Worship in Meditation

Carl E. Braaten

Because Christ has made a difference in world history, the church must believe that on the basis of Christ it can also make a difference in the world. It cannot regard Jesus Christ and itself as occupying only invisible spaces outside the interconnected series of events in world history. The old docetism which excluded Christ from existence in the flesh has its modern analogue in the tendency to exclude the church from real participation in the turbulent movements of world history. . . . As God has acted in Christ, and as Christ acts through his church, so also the church acts for the world.
