as had oil in their vessels; hence the discrimination. The wise confessed that they were sinners. The foolish claimed baptism, or admittance into the church, upon the ground that they were Abraham's seed. While they were the children of Abraham, they were only such by nature, hence were tares. The cry was made, "Behold, the bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him. Then all those virgins arose and trimmed their lamps." While the lamps of the wise were shining, and they prepared, ready, waiting for the bridegroom, the foolish said, "Give us of your oil, for our lamps are gone out." But the wise had none to spare. While the foolish were gone to buy oil (they have always thought to buy their way to heaven), the bridegroom came, and the wise, being ready, entered in with the bridegroom, and the door was shut. Thus the gospel heaven was organized out of material chosen and prepared by the great Architect, and made ready by the harbinger. I have heard brethren take the position that all those virgins were true, elect vessels of mercy; that they all were born again; that the wise were obedient children, while the foolish were disobedient children. This I object to from two reasons. First, all ten were asleep, which does not look much like any of them were obeying the precepts of the gospel. The admonition of the gospel is, "Awake, thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light." Second, it was at midnight, and could not refer to the church at this time, for we are living in the gospel day, and are children of the day, and not of the night. And farther, I am inclined to my position from the fact that this was all to take place at harvest. Surely harvest began when Jesus began to gather his wheat into the garner. For proof see Matt. ix. 37, 38: "Then saith he unto his disciples, The harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few. Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest that he will send forth laborers into his harvest."

This all proves to my understanding that harvest began with the setting up of the gospel church; and there is no doubt in my mind that the Pharisees and Sadducees answered to and were the tares; and those laborers were the angels, which were the apostles, and also all those placed on the walls of Zion as watchmen.

See one more parable, Luke xiv. 15–24. In this parable Jesus is spoken of as a servant, being sent at supper time, the end of the Jewish heaven. He was sent to say to those that were bidden, Come, for all things are now ready. My fatlings are killed, the net is full. Come to the marriage supper of the Lamb. But they began to make their excuses. He returned and told his Lord these things. "Then the master of the house being angry said to his servant, Go out quickly into the streets and lanes of the city [legal dispensation or city. Here is a fulfillment of Matt. xxii. 14, "Many are called, but few are chosen."] and bring in hither the poor, and the maimed, and the halt, and the blind." These are the chosen, the vessels of mercy, those who had their lamps trimmed, and were made ready, by having on the wedding garment. They entered into the house, purged of the old leaven. The tares were rejected, which were the many called. They made excuses. Jesus says, "None of those which were bidden shall taste of my supper." The door was shut against them. "And the servant said, Lord, it is done as thou hast commanded, and yet there is room. And the Lord said unto the servant, Go out into the highways and hedges, and compel them to come in, that my house may be filled." These in the highways and hedges are his "other sheep, which are not of this [Jewish] fold," which are among the Gentiles. "They shall hear his voice; and there shall be one fold and one Shepherd." "That my house may be filled." Not one stalk or grain of wheat, not one little lamb of the fold of Christ, shall ever fail to be brought in. His people are "builded together for a habitation of God through the Spirit."

Brother Chick, in a very disconnected manner I have tried to give you some of my views on the parable in Matt. xiii. 24–30, in connection with other parables. I hope you will pardon me for the liberty I have taken, and believe me a sinner saved by grace, if saved at all,

H. W. NEWTON.

REMARKS.—While we do not wish to make any reply in the way of entering upon a further discussion of the parable treated upon by brother Newton in response to our editorial of August 14th, current volume, yet we think it right to say a few words in connection with his article.

We gladly publish it, and commend its kind christian tone as being worthy of our earnest emulation. It seems to us that because brethren differ concerning any matter, is no just ground for falling out or disputing. A conferring together and a presenting of our various views is not disputation. We are none of us perfect in knowledge. In writing editorially we cannot claim any infallibility. We can present only that portion of truth which the Holy Spirit may be pleased to open to our understanding. In any difference which may arise between ourself and any brother, we hope to keep what we shall say free from every hasty or unkind word, even when we strive to write frankly what we think is true. We have ever felt in any difference that our brethren desired to be right, and were as likely to be right as we. Therefore in any difference of view which may arise we wish to speak humbly and in a brotherly manner. We desire also to keep the columns of the SIGNS free from all personalities of an unkind or wounding nature.

We are glad that our brother agrees with us that the parable of the wheat and the tares does not relate to the creation or the beginning of time. We could have no patience with the idea that by nature there is a difference in the children of Adam in the face of the declaration of the apostles that by nature the children of God were children of wrath "even as others."

And in reply to brother Newton's view that the "kingdom of heaven" in the parable and elsewhere means the old legal covenant, we would say that since receiving his communication we have looked at all the places in the New Testament where the expression occurs, and we have not found one instance in which the kingdom of heaven is spoken of as something that had existed in the past, but where the time of its coming is at all alluded to it is always something yet to come. "It is at hand," or, "then shall such and such things be." And besides, we would call attention to the fact that the prophets never spoke of this kingdom except as something in the future which God had promised and which they were expecting.

How then can we say that it referred to the old covenant when the prophets spoke of it as being yet future, when John the Baptist spoke of it as future, when Jesus spoke of it as future or present, never past, and when the apostles whom he sent into all the cities whither he himself would also come, were bidden to say, "The kingdom of heaven is at hand," that is, a little in the future?

DECATUR, Texas, Feb. 3, 1895.

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES—DEAR BRETHREN:—I have been impressed to write to you for some time, but have been putting it off because I felt too unworthy; and now while I write I tremble, for fear I am not what I profess to be, and have done a great wrong to the saints of God in asking a home with them. If I am one of the redeemed of the Lord, I feel that I am the greatest mystery of all. If it is the Lord's will I will try to tell you some of my travels through this world of sin and sorrow. I will commence with the fifteenth year of my age, when I first saw myself such a sinner in the sight of God. I then lived in Perry County, Illinois, where I was born and lived until I was thirty-five years old. On Saturday night, March 17, 1860, I was at an Old Baptist meeting where my mother had her membership. I never have forgotten that fearful night. While they were singing, I and one of my neighbors commenced mocking them, when something seemed to say to me, You vile wretch of Satan. It seemed that all eyes were turned on me. About that time the preacher arose. O how I wanted to get out of the house, for it seemed to me I was worse than the brute creation. I was afraid to raise my head, for it seemed to me that I was not fit to look on God's creation. I tried to pray to the great God of heaven to drive this fearful vision away, and to have mercy on me, for I thought I was going to die. But I could not pray, and it seemed that my breath would leave my body. I went on in this condition most of the time until about the 20th of June following, as near as I can remember. I was plowing corn, when all at once it seemed that darkness had closed in all around me, and that the end of my time had come. I was hemmed in, as it were, with walls of sin and darkness, and sinking down into the bottomless pit of woe and misery. I tried to pray to the great God of heaven to have mercy on me, a sinner. It seemed to me that he would be just in sending me down to torment, for I felt to be such a hell-deserving sinner. Still my cry was for mercy, sweet mercy. When all hope of deliverance was gone, and I was sinking down forever, as I thought, all at once it seemed to me that I was raised up, and that fear was banished from me, and a voice said, "Thy sins are forgiven thee." As I arose my face was toward the north, and the whole heavens seemed as a flame of light. It semed to me that all creation was praising the Lord of glory. O what a time of rejoicing those few minutes were to me! My burden of sin had left me, and O how I wished for wings to soar away to my blessed Savior. I wanted to tell to everybody what my Savior had done for me. But before I saw anybody to tell it to something seemed to say to me, "Don't tell it, or you will be made fun of; for what you thought you saw is all an imagination of your own." Here is where my troubles set in; for the pleasures of the world were killed to me, and I was not fit to ask a home among the Old Baptists, and they were the people I loved so well. When I looked on them it seemed their countenances were beaming with the love of God. O how I wished I were one of them, that I might tell them of that glorious vision that had appeared to me, and talk to them about my blessed Redeemer. Then these thoughts would come to me, that I was not fit to live with or ask a home with them. When I was with my associates of pleasure I would try to take a part with them in the pleasures of the world, to keep them from knowing anything about my condition. But there was no pleasure for me in the sports of the world. I was made to cry out, "Lord, show me the way." Gloom and darkness would hover over me, and I would turn to the Scriptures to see if there was a remedy for my case; but there seemed to be no comfort for me, for mine was a peculiar case; there was none like me. My thoughts were, Why am I made to weep and mourn on account of sin, if the Lord has set me free from sin? For I had thought the christian's hope was sure and steadfast, as strong at one time as at another, always lit up with a brilliant light, to direct the weary pilgrim on his way. But O! my brethren, if that is the kind of hope a christian has, then I have none; for when I am cast down in gloom and darkness, that little hope or light that I claim for a hope begins to flicker and becomes so dim that I tremble with fear lest it will leave me, and my very breathing is, Lord, do not deprive me of that little hope. Sometimes it will spring up with a brilliant light, and then it seems as if all creation were shouting praises to the Lord of hosts.

Sometimes when I went to the Old Baptist meeting I thought I would tell them of my troubles; but when they would give an invitation for the reception of members I would feel so unworthy that I would put it off. So I went on in this condition for about eighteen years, waiting for a better or a brighter hope; but doubts and fears began to encompass me more and more, and it seemed to me like I was going to die. I was at the meeting-house one day, and brother Potter, of Indiana, was preaching. It seemed to me that I had never before heard such preaching. It seemed to me that his face was lit up with the Holy Ghost. After the preaching they gave an invitation for the reception of members, and the first I knew I was trying to tell them of the Lord's dealings with me. To my surprise they received me for membership in the church. I was made to rejoice while mingling in the voice of praise with them. I felt a great burden taken from me. That evening we repaired to the water for baptism, and when we had assembled at the water's edge I never before had such solemn thoughts as came to me there. I tried to pray the Lord to let me know if I was fit to follow him into the liquid grave. It caused my whole being to shake with fear and trembling; but when I came up out of the water it seemed like everything was lovely. Another great burden had been taken away, and I felt calm and resigned and reconciled. It seemed like a great weight had been lifted from my poor burdened soul. This was, I think, in November, 1878. I had a short season of rest for some days after I was baptized. One day I was gathering corn. I have forgotten the date, but I never have forgotten the place. I had been meditating on the goodness and power of God, and had nearly finished my load of corn, and was about to go to the house, when all at once it seemed to me as though the heavens were a flaming light. The team had stopped, and I was on my knees behind the wagon. I was afraid to rise. O! the beauty of that light, and the mingling of the voices of praise to the Lord of hosts. A mighty voice said to me, "Arise, and go and proclaim to the world the mighty power of God, and his dealings with the children of men." It appeared to me that I was on holy ground, and in the presence of Almighty God. I was made to cry out, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" Then it seemed to me that light, truth and power of the Lord of hosts lay as an open book before me, and I went to the house rejoicing with great joy, and with tears streaming from my eyes. My wife asked me what the matter was, but I told her nothing. I sat down to dinner, but I could not eat. My wife again asked me what the matter was, and I told her I was made to rejoice; but I did not tell her what I had seen. When I would try to talk to the brethren and sisters about the goodness of God, the Scriptures would seem to be darkened to my mind, and I could not memorize a verse. All the satisfaction I could have was in listening to the brethren and sisters telling about the goodness of God, or in hearing some of the soldiers of the cross proclaiming God's power. I went on in this way for about two years, and it seemed to me I was not fit for the company of the saints. In the fall of 1880 I moved to Wise County, Texas, where I have lived ever since. On March 28th, 1885, my dear companion was taken from me, leaving me with four children, one a little girl six months old. My wife had been a great comfort to me when I was in trouble. My thought was, Why was such a poor, miserable wretch as I allowed to live, and such a good mother

BRIEF NOTES.

ELDER W. J. May some months ago requested the views of either ourself or brother Jenkins or brother Durand upon the words in Lamentations iii. 33, which reads as follows: "For he doth not afflict willingly, nor grieve the children of men." We have requested the other brethren to respond, but they have not done so; therefore we feel like penning down a few brief comments upon the words suggested.

It seems to us that the connecting verses, both before and after, really furnish all the explanation needful. We will quote, beginning at the thirty-first verse: "For the Lord will not cast off forever: but though he cause grief, yet will he have compassion according to the multitude of his mercies. For he doth not afflict willingly, nor grieve the children of men. To crush under his feet all the prisoners of the earth, to turn aside the right of a man before the face of the Most High, to subvert a man in his cause, the Lord approveth not."—Lam. iii. 31–36.

The prophet is lamenting the miseries that have befallen Israel. These woes had come upon them not by chance, but by the appointment of God. Their God had visited them with these calamities because of their transgressions; but the Lord, although he would visit them with the rod of chastisement, would not cast them off forever.—Verse 31. Though by reason of his rod upon them he would cause them grief, yet he would not forget to have compassion upon them.—Verse 32. He would not suffer them to be crushed as prisoners under the feet of their enemies, neither should their rights be turned aside, nor should their cause be subverted.—Verses 34, 35. The meaning, it seems to us, is that their enemies which should oppress them were the rod in his hand to correct them. Their foes would gladly consume them, but after all they should be able to go no farther than the God of Israel had appointed for them. This is the substance of the connection.

Now, in the text the Lord tells them that these afflictions are from his hand. The Lord does not afflict willingly. But these afflictions are no proof that the Lord does not still love them; rather they are the proof that he does love them. He has not afflicted nor grieved them wantonly nor willingly. He does not cause them to suffer because he loves suffering in his creatures, or in the people of his choice. If they are afflicted and grieved, they may be sure that there is a "needs be" for it; it is for their good. He loves not suffering for its own sake, but for the good which is to result he inflicts it. It seems to us that the word "willingly" in the text has the force of wantonly or willfully. Israel had sinned; therefore his rod was laid upon them. He chastised them, as a father would his children, for their good.

What a comfort is all this to us in our affliction! God is not unmindful of us in our suffering. Every sorrow that we feel is for a purpose, and is working out good for us. Let us never forget that it is the Lord who afflicts. Such things do not come by chance. Such trials are not evidences of the Lord's anger, but of his love.

ONE "who loves the truth" some time since asked us to write upon the text, Hebrews xiii. 14, saying that a Second Adventist had preached from it. It reads as follows: "For here have we no continuing city, but we seek one to come." We do not know what the "Second Advent" preacher referred to by the writer of the request had to say about this text, and so cannot tell what is especially desired from us; but we will frankly say that until the request came to us we had never given this Scripture any particular thought, but had acquiesced in the application which we have often heard made of it, to the hope of heaven which is set before the believer when he shall be called to leave this world. It is no doubt true that this present world is evanescent, and this present life fleeting, and that that world is abiding, and its life eternal; but, as we have turned to the text and carefully read its connection, we have been driven to the conclusion that the apostle referred to something more than the future world of glory, of which that world may be regarded as the consummation.

We think if our readers will turn to the text and carefully read the connection they will be convinced of this, as we have been. Before, however, considering the text more at length, lest we should be misunderstood, we desire to say that it has long been our belief that the difference between the christian inheritance here and that beyond the grave is not so very great. We have long thought that the city of God on earth did not differ so very much from the city of God in heaven; in fact, John testified that he saw this heavenly Jerusalem "coming down from God out of heaven. It is then the heavenly city itself manifested on earth.

In the connection believers are bidden to go unto Jesus without the camp, because he was crucified without the city, as were the typical beasts slain in sacrifice for sin under the old covenant. Believers are also bidden to offer the sacrifice of praise continually, which is the fruit of the lips. The substance of the connection is that they are to follow Jesus. As he was separated from all things earthly when he was crucified, having been led without the city, so believers are to remember that they have here no continuing city, and that as believers, and as his disciples, they are separated from all things else; and the reason urged is that we have here no continuing city, but are as pilgrims and strangers seeking one to come. So in the eleventh chapter the apostle declares that when Abraham by faith went out from his own country and dwelt in a strange land, it was because he looked for a city which had foundations, whose builder and maker is God. That is, Abraham looked beyond his earthly heritage, realizing that here was no permanent rest, unto the spiritual kingdom of God. Thus believers in every age have been compelled to look away from the present things and the temporal things to the eternal things. In these earthly things there is no abiding rest; but they that have believed in Jesus do enter into rest. Here and now they enter into rest. They find the city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God. They are come to Mount Zion, and to the city of the living God, and to the new Jerusalem. In their experience they are prepared for this abode, and are brought to look for it and to seek it.

Still farther, as believers and followers of the Lamb they realize that the present state of things cannot last with them. Present experiences, present trials or joys, all, all that goes to make up this present life, must pass away. In every sense of the word, here we have no continuing city. In the mount of transfiguration Peter said, "It is good for us to be here: and let us make three tabernacles," &c. But nevertheless none of them could ever abide in these tabernacles, even had they been made. As the believer comes to realize in experience that nothing continues here, he is put upon looking for and seeking an abiding place to come. By faith we are called out from the present things, as was Abraham out of his own country. By the same faith we seek for the new and better country. Abraham found the city that hath foundations, for which he looked. God had established it, and had established him. Believers now find just such a city; and they confess that it is the building of God. Now, while all this is true, yet they look also beyond the present life to the full fruition, when they shall see as they are seen, and be like Jesus; for they shall see him as he is. So that it seems to us that all the experience of believers here is in a sense an experience of looking and seeking.

We do not see here any proof of the theory that some day in the future God will establish a city here on earth, at Jerusalem or elsewhere, where his people shall be gathered and dwell forever. The language is figurative; and the meaning is, as we believe, that the people of God can have here nothing that endures. This world is not their home. They seek a heavenly home, which is here unseen, and which is eternal.

"THINK not that I am come to send peace on earth: I came not to send peace, but a sword."—Matt. x 34.

Sister Hattie A. Winfield, of Port Jervis, N. Y., has requested our views of the above Scripture, and in a brief manner we desire to speak of it.

There is no contradiction here to what the Scriptures testify elsewhere concerning the peaceable nature of the kingdom of Christ. The song of the angels upon the plains of Bethlehem still remains true, "Peace on earth, and good will to men." The work of the Redeemer on earth was first to make peace and to give peace to his people. By faith in the blood of Christ they have peace with God first of all; and having peace with God, they have fellowship with all who love God; and besides, they live striving for the things that make for peace among themselves. All this is true, and does not in any sense differ from or contradict the words to which our attention has been called.

Jesus in the words of the text states the irreconcilable difference that there is between his kingdom and this present evil world. They are not alike, and they are bound to strive against each other. But it must be remembered that in his kingdom there are no carnal passions, such as rage, revenge, hatred, malice, envy, and the like; nor are there any carnal weapons to be used against the bodies of men. The weapons of our warfare, says the apostle, are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds. But the passions and weapons of the world, which are turned against believers, are all carnal, because there are none but carnal passions and weapons in the world. The world always was since the fall at enmity with God, and with all the revelations of himself which God has ever made. If at any time this enmity has not been apparent, it has been because the circumstances have not been such as to call it forth. It has not been dead; it has only slumbered.

This enmity against God appeared when Cain slew his brother Abel because his own works were evil and his brother's righteous. It appeared between Ishmael and Isaac. It was manifest in every rebellion of Israel; and it especially was made prominent when Saul hated and strove to destroy David. But the most striking manifestation of this enmity of the world against God was reserved to be revealed when Jesus, our incarnate God, appeared in the flesh. From Herod to Pilate the strife of the world against Jesus and his kingdom went on. The civil rulers and the religious rulers alike conspired against the Lord and against his Christ. All this we need but call attention to. It all is a commentary upon the text. This same enmity has been manifest in every age of the gospel dispensation in the shape of all manner of persecution. By sword and fire has the world again and again testified its opposition to Jesus and his kingdom.

Abel did not hate and persecute Cain, but Cain hated and persecuted Abel. Isaac was not an enemy to Ishmael, but Ishmael mocked Isaac. David strove not to injure Saul, but Saul was mad against David. The meek and lowly Savior said no harmful word and did no harmful act against any man, but without a cause they hated him; and while they were crucifying him he called upon God to forgive them. The saints of God have never been the enemies of any man. Paul said, "As much as lieth in you, live peaceably with all men." That is, if there be strife, let it not be your fault.

Yet Jesus came not to send peace, but a sword. It could not be otherwise. Men do not love the light; and Jesus is the light. Men do not love the truth; and Jesus is the truth. When those who were possessed of devils came into Jesus' presence the devils began to rage. When Jesus preached the gospel of peace among men they rejected it. They chose Barabbas to Christ. They preferred robbery and murder to the humbling doctrine of the cross. Sin was not so hateful to them as grace. They preferred the man who would rob and murder them to the man who assailed their self-righteousness. This must be so. The kingdom of heaven could not be set up without it. Jesus knew this, and therefore he said these words.

Jesus also here gave warning to his disciples that they should always find this true. The man who has the truth, and bears faithful testimony to it, will meet the hatred of the world; yea, he says, "A man's foes shall be they of his own household." If Jesus dwell in a man, even his father and mother will be at variance with him. Here is the true irreconcilable conflict. Herod and Pilate may become friends, but Christ and the world never.

We have but glanced at the theme, and would be glad indeed if some brother would take up the theme and carry it on still farther. We trust some brother who feels this conflict sorely may be comforted in the truth which we have briefly tried to present.

C.

GOD MUST GIVE THE INCREASE.

"WHAT is the loftiest intellect, what the greatest literary attainment, in comparison with the agency of the Holy Spirit, in efforts for the conversion of sinners to God? What can be accomplished by the most ardent zeal and the most indefatigable diligence, without the co-operation of Jehovah Jesus? Absolutely nothing. A Paul may plant, and an Apollos may water, but God only can give the increase. Except the Lord build the city, they labor in vain that build it. How important, then, that ministers of the gospel, and all believers, should besiege the throne of grace with earnest and persevering supplications for the divine blessings on the labors of those whose office it is to call sinners to repentance."

We clip the above from an article which the Religious Herald copied from the Christian Intelligencer, for the purpose of showing something of the tact of modern Arminians in perverting the truth of divine revelation.

The writer of this paragraph assumes to be an advocate of the Bible doctrine of human imbecility in regard to the performance of spiritual things. "God must give the increase." This he admits, because an inspired apostle has declared it, and it would be worse than vain to deny it. Hence with an air of affected modesty he attempts to contrast the mightiest works of men, in attempting the accomplishment of spiritual things, with what God can do, and seems to admit that in such a work man comparatively can do nothing. If sinners are to be saved from wrath and prepared for immortal glory, the work must be wholly of God; man can do nothing towards it. But is this the doctrine which the writer wishes to inculcate? By no means; if it were, neither the Christian Intelligencer nor the Religious Herald would have given the article a place in their columns.

The deception and hypocrisy of this feigned humility is made glaringly apparent by the daring arrogance in which he urges what he calls the importance of men's beseiging the throne of grace; as though men had the same power to operate on God, that God has to operate on sinners. We cannot be the immediate agents in the conversion and regeneration of sinners, but, as though he had said, we can effect it indirectly. We have power to besiege the place of divine power, even the eternal throne, and we can cause him that sitteth upon the throne to do as we direct, and the consequence will be that at our instance sinners will be converted. It is about equivalent to the confession of the mechanic who acknowledges that without the screw or lever he cannot raise a building, or the engineer who acknowledges that without the power of steam he cannot propel his boat, while they claim a full power over these agencies. The writer evidently has no higher conception of God's power in saving sinners than the engineer has of the power of steam by which he can drive his machinery and accomplish his designs. Indeed it has become common for Arminians to represent prayer as a sort of lever by which men may besiege the throne of God and move him to lay aside his own purposes and adopt theirs, and thus make him to subserve their determinations.

If, without Christ, even his disciples can do nothing, and if when the inspired Paul has planted, and the eloquent Apollos, who was mighty in the Scriptures, has watered, God alone could give the increase, where is the power by which men are to assault the throne of Omnipotence? If men have not the power to save sinners directly, whence have they power to save them indirectly, or to move God by violence, assault, or by any other power, to do it for them? How preposterous! How blasphemous thus to talk of besieging the throne of God!

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y., Feb. 15, 1850.

PRAYER.

WHAT is it? Does it consist in drawing near to the Lord, while our hearts are far off from him? Is it a formal ceremony by which we are at stated times to fall down on our knees, or stand like the ancient Pharisees, and occupy a given number of minutes in asking God to do something for us? Many important questions press themselves on our mind when we contemplate this important subject. We regard prayer as a spiritual exercise of a spiritual mind, drawn out in holy communion with God, by virtue of grace and of supplication, which God pours out upon his children as a special and indispensable qualification for worship. It does not consist in empty forms or ostentatious show. It requires us, not to go to Jerusalem, nor to the mountain of Samaria, but to worship God, who is a Spirit, in spirit and in truth. That Spirit by which the saints approach the mercy seat of God, searcheth all things, knows what is the mind of God, and directs the supplication according to the mind of God, and leads the suppliant to ask only for such things as God designs to bestow. That spirit of prayer poured forth on them raises up their affections from things of earth, and sets them on heavenly things; governs and controls their desires, that they may be in harmony with the righteous mind of God. It leads them, not to assault or besiege the throne, not to insult, blaspheme, nor take in vain the name of him who occupies the throne of grace, but with humble submission to say, "Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven."

It is the peculiar privilege of the children of God to pray; for them God has consecrated a way of access through the vail, even the flesh of our Lord Jesus Christ. No man can come unto God but by him; and as none can come unto God only by this new and living way, and none are found in that but those who are in Christ Jesus (and if any man be in Christ Jesus, he is a new creature, &c.,) therefore we hold that this is the exclusive privilege of the children of God.

It is also the duty of the saints to pray; because they are thus commanded, and because in their prayers they acknowledge God, confess their dependence on him, and breathe forth the desires which he by his Spirit indites within them.

But we can hardly conceive of anything more abominable than for men to attempt to persuade God to change his purpose, alter his decree, or lay aside his sovereignty, and accomodate himself and his government to the dictation of men.

PRONOUNCING BIBLES.

IN addition to the list of Bibles published on last page we wish to call especial attention to the PRONOUNCING BIBLES, containing Old and New Testaments, King James Version, with marginal references. All the proper names of every person or place in these Bibles are divided into syllables, and accented as they should be pronounced, enabling the reader to readily pronounce correctly the most difficult names of persons and places.

These books are 11x13 inches, and range in price from $5.50 to $20.00, according to binding, the contents of all being the same. The books being too large and heavy to be sent by mail, we will express them at our expense at the following prices, viz.:

No. 51. Bound in American Morocco, Arabesque, gilt edges, $5.50.

No. 53. French Morocco, padded, round corners, gilt edges, $8.00.

No. 55. Extra Morocco, beveled, rolled edge, gilt edges, $12.00.

No. 59. Levant Morocco, padded sides, raised bands, silk sewed, round corners, red under gold edges, $20.00.

For pulpit use these Bibles are especially adapted, and our brethren in the ministry would find it a great convenience to have one on the desk.

BOOK NOTICES.

LARGE HYMN BOOK FOR A DOLLAR

SIX FOR FOUR DOLLARS AND A HALF

We have had bound in cloth, the same style as the "Editorials" or "Church History," a few hundred of our large type Hymn Books, which we will send post paid at the above prices. These books are especially adapted for aged people, or for pew racks, to be used in churches.

A SMALL ONE FOR SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS, OR SIX FOR THREE DOLLARS.

We also have the small type book bound in cloth, which we will send post paid at prices stated above.

These books contain eight hundred pages, and thirteen hundred and eleven carefully selected hymns, together with an index to first line of each hymn.

Cash must always accompany the orders. Address,

taken from her children? My little girl lay like unto death for six months. This was one of the darkest periods of my life. I was made to cry out, "My God, my God, why hast thou deserted me?" My Beloved had hidden himself, and I hunted for him in the darkness of the night. It seemed to me that if he did not come to my relief very soon my little light would go out, for it was getting farther and farther away, and growing dimmer and dimmer. But when hope is about gone, I hear him saying, "Fear not, trembling child." "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." O what joy springs up within me when my Beloved returns! O what a rebellious wretch I am! When he is near me, and begins to direct me in the discharge of my duty, I try to make excuses; and when he is far off, I promise him if he will come to my relief I will be obedient.

The summer after my wife died I sent to Illinois for a letter from the church, and they granted me it. Last summer I put my letter in with a church that ascribes all power to the great God of heaven. Why I am spared I know not. If I live until the fifteenth of this month I will be fifty years old. When I look back over my life I see my many imperfections and short comings. But, dear brethren, sinful and wretched a life as I have lived, and miserable as I feel over it, and of all the afflictions, trials and troubles, gloom and darkness that I have passed through, I am constrained to believe that they were appointed and embraced in the foreknowledge of God. Jesus made a full and complete atonement for all the heirs of promise when he hung suspended between the heavens and the earth, and cried with a loud voice, "It is finished," and gave up the ghost. If I am embraced in that glorious redemption, then my desires will be fulfilled when the bands are burst asunder and my spirit is set free. Then will I soar to that mansion of rest and join the heavenly band in praise and adoration to the blessed Redeemer forever. There parting will be no more, and troubles, sorrows and afflictions will never come.

Dear brethren, I thought when I commenced I would tell you in a few words of what I was claiming as a hope; but it seems to me if I had ten thousand years to tell it in I could not tell the half of what I want to tell. For fear this scribble will weary you I will try to quit, asking you, and all the dear household of God who may see this poor letter, to pray for poor me; for if I am one of the redeemed of the Lord I feel that I need the prayers of God's people, that I may be directed in my duty toward the blessed Redeemer. May the good Lord choose our many changes for us, and reconcile us to his providential dealings with us while traveling through this unfriendly world of gloom and darkness, and enable us to ascribe all power to his holy name, is the prayer of this poor, wandering pilgrim.

M. B. F. JONES.

PATTONSVILLE, Va., Jan. 10, 1895.

DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST:—My school is out, and I thought I would spend a few moments in writing. I wrote you some time since in reply to a part of Elder Walker's Circular Letter, and stated that I would write a few lines on what he said about foreknowledge. Please notice what he says just before he gets to his arguments on foreknowledge. He says, "Condemnation comes on account of disobeying the gospel." Paul says, "By one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned." If Paul was correct, the human race was already condemned before they ever heard the gospel preached. All mankind are in a state of condemnation before they are regenerated or born again. But according to Elder Walker's statement a man is not condemned until after he hears the gospel and has an opportunity to either obey or disobey it; and if he obeys it he is not condemned; but if he disobeys it he is condemned for disobeying it. If this theory be true, a very small portion of the race is condemned, because not one-fourth of the human race ever heard the gospel preached. His idea is that the gospel quickens dead sinners; but Paul teaches that Christ quickens dead sinners. Jesus said, "As the Father raiseth up the dead and quickeneth them, even so [that is, in the same way] the Son quickeneth whom he will."—John v. 21. Paul says, "The law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death." Again, "You hath he quickened, who were dead in trespasses and sins." "God, who is rich in mercy, for his great love wherewith he loved us, even when we were dead in sins, hath quickened us together with Christ." "And you, being dead in your sins, and the uncircumcision of your flesh, hath he quickened together with him;" that is, with Christ. These passages plainly prove that the quickening power must come through Christ. Now I will quote a few passages to show that the gospel is not preached to the dead sinner, but to the quickened sinner. Paul says the gospel is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; not to the unbeliever, but to the believer. "If our gospel be hid, it is hid to them that are lost;" that is, to the unbelievers. Again, Paul says, "We preach Christ crucified, unto the Jews a stumbling-block, and unto the Greeks foolishness; but unto them which are called, both Jews and Greeks, Christ the power of God and the wisdom of God." Now, Paul says in the above quotation that the preaching of the cross, or the gospel, was foolishness to the Greeks as a people, but that it was the power of God to all that were called. So, according to Paul's view of the matter, a man has to be called of God and quickened by his grace before he can hear the gospel, and then it is the power of God unto salvation to that individual. That is, the gospel is food and drink to the quickened man. It is what supports and sustains him and builds him up in Christ. You will notice that all the instruction or advice given by Christ or his apostles to the ministers of the gospel was to feed the lambs and sheep, and not to preach the gospel to dead sinners. Paul says to the Elders, "Take heed unto yourselves, and to all the flock over the which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers, to feed the church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood." The command to the apostles was, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." But no one can believe the gospel until he is quickened and made alive.

Now I will leave this part of my subject and advance a few thoughts on the subject of foreknowledge Elder Walker says, "God's foreknowledge has no more effect upon the will of his creatures than if he had not known who would obey him." He certainly does not understand language when he reads it, or else he tries to twist the Scriptures to suit his own theory. Foreknowledge, election and predestination are all three linked together. One does not exist without the others. I will first refer to the first chapter of Ephesians, where Paul says, "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ, according as he hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world [what for?] that we should be holy and without blame before him in love." How was the blessing pronounced? According to the choice. When did he make the choice? Before the foundation of the world. Then, if the whole thing was completed before the foundation of the world we certainly had no voice in the matter; because the apostle says we were "predestinated according to the purpose of him who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will." He says, "It is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that sheweth mercy." Now, this is the doctrine that Paul preached to the Ephesians. Let us see what he preaches to the Romans. "We know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose. For whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son, that he might be the first-born among many brethren. Moreover, whom he did predestinate, them he also called; and whom he called, them he also justified; and whom he justified, them he also glorified." Now read carefully the above quotation, and we find that God foreknew all his people, and predestinated them, and called them, and justified and glorified them. But who were his people? Those who are the called according to his purpose; that is, God's purpose, and not man's. What was the nature of that foreknowledge and predestination? He first foreknew them, and then predestinated them to be conformed or fashioned to the image of his Son. Now, if he has predestinated a man to be conformed to the image of his Son, is there anything that can prevent his carrying out his purpose? If nothing can prevent his purpose being carried out in one case, nothing can prevent its being carried out in every case. But Elder Walker says that God does not interfere with the wills of men. I wish to say to him that unless God takes out of man his stony heart, and gives him a heart of flesh, he never will have a will to do right. But it may be said that God foreknew all things, and elected some men to eternal life on account of some foreseen righteousness or goodness in man; or, in other words, that God foresaw who would obey the gospel, and who would not. But if we will read carefully we will find that the Scriptures do not teach any such absurd doctrine. So far as the will of the natural man is concerned it is averse to God; that is, all natural men hate God; and one man is just as good as another, for there is none good, no, not one. Paul says, "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned." Now, how can a man in this natural state yield to the teaching of the Spirit, when it is foolishness unto him, and he naturally hates it? God evidently elected his people without foreseeing in them any good, or he elected all mankind, and they all will be saved; because every one whom he foreknew he predestinated, called, justified and glorified. What does Peter say on this subject? He says, writing to his brethren in Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia and Bithynia, that they were elect according to the foreknowlege of God the Father, through sanctification of the Spirit, unto obedience. Did God's will have anything to do in bringing about this obedience? Peter evidently believed it did, because he says it was according to God's foreknowledge. God did not choose them because he foresaw they would be obedient, but he elected them unto obedience. Read Romans ix., especially verses 22, 23, which read as follows, "What if God, willing to shew his wrath, and to make his power known, endured with much long-suffering the vessels of wrath fitted to destruction, and that he might make known the riches of his grace on the vessels of mercy, which he had afore prepared unto glory?" Who were these vessels of mercy which God had afore prepared unto glory? They were the same characters that Paul says were chosen in Christ before the foundation of the world. They are the same characters that Peter says were elect unto obedience. Then, if God had prepared them unto glory, did they have anything to do in this preparation? If they did, they could not be called vessels of mercy. They are the same characters that Isaiah spoke of when he said, "The redeemed of the Lord shall walk there." Here Isaiah speaks of a class of characters that were redeemed of the Lord hundreds of years before the Redeemer came into the world. They are the same vessels of mercy which were given to the Son in the eternal covenant as his bride.

I could keep on writing on this subject, but for fear I weary your patience I will close. The reason I write is because I have no one to talk to on the grand and glorious subject.

CIRCULAR LETTERS.

The Juniata Primitive or Old School Baptist Association, in session with the Springfield Church, Huntingdon Co., Pa., Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, October 9th, 10th and 11th, 1895, to the churches of which she is composed, sends greeting in the Lord.

BELOVED BRETHREN:—As it has been our custom to address you with a Circular Letter, for a subject we will call your attention to some doctrinal points. As the Baptists have become so divided up, we deem it prudent to let our doctrine be known and tested among Primitive Baptists. We believe the whole of Adam's race are dead in sin, and totally depraved since the transgression of Adam; so much so that they have no knowledge of God in the plan of salvation. We believe that God in his wisdom chose a portion of Adam's race in Christ before the foundation of the world, that they should be holy and without blame before him in love; but becoming involved in the transgression, and because of the vital or life unity that existed between Christ and his people, it was necessary that Christ as their Life should be clothed in a body of flesh like unto his people, and in that body fulfill all that the law claimed at the hands of his people. Christ being the head, and the church the body, and as the head would be dead without the body, so the body would be dead without the head. It seems to us to deny the vital unity in a life sense between Christ and his people, and would throw us into conditionalism at once. We also believe in God's appointed time he calls his people by his grace, and makes known unto them his holy will; or, in other words, as he told Nicodemus, born into his visible kingdom. We do not understand by the birth of the Spirit that there is any part of the natural or Adam man made spiritual, for we still find all the Adam elements dwelling in us; yet there is a great change or revolution wrought in the whole actions of the sinner. We will take Paul for a pattern, as he was on his way to Damascus to bind and imprison the saints with all the enmity in his heart that could be there; but when he was brought to know his true condition, by being delivered from the power of darkness and translated into the kingdom of Christ, his whole course of life was turned about; and instead of a boasting Pharisee he is now bemoaning himself because of his sins. In short it makes a man hate the sins that he once loved, and makes him love that which he once hated. We cannot confine the new birth to the soul, for it was the whole of Nicodemus the Savior was talking to when he spoke those words, "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." So it is the whole man, it was the whole sinner, Christ came to redeem. The apostle Peter says, "Forasmuch as ye know that ye were not redeemed with corruptible things, as silver and gold, from your vain conversation received by traditions from your fathers; but with the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot: who verily was foreordained before the foundation of the world, but was manifest in these last times for you, who by him do believe in God, that raised him up from the dead, and gave him glory; that your faith and hope might be in God."—1 Peter i. 18–21. We also believe in the absolute sovereignty of God over all the works of his hands, both animate and inanimate; and he overrules the actions of all his creatures, both good and bad, without offering violence to the will of the creature, so as to accomplish his eternal purposes, so as to bring justice upon the head of the wicked, and the deliverance of his people out of all their troubles, and save them with an everlasting salvation. We also believe in believers' baptism alone, and that by immersion, and that performed by a legal administrator of our own faith and order. We also believe in the resurrection of the body, both of the righteous and wicked; the righteous to eternal life, and the wicked to eternal punishment.

Dearly beloved, having received a hope through the mercy of God, let us lay aside every weight, and the sin that doth so easily beset us, and run with patience the race set before us, looking alone to Jesus, who is the author and finisher of our faith, and not be found contending about words to no profit, whereof cometh strife and contention; but let us follow after the things that make for peace, whereby we may edify one another. May the Lord guide and direct us in all things.

Our Association was a very pleasant one. The preaching was with power, and in demonstration of the Spirit, and love and harmony prevailed

CORRESPONDING LETTERS.

The Juniata Old School Baptist Association, in session with the Springfield Church, Huntingdon Co., Pa., October 9th, 10th and 11th, 1895, to the associations and churches with whom we correspond, sends greeting.

DEARLY BELOVED IN THE LORD:—We feel to thank the almighty Giver of every good and perfect gift that we have been permitted to meet together in love and fellowship, and to receive your messengers and ministers who, we believe, have preached the doctrine of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone; looking unto Jesus, who is the author and finisher of our faith, trusting in the Lord alone for salvation; for if we are ever saved at all, it will not be through any good works which we have done, but in and through the mercies of a covenant-keeping God, who has all power over heaven and in earth. It is only for God to speak, and his work is done. His wonderful love toward us demands our love to him in return. We still hope your messengers will continue their correspondence of love and fellowship in the gospel. Our next association will be held with the Fairview Church, at Needmore, commencing on Wednesday after the first Sunday in October, 1896, if the Lord will.

Farewell.

POSTAL MONEY ORDERS.

BY a recent arrangement of the post-office department nearly every post-office in the United States is now a money order office for at least five dollars; and as it costs but three cents additional to obtain an order of not more than two dollars and fifty cents, or five cents for one not more than five dollars, or eight cents for one not more than ten dollars, and so on in proportion to amount of order, we request that all remittances be sent us by post-office money-order. You simply give the money you wish to send to your postmaster, and he will give you a money-order for that amount. You will inclose the order which he gives you in your letter to us; and if it should be lost in the mail you can get another one from your postmaster without additional charge. Please be sure to have the order made payable at Middletown, N. Y., and never at New York City, as that place is nearly a hundred miles from our place, and it puts us to considerable extra trouble and expense to get them cashed at the New York City office.

As will be seen from the above, an order for five dollars or less can be obtained cheaper than registering a letter, while an order not exceeding ten dollars costs but the same amount; and remitting by money order is a much safer way than sending by registered letter, as the postal department is not responsible for loss of registered letters, but money orders can be duplicated.

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE.

TO MOST of our readers the above mentioned book is too well known to need any introduction or a description by us. While many of the Bibles have a Concordance appended, they are generally so condensed or abridged as to be of little or no use. Cruden's Complete Concordance, however, enables one to readily turn to any passage of Scripture of which they can call to mind two or three words, and in our opinion is the most complete and convenient as a reference book of any published. In addition, it contains many other aids in studying the Bible, as may be seen by reference to advertisement on last page. Remember, both the books there mentioned are CRUDEN'S COMPETE.

NOTICES.

WILL you notice in a few numbers of the SIGNS that "Reminiscences and Letters of Mary Parker" is now reduced to sixty cents, sent by mail post-paid? There are a few hundred copies left on my hands, and I wish to dispose of them, and so I give the friends an opportunity to get a most interesting book at half price.

TWO DAYS MEETINGS.

THE Lord willing, the Burdett Church, Schuyler Co., N. Y., will hold a two days meeting, commencing at 10:30 a. m., Nov. 6th and 7th, 1895.

H. B. ELLIOTT, Clerk.

A TWO days meeting is appointed to be held with the Cammal Church, at Cammal, Lycoming Co., Pa., on Saturday and Sunday, November 9th and 10th, 1895.

The place of meeting is near the railway station at Cammal, on the Pine Creek R. R., where the brethren will meet those coming by rail. A cordial invitation is extended to all lovers of the truth.

D. M. YAIL.

A TWO days meeting is appointed to be held with the Abbington Church, at Justus, Lackawanna Co., Pa., on Wednesday and Thursday, November 13th and 14th, 1895.

We invite all who feel a desire to meet with us. Those coming by way of the D., L. & W. R. R. will be met at Glenburn on Tuesday. Those coming by way of the Delaware & Hudson R. R. will please write me at what time they expect to arrive at Olyphant, where we will meet them on Tuesday.

G. W. GOODRICH, Clerk.

ANY one desiring to attend the three above meetings can do so, as there is plenty of time to get from the one to the other. Burdett, Cammal and Abbington are not more than one hundred miles apart.

PICTORIAL HISTORY

OF THE

UNITED STATES.

By James D. McCabe.

This work is no dry mass of details—no bombastic effort to inflame the national pride, but a vivid and brilliant narrative of the events of our history, from the discovery of the American Continent down to thepresent time. It gives a most interesting account of the Indians of North America, from the time of the coming of the white men. The voyages of Columbus and explorations and discoveries of the different nations of Europe are related with graphic power. Every step of our colonial history is traced with patient fidelity, and the sources of those noble and, we trust, enduring institutions, which have made our country free and great, are shown with remarkable clearness. Then follows a clear and succinct account of our great Struggle for Independence, and the establishment of the Federal Union—the events of our career from the close of the Revolution to the administration of Harrison.

The work is printed from plain, new type, on fine calendered paper, and comprised in one octavo volume of 960 pages. It is splendidly embellished with nearly 500 fine engravings, embracing battles and other historical scenes, portraits of distinguished men, views of our principal cities, &c., &c.

Bound in Fine Silk Cloth, Plain Edges, $2.00, Post-paid.

CORRESPONDENCE.

MARY.

As the force and beauty of each character (as recorded in the Bible) is revealed to the understanding of the believer, he will undoubtedly see in it the delineation of one or more of the sacred truths of the Scriptures. The life, the environments, and the character of each one of the patriarchs, the prophets and the Lord's deciples, are living realities, presenting in type the actual experience (or spiritual exercises) of every one of the Lord's people. How often do we commune in the Spirit with David, and draw from his experience the honey and sweetness of a like precious faith. Again, we stand with Stephen, and are stoned to death by our relentless foes. And how often, by reason of being heady and high-minded, we follow in the footsteps of Jonah, and ere long we find ourselves in the belly of hell, crying unto the Lord, and declaring, "I will pay that that I have vowed." According as each one has received of the measure of the gift of Christ to walk therein, so are they tried and refined and purified, by which each character is given strength of grace according to his day. And it is given him to present in type certain phases of the christian experience, which when all are taken together present the fullness and completeness of every vicissitude and besetment in the christian pilgrimage, by which now in the same pathway (having them brought to our remembrance) we become witnesses to their living faith, and so walk thereby in the comforts and consolations of the gospel. The character that I would portray in this short article is one upon which we have all looked with tenderness and love: Mary, the sister of Lazarus and Martha. We look upon this sweet character with a feeling of tenderness and love, because our mind's eye places her very near to Jesus. When the angel of the Lord appeared unto Moses in the burning bush, and Moses was about to draw near to see so great a sight, the Lord said to him, "Draw not nigh hither; put off thy shoes from off thy feet; for the place whereon thou standest is holy ground." When we, in the exercise of faith, see the angel of the Lord working the manifest work of grace in the trees (or bushes) of his right hand planting (his people), we, like Moses, are ready to remove and cast away our shoes of self-righteousness, to stand barefoot on holy ground. When in our experience we are privileged to enter into sweet fellowship with Mary as she washes the dear Master's feet, and wipes them with her hair, then do we stand upon holy ground. We walk softly, for with holy reverence we realize that we are in his dear presence, and that he is the "fairest among ten thousand, and the one altogether lovely." In searching for the antitype, we are apt to look for some particular individual among the Lord's people, who in a daily walk and godly conversation would fitly represent the lovely character of Mary; and with the natural mind we search only among those of her own sex. Indeed we do find one here and one there who call her to our remembrance. But I feel sure that the purport of the Scriptures in setting forth its various characters is not to point out individuals, but to set forth certain truths of the gospel of Christ which we daily learn out of a varied experience. The portrayal of each character is brought out simply through a fellowship or similarity of experience in each one of the Lord's people. What I mean is this, that a brother or a sister may to-day portray out of his own heart's experience the characteristics of a Peter, and to-morrow of Mary, and so on through the whole catalogue. He who is traveling through the wilderness, under the leadership of Moses, walks only with those who are in the wilderness, and does not at that time behold the spiritual Joshua leading the hosts of the children of Israel into the land of plenty. If to-day we are in the valley of Baca, or of Achor, we cannot rejoice with those who have been lifted to the summit of the holy hill of Zion. Wrapped up in the grace of God is to be found every blessed truth of the gospel; and whoso is born of the Spirit (therefore possessing God's grace), does it not follow that every principle of truth is in every exercised heart? And will not every attribute of our covenant-keeping God be manifest in time in each and every one, and so each character portrayed as it pleaseth the Lord? The first sunbeam emanating from the grace of God, as bestowed upon his people, is the love of God shed abroad in their hearts. This is the first thought as we are privileged to witness the relationship of Mary to her Master. We observe that love to Jesus has taken complete possession of her soul, rising above every other thought or desire of her heart. What will true love not do in the way of elevating and exalting its object? When Jesus is the object, he is indeed the "Rose of Sharon and Lily of the Valley." She will manifest her love at the expense of every earthly thing she possesses. Her apathy will be turned to zeal, her pride to humility, and her calmness of demeanor to the most intense anxiety. The market value of the precious ointment was as nothing compared with the honor she would bestow upon her gracious Redeemer. With unspeakable joy could she throw aside her natural pride, and with humble gratitude embrace the precious privilege of wiping the feet of her heavenly Lover with her hair. That which we call natural love cannot be compared to the love of God; it can only be contrasted. "Can a woman forget her sucking child, that she should not have compassion on the son of her womb? Yea, they may forget; yet will I not forget thee." God's love is perfect, and therefore everlasting. The same love wherewith he hath loved his children, he hath also vouchsafed the same unto them. Therefore the love of Mary for her gracious Redeemer was a divine and everlasting love. So also is the love of God in every heaven-born soul. In the human passion called love, self is the controlling principle. While in the exercise of the perfect love of our Lord, self is entirely lost sight of. In all that we read as recorded of Mary, we find no evidence that she had one thought save for Jesus. The beautiful figure presented in this woman wiping her Master's feet with her hair, is a subject worthy the pen of a ready writer to unfold its beauties. Whoso should enter this field by divine revelation, the wondrous beauty and solemnity of the subject would broaden and deepen until it would lead him through every avenue of the grace and mercy of God, out into the boundless ocean of God's love, with the glory of God as its firmament. The apostle says, "But if a woman have long hair, it is a glory to her; for her hair is given her for a covering." "Love," clothed in the habiliments of praise, bedewed with heavenly blessings, anoints the Redeemer of Israel with the precious ointment, ordaining him as the High Priest of our profession, setting him apart, as in the world, redeeming the world, yet not of it, but a Priest forever after the order of Melchisedec. "Love," clothed with the garment of humility, on bended knees, prostrate in the dust, wipes the precious feet with the glory of the woman. Every attribute of her being is enlisted in love's service to give glory to her gracious Lord. The psalmist David was a veritable Mary, when his ecstatic soul breathed these words, "Bless the Lord, O my soul; and all that is within me, bless his holy name." Can we not see in the woman clothed with the covering which is a glory to her, the body (the church) with Christ its head, as a bride adorned for her husband, in all her virgin beauty, sheltered under the right hand of the power of her Lord? The angel of the Lord at a certain time said to another Mary, "The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee and, the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee; therefore also that holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God." The woman of the posterity of the first Adam, of the earth, earthy, overshadowed and covered with the glory and the "power of the highest," out of which marvelous events cometh forth out of the bowels of the creature of earth, a son. "And shalt call his name Jesus. He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest; and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David; and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end." "God was manifest in the flesh," to redeem his chosen, and bring them out of darkness into his marvelous light.

In this act of love and humility, Mary in anointing this same Jesus, and wiping his feet with her hair, typifies the vital unity of Christ and his church, with the church serving its divine Master under the law of his kingdom, which is love. This literal circumstance, then, sets forth a great spiritual truth, the principles of which are, first, Christ (the head); the woman (the church); she having "chosen that good part, which shall not be taken from her." Second, the anointing; the blessing of the church being bestowed upon that which is in the world, yet not of it; therefore herself also being separated from the world. Third, love's act of humility, wherein the bride (her whole being bathed in love) serves her royal Husband, submitting in all things to his sovereign will. In every organized branch of the church of Christ there is witnessed the principle of the doctrine of Christ, which Mary (the sister of Martha and Lazarus) manifested to the Savior of sinners; and we see the fruit of it hanging upon its various branches in profusion, when the church is walking in gospel order, and harmony and sweet fellowship prevail. When each esteems other better than himself, and an atmosphere of God's love pervades its solemn assemblies, indicating that Christ is in the midst, humility has taken the place where pride and vain glory did sit enthroned, the fire that was pent up in the bones has burst its flame, and now the erstwhile chilled body becomes warm, love flows from heart to heart, confusion, backbitings and bitter differences become a thing of the past. We thank God and take courage, well pleased under the genial banner of him of whom the Father said, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." The same spiritual truth is brought into manifestation in each individual member of the church of Christ, when they walk after the Spirit, and not after the flesh. The world looks upon the Lord's people as a do-nothing set, hiding behind the doctrine of a finished salvation as an excuse for their dilatoriness. But they whose head the candle of the Lord shines round about do clearly see that their brethren (although they do not see themselves so) are anything but an inactive people. On the contrary, they are continually active. They do not sit down and wait for the Spirit, but they "walk after the Spirit," and both day and night they "press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." If perchance they in utter weariness and despair give up the chase, and conclude (with Peter) to go a fishing, they also go in that direction with headlong speed, walking (or rather running) after the flesh, until in the Lord's own appointed time he causes them to halt, when they hear a voice behind them, saying, "This is the way, walk ye in it;" and having turned their eyes which had been withholden, again see Jesus as the Builder of their most holy faith. Could we see the literal Mary in her practical every day home life, with her brother and sister toiling for the necessary food and raiment, we would not expect to find her listless and inactive or careless, with her hands folded in her lap, while her sister is bustling, active and full of animation; but we certainly would expect to find her zealous and active, taking equal interest with the others in all the household affairs. But how different when Jesus comes. Then (and we rejoice with her) her eyes, her ears, her heart (indeed her whole being), are absorbed in Jesus. Is this not the very condition our heart longs for, and for which we groan all the long, cold, starless night, that we might be swallowed up in Jesus? O! so much do we long that we might sit at his feet and learn of him, "Forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before." We want to be rid of those things of the world which have cumbered our minds and hearts, and which (as the thorns) have choked out the good seed that was sown in our heart. If in our communion seasons (when we come together to symbolize the communion of the body and the blood of Christ) we are "cumbered about much serving," and many other things, do we not merely partake of the shell, and entirely lose sight of the kernel? If we go into our closet to pray, do we not, as we shut the door, desire to shut out all the sordid things of earth, and alone commune with the Father, who heareth in secret and rewardeth openly? When we contemplate the character of Mary, from that which is recorded of her, let us never lose sight of the important fact that Jesus was with her, and that there were other times in her life when he was not present. The principle of truth to be set forth in the figure is not in her life character, but her demeanor in the presence of her Lord. Let us think then of Mary as an emblem of faith, sitting enthoned on a monument of love, her whole being absorbed in devotion to the King of saints.

SANDUSKY, Ala., Sept. 25, 1895.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS:—Over two years ago, at our association, an aged brother asked me what was meant by the two sticks gathered by the widow of Sarepta to prepare her last morsel of bread to eat, and, as she thought, then to die. At that time I could only say, "I do not know;" and I cannot say that I yet know; but at one of my appointments, not long since, this widow and her surroundings were given me for a subject of discourse, and by request I pencil a few thoughts that I recall, for the consideration of this aged brother, and for any others who may feel interested, knowing that no Scripture is of any private interpretation, and all that we can know of a truth in these things is just what is revealed to us.

It seems to me that the state of this widow, the coming of Elijah, the increase of their little store of food, the death of her son, and his restoration to life and to her, all compare favorably with the state of the church at the coming of Christ, the increase in her spiritual supplies, the death of Christ, and his restoration to life. The church is often spoken of in the Scriptures as a woman. She is the bride, the Lamb's wife, and he has left her in this world as a lily among thorns, and as a speckled bird, with all other birds against her; and she often feels lonely, like a widow, and often feels short in spiritual supplies. It is written of her, "For the Lord hath called thee as a woman forsaken and grieved in spirit, and a wife of youth when thou was refused, saith thy God."—Isa. liv. 6. This whole chapter is profitable in this subject, but it would be too tedious to quote it all. How desolate and forsaken the church felt at the time of the coming of Christ. Israel had been a long time without a prophet of the Lord, and almost the whole nation had departed from the commandments of God, and were teaching for doctrine the commandments of men. Only a few, like Zacharias, Simeon and Anna, were waiting for the consolation of Israel, and trying to keep house for God. There was a spiritual famine in the land. The supply of gospel food had run down very low. But the Lord made bare his holy arm in the eyes of all the nations. John the Baptist and Christ are sent into the world at this critical hour, and they are embraced in the arms of the church, like the two sticks by the widow. Fire was communicated to the two sticks, and soon bread was prepared. Elijah eats, and the widow and her son are fed, and the supply was sufficient for the time of the famine. John and the Savior were both full of the fire of the holy Ghost when they were born into the world; and the fears of these old people (the church) were stayed, their hopes were revived, and there was a sufficient supply of spiritual bread for them till the long famine should come to an end. Thirty years must suffice for these men to arrive at the years of maturity, then the word of the Lord must be fulfilled, "My doctrine shall drop as the rain, my speech shall distill as the dew, as the small rain upon the tender herb, and as showers upon the grass."

The Gentiles, too, had been a long time forsaken; but this church was in embryo, in God's wisdom. Solomon was inspired to inquire about it, and says, "We have a little sister, and she hath no breasts. What shall we do for our sister in the day when she shall be spoken for?" The disciples were sent forth two and two in Israel. They were not to enter into any of the cities of Samaria, nor to go among the Gentiles. The famine must continue three years yet upon them. But the time rolls up and the day comes that the little sister must be spoken for. The disciples are baptized with the fire of the Holy Ghost, and sent into all world to preach the gospel; and every where they went and preached, they were embraced by the church (those that were born of God); and to this day this gospel oil and meal has not diminished for the Gentiles. The worldly mind decides that because the disciples were sent into all the world to preach the gospel, that the Lord wanted all the world in the church; but this is a mistake. The Savior refutes such an idea. He says, "I am not sent, but to the lost sheep of the house of Israel." And in the synagogue he told the people that there were many widows in Israel in the days of Elias, but unto none was he sent, but to this widow of Sarepta, and there were many religious orders in the days of the Son of man upon the earth, but unto none was he sent but to his own poor and desolate bride.

The disciples were sent into all the world to speak for none but this little sister. In the days of Solomon she was without organization, and had no breasts; but now she is a wall, and is built upon; "a palace of silver." The ministers of God are still speaking for this little sister. She is the only one that has an experience to compare with this widow of Sarepta, who is going to eat her last morsel, and die; but Elijah appears in time. Thousands that compose this little sister have gone out to offer their last prayer, "This is all I have left of all my earthly supply; then I must die, and leave the world, and be banished from the presence of God." Such are the sick that need a physician, and our spiritual Elijah comes on time and proclaims liberty to such captives, the opening of the prison to them that are bound, comforts all that mourn in this way, and causes them to rejoice in hope of the glory of God. And although they may go into far off lands, away from church privileges, and where there is a gospel famine, this same little hope, like the oil in the cruse, and the handful of meal in the barrel, will hold out until the famine is over with them.

The widow's son died while Elijah was with her; and she no doubt was sorrowful, and mourned for him, as separated from her for time who was her only companion in time of earthly needs. But in due time he is restored to her alive, and she is made to rejoice, and to know more of the great power of God, and to realize that his mercy is towards her in all her afflictions. The Son of God also died, and was buried out of sight of the church, and they were sorrowful, and mourned him as lost to them. He was their only hope of support. One of them said, "But we trusted that it had been he which should have redeemed Israel." But he was restored alive to them again. He said, "I am he that was dead, but am alive for evermore, and have the keys of hell and death." They could but feel rejoiced, for one of them said, a long time after his resurrection, "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again to a lively hope, by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead." In his death and resurrection he broke down the wall of partition between the Jew and Gentile, and reconciled both unto God in one body; so there is no more two houses of Israel, or two sticks, one for Judah and one for Joseph, but one house or one stick.—See Ezek. xxxvii. 16, 17. "One Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all."

The foregoing is submitted as the best I can do at present, knowing that salvation is all of the Lord, by grace. Upon this theme we need not differ. But in this imperfect state here we are liable to make misapplication of symbols and parables in the Old and New Testament Scriptures; and I may have done so in this whole subject. But if there is in this no word of comfort or instruction for any of the little ones, I hope there is nothing that will make them cry out, as some of old did who tasted the wild gourds in the pottage.

The SIGNS sets forth wholesome and nutricious food for the children, and I should regret to spoil one mess with my awkward gatherings. Now, this will consume more space than I am worthy to occupy, but please allow me to report again that our church meetings, union meetings, and our associations, are all harmonious here. We are not troubled with any of the vexed questions I see advertised in some papers. I heard of an Elder that reported to an association south of us that there was an element of two-seed among us. May the Lord have mercy on the reporters. Yours in hope,

P. J. POWELL.

NOTICE TO BRETHREN.

As there is a great Exposition going on in Atlanta, Ga., and all railroads have reduced their fare, the Primitive Baptists in Atlanta have an idea that many of their brethren will visit Atlanta at some time during the three months that the Exposition holds; and after having some correspondence with the brethren there, I am authorized by the brethren in Atlanta, Ga., to appoint a week in which all Primitive Baptists can meet there, and while attending the Exposition also have a general union meeting for one week, at which we will have preaching, praying and singing, and form the acquaintance of each other.

The meeting is not to be a Congress, or in any way connected with the Exposition, but just simply an Old Baptist union meeting. I have thought that the earlier part of December would be a good time for all. I have set Thursday, December 5th, as opening day for our week's meeting.

First, services will be held at half past seven o'clock Thursday evening, December 5th. Let all the brethren be in Atlanta for the opening services. The Baptists in Atlanta would be glad to meet many strange brethren there. Let all go that can. I wish also to say that as most all of the brethren in Atlanta are poor in this world's goods, that they are not able to care for the visiting brethren, and none regret this more than they do. Then it must be understood that all attending the meeting must go fully prepared to care for themselves, as the brethren there will not be expected to care for them. It is necessary for all to understand this beforehand. Board and lodging can be obtained at reasonable rates.

Now, let all our brethren that expect to visit the great Exposition arrange to go during the weeek of the Baptist meeting. All that desire to go are cordially invited. Any one desiring further information can write to Green & Mathews, 37 N. Broad St., or H. H. Green & Sons, 804 Equitable Building, or Elder S. H. Whatley, 19 Humphrey St., or D. H. Pitts, 73 Fairlie St., or J. F. Daniels, 21 1-2 E. Alabama St., Atlanta, Ga. These brethren will furnish any information desired.

May the Lord be with us and direct us, and may our meeting be one long to be remembered, and unto his name be all the praise.

Yours in hope,

JOHN DOWNEY.

CORRESPONDING LETTERS.

The Salisbury Old School Baptist Association, in session with the Little Creek Church, Sussex Co., Del., Oct. 23d, 24th and 25th, 1895, to the several associations and meetings with which she corresponds, sendeth love in the Lord.

DEARLY BELOVED IN CHRIST JESUS:—We hope we feel thankful to our God for his kind providence over us, and in sparing our unprofitable lives another year, and in permitting us to come together in his most holy name in associate capacity. We have been greatly favored of God in sending us so many of his called and qualified ministers of the truth as it is in Jesus, who have come richly laden with glad tidings of great joy; and, we hope, by the power and goodness of God we have had an ear to hear and a heart to understand this glorious gospel of salvation by grace. We feel greatly edified and strengthened in our faith and hope in Jesus our Redeemer. The report from the churches is that they are in peace, and that they stand steadfastly in the faith of the gospel of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. To all such we feel that sweet fellowship which none but the children of God can feel or know. We desire a continuance of your correspondence, as we feel comforted and strengthened thereby.

Our next session is appointed to be held with the church at Snow Hill, Worcester Co., Md., on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday before the fourth Sunday in October, 1896, when we hope again to have the privilege of meeting together in love and fellowship. Brethren, pray for us that our faith fail not, and that when it pleases our God in his all-wise providence that our earthly pilgrimage shall be ended, we by faith in him may say, in the language of Paul, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith. Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing."

CIRCULAR LETTERS.

The Virginia Corresponding Meeting of Primitive Baptists, in session with the New Valley Church, Loudoun Co., Va., October 16th, 17th and 18th, 1895, to the churches, associations and meetings with which we correspond, sendeth greetings.

OUR desire in writing you this letter is not to open controversy upon principles of doctrine which have been fully discussed among us for years, but to state briefly and concisely as our abilities will admit what is surely believed and held as truth among the churches of the Corresponding Meeting of Virginia, at least, and, we believe, by nearly if not quite all the Old School Baptist churches in the east. Why we seek to do this at this time is that for some reason and in certain quarters the idea seems to be entertained that we have abandoned, or are ready to abandon, cardinal principles of doctrine which have separated us hitherto from what is popularly termed the "Clark Baptists." Elder Sylvester Hassell, of North Carolina, has published an account of a tour among the "Clark" churches in Maryland and Virginia, in which he mentions certain principles of doctrine which he calls "heresies," which we have long held as vital principles of truth, which were preached, and defended in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, in years past, by Elders Beebe, Trott, Leachman, Farrington, and others, and are surely believed here in Virginia now. Why Elder Hassell, or any one else, should think we had in any manner abandoned those principles we are at a loss to understand, unless he has given heed to those disaffected brethren who have recently left us, in their utterly groundless charges that we have departed from our former faith and are leaning toward the principles advocated by Elder John Clark and his followers. Surely any one taking pains to inform themselves and find out where we stand and what we believe could not fall into that mistake. If Elder Clark and those of his following ever had occasion to denounce as heresies any principle of doctrine we ever held, the same occasion exists now. In mentioning some of the "heresies" held by our people, Elder Hassell alludes to what he terms "Vital Unionism" and "no change in the soul in regeneration." Were we to abandon the first of these, we would surrender what we believe the very foundation of the gospel of God's grace. Should we yield the latter, we would deny both the Scriptures, as we understand them, and the teachings of our own experience. The unlimited sovereignty of God is another principle separating us, if we understand them. We hold as most precious and of the greatest importance the glorious truth that God is the dwelling-place of his saints in all generations, before the foundations of the earth were laid, "from everlasting to everlasting thou (art) God."—Psa. xc. 1, 2. That in his book all his members were written, "which in continuance were fashioned, when as yet there was none of them."—Psa. cxxxix. 16. We believe that the first Adam "is the figure of him that was to come;" that as Adam embodied his wife and all his posterity, so Christ embodies his entire church; he was her life from eternity. As a deep sleep fell upon Adam, and from his side a bone was taken, of which the woman was formed, so the deep sleep of death must fall upon the second Adam before his bride, his church, could be manifested. Manifested, we say; not created. As Adam could say to our mother Eve, "This is now bone of my bones, and flesh of my flesh," so Christ can say by his inspired apostle to the church, "We are members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones." Bone of his bones, and flesh of his flesh; not some other flesh made his, but "his flesh." We see this wonderful truth illustrated and set forth in the Psalms especially, as well as through all the Scriptures. In the transgression Eve came under the curse of the law; so did the members of the body of Christ in their earthly standing in Adam. Still the transgression of the woman could not destroy the relationship between her and her husband or head, so that she could be other than his flesh and bones. The tie still obtains; it cannot be broken. So sin or transgression could not destroy that eternal bond of union between Christ and his bride, the church. As Adam must come under the law for the sake of Eve, to be with her, so Christ must come under the law for his people. "Ought not Christ to have suffered these things, and to enter into his glory?" Why ought he to have suffered? Did not divine justice require that he should suffer, because he was responsible for his people? How could the law lay hold upon him in any other way, considered as the head of his body, the church? The eternal life of the church, her everlasting inheritance, promised before the world began, never was in danger, never came under the law, and was not demanded by the law; for that life is, and always was, "hid with Christ in God." "When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall we also appear with him in glory." Christ must suffer "in the flesh," and "bear the sins of many," and "condemn sin in the flesh." We attempt only to give a mere outline of our faith in this important matter. God forbid that we should undertake to explain that great mystery of godliness. We can only hope to point out that mystery as we view it. Christ is from everlasting, "head over all things to the church;" and that church is "his body, the fullness of him that filleth all in all." He was found in fashion as a man, as the head of his

REFLECTIONS.

SINCE we have been trying to fill the position of one of the editors of the SIGNS our mind has often traveled back to the former years, and we have been tracing up our early reflections concerning the doctrine of God our Savior in connection with our own experience, and also with our early reading of the SIGNS. Perhaps it may be as profitable as anything we could at this time write to recall and pen down some of those reflections as an editorial.

We recall our early faith, and compare it with that which is dear to us now, and we can say that we are not aware that we to-day disbelieve any of the doctrine that then seemed to us scriptural and true. We trust that it has been given us to see many things in a clearer light and with more fullness of meaning than was then the case; but still we see and love the same things that we believed then. There is this difference between our earliest thoughts about the truth compared with the present. We believed these things then, but we did not love them, and we saw no spiritual power in them; now we trust that we both believe and love them.

As far back as we can remember we believed the doctrine of the eternity and self-existence of Jehovah. We believed fully in his omnipotence, omnipresence and omniscience, in his unchangeability, foreknowledge and predestination, in his holiness, justice and truth, and that he was good and merciful and loving. We believed in the efficacy of the blood of Christ to wash away forever all the sins of all his chosen people; and we believed that he had a chosen people, chosen before the world began, and that Jesus died for these, and that these, and these only, should be saved everlastingly. We recall that we also believed that all whom God should call by his grace should come to him, and that no one else could come. We believed in the necessity of the new birth, and that this must be of God, and not in any sense by the will of man. We do not mean that we understood or fully comprehended all these things. Though years have passed away, we do not yet comprehend more than a small part of the mystery of redemption; but in a certain way we believed these things then, and we believe them yet.

But there is a difference. Perhaps we can tell what we mean by speaking of the doctrine of predestination especially. From our first thoughts about Jehovah we thought that he could not be limited, that he must be boundless in knowledge and unchangeable in purpose. We believed that he never began to be, while all things besides had a beginning. He was the only Creator; all else were creatures which he had made. It seemed to us that this God must have made all things, and that therefore he must have control over all things, and that all things must do his will. It seemed to us that he must have known the end from the beginning, and that therefore all things were fixed, and could not deviate from their prescribed and settled orbit. It seemed to us that to deny this would be to deny the very existence of the Godhead. All this seemed to us true. It was a solid rock, which must stand. But we did not then love this doctrine. It seemed to us a rock of truth, but it was a hard and flinty rock. We recall contending for it many times in our youth as being a Bible doctrine, but still we could not see any consolation in it. This was in our earlier years; and even after we had obtained a hope in Christ we failed to see for a time how essential to a good hope in Christ was the doctrine of predestination and the complete sovereignty of God.

Our first comfort in this doctrine came to us in the time of affliction. We cannot take space nor time to tell of the special seasons or the special circumstances in which this doctrine was made meat and drink to us; but under an hour of sore anxiety and distress the words, "The Lord reigneth," were applied to us with special power, and out of this hard and flinty rock of God's unlimited predestination and sovereignty we were enabled to suck honey and to eat. The rock was no longer hard and flinty. Our head rested upon it, and it seemed soft and restful as downy pillows; and we desire to say that ever since then we have found our joy in these things to abound just when the hour of trial lay heavy upon us. We have found it sweeter than honey and the honeycomb at such times to believe that nothing occurs by chance, but that all has fallen out according to the eternal appointment of God; and we believe it true that these strong foundations become precious to the soul only when under the stress of trial the soul is driven back to them, as to the only solid things. There have been at least two instances within our own knowledge where dear children of God doubted and questioned the truth and scripturalness of these principles of doctrine, and continued to doubt until severe affliction had been laid upon them; and through affliction they were brought to declare a clear testimony to their faith and comfort in this same doctrine.

As the years have gone on we have, we trust, been led to see the perfect harmony of these principles of truth with all else that God has been pleased to reveal of himself more and more, but the clearness of the truth itself has been no brighter than when we first came to love it. As we have come to love it and rejoice in it more and more, there has sprung up in our heart a still stronger sense of our dependence upon God, and a more abiding spirit of prayer to the Giver of all good. It has been said that a belief in predestination will destroy all prayer with reference to the thing predestinated; but this has not been our experience. As the power and sweetness of this doctrine has at times been borne in upon our heart, we have felt a deeper sense of humble reliance upon God, and a more earnest calling upon him for all needed blessings. So it has been said that to believe the predestination of anything whatever destroys all room for exhortation or admonition with reference to that thing; but this has not been our experience. On the contrary, the more we have loved this doctrine, the more we also have loved the word of admonition, and the more we have felt our need of conformity to God's will. We may not be able to show to others how this can be, but so it is; and we are persuaded that thousands can testify to the same.

In our mind, along with the predestination of God has stood the doctrine of election, so that as we believed the one, we were compelled to also believe the other. It certainly needs no argument to prove that if the doctrine of predestination be true, the doctrine of election must be true also. Election is but the predestination of some men to life and salvation. Election is only one part of predestination. This seemed plain to us at an early age. We believed it as a doctrine which it seemed to us was reasonable to believe. But it was not until we began to feel the guilt and curse of sin, and the just condemnation of the law of God, that we began to realize the necessity of election if we were ever to have a hope of salvation; and when the time came that, as we hope, it pleased God to bless us with a good hope through grace, we rejoiced that it was according as he had chosen us in Christ before the world began. Then, as now, it seemed good to us that election was true. In it was our assurance of salvation; and when the question arose, Why should we be thus chosen and blessed? we could only answer that it must be just because God freely willed it. "Even so, Father, for so it seemed good in thy sight," was all the reason that we could see.

"What was there in us that could merit esteem,
Or give the Creator delight?
'Twas even so, Father, we ever must say,
Because it seemed good in thy sight."

We can give no other reason to-day why one should be chosen and another left than just the free, sovereign choice of the holy and ever-blessed God. We have never had any use for any doctrine of election that would make man's goodness or works, foreseen or otherwise, the basis of it. We have had no use for any doctrine of election that did not embrace sinners of Adam's fallen race. Any other sort of election than this would be of no use to us. There can be no election without rejection. It would be an absurdity of language to say that all were elected. Whoever, then, were elected, others were not elected; and the elect obtain the blessing. This has been our hope for many years. These were our early thoughts. They seemed to us true as a theory in our youth; afterward they became to us sweeter than any words can tell. We love this truth yet. It is hated by self-righteous religionists; but every broken-hearted sinner must love it whenever it is revealed to him, because in it is his salvation.

In perfect harmony with all this came up the doctrine of the atonement. The atonement of our Lord Jesus Christ seemed to us the very key-stone in the arch of salvation. A man may be very much clouded in his mind concerning every other principle of truth; but concerning this he must see clearly, if he is to enjoy a sure and abiding hope. The predestinated and elect people of God are justified by the atonement in his sight. In no other way can they be justified. "Justified freely by his grace through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus." It seemed to us clearly taught in the Scriptures that by this finished work of Christ, and nothing else, could we be saved. This we believed as a theory; but this theory became to us a real and blessed truth after awhile. We cannot of course here speak of all the way in which this blessed truth was opened up to our mind. It seemed to us, as it still does, that Christ and him crucified was set forth in every page of holy writ. The types under the law, the psalms and the prophets, and the plain declarations in the gospels and the epistles, together with the Savior's own words upon the cross, "It is finished," all seemed to us to declare the same truth, that sinners are saved through the death and resurrection of the blessed Son of God. From this we have not been suffered to waver; but, on the other hand, we have felt the importance of this truth more and more as the years have passed by since then. We held this truth as a theory from our youth; but the time came when we could, as we trust, realize its preciousness to a poor, guilty, condemned sinner, such as we felt to be. A finished atonement is what we need; and Jesus so finished the work that nothing either great or small remains for us to do.

Along with these truths of predestination, election and a finished atonement, there also stood forth as we read the Scriptures the necessity of the new birth. We recall that in those early years the only question that disturbed us much as we read about the new birth was this, How may I know if I am born again? In those years of our early experience the question of what the new birth might be, of what it was that must be born again, of what part of the man was born again, or whether it was the man at all, or something besides man, who partook of this birth, did not interest us; in fact, questions like these never occurred to us. The one absorbing question was, Am I born of God or not? We recall how earnestly we searched for the evidences of the new birth in the Scriptures, and how earnestly we listened when ministers described the evidences. It was said, "Ye must be born again" to see or enter the kingdom of heaven; and we desired to enter that kingdom. In connection with this doctrine one thing seemed clear to our mind, viz., that man himself could have nothing to do with bringing about this work within himself. When the Savior used the term "birth," in describing this work, he must have meant that there was an analogy between our first birth, which was natural, and the second, or spiritual birth. It seemed clear to our mind then, as it does now, that we are passive in the spiritual birth, even as we are in the natural birth. We heard it preached in this way, and it seemed to us good and true. The first gospel sermon that we ever heard, of which we have any clear recollection, was by the late Elder Wm. Quint, of Maine, at the association at Whitefield, Maine, thirty-three years ago. His theme was the new birth. We recall that he presented two chief things, viz., that it was by the will and power of God solely, and not of the will or power of man at all; and then the evidences by which we might know that we were the subjects of this birth. We recall how we hung upon his words, and how they were blessed to our comfort and joy. The chief question in our mind ever since has been just this, whether we know anything about this birth experimentally. We have never felt any great desire to philosophize or speculate concerning this or any other scriptural subject, but we have desired to know and to accept the testimony of the Scriptures concerning it; and it has seemed to us that they declare that it is of God, that it is by the word of God, that it is of the Spirit of God, that it is from above, that it is the man, not something else, or a part of the man, but the man, and that without it no man can see the kingdom of God. These things have seemed clear to our mind all along. Many things we have not understood, and many things we do not yet understand; but all this has seemed clear. We do not recall anywhere that it is said in the Scriptures that the soul must be born again, or the body must be born again, or the spirit must be born again, but we do recall where it is said "a man" must be born again; and we notice that Jesus did not say the old man nor the new man, but "a man." We hope to always feel satisfied to say this, and nothing more, unless it be pointed out to us where the Scriptures say more than this. No dispute can arise out of saying this. If we should say more than this some brother might dispute it; and, what is more, he might be right in so doing. We recall to mind that once, perhaps twenty-five years ago, at the Baltimore Association, held at Black Rock, the late Elder Joseph L. Purington in the course of a sermon said, "Some ask what part of the man is born again. I answer, No part of the man, but the whole man, is born again—soul, body and spirit, if you will." We have always remembered his exact words, because they made a deep impression upon us, owing to circumstances then existing. We could express our faith no better were we to write pages. It has also seemed to us that the new birth has not changed the old nature in the substance of it, but has given to us a new spirit, or life, or nature, which controls and guides and rules in us, bringing every thought into captivity to Christ; for we daily realize only too well that there is a constant conflict in our mind, one desire drawing us after God, and the other desire drawing us after the things of the flesh. Our whole experience has been summed up in the testimony of a little girl who, as we were told, once came before a church in Virginia, fifty or more years ago. She was asked if she saw any difference between herself then and now; to which she replied that she saw a great difference. "Well," said one, "tell us, my child, if you can, what is the difference." "Why," said she, "then I was a sinner running after sin with all my might; now I am a sinner running away from sin as hard as I can." What more could be said in a sermon of an hour! Still a sinner, but what a difference! It seems to us that the conflict is not between the body and the mind, but that it is a conflict in the mind between two opposing principles. Still a sinner, but now abhorring sin, and striving against it, and looking and longing for deliverance. We hope that this is our real experience, that we do really abhor sin and ourselves as sinners, and strive to flee from it.

In connection with the new birth our mind was led to dwell upon the vital oneness of Christ and his people. Little by little we were led to dwell upon this with delight. How sweet and consoling were the words, "I give unto them eternal life, and they shall never perish;" and the Scripture, "Because I live, ye shall live also." It dawned upon us as a glorious doctrine that Christ was and is the life of his people. Jesus was that corn of wheat which unless it fall into the ground and die must abide alone. As the corn of wheat falling into the ground and dying gathers to itself dead earthy matter, and puts its life into this dead matter, and builds up the living plant beautiful and glorious to behold, so Jesus by the power of his own life gathers to himself and builds up his church; and as this work goes on it is true of each one, as the apostle testifies, "And you hath he quickened, who were dead in trespasses and sins." Jesus is the life of his people. Jesus is eternal, and therefore in him they have eternal life. It is one life. It is not separated, nor can it be. Jesus said, "I am the way, the truth, and the life." The people of God, as his people, can have no other life. They can come to God by no other way. They who some time were far off are brought nigh by the blood of Christ, and live in Jesus. There is a unity or oneness in the life of Jesus. Of this unity the people of God partake. We have for many years objected to the phrase "eternal vital union," and have believed that the word "unity" was far preferable. It is eternal life of which we speak, and in this life this unity consists. This does not by any means deny or contradict the Scriptures, which testify that sinners are by nature far off from God, and alienated in their minds by wicked works, and dead to God, but are now redeemed unto God, and brought nigh and saved. This is all a matter of experience, as well as of Bible testimony; but it is by the indwelling of this one divine, eternal life that they are brought nigh, and come to live and grow up into Christ.

"Hail, glorious union, firm and strong!
How great the grace! how sweet the song!
That worms of earth should ever be
One with incarnate Deity."

We leave these thoughts for the present. If our mind should be led still farther into the subject we hope ere long to write still farther upon these glorious themes. Should we do so, we hope to write according to the testimony of the word. We have now written in brief as these things have seemed to us from the first of our experience. A theory may be false, but experience is real.

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE.

TO MOST of our readers the above mentioned book is too well known to need any introduction or a description by us. While many of the Bibles have a Concordance appended, they are generally so condensed or abridged as to be of little or no use. Cruden's Complete Concordance, however, enables one to readily turn to any passage of Scripture of which they can call to mind two or three words, and in our opinion is the most complete and convenient as a reference book of any published. In addition, it contains many other aids in studying the Bible, as may be seen by reference to advertisement on last page. Remember, both the books there mentioned are CRUDEN'S COMPETE.

HUMILITY.

IT matters little whether a child of God be accounted great and honorable in this world, or whether he be looked upon by his brethren as being highly favored of the Lord, his soul knows its own bitterness and feels its own need of the supporting presence of God, as much amid the loftiest honors and praises of the world as when he is overwhelmed among the afflictions and trials which are common to the Lord's people in this wilderness. Not, indeed, but that the elect children of God are sometimes left to the workings of their old, corrupt propensities, to glory in the vanities of time and temporal things, bnt they find in the end that there is more comfort and spiritual enjoyment in suffering the reproaches of Christ and being resigned in all humility to be considered the least among the inhabitants of Zion, than in all the praises of the world.

The old man or carnal nature of the saints being contrary to the spirit of life in Christ Jesus, which is implanted in the heart of every disciple of the Lamb, the desires, enjoyments and pleasures of the one are contrary to the other, so that the fleshly propensities of the child of God are continually rising to entangle his feet and involve him in difficulties to impede his progress in the race which he is called to run. Among the most powerful of these impediments is the thirst for the esteem and honor of our fellow men. How often is the trembling saint frightened from bearing his testimony to the truth, and from giving to the brethren a statement of his trials and refreshing seasons, by the whisper in his own mind telling him he may expose himself to ridicule and hatred. The deceitful warning has its effect, not only on the mind of the weakling who being as yet young in experience is fearful of every thought and deed lest he stray from the footsteps of the flock, but it also falls with a fearful weight on the heart of the old soldier of the cross, who has often offered himself as being ready to follow the Lord to the prison or to death; and strange as it may appear, when the trial comes in this form his courage fails him, and he finds all his strength is weakness, and all his boldness is gone. Here it is shown him that his only refuge is in God, and that instead of his abiding in his own strength, if the sustaining power of God's grace be withdrawn he is ready to deny his knowledge of the Lord. This gives him such a view of himself as leads him to feel his own unworthiness, and to esteem others better than himself.

In the heart of him who has long justly been admired by his brethren, whether on account of his mental endowments or his exemplary virtue, it is natural that there should be more sensitiveness to reproach than if he had never known that he was regarded as particularly favored in any respect. Though this should not be so with those who have passed from death to life, yet so strong is the influence of the body of this death over their conduct that there are few if any of all God's children who are entirely free from this kind of natural pride. Every traveler in the strait and narrow way is well convinced before he has been long on his pilgrimage, that it is better for him to be regarded and to regard himself as less than the least of all saints, than to be elevated in his ideas of himself by the praises of men; yet notwithstanding all his efforts to the contrary he is frequently carried away by this spirit of vain glory. How important, then, that we give due attention to the admonition of the apostle James, iv. 10, "Humble yourselves in the sight of the Lord, and he shall lift you up." And also 1 Peter v. 5, 6, "All of you be subject one to another, and be clothed with humility; for God resisteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble. Humble yourselves therefore under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you in due time."

INFIDELITY.

THE following is said to be an extract from a sermon preached by Dr. Patten, a Presbyterian clergyman of the city of New York:

"The present crisis is one of intense interest to the followers of Christ. A new race of Infidels has arisen; not profane, unchaste, immoral and unprincipled men, but evincing a regard for God, for truth, for humanity, for morals, and whose complaint is that the churches are arrayed against God, against humanity, and against sound morals. It is an evil hour when Infidelity can marshal its forces, with humanity for its watchword, and with the conscience of the world on its side; while Christianity in the hands of those who betray it, leads its hosts to battle for oppression. In such a conflict, Infidelity must triumph."

The above extract we find in an exchange paper, credited to the New Jersey Freeman, which, we presume, is reliable authority.

Words like these come with an ill grace from the mouth of a Presbyterian Rabbi, while it is but a few years since one of their number, who stood high amongst them, proposed that this sect should organize itself into a "Christian Party in Politics." The honest mind is naturally led to inquire, Why does this pious Doctor remain among the very sect who are foremost in rendering Christianity obnoxious by palming off another gospel, which is not another, but a perversion of the gospel of Christ? It is a sure evidence that any doctrine is false when infidelity to that doctrine has truth, humanity and morality on its side; and such a religion as takes ground in opposition to these, is indeed arrayed against God, against humanity, and against sound morals. "In such a conflict," the Doctor says, "Infidelity must triumph." Yes, because that infidelity to the commandments of men is obedience to and faith in the word of God. It should be particularly noticed that the infidelity complained of by the Doctor is not infidelity against God and truth, but that infidelity which acknowledges God, loves truth and justice, and is only infidel to the forms and ceremonies of a corrupt and hypocritical priesthood, whose religious principles are the same as those of the ancient Pharisees, and who would have all men compelled to unite with them in blaspheming the God of heaven. The "Reverend Doctor" Patten may rest assured that his hosts will never be able to prevail against this sect, which he is pleased to denominate a new race of Infidels, but which is in reality none other than the church of the living God, which in the apostles's day was known as the sect which was everywhere spoken against; and the word of the eternal God, who cannot lie, is pledged against him and for the support of this people. They are the church of Christ, who has said, "Upon this Rock I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." So, Doctor, you will perceive it is of no avail for you, and all the powers your prince can rally, to seek the destruction of this race. Their life is hid with Christ in God; and when he who is their life shall appear, they shall appear with him in glory, the venom, extraordinary rage, and union of efforts of men and devils to the contrary notwithstanding.

In regard to the novelty of this race the Doctor is entirely mistaken, just as his pious predecessors were who persecuted zealously the apostles and primitive disciples, verily thinking that in so doing they did God service; for they supposed, as does the Doctor, that this race never existed until they heard of them, not knowing that this people has been on the earth and preserved of God from the malice of men and devils ever since the days of Abel.

Against infidelity to the principles of Christianity the pious Doctor has nothing to say; but all the natural enmity of his heart against God is stirred up when he sees this people, who are like the disciples of primitive times, that he can find no fault in them whereof to accuse them before the civil powers of the earth. If infidelity against God and truth were such a terrible thing in his sight, he would not be found in the ranks of those who being ignorant of God's righteousness, and going about to establish their own righteousness, have not submitted themselves to the righteousness of God. But we know of no people other than the Old School Baptists who answer the description which Dr. Patten has given of this new race of Infidels. Note well the description of them, and see if they do not answer to its very letter; and see, further, whether any other people can possibly be meant. He says of them that they are "not profane, unchaste, immoral, or unprincipled men, but evincing a regard for God, for truth," &c. Of whom, now, could he have been speaking when he used this language? Certainly not of those who deny that there is truth in divine revelation, who are in the common acceptation of the word "Infidels;" for these evince no regard for God. Neither can he refer to any of the other sects of the Arminian world, for they are all acknowledged by the Doctor and his sect in the "Truly Evangelical Alliance." The charge which he says they bring against the popular religionists of the day is also just what all Old School Baptists have ever urged against the popularly cherished religions of the world, viz., "that the churches [known as claiming to be such by the world] are arrayed against God, against humanity, and against sound morals." Now, let any one whose eyes are not blinded decide. Does this description fit any other people but the poor, despised church of Christ, now known by the world as Old School Baptists?

What he says about Christianity in the hands of those who betray it, needs no particular comment further than the simple statement that Christianity (that is, the gospel of Christ) is not, never was, and never will be, in the hands of those who betray it. Its divine Author has never suffered it to go out of his hands; and therefore those children of men who profess to have Christianity or divinity to peddle, are base impostors, whose object is, not the glory of God, but the service of their father the devil, and the annoyance of God's children here on earth.

May our God in his infinite mercy defeat the wily designs of Satan against his Zion, and preserve her from all evil.

PRONOUNCING BIBLES.

IN addition to the list of Bibles published on last page we wish to call especial attention to the PRONOUNCING BIBLES, containing Old and New Testaments, King James Version, with marginal references. All the proper names of every person or place in these Bibles are divided into syllables, and accented as they should be pronounced, enabling the reader to readily pronounce correctly the most difficult names of persons and places.

These books are 11x13 inches, and range in price from $5.50 to $20.00, according to binding, the contents of all being the same. The books being too large and heavy to be sent by mail, we will express them at our expense at the following prices, viz.:

No. 51. Bound in American Morocco, Arabesque, gilt edges, $5.50.

No. 53. French Morocco, padded, round corners, gilt edges, $8.00.

No. 55. Extra Morocco, beveled, rolled edge, gilt edges, $12.00.

No. 59. Levant Morocco, padded sides, raised bands, silk sewed, round corners, red under gold edges, $20.00.

For pulpit use these Bibles are especially adapted, and our brethren in the ministry would find it a great convenience to have one on the desk.

body. He lived, suffered and died as the head of his body. He arose again, and ever liveth as head of his body.

Now, briefly, regarding the manifestation of Christ in his people, in their experience of this great salvation. Again we must go back to the first man; and it is very important to remember always that he is "the figure," the representation, "the image," "of him that was to come;" not the substance. To our mind it is necessary to have a clear understanding of the first man, of the nature of man, and all that constitutes him man. The man, this Adam man, we believe is the subject of salvation, and for his sake is revealed the great purpose of salvation, and the wonderful works of God in that salvation. We read that he was made (of) the dust of the ground; that God breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and he became a living soul. Paul says concerning him, "The first man is of the earth, earthy." We understand him to mean that the whole man, all that constitutes him man, body, soul and spirit, was and is earthy. The "breath of life" was not a heavenly or divine element given him by his Maker, but he was altogether "earthy." It seems to us this was abundantly shown in the garden of Eden. There was "the tree of life." But did he desire or eat of its fruit? His flesh in the person of Eve did lust for that which God had forbidden. She showed her unbelief in God by believing the tempter. She lusted after the forbidden fruit. The fear of God was not in her heart; for what he had prohibited was "pleasant to her eyes," "good for food," and "desirable to make one wise." We cannot believe her nature was changed by her transgression, but rather it was revealed. There is no sign or token in her of the divine nature, of which the saints of God are partakers. The honor, the love, the fear of God, is not displayed here, but rather the manifestation and gratification of the lusts of the flesh instead. Lust conceived, and sin was brought forth. Man's entire nature is earthy. This is the condition of the flesh, and all that is born of the flesh. The legal dispensation proves this most conclusively; but we cannot go into that now. In the new birth we do not believe that some part of the man is born over, be it his soul, mind or spirit. The Savior does not say so. All remains flesh. But we do believe that instead of making a child of God out of the "soul" of man, Christ is revealed in him. Indeed the doctrine we believe is Christ, and nothing but Christ. He is the "stronger" that comes to the house or palace of the "strong man," binds him, takes away his armor, and spoils his goods. He does not cast out the strong man, nor does he "change his soul," but he does put him under bonds. He, our precious Savior, has almighty power over this strong man. He works in his people both to will and to do of his own good pleasure. Though they beseech the Lord, with the apostle Paul, that this "thorn in the flesh," this "messenger of Satan," may be removed from them, and that they may experience that change they so much desire, his reply is, "My grace is sufficient for thee." If Christ be in his people they have the mind, the Spirit, of Christ; and it is with the mind they serve the law of God, but with the flesh the law of sin. The apostle expresses our faith when he writes, "He that hath the Son, hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God, hath not life." It is the Son, Christ, all the time, and nothing but the Son, till "the redemption of our body." The seal of the Spirit is the earnest of that glorious consummation, when the "change" shall come, when this corruptible shall put on incorruption, and mortality shall be swallowed up of life. It is only by faith the saints can now say they are the sons of God. It seems to us the mistake of those who oppose this matter is in taking the earnest for the consummation—the earnest of the change we so much desire. The man is surely the "earthen vessel" in which "we have this treasure." The having this treasure in earthen vessels is the earnest, the assurance to us that we shall be conformed to the image of God's dear Son, when we shall realize the fruition of our hope in awaking in his likeness. The vessel is now earthen; no part of it is heavenly." "I am carnal, sold under sin." We do not believe Christ dwells in his people as something inert, having no effect upon the sinner. We believe he walks in them and reigns in them, Lord of lords and King of kings; that he has almighty power over them and in them, subduing their passions, controlling their mind, heart and spirit. The "elder" is the servant of the "younger." Peter illustrates this. What earthly passions he displays—love of self, cowardice and falsehood. Still Christ had been revealed to him as the Son of God. But there stood Peter, the man plainly manifesting his sinful nature. The sifting of Satan certainly did separate the precious from the vile. Christ was there, dwelling in him by his Spirit. One look from the Master, and we see a heart-broken sinner. That is the change, a wonderful change, in the condition, not yet in the nature; a sinner yet, "earthly, sensual and devilish," but sealed by the Holy Spirit of promise unto the day of redemption, when these vile bodies shall be fashioned like unto Christ's glorious body.

We hope these fragmentary remarks will give the reader a truthful idea of our faith upon the effects of the new birth, as it is termed. It is hardly necessary for us to say much upon the subject of predestination. We hold, as we always have, to what is termed the unlimited predestination of God in all things; nor can we see how any one can deny it who believes in the absolute sovereignty of God. Our God is in heaven. He doeth whatsoever he pleaseth. As manifested in Jesus Christ, our Mediator, he has all power in heaven and in earth. All things were created by him and for him, thrones, dominions, principalities and powers, things visible and invisible, and all things consist by him. Upon this emphatic testimony we rest. If this is "heresy," we are content to be called "heretics." At any rate this is the doctrine we love, and which we have no mind to abandon, though we were called heretics by all the world. As we said at the commencement, we have no purpose to raise a controversy in writing as we have, but rather to assure all our brethren, especially those who through misrepresentations made concerning us have been led to believe we have departed from the faith of Old School Baptists in the east or north, or anywhere else where the pure word of God is held sacred, in preference to the traditions of men. When we are shown we are in error in any point of doctrine, we will be ready to be taught a more excellent way. We do not profess infallibility. We know we need instruction. But we insist that our teachers show us the word of God, not the traditions of men. "To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."

Our meeting has been one of complete harmony in sentiment and feeling, the preaching in perfect accord, Christ and him crucified the theme. The coming of your messengers has cheered our hearts, assuring us we are of that one body whose head is Christ Jesus our Lord.

Our next meeting will be held, by divine permission, with our sister of Frying Pan, Fairfax Co., Va., commencing on Wednesday before the third Sunday in October, 1896, when we hope to again meet your messengers and receive your messages of love and fellowship.

E. V. WHITE, Mod.

G. G. GALLEHER, Clerk.

The Salisbury Old School Baptist Association, in session with the Little Creek Church, in Sussex Co., Delaware, October 23d, 24th and 25th, 1895, to the several churches of which she is composed, sendeth greeting.

DEARLY BELOVED IN THE LORD:—We will take occasion, in this our annual Circular, to address a few thoughts to you on the subject of "Charity," as presented by an inspired apostle of Jesus Christ. As a text we will quote 1 Cor. xiii. 13. "And now abideth faith, hope, charity, these three; but the greatest of these is charity." In the preceding chapter the apostle writes concerning spiritual gifts, the first of which is the gift of the Spirit of God, which dwells in the saints, by which one can and does say that Jesus is the Lord; for "no man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost." From this proceeds all other gifts. Though there be a diversity of gifts, yet are they all by the same Spirit. In these we have embraced all the gifts that are to be found in the body, the church, for its profit: the word of wisdom and of knowledge, faith, healing, working of miracles, prophecy, discerning of spirits, divers kinds of tongues, the interpretation of tongues. The body is one, and hath many members; and each member has its appropriate gift, and all for the use and profit of the whole body; and it is the same God that worketh all in all. The members of the body are so harmoniously joined and bound together that their suffering or rejoicing must be together, and all are profited together. If one has the gift of an apostle, or prophet, or teacher, or the working of miracles, or healing, or help, or government, or speaking with tongues, it is not for his benefit alone who has the gift, but it is for the benefit of the whole; and all work, and their effects blend together, for mutual comfort and edification of the whole body. It is lawful that we covet earnestly the best gifts; those gifts that will prove to the best interest of the body. But there is yet a more excellent way. If charity (the love of God) be not the moving principle, the very best gifts in the church are vain and unprofitable from a spiritual standpoint. Charity is the love of God, and is but another word for love, and flows directly from God, and is shed abroad in the heart by the Holy Ghost, which is given unto the saints. And if this be absent, all our outward show is unprofitable and vain, though we speak with the tongues of men and of angels, have the gift of prophecy, and understand all mysteries, and all knowledge, and have all faith, and could remove mountains, and bestow all our goods to feed the poor, and give our bodies to be burned, &c. Charity is manifested by these things, but does not consist of them. The loveliness of charity is in its humility, self-denial, endurance of afflictions, patience in tribulation; it suffers long and is kind, envieth not, vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up. Charity never faileth. All gifts shall fail, when the great purpose of God shall have been fulfilled in them. They all have their place in the present time. They are "for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ, till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ;" and when that shall have been accomplished they shall cease; for they belong to the imperfect state of the saints, to the conditions where only part is seen and known. "But when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away." "For now we see through a glass darkly [dimly, as through a darkened glass], but then face to face; now we know in part, but then shall we know even as we are known." But the love of God will still abound, and will be the cause of exultation, the song of all the blood-washed throng, begun here below, and carried on in heaven. Their song is now, and shall forever be, "Not unto us, O Lord, not unto us, but unto thy name give glory, for thy glory, for thy mercy, and for thy truth's sake."

We will close with a reminder to the brethren, that charity be in exercise among you. "And above all these things, put on charity, which is the bond of perfectness; and let the peace of God rule in your hearts, to the which also ye are called in one body; and be ye thankful. Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom, teaching and admonishing one another in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing with grace in your hearts to the Lord. And whatsoever ye do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God and the Father by him." "Now unto him that is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think, according to the power that worketh in us, unto him be glory in the church by Christ Jesus throughout all ages, world without end. Amen."

PICTORIAL HISTORY

OF THE

UNITED STATES.

By James D. McCabe.

This work is no dry mass of details—no bombastic effort to inflame the national pride, but a vivid and brilliant narrative of the events of our history, from the discovery of the American Continent down to thepresent time. It gives a most interesting account of the Indians of North America, from the time of the coming of the white men. The voyages of Columbus and explorations and discoveries of the different nations of Europe are related with graphic power. Every step of our colonial history is traced with patient fidelity, and the sources of those noble and, we trust, enduring institutions, which have made our country free and great, are shown with remarkable clearness. Then follows a clear and succinct account of our great Struggle for Independence, and the establishment of the Federal Union—the events of our career from the close of the Revolution to the administration of Harrison.

The work is printed from plain, new type, on fine calendered paper, and comprised in one octavo volume of 960 pages. It is splendidly embellished with nearly 500 fine engravings, embracing battles and other historical scenes, portraits of distinguished men, views of our principal cities, &c., &c.

Bound in Fine Silk Cloth, Plain Edges, $2.00, Post-paid.

CORRESPONDENCE.

MACOMB, Ill., Oct., 1895.

DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS IN CHRIST:—Again I am seated for the purpose of penning a few thoughts for your perusal. I have in my mind each dear one that has asked me to write again for our dear family paper, and I feel I should like to comply with their requests could I write anything to comfort or encourage the very least one of the flock. But I realize so sensibly my inability as a writer, and am such an ignorant creature, spiritually, especially, that I feel I should not attempt to write anything for my brethren and sisters to read privately, much less for publication. I feel too unworthy to speak or write anything pertaining to the kingdom of Christ, yet many times I have a strong desire to do so, in my imperfect and stumbling manner. Whether the desire is of the right spirit, or merely of the flesh, I am made many times to question and doubt.

Now, dear friends, who have asked me to write something for your comfort, I fear I will fail; for I must write of the things I have seen and felt and experienced along the pilgrimage road; and when I write of myself it will be poor comfort indeed; for

"When I turn my eyes within,
All is vain, and dark, and wild."

Yes, I feel to be one of the "hindmost ones" along this pilgrimage road, and my only hope is in the amazing grace and mercy of God. Eleven years ago, when I was given strength to come out of the world, take upon me the cross, and follow my Savior down into the watery grave, and arise to walk in newness of life, I firmly believed all my troubles were over. I felt such a sweet peace, that peace which the world cannot give nor take away. I felt that "I should be carried to the skies

On flowery beds of ease."

But alas! I knew not then of the warfare. I was soon led down into the "Valley of humiliation," when the tempter assailed me with all his fiery darts. I was tempted to throw away my little hope, feeling I was deceived, and had deceived my dear brethren and sisters, who had so kindly welcomed me among them. When I looked into my heart I found sin still dwelt there, so that I could not do the things I would, but was doing that I should not. Thus began the warfare between the flesh and spirit; and to this day the conflict is still raging, and I know if left to myself I should fall by the way. I am many times cast down in spirit, mourning over a hard and deceitful heart, grieving over my short-comings, realizing to my sorrow that I cannot live as I should; and instead of growing in grace, I feel to be going backward, and of no use to the church, but a hindrance to my brethren and sisters. Do you ever feel in this way, dear friends? If not, then you have no fellowship for me. But when we by faith are enabled to view Christ as our righteousness, how the scene is changed! The darkness flees away, we take our harps down from the willows, and are enabled to sing the Lord's song.

"Amazing grace! how sweet the sound!
That saved a wretch like me."

I often think of Moses and the burning bush. He was amazed, and wondered why it was not consumed. So the church of Christ stands today, and is not consumed by its adversaries, though surrounded by flames of persecution which seem to overthrow it. Yet he who never slumbers nor sleeps, and in whose hand is all power both in heaven and earth, hath declared, "Upon this rock [Christ] I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." So with you, poor, tried one; though the flames of persecution, afflictions, temptations, trials, doubts and fears, and the sins of your own heart, may rage fiercely round about you, threatening every moment to consume you, yet cannot. We sometimes hear a voice saying,

"The flame shall not hurt thee, I only design Thy dross to consume, and thy gold to refine."

We know that gold, to be purified, must pass through fire to rid it of the dross; so it is with you, dear, tried one, you must pass through the fire; and though the furnace must needs be heated seven times hotter than its usual wont, yet you must walk up and down in this furnace, in this wilderness world, till all the dross is consumed, and that will not be till you shall have done with your pilgrimage here below. May we, by faith, be enabled to behold "One like unto the Son of God" walking with us in this fiery furnace; for he shall bring forth his saints purified by fire, without even the smell of fire upon them. When we are called to pass through deep waters of affliction and trouble, we feel that surely we must be overwhelmed; and we cry out, "Lord, save, or I perish." "All thy waves go over me." We feel ourselves sinking deeper, when we see Jesus coming to us, walking on the waters; yes, he puts them under his feet. He lifts us up, like he did Peter, and says,

"When through the deep waters I call thee to go,
The rivers of woe shall not thee overflow."

When we are called upon to part with our dear ones, and put them forever out of our sight, no more to see their loved forms, nor hear their loved voices, nor see their sweet smiles, and are bereft forever of their dear companionship, O! then we feel our trials are greater than we can bear; and, dear friends, we could not bear these things were it not for that grace which enables the child of God to endure all things. Jesus was a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief. He wept over the disobedience and desolation of Jerusalem, and also at the grave of Lazarus, mingling his tears with those weeping for the loved one gone. He remembers the sorrows of his children, sees all their tears, and in his own good time will wipe them all away.

"He wept, that we might weep;
Each sin demands a tear;
In heaven alone no sin is found,
And there's no weeping there."

Shortly after my father's death, the church where his membership (and that of our mother and four children) was made choice of a pastor, in the person of that faithful old soldier of the cross, Elder S. L. Dark, whose membership for the last few years has been with this church. He is in his eighty-eighth year. His hair is white with the snows of age, and he has been almost entirely blind for eight years; yet his mind is strong, and he still boldly contends for the faith which he has proclaimed for over sixty years. But in consideration of his advanced age and infirmities, and at his request, the church deemed it proper that he have an assistant. The church unanimously made choice of our highly esteemed and much beloved brother, Elder S. Ketchum. These brethren are highly regarded for the truth's sake, and we feel the church will prosper under the care of two such faithful under-shepherds. Four have been added by experience and baptism, and several by letter, this season. This church has been made glad during this summer by the coming of Elder R. M. Simmons, of Missouri, and Elder Humphrey, who preached much to the comfort of the saints. Our annual Association was held with this church this fall. There were twelve ministers present, besides many dear brethren and sisters from a distance. We heard much good preaching, and the gospel, man's total depravity, and God's ability to save to the uttermost, without the help of puny man, election, predestination and the resurrection, was boldly and unflinchingly proclaimed by such able men as Elders Dobbs, Spiers, Purris, Dyer, and others. How thankful should we (the Old School Baptists) be for a sound and able ministry, that is not afraid to proclaim that salvation is of the Lord, and not of man. Everything at this meeting passed off in peace and harmony, and the saints were made to rejoice, and were built up in the most holy faith. I firmly believe the ministers of our faith and order preach the same doctrine and contend for the same faith that Christ and the apostles proclaimed, and it is food to the hungry soul. We met many dear friends at this meeting, and felt it was good to be there. I believe no people enjoy themselves together as the Old Baptists do. There is no discord, no strife, but each seems to prefer others to themselves, and their chief joy seems to be to sing, talk and preach of the glories of the kingdom of Christ. O how sweet it is for brethren to dwell together in unity! We were constrained to say, "A day in thy courts is better than a thousand," and we chose rather to suffer affliction with the children of God, than be called the son and daughter of a king. We could with the poet sing,

"I love thy kingdom, Lord,
The house of thine abode;
The church the blest Redeemer saved
With his own precious blood.

Beyond my highest joy
I prize her heavenly ways;
Her sweet communion, solemn vows,
Her hymns of love and praise.

For her my tears shall fall,
For her my prayers ascend,
For her my toils and cares be given,
Till toils and cares shall end."

O! may we ever love these glorious truths, which seem so plain that "a wayfaring man, though a fool, may not err therein," and that "those that run may read." "This is the way, walk ye in it." O! may we never be led out of the way by deceivers, who go about teaching false doctrine, and would deceive the very elect were it possible; but this is impossible, for it is written, "No man is able to pluck them out of my Father's hand." I believe with the late Elder G. Beebe, "That the most ignorant child of God can confound the most learned theological student in the doctrine of the Bible or christian experience;" for "God hath chosen the base things of this world to confound the mighty." The religion of the present day is a man-made religion; their learning is only of man, and therefore those that preach it must fall into the ditch. Paul says, Gal. i. 11, 12, "The gospel which was preached of me is not after man; for I neither received it of man, neither was I taught it, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ." This text alone is enough to prove the fallacy of their course; yet they go on, their chief incentive being money, high sounding titles, and large numbers, forgetting that it is written, "The Lord did not set his love upon you, nor choose you, because ye were more in number than any people; for ye were the fewest of all people." "Fear not, little flock; for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." Dear brethren and sisters, let us fear not what the world may say of us, but rather rejoice that we know the joyful sound; and may we be kept separate from them, and be not entangled with their false doctrines. O! may we be given an understanding heart, so that we may discern between truth and error. May we love to read the Scriptures, and love to meditate on the holy law of the Lord. May we love his statutes, his cause, his kingdom, and walk worthy of the vocation wherewith we are called. The church of God is the light of the world; let us manifest that light by a godly walk and conversation, and not be led away by the vanities and pleasures of the world. Let us meet together as often as we can, and thus help each other, and not forget our dear pastors and their families. May we be given grace to go on our way, though many trials, difficulties and troubles await us.

"'Tis grace hath brought us safe thus far,
And grace will lead us home."

"Ever hail! blessed temple, abode of my Lord;
I will turn to thee often, to hear from his word;
I will walk to the altar with those that I love,
And delight in the prospects revealed from above."

Now, dear friends, I have written too much again; yet I know not where to stop. This seems so poor and scattering that I cannot see where you can glean a crumb; but I hope you will look over all imperfections. I remember each one in love, and I hope you will think of me when at the throne of grace.

Dear editors, please pardon me for taking up so much space in our dear paper; but if you cast this poor scribble aside, all will be well. I fear I write too much and too often, and this troubles me very much. Dear Elder Chick, your editorials are comforting and precious to me. May God be with you and yours, to bless and keep you, is my sincere prayer.

Your most unworthy sister,
SARAH E. RUNKLE.

RIVER VIEW, Ala., Sept. 17, 1895.

DEAR BROTHER BEEBE:—I inclose you letters from sister Nannie Edwards, of Owensbyville, Ga., which I wish you to publish in the SIGNS. I have known this dear sister for two or three years, and have had the privilege to visit her a few times. I have always felt it a great blessing to be permitted to see her, and to hear her talk of the goodness and mercy of God, and her confiding trust in him, and to behold her holy submission to God in the midst of her afflictions and sufferings. One only has to visit her and hear her talk to love her with a "pure heart fervently." Confined to her bed for seven long years (though comparatively young in years), her case is a striking example of the omnipotent grace of God; and the power of that grace is manifestly presented in her quiet submission to the will of God in her afflictions and confinement. One who visits her will never tire of her holy conversation. I am anxious that the readers of the SIGNS should become acquainted with her, and of her afflictions and surroundings, and have the benefit of her thoughts and experience through the SIGNS. The papers she speaks of having been sent her by me were copies of the SIGNS. "Vera," mentioned in her letter, is a sweet little girl, her only child, about ten or eleven years of age, I think. She is truly a remarkable child, a delicate looking little girl. Though tender in years, she already manifests an interest in the servants of God and his word that is seldom found in those of her age. In this same house is a poor child of affliction, a lady forty years of age, that has never walked a step in her life. She also has a hope in Christ, and manifests a deep interest in spiritual things. I could say more of this poor and afflicted family, but will forbear for the present; but I always feel when I go there that I have been to the house of God; that is, the "house of God and the gate of heaven." I hope I shall see these letters in the SIGNS, and that we shall often hear from this dear sister through the same medium. Sister Edwards' membership, and also that of her husband, is with County Line Church, Heard Co., Ga., twelve miles north of Lagrange. Her post-office is Owensbyville, Heard Co., Ga. Please publish my letter also in connection with those of sister Edwards.

Yours in trials and afflictions, with (I trust) an abiding faith in Christ Jesus my Lord,

H. J. REDD.

OWENSBYVILLE, Ga., Sept. 5, 1895.

ELDER H. J. REDD—VERY PRECIOUS BROTHER IN THE LORD:—The papers were received, and I now tender my thanks to you for remembering me so kindly. I cannot express the comfort they have afforded me. Each letter they contained was like a rare and beautiful flower, emitting such delightful fragrance till my soul seemed to be bathed in their richest perfume. The evening I received them, before my husband came from the office, I began to soliloquize thus: "I wish I could get a letter from some good brother or sister this evening;" and you can imagine my joy when he handed me those papers. How I do delight in such company no mortal tongue can tell.

Brother Redd, this has been a week of much suffering and gloom to me, and to-day is one of special gloom, because this day instant for the last two years has marked some striking events in my life. Just two years ago to-day my husband brought me from my dear father's, where I had been on a month's visit; and although I underwent extreme physical suffering while there, I must say that visit was one of the happiest episodes in my life. When I came from there my dear father and mother accompanied me home. Even now, when I think of it,

"A soft and gentle sweetness
Steals o'er my weary, aching brain;
And wrapt in revery deep, profound,
My heart is freed from pain."

But alas! how transient are these feelings; for while meditating on these things, thoughts of a sadder nature crowd thick and fast upon me, bringing with them the gloomiest picture of my life; for just one year ago to-day I was brought from my father's where I had been carried, to look upon the face of my dying mother. O! the anguish of heart I have passed through since then, none but our heavenly Father knows. I wish I could express to you the thoughts of my inmost soul; but I am powerless to do so; for my deepest thoughts are the ones unspoken, which only the God of love and mercy can hear; and while I feel an intense gloom in thinking on these things, I know it is the way that the blessed Lord has seen best to lead me; and although the way at times appears so dark that I can hardly find an outlet to my greatest trials, yet I cannot murmur, because I know he doeth all things well. Many, many times when I seem to be shut in spiritually, as well as physically, I find myself exclaiming in the language of the poet,

"O God, forgive all sinful murmurs;
Let thy wonderous mercy fall
Like dew upon our stricken hearts,
As on thy name we call."

And I do feel, dear brother, that it has been through his tender mercy that he has given me grace, which has brought me hitherto. It will soon be seven years that I have been prostrated on the bed of affliction; and what is embraced in those seven years? Suffering, endurance and waiting. Now, we are taught in God's precious word that "If we suffer, we shall also reign with him." "He that shall endure unto the end, shall be saved." "They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength," &c. Now, do you think, dear brother, that these Scriptures are applicable to me? I fear sometimes that I am claiming promises that do not belong to me. I feel too unworthy to accept them as mine; for every day I see more of my imperfections; but while I see so much impurity in myself, I see more perfection and beauty in my blessed Savior. How many times am I made to cry out, "O! Jesus, am I thine?" What an intense longing to know that I am his! There are times when I feel a sweet peace of mind, born of reconciliation to his will, so that I can almost say, I know thou art mine. But these seasons last but a short while, and I am left in doubt again. But I feel, dear brother, that it will not be a great while before I shall realize what awaits me in the future. For the last twelve months my mind has been almost wholly absorbed in thoughts of death and the resurrection. Paul says, in speaking of the resurrection, "Behold, I shew you a mystery." Yes, it is indeed a glorious mystery; so glorious that when we think of it, the vail which now hides it from our sight becomes so thin at times that our soul is lost in wonder and admiration, to think that this vile and sinful body shall ever be clothed with immortality. Is it not enough, brother Redd, to make us bow in humble submission to his divine will? Most assuredly it is.

"Then, O my soul, despond no more;
The storm of life will soon be o'er,
And I shall find the peaceful shore
Of everlasting rest."

Well, dear brother, when I commenced this letter I thought I would write you a note of thanks, and now look how I have digressed. Will you please excuse this imperfect and very inelegant letter?

Before I close, I wish to say that sister Brooks, of Hogansville, and our beloved pastor, staid with us last Saturday night. We also had a short but pleasant visit from brother Carter and brother Brittain, of Franklin. My father, brother and sister have all been to see me of late. Vera is on a visit to her grandfather this week. I miss her so much. Everything seems to have been transformed into solitude since she left. I often wonder why it is that a child of her age should manifest so much love for the people of God. Surely it must be the workings of the Holy Spirit.

Brother Redd, when do you think you will visit us again? I have always considered your visits to me a blessing from the Lord. Give my love to your dear wife and children. Again I make a request of you, remember me and my precious little family in your prayers.

In much weakness,
NANNIE EDWARDS.

SEPTEMBER 6, 1895.

THIS morning while lying on my bed of affliction, looking out of my window, gazing upon the scenes of nature, my thoughts ran thus: What a change my mind has undergone since one year ago. How different the scenes appeared to me then and now. How often had I longed to be up and mingle with the busy throng of the world, and engage in the pursuits of life; to walk out and roam amid the trees and flowers, and commune with the beautiful works of nature. Many, many tears had I shed in being deprived of all the out-door scenes which others could enjoy. How often had I begged my blessed Lord to raise me from this bed of suffering, and permit me just once to go to the house of worship. O how bright I had once beheld life, and now what a change! As I gazed on all that met my eyes, I saw nothing but gloom. How very insignificant everything appeared. I saw no beauty in anything pertaining to this life. I felt like I was only looking upon scenes which had no meaning in them; that this world was only a barren waste, only a dark and gloomy valley through which poor pilgrims had to pass before they reached the haven of rest. I thought how bright and glorious is that home above to which I am hastening. Everything is transient here, while above is a never-ending eternity.

"Ye fleeting charms of earth, farewell!
Your springs of joy are dry;
My soul now seeks another home,
A brighter world on high."

I saw no life in the verdant grove, no beauty in the flowers that bloomed, no sweetness in the birds that sang. My heart and desires were above, where all is joy, peace and happiness, where there is no sorrow, sin or suffering. While I looked first on one thing, and then another, meditating on all these things, a feeling of humble gratitute filled my soul, and I saw depicted on everything submission and praise. What order and grandeur I beheld in all the handiwork of God! I saw the hand of Omnipresence in everything. The trees had put on an appearance of submission and praise to the God of gods; the flowers seem to be blooming in honor to the King of kings. At once mine ear caught the carol of the little birds, and they seemed to be praising the Prince of Peace. As I listened to their little anthems, my heart responded, yes, praise be to his holy name! I felt that there was a meaning in everything. What a mighty hand had made all these things! what a guiding hand ruled their destiny! I felt like I wanted no better company than those things which had no sin in them. I thought, How much better are all these things than man in his depraved condition. These were in humble submission to the will of the Creator, while man often tried to thwart his purposes. It seemed to me that I could see stamped on everything, "Jehovah is his name." A gentle breeze fanned my aching brow, and I thought, What a blessing is air. I heard a peal of thunder in the distance, and thought, Who can stay his hand? It seemed to me that I could see the immutability of God's laws more vivid than ever before. Everything was just as good as it was when it was first made, except poor, fallen man; just as good as it was when the Creator made it all, and saw that it was good; just as unchangeable as it was when "he spoke, and it was done; he commanded, and it stood fast;" just as beautiful as it was "when the morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy." I thought, What a sublime study is this grand creation! What a lesson in all we see! I felt a sweet solace in this, that not a sparrow falls to the ground without him; nay, not a leaf. Then of how much more value are we than many sparrows?

I have written these things just as I realized them. I gave no outward expression to my feelings, only through a flood of tears. I think all this was to show me God's power; that he had a great design in everything, and everything was to fulfill his designs; that he had given me a life of suffering, and in it was some deep design, known only to himself.

GHENT, Ky., Sept., 1895.

TO THE LICKING ASSOCIATION—DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS:—I was once asked, "What is heaven, and where is heaven?" To those who are born of the Spirit these questions are not hard of solution. In their experience they by faith, like Isaiah, see the King, the Lord of hosts. They behold in him that which is infinitely holy and perfect. Thus beholding him they rejoice, knowing that the God in whom they trust, and upon whom all their hopes rest for a complete delivery from all the cares, sorrows and afflictions of earth, has all power and is full of love and mercy. Next hope causes them to say, "One thing have I desired of the Lord, that will I seek after, that I may dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of my life, to behold the beauty of the Lord and to inquire in his temple." The house of the Lord is the heavenly home of the saints, which our God established in the top of the mountains, and exalted above the hills. It is that heavenly home into which all the dear children of God are led by the Spirit when they are born again, born of that incorruptible seed, which liveth and abideth forever. There their best friends, their kindred, dwell in the unity of the Spirit and in the bond of peace. There they sweetly sing,

"Blest be the tie that binds
Our hearts in christian love;
The fellowship of kindred minds
Is like to that above."

It is then, though clad in mortality, they are in the gospel heaven, although they are often made to mourn on account of sin; but all their sorrows on account of sin are blessings in disguise. All the blessed inhabitants of that gospel heaven are poor in spirit. Their glorious Redeemer hath said to them, "To this man will I look, even to him that is poor, and of a contrite spirit, and trembleth at my word." They all being taught of the Lord have the same experience, and enjoy the sweet unity of the Spirit, and dwell together in the bond of peace; that peace which passeth knowledge. This is the gospel heaven. And when the dear saints meet in union and harmony at Bethel Church, in September, 1895, they will be brought into the sweet enjoyment and have a foretaste of the joys of their eternal home in the third heaven. In that blessed convocation of saints at Bethel they will by faith gaze upon the glories that shine forth in the character of their glorious Lord. Then they will be brought into his presence, where there are joys for evermore; and that is heaven below. Where their glorious Redeemer is, is heaven, and he is omnipresent, or everywhere. But the dear saints as they journey toward their eternal home are often in gloom and darkness, and mourn because they do not realize the presence of their gracious Lord. Then they cry out, in the language of the bride in the Canticles, "By night on my bed I sought him whom my soul loveth; I sought him, but I found him not." But they greatly rejoice when the darkness of that night is dispelled, and they cry out, "I found him whom my soul loveth. I held him, and would not let him go, until I had brought him into my mother's house, and into the chamber of her that conceived me." That house, that chamber, is the true church, the gospel heaven, into which all the redeemed and regenerated sons and daughters of the Lord most high are brought by the power of the Spirit, and in it they rejoice in Christ Jesus, and salute one another with a holy kiss. Then to them it is a heaven below their Redeemer to know, and they most sweetly sing,

"O thou in whose presence my soul takes delight,
On whom in affliction I call;
My comfort by day and my song in the night,
My hope, my salvation, my all."

But the dear saints while here below only see through a glass darkly; but what they thus see gives them heavenly delight, and they in joy say to each other, "Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that when he shall appear we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is." We shall see him in his radiant glory, alive for evermore. This strong assurance, when it finds a lodgment in the hearts of the saints, is a foretaste of the glories beyond the skies that await all the redeemed when disrobed of mortality. The tongues or pens of mortals are too feeble to describe the future and eternal heavenly home of the saints; but they know that to be like their dear Redeemer will be heaven; for in his presence is fullness of joy; at his right hand there are pleasures for evermore.

May you, dear brethren and sisters, when convened in the Licking Association on the 13th day of September, 1895, with the dear brethren and sisters of Bethel Church, be enabled like Jacob of old to say, "This is none other but the house of God, and this is the gate of heaven." Then you will be blessed with the sweet enjoyment of the gospel heaven, and over you will be unfurled the banner of love, on which is inscribed in letters of living light, "I have loved thee with an everlasting love; therefore with loving-kindness have I drawn thee." Then you will sweetly remember that you have been drawn together in that precious convocation of saints by the loving-kindness of your glorious Lord and King, to whose great and wonderous name it will be your chief delight to give all the glory.

The absence of this feeble one need not mar your pleasures or lessen your joys. He fondly hopes that though he may be absent in body he will be with you in spirit. Farewell.

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES—DEAR BRETHREN:—I herewith send you a letter writen by sister Ella Nimon, which I believe would be very encouraging to some of the Lord's tried and afflicted poor. If you think proper give it a place in our excellent family paper.

ORLAND, Ohio, Sept. 13, 1895.

DEAR FATHER:—I have thought of writing you my experience, which I hope has been the Lord's work in my poor soul. I was born in April, 1859, and, like the rest of Adam's posterity, was born in sin and brought forth in iniquity. In February, 1873, a dark and gloomy feeling came over me, unlike anything I had ever experienced. I was shown for the first time my lost and ruined condition, without hope and without God in the world. It seemed to me that I was the worst wretch that ever lived. My sins rose up like mountains before me, and I was made to cry, "God, be merciful to me, a sinner." I tried to pray, but it seemed like my poor, feeble prayers did not go higher than my head, but fell to the ground unheard and uncared for. I tried to read the blessed Bible, but it seemed to me a sealed book. I could not understand it. I tried to sing, but alas! I found no comfort in that. Many a time have I left my father's house to seek

THE DIVINE SOVEREIGNTY.

SOMETIMES it has seemed to us difficult to write or speak concerning a scriptural subject, from the very fact that it seems so plain, and so much is said about it in the word of God, that we are at a loss where to begin or where to close, or what Scriptures shall be quoted. The subject named at the head of this article is one of this kind. To refer to all the Scriptures which directly or indirectly treat upon the sovereignty of God would be to transcribe nearly the whole Bible. This we cannot of course undertake to do; nor in the limits of an editorial can we treat upon all that is connected with this theme. The truth that "the Lord reigneth," as expressed in the beginning of the ninety-seventh Psalm, is one that has been made precious to ourself, as well as to many of the people of God, as we doubt not. It is of this theme, as it has seemed precious to our own self, that we desire to write at this time; but how halting and stammering must all words seem when we endeavor to speak of such a theme, save the words of the Scriptures themselves. We feel like saying, "Lo, these are parts of his ways; but how little a portion is heard of him? but the thunder of his power who can understand?"

Connected with the theme of the divine sovereignty, and as the first step leading up to it, is the truth of the eternity of Jehovah. It is the express declaration of the prophet that the high and lofty One, whose name is holy, inhabits eternity. The word "eternal," or "eternity," is directly ascribed to God some eight or nine times in the Bible; while several times the life which Jesus is, and which he gives to his people, is called eternal. But surely we need not multiply quotations from the Scriptures to prove this; nor need we argue to prove what we are persuaded no child of God will deny, that eternity is an attribute of the God whom we worship as our God and Savior. We refer to it, because it seems very manifest that this truth must be inseparably linked with the unlimited sovereignty of God.

Now, if eternity be an attribute of Deity, it cannot be an attribute of any other being. God alone is eternal. All other beings began to be. God alone is the Creator; all other beings are creatures. That which is created must have a beginning. The Creator of all must be before all. To say that a creature is as old as his creator is to give utterance to an absurdity. If eternity can be predicated truthfully of any other being than Jehovah, then that being is not a creature of God, and is not dependent upon God for existence or for support. There would be, if this be true, another god, a rival of the only living and true God. Hence the Scriptures declare that there is but one God, and he alone is eternal.

It is also manifest that if any being can be said to be eternal in its nature, then that being must be also self-existent. This would appear from a moment's consideration of what is implied by eternal existence. It is an existence before which there could be no other existence. That of which we can say something was before it is not eternal. As there can be no existence before the eternal existence, therefore that which is eternal could not be created. It must exist in and of itself; and this is to be self-existent. If eternity can be predicated of any other being than Jehovah, then that being also is self-existent. God is not its author or creator. That which God has created can be neither eternal nor self-existent. It is blasphemy against God to ascribe eternity to any other being. It is saying that there are some things which he did not create; that he has rivals and equals in the universe. If we say that any man or angel, or any spirit, good or bad, had an eternal existence, we are also saying that such man, angel or spirit is self-existent, and therefore the equal of Jehovah; but as the Bible ascribes eternity to Jehovah, and to him alone, so self-existence can belong to him only.

In full harmony with this truth, the Scriptures again and again declare him to be the Creator. Nearly fifty times is God declared to be the Creator in the Bible; and in no instance is the work of creation ascribed to man, or any other being save Jehovah. But if the Scriptures did not fully and clearly testify that God alone is the Creator of all, we should be compelled to so conclude from the fact of his eternity and self-existence; and that God is the Creator of all is in full harmony with his unlimited sovereignty, for surely he must exercise unlimited sway over what he himself has brought into existence.

Still farther, the Scriptures again and again declare our God to be omnipotent, omniscient, omnipresent, unchangeable, and absolute in knowledge and wisdom. We cannot here transcribe or even refer to those portions of the word which again and again declare these things. We doubt not that all our readers believe and love these things. We refer to them here only to point out their divine harmony with the doctrine of the eternity and self-existence of him who created all things by the word of his power. If plain scriptural testimony did not declare these things to be true of God, we should be compelled to believe them from the eternity and self-existence which the Scriptures do ascribe to him. He who inhabits eternity must be of necessity also infinite in power, knowledge and extent of being; and as these things follow from a belief in the eternity and self-existence of God, so they are essential to his unlimited sovereignty. He cannot be unlimited in sovereignty unless he is also unlimited in wisdom, power and knowledge, and is also everywhere, and always equally present. All the attributes of Jehovah are harmonious with each other, and we cannot ascribe to him any one of them without involving all; and we cannot limit him in any one of them without also limiting him in all. Let us beware how we limit God. It was one of the sins charged by the psalmist upon ancient Israel that they limited God.

In full harmony with all that has been here written, and with the doctrine of the divine sovereignty, is what the Scriptures declare concerning his providence. The word "providence" signifies forethought, to provide beforehand. We would hardly know where to begin or end in referring to the Scriptures which speak of and magnify his providence among men. All that can by any possibility be supposed to be for the welfare of men is ascribed to the provision of God. "Thou openest thine hand, and satisfiest the desire of every living thing." His providence is declared in the word to extend to all men, the evil as well as the good, and to birds, beasts and fish, and even to worms and insects; it meets and satisfies the desire of "every living thing." Moreover, his providence is declared to extend to the very smallest events in human life. From the setting up and casting down of a king or a nation, to the least service of the most insignificant servant in that nation, all is included in the providence that overrules and directs all events. How slow we are to remember that our God does not judge things by men's standards! We call men and things and events great, which in his sight are despised; while things and men that we pass by unnoticed work out the vast designs of God. What a view of the directing providence of God is seen in the words of the Savior to his disciples, "Not one of them [sparrows] can fall to the ground without your Father." We have heard this quoted, "Without the notice of your Father;" but what Jesus said is better than this. It is without him. He said, "The very hairs of your head are all numbered." How wonderful is that providence which is so minute that not a hair of the head escapes its care! Now, what the Scriptures declare concerning the divine providence is inseparably linked with the divine sovereignty. There could be no divine providence without the divine sovereignty. The one must be coextensive with the other.

What do we mean by the unlimited sovereignty of God? While it is not a Bible expression, yet it expresses a Bible truth. It means that God reigns everywhere, in all the universe, and that he always has and always will so reign. Is there any place in the universe where God does not reign? Then we shall have found a space where he is not, and which he did not create. The unlimited sovereignty of God means that nothing escapes his supreme control. What is implied if this is not in the words of the apostle, "All things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose?" Again, how could the apostle say of tribulation, life, death, things present and things to come, that they should not separate us from the love of God, and that in all these things we are more than conquerors, unless he fully recognized the fact that all these things were swayed by the will of God, and were made to accomplish his purpose? How could the inspired psalmist say, "The wrath of man shall praise thee: the remainder of wrath shalt thou restrain," except in full view of this great truth that God reigns everywhere and always? We can ascribe no bounds to the divine sovereignty without also being guilty of the sin of limiting Jehovah himself. Let the enemies of God find any event in the history of the world which was not embraced in the supreme control of Jehovah, and which did not work together with all things besides for the accomplishment of his own ends, and they will have pointed out a place and time where God was not, and will have denied his omniscience and omnipresence. How full and clear the testimony of the psalmist, "Whatsoever the Lord pleased, that did he in heaven, and in earth, in the seas, and all deep places."—Psalm cxxxv. 6. We would be glad to transcribe the whole Psalm did our limits permit. The Scriptures of the Old Testament ascribe all events in life to God. They recognize his decree in all things. In them all things bow to the dread supremacy of Jehovah. They know nothing of modern ideas of human free-will and independence, except to condemn them.

We wish to lift up our voice in solemn warning against any Old School Baptist being entangled by this modern god of "free-will." It is the root of all Arminianism; and just so far as we give place to free-will we limit the sovereignty of God. There is no room for triumphant grace and man's free-will to stand upon the same ground. If man's will is free, then farewell to salvation by grace. Grace must kill free-will, or else free-will will kill grace; and so where the divine sovereignty appears free-will is excluded. If free-will should exist anywhere in the universe, there Jehovah does not exercise unlimited sovereignty. Ever since we have believed in a Creator who brought all things into existence, and holds them in being by the word of his power, it has been clear in our mind that the will of God alone is or can be free.

We must conclude, then, that the sovereignty of God is unlimited from a consideration of his eternity, self-existence, wisdom, omnipotence, omnipresence and omniscience, from the fact that he is the Creator of all things, from the universality of his providence, and from the multiplied testimony of the holy Scriptures which directly declare this truth.

This truth is good and wholesome for us to receive and believe; and this is true for many reasons. First, it is evident that we cannot worship God aright unless we know him aright. To worship God is simply to ascribe to him that which is true of him, and to adore him and praise him for what he is and for what he does. If our God be possessed of unlimited sway in all the universe, we suitably worship him when we ascribe this attribute to him. If we do not ascribe unlimited sovereignty to him when it is his, we are not worshiping him in a suitable or becoming manner, and our worship cannot be acceptable to him.

Second. If unlimited sovereignty be true of him, and we are found confessing it with adoring wonder, we are in this worship one with all the angelic hosts, with all the glorified saints, with all the spirits of just men made perfect in past ages, and with the people of God now in every land on earth. Surely it is good to be in harmony with all the multiplied hosts who love and adore and praise God, ascribing to him blessing and honor and power and glory and might and dominion, world without end.

Third. To believe in and confess his unlimited sovereignty is fitted to give strength to the weak, confidence to the doubting, courage to the fearful-hearted, and victory to the tempted. If we believe in the unlimited sovereignty of God, it will help us to be calm and confident under trials, and to go on our way fearing not what men may do unto us. Because God reigns, we can believe and rest in the testimony of such Scriptures as these, "No weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper; and every tongue that shall rise against thee in judgment thou shalt condemn. This is the heritage of the servants of the Lord, and their righteousness is of me, saith the Lord."

Fourth. Believing in the absolute and unlimited sovereignty of God, the child of God can be sure that every prophetic utterance of the word of God shall be fulfilled, that every promise given to those who believe in Christ is secure, and that in nothing shall the word of God fail. If, on the other hand, we in our thoughts limit the divine sovereignty, either in point of space, time or degree, we can feel sure of nothing. Just that place or time where his sovereignty is not absolute, may be the place we are in; and then we have no safety, but stand exposed to every assault of the enemy, without a shelter or defense.

Fifth. If Jehovah be unlimited in his sovereignty, then it is sure that not one event of our lives is the product of chance. From the cradle to the grave, in every step of our lives, God's ruling hand is seen. Our sorrows are measured out to us, as well as our joys. Both alike come and go at his command. There is not a child of God, who has been baptized with the baptism of suffering, who does not rejoice to believe that in it all God has reigned supreme. We have known of some children of God who in the years of their prosperity did not feel prepared to acknowledge the full measure of the sovereignty of God; but we have never yet known one who has followed the Savior in his sufferings very far who did not believe, and rejoice to believe, that God had reigned and his will had been done in it all. What does the experience of submission, of reconciliation, of resignation to the will of God in the hour of sorrow and suffering mean, if the will of God has not reigned in the sorrow or suffering? It is wholly inconsistent to say, "I am reconciled, or I desire to be reconciled to the will of God in my affliction," if at the same time that one does not believe and acknowledge the sovereign appointmen of God in his affliction.

Sixth. If such be the happy results of a firm belief in this glorious truth, how can the servants of God forbear to proclaim it? If our hearts are full of it we must speak of it; and as we publish the name of the Lord, and ascribe greatness to him, to many poor and needy souls it shall be as the dropping of the rain and the distilling of the dew upon the new-mown grass, and many will be constrained to adopt the language of the prophet Isaiah, and say, "How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace; that bringeth good tidings of good, that publisheth salvation; that saith unto Zion, Thy God reigneth!"

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE.

To MOST of our readers the above mentioned book is too well known to need any introduction or a description by us. While many of the Bibles have a Concordance appended, they are generally so condensed or abridged as to be of little or no use. Cruden's Complete Concordance, however, enables one to readily turn to any passage of Scripture of which they can call to mind two or three words, and in our opinion is the most complete and convenient as a reference book of any published. In addition, it contains many other aids in studying the Bible, as may be seen by reference to advertisement on last page. Remember, both the books there mentioned are CRUDEN'S COMPETE.

ROMANS VI. 17, 18.

"BUT God be thanked that ye were the servants of sin; but ye have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine which was delivered you. Being then made free from sin, ye became the servants of righteousness."

The two particular points embraced in this text on which a brother desires to be enlightened are, first, the form of doctrine delivered to the saints; and, second, the time and manner of being made free from sin.

The form of doctrine which had been delivered to the saints at Rome, and to all the disciples of Christ, is unquestionably embraced in that gospel of which Paul declared that he was not ashamed, which includes all the instructions given to the saints by the great Head of the church, through the apostles. The word "doctrine" signifies teaching, or instruction given. The instructions given to the saints in the gospel, are called a form; because they constitute a perfect and complete system, from which nothing is to be taken, nor anything added, as this cannot be done in any degree without deforming it. This form embraces the grand fundamental principles on which salvation is based, together with all the precepts of Christ enjoined on his disciples, and consequently all that belongs to the christian's faith and practice is fully embraced. It was a matter of gratitude to God that these early christians had obeyed the doctrine in the very form in which it had been delivered; they had not simply obeyed what they could understand or accommodate to their feelings or circumstances, or the version given by learned critics; nor had they tried experiments to see what part of the divine instruction was most profitable, which portions were essential, and which were non essential; but the beauties of their obedience were that they had obeyed the doctrine in its primitive form, and that their obedience was not a cold, formal, heartless obedience, but was deep rooted in their hearts.

As to their emancipation from sin, the apostle illustrates by baptism. That christian ordinance, in the form delivered to the saints, not only preached Christ crucified and risen from the dead, but it also shows that by that ordinance heaven-born souls are finally immersed into the mystical body of Christ; and their baptism implies that they are dead to sin, being baptized into his death. If we understand the apostle's application of this figure to Christ's dying unto sin once, &c., he represents that Christ was made sin for us, and bore our sins in his own body on the cross; but by this one offering he has forever put away sin; and though under the law he suffered and died, he was quickened and raised up by the Spirit, by a special birth, being begotten from the dead, and revealed as the Son of God with power, and is freed from sin; neither sin, nor death which is the consequence of sin, hath any more dominion over him. Now, the application of the doctrine is, as the saints are buried with Christ by baptism into death, therefore they should walk in newness of life. In a body made of a woman, made under the law, Christ was made sin for us, and under the dominion of that sin which was laid on him he died. We also by our corrupt and depraved natures were the servants of sin. Sin was our tyrant master, and reigned over us; but being baptized into Christ, or, in other words, "dead to the law [which is the strength of sin] by the body of Christ," we are set free from its dominion, and brought under law to him who was raised up from the dead. So that as Christ was raised up from the dead to a newness of life, that is, a life no longer under the dominion of sin, and no more to be known after the flesh, we also are raised to a newness of life, and we are exhorted to "Let not sin therefore reign in your mortal body, that ye should obey it in the lusts thereof; neither yield your members as instruments of unrighteousness into sin." Being emancipated from the reigning power and dominion of sin, and brought under the reign of grace, we are to yield ourselves unto God, as those that are alive from the dead, and our members as instruments of righteousness unto God. This is urged by the apostle on the ground that "Sin shall not have dominion over you; for ye are not under the law, but under grace." Then, anticipating the cavils of legal workmongers, the apostle says, "What then? shall we sin, because we are not under the law?" Those who have no higher conception of the way of life than to suppose that the thunders of old Sinai are required to drive the church into a holy course, may and often do argue that if the church of God is not under the law as a rule of life, there is nothing to prevent them from running into sin; but those who have learned to understand by happy experience the reigning power of grace, would shudder at such a thought, and with the apostle say, "God forbid! How shall we, that are dead to sin, live any longer therein?" Those who are slain to the law have become dead to sin; it can never afterward be their element; they loathe it in themselves and in others whenever they see it. They know moreover that here is the grand criterion by which to determine the dominion under which we are living. "His servants ye are to whom ye obey; whether of sin unto death, or of obedience, unto righteousness." And now, by this unerring standard the apostle having tested the case of those primitive saints at Rome, he breaks forth in thanksgiving to God for the verdict he is able to bring in on their behalf, "God be thanked that ye were the servants of sin." Once, according to this rule, ye were under the dominion of sin; but now, by an application of the same rule of judgment, he finds that they have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine delivered them. This proves they are no longer servants of their old master, sin; because they have obeyed from the heart the new master. Ye were once servants of sin; but, God be thanked, ye are now free from that dominion, and are become servants of righteousness. "I speak," says the apostle, "after the manner of men, because of the infirmity of your flesh," or nature; "for as ye have yielded your members servants to uncleanness, and to iniquity, unto iniquity, even so now yield your members servants to righteousness, unto holiness. Being then made free," &c. Then is not used in this case in reference to time, but in allusion to the unavoidable conclusion drawn from the foregoing arguments: then, or in that case, it follows as a consequence, if the premises of the apostle be correct; then the conclusion must follow. Still, as a brother wishes to know when we think the saints were or are made free from sin, we will give him our mind on that subject.

And, first, so far as the legal demands of the law were concerned, they were representatively made free from sin when Jesus their Savior put away their sin by the sacrifice of himself, and by his one offering perfected forever them that are sanctified.

Secondly, and in the sense of this text, they were made free from sin in an experimental sense when born again and brought by grace to obey from the heart that form of doctrine delivered them.

Third, figuratively, when they were baptized unto the fellowship and citizenship of the church or body of Christ.

Fourth, triumphantly, when they shall be raised up from the dead at the sound of the voice of the Archangel and the trump of God, when these mortals shall put on immortality, and these corruptibles put on incorruption, and the saying shall be brought to pass, that death is swallowed up of victory. Then shall they be satisfied, when they awake, with his likeness.

"O glorious hour! O blest abode!
Then to be near and like our God,
And flesh and sin no more control
The rising pleasures of the soul.
This flesh shall slumber in the ground
Till the last trumpet's joyful sound;
Then burst her bands in sweet surprise,
And in the Savior's image rise."

MATTHEW XXIV. 3.

"AND as he sat upon the mount of Olives, the disciples came unto him privately, saying, Tell us, when shall these things be? And what shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world?"

The first of these questions very evidently had reference to the destruction of Jerusalem, when all the stones of the buildings of the temple should be thrown down; for the two preceding verses will allow no other application; but the other two questions seem more obscure in their bearing. It has been thought by many of our most enlightened brethren that these last questions had reference to the time when Christ should come, not personally, but with power and great glory, after his ascension, to execute the judgments which were written against that devoted city, and that the end of the world had reference to the final dispersion of the Jews. Others have supposed that the disciples inquired concerning the time when Christ shall be personally revealed in the clouds of heaven, when the Archangel and the trump of God shall be sounded, and the bodies of the dead shall be raised up. Our opinion, which by the by is but an opinion, is that both these events, whether designed by the disciples to be embraced in their inquiries or not, are embraced in the answer given by our Lord, which answer occupies the whole succeeding part of this and the next chapter. Should we attempt to explore the whole ground involved, we should be required to illustrate the whole subject matter of the two chapters. We would do well, however, to learn from the text the suitableness of referring our hard questions to the divine Master.

POSTAL MONEY ORDERS.

BY a recent arrangement of the post-office department nearly every post-office in the United States is now a money order office for at least five dollars; and as it costs but three cents additional to obtain an order of not more than two dollars and fifty cents, or five cents for one not more than five dollars, or eight cents for one not more than ten dollars, and so on in proportion to amount of order, we request that all remittances be sent us by post-office money-order. You simply give the money you wish to send to your postmaster, and he will give you a money-order for that amount. You will inclose the order which he gives you in your letter to us; and if it should be lost in the mail you can get another one from your postmaster without additional charge. Please be sure to have the order made payable at Middletown, N. Y., and never at New York City, as that place is nearly a hundred miles from our place, and it puts us to considerable extra trouble and expense to get them cashed at the New York City office.

As will be seen from the above, an order for five dollars or less can be obtained cheaper than registering a letter, while an order not exceeding ten dollars costs but the same amount; and remitting by money order is a much safer way than sending by registered letter, as the postal department is not responsible for loss of registered letters, but money orders can be duplicated.

some lonely spot, to pour out my soul's agony in prayer to the Redeemer. How often would I return to the house almost frightened to death. It seemed to me the devil followed my footsteps. Wherever I went he was there. Many a night have I laid my poor, aching head upon my pillow which was wet with tears, thinking that when I awoke I would awake in hell, never to see heaven, but forever to be banished from the sight of God. I did everything that I could do to gain God's mercy; but my works only added to my misery. It seemed like God had turned a deaf ear to my complaints. Every prop of my own was taken away, and I was left helpless, without hope and without God in the world. It seemed that my friends had all become enemies.

"O! where could I go, or whither flee,
To escape the vengeance due to me?"

It seemed to me that I had come to a great mountain that I could not climb over or go around. O! my soul, think of the sad hours I put in while at the foot of this mountain, cast down with sin, which at times seemed to crush me to the earth. Every sin I had ever committed rose up before me in all their horror, and I was left cast down to the earth a sink of sin.

Time rolled on until September 27, 1873. I could keep silence no longer. I told Elder D. G. Barker of my troubles, and he told me that if I had any friends in the world they were among the Baptists. Was it possible that a poor mortal like me had friends, when I thought all had forsaken me and I was left to perish, a poor, miserable worm of the dust, without one good thought or deed? He told my troubles to the church on Sunday, and to my surprise I was taken in and given a home among them, and was baptized on Monday following, the 29th, which was the happiest day of my life. When I came out of the water it seemed like every thing was praising God. I loved every body and every thing, and thought then that my dark, sad hours were over, that I would never have any more trouble, that doubts and fears were a thing of the past. But I find I was mistaken. I have very many sad hours, many doubts and fears. I fear that I am mistaken, that I am not what I hope and pray and profess to be. But my cry is, "Lord, save me, or I perish." Of myself I can do nothing. If Jesus does not save me I am lost forever. I often wish I could call back those months of sorrow and live them over again. It seems like I could take note when my troubles left me, and that I might have a clearer view. So much of my time I am in darkness that I fear to call the least promise mine.

You may think strange of me writing what I have. My experience, if it is one, seems to bear so on my mind, and I have no one here to talk to.

"Like one alone I seem to be;
O! is there any one like me?"

When I look back over my past life and see what a crooked path I have made,

"My lips with shame my sins confess,
Against thy law, against thy grace;
Lord, should thy judgments grow severe,
I am condemned, but thou art clear."

My worry is to-day, have I deceived the church, the people I love so well? I will bring my poor letter to a close. You may not care to read what I have written; if not, cast it aside; but I humbly beg an interest in your prayers. Do remember me at the throne of grace, and throw the mantle of charity over my mistakes.

Yours in hope of a better life beyond this world of sorrow and disappointment,

ELLA NIMON.

87 IDA ST., CINCINNATI, Ohio,
October 6, 1895.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS:—If you have space in your paper for the inclosed, it would gratify me very much to have it inserted, as I have been from my home church in Mississippi for some time, and do not know whether they have failed to get my letters, or whether they do not understand them. I received a very comforting letter from the clerk of the church about two years ago, and I have written different ones from time to time, but fail to get any response. I have tried to be brief; but if you can eliminate any worthless matter from it, please do so. Hoping that I am not trespassing upon any rules of your paper, or crowding out something of more importance, I remain, I hope,

Your sister in Christ,

JENNIE MITCHELL.

DEAR KINDRED FRIENDS:—During the past year I have received letters from time to time from different sections of the country, burdened with the fear that I was either in the toils of the Arminians, or that I had in very truth gone off with them; to all of which I have sent letters, correcting such errors. But as I recall the fact that I have never yet received a reply to one of mine, as to whether the parties were satisfied or not, I would like to state for the benefit of the church at large, that as I have not now, and indeed have not since several years before joining the church in 1886, had any desire to affiliate with Arminian institutions in any way, that the charge seems rather unwarranted, unless based upon the fact that from my fruits they see no evidence of my being a child of God; in which case I believe I heartily concur in the judgment; for it is this fear that has not only deterred me for nearly nine years from telling the brethren and friends of God's gracious dealings with me, but it has caused me to cry out in agony to that God who had preserved me in so many trying times before I asked for a home with the Baptists, that if I had overestimated his dealings with me, to simply cut me off, and let me be alone; for if I be not a child of God, and be not entitled to christian sympathy and love, I believe that I am just as far from entertaining a desire to be with those whose works are not in harmony with my experience, as I was before I cast my lot with that company of sinners who claim that if they are saved at all it is by grace alone. And I believe I can truly say, whether one of them or not, that I have a peculiar sympathy for those who have no confidence in the flesh, let their gifts or callings be what they may; for I know that my "heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked," for which reason I experience great difficulty in ascertaining the right, let alone doing it. But I believe God is with his people while they are passing through the enemy's land; and while they are subject to many trials, and often encompassed with clouds, so that they cannot see the light, yet I believe their walk is none the less sure because of its being by faith, and not by sight.

Desiring an interest in the prayers of God's children everywhere, I am, unworthily,

JENNIE MITCHELL.

FRENCHTOWN, N. J., Sept. 20, 1895.

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES:—I feel that it is too presumptuous for me to take up even the smallest portion of your time or space, but still I feel that I must write and express my feelings in regard to your editorial headed "Sunday Schools." O how good and timely it was! You expressed my thoughts and feelings far better than it would have been possible for me to have done, and I was so glad to see it in print. It is a great mystery to me how any one who believes in salvation by grace can possibly hold any doubts on this subject. The fact that the Scriptures declare that "the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned," goes to prove the utter uselessness of attempting to teach the religion of Jesus. I can say also that I am indeed thankful that I was prevented from attending these hot-beds of antichrist and nurseries of delusion. I remember feeling very bitter toward my foster-parents at the time, as I was a full-blood Arminian from my youth up; but what a joy and comfort it is to me now, that their dear heads are laid to rest, to look back and know that they adorned their profession by being consistent; and so I pray that I too may be enabled by grace to so walk before my children that they may see beauty and consistency. But, dear brother Chick, there is one difficulty presents itself in regard to Old School Baptists and Sunday Schools. If the home is a divided one, and one parent is a faithful and consistent Baptist, while the other insists on sending the children to Sunday School, what can be done? What a most trying position for any poor soul who longs to give God all the glory, and yet must unwillingly submit to such a trial. I know whereof I speak. I have been greatly troubled lest I have this very cross to bear, but I am very thankful to know that of late I have seen the opposition melt away in my own home; and although I dare not claim that my husband feels any interest in spiritual things, yet of late he has expressed a strong disapproval of the modern systems of religion, and also of Sunday Schools. Therefore, knowing that all things work together for good to them that love the Lord, to them who are the called according to his purpose, I can rest easy, knowing that his grace will be sufficient, and hoping that I will never have to lend my children to this abomination. But to all whose paths are made smooth and clear I would say, Do not do this thing; do not give your enemies a chance to poison the minds of your young; do not go near this hydra-headed monster. Instead of seeking an excuse for allowing your children to go, rather seek proof against it; for truly if you sow to the wind you will reap the whirlwind.

I will close now, with love to all who love the Lord.

CLARA GILBERT.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

"HAPPY is he that hath the God of Jacob for his help, whose hope is in the Lord his God."

Died—On Tuesday, Sept. 10th, 1895, at the home of his sister, Mrs. Lewis Brooks, Alfred P. Brown, aged 90 years.

This dear old brother and soldier in Immanuel's army was born in Seneca Co., N. Y., July 15th, 1805. For more than half a century he had been a Baptist, and his life has been an honor to his profession and a pleasure to his friends. He was twice married, his first wife only living a few years, and his second wife passed to the other shore more than a quarter of a century ago. Although he had been companionless these many years, he was blessed with loving and dear friends in the happy home of a dear sister and her loving companion, who did all in their power to make his life one of comfort. His dear sister and he had an ever-abiding faith in the sovereign and eternal God, and their conversation was in heaven, on the grand and glorious truth of God's grace and mercy to fallen sinners, which was a sweet solace to each in their declining years. In conversing with him a few years ago he said that his days were all ordered and every step numbered by an all-wise God, who knew the end from the beginning, and never would leave nor forsake; and a few lines from dear friends confirmed the fact that his last was happiness and peace, looking to Jesus as his only trust and hope, which truly was heavenly rest.

"E'en down to old age all my people shall prove My sovereign, eternal, unchangeable love;
And when hoary hairs shall their temples adorn,
Like lambs they shall still in my bosom be borne."

ALSO,

Mrs. Martha Brooks was called to follow her dear brother to the spirit world just three weeks after his departure.

She was born in Ontario Co., N. Y., in 1809, and came to Michigan with her parents in 1832. She was first married to James Tyler, in 1833, and is said to be the first white woman in Jackson Co., Mich. Twenty-two years after his death she was married to Lewis Brooks, in 1856, and had for the last twelve years lived in Vermontville, where she died, Oct. 20th, 1895, of hemorrhage of the bowels. She had been a great sufferer for years, and the last was truly great. Enduring great pain, she longed for deliverance, and seemed to be anxious for her Lord and Master's call. She was baptized in Yates Co., N. Y., in her youth, and joined the Baptists. After coming to Michigan she united with the Baptists, which in a few years she found were not her faith, and she became very much dissatisfied. After a great conflict and struggle she heard of a little church here in Columbia, some thirty-five years ago, and came and united, coming nearly twenty-five miles to meeting for years. About twelve years ago she removed to Vermontville, Mich. Since then she has been here but a few times on account of infirmity and old age. This dear one was much gifted in expressing the manner in which the dear Master gave her to hope in his most holy name. The writer was not with her at the last, but kind friends say that her only hope was in the same Jesus, and crying to her dear Savior to take her home. We were always so glad to have her with us at meeting and at our homes. I united about the same time that she did, and truly feel to say, in deep sorrow, that the Lord has done whatsoever he pleased, and taken his own to himself, leaving a dear, loving companion, lonely indeed in old age. Thus one by one they are falling, only three or four yet remaining who were members before the unworthy writer.

"Death cannot make our souls afraid
If God be with us there;
We may walk through its darkest shade,
And never yield to fear.

"Clasped in my heavenly Father's arms,
I would forget my breath,
And lose my life among the charms
Of so sublime a death."

May it be mine to die with the same blessed hope in view.

M. P. LEWIS.

WOODSTOCK, Mich., Oct. 25, 1895.

SISTER Mary A. Perrine, fell asleep in Jesus on Wednesday, August 28th, 1895.

The subject of this brief notice was a beloved and faithful member of the Ebenezer Church in New York City, having been baptized in its fellowship by Elder Isaac Hewitt on May 27th, 1883.

She was of a quiet and timid disposition, and was often tempted to doubt and question her interest in the salvation Jesus has wrought for his people. Her consistent walk and godly conversation however gave sure and conclusive proof of her heavenly birth, and while she is greatly missed from the assemblies of the saints that for many years she so regularly attended, we sorrow not as those who are without hope, knowing as we do that in her case to live was Christ, and to die was gain; for as Jesus died and rose again, so also they that sleep in Jesus will God bring with him.

The funeral took place on Friday, August 30th, at her late residence in New York City, and the interment was in Greenwood Cemetery, in the city of Brooklyn. May the Lord fill our hearts with praise to his dear name for the rich manifestations of his sovereign grace so clearly displayed in our sister, as a subject of his eternal and redeeming love, and enable those of us who remain to walk worthy of the vocation wherewith we humbly trust we also have been called, confessing that we are pilgrims and strangers on the earth, that we desire a better, even a heavenly place; yea, a city whose maker and builder is God.

R. M. STRONG.

BROOKLYN, October 28, 1895.

THE death of sister E. D. Amick occurred at the home of her husband, brother M. R. Amick, near Calhoun, Henry Co., Mo., on Sunday, August 11th, 1895.

She was the eldest daughter of Judge M. B. Merritt, and was born Oct. 24th, 1846. She had been twice married, her first husband being Richard Gains, who died a number of years ago, and by whom she had one child, Mary, now Mrs. Wherry, of Clinton. Sister Amick joined Sardis-Bethlehem Church of Primitive Baptists some ten years ago, and was baptized by Elder J. E. Goodson, Jr. She was a dutiful member of the church, often filling her seat in the church when it looked like it was impossible, considering her afflictions, which she bore with patience. She was married to brother M. R. Amick on August 9th, 1893, with whom she lived happily for more than two years. Sister Amick leaves an aged father, a mother, brothers and sisters, a sorrowing husband and a host of other relatives and friends to mourn for her; yet the writer hopes that some of them do not mourn as others who have no hope.

On August 12th, 1895, I preached a funeral discourse, after reading a portion of the fifth chapter of 2 Corinthians. Her body was then laid away in the Sardis-Bethlehem cemetery to await the second coming without sin of her blessed Savior, when we hope to join her, with all the blood-washed throng, to sing redeeming grace forever.

R. M. OGLE.

CALHOUN, Mo., Aug. 22, 1895.

BROTHER Philemon Gates departed this life at the residence of his daughter, in Kingston, Ulster Co., N. Y., early in the morning of Oct. 29th, 1895, aged 66 years and 12 days.

His disease was pneumonia. He was a son of Oliver and Lydia Pettit Gates, and a grandson of the late Elder Hezekiah Pettit. He was married to Margaret Vanhoosen on Dec. 29th, 1847. She died on March 25th, 1890. He is survived by one daughter, Mrs. Perry, and one sister, Mrs. Mary McLean, two grandchildren and three great-grandchildren, all of whom reside in Kingston.

Brother Gates was baptized in the fellowship of the Old School Baptist Church at Middletown, N. Y., by Elder Benton Jenkins, more than ten years ago, and continued his membership there until called from earth. He was a meek and humble follower of the dear Redeemer, and loved by all who truly knew him.

The funeral services were held at his late home in Kingston on Thursday, Oct. 31st, and were conducted by his pastor, Elder Benton Jenkins; after which all that was mortal of the loved one was deposited in the cemetery at Columbiaville, Columbia Co., N. Y., by the side of his faithful companion. May the God of all consolation comfort the bereaved ones.—J.

DIED—At Maywood, Bergen Co., N. J., October 7th, 1895, Ann Demarest, wife of Samuel Demarest.

She passed peacefully from earth to enter, we trust, into eternal rest. Her disease was lingering consumption, and for many years her cheerful submission and patience in her sufferings were remarkable; but we who knew her had the evidence that through faith she endured, relying upon him who doeth all things well, the sovereign, unchangeable God. She was a faithful wife and helpmeet for her companion, my uncle, who will miss her sadly, after their sojourn together of nearly sixty years. She was buried in Cedar Lawn Cemetery, near Paterson, N. J.

PICTORIAL HISTORY

OF THE

UNITED STATES.

By James D. McCabe.

This work is no dry mass of details—no bombastic effort to inflame the national pride, but a vivid and brilliant narrative of the events of our history, from the discovery of the American Continent down to the present time. It gives a most interesting account of the Indians of North America, from the time of the coming of the white men. The voyages of Columbus and explorations and discoveries of the different nations of Europe are related with graphic power. Every step of our colonial history is traced with patient fidelity, and the sources of those noble and, we trust, enduring institutions, which have made our country free and great, are shown with remarkable clearness. Then follows a clear and succinct account of our great Struggle for Independence, and the establishment of the Federal Union—the events of our career from the close of the Revolution to the administration of Harrison.

The work is printed from plain, new type, on fine calendered paper, and comprised in one octavo volume of 960 pages. It is splendidly embellished with nearly 500 fine engravings, embracing battles and other historical scenes, portraits of distinguished men, views of our principal cities, &c., &c.

Bound in Fine Silk Cloth, Plain Edges, $2.00, Post-paid.

POETRY.

MORNING.

"He shall come down like rain upon the mown grass."

GLORY to thee, my God, this day,
For all thy blessings on life's way;
Be filled, my soul, with heavenly joy:
He can create, and he destroy.

If thou hadst needed for my soul
A thousand worlds to make it whole,
One word of thine had bid them rise,
Celestial 'gainst the astonished skies.

But in the person of thy Son,
A humble sufferer, all was done;
That cross and crown, mysterious twain,
Fixed their firm seal on all death's pain.

Now "Abba, Father," is my song,
Unkenned by sense it swells along,
Through joy and grief, through shade and sun,
Pledged to endure when once begun.

Should I fulfill my little path,
A creature of thy love or wrath,
Awe-struck, I think, And can I be
One link in thine eternity?

For every atom, moving slow,
From perfect wisdom takes its glow;
Each curious part is fitly set,
Be it heaven's diamond or earth's jet.

Yet O! forbid that I should be
Aught but a flash, though faint, of thee,
And so be gathered up again,
Part of thine own immortal train.

SOUL BREATHINGS.

FATHER, teach this rebellious heart
To say "Thy will be done;"
To feel resigned 'neath sorrow's smart
Thy sovereign right to own.

Thou knowest me altogether, Lord,
How vile, how full of sin;
If not in outward deed or word,
The evil lurks within.

The good I would I ne'er can do,
But things which I abhor,
Though loathing, yet I still pursue;
O who shall end the war?

Thank God, through Jesus Christ our Lord
I hope to overcome,
Trusting his grace he will afford
To bring me conqueror home.

From unseen danger, snares and death
Thy hand has kept me free;
Thine everlasting arms beneath
Shall still my succor be.

No refuge so supremely blest
As thy protecting arms;
There would my soul forever rest,
Secure from all alarms.

Search me, and know my thoughts, O God,
Try me, and know my ways,
Show me the strait and narrow road,
And thine shall be the praise.

CORRESPONDENCE.

PORTLAND, Ind., Oct. 4, 1895.

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES:—I have been requested to give such views as the Scriptures present to my mind on Isa. xiv. 29. This request was made by Elder Brees. Judge ye as to whether what I write is such as will be for the edifying of the household of faith. The Scriptures read thus, "Rejoice not thou, whole Palestina, because the rod of him that smote thee is broken; for out of the serpent's root shall come forth a cockatrice, and his fruit shall be a fiery flying serpent."

The condition of Israel's surroundings when this declaration was made seems to help us to grasp the situation and to get at the exact meaning of the Scripture. I shall not attempt to give all the Scriptures that go to prove my position correct, but will say to all who will take the pains to examine the passages that prove the truth of what I hope to say, they will find in Isa. x., xi., xxxvi., xxxvii., and 2 Kings xviii., xix., the history of the matter.

This declaration was made in the year 712 B. C., while the Assyrian army was beseiging the city of Jerusalem, during Hezekiah's reign, while Isaiah prophesied. The 25th verse of this 14th chapter of Isaiah reads thus, "And as I have purposed, so shall it stand, that I will break the Assyrian in my land, and upon my mountains tread him under foot. Then shall his yoke depart from off them, and his burden depart from off their shoulders." In the tenth chapter of Isaiah, in the year 713 B. C., one year prior to the time of the prophecy of the text, we find it thus, "For though thy people Israel be as the sand of the sea, yet a remnant of them shall return: the consumption decreed shall overflow with righteousness. For the Lord God of hosts shall make a consumption, even determined, in the midst of all the land. Therefore thus saith the Lord God of hosts, O my people that dwellest in Zion, be not afraid of the Assyrian: he shall smite thee with a rod, and shall lift up his staff against thee, after the manner of Egypt. For yet a little while, and the indignation shall cease, and mine anger in their destruction. And the Lord of hosts shall stir up a scourge for him according to the slaughter of Midian at the rock of Oreb; and as his rod was upon the sea, so shall he lift it up after the manner of Egypt. And it shall come to pass in that day that his burden shall be taken away from of thy shoulder, and his yoke from off thy neck, and the yoke shall be destroyed because of the anointing." So it is clearly manifest that the Assyrian's rod was the rod that was broken from off the necks of Israel. Assyria is most certainly the serpent spoken of in the first clause of the text. My first object is to locate the serpent out of which the cockatrice came, and then show who the cockatrice was. In the tenth chapter of Isaiah it is declared, "O Assyrian, the rod of mine anger, and the staff in their hand is mine indignation. I will send him against a hypocritical nation, and against the people of my wrath will I give him a charge, to take the spoil, and to take the prey, and to tread them down like the mire of the streets." "Wherefore it shall come to pass, that when the Lord hath performed his whole work upon mount Zion and on Jerusalem, I will punish the fruit of the stout heart of the king of Assyria, and the glory of his high looks. For he saith, By the strength of my hand have I done it, and by my wisdom." Mark the expression, how boastful. Then the Lord of hosts declares, "Shall the axe boast itself against him that heweth therewith? or shall the saw magnify itself against him that shaketh it?"

Thus I feel that I have offered sufficient proof that the rod that smote Judah in the days of king Hezekiah was the king of Assyria. Now I wish to further prove by Isaiah's prophecy in the year 742 B. C., found in the seventh chapter, being thirty years prior to the fulfillment, that God would bring the Assyrians against Israel. "And it shall come to pass in that day that the Lord shall hiss for the fly that is in the uttermost part of the rivers of Egypt, and for the bee that is in the land of Assyria." "In the same day shall the Lord shave with a razor that is hired, namely, by them beyond the river by the king of Assyria." Also Isa. viii. 7, "Now therefore, behold, the Lord bringeth upon them the waters of the river, strong and many, even the king of Assyria."

Having offered sufficient proof that Assyria was the serpent, and that it was foretold thirty years beforehand, I will make one further citation to prove that it was foreordained to be thus. In Isa. xxxvii. 46 the Lord declares by the prophet to the king of Assyria, "Hast thou not heard long ago, how I have done it, and of ancient time, that I have formed it? Now have I brought it to pass, that thou shouldest be to lay waste defensed cities into ruinous heaps." Thus we have the proof that God had determined it from ancient times that the kings of Assyria were to be the rod of God's anger, and the axe in his hand to hew the nations, and decreed that he should consume Judah in part; for he took all the defensed cities, and came up to Jerusalem and demanded a complete surrender, boasting that no god had been able to save any of the other nations out of his hands, and that neither could the God in whom Hezekiah trusted deliver Judah out of his hand. Therefore Hezekiah fell down and prayed to the Lord of hosts in whom he trusted for deliverance. And the Lord said, concerning the king of Assyria, "He shall not come into this city, nor shoot an arrow there, nor come before it with shields, nor cast a bank before it." "Therefore will I put my hook in thy nose, and my bridle in thy lips, and I will turn thee back by the way by which thou camest." And that night the angel of the Lord smote a hundred and eighty-five thousand Assyrian soldiers in their camp. O what a deliverance to the oppressed! This is a type of how only God's people can be delivered. The consumption against them was decreed, but it should overflow with God's righteousness. It was a consumption even determined, but joy cometh in the morning. He shall smite thee for a little while, and the indignation shall cease, and his anger in their destruction. He will punish the stout heart of the king of Assyria, and will break the Assyrian in his land. For a small moment he has forsaken thee, but he is married unto thee. In a little wrath he hid his face from thee, but with great mercies will he gather thee. Though he cause thee to pass through the fire, thou shalt not be consumed. Though he cause thee to pass through deep waters, yet they shall not overflow thee. Weeping endureth for a night, but joy cometh in the morning. The Lord chastiseth whomsoever he loveth.

"For out of the serpent's root shall come forth a cockatrice, and his fruit shall be a fiery flying serpent." Assyria was the serpent, and out of her roots must come the cockatrice. In Isa. xxxix. we find that this king Hezekiah had been sick; but the Lord added to his life fifteen years. And the king of Babylon that dwelt in the roots of Assyria, and was a province of Assyria, sent a present to Hezekiah; for the king of Babylon had heard that Hezekiah had been sick. And Hezekiah showed the men of Babylon all the treasures of his house. Then came the word of the Lord unto Isaiah the prophet. And Isaiah said to Hezekiah, "What said these men, and from whence came they unto thee?" The king said, "They came from a far country, even from Babylon. Then said he, What have they seen in thine house? And Hezekiah answered, All that is in mine house have they seen: there is nothing among my treasures that I have not shewed them. Then said Isaiah to Hezekiah, Hear the word of the Lord of hosts: Behold, the days come that all that is in thine house, and that which thy fathers have laid up in store until this day, shall be carried to Babylon: nothing shall be left, saith the Lord. And of thy sons that shall issue from thee, which thou shalt beget, shall they take away, and they shall be eunuchs in the palace of the king of Babylon." Now, these sons of Hezekiah that should be eunuchs in the palace of the king of Babylon were none others than Daniel and his three Hebrew brethren; for Nebuchadnezzar sent the master of his eunuchs to seek out the of the children of the captivity, even of the king's seed, children in whom was no blemish; and they must be of the king of Judah's seed. Thus we have the cockatrice, which is none other than Babylon, that came out of the serpent's roots, even right out of the roots of Assyria. "Therefore rejoice not thou, whole Palestina [or Judah], "for out of the serpent's root" shall come forth Babylon, or a cockatrice, "and his fruit shall be a fiery flying serpent." Jeremiah seemed to understand that Assyria and Babylon were the great instruments of God's anger upon the nations; for in the fifteenth chapter of his prophecy he says, "Israel is a scattered sheep." First the Assyrians devoured her, and now this last Nebuchadnezzar hath broken all her bones. Assyria was the rod of God's, anger and Babylon was his battle-axe and weapons of war. Jeremiah in lamenting over Judah's destruction says, "The Lord hath both devised and done that which he spake." The Assyrians he formed from ancient times to lay waste fenced cities. So, rejoice not thou, whole Palestina, because the rod of him that smote thee is broken; for out of Assyria shall come Babylon, that shall be a fiery flying serpent. It is most wonderful how the Lord did correct Israel with these two nations. The ten tribes were carried away by the Assyrians eight years before he came up against Judah. The Lord said to his people that they were a people peeled and trodden under foot. Israel was never humbled, except when ground down by oppression, and could not remove by any power of their own, and which is a true type of the children of grace. They are not fit for the Master's use until like wheat they are ground. Corn is not fit for the table until broken; so the Lord's people are not fit for the Master's use until they are a crucified people. They, like Israel of old, only cry when in oppressed bondage. They have no need of a deliverer until they are in bondage to sin. The Lord always delivered Israel of old over to bondage for their chastisement; even so does he the children of grace. They are delivered by grace. And as Israel of old sang the songs of deliverance after a long and heavy bondage, even so the children of grace, after a long and dark night, behold light in the morning, and sing of grace. Dear brethren, there never was a refreshing shower except from the clouds. So, hope in darkness; for how can we be refreshed except as the clouds burst with blessings on our heads? No clouds, no rain. No darkness, no light. No winter, no summer. No spring, no autumn. No cross, no crown.

What feeble thought I have offered I trust abler brethren will weigh. I know I can only be right in the truth of the Spirit. I trust others will write such views as they may have on the same subject.

Yours in hope of a blessed immortality,

NEWTON PETERS.

LAKEVIEW, Texas.

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES:—I have a desire from some cause to write you a few thoughts on a portion of holy writ. I do not think I can teach you or edify you, but I write that I may ease my mind and probably offer you some encouragement. The portion of Scripture that has been on my mind for some time may be found in 2 Kings iv. 40, and reads, "There is death in the pot." I may not give the true meaning of this portion of Scripture, but I will give such thoughts as I have had on it. Paul says by inspiration, "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness." If we ask why the Scriptures were given in such a manner, the apostle says, "That the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." As we find the text recorded in the word of inspiration, we know that it is profitable.

It seems that when the prophet came again to Gilgal that there was a dearth, a scarcety of food, and the sons of the prophets were in want. The prophet commanded the servant to set on the large pot and prepare pottage, that the sons of the prophets might eat and be satisfied. But the servant, while in the field gathering herbs, found a nice looking vine, and gathered a lap full, and cut them up into the pot of pottage, and set them before the sons of the prophets to eat. Now, this was not an enemy that put those gourd leaves in the pot, but a servant of the prophet. Now, dear brethren, I see I have more ground staked out than I shall be able to cover; but "a word to the wise is sufficient." It seems that there is a dearth in this country of spiritual food, and there are in this country lots of herbs in the field, and seemingly the finest herbs are gourd vines; and there are many men who say they are the servants of him who is greater than a prophet; but they gather all kinds of herbs, and put them in a pot, and mix gourd vines and sweet herbs all together, and set them before the sons of God, and say that it is all a feast from God. But alas! "there is death in the pot." They put enought of the truth of the gospel in to give it the appearance of the unadulterated gospel of the Son of God; but alas! "there is death in the pot" to the christian that eats of it; not eternal death, but the death that the apostle speaks of when he says, "I die daily." It brings us into captivity to the law of sin which is in our members. "Sin, when it is finished, bringeth, forth death." "But thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." "The law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death. Jesus has sprinkled the meal of his Spirit into our hearts, and we are thereby saved from death. There are some who preach the "do and live" system, and an unfinished salvation; but we have not so learned Christ. We are not of them who seek to be justified by the law. "Christ is become of no effect unto you, whosoever of you are justified by the law; ye are fallen from grace." We believe in a finished work; we believe that the work of salvation was complete when Jesus bowed his head and said, "It is finished." He is set down at the right hand of God, where he ever liveth to make intercession for us. In the various worldly denominations their preaching, prayers, songs and exhortations are filled with the doctrine of worldly wisdom and strength of man, which are gourd leaves, and which is "death in the pot." You can hardly tell what the fundamental doctrine of the various worldly denominations is, from reading their papers; for one will say, "Lo, here is Christ," or, "Lo, he is there." Believe them not, neither go after them. These false teachers will continue to propagate their theories from the press and the pulpit, and so I exhort you to "contend earnestly for the faith, which was once delivered unto the saints," both from the press and the pulpit. "Cry aloud, spare not, lift up thy voice like a trumpet, and show my people their transgression, and the house of Jacob their sins." "Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing, and I will receive you." "There is death in the pot." I think the editors should not admit into their columns anything except what they would be willing to propagate from the stand. They should act as gleaners, and separate the truth from error. If any error is brought in, they should cry, "There is death in the pot." The SIGNS OF THE TIMES is the clearest from error of any paper I ever saw. May its editors live long to weild the "sword of the Lord and of Gideon," and cry when necessary, "There is death in the pot."

S. H. BOON.

OLYMPIA, Wash., Aug. 22, 1895.

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES—DEAR BRETHREN IN THE LORD:—In compliance with the wishes of some of your subscribers I send you for publication an account of a very interesting visit and a three day's meeting with the church formerly called Laurel Bottom, Green Brier Co., W. Va., but now called Sulphur Creek Church of Regular Old School Baptists, of Cowlitz County, Washington, at their place of meeting, near Swafford post-office, on the banks of the Cowlitz river, on the 16th, 17th and 18th days of August, 1895. My wife and self, also Elder A. Wilson and wife, of Oakville, Wash., left our homes on the 14th, and reached the house of Elder F. L. Riffle on the evening of the 15th, where we were joined by brethren and sisters from other parts, among which was a family of eleven direct from Oklahoma. Truly is this a remarkable church and community, a colony now numbering over seventy-five souls, with an organized church, two ordained ministers, a deacon and one licensed preacher, moving from Green Brier Co., W. Va., about two years ago, and settling in the Cowlitz Valley, in the foot hills of the Cascade mountains, with Mt. St. Helleneus on one side, rising about ten thousand feet, and Old Rainier, the monarch of the Cascades, on the other side, rearing its dome over fifteen thousand feet into the heavens, with its perpetual snow and icy glaciers, furnishing the waters of the Cowlitz River and other streams to slake the thirst of man and beast. The finding of this colony and church in this valley under such circumstances calls vividly to mind the migration of Jacob of old to the land of Egypt; for surely here we find a modern land of Goshen; and if the Lord will give this people grace to appreciate the blessings into which he has brought them, and patience and perseverance to develop it, surely temporal prosperity and happiness await them. Here we find a country with land, water and timber, coal and other minerals, in combination unsurpassed by anything ever seen by your humble servant in traveling from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and journeying in twenty-three states and territories; and in addition to that the rainfall is such that a failure in crops is a thing unheard of; and as for climate the word superb seems most appropriate, where the summers are cool and the winters mild, the temperature never going as low as zero. Potatoes and other vegetables do not freeze in the ground, and after once planting voluntary crops will follow annually. Surely this is a goodly heritage, a veritable land of milk and honey.

The West Virginia colony consists of the following heads of families with their households, Elder F. L. Riffle, James Stinson, Thomas Blankenship, W. R. Osborn, George Thompson and John Hunt, all of Swoffard post-office; Elder G. W. Rakes, of Mossy Rock; E. Coleman, W. Coleman, N. Coleman, J. Coleman and I. F. Coleman, licentiate; all of Verndale post-office, Cowlitz Co., Washington.

There was preaching on Friday afternoon and night, Saturday forenoon, afternoon and night, Sunday forenoon, afternoon and night, participated in by Elders Achils Wilson, F. L. Riffle and J. H. McDonald, brethren I. F. Coleman and Brown, of Mound Prairie, Thurston Co., Washington. The meeting was said to be the largest numerically ever held there by any denomination; and, as is usual at Old Baptist meetings, the conduct of and respect paid by the people was all that could be desired. There were two accessions to the church by letter, and much feeling was manifested among the hearers, as evidence that the Lord was one in our midst, making our hearts glad by his presence, and making his little ones feel that it was good to be there. On Monday morning Elder A. Wilson and wife, with myself and wife, started homeward in a double carriage kindly furnished for the occasion by brother Anderson, of Elma. We were constrained to feel that while the round trip would cover about one hundred and fifty miles we were all well paid for both time and troubles in seeing and feeling the love and fellowship which was manifested among the brethren for our Lord and Master and for each other, and that the theme of all the preaching was the salvation of fallen sinners by grace, free, full, and unconditional, according to the eternal purpose of him who works and none can hinder. Hoping and praying that such meeings may be more frequent in the future than in the past, I remain your unworthy brother in hope of eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord,

J. H. McDONALD.

KINGSTON, N. Y., July 19, 1895.

DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS OF THE CHURCH AT MIDDLETOWN:—"There my best friends, my kindred, dwell." I feel that I would like to talk to you in my weak way, if you can bear with me. As I sit alone in my room, meditating on the feast of fat things, of wines on the lees well refined, which I enjoyed while at New Vernon and Middletown last month, I am made to rejoice in the Lord, in his mercy and goodness to me, a poor, weak worm of the dust. He has taken me up out of a horrible pit, and out of the miry clay, and placed my feet upon a rock, and put a new song in my mouth, even praise to his great and holy name. He led me about, and instructed me, and I went on my way rejoicing in the Lord. I then thought my troubles were all over, and that I would grow in grace. But I soon found that my warfare had just begun; for sore trials and temptations awaited me in the way, with briers and thorns to pierce me as I went along. But if I did not get out of the strait and narrow way I would not find them. There is a high way cast up for the redeemed of the Lord to walk in. The vulture's eye hath not seen it, not the lion's whelp trodden it. Instead of growing better, as I had thought to, I have seemed to grow worse. I have learned my utter helplessness and ignorance in spiritual things. Sometimes I am upon the mountain, and again I am low down in the valley, in coldness and darkness. David said, "It is good for me that I have been afflicted, that I might learn thy statutes." "Before I was afflicted I went astray." I believe he knew these things by experience, which is the only way we can know them. When I look over the way in which it has pleased the Lord to lead me from darkness to light, as I hope he has, I find it was through deep distress and trials, and I was made to cry unto the Lord for help. When I had worked up all my own material, I cried unto the Lord, like Jonah, out of the belly of hell. When my soul fainted within me, I remembered the Lord. I sometimes feel so cold, so unfeeling in spiritual things, and my mind so much on worldly things, I am a mystery to myself. Can it be that I am a subject of grace? If I am, why do I have such feelings?

"I am a stranger here below,
And what I am 'tis hard to know."

I sometimes think if I had more of the company of the brethren, that I might talk of spiritual things, I would not grow so cold and unfeeling. Here it is all confusion, with Lo heres and Lo theres, and we read that we must not follow after them. I have no desire to do so. O that the Lord may keep me from by and forbidden paths, and keep my face Zionward, in the way I should go, to serve him. I do enjoy meeting with his people, unworthy as I am. I love to hear the gospel proclaimed by those whom the Lord has called, qualified and sent forth to preach the gospel of Christ to poor, helpless sinners. None others want to be fed with such food. Jesus says, "I am the way, the truth and the life."

In looking this over it seems so much like myself that I do not think it will interest you. Your brother, I hope,

P. GATES.

(See obituary on page 367.)

FRANKFORD, Pa., Aug. 26, 1895.

ELDER SILAS H. DURAND—DEAR BROTHER:—I read your letter, which was published in the SIGNS of August 21st, with much comfort and satisfaction, and especially your article on Gal. vi. 7, 8. You told what is the desire and prayer of the one who sows to the Spirit, and I know that is my feeling exactly. You expressed my feelings a great deal clearer than I could myself, and of course I could not help taking comfort from seeing my own heart's desire written by another. No doubt your letter will do others good, as well as myself. I have an interest in the welfare of my brethren. I desire to see them walk worthy of their high vocation wherewith they are called. It is very pleasant to me to hear the brethren telling how they have been lifted above this bustling world while listening to the precious truth declared by those whom the Lord has sent. I heard a brother once say that when he first became a member of the church he had no use for newspapers, nor anything of the kind; that he devoted all his spare time to reading the Bible and hymn-book and SIGNS OF THE TIMES. But now, he said, he had lost nearly all interest in such things. His mind was all taken up with his business. He very seldom read the Bible or the SIGNS; and if he did so he felt not the interest that he once had. But he said it was all predestinated to be so. This may be true, but it was an evidence that he had sown to the flesh, and of the flesh was reaping corruption. I believe there is such a thing as going ahead and making a living without having our minds entirely taken up with the things of the world. I can do as good a day's work as any one, and at the same time my mind is roving over spiritual things. Indeed that is when I have the most pleasant meditations, when I am at work. Perhaps you have heard people say, "After I work hard all through the week I feel more like staying at home and resting on Sunday. If I go to meeting I am not good for anything, so I might as well be at home." A very poor excuse indeed. They might rest on Saturday, and get ready to go to meeting on Sunday. The dear Redeemer said, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." Going to meeting may not be the only way of seeking the kingdom, but I am sure it will always be found in the assembly of the saints. "Where two or three are gatherd together in my name, there am I in the midst of them." Therefore there is his kingdom. His kingdom is where he dwells. He dwells in each of his saints, therefore his kingdom is in each of his saints. Where he dwells that is a holy place; and through the sweet Spirit of Jesus we can present our bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is our reasonable service. The apostles never commanded the saints to do anything that is impossible for them to do; neither did the dear Redeemer; neither are they commanded to do anything but what is best for them.

I will bring my scribble to a close. I do not expect you to go to the trouble of answering this. I do not know why I have written as I have, but I will let it go for what it is worth. Remember me in your prayers, that I may be guided by the right Spirit; that I may grow in grace and in the knowledge of the truth; that my way may be as a shining light that shineth more and more unto the perfect day. It is a comfort to me to see those who have gotten as far on the way as you have, still pressing forward toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus, and to hear you tell how you have been led along; to hear you tell of your ups and downs.

Your brother in hope,

EDWARD F. ROUNDS.

G. BEEBE'S SON—MY DEAR BROTHER:—It was not my privilege to attend the Corresponding Meeting of Virginia, held with the New Valley Church last month, owing to engagements with the churches of the Salisbury Association on the eastern shore of Maryland at the time; and now I wish to say through the columns of the SIGNS that I have twice carefully read the Corresponding Circular Letter of that association, and weighed the import of every sentence, and that I most heartily and cordially indorse every sentiment contained therein. I believe it is God's eternal truth, and as such will endure when all worlds have crumbled to dust. One of the leading arguments of those who oppose the principles for which we contend is the cry of "heresy," which is no argument at all, but a convenient refuge for those who realize that they have no argument with which to support their gainsayings. I would affectionately commend that Circular Letter to the careful and thoughtful consideration of all the brethren and sisters embraced in our correspondence. It contains the view of those points of doctrine on which our correspondence has stood for many years, and in which we have been generally agreed. Brethren, are we not still in harmony on these points? If there are any who cannot walk with us, we have no desire to hold them as prisoners. The church is a home of believers, not a prison-house, in which all that dwell are no more strangers or guests, but children in their Father's house. We are not responsible for the misunderstanding of others, nor for the willful misrepresentations to which we have been subjected. My desire is for the peace and prosperity of Zion, but peace can only be secured on the basis of love and fellowship.

Your brother in the hope of salvation,

A. B. FRANCIS.

SIN NO MORE.

"NEITHER do I condemn thee: go, and sin no more."—John viii. 11.

"Behold, thou art made whole; sin no more, lest a worse thing come upon thee."—John v. 14.

The words in the two texts here quoted which have seemed especially forcible to our mind are, in the clause in the first text, "Go, and sin no more," and in the second text, "Sin no more." The words in the first text were spoken to the woman taken in adultery, and the words of the second to the impotent man whom Jesus had healed at the pool of Bethesda. In the first case we know what the sin of the woman was. In the second we are not told just what the sin of the impotent man was; but the words of the Savior, "Sin no more, lest a worse thing come upon thee," seem to imply that his impotency had been the result of a course of outbreaking sin, perhaps of a very vile and violent character. In the first text the woman was brought before him by her accusers, and her sin was declared, and he was asked to judge her. This he refused to do. He did not come into the world for this; but when all her accusers had gone out, being self-convicted themselves, he said, "Neither do I condemn thee: go, and sin no more." In the second text no one had brought any charge against the impotent man. Perhaps no one knew of any, for he had lain there thirty and eight years; but Jesus knew what was in man, and this poor man knew his own sin, and so Jesus said, "Sin no more, lest a worse thing come upon thee." In the first text all who knew of the woman's sin judged her to be beyond all mercy; for did not the law say she must be stoned? and they were very jealous of the law. In the second case no doubt the people all judged that the disease was beyond remedy, since the man had been afflicted so long. In both cases Jesus disappointed the expectations of the people. In both cases he said, "Sin no more." There were some things in both these cases that Jesus did not say or do. He did not say to the woman in the first narrative, You must repent, and undo the past, and show great humility, and fill up certain conditions, and satisfy these thine accusers, before thou canst be forgiven, neither did he say anything resembling this to the impotent man. In neither narrative is it recorded that he added a word of reproach to his work of mercy, or his words of blessing. In both cases he manifested unutterable pity and love for the subjects of his favor; but we see no scorn, no suspicion, no half way tokens of love and confidence. In neither case was there on his part a recitation of their sins, as though he would by any means add to the burdens which were already heavier than they could bear. Jesus knew the sin of the woman, knew it better than those who accused her; and his abhorrence for sin was greater than any man's could be; but there was this difference between him and them: they abhorred the "sinner," while he abhorred the "sin." The woman would hide herself and her sin from them; but in the presence of Jesus she so abhorred both her sin and herself that she was content to abide his judgment. He judged her sin by a rule that made it deeper and blacker than they could conceive of; and no man ever visited such condemnation upon sin in the flesh as Jesus did; but yet he forgave freely and fully, which they could not do. Jesus also knew the sin of the impotent man; and while he healed him and forgave him, yet he searched his heart, and revealed his sin to him in the clear light of truth. Thus Jesus did not make light of sin, even though he forgave it. In truth his forgiveness of sin took on a depth of meaning, just in proportion as its exceeding enormity was shown. This is all true in christian experience. It is not when we regard our sins as few and small that we are forgiven, but we learn that Jesus pardons great sinners. What a fullness of meaning was in the words of the prayer, "O Lord, pardon mine iniquity; because it is great!" To human reason how strange this must seem, "Because it is great." But no one ever yet prayed for this forgiveness until he could say, "It is great." When it is given to a man to see his sins at all, he always sees that they are great. There is salvation for great sinners. We are not told of any mercy for little sinners. It is the leper, who is altogether leprous, who is washed, and who can receive the privileges of the sanctuary of the Lord.

We have thought much of these few words "sin no more," in connection with the experience of grace. If the grace of God teaches anything, it teaches that denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, its recipients should live soberly, righteously and godly in this present world. It is not simply enjoined in the word, but it is so written in the heart of the subject of grace. Jesus, when he heals and forgives, says also, "Sin no more." The work in the heart, if it be of the Lord at all, appeals to the heart; and it says effectually in the heart, "Sin no more." The soul that has been forgiven desires to sin no more. Many, in their first love, think they will sin no more; and such ones, while they may and do stumble and falter often, yet do not serve sin. It has no longer the dominion over them. They do the things that they abhor when they sin, and cry out with all their heart, "Who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" If God works within a man both to will and to do of his good pleasure, there will be a working out of this inward work. God does not work in vain; he will have fruit to the praise of the glory of his grace. If the outward work does not appear, we have good reason to question the presence of the work of grace in the soul. If this be all that Jesus requires of those whom he heals and forgives, is it not sure that we also have no right to require more than this "sin no more" of any who have erred in the past? It is true that this will not satisfy the flesh. Its dictates are, "Thou must be cast into prison; and thou shalt not come out until thou hast paid the last farthing." It demands some sort of revenge. It says, This man has sinned, and he must pay the penalty. The flesh takes no delight in forgiveness; it knows nothing of what forgiveness means. Pay me that thou owest, with interest compounded again and again, is the demand of the flesh. It takes no account of its own indebtedness, and therefore can be very exacting upon others; and as it recognizes not its own sins, it has no possible use for the words of the prayer, "Forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive those who trespass against us." But the Spirit of Jesus ruling in our hearts leads us to say simply this, "Sin no more." It says this not in the spirit of protection, but out of pity to the wrong doer himself. It is for his good that he should "sin no more." Love seeks the good of the offender; it will not hold him at arm's-length until he shall have forsaken all his wrong, but it will draw him closer, if possible; and for his own good, and for the glory of God, seek to show him that he is in the wrong road, and that a precipice lies just before him. If we are only thinking of self in the matter, we have utterly failed to apprehend the real spirit of the gospel, which is to seek the good of others; to look not every man on his own things, but on the things of others.

Is it not ample evidence of true repentance when a man quits his wrong doing and "sins no more?" If a man has been our enemy, saying and doing all manner of hateful things concerning us, and we know that he means harm to us, what greater evidence of repentance could we have than to hear that he was now speaking well of us and taking every opportunity to do us good? Should he never say in words, "I am sorry," his actions would say so in the most practical manner; and we ourselves would exhibit a wrong spirit if we demanded an oral confession of his sin at our feet. To cease to do evil and to begin to do good is evidence enough of repentance. We know of no place in the New Testament where a man was required to confess the sins of his fathers. When a man forsakes his own sins it implies that he also forsakes the sins which others before him and around him have tried to fasten upon him. A man cannot confess or be forgiven another man's sins, though that man may have been his own father in the flesh. Under the gospel it shall no more be said, "The fathers have eaten sour grapes, and the children's teeth are set on edge." It is the gospel rule that "every man shall die for his own iniquity." Our fathers may have sinned, or they may have walked obediently. What has that to do with us beyond causing us joy or sorrow as we remember it? We are not called to judge those who have gone before us; we have no right either to do so ourselves, or to require it of others. The only question should be, Have we ourselves sinned, and are we ready to forsake sin, to go and sin no more? It has always seemed to us that it would be very easy to settle most church troubles were this all kept in mind; that is, if all was required of each one were simply this, "Go and sin no more." "Whatever you or we all may have done in the past [and it is likely that we have all sinned in some way], let us be content with this, We will try to live as we ought toward God and toward each other in the future." It seems to us that this is all that ought to be required. It seems to us that this is all the gospel does require. It is sure that it is all that Jesus did require of the impotent man, and of the woman taken in adultery.

PRONOUNCING BIBLES.

IN addition to the list of Bibles published on last page we wish to call especial attention to the PRONOUNCING BIBLES, containing Old and New Testaments, King James Version, with marginal references. All the proper names of every person or place in these Bibles are divided into syllables, and accented as they should be pronounced, enabling the reader to readily pronounce correctly the most difficult names of persons and places.

These books are 11x13 inches, and range in price from $5.50 to $20.00, according to binding, the contents of all being the same. The books being too large and heavy to be sent by mail, we will express them at our expense at the following prices, viz.:

No. 51. Bound in American Morocco, Arabesque, gilt edges, $5.50.

No. 53. French Morocco, padded, round corners, gilt edges, $8.00.

No. 55. Extra Morocco, beveled, rolled edge, gilt edges, $12.00.

No. 59. Levant Morocco, padded sides, raised bands, silk sewed, round corners, red under gold edges, $20.00.

For pulpit use these Bibles are especially adapted, and our brethren in the ministry would find it a great convenience to have one on the desk.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

"And because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold."—Matt. xxiv. 12.

We have long entertained the opinion that the chapter from which the above text is taken, with the next succeeding it, has a primary reference to the time when the judgments of the righteous God were executed on the devoted city of Jerusalem; but still we feel constrained to believe that the solemn admonitions and instructions given by our Lord to his disciples were also intended to apply to times and circumstances of a much later date. The fearful signs which preceded that "great and notable day of the Lord," were all literally displayed before the army of Titus subdued the city wherein stood the temple as the center of Jewish worship and ceremonial rites. If we regard the Jews nationally, or the city of Jerusalem as their capital, or the temple as their sanctuary, to be figurative of the gospel church, we may trace much of her subsequent history as figuratively portrayed in the accumulation of iniquity, the alienation of brethren, and the final judgments of God which followed in the type. In Revelation the city which is spiritually called Sodom and Egypt, is said to be also the place where our Lord was crucified, and the place where his two witnesses were to be slain, and where their bodies were to lie unburied three days and a half. Connecting these Scriptures, we have the application as made to bear upon the papal antichrist. Before any of the heathen nations could ever gain advantage of Israel, iniquity must in all cases abound to provoke the anger of the Lord. This was the case when Balaam sought enchantments against Israel, under the royal patronage of Balak, king of Moab. All enchantment failed until Israel was tempted to commit iniquity. And before the Chaldeans could prevail, the cup of iniquity in Israel was filled to the brim. Before the Romans could subdue the Jews or take their city, the words of our text were literally fulfilled in them.

When a branch of the church of Jesus Christ was located in the very heart of Rome, all the opposition of earth and hell, in the combined energies of Jews and pagans, could not shake her solid foundation, nor captivate the disciples of our Lord. But when, in a few centuries after the apostles were called home, the doctrines of expediency, means for the promotion of the kingdom of Christ, and for the augmentation of her numbers, and respectability of her standing, were resorted to by the wisdom of men, the seeds of iniquity were sown broad cast into the church, took deep root in the carnal minds of those who held respectable standing in the church, and sprang forth with most luxuriant growth, so that iniquity began to abound, and the love of many waxed cold. Under the most specious professions of extraordinary piety and zeal for the Lord, plans were suggested and gravely discussed, and finally adopted for increasing the Redeemer's kingdom and securing the eternal salvation of thousands of their own natural children and others, by catechumens and other instrumentalities for teaching religious creeds to unregenerate persons, preparing them for baptism and church membership without the quickening of the Spirit, or the manifestation of the Spirit and power of God. We do not call in question the sincerity of those who engaged in these humanly devised schemes and plans for reviving the cause of God; but we mark the signal demonstration that God disapproved of these worldly measures. Although the number of members of the nominal church was greatly increased, yet that increase was, in the language of an elegant writer, "the corpulency of dropsy, pregnant with death." The children of means, produced by human means, mixed up in the family, with as little comfort to either class, as the child of Hagar and the son of the free woman in the family of the old patriarch Abraham. A form of godliness, first without the power, and afterwards a form of godliness denying the power thereof, was substituted in the place of vital godliness; and as these nominal, graceless, Ishmaelitish members gained, the children of the free woman withdrew from the mongrel connection. Iniquity increased and abounded, and the love of many waxed cold, until the church of Rome, like her prototype, Jerusalem, stood tenantless, was left desolate, and not one solitary member of Christ left within her polluted walls. Thus deserted by all the children of God, she was prepared to succeed the great red dragon that had occupied the seven mountains of Rome, and finally to mount the scarlet colored beast and boldly display in glaring characters her names and blasphemies on her brazen forehead.

Again, we look for the church of God and trace her history to this American continent. Driven out from the old states of Europe, a few of God's dear children sought an asylum in the wiles of America, preferring to encounter the savage tribes of our wilderness, and the ferocious beasts of our forests, rather than the intolerant spirit of ecclesiastical tyranny of the old world. True, they were preceded, accompanied and followed by many of the puritanic religionists who came to avoid one system of persecution, but to establish another; but still, in the midst of all opposition and persecution, it pleased God to plant the standard of our Redeemer in this country; and so long as the church was oppressed, persecuted, poor, despised, and counted as the offscouring of all things, she was comparatively pure—felt and humbly acknowledged her entire dependence on God. Under the very circumstances which human reason would conclude must crush her, she flourished, and like the crushed flower, sent forth her sweetest fragrance. The love of many waxed warm, and in those days when they were subjected to the most cruel and unprovoked persecution, thrust into prison, tied to the public whipping posts and barbarously whipped, or fastened to cart-tails and whipped through the streets of the New England towns and cities, and in some instances put to death, for their strict adherence and conformity to the doctrine, ordinances and order of the gospel; in those days they could and did exemplify how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity. But when, in the overruling providence of God, the wrath of men was measurably restrained, and the children of God were allowed to breathe more freely, and to stand in less dread of their common enemies, how soon did their love grow cold. Enjoying a little respite from the cruelty of their oppressors, they began to look around them upon the fair daughters of Moab. They became enamored with the gaudy show of literature, wealth and popularity that flourished in the ranks of Moab; the bait, like that presented by the devil to Eve, was too alluring for their firmness, and the golden wedge and the Babylonish garments looked goodly in their eyes. From that day the Baptists began to ape the daughters of the old mother of harlots, and to covet the wedge of gold and the Babylonish garment. Colleges and theological schools for heaping teachers, having itching ears, were contemplated. Iniquity began to be developed, and plans were devised for raising the church to a respectable position in the eyes of the world. Some became sorely afraid that unless the church should quicken her pace, the world would run away from her. The general policy was to try and keep up with the times; and if in the world a Franklin had learned to harness the lightning and fence off the thunder-bolt, if a Fulton had invented a machine by which to subject the power of steam to the use of man, and other equally wonderful developments were made, the church must be equally prolific in her inventions, in order to keep pace with the world. Time and space would fail us were we to follow up the history until the Baptists had attained that dazzling pinnacle of worldly respectability that she could boast of her colleges, schools, missions, tracts, and all manner of fashionable societies for manufacturing her own ministers and members. As this iniquity increased, the love of many waxed cold, until the time arrived when those who feared the Lord could endure no longer, came out, leaving the old house desolate. The Lord removed the candlestick, and wrote Mene, Mene, Tekel, Upharsin, on the lifeless mass of nominal professors remaining where once the gospel was preached and received.

But we have yet to trace the history of those refugees who, withdrawing from the apostate majority, have since been designated the Old School Baptists. Oppressed and downtrodden by the gay and fashionable religionists of this degenerate age, reviled, derided, slandered, and in many instances robbed of their property by those with whom they could no longer walk in fellowship, they still enjoyed the treasure of christian love and fellowship among themselves. The distance of many hundred miles could not prevent their meeting together for the social worship of God and edification and comfort of the flock. Their trials and persecutions seemed evidently to drive them into each others embraces, and when one suffered, all the others sympathized in the suffering. They could almost court persecution if it were always to be thus overruled of God to promote their love and fellowship. But alas! as soon as the storm of persecution from without abated, and the prospect opened for a respite, how soon was the enemy ready with his cruel darts to annoy them and break their peace by discords, jealousies, strifes, contentions, whisperings and hard sayings. Iniquity, but in a new guise, found its way into the camp, and the love of many soon began to grow cold. This might be seen in their general deportment, the stated meetings of the saints began to be neglected, trifling excuses answered for their absence from the meetings of the church. Questions calculated to gender strife began to be agitated, the motives of each other began to be suspected, a disposition to find fault and make a man an offender for a word, a thrusting with side and shoulders, and a turning aside the lame and the weak, appeared in many quarters. All this state of things has been attended with fearful demonstrations of the direful effect iniquity exerts upon the love of many. How has the gold become dim, and the most fine gold changed! An apostle of the Lamb might justly challenge us, "Where is the blessedness that ye once spoke of?"

Not all the fiery darts of Satan, nor all the artillery of earth and hell, can inflict on Zion such distress, or so much endanger her peace and harmony, or so freeze up the fountains of christian love and fellowship, as can the aboundings of iniquity within her borders. If the world hate you, said the Master, it hated me before it hated you; fear not, I have overcome the world. But if ye bite and devour one another, take heed lest ye be consumed one of another. May we all take the admonitions which are so plentifully given in the word, and be kindly affectionate one towards another. It is but a little while that we are to remain in the militant encampment—our conflicts will soon be over. Let us not be ambitious for a name or an honorable distinction among our brethren. Labor to edify, comfort and admonish one another in the fear of the Lord.

Let us remember that in all cases where iniquity is suffered to abound among the Lord's people, it is an indication that the end, in some fearful application of the word, is at hand. It is sometimes realized in the removing of the candlestick, and sometimes in the termination of peace and fellowship. And although we may see iniquity abounding, and the love of many waxing cold, it is our privilege to bless God that he will not suffer the love of all his saints to wax cold; and, "He that shall endure unto the end, the same shall be saved." There is much to be endured by the saints throughout the war, and much from which it is desirable that we should be saved, and especially that we should be saved from the baleful consequences of abounding iniquity in the church of God. May the Lord graciously keep and preserve us, and heal all our backslidings, and receive us graciously, and love us freely, for his name's sake.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y., April 15, 1850.

CIRCULAR LETTERS.

To the several churches composing the Delaware Baptist Association, the following letter is respectfully submitted.

IT seems to us meet and fit that we should on occasions like this address a few lines to you in such spirit and of such character as to show a deep and abiding interest in your establishment and confirmation in the faith as it was once delivered to the saints. We propose to deal at this time, though somewhat briefly, with the first and underlying principles upon which all the obligations and enjoyments of church membership rest. What is it that constitutes a believer? With every believer this is a matter of deep concern. Intelligent discussion on this subject never wearies, and new and additional light upon it is always gladly received by him. It may seem like an anomaly, yet it is a well attested fact that it is those and those only who are partakers of the blessing who are troubled with doubts and misgivings about it. To them it is the one thing above all others,

"Whate'er my humble lot below,
This, this my soul desires to know."

The apostle inquires of his brethren, "Who maketh thee to differ from another?" It is in the form of a challenge that he does not give any answer to. If they had been made to differ, it is presumed that they would know who had wrought the work, and that it was not a work of their own or of any man. While we suppose that they know well enough that they had been made to differ, and who it was that had brought it about, just what that difference is and wherein it may be traced is the point of the present inquiry. Are not the marks that grace has set upon the sons and daughters of men plain? Dare we to assume that infinite wisdom has left this matter obscure, and left those in whose hearts is the fear of God to grope their way in the dark? The great Redeemer declares that he has written his own name upon them, and that it is in the forehead where every one that has eyes to see may see it. This name is now their name, as it is his name; and he testifies that they are partakers of his Spirit. They are therefore no more servants, but sons; and the spirit by which they are actuated is not that of bondage, or of dependence upon servitude, but that of a child living in obedience and conformity to the divine will. It is not what people say and do, but the underlying principles and promptings to action that we are looking after, that characterize all the leading features of the life and conversation. So we find among the provisions of that everlasting covenant that was established with David and his seed for evermore, such declarations as this, "Then will I sprinkle clean water upon you, and ye shall be clean." "A new heart also will I give you, and a new spirit will I put within you; and I will take away the stony heart out of your flesh, and will give you a heart of flesh. And I will put my Spirit within you, and cause you to walk in my statutes, and ye shall keep my judgments and do them." This declaration evidently contemplates an obeying from the heart and in the spirit the precepts that the Lord enjoins upon his people. So the psalmist speaks of delighting in the law of the Lord. The Savior said to the disciples, "Blessed are your eyes, for they see, and your ears, for they hear." The apostle speaks of the eyes of their understanding being enlightened, &c. This sight and hearing and understanding is of spiritual things, and is embraced in the lessons that the Spirit of God teaches. We shall see no beauty nor comeliness in ourselves, but see and understand our own depravity, and the justice of our separation from God. The recipients of a God-given life must know and manifest its power and effectual working. It constitutes relationship with all its subjects; and as they love that work in their own hearts, they love it wherever it is found to exist in the hearts of others. The definite and certain character of this work leads the apostle to declare, "We know that we have passed from death unto life." The redemption and salvation of the sons and daughters of men is uniformly set forth in regard to believers as a work already accomplished. So we call to all them that fear God to come and hear what he has done for our souls. So the Redeemer himself testifies that "He that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation, but is passed from death unto life." We could hardly know that sin had become offensive to us, and that we were distressed with the presence of what we once delighted in, if there were not some evils still lurking in our flesh. But, though combatting sin, the apostle is positive that we are not under its power. "Sin shall not have dominion over you." But to be annoyed with it and detesting it, whether in ourselves or in others, is a very different thing from serving it and reveling in it with delight. In this deliverance from sin and being given eyes to see its deformity we are delivered from trust in ourselves. The life that we now live is not according to the life that men live in the flesh. But while we have the sentence of death in ourselves, nevertheless we live, but we live by the faith and hope which is in the Son of God. The apostle is explicit, and will not allow that it is merely a spirit within us in distinction from ourselves. "But ourselves also, which have the first-fruits of the Spirit, even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption," &c. The apostle uses the word "death" quite frequently in this chapter, insisting upon the point that a death has taken place in the believer, and from this ground asserts that "he that is dead is freed from sin." "How shall we that are dead to sin live any longer therein?" "Being then made free from sin, ye became servants of righteousness." This righteousness is that of faith; as the apostle says in another place, "We through the Spirit wait for the hope of righteousness by faith." The apostle Peter gives us the summing up and consummation of all divine teaching in this, "That your faith and hope might be in God." "Unto you therefore that believe, he is precious." People do not believe beyond what they know; neither do they love what they do not know. They cannot know salvation without knowing first what it is to be lost. They cannot and do not have faith in him while they love sin, or love and trust in themselves. But when old things pass away, and we are no longer satisfied with ourselves or with sin, but all things are become new, and we are brought down to be suppliants, poor in spirit, and crying for mercy, the change is such that we might suppose its character and reality would not admit of a doubt. The man is in Christ, and is a new creature. He is no longer proud and boastful, but meek and humble, knowing that he has been made to differ, yet has nothing but what he has received. Men that are satisfied in the world have nothing to pray for, and there can be no desire for spiritual things until there is some knowledge of them. If we could suppose that the unrenewed natural mind could have knowledge of spiritual things, yet "if a man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him." We cannot know a Savior until we are subjects of salvation, for in that only is the Savior known, and in that only is he loved. Those who are engaged in performing supposed conditions of salvation, and are doing their part, as they suppose, traveling in that pathway, can never either know or love a Savior. All the marks that designate the believer result from a new, God-given life, and like the living plant tending upward toward the sun; so the tendency is upward, away from earth and self and sin. They stand in the relationship of children to the Sun of righteousness, and in his light they live and walk. We come to a point here where we cannot divide the christian. His faith and hope is wholly in the Lord, and his expectation is from him. He believes with all his heart. In the matter of salvation there is no self-love. He loves the Lord with all his soul, mind and strength. The neighbor with the Lord's name written upon him he loves as himself. In summing up, allow us to suggest that it is well to sometimes look to our feet, and see that we walk in the footprints of the fathers, and that we still adhere to the landmarks set by the inspired writers. We shall not be likely to walk worthy of our holy calling unless we keep that calling in view. If we would know the length and breadth and depth and heighth of the love of Christ, we shall find it only in what he has done for us and bestowed upon us. As he has clothed us with the garments of his salvation, let us watch over ourselves and each other, that those garments are kept unstained, and that thus adorned we may be found of him in peace, without spot, and blameless.

CORRESPONDING LETTERS.

The Delaware Old School Baptist Association, in session with the Cow Marsh Church, Kent Co., Delaware, October 30th and 31st, and November 1st, 1895, to the associations and corresponding meetings with which we correspond, sends christian greeting.

BELOVED BRETHREN:—Again we have met together as an association, with (we hope) grateful hearts to the God of all grace and comfort that he hath preserved us and overshadowed us with his watchcare and his loving-kindness. We have been gathered together through his love as shed abroad in our hearts, and permitted to sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus. Harmony and peace have reigned within our midst. God has been exalted, and man abased. Your messengers and messages of love and encouragement have come to us, strengthening us to go on in the performance of our several duties with renewed courage and hope. We desire a continuance of your loving messages and christian correspondence. Our ministering brethren have manifested a fullness of the gospel of Christ, opening doors in the temple by which, faith answering to faith, we have as we hope obtained a glimpse of the beauties within.

Our next Association will be held, the Lord willing, with the London Tract Church, Chester Co., Pa., commencing on Wednesday before the fourth Sunday in May, 1896, when and where we hope to meet your messengers and receive again your messages.

P. M. SHERWOOD, Clerk.

The New Hope Association of Primitive Baptists, now in session with Mt. Paran Church, in Cleveland County, Arkansas, to the Cadron Association of Primitive Baptists, with whom we correspond, sendeth greeting.

DEARLY BELOVED:—We have been spared to live and meet again in an association. We desire to praise the Lord for his preserving care over us, unworthy creatures. We gladly received your correspondence by letter and Minutes, by the hand of your messengers, Elder E. C. W. Kirk and S. A. Minton, to whom the hand of fellowship was extended, and they invited to seats. We feel comforted by their coming among us. We desire to continue our correspondence with you, and hereby return the same by the hands of our messengers, viz., Elders J. H .Blythe, H. H. Carter, D. Westall, T. B. Little, G. W. Caldwell, brethren G. W. McVey, W. S. Robertson, R. C. Davis and S. T. Black.

Our next session will be held, the Lord willing, with Pine Grove Church, nine miles east of Monticello, Drew Co., Ark., on Saturday before the third Sunday in October, 1896, where we hope to meet your brotherly correspondence. May the God of peace be with you all. Amen.

CHURCH LETTERS.

The Salem Old School Baptist Church, of Philadelphia, Pa., to the several churches composing the Delaware Association, when convened with the church at Cow Marsh, Delaware, Oct. 30th, 31th, and Nov. 1st, 1895.

DEARLY BELOVED:—The Lord willing we shall be represented in your congregation by messengers and members, in the above convention. Since last we met in your assembly we have received nothing but good at the hand of the Lord. To the praise of the glory of his grace, order, peace and prosperity have been maintained and preserved in our midst. We trust our rest and edification has been through walking in the fear of the Lord and in the comfort of the Holy Ghost. In fellowship with all saints, we hope to continue, by the grace of God, steadfast in the faith which was once delivered unto the saints; in full persuasion of, and delight in, that doctrine of which Christ crucified is the substance. This is all our salvation, and all our desire. By faith do we hope to walk before the Lord unto all pleasing, confident that the glory of our religion is not dependent on sight, but is resolved into invisible things which are far more excellent and glorious than anything that sense can behold or reason discover. In fellowship with you, we believe that the Old School Baptist Church was instituted by the authority of our Lord Jesus Christ, and that we, its members, have become such in the obedience of faith unto the authority of Christ. We believe that our identification with the church as members is a voluntary and willing subscription to its order, a solemn covenant to do and observe all that which our Lord hath commanded and appointed in the church. Like as the saints at Macedonia did, we first gave ourselves to the Lord, and unto the rule and order of the apostles by the will of God. It seems to us there is no obedience to the commands of our Lord in church order and church ordinances but that which is to the edification of the church; and if this be so, with what fearfulness ought we individually to watch and pray lest evil communications corrupt our walk.

If it edifies the church to "forsake not the assembling of ourselves together," are we not offenders in absenting ourselves from its appointments without just cause? However indisposed we may feel, by reason of fleshly desires, to the assembly of the saints, nevertheless we are blessed in being faithful to the promise of our first love, by mortifying fleshly inclinations; and inasmuch as our obedience and presence do edify the church, we therein obey the exhortation, "Let no man seek his own, but every man another's wealth." If in fearfulness we are asking, Am I faithful in church order? will my absence offend even the least of one of these my brethren? it seems to us our place shall be rarely vacant at the appointed meetings of the church. And further, if we are faithful members we shall always justify our absence or confess our fault; and we shall, moreover, feel the obligation resting upon us to learn the cause of our brother's absence. It is an honor above all that earth can give to have our name inscribed upon the church book; but alas! how many of us fail to remember that it silently witnesses a promise that we made, of submission unto apostolic rule and order of the church: that it represents an obligation we have taken upon ourselves to observe every command, exhortation and admonition recorded in the New Testament for the government of the church here on earth; and that there is surely a woe upon him who fails in faithful observance. Let us therefore be steadfast, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as we know that our labor is not in vain in the Lord. Let us pass the time of our sojourning here in fear, seeking the commendation of "Well done, thou good and faithful servant; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

In our last letter we reported a membership of twenty-four members. Since then there have been added two; excluded one; present membership twenty-three.

Our pastor, Elder Joseph N. Badger, faithfully serves us each fifth Sunday, and Saturday preceding, and as often as other opportunities present themselves. Visits from other ministering brethren are welcomed by us, and we are frequently thus favored.

In fellowship with you in the doctrine of God our Savior, we are

Your brethren.

EDITORIAL NOTICES.

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE.

TO MOST of our readers the above mentioned book is too well known to need any introduction or a description by us. While many of the Bibles have a Concordance appended, they are generally so condensed or abridged as to be of little or no use. Cruden's Complete Concordance, however, enables one to readily turn to any passage of Scripture of which they can call to mind two or three words, and in our opinion is the most complete and convenient as a reference book of any published. In addition, it contains many other aids in studying the Bible, as may be seen by reference to advertisement on last page. Remember, both the books there mentioned are CRUDEN'S COMPETE.

PLEASE BE SURE

IN sending remittances for renewals of subscriptions to give us the same name in which the paper is already coming. If the party is married, and the paper is coming in the wife's name, and we receive remittance to renew the subscription, and the husband's name is given, we have no means of knowing that it is meant for the subscription in the wife's name; consequently the husband's name is entered on our list, and the paper sent to both parties. Or if the paper is coming in the husband's name, and the renewal is sent in the wife's name, the same thing is likely to occur. It is a good plan to inclose in the letter one of the little pink slips containing the name, taken either from the margin of the paper or from the wrapper in which the paper comes.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

Nov. 5th, 1895, Mrs. Mary Elizabeth Crissey was called from the sufferings of earth to everlasting rest, after long and frequently severe affliction resulting from delicate health. She was the daughter of the late David and Maria Benedict Forshee, born Dec. 15th, 1821. She was twelve years old when her father moved to the place where she lived the rest of her days. In July, 1845, she was received by the Old School Baptist Church in Warwick, and baptized by the late Elder Hartwell. In her death the church feels to mourn the loss of a highly esteemed and exemplary sister; but we are comforted by the assurance of faith that our loss is infinite gain to her. May the grace of God abound to the consolation of all who mourn under this dispensation of divine providence; and may the surviving son and daughter be enabled to bow submissively under the mighty hand of God, and receive the consolation of that gospel which sustained their loved mother through the years of her tribulation in this earthly house of her pilgrimage.

After a brief discourse from her pastor at her old home from the words, "Thy will be done," her body was deposited in the cemetery at Warwick, in the plot where rest the remains of her dear ones who had gone before to their everlasting home.—B.

"THE days of our years are threescore years and ten; and if by reason of strength they be fourscore years, yet is their strength labor and sorrow; for it is soon cut off, and we fly away."—Psalm xc. 10.

Dear Brethren:—We come again, to ask a place to give notice of the death of Sarah Weard, of Rock Springs, Pa., in the 78th year of her age.

The deceased had been long in the family of the late David Jenkins, from early life. She was a first-cousin to that family, was well known in the neighborhood, and much respected by all who knew her as a remarkably patient, harmless and orderly person, making no public profession, but a regular attendant at the meetings at Rock Springs, kind and attentive to those calling at their hospitable home. She seemed to be failing for some years previous to her departure, and seemed very patient in her declining days. She was heard to say that she wanted to go home. Full of days, and worn out with infirmities, she fell asleep, we believe, in Jesus, from which none ever wake to weep.

Some remarks were made on the occasion of her funeral, to a large and attentive audience, by the writer. "So teach us to number our days, that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom."

PICTORIAL HISTORY

OF THE

UNITED STATES.

By James D. McCabe.

This work is no dry mass of details—no bombastic effort to inflame the national pride, but a vivid and brilliant narrative of the events of our history, from the discovery of the American Continent down to thepresent time. It gives a most interesting account of the Indians of North America, from the time of the coming of the white men. The voyages of Columbus and explorations and discoveries of the different nations of Europe are related with graphic power. Every step of our colonial history is traced with patient fidelity, and the sources of those noble and, we trust, enduring institutions, which have made our country free and great, are shown with remarkable clearness. Then follows a clear and succinct account of our great Struggle for Independence, and the establishment of the Federal Union—the events of our career from the close of the Revolution to the administration of Harrison.

The work is printed from plain, new type, on fine calendered paper, and comprised in one octavo volume of 960 pages. It is splendidly embellished with nearly 500 fine engravings, embracing battles and other historical scenes, portraits of distinguished men, views of our principal cities, &c., &c.

CORRESPONDENCE.

ABLE TO STAND, BUT LIABLE TO FALL.

THE proposition that Adam was able to stand, but liable to fall, first came to my ears from Methodists and New School Baptists in their opposition to Old Baptists. The expression sounded puerile and illogical to me then, and sounds so yet. To me the phrase is meaningless; but grant it a meaning, and it arrays itself against the whole tenor of Bible truth, and all facts of human experience, as exemplified in the universal history of the human race. Such sayings and phrases as this became current through lack of thoughtful investigation. I invite the reader's attention to the following discussion of this trite expression; and if after impartially considering the matter he should still be of the opinion that "Adam was able to stand, but liable to fall," his position will be more clearly defined in his own mind, and perhaps entitled to more credit from those of contrary belief.

Let us now proceed to consider some of the a priori arguments. First, God had a purpose in man on the earth. When faith beholds the works of God in creation it sees nothing made in vain; the domestic beast of burden, the ravenous beast of prey, the wholesome grape, the deadly upas, the useful iron, the seducing gold, the wholesome food, and the destructive poison, all answer some useful end, some wise purpose, some intelligent design of the mind that created them. Shall we confess this, and then say that man, the climax of the natural creation, was created without a purpose or design, either for time or for eternity, by the God of all wisdom? Did God create man, and turn him loose in the world to ruin himself and all his posterity, to thwart God's will and destroy all his pleasure?

The first purpose of God in placing man upon the earth was that he should multiply and replenish it. God made the earth not in vain; he made it to be inhabited.—Bible. If Adam was able to stand, he was able to defeat God's purpose in this; for had he stood, there is no ground to believe that the earth would ever have been inhabited; for "except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone; but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit."—John xii. 24. These words of Jesus set sorth a universal fact in nature, a deep and comprehensive truth. The same truth may be stated in these words: Without death there is no reproduction. In the vegetable world seed must die before they germinate and reproduce their kind. The same principle, although not so plainly exhibited, extends into the animal world. The animal organism embodies both animal and vegetable life mysteriously combined, and the power of reproduction, growth and repair lies in the vegetable life. The multiplication of the human race did not begin until death passed upon the man; so from this it is seen that if Adam was able to stand, he was able to render the creation of the world in vain.

But grant that the multiplication of the race would have gone on without the fall, and what would have been done with the people who would have come into the world by this time? The garden of Eden would have been full to overflowing against this time. There would be a continually increasing stream of humanity pouring into the world, and none going out. What would be done with them? Upon what would they subsist? Where would they stay? What would be their occupation?

Again, suppose Adam had stood, then each of his posterity would have been subjected to the same probation. Each one able to stand, but liable to fall. Some, doubtless, would have succumbed to this liability to fall, and would have fallen, while some would have demonstrated their ability to stand by standing. The human race would then have been divided by death, some dying, and some living here forever. What a state of confusion this would be. Instead of the wisdom of the Creator being exemplified in the harmony of his creation, it would be impeached by this monstrous, unnatural, impossible discord.

It was doubtless God's purpose that the earth's resources should be developed, as exemplified in the various lines of human industry, enterprise and progress. The one essential element of human character upon which all industrial enterprise depends is the love of money. This is declared in the Scriptures to be the root of all evil. This root of all evil, then, is the prime impetus in all human progress, advancement and improvement. Without it new countries never would have been discovered, explored and settled, cities would never have been built, civilization would never have developed, the arts and sciences would have remained unknown, there would be no such thing as social or political society, no commerce, no trade, no improvements, no progress, no luxuries, no conveniences; in fact, men would all be savages. The fall of Adam enters into the very foundation of all the essential elements of the qualification of men to inhabit the earth. All the lust of the eye and the pride of life are essentially necessary to building up human society, either social, political or religious.

Again, the world in its present condition is either as God intended it should be, or it is not. If it is not as God intended, then God's intention has been defeated, and everything has gotten from under his control. There are only three positions to be taken with regard to the first man: God either purposed that he should fall, or purposed that he should not fall, or else had no purpose at all in the matter. If he purposed that he should not fall, but remain sinless forever, then the earth is peopled with an entirely different race of beings from what God intended; everything has gone contrary to God's purpose. If one man could reverse the purpose of God, and change the condition of the whole world, both for time and eternity, of what account is God's purpose? Where is any ground of hope of salvation either for time or eternity through the purpose of the same God? Where are our obligations to call him God, or worship him as such? Where is his right to call himself God, and claim our confidence, reverence and praise? To say that God purposed him to stand, but that the man fell, is to plunge into the darkest, blankest, most hopeless fatalism. If we say that God had no purpose one way or the other, then what do we mean by talking of God's purposes, and by calling him a God of purpose? If we say that God purposed the fall, then there is no conflict between God's purpose and the existing state of affairs. We can then look upon the word "purpose" as meaning something; and when we talk of God being a God of purpose our speech harmonizes; and when we speak of his purpose of grace we can do so with just reverence and holy confidence.

Again, God purposed that man should be removed from the earth by death. "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." One may say these words were spoken after man sinned. True enough; but did they come into the mind of God after man sinned? This is the utterance of a decree; but is the decree no older than its utterance? If God did not intend in the creation that man should return to dust, why did he create him from dust? Why did he not make him of some other material? But the very fact that he made him of dust shows that the decree, "Unto dust shalt thou return," was in the mind of the Creator when he made him. "It is appointed unto men once to die."—Bible. Death, then, is an appointment. Who made the appointment? God made it. Has God any appointments now that he did not have from eternity?

Let us now turn to God's purpose of grace in Christ. All the provisions of grace for the salvation of the people were made in Christ before the foundation of the world. If Adam had stood, what would have become of the purpose of grace? When we say he was able to stand, we say he was able to defeat God's purpose in Christ. It is declared in the Scriptures that Christ was foreordained before the foundation of the world. Foreordained to what? To die. To die for whom? For men who might not need it—for a man who was able to stand? If Christ was foreordained to die, and Adam was the figure of Christ, is it not plain that Adam was included in the same decree of death? When Christ died he was delivered to death by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God; not by the provisional counsel, as a remedy provided to meet an emergency; not by his permissial counsel, as one permitted to be slain for the sins of others. There is no mention in the Scriptures of a permissive counsel, but determinate counsel. Then, if Adam was included in God's counsel at all, he was in his determinate counsel. The creation of Adam was in God's counsel, for he said, "Let us make man." God's dealings with the man after he was made were in his counsel, for he placed him in a certain environment, with certain restrictions upon his liberties.

One may say that God knew that Adam would fall, and provided the remedy before the calamity came. To admit God's foreknowledge of the event is to yield the point that he was able to stand, for how was he able to stand if God knew that he would fall? The proposition is incompatible with foreknowledge. It is argued by some that God knew he would fall, but he did not fall by God's decree. By whose decree did he fall? If God foreknew the man would fall, the event was certain, inevitable, and could in no wise fail to come to pass. Now, what made the event certain? What rendered it inevitable? What brought it to pass? One says that God's foreknowledge of an event does not necessitate its coming to pass. If God's knowledge does not, what does? Who is he that bringeth to pass when the Lord commands it not? —Lam. iii. 37. Either God's decree makes the event certain, as foreknown, or it is purely a matter of total necessity.

If Adam was able to stand, how long was he able to stand, against what was he able to stand, and wherein consisted his ability to stand? Was he able to stand forever? Was he able to stand under all circumstances? If we answer yes to these questions, then his ability to stand consisted in his infinite perfection, for nothing short of infinite perfection could stand forever under all circumstances. If he was infinitely perfect, to enable him thus to stand, wherein lay his liability to fall? How did it come that he did fall? Ability to stand and liability to fall cannot exist at the same time in the same creature; for where liability to fall sets in, absolute ability to stand ends. Ability to stand, in this expression, must be absolute, or it cannot be considered; for if it is not absolute it must be relative, and relative ability to stand is entirely swallowed up in liability to fall.

Let us now pass to the a posteriori arguments. The fall itself is evidence that the man could not stand. Had he not fallen he would thereby have demonstrated his ability to stand; but he fell, and consequently he demonstrated his inability to stand.

The transmission of his sin to his posterity is conclusive argument against his ability to stand. The total, inherent, hereditary depravity of the human race is essentially and inseparably connected with this subject. Cavil as we may about predestination in Adam's case, it shows itself in all his progeny. They are all born sinners, grow up sinners, and die sinners, without exception or remedy. What then has fixed the universal, unalterable, irrevocable reign of sin and death? Is it fixed by God, or does it come by fate? Is it the provision of infinite wisdom, or is it through the unlucky intervention of some work of chance? Did God, either in ignorance or knowingly, leave the issues of life and death of unborn millions to the uncertain will of one man? If God did not know the consequence when he created the man, then he is ignorant and stupid, and is no God. If he knew the consequence, and yet created the man, and gave him power to ruin his unborn progeny in sin, death and eternal destruction, knowing certainly that he would do it, is he not a strange kind of a God? Is not such a course more like that of a madman than like that of an all-wise God? Which is the greater display of wisdom, righteousness, justice and judgment, for God to leave the issues of life and death of an unborn world to the caprices of one man's will, or to fix all by his own infinite will and wisdom? Which would faith choose as a source of consolation, that the well-being of a world was left to one man, and he ruined it, or that God held the issues in his own eternal grasp?

The great stumbling-stone in the way of most minds is the trite, meaningless expression that this would make God the author of sin. But is it not taught in the Scriptures that God visits the iniquities of the fathers upon the children? Where is there any human code of practice or standard of justice but what would pronounce this unjust, wicked and cruel? Visit the iniquity of the fathers upon the children even to the third and fourth generations. Punish a child for the crime of its great-grandfather, a crime committed before the child was born, or even before its parents were born. If we are going to impeach God by human standards we must impeach him here, and declare him wicked, unjust and cruel, and renounce his name, and abandon his worship. But again, Jesus said that the blood of all the prophets, from the blood of Abel to the blood of Zacharias, that perished between the temple and the altar, shall be required of this generation. Where is the justice, from a human standpoint, in requiring all the righteous blood that had been shed for four thousand years of that particular generation? Such destruction as had not been seen since the world began was sent upon that generation of men, women and helpless children, and God did it. Then, upon this point of God being unjust if he does so and so, let the words of inspiration stop every mouth and silence every tongue.

The law in its nature, design and effect enters into this discussion. Many minds are misled by their wrong notion of the law. The law was not given for men to keep. It entered that the offense might abound. They say that God would not have commanded Adam not to eat if he intended that he should eat. How do they know what God would have done? By what or by whom do they judge? How could man transgress without a commandment? It required the commandment to answer the purpose. It is argued that God's decreeing the fall of Adam would destroy man's accountability. Would it be any worse, from their own standards of judging, to hold Adam responsible for what he was purposed to do, than to hold a babe born in the nineteenth century responsible for Adam's transgression by fixing upon it the sin committed by another six thousand years before it was born? The doctrine of hereditary, total depravity will not harmonize with the proposition that Adam was able to stand.

Lastly, I shall call in the testimony of christian experience. Can a christian live without sin? We regard those persons who hold and teach that a man can live without sin as deluded, fanatical heretics. If the christian, who is born of God, washed in the blood of Christ, justified, sanctified, and led by the Spirit of God, cannot live without sin, how can the natural man live without sin? Adam in his creation was a natural man, of the earth, earthy. He had natural capacities, fleshly qualifications, propensities and desires; then how could this man in nature be expected to do what the most gifted saint cannot do?

RIVER VIEW, Ala., Sept. 27, 1895.

DEAR BROTHER CHICK:—I notice in the SIGNS of the 25th instant your request for some one to write on the subject of the "First and Second Resurrections;" and having for a number of years been greatly exercised in mind in regard to the resurrection, I feel to offer some thoughts upon this glorious and important subject.

First, let me say that the term or expression, "Second Resurrection," does not occur in the Bible at all; but the expression, "First Resurrection" does, as also "second death." Perhaps it is right to conclude that as there is a first resurrection, there must also of necessity be a second resurrection. But I do not think that the common idea of the first and second resurrections will do; that is, that the "dead in Christ" shall rise first, and that the second resurrection will be of those who die out of Christ, or the wicked. Many good brethren have fallen into this error from the expression of Paul in First Thes. iv. 16, "And the dead in Christ shall rise first;" but the reading of the 17th verse will show the error of this conclusion. Let us quote it. "Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord." Now, all this shows that the Lord Jesus Christ shall come again, the "second time, without sin unto salvation;" that he shall "descend from heaven with a shout;" that there will be saints remaining here upon the earth when he comes; that the "dead in Christ shall rise first," then those of his saints that are alive here upon earth will be "caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord." The doctrine of the resurrection of the dead is one of the fundamental principles of the gospel of Christ. In fact, without it there is no such thing as "eternal redemption;" no such thing as "waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body;" no such thing as hope beyond this mode of existence. And the apostle says, "If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable." And upon this very subject the apostle says, "But if there be no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not risen. And if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain; yea, and we are found false witnesses of God, because we have testified of God that he raised up Christ, whom he raised not up, if so be that the dead rise not. For if the dead rise not, then is not Christ raised. And if Christ be not raised, your faith is vain, ye are yet in your sins. Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished." Thus we see that upon the truth of the resurrection of Christ is based the resurrection of his saints, and upon this depends our redemption from sin and death. "If Christ be not raised," "ye are yet in your sins," "your faith is vain;" and yet, "if the dead rise not," "Christ is not raised." The resurrection of Christ and the resurrection of his saints stand or fall together. If Christ is risen, so shall his saints arise in his likeness. If his saints rise not, then Christ is not risen. If one is true, so is the other. If one is not true, neither is the other. This is certainly Paul's reasoning upon this subject. I shall not attempt in this article to show how the dead are raised up, nor with what body they come, only to say that the apostle teaches that this mortal shall put on immortality, and that this corruptible shall put on incorruption, and that death shall be swallowed up in victory; and to prove that the body is here alluded to, he says, "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" Again, "Who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body." "Waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body." I will now try to turn my attention directly to the subject of the first and second resurrections. In the twentieth chapter of Revelation we have an account of an angel coming down from heaven, having the key of the bottomless pit, and a great chain in his hand, and binding the dragon, "that old serpent, which is the devil and Satan," for a thousand years, and casting him into the bottomless pit, &c. The fourth verse states that John saw the souls of them that were beheaded, &c., "and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years." Notice that it reads "souls," not bodies, "and they lived." It does not say they were resurrected. "But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished." "This is the first resurrection." Thus it seems to me that the living again of all these are included in the first resurrection. There is nothing said in regard to a second resurrection, but it does say,

"Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection; on such the second death hath no power," &c. So here we have the "first resurrection" and the "second death" brought to view. In the fourteenth verse of this same chapter we have what the second death is. "And death and hell were cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death." It is said here, "And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God, and the books were opened; and another book was opened, which is the book of life; and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works. And the sea gave up the dead which were in it, and death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them; and they were judged every man according to their works." And the last verse reads, "And whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire." This chapter, it seems to me, teaches a general judgment and a general resurrection, both of the just and the unjust; and it seems to me that the twenty-first chapter presents the doctrine of an entire change in all things; for the inspired writer says, "And I saw a new heaven and a new earth; for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away, and there was no more sea." I am aware that some look upon this "new heaven and new earth" to mean the gospel dispensation, and the passing away of the first heaven and earth to have reference to to the legal dispensation. But it is said in this chapter, "And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain; for the former things are passed away. And he that sat upon the throne said, Behold, I make all things new. And he said unto me, Write, for these words are true and faithful. And he said unto me, It is done. I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end." Now, we know that a great portion of the time in this life is attended with bitter tears, pain, sorrow and death; but here is an epoch in the history of the saints when all these things shall be hushed forever. On the cross Jesus cried, "It is finished!" He had finished the work his Father gave him to do, finished his sufferings, finished transgression, and made an end of sin. But here he says to his servant John, "It is done. I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end." Now, I think that the legal dispensation was a type or shadow of the gospel dispensation, and the gospel dispensation a type of the heaven of immortal glory. The joys of the saints under that legal dispensation were a type or foretaste of the joys of the saints in the gospel dispensation. The joys of the saints in the gospel kingdom are a type or foretaste of the joys of the kingdom of ultimate glory. The destruction of Jerusalem was a type of the final destruction of this world, and the judgments there inflicted upon the wicked Jews were a type of the judgments that will be inflicted upon the wicked at the last day. The separation between the righteous and the wicked now, and the dividing of the sheep from the goats, that is now being manifested by the gospel of Christ, is a type of the final separation in the day of judgment. "For he hath appointed a day in which he will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom he hath ordained; whereof he hath given assurance unto all men, in that he hath raised him from the dead."

In conclusion, let me say that Christ was the "first to rise from the dead." He is the "first begotten," and the "first-born from the dead." Then, it seems to me, that to have part in the first resurrection is to have part in Christ. There is abundance of Scripture to show that those who have hope or part in Christ shall not be hurt of the second death. "On such the second death hath no power." The eighth verse of the twenty-first chapter of Revelation describes the characters who "shall have their part in the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death." I understand the term, "second death," to imply that there is a first death. I understand that first death to include all that followed the transgression of the one man Adam. This involved separation from God, and from the earthly paradise, Eden, death in trespasses and in sins, corporal death, and banishment from God. I understand all this to be involved in the first death; but the second death involves more. It involves punishment, with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power. Hence, while I believe that the transgression of Adam involved death and banishment, it did not involve future punishment; no more than the keeping of that law would have entitled Adam and his posterity to everlasting life and the bliss of heaven. Men sin and die because of their standing in and relationship to Adam; but God punishes men and sends his just judgments upon them on account of their wickedness. "The wicked shall do wickedly, and none of the wicked shall understand." God overthrows the wicked for their wickedness. "I will punish the world for their evil." He reserves the unjust to the day of judgment to be punished.

Now, dear brother, I have written very hastily, and have scattered considerably. My mind ran faster than my pen possibly could. I have only written what I feel to be sustained by the Scriptures. I do not say that I know I am right, for I feel that I know very little about these momentous things. I trust I have written nothing that will offend God's little ones.

I enjoyed your reply to brother Freeman. I, like you, regard death as just stepping out, out from this mode of existence, into that of another. May I be able to stand when the "great day of his wrath is come."

Yours in hope of the resurrection of the dead through Christ,

H. J. REDD.

MASON CITY, Iowa, Sept. 2, 1895.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS:—I inclose a letter from brother J. F. Oliver, of Herndon, Va., which I would like to see published in our family paper if it meets with your approval. Although brother Oliver is a stranger to me in the flesh, yet if I am not mistaken in myself he is not a stranger to the household of faith. Although I have not his permission to send it, I do not think he will object. When God speaks through his servants to the edification of the body of Christ, either in the pulpit or by the pen, what they say is not their own to dispose of, but belongs to the sheep and lambs of the fold. This letter has been a comfort to me, and I believe it will be to others. Your brother, I hope,

A. B. LESTER.

A. B. LESTER AND WIFE—MY VERY DEAR BROTHER AND SISTER IN CHRIST:—I now avail myself of the opportunity of answering your most precious letter, which I received in due season. I must tell you that I was more than glad to hear from you again; for it seems to me that to be without your sweet correspondence I would be very lonely and sad. Your letters always bring me good news from a far country, which is meat and drink to a poor sinner like me. I felt while reading your letter that you were my brother indeed and in truth. "Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity. It is like the precious ointment upon the head, that ran down upon the beard, even Aaron's beard; that went down to the skirts of his garments." When we receive this ointment, or oil of joy, it causes us to forget our old sinful nature, and we are lifted up and made to rejoice with joy that is unspeakable and full of glory. None but God's little ones can tell of this kind of joy. It gives them a peace that passeth understanding. But O! what am I that I should speak of such things that belong to the people of God? For I am so often full of sinful thoughts that I fear I have no part nor lot with those who have been brought from darkness to light. Oftentimes I feel that I have yet to be converted and made to fall to the ground like Saul of Tarsus when on his way to Damascus with the determination in his mind to have the saints of God bound and put in prison. Then, of course, the Lord would cause me to cry out, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" Have you, my dear brother and sister, either of you, ever had such rebellious thoughts as these? If you ever have you will know just what I mean. I am so often in "Doubting Castle," and then in the "Slough of Despond." It is very seldom that I can say, "My Lord and my God." My harp is almost all the time hung upon the willows, if indeed I ever had it; and how can I sing the Lord's song in a strange land? But I know the Lord is able to turn my feet Zionward, and make me to praise him, and cause me to adore the riches of his great name, yea, and cause me to speak his matchless name, and to give his little ones comfort in telling them what great things the Lord has done for poor, unworthy me. "Comfort ye, comfort ye my people, saith your God. Speak ye comfortably to Jerusalem, and cry unto her that her warfare is accomplished, that her iniquity is pardoned; for she hath received of the Lord's hand double for all her sins." O! my brother and sister, is it not then an awfully solemn and devout calling, to be called upon to speak comfortably to the people of the great God? But we know that the Lord is able to speak for us, and to make crooked things straight, and rough places plain. "O Zion, that bringest good tidings, get thee up into the high mountain: O Jerusalem, that bringest good tidings, lift up thy voice with strength; lift it up, be not afraid: say unto the cities of Judah, Behold your God." The above language will be found in the book of Isaiah, fortieth chapter. I noticed you quoted in your letter from the same chapter, "But they that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run and not be weary; and they shall walk and not faint." There are many comforting words recorded in the book of Isaiah for the children of the living God. Sometimes I take courage, while reading the precious promises, that I have a part in the election of grace. I know the Lord's hand is not shortened, that he cannot save; neither his ear heavy, that he cannot hear. The Lord says by the mouth of Isaiah, "I will say to the north, Give up; and to the south, Keep not back; bring my sons from far, and my daughters from the ends of the earth, even every one that is called by my name; for I have created him for my glory, I have formed him, yea, I have made him." I do believe that when one is called by grace he will always be in grace, and be kept by the power of God, through faith unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the last time. For the Lord changes not; therefore the sons of Jacob are not consumed. He will have mercy on whom he will have mercy, and whom he will he hardeneth. The doctrine of the Bible is a very hard doctrine to the Arminian world. They say God would be unjust if he were to damn those who are trying to help him save souls, and save those who do not help him

A FEW QUESTIONS ANSWERED.

A BROTHER, whose letter was postmarked Harrisonville, Fulton Co., Pa., but who does not give his name, asks, "Is it the duty of the pastor of a church to assist in defraying the expenses of the church, the same as any other member? Is it his duty to help bear the expenses of ministers attending his association or visiting his church?" The writer adds, "The duty of a church to her pastor is plain."

It seems to us impossible to lay down a rule that will fit all cases in such matters. Circumstances alter cases. What would be the duty of a pastor or of the members under certain circumstances, might not be their duty under other circumstances. We may, however, be justified in saying a few things in a general way about this and kindred matters; and first we would say that it seems to us that if in any case the pastor and the members are actuated by the one common desire to help each other in the fear of God, and above all that they all have an eye single to the glory of God, there could never arise any controversy about this matter. In such a case the rivalry would be, not which shall do the least, but which shall do the most; and this will not be upon the fleshly ground of human boasting, because each one would feel that after having done all he was still but an unprofitable servant. If a brother or sister has failed to do his or her full duty in such cases, they have forfeited one of their highest privileges, and have missed great blessings; while the one who has in the fear of God done that which was his duty, has also enjoyed an inestimable privilege. It ought to be always remembered by all the people of God that they are to do these things, not as unto men, but as unto God. If pastor and people are both led by such considerations as these there will be no need of controversy. This spirit will easily solve all such questions as may arise. If we are looking unto God for direction, as the eye of a servant is unto the hand of her mistress, we shall each find that we have but little time to observe others.

It is customary, we believe, among most of our associations at their annual sessions to raise a fund to help defray the expenses of brethren in the ministry who may visit them at that time. This is right, and we believe is generally so regarded by our people. If any minister belonging to any association feels able and willing to assist in this matter it is his privilege to do so. The same is true of any member of the association, or of any one who is not a member.

It is also customary in most of our churches, when ministers visit them, to help them forward in the same way. Here also any one who desires, pastor, member or friend, has a right to contribute according to his desire and his ability. In neither case has any one a right to dictate to another how much he ought to give. This we are told in the word. "God loveth a cheerful giver. This each one proves for himself in his own experience.

If a pastor be poor in this world's goods, or if he has a large family, and so can barely live, he ought not to be expected to bear many such burdens as come upon the church. If the pastor be well-to-do, and those among whom he labors be poor in this world's goods, and he have the Spirit of Christ reigning in him, he will take pleasure in helping his poorer brethren bear their burdens. To sum it all up, we might say that it seems to us to be the duty of the pastor and of all the members to stay up each other's hands in every way that they are able; but again we would say that no one can tell how much the other ought to do. Each one ought to decide this matter for himself in the fear of God.

A salaried ministry is an abomination that the New Testament knows nothing about; but still the duty of churches to those who labor among them is plain. Pastors of churches have a right to expect a portion of the carnal things of their brethren. They are not beggars, nor is what is done for them charity. It is theirs by right. God has so ordained. Still, in some cases, for good reasons, Paul waved his rights in this matter, and pastors may do the same now; but it is to the hurt of the church herself if she neglects her duty.

There ought to be an equality. If the pastor is rich, and the members of his churches are poor, he should feel that it is his privilege to labor among them freely and willingly, glad that because of his abundance he need not exact from them. If, however, he is poor, and he spends his time serving the church, he has a right to expect that they will help him all that they are able; and if they have the spirit of the gospel reigning in them they will love him for his works' sake, and be glad and eager to do what God has required at their hand. It is a shame to any church to accept the labors of a pastor year after year, and yet withhold from him what it is his right to expect. On the other hand, it is equally a shame for a servant of God to show such distrust in the God he professes to serve that he will not labor in the vineyard without first demanding to know how much will be paid him. If pastor and people owe a duty to each other, it is first of all because they are the servants of God, and owe allegiance to him. O that we might always remember that we are the servants of God!

While considering this subject we would call attention to one or two more things connected with it. If a church wishes a visit from any minister, and at the same time feels too poor to pay his expenses and other losses, if any, in coming to them, they should frankly tell him so in the first place. Then he can do as he may feel to be right in the fear of God. If nothing is said beforehand, the minister who responds to this request has a right to expect that the church will see that he loses nothing; and he has a right to censure that church if they neglect their duty and subject him to loss. He will probably say nothing, but he cannot feel as he would like toward that church.

On the other hand, if a minister, moved by his own feelings, sends an appointment to visit any community or church, without having had an invitation from them, he should be satisfied with whatever is done for him, and has no right to find fault if nothing is done. In such a case he might feel that his visit was not appreciated, but still he could not rightly complain of the church. This is the way it has appeared to us for a long time. We will add, however, that if such a servant of God feels that his desire to visit any place, and preach in that place the word of truth, is of God, he ought to go trusting God and fearing nothing. The God who sent him will not fail to provide. Such obedient servants shall lack nothing.

As will have been seen, we have not confined ourself to answering the questions proposed by our brother. In fact, we did not feel as though we could give a definite answer, further than to say that each case must be judged by itself, and each pastor and each church must be left to act as those who are the servants of God, and not of men. We are not lords over each other. One is our Master, even Christ. May the sole desire and motive of all our hearts be that we may know and do his will.

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE.

TO MOST of our readers the above mentioned book is too well known to need any introduction or a description by us. While many of the Bibles have a Concordance appended, they are generally so condensed or abridged as to be of little or no use. Cruden's Complete Concordance, however, enables one to readily turn to any passage of Scripture of which they can call to mind two or three words, and in our opinion is the most complete and convenient as a reference book of any published. In addition, it contains many other aids in studying the Bible, as may be seen by reference to advertisement on last page. Remember, both the books there mentioned are CRUDEN'S COMPETE.

PSALM XXIII. 1.

"THE Lord is my Shepherd, I shall not want."

How full of instruction, assurance and comfort are the words of divine revelation to the saints of the Most High! They afford at once lessons of instruction, matter of gratitude, and a theme of most devout praise and adoration to God and the Lamb. The pleasing figures which the Holy Ghost has employed in setting forth and illustrating the union and relationship existing between Christ and his people are numerous, impressive and appropriate. The sweet singer of Israel might well employ his harp and all his spiritual faculties in uttering the sublime, soul-cheering and God-honoring doctrine expressed and implied in this psalm.

God's people are here brought to view as a flock of sheep, as elsewhere in the Psalms it is said, "For we are the sheep of his pasture," &c. In this figure we learn that, like the sheep, we are unable to provide for ourselves; we need the care, providence and protection of a shepherd to protect us from our deadly enemies, and to lead us into the green pastures where we may feed and lie down—where we may rest by the still waters of life and salvation. The sheep is a timid and defenseless animal, and very dependent on the care and wisdom of a faithful shepherd; and so it is with the flock of the great Shepherd and Bishop of our souls. Like the lily of the field, we can neither toil nor spin, so as to pay our way or beautify our own souls; but, like the lily, all our beauty and loveliness is from him who so clothes the grass. If we contemplate the insufficiency of the flock to care for itself, and its exposure to wolves and other beasts of prey, how strongly our minds are impressed with a sense of the necessity of being constantly under the pastoral charge of a good and faithful shepherd—of one who is really interested in the welfare of the flock. We read, both in the Old and New Testaments, of shepherds who care not for the flocks over which they preside; some who feed themselves on the flock, and others who are idle, lying down, loving slumber; and our Lord tells us of some who will flee at the approach of danger. In such shepherds there is no safety for the flock; and when we consider our liability to be imposed on, if left to our own wisdom to make a selection from them, how thankful should we be that the little flock unto whom it is our heavenly Father's good pleasure to give the kingdom, are exposed to no such liability; for the Lord is their Shepherd, they shall not want.

The words of the psalmist at the head of this article present two important considerations, viz., the fact and the legitimate inference. In this case both are declared by the Holy Ghost, and hence the inference that God's people shall not want is as firmly authenticated as is the fact that the Lord is their Shepherd. In this very natural division of our subject we will offer a few suggestions in their order.

"The Lord is my Shepherd." He whom angels worship, and saints adore, and at whose presence devils tremble; he who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God; he who has made all things, who supports and upholds all things, is the Shepherd of Israel. His dwelling is between the cherubim of glory; who led Jacob as a flock, and whose goings forth are from everlasting; who rideth upon the heavens in our help, and in his excellency on the sky; is the Shepherd and Bishop of our souls.

It is pleasant and profitable to contemplate the perfect union and relationship in which he is identified with his people. In every figure, in every character, and in every official name he bears, this union and relationship is implied. As the Head, the church is his body, his flesh and his bones, his members, deriving all spiritual blessings from and by and through him. As a Father, which he is called by Isaiah, the members of his body are his children. He is their Wonderful, Counsellor, Mighty God, Everlasting Father, and their Prince of Peace; and the government is upon his shoulder. His children are quickened by a communication of spiritual life from him, which God gave them in him before the world began. They receive his Spirit, walk in his footsteps, and bear his image; and if children, then heirs of God, and joint-heirs with him. As the Bridegroom, the church of God is his bride; and as an Husband, the church is the Lamb's wife, and as such he has taken her by the right hand, and solemnly pledged himself that he will support, protect and defend her; that he will love and cherish her as the bone of his bones, and as the flesh of his flesh, for evermore. He has named her woman, because she was taken out of the Man—out of himself, the second Adam, who is the Lord from heaven. And by and with all the powers of both worlds he will fulfill his nuptial vows to her; for he has betrothed her to him in faithfulness, and he hates putting away. Unconstant and fickle as she is in her love, and in all her deportment, he cannot deny himself, and therefore he reclaims her from all her wanderings, saying, "Return unto me, O backsliding daughter; for I am married unto thee." Her "Maker is her Husband, the Lord of hosts is his name." His titles of Prophet, Priest and King imply the relation that he bears to the church, and we might run through all the names and titles applied to him in the holy record which God has given of him, and not one of them will fail to express or imply this indissoluble union. But among the multitudes of figures illustrative of this heavenly union, we have that of a Shepherd and his flock.

"The Lord is my Shepherd." This office implies care, government, responsibility, providence and familiarity. The Lord Jesus Christ is in possession of all the requisite qualifications necessary for the faithful discharge of this important trust. He has assumed the care. "Your heavenly Father careth for you." "Casting all your care on him; for he careth for you." "The government is on his shoulder," and he leadeth his flock. He makes all the laws, ordains all the institutions, and dictates all the regulations which his saints are bound to observe. He has made himself responsible for his flock. He is their Surety, and the law of God and divine justice have recognized him as their responsible representative. His providence is acknowledged by the saints. "He maketh me to lie down in green pastures," "beside the still waters." And as to familiarity, he says, "I know my sheep, and am known of mine." "When he putteth forth his own sheep, he goeth before them, and the sheep follow him; for they know his voice: but a stranger will they not follow; for they know not the voice of strangers." "My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me, and I give to to them eternal life, and they shall never perish; neither shall any pluck them out of my hands. My Father, which gave them me, is greater than all; and none is able to pluck them out of my Father's hands. I and my Father are one."

The inference, "I shall not want," is unavoidable. Only let a child of God feel perfectly certain that the Lord is his Shepherd, and he will give all his doubts to the wind, and with the sweetest assurance conclude that he is amply protected against all harm. "I shall not want." Plentiful as the rich pasture on which we feed may be, though we may find our table well supplied, and our cup running over, yet, if it were not for the assurance that the Lord is our Shepherd, we should feel certain that we should soon come to want. The sheep of Christ have no confidence in the flesh; they can only rejoice in Christ Jesus; but with him for their Shepherd they feel themselves fully indemnified against want. "He shall feed his flock like a shepherd; he shall gather the lambs with his arm, and carry them in his bosom." How can they want when protected and gathered with his almighty arms, fed by his pastoral care, and tenderly carried in his bosom?

But what shall they not want? Are they not a poor and afflicted people? Certainly they are, and in this world subjected to many trials and sorrows, reproaches, buffetings and temptations, and often seem to be in want of deliverance from their various temptations. But it must not be forgotten that all these afflictions are light and momentary, and that they work for them a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory, while they look not on the things that are seen, but on the things that are not seen; for the things that are seen are temporal; but the things that are not seen are eternal. They shall not want for those things which their God has appointed for the trial of their faith, or which are working for the eternal weight of glory in their behalf. For unto them it is given on the behalf of Christ, their Shepherd, not only that they shall believe on him, but also that they shall suffer for his sake. They shall want nothing that the omniscient eye of God sees will be for their good or his glory. They shall not want for a way of escape from all their temptations, or deliverance from their trials; for their Lord will provide. Daniel in the den with lions, and the Hebrew children in the furnace of the king of Babylon, David in the cave, Elijah pursued by the wrath of Jezebel, and even poor, old, fretful Jonah in the belly of hell, were not left to want. With the indemnity of our text, Peter was safe when riddled through the sieve of Satan; and we desire never to forget what he said after the operation was over, "Brethren, count it all joy when you fall into divers temptations," &c. There hath no temptation befallen you but that which is common unto all. If ye endure chastisement, then God dealeth with you as with children; but if ye be without chastisement, whereof all are partakers, then are ye bastards, and not sons. Will your faithful Shepherd allow his sheep or lambs to be without the evidence of their sonship? They shall not want. "My God shall supply all your need."

The poor, silly sheep perhaps may think it hard that walls and fences should circumscribe their liberties; they may sometimes wish to be free agents and go where they please; but their Shepherd knows that without the enclosures of his fold are dogs, and sorcerers, and whoremongers, and murderers, and idolators, and whosoever loveth and maketh a lie. They shall not want for walls to protect them from their foes without, nor from their fears within; for "Salvation will God appoint for walls and bulwarks."

While carnal professors and graceless hypocrites have to toil and spend their money for that which is not bread, and their labor for that which satisfieth not, it is the peculiar privilege of all the children of God, the sheep of Christ, to hearken diligently unto him, hear, and their souls shall live; and he makes an everlasting covenant with them, even the sure mercies of David. Our Shepherd will give streams in the desert, and rivers in the wilderness, to give drink unto his people, his chosen. Bread shall be given to all his children, and their water shall be sure. He will abundantly bless the provisions of Zion and fill his poor with bread; for

"He has ordained by firm decree
That as their days their strength shall be."

Reader, if the Lord is thy Shepherd thou shalt not want."

WHAT CAN WE DO?

ON our list of several thousands of subscribers occur the names of persons of all dispositions and temperaments. Some are so sensitive that if we discontinue their paper at the expiration of the time paid for they will take offense. Others, if we continue the paper to them after the expiration of their subscription, and they become indebted to us for their paper, will censure us, and repudiate the account on the ground that they did not order it continued on credit. We print plainly next to the name of each subscriber the time at which their subscription expires; and if each will take the trouble to look at this date next to their name on the little pink slip pasted either on the margin of every paper they receive, or on the wrapper in which their paper comes, they can plainly see at what time their subscription expires, or has already expired. If any fail to notify us to discontinue their paper when the time is out, and continue to take the paper from their post-office, it is their christian duty to pay for it. There is no justice in holding us responsible for their neglect. Will each one after reading this notice please turn to their date on the little pink slip mentioned above, and if they find their time has expired, and they do not wish to continue the paper after their time is out, please to so inform us and remit for their back dues?

We never intentionally continue sending the paper to a person longer than they desire to receive it; but how are we to know by looking over our list of thousands of names, scattered all over the United States, just which ones wish their paper discontinued, and which will be offended, and think we stopped their paper "because we were afraid to trust them?" For nearly sixty-three years the paper has been sent to its patrons regardless of the date to which their subscription was paid; but within the last few years we have had so many thousands of dollars worth of accounts repudiated on the ground that "they never ordered the paper continued after the time paid for had expired," that we are seriously embarrassed by the loss. We have tried to bear these losses patiently, and do not now wish to complain; but the matter has become so serious that it actually embarrasses us financially.

Nearly all accounts are in small amounts, of ten dollars or less, and may appear of minor importance to each one; but the debts we owe are for large sums, and to those who would not hesitate to sue us, even though in doing so they compelled us to discontinue the publication of the paper.

Brethren, once again we ask you to consider us, and at the earliest possible day send on your remittance.

in the work. But the poor child of God has to say,

"And if my soul were sent to hell,
God's righteous law approves it well."

They are always willing to say, "Let God be true, and every man a liar." But the Arminian world has it that if God does not do just what man wants him to do, then he is worse than man, very unjust. Poor, deluded creatures! God's people pity them, because his people have the Spirit of Jesus in them. Jesus could say to his Father, "Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do."

Dear brother and sister, it has been with one train of thought I have written thus, and it seems to me I have only been following the shadow and missed the substance. A man may often aim well and miss the mark every time. The apostle Paul in writing to the Philippian brethren said, "Brethren, I count not myself to have apprehended; but this one thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." Now, if what I have written shall confuse your minds, you may know that I have missed the mark, and failed to obtain that prize and high calling of God in Christ Jesus the Lord. I know it is a fearful thing to darken counsel by words without knowledge. O! I am so ignorant, I often wonder why I should ever attempt to write on this all-important subject. But I am constrained to believe that the way of man is not in himself; it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps; neither can man control his thoughts. I know if I had the power to control mine I would put away my many wicked thoughts that harrass me day after day and night after night. O that I could lay aside every weight, and the sin that doth so easily beset me, and be enabled to run with patience the race that is set before me, ever looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith. And now, dear brother and sister, I am going to bring this poor scribble to a close. I feel that my ignorance is so great you will not appreciate such a poor letter as this; but as you seem to be such as can cast the mantle of charity over one's imperfections, I hope you may cast it over this scribble and write to me again soon.

Your brother, I hope,

JOHN F. OLIVER.

SHAWNEE, Tenn., Aug. 29, 1895.

DEAR BRETHREN:—The SIGNS OF THE TIMES has been a welcome guest to me and my family for a year past, proclaiming salvation, what God has done for poor, lost, undone sinners, entirely excluding dependence thereof upon the will, works, power or ability of the creature. This is the doctrine I can feast upon at times. At other times I conclude it is not for me. Yet I think the Lord has given me a great and glorious view of the plan of life and salvation, of its fullness, ampleness and completeness to save the elect. I have not the least doubt or scruple but that all who were embraced in the covenant of redemption in eternity, when the choice was made by him who works all things after the counsel of his own will, and grace given them in Christ Jesus before the world began, are saved, and will be called to a knowledge of the same; not to make them sons or heirs, but because they are already sons; and God has sent his Spirit into their heart's crying, Abba, Father, to make known to them what Jesus has done for them.

Dear brethren, I should not have written anything, except the order for the SIGNS; but I feel to cast in my little mite and sanction the doctrine advocated in its columns by the precious brethren and sisters who are contributors, whose letters are so consoling to me, all bearing the same testimony, telling the same story. "And they shall be all taught of God." The elect people of God are surely a peculiar people; there are none like them; there are none who believe like them. O what a God is Israel's God.

There is no Old School Baptist Church nearer me than fourteen miles. The church where I belong, where the brethren bear with me, is eighteen miles distant, so I seldom hear anything I call preaching, only what I read in the SIGNS, which makes it such a welcome visitor. Occasionally brethren pass and call to see us, and stay a day or two, and sometimes preach a sermon for us. There are only two Old School Baptist members in this place, B. W. Ellison, living a mile distant from me at Harrogate, and myself. These stations are on the Cumberland Valley extension of the Louisville & Nashville R. R. Any of the brethren coming on this line can find either of us by making inquiry at Cumberland Gap, or at either of the stations where we live. We will try to care for any who may call on us. Preaching brethren wishing to visit the churches in this section of country will be furnished conveyance by us. We would be glad if it is the Lord's will to direct some of the preaching brethren at a distance among us. Not that we wish or expect to hear a new or strange doctrine, but that we might see brethren whom we have never met before face to face, and have additional testimony to the truth. This doctrine is ever new when attended with power and demonstration of the Spirit.

Dear brethren, this is the first attempt I have ever made at writing any of the brethren, and would not have done so at this time were it not that I wished you to know how much I love the doctrine of salvation by grace. While brother Ellison and myself are so remote from those we claim as brethren, we are in the midst of a "do and live" people. The man whose eyes Jesus opened, said to the same class of people of old, "God heareth not sinners; but if any man be a worshiper of God, and doeth his will, him he heareth."

I must close this broken and imperfect chain of thought, and in conclusion say to you, brethren editors of the SIGNS, and contributors (if one so unworthy may claim such an exalted relationship), continue to proclaim the truth, and I think I can believe it. Wishing you great success in editing the paper, and that the Lord will abundantly mould your minds and hearts after the image of Jesus, and enable you to still wield the sword of the Lord and of Gideon, according to his counsel and appointment, who works all things after the counsel of his own will, and with great love to the household of faith, I remain yours in hope of eternal life,

J. I. FRANCISCO.

ANSLEY, Neb., Nov. 3, 1895.

ELDER SILAS H. DURAND—DEAR BROTHER:—I have for some time past contemplated writing to you, that you might know how we are getting along, as I hope you have not entirely lost interest in our temporal or spiritual welfare. We had a fair crop of small grain, and almost every thing except corn (which is our main crop), which was almost an entire failure, as the result of a late drought. Prices are very low on every thing we have to sell, so we are still in very poor shape to pay our debts, which have been accumulating through the past seasons of crop failure.

Acting upon your advice the few lovers of the truth who live in this part of the country have decided to hold monthly meetings at the house of brother Jacob N. Greenlee, three miles west of Mason City, Custer Co., Neb., on the third Sunday in each month, at eleven o'clock a. m., at which times and place we hope to meet the brethren and sisters who have a mind to come among us. We extend a cordial invitation to all the brethren, and especially those of the ministry, to attend these meetings. We have no preacher, but hope to exercise the gifts we possess, and peradventure the Lord will, in his own time and in his own way, raise up an under-shepherd for his poor, scattered sheep. Will you kindly send a notice, in accordance with the above, to the SIGNS OF THE TIMES and the Monitor, and not cease to remember us at the throne of grace?

It would take me days to tell you of all the good that those donations from the precious brethren last winter and spring did us. We have raised enough to live on, and the clothes which were so freely given us will enable us to go through the winter in comparative comfort.

Those hymn-books are still a source of much joy to all those who received them. I hope to be able to order a dozen more this fall to present to my friends who want them. "The house of the Lord," on page 226, is a favorite of mine. My father read your communication in the SIGNS of Oct. 23d with much interest. I have just moved to this place for the purpose of publishing a political paper, and what I regret most deeply is having my mind so much occupied with worldly matters.

Will yon kindly remember us to all the precious ones who so generously assisted us in our time of greatest need last winter, some of whom have gone home to their eternal reward? I wish I could convey to you and all of them the gratitude we feel. As one who deeply feels the need of the prayers of the righteous, I again ask you to remember me at the throne of God's grace.

Your unworthy brother,

J. M. AMSBERRY.

DEAR BRETHREN:—I send this letter for publication in the SIGNS, and ask brother Thompson to copy it in the Primitive Monitor. It will be of general interest.

Your brother in hope,

SILAS H. DURAND.

THE FIRST AND SECOND RESURRECTION.

IN answer to brother W. M. Freeman, and the request of brother Chick in his editorial of September 25th, I desire to offer a few thoughts on the above caption, as the result of prayerful inquiry touching this most awfully sublime mystery, which seems to be an important point in the great plan of salvation; for "If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable." As a foundation for these thoughts see Revelation xx. 6: "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years." It is often easier to determine what is not the meaning of a portion of Scripture than what is. By reference to Matthew xxvii. 52, 53, in connection with Matthew xxviii. 6, we are forced to accept that previous to the burial of Jesus many of the saints arose and appeared to many in the holy city; and the third day afterward Jesus arose and appointed to meet his disciples in Galilee. This, I understand, is the first resurrection. These saints seem to be the first fruits of the harvest of the wheat; but to my mind it has seemed that in the strict sense of the Scripture Jesus is the first resurrection, and in him as the head of the body all the members of that body arose, and thus passed through the regeneration (from under the law of a carnal commandment) with him. Hence their names are written in the Lamb's book of life, and therefore they are blessed and holy; for they have part in the first resurrection, and on them the second death hath no power. By consulting John xi. 25, all this in few words, in answer to Martha the sister of Lazarus, is presented: "Jesus said unto her, I am the resurrection and the life," &c. This seems to settle the matter; for if Jesus is the resurrection, it must be that he is the first resurrection, and the power of the second resurrection, to which he alludes when he says, "Marvel not at this: for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation." This seems to point to that period of time alluded to by Paul, where in Acts xxiv. 15 it is recorded that in his defense before Felix he said, together with many other things, "And have hope toward God, which they themselves also allow, that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust." In the same defense Paul reasons of "righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come." Now, to my mind it seems quite plain that the time of the second resurrection is the second coming of Christ Jesus, when he shall come without sin unto salvation, and described by the apostle (1 Thess. iv. 13–18), "But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent them which are asleep. For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the Archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first: then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord. Wherefore comfort one another with these words." In 2 Peter iii. 3, 4, 7, we are informed that "there shall come in the last days scoffers, walking after their own lusts, and saying, Where is the promise of his coming? for since the fathers fell asleep all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation." "But the heavens and the earth, which are now, by the same word are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men." John admonishes his brethren as little children (1 John ii. 28), "And now, little children, abide in him; that, when he shall appear, we may have confidence, and not be ashamed before him at his coming." "John, to the seven churches which are in Asia: Grace be unto you, and peace, from him which is, and which was, and which is to come; and from the seven spirits which are before his throne," &c. "Behold, he cometh with clouds; and every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him: and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him. Even so. Amen."—Rev. i. 4, 7. But as to fixing any definite date for the fulfillment of these Scriptures we cannot; but as I have before said, that when we see the fig tree budding we know that summer is nigh. So also I see the condition of the witnesses before the God of the earth, and what seems to be the formation and near completion of the "image of the beast that was wounded by a sword and did live." I cannot help feeling that the shades of time are growing longer, and that in all probability there are but few more of our years of this the gospel day, when the mighty angel shall stand with one foot on the sea and one on the land, and cry with a loud voice that there shall be time no longer. Even so, come, Lord Jesus. Amen. It seems to me that from the language in 2 Peter iii. 7, this earth is kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men. It does not appear that the apostle saw anything to cause distress in the minds of the saints, but that the righteous judgment of God should be meted out to the ungodly. The earth is reserved unto fire; hence by the same mode of reasoning and argument we are assured that the saints are judged, acquitted, and therefore reconciled unto God by Jesus Christ, and in the new birth receive the evidence of that reconciliation, which is the earnest of their inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession, the resurrection of the body. For a definition of what body or kind of body it will be I shall refer the reader to 1 Corinthians xv. 35–38: "But some man will say, How are the dead raised up? and with what body do they come? Thou fool, that which thou sowest is not quickened except it die: and that which thou sowest, thou sowest not that body that shall be, but bare grain, it may chance of wheat, or of some other grain: but God giveth it a body as it hath pleased him, and to every seed his own body."

Brethren, these reflections are submitted, in hope that they may be instructive and comforting to all the saints.

PRONOUNCING BIBLES.

IN addition to the list of Bibles published on last page we wish to call especial attention to the PRONOUNCING BIBLES, containing Old and New Testaments, King James Version, with marginal references. All the proper names of every person or place in these Bibles are divided into syllables, and accented as they should be pronounced, enabling the reader to readily pronounce correctly the most difficult names of persons and places.

These books are 11x13 inches, and range in price from $5.50 to $20.00, according to binding, the contents of all being the same. The books being too large and heavy to be sent by mail, we will express them at our expense at the following prices, viz.:

No. 51. Bound in American Morocco, Arabesque, gilt edges, $5.50.

No. 53. French Morocco, padded, round corners, gilt edges, $8.00.

No. 55. Extra Morocco, beveled, rolled edge, gilt edges, $12.00.

No. 59. Levant Morocco, padded sides, raised bands, silk sewed, round corners, red under gold edges, $20.00.

For pulpit use these Bibles are especially adapted, and our brethren in the ministry would find it a great convenience to have one on the desk.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

Mrs. G. A. Witt died Nov. 6th, 1895, in her 67th year.

She was the oldest daughter of Thomas S. Foster, and was married to Bradford Witt in 1854. She leaves two children, Mr. Thomas Witt and Mrs. Lizzie Foster. She was a member of the Baptist Church, and the patience and meekness with which she bore five years of invalidism testify of the grace and comfort enjoyed by those who trust in God. She has gone home to meet her husband.

EMMA.

DIED—In Wicomico Co., Md., Oct. 2d, 1895, of paralysis of the brain, Mrs. Emily Lloyd, aged 50 years and 7 days.

Sister Lloyd was a faithful member of the Rewastico Church, having been baptized by Elder F. A. Chick in November, 1874. A full measure of the afflictions incident to this life fell to the lot of this dear sister, but she bore all her trials cheerfully and without complaint. She leaves two sons, one daughter and three grandchildren, with the church of which she was a highly esteemed member, three brothers and three sisters, besides numerous other relatives and friends, to mourn, but not as those who have no hope; for truly she was a living epistle, known and read of all men, in which were shown forth the praises of him who called her out of darkness into his own marvelous light. May the Lord comfort the dear bereaved children and brothers and sisters by a manifestation of his love and grace.

As ever, your brother in hope of salvation,

A. B. FRANCIS.

WILLARD, Va., Nov. 19, 1895.

IN the inscrutable providence of God I have been called to drink deeply of the bitter cup of affliction. In the city of Newark, N. J., on Sept. 11th, 1895, it pleased my heavenly Father to take from me my affectionate wife, Margarette Conklin, who for twenty-five years had been my bosom companion, the partner of my joys and sorrows. She was fifty-seven years of age.

Quite early in life, I believe, the Lord commenced a work in her, and as time rolled on, kept and sustained by an overruling hand, she passed through many seasons of sore trial and conflict with the enemy of all righteousness; and when, at about the age of twenty-eight, I think, she had reached that point in her experience when every avenue of light was closed, and the very blackness of darkness had enshrouded her, and, to her, hell seemed to be her portion, the Lord was pleased to manifest himself to her as her Savior and Redeemer. What a sudden and a glorious change! "For you I died," were the sweet and consoling words that came directly to her at this critical moment, helpless and hopeless as she lay groaning under the heavy weight of sin, and praying for the last time (as she thought) to the Lord for mercy, if mercy could possibly be extended to her. Now she could open the door of her father's dwelling and look out upon the field of golden grain that was fast ripening for the harvest, and that, with everything else that her eyes could behold in nature, was speaking forth the high praises of God. Soon after this she united with the New School Baptists, but the Lord did not permit her to rest long there. During the winter of 1868 and 1869 she had access to the SIGNS, from which she was not only pleased, but also to some extent relieved, to find her own peculiar trials and exercises told; for she was now comforted with the thought and the assurance that there were others who thought and believed as she did. Two years later, having taken up our residence near Warwick, Orange Co., N. Y., she attended meeting regularly at Warwick. Feeling at home here, and rejoicing in the glorious truth she heard, she felt to say, with Ruth to Naomi, "Entreat me not to leave thee, or to return from following after thee; for whither thou goest I will go, and where thou lodgest I will lodge; thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God." In the summer of 1871 she was baptized by Elder J. N. Badger, and united with the Warwick Old School Baptist Church. She was a firm believer in the doctrine of salvation by grace, and felt that nothing short of the atoning blood of Jesus could cleanse her from her sins, and fit her to be presented spotless before the Father's throne. Since the middle of March last she had been unable to do any housework, and had been regularly attended by a physician, who, after about four months' attendance, advised her to go to the hospital. Accordingly, on the 4th of September we took her to the hospital in this city, where she underwent a serious surgical operation on the 7th; and at ten o'clock on the morning of the 11th, without a struggle or a groan, and conscious of all that surrounded her, her spirit was wafted home, and she was forever released from all sorrow and pain.

Her funeral was held at Frenchtown, N. J., on Saturday, the 14th, where a comforting discourse was preached by Elder Bundy from Revelation xiv. 13. She leaves one brother and two sisters, with many other relatives and friends, to mourn; but our loss, though great, is her eternal gain. May God in his infinite mercy comfort and sustain us all in this sad hour of trial.

Your brother in deep affliction,

G. D. CONKLIN.

PICTORIAL HISTORY

OF THE

UNITED STATES.

By James D. McCabe.

This work is no dry mass of details—no bombastic effort to inflame the national pride, but a vivid and brilliant narrative of the events of our history, from the discovery of the American Continent down to thepresent time. It gives a most interesting account of the Indians of North America, from the time of the coming of the white men. The voyages of Columbus and explorations and discoveries of the different nations of Europe are related with graphic power. Every step of our colonial history is traced with patient fidelity, and the sources of those noble and, we trust, enduring institutions, which have made our country free and great, are shown with remarkable clearness. Then follows a clear and succinct account of our great Struggle for Independence, and the establishment of the Federal Union—the events of our career from the close of the Revolution to the administration of Harrison.

The work is printed from plain, new type, on fine calendered paper, and comprised in one octavo volume of 960 pages. It is splendidly embellished with nearly 500 fine engravings, embracing battles and other historical scenes, portraits of distinguished men, views of our principal cities, &c., &c.

Bound in Fine Silk Cloth, Plain Edges, $2.00, Post-paid.

POETRY.

THE SWEET OLD STORY.

READ me some message of comfort
While the sunset's tender light
Is paling away in the westward,
And heralding coming night.
I am aweary, aweary,
And I long for a word of peace,
That shall bid all these vexing worries
And fretting cares to cease.

Read to me of the Master,
Of the gracious truths he taught,
Of his mighty works of healing,
With love and mercy fraught;
Of his never-wearied patience,
His compassion and his care,
That never turned unheeding
From the poorest suppliant's prayer.

Yes, read to me of the Master,
For the story grows more dear
As the clouds grow dark above me,
And life seems bleak and drear.
When my heart is sore and wounded
It comes like a healing balm;
And over its griefs and tempests
It breathes a peaceful calm.

Now read me the dear old story
Of the love that is mighty to save,
And the never-failing forgiveness,
That I may grow strong and brave;
For how I have sinned and fallen
No one but Jesus knows,
And I long to taste the sweetness
That from his pardon flows.

Then I know that his love and mercy
Are still as strong and near,
And that my feeblest whisper
Will reach his listening ear;
And when I am sorely tempted,
Or sorrow doth befall,
I know that the loving Savior
Knoweth and pitieth all.

MINNIE E. KENNEY.

WHO WANT A SAVIOR?

WHO want a Savior? 'Tis the lost,
The afflicted and the tempest-toss'd;
The poor, the needy and the sad,
The soul distracted, almost mad.

Who want a Savior? 'Tis the sick,
The plagued, the leper and the weak;
The sinner overwhelmed with care,
And sorely tempted to despair.

Who want a Savior? 'Tis the meek,
With their whole heart who Jesus seek;
Who often inly cry and pray,
Although they know not what to say.

Who want a Savior? Those who fear
Christ will not for their help appear;
Who after him, through grace, inquire,
And whom to know their hearts' desire.

Who want a Savior? Those who know
The certainty of bliss and woe;
And oft shut up in unbelief,
Conclude of sinners they are chief.

Who want a Savior? Those who see
At times a glimpse of Calvary,
And, sweetly raised to hope, appear
Almost to see their interest clear.

These are the folk a Savior want,
And God their hearts' desires will grant;
A precious Savior they shall have,
Who from the lowest depths can save.

CORRESPONDENCE.

202 W. 119th St., NEW YORK, N. Y., June 25, 1895.

DEAR BROTHER COULTER:—I have been looking forward with much pleasure to meeting with the church on next Saturday, but circumstances are such as to forbid my indulging that expectation longer. Possibly next month I may escape from this city for a while, and with my wife visit you all once more. Assure Elder Badger, and all the dear ones in Salem Church, that they are, in loving remembrance, rarely absent from my thoughts. To you and many others I have wanted to write oftener than I have of late, but worldly cares, ill health and a barren mind have made such desires impracticable. Do you know what is to feel impressed to write to or and yet be destitute of anything write? And if in the attempt write there does occur a thoug how cold, unfeeling and lifeless t expression of it appears as you w it? To-day I have longed, as before, to be with you and hear y talk. That being impossible, I hav impatiently waited for night to come that I might write you some of my feelings lately; but night is here, and of all the barren, destitute and unfruitful frames of mind I have ever known, the present seems the gloomiest. Does a man's physical condition affect him to gain or loss in the enjoyment of spiritual things? I think not. "The flesh profiteth nothing." But if any man has ever tried to prove there was profit in the flesh, I am the man. A deceitful heart has many times suggested that my indisposition to read and meditate upon the Scripture truth, listen to preaching, or talk of spiritual things, was due to weariness of the flesh, and consequent dullness. And the temptation to believe it was usually encouraged by a remembrance of joyful times in the past when physically and mentally I was free from any ill. But it seems to me I know better now. I have proved that no man hath power over the Spirit; and I am persuaded that joys accounted for on the ground of a favorable physical capacity to enjoy them, are devices of the evil one. "Whatsoever is not of faith is sin;" and any sight, hearing, feeling, tasting or handling, not absolutely alone by faith, is sin. All my natural senses are profited only by evidences of experience—all seen evidences; whereas the child of God walks not by sight, but by the evidences of things not seen. To please God is the highest aspiration of every subject of redeeming love, and without faith it is impossible to please him. The life which we now live in the flesh, we live by the faith of the Son of God. Through faith we are saved by grace. By faith, through the Spirit, we wait for the hope of righteousness. When not mixed with faith, the word preached does not profit. By faith we inherit the promises. From faith to faith is the righteousness of God revealed. By faith God purifies our hearts. By our mutual faith we are comforted together. To be strong in faith gives glory to God. By faith we walk; by faith we stand; by faith we live. Our warfare is the fight of faith, and our faith is the victory that overcometh the world. Whatsoever is not of faith is contrary to the gospel of God our Savior. Obedience, love, works and all the blessed fruit of the Spirit, is experienced by faith. It is the work of ... that we believe on him whom ...e hath sent; and not only is this his commandment, but he works in us to love one another as he gave us commandment; "and he that keepeth his commandments dwelleth in him, and he in him; hereby we know that he abideth in us, by the Spirit which he hath given us."

The world tell us that some eighteen hundred years ago God was manifest in the flesh, appearing in the person of one called Jesus (by interpretation Savior of his people from their sins), and that the belief of this, together with sorrow because he was made to suffer for their sins, is evidence that they are his people, and are saved in thus believing. To believe something they know nothing about is what the world call saving faith. What rot such preaching is. A man may believe that which is absolutely true, but that by no means proves that the faith which actuates him in thus believing is the faith given God's people. The ground upon which we believe a matter to be true, is just what our evidence is, and nothing else. Reason, tradition, argument, or the testimony of those in whom I have the utmost confidence, may immovably establish me in a belief; but after all, there is but a natural faith in exercise, a belief induced by visible evidences. And being natural, it is fallible; for what two men are there in whom the motions of reason will bear fruit alike? Reason is no settled principle, and does not operate alike in all; hence it cannot be an evidence of truth, for truth is infallible. On the other hand, by that faith which is the gift of God no man can believe that which is false, or which may be false. It induces no belief except such as is founded upon truth; the revelation of God is its evidence. That faith, then, which is the gift of God, causes us to believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God; not because reason or training have taught us thus to believe, but because the God of truth, who cannot lie, whose "Word is truth," and the Spirit which gave it out is truth, hath revealed this thing to be so. The only way in which we are affected by the truth and authority of God is in our experience of "Thus saith the Lord," and, "The Lord hath spoken." The revelation which God is pleased to make of himself is the authority and ground of our belief.

What do we know about "God sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin, condemned sin in the flesh?" We know it by the faith of the Son of God; that is, unseen naturally, but visible to the spiritual vision, Christ is come in the flesh, for experimentally there is wrought in us by his Spirit the fellowship of his sufferings, death and resurrection.

Time is no factor in spiritual things. Were it so, then must all the ransomed church of God have experimentally suffered, died, and rose again with Christ some eighteen hundred years ago; whereas many have died, and many yet were not manifest in the flesh. As the salvation of God's people is a personal and individual one, then all must witness it; there must be a satisfying of all the spiritual senses that in Christ we are conformable unto his death, and know the power of his resurrection. This the patriarchs of old witnessed, testifying beforehand of the sufferings of Christ and the glory which should follow; and by this same faith we also now show forth the travel of our dear Redeemer; and yet unborn generations of Adam's race will, in the fullness of time, rejoice in the coming of our Lord. If, then, of his fullness we have received, we experimentally know what is the fellowship of his sufferings. We know what is the contradiction of sinners against himself; we know the carnal mind is enmity against God; we know that in our flesh there dwelleth no good thing; we know what doubt, fear, loneliness, temptation, heaviness and exceeding sorrow is; we know what it is to be without where to lay our head; to wander in a wilderness and find no city to dwell in; forsaken and rejected of men. Yet in all this is the life of our spirit; herein is our salvation; for in all our affliction he was afflicted, and the angel of his presence saves us. Surely Christ is come in the flesh when we are made partakers of his life and salvation by the indwelling of his Spirit.

It does seem that if one believes all this, that the inevitable result would be a sensible growth in overcoming the lusting of the flesh against the Spirit; but the more I consider it, the more I am convinced "there is no discharge in that war" of the flesh against the Spirit. We, who were enemies, are reconciled to God by the death of his Son; but it is by faith only we do know of this reconcilation. The things which are seen are temporal; therefore they must be carnal, fleshly, worldly things, for eternal things are unseen. Then, the things which are seen are opposed to those which are unseen; temporal things are, in fact, enmity against spiritual things. When we were enemies we lived upon and rejoiced in the things which are seen; how is it now? They are hateful to us, and we wish to be absent from them. All the world we know anything about is in our flesh; and when we look within we see the whole world lieth in wickedness; that it is enmity against God, is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be. To recognize this enmity is the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ shining in our hearts. The sin of the whole world is revealed by that light, and in consequent abhorrence of self we by faith glorify our Lord as the Savior of the whole world; for in him hath God reconciled the world unto himself.

Though I have already answered it, I will ask again, How are we, who were enemies, reconciled to God by the death of his Son? There is only one way in which an enemy can be reconciled, and that is by the abolishment of the enmity; for enmity is not susceptible to reconcilation or cure. It is only as we stand in Christ, we are reconciled unto God, Christ having abolished in his flesh the enmity, having slain the enmity, by the blood of the cross. In him we appear holy and without blame before God in love. He is our life; and where our life is, there are we also. If we are members of his body we must of necessity be where he is; we are partakers with him in all things. He has been and will be our dwelling place in all generations, and while he lives we shall live also. While we sojourn in this wretched body of death, the knowledge that the carnal mind is enmity against God will ever burden us; but inasmuch as we are partakers of Christ's sufferings, through his indwelling in our hearts by faith we rejoice in hope of the glory of God. By faith the world is overcome and the enmity thereof is slain. In the world we shall have tribulation; we shall fall into temptation; we shall be overcome; yet, though we fall, we shall not be utterly cast down, for greater is he that is in us than he that is in the world. Through him that loved us and gave himself for us we are more than conquerors. The world shall wreak all its enmity upon us, but in doing so it praises the God of our salvation; for when it can despoil us no more, when all its enmity is exhausted upon us, when its end is accomplished (then it ceases to be; the remainder of wrath is restrained), then he who is our life shall appear, and we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is. And where he is there are pleasures for evermore. Sorrow and sighing shall flee away; we shall be fed and led unto living fountains of waters, and God shall wipe away all tears from our eyes.

I know it is the common view of many that this blessed experience is only accomplished after we have departed this natural life, returned to dust from whence we came. I would not cause any one to err in this matter, but really I have never found any Scripture authority for such a view. I do believe, and I feel confident Scripture will uphold me, tha there are times in the experience o God's saints, of absence from t body and presence with the Lo when they are clothed upon w their house which is from hea and in the fruition of hope wi with unveiled face the appearin their Lord. Do I speak with author ity? I do not know. I have thought I knew something about Paul's ex perience in Romans xii., but I do not know; it is something I cannot explain to myself, let alone others. Nevertheless I have this persuasion, that God is not restricted as to time, circumstances, or any other thing, when it is, or shall be, his pleasure to delight his saints with the sight of his unutterable glory.

A commendable trait in a letter-writer is to quit when he is through. You have found out by this time that I am not guilty of any such weakness. I have written a long, rambling, disconnected letter, and you must be tired of it. If I could but have expressed myself as I would like, I would be content to close without apology. I find that it becomes harder and harder with me to express myself, either in speech or letter; and the harder it grows, it seems the more eager I am to voice the honors of my Savior's name. If saved at all it is to the praise of the glory of God's grace. No credit is due to me. I have never given up anything willingly, nor put anything away from me, but have rebelled bitterly at the unseen power which stripped me of those things which the Lord saw was good for me not to have. Just at present I do not feel to regret anything which has come to pass in my life. I feel that thus far the Lord hath led me; but there is a certain fearful looking forward, lest I may yet fall by the way. I cannot prepare myself for coming trials, I know not what they shall be; yet they are sure to come; for is it not declared, "The Lord shall bring upon thee days that have not come?" My pilgrimage thus far has been chiefly in desert places, relieved very seldom by oases of comfort or manifest joys. Bitterly I rebel at times, and conclude that the Lord never knew me, else he would grant me more often relief from tribulation, in the comfort of an assured hope of life in Jesus. And yet, why should I expect comfort in this world? If the pleasures I seek are such as I may rejoice in without sin, then they are not joys of this world; the joy of this world is carnal and unlawful, while only the pure and spiritual can suit my soul. Why should I expect comfort in this world? Can I hope, or even desire, to go through the valley of tears singing, or to dwell in the house of mourning laughing? Would I fare better than him who was a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief? shall I be a stranger to it? Would I go through one heaven to another, when it is through much tribulation I must enter the kingdom? Can I be easy and contented in a country where my Lord is not, where his enemies cry, "We will not have this man to reign over us?" In the world we shall have tribulation; the world is too barren a soil to bear true joy. But in this our comfort lies, that though in the world we do have tribulation, yet in Christ we are of good cheer, because he has overcome the world. At times we are made to triumph in our trouble by the comforting reflection that the afflictions I feel to-day I shall feel again no more forever; that is, in their first onset; though we may feel the effects of them for many days. In a natural sense can I weep over a parent dying twice? or can I twice attend the funeral of a friend? No more can I feel tomorrow the afflictions I feel to-day; they do not repeat themselves. Though the shower be heavy on me, yet to my comfort the clouds shall not return after the rain. And though clouds and darkness, tempest and storm, should fill my sky all the days of my life, yet my hope shall brighten, in confidence that though weeping shall endure for a night, joy cometh in the morning. If I bear about in the body the dying of the Lord Jesus, that the life also of Jesus might be made manifest in my mortal flesh, then in fellowship I am made conformable unto his death. I am appointed to die once; and "If we be dead with Christ, we believe that we shall also live with him: knowing that Christ being raised from the dead dieth no more; death hath no more dominion over him. For in that he died, he died unto sin once; but in that he liveth, he liveth unto God." Our Lord suffered and atoned once for all the sins of his people. The manifestation of his life in us is our fellowship with his sufferings and death. In such measure as the Spirit of Christ is in us, in like measure does faith make present in our experience the dying of our Lord; therefore as we grow in his knowledge we die daily. But that grace which is ministered to us in enduring the affliction of to-day, is never required to sustain us again in that particular trial. The song of the redeemed is an ever new song of victory. Their growth in grace is marked by new trials, new revelations of all-sufficient grace. By faith we are made conformable unto the death and resurrection of our Lord; for "it is Christ that died, yea rather, that is risen again, who is even at the right hand of God, who also maketh intercession for us." That Spirit which Christ had without measure, we have in measure; therefore we know only in part. Here a little and there a little are we perfected in the knowledge of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ. One with the Captain of our salvation, we are made perfect through sufferings; but every man in his own order: Christ the first-fruits; afterwards they that are Christ's at his coming. And has he not come in the flesh, when we by faith show forth his life? And if that Spirit of life makes manifest the things that are reproved, shall that death which we suffer in the thing reproved ever again be suffered? Our troubles diminish in the enduring, but our consolations are of another nature. Like the foam of a river, affliction perishes as we pass over, and can be found no more; but the comforts of Israel's God are like Israel's stream in the wilderness that followed them all the way. "Our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." A little more suffering and our afflictions are no more; the infinite consolations are ours for evermore. Our affliction is light, for it passes never to return; while heaven, which is righteousness, peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost, abides in us, never to remove or pass away. The saints do glory in tribulation; for it is when shut up in the deeps of affliction, when set in dark places as the dead, when hedged about that they cannot get out, that they have their eyes on God alone, who alone can bring them out of the horrible pit, out of the miry clay. It is then their affection is set upon things above, while the world with all its vanities is cut off on every side. "To this man [saith the Lord] will I look, even to him that is poor, and of a contrite spirit;" a spirit broken with affliction; with such he will dwell, to revive the hearts of the contrite ones.

Again, in the dark nights of adversity there are beauties seen that were never seen in the broad day of prosperity. Manasseh, all the time he reigned in Judah, though it was a land of light, never knew God till he was taken among the thorns, bound in fetters, and carried to Babylon, where he prayed, was heard, pardoned and liberated; and "then Manasseh knew that the Lord he was God." Thus in the depths of affliction he learned that which he could not attain to when seated on a throne. Affliction is also a time of solitude, for the man sitteth alone; but God setteth the solitary in a family, even in the family of heaven, and comforts them with his own children. In no place better than in the profound depth do we see the love, the goodness, the merey and wisdom of God, the excellency of his law, the beauty of heavenly things, the danger of prosperity, the deceitfulness of riches, and the vanity of created things.

Forgive me for trying your patience so long. Remember me in love to all your family. I trust you will have a profitable meeting. I regret more than I can express my inability to be with you.

In the hope of life in Jesus, I am, in love, your brother,

JOHN McCONNELL.

COLFAX, Pa.

DEAR BROTHER JOHN McCLELLAN:—As I have promised it, I will send you the following, but it is simply because I promised it. Knowing me as you do, I do not think you can have much confidence in or fellowship for me, nor for any thing I may write. I scarcely know how or where to begin. From my earliest recollection of any thought of God I believe I thought of him with a natural fear. I always had a dread of the world coming to an end, and of hell and everlasting punishment. Any unusual appearance of the clouds, or a storm of any kind, especially a thunder storm, had a very depressing effect upon my mind. My fears and musings then (and as they yet are) were not always very consistent. Though I very much feared everlasting punishment, yet it seemed to me if I would only die before the world came to an end it would not be so hard. I think all these fears were only natural, and have often wondered if every one, even those who never experienced the new birth, are not exercised similarly.

My life, from the time I was between three and four years old, until I was fourteen, was spent in Altoona, Pa. I think I was an average girl, not so good as some, nor as bad as some. I was very fond of having a good time, but my conscience would often check me, and I would think I would do better. Little troubles in school and with my playmates would often perplex me, and I would think how easy it would have been for them not to have happened, if this or that had only been done; but then I would think they did or did not do it, as they case might be, and that it must have been "to be so." I do not know that I reason yet with any more wisdom.

Sometimes during religious revivals some of my schoolmates would go forward to the mourner's bench, and would urge me to go too. I remember one meeting in particular, when quite a number went, and were afterward received into the New School Baptist Church. I almost got up to go with them, but somehow I did not. I spoke to my mother about it, and I remember feeling vexed that she did not encourage me much. At that time she did not hold membership with any church, but had been a member of the Methodists. She has since joined the Old School Baptists. During this time my father was doing well in business, and being a contractor had gone in debt, for others more than himself. Times were getting dull, and in the fall of 1876 we came back to the valley where father was born. Soon after our home in the city was sold. It was hard for us to give up these things, but being young our grief was not much, compared with the real affliction it was to our parents. There are seven children of us, myself the oldest. My father's youngest sister was in need of a girl, so I went to live with her. This was in November, and about the holidays my aunt died. It was hard for my uncle to get any one to keep his house, so concluded to try to do with me. The family consisted of grandpa, two children, uncle and myself. I stayed and kept house as best I could for about a year and four months, when my uncle's sister came and took charge of the house. During this time I do not remember having any unusual feelings in regard to religion. I would think sometimes that I would be a christian after a while, and I always meant to be better than a good many christians I knew, who did many things I would not do. I often wonder if the same things are not thought of me now.

Some time after leaving my uncle's home I went to live with a lady whose husband preaches occasionally for the Methodists. Mrs A. is a lovely lady, and she treated me very kindly. My health was not very good, and I soon came home and went to school. I afterward went back and stayed with Mrs. A. until late in the next fall. She would often tease me, and call me a "Hard-shell," but treated me very kindly. In the spring I went to live with a lady who had been a neighbor of ours. Soon after I went there grandpa died, and his death made me feel very sad. The pleasures of this world were somehow beginning to not quite satisfy me. While I was usually cheerful and contented, yet often I could not find pleasure in things I once did. I began to read the Bible, and seldom neglected reading before retiring, although Mr. W. always had family worship. I was quite zealous in Sunday School, and was finally given a class of girls a little younger than myself. It is quite doubtful if I knew as much as they did. Mr. W. was a very devout man, and it seemed to please him that I cared for such things. He would often ask me questions and explain things for me, and sometimes I thought I could understand a little. Often a hymn or part of a prayer would seem to be the language of my heart, although I could not have expressed it myself. That is often the way now when I read or hear some feeling expressed. I know, if I know anything, that I have felt the same.

Part of the next winter I spent in Altoona and went to school the remainder of the winter. I lived with our nearest neighbor a part of the next summer. All this time the desire for a better life and a knowledge of heavenly things bore on my mind at times. Mrs. A. knowing that I was anxious to attend school, recommended me to a friend of hers who lived in a village about two miles from their home. It was a very good place, and they were very kind to me, but I felt homesick almost from the first, and wept very much of the time for the first three days. I think it was about eight months before Mrs. F. made any inquiry as to the cause of my swollen eyes or showed in any way that she noticed I was homesick. Perhaps she thought that the best way; but had she known, I think she could have made a very devoted servant of me by a few kind words of sympathy. I did try to be faithful, and she treated me kindly, but I never felt quite at home. I was usually alone, and often felt very lonely. I continued to read the Bible, attended Sunday School and meeting, and often tried to pray. In October I came home to attend the association. My father was not then a member of the church, but was a Baptist in sentiment, and we always attended the associations and usually went to meeting on the fourth Sunday of each month. So I knew something of the Baptists, and now think I always had a warmer feeling for them than for any other church, though I had no thought of ever joining them. While attending the meetings during the association I could not refrain from weeping, and remained outside during several of the sermons. On Sunday Elder Funk preached from Isa. lv. 1, "Ho, every one that thirsteth," &c. I felt, O! if I could only come; if I only knew how to come. I did so long for the love of Jesus. I did not now feel so much concerned about escaping everlasting punishment, but I did long to be good, and to feel that Jesus loved me, and to find favor in his sight. These thoughts were uppermost in my mind most of the time now, I think. Sometime in December, I think it was, I went to spend the day with my friend Mrs. A. Her church was holding a protracted meeting in the village, but I had not been attending it. Her oldest daughter was forward at the mourner's bench, and the conversation naturally turned to such things. I told Mrs. A. something of my exercises of mind. It was the first I had mentioned my troubles to any one. My burden was growing very heavy. She wanted me to go to the meeting with them that evening, which I did. I could not keep back the tears during the services. Mrs A. came to me and wanted to take me to the mourner's bench, but I wanted to go of my own accord if I went. I did not believe that was necessary then nor at any time. But I thought perhaps my pride was in the way; that I was too proud to let the world know my condition. I felt that I was willing to do any thing. The next night I went to the meeting and went forward, but could not seem to even mourn. I felt sad and desolate. The members were very kind. The minister would talk, and sometimes read to me, but all was dark and I could not understand. Some would tell me that all I needed was just to believe. How willingly would I have believed; but I did not know how. Some said I must forsake every thing. I felt that I could gladly give up any thing and every thing if only I could feel that my sins were pardoned and that Jesus loved me. There was one lady I became accquainted with during the meeting who seemed to understand my feelings. She told me how dark it had all been to her. She would always stop for me on her way to meeting, and also come home with me. She would tell me of passages of Scripture that had been a comfort to her, but I could get no comfort from them. I felt that my case was different.

One Monday while about my work a sweet feeling of rest and peace came over me. My trouble was gone, but I could not tell what caused it. I felt more like rejoicing than mourning. The words of the Bible were sweet to me; and when I read the words of James, when he says, "The wisdom that is from above is first pure, then peaceable," I thought, Surely this is from above. I felt this peace and quiet for several days, when my mind was seized with such darkness that I did not know what to do. What had I done? Satan suggested many things, but I did not recognize him, nor think but what the suggestions were right; that it was because I had not been as careful as I ought, and had not read the Bible as much as I should, and neglected to pray. I would often leave my work and go to try and pray. I would read at night, and whenever I could, but I could find little comfort. My mind continued in this way for about a month. I tried to be very careful every day to not do or say anything wrong; but I found I could not be awake one hour without sinning, if not in deed, in thought. One Saturday morning I felt that my burden was more than I could bear; but I felt entirely helpless. If I were utterly

JOHN XVI. 8-11.

DEAR BROTHER CHICK:—Will you be so kind as to write an article for the SIGNS on the following text? "And when he is come, he will reprove the world of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment: of sin, because they believe not on me; of righteousness, because I go to my Father, and ye see me no more; of judgment, because the prince of this world is judged."—John xvi. 8-11. I heard a so-called Primitive Baptist preach from this text some time since, and he said that the Holy Ghost convinced every one of sin, and that everybody could accept or reject the gospel at any time. I do not think that any one can accept the gospel until quickened into divine life, and that Christ quickens whom he will. I would be glad if you would give as full an explanation of the text as God may give you light and liberty, and you will oblige one who desires to know the truth.

Your brother in hope of eternal life,
ROTEN HURST.

PATTONSVILLE, Va., Oct. 21, 1895.

REPLY.

Whatever the preacher whom brother Hurst heard comment upon the text named by him may have claimed to be does not matter. If he preached the sentiments named above he is not a Primitive or Old School Baptist, because these sentiments are the exact opposite of those which are held by us. The Holy Ghost does not convict or convince every one of sin, righteousness or judgment; and the gospel is not an offer of salvation presented for the acceptance or rejection of any one. The meaning of the term "gospel" is simply "the good news," and not an offer of salvation. When the Holy Ghost truly convinces a man of sin it always has the same effect as that produced upon the day of Pentecost upon those who were pricked in the heart; they cry out in distress, "What must we do?" Whatever the text referred to by our brother may mean, it does not mean anything contrary to the truth of the finished work of Christ, nor the effectual work of the Spirit in the heart.

But to turn to the text named and to its connection. Jesus said (verse 7), "It is expedient for you that I go away: for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you; but if I depart, I will send him unto you." In a certain sense the Holy Spirit, the Spirit of truth, the Comforter, had not been in the world as he was now to be. The Holy Spirit had been in the world, and had operated in the hearts of men before, but not as he was now to be in the world after the ascension of our risen Lord. Jesus brought peculiar blessings to those who believed on him. For the ushering in of the gospel day God had reserved some better thing. There was to be a clearer revelation of his will at the coming of his Son than had ever been before. The Savior also declared that the peculiar work of the Holy Spirit should be, not to testify of himself, but of Christ. "He shall take of the things of mine, and shall show them unto you." This is his work. He speaks of nothing, he reveals nothing, outside of Jesus. This we need not do more than call attention to; and the reason why we do call attention to it is this, that we would enforce the thought that all that is involved in verses eight, nine and ten is true in Jesus Christ. We mean that the Comforter is testifying of Christ when he reproves the world of sin, righteousness and judgment, as well as at any other time or under any other circumstances. In fact, we are not sure that we ought to use the expression, "at any other time or under any other circumstances;" for it has seemed to us that the expressions in these three verses cover in substance all that the Holy Spirit does in revealing Christ.

It seems to us that the substance of the truth that is taught in the text and connection is that when the Holy Spirit testifies of Christ, the effect of this testimony is always to reprove (convict) the world of sin, righteousness and judgment. These things can never be separated from the revelation of Christ. If any man knows Christ, he must know what sin, righteousness and judgment mean. The very name Jesus could have no meaning except in connection with these things. If any man preaches Christ, he must of necessity preach these things also. In Christ we come to see and understand what sin, righteousness and judgment mean more clearly; and through an experience of these things Jesus is continually exalted. What meaning has the name and the sufferings and the work of the blessed Redeemer to any one but to a convicted sinner, convinced that because of his sin he is justly condemned by the righteous law of God? So the Comforter, when he testifies of Jesus, testifies of sin and righteousness and judgment also.

Before considering the three things named here, each one by itself, we desire to call attention to the word "world." "He will reprove [convict] the world." In the whole life and testimony of our blessed Lord there is a condemnation of the world. The world does not know this in any sense that humbles or brings it to repentance. Yet when Jesus was preaching and living out his own gospel in the days of his flesh the world hated him, and knew that it hated him. There was that in him to which the world never could be reconciled. Infinite holiness in him stirred up the enmity of the world. His words, his works, his very presence, condemned it. The world was convicted of its sin by his coming and presence. Men's hearts were not changed by his coming. He but stirred up into life and action the evil that was already in the world. In his betrayal and crucifixion it was seen that they hated him without a cause, and they but filled up the measure of the iniquity of their fathers. Now the Holy Spirit but carries on the same work. It, as the Spirit of truth, still testifies of Jesus, and still the world has no use for the gospel; and as the world still rejects Jesus with scorn and contumely, they are judged, and it is shown that they are sinners, and that God is righteous altogether in their judgment. This is not what is called gospel condemnation; that is, that men are lost because they reject the gospel. But it does declare that their hatred and opposition to the gospel is full proof of their lost and sinful condition. It seems to us that it is in this sense that the world is reproved of sin, &c. Just as when Isaiah saw the Lord upon a throne, high and lifted up, and heard the cry of the seraphim, saying, "Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty," he cried out not only, "I am a man of unclean lips," but he also said, "I dwell among a people of unclean lips," &c. The same thing that convinced him of his own sin convinced him of the sin of all the rest. The rest did not see the vision, and so did not realize the condemnation; but Isaiah realized the sin of the world as well as his own. This is in harmony with the testimony of Paul, that Jews and Gentiles are all alike sold under sin, and that believers were by nature the children of wrath, even as others. We would further say that it is sure that the real meaning of Jesus in the text is fulfilled to the very letter. We know that it is not true that all men feel the burden and condemnation of sin. On the contrary, a large portion of mankind are totally ignorant of what sin against God means, totally ignorant that any such being ever lived as Christ, and are utterly careless as to such matters. They are not reproved personally of sin, righteousness and judgment. Therefore the text cannot mean any such thing as a personal conviction of every man, woman and child in the world.

But we leave these reflections to turn more especially to the three words, sin, righteousness and judgment, themselves. "Of sin, because they believe not on me." As we remarked before, the very name Jesus could have no meaning except as we also know what sin is. His name is what it is because, and only because, he shall save his people from their sins. The very name and being of Jesus imply the existence of sin, as much as payment implies a debt, or water implies thirst. If the Holy Spirit testifies of Jesus at all, it testifies of him as the Savior of sinners. He is the Comforter solely because he reveals Jesus to the broken-hearted sinner as his Savior, and shows that sinner that with Jesus there is plenteous redemption. As Jesus is of God made unto us wisdom, righteousness, sanctification and redemption, so it is implied that we need all these things; and the office of the Holy Spirit is to take of these things and show them unto us. When these things are shown to the sinner who is sensible of his sins, he can but believe them, receive them, and rejoice in them. This is the evidence of his salvation. He believes on Jesus, and is no more counted as unholy, but holy in Christ his Savior. But the ungodly world believes not on Jesus, and this is the proof of its ungodly, impenitent state. If the world were of God, it would believe on his Son, who is God manifest in the flesh. The fact that it does not believe on Jesus is the proof that it still lies in wickedness. Here is the touchstone which divides between true disciples and the world. As the Holy Spirit, the Comforter, takes of the things of Jesus and witnesses to them, there is a division made manifest. Some cannot but believe, while many reject and scorn the testimony. This is the proof that they are yet in their sins. Having never learned what sin is, they have no use for Jesus. They are yet in their sins. It seems to us that thus does the Holy Spirit convince the world of sin.

"Of righteousness, because I go to my Father, and ye see me no more." It is no more sure that the Comforter reproves the world of sin, than that it also sets forth or testifies to the righteousness of Christ. Under the old dispensation the righteousness of God was clearly set forth in the law. Now it is the peculiar work of the Comforter to testify of the righteousness of Christ, by which alone any sinner can be justified; and the one chief evidence that Jesus is the spotless, sinless one, is to be found in the fact that he could not be holden by death, but has arisen from the dead and gone to his Father, so that in his flesh he is seen on earth no more. Still farther, the Holy Spirit sets forth the holy life of Jesus, and afterward his death, and his resurrection from the dead, as being that perfect obedience by which the law was magnified and made honorable, being fulfilled to the letter, and also in its spirit; and by which also the sins of his people are covered, and they are counted righteous. Just so far as the sinner is convinced of sin will he also be convinced of his need of righteousness; and as the Holy Spirit convinces him of his sin, so on the other hand does it reveal to him and convince him of his need of the spotless righteousness of Christ. The fact that Jesus went to his Father proves that his righteousness was complete; and as he came as our surety to bear our sins and redeem us from all iniquity, that he might present us faultless before his Father, his going to his Father proves that his work in our behalf was accepted, and that we are complete in him, or righteous in him. This the Holy Spirit, the Comforter, sets forth for the hope of believers and the glory of God.

"Of judgment, because the prince of this world is judged." We have understood by the expression, "the prince of this world," that spirit by which this world is governed. It is the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience. This spirit once ruled in us all. We would further say that the word "judgment" here means the judgment of condemnation; and so the real meaning of the text is that in Jesus is set forth not only the perfect righteousness of God, but also the condemnation of this world, or of that spirit by which it is ruled. There is no exception to this. Whether the spirit of the world manifests itself in the shape of outbreaking sin, or in the shape of Pharisaical righteousness and self-confident boasting, in either case it is utterly condemned. What a volume of meaning there is in the expression of the apostle when he testifies of Jesus that he "condemned sin in the flesh!" In his life and in his death alike he condemned the spirit of the world. All judgment was committed to him; and he said, "For judgment am I come into the world." When the Holy Spirit sets before us the perfect life and teachings of the Son of God, it is to the condemnation of all that is earthly. "The prince of this world is judged." In the heart of every one to whom Jesus is revealed there is also a convincing sense of this same judgment; and at the end, in all christian experience, this threefold work shall be completed. Sin and righteousness and judgment! What solemn words they are! What fullness of meaning is in them! The world is condemned; and yet right here is the believer's hope assured, and the certainty of his salvation made plain. All is in Jesus, and all is complete in him, and all his people are complete in him.

PLEASE BE SURE

IN sending remittances for renewals of subscriptions to give us the same name in which the paper is already coming. If the party is married, and the paper is coming in the wife's name, and we receive remittance to renew the subscription, and the husband's name is given, we have no means of knowing that it is meant for the subscription in the wife's name; consequently the husband's name is entered on our list, and the paper sent to both parties. Or if the paper is coming in the husband's name, and the renewal is sent in the wife's name, the same thing is likely to occur. It is a good plan to inclose in the letter one of the little pink slips containing the name, taken either from the margin of the paper or from the wrapper in which the paper comes.

EZEKIEL XVIII. 31, 32.

"CAST away from you all your transgressions, whereby ye have transgressed; and make you a new heart and a new spirit: for why will ye die, O house of Israel? For I have no pleasure in the death of him that dieth, saith the Lord God: wherefore turn yourselves, and live ye."

We can no more rest in withholding such views as we have on the Scriptures from our brethren, when they call for them through our columns, than we can in withholding our understanding of the Scriptures from them through the pulpit. We have ourself been greatly edified, instructed and comforted by the communication of the views of our brethren, both through the pulpit and the press. We believe that God has provided gifts in his church for edifying the body in love, and that he has not only enjoined on those to whom he has given light to let their light so shine, and not conceal it under a bushel, but that he has often communicated light to his children through the use of those gifts. But we wish it always understood that while we write or preach, the Lord has enjoined it on the saints to judge of what we write and preach, and they are bound to try what we utter by the word and Spirit of the Lord; and so far as we are sustained by the Scriptures of truth and by the experience of the saints we shall hav their fellowship, and wherein we a not sustained by divine authori they are bound to reject our tes mony.

The passage proposed for cons eration is one on which many hones hearted inquirers after truth hav been greatly perplexed, and many Arminians have exultingly quoted in defense of their doctrine of conditional offers of salvation to all men. It is not difficult, however, for those who have been attentive readers of the Scriptures, and whose minds have been enlightened by the Holy Ghost, to discover that in this text, and in the whole chapter from which it is quoted, the nature of the law and its special claims on the nation of ancient Israel are prominently brought to view. That this chapter sets forth the claims of the law, and not the provisions of the gospel, will be seen, if we observe the following characteristic particulars.

First. It demands everything of, and furnishes nothing to, the guilty Israelites; whereas the gospel invariably furnishes everything necessary to justification before God to the guilty, and demands nothing of them as a condition, means or aid.

Second. All the terms and conditions expressed or implied in this text and chapter are the same that usually accompany the law of the Sinai covenant, and such as never accompany the gospel. "The soul that sinneth it shall die," was the declaration of the law of national Israel, and this is the emphatic language of this chapter; but the provisions of the new covenant to spiritual Israel are, "I will be merciful to their unrighteousness, and their sins and their iniquities I will remember no more," as saith the Lord God.

Third. The express provisions of the legal covenant to Israel, to whom alone that covenant was given, were conditional. If the Israelites obeyed all the provisions of that covenant the Lord promised to give them corn and wine and oil, and to fight their battles, and secure them from famine and from pestilence; but if they disobeyed this law he would send the famine, sword and pestilence, and they should be cut off and die. But all the promises of the gospel to spiritual Israel are in Christ Jesus yea, and in him amen, to the glory of God by them.

Fourth. The demands against Israel in this chapter are like all the demands of the law of God against sinners, such as no sinner is able to comply with; and in the text before us the utter inability of every sinner to satisfy the demands made must be perfectly plain to every soul that knows the spirituality of the law and the total depravity of fallen human nature. What sinner is able to put away all his transgressions? Job could not, even when he used snow water, and made himself never so clean. David could not, when he used nitre and much soap. The prophet of the Lord assures us that the Ethiopian can as easily change the color of his skin, and the leopard his spots; and yet the law demands at this shall be done or the sinner shall die! Now, supposing the sinner could comply with this first requisition of the law, and put away all his transgressions whereby he has ever transgressed the law of God, how, think ye, is he going to succeed with the second and the third, to make him a new heart and a new spirit? The demand is not merely to repair the old heart and reform the old spirit; they must be made new outright, or the sinner must die; there is no alternative provided by the law.

Fifth. The Lord positively promised that the new covenant which he would make with his people should not be like the covenant which he made with Israel when he took them by the hand to lead them out of Egypt; but the terms of this chapter are precisely like that covenant; therefore this chapter belongs to the old, and not to the new or gospel covenant. The death of the guilty sinner that dieth gives no pleasure to God; but as his law is founded in justice, divine justice demands that the sinner shall die. Nor can one single sinner escape; for God is a jealous God, and through his law he will in no wise clear the guilty.

It is clearly demonstrated that "By the deeds of the law no flesh living shall be justified." "For if a law had been given that could have given life, then verily righteousness should have been by the law." By this specimen of the law in this eighteenth chapter of Ezekiel all who have spiritual discernment must see that it makes no provision for saving the guilty; but it positively enacts that every sinner shall die. It demands, on pain of certain death, a complete separation from sin, a new heart and a new spirit. All these must be provided, or the law will not suffer the wretched delinquent to live.

Some of the Israelites sought for this deliverance from death and preparation for life, "as it were by the deeds of the law; for they stumbled at that stumbling-stone."—Rom. ix. 32. "For they, being ignorant of God's righteousness, and going about to establish their own righteousness, have not submitted themselves unto the righteousness of God."—Rom. x. 3. "What then? Israel hath not obtained that which he seeketh for; but the election hath obtained it, and the rest were blinded."—Rom. xi. 7. Now, in all candor we ask, In what respect do the Arminians of this nineteenth century differ in their manner of seeking for justification, from the carnal Israelites of whom Paul wrote these things? If modern work-mongers are not stumbling at the same stumbling-stone, namely, seeking for justification by the deeds of the law, why are they so much more partial to Ezekiel xviii. 31, 32, than to Ezekiel xxxvi. 25–30? The former of these Scriptures sums up the demands of the inflexible law of God; the latter shows by whom the demands of this law are met and canceled. The law of God in the first demands, in order to Israel's deliverance from death, that all her transgressions shall be put away; the latter Scripture shows the provision which God has made, for his own holy name's sake, for satisfying this demand of the holy law. "Then will I sprinkle clean water upon you, and ye shall be clean: from all your filthiness, and from all your idols, will I cleanse you." This meets the first requisition of the holy law as set forth in the other text, and shows that God, and God alone, is able to provide a way to purge his people from their sins. The blood of Christ cleanseth from all sin. By one offering Christ has perfected forever all them that are sanctified. Thus the first demand of the law is met and canceled by our Lord Jesus Christ on the part of his people, "for he shall save his people from their sins." But the putting away of sin was not all that was necessary to prepare us for the enjoyment of spiritual things. "Make you a new heart and a new spirit," says Ezekiel xviii. 31, or you must die. "A new heart also will I give you, and a new spirit will I put within you," says God, in Ezekiel xxxvi. 26. How perfectly do the provisions of grace, as exhibited in the gospel, meet all the demands of the law. Is a new heart demanded? "I will give you a new heart," says the God of grace. Is a new spirit required, which the helpless sinner is unable to supply? "A new spirit will I put within you," says God.

But do we inquire, What is to become of the old heart? "I will take away the stony heart out of your flesh," says God, "and I will give you a heart of flesh." But what kind of a spirit does God in the gospel promise to give? Is it to be any way different from that which we derived from Adam? Hear the answer of the Lord: "I will put my Spirit within you, and cause you to walk in my statutes, and ye shall keep my judgments, and do them. And ye shall dwell in the land that I gave to your fathers; and ye shall be my people, and I will be your God. I will also save you from all your uncleanness."

We might extend our remarks, but perhaps enough is written to express our views on the subject proposed to satisfy our friend; and truly we believe that every heaven-born child, in comparing the rigorous demands of the law of God with the rich provisions of grace and mercy in the gospel, will say with the poet,

"Go, ye that trust upon the law,
And toil, and seek salvation there;
Look to flames that Moses saw,
And shrink and tremble and despair.

"But I'll retire beneath the cross;
Savior, at thy dear feet I'll lie;
And the keen sword that Justice draws,
Flaming and red, shall pass me by."

PRONOUNCING BIBLES.

IN addition to the list of Bibles published on last page we wish to call especial attention to the PRONOUNCING BIBLES, containing Old and New Testaments, King James Version, with marginal references. All the proper names of every person or place in these Bibles are divided into syllables, and accented as they should be pronounced, enabling the reader to readily pronounce correctly the most difficult names of persons and places.

These books are 11x13 inches, and range in price from $5.50 to $20.00, according to binding, the contents of all being the same. The books being too large and heavy to be sent by mail, we will express them at our expense at the following prices, viz.:

No. 51. Bound in American Morocco, Arabesque, gilt edges, $5.50.

No. 53. French Morocco, padded, round corners, gilt edges, $8.00.

No. 55. Extra Morocco, beveled, rolled edge, gilt edges, $12.00.

No. 59. Levant Morocco, padded sides, raised bands, silk sewed, round corners, red under gold edges, $20.00.

For pulpit use these Bibles are especially adapted, and our brethren in the ministry would find it a great convenience to have one on the desk.

HOLIDAY PRESENTS.

To our brethren and friends who may be contemplating making "Holiday Presents" we suggest that they look over our list of Bibles, Hymn Books, Concordances, Histories and other books, and see if they cannot find what they want.

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE.

TO MOST of our readers the above mentioned book is too well known to need any introduction or a description by us. While many of the Bibles have a Concordance appended, they are generally so condensed or abridged as to be of little or no use. Cruden's Complete Concordance, however, enables one to readily turn to any passage of Scripture of which they can call to mind two or three words, and in our opinion is the most complete and convenient as a reference book of any published. In addition, it contains many other aids in studying the Bible, as may be seen by reference to advertisement on last page. Remember, both the books there mentioned are CRUDEN'S COMPETE.

WHAT CAN WE DO?

ON our list of several thousands of subscribers occur the names of persons of all dispositions and temperaments. Some are so sensitive that if we discontinue their paper at the expiration of the time paid for they will take offense. Others, if we continue the paper to them after the expiration of their subscription, and they become indebted to us for their paper, will censure us, and repudiate the account on the ground that they did not order it continued on credit. We print plainly next to the name of each subscriber the time at which their subscription expires; and if each will take the trouble to look at this date next to their name on the little pink slip pasted either on the margin of every paper they receive, or on the wrapper in which their paper comes, they can plainly see at what time their subscription expires, or has already expired. If any fail to notify us to discontinue their paper when the time is out, and continue to take the paper from their post-office, it is their christian duty to pay for it. There is no justice in holding us responsible for their neglect. Will each one after reading this notice please turn to their date on the little pink slip mentioned above, and if they find their time has expired, and they do not wish to ntinue the paper after their time out, please to so inform us and re- t for their back dues?

We never intentionally continue ding the paper to a person longer an they desire to receive it; but w are we to know by looking over r list of thousands of names, scattered all over the United States, just which ones wish their paper discontinued, and which will be offended, and think we stopped their paper "because we were afraid to trust them?" For nearly sixty-three years the paper has been sent to its patrons regardless of the date to which their subscription was paid; but within the last few years we have had so many thousands of dollars worth of accounts repudiated on the ground that "they never ordered the paper continued after the time paid for had expired," that we are seriously embarrassed by the loss. We have tried to bear these losses patiently, and do not now wish to complain; but the matter has become so serious that it actually embarrasses us financially.

Nearly all accounts are in small amounts, of ten dollars or less, and may appear of minor importance to each one; but the debts we owe are for large sums, and to those who would not hesitate to sue us, even though in doing so they compelled us to discontinue the publication of the paper.

Brethren, once again we ask you to consider us, and at the earliest possible day send on your remittance.

lost, I knew no reason why I should be saved. I felt desolate and helpless, but I think the language of my heart was, "Thy will be done." I could do nothing. But almost instantly I saw the plan of salvation; that Christ has suffered for me; that he had paid the debt; that he was my righteousness, my strength, my all; that my salvation depended in no way on myself; that he would have to undo all he had ever done if one for whom he died were lost. I felt secure in him. It all came with force and conviction, and with such comfort, I was almost overcome with joy. How plain it all was. It almost seemed to me I could make any one understand it; but I could not. No person could make it plain to me. I had learned nothing spiritually in Sunday School, where such things are supposed by some to be taught; and yet I had gone there almost from my infancy. But how wonderful are the works of the Lord. I felt now that nothing could make me doubt again. It was indeed a heaven below my Redeemer to know, and I felt to move along so quietly. But I could not express the anguish of mind and awful darkness through which I had passed; neither can I tell the joy I felt.

Doubts and fears soon troubled me again, and I could not understand it. I thought christians were always happy. I did not see my friend so often now, since the revival meetings had closed, and I had no one to talk to of these things. The preaching I heard did not comfort me. My mind began to be exercised about joining a church. I felt no desire now to join any other than the Old School Baptists. I thought if they would not receive me I would wait. I said to my friend Mary one evening, when the Methodists were taking in members on probation, that I could not take the step I knew she would think I ought to take, and I told her why; that I only believed immersion in water was baptism. I also told her some of my feelings in regard to the church. She said their church would immerse, but added, "Feeling as you do, Laura, I honor you all the more for not doing it." I had been a member of the New School Baptist Sunday School, and usually attended their services. When their pastor heard of my having experienced a hope he wrote to me, and said he knew my sympathies were partly with them, and asked me to say where I would meet him, to have some conversation on the subject. I told him I would meet him at my Sunday School teacher's home. We met one Friday afternoon; and while I could but agree with him on many points, my heart was not with them. I could not have felt at home there, and have felt very thankful that the Lord delivered me from those things, although I have never felt worthy to be where I am.

My health had not been very good the most of the winter, but I had so much trouble of mind I scarcely thought of my physical condition. After I came home, O what a feast the first Baptist sermon was to me. How different it was from what I had been hearing. My mind continued to be much troubled and perplexed about many things. Sometimes I would think that perhaps what I had experienced was only a delusion of the mind. One day these words came to me, as though spoken to me, "Blessed art thou, Simon bar-jona; for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven." My mind rested on that for some time. On the 28th of May, 1882, my father and I were baptized by Elder Joseph Correll. I did not know it was my father's intention until he came before the church. My mind was troubled about many things. I was not satisfied that I ought to ask for or expect a place in the church. I was young, and thought that perhaps I ought to wait until I was older and better. I now know that had I waited until I was better I would never have come at all. How very far I have wandered. Then I could scarcely interest myself in anything of a worldly nature; now am I ever spiritually minded? The Lord knows whether I am or not. He cannot be deceived.

Sometimes I have been sorry I promised to send you this. I have written much, and yet have told so little of the real exercises of mind through which I have passed. I trust you will not expect me to write like those who write for our papers.

Very unworthily your sister in hope of a better life,

LAURA GREENLAND.

NORTH BERWICK, Maine, Oct., 1895.

ELDER CHICK—DEAR BROTHER IN THE LORD:—I have been thinking for some time that I would like to have a little talk with you pertaining to the things concerning our God, especially since it was not in the providence of God that you should be present with us at our annual feast. O! my dear brother, I did miss you indeed. It is not with any thought of flattery that I am prompted to say these words; that is, if I know my own heart. I do feel like calling you brother; but it has been the hardest thing, a great deal of the time since I united with what I believe to be the church of Christ, to call one brother or sister; not that I doubted for a moment their being those for whom Christ died; but the thought that I, all polluted with sin, I feel it is wrong for me to claim such a relationship to the dear saints of our God. I have thought many times that I must go to the church and tell them that I had been deceived, and had deceived them; but before the time would come for me to meet with them some precious promise contained in the word of our God would come home to my heart with such sweetness that I felt to exclaim with one of old, "Entreat me not to leave thee, or to return from following after thee; for whither thou goest I will go; and where thou lodgest I will lodge; thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God." O! my dear brother, I want to tell you how I have been made to rejoice for the blessed privileges I have had. O how good the Lord has been to poor, unworthy me. I have been made glad in the coming to the church within the past three months of four dear, willing ones; yes, made willing to obey the Savior in the ordinance of baptism. And still more are lingering round the fold, and we have had good evidence that they have been with Jesus and learned of him. I shall not be able to tell you all that I have had to be thankful for, but will tell you a few things: one was to meet with Elder Jenkins. I have had a desire to see him, and it had grown stronger for the past year; also Elder Beebe. They came to us ladened with fat things, which were well refined on the lees, declaring to us the precious gospel of the Son of God; also Elders Vail, Campbell and Beal, all preaching the same precious truth, not one discordant note through all the meeting. All was harmony, joy and peace. For a number of weeks before our meeting these words followed me,

"Do not I love thee, O my Lord?
Behold my heart and see;
And turn each cursed idol out
That dares to rival thee."

But it is not always the case with me; sometimes I am so dead that I hardly have a desire about the things. Then I am in trouble because I am so unconcerned about the things I hope I love; but, dear brother, I have learned that when I look within all is dark and vain and wild. Jesus says, "I am the way, the truth and the life." When I am enabled to look away from self, and look to Jesus, trusting in him alone, then all is peace; but when I am left to trust in myself, feeling I have something on hand, I am often brought into the place where Peter was. He had to learn by bitter experience that he could not trust in himself. Dear brother, I trust I have been shown something of the depravity of my own heart, and am compelled to say, "Dear Jesus, I need thee every hour." How glad I am that Jesus said, "I came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance." What hope could there be for me if that were not the case? And "the wayfaring man, though a fool, shall not err therein." "There is a way that seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death."

I was very much pleased with what you said a few weeks ago, through the SIGNS, in regard to Sunday Schools. I cannot remember when I did not look on Sunday Schools with disgust. I said, when I was quite young, if I ever had a child of my own, that the last place it should go would be to Sunday School. For we read that they shall not teach every man his neighbor, saying, Know the Lord; for they shall all know him, from the least of them unto the greatest of them.

But my sheet is full, and I will bring this scribble to a close, for I fear I shall weary your patience. I hope you will pardon me for intruding on your time. I know the forbearance you possess, and believe you will cast the mantle of charity over all my imperfections, knowing my inability to write. Father is quite well; he is ninety years old lacking a few days. He and Myra join in love to you and your family.

From your very unworthy brother, if one at all,

J. F. HALL.

BYRON, Neb., Nov. 17, 1895.

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES—DEAR BRETHREN:—I am requested by a dear brother to write a few lines in regard to the situation of many brethren and friends in southern Nebraska and northern Kansas, where there have been three drouths in succession, and this year's the most distressing of all, causing the nearest total failure of all kinds of produce, the country having been drained of all supplies by reason of the two succeeding drouths. Now, just as winter is coming on, and the people all destitute of money, and their stock of clothing almost exhausted, what they are to do is more than I can tell, unless they can be aided in some way. Brother Hammons and I thought it best to write of the condition of the brethren and friends in this drouth-stricken section of the country, and request you to insert it in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, that the brethren who are more favorably blessed may know of their distressed condition, and lend a helping hand in this their time of great need. Aid in the way of clothing is mostly needed, of any kind and of all sizes, for men, women and children, no matter if they have been worn. Brethren who may feel disposed to render aid in this or in any other way they may choose will ship goods by freight to Ruskin, Nuckolls Co., Neb., on the Rock Island R. R., to either Elder J. H. Hammons or Joel Hammons, or to Joseph Bruce, Byron, Thayer Co., Neb., on the B. & M. R. R., and we will distribute among those who are most needy. As we do not know whether the railroads will aid in any shipping, we will request that freight be prepaid, as we have not the money to pay freight. We will also notify any and all parties who may ship us goods as soon as they come.

Your unworthy brother,

JOSEPH BRUCE.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

Mrs. E. L. Baucum, wife of Mr. D. E. Baucum, was born in Pike Co., Ala., Nov. 3d, 1876, and died at her home in Cass Co., Texas, Sept. 24th, 1895, aged 18 years, 10 months and 24 days.

The deceased was the daughter of brother J. R. and sister S. J. Meadows. She moved with her parents to Texas the first of the year 1889. Eula, as she was familiarly known, was a dutiful daughter and a loving wife. She was married to Mr. Baucum on Nov. 8th, 1894; and although their married life was short, it was happily spent. She was taken sick with a pain in her head on Monday night and suffered untold agony until death relieved her the next day. The only words she spoke after her mother reached her were, "Mamma, how I'm suffering!"

Eula never professed a hope, but from all appearance she had been with her Savior. She delighted in waiting upon the Old Baptists when they visited her parents, and loved their conversation. Eula was a sweet singer, and her favorite song was,

"Why should we start or fear to die?
What timorous worms we mortals are!
Death is the gate of endless joy,
And yet we dread to enter there."

"Jesus can make a dying bed
Feel soft as downy pillows are,
While on his breast I lean my head,
And breathe my life out sweetly there."

After a few comforting remarks by Elder J. H. McWilliams the deceased was laid to rest in the Beech Creek cemetery until the last trumpet's sound. She leaves a father, mother, three brothers, one sister and a husband, together with a host of friends, to mourn their loss. We would say to the grief-stricken parents to weep not for Eula. We feel that your loss is her gain. Look to God, who is too good to err or to be unkind.

Your brother in Christ,

J. S. McLEOD.

PICTORIAL HISTORY

OF THE

UNITED STATES.

By James D. McCabe.

This work is no dry mass of details—no bombastic effort to inflame the national pride, but a vivid and brilliant narrative of the events of our history, from the discovery of the American Continent down to thepresent time. It gives a most interesting account of the Indians of North America, from the time of the coming of the white men. The voyages of Columbus and explorations and discoveries of the different nations of Europe are related with graphic power. Every step of our colonial history is traced with patient fidelity, and the sources of those noble and, we trust, enduring institutions, which have made our country free and great, are shown with remarkable clearness. Then follows a clear and succinct account of our great Struggle for Independence, and the establishment of the Federal Union—the events of our career from the close of the Revolution to the administration of Harrison.

The work is printed from plain, new type, on fine calendered paper, and comprised in one octavo volume of 960 pages. It is splendidly embellished with nearly 500 fine engravings, embracing battles and other historical scenes, portraits of distinguished men, views of our principal cities, &c., &c.

Bound in Fine Silk Cloth, Plain Edges, $2.00, Post-paid.

CORRESPONDENCE.

SOUTHAMPTON, Pa., Nov. 26, 1895.

DEAR BRETHREN:—In the SIGNS of August 7th appears a request of Eliza M. Hollingsworth, of Woodland, Cal., for my views upon Acts xiii. 41, which reads as follows: "Behold, ye despisers, and wonder, and perish; for I work a work in your days, a work which ye shall in no wise believe, though a man declare it unto you."

I seldom feel comfortable when I see such a request, for I feel unable and insufficient to think and write out what a portion of Scripture means. When any scriptural subject is on my mind, and in my heart, then it is easy for me to write, if I have opportunity. I cannot, even then, feel able to investigate thoroughly and make an exhaustive exposition of the meaning of the Scripture; but I can give some expression of what I see and feel in the subject, and it is a comfort to me to do so. But the thought of undertaking to search out the meaning of a portion of Scripture merely that I may have something to write about it, is not pleasant to me; yet when I have tried to do so, lest some dear lover of the truth should think me inattentive to his expressed wishes, I have sometimes been surprised to find the wells of salvation appear to my view, out of which I have been favored with joy to draw water to refresh my own soul. I wish it might be so now, and that some, at least, who read what I may write might be edified and comforted. But I do not at present feel that such will be the case. The Lord's people are brought by the dear Savior to sit down before him, scattered or in companies, waiting, hungry and expectant, and he feeds them by the hands of his servants, as he did of old the multitudes that he caused to sit down upon the grass before him in the desert place. The servant can take only what Jesus puts into his hand, and the hungry soul unto whom it is his privilege to hand it will give all the praise to Jesus while he eats of the heavenly bread. The true servant has no wish to receive any of the praise, but only that he may share in the bounties of grace and be held in the fellowship of saints.

It was while preaching in the synagogue at Antioch that the apostle Paul warned the Jews, and bid them beware lest that which is expressed in the words of the text as having been written in the phophets come upon them. What he speaks of is found written in substance in Isaiah xxix. 14, and in Hab. i. 5. His quotation seems to be more particularly according to the language of Habakkuk. The Lord declared unto Israel by the prophet many times that they would not believe the work which he would perform, though it would be declared unto them, and that he would himself blind their eyes, and pour upon them the spirit of deep sleep, and harden their hearts, so that they should not believe and be healed. To the natural understanding this looks inconsistent with the character of a holy and merciful God. But we have no right to judge the Lord, nor try to decide the meaning of what he says, by our reason, and by our thoughts as to what he ought to say or do. We can only know of what he ought to do by his declaration of what he has done. Sometimes it is given us in the gospel light to understand mysteries that were hid from past ages and generations, and to see how that which to the natural reason appears hard and cruel is really a manifestation of infinite holiness, goodness and mercy. But if it is not given us to see the gracious meaning of any portion of the word, yet we will bow to it, if we are led by his Spirit, knowing that it is infinitely wise and good because it seemeth good in his sight.—Matt. xi. 26. The work of salvation is that which is referred to in the text, which also involves the work of bringing to an end the legal dispensation, with all its shadows and types. The day of the Lord, which is the gospel dispensation, in which the power and goodness and wisdom of God are displayed, is darkness to those who still trust in their own power and goodness and wisdom to establish their own righteousness.—Amos v. 18-20. The law given to Israel, with all the ordinances of divine service pertaining to that legal covenant, proved absolutely that it is not possible for the natural man to render perfect service unto God, as Joshua said unto them, "Ye cannot serve the Lord."—Joshua xxiv. 19. When that legal system had perfectly fulfilled the purpose of God in establishing it over his fleshly people of Israel, and the truth had been fully demonstrated that by the works of the law no flesh could be justified, that system passed away. It was not the Lord's purpose that man should attain to a knowledge of spiritual things by his own power. "In the wisdom of God, the world by wisdom knew not God."—1 Cor. i. 21. In his infinite wisdom and goodness he decreed to hide these things from the wise and prudent, so that no man by searching should ever be able to find out God, or understand his ways, which he has made unsearchable and past finding out. Whatever shall ever be known of heavenly things must be known by revelation, and that revelation is to babes. For this the dear Savior rendered thanks to the Father, and rejoiced that so it seemed good in his sight.—Matt. xi. 25, 26. And this shall ever be a special cause for thanksgiving and joy on the part of all his people.

If it had been so arranged that by his own wisdom, power and goodness man must attain unto the knowledge and favor of God, then only to those of the flesh of Abraham who were absolutely perfect according to the measure of the law, could that knowledge and favor come; while every Israelite in whose work could be found any imperfection must be rejected; and all other nations and people, being "aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise," must remain forever "having no hope, and without God in the world."

Then, even if we can suppose any one able to come up to the perfect standard of the holy law of God, yet by this arrangement all the feeble minded, all the lame and blind, all the little, helpless babes, must be lost. But the Lord rejoices in helping the weak and nourishing the babes. His joy is in his people, his tender care is for them, his mighty power is manifested in their behalf, and as one whom his mother comforteth, so he will comfort them, and they shall be comforted in Jerusalem.—Isa. lxvi. 13. All his people are brought to the measure of a little child before the entrance into the blessedness of his kingdom is granted them. They receive his blessings, not as men of power who have earned them, but as little, helpless babes, whose cryings are hushed by the revelation to them of the good things which God has prepared for them that love him.

The Lord told Israel that he had blinded their eyes, and hardened their hearts, and given them the spirit of slumber, lest they should see and believe and be converted and he should heal them.—Isa. vi. 10. And this is repeated by the Savior concerning the unbelieving Jews as the reason why they could not believe.—John xii. 39; Matt. xiii. 13, 14. The apostle, also, refers to such declarations more than once. In writing to the Romans he says, "What then? Israel hath not obtained that which he seeketh for; but the election hath obtained it, and the rest were blinded."—Rom. xi. 7.

Does this appear like hard doctrine? The apostle did not regard it as hard, but as a cause for rejoicing, because he sees in this doctrine a way in which salvation can come to the Gentiles. "I say then, Have they stumbled that they should fall? God forbid; but rather through their fall salvation is come unto the Gentiles." Was the fall of the Jews merely because they carelessly stumbled through lack of attention to their work? Was it because they were not sufficiently prudent and energetic and careful in seeking righteousness by the works of the law, that they did not obtain it? Do you understand that there was a possibility of their having remained standing in that legal covenant if they had been more attentive to its requirements, and more watchful so as not to have stumbled at that stumbling-block? Certainly not. It was of the Lord that their legal table became a snare and a trap and a stumbling-block to them.—Rom. xi. 8, 9. The fall of them was the riches of the world, and the diminishing of them the riches of the Gentiles.

If any one under that covenant had stood by works, then that covenant must have remained valid, and no one but those named in it, the fleshly seed of Abraham, could have had salvation. But there was no salvation in that covenant, therefore it was found faulty, and must be taken away, in order that a better covenant, founded upon better promises, might be established. Those who were under that covenant must fall, in order that salvation might come to the Gentiles. Through the mercy of God salvation is not according to the works of the creature, but "it is of faith, that it might be by grace, to the end the promise might be sure to all the seed."—Rom. iv. 16. "For the gifts and callings of God are without repentance."—Verse 29. That is, God does not change his mind concerning those whom he will call; does not let his gifts and callings depend upon their works, so that a failure on their part might defeat his will. Nothing of that kind.

But the fall of the Jews opens a door of mercy for the Gentiles, who now appear necessary to fill up the measure of the elect, since election is seen to have failed to secure its fullness from the Jews. That Israel, therefore, all of whom the Lord had declared should be saved, is not composed of Israel after the flesh. "For they are not all Israel that are of Israel;" "but In Isaac shall thy seed be called." And that seed is Christ. Israel, then, after the flesh, as concerning the gospel, are enemies for the sake of the Gentiles; but as touching the election they (the elect among them) "are beloved for the fathers' sake." "For the gifts and callings of God are without repentance. For as ye [Gentiles] in times past have not believed God, but have now obtained mercy through their unbelief, even so have these also now not believed, that through your mercy they also may obtain mercy. For God hath concluded them all [his elect among Jews as well as Gentiles] in unbelief, that he might have mercy upon all."

No wonder the apostle breaks out in this sublime expression of praise, "O the depths of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! How unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out!"

But why does the apostle preach in this manner to the Jews at Antioch, saying, "Beware, lest that come upon you which is spoken of in the prophets?" The next Sabbath day he tells the reason when the Jews were filled with envy because of the multitudes that came to hear the apostles preach, "and spoke against those things which were spoken by Paul, contradicting and blaspheming. Then Paul and Barnabas waxed bold, and said, It was necessary that the word of God should first have been spoken to you; but seeing ye put it from you, and judge yourselves unworthy of eternal life, lo, we turn to the Gentiles; for so hath the Lord commanded us."

It was preached to them first that its testimony against them might be confirmed by themselves, in their manner of receiving it. As Joshua said to their fathers, when they protested that they would serve the Lord, although he had told them that they could not, so it could be said to these, "Ye are witnesses against yourselves." The Jews were represented by those in the parable who had been bidden to the wedding feast of the king's son. They recognized themselves as referred to in the requirements of the law, and claimed for themselves all the dignities and honors and privileges with which it invested those who were chosen to be guests of the great king on so notable an occasion as the marriage of his son. But when the time came, and the announcement was made to them that the dinner was prepared, and that all things were now ready, and they were commanded to come unto the marriage, their treatment of this gospel call was such as to show that they had no regard for the king, no respect for his commands, no interest in his kingdom, and no desire for the food of his table; and thus they proved themselves not worthy of the honor of a place at that wedding, to which they had been bidden in the law. "The king said to the servants, The wedding is ready, but they which were bidden were not worthy." Not one of them was worthy. Not one of them, as Jews, came to the marriage. "For I say unto you, that none of those men that were bidden shall taste of my supper."—Luke xiv. 24.

But the wedding must be furnished with guests. The house must be filled. So the blessing comes to those who truly need it; to those who are ready to perish; to those who are hungry and thirsty for the very things which are so richly provided in the palace of the great King, and which are brought forth to all who come to the marriage of his Son. They are found houseless and helpless in the lanes and streets of the legal city, and wretched and desolate in the highways and hedges of the Gentile world. "Seeing ye put it from you, and judge yourselves unworthy of eternal life, lo, we turn to the Gentiles."

And after all, the honor came to those for whom it was eternally designed. The Jews were mistaken in their proud assumption that the honor was theirs. They were mistaken in supposing the law designated them as the characters who would receive the favor of the King. The law required perfect righteousness, and it testified of Jesus, and of him alone, as having that perfect righteousness. Through him that perfect righteousness comes as an inheritance, a gift of God through Jesus Christ our Lord, to the poor in spirit; to all who feel themselves destitute of it; to all the meek, who regard themselves unworthy of God's favor; to all who mourn their sinful state, and hunger and thirst after righteousness; to all the pure in heart; for only a pure heart can feel a sorrow for sin, and a longing to be pure and holy; to all such, wherever they be, comes the more than invitation, the more than call, comes the fulfillment of the command, "Bring in hither the poor, and the maimed, and the halt, and the blind." "Quickly." "Compel them to come in." It is done. "O! what a wonder is this! What a heaven of bliss!" From the darkness and desolation of the lanes and hedges to the beautiful and pleasant rooms of the palace. But this would not satisfy the poor, blind, ragged beggar, but rather add to his wretchedness by the contrast. More than this; from darkness to light; from blindness to clearness of sight, filled with visions of beauty; from filthy rags, of sin and shame, to beautiful garments of righteousness and praise; from pain and weakness and wounds and bruises and putrefying sores, to health and cure and bounding strength, so the lame man leaps like a hart; and with flesh fresher than a child's; and with a tongue no longer silent, but filled with singing.

In this sermon, and in all his preaching, Paul, as is the case in all gospel preaching, clearly distinguishes the subjects of God's redeeming grace, both among the Jews and Gentiles, as they are manifested by the quickening power of God. "Men and brethren, children of the stock of Abraham, and whosoever among you feareth God, unto you is the word of this salvation sent."

This fear of the Lord distinguishes the subjects of grace among all people, for it is the beginning of God's work in their hearts; "the beginning of wisdom." The Lord said, "I will put my fear in their hearts, that they shall not depart from me." Without this holy principle no one on earth has any true wisdom, or any clean and pure motive to action. With regard to all legal worshipers, their fear of the Lord is taught by the precept of men.—Isa. xxix. 13. It is a slavish fear, whose promptings to obedience are only in order to escape punishment or to win some reward. It is, like the wisdom of the world, "earthly, sensual, devilish." But "the fear of the Lord is to hate evil," and it is therefore "clean, enduring forever."—Psalm xix. 9. Hatred of evil and love of holiness are motives that cannot be affected or debased by any of the selfish and corrupt influences of the world, but are ever seeking that which is true and pure and holy; therefore the fear of the Lord is called "a fountain of life, to depart from the snares of death." It shows us the evil of our nature, and never flatters with a show of some good thing in our flesh, where no good thing dwelleth; but it is itself pure and clean, and keeps alive in the soul a longing and thirsting after God; and therefore "the fear of the Lord is his treasure."

Those among both Jews and Gentiles who fear God will give heed to the warnings such as Paul gave them, while all others will despise them, thus proving that they are the despisers spoken of in the prophets, who shall perish with their own works when the day of the Lord cometh, which shall burn as an oven. The warnings stir up the souls of the Lord's people to search their own hearts, and to call upon the Lord to search and try them, and to bring them forth in his righteousness. "The fear of the Lord tendeth to life;" and the holy constraint of the love of Christ is ever upon those who possess this precious treasure of the Lord, the cause and source of their deepest sorrow and of their highest joy. These are the elect of God, chosen in Christ before the foundation of the world, that they should be holy and without blame before him in love. Saved and called by him with a holy calling, not according to their works, but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given them in Christ Jesus before the world began.

"O for such love let rocks and hills
Their lasting silence break,
And all harmonious human tongues
The Savior's praises speak."

SILAS H. DURAND.

GHENT, Ky., Oct. 14, 1895.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES:—A desire has been expressed by some very dear brethren that I should give through your paper my christian experience, if I have any. I must say that it is with reluctance I attempt to comply with their request. They will please pardon me for commencing this narration with what occurred at a very early period in my life. When quite young I learned to read, and my now departed mother often required me to read her chapters in the New Testament. In complying with her requests I soon acquired some knowledge of the advent, character and sufferings of our dear Redeemer. I greatly sympathized with him in his poverty, his sorrows, his sufferings, and the cruel treatment extended to him by the Jews and the pagan idolaters, and my belief in him as the promised Messiah became indelibly fixed in my youthful mind. This led me in later years to say to brethren that I have no recollection of any period in my life in which I did not believe that Jesus Christ was the Son of God and the Redeemer of his people. But as I grew up to manhood the vanities of a sin-cursed world began to engross my time and attention, and continued till perhaps I was as vain as any that lived upon the earth. That long since has convinced me that the belief thus early formed was not the faith which works by love. But I had great reverence for the Bible, and it greatly annoyed me to hear any one speak lightly of its sacred teachings. My father was so seriously afflicted that he seldom attended meeting, and when I would return he would inquire of me about the preaching, and what the text was that had been used by the preacher. His inquiries led to my giving closer attention to the sermons that I heard than perhaps I would otherwise have done; and thus my memory was strengthened and my knowledge of the Bible increased.

It was thus I spent my early life till I was about eighteen years old, when I heard Elder John Scott, who afterward baptized me, preach what I then regarded a very able and searching discourse from the first and second verses of the fourth chapter of the prophecies of Malachi. While he was dwelling on the words, "All the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble, and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts," I was made to realize that I was the person referred to by the prophet; that I had done wickedly, and was full of pride and vanity. Such impressions had never before taken hold of me, and I was made to regard myself in altogether a different light from that which I had before regarded myself.

I had read the Bible to my mother and talked to my father repeatedly about the preaching I had heard, and sometimes would repeat the text used without referring to it in the Bible. This filled me with pride and self-conceit, which was wicked. I then turned to the Bible and read its sacred pages from a different motive. Every page I read seemed to condemn me as a lost and ruined sinner, as that stubble that should be burned up. I continued in that condition some months, searching the sacred oracles of God, but finding nothing to relieve me or give me comfort. I could then say with the poet,

"When to the law I trembling fled,
It poured its curses on my head."

I found in my father's library a small book, of which John Bunyan was the author, the title of which was, "Come and welcome to Jesus Christ." I read it with deep interest, but was deeply impressed with the thought that the title to the book did not apply to me; that I had been proud on account of having read the Bible and talked about its sacred teachings; but now it condemned me, and could not come and welcome me to Jesus Christ. But now and then a ray of hope would burst into my darkened mind. I was made to know that I was a great sinner, and I learned from those sacred oracles and from the searching expositions of them by Bunyan that Jesus Christ had come into the world to save sinners, and my sad experience taught me that I was chief among that class. The belief that I had formed in earlier life, of which I have spoken, that Jesus was the true Messiah, came to my aid, yet in a different form. That belief was the result of historical facts that I had learned by reading the Bible; but now my faith took hold of him as the Savior of sinners, and hope began to spring up that I was one of those sinners whom he had come into the world to seek and to save. It may seem strange to some that my faith and hope centers alone in our dear Redeemer, and when they are in lively exercise my poor heart is filled with love to him, and a desire to know his great and glorious name, all of which has been the result of my being made to realize and know that I am a sinner, and not because of any works of righteousness that I have done. In that condition I journeyed on for about two years, sometimes with a little hope, but never doubting the true character of our dear Redeemer, till in 1831, I heard Elder William Heckman, who had baptized my father and mother in Scott County, Kentucky, in 1795. I listened to his preaching with great interest both times that I heard him, and his able and plain expositions of the way in which poor, helpless sinners were brought into the fold of Christ greatly encouraged me, and led me into the full belief that our glorious Redeemer had come into the world, not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance. Before that I had been looking and depending on my own righteousness, which I then found, and still find, to be filthy rags. I now fondly trust that my faith was then greatly strengthened; that to me had been given that faith which works by love, and that hope which is the anchor to the soul, both sure and steadfast, and that love which reaches and rests on Jesus, the chiefest among ten thousand and altogether lovely. That faith, that hope and that love was sufficient to cause me, poor and sinful as I knew myself to be, to confess him before men as my Redeemer. I went before the church and in a stammering way told the dear brethren and sisters then present some of these things, all of whom have long since gone to their eternal home. I was then received, and on Sunday, which was the fourth Sunday in September, 1831, was baptized by Elder John Scott and received into the full fellowship of the White's Run Baptist Church, in Gallatin (now Carroll) County, Kentucky. But alas! how deeply I have often been impressed with the thought that I then committed a great wrong, an unpardonable sin; that then I deceived those dear brethren and sisters; that I did not then in true and living faith enter that strait gate which leadeth to life; that gate which is the entrance into the true church of Christ, our adored Redeemer. Ah, dear reader, for more than sixty-four years have these fears hovered over my pathway; and now, standing as I am on the verge of a never ending eternity, in my eighty-fourth year, I can most fully adopt the language of the poet,

"'Tis a point I long to know,
Oft it causes anxious thought,
Do I love the Lord or no?
Am I his or am I not?

"If I love, why am I thus?
Why this dull and lifeless frame?
Hardly, sure, can they be worse
Who have never heard his name."

But some times, perhaps very few, as I have been for so many years treading my lonely pathway, bright scenes of glory have shone around me. Then I could most sweetly adopt the language of the psalmist, "O that men would praise the Lord for his goodness, for his wonderful works to the children of men." "O give thanks unto the Lord, for he is good; because his mercy endureth forever." One of those sweet and precious seasons occurred, and I fondly trust was given me, near ten years after I was received into the church; and I often try to call up in fond memory the joys of that precious hour. I was then traveling on horseback in the state of Missouri, in a large prairie, alone, where no habitation of mortals was visible. That thought, and the thought that I was alone, west of the great father of waters, a stranger in a strange land, filled me with the deepest feelings of loneliness, when suddenly and as forcibly as if it had been audibly spoken to me these words came up in my mind, "The Lord is in this place, and I knew it not." Such feelings of joy and rejoicing then were given to me as I had never known before. How long I remained in that truly happy condition I know not; but when it had subsided this question was suggested to me, "Is that language in the Bible?" In those days when traveling far from home I usually carried a small Bible in my pocket, and when opportunity offered I tried to find it, but failed; but some months later I found that language in the sixteenth verse of the twenty-eighth chapter of Genesis. They were the words of Jacob at Bethel. But then, O how much like Jacob I seemed to be. He was a supplanter. He had supplanted his brother in the matters of his birthright and his father's blessing; but I in early life had seemed to be trying to supplant my glorious Redeemer in the praise due to his holy name for my salvation, by claiming that I was doing an important part in that great work by reading his holy word and talking to my father about the preaching I had heard, and perhaps criticising it, which was all the vanity of vanities, because it was prompted by natural pride.

It is thus I have traveled through a long life, and the more closely I approach the tomb the more deeply I am impressed with this irresistible conclusion, that if I am saved it is a sinner saved by grace alone, and that if I have ever done anything good it was because God worked in me to will and to do of his good pleasure, and to his great and wondrous name is due all the glory.

But if it will not worry you too greatly, dear reader, I will mention one more occurrence which occurred in my eventful life. I left the city of Louisville one evening on a steamer for St. Louis. The next morning I was sitting in the cabin, in conversation with a gentleman from Lynchburg, Virginia. He appeared to be a very intelligent man, and very much inclined to talk on the subject of religion, and soon I learned that he was a Presbyterian. While in conversation a gentleman came into the cabin, and my Lynchburg friend pointed to him and said, "There is a man in whom I was greatly but agreeably deceived. When I took passage on the stage for Wheeling I found that gentleman there, and from his appearance I concluded he was a gambler and a blackleg; and I soon learned that he was on his way to Missouri, which greatly mortified me, for I found I would be compelled to have him for a traveling companion. When we reached the Ohio River we both took passage on the same boat. But I soon learned that I was greatly mistaken, for I found him to be one of the most pious and intelligent men I had ever met." While in that conversation that gentleman took a seat with us. His home was on James River, Virginia, and his name was Flournoy. A friend of his asked him for his traveler's guide. I inquired if he found it necessary to have a guide to enable him to travel among us southern and western fellows; to which he replied that he carried two traveler's guides, but the other pointed to that far off land to which he fondly hoped we were hastening. I knew that he referred to the Bible, and casually took mine out of my pocket. He took it out of my hand and said, "Are you a professor of religion?" I answered in the affirmative, and said I was a Baptist by profession. With suppressed emotion he said, "You are the first Baptist I have ever met while traveling." I found him to be a sound and consistent Baptist, and very familiar with the great truths given to us in the Bible. We then spent most of our time together on that trip, and the subjects that most engrossed our time and attention were the great and wonderful teachings given to God's dear people in the sacred volume, and I became greatly attached to those two devoted christians. I give these incidents, not to show to any that I am an Israelite indeed, but the apostle has said, "We know that we have passed from death unto life because we love the brethren." The Israelites knew each other by the sign of circumcision. But the apostle says, "He is not a Jew which is one outwardly." "Circumcision is that of the heart, in the spirit, and not in the letter; whose praise is not of men, but of God." And the evidences that the saints have while in the flesh is that love which binds them together and makes their conversation sweet. Those conversations are most sweet, because they are of Jesus and his great and wonderful love to his people, his redeemed. I have never met either of those two truly devoted men since we parted at St. Louis, but their memory has been dear to me ever since June, 1841, when we feebly uttered the last farewell to each other. But they gave evidence of their regard for me by urging me to go to Virginia and make the acquaintance of God's dear people in that old state. Brother Flournoy in urging me to visit Virginia said that if I would meet him at a given time in St. Louis, and go with him to his home, his house should be my home as long as I was willing to stay, and he would take me among the Virginia Baptists, whose company and conversation would afford me great pleasure.

After reading this communication over I am much inclined not to mail it for publication, it is so disinteresting and badly written; but I subscribe myself affectionately yours,

THE VINE, THE BRANCHES AND THE HUSBANDMAN.

SISTER M. J. Dorman, of Summitville, New York, has requested our views of the parable named above. We feel now like trying to comply with her request. The parable is recorded in the gospel of John xv. 1–8. We have called it a parable, though it is omitted from all the lists of our Lord's parables compiled by men that we have seen. It seems to us to bear all the marks of a parable, as much so at least as the parable of the sower, and others that might be named.

Here Jesus compares himself to a vine, his Father to the husbandman, and his disciples to the branches of the vine, and the words and works of the disciples to the fruit of the vine borne through the branches. The figure is a very forcible one, and the Savior made it the means of conveying very solemn lessons of instruction and warning to the disciples; but while he was then speaking especially to the eleven, yet the lessons of the parable belong to all who believe in every age. In response to our sister's request we desire to call attention to a few things which seem to us connected with what the Savior here has said.

First. It seems to us that the Savior's words here relate to this present gospel day, or rather, as it may be more definite to say, to the present time state of the church. Various things spoken in the parable compel us to believe this. We understand the Savior to speak to us more especially of experimental things. He is not, as it seems to us, speaking of what might have been true in the past, but of present things—things that we experience here and now as disciples or believers. The present or future tense is used all the way through. "I am the vine;" "my Father is the husbandman." It is upon earthly soil this vine is planted. Considered with relation to his eternal Godhead, our Jesus needed no husbandman. It is in his relation to his people here on earth, as Immanuel, "God with us," that the relation of vine and husbandman comes in; and so he says, "I am," "my Father is." So the experience recorded in the second verse is in the present; for the verbs "beareth," "taketh," "purgeth," are in the present tense, and also imply continuance of action. Also, in the third verse the verb is "are clean;" and in the fifth verse the word again is "I am," "ye are;" and so on through the whole parable. In the eternity past or in the eternity to come (if indeed we do right to speak of that as past or future which is without beginning or end) there is no such thing as not bearing fruit, or taking away or purging the branches; but here in this present state all the people of God are imperfect, and so these various experiences are needed for the perfecting of the branches and of their fruit.

Second. There is no question raised in the parable concerning the final salvation of the people of God. It all relates to fruit-bearing, and to the manner in which the husbandman works to obtain this fruit. So far as the figure of the vine itself is concerned, all is plain. The husbandman is described as doing just what would be seen every day in any vineyard. Now, Jesus here says that the great husbandman does with his vine just what any vine-dresser would do. No man dresses or cares for a vine except for the object of gathering fruit. To this end he dresses it, he prunes it, he cuts away withered and useless branches, and he trains it carefully. He directs all his skill and energy to the production of fruit. The vine-dresser is praised as a skillful, careful and painstaking man when a rich harvest results. So the great husbandman is here represented as dealing with his vine. If any branch bears not fruit he takes it away. If it bears no fruit it but hinders those that do. It is an injury to all the rest. If any branch bear fruit, the husbandman cares for it, and cuts away everything that would hinder the perfection of the fruit. He purges it, that it may bear more fruit. May not this explain why it is so often seen that the most useful and humble-hearted disciples are the most deeply tried and afflicted? Is not the Lord purging them, that they may bear more fruit? So in verses four, five and eight the Savior still presents the bearing of fruit as the subject. The branch, he says, must abide in the vine to bear any fruit at all. Not only must the branch abide in the vine, but the life and substance of the vine must abide in the branch also. This is true, we all know, in nature. Jesus here says that it is also true in the spiritual world; and when the vine bears fruit the husbandman is glorified. "Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit."

Third. There is no question raised in the parable as to how the branches came to be in the vine; and so we do not now pause to discuss this subject. Here we have to do with a fact that exists, and not with how it came to exist. The Scriptures abundantly answer the question of the God of heaven spoken through the prophet, "How shall I put thee among the children, and give thee a pleasant land, a goodly heritage of the hosts of nations?" But in the parable of which we are speaking the vine and the branches are regarded as being already united in one. "I am," "ye are," is the language of the living Savior addressed to his living disciples. It is a real, living, experimental union of which he speaks, and not a mere dead, dry, formal profession.

And so, fourth, we would point out that the Master does not say, "The church is the vine," but "I am the vine." A man may have his name enrolled on the church book, and so have a name to live, when he is not a branch of Christ at all, and is dead. On the other hand, a man may be cut off from his membership in the visible church, and his name be cast out as evil, while yet he is one in all inward experience and feeling with the vine. We recall that many years ago we heard brethren appeal to this parable as setting forth the orderly administration of the discipline of the church, and it was spoken of as though the church were the vine; but this seems to us to be an entire mistake. The relation spoken of here is not that of church membership, but of membership in Christ; and the work here spoken of is not that of a church dealing with its members, but that work which Jesus by his Holy Spirit works in the heart experience of all his children, whether they are members of the visible church or not. It is not the church which is here represented as cutting off the one branch and pruning the other, but the husbandman, who, Jesus says, is my Father.

But, fifth, it may be said, Is it true ever, or in any sense, that a real branch of this true vine can be cut off from Christ? Does not this contradict the general tenor of the Scriptures elsewhere? For answer we appeal to the text itself. The Savior himself spoke these words; and he said, "Every branch in me [not in the church, but in me] that beareth not fruit he taketh away," and it is cast away as a branch, and is withered, and men gather them and burn them. If we believe the Savior's testimony, then it is sure that this is true of a real child of God. There is a sense in which a branch may be separated from this vine. We know that nothing can separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord; and nothing can prevent the atonement of Christ from having its full result, viz., the final salvation of all for whom Christ died; and we know that the sinner made alive unto God cannot perish, because he has eternal life, which the Lord has given him. This we believe and are assured of, and the parable does not touch or throw any doubt upon these grand truths; but it is true so far as the present experience of the joy of salvation is concerned. So far as present faith, hope, love, peace or assurance enter into our life, there is such a thing as being cut off from these things. Very many Scriptures present this truth under different forms of expression. To one only will we occupy space to refer at this time. "If ye live after the flesh ye shall die," &c. Others will readily occur to our readers. This cutting off from the joy, peace and love of the Savior's felt presence, and from growth in him, and from the power by which alone we can bear any spiritual fruit, is more by far than exclusion from membership in the visible church, for it may be that one may be unjustly excluded from the church, and still have the assurance of the presence of the Savior with him; but to be thus cut off from the presence of the Savior is darkness and death, even though his sin be so hidden from the church that he is still honored and esteemed among them. Viewed in this light, what solemn words are these in the parable, and how anxiously will each believing heart inquire, when he reads about this cutting off, "Lord, is it I?"

Now, sixth, we desire to emphasize one or two suggestions that are in our mind with regard to what the parable does teach. Jesus says here, "I am the true vine." Each word here is full of meaning. I, Jesus, and no one besides me, am the true vine. We cannot understand aright any part of this parable without a clear apprehension of this one thing. He says also, "I am;" not I have been or will be, but I am. This is as true now as ever. "The true vine." The definite article "the" shows that there is but one true vine. The people of God can grow and thrive spiritually in union with no other vine. All others are false vines; and if the living branches in Christ seek for life and nutriment and help and hope anywhere but in Christ they seek in vain. How many poor souls have tried the false vines to their sorrow! How lean and barren have their souls become as they have endeavored to find their blessings out of Christ. Perhaps they may have trusted in rituals, as the Galatians did, or in good works, or in prayers, or in church ordinances, or in ministers; but no matter what it was besides this true vine, the effect was always the same. They became fruitless, dry, barren, withered, cast forth, gathered by men, burned.

Another suggestion is, "the Father," not men, is the husbandman. He has prepared the ground, he has planted the true vine, he waters it, he prunes it, he cuts away the fruitless branches, he purges the fruitful branches, he is glorified in the fruit. He does all, he receives all. "My Father is the husbandman." He is all-wise and faithful and true. The husbandman is perfect, the vine is perfect, but how faulty the branches! What folly, then, are we guilty of when the imperfect branch endeavors to do the work of the perfect husbandman! The poor branch cannot even prune and train itself. How can it then prune and train others?

Our Lord purges the branches; not the vine, but the branches. He purges not the fruitless branches, but the fruitful ones. He purges in his own way and by his own processes. We would in our folly lay hold of the fruitless branches and seek to make them fruitful. We would trim, train, urge and admonish those who seem to us the farthest off from the dear Lord; but he judges otherwise. He deals with the branches that are fruitful. How impossible is it by searching to find out God! and how little of him is known! We wonder when we see those who are the lowliest, humblest, meekest and most self-denying of the flock subjected to the severest conflicts by inward temptation or outward afflictions. Is not the answer to our wondering here? It is that they may bear more fruit.

There is no bearing fruit that will glorify God except as we abide in Christ. This does not mean that it is in our power to live or not to live in Christ, so far as his real indwelling is concerned, for this same Jesus said concerning this, "I give unto them eternal life; and they shall never perish." Again, "Because I live, ye shall live also." Paul said that nothing should separate us from the love of God, &c. The admonition to abide in Christ, and the warning concerning the consequences of not so abiding, in this parable, must mean something else, therefore. To us it has long seemed sure that the language of which we are speaking means to look to Christ, to rely upon and trust in him alone. In short, not to be as the foolish Galatians, who had turned from Christ to legality, or like some others who have followed fleshly lusts, which war against the soul. If one is anxious to abide in Christ, so that he may be a fruitful branch, he will be found close beside the shepherds' tents, hearing the word, mingling with and conversing with those who love God, and striving to walk humbly before God and consistently before men. Much more will no doubt suggest itself to our readers in regard to this. We can here only say a few things.

Jesus says to such as these, "Ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you." How intimate, then, is the communion between the branches and the vine! "If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you." This is real and vital godliness. But some questioning, fearing one may say, How can this be true? It seems more than can be true of me, that I should ask what I will and it shall be done unto me. How is this? In the first place, we desire to say that when a true disciple so abides in Christ, and the words of Christ so abide in him, as this language signifies, it is sure that his desires and prayers will be according to the holy will of God. If such an one asks what he will, it is his will because it is God's will. God has put his word, his thoughts, his will, into the heart of that man. In him the Spirit makes intercession according to God's will. When led by such a spirit all our prayers are indited by this Spirit, and are right and heavenly and pleasing to God; and so because of this it shall be done unto us. There is not the shadow of a justification here for the blasphemous assertion that prayer prevails to change the unchanging will of the God of heaven. If at any time we ask what we will, and it is done unto us, it is because, and only because, the God of our salvation has caused us to so live in Christ, and his word to so live and bear fruit in us, that we have the mind of Christ; and when we ask for any blessing we must ask in harmony with that mind, and such things shall be done unto us.

We leave these suggestions to the perusal of sister Dorman and all who may read. We are well aware that but a partial response to our sister's request has been given, but it seems to be the best we can do now.

2 THESSALONIANS II. 10.

WE understand the apostle to write in this chapter of the revelation of the man of sin, the son of perdition; and by comparing the descriptive traits here applied to identify him with the description given of antichrist in other parts of the New Testament, in his various developments, we are fully satisfied that antichrist is substantially the same in all ages of the christian church, whether as here described in its elements, or as afterward displayed in its organized maturity, in the red dragon, the seven-headed beast, the two-horned beast, the image of the beast, or the Mystery, Babylon, &c., seated on the scarlet-colored beast, in Revelation xii., xiii., xvii. The text proposed for consideration is a part of the description given of this wicked which was to be revealed. The revelation of this antichrist could only be made by a falling away of those who professed to be the people of God, in which, as we are elsewhere informed, many should depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils. In its elements this antichrist already in the days of the apostle was working; but its workings were let or restrained until the time appointed by him who let should come for his manifestation. We cannot understand that the non-professing portions of mankind are ever in Scripture called antichrist; but the term invariably points out a religious or ecclesiastical organization claiming to be the church, and aspiring to an elevation higher than anything that is worshiped as God. His coming, we are here informed, is like the coming of all false religious institutions, after the working of Satan. Let it not be forgotten by those who revile the church of God for their anti-efforts, &c., that Satan is a zealous worker, especially in getting up religious institutions, doctrines and revivals, which, being without divine authority, are opposed to God, and ultimately make war against the kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ.

The revelation of this mystery of iniquity, as we are informed, was to be "with all power, and signs, and lying wonders, and with all deceivableness of unrighteousness in them that perish; because they received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved." These are clearly the general characteristics of the man of sin in all his developments, whether Pagan, Papal or Protestant. "With all power." Every false religion professes to have the power of free-agency—the power to save or damn their own souls, and the power to promote the salvation or damnation of their fellow-men; but in the full development of this wicked, it monopolizes the power to dictate the faith and practice of not only its members, but of all others, to domineer over the conscience of all within the range of its influence. "With all power," both secular and ecclesiastical, power of church and power of state, and power to reign over the kings and governments of the earth; power to make their own creeds, establish their own order, make their own ministers and furnish their own converts; power to get up revivals at pleasure, and power to proscribe and persecute all who dissent from them With all "signs, and lying wonders," such signs as the Jews required, tangible to the natural senses of men; great worldly prosperity, wealth, learning and popularity; and such lying wonders as causing fire to come down from heaven in the sight of men, or as things appear to men; as when they profess to conduct religious revivals, and make men believe that they really, by their prayers, anxious-benches and other machinery, bring down the Holy Spirit from heaven. But these, it must be observed, are all lying wonders. "And with all deceivableness of unrighteousness." All these unrighteous pretensions and workings are deceptive, and calculated to mislead the judgment of natural men; and all that is deceivable in unrighteousness is monopolized by antichrist, and brought to bear on "them that perish." Beyond this limit the powers of antichrist cannot go. They can find no enchantment against the Israel of God. "If it were possible, they would deceive the very elect." "But we are bound to give thanks always to God for you, brethren, beloved of the Lord, because God hath from the beginning chosen you to salvation through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth." But all those who dwell on the earth, whose names are not written in the book of life of the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world, shall be deceived, and shall worship the beast.

The two-horned or Protestant beast, which evidently predominates at the present time, "exerciseth all the power of the first beast before him, and causeth the earth and them that dwell therein to worship the first beast, whose deadly wound was healed. And he doeth great wonders, so that he maketh fire come down from heaven in the sight of men, and deceiveth them that dwell on the earth by the means [for they are great sticklers for means] of those miracles which he had power to do in the sight of the beast."—See Rev. xiii. 11–14.

"Because they received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved." From these words, with many other passages of the Scriptures of like import, it is clearly demonstrated that all who receive the love of the truth are God's people; that their names are found in the book of life of the Lamb; that God hath from the beginning chosen them to salvation through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth; and that all who are not thus chosen unto salvation and enrolled in the book of life shall worship the beast, shall be deceived, and shall receive strong delusion and believe a lie, that they all may be damned who are of this character; that is, who believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness. Hence the words, "Because they received not the love of the truth," are equivalent to a declaration that they are not chosen of God from the beginning to salvation; that their names are not found written in the book of life, &c.

The poor, tried and doubting saints have reason to bless God that these words are used; for while they equally express to those who are instructed of God his sovereignty in the election of his saints to glory through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth, and his appointment of all others unto wrath, with the other passages quoted above, they teach us that all who do love the truth are sanctified through the truth, and are chosen of God to salvation. Christians are sometimes reduced so low as to have no other evidence within their reach that they are born of God and ordained to glory but their love of the truth; and this is sufficient to outweigh all doubts, when rightly understood. No man by nature loves the truth. Those who love it have received the love of it, that they may be saved; for none can be saved without the love of the truth. No man receives this love of the truth except God has from the beginning chosen him to salvation through the truth; and hence the apostle affirms that "we are bound to give thanks unto God always," &c., on this account, for the choice which he has made, the purpose which he has purposed in himself. If from our own volition we could love the truth savingly, without this provision of God, that obligation to thank God always would not be so strong; but the reason of the obligation is evidently because "Salvation is of the Lord." He is God, and beside him there is no Savior.

not answering before, I would just say that I cannot now find your last; but I remember that one item of the same consisted in an expression of a strong desire to hear the precious gospel preached once more. Now allow me once more to invite you to our annual gathering or association, the which is (D. V.) to take place next Friday, Saturday and Sunday. Ministering brethren are expected from your state, and from east and south, I presume. Shall the servants of the Most High make sacrifice of time and worldly gain to try to meet the longings of the hungry, thirsty, sighing sons and daughters of the royal family of the King of kings and Lord of lords, and some members of the family start the inquiry, as of old, "What think ye, that he will not come to the feast?" And, "Shall David's place be empty?" I will send with this a copy of the SIGNS, and in the associational notices you will see that of ours with the rest, with instructions for those coming from the north. There will be conveyance to the place of meeting, and entertainment, and a royal welcome to all visitors, I will assure you. On the account of the long drought, so recently and mercifully broken by such plentiful and refreshing rain, I have been able to make but very little for the past six weeks; but should the dear Lord so will, I do hope to be there to meet and greet the dear children of the heavenly King. You are well aware that the instructions of the King of Zion (which city, by the by, is "beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth") were on one occasion addressed to those of whom it is said, "They all with one consent began to make excuse;" and the one who seemed to have the most forcible excuse of the whole said, "I have married a wife, and therefore I cannot come." That seemed to pull stronger than the one who had to prove the yoke of cattle. But the will is the principal piece of furniture of the mind of us poor, sinful and loathsome worms of the dust, and whatever controls it. It seems a great deal like the spirit of the living creature in the midst of the wheels, of Ezekiel's vision. It (the will) sets all the parts of the complicated machine in motion. Now, if there be first a willing mind, dear old brother Paul argues, the gift is accepted. O for very much more of the controlling power of the unction of the holy One, to put our minds in frame to wait upon him with an ever-increasing satisfaction and delight. Ah, how vain and evanescent are the most endearing joys of earth. Yes,

"There's nothing here deserves my joy;
There's nothing like my God."

And although our most dear of earthly joys and comforts and companionships are removed from our embrace for a while, still

"How can I bereaved be,
Since I cannot part with thee?"

But ah, how lonely to have no precious one of earth in the house to exchange a word with when the toils of the week are over. But "I will not leave you comfortless; I will come to you." And again he saith, "O Israel, thou shalt not be forgotten of me."

I will just add that Wenona is on the Illinois Central Rail Road. No difficulty in changing cars. And now in conclusion I will say, that should the Lord so will it I am purposing to make a visit to England about the first week in November, if I can possibly raise the funds by that time. I have a heavy job on my hands, I know. But if I cannot raise enough to pay my interest and taxes, in addition to my fare, I shall be quite content to stay where I am, or perhaps come and make you a visit, and go around and see some of the members of my scattered family. I will hope to see you at the meeting, when we will have an opportunity of a rehearsal of some of the paths traveled. You know it is said, "They that are delivered from the noise of archers in the places of drawing water, there shall they rehearse the righteous acts of the Lord,"&c. So to ancient Israel deliverance was wrought, and none but Israel share deliverances to-day.

Please give my kind christian regards to your step-daughter, and accept the same in all sincerity yourself. From your poor, weak worm in a precious hope,

THOMAS NORRIS.

WHITEFIELD, Maine, Oct. 17, 1895.

ELDER CHICK—MY DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST:—It has been on my mind for some time to write you ever since our association, but have put it off until this morning. I feel that I cannot delay longer. When I heard you were not to be at our association I felt so grieved that I was made to cry unto the Lord to reconcile me to his will. I felt as though it would not seem like our association if you were not there, as I had never attended an association but you were present. But the Lord heard my cry, and blessed me with all spiritual blessings, and I felt to say, "This is none other than the house of God." I was made to see and feel that if the Lord's presence is with us it is a heaven below, and that we are not dependent upon Elder Chick or any one minister; for if they preach Jesus it is all the same; and really I felt that perhaps it was good for us you could not come, for it showed us more clearly where our dependence lies. Elders Beebe and Keene were with us, and, behold, how we loved them. I had had a great desire to meet Elder Beebe face to face and hear him preach; and when I first beheld his face I could not keep the tears back. He looked so beautiful to me, and such a solemnity about him to me, that he came right into my heart before I heard him speak. Behold, how we loved him. And Elder Keene we love more and more, as we see the meek and humble spirit he manifests among us. The Lord sent him here to spend a week with us, and it has been a heavenly sitting together in Christ Jesus. We were filled to overflowing as he preached Jesus and him crucified. The Lord was with him in all our gatherings. Sisters Nellie Moody and Jennie Hubbard came forward and were baptixed last Sunday. It rained very hard at the time, and I think I never witnessed a more beautiful sight in seeing those three going down into the water through the rain drops. Their faces looked angelic to me. We do feel that the Lord is in the place, and that there are others who will soon come forward and tell what the Lord has done for them. My own sister in the flesh, Emma, one year ago professed a hope and went to the New School Baptists; but the Lord has shown her that the god they worship is not her God. How it rejoices my poor heart to see and feel that the Lord is with us, carrying on his own undisturbed affairs without let or hinderance. The past week that Elder Keene has been with us has been a more blessed season than I can find words to express. It was Jesus manifest in him that we loved. How can poor worms of the dust ever be thankful enough for the goodness and mercy that have followed us all the days of our life? He has never left nor forsaken me, although I have wandered so far away from him. He has been with me and kept me as the apple of his eye.

Dear brother, I often wish I could see you and hear you talk of the things we love. I am made to look back over the precious seasons I have had in your presence. It is Christ in you that I so love, and that draws like cords around my heart. How far it surpasses all natural love. It is a love I once knew nothing about. It is a love I have no control over. It is like a well of water within me, springing up into everlasting life. It is a well that never goes dry, no matter how dry I am. It is a love that goes out to all God's little ones. The Lord says by the mouth of one of old, that he will give waters in the wilderness and streams in the desert, make the desert blossom as the rose, and make the lame man leap as a hart. I know that nothing but the power of God can do this, or even give the desire that it should be done. I do believe the Lord will build up the waste places, and "of these stones raise up children unto Abraham."

Dear brother, I must draw my scribble to a close, as I have already written at a great length; but I want to say a few more words. I want to tell you how glad I was that the Lord put it into the hearts of the brethren to have you assist in the editorial department of the SIGNS, as Elder Beebe was not able to continue his labors. We felt badly when Elder Beebe had to give up, and we could not have had any one to take the place that we so love as we do you. It seemed to me you were just the one to do so, for you are so widely known.

We felt sorry that Elder Vail could not attend our association this fall, and I do hope the Lord will open the way for him to come here next fall. I long to see and hear more of God's ministers proclaim the riches of Christ. How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of those that preach the gospel and bring glad tidings to the hungry soul. Elder Campbell has been able to meet with us but two or three times this season, so you can imagine how hungry we are for the bread of life which none but God can give, dealt out by his gospel ministers to us, the sheep of his pasture. The thought comes into my mind, Can I claim to be one of those little ones? Yes, by the grace of God I feel the witness in my own breast that I am one of his chosen, in great tribulation, and without spot or blemish before him in love. When you can spare the time I shall be glad to hear from you. May God be with us all.

ELLA S. PULSIFER.

MUCH ESTEEMED FRIENDS:—I feel much impressed to write a few lines, and feel that it will be doing my duty. This is a dark day, and it is raining some; but the good Lord has caused a ray of sunshine to enter my mind. For two or three days my mind has been taken back to my childhood days. I can remember, when only seven years old, going back off of my father's barn, near a large tree, and trying to pray. I thought, O if I could only see Jesus and be where he was! It was my last thought at night and my first thought in the morning. And yet I was afraid to die, for I knew I was not good. But O! what a strong desire I always had to be like the Savior. When but a little child I would rather be alone by myself and watch the clouds in the sky, for I thought Jesus was there. Thus I traveled on in a a childish way for quite a while. The stronger desire I had to be good, the more I could see of my sinful self. I attended Sunday School and tried hard to be good. At last I rested in the thought that I was young, and that if I should be taken very sick, and knew I had to die, there was death bed repentance, and then I could give up my heart to God and be saved. This did very well for a short time; but then my trouble came back, and I felt worse, and saw myself a greater sinner than ever before. Thus I traveled on, and was like the troubled sea, and what had happened with me years before came fresh to my mind. While I was at school one day I felt so oppressed, and saw myself such a sinner, that I rose up from my seat to go and ask the teacher to pray for me. But before the winter had passed away it pleased the Giver of every good and perfect gift to remove that burden. As the weight of sin was lifted from me these words came with force, "The Lord quickens whom he will, when he will, and where he will." So I was taught that it was of God from first to last, and I feel to praise his most holy name. The stars had never seemed so beautiful. The world seemed like a new world to me, and everything seemed to be praising God. Years have passed away since that time, but the hour when I first felt my sins forgiven is as fresh and sweet to my memory as ever. O what a God is our God! O how precions he is to me, one of the vilest of the vile! He watches over us, and his everlasting arms are underneath us to bear us up. He is good from first to last. He knew the end from the beginning. I feel to sing with the poet,

"How firm a foundation, ye saints of the Lord,
Is laid for your faith in his excellent word;
What more can he say than to you he hath said,
You who unto Jesus for refuge have fled?"

He died and rose again for his people. What more can our dear Redeemer do? O what a precious Savior! O how I feel to praise his most holy name! He has led me along through dangers seen and unseen. When away down in the valley, O what words of comfort he has spoken to me! When sinking down in despair he will cause the Sun to shine forth. He has promised never to leave nor forsake us. I sometimes think, will I ever again doubt his love? But before I am aware I am doubting. I know I am a sinner, and do so freely know and realize that if I am saved it is by grace alone. I want every one to know that I am a sinner, for I feel that I am a sinner, for I feel it so strongly within, and do not want to be a deceiver. I must give to God all the glory. I do feel at this moment to sing to his most holy name. The way has seemed so dreary and the way so long until the last few days; but now I feel that I am enjoying the presence of the once crucified but now risen Savior, and feel to say,

"Ye trembling souls, dismiss your fears,
Be mercy all your theme;
Mercy which like a river flows
In one continued stream."

The night is as as necessary as the day, and when my mind is in darkness, and the light breaks forth again, my Sun seems all the brighter, and I know it is all for my good. "Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth." Then be not discouraged. Our path is not a smoothe one. There are many clouds to pass through; but Jesus passed through them all for our sakes. Yes, the time will come when we shall read our title clear to mansions in the skies. What a precious thought it is that we shall be free from sin and be free from nature. But may we remember that whether we live or die we are the Lord's.

Please excuse me for writing these few lines; but I had to write them. Do with them as you may see fit, and all will be right.

From a sinner,

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES—DEAR BRETHREN:—Elder P. W. Sawin, of Henry County, Kentucky, on his return from the eastern associations, paid us a short visit, which was the first time he had ever come among us. He was with us six days and preached for us seven times. Truly it was a feast of fat things to us all, a rich repast, a season of rejoicing. We, the Mate's Creek brethren and sisters, never have been more comforted and built up in our feelings by preaching than we were by our much beloved brother Sawin's preaching. Surely the Lord was with him and blessed him with grace to preach Christ, in demonstration of the Spirit and of power. Believing as we do that it was the Lord's doing that our dear brother came among us, we do sincerely trust that the Lord will so bless him and direct his way that he may come among us again. But should we never meet again in this world of toils and tears, we have an humble hope that through Christ we shall meet to part no more.

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE.

TO MOST of our readers the above mentioned book is too well known to need any introduction or a description by us. While many of the Bibles have a Concordance appended, they are generally so condensed or abridged as to be of little or no use. Cruden's Complete Concordance, however, enables one to readily turn to any passage of Scripture of which they can call to mind two or three words, and in our opinion is the most complete and convenient as a reference book of any published. In addition, it contains many other aids in studying the Bible, as may be seen by reference to advertisement on last page. Remember, both the books there mentioned are CRUDEN'S COMPETE.

HOLIDAY PRESENTS.

To our brethren and friends who may be contemplating making "Holiday Presents" we suggest that they look over our list of Bibles, Hymn Books, Concordances, Histories and other books, and see if they cannot find what they want.

MARRIAGES.

BY Elder F. A. Chick, on Wednesday, Oct. 30th, 1895, at the bride's residence, Miss Nellie Bond, daughter of John Bond, of Baltimore Co., Md., and James A. Hollifield, of Baltimore, Md.

BY the same, on Wednesday, Nov. 27th, 1895, at the bride's residence, Miss Elizabeth N. Woolford, daughter of Samuel Woolford, of Dorchester Co., Md., and Ralph H. Rees, of Chesapeake City, Md.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

OUR beloved father, Eld. Thomas Norris, was born at North Church, county of Hertford, England, July 12th, 1820, and fell asleep in Jesus on Sept. 4th, 1895, at his home in De Kalb, Ill.

He was ill about two days, dying quite suddenly. He was married to Elizabeth Mallard on April 23d, 1843, and came to America on June 21st, 1855, and settled in the county where he died. He received a good hope of eternal life in Christ Jesus, his beloved Lord and Master, at an early age, was baptized at Chesham, county of Buckingham, and received in the fellowship of the Particular Baptist Church in his native village of North Church, England. He was surely a sent servant of the Lord, and was ordained to the work of the ministry when quite young. He continued in that calling more or less until the time of his death, ever ready to contend for the cause of his Master. He is survived by four sons and three daughters, to mourn his departure. A beautiful life ends not in death, and we feel that our loss is his eternal gain. "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away."

JULIA HAISH.

CAPE GIRARDEAU, Mo., Nov. 10, 1895.

Elder Wm. Adams fell asleep in the triumphs of a living faith in Jesus on Nov. 22d, 1895, at his residence in Newton Co., Ga., in the 65th year of his age, after thirteen days of excruciating suffering with bowel disease.

He was a son of James and Frances Adams, of Jasper Co., Ga. In 1849 he and Miss Susan F. Hurst, of Newton Co., were united in marriage, with whom he lived happily until death. When married he was about eighteen and his wife about sixteen years old. In 1855 both of them were baptized at the same time in the fellowship of the Harris' Spring Church, Newton Co., by Elder I. Hamby, where he lived an orderly and exemplary member until removed by death. Soon after he united with the church he acted in the capacity and served the church both as Clerk and Deacon satisfactorily until he was called to ordination as a minister of Christ, in 1877. The presbytery was composed of Elders I. Hamby, W. D. Almand, J. G. Eubanks and Y. M. Gunter. He was judged worthy, and set apart to the full work of the ministry. From that time he served his own church faithfully until his death, serving also other churches, and his labors were truly blessed of the Lord. It was evident that he had a pastoral gift. He was blessed and prospered of the Lord, both spiritually and temporally. He was blessed with a large and devoted family. To them were born sixteen children, ten sons and four daughters now living, all grown, seven of whom are orderly and consistent members of the Primitive Baptist Church, and we have evidence to hope and believe that others of them have a good hope through grace. The writer was with him for days, and his whole mind and talk were of heavenly and divine things, adoring God for the riches of his grace, and not a murmuring word escaped his lips.

His remains were laid to rest in the family cemetery, near his residence, surrounded by a host of weeping, heart-stricken relatives and friends. There were present Elders W. D. Almand, F. M. McLeroy, J. F. Almand, N. B. Hardy, M. F. Hurst and John D. Curtis. Elders W. D. Almand, McLeroy and Hurst preached appropriate and comforting discourses from the text, "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: on such the second death hath no power." After which his remains were deposited in the grave, there to remain until the last trump shall sound, when, as we confidently believe, he shall rise and meet the Lord in the air, and so ever be with the Lord. "Wherefore comfort one another with these words." May God bless the surviving wife and children with patience and grace according to their trial, is our prayer, for Christ's sake.

JOHN N. HURST.

DIED—Nov. 18th, 1895, near Boiceville, Ulster Co., N. Y., after several years' illness with consumption, Elmer R. Whittle, in the 30th year of his age.

It was my privilege to see this young man at his home and at meeting at different times during the past two years. He was gradually failing in health, and the patient manner of an afflicted body bespoke a Christlike interest. He did in patience possess his soul, though he had sought in a southern climate relief in vain from the disease with which he was afflicted, finally dying at home and in his father's arms, with an apparent view of heaven being opened to see some of the angelic host. We trust that he left this sorrowful clime for a better world on high. Though not a professor, yet he was a possessor of a life that never dies.

In this sad bereavement Mr. Whittle and our dear sister Whittle, two brothers and one sister of the deceased, with their families and other relatives, are left to mourn. Although the weather was stormy on the day of burial, a large concourse of people were assembled at the Reformed church-house in Shokan, Ulster Co., to show their regard for the family and the dear one who had passed to the great beyond. The writer tried to comfort the living by preaching Christ and him crucified, the way, the truth and the life, the only hope of lost and perishing sinners. May the Lord resign the afflicted ones to his will.

ALSO,

DIED—Very suddenly, with a shock of apoplexy, Nov. 22d, 1895, near Clovesville, Delaware Co., N. Y., Andrew J. Green, in the 62d year of his age.

Brother and sister Green were at home alone, their two sons having gone to the village. After dinner brother Green went to the barn to thresh some oats. Not hearing anything of him, and it being about time for the cows to be put in, sister Green went to the barn, and to her surprise he lay on the floor dead, having fallen backward, and died apparently without a struggle.

By this sddden affliction and bereavement our dear sister has been called to sense the power of the heart-searching and rein-trying Lord, who only can give a reconciled mind to his will and government. By this bereavement the little church at Clovesville is bereft of its only male member; yet the same God reigns, and to him we must look. All is in his divine and gracious hand; and I have learned long since that all things in heaven and all things on earth on his almighty will depend, and all must to the greater good end sooner or later; for life, death and hell, and worlds unknown, hang on his firm decree, and he does not borrow leave to be.

As I was away from home, Elder Clark attended brother Green's funeral. He left our widowed sister, two sons, one daughter and other relatives to mourn. May the Lord sustain and comfort them.

ALSO,

DIED—After a long illness, at the residence of her son, at Griffin's Corners, Delaware Co., N. Y., Nov. 23d, 1895, sister Rosena Kelley, in the 66th year of her age.

Sister Kelley was an exemplary member of the First Roxbury Church, and whenever she could be present with the church she enjoyed the privilege. She was one of the meek ones in deed and in truth. Although seldom of late years was she at meeting, her expression when there was one of comfort and edification to others. But she has gone to her reward, where all tears are wiped away, and the inhabitants will not say, "I am sick." Three sons and two daughters, with their families and other relatives, are left with the church to mourn.

Although a very rainy day, a large company assembled at the M. E. church-house to pay their last respects to the departed, where the writer talked to the people from the words, "Blessed are the meek: for they shall inherit the earth." May the Lord comfort the mourners.

THE SUFFERING OF JESUS.

BRETHREN EDITORS OF THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES:—Last night I slept but little, and my thoughts ran chiefly on the suffering of Jesus in the garden before his crucifixion. My thoughts flowed in "numbers," which are substantially as follows. If you please you may print them; if not, all is well.

W. B. SLAWSON.

BURDETT, N. Y., Nov. 25, 1895.

BELIEVERS in Jesus, all hail!
Let us now to the garden repair,
And list to the woe and the wail
Of Jesus while suffering there.

O listen to his sad distress,
For never was prayer like his own
So perfect such horrors to kiss,
Saying, "Father, thy will must be done."

And "If I cannot pass it by,
I will drink it up all to the fill;
How bitter soever my cry,
I must thy whole purpose fulfill."

Believers in Jesus, shall we,
Who hope for salvation through him,
Endeavor chastisement to flee
When sin has our pathway made dim?

Shall his woe force the sweat through his pores,
And be counted a trifle, while we Forget the law-thunder that roars,
While we are unable to flee?

Is our "fellowship" for him awake
If his meekness we strive not nor seek?
How then can we pray, "For his sake"
Forgive us our sins, low and meek?

O help us, dear Lord, to aspire
To put on thy likeness before
We can claim to perfection admire,
Or Christ's full perfection adore.

CORRESPONDENCE.

MARK IV. 28.

"For the earth bringeth forth fruit of herself; first the blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear."

A deep and abiding interest lies hidden beneath both the theme and the reality of a growth in grace to the subjects thereof. Almost every one of those who really do grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ judge themselves to be a barren and unfruitful field. They "walk about Zion, and go round about her, tell the towers thereof;" yet the cry of the poor, burdened soul is, "My leanness! my leanness!" But notwithstanding that, the seasons take their place in the calendar of time, spring melts away into summer, and so on till the winter. Seed-time is succeeded by harvest. Activity and growth are the evidences of life, and without life there would be neither. We find life manifested in multitudinous ways; and in each item of creation where there is a seed-time and a harvest fruit is brought forth after its own kind. All things in creation work together in harmony under the directing and guiding hand of the Creator. Nothing comes by chance, for God is the author, the designer and the finisher of all things; and he is omnipotent, omniscient and omnipresent. His work is perfect. His sovereign pleasure, therefore, will all be accomplished. The Savior in this connection is setting forth in parables the things that are true, and that are wrought out in our daily experience. He is showing unto his disciples the manner of the work of the Spirit, illustrating it in simple yet forcible language; typifying the spiritual growth by the natural production from seed-time to harvest.

"For the earth bringeth forth fruit of herself." This is wonderful language when considered (as it properly should be) as the type of the Spirit's work in the heart of man. Then, following the pattern, we must necessarily deduce this meaning, that the posterity of Adam, who is of the earth, earthy, bringeth forth fruit of himself. This opens up to our view a vast field, wherein only the spade of the wisdom and knowledge of God can unearth the rich treasures of truth, the which are hidden forever from the natural investigation of the mind of man. Jesus said, using a parable typifying his own death, "Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone; but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit." The natural wheat might lie in the garner for hundreds of years, the germ of life remaining in it, yet yielding no fruit. Death must ensue ere life can be made manifest, and necessary to the proper yielding of fruit it must fall into the earth and die. Now let us keep in mind the other words, "For the earth bringeth forth fruit of herself." When the corn of wheat falls into the ground, death or separation takes place; and the germ of life, hitherto dormant in the grain, springs into action by reason of the elements in the soil, which has been prepared for its reception by the husbandman. It was by the same necessity that Jesus must needs go into the bowels of the earth (which was the chamber of his bride) and die, that much fruit, even the redemption of Israel, should be brought forth. The corn of wheat (Jesus) dies in the earth, and the earth yields up her dead in a new and living way, making fruitful the fields of spiritual Israel. The leading thought in connection with this clause of the subject under consideration is the unity of the christian experience (embracing both Jacob and Israel), and the fullness of Christ in being "the fullness of him that filleth all in all." The unity of the christian experience is exemplified in the illustration that "the earth bringeth forth fruit of herself." It is not that the new man does one part in the working out of our salvation, while the old man does another part; but it is I, myself, that becomes a conscious sinner. It is I that suffers on account of sin. It is I that groans, being burdened. It is I (the earth) that bringeth forth fruit of myself. It is I that rejoices in a risen, living Savior. The unity of the christian experience is beautified in the working of all things together for good to them who love God. As the seed is planted in the earth, there is a working together of all the elements to bring about the result designed by the great husbandman. The elements that are in the earth work together with the elements that are in heaven (the firmament), the rain, the sun, and the four winds. The earth, then, is typical of the creature, of Adam, which is also the chosen vessel of God's mercy, in which the seed is planted, the "incorruptible seed, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth forever," even Christ Jesus our Lord. The heavenly elements enter into the soil, which is prepared by the God of the earth and of the elements. The love of God is shed abroad in the heart of the virgin soil. Grace is ministered unto it, and mercy is vouchsafed. As in the natural planting the fruit yielded is from the seed that was sown after its kind, the earth bringing forth the fruit of herself, so in the spiritual. The fruit proceedeth from and cometh out of the incorruptible seed (the fruit of the Spirit); but the subject of the ministrations of love, grace and mercy bringeth forth the fruit of herself. The fullness of Christ embraces both the head (which is Christ) and the body (the church), which is the earth, and out of this mysterious unity and fullness "the earth bringeth forth fruit of herself."

"First the blade." When the good seed has been sown in the ground well prepared, and death has ensued, then begins the reproductive process. As the tiny life-germ is set free by the separation of death, the first manifestation is a shooting down into the earth of miniature roots, and at the same time an upward growth of the blade into the light of day. The apostle tells us that "Being confident of this very thing, that he which hath begun a good work in you will perform it until the day of Jesus Christ." The beginning of the work has already been noticed; now goes on the gradual and invisible growth. From the time the acorn falls into the ground and dies, until it reaches in perfection the mighty oak, no man has ever been able to see the growing process with his natural eyes. So also is the growth of grace in the heart, gradual and invisible, always sure, never failing. The work of the growth in grace manifests its accomplishment in two exactly opposite directions, precisely as in the type, "taking root downward, and bearing fruit upward." One is a knowledge of self, with its dreadful depravity and sinfulness disclosed; the other is a "knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ." In the beginning of the work (or growth) the little roots have made but a slight descent into the earth; as also the knowledge of self is not complete. The awful depths of human depravity are not yet brought to view. The little, delicate blade, as it peeps up from the earth, personifies the little child as it enters the kingdom, with its eyes open to the new surroundings of glory and of truth, yet not understanding (but rejoicing in) all that its eyes rest upon; not being weighted with matters of doctrine, but desiring "the sincere milk of the word" in its simplest and most digestible form. The little blade has not the strength to resist adverse winds and cruel storms, which, when they beat upon it, shrinks and falters; and so the little child is too sensitive and delicate to resist the attacks of the enemy. But as the growth goes on the roots descend deeper and deeper into the earth, and the little blade becomes a hardy stem. This is actually true of the growth in grace. As the knowledge of self grows broader and deeper, so also the weary pilgrim becomes more and more established in his righteous course. He sees through the windows of a longer and deeper experience. The doctrine of salvation by grace is his to uphold. The fundamental truths as set forth in the Bible he delights to meditate upon. One by one the idols of his heart are broken and cast away forever. Day by day he realizes, with one of old, that "Cursed be the man that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arm." Suffering becomes more acute, because sin appears more and more sinful; while on the other hand hope becomes brighter and brighter, because faith points out more clearly the race that is set before him, and the crown laid up, when the course is finished and the victory won.

"Then the ear." When the ear has formed upon the stem, then do we have the promise of the harvest, an earnest of that which is to come. We see the rainbow in the heaven, upon the dark background of the storm-cloud that has just passed over, and we remember a covenant-keeping God, and the covenant of promise which he made with the fathers, and which promise we already see fulfilled in Jesus. "For he remembered his holy promise, and Abraham his servant; and he brought forth his people with joy, and his chosen with gladness." Now, in this season between the seed-time and the harvest, we obtain the earnest of our inheritance. The ear has appeared upon the continuously growing stock. Jesus has died, and he has risen again. This is the will of the Father by which we have received the earnest. "Who hath saved us, and called us with a holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began; but is now made manifest by the appearing of our Savior Jesus Christ, who hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel." Through the appearing of the ear of promise we cease from all our labors, and do enter into the rest which the fulfillment of the promise has secured unto us. It is a time of rejoicing. The long, dark night under the law (abounding with sin in every horrid form, amid the dead and the dying) has passed, the Sun of righteousness arises with healing in his wings. "My beloved spake, and said unto me, Rise up, my love, my fair one, and come away. For, lo, the winter is past, the rain is over and gone; the flowers appear on the earth; the time of the singing of birds is come, and the voice of the turtle is heard in our land; the fig tree putteth forth her green figs [the ear cometh upon the stem], and the vines with the tender grape give a good smell. Arise, my love, my fair one, and come away." From the time the blade made its appearance there was hope; for the life that is implanted in the once dead sinner is an everlasting life, and doth abide; and the life is made manifest in the growth. Now that the ear has appeared, it is a confirmation of the hope that it is a good hope through grace. Jesus is that hope; and if we by the light of faith in grace are enabled to discern his body, it is an incontestible evidence that we possess his life, and therefore have we hope. We cannot perceive the growth in ourselves, but we can bear witness to it in our brethren. The work of the Spirit in the heart of the fallen sinner is a great mystery. "My doctrine [saith the Lord] shall drop as the rain, my speech shall distill as the dew." It is in this secret, invisible way that the subjects of his grace "publish the name of the Lord," and ascribe greatness unto our God. Passive in his hands are all his saints. The knowledge of this truth is a source of constant and continuous thankfulness; because if we were permitted to take one step of ourselves it would be in the way of destruction. The growth in grace which manifests the work of the Spirit is also mysterious and full of wonder; yet it is apparent to them who have eyes to see, ears to hear, and hearts to understand. A church or an individual, walking in gospel order, does grow in grace and in the knowledge of the Lord, showing forth the beauty of holiness so plainly and so clearly that "he who runs may read."

"After that the full corn in the ear." After the flood came and destroyed all living upon the earth (save the eight souls which were saved by the same waters), and the waters had abated from off the earth, Noah and his family went forth from the ark. "And Noah builded an altar unto the Lord;" and when he had offered, "the Lord smelled a sweet savor; and the Lord said in his heart," "While the earth remaineth, seed-time and harvest, and cold and heat, and summer and winter and day and night, shall not cease." When the process of reproduction reaches the full corn in the ear, then may we know that the harvest is near; and the object of putting in the sickle is to gather the fruit of that which was sown in the earth. This cannot refer to the end of time, as many would have us believe; because when the fruit is gathered the earth is left to bring forth more fruit next year. So also the children of the heavenly King, when they have yielded the peaceable fruit of righteousness, it does not necessarily end their natural life; but they go on showing forth the praises of him who hath called them, and gave himself for them. When the natural wheat is gathered into the garner it is then prepared as food for the sustenance of the household; and so the precious fruit of the Spirit that is gathered and garnered by the Lord of the harvest is for the upbuilding of Zion, and for the nurture and admonition of the inhabitants thereof. The household of God is not a people independent and separate from each other, but they are an endless chain, knitted and woven together, each link depending upon all the others. Throughout all the chain flows the fruit of the Spirit, and each link is nourished thereby. The apostle tells us that "the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance." These are what the earth (conscious sinner) brought forth of herself, by reason of the good seed sown in the earthy material of the heart. When the apostle said, "With the mind I myself serve the law of God," he had rendered the acceptable service by which is set forth the praise of the glory of God's grace; and, as he farther said, "But with the flesh the law of sin." We realize another law in our members, in which the works of the flesh abound, and they are these, "Adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulation, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, envyings, murders, revelings, and such like." Of these two opposing principles the sinner saved by grace is made up: the one, the law of life in Christ Jesus; the other, the law of sin and death. "How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace." Also, equally beautiful is it to witness the yielding the fruit of the Spirit in the Lord's saints, knowing as we do that it must come out of a gracious experience, through sore tribulation and deep heart exercises, beginning with "first the blade, then the ear, [and] after that the full corn in the ear." Love stands at the head of the list of the fruit of the Spirit, as placed by the apostle, and it is essential throughout all the christian experience to the proper yielding of all the other fruit. Every exercised heart is bathed with the fear of the Lord, which is the love of God. The loving bride looks upon her gracious Redeemer as perfect in all his parts, and altogether lovely, and her song is, "As the apple tree among the trees of the wood, so is my Beloved among the sons." Love sees no other object but Jesus. Her desires are not divided; all that is within her praises his holy name. When the eyelids of love are moistened with the dew of long nights of bitter groanings on account of sin, groanings that cannot be uttered, and are kissed by the rays of the morning light from the Sun of righteousness, then follows peace, joy, long-suffering, with all the other fruit of the Spirit in pleasing array, rich in the colors of the rainbow of promise for the "sure mercies of David," sweet to the taste and nourishing to the whole body. This is the "full corn in the ear," and is clearly illustrated by David in the twenty-third Psalm, after his despairing cry in the twenty-second Psalm, his dreadful cry in the night, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? why art thou so far from helping me, and from the words of my roaring?" &c. The morning light appears, the warm, soft rays pierce and dispel the thick darkness, and now love's echo comes up from the bleeding heart, whose springs are being dried by love's enchantment, and out of its abundance the mouth speaks, "The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want," &c. The soul is filled with all the rich, ripe fruit of the Spirit. "My cup runneth over." Jesus said to his disciples, "I am the vine, ye are the branches." The life of the vine extends to all the branches. The rich clusters of grapes hang upon the branches; they yield the fruit by reason of the life in the vine. So "the full corn in the ear" depends upon the life which produces it, giving glory to the Creator in its full fruition.

LIVING OF THE GOSPEL.

"EVEN so hath the Lord ordained that they which preach the gospel should live of the gospel."—1 Cor. ix. 14.

I am in receipt of a letter from brother J. E. Wilkinson, of McComb, Miss., in which he asks for my views on the above text. We are, as he says, strangers in the flesh, and from his truly interesting letter I am strongly inclined to the opinion that brother Wilkinson could with his own pen give the readers of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES a much clearer and more interesting exposition of that text than any have a right to expect from me. But I have for many years greatly enjoyed talking in social converse upon the consoling theme given to us in God's holy word, as well as writing in my feeble way for publication on many of the subjects given to God's dear people in that word.

Evidently the apostle was presenting in that chapter the duties of the churches toward the ministers of the gospel who labored for them in holy things. Their labors inured to the spiritual comfort, edification and building up of the saints, and by the preaching of the gospel all whose faith rested in Jesus grew in grace and in a knowledge of the truth as it is in him. But the apostle was talking to the church at Corinth upon the subject of the members of that church providing for the temporal needs of those who preached the gospel to them, and what he records in that chapter applies with equal force to the churches of this age of the world as it did to the church at Corinth when it was written, in the fifty-eighth year of the christian era. The language employed by the apostle in that text is plain and forcible, "Even so hath the Lord ordained that they which preach the gospel should live of the gospel." The word ordain means to appoint, to decree. The apostle says, "As many as were ordained to eternal life believed."—Acts xiii. 48. The plain teaching of which is that as none other but God was clothed with power to give eternal life, it was he who ordained both that life and that belief or faith which is in strict accord with his irrevocable decrees. "Him hath God exalted with his right hand a Prince and a Savior, for to give repentance to Israel, and forgiveness of sins." Those who were called to preach the gospel were ordained to that great work, and, like the priesthood under the law dispensation, must live of the gospel. Those priests must live of the altar. The apostle in that chapter said, "Do ye not know that they which minister about holy things live of the things of the temple, and they that wait at the altar are partakers with the altar?" Those priests were of the tribe of Levi, and were solemnly set apart to the temple service, and as they waited at the altar they were partakers with the altar. The apostle here seems to draw a comparison between the temporal support of the priesthood under that dispensation to like support of those who preach the gospel in the new dispensation; for he says, "For it is written in the law of Moses, Thou shalt not muzzle the mouth of the ox that treadeth out the corn. Doth God take care for oxen, or saith he it altogether for our sakes? For our sakes no doubt?" Then it is evident that God ordained in the law which he gave to Moses that "Thou shalt not muzzle the mouth of the ox that treadeth out the corn." He gave that rule of law as a figure to govern his people in the new dispensation; for he said it for our sakes no doubt. Then the apostle makes the application and says, "This is written that he that ploweth should plow in hope, and that he that thresheth in hope should be partaker of his hope." This language is given to us for our learning, and as a rule to govern the true church in regard to the duty incumbent upon the members toward those who labor in holy things. He says, "If we [the ministers of the gospel] have sown unto you spiritual things, is it a great thing if we shall reap your carnal things?" This epistle was written "unto the church of God which is at Corinth, to them that are sanctified in Christ Jesus, called to be saints, with all in every place that call upon the name of Jesus Christ our Lord, both theirs and ours." Then, as I have said, it applies to the church in this day with as much force as it did to those Corinthian saints. But the apostle does not say in laying down this plain duty, You may organize societies outside of the church for the purpose of raising means to support the ministry in foreign lands, and thereby convert the heathen and transform them from the worship of idols to the service of the true and living God. Our Lord while on earth laid down no such rule for the kingdom which he set up. He gave no such authority to his disciples. But he did say, "Go teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you." The authority to teach, as given by the great Head of the church to his disciples, was limited to teaching "whatsoever I have commanded you." Nothing more, nothing less; and the apostle does not depart from that rule in his letter to the Corinthian Church; but he does say, "Even so hath the Lord ordained that they which preach the gospel should live of the gospel;" not of the word. The Jews did not go out among the Gentiles and beg them to contribute to the temple service, and bring in their fatlings and lambs to be offered in that service. And those who in this way go out into the world and establish societies to raise means to help the Lord of hosts build up and sustain his church, do not know him, who rideth upon the heavens in the help of his people. They are obeying the commandments of men, and attempting to add to the teaching of him who is Wisdom. To them he says, "For I testify unto every man that heareth the words of the prophecy of this book, if any man shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book."

But, dear brother, does not that language of the apostle present to us a vastly deeper and and more interesting subject than the subject of the temporal support of the ministry? All things under the law were figurative. The apostle calls attention to that law and says, "Do ye not know that they which minister about holy things live of the things of the temple?" The priests under that dispensation made the offerings on the altar, and they lived of the altar. The true ministers of the gospel, in the new dispensation, are the antitype of the priests who officiated in the temple service; and while those priests lived of the altar, the true ministers of the gospel live spiritually of the things of the true tabernacle. He is made by the quickening power of the Holy Spirit to hunger and thirst after righteousness; and when he is filled with that heavenly gift he is fitted to offer an offering in righteousness. That offering is none other than the great sacrifice for sin, the glorious Son of God, the great antitype of those offerings made on the Jewish altars. When the true minister of the gospel is pointing with heavenly delight to that great offering for sin, he is preaching the gospel, and is living of the gospel spiritually. He then in rapturous delight points to Jesus and proclaims to all around that he by one offering hath perfected forever all them who are sanctified; that they are sanctified by God the Father, preserved in Jesus Christ and called. Then that minister of the gospel is living of the gospel in an infinitely higher form than any temporal support. To him the glorious Son of God is the sum and substance of the gospel; and when he is preaching him in his great and wonderful fullness, then he enjoys a feast more delightful than was ever set before any of the nobles of earth, and more precious than the gold of Ophir or the wealth of the Indies. Then he realizes that he is in the great banqueting house of the saints, and the banner of his Beloved is over him. That banner is love, and he in joy and gladness cries out, "Eat, O friends, drink, yea, drink abundantly, O beloved." In that great banqueting house he fills the place of a steward and hands out to all within its sacred walls the precious truth of the gospel, which is Jesus, and in an ecstacy of delight cries out, "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." His work is a labor of love in which he takes great delight, because it is in the house of the Lord where his best friends and kindred dwell. They are brought by the power and grace of God into that banqueting house, the true church, and their joys are not measured by the numbers that are present at their solemn and sacred feasts. They know that their glorious Lord hath said unto them, "Strait is the gate and narrow is the way that leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it." But when their dear Redeemer is with them, and they are given to know and realize his life-giving power, they rejoice to know that he hath said, "Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them." He is there to comfort them and to drive away the darkness and gloom that often envelops them by reason of their habitations being in this sin-polluted world. His language to them is, "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee." O what a glorious thought! What a blessed assurance to the poor, mourning followers of Jesus to be assured that their dear Redeemer will never forsake them. Although they day by day are made to know the corruptions of the flesh, and to mourn on account of sin, yet they greatly rejoice when they by the quickening power of the Holy Spirit are enabled by faith divine to see the King in his beauty, and like the ancient prophet to say, "Mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of hosts." He was mourning on account of sin, and said, "I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell among a people of unclean lips; for mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of hosts." This, dear brother, is your condition, and the condition of all the dear saints while here below. They often say with that ancient prophet, "Woe is me, for I am undone." But in the dark night of their sorrow and mourning this sweet assurance comes to their relief, "Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning." When the poor wanderer upon the sterile plains of earth has a bright ray from the eternal throne by which he is enabled to say, "Mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of hosts," then it is morning with him, for the Sun of righteousness has sent his healing rays upon him and healed the wounds that sin hath made. Then in an ever precious faith he in joy cries out with David, "Thou art, O Lord, my hiding place; thou shalt preserve me from trouble; thou shalt compass me about with songs of deliverance. Selah." Then they sweetly sing,

"Surrounded with sorrows, temptations, and cares,
This truth with delight we survey,
And sing as we pass through this valley of tears,
The righteous shall hold on his way."

Then, dear minister of the gospel, is it not true that you live of the gospel, in an infinitely higher and more holy sense than all that earth with its rich treasures can afford?

Brother Wilkinson will please accept these poor thoughts, if they are published, as a feeble token of my love for him and the great and ever glorious cause of our dear Redeemer, to whose great name be all the glory.

BRUNSWICK, Maine, Oct. 27, 1895.

ELDER WM. L. BEEBE—MY DEAR BROTHER:—Your face has come before me in such a manner this morning that I find I cannot write to any one until I have talked a while with you. I can say now, I am glad you had my letter published, for I have received a very comforting letter from brother Chambliss, of Florida, who assured me that the witness within testified that the things were true which I wrote, and he rejoiced in the additional evidence of his being a child of God. I will confess that I felt rather doubtful about the readers of the SIGNS finding any comfort in it, for it was only a talk with you, and it gave me so much pleasure to write it that I felt I had all the sweetness of it in my own heart. But when brother Chambliss' letter came I was made to realize again that the Lord's power was sufficient for all things, and in an instant a song of praise to God sprung up in my heart. I felt just then as if I would like to say to every brother and sister to whom I write, If you find anything in my letters which you think will be of comfort to the saints, send them to the editors of the SIGNS, and let those whom I love in the truth share them with you; for I do not know when the Lord enables me to declare what he has done for me in a way that will be a comfort to his little ones. I am kept at home again to-day by a bad cold, and as it is getting late in the fall I begin to fear I shall not be able to meet with the saints again until next May or June. They are willing to read a letter from me at every conference, and that is comforting to me, for my mind is not easy until I write what I would like to say if I were present. The Lord has been mindful of me all those winters I have not been able to go out, and they have been many, as the last winter I went out was when I was eighteen years old, and now I am forty-three: I would like

ONE FOLD AND ONE SHEPHERD.

OUR brother, J. H. Blackburn, of Chatham, Ontario, has requested our views upon the language of Jesus recorded in John x. 16, and such thoughts as we have we will submit. The text reads, "And other sheep I have, which are not of this fold: them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice; and there shall be one fold, and one shepherd."

We will say at the beginning that we have no doubt that the commonly received view of this Scripture is correct, viz., that the Savior meant simply to say that he had a people among the Gentiles as well as among the Jews, and that he came to bring or gather his own elect into one church, and under one Head and Leader, both among Jews and Gentiles. He uses the figurative words "sheep" and "fold" and "shepherd," because all through the chapter he is presenting his relation to his people, and their relation to him, under the figure of a shepherd and his sheep. Stripped of the figurative language, the text means, as we have said, that Christ would gather his elect people together from all parts of the world, as well as from among the Jews; and that instead of the middle wall of partition between Jews and Gentiles continuing to exist, it should in his new kingdom be forever broken down, so that henceforth, as an apostle afterward testified, there should be neither Jew nor Greek, Barbarian nor Scythian, bond nor free, but all should be one in Christ Jesus.

The Jews believed that they alone were the chosen people of God, and that in the blessings to be vouchsafed to them the Gentiles should have no part; and even the disciples themselves were slow to comprehend the fact that the Gentiles should be fellow-heirs with the Jews in the Messiah's kingdom. Jesus now and again gave utterance to expressions which set this truth forth very clearly; and some among the Gentiles, like the Roman centurion, manifested their faith in him, and received blessings and answers to their prayers at his hands. But yet until the day of Pentecost this truth was but dimly seen, and but few could conceive such a thing to be possible. It is not likely that those who heard the words of the text clearly understood them, but yet they plainly declared that salvation should now be extended to the Gentiles.

This discourse of Jesus concerning the sheep has for a long time in our mind been set over against the twenty-third Psalm, in which one of the sheep discourses concerning the shepherd. "The Lord," says the psalmist, "is my shepherd;" and in this tenth chapter of John Jesus said of himself, "I am the good shepherd." How sweetly and confidingly the sheep acknowledge their shepherd, even as he delights to call them his. Every word here uttered by the Savior breathes forth the most tender care, anxiety and love for the sheep. Jesus would teach us that as an eastern shepherd loves and cares for his own sheep, so he as the Savior and Bishop of our souls cares for men and women, his elect people. What a wonderful consolation it is to a weary, sin-burdened child of God, full of weakness and foolishness, to know that he is the object of the Savior's care and love, who will not suffer him to perish!

The teaching of the Savior in this text was not new. The Old Testament clearly declared the same things. In Isaiah lvi. 8 we read, "For mine house shall be called a house of prayer for all people. The Lord God which gathereth the outcasts of Israel saith, Yet will I gather others to him, besides those that are gathered unto him." In Malachi i. 11 the Lord declares that his name shall be great among the Gentiles, and in every place incense shall be offered to his name. We will not here make further references to the Scriptures of the Old Testament. Its pages are full of just such declarations as the above, all pointing to the coming kingdom of heaven which should be set up on earth, wherein should be gathered Gentiles as well as Jews.

We must be permitted a brief reflection here. With all these multiplied declarations as to the gathering of the Gentiles in the Scriptures of the Old Testament, the Jews remained in almost total ignorance concerning the purpose of God in this matter. This is shown by the fact before alluded to in this article, that even the disciples themselves were slow to admit its truth, so much so that Peter must be convinced by the vision of the sheet let down from heaven full of all manner of beasts and creeping things. What folly, then, to suppose that natural men may come to know the things of God by the mere teaching of the letter of the word. The Jews made their Scriptures their study, but remained in dense ignorance of their true meaning. What wonder that the mass of Sunday School scholars today are also densely ignorant of what the Scriptures really teach; and how utterly ignorant of facts is the man who supposes that by this sort of teaching men will grow up to know God!

"Other sheep I have, which are not of this fold." Not only are we taught in these words that Gentiles are to share in all gospel privileges with the Jews, but the doctrine of election is also clearly set forth. "Other sheep I have." That is, there are those who belong to me among the Gentiles; and elsewhere Jesus tells us how they came to be his. "My Father, which gave them me, is greater than all," &c. It is not our design here and now to dwell upon this truth. We desired to call a moment's attention to it. No matter how much men may hate the doctrine of God's sovereign choice of a part of mankind to salvation, it is taught directly or indirectly in almost every page of holy writ. One argument we desire to submit without fear of successful contradiction. It is this: if the doctrine of a finished atonement is true, then also is the doctrine of personal, unconditional election true; but if the latter be not the truth, then the former is not. Still farther, if election and a finished atonement be true, then salvation is not conditioned upon the choice of man. If the choice of man decides the matter of his salvation, then is election not true, and Jesus did not complete the work of the atonement. Every one with whom we have ever conversed who denied election, also denied that the death and resurrection of the Son of God settled anything as regards the work of salvation. There is a divine harmony in the truth. If one part of it be denied, all the rest of it is involved in such denial. Every word of Scripture that goes to prove a finished atonement, also proves with equal force the doctrine of election. In the text this election is shown to be among the Gentiles as well as among the Jews.

"Them also I must bring." It is a part of the ordinary duty of a shepherd to gather his sheep together; and so Jesus here declares that he must as the true shepherd gather all his chosen ones to him within the one fold. Jesus then here declares that to bring his chosen ones to the fold is not the work of ministers or human agencies of any sort considered by themselves, but his own work. "Them also I must bring." The word "must," used by the Savior here, is the same as "behooved" in Luke xxiv. 46, where Jesus said, "Thus it is written, and thus it behooved Christ to suffer," &c.; and the word in both places signifies literally "that which is binding on." It was binding on Jesus, then, to bring his sheep together in the one fold. It was binding on him, because this was what he came to do, and it belonged to his office as the shepherd of the sheep. What a blessed thought it is that Jesus, our shepherd, will fulfill all his obligations to his Father and to his flock. We understand that the work of bringing or gathering his sheep includes all his righteous life in the flesh, his death upon Calvary, his resurrection and ascension to his Father, and his gift of the Holy Spirit, by which his chosen are quickened into life, and brought to know and serve God. The word "bring" literally signifies "to lead on," and to lead with the idea of power or authority. It is the very power or authority which belongs to the shepherd of the sheep that is here signified. Jesus does not attempt to lead or bring his sheep, but he brings them. Jesus will not fail for lack of willingness; he cannot fail for want of power. How secure are the sheep, then, of being gathered and folded!

"And they shall hear my voice." There is a fullness of meaning here. Jesus does not say they shall hear "my words," but "my voice." There is a difference. Two men may utter precisely the same words, and yet the voice be entirely different. The sheep shall hear his voice. Others may utter the same words as Jesus does, thinking to deceive the sheep, but his voice they cannot imitate. We heard a lecture once from a man who had been traveling in Judea and Palestine. Among other things he said that they one day fell in with a shepherd. They expressed a desire to see his flock of sheep. He willingly complied with the request, but said to them that perhaps they would like to call the sheep together, at the same time telling them what words to use. One after the other called, using the words given, but met with no response; but when the shepherd had raised his voice, at once the sheep responded from every place around. It was the voice, not the words, that they heard; and so Jesus said, "They shall hear my voice." Elsewhere Jesus said, "The voice of a stranger will they not follow." Who among those children of God who have had any length of experience have not had an experience like this? "The words of the man seemed all right," they have said, "but something was wanting. The words did not come to our hearts." What was lacking? It was the voice. The voice was not the voice of the true shepherd which they had heard before. They could not follow it. Jesus speaks to the heart. No one else can speak in this way. If we have heard preaching that has exposed the secrets of our hearts, and that has been full of comforting power to us, we may for a time have been deluded into praise of the speaker, but at last we have learned that the power and glory which we saw was beyond the preacher; it was the voice of the shepherd. The Spirit of Christ through the preacher but spoke to the experience which we already had through having heard his voice in the past. This is all that true gospel preaching is intended to do; this is all that it can do.

"And there shall be one fold, and one shepherd." We cannot measure the full force of these words; we cannot grasp all that they involve. This much is sure: the people of God are one. Their common experience has made them one in feeling, as their life is one in Christ. There is but one fold; there is but one shepherd. This divinely wrought oneness cannot be broken. We may fail to fully realize its power and its truth, but still the union exists. The hand may be so diseased that it does not share in the ease nor the pain of the other members of the body, but still it is all the same a member with them. The union is not sundered; only the experience of this union is marred. Strife, coldness, alienation may exist among the sheep of this one fold; but still there is but one fold, and they all are sheltered in it. O! if we could but realize how safe the fold is, how loving and careful and watchful the shepherd is over us all, and over all alike, we should not be pushing with side and with horn, but, being sure that the shepherd will not let any of us want for any good thing, we should strive to draw our brother closer to us, anxious only that he should share in our good things, and rejoicing to see how greatly the Lord had blessed him.

What is so good an evidence that we are Christ's as when we hear his voice, and dwell gladly in the one fold? If we ourselves are only intent on hearing the voice of Jesus, and running to him when he calls, we shall only come nearer and nearer to all others who hear his voice as we all come nearer to him. Fellowship consists in oneness of life and of experience. It is by this one life and one experience that Jesus brings his chosen into the one fold, and becomes the shepherd of them all; and the summing of it all up is when the sheep each one for himself can say, "The Lord is my shepherd."

C.

BENEFITS AND EVILS OF RELIGIOUS CONTROVERSY.

THE benefits resulting from an investigation of all subjects embraced in the faith and practice of the saints of God, and a candid, meek and friendly interchange of such views as are held by brethren, is eminently calculated to edify and instruct one another, and to enlarge our knowledge and understanding of those things which we shall never fully comprehend until we are taken to that happy place where that which is in part shall be done away. Another benefit resulting from discussion is the exposure of errors, and especially such errors as are most likely to be entertained by the children of God. That the saints are free from error in doctrine and practice is not claimed by any who really belong to the household of faith; and hence it is provided in the order of the gospel that the saints shall admonish one another. This admonition is not the setting up of the judgment or opinion of one over another, but rather a reminding of each other, in the spirit and humility which the gospel inculcates, of what the Scriptures teach, and what the Holy Ghost also in the experience of the saints teaches. Regarding the Scriptures as the infallible standard (and when these Scriptures are so understood as to harmonize, not only with themselves, but also with the spiritual experience of God's children, we have the best assurance that they are correctly understood), the utility of the discussions for the mutual enlargement of our understanding, for edification and comfort of the body, the church, we think can hardly be doubted by any, when the grand object of such discussion is not defeated by some impropriety in manner or matter which renders the effort abortive, so far as edification is concerned.

When an undue warmth of feeling is betrayed, and a departure from a courteous, modest, humble temperament of mind is observable, or a disposition to make what we conceive to be the error of a brother look worse than it is, or to cast personal thrusts at him whom we conceive to be in error, or when we deal in dark suspicions of the motive, and charge the motive of the brother with corruption, &c., the force of our arguments, however good and conclusive, is greatly impaired, if not altogether lost. Religious discussions should not manifest excitement; we cannot be excited in debate without showing it, to our own great disadvantage. In all our religious discussions we would do well to remember that "When Ephraim spake trembling, he exalted himself in Israel." There is something so Christlike in the unaffected humility of the gospel, that no christian can discover it, even in his opponent, without admiring it. It is true we may be so much excited ourselves as to fail to discover it sometimes where it would be quite apparent to us if we were perfectly calm and deliberate ourselves; but when we do see it, if we are christians, we shall assuredly love it.

We speak of unaffected humility; for in the heat of controversy brethren sometimes use terms which express the greatest sense of their own nothingness, and of their inability to speak or write to the edification of the saints, and at the same time betray a violent disposition to misconstrue and even ridicule the views of a brother, without regarding his feelings, or even the principles of justice and common fairness. It is certainly a delicate matter to engage in discussions. None are so well qualified to so engage as those who not only have light on the subject of debate, but have as great a desire to hear as to speak—to receive as to impart instruction. Before we controvert a brother's position we should be sure that we understand it; and when we are satisfied that we do understand, be sure that we do not exaggerate or misrepresent it. Could we in all our communications with each other feel the necessity of being swift to hear, slow to speak, and the importance of humility, patience and brotherly kindness, we should soon learn what are the benefits of religious controversy.

What we have witnessed of controversy has fully convinced us that one brother cannot enlighten another by thrusting a flaming torch into his eyes; this would be more likely to deprive him of what light he has than to increase it; but present the torch in a judicious manner, and if he be in darkness you may enlighten him. Among the evils to be deplored, which often attend religious controversies among brethren, is an alienation of feelings, of love, forbearance and fellowship; and if discussions cannot be conducted without such results, for Zion's sake and for the sake of the peace of Jerusalem let us forbear to engage in them. "There is a time for every purpose under the sun." Let us wait that time. Our Redeemer at a certain time told his disciples that he had many things to communicate to them, but they could not bear them then; and the apostle Paul also found it necessary to deal with some of the old saints as though they were babes.

PLEASE BE SURE

IN sending remittances for renewals of subscriptions to give us the same name in which the paper is already coming. If the party is married, and the paper is coming in the wife's name, and we receive remittance to renew the subscription, and the husband's name is given, we have no means of knowing that it is meant for the subscription in the wife's name; consequently the husband's name is entered on our list, and the paper sent to both parties. Or if the paper is coming in the husband's name, and the renewal is sent in the wife's name, the same thing is likely to occur. It is a good plan to inclose in the letter one of the little pink slips containing the name, taken either from the margin of the paper or from the wrapper in which the paper comes.

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE.

TO MOST of our readers the above mentioned book is too well known to need any introduction or a description by us. While many of the Bibles have a Concordance appended, they are generally so condensed or abridged as to be of little or no use. Cruden's Complete Concordance, however, enables one to readily turn to any passage of Scripture of which they can call to mind two or three words, and in our opinion is the most complete and convenient as a reference book of any published. In addition, it contains many other aids in studying the Bible, as may be seen by reference to advertisement on last page. Remember, both the books there mentioned are CRUDEN'S COMPETE.

HOLIDAY PRESENTS.

To our brethren and friends who may be contemplating making "Holiday Presents" we suggest that they look over our list of Bibles, Hymn Books, Concordances, Histories and other books, and see if they cannot find what they want.

to meet the saints often, but I do not dread the winter if my mind is with them, and the desire is given me to be with them. Some of them can come here during the winter, and my heart runs over with gladness to see them, and I look forward with pleasure to the time when I can meet with them in their conference and speak of the goodness and power of God. I surely can trust in God the coming winter to lead my mind into the truth, causing me to rejoice. Early this morning I was thinking of the meeting to-day, and feeling sorry I could not hear the preaching, when these words came to my mind, "The ransomed of the Lord shall return and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads; they shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away." I had many pleasant thoughts which I cannot now recall, but I saw a beauty in the "everlasting joy" which I had not seen before. It is a joy which will last forever, to know Jesus, whom to know is life eternal. It is always the ransomed of the Lord who come to Zion with songs of praise to him who has redeemed them by his blood. We have been bought with a price. Jesus has redeemed us from death and ransomed us from the power of the grave. When this truth is sweetly felt within our hearts, sorrow and sighing flee away. Jesus appears as the one altogether lovely, and the chiefest among ten thousand. We sing, "Salvation to our God which sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb." We also say with David, "The Lord is my light and my salvation; whom shall I fear? The Lord is the strength of my life; of whom shall I be afraid?" You will see, dear brother, from what I have written, that I had a good sermon without hearing a natural voice. I hope the "still small voice" of the great Preacher was heard in my heart as the beauties of the gospel were presented to me. The gospel is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth, and it is the work of God when we believe on the Lord Jesus Christ. We cannot say that Jesus is the Lord, only by the Holy Ghost. Boasting is excluded in every way. I have taken much comfort in reading the twenty-seventh Psalm, as it expresses much of my experience. Mine enemies and foes did stumble and fall, and could not overcome me. There has been a desire that I may dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of my life, to behold the beauty of the Lord, and to inquire in his temple. In the time of trouble he hid me in his pavilion, and set me up upon a rock. "Therefore will I offer in his tabernacle sacrifices of joy; I will sing, yea, I will sing praises unto the Lord."

I cannot tell why I am writing you such a long letter, only you filled my mind so completely I could not write to any one else. You have expressed a hope that I may feel impressed to write often to the SIGNS. I wish I could make you understand what a fear comes over me when I attempt it. I do not think what gift has been given me is for writing to the SIGNS, but to the brethren. I cannot express and bring out what I wish to, unless I feel I am talking to the one to whom I am writing. I I know I have written many times to the SIGNS, but it has been with fear and trembling. When the impression comes I find more peace and rest in obeying, and more of a spiritual mind. I have experienced a poverty of heavenly things when I have not followed the impulse to write. I have always had confidence in the editors of the SIGNS that they would not publish my letters unless they contained the truth. In my conversation with the brethren, and when I have spoken in any of the meetings, I have felt they would not allow me to speak without correction if I did not declare the works of the Lord. I was permitted to be at the conference meeting two weeks ago, and felt it was good to be there. Elder Beal preached for us on Sunday, and I could not help thinking of what you said after he spoke at our association, "Sister Attie, you do not need any better preaching than that." It was Christ and him crucified. We surely can have nothing better. I enjoyed the ordinance of the Lord's supper, for it is in remembrance of Jesus as oft as we do it. We show forth the Lord's death. It is always a heart-searching time with me. I desire to look carefully at myself and see that none of my works have crept in unawares, but that I am trusting wholly in the finished work of Jesus; that his flesh is my meat indeed, and his blood my drink indeed, and then I shall not eat unworthily. Do you recollect speaking to me twice at our association about Martha? You said, "Jesus loved Martha." I did not make any reply. I could not, for I had not the time to tell you what I had experienced in regard to it. Perhaps the next time I write I may be able to talk about it. I must not weary you with too long letters. I expect you will be able to perceive as you read this that I have enjoyed what has been in my mind. I know my letters are all alike, and I hope they always will be. I do not want to write of anything else but our Lord Jesus Christ and what he has done for me. When you have time I shall be more than glad to hear from you. I hope your health is improved, and that you have been able to meet with the saints to-day and declare the redemption of the Lord's people. May our God lead our minds into the truth as it is in Jesus, and enable us to realize that his will is done in the armies of heaven and among the inhabitants of the earth. We all join in love to you and your family. I hope to hear from you soon. Your sister in Christ,

ATTIE A. CURTIS.

KELLY'S CORNERS, N. Y., Nov. 21, 1995

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES—DEAR BRETHREN:—With your tolerance I will pen a few notes by the wayside, for publication in the SIGNS, for the benefit of the general readers, and for the especial benefit of some who have requested me to give some account of my travels among them. First of all, the journey of a pilgrim and stranger here in this mortal state is the proof that each in their experience is fearfully and wonderfully made; and they are conscious that their God has wrought all their works in them, because they feel to hope that he has made them, and not they themselves. Thus being of his begetting, and also loving them that are begotten of him, they dwell together in love, and know that God is love; and as they endeavor to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace, they prove the Spirit's power, and do love one another with a pure heart fervently. Then it is no task to bear each other's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ; and then is fulfilled the saying, "Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity." All this I have realized in the passing days and weeks for the past five weeks, as I have been privileged of my gracious Lord and the good will of my brethren at Indiantown, Md., Welsh Tract, Del., Delmar, Del., New York City, Burdett, N, Y., Cammal, Pa., and Abbington, Pa. At all these meetings the proof was of the one body and one Spirit, even as all were called in one hope of their calling, having knowledge and bearing witness of the one Lord, one faith and one baptism, and evincing that the same one God and Father was over and through them all. Not a discordant note was heard, but all was to the edifying of one another of the Lord's lambs and sheep, the people of his choice, a remmant remaining at this present time, according to the election of grace. Surely God is good to Israel, even to such as are of a clean heart. But as for me, my feet were almost gone; yet I do hope I was conscious of having received a banner, and of displaying it only because of the truth. I do hope, as I remember all the way the Lord has led or brought me (if it is indeed his work), and as I have been "led about," or shown that without Jesus I can do nothing, and as I have been brought out of many pitfalls and valleys, that I have learned it is through much tribulation we must enter the kingdom of God. Thus the going in and out to find pasture is the night and day with my soul, the field and the pasture. The night seasons are remembered differently, because the night or darkness is not so pleasant; for all the light I can then have, be the night ever so clear, is only a borrowed light. So when by night upon my bed I seek my Jesus, or in the broad ways, or by inquiring of the watchman, "What of the night?" and being told that the morning comes, and also the night, I still seek my Jesus; and he has always been a little beyond all the power and skill of my earthly wisdom, and at an unexpected time, coming into my soul-felt joy as the morning, and as the quickening Spirit, restoring the joy of God's salvation. So have I learned spiritually that I have not where to lay my head on these earthly shores, more than had the Master. Here I have no continuing city, but am seeking one to come.

Now, dear brethren and sisters, let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us (unbelief and ceremonial righteousness), and run with patience the race set before us, looking only to Jesus Christ, following no man, only as he follows Christ; trusting only in the Lord, from whom alone comes our help. I desire to recognize no other hand than that which holds the destinies of all, who from the foundation of the world prepared a place for his people, and who will bring them there in peace. I would do injustice to my brethren and sisters with whom I met, here and there, as expressed in this letter, if I did not thank them for their hospitality and kindness to me by the way. Fare ye well.

J. D. HUBBELL.

BYRON, Neb., Nov. 14, 1895.

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES:—It is with a deep feeling sense of my weakness that I attempt to address you, dear brethren, in the precious hope of a blessed immortality through the atoning blood of Jesus Christ, who bore the sins of his people in his own body on the cross, and put them away by the sacrifice of himself, and arose again for their justification. But I hope that God, who is omnipotent and everywhere present, will guide my pen in a way that his name may be glorified, and to the honor of his precious cause. I will leave the result to your better judgment and for your disposal. There is a portion of Scripture recorded in Jeremiah xvii. 5 which has impressed me to write, and I hope to relieve the burden of my mind. The Scripture reads thus, "Thus saith the Lord, Cursed be the man that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arm, and whose heart departeth from the Lord." I know there is a time in the experience of all God's children when it pleases God, in the fullness of his appointed time, to cause the light to shine in their hearts, which were darkness; and the darkness comprehended it not. Then the poor child flew to the law for justification. But were they justified by the law? No, not by any means. The law condemned them, saying in thunder tones, "Pay me that thou owest." "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." Where was their hope and trust then, while in darkness? Was it not in man, and the arm of their own flesh, striving to appease the wrath of an angry God, and to work themselves into the favor of God by their own efforts or good works? But the more they strove against its power, they felt the weight of their guilt the more, until the last prop was taken away from them, and they were made to see their just condemnation, and that God would be just in cutting them off. Then their cry was, like Peter's, "Lord, save, I perish." Then the light of the omnipotent God shined again; for "God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts. to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ."—2 Cor. iv 6. Then it was that the poor child was brought into the glorious light and liberty of the children of God; his burden was gone, and his sorrow and mourning were turned to praise and thanksgiving to the Lord for what he had done for him. Thus we see that as long as we trusted in man, or the ability and power of man, whether our own or some other man's, we sank deeper and deeper, and our hopes were all blasted, and all was given up for lost.

But how often do the children of God give way to the arm of flesh. In reading portions of Scripture which they cannot understand, they often forget the portion of Scripture which says, "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, who giveth to all liberally, and upbraideth not." The thought occurs to them, I know what I will do; I will send this text to brother A, B or C, for they are wise and gifted servants of God, and they without doubt can unfold it to my understanding. Are they not then trusting in man for that which God has commanded them to ask of him? Surely they are. For if the Lord does not indite a subject in the heart, and lead the mind into the light of that subject, what is it to the servant or to the hearer? If the Spirit does not take of the things of Jesus and give them to the servant, and also give the hearing ear and the understanding heart, what is it but as sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal? For "the preparation of the heart in man, and the answer of the tongue, is from the Lord."

With these few scattering remarks I will close, hoping the brethren may ever look to him who is the Giver of every good and perfect gift, which is the prayer of a poor sinner saved by grace, if saved at all, and whose desire is for the welfare of Zion.

Yours in a precious hope,

JOSEPH BRUCE.

ELDER BENTON JENKINS—DEAR BROTHER:—The inclosed letter from our sister Hallock, addressed to the Ebenezer Church, in the city of New York, was read at our meeting on Sunday last. At the request of the church I forward it to you for publication in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES at the convenience of the editors.

Your brother,

R. M. STRONG.

CHESTER, Conn., Oct. 30, 1895.

TO THE EBENEZER CHURCH, NEW YORK—DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS:—I feel impressed to write to you this evening. It has only been a short time since you gave me a home among you, but it seems as though I had always known and been one of you, unworthy as I am. I cannot have the privilege of meeting with you, but my heart and thoughts are with you as you meet together to hear the truth proclaimed, or gather about the Lord's table. I often wonder why these privileges are denied me, when they are given to so many others; but I feel sure that it is all for my good and God's glory in some way, even though I do not understand it. I sometimes wonder if I am so much more hard-hearted and rebellious than others, that I need harsher treatment to keep me humble, and willing to sit at my Savior's feet and learn of him; and yet I have so much to be thankful for. God does not leave me alone. He has said, "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee;" and my experience teaches me that it is true. When clouds are thickest, and not a ray of light is to be seen, then a still, small voice will whisper, "Fear not; for I have redeemed thee; I have called thee by thy name; thou art mine." Thus God leads us on in the way that is best for us. Troubles must come. "In the world ye shall have tribulation; but be of good cheer; I have overcome the world." As he has overcome the world, we shall overcome through him. The dross must be consumed, the gold refined, before we shall be fitted to dwell with him; and although we may seem to ourselves to be growing worse, as the thoughts of our hearts are evil continually, and at times we are almost discouraged, the evidence of our hope is so small, yet "God is greater than our hearts, and knoweth all things." We must say, with Peter, "Lord, to whom shall we go? thou hast the words of eternal life." Poor and sinful as we are, that is where we long to be, listening to the words of eternal life, feeding on the bread of heaven. The Savior says, "Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you." We do indeed live on him. His life flows through all the members of his body, uniting them as one in him. The Savior says, "At that day ye shall know that I am in my Father, and ye in me, and I in you." All one in Christ Jesus. That is very precious to me. I feel that I was included when those words were spoken; not because of righteousness which I have done, but because our Lord was merciful to a poor sinner.

Your sister, I hope,

NELLIE H. HALLOCK.

CHURCHES CONSTITUTED.

PURSUANT to a request from a number of baptized believers holding to the faith of the Primitive Baptists, scattered in Colfax Co., New Mexico, in the southwestern Rockies, Elder Asa Howard, of Zion Hill Church, Parker Co., Texas, and Elder A. D. Bourland, of Denton Creek Church, Tarrant Co., Texas, met with these brethren and sisters on the 2d day of November, at the residence of Mr. J. B. Dawson, at Mount View, New Mexico, and proceeded to the organization of a Primitive, Predestinarian Baptist Church.

Letters were presented from Primitive Baptist Churches in six different states, and were accepted by the council after due examination; and the Moderator, Elder A. a Howard, pronounced the first Old School Predestinarian Baptist Church of Colfax Co., New Mexico, to be a regularly constituted church in gospel order.

The church then proceeded with business.

A unanimous call was given for the ordination of brother G. M. FETTER, a licentiate of the Old School Baptist Church of Southampton, Bucks Co., Pa., and one of the constituent members of said church just organized.

Two young men, one from Colorado, and one the eldest son of J. B. Dawson, presented themselves before the church, related some of the dealings of the Lord with them, and were received for baptism.

Preaching, praise and prayer occupied the remainder of the day and evening.

On Sunday morning, Nov. 3d, pursuant to arrangement, the church assembled, and presented the candidate, brother G. M. Fetter, to the presbytery for ordination.

He related his christian experience, call to the ministry, and gave expression at length of his doctrinal views; and after examination, the presbytery being fully satisfied with his calling and qualifications requisite to that of a gospel minister, proceeded with the laying on of hands by the presbytery.

Prayer by Elder A. D. Bourland.

Charge by Elder Asa Howard.

Right hand of fellowship by the members of the presbytery, and by each member of the church.

On Sunday afternoon, at two o'clock, brother L. D. Thompson, of Trinidad, Colorado, and brother A. G. Dawson, of Maxwell City, New Mexico, were buried in baptism in the Vermejo River, near the residence of J. B. Dawson, and received into full membership with the newly constituted church, which has adopted the name of SHILOH, and we trust that others who are lingering without may be gathered into it.

On Sunday evening Elder Bourland, in a most impressive sermon, spoke from the words, "Come hither, I will show thee the bride, the Lamb's wife." He was followed by Elder Howard, who continued the same subject with great liberty.

At the close of preaching the church convened to celebrate the ordinance of the Lord's supper, Elder G. M. Fetter officiating.

Monday morning the church convened for business, and proceeded to elect brother A. G. Dawson Clerk, and Elder G. M. Fetter Pastor and Moderator of the church.

Tuesday, after a meeting of a most impressive character, and spiritually "a feast of fat things, of wine on the lees, well refined," we separated, and each returned to the usual vocation of life, carrying with us precious memories of a wonderful meeting in the southwestern Rockies.

To those who live where there are many Old Baptists and old established churches it does not sound strange to hear of the constitution of a church and an ordination; but these scattered Baptists gathered into a church organization came from the Atlantic slope, from the sunny south, from Iowa, and all came together loving the same truth, and all standing aloof from the "lo heres" and "lo theres" that are on every side. Very remarkable, too, was the impression that led the two Elders, beloved for the truth's sake, to journey from Texas to this far-distant country last August to visit a scattered people of whom they had heard but little. The whole is very wonderful. We trust the Lord led them to us the first time they came, and that the same mighty hand returned them to us.

With love to all the household of faith, your sister in hope,

ELIZABETH H. BOGGS.

RATON, New Mexico, Nov. 10, 1895.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

SISTER Newkirk, beloved wife of Elder I. N. Newkirk, was born March 2d, 1840, and died Nov. 21st, 1895, aged 55 years, 8 months and 19 days.

She was married to I. N. Newkirk on March 20th, 1856, united with the Santa Rosa Church of Jesus Christ, called Old School Baptists, in 1869, and lived a consistent and worthy member of said church until she, with Elder Newkirk and others, were constituted into a church in Lake Co., Cal. In 1879 or 1880 that church lettered off some of its members, and the majority of the church moved bodily to Washington Territory, and soon joined the Harmony Church of like faith, in Columbia Co., of which sister Newkirk lived a humble and consistent member until her death, which event I will let the brother's own words describe. He says:

"Her faith triumphed over death through her blessed Lord and Savior. Her faith was true to the doctrine of salvation by the grace of God as the needle to the pole. Her words on her death-bed were almost like inspiration, and were eloquent with heavenly wisdom. She prayed for all her children, and felt she had received assurance that they would come out all right, and felt fully resigned to leave them in the hands of God, whom she said she loved with the same love with which he had loved her first. She praised him with the praise he had given her, and there was nothing at all of herself; no, all is from him. She rejoiced greatly at the prospect before her in the hour of death. She seemed to see that land which was far away, and all her enemies were scattered at the moment of her triumph. She was like a spring self-emptied and dipped in living water until it is full. Her sufferings were long, but her patience was great, while the radiance of heaven shined on her. She suffered after her illumination for fourteen days, with variations of light and shade. Sometimes her mind was wandering, and her feelings were variable in her subsequent walk through the valley of the shadow of death. It is not known whether she was conscious for several hours before her demise; but when she was dead such a radiance settled on her countenance as made me think her most beautiful, although I had not thought her beautiful before. Three of her children were with her during her suffering, the others arriving too late to see her alive."

What shall I say more of her? Words are weak in describing a heaven-born and heaven-taught soul in the triumphs of faith. Our sister in the faith of Jesus was blessed with the chief graces of a follower of the meek and lowly Nazarene. Few possessed a deeper sense of humility than she, always at the feet of her brethren. Physically she was not over strong, but was always triumphing through the faith of God's elect. The humble writer has often felt a strong desire to be blessed with those beautiful graces that seemed almost her nature. May her five living children be enabled by grace, though in sorrow, together with our dear brother, to bow in humble submission to the will of God. "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord."

Elder Pate being away at the time, there were no funeral services.

A. H. HAGANS.

SOUTH PASADENA, Cal., Dec. 2, 1895.

IT is my sad duty to record the death of our precious sister, Mary A. Bouie, another of Frying Pan's most devoted and beloved members. It grieves our heart to part with her, yet our grief is not without consolation. We cannot for her grieve as those who in this life only have hope. We have a blessed assurance that she lives; that her blessed Master, whom she so dearly loved and adored, has called her home. She was, we believe, willing rather to be absent from the body and to be present with the Lord; yet it is hard to give her up, and especially hard for her beloved husband, who was so dearly attached to her, and she to him. They were without children, but as children they were to each other. We beg that he will accept our sincere sympathy. Our prayer is that he may receive sustaining grace.

Sister Bouie was the daughter of Silas and Cynthia Cornwell. She was born April 1st, 1832, and died Oct. 12th, 1895. She was baptized by the writer in the fall of 1884, in the fellowship of the Frying Pan Church, where she remained until her death, loving and loved by all.

CORRESPONDENCE.

SOUTHAMPTON, Pa., Dec. 4, 1895.

DEAR BRETHREN:—Among my old letters I find four written by our dear aged sister, Mrs. Ann M. Fetter, of this place, from which I will send you some extracts for publication in the SIGNS. Her name is pleasantly familiar to your readers, as she has written occasionally for many years, and her communications by the pen, as well as in conference and conversation, have been of interest and value to spiritual readers and hearers, because they have ever been the expression of one deeply exercised upon spiritual things. The first of these letters was written in 1867, a short time before Elder Wm. J. Purington moved to this place to take the pastoral care of the church; the last was written in 1881, two years after he had moved to Hopewell, N. J., and three years before I became the pastor. Our dear sister has passed through deep trials and afflictions, and on account of ill health and weakness of body she has not written much of late years for the SIGNS, and has been often prevented from attending the meetings of the church, which is always felt by the brethren and sisters to be a great deprivation to them, by whom she is dearly loved and highly esteemed; for though she felt herself to be one of the poorest and weakest and least useful of the members, we feel that she is to us truly a "mother in Israel," and a very helpful and comforting one, on account of her deep and varied experience, her clear view, her care for others, and her steadfast devotion to the cause of truth. We are glad for ourselves and for her that she is now able to be at our meetings. She is about seventy-eight years of age, and is one of the two oldest in membership in our church, although there are others older in years. One of our dear sisters is ninety-four and still a regular attendant at the meetings when the day is pleasant. What a comfort it is, and what a cause for thankfulness and praise to our God, to see those who from childhood, or from the time of their first love for divine things, have attended the meetings of the church whenever it was possible, and who at such a great age are still as eager as ever to meet in the assembly of the saints. "Even down to old age" they prove by this "God's sovereign, eternal, unchangeable love;" for how is that love of God more manifested in its power and blessedness than in creating and keeping alive in the hearts of poor sinners such a desire toward the house of God that they can truly say that they prefer Jerusalem above their chief joys, and desire this one thing of the Lord, that they may dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of their life, to behold the beauty of the Lord, and to inquire in his temple? And what a beautiful example is thus set before the younger brethren, who are so often tempted to think that there are times when they really ought to disregard the dear Savior's command, and seek first some wordly thing instead of the kingdom of God, and who are liable to fall into the dangerous and pernicious habit of sometimes forsaking the assembling of themselves together, on account of some worldly business or pleasure. No child has a right to disregard the appointments of his mother, the church, and it is a blessing when he does not want to do so.

Your brother in hope,

SILAS H. DURAND.

SOUTHAMPTON, Pa., Sept. 16, 1867.

DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST:—I have often thought of you since you were here, and of the kind advice you gave me when I was telling some of my troubles, "Cast all your troubles upon the Lord, for he careth for you." It appeared to be accompanied by the Spirit of Christ, and has been a comfort to me ever since; and the conversation I had with you on other matters was a comfort to me. O that we had more of that Spirit of love and kindness toward each other as brothers and sisters. But alas! how often we see, when a brother or sister is overtaken in a fault, that they are met with hard words and a feeling that would crush him to the earth. O! do we feel our own weakness when we thus act? Do we not read of things that happened for our examples, to warn and instruct us? "Let him that thinketh he standeth, take heed lest he fall." O that we may have the Spirit of love and forbearance with one another, and that we may cultivate that spirit.

JUNE 23, 1877.

DEAR BROTHER DURAND:—I will now try to comply with your request, although I feel very incompetent to write to one that stands upon the walls of Zion, and one that I value so highly as a minister of the gospel. Why it was that you requested me to write you when you were here at our association, I do not know. Fe[illegible] ignorance and weakness I[illegible]e to attempt it; but P[illegible] "Be ready always to gi[illegible]r to every one that asket[illegible]son of the hope that is in y[illegible]ekness and fear." Now if the Lord will be pleased to give me light and understanding, I will try to pen a few lines. I was much pleased with our association. Yes, I think I can say that I was pleased beyond my expectation. I was built up, comforted and strengthened. I felt to say, How beautiful are the feet of them that preach the gospel of peace and bring glad tidings of good things. Dear brother, how beautifully you spoke of the dream. I have it in my mind yet. I think I was prepared for our association.

I will try and tell you some of the exercises of my mind for the last six months. For some months I was in the valley, very low down indeed, almost in "Doubting Castle." I did not know but I should be shipwrecked. My sins rose up before me like mountains which would hide my precious Jesus from my view. I almost felt forsaken. I wandered about trying to seek relief, but no relief could I find. I would read the promises in the Bible where I had found relief before, but I had no key to unlock them. I was in this state of mind for three or four months. One day I went into my room and sat down, wishing to seek relief. I told my granddaughter to hand me a book from the table. She asked, "What book?" I told her I did not care which. I had no choice at first, but my eye fell upon the "Pilgrim's Progress," and I told her to give me that. I opened to where Christian and Hopeful got into the hands of "Giant Despair," and I read something of what I had experienced. After they had been beaten and used roughly, and almost despaired of life, and when it was midnight with them, they began to pray. Dear brother, those that have been in like condition know their feelings. I dare say you have traveled the same road. We only know it by experience. Now, when it was almost break of day, what light broke into Christian's mind. He was amazed when he remembered that he had a key in his bosom called promise, which he was persuaded would open any lock in "Doubting Castle." O how it cheered his brother. He advised him to pluck it out of his bosom and try; and as he tried it how the bolts gave back, and the doors flew open with ease. Some of the bolts went hard, yet the key opened them, although one made such a creaking noise that it awakened "Giant Despair," but he felt his limbs fail so that he could by no means go after them. Then they went on and came to the King's highway again, and so were safe.

Dear brother, when we are enabled to lay hold of the promises of the gospel it is then we can rejoice and sing,

"O! could I speak the matchless worth,
O! could I sound the glories forth,
That in my Savior shine;
I'd soar and touch the heavenly strings,
And vie with Gabriel while he sings,
In notes that are divine."

I think I was enabled to lay hold of some of those promises that Christian and Hopeful spoke of while on their way. I was edified and comforted in reading their travel. I had read the book before, but never saw so much beauty in it as now. I would pause while reading it and wonder if any one else ever saw so much of their experience in it as I did. I thought perhaps I was wrong. The next Sunday Elder Purington preached as though he knew the state of my mind, and at the close of his discourse came over the very part of the "Pilgrim's Progress" I had been reading. I could but smile for joy, and this passage came into my mind, "All thy children shall be taught of the Lord, and great shall be the peace of thy children." It reminded me of the time I was relieved of my burden and found peace. It was on this wise. I was in great trouble of mind, and my dear old mother gave me a book she prized highly, called the "Christian's looking glass." It was treating on this passage of Scripture, "We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren." While I was reading I was made to rejoice, and felt to say, "Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian." Yet my joy was not full. I was afraid to accept consolation because it was the writing of men. But on the next Sunday I was permitted to hear the same doctrine from the pulpit, and my joy was full. Thus we see that the Lord brings relief in his own time and way. O what a comfort there is in the gospel! "Comfort ye, comfort ye my people, saith your God." "The voice of him that crieth in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord; make straight in the desert a high way for our God. Every valley shall be exalted, and every mountain and hill shall be made low, and the crooked shall be made straight, and the rough places plain; and all flesh shall see it together; for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it." May we not say, "O the depth of the riches, both of the wisdom and knowledge of God!" O, dear brother, when we are permitted to view him in all his perfections does it not humble us in the dust? I am often made to cry out, O wretched one that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death? I often find myself rebelling against God's providence, and abusing his blessings, which makes me abhor myself and repent in dust and ashes. I have no perfection of my own, but may I be enabled to press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God which is in Christ Jesus. May I have that hope as an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast.

I will now close my letter. I have written it in the night, when all was still and quiet, as it came to my mind. Such as I have give I unto you. You will find out many mistakes, which you will have to excuse. If we are never permitted to see each other in the flesh, O may we be so happy as to have part in that resurrection which our beloved Elder Quint set forth at our association. I never saw it so beautiful before. I must say I believe the Lord was with us at our meeting, both in preaching and hearing. I felt, as I sat and listened to our dear Elder Beebe, that it was perhaps the last time I should ever hear him. He seemed to have so much liberty, and was so clear in his remarks, I rejoiced to hear him. A great many points were cleared up to my satisfaction by some one of the speakers; I cannot tell which one, neither does it matter. They were all taught of the Lord, and all spake, "not with the words which man's wisdom teacheth, but which the Holy Ghost teacheth, comparing spiritual things with spiritual." O that I may be kept by the power of God unto salvation.

APRIL 7, 1879.

DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST:—I have been much depressed in spirit of late, and I feel like writing to you, as I have received words of comfort from you heretofore. I hope I have no other object in view than the honor and glory of God. I have been led much on the subject of the children of Israel, how they were led through the wilderness. What a true type of the church of Christ! How often they rebelled and complained against Moses for bringing them into trouble; and yet when they were out of their troubles how soon they forgot their deliverances and went right back into bondage again. Just like it is with the children of God now. How often we forget our blessings, and do not appreciate them as we should. We find fault and complain of our lot in providence, forgetting that our heavenly Father knoweth what is best for us. Then in order that we may appreciate his goodness and mercy, he hides his face from us for a while. O how often our way seems hedged up, just like the children of Israel when they came to the Red Sea; they were hedged in upon every side. But Moses said unto the people, "Fear ye not, stand still, and see the salvation of the Lord, which he will show you to-day." I have thought what a glorious passage of Scripture to be left on record, w[illegible] are hedged up on every sid[illegible] not go forward or back[illegible] to either the right hand o[illegible] O what a comfort, when [illegible] his condition, to hear that [illegible] ill, small voice, saying, "Stand still, and see the salvation of the Lord." O that we may have faith given us to rely upon his word. I never before saw so much meaning in that portion that says, "If ye have faith as a grain of mustard seed, ye shall say to this mountain, Be removed to yonder place, and it shall be removed." O what mountains of unbelief and trouble faith removes! I feel that I am a poor, dull scholar in the school of Christ, if one at all; but sometimes I think that I have a glimpse of the promised land. O that I might live as a pilgrim and a stranger while here below. God forbid that I should bring a reproach upon the cause that I am so much interested in.

I suppose you have heard that we are going to lose Elder Purington as our pastor, something that we were in hope would not take place. We are very sorry indeed. We loved him for the truth's sake. He shunned not to declare the whole counsel of God. We feel to bid him God speed wherever he may go. O that we may be enabled to say, "Thy will be done." Dear brother, pray for us that we may be kept by the power of God unto salvation. Pray that the great Head of the church may send us a pastor after his own heart. I hope the Lord has a people in this place, and he says that his portion is his people; Jacob is the lot of his inheritance. While we are in the wilderness may the good Lord lead us about and instruct us; and while he stirs up our nest, as an eagle stirreth up her nest so that the young eagles will fall, may he take us and bear us on the wings of his love; and may he so lead us that there will be no strange god with us. We feel that we are a poor and afflicted people, but our trust is in the Lord, feeling confident that he is able to hold us up.

JUNE 15, 1881.

I have thought much about you since our association. I was glad to see you, and hear you preach once more. We had excellent preaching throughout the meeting. After Elder Bundy was through speaking, and Elder Beebe arose and said, "Perhaps it would be well to close the association then," I felt to realize his feelings. I felt that we were full. I think I can speak for the church at Southampton, that she was built up and comforted and refreshed. Some of us had been much cast down and in the dark before, and had felt to stand still and see the salvation of God. We feel that he has not altogether forgotten to be gracious. He is too wise to err, too good to be unkind. O may we have faith given us to look to him, and trust in his almighty power, and to feel that without him we can do nothing; and may we wait patiently for him to send us a pastor to go in and out before us, and break unto us the bread of life. We greatly feel that we need one, but the Lord knows what is best for us. May we wait upon him, and not say, "The Lord delayeth his coming," and so go into any undutiful means. May the Lord bless you, and make the path of duty plain before you. I formerly thought that ministers were the happiest people in the world; but I think differently now. I believe they have more anxiety of mind than any others; but the Lord has promised to be with them, even to the end of the world. O what a promise! If they have his presence they need no more.

I remain your affectionate sister in the Lord,

ANN M. FETTER.

DRAIN, Oregon, Oct. 31, 1895.

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES—DEAR BRETHREN:—At our last meeting Elder Williams requested me to write my christian experience. When he spoke to me about it I trembled, and told him I had very little to tell. Since I came home I cannot get it off my mind, knowing that he is far advanced in years, and that I too am growing old. I am afraid if I do not comply with his request I may some day regret it. I have never talked about any subject that so humbles my pride as that of what I believe to be the Lord's dealings with me, poor, sinful me. I am naturally high spirited, and it has been a source of great trouble to me; but the power of God is able to bring the most stubborn heart under subjection to his holy will.

I was born on February 1st, 1845, and was raised by good, christian parents. When I look back over my past life and see how many times I have grieved them with my wayward ways it brings tears to my eyes; but I never knew at that time what they felt for me, as I have since I have had a family of my own. I loved to attend dances, and always went with good company, but have often seen my mother in tears after she had given her consent for me to go. Time rolled on until her death, in the year 1866, and then was the last time I had any desire to visit the ball room. When I looked upon the dear lifeless form of my mother my sins rose like mountains before me. I felt, O if I could only bring her back again long enough to ask her forgiveness of all my sins; but alas! it was too late. I tried to ask the Lord to forgive me, but got no relief. That same fall of 1866 my husband joined the Mt. Zion Church, and then my troubles increased. I felt that it caused a separation between us, and perhaps for life; not naturally, but spiritually. He joined on Saturday. I did not go to the meeting that day. I asked him why he was not immersed that day, and he replied that he wanted me to see him baptized. I told him I could not go; but he insisted that I should go, so I went. I never had any thing to hurt my feelings as that did, that I could not go with him and be immersed. Tears flowed from my eyes. I did not go up with the congregation, but stood by the stream, too weak to walk.

Time passed till the fall of 1869, when my trouble came on with double force. It seemed like I surely could not live in that state of mind much longer. On the second day of January, 1870, my babe, our third child, fell over agaist a heating stand (I had him tied in a rocking chair), and was burned so badly that for three days we all thought he would die. This I blamed myself for, and thought, Where is your God that you have been praying to? I now believe that it was Satan making such suggestions to me. Such hours I had never experienced as I then passed through for three days and nights. Finally on the third morning I went into my room, locked the door, and fell on knees, never expecting to rise again. I had just knelt down when a still, small voice whispered, "Daughter, be of good cheer; thy sins are forgiven." I raised up in amazement, and tried to get my burden back again; for I thought, What will the people think of me if I go back praising God, where my babe is laying, expecting every hour will be the last with him? But thanks be to my heavenly Father, my babe was spared to me, but with scars on his face that he will carry to his grave. Often when I look at him my mind goes back to the time when that event took place. But at the time I was so happy, right under the chastening rod, and in the midst of death, as I thought. My tears were dried, and I concealed my feelings as best I could, and went out of my room. All eyes were turned on me, and if I had been with a band of holy angels they surely could not have looked sweeter to me than the faces of all who were there.

Thus I have told of my wonderful deliverance from sin unto salvation, if I am not deceived; but I very often fear that I have been deceived, for I know that surely I am the chief of sinners. Now I want to tell you of my disobedience. After I felt that God for Christ's sake had taken me up out of the miry clay, and placed my feet upon the only sure rock, Christ Jesus, and put a new song in my mouth, I went on for five years before I united with the church, and had to be brought in under the chastening rod. Dear brethren, can any of you tell me why it is that some children never obey, only under the rod? I sometimes think I can explain that. They have such stubborn, stony hearts that it takes more to soften them than others. I acknowledge that has been the case with me; and I have also a very unruly tongue, and say and do things that constantly grieve me. But the brethren and sisters have borne with me in my sinful nature for these twenty years that I have had a name with them. O how I love them!

My husband and I left Illinois in 1877, with letters of dissmission from Mt. Zion Church, in Fulton County, and have been deprived of church privileges most of the time since. Let me say to all who are situated in the same way that we can sympathize with you. It is a painful thing to be separated from those we love better than all others upon earth; but we feel it is for God's glory; for those who can write have often comforted God's children more than those who have access to the house or church of God, who have plenty, and lack nothing. They do not know what their scattered brethren suffer for the lack of gospel preaching. They are scattered, I sometimes think, for that very reason, that the name of the Lord may be honored and glorified through their writing. I cannot say that it has been the case with me, for I never could write to the comfort of any of the dear children; but I can drink freely from the writings of those who have been thus situated, as we have been.

The blessed Lord is reviving our little church. Last May we held the first meeting we have had for several years, and several have come in and united with us. Last Sunday, October 27th, we had the happy privilege of seeing our two oldest daughters buried with Christ in baptism, after relating to the church the dealings of the Lord with them. It was a beautiful sight to me to see my loving young girls obeying their Savior's command. My cup was full. There are others who are near and dear that are waiting outside of the door. I pray that strength may be given them to come in.

I must close. This is at your disposal. If you publish it, and Elder Williams reads it, he will find out how sinful I have been, and may not have much fellowship for me. I want ever to be kept humble at the feet of Jesus. I believe he is a complete Savior.

"Nothing in my hand I bring,
Simply to the cross I cling."

In christian love to all who know the joyful sound, I am your weak sister,

EDITORS OF THE SIGNS—DEAR BRETHREN:—Some have desired through the SIGNS to hear from me, and I take this opportunity to comply. I reached home safe after an absence of thirty-two days, visiting the Corresponding Meeting in Virginia, and churches in that state; also the Salisbury Association, which met at Delmar, Del., and the Delaware Association, which met with Cow Marsh Church, in Delaware. The meetings were well attended, and there seemed to be a spirit of hearing as well as of preaching the word of the Lord. There was a spirit of love and fellowship manifested among all with whom I met. If there was anything of a wrangling, jangling voice I failed to hear it, or was not well educated enough to discover it; but should I have heard or seen such, I would much rather, like Shem and Japheth, have taken a covering and walked backward and hidden it from view, than to publish it to the world. The preaching was spiritual and able, and I believe the Lord was in it. Indeed I felt unworthy to be permitted to enjoy it. I do not think I could make allusions to each preacher and say what should be said without unintentionally and seemingly show partiality, which I would not wish to do. But I can say that I became much endeared to the brethren and sisters and all the ministers whom I met, and only regret that I could not be with them more, my stay seemed so short. I hope I will be excused in saying that my eyes were filled with tears when Elder W. L. Beebe said we might not see his face again. He is beloved and esteemed among his brethren, who delight to honor him as beloved in the Lord. I trust the Lord may spare him days to come to speak in his name the blessed things of his kingdom. The brethren received me very kindly, and I assure them in this that I have love for them as the children of God, as saints in his kingdom, and as ministers of Jesus. There was almost a general expression of heart-felt devotion while our highly esteemed brother, Elder Rittenhouse, spoke at the Salisbury Association. It was indeed to me a wonderful sermon, which I shall never forget, because I felt it in my own heart and in my experience. I felt like I wished I could preach like him. This I cannot help but refer to; yet I heard other preaching which was wonderful indeed. It was of the Lord.

I have heard of some who dreaded, as preachers, to go among able and great men; but not so with me, for I always learn something from them; and when my time comes to speak as the Lord gives me ability (for I can do no more), and in the confidence of that God, the true and living God, who can thresh a mountain with a worm, I am emboldened to go forth. I filled thirty-two appointments, traveled two thousand three hundred and sixty miles, and lacked nothing in the journey, and have some humble hope the Lord was in it. I wish to say also that I reached home safe and found all well and anxious to see me again. "Bless the Lord, O my soul; and all that is within me, bless his holy name. Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits." I did not expect to write so much, but felt like I did wish to express a few things. I hope the Lord may bless his dear people among whom my lot was cast, and whom I visited with so much pleasure to myself. "What shall I more say?" for time and space forbid more at present. The Lord bless you all, and continue to le[illegible]ou in paths of righteousness [illegible]me's sake, is my prayer.

[illegible] hope,

W. LIVELY.

KINCARDINE, Ont., Dec. 14, 1895.

DEAR BRETHREN AND READERS OF THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES:—I have no doubt that there are a great many who have felt very anxious for our favorite paper, the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. And why is it our favorite paper? Because in reading it we are often assured that we are not alone in this world, but that there are others who are being brought by a way they knew not, and led in paths they have not known. Because the editors and correspondents are manifested as lovers of God, because God first loved them. By him are given able ministers of the new testament, who rightly divide the word of truth. In reading the SIGNS have we not oft been refreshed in our souls and made to bless God that there are such ministers and people in the world? Look at the editorials from the commencement of the SIGNS until the present, and see how clearly and fully the glory of God is set forth; not only that he is infinite in love, but also in wisdom and power; yes, infinite in all his attributes. And O how the dear Savior of sinners is set forth; not as a beggar, not as inviting, but as mighty to save; as dying the just for the unjust; as finishing the work his Father gave him to do, and declaring, "Because I live, ye shall live also." Have we not proved the above? Do we ever live without Jesus? I know I do not. I can live only as I see Jesus by faith. Then I can rejoice in God as my all for time and eternity. Then alone can we run and not be weary, and walk and not faint.

The above are a few of the reasons why we love and would pray for the prosperity of the SIGNS. Remember, dear brethren, that many of the readers of the SIGNS are scattered ones, who are not favored to hear preaching more than once or twice a year, if as often as that; and as they cannot hear the preaching, nor meet with their brethren, therefore they long for and are thankful to God for the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. May the dear Lord favor us to remember the above named things, and put it into the hearts of all to remit their subscriptions when due, so that the publishers may know how they stand, and not be harrassed and perplexed.

I remain your brother in the hope of the gospel,

R. CASE.

EDITORIAL NOTICES.

WILL OUR BRETHREN

AND friends who sent us new subscribers for this year at the one dollar rate please to ascertain of them whether they wish their paper continued or not? Many of the new subscribers are not aware of the fact that it has always been our rule to continue a subscription after the time paid for has expired, unless ordered to discontinue it, and therefore neglect to notify us if they wish it discontinued, and when they find they are delinquents in many cases repudiate their accounts.

PLEASE BE SURE

IN sending remittances for renewals of subscriptions to give us the same name in which the paper is already coming. If the party is married, and the paper is coming in the wife's name, and we receive remittance to renew the subscription, and the husband's name is given, we have no means of knowing that it is meant for the subscription in the wife's name; consequently the husband's name is entered on our list, and the paper sent to both parties. Or if the paper is coming in the husband's name, and the renewal is sent in the wife's name, the same thing is likely to occur. It is a good plan to inclose in the letter one of the little pink slips containing the name, taken either from the margin of the paper or from the wrapper in which the paper comes.

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE.

TO MOST of our readers the above mentioned book is too well known to need any introduction or a description by us. While many of the Bibles have a Concordance appended, they are generally so condensed or abridged as to be of little or no use. Cruden's Complete Concordance, however, enables one to readily turn to any passage of Scripture of which they can call to mind two or three words, and in our opinion is the most complete and convenient as a reference book of any published. In addition, it contains many other aids in studying the Bible, as may be seen by reference to advertisement on last page. Remember, both the books there mentioned are CRUDEN'S COMPETE.

HOLIDAY PRESENTS.

To our brethren and friends who may be contemplating making "Holiday Presents" we suggest that they look over our list of Bibles, Hymn Books, Concordances, Histories and other books, and see if they cannot find what they want.

THE NEW BIRTH.

WE have received several requests of late for our views upon this subject. Among them was one from our brother, Elder E. V. White, of Virginia, and one from brother J. H. Blackburn, of Chatham, Ontario. The last named mentions especially John iii. 5, and asks us to write, because he says there is a difference of opinion among Baptists upon this subject.

In reply we desire first to say that we do not suppose there is any difference among Old School Baptists as to the truth itself that a man must be born again to see the kingdom of God. There can be no difference as to the fact of the new birth without involving a denial of the testimony of the Savior himself. It is not of this that our brother speaks, we feel sure, when he says there is a difference among the Baptists. Brother White, in writing to us, also alluded to the fact of there being some difference of view in various sections. We ourself are well aware that several years ago a variety of views were held concerning questions connected with the new birth, and there was a very full and free expression of these different views through the SIGNS, and in the columns of other papers. We will frankly say that we have hesitated for a long time about writing upon this subject, because it was so fully discussed some years ago. If we are permitted to write upon the subject at this time, we do so with no desire to do more than present our own view, and ask the kindly consideration of the brethren upon it. We would have a controversy straightway with any one who should venture to deny the fact that a man must be born again to see or enter the kingdom of heaven; but if any brother fails to agree with our view concerning many questions that might be asked, with him we shall have no controversy; for we remember that the Savior himself said of it that it was like the wind, whose coming and going we could not control nor understand, and which was known to us only by its effects.

We have hesitated about writing upon this subject at this time for another reason. In the SIGNS for March 20th, current volume, Elder H. M. Curry has a most able and exhaustive article upon this subject, which we felt at the time, and do still feel, to cordially indorse, and to which, it has seemed to us, we could add nothing. Perhaps, however, this is no good reason for keeping silence ourself upon this theme, since we should not soon write upon any Bible subject if we waited to find one that had not already been presented. Our chief object, however, in calling attention to brother Curry's article was that we might express our cordial appreciation of it.

The new birth is referred to in the following places in the Bible. John i. 13, where it is declared to be not of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, nor of blood, but of God. This clearly proves that this new birth did not originate with man or with God; that it was not brought about by any fleshly aid, but by the power of God; that there was no qualification for it originally in the flesh or by nature in man, but that it is altogether divine in its origin, nature and results. In verse twelve of this same chapter it is declared that those thus born become the sons of God. We then are not by nature children of God, but children of wrath, but in the new birth are given power to become the sons of God.

In John iii. 3–8 we are taught clearly, first, that no man by mere teaching can either see or enter the kingdom of God. Nicodemus, it is here said, came confessing that Jesus was a teacher come from God. He came to ask for instruction. Jesus tells him in substance that no man can be instructed in the things of the kingdom of heaven, or even see that kingdom, except he be born again. "Ye must be born again." Second, that this birth is from above; for the Greek word anothen, here translated "again," signifies literally "from above." That is, it is not brought about by human agencies, but by divine power. The kingdom is from above, and so is all that pertains to it, including the birth. Third, that as we are born into this natural world, and into all that this world contains, so we are born into the spiritual world. Both worlds are entered by a birth: the one of the earth, the other from above. Fourth, that each birth is after its own kind. The one is all natural in its origin, nature and effects; the other spiritual in its origin, nature and effects. "That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit." Here it seems to us that Jesus teaches what every day's experience proves to be true of us all. Every desire, thought, feeling, passion, imagination and work of the flesh is necessarily like the flesh, because every stream is like its fountain; while, on the other hand, every desire, thought, feeling, passion, imagination and work that is spiritual in its nature is of the Spirit, and therefore is spiritual. Fifth, that we cannot trace back to their source nor on to their end the operations of the power which produces the new birth, any more than we can trace the wind before it comes and after it has passed by; but we simply feel the present power of the divine work, and witness some of the present effects. The new birth is like the coming of the Son of man, which Jesus said again was like the lightning, which shines from one part of heaven unto the other. If man could anticipate it, or trace it either forward or backward, it would not be, as it is declared to be, of God, and not of the will of man. No atom of human might nor wisdom can enter into that which is under the supreme control of the power of God. Sixth, that it is not a second natural birth. If it were but a second birth into this world, then it would of necessity be a natural birth; but it is a birth from above, and by it we are brought forth into that kingdom which is from above. No one that we are aware of has ever said that a man must be born over again, and we have been at a loss sometimes to know why some have been fighting this expression, since no one uses it. If the birth were a second entering of the womb, when a man was old, and being born, as Nicodemus seemed to think the Savior meant, then we might say that men were born over again, but not otherwise. Men are simply born from above, not born of the earth a second time. To be born again, by a second natural birth, would not enable a man to see the kingdom of heaven, any more than he can do so by his first birth. No; the man must be born from above to enter into the things which are from above. Seventh, that it is man that must be born again. Man, the very man who came to Jesus by night, must be born from above. "Except a man." "Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again" (from above). It is not a part of a man. Jesus did not say, Except the soul or the body or the spirit be born again, but a man. Why should any man desire to say that only a part of a man is born again, when Jesus made his language so full as to take in the whole man? It seems to us sure that any view of what the new birth is which will not give the full force and emphasis to the Savior's testimony, that not a part of man, but man, is born again, must of necessity be but a partial and imperfect view of the matter; and any view of the new birth which does not embrace man as its subject seems to us utterly mistaken and misleading. To the term "man" must be given the plain and simple meaning that it has anywhere else in the Scriptures, or that we would give it in our ordinary conversation. According to this Scripture it is man, not a part of him, not something else besides man, but man, that must be and is the subject of the new birth. We may reason about this matter. Our reasonings may be true or false (they are more likely to be false than true), but the direct testimony of the Savior is sure: "Except a man be born again."

Six times in his first epistle this same apostle speaks of believers as being born of God, and gives many evidences by which it may be known that the new birth has taken place. In all these places it is declared that this birth is of God, and the testimony is as clear as language can make it that man is the subject of this birth; and the evidences of the new birth, as enumerated by this apostle, are "doing righteousness" (1 John ii. 29), "love" (1 John iv. 7), "believing" (1 John v. 1), and "overcoming the world" (1 John v. 4).

In 1 Peter i. 23 the new birth is again spoken of. "Being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth forever." Let it be noticed that here the apostle Peter indirectly presents the same testimony as does John in the first chapter of his gospel. There, as we have before called attention, the apostle testifies that it is not of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God; and here Peter, after saying it is of incorruptible seed, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth forever, says, "For all flesh is grass," &c. Because all flesh is perishable, like the grass, therefore the birth which is divine and spiritual cannot be of the flesh, but must be of the Spirit, and by his word; and still farther, here we must also take notice that it is not said to be by the preaching of the word, but by the word or testimony of God himself, which, when once heard, shall abide forever.

These are all the places in the New Testament where the new birth is directly spoken of, at least by name. Many other Scriptures allude to and imply the new birth, but these are all, we believe, which treat directly upon it. In the Scriptures of the Old Testament the word "born" is used two or three times relating to the kingdom of Christ which was to be set up upon earth. They are Psalm xxii. 31, Isaiah lxvi. 8, Psalm lxxxvii. 6, and perhaps one or two other places; but two of these places at least do not refer to the new birth in the New Testament sense of the word, as applied there to individuals, but rather to the glorious ushering in of the gospel dispensation, when Jesus arose from the dead, and brought all his chosen ones out from under the curse of the law. In Psalm lxxxvii. 6 the reference is to the happy estate of the man who was so blessed that it could be said of him, "This man was born in Zion." While it may be urged that the reference here is rather to the literal city of Jerusalem, yet we know that Jerusalem was a type of the spiritual city of God; and so the psalmist was here inspired to write of that which in the ages to come should be clearly revealed in the testimony of the Savior and his apostles.

We have now called attention to those Scriptures which directly use the term "birth" or "born" with reference to the kingdom of heaven, and we have seen that they make some things very plain with regard to it. Man himself cannot bring it about, either in himself or in another man. It is of God, and from above; and it is a birth of the man himself, not of a part of the man, nor something besides man nor outside of man, but the man. It seems to us that these things at least are clearly testified in these Scriptures which have been quoted, and that inferences which may be drawn from other Scriptures, which do not directly present the new birth, ought to be received with a great deal of caution, if those inferences seem to contradict these direct testimonies to which we have been referring. At all events, we think it right to adhere as closely to plain scriptural testimony as we can.

The Scriptures state facts, but they do not always state the reasons for those facts being what they are. We may reason and philosophize about these things, and no man is bound to accept our reasoning. On the other hand, all of us are bound to accept and believe every word of the Scriptures. We have here tried to confine ourself to the plain letter of the word.

We are well aware that there are many questions concerning the new birth which have arisen among the best brethren, and about which much has been said. Of these we cannot now speak. We have never thought that they should affect the love and confidence of brethren. We do not think they will, when we are being led by the Spirit of Christ. We submit these thoughts to the brethren, and hope they will throw the mantle of that charity which hides the multitude of faults over what we have said. We should be glad to hear from both brother White and brother Blackburn upon the subject proposed by them.

C.

PSALM XV.

THE poetry of this psalm is most gloriously sublime, and the figures employed are grand and beautiful.

"My heart is inditing a good matter." It is not a mere superficial display of bombast, nor the vain speculations of the brain; the subject is seated deeply in the heart, the seat of life, whence all the warm flow of vitality gushes forth through its ten thousand curious channels to minister life and vigor to every part of the body. The conceptions of the heart are expressed by the tongue; for with the heart man believeth unto righteonsness, and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation. That which is indited in the heart, like the new wine, must have vent, or it lies as fire shut up in the bones. "I will speak." And what shall be the theme? That heart in which God has shined, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ, will allow the tongue only to utter the things indited touching the King. Everything else recedes, nothing else seems worth a thought, and the tongue yields its passive obedience to the dictation of the heart. "My tongue is the pen of a ready writer." How forcible the figure! No writer's pen has power of itself to write; but the tongue as an organ for the heart, the life, the vitality of the church of God, is like the pen, depending on the wisdom, skill and management of the ready writer.

Time and space would fail us were we to trace what is here set forth "touching the King," God's King, whom he hath set on his holy hill Zion, as the antitype of David. "He is fairer than the children of men." He is God, the Son of God, and the Son of man. He is the Word that was with God, and he is the Word that was God, and he is the Word that was made flesh and dwelt among us, whose glory the primitive saints beheld, the glory as of the Only Begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth. He is the brightness of the Father's glory and the express image of his person. "His brightness was as the light; he had horns coming out of his hand, and there was the hiding of his power." —Hab. iii. 4. Yet fair and bright and heavenly as he appears, God has predestinated all whom he foreknew to be conformed to his image, that he should be the first-born among many brethren. "Grace is poured into thy lips." View him as the Head of the church, which is his body, as inseparably and indissolubly identified with that body, as he is inseparably and indissolubly identified with the eternal Father, and that grace which is poured into his lips, and of which he is full, constitutes that unwasting fullness of which all the members of his mystical body have received, grace for grace. Grace is poured, not to be. God has saved us and called us, not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began.—2 Tim. i. 9. In his lips what grace appears! His lips utter the words of eternal life. The words which proceed from his lips are spirit, and they are life. In his lips is that grace which feeds, comforts, instructs and secures his children. The grace of his lips speak all the promises which are in him, yea, and amen, to the glory of God by us. From his gracious lips proceed all the laws and ordinances of Zion; not in the thunder of that voice in which the Sinai covenant was uttered, but from lips that are filled with grace and truth. "Therefore God hath blessed thee for evermore." Although as a Son Christ could receive blessings of the Father (he asked for life, and God gave to him length of days for evermore), it is not therefore to be inferred that he was not in his own eternal Godhead that very God from whom all these blessings and life proceed. He was not only with God, but he was God, and that in the most unqualified sense of the word, or else it would be idolatry to worship him. As the King whom God has set on Zion, as the Mediatorial head and life of his church, he could and did receive grace, poured into his lips, for all the members of his body; for as all the fullness of the Godhead dwells in him bodily, so is he the complete and perfect embodiment of all the church. "And ye are complete in him, who is the Head of all principality and power." Col. ii. 10. All his body and members are then vitally interested in and partakers of the everlasting blessing which God has bestowed on him as their representative. "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in he[illegible]places in Christ, according as he has chosen us in him before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before him in love."—Eph. i. 3, 4. And all these blessings of the saints in Christ are for ever.

Are those whom God has predestinated to the adoption of children, in their fallen, Adamic nature, in rebellion against God? And must they be conquered, subdued and subjected to his government? This also is provided for, and the provision is found in the things indited and spoken touching the King, in this psalm. "Gird thy sword upon thy thigh, O most Mighty, with thy glory and thy majesty. And in thy majesty ride prosperously, because of truth, and meekness, and righteousness; and thy right hand shall teach thee terrible things." The work of subjecting sinners to his government is not left to the will or power of men, to misssionary boards, or missionary funds, to human persuasion or conquest. Girded with all the power of heaven and earth, having power over all flesh, that he should give eternal life to all that the Father has given him, in majesty he rides forth, making the clouds his chariots, and riding on the wings of the wind, and in his excellency on the sky. Nor does he ride in vain, wooing, striving and pleading, and anon despairing, and leaving many, or any that the Father gave him, to sink down to hell at last. But with majesty he rides prosperously, not only in subduing his subjects and bringing them to rejoice in his government, but also in defending his kingdom from all the assaults of sin, and death, and hell. His arrows are not offers and proffers of conditional salvation presented to the volition of men, but they are effectual and irresistible.

"Thine arrows are sharp in the heart of the King's enemies." These arrows from Jehovah's quiver are not directed at the volition or fleshly passions of men, but they are in the heart; "whereby thy people fall under thee." None are brought under Christ by any other arrows, or means, or instrumentalities, but by his arrows, directed, sent forth from his bow, and never failing to strike the very individuals to whom they are sent, between the joints of their harness, and penetrate the heart. Nothing short of this could effect the design of this divine Archer. He neither lacks skill to direct the arrow nor power to send it into the heart, consequently it never fails to do its execution. As in Revelation Christ is represented as riding with his bow and with his crown, from conquering to conquer, so also in this psalm his arrows and his throne and his sceptre are spoken of in his riding prosperously. "Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever; the sceptre of thy kingdom is a right sceptre." This language, according to the inspired interpretation, Heb. i. 8, is addressed to the Son of God to show that he is not only superhuman and superangelic, but that he is one with the Father, even as he is one also with his church. That he is really God in the full sense of the word, is not only demonstrated in this recognition, but we find that all the attributes of the Godhead are ascribed to him, equally as they are ascribed to the Father and to the Holy Ghost. His throne and sceptre in this case refer to his Mediatorial government, for they are connected with his kingdom in the text as the sceptre of his kingdom; and in Hebrews it is said, "I have set my King upon my holy hill Zion," &c.; and this government being for ever and ever, will never be superseded by councils, conventions, mission boards, popes nor bishops; it is a right sceptre, and therefore cannot be improved or changed for the better.

"Thou lovest righteousness and hatest wickedness; therefore God, thy God, hath anointed thee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows." As the head of the church is Christ, so the head of Christ is God; and as the whole Christ dwells in the church, so the fullness of the Godhead dwells bodily in Christ; and as Christ in his Godhead is truly the only wise God our Savior, so in his Mediatorial Sonship (or if the term be more appropriate, we will say in his Mediatorial Headship) he is the anointed of the Father; and God, even his God, has anointed him. Hence he is the Christ (or anointed) of the Father.

Having thus far treated upon the things indited in this psalm touching the King personally and relatively, as God, and as Mediator between God and men, the inspired writer proceeds to illustrate the glorious attractions by the use of a cluster of appropriate and well selected metaphors. "All thy garments smell of myrrh, and aloes, and cassia, out of the ivory palaces, whereby they have made thee glad." The incense and fragrance of spices offered under the old priesthood were typical of what is here applied to Christ; his offering is of a sweet smelling savor unto God. By his garments we may understand, first, the vail, that is to say, his flesh, in which his Godhead was vailed in the day of his incarnation, his zeal which he wore as a cloak, his vengeance which he put on as a garment, and above all, his vesture dipped in blood; or the robe in which John saw him, in Rev. i., which was girt about the paps, and which extended down to his feet. Or, secondly, it may be applied to the garments of righteousness and salvation in which he has clothed his mystical body, the church. These are all richly perfumed; and when shaken from the dust, and released from the bands of her neck, she is made to "Arise and shine," and she puts on her beautiful garments. All these garments come from the ivory palaces; they belong to the royal family, and are to be worn by none but kings and priests who shall reign with Christ for ever.

"Kings' daughters are among thy honorable women," &c. This declaration, with what follows in the 10th, 11th and 12th verses, seems intended to set forth the superlative glory of the King's household, as also in Cant. vi. 8, 9. "There are three score queens, and four score concubines, and virgins without number. My dove, my undefiled, is but one; she is the only one of her mother; she is the choice one of her that bare her. The daughters saw her and blessed her; yea, the queens and concubines, and they praised her." Whether by the kings' daughters we are to understand the numerous branches of the church of Christ set forth, or whether this figure is intended to represent something else, we shall leave our more enlightened brethren to determine; but we conclude from the description given of the queen in gold of Ophir, that the church in her gospel organization, as one perfect, full and complete body, embracing all her members, is intended. Her position is at the right hand of the king, thus honorably distinguished and approved. In verse 13 she is called the king's daughter. Allowing Christ to be the king, in the spiritual import of this figure, and the church his daughter, the glorious doctrine of seminal union is inculcated. Christ is not only represented in the Scriptures as the Head, Husband, Elder Brother, Shepherd, Bishop, &c., of the church, but he is also "The Everlasting Father and Prince of Peace." And while every figure is full of beauty in the illustration of the revelation and union of Christ and his church, this figure very fully sets forth that her life was in Christ before it was developed in the setting up of his kingdom, even as Levi was in the loins of Abraham when Melchisedec blessed him. "She is all glorious within." If we contemplate the eternal splendor of the church of the First-born, we are filled with admiration and delight in view of her surpassing excellency. The glory of her internal arrangement must embrace not only her laws, ordinances, fellowship, provisions, wardrobe, doctrine and order, as delineated in the New Testament, but it is said, "God is in the midst of her, she shall not be moved;" and again, "Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, God hath shined." He is a wall of fire round about her, and the glory in her midst. She is all glorious within; for no unclean thing can enter; nothing polluted, defiled or defective can be admitted. "Except a man be born again, he cannot see" her. "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." All her subjects are cleansed with the washing of regeneration, and their garments are made white in the blood of the Lamb.

"Her clothing is of wrought gold." She is clothed with garments of salvation, and covered with the robe of righteousness. This very [illegible]e figure shows that the m[illegible]rial of which the clothing of the King's daughter is composed is the most precious, valuable, incorruptible and enduring substance that we can conceive of; that it is that which shall stand the wreck of ages and the violence of fire; that it is proof against the powers of corruption, and must ever retain its full intrinsic value throughout all ages. And not only so, but as it is called wrought gold, we may learn that it has come from the deep mines of God's eternal counsel and wisdom, has been in the crucible of trial, has stood the test of trial, and is so wrought into a glorious garment as to perfectly fit and become her. All the mediatorial work of the Son of God has been laid out in fitting and applying this invaluable robe of righteousness to cover, beautify and adorn her.

"She shall be brought unto the King in rainment of needle work." There is no uncertainty involved. She shall be brought. The mouth of the Lord hath spoken it. "All that the Father giveth me shall come to me, and him that cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out." This is made to rest on no contingencies; it depends on no missionary operations of men, on no amount of money or labor to be contributed by the liberality or industry of the sons of men. God has spoken the word, and it stands fast. God has commanded, "Bring my sons from far, and my daughters from the ends of the earth," and it shall be done. The daughters of Tyre shall be there with a gift; for God has given to his anointed "the treasures of darkness, the hidden riches of secret places."—Isa. xiv. 3. They shall be brought. God himself has this work in hand, and he has declared the end from the beginning, and his purpose shall stand, and he will do all his pleasure. And they shall be brought unto the King. Not merely into a salvable state, or into a condition where they may choose or refuse. Unto the King every knee of them shall bow in submission to his crown, and every tongue shall confess his kingly power, and swear allegiance to him. And let it not be forgotten that God himself is to bring them. "I will bring the blind by a way that they know not, and lead them in paths that they have not known," &c. "And they shall call them The holy people, The redeemed of the Lord; and thou shalt be called, Sought out, a city not forsaken."—Isa. lxii. 12. She shall not come prematurely; it shall be at the set time to favor Zion. She shall not come without the wedding garment, for she shall be brought unto the King in rainment of needlework. Not one stitch of the needle shall be either lacking or misplaced. This ornamental workmanship shall make her excel in beauty and fit her for the kingdom of immortal glory. The smell of fire cannot attach to this garment, nor can all the trials, sorrows, tribulations, afflictions or persecutions, through which she must necessarily pass, wear out, soil or mar this splendid robe.

"The virgins, her companions that follow her, shall be brought unto thee." Not one of them shall be left behind. They also shall be brought. These virgins are the companions of the church of Christ, the inmates of the kingdom of glory. "These are they which were not defiled with women; for they are virgins. These are they who follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth. These were redeemed from among men, being the first-fruits unto God and the Lamb. And in their mouth was found no guile; for they are without fault before the throne of God."—Rev. xiv. 4, 5.

"With gladness and rejoicing shall they be brought." This is applicable to the redeemed of the Lord when brought in their regeneration to the King, when delivered from death and sin, from the curse and dominion of the law, and brought under law to Christ. When translated from darkness into marvelous light, and from the kingdom of Satan to the kingdom of God's dear Son. All who have passed from death unto life can remember well the day of their espousals and the gladness and joy of their hearts on that occasion; but these words may also apply to their final exaltation to the full possession of the inheritance which is reserved in glory for them. With joy and gladness shall these virgins receive the signal from their God to come away from earth, from sorrow, toil and pain; from weeping, lamentations and woe; from doubting and sighing, and from conflicts, warfare and all opposition, to receive that crown of unfading glory which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give them at that day. They shall enter into the King's palace, associate with the royal family, and be made kings and priests unto God, and reign with Christ for evermore. May we be found of God in Christ at that great day, and be partakers of the glory that shall be revealed in the saints when he appeareth.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y., July 15, 1850.

CLOSE OF VOLUME SIXTY-THREE.

THIS issue of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES completes the sixty-third year of its publication, and its seventh year as a weekly. For nearly forty years it was practically the only paper "devoted to the Old School Baptist cause," and during those years the title Old School or Primitive Baptist had a definite meaning, but of late years there has sprung up among us many schisms and factions, and all claiming to be on the old apostolic grounds of truth, and some have even claimed that the SIGNS OF THE TIMES has departed from the principles upon which it was founded. In answer to these charges we have but to refer our reader to the editorial articles of the late Elder Gilbert Beebe now being republished in the paper, dating back nearly fifty yesrs, and to the two volumes of the book of Editorials, commencing with the first editorial and continuing up to the editorials republshed. God forbid that we should indulge in any boastful spirit, but we cannot help a feeling of thankfulness that he has enabled us in our weakness to conduct the publication to the comfort and edification of so many of his iittle ones, as attested by thousands of letters.

We can make no promises that the future volumes of the SIGNS will be an improvement on the past, nor can we give encouragement to any who may feel that the paper has been too hard in doctrine, that its tone will be "softer." We have suffered the loss of thousands of subscribers within the last few years on account of certain principles of truth advocated, but we dare not allow mercenary motives to influence us.

While the past year has been financially the hardest one we have ever passed through, we can truly say, "The Lord has been better to us than all our fears." Thanking our brethren and friends for their loving forbearance, and for their kind support in contributing both for the columns of the paper and its financial support, we close our editorial labor for 1895 by asking an interest in their prayers that we may be sustained of the Lord in the future as we humbly trust we have been in the past.

POETRY.

I cannot say 1
As my Advocate in heaven 73
Behold the fair, the beauteous bride 73
Jesus, to thee I lift my eyes 73
While wandering far away from home 145
When a stranger to grace in sin's paths I trod 161
Jesus, how sweet thou art 209
I'm a sinner all vile and polluted 209
All, all imperfection 233
God gave, and he hath taken 233
Let us view thy lovely glory 241
Favored of old, ere time began 241
Eternally did God foreknow 257
Jesus, the Lord our righteousness 273
I long for the appointed hour to come 273
The days are brief, and dark, and cold 313
"Come unto me," the Savior calls 329
All, all is so dreary 329
Glory to thee, my God, this day 369
Father, teach this rebellious heart 369
Read me some message of comfort 385
Who want a Savior? 'Tis the lost 385
Believers in Jesus, all hail 401
