NOT KNOWING.

I know not what is before me,
God hangs a mist o'er my eyes;
And thus at each step of my onward path
He makes new scenes arise,
And every joy he sends me comes
As a sweet and glad surprise.
I see not a step before me
As I tread on another year;
But the past is still in God's keeping,
The future his mercy shall clear,
And what looks dark in the distance
May brighten as I draw near.
For perhaps all future trials
Are less bitter than I think,
And the Lord may sweeten the waters
Before I stoop to drink;
Or, if Marah must be Marah,
He will stand beside its brink.
It may be he keeps, waiting
For the coming of my feet,
Some gift of such rare blessedness,
Some joy so strangely sweet,
That my lips can only tremble
With the thanks I cannot speak.
O restful, blissful ignorance!
'Tis blessed not to know;
It stills me in those mighty arms
That will not let me go,
And sweetly lulls my soul to rest
On the breast that loves me so.
So I go on, not knowing—
I would not if I might;
I would rather walk in the dark with God
Than go alone in the light;
I would rather walk with him by faith
Than walk alone by sight.
My heart shrinks back from trials
Which the future may disclose,
Yet I never had a sorrow
But what the dear Lord chose;
So I send the coming tears back
With the whispered word, "He knows."

IT IS I.

[Republished by request of many.]

When the storm in its fury on Galilee fell,
And lifted its waters on high,
And the fearful disciples were bound in the spell,
Jesus whispered, "Fear not; it is I."
CHORUS.
It is I, it is I;
Fear not, trembling ones, it is I.
In midst of the storm, in midst of the gloom,
Fear not, trembling ones, it is I.
The storm could not bury that word in the wave,
It was taught through the tempest to fly;
It shall reach his disciples in every clime,
Saying, "Be not afraid; it is I."
When the spirit is broken with sorrow and care,
And comfort is ready to die,
Then darkness shall pass and sunshine appear
By the life-giving word, "It is I."
When death is at hand, and this cottage of clay
Is left with a tremulous sigh,
The gracious Redeemer will light all the way,
Saying, "Be not afraid; it is I."

CORRESPONDENCE.

SANDUSKEY, Ala., Dec. 16, 1890.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS:—The SIGNS for December 10th has come to hand, and I am glad to learn that we are to get it weekly for another year. I am also glad to learn that it is gaining ground in sections where it has been misrepresented. If I have any real hope of life and immortality beyond this mode of existence, I received it in the latter part of the year 1875. I soon became anxious to know where was the church, and what was the true doctrine of Jesus Christ. There were plenty of the Arminian orders all around me, but there was no organized Primitive Baptist Church nearer to me than fifteen miles. I had not heard a sermon from one of that order in a number of years. I had nothing to guide me in that way but my experience, and a copy of the New Testament which my wife's father had given her. We did not own a whole Bible. I read the New Testament through once and again, and tried to get my Arminian friends to harmonize some things I read in that with the doctrines they held to; but one of the most prominent at that time, a deacon of the Missionary Baptist order, frankly confessed that he could not do it. The points I wanted harmonized were the doctrine of election and predestination. I told them the Bible declared plainly that the atonement was for the elect only, and that it was complete and efficacious. I also told them the Bible spoke as plainly of the wicked and their wickedness, and a place prepared for them, as it did of the righteous and their righteousness, and a place prepared for them; that the works were all finished from the foundation of the world, and all things were known and determined in the mind of God; and with many other words did I exhort them, but to no profit. The more we conversed, the farther from each other we got. The deacon called me a dangerous man, and told the members to beware of me; that I was liable to mislead men. I was not so well prepared to bear all their persecuting assertions, and I was more perplexed than they knew of. I began to wonder if I was not an exception, and a kind of an odd character. I was quite anxious all the time to find some one with an experience like mine. The Missionaries could not tell it. While in this perplexed state, my wife had some scraps of the Southern Baptist Messenger and the SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

Her father took them both before the war. It seems to me that the Lord so ordered that she should preserve these scraps among her goods, for me to read at that particular time. I never before knew there was such a thing in existence as a Primitive Baptist paper. I read those scraps, and found some experience and doctrine, and was much delighted. Then I began to inquire where she got hold of such, when she told me all about the place of publication, and who the editors were. I said, "If those papers are still in existence, I am going to have them." I wrote to both editors, and received in return five specimen copies of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. I shall never be able to tell what a feast I had. I found some experiences more fully told, and I found some of the very doctrine that I had been contending for set forth. I was confirmed, strengthened, and greatly edified. I sent immediately the subscription price, and have been a reader ever since, and have thought that many single articles were worth the price of the paper to those that are hungry and weary, as I often am. I also sent for the books of "Editorials," and found them to be valuable books; and I commend them to all lovers of the truth, especially to those who are young in the faith, and are perplexed about who is the true church. The late editor, Elder G. Beebe, must have been called to the very important station he filled, in setting forth true Baptist principles, and exposing the enemies and errors. I think he should still be held in high esteem for the faithful work he has done. My experience and the Bible taught me that "Salvation is of the Lord;" and I understand the SIGNS to maintain the same. I would that its circulation could be such as to reach every lover of the truth who has been misled by those misrepresentations, and their minds become disabused concerning the true principles of doctrine set forth by the editors, and by a large majority of those who contribute to its columns. Some of us in these parts have learned by sad experience that those misrepresentations are grievous burdens to bear; but the prophets, Jesus Christ and the apostles were all misrepresented, and the reports that hurt them most were circulated by those who were identified with them in the church. All along, from the days of the apostles down to the present time, certain men have been creeping into the militant ranks of the church, to endeavor to spy out the liberty of the saints, and to try to bring them into bondage to some of their fanciful systems of doctrine and practice; but when they find out that the truth of the Bible is brought to bear against them they cry out, "There is death in the pot!" and away they go with an awful report. Some, like Nimrod of old, have become "mighty hunters," and with their fox-fire lanterns and magnifying glasses can discover things that do not exist; but they think and say that they do. Some of them have discovered that "absolute predestination" makes God the author of sin, and that "eternal vital unity" is two-seed; but all such is vain superstition, and are only "the works of the flesh." The man or the men who rail against and declare non-fellowship for these principles cannot prove by me that they are Old School Baptists. They do not want to be called Arminians, and it is difficult to find a name for them. I do not remember that there was any name given to those children that were born to the Jews who had married wives of Ashdod, Ammon and Moab. They spake half in the speech of each people. These "railers" and "kickers" must have been hatched out of some of the old eggs left in the Old School Baptist nest by the Missionaries when they went out from them. They seem to be a cross between the two, and speak half in the speech of the Old Baptists and half in the speech of the Arminians. Part of their discourses sound very much like the Old Baptists; but when they get on to predestination and eternal vital unity they talk like Arminians. Some may decide that I come out too plainly about these things; but "I speak that I do know, and testify that I have seen." I have heard them and the Arminian both on the same subject. The line is drawn between us here, and those railers have done it. We make no test of predestination. We know that they went out from us, and now belong to Babylon; and all that bend the bow should spare no arrows, and shoot with precision, for they are the worst enemies that the church has. By this time the SIGNS for December 17th has come to hand, and I see that brother Francis puts down a certain Elder as a new convert. I do not know that he has set up his protest in a full declaration of non-fellowship, but he might as well do so. He associates with them that do, and helps them fight. He is one of the "mighty hunters." He has been to many places, but few (if any) know by whose authority he goes. If I am not mistaken, he came from the Missionary nest; but if he has come over to help sow the seeds of discord, and to help divide the Old Baptists, he had better go back home.

I will desist for the present. No one is responsible for what I write but myself. I am, I hope, a Predestinarian Baptist.

MRS. M. J. MCQUEEN—DEAR DAUGHTER:—I will proceed to comply with your request, in trying to relate my experience.

When quite young, before I was ten years old, I had serious impressions relative to death and the judgment. I felt that all was not well with me, that I was a vile sinner, that the Lord was just and holy, and that he was angry with me in consequence of my sinful and unholy state. I felt that I was justly condemned for my sins. With much grief and many tears I tried to beseech the Lord for mercy and pardon, and a pure heart, if mercy could be granted to so vile a wretch as I. My poor, feeble petitions seemed to fall to the ground, and my burden to grow more heavy, fearing that the Lord would not hear and answer the prayers of so vile a wretch; that there was mercy for others, but none for me. But I could not refrain from pleading with the Lord for pardon, even for such an outside case as mine seemed to be. I would often go to a spring for water, in order to be alone, where I could pour out my grief and complaints to the Lord, where none but he could see and hear. I have often left the house to hide my tears and grief from others. One night my mother was very sick, and the balance of the family having retired to rest, I went out to try to pray; but I felt so condemned and shut up that I could not utter a word. I cried, grieved awhile, and started to the house; and when I reached the door-step I thought I must try to pray to the Lord one time more before retiring to bed. I fell upon my knees at the door-steps, and to the best of my poor ability poured out my soul in lamentation and prayer for pardon and peace of mind. I finally laid down on the bed, still trying to pray. The night was quite dark, as was also my prospect for heaven. I had about given up myself as lost, but still begged for mercy and pardon. O! the agony of soul I was then in my pen can never describe. All at once it seemed that a golden light lit up my room, and a golden ladder extended from my bed to heaven, with a door opened into heaven. The blessed Redeemer was seated near the entrance to heaven, and smilingly bid me come up and dwell with him. Then my burden of sin seemed taken away; and being freed from my sins and guilt, I was as happy as I could be. I think I should have shouted for joy; but mother being quite sick, and not being willing to disturb her by any noise, I refrained from doing so. All nature seemed lovely the next morning, and I felt the same way. All was joy, love and peace. I thought I should remain happy the remainder of my days, in the service and adoration of the blessed and holy Lord, who is able to save poor, distressed and lost sinners by his atoning blood shed on the cross of Calvary; but doubts soon began to present themselves to my mind relative to the truth of my conversion. I could see so many of my faults and imperfections that I feared I was mistaken; yet I have many times been made to draw much comfort and consolation from that little experience. I am sometimes in the valley of despondency; then again I am transported to Mount Pisgah's summit. I experience a perpetual warfare, interspersed with much trouble and vexation. In the fourteenth year of my age I was received into the Primitive Baptist Church at Mount Carmel, Talbot Co., Ga., and was baptized by James Rockmore. I am now in the sixty-sixth year of my age, and feel that if I ever reach heaven (which I hope for) I will be a sinner saved by the grace of God, through the precious blood of Christ, the great Mediator between God and men.

I cannot hope to describe all my travels, hopes and fears in this communication; but I have tried to give you in short an idea of my travels in general, hoping you will fill up the gaps and omissions by a knowledge of your own experience and travels in your pilgrimage.

Your mother,

E. BRAND.

REYNOLDS, Ga., Sept. 23, 1890.

MRS. M. J. MCQUEEN—DEAR DAUGHTER:—In compliance with your request of recent date I will try to relate my experience.

At about the age of eleven or twelve years I felt a deep conviction for sin. I believed myself to be the worst boy and the greatest sinner in the world. I shed tears, and tried to pray to the Lord for mercy and pardon; but I only grew worse and worse, until my sins reached to such a height and breadth that I seemed entirely shut out from the Lord and his mercy. I could not see how God could be just, and the justifier of such a wretch as I saw myself. I felt that I was neither fit to live nor to die; that if I were to die in the condition I was then in I should be eternally lost. In my extremity I would sometimes do wrong purposefully, hoping to get rid of the great gloom that overshadowed me. Then my conscience would be more fearfully pierced with remorse and regret. Often I resolved to do better, and would try to pray to the Lord for help, mercy and pardon; but as often I seemed to do worse, and to grow more wicked and desperate. In this condition I remained several years, with some intervals of partial rest from my troubles; but they returned in full force. In the nineteenth year of my age I again sought the Lord in supplication and prayer, trying the best I could to live a better life; but I steadily grew worse and more miserable, until one night, when my trouble and gloom were awful in consequence of my sins. I tried to pray after going to bed, and for several hours rolled to and fro in my agony, until I dozed or slept. I seemed to be traveling in a wilderness, and came to a road leading up a mountain, and a goodly number of people were traveling the road to the top of the mountain, who invited me to go with them, saying that the Lord dwelt in the top of the mountain. I much desired to go up, but was fearful of being cast away for my sins and unworthiness; but being anxious to see the Savior I ventured near the top with all my guilt. Fearing to venture nearer, I stopped. The top of the mountain appeared to be a smooth plain, as of glass. The Savior appeared seated upon a beautiful throne, and the people were shouting and singing praises to his name. I still stood at a distance, trembling and fearful, when the dear Savior turned and looked at me with the most charming smile I ever beheld, and bade me come up and rejoice in my Redeemer. That look and welcome seemed to free my soul from all guilt and fear, and with a bound I leaped to the top, and was on the beautiful plain, and joined the happy throng in praise and thanksgiving to the blessed Redeemer for the redemption of poor sinners such as I had felt to be. I was happy indeed, my load of guilt was gone, all creation seemed more lovely and beautiful the next day, and I thought I would spend the remaining days of my life in the praises of the Lord for redeeming grace; but doubts of my conversion soon began to arise, that perhaps it was all a delusion, that it was only a dream, and not sufficient evidence to base a hope upon. I further found that I was subject to sin and vanity, and seemingly prone to do and to think evil; yet I could never quite give up my little hope. At times I have drawn much comfort and gladness from it, and have been enabled to praise the Lord for his goodness, love and mercy to me, a poor sinner saved by the grace of God. I often thought I would offer myself to the church, but was as often restrained from doing so by a felt sense of my unworthiness. I was with the church often when the door was opened for the reception of members, and my soul would be stirred to such a flame of desire that I was compelled to leave the house, from an unwillingness to impose myself with my frailties upon christians and the cause of Christ; and I now believe that I never would have offered myself to any church had it not occurred as it did. When I was about forty-eight years old, having children nearly grown, we were attending a meeting at the New Prospect Church. My daughter Abigail said to me that she wished to join the church. I suggested to her to wait and join the New Hope Church, as her mother's membership was there; but she insisted upon joining New Prospect, and I consented. She did not join that day, and gave me as her reason for not doing so that she was waiting for me to join with her. I told her not to wait for me, as it was doubtful if I ever joined any church. At the next opportunity Abigail left her seat, went about half-way to the preacher, stopped, looked at me, and continued looking at me until I went forward, and then she followed. The balance you know.

Your affectionate father,

M. L. BRAND.

EDITORS SIGNS OF THE TIMES—DEAR BRETHREN IN THE LORD:—I have a desire and an impression to write a few of my thoughts for publication in the SIGNS, if you deem them worthy a place in your valuable paper. First, I wish to express my hearty indorsement of the doctrine advocated in the columns of the SIGNS. I believe it to be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. But it is here as brother J. F. Dale says it is where he is, the paper has enemies; yet that is nothing strange, when you take into consideration the fact that the truth has ever had enemies. While it is a fact, perhaps, that many brethren and sisters are not able to understand that grand and God-honoring doctrine, to wit, the absolute predestination of all things, as taught in the Bible, it does not follow by any means that it is not the truth. Neither have I ever expressed or felt a desire to declare nonfellowship for my brethren and sisters because they do not understand the doctrine just as I do. When one of them comes in the spirit of meekness and says, "My brother, I cannot understand the predestination of all things," but does not say that it is not the truth, I love that brother or sister, and can cheerfully fellowship them, and ask God if it is in accordance with his righteous and holy will, to enable such an one to rightly understand the teachings of the Scriptures of divine truth. But I would admonish the brethren everywhere, regardless of consequences, to reject all heretics, after the first and second admonition.—Titus iii. 10. And, in the language of the apostle, "If any man that is called a brother be a fornicator, or covetous, or an idolater, or a railer, or a drunkard, or an extortioner, with such an one no not to eat."—1 Cor. v. 11. Now, brethren, "To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."—Isaiah viii. 20. The Scriptures of divine truth are the only standard by which you have the right to try the ministry by; and brethren, we do not simply have the right, but it is our duty to see whether or not they speak according to this word. If they do not, the prophet says "it is because there is no light in them." There is a difference between a private member and a minister, or teacher. If I undertake to teach anything, I must first understand it myself, or I cannot teach others rightly; and if the minister does not "speak according to this word," you had best do to him as Aquila and Priscilla did to Apollos. How was that? Denounce him as a heretic? No indeed. Call him a wolf in sheep's clothing? No. They took him unto him, and expounded unto him the way of God more perfectly.—Acts xviii. 26. Our troubles to-day, my brethren, I am sorry to say (the majority of them), originated among the ministry, and are by them handed out from the stand. The fleshly desire for the mastery over a brother, as Haman had against Mordecai, is the great trouble among the ministry of to-day. There are a great many of our ministering brethren that are able ministers in their proper spheres; but, like Saul, they do not want any one to say that David has done more, or is an abler man than they are. Consequently they are led by this fleshly desire for mastery, and seem to think there is no way to rise in the estimation of the brethren only by killing some other brother and standing on him. Thus you see trouble begins. When you hear a know-it-all brother, a man that knows that every brother that does not preach as he preaches, and does not live as he lives, is a heretic, take him home with you, and expound unto him the way of God more perfectly, and there will not be so much confusion among us. I love the truth in a plain manner. I do not love sugar-coated things. They are very sweet, and easily swallowed, but afterward they yield the unpleasant fruits of confusion, strife, envyings, and such like. I try to be as plain-spoken as possible when trying to talk about things pertaining to God and godliness, in order that the brotherhood may know exactly where I stand. I long to see the time when all our ministers will come out plainly upon the truth, and not be ashamed of the testimony of our God. I have been trying in my weakness to earnestly contend for the faith of God's elect, but it has caused me to suffer many sore trials. But it is all right. I feel to-day to be more confirmed in the doctrine than ever before. O! it is a grand theme to me, that God is God, and besides him there is none else; that he declared the end from the beginning, and said his counsel should stand and he would do all his pleasure. "I form the light, and create darkness: I make peace, and create evil. I the Lord do all these things." There has been a great deal said about how God forms light and creates darkness. It does not trouble me as to how he does it. He says he does it, and I believe it.

There is a great deal said about God's permissive providences. I do not believe a word of such stuff, as God having a permissive will, by which he permits things to come that are directly contrary to his positive will, purpose or decree. What sort of a God would that be? To the testimony. He has declared the end (not permitted it) from the beginning. "As I have purposed, so shall it stand; as I have thought, so shall it come to pass." Not many may and might about that. O I know, say some, that God foreknew it all, but that did not make it to be. No, but it is a strong evidence that it will be just that way. Yes, just as God saw and decreed, so comes to pass everything, excepting nothing. Brethren in the ministry, let us study to show ourselves approved unto God, workmen that need not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth; and do not be discouraged because they persecute you, and revile you, for so persecuted they the prophets and apostles before you. And to the brotherhood generally I would say, Watch over your ministers for good and not for evil; and when you find one not speaking according to the testimony, even if it be one that is a head and shoulders above everything else, take him, as Aquila and Priscilla did Apollos, and expound unto him the way of the Lord more perfectly. Preach the truth. Do not be afraid of starvation. That is not the God I profess to worship, that will call a man to preach and then let him perish in doing it. It may be scant times with you sometimes, but if you have food and raiment be therewith content. Think of Elijah, and how starvation seemed to stare him in the face. Man's extremity is often God's opportunity. God commanded the ravens to feed Elijah; and when the brook went dry, God did not send him to a mission board, nor to a rich man in a large house; nor did he send him to the brotherhood, and tell him to tell them that it was "ordained that they that preach the gospel should live of the gospel;" and, "muzzle not the ox that treadeth out the corn," &c. But he sent him to a poor widow woman that felt her dependence on God for sustenance; and he abode with her many days. And the barrel of meal wasted not, neither did the oil in the cruise fail. He (God) is the same yesterday, to-day and forever.

"Life, death and hell, and worlds unknown,
Hang on his firm decree;
He sits on no precarious throne,
Nor borrows leave to be."

I am, as ever, yours in humble hope,

A. H. WILLIAMSON.

LINDALE, Texas, Dec., 1890.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—I see from reading the Baptist papers that a great many writers seem to think it is a settled scriptural doctrine that there exists in each one of Adam's race an inward man, or new man. Now, inasmuch as I feel that I am interested in knowing what the Bible teaches on that important subject (important because of the fact that should that idea not be sustained by the Scriptures, then one of the strongest proofs to the nonresurrection idea is out of the way). Of course if the Bible sustains the idea, then all other ideas must conform to it. There can be no doubt of the existence of an inward man in every believer in Christ; but the question is, Do unbelievers possess an inward man alike with believers? If so, and any one will be kind enough to bring the Scriptures to bear on that subject that will sustain the idea, I will certainly feel under great obligations to such a one. The assumption merely of an idea that is not according to Bible doctrine will not do to draw deductions from; so, before we will be warranted in assuming that the inward man is born again, we should be able to show Bible authority for the existence of the inward man. Now I have been thinking for some time that the inward man, which the apostle delighted in the law of God after, was the production of the spiritual birth, and which I have thought was what is said to be "Christ in you the hope of glory." Now I know that I have a great deal to learn yet of spiritual things, and I expect to be a learner as long as I live, if indeed I have received the Spirit of God, that I may be able to know the things that are freely given me of God. Without that Spirit I am very certain none of us are able to understand anything aright in regard to God's dealings with us. I do not wish to provoke a controversy on this subject, but I think the assumption by some brethren that there exists an inward man in every body (and that which they call the inward man, some of them claim to be the soul or spirit), has caused me, and perhaps some others, to get confused, and I do not know how to locate them. As for myself, I have no Bible secrets; and if I have been blessed with the high privilege of knowing myself to be a sinner before God (which I very often doubt), then I am not my own; and what I have learned, if anything, is common property. I meet some Baptists who seem to be very careful not to commit themselves on many points of doctrine. Should children of the same parent be afraid of each other? I have thought that if we were more free to speak and write our sentiments (being careful not to use offensive language) there would be more unity among brethren. Consequently I desire to be understood, whether any one agrees with me or not, as it is a small thing with me to be judged with man's judgment. I believe the almighty Creator has a use for all his creatures now, and will scourge his people as in ancient days, when, as stiff-necked Israel, they refuse to bow to him who rules in the kingdoms of men, and causes the basest of men to sit thereon. And why should we not to such providences say, Amen, assured that the Father has committed all to his Son, who, for the glory that was set before him, endured the cross, despising the shame, accomplishing eternal salvation for them who have received the white stone, and in it a new name? So when the storm of life we shall safely pass through, we will praise him who has led us through dangers, and will thank him to whom all glory is due; for he is our kind benefactor. He found us all in the mire of sin, and placed our feet upon the Rock. He everlasting righteousness for us brought in. Ten thousand talents in debt we were, with not a farthing to pay. He canceled each one's debt, and in the word we hear him say, "Fear not, little flock; it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." And now we have this heavenly treasure in earthen vessels, for which I thank my God. But O how faint are thanks when offered by so feeble a worm to him whose habitation is far above all saints, unless he indites the matter and form. Created for a purpose all things were; but the uses for which some were created are hid from us in the unrevealed decrees and laws of him who is in glory seated; yet every atom a wise purpose fills, as it was intended that it should, and we as mortals should stand still, the salvation of our God to see.

F. ODOM.

BLANCHESTER, Ohio, Dec. 5, 1890.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—As I have to write on business, I thought to address a few words to the household of faith scattered throughout our common country. I am considerably advanced in my eightieth year, and my wife is not much younger, and somewhat feeble; so I am confined mostly about home, but keep up my old practice, in my feeble way, of preaching Christ to the people some two or three times a month. But I find myself almost alone in this part of Ohio. Myself and brother Reeves are all the ministers of our order in the midst of a population of about one million people, mostly religious, too. I often feel to exclaim, like Elijah of old, "Lord, they have digged down thine altars, and slain thy prophets, and I only am left; and they seek my life to take it away." But the answer of the Lord was, "I have reserved to myself seven thousand men, who have not bowed the knee to Baal." And the apostle comments thus, "Even so then at this present time also there is a remnant according to the election of grace. And if by grace, then it is no more of works; otherwise grace is no more grace. But if it be of works, then it is no more grace; otherwise work is no more work." But not having power at will to exercise faith, as some men say they can, the excellent promises are not unfrequently overlooked, and I too often find myself doubting and saying, "Is his mercy clean gone forever? Has the Lord forsaken entirely this part of the world? Shall I live to see fulfilled the boasted prophecy of the New School, who fifty years ago said that in the course of fifty years Old Schoolism would be blotted out of existence? Were it not for the Spirit of grace and our Bibles, the spirit of the world would surely triumph and say, Where is your God? Notwithstanding all opposition to the truth, the promise is sure to all the seed. And though I can find no promise to me, I rest in the command, Be still, and know that I am God."

I have had a name and standing with the Baptists for almost sixty-two years, and have been trying to preach since the year 1829. I have witnessed all of the trials, confusions and divisions which have taken place among the Baptists for more than three score years. First in that time came Alexander Campbell with his water regeneration, which made considerable excitement among us, and drew away some who were unstable souls. But that breeze soon passed by, leaving but little of its effects to be seen or regretted. Next came the fashionable Fullerites with their nature-pleasing theory of general atonement and special application, which with its plausible reasonings and subtle sophistry confused the minds of many of the little ones. Coming under the name of Regular Baptists, and professing to hold all the leading points of the ancient faith, many were deceived by the words used by their false teachers; and not giving heed to apostolic warning, they were ensnared and led astray, causing contention, and finally division. New Schoolism in its full glory was established among us. "They went out from us, that it might be manifest that they were not all of us." I was quite young at that time, and found it a severe trial to separate from them; many of whom, no doubt, were sincere subjects of grace. But when this great division took place I vainly concluded that we were so reduced in numbers and in worldly appearances that the fashionable and polite worldlings would no more trouble us, and that we would be allowed to dwell alone in peace, content to be regarded as the offscouring of all things. But alas! how soon I found this also a delusion. Satan had lost none of his cunning and malice against the woman and the promised seed. Some new scheme or invention is always on hand, and the trouble among us came under the plausible theory that God worked by instrumentalities and means to convert, quicken or regenerate the children of men, in order to make them the children of God. Now this was the most plausible of anything we had as yet to contend with, when argued in this manner, that God ordained the means, appointed the instrumentalities, and the time and place when and where this work should be accomplished. This was so near the truth that the difference appeared very little, yet agreeing so completely with the teaching of carnal nature. Many of the best of our people were entangled in the new philosophy, and withdrew from us, they putting the effect for the cause. Thus, like Gideon's army, we were reduced to a mere handful. But this did not satisfy the graspings of our common adversary. About this time Elder T. P. Dudley published his celebrated Circular on the christian warfare. A few leading Diotrephases, loving to have the pre-eminence, have raised a great cry, like the Ephesians of old did when Paul preached Christ to the Gentiles. Their craft was in danger. Many of our little party left us as heretics. So I continue to this day knowing nothing among the people but Christ and him crucified.

In conclusion let me, as one who has about finished his course, admonish you as one who loves the truth, and all who love the same, to be very careful how you handle those disputed points of doctrine. Many differ for want of understanding. Some of our definitions of terms, if dressed in a different form of words, would be understood, and would cause no dispute. Many of our late writers bring forward some things quite too deep for my dull preception to comprehend; but as I do not suppose that wisdom will die with me, I feel willing that the brethren and sisters who can eat strong meat should enjoy the feast of fat things; but let me have herbs, as becomes one who is weak. It is said that charity covereth a multitude of sins. Let those who are strong bear with the infirmities of the weak, and not with their meat destroy a weak brother for whom Christ died. Bear with me a little longer if you can. Is there not danger, both in speaking and writing, of carrying something like speculation in our teaching? As for me, I feel safest to keep close to the sacred record, and as near as I may give that record its literal meaning. But my sheet is full, so farewell, in all probability for the last. Yours as ever,

J. C. BEEMAN.

INTRODUCTORY TO VOLUME LIX.

In greeting our patrons through this first issue of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES for the year 1891, it is meet that we should remember the abundant manifestation of divine mercy and grace by which we have been sustained through the year which is past; and with humble gratitude to the Giver of every perfect gift, we would adore the goodness and mercy of God in preserving us through all the years of the publication of this periodical as a medium of correspondence among the followers of our Lord Jesus. It would require great presumption to assume that any credit is due to our own discretion in conducting the paper so as to avoid the dangers and mistakes which have surrounded our way from the beginning to the present. Nothing less than the wisdom of our ever faithful Lord could have given us the victory over the evils and difficulties heretofore encountered; and the arm of the Lord has been so manifest in sustaining and guiding our course in the past, that we may well "Remember his marvelous works that he hath done, his wonders, and the judgments of his mouth."—Ps. cv. 5. While the wealth and wisdom of this world have been arrayed against the cause of truth, God has restrained all their efforts to destroy the remnant according to the election of grace; and his truth has been the impregnable defense of the little flock whose trust is in him alone. In the sight of human judgment the hosts of antichrists have appeared to triumph in unrighteousness, and the floods of the ungodly seemed ready to exterminate the helpless and simple few who still implicitly trust in the word of the Lord. Like the bush which Moses saw in the desert, the church of Christ has been preserved in the midst of the fire; and the wrath of her enemies has only served to more gloriously display the presence of her God as her protection. Thus the very enemies of the chosen people of our Lord are compelled to confess with Balaam, "God brought them out of Egypt; he hath as it were the strength of an unicorn. Surely there is no enchantment against Jacob, neither is there any divination against Israel; according to this time it shall be said of Jacob and Israel, What hath God wrought!"—Num. xxiii. 22, 23. As the omnipotence of God was displayed in preserving the bush which burned with fire and was not consumed, and in giving to the typical Israel the victory over every enemy, so his presence in sustaining his truth is the shield and the exceeding great reward of the church who keeps his commands and rests in his truth in this day of religious delusion, will worship and idolatry. Well may the advocates of truth say, "If it had not been the Lord who was on our side, when men rose up against us, then they had swallowed us up quick, when their wrath was kindled against us; then the waters had overwhelmed us, the stream had gone over our soul: then the proud waters had gone over our soul. Blessed be the Lord, who hath not given us as a prey to their teeth. Our soul is escaped as a bird out of the snare of the fowlers; the snare is broken, and we are escaped. Our help is in the name of the Lord, who made heaven and earth."—Ps. cxxiv. No portion of the glory of the deliverance of Israel from Egyptian bondage could be ascribed to any power of their own; so no credit can be claimed by the saints at the present time for their preservation in the midst of the prevalence of false doctrines and spurious religion. Certainly now it is as true as in the days of old that "It is of the Lord's mercies that we are not consumed, because his compassions fail not."—Lam. iii. 22. In this unchanging strength of the Lord his truth has sustained our publication through the years since it was established; and to him we would ascribe thanksgiving and praise. His mercies in the past give assurance of the future; and we confidently trust that he will still sustain his own doctrine and support his own kingdom.

JOSEPH--JESUS.

"AND the patriarchs, moved with envy, sold Joseph into Egypt: but God was with him, and delivered him out of all his afflictions, and gave him favor and wisdom in the sight of Pharaoh, king of Egypt; and he made him governor over Egypt and all his house."—Acts vii. 9, 10.

The history of Joseph, son of the patriarch Jacob, presents one of the most entertaining themes in the volume of inspiration. In it we behold the watchful care of God over the objects of his love, and his wonderful works and ways in providence, causing the wrath of man to praise him, in the accomplishment of his eternal purpose. In the history we also behold the terrible effects of malice and envy, those works of the flesh, which are manifest. Solomon says, "Wrath is cruel, and anger is outrageous; but who is able to stand before envy?"—Prov. xiv. 30.

A cursory view of the trials, afflictions and persecutions of Joseph might lead the mind to conclude that God was not with him, and that the predestinating purpose of God was not being fulfilled in the malice and envy of his brethren, as well as in the wickedness of the wife of Potiphar; but

"God moves in a mysterious way
His wonders to perform;
He plants his footsteps in the sea,
And rides upon the storm.

"Blind unbelief is sure to err,
And scan his work in vain;
God is his own interpreter,
And he will make it plain."

What child of God can fail to behold in the history of this Joseph a striking likeness of our spiritual Joseph, the Lord Jesus Christ, whom the archers have sorely grieved, shot at, and hated? But his bow abode in strength, and the arms of his hands were made strong by the hands of the mighty God of Jacob.—Genesis xlix. 23, 24. The blessings of the Father are upon the head of our spiritual Joseph, and upon the crown of the head of him that was separate from his brethren.

Joseph was the first-born of Jacob by his beloved Rachel, who was well favored and beautiful, and was a type of the gospel church, or of the new covenant, which is the mother of our spiritual Joseph, and of all his brethren. Thus he who is our Lord and our Husband is also our elder Brother; and he acknowledges us as his sister and his spouse, in "the Song of songs, which is Solomon's." Unlike Leah, the spiritual or antitypical Rachel has strong eyes, clear vision, and can see the kingdom of God, and beholds the King in his beauty. Harken as he sings to her of her beauty, saying, "O thou fairest among women!" "Behold, thou art fair." "Thou hast doves' eyes." "Thou hast ravished my heart with one of thine eyes." She is the "perfection of beauty." "Harken, O daughter, and consider, and incline thine ear; forget also thine own people and thy father's house; so shall the King greatly desire thy beauty; for he is thy Lord, and worship thou him."

Like his antitype, Joseph was the beloved son of his father, and was worthy of all the paternal affection. He was favored of the Lord with prophetic dreams, which he in the innocency of his heart rehearses in the ears of his brethren. Moved with envy, and filled with resentment, they could not speak peaceably to him, and soon found opportunity to vent their anger and bloody rage. "But God was with him." While his brethren were feeding the flocks of their father in the wilderness Joseph is sent by his father to inquire after them, saying, "Go, I pray thee, see whether it be well with thy brethren, and well with the flocks, and bring me word again." While on his way he is met by a stranger, who inquires what he is seeking. His reply is, "I seek my brethren." "And when his brethren saw him afar off, even before he came near unto them, they conspired against him to slay him." But Reuben, who appeared more merciful than the others, said, "Shed no blood, but cast him into this pit in the wilderness, and lay no hand upon him: that he might rid him out of their hands, to deliver him to his father again." And "they stripped Joseph out of his coat, his coat of many colors that was on him." Truly wrath is cruel, and anger is outrageous; but who can stand before envy? "But God was with him." Having cast him into the pit, "they sat down to eat bread." "They drink wine in bowls, and anoint themselves with the chief ointments; but they are not grieved for the affliction of Joseph."—Amos. vi. 6. Lifting up their eyes they beheld a company of Ishmaelites on their way to Egypt, to whom they sell their brother for twenty pieces of silver. "A goodly price that I was prized at of them."—Zech. xi. 13. Yet this Joseph is, in the providence of that God who was with him continually, to be Egypt's future lord, and the savior of his brethren who had conspired against him to take away his life.

So Jesus, who is the beloved Son of his Father, and with whom the Father was well pleased, was sent as a messenger to his brethren; but he came unto his own, and his own received him not. He was despised and rejected. He was hated without a cause. He was delivered into the hands of his enemies by his brethren, and was sold for thirty pieces of silver, the price of a slave, and was crucified in spiritual Sodom and Egypt (Rev. xi. 8), after having been stripped of his peculiar vesture, his coat which was without seam, woven from the top throughout. "But God was with him;" as his name Lemuel (Prov. xxxi. 1) signifies, "God with him." And he is Immanuel—God with us.

We trace him in his history to the land of Egypt, where he is sold to Potiphar, an officer of Pharaoh, captain of the guard, who saw that the Lord was with him. Joseph found grace in his sight, and the Lord blessed the Egyptian's house for Joseph's sake. But Potiphar had a wife, whose wiles appeared likely to prove equally as dangerous to Joseph as had the envy and malice of his brethren. But let us not forget that God was with him, that the fear of God was in his heart, as a fountain of life, to depart from the snares of death. The temptation was indeed such that nothing short of the grace of God and the wisdom that comes from God could have given him the victory. Foiled in her base design, she lays hold upon the garment of Joseph, when a piece is torn from it, which she retains as evidence with which to accuse him to his master of having assaulted her. Thus she had about as much of Joseph and his garment as have many in this day who violently lay hold upon the name of Christian, or Baptist, and claim that they have been with Joseph, that he is a husband unto them, while they profess allegiance to Moses, or as being under the law as a rule of life.

Being accused by that adulterous woman of a base crime, of which he was entirely innocent, he was cast into prison, as before he had been cast into the pit by his inhuman brethren. "But God was with him" through all this trial; and this was demonstrated to be one of the links in the chain of providence of that God who is "wonderful in counsel and excellent in working." Soon

"he whose feet they hurt with fetters, who was laid in iron, until the time that his word came, the word of the Lord tried him," is released by order of the king. As in the beginning his sorrows and troubles resulted from his dreams and the relation of them, so here in the prison by interpreting the dreams of his fellows was laid the foundation of his glory which we afterward behold. Suddenly his prison is transformed into a palace, for iron bands he has chains of gold, and instead of being a servant of Potiphar he becomes Potiphar's lord. "The king sent and loosed him; even the ruler of the people, and let him go free. He made him lord of his house, and ruler of all his substance; to bind his princes at his pleasure, and teach his senators wisdom."—Psalm cv. "He made him to ride in the second chariot which he had; and they cried before him, Bow the knee." Only in the throne was Pharaoh greater than he.

That the dreams of Joseph might be fulfilled, it was embraced in the purpose of God that Pharaoh also must dream, and that Joseph should be there in Egypt to interpret his dreams; and because of which Pharaoh named him Zaphnath-paaneah, which signifies a revealer of secrets, or the man to whom secrets are revealed. Seven years of plenty are to be succeeded by seven years of famine in all the land. "Moreover he called for a famine upon the land: he brake the whole staff of bread."—Psa. cv. 16. Pharaoh said to Joseph, "Forasmuch as God hath showed thee all this, there is none so discreet and wise as thou art." During the seven years of plenty Joseph gathered and housed sufficient corn to feed the people during the seven years of famine. The brethren of Joseph, with their father, are yet in the land of Canaan, but not thinking of the fulfillment of Joseph's dream, that his parents and his brethren should come and bow down themselves to him to the earth, and for which his father had rebuked him at the time of the telling of it.

"And the seven years of dearth began to come, according as Joseph had said: and the dearth was in all lands; but in all the land of Egypt there was bread." "And all countries came into Egypt to Joseph to buy corn, because that the famine was so sore in all lands. Now when Jacob saw that there was corn in Egypt, Jacob said unto his sons, Why do ye look one upon another?" Impelled by hunger, the brethren of Joseph are found among the suppliants of Joseph in Egypt; and soon the prophetic dream of Joseph is fulfilled, and his brethren indeed come to bow down themselves to him to the earth. The dreamer is alive, whom they long since had sold as a slave, and know not that they are now standing in his presence, though he is not ignorant of them. Though Joseph remembered their cruelty to him, and though he spake roughly to them at the first, yet he loved them as his brethren, and his bowels yearned toward them. When they were sufficiently humbled he made himself known to them. "Then Joseph could not refrain himself before all them that stood by him; and he cried, Cause every man to go out from me. And there stood no man with him, while Joseph made himself known unto his brethren. And he wept aloud; and the Egyptians and the house of Pharaoh heard. And Joseph said unto his brethren, I am Joseph: doth my father yet live? And his brethren could not answer him, for they were troubled at his presence. And Joseph said unto his brethren, Come near to me, I pray you. And they came near. And he said, I am Joseph your brother, whom ye sold into Egypt. Now therefore be not grieved, nor angry with yourselves, that ye sold me hither; for God did send me before you to preserve life." "The patriarchs, moved with envy, sold Joseph into Egypt: but God was with him."

Joseph brings them all to dwell with him in Egypt, where he nourished them as a father during the famine. Thus we see that what was intended by wicked men to be the means of blotting out the name of Joseph forever from the earth, was overruled by God for the bringing about of Joseph's exaltation in Egypt, that he might save the lives of those who had conspired to take away his life. "Ye meant it for evil; but the Lord meant it for good." What an affectionate brother was Joseph! How like our spiritual Joseph, who came to seek and to save his brethren, though they saw no form nor comeliness in him, no beauty, that they should desire him. They hid as it were their faces from him. Yet he bore their griefs, carried their sorrows, was wounded for their transgressions, and bruised for their iniquities; by whose stripes they are healed. He knows them when they know not him, and loves them even when he seems severe. Though he deal roughly with them when they are first brought before him, yet will he eventually show himself kind to them, and will have mercy upon them. He will supply all their needs, according to his riches in glory, and will accept nothing at their hands as a price for his grace and love. They shall behold him in his glory, and shall be abundantly satisfied with the fatness of his house, and shall shout aloud for joy. Our spiritual Joseph is the true Zaphnath-paaneah, a revealer of secrets, in whom and upon whom is the Spirit of the Lord God. Weep not, for he is able and worthy to take the sealed book of God's decrees, and to open every seal. At the proper time he will show unto his servants the things that are under the seals, and which must surely come to pass. He will show unto them the covenant, with its rich provisions of grace, mercy and peace. His enemies shall be clothed with shame, but upon himself shall his crown flourish.

Was Joseph tempted, and given grace to resist temptation? Jesus was also tempted of the devil, who said unto him, "All these things [the kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them] will I give thee, if thou wilt fall down and worship me." Though the strange woman hath cast down many wounded, and many strong men have been slain by her, whose house is the way to hell, going down to the chambers of death, yet our spiritual Joseph has overcome her, his heart declined not to her ways, nor did he go astray in her paths. He heeded the prophecy that his mother taught him, and gave not his strength unto women, nor his ways to that which destroyeth kings.—Prov. vii. 25-27; xxxi. 1-3.

At the suggestion of Judah, Joseph was sold to the Ishmaelites for twenty pieces of silver; Jesus was betrayed by Judas, who sold him for thirty pieces of silver. Joseph was condemned unjustly, and cast into prison with two criminals, Pharaoh's butler and baker, one of whom he foretold should be released, while the other should suffer death. Jesus was unjustly condemned, and crucified with two malefactors. To one of them he said, "To-day shalt thou be with me in paradise;" while the other was given no such assurance. Joseph was cast into a pit; and Jesus was laid in Joseph's new tomb, but saw no corruption. He endured the cross, despised the shame, was raised from the dead by the glory of the Father, received from the Father honor and glory, and is given a name which is above every name, that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth; and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father.—Phil. ii. 9-11.

"His cross a sure foundation laid
For glory and renown."

His cruel enemies with wicked hands crucified him; yet he was delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God. As for them, they thought evil against him; "but God meant it unto good, to bring to pass as at this day, to save much people alive." Our Joseph is yet alive, and he will gather all his Father's household with him, who shall receive of his fullness, and whose souls he will keep alive in famine. "Father, I will that they also whom thou hast given me be with me where I am, that they may behold my glory." They shall enjoy all the blessings that are on the head of the spiritual Joseph, and on the crown of the head of him that was separate from his brethren.

Unto Joseph were born two sons, before the years of famine came, whom he named Manasseh and Ephraim. Jacob said to Joseph, "Ephraim and Manasseh, which were born unto thee in the land of Egypt, before I came unto thee into Egypt, are mine; as Reuben and Simeon, they shall be mine." And Jacob blessed them, giving the greater blessing unto the younger; and in the antitype that portion of the seed of our Redeemer who were under the old covenant dispensation were not favored with those privileges which are enjoyed by us under the gospel dispensation. The spiritual people of God under the former dispensation "died in faith, not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off, and were persuaded of them, and embraced them, and confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth." "And these all, having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promise: God having provided some better thing for us [under the gospel dispensation], that they without us should not be made perfect."—Heb. xi. 13, 39, 40.

"And Joseph said unto his brethren, I die; and God will surely visit you, and bring you out of this land unto the land which he swore to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob. And Joseph took an oath of the children of Israel, saying, God will surely visit you, and ye shall carry up my bones from hence." This was a matter of faith. "By faith Joseph, when he died, made mention of the departing of the children of Israel; and gave commandment concerning his bones."—Heb. xi. 22. Jesus, the antitype of Joseph, was crucified and died in spiritual Sodom and Egypt, where he sojourned for the sake of his people, who are bone of his bones and flesh of his flesh; and God will surely visit all his Israel, and in the dispensation of the fullness of time will bring them out of Egypt, out of the house of bondage, to an experimental knowledge of that salvation which he wrought for them when he was delivered for their offenses, and was raised from the dead for their justification.

Beloved, now are we the sons of God, the bones of Jesus, clothed with flesh, in which we groan, longing for perfect deliverance from the bondage of corruption, and for perfect conformity to the likeness of our risen and glorified Savior. We shall not long in vain for that change which our faith anticipates. We shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is.

"There we shall see his face,
And never, never sin,
But from the river of his grace Drink endless pleasures in."

TO OUR DELINQUENTS.

WE have several hundred on our list whose subscriptions are a year or more in arrears, and most of these we have notified before, but heard nothing from them. The expense of our publication as a weekly is so near the receipts for the same that we must insist on subscriptions being paid as promptly as possible. We do not refer in this article to those who are only a few months in arrears. Brethren, please do not forget us.

THE SPIRIT Poured OUT.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—Will you please give your views on Acts ii. 17? and oblige one who is well pleased with the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, and expects to take it as long as I can read it.

JOHN CHANDLY.

REPLY.

"AND it shall come to pass in the last days, saith God, I will pour out of my Spirit upon all flesh; and your sons and your daughters shall prophecy, and your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams."—Acts ii. 17.

In quoting this inspired declaration from the prophecy of Joel, Peter was moved by the Holy Ghost to make the correct application of the words which were written about eight hundred years before their true meaning was manifested in their fulfillment. No amount of study could have enabled any man to understand the prophetic testimony until that great and terrible day of the Lord had come. Throughout all those centuries the wise scribes and teachers of the law had expounded it according to their theories, and the people had admired their wisdom; but when they witnessed its fulfillment they exposed their own blindness by mistaking the revelation for such drunkenness as is the effect of new wine. The wisdom of this world is no more competent to understand the mystery of godliness now than it was in the apostolic age. And the professed reverence of worldly religionists for the sacredness of the Scriptures in our own time cannot exceed the claims of those who trusted in the righteousness of the law of Moses. The bitter persecution of the Lord and his apostles never came from the heathen or irreligious world; it was from those who were most earnest in their devotion to the letter of the Scriptures that the severest opposition was encountered then, as it is now.

The much advantage every way which the Jews had as the chosen nation of the Lord caused them to despise the Gentiles, and to regard them as being excluded from the blessings which God had promised by the inspired prophets whom he had sent to Israel. And although those strangers are called Jews, who heard the miraculous preaching on the day of Pentecost, it is evident from the record that they were so identified with those Gentile nations among whom they dwelt that their native language was not the Hebrew tongue, which was the language of the nation of Israel. Hence, "they were all amazed, and were in doubt, saying, What meaneth this?" To the natural understanding of the Jewish disciples this display of the grace of God manifested in those strangers was no less amazing than to the unbelieving Jews. "They were all amazed." It is as impossible for the saints to understand the mystery of the kingdom of God by their own discernment as it is for any others. Just at that appointed moment the Holy Ghost moved Peter to preach to them the interpretation of this prophecy of Joel. There is no authority for supposing that Peter himself ever before had understood the text from which he preached. The promise of the Lord was verified unto him, "It shall be given you in that same hour what ye shall speak; for it is not ye that speak, but the Spirit of your Father which speaketh in you."—Matt. x. 19, 20.

"And it shall come to pass in the last days, saith God." However it may seem incredible to some true disciples of Jesus that God has positively decreed all things whatsoever cometh to pass, every believer in the inspiration of the sacred record will unhesitatingly acknowledge that this circumstance in all its particulars was just as certain in the purpose of God when the Holy Ghost moved Joel to prophecy of it as when the meaning of that prophecy was expounded so many centuries after it was written. There certainly can be no failure of that which God saith shall come to pass. It will also be observed that the time is specified as definitely as the declaration itself. It must be "in the last days." Many generations must be developed and be gathered to dust before the time set by the appointment of God shall be fulfilled; but it shall not come to pass until "in the last days." The word of God does not depend for its fulfillment upon any contingency to be developed in the long years which must intervene. Nor can all the powers of earth and hell delay its fulfillment beyond the time which he has determined. "It shall come to pass in the last days," because God so decreed before he laid the foundation of the earth.

"I will pour out of my Spirit upon all flesh. This wonderful promise cannot be understood by finite reason. The natural man has no power to receive the things of the Spirit of God;" for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned." Not even the subjects of salvation can learn this hidden wisdom by any efforts of their own minds. They can only receive the true knowledge of the testimony of Jesus in the inspired record as it is shown unto them by the Comforter, the Spirit of truth, whom the world cannot receive, neither knoweth him. They are often troubled because they cannot with their natural understanding comprehend and retain the evidence of their interest in the salvation which is known only through the faith of the operation of God, who hath raised Christ Jesus from the dead. By the sure witness of that abiding faith they know the things which are freely given them of God, yet to their reason there is no evidence of that vitally important fact. In consequence of this there must be an unceasing conflict felt in themselves between these two opposing powers of the unbelieving flesh and the full assurance of the Spirit which is revealed through faith. These are the company of two armies, which are peculiarly characteristic of the Shulamite.—Cant. vi. 13. There are seasons when the presence of Jesus is so manifestly with the saint that this conflict is not realized, and the flesh seems to have been completely vanquished; but it is not the privilege of the disciples of Jesus to enjoy this perfect rest in his love for a very long time. They must be experimentally qualified to bear witness to the work of the Lord in seasons of trial. "Thou makest darkness, and it is night, wherein all the beasts of the forest do creep forth."—Psa. civ. 20. These creeping beasts well represent the treacherous emotions of the natural mind by which the followers of Christ are annoyed in their journey through this land of gloom and the shadow of death. None are thus troubled but such as are led by the Spirit of God; and all such are the sons of God.

The promise of God that he will pour out of his Spirit can convey no cheering and comforting assurance to those who cannot receive or know the things of the Spirit of God. They who are dead in sin have no desire for deliverance from that condition. Only those who are made to abhor sin can hunger and thirst after righteousness. To them this word of God brings glad tidings of great joy; but they cannot appropriate its consolation to themselves. The Spirit is not subject to the disposal of sinful mortals; nor is there any intimation in the Scriptures that it is left for sinners to decide whether they will receive the gift of eternal life, which our Lord declares is the knowledge of God and of Jesus Christ whom God has sent.—John xvii. 3. That love of righteousness is the seal of the Spirit whereby its subjects are made manifest as those blessed characters upon whom God has experimentally poured out of his Spirit; and all such have received the gift of eternal life, and they shall never perish, neither shall any pluck them out of the hand of their divine Savior. It should be remembered that the saints are not left to keep themselves, but that they are "kept by the power of God, through faith unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the last time."—1 Peter i. 5. But for this provision of divine grace the saints might well be in despair. Every step in their pilgrimage manifests their utter inability to keep themselves. In their conscious weakness they are prepared to rejoice in the gracious promise which is recorded in our text. As the wilted and helpless plant is revived by refreshing rain and dew, so the saints are quickened again by the word of God applied in their weakness and despondency; and this precious comfort always comes at the right moment by the ministration of the Spirit which God pours out upon them.

Caviling infidelity sometimes wrests the letter of his promise as being equally applicable to all sinners, since the declaration includes "all flesh." The fallacy of this misapplication is exposed by the assertion of the inspired Peter, of which our text is a portion. On that occasion it is expressly declared that there were those who did not recognize the power of God in what they saw and heard; but mocking said, "These men are full of new wine." Surely, none who reverence the truth of the Scriptures would dare thus to trifle with the language of inspiration. But even allowing the language to have an unrestricted application, it would prove more than the opposers of the truth themselves are willing to admit. Not only would it include all the race of Adam, even those who were destroyed in the flood, and the inhabitants of Sodom, but such an understanding would apply also to the flesh of brutes and fishes. This is too absurd for argument even in the light of reason.

When the circumstances are considered as they are recorded in the context, the true meaning of the declaration is manifest. Even the disciples who were present on that occasion were all of them Jews, who had been educated in the belief that no promise of God extended to the blessing of any Gentiles. The Holy Ghost moved Peter to preach from the very Scriptures which they had been taught to reverence as true, and to show that this wonderful display of the saving grace of God was but the fulfillment of that which was therein written by one of those prophets whom they had been accustomed to regard as inspired. It was not the destruction of the law and the prophets, but it was the confirmation of that which had up to that time been hidden from their comprehension. The separation between Jew and Gentile, which had before been authorized of God, was now, in accordance with his revealed promise, removed; and the gospel of the grace of God was manifest "to all people," as declared by the angels to the shepherds when the birth of Jesus was proclaimed.—Luke ii. 10. This was also in accordance with the commission which the risen Jesus gave to his apostles, saying, "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you; and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."—Matt. xxviii. 18-20. The apostle who expounded the prophecy of which our text is a part, was afterwards more clearly instructed in the same truth when he was sent to the house of Cornelius. From the record it appears that he did not fully understand the vision which he had when on the housetop, until the Holy Ghost fell on all them which heard the word. "And they of the circumcision which believed were astonished, as many as came with Peter, because that on the Gentiles also was poured out the gift of the Holy Ghost. For they heard them speak with tongues, and magnify God. Then answered Peter, Can any man forbid water, that these should not be baptized, which have received the Holy Ghost as well as we?" In this was demonstrated the correctness of the preaching of Peter, in expounding the prophecy of Joel in our text. Since our great Deliverer nailed the handwriting of ordinances to the tree of his cross, there is no longer any distinction between Jew and Gentile in the proclamation of the grace of God that bringeth salvation. "But in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him." So the Spirit takes of the things of Jesus, and shows unto his chosen people, not of the natural children of Israel exclusively, but of the Gentiles also, even as many as the Lord our God shall call, of "all flesh."

When it is remembered with what tenacity the traditions which we have cherished from infancy cling to us through after years, it will not seem strange that the Jewish believers were troubled to understand that even the ritual which they had received by divine appointment was not to be the law of the gospel kingdom. That they were no longer privileged to exult in their descent from Abraham in fleshly relationship, was a truth which they could not receive without clear and positive instruction. But the glorious gospel of our Lord is to every creature who is created in Christ Jesus, without restriction to the nation of Israel after the flesh. In the revelation of life in Christ Jesus the grace of God which brings salvation has appeared unto all in every place and nation, who have been called according to the purpose of God which he purposed in himself before the world began. Thus God pours out of his Spirit upon all flesh, instead of confining the display of his grace to the nation of Israel.

BOOK NOTICES.

NEW YEAR ANNOUNCEMENT.

PLEASE read and reply immediately by card or letter.

I have material nearly ready for a book of two or three hundred pages, which I desire to publish this winter or spring. It embraces topics in prose and poetry, adapted to general family reading, and is designed to be instructive to the young, as well as entertaining to both the young and old. It is such a book as nearly every family might desire; first, to supply the place of fiction, which the young mind is so often tempted to procure; second, to give our Baptist brethren and sisters a book on moral education that is free from the taint of Arminianism, and presents the subject from a predestinarian standpoint; and third, while those portions that treat on morality alone are confined to proper expression and separation from sectarianism, there are passages and topics that are designed for christian reflection and comfort; so that I have decided to call it, "Every Day. For Moral-ist and Christian." For the moralist a lecture on moral culture, chapters on the moral of manners for the young; and a large collection of poems. For christians, who have tasted that the Lord is gracious and precious to their souls, a discussion of those precious truths of the gospel of Christ which are so admirably adapted to their comfort, as God's sovereignty, purposes and grace, both in poetry and prose. While dozens of my poems have been published from time to time in the SIGNS and other papers, all the rest is original matter, preserved and written for this work alone.

What do you say, brethren, sisters and friends? Will you help me? If so, write immediately, stating how many and the quality of binding you wish, but do not send money until I am assured of its publication; then I will need it all. The price will be as low as other books of its class, not exceeding $1.50 per copy for plain cloth, and of course more for Morocco or gilt.

I do not claim perfection, but desire to see it or some other like book in every Baptist household.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

DEAR BRETHREN:—Our beloved daughter, Susan Vanmeter, died suddenly yesterday.

I. N. VANMETER.

MACOMB, Ill., Dec. 29, 1890.

MY dear wife, Sarah Ann Thompson, died July 8th, 1890, of typhoid fever, aged 46 years, 1 month and 14 days.

We were at that time living in Miami Co., Kansas. She had never united with any church, but she gave good evidence to me that she was a child of the living God, which is a great comfort to me. O how hard it was to part with such a kind and loving companion. Her maiden name was Long.

Her mother, Ann Long, was a member of the Old School Baptist Church. She died two months and fifteen days after my wife died. Her age was 83 years, lacking 15 days.

I have no children. I expect to live with my brother and sister here in Ohio. I am close to two Primitive Baptist Churches, which is a comfort to me.

WILSON THOMPSON.

TRENTON, Ohio.

SISTER Mary Hite, wife of Andrew D. Hite, departed this life Nov. 20th, 1890, aged 77 years, 3 months and 6 days.

She was the mother of ten children, five of whom preceded her to the spirit world. The remaining five were with her in her last sickness, and are left to mourn their loss of a kind and affectionate mother. The bereaved husband and grandchildren also share their sorrows.

The writer was called upon to deliver a funeral discourse at the Cesar's Creek meeting-house, the place of her membership for thirty-five years, where I met a large and attentive congregation of brethren, neighbors and friends, to whom I tried to speak words of comfort from 1 Thessalonians iv. 13-18: "But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope," &c. The remains were then taken to the cemetery at Jamestown, Greene Co., Ohio, for interment, to await the resurrection of the just.

May the Lord comfort the bereaved family, bless this dispensation of his providence to their good, reconcile them to all his dealings with them, and enable them to say, with his servant of old, "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord."

EARL V. MABRY.

OUR dear brother, Joseph M. Carlile, departed this life Nov. 7th, 1890, aged 25 years, at the residence of his father, near the London Tract meeting-house, Chester Co., Pa., after eight days of confinement with pneumonia.

When but a child he received an unaccountable injury, causing spinal trouble, and was an invalid the remainder of his life. Though a great sufferer, and deprived of the many enjoyments in life common to most of us, he bore his affliction with scarcely a complaint, but had instead, when any met him, a smile and a consoling word for all. To know him was to love him; and now to remember him is to deeply feel our loss. In our afflictions it is a comforting hope that all is right. Unlike any former sickness, he realized and was satisfied that the end was near, notwithstanding the most sanguine assurance of a skillful physician that the worst had passed and his speedy recovery certain. Shortly after the physician retired he asked to be laid over, and quietly passed away in that calm and gentle sleep that knows no waking, while we all at his bedside thought it but a sweet and refreshing slumber that would follow an almost exhausted vitality. Alas! it was true, "In the midst of life we are in death."

"Dearest brother, thou hast left us,
And our loss we deeply feel;
But 'tis God who has bereft us,
He can all our sorrows heal."

A. MARY CARLILE.

By the request of the family, and a desire in my own heart to bear testimony to the true christian character of one highly esteemed and loved in her family, in the church, and in the neighborhood, I send for publication a notice of the death of sister Mary J. Bond, which occurred at her home near Lawrenceburgh, Anderson Co., Ky., Sept. 27th, 1890, leaving three daughters and six sons, together with a large circle of relatives and friends, to mourn their loss. The church at Salt River, of which she has been a loved and useful member for nearly forty years, feels deeply the loss. She was ever among those faithful ones who heeded the admonition, "Forsake not the assembling of yourselves together." During her life she constantly manifested her love to the cause of God her Savior and to his people by always attending the assemblies of his saints, not only at her own church, but at the meetings of sister churches within her reach, letting the light of the life of God ever shine forth in her intercourse with the saints. Her house was truly a home for the Baptists; and many who read this will recall her cheerful welcome and genuine hospitality, especially those who minister in word and doctrine, to whom she was ever ready to contribute. Truly she was a faithful steward.

Sister Bond had looked forward with much pleasure to the last session of the Licking Association, and had prepared for a large crowd. She was stricken down a few weeks previous to the meeting, and was deprived of the pleasure that would have been hers in entertaining the brethren and sisters; but, thoughtful to the last of what was to her more a pleasure than a duty, she sent a much-loved daughter to the meeting with a contribution for the visiting ministers. To those who knew sister Bond no eulogy could add to the high esteem in which she was held. Her long life of devotion to husband, children, brethren and friends will cause her to live in their memory and love so long as life lasts. God grant that we may be enabled to emulate her example in our lives, and that we too may receive the welcome plaudit that we believe was hers, "Well done, good and faithful servant; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." Faithful to the end, she now wears a crown of life. While we mourn our loss, we feel to bow in humble submission to the will of him who doeth all things well, in full confidence that she is now basking in the refulgent glory of God's eternal love, and enjoying the reality of the psalmist's words, "I shall be satisfied, when I awake, with thy likeness."

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date, this date denotes the time at which your subscription expires, and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

POETRY.

A HAPPY NEW YEAR.

DEAR BRETHREN:—Would this poem, by dear old Samuel Medley (one of our own Old School Baptist poets), who wrote it; I think, in the past century, be too long to insert in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES? JOSEPH CASSE, SR.

DEAR friend, as I have a few minutes to spare,
I take up my pen just to ask how you are.
To you and to yours, to me and to mine,
Our lives are a scene of compassion divine.
What reason has each of us, therefore, to say,
The Lord has preserved us thus far on our way;
Supplying our wants and dispelling our fears,
Removing our sorrows and drying our tears.
But stay, for a thought has come into my head,
And out it must come lest it soon should be fled.
You ask me, What is it? Well, stop, and you'll hear;
Why 'tis this—I wish you a Happy New Year.
Now don't a mere compliment think it, I pray:
I feel what I write, and I mean what I say.
I therefore repeat it, with friendship sincere,
I heartily wish you a Happy New Year.
But say, my dear friend, O what must there be
To make this year happy to you and to me?
Why, if I mistake not, the whole of the case,
'Twill chiefly consist in these blessings of grace.
First of all in a growing acquaintance with God,
And having his love in our hearts shed abroad;
In trusting our all to his infinite skill,
Submitting with joy to the whole of his will;
Adoring his name, as Jehovah our Lord,
Believing, obeying, and loving his word;
In praying unto him, and seeking his face,
And always rejoicing in sovereign grace;
In holding communion with him by faith,
And firmly depending on all that he saith;
In growing conformity to him while here,
Still hoping before him with joy to appear.
And secondly, will it not also consist
In looking to Jesus, in him to be blest
With constant supplies from his fullness of grace,
To strengthen and help us while running our race;
That, kept by his power, we never may fall,
But daily live on him, as all and in all;
That peace through his blood may still to us abound,
And clothed with his righteousness we may be found;
That living and dying our joy may be this,
That he will preserve us to heavenly bliss?

And will it not, thirdly, our comfort increase
To look to his Spirit for quickening grace;
That he, with our spirits, his witness may bear,
And help our infirmities daily in prayer;
That he as our Sealer may with us abide,
To comfort and bless us whate'er may betide?
'Tis also my wish we may still persevere
In secret and social and soul-wrestling prayer;
Read, search and examine God's most precious word,
And constant attend in the house of the Lord;
Remembering daily our times here below
Are short and uncertain—to death we must go.
The days of our pilgrimage here are but few;
Their end should be wisely, then, kept in our view.
May this be our happiness all through the road,
To live and walk closely and humbly with God;
That so if at midnight we hear the loud cry,
We then may have nothing to do but to die;
To yield up our souls in the arms of his love,
And joyfully soar to the mansions above,
Of sin and of sorrow no more to complain,
But there with the blessed forever remain.
If these things are ours it then will appear
God has indeed granted a Happy New Year.

SAMUEL MEDLEY.

CORRESPONDENCE.

"BRETHREN, if any of you do err from the truth, and one convert him; let him know, that he which converteth the sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death, and shall hide a multitude of sins."—James v. 19, 20.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—In compliance with a request from sister Annie Robinson, a member of the church in Baltimore, I will try to write something for the SIGNS upon the above-named words. Sister Robinson says that she recently heard a sermon from these words, or rather the last verse, in which the speaker told his hearers that it was their one great business as christians to save souls. To this I would add that it is not strange that this preacher should take this ground, since it is the ground occupied by ninety-nine out of every hundred of all the professed followers of Christ in all the world. I have myself heard the same sentiment advanced a hundred times in my life. I desire also to add that whether those who say such things mean it or not, they are dethroning Jesus as the one Savior and Mediator, and instead are setting up a million or millions of saviors of the children of men. They are exalting men rather than Jesus. No doubt many say and many hear and receive such sayings, not realizing what such language implies. I hope, that by what I may here say some who have not seen the wrong in sentiments like that advanced by the minister whom sister Robinson heard may be led to carefully consider the matter, and be led out from the sin of giving to a man the glory due alone to God.

With regard to the text named and used by the preacher referred to, I want to say that there is not the slightest excuse for any misunderstanding about it if any one will take the trouble to read carefully the nineteenth verse in connection with the twentieth. It is unfair and unjust to any author to select one brief sentence or even sentences from him, isolate them from the rest, and attach a meaning to them just from the mere sound of the words, when all the connection may show that he is treating upon an entirely different theme. The general sentiment of any community would condemn a procedure like this. How much more to be condemned than is he who thus deals with the word of God! He who is thus guilty through carelessness is blameworthy; and he who does it wittingly surely cannot have the fear or the love of God in his heart. I recall that once when I was but a youth I went one Sunday to hear Elder Williamson, a Free-will Baptist minister, who preached in a school-house in my father's neighborhood in Maine, and he used as a text the words in Joshua xxiv. 15: "Choose you this day whom ye will serve." I will not detail the sermon. All who have ever heard any preaching outside of Old School Baptist pulpits know very well about what would be said. He of course called upon all to choose whether they would serve God or not, telling us that we all must make this choice, and that God was now calling upon us all to do this. The sermon perplexed and troubled me. I had heard nor seen these words before. I had never believed that the power of choice was in the creature; yet here I came face to face with the words of his text. As he read them by themselves they seemed plain enough, and they seemed on their face to teach just what he claimed for them. I could not rest, for I wanted to be right, and to know the truth. If the preacher was right, then my experience was wrong, and all my understanding of the Bible was wrong. I said nothing to any one, but as soon as I reached home I got the Bible secretly and turned to the place of the text. I read it and its connection, and was amazed. I read it again, and said in my heart, How could he have spoken as he did! Surely he must have seen the words before and after as well as I. I felt in my own mind convinced that Elder Williamson had knowingly and purposely handled the word of God deceitfully. My conviction as I read was, "He has wittingly perverted these words;" and from that moment I lost all respect for the man, and desired that I might never listen to him again. I will quote the verse in which his text occurred: "And if it seem evil unto you to serve the Lord, choose you this day whom ye will serve; whether the gods which your fathers served that were on the other side of the flood, or the gods of the Amorites, in whose land ye dwell: but as for me and my house, we will serve the Lord." Read this, and it will be plain why I was driven to believe as I did, that the preacher was dishonest. Even had his doctrine been true, it was not sustained by his text. Surely the most casual reader can see that Joshua bade the people choose not between God and idols, but solely between different idols; for as between idols it made no difference—one was as good as another. I have spoken of this to show how a text may be perverted, and how important it is that we should carefully read for ourselves.

Now the text at the head of this article has been again and again perverted in the same way. The connection has been tossed aside, and no account made of it. That it does not relate in any way to the redemption of a sinner from death and hell and sin, and his triumph over all in final glory, can be easily seen by a simple examination of the plain language of these two verses. In this epistle the apostle James addresses those to whom he is writing as brethren fifteen times, if I have counted correctly, besides using the words "brother" and "sister" once or twice; and in the opening of the nineteenth verse he uses the same word, "brethren." This one word settles the limit of the text, and defines the character of the persons addressed. The apostles never once use this term, or apply to any but to the redeemed, who have been born of God, and who have obtained inheritance among the sanctified. They never apply the term to unregenerate men. They do not address their epistles to their brethren in Adam, but to their brethren in Christ; and the children of Adam are not the children of God, for Adam himself was not a child of God. Adam was the best and highest of the creation of God on earth, but he was not by that creation a child of God. James in the text says "brethren;" and the text is limited to them. To say that it takes in others is to destroy the force of language, and to so confuse it that we can never know what it means.

"Brethren, if any of you do err from the truth." Notice most carefully the force of the pronoun "you." Its antecedent is "brethren." It means no one but the children of God then. I desire also to call especial attention to the force of the expression, "do err from the truth." The word "err" simply means "to go astray, or to wander." Now it is manifest that no one can wander from a place where they have never been. If a man wanders from the truth he must have been in the truth before. Unregenerate men are not in the truth nor of the truth; therefore this leads us to conclude again that the apostle is addressing believers, christians, just as the name brethren implies. Only he that is in the right way can err from that way.

But now if this brother go astray, or err from the truth, the apostle sets before his kindred in Christ a glorious privilege. They may convert him from the error of his way. The word "convert" signifies literally, "to turn about." It never in any case in the New Testament signifies the new birth. The inward heart-work by which a dead sinner is made alive to God is never called conversion. Regeneration can never take place but once. Conversion may transpire a thousand times. Any turning about from one thing to another may be called a conversion. A child of God may err from the truth either in faith or practice. The erring is not willful. The child of God desires always to obey the truth, but he is weak and ignorant; he does not see clearly. Often he goes wrong, supposing that he is going right. Under the impulses of the flesh he begins to look to the creature rather than to the Creator. He hears and heeds the voice of the flesh, often supposing it to be the voice of God. In all this he errs; and his error leads to trouble, sorrow and shame, and what the apostle calls death.

The word "death" does not always signify either the death of the body or eternal death. Death always involves the idea of separation. Natural death means separation from the present life, with all that belongs to it of joy or sorrow. Spiritual death means separation from the various experiences involved in and connected with spiritual life. Eternal death means separation from all that belongs to the kingdom of God in the final glory. But I do not understand that in this text and some others similar the word "death" is used in any of these meanings. Here the apostle speaks of a death to or separation from all the spiritual comfort and joy experienced by the obedient. In a similar manner Paul says (Romans viii.), "If ye live after the flesh, ye shall die: but if ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live." Paul says again, in Galatians, "If ye sow to the flesh, ye shall of the flesh reap corruption." Believers cannot be liable to eternal death, for to them is given eternal life; and if they could die eternally it would be full evidence that it was not eternal life which they had possessed. So we can see why Jesus should say of his sheep, "I give unto them eternal life and they shall never perish." Therefore the child of God cannot die eternally; but there is a sense in which the weak brother can perish, in which the erring can die. Now the teaching of this text in James is that he who converts or turns this erring one from his wrong way shall save him from this death. Not indeed from danger of finally perishing, but from such a state as David was in when he had betrayed Uriah and Bathsheba, and in the fifty-first Psalm prays to God out of his trouble, "Restore unto me the joy of thy salvation; and uphold me with thy free Spirit." He had never lost the salvation, but the joy of it he had lost because of his sin; and this is the death we fall into if we err from the truth.

Another expression in the text is, "And shall hide a multitude of sins." A similar expression is found in 1 Peter iv. 8, where the apostle says, "Charity [or love] shall cover the multitude of sins." The Greek word in both places is kalupsei; and the force of the word is, "To blot out of memory; to consign to oblivion." The expression is similar to that where our God in the prophet says of his redeemed people, "Their sins and iniquities I will remember no more." The teaching of both James and Peter is therefore that when a brother is converted from his erring, or that when charity abounds, a multitude of sins are forgotten; and into our fellowship and love for our brother, for whom Christ died, his sins cannot enter to mar nor to hinder its full and cordial flow. If he has erred, and, like the prodigal, comes back in rags and hunger and self-abasement, there is more joy over him than over the ninety and nine who have not gone astray; and as the feasting and rejoicing go on, in such a heavenly frame as this, the multitude of his sins do not come into remembrance at all, and the joy and the fellowship are not marred nor hindered in the least. I have been present when some who had been estranged from the church came back in tears and humility, and the joy was inexpressible in every heart; and it came not into any man's mind to any longer remember his faults, whatever they might have been. The language of the text does not mean that by converting this sinner from the error of his way his sins shall be hidden from God, for that has been accomplished once for all by the blood of Jesus; but hidden from the heart and mind of his brethren, so that he is wholly one with them again, as completely so as though he had never sinned at all. What a joy it is to wash our brother's soiled feet after such a sort as this!

Now it is just such a salvation as this that Paul meant when he said to Timothy, "Take heed unto thyself, and unto the doctrine; continue in them: for in doing this thou shalt both save thyself, and them that hear thee." It is of this kind of salvation that the apostle says, "It pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe." Preaching then, according to this text, is not for the salvation of the unbeliever, but of the believer. The quickening power of the divine Spirit alone can make a believer out of an unbeliever; but preaching can and does often save the believer from many an error and many a false way.

Thus I have tried to suggest a few thoughts, both as to the generally received false view of the text, and as to its real meaning. I will leave these reflections for the sister who spoke of it, and for the readers of the SIGNS. I realize that at the best I have but feebly presented the truth. May God bless it to some one.

I remain, as ever, your brother in the hope of Christ,

F. A. CHICK.

REISTERSTOWN, Md., Jan. 2, 1891.

WOODSTOCK, Mich., Dec. 22, 1890.

DEAR BRETHREN:—Often have I been requested to write for the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. Often have I been asked the question, "Why do you not write again for the SIGNS?" until I have felt to ask myself the question, What is it in my writings that can interest the dear ones who read our paper? Why is it that they think there is anything in one so weak, so vile, so hardened in heart, that the precious children of God would care to know? Dear brethren and sisters in the Lord, if you could only know how I appear in my own sight, if you only knew how I fear that I appear in the sight of him who sees all things, I think you would never wish to hear anything from such an one as I. Could any one but know the darkness, the deadness, the blindness, the stumbling, the falling, that come to me, I feel I would have the sympathy of each and every one who in themselves have felt all these things; and if I must write, I can only testify of the things I have seen and heard; of things learned, as I trust, of him who teaches us lessons such as we can learn from no other instructor. And what must I tell you that I have been learning of late? O! brethren and sisters dear, I have been learning how much of bitterness and sorrow we can taste here; how that when we are neither in rest nor quiet, yet troubles can come upon us; how that, like a terrible blast at noonday, when we were not aware of a cloud in the sky, we have been almost shaken out of our places. We only felt troubled, but could not tell why. If we could only know what our forebodings mean, if we could only know the nature of that which is to darken our pathway, if we could only have on the right kind of armor, and be on guard, so as to "quit us like men," and do and act just as we should when the calamity comes upon us, then we could at least feel that we had done so as to have no regrets. But when we are not to know, and are carried hither and thither like poor, lost children in a blinding storm, hardly knowing which way we are being hurled, then it is that we reflect, that if we had only done this or that, matters might not have been so disastrous as we find them to be. We search ourselves, saying, Lord, what have we done? Have we lived carelessly? Have we forgotten to watch and pray? Have we been giving honor to those to whom it was not due? Have we been trying to build with an overdue or unrighteous zeal? Have we been trying to build Jerusalem by blood—wrong or deceit of any kind? All we can do is to tremble before the Lord, waiting whether another awful stroke be for us, or whether he will work a way for us in the sea, or how it shall be. But, dear readers, so far you may know that I have been terribly shaken, and in the midst of the sea, and that for a long time; and now I must try to tell you of the way of the Lord; for you know that

His wonders to perform;
He plants his footsteps in the sea,
And rides upon the storm."

Long time by the grace of God I have been enabled to say that I prefer Jerusalem above my chief joy; that the courts of the Lord are more precious to me than all the world besides; and when at first I sank beneath the dark, heavy wave that passed over, causing me to feel that the little candlestick must by it be removed out of its place, that the little light which had seemed to shine amid the surrounding darkness must surely be put out, and all my pleasant things must be laid waste, the promise of the Lord came to me, so that I was shaken as by a voice which said, "I will work a work in your day, a work which ye will in no wise believe, though a man declare it unto you." O what a weighty promise was this! I thought of the time when certain destruction seemed waiting those who were shut in and surrounded by the enemy, and the least filthy morsel was sold for such a great price; yet in the face of all that distress and destitution the Lord gave a promise that he would open the windows of heaven and pour them out a blessing that they would not be able to receive; and he did as he had promised. I thought of Jacob, who could not believe that Joseph was alive. The news was too great for him. I thought of those women who believed not for joy, when they found the place empty where they had lain their Lord. So the work which the Lord was to work in my day was to be so great that I would in no wise believe it, though a man should declare it unto me. But I rejoiced in the promise, and my heart was lifted in praise to him who is able to do all things. Yet again I must sink down; wave after wave must go over me many times; I must fall; but so far I have risen again. Again I could tell of a bright, a cloudless day, a day of sweet communion, a holy peace, a day so calm, so sacred, as not to be broken by a word—not even a word of promise; just a day to rest me in the presence of him whom my soul loveth; a day to prepare me for the next dark wave. Again I must sink down, thinking I must no more see good. But when the heart had borne about all it could bear, a song commenced in it, and I felt to say, O if I could only sing!

“O! had I but an angel’s voice
To bear my heart along,
My flowing numbers soon would rise
To an immortal song.”

But sorrows must arise again, perplexities on every side, thorns and briars to tear me, weak, sore and distressed as I already was, and nothing but the most conflicting reigning within, and truly feeling that there was no helper, when through my troubled heart came a flash of heavenly light and love, bringing the words, “Alleluiah; for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth.”

The Bible was the first book I ever remember reading; and when I came to the word alleluiah I would look at it a long time; and I loved to hear my father sing something that had the word in it; and it has always had something in it that would bring to mind the heavenly throng—a word that was most appropriate for them to use; but never before did it so rouse my faltering tongue, so lift my sinking heart. I had never so read it before as now in these later years of life. It seems the full embodiment of that joy which bursts out in praise to God. And why this burst of praise? why this joy? why do we say, Alleluiah? “For the Lord God omnipotent reigneth.” This is why we may be settled in the fact that God reigns over the earth; that he controls the elements, that “the winds and the seas obey him;” that the stormy wind is but fulfilling his word. We may think we realize how he controls all nations, thrones and kingdoms; but can we at all times realize that he rules in and reigns over us? We may most truly wish that it could be so; we may most earnestly say, “Thy mansion is the christian’s heart,

O Lord, thy dwelling place secure;
Bid the unruly throng depart,
And leave the consecrated door.”

Alas! what is the unruly throng?

“Devoted though it be to thee,
A thievish swarm frequents the place;
They steal away my joys from me,
And rob my Savior of his praise.”

How true it is, the vanity of life, the love of the world, the foolishness, the weakness of the heart, and sometimes even a wrathful, wicked spirit, may predominate and hold all else in subjection, until we despair, and feel that the Lord abides with us no more. Yet he can come again and assure us that even then he still reigns, and is in us the hope of glory. And even in the Zion of our God it may sometimes appear that he is not there; that even the house of prayer is turned into a den of thieves. There may be even brought into the sanctuary that which is most offensive; that which causes the poor children to bow their heads for shame; we may be made to feel that there are those there who seem to think that they have the mastery themselves; that they can make the helpless bow to whatever they wish to do; but it is well to remember that the whip of small cords (though composed of very simple things, just a bundle of little strings) was yet very effective in the Master’s hand. It may be that just a handful of feeble sisters, who feel that they are oppressed and injured, are not to be so much despised; for the Lord takes thought for the “handmaids.” The maid-servants are not forgotten by him. They may feel at times that there is none to undertake for them; yet he can assure them that he himself still reigns in Zion; that he that is higher than the highest regardeth; that we are not to be afraid of them that are high; for there be that are higher than they; and for this cause we can rejoice, feeling indeed that the eternal God is our refuge, and underneath are the everlasting arms. We may feel sometimes as sheep having no shepherd; yet we can look away to him who is chief Shepherd and Bishop of our souls.

A few days ago a sister wrote me, saying that she wished for me that my last days might be my best days. In view of the present, and as far as my feeble vision could extend into the future, I felt that the prospect for such a thing was very gloomy. I truly felt to ask, “How can these things be?” And my mind went back over the good days I have seen, and I felt to say, “O years gone down into the past!

What pleasant memories come to me
Of your unclouded days of peace,
And hours of almost ecstasy.”

I know the patriarch said, “Few and evil have the days of the years of my life been,” and so I sometimes truly feel to say. Yet again I remember the goodness of the Lord to me, and acknowledge that it has been very great. What could my last days be, to be better than some of my best days? It opens to my mind just what it can be; not riches, honor, pleasure, nor anything that this world can give; for these are not pure and holy joys. But could I see prosperity in Zion, could it be mine to see the ransomed of the Lord returning and coming to Zion, could I see the waste places built up, could I feel and know that it was truly the work of the Lord, could I feel that he was inclining the hearts of his children, and bringing them together in love throughout all the borders of his glorious kingdom, and that he was binding them together as one family, O! brethren and sisters dear, would it not be worth living for a little while yet? would we not truly feel like saying, as those did who said, “Alleluiah; for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth?”

“And again they said, Alleluiah.”

Yours in the furnace,

KATE SWARTOUT.

“For who maketh thee to differ from another?”—1 Cor. iv. 7.

DEAR BROTHERS BEEBE:—As the many divisions and subdivisions of the people seem to be a hard problem for some of God’s dear children to solve, I have thought to send a few lines for the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, yet feeling almost assured that what I shall write will be very imperfect, like myself; but I hope to enlist the views of some of the noble contributors to our family paper. Now, brethren, because I have said noble, let not this hinder you, for God makes the difference. “For I know nothing by myself; yet am I not hereby justified: but he that judgeth me is the Lord.”

“And the whole earth was of one language, and of one speech.”—Gen. xi. 1. But the appointed time of God came when this order should stand no longer. “And it came to pass, as they journeyed from the east, that they found a plain in the land of Shinar; and they dwelt there. And they said one to another, Go to, let us make brick, and burn them thoroughly. And they had brick for stone, and slime had they for mortar. And they said, Go to, let us build us a city, and a tower, whose top may reach unto heaven; and let us make us a name, lest we be scattered abroad upon the face of the whole earth. And the Lord came down to see the city and the tower, which the children of men builded. And the Lord said, Behold, the people is one, and they have all one language; and this they begin to do: and now nothing will be restrained from them, which they have imagined to do. Go to, let us go down, and there confound their language, that they may not understand one another’s speech. So the Lord scattered them abroad from thence upon the face of all the earth: and they left off to build the city. Therefore is the name of it called Babel; because the Lord did there confound the language of all the earth: and from thence did the Lord scatter them abroad upon the face of all the earth.” So the Lord confounded their language, that they might not understand one another’s speech. If the Lord has done this, which the foregoing Scriptures plainly prove, why should we be uneasy about it? He is not unreconciled to it. It is the world that was to be reconciled. Now if God is, was or ever will be thwarted in his purpose, then his counsel would fail to stand, and he would fail to do his pleasure. All those who fear that all things are not right, and do not work together for good, let them hear what the Lord says (Isa. xlv. 9, 10), “Remember the former things of old: for I am God, and there is none else; I am God, and there is none like me, declaring the end from the beginning, and from ancient times the things that are not yet done, saying, My counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure.” Some say, “We believe that all good things are right, but bad things cannot be so.” Let us see if God has no use for “bad things.” We will notice Romans ix. 17: “For the Scripture saith unto Pharaoh, Even for this same purpose have I raised thee up, that I might show my power in thee, and that my name might be declared throughout all the earth.” Therefore we conclude from the Scripture testimony that God needed a Pharaoh, and so he raised him up for the express purpose set forth in this text. Now is it illogical or unreasonable to conclude that God has raised up the six hundred and sixty-six now manifest Pharaohs, or branches, call them what you may think best? Are they not right, that God’s power may be shown in them, and his name be declared throughout all the earth? “What if God, willing to show his wrath, and to make his power known, endured with much long-suffering the vessels of wrath fitted to destruction: and that he might make known the riches of his glory on the vessels of mercy, which he had afore prepared unto glory, even us, whom he hath called, not of the Jews only, but also of the Gentiles?” Because both kinds of vessels are here, let us not reply against God, but rather believe and “know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose.” “That they may know from the rising of the sun, and from the west, that there is none besides me. I am the Lord, and there is none else. I form the light, and create darkness: I make peace, and create evil: I the Lord do all these things. Drop down, ye heavens, from above, and let the skies pour down righteousness: let the earth open, and let them bring forth salvation, and let righteousness spring up together; I the Lord have created it. Woe unto him that striveth with his Maker! Let the pot-sherd strive with the potsherds of the earth. Shall the clay say to him that fashioneth it, What makest thou? or thy work, He hath no hands?"—Isaiah xlv. 6-9. See also verses 10-13.

Now, dear brethren, do not be alarmed, though there be eight hundred and forty Arminian prophets to one true prophet. Our God is not alarmed about the condition of things. Remember the text, "For who maketh thee to differ from another?" "Hearken unto me, O Jacob and Israel, my called; I am he; I am the first, I also am the last. Mine hand also hath laid the foundation of the earth, and my right hand hath spanned the heavens: when I call unto them, they stand up together. All ye, assemble yourselves, and hear; which among them hath declared these things? The Lord hath loved him: he will do his pleasure on Babylon, and his arm shall be on the Chaldeans."—Isaiah xlviii. 12-14. Let us not think for one time that the hand of the Lord is shortened. He says, "Is my hand shortened at all, that it cannot redeem? or have I no power to deliver? Behold, at my rebuke I dry up the sea, I make the rivers a wilderness: their fish stinketh, because there is no water, and dieth for thirst. I clothe the heavens with blackness, and I make sackcloth their covering."—Isa. i. 2, 3.

Brethren, while we do know that God is not the author of confusion, but of peace, as in all the churches of the saints, let us rightly divide the word of truth. We must study to do this. While God maketh one to differ from another, it is to the fulfillment of his will and purpose. Jesus said, "Suppose ye that I am come to give peace on earth? I tell you, Nay; but rather division: for from henceforth there shall be five in one house divided, three against two, and two against three."—Luke xii. 51, 52. Now this is the work of the Lord, and he doeth all things well.

We might adduce much more Scripture, but will close, and await the coming of some one whose mind may be directed to treat further upon the subject. I sometimes conclude that it requires a great many more to preach a perversion of the gospel than it does to preach the gospel. While some charge a great deal of money for their services, I could not preach their doctrine for double the wages their greatest preacher receives.

May God bless all his dear children. The SIGNS comforts me in my affliction, and I hope it will continue to come to me. Yours in hope,

C. T. RICHARDSON.

SUNSET, Texas, Dec., 1890.

OAKHILL, Ill., Jan. 1, 1891.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—As I have to write you on business, I thought I would pen a few lines for your inspection, and to do with as you may deem best; and without any apologies I will proceed.

The article of Elder Francis' in a late number of the SIGNS has called up in my mind some reminiscences of the past half century that I will mention. The first is, the time and manner in which the doctrine of predestination was applied to my experience. Though young, I had been, as all men naturally are, a hater of the doctrine, though a member of an Old School Baptist Church. In the fall of 1836 I went with my pastor, who was a sound Baptist, to attend the Lexington Association, held with the late Elder Ephraim Crocker's church; and while at an evening meeting at his house I heard a brother Choate, a licentiate, speak from Eph. i. 11; and the Lord, I believe, was with him, and enabled him to so doctrinize my experience that I have not from that time to the present had a doubt of the doctrine set forth in his text, and have always looked upon it as a cardinal truth, accepted and believed by all Old School Baptists. But I have met many good and faithful brethren who could not go so far as the predestination of all things.

How the charge of "fatalism" can be brought against one who believes in God's predestination of all things seems to me unaccountable. I look upon fatalism as being directly opposite. The one accounts for the existence of all things and the occurrence of all events by ascribing them to God's creative power and sovereign will, as guided by infinite wisdom. The other leaves God out of the question, and can see no creative power nor intelligent purpose in the existence of things or occurrence of events but ascribes everything to a blind fatality or chance, and hence is the very essence of Atheism or infidelity. This is the great issue upon which the great battle is to be fought, when the Lamb shall overcome his enemies by the sword of his mouth; for he is Lord of lords and King of kings. Then, dear brethren, do not be discouraged, but continue to wield "The sword of the Lord and of Gideon," trusting the God of David, who says, "He teaches my hands to war, so that a bow of steel is broken by mine arms," and in whose strength he could run through a troop or leap over a wall.

My observation, during the fifty-four years that I have been an unworthy member of the Old School Baptists, has taught me that there is but one adjective word or phrase that we can attach to the name of Baptist but what the enemies of truth will also claim, and that is the word "Predestinarian." I would that all the churches could adopt it. I think it would shut out a great many enemies; of course not all, for then how could the Scripture be fulfilled? "I know this, that after my departure shall grievous wolves enter in among you, not sparing the flock. Also of your own selves shall men arise, speaking perverse things, to draw away disciples after them." This is the history of the church from Paul's day until now in a nutshell.

There were strange children in David's time, children of unlawful marriages, an idolatrous set, of whom he prayed to be delivered. "Rid me, and deliver me from the hands of strange children whose mouth speaketh vanity, and their right hand is a right hand of falsehood." What was literally true in David's time is often fulfilled spiritually under the gospel dispensation. The right hand is the symbol of power. Then their power rests only in falsehood. Thus their fall is certain.

I will close, for I find that my mind is not in the frame to write; and I would not have commenced had I not desired to give you a word of encouragement, as well as a little material aid. I am a poor comforter, but you know by experience where your strength lies.

These lines have been penned in haste, and I will not take the time to read them over; if I do they will most likely go into my drawer or the stove; and you may consign them to a like fate, all or a part, as you please.

May the God of Israel be your God, and give you strength for your work, is the prayer of your poor, unworthy brother, if one at all,

R. F. HAYNES.

NEWMAN, Ill., Dec. 29, 1890.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—The first of May next will be thirty-three years since I became a subscriber to the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, and I have not missed a single number; and generally I indorse its contents. As I am getting old, it appears that I am getting partial to the SIGNS, for it appears to publish more experimental heart-work lately than when I first became a subscriber. Heart-work I love, when operated by the Holy Spirit. There is a passage of Scripture often on my mind which I would like to see a comment upon in the SIGNS. It is recorded in Romans vii. 9, and reads, "For I was alive without the law once; but when the commandment came, sin revived, and I died." Do write an editorial upon it, and be particular about the "commandment," and its effect when it comes. I gave this text to a Presbyterian preacher once. I asked him if he would preach from a text if I would give him one. He said he would if I would give him time to study it. I told him to take his own time to study it. He was to let me know by my son, and I was to go and hear him. He preached there eighteen months, but did not study my text, or at least he did not send me word; so I never had the opportunity of hearing my learned friend on the subject.

I expect this will be the last subscription that you will receive from me, as my sight has failed very much, and my bodily strength also. I have not attended any meeting for three years. I will be eighty-six years old my next birthday.

Your unworthy brother,

JAMES MCINTYRE.

BURDETT, N. Y., Nov. 2, 1890.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS—And all the sons and daughters of God who love truth and despise error. I would like in my feeble way to write some of the meditations of divine truth that have been welling up in my mind of late. I do not know that it would be worth the while to make excuses, or to tell you of my weakness and incompetency. I feel to say with Paul that I am less than the least of all saints. I have tried to excuse myself and put it off, but yet it has been running in my mind; and if what I may write shall relieve me of the burden, I shall be satisfied. I think the burden that has been on my mind is praise to God. In Psalm ix. 1 we read, "I will praise thee, O Lord, with my whole heart: I will shew forth all thy marvelous works." I have no doubt that such is the desire of all the saints of God to-day, and has been from David's time till the present. The next verse also expresses my mind fully, "I will be glad and rejoice in thee: I will sing praise to thy name, O thou Most High." I believe such were the feelings of those who were with Jesus on their way to Emmaus, and of Paul and Silas when shut up in the prison. Such, dear brethren, has been my case at times. The psalms are full of expressions of praise and thanksgiving. In Psalm xix. 1 we read, "The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament sheweth his handiwork." Dear brethren, have we not all experienced this in looking at the starry heavens, and on the rainbow, and on the clouds, and at the lightning, and what we hear in the peals of thunder? Then we are told to "Rejoice in the Lord, O ye righteous; for praise is comely." Again, says the psalmist, "I will bless the Lord at all times: his praise shall continually be in my mouth." Such, dear brethren, is my desire; but such is not always the case with me.

DEC. 14.

THE foregoing, as you will see, has been written some time. From that time until to-day it has been running in my mind; and as I was reading in the SIGNS last evening the letters of sister Attie A. Curtis, and she used the words of David, "Praise ye the Lord," it filled my soul with praise, and reminded me of what I had written, and I felt that I could not withhold it; and as my subscription had about expired I thought it would be a good time to finish my letter and send on my subscription for another year, as I cannot well get along without the SIGNS OF THE TIMES; for in it I read many blessed messages of love from my Father's dear ones, of the household of faith.

Dear brethren editors, I hope you may be sustained in your arduous labors, and that the brethren may sustain you by taking the paper. Do with this as you think best.

Your brother in hope of eternal life,

H. B. ELLIOTT.

COTTONWOOD, Texas, Dec. 27, 1890.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—I will see those three that subscribed for the SIGNS for this year. I feel satisfied that they will renew, if they have not already done so. I could have sent you a number of names with one dollar each for one year; but I did not have any hope of their renewing and becoming regular subscribers, therefore I did not send them in; for I hope and believe that the object in view in sending the SIGNS out into the world is to hold forth the truth, and to comfort the heirs of promise. Then, my dear brethren and sisters, all of you who have been writing for the SIGNS, will you please write on, that I may hear you speak of the goodness of God to poor sinners such as I? I want to say to you all that I have never had the pleasure seeing any of you who have been writing for the SIGNS; but O how I do love you all, and love to hear that God is yet your shield and hiding-place, your present help in every time of need. O glorious thought! O precious hope! that though we are never permitted to meet in this life, we anticipate meeting all the redeemed family of the Lord when time shall cease to be, and we shall be fashioned like unto Jesus' glorious body. Then will we see him as he is, and be like him. Is not this enough to fill our hearts with that love which passeth knowledge, and is unspeakable and full of glory? Dear brethren, let us strive to be of one mind and one judgment, putting away all strife and division, if there be such in our midst. Let us come together and confess our faults one to another, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven us.

Dear brethren, let us all who have been reading the SIGNS, and know that its editors have been faithful in declaring the whole counsel of God, and have not sought the honor of the world, but have faithfully declared the honor and glory of God, to the upbuilding of his saints, see if we cannot add at least one new subscriber to the list of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

Now, dear brethren, I must stop, lest I become wearisome. I had no thought of writing this for publication. Why I have written as I have, God only knows. Brethren editors, it is for you to do with this as you think best. Please correct all mistakes, and pray for me, a poor sinner saved by grace, if saved at all.

J. M. GRIFFIN.

NORTHPORT, N. Y., Dec. 12, 1890.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—The time for my remittance is at hand, which I send with much pleasure, thankful that the Lord in his goodness has provided such a way of communicating the travel of his poor and afflicted people, as he has seen fit to deprive me of the pleasure of meeting with them. Nevertheless my soul rejoices in their prosperity, and mourns with them in their adversity.

"My soul shall pray for Zion still,
While life or breath remains;
There my best friends and kindred dwell,
There God my Savior reigns."

It cheers me in my lonely moments to have them tell my experience better than I can. Though faint, I am yet pursuing, trusting alone in the righteousness of my dear Redeemer, and knowing that he which hath begun the good work will bring me off more than conqueror. O how I long to praise him for his great love toward one so undeserving of the least mercy; yet his blessings are more than the hairs of my head. Though my nerves are so weak that I can bear but little, still the Holy Spirit preaches sweetly to me sometimes, without exhausting me. What a faithful teacher he is! I desire to be taught alone by him. I pray that I may be kept from all the errors that abound, for truly it is a day of blasphemy. How sweet is the thought that the Lord knoweth them that are his; and when he shall have accomplished all his purpose anti-christ shall be destroyed by the breath of his mouth. Yes, he shall reign till he hath put all enemies under his feet. Then shall come to pass the saying, "Death is swallowed up in victory." With this transporting thought my soul would leave this sinful clay, to embrace my dearest Lord.

If it will not crowd out more important matter, I would like to let my dear kindred in Christ know through the SIGNS that I never forget them, and often think of the sweet times that we have communed together. I am not able to write much. With much love to the household of God, I hope to meet them all where there will be no parting; and with this cheering prospect I will say farewell.

Yours in the gospel,
ELIZABETH BEESLEY.

ATLANTA, Ga., Dec. 2, 1890.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—It does my poor soul good to hear from the dear people of our God scattered throughout this wide sin-polluted world. I love to meet with them and to hear them talk of their trials and troubles while sojourning here in a strange land. I have not been long with the Baptists. I thought when I joined the church that I would have nothing to do but to go to meeting and enjoy myself; but O what a mistake! I soon found that I was surrounded by the fiery darts of Satan. But thanks be to God, the Giver of all good and perfect gifts, that I am permitted to live in the fellowship of the Primitive Baptists. O if I could only lay aside the sins that so easily beset me, and run with patience the race set before me, ever looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith.

Your unworthy brother, if one at all, in hope of immortality beyond the grave,

T. M. WRIGHT.

SAINT MARY'S, Ga., Dec. 28, 1890.

TO THE HOUSEHOLD OF FAITH:—Nearly one month has elapsed since I reached this quiet town, where I have purposed to spend the coming winter, the Lord permitting. I have felt very lonely indeed at times, and especially on the first day of the week, when I have fully realized that it was impossible for me to hear the word of God proclaimed in its purity and simplicity, although there are seven (the full number) denominations represented in this place. "Howbeit, in vain do ye worship me, teaching for doctrine the commandments of men." Therefore I realize that I can draw nearer to God in the seclusion of my own room than in the confusion of their so-called worship; and I trust he has not forgotten me to-day, for I hope I am enjoying measurably a sense of his kind and protecting care, and realize a feeling of gratitude that he has revealed himself to me as the absolute predestinator of all things. Yes, I can fully indorse Elder Francis' sentiments, and say with him that I fully believed, when I first met the Old School Baptists, that they were harmoniously established on that point, if not on all others. When I go back to my experience twenty years ago, how vividly to my recollection comes the revelation of himself as the sovereign God, declaring the end from the beginning; and what a sweet season of rest I enjoyed. I enjoyed also the doctrine that I had considered such a hard one. Only when God reveals himself to us as the absolute predestinator of all things can we understand his justice. Yes, I feel to say, with Job, "O that it were with me as in days past!" The Lord is faithful, and I trust he evinces in his dealings with me that he has not forgotten me; but, alas! how oft have I forgotten him. When trials came I felt that my lot was too hard to bear, and would take as it were my fate in my own hands; and for my rebellion I have experienced much desolation of spirit. Will you not, to whom I address these lines, think of me when it is well with you, and unite with me in petitioning him whom we profess to worship that I may honor my profession by sweetly submitting to his will?

If this is deemed worthy of publication I submit it. From one who cannot give up her little hope,

M. HILLINGS.

DEKALB, Ill., Dec. 27, 1890.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—Please suffer the liberty I feel to take on this occasion. After I had arrived at home on Saturday evening, weary and in much pain, my dear daughter read for me the communication from the pen of that dear valiant soldier in Israel; all such holding swords, and are about the bed (rest) of the greater than Solomon. I have reference to Elder John Stipp, of Oregon. I had almost feared we would not see anything more from his pen. But "They shall still bring forth fruit in old age, to show that the Lord is upright," &c. They shall speak of the glorious majesty of the everlasting kingdom of the King of kings. Ah, what a vivid contrast does his case present, together with so many others of the Lord's raising up (I would not make his case an exception by any means), with those of the modern college brood, with their array of prefixes and affixes, and their from eight hundred to thousands annual income, and all their modern apparatus and machinery and converting implements into the bargain. The lie has so thin a gauze over it that thinking men, even of this present evil world, readily detect the cheat. Ah, dear brethren, what rich amazing mercy to be led out. No glory but to the adorable Shepherd, who still leadeth as well as calleth his own by name. I would fain rejoice. They still follow him, as a result from the cause of all causes, and shall all join finally in the pean of complete victory obtained by the precious blood of the slain Lamb; in the which triumph may this poor, vile worm join, with the beloved editors. I had verily thought I must give up the paper, having passed my seventieth year, and entirely dependent for income on daily toil; but my dear daughter interposed, saying, "Pa, try another year; you know you cannot get on without it." O may the God of all grace strengthen you with might by his Spirit in the inner man.

Yours fraternally,
THOMAS NORRIS.

WILLIAMSTON, N. C., Dec. 29, 1890.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—I sent a number of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES the other day to an afflicted and bereaved sister, and she sent me one dollar to send to you for the paper. She had read your offer to new subscribers for one year. I will try, as I may see brethren and sisters who do not take the SIGNS, to see if they will not do so. I feel that I am indebted to you for sending me your paper so long since the death of my dear husband. I have seen much adversity. Nearly everything that I had to help me has been destroyed by fire. About seven years ago I lost one store, one house and an office; and three years ago I lost my barn and stables, carriage-house, &c. I had no insurance on any of the property. Thus one thing after another has made me feel adversity sure enough. I have reason for gratitude for the Lord's continued mercies. I feel for those who are embarrassed and oppressed.

I trust the Lord will cause the brethren to come to your aid. May you realize that the God of Jacob is with you. In haste I have written.

In the fellowship of the gospel,
your sister,

M. M. HASSELL.

PHILMITH, Oregon, Dec. 10, 1890.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—The time having arrived for me to send my remittance, I herewith send you two dollars for the SIGNS for the year 1891. The way I am situated I am not willing to do without it. I am eighty-three years of age, and live thirty-two miles from the place where we hold our meetings. We are surrounded by almost all the daughters of the "Mother of Harlots." I do not know how better to express it; for she is a mother, and has daughters, and they all sprang directly or indirectly from her. If they are not her daughters I am at loss to know where to find them. During the summer I am able to get to meeting, but in the winter I have a long lonely time, as none of the brethren or sisters are living near me, except sister Wadkins, who is living four or five miles from me. Her husband also seems to know and love the truth. The Savior said, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free. I sometimes spend a day with them, but am always anxiously looking for the SIGNS. The brethren and sisters in their communications tell the travel of my mind much better than I can tell it myself, and it is almost like talking face to face with them. This sometimes revives my drooping spirit, and my soul is drawn out in love to them, and to the God of all grace; but sometimes I am so shut up in "Doubling Castle," and so beset by "Giant Despair," that nothing can give peace. But when it is the pleasure of the Lord, he can give peace to the troubled soul; and, glory to his name, he knows at all times what is best for us, and no good thing will he withhold from them that love him.

I had thought of giving a short sketch of the travel of my mind; but my hand is so unsteady and cramps so that I will have to defer it for the present.

Your unworthy brother, if a brother at all,

WILLIAM BUTLER.

THE SPIRIT POURED OUT.

(Concluded from last number.)

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—Will you please give your views on Acts ii. 17? and oblige one who is well pleased with the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, and expects to take it as long as I can read it.

JOHN CHANDLY.

"AND it shall come to pass in the last days, saith God, I will pour out of my Spirit upon all flesh; and your sons and your daughters shall prophecy, and your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams."—Acts ii. 17.

"And your sons and your daughters shall prophecy, and your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams." It is not to be understood from this prophetic declaration that every imagination of men is an inspired revelation. Many of the thoughts of the saints are but the production of their natural minds; and these are no more reliable when they come in sleeping hours than when they are devised in their waking moments. It must be observed that all this prophecy was fulfilled on the occasion when Peter was moved by the Holy Ghost to declare its application then and there. Certainly neither dreams nor visions are to be regarded when they teach anything contrary to the truth which God has revealed in the inspired record given in the Scriptures. Not only must the followers of Jesus beware of false prophets who shall arise among them teaching perverse things, to draw away disciples after them; they are commanded in the law of Christ, "Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God; because many false prophets are gone out into the world." They are not left to their own discretion in obeying this direction, as if they might be able to detect such false prophets by their own discernment. The test, whereby they are to try every spirit and prophet, is clearly presented in the following verses: "Hereby know ye the Spirit of God; Every spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is of God; and every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is not of God; and this is that spirit of antichrist, whereof ye have heard that it should come; and even now already is it in the world."—1 John iv. 1-3. This confession is not in a merely verbal acknowledgment that the letter of the record is true, in telling of the life, suffering and crucifixion of the Son of God. The Spirit of God confesses always that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh of every individual sinner to whom that Spirit testifies the doctrine of the gospel. No other spirit can confess this truth. It cannot be received by the natural reason of the saints themselves. The pride of carnal nature claims that it is able to understand the truth by its own rational powers, and thus denies that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh in the revelation of his own truth. However any suggestion may commend itself to reason, the saints are not at liberty to receive it unless it is in accordance with the great truth that is here given as the infallible test. Much less can any professed prophet or teacher be received as a minister of Christ if his doctrine denies what the beloved saints have been taught by the revelation of Jesus Christ in them as their only hope of justification and life. By close observation of their own experience, the saints will see that every temptation to doubt their abiding evidence of hope in the grace of God for salvation, involves the denial which John says is characteristic of antichrist. No spirit or prophet who bears this mark is to be believed by them. The dead know not anything, and they are not troubled with doubts and anxiety in regard to their condition; but it is the work of the tempter to annoy and try the subjects of divine grace, as he dared to tempt our divine Redeemer with the doubt, "If thou be the Son of God."

The prophesying which is done by the sons and daughters of Zion is illustrated by that which was manifested by the subjects of salvation on the day of Pentecost. Every one who gladly receives the testimony of the gospel of the grace of God does prophesy in the sense of this inspired promise of God. The very fact that they hear in their own experience the word of life, is itself the manifestation of the spirit of prophecy. So Paul says, "Wherefore I give you to understand, that no man speaking by the Spirit of God calleth Jesus accursed; and that no man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost."—1 Cor. xii. 3. Failure to understand this truth has no doubt caused many dear saints to suffer distressing doubts in consideration of the fact that they are not able to speak as they desire in testimony of the salvation in which they have found comfort. When the Holy Ghost was given, on the occasion when Peter preached from this wonderful text, the multitude of them that believed were manifested by what they heard, and not by being qualified to preach as Peter did. Yet this was "that which was spoken by the prophet Joel.

The recipients of the Spirit do but a very little portion of their prophesying in the words which they speak or write. Their daily experience is the greater part of the fulfillment of this word of the Lord in the pilgrimage of the saints. In every trial they proclaim the assurance of that faith which is the fruit of the Spirit, when they cry unto the Lord for deliverance. So, the inspired record says that the woman of Canaan worshiped Jesus, "Saying, Lord, help me!" Since this is the prayer of faith, it is rightfully called prophesying. This Spirit certainly confesses that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh of such as can thus call upon him in the day of trouble. "How then shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher? and how shall they preach, except they be sent? as it is written, How beautiful are the feet of them that preach the gospel of peace, and bring glad tidings of good things! But they have not all obeyed the gospel. For Esaias saith, Lord, who hath believed our report? So then faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God."—Rom. x. 14-17. There is no room for questioning the fulfillment of this prophecy in every one who joyfully hears the word of the Lord in the gospel, since this is positively asserted by the inspired apostle concerning those who heard the word on the day of Pentecost. Yet to natural reason it does not appear that those who heard the preaching then, prophesied when they said, "What meaneth this?" They were amazed, and were in doubt, even when they thus prophesied. This fact illustrates the experience of all who are led by the Spirit of truth. While they know by faith the power of God in giving them eternal life, their natural reason is bewildered and cannot discern the evidence which is so clearly revealed in them by the Spirit of Christ which they have received. The opposition of the testimony of the natural senses against the knowledge which is received by faith, produces the unceasing warfare under which they must groan while they are subject to the vanity of the body of this death.

The visions which are seen by the young men of the Zion of our God are by the same manifestation of the Spirit which gives the dreams to the old men. Neither the visions nor the dreams are the result of efforts on the part of those to whom they are given. The distinction between young men and old men in the text is not to be understood as referring to the natural time of their existence, either as children of the earthly Adam, or as disciples of Christ. For it is declared that in that new creation of God "There shall be no more thence an infant of days, nor an old man that hath not filled his days; for the child shall die an hundred years old; but the sinner being an hundred years old shall be accursed."—Isa. lxxv. 20. Under the legal dispensation time was expressly recognized in the observance of every ordinance. Not only were certain days and years definitely appointed for strict observance as sabbatic rest times, but also especial ordinances of the law discriminated between the young and the old. However it may be proper that age should be respected among men naturally, that was not the import of the type. The provision that "Thou shalt not muzzle the mouth of the ox that treadeth out the corn," was not merely a law for the benefit of the brute; Paul has given the true intent of that law.—See 1 Cor. ix. 9-15. So, the distinction between old and young men in our text is not to be understood literally. For our guidance in understanding this discrimination, the character of each of these specified classes of the saints is given by authority of the Holy Ghost. The apostle says, "I write unto you, fathers, because ye have known him that is from the beginning. I write unto you, young men, because ye have overcome the wicked one, I write unto you, little children, because ye have known the Father. I have written unto you, fathers, because ye have known him that is from the beginning. I have written unto you, young men, because ye are strong, and the word of God abideth in you, and ye have overcome the wicked one."—1 John ii. 13, 14. In this text we have the inspired distinction of fathers, or old men, and young men, or little children. There is a sense in which all the subjects of grace are included as little children, but in the sense in which the young and old men are separately presented in our text, it is safe to accept only the inspired definition. Literal time has no relation to this distinction. From his manifestation as a chosen vessel unto the Lord, to bear his name before the Gentiles, and kings, and the people of Israel, the apostle Paul was one of the old men, as well as one of the young men; and this was true of him to the time of his being offered. He was weak as the most timid of the saints, and strong as the most valiant of the apostles in earnestly contending "for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints." It is often the case that some of the most gifted ministers of the gospel are those who are comparatively young both in nature and in their experience of grace, while it is also true that those who have labored many years in the ministry very frequently feel that they are not as strong as they were in their earlier days. This exemplifies the truth that was proclaimed by the mighty Angel, the Lord Jesus, who set his right foot on the sea, and his left foot on the earth, and lifted up his hand to heaven, "And swear by him that liveth forever and ever, who created heaven, and the things that therein are, and the earth, and the things that therein are, and the sea, and the things which are therein, that there should be time no longer."—Rev. x. 6. Since the old legal heaven and Jewish earth passed away in the fulfillment of the law and the prophets by the Captain of our salvation, time is not an element in the kingdom of God. There are many whose age would qualify them to teach the doctrine of the gospel, who yet have need to be taught which be first principles of the oracles of God. The strength of the saints is not in proportion to their age, but "according as God hath dealt to every man the measure of faith." And this is manifested not by the years of their experience, but by the grace which is given day by day. The same saint may one day be blessed with that measure of faith which shall make him a strong young man, or an established old man in the gospel; and again, it may be the next day or hour, he may be a weak child having need of instruction in the very elements of the doctrine of Christ. The fact of a saint having received such clear evidence of the salvation of God as to be able to proclaim Jesus as the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world, does not enable that same saint when in prison and under darkness, to refrain from asking, "Art thou he that should come, or do we look for another?" In the first case John was the established old man, or father; in the latter case he was a weak child. But in both cases he was equally the chosen and beloved saint of God. By repeated experience the disciples of Jesus are taught in this way that they can do nothing without the Spirit of Christ; and that by his Spirit poured out upon them they can do all things. Since this Spirit is poured out by God himself, it is evidently only given in accordance with the will of God. If he will magnify the power of his grace in the confusion of the heathen king, he pours out his Spirit upon his servants so that the lions' den and the seven times heated furnace can do them no hurt. If he will show his saints their own utter weakness, they are left to tremble and deny their Lord at the accusation of a damsel. Strengthened of God, Elijah destroyed the false prophets; when that Spirit was not manifest in sustaining him, he fled from an old woman's threatening words. So, in the daily experience of the saints now, they learn that God is their refuge and strength, both by the manifestation of the omnipotence of divine grace in giving them the victory over trials, and in feeling their own utter helplessness when trusting in themselves. In these changes they are instructed in righteousness, and taught to trust in the Lord alone. The love of God gives every trial as well as every comfort and victory. His wisdom pours out of his Spirit according to his own will, and it is always in love and mercy to his chosen people that he gives or withholds this manifestation of his grace.

INDIGENT SUBSCRIBERS.

IN No. 46, Vol. lvii., we published a proposition to our readers to place indigent subscribers on our list at half-rates if our brethren would assist us in bearing the expense; and so liberal was the response that a fund was created which is not yet exhausted. We have entered on our list the names of all such applicants as we thought should have the paper free, but still have a small balance; and as contributions are applied we forward a notice to the contributor, informing him to whose subscription his remittance has been applied, and also the recipient of the paper to whom he is indebted for the payment of his subscription.

We have received several remittances of late for this fund; and as we apply them in the order received, it may be some time before these are reached.

W. R. WELBORN'S BOOK.

WE are in receipt of a copy of Elder W. R. Welborn's book, which is just out. We have not had time to examine the book throughout, but the author and his writings are too familiar to most of our readers to need any introduction from us. The book is in good plain-faced type, and contains 340 pages, together with a vignette of the author as a frontispiece. The price, bound in cloth, is $1.25 per copy, or $5.00 for five copies.

Brother Welborn writes that he is badly in debt on the book; and any of the brethren who would like to obtain a copy would do him a great favor by ordering as early as they conveniently can. Address, Wm. R. Welborn, State Road, Surry Co., N. C.

TO OUR DELINQUENTS.

WE have several hundred on our list whose subscriptions are a year or more in arrears, and most of these we have notified before, but heard nothing from them. The expense of our publication as a weekly is so near the receipts for the same that we must insist on subscriptions being paid as promptly as possible. We do not refer in this article to those who are only a few months in arrears. Brethren, please do not forget us.

BACK NUMBERS.

WE have printed quite a large number of extra copies of No. 1 of the present volume, and intend to run extra copies of each number for January, so that new subscribers during this month can be supplied with back numbers to the commencement of the volume until the supply is exhausted.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.

ELDER H. G. Mitchell having changed his address from Seaborn, Ga., to Oakley Mills, Ga., desires his correspondents to address him at the latter place.

EXTRAORDINARY OFFER!

FROM now until further notice is given any one who is now a subscriber, and whose subscription is paid up, may send us new subscribers at one dollar a year; but no one, either new or old subscriber, can get the paper from this office for themselves at less than the regular rates. Any one who is not now a subscriber can have the benefit of the above terms by sending two dollars for their own subscription, and one dollar each for additional new subscribers.

Please make no mistake about the above terms. No one, either new or old subscriber, can send to this office and get the paper for themselves for less than the regular rates; but if any of our paid-up subscribers choose to sacrifice their commission and take the new subscriber for one dollar, that is their matter.

MARRIAGES.

DEC. 24th, 1890, at the house of the bride's father, in Southampton, Pa., by Elder Silas H. Durand, Mr. David M. Voorhees, of Hopewell, N. J., and Miss Anna S. Fetter.

DEC. 24th, 1890, by Elder T. M. Poulson, at the house of the bride's parents, near Millsville, Worcester Co., Md., Mr. Charles F. Gordy and Miss Rosena West, both of Worcester Co., Md.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

DIED—In North Berwick, Maine, Dec. 14th, 1890, Mrs. Eunice Hanscom, aged 75 years.

She was a widow, and left three children, brothers, sisters and other relatives to mourn. She was not a member of our church, but was a fine woman, and gave good evidence that she was a child of grace. For quite a number of years she had, when she could, attended our meetings, and appeared to enjoy them much. I preached at her funeral, and it was a solemn meeting. May God bless all that mourn.

WM. QUINT.

NORTH BERWICK, MAINE.

MY DEAR BROTHER:—I am sad. My dear brother, Samuel Hansbrough, died last Thursday morning, Dec. 25th, 1890. My brother and companion in the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ has passed away from us who are living, and it is said by this world that he is dead; but our Master said, "He that liveth and believeth in me shall never die." Then, though he were dead, yet shall he live; yes, live, with our dear Elder Brother, who came into this world, suffered and died, bearing our sins in his own body on the cross, and rose victorious over hell, death and the grave, and ascended into the heavens, King of kings and Lord of lords. A blessed inheritance our brother has entered into, according to the will of our Father, and I would not have him back. It would be cruel and selfish for me to wish him back here. His presence was delightful. His voice, now hushed, was in life sweetened with the precious things of the kingdom of God. Many times have I been comforted, strengthened and instructed in the ways of God by that voice which I shall never hear again in this world. I am sad, because I am left alone. All the fathers have gone home, who were bound together in the fellowship of God. There were seven of us, as stated in the obituary of E. W. Keith, published some years ago in the SIGNS. I was then the youngest, excepting brother Hansbrough, and therefore I expected to depart before them; but the Lord, whose judgments are unsearchable, and his ways past finding out, has ordered otherwise, and I am left in a waste howling wilderness, among all manner of ravenous beasts of prey, a poor, ignorant, helpless sinner, having no confidence in myself. But I trust I have all confidence in our Lord Jesus Christ, who, I trust, will be with me in the future, as he has been with me in the past. O how can I forget those days of deep interest in the things of the kingdom! Why, we would not leave the room, for fear we would not hear some blessed things that might be said in our absence. When the conversation would begin to wane, the dear brother that has just left us was our prompter, if I may use such an expression. He seemed to be always ready to introduce something new that the brethren would take hold of with interest.

A. L. WOODSON.

WOODSONVILLE, Ky., Dec. 30, 1890.

BRETHREN BEEBE:—It becomes my sad and sorrowful duty to forward for publication in the SIGNS a brief obituary of a beloved daughter.

Miss Susan Vanmeter, daughter of I. N. and Lucinda Vanmeter, was born in Grayson Co., Ky., Nov. 26th, 1853, and departed this life in McDonough Co., Ill., on Sunday afternoon, Dec. 28th, 1890, aged 37 years, 1 month and 2 days.

Our dear daughter was confined to her bed eleven days before her decease with inflammatory rheumatism, and had the attention of a reliable physician daily. On Thursday before her death she appeared much better, and I left home to attend a church. After I left she became worse, but was not supposed to be in a dangerous condition; still, as she suffered much pain about the chest, there was some fear that the disease might attack her heart. On Saturday night she told a sister-in-law that if it did strike her heart it would be all right. A few minutes before four o'clock on Sunday afternoon she was propped up in the bed and conversed with the family, but complained of a heavy oppression about the chest. They laid her down, not apprehending any immediate danger; but within two minutes her spirit left its afflicted and mortal tenement, without a word or a groan. Some of our married children were present, and her mother and her sister Hattie; but I was absent, some fifteen miles away, and our other single daughter, Mattie, was in Denver, Colo., on a visit. What a shock was the telegram I received about dark that evening! What a shock to Mattie in Denver, and her brother there, and to her brother in Gunnison, Colo.! We all thought that she was improving so recently.

Our dear Susie joined the New Hope Church, at Greenbush, Warren Co., Ill., in October, 1889, and was baptized by our beloved brother, Elder B. F. Querry, of Raymond, Ill. I, as her father, feel a delicacy in speaking in the praise of my daughter as a country girl; but as a faithful and steadfast child of God, as an affectionate daughter, a true lady friend of unblemished life, as a successful dress-maker and landscape painter, and as a letter writer, she had few superiors in the same condition of life.

Our son M. H. and Mattie, from Denver, and our son Hiram, from Gunnison, all got home against Thursday morning, Jan. 1st, 1891; and our beloved brethren, B. F. Querry, who baptized her, and J. B. Dobbs, of Atterbury, Ill., being in this part of the state at that time, were called, and both spoke briefly and ably on the glories and wonders of the resurrection from 1 Cor. xv.; after which her remains were laid to rest in the Macomb cemetery until God shall call for her. Her experience was published in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES of July 23d, 1890. She leaves her parents, four brothers and four sisters in grief.

I. N. V.

DIED—Dec. 5th, 1890, after a lingering illness, Lottie Winchel, daughter of brother Wm. Winchel, of Ulster Co., N. Y., aged 14 years.

She was an amiable girl, and much esteemed by all who knew her. She was very patient in her sickness, though a great sufferer. Her parents and surviving brother and sisters were sadly bereaved, yet as much resigned as could be expected, feeling their loss to be gain to her.

Her funeral was largely attended at the Baptist meeting-house on Sunday afternoon, Dec. 7th, 1890, when the writer tried to speak words of comfort. May the Lord give them good cheer in this their time of sorrow, is my desire, that they may be still, and know that he is God.

ALSO,

DIED—Dec. 26th, 1890, Mr. Jonathan Kelly, of Red Kill, Delaware Co., N. Y., after a short illness consequent to old age, in his 85th year.

He was not a professor, yet a lover of and a believer in the doctrine of salvation by grace through our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

He leaves a widow, one daughter, one son, a daughter-in-law, two grandchildren, with other relatives, to mourn the loss of a kind husband and father, as well as an exemplary neighbor. On account of the wintry weather and deep snow, the concourse was not large at his funeral, which the writer attended on Sunday, Dec. 28th, 1890.

ALSO,

DIED—Miss Clarrissa Kelly, an own sister of the above, died while his obsequies were going on near by, from a more lingering illness, in her 75th year.

She was not a professor, but one who lived an exemplary life, and was loved and much esteemed. She was the last one of the family by the first mother, leaving half-sisters and a brother, with a large circle of relatives, to mourn. Her funeral was more largely attended, (as the day was fairer) at the house of her brother, who went just before her to the great beyond, from whence no traveler returns.

The writer desired on the occasion to point the surviving relatives to the Lamb of God, who not only took away the sin of the world against every elect vessel of mercy, but who still holds the keys of death and hell in his hands. May God comfort the mourning ones.

ALSO,

DIED—Jan. 1st, 1891, near Delhi, Delaware Co., N. Y., at the house of his son, Mr. John Hobbie, in the 87th year of his age.

In early life he made a profession, and united with the New School Baptists, not knowing the desire for advancement then existing in that body, which learning caused him to dissent and leave them, being drawn to the Old School or Primitive Baptists, though he never came into full fellowship by profession. He attended their meetings as far as he could, and continued in old age to cherish the doctrine they advocate, salvation without any merit of the creature. It may be said of him that he was full of years, and sleeps in Jesus.

His funeral was largely attended at the house where he died. He has left behind to mourn two sons and three daughters, with their families. God grant them peace.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date, this date denotes the time at which your subscription expires, and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

CHRIST THE APPLE TREE.

"As the apple tree among the trees of the wood, so is my beloved among the sons."—Solomon's Song ii. 3.

Among the trees that grace the wood
A glorious one I see,
With branches fair, with fruit so good,
'Tis Christ, the Apple Tree.

Once I sat down beneath his shade
With such intense delight,
His beauties were to me display'd—
O what a lovely sight!

The rest I felt, the peace, the joy,
Can ne'er forgotten be!
No mortal care could me annoy
Beneath the Apple Tree.

From every branch I freely eat,
Yea, gladly ate my fill,
For every fruit of Christ was sweet;
I feel the relish still.

Beneath his shade may I repose,
A precious rest for me;
No other rest my spirit knows
Like sitting 'neath this Tree.

C. SPIRE.

"ALL RIGHT."

In memory of my dear daughter, Susie Vanmeter, who died instantly, of paralysis of the heart, Dec. 28th, 1890. The night before her decease she told a lady at her bedside that if the severe pains of the chest which she was suffering should strike her heart it would be "all right."

"All right!" If the summons should suddenly come,
And hurry my spirit away,
'Twill only release me, and hasten me home,
To the climes of ineffable day.

"All right!" Though I may not be able to speak
One word to the friend that I love,
The sooner my pain-stricken heartstrings shall break
The sooner I'll reach home above.

"All right!" Though I leave my dear parents behind,
And brothers and sisters and friends,
'Tis painful to leave those that have been so kind,
But heaven will make all amends.

"All right!" for I'll need their attention
no more,
I'll go where there is no more pain;
Where sorrow and sighing and tears are all o'er,
With Jesus forever to reign.

"All right!" for my Father in heaven knows best,
And I calmly submit to his will;
For since he has taught me in his name to rest,
I'll lie in his hands and be still.

Yes, come quickly, Father, and call me away,
To the regions of glory and light;
And in that blessed mansion I ever shall say,

"Thy ways, dearest Lord, are 'all right.'"

CORRESPONDENCE.

STATE ROAD, Del., Jan., 1891.

BRETHREN EDITORS:—For some days past I have been pondering over the wonderful mystery of godliness, and I have taken up my pen to try to trace the subject upon paper, and offer such reflections as present themselves with any degree of force to the consideration of others.

The apostle, in his first letter to Timothy (iii. 16), asserts that "great is the mystery of godliness." He then goes on to show not only that it is a great mystery, but also wherein its greatness consists. In connection with the contemplation of this little sentence I find my mind running over the almost endless variety and beauty there is in divine truth. What a multitude of illustrations may be called into requisition, how various and diversified, and yet each and all reflecting more or less the beauty and glory of the sacred theme. Although the truth is singular, a unit, yet there is room for originality of thought and expression in it, and depth of riches unfathomed and unfathomable. There is no need either in speaking or writing that we should run in grooves, repeating ourselves, or following in our illustrations and phraseology in the track of others. It is not always, however, that we can attain to that excellency of speech or of wisdom to say what the subject and the occasion warrant without falling into a beaten track, and saying what has been just as well said many times before. A mystery implies something hidden, or incomprehensible. In other places the apostle speaks of it as having been hid in God; and also of it having been hid from ages and generations. But he also declares that it is now made manifest to his saints; that is, that this mystery of godliness, which from the beginning of the world had been hid in God, and remained hidden from all succeeding ages and generations, is now revealed unto his holy apostles and prophets by the Spirit. He then declares that God by revelation had made known to him this mystery; and that when they read his letter they would understand his knowledge in the mystery of Christ. These Scriptures certainly teach a revelation, or making known, of what had before been so long hidden, and that to individuals, just according to his good will and pleasure. Of whom it is also said, "To whom God would make known what is the riches of the glory of this mystery among the Gentiles." We are not to understand that the mystery of godliness is so revealed that it ceases to be a mystery. On the contrary, it is revealed as a mystery; and unless it had been revealed it would have remained hid in God as it had been before. The world as such do not see the mystery; they do not see that there is any mystery. If they see the fellowship of the mystery they fail to trace it to its source. It is called wisdom; but it is hidden wisdom, which God ordained before the world unto our glory. "Which none of the princes of this world knew; for had they known it they would not have crucified the Lord of glory." Neither would they have crucified his followers, nor tortured and persecuted his humble disciples. The apostle himself knew nothing of this mystery until it was revealed; and then as more and more was revealed the more wonderful the mystery appears, as one of the features of this revelation, the opening of the door of faith unto the Gentiles, seemed to astonish the apostle more than perhaps any other; and yet the mystery was the same, only it loomed up with more brilliancy to him as he viewed it from a Jewish standpoint. Godliness is the same, whether the subject of it be Jew or Gentile; but to the apostle it was wonderful that the Gentiles should be fellow-heirs, and of the same body, and partakers of the promise in Christ by the gospel.

Godliness is God-likeness. It is a principle that emanates from God, and is only known by the Spirit of God. Things appertaining to men are known by men, and there is no mystery about it; but eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him. "To the intent that now unto the principalities and powers in heavenly places might be known by the church the manifold wisdom of God." In exhibiting the greatness of this mystery of godliness the apostle speaks altogether of the revelation that God has made of himself. It is Christ in you the hope of glory. It is a holy, God-like principle imparted, so that a recipient of it could say, "I delight to do thy will, O my God; yea, thy law is within my heart." If godliness consisted only in form and outward show there would be no mystery about it. Everybody could understand it, and the spirit by which it was actuated. Each one could know for himself his own standing, and others could always know of him his proficiency in the matter of godliness. But instead of anything of this, it is God manifesting himself. "God was manifest in the flesh." As God was manifest in Christ, so is he manifest in the salvation that Christ is unto his people. God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself. Such a salvation is as full and complete for a Gentile as for a Jew, for that the Scripture hath concluded all, both Jews and Gentiles, alike under sin. That righteousness could be revealed not consisting of obedience to law, was to the apostle a great mystery; and it remains a wonderful mystery to this day. How little conception of a God-given principle of obedience to the divine will can those have who are engaged in the work of converting sinners by frightening them. The horrors of a judgment day and awful pictures of future torment are essential features in this work of coercing men and women into religious services. Services procured through fear of punishment must necessarily be a task and burden, in which the heart had no part, and in which there could not possibly be any enjoyment. Can we suppose it possible that any one enlightened from above could think for a moment that such services amounted to godliness? Could they suppose that services extorted from sinners by working upon their fears would be acceptable to that God who looketh on the heart? Whence then cometh wisdom, and where is the place of understanding, seeing it is hid from the eyes of all living, and kept close from the fowls of the air? "God understandeth the way thereof, and he knoweth the place thereof;" and this is virtually saying that it is known only to him.

The revelation of a purpose that has been hidden is its accomplishment. The mystery concerning the Gentiles, although abundantly declared in prophecy, remained hidden until it was revealed in its fulfillment; but it was not seen even as a mystery until then. These things that God hath revealed by his Spirit are the things that the angels desire to look into. In the revelation of this wonderful mystery God is said to be seen of angels; and the poet has it,

"The mightiest angel never saw
So much of God before."

Moreover, he is "Preached unto the Gentiles, believed on in the world." The Spirit of Christ, by which men are quickened, is henceforth their own Spirit. It constitutes relationship. "Now are we the sons of God." They are partakers of the divine nature. The Spirit that they have received bears witness of them. Animated and actuated by the Spirit of God, it is nevertheless themselves as quickened by that Spirit that mourns on account of sin, that feels its plague, and longs for deliverance. If so be that the Spirit of God dwells in them, they are taught by it, and it is in them a spirit of grace and supplications. The fellowship of this mystery in christian experience is sometimes seen by those from whom the mystery itself is entirely hidden. That men should be actuated by the fear of God and love to him in all acts of devotion and obedience, seems to be utterly incomprehensible to natural men. The idea of faith in God and trust in his salvation has always seemed to anger them. He that is born after the flesh persecutes him that is born of the Spirit.

The mystery appeared to Moses at the bush; and at the time it was evidently to him a great mystery, as the bush was all on fire, why it was not burnt. The three unyielding Jews in Babylon, it seems to me, were representative men. It was in the first place a mystery to Nebuchadnezzar that everybody should not willingly worship his great image. It will be a greater mystery if the terrors of his fiery furnace will not produce submission to his order. If Nebuchadnezzar really saw the form of the fourth, the likeness of the Son of God there, it would seem that the hidden mystery had indeed been revealed to him, and that he had endured a seeing of him who is invisible; but the proud and haughty king very soon betrays the most profound ignorance of the mystery of godliness. He issues an edict to compel his people to worship the God of the Hebrews. "If any man shall speak anything amiss against the God of the Hebrews he shall be cut in pieces, and his house made a dunghill." This edict is upon the same principle as the other, and will produce no better worship. It is no matter by what name it is called; any acts of devotion to which people are driven through fear, or into which they are forced by compulsion, are as far from the great mystery of godliness as the earth is from the heaven.

And how comes faith in God? Who shall tell how one satisfied with himself suddenly finds all his comeliness turned into corruption? How is it that we cease from our own works, and yet do not despair? Godliness is revealed from the other direction; and it constitutes a way of holiness, in which the redeemed are permitted to walk, and in which they come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads.

I may hereafter offer some reflections upon the mystery of iniquity, if my mind should run in that way.

E. RITTENHOUSE.

SOUTHAMPTON, Pa., Jan. 2, 1891.

DEAR BROTHER BEEBE:—I have found a letter among my papers which I wrote to you a little more than nine years ago. My impression is that I laid it aside because I thought it would not be worth reading, as I have done with many, and been tempted to do with many more. As I now read this letter over it appears to express my present condition of mind very well, and I have concluded to send it to you, and place it at your disposal. There have been important changes in the world since it was written, and important changes in the church, so far as its visible membership is concerned; for many dear and valued brethren and sisters have been removed, while others have been gathered in. But there have been no changes in the kingdom of God, no changes in the sweet doctrine and beautiful order of the church, and no change in the way in which the Lord makes known his purpose of love and mercy to his dear children. There have been to me important changes in my temporal relations and circumstances, but no change in the manner of experience concerning my spiritual life. I would have to-day a few more trials and deliverances to speak of, a few more seasons of darkness and deep distress and wretchedness on account of my cold, barren, sinful heart and mind, and a few more sweet seasons of refreshing from the presence of the Lord, just enough to keep me from entirely fainting by the way; but my changes in this respect are the same as they have been now for more than twenty-six years. I think, however, that the truth of God, the way of salvation and the fellowship of the saints never appeared more precious and glorious to me than now, and that my desire was never stronger to exalt and praise the God of our salvation for his loving-kindness and tender mercy to one so poor and unworthy.

With love from all of us to you and yours, and to all our kindred in Christ, your brother in hope of eternal life,

SILAS H. DURAND.

HERRICK, Pa., Dec. 16, 1881.

ELDER WM. L. BEEBE—DEAR BROTHER:—Sometimes it is a great comfort to speak with those who fear God, and tell of what he has done for our soul. We feel at such times as though we could not keep silence, but must praise his dear and holy name for his goodness, and for his wonderful works to the children of men. I have known such seasons, and they are indeed refreshing; but again I have felt so bad, such guilt and bondage, such self-aborrence, such darkness and coldness, that I could not even claim to be a christian, or talk of having a hope, without the fear that I was a hypocrite. To-night I am at neither extreme. I have a hope, and I feel thankful, or wish to, for it; but vague apprehensions that I may find that it is not a good hope are hanging like misty clouds around the horizon of my soul. I have had great searchings of heart for the past few weeks. I have had my evidences subjected to very close scrutiny in my own soul, and have had to pass judgment against many of what I had esteemed as such. Sometimes the feelings of peace and comfort which have a few times been produced within me by the application of a portion of Scripture I would be tempted to regard as but natural. Sometimes that which I had regarded as love to the brethren, and even that most sacred of all the emotions which I have ever experienced, and which I have looked upon as the love of God shed abroad in my soul, have appeared to me as though they must have partaken of the selfishness and vileness of my corrupt heart, and were not the holy principles I had thought them. I find upon close examination that the reason for these doubts as to the source and character of these sweet emotions of love and feelings of peace and comfort is that my life has not been what it ought to be. I have indulged vain thoughts so much that I hardly dare to think I can say with the psalmist that I hate them; yet I find no comfort in them, and found the cry of the psalmist to be truly mine, "My soul cleaveth unto the dust: quicken thou me according to thy word." This has been a comfort. My words have been so often vain and foolish and sinful that I did not look to myself at all like a child of God; yet I have been ashamed of them before God, and have felt the prayer expressed by the psalmist to be mine, "Set a watch, O Lord, before my mouth; keep the door of my lips." There has been a relief from doubt, and a consolation in my soul, when I have felt the power of this prayer; but even this has been questioned, as to whether I wanted to be kept from the exhibition of my vain and sinful heart for the glory of God, or only to sustain my own character as a consistent christian before men. And my actions, how inconsistent they have so often been, and what deep trouble they have caused me! O how anxiously I have looked over the long black list of the works of the flesh; and while I could say to myself of some of what men call the grosser crimes there enumerated, "I have not done such things," though I had to acknowledge that they had been in my heart, yet right among these, and not graded as of a lower order by the apostle, nor less fatal to a hope of inheritance in the kingdom of God, are such as are often lightly esteemed even by professed and, I hope and believe, real christians, idolatry, hatred, wrath, strife, covetousness, which is idolatry, and the like.—Gal. v. 21; Eph. v. 5. I have by these things been at times thrown into great distress of soul, while the enemy (I did not know it was he at the time) has cried out, "Where is your hope?" But I believe the truth expressed by the apostle in declaring the blessed and glorious doctrine of the resurrection has set me free, "Now this I say, brethren, that flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God; neither doth corruption inherit incorruption." Truly this precious doctrine drops like the rain from the gospel heavens, and distills like the dew upon the new earth; not to call forth and nourish the weeds of vanity and vice, which have their root always in the old earth, or carnal mind, but to call forth from the new earth the tender herbs of carefulness, and indignation against sin, and sorrow, and repentance, and vehement desire, and thankfulness, and to nourish the germs of hope and love and joy.

We can do nothing to recover ourselves from the snares of Satan, from the effect of his fiery darts, from the doubts suggested by him, or from the distress into which we are thrown by them; can do nothing to warm our hearts when cold, to enlighten our minds when dark, to raise up one emotion of love, or awaken a feeling of gratitude within us. O how helpless we are! But neither can the quickened soul be quiet and contented under this state of things. Even though faith says, amidst the darkness and confusion, "He knoweth the way that I take: when he hath tried me I shall come forth as gold," yet we must still restlessly turn this way and that, seeking the Lord forward and backward, on the right hand and on the left. Though we wait patiently for the Lord while fast in a horrible pit and in the miry clay of our depraved nature, yet we must cry unto him, and cannot keep silence; but while we keep thinking over and over the trials and distresses and perplexities, trying to find a way out, O how sweet when we can say, "He inclined unto me, and heard my cry." "In the multitude of my thoughts within me, thy comforts delight my soul." When the Sun arises we must rejoice in his light, and how quickly the shadows flee away. No questioning then. When the Sun of righteousness arises his blessed beams of truth fill us with light, and what healing there is in his wings for all our weakness and sickness and pain of soul; those sweet wings under which we trust, those soft feathers which cover us from all harm, those powerful and glorious wings which sometimes we experience in our souls as ours, bearing us up far above pain and fear, into the light of the presence of God, where we are always satisfied.

To-night I have felt like writing to you; but I cannot speak of temporal things nor describe literal journeys, of which I have taken many the past summer and fall, for my mind will go to the inner life, with its many changes, to the journeyings of the soul in that path which no fowl knoweth. O how many changes I have known in the past eighteen years, which takes me back to that time of trouble and darkness when as yet I had not known what it was to have a hope that Jesus died for me. As I look back and take a glancing view of all those changes my heart does go out in thankfulness to the Lord for his wonderful mercies to such a poor sinner; that he has kept me by his power through faith; that he has not left me to destroy myself; that he has not given me over into the hands of the enemy; that he has not dealt with me after my sins, nor rewarded me according to my iniquities; but that he has surprised me at unexpected times with his grace, and given me to taste of his loving-kindness, which is better than life. O how good he has been to me. I do think that he allows my soul to say to-night, "My Beloved is mine, and I am his."

With the next number another year of our family paper will begin. He who began its publication, and continued it well on in its forty-ninth year, is gone. With the feelings I have to-night I cannot mourn his loss, though I have felt it so deeply all along. It was better for him to depart and be with Christ. He was here as long as was needful. The Lord knew. He is above all, and his will is infinitely best. The tongue has ceased, because its words were all spoken; the prophecies have failed, because all fulfilled; the knowledge has vanished away, because the end of all that knowledge is attained in experience. But there is no change in the church. Faith, hope and charity remain, and shall till time shall end, when love only shall be known forever in heaven.

The Lord is helping you in your work, and brother Benton in his, I believe. I have read after your pen with comfort and profit. May his blessing continue to attend your labors to the good of his dear children scattered abroad. I think now I can say that I love all those who love our Savior, rejoice with them in their joy, and sympathize in their sorrows; and that I love all the churches of our God, and would esteem it a privilege to serve any of them when and how the Lord will.

Your brother in the hope of the gospel,

SILAS H. DURAND.

ALEXANDRIA, Va., Jan. 1, 1891.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—When I received the SIGNS of December 24th, in looking over the able communications I saw one from my dear brother, A. D. Jones, of Kansas, in which he mentioned my name; wherein also he expressed a sentiment that seemed so brotherly and Christ-like that I felt like I would venture to write one more letter, and let brother Jones know that the sentiment as expressed by him, "I would sooner lose the argument than to gain it in an unchristian-like manner," has my full indorsement; and I would to God all our brethren would profit by it; for it seems to me that when brethren do not see exactly alike in the application of certain texts of Scriptures, they should be willing to grant to each other the same privilege, and show that they are little children in the kingdom of Jesus Christ. I remember a conversation I had some years ago, coming from the Corresponding Meeting of Virginia, in company dear Elder Gilbert Beebe. I asked him this question, "Brother Beebe, did you ever entertain a view of a certain passage of Scripture, which at that time you thought was a correct view, and afterward you saw a more excellent way?" His answer was, "Many a time." His answer had such conviction in it to my mind that I asked him no more questions on that subject, but thought, Is it possible that Elder Gilbert Beebe, with all his experience and gift, is yet a babe in the mystery of the gospel? for I was so much impressed with what he said that I have not forgotten it to this day; and now, when brethren get into controversy, I feel like brother Jones expresses it, "I would sooner lose the argument than gain it in an unchristian-like manner."

I have had some thoughts upon the passage of Scripture referred to by brother Jones in his letter (Rom. viii. 22, 23), "waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body;" but I almost fear to express them, as I am opposed to controversy. I think if a brother has a word, let him speak the word, and let others judge, but not in controversy. The apostle says, "No Scripture is of any private interpretation;" therefore it must be of a general interpretation, and the church must judge. The apostle in this letter to the church at Rome is showing, by one of the ablest arguments ever made by man, the difference between the gospel of the Son of God and the law of sin and death, and says, "There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit. For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death." And in this same chapter we have the text before quoted; and in Gal. iii. 13, he says, "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us; for it is written, Cursed is every one that hangeth on a tree." Thus it would seem that redemption in this quotation is complete, from the curse of the law; and in the former quotation, "waiting for the redemption of our body." I believe that the redemption price of every subject of grace was fully paid when Christ hung upon the tree of the cross, so far as divine justice is concerned; for in that body was represented every subject of his love. If not, where is our hope? There will be no more sacrifice for sin, "For by one offering he hath perfected forever them that are sanctified."—Heb. x. 14. But with the subject of grace there is a waiting. Jesus says, "Except ye be converted and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven." Now here is a figure used by Jesus, and in this figure we see something in regard to waiting; for no little child receives an inheritance until it becomes of age, but is under tutors and governors. So we, the redeemed children which Jesus has adopted as his own subjects, of love and mercy, have to wait until the appointed time to receive the inheritance. Job says, "All the days of my appointed time will I wait, till my change come." He also says, "For I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth; and though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God." Job spoke this by faith. He said he would wait his appointed time; and we, believers in the redemption of our body, have to wait the appointed time. We are now little children, babes in the kingdom of Jesus, but adopted ones we hope. We are in the flesh, sin is mixed with all we do, and we groan, being burdened, waiting to be delivered from this bondage of corruption. Is not this our daily experience? All we know is by experience, and we learn day by day. You know Paul besought the Lord to be delivered from the thorn in the flesh; but the Lord told him his grace was sufficient. So then, dear brethren, we must wait until we come to our majority. Jesus never promised you beds of feathers in this world; no, but afflictions. Paul calls them light afflictions, but says they are not to be compared with the glory that shall follow. I think sometimes our own experience is the best way to show up a subject or passage of Scripture; for experience is testimony; and as in water face answers to face, so doth the heart of man to man. I have selected the story of a certain man that went down from Jerusalem to Jericho, and fell among thieves, which stripped him of his raiment, and wounded him, and departed, leaving him half dead. And by chance there came down a certain priest that way; and when he saw him he passed by on the other side; and likewise a Levite, when he was at the place, came and looked on him, and passed by on the other side. But a certain Samaritan, as he journeyed, came where he was; and when he saw him he had compassion on him, and went to him, and bound up his wounds, pouring in oil and wine; and he set him on his own beast, and brought him to an inn, and took care of him; and on the morrow when he departed he took out two pence and gave them to the host, and said unto him, Take care of him, and whatsoever thou spendest more, when I come again I will repay thee. The story of the man that went down from Jerusalem to Jericho seems to be my experience. Jerusalem is figurative. "I will make my King higher than the kings of the earth;" which represents an exalted place. Jericho is down in the valley, and represents the nations of the earth; and travelers taking that road will be sure to fall among thieves; and they are not only thieves, but they are the devil and his angels. I remember my journey down that road; and they got hold of me, and stripped me, and left me half dead; and I have not gotten over it yet. They seem to be always round about, which keeps me scared, and I fear and tremble. I remember the priest coming along, which represents worldly religion; and I tried that the best I knew how, but got worse instead of better; also the Levite, the law, "Pay me that thou owest." He put me in mind of Job's three friends. "If you had lived right, and done better, and been good, you would not be in this condition; for it is no more than you deserve." Miserable comforters; and they went on. But a certain Samaritan as he journeyed came where I was; and when he saw me he had compassion on me, and bound up my wounds, pouring in oil and wine, which I called pity and love; for it is written, In his love and in his pity he redeemed them; and he bare them and carried them all the days of old." And he set me on his own beast, which I named charity, or love, peace on earth, good will to men; and he brought me to an inn, where I saw kindred spirits just like me; the half-dead, the halt, the lame, the blind, the outcasts, and despised ones of the earth. I liked the company, for they and I were just alike, being half-dead; and I called the name of the inn the church of Jesus Christ; for he was kind to those people when he was upon the earth; also kind to me. And on the morrow, when he departed, he took out two pence and gave to the host, and said unto him, Take care of him, and whatsoever thou spendest more, when I come again I will repay thee. The money he paid was ransom money, and was different money from any I ever saw before; and it was all he had in this world. I called it his flesh and his blood, which we at the inn have been living on ever since; and it is the only kind of food we want till he comes again. Ever since that time he left me at the inn I have been waiting for him to come again. Those thieves that wounded me seem to be after me all the time; they are always prowling around wherever I go, which keeps me always in fear, and makes me want to see my friend. So you see I am waiting for the time my friend will come to see me again. He promised to come, which gives me the earnest of the Spirit that he will come; and if any charges are against me he will pay them all. Sometimes I get mighty low down in heart, fearing I am not one of his adopted children; for it seems to me the older I get the worse I get; for I only see in part, only know in part, and only feel in part. The great trouble is this body of flesh in which I dwell. It is so unlike the good Samaritan's I hope I once saw; and the only evidence I have that he has adopted me as his child is that time when he journeyed and had compassion on me, and poured in oil and wine, bound up my wounds, put me on his own beast, took me to the inn, paid all the charges against me, and my board-bill till he comes again; while on the other hand the priest and the Levite, who profess to be Christians, and good men, and say that they are helping God to save souls, passed by me in their silver slippers, when they saw me in my desolate condition, and would not even so much as lift a finger to give a cup of cold water, but went their way on the other side of the road. O, my dear friend, should I not love this dear Samaritan, and wish to see him again? This love I have for him is the evidence I have that he will come again unto me; and now I am waiting, patiently waiting, until I become of age, so that I may receive the complete fulfillment of my adoption, the redemption of my body; the full inheritance of the saints, when mortality shall be swallowed up of life; and when that time comes we hope to be able to sing that good old song of Moses and the Lamb, "The Lord hath triumphed gloriously; the horse and his rider hath he cast into the sea;" yes, the sea of death. And with the poet we can sing,

"Welcome the day of sweet discharge,
Which sets my longing soul at large;
Unbinds my chains, breaks up my cell,
And gives me with my God to dwell."

Affectionately your brother in hope,

JOSEPH BRODERS.

WAVERLY, N. Y., Dec. 24, 1890.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—Please publish the within letter from brother Fisher, if in your judgment you think proper; and I think you will, for it is a good, experimental letter, and I feel a hearty response in my heart to the eternal truth that is set forth in it. The sovereignty or absolute predestination of God is a grand, glorious, God-honoring truth, heralded by the prophets, by the Savior, by his apostles, and by his faithful watchmen in these times. I want to say "Amen!" aloud to the communication of Elder A. B. Francis on this subject. There have been a great many very able communications from different ones upon this subject since it has been assailed by those who once said "Brother Beebe," and knew fully of his doctrinal views. Yes, brother Francis, your dictionary is right in regard to "permissive decrees." Mine thinks just in that way—"permissive nonsense."

Dear brethren, one and all, keep the banner of truth unfurled. Cry aloud, spare not, lift up your voices like a trumpet. Say to the righteous that it shall be well with them, and to the wicked that it shall go ill with them. If you are going to shoot, take living game. Dead Arminians do not know when they are hit. There is enough Arminianism in the church, and your brethren know when they are hit; for they are alive, and will love you the more when you are faithful in exposing error in the church. I do not blame you for throwing an occasional bomb into the Arminian camp, if you think any one will be benefited. Debating with an Arminian is like kicking a dead dog; neither you nor the dog is benefited. I have learned this by experience; therefore I know whereof I affirm. May God help his servants to preach Jesus, the way, the truth and the life, is my desire.

Your brother in affliction,

D. M. VAIL.

SANTA FE, Mo., Nov. 15, 1890.

DEAR BROTHER VAIL AND FAMILY:—I reckon that I ought to feel ashamed of myself for not answering your kind letter sooner, which we received so long ago; but I am very slow to do some things that I ought to do. If I were only as slow to leave undone some things that I ought not to do, I would be glad.

You say that what I wrote did you much good. Well, then give God all the glory. If I ever did give expression to one thought that did any one of God's children any good, I know that the Lord enabled me to do so; "for I know that in me (that is, in my flesh), dwelleth no good thing." Although this is a painful truth, yet it is one that I desire never to lose sight of while I live in the flesh; for a knowledge of this fact is calculated to keep us humble. When I am enabled to esteem others better than myself I am sometimes led to hope that I may be a subject of God's grace, and that I have been made alive; for true meekness surely is one of the characteristic marks of God's people. True meekness never originates in the flesh, but is the fruit of the Spirit. Nothing but the grace of God can make a poor sinner humble, and it takes that same grace to keep him humble; but sometimes I am made to fear that I am only deceived, that I do not possess that true meekness, and that I only have that which I do feel to so greatly hate, to wit, a feigned meekness.

You speak of tight times in the east. It is the same in the west. The farming and other laboring classes are being more and more oppressed all the time. I am no prophet, but I fear sometimes, if there is not a change for the better soon, that fearful times await us; there is so much corruption in the land, both politically and religiously. Evil workers and seducers are waxing worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived; but thanks be to God, they can go so far, and no farther. My dear brother, if not deceived, I humbly trust that under sore trials and afflictions God hath enabled me to rejoice in the truth that God is God to all intents and purposes; that he rules and reigns supreme; that he not only governs and controls all things, but that he worketh all things after the counsel of his own will; and that all things work together for the good of them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose. Wicked men and devils can do only what he hath before determined they shall do; and they cannot even do this until the appointed time. The wicked Jews could not take the Savior one moment sooner than they did. Pilate, who said that he had power to release him, or to deliver him up to be crucified, had no power at all only as it was given him, for Christ said so; and I would rather be enabled to believe what he says than to receive the sayings of any man that ever lived, unless he has a "Thus saith the Lord" for what he says. Yes, "Let God be true, and every man a liar." But, brother Vail, if I really from my heart believe the truth as it is in Jesus, that is, if I believe in God's electing love, his predestinating purpose respecting all events, and his unlimited sovereignty, I only believe it as he enables me to. No man has ever yet believed anything, either naturally or spiritually, without evidence; and sometimes I humbly hope that I have the evidence, or the witness that produces the evidence, yet often I am made to doubt. But this one thing I feel that I do know; the things that I once hated I now love, and some of the things are God's election and predestination. Yes, it is with shame I must confess that the very things I feel my hope of life and immortal glory is based upon are the very things that I was once so opposed to. O how dead, deaf, dumb and blind the poor sinner is! How utterly false the Arminian theory is, that the sinner is not dead, as the Bible represents him to be, but that he possesses power to exercise faith and to accept Christ. No man yet has ever exercised faith in anything, but faith exercises men; and if Christ only offers salvation, and leaves men and women to accept or reject it, the last one of them will reject him.

But I am making this scribble too long. Love to you all. Do not as I do, but write soon. Your brother in hope,

MARTIN D. FISHER.

TIFFIN, Ohio, Jan. 2, 1891.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—Moments, days and years in the beautiful system of the great I Am continue to come and go. Time with ceaseless flow carries us ever on from the cradle to the grave. Man as a finite creature reckons by spaces of lesser or greater length; but he who is "without beginning of days or end of life," who is from everlasting to everlasting, and changes not, sees all things that have been, are now, or will be, even as one eternal now. To us have come during the past year trials and disappointments, joys and sorrows. We have devised our way, but an unseen hand has directed our steps. To many of us have come the gray hairs of age, as we near the setting sun; and as in former years, so now do we learn from daily experience our dependence upon our heavenly Father. Every good gift and every perfect gift comes down from him alone. How our self-esteem would be gratified could we say, "My hand hath gotten these things;" or at least, "I have merited them." But no; when we have performed our whole duty (which none can claim) still are we unprofitable servants. Divine truth and a truly sound philosophy are in perfect harmony. An inspired mind inquires, "What have I that I have not received?" False reason replies, "Behold what human will and human skill have wrought. The great men of earth are usually 'self-made.'" Is this true? Have not all men and women grown from infancy—the child in no way responsible for its existence nor its organization, mental nor physical? Admitting that surrounding conditions develop character, what has the child to do with the making of those conditions? The natural child and man is dependent upon conditions antecedent to and coincident with his being here; and all these conditions are in the hand of him by whom are all things. God not only ordains the end, but the means to that end. No matter how learned or great men may be esteemed, there can never be place for human pride; for all power and all blessings are from above. If our lines have fallen in pleasant places we should be humbly grateful, not proud. If more of wisdom or knowledge has been given us than to some other of our fellow-creatures or brethren, let us beware how we "put on airs," or seek to use our power to exalt or enrich ourselves unjustly. The knowledge that puffeth up is devoid of the wisdom that sees the hand of God in every gift or possession. The archenemy of the human race thought to make himself equal with God; hence this proud ambition is the fruitful source of every sin and folly. As like begets like, so do we find the children of disobedience like the spirit that worketh in them—proud, arrogant, envious, covetous, hateful. How needful the prayer, "Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil;" for by nature we have all these hateful characteristics. Alas! who shall deliver us from the body of this death? The self-confident replies, "Be more careful of your steppings, more diligent in good works, more fervent in prayer, and your ways will be pleasant, and the tempter will flee away. Stop complaining, go to work," &c. These suggestions have come to every little child, to every father and mother in Israel. They came to Paul, who longed to be free from temptation, and perfect in good works; but he who sees not as man sees has use for the thorn in the flesh, to keep us dependent and humble in his presence; to teach us that we are not self-made, but that what we are is by the grace of God. I speak of those who, like Paul, are dead to sin, whose life is hid with Christ in God, and who have heard the sweet voice, "My grace is sufficient for thee." In every age the saints have sung, "Salvation is of the Lord." But who hath believed this report? To whom is the arm of the Lord revealed? Not to the self-made, rich, wise, nor mighty; but to the poor in spirit, to the weak, the foolish, even unto babes, is revealed the secret of the Lord, which is hidden from the wise and prudent. Though God's wondrous plan of salvation is to the "do and live" Jew a stumbling-block, and to the scientific Greek foolishness, yet to the happy family banqueting beneath the banner of Immanuel's love it is the power of God and the wisdom of God. None can appreciate this salvation if they have never been lost. We read in the so-called christian press that "Great changes are manifest in the trend of religious thought." Yes; but in what direction? More exaltation of man, less dependence on Christ. Clearly this is the "trend of religious thought." These days ought not surprise the student of Scripture. "Evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse," denying the Lord that made them, &c.

Brethren, let us not be surprised if the last decade of the nineteenth century be replete with startling and revolutionary events. But whatever may be the wrath of man, it will rebound to the praise and glory of God; and he has promised that so much of man's wrath as is not for his glory he will restrain. Blessed assurance! "All things work together for good" to the ransomed of the Lord. Come calm or tempest, sunshine or storm, our Father is at the helm, and will carry us safely through to the shore celestial, where there is no sorrow, nor crying, nor pain, nor sin, nor death.

May the God of all grace keep you and all his little ones under his fatherly care now and evermore, is the prayer of the least, if one at all.

JOHN SEITZ.

YORKTOWN, ILL., Sept. 20, 1890.

DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS IN THE LORD:—It has been impressed on my mind for some time to write what I hope have been the Lord's dealings with me. I never had very serious thoughts about another life until I was about nineteen years old, which was three years ago. I was taken sick with jaundice, and thought my time had come to die. There was a heavy burden upon my mind, which I thought would soon crush me to the earth. The Free Methodist people were holding protracted meetings about three miles from our place, and my sister was converted at their meetings. Then it seemed as if I were alone in my wicked state. O how good she looked to me! I could see that God had wrought a change in her. I thought she was always better than myself, and that there was no hope for poor, sinful me. I remember that one Saturday night I looked out at the window and saw a cloud in the west, and it seemed full of the wrath of a just God, which I thought would all fall upon me. I remember standing there and shedding tears that I could keep back no longer. I felt afraid the family would notice me, so I tried to put the thought from me. That night a few people stopped at our house and held prayer meeting. They prayed about the last days, and for those who were unprepared for those days, which touched my soul. I knew I was unprepared to meet the just God, and felt that I could stand it no longer. Before I knew it I was down upon my knees. I tried to pray, but my tongue cleaved to the roof of my mouth. The only prayer I could think of was, "God, be merciful to me, a sinner." I heard these words spoken, as if some one in the house had spoken them, "Peace, be still;" and there was peace in my soul. The burden was all gone, and I rejoiced in the forgiveness of sins. I forgot that my body was afflicted, so happy was I. The Physician of my soul had come. He had spoken the word, and I was healed. I then thought that my sorrow was at an end, and the rest of my days would be joy and peace. Little did I know of the tempter's power. I went on in this happy state for many months. I heard no preaching except the Methodists, and was perfectly satisfied with it, and so I joined their church. But soon I was in trouble again. I found I had a law in my members, warring against the law of my mind, and bringing me into captivity to the law of sin which was in my members. Prayer, which I once counted a privilege, became a task. The Bible had been my constant study, but now it was to me a sealed book. I could find no comfort there. I had loved to go to the place of worship, but now I could find no comfort there. I thought I had deceived myself, and worse than all, had deceived the people. One day my father went away, and as I thought I was left alone, I took the Bible to see if I could find something that would relieve my mind. I opened to the place where it spoke of being justified by faith, and the Lord opened the Scriptures to me. I found out what was the trouble with me; that I was trying to be justified by the law, or, in other words, by my good works, which never could justify me. "Who hath saved us, and called us with a holy calling; not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began." O how my hope began to revive, after I had lost all confidence in my works. I was made to trust in my blessed Redeemer, in what he had done for me. I could not be satisfied any longer with the preaching I had heard. The SIGNS OF THE TIMES was sent to me by a friend that year. At first I only read the experiences of the children of God; but now I began reading the sermons, and there I read the same doctrine that had been revealed to me. O how my heart went out to them in love, and how I did long to be in their company. I knew where one Elder lived, so I wrote the state of my mind to him. But storms and sickness prevented his coming to me until the ninth day of March. That was the first gospel sermon I had ever heard. I do not think I will forget it as long as my memory lasts. It was like bread in the wilderness and water in a dry land. My heart was drawn with such cords of love, unworthy as I felt, I thought I could not be satisfied until I had joined the church that looked so good and pure in my eyes. How glad I was when he asked me if I wanted to go with them. I could hardly wait the appointed time, which was the first of June. On Saturday I told a part of what I have written, and on Sunday was baptized by Elder Smith Ketcham. It was a day of peace and joy to my soul. I felt the answer of a good conscience toward God. Since then I have had many precious seasons, and again have been away down in the valley of doubts and fears; but the God that, as I trust, has called me, will deliver my soul from death.

Dear kindred in Christ, my mind is relieved; and if this ever comforts any of God's little flock, to God be all the praise.

I remain your unworthy sister,
ANNA MARKLE.

CAMP HILL, Ala., Dec. 17, 1890.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—As I have not written anything for the SIGNS since I came to this place, and having a few leisure moments I will write a few lines to let my brethren know how I am getting along, and tell them what little I know in regard to the cause of Christ in this part of the world. I have been very busy ever since I arrived here, about the first of September, and have written but few letters. I am trying in much weakness to serve three churches, and also to preach at a school-house one Saturday and Sunday in each month, so that my time is all filled up every Saturday and Sunday.

The church at Camp Hill is a newly constituted church, a little over one year old. There have been three additions by letter since I came here. We have very good congregations, and an increasing interest in the services, and all in perfect peace. We have good kind neighbors and friends, and the brethren are watchful to look after our temporal necessities. When not engaged in preaching, I work at the carpenter's trade, and so far have found plenty to do.

Concord Church, near Dadeville, Alabama, is an old church; and while in peace, it seems to be rather on the decline. But great interest is manifested at the Lester School-House some six miles from Concord, where I preach once a month. The Concord Church has extended an "arm" to this place for the benefit of the Lord's humble poor, and on the fifth Sunday in November and Saturday before Elders W. Lively, John Nix and P. J. Powell were with me at Lester, when and where we had a feast of fat things, and wine on the lees, well refined. At this meeting the house was too small for the audience, and a great many were compelled to stand during the services. Two dear sisters were received by experience, one of them sixty-eight years old, who dated her hope back twenty years. The ordinance of baptism was administered by the writer last Saturday evening, in the presence of about one hundred people. Sunday last we had an experience meeting at Concord, though there were but few present. It was a time of "refreshing from the presence of the Lord." Canaan Church, near Waverly, Alabama, is an old church, and has seen good days in the years that are gone; but now she seems to be on the decline, mostly owing to the fact that most of the white people have moved out of the neighborhood, and the settlement is almost entirely given up to the colored population. The colored people have a church of the Primitive Baptist faith about two miles from Camp Hill. I had an idle Sunday recently, and in company with brother Newel paid them a visit and preached for them. I do not think I ever had a more appreciative audience in my life. They behaved well, heartily indorsed my preaching, and the Lord favored me with liberty. I felt that I had no pride nor ambition to gratify, but simply to preach the "gospel of the grace of God." This was the first time that I ever preached to a colored congregation. I believe these colored brethren are sound in the faith, and that they believe and know the truth, and that they ought to be encouraged in the way of righteousness. I think some of them are patrons of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

I have attended three associations since I came to Camp Hill, viz, the Beulah, Conecuh River and the Olive. These associations were all well attended. The preaching was harmonious, the saints were comforted, and the name of our Lord Jesus Christ glorified. The churches, so far as I know in this country, are in peace. There is no disturbance about predestination that I know of, nor upon any other doctrinal point. The most unfavorable sign I discover in this part of the country is worldly mindedness, and a lack of interest in spiritual things. Iniquity abounds, and the love of many seems to have waxed cold. Still the Lord has a few hidden ones here and there that are being called out from the world by the great trumpet that shall be blown, and are worshiping the Lord in the holy mount of Jerusalem.

The foregoing, brethren Beebe, is submitted for publication in the SIGNS, if you think it will be of any interest to the household of faith. Wishing a Happy New Year to all the readers of the SIGNS, I close.

Yours in gospel bonds,
H. J. REDD.

LANCASTER, Ohio, July 6, 1890.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR EDITORS:—Find inclosed two dollars for the continuation of your paper. It has been due for some time, but there has been considerable sickness and death in my family, and my mind has been considerably occupied. I thought I was going to get another subscriber, but I failed.

Some of the people of God have asked me to write again. If I knew I could write to edify one of his little ones I would gladly do so; but all I could tell them is that I am a poor, helpless sinner, not worthy of calling one of them brother or sister. They can say, "Dear Lord" and "Dear Savior;" but I feel very fearful that I do not know anything about that love. I have thought I did, but O! I feel so cold and destitute that I cannot grasp one sweet promise.

"My harp on the willow
Now seems to be hung;
I cannot in Zion
Raise a sweet song."

When I read the letters of that dear, afflicted sister, Mary Parker, I feel that I do not know anything. I cry, "Lord, afflict me; do anything with me, to draw in the wandering of my mind, and set it on things above." I have learned by sad experience that worldly sorrow worketh death; but everything works together for good to them that love the Lord; but I am very fearful that I do not love the Lord. Why do not I leave all things to him, and give up worldly cares, well knowing they are all vanity and vexation of the spirit? I wonder if I have ever been taught of the Lord? Have I been regenerated and born of the Spirit? All I can say is, there was a great revelation that I did not receive of man, nor by my good works. I was made to feel that Jehovah reigned, and was made to stand still and see the salvation of the Lord. Jesus was revealed to me, the chiefest among ten thousand, and the one altogether lovely. When I felt that I was in his banqueting house, and his banner over me was love, his people were made dear and lovely to me. O the love that was then shed abroad in my heart! I felt I could give up all for Jesus' sake. O what joy I then felt! I felt I knew then that Jesus was my Savior; but now how fearful I am. I feel I cannot call him mine, nor call his people brethren and sisters. It makes me feel I am only a hypocrite. If I never would go to the communion table until I would feel I was fit, I would never go. I am made to wonder if I discern the body of the Lord. I know I am little, and less than the least; but to know that I am one of God's little ones is my greatest anxiety; and my prayer is that the church of God may walk in unity, and not strive about words to no profit, but preach Christ as the way, the truth and the life.

This letter looks as little and miserable as I feel myself to be. It is not worth putting in print, but you can do just as you please with it. Unworthily yours to serve,
SARAH B. PEARCE.

G BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR EDITORS:—It is now time for me to renew my subscription to our dear paper, the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, and I cannot let the opportunity pass by this time to tell you how very much I prize it. I sometimes think that if people would take it for a little while they would never do without it again. Some of the articles alone are worth the price of the whole paper. I look for its arrival week after week with eagerness, and never have I been disappointed in receiving a rich feast for my poor sin-sick soul. My heart goes out in much love and sympathy to such dear ones as Mary Parker, and I do pray that she may be sustained in her very heavy affliction. Again, Elder Lively helps me so much by his firm, unwavering adherence to the truth, as also dear Elder Durand; and your own editorials, too, standing up as they do for the faith once delivered to the saints; but really, when all are so good it is hard to discriminate between them; but I must also say that I was greatly taken up with Elder Lee Hancks' unswerving testimony to the truth, giving God all the glory, and not man, as some in my neighborhood would have it. I have procured one more subscriber, and am sorry it is not one hundred; but perhaps I may be able to procure more in the future. Trusting that you, dear brethren Beebe, will long be spared to publish this paper as it is now published, I am, I hope, your brother in Christ,
A. J. BLACK.

PACIFIC CITY, Iowa, Oct 26, 1890.

GILBERT BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR SIRS:—I would like to see Elder Hardy's views in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES on Rev. xx. 4, "And I saw thrones, and they sat upon them," &c. I am not a church member, but I love the truth, although I was not brought up to believe it. It is the Spirit of God that draws men to God, and not God to men, as the world has it. I believed that man was a free agent until I was about thirty-eight years old, and now I am close to fifty-four. When they had their mourners' bench, and would call on sinners to come and get religion, I never could go forward, and yet I believed in it. I will add a few words and then stop.

Do not be ashamed of the gospel of God. "As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up." He is the God of power, who has created all things after the counsel of his own will.

"AND it shall come to pass in that day, that I will call my servant Eliakim the son of Hilkiah; and I will clothe him with thy robe, and strengthen him with thy girdle, and I will commit thy government into his hand; and he shall be a father to the inhabitants of Jerusalem, and to the house of Judah. And the key of the house of David will I lay upon his shoulder; so he shall open, and none shall shut; and he shall shut, and none shall open. And I will fasten him as a nail in a sure place; and he shall be for a glorious throne to his father's house. And they shall hang upon him all the glory of his father's house, the offspring and the issue, all vessels of small quantity, from the vessel of cups, even to all the vessels of flacons. In that day, saith the Lord of hosts, shall the nail that is fastened in the sure place be removed, and be cut down, and fall; and the burden that was upon it shall be cut off; for the Lord hath spoken it."—Isa. xxii. 20-25.

It is not with any expectation of being able to present such views as shall be new to our esteemed brother, Elder Bundy, that we endeavor to comply with his request; for it is very probable that he has been experimentally shown more of the glorious testimony of Jesus in the text than what has been revealed to us; but as he asks only our views of the subject, they are submitted to him and all our readers, with no claim to the expression of all that might profitably be written concerning the wonderful declaration of prophecy. Hoping that in the brief remarks here written nothing will be found inconsistent with the doctrine of God our Savior, it will afford us great satisfaction to receive additional light either from our inquiring brother, or from any of the saints.

In the literal application of this prophecy, it should be observed that it was sent to the nation of the Jews, when for their departure from the law which God had given them they were threatened by the Assyrian army under Sennacherib. The Lord delivered them from that invasion, in answer to the prayer of Hezekiah, as recorded 2 Kings xix. 35-37. It will be observed that in their deliverance there was no room for the people of Jerusalem to claim any glory to themselves, since the destruction of the Assyrian army was accomplished by the angel of the Lord, and their king was slain by his own sons, as the Lord had decreed. But the important antitypical significance of this prophecy is seen in the deliverance of his elect people from the condemnation of the law of God, from which they were utterly powerless to deliver themselves. All the glory of this salvation must be ascribed to the rightful Servant of the Lord, whom the omnipotence of Jehovah upholds, and who is the Rock of refuge in whom alone it pleased the Lord that salvation should be found, and that in him all fullness should dwell.

"And it shall come to pass in that day." It is not stated as merely a possibility that this prophecy may be fulfilled. The same Lord who declared the certainty of the captivity and death of this treasurer, Shebna, and that the chariots of his glory should be the shame of his lord's house, as stated in the preceding context, decrees that the promise in our text shall come to pass. Nothing which may be done by the enemies of Judah shall prevent this wonderful event; nor is it contingent upon anything which is to be performed by the favored people for whose benefit this word is spoken. The Lord does not suspend the consolation of his people upon merely "permissive decrees," if there can be any such contradictory expression used. "For all the promises of God in him [Jesus Christ] are yea, and in him Amen, unto the glory of God by us."—2 Cor. i. 20. In vain may the Scriptures of truth be searched for a single uncertainty in regard to anything which God declares shall come to pass. Whether blind reason can understand it or not, the eternal purpose of God in Christ Jesus is definite and sure, being established in the immutability of the counsel, and confirmed by the oath of God, "That by two immutable things, in which it was impossible for God to lie, we might have a strong consolation, who have fled for refuge to lay hold upon the hope set before us."—Heb. vi. 18.

The day specified for the accomplishment of this decree of our God is undoubtedly the same great day of the Lord, whose coming is the sum and substance of every type and prophecy which was given under the patriarchal and prophetic dispensations, from Adam to Moses, and from the calling of Israel out of Egypt to the coming of John in the wilderness of Judea. Contrasted with the light of the revealed Sun of Righteousness, all former times are but one continuous night. The voice of God alone could command the light to shine out of that darkness, and at his word this glorious day was ushered in. The ministry of John was its dawn of promise, and the resurrection of Jesus Christ in triumph over death proclaims the brightness of this eternal day. The types and shadows of the night are swallowed up in the fullness of the direct rays of this Sun, in whose wings is the only healing of the nations for whom he came under the curse of divine justice. For the comfort of all that mourn, it is declared that this day of vengeance of our God is also the acceptable year of the Lord.—Isa. lxi. 2. In no other day could this decree of the Lord God of hosts be fulfilled, nor could it fail to come to pass in that appointed day. This positive determination is what is meant by the words "absolute predestination."

"That I will call my servant Eliakim the son of Hilkiyah." It will not be claimed by any believer in the truth of inspiration that this is an indefinite declaration. The call is not addressed to everybody, in hope that some one will be kind enough to heed it. Neither is it an invitation to the character who is called. The Lord God calls his servant, and that relationship implies the obligation to obey the call of his Master. As the righteous Servant of God his ear is opened to hear, and he willingly responds to the call. "Wherefore when he cometh into the world, he saith, Sacrifice and offering thou wouldest now, but a body hast thou prepared me. In burnt offerings and sacrifices for sin thou hast had no pleasure. Then said I, Lo, I come (in the volume of the book it is written of me), to do thy will, O God."—Heb. x. 5-7; Psa. xl. 6. The call is not contrary to the inclination of this Servant. He cheerfully responds, "I delight to do thy will, O my God; yea, thy law is within my heart."

There is appropriate significance in the name by which this Servant of the Lord is designated in our text. He is called Eliakim, which is translated into our language, Whom God has set. This agrees with the inspired song of David, "Then shall he speak unto them in his wrath, and vex them in his sore displeasure. Yet have I set my king upon my holy hill of Zion. I will declare the decree; the Lord hath said unto me, Thou art my Son; this day have I begotten thee."—Psa. ii. 5-7. This language is by the Holy Ghost applied to our Lord Jesus, and settles the fact beyond cavil that he is the servant Eliakim. He is said to be the son of Hilkiyah, that is, in English, God is my portion, or, Portion of Jehovah. Taken in connection with the fact that under the social organization of the Jews every man's eminence was inherited from his ancestry, it will appear clearly that no higher parentage could be claimed than this name signifies. In its typical import is testified the same truth as recorded by John, and which Jesus declared of himself. "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. The same was in the beginning with God." "And the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us (and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father), full of grace and truth." "For I proceeded forth and came from God; neither came I of myself, but he sent me."—John i. 1, 2, 14; viii. 42. The divine testimony concerning this Eliakim can be true of none but our mighty Redeemer. God has set or established him; and he is his chosen portion as an inheritance, and peculiar treasure of Jehovah, his Servant whom he upholds, and his beloved Son in whom he is well pleased. Infinite intelligence and immortal powers alone could know and describe his glorious perfection. Created minds can never grasp the fullness of that mystery which Paul has stated concerning him. "God was manifest in the flesh, justified in the Spirit, seen of angels, preached unto the Gentiles, believed on in the world, received up into glory."—1 Tim. iii. 16. In the character of Eliakim the son of Hilkiyah, only one of the peculiar excellencies of this inconceivable Servant can be presented. The whole volume of the inspired Scriptures is the one testimony of Jesus; but that testimony can be received only in part, as it is taken by the Spirit of truth and shown unto his saints. In our text he is shown to be established in his place by the will and power of the Lord God. As his Elect Servant he is sustained by the Spirit of the Lord God, which is upon him as the holy oil of his anointing, by which he is the Christ, that is, the Anointed of God. All the omnipotence of Jehovah is his qualification for the work which is required of him in the service which he must render. Is not this power equal to the accomplishment of the work which his Father gave him to do? He declared that work finished before he left this mortal state. On the cross of Calvary, and with his latest breath "He said, It is finished; and he bowed his head, and gave up the ghost."—John xix. 30. Thus did he attest his right to the name, "Whom God has set," and show himself the son of that choice of God which is indeed the Portion of Jehovah, the Life of the election of grace, and Head over all to his church, which is his body, the fullness of him that filleth all in all. In this character he is manifested as the Lord's Servant Eliakim the son of Hilkiyah.

"And I will clothe him with thy robe, and strengthen him with thy girdle, and I will commit thy government into his hand; and he shall be a father to the inhabitants of Jerusalem, and to the house of Judah." It should be observed that this message was from the Lord God of hosts, and sent to the treasurer of Judah, who was over the house as a ruler. We have no clear understanding of the significance of the name Shebna, as it is given differently in different lists; but his official position is so emphatically specified in the context that it seems plain that the typical reference is to that official character. The robe and girdle of Shebna represent his dignity and authority. These were taken from him in the literal fulfillment of the word of the Lord in the captivity of the Jews in Babylon. But the antitype of this is seen in the total overthrow of that legal dispensation by the coming of Christ to establish his gospel kingdom. In this fulfillment Shebna represents the whole Mosaic system, which was indeed established by divine authority, and which was honored by Jesus himself until he had taken it out of the way, in preparing a place for his disciples in the new heaven and new earth of his gospel kingdom. Then the Lord God did indeed take the power and the glory from that legal dispensation, and our Lord is now clothed with all the honor and power which had been vested in the law and ordinances of Judaism. It was not until after he had nailed the handwriting of ordinances to the cross that he said, "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth," and by virtue of that power he sent his apostles into all the world to teach and baptize by his authority. The robe and girdle of Shebna no longer demanded the reverence and obedience of his disciples. All that was prefigured by those emblems is now concentrated in our victorious Eliakim. He is that Prophet of whom Moses spoke, whom the Lord should raise up, and whom the people of God should hear in all things.—Deut. xviii. 15-19. The Lord Jesus Christ is now clothed with the robe of authority, and girdle of power, which under the typical dispensation were vested in the divinely authorized law of Moses, in which consisted the excellency, or treasure, of that favored nation. No created being had the right to take away the government which God had ordained in that legal covenant which he gave to Israel. Our Lord himself declared that "Till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled."—Matt. v. 18. In his perfect obedience to every demand of the law our Redeemer satisfied its utmost requirement, thus "Blotting out the handwriting of ordinances that was against us, which was contrary to us, and took it out of the way, nailing it to his cross; and having spoiled principalities and powers, he made a show of them openly, triumphing over them in it."—Col. ii. 14, 15. Thus the omnipotence of Jehovah performed that which is promised, not by revoking the law which he had given by Moses, but through the fulfillment of that law. In bringing this to pass the infinite sovereignty of God is revealed.

In the performance of this wonderful work, for which neither patriarchs nor prophets were ever qualified, Jesus is exalted above every name that is named, and is indeed a father to the spiritual inhabitants of Jerusalem, and to the house of Judah. But in the revelation of this grace "He is not a Jew which is one outwardly; neither is that circumcision which is outward in the flesh; but he is a Jew, which is one inwardly; and circumcision is that of the heart, in the spirit, and not in the letter; whose praise is not of men, but of God." "And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise."—Rom. ii. 28, 29; Gal. iii. 29.

NOT SO ENCOURAGING.

DOUBTLESSLY many of our brethren and friends who have so earnestly labored to increase the circulation of the SIGNS are anxious to see some announcement as to the result of their united efforts. We have from time to time published statements of the steady increase in our subscription list, and last volume closed with nearly two thousand more names than when we started the weekly; yet hundreds of these had been received at one dollar, whose time expired with the volume. Of these less than one hundred have renewed for this volume. We shall continue these names through the month of January; but all from whom we have not heard by the end of the month we shall discontinue. We cannot afford to carry them any longer on an uncertainty. We have supplied the paper at half-rate, with the hope that they would become sufficiently interested to renew at the regular price. Of course we do not consider that they are under any obligation to renew for this year if they do not wish to do so; but the disappointment is none the less to us. Nearly all who have ordered their paper stopped have informed us that it was not on account of any fault they found with the paper, but they did not feel able financially to continue it. To such we will say, How much better off do you expect you will be at the end of the year for having stopped your paper? You have economized about half a cent a day. But we do not wish to argue the financial consideration of the question. If the paper is not supported as a weekly it will be good evidence that it is not approved of the Lord. Whether the increase in the circulation of the paper under the "Extraordinary Offer" shall prove permanent or not, we shall ever hold in grateful remembrance the kind and efficient efforts of the brethren and friends in behalf of the cause. Again, brethren, we thank you.

TO OUR DELINQUENTS.

WE have several hundred on our list whose subscriptions are a year or more in arrears, and most of these we have notified before, but heard nothing from them. The expense of our publication as a weekly is so near the receipts for the same that we must insist on subscriptions being paid as promptly as possible. We do not refer in this article to those who are only a few months in arrears. Brethren, please do not forget us.

INDIGENT SUBSCRIBERS.

IN No. 46, Vol. lvii., we published a proposition to our readers to place indigent subscribers on our list at half-rates if our brethren would assist us in bearing the expense; and so liberal was the response that a fund was created which is not yet exhausted. We have entered on our list the names of all such applicants as we thought should have the paper free, but still have a small balance; and as contributions are applied we forward a notice to the contributor, informing him to whose subscription his remittance has been applied, and also the recipient of the paper to whom he is indebted for the payment of his subscription.

We have received several remittances of late for this fund; and as we apply them in the order received, it may be some time before these are reached.

W. R. WELBORN'S BOOK.

WE are in receipt of a copy of Elder W. R. Welborn's book, which is just out. We have not had time to examine the book throughout, but the author and his writings are too familiar to most of our readers to need any introduction from us. The book is in good plain-faced type, and contains 340 pages, together with a vignette of the author as a frontispiece. The price, bound in cloth, is $1.25 per copy, or $5.00 for five copies.

Brother Welborn writes that he is badly in debt on the book; and any of the brethren who would like to obtain a copy would do him a great favor by ordering as early as they conveniently can. Address, Wm. R. Welborn, State Road, Surry Co., N. C.

BACK NUMBERS.

WE have printed quite a large number of extra copies of No. 1 of the present volume, and intend to run extra copies of each number for January, so that new subscribers during this month can be supplied with back numbers to the commencement of the volume until the supply is exhausted.

LARGE HYMN BOOK FOR A DOLLAR SIX FOR FOUR DOLLARS AND A HALF.

We have had bound in cloth, the same style as the "Editorials" or "Church History," a few hundred of our large type Hymn Books, which we will send post paid at the above prices. These books are especially adapted for aged people, or for pew racks, to be used in churches.

A SMALL ONE FOR SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS, OR SIX FOR THREE DOLLARS.

We also have the small type book bound in cloth, which we will send post paid at prices stated above. Cash must always accompany the orders. Address,

G. BEEBE'S SONS,
Middletown, Orange Co., N. Y.

EXTRAORDINARY OFFER!

FROM now until further notice is given any one who is now a subscriber, and whose subscription is paid up, may send us new subscribers at one dollar a year; but no one, either new or old subscriber, can get the paper from this office for themselves at less than the regular rates. Any one who is not now a subscriber can have the benefit of the above terms by sending two dollars for their own subscription, and one dollar each for additional new subscribers.

Please make no mistake about the above terms. No one, either new or old subscriber, can send to this office and get the paper for themselves for less than the regular rates; but if any of our paid-up subscribers choose to sacrifice their commission and take the new subscriber for one dollar, that is their matter.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

DIED—At his home near Kerens, W. Va., Jan. 1st, 1891, Hickman Chenoweth, in his 74th year.

His disease was breast complaint, from which his sufferings were great, but he bore them all with cheerfulness. Often he would say during his sickness that he was anxious to be gone. By his death we have lost a good citizen and neighbor. He was a kind father and a good husband. He was greatly blessed in having kind, devoted children to minister to his comfort in his declining days. May the Lord assure them of the blessings promised to those who honor their father and their mother; and his aged widow, as she has ever been faithful and kind, may the Lord cause her to say, with the prophet, "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord."

Brother Chenoweth was a great lover of the doctrine of grace, and his house was always open to brethren of the Primitive faith and order. He was a consistent member of the Leading Creek Church for a long time, and was Deacon and Clerk of the same. He attended the meetings as long as his health would permit him to do so. He was conscious to the last, and expressed a desire to depart and be with Christ, which is far better. I know it is hard to give up our friends, but we have a great consolation: "They which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." Then we who are alive and remain shall be caught up together in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air.

"This glorious hope revives
Our courage by the way,
While each in expectation waits,
And longs to see the day."

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date, this date denotes the time at which your subscription expires, and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

THE EVERLASTING TASK FOR ARMINIANS.

By Elder William Gadsby, late of Manchester, England. We have republished a large edition of the above named very interesting and instructing pamphlet. Many thousands of copies have been scattered through England and America, and read with intense interest by the lovers of the truth, and still the demand has increased to such a degree as to induce us to present to the public this edition which we will send (postage paid by us) to any post-office address in the United States or Canada, at the following rates, viz: a single copy for 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00; 25 copies for $2.00; 50 copies for $3.00; 100 copies for $5.00.

At these low terms the cash must in all cases accompany the orders. Address,

CORRESPONDENCE.

"AND we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose."—Romans viii. 28.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—The above words are very familiar and very precious to all who love God. They have been upon my mind during most of this week, and they have been especially full of goodness to me. I have received two letters this week from two dear sisters, who for years have been greatly afflicted. I have visited one who for a year past has suffered much; and last Tuesday it was my sad duty to assist in the funeral service of a young girl very dear to many. These circumstances called up a feeling of pity and sadness that so much of sorrow should beset the feet of so many dear children of God, and I began to almost murmur that our God should appoint such things for his people; and the old questions, "Why must it be?" "Doth God know?" "Is there knowledge with the Most High?" came up in my mind. But then these words, so long familiar to me, came up again, and I was silenced from my murmuring; and more than this, I rejoiced in the assurance that the things which seemed so hard to me were among God's best blessings, bestowed freely and lovingly upon those who love God, and whom he has called according to his purpose. In the comfort of the text named above, and in the patience which the words give when applied by the Spirit, I find myself in fellowship with many saints in past ages, who in manifold trials have found their rest and peace in the assurance contained in these words, that no circumstance of trial and affliction can be to the harm of those who love God; and if not to their harm, then most surely to their good.

Paul has also stated the same thing in other words, as being to him a source of actual joy in his infirmities, when he said, "Most gladly therefore will I rather glory in my infirmities, that the power of Christ might rest upon me." Joseph declared his faith in this truth, that all things work together for good to them who love God, when he said, "Ye indeed meant it for evil, but God meant it for good." Joseph was blind as to how all his sore trials were to work out good to him and to his erring brethren; but "he waited for the vision, and it did not tarry; and at the end it spoke, and did not lie."

Then catching a glimpse of God's perfect purpose, he could say, "God meant it for good." David also, seeing by faith this same great truth, said, "Before I was afflicted I went astray; but now have I kept thy word." Again, "All the paths of the Lord are mercy and truth unto such as keep his covenant and his testimonies." Jeremiah said, "It is good for a man that he bear the yoke in his youth." If we wish to know what the yoke is, we have only to read the third chapter of Lamentations, where these words occur, to be told that affliction and sorrow are meant; and Jeremiah said that all these afflictions the Lord had done. Jesus taught the same sublime mystery when he said of the sparrows that not one of them could fall to the ground without God. He meant to teach us that God was in the most trivial event of our lives as disciples and believers; for said he, in the same connection, "Even the hairs of your head are all numbered." God then so loves his children and provides for them that he will not overlook the least thing that in any way concerns them. With ever-present watchfulness does he keep his Israel, and sees to it that no harm shall come nigh their dwelling.

It has not seemed to me this week as though it matters at all to me, or that it need matter to any of us, whether we can see through all this or not. It is not needful that I should understand the working of wheels and springs in my watch in order to derive the full benefit which I do derive from it. It is my servant, and works for my good, and I know that every wheel and cog and spring is working together for the appointed end, because the end is always worked out invariably; and yet I could not, if asked, tell what is the use of this or that piece of the mechanism in it. It is not needful for me to know, for I am not its maker; I am only its beneficiary. But I am sure that somebody planned and adjusted it all, and I wonder at the wisdom and skill of the maker. A little child reaps the benefit of the watch, but knows nothing of its make, and cannot know. So I feel content to reap the benefit of the vast machinery of providence which God moves on, causing all to work together for the good of his chosen; and I am not greatly anxious to trace it all out. Some little glimpses of his secret working now and then he unveils, but not much; and I feel content to believe that he is in all, though I have seen him but in little. It seems to-day as I write a poor thing to seek to trace out God, but it is rich in blessing to trust him; and I feel restful as I write in fully believing that there is nothing in all my past life, nothing in my present, and nothing in all the future, but is working together for good to me, if indeed I love him and he has called me.

But now leaving these general remarks, and turning to the text quoted, the first words that strike our attention are these, "And we know." There are some things that the people of God know. There are some things which they hope for, some things which they may be doubtful of, and some things concerning which they are entirely ignorant; but some things they know. Get the concordance and look up all texts under the head of "know," and perhaps, brethren, you may be surprised, as I have been, at the multitude of things which the people of God know. They know in whom they have believed. They know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ. They know that they have passed from death unto life, because they love the brethren. They know that the Son of God has come. They know all things. They know the Holy Spirit. Many other things they know which pertain to God and godliness which I cannot quote here; and this means a positive knowledge. It means more than when we say about anything, "I am sure it is so and so." Such a certainty as this we may arrive at by reasoning; but when I put my hand into the fire I know it burns. I know it because I have felt it. That knowledge is burned in on my consciousness; and that consciousness is henceforth a part of myself. This is the way we know things spiritually. It is oida, to see a thing as a witness. When this word is associated with Deity in the New Testament it means to know him by communion with him. Now the Holy Ghost has in the text chosen this word to express our knowledge of the truth that follows. It is as a witness that we know this. One might say, "I have not experienced all things, and therefore how can I know this?" Or another might say, "I know this is true for myself, but how can I affirm it with regard to the experience of others?" We may answer that such knowledge is not gained by observation, or even by a detailed experience of it all, but by revelation. It is just as when Isaiah saw the Lord, and heard the cry of "holy;" he not only said, "I am a man of unclean lips," but, "I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips." The revelation that convinced him of his own sin, also convinced him of the sin of others. I am convinced by the teaching of the Holy Spirit that I am by nature totally depraved; and by the same teaching I know that this is equally true of all others. I have been, I trust, saved by grace; and so I know that no one is saved in any other way. I know that all is working for good to me if I love God; and so I know it is equally true of all who love him. By the same revelation the truth is engraven upon my heart that not only the things I can see, but the things I cannot see, are working together for my good; and the sum of it all is, "We know."

"All things." I know not by what authority these words are sought to be limited to all spiritual things, as is sometimes done. There is no need of saying that all spiritual things work together for good to lovers of God. No one would ever question it or deny it. It is true that the apostle has been speaking of spiritual things, only alluding to temporal trials two or three times in the former part of the chapter, in verses 17, 23 and 26; but it is equally true that he goes right on to speak of trials, such as tribulation, persecution, famine, the sword, &c., which surely are not spiritual, but temporal.

Again, I know not by what authority the phrase "all things" is sought by some to be limited to all good things or righteous things; for surely the sword and persecution and all those things named in verses 38 and 39 as our foes, are not good or holy things. It is evident to my mind that the things named in the succeeding part of the chapter are the "all things" of the text.

It is further plain that the things named in the two verses following the text are not what the apostle had especially in mind by the phrase "all things," for these two verses are given as the reason for the assertion in the text. To make the matter plain I will state it in this way. I assert that all things are working together for the good of some one who loves God. Some listener questions, and asks how I know this. I reply that God has foreknown him and predestinated him to be conformed to the image of Christ, called him, justified him and glorified him;

therefore I know that no harm can approach him, and nothing shall fail to do him good. As the wrath of man shall praise God, so also shall it work for the good of those who love God. My argument in reply to such a question would be that as God therefore has done so much for that man, he will not withhold from him any good thing, nor suffer anything to approach him but what will be for good; and this I conceive to be the argument of the apostle here.

"Work together for good." The expression "work together" literally signifies "to co-operate, to assist each other," as one part of a building stays up and supports every other, and is itself supported and helped by all the others. This sentence shows that it is not by events disjointed and standing apart and isolated from each other, but by events all held together by joints and bands, as our bodies are, that this is brought to pass. They work together in mutual interdependence; and the divine rule and sovereignty is the cause why this is always so. We can only enter into this as we grow in an understanding of the omnipresence of God, and what it means. It would be good and profitable exercise for us all if we could be led to meditate more and more upon the omnipotence, omnipresence and omniscience of God in connection with his sovereignty. We should then see better why all things must work together for good to those who love him. We must ever reject whatever would tend to a denial of any of the attributes of Deity. Nothing can be hid from the heat of this, the great sun of the universe. Nothing is hid from its heat.

The truth taught in the phrase, "All things work together for good," is the same as that taught in verse 37. After mentioning, in verses 35 and 36, tribulation, distress, persecution, famine, nakedness, peril and sword, and saying that we are killed all the day long, and accounted as sheep for the slaughter, the apostle adds that so far shall we be from being separated from the love of God by them, they instead work out to our advantage. He says, "Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors through him that loved us." More than conquerors! How more than conquerors? To conquer a foe is to put him down and destroy him. I know of no way to be more than a conqueror except by turning our enemy into a friend, and so cause that he shall work for us instead of against us. This God does for us in the case of all these deadly foes; and so according to the text all things named in verses 35 and 36 work for our good. The great cause of all is that the love of God is ours in Christ Jesus our Lord, as is stated in the last verse of the chapter.

Let us not forget that "all things work together for good." What is good? It is not health, strength, friends, riches, wisdom, mental power, such as strong reason and vivid imagination. These things, good in their place, may become deadly foes. All things then are not tending to advance our worldly advantage. This is not the true good. What is good? Self-abhorrence, a knowledge of our weakness, to break down pride and vainglory, to trust in God and him only, to be meek and lowly, to see Jesus exalted, to help praise him alone, to grow out of self and into Christ; all this goes to make up that which is truly good. All things in the life of all who love God tend to this end. Even Peter's denial of his Lord was made to work to his conversion out of his own self-sufficiency and into Christ as all his strength and hope; and after he had thus by falling learned his weakness, he was thereby prepared to more abundantly strengthen his brethren. So all things work directly for good to the one concerned; and through that one they indirectly work for the good of others who also love God.

"To them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose." This describes the persons of whom this is blessedly true. I do not purpose dwelling at much length upon this. A dividing line is drawn all through the Scriptures. While it is true that all things work together for good to those who love God, it is equally true that nothing works for the good of the man where the love of God does not abide. As even the things counted evil must eventuate in good to the one, so on the other hand not even the things counted good bring any good to the man who is unregenerate. The negative is clearly implied by the affirmative. Of course the meaning of good must be remembered here.

As only those who love God have such a blessing pronounced upon them, so if we find that by trials or joys we are led to look more out of self to God, we may judge that the love of God dwells in us, and that God has chosen and called us. It has been the testimony of many to me, as we have conversed, that the trials and sorrows of their life have been the greatest blessings they have ever received. Surely they knew whereof they spoke; and in this testimony there is for them the assurance that they love God, and love him because he first loved them.

I remain your brother in hope,

REISTERSTOWN, Md., Jan. 17, 1891.

SOUTHAMPTON, Pa., Dec. 25, 1890.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—I receive many letters which I truly think would be of more interest and value to the brethren generally than anything I can write; but I do not feel warranted in asking for the publication of private letters, except where some peculiar circumstances of the writer, some special quality in his gift, or some particular, present importance in the subjects spoken of, impress me that it is my duty to do so. This has been my impression with regard to the following letter from brother Anderson ever since I received it, and I have at length obtained his consent to publish such portions as I think will be of interest to the cause of truth. I will also take the liberty to send you a letter of a later date, which you can also publish, though I did not mention it in my request to him. I feel sure that the very touching and interesting particulars concerning his personal circumstances, the relation of his exercises of mind, and the special interest of the subjects alluded to, with his manner of touching them, will cause these letters to be read with great interest, and with comfort and profit, by the dear friends, to whom his name has become pleasantly familiar in the SIGNS. The details concerning the late distressing illness of his dear wife, which are omitted in the published letter, are such as to awaken the deepest sympathy.

Your brother in the hope of the gospel,

SILAS H. DURAND.

DUTTON, Ark., Nov. 12, 1890.

ELDER SILAS H. DURAND—DEAR BROTHER:—Yours of November 3d came a few days ago. I do not remember ever having received a message of love and tender sympathy from the hands of a mortal that revived, strengthened and encouraged me like it.

As I have probably already written you, my wife has been greatly afflicted ever since a few months after we were married, in October, 1876. She has been a part of the time able to do her housework, but it was at the expense of a great deal of suffering. Sometimes for more than a year at one time she was not able to get out of the bed, while I had both the house and farmwork to do as best I could. * * * *

For the last two years I have not been blessed with the privilege of attending our association; and only two or three times have I been enabled to visit any church but the one where my membership is, and which I try to serve as pastor. In this I have had the most laborious and toilsome work, being nearly all the time in darkness that it seemed could almost be felt. My efforts to support my family and pay my debts, though greatly circumscribed by the illness of my wife, have nearly all seemed, as it were, to turn to ashes in my hands. I began to try to evaporate my summer fruit, setting up my evaporator in the yard, where I could attend to my wife and work some at intervals; but a severe wound with an axe in my left wrist disabled me for a long time, and most of my fruit rotted. I suffered beyond description from neuralgia, until I was nearly exhausted. I had a sorghum mill, which I employed hands to run, and they burst it. I rented my evaporator, which cost me more than eighty dollars, to some parties, and they turned it over and broke it up. The stock broke into and destroyed a portion of my crops; and many other things went to destruction before my eyes, while I seemed powerless to prevent it.

My articles in the SIGNS had brought letters of approbation from my brethren all over the country. Among them were letters from such brethren as Elders Chick, Rittenhouse, Lively, Redd, Taylor, and several others. I had thus acquired correspondence with most of them; but letters from all of them except Elder Lively ceased. I was shut up at home, and could not get out to meet with the brethren here. I was shut up in darkness, and the waves and billows seemed to go over me. The light of the Master's countenance was withheld, and an appalling sense of my exceeding sinfulness and unprofitableness and disobedience to my Master seemed to aid in overwhelming me. I went down into the depths. No words of mine are adequate to the task of describing my feelings. It was in this condition, and just at the time when my hopes of my wife's recovery seemed to be blasted for the third time, that your letter came. As I read it I wept like a child. Was there even one to show me kindness? Aye, even more. Please tell sister Bessie and your wife that their kind expressions of love and sympathy aided materially to lighten the burdens of one who seems to have been born for adversity. They are greatly appreciated. I felt to thank the Lord that he put it into your hearts to write. May the choicest blessings of God rest upon you and them.

You seem to think it "wonderful" that one who has such a gift as I have can feel so depressed and lonely, and especially as I expressed myself in regard to the correspondence between us. In reply to this I would say, in the first place, that I think you have greatly overestimated me in this particular; and secondly, if I possessed such a gift I might yet be nothing. I might possess all knowledge, so that I could understand all mysteries, and be able to expound them to the edification of the brethren, with the tongue of an angel, and yet be as sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal. A Saul or a Baalim, or even a dumb ass, may be made to speak great words of comfort to God's people, and to reprove error. Besides, if indeed the Master has bestowed upon me a talent, or even two talents, I feel as if I have been so wretchedly disobedient in exercising it as to be all the more humiliating. I often fear that, like the unprofitable servant, I have digged in the earth and hidden my Lord's money. When I was about to marry it was impressed on my mind that I should refrain, and devote myself to the work of the ministry; but as I could not see how that such a being as I could be called of God to preach the gospel, I tried to stay myself with the notion that my impressions were of the flesh, and so disregarded them. It was not until I had been twice liberated by the church, and, like Jonah, had gone down into the belly of hell, that I began to try to preach. I soon found myself ordained to the work by the church, notwithstanding my urgent request of the brethren to carefully and prayerfully consider the matter before acting. They answered me by promptly informing me that they had already done so; and I saw no way only to submit, as I had always felt that I could not set at defiance the judgment of the church, since I believed it empowered to judge angels. But here I found myself with an invalid wife and three little children (now four) dependent upon my labor for bread, and myself among brethren who had been taught to believe that it was a departure from the faith to contribute to the support of the ministry, and who would dis-fellowship a minister who presented to them what I believed was the plain teaching of the Scriptures upon the subject. I have never really desired that any should contribute to my support, for I had early in life taken special delight in being independent, and in providing for myself by my own exertions. When I began to work for myself my father offered to give me several things which he desired me to have; but I refused to accept them, preferring to earn for myself whatever I should possess. After I was ordained I set to work with the intention of soon gathering sufficient to enable my family to live without my labor, and then of devoting myself to the work. I thought when I had accomplished this to present to the brethren what I believed to be their duty and for their good, and being in circumstances that I did not need assistance myself, they could not attribute my views to self-interest; so that if they did not give heed they would not perhaps dis-fellowship me. But fourteen years of as hard labor and diligent efforts as any man is able to endure has brought me no nearer the accomplishment of my object. Some years ago I read the experience of some one in the SIGNS who for years strove to thus become able to support his family, and then devote himself wholly to the work; and how he became involved in debt, and finally penniless, and was forced, contrary to his independent spirit, to accept assistance from the brethren. But as I was differently situated, in that the brethren here had gone to extremes, as I believed, in their opposition to assisting their ministers in any way, I hoped that the Lord would bless me, and enable me to succeed; and so I was left to struggle on. A year or two ago the experience of the brother referred to came vividly to mind, and something seemed to warn me that if I persisted in my course I should suffer a like loss and be brought to want. During the last year my effects seem to be rapidly going in that direction, so much so that it has attracted the attention of church; but as yet I have said nothing to any one in regard to my impression. In addition to this it sensibly occurred to me at different times that I could have my choice, to lose my wife in this affliction, or devote myself wholly to the work of the ministry. This weighed upon me so heavily that many times ere I was aware what I was doing I was just in the act of vowing to the Lord that if he would restore her to health I would forsake all for the work; but I would shrink back, fearing that the needs of my wife and little ones would cause me, poor, frail, disobedient mortal that I am, to break my vow. This impression kept upon me, held back by my fears, until one day, as I was in deep trouble over the matter, a sudden assurance that the Lord would enable me sent such a thrill through every fibre of my being that suddenly, and seemingly involuntarily, I promised, at the same time mentally exclaiming in ecstasy, "Thou wilt enable me." When I returned to myself I trembled at the thought, and at times yet it seems to almost overpower me. May the great Preserver of men, who leads the blind in a way that they knew not, and works in the hearts of his people to will and to do of his own good pleasure, strengthen my feeble feet, and lead me and keep me in the path of duty; to whom be honor and glory forever and ever. Amen.

In thinking of devoting my whole time to the ministry the subject has always presented itself to me in the way of traveling and visiting associations and churches in different parts of the country, until recently it has occurred to me that it may be the will of God that I should remain at home and devote my time to reading and writing. There are several subjects that have been presented to me in such fullness that it appeared I might write volumes upon them without exhausting the glorious and soul-cheering thoughts that have occurred to my enraptured vision; but then again everything I write seems so poor that I am always ashamed to send it to the printer. I have two little boys, aged ten and eleven years, who in a few years, if the Lord be pleased to keep them in health, could probably keep the family from suffering want, by my being at home most of the time to direct for them, and to aid what I could as I needed recreation from reading and writing. Perhaps it is wrong for me to thus take thought as to how I shall get along; but although I know that the Lord will provide, it is hard for me to keep from it. I am, and have been for some time, in great trouble upon this subject. The only way I know to do under such circumstances, when I am at a loss to know which way to go, is to shut my eyes and venture, trusting in the Lord to guide me, and then do as occasion may serve. When I have been enabled to do thus I have never gone wrong. "In all thy ways acknowledge him, and he shall direct thy paths." While I do not wish to trust in man, not even in dear and highly esteemed brethren, if you can have any word of advice from the Lord for me, as a son with his father, I would be glad to hear you speak. But I cannot give you a correct idea of myself and my trials without writing a full sketch of my travels from the beginning, which I have sometimes thought of doing.

I have a nice young apple orchard just coming into bearing; and should the Little Rock branch of the Frisco Railroad be extended a few miles further, the timber on my homestead will be worth probably five hundred dollars. As this is one of the finest fruit-growing regions in the United States, that amount of money, with the fruit from my orchard, by the blessing of God, would enable my family to live until my boys would be able to make them a support. I have much desired that my expectations in this might be realized, so that, being freed from so much worldly care, I could devote my time to the word; but this year, when the time came to gather winter apples, I could not leave the house, nor could I hire hands until the larger part of the crop was ruined, so that I have realized only about ten dollars, with a few bushels yet unsold, from a crop worth fifty or seventy-five dollars had it been properly cared for. This, with many other things too numerous to mention that have turned out the same way, and even more disastrously, together with heavy expenses involved by sickness, have caused me to fear that the way I have purposed to serve my Master is not acceptable with him. I know that a servant bought with a price should be ready to go at his Master's bidding; but is it my duty to forsake a dependent family, when the word teaches us that "if any provide not for his own, and especially they of his own household, he is worse than an infidel?" When the priests and Levites forsook the service of the temple, and fled every man to his field, they were not reprov'd, but those only whose duty it was to bring in the offerings.—Neh. xiii. 10-14. There has been a time with me when to forsake my worldly business and family for the gospel would have been a great cross, even if I had possessed sufficient of this world's goods to keep them from want; but of late I have suffered so much over this matter that the treasures of this world have lost their charm, and I now feel as if I could freely forsake all, if assured of my duty, for I feel confident that if it is my duty the Lord will provide. I have learned by experience that no man can serve two masters. No man can be entangled in the affairs of this life, and yet serve as he should him who has called him to be a soldier. I have felt much of late that my sore afflictions are but chastisements upon me for my disobedience in this particular, and I have felt more keenly than ever that I was utterly unworthy the fellowship of any of the Lord's obedient children.

But I did not intend when I commenced to weary you with so long a letter. If you knew the circumstances under which I have written you would make much allowance for its imperfections. If you, so much my superior both in natural and spiritual abilities and in duty, should feel ashamed of your letters to me, how should I dare ever to write to any one? Love to you and yours.

Yours in tribulation,

C. W. ANDERSON.

P. S.—After reading over my letter, and finding that my thoughts had run in an entirely different channel from what I intended, and having expressed them in such a rambling and incoherent way, I decided not to send it, but wait an opportunity to write again; but upon reading the Circular Letter of the Salisbury Association, as I have not had opportunity to write anew for nearly a week, I have decided to send it, believing that you will throw the mantle of charity over its imperfections. Besides, I honestly believe that you have greatly overestimated me; and as I earnestly desire that brethren should not think of me above what I really am, perhaps it may serve my purpose in that way, and enable you to see more of my imperfections. The doctrine of that Circular Letter would not be accepted as orthodox by a majority of the Baptists here; but I sincerely believe that one reason why the cause of Zion languishes in this country is because the ministers of the spiritual temple have fled every man to his field. I may be wrong, but it is a conviction that has gained upon me from reading the Scriptures and from experience, in spite of my prejudice against it.

There are several things that I have desired to ask you, but which I have been reluctant to do. I have wanted to know your worldly occupation, if any, and if you receive any support from the churches, and how much, and if they pay your expenses on those long preaching tours. I have for a long time desired, but more so of late, if the Lord will, that some time I might meet with you, and talk without pen and ink. There are many things that I greatly desire to converse with you about.

I have seen some medical authority that recommends, as the most efficient remedy for hay fever, removing to a climate where the disease does not exist; and as it is unknown here, I would be glad, if the Lord will, that you would conclude to come west.

While I desired to pay you for the "Meditations," I accepted the return of the money as evidence of kindness upon your part, of which I feel to be utterly unworthy. I hope by the help of God never to become hurt at a brother for anything, when the intention is to do me a favor, even though it should result in loss or hurt to me.

C. W. A.

DUTTON, Ark., Nov. 30, 1890.

ELDER SILAS H. DURAND—VERY DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST:—Your letter reached me yesterday evening, much sooner than I expected. It contained much that I have long desired to know, and afforded me great relief in regard to my impressions to devote myself wholly to the ministry. My brother and wife, of Watalula, Arkansas, also visited me, and from him I learned of the proceedings of our association, which I was not permitted to attend. Although there was a division in one church, apparently from personal difference, but really over the question of predestination, yet the proceedings were in the main harmonious, and the preaching sound and able. I was also gratified to learn that the brethren, though generally poor, contributed according to their ability to pay the expenses of two visiting ministers. I know that the Lord is able to put it into the minds of brethren to do their duty in this respect, and to enable them to see that it is but fruit that shall abound to their account. The sentiment among the brethren that I referred to in my letter is to be attributed mostly to the ministers going to extremes in opposing the hireling system of the Missionaries. I have long since observed that brethren in opposing error often run to an opposite extreme. May the Lord turn us again to the way of truth in every respect.

As to my visiting the associations you named, I must say that I have long been much impressed to visit the brethren in the east; but I have desired to be able to go at my own expense, as I have never been able to see how the brethren there could feel themselves compensated by my visit for the amount that it would cost them to bear my expenses. If I have ever been enabled to minister to the brethren in spiritual things at all, I have made such wretchedly poor work that I could hardly see how they could be so patient as to bear with me in my imperfections, much less to bestow upon me their temporal things, as one that ministers to them in spiritual things. I feel that if I should go, and be shut up in darkness, all that the world contains could not compensate me for the mortification I should be to the brethren. However, I know that I would have to trust this matter to my Master, as he alone can enable any one, great or small, to preach his everlasting gospel. He can put his praise into the mouths of babes and sucklings, and even cause the inanimate stones in the streets of the city to cry out, while he securely hides these things from the wise and prudent of this world.

While you have expressed my feelings in regard to preaching, both in your letters to me and in your book, in a much better manner than I can, I conclude that among the brethren there I would have an additional burden which perhaps never harasses you. I was born and reared in poverty and obscurity, with but very little education, never having attended school more than seven months. Being greatly afflicted in youth, I had to remain at home, and was in society but very little. I thus grew up to manhood the most timid mortal that I have ever become acquainted with. I never owned but one pair of boots in my life, and that was a very coarse pair. I have been raised among a poor backwoods people, whose manners would probably appear inexcusably awkward to the brethren there, as that is a much older settled country than this. Yet I know that Primitive Baptists are generally plain people; and if I can feel at home anywhere under heaven it is amongst them. Besides, when I can "feel the power of a message, and experience a comfort in delivering it," I feel as if, had I a voice sufficient, I could preach Christ with the boldness of a lion to all the millions of earth, were they assembled together. I have meditated much upon visiting you, and have been much impressed to do so ever since you first mentioned it; but until this evening I do not think I had fully decided to make the attempt. This afternoon I have concluded, if the Lord will open the way, and my wife recovers so as to admit of my leaving, to undertake the journey. As I am about the same distance from you as Kansas City, you can probably inform me what it will cost, which I would like to know, and also as to how long before the meeting of the first association I should start. I would like to visit brethren in Kentucky, either in going or returning. The church to which I belong is five miles east of the end of the Little Rock branch of the St. Louis & San Francisco R. R. It is two miles from where I live, and twenty-five miles from any other church in the association. The balance of the churches are in Johnson, Franklin and Logan Counties. Most of them are within ten miles of the Arkansas River and the Little Rock & Ft. Smith R. R. South of the river lies another large association, called Salem. Further down the river, toward Little Rock, but mostly on the north side, lies the Point Remove Association. A little further to the northeast is Mountain Springs Association. These associations follow each other on the first, second, third and fourth Sundays in September, commencing on Friday. The Washington Association lies in Washington, Madison and Benton Counties, just northwest of me, and contains more churches and is older than any association in this part of the state; but we dropped correspondence with them about the year 1870.

My wife is improving slowly. She turned herself in bed without assistance to-day for the first time in many months. I feel to thank the Lord, and now hope she will recover.

Please excuse me for writing at such great length. I have so many things that I wish to talk with you about; and besides, I cannot write as briefly as you can. I hope you may be enabled to visit us next fall. I have long thought that a visit from you would likely do a great deal of good here.

With love to you all, I remain your unworthy brother in affliction,

C. W. ANDERSON.

[THE following letter has been forwarded to us, with the request that we give it a place in the SIGNS at our earliest convenience; if for nothing more to show that there is an Old School Baptist preacher living in that dreary country, where he has a little church organized, and where for miles around he is about the only minister.—ED.]

BALA, Canada, Dec. 10, 1890.

MY DEAR FRIEND:—While sitting here all alone in my little northern home I have just been led to take a review, as far as memory serves, of all the way the Lord my God hath led me these nearly seventy years in the wilderness, to humble me, prove me, make me know what is in my heart, and that his predestianted and chosen ones do not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God; and when those blessed words are brought with divine power and sweetness to the heart by him, whose sole prerogative it is to take of the things which are Christ's and reveal them to the spiritual understanding of the tried, tempted, exercised, sin-bitten, sin-blasted, sin-ruined people by nature, but eternally loved, chosen, redeemed, called, quickened and heaven-born ones, who never were reckoned among the nations, but shall all pass again under the hands of him that telleth them, they look at themselves with astonishment, and wonder at the rich, free, sovereign and eternal grace by which they, who once were far off (and are now, as far as the flesh is concerned), by sin and wicked works, have been brought night by the blood of Christ (as I understand it), into a close intimacy with God, an experimental knowledge of God, and with earnest and heartfelt longings, to be living under the exercise of precious faith, in a more increased and larger enjoyment of him from day to day, until ineffable and eternal glory shall crown forever the work that grace began in eternity, and has manifested in their experience while here below. Such poor souls, who are (as before intimated) sin-harrassed and devil-dragged from day to day, can only exclaim in the language of the church of old by the prophet Micah, "Who is a God like unto thee, that pardoneth iniquity, and passeth by the transgressions of the remnant of his heritage? He retaineth not his anger forever, because he delighteth in mercy." O, my brother, at such blessed seasons how does the soul feelingly exclaim with one of old, "I love the Lord, because he hath heard the voice of my supplication: therefor I will call upon him as long as I live." "The Lord is my light and my salvation." "Whom have I in heaven but thee? and there is none upon earth that I desire besides thee." Everything carnal, or of an earthly, temporal, sensual or devilish character sinks into utter insignificance; and while the heavenly dew continues to fall, he can run through a troop of foes of an internal, external and infernal character. Satan skulks away. That holy, just and righteous law, which called aloud for payment, is beheld as magnified and made honorable by the precious Christ of God, and in the light of everlasting love we behold that in him, Jehovah's Servant, his Elect, in whom his soul delighteth, "Mercy and truth have met together; righteousness and peace have embraced each other; and we bless our faithful, loving, covenant-keeping God and Father in Christ Jesus that they can never be separated more. And if I mistake not, it was this glorious faith's view of things connected with a solemn and felt sense of his own sinfulness that led the psalmist, and leads all the heaven-born and Spirit-taught family of our God to exclaim, "Behold, O God, our shield, and look upon the face of thine Anointed." As though the poor, exercised child of God should give expression to his feelings something after this fashion, Dear Lord, I am not only black in myself, but the blackest of the black. I am vile. I daily and hourly realize that my heart is a cage of unclean birds; that my lusts of the flesh are truly hateful and abominable; yea, of such a character that to none but thyself (to whose eye all things are naked and open), and to my own poor, mourning soul, can they possibly bear the light for one moment. I feel myself to be a moral pest, a walking sink of sin, iniquity and pollution. Dear Lord, look not upon me as I stand in union with the first Adam, a poor, miserable, guilty, hell-deserving wretch, whose very best word, whose most fervent, earnest prayer has had enough sin in it to damn a thousand worlds; but "behold, O God, our shield, and look upon the face of thine Anointed." There transgression is finished, sin is ended, reconciliation is made, everlasting righteousness brought in, the devil defeated, hell vanquished, the mouth of the law stopped, the curse annihilated, the sting of death taken away, and death itself swallowed up in victory, complete, everlasting and eternal, for the entire election of grace; every one of whom often weep, as it were, inwardly; often mourn over the plague of their own heart; but every one of whom, in the immutable purpose of the faithful and covenant-keeping God, shall in the fullness of time, the set time to favor Zion in their souls, be brought out of all the bondage of sin, Satan and the law, out of all the soul-bondage and captivity of unbelief, Pharisism, hypocrisy, deception and lust, into the experimental and glorious light, liberty and freedom of the children of God, and thus stand with their feet on the high and solid vantage ground of electing love, eternal and everlasting victory, in and by and through the precious blood of that everlasting covenant, which is ordered in all things and sure, which is all our salvation and all our desire, though in our experience often times it appeareth not to grow.

Well, dear friend, I have for some time past been laboring under the burden of a guilty conscience, in not answering your last letter before, in which you give me an invitation from the friends to visit your city again, and once more do my very poor best in speaking in the Master's name of what I have tasted, handled and felt of the good word of life in my soul. I promise to do so (God willing) about the end of February next. And as I have not yet learned (among the many inventions that poor, vain man has sought out) of any process by which moisture can possibly be extracted from a dead and thoroughly dry chip, I simply desire that, should you, or any other poor, hell-deserving mortal, find your souls in any measure as a well watered garden, by anything recorded here, or by anything a poor fool like me may be able to say, you act in strict accordance with the law of righteousness and equity, and render tribute to whom tribute is due. And further, should you be favored while so doing to gain audience of the King, or permitted to touch the tip of the golden sceptre, kindly remember poor Joseph here in Muskoka, crawling around and over these old rocks, swamps and morasses, in deep snow, thermometer marking zero, to thirty degrees below, with a dead man strapped on his back, and from a felt sense of his own vileness, Pharisaic pride, and the amount of abominable hypocrisy hanging about him, is continually crying, "O wretched man that I am!" And as the saying is among mortals that misery loves misery, I have every confidence that you and the brethren will do as I have requested, even if it be only on the principle suggested, that one bad man likes to find another as bad as himself.

I believe the time has fully come when every regenerate, Spirit-taught child of God is called to contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints; and if we are really the subjects or recipients of the faith of God's elect, which always works by love, and which, out of the many kinds of faith spoken of in the Scriptures of truth, is the only one that can bring forth living fruits, acceptable to God, such as a felt love to God and to his dear people, joy in the Holy Ghost, which is at times unspeakable and full of glory in our experience, peace in him who is our peace, our life, the Alpha, and Omega, the first and the last, the beginning and the end of a poor sinner's salvation, we shall wish for no parley with the enemy, but shall cheerfully come out from among them, and touch not, taste not, nor handle the unclean thing, and thus through grace quit ourselves like men, and stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, even if we have to stand entirely alone. Our God is with us; he will work, and none (not all the carnal hatred of man, the rage of devils, nor the malice of hell) shall let or hinder. Paul reminds us that the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds, casting down imaginations (or carnal reason), and every high thing that exalteth itself against God, such as man's boasted free will, fleshly holiness, worldly wisdom, creature ability, &c. Yes, beloved, and whether it be high places, high culture, high estimates of self, we rejoice that all must fall in connection with God's saints, by divine teaching and the felt presence of Immanuel, as Dagon fell before the ark of the everlasting covenant; and my heart's desire for you all, for myself, and for all the election of grace, is that under all circumstances faith may be kept in lively exercise, enabling us in these solemn and glorious things to stand still and see the salvation of God.

I cannot tell you how highly I prize the SIGNS. I look upon it as the soundest and most experimental periodical we have, and believe that in it we have the truth in its purity, experimental preciousness, and its practical beauty. My subscription, I see, is due, and I send it by next mail. I often wish I could get my two or three poor people here to take it; but they are so poor literally, as you, I think, are aware, that the sight of a five dollar bill is comparatively a phenomenon. I have once or twice written out a few lines to send to the SIGNS, but whether because the fear of man worketh a snare, or because of my being an English Particular Baptist, destitute of all power to pronounce the word Shibboleth in any tongue, or from the hateful pride and hypocrisy of my own heart in fearing what man would say about it, I have always put them in the fire. I know myself to be a fool; but you can hardly imagine what a belligerent attitude my "old man" gets into when he hears other people call him one.

Now a word or so about our little meeting here, and then I conclude. As you are aware, the Lord hath put a difference between Israel and Egypt; yet, like most others, I suppose our congregation (as far as I dare form an opinion) is made up chiefly of Egyptians, Edomites (Esau is Edom), Babylonians, the inhabitants of Mount Seir, with a few native Canaanites, "dwellers beyond the river," &c. They still love the native soil, and the way in which they cling to the leeks, garlic, onions and fleshpots of the land of their nativity, would make you almost laugh and cry; and when either the calf that Aaron made, or the golden image that Nebuchadnezzar set up, are presented to view, the homage paid is simply astonishing. And now, if the dear Lord will, my prayer for Zion is that she may arise and shine, and shake herself from the dust, whether of free will, Fuller's earth, duty faithism, loose living, licentious Antinomianism, or any other of the abominable isms to which a harlot church is wedded.

I remain yours in hope,

W. KNIFTON.

P. S.—The three or four real children of the family are still on milk diet; and although they like a little strong meat at times, yet not being of full age, a small quantity appears to satisfy them. I hope they will not go off their appetite altogether, or I shall be like a bear robbed of its whelps; for a dear, but cunning, crafty, ancient brother, in the midst of all his troubles exclaimed, "If I am bereaved I am bereaved;" "Surely all these things are against me." However, through mercy we look for better things, though we thus speak. My love to all that are over head and ears in debt.

DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS:

—I am so sinful, and so poor in spirit, I cry daily, O my shortcomings! O my leanness! My sinful heart is most desperately wicked. If I could live as I would like to live, I think I would not commit so much sin; but evil is present with me. I am away down in the valley of sin, with my harp hung upon the willows. Is there any one like poor me? I sometimes doubt whether I am a child of grace. But the good Lord knows all them that are his. If I could know that I am one of that number, O how happy I would be. O that we could look away from self, and with the eye of faith see how the Lord has led us about, and watched over us, and cared for us, and has borne our sins in his own body on the tree. "Fear not, trembling ones, it is I." "He was led as a sheep to the slaughter; and like a lamb dumb before his shearers, so opened he not his mouth." O how I do love to meditate upon those words! for they were the text of the first Baptist sermon I ever heard. It was like water upon the tender plants, and like manna to the hungry soul. I never can forget that day while memory lasts. But since that day I have been almost like Thomas of old. If we could only see and know that everything is for our good, we would be in the sunshine all the time. But there must be cloudy days as well as sunshine. I do not think we have one trial to many; all are for our good. When we can see the hand of the Lord in them, we cling to him the closer. He is the chiefest among ten thousand, the one altogether lovely. He is the bright and morning Star.

Dear brethren and sisters, it has been on my mind a long time to write through our dear family paper, the SIGNS, to know if ever any one was like poor me. I live away off in this country, a long way from any church. We have but little preaching. There are but four of us here that belong to the Primitive Baptists. We have plenty of the "do and live system," for it is all of man, is vanity, and nothing about it that feeds me. Far different it seems when we meet together at our meetings. We all seem as one family; at least they are so to me. I enjoyed myself well at White Church, the meeting was so good. Although they were strangers to me, yet I loved them all.

I hope some dear brother or sister will write to me through the SIGNS. It gives me great comfort to read letters that come from far and near, they are so richly laden. I need a great deal of cleansing, I am so sinful and wicked. If I am ever saved it will be all of grace, and not because of anything I have done or can do.

May you be spared to proclaim the gospel in its purity, and the Lord to praise.

From your unworthy sister, if one at all,

MARIETTA DICKERSON.

GALLUPVILLE, N. Y., Dec. 29, 1890.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—I often think when reading our family paper that I would like to add a few lines to the words so wonderful, rich and true; but darkness, sorrow and trials have left a weary burden on my mind, and I feel so desolate and sad, so weak and helpless, so dead in trespasses and sins. How can one who has realized so much of God's loving-kindness live so far from him? I once thought there was not any one like me; but I read of a people here in my own country whose God is the Lord, though solitary like myself. They are in families, lonely and sad, as myself. There was a woman whose heart was drawn in sympathy to a man of God, and she built for him a little chamber on the wall. He was grateful and wished to reward her; but she said, "I dwell among mine own people." I have often seen much beauty in those words. No reward, no worldly advantage, can be like the sweet communion of saints, when our heart burns with wonder and love as the Scriptures are opened to our understanding, and we can remember the sweet words of our Savior, "I in them, and thou in me." "I pray not for the world, but for them which thou hast given me." Then when hearts are knit and drawn together in love, we can say with one of old, "I dwell among mine own people." Precious and wonderful mystery of godliness, a heart purified as by fire, cleansed by the blood of the Lamb, weary, suffering, sin-sick souls, buried in waves of affliction, helpless, hopeless, ignorant; but Jesus died that they might live. He puts a new song in their mouth, creates in them a clean heart, and renews a right spirit within them; for so it seems good in his sight. Then

"O to be nothing, nothing;
Only to lie at his feet;
A broken and empty vessel,
For the Master's use made meet."

Naomi went out from her own country, to dwell among strangers; but she returned empty, to dwell among her own people, and received loving-kindness.

I have lost another lovely daughter. She was kind and patient, gentle and good, and said she put her trust in God. She said she loved to read my paper better than all others. I had hoped to always live with her; but she has gone before, not lost, I hope. I want to say it is well, that she is better with him than with myself; but I miss her much.

I hope for you good success with the paper, and I do not want to do without it for one week.

395 LYELL AVE., ROCHESTER, N. Y.,
January 1, 1891.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS OF THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES:—The last number of volume fifty-eight is at hand, and reminds us of our duty and of your necessity; and feeling that while able to obtain it we cannot think of doing without it, therefore we inclose P. O. Order for amount named, to be applied to our subscription for the year 1891, the balance to be disposed of as your judgment may dictate. We hope you may be able to survive financial difficulties in consequence of its weekly publication, and that it may continue, as it contains all the preaching that some, and nearly all that many of the dear children of God have, ourselves among the latter. I would therefore that I could say something to our dear brethren editors of our high appreciation of their labors, to whom God has given not the spirit of fear, but of power, and of love, and of a sound mind; so that we realize the labor taken and the judgment exercised in the selection of correspondence for the same; and we are truly thankful that in this day of universal heresy and atheism it is preserved from such deadly pottage. We would say to our very able correspondence, Write on, dear ones, and let not your hands falter in so sweet a work. A labor of love indeed it must be to those so able to fill its pages, in the perusal of which we find so much instruction and comfort. We cannot help inquiring after brother F. A. Chick, and also brother H. Cox, both of whose long silence we regret very much.

I will only add that in the providence of God we are removed from Utica, our former home, the dear little band of brethren, and the preaching of the gospel by our dear pastor, Elder B. Bundy, whose humble and faithful labors were a great strength and comfort to us, and are now living in Rochester, N. Y., where we have not yet found one who knows or desires the truth. We would be glad therefore to have any whose views are fully in accord with the SIGNS OF THE TIMES call on us when in or near this city. They will find us at 395 Lyell Avenue.

And now, dear brethren, that the wisdom, power and grace of him who inclined your hearts to this arduous work, may still rest upon and abide with you, and that we poor, weak, worthless, yet hungering and thirsting ones, whose eyes the Lord has opened, may still keep us following on to know more and more of him, whom not only the sun, moon and stars in their illuminated glory obey, but devils in their fury also, we subscribe ourselves less than the least of all saints.

R. & L. ALEXANDER.

ROCKFORD, ILL.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—Inclosed please find P. O. Order for five dollars. Credit me two dollars on subscription for 1891, and the balance (three dollars) please use in support of publishing a weekly SIGNS OF THE TIMES, which I believe to be for the best interests of the readers of your valuable paper. I hope that brethren who are able to afford it, even if they have to deny themselves some little luxury, will cast in their mite to help assist you in your labor of love. How long we shall be permitted to worship under our own vine and fig tree God alone knows; for the man of sin seems to be revealed as fast as the will of him who holds the keys of death and destruction will permit. As a great desire is manifest to unite church and state, or its equivalent, it becomes the watchmen on the walls to cry aloud, and spare not; to show Jerusalem her sins, and the house of Judah her transgressions.

Wishing you the abundant success which you so richly deserve, I am, I trust, your brother in hope,

B. F. BUTLER.

SOUTH WESTERLO, N. Y., Jan. 7, 1891.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—I will enclose two dollars for our dear family paper another year. I have been a reader of it over fifty years. It has been a great comfort to me, and I cannot give it up yet. In my declining years it seems more precious than ever. My eyesight has failed me so I have not been able to read a word of last volume, but my friends have read it for me. They encouraged me to take it another year, and they will read it to me. According to age and infirmity it does not seem that I shall need it a great while longer. I am quite feeble, and have to keep my bed the largest part of the time. I pass many dark and lonely seasons. Sometimes my Savior appears very precious, the chief among ten thousand, and the one altogether lovely. The time is not far distant when I hope to enjoy his presence without a glass between.

Dear brethren editors, I hope you will be long spared to feed the sheep and the lambs of the flock. This is the desire of your unworthy sister,
RUTH A. ELMENDORPH.

"AND it shall come to pass in that day, that I will call my servant Eliakim the son of Hilkiah; and I will clothe him with thy robe, and strengthen him with thy girdle, and I will commit thy government into his hand; and he shall be a father to the inhabitants of Jerusalem, and to the house of Judah. And the key of the house of David will I lay upon his shoulder; so he shall open, and none shall shut; and he shall shut, and none shall open. And I will fasten him as a nail in a sure place; and he shall be for a glorious throne to his father's house. And they shall hang upon him all the glory of his father's house, the offspring and the issue, all vessels of small quantity, from the vessel of cups, even to all the vessels of flagons. In that day, saith the Lord of hosts, shall the nail that is fastened in the sure place be removed, and be cut down, and fall; and the burden that was upon it shall be cut off; for the Lord hath spoken it."—Isa. xxii. 20-25.

"And the key of the house of David will I lay upon his shoulder; so he shall open, and none shall shut; and he shall shut, and none shall open." As indicated in this expression, the key is the symbol of absolute control over that which is locked up by that key. Then the meaning is evident, that the entrance into the house of David is entirely governed by the will of this Servant of the Lord, here called Eliakim, whom God has set. No legal or ceremonial righteousness can open the door of this house; neither can any power close it against one to whom it is opened by this divinely anointed Servant of the Lord of hosts. He bears the key of the house of David upon his shoulder, signifying his right to admit or exclude from that house whom he will. It is worthy of special observation that in the message to the angel of the church in Philadelphia, the Lord refers to this prophecy as designating himself; and that among the seven churches this one stands perfectly approved in the sight of her sovereign King and Judge. So, to the disciple who is found keeping the word of the patience (or, suffering) of Jesus, this door is opened by the key of his approbation. It is not to be understood that the "house of David" is here used as signifying eternal life. Nowhere in the Scriptures is it intimated that the ultimate salvation of any of the saints is suspended upon the will or works of any mortal. The severest reproofs in the messages to the other churches are addressed to those whom our Lord recognizes as the angels of his own churches. He has not sent his admonitions to any other. The dreadful doom of all the enemies of his truth is indeed declared in his revealed word; but no exhortation or appeal is given to induce them to render obedience to his authority. Only the objects of his eternal love are exhorted and directed to keep his commandments. In the signification of the name David appears the explanation of what is meant by the term, "the house of David." That name means dearly beloved. In the experience of the saints they know what it is to enter into the joy of this perfect love; and they know also the bitterness of mourning when this blessed privilege is denied them. They then feel that the door is closed against them, and earnestly cry, "O that I knew where I might find him! that I might come even to his seat!" In such seasons they cannot enter into the house of David, nor appropriate to themselves the sweet consolations of the loving and approving words of his gospel of peace. The entrance into this house of his dearly beloved is then closed in their experience, and none but Jesus has the key by which they can find admission. In their anxiety and distress it is comforting to know that the key of this house is upon his shoulder, and by faith they are enabled to say, "Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him."—Job xxiii. 3; xiii. 15. This door is closed in the chastening of the saints when they walk in disobedience to the precepts of their Lord; but it is not always in the way of correction that they walk in darkness. It is also given them even in the path of obedience to know the hiding of the face of their Lord. This is the fellowship of the sufferings of Christ, and there is no surer indication of his love than this bitter experience. By it they learn their entire dependence upon his favor for all their real comfort. The key is upon his shoulder, and it is only at his will that the delightful abode of his well beloved is opened to them that love his appearing in their present conflict.

"And I will fasten him as a nail in a sure place; and he shall be for a glorious throne to his father's house." This declaration must be understood as indicating the manifestation of the eternal will of God, and not as signifying that there ever was a time when this Eliakim was not securely established and set in his place in the unchanging counsel of God. Certainly it does not conflict with the confession of the prayer of Moses, "Lord, thou hast been our dwelling place in all generations, before the mountains were brought forth, or ever thou hadst formed the earth and the world, even from everlasting to everlasting, thou, God."—Psa. xc. 1, 2. In accordance with this eternal purpose of divine love, "When the fullness of the time was come, God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons."

—Gal. iv. 4, 5. The immutability of the counsel, or purpose of God, secured him as a nail is fastened in a sure place. It was impossible that he should fail to come and satisfy every demand of eternal justice by his perfect obedience to the holy law of God. In this display of infinite righteousness he established his throne in the heavens of his own glorious perfection. Being found in fashion as a man thus under the law, necessity was laid upon him, and he was as a servant, straitened until he had accomplished all that the Father had given him to do, even to the drinking of the terrible cup of suffering and death by which justice was satisfied for all the sins of his chosen people. In his humiliation he was indeed as a nail which God had fastened in a sure place; and this servitude was indispensable to his manifestation as "a glorious throne to his father's house."

In scriptural reference to royalty, it is always absolute sovereignty that is designated. No such thing as limited monarchy existed in the time when the Scriptures were written. The will of the king was all the law of his kingdom. Hence the throne implies an abode above all legal requirements. The specification of this throne that it is "glorious" indicates not only its majesty but that it is unblemished. This is not merely the seat of our King, but it is equally the dwelling place of all his Father's house, which includes every one of the sons and daughters of our spiritual David. All his righteousness is the justification of every one for whom he gave himself a ransom. In themselves they have to know that there is nothing worthy of acceptance in the sight of the holy Judge of quick and dead; but in their holy Eliakim they have the complete justification of all his perfect righteousness, which is the glorious throne of their everlasting abode. Dwelling in him, they are secure against all the assaults of every enemy, and no weapon that is formed against them shall prosper. Being complete in him, they enjoy all the protection of his sovereignty as abiding under the shield of his omnipotence and holiness. "A glorious high throne from the beginning is the place of our sanctuary."—Jer. xvii. 12. So it is written to the elect strangers scattered abroad, "But ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people; that ye should show forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvelous light; which in time past were not a people, but are now the people of God; which had not obtained mercy, but now have obtained mercy."—1 Peter ii. 9, 10. All this royal favor is found alone in Jesus, and it is treasured in him for all his Father's house, the seed of Abraham in spirit, who are joint heirs with Christ. In him they are holy and without blame before God in love.

"And they shall hang upon him all the glory of his father's house, the offspring and the issue, all vessels of small quantity, from the vessels of cups, even to the vessels of flagons." In this appointment of the Lord God is shadowed forth the pleasure of the Father that in Christ Jesus all fullness should dwell. For the fulfillment of this pleasure of the eternal God all things were created, visible and invisible, in the earth and in heaven. This infinite truth cannot be comprehended by finite intelligence, because it is too wonderful for created minds to understand. Even of those events and things which are tangible to mortal thought, very little appears to us as essential to the development of this will of God; and therefore the wisdom of this world cannot accept the fact that all things are included in the immutable purpose of God. But the wisdom of God has ordered all for the development of the glory of this wonderful Eliakim, his well beloved Son. Without him there could have been no material creation; and but for the eternal purpose of God the revelation which he has given does not authorize the belief that any creature in heaven or in earth would have been brought into existence; since the four and twenty elders cast their crowns before the throne, saying, "Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive glory and honor and power; for thou hast created all things, and for thy pleasure they are and were created."—Rev. iv. 11. Every theory which conflicts with this inspired testimony must be rejected as false, though it should be advanced by the most highly esteemed minister, or even an apostle, or an angel from heaven.—Gal. i. 8, 9. The saints cannot afford to be deprived of the comfort of the assurance that the will of God is done in all things in earth and in heaven; for upon this truth rests the whole doctrine of God our Savior. Devils dare not deny it; yet the saints are often tempted to doubt it, and some professed believers have advanced blasphemous theories of their own invention, which involve such false doctrines. The truth of the unlimited sovereignty of God in all things is the firm foundation of the hope of salvation, without which no sinner can be saved. It is in this sense that all the glory of his Father's house hangs upon our divine Redeemer.

His father's house, in our text, evidently signifies the whole seed of Abraham, who is the father of all the faithful, who are the chosen seed. There is no glory to be found in any of these heirs of promise but that which depends alone upon Jesus. "That, according as it is written, He that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord."—1 Cor. i. 31. The election of grace determines who are children of this father's house. "And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise."—Gal. iii. 29. This vital relationship cannot be attained by good works; nor can it be forfeited or annulled by sinfulness and rebellion. All the glory of this whole house hangs upon our spiritual Eliakim, the chosen and approved Servant of the Lord of hosts. By the various vessels specified, we understand the diversity of gifts bestowed upon the church. The smallest capacity, represented by the cups, is no more dependent upon Jesus than apostolic qualification. The glory of all must be ascribed to him, that he may be all in all. Certainly the offspring and the issue include every member of this house of which he bears all the glory. The same idea here expressed is presented in his assertion, "I am the root and the offspring of David, the bright and morning star."—Rev. xxii. 16. He is both David's Lord and David's son. This is true not only of the literal David, but of all that house of which he was the type and figurative embodiment.

"In that day, saith the Lord of hosts, shall the nail that is fastened in the sure place be removed, and be cut down, and fall; and the burden that was upon it shall be cut off; for the Lord hath spoken it." There can be no doubt that this declaration was fulfilled when Jesus laid down his life on the cross. He then was numbered with the transgressors; and he bare the sin of many, and made intercession for the transgressors. When he was thus cut down, and fell, then the whole burden which was upon him was cut off. So Paul says, "For the love of Christ constraineth us; because we thus judge, that if one died for all, then were all dead."—2 Cor. v. 14. At his death the hope of every saint did fall with him, and was cut off. All his dear disciples forsook him and fled; Peter would go fishing; the faithful women were ready to embalm his body as lifeless clay; and the sad disciples despondently told how they had thought it was he who should have redeemed Israel. Thus the burden that was upon this nail was cut off. All the glory of his Father's house was lost to view, and the gloom of despair enveloped all hope. The night of death spread its pall over the world, and the light of the sun seemed forever buried in that awful darkness. But the glorious resurrection of our Lord proclaimed the accomplishment of the great design of the Lord of hosts in laying on him the iniquity of us all. There could be no failure in the eternal purpose for which this nail was "fastened in the sure place" of the unalterable predestination of God.

The reason assigned in the last clause of our text should be particularly observed. It is not a deplorable necessity, resulting from the unforeseen failure of the original purpose of the Lord. Neither does the Lord seek to apologize for this falling of the nail with its burden, as resulting from some cause beyond his control. Omitting the supplied word "it," which is not in the text in the original Hebrew, we have the true meaning, "For the Lord hath spoken." This agrees with his assertion of his own absolute sovereignty, "I am God, and there is none else; I am God, and there is none like me, declaring the end from the beginning, and from ancient times the things that are not yet done, saying, My counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure."—Isa. xlv. 9, 10.

Deeply conscious that in this article we have failed to mention much important truth contained in the text, it is submitted to the consideration of our dear brother Bundy and all our readers, with the desire that he or any one who may feel impressed, would write more fully and clearly upon the subject.

EXTRAORDINARY OFFER!

FROM now until further notice is given any one who is now a subscriber, and whose subscription is paid up, may send us new subscribers at one dollar a year; but no one, either new or old subscriber, can get the paper from this office for themselves at less than the regular rates. Any one who is not now a subscriber can have the benefit of the above terms by sending two dollars for their own subscription, and one dollar each for additional new subscribers.

Please make no mistake about the above terms. No one, either new or old subscriber, can send to this office and get the paper for themselves for less than the regular rates; but if any of our paid-up subscribers choose to sacrifice their commission and take the new subscriber for one dollar, that is their matter.

TO OUR DELINQUENTS.

WE have several hundred on our list whose subscriptions are a year or more in arrears, and most of these we have notified before, but heard nothing from them. The expense of our publication as a weekly is so near the receipts for the same that we must insist on subscriptions being paid as promptly as possible. We do not refer in this article to those who are only a few months in arrears. Brethren, please do not forget us.

BACK NUMBERS.

WE have printed quite a large number of extra copies of No. 1 of the present volume, and intend to run extra copies of each number for January, so that new subscribers during this month can be supplied with back numbers to the commencement of the volume until the supply is exhausted.

NOT SO ENCOURAGING.

DOUBTLESSLY many of our brethren and friends who have so earnestly labored to increase the circulation of the SIGNS are anxious to see some announcement as to the result of their united efforts. We have from time to time published statements of the steady increase in our subscription list, and last volume closed with nearly two thousand more names than when we started the weekly; yet hundreds of these had been received at one dollar, whose time expired with the volume. Of these less than one hundred have renewed for this volume. We shall continue these names through the month of January; but all from whom we have not heard by the end of the month we shall discontinue. We cannot afford to carry them any longer on an uncertainty. We have supplied the paper at half-rate, with the hope that they would become sufficiently interested to renew at the regular price. Of course we do not consider that they are under any obligation to renew for this year if they do not wish to do so; but the disappointment is none the less to us. Nearly all who have ordered their paper stopped have informed us that it was not on account of any fault they found with the paper, but they did not feel able financially to continue it. To such we will say, How much better off do you expect you will be at the end of the year for having stopped your paper? You have economized about half a cent a day. But we do not wish to argue the financial consideration of the question. If the paper is not supported as a weekly it will be good evidence that it is not approved of the Lord. Whether the increase in the circulation of the paper under the "Extraordinary Offer" shall prove permanent or not, we shall ever hold in grateful remembrance the kind and efficient efforts of the brethren and friends in behalf of the cause. Again, brethren, we thank you.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

Deacon George B. Hooton died at his home, 624 Grand St., Brooklyn, N. Y., Dec. 23d, 1890.

Brother Hooton was born in the city of New York, March 22d, 1825. The days of the years of his life were spent in honorable industry, characterized by honesty and integrity, deserving and receiving the esteem and respect of all who knew him. He married a niece of Elder James Goble, of New Jersey. Having no children of their own, they have had the paternal care of nieces and nephews, who have risen up to call them blessed. He was baptized in fellowship with the Ebenezer Old School Baptist Church in the city of New York, Oct. 7th, 1877, by Elder Isaac Hewitt, and was a firm and faithful member, jealous of the interests and welfare of the church; strict in discipline as a Deacon, faithful in attendance at the meetings, always abounding in the work of the Lord. Many of the ministering brethren can testify to his liberality, and all who have visited his house will remember his christian hospitality. About five years ago he was stricken with partial internal paralysis, from the effects of which he gradually declined in health. During all his affliction he was kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation, and died as he had lived, calling on the name of the Lord. Just before he expired his wife, seeing that he suffered, asked him if he wanted something. He answered, "Yes; I want my Savior." Directly he exclaimed, "Come—come, Lord Jesus, com quickly," and fell asleep.

Thus lived and died a faithful husband, a kind brother, a firm friend, and a worthy member of the church. May Jesus, who binds up broken hearts and comforts mourning souls, soothe the sorrows of our bereaved sister. Many sorrowing friends and relatives attended the funeral services at his home on Christmas night. The writer tried to speak words of comfort from 1 Peter i. 3-5: "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, to an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you, who are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the last time."

W. W. MEREDITH.

DIED—Dec. 9th, 1890, brother John Morris, of Delphi, Onondaga Co., N. Y., aged 81 years and 6 months.

He was born in England, and moved to America many years ago, coming to Delphi in 1857. He and his wife united with the Predestinarian Baptist Church at Delphi the same year, both living consistent, orderly, christian lives until God by death removed them from this present evil world to their eternal rest. Brother Morris was the father of but one child. He died at the home of Mr. Robert Fuggles, in Delphi, N. Y., who with his wife and other friends did all that willing, faithful and loving hands could do for his comfort in his sickness. As a citizen and neighbor he was an honorable, honest, kind-hearted man, and therefore was respected by all. As a believer in Jesus he was firm in his convictions, and would not yield any point of truth for the sake of pleasing his nearest friend. He often said that he had no desire to hear a man preach who did not draw the line between truth and error, showing where those stood, and their character, who made God a liar, and those who were true believers in Jesus. But he is gone, and we miss him in the church; but we believe that he is home, where he longed to be. I do not know the cause of his death; he had been failing for some time.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date, this date denotes the time at which your subscription expires, and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

POETRY.

COUNTING MY WEALTH.

'Tis quiet, and the faithful clock
Has struck the hour of four;
I pull the curtains softly down,
And count my treasures o'er.
Though Vanderbilt may count his gains,
Two hundred millions o'er
(If thieves have not disturb'd it yet),
My wealth is vastly more.
The curtain need no longer hide
The light of opening day;
My wealth is safe—nor thief nor rust
Can spirit it away.
Though quiet reigns, and all is still,
I feel no horrid fear
Lest prying eyes may peer within
And see my treasures here.
For safe and sure my title stands,
And thieves themselves are mine,
To give me needful watchfulness,
And proper discipline.
So vast are all the realms I own,
So countless is my store,
I've Counsel, Court and Surety
To make my trial sure.
My title's sealed in God's own book,
An abstract faith bestows;
I find the record good,
As heaven's volume shows.
This treasure here will only make My soul the humbler still,
If but the Father only shows
How infinite his will.
The world is mine, but he must still Instruct me how to use
The things thereof to profit, so
As never to abuse.
Thieves cannot take a single shred
Until the time is past
When each has filled its usefulness,
And served me to the last.
All life is mine, and it must end;
But how, or when, or where?
It matters not, if God indite
The dying christian's prayer.
'Tis mine to count the stars of light,
And mine to claim the sea;
'Tis mine to use the future now,
And age of history.
'Tis mine to bear the scorn of men,
And mine to suffer grief;
'Tis mine to labor, groan and cry,
And mine to feel relief.
'Tis mine to feel the weight of woe,
And mine to pray for grace;
'Tis mine to climb the heavenly road,
As faith impels the race.
With wondrous wealth each gem is bright,
And each hath Jesus given,
To radiate his dazzling light
To all the heirs of heaven.
And though the children of the world
Evade such wondrous ways,
'Tis thus that wealth most infinite
Its wondrous power displays.
For here and there we gather up
The treasures God hath given,
Reserving the full capital
To be enjoyed in heaven.
It can't be squandered on the earth;
'Tis only just bestowed
In ample measure here to pay Expenses on the road.

A. B. BRES.

CORRESPONDENCE.

FOREKNOWLEDGE.

"AND we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose. For whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son, that he might be the first-born among many brethren. Moreover, whom he did predestinate, them he also called; and whom he called, them he also justified; and whom he justified, them he also glorified."—Rom. viii. 28-30.

For some time I have felt strongly inclined to write an article on the subject of foreknowledge, and have chosen the above Scripture to base the remarks upon. While dwelling upon this important principle of the doctrine of God our Savior, I hope that there may be kept distinctly before my mind the declarations of Paul to Timothy, which are, "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness; that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works."

The epistle of Paul to the Romans has caused more controversy than the other fourteen which he wrote; but with all who have been enabled to renounce their own wisdom, and implicitly follow the obvious meaning of the written word of God, not much difference of interpretation has been manifest; but untold thousands, at the present time, while they admit that the epistle to the Romans is a part of the New Testament Scripture, receive the declarations with mental reservation; that is, they believe that which harmonizes with their carnal notions, and reject the balance; and the writer of this communication has received the following answer: "I know it reads so, but then it does not mean that." Also, that "a learned man may be a safe critic of the written Scripture, who does not believe the doctrine taught;" which is not true; for all such criticisms will be deeply tinged with their carnal views. And some, who profess to be ardent lovers of God's truth, receive part of the declarations of the inspired apostle, recorded in this epistle, in a sort of "half-hearted" manner, and do not seem inclined to talk about the glorious doctrine involved in the text now under consideration. Some of the most acute and subtle metaphysicians now living try to harmonize the doctrine taught in this epistle with creature merit and natural philosophy, which is an utter impossibility.

Having made these general remarks, I will now proceed to say something concerning the text selected; and while so doing, may our God keep me from trifling with any word of "holy writ." And I desire to begin just as Phillip did, "at the same Scripture." "To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light [margin, morning] in them."

And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose. As the God of the universe is the first cause, everything else must be secondary, whether angels, good or bad men, or animals, and the inanimate creation; and all must subserve the identical purpose for which they were created. The patriarch Jacob said, "I have ye bereaved of my children: Joseph is not, and Simeon is not, and ye will take Benjamin [son of the right hand] away: all these things are against me." Who dare say that Jacob did not speak just as he felt when he uttered the words, "All these things are against me?" Yet in the dark and inscrutable providence of God all were working together in divine harmony for his good; but the time had not yet come for him to know it. The inspired apostle seventeen hundred years afterward said, "O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! how unsearchable [the original word used here is anexereunetos, not searched out; and in not any other place is the same word in the New Testament; and it really means, defying investigation] are his judgments, and his ways past finding out! For who hath known the mind of the Lord? or who hath been his counsellor? or who hath first given to him, and it shall be recompensed unto him again? For of him, and through him, and to him, are all things [no man has the right to read this "all good things," as many do]: to whom be glory forever. Amen." The psalmist by inspiration said, "Thy way is in the sea, and thy path in the great waters, and thy footsteps are not known." "But our God is in the heavens: he hath done whatsoever he hath pleased." "Whatsoever the Lord pleased, that did he in heaven, and in the earth, in the seas, and all deep places." The Lord "said unto Abram, Know of a surety that thy seed shall be a stranger in a land (that is) not theirs, and shall serve them; and they shall afflict them four hundred years; and also that nation whom they shall serve will I judge; and afterward shall they come out with great substance." We find in this quotation five of God's shalls. Can any one, who regards the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments as the written word of our God, doubt that everything connected with Abraham's seed was not then foreknown, when God told him that thus it should be? And being foreknown, what temerity on the part of mortals to undertake to prove that the same was not determined, decreed, foreordained, or predestinated, in all its connecting "links," at the time when thus declared. It is certainly important to remember that the words foreknow and foreordain are from the same original word in the New Testament; therefore, when speaking of the purpose of our God, how careful we ought to be not to trifle with the written word of God. Can any mortal, however wise, separate the rays of the sun in heaven by dividing the light from the heart? No; neither can finite wisdom separate foreknowledge and foreordination; for they are cognate: where the one is, there is the other; and when we speak of the purpose of God, whether we use the word decree, predestination, or foreordination, each one sets forth the purpose of our God. In the second Psalm it reads, "I will declare the decree [here in this Psalm the Hebrew word is choq, signifying marked out]: the Lord hath said unto me, Thou art my Son; this day have I begotten thee." I desire right here to ask all who may read this communication (if published) to read it thus: "I will declare the permissive decree," and see how it sounds. What a jargon of terms! for the term permission, from the verb to permit, is from epitropo, to turn over on, or to suffer. Now let us put the two words together, thereby make some Arminian scripture, and see how diametrically it is opposed to the general tenor of Scripture: "I will declare the epitropo choq; that is the turn over on, or the suffer decree." If the written word of God said, "permissive decree," we should be solemnly bound to receive it; but no such jargon is taught in the Scriptures. The writer of this has heard so much about God's permissive decrees that he has felt it binding upon him to give the real meaning of these terms, knowing however that technical terms do but little harm to Satan's kingdom; for both ing but simple, plain, child-like gospel truth disturbs his votaries.

When Joseph made himself known to his brethren, he said, "Come near to me, I pray you. And they came near. And he said, I am Joseph your brother, whom ye sold into Egypt. Now therefore be not grieved, nor angry with yourselves, that ye sold me hither; for God did send me before you to preserve life. * * *

And God sent me before you, to preserve you a posterity in the earth, and to save your lives by a great deliverance; so now it was not you that sent me hither, but God; and he hath made me a father to Pharaoh, and Lord of all his house, and a ruler throughout all the land of Egypt. * * *

And they went up out of Egypt, and came into the land of Canaan, unto Jacob their father, and told him, saying, Joseph is yet alive, and is governor over all the land of Egypt. And Jacob's heart fainted, for he believed them not. And they told him all the words of Joseph, which he had said unto them. And when he saw the wagons which Joseph had sent to carry him, the spirit of Jacob their father revived; and Israel said, It is enough: Joseph my son is yet alive; I will go and see him before I die." Did not all things work together for Jacob's good, from the giving of the dreams to Joseph until Jacob went down into Egypt? Certainly they did. Everything pertaining to Joseph, his brethren and his father were decreed, marked out, and not one thing transpired by chance; and what a reflection upon the wisdom, goodness and power of Jehovah it is to argue that the omnipresent, omniscient and omnipotent One permits what he has not decreed, or that God certainly foreknows what he has not determined. The Old and New Testament Scriptures, leaving out the apocrypha, contain nearly eight hundred thousand words; and no man can find in the Scriptures a sentence to sustain the carnal theory that Jehovah permits what he has not decreed, determined, foreordained, or predestinated; for either of those words declares the eternal, unchangeable purpose of God; therefore everything that ever has transpired, is now daily coming to pass, or shall take place here in time, was foreknown, consequently decreed; for the God of the universe has said, "Remember the former things of old; for I am God, and there is none else; I am God, and there is none like me, declaring the end from the beginning, and from ancient times the things that are not yet done, saying, My counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure."

During the long period of servitude that Israel endured in Egyptian bondage, not an event transpired by chance; neither could they go out of bondage until the set time had come. The destruction of Pharaoh and his host in the Red Sea, the many years, in the wilderness, and the entering into the land of Canaan, were decreed, or foreordained, by Israel's God. Said God to Pharaoh (he who disperses or spoils), "And in very deed for this (cause) have I raised thee up, for to show in thee my power, and that my name may be declared throughout the earth." The apostle Paul, fifteen hundred years afterward, said, "For the Scripture saith unto Pharaoh, Even for this same purpose have I raised thee up, that I might shew my power in thee, and that my name might be declared throughout all the earth." Untold thousands of times the bondage of national Israel and the sore judgments inflicted upon the Egyptians have been proclaimed by the true, tried and faithful servants of the Lord Jesus Christ; for our God said it should be declared concerning Pharaoh, and that embraces the Egyptians also. The glorious doctrine of God's eternally fixed purpose so pervades both the Old and New Testament Scriptures that he or they who would set it aside must either re-write the Scriptures or else interpret them upon some unheard of principle; and when we are told that the words foreknowledge and predestination are only a few times recorded in the Scriptures, does not such an assertion look very much like considering them of little consequence, or "trifling" with the written word of God? What if those identical words are only a few times recorded in the Scriptures, when that glorious truth permeates the entire record made in the Scriptures. How many times is the declaration, "For dust thou art, and unto dust thou shalt return?" Only once. But are there not many places in the Scriptures where the truth of that is set forth? Have not the millions of mortals who have lived and died on this earth, the footstool of our God, proved it true? How many times is it recorded, "Let there be light, and there was light?" Only once. And does it not continue? How many times is it recorded, "While the earth remaineth, seedtime and harvest, and cold and heat, and summer and winter, and day and night, shall not cease?" Only once, and that is enough. When it is asserted that the technical terms decree, foreordination, predestination, foreknowledge, &c., are used only a few times, such talk clearly shows that the doctrine is trifled with; yet, at the same time, all the prophetic declarations were based on that truth; for God did not inspire his servants the prophets to predict what he had not foreordained or predestinated; and every real gospel sermon contains that; for if Christ and him crucified is preached, that soul-cheering, God-honoring doctrine is in it, whether the specific terms are used or not.

Now we will examine and bring forward some of the great and glorious principles of God's appointment "concerning his Son Jesus Christ, our Lord, which was made of the seed of David according to the flesh, and declared (to be) the Son of God with power, according to the Spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead." God said, "And I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed: it shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel." The seed of the woman here clearly points out the supernatural way in which the Messiah should come into the world; therefore it was decreed and certainly foreknown; for about four thousand years afterward "The angel answered and said unto her, The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee: therefore also that holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God." It was said unto Abraham, "And in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed; because thou hast obeyed my voice." Bible readers are not left to merely theorize concerning this seed, for the apostle Paul has settled the matter; for he says, "Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, And to seeds, as of many; but as of one, And to thy seed, which is Christ." Here the promise was made to Abraham, which embraced all nations; but as this promise was very broad, it was next limited to the tribe of Judah; for the prophetic declaration was, "The sceptre shall not depart from Judah, nor a lawgiver from between his feet, until Shiloh [peace, abundance] come; and unto him shall the gathering of the people be." Finally the restriction came to the family or house of David: "The Lord hath sworn in truth unto David, he will not turn from it. Of the fruit of thy body will I set upon thy throne." As the time of the Messiah's birth drew near, it was according to the purpose of God to designate the family of the Jews where the Savior should be born; also the place and time. "But thou Bethlehem Ephrathah, though thou be little among the thousands of Judah, yet out of thee shall he come forth unto me that is to be ruler in Israel; whose goings forth have been from of old, from everlasting." (Margin, the days of eternity). When Herod demanded of the chief priests and scribes where Christ should be born, they said unto him, "In Bethlehem of Judea; for thus it is written by the prophet: And thou Bethlehem, in the land of Judah, art not the least among the princes of Judah: for out of thee shall come a Governor, that shall rule my people Israel." Seven hundred years passed away after the prophet Micah by inspiration of God made the prophecy, and it came to pass exactly as predicted. Were not all the "links" in the divine chain of events determined in the counsel of God concerning every event that should transpire between the prophecy and its fulfillment? Certainly they were; therefore all were foreknown; and this brings us directly to that glorious foundation again, that all prophecy was based on foreordination, therefore must take place in exact harmony with God's eternal purpose; and not merely by permission, but absolute predestination.

The announcement of the angel of the Lord was made to Joseph in no uncertain words, but an absolute declaration; for it reads, "And she shall bring forth a son, and thou shalt call his name Jesus; for he shall save his people from their sins. Now all this was done that it might be fulfilled which was spoken of the Lord by the prophet." He was called Jesus, which is the Greek name of the Hebrew Joshua, which signifies Jehovah that saveth; and he was so called by the angel before he was born. Was not that foreknown? Certainly it was; therefore "foreordained before the foundation of the world."—See 1 Peter i. 18-21. That declaration does not say, Thou art permitted to call his name Jesus; but Thou shalt call his name Jesus." That declaration was made ex cathedra, right from the throne of God, who has declared, "For as the rain cometh down and the snow from heaven, and returneth not thither, but watereth the earth, and maketh it bring forth and bud, that it may give seed to the sower, and bread to the eater, so shall my word be that goeth forth out of my mouth: it shall not return unto me void [that is, empty], but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper (in the thing) whereto I sent it."

NEWARK, Del., Dec. 22, 1890.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—Inclosed you will find a letter by Deacon John R. Hill. The church and friends would be glad to see it in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. He is a very precious brother to us all, backward and timid, but always ready to talk of the things of the kingdom. He wrote this for publication some time ago; but after looking over it he thought it must not be published, for fear some other communication would be crowded out that would be much more profitable to the readers; but we think it will be read with interest, especially by those who have known brother Hill.

Yours in hope and fellowship,

JOSEPH L. STATON.

NEWARK, Del., Oct. 13, 1890.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN IN THE LORD:—I have desired for many years to write you a little of the dealings of the dear Lord with me; but I am such a poor, weak, unlearned old sinner that I know I cannot write anything to edify you, nor any of the dear saints, unless the dear Savior guides both my mind and pen. I know I can do nothing without his guidance, either in thought or deed. I have had many dark seasons of doubt and fear as to whether I have been born again. It seems sometimes I feel so prone to sin, and am doing things so sinful, can it be possible that I have experienced a work of grace in my heart? Right here I wish to say that I have never had such a wonderful experience, such great trouble of mind that I could neither rest nor sleep, nor thought that my time in this world was near its end. But from my childhood I have had serious thoughts, and very often felt, while I was young, If I were to die, what would become of me? for I felt that I was not prepared to die; and it seemed to impress my mind so much that I would often try to pray the Lord to make me fit to die. My father and mother were Old School Baptists, but not at that time; for there were no New and Old School at that time (about the year 1822, and on until the division, when the New School went out from the Old School). But to return. I went on in this way until I began to think I must begin to try to do better, and try to please God by doing better; and I thought for a while that I was getting along right well, and that God would certainly be pleased with my good works. So I lived a moral life, never swore, nor told lies, nor drank rum, and was quite self-righteous. But it pleased the blessed Lord, after I was married, to reveal himself to me; and he showed me that I was a sinner in his sight, and I became very uneasy about it. I thought all was not right within me; that there was something in me that was not right. It set me to studying what I must do. I grew very uneasy, and thought I must try and get religion, as some called it. I had been attending a protracted meeting of the Methodists, and they persuaded me to go to the mourners' bench, and told me I would get the blessing; but I did not get it. So I felt willing to do anything to get religion. I thought the Old Baptists were too stiff and selfish. I still thought I had a little hand in the matter, until dear Elder George Staton came to be pastor of old Welsh Tract Church. He preached at the College one night, and I invited him home with me. He remained over night, and we talked together, as I was anxious at that time to hear religious talk. I think the Lord ordered our meeting that night, for he caused a love to spring up in me for him that I never had before; and it pleased the good Lord to show me more light in his glorious dealings with me. I got to loving them so well, and their preaching seemed to sink so deeply in my heart, that I wanted to be one of them; but I did not feel that such a sinner as I felt myself to be was fit to be one of them; so I could not go to the church for several years. After that dear Elder Grafton came to preach once a month, and he and brother Francis often came to my house and remained over night, when we would talk until twelve and one o'clock. I wondered that they could tell my experience better than I could. When the Lord's time came I went to the church, and to my surprise they received me. I was baptized the next day, the third Sunday in March, 1878, by Elder Grafton. I am made to feel my sinfulness and unworthiness yet; and have to doubt whether I am really translated from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan to God. But I am like the man we read of in the gospel, "Whereas I was once blind, now I see." I have had some glorious seasons lately under the preaching of our dear brother, Joseph L. Staton. He is a dear brother to me. I do hope the Lord will bless him and speak through him to the edification of his church.

Dear brethren Beebe, I am writing a great deal more than I expected to write. I hope the Lord has blessed your editorial in the SIGNS, No. 40, Vol. 58. You spoke of love that no mortal can command; that holy love of God, which is the fulfilling of the law of our Redeemer; that it is manifested alone by the grace of God which is in the subject of divine mercy. In reading the good editorial through, the Lord raised my affections and thoughts so far above earth and earthly things that it seemed to me I was in the presence of my dear Redeemer, and I felt the power of redeeming grace and love to God. It drove all the dark clouds from my sky for the time present.

Now, my dear brethren, I do not think this would be worth reading in the SIGNS; but if you think there is anything in it that would afford any light to any dear child of God, you can do as you think best with it, and all will be right. I do hope the Lord may direct in his sovereign grace for you to continue the SIGNS OF THE TIMES weekly, for it is dear to me because of the good communications and editorials. I must close, as this is entirely too long.

Your brother in hope,

J. R. HILL.

P. S.—Dear brother Beebe, I feel that I must say to you that my poor soul was filled to overflowing while you preached at London Tract last Saturday and Sunday. You spoke with such power on the great love, mercy and grace of our God toward us, while we were rebels and sinners. It made my poor heart burn within me to feel the power of God proclaimed so powerfully through his dear servants; but it was the dear Lord speaking through you.

You will see that this letter was commenced on the 13th. I had about made up my mind not to send it to you; but when I came home from the meeting I thought I must speak of the great feast, of the fat things, and wine on the lees, well refined, at the meeting. I thought brother Rittenhouse had his heart filled with the Holy Ghost from the way he spoke with power.

Brethren Beebe, if you publish this letter will you throw the mantle of love over it and rectify all mistakes. I think one like me ought not try to write on such a glorious subject, as it takes the place of better minds and pens. I am in my 77th year.

I remain your brother in hope,

J. R. H.

OTEGO, N. Y., Jan. 4, 1891.

DEAR BROTHERS BEEBE:—Inclosed please find a letter from sister Sallie Miller, which you will please give a place in the SIGNS, as it speaks in honor of sovereign grace.

E. A. BUNDY.

WESTBROOK, N. Y., Dec. 15, 1890.

DEAR BROTHER AND SISTER BUNDY:—As I have never been able to tell of the Lord's dealings with me, and as you once asked me to write them, it has pressed so hard upon my mind that I will now try, the Lord directing my pen. I do not know that I can tell when I was first impressed with the thought of what a terrible sinner I was, for I have had that thought about as long as I can remember. I think it was twenty-three years ago I was shown more clearly what a miserable wretch I was, and that I was without hope and without God in the world. I read my Bible, but it did not seem to give me any comfort; for it seemed a sealed book to me. The promises seemed to be for others, who were so much better than I. But all at once these words came to me, "He came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance." I certainly knew there was no greater sinner than I was. There being a Methodist revival meeting near our house I attended it; and when they asked if there were any sinners there who wished to be prayed for, I thought I could not keep my seat, for I felt I was the chief of sinners; and when they sang the words, "Come, ye sinners, poor and needy," I went with some of my schoolmates to the front seat; for I felt that if any were poor and needy I was. I would talk with them, but they did not feel as I did, and I thought it was because they were so much better than I. They were going to join the church, and asked me if I was not going. I replied, "I guess not, for I am not fit." The preacher said if I would join the church I would feel differently; that my trouble would be all gone, and I would feel at home. I felt if any one desired a home I did. But instead of it being a home, it increased my trouble; for I thought it was such a wicked thing that I had been sprinkled and called it baptism. I thought that was one of the worst things I ever had done, and I could not take any comfort there. When I would tell the others how I felt, they would say they did not feel like that; so I thought my case was an outside one, and thought the reason was because I was so much more wicked than they were. I thought I would not say anything more about it; but I passed many weary days and nights, and would often lay in bed at night and read the SIGNS, when the rest of the family would be asleep. I seemed to think the writers were the people of God; but as there was no church very near me, I could not hear any preaching. My people used to go to Otego occasionally; but as there was a great deal of work to do at home, I never thought I could go with them. I thought I must let them go, as they would enjoy it so much more than I would. Thus time passed on until the year 1873, when I was married. Two years after that I was taken sick, and thought I never would be any better, and that I would be banished forever from the presence of the just and all-wise God; but I felt it would be just were it so to be. As I lay there, suddenly I saw a bright light on the wall, and it seemed to be in the form of stars. I tried to show it to others, but they could not see it. It seemed as though I could hear water running, and it sounded very sweet to me. Then the words came to me, "We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren." It seemed then I was so willing to die, and had no desire to get well. But my time was not yet come, and I was raised up. The next fall I attended the Otego yearly meeting, and Elder Durand preached. His text was, "My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me." I felt assured they were the sheep, but felt I was a goat, and never could ask for a place with them. I thought if I had a hope I would live in secret hope. Thus time passed for a few years, until my father was going to Otego to attend meeting, and said I might go with him. I was glad of the opportunity. While we were going along these words again returned to me, "He came not to call the righteous, but sinners, to repentance." While in the meeting I thought they were the people I longed to be with, but felt it would be a reproach upon the cause for such a wretch as I was to ask for a name among them. Elder Bundy asked me if my mind was exercised on baptism, and I answered that it was. But I did not go prepared, and so wished it put off until the next meeting. I went home feeling a little more contented for a while, but afterward began to think I had deceived the church. I prayed the Lord if I had that he would not allow me to go to the next meeting. But the time came, and as we gathered at the water it seemed as if old things had passed away, and everything was praising God. I could truly say, I know not whether I am in the body or out of the body. I then thought my trials were all gone; but alas! how mistaken I was; for they are daily before me. I am often cast down, and can only cry, "God, be merciful to me, a sinner." It often causes me great sorrow to think I cannot attend the meetings of the church oftener; but these words will come to me with much force, "All things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose." Sometimes before I know what I am doing I will be singing,

"When through fiery trials thy pathway shall lie,
My grace all-sufficient shall be thy supply;
The flames shall not hurt thee, I only design
Thy dress to consume and thy gold to refine."

I will now close. This is at your disposal. If you see anything in it you wish to send to the SIGNS, please correct all mistakes.

Yours in love, and in hope of life beyond this world of trials,
SALLIE MILLER.

MARCH 23, 1890.

DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS:—This beautiful Sunday morning as I sat meditating over my past life, and though how the Lord had watched over and kept me up to the present time, and how unthankful I have been for his goodness and mercy, I felt that if I was a child of grace I surely was the least of all. I grew up in a happy home, surrounded by loving brothers and sisters, and had no care nor thought of the morrow; but now how all is changed! My dear father has been called to his long home; my mother who is very old and feeble, is ready and waiting for the summons to call her to a better world than this; and the old homestead, what sweet yet sad recollections gather round it; where we were born and grew up from childhood; where every tree and bush is dear to our hearts. Dear old home! sweet childhood days! Now all is changed. Of the children that used to meet around the old hearth-stone, some have gone to their last resting place, others have wandered into distant lands, while the two or three that are left behind show from the silver threads in their hair that they have reached the meridian, and are now descending toward the evening tide of life; and the things that know us now, will soon know us no more forever. I was married when I was nineteen; and the first trouble I ever had, my husband was taken very sick, and not expected to live. It was then for the first time I was brought to see how helpless and dependent I was on God for all his blessings. My husband recovered, but the careless and unconcerned state of mind I was in before never returned. I saw myself a vile, hell-deserving sinner, whose only hope was in Jesus, and that all my works were as filthy rags. O what sorrow and trouble I was in for long months, when there was not a ray of light across my pathway. I never had as bright a hope as some I have read of. If I had, I think I would never doubt again. I do not know that I could tell the exact time that I received a hope; but my troubles and anguish of mind left me, and I felt a calmness and peace come over me I had never felt before. This was about the time brother Trott wrote in the SIGNS that some great event would transpire in the year 1866. Some thought it would be the winding up of time; but I felt no fear, but perfect trust, feeling that I was in the hands of a just and holy God, and he would do all things well. But these feelings did not remain long, for doubts and fears returned, and have followed me all the way since. Shortly after this, with much fear and trembling I joined the church, and since then I have had many sorrows and troubles to pass through. I have been brought down low at the feet of Jesus, and felt sometimes as if I would faint by the way; but I am still struggling on, knowing that we have no continuing city here, but have a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. I feel that the chastening of the Lord in my case was all for my good; for, my dear brother, if we were not brought down to see our sinful and helpless condition, how could we give all praise, honor and glory to God? O what a glorious doctrine, that he has all power in heaven and in earth; that he speaks, and it is done; he commands, and it stands fast. He knows the end from the beginning, and knows all the trials and disappointments we have to meet with along the rugged pathway of life. Knowing this, why are we not more reconciled to his will? Why are we so often in the dark? But perhaps there are none that feel as I do, so poor and helpless; and when the troubles and sorrows of this life roll over me like mountains, I am made to cry, O Lord, lift thy chastening rod. I often think of our dear brethren in the ministry, of the trials and sorrows they have to encounter. If they have so many troubles and crosses to bare, how can such a sinful worm of the dust as I am, expect to escape? But press on, dear old soldiers of the cross; your warfare will soon be ended, and you can say with the poet,

"Farewell to earth and earthly things;
In vain they tempt my stay;
Come, angels, spread your joyful wings,
And bear my soul away."

But O, my brother, I wander so often into by and forbidden paths, and I cannot do the things that I would. My mind wanders on foolish and vain things. But this world is not our home. O blessed thought, that when we pass over the river we will be done with sin. There will be no sorrow there, all tears will be wiped from our eyes, and we will be like Jesus and see him as he is.

My dear brother, I felt so impressed to write this morning that I wrote more to relieve my mind than anything else. I have never written anything for publication before; and now that I have written this, it is such a poor scribble that if you lay it aside it will be all right. I feel a delicacy in seeing my name in print, therefore please excuse me for signing the initials only. Pray for me, my brother, that the Lord may keep me, and give me strength equal to my day.

Your unworthy sister, if one at all,
R. E.

CHRISTIAN CO., Ill., Aug. 26, 1890.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—I inclose to you a copy of a letter found among the papers of my late father, which it appears he had written for publication, but failed to send it to your father, thinking, no doubt, that it was not fit to appear in the SIGNS. I desire that you publish it, if you think proper.

Yours in fellowship,

J. BEEMAN.

MORROW, Ohio, Dec., 1861.

DEAR BROTHER BEEBE:—Another year has passed away, and I am reminded that it is time for me to send you my remittance for the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. The past year has been an eventful one truly. When I read the many rich communications in the SIGNS, I am sometimes made to rejoice that I am not alone in this wilderness of woe. At other times I feel that there is none like me. At such times the language of the poet expresses my feelings,

"I am so vile, so prone to sin,
I fear that I'm not born again."

But again, while reading the experience of some brother or sister, hope springs up, and then I realize that I have been in the valley of the shadow of death; and as I get this glimpse of the goodness and mercy of God, I am made to rejoice in God our Savior. The poet expresses my desire for peace of mind,

"O for a heart to praise my God—
A heart from sin set free;
A heart that always feels thy blood,
So freely shed for me."

If I could write to edify the dear children of God I would fain write; but as I feel my nothingness; as well as my inability, I hesitate; nevertheless I conclude that perhaps some poor, weak one might read this, who feels as poor and needy as I do. I ask myself the question, Can one who is a christian be so engrossed in the things of this world as I am, when we know that this earth is not our home?

"Our dearest joys and nearest friends,
The partners of our blood,
How they divide our wavering minds,
And leave but half for God."

"The fondness of a creature's love
How strong it strikes the sense!
Thither the warm affections move,
Nor can we call them thence."

O that I were enabled to trust more in the Lord, who is able to bring good out of evil, and who works all things after the counsel of his own will; for all things work together for good them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose. Says one, "If I only knew that I were one of those called ones that Jesus died for, how happy I would be; but I even fear to hope. While I hope, nevertheless I doubt. O what a poor creature I am!" Perhaps it is right that we should doubt our standing in him, that we may the better feel our weakness, and know from whence cometh our strength. Sometimes after a winter season of darkness, doubt and unbelief, how pleasant is a glimpse of his countenance.

Brethen, continue to write, that we may be comforted together. May we endure hardness as good soldiers, and run with patience the race that is set before us, ever looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith. The apostle says, "Our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory."

"Afflictions, though they seem severe,
In mercy oft are sent;
They stopped the prodigal's career,
And brought him to repent."

The time is coming when we shall leave this dull mortality, and death will be swallowed up in victory. Then will that saying be brought to pass, "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" Thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

Yours in love,

ARIEL BEEMAN.

SENECA FALL, N. Y., Jan., 1891.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—I have just received a letter from brother J. T. Baxter, of Attica, Iowa, thanking me for sending him the SIGNS. There was so much love and gratitude in the letter that it filled my heart with love to him; for I could see that he was one of God's little ones, chosen in affliction. As I read the letter tears ran down my cheeks, and my heart went out in thankful praise to God for his loving-kindness to one so unworthy as I feel myself to be; for if I am one of God's children I am the least of all. I think I know how that dear brother appreciates the SIGNS, for it is to me like water to a thirsty soul. Sometimes I feel much cast down, and go groping along, almost ready to give up. Then comes our family paper, I take it up, and perhaps there is a piece from a brother or sister that just lifts me up and makes my heart rejoice. I can say with that dear brother, I know the hand of God is in it. I do thank the Lord that he has given me an opportunity to give a cup of cold water to one of his dear children.

Brother Beebe, will you please put this in the SIGNS, that the brother may know I received his letter; and I hope he will write to me again. You will see I am a poor writer. May the dear Lord bless you in time and eternity, is the prayer of your unworthy sister. I have sent you an order for five dollars for indigents, and hope it will make their hearts glad.

E. CANDLER.

BATH, Maine, Dec. 19, 1890.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—I have just finished reading Elder Durand's book, "Meditations on portions of the word." I would like to tell of the sweet enjoyment I have had in reading the book, but words cannot express it. I have found the name of Jesus exalted on every page, which is so satisfying to every one who has been taught of the Lord that there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved.

I do feel glad that you are to continue the SIGNS weekly another year, and hope the brethren will come to your assistance. The SIGNS has been coming to my home over thirty-five years, and its columns have always been read with comfort. I hope the Lord will enable you to set forth the truth boldly and fearlessly in the future, as in the past, and that he will lead the minds of the brethren to write of the power, wisdom and knowledge of God. I know my letters have taken up a good deal of space in our family paper lately, but I would like to have these few lines published when you think best.

Your sister in hope of eternal life,
ATTIE A. CURTIS.

BLANCHESTER, Ohio, Jan. 17, 1891.

BRETHREN BEEBE:—I received from brother Ashurst, of Missouri, this morning a letter, wishing to know that if in my communication in the SIGNS of January 7th I designed to charge the late Elder T. P. Dudley with unsoundness in his celebrated circular on the "Christian Warfare." I am aware that I have ever been a poor, blundering creature, and have not improved any in old age; and I hope the brethren will look with an eye of charity upon my many infirmities. Instead of replying privately to brother Ashurst, I thought to request you to insert in the SIGNS this my reply to his kind letter to me. I consider the late Elder T. P. Dudley to have been one of the best, most able and sound ministers of his day. It may be that others have misunderstood me.

If you will do me the favor to insert this in your paper, it will satisfy all who are interested in this matter. I hope brother Ashurst will see this, and be satisfied that I am the same persecuted "heretic" I was when he heard me preach with our esteemed brother Dudley of Kentucky.

Yours in hope of a better time to come, when this mortal shall have put on immortality.

DEAR BRETHREN IN THE LORD:—The time has come for me to renew my subscription for the SIGNS OF THE TIMES for the year 1891. I want you to send the dear old SIGNS to me, for I cannot well do without it, as it contains so much to read. I will send the money in a week or two. I want you to tell that good brother that I thank him a thousand times for sending me the paper last year; for it contains all the preaching I get in these days, and I would feel lost without it, away here in Texas. May the Lord sustain you in all your worthy undertakings, is the wish of your sister in christian bonds,

DEATH IN THE LAW.

"FOR I was alive without the law once; but when the commandment came, sin revived, and I died."—Rom. vii. 9.

In compliance with the request of our aged brother James McIntyre, of Newman Ill., in his letter which was published in the second number of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES for this year, the following thoughts in connection with the above text are submitted for the consideration of those who love the truth of the doctrine of God our Savior. It is not wonderful that his learned friend never was ready to expound the text, since it directly condemns the foundation on which the whole theory of his profession is built. Evidently it shows that the faith of the gospel is not merely a modification of the demands of the law of Moses. And when this truth is declared there is no possibility of consistency in teaching that in any sense the disciples of Jesus are under the direction of that law. Neither the precepts written upon tables of stone, nor the ceremonial requirements of that law which was given by Moses to Israel, are enjoined upon the saints for their observance. Yet the preaching of the gospel of Christ is not detracting from the glory of God as revealed in the legal dispensation. It is rather the manifestation of the infinite holiness of the law, by whose light is the knowledge of sin. The righteousness of that law was never fulfilled by any works of sinful men; but in saving his people from their sins, Christ Jesus magnified the law by perfect obedience in letter and in spirit, and thus became the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believes. Without this complete satisfaction of its utmost requirement there could be no salvation for any sinner. Not only infinite justice, but every perfection which God claims to himself, forbids that sinners should be delivered from the condemnation and death inseparably consequent upon their transgression of the divine commandment. This fact was declared by our Lord himself in the strongest language which could be used. He said, "Think not that I am come to destroy the law or the prophets; I am not come to destroy, but to fulfill. For verily I say unto you, Till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled."—Matt. v. 17, 18. Not even the subjects of electing love are saved by the sacrifice of the holiness of the law of God whose curse was upon them.

Paul in our text states the experience of every saint who has been experimentally delivered from condemnation through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus. He does not refer simply to the fact of his being in possession of that natural vitality which is common to all the animal creation. Neither does he claim that in himself he had by nature any spiritual or eternal life while in the condition of which he speaks. If he had been alive by the quickening power of God at that time, neither the coming of the commandment nor any other power could have brought him under the dominion of death. Eternal life certainly can never die. In his natural condition he lived in obedience to the letter of that law of a carnal commandment which God gave to the children of Israel; and resting upon that outward righteousness, he was in that sense alive without the law. In its letter he had not violated any of its precepts; so that he could say, "If any other man thinketh that he hath whereof he might trust in the flesh, I more; circumcised the eighth day, of the stock of Israel, of the tribe of Benjamin, an Hebrew of the Hebrews; as touching the law, a Pharisee; concerning zeal, persecuting the church; touching the righteousness which is in the law, blameless."—Phil. iii. 4-6. In this confidence of self-righteousness, he was alive. But that life was only in the approval of his natural conscience as an obedient servant literally under the provisions of that first testament, "Which stood only in meats and drinks, and divers washings, and carnal ordinances, imposed on them until the time of reformation."—Heb. ix. 10. None of his fellow Israelites could bring any charge against him as a transgressor of that covenant under which that nation then lived and enjoyed the peculiar favor of God naturally. This is the same life that is enjoyed by all natural men in conscious observance of every known duty devolving upon them. It consisted in the specifications which he presents in the text quoted from Philipians. In this personal righteousness he then felt himself justified; and it was his life. Thus it was written in that law in which he trusted, "Ye shall do my judgments, and keep mine ordinances, to walk therein; I am the Lord your God. Ye shall therefore keep my statutes, and my judgments; which if a man do, he shall live in them. I am the Lord."—Lev. xviii. 4, 5.

When the law is referred to in the Scriptures, it is very important to observe the connection in which the word is used. Different laws are mentioned by the inspired writers; and if the distinction between them is overlooked the result will be that the reader will be involved in perplexing confusion. While the Sinai covenant was a ministration of death, it is not the transgression of its precepts by which death passed upon all men for that all have sinned. This is evident from the fact cited by Paul, that "Death reigned from Adam to Moses, even over them that had not sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression."—Rom. v. 14. Even after the law was given from Sinai, its application was restricted to the children of Israel; yet the dominion of death was universal over the Gentiles who were never under that law. Nor was there any promise that the obedience of those to whom that law was given, should release them from the power of death. Only temporal blessings were provided for the obedient Israelites, and only temporal punishment was inflicted upon their disobedience. They were already under the power of death when God gave that law to them. It could not release them from that condemnation. "For if there had been a law given which could have given life, verily righteousness should have been by the law; but the Scripture hath concluded all under sin, that the promise by the faith of Jesus Christ might be given to them that believe."—Gal. iii. 21, 22. All of the Mosaic dispensation was typical, from the fiery law which was written by the finger of God upon tables of stone to the most minute historical circumstance recorded by the pen of inspiration. So Paul sums together the sabbatic precept of the ten commandments with the ceremonial requirements of that law, and says of the whole system, that they "are a shadow of things to come; but the body is Christ."—Col. ii. 17. In his natural state Paul never was alive without the letter of that Mosaic law, for he was born under it, and by legal observance of its direction he was circumcised, and was therefore a debtor to do the whole law.—Gal. v. 3. In its literal observance he profited above many his equals in his own nation, being more exceedingly zealous of the traditions of his fathers. Moved by this zeal he persecuted the church to strange cities. His sincerity in the course he then pursued cannot be questioned. This was then his life, being the righteousness in which he confidently trusted. After the strictest sect of the Jews' religion he lived a Pharisee. It is recorded of this sect, that they trusted in themselves that they were righteous, and despised others—Luke xviii. 9. In this self confidence all natural men are alive without the law. They claim sufficient merit in themselves to entitle them to the favor of divine justice.

From the foregoing considerations it will be seen that the apostle in our text refers not to the letter of the law, but to that commandment at whose coming sin revived and he died. Unquestionably that commandment is indeed the eternal and holy law of God; but it is as far above the letter of any law which has ever been revealed to mortals as the heaven is above the earth. In the dim light of a taper the prisoner may fail to see the pollution of his cell; but when the full blaze of the meridian sunshine illuminates his abode he discovers unimagined filth in all its parts. So, when the light of the knowledge of the glory of God shines in the heart of a sinner he discovers that all his righteousness is filthy rags. He can no longer confide in such works of his own as had once been his pride and his life. Instead of trusting in his works of obedience to the letter of the law of God, he now sees the truth declared by David, "Behold, thou desirest truth in the inward parts."—Psa. li. 6. This vital principle of holiness is manifestly lacking in the merit in which he had trusted; and consequently he can no longer live upon the righteousness in which he had before rejoiced. Saul as a Pharisee was not merely confident of his own acceptance before God, but he was exceedingly mad against the saints, and persecuted them even unto strange cities. While engaged in this work he was arrested by the voice of Jesus. The entrance of that word gave light, in which was manifested the exceeding sinfulness of that very righteousness in which he was up to that moment alive. Then he could say truly, "I have seen an end of all perfection; but thy commandment is exceeding broad."—Psa. cxix. 96. Not all the labors of Gamaliel and the efforts of devoted teachers of the law of Moses had ever given him the slightest intimation of the perfect holiness of the commandment of God. When the commandment came in the voice of Jesus, it immediately resulted in death to all that confidence in his own works, in which Saul was alive once. He did not even have sufficient vitality left in himself to attempt an argument in defense of his conduct. Instantly he died.

He declares in our text what was the cause of his death at the coming of the commandment. It was that "sin revived." The holy commandment did not produce that sin. It was already in the whole being of the very religious Pharisee; but he did not know of its presence until the commandment came, and at that instant sin revived, and the conscious sinner died. He was in reality no more sinful when the commandment came than he was in his ignorance of the power of sin. As the workman's rule does not cause the deficiency which it exposes in the timber to which it is applied, so the commandment makes manifest the sin which was not seen until the light of that perfect law was applied to the conscience of the sinner. Then the sin which had been hidden and dead in the darkness of nature, revives and is revealed in all its vile and exceeding sinful enormity. At this exposure of his real character the life or confidence of the enlightened sinner is cut off, and he dies in being separated from that trust in his own works for righteousness. So Paul says, "Therefore by the deeds of the law there shall no flesh be justified in his (God's) sight; for by the law is the knowledge of sin."—Rom. iii. 20. When the infinite perfection of this holy commandment is shown to the conscious sinner he at one sees the justice of God in his condemnation, and therefore in utter despair he dies to all dependence upon his own ability to satisfy the exceeding broad requirements of divine justice. He then knows that he is already under the sentence of death, and can see no way in which the holiness of God can allow mercy to extend to the relief of one so justly condemned.

From what has been presented brother McIntyre will observe that we recognize a wide distinction between the letter of that law which was given to the nation of Israel, and the holy principle of infinite justice which is designated in our text as "the commandment," at whose coming sin revived, and Paul died. In the letter the law of God is the ministration of death; but in the spirit of holiness the life of the saints in Christ Jesus is revealed as "Christ in you, the hope of glory." There is no other righteousness by which the commandment is fulfilled in the saints, but the perfect holiness of God which is in Jesus. When the Spirit of truth shines in the heart of the sinner to the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ, in that light he sees himself, as he is in reality, a guilty and lost sinner. His outward conformity to the letter of the law of morality then appears as merely a mockery of the righteousness which is demanded by the holy commandment of divine justice. Thus the commandment which was ordained unto life, he finds to be unto death to him. Then he is prepared to rejoice in Christ Jesus as the end of the law for righteousness unto him. From the ministration of death, written and engraven in stones, he gladly turns to the ministration of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus. Being dead to the law by the body of Christ, he rejoices in the abundant grace of God, by which he is freely justified from all things from which he could not be justified by the law of Moses.

Realizing that we have not been able fully to present all that is contained in the text, we submit to our inquiring brother what is written, with the earnest desire that by the Spirit he may be led more clearly to know the truth than we could hope to be able to express it in the language given to finite mortals.

CIRCULAR LETTERS.

STATE ROAD, Del., Dec. 29, 1890.

BRETHREN BEEBE:—There has been enough commotion among religionists of late years to make it seemingly necessary to look up the old landmarks, and the footprints of those able and faithful gospel ministers whose labors and pastoral services we enjoyed years ago, but whose voices are heard among us no more. Their work followed them to bear witness of them; and they have left us as a legacy in their writings a record of their faith and practice. Out of the fiery ordeal of the general division, when men suffered the loss of all things else for the truth's sake, the ministry came forth sanctified, and like unto gold tried in the fire; and then did the churches have peace and rest.

I have before me a Circular Letter published by the Licking Association, of Kentucky, more than twenty-seven years ago, when they were all united, speaking the pure language of Israel, and enjoying unbroken fellowship with each other. I am particularly pleased with it, and so much so that I will inclose it to you, suggesting its publication in the SIGNS. I do not know who was the writer, but it matters not, so long as it comes to us indorsed by such men as Elders Dudley, Johnson and Theobald. I would like for those who have broken off from our correspondence, and denounced so many Old School Associations as Means Baptists, still claiming to be in perfect accord with the above named Elders, to read this letter, and see whether they are willing to accept it as sound and scriptural; and if they are I would say to them that I believe all Old School Baptists with whom I am acquainted and with whom we are in correspondence will heartily indorse it. Perchance some of those who then made up the Licking Association may see how far they have drifted away from the landmarks which their fathers had set.

E. RITTENHOUSE.

The Elders and brethren composing the Licking Association of Particular Baptists, now in session with their sister church at Mt. Carmel meeting-house, Clark Co., Ky., to the churches which they represent, and to the children of God scattered abroad, wish grace, mercy and peace.

DEARLY BELOVED BRETHREN AND SISTERS:—We have abundant reason to be grateful to our heavenly Father for his kind protection which has been manifested in the preservation of our lives, and in permitting us to meet once more upon the shores of time in an associate capacity.

As it has been our custom ever since our organization as an association to attach to our Minutes a short address upon some subject connected with our holy religion, it is therefore but reasonable that you should expect a continuation of this long established practice.

The gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ is replete with instruction and consolation to the children of God. It embraces so many sublime and heavenly considerations that we are sometimes at a loss to select any particular theme for special meditation or comment. Still, as it contains nothing uninteresting or unprofitable, we will endeavor to present for your contemplation a few thoughts on the subject of the unction of the Holy Spirit and its effects.

"But ye have an unction from the Holy One, and ye know all things." "But the anointing which ye have received of him abideth in you, and ye need not that any man teach you: but as the same anointing teacheth you of all things, and is truth, and is no lie, and even as it hath taught you, ye shall abide in him."—1 John ii. 20, 27. The only real knowledge which we can possess of the truth of God is from a vital, experimental, heartfelt acquaintance with it through the teaching of the Holy Ghost. Men, learned or unlearned, preacher or layman, may theorize and speculate, may think they see and understand, may reason and argue, preach, talk and write wisely and well upon this and that point of doctrine, or upon this and that portion of Scripture; but unless the sacred truth of God is made known to our hearts by a living faith, we have no true knowledge of it, as we have no saving interest in it. How appropriate are those words of the apostle, "And if any man think that he knoweth anything, he knoweth nothing yet as he ought to know."—1 Cor. viii. 2. To think that we know a thing, and to know that we know a thing, are two very different things. We must have done with thinking, and come to knowing; and this we never can do until the blessed Spirit seals the truth of God home upon our hearts and conscience. The Bible is plain enough. The plan of salvation is written on its sacred pages as with a ray of light; and every truth that is for our good or the Lord's glory is so traced in the inspired volume that he who runs may read. This the Lord himself declares: "All the words of my mouth are in righteousness; there is nothing froward or perverse in them. They are all plain to him that understandeth, and right to them that find knowledge."—Prov. viii. 8, 9. But before we can read to our soul's profit these words of truth and righteousness, the veil of unbelief must be taken off our heart, that we may see light in God's light. The truths of the gospel, if not broken up by a divine hand, lie upon many an understanding like clods upon a field, which they encumber, but do not fertilize; or, to use a more scriptural figure, as the seed scattered by the hand of the sower lies on the hard-beaten wayside until trodden into dust by the feet of the traveler, or devoured by the hungry fowl of the air. What good will the purest, cleanest, soundest doctrine, even if preached by an apostle, do us, unless there be a living principle of divine faith in our hearts, which mixes with the word, and so profits the soul? The want of this was the ruin of those ancient carnal Israelites, who ate of the manna and drank of the rock, but whose carcasses fell in the wilderness: "For unto us was the gospel preached, as well as unto them; but the word preached did not profit them, not being mixed with faith in them that heard it."—Heb. iv. 2. When we turn to the sixth chapter of the gospel of John we read with wonder and admiration, and at times with some feeling and savor; for we see grace and truth stamped upon every line of that sacred discourse, where the Lord speaks with such solemn weight and power about eating his flesh and drinking his blood. But what effect did this sacred sermon, the perfection of spiritual and experimental truth, to us so weighty and solemn that life and death seem to hang upon every word, what effect did these words of him who spake like as never man spake produce upon them that heard them drop from his gracious lips? Did it awaken, quicken or regenerate them? So far from that, the Lord not seeing good to apply it by his blessed Spirit to their hearts, it only stirred up their rebellion and unbelief. Their only reply to its heavenly language was, "How can this man give us his flesh to eat?" We see then that it is not truth, the purest and clearest, even when uttered by the Redeemer's own lips, that can save the soul, unless applied to the heart by the special power of God. This the Lord plainly showed by the parable of the sower, where the seed being the same, but the soil different: "That only which fell into good ground brought forth fruit, some an hundredfold, some sixtyfold, some thirtyfold." Thus, whoever be the sower, it is only when the seed of divine truth enters into the broken furrows of a good heart, made so by grace, that it takes that firm and deep root which enables it to grow and bear fruit to the praise and glory of God; but when the truth of God is made known to the heart by divine teaching and divine testimony, what a holy sweetness and heavenly savor are then tasted, felt and realized in it! When thus favored to sit down under the shadow of its beloved, and find his fruit sweet to its taste, the soul says, with Jeremiah, "Thy words were found, and I did eat them; and thy word was unto me the joy and rejoicing of mine heart."—Jer. xv. 16. The essential Deity and Sonship of our Lord Jesus, the sorrows and sufferings of his agonizing humanity in the days of his flesh, the unutterable glory of his divine person as Emmanuel, God with us, at the right hand of the Father, the efficacy of his atoning blood, the beauty of his all-spotless righteousness, the sweetness of his dying love, that passeth all knowledge, the fullness of grace that dwelleth in him as the covenant head of the church, the stability of the everlasting covenant, ordered in all things and sure, the sympathy and compassion of his tender heart; how can these blessed realities, in the experimental realization of which the life and power of godliness mainly consist, enter into us, or we enter into them, without the unction of the Holy Ghost? Let us, in a brief manner, take a retrospective view of the experience of grace of every heaven-born child. When the Holy Spirit writes his law in the heart (see Jeremiah xxxi. 33) the dead sinner awakens to a sense of his lost and ruined condition, he feels the exceeding sinfulness of sin, the guilt of sin presses heavily on his conscience, and the pollution of his sin confounds him! "For by the law is the knowledge of sin;" and he feels constrained to cry, "O Lord, I am oppressed; undertake for me." "Lord, save; I perish." "Lord, be merciful to me, a sinner." But he thinks that his prayer rises not above his head. He goes now to the law; but, alas! he flees for refuge where no refuge can be found. For the law is the ministration of death, and curses for every transgression, in thought as well as word and deed. His condemnation appears (to himself) to increase. He realizes now that "The law is spiritual; but I am carnal, sold under sin."—Rom. vii. 14. He goes to hear the ministers of the word; but although he may hear their preaching with approbation, they cannot extricate him from the chilling embrace of the body of sin and death. He reads the Scriptures of divine truth; but, though they contain the remedy, he needs the remedy applied to his heart. At last, when he was without strength, and has spent all that he had, and was nothing better, but grows rather worse (see Mark v. 25, 26), he receives the unction of the Holy One: "And because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying, Abba, Father."—Gal. iv. 6. "To comfort all that mourn; to appoint unto them that mourn in Zion, to give unto them beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning, the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness; that they might be called Trees of righteousness, The planting of the Lord, that he might be glorified."—Isa. lxi. 2, 3. The Holy Spirit gives him a knowledge of his relationship or standing in Christ. He enlightens the eyes of his understanding, and gives him the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ. Faith, a fruit of the Spirit, springs up, and he comprehends the full efficacy of the atonement, and believeth with his whole heart that the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin. Love, another fruit of the Spirit, is shed abroad in his heart, and he receives Jesus gladly as his Prophet, Priest and King, as the only name given under heaven among men whereby he must be saved. He rejoiceth now in Christ Jesus, having no confidence in the flesh. He breaks out in songs of praise, and his heart's desire is to glorify God in his body and spirit. He knows now all things needful for his salvation, and needeth not the teaching of his neighbor and brother about the knowledge of God, for his heavenly Father has taught him himself; and having heard and learned of the Father, he cometh to Christ.

All this is the effect of the unction from the Holy Spirit. It is therefore not only useless, but also dangerous, to make ourselves or others wise in the letter of truth, when the heart remains utterly destitute of its power; for such knowledge puffeth up, and we do well to take heed to the solemn warning of the apostle; "Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, and have not charity, I am become as sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal. And though I have the gift of prophecy, and understand all mysteries, and all knowledge; and though I have all faith, so that I could remove mountains, and have not charity, I am nothing."—1 Cor. xiii. 1, 2. If we have any internal evidence that we fear God, if any faith in his dear Son, if any sense of our sinfulness and ignorance, our earnest desire should be to be led unto the truth of God by God himself. "Open thou mine eyes, that I may behold wondrous things out of thy law." "Lead me in thy truth, and teach me;" "on thee do I wait all the day." "Give me understanding, and I shall live."—Psalm xxv. 5; cxix. 18, 144. Such and similar petitions should often arise from our hearts, and the word of promise encourages us to present those supplications before the throne of grace. "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him."—James i. 5. What can be more encouraging for the poor petitioner, waiting at Wisdom's door, than the words of our Lord himself? "Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you: for every one that asketh receiveth; and he that seeketh findeth; and to him that knocketh it shall be opened."—Matt. vii. 7, 8.

Dear brethren and sisters, before we close suffer a few words of exhortation. "Be ye followers of God, as dear children, and walk in love." Let that love be without dissimulation; not in word, nor in tongue, but in deed and in truth, and with a pure heart fervently. Be of one mind, and follow after the way of peace; and may the Lord direct you, and make you able for the performance of every good work. Let us keep our bodies in subjection, and not follow after the vanities of the world. Let us try to keep our garments unspotted, and our lamps trimmed. Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom, teaching one another, and admonishing one another in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing with grace in your hearts to the Lord.

Now unto him that is able to keep you from falling, and to present you faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy, to the only wise God our Savior, be glory and majesty, dominion and power, both now and forever. Amen.

BOOK NOTICES.

SPENCERVILLE, Ohio, Jan. 19, 1891.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—As some interest is manifested in the success of my proposed book on samples of "Every Day" thought, will you please give space for this information respecting it? Suggestion has been made to put some in paper covers at one dollar. I will expect no real profits, and hope to be able to supply it at that price, but it will depend upon the number published; and as it is strictly a subscription book, I must first know how many are wanted. Therefore let all who desire and feel able to get one please inform me at once; but send no money until I give notice in the SIGNS, when I will need all of it.

Inquiry has also been made as to my circumstances. I freely state that I own thirty-seven and one-half acres of land, am somewhat in debt, and dependent upon my labor for my family's support; therefore I am neither rich nor strictly poor. My ambition is to leave a special record of the Old School Baptists' appreciation of actual moral worth, together with a defense of the doctrine of the predestination of all things, and its harmony with moral principles and christian experience. I desire all Baptists especially to read it, as it includes a special correspondence on that doctrine, covering both sides of the issue, and is the only defense of the predestination of all things that I know of in book form; applying to all things every day, both in morality and religion, and designed to promote peace among the brotherhood. It has been my solace for twenty-seven years of professional life; and my twenty-one years of ministerial labors have been devoted to its defense, as one of the fundamental principles of my faith.

INQUIRIES AFTER TRUTH.

WARDSVILLE, Ont., Jan. 26, 1891.

GILBERT BEEBE'S SONS:—I would like very much for Elder S. H. Durand to give his views through the SIGNS OF THE TIMES on John i. 17. I heard the late Elder Thomas McColl, of Dunwich, Ont., preach from this text in John McBride's barn, in Kintyre, about forty-three years ago, and some of the remarks he made on that occasion were coming forcibly to my mind last summer, although I am attending churches of different denominations. Since boyhood I have never heard any one else give their views on that verse. I heard Elder Durand some years ago preach a very able sermon in Duart, Ont., and his views on this portion of Scripture might be profitable to more than one

INQUIRER AFTER TRUTH.

DISCONTINUED.

In accordance with the notice published in the last two numbers preceding this one, we have now discontinued those from our list that we received at one dollar whose time expired with the end of the year, and from whom we have not received orders to continue their paper. We have also discontinued those who are a year or more in arrears with their subscription. Experience teaches us, however, that many of these will wish to be replaced on the list; and that there may be no break in their numbers for this year, we will run a few hundred extra for the month of February, so that those who renew within that time can have the missing numbers sent them.

EXTRAORDINARY OFFER!

FROM now until further notice is given any one who is now a subscriber, and whose subscription is paid up, may send us new subscribers at one dollar a year; but no one, either new or old subscriber, can get the paper from this office for themselves at less than the regular rates. Any one who is not now a subscriber can have the benefit of the above terms by sending two dollars for their own subscription, and one dollar each for additional new subscribers.

Please make no mistake about the above terms. No one, either new or old subscriber, can send to this office and get the paper for themselves for less than the regular rates; but if any of our paid-up subscribers choose to sacrifice their commission and take the new subscriber for one dollar, that is their matter.

MARRIAGES.

ON January 22d, 1891, by Elder Wm. J. Purington, at the residence of the bride's uncle, in Hopewell, Mr. Jerome W. Morrell and Miss Sallie A. Seabold, both of Hopewell, N. J.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

DIED—At the residence of her brother-in-law, Mr. Chichester, near Warrenton, Va., Dec. 6th, 1890, Miss Maria A. Arrington, in the 36th year of her age.

Miss Arrington never made a public profession of religion by identifying herself with the visible church; but it was evident to her friends that during a long and tedious illness with consumption she was sustained by a well-grounded hope in the Savior of sinners. For more than a year she was confined to her bed, and much of the time was alone in her room, for her sister (sister Chichester) had the care of a numerous family of little children, and herself in very poor health; but no complaint nor murmuring was made by the sufferer, the presence of her Lord sustaining and soothing her in her hopeless struggle against the approach of the last enemy, which is death. As he came, thanks to the mighty grace of God, his sting was removed, and he was a welcome messenger instead of a dreaded enemy, so sure are the promises of God that he will never leave nor forsake his people.

Sister Chichester is the only surviving near relative of the deceased. May God comfort her, as in poor health, and in manifold temptations and trials, she looks to him for help.

J. N. BADGER.
ALDIE, Va., Dec. 29, 1890.

Mrs. Susan Jenkins, wife of Winburn Jenkins, died at the residence of her husband, in Preble Co., Ohio, August 28th, 1890, of dropsy of the heart, aged 69 years, 9 months and 1 day.

She came from Brown Co., Ind., in 1849, and was married to Winburn Jenkins June 15th, 1852. She was the mother of seven children, four of whom survive her. She with her husband united with the Primitive Baptist Church at Sugar Grove, Ind., in 1873, and was baptized by Elder James Martindale, of Hagarstown, Ind., remaining a consistent and faithful member until death. She leaves many loving friends to mourn their loss; but we hope that our loss is her eternal gain. She was sick from January 1st until August 28th. She bore her affliction with much patience, saying, "Let the Lord have his time. Knowing that I must die, I am resigned to go, and willing to die; for death is gain to those who have faith in Christ."

"Weep not, my friends; my friends, weep not for me;
All is well, all is well.
My sins are pardoned; pardoned I am freely;
All is well, all is well.

"Farewell, my friends; adieu, adieu;
I can no longer stay with you;
My glittering crown appears in view;
All is well, all is well."

SALLIE STEWART.

DIED—At his residence in Kingwood Township, Hunterdon Co., N. J., Oct. 25th, 1890, brother Abram Kise, in the 73d year of his age.

Brother Kise was baptized in the fellowship of the Old School Baptist Church at Kingwood, March 20th, 1870, and was for more than twenty years a consistent member of the church. He leaves a widow and three sons to mourn their loss, with a large circle of neighbors and acquaintances, with whom he had been associated for many years. Although the church by his death sustains the loss of one of her members, we feel assured that our loss is his eternal gain.

Elder Wm. J. Purington, of Hopewell, N. J., preached a discourse on the funeral occasion.

CYRUS RISLER.
LOCKTOWN, N. J.

PLEASE publish the death of our cousin, Sarah A. Michener, who died April 28th, 1890, in her 64th year.

The greater part of her life was spent in caring for her invalid mother, and after her death it seemed that her work was done, and she took very little interest in the things of this world. She was not a professor, but I feel confident that she was a firm believer in the doctrine of salvation by grace. She was a most dutiful and affectionate daughter, and a kind and loving sister. Her brother is left very lonely indeed. May the Lord, if it is his holy will, pour the oil and wine of consolation into his wounded heart, and may he take comfort in the thought that she is at rest.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date, this date denotes the time at which your subscription expires, and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

THE EVERLASTING TASK
FOR ARMINIANS.

POETRY.

NIGHT THOUGHTS.

THE time draws nearer every day
When I shall pass from earth away,
And far above this gloomy place
Behold my precious Savior's face.

I shall behold him as he is,
In that blest clime of perfect bliss,
No more to doubt, no more to fear,
Be done with all these sorrows here.

O yes! By faith methinks I see
A place in heaven prepared for me,
Where I shall meet the blood-washed throng,
And sing with them redemption's song.

All praise to him who gives such hope;
It lifts my drooping spirits up,
Makes me to fly on eagles' wings
Above all sublunary things.

Thrice blessed hope, be ever mine!
Within this bosom ever shine!
Till I shall bid farewell to time,
And dwell in that fair, heavenly clime.

SARAH WYMAN.

FAIRFIELD, Michigan.

I AM OLD AND BLIND.

I AM old and blind.
Men point at me as smitten by God's frown,

Afflicted and deserted by my kind;
Yet I am not cast down.

I am weak, yet strong.
I murmur not that I no longer see;
Poor, old and helpless, I the more belong,
Father supreme, to thee.

O merciful One!
When men are farthest, then thou art
most near;
When friends pass by, my weaknesses to shun,
Thy chariot I hear.

Thy glorious face
Is leaning toward me, and its holy light
Shines in upon my lonely dwelling place,
And there is no more night.

On my bended knee
I recognize thy purpose clearly shown;
My vision thou hast dimmed, that I may see
Thyself—thyself alone.

I have naught to fear;
This darkness is the shadow of thy wing.

Beneath it I am almost sacred; here
Can come no evil thing.

O! I seem to stand,
Trembling, where foot of mortal ne'er hath been,
Wrapped in the radiance from thy sinless hand,
Which eye hath never seen.

It is nothing now,
When heaven is op'ning on my sightless eyes,

When airs of paradise refresh my brow,
That earth in darkness lies.

In a purer clime
My being fills with rapture; waves of thought

Roll in upon my spirit; strains sublime
Break over me unsought.

Give me now my lyre.
I feel the stirrings of a gift divine;
Within my bosom glows unearthly fire,
Lit by no skill of mire.

CORRESPONDENCE.

FOREKNOWLEDGE.

"AND we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose. For whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son, that he might be the first-born among many brethren. Moreover, whom he did predestinate, them he also called; and whom he called, them he also justified; and whom he justified, them he also glorified."—Rom. viii. 28-30.

We will now particularly notice some of the predictions recorded in the Old Testament concerning the birth, humiliation, sufferings, death and resurrection of our Lord Jesus Christ, and show from the New Testament their exact fulfillment. The fifty-third chapter of Isaiah contains wonderful declarations concerning the advent of the Messiah; also the fourteenth Psalm. Some declarations from other places in prophecy will be adduced, which set forth with unerring certainty the prescience of God, or the divine foreknowledge of Jehovah. "And I said unto them, If ye think good, give me my price; and if not, forbear. So they weighed for my price thirty pieces of silver. And the Lord said unto me, Cast it into the potter; a goodly price that I was prized at of them. And I took the thirty pieces of silver, and cast them to the potter in the house of the Lord." "Awake, O sword, against my shepherd, and against the man that is my fellow, saith the Lord of hosts: smite the shepherd, and the sheep shall be scattered, and I will turn mine hand upon the little ones." "The Lord God hath given me the tongue of the learned, that I should know how to speak a word in season to him that is weary. He wakeneth morning by morning; he wakeneth mine ear to hear as the learned. The Lord God hath opened mine ear, and I was not rebellious, neither turned away back. I gave my back to the smiters, and my cheeks to them that plucked off the hair. I hid not my face from shame and spitting. For the Lord God will help me; therefore have I set my face like a flint, and I know that I shall not be ashamed." A great amount more of Scripture might be quoted having reference to the same glorious subject, but no more will now be brought forward, only as it may be necessary in connection with showing the fulfillment as recorded in the New Testament.

Although the Jews read the prophecies concerning the coming of Christ, the humiliation connected with his birth was such that they knew him not, as a nation, any more than the world of mankind in their carnal state to-day know the humiliating doctrine of the cross; but had he appeared surrounded by worldly pomp and splendor, how readily would they have admitted, "This is the King of the Jews." But that holy child Jesus would be found "wrapped in swaddling clothes, lying in a manger;" therefore the haughty Jew disdained and ignored him; but Simeon knew him; for it had been "revealed unto him by the Holy Ghost that he should not see death before he had seen the Lord's Christ. And he came by the Spirit [not simply permitted to come, but directed by the unerring wisdom of God] into the temple; and when the parents brought in the child Jesus, to do for him after the custom of the law, then took he him up in his arms, and blessed God, and said, Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, according to thy word; for mine eyes have seen thy salvation, which thou hast prepared before the face of all people; a light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of thy people Israel." "When Jesus came into the coasts of Caesarea Philippi, he asked his disciples, Whom do men say that I, the Son of man, am? And they said, Some say that thou art John the Baptist; some, Elias; and others, Jeremias, or one of the prophets. He saith unto them, But whom say ye that I am? And Simeon Peter answered and said, Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God. And Jesus answered and said unto him, Blessed art thou, Simon Bar-Jona; for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven." The Scriptures show us that Simeon and Peter knew Christ Jesus by revelation; and he and his truth are known no other way at the present time. When Jesus began "to shew unto his disciples how that he must go unto Jerusalem, and suffer many things of the elders and chief priests and scribes, and be killed, and be raised again the third day, then Peter took him, and began to rebuke him, saying, Be it far from thee, Lord; this shall not be unto thee. But he turned and said unto Peter, Get thee behind me, Satan; thou art an offense unto me; for thou savourest not the things that be of God, but those that be of men." Peter was so completely under Satan's control that he dared to rebuke the Son of God; but Jesus said unto him, "Get thee behind me, Satan;" for he was contradicting, or setting himself up in opposition to the will and purpose of God; and at the present time, whenever a man or men can have that audacity to say that the sentiment of "absolute predestination" of all things is a "damnable doctrine," such one or ones are in the same condition that Peter was; and nothing but almighty power can give them to see and know their captivity, and release them from the bondage of the arch-enemy. And upon another occasion "Peter said unto him, Though all men shall be offended because of thee, yet will I never be offended. Jesus said unto him, Verily I say unto thee, that this night, before the cock crow, thou shalt deny me thrice." Read the twenty-sixth chapter of Matthew entire; for the fixed purpose is therein declared in no uncertain language; therefore it was all foreknown, because it was absolutely predestinated. "Mr. Carnal Reason," did not Peter say what he would not do? Did not Jesus tell him what he should do? Which of the declarations was fulfilled? What Jesus said was exactly accomplished, and all the purposes of Jehovah will certainly be executed, even down to the most minute thing; for said Jesus, "Are not two sparrows sold for a farthing? and one of them shall not fall on the ground without your Father. But the very hairs of your head are all numbered. Fear ye not therefore; ye are of more value than many sparrows." Said Jesus to Peter, "Simon, Simon, behold, Satan hath desired to have you, that he may sift you as wheat; but I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not; and when thou art converted, strengthen thy brethren." After the crucifixion, resurrection and glorification of Jesus Christ, and the gospel day had fully come, how did converted Peter talk? Did he say this or that concerning his Lord and Master need not come to pass? No; but he declared with a holy boldness, "Him, being delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God, ye have taken, and by wicked hands have crucified and slain; whom God hath raised up, having loosed the pains of death; because it was not possible that he should be holden of it." Reader, is not "determinate counsel and foreknowledge" so united by the inspired penman that the one is just as broad as the other?

The verb from which the adjective determinates comes is proorizo, to mark out beforehand; having exactly the same meaning as to decree, foreordain, or predestinate. Careful reader, you will notice that it is not council, the assembly to give the advice, but counsel, the determination already fixed. We will notice Peter's declarations a little further on this awfully sublime and glorious subject; for he says, "The kings of the earth stood up, and the rulers were gathered together against the Lord and against his Christ. For of a truth, against thy holy child Jesus, whom thou hast anointed, both Herod and Pontius Pilate, with the Gentiles and the people of Israel, were gathered together, for to do whatsoever thy hand and thy counsel determined before to be done."

Now, if the Lord will, some wonderful things concerning the Redeemer of Israel shall be more particularly dwelt upon. When Herod considered "himself mocked of the wise men," he "was exceeding wroth, and sent forth and slew all the children that were in Bethlehem, and in all the coasts thereof, from two years old and under, according to the time which he had diligently inquired of the wise men. Then [at the appointed time] was fulfilled that which was spoken by Jeremy the prophet, saying, In Rama was there a voice heard, lamentation, and weeping, and great mourning; Rachel [which name signifies sheep] weeping for her children, and would not be comforted, because they are not." In the wisdom and purpose of our God everything was ordered to bring that to pass exactly at the time; and not one child more nor one less was slain than what God had appointed; for "Known unto God are all his works from the beginning of the world." The agony of the Son of God in the garden of Gethsemane is recorded by the four evangelists (as they are termed by men) in language which shows the exact fulfillment of what he inspired the prophet to record; for he says, "I have trodden the winepress alone, and of the people there was none with me. * * * And I looked, and there was none to help; and I wondered that there was none to uphold; therefore mine own arm brought salvation unto me, and my fury it upheld me." The dear Lamb of God said to the disciples, "My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death. Tarry ye here, and watch with me. And he went a little farther, and fell on his face, and prayed, saying, O my Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me! Nevertheless, not as I will, but as thou wilt." In Luke it is recorded, "And he was withdrawn from them about a stone's cast, and kneeled down and prayed, saying, Father, if thou be willing, remove this cup from me: nevertheless, not my will, but thine be done. And there appeared an angel unto him from heaven, strengthening him. And being in an agony, he prayed more earnestly; and his sweat was as it were great drops of blood falling down to the ground." The description of the suffering Jesus in the garden of Gethsemane, as recorded by Matthew, Mark, Luke and John, is such that all who believe the record and love that Jesus, when the same is applied by the Holy Ghost unto them, as to cause them individually to say, O my soul, be still and gaze, wonder and adore! for the very word agony is from agonia, and signifies a contest; and it is recorded in no other place in the Scriptures. O what a contest! Infinite justice and boundless wisdom were so joined that justice must receive plenary satisfaction, and through that very suffering the boundless mercy of God would be made manifest to sinners of Adam's fallen race. When having a faith's view of the suffering Redeemer there will be in the mind of the child no feeling to talk about permissive decrees, or that our God foreknew what he had not determined eternally; for they can see some of the glory in the prophetic declaration, "I will ransom them from the power of the grave; I will redeem them from death. O death, I will be thy plagues; O grave, I will be thy destruction; repentance shall be hid from mine eyes." The agony of the dear Son of God in the garden and his prayer did not cause the eternal "I am that I am" to repent; for the beloved Son of his was the kinsman Redeemer, and the sins of his people were upon him; for Peter says, "Who his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree, that we, being dead to sins, should live unto righteousness; by whose stripes ye were healed." Who that loves and fears God desires to interpolate into Peter's language the words, "the punishment of" our sins? That he bore the punishment of the sins of his elect is true; but he bore their sins; consequently as they were upon him the punishment came in the terrible contest to which reference has already been made; and such was the foreknowledge of our God that not one sin more nor one less than the sins of all his elect were upon him. When the statement is made that the sufferings were sufficient to save all the world of mankind if they would only believe in him, or if only one sinner is saved it required the same suffering, there is not a solitary passage of Scripture can be adduced, when used in its proper connection, to sustain such a carnal theory. What! the eternal, self-existent God give his darling Son to suffer and die upon frail contingency! How God-dishonoring such a sentiment is; for that represents the atonement in such a manner that it is not an atonement, but merely an example of obedience and patience, placing the work of Jesus Christ just in the same position that the cipher in mathematics is, no value of itself, only occupying a place, and the prefixing of the initial figure gives it value. So creature merit, according to that theory, gives worth to the atonement. But such reasoning is not only infidelity—it is blasphemy. In prophecy it reads, "Surely he hath borne our griefs and carried our sorrows; yet we did esteem him stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted. But he was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities, the chastisement of our peace was upon him, and with his stripes we are healed." As has already been stated in this communication, the entire chapter from which this last quotation is made shows to every real believer that it was according to God's eternal purpose that his beloved Son should suffer exactly what he did. It also teaches the glorious doctrine of eternal, personal, unconditional election, and that not one for whom Christ died can finally perish.

The signal that the traitor Judas should give the multitude was a kiss. "Now he that betrayed him gave them a sign, saying, Whomsoever I shall kiss, that same is he: hold him fast [See what is said about a traitor's kiss in 2 Samuel xx. 9, 10]. And forthwith he came to Jesus, and said, Hail, Master; and kissed him. And Jesus said unto him, Friend, wherefore art thou come? Then came they and laid hands on Jesus, and took him. And, behold, one of them [Peter was the man, for so declared the apostle John] which were with Jesus stretched out his hand, and drew his sword, and struck a servant of the high priest's, and smote off his ear. Then said Jesus unto him, Put up again thy sword into his place; for all they that take the sword shall perish with the sword. Thinkest thou that I cannot now pray to my Father, and he shall presently give me more than twelve legions of angels?" At that time a Roman legion was about five thousand, which would make the number of angels more than sixty thousand which could have been given had it been God's purpose to deliver his beloved Son from the power of that multitude. But Jesus continued, and said, "But how then shall the Scriptures be fulfilled, that thus it must be?" Of what awful moment to the meek, humble and God-fearing person is the declaration, "Thus it must be;" for the word thus, from the words houto and houtos, signifies that everything is to be in perfect harmony, down to what men might call trifling things; and the dear Lamb of God referred directly to the Scriptures, which unequivocally shows that everything connected with the betrayal of Jesus was absolutely determined in God's foreordination, therefore certainly foreknown; no chance work, nothing to savor of the carnal theory of "permissive decrees," but according to the will, purpose and power of Jehovah. But all this was done, that the Scriptures of the prophets might be fulfilled. Then all the disciples foresook him and fled."—See Zech. xiii. 7. There it says, "And the sheep shall be scattered."

And was it not so? Certainly it was; for the prophecy could not fail. At the time the dear Redeemer was in the hands of those ungodly wretches, the high priest said, "What think ye? They answered and said, He is guilty of death. Then did they spit in his face, and buffeted him; and others smote him with the palms of their hands, saying, Prophecy unto us, thou Christ. Who is he that smote thee?" "And they clothed him with purple, and platted a crown of thorns, and put it about his head, and began to salute him, Hail, king of the Jews." At the time the Lamb of God was enduring these things at the hands of the wicked, whom God had before appointed to do those very things, Peter did what the Lord said he should, denied him thrice. After the cock crew, "Peter remembered the word of Jesus, which said unto him, Before the cock crow, thou shalt deny me thrice. And he went out, and wept bitterly." Reader, if you love God, and truly believe his written word, compare the quotations made concerning what Jesus endured at the hands of those wicked wretches, with what he had said by the prophet, in Isaiah l. 4-7, and see the exact fulfillment; and may you be enabled to clearly see that what the eternal God foreknew, he had foreordained.

It is declared that "the same day Pilate and Herod were made friends together; for before they were at enmity between themselves." And to-day warring factions of carnal religionists can make friends with one another to persecute the true, tried and faithful followers of the Lord Jesus Christ, who will not countenance any of their religious abomination, as is recorded by the inspired psalmist concerning them in his day, "For, lo, thine enemies make a tumult; and they that hate thee have lifted up the head. They have taken crafty counsel against thy people, and consulted against thy hid-ones. They have said, Come, and let us cut them off from being a nation, that the name of Israel may be no more in remembrance." Gladly would carnal teachers unite into one solid phalanx (they seem to be trying hard to unite state and church), if by so doing they could cut off the true church, so that there would not be a real Predestinarian Baptist left on the earth. But, trembling one, rejoice, if God give you strength and grace thus to do, that the Lord God omnipotent reigns. And Pilate "went again into the judgment hall, and saith unto Jesus, Whence art thou? But Jesus gave him no answer. Then saith Pilate unto him, speakest thou not unto me? Knowest thou not that I have power to crucify thee, and power to release thee?" Can any one read Pilate's words and entertain a doubt but that Pilate spoke honestly, so far as he was concerned? How often carnal men talk about what power they have to do this or that—tell us they are free, moral agents; which is such a contradiction of terms that it needs no explanation to any thinking mind. "Jesus answered, Thou couldst have no power (at all) against me, except it were given thee from above; therefore he that delivered me unto thee hath the greater sin." In the thirty-ninth Psalm the record is, "I said, I will take heed to my ways, that I sin not with my tongue: I will keep my mouth with a bridle while the wicked is before me. I was dumb with silence; I held my peace, (even) from good; and my sorrow was stirred. My heart was hot within me: while I was musing the fire burned. Then spake I with my tongue."

DEAR BROTHERS BEEBE:—I arrived at my home safely on the 19th inst., finding my family in the enjoyment of their usual good health, for which, and all the tender mercies of our covenant-keeping God, I desire to be thankful; but O! my poor, deceitful, ungrateful heart. I know it is deceitful above all things, and that I cannot know all its depths of depravity and deceit. Still I trust that the Lord has put in me a desire to honor and glorify his all-glorious name, and to render to him sacrifice of thanksgiving and praise. Truly may we with the psalmist inquire, "What shall I render unto the Lord for all his benefits toward me?" If David, with all the wealth of Israel at his command, a man also of God's choice to reign over Israel, after God's own heart, and a type of Christ, could not find an adequate offering, how can a poor, ignorant sinner of the Gentiles, who is indeed "poor and needy," find aught that is worthy to lay in the balances in payment for God's mercies? God himself has put the seal of condemnation upon our very best offerings, and though we fetch the cattle upon a thousand hills it would not be accepted; for the time is come when God declares that he has no pleasure in any of the sacrifices we can render with our hands. He now demands an offering of thanksgiving, out of a broken and a contrite heart. So David answers his question, "I will take the cup of salvation, and call upon the name of the Lord: I will pay my vows unto the Lord now, in the presence of all his people."

I was absent from home seventeen days, during which time I visited and tried to preach to the brethren in Alexandria, Va., Washington, D. C., Rock Springs, Philadelphia, to a little company that met at my brother-in-law's (brother F. S. Terry), near Ashbourne, Pa., Hopewell and South River, N. J., Ebenezer, in the city of New York, and Middletown & Wallkill, in Middletown, N. Y. The whole visit was one of uninterrupted sweetness and comfort to me, during which I hope I did really enjoy the presence of the Lord, in striking contrast with my experience of many months past, when I wandered in the darkness, mourning my absent Lord, anxiously inquiring, "Will he return no more?" and feeling that he had forsaken me forever; but so has been my pilgrimage thus far on my journey. I have realized, I think, by sad experience what the psalmist meant when he said, "Thou makest darkness, and it is night, wherein all the beasts of the forest do creep forth." For, truly, when he withdraws his glorious, clear-shining light from us, it is darkness itself, thick darkness, and all the hateful passions of our untamed and unsubdued carnal nature manifest themselves, and we are in great fear lest we be devoured by them. We mourn and inquire, "Why is it thus?" thinking that the evils of our nature, the corruptions of our flesh, have caused the light to be withdrawn. Do the beasts of the forest, who creep forth in the darkness, make the darkness? O no. They take advantage of the darkness to show themselves and prowl about, seeking their prey; but God makes the darkness. So it is with us. But as with the wild beasts, who slink away and hide themselves at the coming of day, so we find that when the Sun of righteousness arises on us with healing in his wings there is a forgetfulness of self; and in the joy of his presence we forget the anxiety and distress of the night, only remembering it as a dream that is past.

I would mention also my visit to brother George Jenkins, of the Rock Springs Church, Lancaster Co., Pa., who has been confined to his house and mostly to his bed almost continuously for nearly a year with a distressing and painful disease, which first appeared in his feet, by which he has been rendered helpless and a constant sufferer. It is distressing to witness his sufferings, and to feel that we can do nothing that will afford more than momentary relief; but it is also comforting to be with him and witness the patience and uncomplaining fortitude with which his sufferings are borne. Though his bodily powers have failed, his spiritual strength is renewed. "The inner man is renewed day by day." His case is a clear presentation of the power of divine grace to overcome all our weakness, and make us to exhibit the power of God. It is a forcible example of the truth of religion; as it is evident to all who witness the sufferings of the dear old saint, and the uncomplaining patience and fortitude with which he bears his sufferings, that it is not the stoicism of the fatalist, who simply bows to the inevitable, but the faith and patience of one taught of the Lord, strengthened by the assurance that "our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory; while we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen," and counting the sufferings of this present time "not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us."

I felt strengthened and comforted by my interview with the dear old brother. May the Lord sustain him under all his afflictions, and also the dear children who so devotedly and uncomplainingly minister to his wants.

Since my article on the "Absolute Predestination of all Things" appeared in the SIGNS of December 17th, 1890, I have received a great many letters from all sections of this country and from Canada, generally most heartily approving and indorsing the article. I take this opportunity to publicly acknowledge the receipt of their letters, and to thank them for the unmerited kindness they have shown me; but I will have to ask them to excuse me if they fail to get answers from me. I will, however, I think, in time answer them all. I am made to rejoice that there are yet a few who are not ashamed of the precious doctrine of God's absolute government over all things in the universe.

I feel to thank the Lord that he enabled brother R. F. Haynes, of Oak Hill, Illinois, to so clearly define the difference between the "absolute predestination of all things" and "fatalism." It was very opportune, as I had just received a letter asking me to tell the difference; and as I had never had any acquaintance with "fatalism," not even knowing that there was ever such a doctrine held by any class of men, I could not have told him the difference. I see now that there is all the difference in the world, and that the two are no more alike than light and darkness, "fatalism" being only the result of carnal reason, seeking to account for what reason cannot account for, and ignorantly concluding that as we cannot prevent we must submit to the inevitable; but faith, viewing the absolute control and wise direction by the all-wise God of all events, patiently and quietly waits the unfolding of his purposes, knowing that "His purposes will ripen fast,

Unfolding every hour;
The bud may have a bitter taste,
But sweet will be the flower."

It seems to me strange that any one claiming to be an Old School Baptist, who is at all acquainted with the history of the denomination for the past sixty years, should now make war upon what has during all that time been accepted as a fundamental principle of Old School Baptist faith. There are some who see no reason why we should be zealous to be considered "Predestinarian" Baptists. I think brother Haynes, in the SIGNS of January 14th, has given the best of reasons therefor. I will add that I should rejoice to see that prefix to the name of every Old Baptist church and association in the country; for whenever I do see it I am in no doubt as to the true character of the people who bear the name. The name "Old School Baptists" was given by their enemies to those who contended for the truth, as a term of reproach, sixty years ago, and was accepted by our people. After forty years those who gave us the name tried to claim that they were the "Old School," and we are "Hard-shell." Well, I reckon if we grant them this right it would not be many years until they would try to take the name of "Hard-shell" too. No, we will hold on to the name of "Old School," with all that it implies—election, predestination, and all the rest; and those who cannot walk with us will simply have to seek company that suits them better.

One brother thinks that my article was not written in "the spirit that should characterize the followers of the meek and lowly Jesus;" and immediately launches out into a tirade against the general conduct of the SIGNS, declaring that if he lived till the next day he should order his paper discontinued. I am sorry that anything I write for the paper should cause a loss of subscribers; but when the SIGNS fails to contend for the truth in order to get or retain patronage, I fear it will find many of its most substantial patrons forsaking it, "as rats leave a sinking ship." The SIGNS has consistently and earnestly contended for these things; and it can be truly said of its publishers that they have never refused to publish an article for fear of the effect it might have on their subscription list, nor publish what they did not approve for the sake of securing subscribers, but have faithfully wielded "The sword of the Lord and of Gideon," to the comfort and joy of many poor, tried and afflicted saints. I am afraid that my correspondent alluded to above would say that Jesus did not exhibit a very meek and lowly spirit when he denounced the Pharisees and Scribes for their hypocrisy.

Another writes his regrets for the publication of the article, saying it will do harm; that he has loved me, and now realizes a great deal of solicitude on my account. I will only say that the publication of truth can never do harm. It may, and undoubtedly will, render the one advocating it unpopular in the world, and bring reproach and contempt upon him; but it can do no harm to the cause of truth nor in the church. It may have the beneficial effect of manifesting who are true believers and who are impostors. I maintain that the Scriptures clearly present the doctrine; nor has any one the right to set himself up in judgment of us upon his own peculiar interpretation of our declaration. I am sure it ought to be sufficient when we bring Scripture declarations to show our meaning; and it should be sufficient for any unprejudiced mind who is not seeking occasion to make his brother an offender. I utterly fail to see how God is dishonored by ascribing to him all the honor and glory and power. If I am wrong in my interpretation of Scripture, I am honestly so, and just as sincerely desire to be right as he who accuses me of dishonoring God, of being a fatalist, &c.; but I have never yet read or heard an argument deduced from the Scriptures to disprove the doctrine. About all the argument the opponents of the doctrine advance is that the Scripture we offer to prove our position "doesn't mean that." Well, in the name of all that is good and true, what does it mean? Upon this they are discreetly silent.

I am sorry to lose the love and esteem of any of those whom I have esteemed as brethren, but all I can say in reply is that I am what I have always been. I have not pretended to believe other than what I now believe. I think I can say in truth that I have ever believed this doctrine from the time I received a hope of salvation, and when I joined the Old Baptists I heartily subscribed to it; but I have never believed the interpretation put on it by the enemies of truth.

I will now close my scribble and submit it to your better judgment, whether to publish or not; and with it to greet in love and fellowship all who love the truth, but that I cannot yield any point of truth for the sake of anybody's good will.

I am, as ever, yours in the hope of salvation by virtue of the predestinating purpose of the God of predestination and purpose,

A. B. FRANCIS.

NEW HOLLAND, Ohio, Jan. 19, 1891.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—I am all alone in my room. It is half-past nine o'clock, and the little family have sought refreshing sleep in their rooms up stairs. All day to-day there has been a constant dropping in of callers, and not until half-past eight o'clock to-night did the droppings in cease, and we were left to meditate upon the scenes that transpired during the day, and alas! to lament the little that has been said and thought about Jesus during the entire day. With tender, regretful emotions do I call to mind other and better days in the dear little home where my dear father and I lived in close retirement, when

"Jesus all the day long Was my joy and my song;"

and when, after the fall of the curtain of night, I would listen to my father's dear voice while supplicating at the great throne; and I often felt, as did Jacob, "This is none other but the house of God, and this is the gate of heaven." How lonely and sad seems my mind to-night, because Jesus, that dearest of friends, the blessed, heavenly guest, has not come in at the closed door of my heart, and warmed the cold and weary soul by his dear presence and the sweet manifestations of his love. But amid the storms and dark waves that so tossed with fierce tempest the frail ship of my weary life, is not Jesus near? Though I cannot see him, as I stretch forth my own helpless hands, with arms too weak and short to save, will he not walk to me on the water? Will not his dear, everlasting arms catch me and hold me within their restful embrace when I cry, Lord, save, or I perish? As oft as I look up from my paper, through the lattice of my open window the silent rays of the moon beam upon me. As the poet sings,

"The moon that nightly rules the sky." But from whence does it receive its useful light? From the sun, we are told; just as the church of God, which Solomon sings of, is "fair as the moon," and derives its light from the Sun of righteousness, the immaculate Son of God. As the moon which now shines so beautifully over all the darkened earth, with its pale, subdued light, shining upon the land and sea, rivers and mountains, making the whole earth a thing of beauty, though wrapped in its mantle of night, has no power, no warmth, no beauty nor light, only as it receives it from the natural sun, so in like manner is the church, the body of Christ, powerless and useless, an absolute nothing, without the King of holiness. O the depth and breadth, the great wonders which are presented to our limited finite perception when we enter his unexplorable channel of infinity. So wide, so deep, so great is its mysteries, even Paul, who was exalted to the third heaven, and saw things not lawful for a man to utter, was made to exclaim, "O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! How unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out!" To-night as I look from my window out upon the bright, calm, moonlit scene, the myriads of stars studding the blue vault of the heavens, I wonder how any thinking, rational being could look upon a like picture and not have their thoughts uplifted to the great Being who formed all these wonders and beauties. Could the atheist really believe in his heart that such things are the result of nature? Even those who claim so much for evolution must own there is no effect without a cause; and if these wonderful planets owe their origin to mere natural forces, what is the origin of that power and force? Must there not be some wonderful creative power back of all that? Besides, how could they believe that this wonderful earth, with all its appurtenances, is kept in proper limits, made to keep up its regular revolving upon its axis, if no infinite wisdom and unseen power did not rule all things? To-night, while most of the inhabitants of this hemisphere are wrapped in slumber, he who neither slumbers nor sleeps throws his everlasting arms of protection over the good and the bad, the saint and the sinner, keeps the billows of the mighty ocean within bounds, controls the huge monsters of the deep with the same stroke with which he keeps the tiny brooklet in its course, cares for the minnows, feeds the ravens, cares for the tiny sparrows, not one of which flaps its wings, and soars on high, or falls to the ground without him.

How sweet it is to put one's trust in such a wise and holy Being, who has all power in heaven and in earth. Very truly does the holy word say, "They that trust in the Lord shall be as Mount Zion, which cannot be removed." Firmer, stronger, more immovable than the strongest, most lofty mountain is the everlasting Rock of our salvation. "Though the earth be removed, and though the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea; though the waters thereof roar and be troubled; though the mountains shake with the swelling thereof; there is a river the streams whereof shall make glad the city of God." The river of God's love, the great crystal fountain, which has no beginning nor ending; sinners, no matter how vile, no matter how polluted their souls be, when plunged beneath the ceaseless flood of this boundless river "lose all their guilty stains," and come forth whiter than the snow upon the mountain peaks. In contemplating these blessed truths is not the soul of the poor sinner made glad? Are not the weary hands uplifted, and the feeble knees strengthened? In this river of God's love do we not find a balm for all our wounds, a panacea for all our sicknesses? And do we not long for "A thousand tongues to sing

Our great Redeemer's praise?"

"Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on thee." What a depth of meaning to the child of God have these words! This is the peace of God, which passeth all understanding. When after long days and nights of rowing upon a storm-tossed sea, unable to see any light upon the shore, feeling that we are forsaken and lost amid the darkness of the awful deep, how sweet to hear the still small voice, sweeter than the sweetest music, saying, "Peace! be still!" Feeling ourselves hushed into quiet, as tenderly and sweetly as a babe cradled in the mother's arms, with peace filling every avenue of the soul, do we not realize that Jesus is with us on the storm-tossed waves, and that the delicious quiet and restfulness that now comes over the soul is indeed that peace which passeth all understanding? When this great wave of peace sweeps over the soul, how all turbulent evil passions are made to slumber. Being taken into his secret pavilion, resting under the shadow of his sheltering wings, the troubles and trials of this transitory life dwindle into nothing, and our soul is full of love not only to our Savior, but to his people; and peace on earth, good will toward man, fills the soul. The sweet and holy power of the Holy Spirit rests upon the soul, quieting all murmuring, and makes us willing to suffer, to bear all things he in his wisdom lays upon us, and makes us glad, yea, causes us to rejoice that we are thought worthy to be partakers of Christ's sufferings, that we may reign with him in glory.

Dear kindred in Christ, we have recently entered upon a new, untried year. Though to me, pinioned as I am to this couch, kept day in and day out within the confines of four walls, the days and years drag slowly, wearily along; yet in the silence of many a midnight have I been made to note the ticking of the clock; and as seconds glide quickly into minutes, and minutes into hours, I almost start at the rapidity of time; and deeply do I realize that "swift as a weaver's shuttle speed the years." But how it comforts one to think that each swift moment brings us nearer to our "house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens," and that soon, if we are the chosen vessels of mercy, we shall enter into that sweet, everlasting rest that remains to the people of God. Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, what God hath prepared for them that love him.

During the glad Christmas time, though suffering very severely physically, many hearts made generous by the love of God were made to remember the poor, lame and halt one of their number (if one at all), and my weary heart was cheered and made happy by the many useful tokens and the dear letters of love that found their way to my sick chamber. Could you all know how it humbled me, how unworthy I felt, and how happy, and how my gladdened soul went out in love to each dear brother and sister, and, most of all, to my ever-blessed Savior; I think you too would be made to rejoice with me, and to render praise to our glorious Lord. I suffer too much and am too weak to privately respond to all these heaven-sent blessings, letters and gifts; and that no one may feel neglected, I take this means to tender them my thanks. How sinful, unworthy and poor I feel; how unfit to have the love of dear Jesus and his beloved people; yet since my unprofitable life is still spared to the opening of another year, my prayer is that the rest of my days may be spent in loving God's people, in sweet intercourse with them, and in honoring and extolling the name of Jesus. With deep, abiding, unfeigned love to all the household of faith, whose love and prayers and patience with me I so much crave, and commending you all to the faithful care of the Savior, I am truly the least of all, if one of your number at all.

MARY PARKER.

JANUARY 9, 1891.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—It has been my desire for some time to write for the SIGNS, but knowing that it has many able correspondents, I feel that a communication from my pen would be to the exclusion of better matter; but as I have promised many whom I have met during the last year that I would let them hear from me through its columns, I will try to comply with their request.

I have traveled extensively among the churches during the last year, both in the States and in Canada. As a general thing the churches where I have been are in peace, with some additions to some of them; but in some there is distress, which has arisen from some who desire to be leaders, and to lord it over God's heritage. The people of God have been very kind to me everywhere, and heartily indorsed what I have tried to preach, and spoke many kind and cheering words of encouragement. Most of the brethren take some of our Baptist periodicals. The brethren of our church mostly take the SIGNS; but the SIGNS, as well as other papers of our order, is not without defects. It cannot be expected that the pens of uninspired men should make no mistakes. There are many of the people of God who are fervent and sincere in the service of the Lord, who yet advance ideas which are speculative in their nature; but they are not to be condemned as unsound, for we are commanded to bear with each other's infirmities. Some of the Baptists are not favorable to the SIGNS because of the doctrine of predestination. They are willing to admit it in part; but if all things whatsoever come to pass are predestinated, they say, God is the author of sin. This ingenious finite argument is the same in substance that Paul met in Romans ix. 19, 20: "Thou wilt say then unto me, Why doth he yet find fault? For who hath resisted his will? Nay but, O man, who art thou that repliest against God? Shall the thing formed say to him that formed it, Why hast thou made me thus?" The record teaches that the salvation of the elect was a fixed thing before the world began. Provision was made for them before the foundation of the world. "The election hath obtained it, and the rest were blinded;" and "the rest" that were blinded were not of his sheep. To them Christ was a stone of stumbling and a rock of offense, "whereunto also they were appointed." We read again of some "who were before of old ordained unto this condemnation, ungodly men, denying the only Lord God, and our Lord Jesus Christ." Again, "Brute beasts, made to be taken and destroyed," "vessels of wrath fitted to destruction," and many other Scriptures we could quote upon this point, but think this is sufficient. These things were not written merely to fill up the pages of the Bible, but because they are the truth of God. "Let God be true, and every man a liar." The Baptists generally believe that God predestinated the salvation of a definite number of the human family; but what about the rest? I will answer that if I did not believe one was as much predestinated as the other I would take the Arminian's position, and say that they were saved or lost according to the works foreseen in them, and that salvation is by works of righteousness which we have done. Some brethren, whom I love for the truth's sake, in order to make a limited predestination appear harmonious, necessarily contend for a self-existent devil, and making him God's equal; but the God I delight to worship "is before all things, and by him all things consist." "For by him were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers; all things were created by him, and for him." He "created all things, and for his pleasure they are and were created." We read that Satan was bound a thousand years, and after that he must be loosed a little season. Will any say that Satan volunteered to cease walking up and down in the earth, or that he breaks the chain with which he was bound? We believe the Scriptures, that he was "loosed." Seeing that is truth, will man, whose breath is in his nostrils, apologize for the Almighty, lest he criminate himself? We had best first learn what law he is violating, and to whom he is accountable. Mortal beings, who are less than nothing, and vanity, need not be uneasy about Jehovah. He is the first and the last, the beginning and the end, and from everlasting to everlasting is God, declaring the end from the beginning, and the things not yet done, saying, "My counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure;" having determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of the habitation of men.

"His decree, who formed the earth,
Fixed my first and second birth;
Parents, native place, and time,
All appointed were by him.

"He that formed me in the womb,
He shall guide me to the tomb;
All my times shall ever be Ordered by his wise decree.

"Times the tempter's power to prove,
Times to taste a Savior's love;
All must come, and last, and end,
As shall please my heavenly Friend.

"Plagues and death around me fly,
Till he bids I cannot die;
Not a single shaft can hit
Till the God of love sees fit."

If I know my own feelings, I love the sentiment of the above, and fellowship Ryland in his "Contemplations on the God of Israel." There are two things that I have never feared to do. One is of abasing man too low, and the other is of exalting the Lord too high. The heaven of heavens cannot contain him; how much less the house which Solomon built.

The words of the Holy One which he uttered come forcibly to my mind as further proof of what we have been considering. He said concerning his crucifixion and death, "I lay down my life, that I might take it again. No man taketh it from me, but I lay it down of myself. I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again." We know that he was taken with wicked hands, and was crucified and slain; that is, the hands of wicked men. Then how are we to harmonize the words of our Savior with those of Peter? There is only one way, which may be found in the Acts, where it is said, "For of a truth against thy holy child Jesus, whom thou hast anointed, both Herod, and Pontius Pilate, with the Gentiles, and the people of Israel, were gathered together, for to do whatsoever thy hand and thy counsel determined before to be done." While it is true that they did it with wicked hands, it is also true that the power was given them from above.

I have written the foregoing to manifest my fellowship and love for the doctrine of predestination as recorded in the Scriptures. I love the doctrine, and find a solace in it when (to all appearance) everything else has failed. How firm a foundation, which was laid in eternity, and still stands, and will stand when time shall be no more. It shall never be removed. Whatsoever the Lord doeth standeth forever; therefore we can say, "Rejoice, O heavens, and be astonished, O earth; for the Lord hath done it." We are strangers to the world, not reckoned with the nations, having no abiding city here, but sojourn as we go through life's rugged road; but we seek a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God; and while we journey it is of grace we preach and of grace we sing.

"Grace led my roving feet
To tread this heavenly road;
And new supplies each hour I meet
While pressing on to God.

"Grace taught my soul to pray,
And pardoning love to know;
'Tis grace that's kept me to this day,
And will not let me go.

"Grace all the work shall crown
Through everlasting days;
It lays in heaven the topmost stone,
And well deserves the praise."
As ever, in hope,

H. E. PURRIS.

SOUTHAMPTON, Pa., Jan. 22, 1891.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—For the information of those who have chosen to send their liberality to our afflicted sister, Mary Parker, by me, I will say that in addition to what I mentioned in my letter published in the SIGNS of July 6th, I sent her August 15th $33.00, October 14th $17.00, November 24th $10.00, and December 17th $10.00, and have five dollars now in my hands for her. I have the names of all the kind friends who have contributed for her to me, except three or four who have withheld their names. These contributions, with those that she has received from other dear, sympathizing friends (though strangers in the flesh), of which she has spoken to me, have been effectual in lessening the aggravation of her affliction, and in promoting her comfort. She expresses in strong and loving terms her grateful appreciation of the great kindness and abundant love and tender care which she feels have been thus manifested to her. Can she really know just how great and precious a privilege it is for those who have been able to render her the needed help, and what a sweet comfort they feel in any comfort that can come to her? Her letters both to us and to others are peculiarly rich in expressions of spiritual thought and feeling. As her physical sufferings increase, and her bodily strength fails, it seems that her spiritual joys are brightened, and the Lord is more and more manifested as her strength and her song. Her letters written of late, with some peculiarly spiritual ones written in former years, but not published, will be presented to the brethren and friends in another volume before long, concerning which due announcement will be made.

In the fall I requested her peremptorily to order a base burner stove and coal for the winter. In a letter to my wife, dated January 1st, she says: "About the time that Elder Durand wrote me concerning the base burner stove my limbs, which had been throwing off, I think, a gallon of water every twenty-four hours, suddenly quit discharging. One long, hard chill succeeded another, both limbs became inflamed, intensely painful and swollen, while the body, face and neck swelled to a degree that made me almost unrecognizable. This continued more than a week; then the left limb again opened, but the discharge is too scant to give me the relief I so much need, and my suffering seems very great. Both limbs look as if they had been dipped in boiling water, and both have to be bandaged in wet cloths, to do which quite consumes my time and strength. My stove is the greatest earthly comfort I have. But for it I know not what I should do. It causes me to rest better at night, as I do not have to be weighted down with clothing, and the temperature of the room is uniform both day and night. It is so much cleaner, and does not emit any gas or smoke. I know not how to be thankful enough."

She has had many requests for her photograph, which she was not financially able to grant; so she has had a number taken, the exact cost of which, she says, is fifteen cents. The artist had to take them in her room, and of course without proper appliances and light, and her friends there do not think they do her justice; but I think they are very well. They show the face of a sick woman, which very many will be glad to see. I would suggest that the mailing and postage will be a little. I have received a number, for which I hope to send her twenty-five cents each. Sister Attie A. Curtis, of Bath, Maine, has just sent me five dollars for twenty, to supply friends in her vicinity.

I will state again, as I have heretofore, that the volume of her letters, published by Alma McNaghten, was long ago exhausted. Some still send for it, and it is quite a trouble for our sister Mary to return the money.

Your affectionate brother,

SILAS H. DURAND.

LANCASTER, Ohio, Oct. 27, 1890.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—I was very much edified by the letter of Elder E. Rittenhouse, in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES for September 3, 1890. I can say Amen to all who write in that light. But I certainly do wish they would stop harping on that absolute predestination of all things; for, as Elder R. says, they do of a truth darken counsel. I have seen many others who are sorry that the SIGNS hold that doctrine. I am not alone in understanding that the word "predestinate" means "to make." It appears to me, and I cannot help it, that according to that doctrine, it would be useless to rebuke a member of the church for any wicked conduct, since God predestinated it to be done. I know I am a great sinner, always doing what God has forbidden, and failing to do what he has commanded. I charge that to the flesh and the devil. God is an absolute Sovereign; and that is all my hope. I know that there has been a marvelous change in my understanding and desire; yet if it were not for the all-ruling power of God I could have no hope. As I have heard our much esteemed pastor quote,

"Not a single shalf can hit
Till the God of love sees fit."

A passage of Scripture occurs to my mind, where God said it had never come into his mind that the people would do so wickedly. Will you please give your views on it? The editorials have always been deeply interesting to me; and many mysteries have been explained by them and other precious writings in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. I should feel lonely without them, and often wish I could write something for the paper that would be of interest to the readers. I hope you will throw the mantle of charity over this letter.

Unworthily your sister,

P.

BROGDON, Ga., Dec. 27, 1890.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—I feel a desire to give an expression in regard to the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. I would, if I could, write some for its pages; but I am not able to write intelligently. I am pleased with the SIGNS. Not that I have felt otherwise, but it seems needful there be some pointed talk on the subject. I desire to be humble as before the Lord, and to thank him for my belief that he does his will in all things, and controls all events by his gracious hand. I understand that these things are hid from the wise and prudent, but revealed unto babes. I think a few words from me on this subject will be enough. I am in the midst of those who believe that God suffers some things, either not being able to hinder them, or not able to see the result. All I have to say now is, I have not so learned Christ. I understand that God is in one mind, and none can turn him; giving to the sea its bounds, and numbering even the very hairs of the heads of his children. Dearly beloved, this is enough for this old sinner. In much affliction and sorrow, I sign myself,
Yours to serve,

N. B. HARDY.

DOES PREDESTINATION EXCUSE SIN?

"AND they built the high places of Baal, which are in the valley of Hinnom, to cause their sons and their daughters to pass through the fire unto Molech; which I commanded them not, neither came it into my mind, that they should do this abomination, to cause Judah to sin."—Jer. xxxii. 35.

In the letter of an esteemed sister in another column of this paper, over the signature, P., she requests our views on this subject, citing a portion of Scripture in which "God said that it had never come into his mind that the people would do so wickedly." We have failed to find any such declaration in the Scriptures; but presume she refers to the above text. It is of little consequence what may be thought by us, or any mortal, on this subject. No wisdom of men can ever attain to the truth in relation to the mystery of godliness. Our Redeemer gave thanks to the Father because he had hid these things from the wise and prudent, and revealed them unto babes. By this revelation alone can the truth be known by those who are taught of God; and there is no possibility that any others can ever receive the correct understanding of this, or of any portion of the inspired record.

By a careful observation of the context it will be seen that the word of the Lord came unto Jeremiah, charging upon the Jews their evil deeds and abominable idolatry. In the same connection the expression is used, Jer. vii. 31, and xix. 5, in the former text the word heart being translated from the same original word which is rendered mind in the other two passages. In each place, the terrible denunciation of the wickedness of Judah immediately precedes the announcement of the great mercy and kindness of the Lord which shall be manifested to them after they have suffered the rod of his chastening. The Lord says that he had not commanded the works of transgression which they had done, and it is added in the way of emphasis, "neither came it into my mind." Clearly the meaning is that the Lord had not designed to command the idolatry by which they had departed from the law which God had given to them. His law expressly required that they should worship the Lord their God, and serve no other gods. He never commanded them to do the wickedness which is charged upon them in the preceding connection, in all three of the passages where the expression is used, to which our sister refers. It is only the unbelief of carnal reason by which this language would be construed as declaring that the wickedness of men had gone beyond his infinite knowledge. Surely none can think that God has learned more of the exceeding sinfulness of mortals than what was known unto him from the beginning of his work of creation. But it is evident that the same misapplication of this expression by which the purpose of God would seem to be denied in this case, would also limit his infinite wisdom. If God has learned anything which was not included in his knowledge from eternity, then he has changed to that extent. But he declares, "I am the Lord, I change not; therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed."—Mal. iii. 6. Since our sister's hope rests in the assurance of the all-ruling power of God, she cannot afford to doubt the immutability of his counsel. For her comfort, and for the consolation of all who trust in his grace, it is written, "Whatever the Lord pleased, that did he in heaven, and in earth, in the seas, and all deep places."—Psa. cxxxv. 6. James says, "Know unto God are all his works from the beginning of the world."—Acts xv. 18. Can it be doubted that this knowledge includes the salvation of his people from their sins? But if the sins of his people were not known to him it is absurd to talk about his eternal purpose of saving them from their sins. His knowledge is one of those eternal perfections which God has been pleased to reveal both in the Scriptures and in the experience of his saints. With all his attributes, it is eternal and unchanging. Neither wicked men nor devils have ever surprised him by their iniquity. While men and devils acts as their own will dictates in their evil works, the finger of God marks the exact limit of their sin, as he gives the seas their bounds, saying, "Hitherto shalt thou come, but no further; and here shall thy proud waves be stayed."—Job xxxviii. 11. So Asaph says, "Surely the wrath of man shall praise thee; the remainder of wrath shalt thou restrain."—Psa. lxxvi. 10.

Finite intelligence cannot comprehend the unsearchable purpose of God even in the dispensations of his providence concerning earthly and temporal things. In vain may mortals ask, Why are the wolf and the tiger so constituted as to be able to prey upon the defenseless lamb? Reason cannot explain why the dove is subject to the cruel talons of the hawk; yet mortals dare not deny the right of the Creator to form these creatures according to his own will. All we can know of these matters is confined to the plain revelation which God has given. None would be so silly as to claim that predatory animals were designed by their Maker to eat grass like oxen. Or, if we confine our observation to the human family, who can say why strength and health are given to the cruel and vicious, while many of the kindest and best of men are deeply afflicted and weak? When we can explain these mysteries of an earthly character, it will be soon enough for us to seek an explanation of the deeper mysteries surrounding the eternal counsel of the will of Jehovah. Until our minds can grasp these temporal things, it becomes us to refrain from passing judgment upon the hidden mysteries of that purpose of divine grace by which a bloody Manasseh and a persecuting Saul are chosen unto salvation, while others are not so favored. Such questions will be suggested by carnal rebellion, but they are not consistent with the acknowledgment of the infinite perfection of our God. However incomprehensible may be the doctrine of the unlimited sovereignty of Jehovah, it is unquestionably true, because God has declared it in his revealed word of truth. May all who trust in his grace heed his commandment, "Be still, and know that I am God; I will be exalted among the heathen; I will be exalted in the earth."—Psa. xli. 10.

The principal point designed to be considered in this article, however, is the very common objection that the doctrine of the absolute predestination of all things affords an apology for the evil deeds of men. This is the trouble in the mind of our sister, as she says, "It appears to me, and I cannot help it, that according to that doctrine it would be useless to rebuke a member of the church for any wicked conduct, since God predestinated it to be done." This is the very objection which Paul has stamped with the condemnation of inspired authority; and it is unmistakable evidence that the doctrine as preached by inspiration is the same which is now held by those who contend for the truth, since reason brings the same cavil against it. After declaring the righteousness of God in raising up Pharaoh for the express purpose of showing his power in his overthrow, Paul says, "Thou wilt say then unto me, Why doth he yet find fault? for who hath resisted his will? Nay but, O man, who art thou that repliest against God? Shall the thing formed say to him that formed it, Why hast thou made me thus? Hath not the potter power [that is, authority or right] over the clay, of the same lump to make one vessel unto honor, and another unto dishonor? What if God, willing to show his wrath, and to make his power known, endured with much long-suffering the vessels of wrath fitted [or, made up] to destruction; and that he might make known the riches of his glory on the vessels of mercy, which he had afore prepared unto glory, even us, whom he hath called, not of the Jews only, but also of the Gentiles?"—Rom. ix. 19-24. The apostle does not attempt to discuss the question of the justice of divine appointment; neither would we undertake such a presumptuous task. Certainly every one who has the Spirit of Christ will bow with reverence to the will of God, and say, "Even so, Father; for so it seemed good in thy sight." If any subject of grace can be so bold as to make this truth a pretext for the indulgence of his sinful lusts, he must be under the control of the enemy of all righteousness. No such result can be attributed to the doctrine as held by those who love righteousness. To the proposition that we should continue in sin that grace may abound, Paul replies, "God forbid! How shall we, that are dead to sin, live any longer therein?" There is strong evidence that the love of sin still reigns in the man who would dare to use this doctrine as an apology for his wicked conduct. The law of Christ expressly enjoins upon all who love him, that they shall withdraw from all who walk disorderly. The church is not authorized to do more than this in any case. God himself is the only Judge of quick and dead. He knows the heart of every one; and he alone can decide whether such a bold and wicked blasphemer is a subject of this grace. The church has no option in the case. She must obey the direction of her King in withdrawing from the transgressor, and he must be unto her as an heathen man. It does not relieve the church from this duty, even if she is satisfied that the sinning one is a subject of grace. The command is imperative, "Now we command you, brethren, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly, and not after the tradition which he received from us."—2 Thess. iii. 6. It is not required of the church to determine whether the disorderly member is one who is included in the salvation which is in Christ Jesus. All that she is authorized to do is simply to judge whether his walk is consistent with the order enjoined in the law of Christ. For the maintenance of that order the keys of the kingdom are committed to the inspired apostles: and they have by the direction of the Holy Ghost given the perfect rule of faith and practice, by which the church is thoroughly furnished for deciding every case which can come before her in the administration of that divine law. No consideration of personal esteem or of partiality must be allowed to influence the action of the church in the execution of this law of her King. The supreme allegiance of every saint is due to the Lord Jesus; and he that loves father or mother, son or daughter, more than he loves Jesus, is not worthy of him.—Matt. x. 37, 38. When any saint is led by the Spirit of God, instead of seeking an excuse for indulging his sinful inclinations, he will continually pray, as we are taught by our Lord,

"Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil!" It is mockery to speak the words of this prayer, and then willfully go in the way of temptation, and do the wickedness from which we have asked to be delivered. Every one who thus sins willfully, says by his action that he loves sin more than the commandment of the Lord Jesus. Such conduct is as truly expressive of contempt for our Redeemer as was the cruelty of those persecutors who crowned him with thorns. If any professed believer in Christ can be guilty of such gross iniquity and escape the fearful chastening which follows disobedience, the indication is that God does not deal with such transgressor as he deals with his children.

It is not strange that carnal men and devils should pervert this essential portion of the doctrine of the grace of God. Being destitute of the love of God, sin is their element, and they rejoice in iniquity. The perfect law of liberty to them does indeed afford license to revel in that element. But that very fact attests the justice of God in the condemnation which rests upon them. It is common for such to assert that if they believed this truth they would do all manner of evil deeds. Does not this declaration prove clearly that they have no love of God and his righteousness in them? The Spirit of truth leads those in whom it abides to hate sin, and hunger and thirst after righteousness. Their great grief is that they cannot do the good which they desire to do. If they could live as they wish to do, they would be free from sin. They do not refrain from sin in order thereby to get to heaven and escape future punishment. Sin is itself a distress to them in their present experience, because the love of righteousness abides in them. For this cause they cannot live any longer therein. Being led by the Spirit of God, the children of his grace love righteousness and hate sin, just as God himself does. They need to be moved by neither the fear of hell nor the hope of reward.

"Not by the terrors of a slave
Do they perform his will;
But with the noblest powers they have
His sweet commands fulfill."

Carnal reason in the saints is as strongly opposed to the truth of God as it is in those who have not the grace of God; but the love of God moves those who are born of the Spirit to desire to be holy as God is holy. Does our sister need the uncertainty of a limited and changeable purpose of God to produce the love of righteousness in her heart? We are satisfied that she does not depend upon any such false refuge; for she says, "If it were not for the all-ruling power of God I could have no hope." When this confidence is taken in connection with the immutability of the counsel of that God our sister herself rests in the full doctrine of the predestination of all things. Without that strong support no sinner can hope in the grace of God for salvation. We know of no dictionary which defines the word "predestinate" as meaning "To make." Neither does any sinner ever commit sin in order to fulfill the predestination of God.—See James i. 12-17.

DISCONTINUED.

IN accordance with the notice published in the numbers three and four of this volume, we have now discontinued those from our list that we received at one dollar whose time expired with the end of the year, and from whom we have not received orders to continue their paper. We have also discontinued those who are a year or more in arrears with their subscription. Experience teaches us, however, that many of these will wish to be replaced on the list; and that there may be no break in their numbers for this year, we will run a few hundred extra for the month of February, so that those who renew within that time can have the missing numbers sent them.

EXTRAORDINARY OFFER!

FROM now until further notice is given any one who is now a subscriber, and whose subscription is paid up, may send us new subscribers at one dollar a year; but no one, either new or old subscriber, can get the paper from this office for themselves at less than the regular rates. Any one who is not now a subscriber can have the benefit of the above terms by sending two dollars for their own subscription, and one dollar each for additional new subscribers.

Please make no mistake about the above terms. No one, either new or old subscriber, can send to this office and get the paper for themselves for less than the regular rates; but if any of our paid-up subscribers choose to sacrifice their commission and take the new subscriber for one dollar, that is their matter.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

Elder Ansel Parish died at his residence near Nashville, Ga., Jan. 16th, 1891.

By request of brother T. J. Tenery, I send you a notice of the death of his wife, which occurred Jan. 6th, 1891. She was born in Mississippi, Oct. 18th, 1834; moved to Texas in 1834; married brother Tenery in 1846; and was baptized in 1857. She was the daughter of Henry and Mary Cook. Her mother's maiden name was Mary Goodson. She lived a consistent christian life, and her house was always open to the Old School Baptists. She left evidence of her willingness to depart and be with the Lord. Brother Tenery, her husband, is now taking the SIGNS, and has been for many years.

ALSO,

Elder T. G. Miller, my brother, departed this life Jan. 23d, 1891. There will be a sketch of his life written out and sent to you soon for publication.

J. H. MILLER.

ITALY, Texas, Jan. 30, 1891.

DIED—Oct. 18th, 1890, brother Samuel Vannatta, in the 79th year of his age.

The subject of this notice was born in Fauquier Co., Va., Feb. 15th, 1812, his father moving to Shelby Co., Ky., about the year 1817. He was married to Hannah Dodd on Dec. 11th, 1834, and settled, I believe, on an adjoining farm, where he spent the remainder of his days. Sister Vannatta preceded him to the grave nearly twenty years, having died August 13th, 1870. Six sons were born unto them, only three of whom survive.

On June 4th, 1872, he was married to sister Elizabeth Sanders, who now is left to mourn the loss of a kind and attentive companion. May the strong arm of the Lord strengthen and support her amidst the deep trials that may be her portion.

Brother Vannatta joined the Old School Baptist Church at Bethel in the year 1834. Elder John Harlan was then the pastor, by whom, I suppose, he was baptized. He lived a faithful, devoted member till the day of his death; and though greatly afflicted in the last few years of his life, so that he was often deprived of the privilege of meeting with the church, yet his heartfelt interest was there. He gently and peacefully passed away, without a struggle or groan, at the time above mentioned. Serenely he sleeps in Jesus, awaiting the coming of our Lord with power and glory, to call him forth, when that day shall dawn that the grave shall give up its dead.

The church has lost a faithful member, and the neighborhood a good citizen. They, together with brothers, one sister, three sons and our widowed sister, mourn the loss, but not as those without hope. May God sanctify this to our good.

Being away at the time of his demise, his funeral was attended on the first Sunday in November by the writer, at the Old Bethel Church.

P. W. SAWIN.

Harriet Reynolds was born in the year 1820, and died May 8th, 1890. She was baptized in fellowship with the Lexington Old School Baptist Church, by Elder Hezekiah Pettit, at the early age of seventeen years. She was married to Nelson Valkenburgh at the age of eighteen or nineteen years, both of Lexington. Miss Valkenburgh and George J. Borthwick were married April 25th, 1877, by Elder I. B. Whitcomb, soon after taking a letter and uniting with the Middleburgh Church, where she enjoyed the fellowship of the church, being a worthy and consistent member. Her seat was seldom vacant, although in poor health until her death. The steadfastness of her faith in the gospel of the Son of God was manifest. At the close of the last meeting she requested to be sung hymn No. 691, of Beebe's Collection:

"My spirit looks to God alone,
My rock and refuge is his throne;
In all my fears, in all my straits,
My soul on his salvation waits."

The writer tried to speak, at the home of brother Borthwick, words of comfort to the sorrowing relatives and friends from 1 Cor. ii. 9, 10; after which the body was buried in the Lexington cemetery. May the God of all grace comfort the sorrowing companion and relatives.

J. CLARK.

ROXBURY, N. Y., Feb. 2. 1891.

My dear wife, Charity Murphy, died Dec. 19th, 1890, aged 55 years, 1 month and 2 days.

She was the mother of ten children, seven yet living. We were married Jan. 25th, 1856. She was a kind and affectionate wife, a good mother, a kind neighbor, and kind to the sick. She was a lover of the cause that the Old Baptists hold to, and also the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. She never made a public profession, but I have a hope that she met with a change several years ago. Her walk proved it to me. She always was glad to see the Old Baptists; that was the company she craved.

She was taken sick on the 10th with a pain in the right forefinger. We thought it was a felon, and did all we could, but it grew worse. She said she did not want a doctor, but I sent for one on the 17th. He said it was erysipelas and gangrene. She never murmured, but bore it with patience. The night before she died she said that she was going home.

Her maiden name was Charity Evert. She was born in Randolph Co., W. Va., and lived there until 1885. We moved to Thomas Co., Kansas, where she was well satisfied. She has left me and two little boys at home, and her other children that are away from home, to mourn our loss; but it is her eternal gain.

STEPHEN MURPHY.

GEM, Kansas, Jan. 30, 1891.

Mrs. Elizabeth A. Bean, wife of J. R. Bean, died of consumption, Dec. 19th, 1890, about half-past ten o'clock p. m., at her residence in Georgetown, Ky.

She was the sixth daughter of Samuel and Sarah Hull, and was born July 22d, 1824, in Mason Co., Ky. She united with the Old School Baptist Church at Mount Gilead, Ky., in the summer of 1847, and was married Dec. 14th of the same year. Her health had been bad for years, but began to decline more rapidly since last spring, when she had "La Grippe." She was not confined to her bed until about two months before her death. During the last month of her illness she frequently expressed a desire to be free from sorrow and pain, and to be forever at rest. When she spoke of Jesus or her "sweet home in heaven" her precious countenance would beam with heavenly light, plainly manifesting that her spirit longed to be freed from its prison-house of clay. A number of times she quoted, "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" Also,

"Jesus can make a dying bed
Feel soft as downy pillows are;
While on his breast I lean my head,
And breathe my life out sweetly there."

To her afflicted husband, who is deaf, she pointed heavenward and smiled; after which she told her daughter to tell him that she must leave him, but that the children would take care of him. She was a kind neighbor, a faithful wife, a fond mother and a bright christian; firm in the doctrine of salvation by grace, ever rejoicing in the truth and order of God's house, triumphant in death, with the full and comforting assurance of eternal rest beyond this vale of tears. Richly adorned with christian graces, noble principles and pure motives, she was held in high esteem by numerous relatives and friends, whom she requested not to mourn for her. When the night of death drew near her fervent prayer was, "O Jesus, take me home!" Her last audible words were, "There are no tears there."

Her husband, three children and eight grandchildren mourn their irreparable loss. By her request, Elder I. R. Great-house conducted a short funeral service; after which her remains were interred in the Georgetown cemetery. May the God of all comfort abide with the bereaved, and heal their grief-stricken hearts.

"Weep not for her! No more her voice
Charms with her words of love;
She's chanting praises now to him
Who reigns o'er all in love."

"A little while and then thou too
Shalt leave these scenes of care;
Triumphant shalt the grave pass through,
And with her glory share."

"Then bless the rod in kindness given—
He chastens those he loves;
'Tis so he renders meet for heaven,
And thus his mercy proves."

ORDINATIONS.

A JOINT conference from the Elbethel Church, Lowndes Co., Miss., met at Elder S. C. Johnson's on Sunday morning, Dec. 14th, 1890, for the purpose of ordaining O. F. EGGER to the work of the gospel ministry. The following brethren were present:

From Elbethel Church—Elder S. C. Johnson, A. J. Egger and E. M. Verell.

From Mt. Hebron Church—Deacon L. G. Pullen.

From Sulphur Spring Church—Deacon H. Waters and W. B. Honnoll.

From Lebanon Church—M. McCarty and W. R. Stanley.

From Emmaus Church—W. Bailey.

From Poplar Spring Church—M. Mor-dica and ——— Yarber.

From Harmony Church—Gilbert Moore; Opened the service by singing, and prayer by W. D. Couch.

Organized by appointing S. C. Johnson Moderator, W. B. Honnoll Clerk, and J. C. Mattox mouth for the church.

The Moderator asked if the church was in the same mind as when calling for the presbytery, which was answered in the affirmative.

The church delivered the candidate into the hands of the presbytery, who proceeded as follows:

Elder E. M. Verell elicited the christian experience and call to the ministry, which was satisfactory to all.

A. J. Egger examined the candidate on orthodoxy, and proceeded with the ordination prayer, and laying on of hands by the presbytery.

The Moderator gave the charge, pronouncing the candidate a regularly ordained minister of the gospel, with all the functions of the same, and extended to him the right hand of fellowship, followed by the council doing the same.

The church received him with joy and the hand of fellowship.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date, this date denotes the time at which your subscription expires, and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

POETRY.

THOUGHTS.

DEAR BRETHREN:—I send you for publication in the SIGNS the following poem, which was sent me a few weeks ago by our dear brother, Elder C. W. Anderson. He says, "It is my first attempt at writing poetry, and, like all my works and their author, sadly imperfect." I think, however, that those who read it will feel, as I do, that it is very truthful in sentiment, and strikingly clear, strong and beautiful in expression—real poetry.

Your brother in hope,

SILAS H. DURAND.

SOUTHAMPTON, Pa., Feb. 8, 1891.

As PILGRIMS faint and sore we tread
This wilderness of sin,
Without a place to lay our head,
Or home to tarry in.

The foxes all have burrowing holes,
Each flying fowl a nest;
But pilgrims, poor, afflicted souls,
Have not an earthly rest.

That's of God,
Made with hands

Waters rise,
Hands and foes to wound us sore,
Tears bedim our eyes.

In midnight darkness oft we grope,
On unknown thresholds stand,
Afraid to fear, afraid to hope,
With terrors on each hand.

This thorny road that few do find
Is with sore evils set
To turn the alien's feet aside—
A sure intruder's let.

Lame feet and feeble knees walk here (Strong ones this way ne'er take);
Though lame and halt and faint with fear,
The way they can't forsake.

Our King and Captain is the Way,
The Shepherd of the sheep;
Though fools and blind, we cannot stray
Beyond his power to keep.

All power in heaven and on earth
Is given to thy hand;
The highest rank, the lowest birth,
Must go at thy command.

No empire falls nor sparrow dies
Without thy firm decree;
Not e'en the smallest atom flies
But takes its course of thee.

When we can feel this solid truth
Our faltering steps grow strong;
In trembling age or buoyant youth
We raise our joyous song.

Though rolling worlds to ruin go,
All nature be destroyed,
We bid defiance to the foe,
Nor dread the lonely void.

Let foes assail and dangers rise,
Let storms come thick and fast;
We fear not dark and angry skies,
Nor raging tempests' blast.

But hark! we hear the voice of some Forbidding us to eat
This morsel, sweet as honey-comb,
That's falling at our feet.

As all must have some power to trust,
Some other or their own,
This is a sore and cruel thrust
To those who feel they've none.

As helpless sheep 'midst wolves must stand
Defenseless and unarmed,
'Tis natural they should trust some hand
To keep them all unharmed.

The wolves would also want to think Themselves possessed of power
To kill and slay, to eat and drink,
And at their will devour.

'Tis thus the truth divides between
The children of each seed;
For every one that's of the truth
The voice of truth will heed.

May God in mercy keep us all
From Satan's evil snare,
Lest we should fight against the truth,
And like to wolves appear.

CORRESPONDENCE.

FOREKNOWLEDGE.

... that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose. For whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son, that he might be the first-born among many brethren. Moreover, whom he did predestinate, them he also called; and whom he called, them he also justified; and whom he justified, them he also glorified."—Rom. viii. 28-30.

Connected with the scoffing, reproach and torment to which the dear Son of God was subjected just prior to his crucifixion, Judas the traitor, with the thirty pieces of silver, made his appearance, "and brought again the thirty pieces of silver to the chief priests and elders, saying, I have sinned, in that I have betrayed the innocent blood. And they said, What is that to us? see thou to that. And he cast down the pieces of silver in the temple, and departed, and went and hanged himself. And the chief priests took the silver pieces, and said, It is not lawful for to put them into the treasury, because it is the price of blood. And they took counsel, and bought with them the potter's field, to bury strangers in. Wherefore that field was called, The field of blood, unto this day." Why had not this momentous matter been different? Because prophecy must be fulfilled, and God's word could not be made void; for the exact number of pieces of silver and the disposition made of them could not be different from what it was. Was not all that scene foreknown to Jehovah? Certainly it was; therefore foreordained in every particular. The answer that Judas received should cause all lovers of God's truth to clearly understand that however dark and inscrutable those scenes may appear to finite mortals, all things then and there were working together for good to the election of God's grace, or his chosen people. Whether Judas expected sympathy when he came with the money to the priests and elders or not will never be known, for he was so stung with remorse that he could not survive the crime; and with what sang-froid, or cold-blood indifference, they said, "What is that to us? see thou to that;" for whether thou art guilty or innocent is nothing to us—we have him now; therefore you begone, and say nothing to us. How is it possible for speech more hellish to be uttered? But everything then transpiring was exactly fulfilling God's eternal purpose; and a choice was proffered them as to whom should be released, Christ or Barabbas.

Then cried they all again, saying, Not this man, but Barabbas. Now Barabbas was a robber." They also said concerning Jesus, "His blood be on us, and on our children." Certainly that imprecation has been seen in the destruction of the Jews as a nation, their house or their polity is destroyed, and they had the vials of divine wrath poured out upon them. Read the twenty-third and twenty-fourth chapters of Matthew, for there is recorded what Jesus said concerning them; and it has been fulfilled exactly as decreed. "And after that they had mocked him, they took the robe off from him, and put his own raiment on him, and led him away to crucify him. And as they came out, they found a man of Cyrene, Simon by name: him they compelled to bear his cross. And when they were come unto a place called Golgotha, that is to say, a place of a skull, they gave him vinegar to drink mingled with gall: and when he had tasted thereof, he would not drink." "After this, Jesus knowing that all things were now accomplished, that the Scripture might be fulfilled, saith, I thirst. Now there was set a vessel full of vinegar: and they filled a sponge with vinegar, and put it upon hyssop, and put it to his mouth. When Jesus therefore had received the vinegar, he said, It is finished: and he bowed his head, and gave up the ghost." Why had not some one given the dear Son of God water to drink in that awful moment of excruciating agony? Because God had foreordained it should not be so; for hundreds of years before it was declared by the Spirit of inspiration, "Reproach hath broken my heart; and I am full of heaviness: and I looked for some to take pity, but there was none; and for comforters, but I found none. They gave me also gall for my meat; and in my thirst they gave me vinegar to drink."

From the time that the beloved Son of God was wrapped in swaddling clothes and laid in the manger until "he bowed his head, and gave up the ghost," every miracle he performed, every parable he uttered, every place he visited, every sorrow he endured, was foreknown and took place exactly at the time and in the very place that was foreknown, and not one "happened to be so;" for the very thought that some of those things might have been different from what they were is counter to any just view of the attributes of the Supreme Being.

is one of awful moment, well calculated to cause them to love and fear God to feel sorrowful when any of his professed followers dare trifle with it, especially they who profess to have been called to expound his written word to the comfort, edification and building up of the broken-hearted, who have been cut off from trusting in an arm of flesh. It will be to them nothing but "wood, hay, stubble;" for "every man's work [not God's work] shall be made manifest: for the day [this gospel day] shall declare it, because it shall be revealed by fire; and the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is." Wood, hay and stubble are combustible materials, and faithful, gospel sermons frequently set fire to that matter, and while it is burning sometimes there is much smoke; but if there be "gold, silver and precious stones" in the pile they will not take fire, but for some time afterward they may show the effects of the fire upon them; for it is declared, "Who maketh his angels spirits, and his ministers a flame of fire." Every true, tried, called and faithful minister of the gospel desires, as the Spirit may enable him, to "contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints," fearless of the frowns of man, and regardless of his applause; for he knows that he stands amenable at the bar of God how he divides the written word.

In the purpose of God there should be such a display of his omnipotence as to cause those ungodly wretches who crucified his dear Son to greatly fear; for when Jesus had "cried again with a loud voice," he "yielded up the ghost. And, behold, the vail of the temple was rent in twain from the top to the bottom; and the earth did quake, and the rocks rent; and the graves were opened; and many bodies of the saints which slept arose, and came out of the graves after his resurrection, and went into the holy city, and appeared unto many." Joseph, who was a disciple of Jesus, "went to Pilate and begged the body of Jesus. Then Pilate commanded the body to be delivered. And when Joseph had taken the body, he wrapped it in clean linen cloth [blessed emblem of the purity of that dear body], and laid it in his own new tomb, which he had hewn out in the rock; and he rolled a great stone to the door of the sepulchre, and departed." "Now the next day, that followed the day of the preparation, the chief priests and Pharisees came together unto Pilate, saying, Sir, we remember that that deceiver said, while he was yet alive, After three days I will rise again. Command therefore that the sepulchre be made sure until the third day, lest his disciples come by night, and steal him away, and say unto the people, He is risen from the dead: so the last error shall be worse than the first. Pilate said unto them, Have a watch; go ye your way, and be sure as ye can. So they went, and made the sepulchre sure, sealing the stone, and setting a watch. Our God was then controlling the every act pertaining to the body of Jesus; for everything was foreknown; and instead of frustrating the purpose of God, they were exactly fulfilling it; and the watch that those envious, wicked men set around the tomb, became "a guard of honor, not allowing any one to intrude;" but when the moment had fully come for the resurrection of that body, "There was a great earthquake; for the angel of the Lord descended from heaven, and came and rolled back the stone, and came and sat upon it. His countenance was like lightning, and his raiment white as snow; and for fear of him the keepers did shake, and became as dead men. And the angel answered and said unto the woman, Fear not ye; for I know that ye seek Jesus, which was crucified. He is not here; for he is risen, as he said. Come, see the place where the Lord lay." And as those dear ones were going to proclaim the glorious news that Jesus had risen, "some of the watch came into the city, and shewed unto the chief priests all the things that were done. And when they were assembled with the elders, and had taken counsel, they gave large money unto the soldiers, saying, say ye, His disciples came by night, and stole him away while we slept. And if this come to the governor's ears, we will persuade him, and secure you. So they took the money, and did as they were taught; and this saying is commonly reported among the Jews until this day." Large money was given to proclaim a falsehood concerning the resurrection of Jesus; and to-day large money is given to pervert the New Testament Scriptures, and represent fallen, depraved man in an entirely different condition from what the written word of God declares his condition to be. How much power had earthly rulers to prevent the resurrection of Jesus? Not any; for the keepers became as dead men; yet they could resist and prevent the resurrection of Jesus from the tomb as easily as they can his work as Mediator; for the apostle set forth in Eph. i. 17-23, in no uncertain manner what the power was in believers. It certainly requires much temerity on the part of any person or persons to undertake to prove that anything pertaining to Jesus, from the manger to his resurrection, happened by chance, or that all those things did not work together for the good of "the church, which is his body, the fullness of him that filleth all in all."

DEAR BROTHERS BEEBE:—Inclosed I send a copy of a letter that I wrote a few days ago to an afflicted sister in Maryland. I send it at the request of Elder H. Butler Davis and brother Henry B. Davis for publication in the SIGNS. It is but a poor effort; and if any consolation is in it for any of God's children let God have the praise, for he is all in all to the poor child that feels he can do nothing of himself. Do with it as you see fit, and all will be right. I know that God works all things after the counsel of his own will, and asks counsel of no man. He declared the end from the beginning, and from ancient times the things not yet done, saying, "My counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure." He speaks, and it is done; he commands, and it stands fast.

"He sits on no precarious throne,
Nor borrows leave to be."
He is the Rock; his work is perfect.
Nothing can be added to it, nor anything taken from it.

I remain yours in hope of eternal life,

A. C. R. MORGAN.

WEATHERFORD, Texas, Jan. 4, 1891.

MRS. GERTRUDE MILLS—DEAR SISTER IN CHRIST:—Your very welcome letter of December 25th, 1890, was received on the 2d inst. As I see the grandeur, glory and light manifested in your precious letter I feel that I can only lay my mouth in the dust, and say that of myself I can do nothing. Nothing but the power of God can enlighten our gloomy minds and give us liberty, that we may speak or write that which is comforting to his precious little ones. If you have been comforted by my feeble communications the praise is due to God alone, who blessed me with comforting words for you; but to-day I feel entirely barren, and unable to say anything for the least of our Savior's little lambs. He calleth his sheep by name, leadeth them out of all troubles and distresses, and delivers them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage.

My mind is in a strange condition this morning. I would be glad to write something that would benefit you, but it seems that my mind does not take that travel on experience that it has hitherto in trying to address you in the name of Jesus; but I shall try to speak of things that may occur to my mind, trusting in the Lord that he will guide my thoughts, and prompt words of strength and consolation to me as I write them and to you as you read them.

For a beginning let me quote the language of the angel to the shepherds, "Fear not: for, behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Savior, which is Christ the Lord."—Luke ii. 10, 11. By reading the preceding verse we find that "the angel of the Lord came upon them, and the glory of the Lord shone round about them; and they were sore afraid." Yes, every poor sinner is made to fear when the angel of the Lord comes upon him, and when the glory of the Lord shone round about him, to show his own sinfulness and how much better and more glorious the Lord is than the carnal mind of the poor sinner conceived. He is made to see his wrong doings, and wonders what kind of power has hold of him. "They were sore afraid." The creature must mourn before he can be comforted; he must hunger and thirst before he can be filled; he must be tried in the fire before he can be brought forth as gold. When the light shone from heaven around Saul of Tarsus as he was on his mission, and the voice called out, "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?" he was "sore afraid," and cried out, "Who art thou, Lord?" Thus we see that not only in our little experience, but also in that of the shepherds and Saul of Tarsus,

"Twas grace that taught our heart to fear,
And grace our fears relieved."
The shepherds were afraid; and the angel said unto them, "Fear not." O that blessed message from the Lord, which is so comforting and soul-cheering to his little ones, "For, behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people." Is not this in accordance with the new covenant which the Lord maketh with the house of Israel and with the house of Judah? "For this is the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel after those days, saith the Lord; I will put my laws into their mind, and write them in their hearts: and I will be to them a God, and they shall be to me a people: and they shall not teach every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord: for all shall know me, from the least to the greatest. For I will be merciful to their unrighteousness, and their sins and their iniquities will I remember no more." Is not that indeed "good tidings of great joy," which is to all the members of the body of Jesus? "For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Savior, which is Christ the Lord." "Unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given: and the government shall be upon his shoulder: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The mighty God, The everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace."

The writer in Deuteronomy says, "My doctrine shall drop as the rain, my speech shall distill as the dew, as the small rain upon the tender herb." So your letter was to me. I felt that I was fed by the crumbs that fell from the Master's table. There was more in your letter than can be comprehended by our poor, finite minds. It was a rich feast to my soul. Surely God is able to ordain strength and perfect praise in the mouths of babes and sucklings. That which is little in the eyes of the world is most glorious, comforting and soul-cheering to the child of God who has traveled with Jesus in the regeneration. Such comfort received from the efforts of our brethren

When the apostles wrought miracles, still being learned, the people "took knowledge of them that they had been with Jesus."

Jesus said, "I am the true vine, and my Father is the husbandman." "I am the vine, ye are the branches." If we are children of God we are branches of the true vine. "If children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ." So, as Jesus died to save his people from their sins, and accomplished his work, the promise is sure to all the seed. Then it all hinges on the relationship of the child to the Father. "So all Israel shall be saved; as it is written, There shall come out of Sion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob." "They are not all Israel that are of Israel." "Neither because they are the seed of Abraham are they all children;" but "the children of the promise are counted for the seed." Though Abraham was made mighty nations, yet the Lord said, "In Isaac shall thy seed be called." "In thee and in thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed." "He saith not, And to seeds, as of many; but as of one, And to thy seed, which is Christ." So if we are children we are related to Christ; we are heirs of God, and joint heirs with the Lord Jesus Christ. "We are members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones. For this cause shall a man leave his father and mother, and shall be joined unto his wife, and they two shall be one flesh. This is a great mystery: but I speak concerning Christ and the church." The church is "the fullness of him that filleth all in all." If grace was given us in Christ before the world was, the church was his fullness even before the world was; but "the creature was made subject to vanity, not willingly, but by reason of him who hath subjected the same in hope." Therefore this fullness of Jesus, the church, which was chosen in him before the foundation of the world, was made subject to vanity by creation, fell under the law by transgression, is in bondage in the world, and groans, being burdened. God saw fit that the church (this same fullness) should pass through sorrows and tribulations; and we know by faith that these light afflictions, which are but for a moment, work for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. It is then preyed upon by the devil, is subject to vanity, being made so, not willingly, that is, the creature was not consulted with reference to it; but it was by reason of him who hath subjected the same creature or fullness in hope of a blessed deliverance, which was promised in Christ before the world was. When sin and trouble are at an end, and these bodies put on immortality, then shall the church, the fullness of that filleth all in all, be ushered into a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory, which shall be the glory of existence.

The glory of Christ is the church, and Jesus prayed to be glorified with the same glory which he had with the Father before the world was; and when he was on the cross he said, "It is finished." Therefore he had the promise that the glory should be given him; or, in my weak way of expressing it, that the church should be enveloped in immortality when these bodies are redeemed. So then, if we are children, our salvation is certain; for his children are members of his body, the fullness of him that filleth all in all. "But," says some one, "how do you know that all who are in captivity and in bondage shall be delivered?" I know it because Isaiah said, "Thus saith the Lord, Even the captives of the mighty shall be taken away, and the prey of the terrible shall be delivered; for I will contend with him that contendeth with thee, and I will save thy children." There are also other evidences of the certainty of the salvation of all the children of God. "It is of faith, that it might be by grace, to the end that the promise might be sure to all the seed." "Because the creature itself also shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God." "She shall bring forth a son, and thou shalt call his name Jesus; for he shall save his people from their sins."

The question that now directly concerns us is, Am I one of these promised children? Am I one that was embraced in that everlasting covenant between the Father and the Son that was made before the world was? Am I one of the members of the body of Jesus? To these questions I would answer, Do you feel that of yourself you can do no good thing? Do you know by experience that your attempts to satisfy the law are vain, and that nothing less than Jesus' blood and righteousness can do anything for poor, undone sinners like you? Do you feel that God's own arm brought salvation unto himself? Do you feel that God lifted you out of the horrible pit of miry clay, and established your goings, and that it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps? Do you feel that you need the renewing of the inward man day by day? Do you feel a conflict within, something prompting you to do evil, and something prompting you to do good? Do you realize that when you would do good, evil is present with you? Do you ever feel constrained to say, "O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" Do you love the children of God? Do you sometimes fear that your love for them may not be the true, genuine love which the members of the body of Jesus have for each other? Do you sometimes feel that you are alone, and that surely there is no one else surrounded with troubles like you? Do you feel that you are a child of God, you would not have such wicked thoughts and tormenting doubts and fears? Then I would say to the poor, wandering child, Lift up the head that is bowed down; look unto the Rock whence ye are hewn; for the Lord God, your Deliverer, shall come and strengthen you. Your mourning shall be turned into joy. You hunger and thirst after righteousness, and you shall be filled with songs of praise to his blessed name. He will not leave you comfortless. Your travels are those of a child of God, traveling with Jesus in the regeneration. "We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren." When we can fully realize these things we can say with Paul, "And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose. For whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son, that he might be the first-born among many brethren. Moreover, whom he did predestinate, them he also called: and whom he called, them he also justified: and whom he justified, them he also glorified. What shall we then say to these things? If God be for us, who can be against us? He that spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how shall he not with him also freely give us all things?"

This subject is too deep for a little, ignorant one like me. I feel constrained to say, "O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! How unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out!" Like one of old, may we be enabled to say, "My soul doth magnify the Lord, and my spirit hath rejoiced in God my Savior."

A. C. R. MORGAN.

VIBBARD, Mo., Dec. 30, 1890.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—In the year 1873, in the month of May, it was the pleasure of the Lord (I hope) to show me what a poor, lost sinner I was, and that all my righteousness was as filthy rags. Death and hell seemed to be my doom. I could do nothing to drive the awful weight of guilt off my mind, only for a short time, and then it would return with double force. Then I could do nothing but cry, "Lord, be merciful to me, a poor sinner." O how often did I look at the little insects, and wish that my future state was like theirs; or that I could believe the infidel doctrine, that when I was done with this world I would cease to exist. My case seemed to be an exception. "O! woe is me that I was born, or that I had died when I was in infancy!" But none of this did me any good. Then I would think, I will just go on, and not think of my sad condition, for it is no use—my doom is sealed; but the first I would know I would be pleading for mercy. My mind had no rest, as that was my thought by day and my dream by night. I was led along in this way about one year; but O that day, that never-to-be-forgotten day, in the afternoon, when the whole mist of darkness rolled off my mind. It was like a dark cloud that had been hiding the sun for days, and suddenly disappeared. So this awful load of guilt suddenly disappeared from my mind, and my soul was full of rejoicing. My mind often reverts to that time as one of the most sacred events of my life. Tongue and pen fail to describe the heavenly feast that I enjoyed there for a few moments. Here I first had a view of Christ as the Savior of sinners, and of the spirituality of his kingdom; at least my hope embraces that time as my first knowledge of him as being the Savior. Here the doctrine of election and predestination was presented to my mind as one of the fundamental principles of the doctrine of Christ. The longer I live the stronger I believe in the doctrine of eternal, unconditional election of grace, and all that was embraced in the election of grace. Christ made a full and complete atonement for them while on the cross; and just as certain as this is true, just that certain he (Christ) has and will call all of that number by his grace. When I say that he has and will call them, I do not mean that he will do it through some preacher; but I believe it is the work of the Spirit abstractly. Some of the most learned men of the world say that the atonement is not complete, but is in process of completion—that all Christ has ever done, and his intercession now with the Father, is to complete the atonement for all that will believe; but I believe that Christ made an atonement for the sins of his people when he shed his blood on the cross, regardless of what men may believe. That is, the atonement being made for his people, it did not depend on their believing in Christ, for his people are now, or were once, in a state of unbelief; and now, instead of Christ being at work to complete the atonement, he is bringing his people out of the state of unbelief, and that work is because of the atonement. I understand that all the work Christ performed before he came to the cross was preparatory to the atonement; and the work he has done since that is because of the atonement. Hence Christ's resurrection from the grave is no part of the atonement. Paul says that he "was delivered for [because of] our offenses, and was raised again for [because of] our justification." I therefore believe that he arose because his people were justified from the law by his blood; and he is now exalted on his mediatorial throne, to give repentance to all whom the Father gave him, and the forgiveness of sins.

This is the way, I hope, that I received a knowledge of him as my Savior, and of my true condition as a poor, lost sinner; and I believe that the herein contained previous has been spoken of above. I feel sure I did not receive this of man, neither was I taught it by man, but (as I humbly trust) by a revelation from God. Such a great work being now wrought in my mind, my pathway seemed to be strewn with love, joy and peace. I looked around and found a people called the Regular Predestinarian Baptists, who believed the same doctrine that I believed; and I believed them to be my people, and their God my God, and where they dwelt there I wanted to dwell. Accordingly I took up my abode with them by telling them some of the exercises of my mind, and was baptized in the fellowship of the New Garden Church by Elder Allen Sisk. This was in July, 1874; but O the dark and thorny desert which I have had to make my way through since! The most of it has been caused by my own sinful nature, because I could not cease from doing the things that I would not. The children of God know nothing only as they experience it. We experience a continual warfare, the Spirit warring against the flesh; and the great trouble with me is that I fail so often to keep my body under subjection. O these evil thoughts that arise in my mind! O that I could drive them away, and receive those refreshing seasons from the presence of the Lord as in days that are past and gone, when I sat down under his shadow with great delight, and his people, whose every way is known by him as the eternal God, who declared the end from the beginning, whose works were fully known from the foundation of the world, whose counsel and pleasure has been done in the salvation of his people, and will be done in gathering them as wheat into his heavenly garner. And as many as he needs as witnesses in and before the world he will make willing in the day of his power, have them in the church, and keep the church in order, peace and love, over and against all the confusion and strife of tongues; for all is with him, not only to bring, but also to keep and care for, all through the journey of life; delivering them out of all their afflictions, and enabling them to overcome death itself, which he has conquered or abolished for them. Therefore we may safely trust and fully confide in him at all times. Though our faith may be weak, and our foes strong, we shall conquer ere long. Amen.

GARDNER, Ill., Jan. 22, 1891.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—Yesterday I received the inclosed letter from sister Parker. Knowing that the readers of the SIGNS take a deep interest in our dear afflicted sister and her letters, I hasten to comply with her request and send it to you for publication.

W. R. RADBEER.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—I fear I am late to acknowledge the receipt of your dear, kind letter, together with your generous, helpful gift has caused you much anxiety; but about the time I received it my limbs which had for a long time dripped water to the amount, it is presumed, of a gallon every twenty-four hours, suddenly stopped discharging. The whole body, including face and neck, became inflamed, painful and swollen to a degree as caused me to be in an indescribable agony of pain. About eight days ago they began again to drop water and corruption, and through the mercy of God the past week has found me clothed in my right mind, and able to again take up my feeble, imperfect writing. The very choicest of all my blessings, save the consciousness of the dear Savior's presence and pardoning love, is this sweet intercourse I am permitted to enjoy through the medium of the pen with the dear people of God, who are the objects of his everlasting love and choice, and who in former times, we are told, spake often one to another. The same love is shed abroad in the hearts of the Lord's children to-day; the same drawing together of the golden cord that has its origin in the great Head, and unites us to one another and to Christ Jesus, through his redeeming blood and power and love. O! if it were not for this love how could we bear up under the doubts, the trials, the fiery darts of Satan, and the deep afflictions that beset us in this life? If in this life only we had hope, would we not be of all creatures most miserable? How great and wonderful seems the love that could save a wretch so vile as I; that could take me up out of the horrible pit, out of the miry clay, set my feet upon a rock, established my goings, and put a new song into my mouth, even praise to God. Wonder of wonders! unworthy, vile and sinful as I feel myself to be, that unto me, who truly am the least of all saints, should this grace be given; yes, given. So many claim that they seek, and of themselves, or through personal efforts, obtain this great salvation; but Paul says it was given to him; and to every sin-sick soul, sunk in the depths of corruption and sin, must this grace be given, freely and unconditionally, or alas! they are lost throughout time and eternity, and must sink to the regions of everlasting torment, uncleansed, unsaved, and unblest. The whole need not a physician, but they that are sick; and to the great Physician must the sinner turn to find that "balm in Gilead" to cure all his sickness, heal all his leprosy, and cleanse him from his putrefying sores; for "By grace are ye saved, through faith, and that not of yourselves; it is the gift of God." Blessed gift! What sweetness does the word contain! We are often made happy by gifts from friends, as I, dear father, was made happy by your gift, and those of other dear, kind kindred in Christ Jesus, at the glad Christmas time. But who ever gave a gift like the one given when on that glad morn the wise men came from the far country of the east and saw the Star of Bethlehem, that Star in the east, and found the blessed babe in the manger, wrapped in swaddling clothes, and knew it was the gift of God's dear and only Son, sent from the courts of heaven, made a little lower than the angels, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, and who by the shedding of his own precious blood was to save the Lord's dear and chosen people from their sins? Was not this a magnanimous gift indeed! And is it any wonder that one who had so long waited for his blessed coming, for this glorious gift, cried out, "Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, for mine eyes have seen thy salvation?" O blessed gift! O glorious legacy! whose bright effulgent dawn brought to a perishing people such glad tidings of great joy, and proclaimed to all, "Peace on earth, good will toward men." "And his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The mighty God, the everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace;" each appellation containing a world of meaning, of might and power; yet the same who is called "a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief;" the same lowly Nazarene, pitiful, merciful, crowned with thorns, and who wore the purple robe. O blessed Jesus! dear Savior of our souls! will it not be glorious, will we not be joyful and happy, when we awake in his likeness, see him in the beauty of his holiness, crowned with glory and the royal diadem, set down at the right hand of God, willing and ready to welcome the little ones for whom he died, not one of whom shall be turned away? Happy, enchanting thought.

Remember me, dear father, in love to your dear family, and the saints with whom you labor. Sincerely thanking you for your gift and comforting letter, trusting I may hear again from you, and commending you to Jesus, who is love, I am, unworthily your sister, I hope, in Christ,

MARY PARKER.

P. S.—Dear father, I feel an impression that I must ask you to send this letter to the SIGNS. It may just be a sick woman's morbid fancy. I leave it to your better judgment to decide. Do please write soon.

SPRINGVALE Va., Dec. 19, 1890.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—I send you a letter I received from a beloved sister. It was a blessed comfort to me; and feeling it might be the same to others, if published, it is at your disposal. The prophet Malachi says: "Then they that feared the Lord spake often one to another, and the Lord hearkened and heard it; and a book of remembrance was written before him for them that feared the Lord, and that thought upon his name." These little messages of love are cheering to the Lord's little ones in this world of sin and sorrow. The experience of her husband, brother J. F. Oliver, was published in the SIGNS of Oct. 8th, 1890.

Yours in hope,

M. E. DAVIS.

HERNDON, Va., Nov. 17, 1890.

MY VERY DEAR SISTER:—I received your very precious letter to-night, and greatly desire to reply comforting; but I feel too poor and imperfect to write a good letter, and you desire a good one in reply. But I feel sure you will pardon and pity the writer. If I can only tell you how much I enjoyed your dear letter, it will do me some good. I reckon there never was as poor a one as me that ever tried to write; yet how much I do desire to write something comforting to the dear little ones of the fold. Precious children! they are pure and holy in the sight of their Father; yet how vile they appear to themselves. They are washed and made white in the blood of the Lamb. He has given them eyes to see their depravity, and has given them ears to hear, and hearts to understand. We were destitute of these blessings until it pleased the Lord to give them to us. Yes, dear sister, I think I can say from experience that I was going the downward road, and I did nothing to merit God's favor. If I am saved, it is all of grace. It is not of works, lest any man should boast. Nor can I yet boast of good works, for it seems to me that I grow worse. As you said in your letter, it is so easy for me to serve the flesh. Dear sister, where is there any people like the Old Baptists? They speak one another's feelings. Surely they are all taught of the Lord. And his people shall all know him, from the least to the greatest. He knows them all, and has said, "My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me." Right here the question arises, Do I follow him? We see him weak, humble, lowly, obedient, doing his Father's will. We hear him in the garden saying, "Not as I will, but as thou wilt." He was subject to his Father's will in death. O for a submissive heart, that I, a poor worm, may say, "Thy will be done." But that must be given us. We cannot say that of ourselves. O what poor, helpless, dependent worms are we! O that I could follow my Lord and Master! I sometimes hope the spirit is willing; but the flesh is weak. Would we not be carried to the skies on flowery beds of ease? But if we are his we are chosen in the furnace of affliction, and sore trials await us; but if Jesus is near, how easy is the burden. He is the way, the truth and the life. None can come unto the Father but by him. Then our way must be through sorrow and acquaintance with grief. O that we could lay down every weight, and the sin that doth so easily beset us, and run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith. Yes, he has finished all for this poor worm; if not, I am lost entirely. I cannot tell you my feelings this morning, for I cannot find words to express them. While it is my desire to do good, evil is always present with me. I feel like the psalmist, "I sink in deep mire where there is no standing; I am come into deep waters, where the floods overflow me." "By the rivers of Babylon we sat down; yea, we wept when we remembered Zion. We hanged our harps upon the willows in the midst thereof." O, dearly beloved one, how shall we sing the Lord's song in a strange land? Yes, my harp is almost always hung upon the willows, and with inward weeping and groaning do I remember Zion.

"Sweet was the time when first I felt The Savior's pardoning love."

But now these lines express my feelings most of the time,

"My prayers are now a chattering noise, For Jesus hides his face; I read, the promise meets mine eyes, But will not reach my case."

But I must close this imperfect scribble. Like myself, it is full of scrawls and blots; but I know you will excuse it. I thank you for your most precious letter. It was very comforting to us both.

Your sister in affliction,

M. D. OLIVER.

FT. ROBINSON, Neb., Feb. 10, 1890.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—I will write you a few lines, to let you know there is one of those peculiar people in this country. We have been here over five years, and have not heard a gospel sermon preached during our sojourn here. I have a wife and two children, all of whom are believers in the Old Baptist doctrine. I joined the Baptists eleven years ago last May. There is quite a number of Arminian denominations here, but there is no place among them for us. I have many times thought how good the Lord is to keep us and direct us in the straight and narrow way, when we are beset on all sides with such doctrines as are preached by men. As I read my Bible and study it I am more convinced of God's predestination and foreordination. We have this one consolation, that God will take care of his children. I do know that the sheep know his voice, and follow him. Well do I remember that when I was a boy at home my father took the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, and I could not see any sense in reading it. Then I was blind; but now I see. Last Saturday I received a copy of the SIGNS and a copy of the Minutes of the last session of the Sandy Creeek Association. I could hardly lay them by until I had read them through. It was a feast of good things to read them. I would willingly walk ten miles to once more hear an Old Baptist sermon. Before I came here, I had attended twenty-five meetings. The last gospel sermon I heard was on the fourth Sunday in August, 1884. Elder A. E. McKnight came to our house and preached two sermons. Since we came here the Lord has blessed us with good health, strength and prosperity, and I feel thankful. I do not think there is a day passes but I return thanks to him, who is the Savior, and the giver of all things. We send our love to all of the same faith and order. May the Lord remember them and give them their reward, is my prayer.

Yours in the hope of eternal life,
T. G. HARRIS.

OPELIKA, Ala., Jan. 27, 1891.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—I have received some private letters from brethren, criticising some of my expressions in the SIGNS, and I hereby say that my intention, in presenting the truth was not for offense, and am truly sorry that any brother feels an offense from what I have written. I can truly say that no such offense was intended. I hope when I am writing against enemies to the truth that I am not writing against Primitive or Old School Baptists. I do not mean them. I know there are many good brethren who differ with me in my views on the Scriptures, especially on predestination. They do not see it as I do. Now I wish to ask pardon of any dear brother or sister who has become offended at what I have written, and to know assuredly that I meant it for the enemies outside the camp. We should not bite nor devour one another, but be kind and courteous and thoughtful. Sometimes we write in haste, and do not at all times weigh our expressions, nor think who we may offend. I hope I may be more guarded, and write the facts in the case without casting any reflecting upon those who may differ with us. I know I am but a sinner, and full of faults, and would gladly heal a wound thus made, knowing that the very spirit of the gospel is to save, and not destroy; to bind up, and to heal. Thus I hope we may be doubly on our guard in these things. I thank the brethren for such suggestions as will make us think more closely about these things. I do not like so much contention. I would we all were one, and could all see alike, and that we would all manifest the great love and meekness of Jesus, our head, and the Captain of our salvation. I wish here to make one observation. In an article I wrote about the sons of Zion and the sons of Greece, I had no reference whatever to our brethren; but I had heard a celebrated Universalist preacher, and I noticed his coil and his twisting, which made me think of a serpent. I had no reference to any of our brethren. The highest order of reason will not do for the saints of God; but the light of faith and the Spirit and revelation must be our true guide. May the Lord keep us from all evil, and allay our troubles in Zion, that peace, unity and love may prevail. This is my desire, and I hope it may also be mine to see and enjoy; for I love peace, and the unity of the children of God.

Yours in hope,
W. LIVELY.

OZARK, Ala., Jan. 23, 1891.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—The good Lord has been pleased to send the hand of affliction upon us here, and to remove some by death, and cause disease or pain to prey upon this sinful frame in which we daily groan, longing for that glorious deliverance, when the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest; yet we cannot say it is unjust in our blessed Savior to thus chastise us. But we often feel to adopt the language of the apostle and say, "And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose." Our blessed Savior never gives one stripe too many. Every conflict that we have to contend with is for our good. We realize more and more of our dependence upon Jesus. No doubt Paul had reference to this when he said, "I die daily." Yes, the christian dies to confidence in the flesh; and all fleshly dependence, and is brought to see that he is not his own keeper, but that he is kept by the power of God. The life of the christian is a life of experience, which teaches us that we are totally depraved. When I professed a hope in Jesus I thought I could live in the service of God all the days of my life, and never do a single wrong; but O how I was mistaken! I soon saw that I had evil thoughts, and an inclination to do wrong in my flesh, which made me mourn and fear that I had never been born again. There is one difference now and before I received a hope; now when I do wrong I am made to mourn and weep over it. "O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" The warfare is so great that we cannot do the things that we would. It is experience that teaches us to have no confidence in the flesh.

"By experience I do know

There's nothing good that I can do."

Yes, I do know that in my flesh dwells no good thing. Grace brings us all upon a level, and teaches us that God is God, and beside him there is no Savior. I am glad that I feel my dependence upon him, and that I can see how vile I am. O that our eyes were opened more to our own faults, and less to the faults of others. May the Lord humble us all, and cause brotherly love to exist among us. Remember me at the throne of grace.

Yours in affliction,

LEE HANCKS.

DUTTON, Ark., Jan. 11, 1891.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—I have for some time desired to commend to the household of faith the little book of four hundred pages entitled "Meditations on Portions of the Word," by Elder S. H. Durand. Those who read the SIGNS know of the gift bestowed upon brother Durand for edification. I was not aware that the Scriptures so minutely and fully described all the trials, sorrows and joys experienced by God's people until it was opened to my understanding through Elder Durand's writings. Those who wish to preserve them in book form will not regret the small price of one dollar for the work.

I wish also to say that the hymn and tune book by Elders Durand and Lester certainly fills a long-felt want among Primitive Baptists. All modern works of this kind, of which I have any knowledge, except this book, are filled with sensational music, as utterly foreign to the true spirit of worship as the isms of the present time are antagonistic to the truth. Every Primitive Baptist family that can sing, or that has one member who can sing, should have a copy. I sent for it as soon after it was published as I could get the money. My wife and myself and little daughter soon learned to sing nearly every tune, every one of which is in strict accord with the true spirit of devotion. There is as much difference in music as there is in the meek and gentle coo of the dove and the gay notes of a mocking bird. The songs of Babylon are as much out of place in Zion as the songs of Zion are in a strange land. Send for the hymn and tune book, brethren, learn to sing its hymns and tunes, and use them in worship. "Let the inhabitants of the rock sing," but let them sing as becomes saints.

With love to all who love the truth,
C. W. ANDERSON.

EDITORS SIGNS—DEAR BRETHREN:—Having great confidence in your judgment, and deeming you safe counsellors, I would be glad to have your views at some length in the SIGNS on the propriety or impropriety of members of the Baptist Church uniting with the "Farmer's Alliance," or "F. M. B. A." They are organizing lodges or unions all over this country, and they are very popular among farmers and laboring men. It may affect the church, as the matter is being discussed by Baptists to some extent. I have been a reader of the SIGNS about ten years, and it is the first time I have troubled you with any question; and I do so now because I believe that a word of counsel may be of benefit to some of the dear children of God. I would be glad if you would speak fully and freely, and oblige yours in love,

C. C. HARRIS.

WORLDLY SOCIETIES.

IN compliance with the request of brother C. C. Melton, on page 54, of this paper, we submit some considerations upon the subject of his inquiry, with the express understanding that no authority is claimed by us to dictate to any of the disciples of our Lord with regard to their conduct as followers of Jesus. The experience of nearly half a century has deeply impressed us with the consciousness that we are far more in need of guidance for our own steps, than qualified to direct others in the perfect pathway of righteousness.

With regard to the organizations named by our inquiring brother, as we have no knowledge of their characteristics of course we are not in a position to say anything. That they are popular with the world is not much assurance that they are adapted to promote the peace and comfort of the saints, who are not to the world for sympathy. If they are involved, are we not yielding to the spirit which moved him to betray his Master? The love of God will never lead any saint to consider any earthly advantage as worthy of a thought in comparison with the unbroken fellowship of the followers of Jesus. The spirit of love and humility does not seek personal gratification; that disciple who suffers and yields most for the peace and comfort of the saints, is most manifestly led by the Spirit of Christ. One emotion of that joy which is found in the answer of a good conscience toward God, is infinitely more precious to the saint than a lifetime of selfish exultation in the maintenance of personal rights and the satisfaction of having his own way. For the present comfort of the follower of Christ, it is far better that he should suffer personal wrong and temporal loss, than that he should be found transgressing the principle of mutual love and forbearance, which is the peculiar characteristic of the peaceable Spirit of Christ. "But if ye bite and devour one another, take heed that ye be not consumed one of another. This I say then, Walk in the Spirit, and ye shall not fulfill the lust of the flesh."—Gal. v. 15, 16.

So long as the saints are in the body of this death, they are subject to the infirmities and weakness of the flesh. Therefore it is important that they should at all times consider one another to provoke unto love and good works; and that they bear one we live therefore, or die, we are the Lord's." And again, "Ye are not your own; for ye are bought with a price; therefore glorify God in your body and in your spirit, which are God's."—Rom. xiv. 7, 8; 1 Cor. vi. 19, 20. Those who trust in the grace of God for salvation will not deny that their first and highest obligation is implicit obedience to the commandment of the Lord. This duty is the joyful privilege of such as are led by the Spirit of God, and they cannot afford to allow any temporal allurements to induce them to sacrifice the answer of a good conscience toward God which is the great reward experienced only in keeping the true and righteous statutes of Jesus.

While it may seem that strict conformity to the law of Christ in refraining from mingling with the world in such organizations as are apparently harmless, may restrain the liberty of the saints, there is a higher view of the matter, in which they will see the advantage of denying self, and studying the things which make for peace in the visibly organized church, which is the body of Christ, whose members are the purchase of his own precious blood. The covetousness of Judas Iscariot is regarded with abhorrence by all who love the Lord; surely none can desire to be governed by that principle. But if the hope of personal gain is allowed to influence our action where the peace of the church is involved, are we not yielding to the spirit which moved him to betray his Master? The love of God will never lead any saint to consider any earthly advantage as worthy of a thought in comparison with the unbroken fellowship of the followers of Jesus. The spirit of love and humility does not seek personal gratification; that disciple who suffers and yields most for the peace and comfort of the saints, is most manifestly led by the Spirit of Christ. One emotion of that joy which is found in the answer of a good conscience toward God, is infinitely more precious to the saint than a lifetime of selfish exultation in the maintenance of personal rights and the satisfaction of having his own way. For the present comfort of the follower of Christ, it is far better that he should suffer personal wrong and temporal loss, than that he should be found transgressing the principle of mutual love and forbearance, which is the peculiar characteristic of the peaceable Spirit of Christ. "But if ye bite and devour one another, take heed that ye be not consumed one of another. This I say then, Walk in the Spirit, and ye shall not fulfill the lust of the flesh."—Gal. v. 15, 16.

So long as the saints are in the body of this death, they are subject to the infirmities and weakness of the flesh. Therefore it is important that they should at all times consider one another to provoke unto love and good works; and that they bear one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ. In this course they will not be hasty in censuring one another, nor harsh and dictatorial in condemning an erring brother, even if he is overtaken in a fault. The relation borne by every member of the church to all other members is like that of the members of the natural body. All are mutually dependent one upon another, so that all are interested in the welfare of each other. The suffering of one member involves the whole body, and the profiting of the whole body is shared in its measure by every member. From this unity of interest arises the obligation of every member to "Follow after the things which make for peace, and things wherewith one may edify another." In pursuing this course, there is no room for the spirit of strife and contention; the only rivalry will be to seek to excel in submission and the denial of self in the service of each other. Whenever the desire to attain the mastery enters the heart of a disciple, it is certainly prompted by carnal selfishness, and not by the mind of Christ. The saints are admonished solemnly against this self-exaltation. "For I say, through the grace given unto me, to every man that is among you, not to think of himself more highly than he ought to think; but to think soberly, according as God hath dealt to every man the measure of faith." No caution is given against thinking of self more lowly than we ought to think. Neither is it intimated that there is a possibility of each regarding others more highly than he should. After enjoining upon the elders that they should be ensamples to flock, and of a ready mind take the oversight thereof, Peter says, Ye younger, submit yourselves unto the elder. YEA, ALL OF YOU BE SUBJECT ONE TO ANOTHER, and be clothed with humility; for God resisteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble. Humble yourselves therefore under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you in due time; casting all your care upon him; for he careth for you."—1 Peter v. 5-7. The whole law of Christ is included in the spirit of this inspired direction. Neither the elders nor the younger members are at liberty to follow any other rule but this. There is no aristocracy in the kingdom of Christ. The only ruler there is the Lord Jesus, who is the Author and Finisher of our faith. "For the Lord is our Judge, the Lord is our Lawgiver, (or, Statuemaker), the Lord is our King; he will save us."—Isa. xxxiii. 22. Within the walls of this city of our God there is protection for all who trust in the Lord. It is not wise to seek profit or safety in departing from the perfect law of this omnipotent Savior. Whatever the world may promise as an inducement for the saints to unite in their plans, the Lord will not allow his people to prosper in looking away from him for their comfort and rest.

The devices of finite wisdom are liable to disappointment and failure, but the name of the Lord is a strong tower, into which the righteous run, and find safety. "It is better to trust in the Lord than to put confidence in man; it is better to trust in the Lord than to put confidence in princes."—Psa. cxviii. 8, 9. Hence, it is certainly much more wise for the saints to obey his word than resort to any devices which have not his authority.

It is true that while they are in the world the disciples of Jesus must necessarily be associated with the people of the world. Otherwise they must needs go out of the world. But as pilgrims and strangers, it is needful that they should ever remember that this world is not the heritage to which they are called as the chosen followers of Christ. In this perishing world they are assured that their portion is tribulation. In Christ Jesus is their everlasting heritage of joy. They cannot be too careful in keeping themselves unspotted from the world, and in the love of God.—James. i. 27; Jude. 21. This can be done only by the careful observance of the perfect rule which our Lord has given in his revealed word, and walking according to the dictates of his Spirit. The tempter is ever ready to deceive them with false promises of advantages to be gained by conformity to the world. It is not wonderful that they are often misled by his treacherous wiles.

There is not much danger of saints being deceived either by openly immoral devices of the adversary, nor by his professedly religious schemes. Both of these are too manifestly opposed to godliness to delude those who have the love of God in their hearts. But it is not so easy for them to avoid the snare when it is presented as a merely financial or business organization. Then the tempter suggests that it is certainly right that they should avail themselves of every legitimate and honest means for the benefit of their families, and if they do not unite in the organization proposed they must labor under great embarrassment, if indeed they do not find themselves entirely without resources. If they think of the effect it may have in disturbing the peace of the church, it is intimated that the church is unreasonably particular, and their prejudices are not worthy of consideration. Perhaps some highly esteemed members may have given countenance to the proposed organization, and their example is cited as authority for others. No wonder that many are thus induced to join in such societies, who really prefer the peace of the church above all worldly and temporal considerations.

While it is not justifiable for the disciples of Jesus to profess greater confidence in humanly devised societies than in the church of Christ, it is not according to the gospel rule to deal harshly with a brother who has been thus entangled with the world. There is no better occasion for the exercise of brotherly charity than that which is presented in such a case. If the erring one has the love of Christ in his heart, it will cause him to feel the grief and distress which his action has brought upon the church, and he will not be long in realizing his fault. The rod of divine love will bring him to practical repentance; and he will confess and forsake his way. But if his error is met with a harsh and dictatorial spirit, unless grace reigns in his heart he will be confirmed in his own way, and be lost to the fellowship of the church.

It is much more difficult to reclaim an erring brother than to walk in conformity to the precept and example of Jesus when all is in peace. Certainly no good can be accomplished in resorting to unkindness and carnal resentment. Whether in the case submitted by brother Melton, or in any other error to which the saints are exposed, it is highly necessary to observe the injunction given by divine authority. "Brethren, if a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual, restore such a one in the spirit of meekness; considering thyself, lest thou also be tempted."—Gal. vi. 1. And again, "Brethren, if any of you do err from the truth, and one convert him; let him know that he which converteth a sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death, and shall receive a multitude of sins."—2 Peter ii. 19, 20. The spirit of vengeance cannot be found in the law of Christ; and there is no other law to which the church is at liberty to resort. Neither pastors nor deacons can find anything in the New Testament to authorize them to lay down rules for the administration of discipline among the members of the church. The perfect law is given by inspiration of God; and no men nor angels are qualified to add to or take from that inspired law. Doubtless many justly esteemed brethren have erred in assuming to fix some rule to meet cases which to them seemed unprovided for in the revealed standard; but the result has ever been, as it must ever be, the increased confusion and distress of the church. May the grace of God enable all his saints to heed the admonition, "My brethren, be not many masters, knowing that we shall receive the greater condemnation."—James iii. 1. The Spirit of Christ alone can lead his saints to dwell together in love, "Endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace."—Eph. iv. 3.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

DIED—In Covington, Ga., June 24th, 1890, Mrs. Laura C. Purington, wife of J. W. Purington, aged 30 years.

The deceased was the daughter of Mr. Joseph F. Hodgson, of Washington, D. C., and was married May 11th, 1881. She leaves a husband, one daughter and one son to mourn her departure.

J. W. PURINGTON.

COVINGTON, Ga.

BROTHER Samuel Carpenter died Oct. 14th, 1890, in the 49th year of his age.

He (with four others) was baptized in the fellowship of the Old School Predestinarian Baptist Church at Fairfield, Mich., Nov. 5th, 1865, by our dear brother, Elder J. A. Johnson, of Indiana, where he lived a consistent member of the church for a number of years, always a faithful attendant at the meetings of the church, unless providentially hindered. He with his father's family moved from here to a place called Deerfield about the year 1871, where they with others organized a church of the same faith and order. After the death of his father, which was but a few years, he with the rest of the family moved to the northern part of the state, where he died in the triumphs of living faith on the day above stated. I have before me a letter written by his sister Mary to Oliver Bragg, from which I will here write an extract:

"He was very patient, and wholly resigned to the will of God. The morning he died he talked to all of us, and sent special word to the ones down there that he had belonged with in the church, calling them his yoke-fellows, and sending his best wishes to them. All who saw and knew about it will say that it was the death-bed of a christian. While some of them were shedding tears he said, 'This is the richest day of my life.'"

He leaves a mother, two sisters, a large number of relatives and friends, besides the church, to mourn their loss; but they sorrow not as those without hope, as their loss is his eternal gain; for it is written, "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them."

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name of the subscriber on either the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date, this date denotes the time at which your subscription expires, and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

CORRESPONDENCE.

FOREKNOWLEDGE.

(Concluded from last number.)

"AND we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose. For whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son, that he might be the first-born among many brethren. Moreover, whom he did predestinate, them he also called; and whom he called, them he also justified; and whom he justified, them he also glorified."—Rom. viii. 28-30.

After the resurrection of the Son of God, "he showed himself alive after his passion, by many infallible proofs, being seen of them forty days, and speaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God." "And when he had spoken these things, while they beheld, he was taken up, and a cloud received him out of their sight." In Matthew it is declared, "Then the eleven disciples went away into Galilee, into a mountain where Jesus had appointed them. And when they saw him, they worshiped him: but some doubted. And Jesus came and spake unto them, saying, All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world. Amen."

The divine commission given the disciples shows that the risen, exalted and glorified Redeemer has infinite wisdom and almighty power; therefore nothing ever has nor ever can work against his redeemed vessels of mercy. He has seen of the travail of his soul, and is satisfied; and not a sentence is penned in either of the epistles, the Acts, or the book of Revelation, setting forth either directly or indirectly that he is not satisfied. "Knowing that Christ, being raised from the dead, dieth no more; death hath no more dominion over him. For in that he died, he died unto sin once; but in that he liveth, he liveth unto God." "For Christ is not entered into the holy places made with hands, which are the figures of the true; but into heaven itself, now to appear in the presence of God for us." In the purpose of God his loved ones, while passing through this world to their heavenly and eternal home, have internal and external conflicts appointed for them; for said Jesus, "These things I have spoken unto you, that in me ye might have peace. In the world ye shall have tribulation [thlipsis—pressure; affliction; no ordinary trial]; but be of good cheer: I have overcome the world." When the Lord told Ananias where he would find Saul of Tarsus, and what he had "seen in a vision," "Then Ananias answered, Lord, I have heard by many of this man, how much evil he hath done to thy saints at Jerusalem; and here he hath authority from the chief priests to bind all that call on thy name. But the Lord said unto him, Go thy way; for he is a chosen vessel unto me, to bear my name before the Gentiles, and kings, and the children of Israel; for I will show him how great things he must suffer for my name's sake." The "great things" which Paul must suffer were all appointed for him by his heavenly Lover, and not one of those things could be borne by any other man than Paul, and not one of them came before the appointed time; and from the moment he heard the words, "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?" until he penned the words, "For I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing;" every trial, every persecution from the enemies of God's truth, worked together for his good and the declarative glory of God. He says concerning himself, "Who was before a blasphemer, and a persecutor, and injurious; but I obtained mercy, because I did it ignorantly in unbelief." "Howbeit for this cause I obtained mercy, that in me first Jesus Christ might show forth all long-suffering, for a pattern [hypotuposis, an under or lesser type; that is, he was a type for true believers, but as such less than the Lord Jesus Christ, in his suffering here in the flesh] to them which should hereafter believe on him to life everlasting." "And now, behold, I go bound in the spirit unto Jerusalem, not knowing the things that shall befall me there; save that the Holy Ghost witnesseth in every city, saying that bonds and afflictions abide [margin, wait for me] me. But none of these things move me, neither count I my life dear unto myself, so that I might finish my course with joy, and the ministry which I have received of the Lord Jesus, to testify the gospel of the grace of God." Upon another occasion, when his brethren "besought him not to go up to Jerusalem, then Paul answered, What mean ye to weep and to break mine heart? for I am ready not to be bound only, but also to die at Jerusalem for the name of the Lord Jesus. And when he would not be persuaded, we ceased, saying, The will of the Lord be done." Also, "Wherein I suffer trouble, as an evil doer, even unto bonds; but the word of God is not bound; therefore I endure all things for the elect's sakes, that they may also obtain the salvation which is in Christ Jesus with eternal glory."

The trials, afflictions and persecutions which the apostle endured pressed him to pen the declaration, "We know that all things work together for good to them that love God." How important to notice the characters to whom the apostle applies the precious words, for they are lovers of God, and not the world of mankind indiscriminately. All things work together for evil to the enemies of God and his truth; for "the Lord hath made all things for himself; yea, even the wicked for the day of evil." Whenever or by whomsoever the expressions are used "that as God has predestinated such things, men are not to blame for what they do, and the church has not any right to enforce her discipline on her members," &c., what a spirit such language manifests on the part of them who use it; for it shows not the love and fear of God. But saith our God, "To this man will I look, even to him that is poor, and of a contrite spirit, and trembleth at my word." Such a person loves God, and at times so realizes his nothingness, shortcomings and barrenness of mind that he trembles at the word of God; for said the God of the universe, "My thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord; for as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts." The apostle rebuked the same spirit which is now at times showing itself in the visibly organized church, in some of the members; and it is the same spirit now that it was eighteen hundred years ago. "Thou wilt say then unto me, Why doth he yet find fault? for who hath resisted his will? Nay but, O man, who art thou that repliest against God? Shall the thing formed say to him that formed it, Why hast thou made me thus? Hath not the potter power over the clay, of the same lump to make one vessel unto honor and another unto dishonor? What if God, willing to show his wrath, and to make his power known, endured with much long-suffering the vessels of wrath fitted [katartizo, to make fully ready] to destruction; and that he might make known the riches of his glory on the vessels of mercy, which he had afore prepared unto glory?" Jude said, "For there are certain men crept in unawares, who were before of old ordained to this condemnation; ungodly men, turning the grace of our God into lasciviousness [asclgeia, excess, licentiousness, all manner of wickedness; and the same word is recorded six times in the New Testament with precisely the same meaning], and denying the only Lord God, and our Lord Jesus Christ." Every such character shows nothing to indicate that they either believe the written word of God or have any real love for the church, and it is no wonder that they turn the grace of God into licentiousness; but it is exceedingly painful that any who profess to believe the Scriptures should ever be found trying to shield themselves behind the glorious doctrine of predestination for their unrighteous course they often pursue, for the inspired Paul has set the seal of condemnation on such a course of conduct. Hence Jude exhorts the beloved to whom he wrote to "earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered to the saints." When the faith is earnestly contended for, if any of those "creepers" are in the visibly organized church they will show much uneasiness; but how will it be with them who truly love God, and are the called according to his purpose? They will rejoice that the truth is working for their good; and in times of deep distress they are enabled to say, in harmony with Job, "Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him." David said, "Before I was afflicted I went astray; but now have I kept thy word." Lovers of our God, when you have time read the one hundred and thirty-ninth Psalm, for in that is clearly set forth the omnipresence, omniscience and omnipotence of Jehovah.

When the time comes for our God to call a sinner to a knowledge of the truth, during the rest of the natural life of such person whatever trials, whether sickness, or loss of worldly possessions or dear friends, everything will as certainly work for the good of such person as God's throne is immovable; and such tried and afflicted one will feel so little and weak that no trouble will be caused in the church by willfully transgress-

the commandments of God, and trembling one will find no fault

Bible doctrine is contended for. The children are "always bearing about in the body the dying of the Lord Jesus, that the life also of Jesus might be made manifest in our body." They who are thus bearing about the dying of the Lord Jesus feel the force of the words, "What shall we say then? Shall we continue in sin, that grace may abound? God forbid. How shall we, that are dead to sin, live any longer therein?" "He that spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how shall he not with him also freely give us all things?"

"Therefore let no man glory in man: for all things are yours; whether Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas, or the world, or life, or death, or things present, or things to come; all are yours; and ye are Christ's; and Christ is God's." There will be no mistake in the application of the things which our God has appointed for each vessel of mercy. What did Job say concerning his afflictions, as the messengers brought the sad tidings to him? Did he affirm that anything had merely happened by chance? No; but he "arose, and rent his mantle, and shaved his head, and fell down upon the ground, and worshiped," saying, "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord. In all this Job sinned not, nor charged God foolishly" (tiphlah, attributed folly to God). How many of the children of God in their sore afflictions have said, "I know it is all right that I suffer thus, or else it would not be so." Was not every trial which Job endured foreknown and divinely appointed? We will now hear what he said: "Then said his wife unto him, Dost thou still retain thine integrity? curse God and die. But he said unto her, Thou speakest as one of the foolish women speaketh. What! shall we receive good at the hand of God, and shall we not receive evil? In all this did not Job sin with his lips." (Why Job! How harshly your words grate upon the ears of them who do not want to hear anything about God's eternally fixed purpose.) "But he is in one mind, and who can turn him? and what his soul desireth, even that he doeth. For he performeth the thing that is appointed for me; and many such things are with him." Caviler, if many such things are with God, are they not seen or foreknown? and if foreknown, are they not decreed? Our God foreknows what will be by determining what shall be; and it is not because our God foresees a thing that it is decreed, but he foresees it because it is ordained by him to come to pass exactly as thus foreknown.

Were not all those sore afflictions working together for Job's good? Certainly they were; for says he, "But he knoweth the way that I take: when he hath tried me I shall come forth as gold." Said Paul, "For whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the Scriptures might have hope." The apostles rejoiced in what was recorded by the prophets and Job; for James said, "Take, my brethren, the prophets, who have spoken in the name of the Lord, for an example of suffering affliction, and of patience. Behold, we count them happy which endure. Ye have heard of the patience of Job, and have seen the end of the Lord; that the Lord is very pitiful, and of tender mercy."

Dear, trembling, tempest-tossed child of God, has it not been very precious to you at times to meditate upon the precious record made in the Scriptures by God's servants concerning his everlasting love, his immutability, and his eternally fixed purpose? For if you have been brought to see and know something of the depravity of your own heart, you have nothing else to uphold you but the manifestation of that glorious truth, "For I am the Lord: I change not; therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed." Also, "For he that toucheth you, toucheth the apple of his eye." He led Jacob "about, he instructed him, he kept him as the apple of his eye." Perhaps some dearly beloved and afflicted child of God may read this and say in his heart, if not orally,

"In each event of life how clear
Thy ruling hand I see!

Each blessing to my soul most dear,
Because conferr'd by thee.

"In ev'ry joy that crowns my days,
In ev'ry pain I bear,

My heart shall find delight in praise,
Or seek relief in pray'r."

If setting forth in Bible language what inspired patriarchs, prophets and apostles have recorded concerning the eternally fixed purpose of God, concerning the righteous and the wicked, "darkens counsel," so be it. There is a kind of counsel at the present day very much darkened when brought in contact with the "unerring standard;" for Scripture truth shows carnal counsel not only to be much darkened thereby, but that it is darkness itself. There was a spirit anciently which said "to the seers, See not; and to the prophets, Prophesy not unto us right things; speak unto us smooth things; prophesy deceits;" and that same spirit is abroad in the earth to-day. The psalmist said of a character, "The words of his mouth were smoother than butter, but war was in his heart: his words were softer than oil, yet they were drawn swords." Many who have stated that they do not want to hear so much doctrine, desire more (as they term it) practical godliness, must live right, bury all differences, &c., have caused by their carnal zeal much sorrow and distress amongst God's dear people.

The apostle did not bandy compliments, nor show any countenance to error; for he said, "I marvel that ye are so soon removed from him that called you into the grace of Christ unto another gospel; which is not another; but there be some that trouble you, and would pervert the gospel of Christ. But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed. As we said before, so say I now again, If any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed." What is the lesson taught in this last quotation? It is not what this man believes, or that one holds to, or that church indorses, nor what some would-be wise think would be good and edifying; for unless it is sustained by a "Thus saith the Lord" it is nothing but imagination, and will not feed the hungry child of God, but for a time it may please the carnal fancy.

During the past forty years the writer of this communication has visited a number of God's afflicted children, and never heard one say that the affliction came by chance, neither that such affliction was not right, however dark the same might appear; and certainly if right, must work for their good. How clearly God's sovereignty is thus seen. One lingers for years, having what is termed consumption; another is gradually wasting away of that dread disease known as cancer; another is suffering great mental agony caused by the unexpected death of a dear friend; another has been confiding, and through such confidence wicked, designing men have taken from him much of his worldly treasure, which had cost him much toil; but there is no need of enumerating more causes. Was not each case foreknown before such person was born of the flesh? Certainly; and all who love God, that are thus afflicted, the sorrows through which they pass are working together for their good and the declarative glory of their dear Redeemer.

Now the last part of the text used to base the remarks on concerning foreknowledge shall be brought forward to show why all things thus work together for good, and that nothing can work against such. The last two verses of the text are connected to the former one by the particle "for," equivalent to "because." "For whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son, that he might be the first-born among many brethren. Moreover, whom he did predestinate, them he also called; and whom he called, them he also justified; and whom he justified, them he also glorified." This divine concatenation shows why "all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose." In this glorious chain is recorded foreknow, predestinate, called, justified and glorified; and it is not possible for language to express the final victory of every member composing the church, which is the body of Christ, in more positive terms; and, as the apostle said, "What shall we then say to these things? If God be for us, who can be against us?"

When the writer of this communication gets into a state of mind that he is either ashamed or afraid to contend for those cardinal and glorious principles of the gospel, then it will be time for him to cease saying anything about the glorious doctrine of God our Savior.

WILLIAM J. PURINGTON.

HOPEWELL, N. J., Feb. 16, 1891.

NEW HOLLAND, OHIO, Jan. 21, 1891.

MY DEAR SISTER BENEDICT:—Your kind but urgent and repeated request for me to write upon the beautiful story of Ruth weighs upon me with such force that, incompetent as I know myself to be to treat upon such a deep, glorious subject, I feel called upon to make the effort, feeling the while most deeply my weakness, and knowing that it would take the pen of a ready and most gifted writer to do justice to such a gloriously beautiful subject.

Our story opens before the coming of the Messiah. We are told, "When the judges ruled" Israel. For from the union of the gentle and virtuous Ruth with the good and noble and wealthy Boaz was to spring Obed, the father of Jesse, from whom the great Branch in prophecy was to spring; who, we are told, was a "Root out of Jesse," who was indeed "the Lily of the valleys," "the Rose of Sharon," "the bright and morning Star;" he who was to redeem and rule Israel, and reign the King in glory.

At the opening of our story a severe famine laid waste and barren the land of Judah, and brought great suffering to the inhabitants. Elimelech, with his wife Naomi and his two sons, left their home and went into the land of Moab, where plenty reigned, and where the sons, Mahlon and Chilion, were married to two Moabitish maidens, named Orpah and Ruth. It is supposed that the noble heart of this good and loving wife and mother, Naomi, surrounded by the love and protection of her husband and children, was happy and content, although she had left the scenes familiar and dear to her girlhood, and gone to a strange country, among a people of a different nationality, who worshiped a god not like unto our God. But when the beloved husband was taken from her by death, and then the two only sons, she was heart-broken indeed. Standing alone upon the threshold of her broken household, the golden bowl broken which contained so much love and home-happiness, with the broken fragments lying at her feet, is it any wonder if the poor woman felt there was nothing left her but the ashes of life? With swelling heart, and eyes swimming with tears, how she must have looked longingly toward the land of her nativity, where in those early bygone days, before the bitter winds of adversity swept away her earthly possessions, took from her her most precious human love, snapped asunder the strongest, dearest earthly ties, she was the happiest of maidens, the most joyous and prosperous of wives. In this awful agony and desolation how like balm must have been the love and fidelity shown her by both of her daughters-in-law. Orpah, it is supposed, really thought she loved her good, kind mother-in-law well enough to forsake the scenes of her childhood and follow Naomi to her dear old former home; yet she no doubt secretly clung to her gods, just as the worldling clings to the frivolities and vanities that form his or her idol of worship. But Ruth, dear, tender-hearted, fervent-loving Ruth, whom the mother had entreated, as well as Orpah, to go back to the loved homes in Moab, deeply mourning now more for their sakes than for her own, she said that the hand of the Lord had gone against her. Methinks I see the lovely, impassioned, tearful face of Ruth, her young, strong arms thrown about the poor, bent form of Naomi, while she cried, "Entreat me not to leave thee." O the depths of meaning, the deep fervency of love, contained in the word entreat. "Entreat me not to leave thee, or to return from following after thee; for whither thou goest I will go; and where thou lodgest I will lodge; thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God." Wonderful utterances. Who but a poor, helpless sinner, with their feet stuck in the mire and clay, whose very soul has been stirred to its deepest depths, with the desire in the heart to have their feet set upon the Rock, Christ Jesus, could utter such a fervent cry? And it must be that Ruth, dear, loving Ruth, had tasted the bitterness of sin, had seen the folly of all earthly hopes and vanities, else she too, with Orpah, would have gone back to her gods instead of so clinging, as we might here say, to the mother, the church.

When Naomi at last reached her native city, poor in spirit, aged, and almost destitute of this world's goods, how very sad must have been her feelings. Yet how many of us in this day are made in a great measure to taste and drink the bitter dregs of worldly loss and adversity. But Naomi still had some good, true friends; and as they greeted her, calling her by her familiar name, she said, "Call me not Naomi, call me Mara [signifying bitterness, or one who weeps]; for the Almighty hath dealt very bitterly with me." The tie between this poor, afflicted woman and her daughter Ruth must now have become strong indeed. Here the human and the divine love sweetly blend and run together as two drops of water flowing into one; for Naomi's God was now Ruth's God, and her people Ruth's people. What a dear daughter did this Moabitish maiden prove to be to the destitute and sorrowful Naomi. "Let me," said she, "now go to the field and glean after the reapers." And the mother bade her go. What a pleasant rural scene must have opened to the view of this grand young heart as she left the heated city and walked through the shady walks of the country, where the fields ripe with the golden harvest stretched their broad acres in ocean-like waves before her. Here the newly heaven-born soul was led into green pastures, she walked beside the still waters, and her soul must have been filled with the sweet song of redeeming love. "And she gleaned in the field after the reapers." Ah, what rich golden grain it was to her. How eagerly must she have picked up the golden heads dropped on purpose for her. For "it was her hap to light upon a part of the field belonging unto Boaz, a near kinsman of Elimelech." How kindly did the rich owner of those rich harvests treat the lonely stranger. How soothing to her trembling soul were his words. "Why," said she, "have I found grace in thine eyes, that thou shouldst take knowledge of me, seeing I am a stranger?" But Boaz answered her, that he had heard of all her kindness to her mother-in-law. Is not this the way the dear heavenly Master speaks to us when we first begin to eat of his rich harvest, when we taste his wondrous love and grace? Do we not find that he has known and loved us, even before we knew him? For no man can come unto the Son, Jesus, unless the Father, who sent him, draw him. Boaz said unto Ruth, "The Lord recompense thy work, and a full reward be given thee of the Lord God of Israel, under whose wings thou hast come to trust." O how sweet to the poor, the weary, the heavy laden soul, to be thus led into the golden harvest, to lie down in green pastures, to be led beside the still waters, to rest and trust quietly under the shadow of the wings of the Almighty. Ruth's reply to Boaz was, that his words had comforted her, that he had spoken friendly unto her, though she was not like his handmaidens. Here we see the humility every child of God experiences, the feeling of insufficiency, and the lack of good qualities and fruits they see in the brethren, which they themselves do not possess. "I am not like thy handmaidens." Therefore she was so surprised to receive words of kindness, expressions of favor and love, from the dear Master, when she had no goodness, no spiritual beauty, no robe of righteousness, such as she saw those have whom she knew had a right to his protection, kindness and love.

After Ruth had gleaned until even, and had beaten out the grain, having about an ephah (a bushel and a half) of barley, she went home and told her mother-in-law all that had transpired during the day, and of the kindness of Boaz. How great was the mother's joy while she listened to the glad story, and learned the one who had shown her daughter such kindness was her near kinsman. And how the inhabitants of Zion, the church, are always rejoiced when any come with singing unto them, telling what great things the Lord has done for them. As the church always bids the newly heaven-born soul to be buried with the Lord in baptism, and thus be espoused to the Bridegroom (the bride, the church, and the Bridegroom, the Head, being one—a sweet and beautiful blending), so did this mother tell Ruth what to do and where to go. How graciously did Boaz receive the virtuous, humble maiden. How careful was he to have her preserve her purity and chastity. "All the people of my city," said he, "know that thou art a virtuous woman." And behold how he sent her away laden with the golden sheaves of his love, that which was the bread of life. She had upon her a veil, which covered her. So do we ever behold the King with a veil (the flesh) between us, until this mortal shall have put on immortality, and we be clothed upon with our house which is from heaven. But the golden sheaves covered the length and breadth of the veil, thus serving as a shield to cover Ruth from any evil imputations from the idle, evil loafers of the city. So does the righteousness of Christ take away from us the sting and reproach of sin; and though still sinners in a sinful world, if we go forth laden with the golden sheaves of the fruit of the Holy Spirit, sin cannot harm us, and our light will so shine before men that others may see our good works, and glorify our Father in heaven.

As Boaz was not long in performing his promise to Ruth, in redeeming her inheritance, and espousing her as his wife, so neither does the Lord fail, nor is he slack in performing his promise to Israel. And from this natural union between Boaz and Ruth do we trace the lineage of Jesus, "a root out of Jesse," "the offspring of David," who was to shed his precious blood to redeem the bride, the Lamb's wife, and present her a chaste and holy virgin, without spot or wrinkle, or any such thing. O the depth of the riches of love such as this! Like Naomi, like Ruth, sorrowful, destitute, with none to help, none to redeem her inheritance, with her garments all filthy with sin, bowed to the dust with grief, whither would she go but to the Lord of harvests, whose rich fields waved in golden beauty before her eyes? Did the Lord send her empty away? Did he not spread his garment about her, cover her with golden sheaves, and grant her a right to an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, that fadeth not away, eternal and in the heavens? Was ever an inheritance bought with such a price? Was ever such a sign of redemption given as that which God bestowed in the gift of his dear and only Son? Was ever such a spotless purity found as that gained through the washing in his blood? Is it any wonder she was a "bride adorned for her husband," in spotless whiteness, "all glorious within," decked with the jewels of such love? O wondrous union! O rapturous love, crowns a marriage like this! To meditate upon it, to be able to catch a faint glimpse of its richness, its beauty and purity, through a glass darkly, fills the soul with unutterable joy. It is like a strain of heavenly music, methinks, such as John heard the harpers sing and harp upon their harps of gold in the heavenly Jerusalem, the city of our wondrous King.

MARY PARKER.

CRAMER, Ill., Jan. 11, 1891.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS:—I feel like talking a little to the readers of the SIGNS. This impression has rested very strongly upon my mind, and in order to get rid of it I thought I would once more make the attempt, hoping the Spirit of divine truth may direct my pen. But if you cannot discern the Spirit of the Master in it, you are at liberty to throw it into the waste-basket.

Some six weeks ago I sent to you for and received the Church History and Elder Durand's book, "Meditations on portions of the word." I was much interested in reading the "Meditations," and feel to recommend it to all lovers of the truth. It will do to keep and hand down to our children. I was very much interested in the Church History, although I found some things in it that I could not say amen to. I had borrowed from a brother "Fox's History of Martyrs," and the reading of that caused me to send for the Church History. It is wonderful to think of the rivers of blood that have been shed by those professing the religion of Christ. As the history states, at one period of time the blood shed would have made a river ten feet deep, ten feet wide, and twenty-five miles long. In all this we have before us the fulfilling of the Scriptures as to what should be. Why it should thus be is unknown to us. It surely was so ordained to be; otherwise it all came by chance. I firmly believe that the eternal God could have had it otherwise if it had been his will and purpose; for he has all power in heaven and earth. He had declared that he would put enmity between the woman's seed and the serpent's seed, and that the seed of the woman (Christ) should bruise the serpent's head. When Jesus commissioned his servants and sent them forth he said, "Ye shall be hated of all men for my name's sake." And, "Who-soever killeth you shall think he doeth God service." How cheerfully those martyrs went to the burning, rejoicing that they were counted worthy to suffer death for his name's sake. O, my dear brethren, how thankful we should be for the blessed privileges we enjoy, of worshiping God according to the dictates of our own conscience. It seems to me that in this sense, in our beloved country, Satan is bound. A thousand years are as one day with the Lord.

Is not the gospel day the millennium? We learn that Satan shall be loosed for a little season, to gather Gog and Magog to battle, and they shall compass the camp of the saints. Dear brethren, we know not how long we may be permitted to worship under our own vine and fig tree, none daring to molest us. The daughters of the old mother are ready to put to death all the true worshipers, just as soon as they have the law power. I believe, from reading the Church History, that the church of Christ at this time comes the nearest to the apostolic church of any other age, even while there is some contention among the Baptists about some points of doctrine, predestination being one.

Now, dear brethren, we say we do not make predestination a bar of fellowship; then let us not call brethren who do not see it as we do Arminians and Ashdods. This hurts the feelings of good brethren, supporters of the SIGNS, who do not rail against the doctrine, but say they cannot see it in that way. While I believe in predestination in its full sense, yet I think it no profit to agitate that point of the mystery of iniquity. Elder Hassell says in the History that in a denial of predestination in its full sense there is danger of running into Arminianism. This I believe to be true; yet I do not feel like calling them Arminians and Ashdods. Brethren, do not do wrong in this matter. If the good Lord has not revealed it to them, we cannot make them believe it by brow-beating and insulting them. That would have a tendency to divide; and many might, through a fleshly feeling, follow the preacher instead of the Savior. Sometimes brethren in the apostles' time had disputes and separated; and so it is now. Brethren will fall out, and they will have their leaders. One brother will say, If you patronize or fellowship such a paper or brother, we will have no fellowship for you; and you must not do so any more. While there are good brethren on both sides, yet they manifest a bad spirit, and sow the seeds of discord. My dear brethren, you may try to shut them out of your fellowship, yet the good Lord knows them that are his.

These things surely are a great trouble to many precious souls, and are a hindrance to the cause of God and truth. None of us are perfect, and all are liable to be wrong in many things. Then let us not persecute. We are admonished to love even our enemies, and to pray for them. I am afraid it is often the case that we do not pray for our brother that differs from us and would misrepresent us.

There is a need be that offenses come; but woe unto him by whom they come.

There are but few, to my knowledge, of the Baptists in this region who believe just as I do. I am the least of all, and often doubt whether I have been born again; yet I cannot help believing as I do. But I do not feel like calling the others by hard names, nor like falling out with them. They believe in salvation by grace alone, and that to fallen sinners of Adam's race; that the elect were chosen in Christ Jesus before the foundation of the world; that they compose the bride, the Lamb's wife; that Christ loved his church, and gave himself for it; that when he suffered upon the cross, and cried, "It is finished," he paid the ransom price, redeemed them, washed and purified them by his precious blood; that they were one with him in his death and resurrection; that he loved them with an everlasting love, and therefore with loving-kindness draws them; that not one of them will be lost.

It seems to be a great mystery to many why God should have a purpose in the wickedness of man, and in shedding the blood of his fellow-man, and yet God be not the author of sin. It is a mystery indeed. We know God is not the author of sin. It is sin for you or I to take the life of our fellow-man; but it is not sin in God to take man's life in any way he may see fit. He does as he pleases, and we have to bow and submit to his almighty power. Our enemies can have no power against him or his children. He holds all power in heaven and earth.

"Not a single shaft can hit
Until the God of love sees fit."

Brethren, let us not fall out by the way, but be kind one to another. I feel I have come far short of writing what I expected to write. If you throw this aside and do not print it, I will not feel the least hardness toward you.

E. D. VARNES.

JULIAN, Ala., Jan. 27, 1891.

BRETHREN BEEBE:—I am in receipt of a letter from brother Omer Summers, of Markle, Indiana, in which he states that he does not understand the expression in an article written by myself, and published in the SIGNS of January 7th, 1891, viz., "Man's extremity is often God's opportunity." He says he can see "nothing in the expression but pure, unadulterated Arminianism," and requests me to write again concerning it, either privately or through the SIGNS; and, by your permission, I will reply through the SIGNS, thinking there might be others in the same fix. Be it far from me to use any expression, knowingly, that would carry the idea of Arminianism. I humbly trust that I have been permanently weaned from that. I do not want anything that looks like, tastes like or smells like Arminianism. I do not know that I am able to explain all that the expression might carry with it; but if you find, my dear brother, that it carries the idea of Arminianism in any shape, be assured that I did not intend to convey that idea; neither do I expect to try to justify myself in using the expression, more than to try to explain what I meant when I used it. If after I do that, in your judgment you think it an improper expression, just erase it from my article; for I often find myself at a loss for words suitable to convey my ideas, and nothing else, either in speaking or writing.

Extremity means, according to Webster, "utmost point or degree; necessity." Opportunity means "fit or convenient time." When I used the expression referred to by brother Summers, if I mistake not, I was speaking of the prophet Elijah. After he had prophesied against Ahab "the word of the Lord came unto him, saying, Get thee hence, and turn thee eastward, and hide thyself by the brook Cherith, that is before Jordan. And it shall be, that thou shalt drink of the brook; and I have commanded the ravens to feed thee there." Was not Elijah's extremity or necessity for food God's opportunity, or fit, convenient, suitable, or predestinated time, to send him food by the ravens? God's opportunity is always the time that he has predestinated to do a thing; and man's extremity or necessity always comes at the time that God has predestinated for it to come. "And it came to pass after awhile, that the brook dried up, because there had been no rain in the land. And the word of the Lord came unto him, saying, Arise, get thee to Zarephath, which belongeth to Zidon, and dwell there: behold, I have commanded a widow woman there to sustain thee." Thus again Elijah's extremity, or necessity for water, was God's opportunity or fit time to send him to the widow woman for sustenance; and again, the widow woman's extremity or necessity for meal and oil was God's opportunity or fit time to make known unto her the fact that the meal should not waste nor the oil fail. All of it was according to God's determinate counsel and foreknowledge. Again, the widow's extremity, or utmost point of grief for her son that had died, was God's opportunity or convenient time to make his power known in restoring her son to life. I might be asked, Could not God have made his power known at some other time, or in some other way? If it had seemed good in his sight he could. God does nothing only at a fit time, at the very moment, in the identical way, and at the precise place, that he has pre-determined in his determinate counsel and foreknowledge for it to be. Let us examine a little more. Was not Joseph's extremity, or necessity for deliverance out of the pit, God's opportunity or fit time for the Midianites, merchantmen, to pass, and Joseph to be sold to Ishmaelites? Was not Pharaoh's extremity, or utmost desire to know the interpretation of his dreams, God's opportunity or convenient time to enable Joseph to interpret the dreams? Was not Jacob's extremity, or necessity for food, God's opportunity to send them down into Egypt, in fulfillment of the covenant made with Abraham? Was not the extremity or necessity for Moses' life to be preserved, God's opportunity for having an ark of bulrushes made? Was not the necessity for him to be taken out of the water God's opportunity for sending Pharaoh's daughter there to bathe, and causing her to have compassion on him, and to get his mother to nurse him? I would ask my kindred in Christ generally, Was it not at your last extremity, or utmost point of necessity, when you had given up all hope in an arm of flesh, and seen no chance for escaping endless punishment? At this extremity was it not God's opportunity, or a fit and convenient time for God to reveal unto you Christ Jesus the Lord as the chiefest among ten thousand and the one altogether lovely? I could enumerate many other instances in which I understand man's extremity to be God's opportunity; but time and space forbid. I hope this will show to brother Summers the idea I intended conveying; and if you can see nothing but Arminianism in the expression, just erase it. I wish to say in conclusion that I am thankful to almighty God that things are just like they are, and that we do not live in a chance world. If everything is not taking place according to God's eternal purpose, then it must be by chance. I cannot see it any other way; and if by chance, the sun may rise in the north some morning, the roots of trees may be growing upward, our children might be born with their eyes in the back of their heads, &c. But, in the language of the poet,

"I'm but a stranger here below,
As all my fathers were;
May I be well prepared to go
When I the summons hear."

Love to all.

CHICKLAH, Yell Co., Ark.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—As I am a reader of the SIGNS, it is on my mind to contribute a letter to it, provided what I write meets your approbation. I feel like adding my testimony to the truth. I will condense as best I can.

The mother of Zebedee's children made a request for her sons, that one might sit on the right hand, and the other on the left, in the kingdom with Jesus. But Jesus said to her, "It shall be given to them for whom it is prepared of my Father."—Matt. xx. 23. This preparation I want to notice. The word means to make ready; to fit; to qualify. I think I would do no violence to say also that it means a purpose; a premeditation; a decree; predestination.

"Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world."—Matt. xxv. 34. It shall be given to them for whom it is prepared. This is an ancient preparation. Arminians cavil at the doctrine; but it is the only doctrine that puts any on the right hand with the sheep. Next comes a denunciation. "Depart, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels."—Matt. xxv. 41. We see another preparation in this. I propose to notice this preparation also. But I will first notice the one that speaks of the sheep. "But now they desire a better country, that is, a heavenly; wherefore God is not ashamed to be called their God; for he hath prepared for them a city."—Heb. xi 16. "But as it is written, Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him."—1 Cor. ii. 9. "And that he might make known the riches of his glory on the vessels of mercy, which he had afore prepared unto glory, even us, whom he hath called, not of the Jews only, but also of the Gentiles."—Rom. ix. 23, 24. Thus we see the preparation was made for "all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." It shall be given, is a reliable promise to all those the preparation was made for.

I will now say something about the goats. "Depart, ye cursed." Jesus said, "But ye believe not, because ye are not of my sheep, as I said unto you. My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me." Again, "For judgment I am come into this world, that they which see not might see, and that they which see might be made blind." "What if God, willing to show his wrath, and to make his power known, endured with much long-suffering the vessels of wrath fitted to destruction?" "I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, because thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes. Even so, Father; for so it seemed good in thy sight." "It is given unto you to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven; but to them it is not given." How then can they know them? Let the Arminian answer if he can. Paul says, "The election hath obtained it, and the rest were blinded." The general atonement people say that by one united effort all could be saved. If so, how could we read about those false teachers, and believe the declaration of inspiration which said, "Evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse?" I would rather believe the sayings of holy writ will be fulfilled, than believe all can be saved. It seems it is not the will of God to save all; and we should say, "Thy will be done." Jude says that Enoch, the seventh from Adam, prophesied of these false teachers; and Peter says, "But these, as natural brute beasts made to be taken and destroyed;" "cursed children." No chance for them to be saved. God works all things after the counsel of his own will. What he will, that he doeth. As he hath thought, so shall it come to pass. "Declaring the end from the beginning, and from ancient times the things that are not yet done, saying, My counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure." If he had not decreed all things, then I cannot conceive how he knew all things. How could his knowledge embrace a thing that was not certain to be? And if certain to be, his knowledge of it makes it unalterable. "Him, being delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God, ye have taken, and by wicked hands have crucified and slain." This is what God determined before the fall of man; therefore the fall was not an uncertain thing. The fall of man was certain, or it was not certain that man would need a Savior. The purpose for which the Savior was slain was a certainty—to redeem something. The preparation for redemption shows a complete thing. Now the fall of man was a necessity, to carry out what God had decreed to do for man. "For in the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." Now at this time the woman had no existence but in Adam. "And the rib, which the Lord God had taken from man, made he a woman, and brought her unto the man. And Adam said, This is now bone of my bones, and flesh of my flesh: she shall be called Woman, because she was taken out of man. Therefore shall a man leave his father and his mother, and shall cleave unto his wife; and they shall be one flesh."—Gen. ii. 22-24. "For no man ever yet hated his own flesh, but nourisheth and cherisheth it, even as the Lord the church."—Eph. v. 29. Adam's love was strong toward Eve, and it overcame the man. He was forced by it to follow her; it compelled him; and it does seem there was no hesitation on his part. She gave to him, and he did eat. Now hear Paul again: "This is a great mystery; but I speak concerning Christ and the church."—Eph. v. 32. "For this cause shall a man leave his father and mother, and shall be joined unto his wife, and they two shall be one flesh." "Husbands, love your wives, even as Christ also loved the church, and gave himself for it." Thus love caused Adam to follow his bride, as a figure of Christ. Christ loved and followed his bride. Her life was in him. Each Adam died for his bride. They loved their own flesh. All the preparations of God are to be revealed. What he designed to do shall be done, and all to his glory. He works all things to that end. The fall was a part of the all things that he works.

W. M. McCAIN.

STARK, Fla., Feb. 1, 1891.

BRETHREN BEEBE:—To-day I will write you a few lines, to tell you that my paper comes to me in time, and I am much pleased with its contents. Last year my paper was received at Hart, Michigan. In the fall I left there and came here to live with my daughter, Lavera West. I will send you one dollar to pay for the paper for some one who is not able to pay for it. I am in rather poor circumstances, but I feel that I ought to divide with those that are poorer. The SIGNS contains the language of Canaan, and it seems as though I could not do without it. The written word is above all that is written, yet we want to hear from the brethren and sisters. It does us good to hear from them of their joys and sorrows. Who that has the light of life in them can help liking their writings? In the last number was the letter of friend Anderson, giving a relation of his trials. What feelings it produced! Were I able, I would like to help him. I can sympathize with him in some respects, for I once was prospered in life; but loss after loss have followed me, until I really have no home of my own. My time must be nearly finished, for in March next I shall be eighty years old. Yet I labor and pay my way in life, with steady hand, though slow. I find myself failing, for old age is gaining on me, and I cannot in reason expect to stay here much longer; but if it can be that Christ is mine, all is well. O can it be that there is hope for such as I? How can purity love such as I? But in looking over my life it seems true that while I was in deep despair a voice spake to me, which said, "Thy sins are forgiven thee." The voice was different from anything I had ever heard. It was to the mind, or heart, and not to the ear. How pleasant, how sweet! It came to me when I thought I was doomed, and there was no hope for me. Then I thought that Jesus truly was my Lord and my God. But how often I fear! for where is the fruit of the Spirit in me? Where is anything but the natural man in me? Yet the Scriptures seem to open to my understanding; and that Jesus is the Son of God. But who am I, to stand before him? Who can cleanse me from my vileness? But God deals in spirit, and not in flesh. If indeed I am his, the body must die, and leave sin behind. O! shall I rise in his likeness, and live with the redeemed in a world of bliss? Hope bears me up, that with him I shall yet conquer, although a sinner now. How deep my feelings often are on these things. Shall I in the end be deceived? My fear is sometimes great. When I was young he spake to me while alone in the field. What could have made that change in me? If it was Jesus, how should I blush that I no more revere his name.

Well, I have gone through with my scribble, but it is not fit to publish. I have read the SIGNS almost from its commencement, but this year may be the last. You better not put this in print, for I am an old man, and cannot form a letter as I wish. I often want to talk to somebody; for as I am situated I feel lonesome.

Yours in friendship,

IRA PHELPS.

MIRANDA, Overton Co., Tenn.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—You will find inclosed two dollars for your good family paper, the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. I do not see how I can do without the paper. It is laden with good food for me. I do not belong to the church visible, but I sometimes think I have a hope that I have passed from death unto life, because I love the brethren. "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." This last comes from the lips of our King, and is the most joyful, crowning word of all. The best wine is reserved for the last. Every soul who has tasted of the first shall assuredly drink his fill at the fountain-head, in a blissful eternity of glory. "Ye blessed of my Father," beloved from eternity, chosen in me, blessed in me with all spiritual blessings. I was given to you. I sought you, and gathered you to myself in time, and you shall reign with me forever. "Inherit the kingdom prepared for you;" not bought by your works; not purchased by your well doing; not obtained by your faithfulness; but the free gift of my Father's love and good pleasure; richly prepared by his free grace and bounty; purposely reserved for you. "Come ye," all of you. Not any of my little flock shall be wanting. There is a mansion for each of you. Ere time began the kingdom was established and the heirs chosen. I visited you on earth, so that you love me, though you saw me not. I invisibly worked in your hearts, drew them out in love to myself, my cause and my brethren. "Come ye," enter, possess, enjoy what you were born for; born again to be meet for. O that we may catch the heavenly flame, salvation to our God, who sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb. Unto him that loved us and washed us from our sins in his own blood, and hath made us kings and priests unto our God; to him be glory and dominion forever.

THE ANOINTING OF FAITH.

ELDER WM. L. BEEBE—DEAR BROTHER:—I would be pleased to read your views on Matthew xxvi. 13. I have been hearing what I understand to be sound gospel preaching ever since I can remember, but I do not remember that I ever heard this circumstance mentioned in the pulpit. If you have satisfactory light, please comply with this request, and oblige yours in humble hope,

H. B. JONES.

GLENWOOD, Texas, Jan. 22, 1890.

REPLY.

"VERILY I say unto you, Wheresoever this gospel shall be preached in the whole world, there shall also this, that this woman hath done, be told for a memorial of her."—Matt. xxvi. 13.

Two reasons may be assigned for delay in complying with the desire of our esteemed brother as expressed in the above note. First, and most weighty of these, is the consciousness of our very limited understanding on any subject connected with the infinite revelation of divine grace in the doctrine of God our Savior. And secondly, if we had any special view of the particular text submitted by our brother, the fact that the request comes from one so gifted in the ministry as Elder Jones might well cause us to question the correctness of our understanding. From these considerations brother J. will charitably pardon our hesitancy in presenting such thoughts as we have upon the subject of his inquiry. Without presuming to see more clearly than any others all that is contained in this inspired record, we are willing to submit to our readers such views as have been in a measure satisfactory to us; and in doing so we earnestly desire that brother Jones, or any other reader who has a more full comprehension of the subject, will favor us with additional light.

So far as the literal record of the action of the woman mentioned by our Lord is concerned, as it is included in the writing of Mark and John as well as Matthew, it is told for a memorial of her, in that sense, wherever the inspired Scriptures are read. But much more is undoubtedly contained in the text than this simply historical statement of the actual occurrence. The natural mind could receive and comprehend the action of which Jesus spoke, so far as it was literally done, without any knowledge of its real significance as the expression of the love and faith which is the fruit of the Spirit. Only by the revelation of the Spirit of truth can any one see more than this in the text. And this is manifest in the admiration of carnal religionists, who lose sight of Jesus in their appreciation of the devotion of the woman, of whom John says that she was Mary, the sister of Lazarus and Martha. There is no room for a question that the same circumstance is recorded in the connection of our text which is told by John xii. 3, although in John it is specified that she anointed the feet of Jesus, and wiped them with her hair, while Matthew and Mark say that she poured the ointment on his head. Doubtless both statements are literally correct, as appears from the typical anointing of Aaron, when the precious ointment from his head ran down upon the beard, and down to the skirts of his garments.—Psa. cxxxiii. 2. However infidels may cavil over the apparent discrepancy between the record of John and our text, every unprejudiced mind must see that there is no discord between them. But it is not so particularly of the literal circumstance that we would speak, or that we understand our brother to wish our views. Rather, what is meant to be taught by the preservation of this event in the sacred testimony of Jesus? It is certainly fraught with instruction to the saints in all ages of time, and in all the circumstances in which they are placed while sojourning as strangers and pilgrims in this world.

"Verily I say unto you." It is not to be understood from this deeply solemn form of expression which is so often used by Jesus, that he ever spoke anything which was light or of trivial importance. All his words were full of grace and truth. But when he uses this peculiarly impressive form of words, it is to call the special attention of his disciples to the divine instruction which fell from his lips on such occasions. For their comfort and profit he adapted his teaching to their weakness and the infirmity of their finite capacity. Seldom, if ever, did Jesus by these words confirm his declarations, except when specially and exclusively teaching his own chosen disciples. Even when denouncing terrible judgments upon false religionists, this confirmation was for the assurance of his believing people. Even devils were powerless to resist his commands; and it was not necessary that he should confirm his orders to them by this solemn phrase. Only for the benefit of the heirs of promise has God confirmed by an oath the immutability of his counsel. In this is manifested the infinite care and tender mercy of the Lord toward the subjects of his grace.

"His every word of grace is strong
As that which built the skies;
The voice that rolls the stars along Speaks all the promises."

"Wheresoever this gospel shall be preached in the whole world." In this clause there is enough to occupy more time and space than any mortal can ever give to its investigation. What is this gospel? How is it preached? By whom? What is included in "the whole world?" It would be vain for us to attempt to answer these questions, which necessarily must be involved in the words of Jesus. To the natural mind it seems that there is no preaching but that public proclamation which is heard from the tongues of mortals; but those who have been taught of the Spirit of truth will not need to be told that all the apostles and prophets who spoke as they were moved by the Holy Ghost, and all the chosen ministers of Jesus, are but messengers who are favored to tell of the preaching of that only Preacher of righteousness, who says, "The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me; because he hath anointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek; he hath sent me to bind up the broken-hearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound; to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord, and the day of vengeance of our God; to comfort all that mourn; to appoint unto them that mourn in Zion, to give unto them beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning, the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness; that they might be called trees of righteousness, the planting of the Lord, that he might be glorified."—Isa. lxi. 1-3. No mortal tongue is needed in the preaching of the gospel by this Preacher. His voice is heard in every land where he will call a vessel of his mercy; and it comes in such power that the guilty sinner knows that it speaks to him, even though he may never before have heard of Jesus. The sinner is instantly conscious of his pollution and vileness when this gospel is thus preached to him; and the proud Pharisee immediately confesses his need of the guidance of the commandment of the Lord whom he had persecuted. How is this great change effected? Has he attained to the knowledge of the truth by his own devoted study? By no means; but this gospel is now preached to him. Never before has he been able to hear the first intimation of the sacred truth of Jesus as the Judge of quick and dead. By the living power of the words which are preached to him he is made alive, and the faith of Jesus enables him to see and know the truth. By that abiding power of the Spirit he knows that he is justly condemned before God, and that God is manifest in Jesus as the perfection of holiness. Despairing of acceptance in the sight of God, he dies. Then through the faith of the Son of God he receives the revelation of Christ in him the hope of glory, and in that manifestation he is begotten again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead. When he thus hears the voice of the Son of God he who was dead is made alive by the quickening power of that word which is essentially the gospel. However true in the letter may be the words spoken or written even by a called servant of God, there is no gospel in them unless the Spirit of Christ is the living power by which the truth is proclaimed. The gospel is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believes. The preaching of it is always by the direction of the Spirit of Christ; and God speaks only by his chosen messengers according to the good pleasure of his own will. The ministers whom God has called to speak in the preaching of the gospel know experimentally that they may even declare that which is abstractly true, and yet fail to preach the gospel; and when it is the pleasure of the Lord to give them a door of utterance the gospel is effectually preached even in their most broken and feeble attempts to speak.

When this gospel is preached in any place and at any time, Christ is presented in all the omnipotence of his eternal unity with the Father as the embodiment of the manifestation of all the fullness of the Godhead, and yet as suffering in mortal weakness all the infinite penalty due to the transgressions of his chosen people. In this wonderful humiliation he is the anointed of the Father; and the thankful praises of his ransomed saints are the holy ointment which is poured upon him as the Redeemer of Israel, and the salvation of his people from their sins. All this was typically declared in the action of Mary, to which Jesus refers in our text. It should be observed that when the precious ointment was poured upon Jesus he was a servant under the law, whose shadows and types had not yet been withdrawn before the clear shining of the gospel Sun in the resurrection of Jesus from his servitude and sufferings. Since his glorious triumph over death, it is impossible that this gospel should be proclaimed without the declaration of the antitypical power of the anointing which was there signified. It does not seem that even Mary understood the glorious truth which was prefigured in her action, since she afterward brought spices with which to anoint his body which they had seen committed to Joseph's new sepulchre. Just so, many times the saints are led by faith to bear witness to the truth which is hidden even from their own natural comprehension.

"There shall also this, that this woman hath done, be told for a memorial of her." In the fulfillment of the words of divine truth, it is not essential that the natural mind of the saints themselves should understand what they do. Indeed, it seems that the love of our Lord has considered the infirmity of the saints in wisely hiding this from their comprehension. Could we refrain from exulting in selfish confidence if we could feel sure that we were walking in all the precepts of our Lord blamelessly? The continual working of carnal pride in our sinful flesh, which is felt by all who are led by the Spirit, may well forbid that we should claim ability to resist its power if there were nothing for us to experience of the infirmities which are still in our earthly nature. In telling this, that this woman hath done, it is not necessary to repeat the literal circumstance recorded in the preceding context, any more than to repeat in prayer the very words taught by our Lord to his disciples. Whenever the gospel is preached, whether from the pulpit or in the daily experience of the saints, the miracle of the faith and love of Jesus Christ is necessarily declared. This is telling all that is written by inspiration concerning Jesus and all his redeemed saints. The love which moved this woman in anointing Jesus was not the production of her natural heart. She was led by the Spirit thus to declare that living faith which recognized him as the Christ of God. This gospel tells this confession of hers, for a memorial of her only as a subject of the redemption which is revealed through the blood of Jesus. There is no gospel in any preaching in which Christ Jesus is not exalted above every name that is named in earth or heaven. Carnal pride may delight to ascribe special honor to mortals, but the Spirit of truth finds no merit in any saints or angels as compared with the perfection of Jesus. No higher or better memorial can be desired by any lover of our Lord than the assurance of faith that his Spirit leads them in devotion to him. The manifestation of this truth secures perfect fellowship with the saints in all the world and in all ages. It is in this sense that we understand this record to be told for a memorial of this woman. Every saint must feel drawn in fellowship to recognize her as one of the vessels of mercy whom God hath afore prepared unto glory. This is not only predicated upon the literal action to which our Lord refers, but it is the evidence that the love of God controlled her in thus declaring her trust and love as centered in Jesus as her Savior. In harmony with this view, she could unite with all the myriads whom John in vision saw, in singing that new song, saying, "Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof; for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation; and hast made us unto our God kings and priests; and we shall reign on the earth."—Rev. v. 9, 10.

In thus briefly considering the text it is by no means claimed that we have dwelt upon all the testimony of Jesus which is contained in it; but trusting that others may be impressed to write more fully upon it, we leave the subject for the present.

INQUIRIES AFTER TRUTH.

GILBERT BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—I want Elder Wm. Grafton to give his views through the SIGNS OF THE TIMES on John i. 8-10, and oblige one who desires to know the truth. * *

OBITUARY NOTICES.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—It becomes my sad duty to forward to you for publication in the SIGNS the following obituaries. I think it is seldom that any one is called upon to chronicle such a record of funerals attended in so short a space of time. Four young people in three weeks, the last three in five days, and all died with consumption.

Cora R. Ensor died Jan. 9th, 1891, aged 17 years, 5 months and 9 days. She was the second daughter of Luke G. and Elizabeth A. Ensor. She died at her home in Woodberry, Md. She had been failing with this dread disease for two years, and had suffered much, but had been uncomplaining, patient, and even cheerful, and kept about until a few days before her death. I had not known that she was so low until I learned of her death, and so had not got to visit her, and had never known the state of her mind; but her mother writes me as follows:

"When she was confined to her bed she told me that her time was short here, and that she should soon leave this world of sin and sorrow for a brighter world on high. After taking her bed she talked to us all, father, mother, brothers and sisters, about her death continually until the end came. She was conscious to the last. I asked her if she felt that she was going home. She made answer, 'Yes, mother, I am going home to heaven.' I said, 'You are not afraid to die, are you, Cora?' She said, 'No; dying is but going to sleep in Jesus.' She was so anxious to go home! She watched the time, and would say, 'O! the time seems so long. How much longer have I to wait?' I told her that it would be but a little while. She then said that she wanted to be patient; and she was patient to the very last. Her last words were, 'This is the last breath. I am almost home.' On Thursday she called all the family to her bedside and bade them good-by. Then on Saturday morning she called them all again, and talked to us, giving us good advice and a long farewell. She passed away calmly and peacefully, as one going to sleep. She said, about fifteen minutes before she died, 'Tell my grandfather farewell. I am going home to heaven to meet my grandmother.' She spoke of having many dreams of heaven during her sickness.

"Asleep in Jesus! Blessed sleep!

We know our darling is.
She longed to leave this world of woe
And dwell in endless bliss.

"There is a void within our hearts
That none but God can fill;
An empty chair beside our hearth Speaks of our loved one still."

I will only add that she was an amiable girl, endeared to all who knew her. I attended her funeral at Black Rock on January 13th, and tried to present the truth of the gospel to a large congregation from the words found in Romans viii. 28.

ALSO,

Annie E. Bennett, wife of Frank Bennett, and oldest daughter of Francis and Elizabeth Lamotte, departed this life Thursday night, Jan. 28th, 1891, at her father's residence, Glen Falls, Md., from the same disease, in the 35th year of her age.

She left four little children behind her. It is seldom that I have known of a death in which so many things were sad, and in which also so many things were comforting. It was sad when we remember her youth, her bright prospects in life, her pleasant home, her husband, children, parents, brothers, sister, and her many friends, all of them strong ties to bind her to life; but it was full of comfort to her friends to witness the meekness, humility and submissiveness which she manifested in the months of suffering which were hers. It was comforting to her friends and to all that during the last months of suffering the Lord was pleased to give her clear views of herself as a justly condemned sinner, and wonderfully clear evidence of the love and mercy of God in Christ Jesus to sinners. It was my privilege to visit her several times during the last four weeks of her illness, and it seemed to me like sitting in heavenly places in Christ Jesus. She dated her experience of grace but a few months back. Her conviction of her just condemnation as a sinner was clear and abiding; and after the Lord had appeared for her deliverance she could not exalt and praise the riches of his grace enough. She desired especially that it should be known that she had no confidence in the flesh, but alone in the merit of Jesus. When I first went to see her the Lord had but recently appeared for her deliverance; and she had requested that day to see me, that she might tell me about it. I did not know this, but my mind was led to visit her that day; and with calm and exultant joy she talked to me of the Lord's mercy, and said, "Has he not shown me wonderful things?" She spoke of two or three portions of Scripture that had been given her; and she also spoke of one or two hours of temptation, out of which the Lord had delivered her, speaking to her in words which, though not quotations of Scripture, were yet scriptural. She said, in telling it, "The Lord said these things to me." She knew his voice. He spoke as no man could speak. Once when I saw her she had been suffering intensely for a day and a night, and her suffering of mind had also been intense. This time also she had desired to see me, and I had gone without knowing it. She asked me to read the thirty-eighth Psalm, saying it was her language. She said, "I do not want to murmur against God, but I fear lest I may, I have been so sorely tempted for a day past." But the Lord soon gave her relief in the words, "Come unto me—I will give you rest." Afterward she was given rest. She spoke of the fourteenth chapter of John as having been very rich and full of consolation to her. Her mother told me that she filled up many hours of sleepless nights talking of the wondrous things which the Lord had shown her. Once she felt a little better, and said to me, "Do you think, if the Lord had meant to raise me up again, that he would have shown me such things as he has?"

The funeral was largely attended at her parents' home on Saturday, January 31st, and I tried to speak briefly of the comforts of the gospel as best I could. She was interred in the M. E. cemetery at Reisterstown. Her friends sorrow indeed; but they can but rejoice in the victory of grace seen so clearly in her.

ALSO,

Thomas Edward Ensor, second son of the former George C. and Ruth Ann Ensor, died of the same disease at his mother's residence near Black Rock, Md., on Saturday, Jan. 31st, 1891, aged 33 years.

His health had broken down about eight years ago, so that he was never really well afterward; but being possessed of indomitable energy and perseverance, he had kept about, and much of the time had led a busy and active life, until two or three months before his death, when he was compelled to keep to the house, and finally to take to his bed. He had never made a public profession of religion, but had for many years shown a constant reverence for the truth, and when he spoke of such things at all it was in defense of the principles of the doctrine of grace. His life had been strictly moral and honorable; but he did not at any time put his trust in this, but always ascribed salvation to the Lord.

I had not, however, known what were his feelings personally about the matter of salvation until I visited him during his last illness, and he spoke freely to me about his condition. He then told me that he felt himself a poor sinner, saved by the grace of God. He said that he had long felt that Black Rock was home to him, and that the people who met there were his people. He said that he did not look with dread to the dying hour, and did not feel otherwise than willing to leave himself in the hands of God. He said again, "I do not have the joy and comfort of feeling that I desire, or that I thought I should have when I should draw near to the end of my life; but I am kept from fear, and am not troubled." His whole manner of expression was humble, patient and resigned, and trustful in God. It seemed good to sit by him as he spoke of the things he loved. I did not see him afterward, but learned that he continued patient and unmurmuring to the last.

His funeral was largely attended at Black Rock on Tuesday, Feb. 3d, and I spoke for awhile from the words found in 1 Peter i. 3-5.

ALSO,

Mollie V. Ensor, daughter of George and Martha Ensor, was called away from this life on Monday, Feb. 2d, 1891, aged 21 years, 5 months and 24 days.

She had been in failing health from the same disease (consumption) for three or four years, and since the early part of last summer had been failing rapidly. She suffered much in the last weeks of her sickness, but in it all great patience was given her. She had been a bright and thoughtful girl, and was very dear to many. It was my privilege to visit her several times during the last few weeks of her life, and her conversation was such that I could not doubt the genuineness of the profession that she was enabled to make of her hope in Christ. She dated the beginning of her christian experience back about one year, and said that she had cherished a hope in Christ for about two months when she spoke of it to me. Her testimony as to her own worthlessness was clear, and equally so was her acknowledgment of Jesus as being all her hope and desire. At different times she spoke of portions of the word as being a source of comfort to her. Once I read to her the fourteenth chapter of John, and she whispered, "That is beautiful." Once she asked me to read the thirty-seventh Psalm; and as I read she frequently stopped me to tell me of different verses which gave her comfort.

Among others she mentioned the third, fourth, fifth, eleventh, eighteenth, twenty-third, thirty-third and thirty-ninth verses. She had the natural clinging to life which is common to us all, and yet said that she desired to be submissive to the will of God. Once or twice she said to me that she would like to get up again and live awhile, so that she might praise and glorify God for all that he had done for her. She talked much to her sister, who tenderly cared for her, and to her aunt, sister Cole, and to other members of the church who called to see her, and all were drawn very near to her in christian fellowship. A few moments before the end came she said, "Death is hard." Then in a moment, "What a glorious Savior!" and in a few moments was at rest.

On Thursday, Feb. 5th, a large congregation assembled at Black Rock, and we laid her mortal remains in the grave. As a text I used the words in Psalm xxxvii. 39.

I have been saddened by these successive deaths of the young; but yet in all of them how much was seen that should cause us to rejoice. The Lord's works are wonderful, as seen in all these instances. May God comfort the mourning friends, as he can and does his saints.

I remain your brother in hope,

F. A. CHICK.

REISTERSTOWN, Md., Feb. 10, 1891.

DIED—At her home in Prospect Place, Brooklyn, N. Y., February 2d, 1891, Mrs. Frances Vreeland, widow of William A. Vreeland, and sister of the late Elder Gilbert Beebe, aged 73 years, 1 month and 8 days.

She was born in Norwich, Conn., and married in the city of New York in 1834. Of eleven children, only three survive their mother. The eldest daughter, Mrs. Emma C. Stevenson, died last August, leaving two children. The three living children are Mrs. Mary Bixby, Mrs. Helen Stafford and Miss Lillian Vreeland.

The funeral services were held at the family residence on Friday, Feb. 6th, and were conducted by Dr. Nelson, pastor of the Presbyterian Church, and an intimate friend of the family; after which the body was deposited beside that of her husband in the family plot in Greenwood Cemetery. May the gracious Lord minister comfort to the mourning children and only surviving brother and sister, now in the decline of life, the latter being in her eighty-seventh year.

An extensive circle of relatives and friends sympathize with the immediate family in their great bereavement.

[Ed.]

By request of the bereaved husband, I write the obituary notice of Mrs. Mary Ellen Yarbrough, who was born Jan. 11th, 1871, and departed this life Jan. 12th, 1891.

She was the daughter of brother Warren and sister Nancy Hartsfield, and was married to Mr. J. N. Yarbrough, son of Elder N. C. Yarbrough, Feb. 6th, 1890. She possessed a mild and amiable disposition, and was loved and esteemed by all who knew her. She had never united with the church, but professed a hope in Christ about the first of January, 1889. She said on her death-bed that she was not afraid to die, and that the Lord was with her.

She leaves a large circle of friends and relatives to mourn her departure, together with a dear and affectionate husband, with whom we sincerely sympathize, and pray God to reconcile him and the relatives and friends to this heavy dispensation of his providence, and sanctify it to the good of us all.

A. W. BACCHUS.

STEPHENS, Ark.

J. D. Towns departed this life May 15th, 1890. He died with jaundice. His sufferings were great, but he never murmured nor complained at his lot, but seemed to lie passive in the hands of his God, ready and willing to obey his call. He leaves a wife and seven children to mourn their irreparable loss.

He was born in Clarke Co., Ga., Sept. 2d, 1827, and was married to Miss Rebecca A. Marsh May 3d, 1849. He professed a hope in Christ and joined the Primitive Baptist Church in 1862, and live a consistent member until his Master saw fit to call him home. He earnestly contended for the faith once delivered to the saints. He moved with his family to Louisiana in 1877, taking a letter from Shoal Creek Church, Newton Co., Ga., to Mt. Olive Church, Bienville Parish, La. He then took a letter from there and went into the constitution of Beulah Church, and was ordained Deacon of that church, which office he filled faithfully until his death. He was perfectly conscious to the last, and knew that his dear ones were around him. He realized that his time had come; and we believe that he realized the sweet smiles of the Savior, and heard his voice saying, "Well done, good and faithful servant; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." He has finished his work. Shall we mourn our beloved one, or weep that his face we no longer behold? O sweet is our hope in this moment of anguish! We hope to meet him again in the city of God.

MATTIE RYAN.

My beloved father, Hardy Williamson, died Jan. 24th, 1891, after an illness of fifteen days.

Father was born in Montgomery Co., Ala., Oct. 22d, 1830, and received a hope in Christ in the year 1856, joining the Old School Baptist Church of Bethlehem on Saturday before the second Sunday in September, 1881, being baptized by Elder R. C. Morrison on Sunday morning afterward. Father was a kind and affectionate husband, and a beloved father to his children. As a citizen and neighbor he was an honorable, honest, kind-hearted man, and therefore was respected by all. As a believer in Jesus he was firm in his convictions. He was ordained Deacon of the church in September, 1883, and was chosen Clerk of the church in November, 1886, which positions he faithfully filled until his death. Talking to a sister the week before he died, he told her that he was ready and willing to die. He seemed resigned to God's will. Father is gone, his seat never to be filled; but we believe that he is at home, where he longed to be. His death was caused by consumption and "La Grippe." He had a cough for fifteen years. He was a lover of the SIGNS, and had been a regular subscriber for a great many years.

W. O. WILLIAMSON.

FEBRUARY 10, 1891.

DIED—In North Berwick, Maine, Jan. 10th, 1891, sister Emily M. Chadbourne, wife of Mr. John Chadbourne, aged 56 years.

I baptized her in the fellowship of the Old School Baptist Church in this place in the year 1855, and she remained a worthy member until her death. She was sick only a few days, and was ready and willing to die. Our loss is great in the church; but as her death was precious in the sight of the Lord, it was her eternal gain to die. She has left one sister, who did all that was within her power for her when sick, with others, to mourn their loss.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date, this date denotes the time at which your subscription expires, and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

POETRY.

YOUR MOTHER.

YOUR mother has lost her youthfulness,
Her locks are getting gray,
And wrinkles take the place of smiles—
She surely is fading away.
We look at her with sorrow now,
Although we've ne'er been told;
But the very truth we plainly see,
Your mother is growing old.
Yes, mother is growing old, my dears,
But her smiles are just as kind;
Her voice to us is soft as of yore—
Where shall we dearer find?
But as we note her palsied tongue,
And see her trembling form,
A sad voice whispers to our hearts,
We cannot keep her long.
But gently bear her wearied form
Unto that glorious ark;
She will not fear—Christ went before—
The way will not be dark.
And safe beyond the troubled stream,
Her weary heart's strife o'er,
Your angel mother, glorified,
Will then grow old no more.

CORRESPONDENCE.

"LET us therefore follow after the things which make for peace, and things wherewith one may edify another."—Rom. xiv. 19.

As the above text is so frequently quoted by brethren, and insisted on as indispensable in promoting harmony, christian union and fellowship, I have thought it nothing amiss to offer a few thoughts or suggestions in connection with it; for it seems that those who use it suppose that we are at liberty to adopt such portions of the inspired word as in our judgment will promote christian unity, and to reject or suppress such portions as in their view of it cause strife and contention among brethren. My reason for supposing that they so regard it is that they generally appeal to the above text when urging their objections to the agitation of the deep and mysterious doctrine of predestination. But the question with us should be, Do the Scriptures teach it? And if so, do we not profess to believe and love it, and reverence its great Author, by holding and contending for it? Or are we so debauched and fallen from our first love and profession that, like the Laodiceans, we esteem ourselves rich, and increased in goods and have need of nothing, yet are wretched, and miserable, and poor, and naked? And this coloring is not too highly drawn, if it be true that we have reached a point in our history that our tender consciences and sympathies are such that our feelings prompt us to select and teach such portions of the divine standard as in our view will promote our spiritual growth and edification, and suppress such as does not, but on the contrary is the cause of confusion, strife and discord among brethren. Yet the apostle says, "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness; that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." Now if predestination is embraced by the above inspired language we ought to receive and teach it; for it is profitable as a good work, and conduces to our spiritual growth and advancement in a way of holiness and communion with God, the author of the text. Therefore if it becomes necessary to suppress any portion of the inspired word of God in order to promote christian unity and fellowship, and to prevent strife and discord, this alone is prima facie evidence that the state or condition of such brethren is fully delineated in the Lord's language to the Laodiceans; that is, that they are wretched, miserable, poor, blind and naked. They are in a state of stupor or deep sleep as to spiritual things, their spiritual energies being deadened. There are doubtless certain causes that conspire to bring about such a state of things as I have hinted at above; and among the probable causes is the general practice of brethren who seem to oppose the incessant and unlimited sovereignty of God over all his works. Instead of contending for the faith as delivered to the saints, by citing his holy oracle in proof of their view, they make their appeals to humanly devised standards, such as creeds, or confessions of faith, and teach that a departure from such standards is a departure from the faith once delivered to the saints. And I am sorry to say that some professed Baptists, in their opposition to God's absolute sovereignty, instead of addressing the enlightened judgment of their brethren, appeal to their sympathies and weaker passions, in order to strengthen their prejudices, already strong, against the doctrine they oppose, by parading the monstrous consequences of such doctrine as very degrading to God and hurtful to men, "as it makes God the author of sin, and degrades him to the level of an imperious, tyrannical earthly monarch." But their proof of the point is their own assertion; and this seems sufficient to both the teacher and those taught; for it seems they are both alike in a state of duress or bondage. As I have an experience here, I know whereof I affirm, and to this I will briefly advert. When I joined the church, in the year 1854, in Tennessee, the most of the Baptists of my acquaintance were well fortified with arguments (if arguments they could be called) against the doctrine of God's unlimited sovereignty or predestination; and many of those good brethren thought it best not to tamper much with that deep, profound subject, even so far as it applies to the eternal salvation of the Lord's people; and this they received by tradition; for in their articles of faith they were cautioned that in handling that profound subject it should be done with great care; and the reason for this seems to have been, that unless it was so handled we might impeach its Author by making him the author of sin. I know that this, and all parts of this grand system, should be handled with care; but I am not arguing the point, but giving a little history. There was another article that ran thus: "that Adam in his original rectitude was able to stand, but liable to fall." Our leading brethren would explain this in such a way that to take issue with it would be to make God the author of sin; so we accepted this as our ultimatum; and I, with the other brethren, tried for a long time to conform to this ritual; and when I did show any signs of breaking over, some good brother, from the very sincerity of his heart, would chide me thus: "You want to be wise above what is written. Our good old fathers were God-fearing and God-honoring men, and set us a good example," and so on. To correctly portray the awful condition of a poor creature thus circumstanced is beyond the utmost power of language to express, or of the tongue to articulate; for the mind, that active principle, is enslaved, and exists in a state of extreme vassalage or bondage, and acts in subordination to prejudice, bigotry and intolerance. This is a sad state to be in, as the doleful consequences of taking any position that would involve the horrid idea of God being the author of sin. This rawhead and bloody-bone spectre, which is so often paraded to deter the mind from advancing in a knowledge of the truth, acts like a charm in many instances in staying its advances in that direction, and thus that intelligent being becomes debauched, dwarfed, and is thrown into a stupor. Being thus fettered, it becomes dormant or inactive. How does such a state of things coincide with the genesis of Christ's gospel, or the design of God in our creation, who invested his rational creatures with intellectual powers, to be exercised in their own individual right. It may be thought by some that it might have been better for me, and for those with whom I am and have been associated, if I had remained in my original belief; but I want to make this public confession, in the presence of God and before my fellow-man, that I could not believe otherwise than I do, if my so believing and acting accordingly were to sever my connection with the people I regard as composing Christ's visible kingdom on earth, and thus prove me a cast-away. In my meditations I often revert to the time when I hope the good Lord met with me in the full and free pardon of all my grievous and accumulated sins, and favored me with a glimpse of his grand and glorious character; when I, though a youth, solemnly vowed allegiance and devotion to him. I have, according to the light afforded me, tried to exalt him, by contending for the glory of his kingdom and talking of his power; and this I have tried to do in all that plainness and simplicity of speech becoming the servant of God, according to my understanding of his word, as I can and do but speak the things I have seen and heard in my own personal right. But for being thus faithful to my convictions I am ostracised by some who claim to be Baptists here in Texas; and the course pursued by some of those professed Baptists reminds me of, and is a striking comment on, the language of our Savior to the Pharisees of his day, who, he said, strained at a gnat and swallowed a camel. But this does not apply to all Baptists here, for there are many good, orderly Baptists here, even among those who do not believe the doctrine of unlimited predestination. And while on this subject I want to say that there is a large body of Baptists, principally in the northeastern part of the state, embracing the Big Creek and Union Associations, which I visited, and found them sound in the faith, as far as I had an expression from them, and am competent to judge. There are, or were, eight or nine associations of this body of Baptists, all of whom, I suppose, are sound in the faith, as I was acquainted with some of them before they came to Texas, especially some of the Trinity River brethren.

The most fatal effects of traditional teaching, in the shape of humanly devised systems or confessions of faith, seem to arise from the fact that many brethren are so enamored of and wrapped up in such standards that the mind is so under their control, and so biased, they cannot in their investigations receive the testimony of Scripture according to the plain import of its terms, when it does not coincide with those standards; and thereby they attach more importance to human teaching than to divine teaching; and the antiquity of those standards, having been handed down from generation to generation for so long a time, have acquired such force and potency that it seems they are almost invincible. All history has shown that a departure from first or fundamental principles, in all systems, whether human or divine, has more or less terminated disastrously; and such disasters bear an exact ratio to their divergance from original principles, as after such departure there is no particular point at which we can rally, save by reverting back to original principles. Then, I say, let us renounce every system not founded on Bible teaching, and stand upon and hold fast to the Bible as the sheet-anchor of our safety, our liberty, unity and happiness.

By way of commenting on the above I will ask, Where are the people to-day claiming to have descended from John Calvin, who agree in sentiment with that great reformer? Or where is the Lutheran that agrees with that great and bold reformer? Or where is the church of England man that agrees with the founders of that state organization? Or where will you find a Doctor Owen among the Congregationalists? In a word, where will you find any holding the sentiments of those from whom they claim to have descended? They have all gone so far from their original fathers that there is scarcely any coincidence of character.

I will now return and briefly consider the text, where we find that the apostle, in the verse preceding, is speaking of and admonishing his brethren about things indifferent; and among other things he says, "Him that is weak in the faith receive ye, but not to doubtful disputations. For one believeth that he may eat all things; another, who is weak, eateth herbs." He then speaks of some esteeming one day above another, and others every day alike, &c. I have given a short sample of the apostle's admonition to his brethren. If brethren feel interested they can read the whole chapter, where they will find that the apostle proceeds according to the tenor of this short specimen, and admonishes his brethren to bear and forbear with each other, and not let those little things be a root of bitterness or a cause of offense; and then he says, "Let us therefore follow after the things which make for peace, and things wherewith one may edify another." This same apostle has used some very strong language in vindication of God's universal and absolute sovereignty, a specimen of which I will cite. In Romans viii. he says, "And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose." How came the apostle in possession of this assured knowledge, unless he knew that all things were appointed, controlled and directed of God? And being so controlled and directed, all things, without exception, conduce to the good of those that love him. Then if we, with the apostle, hold that all things work together for their good, we necessarily conclude that nothing is excepted, whether the character of those things be termed morally good or evil. And so God predestinated what he accomplishes, and accomplishes neither more nor less than he purposed. In Romans ix. he says, "Therefore hath he mercy on whom he will have mercy, and whom he will he hardeneth;" thus making his sovereign will his only rule; forming some vessels to honor, and others to dishonor; fitted some vessels to destruction, and prepared others to glory. In Romans x. the apostle says, "Israel hath not obtained that which he seeketh for; but the election hath obtained it [that is, grace and salvation], and the rest were blinded (according as it is written, God hath given them the spirit of slumber, eyes that they should not see, and ears that they should not hear) unto this day." In Romans xiii. he says, "Let every soul be subject unto the higher powers; for there is no power but of God. The powers that be are ordained of God." In Romans xi. he says, "For of him, and through him, and to him, are all things; to whom be glory forever." In 1 Cor. viii. 6, he says all things are of God. In Ephesians i. he says, "Being predestinated according to the purpose of him who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will." In Colossians i. he says, "For by him were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers: all things were created by him, and for him; and he is before all things, and by him all things consist." Although this is the testimony in part of only one witness, it seems sufficient to establish beyond doubt or cavil the absolute sovereignty (embracing the unlimited predestination) of our God, and that, too, in all the glare of apostolic and inspired demonstration. And in view of such an array of testimony how can the candid christian suppose otherwise than that the apostle was a firm and rooted believer in, and a zealous assertor of, the same? Then how absurd to conclude that his language at the head of this article authorizes us to lop off such portions of the inspired word as in our view, instead of conducing to our peace and edification, would produce strife and confusion. But is it not a self-evident fact that if it becomes necessary to suppress any portion of the inspired word of God in order to promote our peace and unity, we are in a very sickly condition indeed, and would prove as carnal and in as bad or worse condition than the Corinthians, whom the apostle said he could not speak unto as spiritual, but as unto carnal, even as unto babes in Christ? He says, "I have fed you with milk, and not with meat; for hitherto ye were not able to bear it; neither yet now are ye able." And it seems that the reproof administered to the Corinthians would fitly apply to some of us at this time. But the apostle, instead of adapting his teaching to suit or feed the carnal mind of men, says, "Do I seek to please men? For if I yet pleased men, I should not be the servant of Christ." So far was the apostle from pandering to the whims of men, in order to their peace and edification, that he declared such a course would prove him not the servant of Christ. Again, when on his way from Troas to Jerusalem the apostle sent for the Elders of the Ephesian Church to meet him at Miletus, where he gave them a very solemn charge as to the execution of their ministry, and among other things said, "I am pure from the blood of all men; for I have not shunned to declare unto you all the counsel of God." So it seemed, in the apostle's view, if he had failed to declare all the counsel of God he would have been guilty of the blood of those brethren; that is, he taught the whole gospel as necessary to their unity or edification. And if the whole counsel of God was necessary to the unity and edification of the brethren then, and any portion of it must be minced, perverted or omitted in order to our peace, unity and edification, it is peculiar to the carnal mind.

This is an imperfect sketch of what was on my mind; but such as it is I send it to you for your inspection and disposal.

Yours in gospel bonds,

JAMES WAGNER.

OTEGO, N. Y., Jan. 1, 1891.

DEAR BROTHERS EDITORS:—It has pleased the Lord to spare me, although so unprofitable, not deserving the least of his favors. I did not expect to see the closing of the year 1890; but God, who is ever merciful to the least of his chosen ones, has seen fit to bring me back to a comfortable degree of health, although but little strength. Our dear friends are very kind to both of us in our declining years. We feel grateful, I trust, for so many blessings, both temporal and spiritual. I have been prompted many times, since I began to recover from my sickness some months ago, to once more write a letter for our dear family paper, the SIGNS. It is a welcome, I cannot say visitor, for such expect to leave us some time. Messenger will be a better word; for when we receive a message we expect to keep it; and a message from a dear friend, or from our kindred, O how we prize; but how much more the SIGNS; for in that we get tidings from our dear kindred in Christ, some of whom we have seen, but the greater part those whom we have not seen, only by faith. Many thoughts have been in my mind, while I could so sweetly contemplate the riches of our covenant-keeping God. If I could satisfy my feelings by telling you, my dear brethren and sisters, how precious and glorious the plan of salvation by grace appears to me, I could feel at rest. I am not writing to strangers, but to those of like precious faith, who have the same joys and sorrows; to those who are sinners of the deepest dye; not part sinners, and part something else. O no; that is man's wisdom. And now, after we have, I trust, received a good hope through grace, we still groan, being burdened with this body of sin and death. The same sinner is living yet, but feels at times it is put out of sight. How many times in the past year have I sighed to go home, to be freed from sin, to be with my blessed Savior, and drink endless pleasures in. There is no night there, no gloom to darken the skies of that world of immortal glory. If it is the Lord's will that we shall yet remain for a while, may he give us a will to say in truth, "Thy will be done." But this we cannot do in our own strength, for that is weakness; and our wisdom is folly, and our righteousness is as filthy rags. These pilgrims and strangers who dwell upon the earth have no abiding place, but seek a city whose builder and maker is God. Among all the so-called religionists there is no home for those who, cannot like Daniel of old, bow down and worship the gods of this world. "Then said these men, We shall not find an occasion against this Daniel, except we find it against him concerning the law of his God." We have good friends and kind neighbors whom we highly esteem, and in worldly things they do much good; but that has nothing to do with our holy profession. I hardly dare write such wonderful expressions as belonging to myself; it brings a trembling into my heart; but as I write, words come into my mind, and I have to write just as they come. Can it be that one so vile can take such a savory cup and call upon the name of the Lord? O yes; it is given to them. The new man is created in righteousness and true holiness. Our corrupt flesh profiteth nothing, and will soon pass away, no matter how lovely it has appeared, and dear to our natural affections. It has to go back to its mother earth. This mortal shall put on immortality, and then death shall be swallowed up in victory.

I am glad that our Baptists in this part of the land are contented to dwell alone, and not be reckoned among the nations religiously. We believe we take the Scriptures for our guide and counsel, and not the sayings of men, who have joined themselves to the idols of the present day. Verily they shall all have their reward. One of old said to the saints, "Go ye not after them." We read also of wolves who will scatter the flock. Then it is said the sheep shall be gathered out of all places where they have been scattered in the cloudy and dark day. I know by experience that to appeal to men will do no good. They told me that such words as predestination, foreordination, election, and the like, were in the Bible, but it would not do to preach about them, for it would hinder sinners from coming to the church. I did not understand such things, and was greatly perplexed. I did not know what to believe. I did not realize that the Lord was leading me. Truly it was a way I knew not. It was not the path I had marked out, if ever I was a child of God, that I should walk in. But the day of all days to me dawned, when it pleased the Lord to show me the wonderful plan of salvation, and told me they were sinners who were saved. How astonished I was, and how firmly the Lord established me in the truth, so that I have never wavered. This is saying a great deal; but if I am not altogether deceived, and I trust I am not, this is how I have been brought thus far on my pilgrimage. I know it is all of the Lord, and to him I willingly give all the glory.

I want to speak of the SIGNS, for I feel that it contains the truth. The royal family can talk together of the things they do know. We never enjoyed the rich communications better than we do now, it being more than thirty years since it first became a welcome messenger to us. The true Old School Baptists never were more united than they are now. They are persecuted for the truth's sake, which is a very good sign. When Joseph's brethren sold him into Egypt they meant it for evil; but God meant it for good, to save them alive. So it is now. The opposition to the SIGNS comes from those who carry the name of brethren; yet they would crush out of it the truth it contains. It saves many a feeble child from error. But the Lord rules and reigns. He is mighty, and puny man cannot stand before him. Let us think how the dear apostles of the Lamb suffered when they were sent everywhere preaching the word. Paul was told by the Lord, who called him, what great things he should suffer for Christ's sake. The apostles went in cold and hunger, beset on every side, and all for the sake of the precious gospel, which found the Lord's hidden ones; and when their work was finished they yielded up their lives as a sacrifice. Would there be so many "Reverend" gentlemen in these days so ready for an outfit to save souls, and panting to go, if they had to take the fare that those men of God had?

When I look at the SIGNS, and see its great escutcheon, my mind is filled with solemn awe. It was so with me before I loved to read the paper as I do now. I can say without fear that the SIGNS has not changed. I believe, as Elder Durand wrote not long since, that the Lord, no doubt, has given his servants greater knowledge to expound the Scriptures, which cut asunder the bands of old traditions. I know that is so by what the Lord has taught me. I can truly say that the Lord has led me in paths that I had not known. We have been reading the editorials by Elder Gilbert Beebe in the year 1832. We have both volumes of the book of "Editorials." It is the same doctrine that the dear editors are now given to write, as well as all the brethren and sisters who so richly fill the columns of the paper. Stand together, my dear kindred.

"Let Satan rage and vent his spite,
Our God will save his heart's delight."

The little band here whom Jesus loves, I trust, are at peace among themselves, enjoying the sweet fellowship which none but the Lord's dear, tried children know. One among the family is dear Elder Stipp; also sister Mary Parker, with many others. How soft and tender the heart is made, while tears of sympathy give vent to the deep sigh of relief. They will soon hear the voice, Child, come home.

May Israel's God be with you all, be your shield and high tower, is my desire. Now I wish you all a happy and prosperous New Year. Stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made you free. We send our united love.

Affectionately your sister,
CHRISTIANN L. FRENCH.

"WISDOM hath builded her house, she hath hewn out her seven pillars; she hath killed her beasts; she hath mingled her wine; she hath also furnished her table."
—Prov. ix. 1, 2.

If men, with the portion of wisdom that has been given to them, prepare beforehand for the time of want, how much more should we expect to find foreknowledge and predestination of all things for their final use and destiny in the fullness of all wisdom, of whom it was spoken, "The Lord possessed me in the beginning of his way, before his works of old." So she hath hewn the pillars of her house; not thrown them together in any way, without line or measure; but the right material was taken, and the proper time has been given to the hewing and putting together; that the Lord's house, the church, might be complete in all its parts.

Nor was the work ever entrusted to the partial knowledge or even to great learning of man, as some at this time think. Neither apostles nor prophets have given any man credit for their insight into the things pertaining to the kingdom of God, but always ascribe their powers and belief to God himself. Evidently there was forethought in the preparation of this feast; a feast that must be so complete as to fill every hungry soul that is to partake of it, even to those who do not understand for what they are hungry. See fourth verse. For she called to the simple and void of understanding to come and eat bread and drink wine. Men make a sad and sometimes repulsive excuse for a feast for spiritual minds to feed upon, and bring forth wines called old and rare, admitting at the same time, and almost in the same breath, that they have made up by their own genius the abominable mixture they are passing off for the pure wine that wisdom prepared of old; and that they went to a special school for that purpose, that is, to learn to preach. And there is that which passeth off for preaching of the gospel, and high salaries paid for it, and highly intelligent people listen and appear to appreciate it; when if such a mass of contradiction were delivered even under the name of politics they would hoot at it. Wisdom hath mingled her wine. To one minister she hath given strength of body and mind. He is strong in the cause; he makes an able argument; he speaks of the Lord as mighty in battle, and underneath his church are his everlasting arms. But the little ones tremble, saying, "I dare not claim to be one of the Lord's people; they are safe, secure, their house is built upon a rock, and there is no danger of it ever being moved." But they are weak, and feel as did David when he "said in his heart, I shall now perish one day by the hand of Saul." "There is nothing better for me than that I should speedily escape into the land of the Philistines." Another minister, or the same one at another time, is child-like in his weakness. He thinks he cannot say anything to the comfort of any one; and he tells of his daily trials, shortcomings and failures; and instead of going in the path he had marked out he has gone the other way; and, as many of the prophets and patriarchs of old did, while bitterly complaining of trials and sorrows, such have really strengthened the hope of the weak by their finding one in whose forehead they see the name of the Lord written. Yet he is weak, and a man of flesh and blood, even as themselves. We do not rejoice because Jeremiah had such grievous lamentations; but when we find the very things recorded there that we are grieving over, we do rejoice in a companion that was and is one of the Lord's redeemed. Occasionally one of the stewards in this house that wisdom has built, and in which this vast store of provision is laid up, brings out some very old and rare wine. Wisdom stored it away many years ago, and now she directs his mind to bring it forth. Wine is only made by pressing the grape; and we again see the forethought of this Wisdom in preparing such a fruit as shall yield these rare wines, such as some of the preachers of the word do. The old wines cannot be made in a day; neither can the child of a month relate an experience of trials, doubts, long nights, sick-bed thoughts, and healthy forgetfulness, that all happened seventy or eighty years ago; but these are like the old wines, rich, strong, pure in their simplicity; just the man's own actual life; just the simple truth; and we consider the story as it is related, just as we are told to consider the lilies how they grow in the appointment of wisdom, without one spot or daub added to them. The beauty of the story is in its reality; and its reality is sufficient without any picturing. But how the story stirs your very heart's blood. It renews your youth. You go over all the way again; your tears drop over his sorrows, for they are your own; you rejoice in his joy, for such bright spots were yours; you listen with suspended breath to his times of encouragement, and the reason of his hope; for his bearing witness to your experience in relating his own life story is almost your only hope; at least it renews your strength, and you can run and not be weary, as in the days of your youth. There is no such thing as the pure wine of the gospel of Christ losing its strength with age; for if we can trace the likeness of any of our own travels of mind in the lives of Job, or of Noah, it brings us the more encouragement to find that we have faith in and are being led by the same God as were those old men, who seemed so near to him. Then sometimes the newer wines refresh also. When one young in years and early in experience tells of the Lord's dealings with him, the old take courage as they see the Lord's work still going on by the same spirit of Wisdom that built the house of old, and bade them to the feast in their youth. How precious to me are the memories of sermons that strengthened my hope from time to time; old and faithful ministers that bore witness to my own doubts and fears. Dear brother Grafton once went over many of his childish hopes and fears, some things that he seemed to think of little account as he ran hurriedly over them; but I lived it all over in a few minutes with him as he talked. I had not yet made a profession, but I thought if that good man had been through and knew even all my childish hopes and fears, surely I must be led by the same Spirit. How intently I listened, and how sorry I was when he quit. Surely if he had known that every word was precious, he would have talked longer that day. Nearly as long as I have known anything I have known something of this hope that I have been writing of; and if I can claim any hope to-day it is the same hope that was given me when I was a little child, I know not when nor how; strengthened now and then by draughts of wine mingled by wisdom, and dealt out by the minister of the Lord's house; and now and then by that same Spirit that built the house, hewing the pillars of the same, that it might be fitly framed together, and that we might admire the complete structure, the church. Even though we were not there when the pillars were hewn, we do feel that all the parts were ordered in wisdom, and that we from time to time are made to enjoy the rich wines from the treasure of the gospel of Christ.

Your unworthy brother,
A. E. R.

STATE ROAD, Del., Feb., 1891.

BRETHREN BEEBE:—I have looked over the editorial in the SIGNS of February 4th somewhat carefully. The subject discussed in said editorial is second to none in importance, and yet is one rather imperfectly understood. I had concluded to lay my pen aside for a few weeks, as my name had appeared several times of late, and it is with some reluctance that I now take it up again. I am not quite satisfied with some few expressions you have made use of, as, if we really understand the subject alike, some points are left obscure to my mind; and, for aught I know, there might be others as slow to understand as myself. I do not call to mind an instance of you and I ever differing on a single important point of truth.

With great propriety you say, "When the law is referred to in the Scriptures it is very important to observe the connection in which the word is used. Different laws are mentioned by the inspired writers; and if the distinction between them is overlooked the result will be that the reader will be involved in perplexing confusion." After saying this (and I quote it for my own sake), so far as I can understand, you fail in some places to present clearly the distinction that is all-important, and upon which almost every point depends. You speak of the Sinai covenant, and designate it as a ministration of death, &c. There was a system of carnal ordinances and a worldly sanctuary given to national Israel, which was restricted to them, that was characterized as laws, statutes, judgments, &c. They were very numerous, and related to not only their worship, but to all the relations of life. It included the order of priesthood, his qualifications, even his clothing, the anointing oil, the ever-burning lamp, the heavenly fire, the cities of refuge, the preservation of the testimony, and many other things of which I need not now to speak particularly. What you say afterward is all certainly true of this ceremonial law. It may be proper to speak of this as the Sinai covenant; and if you meant this by that expression I will not object. But this, that consisted entirely of shadows of good things to come, and that was all done away in Christ, is certainly to be distinguished from what is emphasized as the law. The holy law of God is a transcript of the divine character, and requires holiness, because he is holy. The principles of eternal justice did not begin at mount Sinai; neither did their binding force upon the children of men begin there. There is no variability in this law. It never had beginning, and can never, never end. It is of this law that Jesus speaks when he says that heaven and earth can pass away before one jot or tittle of the law can fail. As to the other (the ceremonial), as was prophesied by Daniel, he caused the sacrifice and oblation to cease. Paul says of what he calls the law that it is holy, just and good. It is sometimes condensed into a single sentence, thus, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thine heart, soul, mind and strength."—Deut. vi. 5. This sentence embraces our relation and obligations to our Maker; and another short sentence embodies the principles of right and justice between man and his fellow-man. Its promulgation at mount Sinai did not enlarge it nor make any difference in it. It was simply making known what had always been law. It was then published; and it was a ministration of condemnation, because that all men were condemned under it. It stopped every mouth, and all the world were found guilty before God.

You say, "All the Mosaic dispensation was typical, from the fiery law which was written by the finger of God upon tables of stone," &c. I do not know how to understand this. The writing of it upon the tables I have thought was typical, but the law itself is certainly substance. I cannot think what it would be typical of. As a transcript of the mind and will of God, and requiring infinite perfection, in the very nature of things it was from the beginning, and over all people and nations must continue binding throughout all generations. It never required anything but what was right; from that it never can abate. It was as much a transgression of this holy law to worship idols or to kill and rob and steal in the beginning as it is now. If there had been no law there could have been no transgression. But the apostle calls our attention to the fact that death reigned before Moses just as much as it did afterward. An inquiry is suggested as to why this law was at that time given, and he answers that the offense might abound; or, in other words, that it might be made manifest that all mankind were transgressors, and that sin might appear in all its extent and deformity. You say further on, "Brother McIntyre will observe that we recognize a wide distinction between the letter of that law which was given to the nation of Israel and the holy principle of infinite justice which is designated in our text as 'the commandment.'" If you here refer to what I have called the ceremonial law, the distinction is properly made. I know of no holier law or higher principles of infinite justice than what was promulgated upon the fiery mount when the holiness of God was declared.

The Lord Jesus, when asked to define the law, after naming two precepts, says, in Mark, "There is none other commandment greater than these;" and in Matthew, "On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets." If all the law is here, and there is no greater commandment, we need not look elsewhere for law. As the spirit of prophecy was testimony of Jesus, it was embraced in prophecy that after certain days a new covenant would supersede the old, in the fulfillment of which the Lord would write his law in the hearts of his people, and so finish transgression and make an end of sin. I understand that it is this holy, inflexible law, the principles of which are written or implanted in the hearts of the children of men. This is not making void the law, but it is establishing it. So the righteousness of the law is said to be fulfilled in us. Its spirit is imparted, when they are said to have the mind of Christ. Loving God is the fulfillment of the law to God, as love to our fellow-men is the fulfilling of the law to them. It is the law, whether upon tables of stone or upon the fleshly tables of the heart. This law was spiritual, and required not merely letter service, but the spirit of obedience; but Paul did not as a Jew know that, neither do any of the children of men until the veil that is upon their heart is taken away.

Law may be said to be a principle rather than a precept; and so sin may be said to be a principle rather than merely sinful acts. Those whose hearts are enmity against God will not be subject to his law. It appears to me to be self-evident, as well as abundantly taught in the Scriptures, that the whole human family were under law to God, and that through the righteous requirements of this law judgment came upon all men to condemnation.

In what I said I have been aiming mainly at the distinction between the multitude of statutes and judgments, which were shadows of good things to come, and have passed away, and that law which is perfect, inflexible, and enduring as Jehovah's throne. If I failed to understand you rightly I shall likely fail to make myself clearly understood by you. The general sentiment of the editorial I fully approve, and feel to hope that some additional thoughts may do no harm.

In gospel bonds,
E. RITTENHOUSE.

SOUTHAMPTON, Pa., Jan. 29, 1891.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—Inclosed is a portion of a letter from one very dear to us. I trust it may be of interest to some who, like the writer, live far from the church of their choice, and very seldom have the sweet privilege of meeting in the assembly of the saints; yet, like her, they know the joyful sound of the gospel, and desire it above hidden treasure. Especially do I think her heartfelt words will come with tenderness to those confined by affliction, as the two dear sisters spoken of in her letter, Kate Swartout and Mary Parker. Both of these beloved ones have often sent comforting messages through the SIGNS to their kindred in Christ. They have been enabled through great tribulation and unspeakable joy to give solace and encouragement to weary pilgrims who are journeying to the same blessed home to which they are tending, where a rich inheritance awaits all the blood-bought throng. When faith catches a glimpse within the veil, then are we in haste to join the blissful company who walk in white, echoing high strains of praise to God and the Lamb.

In my last letter from sister Mary she says: "O this love, which had its origin, as we trust, at the great Fountain source; how it softens the rough places over which we are made to pass, how it sweetens the bitter cup of sorrow and trial, causing water to spring up in the desert, and abundant food in the desolate and waste places. If not deceived, I have recently experienced much of the depth and wealth, the sweetness and power, of this love, coming from Jesus, flaming into the heart, and going out to all his dear children throughout the land; and O, it is so much better, more enjoyable, to love than to hate, is it not, my dear sister?"

This is a small portion of a most precious letter from one whose bodily sufferings can never be told; proving that in the depths of the great ocean of sorrow are found the choicest pearls of love and praise. Though unable to enter the earthly courts of the Lord, we may in spirit sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus. Sometimes we are given to realize that we "are come unto mount Sion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an innumerable company of angels, to the general assembly and church of the first-born, which are written in heaven." Often the Holy Spirit breathes into the hearts of those far distant from each other the same sublime and most exalted song of adoration and praise, "Alleluia: for the Lord God omn'potent reigneth." "Again they said, Alleluia."

In christian love your sister,
BESSIE DURAND.

ALLIS HOLLOW, Pa., Jan. 18, 1891.

MY DEAR SISTER:—As I have no one to whom I can talk this Sunday morning I will try to write a few lines to you. I have just been reading dear sister Swartout's letter in the SIGNS, and O what a feast it was to me, she talks so much as I have been feeling of late. Last night, while lying awake, meditating on the happy state of the redeemed, these words came to my mind, "Alleluia: for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth;" and I read the same expression in the sister's letter. How comforting to one who has no means of communication with those of like precious faith is such a medium as the SIGNS. It seems like food to the hungry and water to the thirsty, and I trust I am thankful for such a blessing; first to the dear Lord, and then to you and brother Silas for your kindness to me. I believe he will repay you. How glad I am that dear Mary Parker can have something for her comfort while she remains in this her afflicted state. What a glorious rest will be hers when she leaves this world of pain and sorrow to dwell forever with her blessed Savior. She will then sing, "Alleluia." Why is it that those beautiful words are so animating to one so vile and sinful? If sister Swartout feels so sinful, what must I be? And not only she, but so many dear brethren and sisters; and ministers say the very same things. While I feel that I am nothing, and less than nothing, yet they all tell something of my experience far better than I can tell it myself, and I feel strengthened in reading what they write. I see quite a number of books advertised in the SIGNS that I would like to get if I could, but must wait. I trust my heavenly Father will grant me all I need, and I desire to be reconciled to his holy will.

Dear friends, do remember me in your prayers, both me and mine; and if we never meet again in this life I hope and trust that we may meet in that blessed abode where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest. I am sorry I said anything about trouble in my last letter, for what is my trouble compared with many others? I will try to be more patient for the time to come. I have been feasting ever since reading the last SIGNS. I could mention very many different ones who have written comforting letters and articles at different times that have been precious to me, and among them are yours and your brother's; and I trust that he is my brother also. I hesitate greatly to send this letter, but will venture to do so, feeling sure that you will overlook all faults. My family is as well as usual, and I hope this will find you the same.

With love to each one, I remain your unworthy sister in hope of eternal life,

ELIZA ORSHALL.

SPENCERVILLE, Ohio, Dec. 18, 1890.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—I copy the following from a card received yesterday from J. N. Light, which will explain itself:

"Brother Cottrell is here with us, and requests me to write you that he has received the package you sent him. He desires you to write, either through the SIGNS or privately, to the sister that sent him that money (sister Hester Rumney, of Verona, Ill.), thanking her for the favor. He is still quite feeble, and in needy circumstances."

By your publishing this I will have an opportunity to add a few extracts from sister Rumney's letter of December 3d, which I think will be read with interest by the dear readers of the SIGNS.

I will also say, in behalf of brother Cottrell, that any gift from brethren who may remember him in deeds of charity will be well and justly applied, as he has been a hard-working man, both in the ministry and in supplying the needs of his large family. Above all things else, he has always been sound in the faith, advocating God's supreme authority in all existence, as well as his predestinating wisdom in all things, the total depravity of man in regard to his ability to obtain heaven by good works, and hence his utter dependence upon God for salvation, both for time and eternity. Those desiring to assist him should send in care of Elder J. N. Peters, Lightsville, Darke Co., Ohio.

Yours in humble service,
A. B. BREES.

VERONA, Ill., Dec. 3, 1890.

ELDER BREES—DEAR BROTHER IN JESUS:—I hardly know that such a poor sinner dare claim that relationship; but one thing I can say, which is that I love the children of God, and would love to meet with them if I were able. I shall never have that pleasure again in this world; but I hope, if I am not deceived, that I shall meet with all that blessed number where there will be no more a wearisome body to drag along, no more sin nor sorrow, nor tempting devil to worry and harass us. O what a sink of sin is my heart! O what a wretch I would be if it were not for rich, free, saving grace! O what a mercy that it is so free! If it were not, it would be no good for such a wretch as I often feel myself to be, with not one good thing to offer, not so much as a mite to give. O what a poor beggar! But although I feel so poor, I have a rich Father to go to, who never sends one poor, helpless, seeking one away. O what a dear Jesus we have! He knows our frames, and remembers that we are but dust. I do want to love him more and serve him better. Sometimes I wonder if I do love him at all. If I do, it is because he first loved me, or I should have been still running in the road that thousands are, and loved the distance well.

Dear brother, excuse me for writing to you, but I wanted to send a dollar to our poor afflicted brother Cottrell; and as I send my SIGNS to a dear christian brother in England, I forgot his address, and knew that you would forward it to him. I hope he is better, if the Lord will, and that he feels Jesus precious to his soul. Give my christian love to him.

Many are the afflictions of the righteous; but the Lord will deliver him out of them all in his own time and way, and that is the best time. I often feel to wonder why such things have taken place; but I have seen in time that all things have worked for my good; yet the bud had a bitter taste. I can say that goodness and mercy have followed me for seventy-four years. I know that my time must be nearly run. O that I may be found in my blessed Jesus, clothed in his righteousness. Nothing short of that will do for such a poor sinner; and I feel that if I should reach that blessed place I will cast my crown at the dear Redeemer's feet, and crown him Lord of all. What a sweet employ, to join in the song, "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain." I cannot sing here, but there we will sing more sweet, more loud, and Christ shall be our song.

HESTER RUMNEY.

PENN YAN, Yates Co., N. Y.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS:—As the time is at hand for me to renew my subscription, it has been strongly impressed on my mind to send a few lines of thanksgiving for the manifestation of the love of God in the many blessings he has bestowed upon me, who am not worthy of the least notice. The SIGNS has indeed been a blessed medium of correspondence and of comfort to me. Like one of old I am made to say, "How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings," having their feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace. I fully indorse the doctrine advocated in the SIGNS. Thanks be unto God for raising up men in these days who do not shun to declare the whole counsel of God. For all things are by him and through him, in whom we live and move and have our being. He has all power in heaven and earth, and says, "My counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure." O what a comfort it is to the poor, trembling child of God to know that their salvation does not depend upon their own works, but is by the grace of God. They are made to sing,

"Amazing grace! how sweet the sound!
That saved a wretch like me;
I once was lost, but now am found,
Was blind, but now I see."

The doctrine of God's foreknowledge and predestination of all things is the riches of food to my hungry soul, although at times I am made to doubt whether I have been born again, and all is dark within. O how great is that darkness! But when God commands the light to shine in our hearts, how great is that light! And no man is able to put that light out. Then all doubts and fears disappear, and I can say, "The Lord is my Shepherd, I shall not want. He maketh me to lie down in green pastures; he leadeth me beside the still waters; he restoreth my soul; he leadeth me in paths of righteousness for his name's sake. Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death I will fear no evil, for thou art with me. Thy rod and thy staff they comfort me."

It is now one week since I commenced to pen these rambling thoughts. To-day I have been meditating upon the wonderful riches we come in possession of, being saved by the grace of God. Think of it, dear brethren. We are heirs of God, and joint heirs with the Lord Jesus Christ. And what is it we are heirs to? Is it something of this world? No indeed. He loves us too well to give us that which shall vanish away so soon; but he gives us an inheritance that is incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away, being reserved in heaven for us. Is not that enough for any poor worm of the dust to know, and to rejoice in so great a salvation? He tells them that their names are all engraven upon the palms of his hands, and their sins and their iniquities he will remember no more. Is not the love of God both great and wonderful? For God so loved them that he gave his only begotten Son to die for their sins. How can we cease to speak of such love as this?

"Even down to old age all my people shall prove My sovereign, eternal, unchangeable love."

It is ever a joy to the children of God to tell what God has done for their souls. I think I have been made to realize what the Lord meant when he said, "If these should hold their peace, the very stones would cry out." Some people talk of choosing or rejecting the Savior. It cannot be that they know the Lord is almighty; that the way of man is not in himself; that it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps.

Well, I see that I must draw this to a close. If you think there is a morsel of food in it for any one, you may publish the rambling thoughts; and if not, I hope you will have plenty of room for it in your waste-basket. The SIGNS has come to me regularly every week for the year, bearing glad tidings of great joy. My prayer is for Israel, that the Lord will watch over them and keep them while they sojourn here in this world of tears. May the Lord also remember the least of his little ones, your unworthy brother, if one at all,

ALFRED JENSIN.

THE TEN COMMANDMENTS.

FROM the article of our highly esteemed brother, Elder E. Rittenhouse, on page 68 of this paper, it is evident that there was good reason for our apprehension that we could not avoid being misunderstood in the remarks on the subject of "Death in the Law," as published in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES for February 4th, No. 5, of the current volume. Since with his gifts and experience he could not clearly apprehend our meaning, it is not reasonable to hope that other readers have been able to understand what was designed to be presented. Therefore, relying on the charity and forbearance of the brethren, we will endeavor to be more explicit, if the Lord will favor us with the necessary ability. Elder R. will understand that he has our sincere thanks for the kindness in which he calls attention to the obscurity in the article to which he refers.

Many commentators on the Scriptures distinguish between the injunctions written upon tables of stone and the other specifications of the requirements of the law as given by Moses. They commonly designate the decalogue as the moral, and the other precepts as the ceremonial law. It is a popular assumption that while the ceremonial law was fulfilled and taken out of the way by the obedience and death of our Redeemer, the saints are still under what they call the moral law, meaning that the ten commandments as given on Sinai are still obligatory, at least as a rule of life, upon the disciples of Jesus. It was the design of our article in No. 5 to show the inconsistency of this doctrine with the testimony of inspiration.

Among all the severe messages sent by the prophets to denounce the wickedness of national Israel, not one word is recorded in condemnation of the Gentiles for transgression of the ten precepts which were written upon tables of stone. The reason is declared in the giving of that law to Israel. "And Moses called all Israel, and said unto them, Hear, O Israel, the statutes and judgments which I speak in your ears this day, that ye may learn them, and keep, and do them. The Lord our God made a covenant with us in Horeb. The Lord made not this covenant with our fathers, but with us, even us, who are all here alive this day."—Deut. v. 1-3. Not one of the Gentiles was included in the giving of that law which was written by the Lord in two tables of stone. Neither was one of those precepts given to the fathers of those Israelites to whom Moses spoke. From Adam to Moses there was no more revelation of the decalogue than of the other precepts of the law which God gave by Moses to Israel; nor is there any record that God ever gave to any of the uncircumcised either the decalogue or the other precepts enjoined upon Israel. Death passed upon all men in Adam, in whom all his posterity sinned. That death still reigns over all, because all have sinned. "For there is no difference; for all have sinned, and come short of the glory of God."—Romans iii. 22, 23. Even the natural mind can understand that the reign of death is not dependent upon the individual action of the children of the sinning Adam; yet it is only by sin that death reigns. Thus, it is clear that brother R. is correct in the proposition that "Law may be said to be a principle rather than a precept; and so sin may be said to be a principle rather than merely sinful acts." Yet it must be acknowledged that "Whosoever committeth sin transgresseth also the law; for sin is the transgression of the law."—1 John iii. 4. "For where no law is, there is no transgression." Thus it is evident that all men are under condemnation by the offense of one, or, as in the margin, by one offense.—Rom. iv. 15; v. 19. So, we understand Paul, in referring to the reign of death from Adam to Moses, to demonstrate that death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned in the first transgression. Only upon this principle could death have reigned during that time, since it was clearly impossible that any man could have individually violated the law given to Adam in the garden; and there is no record of any other law as being given to his children during that interval. Hence, the sin of Adam was the sin of all his unborn children. They are not condemned for Adam's sin, but for their own sin while yet they were in him. That sinful principle manifests itself in the wickedness of all men when they are developed.

If the law written upon tables of stone is indeed "a transcript of the divine character," it is very remarkable that there is not any intimation of that wonderful truth in the record of inspiration. So important a fact should be regarded with solemn reverence by every one who has the fear of God in his heart; but it is well to be careful that we do not mistake the traditions of men for the testimony of inspiration upon the subject. Unquestionably it is true that "The law is holy, and the commandment holy, just, and good;" but where has God said that it is the embodiment of his own infinite perfection? The material creation was pronounced not only good, but "very good;" but it will not be claimed that it was a transcript of the goodness of God. This expression has been used by some highly esteemed men, who were entitled to respect for their work as ministers of the gospel; but as they were not moved by direct inspiration of God they are not safe guides for the saints to accept as infallible. Not even the apostles, who were instructed by the personal ministry of our Lord himself, were qualified to teach authoritatively until they were endued with power from on high. With all deference we ask, Is there any inspired authority for attributing more holiness to one portion of the law which God gave to Israel than to another portion? Was not the Israelite as much bound to reverence the ceremonial requirements of that law as the decalogue? Why did the earth swallow up Korah, Dathan and Abiram, and fire from the Lord consume their followers? Was it not for their rebellion against the law which is called "ceremonial?"—Num. xvi. Every law which God has given is holy, and demands the reverence of those on whom it is enjoined. The whole law of God as given to Israel was expressly limited to that nation; and it is all included in the declaration of Paul when he asserts its holiness. Jesus declared of it in its entirety, "Think not that I am come to destroy the law, or the prophets: I am not come to destroy, but to fulfill. For verily I say unto you, Till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled."—Matt. v. 17, 18. Surely, the context does not justify the limitation of this declaration to the ceremonial observances enjoined upon the children of Israel.

Elder Rittenhouse certainly believes and preaches that Christ Jesus fulfilled not only every demand of the law upon tables of stone, but that obedience which he rendered to the holy commandment was so infinitely perfect that eternal justice could demand no more. Only by such obedience could his people be saved from their sins. Certainly, there could be no hope for a conscious sinner if the requirements of the law written upon tables of stone were not satisfied by Jesus, and must yet be met by the works of the subjects of grace. This cannot be the meaning designed by his argument; yet some of our readers might so mistake his position. From personal acquaintance, and the privilege of hearing his preaching, we know that he has no hope but in the perfect righteousness of Jesus, by which the law is magnified and divine justice satisfied. In that hope we have ever been, as he kindly says, in complete harmony.

The essential truth which we designed to express in the article to which our brother refers is that the perfect work of our Lord Jesus Christ was the complete satisfaction of all demands even of infinite justice, by which his ransomed people are freely justified from all condemnation, not merely in a ceremonial sense, but in its infinite and most unrestricted meaning. Surely our dear brother would not hesitate to indorse this truth, if we had been favored to clearly present it. There is no gospel of the grace of God without this name and cause. I would not attempt it had not a dear aged sister, living at a distance, at our yearly meeting requested me to write, that she might once more read a few lines from this poor, weak worm of the dust. I feel very weak, and utterly unfit to write for publication. As I sit alone this evening, O that the dear Master would come and open my dull understanding, and sup with me. May the dear editors and readers of our precious medium, the SIGNS, which I so greatly prize, cast the mantle of charity over my imperfect lines. I do hope in the great salvation of our God and Savior, which to me is indeed great and heart-searching.

"Do I love the Lord or no?
Am I his, or am I not?"

How often I thus inquire, and appeal to God to decide the doubtful case; and I am persuaded that he will. It is a source of great comfort to me at times to know that the great sovereign Ruler of heaven and earth knows this poor worm as utterly unable to even think a good thought or to do one good act, except it be given from above. I am so helpless, and so prone to do that I would not, being entirely without strength. My heavenly Father must have all the glory in the salvation of this poor, weak and hell-deserving creature, if ever I arrive at the fair mansions above; for no good deed have I to plead. Nothing but mercy can reach one so vile. My cry is, "Thou Son of David, have mercy on me." I am undone, unless the blessed One does reach forth his loving arm, as he did to a loving one of old, when he was on the boisterous waves, and was afraid, and began to sink. But Jesus had only to stretch forth his hand and hold him. "O thou of little faith." I think of the waves of this life, how they beat, and how many times I have been, like Jonah, at the bottom of the mountains. I am still a monument of his great and amazing love and mercy. But how little at times do I seem to realize his divine hand in all things that we are daily beholding while on the great journey of life; things that we had never thought would be our lot to pass through. Yet we must remember that the furnace is to try us. O how weak we are, unless "the form of the fourth" is with us. Then the flames cannot hurt us, even though the furnace be seven times hotter than it is wont to be heated. But fiery trials and sleepless nights will soon be over. Soon, very soon, if we are accounted worthy, shall we put off this dull mortality, and the great and glorious King shall say, "Come, ye blessed of my Father." Will it be my lot to hear those loving words? May God have mercy on a poor, undeserving mortal. I feel to plead as long as he grants me breath and a mind. Bless his holy name. I am much of the time shut up, and beaten by the tyrant; but I yet hope against hope that God has in years past remembered me in love.

Less than the least of saints, if one at all, and in great affliction, vital principle. Since the Gentiles were never under the ceremonial ordinances of Judaism, if the work of Jesus was confined to their fulfillment it could not have been of any benefit to any sinner except the natural Israelites.

Our brother does not preach that the gospel kingdom of Jesus is a mere branch of the Mosaic dispensation, but that in all things our Lord Jesus has the pre-eminence. Moses and the prophets testify of him. As a servant in fashion as a man, he did indeed become obedient unto the letter and spirit of the law, even unto death; but in his glorious resurrection his whole body, including every subject of his electing love, is risen above the law of Moses, as well as all other principalities and powers. The law on tables of stone has no more dominion over him or his redeemed members. So our Lord says, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation; but is passed from death unto life."—John v. 24. "There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit. For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death. For what the law [of sin and death] could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh, God sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin, condemned sin in the flesh; that the righteousness of the law [of sin and death] might be fulfilled in us [not by us], who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit."—Rom. viii. 1-4. This does not seem to declare simply the fulfillment of the ceremonial law; but it is that righteousness which exceeds the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, whose trust was in obedience to the letter of the law of Moses, including the decalogue. The saints, who are thus made free by the grace of God from the bondage of legal servitude, are not to use their liberty for an occasion to the flesh, but by love serve one another. When led by the Spirit of God the saints long for deliverance from the indwelling principle of sin, and earnestly desire to be conformed to the perfection which is revealed in Christ. Their strong consolation, in all their conscious vileness, is that Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to them. It could afford no comfort to know that it was only the ceremonial provisions of the Sinai law which were blotted out by the death of Jesus on the cross. If they must for themselves satisfy the demands written upon the two tables of stone, they must despair. "For as many as are of the works of the law are under the curse; for it is written, Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things which are written in the book of the law to do them. But that no man is justified by the law in the sight of God, it is evident; for, The just shall live by faith. And the law is not of faith: but, The man that doeth them shall live in them."—Gal. iii. 10-12. The connection in which this language is written shows that the whole legal covenant, as given by Moses, is included in the term "law." At least so it appears to our understanding. Certainly the saints are perfectly freed from condemnation by the redeeming blood of Jesus; for that blood "cleanseth us from all sin."—1 John i. 7.

As we Gentiles were never under the ceremonial requirements of the law of Moses, it is evident that we could not be interested in the redemption which only delivered from that bondage. But we might well despair if the work of Jesus had yet left us under obligation to the law which was written upon tables of stone. Its dreadful yoke was more than could be borne by the nation of Israel; and no Gentile could have fulfilled its righteous demands. Neither as a rule of life, nor in any other way, were those holy precepts ever obeyed by any other person except the righteous Servant whom God made strong for himself. In his obedience the many who were chosen in him are made righteous. This is the hope of the gospel of Christ. It would avail nothing for the saints if they were delivered from what our brother designates as the ceremonial law, while they yet were left under the condemnation of the precepts of the decalogue. They would still be under everlasting condemnation, without the possibility of deliverance, since "There remaineth no more sacrifice for sins."—Heb. x. 26.

The saints are not under the necessity of looking to Sinai for the rule by which their conduct is to be governed while they remain in the present evil world. They have in the commandment and example of their Lord the perfect law and pattern, which is their only safe and certain guide. God himself works in them both to will and to do of his good pleasure.—Phil. ii. 13. The Lord includes every obligation resting upon his disciples when he commands them, "Follow me."

In the antitypical significance of the ten commandments we have understood them to stand in that old Jewish heaven as the sun. As such the perfect holiness of our Savior is reflected in that holy law. Our Lord is the only embodiment of all which is declared in that law. So, it was of him that Moses in the law did testify. No man is seen, save Jesus only, when the voice of God is heard bearing witness of the Lord, saying, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased; hear ye him."—Matt. xvii. 5-7. At that voice Moses and Elias disappear. The law and the prophets are glorious only as they testify of Jesus.

Hoping that our position will be understood by brother Rittenhouse, and others who are interested, and again thanking him for his fraternal faithfulness, we submit these remarks to the careful examination of our readers, with the earnest desire that nothing but the truth of God may be accepted by any of the disciples of Jesus.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

Joseph Free was born Sept. 15th, 1811, in Stewart Co., Tenn., where he lived very nearly all his life. His youth was quietly and delightfully spent in a way that necessarily caused a host of people to admire him when they found his characteristics. He was all through life distinguished for veracity, fidelity and morality. He associated frequently with Miss T. C. Dinkins, a very estimable lady, with whom he became enamored, and they were happily united in the holy bonds of matrimony Feb. 6th, 1838. They lived very pleasantly together, and had four children born to them, three of whom are now living. She died Aug. 24th, 1852. After an interval of loneliness he married Miss Sallie Parker, an excellent woman, Aug. 21st, 1853, by whom he had eight children, six of whom are living. Again, on Oct. 28th, 1873, his house was wrapped in mourning by the death of his second wife, and he never married again.

Joseph Free joined the Primitive Baptist Church at Cubb Creek, Tenn., on Saturday before the first Sunday in September, 1846, where he remained a consistent member for many years, until dissension disrupted the church, when he and one other quietly and voluntarily withdrew from the church. His house was always a home for his brethren, whom he esteemed highly. The SIGNS OF THE TIMES came to him about thirty years, and was a delightful companion to him. His career was closed by his death, which occurred Feb. 4th, 1891, from a short but severe attack of "La Grippe." He passed quietly away without a struggle, surrounded by his family and a host of friends and relatives.

It seems hard to give him up, but he died in the triumphs of a living faith; and we sorrow not as those without hope, for our loss is his eternal gain. His unexpected departure cast a pall of sorrow over his family and friends, who fondly hoped that he would survive the attack, and be spared yet a long while; but we must humbly bow to the edicts of him who doeth all things well. We fully believe that heaven is his home, and are thus consoled. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them."

GEORGE D. FREE.

FORREST CITY, Ark., Feb. 22, 1891.

Mr. John Pridmore, of North Syracuse, N. Y., died Jan. 26th, 1891, of kidney and liver difficulties.

He had been ailing for several months, and was confined to his bed in his last sickness about two weeks. He said to his friends in his last sickness that he was going home, which proved to be true. He has gone to his eternal home; and from the testimony he left we believe that he is with Jesus. The writer of this notice had the privilege of visiting him and the family at his home several years ago, and while there he was led to give the reason of his hope, which was very satisfactory indeed. He had been a member of the New Light Baptists, but was finally obliged to come out from them, because, as he said, there was no spiritual food there for a living soul. He was in heart a Primitive Baptist, I fully believe.

Mr. Pridmore was born in Cambridge-shire, England, in 1843, and had been in this country thirty-one years. He married Miss E. J. Monby in 1875, with whom he lived until his death.

He leaves a wife and four children to mourn the absence and loss of the nearest natural friend that they had on earth; but may the God of heaven, who directs all things (yes, all things) after the counsel of his own will, be a Husband unto the widow and a Father unto the fatherless.

D. M. VAIL.

WAVERLY, N. Y., Feb. 21, 1891.

Spotswood Jordan departed this life Dec. 20th, 1890, at the home of his son-in-law, John Paxton, in Shelby Co., Ky.

Brother Jordan was born in Fluvanna Co., Va., Jan. 18th, 1806. He was married three times. The first wife was Mary C. Bullock. To her were born three children, viz., W. J. Jordan, F. F. Jordan and Sallie A. Ransdell. The second wife, Matilda Perry, had four children, viz., Mollie E. Paxton, Maggie Perry, Amanda Burnett and H. F. Jordan. The third wife, Henrietta Roberson, lived only about seven months after marriage.

Brother Jordan joined the Predestinarian Baptist Church in Virginia, and after emigrating to Kentucky united by letter with the Bethel Church of Old School Baptists, in Shelby Co., about fifty-one years ago. He served the church as Deacon and Moderator faithfully for a number of years. He was a devoted christian, holding firmly to the faith of the Old School Baptists, following the course of the old landmarks, ready and willing at all times to speak words of comfort to the disconsolate, patiently bearing the trials of life, and boldly bearing the cross of a true christian, as a follower of the meek and lowly Jesus. Jesus was to him the refuge of his soul, his only theme. As his strength of body grew weaker his faith in Jesus grew stronger day by day, and of nothing else did he desire to talk but salvation in Jesus.

His funeral was preached by Elder P. W. Sawin, at the Buffalo Church, from 1 Thess. iv. 18, and his remains were interred in the cemetery at Bagdad, followed by a large concourse of relatives and friends. So ended the life of a noble christian, father, husband and friend. May God in his infinite goodness bless and sustain his dear children in this sad bereavement, cause them to humbly bow before him, who doeth all things well, and finally take them to himself in heaven, is the prayer of your brother in hope of a glorious resurrection,

E. F. RANSELL.

NEW CASTLE, Ky., Feb. 15, 1891.

"AS FOR me, I will behold thy face in righteousness: I shall be satisfied, when I awake, with thy likeness."—Psalm xvii. 15.

Brother George Jenkins died at his residence in Rock Springs, Lancaster Co., Pa., in the 74th year of his age.

He was baptized by Elder Thomas Barton in August, 1856, in fellowship with the church at Rock Springs, and was appointed by the church to the office of Clerk in 1864, and Deacon in 1879. The qualifications to fill these appointments were entirely satisfactory, and particularly that of Deacon, which manifested itself in him as a special gift to that extent as is rarely seen, serving the little church with the ability which God had given him at all seasons and under all circumstances to which he was called. He was a consistent and orderly member, being naturally of an agreeable and cheerful disposition, and calculated to make others feel comfortable who visited his house, which was ever open to the weary traveler, who found a welcome to his hospitality. Our brother was known among the Baptists of Delaware, and to some extent in the Delaware River and Baltimore Associations, who will bear testimony to the truth of our statement. In regard to the gospel, he was a discerner of truth and a lover of good men, enjoying and appreciating that kind of preaching which was discriminating, dividing truth from error, and giving each their portion of meat in due season. He was of a meek and quiet spirit, base in his own eyes, mourning over indwelling sin, and a sense of unworthiness of the least of all the mercies of which he had been a partaker.

These are some of the marks characterizing the man whose loss we deeply deplore. He raised a large family, some of them being taken before him, notices of which have appeared in the SIGNS; and others of them settled in life in different parts of the country. I believe there are eight daughters and two sons living, four of the daughters at home, who must feel more keenly this bereavement. They know that they have the confidence and fellowship of their brethren and friends, but I know that they would be better satisfied to know that they were remembered by you at the throne of grace. All the family were at home on the occasion, that were in reach, on Jan. 31st, 1891. His disease was in his feet, from which he suffered greatly, often expressing a desire to depart and be with Christ, which is far better. He now sleeps beside his wife Susan, who preceded him but a short time to that better country. Some remarks were made on the occasion by the writer of this notice to a large and attentive congregation.

WM. GRAFTON.

FOREST HILL, Md.

Josephine D. Griffin died Dec. 5th, 1890, aged about 43 years.

The subject of this notice was a daughter of George Cook, an old and respected citizen of this county, and a member of the Primitive Baptist Church, who died several years ago at his daughter's house. She was married first to brother John L. Pumphy, Feb. 19th, 1863, and joined the Missionary Baptist Church at Union, Union Co., Ark., on a profession of faith. John L. Pumphy dying, she lived a widow for several years. She then married W. W. Griffin, and became the mother of one more child. The writer was well acquainted with her from a child, having lived a neighbor to her all her life, and was a member of the same church. I never was acquainted with a lady that seemed to have the cause of Christ and christianity more at heart than she did. It was always a consolation to visit her and hear her talk of the love of Jesus. She often remarked that if she knew anything at all it was by experience, and that God did all things right. She was kind and affectionate to all, a good wife, mother and neighbor. She of course had faults, and was liable to err, as all human beings are; but I believe that her heart's desire was to do God's will. She is now gone to rest; we see her no more on earth. "Then mourn no more your mother's death,

Since Christ has called her home,

To mansions of eternal bliss,
Where sorrow never comes.

"It grieved us here to see her go;
But only think of this;
She's taken from a world of woe
To reign with Christ in bliss."

ALSO,

Joel Kelly died at his granddaughter's, Mrs. Sue Keeton, in Union Co., Ark., Jan. 20th, 1891, aged 80 years, 10 months and 18 days.

He was born in Kershaw District, S. C., March 2d, 1811, moved to Dallas Co., Ala., in 1819, and was married to Mary T. Owen in the year 1834.

ALSO,

Mary T. Kelly, daughter of Jesse Owen, and wife of Joel Kelly, was born Jan. 11th, 1812, moved to Tennessee with her parents while quite young, thence to Alabama, and was married to Joel Kelly in 1834. She died at her son's, J. M. Kelly, Dec. 19th, 1886, preceding her husband in death about four years, aged 74 years, 11 months and 8 days.

Joel Kelly and his wife, Mary T. Kelly, joined the Primitive Baptist Church in Alabama in 1834 (the same year they were married). In 1837 they moved to Union Co., Ark., and settled on a farm about six miles south of Champagnolle, and went into the organization of the Shady Grove Church near by, living consistent members until it dissolved. They then joined the Salem Church, where their membership was at their death. They did not profess to know that they were christians, but hoped they had been cleansed from their sins by the blood of Christ, and if saved it was through the imputed righteousness of Christ alone; not of themselves, but of grace. They were always ready to give a reason for their hope. They were honored and respected by all who knew them, and were always ready to visit the sick and afflicted, and to give a word of consolation to the distressed. They took great delight in reading the Bible and the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, and in going to their meetings. Aunt Polly (as she was called) had the misfortune of getting crippled in her old days, and was unable to get about much; while the Major (as he was known by all) was in tolerable health, and could walk for miles up to the time of his death. They made their home in their last days, from 1883 until their death, with their son, John M. Kelly, in sight of their old home. They were the parents of five children (three sons and two daughters), four of whom preceded them in death.

Elder Woodard Smith talked well at the burial of the Major. They now lie side by side in the old Shady Grove grave-yard, to await the resurrection morn.

We cannot close without saying a word for our friends, John and Margret Kelly, who have been faithful in taking care of the old folks, and administering to their wants. They are gone to rest. They died putting their trust in God, who doeth all things well. They leave one son, eleven grandchildren, three great-grandchildren, and a host of other relatives and friends, to mourn our loss; but we mourn not without a hope of seeing them by-and-by.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date, this date denotes the time at which your subscription expires, and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

CORRESPONDENCE.

"He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches; To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God."—Rev. ii. 7.

It is with a feeling sense of unworthiness that I undertake, in compliance with the request of our dear, aged sister Mullock, of Middletown, N. Y., to elucidate the subject contained in the text quoted above. I fully realize my inability to expound the Scriptures, to more than skim the surface of its wonderful and soul-comforting truth, but do not feel on this account to decline, when called upon by any of God's dear children, to give such views as I have; yet I always feel that the least and most ignorant of them knows infinitely more than I ever have known or hope to know in time.

The text and its connections present some of the most awfully sublime and glorious truths that our God has been pleased to reveal to his people regarding his will and the dispensation of that will to his church, for such we regard the entire Scriptures of truth. Jesus said to the caviling Pharisees, "Search the Scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life: and they are they which testify of me." Thus we see that a knowledge of the letter of the Scriptures does not give eternal life, nor the doing of the things commanded therein. Eternal life is the gift of God to his people according to his own sovereign purpose; not according to their works, nor for works of righteousness which they have done, but according to his mercy; and the manner of it is "by the washing of regeneration and renewing of the Holy Ghost." Instead, therefore, of the Scriptures being a rule, or set of rules, by the observance of which a sinner may secure his eternal salvation, they exhibit God's method of working, whereby he has declared his own righteousness, and has made his people righteous; as the psalmist says, "Thy people shall be all righteous." God himself has made them righteous, even with his own righteousness, by which alone they can enter into the kingdom of heaven. "Of him are ye in Christ Jesus, who of God is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption: that, according as it is written, He that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord." The book called Revelation is a part of that Scripture having the seal of divine inspiration, by the

which the man of God is "thoroughly [or throughly] furnished unto all good works." Therein God has brought every work into judgment, and all the works of man have been condemned. Only the work of God is able to stand the trying ordeal. "Without faith it is impossible to please him;" and no man has faith only by the gift of God, and by it works in him "the work of God," revealing his salvation in time.

The book of Revelation is incorrectly called by the compilers, "The Revelation of St. John the Divine." Correctly speaking, it is "The Revelation of Jesus Christ, which God gave unto him, to show unto his servants things which must shortly come to pass." It is addressed by "John to the seven churches which are in Asia: Grace be unto you, and peace, from him which is, and which was, and which is to come; and from the seven spirits which are before his throne; and from Jesus Christ, who is the faithful witness, and the first-begotten of the dead, and the prince of the kings of the earth." He declares himself, "Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the ending, saith the Lord, which is, and which was, and which is to come, the Almighty." John was in Patmos "for the word of God, and for the testimony of Jesus Christ." Patmos was a lonely, desolate island in the Mediterranean Sea, to which John had been banished by the Roman Emperor to prevent the promulgation of the gospel by John; but, like the selling of Joseph to the Ishmaelites by his envious brothers, it was according to God's absolute and eternal predestination, that there, at that time, and under those peculiar circumstances, John might receive the wonderful revelation, to be by him written and delivered "to the seven churches which are in Asia," "things which must shortly come to pass."

The text under consideration is part of the address to the church at Ephesus; and although she is commended for her works, labor, patience, &c., yet he testifies against her. "Nevertheless I have somewhat against thee, because thou hast left thy first love." He commands her, "Remember therefore from whence thou art fallen, and repent, and do the first works; or else I will come unto thee quickly, and will remove thy candlestick out of his place, except thou repent." The candlestick is the church. "The seven candlesticks which thou sawest are the seven churches." We note, first, that this address is to an organized church of believers; second, the charge, "Thou hast left thy first love;" third, the command to repentance. The address being then to believers, quickened sinners, who have been made alive from the dead, cannot have any reference to those yet in nature's fallen condition, and does not apply in the way of urging them to endeavor to secure their eternal salvation by some effort of their own; but this church, whose first works (evidently in her organized church capacity) were so highly commended, had fallen, left her first love, and she is commanded to "repent, and do the first works."

Paul, in the letter to the churches of Galatia (Gal. v. 2-4), says, "Behold, I Paul say unto you, that if ye be circumcised, Christ shall profit you nothing. For I testify again to every man that is circumcised, that he is a debtor to do the whole law. Christ is become of no effect unto you, whosoever of you are justified by the law; ye are fallen from grace." Again (Gal. iii. 2-5), "This only would I learn of you, Received ye the Spirit by the works of the law, or by the hearing of faith? Are ye so foolish? having begun in the Spirit, are ye now made perfect by the flesh? Have ye suffered so many things in vain? if it be yet in vain. He therefore that ministereth to you the Spirit, and worketh miracles among you, doeth he it by the works of the law, or by the hearing of faith?" In the case of the church at Ephesus it is not specifically stated in what respect she had left her first love, but from what was charged to the Galatian brethren by Paul we have a key to the subject. Her first works appear to have been abundant and worthy of commendation, even as was the case with the Galatians; but, as with them, she left her first love. That is, at the first her works, labor, patience, and hatred of them which are evil, sprang from her love to her divine Lord, and in them all she crowned him Lord of all; but when she turned to those works and worshiped them as a means of obtaining salvation, she became a transgressor, and God commanded her to repent and do her first works, not merely in the letter, but in the spirit; that they should present their bodies a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable unto God, a reasonable service, that God should be glorified in their body and in their spirit, which are his. Many suppose that because salvation is by grace there is nothing required of its subjects, which is a very great mistake. All the commandments of God, all the precepts of the gospel, and all the exhortations of the apostles of the Lamb, are for the observance of the saints, and they are commended for the faithful performance of them; but they are not to be made idols of, and danced around, as did Israel about their golden calf—not lauded as a means of salvation. This is probably what the Ephesian saints were now guilty of; hence the command, "Remember therefore from whence thou art fallen, and repent, and do the first works; or else I will come unto thee quickly, and will remove thy candlestick out of his place, except thou repent." A candlestick is to hold the lighted candle. If the candlestick be removed out of his place the light is also removed; hence the people are left in darkness. It is certain that a faithful gospel minister is a light unto the people to whom he is sent; and being upheld and sustained by the church as a candlestick, he is a light to all that are in the house (or church). "Ye are the light of the world," said Jesus. "If thine eye be single, thy whole body shall be full of light; but if thine eye be evil, thy whole body shall be full of darkness. If therefore the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness." Such things are witnessed in the whole travel of the church. Ministers who have appeared strong, like tall cedars, fresh and green, and churches that stood as monuments of the saving power and grace of God, whose works resounded his praise and reflected his glory, have fallen from their high estate, the candlestick has been removed, and the light is gone out; and where once the glorious light of the gospel shone with unwonted brilliancy all is now darkness. How great, truly, is that darkness! In the place where God was worshiped, men are worshiping the works of their own hands, saying to their own golden calves, "These be thy gods, O Israel, that brought thee up out of Egypt."

"Remember therefore from whence thou art fallen, and repent"—turn away from the evil. All commands to repentance are to living subjects. Dead men cannot repent, nor can those dead in trespasses and in sins; but God calls his living children to repent, or turn from any evil course they have been pursuing, and turn unto him, who will have mercy upon them and abundantly pardon them. The address of the text is to the saints individually. "He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches." Our text also contains a sweet and precious promise "to him that overcometh;" for to him "will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God." The expression, "He that hath an ear," occurs frequently in Revelation, and was also used by our Lord in several of his parables. "He that hath ears to hear, let him hear." This of course has reference to the faculty of hearing possessed only by those who are the subjects of a spiritual birth; for by nature no man has ears for these things. By nature all are deaf and dumb, blind and dead; but in the new, heavenly, spiritual birth they have eyes, ears, lips and hearts, whereby they see, hear, taste and speak, and understand with spiritual knowledge. While "eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man [the natural organs or powers], the things which God hath prepared for them that love him," yet "God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit: for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God." God's Spirit, then, is eyes and ears to them, whereby they see and hear, and heart, whereby they understand, what God has prepared for them. "For what man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of man which is in him? even so the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God. Now we have received, not the spirit of the world, but the Spirit which is of God; that we might know the things that are freely given to us of God. Which things also we speak, not in the words which man's wisdom teacheth, but which the Holy Ghost teacheth; comparing spiritual things with spiritual."—1 Cor. ii. 11-13. He then that hath this ear is addressed, and commanded (for God's "let" is a command) to hear "what the Spirit saith unto the churches." In times of peace and outward prosperity in the churches many nominal professors creep in, and corrupt men also, who lead captive those characters who, like themselves, having no experimental knowledge of the truth, are ready to run to any length of error, and from selfish, carnal motives seek to popularize the doctrine which they have professed to love, and to take away its reproach, and so smooth it as to render it less offensive and more agreeable to the world. They in reality are ashamed of the doctrine. When they begin to show their hand it is at first by some slight objection, or a little explanation, to escape the criticisms of unbelievers; then, after they find that they have a following, they become more bold, and attack the doctrine openly. Now comes the time of trial, when the address to Ephesus applies to that church; but it is not expected that those who have thus crept in will heed the commandment, but "he that hath ears" is commanded to "hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches." This commandment is not merely in the sense of taking notice that a word has been spoken, but to give heed, to pay attention, and to do the things commanded. "Therefore we ought to give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard, lest at any time we should let them slip." "See that ye refuse not him that speaketh: for if they escaped not who refused him that spake on earth, much more shall not we escape, if we turn away from him that speaketh from heaven: whose voice then shook the earth: but now he hath promised, saying, Yet once more I shake not the earth only, but also heaven." His voice speaking on earth from Sinai shook the earth (Israel after the flesh); now his voice from heaven shakes also heaven (the old dispensation of the law, with all its works, rites, ceremonies, legal righteousness, &c.). "And this word, Yet once more, signifieth the removing of those things that are shaken, as of things that are made, that those things which cannot be shaken may remain."

The church in this country, and within a few decades, has experienced seasons and passed through scenes forcibly illustrating the command of the Lord to Ephesus; nor is the end come yet. The Lord still calls for faithfulness and watchfulness on the part of his people. Truly we are even now in the very midst of the perilous times of which the apostle warned Timothy: "This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come." But, beloved sister, you have no cause to fear. Your Father is the supreme Ruler of the universe, and controls and directs all things to the good of his chosen, and to the honor and glory of his own most holy name. He works even those things which seem to our poor, finite minds to be against us, and subversive of his government, to the furtherance of his purpose. To him that overcometh in these perilous times there is a promise of good: "I will give him to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God." This overcoming is the pivot upon which the whole thing turns; but how can a poor weakling, a worm of the dust, overcome? To my mind the whole sum of this is in the fact that he hears this voice; and it is the evidence of life in him—eternal life. "They that hear shall live." He has the life of Jesus in him; and he lives by the faith of the Son of God, who loved him, and gave himself for him. "He that hath the Son hath life." "This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith." "Thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." "By thee I have run through a troop: by my God have I leaped over a wall." So we see that the victory of his saints is in his victory, and what he is to them. When Paul was little and weak, then was he strong. When we are weak, his strength is manifested in us. When hungry he feeds us; when thirsty he gives drink to us; when enemies strong and mighty rise up against us he is our sure defense. It is this one, who by heartfelt experience is given to realize this sweet and precious truth, that is given to eat of the tree of life. Jesus is this tree, and he "is in the midst of the paradise of God." The tree whose fruit, eaten by our earthly parents, brought death to all, stood in the midst of that earthly paradise, "the garden planted eastward in Eden," where they dwelt until driven forth by the wrath of God. So the tree of life, the antidote to the poison of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, is in the midst of the paradise of God. There was also shown to John "a pure river of water of life, clear as crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God and of the Lamb. In the midst of the street of it [the city], and on either side of the river, was there the tree of life, which bare twelve manner of fruits, and yielded her fruit every month." Every month, perpetually and continually, yielding her fruit, sweet to the taste of all his hungry poor, who realize a blessing in their poverty, and in their hungering and thirsting after righteousness. There can be no drouth, for the river of water of life ever flows, bringing sweet solace and refreshing; and the tree of life yieldeth her fruit every month, so that there is no famine; and the voice of the Beloved says, "Eat, O friends; drink, yea, drink abundantly, O beloved." Thus eating his flesh (fruit of the tree of life) and drinking his blood (water of life), they evermore rejoice in his faithfulness, love, power, truth and grace, by which they stand and are upheld in all their earthly pilgrimage.

I submit these few scattering thoughts to the brethren editors, to our beloved sister Mullock, and to all who love the truth of our God.

As ever, yours in the fellowship of the gospel,

A. B. FRANCIS.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—I see that the SIGNS continues to give no uncertain sound, but moves along giving the same heavenly sound, "Salvation is of the Lord;" and it adores the God of the universe as being all in all. I am glad to see the meek Spirit that has controlled its editors; and notwithstanding false accusations have been brought against them, yet they revile not again. It has been charged against you, and all who believe in unlimited predestination, that you are stirring up strife. I have never heard of one who believes in predestination declaring non-fellowship for those who have limited views; but it is always those who limit predestination that declare non-fellowship, and some of them are very abusive. A certain Elder went through our country and tried to get the brethren to withdraw fellowship from those who believe in predestination; and he said that he would as soon fellowship the devil as to fellowship them. I know the editors of the SIGNS are accused of declaring non-fellowship for all who have limited views of predestination; but that is a mistake, if I understand them. They declared against the "railings" of a certain man who called all who believe in unlimited predestination heretics. That man came to my home church when I was sick and preached; and in his preaching he said, "We (the Primitive Baptists) are accused of preaching that God predestinated all things. Primitive Baptists do not preach any such things. Primitive Baptists would exclude a member for preaching such; and he ought to be excluded." He took the advantage of me, knowing my position on that point. I never try to stir up strife over it. I would be glad if all the brethren could understand each other, and come together on that and all points. I regret to see a spirit among some to say, "Let it alone;" and the way they let it alone is by abusing those who believe in predestination. The strife is stirred on their side, and they know it. The fightings that have been done by the opposers of predestination have been against an imaginary ghost that they themselves have set up; and they have wasted all their air, and have never touched those who believe in predestination. Here is the "ghost." They say, "I do not believe that God is the author of sin; neither do I believe that God influences man to sin by his Spirit." These are the points that they fight, and exhaust their whole strength. Those who believe in predestination oppose such doctrines as much as they, for they do not preach such. I have never heard one preach that God is the author of sin, or that he influences man to sin by the Holy Spirit. I know of none that believe such things. The opposer will bring up such as this: "If God predestinated all things, why punish the transgressor?" Paul met such opposition as this. And they would say, "Let us do evil, that good may come." "Let us continue in sin, that grace may abound." "Why doth he yet find fault?" for if he works all things after the counsel of his will, who then can resist his will, even if they should kill? &c. This is the argument that they bring today; but Paul says, "Nay but, O man, who art thou that repliest against God? Shall the thing formed say to him that formed it, Why has thou made me this? Hath not the potter power over the clay, of the same lump to make one vessel unto honor and another unto dishonor? What if God, willing to show his wrath, and to make his power known, endured with much long-suffering the vessels of wrath fitted to destruction: and that he might make known the riches of his glory on the vessels of mercy which he had afore prepared unto glory?" Let us take inspiration and see what it teaches. "For by him were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers: all things were created by him, and for him; and by him all things consist."—Col. i. 16, 17. The foregoing teaches that God created "all things." And did he create it by or for a mere chance, or create it for a purpose? None will have chance. Then you must come to purpose, as there is no middle ground between the two. Hence predestination is, says Webster, "the purpose of God from eternity respecting all events." God then had a purpose in "all things;" for I would not make an axe handle without a purpose in view. There is no creator outside of God, and he has created all things for a purpose. He says, "For my pleasure they are and were created." Then if he created them for himself and for his pleasure, did he not create "all things" for a purpose? And that purpose is his predestination. I notice some endeavor to sever the foreknowledge of God and predestination. If God foreknew a thing would take place, can it take place otherwise? If so, foreknowledge would cease to be foreknowledge. If he foreknew a man would be a man, can he be a horse, or anything else than what God knew he would be? Then if he could not be anything else, was it not fixed and determined beforehand what he should be? Yes. Well, who fixed it? God is "before all things." There was no eternal devil to fix one part, and God the other part. God had no co-workers in this matter. If God foreknew a thing would be, it had to be determined and fixed to be that way before it takes place, or before it could be known that it would be. If God knew "all things," he evidently thought of "all things;" and he says, "As I have thought, so shall it come to pass; as I have purposed, so shall it stand." Hence if he thought it would take place, it is determined or purposed. Notice he says, it shall come to pass just like he thought or knew it would. God predestinated the death of his innocent Son. That would be sin and wickedness for us; but not so with God. "Him, being delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God, ye have taken, and by wicked hands have crucified and slain." While they were carrying out God's predestination or purpose, it was a wicked act, and they were controlled by an evil spirit, and were carrying out their own wicked desires, and what they delighted in; yet this thing must be. Joseph was sold by men who were controlled by an evil spirit; and they carried out in that wicked act the desire of their heart; yet Joseph said that the Lord sent him before, to preserve life. Pharaoh was a wicked king, and was under the control of the evil spirit in oppressing the Israelites, and carried out the desires of his wicked heart; yet God raised him up for that same purpose, that his power might be manifest in him, in delivering his people from bondage. It was wicked in Adam to sin, and he was controlled by an evil spirit, and was carrying out his wicked desires; yet God had a purpose in that; for he had all the provisions made for the salvation of his people before they fell. If the fall had been on uncertainties, the provisions would have been uncertain also. If the covenant and salvation was a certainty and fixed, the fall was a certainty and fixed. Says one, "I believe that God predestinated all that is for the good of his people." So do I; but I believe that "all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose." God "declared [purposed, predestinated, fixed] the end from the beginning, and from ancient times the things [meaning all things that take place from the beginning to the end] that are not yet done, saying, My counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure." If he declares the end from the beginning, he evidently declares every event between the two. God has taught us that he gave the sea its bounds, and it cannot exceed the purpose of God. It has to remain in the channel that God has fixed for it. The devil, with all his emissaries, have their bounds fixed, and cannot go beyond. I rejoice in the truth that God is omnipotent and omnipresent; that he is every where, and possesses all power. He is the sovereign of the universe, and we should not try to measure arms with him; for as high as the heavens are above the earth, so much higher are God's ways than our ways, and his thoughts than our thoughts. I repeat again that none of us believe that God influences men to sin, nor that God is the author of sin. "Sin is the transgression of the law," and God is under no law, and violates no law. Man transgresses the law and commits sin; hence he is the author of sin; and when he sins he carries out the desires of his heart. We also believe it to be the duty of all God's people to obey the commands that are laid down in the Scripture; and they will be chastised if they do not. I yet contend that there is not enough between the brethren to make it a test of fellowship. The whole trouble seems to be in "making God the author of sin," which none of us believe; and if I have intimated such in this, it is because I am too short-sighted to see it. The brethren on the other side do not believe in chance. Then it must be by purpose; and let us take the Scriptures, and use scriptural expressions to convey our ideas, as much as we can. Let us endeavor to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. Because you cannot see every point as I do, do not discard me. If brethren are sound on the other, fundamental principles, and believe in the unlimited sovereignty of God, which I believe all true Baptist do, let us not make it a test of fellowship. I write the above by request of brother (Elder) Scott, of Maryland, and others, hoping (if published) that the dear saints will throw the mantle of charity over me, and allow me to believe in that (to me) soul-cheering doctrine that what is to be will be, and what has been was to be, and hence was fixed. All my times are in God's hand, and he will keep me here till the appointed time. Then I have a little hope that I will fall asleep in the arms of Jesus, where the wicked cease from troubling, and the weary are at rest.

Yours in love,

LEE HANCKS.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—Inclosed please find a copy of a letter written by sister Emma Horner, of Philadelphia. Quite a number of us would like to see it in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, if you can find room for it in your columns without leaving out something that you think would be of more general interest. The dear sister is of a very nervous temperament, which will account for the unusual effect in some of her exercises.

Wishing you all a successful and pleasant year, I remain yours to serve,

J. L. STATON.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Dec. 25, 1890.

DEAR BROTHER STATON:—The thought of writing what I hope have been the Lord's dealings with me has been on my mind for a long time; but as often as I have thought of it I have thought it was impossible for me to write about a thing that has always been such a mystery to me. A fear that the Lord will punish me if I do not has come upon me now, and I am willing to try with such ability as he has given me, hoping that he will direct my mind.

You asked me, when I came before the church, to tell the first of my thoughts; but it seemed impossible for me to do so. The first thought I ever had of God was when I was quite small, and was out one day by myself. The thought came to me, How could anything be, only as God had made it to be? It seemed to make such an impression on my mind that I never have forgotten it. The years passed on, and my school-mates would often in my conversation accuse me of being an Old School Baptist; but I would positively deny it. I became very fond of going to parties of all kinds, and also Sunday Schools. I was very fond of hearing hymns sung, and some of them seemed to rest a great deal on my mind, more especially the one beginning,

"There is a fountain fill'd with blood,
Drawn from Immanuel's veins;
And sinners plunged beneath that flood Lose all their guilty stains."

One night, after I became grown, I had a lot of young, lively company, and we were playing cards, when all at once I felt so condemned that I had to ask them to stop playing; and it seems to me to this day that I would not dare attempt to play a game. Some time after that I went to a ball against my mother's wishes, and my feelings that night I cannot describe; and on my way home in the morning I promised the Lord that if he would forgive me I would never go again. Then I began to go to Methodist meetings with three lady friends, and after some time we all made up to join them. We did so, and went through all the forms. We were first prayed for, then went down to the mourners' bench, and they told us to pray, which I did the best I knew how; and when the rest all professed, I said I believed that my prayers had been answered. But you may know that I knew nothing about belief then, neither did I think they would receive me; but the next day the preacher came and asked me how I wanted to be baptized. I did not think it made any difference, so we were sprinkled. I thought then that I was all right, as they all seemed to be so good; but I soon found that I was condemned in everything I did, and knew not why. I went to one of their love feasts, and to one of their communions, but never could go again. In the fall of 1880 or 1881 I left home and went to Baltimore to live; and I think on the second Sunday in June, 1883, while getting ready to go to the park, there was a peculiar feeling came over me. I began to feel condemned, and my sins began to rise before me like mountains. I went to the park, but it had lost all its beauty for me. At the supper table I became very nervous, and all began to inquire what was the matter; but I could not tell them. I thought of Jesus and his disciples; and soon after that I began to think of Judas. "One of you shall betray me." "He it is to whom I shall give a sop, when I have dipped it." Then the words came, "Betray me not with a kiss." I felt that I had betrayed the innocent. My sufferings I cannot describe. There were many passages of Scripture that came to my mind which I cannot remember now, but I do remember begging the dear Lord to lead me in the right way. There were times when I seemed to forget all but my sufferings. I came to the conclusion that if I went home I would get rid of my burden, for I thought my home folks would cheer me; so I went home on the third of October, 1883. It seemed to me as soon as I got into the cars that my burden increased. My brother met me at the depot, and I tried to talk to him and to hide my sorrow. I went to my mother and sister, wandering back and forth, trying to pray, until the eighth of October, when I became perfectly willing to die. I had but one desire; and that was that my soul might be saved. Then I felt constrained to tell some one of my trouble; and I thought of a neighbor whom I had always looked upon as being good, so I went there and tried to tell her of my trouble. She began telling me what to do. I told her that I had done that, and it failed to satisfy me. As I laid my hand on my heart, and the bitter tears ran down my cheeks, she handed me a book, and I began looking over it to hide my sorrow; but I remember only two words that I saw that night, and they were "repent" and "believe." I read most of the time until we all went to bed. I do not know whether my eyes were closed that night or not; but some time during the night my burden rolled away, and I cannot tell how, only it left me in a little while. In the morning I tried to eat breakfast, but could eat very little. After breakfast I took the book again and read until I came to the name of Jesus, and my eyes could not leave that name, until I fell as one asleep. Just as my eyes seemed to be closing the words came, "Only a cup of cold water in the name of a disciple." I was laid on the sofa, and my mother and the doctor were sent for. I knew that my mother stood over me weeping, and said that I was dead. My Savior seemed to be before me, and all I remember were the nail-prints in his hands. When I came to myself the doctor was trying to give me medicine, and the remark was made that Mr. Ralls opened my eyes; but I felt that the Lord had opened them, and I saw then as I never had seen before. Everything seemed to be praising God, and I found myself praising him too. Soon after I came to myself I wanted to go home, and did so. Even the flowers in the fields seemed to be praising God. That night I wept most of the time, and in the morning this Scripture came to me, "The voice of one crying in the wilderness." Then I began to think about baptism, and was taught that there are men prepared to baptize. My brother-in-law invited me to go and hear the Old School Baptists, which I did, and was satisfied that they were the Lord's people. On Saturday before the second Sunday in January I offered myself to the church, and was unanimously received, although I only said a few words and answered two or three questions. I was baptized on Sunday by Elder Smoot.

My dear brother, I have written this to relieve my mind. Please excuse mistakes, for I am nervous.

With much love to your family, I remain your little sister in hope, EMMA HORNER.

OPELIKA, Ala., Jan. 1, 1891.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN IN THE LORD:—It is on my mind to write on the subject of revelation, a doctrine held sacred by the church of God, and which is one of the distinguishing features of the church in this dark age. I know there are various opinions among the daughters of Babylon, or antichrist, touching this subject. They claim that the day of inspiration and revelation is past, and that the Bible is all the revelation God has given, and now that is sufficient; that all that is needed is to raise the funds, and scatter or spread the Bible all over the world, and then the millennial dawn and daylight will be ushered in. But such have been the vain babblings of these perverters of the truth time and again; and like the boy who cried, "Wolf! wolf!" until the people heard it no more. I am inclined to believe that the secret of the cry has been to raise money; and it is among those whom the inspired penman described as greedy dogs, who can never have enough; and like the leech's two daughters, who cry, "Give, give," and never say, Enough.

From reading the Scriptures, and observation, and my own experience, I am inclined to believe that the subject of revelation is one of considerable importance to us, and is worthy our sincere and constant consideration. We are free to admit that the Scriptures are a written testimony from God of his will concerning our salvation, and we have also in the written word his law and statutes; but when we are reminded that "the letter killeth," what good can that do us, or the world, alone? There is a difference between the testimony and the thing testified to. We know that Jesus told the Jews to search the Scriptures, for in them they thought they had eternal life; and they are they which testified of him. He also said, while he knew that the Old Testament Scriptures were written, "I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, because thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes: even so, Father, for so it seemed good in thy sight." He also testified that all things were delivered unto him of his Father; and that no man knew the Son, only those unto whom the Father had revealed him; and that no man knew the Father except the Son, and he to whom the Son revealed him. "I and my Father," he also said, "are one." Now while we admit, and are free to do so, that Jesus' life and works have been set forth in the New Testament, and are now (as Moses was) "read in the synagogues every sabbath day" to children and grown people, yet how few know him; and they ignore the precious truth of God taught, and are encouraging old and young to take his name in vain. They profess to know him, but in their works are daily denying him, and also the sacred word, which teaches that "No man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost." "They shall not teach every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord; for they shall all know me, from the least to the greatest." They think the Lord to be one like themselves; and they think the principles of his kingdom to be like the kingdoms of the world, and that they must be taught religion like science. This is evinced by their doings, which speak for themselves. Their ministry is of the world, and so is their membership; hence they are of the world, and the world heareth them. God's children, understanding the difference, do not follow Baal in those things wherein they glory, and attempt to cast reflections upon the people of God, who follow the more sure word of prophecy, whereunto they do well to take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place. The light and life of the Spirit enables them to see the utility of the written word, and to appreciate it as a message from God. They are able to rightly divide the word of truth, and to show the difference between the letter of truth and the spirit of truth. Jesus said, "Upon this rock I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." This is our foundation; and it is not laid in the dust, but in the infallible rock of the everlasting Spirit of the eternal God. Hence it shall never be destroyed, nor shall it be removed, but abideth ever. Then if we are builded as a habitation of God through the Spirit, how important that we contend for this revelation by the Spirit, and that this is a spiritual day; that the kingdom of Jesus is not of this world, nor is it built according to the principles of this vain age of Babel-builders, who deny the Spirit. Yet we must admit that they have a wisdom, but it is the wisdom of this world, obtained upon worldly principles; as the Scriptures teach, there is a wisdom which cometh not from above, but is earthly, sensual and devilish. It is not the revelation of God, but cometh up out of the earth, like the beasts which John mentions in the book of Revelation. Going about to establish a righteousness of their own, they have not submitted themselves unto the righteousness of God.

I feel that I have but partially touched the subject; and if it still remains on my mind I will write again, hoping thereby to comfort, and perhaps to call some one else out to write on this subject. If you see fit, brethren Beebe, you can publish this; if not, cast it aside.

Yours in hope,

W. LIVELY.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Dec. 24, 1890.

ELDER WM. L. BEEBE—VERY DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST:—Your highly appreciated letter came laden with the good things out of the plenteous storehouse of our Master's glorious kingdom; and falling with much sweetness upon my cold, hard heart, I was both humbled and melted. It is at all times to me an incomprehensible source of wonder how the dear, tried soldiers of the cross of Christ can with confidence speak such sweet words of comfort (as many of them do) to ME, I feel so undeserving of it all; and I try to figure out how I have so deceived you all. And then I wonder how I can undeceive you. I am sure I never have a doubt as to your sincerity of heart towards me; and the value of your love and fellowship, I know, is far above anything this world can give. A most comforting and happy thought comes to me sometimes (when the question arises within me, why do these dear and precious brethren love me?) something like this, The only ones who do love me with that love which passeth understanding, and fellowship me, are those who love Jesus, and have been redeemed by his precious blood. And then hope springs up, bringing with it another thought, that they could not love me did not I also love Jesus, and present evidence to them by manifesting the fruits of the Spirit of Christ. When I was growing into manhood my ambition and aspirations pointed to a high standard in the ladder of fame. To what I have attained, you are well aware. And now as I grow older I still have ambition and aspirations; but they have taken an opposite course from those I nurtured in the times past; and the standard, not that I set up, but which has been set up for me, is higher and broader than the one which arose from a natural source; and it is a perfect standard; for the standard is Jesus; and my ambition and aspirations lead me to desire to exalt my Savior and abase myself; having a broken heart and a contrite spirit, to so walk and converse that my future course may in word and in deed show forth praises to him who hath brought me out of darkness into his marvellous light. When you were visiting the two days' meeting held by our little church, one of the texts you used was, "Behold, I come quickly." The text and many of the expressions in the sermon have lingered sweetly in my memory, making peaceful many of the moments in my daily round of duties. Only as we realize the visions of our King in our experience can we understand anything of the suddenness of his coming. As the lightning flasheth upon the snow-capped mountain top, and in the same moment descendeth into the deepest depths of the fertile valley, so cometh in the twinkling of an eye to every child of grace the Sun of Righteousness, who hath declared, "Behold, I come quickly." Sometimes we think we pray for something we think we need, and naturally we look for a direct answer to our prayer, which when it does not come according to our expectations, we are about in the position of the old lady who prayed in the evening that the mountain might be removed from in front of her house; and when she arose the next morning and found the mountain still there, she exclaimed, "Just as I expected." I love to feel, dear brother, that the Lord is executing his will among his chosen, and inditeth every prayer, making us to feel and realize our need to the utmost; and ere our lips have uttered the desire of our heart, the prayer is already answered. Yet I believe the most fervent prayer, and the most acceptable, is the one which words are inadequate to express; the one which arises to the throne of our Father's grace out of an overburdened heart, where the pent up agony of regrets, remorse and shame burst forth in groans that cannot be uttered. It is then that our blessed Redeemer comes quickly, and transforms our groans into songs of sublime adoration and praise. I have had some precious seasons of quiet enjoyment in meditating upon the word "Behold," as expressed by our Savior in the text from which you spoke while here, and also in other portions of the word. In the first place it seems to come to us, bearing the insignia of the power of the King of kings, and fraught with the unfathomable love of him, who alone has vouchsafed the gift of eternal life. And again, the declaration to "Behold," so clearly manifests to us his discriminating grace, and to whom he speaks, as every word our dear Savior has ever spoken is full of certain and definite meaning. So when he says, "Behold," it certainly is to those who have been given eyes to behold the fullness of his glory. No one else could possibly understand such a command; for flesh and blood, we are assured, cannot reveal to our understanding any of the things of the kingdom of heaven. Even the child of grace, by reading the words, "Behold, I come quickly," can understand nothing of them, nor gain any consolation from them, except Jesus accompanies the words as we read them, and opens our understanding, by a revelation of himself, to behold him as a thing of beauty and a joy forever, and as the chiefest among ten thousand, the one altogether lovely; and this ravishing, glorious and soul-cheering sight comes quicker than we have time to think. Certainly this is the only way by which we can know Jesus; and only by the same faith can we ever call upon the name of the Lord.

Dear brother Beebe, I cannot tell why I am saying these things to you, who know them so much better than I; for I just sat down to try to tell you, or to give you a faint idea, how much I appreciated and enjoyed your sweet and brotherly letter to me. I very often look back in pleasant recollection of the delightful visit from yourself and sister Beebe. We all send love to you both, desiring also to be remembered to your daughters Kate and LaRue, and also special love to little Florence.

Yours in fraternal love,
B. F. COULTER.

DEAR BROTHER BEEBE:—If in your judgment the inclosed letter would be profitable to the saints who read our family paper, the SIGNS, will you kindly publish it? Such letters are to me at most times a source of much comfort and enjoyment.

Yours in christian love,

JANUARY 11, 1891.

DEAR BROTHER COULTER:—I feel a desire to comply with your kindly asking me to give you the reason of my hope. We are told to be ready at all times to give such a reason; but I am slothful in many things.

The dear Lord was marvelously good in bringing such a child to think on his name, if indeed mine was the travel of his child. My first serious impressions were, I think, in my ninth year, when, like the builders of the tower, I thought I must go to and do something, that I might build for myself a way to heaven. To say my prayers, I thought, would be of some service; but they did me no good. I felt I was a sinner, yet I did not suffer the keen anguish some tell of. I was sorrowful, and would sit for a great length of time watching the beauties of nature, and looking beyond to him who created them, and longing to be fit to dwell in his dear presence; yet he would seem so far from me I would think I was the most wretched thing on earth. Thus was I led to search such writings as taught of God and the salvation of his people; and as I look back I feel I was lovingly led in ways I had not known, and crooked things were made straight. When, I trust, light shone into my heart I saw what all my prayers and works were, as filthy rags; that a complete and perfect atonement had been made on Calvary, and even such as I had part in that sacrifice. How good it was then to hear this precious Jesus talked about, which I was often favored to hear, as the dear old saints who visited grandpa loved most to talk of the rich provisions of grace provided by this loving Jesus. Your father was one whom I especially loved, and he spoke first to me of my interest in these things. I stood like a guilty criminal, for I had been discovered as I was stealing crumbs from the children's table. I craved a place with them, but could not ask for it. But the time did come. Our association was just over, and church meeting was appointed for the Saturday following. Three others asked for a home in the church, and I too. Why they bade me welcome I have never known. The next morning was a sweet, clear morning in May. A perfect peace pervaded my whole being. All nature seemed to join in praise to him who filled the universe with his sweet presence. Elder Leachman led us down to the water, and grandpa [Elder Barton] buried us in the liquid grave. It was a time never to be forgotten, a day without a rival for peace and joy. For a time all was rejoicing; but the time of sorrow came, and I have suffered more severe trials and temptations since entering the church than I did in my early experience. I had just passed my eleventh year when baptized. I had never known any influence but that of Old School Baptists, never having been at any other kind of meeting; and the tempter soon suggested that, being capable of strong attachments, I had by constant association with those who loved this truth learned to love it too; and through all my life it has been an anxious inquiry with me. Yet again it comes so sweetly to me that these things are spiritually discerned, and the natural man cannot understand them, that I take courage, and feel that the travel of mind that seems so little to me is precious too.

I have read the Scriptures at grandpa's knee, and he would tell the literal meaning of terms, but no persuasive word ever escaped his loving lips. Deeply had he been taught that only the Lord can instruct in the way of truth and understanding. Many of his words sunk deep into my childish heart, and have been recalled with a degree of comfort as I have realized in my own heart the depths that caused him to give expression to them. He spoke much of the vileness and depravity of his heart. I could not see why he felt so; but with me I know it is a reality. I have been so low as to doubt the reality of religion, a temptation I hope not to fall into again; for I know it is dishonoring him who has been so merciful and kind, whose hand has upheld through every trial, giving some sweet assurance of a renewing of the inner man; and I cannot doubt that I have drank at that fountain whereof if a man drink he shall never die. This is a precious season, this resting in the love of Jesus, his strong arm underneath. None can harm or pluck his chosen ones out of his hand. I know he is all-powerful to perform all he has spoken; and I love to feel he is a God who changes not, nor knows the shadow of a turn. It is me that is unstable, wandering after forbidden fruits, which are full of bitterness. Again and again I mourn because I am so weak, and long to be free from these frailties, and more like the dear, loving Savior, at whose feet I would ever be. But alas! I grow daily farther and farther from him; and cry, Unclean! unclean!

Dear brother, you asked me to write to the SIGNS, but I cannot. I enjoy the communications from others, and know it is more blessed to give than receive; but husks would not be palatable food.

I know your compassionate heart will be charitable; but search this well, and if you can find aught in it to fellowship it may be a comfort to this weak one, who tremblingly commits it to your care.

LUCY ALEXANDER.

LOGAN, Iowa, Dec. 4, 1890.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BROTHER:—Your paper comes every week, filled with good news to all who are interested in the great word of salvation. * * *

I remember the place where I was arrested and pleaded guilty, feeling condemned and lost. The great Judge of all the earth had my case. My cry was, "Mercy, mercy, this is my plea," day and night for some time. "The pains of hell gat hold upon me; I found trouble and sorrow. Then called I upon the name of the Lord: O Lord, I beseech thee, deliver my soul." Well, there was a Counsellor, but I did not know his name; but the government is upon his shoulder, and he has none to help him. Well, he was pleased to make himself known to me, and he did open my eyes; and when I beheld his countenance it was glorious, and the beauty and excellence so great, there was nothing to compare with it. He brought me up out of a horrible pit and miry clay, and set my feet upon a rock, and established my goings. And he hath put a new song in my mouth, even praise unto our God. But I have passed many gloomy days and nights since then, and have thought of what the psalmist said, "Praise waiteth for thee, O God, in Zion; and unto thee shall the vow be performed." Now I have to wait, or stand still, until the Lord appears for me to move forward, and he opens the way.

We are now destitute of church privileges. All the preaching we have is in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, only when brethren call to see us. Brother and sister Norton called in one day, and I felt very thankful and glad to see them; also brother and sister Bunch with them.

I hope our family paper will meet the approbation of those who love the truth. It is said by the apostle, when he discriminated, "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city. For without are dogs, and sorcerers, and whoremongers, and murderers, and idolaters, and whosoever loveth and maketh a lie."

Farewell; and may the God of all comfort be with you.

Yours in hope of eternal life,
JOSEPH RICHARDSON.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, Ind., Jan. 19, 1891.

EDITORS OF THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES:—No, I cannot give up the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. I would much rather deny myself some necessary natural food, I have been so comforted from time to time by the way with one and another of God's chosen little ones writing their trials and deliverances through this common medium. I feel well acquainted with many of them, although I have met but few face to face. To see their names gives me joy, and I only write these few lines to greet them at the beginning of this new year. I hope they will not be weary in well doing; but as God has blessed them with a talent, may they continue to use it. There are many followers of the blessed Jesus who are not able to go to a house of worship, but who can have a feast at home from some one equally tried in the furnace of affliction. I have in my mind two or three old sisters belonging to our little church at Crawfordsville. May they be comforted and kept as the apple of God's eye. Soon they will be taken from this vale of tears, and then will they fully realize "that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us."—Rom. viii. 18. Our beloved sister Mary Parker, I tremble when I call her sister; for she seems so far above me in faith and patience, and every christian grace, that I fear we do not belong to the same family; but one thing I do know, I love the poor sufferer, and if she is still in this low ground of sorrow I hope the good Lord will soothe her pain and strengthen her while she passes through the "valley of the shadow of death." Her very name sends a thrill through my being, and how I would love to go and administer unto her. Sister Kate Swartout is another precious saint with whom I am well acquainted, though I have never met her. I have just been reading her last sweet message, and she comforts me by saying she has been in the very depths, like Jonah, down to the very bottom. I often, while reading her writings, wonder why I did not write what she has written, as it is so in unison with my own thoughts and feelings; but I lack the manner of expressing myself as she does. Dear sister, I think I know what it is to feel "less than the least." When I read your writings, and you speak of the foolishness and wickedness of your heart, and how far the Lord seems from you, I feel like saying, "I moan;" for I am so overpowered with the enemies of my own household that I cry to myself and say, Mine is an outside case. There is no language to express it. I am surrounded by neighbors, great churchgoers, who are so satisfied with themselves, and have not much room for the blessed Savior in the inn, that while mingling with them I often feel like crying, "The Lord is in his holy temple; let all the earth keep silence before him." When I am in the congregation of these workers I feel as lonesome as if I were out in a wild, pathless woods.

"The food my spirit wants Thy hand alone can give."

I love the SIGNS. It is like an old, tried friend. It seems established on a firm foundation. I love the doctrine of predestination entire, without any limit. I have been looking over the old volumes printed in the forties, and I read nothing about God not predestinating all things. My father used to say, "Do not blame me if I love my first-born a little better than I do the rest of my children. I have had her longest." So I feel about the SIGNS. While I love to read other religious periodicals, still I must have my old paper.

There are many other contributors who write often and give us a bountiful meal, like Elders Chick and Durand, the dear editors, and many others I might mention. In this last paper Elder Chick's article on converting a sinner and saving a soul from death is very plain, and I have enjoyed it. I have heard that text preached from, also, "Choose you this day whom ye will serve," and, "Knock, and it shall be opened unto you," by Methodists, in years gone by. They gave a poor sinner so much to do, and I felt so helpless, hungry and faint, that instead of being fed I have been driven almost to despair. But now I do not go very often to the places where husks are handed out. I love to meet in the assembly of those I feel to be saints. The greatest evidence I have that I am taught of the Lord is, I understand and feast on spiritual things. What was once a dry morsel is now a cluster of ripe grapes, and sweeter than honey, milk or wine; yet I cannot always live on this choice food. The enemy comes in like a flood; and

"Since I can hardly therefore bear
What in myself I see,
How vile and black must I appear,
Most holy God, to thee."

I tremble, and often am asking myself,

"When thou, my righteous Judge, shall come

To fetch thy ransomed people home,
Shall I among them stand?
Shall such a worthless worm as I,
Who sometimes am afraid to die,
Be found at thy right hand?"

Dear kindred in Christ, remember in your supplications a poor, doubting, halting, anxious sinner.

LINA W. BECK.

WRIGHTSBORO, Texas, Jan. 4, 1890.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—While renewing my subscription I feel like expressing my feelings concerning your paper, which was started at the commencement of the division of the Missionary Baptists from the Old,

Primitive order. It was of the Lord, for the establishing of his believing children in the fundamental principles of the doctrine of Christ, contending for the faith once delivered to the saints. For that purpose the Lord raised up and qualified your father, who cried aloud and spared not, and which tended to the establishing of the true believer. But as time rolled on, there were some who could not endure sound doctrine, to wit, the predestination of all things; which is nothing more than the eternal purpose of God in all things; because purpose with God is predestination; predestination meaning a fixed certainty. God only can predestinate; to deny which is to deny the immutability of God, which would destroy our hope, which is sure and steadfast. Brethren, think about it. If God were a changeable God, he would not be a perfect God, nor an almighty God; and I could not rest in such a God. But we believe our God is immutable, almighty, eternal, whom man cannot comprehend, being only his creature. But God being man's Creator, he formed him of the dust of the ground, and fitted his brain, and every other organ of the body, for the purpose he intended. Yea, from eternity God purposed every thought of every creature that ever should exist, and which directs their steps. Then it is by the power of God we live, move and think; and the duty of his children is to fear him, and to rest in him, looking for a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens.

Brethren Beebe, I have not written as I intended. Your brother in hope,

B. F. SMITH.

KELLY'S CORNERS, N. Y., Jan. 29, 1891.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—Remittances for the SIGNS come in slowly, and I send as fast as I get them. I hope that some whom I have been in the habit of sending for are sending their dues themselves. It is not so strange that the time expires on papers, and the time for renewal passes; but it is strange that so many, and those who have an interest in the SIGNS, should be so tardy in renewing. Yet it is most certain to be so with all papers that do not stop at the expiration of the time paid for. I hope you will have grace sufficient, and believe you will, with an abundance of patience; but I know that neither grace nor patience will pay for help nor material to run a newspaper. My desire has been for the past thirty years that the SIGNS may be continued, for I value it highly as a medium of correspondence; and there are so many who have no other preaching than that communicates, and no other way of hearing their exercises expressed. Yet there are many abundantly able who, with a professed desire for the welfare of their brethren at heart, manifest no interest in feeding the hungry or ministering to their comfort, but presumptuously say, "Be ye fed and clothed," without any showing of faith by their works. Such are in the hand of the Master, who will reward every man according to his work. If I had money to put at usury, as some have, it would be a great pleasure to contribute well for the support of the SIGNS; for I would rather have a few hundred dollars invested in behalf of my poor brethren than to have mortgages on their farms or cattle. But the Lord will have the SIGNS edited and printed as long as it will be for his glory and his people's good. This gives me comfort.

Affectionately your brother,
J. D. HUBBELL.

NEOGA, Ill., Jan. 28, 1891.

BRETHREN BEEBE:—I have been reading your paper, the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, since my boyhood, and expect to be a reader of it while I live. Will you answer two questions for me through the SIGNS? First, what is man? Second, give your views on Eph. v. 23. Do not think I merely desire to ask questions from idle speculation; for I do not. O that God's little one may live together in peace and love; The doctrine of predestination is glorious to me, as I do not know any power that can determine and bring to pass but the infinite power of God. This is the truth which I have been trying to preach for twenty years. May the Lord enable you still to contend for the truth. I will try to get a few subscribers for the SIGNS.

In the hope of the gospel, your brother,

JESSE SHIELDS.

WHAT IS MAN?

FOR a literal answer to this question proposed by Elder Jesse Shields, in his note on page 78, it would be sufficient to refer to the testimony of David. "Verily every man at his best state is altogether vanity."—Psa. xxxix. 5. Considered merely as an earthly creature of our God, man is but a brief tenant of this material world, having no capacity to rise above natural and selfish aspirations. So Solomon by inspiration wrote, "I said in mine heart concerning the estate of the sons of men, that God might manifest them, and that they might see that they themselves are beasts; for that which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts; even one thing befalleth them; as the one dieth, so dieth the other; yea, they have all one breath; so that man hath no preeminence above a beast; for all is vanity. All go unto one place; all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again. Who knoweth the spirit of man that goeth upward, and the spirit of the beast that goeth downward to the earth?"—Ecc. iii. 18-21. In his nature as of the earth, this is all that can be claimed as belonging to man. With all his proud assumption of superiority, he can establish no claim to more than the same spirit (that is, literally translated, wind, or breath) which animates those beasts which perish with the earth. Thus it is evident that when man is regarded only in his natural state he is indeed altogether vanity. Instead of possessing superiority over beasts, it is in consequence of the transgression of man that the curse of God has come upon all earthly creatures. Herein appears the utter folly of the pride of man in fancying himself better than the beasts which perish.

But there is a far more important sense in which this question is deeply interesting to such as have been taught of God. In the record of the creation it is written, "And God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness; and let them have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over the cattle, and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth. So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them."—Gen. i. 26, 27. It must be remembered that the purpose of God must be fulfilled in every particular. He is not subject to disappointment, as are finite mortals. "He is in one mind, and who can turn him? and what his soul desireth, even that he doeth."—Job xxiii. 13. "Whatever the Lord pleased, that did he in heaven, and in earth, in the seas, and all deep places." "But our God is in the heavens; he hath done whatsoever he hath pleased."—Psa. cxxxv. 6; cxv. 3. However his infinite sovereignty may be incomprehensible to created intelligence, let none who fear the Lord question the truth of this inspired assertion of his omnipotence. Exactly what he designed by the proposition quoted above, that he did accomplish, although it is beyond the power of mortals to understand how the transgression of his holy commandment was included in the fulfillment of that infinite design. That such was the truth is clear from the declaration of the Lord after the man had transgressed. "And the Lord God said, Behold, the man is become as one of us, to know good and evil."—Gen. iii. 22. Thus far the image was complete. Both the wisdom and power of God must be deficient if this introduction of sin into the world was not included in his eternal purpose. Such a thought is too horribly blasphemous to be accepted by any one who has the love of God in his heart. Let us humbly confess that this mystery is too profound for our comprehension, but may the mercy of God restrain us from accusing God unjustly, or replying against his express assertion. "Let God be true, but every man a liar."—Rom. iii. 4.

No created intelligence can trace the origin of sin farther than it is plainly revealed in the record which God has given. After searching and considering all things, the inspired man of wisdom sums up the result of all his investigation in this conclusion, "Lo, this only have I found, that God hath made man upright; but they have sought out many inventions."—Ecc. vii. 29. Vain speculations are not among the things which tend to promote the peace and edification of the subjects of divine grace. It is certain that man by his own transgression of the commandment of his Creator brought sin into the world, and that the dreadful consequence of sin is known in the universal dominion of death over the whole family of the first man, in whom all have sinned. The purpose of God in the beginning determined that even this should result in the exaltation of Christ Jesus as the Savior of his people from their sins; yet that purpose no more justified the sin of all men in Adam, than did God's design to save much people alive, justify the wickedness of Joseph's brethren in persecuting him. In that case "Joseph said unto them, Fear not; for am I in the place of God? But as for you, ye thought evil against me; but God meant it unto good, to bring to pass, as it is this day, to save much people alive."—Gen. i. 19, 20. They were as guilty of all their design as if they had succeeded in its accomplishment, yet their very wickedness was included in the purpose of God for the fulfillment of the dreams which God had given to the child Joseph, which they sought to defeat. Just so, in the eternal counsel of God it was ordained that by one man sin should enter into the world, and death by sin; and this was but an incident in the fulfillment of the glorious triumph of Jesus, that "Through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil; and deliver them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage."—Heb. ii. 14, 15. Thus it is evident from the Scriptures that while God is not disappointed or defeated in his eternal purpose by the sinful actions of men, they are justly condemned in their designs, even though they were not able to accomplish their sinful purposes. Since man became a sinner in the first disobedience, all his subsequent actions have only testified the dominion of sin which controlled him. He does not now become a sinner by his action in committing sin; but he sins because he is a sinner. Just as stealing does not make a thief of an honest man; but the theft is evidence that the man was a thief; because an honest man does not steal. When Adam was formed and God breathed into him the breath of life, man became a living soul. He was not then a sinner. But since he transgressed the commandment which God gave him, he has never been free from that guilt which was there incurred. Sin has reigned unto death from its entrance into the world. Consequently man is now a sinner, not as the result of what he does, but because he was in Adam, and then and there became the servant of sin. No man is now condemned for Adam's sin; but every child of Adam is guilty on account of his own sin in the transgression of Adam; and he gives proof of that condemnation by his willing service to the sinful principle which controls all the actions prompted by the natural mind. Hence, in his present state, man is a sinner. In the judgment of God, all are alike under condemnation, "As it is written, There is none righteous, no, not one; there is none that understandeth, there is none that seeketh after God. They are all gone out of the way, they are together become unprofitable; there is none that doeth good, no, not one. Their throat is an open sepulchre; with their tongues they have used deceit; the poison of asps is under their lips; whose mouth is full of cursing and bitterness; their feet are swift to shed blood; destruction and misery are in all their ways; and the way of peace they have not known; there is no fear of God before their eyes."—Rom. iii. 10-18. This divinely inspired statement gives answer to our brother's inquiry with infinitely more authority and certainty than any opinions of men could claim. Dark as is the description, it cannot be disputed; and those who have been given to see their own vileness, will confess the accuracy of the picture which is so plainly and terribly drawn in this catalogue of the exceeding sinfulness which rules in the carnal heart of every man. Who can recognize in this summary the character of his own nature? None but those sinners in whose heart God has shined; and all such are born of the Spirit of God.

From what has been stated, it will be seen that man as related to his natural father, the sinning Adam, is a sinner. As such he is justly under the power of death. Now, the miracle of miracles is revealed in Christ Jesus, who brought life and immortality to light in his glorious triumph over death and sin. It is the victory which infinitely transcends all the majesty of the material and temporal creation and providence, that Jesus Christ has redeemed his chosen people, and saved them from their sins. The religious world have no conception of this salvation. They dream of some compromise by which sinners are released from the penalty due to their guilt; but they never can receive the great truth that through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus these very guilty sinners are made holy and without blame before God in love. As in the entrance of sin man became as God in knowing good and evil, so in the final victory of the mighty Redeemer, the same guilty sinners are presented before the infinite justice of God, holy and without blame; but this freedom from sin is not in their earthly nature. It is alone in the Lord that they have righteousness and strength. Only as they are one with their holy Savior do the saints appear as the perfect man, of whom David sings. In him they are freely justified by his grace; and in his righteousness they are exalted. None but sinners can be subjects of salvation by grace; and in Jesus that salvation is revealed for all who were chosen in him before the worlds were made. It is according to the good pleasure of the will of God that this grace shall be manifested in the chosen vessels of his mercy, who "were by nature the children of wrath, even as others."—Eph. ii. 3. When his glory is revealed in reconciling the sinner to divine righteousness, man is shown to be the most wonderfully favored of all the creatures of God.

"Not angels round the throne
Of majesty above,
Are half so much obliged as we
To our Immanuel's love.
"The Savior did not join
Their nature to his own;
For them he shed no blood divine,
Nor breathed a single groan."
As a sinner against the holy commandment of God, man appears the vilest and most unworthy of all the creatures of his power; and as the object of eternal love and infinite grace, he is raised above all other works of Omnipotence. Well does the apostle in sacred admiration call upon the saints to unite in the contemplation of this divine mystery. "Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God! therefore the world knoweth us not, because it knew him not. Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is."—1 John iii. 1, 2. This will be the full accomplishment of that which God said, as already quoted from Genesis i. 26. Man shall be made perfectly in the image of God, and in his likeness. That image and likeness doth not yet appear to finite intelligence. The popular notion that the natural man is the image of God, is both contrary to the plain declaration of the Scriptures, and blasphemously dishonoring to the holiness of the great Jehovah. It is not less idolatry to form an imaginary being like ourselves as the object of worship, than to bow down to lifeless gods which our own hands have formed of gold, or of durable wood. That man is by nature a worshiper, is evident from the record that Cain brought his offering of his own works, before the faith of Abel was manifested by his more excellent sacrifice by which he obtained witness that he was righteous, God testifying of his gifts. By faith alone it is possible to worship God in the spirit; and they that worship him must worship in spirit and in truth. All other worship is merely mocking idolatry. In his carnal nature man cannot please God by any works or devotions. In the Spirit of Christ alone God is well pleased with the adoration which is wrought in the heart of his conscientiously unworthy suppliants by that Spirit which he has given unto them. While in himself man is a rebellious worm, in the Spirit of Christ he is made holy and righteous with that righteousness which was never attained by the scribes and Pharisees.

Man is a mortal worm, perishing with the earth out of which he was taken; and by the gift of Christ Jesus the same man has eternal life, and shall never perish. "Man that is born of a woman is of few days, and full of trouble." And Jesus says, "He that liveth and believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live; and whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die. Believest thou this?"

OBITUARY NOTICES.

SISTER Amy Trovinger, daughter of Elder Jesse and Mary Stith, was born Dec. 12th, 1819, and was married to Samuel S. Trovinger Dec. 20th, 1838. She was baptized in August, 1865, and received in full fellowship of the Primitive Baptist Church called Pleasant Run, in which she remained a worthy member, loved and esteemed by all her kindred in Christ, being steadfast in the faith once delivered to the saints. She was only known to be loved, and those who knew her best loved her most. It was her lot in this world of sin to drink deeply of the cup of affliction, several years ago having to bury her dear husband and five children (all that she had), leaving her a widow indeed; but those afflictions and trials only drew her nearer and closer to her dear Savior. She was gifted in writing comforting and consoling letters to her dear kindred in Christ; and she once remarked to me that she believed the doctrine advocated by the SIGNS OF THE TIMES from the very bottom of her heart. It contained about all the preaching she had for several years, as she was so deaf that she could not hear preaching, or but very little. She possessed more than ordinary intelligence, had a clear, discerning mind, and a deep experience in divine things. Language would fail me to speak of all the noble and excellent traits of character which she was blessed with.

She died at the pleasant home of her two nieces, sister Lizzie and Nancy Stith, in Pleasantville, Fairfield Co., Ohio, on Feb. 21st, 1891, aged 71 years, 2 months, and 9 days. She had been living with nieces for the last few years, and all that kind hearts and willing hands could do was done to make her comfortable and happy. Her funeral was preached by her beloved pastor, Elder L. T. Kuffner, assisted by Elder Haliday. She sweetly sleeps until the resurrection morn, when she shall behold her King in his beauty, and be clad with immortality; for the truth of God is, "Them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him."

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date, this date denotes the time at which your subscription expires, and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

THE EVERLASTING TASK FOR ARMINIANS.

POETRY.

THE BOON I CRAVE.

I WOULD not ask for gems or gold—
Their lustre fades away;
Nor would I ask for wealth untold—
Earth's treasures all decay.
I would not seek fame's laurels bright
About my brow to bind;
For fame is like a meteor's light,
Or but an empty sound.

I would not ask for rich attire
To deck this form of clay;
For like a fading summer flower,
It soon must pass away.
Long life is not a boon to crave,
For earthly joys depart;
And earthly hopes oft find a grave
Within an aching heart.

This, Lord, would be the boon I'd crave,
"A heart from sin set free;"
No more to fears and doubts a slave,
But fill'd with love to thee.
A faith that feels thy hand doth hold,
Though loud the billows roar;
That will not falter nor grow cold
When storm-clouds darkly lower.

ABBIE G. CLARK.

CORRESPONDENCE.

ALDIE, Va., Feb. 16, 1891.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—I feel inclined, from some cause, to add my feeble testimony at this time to that fundamental doctrine of the Bible, and of the Old School Baptists, which most strangely at this late day is questioned by some, it seems, of the Lord's own people, and denied by others calling themselves Old School Baptists. I hope a few words from me, weak and ignorant as I know I am, will not be amiss. The dear SIGNS is assailed and blamed, it would seem, for contending for the doctrine of God's sovereignty. From the first of its publication, down through its entire history until the present time, one of its distinguishing features has been its fearless, faithful and consistent defense of the great truth of the absolute sovereignty of Israel's God; and it certainly does sound strange to hear from any lover of the truth the wish that it would no longer contend for that truth. If the day ever should come when the SIGNS OF THE TIMES should cease to contend for it, the paper would not longer be received and read and sustained by the few lovers of the truth that are left in this sin-cursed world. How is it that among Old School Baptist churches there should be found at this time enemies of the truth? As brother Francis truly says in his excellent letter in the SIGNS of a late date, "The doctrine of absolute predestination has been the distinguishing badge of the Old School Baptists." It does seem to be a "day of darkness and gloominess" for Zion, and the unclean and ravenous beasts of error and false doctrine and carnal reason creep forth and make a fearful noise, and frighten the timid, and worry and annoy the faithful servants of the living God. However, this is nothing new. Solomon says, "There is nothing new under the sun;" and we see that saying verified continually. The Scriptures must be fulfilled, and the enmity of the carnal mind manifested against the law of God. Revelation teaches us there are two mysteries—the mystery of godliness and the mystery of iniquity. If evil or iniquity could be understood, it would no longer be a mystery; but that it exists by the will and power of God, no one can deny who believes the Bible. The devils themselves "believe and tremble." The devils themselves know they have no power at all except it be given them of God. They could not even go into the swine (which I think represents their native home) until they got power from Jesus to do so. They must ask power from the God of Job and of Peter before they could touch a hair of their heads. Job was taught that leviathan (Satan, that crooked serpent, who is king over all the children of pride) was the creature of God, and was made to play in the sea; but he must do the will of his Maker and King, and could not reach beyond the bounds set for him, and eternally and immutably fixed. Job had had a terrible struggle with him, and was made to realize his own feebleness, and want of strength and wisdom, in the fierce conflict. But by the word of the Lord he overcame him. "Thus far shalt thou go, and no farther." The first of this declaration is as positive as the last; and here rests my hope of confidence. It is not by "speculation" nor by theorizing that I have received this truth. It is the anchor of my hope and confidence. We are not told that God "overrules" all things, but that he "worketh" all things after the counsel of his own will. In the exercises of my mind, even in childhood and youth, the absolute predestinating sovereignty of God was deeply engraven upon my heart. It then seemed, as it does now, and has all my life, that the idea of a God necessarily involves his absolute sovereignty in all worlds, beings and things. I love to depend upon that glorious truth to such an extent, so necessary is it to the hope of such a sinful wretch as I am, that to take it away I would be like Mary at the sepulchre of Jesus, "They have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have laid him." I do not look out over creation, in earth, air or sea, to find and learn about this mystery of iniquity. In my own nature, "earthly, sensual, devilish," I find witness to the truth of inspiration. There I find the old adversary, the devil, like a roaring lion, "the prince of the power of the air," bound, I hope, and sometimes can believe, yet with a chain of such length that seems sometimes to allow him to lead me captive at his will. Could I believe that he has any power over me except it be given him of God, my estate would be miserable indeed. But I do not believe that these afflictions spring out of the earth, nor that any strange thing has happened to those who are exercised by these manifold temptations. Our sins are his root, and our transgressions correct us. I have only to look within to find the bottomless pit (at any rate I have never found the bottom), from which ascends everything that can be a "stench in the nostrils" of my God. There is the dragon and his angels; there ascends the smoke of my torment day and night; there Satan is cast; not in the heavens of God's love and mercy, where I meet and commune with him, but in the filthy pit (which is Satan's element) of my own vile and sinful nature, a sea which he makes to "boil like a pot" when he "plays" therein; but where, thank God, he is confined. He has no power in the heavens, for God has not given him any. "Touch not his life." There is but one who has power there; and he has all power in all worlds and in all places. His word shakes the heavens. I felt that while reading dear Elder Purington's article on foreknowledge and foreordination recently published in the SIGNS. It was the word, the voice of God, and my soul trembled and rejoiced. If this is "harping upon predestination," in the Lord's name let the "harping" go on. To me it surely is "the voice of harpers, harping with their harps." It will be a sad time for this earth when it ceases. I do not wish to repeat what has been said much better than I can say it, nor go over ground which has been so ably covered of late by many dear and able brethren. My wish in taking my pen at this time was to give some of the reasons for the faith that is in me, whether I am deceived or not. I often, and much of the time, greatly fear that my hope and faith are not the hope and faith of God's elect; but I can only tell what I have seen and felt. The foundation of all my experience and all my hope lies in this glorious doctrine. In ancient times, many hundred years before Christ appeared upon the earth, ancient heathen philosophers conceived the idea of two Gods, one of good and the other of evil, self-existent, eternal and independent; and to this pagan theory, as some writer has recently remarked, are those necessarily driven who deny God's absolute predestination in all things. I love, however, to turn away from the vain and foolish speculations of men, no matter how wise they are, to the sublime and soul-cheering word of truth.

In myself I see exemplified the entrance of sin into the world. When lust conceives it brings forth sin, and when sin is finished it brings forth death. That evil and its consequent sin, with all their effects, was in the divine arrangement none but infidels can deny; for there is no truth more plainly taught in the Scriptures; and it seems very clear to my mind that God had a use for them in his wonderful and mysterious plan of the universe. Even our own senses teach us this truth, and wonderfully do the Scriptures show the use he has made of them, and wonderfully does the experience of God's people agree with the Scriptures.

Why evil should exist, why sin should be at all, are questions as old as the mind of man, and in this finite state can be answered by "Even so, Father, for so it seemed good in thy sight." And here every one who "as a little child" enters the kingdom of heaven is satisfied and glad to leave it. It is not "speculation" to search the Scriptures and see what they teach concerning these things, to see what God himself has declared. But in every age there have been men who have tried by carnal, finite reason to reconcile the ways of God to the puny judgment of a worm of the dust, who is but of yesterday, and knoweth nothing. It seems to me there is confusion in the minds of many in regard to the law and the transgression of the law. In this we are prone to have in our minds the laws of men, perhaps, which say, If a man steal, he shall be cast into prison: if he commit murder, he shall be hanged by his neck until he is dead. To my mind this does not give a correct idea of the law of God. If I put my hand into the fire it is burned; for it is the law of fire to burn. I drop a pebble from my hand, and it drops to the earth. It is the law of gravitation to cause every body to seek the center of the earth. Even so sin brings its own punishment. Everything which is opposed to holiness is sin. "All unrighteousness is sin," says the apostle. God is holy, and his name is holy. Everything coming from him is like himself, holy and heavenly. Man is earthy; and when he works out what is in him, lust conceives, and brings forth sin. The woman sees the forbidden fruit, and it is pleasant to her eyes; she sees it is good for food, and "a tree to be desired, to make one wise." Here we have "the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life." Here we see her nature, earthy nature, aroused and manifesting itself contrary to the law of God. The tempter working by her fleshly mind, she yields. Lust conceives, and sin appears. Sin is finished, and death is the consequence. Paul says, "The first man is of the earth, earthy." I do not think the Scriptures teach that the nature of man was changed in the transgression. "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." He was dust before he transgressed, and he was dust afterward. Lust, sin and death have done their work; but he who declared the end from the beginning is not surprised; his purpose is not thwarted. But must we not say it is fulfilled? The first act in that most wonderful of all dramas is closed, and out of the seemingly overwhelming catastrophe God shall work a work which shall astonish the heavens. Angels might weep, and wonder why such an end, so dark, so terrible, to so fair a beginning. But seal by seal of the wonderful book is opened, as the ages roll by. All things are working together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose. Nothing has happened amiss. Though man's mouth is set against the heavens, and his tongue walketh through the earth, we see the God of heaven using that terrible "mystery of iniquity," as a man uses the implements of his industry, making the wrath of man to praise him, while the remainder of that wrath he restrains; working out his own purposes and plans, his omnipotence, his means, and his omniscience his guide; sending Joseph into Egypt for the salvation of the chosen seed, by the envy and wickedness of his own brethren, the chosen seed itself; afterwards using that very wickedness to break their hearts in contrition and penitence before him. Evil besets the path of the patriarch Jacob on every hand, but of it comes everlasting good to him. "Out of the eater comes forth meat, and out of the strong comes forth sweetness," in every age, and in every nation, to those who love and fear God. Strange as it may sound to some who have not thought much upon these things, evil and sin were the instruments made use of by his heavenly Father to make "the Captain of our salvation perfect through suffering." His conflict with evil men and devils without, and the bearing the sins of his people in his own body, but sustained and upheld by almighty power, so that sin and evil polluted him not; his dear breast the battle-ground between heaven and hell; by this terrible suffering was he perfected as the Captain of the salvation of his chosen people. He was brought into union with his people in the flesh, and that union was manifest in suffering. That Satan, sin and death are destroyed, is witnessed by his resurrection from the dead; for he is raised, not a natural, but a spiritual body. So sin itself is used to drive us to him. As the leprosy of Naaman drove him to the waters of Jordan, at the command of the prophet, so the leprosy of sin drives us to the river of judgment, the atonement of Jesus, at the command of our Prophet. Said he to the wicked Jews, "This is your hour, and the power of darkness." The whole life of Jesus in the flesh shows the complete subjection of sin and devils to him. Satan must come to him for power to sift Peter. He could not touch him without that power. And how needful it was that Peter should be so sifted by him, is shown by the Savior's words.

But why multiply examples? The Scriptures are full of the great truth I am trying to elucidate. How the wrath of man is used to his praise, and the remainder of that wrath is restrained, is shown in the death of Christ. After that wrath has accomplished God's purpose, and Jesus is slain, after betrayal, buffetings, mocking and scourging at the hands of wicked men, and in exact fulfillment of God's word, let it always be remembered, where is the mad throng which a few hours before clamored for his death? Is it not strange that Joseph could go boldly to Pilate and beg the body of Jesus, go to the cross and take it down, and place it in his own new tomb, and there was not a dog to move his tongue, not a man of them to protest, nor say a word? "Thus far shalt thou come, and no farther." All the men in the world, and all the devils in hell, could have no power at all to keep him in the tomb. Neither have they power to keep the members of his body in their graves. Though in the flesh, they shall be "born of God." Though "from beneath," they shall be "born from above." Though sin buries them as deep as the earth (from which they came) was buried by the waters in "the beginning," they shall come forth from that grave, and live in the heavens prepared for them, and "death and hell shall give up the dead that are in them." It makes me shudder when dear brethren ascribe so much power to Satan. All power is in the hands of Jesus. All things were made by him and for him. By his power alone devils exist and do his will. When he wishes to punish a Saul, he sends "an evil spirit" to do it. When he wishes to punish another wicked king, he sends another spirit to be "a lying spirit in the mouth of Ahab's prophets." I love to contemplate him as Lord of all worlds, beings and things. Have I advanced sentiments not according to the word? In childhood and youth he was a great and loving God to me; and when my own foolish and vain speculations led me to almost deny him, he did not deny me. He taught me my own weakness, sinfulness and folly, by letting me fill myself with them; and when brought down in the dust, and made to realize that I was "a worm and no man," he took me out of the "horrible pit," and as "a little child," I hope and trust, I entered the kingdom. Since that day nothing has so filled me with joy and gladness as his great name. Nothing on earth is so sweet as to be able to exalt that name. I am filled with grief and shame that I cannot do it more and better, and that my heart is so far from him. The heaviest rod I ever feel is my own sins. O the bitter sting of an outraged conscience! But I bless his name, I love his doctrine yet, and love those who love it. I cannot conceive of him as being obliged to be constantly upon the watch lest the enemy do some mischief; seeing a shaft coming, and flying to turn it, or "overrule" it for good; watching the enemy, as a faithful house-dog might watch his master's premises, to keep him at bay. I rather conceive him in his infinite power and holiness, serene, upon the throne of his glory, saying to one servant, be he angel, man or devil, "Go, and he goeth;" to another, "Do this, and he doeth it." I love to worship "the God of the whole earth." In a great deal of heathen worship there is much of it performed to appease and propitiate the devil. God's people should never engage in such worship. Him only should they serve. I am unwilling to put one pinch of incense upon any altar erected to the devil.

My dear brethren, doubtless you will think this a strange letter. So I think. I have barely hinted at the great truth, a few points, which I love. If I am in error, it is of the head, and not of the heart; for if there is anything I desire it is to know the truth. It has been a long time since my name appeared in the SIGNS as a correspondent; and perhaps you may think it ought not to appear now; subscribed to this article. Do with it as you think best, and it will be all right with me. I love the SIGNS. I do not see in it defects calling for comment from me. I believe if the truth is published in this world, it is found in the columns of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. May God prosper you in your labor of love, for his own name's sake.

Affectionately your brother, I hope,

J. N. BADGER.

KELLY'S CORNERS, N. Y., Feb. 11, 1891.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—I am requested by an aged sister in Christ to write a little for publication in the SIGNS on the subject of charity. Therefore in compliance, should you see proper to publish it, I have chosen the first clause of 1 Cor. xiii. 8, which reads, "Charity never faileth."

The first thing to be considered is the term charity. In its root or substance seems embodied that which is dear, costly and loved, which makes the word a very fitting one as it is used in the Scriptures. It is also said to be that disposition which inclines men to think favorably of their fellows, and to do them good. This is also one of the first and important traits of those born of the Spirit of God. Also it implies liberality in judging of men and their actions, inclining one to put the best construction on words of their fellow-men. It is synonymous with love, benevolence, good will, affection, tenderness, liberality, indulgence, and alms-giving; all of which is significant of the fruit of the Spirit, in emanating from the heart of the good or godly man, out of the good or godly treasure of his heart.

The matter of most vital importance in connection with charity is that it is infallible as an appreciative property or qualification of the saints, and thus as a term is more fitting among the Lord's people than love; for it conveys the fruit and fullness of compassion, condescension and loveliness, as the fruit also of the Spirit, and never interferes with the continuance of brotherly love. As we think of our interest among the saints, and sometimes wonder how it is with us, and are so low down in the valley and gloom of our earthly nature, and think how it is we follow Christ, we are comforted as we think of the ministry, and the command comes to worship not the creature, but the Creator. As Paul says, "Be ye followers of me, even as I also am of Christ." And he was so charitable and unselfish that he could praise his Corinthian brethren, because they had remembered him in all things, and kept the ordinances as he had delivered them; yet his charity toward them would not allow him to cover up their wrong doing in regard to the solemn ordinance of the communion, which had caused weakness, sickness and drowsiness among them. But while he rebukes them sharply for their manner in this, he also shows them the relationship they sustain one to another, being all by one Spirit baptized into one body, whether Jews or Gentiles; and having gifts differing, yet they were by the same Spirit. Then he calls their attention to his own gift, to show them a more excellent way, saying, "Though I have the gift of prophecy, and understand all mysteries, and all knowledge; and though I have all faith, so that I could remove mountains, and have not charity, I am nothing. And though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, and though I give my body to be burned, and have not charity, it profiteth me nothing." In all this it is evident the apostle would show the foundation on which his hope rested, and that his gift as a minister of the Lord Jesus, as well as his dwelling in God, was all to be shown in the fruit which he bore to his Master's glory, and was not after man, nor in a false zeal, nor feigned faith, but was actuated by the love of God, with malice toward none, but with charity toward all his brethren, as those for whom Jesus died; as possessed of three abiding principles, faith, hope and charity; faith, which is the substance of all the child of God hopes for during his pilgrimage, being God's gracious gift unto him, causing (when in exercise) a supreme reliance on the unfulfilling promise and oath of God, who dwells in them, and walk in them, who are his people, and whose God he is; who has said in his word of inspiration, and in their hearts by this living faith, "Fear not, thou worm." "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee." An abiding hope, a well attested hope through grace, giving everlasting consolation in the God of salvation; bringing fresh evidence again and again of his quickening power, as they are brought low and he helps them, and assures them that he will not leave them comfortless, but will see them again, and will come to them, for he has died, that they might live; became poor, that they might be rich; and because he lives, the desponding, downcast, trembling sinner, with an abiding hope, rejoices in hope of the glory of God, and with joy unspeakable and full of glory; because the Lord is the hope of the righteous; and such they, though unworthy, hope he is to them. Abiding charity, never failing charity, is the greatest of the three abiding principles. Faith enables the child of grace to go forth as a follower of God, as a dear child, and trust him for life and death. It pierces the vista of time, to receive the fulfillment of God's promise, and to walk forth in anticipation of joys to come. Being imbued with hope in God, their soul rejoices in him as the God and Rock of their salvation, expecting to see Jesus as he is, and be like him, and be satisfied. Yet without abiding charity, or everlasting love, the hope in God's mercy and faith to believe would not be complete. This accords with Paul's inspired teaching, "In hope of eternal life, which God, that cannot lie, promised before the world began." This abiding, never-failing charity demonstrates God's work and will in Jesus Christ, the anointed Savior of his people, as he loved his people with the same love and after the same manner. Then the work of Jesus may properly be called a work of charity, a full development of God's almighty will on their behalf. So Jesus could say to his disciples, "As the Father hath loved me, so have I loved you: continue ye in my love." And well does the apostle say, "Forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you. Truly charity covereth the multitude of sins among the brotherhood. "Charity suffereth long, and is kind; charity envieth not; charity vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up, doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil; rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth; beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things. Charity never faileth; but whether there be prophecies, they shall fail; whether there be tongues, they shall cease; whether there be knowledge, it shall vanish away; for we know in part, and we prophesy in part; but when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away." "Then shall I know even as also I am known." Then the apostle says, "Follow after charity;" never-failing charity; the bond of perfectness; the fault-covering garment of the tempted and the weak; the real moderator and guardian angel over the obdurate; the ideal keeper of peace in the house of God. When the discipline must be enforced therein, no peace nor order can be long preserved where never-failing charity is not the leader and guide. Brotherly love cannot continue where her steps are not found. She, like wisdom, crieth in the chief place of concourse, in the openings of the gates. In the city, or church, she uttereth her words, "How long, ye simple ones, will ye love simplicity? and the scorners delight in their scorning, and fools hate knowledge? Turn you at my reproof. Behold, I will pour out my spirit unto you; I will make known my words unto you." I never fail to do justice and judgment, to pity and sympathize, that you, with whom I abide, may abound in the work of the Lord, or show the work of the Lord as done in you. "This is the work of God, that ye believe on him whom he hath sent," who is the way, the truth and the life; and no man cometh unto the Father but by him. "Every man therefore that hath heard, and hath learned of the Father, cometh unto me," saith Jesus, who is the charitable one. He walked charitably before the world, without grudgingly judging, or malice in his heart, or guile in his mouth. Well could the apostle say, "Ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor, that ye through his poverty might be rich." He is the chiefest among ten thousand, the one our souls love, and who is "the living bread which came down from heaven. If any man eat of this bread he shall live forever; and the bread that I will give is my flesh."

"He that eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood dwelleth in me, and I in him. As the living Father hath sent me, and I live by the Father, so he that eateth me, even he shall live by me." "If any man be in Christ he is a new creature;" for he was "created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them," and "show forth the praises of him who hath called us out of darkness into his marvelous light;" to follow after charity, which never faileth, in its abiding interest with the saints, by whose guidance all things are done decently and in order among the true followers of Jesus, and the name of God is glorified.

Now, dear aged sister, and brethren and sisters generally, where is our strong hold as prisoners of hope? Do we really have times, though few in number, when we know assuredly that the Lord reigns, both in providence and grace? And do we not then believe that all his works shall praise him and all his saints shall bless him? For he is God over all, and blessed for evermore. For the great love he has to his people, he gives his only Son, his grace and glory, and assured rest in heaven above. Devils believe and tremble, but cannot love. The saints believe and tremble, and fear they do not love as they ought, to prove their interest in Jesus.

There must be a death to the law before there can be a life in righteousness. Have we had any pleasure or delight in sin since we saw our lost condition? Have we not grieved much because we found we were not free from sin, as we once thought we were, in the morning of our great joy? Do we not now know daily that sin is mixed with all we say or do, because it is said or done by or in this sinful body, which has the sentence of death in it? Yes, verily. Herein lies all the trouble; for the works of the flesh (more troublesome than those of the devil) disturb our peace and damp our joy. Yet while we abhor ourselves, and repent in sackcloth and ashes, the evil one tempts us to fear, and we can hardly claim a part in the great matter of salvation. Yet we cannot trust in our own works or righteousness, nor in that of any other, save our dear Savior's; for we find the works of the flesh are evil continually, like the heart of man. So if we have hope and rest, who follow after charity, which never faileth, the Lord is, we hope, our God.

NEW HOLLAND, Ohio, Feb. 18, 1891.

DEAR BROTHER BEEBE:—I received the inclosed most touching letter a few days ago. I would at once respond privately; but the dear afflicted brother forgot, I suppose, to give his address in full, thus leaving no way open by which I can speaking any word of comfort or sympathy, save through our family paper. If you will kindly give brother Crask's letter space I would be glad, for I feel that the Lord's children are all as one family; and when one member suffers, as does poor brother Crask, all should know of it, and should extend to him all the pity, help and comfort that it is possible for mortals to give. Surely, "Whatsoever doth make manifest is light;" and we feel that nothing but the light reflected from the Sun of righteousness could show brother Crask, or any other poor sinner, the vileness and depravity of his heart. In no heart does he begin the work of grace but what he makes it perfect unto the day of Jesus Christ. When Jesus gave up the ghost upon the cruel cross, and in tears of deepest anguish gave forth the triumphant note of victory, crying, "It is finished," then was the whole work of the redemption of every poor soul hungering and thirsting after righteousness made complete. The question in the prophecy of Isaiah, "Who is this that cometh from Edom, with dyed garments from Bozrah? this that is glorious in his apparel, traveling in the greatness of his strength?" is here answered; and the dear blood was shed that was to clothe our naked, guilty souls in garments clean and white, in the spotless robe of righteousness that is wrought all around us. It will not matter to brother Crask nor myself on that glorious morn of the resurrection that our poor, painful limbs have been so drawn and deformed; for if we have our garments made white in the blood of the Lamb our bodies shall be raised spiritual bodies, fashioned like unto the Son of God; and rest, sweet, longed-for rest, will be the more sweet because of the toil, the weariness, the unrest and pain we have undergone here. "There remaineth therefore a rest to the people of God." Not rest for a moment, a day or an hour, but rest throughout time and eternity. O! can we not afford to toil, to suffer, to endure hardships, while here, where we have no continuing city, when we are so sweetly assured that these afflictions work for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory, and that at the end of this toilsome and thorn-crowned journey there is such rest, such joy, such beauty and holiness, as we not even can catch a glimpse of here, save it be now and then through a glass darkly, O! very darkly? When I studied over the darkness of mind under which poor, dear brother Crask seems to labor I was reminded of this Scripture, "Who is among you that feareth the Lord, that obeyeth the voice of his servant, that walketh in darkness, and hath no light? Let him trust in the name of the Lord, and stay upon his God." I know of no better message to send to the poor, weary, tempest-tossed brother than just these few blessed words. "Trust in the Lord, and stay upon your God. For this God is our God forever: he will be our guide even unto death." Are not such promises a refuge and strength? Is not our God a very present help in all our trouble?

My poor brother, I too have distress so deep, pain so great, that were I to attempt a description it would sound like wrung-out sentences from a frenzied heart. To no one can I look for strength, to no one turn for help, but to him who is a present help; and it is only through effectual, fervent prayer that I am enabled to quiet myself and endure on until the blessed sound of that dearest of all voices calls, in accents sweet, "Child, thy Father calls, Come home." O sweet words! Truly are they good tidings of great joy to the weary soul.

May the dear Lord strengthen you upon your bed of languishing. May he make all your bed in your sickness, shed the light of his blessed Spirit about your soul, and cause you to trust and rest in his everlasting arms, is truly the prayer of your sister, who is also sunk in the depths of human suffering and woe, but whose eyes are lifted up unto the everlasting hills, from whence cometh her help.

In deep sympathy, with much love to all the dear ones in the Lord, your sister in a blessed hope,

MARY PARKER:

SIX MILE, Ill., Feb. 15, 1891.

MARY PARKER—DEAR SISTER:—I ask your pardon for taking the privilege of writing to one who is a perfect stranger in the flesh; and sometimes I awfully fear that I have never known anything spiritually. If I ever experienced a change, or received a hope of an interest in the blood of the crucified Savior, it was in the spring of 1857, while at my plow handles. At that time I felt as though my troubles were all gone; but, alas! how sadly mistaken I was, and I soon came to that conclusion. It does seem that if bad can get worse, my poor, miserable heart gets worse and worse the older I grow. I have the SIGNS before me with one of your letters, and from the SIGNS I have learned of your sad affliction. I have felt that if I could do nothing more, I could tell you how deeply I sympathize with you. I think I know what it is to suffer. I have been afflicted ever since October, 1854; but since November, 1876, I have not been able to do an hour's work. I have been lying on my back more than fourteen years. I know not what your disease is, neither do I know what mine is, nor do I think any one on earth knows. The doctors call it that dreadful disease, rheumatism. There is not a joint in me that is not affected. My lower limbs are drawn into the most awful shape, both my arms are drawn across my breast, and my fingers are as stiff as the penholder with which I am trying to write this poor scribble. You speak of being shut in from day to day. O how tired I get lying and looking at the wall! How often have people told me how greatly they sympathized with me in my great affliction; that they knew they would have died long ago; that they have never been sick a day in their life. Do you think they know what sympathy is? I do not think they do. I have a large rolling and reclining chair in which I live. I have not been able to feed myself for about eight years. I cannot of myself take a drink after it is brought to me. For about two months I could not chew a mouthful of anything. I can no more get off my chair than could a log of wood. I have not stood upon my feet for more than twelve years. I am lying on my back writing this. I see in the SIGNS an account of a brother Jenkins who has been afflicted for a year or more.

My dear sister, I fear that I shall weary you to read this long piece of nothing. If I could write so that it would be published in the SIGNS I would not trouble you thus. If I knew it would not trouble you I would try in my awkward way to tell you some of my feelings. I call you sister, and I hope I mean no harm by it, but because of the love I have for the name you bear; not because I feel myself worthy of the relationship—by no means. I tell you honestly that I feel like it is a sin for me to say brother or sister, or to say "our heavenly Father." It almost makes me tremble when I do it, I feel so guilty. I know I have been and am still an awful sinner, and I believe God knows every secret of my heart. I am made to loathe myself. I feel my depravity so much that I am made to cry out, in the language of the prophet, "I am a man of unclean lips." Can it be possible that one who has "tasted of the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come," can have such a heart as mine? I fear not. I am often made to feel that my afflictions have come upon me for my wickedness; but then how is it that you and dear brother Jenkins are also afflicted? My dear sister, it seems that I have a besetting sin, and I sometimes think I will watch, and never let it get the upper hand of me any more; but the first thing I know it is upon me again. If I ever have tried to pray, I have prayed as Paul did, I believe, to have that thorn removed. But God told him that his grace was sufficient for him; and I believe that God's grace is sufficient for every case of his children. But how dare such a depraved wretch ever entertain a faint hope? It seems to me that it is nothing but the very worst of hypocrisy for me to even think of having an experience of grace; but when I read some of the good experiences in the SIGNS I cannot hinder the tears from chasing each other down my poor old cheeks. The writers tell my feelings a great deal better than I can. But, alas! this wicked heart of mine, which makes me cry out, "O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" I have no confidence in the flesh. I know I have never done the least thing on earth that has rendered me worthy of the least blessing I have ever received. I sometimes feel, if it could be so, that I would never see the face of another human being. The thought gets into my head every little while that my wife and children are tired of me, as I am so much trouble to them; yet I try to be as little as possible, and often punish myself before I will let them wait on me, or let them know that I want anything. I feel like I am always in the way, and often tell my wife what a blessing it would be to her if I were gone. Then again I think, as did Job, "All the days of my appointed time will I wait, till my change come." I know that the time of my departure is close at hand, and that soon the time and place that know me now will know me no more forever.

If you are able, my dear sister, I would like to hear from you direct; but if you will write a piece in the SIGNS it will do. If I were able I would send you a mite; but I am entirely dependent on my wife for everything. I am financially poor. If I were not so tired I would tell you of my losses in other respects. I know I have written nothing that will interest you, but remember me in my prison. May God bless you in your afflictions, is my prayer.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—When I read the many precious letters from the dear brethren and sisters who write for the SIGNS OF THE TIMES I feel like I want to add my testimony to what I read, particularly when they tell of those dark seasons which they have to pass through, and complain of a hard heart and a wandering mind, and that they constantly stumble in the way. I feel that I want to take them by the hand and tell them that is the road I constantly travel over. I want to tell them how much their letters encourage me by the way. How it encourages us by the way to hear others tell how they go mourning over a cold and wandering mind, and cannot draw one ray of comfort from divine life only as the Lord of life sees fit to shed a ray of divine light into the heart by the Holy Ghost. Then they are made to feel his presence, and hear his tender voice saying, "This is the way." How glad and willing they are to walk in that way, and rejoice all the day long in him. We find rest in no other; for he says, "I am the way, and the truth, and the life." He says to his children, "Come unto me, and ye shall find rest unto your souls." If others did not complain, but always wrote in the Spirit, and had nothing to complain of, how desperate would be my case. I would feel alone, and entirely out of the way. O how precious are those letters to me, to know from them that those I esteem as children of God are traveling the same road that I am traveling, and encountering the same dark scenes that I have to encounter. While passing through them I am often made to feel that I have come to the end of the earth. I believe that every heaven-born soul feels at times that he has come to the end of the earth. He can see no promise anywhere for him. But, dear reader, is there not a promise for you in this dark state of mind? Has the Lord not said, "Look unto me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth?" Is there not a promise left on record for us, even though we pass through dark seasons? Has the Lord not said to his children, "In the world ye shall have tribulation?" But the command is, "Be of good cheer: I have overcome the world." "Because I live, ye shall live also." Do we believe what he has said? Are we willing to trust his word and confide in his promises? If so, then we have nothing to fear. "Think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing had happened unto you." Yet we do think it strange. No matter what God has said or done, when the fiery trial comes we act as though he were insolvent, and either could not or would not redeem his promise of grace. "Let not your heart be troubled," and, "Think it not strange," are as positive commands as any left on record; but when the fiery trial comes we manifest the sad fact that our faith in God is more a theory than a verity.

There is no spot on earth where trouble is not found; and there is no trouble which Jesus cannot soothe and remove, no matter whether it be sin or circumstances. Immanuel is equal to all demands of earth and hell. The serpent's head is still under the divine victor's heel, and he is wounded unto death. There is no danger that he can do any of God's people any harm, for Jesus is given to be head over all things to the church, which is his body; and when the last child shall be born then time shall be no longer. Then that great serpent, the devil, will no longer menace the dear children of God.

It does seem that the religion of the day is a burlesque. It puts Jesus to shame, and raises mortal man. Nothing is salvation but Jesus, and him alone. Read John xiv. 20 and xvii. 22, 23. Jesus is God, and at the same time flesh of our flesh and bone of our bone. May we ask, How did he become so? We answer, By the Holy Ghost; and this very Spirit is the genesis of our redeemed life. Therefore as he is, so are we in this life.—1 John iv. 17. This is by faith, and faith only. "Ye believe in God, and faith only." "Ye believe in God, believe also in me," says Jesus. He is the great soul-healer, no matter how deep the wound nor how inflicted. The oil which he pours into the bleeding heart is his own blood. Applied by the Holy Ghost, the blood of Jesus Christ cleanses from all sin, and infuses the life-power, the peace and beauty of the Holy One of eternity. The life of the christian is essentially the same as that which God lived in the flesh, as the son of the virgin Mary. God is love; and love forgives seventy times seven times, and is ready to multiply its tenderness to the infinite. It is not pleasant to be abused, or persecuted, or unjustly dealt with, especially by professed christians; but all these things show how much or how little we are like Jesus. Retaliation, even unexpressed, reveals the Adamic nature. The Captain of our salvation was made perfect through suffering; and if we would show forth his glory we must share his sufferings also. If we cannot convince those who trespass against us, let us by all means convince them of the greatness, invariableness and divinity of our love. This will certainly do them no harm, and will preserve our salt from losing its savor. Jesus tells us, "Ye are the salt of the earth." He further says, "If the salt have lost its savor, it is good for nothing but to be cast out and trodden under foot." So, brethren, let us try to live as near the cross of Christ as we can, ever looking to him who has said, "Vengeance is mine; I will repay." Let us stop there, trusting his word for all things. If I have said a single word or done a single act that has wounded the feelings of one of God's little ones, I take this method of asking the forgiveness of that little one, or all that I have so offended. I am not conscious of ever having done so. If I have, it was not intentionally done. I have been a member of the Old School Baptist Church since the fourth Sunday in October, 1834, which makes fifty-seven years next October; but I must acknowledge that I have had my ups and downs all the way through life, sorrows and conflicts to contend with.

But I will close my scribble. I did not intend to write so long a letter. I would like to have this published if you see fit to do so; if not, it will be all right with me. I hope all the dear brethren will feel it their duty to do all in their power to aid in keeping the SIGNS OF THE TIMES a weekly paper. This can be done by all paying for it punctually. Let us all consider this as obligatory on us, to see that our subscription is paid up.

Yours in christian fellowship,
MOSES LANE.

ITALY, Texas, July 27, 1890.

DEAR BRETHREN:—I want to try to write some of my past feelings. I was born in Newton County, Mississippi, May 5th, 1850. My parents were members of the New School Baptists. The first thoughts of death I remember having was when I was about six years old.

From that time on I had serious thoughts, and thought I could become a christian whenever I got ready; but I thought I had plenty of time. In 1867 I was married; and my wife being religious, for her sake I reformed my life; for until then I had been a very reckless boy. In 1868 I joined the New School Baptists, thinking I was as good as anybody. But one night in 1869, after I had laid in bed for a while, the thought came to me that I was going to die, and that I had no hope. I sprang off the bed, for I could not remain there. But that feeling soon left me, and I went on in the same old way, and helping with my substance to save sinners, as I thought. In the fall of 1871 I moved to Texas, and enjoyed my way of living until October, 1879. One bright and beautiful day at noon I went out to water my stock. I left the house feeling that all was well; but while at the well there came a gloom over my feelings that caused my whole life to be reflected to me in a moment, and there I saw myself the chief of sinners, and felt justly condemned. Then something seemed to say to me, "To-night you will die, and there is no chance for you." I did not need any preacher to tell me to pray, for I would have begged for mercy if my tongue had been torn out. I did not return to the house till night, and when I went in my wife asked me what the matter was. I told her I did not feel well, and I could not eat any supper. I went to my bed, but could not stay there, for I was expecting death every moment until about three o'clock. My wife propped me up in a sitting position, and I fell asleep. When I awoke the sun was shining through the window on my face, which was the greatest surprise I ever had; for I had no idea of seeing that sun again. I want to say right here that I believe I did die that night to the love of sin, and to the love of the ways of the world. My burden was not so heavy that morning, yet I was not at ease. My mind went to the law, and it poured its curses on my head all the time. I went to my meetings every time, and asked for advice, and shouldered every duty they put upon me, whatever it might be; but I got no relief. All the comfort I ever got was in reading that those who are well need not a physician, but they that are sick; that Jesus came to seek and to save that which was lost; and to open the eyes of the blind. It seemed that I was that character. I went on in this condition until August, 1881. I was attending one of the big meetings, and was in so much trouble that it seemed I could not bear it; and yet I was a working member. One night after I went home I felt I could not go to bed. I got my book and read a chapter, and tried to pray; but it only seemed to make my burden heavier, and for a while it seemed that it would crash me into the earth. But in a moment it was gone, and Jesus was revealed to me as the most beautiful among ten thousand, and altogether lovely. I felt that I was free from sin. I thought I could live in that way, and did remain in that way for a week. But alas! how sadly mistaken I became. My mind then turned from the work system, and I went to hear old brother Thomas Miller preach. He took the second chapter of Ephesians for a text, and when he was through it was all that I could do to keep from going to him; but I did not go then. Afterward I did go, and was baptized in October, 1882, by a brother Mother-shed; but after a few years the church was broken up on the non-resurrection doctrine, and I have been living alone ever since. It has been a rugged road. There are few of my belief here. Some call me an extremist; but I cannot help that. I do not want to deceive any one. I want to be plain. I desire to worship the God that is all-wise, who has all power, and who created all things for a purpose; and everything fills that purpose. And Paul says that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose. Now, brethren, shall we take it in that way, or will we take it that some things work together for good, and that men create the rest, and therefore are not among the all things? I for one must take it as it reads, and therefore believe that every wicked deed of the world works together for good to the children of God.

My scribble is already too lengthy; but I want to say to you, brethren Beebe, that I enjoy reading the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, and hardly ever see anything in it but what I enjoy. May you live long, and be enabled to go forward in its publication. I do not see how I could do without it. I have just read the communications of sisters Sue Vanmeter and M. Adela Jones, and they have given me a feast, and have led me to scribble this, which I leave to your judgment.

Your brother in hope,
J. T. EVANS.

ST. MARY'S, Ga., March 8, 1891.

BRETHREN BEEBE:—I am still sojourning in this quaint old city, where the beauties of nature are so apparent, and I trust my heart is filled with gratitude to the great Creator for the privilege that has been accorded me to visit this portion of our continent; still I cannot help feeling saddened at the thought that I am alone. True, there are meeting-houses here, and meetings are held; but what I hear is no food for me. In my experience God revealed himself to me as the one who doeth as he will; and that it is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God, that showeth mercy. I have heard one preacher here say that God had done all he could. Another said that it would be the refinement of cruelty if God would not permit one to enter heaven if he desired to go there. There are a few here whose conversation savors of humility, who recognize a just and overruling providence; but they have no one to instruct them, and they are in bondage. I feel that I am in the same lamentable condition just now; for I feel obliged to conform to the customs of the house, that is, by being present. The prayer of Naaman often rises to my lips, and I trust that I too have been answered, "Go in peace." What I allude to is their "morning prayers." They conclude by repeating the disciples' prayer, with variations, viz., "on earth;" and when I asked why, they replied, "It makes no difference." Truly it makes no difference if we have not been taught the difference. "Thy will be done in earth," in the hearts of thy people, in the church, from whence alone can proceed this request, and for whom alone it can be granted. Then "forever" does not seem sufficient, for they invariably say, "Forever and ever." I feel relieved when not obliged to be present, but cannot see my way clear to be absent altogether. I trust I will return to the privacies and liberties of the home I left with a true appreciation of what I enjoy. I have been much cast down at times, and feared that I had done wrong to come here; for I decided that there would be no opportunity for me to hear a gospel sermon, nor meet with one of my kindred. I began to fear there were none who cared to have me with them, when I received a very kind invitation to Jasper Church on the fourth Saturday and Sunday in March; but connections are so uncertain that I cannot go. I am expecting, if the Lord will, to spend next Sunday in St. Augustine; but I have heard of no Primitive Baptists there.

You have my full permission to publish this if you deem it is written in a proper spirit. I trust that I am actuated by the right motives, by a desire to honor God, and to walk in all the ordinances of his house blameless. My mind has been very much agitated as to forms of prayer. Jesus prayed to the Father, but were his disciples ever present? It is true that the words of his prayer are recorded, but that is not conclusive to my mind. I do not wish it understood that I object to praying in company with others; but "let every one be fully persuaded in his own mind," and then not inflict nor intrude his views.

But pardon me. I did forget that I was writing to "a peculiar people," to those who would worship God according to the Spirit, having no confidence in the flesh. May the Lord comfort Zion, and build up her waste places.

"FOR the husband is the head of the wife, even as Christ is the head of the church: and he is the Savior of the body."—Eph. v. 23.

By request of Elder Jesse Shields, as expressed in his letter on page 78 of this volume of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, the following reflections in connection with this text are submitted for the consideration of our readers, and especially for his judgment.

In the organized church of Christ, the constituent members are men and women who are still subject to the same conditions, and bearing the same relations in the flesh, which are common to all the family of mankind. These relations are not changed when they are called to be followers of Jesus. They have the same natural obligations which were incumbent upon them before they were manifestly called by grace, and instead of their being absolved from those natural relations by becoming members of the church, they are thereby required to render more full and unreserved devotion in those duties, since they are thus glorifying God in addition to fulfilling their duty to their fellow mortals. For their guidance and instruction, the perfect rule is recorded by inspiration in the directions laid down in the writings of the apostles, who were especially ordained to set in order all things in the churches. Our risen Redeemer commissioned them to "Teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you." They were no longer forbidden to go to the Gentiles, as was the case when he sent them before his crucifixion, to the lost sheep of the house of Israel. From the day of Pentecost, when they were endued with power from on high by the baptism of the Holy Ghost, their authority as princes ruling in judgment extended over all the world, and to the end of time. They have no successors in the apostolic office, because their official authority can never cease. The disciples of Jesus profess to hold the inspired rule as perfect; consequently it is sufficient at all times, and under all circumstances which ever can come to the saints in their sojourn on earth. As it can never need addition or amendment, no provision is made for any such emergency.

Much of the instruction left on record by the apostles, is in the form of exhortation and admonition to the saints for their government in their every day conduct as inhabitants of this earth upon which as pilgrims and strangers they sojourn. Of this they constantly feel the need, since they sensibly realize their own ignorance and weakness. In the connection of our text, the apostle has given specific directions defining how the saints should walk in the way which shall not grieve the holy Spirit of God, whereby they are sealed unto the day of redemption. They are exhorted to "walk in love," not merely after the manner of this world, but "as Christ also hath loved us, and hath given himself for us." And again, "For ye were sometime darkness, but now are ye light in the Lord; walk as children of light." In thus walking, the saints cannot gratify their carnal appetite by drunkenness, and unthankful grumbling at their trials. Neither can they indulge a domineering disposition in striving for the mastery; but "Submitting yourselves one to another in the fear of God." Then the domestic relations are specially expounded; and it must be observed that the apostle is instructing exclusively the saints and faithful in Christ Jesus. "Wives, submit yourselves unto your own husbands, as unto the Lord." Certainly this injunction does not require submission to such commandments of their husbands as might require the transgression of the authority of the Lord. The evident meaning of the direction is that the submission enjoined shall be in obedience to the law of Christ. When submission to husbands, parents, or any earthly authority, requires the transgression of the higher authority of the Lord, it is not right for the saints to obey such commandments. In that case, they are to be in subjection to the higher power of God; for all the powers that be are ordained of God. It is clear that no inferior power can justly demand disobedience to the commandments of that God by whom it is itself ordained or established.—See Romans xiii. 1. The apostles said, "We ought to obey God rather than men."—Acts v. 29. Neither husbands, parents, nor civil officers, have higher claims than the commandments of the Lord, upon the obedience of the saints. So far as the requirements of any constituted earthly power do not conflict with the superior allegiance due to their God, the disciples of Jesus are to be in subjection to them; but when they demand transgression of the directions which God has given, such powers are no longer entitled to obedience, since they are then in rebellion against the power of God by which they are ordained.

"For the husband is the head of the wife, even as Christ is the head of the church." In common with all other natural illustration of divine truth, this similitude is limited to the point which it is designed to exemplify. The supreme authority of the Lord as head over all things to the church, cannot be set forth by any natural relationship. The servant of Christ is not justified in committing murder or robbery, even though such crime should be commanded by an earthly husband or father. Since Christ Jesus is the embodiment of righteousness it is impossible that he should authorize any iniquity. Allegiance to him cannot therefore enjoin obedience to any earthly power which shall require the saint to transgress his own law of holiness. Within the limit of his law, the husband is the supreme power in the conjugal relation; and in the same way the civil powers are limited to their appointed bounds. This fact is abundantly attested by the record of the example of our Lord and his apostles. While submitting to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake, they endured severe afflictions for disregarding the commandments of earthly rulers, when it was needful in obedience to the higher authority of the Lord. So, when the disciples of the Pharisees and the Herodians tempted Jesus, he replied, "Render therefore unto Cesar the things which are Cesar's; and unto God the things that are God's."—Matt. xxii. 21. While in the providence of God civil authority was committed to Cesar, the saints were required to render obedience to him in such matters as pertained to his dominion; but they were not commanded to acknowledge any earthly authority as superior to their obligation to obey God as the only source of all authority. The obedience of a wife to her husband in everything consistent with her submission to the law of Christ, cannot include transgression of the law which our Lord has given. Even the marriage relation is of the earth and temporal, and it certainly cannot supersede the authority of Christ, which is spiritual and heavenly.

In natural and earthly things, the Scriptures plainly teach the supreme authority of the husband as the head of the wife. This is recognized even in the civil law of all enlightened nations, and especially in the law of God as given to the nation of Israel by Moses. It is in this sense that the apostle uses the expression in our text. Of the husband the law demands payment of the debt contracted by the wife. In this sense she is one with him, and the law recognizes them in this unity. Upon this principle Christ is responsible to divine justice for the transgression of the church which is his body, being one flesh with him. Confessing this unity, he bore her sin in his own body on the tree of Calvary, and was made a curse for her. No natural husband could bear the guilt of his wife; nor could his death satisfy the law for any capital offence committed by her. Only in a financial sense is he responsible for her debts. That is the extent to which this relationship can illustrate the relation of Christ to his church. So, no earthly husband is infallibly perfect; and in that respect the figure fails to represent Christ as the head of the church. No standard of perfection is higher than the infinite holiness of our Lord; for that reason implicit obedience to his commandments is obligatory upon the church, which is called the bride, the Lamb's wife. When Christ is presented as "the head over all to the church," she is said to be "His body, the fullness of him that filleth all in all." None of the illustrations used by the Spirit is unnecessary in presenting the great mystery of Christ and the church concerning which Paul was speaking in the text. His language is not to be understood as referring merely to the natural marriage relation; for he expressly disclaims such an application, saying, "This is a great mystery; but I speak concerning Christ and the church." There is no great mystery in such an application of the text as should simply authorize the submission of a natural wife to her husband. The mystery of which the text is an illustration, is in the unity of the infinitely holy Son of God with the ransomed sinners who are members of his church. In its literal application, the last verse of this chapter sums up all that is meant by the text and its connection. "Nevertheless let every one of you in particular so love his wife as himself; and the wife see that she reverence her husband." As thus explained, the obligation is reciprocal, and the saints should never forget that in its observance they are rendering obedience and glory to their Redeemer.

"And he is the Savior of the body." Those who know experimentally the justice of their condemnation as sinners against God, will not need to be told that no earthly husband can save his wife from her guilt as a lost sinner. In that sense they know that "None can by any means redeem his brother, nor give to God a ransom for him (for the redemption of their soul is precious, and it ceaseth forever); that he should still live forever, and not see corruption."—Psa. xlix. 7-9. In its literal application, the husband is the savior of himself and his wife as being responsible for the debts of both. So he is the protection of the one body (or flesh), which the husband and wife are pronounced in their married state. Hence, it is important that the wife should heed the admonition enjoining becoming reverence as due to her husband. But in its most full and unrestricted meaning it is true of Christ that he is the Savior of the body, whose reverences should be manifested by unfeigned obedience to his holy commandments. Not only as the mighty Redeemer who by the sacrifice of himself has delivered his church from sin and death, but in the daily experience of every saint, he is the only Savior to whom they must look for preservation and deliverance from all the conflicts and temptations which beset them on every hand. That saint must be very deeply sunk in sleep, who has so far forgotten his entire dependence upon this Savior, that he does not realize the gratitude and love which is due to Christ as his constant Savior in every time of need. Well may one in such a condition give earnest heed to the admonition in the context, "Awake, thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light. See then that ye walk circumspectly, not as fools, but as wise, redeeming the time, because the days are evil." Evidently there is a possibility of the saints failing so to walk, or the admonition would not have been recorded for their benefit.

When one whose only hope for salvation is in the Lord Jesus, so yields to the dictates and desires of the carnal mind as to disregard the directions of the law of Christ in his daily walk, his action is a practical denial of the authority of the Lord. Even though he may not go to the length of being openly immoral, his conduct declares that he will not have Jesus to rule over him. It is mockery for such a professed disciple to pray the Lord to "Lead him not into temptation," since he voluntarily goes in the way of transgression. This is true of such as follow the direction of their carnal reason in preference to humble obedience to the word of Jesus, which plainly enjoins upon his disciples, "If ye love me, keep my commandments." Such characters deny the truth of our text in not holding Jesus as the Head and Savior of the body. None can be guilty of this denial of the Lord unless the grace of God has been revealed in them, giving them to trust in Jesus for salvation. When such subjects of the revelation of the Spirit are disobedience to the law of the Lord, they live after the flesh, and in that departure from the right way of the Lord, they shall certainly die. Sowing to the flesh, they must of the flesh reap corruption. The present experience of this death is a fearful thing to the saints. They cannot indeed forfeit that eternal life which is hid with Christ in God; and their salvation in him is not subject to their action. But they suffer the darkness of the dead in their disobedience; and the rod of the chastening of their Lord will certainly be visited upon them, so that they shall feel to cry out of the depths unto the Lord for deliverance. For the comfort of the saints they cannot be too careful in giving heed to the exhortations and admonitions left on record for their learning while here in the flesh. Those who love righteousness and hate iniquity, are not in need of the terror of future punishment, nor the promise of everlasting bliss, to move them to desire the answer of a good conscience toward God in their daily life. Their reward is found in keeping the statutes of their King, because they have within them the love of holiness. Wives and husbands, as well as all who love God, will find abundant reward in their present state in giving earnest heed to all the directions which are given by inspiration of God in the Scriptures.

MARRIAGES.

In North Berwick, Maine, March 7th, 1891, by Elder Wm. Quint, Mr. Elmer L. Quint and Miss Hattie M. Chadbourn, both of North Berwick, Maine.

On Wednesday evening, Feb. 11th, 1891, at the residence of the bride's parents in New Castle Co., Del., by Elder E. Rittenhouse, Mr. James F. George and Miss Florence, daughter of Isaac and Eliza Ann Green, all of New Castle Co.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—Please publish the notice of the death of my dear mother, Myra Ann Shepherd, which occurred Feb. 25th, 1891, aged 79 years, 5 months and 29 days.

She was a sister to the late Mrs. Huldah Eggleston, of Middletown, N. Y., and also to Mrs. Lucinda Huestis, who died in the city of New York in the year 1867. In relation to myself she was a great-aunt; but at the death of my widowed mother she complied with her dying request, and adopted me into her home and heart, when I was but three years of age. She was a faithful and affectionate mother, a never-failing friend, and a devoted christian. She was a member of the Baptist Church in Catskill, Greene Co., N. Y. (the place of her birth), and at the time of the division remained firm in the Old School belief. She was a teacher in the Catskill schools for a number of years afterward, teaching in her own private school, and in the First Ward school building on Cottage St., in Middletown, Orange Co., N. Y. Teaching has been her occupation since she was a girl of sixteen.

She suffered for years with bronchitis, but that was not the immediate cause of her death. In August last she was taken with a slight stroke of paralysis in the arms, and though she partially recovered, continued to fail from a giving out of the whole system. On Feb. 24th she had a sinking spell, and from that time failed rapidly. She had for a long time been anxious for her release, as she had always desired to not "outlive her usefulness." She saw our anxiety, and asked, "Do you think this is the beginning of the end?" I answered, "Well, yes, mother, we think it is." After a few moments she said, "I feel no agitation, no fear. The great I Am has done it, and it is all right. I have been beside many a sick bed at such an hour as this, and heard them tell of a life spent in the service of the Lord, of the many good works they had performed in his cause, and the many deeds done which they felt were acceptable in his sight, and now in the dying hour they felt a sweet comfort and peace in remembrance of doing all they could for the Lord. I," said she, "have no peace nor comfort of that kind. I have done nothing for him. My peace and comfort lie not in what I have done for him, but in what he has done for me. I have done nothing for him, but he has done all for me." Some time afterward she said, "Is it possible that the glorious day has come at last?" The morning of the 25th she wished the twenty-ninth Psalm read to her, which was done. The physician left a stimulant and nerve to give to her, and as I put the spoon to her lips she shook her head and said, "Don't do it. Don't do anything to postpone it; let it come." I however persuaded her to take it, but the next time she positively refused. After that she took it quietly. At one time, when left alone with her, I saw that she was trying to say something, and by listening attentively I heard this earnest petition: "Come, my Father, come. Say it is enough. Cut short the work. Let not thy child suffer long." These were her last important words. When asked if she had any pain, or if she were comfortable, she always assured us that she was comfortable, even after she could not speak. At four o'clock in the afternoon she had another sinking spell; and at about six o'clock death's angel snapped the chain which bound her to the earth so gently and so quietly that we did not know when the spirit took its flight. We wished Elder Thomas to officiate at the funeral, which took place on the 27th; but he was unable to be with us, so a minister of this place was called upon. He selected as a subject for his remarks the Psalm which she had wished read at her bedside.

She leaves a large number of nieces and nephews, besides many sincere friends, to mourn their loss. She was the last of a family of eight children, who all died in faith.

One by one earth's ties are broken,
As we see our love decay;
And the hopes so fondly cherished
Brighten but to pass away.

One by one our hopes grow brighter
As we near the shining shore;
For we know across the river
Live the loved ones gone before.

ADELA JONES.

ARGENTINE, Kansas, March 5, 1891.

BROTHER Preston Munkers died of consumption of the lungs at his residence in the city of Scio, Linn Co., Oregon, on Thursday morning, Oct. 16th, 1890.

The subject of this notice was born in Clay Co., Mo., Nov. 28th, 1830, and consequently was at the day of his demise 69 years, 10 months and 18 days of age. He emigrated to Oregon in the summer of 1846 (when what is now the thrifty, delightful and pleasant State of Oregon was a wilderness, infested by millions of wolves, cougars almost without number, and men as fierce and ferocious as they), in company with his father, mother, five sons and three daughters. The sons, except the subject of this notice, are all living. The daughters (I think), except one, are dead. His father and mother were members of the Old School or Primitive Baptist Church in Scio, and both died in the full triumphs of faith in Christ at a very old age. Of their sons and daughters there were none members of Old School Baptist Churches but brother Preston, but they showed great kindness in their attention to the wants of their sick brother. In the last few months of his sojourn on earth one or more of his brothers were with him, which no doubt was a great comfort to him in his dying moments. I visited him frequently, and always found him bearing his afflictions with patience and resignation to the will of the Lord; and he always appeared very glad to see me. For the last three or four months of his afflictions I was disabled from conversing with him in consequence of partial deafness, both in the sick brother and in myself.

In the year 1845 he was married to Miss Jane Crank. The only living issue of this marriage is Thomas J. Munkers, she having died. His second marriage was in 1862, to Mrs. Barbara Ireland, who survives him, and shares largely in mourning, together with the only son and brothers of her bereavement.

The Lord having blessed dear brother Munkers with a tolerably fair share of the good things of this world, he was thereby enabled to show his hospitality in the entertainment of the brethren and sisters from a distance who came to visit us at the time of our monthly church meetings at Scio. They could always find a hospitable home under his roof, and be well entertained, and brethren and sisters will greatly miss his hospitality. For the last year or two he was for the most part deprived of the attendance at our church meetings by reason of indisposition. But he is gone, and we cannot call him back; gone (we trust) where sin (the cause of all suffering), sickness, pain and death are felt and feared no more. May it be by the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, through the mercy and goodness of God our Savior, that each one of us may arrive safely over sin's tempestuous sea to that blessed, happy place, to die no more.

Brother Preston Munkers gave a relation of his experience and call by grace to the Bethel Church, and was baptized (I think) by the late Elder Ezra Stout, in the year 1869, in which church he remained a member in good standing and fellowship until the Scio Church of Old School Predestinarian Baptists was constituted in the city of Scio, in the year 1873, when he received a letter of commendation from the Bethel Church, and he and sister Barbara Munkers (his wife) went with the brethren and sisters into the constitution of the Scio Church, where he remained a member in good standing until death signed his release from his sufferings, trials and conflicts by the way, when the angel of death could shout his sufferings over.

JOHN STIPP.

Scio, Oregon.

SISTER Nancy W. Dryden was born in October, 1837, and departed this life Jan. 16th, 1891.

She was baptized by the writer in fellowship with the Old School Baptist Church called Nassaongo, in Wicomico Co., Md., Dec. 9th, 1876, and lived a life of godliness until called home to rest in Jesus. I have been intimately acquainted with the departed one about twenty years, and it was almost always a lesson of importance to me when I visited her, she seemed so anxious to know more of the things of God. She seemed so child-like and meek that I could not help envying her. Some time before she died she became so well reconciled to her lot, and to death itself, that she wanted the church and all her friends to come and see her, so that she could tell them all about it, and how good the Lord was to her. She was the third one of three sisters who lived together, making a precious and interesting family, all of whom have died with consumption. Only one was married, whose husband has witnessed the last struggle of his dear wife. Percilla died first, then Margaret, and last, Nancy W. A few weeks before she died she requested the writer to be sure to come when sent for, and said she wanted me to be present and conduct her funeral. She talked like one who was going on a pleasant journey. May God sanctify this to the good of all who are left to mourn.

She leaves two sisters, two nephews, one niece, and her brother-in-law, with whom she lived. The text used on the occasion is recorded 1 Thess. iv. 13, latter clause.

ALSO,

DIED—Near Messongo, Va., Jan. 31st, 1891, Mrs. Margaret Byrd, aged about 83 years.

Her last marriage was to Mr. Parker Byrd, a highly respected and well known farmer of the same neighborhood. Sister Byrd was baptized in fellowship with the Old School Baptist Church at Messongo, Accomack Co., Va., in October, 1830, being a member more than sixty years, and was under the care and notice of the church all that time. In the midst of all the trials, temptations and afflictions, which were many, like Job, by the grace of God she maintained her integrity. No charge was ever brought against her during that long period of time. I think the language of Job was true in her case, "When he hath tried me, I shall come forth as gold;" for she was a shining ornament of God's grace. In her deepest affliction she would say that she had not one trial too many, but that all had been for her good. She patiently waited the Lord's time to take her to himself, saying often, "I am just waiting the Lord's time." She is now where the anxiety of waiting is over. We sorrow for ourselves, but not for her; for our loss, we believe, is her eternal gain. She passed away like a lamp going out. It was not known when the breath left her.

Thus has left us a long and well-remembered companion and others directions for her burial, requesting that her remains be taken into the meeting-house at Messongo, and that the writer preach her funeral, which her companion seemed anxious to have carried out. The writer was present, and used as a text Job iii. 17, 18. Her body was then laid away in the church-yard, to await the summons that shall call the dead to arise. She leaves a feeble and care-worn companion, two sons, a number of grandchildren and great-grandchildren, to mourn, with the little band of brethren and sisters with whom she was so closely united by a spiritual tie. May we all covet such a life and such a death.

NEW CHURCH, Va.

IN memory of Floyd Blizzard, infant son of Charles F. and Hannah Blizzard, and grandson of Joel D. and Hannah Northrup.

Your tender babe, your bright-eyed one,
Your youngest, darling, joy,
With whom at evening hour you knelt,
Beside your little boy;
And though he scarce could lisp a word,
Nor speak a simple prayer,
We trust the Savior blessed him
While thus he knelt there.

O how you loved your little one!

So artless and so true;

He had so many winning ways

Your fondness to secure.

And while he thus in silence knelt,

Some sweet and childish tone,

Unheard by you, might mingled with

A prayer at mercy's throne.

But he has entered into rest

Upon that blissful shore,

And there he lives, forever blest,

And sickness knows no more.

Yes, there he dwells at Jesus' feet,

With angels round the throne,

And praises sings, so soft, so sweet,

To God, and God alone.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date, this date denotes the time at which your subscription expires, and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

"Is there not an appointed time to man upon earth? Are not his days also like the days of a hireling?"—Job vii. 1.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—A correspondent from Emporia, Greensville Co., Va., who signs himself "R. C. H.," has expressed a desire that I should say something through the SIGNS upon the above words. I often hesitate to comply with such requests, because I can present so little about the texts named; yet I do not altogether feel like refusing upon that ground, for the same inability would follow me were I to attempt to write upon any other portion of the word. I know but little about any of it. I would like, before I attempt to write or preach, for the word to become to me like living bread, so that I might eat it, and just speak of its sweetness as it came fresh from a vital experience; but if I were to always wait for this I should try to fill my appointments but a very few times in the course of a year. I am compelled most of the time, if I write or speak at all, to do so rather upon strength derived from experience in the past than upon the ground of present comfort; and the text oftener than otherwise seems pleasant, as I can see how it describes what I have felt, rather than what I feel just at the time. I have also been stirred up to try to answer such requests very often because I have regarded them as intimations of the will of the Lord. In this I may have been mistaken at times, however.

The words named above occur in the midst of the second speech of Job, which was in reply to Eliphaz the Temanite, the whole tone of whose speech, as recorded in chapters four and five, had been one of lofty censure against Job for wickedness which he supposed his afflicted friend to have secretly committed. Eliphaz speaks the best he knew, and says all that could be said from his standpoint in the matter; but he has mistaken the case of Job, and his words are therefore to Job of no value. Job himself does not then understand the matter, nor why it is that he is afflicted; but he does know that the remedies proposed by Eliphaz are of no value to him, and that his case is not what his friend supposes. Instead of containing any comfort, the words of Eliphaz but lacerate the wound and increase his pain.

The Lord indeed had afflicted Job; but he has expressly shown in the opening chapters that it is not as a punishment for his sins, but as a trial of the integrity of his heart, and of his real love to God and desire to serve him. In the first chapter Satan is represented as saying unto God that Job's service is purely selfish. He says, "Doth Job fear God for naught?" He goes on to say, "Hast not thou made a hedge about him, and about his house?" &c. Again, he says, "But put forth thine hand now, and touch all that he hath, and he will curse thee to thy face." This is Satan's challenge. He denies that there is any such thing as vital godliness, or child-like, free, loving, gospel service on earth; and now, as recorded in the first and second chapters, Jehovah answers this challenge of Satan by putting Job and all his in his hand, and he is tried to the uttermost. Yet in all this Job did not sin with his lips; that is, he did not speak against God. It is proved that Job serves God irrespective of profit or gain, or of any worldly surroundings or circumstances whatever. The fear of God is in his heart, and it is not to be shaken by trials nor afflictions. The feeling of his heart under the malice of Satan is expressed when he says, "Shall we receive good at the hand of God, and shall we not receive evil?" And again when he said, "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord." Job did not know what the trial meant. He did not know the end of the Lord in it; but the fear of the Lord in his heart abided, and proved that it could enable the servant of God to win the victory in the conflict. Job had a wonderful victory, and divine grace was magnified when he could utter the words quoted above. As said before, Job knew no more why the trial had come than did his friends; but he knew what they did not know, that he was not being punished for outbreaching sins. Many of his expressions afterward, which might seem like self-righteous vindication of himself, will be seen not to have been so when we remember that he only means by them to deny the charges of his friends against him of great and secret sins which he had committed. When speaking directly to God Job always confesses himself vile; but to the charges of guilt made by his friends he always pleads innocent. He is right and speaks the truth in both cases, and there is no contradiction in his words, even as Paul could say in truth, "I have lived in all good conscience before God until this day," and yet confess himself the chief of sinners. Men look at the outward act; and Job's friends looked no further. God looks at the heart. Man sees what man does; God sees what man is. In the way that men look at it, Job could deny that he had sinned, or that he was being punished for his sins, while before God he confessed himself utterly vile. As we read this wonderful book we shall see Job uttering what he does not understand often, and in his terrible anguish of body and mind complaining often, but yet he always sees this one thing that his friends do not see; and at the end, while God rebukes him and silences his murmuring, yet he does not command that a sacrifice be made for him, as for his friends, for God says, "Ye have not spoken of me the thing that is right, as my servant Job hath." The sacrifice commanded for them, and not for Job, emphasizes this testimony, and shows that it means, not that Job had said more that was right than they had, but that the difference between them was the difference between right and wrong.

Perhaps my preface may seem too long, but I felt it needful that we first of all should look at this general view of the subject. Believers in every age are subject to the same temptations. Satan now assails their integrity, as he did that of Job. He also assailed our blessed Redeemer, by holding out to him all the kingdoms of the world, as though he would insinuate against even him that he was moved by selfish considerations, and would forsake his God if greater good could come to him by so doing; and he who thus tempted Jesus will also tempt his followers. No temptation has overtaken us but such as is common to men, yes, even to the "man Christ Jesus." I must confess that one of my sorest trials at times has been when I have feared that I am serving God for the blessings of this life. At such times I cannot see that it is a temptation, and so I am troubled. Do I serve God as did Job, as did the meek and lowly Master, for naught? Or am I selfish in all that I am doing? I greatly fear and tremble about it at times. Under this temptation, to read the first two chapters of Job is at times a wonderful comfort. I know, if my faith be genuine, that I shall still fear and serve and confess God, let what outward trials and crosses that may come to me; but often I dread the test, lest I be found wanting. I cannot help thinking here of one who has been tried as Job was, and who has shown that she serves God from the heart, and not because of gain or prosperity or health. I mean our dear, afflicted sister, Mary Parker. Not her goodness, but the grace of God, is magnified by her afflictions. What a gracious and glorious thing it is to serve God, not as a hired servant, but as a child who loves his father and his service. I want to have this spirit, and to find it my daily food to do the will of God; but I fear often it is not so. Of what avail is it if I preach Jesus, not of a ready mind, but for gain or advantage? I know there are those who serve God for naught. I want to be among them.

Now, while we must bear in mind that Satan's charge that Job is selfish in serving God is the key-note of this most wonderful book, yet we shall find many things as we read along growing out of it, and more or less connected with it; and each discourse opens up some new things to our view. Reading the discourse of Eliphaz, in the fourth and fifth chapters, we find that he charges Job with sin and wickedness (verses 7 and 8), and implies that he is now afflicted in consequence.—Verses 9 and 10. All that Eliphaz says is based upon this implication. Now Job, in the midst of his complaints, replies to this, and denies it.—Job vi. 26-30. I hope my unknown correspondent will read carefully from the beginning of the book up to the end of chapter seven.

Now, out of his sore distress Job says, "Is there not an appointed time to man upon earth? Are not his days also like the days of a hireling?" Let it be noted, in the first place, that Job does not so speak as though he desired to have a question answered. When questions are asked in a negative form it always implies the strongest form of positive assertion. Job really in this language says most emphatically, "There is an appointed time to man upon earth. His days are as the days of a hireling." The hireling labors for a limited time. He eagerly looks for his shadow, cast by the evening sun, that he may cease his labor, and receive the reward of his work. So Job says, "I am made to possess months of vanity, and wearisome nights are appointed to me." As the hireling has no joy in his labor, but is only anxious for the end of it, so Job sought rest from the suffering that made his days joyless and his nights weary. The words, "appointed time," in the text, in the Hebrew have the force or meaning of a warfare. The sentiment is that man's life is like a soldier. He is in the warfare for a time. The service is one of hardship and danger and weariness. A soldier might well look forward to the end of the campaign, when he should be discharged, and rest from his toils, and enjoy the delights of home. So Job regards this life. Man is here for a time only. His life is full of burdens, sufferings and cares. If he referred to himself, his days were exceedingly oppressed; and as a soldier might well desire the end of the strife, or a hireling the end of his toil, so he looked with desire to the end of life, when all his suffering should end. It seems to me that this is in substance the meaning of the language of Job here. In this every tried believer can realize fellowship for him. Whether the trials be inward or outward, whether in the spirit or in the flesh, often the spirit grows so weary as to long for rest and home. Like David, they say, "I shall be satisfied, when I awake, with thy likeness." Like Paul, they have a desire to depart and be with Christ, which is far better.

There are some blessed reflections that grow out of these words of Job. First, Job recognized the truth that all his times were in the hand of God. When trouble comes this is most blessed to remember. Whether the warfare means those special seasons of conflict after which the Lord gives present rest, or whether it takes in our whole life of trial, which only ends when final deliverance comes in death, this truth is in either case most blessed. Job again and again states this truth. In chapter fourteen he says, "Seeing his days are determined, the number of his months are with thee, thou hast appointed his bounds that he cannot pass; turn from him, that he may rest, till he shall accomplish, as a hireling, his day." In verse fourteen he speaks of his "appointed time." In the midst of all his tossings of mind he does not lose sight of this truth. How good it is to think that there is no chance-work in all our lives! Our steps are not ordered by ourselves, nor by chance, nor by blind fate, but by an all-wise and beneficent Creator. Jeremiah, with all the energy and fire of an inspired soul, cries out in gladness and awe, "O Lord, I know that the way of man is not in himself; it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps." The wise man said, "The lot is cast into the lap; but the whole disposing thereof is of the Lord." Jesus said of himself, "The Son of man goeth as it is written of him: but woe unto that man by whom the Son of man is betrayed! it had been good for that man if he had not been born." I think I rejoice at times that even in my life God reigns, and reigns so entirely that my steps are settled.

I cannot at all understand his ways. I do not know why he does with me as he does. I do not think that I very much desire to know. I know one thing, believing that God in infinite wisdom and mercy appoints all my steps in his providence and grace, I am saved from a great deal of worry and anxiety. However dark all around may be, I feel sure that all is somehow, in ways beyond my ken, working for good to his people and for his glory. Amidst many tumults in the churches throughout the land in the past and in the present I have been able to believe that there is an appointed time, and that all will be peace when Jesus shall speak and say, "Peace; be still."

This has led me to feel that I need not rush into the conflict, for God would bring the best results to pass by-and-by. I have not thought that I could make peace; but I have believed that when he who is our peace should appear, then there would be peace. I have felt to desire that there might no offense come by my hand, though the Master said that they must needs come, and woe to that man by whom they come; but when offenses have come I have rejoiced that the Lord had said they must needs come. That the time is appointed, assures us that they must be subservient to the glorious will of our God, just as the grievous offense of the brethren of Joseph worked out the will of God previously revealed in dreams to Joseph.

I have rejoiced, too, that this is true of all men; as true of the beggar as of the millionaire, of the slave as well as the king, of the ignorant as well as the wise. Our vain distinctions between man and man are folly, and worse than folly, in the sight of God; and he shows his contempt for vain, proud, human wisdom by ordaining strength, or perfecting praise, out of the mouth of babes. So our God has appointed my times, and marked out all my conflicts. In this I can rejoice. These things I rejoice to declare. I am sure that for men situated like Job, nothing else can give strength and help and peace and rest. What can silence our murmuring, increase our patience, make us submissive, fill us with reconciliation, enable us to glory in tribulation, and glorify God in the fires, so effectually as to believe that "all our times are in the hand of him" who is "too wise to err, too good to be unkind?"

I leave these thoughts with my unknown correspondent and the readers of the SIGNS. I know they are scattering and imperfect, but I never wrote perfectly in my life. I trust I have written of the perfect things, however.

I remain your brother in the hope of life,

F. A. CHICK.

MY ELDER BROTHER.

AMONG the many lovely characters in which Jesus stands related to his people, the one of elder Brother is very precious to us. The grace of God being sufficient in every sense, for every trial, in every time of need, does plainly indicate to us the beauty, as well as the necessity, of a Savior whose ties of relationship embrace every condition in which we are placed one with another in an earthly sense. Of the members of a household, none (save the father) can fill the father's place. Of all the people in the world there is not one who can give to the child a mother's tender care and love, except the mother. No child can fill the mother's heart, except her own offspring. The children cannot be to each other as friends and neighbors, but each must fill the place of brother or sister. Jesus, as our life and our salvation, can and does fulfill every desire and every want. And I am many time made to rejoice that just as he is all and in all to us, so we are also all and in all to him. At a certain time during his ministry, it is declared, "while he yet talked to the people, behold, his mother and his brethren stood without, desiring to speak with him. Then one said unto him, Behold, thy mother and thy brethren stand without, desiring to speak with thee. But he answered and said unto him that told him, Who is my mother? and who are my brethren? and he stretched forth his hand toward his disciples, and said, Behold my mother and my brethren! for whosoever shall do the will of my Father which is in heaven, the same is my brother, and sister, and mother." Such words are a rich and lasting comfort to every one whose whole desire is to do the will of the Father. Were I able to relate every incident of my present life, from my cradle until now, I am sure I could not mention one moment in all that time when the watchful eye of my elder Brother was not upon me. I could tell you of many times when I was not conscious of his all-seeing presence, and knew not at the time that he looked upon me with pity and love. Being my elder Brother, he was before me, and lived when as yet I did not exist. But my substance was not hid from him when I was made in secret, and curiously wrought in the lowest parts of the earth. His eyes did see my substance, yet being imperfect; and in his book all my members were written, which in continuance were fashioned, when as yet there was one of them. After I became manifest as a child of Adam, that ever present, gracious, patient elder Brother was constantly about me. Indeed it was the will of his Father that he should never leave nor forsake me. As my fond mother caressed and cared for my every earthly want, he framed my lips to say that first endearing word "Mother." But alas! at that time, and for many succeeding days and nights and months and years, I was blind and deaf and ignorant. I was without wisdom and knowledge; I knew nothing of this precious elder Brother; I understood nothing of his tender compassion and watchful care. His voice I could not hear; his form and visage I could not behold. When he kindly laid his restraining hand upon me, I in my ignorance vainly thought it was my own strength of will that resisted the evil. When he led me to naturally contemplate the grandeur and magnificence of the wondrous work of the creation, I was speechless and awe-stricken, but was without wisdom or knowledge to even comprehend in its smallest matter that he was the life, which is the light, of men. Being blind and ignorant, he directed all my steps; taking me kindly by the hand, he gently led me about and instructed me; yet I could not thank him, neither could I praise him, for I was all unconscious of his loving-kindness, or even of his existence. Besides, I felt conscious that all my steps were directed and governed by myself. I had all the natural faculties and pride and passions of Adam's fallen race, without a knowledge of the fallen and utterly depraved condition under which they were held in bondage. In my own estimation I was capable of doing many good and meritorious acts. I even became sufficiently self-confident to believe I could work out my own salvation and attain heaven by creature merit and works. I was well equipped, satisfied and content to live out all my days in the enjoyment of the home comforts of my own country. But I was not any longer to stay there; for the God of heaven spake to me, and he said unto me, "Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house, unto a land that I will show thee." I could not at the time understand the words of command, but my ever-present and as yet unseen elder Brother gave me his hand of faith, and I obeyed. This was the first dawning of a higher and nobler attainment than I had ever conceived, a promise of better things, a goodly heritage, a land of milk and honey. The warmth of my Brother's hand was mildly communicated to my cold heart, yet no knowledge that he was the sweetness and first fruits of this goodly land into which I was going. As I journeyed and searched out the land (the Scriptures, &c) I made inquiry; and I ask, as did the eunuch of Philip, Of whom does this evidence of the rich promise of the harvest speak? of itself, or of another? Evidently as did the eunuch, I look for the other. And just as Philip preached Jesus to the eunuch, so also Melchizedek meets me, and to him I pay tithes; for he too is Jesus, King of Salem, King of peace. This journey continued many days, still unconscious that my Brother was always by my side, prompting me to search more and more, and leading me in ways that I had not known. As I traveled I found usurpers in this land (Pharisees, and very wise doctors of the law); but I knew not they were not the rightful inheritors. Indeed I had not the discernment to distinguish between the true and the false; and I think I can remember that, when I found them at variance, my natural bent was to take sides with the latter. Now in all that journey through the land, which occupied many days, I think I never forgot the first promise, that I would be shown the land. And still being blind and ignorant, having no knowledge, I clung to the promise. In my search I came across one Paul, and heard of others whose eyes were opened suddenly, and the wondrous power and love of our elder Brother was shown them instantly. It did not please him, however, to so deal with me. My Brother spat upon some clay, and with it anointed my eyes, and with exceeding joy I could see men as trees walking. Not yet knowing who it was that opened my eyes, I could not tell to those who asked who it was that had done so great a thing for me; but I could say, "This I do know, whereas once I was blind, now I see." And still more firmly did my Brother's hand of faith clasp mine. But I was only a child; and not only childish, but wayward and disobedient. I had many earthly toys, and I loved and cherished them more than I thought of the promise. So my Brother was grieved, and he caused a famine in the land, and the famine was sore. I was compelled to give up my toys of creature merit, one after another, until I was stripped, and naked, and hungry. Then came to me a rumor that there was corn in great plenty in Egypt. I traveled down to Egypt, and there wonderful things were revealed to me. My Brother was there before me, and then my partly-opened eyes perceived that he had provided for this famine. He had not only stripped me for my good, but now he had also provided a way for me. My Brother was ruler and governor of this land (but not its King); and soon there arose a king that knew not Joseph (my Brother). And now with joyful sadness I must tell you that my condition in Egypt was greatly changed from the former one (before the commandment came). Then was I in ease and comfort, self-loving and self-confident. Now I am tortured with a grievous burden; my self-confidence has vanished; I loathe myself; I am sensible of my depravity; my burden becomes more and more grievous, until I sink beneath its weight. Then my precious elder Brother comes to me as my deliverer, and with the power of his might he delivers me from under my heavy yoke of bondage, and destroys all my enemies. He causes me to see his salvation, and I am free. I am still in the world, but not of the world. I go on in it, but it is a wilderness to me. I am fed, not with the bread of this world. The heavenly manna is given me to eat. Still I am a wayward child, and I cry for the flesh-pots of Egypt. I wander in the wilderness, where no water is. My Brother becomes a rock unto me, and the rod of his righteous law smites the rock, the water gushes forth, and I am satisfied. Again I become carnally irritable, the manna becomes insipid to me, and I demand flesh to eat. He is grieved, and supplies me meat to my destruction. Yet he leads me still through all the wilderness journey, and brings me to the banks of Jordan. Then am I made willing to cross its stormy banks. He gives me knowledge whereby I realize that I myself cannot keep the law which is written on tables of stone. I perceive him to be my righteousness, and I desire to walk in him. He takes away my stony heart, and gives me a heart of flesh. He writes his law in my heart. I receive from him the spirit of obedience. I ask to be admitted into his visible kingdom. In obedience I follow him beneath the wave, and receive the answer of a good conscience. From henceforth my Brother manifests the joy and glory of his presence in many and varied characters. He becomes my King in beloved Zion. He makes Jerusalem my chiefest joy. I am shown his glorious attributes, and he becomes to me "wonderful." I constantly need his advice and counsel. He becomes my "Counsellor." I rise up in the pride of my earthly strength. As "The mighty God" he humbles me. I am unruly and contentious. He is my peace-maker, "The Prince of peace." He leads me into the green pastures of his love, and then he is "my Shepherd." Sometimes I grow sick and faint. As a gentle, tender, loving mother he takes me in his arms and carries me in his bosom. Day succeeding day, I go about from place to place, my soul goes out to him, and he becomes to me a "place of broad rivers and streams." I walk in dark places, and he illuminates my pathway, as the sun's clear shining after rain. I was lost, and he found me, and saved me from my sins; in death and under condemnation, and he was my "Redeemer." To-day he is my Lover. He embraces me with a gracious, fervent love, kissing me with the kisses of his mouth. Tomorrow, as the azure tints deepen by the balmy rays and vapors of the rising sun, he comes on the wings of the morning, as my Bridegroom, making the clouds his chariot. His countenance is as the sun shineth in his strength. He takes me to his banqueting house, and his banner over me is love. Having on the wedding garment, I am entitled to freely tread the courts of Zion. The streams which make glad the city of God flow unto me, and O the sweet rest and peace in the precious Savior's love! And all the while I continue to look back in fond remembrance upon all the steps I have taken, and my soul is stirred to its depths within me when I recollect that with each step in all the fitful journey I can trace the constant, patient, loving, tender care of my ever watchful elder Brother. His voice is to me as the sound of many waters. The gentle rustling of the trees, the singing of the birds, the dropping of the rain upon the housetop, are precious gospel sermons, speaking plainly his harmonious, wondrous power; for all things were created for him, and by him all things consist. The winter of our discontent with its hoar-frost, its chilling north winds, is replaced by the gentle, balmy spring time. My cold heart is thawed and warmed, the seed of the good word of God bursts into life, taking root downward, and in its upward growth bearing the blessed fruits of the Spirit (love, joy, peace, &c.), maturing in the happy harvest time of summer, after which there is a passing into the sear and yellow leaf of autumn. Our lives are spent as a day that is past. Hope within has kept pace with the faith given us, but love goes on into the endless, glorious eternity, where has gone our elder Brother, our beloved Jesus. Our place has been prepared, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens; for all of which we desire to give thanks; and out of the abundance of our overflowing hearts may we continually exalt his matchless name, ascribing unto him all the glory, singing sweet songs of redeeming love to the praise of the glory of his grace.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa.

BETHLEHEM, Ga., Jan. 24, 1891.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS AND READERS OF THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES:—Having been confined at home for some time by the afflicting hand of God, and having suffered the most agonizing pain of body and mind, I feel impressed to write a few lines for our valuable paper, which has been my greatest comfort during the afflictions of myself and family. I find in me a spirit of complaint and grumbling, even at the hand of God, who has been pleased to visit me with affliction. I have been led to read of the afflictions of Job, which just fits my case, when he was made to cry out, "Behold, I cry out of wrong, but I am not heard: I cry aloud, but there is no judgment. He hath fenced up my way that I cannot pass, and he hath set darkness in my paths. He hath stripped me of my glory, and taken the crown from my head. He hath destroyed me on every side, and I am gone; and mine hope hath he removed like a tree. My kinsfolk have failed, and my familiar friends have forgotten me." "All my inward friends abhorred me, and they whom I loved are turned against me." Is it possible that one of God's chosen ones shall suffer all these things? It seems that Job was here contending with God, and was trying to set up his own righteousness. He had said, "Surely I would speak to the Almighty, and I desire to reason with God." Why? Because I could convince him that I have always done right, and have even administered to the wants of the poor and needy. Is not this in accordance with carnal reason? I find myself trying to set up just such claims, and thinking I ought to have some praise for my doings; that I ought to have the glory of what I do fulfill. But when we consider the eternal purpose of almighty God, we are made to fear and tremble, and to say with Job, "Behold, I am vile; what shall I answer thee? I will lay mine hand upon my mouth. Once have I spoken; but I will not answer; yea, twice; but I will proceed no farther." We are made to say with Paul, "O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" "I was alive without the law once; but when the commandment came, sin revived, and I died." When God is pleased to open the eyes of our understanding, and to show us what poor dust-worms we are, we are enabled to view God in his true character as the eternal One, who is without beginning of days or end of time. He fills immensity, is everywhere present at the same time, and does his pleasure in the armies of heaven and among the inhabitants of the earth. He is God, and besides him there is none. He is God, and besides him there is no Savior. He does all his pleasure, and none shall hinder. He works all things after the counsel of his own will, and not a part of them. It matters not what it is, nor under what name it may come, it is one of the "all things;" whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers, things present or things to come, whether they be visible or invisible. The will and purpose of God are ordered in all things and sure. There is no chance of a failure; and when anything comes to pass, it matters not what, rest assured, child of God, he has absolutely predestinated it. It is his will, and it comes to pass, exactly at the appointed time of the all-wise God. At the appointed time poor Job was enabled to see the purpose of God in his afflictions; and he cried out, "Behold, I am vile; what shall I answer thee? I will lay mine hand upon my mouth. Once have I spoken; but I will not answer; yea, twice; but I will proceed no farther."

When the poor, wayfaring pilgrim has suffered so much that he or she is ready to conclude, I am a poor, deluded wretch; I am deceived in the whole matter; and God is going to punish me to death for deceiving the church; I do not feel worthy to be with them; O that the Lord would undeceive me, and make me a fit subject for his kingdom; for I do love to hear those good people talk and tell of their trials and travels; and they can tell my feelings better than I can; those that are thus troubled are surely interested in the matter. It is evident that life has been communicated to them; for it is certain that the dead have no feeling, and cannot have any interest in the things that pertain to eternal life. "For whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son," and not to be conformed to the world, by going into the institutions thereof. And why? Because our blessed Savior said, "Ye are not of the world, even as I am not of the world; but I have chosen you out of the world. Marvel not if the world hate you; for it hated me before it hated you."

We understand that there are two distinct principles in the christian. One is of the earth, earthly; the other is from above, or from heaven. "And these are contrary the one to the other." This being the case, there is a continual warfare going on in the christian's mind, which gives rise to or brings many sore doubts and fears. Often the poor preacher is made to wander far away, and to walk and to talk to himself, and to pray to God for light and understanding upon these things. Often he is far from home, traveling a long and lonesome road, sometimes shedding tears of sorrow and great grief. But sometimes his heart is filled with joy and gladness, and time passes on, he hardly knows how, and is made to say, "O that men would praise the Lord for his goodness." "We preach not ourselves, but Christ Jesus the Lord, and ourselves your servants for Jesus' sake. For God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ."—2 Cor. iv. 5, 6. We notice here that God commands the light to shine out of darkness. Could there be such a thing as light shining out of darkness, if there were no darkness? By no means. While in a state of nature we are darkness itself, so far as spiritual things are concerned. We were dead in trespasses and sins, and must be quickened into life by the Spirit and power of God, and not by anything we can do, say or think. "You hath he quickened, who were dead in trespasses and sins." This is what my Bible teaches; and if I am not deceived, it is what the Spirit of God teaches, although a large majority of the professing world deny such doctrine; and even some who claim the name of Primitive Baptists are opposing the doctrine of God's predestination of all things. Yet we are taught by the sacred word of God, who cannot lie, that he himself works all things after the counsel of his own will; that he will do all his pleasure. Then it was his will and pleasure that man should eat of the forbidden fruit in the garden, else that was one thing he did not work after the counsel of his own will; and he declares that none shall hinder. Well, what about the serpent that beguiled our mother Eve? Shall we suppose that he slipped into the garden without the will, purpose and predestination of our God? If so, then God failed to do all his pleasure. God declared to the serpent, "I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed: it shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel." Surely it was God's will and pleasure. If not, then there was another failure with him to do all his pleasure. Surely it was his mind to do so even before Adam was formed of the dust of the ground; for we learn in his word that he is in one mind, and none can turn him; that he is from everlasting to everlasting, the same unchanging Being. Thanks and praise be unto his glorious name. There is nothing new nor old with him. He speaks, and it is done; he commands, and it stands fast. O that God would prepare each and all his ministers north, south, east and west to contend earnestly for the truth as it is in Jesus, for the faith which was once delivered to the saints.

Dear brethren Beebe, I will close my scribble. It is the first I have ever tried to write for publication. I submit it to your judgment. If you think anything in it would be hurtful to one of God's people cast it aside.

Yours in hope of eternal life; though, if a saint at all, the very least of all.

FOREST HILL, Harford Co., Md.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—I was surprised on seeing in your last issue my name mentioned by some inquirer after truth, from which this inquirer wishes something said. Although I am about to try to answer the request, I feel that this unknown one has made a mistake in the name. I have no recollection of ever attempting to write on any portion of Scripture, at least for publication; and if I have any gift it is confined to the pulpit. There is, however, something connected with the case of a poor inquiring soul that will not let me be easy in mind without doing, or trying to do, or to say something that might be of some service to them.

The portion of Scripture referred to may be found in John i. 8-10. "He was not that Light, but was sent to bear witness of that Light. That was the true Light, which lighteth every man that cometh into the world. He was in the world, and the world was made by him, and the world knew him not." The gospel is a great mystery, presenting the thought that it is known to the saints only in part. That part which to faith has been revealed, to the saints is the ground upon which they are enabled to bear testimony to the truth, as witnesses of it, as he that is born of God hath the witness in himself. Hence I understand the text to be speaking of John the Baptist, who was a witness of something called the Light, which he says he was not, but was a witness of it. That Light is Christ, who said, "I am come a light into the world." It is intended to show the love of God to his people, manifested by his sufferings and perfect obedience. The time was at hand when that which was long promised should be fulfilled; when Christ should come suddenly to his temple. "But who may abide the day of his coming?" For there is something searching and discriminating in relation to "the sons of Levi." "And he is as a refiner's fire, and like fullers' soap." "There was a man sent from God, whose name was John." He was said to be "the voice of one crying in the wilderness." It sounds like a cry of distress, as from a poor, troubled soul lost in the wilderness. Many things were connected with his ministry which seemed new; out of the ordinary course; his peculiarities, his appearance, his clothing, his living and particularly his ministry. He is bearing testimony or witness to the Light which he saw, and declaring the things which he knew; as the forerunner or harbinger, running before with intelligence that the kingdom of heaven is at hand. "I indeed baptize you with water unto repentance; but he that cometh after me is mightier than I, whose shoes I am not worthy to bear: he shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost, and with fire." The ordinance which John was authorized to administer, in which he was to make ready a people prepared for the Lord, was unto repentance, which he required them to manifest, as fruits meet for repentance. Their claiming to have descended from Abraham was not enough. The kingdom was to be built of lively stones. They must be born again to see the kingdom of God. This light, I understand, is the first manifestation that the poor sinner receives, by which he is awakened. In like manner as God commanded the light to shine out of darkness, he hath shined in our hearts, to give us the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ. This is the light which makes manifest. It manifests sin as a transgression of the law of God, and the poor soul as justly condemned. They could not believe this without faith. There is a sense in which the sensible sinner can feel the sad state in which he is by reason of sin. He cannot now shelter himself under the garb of his own righteousness. The light has manifested its true nature as filthy rags. The man is roused up; he looks back over his life in a manner he never did before. The whole house is torn up; all within is seen, as it were, in a glance, and nothing good can be seen. The heart is desperately wicked; who can know it? None can know it but the awakened one, who by the light sees for himself. I cannot be persuaded but that faith and hope, and all the precious blessings, were embraced in the first manifestations in the sinner's heart; but they were not yet manifested. The little infant yet in the womb has all the members of an adult, but not yet manifested. When the time comes that faith lays hold on the promise of life, instead of the law that condemned him, and he can see Christ as the end of the law for righteousness, which he is, as revealed in the gospel, to every one that believeth, the thunders of Sinai cease and give place to some peace within; that the law is fulfilled in him, and not by him, as he once thought he could or must do for himself. Sin has reigned unto death in the man, in his experience, and has brought forth fruit unto death. Now grace begins to reign, and brings forth fruit unto God. Now he is able to bear testimony to the truth as it is in Jesus; and he could not be a witness of the light until he had seen it, and been made free from the law of sin and death, by the spirit of life which is in Christ Jesus.

"That was the true Light, which lighteth every man that cometh into the world." Not that every man born into the world by a natural or corruptible birth is enlightened by this Light as a consequence; but that none are enlightened in any other way than by this true Light, as will appear by what follows.

"He was in the world, and the world was made by him, and the world knew him not." "But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name; which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God." Does not this cover the ground, that if a new and heavenly birth must be experienced in order to know the truth, the birth of the flesh avails nothing in regard to a true knowledge of the things of the kingdom? Although John was endowed with very special and important gifts by him who sent him, yet he sinks into nothingness in comparison with him who was to come. He speaks as if he had not seen him as clothed with flesh for the suffering of death in that body prepared him. "And I knew him not; but that he should be made manifest to Israel, therefore I am come baptizing with water." The way was opening for a manifestation of this great mystery hid in God before all ages, but to be made manifest in these last times for you; and there was need of John the Baptist, who was spoken of by the prophets long before he was born. He is coming; that is, salvation is being manifested. "Every valley shall be exalted, and every mountain and hill shall be made low; and the crooked shall be made straight, and the rough places plain; and the glory of the Lord shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together; for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it." We need look no where else for the revelation and manifestation of these things but in the experience of poor sinners, who are saved with an everlasting salvation, shown to faith. It is here there is a realization of these things. Here mountains are brought down, and valleys exalted. Here crooked things are made straight, and rough places smooth. Sinners, who are saved only by grace, can tell of the grace that saved them—"saved a wretch like me." Here are great difficulties, obstacles, removed, which they never could be able to surmount. They are removed for them, and in them; and their tongues are loosed, and a new song is given them, which is a song of thanksgiving to God. An active, inquiring mind is theirs, and I have no doubt that this is true in the case of our unknown friend who wishes something said on the text named at the beginning of this article; but I am afraid that nothing has been said that will be of any use to him or her, or to any other. Perhaps some of our brethren may take up the subject and make it clear and more profitable; but such as it is I submit it to your judgment. Dispose of it as you think best.

WILLIAM GRAFTON.

WOODLAND, Cal., Dec. 29, 1890.

DEAR BRETHREN:—I feel like I cannot get along very well without the SIGNS. It is a welcome visitor to me, as I never get to hear any sound doctrine in this part of the world. We have everything else here. They tell the people God has done all he can, and the people must do the rest, or they cannot be saved. I must say that I have not so learned Christ; for if I am saved, it is by grace alone; not by works of righteousness that I have done, but for the great love he had for me. Jesus came to seek and to save that which was lost. Well, did he save that which was lost, or did he just make the way possible for us to save ourselves? Paul says, "Who hath saved us, and called us with a holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus." When? When we do good works? O no; but "before the world began." That was a long time before we were able to do any kind of work. So I feel we are saved by grace, and not of works. Then why may we not trust him? Let us

"Trust him for his grace.
Behind a frowning providence
He hides a smiling face."

It seems to me in reading the SIGNS there is much complaint. Dear brethren, let us not look so much to our selves, but look to Jesus, and leave self behind. Some sing, "Only trust him: he will save you;" but Paul says he has saved us, and has called us. He also says, "If we be dead with him, we shall also live with him: if we suffer, we shall also reign with him: if we deny him, he also will deny us: if we believe not, yet he abideth faithful: he cannot deny himself." I feel just as satisfied that all for whom Jesus died are saved, everlastingly saved, as I am satisfied there is a Savior; for the promise is sure to all the seed; and all the seed are the children. Jesus says, "The good seed are the children of the kingdom." "He that soweth the good seed is the Son of man." "Though our outward man perish, yet the inward man is renewed day by day."

Brethren and sisters, trust him,
For Jesus is your friend;
And if you lack for wisdom,
He'll not refuse to send.

"Ask, and ye shall receive; seek, and ye shall find."

"What more can he say then to you he hath said,
You who unto Jesus for refuge have fled?"

And further, Paul says to Timothy, "Take heed unto thyself and unto the doctrine; continue in them; for in doing this thou shalt both save thyself and them that hear thee." "Meditate upon these things; give thyself wholly to them; that thy profiting may appear to all." Do not tell people all the time how mean we are, and what great sinners we are. They all know it; and more than that, God knows it. And Jesus knows what sore temptations mean, for he has felt the same. "See that ye fall not out by the way." Yet the Spirit says that some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils. Will those be lost who thus depart and give heed to such doctrines? If they are the children of God they cannot be lost eternally; for he says that if they deny him, he cannot deny himself; because a child of God is his own, and belongs to no one but God himself. Yet they may be captivated and led astray by the devil at his will; but at God's own time they shall return. The prophet says, "And the ransomed of the Lord shall return, and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads: they shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away." "Return unto me, O backsliding children." Were they children all the time they were gone? O yes; disobedient children, saved by grace, for the great love wherewith he loved them; therefore with loving-kindness he draws them.

"Every creature of God is good, and nothing to be refused, if it be received with thanksgiving; for it is sanctified by the word of God and prayer. If thou put the brethren in remembrance of these things, thou shalt be a good minister of Jesus Christ, nourished up in the words of faith and of good doctrine, whereunto thou hast attained." "Built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone." This sure foundation is my place of rest.

"Here would I find a settled rest,
While others go and come;
No more a stranger or a guest,
But like a child at home."

God has loved his people with an everlasting love. Then why may we not love and trust him? Let us praise and glorify his holy name.

I felt inclined to pen these few lines. If I could only write like others, then I would be glad to cast in my little mite. I hope the SIGNS can be continued weekly. I expect to take it as long as I can raise the money to pay for it, whether it comes weekly or semi-monthly.

From a sinner saved by grace,
E. M. HOLLINGSWORTH.

MT. STERLING, Ky., Jan. 17, 1891.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—I have had great comfort in reading the SIGNS OF THE TIMES the past year. I thought the editorials and letters were good. I have also read some of the first and second volumes. My dear husband was an agent for the third volume, and sent to get it for himself and many of the brethren until his death, in the year 1875. Since then I have sent for it. Some want to say there is a change in the doctrine. I have read the articles of old brother Beebe, and I see no change. I am trying to write, and it may be for the last time. If I live until March I will be eighty-nine years old. My hope is that the Lord changes not. He says, "I am God, I change not." What an assurance is this to the people of the Lord! The angel told Joseph that Mary should have a son, and that his name should be called Jesus; "for he shall save his people from their sins." They were chosen in him before the foundation of the world, that they should be holy and without blame before him in love. Brethren, we cannot attain to holiness of this mortal body in this life; but this mortal shall put on immortality, and these bodies shall be raised spiritual. Then the time of trouble will end.

I was baptized sixty-one years ago last April, with eight others; but all are gone except myself. There was much love among them. I cannot tell you how lonely I feel. I have the same hope that I had. I have to pray to the Lord for every blessing. In my young days I thought that to grow in grace was to feel that we were not as sinful as we once were; but I feel as helpless to-day as I did then. My hope is that God does not change, and that he will be with me in death. I do not know that it is right for me to write. I desire your prayers, brethren.

From your unworthy sister in hope of eternal life,

NANCY JONES.

OPELIKA, Ala., March 3, 1891.

DEAR BRETHREN:—I feel like saying this much, since my last letter appeared in the SIGNS, that I do not yield anything, so far as the doctrine is set forth in my writings in the SIGNS. I stand where I have stood for a long time; that is, firmly fixed, as I hope, upon the doctrine of unlimited predestination. I am not partial, but believe the whole length, which is measured in the Scriptures.

I cannot help believing that if the foundations be destroyed the people of God will be lost. This is my comfort, that the powers of earth and men cannot destroy the foundation; nor can the powers of hell and darkness; nor can all the powers combined do it. Therefore I take comfort in the lasting and abiding nature of the foundation in God's holy mountain.

I have thought this needful, as some might conclude that I have receded, or am becoming weak kneed; but it is not so; for the Scriptures, and my own experience, and even reason itself, teach me that the doctrine is true.

With strong desire for the prosperity of the Lord's people, the church, I am yours in hope,

W. LIVELY.

ST. MARY'S, Ga., March 9, 1891.

BRETHREN BEEBE:—In my letter which I just forwarded I failed to convey all my meaning in relation to repeating the Lord's prayer in concert. I wish to say in connection that the command, "Let one speak, and the others judge," I understand to apply in this case as well, for God is not the author of confusion. I admit that under the Mosaic dispensation we find that the Israelites responded collectively, but under the beautiful simplicity of the New Testament order such formality is abolished. I am at a loss to understand how so many can fall in with the innovations of men, when they confess that the Scriptures are their guide, and they give evidence that it is frequently read in their homes. How is it that they cannot understand the order of God's house?

GRACE AND WORKS.

"For by grace are ye saved through faith: and that not of yourselves; it is the gift of God; not of works, lest any man should boast."—Eph. ii. 8, 9.

"I know thy works; behold, I have set before thee an open door, and no man can shut it; for thou hast a little strength, and hast kept my word, and hast not denied my name."—Rev. iii. 8.

Some months since a request was received from a lover of the truth who wished for an expression through the SIGNS OF THE TIMES upon the subject presented in the two portions of Scripture above quoted. The delay in complying with the wish of our friend has resulted from the impossibility of answering every inquiry promptly, even if we were able to expound such texts as are suggested by our many correspondents. In many cases, inquiries are not answered because of lack of time and room in our columns. Other questions are propounded to which no response is given, the from want of satisfactory assurance that we are qualified to present any clearly scriptural views concerning them. In no case is an inquiry designedly treated with indifference. Comparatively few of our patrons fully realize the impossibility of replying to every inquiry received. As far as lies in our power, every application receives attention as soon as is consistent with the necessity of giving space to more pressing obligations.

From the fact that natural reason cannot receive the testimony of the Spirit of God, there must always be a controversy between that mind which is guided by reason, and the understanding of truth which is revealed through faith. In the subjects of divine instruction these two opposing sources of knowledge can never be reconciled. Therefore, every saint is called to experience an unceasing warfare within his own mind. So Paul says, "The flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh; and these are contrary the one to the other; so that ye cannot do the things that ye would."—Gal. v. 17. In this text "the flesh" includes all that is born of the flesh, as our Lord defines this expression in his conversation with Nicodemus. "That which is born of the flesh is flesh." All that a man is by nature is in this sense, "the flesh." And so, the Spirit is also all that is born of the Spirit. Jesus declares, "It is the Spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing: the words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life." And to the unbelieving Jews he said, "I know that ye are Abraham's seed; but ye seek to kill me, because my word hath no place in you."—John iii. 6; vi. 63; viii. 37. Reason is a product of the birth of the flesh, and is therefore destitute of the word of Jesus, which is spirit and life. That word is received only through faith, which is the fruit of the Spirit, and therefore it is the gift of God.

From the weakness and indefiniteness of language, it is impossible that divine truth should be so carefully expressed even in the inspired record of the Scriptures, that it may not be wrested by designing men, so as to make it seem that the letter of the divine testimony is not in perfect harmony. Those who really believe the revelation which God has given, will readily confess the failure of their own comprehension in such cases, rather than deny the correctness of the Scriptures; but the artful enemy of the saints is ever ready to trouble them with suggestions contrary to the doctrine of Christ. It is safe in every case, for those who are bewildered by apparent conflict in the words of inspiration, to remember that when correctly understood, the whole volume of the sacred revelation is the one testimony of Jesus; and therefore, it is absolute truth, however incomprehensible it may appear to finite human reason. This consideration will effectually silence not only carnal opposers of the doctrine of salvation by grace, but it will also give the victory over those cavils which are raised in the mind of the saints by the deceitful workings of unbelief.

"For by grace are ye saved through faith." In the connection of this text, the essential principle of the gospel of Christ is presented in clear contrast with the system of justification by works of obedience to the requirements of the law which was given to the nation of Israel. That law made nothing perfect, but by presenting the exact rule of infinite justice it exposed the exceeding sinfulness of sin in the best obedience which men could render to its just and holy demands. "Therefore by the deeds of the law there shall no flesh be justified in his sight; for by the law is the knowledge of sin." The giving of the law upon Sinai did not change the condition of one of the guilty children of Adam. All were guilty and under the curse of God before that law was written upon tables of stone. Its revelation only made manifest the judgment unto condemnation which had already passed upon all men, when all sinned in Adam. The justice of God shines in the law, which was given by Moses; but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ exclusively. This is the principle set forth in the teaching of the apostle of which our text is a portion. Although the saints at Ephesus were Gentiles, their natural reason was looking to their own obedience for acceptance in the sight of God. This selfish principle is still found in the fleshly mind of all conscious sinners. The doctrine of salvation from sin by the grace of God without creature merit, can never be received by the natural man, whose reason is his only guide. Even to those who have by faith received the revelation of this divine truth, it is not known by the power of reason. Hence, they are much troubled by doubts of the reality of the assurance of their hope, because they cannot find anything in themselves to warrant the belief that they are delivered from the condemnation of sin. When they examine themselves in the light of reason, every indication bears witness against their hope; and they would, if it were possible, sink in despair. But the testimony of faith is the witness which abides in them, whereby they are saved from being utterly cast down. Neither in their conduct, their conversation, nor in their own thoughts, can they find the evidence on which their hope can rest; but the abiding assurance of the faith of Jesus Christ forbids their yielding to the doubts by which their hope is constantly assailed. While everything which is seen by reason forbids their hope in Christ, this abiding evidence of faith is the assurance by which they triumph over all opposition.

In considering the palaces and telling (that is, counting) the towers of the Zion of our God, faith may well mark the bulwarks of omnipotent grace which are established by the power of God, for the strength and protection of the objects of his eternal love. They are not left to depend upon the frail support of their own works of righteousness, nor to trust in their own watchfulness and care; but they are "kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation ready to be revealed in the last time." This salvation is indeed by grace alone, which in no degree depends upon any works or merit in themselves. Resting upon the immutable love and truth of God, they have a strong consolation who have fled for refuge to lay hold upon this glorious hope of immortality which is revealed in Christ Jesus, who is the embodiment of that grace by which they are saved. It is this fundamental principle of gospel truth which Paul is bringing to view, in contrast with the legal system, which provides life for the obedient servant who does all that it requires, and visits death upon every transgressor. Under the law of works, there is nothing but the curse of death. Grace saves its recipients not only from the curse of the law, but from the sin by which that awful curse is incurred.

The wonderful power of this grace of God that bringeth salvation, is infinitely beyond the highest conception of reason. By this grace the redeemed people of God are not merely delivered from the penalty due to their sins against the holy law of God; they are made free from all condemnation by the blood of Christ, and are presented holy and without blame before God in love. So full and complete is this salvation that there is now no condemnation to them. Through the justifying righteousness of Jesus, which this grace brings to the condemned sinner, he is so perfectly saved that he may confidently challenge the powers of earth and hell, saying, "Who shall lay anything to the charge of God's elect? It is God that justifieth. Who is he that condemneth? It is Christ that died, yea rather, that is risen again, who is even at the right hand of God, who also maketh intercession for us."—Rom. viii. 33, 34. Thus it is evident that the salvation which is by grace is perfectly in accord with infinite justice. The miracle of the grace of God is revealed in cleansing justly condemned sinners by the blood of Jesus Christ, so that they are free from sin, and made holy with that righteousness which exceeds the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees. All that perfection is in Christ, and the subjects of his grace cannot claim any merit in themselves; therefore they can glory only in their holy Redeemer. The more clearly that grace is manifested in any saint the more will he see the vileness and corruption of his own heart, and long for deliverance from the law of sin which is in his members. From this bondage also he is saved by grace.

In every experience of the saving power of this grace it is manifested through faith alone. Often the troubled saint is brought so low by the conscious sinfulness felt within himself, that he is ready to confess his whole hope a delusion, and reason suggests that it is unaccountable how he ever dared to rest in the comforting assurances which are written for the consolation of the true children of divine grace. When thus sunk deep in the mire of carnal reason, the Spirit takes of the assurances of the grace of Jesus, and "through faith" shows him again the grace of God in which he has rejoiced, and instantly he is saved out of all his distresses. But this experience of the saving power of grace never comes through reason; it is through faith alone that the tried and afflicted saints are saved by grace. In this way the abundant grace of God is magnified, and confidence in self abased in every deliverance which the saints receive in their sojourn in this world of conflict.

"And that not of yourselves, it is the gift of God." To the natural mind it seems needless that the saints should be thus continually reminded of their entire dependence upon the unmerited favor of their Lord. Only those who have learned the pride and vanity of their own sinful hearts, can see the necessity for the frequent repetition of this important truth. Not only the pride of the carnal mind leads the saints to look to themselves for deliverance from their accuser, but it is also one of his devices to encourage them in that false dependence. Since both the grace, by which they are saved in times of trouble, and the faith, through which that grace is revealed, must come from their Savior God, they are at once forbidden to glory in themselves, and comforted in the assurance that they are securely protected by the watchful care of their omnipotent Deliverer. They are often assailed by their adversary upon the charge of their own unfaithfulness; and in their hearts they feel that his accusation is just; so that if the ground of their assurance were in themselves they might well yield to his fierce accusations. But for their consolation, it is left upon record that their faith is not of themselves, it is the gift of God. It is certain that God knows just how strong an evidence his saints need in every trial; and he will never fail to give that faith which is the evidence of those unseen things which he has prepared for them that love him. For Paul says, "My God shall supply all your need according to his riches in glory by Christ Jesus."—Phil. iv. 19. Unbelieving reason is never content to rest in this assurance; and hence the natural mind of the subjects of grace is constantly seeking for some evidence that is tangible to finite sense, by which to confirm the testimony of the Spirit which they have received through faith. If such confirmation could be found, it would be of self, and not the gift of God. All such evidence must come short of comforting those who have no confidence in the flesh. The hope of the saints receives no support from the testimony of their natural mind. Only in the gift of God as revealed by his Spirit, can they find that perfect assurance by which they are given the victory over all the opposition of their natural reason. Thus their confidence of hope is entirely above all dependence upon themselves, being founded and built up in Christ alone through the assurance of that vital faith, which is the fruit of the Spirit and the gift of God. Therefore, they are constrained to acknowledge that it is indeed exclusively by the grace of God that they are saved, and not of themselves, since they must receive as the gift of God even the faith through which they are enabled to trust in the Lord Jesus Christ for salvation.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—In compliance with the special request of brother G. M. Fetter, I now forward for publication in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES a notice of the death of his wife, Elizabeth G. Fetter, who departed this life on Tuesday, Feb. 17th, 1891, at Irving Place, Pueblo, Colo., aged about 37 years. She was confined to the house only about three days, and died of what is termed Bright's disease.

Connected with this death is (to us mortals) a dark providence. They had been married not quite nine months, and she had moved far from the home of her childhood; but that was the place appointed for her to die, however dark and inscrutable it may appear to us; for of the God of the universe it is recorded, "Thy way is in the sea, and thy path in the great waters, and thy footsteps are not known." But the lovers of God's truth can say at times,

"Thy ways, O Lord, with wise design
Are fram'd upon thy throne above;
And every dark and bending line
Meets in the center of thy love."

Mrs. Fetter was a lady of culture and refinement, and had that gift to adapt herself to surrounding circumstances with much ease, and was willing to do anything in her power to assist her friends; but above and far surpassing those accomplishments, she was a dear lover of gospel truth, and desired to hear neither preaching nor talking that did not abase the creature man and give to the Lord Jesus Christ all the power, wisdom and glory in the redemption of lost and ruined sinners, and their final victory over every foe. In her last short but final sickness, all that loving friends and faithful physicians could do did not prevent the "king of terrors" from doing his appointed work. Her last words, verbally uttered, were, "Let me go; it is all right."

The corpse was forwarded by express from Pueblo, Colo., to Hopewell, N. J., and her funeral was on Monday, Feb. 23d, and was very numerously attended, as she was a great favorite throughout this vicinity. It was one amongst the saddest funerals that I have ever been present to witness; for as the friends passed by the casket to take the last lingering look at the lifeless body there were many tear-bedimmed eyes. Our dear brother, Peter S. Garrison, the father of the deceased, as well as her brother, Dr. John B. Garrison, were in deep distress, for the news of the death of Mrs. Fetter came to them so unexpectedly.

Elder Silas H. Durand, of Pennsylvania, was present, and took part in the exercises; also, Elder E. V. White, of Virginia, was present. The words used for a text upon the solemn occasion were the following: "Turn thee unto me, and have mercy upon me; for I am desolate and afflicted. The troubles of my heart are enlarged: O bring thou me out of my distresses. Lock upon mine affliction and my pain; and forgive all my sins."—Psalm xxv. 16-18.

I also append the following brief letter from brother G. M. Fetter.

WM. J. PURINGTON.

HOPEWELL, N. J., March 14, 1891.

ELDER WM. J. PURINGTON—DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST:—I am anxious that some notice of Lizzie's death should go into the SIGNS. I am so far from well that I cannot write for publication. The few short months that we were permitted to live together were the most happy part of my life; but wisdom marked the bounds, and I know from my soul that it is all right. She loved the truth, and as the triumph of grace she was called home. I cannot write much; all the nervous tension that I could bear has been exhausted. The kindness that you have shown me is appreciated, and may it be my happy lot to reciprocate it. I am a poor, frail mortal, and my only plea is that grace may sustain me in my lonely hours. The church is most dear unto me; there all my treasure lies. May I kiss the rod that has smitten, and rejoice that Jesus died. Remember me to sister P. and Ada. I cannot write more now.

G. M. FETTER.

PUEBLO, Colo., March 8, 1891.

DIED—In Springfield Township, Huntingdon Co., Pa., on Wednesday, March 4th, 1891, Mrs. Rachel M. Madden, aged 76 years, 7 months and 15 days.

She was stricken with paralysis about five weeks before, and was improving slowly until a few days before her death, when she took "La Grippe," and in her reduced condition was not able to rally. Her maiden name was Morrison. She was born in the Long Hollow, Mifflin Co., Pa., and removed with her parents in the year 1831 to the banks of the Big Aughwick Creek, near the place where she died. She was the oldest of a family of seven sisters and three brothers, all of whom preceded her to the grave except one brother and one sister. She married Wm. Madden in the year 1843. In 1859, in connection with her husband, who preceded her to the grave just sixteen years, she was baptized by Elder Joseph Furr, in the fellowship of the Old School Baptist Church, to which she clung with great tenacity. She united with the Springfield Church, Huntingdon Co., Pa., where she remained a consistent, faithful, influential and model member until death. Her counsel was often sought in matters pertaining to the church, having more than ordinary judgment and intelligence. The writer being a son-in-law of the deceased, with whom she had spent many of her later days, had every opportunity of knowing her qualities. I am free to say that she was a model woman in every stage of life, her chief motto always being to return good for evil, and would rather suffer persecution than resent an evil. The greatest lesson ever taught by a mother is that of example; and truly the life and graces of the deceased are a living epistle in the minds of the church. We often had occasion to seek the counsel of each other, and I never erred in taking her advice. She was a light on my journey through life. I loved her as I loved my mother, and neither of us ever marred the pleasure or ruffled the temper of the other by word, act or frown. I have lived to see her usefulness and christian sympathy lavished upon all with whom she came in contact, and who needed such.

She died the death of the righteous, without a struggle or a murmur, and leaves to mourn one son, F. H. Madden, of Meadow Gap, Pa., and four daughters, Mrs. J. Wilson Allen and Mrs. Jennie E. Robinson, of Altoona, Pa., Mrs. D. W. Stewart, of Walnut, Juniata Co., Pa., and Mrs. Z. T. Brubaker, of Meadow Gap, Pa. Her interment took place on Saturday, the 7th, in the cemetery of the Springfield Church, at which time and place Mr. Wm. H. Stevens preached a very appropriate and affecting sermon from Job xvi. 22.

J. WILSON ALLEN.

MEADOW GAP, Pa., March 14, 1891.

MY beloved aunt, Melissent Hoyt, died Dec. 1st, 1890, in Guthrie, Oklahoma, Indian Ter., where she moved last March with her daughter and son-in-law, Hon. S. B. Bevans. She was seventy-six years old, and the widow of Nelson W. Hoyt, who died in June, 1865. She with her husband were baptized by Elder Amos Harding, and joined the Old School Baptist Church at Waterloo Mills fifty or sixty years ago, where their names are still recorded, having soon afterward gone to the city of New York, where she resided until last March. She had been a reader of the SIGNS all these years. Although surrounded socially by other doctrines of the day, she stood firm and steadfast to her faith. Perhaps her greatest sorrow in life was when the cruel hand of death took her beloved husband from her, and six months later a lovely daughter just blooming into womanhood. This stroke was almost more than she could bear; and only for her firm belief, and calling upon God to sustain her, she must surely have drooped under this crushing blow. A few years later, and twenty-two years ago, she took up her residence with her son-in-law, Mr. Bevans, being the only child she had, leaving out eight children, except one son, Samuel Hoyt, of the city of New York. She is also survived by two or three brothers, Lewis and Simeon Coykendall, of Deckertown, and two sisters, Mrs. Charity Cole, of Coleville, and Mrs. Jane Beemer, of Beemerville, N. J. With those of her own, her husband's family mourn the loss of so lovely a character.

She was ever ready to give a helping hand to the helpless, and a cheerful word to the friendless. She possessed such a sunshiny nature that clouds melted away in her presence. She was always hopeful, and looking upon the bright side of life. She was beloved by all who knew her, and we miss a bright and shining light from our midst.

Nelson W. Hoyt, her husband, was the eldest son of John Hoyt, deceased, of Mt. Salem, N. J., and was a butter merchant for many years in the city of New York, residing in Jersey City, where he died. Elder Gilbert Beebe preaching his funeral, and six months later that of his daughter. They were buried in Bayonne Cemetery, Jersey City.

The funeral of Aunt Millie was held at the home of her son-in-law, Mr. Bevans, in Guthrie, Dec. 3d, 1890, and her remains temporarily interred there, awaiting removal to her family plot in Bayonne, where she will rest, awaiting the resurrection.

MEMORIAL resolution of the Roaring River Old School Predestinarian Baptist Church of Christ.

WHEREAS, God in his all-wise providence has been pleased to remove from us by death our much-loved sister, Nancy E. Johnson, we feel it our duty to submit to his decree, and to note her eventful life in our records.

Sister Johnson was the daughter of Col. John Martin, and was born July 23d, 1809. She was married to Lewis Johnson Jan. 22d, 1829, and professed the christian religion in 1835, joining the Baptist Church at Roaring River, being baptized by Elder George Douglass. She remained a faithful member of said church until called away. She fell asleep in Christ Aug. 15th, 1890. In all the persecutions which the Baptists have passed through in this section she remained steadfast in the faith once delivered to the saints. She was the mother of our dear brother, Deacon Samuel H. Johnson, and six other members of this church.

Resolved, That in her death this church has truly lost a mother in Israel. Her children and grandchildren have lost a faithful mother, whose counsel, godly walk and godly conversation are greatly missed by all who knew her. Our dear sister has ever been in sympathy with our dear Elder Wm. R. Welborn, with the doctrine he so earnestly preaches, and in all the persecutions that he has undergone. She died in full accord with Elder Welborn and this church in the doctrine of God's predestination; that is, she believed in the predestination of all things.

Resolved, That our Clerk spread this on our church book.

WM. R. WELBORN, Mod.

S. H. JOHNSON, Clerk.

BROTHER W. P. THOMPSON died at his home in Tuskegee, Ala., Jan. 15th, 1891.

He was born in Talladega, Ala., March 13th, 1839. He was a devout man, one that feared God and loved his neighbors. His death is a grief to his family, for he was a devoted husband and an indulgent father. The church has lost an esteemed and earnest brother, and the community an honorable, upright and progressive citizen. He was the friend and well-wisher of those in prosperity, but a friend indeed to those in adversity. He never turned the poor away empty, but shut up his bowels of mercy against the needs of a brother. He was beloved of God, and loved God. The power of grace was exemplified in his life and death. He lived the life of the righteous, and his death was precious in the sight of the Lord. His treasures were laid up in heaven, and his heart was there also. His walk was orderly, for he walked in the light; and his conversation was godly, for his words were seasoned with grace. His word comforted many hearts. He sincerely loved the truth, because the truth had made him free. He praised grace, for grace had saved him. He showed his faith by his works; and whatsoever his hand found to do he did with his might. He had just completed a neat, comfortable chapel in his town at his own expense; but the first knell tolled from its turret was his own death knell, and the first services held within its walls were his own funeral. The monument of love erected in a thousand grateful hearts stands to his memory. He being dead, yet speaketh. The last days of his life were spent in praising God. He sang the songs of Zion upon his death-bed. No. 1296, Beebe's Collection, was his favorite song in life and in death. He is dead to us, but he lives unto God, and we shall see him again.

My dear husband, S. F. McLeroy, departed this life Jan. 15th, 1891, of pneumonia, aged 36 years, 8 months and 7 days.

He came from Alabama to Louisiana in the year 1880, and we were married Oct. 2d, 1881. He joined the Old School Baptist Church at Ephesus, La., on Saturday before the second Sunday in December, 1887, and was baptized on Sunday by his father, Elder John McLeroy, of Alabama, he being here on a visit.

He leaves his father, one brother, three sisters and his wife to mourn their loss; but we sorrow not as those without hope, as our loss is his eternal gain; for it is written, "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them." He was a kind and loving husband. It was hard to part with a dear, loving companion; but O what a glorious thought, that he is not dead, but sleepeth in Jesus.

ALICE K. McLEROY.

CHOUDRANT, La.

SISTER Charity Read died at her residence in this city on Tuesday, March 10th, 1891, of heart disease, after a protracted illness, aged 74 years, 10 months and 25 days.

Sister Read was baptized in the fellowship of the Middletown & Wallkill Old School Baptist Church about twelve years ago by the late Elder Gilbert Beebe, and continued to enjoy the fellowship, love and esteem of the church until the Lord took her to himself. She is survived by one son and five daughters.

The funeral services were conducted by her pastor, Elder Benton Jenkins, at the meeting-house in this city; after which her mortal remains were deposited in Hillside Cemetery, near the lake in which she was "buried in baptism" about twelve years previously.—Ed.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date, this date denotes the time at which your subscription expires, and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

THE EVERLASTING TASK FOR ARMINIANS.

By Elder William Gadsby, late of Manchester, England. We have republished a large edition of the above named very interesting and instructing pamphlet. Many thousands of copies have been scattered through England and America, and read with intense interest by the lovers of the truth, and still the demand has increased to such a degree as to induce us to present to the public this edition which we will send (postage paid by us) to any post-office address in the United States or Canada, at the following rates, viz: a single copy for 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00; 25 copies for $2.00; 50 copies for $3.00; 100 copies for $5.00.

At these low terms the cash must in all cases accompany the orders. Address

CORRESPONDENCE.

NEW CHURCH, Accomack Co., Va.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—Being asked, a few days ago, by one of the prominent citizens of our place, if Solomon was a black man, seemed to bring about some exercise of mind in connection with some expressions recorded in Solomon's Song i. 5, "I am black, but comely, O ye daughters of Jerusalem, as the tents of Kedar, as the curtains of Solomon." It is claimed by a great many in this day and at this time, who are inexperienced, both of the noble and ignoble, that this was simply Solomon speaking with reference to himself; and that he meant, by using the word black, he was a negro, a black man. But this, as well as all other Scripture, is only understood by experience. We find by examining the chapters which compose this song; which is called "The Song of songs," that it contains a mutual and interesting theme, as though there were two parties engaged in it; and this is true. The church is making her confession, and her Redeemer is replying, "Thou art all fair, my love." She first acknowledges that she is black. The pronoun "I" is used in the fifth verse, but "we" in the fourth verse. "Draw me, we will run after thee." Question.—How have the people of God, "sanctified by God the Father, and preserved in Jesus Christ," ever learned that they are black? The world answers, "By reading the Bible and other books, and by preaching." But this is untrue; for it is one thing to be told that a certain thing exists, and another thing to see it. Then knowledge comes by what is seen and felt; not of the outward vision, but the inward revelation; for the Scriptures tell us that "in him [the Word] was life, and the life was the light of men."—John i. 4. So it is not an outward impression, but an inward revelation. So life eternal, and light, which makes manifest the depth of corruption, are inseparable. The work of the Spirit begins within. All outward impressions will sooner or later pass away; but that which shows the heart to be deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked, will endure forever. So the longer the dear child of God lives here, the more there will be manifest of the blackness bubbling up from that fountain of corruption, causing them in truth to say, "I am black." Not only was black, but am now black. And this will ever be the case when in the light of the revelation of the Spirit they have a view of their standing in Adam, their federal head; for they see Adam in their very thoughts, as well as actions. It is not what the redeemed and ransomed sinner does in particular, but what he or she is in their own view, that makes them acknowledge before God and the daughters of Jerusalem, saying, "I am black." And O what groanings, which cannot be uttered, and sighs, which cannot be heard! Painful indeed. But the self-righteous, with the "outside of the platter" washed by an outward reform, can say, "I am not as other men, or as this publican," who says,

"Here on my heart the burden lies,
And past offenses pain mine eyes."

That apostle who had such an abundance of revelation does not say he was the chief of sinners, but was the chief of sinners at the time he thus spoke. Dear reader, you will find this same truth expressed in all his epistles. Some vainly suppose that to believe in the absolute predestination of God would reconcile those that believe it to all things, even to the blackness of their corrupt nature; but never. For the life that animates them, which is Christ in them the hope of glory, is pure. The unworthy writer of this has had a little hope for nearly forty years, and is compelled to say yet, and it seems more frequently, and with sorrow, "I am black." O how seldom I can see myself as I wish to be! For in me, that is, in my flesh, there dwells no good thing. Then it must be blackness that is seen. The more one sees of their own filthiness, the greater seems the mercy of God. "I am black, but comely." To the carnal mind this seems to be a paradox, or a contradiction of terms. But yet it is true, as in the case of the apostle Paul, when he said he was a Pharisee, and the son of a Pharisee; yet he thought it meet to be called an apostle of the Lamb. That is a seeming contradiction, but not so. He was a Pharisee by birth, and was yet a Pharisee by nature; but by the power of the Spirit he was an apostle of Jesus Christ. So Jesus said, "No man hath ascended up to heaven but he which came down from heaven, even the Son of man which is in heaven."—John iii. 13. Yet it is not contradictory; for he came down from heaven, was then in heaven, and also on earth; because his presence fills immensity. "But comely;" handsome; graceful. The same power that reveals to the Lord's people their own sinfulness, also shows to them the beauty and glory of the righteousness of Jesus Christ; and this is applied to them by imputation; not by their works. And yet it is their righteousness, because it is, like faith, given to them. And all the solid comfort the subject of salvation has is when Jesus is brought to their view by faith as their Savior and their righteousness, forming their comeliness; for the glory of God is risen upon his church or people; and when she is viewed as the body of Christ she is seen in his own glory; so if the comeliness or beauty of the Zion of God is ever seen by a circumcised eye it is by the appearing of the graces of the Spirit; not of the flesh. Is it any wonder that all such as know this truth are ready to say, "After we have done all, we are unprofitable servants: we have only done that which we ought to have done?" "O ye daughters of Jerusalem." The acknowledgment already made, and referred to in the first part of the text, is all that any dear child of God has to bring in order to recommend them to the sympathy and fellowship of the "daughters of Jerusalem," another name by which the church is designated. The world would think it a very poor confession or profession to make for the mutual establishment of spiritual fellowship and confidence; yet the knowledge and the acknowledgment of unworthiness in one's self, while yet having a hope in Jesus Christ, has a meaning that reaches the heart of every inquiring pilgrim. It is the pure, unmixed language of Canaan, and is as face answering to face in water. Where this truth rests there is sadness and joy mixed. "I am black." O what sorrow and gloom! "But comely." O what joy unspeakable and full of glory! These things are, in the past, what nearly forty years have taught this poor old sinner he must say to the daughters of Jerusalem everywhere in his sojourn here. He has nothing else to commend him but, "I am black, but comely, O ye daughters of Jerusalem, as the tents of Kedar, as the curtains of Solomon." O what a contrast! Two figures could not have been produced more unlike each other. The tents of the Kedarensians, perhaps, smoked as black as animal skins could be made; like the poor, sin-polluted mortal. As time and exposure darkened the tents of the Kedarensians, so time has a tendency to develop and darken the garments of self. How many of us can say in truth, that is a very forcible picture? But when he or she gets a glimpse of Jesus, with all that name implies, when any portion of the word is opened up to their faith, directly or indirectly, then they know what the comeliness of "the curtains of Solomon" means.

The curtains of Solomon are typical of the beauty and grandeur of the doctrine and order of the house of God. When the queen of Sheba heard of the fame of Solomon, concerning the name of the Lord (remember it was concerning the name of the Lord), she came to prove him with hard questions. Why they were hard was that she found them in her heart, not supposing they could be answered. She brought with her a very great train; but we have no account that she carried any away; for Solomon explained all her questions. And when she had heard and seen the whole order of this house, there was no more spirit in her. She must believe the things she had heard to be true. Just so with every dear child of God. Their heart becomes full of questions; and hard ones, too; so they come to the house of God, where their spiritual Solomon reigns, and there they have the (to them) hard questions answered. There they see the curtains of Solomon, and have some faint knowledge of what the curtains of Solomon mean. But the self-righteous man says he cannot tell how it is that any one who has had each of these opened up before them, and has some sense of pardoning love, can see so much in themselves to mourn over. O my soul! pity them. The blackness causes sorrow; but the comeliness of our spiritual Solomon causes joy; and both are true, because they are seen in the Shulamite, a continual warfare. God has said that he will have war forever with Amalek. Dear brethren, I fear I have extended this scribble to too great a length. I have written to relieve my mind; and that much is done, if no more. I hope that what I have written will do no one any harm. I am sorry to learn that the SIGNS is objected to by any lover of truth, because of the doctrine contended for. If the doctrine of God's predestination of all things is not true, there is no predestina-tion at all; for there is not wisdom enough in this world to draw the line between what is predestinated and what is not. I would be very glad if some one who believes in predestination and permission would attempt the task of drawing the line. If they lived very long they would be under the necessity of changing many a time. O brethren, may we pray for grace whereby we may bear with each other. The strong should bear the infirmities of the weak, and the weak should not despise the strong. Dear brethren, as for myself I can bid you God speed, for I fully indorse the doctrine the SIGNS contends for.

I remain your brother in tribulation.

STATE ROAD, Del., March, 1891.

BRETHREN BEEBE:—Your editorial reply to my letter in the SIGNS of March 4th seems to me to call for some further remarks on my part. The editorial of February 4th, to which I referred in my communication, was clear and satisfactory to my mind with regard to all the main points you had in view, and you are entirely correct in your conclusions that I could not mean to object to them. The courteous and kindly spirit in which the reply is written is certainly commendable. If you or anybody else could possibly from that letter, or from anything else that I have ever said or written, suspect that I held or believed that the law of "God under which men are found sinners, and as such condemned, was unfulfilled in behalf of the Lord's people, and that it was still binding upon them, I certainly should at once set myself right.

The time was when there were legalists bearing the Baptist name, and I can recollect instances among them of this sentiment being advocated, that the law was still binding upon believers as a rule of life. I know of no Old School Baptists who hold or allow such a sentiment. The law that believers are under is, unto Christ, and rests upon the ground of their relation to him, and the obligations they are under as his saved people. I of course disclaim any place among the many commentators you allude to. I think there need be no disagreement nor misunderstanding with any of us about the typical dispensation. It was given to the Jews for a purpose, and for a time, and began and ended with them. It could not curse nor condemn anybody but Jews, and from it there could be no redemption for any others. This law was not written upon tables of stone, was not preserved in the ark, nor overshadowed by the mercy-seat and the cherubim of glory. It was simply "carnal ordinances" and a "worldly sanctuary," and is said by the apostle to have stood only "in meats, and divers washings, and carnal ordinances, imposed on them until the time of reformation." Of this I understand the apostle to speak when he says, "Blotting out the handwriting of ordinances that was against us, and contrary to us, and took it out of the way, nailing it to his cross." It was a shadow of things to come; and the substance having come, it expired by its own limitation. It certainly was not this system of carnal ordinances of which the Lord spoke when he declared that until heaven and earth pass away, one jot nor tittle could not pass from the law until all be fulfilled. The Lord came not to destroy nor change it, but to fulfill it. Fulfilling does not do it away. The Lord fulfilling the law in behalf of his people is said to have magnified it.

The points to which I called attention appear to me to be of vast importance. You either did not understand me, or else were not convinced of the correctness of my position. I want that you and your readers should understand me, and beyond that I will not contend. My position was and is that all the race of men are and always have been under law to God. As God is holy, his law is holy, and requires holiness on the part of his creatures. Without holiness no man can see the Lord. You criticise my expression in regard to the law, that it is a transcript of the mind and will of God. I do not care about the phraseology, and will not contend for it; but I might inquire whether the law is less holy than God is holy, or whether there is any other law higher or holier than that on which Jesus said hung all the law and the prophets. The spirit of the law was embodied in the ten commandments; but that did not make it law, nor make it binding, any more than it was before. It was only publishing it; and it was not published to give life. The Savior embodies it in a single commandment; and when the apostle speaks of "the commandment" I understand him to speak of the law as a whole. By this I understand the immutable and eternal principles of right and justice. From this law men are alienated, and enemies in their minds by wicked works. Your remarks certainly lead to the conclusion that no people were ever under law to God but the Jews, and that neither the law written upon tables, nor any other law, was ever given to Gentiles nor binding upon them. You speak of the law given to Adam in the garden, and say, "Hence the sin of Adam was the sin of all his unborn children." Don't you, brethren Beebe, understand sin in a different sense from the fact of an offense committed? Is the condemnation only a penalty for one offense? or is it not rather that men are enemies, and love darkness rather than light, and that all their deeds are evil? I might quote long paragraphs, and even whole chapters, in support of the position that I am dealing with; but you have the Scriptures, and are familiar with them. I will only refer to a few passages. The apostle calls himself the apostle to the Gentiles; and it may be observed that although he was a Jew, trained up in Jewish prejudices, yet he has as much to say of the law to the Gentiles as to the Jews. As by way of challenge we find him asking, "Is he the God of the Jews only? Is he not the God of the Gentiles also?"

The apostle tells the Gentiles how the commandment came to him. Did not the same commandment come to you and to me, and to other Gentiles? The apostle does not leave us in the dark about what he means, but names one of the precepts of the decalogue, saying, "I had not known sin, but by the law: for I had not known lust, except the law had said, Thou shalt not covet." Would you or I have known sin, or would anybody else have known sin, but by the law? Sin is a transgression of the law; and where there is no law there is no transgression. "What the law saith, it saith to them that are under the law;" and I fail to see how the law can curse and condemn only as they are under it and subject to its righteous requirements. If the Jews only were under the law, they alone were under its curse. Wherewith shall Gentiles be redeemed from the curse of the law? The apostle says to Gentiles as well as to Jews, "Who hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us." If Gentiles were not under the law and under its curse, it would seem to follow that a different salvation was required for the Jews; and that when he was made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem those that were under the law, this provision would not have been required for Gentiles. It is certainly the same God over Jews and Gentiles, the same holy law that condemns them, and the same redemption of which both are subjects. It is out of every kindred and tongue and people under heaven that they unite in the one theme, "Thou art worthy; for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us by thy blood," &c.

Your remarks in reference to the law being fulfilled by Christ in behalf of his people I feel to regard, although kindly expressed, as gratuitous. You say, "There could be no hope for a conscious sinner if the requirements of the law written upon tables of stone were not satisfied by Jesus," &c.; and then you go on to suspect that some of your readers might understand that to be my position. If I have not in all this been magnifying the work of redemption, and endeavoring to grasp its full extent, I have failed to comprehend the force of my own words. Several paragraphs along there look as though we were both saying the same thing. I quoted before, as you quote now, about "the righteousness of the law being fulfilled in us," our entire redemption from amenability to law, so that we are no more under the law, but under grace; and as the subjects of redeeming grace, under law to Christ as his saved people, I have all along delighted to dwell upon.

When the Lord says a new covenant will he make with the house of Israel after those days, do you not understand this to be spoken of spiritual Israel, including both Jews and Gentiles? If so, was it not the spirit of that law which was written upon tables of stone which the Lord speaks of as his law? Thus, "I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts," &c. Is not this covenant with the Gentiles as well as the Jews?

Now one thing more. With regard to the Gentiles being denounced as transgressors, I am almost surprised at your challenge on this point, because so much of the burden of the word of the Lord, even in the mouth of Jewish prophets, was made up of judgments upon the Gentiles. It is true that no allusion is made to the tables of stone, as the Gentiles knew little or nothing about them. Their great leading crime was idolatry. The law said, "Thou shalt have no other gods before me." "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve." I have spoken all along of "the law," as I understand it to embody the obligations of man to his Maker, and in regard to which they have all gone out of the way. Man in his natural state is characterized as being enmity against God, and not subject to his law; and the apostle says he has proved that both Jews and Gentiles are all under sin. He makes no distinction between Jews and Gentiles. It is one holy law that condemns and curses transgressors, Jew and Gentile alike. Sin is a transgression of the law, and so sin is the same, whether Jew or Gentile; and the law must be fulfilled, and its curse borne, as much for one as for the other.

I have not been aiming to say any other things than Moses and the prophets and apostles did say should come; and it seems to me that the whole subject of salvation by grace, through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus, rests upon this basis of the alienation of all the human family from the holy requirements of God's law. We shall not fathom the depth of the riches of redeeming grace until we fathom the depth of the pit and of the mire where there is no standing. If I have advanced anything in this or in the former letter that has not been understood and accepted as truth by Old School Baptists generally, I am not aware of it. I have this faith in them, that they desire to know and believe and walk in the truth.

E. RITTENHOUSE.

CANTON, Texas, Feb. 3, 1891.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—As it is too cold and disagreeable to do out-of-doors work this morning, I desire to write a few lines in connection with an article written by me more than a year ago, and published in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, Vol. lviii., No. 17; or rather I desire to continue that article. I thought I would have done so long ago; but a felt sense of my weakness and inability to write, either for the comfort, consolation, instruction or edification of my brethren, has caused me to delay until now.

After uniting with the church in 1851, at the age of thirteen years, I had to endure many slighting remarks from my young comrades, which caused me to fear more and more that I had reproached him whom I desired to serve and reverence; but alone by the grace of God I was kept from sinning myself out of the fellowship of my brethren. Thus I was led by the unseen hand of God through doubts and fears, darkness and discouragement, always desiring to do the will of my Master; but how to perform that which was good I could find not. I was thoroughly taught that in me, that is, in my flesh, dwells no good thing. I verily thought that all the brethren and sisters were better than I was, and that none of them had the dark seasons, doubts and fears that I had. I thought that preachers were special objects of God's care, love and mercy. I thought they always felt good, and were strangers to doubts and fears and a barren mind. They seemed to me at all times to be filled with the good things of the kingdom, and ready to comfort the downcast and afflicted, such as I felt to be. Having this erroneous idea of preachers, I thought of all things in this world I would rather be a Primitive Baptist preacher than anything else; but in the year 1863, during the late war, while I was in the army, in camp at Wartrace, Tennessee, I hope the Lord showed me the awful responsibility which those tempest-tossed burden-bearers are under, and the awfully grand and sovereign tribunal before which they receive the charge to preach the word, to be instant out of season, to reprove, rebuke, with all long-suffering and doctrine. The impression made upon my mind at that time to preach the gospel of the Son of God gave me great trouble of mind, and caused a closer examination of self, if possible, than ever before. I could not find in me even one qualification of a preacher. My sinfulness and imperfections, in place of diminishing, seemed to double. I was naturally ignorant, was illiterate, and, like Moses, slow of speech and of a stammering tongue. Many times did I leave the noise and confusion of the camp and seek the quietude of the forest, to endeavor to ask God to relieve me of the impression, for by this time I had begun to feel like I would rather be almost anything in the world than a preacher; but in spite of all my efforts to throw off the impression it stayed with me, sometimes seeming to me to be almost unbearable.

After the war was ended I returned home to my little family (wife and one child), and in the fall of 1866 moved to Texas, and again engaged in farming in a new country, where I hoped to gain enough of this world's goods to make me independent of actual necessities. After I had settled in Texas, on inquiry I heard there was a Primitive Baptist Church ten miles east of me called Hickory Grove, and one eight miles west of me called Bluff Springs. I visited those churches, and found them to be of the same faith and order of the Baptists I had left in Alabama. I united by letter with the church at Bluff Springs. After this the Salem Church was constituted in my immediate neighborhood, of which church I was a constituent member. During all this time the impression to preach, which I had hoped to leave in Alabama, with all the troubles, doubts and fears that it had given me, I found had come with me to Texas, and remained with me, which I kept a profound secret. I did not even tell my wife of it; but many have been the times that I have left the meeting-house with an aching heart and a bowed head, under a consciousness of having failed to even try to discharge what I felt to be my duty, and at the same time fearing it was not my duty, and more especially when our pastor would fail to meet with us. The brethren would sit around and talk over their temporal affairs until the time had passed for the preacher to come, when some brother would say, "Well, brethren, brother C. is not coming to-day; let us break up and go home. I don't think it is any use to wait longer." Not wanting to make myself officious nor conspicuous, I would acquiesce in the proposition; and so we would break up without a song, a public prayer, or a word of exhortation, and without holding a conference. I would mope off home with a heavy heart, feeling condemned, and would resolve that I would not do so any more; but I did do so again and again, until finally I had a dream, which was this. I dreamed that I and an uncle of mine (who was a preacher, and very old) were traveling on a very large, white beast, and before I awoke I dreamed the interpretation of my dream, which was that my uncle's time in the ministry was nearly out, and I had to come in behind him and take his place. If I ever prayed earnestly and sincerely in my life it was then and there in my sleep, for the Lord to put it on somebody else, for I could not do the work. In my distress I awoke from sleep, and tried to console myself with the thought that it was only a dream; but it made an impression on my mind that has not yet been erased. Yet I kept these things all to myself, until in process of time there was what we call a district meeting held at the Salem Church. After the business of the meeting was over on Friday, and before adjournment, some of the old brethren, and among them my father, arose, tottering, and steadying himself on his cane, gave a short exhortation on the discharge of christian duty, speaking of the gifts to the church that were in all probability kept hidden for lack of proper and necessary encouragement from the church. This aroused in me a sad, heavy, restless feeling that I never have had language to describe. That night I did not sleep much, but promised again that if opportunity offered I would try to take up the cross, and trust God to give the ability; so on Sunday, there being but two preachers at the meeting, my uncle, James Loden, above referred to, was appointed to preach in the forenoon. He stood but a few minutes, said he could not preach, and took his seat. Brother J. Castleberry, the pastor of the church, who was appointed to preach in the afternoon, arose and referred to the remarks made by the brethren on Friday, and said if there was a brother present that felt like talking or offering prayer, he had never known a more necessary time. He picked up a hymn book and offered it promiscuously to the brethren; and before I was hardly conscious of what I was doing I arose, took the book, and almost unconsciously turned to hymn No. 348, Lloyd's Collection, and read it. I made a short talk, gave out the hymn, the brethren sang it, and I tried for the first time in life to pray publicly; and if I had felt from that day till this like I did that evening and night, I never would have exposed my ignorance to the world any more. During that evening I felt a quiet, easy, peaceful mind that is beyond description. I felt like I had done all that was required of me. The burden was gone, and I was at rest. This was in the summer of 1874. In November following I moved to Erath Co., Texas, a distance of two hundred and fifty miles, among strangers, and thought I never would expose my ignorance in public any more; but after a short time a church was constituted in the neighborhood, and I was one of the constituent members. Brother F. W. Harvy was chosen pastor. One day, after brother Harvy had finished preaching, he said if any of the brethren had a word of admonition or exhortation they were at liberty to speak. I arose and told the brethren that I could not preach, neither could I get rid of the impression to try. I quoted the text, "Go home to thy friends, and tell them what great things the Lord hath done for thee, and hast had compassion on thee." I made a short talk. This was my second attempt. I again realized that sweet peace of mind, but the burden returned. I kept trying to preach, and promising myself to quit trying, until July, 1879, when the church called for my ordination. I told them I thought they were too hasty, that I did not think I possessed the necessary qualifications, and that ordination would not add anything to my gift; and as to liberty, I had all I wanted. I felt that I was too sin-defiled and polluted to handle the ordinances of the house of God; but, despite my entreaties, the church persisted in her course, and at the next conference had a presbytery present, composed of Elders W. S. Harris, L. W. Harvy, Deacons F. Harris and G. B. Harvy, and I was set apart to the full functions of the ministry, unworthy as I felt. It is yet a mystery to me that the brethren give me the hearty welcome among them, and the patient hearing, that they do. I have not yet quit doubting my call to the ministry. I sometimes think, Surely a man that is called and qualified of God to preach the unsearchable riches of Christ does not have the doubts and fears, the troubles and perplexities, that I have. I get so faithless and worldly minded sometimes that it causes me much grief and trouble of mind. As to this world's goods, I am very poor, and think sometimes that if I do not stay at home closer and attend to my business we will suffer for the necessities of life. At other times the fog is all blown away, and I have no fears of that sort. I think sometimes that if I could only know of a certainty that the Lord had called me to the work I would freely turn my back upon the world, with all its flattering charms; for our Redeemer has promised to be with such always, even unto the end of the world.

Now, brethren, if what I have written are not some of the dealings of the Lord with his ministers, I confess that I do not know anything about it; and if to feel the weight of the worth of immortal souls at heart, that by my preaching some poor sinner will be saved, that would otherwise be everlastingly damned in hell, is a call to the ministry, I again confess that I do not know anything about it. The work of saving sinners from everlasting punishment is no part of my business. I undertook to save one once, and made such a complete failure that I quit the business. I believe that the salvation of the whole church of Christ was completed when he expired on the cross, bowed his head, and said, "It is finished." All the prayers and groans of all the camp-meetings and protracted meetings that ever have been, or ever will be, never can add one to the number chosen in Christ and redeemed by him; neither can one man preach eternal life into another. Christ said that the Father had given him power over all flesh, that he should give eternal life to as many as the Father had given him. Then he tells us what eternal life is. "And this is life eternal, that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent." Then the right and power to give this knowledge is vested wholly and alone in Christ, and it cannot be taught to man by man. Christ said to Peter, "Feed my sheep;" not make sheep out of goats, but "Feed my sheep." Inspiration says, "Feed the church of God, over the which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers."

Brethren Beebe, this is submitted for your inspection; but knowing its imperfections as I do, if it should find its way into the waste-basket instead of the press I shall neither feel disappointed nor offended.

As ever, yours in humble hope,
FRANK LODEN.

OPELIKA, Ala., Feb. 19, 1891.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—Again I feel a desire to communicate some thoughts to the readers of the SIGNS, provided you think they are worthy to be published. I fear sometimes that it may be I write too much; but my intention is good, for it means the praise of God. My desire is that it may comfort the dear children of God, who are scattered over the country, where the SIGNS finds a welcome in the homes of the saints. I have seen some vituperations against the SIGNS, and why is it so? Is it because it sets forth sound doctrine? Is it possible that the time is come in the house of God when they will not endure sound doctrine, but will heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears, and will turn away their ears from the truth? I have been a reader of the SIGNS for some time. It certainly expresses my views in regard to doctrine, and its columns abound with rich experiences from the saints in all parts of the United States and Canada. It is a medium of correspondence to the household of faith. I do not think it can be called a fomentor of strife, neither a source of confusion. It has never so occurred to me.

These are a few of the thoughts that I have felt like I wanted to offer; but what I thought most of writing about is the Scriptures, which are given us as the testimony of God, which makes wise the simple. We do not understand, as some do, that eternal life is in the Scriptures. It is possible that some may overestimate the Scriptures, and esteem them above what they are. I trust I would not say anything that would lead any one to think that I so undervalued them, for I do not. I revere God in his word, but I understand there is a difference between God's living word and the Scriptures of truth. The Scriptures are but a transcript, a record handed down to us; but unless the living word is written in our hearts we will be sure not to appreciate the Scriptures. When the living word is not written in our hearts, out of blind zeal we may worship the Scriptures, and deify that which is not God, and thereby become idolaters; and I hold that one form of idolatry is as evil and hateful to God as any other. When Joshua exhorted the children of Israel he told them to choose that day whom they would serve, whether the gods of the Amorites, or the gods which their fathers worshiped beyond the flood, since they decided first that it was evil to serve the Lord. Then this choice was placed before them. So it is to-day, that the worship of one of the false gods in itself is as good as another. When the missionary came back from Africa and told of his dying convert, he said she died with the Bible in her embrace, and her trust was in that. What was she bettered? Had she not been as well off worshiping stocks and stones as worshiping a book, although it were the Scriptures? Such is the spirit of the idolatry of this age; and people are squandering their thousands in such vain show of false religion, or vain religion, as we may justly style it. They call Old School Baptists fogies, because they take no stock in their machines. We had a thousand times better be behind than to make proselytes, and they be two fold more the children of hell than those who made them. We understand that "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness; that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." Paul also told Timothy that the Scriptures were able to make him wise unto salvation. These things were written aforetime for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the Scriptures might have hope. We understand also that all reference in the New Testament to the Scriptures means the Old Testament Scriptures, for the New was not then written. Christ often referred to the Scriptures, showing the necessity of their being fulfilled. "Thus it is written, and thus it behooved Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day; and that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem." We believe the Scriptures are true; yet we are able to distinguish between what is true in the letter, and the Spirit of truth by which they were written. Jesus said, "I am the truth;" but you cannot say that the Scriptures are Christ. If so, then there could be no harm in worshiping them; but they are a creature, and we are not to worship the creature, but the Creator.

I cannot expect in so short an article to bring out all the thoughts about the Scriptures, but such as will tend to edify, comfort and instruct us. If indeed the Scriptures are for our learning, we learn some things, yea, and all the things, pertaining to our salvation here. We learn the forbearance of God, his everlasting mercy, his boundless goodness, and his everlasting love to his people. Especially do we learn this when we read the history of his people under the law dispensation, and even a part of their history was written before the giving of the law at mount Sinai; for he revealed himself to the patriarchs, Enoch, Lamech, Noah, and after the flood to the sons of Noah, to Abraham, Lot, and to the twelve sons of Jacob.

Thus we have a particularized history of God's dealings with that special people, and also how he did to other nations, who were not his chosen people. How much we are able to learn—to know that even Moses, who was the meekest of men, was a man like us, and the only difference was what God made; and how, although Moses was instructed in all the wisdom of Egypt, yet Aaron, who had worked at the brick-kiln, should be spokesman for Moses; the necessity of the law, the manner of its giving, and the circumstances under which it was given. How needful that his people should first be delivered from Egypt before they were fit to be under law to God. It also teaches us the weakness and unprofitableness of the flesh, and also the unprofitableness of the law toward working righteousness in the sinner. These types, shadows and symbols were needful, and were given. Here God revealed himself in his law character to his people; and how needful is that in God's economy of grace.

The Old Testament Scriptures set forth Christ also; for the lamb and sacrifice all pointed to Christ, the Lamb of God. We may here observe the poverty of these things; but then we remember that a figure represents a value, but is not the value itself. Then they subserved the purpose intended. Types, shadows and symbols were not enough, but prophets with the word of inspiration must also be used; and it may be truly and justly said that Jesus was the burden of prophecy. Even language fails to express the fullness and perfection of Christ, who was the bright and morning star, the first-born of every creature. The Scriptures give account of all these things; but if we have not the witness in us how empty to us all these things are. If we are legalists, like the Jews, the veil remains untaken away until this day when Moses is read; and O how much reading of Moses there is, and how often the letter only of the Scriptures is known! Yet we are taught, and we know it by sad experience, that the letter killeth, but the Spirit maketh alive. Then how needful the spirit of these things in us, that we may ever properly appreciate the Scriptures, that we may give them that which is due, and to know it is a record of the will of God concerning us. It is a glorious volume, one that we hope we love. We can meditate upon it, and enter its pages with profit to us. The christian loses by not reading it as a book, both the Old and New Testaments. Both alike are from God, and are true, and are words of wisdom; and the man who has read them often, and meditated thereon, being a thoughtful reader, has profited thereby. The proper understanding of the word is from God. It is said that Jesus opened the understanding of the disciples, that they might understand the Scriptures; for it is known that Moses and the prophets did write of him, and the psalmist also wrote of him. We, though born of the Spirit, must have our understanding opened, that we may understand these things. The gift is of the Spirit, the Guide, who shall guide his people into all the truth. The anointing of the Spirit teaches us all things that are needful for us to know; for the office of the Spirit is to take of the things of Jesus and show them unto us. When we see these things in the light of the Spirit how beautiful are the glorious things of Christ. Then we are ready to talk of his kingdom and tell of his power. How sublime and deep are the wonderful things of Christ Jesus, our King of kings and Lord of lords.

I will close here, hoping that some things referred to will refresh our minds, and give us some comfort in the gospel of Christ.

Yours in hope,

W. LIVELY.

WELLSFORD, Kan., March 4, 1891.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—I see in the SIGNS of January 21st, 1891, a request by T. J. Baldwin for my views on Rev. xx. 4. I also received a card from J. M. Duley, of Paducah, Ky., asking me to comply with the request. The quotation reads, "And I saw thrones, and they sat upon them; and judgment was given unto them. And I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and which had not worshiped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands; and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years." I will say that my views on the above quotation have never been made public, and likely would not now, had they not been called for, from the fact that I know my views differ from the views of the Baptists generally; and I never want to advance anything without some reason for it. Now what I may write on this subject will only be my views; and as they have been called for, I will give them as briefly as possible.

"And I saw thrones;" which could not mean the throne of God, for it is used in the plural. I think the thrones brought to view here are in the church of Christ. Throne, I understand, means a high position; as it is said in Heb. iv. 16, "Let us therefore come boldly unto the throne of grace," &c. Also Luke xxii. 30, "That ye may eat and drink at my table in my kingdom, and sit on thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel." It does not say who sat upon the thrones, but it says that judgment was given unto them; and I think the pronoun them refers to God's people in the kingdom; as it is said in 1 Peter iv. 17, "For the time is come that judgment must begin at the house of God," &c. 1 Cor. vi. 2, 3, "Do ye not know that the saints shall judge the world?" "Know ye not that we shall judge angels?" Now I am not looking for a judgment like thousands of people are who believe that Christ must first come and judge the people before he will know who will be counted worthy of heaven; for if Christ learns something in time that he did not know in eternity, will it not be new to him? He "declared the end from the beginning, and from ancient times the things that are not yet done, saying, My counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure." If God is perfect in wisdom, there can be nothing new nor old to him. If God declared the end from the beginning, as he says he did, was there anything from the beginning to the end that was not declared? If one of God's creatures performs one act that God did not know in eternity, will it not be new to him if he ever finds it out? And I would just as soon believe that God's creatures would perform thousands of acts that God never would know, as to believe that they would perform one that he did not know in eternity. Let me ask the question, If God knew every act of man (which every one must admit), can man act different from the way God knew he would? "Then shall ye return, and discern between the righteous and the wicked, between him that serveth God and him that serveth him not."—Malachi iii. 18. The righteous and the wicked were both together in the Jewish church, and one was not required to do anything that the other could not do; but when Christ came in the end of the Jewish world, to set up his spiritual kingdom, the order of things became changed; and when they began to come to John's baptism, the judgment began. He began to separate the righteous from the wicked; and the judgment is still going on, and will continue until the end.

"And I saw the souls of them that were beheaded, for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God." Now I believe that man is composed of spirit, soul and body, as is brought to view in 1 Thess. v. 23. But it would seem from Job xii. 10 that every living thing has a soul. I know that the word soul is generally understood (or by a great many at least) to mean an immortal part of man; but such is not the case one time in ten in the Bible. Now I will give one instance, referring to Matt. xvi. 26; also Mark viii. 36. "For what shall it profit a man if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?" Now turn to Luke ix. 25. "For what is a man advantaged, if he gain the whole world, and lose himself, or be cast away?" This proves that man is called soul. See Rev. vi. 9. "And when he had opened the fifth seal, I saw under the altar the souls of them that were slain for the word of God, and for the testimony which they held." I think the souls that John saw were the people of God that testified of the truth and suffered themselves to be put to death in every cruel manner rather than to swerve from the true principles of the gospel. Some of those witnesses had their eyes bored out, and their tongues pierced through with a hot iron; some were burned at the stake, some were thrown to wild beasts, and hundreds were marched into the flames.

"And which had not worshiped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads or in their hands." I understand the beast in the text to be antichrist in the many forms he has been presented. "Here is wisdom. Let him that hath understanding count the number of the beast, for it is the number of a man; and his number is six hundred thee score and six."—Rev. xiii. 18. I think the six hundred and sixty-six is the number of systems to be set up by antichrist. Then I think antichrist will be complete; and they are all in opposition to the truth, and ever have been. Everything that comes dressed in the garb of religion, unauthorized by the Bible, is of antichrist. And they are now peddling what they call gospel, and are making merchandise of the people (2 Peter ii. 3), and also making merchandise of the house of God.—John ii. 16. "And they worshiped the beast, saying, Who is like unto the beast? Who is able to make war with him?"—Rev. xiii. 4. "And all that dwell upon the earth shall worship him, whose names are not written in the book of life of the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world." But the people of God, who are brought to view in the text, had not worshiped the beast, nor his image, neither had received the mark. No man could buy or sell except they had the mark or the name of the beast. But those that received the mark of the beast were deceived by the miracles wrought by the false prophet.

"And they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years." I believe that when John was in the isle of Patmos he saw things concerning the kingdom of Christ even unto the end of time: and I believe the souls that John saw were the bodies of the saints of God; for in the fifth verse he says, "But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished. This is the first resurrection." I believe in a millennium, which means that Christ will reign on earth a thousand years. But the devil is first to be chained, and continue to be bound for a thousand years; and I do not think the time spoken of that the devil is to be bound has yet come. Rev. xx. 6 Reads, "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years?" It is an evident fact that there are two resurrections, and those that have part in the first resurrection are blessed and holy. "And the dead in Christ shall rise first."—1 Thess. iv. 16. And I am of the impression that the resurrection spoken of in Rev. xx. 12 is the resurrection of the wicked only. "And I saw the dead, small and great;" not righteous and wicked, but small and great; and they were judged every man according to their works, or received the sentence of condemnation; for he that believeth not is condemned already. But if the righteous have (every man) to be judged according to their works, I ask, Who will be saved? Do any of the children of God, when they look back over their past life, conclude that if they have to be judged according to their works they will still have a hope of heaven? I think that I can answer for all; and none of them claim a home in heaven because of their obedience, but because of the obedience of Christ.

In hope of eternal life through the righteousness of Christ,

[WHILE it would not be profitable to surrender our columns to a protracted discussion of the subject presented in the following letter, we trust that our readers will not object to the publication of this review of our article on "Worldly Societies," as published on page 55, current volume of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. We are willing to leave the subject for the consideration of the brethren, as we have no disposition to engage in a fruitless controversy on the matter. May the Spirit lead us all in the way of truth and uprightness.—ED.]

BRETHREN BEEBE:—As a reader of the SIGNS I have often been comforted by the published travels of christian pilgrims, and strengthened by the preaching of the gospel of Christ through its columns. I have watched with much interest the tone of its teaching, both by editors and correspondents, and for years have found little to criticise or condemn as unsound. Sometimes questions or queries are propounded to the editors, or some other brother believed to have a special gift for teaching, which require great care in answering, lest an error on the right hand or another on the left hand be indorsed. It is needless to say that a difference of opinion may exist between contending parties, and neither be right, but in no case can both be right; hence the need of caution in taking sides between disputants.

I have been led to these reflections by an editorial on page 55, in reply to brother Melton, of Nebo, Illinois. The inquirer, it seems, is surrounded by neighbors who feel that "organization" is needed among those who "eat bread by the sweat of their own faces," to protect themselves against the schemes of those who live in luxury by the "sweat of other people's faces." The Bible student will remember the words of Paul, "If any will not labor, neither shall they eat." The organizations referred to by brother Melton consider questions of human statutes, and systems and institutions growing out of such statutes. In other words, they consider political questions. In a Republic every citizen may lawfully express his views upon governmental policy, and persuade, if he can, others to join him in securing their adoption. I know of no Baptist who is indifferent to the character of the government to which we pay tribute, and of which in return we expect protection from the wrong doer. Baptists, so far as I am acquainted with them, prefer a rule of even-handed justice to laws that favor some at the expense of others. Like other people, however, they are not all agreed upon the best means to secure the end desired. While they may and do differ thus, it is not a bar of fellowship at all; neither should it be, so long as the purpose in view is not in conflict with God's holy law, "Love the Lord thy God supremely, and thy neighbor as thyself." I regret that in replying to brother Melton the following thought was not adhered to to the end: "With regard to the organizations named by our inquiring brother, as we have no knowledge of their characteristics, of course we are not in a position to say anything." In following the suggestions of brother Beebe I find, however, that by inference he judges these organizations to be against the peace and harmony of the church of Christ. Would not the same reasoning deter a follower of Jesus from acting with any political organization, or accepting any office by the votes of such party? Before the elevation of David to the throne of Israel we find him in the cave of Adullam, consorting with "every one that was in distress, and every one that was in debt, and every one that was discontented;" "and he became a captain over them." It was not popular to be the friend of David then; but great things had God in store for Israel through this little son of Jesse.

But to return to our subject. Is it wise for the SIGNS OF THE TIMES to take sides for or against any political movement? I do not think this is its object or purpose. Unless brother Beebe counsels his brethren to take no part in the affairs of society, to eschew politics of any kind, it would be well to know the character of what is condemned before condemning. True, the peace and safety of God's little ones is of more importance "than a lifetime of selfish exultation in the maintenance of personal rights, and the satisfaction of having his own way;" but certainly brother Beebe does not intend to condemn as "disturbers of the peace of Zion" the christians who from love of human liberty and "equal rights before the law" have by voice, pen or vote opposed every form of oppression and injustice. While the Scriptures teach subjection to the powers that be, we may not construe this to mean that in a Republic the citizen is forbidden to labor for the substitution of just for unjust laws.

Christ and Paul were both accused of being pestilent fellows, stirring up sedition among the people, because they denounced kingcraft and priestcraft, which "laid grievous burdens on other men's shoulders, which they would not touch with one of their fingers." I have never met a Baptist who blamed our forefathers for severing (even through armed rebellion) the old-time connection between church and state, and establishing civil liberty as well; and yet these things were accomplished by organized effort, directed by the God of battles, the Lord of hosts. It seems to me that we should not condemn, by direct charge nor by insinuation, our brethren who may unite with their neighbors for promoting the general welfare, until we know that their methods are immoral, or in conflict with God's law. Can I justly be charged with sowing discord among brethren because in the exercise of my rights and the discharge of my duties as a citizen of my country I may not be able to convince all my brethren that my way is best? I cannot think so; but rather attach blame to him who questions the right of his brother to differ with him touching social questions. The SIGNS OF THE TIMES has more than once, and I think very properly, warned its readers against schemes to abridge, by human statutes, personal liberty, or the rights of conscience. Let us be careful how we condemn our brethren for trying to maintain by peaceful and lawful means the natural, God-given right to live, be free, and pursue happiness.

These thoughts are not written in a fault-finding spirit, but I trust as a friend and brother, to caution. God forbid that I should offend even the least of his little ones. May his Spirit of love and good will guide and direct us ever, is the prayer of your little brother,

JOHN SEITZ.

EXPIRATION OF ONE DOLLAR SUBSCRIPTIONS.

WITH each issue of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES a number of subscriptions expire of those who were placed on our list last year at one dollar. We have supplied them the paper at an actual loss, and cannot afford to continue them long over time on an uncertainty of their renewing at regular rates. Please look to your date, and if your time is out renew immediately, or we shall be obliged to discontinue your name. If you are not now prepared to send the money, but would like to have your subscription continued, if you will so inform us we will continue your paper, and wait a reasonable time for the pay.

BACK NUMBERS EXHAUSTED.

GRACE AND WORKS.

(Concluded from last number.)

"FOR by grace are ye saved through faith: and that not of yourselves; it is the gift of God; not of works, lest any man should boast."—Eph. ii. 8, 9.

"I know thy works; behold, I have set before thee an open door, and no man can shut it; for thou hast a little strength, and hast kept my word, and hast not denied my name."—Rev. iii. 8.

"Not of works, lest any man should boast." While the advocates of the doctrine of conditional salvation do not boldly deny the truth so emphatically presented in our text, they endeavor to make it appear that in some way the good deeds of men are effective in securing for them an interest in the grace of God, by which they must be saved. The infinite wisdom and foreknowledge of God appears in the anticipation and positive refutation of every argument which can ever be brought against the truth that salvation is by grace alone. No conditional system can stand before this inspired declaration. Neither can there be any grace in that salvation which is suspended upon works to be performed by the subject who is to be saved. If the sinner must comply with any conditions whatever, when he has done what was required he is entitled to demand the reward of his service. That reward is due to him in consideration of the conditions which he has fulfilled; and justice would be outraged by the withholding of the wages rightfully earned by the work which he has rendered. When a man offers a valuable farm for the labor of an hour, the purchaser who gives that labor has bought the farm just as much as if the price had been ten thousand dollars, and he had paid that sum. In neither case would there be any grace in the transaction, since grace is unmerited favor. In the gift of God, by which the saints are saved through the faith which is itself the gift of God, there is no room for anything but divine grace from beginning to end. The introduction of conditions upon which the benefit of this grace should be received, would necessarily exclude the principle of grace; since there could be no unmerited favor in rewarding the sinner for obedience to those conditions. And there can be no meritorious work of the sinner without his having ground for boasting in its accomplishment. There cannot be a mixture between grace and works in the salvation of sinners. The two principles cannot be united, for they are necessarily opposed to each other. So Paul says of the election of grace, "And if by grace, then is it no more of works; otherwise grace is no more grace. But if it be of works, then it is no more grace, otherwise work is no more work."—Rom. xi. 6. The Spirit of truth moved the apostle thus positively to set the seal of divine condemnation upon the theory of salvation as being dependent upon works to be performed by the sinner, for the reason assigned in our text, "lest any man should boast." No conditional theory has ever been devised by which the sinner is forbidden to glory in his own works. If he is saved in consideration of any merit in himself, he is certainly entitled to claim credit for that merit. Then he might justly exult in himself to that extent, and ascribe his salvation to his own compliance with the necessary condition. Upon that ground there could be no grace in the case at all, since it would be manifestly unjust to withhold the salvation which was the reward of the sinner's works. And according to any conditional system, the saved sinner might justly boast of his fulfillment of the necessary conditions, and reproach others for failing to do as well as he had done. The whole epistle in which this text is recorded, gives evidence that the declaration under consideration refers to the salvation of those addressed, from the sin and death under which they had been justly condemned. In this salvation nothing can be manifested but the infinite grace of God as it is revealed in Jesus Christ who alone is the Savior of his people from their sins. In compliance with the request of our inquiring friend, we pass to the examination of the second passage on which he desires our views.

"I know thy works." This expression is included in the address of each of the letters which John was commanded to write to the angels of the seven churches. Not only were the churches designated composed of avowed believers in the gospel of divine grace as revealed in Jesus Christ, who is unquestionably the dictator of each message, but they were recognized as organized churches, and addressed through the pastors, or angels, assigned to them by their Lord, who holds them as stars in his own right hand, subject to his direction and power. It is evident that the messages are peculiarly appropriate to the particular angels to whom they are specially directed. In view of this fact, it is of serious importance to observe that the faults and disorders prevailing in those churches are charged upon their angels. Recognition of this solemn responsibility resting upon those who occupy that official relation to the churches of Jesus Christ, may well prompt them to inquire, with Paul, "Who is sufficient for these things?" The Lord will in no case hold the angel (that is, messenger, or pastor) guiltless, while the church under his charge is defiled by any of the disorders denounced in these seven messages. Another important point in these messages demands special attention. While serious disorders are reproved in five of these messages, the disorderly angels and churches are still recognized as subjects of the holy King of saints. Notwithstanding their departure from his law, the Lord still loves them with his everlasting love, and therefore, he says, "As many as I love, I rebuke and chasten; be zealous therefore, and repent." Whether they are walking in the Spirit, and denying themselves, or living after the flesh, the Lord knows their works. To such as love and fear his name this must be an awfully solemn consideration. Certainly under the realization of this unceasing watchfulness of their Lord, no saint can think it a light matter to yield his members servants to sin by living after the flesh. The disobedience of a natural child would be restrained by the consciousness that the eye of his father was upon him; how much more shall those in whose heart God has implanted his love, be moved to continual watchfulness over their actions by the assurance of their every work and word being known to him! This is the conclusive refutation of the charge that the doctrine of salvation by grace gives encouragement to the saints to continue in sin. Those who love righteousness need neither the fear of punishment, nor the hope of reward, as an inducement to hunger and thirst after it. It is their desire to be perfectly conformed to the law of holiness, which is life and peace to them. Therefore they rejoice that all their works are known unto the Lord; and that he knows their frame, and remembers that they are dust. The assurance of this declaration, "I know thy works," is both a continual admonition and an abiding consolation to them.

The works which are condemned in this church in Philadelphia are evidently such as God worketh in his saints both to will and to do of his good pleasure. No other works are acceptable in his sight. Since they are not produced by the depraved will of the sinner, they are not polluted and vile, as are all the works which can originate in the sinful heart of man. The difference between these works, which are commended by our Lord, and the best efforts of the sinner, is in their origin. All the works which are produced by the natural mind are necessarily sinful, because they spring from a sinful source. It is manifest that such works can never result in saving any one from sin. But the obedience of the saints is wrought in them by the Spirit of holiness, and is therefore acceptable to God. There is all the difference between sin and holiness, to distinguish between the best action of the natural mind, and the obedience of the saints to the law of Christ. The works of the will of man can never attain to the righteousness of God; but the holy Spirit of obedience to the law of Christ moves the saints to such works as display the power of his divine grace, leading them to glorify God in their body and in their spirit, which are God's. By such works the evidence is presented that those in whom they are wrought are indeed led by the Spirit of God, and are the sons of God. Herein consists the distinction between the works commended in this message to the angel of the church in Philadelphia, and such works as sinners suppose will tend to save them from condemnation under the righteous judgment of justice of God. The character addressed in the text now under consideration, are recognized as already saved from their sins by the precious blood of Christ. This salvation is exclusively by grace, and no works of their own have any part in securing it to them. They are now no more under the law of sin and death, being made free therefrom by the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus. Their works are now wrought in them by the Spirit of truth, and are according to the law of Christ, which rules in their hearts.

"Behold, I have set before thee an open door, and no man can shut it." Our friend will notice that this clause of the text is very definite. The Lord emphasizes the assertion by calling special attention to it. "Behold!" It is important that there be no mistake in regard to this matter. Not even the angel who is approved in the address, can claim to have opened this door. "I have set before thee an open door." This is not to be construed as meaning that this door is a way to escape hell and enter heaven. Let it not be forgotten that the address is directly to an angel of one of his own churches. The door is not simply on hinges which they must turn in order to avail themselves of its benefit. He has set it open, and it is his will that it should be open before the very one to whom the message is sent. This open door is the entrance into the joys of the Lord, which is realized only in the answer of a good conscience toward God. It is never found by any saint except when his works are in obedience to the word of the Lord. Jesus himself taught this truth in his own preaching, "For every one that doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, lest his deeds should be reproved. But he that doeth truth cometh to the light, that his deeds may be made manifest, that they are wrought in God."—John iii. 20, 21. Since all the obedience of the saints is wrought in them by the Spirit of Christ, it is only by his grace that this open door is set before them. They can claim no credit as due to themselves even when they obey the commandments of their King. It is by this grace alone that they are so highly favored as to enjoy this great privilege. Therefore they gladly confess that their Lord has set before them this open door; "For through him we both [Jews and Gentiles] have access by one Spirit unto the Father."—Eph ii. 18. Since all power is given unto Jesus in heaven and in earth, he has unlimited control over all creatures and events, and has the keys even to hell and death. Certainly, therefore, none can shut the door which he has set open before his obedient saints.

"For thou hast a little strength, and hast kept my word, and hast not denied my name." This is not given as the reason, or procuring cause, of the mercy bestowed upon the church addressed; but it is the "open door" itself, which the Lord has set before the favored subjects of his grace. Since the Lord is the strength of Israel, it is evident that none of his saints have any strength but that which he bestows in love upon them. Even Paul dared not claim that he had of himself labored and suffered more abundantly than others; but says, it was "Yet not I, but the grace of God which was with me."—1 Cor. xv. 10. That same grace is manifested in all that is commended in the church in Philadelphia. The strength, endurance and faithfulness, all resulted from the grace by which the Lord set this open door before the church. There is important significance in the name of this favored church. The literal translation of this name is "The church in brotherly love." Wherever the church is in this heavenly place, at any time, all the commendation and assurance in this message belongs to that church; for "Love is the fulfilling of the law" in its spirit. She has a little strength, and has kept the word of her Lord, and has not denied his name. By that little strength she shall be enabled to stand against all the assaults of her adversaries, and shall rest unmoved upon the unchanging love and immutable counsel of her God. Although it must be "through much tribulation," she has free access by this open door into the "righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost," which constitute the kingdom of God, as it is revealed in the experience of the saints.—Rom. xiv. 17. Indeed, it is only in tribulation that the saints are brought into the fellowship of the sufferings of Christ. The great love of God is revealed in giving this fellowship to his ransomed people; and with this gift he bestows the little strength by which they are enabled to rejoice that they are counted worthy to be partakers of the sufferings of their beloved Redeemer.

While the saints are saved from sin and death exclusively by grace, without any works of their own, that salvation is manifested in them by the works of obedience to the commandments of their Lord, which his Spirit works in them both to will and to do. Since they are dependent upon divine grace for both the will and strength to do these works, there can be no room for boasting, or trust in themselves, in such works.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

BRETHREN BEEBE:—I am requested to send to you for publication the obituary notice of sister Catharine Patterson, and also that of her husband, D. H. Patterson, who survived her more than four years.

Sister Catharine was the eldest daughter and child of my father, Elder Lewis Seitz. She was born in Fairfield Co., Ohio, Jan. 15th, 1825. In September of the same year she was carried on horseback in mother's arms to Seneca County, then a wilderness of forest trees, where she remained with her parents until seventeen years of age, when she was married to D. H. Patterson. Two years later they moved upon a home of their own, but in the "woods." By industry and economy they accumulated enough in eighteen years to buy the home of her childhood, where they remained to her death, which occurred July 4th, 1886. She was received by baptism into the Honey Creek Church on the second Sunday in October, 1866, and remained a devoted and faithful attendant at all the meetings of the church of her choice. As wife and mother she was an example of love and fidelity; as a christian, warm, earnest, and relying ever upon the grace of God for time and eternity. A few years before her death she was stricken with sorrow by the death of three of her children, and seemed to have less cheer in the things of this life, though each of the departed left shining evidence of a happy change from the storms of time to that rest which remains to the people of God. While a sufferer from the sure work of disease for many months, she was patient to a remarkable degree, and death came as a welcome messenger, saying, "Child, your heavenly Father calls, Come home." We are confident that her voice will mingle with the songs of the redeemed, world without end.

Daniel H. Patterson was born Sept. 10th, 1818. His widowed mother (a Baptist) reared her family with a mother's care, impressing by precept and example the duties of life. The subject of this sketch was the eldest, and at an early age developed a character for carefulness and good judgment. These traits, coupled with a conscientious regard for the rights of others, distinguished him through life. As the son-in-law of Elder Seitz, of course he came often in contact with his "peculiar" friends and brethren, and thus had many opportunities to express his own views or hopes of eternal salvation; but while a close observer, and often an interested listener to gospel sounds, he was careful to ask questions, not to answer them. I, who knew him as a friend and counsellor for many years, had long believed him a child of grace, notwithstanding his studied reticence on this subject.

His rapt attention, beaming face and falling tears under the gospel's joyful sound spoke as eloquently as audible words could have done. After sister Catharine's connection with the church their house was always open to the brethren with a cheerful welcome; but he would not permit himself to be drawn out by any suggestions or questions, on the contrary almost resenting them as impertinent. But the crucial time came at last. When suffering from dropsy for many months he felt the end approaching. All human help without avail to stay the destroyer, his thoughts and prayers went up to the great Physician, who says, "Call upon me in the day of trouble, and I will deliver thee." I was with him in his last days, and found him not only reconciled to die, but rejoicing that death was near, as a gateway to pass him from a life of pain and sorrow to the blessedness of the life to come. Without reserve he spoke to his family and friends of the prospect before him; and at his request hymns of promise and solace were sung. After many days of extreme suffering he fell peacefully asleep, on Jan. 30th, 1891, aged 72 years, 4 months and 20 days.

Brother and sister Patterson, out of a family of twelve children born to them, leave five to think of father and mother, not as lost, but as gone before.

JOHN SEITZ.

TIFFIN, Ohio.

DIED—In the home of Mr. Wm. Mulock, in Cambridge, Md., on July 28th, 1890, Samuel Whitefield Mace.

It was my precious privilege to nurse my darling nephew during his sickness. He had typhoid fever. At times his fever was dangerously high, but he was blessed, in that it did not touch his brain. Twice during his sickness, when he was not suffering, he said, in a peculiarly solemn and impressive way, "Lord, have mercy upon me." In a low tone I said to my sister, "I believe that prayer is indited by the Holy Spirit, and is answered." I thought he would be restored to health. Alas for us! in the third week he had heart failure, and our darling, with all his bright worldly prospects, must go. I had many interesting conversations with him, and felt cheered to see the interest in his laughing brown eyes upon the everlasting, unchanging love of God. In a letter he said, "I am glad for you to write to me about the gospel that my mother loved." May his dear ones realize the wisdom and power of Israel's God.

ALSO,

DIED—March 5th, 1891, in the home of his sister, Mrs. John S. B. Woolford, Abel J. Rees, eldest son of John R. Rees.

Mr. Rees left his pleasant home in Kent County on Tuesday. After attending to business in Baltimore he crossed the Chesapeake Bay to visit his sister. On Sunday, while in the midst of a pleasant conversation at the supper table, he was stricken with apoplexy. He lived four nights and nearly four days, never speaking, and with very slight signs of consciousness, sleeping most of the time. On Thursday morning, to the joy of his devoted wife, sister and friends, it seemed that he might rally; but in a few moments our hopes were crushed, and we saw him gently pass away.

Mr. Rees was an honorable man, true in every relation in life. He never made a profession of religion, but we know that he heard and believed.—John v. 24. May his dear ones be comforted with the consolations of the gospel.

BROTHER Benjamin Peacock died of paralysis on Feb. 10th, 1891, in the 71st year of his age.

Brother Peacock experienced a hope about fifty years ago, was baptized by Elder Getchel (Free Will Baptist), and joined the New School Baptist Church of Gardiner. The food that he received from that church was husks; but he thought there were very few like him. He said he lived in this starving condition until the fall of 1868. He was permitted to hear the gospel preached by the Old School Baptists, and was made to rejoice in the goodness of God in permitting him to hear what his soul had longed for so many years. He was soon exercised about joining the church; and after hearing the gospel preached by Elders Badger, Whitehouse, Joseph L. Purington, Quint, and perhaps others, and hearing the brethren and sisters tell of the way they had been led, he told the members of the Bowdoinham Church the way the Lord had led him. He was received by the church, and baptized by Elder Campbell, and with others constituted what was called the Gardiner branch of the Bowdoinham Church. His house and heart were always open to all Old School Baptists. Although differing with some of his brethren on worldly matters, he was established in the doctrine of God our Savior. "Salvation is of the Lord" was his theme and hope. He seemed to know that he was near his end, and about a week before he died was made to rejoice in the presence of his Savior with him. He praised God, and told us that his old body was going down to dust, but that he was going to dwell with Jesus. He also said that he had no difference with any one, and freely forgave all, as he hoped and believed that he was forgiven.

He leaves a widow, two sons and five daughters, with grandchildren, the church, and many friends, to mourn; but we believe that he is at rest in the arms of his Savior.

J. H. LOWELL.

SOUTH GARDINER, MAINE.

PLEASE publish in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES the death of our dear sister, Elizabeth C. Hulsizer, which occurred March 8th, 1891, at her home in Franklin Township, Hunterdon Co., N. J.

Her last illness was only about a week's duration. Her disease was "La Grippe." She was in the 61st year of her age, and was never married. She was baptized more than twenty-two years ago by the late Elder Gilbert Beebe, in the fellowship of the Kingwood Church, N. J., where she retained her standing, not only in the church as a humble, orderly and worthy member, but she also lived in the hearts, love and fellowship of all her dear brethren and sisters. She, like her dear Lord, made herself of no repute, had no merits of her own;

"But self-condemned before his throne, Her hopes on Jesus placed."

I never heard anything expressed by her that savored of any fear on her part that the Lord would or could do any unrighteous act for which he should be blame-worthy; but that he was without iniquity, and just and right, though he loved Jacob and hated Esau. Her only song was a sinner saved, and God honored in that salvation. Through the few days of her last sickness she was fully convinced that her end was near; and as the friends told me, she calmly set about telling all her wishes regarding her earthly things, made particular arrangements about her funeral, who should preach, &c., and then till near the last was wonderfully blessed with precious views of things eternal. Many portions of Scripture were given her, which were dwelt upon and repeated with rapturous and strong delight.

She was laid in the tomb on the 12th inst., when the writer essayed to speak comfortably to the afflicted. She has left an aged and feeble mother, two sisters and two brothers to mourn their loss. May reconciling grace be so ministered to them that they shall say, "Thy will be done."

B. BUNDY.

OTEGO, N. Y., March 19, 1891.

DEPARTED this life March 6th, 1891, brother Thomas J. Rich, aged about 64 years, with tuberculous laryngitis.

Brother Rich was a good father and a devoted husband. He had been a member of the M. E. Church for a long time, up to 1890, when he became a Primitive Baptist, of which church his wife had been a member a long time. He was a good citizen, and will be missed by the community; but we would say to the dear family and friends, Weep not for him, as for those who have no hope.

He leaves a wife and nine children, with other relatives and friends, to grieve after him. May God in his love and mercy shield and protect the wife and little children from all harm, and bless them with all that is necessary for them; and may it be the pleasure of our ever-blessed God to reconcile us to his divine will, that we may realize more fully in all our afflictions and trials that his grace is sufficient. Yes, we rejoice when we know that our blessed Master has gone before; for he passed through death. Then cheer up, brethren, as he cleared the way for us. Yours in faith,

J. S. B.

ORDINATIONS.

A CALL having previously been made by the Friendship Church of Regular Predestinarian Baptists at Winchester, Ill., the following-named Elders and Deacons met as a presbytery at the said church on March 21st, 1891, for the purpose of ordaining brother GILES REEDER to the work of the gospel ministry, to wit:

Elder H. S. Peak, Exeter, Ill.; Elder N. Shepler, Murrayville, Ill.; Elder J. L. Ludwick, Roodhouse, Ill.; Elder A. W. Murray, Laclede, Mo.; Elders J. H. Taylor, G. W. Murray, Deacons James W. Reeder and Wm. Richards, Winchester, Ill.

Organized by choosing G. W. Murray Moderator, and H. S. Peak Clerk.

The presbytery being fully satisfied with the qualifications of brother Giles Reeder, proceeded to ordain him to the work whereunto God had called him.

Prayer by J. L. Ludwick.

Laying on of hands by the presbytery.

Charge by A. W. Murray.

Right hand of fellowship extended by the presbytery and church.

We heartily commend Elder Giles Reeder to the Baptists of our faith wherever in the providence of God his lot may be cast.

Done and signed this 21st day of March, 1891.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date, this date denotes the time at which your subscription expires, and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

THE EVERLASTING TASK FOR ARMINIANS.

By Elder William Gadsby, late of Manchester, England. We have republished a large edition of the above named very interesting and instructing pamphlet. Many thousands of copies have been scattered through England and America, and read with intense interest by the lovers of the truth, and still the demand has increased to such a degree as to induce us to present to the public this edition which we will send (postage paid by us) to any post-office address in the United States or Canada, at the following rates, viz: a single copy for 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00; 25 copies for $2.00; 50 copies for $3.00; 100 copies for $5.00.

At these low terms the cash must in all cases accompany the orders. Address

POETRY.

THE HEAVENLY LOVER.

AFTER the conflict's over,
When life's work is done,
Wilt thou, the heavenly Lover,
Then take me to thy home?
Home which thou hast prepared
For those from sin set free;
Prepared and cleansed and saved
Each one alone by thee.

Earthly homes are restful
For those who weary be;
But O! for such a sinner
Is there a home with thee?
A home where ne'er a sorrow
For any sin can be,
But where the ransomed sinner
Will give all praise to thee?

With earthly good surrounded
Each day I here may be;
Still oft my soul is clouded
That proof I cannot see,
When, after life is over,
I shall forever be
With thee, thou heavenly Lover,
Through all eternity.

O give some blessed token
That I am one of those
To whose heart thou hast spoken
When grief for sin arose,
And may I see more clearly,
Unworthy though I be,
That life eternal freely
Thou givest to such as me.

All praise to thee, the Giver
Of life eternally;
May I, the chief of sinners,
Be bless'd to reign with thee.
Then through the countless ages
Of rest and peace and love,
From thee, the heavenly Lover,
We nevermore shall rove.

THE HAPPY MAN.

HAPPY the man who, in this world of woe,
Where troubles spring and bitter waters
flow,
Enjoys the presence of his pard'ning God,
And is submissive 'neath his chast'ning rod.

While journeying homeward through a desert land
He feels the guidance of a Father's hand;
Though darkness oft o'erspread this earthly scene,
The soul is often peaceful and serene.

'Midst swelling waves and on a boisterous sea,
From fearful doubts and sad forebodings
free,
With joy at length he lands upon the shore
Where sin and sorrow shall be known no more.

O blessed Lord! thy people's guide and guard,
Their present portion and their great reward!
Be thou my hope, my help, my joy, my crown;
O keep me, save me, seal me for thine own.

CORRESPONDENCE.

BRANTFORD, Ont., Feb. 2, 1891.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—I feel that I would like to unburden a little of my heart to the SIGNS this morning. If you shall see fit to publish this, it must come under the heading of grace, in every sense of the word. The children of God are not their own, not having been "redeemed with corruptible things as silver and gold, from your vain conversation, received by tradition from your fathers; but with the precious blood of Christ, as of a Lamb without blemish and without spot, who verily was foreordained before the foundation of the world, but was manifest in these last times for you, who by him do believe in God, that raised him up from the dead, and gave him glory, that your faith and hope might be in God. And seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth through the Spirit, unto unfeigned love of the brethren, see that ye love one another with a pure heart fervently." Surely there is a world of meaning in this "obeying the truth through the Spirit;" for often when, as a poor child, I have sought to obey, and hoped I was guided by that Spirit, yet by reason of the clouds arising from the carnal mind, which is enmity against God, I could not discern which Spirit I had followed; and so in a sense the ceaseless inward prayer that the holy God would look upon all I did in grace (because he had made me to hope in that grace) was and is constantly arising. So also in a secondary sense I have no claim on this paper; for, as you know, I am not an Old School Baptist, but simply one who is looking for the presence and guidance of Christ in the wilderness of sin. I only mention this, lest I should appear to walk in a borrowed cloak, as but few of the family of the SIGNS have any knowledge of me; yet if I am privileged to have a little talk with them, I desire it may be, though ever so faintly, somewhat after the nature of that unfeigned love and pure heart which are only the fruit of the incorruptible seed of heavenly life. We have now been subscribers for just one year at the dollar rate, and have renewed at the standard price. The point of unity which drew me to it first was that distinctive truth or measure of spiritual light which in my language I call the doctrine of grace. I heard of your paper a year before, but decided to leave my mind untrammelled by any fresh line of teaching till I felt more established; for I steadfastly believed, and do yet believe, that wherever a soul is willing to follow the Lord whithersoever he goeth, whether through evil or good report, "He, the Spirit of truth, when he is come [into any poor heart], will guide us into all truth," even as he promised. Having at last been led out of much confusion, into a measure of understanding and confidence in the unconditional salvation of the elect church of Christ, according to the eternal purpose of God in Christ Jesus (and sure to be manifested in time to every chosen vessel of mercy by the operation of the Holy Spirit in their souls, every apparent hindrance only furthering his all-wise plan), I felt the abounding love of my heart going out to those who had before me been privileged to understand and lean upon this sure anchor of hope, and backward in tender yearning over those dear ones (to me) who were yet buffeted on the various winds of error. Now as I never believed in love that only shows itself in the tongue, I felt at once that my mite must go to spread what was shown to me as the gospel. How could I help desiring to encourage those who were struggling up hill, against the tide of ungodliness, which is surging round us in the form of godliness, and mystifying God's puzzled sheep? I well know that none can continue so to struggle unless underneath are the everlasting arms. Thus the SIGNS came to our home; and as my husband and I read and talk to each other on the various communications, we have certainly been well paid by the spiritual thoughts, questionings, approvals, and sometimes nonapprovals it creates. This, it seems to me, is a fair hold for any reading matter to take, outside the Bible. But I have felt my position before God as much too solemn to receive, as I did when a child, any exposition of Scripture further than it appears to me consistent with the whole purpose and revelation of truth in that Scripture. Everything about the paper was new to my reading—the style, idiom, and distinctive claims to truth set forth in it. With some writers I could fully join, while the thoughts of portions of others I have left in abeyance, not having been personally led into them. For as I know that every one shall give an account for himself to him that judgeth, I rest content, rejoicing also in the fact that various gifts are bestowed upon the body of Christ, each fulfilling its part, according to the measure of the gift, given for the edification and comforting of the whole. So long then as I feel sure that Jesus Christ, as the only and whole Savior of his people, is preached, I can say from my heart, God speed every one who so preaches him, either by word, or pen, or life. But, friends, suffer me a word for his dear sake. Occasionally I have felt wounded by the way in which Missionary Baptists, Methodists, Arminians, &c., have been mentioned. I know that many sheep are entangled in the various errors that abound, and feel by sad experience that the slightest wound rankles and festers in the old, fleshly, human heart; and once the evil is needlessly stirred, it obscures whatever light may shine in the hand that has done it. It is here, I think, the patience and meekness of age and wisdom spiritually is most desirable. If ever there was a time when the beast coming out of the earth had horns like a lamb, it is now; and every bait he throws, and web he spreads, flashes with borrowed gold. Many may wonder how these errors can entangle a living child; but those who have felt their power ought never to forget the hole of the pit out of which they are digged. Again, I find there is trouble among yourselves. This very trouble is the mark of a living church; for where death reigns all is smooth. Yet seeing God has entrusted you with such priceless knowledge of truth, as a whole, what need that you should watch unto prayer, lest Satan obtain an advantage over you; "For we are not ignorant of his devices" to scatter the sheep. It seems to me there was no servant more specially used and honored by the indwelling power of the Spirit, in New Testament times, than Paul; yet while his faith in the revelation of salvation by grace to the church, through the atoning blood of Christ, was so unshaken that he says to the Galatians, "Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel than that which we have preached unto you [shewing the changelessness of the message of God], let him be accursed," to the disorderly Corinthians, who had become puffed up because of the gifts they possessed, he says, "I have fed you with milk, and not with meat; for hitherto ye were not able to bear it, neither yet now are ye able." And farther on he declares, "For though I be free from all men, yet have I made myself servant unto all, that I might gain the more. And unto the Jews I became as a Jew, that I might gain the Jews; to them that are under the law, as under the law, that I might gain them that are under the law; to them that are without law [Gentiles], as without law (being not without law to God, but under the law to Christ), that I might gain them that are without law. To the weak became I as weak, that I might gain the weak. I am made all things to all men, that I might by all means save some. And this I do for the gospel's sake, that I might be partaker thereof with you." Now I do not understand that Paul was speaking of regenerating dead souls, but to manifested sheep, who had gone, and were being still more emboldened to go, into various erroneous teachings, and consequently impure lives. Knowledge seemed to have dazzled them, so that they were more given to disputing with than loving one another. Neither was it the gospel message he was altering, nor the plan of it, for then it would have ceased to be good news to poor, sinful men. But in all that appertained merely to his own personality, as a free-born subject of grace, he had rather waive his likings, keeping his body in subjection, than he would be cast out of his field of service, and fail in the obtaining of that incorruptible crown of righteousness (faithfulness to their true spiritual growth), which marked him as not a whit behind the chiefest of the apostles. And so, brethren beloved, who are strong in the faith, bear with the plea of a stranger, and walk in wisdom towards them who are without, handling the weapons of your warfare with skill and compassion; that when the chief Shepherd shall appear he may give you a crown of glory which fadeth not away.

Grace knows no stint; and if I have found favor thus far, there are three items more I cannot pass, so I crave a whole hearing. The first is a letter from a good brother in the SIGNS of January 14th, in which he says he could have sent a number of names with a dollar; but as he had no hope of their renewing, he refrained from doing so. This brought me to a halt, as I have done my best to circulate the paper in a humble way. It set me to questioning my motives; and I find I never had a thought as to the pecuniary welfare of the paper, or its future success. My only desire was that in so far as I had been spiritually helped, I might share a crumb with some other buffeted and bewildered sheep who was traveling along the world's highway; and I was very desirous that the Lord would use it so, whether lent or paid for. Perhaps this has made me nervously anxious that it should contain sound doctrine, yet distilled as the refreshing dew. Two passages are very much with me: "Blessed are ye that sow beside all waters, that send forth thither the feet of the ox and the ass." Not only the skilled ox, but the poor, stubborn, stupid ass may be used, when God opens its mouth. And this other, "In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thine hand; for thou knowest not whether shall prosper either this or that, or whether they both shall be alike good." Is it not blessed not to know, but leave all with God, lest despair on the one hand, or vanity on the other, might swallow us up?

The next item is your own editorial, "Introductory to volume fifty-nine," in the SIGNS of January 7th. After carefully reading it, I decided that I had never met with just such an one before; and I said in my heart, It is either the very height of presumption, or the strength of faith, that goes quietly on up stream, declaring the God of Israel alone to be its shield and exceeding great reward. If these things be a verity in regard to the truth your paper advocates, then it needs no assistance from the strife of tongues; neither will it fail when condemned thereby; for he that keepeth Israel never slumbereth nor sleepeth. To my mind the only evidence we can ever have in this life of God's invisible but miraculous presence with us, in anything we undertake through an inward and impressed faith in him, is when we are enabled to go on, though all the world, yea, even brethren, should walk on the other side.

The third item appears in the SIGNS of January 21st. It is a notice under the heading, "Not so encouraging." May I venture a little experience on financial matters? for I can sympathize with (not pity) those who labor under this burden. None but those who have passed through it, and are sensitive, know how crippling, galling, yes, crushing cross it is to carry, save only when they have a consciousness of the supporting power and love of a heavenly Father, who "Knoweth our feeble frame." We were in debt, not (so far as we knew) by our own improvidence, but through lack of others paying us in part, and partly the strain of time. Well, after a restless night (one of many) I took up the Bible next morning, and it opened to Christ's sermon on the mount. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." The words came to me with such power as never before. What a depth of meaning appeared in those words, "the kingdom of God." I had always confined it, in my thoughts, to the struggles of the poor soul awakened to a sense of its sinfulness by nature, and for the first time crying out; "God, be merciful to me, a sinner." But now

I saw it was addressed to me as a child in the Father's household; that I was to seek the welfare of his kingdom in all its unfoldings, both spiritual and temporal; and in so doing I should be cut loose from the world. We had always esteemed it a privilege to put in our offering towards keeping open the doors of the church-house. But what now? With steadily decreasing funds we must pay our debts. Yes, a christian must first of all be honest. Sisters, did you ever study economy from a spiritual standpoint? The cutting off the flesh in certain outward adornments (it is not pleasant) and—well, the many ways which only a poor woman knows. I resolved to try, studied plain, very plain, cooking; mended, watched the small leaks in the shape of waste (they are dreadful consumers), and was able every week (I durst not leave it longer) to take out a regular sum (it was a big one for us), and put it quietly into the funds to keep a roof for spiritual worship over our heads. Do I regret it? No, never; for there was always a song of gratitude in my heart on that score, though many others pained me, and many times I realized that,

Jesus, where'er thy people meet,
There faith beholds a mercy seat.

The cruse of oil and barrel of meal has never failed, neither literally nor spiritually; in fact I think they are both bigger to-day than ever.

Dear christian friends, I think you will make a mistake if you do without your paper and save its price; for it seems to me it is like all your ministers preaching to you in turn, and the children talking to one another, though so scattered abroad. Now do not think I am holding forth Arminianism. No, I am fully persuaded that God always did, and always will, uphold whatever is truly of the Spirit, irrespective of we poor worms of the dust. But it is profitable for us that this fruit of righteousness should be sealed home to us by the Spirit; even the denial of the flesh, and the abounding in loving acts, and support of all saints in their endeavors faithfully to uphold the cause of the Master, each one, as far as in us lies, that so we may experimentally taste a little of the sufferings of Christ, "who, though he was rich, for our sakes became poor, that we through his poverty might be made rich."

One parting thought. I had risen before break of day, lit my little lamp and set it on a shelf. Very bright it looked in the gray dawn, and very useful as I went about the early chores. But as I worked and thought, the sun slowly silvered the wintry sky, parted the chill shadows, and finally broke into a thousand colored rays of glittering light on the festoons of icicles outside the window. Mechanically I watched the glorious scene, at the same time placing my lamps on the table to trim them for evening use. I wondered, as I came to the little one, why its chimney felt so hot, and looking in, lo, its tiny light was burning, unheeded and forgotten in the blaze of perfect morn. Then it came to me, "When this mortal shall have put on immortality, and this corruptible shall have put on incorruption," all our little lamps, which were so useful at times, and twinkled on through this night of sin and sorrow, shall be completely swallowed up in the exceeding glory and brightness of the great Sun of righteousness himself. No doubts there as to who is a child; no fears of the valley of the shadow of death; no errors; no farewells; for we shall see him as he is, and be like unto him, who hath bought us, and washed us in his own blood.

I have trespassed; forgive me. A blessed New Year to all the household of faith. Yours lovingly in the Lord,

MRS. J. STREET.

STATE ROAD, Del., March 15, 1891.

BRETHREN BEEBE:—I have seen in a biographical sketch of the late Henry Clay that in his early life, as he was listening to a debate, he remarked at its close that he thought more might be said upon the subject. Throughout his after life not many subjects were ever debated but what Mr. Clay could find more to say upon them. The same thing might be true of some others, who would make no pretense of comparison with Mr. Clay.

In a late number of the SIGNS our attention is called to a subject that is undoubtedly one of peculiar interest and importance at this time, and one that I think something more might be said upon. If I attempt to say some things that seem to be called for I will mean it as additional, and not merely to go over the same ground. It is on the passage of Scripture recorded Romans xiv. 19, and reads, "Let us therefore follow after the things which make for peace, and things wherewith one may edify another." I say interesting at this time, because I gather from the writings of brethren that there is discord and strife in some quarters, although I have met with nothing of it myself. Peace is certainly desirable always, at all times, and in all places; and if there are things that, if followed, would tend to promote and preserve peace, we do well to look them up. Then we might know "how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity." This apostle, whose words have been called up, never leaves us to conjecture. He always explains himself, and tells just what he means; and he almost invariably tells us also the negative, what he does not mean. He appears to be dealing with some serious difficulty or misunderstanding in the church at Rome. As some of them were Jews, the Jewish traditions were one fruitful source of trouble. He names particularly some of the questions that divided them, and admonishes them at length as to the proper course to pursue to restore harmony. Then comes a list of the things to be observed. There are quite a number of them, and certainly enough to prove their efficacy. In the first place, supposing one to be weak in faith, is he to be rejected? Must they withdraw fellowship from him? Nothing of the kind. "Receive ye him, but not to doubtful disputations." Not to engage in disputations with him, nor to keep up wrangling and strife. He names two questions that had been prolific of strife and contention among them; and he rather plainly intimates which side is correct on both questions. One of them was in regard to the use of such meats by believers as were prohibited by the Jewish law; and the other was the observance of certain days, as sabbaths or festivals, by the gospel church. On both these questions good brethren conscientiously differed. If we expect the apostle to assert his authority, to declare what was right, and require all the brethren to accept it, we shall be disappointed. He does no such thing. "Let not him that eateth despise him that eateth not; and let not him which eateth not judge him that eateth: for God hath received him." The important question is not what they eat, nor what they refuse, but whether they are humble and thankful, recognizing their obligations to God for all things that they enjoy. "The kingdom of God is not meat and drink; but righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost." One man esteemeth one day above another; others esteem every day alike. If they regard the day to the Lord, and as directed in his word, it is well; but if not, their regarding it is of no account. It is not what particular days they observe, but whether they observe them to the Lord, in honor to him, and in fulfillment of their obligations to him. Such observance is acceptable on any and all days. The spirit of worship is not subject to the divisions of time, nor restricted to certain days of the week or of the year. We should not make the observance of days and times a ground of division or discord among the brethren. A disposition to discard one another or set each other at naught on account of their lack of understanding of these things, is certainly reprov'd by the apostle. It is desirable, however, that every one should be fully instructed in his own mind.

It is of more consequence to save the feelings and fellowship of the brethren than to have the question about eating meat established. "For meat destroy not the work of God." "But why dost thou judge thy brother? or why dost thou set at naught thy brother? for we shall all stand before the judgment seat of Christ." The apostle shows that the Spirit of the Lord is upon him when he so kindly says, "We that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak, and not to please ourselves." "Let us not therefore judge one another any more: but judge this rather, that no man put a stumbling-block or an occasion to fall in his brother's way." "But if thy brother be grieved with thy meat, now walkest thou not charitably. Destroy not him with thy meat, for whom Christ died." The apostle will not contend to the destruction of the peace and harmony of the church, even for what is right; but he goes on to tell us that even Christ pleased not himself. So we see that the apostle does not leave us to conjecture what things they are that make for peace, but he states them so distinctly that we cannot possibly mistake his instructions. He of course knew that men would be impatient with those who would not subscribe to all their interpretations of Scripture, and so he bespeaks for them from the God of patience this grant, that they be like-minded one toward another, according to Christ Jesus.

Now as he has set forth so many things as "the things which make for peace," we can consider what he says, and judge whether he is right, and whether such a course would really tend to peace and good will among brethren. We are certainly taught that God is not the author of confusion; and if confusion and strife exist anywhere among brethren it has not been produced by his Spirit. Even the truth, or points of it, may be contended for in a controversial spirit, and striving for mastery, that would tend to more or less estrangement. The word "things" occurs twice in the sentence, but I understand the same things in both instances; that is, the same things that make for peace are the things by which they edify one another. Edifying is cementing, building together, uniting in bonds of love and fellowship as one people. Now if it is certain that these things make for peace, let us therefore follow after them. "Wherefore receive ye one another, as Christ also received us to the glory of God." There are undoubtedly mysteries that it is not given to every believer to understand. If more is given to some, so that they may be accounted strong, they ought to be humble and thankful, and bear with the infirmities of those to whom less discernment is given. The apostle not only tells us the things that we should follow, but also the things that we should avoid. "Foolish and unlearned questions avoid, knowing that they do gender strifes." I suppose what he calls unlearned questions are questions about things not clearly understood, and about which good brethren will differ. Again, he says, "Avoid foolish questions, and genealogies, and contentions, for they are unprofitable and vain." But "I will that thou affirm constantly, that they which have believed in God might be careful to maintain good works." This will not produce any mischief. It will be found good and profitable at all times, and there will quite generally be more or less needs be for exhortations of this kind.

I have been, in the foregoing remarks, meaning to let the apostle explain himself, and accept as sound and consistent the instruction he gives. It would be rather presuming in me to recommend the course that the apostle condemns as the proper one, and say that each one should contend strenuously for his own interpretations. I will pass from this now, as all I had in view was just to call attention to the apostle's own exposition, rather than to offer any suggestions of my own.

In the article to which this is meant as a supplement there are some expressions about creeds, confessions of faith, &c., to which I propose to refer. The word "creed" is from the Latin credo—I believe. Disciples are called believers. They are said to have faith, and to live by faith. Is it wrong then to have a creed? Is not a belief of the truth characteristic of them? Timothy witnessed a good confession. The Hebrew brethren were exhorted to hold fast the profession of their faith. I have been accustomed from early life to hear creeds and confessions denounced; but it was not by believers, but by unbelievers. All church organizations that I am acquainted with set forth in writing a brief summary of their faith. It may be said that the Scriptures are all-sufficient; but while we admit this, and all profess to accept the Scriptures, we want something definite. Are not our published Articles of Faith our witnesses that we occupy scriptural ground, and that we are walking in the way the fathers trod? In alluding to Martin Luther and John Calvin as great reformers, I do not know that the writer intended to set them forth as models, or as more reliable guides than Confessions of Faith that have been adopted by the denominations. I certainly do not claim to have descended from them, and I do not wish to be regarded as claiming to have descended from either of them. The Baptists were before Calvin, and do not look to him as authority either in faith or practice. I dare say there are many who profess to agree with him, and pride themselves in being Calvinists; but we do neither one nor the other. Does brother Wagner know that they both advocated infant sprinkling and the admission of the natural seed of believers into the church? that they believed in and advocated a state religion, established and supported by the civil power? They were only aiming to remodel and improve the church of Rome; hence the application of the term "Reformers." The Baptists are not reformed Catholics, and have no need to receive doctrine from the hands of the "Reformers." Not all those upon whom are conferred profitable gifts possess the gift of healing; but it is a much-needed and important gift. The blessing pronounced upon peacemakers is that they shall be called children of God. It would seem that there either is less doubt about them, or else that they live in a more near and intimate relationship to him whose children they are said to be. The old prophet contemplates some of these in their blessed work from his prophetic standpoint, and confers a name upon them; "The repairer of the breach," and "The restorer of places to dwell in." Are there those among us upon whom may rightfully be conferred this blessed prophetic name?

[THE following letter, though not written for publication, was handed us by brother Chick while on a visit to this place, and at our request was left with us for publication. While we have not the consent of the writer to publish it, we trust he will not be offended with us in the liberty we take of giving our readers the benefit of the good things contained therein.—ED.]

DUTTON, Ark., Feb. 8, 1891.

ELDER F. A. CHICK—DEAR BROTHER:—Your letter of January 29th reached me a few days ago, and I regret not having opportunity to reply sooner. I had no thought of awakening the sympathies of the brethren to such an extent; in fact I was writing only to brother Durand, and did not know that he would ever think of publishing it, until he wrote me, asking permission. The tender sympathy manifest in your letter, as also in many others I have received since from dear brethren and sisters, has tended to deprive our severe affliction of much of its bitterness, and enabled me to feel, in some measure at least, that the dear Savior has come upon the dark waves of trouble with the peaceful assurance, "Be of good cheer; it is I; be not afraid." In the hour of severe trial God's people even need often a word of encouragement. In that dark and trying hour when our Master prayed, "Father, if thou be willing, remove this cup from me," "there appeared an angel unto him from heaven, strengthening him." But how sweet, how encouraging, in the raging of the fierce storm of "great tribulation," to feel and "know that all things work together for good." I have sometimes inquired in mind whether we were justifiable in time of great trouble in concluding, like Jacob, "All these things are against me." When Jacob uttered these words the vail had not as yet been rent, the seals had not been broken. "The Holy Ghost this signifying, that the way into the holiest of all was not yet made manifest, while as yet the first tabernacle was standing." But now "the invisible things of him from the foundation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made." To my mind his eternal purpose is clearly manifest in all revelation and in all nature; and that, for his own glory, and for good to his chosen, all things, everything, however small, however great, from the death of a sparrow to the fall of Adam, shall be caused to work. I have not as yet been called to pass through a scene dark enough to cause me to doubt the truth of this. But when everything seems, from a natural point of view, to turn loose against us, as it has with me during the past year, it is hard to keep from fearing that we are not among those that love him. Sometimes when my wife would become worse, seemingly at the point of death, the baby would be taken very ill, and the neuralgia would return upon me, while every now and then some useful article about the place was getting broken or destroyed, the hogs would break through, and the cattle leap over the enclosures, and it seemed as if everything was going to destruction, and the hand of the Lord was turned against me. But the Scriptures abound with examples of the sorest evils, of the darkest and most trying times, yielding in the end the sweetest fruit to God's people. When Joseph was taken away from his father, devoured by evil beasts, as Jacob believed, no doubt he looked upon it as the sorest affliction that had yet befallen him. When Simeon was retained in prison, and there was no prospect of obtaining any more bread unless Benjamin should be taken away, as he feared, never to return, while famine seemed to threaten all with death, it must have been a dark and trying time to Jacob indeed. No wonder he was ready to exclaim, "All these things are against me." But when all is worked out, it proves to be but the plan of infinite wisdom to preserve him a posterity in the earth, and to save their lives by a great deliverance, while his favorite son is made ruler over all the land of Egypt. If the way to Canaan lies through the bondage in Egypt, the Red Sea, the perilous journey in the wilderness, and foes upon the right hand and left, who, having been brought through all to that "goodly land," would not thereby be better prepared to enjoy it? Our present light afflictions "work for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." I have thought that Samson's conflict with the lion was a beautiful illustration of how things seemingly evil work for our good. As he was weak, and "as another man," except when the Spirit of God was upon him, the approach of such a deadly foe would seem to be an unfortunate calamity. But the Spirit coming mightly upon him, he came out conqueror. He was more than conqueror; for the carcass of this vanquished foe afterwards yielded him the sweetest food ever tasted by mortals. This was the foundation of his riddle, "Out of the eater came forth meat; out of the strong came forth sweetness; which, it seems, the uncircumcised cannot understand until this day. Had not sin entered into the world, there could have been no death; for death came by sin. It is true that all the evils that afflict this sin-cursed world grow out of that transgression; yet but for it all must have continued to bear the image of the earthy. Through death "it is sown a natural body; it is raised a spiritual body," and thus conformed to the image of Christ. It is changed from the image of the earthy to the image of the heavenly; the latter state being as far above the former as the heavens are above the earth; a far greater difference than that between the beautiful butterfly and the ugly, filthy worm from which it came; although the butterfly flies in the air, and sucks the sweets of flowers, while the worm crawls in dust, and eats coarse leaves for food. "Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone; but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit." I take a measure of wheat and cast it into the earth. From that one I produce many; but I employ the death of each grain in the measure sown, as a means of accomplishing this result. Everything that lives must eat, and this involves the wholesale destruction of life, both animal and vegetable. No fruit can be eaten until plucked from its parent stem; no grain can be made to sustain human life without the death of the grain. Thus death becomes necessary to life. And death, the greatest enemy of man, shall finally be made to yield, to them that love God, the greatest good. All things then are ours, whether good or evil, life or death, and shall work for our good. But our faith is often sorely, O how sorely, tried in this particular!

We desire to inform your wife that her kindness in extending her love and sympathy to us in our sad affliction is duly appreciated. Your brother in hope of a better world,
C. W. ANDERSON.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN IN THE LORD:—The SIGNS OF THE TIMES comes to me regularly, each number filled with excellent reading matter. I appreciate it highly, and indorse its teaching fully and heartily. I receive it as a blessing from God, as a fruit of the Spirit in the person of my venerable, true and tried friend and brother, Deacon A. C. Legg, who is certainly one of the "excellent of the earth;" one of the few in these degenerate days of whom the world is not worthy. I do not think it too much to say that he has done more and sacrificed more for the cause of truth in this section of country than any other person now living. "The Lord grant unto him that he may find mercy of the Lord in that day."—2 Tim. i. 18. I do not write this to flatter brother Legg, for I know he is above the flattery of sinful man; and besides, he is not likely to see this. But I did not design writing a eulogy. I had in mind to sketch the state of the churches and ministry in this section. I regret that I cannot give a more cheering account; but truth compels me to say that the churches generally seem to be on the decline, cold and lifeless, the most melancholy condition I have ever witnessed since I have had a name with the Baptists, which is about thirty years. Most of that time I have borne the name of a minister, and often fear that I have only borne the name; and yet, sad to relate, there is not another Old School Baptist preacher (to my knowing) in twenty-five miles of me, and but few in twice that distance; so you see the churches here are nearly destitute of a living ministry. This fact may serve (at least in part) to explain the present state of the churches. There is another fact, if rightly understood in the light of divine truth, might go far toward explaining the present condition of the ministry. It is a subject, however, that I have never felt at liberty to say much about, though I grant that if it is (and it certainly is) a part of the counsel of God we should not shun to declare it. I allude to the temporal support of those that are called of God to "preach the word." It is my firm conviction that our sad failure to carry out the divine rule given in the Scriptures for our guidance in this matter is one grand cause of the present condition of things in the church throughout this country; and preachers themselves are largely responsible for it; for in their zeal in opposing Arminian job hunters and salary grabbers, they have treated this subject in a manner that has no doubt misled the saints, and made the impression on the mind of many that it is wrong for a gospel preacher to receive or expect material aid or carnal support from those among whom he labors. In a late number of the SIGNS a correspondent writes, "Nor did he (God) send him (Elijah) to the brotherhood, and tell him to tell them that it was ordained that they that preach the gospel should live of the gospel." True, my dear brother, we are not informed that Elijah was charged with that particular message; but we are explicitly told that Paul was sent to the brethren with that very message, together with many other important hints bearing on that subject. I hope some nimble writer and able expounder of the Scriptures will write a lucid exposition of this subject for publication in the SIGNS. I think it would do good. Meanwhile it would be well for us (preachers particularly, and saints generally) to give this matter closer attention than we have hitherto done; not only in this, but in all matters pertaining to the kingdom of Christ on earth. In the Scriptures of divine truth we have a perfect pattern of heavenly things, and we may not pervert it nor ignore it with impunity; for in proportion as we depart from the law of our Lord, in that proportion we shall suffer loss; for "whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." This is not "free agency (nonsense), but it is moral agency; and I often feel myself reprimanded, and even chastised, for disobeying the instructions of my exalted Superior. Yes, it is well for us to take heed to our ways while we tabernacle here. As regards our eternal destiny, I confidently believe that is fixed and settled by decrees that are far firmer than the "laws of the Medes and Persians."

I close this uninteresting scribble, and just send it to you, brethren Beebe, as it is. I did not design it for publication, but if you can make anything of it you are perfectly welcome to it. With love to all who love God, and obey the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, I subscribe myself the servant of all.

J. M. PAYNE.

FORT SCOTT, Kan., Feb. 8, 1891.

EDITORS OF THE SIGNS:—I have had it in my mind a number of times since the 15th of December last to send you the amount necessary for the renewal of my subscription; and it has been in my mind about as often to request you to discontinue it. "I am in a strait betwixt two." It is the only religious periodical I subscribe for, yet others fall into my hands occasionally. I like the paper, but hate myself. I am afraid to take it, and am afraid not to. This is my constant experience; and had I the ability to express myself as some of your subscribers have, I would like to lay some of my travels before your readers. I do not believe that I aspire to see my name in print, nor even what I may write so you can feel free to dispose of this just as you see fit. I am painfully aware of my inability to write to edification. This surely is not why I attempt to write at this time, but rather to be edified. I read the many communications in the SIGNS, and the writers seem to express themselves so sweetly, so earnestly, I can hardly believe they have the doubts that cling so tenaciously to my feeble mind. If my memory would serve me, I would refer to many instances. I will allude to the communication in No 4, present volume, from my dear brother Chick. I remember to have heard him preach once, a number of years ago, in Alexandria, Va. This portion of Scripture he writes upon is one that I cannot say I know I understand; but I have to say of that, as I do of many others, it is too deep for poor me. He expresses just such views as seem consistent with the teaching of the Scriptures. I feel that I am inclined to say, "I don't know," so much oftener than "I know." I conclude I am a sure enough "know nothing." In this week's SIGNS is the beginning of another communication on the same subject that brother Chick wrote upon. I can almost say, I know our dear brother

Purrington is its author. I am glad he did not know Elder Chick was writing, and vice versa; for we might have been deprived of one of these excellent letters. I do not think at this time there is danger of having "too much of a good thing" on that subject. I find many dear brethren (now allow me to change that expression, and say a few; for I feel like one is too many) undertaking to restrict, saying, no sinful act could have been included in the "all things." We read of "wicked hands" putting to death the Son of God; and this was for the salvation of his people. I will just tell you what a simpleton I am. I just have to say, I believe it includes just what it says, and means just what it says, "all things;" but I do not know why it is so. Our inquiring minds are busy trying to remove or make plain the mysteriously deep things which belong to God. My shallow mind is sometimes inquiring why sin was allowed to be; or rather, why God, who is all-powerful, should have created man so he would need a Savior. Poor, foolish mortals that we are! who can, by searching, find out why many things are as they are? Dear brethren and sisters, you will please pardon me for making mention of one very painful circumstance in connection with this subject, which has caused a deep gloom to rest upon my dear household. Now, as I write these scattering thoughts, I hear the voice of our poor, afflicted daughter, who is in her room, having been insane for some years. She has been so unmanageable that we took her to the Asylum, where she remained several years; but we becoming dissatisfied, brought her home, where we have kept her with great difficulty and fear. Sometimes she is more manageable, and is mindful of the surroundings. This affliction has been, and is, almost more than we can bear up under. Thus far we have been sustained; whether by grace or not I will not say. God knows. But aside from our mental agony, and the solicitude we feel for our dear child's welfare, I find myself inquiring, Why has this sore affliction been put upon us? Helpless, powerless to do one thing to relieve her, we inquire, Why is this? Is this embraced in the "all things" that work for the good of them that love God? We have waited long, but no answer comes. Does the answer always come? Shall we ever know what this is for? With me it is a great trial. I do not know that I have faith. God knows. O! dear kindred, are we a kin? Do any of you find so many things you do not know, and so few you do know? As my dear brother, Elder Chick, has written so beautifully about what "we know," I do hope he may feel inclined to write something from my doubting standpoint, making his own selection of a text. It may be that there may be comfort for some others in what he may write, if none of it should be for me. Brethren (if you know of afflictions you will allow me to use this term), please excuse the rambling and imperfect thoughts herein expressed.

Yours desiring faith,
M. B. WEEDON.

CAMP HILL, Ala., Feb. 8, 1891.

DEAR BROTHERN BEEBE:—I inclose you a letter received just one year ago, while I was in the state of Mississippi. My wife picked the letter up yesterday, and called my attention to it; and after reading the letter over it appeared to me to contain some things that might be profitable to the people of God, especially to those who labor in the ministry, and I decided to send it to you for publication in the SIGNS, if you feel to do so, although I have not obtained the consent of the writer; so if you publish it please withhold the name of the writer. My recollection now is that I never answered the letter at all. It was received at a time when I was in great trouble, pressed with business, in the employ of others, and behind with my correspondence. I hope that the writer has ere this gone back to her brethren, confessed her faults, and that she is now enjoying the sweet fellowship of God's people, which she seemed to so much desire. I certainly sympathize with such poor outcasts and weaklings of the flock as she confesses herself to be; and if these lines meet the eye of the writer of the letter, I would be glad to hear from her again, and to learn how she is getting along now; and I hope she will not think that I meant to treat her letter with silent contempt, or that I felt no interest in her case. May the Lord teach all his ministers how to "bear the infirmities of the weak," and how to encourage the halting and doubting ones, and to make straight paths for their feet, lest that which is lame be turned out of the way; but rather let it be healed.

Yours in gospel bonds,
H. J. REDD.

FEBRUARY 7, 1890.

H. J. REDD:—To-night while reading the SIGNS of Feb. 5th, your letter to Elder P. J. Powell touched my feelings with great force. I think I know and understand what it is to feel, "You are an outcast." I was once a member of the Regular Baptist Church at this place, and I feel that no poor soul ever appreciated a place among them more than I did. I only asked for the lowest seat, for room on the doorstep, and felt that I was unworthy of that. But on account of a little difference in opinion, and too much talking to others, instead of going to the brother alone and telling him his fault, as we are commanded; they said I should do thus and so; and being one of the weak, faltering, poor ones, I felt that I was in their way, and left the church. I think I have suffered as much in my mind as any one ever did, since I have been away from the people I love, and the only preaching that feeds my hungry soul. If I thought they were all willing to receive me, I would return. As you say, when we get to the right place we need no argument to convince us of our wrong; for when we are brought into this state of humility before God no persuasion is necessary to make us fall down, and with our mouth in the dust confess our sins, and beg to be forgiven. If you are a minister, be sure on every suitable occasion to exhort your people to brotherly love, meekness and long-forbearance one toward another. Tell them to be careful of the weaklings of the flock. Entreat them to help those who stumble and fall into the ditch, or who wander into by and forbidden paths. Just one kind word, or a warm clasp of the hand, when one feels so poor and unworthy, O how good! Urge your people to be found at one another's feet, confessing their faults one to another. Tell them of a stranger you have not seen in the flesh, who read your letter and took some comfort from your words, because you seemed inclined to be charitable toward the faults of others.

I would like to write you of all my troubles and trials, and of the reason of my hope, of which I am ready at all times to speak. No miracle in the days of old was more strange than was my wonderful deliverance from the bondage of sin and death; and it was all through grace, free grace alone.

But I must close. I hope you will write again soon on the same subject. Many more things I would like to mention, but my letter is already lengthy. When all is well, remember me.

GOLCONDA, Ill., Dec. 15, 1890.

DEAR BROTHERN BEEBE:—I wrote a communication, which was published in the SIGNS of November 19th. Brother M. A. Wilborn, of Tennessee, wrote to me and wished me to write him a long letter. I have complied with his request, but cannot make out his post-office address; so I send the letter to you to publish, if it will not crowd out better matter. I wish it to reach him, for he is a precious brother.

RICHARD FULKERSON.

GOLCONDA, Pope Co., Ill.

M. A. WILBORN—DEAR BROTHER:—Your letter came to hand in due time, and I was truly glad to receive it. I was glad to think that such a creature as I am has a place in the affections of God's humble poor. God is yet reserving to himself faithful men that have not bowed the knee to Baal. Even at this time there is a remnant according to the election of grace. In the prophetic age there were eight hundred and fifty false prophets to one true one. Elijah said unto the people, "If the Lord be God, follow him; but if Baal, follow him." But the people answered not a word. Then Elijah proposed that each prepare an altar, and put no fire under; and the God that answered by fire, let him be God. "And all the people answered and said, It is well spoken."—1 Kings xviii. The god of the false prophet failed, but Elijah's God made no failure. Every one who believes in a god that fails in anything places himself on the side of the false prophets. So, to my mind, the whole Arminian world believes in a god that fails to accomplish what his soul desireth. They believe it was the purpose of our God that Adam should keep the law, but that the devil frustrated the purpose of God, and got man to do what God purposed he should not do. They also preach that God sent his Son to save the entire race of man, but failed; and that he sends his Spirit to save, but fails; and that he sends his preachers to save, and fails. Their god makes more failures than any man that ever lived. I would rather be like Elijah, and belong to a little few who believe in the God that makes no mistakes nor failures in anything. If the devil could frustrate the purpose of God in one thing he might in all, and dethrone God, and then there would be no heaven. Whatever is the purpose of God is the will of God; and Jesus said, "I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me. And this is the Father's will which hath sent me, that of all which he hath given me I should lose nothing, but should raise it up again at the last day." So all that ever shall reach heaven will reach there according to the purpose and will of God. There is only one way that any person can gain that rich inheritance, and that is by grace, according to the purpose and will of God. The Bible says, "By the deeds of the law there shall no flesh be justified." Again, "If a law had been given that could have given life, verily righteousness should have been by the law." "But thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." So, dear children of God, hold up your heads, for there is no power that can break the will of God. "It is not the will of your Father which is in heaven that one of these little ones should perish." He will bring them safe to heaven, without the stain of sin upon them.

How are they so pure, so spotless, clean and white,
That they can live forevermore, whole ages in his sight?
This only could be done by him who came the lost to save;
He bore their sins upon the tree—has endless life to give.
And when our race is fully run, and we're from sin set free,
We'll then go home, the crown to wear—
I hope there's one for me.

I would like to see you, and all the brethren where I have been, before I am called to my long home. Remember me at the throne of grace when it is well with you.

Your brother in hope,
RICHARD FULKERSON.

ELGIN, Oregon, Jan. 15, 1891.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—I send you a part of a letter I received from sister Carter, which I thought would be appreciated by the readers of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, and especially by her many friends in the east, provided you see proper to publish.

I was pleased, brethren Beebe with your editorial on "Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin," &c. And I do also heartily indorse Elder Durand's views on the new birth. Your brother, I hope, in gospel bonds,

G. E. MAYFIELD.

STUCK, Wash., Nov. 30, 1891.

ELDER G. E. MAYFIELD—DEAR BROTHER:—Although sometime has elapsed since I wrote to you, not much time passes that you and family are unthought of, and of how you are provided for the winter. Sister and daughter both sent the text used on the third Sunday of November meeting. Sister says, "The sermons were food for the hungry, drink for the thirsty, and rest for the weary;" and I am glad it was so, and that she was built up and comforted. I am glad the dear Lord keeps you little and lowly and humble, for it is only when Ephraim speaks tremblingly that he exalts himself in Israel. The text you used on Sunday, "Nevertheless the foundation of God standeth sure," was the one you used at Dayton, when the association met there, and Mrs. Sayne, Ben. and I went from Walla Walla. Ben. spoke of it as soon as I read the text, and added, "That is the last time I heard Elder Mayfield." You preached from that text Sunday morning, and Elder Bullack followed. It was a great feast God gave us that day. We did not know how long it was to last, nor how many mixtures the cup contained, nor of how there has been an enlarging and a winding about, like the ascent of the house of the Lord that was shewed to Ezekiel; a winding about still upward to the side chambers; for the winding about of the house went still upward round about the house; therefore the breadth of the house was still upward, and so increased from the lowest chamber to the highest, by the midst. We can see that the road winds about, but it is harder to perceive that it is still upward. Only he who declares himself "the way" knows it. We cannot see it, for we do not walk by sight. And we are complete in him; and well has he shown that our salvation is entirely of him, and we are wretched, and poor, and blind, and naked. Without him, we can do nothing. It is comforting to remember that when the priest had looked and seen that the leprosy had spread till it covered the leper all over, then he was commanded to pronounce him clean. And when our great High Priest saw that refuge failed us, and no man cared for our soul, when the light shined in darkness, and by that light we saw every thought word and action only evil, and that continually, and we abhorred ourselves, and repented in dust and ashes, the leprosy had spread all over; and then, when there was no eye to pity, nor arm to save, he pronounced us clean. His own arm brought salvation. Of the winding about yet to come we do not know, nor of the mixtures yet to drink; but the head sits at the right hand of the majesty on high. The body was raised together with him, and there has been nothing against it since. It is without spot, and blameless; and when we have dwelt our allotted time in the body of this death, he will so manifest it; and to his name be the glory. In love to Mrs. M. and family and yourself,

M. E. CARTER.

DAVIS' MILLS, La., Dec. 13, 1890.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE—If I should thus address you:—I feel like writing a little this morning, though sensible that it is in much weakness. I have been a reader of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES but a short time, yet it seems that I could not do without the paper at all; though I am poor in spirit, in mind, and in worldly goods. I do not know how it will be with me in the future; but I would advise brethren, sisters and friends and companions to write on, and send in all the subscriptions practicable, of such as feel an interest in the doctrine maintained by the Primitive Baptists; which is Jesus Christ and him crucified and risen triumphant over death, hell and the grave. The saints here below should worship him in spirit and in truth forevermore.

There has been some agitation here as well as elsewhere concerning the adoption; but brother Thorne's letter in the sixth number of the SIGNS for 1890, surely presents the visible and invisible kingdoms as touching this subject. While it is in my mind I would mention the letter of brother H. B. Jones, in No. 47, in answer to Mr. Keith. It is also appropriate in answer to all such carnal and selfish religionists. I agree with one of the correspondents who said recently that when a sinner is brought to the knowledge of the truth, all the Alliance bumps, Mason bumps, Grange bumps, and Secret Society bumps, of every name would be trimmed off. So our Lord bids his disciples beware of the leaven of the Pharisees, which is hypocrisy. The grace of God teaches honesty and truthfulness. To manifest this righteous principle in walk and conversation the Spirit makes his saints willing in the day of his power. My mind is directed to the scripture recorded in Gen. iii. 24. I wish some of the ready writers would show how this text harmonizes with the tenor of the Scriptures.

Dear brethren Beebe, will you please give your views on Matt. xxiii. 15? What I want to know is, How can the children of wrath be made any more the subject of wrath in any way? The Scriptures testify that God is omnipotent, omniscient, and omnipresent. How then can the subjects of wrath be made worse in any sense? God is unchangeable, and his hand has fixed the bounds of the ocean, that its waters are confined to the limits which he has set. I ask for information, and not for controversy. In the hope of life in Christ Jesus, your brother,

W. N. DAVIS.

EXTRAORDINARY OFFER!

FROM now until further notice is given any one who is now a subscriber, and whose subscription is paid up, may send us new subscribers at one dollar a year; but no one, either new or old subscriber, can get the paper from this office for themselves at less than the regular rates. Any one who is not now a subscriber can have the benefit of the above terms by sending two dollars for their own subscription, and one dollar each for additional new subscribers.

Please make no mistake about the above terms. No one, either new or old subscriber, can send to this office and get the paper for themselves for less than the regular rates; but if any of our paid-up subscribers choose to sacrifice their commission and take the new subscriber for one dollar, that is their matter.

EXPIRATION OF ONE DOLLAR SUBSCRIPTIONS.

WITH each issue of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES a number of subscriptions expire of those who were placed on our list last year at one dollar. We have supplied them the paper at an actual loss, and cannot afford to continue them long over time on an uncertainty of their renewing at regular rates. Please look to your date, and if your time is out renew immediately, or we shall be obliged to discontinue your name. If you are not now prepared to send the money, but would like to have your subscription continued, if you will so inform us we will continue your paper, and wait a reasonable time for the pay.

INQUIRIES AFTER TRUTH.

St. JOE, Ark., Feb. 23, 1891.

WILL any of the dear writers for the SIGNS OF THE TIMES give their views on Revelation xi. 3-13, and oblige me and a number of brethren? We have inquired of many, who say they have no light on the subject. Compliance with this request will give joy to brethren who love the doctrine of the predestination of all things, and the immutability of the eternal purpose of God.

Your unworthy brother,

T. F. DAVIS.

TORONTO, March 23.

WILL Elder Knifton kindly give his views through the SIGNS on John iii. 16?

WOE UNTO HYPOCRITES!

"WOE unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye compass sea and land to make one proselyte, and when he is made, ye make him twofold more the child of hell than yourselves."—Matt. xxiii. 15.

In complying with the request of brother W. N. Davis on this page for our views, we would first call attention to the words of the text above quoted. The Lord does not say that the proselyte is made more the subject of condemnation than he was before he was converted. The comparison presented in the text is between the proselyte and those by whom he was proselyted, or converted. He is twofold more the child of hell than they who have proselyted him.

The Lord uses this expression "the child of hell" in its literal sense as signifying the condition in which the proselyte is left by the work of these hypocrites whom he denounces. It is not to be understood in the popularly received notion of hell as the ultimate state of such as are not redeemed from sin by the blood of Jesus. While it is indeed true that all the children of the natural Adam are already under condemnation as sinners against God, being by the one transgression made sinners in him, it is not of that condemnation that our Lord speaks in the terrible denunciation in our text. Nothing which the natural man does, and nothing which he neglects to do, can deliver him from that guilt in which he is already lost. The best obedience he can render is polluted by the sin which has brought him under the power of death; and consequently he can never deliver himself by any works of obedience to the just requirements of the holy law of God; and it will certainly not be claimed that any works of disobedience could improve his condition. "For if there had been a law given which could have given life, verily righteousness should have been by the law. But the Scripture hath concluded all under sin, that the promise by faith of Jesus Christ might be given to them that believe."—Gal. iii. 21, 22. In accordance with this fact, our Lord declares that "The Son of man is come to save that which was lost."—Matt. xviii. 11. This truth is attested in the individual experience of every subject of the redemption that is in Christ Jesus. They all learn by personal demonstration that they cannot be justified before God by their own efforts. Hence, with one accord, they are brought to confess that "We are all as an unclean thing, and all our righteousnesses are as filthy rags, and we all do fade as a leaf; and our iniquities, like the wind, have taken us away."—Isa. lxiv. 6. Our brother is correct in thinking it impossible that anything could add to the condemnation of those who are thus under sentence of the infinite judgment of God. But the word hell literally means confusion; and that is its meaning, as we understand it, in the expression under consideration. The deluded and bewildered followers of the blind guides whom our Lord here denounces, are twofold more confused and bewildered than the self-righteous teachers who have deceived them.

"Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites!" By reference to the first verse of the chapter containing our text, it will be seen to whom our Lord was speaking. The multitude addressed, included his disciples and the characters whom he condemns in this dreadful woe. As those hypocrites occupied the seat of Moses, the disciples were directed to obey them in whatsoever they should command to be observed; but they were not to follow the example of those hypocrites; "for they say, and do not." It might seem incredible that the true disciples of Jesus should have needed special instruction to avoid such deceitful action; but the saints find in themselves every evil of carnal nature, and are constantly reminded that there is a law in their members warring against the law of their mind, and bringing them into captivity to the law of sin, which is in their members. Therefore the Lord has left on record this special direction for their guidance. At the time when he taught obedience to the commands of those hypocrites, his disciples were with himself under the dominion of that law which God gave to Israel by the hand of Moses; hence, he enjoined submission to the constituted authority which legally represented that divinely appointed dispensation. But when by his death upon the cross of Calvary he blotted out the handwriting of ordinances, nailing them to his cross, he delivered his ransomed people from their dominion. They are no longer to look to Moses for guidance, since Jesus is the end of the law for righteousness unto every one that believes. The natural mind of the saints still seeks to find the dead body of Moses, as a ruler by whom they are to be guided; but by the grace of God they are called out of that bondage into the glorious liberty of the sons of God in the gospel kingdom of Christ. The dreadful condemnation of the King of righteousness is the woe which rests upon all who would be made perfect by the works of their own obedience to the law of Moses. That woe falls with terrible weight upon all those Judaizing teachers who would again entangle the saints in that yoke of bondage. Such are included in the denunciation as spoken by our Lord and written in our text.

As recognized rulers and teachers under the Mosaic dispensation, the scribes and Pharisees represent all that is included in that system of righteousness. They claimed superior perfection in the understanding of that law, and in the strictness of their obedience to its injunctions; yet their hypocrisy was manifested in the rendering of literal service to its outward requirements, while they violated its righteous directions in the spirit of them. So, even while directing his followers to observe and do whatsoever those rulers should bid them, our dear Lord warned them not to do as those hypocrites did. The woe here pronounced upon those rulers, still applies to all religious teachers who follow their example. While such may make a fair appearance in the sight of their fellow men, they cannot deceive the Judge who sees the secret thoughts of all hearts. May the grace of God keep from such hypocrisy all who love his holy name!

"For ye compass sea and land to make one proselyte." This zealous anxiety to make proselytes, that is, to convert people to their own notions, is itself a carnal principle, and it is but the development of the selfish pride which dwells in the depraved heart of man in his natural state. While men are engaged in this work they vainly imagine they are doing service to God, and that they will in the future receive a large reward for their labors; but they are as blindly mistaken as were their prototypes, the hypocrites denounced by the Master. Many professed christians in our day are thus identified with the enemies of the gospel addressed in our text. Although they may have deceived themselves by their religious zeal, the Lord knows the sinful pride which moves them in their great efforts to make proselytes. But it is more especially our desire to call attention to the possibility of the true followers of Christ being deceived by this fleshly spirit. When actuated by it they are so blinded by its delusive power that they really think they are moved by zeal for the glory of their Redeemer. It may seem rather a startling suggestion, but there is a sense in which even the saints may come under the denunciation of our Lord. When they are led by confidence in their own strength to suppose that they can render valuable service to the Lord by their efforts to make proselytes, they are deceived by their fleshly pride, and the result will not fail to make the deception manifest. If they imagine that their efforts have been successful, their carnal pride will be gratified; or if the Lord rebukes them by defeating their efforts, they will feel mortified, and perhaps, like Jonah, they may think they do well to be angry. Both pride and anger are works of the flesh. Wherever found they must be consumed with the spirit of the mouth of the Lord, and destroyed with the brightness of his coming.—2 Thess. ii. 8. That coming of the Lord is in the experience of the saints when by the Spirit of truth their errors are made manifest.

"And when he is made, ye make him twofold more the child of hell than yourselves." Not only are those who are deceived by false teachers involved in all the delusion and falsehood by which their deceivers are blinded, but in addition to the deception they are bewildered by the confidence that their teachers understand the truth better than they can claim to do. Thus they are doubly bound in the meshes of the net of error, and their confusion, or "hell," is twofold more confirmed than the error of their teachers. The bondage of such proselytes is made stronger just in proportion to their confidence in those by whom they have been converted. There can be no doubt that this severe denunciation was addressed by Jesus primarily to the self-righteous scribes and Pharisees, who are in the Scriptures the prototype of all will-worshiping religionists. Therefore every false teacher who claims to be a competent guide for those who are ignorant, is included under the awful woe here spoken against such by the Judge of quick and dead. But there is also serious reason for those who fear God to examine themselves, lest they be found transgressors against the principle of the holy commandment of the Lord. It is true that they cannot destroy the eternal life which they have received by the gift of their divine Redeemer; and therefore they cannot be everlastingly banished from his presence in eternal glory; yet there is a sense in which they may in their present experience suffer the fearful chastening of his rod, so that their distress is well described by the inspired singer of Israel, "The sorrows of death compassed me, and the pains of hell got hold upon me; I found trouble and sorrow."—Ps. cxvi. 3. There can be no question of the fact that this is the experience of a subject of electing love and grace; yet the same word "hell" is used in expressing his suffering, as it is in our text; and we understand its meaning as applied to the subjects of salvation to be the same in both passages of the inspired testimony. This is also witnessed in the personal experience of the saints even in the present time.

As far as those who are still dead in sin are embrace in the proselyting of the zealous hypocrites, their condition before God is not in any degree changed by their being converted. But they are so deluded and confused by the false teaching which they have received that they are made twofold more the subjects of darkness than their hypocritical teachers themselves. This is in their natural understanding, in which they are made to think themselves subjects of divine favor through the labors of their deceivers; and in such proselyting the grace of our Lord Jesus is utterly ignored. While this deception cannot be detected by the dead who know not anything, it confirms them in that trust in themselves which is natural to those who are destitute of the light of the knowledge of the glory of God as it is revealed in the face of Jesus Christ. The result of such conversation is seen in the difference between natural indifference, like Gallio, caring for none of these things, and the rage of bigotry, persecuting unto death the disciples of the Lord Jesus. See Acts ix. and xviii. The most bitter and violent enemies of the church of Christ have ever been those who claimed to be extremely religious; while the world of those who make no such pretense has regarded the doctrine of Jesus with quiet indifference. In this way, the success of those hypocritical proselyters makes the condition of their deluded followers worse than when they were utterly careless of the subject of salvation.

When it is the pleasure of the Lord to reveal his truth to one who has been subjected to the instruction of such false teachers, much perplexity is realized by him in discriminating between what has been received in their doctrines, and the truth which he has received by the revelation of the Spirit. In this confusion many of the dear people of God are made to suffer much before they are completely loosed from the errors received by tradition from such blind guides as are condemned in our text. The justice of our God in avenging his own elect is clearly manifest in the woe pronounced by our Lord against their deceivers.

With regard to the text in Genesis, to which our brother refers, we will only remark that no discrepancy appears to our view between that statement and the whole revelation which God has given in the Scriptures. Yet we unite with him in requesting the views of some of our brethren upon the subject.

POETRY.

MY BIRTHDAY—APRIL 1, 1817.

HOW GREAT thy goodness, Lord, appears Through all my days and weeks and years!

Thy mercies let me now look o'er,
On this my birthday—seventy-four.

Thy power protected me from harm
While living on my father's farm;
A helpless child, a feeble flower,
Devoid of knowledge, will or power.

Childhood and youth, beset with snares,
And dangers thick, with childish cares,
When I was thoughtless, vain and blind,
Bear witness thou wast ever kind.

When I look back to forty-three,
When thou didst first appear to me,
And count the years to seventy-four,
I blush that I have learned no more.

So long to be in grace's school,
And yet to find myself a fool;
For while I ought to be a man,
I am a child of but a span.

With shame my life I now look o'er,
On this my birthday—seventy-four;
Yet I cannot forget that mount
Where God revealed the crystal fount.

Through many trials I have come,
And God will safe conduct me home;
For I shall read my title clear
When perfect love casts out all fear.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

Mrs. Adaline D. Wollenhaupt, beloved wife of Henry Wollenhaupt, departed this mortal life at her home in this city on Saturday, Dec. 13th, 1890, after an illness of several months of Bright's disease, aged 34 years, 8 months and 1 day.

Mrs. Wollenhaupt was born in Binghamton, Broome Co., N. Y., April 12th, 1856, and was a daughter of Simeon Parker. Her father and mother preceded her to the grave. She was united in marriage with Mr. Wollenhaupt on Dec. 29th, 1888. Although she had not made a public profession of her faith in the Redeemer, yet we were satisfied that she was a subject of the grace of God, and was a lover of the truth, being found in the public assemblies of the saints when opportunity offered.

The funeral services were held on Monday, Dec. 15th, and were conducted by Elder Benton Jenkins; after which her mortal remains were deposited in Hillside Cemetery, in this city.—Ed.

By request of brother John Mattock, I attempt to chronicle the death of his wife, sister Margaret E. Mattock.

Sister Mattock was born near Benton, Polk Co., Tenn., in 1855. Her parents were Robert and Lydia Harrison. She was married to brother John Mattock Aug. 24th, 1873. To them were born five children, two of whom went before her to their eternal home. One died Aug. 7th, 1889, and the other Sept. 1st of the same year. Sister Mattock was a kind and loving wife, an affectionate mother, a good neighbor, and a consistent and orderly-walking christian, and was loved by all who knew her. She fell a victim to that dreadful disease, consumption, and lingered a long time, but bore her afflictions very patiently; and about Dec. 29th, 1890, she quietly fell asleep in the arms of her blessed Redeemer.

Sister Mattock joined the church on the third Sunday night in November, together with her husband and two others, at an appointment made by the writer for her special benefit. The meeting was held at her house. She was in bed at the time, not able to be baptized, and died without baptism.

She leaves a husband, three children, and many relatives and friends to mourn her absence. I would say to the bereaved ones, Weep not for her, for she is gone where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest, to rest forever in the sunshine of God's unsullied glory, and to bask and bloom in eternal fruition of youth and love.

JONAS C. SIKES.

GREENVILLE, Texas, March 23, 1891.

OUR beloved friend, William Stratton, died at his residence in Richardson Co., Neb., March 19th, 1891, of pneumonia.

He was born in Huntingdonshire, England, Jan. 25th, 1818, and came to America in the year 1836. He stopped first in Indiana, where in 1840 he was married to Miss Charlotte Watts, and in 1850 moved to Illinois, where he remained until 1873. He then came to Nebraska and bought the place on which he lived until removed to his heavenly home on high. Mr. Stratton has for many years been a Baptist in principle, and a lover of the doctrine of grace, being uncompromising with any of the isms of the day. He was one of the little ones who could never see his way clear in duty's path, having never joined the church; but he was one of her most zealous supporters, as many of the brethren can attest. His experience was very bright, and he led a good life, showing the work of the Spirit. While we mourn our loss, we can surely say it is his eternal gain. May the good Lord strengthen and sustain our beloved sister in her bereavement.

He leaves a widow and four children, besides a number of grandchildren, to mourn their loss. He was buried in the church-yard near his home, to await the general resurrection, being followed by a large concourse of his sorrowing neighbors and friends, after a short service by Elder Isaac Irwin, assisted by the writer.

J. H. RING.

CHENEY, Neb., March 24, 1891.

DIED—In Acton, Maine, March 15th, 1891, sister Almeda J. Grant, wife of brother Horatio Grant, aged 41 years, 10 months and 12 days.

Her disease was consumption, which caused her to suffer much, but she was patient through it all. I baptized her in the fellowship of the Old School Baptist Church in this place in the year 1873, and she ever continued a worthy member until her death, always going to her meetings when she could. Brother Purington and family will remember that one year ago last June she with her husband and myself attended their association, and stopped through the same at their house. She enjoyed the meeting well, and was glad that she was there.

A large number of people were at her funeral, and it seemed to me to be as solemn a funeral as I ever attended. She has left her husband, five children, father, two mothers-in-law, brothers, and many other relatives and friends, to mourn.
WM. QUINT.

NORTH BERWICK, Maine.

SISTER Lucinda Schneider departed this life at her home near Oelwein, Fayette Co., Iowa, on Sunday morning, March 22d, 1891, aged 57 years.

Sister Schneider had been twice married, both her husbands preceding her to the grave. Her last illness was of short duration. Her disease was pneumonia. She always attended our meetings when able, and was a humble, quiet christian, low in her own esteem. We shall miss her at our little meetings, but we hope she has gone

"Where congregations ne'er break up,
And sabbaths never end."

Safely landed on the shores of eternal bliss, O what a rest! No more to feel the billows of trial, affliction and sorrow which at times go over the weary pilgrim in this time state. Glorious exchange! When we contemplate it, O how our souls sometimes long to lay down this mortal clay, and on the wings of immortality soar to that blissful abode where the inhabitants shall no more say, "I am sick." May God in his infinite love and tender compassion graciously prepare us for that solemn hour.

I was away from home at one of my appointments when the sad news arrived, but was just in time to take the train (without going home) to reach the place, where I tried to speak words of comfort to the bereaved children from Revelation vii. 16, 17.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date, this date denotes the time at which your subscription expires, and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

THE CHURCH HISTORY,

FROM CREATION TO A. D. 1885.

CORRESPONDENCE.

OPELIKA, Ala., March 23, 1891.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS:—Dear brethren in Christ, as I trust, and the household of faith, who love the doctrine of grace and salvation. It is on my mind now to write again for the SIGNS, that medium of correspondence by which we hope many of the dear children of God have been comforted and instructed in the things of his kingdom; who have been thereby comforted time and again, and who feel edified by reading the communications which come so regularly. There is a desire upon the part of some of the subscribers that I should write; and in compliance with their request, and a desire, as far as I am able, to comfort, I have, I trust, this mind to-day to write. I know that of myself I can do nothing. I trust I have realized the truth of Jesus' words, who said, "Without me ye can do nothing." "Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it: except the Lord keep the city, the watchman waketh but in vain." Having passed through the valley of Baca, and knowing what Lodebar means, and having been made to say, O my barrenness! my leanness! and having been in the dark, I trust I can sympathize with those who have such places in their pilgrimage to pass through. Indeed I have doubted time and again whether I ought to have ever gone to the church; and I feel so often to shrink in my feelings, when I think of what a preacher should be, and how far short I come of these things; and it is a mystery how and why the churches have ever sought or desired my services. Again and again have I felt like I would tell the brethren they were mistaken in me, and I was altogether unfit to preach in the holy name of Jesus; and as I have before said, I have tried to preach, and tried to quit, and could do neither. In all the Scriptures is there not a remedy for this? and is there not a word of comfort for those who are thus traveling through this valley of sorrows and wilderness of tears, who know what it is to eat their sorrowful meat, and to eat the bitter herbs? I trust there are words of consolation in the sacred volume designed for such pilgrims; and I would offer a few of them, which I trust have comforted me. While John was banished in the isle of Patmos for the word of God, he saw many visions and revelations from God and his throne. One vision was, "After this I beheld, and lo, a great multitude, which no man could number, of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues, stood before the throne, and before the Lamb, clothed with white robes, and palms in their hands, and cried with a loud voice, saying, Salvation to our God, which sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb. And all the angels stood round about the throne, and about the elders and the four beasts, and fell before the throne on their faces, and worshiped God, saying, Amen: blessing, and glory, and wisdom, and honor, and power, and might be unto our God forever and ever. Amen. And one of the elders answered, saying unto me, What are these which are arrayed in white robes? and whence came they? And I said unto him, Sir, thou knowest. And he said unto me, These are they which came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb."—Rev. vii. 9-14. When such Scriptures are presented to us in our tribulation it enables us to bear it patiently; and especially when the Lord applies it, and sanctifies it to us. It is that wine which is well refined, and makes us forget our sorrow; for this is the wine of the kingdom, which makes the heart merry, in hope of that resurrection and that immortal bliss which awaits the redeemed of God who are here planted in the likeness of his death, and who daily go groaning, and waiting for the day of redemption. Paul would comfort the brethren with the grand thought, "If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable." The hope of the resurrection had been called in question, and Paul stood forth declaring the certainty of the resurrection of the saints of God. "If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable." But that assurance which Paul gives in his testimony is consolation from Christ. I have been able to draw comfort from the glorious doctrine of the resurrection. This is the promise of God, and we are assured that his promise will not fail. He who promised is immutable, and his word will not fail. Though heaven and earth pass away, yet his word must be fulfilled, and not one jot nor tittle shall pass till all is fulfilled. The law is cold, and without mercy; but his gracious promise is warm with love, and cannot fail. He has promised his people a resurrection from the dead; and to the saint on the shores of time, and on the stormy banks of tribulation, the bright beyond is calm and serene. Cut off from sin, and every vestige of the hateful principle, he shall be holy, and shall pass into the society of the redeemed of God. I have thought that the joys of the redeemed were beyond the power of conception or comprehension in our mortal state. Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him. O how many figures and metaphors are used in the Scriptures to teach us something of those things which await us. "For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory, while we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen: for the things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal."—2 Cor. iv. 17, 18. Those whom John saw had passed through the same ordeal; like the wonderful witnesses for the truth whom Paul cited to the Hebrews, as "a cloud of witnesses," who had been stoned, and sawn asunder, and made to wander, in dens and caves in the earth; who had been destitute, tormented and afflicted; of whom Paul also said the world was not worthy. They had reached the goal of their faith, the end of their sufferings, the salvation of their souls; and before the throne of God and the Lamb, how they could ascribe salvation, and wisdom, and honor, and glory, to his great name who died and gave himself for them; who shed his precious blood, and unloosed the seven seals, and delivered them, who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage. How wonderful and full are the gracious promises of our God, covering the needs of his poor, afflicted people here in this vale of sorrow. The full and complete salvation which is in Christ Jesus was shown forth in this multitude; men who had fallen in Adam, and arisen in Christ; lost in sin, and then saved in glory; white robes, washed in that precious blood which sanctifies and cleanses from all sin. They were engaged in praises, even the praises of him who had redeemed them from all iniquity. They had risen above the tide of tribulation, and had entered into the joy of their Lord and Redeemer. This was to comfort John, and to be passed on down to us as a word of comfort and an assurance of our redemption from sin. John was also commanded to write to the churches; and this is church property; and therefore the members of his body are entitled to the benefits thereof; and may the glorious Lord apply it to his poor, afflicted children here, who go bowed down, writing bitter things against themselves. I feel for them, and would, by the mercy and grace of God, remind the dear saints of these precious things in the mountain of his holiness, which is for the poor, tempest-tossed child here in this time world. We are sojourners here. As Jesus was, so are we in the world. He was a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief. Paul also said, "Wherefore seeing we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us; and let us run with patience the race set before us, looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith; who for the joy that was set before him endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God. For consider him who endured such contradiction of sinners against himself, lest ye be weary and faint in your minds." Jesus suffered for us, and we follow the Captain of our salvation, who was made perfect through sufferings. Do we expect to go to heaven on flowery beds of ease? Paul regarded the believer as a soldier; and the thought connected with a soldier is warfare, toil and suffering. Hence Paul exhorts Timothy to endure hardness as a good soldier. We are not leaders, but followers, in this great conflict. We are also assured of the victory, which is sure to come. We will finally overcome all doubts and fears, and even death itself. When we are called home to the city of peace, then the conflict will be ended, and the shouts of victory and triumph in the blood of the Lamb will be the glorious song.

These are a few thoughts which have occurred to me. The promise is that we shall reach the celestial city. The highest ecstasy here is but a foretaste of the everlasting bliss of the redeemed, where not a sigh shall be known, where a tear shall not be seen, where the wicked cease from troubling, where the weary be at rest. We are said to be sojourners, as our fathers were. We seek a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God. We read of the city, whose streets are of gold, and whose gates are of pearl; the clear crystal water, the river of the water of life, and the tree of life. Here in the church these things are manifest, as a foretaste of the true joy of the redeemed. But Paul says, "Now we see through a glass darkly" (dimly); but then we shall see clearly, and know as we are known. Blessed thought! Some have asked, "Shall we know each other there?" We shall be much wiser. Human knowledge shall vanish away, and the knowledge of divine things will supercede all human knowledge. In the grave all the Adamic relations will be dissolved, and we will arise in newness of life, even of divine life, and will not be known by earthly relations, but only by our relation to Christ; for we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is. Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God; neither doth corruption inherit incorruption. Flesh is mortal. "That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit." We are taught by Paul, "It is sown a natural body; it is raised a spiritual body." That is enough. We are all agreed on that. It seems to settle the question in my mind that it is a spiritual body, wholly prepared and capacitated to enter that holy sphere where there is no sorrow, sickness, pain nor death. With the poet we sing,

"There is a land of pure delight,
Where saints immortal reign,
Infinite day excludes the night,
And pleasures banish pain.

There everlasting spring abides,
And never-withering flowers:
Death, like a narrow sea, divides
This heavenly land from ours.

Sweet fields, beyond the swelling flood,
Stand dress'd in living green;
So to the Jews old Canaan stood,
While Jordan roll'd between.

But timorous mortals start and shrink
To cross this narrow sea,
And linger, shivering, on the brink,
And fear to launch away.

O! could we make our doubts remove,
Those gloomy doubts that rise,
And see the Canaan that we love,
With unobscured eyes.;

Could we but climb where Moses stood,
And view the landscape o'er;
Not Jordan's stream nor death's cold flood
Should fright us from the shore."

I will here close. I submit the above. If you think it will be of any service to the brethren, it is at your disposal. With love and desire that the blessings of the Lord may rest upon the household of faith, I am yours in hope,

W. LIVELY.

SPENCERVILLE, Ohio, Jan. 27, 1891.

DEAR BROTHER BEEBE:—I feel to express my gratitude to you for kindly trusting me to the paper this year. I do not know that I feel as well for stopping it the last year; but I now feel that I would rather have it once a month, even at two dollars, than any other that I know of. Let me be held responsible for this preference, if wrong. I once saw a quotation taken from a correspondence in the SIGNS to the effect that it was the SIGNS that claimed to be the best paper. If correspondents claim it, they need not blame the SIGNS nor its editors. I love the SIGNS best, because it speaks out most of my heart and experience; and yet I dare not claim that even it is perfect. I am glad, however, to see the apparent humility manifested by some writers who seem to be weak in the faith, but who do not, in the SIGNS at least, feel to fight the doctrine that they call strong meat. If that were the worst we had to feel, there would be but very little trouble among our brethren. I have been asked if I thought that "universal predestination" ought to be a test of fellowship. I cheerfully answered no; but it does not always stop there. There are those who cannot endure it, and denounce and condemn it. With those I have no fellowship. A sister in the Fairfield Church, Michigan, where my membership then was, felt so bad that she finally told the church she did not know that it would be right for her to commune, as she could not see the absolute predestination of all things; but she expressed herself as willing that the brethren who could should have the liberty of their faith in it. That settled it. All heartily felt to bear with her, and no more was thought of it, that I know of; but it is not always so. An old minister in the course of his travels met brother L. L. Delano, late of Wood Co., Ohio, and said, "I want to warn you against that young man in Michigan [referring to me], for he has embraced that dangerous doctrine of predestination of all things." In correspondence with him on that subject, even after claiming that he did not fault brethren who could see it, he said, "If it is necessary to believe that God predestinated all the evil that ever did or ever will take place in the world, it must be confessed that I lack faith in God." These are substantially his words. He took no pains to reconcile his remark to brother Delano with his willingness for brethren to have their liberty. This was about twenty years ago.

I wish to say here that the apostle said, "Laying aside all malice, and all guile, and hypocrisies, and envies, and all evil speakings, as new-born babes, desire the sincere milk of the word, that ye may grow thereby." If brethren cannot see, it is not essential for them to say that they do see. It would be hypocrisy. If they say that they cannot see, and appear humble (as all the children of God should) at one place or to one person, and then speak positively opposite at another place and to other persons, this is hypocrisy, and is sure to offend. It cannot be otherwise. There can be no growth in grace, peace and love in a church with such practices. The apostle says, Lay it aside. Sometimes I think that certain passages are quoted entirely out of place to show that predestination is the strong meat, and that experience and exhortation and admonition are the milk. Let us examine the testimony and see. Paul says (Rom. xiv. 1, 2), "Him that is weak in the faith receive ye, but not to doubtful disputations. For one believeth that he may eat all things: another, who is weak, eateth herbs." Not one word is said as to any doctrine whatever. It only had reference to the eating of meats and the keeping of days. See also 1 Corinthians viii., where no reference whatever is had to any doctrine. Let us trace the result of such logic as is used by those who apply the term in these places to the doctrine. It would result in New Schoolism in full. They all refer to these passages to prove that nearly all kinds of doctrine must be tolerated in their bodies. Here they have even one whom I have good evidence to believe is a Universalist. If "meat" means doctrine, then "For meat [doctrine] destroy not the work of God." But this will not do; for by so using it all doctrine must be discarded, as there is no reference to any particular doctrine in those connections, and may apply to one as well as another.

Dear child of God, no matter who you are, nor where you are, nor what you think of me, nor what you have said about me, let us try to look this matter up in reference to our experience. We must begin it in weakness, like new-born babes; and what is most applicable to us in such a case? Doctrine, of course. It must in some way meet our needs, even though we cannot understand it. What does a new-born babe know of the elements of sincere milk, or of meat either, as for that matter? But it does know that it desires and receives milk, as a necessary and gratifying nourishment. What was your first desire of God, your every thought, or expressed prayer? Was it not to know what God thought of you, what he wanted of you, and, in short, what his will was concerning you? You may not have thought about the word "predestination" when you wanted to know God's will about yourself; but it was in it, even if you did not know it, just as the necessary elements of nourishment were in the sincere milk that flowed from your mother's breast, and your lack of knowledge was being supplied by every word which you first learned to speak.

Now let us apply experience or admonition to a new-born babe, and ask, What power has it to even tell its experience, or profit by the telling of that of others, or what power to obey admonition or exhortation? Nay, it must first rely upon the tender mother's care; and the experience of older ones it cannot know. Even so no child of God, just born again, can possibly tell a large or protracted experience. It has felt its power, and that was the will of God. "Born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God"—of the will of God. "Of his own will begat he us with the word of truth;" and that is what every child of God, new-born, desires to know, and that is what they are reconciled to. Now it will do to apply the preaching to them, to comfort them. They are weak, and God is able to provide for them. Does not that show his power? They feel ignorant. Preach to them that God knows how to care for them. They find that they cannot do as they wish to. Preach to them that God never fails. Is not that predestination, and just suited to comfort new-born babes in Christ? Yes, there is just where I feel to be yet; but I could not eat the preaching of duties until the power of God had prepared me for it. I could not feel that it was right for me to be baptized until God wrought the desire of obedience in my heart. Then I could obey; but not until I first felt that it was his will. His purpose then, was in that will. Does not this look just like Paul's preaching at Athens, where he first described his God and Savior? Did he hide the absolute decree of God? Hear him tell of that God of whom they were ignorant. He says, "Hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation." Just take in all there is in that, dear babe in Christ. It cannot hurt you nor me. There is more in it than I can analyze now; but it has all things in it that can possibly constitute or relate to all nations of men. How infinite! how blessed! how fearful! And yet to feel that God doeth it, how consoling! for he doeth all things well. We pronounce it well by faith; but we must possess that faith before any preaching can do us good. So at Athens the people were divided: some believed, and clave to Paul. Now which is the sincere "milk of the word?" The doctrine; for it is first needed to comfort. Then experience; for it bears testimony of the doctrine. Then admonition; for it, together with obedience, fulfills the doctrine, and follows as declaring what experience has shown to be true.

Dear brethren, we who believe fully in the predestination of all things, does this not place doctrine as milk, experience as herbs, and admonition as meat? I do not feel to demand a confession of my faith on this division of thought; but I cannot compromise the doctrine so far as to have brethren tell me that I shall not preach it, nor allow them to deride it, without defending it.

The foregoing, imperfect as it is, was laid aside, as I feared to crowd too hastily into the SIGNS; but on returning yesterday from a visit among brethren and sisters in Michigan, and in an adjoining county in this state, I felt to rejoice in some feeble sense of God's great mercy and changeless love. Though I have suffered much by evil-designing persons, who love not the truth, I have great reason for gratitude to God for such unmerited favors.

Where I attended meeting on Saturday and Sunday I found peace, love and fellowship abounding, and sat under the ministration of the gospel of our saving God with joy. Elder J. G. Ford, and a licentiate, brother B. F. Hutchinson, of Findley, were divinely blessed, I trust, with the gifts of edification for the church, and all enjoyed their ministry. May God sustain them both; brother Ford, in his declining years, with exalted strength, and our dear younger brother Hutchinson with humility and zeal. They are both sound and faithful.

As ever, in bonds,

A. B. BREES.

LEESBURGH, Va., March 20, 1891.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—The devil (I suppose it is he) has oftentimes of late made me almost believe that there is no such thing as the "divine nature," which we read about in the gospel, in me nor in any one else. I have done so much that I thought I never would do, and have told others that they ought not to do, and have seen and known of brethren doing what I once thought they never would do, I am so sick of man that I feel like spewing the whole generation out of my mouth. But such letters as I inclose you compel me to believe that there is in man something better than man; and I wish you to publish the letter, if in your judgment you think best. It does seem to me that this is the quiet, silent working of the Lord, and after all "Out of the mouths of babes and sucklings thou hast perfected praise." My experience teaches me that it is better to be governed by the spirit of the meek and lowly ones than by great and knowing ones, when there is no spirit in you to govern you; and if there is you will always find yourself in perfect fellowship with the meek and lowly.

Your brother, I hope,

E. V. WHITE.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y., March 11, 1891.

ELDER WHITE—DEAR BROTHER:—I hope you will forgive me for thus addressing you, and taking the privilege to write to you. It seems impressed on my mind, and I dare not resist it, as it seems the fear of the Lord is with me, and I do not know why I feel so. It is the first time that I ever attempted to write any of my experience, so I will leave it with you to judge whether it is of the Lord or not.

At the close of your sermon here you said you hoped that we would carry those things home with us for meditation; and, dear brother, I for one hope that I had a refreshing season in calling to mind the many ways in which the Lord leads his people about and instructs them. My little hope grew strong, and I was made to feel that I was one of that number that John saw, who came up out of great tribulation, and had washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. In your sermon you showed the two lands, Egypt and the land of Canaan, or the two systems of religion, Christ and antichrist, which to my mind was most beautiful; for well do I remember the time when I was in the land of Egypt, and planted and watered with the foot, and how much trouble I had because my plants did not grow according to my work.

At the early age of thirteen years I joined the Methodist Church, and expected to work my way to heaven. I went to Sunday School, and attended all their meetings. I prayed three times a day, when I did not forget it. I read the Bible, committed to memory chapter after chapter, tried to do good in all things as far as I could see, and was proud because I could keep ahead of the rest. I could always remember more than my friends around me, and so I worked on and on. At my earliest recollection I had a great desire to be a christian, and to be a devoted follower of Christ and a beloved disciple; and as John was Christ's beloved disciple, I thought by my good works to attain to that degree. So you see, dear brother, how I tried to plant and water with the foot; but there came a time when I could not plant, neither could I water, for the very earth became to me as a furnace of fire, my springs were all dried, and I stood alone, as one on a housetop. I had often read in the Bible in those days that "Two women shall be grinding at the mill; the one shall be taken, and the other left." I verily thought the day had come to me, and I was left to all eternity; for God had forsaken me, my earthly hopes were all gone, and I could see none in heaven. I was plunged in a gulf of dark despair. I, a wretched sinner, was without one cheerful beam of hope, or spark of glimmering day. O how much I thought of Christ when he trod the wine-press alone, and of the people there was none with him, none to uphold, none to comfort, no, not one. This, dear brother, was my condition for weeks. I would lay me down at night and rise in the morning, until I became so weak and worn out that I was sick in bed, and caught at the least earthly thing for comfort; but it slipped. Dear brother, I sat down to die. Well do I remember (it is now twenty years ago, and your sermon brought it to my mind anew) all my works under the law, which was my school-master to Christ, or in other words, prepared me to enter the land of Canaan, if indeed I have. I hope it was the Lord that led me thus far; and one thing I could say, "Whereas I was once blind, I now see." The time came when I sat down to die, and expected never to rise again alive. I do not know how long I sat in this way, but from a half-hour to an hour or more, when something said to me, "Come, let us go away." As I looked around no one was near; but I arose to my feet and walked out into the yard. Things seemed changed to my sight, and I wondered what was the matter. I heard the birds singing, and it seemed to me that they were praising the Lord. I looked at the ground, and every little plant seemed to grow for a purpose, and the Lord had predestinated it so. Though my afflictions were great, the Lord said, "My grace is sufficient for thee;" and I rejoiced in a loving Savior that a little while before I knew nothing about. Everything was prepared for me, for I did not do a thing to merit this salvation. I was going the other way. I began to wonder where it came from, and these words came into my mind with much comfort, "The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth: so is every one that is born of the Spirit." My poor soul began to wonder, Is this of the Spirit? has the Lord had pity and compassion on one so unworthy as me? for I had to say,

"Nothing in my hand I bring;
Simply to thy cross I cling."

At this point I began to think I was an Old School Baptist. At that time my father and mother came to my house (for I was then married), and I told my mother that I was an Old School Baptist. She replied that she did not care what her children were, if they were only good christians. I was a great mystery to them, as well as to myself; for father and mother were Methodists from my childhood, and I knew nothing of Old School Baptists, only by hearsay, although there was a church in Warwick, and I had lived there all my life. So day after day my mind traveled, although my affliction was great, and I was made to see that the Lord was with me. I began to talk with a dear sister of the church, and she invited me to go with her to the next church meeting. I said no; but one morning before the time came for the meeting, as I awoke these words came to me, "Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight." This I told her of, and she said it was a command for me to go and tell the brethren what I hoped the Lord had done for me. I had a great love for them, and it did not take much to make me willing; so I went to the Warwick Church and told the brethren there, in my poor, weak way, what the Lord had done for my soul, and to my surprise they received me, and I was baptized the next day by Elder J. N. Badger. He then lived in Warwick; and, dear brother, as we walked into the water I thought, Being buried with Christ in baptism, to rise and walk in newness of life. O how beautiful to my mind it did seem, though sorrow and sighing came from my heart, for my condition in life was such that I could see nothing to live for. From that time until the present I have many times gone down to the Red Sea, and was obliged to stand still, and wait to see the salvation of the Lord; and many times I ask myself the question,

"Am I a soldier of the cross,
A follower of the Lamb?
And shall I fear to own his cause,
Or blush to speak his name?"

"Must I be carried to the skies
On flowery beds of ease,
While others fought to win the prize,
And sail'd through bloody seas?"

This is some of my experience, which I give for the reason of the hope that is within me; but I feel that I have come short in expression of the real virtue. You remember your own and Elder Jenkins' very brief visit at our house. You remarked that the gospel was for the poor and needy. O how much Minnie and I regretted that your time was so short, for we felt the need of some word of comfort. I have not been able to attend meeting since last November on account of sickness in my family. We began to feel lonesome indeed. Once in a while some dear sister would drop in with some message of love, or Dr. Emory would speak a word of consolation, for he attended my children in their sickness. Those words came as the dew of heaven, helping me to bear my burden, which is heavy upon me. It is my desire that I may have been given me to bear with meekness what the Lord may send; but this vile nature of mine is very rebellious.

I now feel it time that I brought this epistle to a close, lest I weary you, or trespass on your time. Your unworthy sister in hope,

MARY E. HYATT.

WILLARD, Va., March 17, 1891.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—I inclose you a letter from sister Mary J. Cox, which I have her consent to submit to you for publication in the SIGNS if you see proper. She is a sister to Elder J. N. Badger, and is isolated from all her brethren, living at a long distance from any church or brethren of our faith; but her letter speaks for itself, breathing the Spirit of the meek and lowly Jesus.

As ever, your brother in hope,

A. B. FRANCIS.

SMITHVILLE, Va., Feb. 13, 1891.

DEAR BROTHER:—I beg that you will pardon the liberty I take in writing to you, but I have desired to do so ever since I read your letter in the SIGNS of December 17th. I have desired to tell you of the comfort it gave me, and of the full and heartfelt fellowship I feel for the great and comforting truth it contains, yet I hesitated to intrude my poor words upon you; but now, on reading your letter in the present number of the SIGNS (Feb. 11th), I find some passages which so deeply touch my own heart that I cannot longer refrain from telling you of the warm love and fellowship of my poor heart for the sweet words of truth which our God has enabled you to speak for the comfort of the poor and afflicted. When you speak of your own experience for many months, of walking in darkness, and feeling that you were forsaken of your God, that he would return no more, when all the "beasts of the forest do creep forth," I felt my heart go out in love and fellowship, my brother; for you so aptly described my own experience for so many long and weary months, when I felt that I was shut up and out from all hope, or the blessed enjoyment of the presence of my God forever. O how dark and dreary were those days, with no ray of light, feeling that all my professions of love for the truth and the dear people of God were professions only, with no heartfelt knowledge of the truth nor real love for his people, and my heart so hard and full of sin and rebellion against the God whom I professed to love and serve. Who can describe the loneliness, dreariness and desolation of those days, weeks and months? When I read or know of any of God's dear, tried ones passing through such deep waters my heart warms with love and fellowship for them, and I long to take them by the hand and tell them of my love.

In these great and heartfelt trials where can a poor sinner find any comfort or hope but in the soul-comfort of truth of God's everlasting, predestinating and electing love? that "the Lord God omnipotent reigneth;" that he saw, yea, marked out every step that his dear, tried people must take; and that it is his loving hand which leads, guides and directs every step, all for their best good and his glory. They cannot have one trial that he does not appoint. My brother, if I could not rest on this rock I could find no resting place, no refuge from the storms and tempests of life. When in the darkest trials he says, "Be still, and know that I am God." Yes, a God of purpose, and not of chance. All things, whether they look to our poor, finite minds to be good or evil, are ordered by him who sees the end from the beginning. I do feel that if the absolute predestination of all things be not true, we have no God to trust in. If he did not see, order and mark out every step that his church should take in her travels through this sin-smitten world, then what have we to trust in? That was done before the foundations of the earth were laid. But thanks be to him, he is God, and besides him there is no other; and he "worketh all things after the counsel of his own will." The Scriptures abundantly prove this, and the experience of all God's dear people attest this great truth. This has ever been a distinguishing mark of Old Baptists, and I do wonder that any who profess to be of that despised few should not believe it; but the Scriptures must be fulfilled, that of our own selves "shall men arise, speaking perverse things, to draw away disciples after them." These are truly "perilous times" for the church; but God is at the helm, and will guide her safely through. He has ever had and ever will have his witnesses for the truth, who fearlessly declare the whole truth, whether men will hear or forbear.

I know not why I write thus to you, my dear brother; I who so often fear that I know nothing of these things in deed and in truth, that all I do know is from the hearing of the ear, and have never been taught them by the Spirit, who alone can reveal them to the heart. I am so dead, so cold, my heart so hard and rebellious, so filled with the cares and vanities of this world. I know by bitter experience that "to be carnally minded is death." I would not have it so. I would know Jesus, and the power of his resurrection. I would that I could feel that life-giving power in my soul; but I am utterly powerless and helpless. My heart is so full of sin that I cannot raise even one cry for help, unless God by his grace gives me that desire, and subdues this selfish, corrupt nature by the power of his love and grace, which I need every hour, yea, every moment of my life, else I fall. Jesus' blood and righteousness is all my plea.

I am glad, dear brother, that you have had the privilege of visiting so many churches and dear brethren, and that the Lord has been with you, to comfort and bless you with a sense of his presence. How sweet and precious is a glimpse of the Sun of righteousness, when these dark clouds have been dispersed by the life-giving rays of that dear Sun. May the Lord sustain you and all the dear brethren, and enable you ever to contend earnestly for that faith which was once delivered unto the saints. When it is well with thee, then in your prayers remember your unworthy sister, if one at all,

MARY J. COX.

P. S.—Dear brother, since writing the foregoing I thought perhaps you would like to hear of sister Louise. She is now in Glasgow with her husband. He is publishing the Glasgow Herald there. She has a daughter nine months old. You may meet her next summer, as she expects to spend some part of the summer at Kenmore with her mother. As for myself, I am left alone in a wilderness, as it were. All my children are in Glasgow. My husband and myself live alone, with a young man who is employed in the office. All the society or preaching I have is through the dear SIGNS, except during the last few summers, when I have been permitted to visit my dear brother and friends in Loudoun and Fauquier. I know not whether I shall have that privilege the coming summer or not. I would like to go very much, and attend our association; but it is so far and out of the way this year that I fear I shall not be able to attend. Remember me in love to all the dear brethren and sisters. My heart is with them, though so far separated in body. The dear Lord is over all, and is not confined to time nor place. If blessed with a sense of his love, prisons will palaces prove; and without that all is vain and empty, no matter what our surroundings may be.

I have enjoyed this last number of the SIGNS. Sometimes the dear Lord grants me this boon, and at other times I can see no beauty in it. Unless the Spirit sets the truth home to the heart all is vain. The flesh profiteth nothing—it is the Spirit that giveth life, is my daily experience.

May the Lord bless you and all the dear brethren, is the earnest prayer of your unworthy sister,

M. J. C.

SOUTHAMPTON, Pa., March 17, 1891.

DEAR BROTHER BEEBE:—Some things must be shared with the brethren, and this letter of our dear brother Anderson is one of them; therefore I send it to you to be published. I have asked him not to cease writing to me for fear I will publish. I will try to exercise as good judgment as I can; but this letter, except the part of it that I have erased, certainly belongs to all the brethren, and I must let them have it. Yours in hope,

SILAS H. DURAND.

DUTTON, Ark., Feb. 13, 1891.

DEAR BROTHER DURAND:—Your letter came last evening. While I was sorry to hear of your feeble health during your trip to Canada, I rejoiced in your joy at your church meeting. We had quite an enjoyable meeting on the fourth Sunday in last month, notwithstanding we have to hold our meetings in a school-house that is rather uncomfortable in winter. One member joined on Saturday. Another minister has moved into the neighborhood, and I hope now, if I stay here, to have a fellow-laborer.

I was aware of the feeling among the brethren and sisters caused by the publication of my letters to you. The many letters that I have received containing expressions of love, sympathy, fellowship and encouragement have tended to deprive our sore afflictions of much of their bitterness, and enabled us to feel, in some measure at least, that the dear Savior has been coming upon the dark waves with the comforting assurance, "Be of good cheer. It is I; be not afraid." The long years that I was a lone wanderer, utterly ignorant of the existence throughout the world of a single companion in tribulation, peculiarly fitted me for enjoying the fellowship of the brethren, notwithstanding it has always been marred to some extent by a pungent sense of my unworthiness; but how comes it that that letter of which I was so much ashamed, and which seemed to expose my imperfections and the vileness of my nature to such a startling extent that none could ever fellowship me after reading it, should have brought such precious letters from the brethren all over the land?

The prospect of my visiting you sometimes seems very dark, and sometimes I tremble at the thought of undertaking it if nothing were in the way; but if the Lord will I hope to go. If it is his will he will open the way. The information contained in your letter will, I think, be of great service to me if I go. I tried, but failed, to get any satisfactory information from the agent here. I am seven miles from St. Paul. I think my wife continues to improve some.

With love to you all, not forgetting the dear little children, I remain your unworthy brother,

C. W. ANDERSON.

FEBRUARY 17.

I CANNOT rest satisfied without writing more. I think I know how you felt on Sunday of your meeting. I have sometimes wondered why one should thus die and be killed all the day long, to enable him to "stand in the temple and speak all the words of this life." But wine, "which cheereth God and man," to be set free from the matter in which it is bound, requires the decomposition of that material. I remember one time a brother from a distance visited our church meeting. A visiting minister was also in attendance. He tried to speak, but had no liberty. He took his seat, and called upon me. I tried to avoid speaking, feeling like you spoke of, and as if I really could not; but some of the brethren began to urge me to speak. My feelings were such that I could hardly get upon my feet. I began to try to talk as best I could, not knowing how I could possibly proceed. After awhile this subject was presented to me, "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." I spoke for some time with more than usual liberty. When I stopped speaking I noticed that the brethren were considerably affected. The brother above referred to seemed almost overjoyed, and could scarcely contain himself. After meeting was over he started home, was taken down with pneumonia, and died. The next time I saw him was when I was called to assist in laying his body in the tomb. He was a precious brother, and had never heard me try to speak until the time above referred to. The thought now occurred to me that if I had yielded to my rebellious feelings and lack of trust in my Maker I should never have had opportunity to speak a word of comfort to him. It deeply affected and made a lasting impression upon me, and the more from the fact that he had been living where he had heard no preaching for a long time, and was aiming on that account to move where there was a church. "Master, we have toiled all night, and taken nothing; nevertheless at thy word I will let down the net." When Peter's net had inclosed a great multitude of fishes, sufficient to fill two ships, till they began to sink, he said, "Depart from me; for I am a sinful man, O Lord."

But perhaps you begin to wish that I could learn when to stop writing.

"TAKE heed unto thyself."—1 Tim. iv. 16.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—I feel impressed to give the readers of the SIGNS a few thoughts relative to the admonition or injunction named above. As a rule we are (I mean the ministry) very free in our expressions concerning our care for the doctrine and the welfare of the saints, which is not out of place, unless we are out of place in neglecting to obey the injunction. Now the apostle by this and many other sayings was teaching Timothy how he should behave himself in the house of God. He doubtless needed the instruction given, as inspiration makes no mistakes. And furthermore, the instruction given by Paul and others, under and by the inspiration of the Spirit of revelation, suffices for the church and her ministry through all her varied dispensations. The church is called a flock, and the ministry are called shepherds. They are to be examples (examples) to the flock over which the Holy Ghost has made them overseers; and they are also commanded to feed the flock. Then how necessary, in view of the varied surroundings and conditions of each individual member of the flock, that the overseer learn from the Scriptures and his own experience the needs thereof. There are many weak and sickly; there are some timid and fearful; and some even boisterous and uproarious. Now the preacher that does not take heed to himself cannot by doctrine, exhortation and reproof maintain an equilibrium sufficient to the good health of the flock. Hence the necessity of the preacher preparing for his work as Paul would have Timothy prepare. How is that? one might inquire. Paul tells him in one place to study to show himself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth; and in another place, to give himself wholly to these things (things that pertain to the doctrine and order of the church); and yet another, to give himself to reading, to exhortation and to doctrine, and to continue in taking heed to himself and to the doctrine, in order to the salvation (keeping separate from the world and its poisonous isms) of himself and those that hear him. His character, or what it should be, is delineated in the preceding (third) chapter. He must be blameless. O think of it! Have I conducted myself in such a way as to stand before my congregation with a good conscience? Have I hammered at the hidden mystery in such way as to freeze the little ones almost to death? Have I almost forsaken the flock for the filth of the world? Have I reveled when coldness and leanness pervaded the flock? Have I hidden under a covert when the wolf was at the door? O preacher, consider your ways and your calling, and ask yourself the question, Have I even tried to discharge my duty? I imagine I hear one saying, Well, I desire to do my whole duty; but I cannot afford to beg, as that would be shameful. But let me tell you it is not necessary that you beg, except at the throne of grace, which you do. But do you preach like you beg? Think of this. Does not the apostle exhort and teach you to rightly divide the word of truth? Tell the members of the King's household their several duties in connection with the doctrine, and be patient in all your duties. Day and night continue to succeed each other, and we need not be surprised that some of our nights appear exceedingly dark, long and wearisome; but rest assured that joy cometh in the morning. While the church (gospel dispensation) was in her infancy, the preachers (at least some of them) suffered the loss of all things for the sake of the cause. Are we any better than they? One thing I know, Some of us at times grow very zealous in appearance, and feeling our dignity and ability, we open our artillery on the earth-works of the Arminians; and if we conclude that we have blown up their magazine, and overturned their fortification, and laid waste their city, what have we done? Look around and see for yourself? It is nothing but a huge pile of dirt, too obnoxious to look upon, and we turn away in disgust. But while all this is in progress, where is the food for the little ones? They have nothing to eat, unless they eat of this pile of dirt, and that makes them sick nigh unto death; and but for the mercy of the Lord, they would surely die. I am exceedingly glad of the mercy of the Lord, else I might have been a murderer. But the mercy of the Lord endures forever. Perhaps some of those stout-hearted fellows who love war and desolation at times (not all the time) will eat heartily of this pile of dirt, and appear to relish it well; but eventually they will vomit it up. Then, O where has our "able sermon" gone? It has turned to vomit. Now would it not be better that we take heed to ourselves, and apply our hearts to wisdom, and feed the flock? God himself will take vengeance upon the world of the ungodly. Should we see an enemy approaching the camp, it is our indispensable duty to give the alarm, and to defend the flock as God gives ability, and victory for us is sure; for God gives that also. Should it become necessary for the welfare of the flock to expose moneyed systems, let us do it valiantly, in the meantime teaching the truth as to giving and receiving; and in a faithful discharge of this duty we will never have much to regret. Brethren grow (as it were) covetous; but the truth is, they are covetous. Can't we afford to tell them this, and more, that it is idolatry? If we cannot afford to do our duty, what can we expect but shame and reproach? Then we do not have to beg for temporal things. We ought never to think of such things. This begging belongs to the class who build earth-works, which Old Baptists shoot pop-guns at when they are idle. But we should not be idle. We should ever be taking heed to ourselves, by industry and economy at home, by labors for the good of the cause, which is dearer than our lives. We should at no time be entangled with the affairs of this life, so that we may serve the church instantly. We should ever be ready to our religious duty, and exhort the brethren to a full discharge of all their duties, and God will bless us. His promise is sure.

Brethren Beebe, I have spun this to much greater length than at first I intended; and I feel that much more could be written, and more ably, by others. I do not wish any brother to even imagine that we would assume to be dictatorial; but I trust that in love for the cause and the general welfare of the saints I was impressed to write. Now I hand it to you; it is at your discretion. I am, I hope, not hard to please, as respects the publication of what I write. I would be glad were I in a condition to subscribe for the SIGNS, but I am financially "let" for the present.

May grace, mercy and truth comfort and help you.

ARLINGTON Tex., Jan. 4, 1891.

SANDUSKY, Ala., March 18, 1891.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS:—We have been shut in here with cold and rain, so that I have been permitted to be at meeting but twice since the new year came in; and part of the time I have been in a very dark, despondent state, and the SIGNS has been the better appreciated, as a visitor coming weekly, laden with the good news and glad tidings of great joy, being filled with palatable and wholesome doctrine, and edifying experience and exhortation. It affords me strength and comfort to read the rich communications and editorials. The communications of Elders Purington and Wagner are worth more than the subscription price of the SIGNS. The experience of brother Anderson, sent by brother Durand, is also worth the price of the paper. I do not refer to these three to disparage any one else. Brother Varnes' article in the SIGNS for February 25th contains profitable advice; but I do not think he fairly understands me, nor the situation of the Baptists here, and in some other places I have heard from. As he so nearly quotes some of my words, I suppose I am the one he points to as agitating the "Mystery of iniquity." I would like to make myself understood; that what I have said concerning certain ones that have held up predestination and its advocates to contempt, and made war and divisions about it, does not apply in the least to those in Illinois or elsewhere that are keeping peace upon the subject. Those who say they cannot see the doctrine as we do here, and have made no war about it, would be received by us, and treated with due courtesy and brotherly kindness; and those who have gone out from us, and called us heretics, Sadducees and two-seeders, and other hard names, when they get weary of the course they have taken, and come back, and say they want peace and union, we are ready to take them in with a confession of their errors; but since they have gone out and left us, they occupy a position between the Predestinarian Baptists and the Arminians. They are not whole Predestinarians nor whole Arminians. I still think they occupy the corresponding place to those Ashdod children, and their speech in their discourses is precisely as I stated; and while they occupy their present position, and continue to manifest their enmity towards us, I cannot witness for them that they are genuine Old School Baptists. The course they have pursued has caused bitter sorrow to many, and has baffled the faith of many who are weak; but I feel to hope that we who remain upon the old platform can now go on in peace, and that we may recover from the shock it gave, and that there may be some ingathering of the little ones who stood off in awe and amazement while the conflict was going on. Many good brethren have regretted the sad affair, and remarked that it was a pity the opposing party would act so derogatory to their own as well our welfare; and in almost every prayer in our meetings the petition went up to God to visit Zion, and bring peace out of war, and order out of confusion, and grant to every erring one repentance unto life. I am satisfied that many private and secret prayers were made in behalf of the church in these parts and elsewhere. I suppose brother Varnes can understand from these hints that the situation is quite different here from what he says it is where he lives. I hope that peace may continue to abound there upon the subject of predestination, and that brethren may continue to prove true to brother Varnes. If they should ever oppose him, and tell him his doctrine had to be stopped, that it was God-dishonoring, and a disgrace to Primitive Baptists, that it is heresy, and two seedism, and that Mormonism is better than it; and if his brother preachers should set and nod to a Methodist preacher while he is preaching, and then rise in the pulpit and do all they could to fire the minds of his congregation against his doctrine; then go off and misrepresent him among strangers, and feel around to learn if he would be recognized to set up nonfellowship; then the preacher and a member hold a private caucus, and the member take the streets of a town to denounce him, and proclaim his nonfellowship; then the preacher and his church rally to his support, and enter a protest of nonfellowship in their conference, and exclude those that oppose it; brother Varnes would by this time have his faith tried, and would feel like he wanted some body to pray in earnest. I hope that he may never have such an experience.

I will now come to a close, hoping that all who read the SIGNS may fairly understand that I do not censure any one for disbelief of predestination, if they have no hard names to call me and it, and do not declare nonfellowship for me and it. I am satisfied there are thousands of Baptists who comprehend but little of the doctrine, and it would be very unbecoming to cast reflections upon the innocent. I trust that none of the innocent will construe anything I have said as applicable to themselves; and I hope that they do not indorse the abrupt and wild course some have pursued in these parts, and in some other places. Desiring that peace and love may abound among all the household of faith, I close for the present.

P. J. POWELL.

MARCH 14, 1891.

DEAR BRETHREN:—I have often thought since I saw you that I would write you; but a feeling sense of my unworthiness and ignorance in spiritual things has deterred me from making the attempt; and I do not know that I should at this time, except as some relief to my own mind, hoping that if I fail to interest you, I will not fail to receive from you a word of comfort.

I have had a name among the Predestinarian Baptists over twenty years, and have, unworthy as I am, been blessed with many tokens of love and fellowship from brethren and sisters in the different churches in my own and sister associations. I am often made to wonder why it is. One thing I do know, that the love and fellowship of God's children has become to me my life. Take that from me and I should be most miserable. The matter I most desire to write about just now is to call your attention to one thing that to my mind is one of the things that is lacking in almost every Old Baptist Church of my acquaintance, and to ask you to write something in our family paper, that the pure minds of the brethren may be stirred up to discharge their duty, namely, the relative duty of pastors and churches, more especially the support of those in the ministry. We have in all our churches good, thoughtful brethren that individually are ever ready to bear their part and give of their abundance toward helping the tried servants of our God. It has always seemed to me that while I would not hinder the private generosity of brethren, I think that a church should act together in the support of a pastor, and that each member should feel it not only his duty but a privilege to contribute his or her part. If I can give twenty-five cents it is as much my duty to do so as the one who can give as many dollars. No one will deny that a church should look after the temporal wants of their pastor. Now if there is no concert of action, and no member knows what another has done, how is the church to know whether her pastor is provided for or not? Again, what right has a brother or sister to expect one or a half dozen to bear what properly should fall on each, according as the Lord has prospered them? How often have I seen with a sad heart good brethren and sisters, after feasting upon the preaching of some dear brother, bid him good-by, with an invitation to come again, expressing their pleasure in hearing him, and yet never thought to give him a cent to help pay the expense of his trip. The comfort of a minister's family is as dear to him as to any of us, and I cannot feel that the brother or sister who neglects this plainly taught duty has any right to expect the blessing of God. Neither has any church the right to expect the blessing of God in having the services of a pastor, if she is neglectful in this respect. I do not consider that there is any one duty or command of our blessed Master more binding upon his children than another, so that the chastening rod is any surer to be visited upon them for the neglect of one more than another. The destitution of many churches to-day of the preached word is to my mind largely owing to their neglect in this respect. Our ministering brethren often suffer for the comforts of life, or their families do, and fear to say a word for fear of being accused of preaching for money. The brother who sees this neglect on the part of other brethren fears to say anything to them, for fear of hurting feelings, and thus the matter goes. It is a sad state of affairs when God's children are afraid to exhort one another to love and good works. I feel anxious that some brother who can write on these matters will do so. I am one of the little poor, and am not willing that my name should appear in print. My own failings and weaknesses are so manifest that I am not worthy nor capable of instructing any of my brethren. If your mind is so directed, please write upon the matter. Hoping to hear from you, and of seeing you again this year, I will close, with love to you and family, and to brother William.

Your brother, I hope,

SIN AGAINST THE HOLY GHOST.

"ELDER GILBERT BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—Will you please give your views, through the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, on the question, What is sin unto death? Is blasphemy against the Holy Ghost the same thing as the sin unto death? Does the child of God, after being born again, blaspheme? Did Ananais and Sapphira blaspheme? There is much discussion among the Baptists here, on this question. Please answer; and I hope to hear from others also, on this subject. Yours,

M. D. COX.

REPLY.

Although we would not dare to engage in a merely speculative discussion of the questions proposed by our correspondent, it is of much importance that the saints should correctly understand the subject so far as it is involved in their own individual experience. The adversary is ever ready to wrest even the words of inspiration, so as to make them appear as condemning the very ground of the confidence of every sinner whom God has given to hope in divine grace. When they are thus bewildered by the devices of Satan, the saints mistake the consolation of the gospel for condemnation to themselves. Natural reason will always indorse the accusations which are presented by the accuser of the saints, and in the letter of the Scriptures that reason will find every charge sustained; and in submission to the infinite justice of God, the saved sinner confesses that God is holy and righteous, even though the sentence of death must rest upon him. It is by faith alone that the grace of God is revealed as bringing salvation to them that were lost. No subject of that salvation can deny that he was lost in sin and in death, when that grace was revealed in him, by which he was made to hope in Jesus Christ for the remission of sins. There could be no grace in the saving of one who was not a sinner. The glorious grace of God is revealed in Jesus, in that in him every chosen vessel of divine mercy is a sinner whom the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin. See 1 John i. 7.

"What is sin unto death?" The views of no mortal can be of any consequence to the sinner who would know the truth of God. The word of inspiration alone can be depended on as infallibly correct. In that word we are told that "Whosoever committeth sin transgresseth also the law; for sin is the transgression of the law." The consequence of transgression of the law given to Adam is seen in the universal reign of death over all who were involved in sin by his one act of disobedience. Under that law death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned. The obedience of Adam was justly due to his Creator. The commandment which God gave to him did not bring him under obligation; that law only demanded the obedience which as a dependent creature it was right that he should render to his Maker. When the transgression of that law brought sin into the world, that sin was unto death. No other penalty was provided in that law. From the entrance of sin, there has been manifest the dominion of death. It cannot be of the transgression of that law the apostle speaks when he says, "If any man see his brother sin a sin which is not unto death, he shall ask, and he shall give him life for them that sin not unto death." Neither does the remaining portion of that verse refer to the sin against that law. "There is a sin unto death; I do not say that he shall pray for it."—1 John v. 16. When the subjects of redeeming grace are brought into the liberty of the gospel, they are no longer under the law of sin and death. Consequently it is not possible that they should sin against that law. Their allegiance is due to the perfect law of liberty in Christ Jesus; and in walking in obedience to the precepts which are written in their hearts by the Spirit of truth, they live in the answer of a good conscience toward God. But if they live after the flesh, they die to all experience of the assurance of hope in Christ. This must be understood as applicable alone to the present experience of life, or death, in the individual saints in their temporal state. It will not be necessary to remind the children of God that their Lord has given them eternal life, and they can never forfeit that gift, because that life is hid with Christ in God. Since the blood of Jesus cleanses them from all sin, it cannot be that there is a possibility of his work being defeated by any sin which can be committed by them. This is confirmed by the fact that the saints "are kept by the power of God unto salvation ready to be revealed in the last time." 1 Peter i. 5. Since their Savior has all power in earth and in heaven, it is certain that he will not be disappointed in his will that all his chosen people shall be with him where he is, that they may behold the glory of their triumphant Redeemer. His own complete atonement has satisfied infinite justice on the part of all for whom he gave himself a ransom. He was delivered for our offenses, and was raised again for our justification.—Rom. iv. 25. As it is evident that the saints are not under the law of sin and death, Paul may well challenge all accusers, saying, "Who shall lay anything to the charge of God's elect? It is God that justifieth. Who is he that condemneth? It is Christ that died, yea rather, that is risen again, who is even at the right hand of God, who also maketh intercession for us." As surely as God has raised up Jesus from the dead, so surely has Jesus forever satisfied in every particular the demands of justice against his people. So our Lord himself declares, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation; but is passed from death unto life."—John v. 24. Hence, it is clear that no sinner who is cleansed by the blood of Jesus can perish under the power of death. On the other hand, there is no need of any particular sinful action to bring the condemnation of divine justice upon the sinful family of Adam, in whom they are all condemned and under death already. We do not understand the language quoted from John as being applicable to any other characters but such as he designates as "you that believe on the name of the Son of God;" and he says that he has written unto them, "that ye may know that ye have eternal life, and that ye may believe on the name of the Son of God." This can be true only of those of whom Jesus says, "My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me; and I give unto them eternal life; and they shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand." There is no eternal life anywhere else but in this gift of the sovereign grace of God. It is not consistent to understand any expression of Scripture as teaching that this language of our Lord is liable to prove untrue. Whether we shall receive the correct idea of the subject under consideration, or not, the eternal life of all the election of God in Christ Jesus is securely hid with Christ in God. By no possibility can the saints lose that life.

To these very characters, however, Paul writes, "Therefore, brethren, we are debtors, not to the flesh, to live after the flesh. For if ye live after the flesh, ye shall die; but if ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live."—Rom. viii. 12, 13. It is evident that it is in their present condition that they realize both the death and the life of which Paul speaks. This agrees with the personal experience of the saints. When enabled by divine grace to mortify the deeds of the body, and walk in the Spirit, there is an experience of life which is never realized when living after the flesh. The death which is in consequence of living after the flesh, is bitterly felt when the conscious child of God is made to mourn his departure from the pathway of obedience to his dear Lord. It is not that the terrible thunders of the written law of God are denounced against him with fiery condemnation; but when in his sin against the commandments of the Lord, the Spirit gives him to feel that Jesus looks on him, then with Peter, he weeps bitterly. This is death to the believer who loves his Lord. But even in that depth of distress there is evidence that the love of Christ dwells in the heart of the transgressor, since the very goodness of God leads him to repentance.

The primary application of the text, 1 John v. 16, appears to refer to the relationship of the saints in the organized church. The law of Christ demands the obedience of every one who loves him. For every sin against his commandment our Lord has enjoined the penalty which must be suffered by the transgressor. In many cases the sin is covered by the manifestation of that repentance which Christ is exalted a Prince and a Savior to give to Israel. The saints are authorized to pray in such cases, and the Lord will give life for them that sin not unto death. But there is such sin as cannot be tolerated in the members of the church. From such transgressors the commandment of the Lord is imperative that the saints shall withdraw themselves, and not keep company with them, nor even eat with them. Such sin is unto death, in that it requires that the church shall withdraw from the transgressor; and since no confession could retain the fellowship of the church, there is no command that the saints shall pray for it. It is mere mockery of fellowship when one is held as a member of the church while he is not retained in the love of those who nominally count him a brother. So, it is manifestly hypocritical to pray for the retention of one as a brother when there is no love prompting such prayer. Whatever words or actions of any saint forbid the continuance of brotherly love toward him, they constitute a sin unto death, since they separate him from the love of the brethren. If such separation is the result of any conduct of a brother, that is sin unto death to him. If it is the pleasure of our Lord to give such repentance as shall retain the love of the brethren, there is nothing which can constitute a sin unto death, since there is no death where the love of Christ continues.

"Is blasphemy against the Holy Ghost the same thing as the sin unto death?" From what has been stated in reply to the first question of our brother, it will be seen that we regard the sin unto death as limited to those who have been brought into the living fellowship of the saints. Where our Lord declared the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost to be not forgiven, it was in connection with the refutation of the charge that he cast out devils by the prince of devils. After repelling that false accusation, he says, "Wherefore I say unto you, All manner of sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto men; but the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost shall not be forgiven unto men. And whosoever speaketh a word against the Son of man, it shall be forgiven him; but whosoever speaketh against the Holy Ghost, it shall not be forgiven him, neither in this world, neither in the world to come."—Matt. xii. 31, 32. In this fearful denunciation of blasphemy against the Holy Ghost, there is evident reference to those charges which he had just refuted. So Mark adds the explanation, that it was "Because they said, He hath an unclean spirit."—Mark iii. 30. There is no record that the truth of God ever was known to those Pharisees and scribes, whose accusation of Jesus was blasphemy against the Holy Ghost. Their own words condemned them as enemies against the perfect holiness which is revealed in Christ Jesus. In reviling the manifestation of the Spirit in Jesus, they blasphemed against the Holy Ghost. Their enmity against God was plainly exhibited in their railing against the divine power and grace which was displayed in the works of Jesus. That proved them to be destitute of the love of God and his righteousness. Yet in attributing to Beelzebub the power by which those works were wrought, those enemies were guilty of blasphemy against the Holy Ghost. Being already under condemnation and death, their awful sin but demonstrated the justice of that judgment of God.

Neither in the legal world, where Jesus was when he spoke these words, nor in the new world of his gospel kingdom, which then was to come, can there be any forgiveness of that sin which is against the Holy Ghost, and not against Jesus as the Son of man. There can be no sin or blasphemy of any of those for whom Jesus died, but that is against him as their Surety and Redeemer. So it is written, "All we like sheep have gone astray; we have turned every one to his own way; and the Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all."—Isa. liii. 6. "For he hath made him to be sin for us, who knew no sin; that we might be made the righteousness of God in him."—2 Cor. v. 21. There can never be any abatement of the just condemnation which rests upon every sinner. Only as Jesus has borne the sins of his ransomed people in his own body on the tree, can they be justified by his infinite grace. As every sin of his chosen people was laid on him, and he has atoned for them, clearly all those sins are against him. "All manner of sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto men." If there were one sin from which the blood of Jesus Christ could fail to cleanse his saints, there is not one of his people who could hope in his salvation. Every one feels himself the chief of sinners, and therefore nothing less than the infinite grace of God can afford assurance to any of them.

THE LORD WILL PROVIDE.

SEE Abram walking up the hill
With Isaac fondling by him still,
And prattling in his ear.
At length the lovely child is bound,
The hand is stretch'd, the knife is found,
And then the Lord appears.

If thou art sprung from Abram's stock,
A sheep of Jesus' little flock,
For trials arm thy mind;
Temptations will beset thy feet,
A thousand dangers thou shalt meet,
A thousand struggles find.

As every trial passeth o'er,
Expect another full as sore,
Perhaps a sorer yet.
And when the clouds begin to rise,
They blacker grow and fill the skies,
And threaten ruin great.

Perhaps the Lord withholdeth his light,
And keeps his help far out of sight,
Thine utmost faith to try.
Yet this remember, O my friend,
When thou art brought to thy wits' end,
That Abram's God is nigh.

On danger's brink when thou art brought
In sad perplexity of thought,
Then Jesus draweth near.
He speaks a word divinely mild,
And cheers the poor, distressed child,
And scatters all his fear.

MARRIAGES.

At the residence of the bride's parents, near Macomb, Ill., March 4th, 1891, Mr. Edward M. Fuhr and Miss Harriet Vanmeter, her father, Elder I. N. Vanmeter, officiating.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

John Henry Bowen was born in Raritan Township, Henderson Co., Ill., Feb. 21st, 1864, and departed this life near where he was born Feb. 27th, 1891, aged 27 years and 6 days.

Brother Bowen made a profession of his faith in Jesus Christ in May, 1883, and was baptized by the writer in July following, in the fellowship of the Bethany Church of Regular Primitive Baptists. In March, 1885, he became a member of the New Hope Church by letter, and remained in her fellowship until his death. The deceased was only in his twentieth year when he put on Christ publicly; but he read his Bible much, and was soon confirmed and established in the doctrine of salvation by grace so thoroughly, and loved it so dearly, that it was his almost daily talk among his friends. He not only believed in the doctrine of grace, but was able to give the reason why, and was uncompromising with every conditional system of creature works.

The circumstances attending brother Bowen's death were unusual, and very shocking to his family and friends. When quite young he was united in marriage with a very young and beautiful girl, Miss Lucinda Jane Lovett, who had borne six children to him before his death, the last one, twenty-six days old, dying twenty-three days before its father's decease, and the mother, of course, left in grief; but her worst trial was yet to come. He and his brother, Lewis C. Bowen (also a church member), were out in an open field with a team and wagon, and had both shot their guns at some wild geese. Lewis left John standing near the team; and when he was about twenty-five yards away John called to him and said, "Come back here, Lew; I am dying." He spoke again, saying, "Come quick; I am dying." Before his brother reached him his gun dropped out of his hand, and he was about to fall. He said to his brother, "Put my cap on; my head is cold. Ease me down." After speaking a sentence of prayer he grasped his brother's hand, saying, "I am dying happy. Good-by, Lew." He spoke no more, but breathed a short time and was gone. It was a severe trial to the surviving brother, out in the open field, on the cold ground, to witness the dying struggles of a beloved brother alone. Brother Lewis called loudly, and soon had others on hand to convey the lifeless body to the house. But what a shock to his beloved wife, to his parents near by, to his children and friends!

I being quite a distance from home, did not get a despatch in time to reach the place of burial in the town of Terre Haute, Ill., and I met a large audience in a meeting-house in that place on the fifth Sunday in March, and tried to comfort the bereaved ones from Philippians i. 21. Elder Cyrus Humphrey was also present and took part in the services. May the Lord bless the bereaved.

At the request of the mother of the above deceased, I hastily pen a few thoughts in verse, which she wishes appended to the obituary:

"I'm dying happy, brother, and bid you now good-by;
Without a moment's warning I am thus called to die,
To leave a world of sorrow, of sin and pain and woe;
Through grace I am now ready to bid farewell and go."
Thus was he in a moment, an unexpected time,
He leaves his wife and children, and many a loving friend,

Called by his Lord and Master to leave this earthly clime.

No time allowed for saying a word to wife or child;
Yet as his Master called him, he left well reconciled.

Without a parting blessing, or time a word to send;

But O the heavenly comfort his dying words expressed:

"I'm dying happy, brother, and soon shall be at rest."

Thus passed away our brother, just in the prime of life,

Cut off from the embraces of friends and loving wife;

But we should all remember the victory of his faith:

"I'm dying happy, brother," and bowed his head in death.

When one is thus so quickly cut down just in his prime,

It solemnly reminds us "man knoweth not his time;"

But with a hope in Jesus, let death come when it may,

We also shall be ready to die and soar away.

THREE DAYS MEETINGS.

A THREE days meeting will be held with the Sidling Hill Church of Old School Baptists, in Fulton Co., Pa., to commence on Friday, May 1st, 1891.

We give a cordial invitation to all of our faith and order, and would be very glad if some of our ministering brethren could meet with us at that time, for we are lonely as to ministers. It is true that we are poor, and cannot offer any worldly inducements; but we know that God's faithful servants do not go for filthy lucre's sake, but of a ready mind.

Those coming by railroad will have to take the Baltimore & Ohio R. R. to Hancock, Md., where they will be met on Thursday, about the middle of the day, as the church is about twenty miles north of Hancock. Those who contemplate coming had better write to brother Dennis Mellott or brother Jacob F. Garland, whose post-office address is Needmore, Fulton Co., Pa.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date, this date denotes the time at which your subscription expires, and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

CORRESPONDENCE.

OPELIKA, Ala., March 23, 1891.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS:—Dear brethren in Christ, as I trust, and the household of faith, who love the doctrine of grace and salvation. It is on my mind now to write again for the SIGNS, that medium of correspondence by which we hope many of the dear children of God have been comforted and instructed in the things of his kingdom; who have been thereby comforted time and again, and who feel edified by reading the communications which come so regularly. There is a desire upon the part of some of the subscribers that I should write; and in compliance with their request, and a desire, as far as I am able, to comfort, I have, I trust, this mind to-day to write. I know that of myself I can do nothing. I trust I have realized the truth of Jesus' words, who said, "Without me ye can do nothing." "Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it: except the Lord keep the city, the watchman waketh but in vain." Having passed through the valley of Baca, and knowing what Lodebar means, and having been made to say, O my barrenness! my leanness! and having been in the dark, I trust I can sympathize with those who have such places in their pilgrimage to pass through. Indeed I have doubted time and again whether I ought to have ever gone to the church; and I feel so often to shrink in my feelings, when I think of what a preacher should be, and how far short I come of these things; and it is a mystery how and why the churches have ever sought or desired my services. Again and again have I felt like I would tell the brethren they were mistaken in me, and I was altogether unfit to preach in the holy name of Jesus; and as I have before said, I have tried to preach, and tried to quit, and could do neither. In all the Scriptures is there not a remedy for this? and is there not a word of comfort for those who are thus traveling through this valley of sorrows and wilderness of tears, who know what it is to eat their sorrowful meat, and to eat the bitter herbs? I trust there are words of consolation in the sacred volume designed for such pilgrims; and I would offer a few of them, which I trust have comforted me. While John was banished in the isle of Patmos for the word of God, he saw many visions and revelations from God and his throne. One vision was, "After this I beheld, and lo, a great multitude, which no man could number, of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues, stood before the throne, and before the Lamb, clothed with white robes, and palms in their hands, and cried with a loud voice, saying, Salvation to our God, which sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb. And all the angels stood round about the throne, and about the elders and the four beasts, and fell before the throne on their faces, and worshiped God, saying, Amen: blessing, and glory, and wisdom, and honor, and power, and might be unto our God forever and ever. Amen. And one of the elders answered, saying unto me, What are these which are arrayed in white robes? and whence come they? And I said unto him, Sir, thou knowest. And he said unto me, These are they which came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb."—Rev. vii. 9-14. When such Scriptures are presented to us in our tribulation it enables us to bear it patiently; and especially when the Lord applies it, and sanctifies it to us. It is that wine which is well refined, and makes us forget our sorrow; for this is the wine of the kingdom, which makes the heart merry, in hope of that resurrection and that immortal bliss which awaits the redeemed of God who are here planted in the likeness of his death, and who daily go groaning, and waiting for the day of redemption. Paul would comfort the brethren with the grand thought, "If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable." The hope of the resurrection had been called in question, and Paul stood forth declaring the certainty of the resurrection of the saints of God. "If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable." But that assurance which Paul gives in his testimony is consolation from Christ. I have been able to draw comfort from the glorious doctrine of the resurrection. This is the promise of God, and we are assured that his promise will not fail. He who promised is immutable, and his word will not fail. Though heaven and earth pass away, yet his word must be fulfilled, and not one jot nor tittle shall pass till all is fulfilled. The law is cold, and without mercy; but his gracious promise is warm with love, and cannot fail. He has promised his people a resurrection from the dead; and to the saint on the shores of time, and on the stormy banks of tribulation, the bright beyond is calm and serene. Cut off from sin, and every vestige of the hateful principle, he shall be holy, and shall pass into the society of the redeemed of God. I have thought that the joys of the redeemed were beyond the power of conception or comprehension in our mortal state. Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him. O how many figures and metaphors are used in the Scriptures to teach us something of those things which await us. Our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory, while we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen; for the things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal."—2 Cor. iv. 17, 18. Those whom John saw had passed through the same ordeal; like the wonderful witnesses for the truth whom Paul cited to the Hebrews, as "a cloud of witnesses," who had been stoned, and sawn asunder, and made to wander, in dens and caves in the earth; who had been destitute, tormented and afflicted; of whom Paul also said the world was not worthy. They had reached the goal of their faith, the end of their sufferings, the salvation of their souls; and before the throne of God and the Lamb, how they could ascribe salvation, and wisdom, and honor, and glory, to his great name who died and gave himself for them; who shed his precious blood, and unloosed the seven seals, and delivered them, who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage. How wonderful and full are the gracious promises of our God, covering the needs of his poor, afflicted people here in this vale of sorrow. The full and complete salvation which is in Christ Jesus was shown forth in this multitude; men who had fallen in Adam, and arisen in Christ; lost in sin, and then saved in glory; white robes, washed in that precious blood which sanctifies and cleanses from all sin. They were engaged in praises, even the praises of him who had redeemed them from all iniquity. They had risen above the tide of tribulation, and had entered into the joy of their Lord and Redeemer. This was to comfort John, and to be passed on down to us as a word of comfort and an assurance of our redemption from sin. John was also commanded to write to the churches; and this is church property; and therefore the members of his body are entitled to the benefits thereof; and may the glorious Lord apply it to his poor, afflicted children here, who go bowed down, writing bitter things against themselves. I feel for them, and would, by the mercy and grace of God, remind the dear saints of these precious things in the mountain of his holiness, which is for the poor, tempest-tossed child here in this time world. We are sojourners here. As Jesus was, so are we in the world. He was a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief. Paul also said, "Wherefore seeing we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us; and let us run with patience the race set before us, looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith; who for the joy that was set before him endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God. For consider him who endured such contradiction of sinners against himself, lest ye be weary and faint in your minds." Jesus suffered for us, and we follow the Captain of our salvation, who was made perfect through sufferings. Do we expect to go to heaven on flowery beds of ease? Paul regarded the believer as a soldier; and the thought connected with a soldier is warfare, toil and suffering. Hence Paul exhorts Timothy to endure hardness as a good soldier. We are not leaders, but followers, in this great conflict. We are also assured of the victory, which is sure to come. We will finally overcome all doubts and fears, and even death itself. When we are called home to the city of peace, then the conflict will be ended, and the shouts of victory and triumph in the blood of the Lamb will be the glorious song.

These are a few thoughts which have occurred to me. The promise is that we shall reach the celestial city. The highest ecstasy here is but a foretaste of the everlasting bliss of the redeemed, where not a sigh shall be known, where a tear shall not be seen, where the wicked cease from troubling, where the weary be at rest. We are said to be sojourners, as our fathers were. We seek a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God. We read of the city, whose streets are of gold, and whose gates are of pearl; the clear crystal water, the river of the water of life, and the tree of life. Here in the church these things are manifest, as a foretaste of the true joy of the redeemed. But Paul says, "Now we see through a glass darkly" (dimly); but then we shall see clearly, and know as we are known. Blessed thought! Some have asked, "Shall we know each other there?" We shall be much wiser. Human knowledge shall vanish away, and the knowledge of divine things will supercede all human knowledge. In the grave all the Adamic relations will be dissolved, and we will arise in newness of life, even of divine life, and will not be known by earthly relations, but only by our relation to Christ; for we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is. Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God; neither doth corruption inherit incorruption. Flesh is mortal. "That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit." We are taught by Paul, "It is sown a natural body; it is raised a spiritual body." That is enough. We are all agreed on that. It seems to settle the question in my mind that it is a spiritual body, wholly prepared and capacitated to enter that holy sphere where there is no sorrow, sickness, pain nor death. With the poet we sing,

"There is a land of pure delight,
Where saints immortal reign,
Infinite day excludes the night,
And pleasures banish pain.

There everlasting spring abides,
And never-withering flowers;
Death, like a narrow sea, divides
This heavenly land from ours.

Sweet fields, beyond the swelling flood,
Stand dress'd in living green;
So to the Jews old Canaan stood,
While Jordan roll'd between.

But timorous mortals start and shrink
To cross this narrow sea,
And linger, shivering, on the brink,
And fear to launch away.

O! could we make our doubts remove,
Those gloomy doubts that rise,
And see the Canaan that we love,
With unobscured eyes:—

Could we but climb where Moses stood,
And view the landscape o'er;
Not Jordan's stream nor death's cold flood
Should fright us from the shore."

I will here close. I submit the above. If you think it will be of any service to the brethren, it is at your disposal. With love and desire that the blessings of the Lord may rest upon the household of faith, I am yours in hope,

W. LIVELY.

SPENCERVILLE, Ohio, Jan. 27, 1891.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—I feel to express my gratitude to you for kindly trusting me to the paper this year. I do not know that I feel as well for stopping it the last year; but I now feel that I would rather have it once a month, even at two dollars, than any other that I know of. Let me be held responsible for this preference, if wrong. I once saw a quotation taken from a correspondence in the SIGNS to the effect that it was the SIGNS that claimed to be the best paper. If correspondents claim it, they need not blame the SIGNS nor its editors. I love the SIGNS best, because it speaks out most of my heart and experience; and yet I dare not claim that even it is perfect. I am glad, however, to see the apparent humility manifested by some writers who seem to be weak in the faith, but who do not, in the SIGNS at least, feel to fight the doctrine that they call strong meat. If that were the worst we had to feel, there would be but very little trouble among our brethren. I have been asked if I thought that "universal predestination" ought to be a test of fellowship. I cheerfully answered no; but it does not always stop there. There are those who cannot endure it, and denounce and condemn it. With those I have no fellowship. A sister in the Fairfield Church, Michigan, where my membership then was, felt so bad that she finally told the church she did not know that it would be right for her to commune, as she could not see the absolute predestination of all things; but she expressed herself as willing that the brethren who could should have the liberty of their faith in it. That settled it. All heartily felt to bear with her, and no more was said of it, that kn— it always so. An old minister in the course of his travels met brother L. L. Delano, late of Wood Co., Ohio, and said, "I want to warn you against that young man in Michigan [referring to me], for he has embraced that dangerous doctrine of predestination of all things." In correspondence with him on that subject, even after claiming that he did not fault brethren who could see it, he said, "If it is necessary to believe that God predestinated all the evil that ever did or ever will take place in the world, it must be confessed that I lack faith in God." These are substantially his words. He took no pains to reconcile his remark to brother Delano with his willingness for brethren to have their liberty. This was about twenty years ago.

I wish to say here that the apostle said, "Laying aside all malice, and all guile, and hypocrisies, and envies, and all evil speakings, as new-born babes, desire the sincere milk of the word, that ye may grow thereby." If brethren cannot see, it is not essential for them to say that they do see. It would be hypocrisy. If they say that they cannot see, and appear humble (as all the children of God should) at one place or to one person, and then speak positively opposite at another place and to other persons, this is hypocrisy, and is sure to offend. It cannot be otherwise. There can be no growth in grace, peace and love in a church with such practices. The apostle says, Lay it aside. Sometimes I think that certain passages are quoted entirely out of place to show that predestination is the strong meat, and that experience and exhortation and admonition are the milk. Let us examine the testimony and see. Paul says (Rom. xiv. 1, 2), "Him that is weak in the faith receive ye, but not to doubtful disputations. For one believeth that he may eat all things: another, who is weak, eateth herbs." Not one word is said as to any doctrine whatever. It only had reference to the eating of meats and the keeping of days. See also 1 Corinthians viii., where no reference whatever is had to any doctrine. Let us trace the result of such logic as is used by those who apply the term in these places to the doctrine. It would result in New Schoolism in full. They all refer to these passages to prove that nearly all kinds of doctrine must be tolerated in their bodies. Here they have even one whom I have good evidence to believe is a Universalist. If "meat" means doctrine, then "For meat [doctrine] destroy not the work of God." But this will not do; for by so using it all doctrine must be discarded, as there is no reference to any particular doctrine in those connections, and may apply to one as well as another.

Dear child of God, no matter who you are, nor where you are, nor what you think of me, nor what you have said about me, let us try to look this matter up in reference to our experience. We must begin it in weakness, like new-born babes; and what is most applicable to us in such a case? Doctrine, of course. It must in some way meet our needs, even though we cannot understand it. What does a new-born babe know of the elements of sincere milk, or of meat either, as for that matter? But it does know that it desires and receives milk, as a necessary and gratifying nourishment. What was your first desire of God, your every thought, or expressed prayer? Was it not to know what God thought of you, what he wanted of you, and, in short, what his will was concerning you? You may not have thought about the word "predestination" when you wanted to know God's will about yourself; but it was in it, even if you did not know it, just as the necessary elements of nourishment were in the sincere milk that flowed from your mother's breast, and your lack of knowledge was being supplied by every word which you first learned to speak.

Now let us apply experience or admonition to a new-born babe, and ask, What power has it to even tell its experience, or profit by the telling of that of others, or what power to obey admonition or exhortation? Nay, it must first rely upon the tender mother's care; and the experience of older ones it cannot know. Even so no child of God, just born again, can possibly tell a large or protracted experience. It has felt its power, and that was the will of God. "Born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God"—of the will of God. "Of his own will begat he us with the word of truth;" and that is what every child of God, new-born, desires to know, and that is what they are reconciled to. Now it will do to apply the preaching to them, to comfort them. They are weak, and God is able to provide for them. Does not that show his power? They feel ignorant. Preach to them that God knows how to care for them. They find that they cannot do as they wish to. Preach to them that God never fails. Is not that predestination, and just suited to comfort new-born babes in Christ? Yes, there is just where I feel to be yet; but I could not eat the preaching of duties until the power of God had prepared me for it. I could not feel that it was right for me to be baptized until God wrought the desire of obedience in my heart. Then I could obey; but not until I first felt that it was his will. His purpose then, was in that will. Does not this look just like Paul's preaching at Athens, where he first described his God and Savior? Did he hide the absolute decree of God? Hear him tell of that God of whom they were ignorant. He says, "Hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation." Just take in all there is in that, dear babe in Christ. It cannot hurt you nor me. There is more in it than I can analyze now; but it has all things in it that can possibly constitute or relate to all nations of men. How infinite! how blessed! how fearful! And yet to feel that God doeth it, how consoling! for he doeth all things well. We pronounce it well by faith; but we must possess that faith before any preaching can do us good. So at Athens the people were divided: some believed, and clave to Paul. Now which is the sincere "milk of the word?" The doctrine; for it is first needed to comfort. Then experience; for it bears testimony of the doctrine. Then admonition; for it, together with obedience, fulfills the doctrine, and follows as declaring what experience has shown to be true.

Dear brethren, we who believe fully in the predestination of all things, does this not place doctrine as milk, experience as herbs, and admonition as meat? I do not feel to demand a confession of my faith on this division of thought; but I cannot compromise the doctrine so far as to have brethren tell me that I shall not preach it, nor allow them to deride it, without defending it.

The foregoing, imperfect as it is, was laid aside, as I feared to crowd too hastily into the SIGNS; but on returning yesterday from a visit among brethren and sisters in Michigan, and in an adjoining county in this state, I felt to rejoice in some feeble sense of God's great mercy and changeless love. Though I have suffered much by evil-designing persons, who love not the truth, I have great reason for gratitude to God for such unmerited favors.

Where I attended meeting on Saturday and Sunday I found peace, love and fellowship abounding, and sat under the ministration of the gospel of our saving God with joy. Elder J. G. Ford, and a licentiate, brother B. F. Hutchinson, of Findley, were divinely blessed, I trust, with the gifts of edification for the church, and all enjoyed their ministry. May God sustain them both; brother Ford, in his declining years, with exalted strength, and our dear younger brother Hutchinson with humility and zeal. They are both sound and faithful.

As ever, in bonds,

A. B. BREES.

LEESBURGH, Va., March 20, 1891.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—The devil (I suppose it is he) has oftentimes of late made me almost believe that there is no such thing as the "divine nature," which we read about in the gospel, in me nor in any one else. I have done so much that I thought I never would do, and have told others that they ought not to do, and have seen and known of brethren doing what I once thought they never would do, I am so sick of man that I feel like spewing the whole generation out of my mouth. But such letters as I inclose you compel me to believe that there is in man something better than man; and I wish you to publish the letter, if in your judgment you think best. It does seem to me that this is the quiet, silent working of the Lord, and after all "Out of the mouths of babes and sucklings thou hast perfected praise." My experience teaches me that it is better to be governed by the spirit of the meek and lowly ones than by great and knowing ones, when there is no spirit in you to govern you; and if there is you will always find yourself in perfect fellowship with the meek and lowly.

Your brother, I hope,

E. V. WHITE.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y., March 11, 1891.

ELDER WHITE—DEAR BROTHER:—I hope you will forgive me for thus addressing you, and taking the privilege to write to you. It seems impressed on my mind, and I dare not resist it, as it seems the fear of the Lord is with me, and I do not know why I feel so. It is the first time that I ever attempted to write any of my experience, so I will leave it with you to judge whether it is of the Lord or not.

At the close of your sermon here you said you hoped that we would carry those things home with us for meditation; and, dear brother, I for one hope that I had a refreshing

season in calling to mind the many ways in which the Lord leads his people about and instructs them. My little hope grew strong, and I was made to feel that I was one of that number that John saw, who came up out of great tribulation, and had washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. In your sermon you showed the two lands, Egypt and the land of Canaan, or the two systems of religion, Christ and antichrist, which to my mind was most beautiful; for well do I remember the time when I was in the land of Egypt, and planted and watered with the foot, and how much trouble I had because my plants did not grow according to my work.

At the early age of thirteen years I joined the Methodist Church, and expected to work my way to heaven. I went to Sunday School, and attended all their meetings. I prayed three times a day, when I did not forget it. I read the Bible, committed to memory chapter after chapter, tried to do good in all things as far as I could see, and was proud because I could keep ahead of the rest. I could always remember more than my friends around me, and so I worked on and on. At my earliest recollection I had a great desire to be a christian, and to be a devoted follower of Christ and a beloved disciple; and as John was Christ's beloved disciple, I thought by my good works to attain to that degree. So you see, dear brother, how I tried to plant and water with the foot, but there came a time when I could not plant, neither could I water, for the very earth became to me as a furnace of fire, my springs were all dried, and I stood alone, as one on a housetop. I had often read in the Bible in those days that "Two women shall be grinding at the mill; the one shall be taken, and the other left." I verily thought the day had come to me, and I was left to all eternity; for God had forsaken me, my earthly hopes were all gone, and I could see none in heaven. I was plunged in a gulf of dark despair. I, a wretched sinner, was without one cheerful beam of hope, or spark of glimmering day. O how much I thought of Christ when he trod the wine-press alone, and of the people there was none with him, none to uphold, none to comfort, no, not one. This, dear brother, was my condition for weeks. I would lay me down at night and rise in the morning, until I became so weak and worn out that I was sick in bed, and caught at the least earthly thing for comfort; but it slipped. Dear brother, I sat down to die. Well do I remember (it is now twenty years ago, and your sermon brought it to my mind anew) all my works under the law, which was my school-master to Christ, or in other words, prepared me to enter the land of Canaan, if indeed I have. I hope it was the Lord that led me thus far; and one thing I could say, "Whereas I was once blind, I now see." The time came when I sat down to die, and expected never to rise again alive. I do not know how long I sat in this way, but from a half-hour to an hour or more, when something said to me, "Come, let us go away." As I looked around no one was near; but I arose to my feet and walked out into the yard. Things seemed changed to my sight, and I wondered what was the matter. I heard the birds singing, and it seemed to me that they were praising the Lord. I looked at the ground, and every little plant seemed to grow for a purpose, and the Lord had predestinated it so. Though my afflictions were great, the Lord said, "My grace is sufficient for thee;" and I rejoiced in a loving Savior that a little while before I knew nothing about. Everything was prepared for me, for I did not do a thing to merit this salvation. I was going the other way. I began to wonder where it came from, and these words came into my mind with much comfort, "The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth: so is every one that is born of the Spirit." My poor soul began to wonder, Is this of the Spirit? has the Lord had pity and compassion on one so unworthy as me? for I had to say,

"Nothing in my hand I bring;
Simply to thy cross I cling."

At this point I began to think I was an Old School Baptist. At that time my father and mother came to my home (I was then married), and I told my mother that I was an Old School Baptist. She replied that she did not care what her children were, if they were only good christians. I was a great mystery to them, as well as to myself; for father and mother were Methodists from my childhood, and I knew nothing of Old School Baptists, only by hearsay, although there was a church in Warwick, and I had lived there all my life. So day after day my mind traveled, although my affliction was great, and I was made to see that the Lord was with me. I began to talk with a dear sister of the church, and she invited me to go with her to the next church meeting. I said no; but one morning before the time came for the meeting, as I awoke these words came to me, "Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight." This I told her of, and she said it was a command for me to go and tell the brethren what I hoped the Lord had done for me. I had a great love for them, and it did not take much to make me willing; so I went to the Warwick Church and told the brethren there, in my poor, weak way, what the Lord had done for my soul, and to my surprise they received me, and I was baptized the next day by Elder J. N. Badger. He then lived in Warwick; and, dear brother, as we walked into the water I thought, Being buried with Christ in baptism, to rise and walk in newness of life. O how beautiful to my mind it did seem, though sorrow and sighing came from my heart, for my condition in life was such that I could see nothing to live for. From that time until the present I have many times gone down to the Red Sea, and was obliged to stand still, and wait to see the salvation of the Lord; and many times I ask myself the question,

"Am I a soldier of the cross,
A follower of the Lamb?
And shall I fear to own his cause,
Or blush to speak his name?"

"Must I be carried to the skies
On flowery beds of ease,
While others fought to win the prize,
And sail'd through bloody seas?"

This is some of my experience, which I give for the reason of the hope that is within me; but I feel that I have come short in expression of the real virtue. You remember your own and Elder Jenkins' very brief visit at our house. You remarked that the gospel was for the poor and needy. O how much Minnie and I regretted that your time was so short, for we felt the need of some word of comfort. I have not been able to attend meeting since last November on account of sickness in my family. We began to feel lonesome indeed. Once in a while some dear sister would drop in with some message of love, or Dr. Emory would speak a word of consolation, for he attended my children in their sickness. Those words came as the dew of heaven, helping me to bear my burden, which is heavy upon me. It is my desire that I may have grace given me to bear with meekness what the Lord may send; but this vile nature of mine is very rebellious.

I now feel it time that I brought this epistle to a close, lest I weary you, or trespass on your time. Your unworthy sister in hope,

MARY E. HYATT.

WILLARD, Va., March 17, 1891.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—I inclose you a letter from sister Mary J. Cox, which I have her consent to submit to you for publication in the SIGNS if you see proper. She is a sister to Elder J. N. Badger, and is isolated from all her brethren, living at a long distance from any church or brethren of our faith; but her letter speaks for itself, breathing the Spirit of the meek and lowly Jesus.

As ever, your brother in hope,

A. B. FRANCIS.

SMITHVILLE, Va., Feb. 13, 1891.

DEAR BROTHER:—I beg that you will pardon the liberty I take in writing to you, but I have desired to do so ever since I read your letter in the SIGNS of December 17th. I have desired to tell you of the comfort it gave me, and of the full and heartfelt fellowship I feel for the great and comforting truth it contains, yet I hesitated to intrude my poor words upon you; but now, on reading your letter in the present number of the SIGNS (Feb. 11th), I find some passages which so deeply touch my own heart that I cannot longer refrain from telling you of the warm love and fellowship of my poor heart for the sweet words of truth which our God has enabled you to speak for the comfort of the poor and afflicted. When you speak of your own experience for many months, of walking in darkness, and feeling that you were forsaken of your God, that he would return no more, when all the "beasts of the forest do creep forth," I felt my heart go out in love and fellowship, my brother; for you so aptly described my own experience for so many long and weary months, when I felt that I was shut up and out from all hope, or the blessed enjoyment of the presence of my God forever. O how dark and dreary were those days, with no ray of light, feeling that all my professions of love for the truth and the dear people of God were professions only, with no heartfelt knowledge of the truth nor real love for his people, and my heart so hard and full of sin and rebellion against the God whom I professed to love and serve. Who can describe the loneliness, dreariness and desolation of those days, weeks and months? When I read or know of any of God's dear, tried ones passing through such deep waters my heart warms with love and fellowship for them, and I long to take them by the hand and tell them of my love.

In these great and heartfelt trials where can a poor sinner find any comfort or hope but in the soul-comforting truth of God's everlasting, predestinating and electing love? that "the Lord God omnipotent reigneth;" that he saw, yea, marked out every step that his dear, tried people must take; and that it is his loving hand which leads, guides and directs every step, all for their best good and his glory. They cannot have one trial that he does not appoint. My brother, if I could not rest on this rock I could find no resting place, no refuge from the storms and tempests of life. When in the darkest trials he says, "Be still, and know that I am God." Yes, a God of purpose, and not of chance. All things, whether they look to our poor, finite minds to be good or evil, are ordered by him who sees the end from the beginning. I do feel that if the absolute predestination of all things be not true, we have no God to trust in. If he did not see, order and mark out every step that his church should take in her travels through this sin-smitten world, then what have we to trust in? That was done before the foundations of the earth were laid. But thanks be to him, he is God, and besides him there is no other; and he "worketh all things after the counsel of his own will." The Scriptures abundantly prove this, and the experience of all God's dear people attest this great truth. This has ever been a distinguishing mark of Old Baptists, and I do wonder that any who profess to be of that despised few should not believe it; but the Scriptures must be fulfilled, that of our own selves "shall men arise, speaking perverse things, to draw away disciples after them." These are truly "perilous times" for the church; but God is at the helm, and will guide her safely through. He has ever had and ever will have his witnesses for the truth, who fearlessly declare the whole truth, whether men will hear or forbear.

I know not why I write thus to you, my dear brother; I who so often fear that I know nothing of these things in deed and in truth, that all I do know is from the hearing of the ear, and have never been taught them by the Spirit, who alone can reveal them to the heart. I am so dead, so cold, my heart so hard and rebellious, so filled with the cares and vanities of this world. I know by bitter experience that "to be carnally minded is death." I would not have it so. I would know Jesus, and the power of his resurrection. I would that I could feel that life-giving power in my soul; but I am utterly powerless and helpless. My heart is so full of sin that I cannot raise even one cry for help, unless God by his grace gives me that desire, and subdues this selfish, corrupt nature by the power of his love and grace, which I need every hour, yea, every moment of my life, else I fall. Jesus' blood and righteousness is all my plea.

I am glad, dear brother, that you have had the privilege of visiting so many churches and dear brethren, and that the Lord has been with you, to comfort and bless you with a sense of his presence. How sweet and precious is a glimpse of the Sun of righteousness, when these dark clouds have been dispersed by the life-giving rays of that dear Sun. May the Lord sustain you and all the dear brethren, and enable you ever to contend earnestly for that faith which was once delivered unto the saints. When it is well with thee, then in your prayers remember your unworthy sister, if one at all,

MARY J. COX.

P. S.—Dear brother, since writing the foregoing I thought perhaps you would like to hear of sister Louise. She is now in Glasgow with her husband. He is publishing the Glasgow Herald there. She has a daughter nine months old. You may meet her next summer, as she expects to spend some part of the summer at Kenmore with her mother. As for myself, I am left alone in a wilderness, as it were. All my children are in Glasgow. My husband and myself live alone, with a young man who is employed in the office. All the society or preaching I have is through the dear SIGNS, except during the last few summers, when I have been permitted to visit my dear brother and friends in Loudoun and Fauquier. I know not whether I shall have that privilege the coming summer or not. I would like to go very much, and attend our association; but it is so far and out of the way this year that I fear I shall not be able to attend. Remember me in love to all the dear brethren and sisters. My heart is with them, though so far separated in body. The dear Lord is over all, and is not confined to time nor place. If blessed with a sense of his love, prisons will palaces prove; and without that all is vain and empty, no matter what our surroundings may be.

I have enjoyed this last number of the SIGNS. Sometimes the dear Lord grants me this boon, and at other times I can see no beauty in it. Unless the Spirit sets the truth home to the heart all is vain. The flesh profiteth nothing—it is the Spirit that giveth life, is my daily experience.

May the Lord bless you and all the dear brethren, is the earnest prayer of your unworthy sister,

M. J. C.

SOUTHAMPTON, Pa., March 17, 1891.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—Some things must be shared with the brethren, and this letter of our dear brother Anderson is one of them; therefore I send it to you to be published. I have asked him not to cease writing to me for fear I will publish. I will try to exercise as good judgment as I can; but this letter, except the part of it that I have erased, certainly belongs to all the brethren, and I must let them have it. Yours in hope,

SILAS H. DURAND.

DUTTON, Ark., Feb. 13, 1891.

DEAR BROTHER DURAND:—Your letter came last evening. While I was sorry to hear of your feeble health during your trip to Canada, I rejoiced in your joy at your church meeting. We had quite an enjoyable meeting on the fourth Sunday in last month, notwithstanding we have to hold our meetings in a school-house that is rather uncomfortable in winter. One member joined on Saturday. Another minister has moved into the neighborhood, and I hope now, if I stay here, to have a fellow-laborer.

I was aware of the feeling among the brethren and sisters caused by the publication of my letters to you. The many letters that I have received containing expressions of love, sympathy, fellowship and encouragement have tended to deprive our sore afflictions of much of their bitterness, and enabled us to feel, in some measure at least, that the dear Savior has been coming upon the dark waves with the comforting assurance, "Be of good cheer. It is I; be not afraid." The long years that I was a lone wanderer, utterly ignorant of the existence throughout the world of a single companion in tribulation, peculiarly fitted me for enjoying the fellowship of the brethren, notwithstanding it has always been marred to some extent by a pungent sense of my unworthiness; but how comes it that that letter of which I was so much ashamed, and which seemed to expose my imperfections and the vileness of my nature to such a startling extent that none could ever fellowship me after reading it, should have brought such precious letters from the brethren all over the land?

The prospect of my visiting you sometimes seems very dark, and sometimes I tremble at the thought of undertaking it if nothing were in the way; but if the Lord will I hope to go. If it is his will he will open the way. The information contained in your letter will, I think, be of great service to me if I go. I tried, but failed, to get any satisfactory information from the agent here. I am seven miles from St. Paul. I think my wife continues to improve some.

With love to you all, not forgetting the dear little children, I remain your unworthy brother,

C. W. ANDERSON.

FEBRUARY 17.

I CANNOT rest satisfied without writing more. I think I know how you felt on Sunday of your meeting. I have sometimes wondered why one should thus die and be killed all the day long, to enable him to "stand in the temple and speak all the words of this life." But wine, "which cheereth God and man," to be set free from the matter in which it is bound, requires the decomposition of that material. I remember one time a brother from a distance visited our church meeting. A visiting minister was also in attendance. He tried to speak, but had no liberty. He took his seat, and called upon me. I tried to avoid speaking, feeling like you spoke of, and as if I really could not; but some of the brethren began to urge me to speak. My feelings were such that I could hardly get upon my feet. I began to try to talk as best I could, not knowing how I could possibly proceed. After awhile this subject was presented to me, "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." I spoke for some time with more than usual liberty. When I stopped speaking I noticed that the brethren were considerably affected. The brother above referred to seemed almost overjoyed, and could scarcely contain himself. After meeting was over he started home, was taken down with pneumonia, and died. The next time I saw him was when I was called to assist in laying his body in the tomb. He was a precious brother, and had never heard me try to speak until the time above referred to. The thought now occurred to me that if I had yielded to my rebellious feelings and lack of trust in my Maker I should never have had opportunity to speak a word of comfort to him. It deeply affected and made a lasting impression upon me, and the more from the fact that he had been living where he had heard no preaching for a long time, and was aiming on that account to move where there was a church. "Master, we have toiled all night, and taken nothing; nevertheless at thy word I will let down the net." When Peter's net had inclosed a great multitude of fishes, sufficient to fill two ships, till they began to sink, he said, "Depart from me; for I am a sinful man, O Lord."

But perhaps you begin to wish that I could learn when to stop writing.

C. W. ANDERSON.

"TAKE heed unto thyself."—1 Tim. iv. 16.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—I feel impressed to give the readers of the SIGNS a few thoughts relative to the admonition or injunction named above. As a rule we are (I mean the ministry) very free in our expressions concerning our care for the doctrine and the welfare of the saints, which is not out of place, unless we are out of place in neglecting to obey the injunction. Now the apostle by this and many other sayings was teaching Timothy how he should behave himself in the house of God. He doubtless needed the instruction given, as inspiration makes no mistakes. And furthermore, the instruction given by Paul and others, under and by the inspiration of the Spirit of revelation, suffices for the church and her ministry through all her varied dispensations. The church is called a flock, and the ministry are called shepherds. They are to be examples (examples) to the flock over which the Holy Ghost has made them overseers; and they are also commanded to feed the flock. Then how necessary, in view of the varied surroundings and conditions of each individual member of the flock, that the overseer learn from the Scriptures and his own experience the needs thereof. There are many weak and sickly; there are some timid and fearful; and some even boisterous and uproarious. Now the preacher that does not take heed to himself cannot by doctrine, exhortation and reproof maintain an equilibrium sufficient to the good health of the flock. Hence the necessity of the preacher preparing for his work as Paul would have Timothy prepare. How is that? one might inquire. Paul tells him in one place to study to show himself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth; and in another place, to give himself wholly to these things (things that pertain to the doctrine and order of the church); and yet another, to give himself to reading, to exhortation and to doctrine, and to continue in taking heed to himself and to the doctrine, in order to the salvation (keeping separate from the world and its poisonous isms) of himself and those that hear him. His character, or what it should be, is delineated in the preceding (third) chapter. He must be blameless. O think of it! Have I conducted myself in such a way as to stand before my congregation with a good conscience? Have I hammered at the hidden mystery in such way as to freeze the little ones almost to death? Have I almost forsaken the flock for the filth of the world? Have I reveled when coldness and leanness pervaded the flock? Have I hidden under a covert when the wolf was at the door? O preacher, consider your ways and your calling, and ask yourself the question, Have I even tried to discharge my duty? I imagine I hear one saying, Well, I desire to do my whole duty; but I cannot afford to beg, as that would be shameful. But let me tell you it is not necessary that you beg, except at the throne of grace, which you do. But do you preach like you beg? Think of this. Does not the apostle exhort and teach you to rightly divide the word of truth? Tell the members of the King's household their several duties in connection with the doctrine, and be patient in all your duties. Day and night continue to succeed each other, and we need not be surprised that some of our nights appear exceedingly dark, long and wearisome; but rest assured that joy cometh in the morning. While the church (gospel dispensation) was in her infancy, the preachers (at least some of them) suffered the loss of all things for the sake of the cause. Are we any better than they? One thing I know, Some of us at times grow very zealous in appearance, and feeling our dignity and ability, we open our artillery on the earth-works of the Arminians; and if we conclude that we have blown up their magazine, and overturned their fortification, and laid waste their city, what have we done? Look around and see for yourself? It is nothing but a huge pile of dirt, too obnoxious to look upon, and we turn away in disgust. But while all this is in progress, where is the food for the little ones? They have nothing to eat, unless they eat of this pile of dirt, and that makes them sick nigh unto death; and but for the mercy of the Lord, they would surely die. I am exceedingly glad of the mercy of the Lord, else I might have been a murderer. But the mercy of the Lord endures forever. Perhaps some of those stout-hearted fellows who love war and desolation at times (not all the time) will eat heartily of this pile of dirt, and appear to relish it well; but eventually they will vomit it up. Then, O where has our "able sermon" gone? It has turned to vomit. Now would it not be better that we take heed to ourselves, and apply our hearts to wisdom, and feed the flock? God himself will take vengeance upon the world of the ungodly. Should we see an enemy approaching the camp, it is our indispensable duty to give the alarm, and to defend the flock as God gives ability, and victory for us is sure; for God gives that also. Should it become necessary for the welfare of the flock to expose moneyed systems, let us do it valiantly, in the meantime teaching the truth as to giving and receiving; and in a faithful discharge of this duty we will never have much to regret. Brethren grow (as it were) covetous; but the truth is, they are covetous. Can't we afford to tell them this, and more, that it is idolatry? If we cannot afford to do our duty, what can we expect but shame and reproach? Then we do not have to beg for temporal things. We ought never to think of such things. This begging belongs to the class who build earth-works, which Old Baptists shoot pop-guns at when they are idle. But we should not be idle. We should ever be taking heed to ourselves, by industry and economy at home, by labors for the good of the cause, which is dearer than our lives. We should at no time be entangled with the affairs of this life, so that we may serve the church instantly. We should ever be ready to our religious duty, and exhort the brethren to a full discharge of all their duties, and God will bless us. His promise is sure.

Brethren Beebe, I have spun this to much greater length than at first I intended; and I feel that much more could be written, and more ably, by others. I do not wish any brother to even imagine that we would assume to be dictatorial; but I trust that in love for the cause and the general welfare of the saints I was impressed to write. Now I leave you; it is at your discretion. I am, I hope, not hard to please, as respects the publication of what I write. I would be glad were I in a condition to subscribe for the SIGNS, but I am financially "let" for the present.

May grace, mercy and truth comfort and help you.

SANDUSKY, Ala., March 18, 1891.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS:—We have been shut in here with cold and rain, so that I have been permitted to be at meeting but twice since the new year came in; and part of the time I have been in a very dark, despondent state, and the SIGNS has been the better appreciated, as a visitor coming weekly, laden with the good news and glad tidings of great joy, being filled with palatable and wholesome doctrine, and edifying experience and exhortation. It affords me strength and comfort to read the rich communications and editorials. The communications of Elders Purington and Wagner are worth more than the subscription price of the SIGNS. The experience of brother Anderson, sent by brother Durand, is also worth the price of the paper. I do not refer to these three to disparage any one else. Brother Varnes' article in the SIGNS for February 25th contains profitable advice; but I do not think he fairly understands me, nor the situation of the Baptists here, and in some other places I have heard from. As he so nearly quotes some of my words, I suppose I am the one he points to as agitating the "Mystery of iniquity." I would like to make myself understood; that what I have said concerning certain ones that have held up predestination and its advocates to contempt, and made war and divisions about it, does not apply in the least to those in Illinois or elsewhere that are keeping peace upon the subject. Those who say they cannot see the doctrine as we do here, and have made no war about it, would be received by us, and treated with due courtesy and brotherly kindness; and those who have gone out from us, and called us heretics, Sadducees and two-seeders, and other hard names, when they get weary of the course they have taken, and come back, and say they want peace and union, we are ready to take them in with a confession of their errors; but since they have gone out and left us, they occupy a position between the Predestinarian Baptists and the Arminians. They are not whole Predestinarians nor whole Arminians. I still think they occupy the corresponding place to those Ashdod children, and their speech in their discourses is precisely as I stated; and while they occupy their present position, and continue to manifest their enmity towards us, I cannot witness for them that they are genuine Old School Baptists. The course they have pursued has caused bitter sorrow to many, and has baffled the faith of many of the weak; but I feel to hope that we who remain upon the old platform can now go on in peace, and that we may recover from the shock it gave, and that there may be some ingathering of the little ones who stood off in awe and amazement while the conflict was going on. Many good brethren have regretted the sad affair, and remarked that it was a pity the opposing party would act so derogatory to their own as well our welfare; and in almost every prayer in our meetings the petition went up to God to visit Zion, and bring peace out of war, and order out of confusion, and grant to every erring one repentance unto life. I am satisfied that many private and secret prayers were made in behalf of the church in these parts and elsewhere. I suppose brother Varnes can understand from these hints that the situation is quite different here from what he says it is where he lives. I hope that peace may continue to abound there upon the subject of predestination, and that brethren may continue to prove true to brother Varnes. If they should ever oppose him, and tell him his doctrine had to be stopped, that it was God-dishonoring, and a disgrace to Primitive Baptists, that it is heresy, and two seedism, and that Mormonism is better than it; and if his brother preachers should set and nod to a Methodist preacher while he is preaching, and then rise in the pulpit and do all they could to fire the minds of his congregation against his doctrine; then go off and misrepresent him among strangers, and feel around to learn if he would be recognized to set up nonfellowship; then the preacher and a member hold a private caucus, and the member take the streets of a town to denounce him, and proclaim his nonfellowship; then the preacher and his church rally to his support, and enter a protest of nonfellowship in their conference, and exclude those that oppose it; brother Varnes would by this time have his faith tried, and would feel like he wanted some body to pray in earnest. I hope that he may never have such an experience.

I will now come to a close, hoping that all who read the SIGNS may fairly understand that I do not censure any one for disbelief of predestination, if they have no hard names to call me and it, and do not declare nonfellowship for me and it. I am satisfied there are thousands of Baptists who comprehend but little of the doctrine, and it would be very unbecoming to cast reflections upon the innocent. I trust that none of the innocent will construe anything I have said as applicable to themselves; and I hope that they do not indorse the abrupt and wild course some have pursued in these parts, and in some other places. Desiring that peace and love may abound among all the household of faith, I close for the present.

MARCH 14, 1891.

DEAR BRETHREN:—I have often thought since I saw you that I would write you; but a feeling sense of my unworthiness and ignorance in spiritual things has deterred me from making the attempt; and I do not know that I should at this time, except as some relief to my own mind, hoping that if I fail to interest you, I will not fail to receive from you a word of comfort.

I have had a name among the Predestinarian Baptists over twenty years, and have, unworthy as I am, been blessed with many tokens of love and fellowship from brethren and sisters in the different churches in my own and sister associations. I am often made to wonder why it is. One thing I do know, that the love and fellowship of God's children has become to me my life. Take that from me and I should be most miserable. The matter I most desire to write about just now is to call your attention to one thing that to my mind is one of the things that is lacking in almost every Old Baptist Church of my acquaintance, and to ask you to write something in our family paper, that the pure minds of the brethren may be stirred up to discharge their duty, namely, the relative duty of pastors and churches, more especially the support of those in the ministry. We have in all our churches good, thoughtful brethren that individually are ever ready to bear their part and give of their abundance toward helping the tried servants of our God. It has always seemed to me that while I would not hinder the private generosity of brethren, I think that a church should act together in the support of a pastor, and that each member should feel it not only his duty but a privilege to contribute his or her part. If I can give twenty-five cents it is as much my duty to do so as the one who can give as many dollars. No one will deny that a church should look after the temporal wants of their pastor. Now if there is no concert of action, and no member knows what another has done, how is the church to know whether her pastor is provided for or not? Again, what right has a brother or sister to expect one or a half dozen to bear what properly should fall on each, according as the Lord has prospered them? How often have I seen with a sad heart good brethren and sisters, after feasting upon the preaching of some dear brother, bid him good-by, with an invitation to come again, expressing their pleasure in hearing him, and yet never thought to give him a cent to help pay the expense of his trip. The comfort of a minister's family is as dear to him as to any of us, and I cannot feel that the brother or sister who neglects this plainly taught duty has any right to expect the blessing of God. Neither is any church the right to expect the blessing of God in having the services of a pastor, if she is neglectful in this respect. I do not consider that there is any one duty or command of our blessed Master more binding upon his children than another, so that the chastening rod is any surer to be visited upon them for the neglect of one more than another. The destitution of many churches to-day of the preached word is to my mind largely owing to their neglect in this respect. Our ministering brethren often suffer for the comforts of life, or their families do, and fear to say a word for fear of being accused of preaching for money. The brother who sees this neglect on the part of other brethren fears to say anything to them, for fear of hurting feelings, and thus the matter goes. It is a sad state of affairs when God's children are afraid to exhort one another to love and good works. I feel anxious that some brother who can write on these matters will do so. I am one of the little poor, and am not willing that my name should appear in print. My own failings and weaknesses are so manifest that I am not worthy nor capable of instructing any of my brethren. If your mind is so directed, please write upon the matter. Hoping to hear from you, and of seeing you again this year, I will close, with love to you and family, and to brother William.

Your brother, I hope,

SIN AGAINST THE HOLY GHOST.

"ELDER GILBERT BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—Will you please give your views, through the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, on the question, What is sin unto death? Is blasphemy against the Holy Ghost the same thing as the sin unto death? Does the child of God, after being born again, blaspheme? Did Ananias and Sapphira blaspheme? There is much discussion among the Baptists here, on this question. Please answer; and I hope to hear from others also, on this subject. Yours,

M. D. COX.

Although we would not dare to engage in a merely speculative discussion of the questions proposed by our correspondent, it is of much importance that the saints should correctly understand the subject so far as it is involved in their own individual experience. The adversary is ever ready to wrest even the words of inspiration, so as to make them appear as condemning the very ground of the confidence of every sinner whom God has given to hope in divine grace. When they are thus bewildered by the devices of Satan, the saints mistake the consolation of the gospel for condemnation to themselves. Natural reason will always indorse the accusations which are presented by the accuser of the saints, and in the letter of the Scriptures that reason will find every charge sustained; and in submission to the infinite justice of God, the saved sinner confesses that God is holy and righteous, even though the sentence of death must rest upon him. It is by faith alone that the grace of God is revealed as bringing salvation to them that were lost. No subject of that salvation can deny that he was lost in sin and in death, when that grace was revealed in him, by which he was made to hope in Jesus Christ for the remission of sins. There could be no grace in the saving of one who was not a sinner. The glorious grace of God is revealed in Jesus, in that in him every chosen vessel of divine mercy is a sinner whom the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin. See 1 John i. 7.

"What is sin unto death?" The views of no mortal can be of any consequence to the sinner who would know the truth of God. The word of inspiration alone can be depended on as infallibly correct. In that word we are told that "Whosoever committeth sin transgresseth also the law; for sin is the transgression of the law." The consequence of transgression of the law given to Adam is seen in the universal reign of death over all who were involved in sin by his one act of disobedience. Under that law death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned. The obedience of Adam was justly due to his Creator. The commandment which God gave to him did not bring him under obligation; that law only demanded the obedience which as a dependent creature it was right that he should render to his Maker. When the transgression of that law brought sin into the world, that sin was unto death. No other penalty was provided in that law. From the entrance of sin, there has been manifest the dominion of death. It cannot be of the transgression of that law the apostle speaks when he says, "If any man see his brother sin a sin which is not unto death, he shall ask, and he shall give him life for them that sin not unto death." Neither does the remaining portion of that verse refer to the sin against that law. "There is a sin unto death; I do not say that he shall pray for it."—1 John v. 16. When the subjects of redeeming grace are brought into the liberty of the gospel, they are no longer under the law of sin and death. Consequently it is not possible that they should sin against that law. Their allegiance is due to the perfect law of liberty in Christ Jesus; and in walking in obedience to the precepts which are written in their hearts by the Spirit of truth, they live in the answer of a good conscience toward God. But if they live after the flesh, they die to all experience of the assurance of hope in Christ. This must be understood as applicable alone to the present experience of life, or death, in the individual saints in their temporal state. It will not be necessary to remind the children of God that their Lord has given them eternal life, and they can never forfeit that gift, because that life is hid with Christ in God. Since the blood of Jesus cleanses them from all sin, it cannot be that there is a possibility of his work being defeated by any sin which can be committed by them. This is confirmed by the fact that the saints "are kept by the power of God unto salvation ready to be revealed in the last time." 1 Peter i. 5. Since their Savior has all power in earth and in heaven, it is certain that he will not be disappointed in his will that all his chosen people shall be with him where he is, that they may behold the glory of their triumphant Redeemer. His own complete atonement has satisfied infinite justice on the part of all for whom he gave himself a ransom. He was delivered for our offenses, and was raised again for our justification.—Rom. iv. 25. As it is evident that the saints are not under the law of sin and death, Paul may well challenge all accusers, saying, "Who shall lay anything to the charge of God's elect? It is God that justifieth. Who is he that condemneth? It is Christ that died, yea rather, that is risen again, who is even at the right hand of God, who also

maketh intercession for us." As surely as God has raised up Jesus from the dead, so surely has Jesus forever satisfied in every particular the demands of justice against his people. So our Lord himself declares, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation; but is passed from death unto life."—John v. 24. Hence, it is clear that no sinner who is cleansed by the blood of Jesus can perish under the power of death. On the other hand, there is no need of any particular sinful action to bring the condemnation of divine justice upon the sinful family of Adam, in whom they are all condemned and under death already. We do not understand the language quoted from John as being applicable to any other characters but such as he designates as "you that believe on the name of the Son of God;" and he says that he has written unto them, "that ye may know that ye have eternal life, and that ye may believe on the name of the Son of God." This can be true only of those of whom Jesus says, "My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me; and I give unto them eternal life; and they shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand." There is no eternal life anywhere else but in this gift of the sovereign grace of God. It is not consistent to understand any expression of Scripture as teaching that this language of our Lord is liable to prove untrue. Whether we shall receive the correct idea of the subject under consideration, or not, the eternal life of all the election of God in Christ Jesus is securely hid with Christ in God. By no possibility can the saints lose that life.

To these very characters, however, Paul writes, "Therefore, brethren, we are debtors, not to the flesh, to live after the flesh. For if ye live after the flesh, ye shall die; but if ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live."—Rom. viii. 12, 13. It is evident that it is in their present condition that they realize both the death and the life of which Paul speaks. This agrees with the personal experience of the saints. When enabled by divine grace to mortify the deeds of the body, and walk in the Spirit, there is an experience of life which is never realized when living after the flesh. The death which is in consequence of living after the flesh, is bitterly felt when the conscious child of God is made to mourn his departure from the pathway of obedience to his dear Lord. It is not that the terrible thunders of the written law of God are denounced against him with fiery condemnation; but when in his sin against the commandments of the Lord, the Spirit gives him to feel that Jesus looks on him, then with Peter, he weeps bitterly. This is death to the believer who loves his Lord. But even in that depth of distress there is evidence that the love of Christ dwells in the heart of the transgressor, since the very goodness of God leads him to repentance.

The primary application of the text, 1 John v. 16, appears to refer to the relationship of the saints in the organized church. The law of Christ demands the obedience of every one who loves him. For every sin against his commandment our Lord has enjoined the penalty which must be suffered by the transgressor. In many cases the sin is covered by the manifestation of that repentance which Christ is exalted a Prince and a Savior to give to Israel. The saints are authorized to pray in such cases, and the Lord will give life for them that sin not unto death. But there is such sin as cannot be tolerated in the members of the church. From such transgressors the commandment of the Lord is imperative that the saints shall withdraw themselves, and not keep company with them, nor even eat with them. Such sin is unto death, in that it requires that the church shall withdraw from the transgressor; and since no confession could retain the fellowship of the church, there is no command that the saints shall pray for it. It is mere mockery of fellowship when one is held as a member of the church while he is not retained in the love of those who nominally count him a brother. So, it is manifestly hypocritical to pray for the retention of one as a brother when there is no love prompting such prayer. Whatever words or actions of any saint forbid the continuance of brotherly love toward him, they constitute a sin unto death, since they separate him from the love of the brethren. If such separation is the result of any conduct of a brother, that is sin unto death to him. If it is the pleasure of our Lord to give such repentance as shall retain the love of the brethren, there is nothing which can constitute a sin unto death, since there is no death where the love of Christ continues.

"Is blasphemy against the Holy Ghost the same thing as the sin unto death?" From what has been stated in reply to the first question of our brother, it will be seen that we regard the sin unto death as limited to those who have been brought into the living fellowship of the saints. Where our Lord declared the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost to be not forgiven, it was in connection with the refutation of the charge that he cast out devils by the prince of devils. After repelling that false accusation, he says, "Wherefore I say unto you, All manner of sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto men; but the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost shall not be forgiven unto men. And whosoever speaketh a word against the Son of man, it shall be forgiven him; but whosoever speaketh against the Holy Ghost, it shall not be forgiven him, neither in this world, neither in the world to come."—Matt. xii. 31, 32. In this fearful denunciation of blasphemy against the Holy Ghost, there is evident reference to those charges which he had just refuted. So Mark adds the explanation, that it was "Because they said, He hath an unclean spirit."—Mark iii. 30. There is no record that the truth of God ever was known to those Pharisees and scribes, whose accusation of Jesus was blasphemy against the Holy Ghost. Their own words condemned them as enemies against the perfect holiness which is revealed in Christ Jesus. In reviling the manifestation of the Spirit in Jesus, they blasphemed against the Holy Ghost. Their enmity against God was plainly exhibited in their railing against the divine power and grace which was displayed in the works of Jesus. That proved them to be destitute of the love of God and his righteousness. Yet in attributing to Beelzebub the power by which those works were wrought, those enemies were guilty of blasphemy against the Holy Ghost. Being already under condemnation and death, their awful sin but demonstrated the justice of that judgment of God.

Neither in the legal world, where Jesus was when he spoke these words, nor in the new world of his gospel kingdom, which then was to come, can there be any forgiveness of sin which is against the Holy Ghost, and not against Jesus as the Son of man. There can be no sin or blasphemy of any of those for whom Jesus died, but that is against him as their Surety and Redeemer. So it is written, "All we like sheep have gone astray; we have turned every one to his own way; and the Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all."—Isa. liii. 6. "For he hath made him to be sin for us, who knew no sin; that we might be made the righteousness of God in him."—2 Cor. v. 21. There can never be any abatement of the just condemnation which rests upon every sinner. Only as Jesus has borne the sins of his ransomed people in his own body on the tree, can they be justified by his infinite grace. As every sin of his chosen people was laid on him, and he has atoned for them, clearly all those sins are against him. "All manner of sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto men." If there were one sin from which the blood of Jesus Christ could fail to cleanse his saints, there is not one of his people who could hope in his salvation. Every one feels himself the chief of sinners, and therefore nothing less than the infinite grace of God can afford assurance to any of them.

THE LORD WILL PROVIDE.

SEE Abram walking up the hill
With Isaac fondling by him still,
And prattling in his ear.
At length the lovely child is bound,
The hand is stretch'd, the knife is found,
And then the Lord appears.

If thou art sprung from Abram's stock,
A sheep of Jesus' little flock,
For trials arm thy mind;
Temptations will beset thy feet,
A thousand dangers thou shalt meet,
A thousand struggles find.

As every trial passeth o'er,
Expect another full as sore,
Perhaps a sorer yet.
And when the clouds begin to rise,
They blacker grow and fill the skies,
And threaten ruin great.

Perhaps the Lord withholds his light,
And keeps his help far out of sight,
Thine utmost faith to try.
Yet this remember, O my friend,
When thou art brought to thy wits' end,
That Abram's God is nigh.

On danger's brink when thou art brought
In sad perplexity of thought,
Then Jesus draweth near.
He speaks a word divinely mild,
And cheers the poor, distressed child,
And scatters all his fear.

MARRIAGES.

At the residence of the bride's parents, near Macomb, Ill., March 4th, 1891, Mr. Edward M. Fuhr and Miss Harriet Vanmeter, her father, Elder I. N. Vanmeter, officiating.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

John Henry Bowen was born in Raritan Township, Henderson Co., Ill., Feb. 21st, 1864, and departed this life near where he was born Feb. 27th, 1891, aged 27 years and 6 days.

Brother Bowen made a profession of his faith in Jesus Christ in May, 1883, and was baptized by the writer in July following, in the fellowship of the Bethany Church of Regular Primitive Baptists. In March, 1885, he became a member of the New Hope Church by letter, and remained in her fellowship until his death. The deceased was only in his twentieth year when he put on Christ publicly; but he read his Bible much, and was soon confirmed and established in the doctrine of salvation by grace so thoroughly, and loved it so dearly, that it was his almost daily talk among his friends. He not only believed in the doctrine of grace, but was able to give the reason why, and was uncompromising with every conditional system of creature works.

The circumstances attending brother Bowen's death were unusual, and very shocking to his family and friends. When quite young he was united in marriage with a very young and beautiful girl, Miss Lucinda Jane Lovett, who had borne six children to him before his death, the last one, twenty-six days old, dying twenty-three days before its father's decease, and the mother, of course, left in grief; but her worst trial was yet to come. He and his brother, Lewis C. Bowen (also a church member), were out in an open field with a team and wagon, and had both shot their guns at some wild geese. Lewis left John standing near the team; and when he was about twenty-five yards away John called to him and said, "Come back here, Lew; I am dying." He spoke again, saying, "Come quick; I am dying." Before his brother reached him his gun dropped out of his hand, and he was about to fall. He said to his brother, "Put my cap on; my head is cold. Ease me down." After speaking a sentence of prayer he grasped his brother's hand, saying, "I am dying happy. Good-by, Lew." He spoke no more, but breathed a short time and was gone. It was a severe trial to the surviving brother, out in the open field, on the cold ground, to witness the dying struggles of a beloved brother alone. Brother Lewis called loudly, and soon had others on hand to convey the lifeless body to the house. But what a shock to his beloved wife, to his parents near by, to his children and friends!

I being quite a distance from home, did not get a despatch in time to reach the place of burial in the town of Terre Haute, Ill., and I met a large audience in a meeting-house in that place on the fifth Sunday in March, and tried to comfort the bereaved ones from Philippians i. 21. Elder Cyrus Humphrey was also present and took part in the services. May the Lord bless the bereaved.

At the request of the mother of the above deceased, I hastily pen a few thoughts in verse, which she wishes appended to the obituary:

"I'm dying happy, brother, and bid you now good-by;

Without a moment's warning I am thus called to die,

To leave a world of sorrow, of sin and pain and woe;

Through grace I am now ready to bid farewell and go."

Thus was he in a moment, an unexpected time,

He leaves his wife and children, and many a loving friend,

Called by his Lord and Master to leave this earthly clime.

No time allowed for saying a word to wife or child;

Yet as his Master called him, he left well reconciled.

Without a parting blessing, or time a word to send;

But O the heavenly comfort his dying words expressed:

"I'm dying happy, brother, and soon shall be at rest."

Thus passed away our brother, just in the prime of life,

Cut off from the embraces of friends and loving wife;

But we should all remember the victory of his faith:

"I'm dying happy, brother," and bowed his head in death.

When one is thus so quickly cut down just in his prime,

It solemnly reminds us "man knoweth not his time;"

But with a hope in Jesus, let death come when it may,

We also shall be ready to die and soar away.

THREE DAYS MEETINGS.

A THREE days meeting will be held with the Sidling Hill Church of Old School Baptists, in Fulton Co., Pa., to commence on Friday, May 1st, 1891.

We give a cordial invitation to all of our faith and order, and would be very glad if some of our ministering brethren could meet with us at that time, for we are lonely as to ministers. It is true that we are poor, and cannot offer any worldly inducements; but we know that God's faithful servants do not go for filthy lucre's sake, but of a ready mind.

Those coming by railroad will need to take the Baltimore & Ohio R. R. to Hancock, Md., where they will be met on Thursday, about the middle of the day, as the church is about twenty miles north of Hancock. Those who contemplate coming had better write to brother Dennis Mellott or brother Jacob F. Garland, whose post-office address is Needmore, Fulton Co., Pa.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date, this date denotes the time at which your subscription expires, and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

THE EVERLASTING TASK
FOR ARMINIANS.

By Elder William Gadsby, late of Manchester, England. We have republished a large edition of the above named very interesting and instructing pamphlet. Many thousands of copies have been scattered through England and America, and read with intense interest by the lovers of the truth, and still the demand has increased to such a degree as to induce us to present to the public this edition which we will send (postage paid by us) to any post-office address in the United States or Canada, at the following rates, viz: a single copy for 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00; 25 copies for $2.00; 50 copies for $3.00; 100 copies for $5.00.

THE VOICE OF THE SON OF GOD.

Psalm lxxvi. 16.

COME, ye that fear the Lord,
And lend a listening ear;
We'll sing the wonders of the Word
That makes the dead to hear.
Bound in the thrall of sin,
Unconscious in this tomb,
Unmindful of decay within,
And of our dreadful doom.
In death we still had lain
But for the voice of one
That called us into life again—
The life of God's dear Son.
All things that we had done
That voice brought plain to view;
And Sinai's thunder now begun,
Did seem to pierce us through.
That mountain all on fire,
The trumpet long and loud,
Spoke words that mortals cannot bear
From out the angry cloud.
For refuge we had fled,
But knew not where to go,
Till the same voice that wakes the dead
Our trembling souls did show.
Through water and through fire
We came to land of wealth,
And in mount Zion our desire
Found grace and saving health.
O may we never roam,
But ever here rejoice
In him who called and brought us home
By his almighty voice.

CORRESPONDENCE.

LEESBURGH, Va., March 27, 1891.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS:—I noticed in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, some numbers back, a request for my views on the following words (if not mistaken; for I have misplaced the paper): "Brethren, my heart's desire and prayer to God for Israel is, that they might be saved. For I bear them record that they have a zeal of God, but not according to knowledge. For they, being ignorant of God's righteousness, and going about to establish their own righteousness, have not submitted themselves unto the righteousness of God."—Rom. x. 1-3. This is what Paul says to his "brethren" about Israel. By every one in whom is grace, will grace be manifested. They are created for this purpose, unto good works, which God hath before ordained that they should walk in them. Therefore it is impossible for one in whom is grace to fail in manifesting that grace. There can be no doubt but that the grace of God dwelt in Paul. Because we believe this, we scrutinize what Paul says, and attach importance according to our faith in the authority by which he spoke. Being fully persuaded by divine authority and the Spirit of our God, Paul spoke; and by the same Spirit only can be understood what he did speak. My heart's desire and prayer to God is that he will give me the Spirit, by which I may be able to explain Paul's meaning, to the spiritual edification and comfort of "E." and all lovers of the truth.

It is my understanding that the Israel for whom Paul prayed should be saved, was not Israel who hath attained unto righteousness which is of faith, but Israel who, attempting to attain unto righteousness by the works of the law, stumbled at that stumblingstone. If my conclusion is right, this brings up a very important question.

It appears to me the apostle was not speaking about the righteousness wrought out by the blessed Redeemer, when he suffered upon the cross for all those given to him by the Father before they were believers; for of them the apostle says, "If we believe not, yet he abideth faithful: he cannot deny himself."—2 Tim. ii. 15. Of this "we" he says in the eleventh verse preceding, "If we be dead with him [Christ], we shall also live with him." Therefore it seems evident that we who were dead with him shall live with him, whether we believe or believe not. But there is a salvation in believing, and a righteousness by faith. It is this righteousness the apostle had under consideration. There are those as did "Israel," who believe righteousness can be attained unto by works. Such, though ignorantly it may be, are denying Christ. For the salvation of such, it seems to me, the heart of Paul was filled with holy desire and prayer. He seems to be especially concerned for these. In the chapter preceding he says, "I say the truth in Christ, I lie not, my conscience also bearing me witness in the Holy Ghost, that I have great heaviness and continual sorrow in my heart. For I could wish that myself were accursed from Christ for my brethren, my kinsmen according to the flesh." The apostle prefixes what he says of his own feelings toward his brethren, his kinsmen according to the flesh, with the most solemn declaration of the truth of the same, "I lie not," and tells in whom it is true. "I say the truth in Christ." My assertion, opinion or feeling, expressed or otherwise, contrary to this of the apostle Paul, must be in the flesh, and not in Christ, unless it can be shown that Paul was not in the Spirit; and if that could be proved, then would Christ be denied indeed; for he too, as Paul, was willing to lay down his life for his brethren according to the flesh, though they be rebellious and unbelieving. "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends." Yes, "for a good man some would even dare to die. But God commendeth his love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us." The strongest evidence any man can give of his devotion is his willingness to lay down his life, and no man will do that except for a friend. But such is the power of the Spirit of Christ in man as to make him willing to die for his enemy; but only those enemies for whom he believes Christ died. I ask, my brother, when you are compelled to condemn a brother would you not rather that you be wrong in condemning, than that the brother should deserve the condemnation?

There is such a brilliant display of this kind of zeal, willing to lay down their life for themselves and friends, in these times by some, would it not be well for us to notice how much they are willing to sacrifice for their enemies, or those who oppose them? I cannot believe that this kind and devoted feeling on the part of Paul toward his brethren prevented him in the least from telling them in the plainest manner possible the whole truth of God. But surely with such feelings in him toward them, Paul could never give up his labors to save them from the error of their way. See in all this ninth chapter how faithfully he declared unto them the whole counsel of God. Paul did not try to make proselytes unto himself, to build up a party for himself, but with meekness and patience instructed those who had a zeal, but not according to knowledge. Men, to gain favor and make capital for themselves, will "with feigned words make merchandise" of you; but the man of God, moved by the Spirit of God, cannot do this; no, though it cost him his life. That he is (or should be) willing to give for his brethren, though they be not his friends; but not one jot or tittle of the truth should he yield. To contend for the faith is enjoined upon us; but how can it be said of a man who forsakes and turns his back upon his brethren, that he is contending earnestly for the faith?

Who is he to contend with but his brethren? and who among his brethren? They who agree, or they who disagree with him? What some call contending for the faith, I call downright rebellion against the faith. But I trust we love that kind of contending manifested by Paul; such as this, "My heart's desire and prayer to God for Israel is that they might be saved." Paul says of the Israel he is talking about, that they are his kinsmen according to the flesh, but calls them "brethren;" but he says of them that they have a zeal of God, but not according to knowledge, and that they were trying to attain unto righteousness by the deeds or works of the law. Now here is the important question: If some of our brethren should believe what we know to be wrong, how are we to treat them? Issue a manifesto, declaring them to be clean gone to the devil, and that all they who would not go with them must separate themselves from them? No, this is not the way the apostle felt toward them, but he would wish myself accursed from Christ for your sakes. My heart's desire and prayer to God is that you might be saved. Such a desire in the hearts of our brethren at this time would open the prison doors to them that are bound, bind up the broken-hearted, restore peace and gladness in all the bounds of Israel, and fill her with thanksgiving and the voice of melody. I can but believe that every heaven-born soul desires this as sincerely and earnestly as did Paul. We are all taught alike. Our experience must be like Paul's or we cannot be Christ's.

To my mind those for whom Paul entertained such a deep and abiding solicitude were Israelites indeed, but such as saw men as trees walking; from whose eyes the scales had not yet fallen; to whom "blindness in part (not altogether)" "is happened." But they were Israelites notwithstanding; and being Israelites, they must and would be saved; for "all Israel shall be saved." "As it is written, There shall come out of Sion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob." To Peter directly, yet to such, it appears to me, our Savior addressed the words, "Ye believe in God, believe also in me. In my Father's house are many mansions. If it were not so I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you." The Father's house is where he dwells; the church, which is his body, the fullness of him that filleth all in all. In the church, which is his body (not simply the organized body of gospel believers, but the whole body of Jesus), are many mansions, in which all dwell who were chosen in him before the foundation of the world; no matter in what age, or in what dispensation, they lived or died; whether they believed in him as the God Almighty, the Creator of all things, or God Jehovah, self-existing, or God Omnipotent, the Creator, Preserver, Savior, Redeemer, All in all; they all have a place in Christ. Neither Abraham, Isaac or Jacob (and certainly none during their day and generation) knew him by his name Jehovah.—Ex. vi. 3. Farther on he was revealed as the self-existent God, and the help of his people. Still farther on he was revealed to John on the isle of Patmos as Lord God Almighty, which art, and wast, and art to come.—Rev. xi. 17. And in Rev. xix. 6, John says, "I heard as it were the voice of a great multitude, and as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of mighty thunders, saying, Alleluia! for the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth." The voices that John heard would indicate that it would require many mansions to hold them. First, the voice was a great multitude; then as many waters; then of mighty thunders. The voice grew louder and louder, until it filled the whole earth with his praise. There is no voice like the voice of mighty thundering. It shakes all things that can be shaken. And the voice was, "The Lord God Omnipotent reigneth." In no other dispensation, and by none other, did God speak in such thundering tones as by Jesus Christ, saying, "This is my beloved Son; hear ye him." Even the dead shall hear this voice. He had power given him over all flesh, good and bad. As Lord God Omnipotent he reigns. Such a revelation of God's word and purpose was never before made. It is nothing short of the fullness of the Godhead bodily. It would not be surprising if we did not find the word predestination in the Old Testament, nor those who believed in it. But we are sorry to see some of our brethren at this time do not believe the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth absolutely over all things. He who does not believe this, comes short in his faith of the glory of the revelation of God in Christ Jesus. But if we deny these, and those who go about to establish their own righteousness, a mansion in Christ, would we not vacate many mansions which are in Christ? Comparatively, I think, there would be very few left and occupied. Christ would be deprived of many for whom he died. Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, Moses, and those in his day, to say nothing of those before Abraham, would have no mansion prepared for them. There would be no holy faith, no saving hope, no godly love, for them to dwell in if Christ is only a Savior to those who have attained to a perfect knowledge of all things in the doctrine and order of God's house. I believe but few will be saved, as is written. But if this idea be true, Elias would have been deprived of the little consolation that was left him, "I am left alone," for the devil would have gotten him also. But evidently this was not Paul's way of thinking; for he says, "Hath God cast away his people? God forbid. For I also am an Israelite, of the seed of Abraham, of the tribe of Benjamin. God hath not cast away his people which he foreknew." Neither did Christ cast them away simply because they were not sound in the doctrine or practice, or came up to the standard that was in him; nor did any of the apostles; nor did they teach any man to cast his people away whom God foreknew, no matter how weak they were in the faith. But Paul did teach, "We then that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak, and not please ourselves." He did not teach to be partaker of their infirmities, but bear their infirmities. O that brethren would do this! There is a beautiful harmony in the voice of all who wrote as they were moved by the Holy Ghost. John did not say, Try them if they be sound in the doctrine, and if they "have resolved to walk in the gospel line;" but, "Try the spirits." It is by the spirit in a man we are to judge, and not by the knowledge in the head. Those who are poor in spirit; those who mourn; those who are meek; those who hunger and thirst after righteousness; those who are merciful; these we are to esteem our brethren. We are even to pray for those who are ignorant of God's righteousness, and are going about to establish their own righteousness; who are, I think, generally revilers and persecutors of gospel believers. But we are not to revile and persecute them. If we do so what better are we than they? Can we do it and have the true spirit of prayer in our hearts, the spirit of Jesus, who commanded to pray for our enemies? When he was reviled, he reviled not again, when he suffered, he threatened not. Those who have the Spirit are admonished to walk in the Spirit. This Paul did when he prayed for the salvation of Israel, who had a zeal, but not according to knowledge. He did not forget the time when he "was zealous toward God" as those Jews were who were then persecuting him; and at that time he "persecuted this way unto the death, binding and delivering into prison both men and women;" and that he was on a journey to carry out this very persecution that was in his heart, when there shone from heaven a great light round about him, and he fell to the ground, and heard a voice saying unto him, "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?" If there is one mean trait in a man more despicable than another it is ingratitude. Paul was not ungrateful. It was his heart's desire to show unto others that grace which saved him when ignorantly he persecuted God's people. The grace in his heart did not teach him to refuse forgiveness to the man who owed him only a hundred pence, when he had been forgiven ten thousand talents which he owed. Dear old soldier, how we love thee! and how much we would love to be just such a man of grace as thee! We would rather take thee as our pattern, than all the young persecuting Sauls the world contains!

We cannot see that there was any more grace or knowledge in the decree of Nebuchadnezzar that every people, nation and language who should speak anything amiss against the God of Shadrach, Meshach and Abednego should be cut to pieces, and their houses to be made a dung-hill, than there was in his decree that they should heat the furnace one seven times more than it was wont to be heated; and that the most mighty men that were in his army should bind Shadrach, Meshach and Abednego, and cast them into the burning fiery furnace. In the one case he would subject the true worshipers of God to the most cruel death for being true worshipers, and in the other he would subject the false worshipers to the same for being false worshipers. One was as wicked as the other. We should no more vent our anger on the false worshiper than on the true. God controls and directs both. It was God who softened and hardened Pharaoh's heart, and in him God showed his power to do either or both. The Scriptures teach, "Wait on the Lord." The true believer waits because he believes the Lord knows best when to come, how to come, and what to do when he does come. A confident expectation produces a steadfast waiting. Undertaking for ourselves shows want of belief in God's promises.

There is but one way decreed by God how man shall obtain knowledge, and that is by eating. Man's way is by teaching, studying, reading and searching. Experience is not only the best, but the only teacher whereby we gain knowledge. God told Adam (and surely God is a good teacher), "In the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." But Adam did not know it was true until he did eat. He knew God had said so (and we are afraid that is about the extent of the knowledge of many), but he did not know it for himself until he did eat. When he ate of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, when he partook of good and evil, then he received the knowledge, and knew for himself that what God had said was true. He then "became as one of us of us, to know good and evil." He knew too much now to stay in the garden; for he had the privilege granted him while in the garden of eating of the tree of life. And God did not intend that man should, after his fall, obtain eternal life through his own works. Had he done so, he would never have denied him the only chance he ever had. God did predestinate man to eat of the tree of life, but not by his works; and man must eat of the tree of life before he can have the knowledge of life. We must be actual partakers of life before we know for ourselves the blessedness of life. "Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you." These are the words of our blessed Redeemer. So we see God's original plan of obtaining knowledge is the same yesterday to-day and forever.

I cannot understand what some of our brethren say about teaching children, and having them to read the good books our good brethren have published. Such an idea must have its origin in an expectation; and if I know anything about it, it is an expectation sure to prove delusive. This kind of knowledge does not come in that way.

These Israelites of whom Paul speaks had a zeal of God, but not according to knowledge. Perhaps they had eaten of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil. They had an experience of good and evil. They had eaten of the goodness of the law, and of its curses. They desired righteousness, and were striving for it, but could only strive according to the knowledge they had. Many poor children are in this condition. All have been there. Paul, exercised by that holy grace in his heart, could but pity them; for he could not forget his Jewish religion, and how that beyond measure he persecuted the church of God.—Gal. i. 13. Yet he knew these poor, striving, laboring creatures could never attain to righteousness in this way; for this way was blocked and guarded, and the only way was in submitting themselves unto the righteousness of God. But a man cannot submit to anything and everything. Knowledge brings submission. If I know that the amputation of my arm or leg is best, I will submit that it should be done. But I must know that first, or I will not submit. The only way to obtain this knowledge which shall produce submission is by eating the flesh and drinking the blood of the Son of man. Knowledge thus received prepares the heart to submit itself to the righteousness of God. "The preparation of the heart in man and the answer of the tongue is from the Lord." It takes great preparation to prepare man for great things. Great are the works of righteousness to be wrought out by him, and great is the work that works that righteousness in him. "How terrible art thou in thy works! Through the greatness of thy power shall thine enemies submit themselves unto thee."—Psa. lxxvi. 3. Terrible indeed is the work, and no power short of the power of God can prepare our heart, full of enemies, to submit itself to the righteousness of God. Though we have faith, that faith must be ex-exercised in terrible trials, afflictions and persecutions before we are prepared to submit ourselves to the righteousness of God, and to follow our blessed Redeemer whithersoever he leadeth. Peter found this true, as every other one has whose strength has been made perfect in weakness. Yes, we must eat, we must partake of the trials and afflictions of our dear Redeemer, before we can have fellowship with them. Until we do, how can we submit ourselves unto Jesus? But there is such a halo of glory, such a sweetness and blessedness of feeling, in the submission that makes us say with Paul, "I count all things but loss, for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord, for whom I have suffered the loss of all things, and do count them but dung, that I may win Christ, and he found in him, not having mine own righteousness, which is of the law, but that which is through the faith of Christ, the righteousness which is of God by faith." O the poverty of spirit, the rags of filth to be worn, the downittings and uprisings, the disappointments, the mortifications, the shame and reproach, to bring one into the knowledge of the truth of the apostle's words! Can man desire them for himself? I think not. My experience is, I thank God for them; yet I would not have my own child to submit to them—such humiliations! No; rather would I say, Shoot the life out of the man that would dare bring them upon you! O how glad I am there is an omnipotent God, who rules the devils and makes them submissive to his will.

Now, my dear brethren, I have written so much and said so little, I am afraid if you publish it it will only be for the love you have for me. May God give you grace to speak the truth to friend and foe, and tell your brethren their faults.

Your brother, I hope,

E. V. WHITE.

"I WILL give to Jerusalem one that bringeth good tidings."—Isaiah xli. 27.

On one occasion Paul said unto Barnabas, "Let us go again and visit our brethren in every city where we have preached the word of the Lord, and see how they do."—Acts xv. 36. This same spirit is in the people of God to-day. When the saints visit one another, or assemble themselves together, if we are in the Spirit shall we not be found inquiring and observing how each other is faring in the things of the kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ? Sometimes we have to behold, or, like Nehemiah, hear tidings of such things that make our hearts sad. We mourn for Jerusalem (Isa. lxvi. 10), over the abominations done in the city (Ezek. ix. 4), and find our hearts stirred by the reigning grace of God to pray to the God of heaven.—Neh. i. 4; ii. 1-3. But O when we witness the manifold grace of God (Acts xi. 23), the order and stead-fastness of the dear children of our God in the doctrine and commandments of Christ, we are filled with sacred delight, and in grateful thanksgiving we bow before the Lord our God. The apostle Paul, speaking of the church of the Thessalonians, says, "When Timotheus came from you unto us, and brought us good tidings of your faith and charity, and that ye have good remembrance of us always, desiring greatly to see us, as we also to see you: therefore, brethren, we were comforted over you in all our affliction and distress by your faith: for now we live, if ye stand fast in the Lord. For what thanks can we render to God again for you, for all the joy wherewith we joy for your sakes before our God; night and day praying exceedingly that we might see your face, and might perfect that which is lacking in your faith?"—1 Thess. iii. 6-10. To what extent "the same earnest care" and bowels of mercies toward the saints of God prevails to-day in the midst of the churches the Lord only knows. Though dark and painful features may be visible in some of the churches of our dear Redeemer, yet I feel that in many hearts the spirit of love is manifested toward each other, and in many hearts Jehovah has put the spirit of prayer to pray for the peace of Jerusalem. While much exercised in my mind some time ago over the present condition of Zion I found considerable comfort in my soul (from the Holy Spirit, as I believe) in the words at the beginning of this communication, "I will give to Jerusalem one that bringeth good tidings." Jesus is the one who bringeth good tidings unto Jerusalem. He says, "The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me; because the Lord hath anointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek"—Isa. lxi. 1. How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of Jesus, our dear Savior, "that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace; that bringeth good tidings of good, that publisheth salvation; that saith unto Zion, Thy God reigneth! Thy watchmen shall lift up the voice; with the voice together shall they sing: for they shall see eye to eye, when the Lord shall bring again Zion. Break forth into joy, sing together, ye waste places of Jerusalem: for the Lord hath comforted his people, he hath redeemed Jerusalem. The Lord hath made bare his holy arm in the eyes of all the nations; and all the ends of the earth shall see the salvation of our God."—Isaiah lii. 7-10. Truly these are comforting tidings in all ages, to be verified by the children of Zion.

The narration of the manifestations of Jehovah's love to his people is surpassingly glorious. Take a view of our base original. When wrapped in sin and miseries, dead in trespasses and sins, by nature the children of wrath, even as others. Our first father sinned, and we have all gone astray from the womb. "Thus saith the Lord God unto Jerusalem;

Thy birth and thy nativity is of the land of Canaan; thy father was an Amorite, and thy mother a Hittite."—Ezek. xvi. 3. Then O how amazing and glorious is the grace of Jehovah to his elect! According to the flesh they are all vile transgressors of the law, and rebels against their God. What tidings could be expected by them but evil tidings? Our offenses have reached up to the heavens, and all our ways are a provocation of Jehovah's anger. The law declares the condemnation of transgressors; not a syllable of good news to sinners can be found written therein. Not a note of glad tidings can be heard; but tribulation and anguish, and curses in awful trumpet, it utters in the quickened sinner's heart, "Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things which are written in the book of the law to do them." When we were brought by the Holy Spirit to know our condition as condemned transgressors we soon found ourselves in a woeful plight. All the tidings that we could hear from the Lord while we were under the law were such as witnessed against us, and heralded the judgment of God in our just condemnation. Death was passed upon us, for we had sinned. What could we do to better our lot? Could all the wisdom and powers of the flesh alleviate our miseries, or in any degree extricate our souls from our guilt? It was by bitter and soul-humbling lessons that we were taught our helplessness. How lost we were in sin, and beyond all creature help! But at length we arrived, through days of darkness, anguish and sore travail, to the time when we cast our idols of silver and gold to the moles and the bats (Isa. ii. 20); for nothing that we had done, or had been looking up to and worshiping, expecting salvation to proceed from it, had procured us the least advantage, but had rather impoverished and brought us low. We found to our grief that we had spent our money for that which is not bread, and our labor for that which satisfieth not.—Isa. lv. 2. How oft in our remembrances, dear children of God, we review "the times" that passed over us (1 Chron. xxix. 30) during the early stages of our soul's experience, after it pleased God to quicken us. In the light of life, under the leading of the Spirit of God, we learned what vile sinners we were. Do we not yet remember our affliction, the wormwood and the gall? Who but the Lord of hosts, our glorious Redeemer, could have brought salvation to such sinful worms? When thus brought by sovereign grace to view the depths of our misery we are prepared to know our need of and to appreciate the riches of Jehovah's grace. We speak of God's grace as free and sovereign grace, and such it is. Though carnal men revile the thought of a sovereign God, and will own no other God than such a one as bows to and is obedient to their own fleshly will, yet the quickened soul feels under the teaching of the Lord that only that grace of God which flows in the most sovereign manner can bring salvation to the chief of sinners. If our eternal salvation were dependent upon the least particle of righteousness to be performed by us, then we must sink down in endless despair and perish in our sins. But saith God, "I will give to Jerusalem one that bringeth good tidings." When the time to favor Zion is come, "the set time," the predestinated time (Psalm cii. 13), then is fulfilled the word of the Lord. "Rejoice greatly, O daughter of Zion; shout, O daughter of Jerusalem: behold, thy King cometh unto thee: he is just, and having salvation; lowly, and riding upon an ass, and upon a colt the foal of an ass."—Zech. ix. 9; John xii. 14, 15.

The Son of God is the one who bringeth good tidings. He comes traveling in the greatness of his strength, mighty to save. He is laden with good tidings. He proclaims unto Zion, "Thy God reigneth." Ah, says the heart of the distressed daughter of Jerusalem, I thought it was the devil who reigned, my sins that reigned, that sin and Satan were supreme; but now what tidings are these that my sin-stricken heart hears? "Thy God reigneth." "Break forth into joy, sing together, ye waste places of Jerusalem: for the Lord hath comforted his people, he hath redeemed Jerusalem. The Lord hath made bare his holy arm in the eyes of all the nations; and all the ends of the earth shall see the salvation of our God."—Isaiah lii. 7-10. Our Lord Jesus Christ bringeth good tidings. He declares to his people the Father's eternal love and purpose. "No man hath seen God at any time; the only begotten Son, which is in the bosom of the Father, he hath declared him."—John i. 18. To the poor and the needy, the sin-oppressed, he brings tidings of the rich and abundant mercy of God. He himself hath come in the flesh. He was made sin for us, bore our sins, carried our sorrows, and hath redeemed us from all iniquity, from the curse of the law, and unto God, by his own precious blood. He comes, as the Captain of our salvation, from the field of battle, telling of his triumphs. He hath trodden the wine-press alone; he hath trampled the life out of all our enemies; his own arm hath brought salvation unto him. He hath vanquished, by the blood of his cross, all the mighty host of our sins. Not one is able to rise up and condemn us; for Christ hath died, yea, rather is risen again, and cometh bringing good tidings. The law is magnified and made honorable. The curse he endured, and hath delivered us. He hath purged away our guilt, and hath justified us by his blood. He hath reconciled us unto God, hath made peace for us, and in the body of his flesh through death he hath presented us to God the Father holy, unblamable, and unreprouvable in his sight, a glorious church, not having spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing, but holy and without blemish. He bringeth good tidings, saying, "I have redeemed thee; thou art mine." "Thou art all fair, my love; there is no spot in thee."

The high priest under the law, having made reconciliation for the sins of Israel, came forth from within the veil and blessed the people. O what unspeakably good tidings does Jesus, our great High Priest, bring! All is finished; salvation's work is done. He hath made atonement. Christ hath reconciled us unto God; and tidings of pardoning love and justifying righteousness he brings and proclaims by the Holy Ghost in the hearts of the daughters of Zion. He "bringeth good tidings." No uncertain tidings, but sure tidings, sure mercies. All is settled. We have a sure refuge. All the tidings which Jesus brings come from God, who is without variableness or shadow of turning; who from everlasting purposed in himself, and hath brought to pass, and who bringeth to pass the counsel of his own will, saying, "My counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure." Then the tidings are good, flowing from such a source. The blessed gospel of the grace of God proclaims glorious things indeed. Bread for the hungry, clothing for the naked, mercy for sinners, pardon for the guilty, deliverance for the captive, the opening of the prison-house, beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning, and the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness. To the poor, the sick, the halt, the maimed and the blind, tidings of good things Jesus brings. Though in sore straits we have been, our Beloved speaks and says unto us, "Rise up, my love, my fair one, and come away. For, lo, the winter is past, the rain is over and gone; the flowers appear on the earth; the time of the singing of birds is come, and the voice of the turtle is heard in our land; the fig tree putteth forth her green figs, and the vines with the tender grape give a good smell. Arise, my love, my fair one, and come away."

Though numerous hosts of mighty foes encompass the city of God, though besieged on every hand, though fears prevail within, yet when our Redeemer comes, when by precious faith we behold him traveling in the greatness of his strength, mighty to save, then how beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of our Beloved, who bringeth good tidings. Yes, when his comforting voice is heard in our souls, publishing salvation, saying unto us, "Thy God reigneth," then in joyous strains we break forth into singing, and sing the praises of our Lord. "For the Lord hath comforted his people, he hath redeemed Jerusalem." Through seas of tribulation lies the path wherein the heirs of salvation must go; but he who bringeth good tidings says, "Be of good cheer; I have overcome the world." Christ Jesus is our forerunner, and has entered within the veil. There, through his sovereign grace, we shall arrive. All the family of God shall safely be brought home to glory. The Captain of our salvation shall say, "Behold, I and the children which God hath given me." Not one will be missing. You, poor, trembling, fearing, halting one, will be there. All those who are "less than the least of all saints" will be found among the number of the redeemed. Not a hoof shall be left behind.—Ex. x. 26. Sometimes when the city has been low in a low place (Isaiah xxxii. 19), then hope of deliverance from our conflicts and trials has well nigh been swallowed up; but when our Lord Jesus Christ is revealed unto our souls again, and bringeth good tidings, telling us that he will be a wall of fire round about, and the glory in the midst of us, then our strength is renewed as the eagles. Out of weakness we are made strong. "For the King of Israel, even the Lord, is in the midst of Zion." While our Lord is felt to be with us we have no thoughts of yielding up the city to the foe; but in times of unbelief what are we doing? Why, in our terror we begin building towers, and defenses, and bulwarks, and battlements that are not the Lord's; mere creature doings and expediences; and a time of bitter grief will be ours when we prove how defenseless are all our devised defenses, when our battlements are demolished, and the enemy comes in like a flood. It is by soul-humblings lessons that we are being continually taught that "salvation is of the Lord."

How dark, O how dark, the aspect of our own personal affairs appears at times! Every circumstance, every event, every voice, every providence, seems only to herald evil tidings, till wearied, disheartened, we fall down, and our soul fainteth within us. Then we remember the Lord (Jonah ii. 7); we remember his wonders of old, his wonderful compassion, how he remembered us in our low estate, brought us up out of the horrible pit and miry clay, set our feet upon a rock, established our goings, and put a new song in our mouth. His manifold remembrances of us come into review before us; his loving-kindnesses and marvelous long-suffering. Truly it is of his mercy that we are not consumed. We remember (the Holy Ghost, the Remembrancer, brings to our remembrance—John xiv. 26) how immutable is the character of our God; that in all the attributes of his being he is without variableness or shadow of turning. Under the gracious work of the Holy Spirit in our hearts hope springs up, and there is a looking unto the Lord alone. Let us read together the second chapter of Jonah. "Then Jonah prayed unto the Lord his God out of the fish's belly, and said, I cried by reason of mine affliction unto the Lord, and he heard me; out of the belly of hell cried I, and thou heardest my voice. For thou hadst cast me into the deep, in the midst of the seas; and the floods compassed me about: all thy billows and thy waves passed over me. Then I said, I am cast out of thy sight; yet I will look again toward thy holy temple. The waters compassed me about, even to the soul: the depth closed me round about, the weeds were wrapped about my head. I went down to the bottoms of the mountains; the earth with her bars was about me forever: yet hast thou brought up my life from corruption, O Lord my God. When my soul fainted within me I remembered the Lord: and my prayer came in unto thee, into thine holy temple. They that observe lying vanities forsake their own mercy. But I will sacrifice unto thee with the voice of thanksgiving; I will pay that that I have vowed. Salvation is of the Lord. And the Lord spake unto the fish, and it vomited out Jonah upon the dry land."

This is a wonderful narrative, an inimitable portrait of the deep and sore afflictions, chastenings and tribulation, the predestinated lot of those who are called unto the fellowship of the sufferings of Christ. May the gracious Lord reconcile us to all his providences, favor us with that mind to endure all things, to wait ever upon him, to walk in his ways, bring forth fruit to the praise of his name, is the heart's desire of one who is, I hope, your brother in the afflictions of the gospel,

JESUS DIED.

It has never entered into the finite mind what these words imply. There is to the child of God something far beyond the mere expression, "Jesus died." When in the experience of those who have realized their lost condition, and felt the need of salvation, they are led to the feet of Jesus, to plead for mercy, they there learn by experience that Jesus died to "save his people from their sins." Here the question arises, Did he die for me? We may read in the Scriptures that he died to save his people from their sins, but unless brought to the end of the earth we cannot know nor hope that he died for us; and when we are brought to hope that he did, the question comes up, Why? This is a searching question, and causes more anxious thought and concern than anything connected with our experience. Why should he die for me? Why should I, a poor, sinful creature, hope? Yet sometimes a little hope springs up which gives some little assurance that he even died for me; but it is no lasting assurance. While this little hope, as we call it, is more precious than all this world's wealth, and there is nothing that we would be willing to take in exchange for it, yet the question comes up in many forms, Why? Why should I be thought worthy of so great a sacrifice? The answer by faith is given,

Because I was chosen in Christ before the foundation of the world. "God is love," and always loved his people, and chose them before they had done good or evil. "As in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." "But not as the offense; so also is the free gift." That is, all that die in Adam shall not be made alive in Christ. Only those who were chosen in Christ can possibly be made alive in him; and if we were chosen in him we most assuredly will be saved in him. Yes, says the little one, I know that all for whom he died will be saved, but did he die for me? If he did, why am I so prone to sin, to wander in mind, and even to forget the God that bought me, or redeemed me with his blood (life)? Why do I feel so lifeless, so little zeal in the cause of Christ, as I ought to have? Dear little child of God, you thought when first you felt God's pardoning love, and he revealed himself to you as the chiefest among ten thousand, and the one altogether lovely, that you were freed from sin; but how soon the depravity of your nature showed itself in such force as to almost overwhelm you in the flood. No wonder that you then became anxious about yourself. You found that you were still a sinner, but not without hope. In Adam all died, or came under the dominion of sin. Sinners, not because they have done evil, but do evil because of sin. Some people are much afraid of making God "the author of sin," when they cannot make nor unmake anything that he has created and made, either good or evil. "I form the light, and create darkness: I make peace, and create evil: I the Lord do all these things." All the sons and daughters of Adam are sinners when born, yes, conceived in sin and shapen in iniquity; and the chosen of God, though sinners, are children of God. Here is the great mystery, sinner-man and God-man; God and man; God manifest in the flesh. This is a mystery to the child of God. How can I be a child of God and yet be a sinner, so sinful? Those who are dead in trespasses and in sins cannot know anything about this, neither do they desire to. "The dead know not anything," as every child of God well knows by experience. Paul talked about having two minds; and I presume that all of like precious faith realize the same, and know something about a warfare. "If children, then heirs." Christ being the only begotten of the Father, how can any others be his children? How could he die to save or redeem them from their sins if they were not his? All the children of God, the whole church of God, the bride, the Lamb's wife, were chosen and begotten in him, and as much a part of him as was Eve a part of Adam. "Bone of his bones, and flesh of his flesh." Therefore they are a part of him, chosen or adopted in him; and this is all the adoption I know anything about. (Of course I do not know much.) In time we receive the evidence or spirit of it. The spirit of anything must be something that existed before. Dear child of God, you were chosen of God before you were born of the flesh, and in your experience you receive the evidence of it, or a revelation of the promise of salvation. Everything in connection with the salvation of the children of God was finished when Jesus cried upon the cross, "It is finished;" and all that were included in that adoption are already saved, and will be made manifest in due time. This is the experience of every child of God; and yet there is this anxious thought, Did he die for me? Yes, he died for you, and for every one whose mind is exercised on this all-important subject; and one of the best evidences of a child of God is the anxiety he manifests in regard to his interest in these things. Therefore for all who were chosen in him he died; and they will be saved with an everlasting salvation, because he changes not. "Think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing happened unto you." This is the lot of all God's people; and we should rather rejoice in tribulation, because the end is hope. Sometimes when the light is withheld I am ready to give up in despair, and conclude that all is lost; but when I get to the end of myself hope springs up, and a little light is let in, or rather I lose sight of myself for a little while, and can rest in the promise of God, "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee."

Yours in hope,

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—If it is not asking too much, we would like to have your views on the subject of ministers visiting other churches. Some have said that ministers should not visit other churches without being invited, and their expenses paid. Now, to some this may seem of little importance, but to me it is of much importance; for I am never able to go to meeting, and cannot have preaching here at our home, for sometimes I am not able to listen to talking very long at a time. When any of the brethren do come who can talk and explain the Scriptures, it does me very much good. I have often been strengthened and refreshed in spirit thereby, and made to rejoice and praise God for such comfort and consolation. I am always glad to see any of the brethren and sisters; but we live so far from them that I seldom get to see any of them, and I do long for the company of those whom I love for the truth's sake. We read of the apostles visiting the churches without being invited. Paul said to Barnabas, "Let us go again and visit our brethren in every city where we have preached the word of the Lord, and see how they do." But when there arose a contention between them, so that they departed one from the other, Paul chose Silas and departed, and went through Syria and Cilicia, confirming the churches. There are others besides myself who desire your views on this subject.

MARY E. GIBSON.

REPLY.—In reply to the inquiry of our correspondent we can say nothing which will have any more authority than the words of any other member of the church of Christ. There is a sense in which the services of the ministry are always desired in every church; but the case suggested by our inquirer appears to refer rather to the practice of some whose labors are not appreciated by the church to which they belong, who impose themselves upon other churches. Such unsolicited visitors do not commonly select lonely ones like our correspondent, but rather seek places where their gifts may be manifested in larger assemblies. If they confined their visits, like Paul and Barabas, to the fields of their own former labors, most of them would not have far to travel. The Spirit of Christ calls some to hear every one whom he calls to preach. The ways of our God are equal. The law of Christ in regard to the case is plainly recorded in the New Testament.—See 1 Cor. ix. 1-14. If God has sent a message by one whom he has called to preach, the power of God will open the way for the delivery of that message, though it require that a fish shall carry the preacher to the place where he is sent. The preacher who can sell his services for money is not serving Christ; and the church who is willing to have the services of a minister of the gospel without sharing in sustaining his temporal burdens is not led by the Spirit which inspired the scriptural injunctions to which we have referred. It may be from a selfish feeling of pride, but we have ever felt unwilling to send an unsolicited appointment; and if making a voluntary visit to any church we never feel that they are required to bear the burden of our expenses. Our practice, however, is not a rule for the government of others; the law of Christ is recorded by the apostles.—ED.

JERSEY SHORE, Pa., Jan. 25, 1891.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—Inclosed is a letter written by a highly esteemed sister living in a far distant state. It was written to the church at Cammel, Pa., of which she is a member. It was not written for publication, but it is so full of good matter that we do not feel like withholding it from the readers of our dear family paper. At the request of the brethren I send it to you, deferring it to your judgment to publish or not.

Your unworthy sister,
M. W.

WELCH, Spokane Co., Wash.

DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS:—I have felt for some time like writing to you all; but realizing my weakness and ignorance, and also feeling sensibly my unworthiness, it is with great hesitation I take my pen in hand to do so; but feeling constrained, I hope the dear Lord may direct my thoughts and guide my pen; for unless I am guided by his holy Spirit it will be of no interest to those who are born of the Spirit. We are commanded to speak often one to another; and as the dear Lord in his infinite wisdom has predestinated that I should be separated so far from my dear kindred (as I hope) in Christ, I desire to have you know that I still hold you in sweet remembrance. Yes, I have you all in my heart, and hope that I love you with a pure heart fervently. How often I think of the many times we have met together and held sweet communion one with another, and how our hearts have burned within us while listening to the blessed gospel proclaimed in its fulness by our dear pastor, whom you still have with you, and by others who shun not to declare the whole counsel of God. Yes, dear brethren, you still have that sweet privilege, while I for some wise purpose am removed far from you and all I hold dear. It is the place where I first heard the gospel preached.

"What peaceful hours I then enjoyed!
How sweet their memory still!
But they have left an aching void
The world can never fill."

But the dear Lord is not confined to any one place, but is everywhere, and will care for his own wherever their lot may be cast. He is all-wise, and knows what is best for his children. I feel sometimes like murmuring, and then the thought comes to me, What am I, that the Lord is mindful of me? What have I that I have not received? I feel that it is of the Lord's mercies I am not consumed; for I feel that I am the most vile, wretched, miserable creature on the face of the earth; and wonder how my brethren could ever have had any fellowship for me so vile as I am. But the Lord hath perfected forever them that are sanctified; he hath made them meet to be partakers with the saints in light; and although they feel to be the chief of sinners, they can never come into condemnation; for Christ died for them; and although they feel ignorant and sinful, he is their wisdom, their righteousness, their sanctification, their redemption, their all in all. They shall by the power of God be kept, through faith unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the last time; and he will bring them off conquerors, yes, more than conquerors, through him who loved them. He says, "In the world ye shall have tribulation; but be of good cheer, I have overcome the world." Yes, dear brethren, the Lord hath saved them, and called them with an holy calling. I feel like saying, Forget not the assembling of yourselves together, as the manner of some is. I always remember your meeting days; and if not there in body, I hope I am there in the Spirit. May the Lord bless you all consistent with his will, and his name shall have all the praise, world without end. Amen.

From your very unworthy sister,
MRS. M. J. FACKENTHALL.

FORSYTH, Ga., Feb. 10, 1891.

BRETHREN BEEBE:—I do not wish to become conspicuous, nor to burden the SIGNS with my imperfect scribbles; but as I am sending you a remittance I just want to say a few words to you, expressing my approval of the doctrine it advocates. Since it has become a weekly I like it better than ever, and I do hope the brethren will enable you to continue it weekly. I do believe that it contends for the truth as it is in Jesus, and that the doctrine and discipline set forth is the same that has long been contended for by Primitive Baptists, and what Jesus and his apostles taught while here upon the earth. The editors and correspondents all speaking out so plainly, without swerving, or without regard to what men may say, makes it truly a sound Primitive Baptist paper.

I want to say to brother A. B. Francis that his article in the SIGNS of December 17th, on the sovereignty and predestination of God, is of itself worth a year's subscription. Oh how I did drink it down as I read it! It was so full, and set forth the doctrine so plainly, which (until late years) I thought all Primitive Baptists believed, but of late some seem ready to deny or swerve from its truth; and yet to deny God's sovereign will, predestination and power is to fall into the Arminian net and a chance system of salvation. That God is a Sovereign, having all power in heaven and in earth, works and none can hinder, saw the end from the beginning, does all his pleasure, and yet some things turn up or happen that he cannot so well prevent, and therefore permits them, why, it is absurd, and gives man more power than God. Men sometimes think they have a great deal of power, and sometimes try to use it for a purpose; but if they find that they are unable to accomplish the desired end they are willing to permit or submit to something else. Pilate claimed that he had power to release to the wicked Jews either Christ or Barabbas, and wanted to release Christ; but when he saw that they intended to have Christ to be crucified he permitted it, and released the murderer; but it was Pilate's permit, and God's predestination. Pilate had no power only what God had given him, and so God's purpose was carried out in the whole matter; yet they had by wicked hands taken, crucified and slain him. Suppose for a moment that Pilate had released Christ, and that Barabbas had been crucified; what would have become of God's purpose and predestination in the salvation of his people? I leave it for those who oppose to answer.

But I have said more than I intended to. I only wanted to express my approval of the SIGNS as a sound Baptist paper. We have no use for new-fangled things now. God has all power, and will use it for his own glory.

Dispose of this as you think best.
Ever yours,

D. G. MCCOWEN.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—This day I am eighty-nine years old, and I thought I would try to write you a few lines. The last time I wrote to you I sent you a new subscriber, and thought it would be the last that I would ever write to you; but the other day an old friend called to see me, and requested me to send his name to you as a new subscriber to the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. Your paper has always been a great comfort to me. I think I have never read more able letters in all my life than those which have been in your paper this past winter. Dear brethren Beebe, my desire and prayer is that the Lord may give you strength and wisdom from on high, and that you may continue to feed the poor and afflicted people with the good things of the kingdom of our blessed Redeemer. I know that I have but a few more days to spend on this earth, and my earnest prayer is that God will be with me in death, and when all is over take me to dwell with him forevermore.

This letter looks very little and miserable. It is not worth putting in print; but you can do just as you please with it, and all will be right. Hoping to be remembered by all my friends, I am your old sister in hope of eternal life,

NANCY JONES.

SIN AGAINST THE HOLY GHOST.

(Concluded from last number.)

ELDER GILBERT BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—Will you please give your views through the SIGNS OF THE TIMES on the question, What is sin unto death? Is blasphemy against the Holy Ghost the same thing as the sin unto death? Does the child of God, after being born again, blaspheme? Did Ananias and Sapphira blaspheme? There is much discussion among the Baptists here, on this question. Please answer; and I hope to hear from others also on this subject. Yours,

M. D. COX.

"Does the child of God, after being born again, blaspheme?" In consequence of the indefiniteness of words, it is not possible to answer this question so that cavilers may not misconstrue our expression. In the personal experience of each saint the answer is revealed by the Spirit which leads them into all truth. Yet when they would tell this mystery to a fellow-pilgrim they are conscious of their utter failure to find expression in human language. If their carnal mind attempts to explain this unspeakable truth, the result is very likely to be the practical illustration that the law of sin is yet in their members. The intolerance and anger which often attend discussions even among the saints, painfully demonstrate that sin yet works in them. Under the guidance of that evil principle the saint is frequently betrayed into forgetfulness of his dependence upon grace to help in time of need. When looking to himself for wisdom and strength there is no power but infinite grace that can put a limit to the folly and sin into which the believer may run. It was after Paul was manifested as an apostle of Jesus Christ that he confessed that in his flesh dwelt no good thing. All the great grace bestowed upon him did not deliver him from the body of this death. While with the mind he himself served the law of God, yet with the flesh he served the law of sin. It will hardly be denied that Paul was manifestly born again before he wrote to the saints at Rome; yet he had not yet triumphed over the power of that law of sin. Many times the saint is deeply troubled because that he cannot do the things which he would, and he is equally powerless to refrain from doing the things which he would not. This was the experience of the apostles and prophets, and it is doubtless in measure the experience of all who are taught of God. Peter was born again, as we understand the expression, before the terrible sifting in which he denied his Lord. So far as his action then could do it he certainly did blaspheme. That sin was forgiven unto Peter by his Redeemer, but it was laid on Jesus, so that debt was fully paid to the justice of God. Thus there is no forgiveness of sin except that Jesus has satisfied the infinite holiness of God in its expiation. All sin and all blasphemy is against the Holy Ghost, unless the atoning blood of Jesus Christ has washed away the sin. We dare not limit the efficacy of the precious blood of the Son of God; our only hope of life is in the power of divine grace to cleanse from all sin every one for whom that blood was poured forth on the tree of Calvary. Undoubtedly those saints had been born again whom Paul declares that he punished oft in every synagogue, and "compelled them to blaspheme."—Acts xxvi. 11. Since it is clearly testified by an inspired apostle, "For I know that in me (that is, in my flesh) dwelleth no good thing," it will not be claimed by any subject of grace that he has attained a higher degree of righteousness than the apostle could find in himself. Yet he confesses that he did not find how to perform the good which he would; and complained that he did the evil which he would not. But for the present help of the grace of God, there is no evil thing which is too revolting for the saint to be found captivated by it. So far as their own actions and words are concerned, every saint has to acknowledge that they all bear witness to the corruption of that carnal mind in which they originate. If the sin of blasphemy were not included in the list of corruptions which are found in the flesh of the saints, then they would not be entitled to claim with Paul to be the chief of sinners. Certainly that one unpardonable sin must be more vile than any other. But if there is one sin from which the blood of Jesus does not cleanse his people, where is the saint who would not feel that he was guilty of that dreadful sin? The blackness of utter despair would enshroud every conscious sinner if that were the truth.

Much confusion has been developed in the attempt to discriminate between the sinner who is the subject of salvation and the "child of God." It is not desirable to add to this darkness by attempting to be wise in this matter beyond the revelation which God has given. While it is certainly true that "If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us," it is also true, "We know that whosoever is born of God sinneth not; but he that is begotten of God keepeth himself, and that wicked one toucheth him not. And we know that we are of God, and the whole world lieth in wickedness. And we know that the Son of God is come, and hath given us an understanding, that we may know him that is true; and we are in him that is true, even in his Son Jesus Christ. This is the true God, and eternal life."—1 John i. 8; v. 18-20. The whole testimony of inspiration witnesses that the subjects of the saving grace of God as revealed in Jesus Christ are sinners, who were by nature the children of wrath even as others. It is the very reason given by the angel for the name of our Lord, "Thou shalt call his name JESUS; for he shall save his people from their sins." They are his people when dead in sins; they are his people when under the power of darkness; and they are his people when he has translated them into the kingdom of the Son of God. This wonderful truth is hidden from finite comprehension in the unsearchable depth of the infinite wisdom and knowledge of God. Yet it is clearly revealed in the experience of every sinner who has been brought to hope in Christ for salvation from his sins.

The very same man who persecuted the saints is the man who prayed, and to whom the Lord showed how great things he must suffer for the sake of Jesus' name. Even when he was breathing slaughter against the saints, Saul was a chosen vessel unto the Lord to bear his name before the Gentiles, and kings, and the children of Israel. His mad zeal in opposing the truth of the gospel, and in the murder of the martyr Stephen, was not sin against the Holy Ghost. No more awful crime could be committed than he was guilty of; for in all that he did he was persecuting the Lord Jesus. Yet he was cleansed from all sin by the blood of that same Jesus whom he persecuted. He labored more abundantly than they all in his apostolic ministry, yet he says, "Not I, but the grace of God which was with me." It was not another man who persecuted the church of God; it was Paul himself who felt that he was not meet to be called an apostle, and assigns that fact as the evidence of his unworthiness.—See 1 Cor. xv. 9, 10. When any saint yields his members servants to sin he gives evidence that the principle of evil still rules in his natural mind. In his daily experience the child of God feels the working of the law of sin in his members; and if left to depend upon his own strength, he knows that there is no depth of iniquity to which he may not go. There would be no assurance upon which such a conscious sinner could rest if any word or deed of his could bring him under the condemnation of sin beyond the redeeming power of the blood of Christ. By that blood all the sins of all his people are washed away. Since Jesus bore all the transgressions of all his redeemed people in his own body on the tree, it seems evident that all of their sins were and are against him as the Surety, who must be responsible for them in the inflexible judgment of divine justice. When they are overcome by the evil powers of their corrupt nature, so that they even deny their allegiance to their Lord, their blasphemy is against him. They cannot blaspheme against the Holy Ghost, because Jesus is their Mediator, and stands between them and the demands of infinite justice. So he says, "The reproaches of them that reproached thee are fallen upon me."—Psa. lxxix. 9. While the inspired record shows that there is no depth of transgression too far for the child of God to wander in living after the flesh, yet Jesus as their Redeemer and Intercessor bears all their sins and blasphemies. Outside of his grace there is no possibility that any sin or blasphemy can ever be forgiven. "For there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved."—Acts iv. 12.

"Did Ananias and Sapphira blaspheme?" Of the literal history of the characters named we can know nothing beyond what is recorded in the fifth chapter of the Acts of the Apostles. It is not stated there that they blasphemed. Peter charged that Satan had filled their hearts to lie to the Holy Ghost. The thought that their falsehood could be concealed certainly implied a denial of the infinite knowledge of God; and in that sense their lying might be called blasphemy. Evidently they did not follow the direction of the Spirit of Christ in attempting to serve their carnal covetousness while pretending to give up all their possessions to the disposal of the apostles. Their example is a fearful admonition to the saints in all times and places. With regard to their eternal state it is not revealed whether they were subjects of salvation; of course, the natural judgment of men would at once decide that they were not. The Judge of all the earth can determine that point in reference to them as well as to all his creatures. He has not committed to mortals the responsibility of deciding this question either for themselves or for their fellow-mortals. The inspired record determines with whom the church of Christ is to walk in fellowship here in time. According to the commandment of our Lord the saints are not to hold in fellowship, nor eat with certain characters, among whom are enumerated such as are "covetous." This direction would surely require that they should withdraw from those shrewd financiers, who supposed that they could gain something by a false report to the apostles concerning the money which they had received. While in this case the transgressors were at once literally stricken dead, they are an example of the consequence of the same principle which was in them, as it is exhibited in some of the saints in later times. They may retain a nominal life in the visible church, while seeking first the things of this world, but they are dead even while they have a name to live. Sowing to the flesh they must of the flesh reap corruption. It is not a matter of future judgment with the saints. They must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ day and night through all their so-journal here in time, and constantly receive at his righteous decision the things done in the body, each according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad.—2 Cor. v. 10. To a living child of God it is not necessary that the terrors of hell should be presented to scare him into obedience to the commandments of Jesus. The love of God shed abroad in the heart of the saint works in him the earnest desire to follow in the pathway of obedience to the perfect law of love. When this heavenly love rules in the saints they will be less concerned to find a name for the sin of Ananias and Sapphira, than to avoid falling under captivity to the same selfish principle. Whether it be called blasphemy or covetousness, it is equally deadly to spiritual comfort in the present experience of the saints. The alluring attractions of this world's wealth and honors have been offered to many of the saints since they were rejected by our Lord; and sometimes, it is possible that the example of Jesus has been forgotten, and the tempted saints have made the mistake of imitating Ananias and Sapphira in attempting to serve God and mammon.

In regard to such cases of manifest wickedness, as they are left on record for our learning, it is much the safer course for the saints to carefully and prayerfully avoid the errors, than to seek to investigate them. In gratifying a carnal curiosity there is a possibility of becoming involved in the corruption which we would examine. May the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ keep his saints in the love of God, and deliver them from every false way; and may the subjects of salvation endeavor to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace for the love of the dear Redeemer's name. Amen.

MARRIAGES.

At Petersburg, Del., April 2d, 1891, by Elder E. Rittenhouse, Mr. Harry P. Green, of New Castle Co., Del., and Miss Anna C., daughter of Richard C. Frasher, of the former place.

By Elder F. A. Chick, at the Ebenezer Old School Baptist meeting-house in Baltimore, Md., on Wednesday, April 15th, 1891, Mr. Joseph W. Smith, of Westminster, Md., and Margert Lamotte, of Glen Falls, Md.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

DIED—In Acton, Maine, March 15th, 1891, Almead Jane Grant, wife of Horatio Grant, after a long and painful illness.

Hard indeed it was to leave a kind husband and loving family of children, three sons and two daughters. In June, 1869, our brother and the departed sister were united in the holy bonds of matrimony, and four years later (1873) she was baptized in full fellowship with the Old School Baptist Church at Oak Woods, North Berwick, by our esteemed Elder Wm. Quint. From that time forward she lived as she died, in full faith of her vows, and was an exemplary and devoted wife and mother. Two years ago she and her husband were among the brethren and sisters who attended the meeting in June at Hopewell, N. J. Patient under affliction, she manifested to us that true christian spirit of our divine Master.

A FRIEND.

Mary Emma Beal, daughter of Wm. M. and Sarah L. Hite, departed this life April 3d, 1891, aged 26 years, 6 months and 5 days.

She was married to Mr. Harland Beal Oct. 10th, 1889. She leaves her husband and infant child, little Glen Cora, father and mother, three brothers and two sisters, with many precious friends and associates, to mingle their sorrows and sympathies. She bore all her suffering with much patience, while she had all the tender care and kindness that could be rendered by nurses and physicians. At the appointed time of her change the Lord called her away. She gave great and precious evidence of a hope in the mercy of God, who was her only trust. She often spoke of the realities of her conversion, which give full and satisfactory evidence that she had been taught of the Lord, whom to know is life eternal. She was a tender and obedient daughter, gentle, and much loved by her brothers and sisters and very many kind friends. She was tender and affectionate to her husband, and fully filled the sphere of life in which she was placed.

The writer was called upon to deliver a funeral discourse on Sunday, April 5th, to a large congregation of friends, neighbors and relatives. The text used on the occasion was 1 Cor. xv. 43, 44; after which the remains were interred in the cemetery at Jamestown, to await the voice of the Archangel and the trump of God, when the dead in Christ shall be raised first. Then they which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall be caught up together with them, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall they ever be with the Lord.

"We shall sleep, but not forever,
We shall rest beneath the trees;
We shall wake to live forever
In the land where Jesus is."

EARL V. MABRY.

DIED—At his residence in Prince William Co., Va., March 7th, 1891, brother D. T. Arrington, at the age of nearly 80 years; as he was born in the same county in which he died May 25th, 1811.

Another faithful and precious soldier of the cross has left us. Brother Arrington was a much-loved and esteemed member of the Bethlehem Church, in Prince William Co., near Manassas. He was baptized in the Missouri River, Missouri, in 1835, by Elder Williams. On his return to Virginia he at first united with the Occoquan Church, at "Bacon Race," and subsequently removed his membership to the Bethlehem Church, which church he served as Clerk for many years, until age and infirmity constrained him to resign the office. I can truly say of brother Arrington that he was a man highly respected and esteemed in the world as a man and citizen, of unimpeachable integrity, and character above reproach, and a beloved and faithful husband, father and friend. In the church he was one of those precious souls that all who love the image of Jesus as it is reflected in his humble followers must love. It is not in praise nor flattery that I write this; but what is there upon this earth that is so attractive and lovable as a sincere follower of the meek and lowly Jesus, whose walk, both in the church and in the world, is in strict accord with his profession? Such was our dear brother. He loved the truth, and showed that he loved it, and was firmly established in it. That grace in which he trusted sustained him to the last. He suffered much, but we believe that he is now at rest.

May the widow's God and Husband and the Father of the fatherless be with and comfort those whom he has left to mourn their loss. May he help and encourage the little band of disciples who sadly miss their departed brother.

J. N. BADGER.

ALDIE, Va., April 10, 1891.

ENTERED into rest Feb. 18th, 1890, our mother, Mrs. Mary Willard, widow of Deacon James V. Willard, aged 77 years.

Although almost one year has rolled around since our dear mother was called hence, the task is no easier to relate to you our sad bereavement. Truly a mother in Israel has been called home; and while we remember the "fullness of joy," and rejoice that all this is hers, there is a void in our hearts and home that only mother's voice and mother's face could fill. For almost a half-century she had walked with the Lord's people in holy fear and meekness, faithful in all things. Retiring in manner and speech, her voice was seldom heard in conference; but her wise counsel and sweet submission to the will of God in her many bereavements spoke more eloquently than words, and caused us to exclaim, "Lo, here is one who walketh with God." What can we say of her as a mother? Words are inadequate. Kind, gentle, patient, ever forgetful of self in her love for others, surely her children rise up and call her blessed.

Her death was due to erysipelas of the brain. During ten days of suffering, in which the same uncomplaining, Christ-like spirit was manifested, she realized the power and sweetness of the expression, "I shall be satisfied, when I awake, with thy likeness," which she so often repeated.

ALSO,

Mary Willard Cornell, daughter of Samuel D. and Louisa Cornell, passed away, after a brief illness, Sept. 15th, 1890, aged 15 years.

The subject of this notice was an unusually bright and attractive girl, and in her death the parents have sustained an irreparable loss. After two weeks of intense fever her mind wandered, and for one week she talked almost constantly day and night. In her delirium she seemed to be traveling with the Savior. She repeated many passages from the Scriptures that we did not know the child had memorized. Once, in very distinct tones, she said, "The chosen people of God. I am one of the chosen people of God." Again, she said, "The Lord is in his holy temple, and says, Suffer the little children to come unto me." These, with like expressions, passed her lips from time to time until the fever left her, when, with a heart weakened by disease, she succumbed, and passed away as sweetly and quietly as a babe.

Only those who have passed through like troubles understand the anguish of these parents in losing their only daughter. May they be enabled to look with thankful hearts to the kind Father, who in love and mercy laid the rod upon them. "Few the starry summers o'er her life had flown, Ere the angels called her to the dim unknown."

JOSEPHINE W. TREGO.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—In connection with the above tribute, which was prepared by sister Trego, the youngest daughter, I wish to say that sister Willard was truly a mother in Israel, and her loss has been, and is yet, deeply felt by the church here, of which she had been so long a consistent and dearly loved member. She left seven daughters, four of whom are members of this church, and one son, who is one of the Deacons. Not only the dear sister with whom her home had been for many years, but all the rest of her children, whose homes and hearts were often cheered by her presence, feel their loss to be a great bereavement; but the first sentence of the notice which I now send expresses what we feel to have been a happy and blessed change for her, and what it is a comfort to think of— "Entered into rest."

Of the dear child, a notice of whose departure is also sent, the only daughter of one of the daughters of our dear sister of whom I have been speaking, I want to say that the expressions made during her sickness, when her mind was disordered, appeared to me remarkable manifestations of the Spirit's work. It was the Spirit that spoke through her, and not the wanderings of the natural mind, when she said so solemnly and sweetly, "I am one of the chosen;" and again, "God is love." The natural mind of any christian, however learned, understands no more of spiritual things than that of the infant, or of the one whose reason is dethroned. The understanding by which any know the dear Savior is given by himself (1 John v. 20); and the Spirit brings the natural powers under its control. The sweet thought and hope of salvation is the only consolation to the dear, sadly afflicted mother and father of this dear child for their loss. I hope and think that they have known something of the patriarch's solemn trust and resignation when he said, "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord." Three sons are left to them, who sadly feel the loss of a dearly loved sister.

There was a large attendance of mourning relatives and sympathizing friends on the occasion of each funeral, who listened with solemn and profound attention to the preaching of the gospel.

ASSOCIATIONAL.

THE Baltimore Old School Baptist Association is appointed to be held with the Ebenezer Church, in the city of Baltimore, Md., to begin on Wednesday before the fourth Sunday in May (20th), 1891, and continue three days.

THE Delaware Old School Baptist Association is appointed to be held with the London Tract Church, Chester Co., Pa., to begin on Wednesday before the fifth Sunday in May (27th), 1891, and continue three days.

THE Delaware River Old School Baptist Association is appointed to be held with the church at Southampton, Bucks Co., Pa., to begin on Wednesday before the first Sunday in June (3d), 1891, and continue three days.

THE Warwick Old School Baptist Association is appointed to be held with the church at Warwick, Orange Co., N. Y., to begin on Wednesday before the second Sunday in June (10th), 1891, and continue three days.

THE Chemung Old School Baptist Association is appointed to be held with the Abington Church, at Justus, Lackawanna Co., Pa., to begin on Wednesday before the third Sunday in June (17th), 1891, and continue three days.

THREE DAYS MEETINGS.

A THREE days meeting will be held with the Sidling Hill Church of Old School Baptists, in Fulton Co., Pa., to commence on Friday, May 1st, 1891.

We give a cordial invitation to all of our faith and order, and would be very glad if some of our ministering brethren could meet with us at that time, for we are lonely as to ministers. It is true that we are poor, and cannot offer any worldly inducements; but we know that God's faithful servants do not go for filthy lucre's sake, but of a ready mind.

Those coming by railroad will have to take the Baltimore & Ohio R. R. to Hancock, Md., where they will be met on Thursday, about the middle of the day, as the church is about twenty miles north of Hancock. Those who contemplate coming had better write to brother Dennis Mellott or brother Jacob F. Garland, whose post-office address is Needmore, Fulton Co., Pa.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date, this date denotes the time at which your subscription expires, and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

CORRESPONDENCE.

BLANCO, Texas, March 1, 1891.

BRETHREN BEEBE:—As a ready way to acquire a knowledge of gospel truth is to consider the consequence of the opposite errors, I will refer to some of the consequences of limited predestination. I suppose all who believe in God at all will admit that he does nothing without design (as this is seen in all his works), and that he effects what he designed; for to say he acts without design, is to impeach his wisdom and degrade him below his rational creatures, who always act with design. If we say he ever fails to effect his design, we assail his omnipotence; but as he is infinite in both of those perfections, we conclude he must design what he effects, and effects what he designs; and therefore his purposes are actions decreed, and his actions are purposes executed. This I lay down as an indubitable axiom, and unless it can be overthrown, it necessarily follows that if all of God's works are embraced in his design, and the execution of his design, as stated above, and yet there are things transpiring that he neither decreed nor executes, and of course has nothing whatever to do with such things (as the axiom declares that what God designed he effects, and what he effects he designed), then all that is not embraced must be ascribed to another god or power; and thus we introduce the Manichean system of two gods; one the author of light and all good, the other the author of darkness and all evil. This system seems to suppose that each of those rival gods are entirely independent of each other, and each act in their respective spheres, and according to the axiom; that is, as the god of light and all good designed what he effects, and effects what he designs; so the Manichean god designed what he effects, and effects what he designed; and between the two we have a full development as to the acts of finite, intelligent beings, both morally good and evil; and it seems that the difference between this and the limited predestination plan is very thin; for if all things are not embraced in what God designed and effects, we must necessarily refer such things as are not embraced to some other power, or to the Manichean god. Now although this tenet teems from first to last with absurdity, infidelity and atheism, yet its terms are plain, and we can understand it; and if those who oppose unlimited predestination disclaim this tenet, then how all things (embracing all the acts of finite creatures, whether morally good or evil) are developed, and yet God has nothing to do with the latter in any sense, is more than human thought can grasp. But some say, as to wicked acts, God neither produced nor caused them himself, nor by others, but just permitted them. That is, he neither designed they should, nor that they should not exist. If so, such acts must be referred to the Manichean god, unless it be supposed such acts exist without a cause; but this is contrary to the laws of nature in every department of nature's kingdom; and what are the laws of nature but the incessant operations of divine providence in accomplishing God's purposes? Again, to suppose anything exists without a cause, is to destroy all intelligible ideas of God's government over his creatures, to dethrone him, to mock both reason and revelation, and hoist chance, accident or contingency on the throne; and how can persons having such lax views, as regards God's government of the world, believe in a divine providence at all? I will now, in a concise way, compare the two systems (that is, of limited and unlimited predestination) with portions of the divine standard. The apostle Paul, in Romans viii. 28, says, "And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose." The question arises here, How came the apostle in possession of such assured knowledge, unless by the same medium that he knew all things worked together for good to them that love God, he also knew all things were under the control and direction of God, and that he so ordered them that all conduce to the good of those who love him? For it would be very erroneous to suppose the apostle here taught that although all things work together for good to them that love God, yet there are some things (such as the acts of wicked agents) that God had nothing to do with as to their existence, but that he merely overruled such wicked acts and made them subserve his purpose in conducting to the good of them that love him. But the apostle's words will not admit of such a flimsy interpretation, as that God is dependent upon his poor, erring creatures, and avails himself of their acts, made ready to his hand, and renders them subservient to his purpose. So we see there is perfect coincidence of the apostle's teaching and the axiom stated; that is, that God designed what he effects, and effects what he designed. But the opposite theory falls far short of the rule, and lays behind. Again, in Ephesians i. 11, the apostle says, "Being predestinated according to the purpose of him who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will." We learn from this text that all his will and counsel embraced in eternity, before time; he works out in time; and if so, whatever transpires or is developed in time, from the creation of the world from the indivisible atom of matter, to the highest angel, together with all the actions of intelligent creatures, were embraced in his will and counsel; so if, as is contended, there are some or many things occurring that God neither appointed nor effects, they certainly take issue with the inspired word of God; and to make their theory seem plausible, they must have recourse to the Manichean god; for they cannot draw upon the court of heaven for proof of their theory. Then how patly the apostle's teaching here coincides with both the axiom, God designed what he effects, and effects what he designed; and even so how patly the opposite theory conflicts with both the axiom and the apostle's teaching. I will now refer to Job's case, a due consideration of the circumstances of which should silence the objections of the most captious opposers of God's absolute sovereignty over his creatures. Job says, "But he [God] is in one mind, and who [that is, none] can turn him? and what his soul desireth, even that he doth: for he performeth the thing that is appointed for me; and many such things are with him." The plain import of the above language seems to be that the eternal mind of God conceived and embraced the whole plan of events, from the beginning to the end of time, with the means or agencies necessary to their development, by the use of which means or agencies he accomplishes his purposes of creation; for, as Job says, "He performeth the thing that is appointed for me;" and if he performeth the thing appointed for Job, so he does for every other person; and what his soul desireth (or he willed), even that (and no more) he doeth; and so, if there is anything not embraced in what he desired or willed, either as to existence or action, it follows that such things exist outside of or independent of his design or will. But if nothing exists or acts outside of or independent of his design or will, then the doctrine of unlimited predestination is fully sustained upon a scriptural basis. And as God performs what he appoints, and no more (divine providence and divine appointment being perfect unisons), the opposers of the doctrine of unlimited predestination will have to cease opposition, or flee for refuge to the Manichean god, or to fancied chance, fortune, contingency or accident. As God is in one mind, and none can turn him, so we conclude that the developments of time are merely unfolding the counsels of eternity. How absurd then to suppose, that those counsels, either in whole or in part, are conditioned upon the transactions of time, which (for consistency's sake) must be supposed by those who believe in limited predestination.

I will now refer to some of the circumstances connected with Job's heavy afflictions, which we will find a fair illustration and pointed proof of every position taken above. I do not deem it necessary to quote more from the look of Job here than will be necessary to my purpose; but if brethren feel interested, they can read the whole narrative. In Job i. 8, the Lord said unto Satan, "Hast thou considered my servant Job, that there is none like him in all the earth, a perfect and an upright man, one that feareth God and escheweth evil?" Then Satan answered the Lord and said, "Doth Job fear God for naught? Hast not thou made a hedge about him, and about his house, and about all that he hath on every side? Thou hast blessed the work of his hands, and his substance is increased in the land. But put forth thine hand now, and touch all that he hath, and he will curse thee to thy face. And the Lord said unto Satan, Behold, all that he hath is in thy power; only upon himself put not forth thine hand. So Satan went forth from the presence of the Lord." Now, the language as to Job being perfect and upright is to be understood in a limited sense, as applying to the rectitude of his character as compared with others; for he was not perfect and upright in the sense that God is; yet this is the highest meed of praise ever conferred on mortal man; so that his heavy trials cannot be ascribed to his immoral conduct; for according to the inspired word, both as to rectitude of character and possession of wealth, Job was the greatest man of all the east. It should be noted here that in what Satan says about the Lord hedging in Job, and blessing him with immense wealth, he was much more orthodox (at least as to the rulings of divine providence in conferring and withholding temporal blessings) than many of our modern teachers. Satan being licensed to touch Job's property, we find that the Sabeans slew the servants, and fell upon the oxen and the asses, and took them away; and the fire from heaven burned up the sheep and the servants; and the Chaldeans fell upon the camels, and carried them away, and slew the servants. His sons and daughters were eating and drinking wine in their eldest brother's house, and wind from the wilderness smote the four corners of the house, and it fell upon the young men, and they were all dead. "Then Job arose and rent his mantle, and shaved his head, and fell down on the ground, and worshiped, and said, Naked came I out of my mother's womb, and naked shall I return thither. The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord. In all this Job sinned not, nor charged God foolishly." Satan having failed in this device to disconcert Job, resorted to another; for after a repetition of the same, Job's upright character by his Maker, Satan answered the Lord and said, "Skin for skin; yea, all that a man hath will he give for his life. But put forth thine hand, and touch his bone and his flesh, and he will curse thee to thy face. And the Lord said unto Satan, Behold he is in thy hand; but save his life. So went Satan from the presence of the Lord, and smote Job with sore boils, from the sole of his foot unto his crown. And he [Job] took him a potsherd to scrape himself withal, and sat down among the ashes. Then said his wife unto him, Dost thou still retain thine integrity? Curse God and die. But he said unto her, Thou speaketh as one of the foolish women speaketh. What? shall we receive good at the hand of God, and shall we not receive evil? In all this did not Job sin with his lips." We observe that although Satan (as well as all other creatures) acted from first to last as under the control and in subordination to the will of God, yet he possessed a personal enmity that prompted him to desire the destruction of the good old patriarch. And in view of Job's holiness of life and rectitude of character, together with the calamities sent upon him, and his great agony and intense suffering, yet he ascribes it all to the sovereign will and pleasure of his Maker. I ask, Can a more pointed case in the whole compass of language, either human or divine, be presented in demonstration of God's absolute supremacy, dominion and control of all things? We must keep in view the spotless character of Job, and the wickedness of those who were the instruments of his great calamities; for we see that the wicked Sabeans and Chaldeans enriched themselves with the spoils of their depredations upon the property of this good old patriarch; the fire from heaven destroyed his sheep; he was in great agony of suffering from sore boils; from head to foot; to all of which the suffering saint said, "Naked came I into the world, and naked shall I return thither. The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord." To his wife he said, "Thou speaketh as one of the foolish women speaketh. What? shall we receive good at the hand of the Lord, and shall we not receive evil?" "He is in one mind, and who can turn him? and what his soul desireth [or he wills], even that he doeth [and no more is done]; for he performeth the thing that is appointed for me." Who can candidly and prayerfully consider Job's case, and yet say that God's appointments or predestination is limited? As Job says, the Lord performed the thing that was appointed for him; and if he performs the thing appointed for every other person, that makes a sum total of all things to which rational creatures are related; so the limited predestinarian, it seems, must either take issue with Job or yield the point. But some may say that those wicked Sabeans and Chaldeans were already inclined to depredate and rob Job of his wealth, and it was only necessary to withhold his restraining power, and through their greed for gain they dispossessed Job of his property. But this artifice will not avail them; for Job said the Lord did it. And when we say, as some do in similar cases to this of Job's, that it is not consistent with God's holy character to act thus, we charge God foolishly; which God said Job did not do, but tacitly confessed that it was God's sovereign right to send those heavy calamities upon him. So we see that God both appointed and sent those heavy afflictions upon Job. Then, again, how striking the coincidence in every phase of Job's case and the axiom with which I started out; that is, the Lord designed what he effects, and effects what he designed. But those believing in limited predestination are in principle at war with both Job and the axiom; for, to be consistent, they must say Job was mistaken; for it was Satan and the wicked Sabeans and Chaldeans that deprived him of his wealth, and brought his bodily sufferings upon him. So when the two theories are presented in contrast (as compared with the divine standard), they that run, it seems, may read and understand. Though I have suffered the loss of property by wicked agents, and in that sense have fellowship with Job, yet I cannot say that I manifested the same humble, placid and christian resignation to the divine disposals as he did; for when a person is defrauded of competence acquired by the slow process of honest toil, he can but feel nonplussed or vexed.

But after all, it may be said of the above writing that it is vain speculation, or at best metaphysical disquisition on an abstract question, and that predestination is not so important any way, as it is used in word only three times by the inspired penmen. But as the inspired word neither acquires nor loses notoriety or importance by the frequency or scantiness of its use, the question should be with all lovers of God and his word, Is the doctrine taught at all? If it is, it is in accord with the whole tenor of Scripture teaching, and therefore forms an important part of the gospel system, and sustains such mutual relationship with it that (as leaven) it pervades the whole lump, and may be said to be the bond that binds, cements, or holds together the whole system, from the first plan of it, as conceived in infinite wisdom, to its final and complete consummation in glory. If so, it ought to be proclaimed or preached, not by peccemeals, nor in a mincing or timid way, as though we apprehended disastrous consequences flowing from it; but it should be preached fearlessly, freely and fully, as far as understood. As an ambassador of the high court of heaven, the servant (as one who must give an account) should declare the whole message of his Sovereign with which he is entrusted, without reserve or evasion, and not exercise a captious spirit or judgment as to whether any part of the counsel should be suppressed, or what part disclosed, as being necessary for the comfort and edification of the brethren; but he should declare the mind of his Sovereign, as far as apprehended, and he will take care of consequences. And I feel assured that this view of the absolute sovereignty and unlimited dominion of God, embraced by a steady or unyielding faith, is the only thing that will afford solid comfort to the wayward pilgrim amidst the trying vicissitudes of life, while on his passage thither.

Your brother, I hope, in gospel bonds,

JAMES WAGNER.

RESURRECTION.

DEEP and momentous as this subject is, my mind will not rest until I have relieved it by writing a few thoughts on it, though I realize that I cannot do justice to a theme so sublime. Let us turn our minds to Paul's language for a passage to start from: "But if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies, by his Spirit that dwelleth in you."—Rom. viii. 11. To whom is Paul writing? Is it to sinners dead in trespasses and sins, who in due time are to be raised from dead works, to walk in newness of life? Let us go to the first chapter and see to whom his epistle is addressed. "To all that be in Rome, beloved of God, called to be saints." Then it cannot be that he is speaking of their resurrection from sin and dead works, as the words under consideration plainly state. "But if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you [present tense], he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies [future tense] by his Spirit." So then it is living characters spoken to, and that which is to be done for them is in the future; and that is, to "quicken your mortal bodies." Again, he tells them, "And not only they, but ourselves also [Paul included with the rest], which have the first fruits of the Spirit, even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body." It is because "the body is dead because of sin," that causes the great mourning and sorrow among the saints of God. It is because they are so often led astray, and go after the things that pertain to this body, that causes them to feel their poverty and leanness toward God. It is because the flesh lusteth against the Spirit, that the saints long to be free from this world of sin and sorrow. Yea, it is because of this body of sin and death that they groan within themselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of the body. What is it to be redeemed from? "I will ransom them from the power of the grave; I will redeem them from death." "Now if Christ be preached that he rose from the dead, how say some among you that there is no resurrection of the dead? But if there be no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not risen: and if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain. Yea, and we are found false witnesses of God; because we have testified of God that he raised up Christ: whom he raised not up, if so be that the dead rise not."—1 Cor. xv. 12-15. Awfully solemn and sublime are these authentic passages, left on record for the comfort and consolation of God's poor, feeble ones, whose faith is sometimes so mystified; and because I cannot see how and why God works I am prone to say, like Thomas, If I cannot see, feel and know, I cannot believe.

But, brethren, from the Scriptures just quoted how plainly it is shown what is destroyed. If you destroy the glorious doctrine of the resurrection what have we to hope for? What have we to trust in? Nothing, absolutely nothing. The disciples of old, after they had seen Jesus nailed to the cross, heard his agonizing cry, "I thirst," seen the sponge dipped in vinegar mingled with gall and put to the precious lips of the dear Savior, seen the blood and water flow from his pierced side, seen him taken from the cross and securely placed in the tomb, all their hope and trust, all their faith and confidence, was buried there; and one said, "I go a fishing." Well might they, if that were the last of Jesus' body. If the resurrection is not a truth we are in the same situation with them, and Jesus still lies in Joseph's tomb; for "if there be no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not risen." But Peter triumphantly breaks out and exclaims, "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead."—1 Peter i. 3. It is clearly proven from the Scripture quoted that Christ rose from the dead; and not only so, but we have positive proof that at the time of his resurrection the bodies of many of the saints arose, and went into the holy city, and appeared unto many. "But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that slept." Yes, brethren, the first ripe fruit has been offered before the Lord and accepted of him. It is safely secured in the heavenly garner, without blight or mildew; and what does that imply? Why, that secures the whole harvest. As he rose from the dead and ascended into heaven, so will every one of his dear little ones. He is our pattern and our example. "For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality. So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" The grave still holds a victory over the saints, and death to many still has an awful sting.

Volumes might still be written, but for fear of taking up too much space I must forbear. I hold no feeling of ill-will toward those whose views may differ from mine. I have tried to prove that this doctrine is in harmony with God's eternal truth.

While in the midst of writing the mail brought a letter from Elder Speirs on the same subject, which I inclose. It was not written for publication, but I think it too good to hide under a bushel.

Yours in hope of a glorious resurrection,

SARAH A. GARRETT.

DUNKERTON, Iowa, Sept. 20, 1890.

HEDRICK, Iowa, Sept. 9, 1890.

MRS. SARAH A. GARRETT—DEAR SISTER IN CHRIST:—Yours of the 6th instant came to hand a few hours ago, and was gladly received. I baptized our daughter on the fourth Sunday in August, who came from the west to visit us.

You speak of your fears and doubts, and of your weakness and nothingness. My dear sister, I can but say, "Surely thou also art one of them; for thy speech bewrayeth thee."—Matt. xxvi. 73. Yours is the language of the heavenly family. They all have one language, and all have been taught by the same Spirit, and have all learned in the same school. Our school-book says that the nations of the earth are but as the small dust of the balance, and as a drop of the bucket; yea, less than nothing, and vanity, in the sight of God. You would exalt me as a giant. Now do not talk in that way any more, dear sister; for I am not even a good dwarf. Let us compare. Our book says that the nations are less than nothing. If so, what is one? If the nations were sixty millions we would have to find the sixty-millionth part of nothing to find my giantship; yea, less than that, and vanity added. But some would say, How can that be? How can anything be less than nothing? Let us illustrate. Suppose I were in possession of one thousand dollars' worth of property, and in debt two thousand dollars; how much would I be worth—one thousand dollars? No; I would lack one thousand dollars of being worth anything. I would be worth nothing, yea, less than nothing, and vanity. I am a vain man; and if it were not for the intercession of the Mediator, who is unchangeable, who was set up from everlasting, it would be worse than that, for I would be ten thousand talents in debt, with not one farthing to pay. Then who am I? A sinner by nature, a sinner by practice, a sinner by omission, a sinner by commission, and one of the least of saints, if one at all; and if I am saved I must be a sinner saved by grace alone.

You ask for my views, dear sister, on the subject of the resurrection. It is so vast and copious a subject that I cannot cover it, but I will pen a few reflections. We believe there was such a person born into the world as the child Jesus, that he grew to be a man of flesh and bones, and that aside from the Godhead which dwelt in him he was flesh and bones. We believe that is the man who was baptized, who fulfilled the law for us, who paid our enormous debt, who was betrayed, who was tried before Pilate, and of whom Pilate said, "Take ye him, and crucify him; for I find no fault in him." Pause and reflect a moment. Did the world ever hear such a sentence with such a confession following—"I find no fault in him?" Is not this the man that was nailed to the rugged wood, that was speared in the side, that bowed his head and gave up the ghost, that was taken down from the cross, and was laid in the tomb? Now what became of him? Was it not the same man all the time? Surely it was. Listen to the angel: "Why seek ye the living among the dead? He is not here, but is risen." "Behold the place where they laid him." Jesus said to Mary, "Touch me not; for I am not yet ascended to my Father: but go to my brethren, and say unto them, I ascend unto my Father and your Father, and to my God and your God." Then what did they report? Why, that Jesus is risen. What did the disciples see on their way to Emmaus? Why, a man. What was it that appeared in the house while the doors were shut? Jesus said, "Handle me and see; for a spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see me have." "Then saith he to Thomas, Reach hither thy finger; and behold my hands; and reach hither thy hand, and thrust it into my side; and be not faithless, but believing." Behold his ascension. "This same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." Tell me, dear sister, is it the same man all the time, or is it another? Is it real, or is it fictitious? It is all real. It is the same man all the time. If it was not a real flesh and bone man resurrection, then it was a sham, and one of the most abominable impositions that ever was palmed off upon the human family; but, dear sister, it is real, all real, from first to last. Destroy the reality of the resurrection and my Jesus is gone, my hope is gone, and my all is gone. Jesus is our pattern. If the resurrection of the Head is real, the resurrection of all the members of his body will be just as real. Not mortal, but immortal; not blood life, but spirit life.

My dear sister, my pen falters and language fails; so adieu for the present. In hope of a glorious, an immortal resurrection,

R. SPEIRS.

REISTERSTOWN, Md., April 11, 1891.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—Even among the most orderly churches, where pastor and members are most careful and most anxious to take no step hastily, and desire to do all things decently and in order, and where the word of God is most prayerfully studied, and the direction of the Spirit most humbly sought, there will from time to time arise questions which perplex and disturb the minds of all, and which, if dealt with under a fleshly spirit of pride or self-seeking, will lead to strife, debate, and often alienation and division among those who are really of one household and children of the one common Father. There are also very often circumstances arising out of the usual order of things, which may lead to a difference of opinion, and finally to strife and confusion. It should be remembered that the church is not a piece of wood or stone, to be hewn or chipped into a dead form (beautiful though that form may be), which form cannot bend nor sway, but must remain cold and rigid as steel in whatever shape it is made; but it is a living body, which can move and sway and bend within the limits of the life and power which God has given her, even as can our natural bodies. Neither do the Scriptures contain a set of dead, iron-bound rules and forms, within which the church is inclosed as in a straight-jacket; but they contain a revelation of the will of God, in perfect harmony with the same will revealed in the hearts of all who love God. This law of love written in our hearts leads to a desire to do all that is pleasing to God, and that will make for peace and prosperity in Zion. For instance, the Bible does not say how often nor upon what days we shall meet for worship; how often the supper shall be attended to in the churches; where nor when the churches shall meet to transact business; whether special houses of worship shall be built, or whether we shall meet in an upper or lower room; they do not prescribe the order of worship, whether we shall always sing, pray or preach when we meet; they do not say how the necessary funds of the church shall be raised; how nor in what way the pastor of the church shall be supported; where the ordinance of baptism shall be administered, whether in a pond, stream of running water, lake, ocean, or whether in a natural or artificial collection of water; by whom it shall be administered, whether the pastor of the church, or some brother who may be desired by the candidate because the ministry of that brother has been blessed to that candidate. These and many other things are not settled by rule, but are left to the spiritually enlightened judgment of the church, moved by the love of God in their hearts. These are questions of convenience and expediency, which may all come under the rule, "Let all things be done decently and in order." Let a church pursue any course which may seem to her wisest and best in regard to any of these things; and she should not be subjected to animadversion and censure by any other church which may judge it wise to pursue any other course. In such things "circumstances alter cases;" and each church is the best judge of her own circumstances. I think that I have no right to suppose myself more wise than my brother in that which personally concerns him; and so no church should claim superiority of wisdom over another. Suspicion and jealousy, and a disposition to fault others, and to attribute unsoundness and wrong motives to another brother or church, is always from the flesh, and delights Satan and grieves the Holy Spirit. A thousand mistakes in judgment by a church are not half so bad as is a disposition to charge a brother with wrong motives when he has erred from the way.

These general remarks lead me to consider one special matter which was in my mind when I began to write. The question has been suggested in my hearing in past years whether it is wrong for a person desiring baptism to offer himself to a church some distance from his home when there is a church nearer his home. Lately, in conversation with a dear brother in the ministry, the same question was discussed again. Now here I want to say that this seems to me to come under the remarks made above. I do not think that with regard to this matter also any set rule has been laid down. Circumstances here alter cases also. Sometimes it is more convenient for one to attend the meetings of a church ten miles away than another only five miles away. I want to mention an instance in my own ministry, without calling names. If any concerned read this I trust they will pardon my reference to it. A member of the congregation of one of the churches which I am serving, and who for a long time had been held in dear fellowship by us all, was attending an association in another state, and remained over the following Sunday. Before I left the association she came to me and said that she felt like being baptized before returning home by the pastor of the church where she was visiting, and asked me if I would think it wrong in any way. My reply and my feeling was that it would not be wrong, and I should only be too glad to know that she had at length followed her Lord in baptism. Accordingly she was baptized there, and afterward brought her letter and was gladly received by the church at her home. Nothing but selfish carnality could have led any of us to do otherwise than rejoice that one of the little ones had come home at last. I add that the ministry of the pastor of the church where our sister was baptized had in former years been greatly blessed to her.

I have known of instances like this. For instance, some children of God are visiting or attending a meeting at some distance from home. At the meeting their love is animated and grows warm, their hope is revived, and they feel moved to tell the brethren there what great things the Lord has done for them, and to confess his name in baptism. What is to hinder, if they say, "See, here is water; what doth hinder me to be baptized?" I answer that no Bible hindrance stands in the way. No other should be considered. If the church near where they live finds fault, the church is in a wrong spirit, and not they. Their home church, if actuated by love to the cause of Christ and to the little ones of his kingdom, will be rejoiced when they hear the glad news, and with impatience wait to greet them as brethren in the Lord. The churches are not parties, but one body. The joy of one is the joy of all. I can, I believe, say in truth that I always rejoice when I learn that saints are gathered home among any of the churches. If I am deceived, and this is not my feeling, may God forgive me, and give me a better mind. Suppose a citizen of Ephesus had been visiting Colosse, and there had come to know the Lord and believe in him; does any one think that if he had come asking baptism there Paul would have said, "Wait; go to Ephesus, and there put on Christ?" God's will is the only rule. Surely he does not stir up the love of his children, and cause the way to be opened for them to confess him in baptism, when it would violate any outward law of Zion for them to do so. Would not the church at Ephesus, when they returned and reported what had been done, rejoice with them, and sing praises to God that one more among them had been brought into the visible fold and numbered by the one Shepherd? Philip did not seem to think, when he baptized the eunuch, that his absence from home made any difference; and Lydia was not told to go home to Thyatira, but was baptized at Philippi by Paul, or under his direction. These things seem to me conclusive in regard to this matter; and so I conclude that if the pastor or church at home feels aggrieved, there is something wrong in that pastor or church.

I will add that if any enmity or ill-will toward the brethren at home actuates a candidate in going away to seek baptism, then this is wrong in that one, and to be baptized would not to them be the answer of a good conscience; or if one has been rejected by his home church, and goes elsewhere, concealing this fact, this also would show a wrong or deceitful spirit in such an one. Still further, every church should be cautious in receiving strangers among them; and if such strangers are what they should be they will desire that all shall be open as day concerning them. God's humble little ones are only too fearful of deceiving the church of God, and so they court the closest examination.

But these things are outside of the question which I chiefly desired to discuss, and I will not pursue them further. May God give us all a humble, sincere mind, and a single eye to the glory of God, is my prayer.

I remain, as ever, your brother in Christ,

F. A. CHICK.

ELDER GILBERT BEEBE'S SONS—
DEAR BRETHREN IN CHRIST:—
Having some very serious thoughts upon the subject of protracted meetings, the way I have seen them run, and the purpose for which it appears they are run, and having come to the conclusion from reading the Scriptures and from past experience that some things said and done in those meetings have not the seal of divine testimony, I thought I would write a few lines to the Old School Baptist fraternity, if you, dear editors, see fit to give them a place in that ever blessed medium of correspondence, the SIGNS OF THE TIMES; and if any poor child of God is enabled to glean a word of comfort from what I may write, give God all the glory, for it belongs to him; and if any brother or sister sees I am in error, in love to God and his cause, and in the spirit of meekness, point it out to me, and pray God that he may enable me to see it and turn from it. Now it is recorded in the book of God, "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness; that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works."—2 Tim. iii. 16, 17.

Dear children of God, I wish you to keep in memory the above named Scripture, and consider that it is the language of him that cannot lie, by an inspired apostle; and he says it is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, &c. I have been where the Methodists and Missionaries were holding protracted meetings, and have heard plenty of old wives' fables, and human sympathy stirred up to a high pitch, and attempts made to scare men, women and children to heaven; but they do not get to heaven by being scared, nor by the fear of torment. It is "By mercy and truth iniquity is purged; and by the fear of the Lord men depart from evil."—Prov. xvi. 6. I have understood that the Baptists of the Primitive order hold to and have contended for, from the days of the apostle to the present time, the God-honoring and soul-cheering doctrine of election and predestination, according to the foreknowledge of God; and that another fundamental principle of their doctrine is the fall of Adam, and the imputation of his sin to his posterity; so that even the chosen people of God are unable to recover themselves, either in part or whole, from the fallen state they are in by reason of sin; that until born again all mankind are "carnal, sold under sin;" and "to be carnally minded is death." "Dead in trespasses and sins."—Eph. ii. 1. The only way of escape for poor, dead sinners from the wrath to come is through the finished work of the Redeemer. Jesus bore the sins of his chosen people in his own body on the tree, and put them away by the sacrifice of himself. The third day, according to the Scriptures, he rose from the dead, entered not into holy places made with hands, but into heaven itself, having obtained eternal redemption for us; and direct from heaven, by his Spirit, he quickens the subjects of divine grace into life, leads them about and instructs them, shows them the exceeding sinfulness of sin, gives them the gift of repentance, reveals in and to them what Jesus, their elder Brother, has done for them, without the aid of humanly devised means or money. This is what I have been contending for, as best I could, in a public way, for about ten years. How can it be possible, my dear brethren and sisters, that we can in truth claim to be Primitive Baptists of the apostolic faith, and join hands and form a league with those Babel-builders around us? May we all take warning, and remember the legs of the lame, and the Scripture quoted in the beginning of this article. When I look in the Scriptures and begin to trace the primitive saints I have never been able to see where any of them claimed to be instruments in the hands of God in the eternal salvation of sinners. I do not read of their organizing any Sunday Schools as helps to the church of Christ, nor holding protracted meetings for the conversion of their children, neighbors, and neighbors' children, nor erecting mourners' benches; nor do I read of any of the apostles saying, Now, sinners, if any of you wish us preachers or the church to pray for you, come up and take these front seats. I have seen some of these things practiced, not altogether by the Methodists and the Missionaries, who organize their boards and conventions, but by some who have been hatched out of some of the old eggs left by the Missionaries, as Elder P. J. Powell says in a recent number of the SIGNS. The line is drawn here, and those railers and kickers have done it. "They went out from us, that it might be made manifest they were not all of us;" and they have proved themselves to be the people that could not endure sound doctrine (2 Tim. iv. 3), and have declared nonfellowship against the doctrine of God's predestination of all things; declaring that such doctrine is damnable heresy. But before they went out and set up their declaration of nonfellowship, some of them claimed to be believers in the doctrine of predestination, saying at the same time that it would not do to preach it in protracted meetings; and before the separation, when they would be holding a meeting, and one came in whom they knew to be a Predestinarian, they would be very careful not to invite him to preach. I speak that I do know, and testify that I have seen. They are now holding their protracted meetings, preaching means and instrumentalities, saying, "The sinner is not as dead as you might suppose. He is not so dead but what he can hear and receive the gospel." One article of Old Baptist faith is total depravity, which is sustained by the word of the Lord. Then if the sinner is dead in sin, he is not alive in righteousness, neither can he be, unless he is quickened by the Spirit of almighty God. Then, dear brethren and sisters in Christ, I have come to the conclusion that all those protracted meetings, held for the purpose of quickening and awakening dead sinners, are of the flesh, and prompted by the carnal mind. God will bring in the trophies of his grace at his own appointed time. So when we meet together, dear children of God, let our object be to worship our Redeemer, who has done such "great things for us, whereof we are glad." Now I do not object to using the language of Peter on the day of Pentecost, when the people of God are worshiping God, if any poor character is quickened by the Spirit of God, and cries out as they did on that occasion.—Acts ii. 37, 38. We will do well to wait the set time that God has to visit Zion; for he has said, "At this time will I come, and Sarah shall have a son." But if Hagar is not left alone, Ishmaelites will be born, and the works of the law made manifest. So, children of the free woman (which are the children of grace), obey the divine commandment to "Stand fast therefore in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, and be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage."—Gal. v. 1.

Then, brethren and sisters, one and all, may the great Head of the church and Savior of the body grant grace sufficient to enable us all to take the Scriptures as the only man of our counsel; for they, being given by inspiration of God, are profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness; that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works. Let us not preach anything nor practice anything that we have not a "Thus saith the Lord" for.

I have not written to stir up controversy, but to relieve my mind, and in order to let the brethren know that I stand opposed to protracted meetings run by the production of the flesh, for the purpose of saving dead sinners. I love to be with the brethren and sisters when the Spirit of God moves them to praise his great and high name. "Little children, keep yourselves from idols."

I must bring this scribble to a close. Brethren editors, if you see proper to publish this, please correct all mistakes. May you long be spared to wield "The sword of the Lord and of Gideon." I like the SIGNS. It comes to me laden with the good news from a far country. I often feel like if I could meet with all who write for its columns I could take them all in my arms and say, God bless you. But I am looking forward to the time when all the people of God will meet, never to part.

Yours in hope of the resurrection,
JAMES C. WALTON.

SOUTHAMPTON, Pa., April 6, 1891.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—I send you a letter from Miss Susie C. Parker, which you are at liberty to publish in the SIGNS if you think best. I sent it to sister Mary Parker to read, who returned the money sent for her photograph, with expressions of tender sympathy for the sufferer. How many there are suffering great pain—many whose sufferings are not known beyond their personal acquaintances; and how many who are helpless in body, and yet whose sufferings of mind are still greater. How it awakens our deep sympathies when these cases of pain and anguish are brought to our attention. It is well to look at them, to even seek them out, to meditate upon the affliction and misery that are in the world, that the generous and sympathetic principles of our hearts may be exercised in efforts to render such help and comfort as we may be able. "No man [christian] liveth to himself alone." "It is better to go to the house of mourning than the house of feasting." Our dear sister, Mary Parker, whose condition physically is sad and afflictive beyond any I know, has been blessed with spiritual blessings in Christ Jesus, and has been endowed with a gift to express both the sufferings and the controlling power of the blessings clearly and forcibly. These communications of hers have gone far and wide, and have comforted many whose afflictions have been known to few, if any, besides themselves, and have called forth responses from many tried souls, burdened and pressed down in like manner, such as brother Jenkins, brother James Trask, and others. One man, writing for her photograph, says, "I also am afflicted. I have not walked for forty-five years."

In reply to my expressed wish to send her letter to the SIGNS Susie Parker says, "You have my consent to do as you please with the letter that I sent you. I had no thought when writing it that it would be published, or I would have written more fully concerning my helplessness and suffering. I will send you a photograph of myself with this. I have to do my writing and sewing in a reclining position. I write when lying on my left side, with my paper on the low stand, much lower than my bed, which you can see. I have to lie as you see me all the time. If I am raised up it brings on smothering, from which I suffer so much. A great deal of the time I can hardly sleep at all on account of those suffocating spells. * * * When I receive the SIGNS I always look to see if Mary Parker has written. I love so well to read her communications; and when I cannot rest at night I often think of her."

How comforting it is to know that the dear Savior, who was afflicted in all the afflictions of his people, and who bore all their sicknesses and sorrows, and all their sins, now cares for them more tenderly than any mother could, and the angel of his presence saves them. Your brother,
SILAS H. DURAND.

KALONA, Iowa, Feb., 1891.

MR. SILAS H. DURAND—DEAR SIR:—I am a reader of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, and read your letter in the number of February 11th. I would like to procure one of Mary Parker's photographs, and will inclose the money in this letter, for which you will please send one. I have read her good letters in the SIGNS for about six or seven years, I think, and my heart goes out in much sympathy to her in her sad affliction; but from the tone of her letters I think when she is done with earth that her sufferings will be over.

How sweet will be the rest when there is no more pain and no more sleepless nights.

I know how to sympathize with dear Mary Parker, as I am a great sufferer myself. I have now lain on my bed for nearly twelve years; and for more than eight years, I have not been able to sit up, nor even to be raised up, and a great deal of the time my sufferings are almost more than I can bear. I cannot describe them to you. I can rest but little at any time, and especially at night. I was born and raised in Hampshire Co., Va., and am a daughter of Robert and Abigail Parker. My mother joined the Old School Baptist Church in Virginia before I was born, and was baptized by Elder John Arnold. That was more than fifty years ago. I am now fifty-one years old. When we moved west the church gave mother a letter, but she never used it, as there are no Old School Baptists in this part of the country. She never joined any other church, as she could not believe as they did, but lived a true christian life; and on May 5th, 1880, the Lord called her home to live with him forever. Father died in 1873, a christian man, but he never joined any church. He never met with a change until he was seventy years old, and for six years he lived in doubts and fears. He said he would like to be baptized, but was afraid that he was not fit for the place; but two weeks before he died he became satisfied, and sent for a minister, an old gentleman, telling him that he would like to be baptized. They set a day to take him to the river, but that same night he was taken very sick, and lived only a few days.

I pass a great deal of my time in writing, and occasionally in sewing. I make little articles and sell them, although I suffer a great deal while doing this work; but what little I can earn is quite a help to me. I have no home of my own. I am with my brother-in-law. I have two sisters with me, but they are nearly worn out. Both are older than I am, but they do all they can for me. I have often thought I would like to read one of dear Mary Parker's books; and if I can pay for one when more are printed I will send for one. I love to read the SIGNS. I receive a great deal of reading matter, but much of it is no satisfaction to me. O how can people believe such doctrine as is scattered over the world, such as "faith cures" and "christian science?" I am tired and worn out with seeing their books and papers, and nearly every mail brings me something of the kind. I enjoy your communications in the SIGNS, and hope you will be spared, if it is God's will, to write many more. They are a great satisfaction to all who cannot have the privilege of hearing preaching.

I will close. I only expected to write a few lines when I began, but I see I have written quite a lengthy letter.

SUSIE C. PARKER.

KELLER, Texas.]]

G. BEEBE'S SONS:—After reading the first number of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES for the year 1891 I feel to thank God and take courage. I will now try to tell the brethren and sisters some of my travel, or experience. I feel to say, as did Paul, "By the grace of God I am what I am." I will make this relation as short as I well can.

I do not recollect any time in my life when I did not believe the Bible, for my father and mother taught me that it was the record of truth. I believed that I could get religion whenever I wanted it, for so I had been taught; but I did not want it until I had gotten everything else that I wanted to make me happy in this world. Then I thought I would pray and ask God to have mercy on me; and I verily believed that he would do so. I continued in that belief until I was about twenty-one years old. I certainly enjoyed the things of this world as much as any other man did. While on my way from California to Ray County, Missouri, not having seen land for some twenty days, I was playing a game of cards to pass away the time, when all at once the thought entered my mind, If you were called to die would it be well with you? Right then and there I felt that I was a great sinner, yes, a lost sinner. My cry was, "Lord, have mercy on me, a poor sinner." Then I had a will to be saved, but I found that I lacked the power which I had thought I possessed. From that time on, for about two years, I shall never be able to tell what were my feelings. I would go to the woods to try to pray, but, alas! my prayers seemed to rise no higher than my head. I well remember, while riding some eight miles, leaving the road and going to the woods some five times to try to pray; but, alas! it was all in vain. When I would lie down at night I felt afraid to fall asleep, lest I should die and go to hell; for it appeared to me that the very pangs of hell hovered around me. Sometimes I would go to camp-meeting, and would see my friends getting religion, as they termed it; but I did not want to get to the mourners' bench, nor did I want any one to know what was the matter with me. Sometimes I would go into wild company to try to drive trouble from me; but when I got by myself I would feel worse, if possible, than before. One night, after spending nearly two years in more trouble than tongue can express, I was sitting alone and lamenting my lost condition, when I thought I would try once more to pray. I fell on my knees, but do not recollect what I said; but all at once my burden left me, and I felt that I loved everybody. All nature appeared to be praising God. I thought my trouble was over forever; but, alas! after a short time doubts and fears arose in my mind, and they continue to this day with me.

Dear brethren and sisters, I have been with you some thirty-nine years, and I feel that if I am ever saved I will be a sinner saved by grace.

PRESSING TOWARD THE MARK.

"BRETHREN, I count not myself to have apprehended; but this one thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."—Phil. iii. 13, 14.

By request of an aged brother, who is deprived of the company of the brethren, we desire, if the Lord will, to write for his encouragement some cheering gospel truth in connection with this text. Such truth is contained in this inspired record, whether it is our privilege to present it to his comfort or not. Not even the language of inspiration can be profitable to the saints except as it is opened to their understanding by the Spirit of truth, whom the world cannot receive, neither knoweth him. When that blessed Comforter takes of these things of Jesus and shows them to his disciples, they are enabled to understand the Scriptures as no natural instruction could explain them. In this divine teaching not only does the glory of Jesus appear as the complete Savior of his people from their sins, but the manifestation of that truth gives infallible testimony that every one who is thus taught is born of God. Thus wonderfully is the teaching of this Spirit identified with the teaching of the Lord himself, who taught as one having authority, and not as the scribes. In this teaching the Shepherd of the sheep calleth his own sheep by name, and leadeth them out.

"Brethren, I count not myself to have apprehended." In addressing those Philippians as brethren, Paul did not reckon that relationship according to the flesh; for he does not refer to their fleshly birth, but to their being born of God. It was only in this spiritual sense that Paul, who was a Jew, could claim fraternal unity with those Gentiles. By that natural sign which is designated as "the concision," Paul was separated from those whom he here calls brethren; and in that sense he could not recognize them as brethren; but they were his brethren in the anti-typical circumcision, which worship God in the Spirit, and rejoice in Christ Jesus, and have no confidence in the flesh. In this true circumcision all the subjects of salvation in Christ are brethren of the apostles and of all the patriarchs and prophets. As far as heavenly things excel the things of earth, so far the divine bond of fraternity excels the nearest and most tender natural ties of kindred and affection. Moved by this brotherly love Paul cheerfully resigned the great advantages which were his by nature. From his exalted position as a Pharisee he was brought to rejoice in the fellowship of those conscious sinners, whose hope was alone in the sovereign grace of God, as it is revealed in Jesus Christ. To such brethren he addresses this letter, and only such can receive the truth recorded in our text.

In order to properly understand the statement of the apostle, which he here addresses to his brethren, it is necessary to observe the preceding context. Even in the apostolic age there were those found among the churches who were teaching that the saints must not rely alone upon the grace of God for salvation, but that they must render that grace effectual by obedience to the law of Moses. It is in refutation of the doctrine of such Judaizing teachers that Paul cites his own experience. In his case nothing was lacking to justify confidence in the flesh, if compliance with legal requirements could authorize such confidence. "If any other man thinketh he hath whereof he might trust in the flesh, I more; circumcised the eighth day, of the stock of Israel, of the tribe of Benjamin, an Hebrew of the Hebrews; as touching the law, a Pharisee; concerning zeal, persecuting the church; touching the righteousness which is in the law, blameless." Certainly it is impossible that any man in the present day can attain to such righteousness by his own works, as Paul could rightfully assert that he had secured; yet for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus he gladly suffered the loss of all his superior advantages, and in truth confessed himself the chief of sinners. With all his attainments of legal righteousness, Paul counted not himself to have apprehended that righteousness by which he could stand justified in the sight of God. He had not attained to that perfection to which he aspired; and therefore he could not count himself to have apprehended that for which he was apprehended of Christ Jesus.

"But this one thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before." It is upon this portion of the text that our venerable brother specially desires our views. It is certain that Paul does not mean to say that he forgets the things which he has experienced in time past, as we speak of forgetting events which we have once known. So far was he from forgetting his afflictions and trials, that he frequently recalls them in his exhortations to the saints, presenting himself as an example of suffering for devotion to the doctrine of Christ. Also, he often refers to the things which have been recorded of the trials of the saints in the former ages of time. But taken in connection with the context, it is clear that his meaning is, that he no longer heeds the terrible words of that law which was given by Moses, being made free from its authority by the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus. Everything pertaining to the Mosaic dispensation was included among the things which are behind. This declaration of the inspired apostle exactly accords with the prophetic announcement of the word of the Lord. "For behold, I create new heavens and a new earth; and the former shall not be remembered, nor come into mind."—Isa. lxxv. 17. To ransomed sinners who have been delivered from the dominion of that law which condemned them, there can be no comfort in the remembrance of the things from which they have been made free. They do indeed remember the deep distress and bitterness under which they groaned when they found themselves utterly destitute of power to fulfill the just requirements of the holy law of God; but that remembrance is only as the recollection of the heavy bondage from which they have been released. They no longer look for justification by their own works of obedience to that law. It is in this sense that Paul speaks of forgetting those things which are behind. Since "Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth," it is evident that the believer has left behind him all dependence upon that law for justification before God. When under the prompting of their natural minds, the saints turn "to the weak and beggarly elements" of the works of the law for acceptance in the sight of God, they manifest a desire to be in bondage again. This is the same principle which was in the natural Israelites when they remembered the flesh pots of Egypt, and loathed the manna which God gave them. The law could not give life even if the servants rendered perfect obedience to its every injunction. The labor of a lifetime could never secure one moment of release from its exactions. The rest into which the believer enters is that perfect sabbath where by the grace of God he is made free from all the demands of the law. This freedom is not liberty to live in sin, but it is liberty to live by the faith of the Son of God in the perfect righteousness of Jesus. There is no bondage in the observance of this perfect law of liberty, for God works in his children both to will and to do of his good pleasure. Having the Spirit of Christ, they love this law, and mourn that they cannot do the things which they would, in obedience to the holy principle which God has given them.

This earnest desire to attain unto the perfection which is revealed in Christ Jesus, is what Paul expresses as "reaching forth unto those things which are before." The illustration here used is taken from the running of a race, in which every effort is directed toward the attainment of the victory by reaching the end of the course at the earliest moment. In such an effort the contestant will not be giving attention to the things which are behind, but his whole mind is set upon the final result of the race. The example of the Captain of our salvation is ever before his disciples in all their running, and the great multitude of his followers bear witness to the victory which is given to those who hear and obey his word. They are drawn by the love of their Lord to reach forward in holy aspiration after the perfection which they admire in him. They are not driven by the fear of punishment, neither are they attracted by the hope of a future reward; having the love of holiness in themselves it is their most exalted privilege to walk in conformity to that principle. Being burdened with the body of this death, they can never do the good which they would do; and yet they do with the mind serve the law of God, even while with the flesh they serve the law of sin. This meaning of the text is still more clearly expressed if the supplied words are omitted, making it read, "Brethren, I count not myself to have apprehended but one thing; forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before," &c. This is the one thing which Paul counted himself to have apprehended. It was the effect of that experimental teaching of the Spirit by which he had been cut off from all dependence upon the works of the law, and made to look to Jesus alone for righteousness and justification. This is just what is apprehended by every one who is taught of God by his Spirit; for it is the only salvation which is revealed by grace alone independent of creature merit.

"I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." Those who are seeking occasion for glorying in the flesh may suppose that in this expression of the apostle they have a precedent for claiming credit to themselves in zealously clinging to such works as they understand to be laid down in the law of Christ. But the connection of this text shows clearly that Paul ascribed all his devotion in following his Redeemer to the power of that grace by which he was himself apprehended of Christ Jesus. Indeed, there is no other mark by which the high calling of God in Christ Jesus can be indicated, except the manifestation of that grace which abounds unto sinners who have no claim upon the favor of God. When it is remembered that this is the mark to which Paul pressed, it will be understood that the more fully the sinner is conscious of his condemnation, the more closely he will be made to cling to this precious mark. No sinner ever felt the need of this refuge until he had first learned the impossibility of attaining to justification by his own obedience to the perfect law of God. He then presses to this mark, not as a work of merit on his part, but because he is cut off from all confidence in his own works for acceptance with God. As the helpless infant clings to the protecting shelter of its mother's arms, so the saint who sees his dependence, presses toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus. Having no other refuge, necessity compels him to turn to the strong hold, which is found only in the name of the Lord. The prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus is not a bribe to attract the carnal covetousness of the natural man. Every sinner who has heard this high calling in his own experience, knows that there can be no greater prize than that which is contained in the effectual calling of God, by which the dead sinner is made alive, and the guilty is made holy and without blame before God in love. Reason may grasp some thought of the power of God in commanding the light to shine out of darkness in the natural creation; but there is no natural power which can receive the miraculous truth that God has power to make justly condemned sinners pure and holy, so that infinite justice can find no defect in their perfect righteousness. None can know this secret of the Lord except it is revealed to them personally in that high calling which translates the subjects of electing love from the power of darkness into the kingdom of the dear Son of God. Paul could no more rely upon his own strength for pressing to this mark, than can the most feeble child of grace. Neither could he find rest in any other refuge but this divine calling. If there had been any advantage in the righteousness which was found in obedience to the law of Moses, surely Paul might have had all that advantage. But for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus his Lord he counted all things loss, including his legal righteousness and profit in the Jews' religion, forgetting all those things as utterly worthless, he would turn his back upon them, and press with eager and earnest reaching forth unto those things which are before, toward the mark for the prize of that high calling which infinitely excels all the glory of that righteousness which consisted in the observance of the requisitions of the law of Moses. May the grace of our Lord ever enable our venerable brother, with all the household of God, thus to forget the things which are behind, in that legal covenant, which can never give life, and reach forth unto those things which are before, in the glorious liberty of the gospel of Christ; and resting in the comfort of faith, may all the glory be ascribed to God through our Savior Jesus Christ.

INFORMATION WANTED.

PROVENCAL, La., March 25, 1891.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—Please give me a place in your paper, the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, for this advertisement. I wish to know if any of the readers of the SIGNS know where I can get the Old Choice Primitive Hymn Book. I think that is the name of it. Also, I want to know where I can get the old Primitive Mercer's Cluster Hymn Book. Please let me know through the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. I live fifty miles from any Primitive Baptist Church, and never hear any preaching that I feast upon, only as I read the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. I feel assured that God will keep his own unto the end, and bring them off more than conquerors through him that loved them.

I subscribe myself an unworthy brother, if one at all,

MARRIAGES.

By Elder Joseph L. Staton, March 18th, 1891, at the residence of the bride's parents, near Newark, Delaware, Joseph A. Crocket and Miss Louisa J. Hallet, both of New Castle Co., Del.

By the same, April 17th, at the Baptist parsonage, Mr. James W. Harrigan and Mary C. Fisher, both of Newark, Del.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

SISTER Sarah Adams died Sept. 21st, 1890, aged 73 years. Her maiden name was Sarah Holcraft. She joined the Old School Baptist Church called Bethel, in Switzerland Co., Ind., about the year 1840. She was a reader of the SIGNS for many years. She was confined to her bed about one year, being paralyzed, and could talk but little for several months. She died at her daughter's, in Switzerland Co., Ind. She waited very patiently for the time of her departure, and often wished for it to come. She received the kind attention of those around her, and died like one falling asleep.

M. I. BANTA.

NEW RICHMOND, Ind.

SISTER Alice Roach departed this life on March 1st, 1891. She was baptized by Elder McKelsey about eight years ago. She was a member of the Denton Creek Church, and was loved by her brethren and sisters. I was called upon to go and see her, and found her very sick with pneumonia. I was with her several days, and her talk was of her departure. She said, "Tell my friends that I am going home, and tell them not to grieve after me." She had me read to her the twenty-third Psalm.

She left a child three months old, a loving husband, two step-children, two sisters, six brothers, a step-mother (her mother died some twenty years ago), and her father, the writer of this notice, to mourn their loss. Let me live the life of the righteous, and let my end be like his.

J. F. DALE.

KELLER, Texas.

Benjamin H. Hill was born in Hamilton Co., Ohio, March 27th, 1817, and died March 19th, 1890, aged 72 years, 11 months and 23 days.

He was married to Elizabeth Bonham, June 4th, 1837. Ten children were born to them. Two died several years ago. There are fifty grandchildren and thirteen great-grandchildren. Elder Joseph B. Dobbs preached a comforting discourse from John xiv. 1-3. The hymns used are in Beebe's Collection, 1257 and 1218. The funeral was held at the residence of his son-in-law, John Parrott, and his body was laid in the Old Baptist burying-ground near the Union Church, in Morgan Co., Ill. He died of apoplexy, being sick about two weeks. He was confined to his bed only a few days before he was unconscious, and died like one going to sleep. He never united with any church, but enjoyed going to the Old School Baptist meetings, and sanctioned the doctrine held by them. He was a kind, upright citizen, an obliging neighbor, and very kind and tender to his family. After the death of his companion he remained with his son and daughter until 1883. His son, John A. Hill, moved to Kansas, and his daughter, M. E. Hill, was united to John Parrott in 1883. B. H. Hill lived with his daughter until his death.

ALSO,

Hattie C. Hill, daughter of Alfred and Tilda Hill, was born in Greene Co., Ill., June 26th, 1867, and died March 16th, 1893, at her grandfather Hill's, near Virden, Macoupin Co., Ill. She was sick several weeks, and suffered greatly, but was never heard to murmur nor complain. She had often said to her aunt, Mary E. Hill (now M. E. Parrott), that she loved to go to the Old School Baptist meetings, and that she could enjoy the preaching. She gave her aunt evidence that she was a child of God. She was a lovely girl, always kind to every one, and beloved by all who knew her. Her aunt said, "I never shall forget her peaceful smile in death." She was buried in the Scottsville cemetery, Macoupin Co., Ill., beside her father, who had died several years before. She had two brothers and two sisters.

Elders S. A. D. Sanders and Wm. H. Wheeler preached at Hattie's funeral, using 1 Cor. xv. 49: "As we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly."

S. R. BOGGESS.

GIRARD, Ill.

DEPARTED this life Jan. 27th, 1891, Mrs. Betsy Maxwell, consort of James Maxwell, aged 79 years, 2 months and 20 days.

The maiden name of the deceased was Larimore. She was born in Kentucky in 1812, and was united in marriage with James Maxwell in 1829, being the mother of sixteen children. In 1879 she made a profession of her hope in Christ, and was baptized by Elder R. M. Simmons, in fellowship with the Henderson Church, Knox Co., Ill., remaining a member of the same until she was called away to a better clime.

She was taken with a congestive chill on Jan. 23d; and although all was done for her that loving and faithful friends could do, yet on the 27th her spirit took its departure to the spirit world in the triumphs of faith. I am unable to state where she died, as the letter before me does not say; but as I am acquainted with her aged and bereaved husband, I tender to him my sincere sympathy.

I. N. VANMETER.

MACOMB, Ill., April 15, 1891.

My dear brother, W. R. Gipson, departed this life at his home in South Italy, Ellis Co., Texas, March 20th, 1891.

He was born in Upshur Co., Texas, twelve miles north of Gilmer, July 11th, 1851, and was the son of Leroy and Lucretia Gipson, both Primitive Baptists. He was married to Mollie Murry in May, 1871. Eleven children were born to them, seven still living and four dead. He united with the Primitive Baptist Church at Zion's Hill, in Parker Co., Texas, in June, 1884, and was baptized by Elder James Staggs. He was beloved by all who knew him. He lived a worthy member of the church, and bore the marks of our dear Savior in his humbleness and meekness. He was a reader and subscriber of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, and heartily indorsed the doctrine it advocates.

He leaves a wife, seven children, a mother, two brothers and two sisters, besides many relatives and friends, to mourn their loss, while we hope and trust that we were given bright evidence to believe that our loss is his eternal gain.

SOLON GIPSON.

CORSICANA, Texas, April 14, 1891.

MANKIND wants sympathy. The soul in its distress wants to pour out its sorrow into the ears of those who can truly sympathize with it in its affliction, and thus find some relief by giving vent to an overburdened mind; and it is a duty that we owe to each other to weep with those who weep, and comfort the mourners, and so fulfill the law of Christ by bearing one another's burdens. Baptists feel that the household of faith can truly feel their brother's sorrows and sympathize with them in their bereavement; hence you are requested to publish in your dear family paper the following obituary:

Morgan L. Sweet, the subject of this notice, was born in Roxbury, Delaware Co., N. Y., April 3d, 1820, and was married to Mary Ann Hays (who preceded him to the spirit world) in 1841. He emigrated to Illinois, and joined the Regular Predestinarian Baptist Church at Buffalo Grove, Ogle Co., in 1861, of which body he remained a firm and consistent member, being much attached to the church, and was a firm believer in the doctrine which she confesses.

Brother Sweet died at the home of his son-in-law, Garret Ruker, at Buffalo Grove, April 11th, 1891, being 71 years and 8 days old. His death was caused by internal injuries received in a fall some six months prior to his death. During his sickness he received at the hands of his children, relatives and friends kind care and attention, who now, together with the church, mourn their loss; but they mourn not as those who have no hope, believing that he fell

"Asleep in Jesus! blessed sleep!

From which none ever wake to weep."

Those who sleep in Jesus will God bring with him.—1 Thess. iv. 13-18. His burial services were conducted by the writer, April 13th, and were well attended by relatives and sympathizing friends. The writer discussed at that time the subject of the christian's hope, for the comfort of the relatives and the encouragement of the believers, using as a text these words of inspiration, "Which hope we have as an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast, and which entereth into that within the veil; whither the forerunner is for us entered, even Jesus, made a high priest forever after the order of Melchisedec."—Heb. vi. 19, 20. The body was then laid to rest beside other relatives, to await the call of him who has said, "I am the resurrection and the life."

ASSOCIATIONAL.

THE Baltimore Old School Baptist Association is appointed to be held with the Ebenezer Church, in the city of Baltimore, Md., to begin on Wednesday before the fourth Sunday in May (20th), 1891, and continue three days.

A cordial invitation is extended to all who desire to meet with us at that time. All who may reach Baltimore on Tuesday will call at Dr. John Thorne's, 709 North Calvert St., where they will be directed to homes. All who come on Wednesday will go direct to the meeting-house, corner of Calvert and Madison Sts., where the association will be in session.

THE Delaware Old School Baptist Association is appointed to be held with the London Tract Church, Chester Co., Pa., to begin on Wednesday before the fifth Sunday in May (27th), 1891, and continue three days.

THE Delaware River Old School Baptist Association is appointed to be held with the church at Southampton, Bucks Co., Pa., to begin on Wednesday before the first Sunday in June (3d), 1891, and continue three days.

THE Warwick Old School Baptist Association is appointed to be held with the church at Warwick, Orange Co., N. Y., to begin on Wednesday before the second Sunday in June (10th), 1891, and continue three days.

THE Chemung Old School Baptist Association is appointed to be held with the Abbington Church, at Justus, Lackawanna Co., Pa., to begin on Wednesday before the third Sunday in June (17th), 1891, and continue three days.

THREE DAYS MEETINGS.

If the Lord will, there will be a three days meeting with the Broad Run Church, Md., beginning on Saturday before the third Sunday in May, 1891. We extend a cordial invitation to all lovers of the truth, especially ministering brethren, to attend.

It is desirable that all shall come on the Friday evening train, Metropolitan Branch of the B. & O. R. R., which leaves Washington about four o'clock, and reaches Barnesville about six o'clock, where all will be met and conveyed to places of entertainment.

JOSEPH WHITE.

A THREE days meeting will be held with the Sidling Hill Church of Old School Baptists, in Fulton Co., Pa., to commence on Friday, May 1st, 1891.

We give a cordial invitation to all of our faith and order, and would be very glad if some of our ministering brethren could meet with us at that time, for we are lonely as to ministers. It is true that we are poor, and cannot offer any worldly inducements; but we know that God's faithful servants do not go for filthy lucre's sake, but of a ready mind.

Those coming by railroad will have to take the Baltimore & Ohio R. R. to Hancock, Md., where they will be met on Thursday, about the middle of the day, as the church is about twenty miles north of Hancock. Those who contemplate coming had better write to brother Dennis Mellott or brother Jacob F. Garland, whose post-office address is Needmore, Fulton Co., Pa.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date, this date denotes the time at which your subscription expires, and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

THE EVERLASTING TASK FOR ARMINIANS.

THE LAW, GRACE AND TRUTH.

"For the law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ."

By the form of this sentence it is evident that grace and truth are here contrasted with the law. "The law is holy, and the commandment holy, and just, and good;" yet grace and truth do not come to the people of God by it. In that respect "the law was weak through the flesh." So far as we shall be enabled to see and understand the distinction and difference between these two, between that which was given by Moses and that which came by Jesus Christ, to the same extent shall we enter into the knowledge of the mystery of godliness and the secret of salvation.

The law was necessary in order to make way for grace, to show the absolute necessity for it, and thus display its infinite riches. "By the law is the knowledge of sin." It is as a measuring line, by which is the knowledge that "all have sinned, and come short of the glory of God." It displays the lack and makes the need felt, but furnishes nothing to help the weakness it causes, nothing to supply the infinite deficiency it discloses, nor does it even intimate a sentiment of mercy or of pity. It is called "a ministration of death," and was glorious, because the glory of God in the manifestation of his infinite holiness and justice was there displayed. It is spoken of as "written and engraven in stones." This includes not only the "ten commandments," but all the statutes that were given, and all the rites and ceremonies that were established, for the manifestation of the power and holiness and spirituality of the law. These were all necessary in establishing the ten commandments upon Israel. I see no authority for speaking of the ceremonial law as a separate and distinct thing. Without the ten commandments all that followed would be nothing. The Savior condensed the ten commandments into two, and declared that all the law and the prophets hang upon them. It will not do, therefore, to separate them. But the entrance of the law was that the offense might abound, and that thus the superior power and glory of grace might be displayed in its superaboundings over all the aboundings of sin; and grace opens the way for the appearance of truth, the appearance to the poor, justly condemned sinner of the eternal purpose of God gloriously fulfilled in his salvation.

The apostle John begins here, as also in his epistle, at the beginning. "In the beginning was the Word." This beginning was before the beginning of the world, for the making of everything that was made follows it. The Word which was in the beginning with God, and which was God, made everything, and existed before all things. How long this beginning was before things began to be made it would be useless to inquire, for time was not, and the eternity which God inhabits allows of no measurement, nor of any division into periods by mortals. My understanding of the apostle's use of this word "beginning," both here and in his epistle, is to express and call marked attention to the connection that exists between the experience of the saints here in time and the eternal purpose of God which he purposed in Christ Jesus our Lord, according to which purpose he makes known his manifold wisdom to the church. Everything that is seen and heard and looked upon and handled of the Word of life by the saints here in time was from the beginning.

The saints are given also to understand that not only grace and mercy and delivering power are according to the purpose of God, but that "the purpose of him who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will" embraced also all that caused grace and salvation to be needed. As I read the apostles and other inspired writers I see no intimation of anything however evil, of any act however wicked, of any event however disastrous, that is contrary to the eternal purpose of God. I see nothing that they will allow us to regard as not foreordained by him. As I read the solemn words in which his glorious character is presented I am not allowed to think of one thing which he has purposed that shall ever be disannulled or prevented from coming to pass, nor of anything that ever has or ever shall come to pass which was not purposed by him when he declared "the end from the beginning, and from ancient times the things that are not yet done, saying, My counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure." I have not found him presented as one who permits things to be which he did not will to be, nor as one coming in to render help and salvation in an emergency not determined by him; but as one whose eternal decrees embraced whatsoever transpires in time, and whose word was from the beginning, so "settled forever in heaven" that the apostle could say, without a shadow of question, "We know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose."

When these things are contemplated by the carnal mind, even of the saints, when not under the control of the Spirit, they cause this question, "Why doth he yet find fault? for who hath resisted his will?" This question the apostle does not answer, but he meets it with this stern rebuke, "Nay but, O man, who art thou that repliest against God?" But when the humble child of God thinks of these deep mysteries; of God's hatred to sin, while yet he willed that it should be in the world; of his denunciations against the wicked, while yet they are his sword, and he made them for the day of evil (Prov. xv. 4; Psalm xvii. 13); of Behemoth and Leviathan, which he made, as well as the sword which approaches unto him (Job xl. 19; Isaiah xxvii. 1); of the darkness and evil which he created, as well as the light and peace (Isaiah xlv. 7); of the mystery of iniquity and the wonders of salvation; he becomes more humble, like a little child, and says, "O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! How unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out!"

In this chapter Jesus Christ is declared to be the Word. This name, like all the titles and names that are applied to him, expresses something of his wonderful character and perfect work. A word is defined to be "the spoken sign of a conception or an idea." It is that by which the thought in the mind of one is communicated to the mind of another. The eternal purpose of God which he purposed in himself was that his people, chosen in Christ Jesus before the foundation of the world, should be saved from sin, should be holy and without blame before him in love, should be gathered together in Christ, have sonship and an incorruptible and unfading inheritance in him, and obtain eternal glory. When the heirs of this purpose, and of the eternal life "which God, that cannot lie, promised before the world began," were manifested, they were dead in sin, under the condemnation of the just and holy law of God. How then could God communicate to them this eternal purpose of love and mercy, and bestow its blessings upon them, since "judgment and justice are the habitation of his throne," and he "is of purer eyes than to behold evil, and cannot look upon iniquity?" This condition of the people of God under the law was in that purpose of God, and was fully provided for. Had they failed of being in that condition of death the blessings of this eternal purpose could never have been theirs.

Therefore Jesus Christ is the Word, and was the Word in the beginning; which means that he was the medium of communication between the holy God and his lost people, the Mediator. A word by which one speaks his mind embraces in itself whatever love, power, good will, wisdom and thoughts of kindness may be entertained by him in behalf of those to whom the word is sent. So God's eternal purpose was purposed in Christ Jesus. All grace for us was given in him, with all spiritual blessings. In him was then given to his people all the infinite love of God that they shall ever feel, with all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge that ever they shall need. What a Word was there! so full, so rich in everything that infinite love and wisdom could ordain for the welfare, comfort and eternal glory of those unto whom it was given; and though ages of darkness, distress, danger and death must intervene before that blessed Word shall come to them, yet it shall not, cannot fail to reach them in due time, and unfold to their astonished and enraptured souls its boundless wealth of meaning. It is the Word of that God "with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning." "Forever, O Lord, thy word is settled in heaven." What an inestimable blessing it is to have an ear to hear this word, to see it with our eyes, and look upon it, to handle it with our hands, and taste of its infinite fullness. O what treasures are here, what inexpressible beauties, what stores of grace! Let this word but come to one that is dead, and at once he becomes alive forevermore; to one that is hungry and thirsty, and in a moment his soul is fed and refreshed; to one that is in the depths of sorrow, and at once he has received "beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning, the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness." Before this word all enemies flee, mountains become plains, the wilderness and solitary place becomes glad, the desert rejoices and blossoms as the rose, prison doors fly open, or the prison becomes a palace filled with heavenly light; and even the mysterious and fearful gates of death, broken open by the wondrous power of this word, prove to have been but a shadow that hid from our view for a little while the ineffable glories of heaven.

But how could this word come from the God of truth and justice and holiness to sinful worms of the earth? "The Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us, and we [the children of God, with spiritual vision] beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth." The eternal purpose is in him. The eternal promises are in him. He says, "I am the truth." He, as the Word and as Truth, must reach the people of God's choice. Truth is like the ray of sunlight coming straight from the sun without deviation. The ray of golden light rests beautifully here on this spot of earth, but its home is in the sun. A straight line marks its course, and there is an open way between the spot where it rests and the distant source of it. Let an obstacle come between and it is gone. Jesus is the truth, the fulfillment of the purpose of God. He dwelt among us, was with us in our sad estate as sinners, bore our sins, carried our sorrows, was afflicted in all our afflictions, tempted in all points like unto us, was made a curse for us, said, "I am a worm, and no man," became a servant to do the demands of the law for his people, became obedient even unto death, and went down to the lowest hell. Then the law was satisfied, and every demand of eternal justice was answered in behalf of all his people. No charge remained against them.

But he could not be holden of death. He had power to take up his life again, for he had received that commandment from the Father. He came up from death as a mighty conqueror. He was raised by the glory of the Father. When he arose "Truth sprang out of the earth." Now for the first time mercy and truth could meet together, righteousness and peace could kiss each other.—Psalm lxxxv. 10, 11. Under the law, which came by Moses, there could be no mercy consistent with truth, no peace for those against whom the law held any charge; but Jesus, "springing out of the earth" in his glorious resurrection, is manifest unto all his chosen people as having executed justice and judgment, and fulfilled all righteousness for them, and as unto them the way, the truth and the life, the fulfillment to them of all the eternal purpose and good pleasure of God. Having satisfied all the claims of justice against them as their Surety, he causes them to feel the unbearable burden of the debt; and then, when hope fails them, and they see no way to escape the execution of judgment against them, he shows them their debt fully and freely paid by him, and reveals to their wondering souls abundant stores of grace and mercy in himself for all their unrighteousness. He against whom their debt stood charged having paid it, now freely forgives them, and causes them to receive all the spiritual blessings that were given them in him, which were kept locked away from them by justice until the key was laid upon his shoulder. Then he closed the door of condemnation and death so that none can ever open it before them again, and opened the door into that rich treasure-house of gospel blessings, which none can ever shut.

It is now that "of his fullness have all we received, and grace for grace." This was the joyful declaration of his people, expressed by the inspired apostle in the morning of the gospel day; and it shall continue to be declared by them to his praise until that day shall end in everlasting glory. The word "for," in the sentence above quoted, has appeared to me difficult to understand; but when I notice its meaning in this place the difficulty in a measure disappears. The Greek word from which it is rendered is anti, meaning "against." Its significance appears to me to be that the grace received by his people is exactly equal to the grace which was given them in him before the world began. The one account stands over against the other in exact correspondence. So the apostle Paul also declares the same truth here expressed, saying, "But unto every one of us is given grace according to the measure of the gift of Christ."—Eph. iv. 7 He is full of grace; but of that fullness not a particle remains in him unbestowed upon them. It is all needed by them, and is just enough; none too little, and none to spare. Every trial and affliction that the people of God shall ever experience was appointed in infinite wisdom and love before the world began, and grace was provided in Christ with infinite exactness for every one to meet each time of need. No one will ever lack the measure absolutely needed, nor will one ever find himself in possession of more than his case requires. To every one in his utmost extremity will the precious declaration of the dear Savior be fulfilled, "My grace is sufficient for thee." To no one will it ever be said by him, My grace is more than enough. Infinite wisdom made no mistake. The foreknowledge of God could not be at fault, for it rests upon his foreordination. Just a fullness was given us in Christ; "and of his fullness have all we received, and grace for grace."

Here is truth; the exact fulfillment of God's eternal purpose of love and mercy; the ray of light coming in a straight line from the distant sun to the earth; the life, which was in the Word in the beginning, and "was the light of men," coming to them unto whom it was promised by the God that cannot lie before the world began. They were seen by him, and written in his book, when as yet there was none of them.—Psalm cxxxix. 16. They were loved by him "with an everlasting love," and the great love was still theirs even when they were dead in sins; therefore the power of that endless life must be felt by them, and that everlasting love "which passeth knowledge" must be known by them in all its length and breadth and depth and height, for "God keepeth truth forever."

This Word by which grace and truth came must take its direct, un-deviating course to them to whom it was given; for truth never wavers, never bends nor turns in its course, any more than does the ray of light in its passage from the sun to the earth. Condemnation and death lie in the way; therefore he must be condemned and die. Even a black cloud will intercept a ray from the natural sun, and prevent it from reaching the earth; but death itself could not prevent nor even hinder this Word, in which was the light of life, from reaching his people at the appointed time. He only could come through death; therefore by him only, and not by Moses, grace and truth could reach them. Moses could only come with them to death. The commandment is unto death, and there they are left by the law; but Jesus came through that great deep, through Jordan, the river of judgment, through the prison of the grave, and now condemnation, death and the grave are no more. In passing through them he abolished death and destroyed the grave, and raised through that dark region a highway of holiness, upon which the redeemed of the Lord shall walk, until all have come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads, when sorrow and sighing shall be done away.

Who are these redeemed? How are they manifested in the world? They are "as many as receive" Jesus Christ, the Word. How do they receive him? Is it by anything they can do? So many a poor, fainting, hungry soul is inquiring. How does the wounded, fainting lamb receive the shepherd? How does the deeply broken ground receive the seed? How does the child receive its mother? By doing anything? No; but by receiving, experiencing, yielding helplessly, gladly, thankfully to the blessed power that brings healing and strength and comfort. Like the lamb, the fainting soul receives Christ Jesus when he finds himself in his arms, and sees in him the green pastures that it longs for. Like the good, well-broken ground, the feeble and sore-broken heart receives the seed, the word of truth, when it feels the mysterious, blessed power of life working within, and sending its tender but strong roots down through all its broken and sorrowful depths, so that plants and flowers and fruit must spring forth to the honor and glory of God. Like the babe receiving its mother, the babe in Christ receives Jesus when it finds itself lying in the bosom of his love. We know nothing of him only in these blessed experiences. There is no such thing in the knowledge or experience of any saint as going to Jesus by any power of ours, nor of being brought to him or helped on the way to him by any man or angel. He is never seen nor known but by those who are already in him. Those unto whom he has given an understanding, that they should know him that is true, are in him that is true.—1 John v. 20.

These are they "that believe on his name: which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God." These, in the reception of Jesus, in the experience of the power of his life in their souls, by the working of which they believe on his name, are given power to become the sons of God. Having been already born before they could begin to feel or desire or know, they are now given to realize that holy relationship by a blessed experience, and find within them one desire above all others, that they may dwell all the days of their life in their Father's house; for in that they see a beauty above all that is in the world, above all they ever imagined, "the perfection of beauty," for it is "the beauty of the Lord" that shines there. There they would ever rest, like a child at home, beholding the beauty of the Lord, and inquiring in his temple.

The above thoughts are expressed in response to a request published in the SIGNS of February 4th by "An Inquirer after Truth." They are the thoughts of one who experiences more of the depths than of the heights; who feels more of darkness than light; who has no doubt that he is a poor, sinful, unworthy being, but who is often assailed with grievous temptations to doubt whether he is a subject of saving grace; who has no confidence in himself, and can only value the thoughts that come into his soul when he has some precious evidence that they are the thoughts of God revealed unto him by his Spirit; who has no doubts concerning the truth of the Bible, nor that it teaches that all the Lord's people are saved in the Lord, and shall enter into eternal glory, but who longs to be more and more fully assured that he is an heir of that salvation, and to drink more abundantly of the refreshing cup of salvation; who still feels his daily need of the publican's prayer, "God, be merciful to me, a sinner," and yet who must, with thankful wonder and grateful praise, acknowledge that he has been graciously given times of holy assurance by the dear Savior, when he could say, "It is enough." "I know that my Redeemer liveth." "My Beloved is mine, and I am his." At such times, comparatively so few, the appearance of the dear Savior to the soul has been as "a morning without clouds; as the tender grass springing out of the earth by clear shining after rain." How long the time appears since such seasons have been enjoyed! A little ray of light here, a little feeling of the power of the word there, sometimes a cry for mercy, sometimes for a little while a solemn sense of the spirit of grace and of supplications being poured into my soul, and sometimes, more often, a deep interest and anxious care for the church, and a rejoicing with her in her gladness, even when I have no gladness, or but little, for myself. A pressure in my spirit to work, to be constantly engaged in the service of the church, to go to the limit of my strength in that solemn service, and yet so much darkness, so many temptations to doubt, so many fears lest my service is from selfish motives, so few times, but O how sweet and precious they are, when the dear Lord gives a child-like confidence and humble trust, when the earthen vessel is fully assured that the Lord has filled it with gospel treasure, and that his hand is pouring out for the comfort and instruction of his people. How many times I have wished that I might, through the Spirit, say to the saints, Pray for me!

SILAS H. DURAND.

SOUTHAMPTON, Pa., April 13, 1891.

HORACE TEXAS, March 28, 1891.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—I have the pleasure of inclosing you an excellent letter written by a beloved brother, Elder T. Peterson, to his cousin, Mr. R. J. Shaddock. If in your judgment it is proper so to do, your are at liberty to publish in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

I want to say, dear brethren, that the SIGNS is still a regular and a more than welcome visitor to our home. It seems to me that it has been better, if possible, for the last three or four months than for a long time past. Of course the truth does not grow better, but sometimes we are in a better frame of mind to understand and enjoy it than at others. Time and space are not sufficient for me to name all the dear writers from whom I hope I have received instruction and comfort of late. I know that if it is substantial instruction and comfort it "cometh down from the Father of lights." I have especially enjoyed the bold, uncompromising, and yet gentle, manner of the advocacy and defense of the doctrine of the sovereign rule and predestination of God in all things. Yes, I love the SIGNS for the truth's sake, and I hope that we will not have to give it up as a weekly. I feared when the offer was first made to furnish it to new subscribers at one dollar, that many who did not have the interest of the paper nor its contents at heart would (some out of curiosity, and some from other motives) subscribe at one dollar who would never renew at two. I have sent you several new subscribers, but have not tried to get those whom I had reason to believe cared nothing for the doctrine it advocated. Some, of course, have failed to renew for want of means; and some, no doubt, who have a love for the truth, fail to renew because they think they cannot spare the money; when, perhaps, they have spent three times the price in the last year for trifles. We should remember that some of the Lord's little ones get much comfort from reading the SIGNS, who have little or no opportunity to associate with the brethren and sisters. So when we are lending to the support of the SIGNS we may give to some poor, hungering, thirsting one at least a "cup of cold water" in Jesus' name, for which we are assured we shall not lose our reward. I am, and always have been, poor as to this world's goods; but for several years I have been paying two dollars for the SIGNS, and have managed nearly every time to pay in advance. There is a season of the year when money is more plentiful with me than at any other time, and then is my time to pay for the SIGNS. I see many good places to put in the two dollars. Perhaps I need a new hat; but I had rather make out with the old one a while longer than give up my paper. Perhaps the house furniture needs replenishing, or I would like to have the children's photographs, and a hundred others comforts or luxuries; but I had rather give up all the pleasure of those things than give up the pleasure of reading the letters from my kindred in Christ that I receive through the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. As long as it advocates the truth, as it has for years past, I shall consider it cheap enough at two dollars. I expect to pay for it as long as I can, and if I ever should get where I can't, I hope some friend will furnish it to me free of charge.

I remain your little brother in hope,
H. B. JONES.

DALARK, Ark., Feb. 26, 1890.

MR. R. J. SHADDOCK—DEAR COUSIN:—I received your kind and welcome letter a little more than a week ago. I wrote cousin "Billy" a letter since I received yours, and therefore suppose you have heard from me by this time. This, and being so busy, are my only excuses for delaying to answer your letter. I was truly glad to hear from you, and the evidences of appreciation in your letter were words of encouragement to me. I am sorry you have been troubled about receiving no word from me; but as I have explained my seeming neglect in my letter to cousin "Billy," I will speak of other subjects in this.

Whether I shall ever come to Texas again or not, I cannot tell. My mind is often engaged in thinking of the brethren whose acquaintance I formed, and whose fellowship gained an abiding place in my heart, while I was there; and I feel at times a longing desire to be with them, that I may impart to them. Some further spiritual gift. Did my worldly circumstances admit of it, I would certainly try to visit that country again in the near future. It may be possible that I shall come there again, and to spend a longer time, than before. The Lord only knows.

MARCH 3.

Having written the above, and gotten frustrated about finishing, I will now try to finish. You ask for my views on 2 Cor. v. 10, which reads as follows: "For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ, that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad." Now it is not necessary for me to say to you that my views about this, or any other portion of Scripture, are worth no more than the views of any other uninspired man, only so far as they are supported by the testimony of inspiration; for it is well known to you that the vain speculations of uninspired men have ever tended to lead away from the truth and to darken counsel. You, then, will take full liberty to try everything that I may write by the Scriptures, and receive it only so far as it accords with that rule.

To whom did the apostle address this language? By reference to the introduction of this epistle it will be found that he wrote to "The church of God which is at Corinth, with all the saints which are in all Achaia." Our text has often been used as addressed to all the Adamic family. It is no more right to use the language of Scripture, addressed to the church of God, in that way, than it would be to read a letter written by me to you and your family, as though I had written to all the people in your county. When you commence to read this, and find it addressed to a relative, and the degree of relationship expressed, you are at once stopped from reading or considering it as though it were written to all the people in your county; for it is well known to you that I do not bear that degree of relationship to all, nor any considerable portion of them. Now I may appropriately speak to you of our grandfather, because the same man was both mine and yours, and the degree of relationship is thereby understood; but not so in regard to the people of your county. So Paul unmistakably indicates the relationship existing between himself and those to whom he writes this epistle, when he says, "Grace be to you, and peace, from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ." He was writing to his brethren. Then when he uses the pronoun "we," it is evident that he includes himself with his brethren. Now let us see if it will do to apply this to the whole race of Adam. This fifth chapter, in which our text stands recorded, begins thus: "For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." If you make the application universal, you make the apostle say that the whole race of Adam know they have this building of God, this house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens; and thus you would make Scripture contradict itself; for Jude says some are "Suffering the vengeance of eternal fire."—Jude 7. But restrict the application to the saints, and the truth of the apostle's language is apparent, and all contradictions are removed. "For in this we groan, earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with our house which is from heaven; if so be that being clothed we shall not be found naked. For we that are in this tabernacle do groan, being burdened: not for that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life. Now he that hath wrought us for the self-same thing is God, who also hath given unto us the earnest of the Spirit. Therefore we are always confident, knowing that, whilst we are at home in the body, we are absent from the Lord (for we walk by faith, not by sight): we are confident, I say, and willing rather to be absent from the body, and to be present with the Lord."—Verses 2-8. By a careful reading of this part of the chapter in which our text is recorded, it is clearly to be seen that an application to the whole human family is entirely inconsistent with the apostle's meaning; and that it is entirely consistent with his meaning to apply it in a restricted sense, "to the church of God," as he expresses in his address; for it is the church that God hath wrought for the inhabiting of the house of eternal glory; and it is the saints to whom God hath given "the earnest of the Spirit;" and they are they that "walk by faith, not by sight;" and it is also they, and they only, that have the confidence and knowledge spoken of by the apostle. So we clearly see that the we that "must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ" refers to the "church of God," and "all the saints."

Having arrived at, I think, a correct and indisputable conclusion in regard to the characters addressed, I want to call your attention here to another thing in regard to the text. In the commonly accepted version of the Bible, known as King James' translation, there are many words supplied by the translators, known by their being printed in italics; and these are generally necessary to make complete sense; but in a few places, I believe, the sense is rather clouded or obscured by them. Especially is this the case in the passage that we have under consideration, which reads, without these supplied words, as follows: "For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ, that every one may receive the things in body, according to that he hath done, whether good or bad." "In body" is certainly the meaning of the apostle; for if all mankind, or even the saints, were to be judged after the dissolution of this tabernacle, and to receive an eternal reward commensurate with their personal merits, or according to their deeds, then surely none would be saved; for it is only the good that can be accepted with God; and, upon this basis of judgment all must be turned away; for Jesus says, "There is none good but one, that is God."—Matt. xix. 17. That the world of the ungodly are to be judged according to their deeds, or according to the spirit that prompts them to their deeds, I have no reason to deny; but the Lord's people are looked upon in the light, not of their own personal merit or righteousness, but of the righteousness of Christ imputed unto them; therefore he is called "The Lord our righteousness."—Jer. xxiii. 6. Those that inherit eternal life are not saved on the basis of their own works, but of the purpose and grace of God. "For the wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord."—Rom. vi. 23. "For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves, it is the gift of God. Not of works, lest any man should boast."—Eph. ii. 8, 9. Who [God] hath saved us, and called us with a holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began; but is now made manifest by the appearing of our Savior Jesus Christ, who hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel."—2-Tim. i. 9, 10. Then, if the people of God are not saved upon their own merit or works, but by the grace of God (a free gift, unmerited), and that according to his own purpose, as is clearly proved by the above quotations, it would be utterly inconsistent with this great and fundamental truth of the gospel to say that they are judged "after death" according to their deeds. But the objector will quote, "It is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment." I have already acknowledged that those who receive not the grace of God are to be judged according to their deeds; and that this judgment is to be made manifest, and that they shall receive their reward after death, I think the Scriptures teach; but the reward of the sins of God's people was laid upon Jesus. "For he hath made him to be a sin for us, who knew no sin; that we might be made the righteousness of God in him."—Rom. v. 21. Now, since Christ has suffered and borne the penalty of the law for his people, having borne their sins in his own body on the cross, divine justice will not exact a second payment, in requiring each to bear again the penalty of his own sins, as a reward after death. But the Lord's people are not reckoned as dead, nor under the power of death. They were dead, but are now (all that are manifested) made alive in Christ. "You hath he quickened, who were dead in trespasses and sins."—Eph. ii. 1. Their names are written in the Lamb's book of life.—Rev. iii. 5; xiii. 8; xxi. 27. Jesus said, "I am the resurrection and the life."—John xi. 25. And again it is said, "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection; on such the second death hath no power."—Rev. xx. 6. And, so lightly did the apostle esteem the power of death, that he called it a sleep. The saints experience the power of sin, reigning unto death in this life, as said the apostle, "I was alive without the law once; but when the commandment came, sin revived, and I died."—Rom. vii. 9. And they are made to acknowledge as just the judgment of God in their condemnation. But "The law [commandment] entered that the offense might abound. But where sin abounded, grace did much more abound; that as sin hath reigned unto death, even so might grace reign through righteousness unto eternal life by Jesus Christ our Lord." Thus we understand that some men's sins are open, going before to judgment, and others do follow after.

In the opinion of the unworthy writer, the "judgment seat of Christ" is in the hearts of his children. In regeneration the Spirit of God is given unto his children; for "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." This Spirit, as the only true teacher of divinity, takes of the things of Jesus and shows them unto us, and brings to our remembrance all things whatsoever he hath said.—Read John xiv. 16, 17, 26; xv. 26. By this Spirit is revealed to our understanding the judgments of God against sin, and against all unrighteousness; and there is fulfilled in us the word of the Lord unto David, "If his children forsake my law, and walk not in my judgments; if they break my statutes, and keep not my commandments; then will I visit their transgression with the rod, and their iniquity with stripes; nevertheless my loving-kindness will I not utterly take from him, nor suffer my faithfulness to fail."—Psa. lxxxix. 30-33. Thus in spirit, in feelings, we are brought before the judgment seat of Christ, and are made to feel the rod of of his chastisement. This chastisement is not an evidence of final condemnation, but is administered in love, and for our good. Every son he loveth he chasteneth.—Prov. xiii. 24. "My son, despise not thou the chastening of the Lord, nor faint when thou art rebuked of him; for whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth. If ye endure chastening, God dealeth with you as with sons; for what son is he whom the Father chasteneth not? But if ye be without chastisement, whereof all are partakers, then are ye bastards, and not sons. Furthermore, we have had fathers of our flesh which corrected us, and we gave them reverence: shall we not much rather be in subjection unto the Father of spirits, and live? For they verily for a few days chastened us after their own pleasure [or as seemed good or meet to them—Margin]; but he for our profit, that we might be partakers of his holiness. Now no chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous; nevertheless, afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteousness unto them which are exercised thereby."—Heb. xii. 5-11. Then let us return thanks unto God, from whom cometh down every good and every perfect gift, that it is thus with us; that we are made to appear before the judgment seat of Christ, and that we are rebuked and corrected for our sins; receiving in body according to that we have done, and are thus restrained from walking in an evil way and bringing a reproach upon the cause of our loving Master; are thus made to let our light shine that others seeing our good works may glorify our Father which is in heaven.

I have written the foregoing a little at a time, as I could find time from other duties, and feel like it is very imperfectly done; but such as it is I send it along; and if it is any benefit to you or others, all the praise is due to him who, I hope, has indited in my heart to write it.

Your unworthy brother and servant,

T. PETERSON, JR.

SOUTHAMPTON, Pa., April 7, 1891.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—I have been intending for some time to send you this letter for publication in the SIGNS. I need express no reason for wishing it published. The brethren will see reason enough. "Then they that feared the Lord spake often one to another." It is always "then" to the saints of God when the light of truth shines in their hearts.

SILAS H. DURAND.

BATH, Maine, Dec. 15, 1890.

ELDER S. H. DURAND—MY DEAR BROTHER:—This is the first day that I have been able to write since I sent my last letter to you. I have had a severe cold, but I hope the worst is over now. I have thought of many things that I would like to write about, but cannot recall them now. I was thinking to-day that I had written about all there was for me to say that would interest you, when all at once the word "Jesus" came into my mind, and I was filled. I felt as if I had written but very little concerning the goodness and love of God to me. My tongue and pen can never tell it so that I shall be able to say, That is all. The SIGNS has come, with my letters published, and I hope the brethren will enjoy reading them; and if they have some of the gladness in reading that I had in writing they will know that such joy does not spring from the flesh. I know I could not have written so easily if I had known that they would be published; but not having such a thought enter my heart

I felt a perfect freedom to express my thoughts and feelings to you with my pen, just as I would in private conversation. It seems to me as if I cannot wait patiently for my throat to get well, so that I can sing; but there is a sweet melody in my heart, and the words sound so clearly and distinctly, "The Lord hath triumphed gloriously." "Salvation is of the Lord." "O give thanks unto the Lord, for he is good: for his mercy endureth forever. Let the redeemed of the Lord say so, whom he hath redeemed from the hand of the enemy." How beautiful this is to my spiritual understanding! It lifts me above all the minor strains of earthly sorrows and afflictions, and the melody in my heart is to the Lord.

DEC. 18.—This is a stormy morning, and the trees look beautiful, being covered with ice. I would like to see you face to face, and speak of God's kingdom, which is an everlasting kingdom; but I shall have to use my pen. I have often enjoyed the one hundred and forty-fifth Psalm, and this morning it has come into my mind with wonderful sweetness and power; and I cannot help praising God, for it is within my heart. "Every day will I bless thee; and I will praise thy name forever and ever." I do desire to extol my God and my King, and to speak of his wondrous works; how he took on him the likeness of sinful flesh, and by one offering perfected forever them that are sanctified, and their sins and iniquities he will remember no more. "Sing, O ye heavens; for the Lord hath done it: shout, ye lower parts of the earth: break forth into singing, ye mountains, O forest, and every tree therein: for the Lord hath redeemed Jacob, and glorified himself in Israel." In almost every passage of Scripture the work of redemption shines forth, and I often wish I could speak and write of the beauties I see. I have enjoyed talking and writing to my brethren about these precious truths; but there is so much that I cannot express, it seems sometimes as if the more I write and talk the more it increases. This proverb came into my mind, "There is that scattereth, and yet increaseth; and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty."

It is now evening. To-day has passed away, never to return; but God changes not. Peter says, "But, beloved, be not ignorant of this one thing, that one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day." I have read your letter in the SIGNS, and it has been blessed of God to my comfort; for the "witness within" testified that I knew by experience what you wrote, and instead of finding only a crumb I have had a rich feast. I would thank you for writing the letter if I knew how; but I feel more of the spirit of prayer in my heart that the Lord will keep you, and make me worthy of your love and fellowship.

How blessed we are that we do have a throne of grace where we can come boldly, and find grace to help in time of need. It has been a sweet relief to me many times, when burdened with the spirit of prayer, to come boldly in the name of Jesus to this throne of grace; and I have also been filled with joy that is unspeakable when I have been visiting my brethren, and they have asked me to pray. I have knelt, feeling that I had not one word to say, when in an instant my mouth has been filled, and we could not help feeling the presence of the Lord with us. How precious such seasons are! I do not know but that the season has been just as precious when I have had to grope along, and could not seem to find any words; for it made me realize that I could do nothing without the Lord, and it took away my confidence in the flesh.

DEC. 19.—I cannot tell you of the beauties of nature this morning, with the sun shining on the ice-covered trees; but there is something that has been revealed to me that far outshines any beauty in nature. The rays of the sun will soon cause nature's beauty to be gone; but the revelation that I have had of Jesus has enabled me to say, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." It has not been done by flesh and blood, but is the work of God; and it is so glorious that it shines above the brightness of the sun. "All thy works shall praise thee, O Lord, and thy saints shall bless thee." My heart sings these words, and I shall be so glad when I can use my voice again.

"Jesus, thy blood and righteousness
My beauty are, my glorious dress."

"This spotless robe the same appears
When ruin'd nature sinks in years;
No age can change its glorious hue—
The robe of Christ is ever new."

I think, dear brother, that I enjoy the beauties of nature, and realize that God makes everything beautiful in its season; but when my mind is led to see Jesus as my Savior, my Redeemer, that I am "complete in him," it so fills me with joy that I want to write and talk about it all the time. I have been in prison, so that I could not tell whether I had seen Jesus, or had got to have a new experience, a brighter evidence that I had passed from death unto life. I traveled for some time, and was sad, because I had thought I was free from sin, being cleansed by his precious blood, and to see sin still in every thought and deed filled me with sadness; but since Jesus has walked and talked with me again, brought me out of prison, and prepared a table before me in the presence of my enemies, how unspeakable my joy has been!

DEC. 21.—My dear brother, I received a letter from sister Bessie yesterday, and I felt to thank God for his goodness to me, in giving me such a comforting letter from one whom I have never seen face to face. I know she could not have expressed the love and fellowship that she did unless she had gained an evidence that I have been taught of the Lord; and how small it makes me feel, and yet causes me to sing confidently, "Not unto us, O Lord, not unto us, but unto thy name give glory, for thy mercy, and for thy truth's sake." I received a few days ago two papers, published in Tennessee, and read about the debates they were going to have in Texas and Arkansas; and I could not help feeling glad that we have such a good paper as the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, free from such things, for the brethren Beebe do strive to feed the flock of God scattered here and there through the earth. I like brother Francis' letter, and am so glad that the doctrine of absolute predestination does not trouble us in Maine. We love it, and rejoice in it, too; and I hope that we shall be kept unmoved and settled as long as we remain in this world. I find that it is left on record for our comfort and instruction that many of Jesus' disciples went back, and walked no more with him, and he did not send any of the other disciples to call them back; and I cannot help feeling, when I read of the brethren going out from us because "absolute predestination" is such a hard saying, that God still rules and reigns, and will not suffer his faithfulness to fail. There is no other to whom we can go, for Jesus only has the words of eternal life. What a great blessing to be firmly established in the truth! It seems to me as if I see more and more every day the innumerable blessings which God bestows upon me.

"Jesus is precious, saith the word;
What comfort doth this truth afford!
And those who in his name believe
With joy this precious truth receive."

I hope that you and your family are all in usual health. We all send love and fellowship, and wish you a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year. I hope this letter will not so weary you that you will not want to hear from me again. It will reach you near Christmas; and if you feel like it you may call it a present from me, as I have nothing else to send you. May God lead our minds into the truth, is the desire of your unworthy sister,

ATTIE A. CURTIS.

PINSON FORK, Ky., Feb. 24, 1891.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—Your highly-prized paper, the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, is at hand. It came some time since, and received a hearty welcome from us, I assure you. Also, we have received some of the back numbers. We have read them carefully; and if there is so much as one objectionable sentiment in them I have thus far failed to notice it. It is to us as an acquaintance returned from a long journey. Its appearance filled our hearts with joy, and its tidings were as "good news from a far country."

Dear brethren, I am a poor scholar, and cannot write in proper order for the press; but I have concluded to write a few lines, and hope you will give them room in some nook or corner of your precious paper; not for their importance, but in order that I may form some acquaintance with the many and able correspondents and readers generally, as I know of no better way of forming acquaintance with them. My writings are all that they will need to manifest my weakness, and my great need and interest in their prayers, of which I hope in the future to share when it goes well with you, my brethren. The SIGNS OF THE TIMES is the only periodical that I have any knowledge of which does maintain that grand and glorious doctrine, the eternal vital unity and relationship of Christ and his church, and the absolute predestination of all things; which points of doctrine are heart-thrilling and soul-cheering to me, the Lord doth know, although I am well aware that there are many of God's dear children who do not from some cause appreciate those sacred points. I say sacred points, because without them, as you said in your few lines to me, brother Beebe, I see no salvation nor redemption. It seems to me that redemption is based upon relationship and a pre-existing right, &c. "Ye are bought with a price," &c. They are redeemed out of the hands of divine justice, and ransomed from the bondage of sin and Satan, by the blood of Christ; not in order to make them his people, but because they are his people, bone of his bones and flesh of his flesh. Paul says that Jesus has "obtained eternal redemption for us," or because of us. Then the elect of God are the poor kindred of Christ, their elder Brother and near kinsman, and he is their rich Brother. The Sanctifier and the sanctified are "all of one; for which cause he is not ashamed to call them brethren."

Yours to serve,

W. J. MAY.

LEBANON, Ohio, Feb. 21, 1891.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—I will send you two dollars to renew my subscription for our dear family paper, the SIGNS, for another year, feeling that I cannot do without it, for it is a dear paper to me, and has been in our family so long. My father (Nathan Clark) took it from my earliest recollection, and I have often seen him read it with the tears rolling down his cheeks. He took it almost as long as he lived, and since that my dear and only brother, Wilson T. Clark, has had it sent to me for some time. I have had many sweet hours in reading the precious letters of the dear brethren and sisters. O how my heart has gone out in love to them! for they have sometimes told my feelings better than I could myself. As I have not been able to get to meeting for more than a year, I have had many a good sermon out of the SIGNS. The dear Lord often meets with us at home, and blesses us with spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ Jesus. His visits are sweet, let us be where we may. Even prisons would prove if Jesus dwelt with us there; but when he withdraws himself "all is dark and vain and wild." Truly the Lord God is a sun and shield, and he will never forsake his people. Though for a small moment he hide his face, yet with great mercies he will gather them. O what a kind Savior! He is worthy of our highest adoration and praise. His love and faithfulness to his people is great. Blessed are the people whose God is the Lord. I feel like a poor sinner saved by grace alone; and I hope that whereas I was blind, now I see. O matchless grace, that gave my soul a hiding place! O that I could praise him more for what I hope he has done for me, a poor sinner; but Paul's complaint is mine, for when I would do good, evil is present with me, so that I cannot do the things that I would. But, blessed be God, black as we look to ourselves, he calls us all fair, and says, "There is no spot in thee."

Now, dear editors, may grace, mercy and peace be with you all from God the Father and our Lord Jesus Christ. Do with what I have written as you think best.

From your unworthy sister,
AMANDA M. BOWEN.

SCHUYLER, Neb., March 25, 1891.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—If one so unworthy as I feel myself to be may presume to thus address you. Having read the "Supplement" attached to the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, which I received to-day, I will inform you without farther delay that I cannot renew my subscription at present, although I would like very much to be able to do so. I am in very poor circumstances, and also in poor health, and I cannot ask you to send the SIGNS to me unless I could see some way ahead in which I could pay for them; and I do not at present. But I cannot tell you how much I shall miss it. It has been a great comfort to me in the past year, and I have eagerly looked forward each succeeding week for its coming; for it was like manna to the hungry soul, the many good letters from the dear brethren and sisters from all parts of the United States. How my heart goes out in sympathy for those who write of their great sorrows and troubles of life; for I am one of those whom sorrow seems to have marked for her own, and oftentimes feel to cry out with David, "All thy waves and thy billows have gone over me." Yet all my trust is in him who was "a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief;" for he hath borne our sins, and carried our sorrows; and, like as a father pitieth his children, so pitieth he them that fear him. For he knoweth our frame; he remembereth that we are dust.

I am a firm believer in God's "absolute predestination of all things," and I find more comfort in that belief than any thing that this life can afford, knowing that "all things work together for good to them that love God," whether those things be good or evil; and it is this that gives us that peace which the world can neither give nor take away. But I do not wish to take up your valuable time in reading my poor scribble. May the Lord long spare you, and give you wisdom to wield "The sword of the Lord and of Gideon," is the prayer of one of the weakest, most unworthy, and least of all.

DE KALB, Mo., Feb. 5, 1891.

GILBERT BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR FRIENDS:—I can only address you as friends, as I belong to no so-called denomination of religious professors. There are many of them in the section where I live, who teach for doctrines the commandments of men; but such preaching is no food for me, an old, hard-hearted sinner. I know I can be saved only by the grace and power of God. I have been a reader of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES about forty years. I read them while living in Kentucky, and have been a subscriber here in Missouri for thirty-six years. I will be seventy-six years old next month. While living in Kentucky, my wife was a member of the Old School Baptist Church, and I would go with her to attend their meetings, but did not like the doctrine of predestination. When I went home after hearing it preached, I would examine the Bible, and find it confirmed by the inspired testimony. Thus I became a believer in the doctrine of God, which is so ably defended in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. I cannot do without it, as it contains all the preaching I receive. Inclosed please find the money for my own renewal of subscription and for one new subscriber.

Please give your views on Matt. viii. 12. Wishing you to live long, and to be enabled to continue to wield "The sword of the Lord and of Gideon," I am, your old friend,

JOHN S. HANNON.

EXPIRATION OF ONE DOLLAR SUBSCRIPTIONS.

WITH each issue of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES a number of subscriptions expire of those who were placed on our list last year at one dollar. We have supplied them the paper at an actual loss, and cannot afford to continue them long over time on an uncertainty of their renewing at regular rates. Please look to your date, and if your time is out renew immediately, or we shall be obliged to discontinue your name. If you are not now prepared to send the money, but would like to have your subscription continued, if you will so inform us we will continue your paper, and wait a reasonable time or the pay.

THE CHILDREN CAST OUT.

"AND I say unto you, That many shall come from the east and west, and shall sit down with Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, in the kingdom of heaven; but the children of the kingdom shall be cast out into outer darkness: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth."—Matt. viii. 11, 12.

According to the request of our old friend and patron, John S. Hannon, in his letter on this page, we submit for the consideration of our readers some thoughts in connection with the text above quoted. The verse preceding that which he designates is so closely connected with it that the subject cannot properly be divided; therefore both verses are included in our text.

"And I say unto you." This impressive expression with which our Lord so often prefaced his solemn declarations, is worthy of careful attention. Jesus never uttered vain words, but in every case when he spoke there was essential truth in his saying, and it was specially appropriate to the occasion, and suited to the character to whom it was addressed. On this occasion he spoke to his followers concerning the great faith which was exhibited in a military officer, a centurion, who had acknowledged himself not worthy that the Lord should come under his roof, yet who was fully assured that at the word of Jesus his dear servant would be healed of the palsy which had brought him so low that he was ready to die. After saying that he had not found so great faith in the favored nation of Israel, Jesus spoke the words of our text. It is intimated that this centurion was not even a proselyte to Judaism. To finite intelligence, and especially to those who had never thought that the favor of God could extend to any but the natural seed of Abraham, it was incredible that any gift of the Spirit could be bestowed upon one who was not of that nation, much less upon one who was an officer of the army by whom they were held in subjection. This saying was not addressed to the centurion, but to them that followed Jesus. It may well be reverently considered by all his followers even in our day.

"That many shall come from the east and west, and shall sit down with Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, in the kingdom of heaven." This announcement was doubtless very astonishing to the followers of our Lord who were educated in the traditions of the Jew, and considered their descent from the patriarchs as entitling them to divine favor. All the "kingdom of heaven" of which they had any conception was that natural kingdom of which they were members by reason of their lineal descent from the fathers named by our Lord. On this ground the Pharisees and Sadducees demanded baptism at the hands of John the Baptist. They could not understand his rejection of them, and his declaration that "God is able of these stones to raise up children unto Abraham." The same truth is in our text spoken by Jesus. The legal dispensation was in a typical sense denominated the kingdom of heaven; but John proclaimed the antitypical kingdom as at hand. It is in this kingdom that those who come from the east and west shall sit down. As children of God by faith, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob rested in the true kingdom of heaven, and all the election of grace among the Gentiles shall be gathered from the east and west, and shall sit down with them in that spiritual kingdom, there resting together in the assurance of hope in the salvation which is in Christ Jesus. This spiritual kingdom of heaven is not confined to any earthly locality, nor is it limited to natural time. Where Jesus is pleased to reveal himself by his Spirit, his kingdom is established in that display of his presence. There all the subjects of his electing love sit together in heavenly rest. Neither the circumcision by which the Jews were identified, nor the uncircumcision of the Gentiles, is of any avail in this everlasting kingdom. Every sinner who is called by grace is by that holy calling sealed as a subject of salvation by the grace of our heavenly King. In the perfect fellowship and love of brethren, they all sit together with the patriarchs, apostles and prophets, who are saved by the very same divine grace by which the most sinful Gentile is translated into this everlasting kingdom of the dear Son of God. These are the many of whom our Lord says that they shall come from the east and the west. He declares that "All that the Father giveth me shall come to me; and him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out." And that no others shall come is equally certain; for Jesus says in the same discourse, "No man can come to me, except the Father which hath sent me draw him; and I will raise him up at the last day."—John vi. 37, 44. This is the exact and definite number of the election of grace. The everlasting salvation of every one of them is secured by the power and truth of God. Neither their good works nor their sins and unbelief can affect the absolute certainty of the accomplishment of the eternal purpose which God purposed in Christ Jesus our Lord. No circumstance which ever can occur in time can disappoint the eternal will of God.

By the expression "the kingdom of heaven," we understand our Lord to speak of the gospel kingdom, as it was about to be set up after the legal dispensation should be taken out of the way in its complete fulfillment by his own obedience unto death. While it is true that the chosen subjects of divine grace shall certainly awake in the likeness of their glorified Redeemer in the inconceivable bliss of ultimate glory, it is not of that blessed state that Jesus was speaking in our text. He was soon to remove those old heavens and earth which had been ordained of God as "figures of the true." By divine appointment the legal covenant was the "kingdom of heaven" in the figure, as given by Moses to the chosen nation of Israel. But it never was designed to represent the heaven of immortal glory. Throughout all that dispensation, conflicts, oppression and distress attended that nation. Surely nothing in the eternal bliss of heaven could be the antitype of such sufferings. But in the gospel day, while the saints are blessed with the revelation of eternal salvation secured by the glorious victory of our Redeemer, they are yet subject to tribulation, which is truly depicted in the perpetual afflictions endured by the typical Israel. By faith alone can this be seen as the "kingdom of heaven." Reason fails to recognize the indications of the love of God in the sufferings of the saints, as it can see no divine favor to national Israel in the severe judgments visited upon them continually for such transgressions as were unpunished when committed by the heathen nations around them. Faith reads the experience of the saints in the word of the Lord to the children of Israel, "You only have I known of all the families of the earth; therefore I will punish you for all your iniquities."—Amos iii. 2. So, under the gospel dispensation it is written, "My son, despise not thou the chastening of the Lord, nor faint when thou art rebuked of him; for whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth. If ye endure chastening, God dealeth with you as with sons; for what son is he whom the father chasteneth not? But if ye be without chastisement, whereof all are partakers, then are ye bastards, and not sons."—Heb. xii. 5-8. As God punished the nation of Israel for disobedience to the covenant which he had given them, so he visits his children under the gospel covenant with his rod in all their departures from his holy commandments. Thus the gospel dispensation is the "kingdom of heaven" in which all the types of the Mosaic economy are fulfilled. Surely no believer in Jesus can expect in the world of glory to be subject to suffering from sin, or from the enemies of righteousness, as typified by the chastening visited upon the nation of Israel under the former heaven of Judaism. The "kingdom of heaven" was established when the apostles were endued with power from on high by the gift of the Holy Ghost on the day of Pentecost, as Jesus had declared. "For the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father with his angels; and then shall he reward every man according to his works. Verily I say unto you, There be some standing here, which shall not taste of death, till they see the Son of man coming in his kingdom."—Matt. xvi. 27, 28. Certainly he reigns in the "kingdom of heaven," and his power and great glory appeared when the apostles were filled with the Holy Ghost. That was indeed a baptism, since "it filled all the house where they were sitting."—Acts ii. 2. Thus they were amply qualified to testify to the exaltation of their risen Redeemer.

"But the children of the kingdom shall be cast out into outer darkness." As has already been stated, it is important to observe the difference between the typical and the true "kingdom of heaven," both of which are mentioned in this expression. Of the typical kingdom every natural Israelite was recognized as a child. All their claims to the favor of God were based upon their fleshly descent from Abraham. Thus they are called in the text "the children of the kingdom." Since this claim is rejected in the true gospel "kingdom of heaven," these children of the natural kingdom are cast out. The outer darkness into which they are cast signifies the utter hopelessness of their reliance upon their descent from Abraham as entitling them to entrance into the gospel "kingdom of heaven." So intense is that darkness into which the children of that legal kingdom are cast, that they are not even able to see that they are utterly destitute of light. Therefore, "They being ignorant of God's righteousness, and going about to establish their own righteousness, have not submitted themselves unto the righteousness of God."—Rom. x. 3. This manifestation of the grace of God to the Gentiles was predicted in the words of inspired prophecy, when the Lord said to his chosen Zion, "Arise, shine; for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee. For, behold, the darkness shall cover the earth, and gross darkness the people; but the Lord shall arise upon thee, and his glory shall be seen upon thee. And the Gentiles shall come to thy light, and kings to the brightness of thy rising."—Isa. lx. 1-3. When the typical kingdom was taken away from the nation of Israel in the establishment of the gospel kingdom of heaven, at the coming of our Lord "in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory," this prophecy was fulfilled. All the inspired testimony of the law and the prophets united in constituting those clouds in which he was revealed. Yet none of those who trusted in the deeds of that law could see him in those clouds. So Jesus told the chief priests and pharisees, the representatives of that literal nation, "The kingdom of God shall be taken from you, and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof."—Matt. xxi. 43. As the children of that legal kingdom, they had no place in the kingdom of heaven which our Lord was about to establish. All their claims to divine favor were to perish with the removal of that old heaven and earth of Judaism in which they had hitherto trusted. Then they must be cast out into that outer darkness which covered the Gentile world. The much advantage every way, which they had formerly possessed, should no longer distinguish them as the chosen nation of God.

"There shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth." There is a very wide difference between the weeping which is accompanied with the gnashing of teeth, as here specified by our Lord, and that weeping which is so often in the Scriptures mentioned as one of the characteristic peculiarities of the saints. In every instance where we have observed, where the gnashing of teeth is spoken of, it is an indication of impotent rage; and the weeping which attends it is but the result of bitter hatred against that God whose omnipotence restrains the wickedness which fills the hearts of those who thus rage against him. If this expression is ever used in reference to any subject of grace, it is descriptive of that carnal enmity against God which works in their evil nature. They feel its power as oppressive, and long for deliverance from its heavy bondage, even though they are unable to escape from its distressing tyranny. The weeping of those who mourn on account of their sinful and vile nature, is not mingled with rage; it is the effect of a broken heart and a contrite spirit. For the comfort of such it is written, "The Lord is nigh unto them that are of a broken heart; and saveth such as be of a contrite spirit."—Ps. xxxiv. 18. While the weeping of contrition is peculiar to the subjects of divine grace, that weeping which results from defeated wrath is not an indication of the presence of the Spirit of Christ. To those who are enlightened by the grace of God, this distinction is clear. It may be that even the saints may sometimes think they are mourning, when in reality it is only the old carnal mind that is enraged. But that rage always shows itself in the hateful spirit of the "gnashing of teeth." True mourning never is accompanied by this proud and wrathful feeling. The saints have need of constant watching and prayer that they be not deceived in this matter. The weeping and gnashing of teeth which was appointed to those self-righteous Jews was the selfish bitterness and rage which controlled them in the destruction of that natural kingdom in which they trusted. The terrible overthrow of that nation was indeed attended with such horrors as were unknown to any other people. The strong language of our text was literally fulfilled when they were forever cast out from the highly favored kingdom wherein was all their trust and pride. Both the bitterness of weeping and the powerless rage of the gnashing of teeth were fully realized when they were cast out of that kingdom.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, }
CENSUS OFFICE. }
PLAINFIELD, N. J., April 25, 1891. }

ELDER GILBERT BEEBE'S SONS—
DEAR SIR:—I am anxious to procure a full list of the names of the Primitive Baptist Associations in the States of Alabama, Georgia and New York, together with the names and addresses of the Clerks or Moderators thereof. If you will kindly send me a list of all that you know of in those States I shall feel very grateful to you, as I am desirous of having the returns for the Church Census as full and complete as possible. I inclose addressed envelope for reply, no postage thereon being necessary.

Yours respectfully,

H. K. CARROLL,
Special Agent Eleventh Census.

THE above is an official document of the United States Government, and so far as the brethren of the above-named States will interest themselves in sending us copies of the Minutes of their last associations we will endeavor to have them represented in the census; but what is done must be done immediately.—

MARRIAGES.

ON March 10th, 1891, by Elder Wm. J. Purington, at the residence of the bride's parents, Mr. Ferdinand L. Behre and Miss Almeda L. Hunt, both of Hopewell, N. J.

ON April 23d, 1891, by the same, at his residence in Hopewell, Deacon Elisha H. Drake, of East Amwell, and Miss Martha E. Blackwell, of Hopewell, both of N. J.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

DIED—In North Berwick, Maine, April 16th, 1891, sister Hannah Roberts, aged nearly 81 years.

She had a paralytic shock, which caused her to suffer until death came to her relief, which was about ten days. I baptized her in the fellowship of the Primitive Baptist Church of this place in the year 1850, and she remained a worthy member until she died. For some years her health was such that she did not get out to her meetings, but she remained firm in her belief that the children of God are saved by grace from first to last. She has left six children, two brothers and many other relatives to mourn. A large number of people were at her funeral.

WM. QUINT.

NORTH BERWICK, Maine.

AT the request of our aged sister, Polly Long, I send for publication in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES a notice of the death of her dear companion and our beloved brother, Lunsford Long, which occurred Dec. 23d, 1890, after a lingering illness of bronchitis.

The subject of this notice was born in the state of Virginia, in the month of September, 1822, and came to Anderson Co., Ky., when quite young, where he remained until his death. Brother Long, if we are correctly informed, united with the church called Pigeon-Fork some time in 1842, before the separation of the Baptists took place. After that occurrence he became dissatisfied with some of the proceedings of that church, and came to Little Flock Church, where he remained a consistent member until his death. He was chosen Deacon soon after uniting with the church at Little Flock, which office he filled to the satisfaction of all the brethren as long as he was able to meet with them. It was the privilege of the writer of this notice to be with him quite often during his last days, and I can truly say that I have never seen any one that seemed to be more reconciled to the will of his heavenly Father than he, nor one who was more devoted to the cause of our Redeemer. But the Lord has seen fit to take him to himself, while his dear companion has lost a kind and affectionate husband, his children a loving father, his two sisters a devoted brother, the neighborhood one of her best citizens, and the church a noble member, one worthy of imitation by us all. May the Lord reconcile us all to his divine will, is the desire of the unworthy writer, knowing that our loss is his eternal gain.

An able discourse was preached on the fourth Sunday in April, 1891, by Elder P. G. Lester, from a portion of the fifteenth chapter of 1 Corinthians, followed by Elder J. G. Sawin with a few comforting remarks, to a large congregation of sorrowing friends.

A. G. HERNDON.

ALTON STATION, Ky., April 28, 1891.

My sister, Mrs. Annie Broach, departed this life at the residence of her husband, in Walton Co., March 24th, aged about 35 years.

She obtained a hope in Christ when young, and was baptized in the fellowship of the Old School Baptist Church at Shoal Creek, by Elder J. G. Eubanks, June 21st, 1879, where she continued a faithful and devoted member, sound in the doctrine of the sovereignty of God in all things. She was married to Mr. Wm. Broach Oct. 17th, 1889, a friend to the Old School Baptists. On the 23d of last February three little girls were born to her. Her health had been poor all the year, and she believed that she would not live long. She often talked to the writer and others about dying, both before and after she was sick, and said it was better for her to die and be with Jesus than to live. She was sick nearly five weeks, and her sufferings were intense, so much so that she was delirious at times; but she bore them with patience and fortitude, showing in her sweet and expressive face the submission and resignation to the Master's will. It would beam at times as if she saw heaven open. Her countenance looked bright and lovely, and truly she had many tokens of his love. She tried to sing his praises often, but was too weak to sing audibly a great deal. The last she was heard to sing, a short time before she died, was the verse,

"Dear dying Lamb, thy precious blood
Shall never lose its power
Till all the ransomed church of God
Be saved, to sin no more."

She passed away as one going to sleep, without a struggle, and was brought back to her childhood home and buried in the family burying-ground by our father and mother, our father, Green H. Dodson, having preceded her one year last September.

In this dispensation of the Lord her husband and family, her five sisters and one brother, and many other relatives and friends, have truly sustained a great loss, for she was a devoted wife and mother, and all that was lovely in a sister.

"Dearest sister, thou hast left us,
And our loss we deeply feel;
But 'tis God that has bereft us—
He can all our sorrows heal."

There was no funeral sermon preached. Elder William Adams was sent for, but failed to come on account of the inclemency of the weather and ill health; but there was a goodly number in attendance, notwithstanding. May the Lord comfort the bereaved.

SUSIE C. DODSON.

WINTON, Ga., April 27, 1891.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—In the month of February I was attacked with "La Grippe," which was attended by sore and wandering pains in my chest, until late in March; but during that time I was able to fill my place in the Constitutional Convention. By the use of iodine externally I was partially relieved until late in March, when inflammation set up in the left side of my neck, and then those pains subsided. That inflammation increased rapidly and became intensely painful. From Saturday until the next Wednesday, April 1st, I was in an agony of pain. Being somewhat relieved on Wednesday, I prepared to go home. By the very great kindness of many of my brother delegates I was enabled to reach home Thursday night. By soothing poultices my sufferings were to some extent removed on Friday, the 3d; but O how sad! In the evening I received a dispatch from Carrollton, saying that Mrs. Cox, and her son, William Cox, had died within thirty minutes of each other, of "La Grippe," followed by pneumonia, in that town.

She was born June 2d, 1820, and was married in September, 1836, to my brother, Benjamin F. Cox, who was a prominent citizen of his native county. They united with the Baptist Church in the spring of 1839, before the division among the Baptists in this part of Kentucky; but soon the leaven of modern Missionism began to work, and the ancient order of the Baptists began to be disregarded by many who had hitherto maintained the doctrine of the sovereignty of God in the great affairs of the salvation of his people. My brother and sister then became alarmed at those innovations, and took letters of dismission from that body, which they believed were denying that God worketh all things after the counsel of his own will, and they united with the Old School Baptists, of which they continued members until 1858, when my brother was called away by death; but he died as he had lived, in the triumphs of that faith which is alone the gift of God. Our dear sister was left prostrate with typhoid fever, the disease with which he had died, from which she slowly recovered, to assume the great responsibility of training for the affairs of life five children. No mother ever assumed a responsibility with a more steady hand and devoted heart. She was blessed by living to see all her children settled around her; but her youngest son was called away within thirty minutes of her departure. He left a widow and one child to buffet the rough billows of time without a husband's aid and a father's care; but he left them with the blessed assurance that he was passing from the cares, sorrows and afflictions of a sin-cursed world, to enter upon the eternal rest of the sainted host that had gone before him. Our dear departed sister, amid all the cares and sorrows of earth, was blessed with an abiding faith in the finished work of our glorious Lord. In that faith she lived, and in that faith she bade adieu to all the fading glories of a vain world. She said to me more than once, "I go with my children to meeting; but I enjoy more comfort by reading a single number of the SIGNS than I do from all the preaching I hear in a whole year." When I would attend our associations she would wait anxiously for me to visit her, and preach over to her, in my feeble way, the glorious truth of the gospel which I had heard at those rich spiritual feasts of the saints. Sometimes she would say, at the close of those long and happy conversations, "Well, Hez., I ought not to murmur, because I cannot attend those meetings, for you can bring and spread before me the rich treasures of gospel truth that you have heard." But peace to her memory. She has left to us the glorious assurance of a blessed immortality beyond these dark shades of earth.

My health is slowly improving.

ASSOCIATIONAL.

THE Baltimore Old School Baptist Association is appointed to be held with the Ebenezer Church, in the city of Baltimore, Md., to begin on Wednesday before the fourth Sunday in May (20th), 1891, and continue three days.

A cordial invitation is extended to all who desire to meet with us at that time. All who may reach Baltimore on Tuesday will call at Dr. John Thorne's, 709 North Calvert St., where they will be directed to homes. All who come on Wednesday will go direct to the meeting-house, corner of Calvert and Madison Sts., where the association will be in session.

THE Delaware Old School Baptist Association is appointed to be held with the London Tract Church, Chester Co., Pa., to begin on Wednesday before the fifth Sunday in May (27th), 1891, and continue three days.

THE Delaware River Old School Baptist Association is appointed to be held with the church at Southampton, Bucks Co., Pa., to begin on Wednesday before the first Sunday in June (3d), 1891, and continue three days.

THE Warwick Old School Baptist Association is appointed to be held with the church at Warwick, Orange Co., N. Y., to begin on Wednesday before the second Sunday in June (10th), 1891, and continue three days.

THE Chemung Old School Baptist Association is appointed to be held with the Abbington Church, at Justus, Lackawanna Co., Pa., to begin on Wednesday before the third Sunday in June (17th), 1891, and continue three days.

THREE DAYS MEETINGS.

THE Old Regular Predestinarian Baptist Church at Little Flock, Cass Co., Mo., six miles south of Pleasant Hill and four miles north of Harrisonville, will hold a three days meeting, beginning at four o'clock on Friday evening, May 29th, and continuing until four o'clock Sunday evening, May 31st. Elders R. M. Ogle and John Barnes, of Henry Co., Mo., have promised to be with us. Brethren who love the truth are cordially invited to attend this meeting. We are Predestinarians at Little Flock. There are not very many of us, but we are a unit in the doctrine of salvation by grace alone.

W. R. STORMS.

If the Lord will, there will be a three days meeting with the Broad Run Church, Md., beginning on Saturday before the third Sunday in May, 1891. We extend a cordial invitation to all lovers of the truth, especially ministering brethren, to attend.

It is desirable that all shall come on the Friday evening train, Metropolitan Branch of the B. & O. R. R., which leaves Washington about four o'clock, and reaches Barnesville about six o'clock, where all will be met and conveyed to places of entertainment.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date, this date denotes the time at which your subscription expires, and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

THE EVERLASTING TASK FOR ARMINIANS.

By Elder William Gadsby, late of Manchester, England. We have republished a large edition of the above named very interesting and instructing pamphlet. Many thousands of copies have been scattered through England and America, and read with intense interest by the lovers of the truth, and still the demand has increased to such a degree as to induce us to present to the public this edition which we will send (postage paid by us) to any post-office address in the United States or Canada, at the following rates, viz: a single copy for 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00; 25 copies for $2.00; 50 copies for $3.00; 100 copies for $5.00.

At these low terms the cash must in all cases accompany the orders. Address in all our afflictions is afflicted. See the emblem of the bush that burned and was not consumed. Does he not speak to us when under affliction? It is a sweet time when God speaks to us out of the bush, at a time that destruction seems to be certain. Then it is that he speaks to us out of our environment, and makes a way for our escape. David said, "God is in the midst of her; she shall not be moved: God shall help her, and that right early." This is what we hope for, but have often to cry, O that it were with me as in months past, when he spoke out of the bush! The Lord has said, "I will put my fear in their hearts, that they shall not depart from me." You are blessed if you feel your sins. The poor soul feels a desire to please God, and often prays that the thorn in his flesh may be taken away. But no; you were chosen in the furnace of affliction, to there learn your defilement; and often, like Job, when ordering your steps, before you are aware you are plunged into the ditch, and your own clothes abhor you. Those who know not God have no sorrow, nor are they in a strange land. The prophet says to him "that walketh in darkness, and hath no light, let him trust in the name of the Lord, and stay upon his God." Yes, for he who has declared will deliver. Hang on his promises. He will perform for you all that he has caused you to hope for. If it tarry, wait for it. The trouble may be to ~~that one feels so vile~~ that he is unable to speak of it. As Job said, "My words are swallowed up. For the arrows of the Almighty are within me, the poison whereof drinketh up my spirit: the terrors of God do set themselves in array against me." This man needs help. Hear the Lord, who says, "To this man will I look, even to him that is poor, and of a contrite spirit, and trembleth at my word." There is a want that no mortal can give. Job said, "Doth the wild ass bray when he hath grass? or loweth the ox over his fodder?" Here is portrayed by the Spirit of truth the experience of those who have this fear and this secret. The Lord satisfieth the desire of every living thing, and prepareth them food in due season. Shall he not feed you, and satisfy your desire after righteousness? He will; for he gave you that fear and that desire. The poor soul has been looking to self for the evidence of justification, by legal attainments, which have all failed to bring peace. Thus he is become dead, or separated from all hope of salvation by the deeds of the law, or of the gospel, in a legal sense; but he is justified by the faith of the Son of God. Christ lives in and is the light of all his children. He is the soul of the poor sinner's soul. So by faith (inward teaching) he reveals to me his secret and his covenant; that he loved me before the world was, and gave his Son to be a sacrifice unto death in my stead. This is brought home with power, and in demonstration of the Spirit, which all the children enjoy through their union with their Head. "We are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them." Our Lord draws a line of distinction between the living and the dead by saying, "Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness; for they shall be filled." This is one of the great blessings that he grants us, that we may hunger and thirst after righteousness, and thus be filled with holy desires. Christ is revealed as our righteousness; but it does not come in our way, but in his way. He is teaching us humility, by instructing us of our defilement, out of his law; for by the law is the knowledge of sin. Do I hear one say that the law is done away? A bill of lading in commerce describes the goods shipped, and they are received and examined by it, for it describes the goods; and we expect the goods to tally with the bill of lading. The law is God's word, and his word is his will. Has the man the law written in his heart? That letter calls for love to God and his neighbor, and to rest in Christ, the great sabbath of the saints. This does not deliver us from inbred sin, but shows it to us by the Spirit; so that it is not in the letter of the law only, but in the demonstration of the Spirit, convincing of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment. Hence we find our sins as so many nails, nailing us to the cross, and so we find that we are crucified with Christ; yes, we suffer on account of sin, and are like our Lord. We pray that this cup may pass. That Christ was tempted does not drag him down from his holiness. His suffering was that of our humanity, and thus he knows how to succor them that are tempted. His temptations give a meaning to the struggle of the christian's life. We see the meaning of temptations, besetments, obstacles and hindrances. As temper is given to steel by heat and cold, or fire and water, so character can only be made (like our Lord's) through suffering. Can we welcome it? No; yet it is the only royal road that leads us from weakness to strength. This is the King's highway to holiness and heaven, to feel our poverty, and the need of Christ as a present help in time of need. A soldier must learn war in conflict. But we are so prone to look to self; yes, to turn again to the beggarly elements of the law to be just with God, and not to that everlasting covenant spoken of by Zechariah. "As for thee also, by the blood of thy covenant I have sent forth thy prisoners out of the pit wherein is no water. Turn you to the stronghold, ye prisoners of hope," even to our Lord Jesus Christ, that great Shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of the everlasting covenant, who bore our sins in his own body on the tree; for we were chosen in him, and not in Adam, nor in ourselves.

He paid the penalty of death due by his body, the church; and its application to us by faith is said to be the righteousness of God by faith. So we stand by faith in God's righteousness, wherein the suffering of Christ is imputed unto us; for when on the cross he was in union with us, and now by his Spirit dwelling in us we are in union with him. Isaiah says, "The mountains shall depart, and the hills be removed; but my kindness shall not depart from thee, neither shall the covenant of my peace be removed, saith the Lord that hath mercy on thee."—Isa. liv. 10. He gives not peace without design, nor forms the design without bringing it to an end. And as he made an everlasting covenant in the garden, ordered in all things and sure, and confirmed it to the poor sons and daughters of Adam who have felt their sins, that the seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head, yes, the reign of sin in us; and that now grace reigns through righteousness, through our Lord Jesus Christ, even the righteousness of God through faith, through being led of the Spirit. We have no other refuge; for the Lord has stripped us of our legal righteousness, and has brought us to Christ. Yes, the law has been our school master unto Christ. We have been shut up under the law, that we might learn our depravity; so that now we have to say,

"Nothing in my hand I bring;
Simply to thy cross I cling."

We cannot go back to Sinai again; no, but we have to hang on the promises.

"They that feared the Lord spake often one to another: and the Lord hearkened, and heard it, and a book of remembrance was written before him for them that feared the Lord, and that thought upon his name." If I have time I may write upon the covenant that the Lord will show them that fear him.

I remain your brother in hope,
JOHN THORNE.

"I REMEMBERED."

Psalm lxxvii. 3.

DEAR KINDRED IN THE GOSPEL OF CHRIST JESUS OUR LORD:—To relieve my mind I take my pen in hand to write a few lines. I have been for a few days musing much over the dealings of the Lord with a poor sinner like me. As I review the pathway, look over the varied scenes, here and there an episode, what a poor, insignificant one I feel I have been, a vile, ungrateful sinner all the journey. As I remember some special seasons I am constrained to confess, Surely the Lord did show himself marvelous in his mercy and sustaining grace to my soul. Then, over against this, I have remembrances of the wormwood and the gall; nor can I forget the bitter ingredients that it hath pleased our heavenly Father to mingle in my cup. Such vicissitudes pass in review before my mind that alternate hopes and fears prevail. I find myself unable by any mental effort to decide my own case; but as one that is wearied, overtaxed, discouraged, ready to give up, I would cast my helpless soul on the dear Lamb of God.

"Leave, ah, leave me not alone!
Still support and comfort me!
All my trust on thee is stay'd,
All my help from thee I bring;
Cover my defenseless head
With the shadow of thy wing."

The other day, while reading the seventy-seventh Psalm, I found, as I hope, some comfort and instruction from the Lord therein. What first stirred up my thoughts were the words, "I remembered God, and was troubled: I complained, and my spirit was overwhelmed." Or ever I was aware I too began remembering my God, and was troubled indeed. I feel that I have been (to my shame I confess it) so oft unmindful and forgetful of God. For so long a time I have been remembering all the miseries, crosses and difficulties that have been my lot hitherto; and all these remembrances, like so many weights, have so accumulated that under the pressure of them I have well nigh been crushed to death. Yes, I have "despaired of life." I judged it was useless to entertain any further hope. Unbelief said, What other interpretation can be put upon God's providences? Surely I have been walking in delusion; I have been mistaken. "I remembered God." What a succession of changes my soul underwent! I felt ashamed of my murmurings and departures from God, the Fountain of living waters. I "was troubled." Yet I felt hope reviving, gleams of comfort that seemed to break through as it were a rift in the dark and threatening cloud, which entered my heart. I said to myself, I have been observing lying vanities, and have thus forsaken mine own mercy.—Jonah ii. 8. Jonah says, "When my soul fainted within me I remembered the Lord: and my prayer came in unto thee, into thine holy temple." "I remembered God." I thought of his character and his attributes, especially his immutability.—Heb. vi. 17. Our God is without variable-ness or shadow of turning.—James i. 17. "He is in one mind, and who can turn him? and what his soul desireth, even that he doeth. For he performeth the thing that is appointed for me: and many such things are with him."—Job xxiii. 13, 14. I have been oft fickle-minded, swayed to and fro by circumstances. For weeks and months I witnessed new straits attending my way, so that I have oft been at my wits' end; but surely I must and do confess that my cup has not been unmingled with at least some drops of tender compassion from my God. I have cried, "Changes and war are against me."—Job x. 17. But when I was turned away from self-contemplation, and there was given me for contemplation "visions of God," then I felt, O what a God is the God of Israel, my God! Yes, I felt that he is my God still. "He is the Rock, his work is perfect: for all his ways are judgment: a God of truth and without iniquity, just and right is he." "I remembered God;" and wrapped up in contemplation of his eternity, that Jehovah our salvation is he that inhabiteth eternity, that he is sovereign, immutable, and ever rests in his love, I felt my poor heart going forth in yearnings after him. In adoring gratitude and love I thought upon his name, and yet I "was troubled." What a paradox! My past dishonorable forgetfulness of his mercies troubled me. The mean thoughts I had been entertaining of God troubled me. Why had I doubted his love? Why had I for a moment entertained a hard thought of God? How had I dared to think that my God had changed? I saw myself a wretch undone without his sovereign grace. How soon I concluded, "It is of the Lord's mercies that we are not consumed, because his compassions fail not." Thus I remembered God, who saith, "I am the Lord, I change not; therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed."—Mal. iii. 6. Then again in this Psalm I read, "I call to remembrance my song in the night." Some night seasons were brought to my remembrance by the Holy Spirit, times of trial, when the heavens seemed shrouded in sackcloth, and in the gloom I walked and had no light. I remembered several such seasons, and also how wonderful was the tender compassion of my God to me, a poor, bewildered sinner, in giving me "songs in the night."—Job xxxv. 10. Like Paul, I felt there had stood by me the angel of God, whose I am and whom I serve, saying, "Fear not;" and by the exceeding greatness of his power toward me I believed God that it shall be even as he hath told me.—Acts xxvii. 23-25. "In the night his song shall be with me, and my prayer unto the God of my life."—Psalm xlii. 8. I could sing in the valley (Hosea ii. 15; Psalm xxiii. 4), for God was with me; his rod and his staff did comfort me. Under the Old Testament dispensation there were holy solemnities kept by the tribes of Israel in the night time, and even then they sang the praises of Jehovah. Ah, thought I, as I called to remembrance my song in the night, I cannot deny but that God has so dealt with me. Is it not an evidence that my heritage is in Israel? When I have walked in darkness and had no light, then the voice of the Lord in my soul has said, "Trust in the name of the Lord, and stay upon thy God."—Isa. l. 10. This voice has put gladness in my heart, and that precious word of the Lord has been fulfilled, "Ye shall have a song, as in the night when a holy solemnity is kept; and gladness of heart, as when one goeth with a pipe to come into the mountain of the Lord, to the Mighty One of Israel."—Isa. xxx. 29. The holy solemnity of keeping the passover was at night. "At the place which the Lord thy God shall choose to place his name in, there thou shalt sacrifice the passover at even, at the going down of the sun, at the season that thou camest forth out of Egypt. And thou shalt roast and eat it in the place which the Lord thy God shall choose: and thou shalt turn in the morning, and go unto thy tents."—Deut. xvi. 6, 7. It was truly in the night season when first I feasted upon the paschal Lamb. It was a gracious revelation to my poor, sin-stricken and afflicted soul when by faith I was enabled to see and believe that Christ our passover was sacrificed for me.—1 Cor. v. 7. My ransomed soul in the strength of the God of Israel marched forth from the house of bondage. "It is a night to be much observed."—Ex. xii. 42. I call to remembrance my song in that night. How pleasing and comforting to remember the gracious acts of the Lord to my soul! Songs of praises I will ever give to thee.

"E'er since by faith I saw the stream
Thy flowing wounds supply,
Redeeming love has been my theme,
And shall be till I die."

Jesus and his disciples sang a hymn on that memorable night.—Matthew xxvi. 30. At midnight Paul and Silas prayed and sang praises unto God, and the prisoners heard them.—Acts xvi. 25. While the shepherds were abiding in the fields, keeping watch over their flocks by night, a multitude of the heavenly host sang praises to God, saying, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men."—Luke ii. 14. So in the seasons of night, when trials of our faith are appointed us, then when it pleaseth the Lord to give us a sight of Jesus as our sacrifice and righteousness our night is illumined by the revealed glory of our God, and our hearts are then in tune to sing the song of the Lord. "When the burnt offering began, the song of the Lord began also with the trumpets, and with the instruments ordained by David king of Israel. And all the congregation worshiped, and the singers sang, and the trumpeters sounded: and all this continued until the burnt offering was finished."—2 Chron. xxix. 27, 28.

I read on in this seventy-seventh Psalm, and sacred meditation was given me in the words, "I will remember the years of the right hand of the Most High. I will remember the works of the Lord: surely I will remember thy wonders of old." It was from his right hand that there went forth his fiery law (Deut. xxxiii. 2), which at one time I feared would utterly consume a vile rebel like me. It was his own right hand that saved me.—Psalm xlv. 4. How glorious in power was his own right hand!—Ex. xv. 6. It valiantly rescued me from sin, plucked me as a brand from the burning, and showed me my sins forgiven. I remember, yes, I want to remember. O what a shame that I should ever forget! "I will remember the years of the right hand of the Lord." Eternal is his right hand. Underneath all his chosen are the everlasting arms.—Deut. xxxiii. 27. His right hand and holy arm have gotten him the victory, and have brought forth his ransomed with gladness. The right hand of the Lord doeth valiantly. It hath vanquished all our enemies, and hath redeemed us from all iniquity. The right hand of the eternal God is never weary, accomplishing the salvation and eternal glorification of his people. Who or what power shall ungrasp the right hand of the Lord, and pluck his flock from thence?—John x. 28, 29. "Yea, he loved the people; all his saints are in thy hand: and they sat down at thy feet; every one shall receive of thy words."—Deut. xxxiii. 3. Does the right hand of the Lord hold a poor sinner like me? Yes, I have a hope, O so precious, that it is even so. Surely he that measured the waters in the hollow of his hand, meted out heaven with the span, comprehended the dust of the earth in a measure, and weighed the mountains in scales and the hills in a balance, can hold me in his right hand, carry me through, and according to his eternal purpose and his everlasting love bring me through more than a conqueror, and place me in eternal glory, to the praise of the riches of his grace. O my God! enable me ever to remember the years of thy right hand.

"I will remember the works of the Lord." Not my works; O no. The very thought of any or all the works done by such a sinner as I sinks my soul in sadness. I want to be found in Christ Jesus my Lord, "not having mine own righteousness, which is of the law, but that which is through the faith of Christ, the righteousness which is of God by faith."—Phil. iii. 9. The works of the Lord are great, infinitely surpassing the works of men. What glorious works were finished on the cross! There Christ Jesus our Lord made an end of sin; there he went to the end of the law for the righteousness of his people; there he abolished death, and brought life and immortality to light; there he "loved me, and gave himself for me." O ravishing thought! Only by the exceeding greatness of his power can I, dare I, believe that for me Christ died; but in adoring gratitude my heart would sing, "Thou, Lord, hast made me glad through thy work: I will triumph in the works of thy hands. O Lord, how great are thy works, and thy thoughts are very deep." It was thy work in reconciling such a rebel to thyself by the blood of Christ the Lamb. It was thy work to ransom my soul from sin and the curse, to wash away my guilt. Yes, it is thy work, not mine, that presents a poor sinner-like me holy, unblamable and unreprouvable in thy sight.—Col. i.

20-22. When dead in trespasses and sins it was thy work, O God, to quicken my soul. Thou didst call me by thy grace to know thee, to reveal Jesus, the dear Redeemer, to my sin-tortured heart. Thy pardoning voice was heard, and thou didst make my soul to know the riches of thy grace.

"Kind author and ground of my hope,
Thee, thee for my God I avow;
My glad Ebenezer set up,
And own thou hast helped me till now.

"I muse on the years that are past,
Wherein my defense thou hast proved;
Nor wilt thou relinquish at last
A sinner so signally loved."

"I will remember the works of the Lord." It was his work that taught my heart to fear, and that brought me humbled and contrite at his feet, to cry, "God, be merciful to me, a sinner." It was the Holy Ghost that shed abroad the love of God in my heart, to love the glorious name of the Lord, to love his doctrine, and to love his people. What was I, and who am I, that the glorious Lord who inhabiteth eternity should be mindful of me? O it is wonderful! "Surely I will remember thy wonders of old; for thou only doest wondrous things." Thy name, Lord Jesus, is "Wonderful."—Isa. ix. 6. O how blessed by precious faith to look on whilst thou doest wondrously.—Judges xiv. 19.

The God of Israel did marvelous things in our sight in the land of Egypt. He made a way through the Red Sea for his ransomed to pass over, and overwhelmed their pursuers. There we rejoiced in him. In the daytime Israel was led by a cloud, and all night with a light of fire. The Lord clave the rock in the wilderness to give drink to his people, his chosen. He gave them manna from heaven to eat, and rained flesh upon them, and feathered fowl like as the sand of the sea. Yea, he led them on safely, and brought them to his sanctuary, to the mountain which his right hand had purchased, to the land flowing with milk and honey, the glory of all lands. "For they got not the land in possession by their own sword, neither did their own arm save them; but thy right hand, and thine arm, and the light of thy countenance, because thou hadst a favor unto them."

While thus my soul was wrapped up in contemplation of the wonders of redeeming love I felt my heart humbled within me. I mourned over my forgetfulness of the gracious dealings of the Lord. O how I chided myself for my unbelief, and was ashamed of the hard thoughts and repinings that had at times carried me away captive; but encouraged by the comforting remembrances of my God, and his wonderful works to the children of men, I felt my poor heart revived and strengthened, and I said, "I shall yet praise him, who is the health of my countenance, and my God."

"Each sweet Ebenezer I have in review Confirms his good pleasure to bring me quite through."

Thus I have jotted down, dear children of God, some items of my meditations given me in the midst of a season of oppression and darkness. The effect has been in some measure to encourage my soul to wait upon the Lord alone, for from him only, I am taught, cometh mine expectation. While we are sojourners in the earth it will oft be our lot to have our purposes frustrated and pleasing prospects nipped in the bud; but the counsel of the Lord shall stand, and the thoughts of his heart to all generations. This is our rest. When all our wisdom and strength are exhausted, when frail, and tottering and staggering beneath our trials and sorrows, O how kind is the Lord! How sweet is the rest, to be enabled by precious faith to repose in the immutable will of the everlasting God, knowing that our God worketh all things after the counsel of his own will. Then well may we take comfort and be of good cheer; for saith the apostle Paul, "We know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose. For whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son, that he might be the first-born among many brethren. Moreover, whom he did predestinate, them he also called: and whom he called, them he also justified: and whom he justified, them he also glorified."—Romans viii. 28-30. When this doctrine is revealed in our hearts, when the Holy Spirit feeds us with it, O what sustenance there is therein, and how exceedingly sweet and precious is the truth. The doctrine of Christ is the unshaken and eternal rock, revealing to our souls the eternal purpose and grace of the everlasting God; and it seems to me that in the last few days I have heard the voice of my Beloved saying, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

"Ah me, I'm never well but when
I on my best Beloved lean,
And then I'm never ill.
Crosses and trials all are right,
And pain is sweet, and troubles light,
When Christ my soul doth fill."

May the gracious God comfort all his tried ones, and support them with cordials of his everlasting love, is the heart's desire of one who is, I hope, your brother and companion in the afflictions of Christ,

JOHN MOULDS SR.—DEAR FATHER IN ISRAEL:—In meditating upon the propriety of answering the doctrinal part of your letter, I thought I would answer you through the SIGNS, as I might possibly say some things which I would also like to say to all the dear brethren who have known me in the years that have fled. I do not take up the pen for the purpose of entering into a controversy, for I do not think that there is any essential difference between us; but, as you say with respect to other writers, it consists a great deal in our different modes of expressing ourselves; and we are both too near the portals of the eternal world to think of stopping by the way to contend over the apparent differences; yet an exchange of views in a christian spirit may be beneficial.

Your first topic was God's foreknowledge, a subject that has been so ably handled by Elders Chick and Purington that it seems almost like egotism for me to say anything upon the subject; yet as we all have our own manner of expression, it may be that mine will be more in accordance with your experience and mode of thinking than theirs. There does not seem to be any difference between the brethren, nor you and I, with regard to the foreknowledge of God. We all believe that he is omniscient, and knew from eternity all things whatsoever transpire in time; that with him there is nothing new, nor nothing old. But how does he know? seems to be the point of difference. I look at it in this way. Anything to be foreknown must be certain to take place; and anything certain to take place must be irrevocably ordained by some one possessing absolute power to thus decree. Hence, if God has not in his own sovereign power and wisdom ordained all things whatsoever come to pass, then we must come to the conclusion that foreknowledge is a meaningless term. God, our God, has revealed himself in the works of his hands, and in the word of inspiration, as a God of justice, love, mercy, wisdom, power and knowledge; and as he is the same yesterday and forever, without variable-ness or the shadow of a turn, these perfections of his character must be co-equal and co-eternal, and no one of them can take precedence of the others, but all must and do harmonize in the grand and glorious purpose had in view in the creation of all things for his own pleasure. Now, to illustrate, if you tell me you are going to erect a house the coming summer, and I ask you how you know that you will do so, you reply, I know it because I have determined to do so, and have selected my site, foundation, materials, and have the means in my hands to accomplish it. And there are only two ways for your predetermination to fail. First, you are liable to change; and second, you may not have the power you think you have. But you see that your foreknowledge and purpose are inseparably connected. You and I both believe in a God of infinite and unlimited sovereignty, infinite in all his divine attributes, who created all things, and for his own pleasure they are and were created.—Rev. iv. 11. He created heaven, and the things that are therein, and the earth, and the things that therein are, and the sea, and the things that are therein.—Rev. x. 6. "For by him [Christ, the image of the invisible God] were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers: all things were created by him and for him: and he is before all things, and by him all things consist. And he is the Head of the body, the church, who is the beginning, the first born from the dead, that in all things he might have the preeminence. For it pleased the Father that in him should all fullness dwell."—Col. i. 15-19. The testimony of these three witnesses prove to me, first, that God created all things; for the spirit of inspiration specifies so fully that there can be no possible exceptions. Second, that he had a purpose in the matter. "For thy pleasure they are and were created." "All things were created by him and for him." Third, that one (and the chief) end or purpose had in view was his own glory, manifested in the exaltation of his Son, "that in all things he might have the preeminence." "Him hath God exalted with his right hand to be a Prince and a Savior, to give repentance unto Israel and forgiveness of sins."—Acts v. 31. Hence, it appears to me that what would appear to us the most trivial and unimportant incidents are but links in the grand and sublime chain of God's infinite, immutable and eternal purpose of grace, given to his chosen people here, and glory ineffable in the world to come. And he takes cognisance of the most trivial things in nature; for a sparrow "cannot fall to the ground without him;" and in grace, "for the very hairs of your head are numbered." In the execution of this sublime chain of purposes, for the accomplishment of the chief purpose, the glorifying of himself in his Son, and the exalting of his Son "to be head over all things to the church, which is his body," and that he might "in all things have the preeminence," and "save his people from their sins," it seems to me that the entrance of sin into the world was as much a link in the chain as was the salvation of his people from their sins. The thought that God ordained that sin should enter the world, and death by sin, ought not to disturb me, any more than it did Paul when he said to the Romans (vi. 17), "But God be thanked that ye were the servants of sin; but ye have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine which was delivered unto you." And he had preached unto them the absolute sovereignty and independence of God, and his predestination. I find that there were some things fore-ordained of God that were sinful on the part of man. (Acts ii. 23; iv. 27, 28), and he held them guilty. And the Savior told his disciples that "It must needs be that offenses come; but woe to that man by whom the offenses cometh."—Matt. xviii. 7.

And he says, "It were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and he cast into the sea, than that he should offend one of these little ones."—Luke xvii. 2.

This brings me to that part of your letter where you ask if I think that God influences any one to sin. I answer, No, most emphatically. Nor do I think that any one that loves the doctrine of God's election and predestination ever thinks of sinning that grace may abound, or doing evil that good may come, nor in any way trying to make the doctrine an excuse for their evil doings; but, on the contrary, when one that has stood high in the fellowship and confidence of the brethren commits such a wilful and heinous offense that the church has to deliver him to Satan, for the destruction of the flesh, it would indeed be better for such an one to be cast into the sea; for that implies only physical suffering; but, to the contrary, he has to spend years of sorrow and remorse, a living death indeed; and though he may be restored to the fellowship of the brethren, it does not exempt him from the woe; and no matter how kind and brotherly they may treat him, he cannot so far forget his offense as to need them to remind him of it. He has sown, and he must reap his harvest by himself; "bear his own burden." There are cases, however, where men make this doctrine an excuse for their evil deeds, and I am sorry to say that sometimes we meet with one of this class who professes to believe and love it. Such an one would be prone to say, "Why doth he yet find fault? for who hath resisted his will?" I think such use of the doctrine of predestination, and not its reception and belief, should be made a test of fellowship. I know of no instance where any one believing the doctrine has ever made it a test of fellowship.

But I must hasten to a close. I will say that some of the brethren whom I have most highly esteemed for their faithfulness to me, could not see as I do in this matter, among whom was our dear brother, Wm. Palmer, who has now gone to his reward. Like you, I do admire the spirit of brother V's letter, and I esteem him very highly as a brother beloved. Sound doctrine becomes the followers of the meek and lowly Jesus, and there is no middle ground between truth and error. Truth is eternal; error is original. Truth is consistent with itself; error is self-contradictory; and hence we are commanded, after the first and second admonition, to reject the man that is an heretic, knowing that such an one is subverted, and condemned of himself. This, it seems to me, is the rule for us to be governed by, if we make any doctrinal sentiment a test of fellowship.

This has been on hand a month now, and I had almost concluded not to write any more, nor to send what I have written. I will, now that I have a little leisure, pen a few more thoughts. I am not disturbed at all by you nor any other brother using the word "permit" in relation to God's will or purposes; but I would rather they would use it as Paul does in the Scripture you refer to. We must keep in mind the immutability of our God, and that consequently what is his will or purpose must have been his eternal will or purpose; and we do not nor cannot know what is his will or purpose only as he reveals it to us in his own way and time. In 1 Cor. xvi. 7, Paul says, "I trust to tarry a while with you, if the Lord permit." He did not know that it was in the eternal will or counsel of God that he should tarry with them for their comfort; but it was his will. The fact of his remaining, showed to him that it was God's will. In Heb. vi. 3 he uses the word permit in the same sense. In Acts xviii. 21 he says, "If God will," in the same sense. James (iv. 15) says, "For that ye ought to say, If the Lord will, we shall live, and do this or that." He uses this language, as does Paul, because he does not know the future; but they both knew, as did David, Job and others, that "it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps," but that "the steps of a good man are ordered of the Lord." You know that when the Jews at Corinth opposed and blasphemed, Paul shook his raiment and purposed to go to the Gentiles; but he did not say, if the Lord permit, for he evidently viewed the opposition as evidence that it was the Lord's will he should go; but it was God's will he should remain; for he told Paul in a vision of the night to fear not, but to speak, and hold not his peace, for he had much people in that city.

I will now drop this subject, hoping you will throw the mantle of charity over any errors you may detect in this protracted scrawl; and now may the God of all grace comfort and sustain you under your weight of years, and give you light at "evening time," is my prayer.

Yours unworthily,

R. F. HAYNES.

APRIL 15, 1891.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—I have concluded to send you the inclosed letter to father Moulds, for your inspection; and if you think it would be of general interest to the household of faith, publish it, if not too much labor to correct. If so, let it go to the waste-basket.

I have carefully examined the phrases, "If the Lord permit," "If the Lord will," "If God will," as used by the apostles, and it seems to me they never use them except when uncertain about what the Lord's will is in the matter. When Paul said, "I go bound in the Spirit to Jerusalem," he did not add, If the Lord will, nor, If the Lord permit; for he knew that it was the Lord's will that he should go; nor did he know what should befall him there, except that in every place bonds and afflictions awaited him. Again, the little word "if" implies doubt, and is one that the adversary torments the Lord's afflicted ones with as much, perhaps, as any other.

I will say in conclusion that as the inclosed is quite lengthy, you are at liberty to use any of it, or none of it, as you may deem most for edification. I do not wish to stir up strife nor mar the feelings of the least of the "little ones."

Yours in hope,

R. F. HAYNES.

HANNIBAL, Mo., April 18, 1891.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—I read your editorial in the SIGNS of February 4th, on the subject of "Death in the law," with peculiar pleasure, and I hope with much profit. It was so fully in accord with my own views, and so instructive withal, that I enjoyed greatly its perusal. I then thought I might send you some of my reflections on the same subject; not that I could in any manner improve what you had so well already written; but my infirmities and a barren mind seemed to preclude it. But since then a good deal additional has been written by yourself, and also by brother Rittenhouse, which I read with much interest and attention; and as it involves some views I had thought might be peculiar to myself, I now conclude to send for your consideration and disposal some of my thoughts on the same. I have for years had much thought upon the laws of God given to man, of which there are two; one given to all men in Adam; the other to Israel only, called the "law of Moses," the decalogue, or ten commandments, written upon "tables of stone," together with the statutes and judgments by Moses. This latter was to a typical people only, which had an antitype, a spiritual people. The former was to Adam in the garden, and all men in him; none are excepted. It was the transgression of this "holy, just and good" law which brough death upon all men, "for that all have sinned." God did, before the foundation of the world, elect or choose in Christ, their spiritual head and life, a definite number of the sons and daughters of Adam, and "predestinated them unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to himself, according to the good pleasure of his will."—Eph. i. 4, 5. These predestinated, chosen children are what is in the 139th Psalm described, as "my substance was not hid from thee when I was made in secret, and curiously wrought in the lowest parts of the earth. Thine eyes did see my substance, yet being unperfect; and in thy book all my members were written, which in continuance were fashioned, when as yet there was none of them." This Scripture clearly shows the manifestation of this "substance," the children of God in the world, which is elsewhere in the Scriptures spoken of as being "born again;" born first of a corruptible seed and life, and afterwards "born again," of an incorruptible seed and life, which seed is Christ, "the Word of God, which liveth and abideth forever." In this manifestation of the church, the body of Christ, there is not a change of the earthly nature of the Adamic man, which is still corrupt and corruptible, to the incorruptible, heavenly and divine nature, which cannot be corrupted; but rather the development of both in the one sinner, the vessel of mercy, as Jesus was in the flesh; so that while he was a man in every attribute, he was holy, harmless, and separate from sinners. The fullness of the Godhead dwelt bodily in him. His people are, in the Scriptures, brought to view in the same way, made manifest in the same manner, being born of the same spirit he was of the virgin. In no other way could there be any kinship, could he be their elder Brother, and they joint heirs with him of a heavenly, eternal inheritance, which is absolutely incorruptible, undefiled, and cannot fade away. Now each of these is from a "seed;" one corruptible, and one incorruptible. Peter says the one is as the grass, and the flower of grass, which withereth, and the flower thereof falleth away (brethren, do we not realize this in our daily experience?); and the other, the Word of the Lord, which endureth forever. Here are clearly brought to view two seeds; and yet some claiming to be Primitive Baptists will almost take offense if one talks or writes upon the wonderful and mysterious subject of "God manifest in the flesh," which is involved, together with the manifestation of the church in the world, her order and worship, in the two seeds. Do such persons know, or can they tell how, otherwise anything animate or inanimate in which is life is multiplied or reproduced, except by a seed, and that after his kind?—Gen. i. 12; Gal. iii. 16.

Having said thus much in reference to the subject of the law, I will speak of the law itself. It was to this people I have endeavored to present to view, and to them only, God has ordained or given a law which is spiritual, and co-equal, and co-extensive with their predestination and election unto salvation, and with which no other people have any portion whatever. It was this spiritual law which was in the fullness of time written in the hearts of all the election of grace, the chosen heirs of salvation, and who "are partakers of flesh and blood," by which Abel "by faith offered unto God a more excellent sacrifice than Cain, by which he obtained witness that he was righteous;" and so of Noah, Enoch, and others as recorded in the 11th chapter of Hebrews. This law was written in the hearts of the children of God (or that portion which lived before that period) before it was given in typical or covenant form to Israel. The election of grace is chosen "out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation." It pleased the Lord to prefigure or typify this people by the choice of "Abraham and his seed" alone. He did not so much as include his son by a bond woman, but commanded him to cast her out with her son, as she should not be heir with Isaac, the child of promise. Paul in writing to the church at Galatia says, referring to this in the seventeenth verse of the third chapter, "The covenant, that was confirmed before of God in Christ, the law which was four hundred and thirty years after cannot disannul, that it should make the promise of none effect." I say, to deliver to them in the fullness of time, from mount Sinai, by the hands of Moses, written on table of stone, this same law, together with the statutes and judgments, in a typical covenant form, to which they, and they only, were amenable, and it was to this typical people, the Jews, the fleshly seed of Abraham alone, to whom Moses spake when he said, as recorded in the book of Deut. vi. 5, "Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God is one Lord: and thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thine heart, and with all thy soul, and with thy might." This law, in its typical covenant form, was commanded to no other people except the Jews; and when our Lord was asked which was the greatest commandment, he answered this was; and the next was like it, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. On these two hang all the law and the prophets." He did not say it was for any other people except Israel, as it is not; nor that there are any such requirements or claims upon any other people. Brother Rittenhouse says, in the SIGNS of April 1st, however, that "If the Jews only were under the law, they alone were under its curse;" which indeed is true. Then he inquires, "Wherewith shall the Gentiles be redeemed from the curse of the law." And further on he says, "If Gentiles were not under the law and under its curse, it would seem to follow that a different salvation was required for Jews; and that when Jesus was made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, this provision would not have been required for Gentiles." This also would undoubtedly be true if condemnation and death came by the transgression of this law; but most certainly they do not. Then he adds, "It certainly is the same God over Jews and Gentiles, the same holy law that condemns them, and the same redemption of which both are subjects." This is indeed the truth; but does he really mean that it is the Sinai or Mosaic law and covenant, which was only given to the Jews, which by its transgression brought condemnation and death upon all men? I can hardly conclude he means that; and I want to understand him, as he suggests to "you and your readers." Now, my understanding was, and is, that this typical law, which had nothing to do with Gentiles, has also an antitype, which is "spiritual," and has nothing to say to "all men," but given to spiritual Israel only, the whole election of grace, composed of redeemed sinners of all nations; and they in the type were amenable in all its fullness to all its requirements, and entitled to all its blessings, which indeed were many, but were only temporal, pertaining only to this earthly life. When the law said, "Thou shalt not kill," none but a typical Jew was in danger of the judgment unless he did so literally; but a Gentile was in no such danger though he did. But in the antitype our Lord explains to his disciples when on the mount that to be angry with a brother without a cause, you "shall be in danger of the judgment; and whosoever shall say, Thou fool, shall be in danger of hell fire." Without attempting to explain what he means in this place by "hell fire," I am sure no Primitive Baptist will contend that any other than a "Jew which is one inwardly, and circumcision is of the heart, in the spirit," can commit these offenses. And thus it is in all which our Lord mentions in that mine of wisdom to his disciples, recorded in the fifth chapter of Matthew, commonly called "the sermon on the mount," and indeed in all his sayings. Now this is the law under which none but the circumcision ever came, or can come, and the same under which Jesus "was made of a woman, to redeem them that were under the law; and no others were under it; and he redeemed them all, leaving none under its curse; and "so all Israel shall be saved; as it is written, There shall come out of Sion the deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob." If it be asked, If this law applies only to Israel, what is the condition of the rest of mankind? I will say, Just the same as it was to all men at the beginning of the transgression, when all had sinned, and were under the condemnation and death of the holy and righteous law of God. The election of grace were as the rest, "children of wrath, even as others." The transgression of the law there and then made them such. No subsequent law did or could; if for no other reason, they were "condemned already," and "were by nature the children of wrath, even [in the same way and at the same time] as others. But God, who is rich in mercy, for his great love wherewith he loved us, even when we were dead in sins, hath quickened us together with Christ (by grace are ye saved)." This is the only reason we are not all still in the same condition; and our Lord in John iii, thus divides them. "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life; and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him." It need not be said to those who believe the immutable sovereignty and foreknowledge of God that it remains so still, according to the will and purpose of God. There we would desire to leave it.

The apostle, in the second and third chapters of Romans, writing of the law, circumcision, and the advantage of the Jew, among other things says, "we know that what things soever the law saith, it saith to them who are under the law;" and also, "For by the law is the knowledge of sin." Now it is not the letter of this law, written either upon parchment or upon "tables of stone," that ever brought that knowledge to the fallen sons of men. Saul of Tarsus, who had been "taught according to the perfect manner of the law of the fathers," had no knowledge of it when he was in his fancied light and wisdom, on his mission of persecution of the church at Damascus. That almighty voice from heaven spake to him, saying, "Saul, Saul." It was then he received that knowledge; and all his fancied light was turned in him, and he was three days without sight, being led by the hand of them that were with him. He says, "I came into Damascus. And one Ananias came to me and said, Brother Saul, receive thy sight. And the same hour I looked up upon him." O, my dear brethren, this is the light "God commanded to shine out of darkness," and shines in the hearts of all his redeemed children, "to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ;" and it will be certain to shine when he commands it. It is as potent to all as it was to Saul, though it comes in the still, small voice, saying, "This is the way, walk ye in it." What a blessed hope, consolation and sure foundation it is to rest upon, that God in his immutable foreknowledge and predestinating purpose worketh all things after the counsel of his own sovereign will, and doeth, and will, all his pleasure. It is a solace and comfort to me in my old age; for though I walk (am walking) through the valley and shadow of death I fear no evil; for I feel the Lord is with me. His rod and staff comfort me.—Psa. xxiii. My age is 78 years and 4 months, less 7 days. My health is good, but am very feeble and tottering.

Dear brethren Beebe, I have written a long letter with a weak hand; and after reading the many ables ones, by the many brethren in the SIGNS, I hesitate about sending or writing either, such as this; but I know your judgment and discernment will not suffer its insertion in the dear old SIGNS to the detriment of the truth or the harmony of the brethren; for, as brother Badger said in his precious letter in the SIGNS lately, so will I say, "If the truth is published anywhere in this world it is in the SIGNS OF THE TIMES." There are some sentiments in this letter which I have held many years, and have not heard them from other brethren, nor have I spoken of them to but two others. I have thought for a good while of sending them to you, but have delayed it until now; and it may have been better had I delayed it indefinitely; but I submit it to your better judgment, for your disposal, and shall be content therewith. I am gratified, after being a subscriber for the SIGNS for over fifty years, to find it still stands "solid" for the truth; and as the prophet Jeremiah was, a defended city, and an iron pillar, and brazen walls, in defense of the truth.

With love and fellowship for you, dear brethren Beebe, and all saints, I will close. I am, I hope, "your brother and companion in tribulation," for Jesus' sake,

W. F. KERCHEVAL.

CORRECTIONS.

IN the SIGNS for April 15th, last page, in the verses I appended to the obituary of John Henry Bowen, the printers have mixed the second and third stanzas together, and it is thus very awkward. The second line of the second verse, as printed, should begin the third verse.

WILL the brethren Beebe please give their views on Ex. xxxii. 31-33, and more especially on the book there spoken of by Moses, and also by the Lord? Their compliance will oblige a brother, I hope, though most unworthy to claim relationship.

REPLY.

"And Moses returned unto the Lord, and said, Oh, this people have sinned a great sin, and have made them gods of gold. Yet now, if thou wilt forgive their sin; and if not, blot me, I pray thee, out of thy book which thou hast written. And the Lord said unto Moses, Whosoever hath sinned against me, him will I blot out of my book."—Ex. xxxii. 31-33.

The peculiar circumstances connected with this text require special notice in arriving at any understanding of the truth designed to be expressed in the record. Regarded merely as a literal history, the essential truth of the inspired statement is not recognized. It should never be forgotten that all the Scriptures are the testimony of Jesus; and whatever else may be seen in reading them, their real substance is only grasped when it is seen that they bear witness of him. God has not given the revelation of his Spirit merely for the satisfaction of the natural curiosity of his creatures. What appears to reason as only the history of the earth, and of incidents in the miraculous dealings of God with the favored nation of Israel, when seen by faith is shown to be an accurate delineation of the experience of the church of Christ, which is the antitypical Israel. So our Lord Jesus said to the unbelieving Jews, "Search the Scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life; and they are they which testify of me."—John v. 39. In bearing witness of Jesus as the Savior of his people from their sins, the same Scriptures give assurance to each individual sinner who is saved by the redeeming blood of Jesus. The testimony is one inseparable declaration of the love and grace of God to his people whom he chose in Christ Jesus, and ordained that they should be holy and without blame before him in love. In vain does the wisdom and prudence of the carnal or fleshly mind try to attain to this hidden wisdom of God. It can never be known in any other way but by the revelation of his Spirit.

While in the great declaration of the gracious purpose of God as it is revealed in the gospel day of the church, Moses is presented as the representative of that fiery law which was given by him, and in that character he

s the minister of death, yet there are points in which this same Moses is eminently typical of Christ. As the divinely appointed leader and ruler of the nation of Israel, and as their only mediator and intercessor before God, this typical character is very clearly manifest. And Moses himself declared to Israel, "The Lord thy God will raise up unto thee a Prophet from the midst of thee, of thy brethren, like unto me; unto him ye shall hearken."—Deut. xviii. 15. In this mediatorial character Moses in our text intercedes for the guilty nation of Israel. He was both the lawgiver and the prophet of that legal dispensation. In his typical representation of the Lord Jesus, he was without a successor. "And there arose not a prophet since in Israel like unto Moses, whom the Lord knew face to face, in all the signs and the wonders, which the Lord sent him to do in the land of Egypt to Pharaoh, and to all his servants, and to all his land, and in all that mighty hand, and in all the great terror which Moses showed in the sight of all Israel."—Deut. xxxiv. 10-12. It is as the favored type of our Redeemer that he is presented in our text as confessing the sin of the people for whom he would implore the forgiveness of God. There is no provision in the requirements of infinite justice by which any sin can be forgiven. The inexorable decree of the holy law requires that the soul that sins, it shall die. In that law there is no room for mercy, nor is forgiveness found in any of its provisions. Therefore it cannot be as the embodiment of that ministration of death that Moses pleaded for the Lord to forgive the great sin which that people had sinned. Only as the typical mediator between the guilty nation and the holy law of God, which they had transgressed, could the prayer of Moses be presented for the forgiveness of the great sin of Israel. In this character Moses is an eminent type of Christ, who is the effectual Intercessor and Advocate with God, whose prayer is unceasing on the behalf of his people.

"And Moses returned unto the Lord, and said, Oh, this people have sinned a great sin, and have made them gods of gold." It is important to observe that in this prayer for the forgiving grace of God, the confession of sin is made without any reservation. This peculiarity marks every prayer which is indited by the Spirit of truth. There is no effort to palliate the guilt of the transgressors, although the confession is an acknowledgment that justice would visit their sin with instant death. This honesty shows the difference between the prayer which is dictated by the Spirit of truth, and such selfish prayers as originate in the carnal mind. The selfishness of nature ever seeks to excuse the evil of which it is convicted, as our first parents sought to palliate their sin when the Lord brought them into judgment. But the revelation of the grace of God in the salvation of the conscious sinner never fails to convince him of the justice of his condemnation, and thus he is made to appreciate the infinite grace which is manifest in his salvation. This unreserved admission of the dreadful guilt of the people of Israel is a very clear type of the confession of our Redeemer, when he came under the burden of the sins of all his people. He says, "For innumerable evils have compassed me about; mine iniquities have taken hold upon me, so that I am not able to look up; they are more than the hairs of mine head; therefore my heart faileth me."—Psalms xl. 12. Only as he is one with his members, could divine justice lay their sins upon their righteous Head and Life. This unity was expressed in the type of the natural Adam. The very instant that Eve had become involved in sin, that instant Adam was under the necessity of following her in the transgression, because she was bone of his bones and flesh of his flesh. By that unity Adam was under the sentence of death as soon as that sentence was passed upon his wife. So the Lord Jesus was appointed unto death from the time when his people were involved in sin. He confesses their transgression as his own, and so divine justice holds him responsible. It was not by an arbitrary transfer of guilt that it pleased the Lord to bruise our sinless Redeemer. In unity with his chosen people the holy Savior was made to be sin for them, so that "He was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities; the chastisement of our peace was upon him; and with his stripes we are healed. All we like sheep have gone astray; we have turned every one to his own way; and the Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all."—Isa. liii. 5, 6. This is acknowledged in the supplication of Moses as recorded in the expression under consideration. Personally Moses had not been involved in the sin of idolatry in which Israel had sinned, as here confessed; yet he does not plead for his own preservation. The sin of his people was his sin. In confessing this responsibility, Moses is manifestly moved by the Spirit of Christ. By that Spirit he returned unto the Lord. This is an infallible evidence of the guidance of the Spirit of truth. By no other power do the saints return unto the Lord. By that Spirit only do they confess their sins unto him, and cry unto him for pardoning mercy. In making gods of gold according to their own imagination, those Israelites displayed the same carnal reliance upon their own works which is characteristic of every subject of grace, who looks to his own works for justification before God. The law of God expressly forbade the making of any idols by Israel. The transgression of that law was sinning a great sin, for which there was no palliation to be urged even by their devoted leader and ruler, who had forsaken the treasures and honors of Egypt, that he might suffer affliction with them. He could only throw himself upon the infinite mercy of God without a claim upon that grace.

"Yet now, if thou wilt, forgive their sin!" By this punctuation the sentence is complete as expressing the prayer which is in accordance with the instruction of our Lord. The prayer of faith is always in submission to the will of God. There could be no other hope but in the sovereign grace of God. On that ground alone could Moses intercede for the pardon of the great sin which Israel had sinned. This is the only plea of any repenting sinner. It is as a type of Christ that Moses is interceding for Israel. The law, by which condemnation is pronounced, is never moved with compassion or sympathy for the guilty. Therefore it cannot be as the embodiment of the legal dispensation that Moses prays for the forgiveness of the Lord. The fact that the prayer was granted, is conclusive evidence that it was dictated by the Spirit of Christ.

"And if not, blot me, I pray thee, out of thy book which thou hast written." The special inquiry of our brother in reference to the book here spoken of, indicates that he has some understanding of the subject from personal experience; and probably he could present more satisfactory views than any which we may be favored to give. But without claiming to have more clear views than other brethren, we will submit such thoughts as we have on the point. Whatever doubt there may be in regard to what the prayer does mean, it is certain that it does not mean that Moses was moved by the Spirit of Christ to ask the Lord to blot his name out of that book of his electing love wherein he was chosen in Christ before the foundation of the world. The prayer of faith is never at variance with the eternal will of God. Any understanding of this, or any other text, which involves such a conflict must necessarily be erroneous. But there can be no question that this prayer of Moses was both inspired and uttered in the faith of the Spirit of Christ. Many books are mentioned in the Scriptures, and what is said of one book is not to be applied to another. Since God is immutable, it is evident that nothing which can ever occur in time, can possibly affect the eternal record of his election of grace in choosing his saints in Christ before time was created. No inspired expression can be correctly understood as implying such a thing as the changing of one item of that eternal purpose of our God. It is in his official relation as the leader of the nation of Israel that Moses is pleading on their behalf for the forgiving grace of God. It is doing violence to the record to understand that he refers to another subject in the expression to which our brother calls special attention. The consistent understanding of this petition is that Moses prays to suffer with Israel whatever chastisement the Lord would visit upon their transgression. As not having personally engaged in the idolatry of which they were guilty, Moses was written in the book of God as innocent of their sin. His intercession for them is typical of the intercession of our holy Redeemer for the deliverance of his spiritual Israel. Natural reason sees in this petition only the desperation of utter discouragement, as if Moses would be liberated from further trouble with that rebellious people; but to the faith of the saints the Spirit of truth shows him as typifying the great Deliverer of spiritual Israel, "Who his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree, that we, being dead to sins, should live unto righteousness; by whose stripes ye were healed."—1 Peter ii. 24. In being made a curse for us, our Jesus was in that sense blotted out of the book of divine approval, and numbered with the transgressors. Moses did indeed suffer with the sinning Israelites in the punishment of their wickedness; but no created type could do what Jesus did in bearing away the sins of his people. Consequently, in no figure could be portrayed the glorious immortality of the saints in Christ Jesus. In this type Moses shows the unity of Christ with his people in bearing their sins, but Moses could not bring to view that grace and truth which come only by Jesus Christ.—John i. 17. Moses was faithful in all his house as a servant, and could die with the people whom he led, but he could not lead them into the liberty of the sons of God. He was written in the book of God as obedient to the commandments of God, as is signified in the context, when the Lord told him of the idolatry in Israel, and spoke of making of Moses a great nation. It is in responding to this word of the Lord that Moses asks to be identified with Israel in the destruction with which the Lord would visit them. This petition was clearly dictated by the same faith by which he refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter, "Choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season; esteeming the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures in Egypt; for he had respect unto the recompense of the reward. By faith he forsook Egypt, not fearing the wrath of the king; for he endured, as seeing him who is invisible."—Heb. xi. 24-27.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

Charles Hills, Sr., was born in Adair Co., Ky., Feb. 17th, 1815, and departed this life in Logan Co., Kansas, March 28th, 1891, aged 76 years, 1 month and 11 days.

Brother Hills came to Illinois in December, 1830, and located in McDonough County, when it was almost a wilderness, and in 1836 was united in marriage with Miss Charlotte David, who died Nov. 26th, 1888. The subject of this notice was received into the fellowship of the Union Church, in McDonough Co., Ill., by experience, in 1846, and was baptized by Elder Samuel L. Dark, who is now nearly eighty-three years of age, and yet ably proclaiming the gospel. The deceased was a firm and unshaken believer in the doctrine of salvation by grace, and his house was open at all times for his brethren, and many of them, including the writer, have been fed by him and his family. Last fall (1890) he went to Kansas and married Mrs. Rebecca David, widow of Felix David, she also being a beloved member of the same church of Primitive Baptists. Brother Hills was doctoring a sick horse, and stuck an awl in one of his fingers, and died of blood poisoning.

He left his companion, two sons and two daughters, together with the church and many friends, to feel their sad loss.

THREE DAYS MEETINGS.

THE Old Regular Predestinarian Baptist Church at Little Flock, Cass Co., Mo., six miles south of Pleasant Hill and four miles north of Harrisonville, will hold a three days meeting, beginning at four o'clock on Friday evening, May 29th, and continuing until four o'clock Sunday evening, May 31st. Elders R. M. Ogle and John Barnes, of Henry Co., Mo., have promised to be with us. Brethren who love the truth are cordially invited to attend this meeting. We are Predestinarians at Little Flock. There are not very many of us, but we are a unit in the doctrine of salvation by grace alone.

W. R. STORMS.

If the Lord will, there will be a three days meeting with the Broad Run Church, Md., beginning on Saturday before the third Sunday in May, 1891. We extend a cordial invitation to all lovers of the truth, especially ministering brethren, to attend.

It is desirable that all shall come on the Friday evening train, Metropolitan Branch of the B. & O. R. R., which leaves Washington about four o'clock, and reaches Barnesville about six o'clock, where all will be met and conveyed to places of entertainment.

JOSEPH WHITE.

APPOINTMENTS.

OPELIKA, Ala., April 29, 1891.

ELDER G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN—I thought I would write you a line or two and say that, the Lord willing, I expect to start for Texas on Monday after the third Sunday in May. I will first stop at Shulenburg, will be two or three days around Hackberry, Lavaca County, and will have appointments through the San Marcus Association. I will return home on Thursday or Friday before the first Sunday in June. I will say to other brethren in Texas whom I desire to visit that I will not be able to do so at this time; but I would like to meet as many of them as I can on this trip, if I should be permitted to go.

W. LIVELY.

ASSOCIATIONAL.

THE Baltimore Old School Baptist Association is appointed to be held with the Ebenezer Church, in the city of Baltimore, Md., to begin on Wednesday before the fourth Sunday in May (20th), 1891, and continue three days.

A cordial invitation is extended to all who desire to meet with us at that time. All who may reach Baltimore on Tuesday will call at Dr. John Thorne's, 709 North Calvert St., where they will be directed to homes. All who come on Wednesday will go direct to the meeting-house, corner of Calvert and Madison Sts., where the association will be in session.

THE Delaware Old School Baptist Association is appointed to be held with the London Tract Church, Chester Co., Pa., to begin on Wednesday before the fifth Sunday in May (27th), 1891, and continue three days.

Those coming from or through Philadelphia to the Delaware Association will take the cars on the B. & O. R. R. at 24th and Chestnut Sts. at 4:30 p. m. on Tuesday, and ticket for Landenburgh. Six of the number will get off at Hockessen.

Those coming from and through Baltimore can take any train on Tuesday p. m. for Newark, Delaware. There inquire for John R. Hill, James Hossenger, Miller Barton or P. M. Sherwood.

Those coming up the Delaware Division R. R. will please ticket for Wilson Station, Delaware City R. R., and come to my house. All will be cared for, and taken to the place of meeting on Wednesday morning.

JOSEPH L. STATON.

THE Delaware River Old School Baptist Association is appointed to be held with the church at Southampton, Bucks Co., Pa., to begin on Wednesday before the first Sunday in June (3d), 1891, and continue three days.

THE Warwick Old School Baptist Association is appointed to be held with the church at Warwick, Orange Co., N. Y., to begin on Wednesday before the second Sunday in June (10th), 1891, and continue three days.

THE Chemung Old School Baptist Association is appointed to be held with the Abington Church, at Justus, Lackawanna Co., Pa., to begin on Wednesday before the third Sunday in June (17th), 1891, and continue three days.

THE Siloam Association of Regular Predestinarian Baptists will be held with the Fellowship Church, at Buel's Chapel, near Mill Creek, in Polk Co., Oregon, beginning on Friday before the fourth Sunday in June, 1891.

Brethren and sisters coming by rail from Portland or elsewhere will be met with teams for conveyance at McCoy, Polk Co., on Thursday evening. We extend an invitation to all of our faith to meet with us.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date, this date denotes the time at which your subscription expires, and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

CORRESPONDENCE.

HORACE, Texas, Feb. 6, 1891.

ELDER C. W. ANDERSON—DEAR BROTHER:—I sometimes hope that I am allowed to claim this relationship to the Lord's people, through the righteousness of him who "shall be called The Lord our righteousness." If not, then I have no right. On reading your letters to Elder Durand in the last number of the SIGNS, I was seized with an inclination of mind to pen you a few lines, and thus testify to the goodness and mercy of God in his care and protection of one poor sinner who, if not deceived, has felt "the burden of the word of the Lord." My first thought was that perhaps some things connected with my experience might prove to be of some comfort to you. Then the thought occurred to my mind, What can I, a poor, weak, sinful creature hope to write that would interest one of God's servants? For my mind is more often crowded with matters of a worldly nature than otherwise, and often with things so vile and sinful that I fear sometimes I am not what I had hoped or professed to be. However I have concluded to write and leave the result with him who "doeth all things well."

In November, 1874, and in my nineteenth year, I was married. In the winter following it pleased the Lord to deliver my mind of a burden that had been very grievous, especially at times, for several years previous. I at that time was simple enough to believe that my troubles were over. I thought that I should never more be troubled on account of sin, but that my life would be one of peace and happiness continually. It is hardly worth while to tell you that in this I was sadly mistaken; for dark clouds soon overspread my sky. I found that I still possessed this old, carnal, Adamic nature, and that it was just as hard for me to keep from getting angry, and from lusting, coveting, &c., as ever; and this is, and ever has been since I received a hope, my chief complaint. After experiencing so much of the goodness and forbearance of God, I am so vile, so prone to wander, so full of vile, sinful imaginations, and have to say to-night, my brother, were it not for the restraining grace of God I would do anything that I ever did before I had a hope. This is my feeling. If I walk nearer in accordance with his law than others, I have nothing to boast of. It is because he directs my feet. "By the grace of God I am what I am." I feel emotions of thankfulness while I write, that he has so far kept me from sinning myself out of the fellowship of his beloved children, and I often fear that in some spell of evil inclinations I will do that very thing. Yet I believe that to our God the very devils are subject,

"And death and hell can do no more Than what our Father please."

About the time I received a hope, or shortly afterward, I was impressed with the duty of testifying publicly to the truth, which at first I thought would be a great privilege and pleasure; but when I began to consider, I found many seemingly insurmountable barriers. I was a poor, back-woods boy (was at the time working for standing wages on a farm), with but very little education, very little knowledge of church discipline, or even the usages of the Primitive Baptists. I looked upon the most insignificant member of the church as being far better qualified for such a work than I was; so I tried to conclude that it was all my own imagination, and not the work of the Spirit; yet the impression was almost continually on my mind. At length I concluded that if I were away from my surroundings in that country (Georgia), perhaps those impressions would leave me; so in less than two years after I received a hope I was in Texas. I had joined the Primitive Baptists, and was baptized in the summer of 1875. A change of country produced no lasting effects. My impressions were soon stronger, it seemed to me, than ever. My pen can never describe my troubles for some five or six years, so I will not attempt it. I had my first liberty in the stand on Saturday before the first Sunday in July, 1883. I had tried several times previous to this, but had no liberty. My liberty was given me in this way. I was plowing along one day in the spring of the year, a gloomy cloud overshadowed my mind, and thoughts like these were passing through my mind, You have been greatly troubled for years with the thought of preaching; you have tried it, and now you know what you thought from the first—you cannot preach. You have often prayed to the Lord to relieve you, and still you are not relieved. Your life has been one continual routine of trouble, and will very likely continue to be, so you had as well make up your mind to be reconciled to it, as much so as possible, at least. At this time everything seemed to bespeak my condemnation to such a life. The very wind in the treetops seemed to hum my condemnation, and the little birds sang the same. Such gloom and sorrow I cannot describe. But all of a sudden my condition was changed. My burden of mind was gone, and all was peace. My sky was as clear as it had been cloudy before. Like the morning clouds vanishing before the rising sun, so my sorrows had fled. I went to the house at dinner time and took up my Bible to read, and for the first time in life beheld an unspeakable beauty in these words, "By night on my bed I sought him who my soul loveth," &c. For about three days my mind was in perfect peace. On my next trial to preach I used the above Scripture (Solomon's Song iii. 1-4) as a text. I was blessed with liberty for the first time. I was enabled to treat upon the condition of men in a state of nature, the work of God in giving life to the dead sinner, and his travel from that time until Jesus is revealed as his Savior, and thus to apply the Scripture experimentally to the people of God, individually and collectively. I was filled with happiness inexpressible; and to add to my joy, my wife came up when the door of the church was opened for the reception of members, and told of the dealing of the Lord with her, and gave good satisfaction, and was received. I soon began to build air castles. I felt so calm and serene, I thought if preaching made me feel thus I would spend much of my time in preaching. But I had much to learn by experience that I knew but little of then. I have learned that "where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty;" and that it is his to withhold light, and leave me in the dark. And so it is, without him I can do nothing.

I will now come more directly to what I desired to write in the outset. At the time I hope the Lord gave me liberty, I had a wife and three little children. I now have five. I was very poor as to this world's goods, having set out in the world a few years previous to work for wages. Three years after the first I made crops on shares, then three more years I rented, having bought a horse on time. Then I bargained for a small farm (fifty acres), for which I was to pay four hundred dollars, the most of which I owed at the time I began to have liberty in preaching. Added to this, for several years previous I had had a good deal of sickness in my family, and my wife's general health had become very bad. She has been a sufferer for several years, until within the last year, with something like bronchitis or asthma; so you see, taking a human view of the matter, my chances for going were very bad. I possessed a great ambition for providing all things honest. I greatly desired to pay my debts as they came due. I had nothing of an earthly nature to depend on to support my family except my own labor, with the little help they could afford; and now if I should go according to the inclinations of my mind, how could my duty as the head of a family be performed? In November, 1884, I was ordained to the full work of the ministry, having previously been called to the care of two churches, and shortly afterward to the care of the third. One of these churches was twelve, and another fourteen, miles from home; but I traveled a good deal more than to those churches. A year or two afterward I was called to the care of the fourth, which was forty-five miles from my home. There was no preacher of the Primitive order near most of those churches, and it seemed that I was the only chance for them to have anything in the way of preaching. Most of the brethren in those little churches were poor, and able to do but little in the way of helping me along. It looked like, all things considered, a man with reasonable judgment would have staid at home and tried to make a living; and I did have a desire to do so, and at times it looked like I would be bound to do so, especially as my wife's health seemed gradually to grow worse. But God had given her a willingness for me to go, and I missed but very few appointments. Sometimes, however, I would grow very despondent about my future prospects, especially in going to and returning from my appointments, while thinking over my circumstances. My little farm needed attention. In the early spring I could see others making rails and repairing fences, while mine was going undone. Later on I could see them preparing their land for crops, while mine was being neglected. And still later on, when on Friday, and sometimes on Thursday, I left my little crops with the weeds and grass growing, in traveling along the road I could see the people plowing and hoeing, and giving their crops the needed attention, while I must be out of mine until Tuesday. All this I bring to bear to show the seeming impossibility of a continuance of this course long. In all this despondency my prayer was for the Lord to provide a way of escape from those great difficulties. I tried to beseech his mercies in behalf of my dear companion and the little ones, that he would be more than a husband and father to them in my absence. I remembered that he had said, "There is no man that hath left house, or brethren, or sister, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my sake, and the gospel's, but he shall receive a hundredfold now in this time, houses, and brethren, and sisters, and mothers, and children, and lands, with persecutions; and in the world to come eternal life."—Mark. x. 29, 30. Again, he admonished his disciples to "Consider the lilies how they grow; they toil not, they spin not; and yet I say unto you, that Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these." And further, "If God so clothe the grass, which to day is, and to-morrow is cast into the oven, how much more will he clothe you, O ye of little faith." In the discharge of their duties as disciples of Christ they were not to halt to consider, "saying, what shall we eat? or, what shall we drink? or, wherewithal shall we be clothed;" for "No man, having put his hand to the plow, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God." I did not believe that God was "slack concerning his promise," and I felt that if there was not a way provided it would be evidence of one of two things, that either I was not doing my duty in not shunning to declare the whole counsel of God, or that he had not required the work at my hands at all. So I did not think I should make my duty as a servant of God a secondary matter. I can now look back and see that the Lord has been as good as his word; for very much of my time has been spent in the service of my brethren, occasionally making trips of from two to five weeks in length of time, outside of my regular appointments, and thus traveling from two to three thousand miles a year most of the time since I have been ordained. In my efforts at preaching I have endeavored to use great plainness of speech, exposing doctrine and practice that I consider inconsistent with the Scriptures and calculated to confuse the mind of some of the Lord's little ones; always endeavoring to draw the discriminating line between that which the Scriptures teach and authorize, and that which they do not. Thus when I treat upon the hiring system of the popular religious world I try to show the difference between God's plan and that which was invented by man, in taking care of his ministers. In speaking of those things I sometimes try to show the scriptural duty of the churches toward their ministers, &c.

I will now bring to bear a few incidents that I am sometimes enabled to look upon as evidence of God's special providence. I have always tried to put in good time at work when at home, and what I could not do I would manage to hire all that I could of it done; so I have generally made about as good crops as most of my neighbors, according to my force; and what I have lacked came in some other way. I remember one time when I had got behind with my cotton picking, on account of being gone from home so much, several of the brethren and friends came in one day and picked several hundred pounds for me. Again, my fencing needed repairing, and several brethren and friends came in one day and made me several hundred rails, and a friend brought a wagon and team and hauled them for me. At another time my corn had become very scarce. A brother (deacon) came on a visit from a church some twelve miles distant, and I noticed him looking into my crib. A few weeks afterward his son came with a load of corn and threw it into my crib. In this way other things, such as meat and syrup, have come in time of need. I have seldom ever made a long trip but the brethren have assisted me enough to pay all expenses, and often to replace my labor or time lost at home, and all this where the Primitive Baptists are few and scattering, and generally poor, and without solicitation on my part; for I never mentioned my circumstances with anything like a solicitation to look after my temporal interests except to one church, and that only one time, and that church has done a very small portion of what has been done. So in all those things I have found fathers, mothers, brothers, sisters, houses, land, &c., in abundance, and, I hope, life everlasting (a peace of mind that I could never have found in neglect of duty). I got my little farm paid for, and have been able to meet my obligations generally, about as well as most men in like condition, and, I believe, much better than I would out of the discharge of duty. My wife's health is much better, and I am generally much better situated than when I began preaching. I know something of that feeling of pride and independence of which you speak in your letter to Elder Durand, but I have looked upon the assistance of the brethren as a duty on their part, and the receiving of it as a duty on my part, and all as a provision by the Lord, to enable me to spend my time in his service and the service of the churches. Every christian duty I look upon as a cross to the flesh. I would not have you believe that I have been submissive and obedient in every instance. No. On the other hand I often find myself murmuring and rebellious in mind. Notwithstanding so many manifestations of love and mercy, I am often troubled with the sin of unbelief. I have nothing to boast of. All that I have and am is due alone to the sovereign grace and tender mercy of our covenant-keeping God.

Dear brother, I do not think I should have written the above had I not been made to believe since I first saw your writings in the SIGNS that you are one possessed of a gift from the God of heaven; and as I have experienced some of the things of which you wrote to Elder Durand, my love and sympathy have been drawn out toward you; and I desired to testify to you of the faithfulness of God, and admonish you to go in discharge of the duties impressed upon your mind, trusting him for his grace. I have greatly desired to see you, and hear you preach, and have thought of writing to you and asking you to pay a visit to this country, of which I would be glad if the Lord should ever put it into your mind so to do. I do not suppose I would desire to hear you if you should tell me that you were an able preacher. Please accept this poor but lengthy scribble as a token of love and esteem from one of the least of saints, if one at all. I humbly hope that you may feel an inclination and have the opportunity to answer.

Yours in hope of a better world,
H. B. JONES.

BLANCO, Texas, April 2, 1891.

BRETHREN BEEBE:—Moses says, "Hear, O Israel: The Lord our God is one Lord."—Deut. vi. 4. To which our Savior sets his seal, saying, "Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve." That is, there is but one true and self-existing God, who is eternal, of infinite power, wisdom and goodness, and the Creator and Preserver of all things, visible and invisible. Although the Scriptures teach the inviolable unity of the divine essence, they also teach that there is a plurality of persons (as to office) in that one essence; for our Savior says, "All things that the Father hath are mine." That is, he possesses all the infinite perfections of eternity, glory and power. He therefore says, "The Father worketh hitherto, and I work." For this the Jews sought the more to kill him, because he said that God was his Father, making himself equal with God. Then we must either believe in and contend for the equality of the Son with the Father, or we must charge him with the very grave impiety of claiming an equality to which he was not entitled, and thereby blasphemously debase the Savior, in whom we profess to believe, beneath the dignity of proud and presumptuous men.—Matthew iv. 10; John v. 17; xvi. 15. Again, the Jews said to him, "For a good work we stone thee not; but for blasphemy; and because that thou, being a man, makest thyself God."—John x. 33. If those Jews had misunderstood him as to his claim of equality, or as being a divine person, would he not have corrected them in a matter so momentous, even as the apostle Paul and Barnabas did at Lystra? But so far was he from telling his accusers that they misapprehended his meaning in claiming divine power, he confirmed their inference drawn from his teaching, by appealing to the miracles he performed, saying, "Though ye believe not me, believe the works, that ye may know and believe that the Father is in me, and I in him." He also enjoined that all men should honor the Son, even as they honor the Father.—John v. 23. The inference here is plain, that if we honor the Son as the Father, we must believe that the Son possesses all the infinite perfections of Deity, and is therefore eternal, and in union with the Father and Holy Ghost, and is truly God over all, blessed forever. It seems there is no medium between believing in his perfect Godhead, as a divine person, or running into the grossest infidelity; for what is called christianity would be merely a refined system of idolatry. The commission given to the apostles to baptize in "the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost," teaches the doctrine of trinity in unity; for if the three divine persons were not alike coequal and coeternal, the administration of baptism in their name would be idolatrous profanity. Again, the apostle John says, "There are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word [or Son], and the Holy Ghost: and these three are one."—1 John v. 7. But this could not be true unless the three were coeternal and coequal in all the perfections of Deity, neither as to bearing record in heaven nor as being one; for to bear record in heaven they must be one; and if one, they must possess all the attributes of Deity. As there is no medium between time and eternity, even so there is no medium between creature and Creator. Therefore if the Son and the Holy Ghost are not coeternal with the Father, they are creatures of time; to suppose which is blasphemy. The eternal Sonship of Christ, eternal covenant and eternal election are three links that form the very basis of salvation, which three links suppose and support each other; for their mutual relation and inseparable connection are such that if we ignore one we ignore the three, and if we accept one we necessarily accept all. How absurd then to hold (as some here professing to be Primitive Baptists do, or say they believe) to election, and yet deny eternal covenant and the eternal Sonship of Christ. If, as the Scriptures teach, there is a trinity in unity, they are one in will, one in purpose, and one in the accomplishment of his purposes.

Having in a concise way considered one of the links of the golden chain, I will now briefly notice the other two, and first that of election. Election then is founded upon the everlasting (or eternal) love of God, and is a fruit of gratuitous and sovereign grace. In reference to God's elect the eternal Son says, "Thou hast loved them, as thou hast loved me," whom he loved before the foundation of the world.—John xvii. 23, 24. Hence his choice of them in Christ, and appointment to eternal life; and unto them it was given to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven. Many are called, but they alone are chosen. They are avenged of their Lord as his elect. Their names are written in heaven, which is given those for whom it was prepared. The elect are not to be deceived by false christs and false prophets. God will send his angels, and gather his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other, to whom he will say, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world."—Matt. xiii. 11; xxv. 34; Luke xviii. 7; x. 20; Matt. xxiv. 24, 31; xxv. 35. These few of the many passages of Scripture plainly teach eternal, personal and immutable election. Paul, in Ephesians i., says, "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ: according as he hath chosen us [or his elect] in him before the foundation of the world," and "predestinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ," and to the obtaining of an inheritance in him; and as the Father gave him to be Head over all things to the church (or elect), which is his body, the fullness of him that filleth all in all, so their eternal life and all its accompanying blessings were given them in him. If all spiritual blessings were given the elect in Christ, and they were chosen in him, and predestinated to the adoption of children in him, and to the obtaining of an inheritance in him, and he was given to be Head over all things to them before the foundation of the world, all three links are clearly embraced; that is, the eternal Sonship of Christ, eternal election, and eternal covenant union. This is true, or we must suppose what the apostle taught to be only in purpose; that is, the purposed Sonship of Christ, a purposed election and purposed covenant.

I will now treat specially on the eternal covenant; but I will remark that all the links are so inseparably connected that it is difficult to treat of one and not embrace one or both of the others. The covenant of grace, then, as subsisting between the persons of the trinity from eternity, sustains such relations in the divine economy that without it salvation would be impossible. Though it is called the new covenant, this does not have reference to its date, but to its revelation; for it is certainly eternal, as the Scriptures fully teach. Paul says, in Galatians iii. 17, "And this I say, that the covenant, that was confirmed before of God in Christ, the law, which was four hundred and thirty years after [that is, after it was made to Abraham], cannot disannul, that it should make the promise of none effect." In Titus i. 2 he says, "In hope of eternal life, which God, that cannot lie, promised before the world began." In Hebrews xiii. 20 he terms the blood of Christ the blood of the everlasting or eternal covenant. A little before our Savior's last sufferings he said, "Father, the hour is come;" that is, the destined hour fixed upon in eternity, when the counsel of peace was between them both.—Isa. xlvi. 16. David says, "Although my house be not so with God; yet he hath made with me an everlasting [or eternal] covenant, ordered in all things, and sure: for this is all my salvation, and all my desire, although he make it not to grow." The covenant being eternal, and therefore fixed as to its extent and provisions, it cannot be either diminished or extended.—2 Sam. xxiii. 5. In Psalm lxxxix. it is said, "I have made a covenant with my chosen;" that is, antitypical David. "Thy seed [or body, the church] will I establish forever." "I have laid help upon one [or Christ] that is mighty;" "with whom my hand [or power] shall be established;" "and in my name shall his horn [or kingdom] be exalted." "I will make him my first-born, higher than the kings of the earth." "My covenant shall stand fast with him. His seed also will I make to endure forever, and his throne as the days of heaven. If his children forsake my law, and walk not in my judgments;" "then will I visit their transgression with the rod, and their iniquity with stripes. Nevertheless my loving-kindness will I not utterly take from him, nor suffer my faithfulness to fail. My covenant will I not break, nor alter the thing that is gone out of my lips." "His seed shall endure forever." "It shall be established forever," "as a faithful witness in heaven." The above quoted language speaks for itself; and how can the candid reader consider its import and yet say that he does not believe in eternal covenant, nor the eternal Sonship of Christ? One preacher told me that he did not believe it, who seemed to be rather a leader among his brethren, who claim to be Primitive Baptists.

Again, our blessed Redeemer (John vi. 38, 39) says, "I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me. And this is the Father's will which hath sent me, that of all which he hath given me I should lose nothing, but should raise it up again at the last day." "Thine they were, and thou gavest them me." "All that the Father giveth me shall come to me." As the Son came down from heaven, he was coeternal with the Father; and as he came to do the will of the Father, he came as the messenger of the everlasting or eternal covenant. That is, he came to represent, redeem and save all that were given him of the Father, as they were his by creation, preservation and choice, or election. As the Son says, "I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do," we understand him to declare that he had accomplished all his covenant engagements, and completed the designs of grace for which the Father sent him; or, as he says in Isaiah, for which the Lord and his Spirit sent him.—John vi. 37-39; xvii. 4; Isa. xlvi. 16.

Although the texts of Scripture quoted in vindication of the eternal Sonship of Christ, eternal election, and eternal covenant, are a mere sample of what might be adduced, yet I deem them amply sufficient to convince the unprejudiced inquirer after truth of the doctrine set forth. The harmonies as embodied in and as flowing from this glorious and soul-reviving doctrine are such that mercy and truth are met together, righteousness and peace have kissed each other. Truth shall spring out of the earth, and righteousness shall look down from heaven. As the eternal Son (as to his divinity) is the brightness of the Father's glory, and the express image of his person, all the glorious perfections of Deity unite and harmonize in connection with his human nature, in accomplishing or discharging every stipulation of the everlasting or eternal covenant, and bringing in everlasting righteousness; therefore "judgment shall dwell in the wilderness, and righteousness remain in the fruitful field. And the work of righteousness shall be peace; and the effect of righteousness, quietness and assurance forever. And my people shall dwell in a peaceable habitation, and in sure dwellings, and in quiet resting places."—Isa. xxxii. 16-18.

May such evidences of covenant favor and electing love inspire our hearts with adoring gratitude, is the desire of your brother in gospel bonds,

JAMES WAGNER.

HOGANSVILLE, Ga., April 10, 1891.

ELDER W. L. BEEBE—DEAR AND BELOVED BROTHER IN THE LORD:—For some reason known to our heavenly Father I am impressed to write you a short letter. I address you personally because I am acquainted with you, and have preached with you. I believe that we have sat together in heavenly places in Jesus in years gone by; and I still love and esteem you as one of the Lord's chosen vessels of mercy, and as a dear minister and fellow-laborer in the vineyard of our blessed Lord and Master. Also, I feel assured that you are so richly blessed with the precious love of Jesus that you are wholly prepared to throw the mantle of christian charity over my imperfections in this short scribble; and should I err from the truth you will in faithfulness point out the blunder, and in love forgive.

In the first place, I will say that if I am not a consistent Primitive Baptist in my life, and in all my religious devotions, I crave to be such above all things else. O how I long, thirst and pray to be right, to be like Jesus in my life and in my spirit, yea, to be holy as he is holy; but, alas! I am nothing but a poor sinner, full of sin, so much so that when I would do good evil is present with me, and that which I would I do not. So, to sum up the whole matter, I am yet a poor prisoner of hope, bearing about daily a body of sin and death; but I am trusting and hoping that Christ will ere long deliver and give me the victory over all sin, and a happy entrance into that house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens.

What I want to speak of is the spirit manifested in the communications of some of the contributors to the SIGNS. I will not personate any brother, as I feel too little, and every way unworthy to rebuke an Elder; for, if not deceived, I can esteem all the brotherhood better than myself. While I can detect a carnal spirit in some things written in the SIGNS, I feel at times that I am altogether carnal, so I do not nonfellowship a brother for every little departure. My prayer is that God may teach us all the good and right way. It is apparent to my mind that there is a manifest spirit in some articles published in the SIGNS combatting with an unknown antagonist. The inference is clear that there is a latent enemy somewhere that must be exposed, but as to his whereabouts we are left to surmise. There is a thrust made in some articles at brethren who are supposed to deny the doctrine of the sovereignty of God and absolute predestination. Now, dear brother Beebe, I want to know if there are any Old School or Primitive Baptists in America who deny the sovereignty of God, or who deny that God is a God of foreknowledge and predestination. I am aware of the fact that many (perhaps a large majority) Old Baptists in the United States do not believe that God predestinated and made absolute every wicked act of men and devils. Baptists of Georgia and Alabama (and I can say in all the southern states, so far as my knowledge extends) believe with all their heart in the sovereignty of God; in fact, I know of no Old School Baptist but what does contend earnestly for God's supreme rule. They hold and believe that God rules over all worlds and beings, that men and devils are under his complete reign, and that he has the supreme rule over sin; that he permits men and devils to go so far, and that he in his sovereignty so immediately controls their acts as to cause their wrath to praise him, often making their wicked purposes subserve his will in bringing deliverance to his people; so we can see how that all things (both good and bad) work together for good to them that love God. But while Baptists in this section believe in the doctrine of God's sovereignty and predestination, they do not believe that he has appointed and made absolute every ungodly act committed by ungodly sinners, but that he willed to permit it; hence they believe in the absolute and permissive will of God. They believe that, in the creation of man, God made him good, and not only good, but very good; that man made himself a sinner by violating God's holy law; that sin is the transgression of law; that by the disobedience of one man (Adam) sin entered into the world, and death by sin: and so death has passed upon all men, for that all have sinned, all are guilty before God; and that he will bring their every wicked act into judgment, and will punish every sin, whether practical or original, unless said sins are atoned for and put away by the blood of Jesus.

As to the plan of salvation, they believe it was perfected in the infinite mind of the triune God before the world began; that everything necessary for its fulfillment was fixed, and that the arrangement was so complete and full that not anything can be added to nor diminished from it; that the precious graces flowing out of that infinite plan will continue their effectual reign until every one of the elect of God, who were chosen and given grace in Christ before the foundation of the world, will be called with a holy calling, born of the Spirit, and graciously preserved until the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ, when their last enemy will be destroyed, and they will be made spiritual, like unto their blessed Lord, and will ever be with the Lord.

Affectionately your brother and companion in tribulation,

A. B. WHATLEY.

REMARKS.—From personal acquaintance with our esteemed brother, Elder Whatley, we are satisfied that the difference between him and those to whose expressions he objects consists wholly in the manner of stating the same sentiment. We are sure that our brother would not insist upon others using an unscriptural form of expression, even in defining the doctrine which he holds as true. The Scriptures nowhere declare that God permits anything which he has not before determined to be done. But our brother covers the whole ground when he asserts that "God rules over all worlds and beings; that men and devils are under his complete reign, and that he has the supreme rule over sin." Necessarily this is the doctrine of the predestination of all things. We see no real difference between the doctrine for which our brother contends and that to which he objects, since he will not claim that there is any possibility that God may be mistaken in the actual development of the things which he only decrees permissively. Since God declares the end from the beginning, the things which are permitted are as certain as those which are positively determined. Is it not more safe and consistent that we should accept what God has said in the inspired word than to substitute expressions which have not his authority? Our brother manifests the loving spirit of a follower of Jesus in his letter; and we can assure him that however we may differ in the use of words, we have the warmest love and fellowship for that spirit. We would suggest that the word "triune" is not found in the Scriptures as applied to God. It is a Roman Catholic invention to bring the mystery of God down to the comprehension of finite minds. It is certainly better to say, with Paul, "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places [or things] in Christ: according as he hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before him in love: having predestinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to himself, according to the good pleasure of his will, to the praise of the glory of his grace, wherein he hath made us accepted in the Beloved." This truth is revealed in the saints by the Holy Ghost. There is no limit to the fullness of God as expressed by each of the names which God has revealed; and these three are one. No finite intelligence can comprehend this mystery, yet it is clearly shown in the experience of every subject of the grace of God. None can know it by reason, but every saint does know it by faith.

In most fervent and unreserved love to brother Whatley, and in earnest approbation of the meek spirit in which he writes, these remarks are submitted for his consideration and that of our readers. We will repeat what has been many times publicly stated, that the acceptance of our form of expression on this subject has never been made a test of fellowship by those who advocate the unlimited predestination of God in all things. So long as the inspired Scriptures are acknowledged to be true, our fellowship is not disturbed by the failure of brethren to indorse our form of expression in proclaiming this or any point of the doctrine of God our Savior. The truth certainly will not alienate the affections of the saints. When wars and fightings prevail there is strong reason to apprehend that the saints are walking after the fleshly mind.—ED.

"THAT good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God."—Romans xii. 2.

There are some who appear to think that there are differences in the will of God relative to its acceptance with him. I wish to notice, first, that God's will is all acceptable to him. It is only to the saints that the question is pertinent, Is that will acceptable to them?

It is known that I have proposed to publish a book, and that I desired to know how many were wanted before its publication would be assured; and I desire to accomplish two objects by referring to it. First, to apply the text quoted to our personal experience; and second, to inform the brethren that it now appears doubtful if I shall be able to publish it. There is no text of Scripture that can really comfort us only as it applies to our experience, and is received in humble, spiritual and reconciling love; but as the "natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God," however philosophical or reasonable it may appear, it is necessary that the child of God should be prepared by the new birth, by which he is reconciled to God, through the application of the blood of Christ. "For if when we were enemies we were reconciled to God [not reconciling God to us] by the death of his Son, much more, being reconciled, we shall be saved by his life."—Rom. v. 10. "And all things are of God, who hath reconciled us to himself by Jesus Christ, and hath given to us the ministry of reconciliation; to wit, that God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them; and hath committed unto us the word [or declaration of the fact] of reconciliation."—2 Cor. v. 18, 19. This is what the apostle exhorts us to "prove," or show forth by our daily conduct and conversation. He says, "I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service."—Romans xii. 1. The question arises, How are we to know that our bodies are acceptable to God, only as we feel that his grace guides them into paths of obedience? In those paths only are we satisfied. In those paths only are we reconciled to see ourselves. In order that we should understand the matchless perfections of God's will it hath pleased the Father to surround our paths with temptations. Not led us into, to leave us there; but he hath so wonderfully adapted all things to our experiences that we are sweetly reconciled, not to the present sense of our weakness, but the full perfection of God's will, which, when we are enabled by faith to see it, embraces us and all our surroundings with the final victory. "And this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith." It is to this whole will of God, taken together, that we are sometimes sensibly reconciled; and we find there must be something therein that we feel is not congenial to us. Sin is not acceptable to our inner man. Christ has cleansed us from all sin, showing that we have the "mind of Christ." Disappointments may not seem to be acceptable to us in our proud natures; but when we are led to see the will of God in them we desire to prove it to the comfort of the brotherhood, and are thus enabled to fulfill the apostle's exhortation, "Prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God. For I say, through the grace given unto me, to every man that is among you, not to think of himself more highly than he ought to think; but to think soberly, according as God hath dealt to every man the measure of faith. For as we have many members in one body, and all members have not the same office: so we, being many, are one body in Christ, and every one members one of another." Here we learn how to accept what God wills; and we are profited thereby, for we are thus taught that he doeth all things well. We may not conclude properly, when we are hindered for a season from doing what we greatly desire, that God has so ordered that we never shall; for if God so wills it our hindrances are set only as tests of the power of our faith, or as proofs of the reality of God's grace. Paul referred to this spirit of faith when he told the Roman brethren that he had greatly desired to see them, "but was let hitherto."—Rom. i. 13. He doubtlessly was referring to the time when he saw such wonderful works of God's grace; but little did he think that God's purpose was so strangely connected with his desire that he should "see Rome," according to his desire, though the means of going should be so averse to all human planning; but so steadily did he feel the drawings of his spirit toward his brethren in Rome; not, as Mr. Talmadge has said, "to gratify his natural curiosity to behold the city and its relics," but to enjoy the blessed fruits of spiritual joy with them. The Lord stood by him after the council at Jerusalem, "and said, Be of good cheer, Paul: for as thou hast testified of me in Jerusalem, so must thou bear witness also at Rome."—Acts xxiii. 11. Again, when a prisoner in bonds, conveyed by ship, destined to pass perilous danger of wrecking, he was enabled to say, "There stood by me this night the angel of God, whose I am, and whom I serve, saying, Fear not, Paul; thou must be brought before Cæsar."—Acts xxvii. 23, 24. He was to go still in bonds to Rome, and arrived safely and rejoicing, though it seemed to be a strange way to "prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God."

About fifteen years ago I was brought to a life of suffering. So severely were my afflictions set upon me that I could not lie down at night, although compelled to labor whenever strength permitted; but I felt to while away the lonesome hours of night in writing, and thus began my poor manuscript on "Moral and Spiritual Education." The latter (and to me the most important) was published, and but few pamphlets are left. So as the years go by I still feel an undying desire, to say the least, to leave a humble record in this world of my faith in God, and the sense of my dependence upon him both for moral and spiritual blessings. While it now looks doubtful of being soon gratified, I still feel like Job, "O that my thoughts were now written! O that they were printed in a book!" Thus I did desire to prove the good and acceptable and perfect will of God; but it may be that so God designed to reconcile me to his will. If so, I will need his grace to guide me, to cheer me, and to sustain me still.

Thanking all for the kind interest shown in my subjects as published in the first number of the SIGNS for January, I will only say that it has already amply rewarded me for every disappointment of mine to read the kind letters that I have received. Though I still hope, if the Lord will, to publish it at some future date, I feel unable at the present time to do so. I trust the Lord will lack no ability, whatever are my failures, to carry on his good work of grace in our hearts; only may that grace prove to us how good it is to wait upon him, to trust him, and finally to praise him.

As ever, your little brother in hopeful bonds,

A. B. BREES.

WAVERLY, N. Y., March, 1891.

BRETHREN BEEBE:—When you have space, if you think proper, please publish the letter of brother Fisher. I feel it will benefit many of God's little, trembling lambs.

Yours unworthily,

D. M. VAIL.

SANTA FE, MO., Jan. 6, 1891.

DEAR BROTHER VAIL AND FAMILY:—Your welcome letter came duly to hand a few days ago, and we were glad to hear from you. It does our souls good to hear from those that we love for the truth's sake. We often feel lonely and dejected; feel that there is none like us; that there is none that have just such troubles and trials as we do. But when we are privileged to receive a letter, or to hear some one else speak of trials and difficulties that they are called to pass through, and we can see that they are like unto us, how it does strengthen and encourage us. It does me good when I see that others can draw my picture better than I can myself. I often fear that I cannot make it ugly enough. You speak of being so cold, dumb and blind the most of your time. Now, my brother, that is my experience, and I feel sometimes that it must be mine alone; but I guess I am mistaken. But for a moment sometimes it does indeed seem strange to me that any one should thus complain who has been enabled of the Lord to preach his truth. It appears to me that for a man to be enabled to preach the truth to the glory of God and to the comfort and edification of his dear people, he has to know something; and I tell you he does know something. He has learned something that has never yet been taught in any theological school on earth, and that is this, "Salvation is of the Lord." One might inquire, Where does he learn it then? "In the belly or hell" is where Jonah was enabled to proclaim the truth.

Brother Vail, you make use of another word in your complaint that I believe I know somewhat the meaning of, and that is presumption. But to be brief, I do not believe there is more than one class of people it troubles much, and that is those who have been enabled to see themselves less than nothing and vanity, yet have a desire to be useful in the Master's kingdom. And I believe it works in them all manner of carefulness to try to know from whence come these desires. O! is it really the pride of my own heart prompting me to appear to be somebody, when I really feel to be nothing? O God! search me, and keep me from presumptuous sin.

You speak of Elder Francis' communication in the SIGNS. Yes, that is good. It cannot be beaten; for I believe it to be the truth, and the truth never was beaten yet. You feel to be thankful that none of God's servants in the east oppose the doctrine. Well, I hope I am thankful also; for it is indeed precious truth to me. When one comes bringing evidence of having been born again, that is what begets fellowship; and then, the more such an one is found following in the footsteps of the Master, the more is our fellowship strengthened. But "him that is weak in the faith receive ye." For when I consider when and how it was that I received this truth (which was about seventeen years after I received a hope in Christ), and the joy I experience in believing, I feel that I have no right to fall out with those that are not able to receive it as I see it; but being weak myself, I feel to be in sympathy with others that are weak. There are Baptists in Missouri who believe the doctrine, and there are Baptists that do not believe it. There are some that belong to the same church where I have membership who do not believe just as I do, and I believe them to be as good brethren as there are in the church. But we have never as yet fallen out about it, and if it is the Lord's will I hope we never may; for I hate divisions; but sometimes they have to come. For the last ten or twelve years the Baptists of Missouri have been dividing on what is called Means doctrine, which doctrine I can have no fellowship for whatever. They started off about like the Missionary or New School did, and at the rate they are going I think they will soon be up with them. They already have their Sunday School, and I see from their paper one of their leaders is at present in Durango, Mexico, prospecting with the view of establishing a Mission.

But I must close. Write to me again when convenient. Our love to you all. Your brother in hope,
MARTIN D. FISHER.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., March 22, 1891.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—In closed please find two dollars for another year's SIGNS. Being cir-cumstanced so that we cannot often meet with the dear people of God, we esteem it a privilege that we can through the SIGNS read the experience of so many of them, and often feel a great union of soul to them.

"I love to meet among them now,
Before thy gracious feet to bow,
Though vilest of them all.
But can I bear the piercing thought,
What if my name should be left out,
When thou for them shalt call?"

I often feel, O that it were with me as in days that are past! I look back to the time when I was favored to sit under the ministry of that highly honored servant of God, John Kershaw. Many a time at the close of the day's service have I wished that I did not have to go out into the world again; and I could say,

"My willing soul would stay
In such a frame as this,
And sit and sing herself away
To everlasting bliss."

But God does not design his people to live on frames and feelings. O No. We have to prove again and again that nothing but a precious Christ will do either to live or die with. Many a time I have come to him feeling like Peter, "Lord, to whom can I go? Thou hast the words of eternal life." Ah, there is no where else we can go; in our right mind, no where else we wish to go.

"When all created streams are dried,
Thy fullness is the same;
May I with this be satisfied,
And glory in thy name."

How often have we proved all other streams vile and polluted, emanating from cisters, broken cisters, that can hold no water. What a mercy that God will not let his people rest satisfied with anything short of himself, but is (by his dealings with us), continually reminding us that this is not our rest. It may suit the worldly, but it cannot satisfy a heaven-born soul. Well, if there is any difference between us and others, we have to say with the apostle, "Who maketh thee to differ? and what hast thou that thou hast not received?" No room for boasting here. It is all grace, free grace, from first to last. I many times ask myself, Can it be possible that such a vile, sinful, unworthy creature can be an object of God's rich, free, unmerited grace and mercy? and I have to exclaim,

"Why me, why me, O blessed God,
Why such a wretch as me,
Who must forever live in hell,
Were not salvation free?"

Wishing you much of the blessing and presence of God in your arduous labors, I am yours very unworthily,
S. J. CLEGG.

BRETHREN BEEBE:—The following short letter was written for my father, Deacon Cornelius Myers, a short time before his death. I will send it to you, together with his obituary notice, for publication.

E. R. MYERS.

MARCH 18, 1891.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—Today is the eighty-fifth anniversary of my birth. I have professed a hope for fifty-nine years; and as I feel that the time of my departure is near at hand, I want to say a few words to my dear brethren and correspondents. I have seen the last one taken away by death that stood with us in the division. I cannot see to read nor write, and have to get some one to do it for me. Many passages of Scripture come to me with sweet comfort, such as this, "Blessed is every one that feareth the Lord; that walketh in his ways. For thou shalt eat the labor of thine hands: happy shalt thou be, and it shall be well with thee. Thy wife shall be as a fruitful vine by the sides of thine house: thy children like olive plants round about thy table. Behold, that thus shall the man be blessed that feareth the Lord. The Lord shall bless thee out of Zion: and thou shalt see the good of Jerusalem all the days of thy life. Yea, thou shalt see thy children's children, and peace upon Israel." I think I have seen all this. Many more passages come to my mind. I have not been able to earn anything for the last sixteen years. The SIGNS has come to me most of that time through the liberality of dear brethren, for which I desire to thank you all. I have been confined to my room and bed since last October; yet when I hear from poor Mary Parker and others, so much afflicted, I think how wonderfully blessed I am. I feel that I am ready to go; there is nothing in the way.

Now, dear brethren, I bid you all farewell for a little while. It will not be very long until we shall see each other, and know as we are known.

CORNELIUS MYERS.

INTERCESSION OF MOSES.

(Concluded from last number.)

WILL the brethren Beebe please give their views on Ex. xxxii. 31-33, and more especially on the book there spoken of by Moses, and also by the Lord? Their compliance will oblige a brother, I hope, though most unworthy to claim relationship.

LAMONTE, Mo., March 7, 1891.

"And Moses returned unto the Lord, and said, Oh, this people have sinned a great sin, and have made them gods of gold. Yet now, if thou wilt forgive their sin; and if not, blot me, I pray thee, out of thy book which thou hast written. And the Lord said unto Moses, Whosoever hath sinned against me, him will I blot out of my book."—Ex. xxxii. 31-33.

"And the Lord said unto Moses, Whosoever hath sinned against me, him will I blot out of my book." This answer to the prayer of Moses is not to be regarded as signifying that the Lord just at that moment determined what he would do in the case. To the limited comprehension of mortals the record given in our text seems to indicated a change in the purpose of God, as if the plea of Moses had produced an alteration in his design with reference to the nation of Israel. But to the faith of the saints, which is of the operation of God, all the circumstances surrounding the children of Israel, including their great sin, were but attending incidents for the manifestation of the immutability of the counsel of God, in which the purpose of his grace was fulfilled in the preservation of that nation, as a type of the sure salvation of his antitypical Israel. To the natural mind even of the saints it does not appear that the Lord withdrew his favor from those who had sinned in making and worshipping the idol. Aaron and all Israel except Moses and Joshua, were engaged in that idolatry; yet the protection and the favor of God were over them through all their wanderings in the wilderness, and he finally brought their tribes into the possession of the land which he had promised unto Abraham. From this fact it is clear that it was not meant by the blotting out of those transgressors, that the favor of God should be withdrawn from them as his chosen nation. It was not a disappointment to the Lord when the nation of Israel was disobedient to the law which they had received from him. Their perverse and rebellious nature was known to him even when he made promise to their father Abraham. Their bondage in Egypt was as positively declared in that promise as was their possession of the land of Canaan. That it was not the will of God to destroy that sinful people at the time when he spoke the decree in our text, is manifest from the very next verse after our text. The Lord says, "Therefore now go, lead the people unto the place of which I have spoken unto thee; behold, mine Angel shall go before thee; nevertheless in the day when I visit I will visit their sin upon them. And the Lord plagued the people, because they made the calf, which Aaron made." This was the literal fulfillment of the declaration of the Lord in our text. He did visit the sin of that idolatrous nation upon them; yet he did not violate his promise which he had given to Abraham. In a figure Moses laid down his own life for the people of Israel, in this prayer to be blotted out of the book of the favor of God, with them in their sin. The answer of the Lord displays the unwavering justice with which he visits the sins of every transgressor upon the guilty one. Not even the grace which he had so signally bestowed upon the patriarchs could shield their sinning children. God is faithful in the administration of his strict justice against all their evil deeds, while he does not forget his gracious promise given to their fathers. Such justice and judgment as God manifests in the administration of his own holy law, can never be grasped by the limited comprehension of finite intelligence. While every sinner is visited with the just recompense of his sin, so that justice is fully satisfied, the infinite grace of God is displayed in saving his chosen people from their sins. The subjects of eternal love are saved in Christ Jesus not merely from the penalty due to their sins, but from their sins. The blood of Jesus Christ cleanses them from all sin. They are therefore free from the law of sin and death. Against that law they cannot sin, because they are no more under that law. Being under law to Christ, they find their whole allegiance due to him. His law is perfect, and needs no amendment nor addition from the law of Moses. This perfect law is put in the inward parts and written in the hearts of the people of God. Thus it is not a heavy bondage, but a delightful privilege to them to walk according to this law of liberty. They love holiness, and hate sin, because the principle of holiness dwells in them. When they yield their members servants unto sin, they are living after the flesh, and they are then blotted out of the book of the manifest favor of God. Paul expresses this truth when he tells the saints, "Be not deceived; God is not mocked; for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. For he that soweth to his flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting."—Gal. vi. 7, 8.

There is neither eternal life as the reward of the obedience of the natural Israelite to that law which was given by Moses, nor eternal death as the penalty of disobedience. The Israelites were already condemned as sinners before they received the Sinai law. The only promise to those who were obedient was temporal blessing; the consequence of disobedience was temporal punishment. Their great sin of idolatry in the worship of the golden calf which Aaron had made for them, brought upon them great plagues from the Lord; but it did not dissolve their relationship to Abraham, in whom they were chosen as the peculiar people of God. So the Lord gave assurance to Moses that his Angel should still go before him in leading Israel to the promised land. His judgment in blotting them out of his book did not involve the utter destruction of that rebellious nation. For they all were alike under condemnation in this idolatry. They were indeed made to suffer greatly as the consequence of their sin, and were thus blotted out of the book of the divine favor by which they had been delivered from bondage, and been led thus far on their journey through the wilderness. The justice of God is manifest in the visiting of the sin of Israel upon those who were guilty, and in denying the prayer of Moses that he might bear the penalty due to the sinning Israelites. In this is shown the impossibility of any salvation for sinners by the substitution of an innocent victim for the guilty. Nothing but the life of the sinner could answer the demand of the law of God. It is because Christ Jesus is the life of all his people that strict justice required his life for their sin. Without that vital unity the sin of his people could not have been laid on him, and his suffering of death could not have satisfied the law for their transgression. The life of Israel was not in Moses, and therefore he could not satisfy the law which they had transgressed. Death could only be visited upon them who had sinned.

In his righteous judgment the Lord had written Moses in the book of his approbation as being a servant faithful in all his house. In this particular he was a type of the Lord Jesus, who is called the righteous Servant of God, in whom the holy demands of infinite justice are fully satisfied. The type could go no further than the desire of Moses to suffer with the sinning Israelites. This desire could not be granted, because he was written in the book of the Lord as obedient to the precepts which God had given to him. There was no provision in the legal dispensation, of which Moses was the minister, for grace to be extended to the repenting sinner. The law which was given by him had no power to give life; so, Moses had not the ability to bear the sin of the people whose ruler he was. Not even at his own request would the Lord blot him out of the book of his just approval. That book is represented as being already written; signifying that the decision of the divine judgment was not even then suspended upon any future developments in time. That book is not like the books which are written by men, a mere record upon paper or parchment. It is that eternal purpose which God purposed in himself, which is immutable and complete before the foundation of the world, even before time itself was created. In the predestinating choice of God this book contains all the election of the grace of God as holy and without blame before him in love; but all their righteousness is in their holy Redeemer. In the Lord they are justified, and in him they shall glory. In themselves they have no righteousness wherein to trust. Their only ground of rejoicing is in the truth that their names are written in the heaven of the approval of God in Christ Jesus.

Our inquiring brother will understand that in our view the book of which the Lord speaks is the same book out of which Moses had asked to be blotted, if the Lord would not forgive the sin of Israel. It cannot refer to that eternal counsel of God of which the inspired David says, by the Spirit of Christ, "My substance was not hid from thee, when I was made in secret, and curiously wrought in the lowest parts of the earth. Thine eyes did see my substance, yet being imperfect; and in thy book all my members were written, which in continuance were fashioned, when as yet there was none of them."—Psalms cxxxix. 15, 16. There can never be any such thing as blotting out of that eternal purpose of God even the most minute item which he has appointed, since the immutability of his counsel is revealed as one of his peculiar characteristics. In that unchanging purpose of his grace God has given to his people the perfect law of holiness which he has revealed in Christ Jesus. This is the antitype of all the laws which were given to the nation of Israel. As they were rebellious and disobedient, so the chosen people of God, whom he has called by his grace, are often found living after the flesh, and bringing upon themselves that fearful experience of darkness which is called death. Under such righteous visitation of the chastening rod, the disobedient child feels what it is to be blotted out of the book of the favor of the Lord. David knew this when he prayed for the forgiving grace of God under the consciousness of his great sin. He appeals to the mercy and loving-kindness of God, acknowledges his transgressions, and prays, "Purge me with hyssop, and I shall be clean; wash me, and I shall be whiter than snow." "Hide thy face from my sins, and blot out all mine iniquities. Create in me a clean heart, O God; and renew a right spirit within me. Cast me not away from thy presence; and take not thy holy spirit from me."—Psalms li. 7, 9-11. None can desire what is expressed in this prayer except those who have received the holy spirit by personal experience. When by grace they were made to rejoice in the hope of salvation through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus, they realized that they were written in the book of justification from all things from which they could not be justified by the law of Moses. In seasons of conscious guilt, they cannot find that assurance by which they dare to claim themselves as written in that book. This is the antitype of the blotting out of the rebellious natural Israelite from the book of the approval of the holy law of God. The Lord did not express condemnation against any of the heathen nations for their idolatry. Against Israel he denounces his judgments in their departure from the commandments which he had given to them. So the law of his gospel kingdom applies to every one who loves the Lord, and it is sin against him when they fail to keep his commandments in following him. The consequence of such sin is felt by them in being blotted out from the book of the approval of the Lord, and from the answer of a good conscience toward God.

Doubtless many of the chosen people of God are blotted out of the light of the approving presence of their Lord by reason of their rebellion against his commandments. Evidently none can have the answer of a good conscience toward God in obedience to his commandments while they are living in rebellion against his directions. Such are blotted out of the book of the Lord in their experience in this present world. As the eternal life of the saints is not purchased by their good works, so they can never lose that eternal life by their evil works. All the life found in obedience to the law as given to Israel, and all the death in disobedience, finds its antitypical fulfillment in the present experience of the saints. Their life in Christ Jesus is not dependent upon their works either good or bad.

MICAH VI. 6.

THAT solemn day will soon be here,
When I must meet my God;
Before the Judge I must appear,
The great, almighty God.
How can I unto him appear
Who just and holy is?
My heart is base, and vile, and bare,
And filthy rags my dress.
I've no good works, nor ought to plead,
Before the judgment-seat;
I'm naught but a poor, broken reed,
My heart full of deceit.
Then how can I approach to God,
And there I sure must come,
To hear the great, tremendous word,
"Depart," or, "Make him room?"
To Jesus Christ, the sinner's Friend,
My soul for help doth flee;
No other hope has my poor soul
For vast eternity.

SELF-LOATHING.

O HEIR of heaven! Can it be
Such favor free applies to me,
So filthy, black and vile?
For I of sinners am the chief,
And sure if aught has cause for grief,
'Tis my backsliding heart.
O I am vile, corrupt, unclean,
A sink of sin, a cage wherein
All noisome birds abound!
The secret promptings of my heart
Oft cause my guilty soul to start,
And tremble at the sound.
For there, alas! all sin resides,
There Satan hides, and there, besides,
All errors find a place.
There unbelief its standard rears,
The world, the flesh, and doubts and fears,
All, all I find but grace.
'Tis all in vain, dear friends, to say,
"Take courage, pray; you're in the way,"
And promises repeat;
For trembling saints take heedful care,
But I so careless am, each snare
Entwines my hasty feet.
I must more solid comfort find;
Your speeches kind to ease my mind
Are still of no avail.
My soul deplores her absent Lord,
And, till he speaks a kindly word,
Her foes will e'en prevail.
O how I long to reach the place
Where his dear face, in streams of grace,
Will sweetly smile on me!
Here wars and tumults never cease,
But there is joy and lasting peace
To all eternity.

MARRIAGES.

At the residence of Charles B. Livesay in Fairfield, on April 21st, 1891, by Elder Thomas J. Wyman, Mr. Frank A. Livesay and Miss Olive Mann, both of Fairfield, Lenawee Co., Mich.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

SISTER Abigail Howell Beakes, beloved wife of brother Wm. O. Beakes, departed this mortal life at the family residence near Howell's Depot, Orange Co., N. Y., on Friday a. m., April 17th, 1891, in the 83d year of her age.

She was born Feb. 23d, 1809, and was united in marriage with her now bereaved companion on Feb. 19th, 1834, the late Elder Gilbert Beebe officiating; by whom also she was baptized in the fellowship of the church at New Vernon, in company with her husband, Mrs. Loton Horton, Mrs. Fanny J. King and Jane Corwin, on Sunday, Sept. 24th, 1843, all of whom have passed from the shores of time except our dear brother Beakes, who is full of years, infirmities and sorrows. May the Lord sustain and comfort him during his remaining days on earth. Two sons and three daughters also survive their mother, who cherish her memory and mourn their loss, which to her is great gain. But one member of her father's family survives her, Mr. Samuel C. Howell, of Howell's Depot. Sister Louisa H. Tuthill, who died on May 28th, 1890, was a sister of the deceased.

Sister Beakes had been afflicted for many years, and very seldom went from home; but she enjoyed the visits of her kindred in Christ, and was very free to talk about her hope in Christ, and of the comfort ministered to her by her Savior in her home. She said she received much comfort in reading and meditation while alone. A short time before her death she fell and broke her arm, but it is thought that at the last she was stricken with apoplexy. Her end seemed very peaceful.

The funeral services were held on Sunday, April 19th, when an unusually large concourse of relatives and friends assembled at the New Vernon meeting-house, when a discourse was delivered by her pastor, Elder Benton Jenkins, from Heb. ii. 9; after which all that was mortal of the loved one was deposited in the cemetery at that place.

"Through all the various shifting scene
Of life's mistaken ill or good,
Thy hand, O God, conducts unseen
The beautiful vicissitude."

—Ed.

DIED—At his residence in Aldborough, Ontario, on Friday morning, March 27th, Mr. Duncan S. McColl, eldest son of the late Samuel McColl, who settled in Aldborough in 1819, where the deceased was born, on the farm where he resided during the sixty-five years of his earthly sojourn.

By the death of his father, which occurred many years ago, the care of a large family devolved upon Duncan, which trust was faithfully executed, as attested by the fact that all his brothers and sisters ever regarded him with implicit confidence and filial obedience. He is survived by a truly bereft wife and three daughters, his aged mother, now in her ninety-fourth year, three brothers and two sisters, all of whom feel that they have lost the pillar upon which they have ever rested confidently in times of trouble and affliction. May the hand of divine love minister comfort to each of their bleeding hearts. None but the God of all grace can heal the wound which they have been called to endure. Weak human sympathy cannot reach their grief.

Mr. McColl was sincerely and devotedly established in the doctrine of the gospel as held by the Old School Baptists, and ably preached for many years by his uncle, the late Elder Thomas McColl, second pastor of the Covenanted Particular Baptist Church of Ontario, and was always glad to welcome the members to his hospitable home; yet he never publicly confessed his hope in Christ by following him in the ordinance of baptism.

He was one of that large number whose very humility is made a stumbling-block in the way of obedience to the commandment of our Lord. Yet his strictly orderly walk and conversation might well be felt as a reproof by many who have made a profession of faith in Christ. In his practical deportment was exemplified the declaration of Solomon, "He that is slow to anger is better than the mighty; and he that ruleth his spirit than he that taketh a city."

The community in which his life was spent attested their appreciation of his worth and integrity by conferring upon him unsought many responsible offices, whose duties were so conscientiously and faithfully performed that he was above reproach or suspicion. The Dutton Advance, published near his home, says of him: "In the death of Mr. McColl the community loses one who was universally respected for his many redeeming qualities. He was, what cannot be said of many, without an enemy; and his candor and integrity were household words wherever he was known."

At his funeral on Sunday, March 29th, at the Old School Baptist meeting-house, although the roads were in a very unfavorable condition, the largest similar gathering seen in Aldborough for many years gave testimony to the feelings of the community; and Elder Pollard, the successor of Elder McColl, preached on the occasion.—Ed.

Deacon Cornelius Myers died at the residence of his son, April 5th, 1891, in the 86th year of his age.

He had been a sufferer for many years from the effects of erysipelas, but was never heard to complain that his sufferings were any too severe. He was very patient in all things. He was a faithful and worthy member of the Kingwood Church for nearly sixty years, always being found at his post when it was possible. He is the last of those who composed the church at Kingwood and stood firm for the truth at the time of the division. He had been a subscriber to the SIGNS OF THE TIMES from its first issue, and was a very humble follower of his Lord and Master. The New Testament and concordance, with a copy of Beebe's Collection of hymns and the SIGNS OF THE TIMES, composed his library. He leaves a widow over eighty-one years old, two children and grandchildren, together with the church, to mourn their loss.

Elder Wm. J. Purington preached at the funeral from Colossians iii. 4, which was a favorite text with the deceased.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—I have lost my companion. She died on March 30th, 1891. She was born in Madison Co., Ohio, and came to Illinois on a visit, where we were married and lived together more than thirty years. My brethren who knew her sympathize with me in my loss; but I believe that my loss is her eternal gain. She has gained her release from distress here below. Though once a poor mourner, oppressed, so that earth could afford her no comfort, she is now where pleasure eternally flows, with her glorious Lord. She was a member, with myself, of the Regular Predestinarian Baptist Church.

"Though once a poor mourner, oppressed,
And earth could no comfort afford,
She now is both happy and blest,
At home with her glorious Lord.

"The storm of affliction is past,
And she is in glory sat down,
A victor through Jesus at last,
And the cross is exchanged for the crown."

My paper came to Logan, Iowa, where my dear wife died. Since that time I have returned to Illinois, and now have my home with my son at Minonk. I cannot write all the particulars, as it would require too much space. I have had "La Grippe," and am not well, yet am feeling better every day. Farewell.

JOSEPH RICHARDSON.

I AM requested to write a short obituary notice of Mrs. Malinda Cook, to whom the SIGNS was sent by some friend. The SIGNS and the Bible were her companions. She was a sound Baptist, and was almost a concordance to the Scriptures. She had been confined to her bed about eight years with something like asthma and spinal affection, which had bent her double, and at the last she died with her head between her knees, on the morning of March 31st, 1891, at her old home in Henry Co., Ga., at the age of seventy-one or seventy-two years.

ASSOCIATIONAL.

THE Baltimore Old School Baptist Association is appointed to be held with the Ebenezer Church, in the city of Baltimore, Md., to begin on Wednesday before the fourth Sunday in May (20th), 1891, and continue three days.

A cordial invitation is extended to all who desire to meet with us at that time. All who may reach Baltimore on Tuesday will call at Dr. John Thorne's, 709 North Calvert St., where they will be directed to homes. All who come on Wednesday will go direct to the meeting-house, corner of Calvert and Madison Sts., where the association will be in session.

THE Delaware Old School Baptist Association is appointed to be held with the London Tract Church, Chester Co., Pa., to begin on Wednesday before the fifth Sunday in May (27th), 1891, and continue three days.

Those coming from or through Philadelphia to the Delaware Association will take the cars on the B. & O. R. R. at 24th and Chestnut Sts. at 4:15 p. m. on Tuesday, and ticket for Landenburgh. Six of the number will get off at Hockessen.

Those coming from and through Baltimore can take any train on Tuesday p. m. for Newark, Delaware. There inquire for John R. Hill, James Hossenger, Miller Barton or P. M. Sherwood.

Those coming up the Delaware Division R. R. will please ticket for Wilson Station, Delaware City R. R., and come to my house. All will be cared for, and taken to the place of meeting on Wednesday morning.

JOSEPH L. STATON.

THE Delaware River Old School Baptist Association is appointed to be held with the church at Southampton, Bucks Co., Pa., to begin on Wednesday before the first Sunday in June (3d), 1891, and continue three days.

Those coming to the Delaware River Association from the east will take train on the Bound Brook route, leaving New York, foot of Liberty St., at 2 p. m., on Tuesday, June 2d, changing for a way train at Bound Brook, and reaching Bethayres at 4:58, where they will be met.

Those coming from other directions will take the train leaving Third and Berks Sts. station, Philadelphia, at 4 p. m., on same day, and come to Southampton, where they will be met. The train leaving Philadelphia at 9:04 Wednesday morning will also be met.

A cordial invitation is extended to all brethren and friends.

SILAS H. DURAND.

THE Warwick Old School Baptist Association is appointed to be held with the church at Warwick, Orange Co., N. Y., to begin on Wednesday before the second Sunday in June (10th), 1891, and continue three days.

Those coming by railroad from the east or west will take N. Y., L. E. & W. trains to Greycourt, and thence (ten miles) to Warwick, by the Lehigh & Hudson River R. R. Tickets for Warwick are sold at all stations on the Erie R. R. Reduced rates have been applied for. Notice will be given if granted.

Passengers can leave Port Jervis or Middletown by the early train on Wednesday morning and arrive in time for preaching; but it is desirable that as many as can do so should come by Tuesday afternoon trains. All friends will be cordially welcomed.

WM. L. BEEBE, Pastor.

THE Chemung Old School Baptist Association is appointed to be held with the Abbington Church, at Justus, Lackawanna Co., Pa., to begin on Wednesday before the third Sunday in June (17th), 1891, and continue three days.

THE Siloam Association of Regular Predestinarian Baptists will be held with the Fellowship Church, at Buel's Chapel, near Mill Creek, in Polk Co., Oregon, beginning on Friday before the fourth Sunday in June, 1891.

Brethren and sisters coming by rail from Portland or elsewhere will be met with teams for conveyance at McCoy, Polk Co., on Thursday evening. We extend an invitation to all of our faith to meet with us.

V. J. TURNIDGE.

THE Turkey River Association was appointed at the last session to be held at Oelwein, Fayette Co., Iowa, on Saturday before the first Sunday in June, 1891; but through the all-wise providence of God some of the members there have been removed by death, and some are lying on beds of sickness and pain caused by railroad accidents. Therefore, after consultation with the churches composing the association, we came to the conclusion not to hold a session this year, and submit ourselves for the future to the will of our God. This resolution was passed at our yesterday's regular meeting.

PAUL SOHNER.

YEARLY MEETINGS.

A YEARLY meeting is appointed to be held with the Clovesville Old School Baptist Church (of the Lexington Association), near Griffin's Corners, Delaware Co., N. Y., on the first Saturday and Sunday in June (6th and 7th), 1891.

A cordial invitation is extended to all lovers of the truth as it is in Jesus, and especially to ministers of the gospel of our faith and order. Those coming by rail will be met at Griffin's Corners station, on the Ulster & Delaware R. R.

O. F. BALLARD, Clerk.

THREE DAYS MEETINGS.

THE Old Regular Predestinarian Baptist Church at Little Flock, Cass Co., Mo., six miles south of Pleasant Hill and four miles north of Harrisonville, will hold a three days meeting, beginning at four o'clock on Friday evening, May 29th, and continuing until four o'clock Sunday evening, May 31st. Elders R. M. Ogle and John Barnes, of Henry Co., Mo., have promised to be with us. Brethren who love the truth are cordially invited to attend this meeting. We are Predestinarians at Little Flock. There are not very many of us, but we are a unit in the doctrine of salvation by grace alone.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date, this date denotes the time at which your subscription expires, and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

THE EVERLASTING TASK FOR ARMINIANS.

CORRESPONDENCE.

REISTERSTOWN, Md., May, 1891.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—Last month, when I was in Wilmington, Del., brother George Alexander spoke of the twentieth chapter of Revelation as having been blessed to him in reading and meditating upon it, and he expressed a wish that I would try to write upon some things contained in it, which I promised to try to do if I ever felt that I could. Since then, in the SIGNS for April 1st, brother J. B. Hardy, of Kansas, has written some interesting reflections upon the first part of the chapter, which I doubt not have been read with interest by brother Alexander. I do not desire to go over the ground already covered in what I may now write, but will try to say some things about the concluding verses of the chapter, as they all along have been resting upon my mind, and have seemed more clear to my understanding than some other portions of the chapter.

The inspired John saw wonderful visions, which he records in this book, most of which I have never felt that I understood. In the last verses of this chapter he records another vision, which also was fraught with wonderful and divine truth; and some things in these verses have seemed clear to my mind. Commencing with the twelfth verse John says, "And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God; and the books were opened," &c. Turn and read to the end of the chapter. It is not my wish to take up every word or sentence recorded in these last four verses and discourse upon them; but I desire only to call attention to a few things for the comfort of brother Alexander and the Lord's people who may read what is written here, if I may. The time when or the special place where this is seen does not seem to me to be so important as some other things in the text. In other places in the Bible all people or all nations are represented as being gathered before God; and in general I understand such expressions to represent what is true here and now as well as in the past or in the future. The parable of the sheep and goats, recorded in the last portion of the twenty-fifth chapter of Matthew, has seemed to me for a long while to present what is and has been and will be true in all ages of the world. We are not to think of our God as dwelling in some one spot in the universe, seeing that he is omnipresent and omniscient, and his habitation is eternity. To stand before him or to be gathered before him does not require that people should be gathered in some one place; but all men at all times stand before God, let them be where they may, whether it be north, south, east or west, in heaven, earth or hell. None can flee, says David, from his presence. What wonderful and soul-cheering truths are connected with this one truth of the omnipresence of God! In him we live, move, and have our being. To such a being there is no space to be passed over to come to us. He is with us. The only change that can take place with regard to this matter is that we see it to be true more plainly at some times than at others. We are in his presence whether we see it or not. It is a revelation from God when we can see his face, or when we can see that we are standing before God. Now it was given to John to see this vision. It was true before John saw it. The dead, small and great, are always standing before God. This takes in all the dead; for John in his vision saw the sea and death and hell give up to this great judgment the dead that were in them. What may be meant by the sea and death and hell it is not in my mind to discuss. It is enough to see that all the dead are here, and that they are all judged.

Now, in connection with this, let us remember that Jesus once said, "Now is the judgment of this world: now shall the prince of this world be cast out." This judgment is under the gospel. The world is judged now, and is found wanting; its prince is cast out, and finds no place in the kingdom of God. So I have understood the vision of John recorded in the text to relate to the same thing. Not only is the prince of this world cast out, but the world itself is judged, and because of judgment is condemned. The truth that now is this judgment going on seems to me not only to be sustained by the Scriptures, but also to be fraught with comfort as well as warning to the children of God. With comfort, because it clears away all those terrors which have made unhappy many of God's dear children, who have been taught to look for a scene of future judgment, when each one should enter into their final destiny according to the manner of their life; with warning, because they learn at the same time that our God judges and chastises his people daily, that they should not be condemned with the world.

I remember that for a long time after I had received a hope my fears were often great, because I still looked for a scene of judgment at some future period in the other world. As near as I can recall my thoughts they were somewhat as follows. I believed that salvation was finished and complete for all the elect vessels of mercy, so that none could ever finally perish; and I did not think that in the judgment which I feared any who belonged to Christ would be banished from his presence forever, neither did I think that any who had gone to heaven already would then be sent to hell. Yet I did think that in that coming day, in some great amphitheatre somewhere in the universe, Jehovah would in some form of dreadful majesty be visible, seated upon a great white throne, and before him the vast multitude of all the inhabitants of earth would stand; and that all that each one had ever thought, said or done in all their lives would be brought up before their Judge, and a public expose be made before the assembled universe of angels and men. I do not recollect ever thinking of anything else than that I should be made ashamed at that time because of my sins. In all my imaginations concerning that scene I always saw myself shrinking back from the Judge, and hanging my head in shame. I never recollect thinking of anything else than that as a vile sinner I should be condemned. I could not there answer one of a thousand of my sins. Even though I might be sheltered by the blood of Christ, I should still as a guilty, unclean thing be unable to look up to God, or to face the scorn of the multitude, who would see and know it all. These were in part my feelings for a long time after I had a hope in Christ; and so the thought of this coming judgment day gave me many hours of unrest and sorrow. Others of our Father's family may also be troubled by the same things, and so I speak of my own experience as I have.

These views of the judgment day yet to come were (only I did not know it) contrary to the gospel of a finished salvation, and contrary to my own experience; for the people of God are already judged. They have been judged and condemned; and whoever is judged is also condemned. When God enters into judgment with any man that man cannot stand. In judgment all men are condemned. This I had felt in my early experience. Judgment therefore was wholly terrible to me then; and when I thought there was to be another judgment, that was terrible also. It was a long time before I saw the matter clearly. This was partly because some portions of the word seemed to me to declare a future judgment; and yet the thought would come up, God has judged his people once, why should he judge them again? By-and-by I saw clearly how in behalf of the elect all judgment had been committed to the Son; and then the Scriptures which I had misunderstood took on a new light, and I began to be as one delivered from a great bondage.

Then some special portions of the word little by little began to grow clear to me. I began to see that they did not relate to a period in the future, but were being fulfilled now; and that what was in the past or in the future was equally true now. This did not to my mind exclude the future, but only gave me the assurance that the future of God's work of judgment did not differ from the present. Judgment is ever going on at the house of God. A line is ever being drawn between obedience and disobedience. There is a division always being made between him who serves God and him who serves him not.

With reference to the state of the people of God under the gospel, two portions of the word have seemed to me wonderfully clear and positive. As I pass along I desire to call attention to them. One is in the gospel of John v. 24. It reads as follows: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation; but is passed from death unto life." First notice the strong asseveration, "Verily, verily." The Savior would confirm the hearts of his disciples in the strongest and most positive manner, and so he makes the asseveration doubly emphatic. The Lord's "Verily, verily" contains the very substance of truth. Now, passing over the intervening clauses of the text, let us notice the last clause, which is also affirmed by the "verily, verily" at the beginning: "And shall not come into condemnation; but is passed from death unto life." I want to say that the word "condemnation" here is the same word that elsewhere is translated "judgment." The word is krisin, from krisis, and it signifies judgment, sentence, discrimination, first; and then, secondarily, a condemnatory sentence. It never means a sentence of acquittal. What the text really says is this, that they who believe in Jesus shall never come into judgment; and so they shall never be condemned. If they could come into judgment at all, then most surely would they be condemned; but they shall never be judged again, for they have been judged once, and found guilty, and all their sins have been laid on Jesus. This one text at once settles the matter against the common view of a future judgment day for the people of God.

The other portion of Scripture to which I referred is the narrative recorded in Joshua iii. and iv., in which are given the circumstances when Israel crossed over Jordan to enter the land of Canaan. There are many things instructive recorded in this narrative, but the limits of an ordinary article forbid that I should attempt to notice them all. I desire to refer to only so much as will illustrate the theme of which I am speaking. It is admitted by all Bible Baptists that this narrative is typical. Israel was a typical people. Her history was all typical; and this part of their history is very striking and sublime in its typical meaning. Let us endeavor to apply it to spiritual Israel. The journey in the wilderness under Moses, who represented the law of God, was ended. Moses could not lead the people any further than Jordan, neither could he enter the land of promise himself. Right here he must give place to Joshua; and Joshua in the Hebrew tongue is the same as Jesus in the Greek. Both mean "the Savior;" and it shows forth in a wonderful manner the overruling providence of God, when we recollect that a Joshua led them over Jordan at the first, a Joshua led them out of the seventy years' captivity in Babylon, and Jesus (Joshua) brought his spiritual Israel up out of the bondage of sin and death into the rest of the gospel. Jordan does not mean "river of death," but "river of judgment" (and of judgment we are now speaking); and Canaan is not a type of heaven, but of the gospel rest of the church in Christ, her Redeemer and Lord. That the land of Canaan was not intended to represent heaven is apparent at once when we recollect that it was full of enemies, and that Israel never was entirely free from anxiety and warfare on their account. This cannot be the case in the heaven of glory, but it does well represent the condition of believers here and now. We live in a state of warfare. Now Israel as a nation has come to this "river of judgment." It lies between them and Canaan. It must be crossed ere they can find rest to their weary feet; but how shall it be crossed? They have come to it when it has swollen, and its banks are overflowed. It cannot be forded; how shall they cross? So the river of God's judgment against sin lies between the convicted, weary sinner and rest in Christ. It must be crossed; but how can he cross it? In despair he clearly sees that God's judgment against him is a mighty river, and if he once essays to cross it he will be swept away forever; and yet to find rest he must cross it.

Let us return to the type. I would be glad if all would pause here to read carefully the third and fourth chapters of Joshua. I cannot occupy space to quote all the narrative. The Lord commanded that the priests who bare the ark of the covenant should take it up and go before the people down to the bank of Jordan; and when their feet pressed its brink the waters above were stayed and piled up in a mighty heap above them, and the waters below flowed on. The river was divided, and the feet of the priests bearing the ark stood firm and dry in the bed of Jordan until all the hosts of Israel had passed over, with all that was theirs. Not one so much as felt the spray of Jordan's waves upon them. After all had passed over the priests also bare the ark up out of Jordan, and once more its awful waves flowed on, never to be divided for Israel again. They had crossed it once for all, and henceforth it lay behind them. So Jesus, our ark of the new and everlasting covenant, once took his stand in the midst of the river of judgment, and through him the whole of spiritual Israel have crossed over, and now stand, not in the great and terrible wilderness of this world, but in the land of promise; and as Israel of old never could recross that river, so every believer may now rest in the assurance that he shall not come into judgment again. Though often disobedient and often chastised, yet in Jesus Christ the Jordan of God's judgment is crossed, and crossed forever. "For by one offering he hath perfected forever them that are sanctified." Thus the type in the Old Testament agrees with the testimony of Jesus in the New Testament; and both unite in setting the heart of the fearful-hearted believer at rest. My own experience is that I do now every day indeed feel myself judged, and therefore condemned for every idle word, and for the deeds done in the body; but it is at the judgment-seat of him whose blood has cleansed me from my sins, and who has clothed me with everlasting righteousness. Therefore I no longer fear any future judgment, and think of meeting the Judge of all with joy; for there who shall lay anything to my charge, since it is he himself who justifies me?

From all this I was led to see how many Scriptures, that in my mind had been associated with my fear of a future judgment, were being fulfilled, and had no reference to a state beyond this world, and so that we give account now for every idle word that we speak.—Matt. xii. 36. Now we all appear before the judgment-seat of Christ to answer for our deeds done in the body.—2 Cor. v. 10.

Now the Lord is dividing all nations, as a shepherd does the sheep from the goats.—Matt. xxv. There was one text that stood in the way of this view of the matter longer than any other, and that is the language found in Hebrews ix. 27, 28: "And as it is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment: so Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation." For years I could not see what the opening sentence, "after this the judgment," meant, if not that there was a time of judgment for all men in the future world; and this seemed to me a flat contradiction of the whole tenor of the Scripture besides. In time this language also fell into harmony in my mind with all the rest. I will just suggest a brief synopsis of the meaning of this text as it seems to me now. Paul had been, in chapter eight, talking about a covenant; and he continues this theme down to verse fifteen in the ninth chapter. There he ceases to speak of the covenant, and begins to speak of a testator and a testament, or of a will; and from that verse on to the end of chapter nine he treats of the will, or the testament, of the death of the testator, and of the administration to the heirs of the estate secured to them in the will. A will or testament is of no force until after the death of the testator, as Paul here tells us; but our testator has died, and now the estate is being administered to us, his heirs. In the two verses quoted above Paul draws out a comparison. This I will paraphrase so as to bring out the meaning, and show its harmony with the whole preceding connection. "As it is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment" (or the administration and dividing of their estate among the heirs), so Christ has once died as a sacrifice for the sins of many (for death is the penalty of sin); and unto them that look for him (or unto his heirs) shall he appear the second time (not to die again) without sin and unto salvation (or to bring to every heir of promise his share in the divine estate, which is salvation, with all that the word includes). Men must die because of sin; so Christ was offered or died because of our sins. After men die their will is executed; so after the death of Christ his will is executed. Only men cannot be their own executors, while Christ is revived again and is his own executor.

I have spent much time upon the first expression, "I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God," in the text which brother Alexander called my attention to; but I will but briefly speak of what follows. Brother Alexander will see that I understand that now, in this gospel day, the dead, small and great, are standing before God; and now also the books are opened, and the dead are judged out of the things written in the books. The dead are judged whether they know it or not. Jesus said (again I quote), "Now is the judgment of this world;" and yet when he spake how few realized what he meant. When the publican goes down to his house justified rather than the Pharisee, the publican must still feel to be a sinner, and the Pharisee is as self-satisfied as ever; but the work of judgment goes on, and there are still multitudes in the valley of decision. Happy are those people who are now conscious of this judgment. They are not any longer dead; they are alive unto God.

The books in the text are the books of the law and judgment of God. All men are measured by the law, and all men are found wanting. There is no exception to this. They are judged according to their works; and by the works of the law shall no flesh be justified. Thus by the word of inspiration the doom of all who are judged according to their works is sealed. Who then can be saved? Let us read again: "And another book was opened, which is the book of life. * * * And whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire." This book of life contains no death, no curse, no conditions, no judgment. It is simply the book of life. From the foundation of the world their names have been written in this book of life of the Lamb slain on Calvary. This is the one hope of the believer. This lifts the soul on high, and in him mercy rejoices and peace abounds. The language of this text states emphatically that not only is salvation by grace, but it can be in no other way. Here also is found election and predestination, and all the glorious doctrine of redemption. When I look at the books which judge me according to my works I see nothing but judgment and the lake that burns with fire and brimstone; but another book is opened, and I see salvation for all who are written there, and here is my hope and my rejoicing. I think it is also the hope and rejoicing of brother Alexander, and of all the saints.

But how shall I know that I am written there? What are our signs? "We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren." "He that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, * * * is passed from death unto life." They that hunger and thirst after righteousness shall be filled. They that mourn shall be comforted. All these, and a thousand texts besides, present marks by which the living may be identified. All such the Father owns and blesses.

I now leave the theme. I have written at odd times for three weeks past. I began in April, and it is now May. I do not question the glorious truth here presented, though I am sorry it is written no better. May God bless it to brother Alexander and others.

I remain your brother in hope of life eternal in Christ,

F. A. CHICK.

LEBANON, Ohio, Jan. 4, 1891.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN IN THE LORD:—Being alone this morning, not able to attend meeting, I thought I would write some to relieve my mind.

Dear brethren and sisters, for some time past my mind has dwelt almost constantly on the love of God for his people, his church, and his faithfulness and kind care over them in all generations, but I feel too weak and poor to set one-half his glories forth; ye trusting alone in God to direct my thoughts and guide my pen, I will make the attempt, for I feel that I can do nothing without him. I feel, my dear brethren and sisters, that I want to bear testimony to his love and faithfulness, and his kind care over me, the most undeserving of all that ever did hope in his mercy. "Ye are my witnesses, saith the Lord." I want to tell you right here, brethren and sisters, that since I hope I have received a hope (I dare not say it any other way) I have been very backward to speak or write of what I hope the Lord has done for me. O how I have lamented on account of it! It has made me fear that I was deceived; for it seemed to me that a christian could not feel as I did. I loved to hear God's people talk, but it seemed to me that my mouth was shut. I could not say one word; and O how wretched it made me feel. I wanted to talk and tell of his goodness and mercy to me, a poor sinner, and would tremble sometimes from head to foot, and go away feeling condemned, mourning over the wretched condition I was in. O how I begged and pleaded with God that if I was one of his children he would open my mouth and give me utterance to tell of his goodness, love and mercy to me; but it was a long time before he granted my request. Sometimes I felt that I did not care in what way it came, so he would grant it; and, dear brethren and sisters, I feel that he at last has answered my prayer, but it has been in such a way as almost drove me to despair. I was in great darkness of mind for awhile, and feared I would never behold the light of his countenance again. I thought of the barren fig tree, and felt that was my condition—no fruit found thereon, and I was about to be cut down. One day, while mourning over my condition, this Scripture passed through my mind, "For a small moment have I forsaken thee; but with great mercies will I gather thee." It gave me some comfort, but it did not last long. After a short time I was taken sick, and my life for awhile was despaired of; but I felt that I deserved it. "I was dumb, I opened not my mouth, because thou didst it." In my affliction I was made willing to be or suffer anything for Christ's sake. I never felt more reconciled in all my life to God's will in everything. I felt that my times were in his hand, that all things were working for my good, and that bliss his rod attends. I felt it was good for me to be afflicted. My mind was taken from the things of the world, and I had a wonderful view of the love of God for his people, his faithfulness to them, and kind care over them in everything they were called to pass through in this wilderness. I saw such a fullness in Christ Jesus, enough and to spare; and that of his fullness we all have received, and grace for grace. My doubts and fears were all gone, and I then felt that I was forever embraced in that glorious covenant of grace, ordered in all things and sure. O how I loved to meditate on the goodness, love and mercy of God to me, a poor, sinful, stiff-necked and wayward child, if one at all; but I feel that

"My remnant of days
Will I spend to his praise,
Who has died my poor soul to redeem.
Whether many or few,
All my years are his due;
May they all be devoted to him."

Dear brethren and sisters, I never shall forget the first dear brother and sister that came in to see me last spring while I was sick. We soon got to talking about the dear Savior, and of his love and faithfulness to his people. O how I enjoyed it! for then I felt a freedom to talk. My tongue was at last loosed, and O how thankful and relieved I did feel. These are precious moments, when our Lord is with us, and makes us forget everything but his love and mercy to us; but when he withdraws himself from us, then

"All is dark, and vain, and wild;
Filled with unbelief and sin,
Can I deem myself a child?"

Elder Durand's letter in the SIGNS, written on the text, "Lead me to the rock that is higher than I," is good. I enjoyed it very much. I am glad you all write such precious letters. They are a comfort to me, and I want you to write on; and may the Lord bless you, and unfold to you all the rich treasures of his grace. I have tried to tell you some of my joys and sorrows, and the way I hope the Lord has led me. Although it is through much tribulation that he leads us, yet it is a glorious way when we are made to rejoice in it, that we are made partakers of his sufferings; for if we suffer with him, we shall also reign with him in glory. Then let us forget the things that are behind, and run with patience the race set before us, looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith, who was in all points tempted as we are, but without sin. O may he keep all his children everywhere humble, sitting at his feet, and learning of him who is meek and lowly in heart. What a pattern of humility he has taught his people all through! O that we could be more like Jesus! Brethren and sisters, I want you all to pray for me, that I may walk worthy of the vocation wherewith I am called. My membership is with the Bethel Church, near Ft. Ancient. My grandfather, Elder Daniel Clark, helped to organize this church, and also the Lebanon Church. His ordination took place at Columbia, where the first association was held. He preached for the Lebanon Church twenty-eight years. When he became old and infirm, so that he could not serve them regularly, they called Elder Wilson Thompson to assist him. They were both faithful old soldiers of the cross, who feared not to declare the whole counsel of God; but they have laid their armor by, and gone to be with Jesus, whom they so faithfully preached.

Now, brethren Beebe, I have written this to relieve my mind, and I submit it to you. If you think it would be any comfort to any of God's poor, tempest-tossed children that have been led in the same way that I have, publish it; if not, throw it aside, and I hope it may all be right. May the Lord be with you, brethren Beebe, in a special manner, and bless you with the riches of his grace; and may you be long spared to wield "The sword of the Lord and of Gideon." When it is well with you, remember me at the throne of grace.

Your little sister in tribulation,
AMANDA M. BOWEN.

JULY 26, 1890.

To the Bethel Church:

DEARLY BELOVED BRETHREN:—As I have not been able to meet with you at Bethel for some time, I have felt a desire to write to you, to let you know that I often think of you all, and long to meet with you, and hear Christ preached, the only true and living way. I do feel that I love you all as the dear people of God; but O! I feel so unworthy of a place among you. Sometimes I am afraid that a name is all I have; but my hope and trust is alone in Christ Jesus, who came to seek and to save poor sinners. If I have any righteousness it is all in him; for I have long been stripped of all my own, which was as filthy rags. I think sometimes, Can it be that I am a child of God? for the longer I live I see and feel more and more of my imperfections, and need to watch and pray. The spirit indeed is willing, but the flesh is weak. I often think what poor, sinful mortals we are, and what we have to contend with here; but, blessed be God, he has conquered sin, death, hell and the grave, and has brought us off more than conquerors through him who has loved us and given himself for us. Well might John say, "Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God." Such love and mercy call for songs of loudest praise. Dear brethren and sisters, I feel that my afflictions have all been for my good and the glory of God. They have in a great measure weaned me from the world, and made me live nearer my Savior; and I feel that I have been made to see great and glorious things, such as I cannot express. I have had more spiritual enjoyment than when I was well. The Lord knows what is best for us; and when he afflicts us it is in love and faithfulness to us. David said, "Before I was afflicted I went astray." The Lord knows how to lead and teach his people; blessed be his great and glorious name. Brethren, remember me at the throne of grace. The desire of my heart is that God may be with you all in great mercy. Meet together in his name; he has promised to be in the midst. Live in peace, and the God of peace will be with you.

From your unworthy sister,
AMANDA M. BOWEN.

BRONSON, Kansas, Jan. 20, 1891.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—This is my sixty-third birthday; and as I lie alone in my room, meditating upon the wonderful works of God, and his goodness and mercy to the children of men, I feel very thankful this beautiful morning to the Giver of all good that it is as well with me as it is, and that I am not suffering very much; but I am very weak and nervous. As the reading of the SIGNS OF THE TIMES (which my husband reads to me when I am well enough to hear it) is so much comfort and consolation to me, I cannot help having a desire to write some of my meditations; for as I am alone so much of the time I often find myself in fancy talking or writing to the dear saints. As I can only write a few lines each day it will take a long time to write but little; and when I hear such able and comforting letters in the SIGNS something seems to say, What is the use of your trying to write? They have told all that you can, and a great deal more. Yet something prompts me to again take up my pen; and though I do feel so weak and sinful, and so unworthy, I hope that when Jesus comes to take his ransomed people home I will be one of those who will meet the Lord in the air, and sing and shout his praises throughout eternity. There we shall meet all the redeemed of the Lord. O what a glorious meeting that will be, and what unspeakable joy to know that we shall see our Lord and Savior and be like him! for we shall see him as he is, yes, be fashioned like unto his glorious body. This is indeed a glorious theme to dwell upon. When Jesus shows me his smiling face, and causes me to rest in the promises of the gospel, then there is such a sweet peace of mind and unspeakable joy that I sometimes am made to feel that I surely am nearing the shores of everlasting rest; and O what joy fills my heart at the thought of being released from this world of sin and sorrow. Then again dark clouds obscure my sky, all is dark and gloomy, and fears will arise; and if I sing or read or pray, sin seems mixed with all I do. Like one alone I seem to be. Is there one like me, so vile, so prone to sin, walking so much in the dark, with but seldom a ray of light to guide my wandering steps aright? Sometimes I have almost given up in despair, and would cry unto the Lord, "O Lord, help thou mine unbelief."

"Show pity, Lord! O Lord, forgive!
Let a repenting rebel live!
O let a wretch come near thy throne,
To plead the merits of thy Son."

So I have traveled on all these weary years, trusting, hoping, sometimes in darkness, sometimes in the light; but the Lord has led me safely thus far, and will lead me safely home.

"Sometimes 'mid scenes of deepest gloom,

Sometimes where Eden's bowers bloom,
By waters still, o'er troubled sea,
Still 'tis God's hand that leadeth me."

He has promised to comfort all that mourn in Zion, to give unto them beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning, the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness; that they might be called trees of righteousness, the planting of the Lord, that he might be glorified. Then let us give all glory and praise to God, and not to man, as some do, saying, The preacher ought to have a great deal of praise for the good he has done. They say they are saving a great many souls; as though the great God, who made and rules heaven and earth, and all that is in them, and who has declared the end from the beginning, and from ancient times things that have not yet been done, is depending on poor, sinful, finite man for the salvation of souls. David says, "The salvation of the righteous is of the Lord." It was said to Joseph, "Thou shalt call his name Jesus; for he shall save his people from their sins." "I, even I, am he; and besides me there is no Savior." "Behold, the Lord hath proclaimed unto the end of the world, Say ye to the daughter of Zion, Behold, thy salvation cometh; behold, his reward is with him, and his work before him." Christ says, "No man can come to me, except the Father which hath sent me draw him: and I will raise him up at the last day. It is written in the prophets, And they shall be all taught of God. Every man therefore that hath heard, and hath learned of the Father, cometh unto me." Salvation is of the Lord, and to him be all the praise. "Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive glory, and honor, and power; for thou hast created all things, and for thy pleasure they are and were created." Salvation is of the Lord; for it is written, "Cursed is man that trusteth in man." Then let us trust in the Lord; for though we are poor and afflicted, we are not forsaken, for his promise is to the poor, weak, trembling ones of his flock. He saith, "I will leave in the midst of thee an afflicted and poor people; and they shall trust in the name of the Lord." Again, he saith, "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee." "Blessed are the poor in spirit; for theirs is the kingdom of heaven." Then as God's promise is to the poor, let us lay hold of the hope set before us; "which hope we have as an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast, and which entereth into that within the veil; whither the forerunner is for us entered, even Jesus, made a high priest forever after the order of Melchisedec." Though I sometimes feel so weak and sinful, and my hope seems so little that I am almost ready to give up and say, Surely I am too unworthy to be one of God's children; yet at the same time I would not give up the little hope that I have for ten thousand worlds like this. Though our hope seems ever so little, it is made sure; and when the Lord gives us light we are enabled to rejoice with joy that is unspeakable and full of glory. It is then that we can give all glory and praise to the God who has called us out of darkness into his marvelous light. He hath said, "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven."

FEB. 18.—While looking over the SIGNS of last week, to see who the writers were (for that is about all the reading I do), I saw the name of our dear afflicted sister, Mary Parker; and it brought tears of joy to my eyes that she is yet spared, and is able to write to the comfort and consolation of such a poor, weak, sinful mortal as I. I have been afflicted with a nervous disease for thirty-eight years, and thought I had suffered almost everything, but it seems like nothing when compared with what she has to suffer; and when I hear of her great suffering, her patience, her joy and trust in the Lord, I am strengthened and encouraged to bear my afflictions with patience, ever looking to Jesus for help. The brethren and sisters may speak or write words of comfort and encouragement, but in the Lord is our help. He is our only safe refuge, a present help in time of need.

Owing to the mild, calm weather, I have kept up better this winter than I have for several previous winters. I can be up very little, but can walk from one room to another. I suffer more from the effects of sound than anything else. I have the walls of my room deadened, and have to stay shut up in it most of the time, and keep very quiet; but I feel that I am resting in the evening-tide of life, resting in the sweet promises of the gospel, yes, resting and waiting for the summons to call me home, which will come ere long. A few more days, or years at most, and all my trials will be over, and I hope to dwell forevermore with all the redeemed of the Lord.

If this does not appear in the SIGNS it will be perfectly right with me, for I know it is very imperfect.

Yours in hope,

MARY E. GIBSON.

BRANFORD, Kansas, April 10, 1891.

G. BEEBE'S SONS:—I am sorry to trouble you; but I have thought so much about the letter I sent you for publication in the SIGNS that I would rather it be not published. It might cause some hardness; besides, the whole thing is so badly worded that I fear the readers would not understand it as I meant it. For a long time I had enjoyed such comfort and peace of mind that I did not think I would ever be so much in the dark again, and I felt like I wanted to write. "Let him that thinketh he standeth, take heed lest he fall." After I sent that letter it seemed like a whole deluge swept down upon me; and it seemed to me that it was a sin for me to write about these things, and much more to have them put in the SIGNS. I do not think you will publish it; but for fear you might I write this note, that you may have no misgivings in casting it aside. Now do not think that I am afraid to risk your judgment, for I am not; but I felt like I would be better satisfied to let you know that I was not expecting nor desiring its publication. I would like to write you a long letter, but my writings are imperfection, like myself, and not worth noticing, so I will trouble you no more with my scribbling.

MARY E. GIBSON.

BRANFORD, Ont., April 13, 1891.

DEAR BRETHREN BEEBE:—The verses on this sheet came into my mind many years ago, and very faintly portray the deep consciousness of my childhood in the holy family of the redeemed given me at that time. I had passed through a season of buffeting experiences, which were all, and at times seemed more, than I could bear. Then came a blessed and sweet calm. I never sent them anywhere for publication; but accidentally coming upon them the other day, I thought I would send them to you for the SIGNS. Just a few hours later I read M. B. Weedon's letter in the number for April 8th. Then I said, If I send them it will look like mocking. I do not think I have a favorite, in the strict sense of the word, among the writers for this paper, for I seem to feel one spirit flowing through all; but some experiences and explanations touch the rim of my own at times very closely. Elder Chick's letter had done me much good; but a thought has come to me about this knowing. Life seems to me figuratively to contain a series of training classes for God's children. It does not seem to me that we always know, when we are being taught, why we are put into this or that one. "For every battle of the warrior is with confused noise, and garments rolled in blood."—Isaiah ix. 5. "Now no chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous: nevertheless, afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteousness unto them which are exercised thereby."—Heb. xii. 11. Now it is in the "afterward" that we are, I think, enabled to look back and see that the Master was leading us all the time, and pouring in oil and wine. Neither do I think we are to suppose that this chastening is always for some particular sin that we have committed, though it may be, for we know so little. A dear sister said to me, "Trials come, just as if a cloud had come suddenly over the sun; and I ask myself, What sin have I committed? What have I done? Yet I cannot trace anything in particular." No, it comes to me in this way: A wise father, who designs his son to fill a particular sphere of usefulness, which he has mentally decided that son can fill, places him in just the position where his natural ability will be developed best, and his crude parts chiseled down. Yet that son, going through his trial period, may often wonder, and at times rebel under the chafing of his own will. Now the Father, who not simply judges, but appoints all our way, and fashions us for that way, will not spare for our crying, though at times it be grievous and long; yet afterward others will see, if we do not, why the faith he put in us was so exercised. "Ye have heard of the patience of Job." Lord, give us to drink into its stream.

Dear editors, I am impulsive in spiritual matters, and perhaps forward. As brother Weedon says, "I do not know." Therefore always decide for me what to put in print and what to leave out. So I will copy my little song of praise, which came to me in the afterward.

"My sheep hear my voice."—John x. 27.

I am thy sheep; I know thy voice, my Lord;

Sweet as the call for prayer at eventide,
Clear as a bridegroom calling for his bride.

I know it well; it gathers all my soul
Into rich fullness, perfect, living, whole.

I am thy sheep; in vain the syren world
Pours silvery symphonies around my heart;

They echo soft, yet touch no vital part,
No fountain of the inner life is stirred.

Some homelier strain the warm pulsation wakes,
Some rougher hand the harp of heaven takes.

I am thy sheep; the storm winds rise and blow,
Long waves roll dense, then rip in snowy foam,

Shore lights grow dim, and spray obscures my home.

Will my bark founder? Thy voice whispers, No;

Safe as 'mid rosy dawns, or sunset's amber glow.

I am thy sheep; what more, Lord, could I be?

Lost in thy love, which leads me till I lie
Like crushed exotic, sweetest though it die

To its own beauty. So die self in me.
Slave of thy will, I shake sin's fetters free,

And find my heaven on earth when earth finds heaven in thee.

I am thy sheep; the tides may ebb and flow;

Now raise me high, now dash my glory low.

They cannot touch the peace which thou hast given;

Albeit the guarding shell sometimes is riven.

Firm as a rock its deep foundations lie;
Its clefts the spots where Jesus passes by.

Is it so sweet, one secret hour with thee?
Then what, my Lord, shall the fruition be?

MRS. J. STREET.

LONELM, Ark., April 2, 1891.

DEAR BRETHREN EDITORS:—I have been a careful and constant reader of your valuable paper for nearly three years, although I have not been a subscriber that long. I have in weakness tried to advocate the doctrine contended for in the SIGNS for twenty years. Some of the editorials, as well as many articles written by the correspondents, are too deep for me. My judgment leads me to believe that the SIGNS comes nearer advocating the whole truth than any publication I have ever read. I do not say there are not other publications as sound in the faith as yours. The truth is as unpopular when written as when spoken, and people will not patronize anything that does not suit them. The majority of the people of my acquaintance who subscribe for the SIGNS are sound in the faith. They are consistent Predestinarian Baptists. I am a strong believer in the absolute predestination of all things. A brother said to me not long since that the "absolute" part should be dispensed with. I promised him that I would do so when some brother had found another term that would express its meaning stronger. I cannot conceive of anything that happens by chance; neither can I name any of the laws of nature that poor, finite man can reverse. I cannot think that God shapes his plans to suit man; but he shapes man to suit his plans. His purposes are with himself. As he has thought, so shall it stand; and as he has purposed, so shall it come to pass. He declares that he has never counseled with any; that if he were hungry he would not tell us; that in his hand is the life of every living thing; that it is in him we live, and move, and have our being. When he would bring to pass what the prophets have foretold, a Herod is ready to drive Christ into Egypt, and to cause Rachel to weep for her children. Archelaus must cause Christ to be called a Nazarene. Judas must betray Christ, and Pilate must preside over the court; and God used him as a witness. Pilate said he found no fault in Christ, and it was a mystery to him why they were so determined to crucify him; but Peter said it was according to the determinate counsel of God. Pilate was like a great many men of our day. He said he had power to release Christ, and power to put him to death. But Christ told him that he could have no power at all, only as it was given from above. Such doctrine has never been favorably received by the world. But it is consoling to God's people to know that he has all power; that even the winds obey him; that he is the prince of the kings of the earth; that he is our Priest and King; and they that are with him are called (not volunteers) and chosen and faithful; that he will bring us off more than conquerors through him that loved us. We have seen men exult in victory, and revel in the spoils of success; but the victory that Christ will give us will excel all this, in that we will have no more doubts or fears. God will wipe away all tears. There will be no more sorrow, no more parting, no more fear. That which is in part will be done away, and that which is perfect will be ushered in. Seeing then we are compassed about with such a cloud of witnesses, let us have grace whereby we may serve God acceptably, with reverence and godly fear. We have a High Priest over the house of God, who is easily touched with the feeling of our infirmities, who has been tempted in like manner as we are, and who gave his cheek to the smiter. Though he was rich, yet for our sakes he became poor, that we through his poverty might be rich. He is highly exalted, and has a name that is above every name in heaven and earth; and unto him every knee shall bow, and every tongue confess that he is Lord, to the glory of God the Father. But the enemy's rock is not as our Rock, they themselves being witnesses. For who is a Rock save our God? May we eat of that spiritual meat, and drink of that spiritual Rock, is the prayer of your unworthy brother in hope of eternal life, which God, who cannot lie, promised in Christ before the world began.

W. L. WAGNER.

KELLY'S CORNERS, N. Y., March 24, 1891.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—The inclosed letter I received from our dear brother French, of Otego, N. Y., who is one that has borne the burden and heat of the day in the kingdom of our Lord and Savior, but whose name we do not often see in our family paper. Many will be glad to hear from him, I believe; so, after reading it, I send it to you for publication when you have space for it. I trust he will not take offense on account of my sending it for publication, as he is not ashamed of the gospel of Christ.

J. D. HUBBELL.

OTEGO, N. Y., March 22, 1891.

ELDER HUBBELL—DEAR BROTHER:—Yours was received in the love and fellowship of the saints of the God of salvation, I hope. I was very glad to hear from you; glad also that we are remembered by the saints, especially by the ministers of the Lord. I feel many times that the saints have no reason to look favorably on me as a child of God; for when I turn my eyes within, and view my vile nature as being averse to all that pertains to godliness, I have to say, "Unclean, unclean." Yet I have to acknowledge that there are times when there is something felt within me that is far above earth and earthly things—a spirit that the good Lord has put there, which will abide with me as long as I live, and will go with me when I am called to lay my armor by and dwell with Christ at home. This is my hope; yet the question often arises, Why thus hope? The answer is, "Even so, Father, for so it seemed good in thy sight."

My dear brother, you complain of your leanness and poverty; then what can you think of such a poor, ignorant creature as myself? The good Lord deals so bountifully with his ministers, unfolding the Scriptures to their view, and enabling them to feed the flock, that they may grow thereby. It is a wonderful thing to be called of God to proclaim the way and plan of salvation to the lost sheep of the house of Israel. I have thought many times in my life that the Lord's ministers have no right to complain or to question their calling; but that is not right, for they are flesh and blood like all the rest, and liable to err and go astray. To err is human. Well, we are all very apt to think our case is an outside one, and we know very well it is bad enough at the best.

"Nothing in our hands we bring; Simply to thy cross we cling."

The Lord said he had not beheld iniquity in Jacob, nor perverseness in Israel. What a wonderful, kind and indulgent Lord we have to go to with our trials and temptations, knowing well that all our help comes from him.

Dear brother, you refer back to the times when we used to meet in the old association, and join in praise and thanksgiving to our King for his goodness and mercy to us. But great changes have taken place. It seems a time of general apathy with the saints; but when the Lord see fit to revive his work in his people it will surely come.

The friends here are generally well, and I will venture to say they would all join in sending love in the Lord to you all. I would be glad to hear from you again. With love to all, I subscribe myself your brother,

G. M. FRENCH.

SCALESVILLE, Ind., March 16, 1891.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN IN THE LORD:—It has been a long time since I wrote anything for our family paper, the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. It has not been because I have not indorsed the doctrinal sentiments, or failed to appreciate it as a medium through which the children of God may correspond one with another, and tell of our hopes and fears, our conflicts and deliverances, &c.; but it has been on account of a feeling sense of my own unworthiness, and my inability to write anything that would be of interest to this holy family. I call you holy family, because ye are the children of the living God, if so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you. "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." "And if Christ be in you, the body is dead because of sin; but the Spirit is life because of righteousness."

I have been thinking somewhat about the words, "Great is the mystery of godliness."—1 Tim. iii. 16. I pray that the Lord may direct my thoughts while I attempt to pen a few lines on this important subject; for unless guided by his Spirit, his children will not be benefited, nor will God be honored. My only desire is that God may be honored, and his children be edified, built up, and established in the faith of the Son of God; not in the faith or works of men, for this will do God's children no good. Men's works, and faith in what man can do in our eternal salvation, are from beneath, and are worldly, sensual and divisible; but the faith that God's children are in possession of came from God, and causes his children to rejoice in him as their Savior. Having been killed to sin, they are made alive to the love of righteousness. O what a mystery! says the child of God, that the God of heaven and earth, the God that made all things, and rules all things according to his will and pleasure, should have thoughts of mercy toward me, a poor, hell-deserving sinner; who checked me in my wild career, and turned me about, and instructed me, and caused me to repent and to seek him on the right hand and on the left; to seek him at morn, at noon and at night; and when I was sinking down in despair he spoke peace to my troubled soul, which was tossed to and fro like the ocean in the time of a storm. But O what a calm! Peace flowed like a smooth river, which filled my soul with joy unspeakable and full of glory. And O what a mystery that I was directed to his church, and to have his people judge my case, and to be made willing to abide by their decision or judgment. And O what a great mystery to me to hear their decision, saying, "Come in, thou blessed of the Lord; why standest thou without?" Also to hear my blessed Savior whispering sweetly in my ear, "Why tarriest thou? Arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins." Also to walk in newness of life, and made to love that hard doctrine, as I once thought election and predestination. Then what a mystery that the brethren have fellowship for or with me; for I am made to loathe myself in dust and ashes, as it were, on account of inward corruption. It seems to me I am nothing but a sink of sin, a mass of corruption; for in me, that is, in my flesh, dwelleth no good thing; for to will is present with me; but how to perform that which is good I find not. And how mysterious it seems that when I fall out with myself on account of seeing so much about me that appears not only sinful, but really hateful and despicable in my own eyes, and I attempt to tell my brethren about it, as best I can, I seem to fail to make them understand it in the way I see it, and it only strengthens them in their confidence that I am a child of God. This appears to be the experience, in part at least, of every child of God; and they can adopt the language of the poet,

"If I pray, or hear, or read,
Sin is mix'd with all I do.
You that love the Lord indeed,
Tell me, is it thus with you?"

And they sum up the whole matter in this way,

"Lord, decide the doubtful case,
Thou who art thy people's Sun;
Shine upon thy work of grace,
If indeed it he begun."

I might write much more on this subject, about the mystery of God's dealings with his children, his servants, or ministers, &c., but will forbear, for fear of being tedious; for all my writings seem so much like myself that I am almost ashamed for any body to see them.

Brethren Beebe, if you should publish this poor scribble, please correct mistakes, and pardon my weakness and presumption; for I am a poor old sinner, saved by grace, if saved at all.

THE NUMBER OF OUR DAYS.

"THE days of our years are three score years and ten; and if by reason of strength they be four score years, yet is their strength labor and sorrow; for it is soon cut off, and we fly away. Who knoweth the power of thine anger? even according to thy fear, so is thy wrath. So teach us to number our days, that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom."—Psalm. xc. 10-12.

In compliance with the request of a highly esteemed sister, we will present such thoughts as may be given to us in connection with the important text here quoted. It must ever be remembered that the true understanding of any portion of the inspired record is not attained by study either of the letter of the Scriptures or of the teachings of men. Natural knowledge is acquired by laborious investigation; but the truth of God is not to be discovered by that method. So effectually has God hidden the things of his divine purpose and grace from the wise and prudent of this world that they cannot even be searched after. In this fact our dear Redeemer rejoiced in the days of his humiliation, and his thanksgiving is left on record for the instruction of his disciples in all times and places. In his example is illustrated the true meaning of that manner of prayer which he taught to his disciples, saying, "Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven!" This is in manifest contrast with that carnal principle which would dictate to God what is the will of those who pretend to pray. The prayer of faith can only be indited by the Spirit of Christ, and it must always be in perfect accordance with the immutable will of God. Not even those saints who had the benefit of the personal teaching of the Lord, were able to direct their own petitions when they were led by the Spirit to pray. Certainly no others can be better qualified to ask understandingly.

"The days of our years are three score years and ten." That this expression is not to be regarded merely as a literal declaration is evident, not only from the immediately following clause, but from the fact that Moses, who spoke this psalm, was himself beyond the age specified when he came out of Egypt with the nation of Israel, after which he led them in the wilderness through their forty years of wandering. It may gratify the fancy of carnal teachers to say that the reference is to the general limit of this mortal state of existence; but the Spirit of truth in the saints is not satisfied with any exposition of the words which God has given, unless they are shown to testify of Christ Jesus. This prayer of Moses is rich in this witness of the grace of God which is revealed in our Lord and Savior. In the very first breath the inspired servant confesses his allegiance to the King of saints, saying, "Lord, thou hast been our dwelling place in all generations." This is not limited to temporal ages among mortals; but he specifies that this wonderful truth is eternal, "even from everlasting to everlasting." In this is contained the doctrine of all the perfections of God. His immutable purpose of love and mercy secured his chosen people in this secret place of the Most High before the mountains were brought forth, or ever he had formed the earth and the world. As the self-existent and eternal God all his election of grace are eternally secure in him who is their Life and Immortality. This security is not in their relation to their earthly head, the natural Adam; it is alone and exclusively in their spiritual Head, the Lord Jesus. Regarded in their relation to earth and time, the saints are involved in all the death and condemnation which rests upon the sinful Adam in whom they all die. In this character they are consumed by the anger and troubled by the wrath of divine justice. These are the days of our years all of which are passed away in the wrath of God. Of these painful days it is a sweet comfort to the saints to know that they are exactly defined by the sovereign appointment of our God. Every gloomy hour is accurately and surely measured by infinite love, and no saint shall suffer one moment of pain or grief beyond that which is given by the love and wisdom of our gracious Redeemer. There is no power which can resist the omnipotence of our God; therefore it is perfectly safe to rely implicitly upon his comforting assurance, by which "We know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose."—Rom. viii. 28. Even in the limitation of the days of our years, as here specified, the love of God is manifest as having set this definite boundry to the time of our suffering and tribulation. No trial can come upon us here but that is needful for the instruction and profit of the saint who is called to endure it. In every temptation the presence of the Lord is revealed as the only deliverance of the helpless saint, and thus he is qualified to testify with the inspired singer of Israel, "The Lord preserveth the simple; I was brought low and he helped me."—Psalm cxvi. 6. The more clearly the saint sees this entire dependence upon the grace of God for every blessing, the better is he prepared to reverence and adore the truth and faithfulness of the Lord in his salvation and preservation. The brevity of our time in this earthly house of our tabernacle, while it is not cheering to the natural mind, is full of comfort to the saint who feels that he is consumed by the anger and troubled by the wrath of God. Feeling that all our years are passed away in vanity, it is a consoling thought that they are set to such a narrow limit. So Job says, "As a servant earnestly desireth the shadow, and as a hireling looketh for the reward of his work; so am I made to possess months of vanity, and wearisome nights are appointed to me. When I lie down, I say, When shall I arise, and the night be gone? and I am full of tossings to and fro unto the dawning of the day." This bitter experience is well adapted to teach the afflicted and poor people of God that this world is not their rest. Well may they say, "My soul is weary of my life; I will leave my complaint upon myself; I will speak in the bitterness of my soul."—Job. vii. 2-4; x. 1. Under such deep affliction, there is strong consolation in the remembrance of the divine appointment by which our time of trial is determined by the love and wisdom of our God, so that the days of our years cannot be protracted beyond the bounds which God has set. It is not designed that the specification of "three score years and ten" should inform mortals the exact measure of time appointed unto them. Our risen Lord said to his chosen apostles, "It is not for you to know the times or the seasons, which the Father hath put in his own power."—Acts i. 7. The exact time of each individual saint here in the body of this death, is expressed by this perfect number which is applied to our years in our text. This brief existence is contrasted with the eternity of our God, as the dwelling place of all his saints.

"And if by reason of strength they be fourscore years, yet is their strength labor and sorrow; for it is soon cut off, and we fly away." The addition of this clause more clearly shows the contrast between time and eternity. There is no period of time which can come nearer to the eternity of God than the most minute instant. A thousand years in the sight of our Lord are but as yesterday when it is past. While it was passing there may have been a weary length of suffering included in yesterday; but when it is past, an instant is sufficient to recall numberless yesterdays. Such in the sight of God are the longest periods of time which can be conceived by finite intelligence. Nothing but labor and sorrow can be gained by protracted years in subjection to the vanity of the body of this death. Thus is demonstrated the worthlessness of every earthly consideration. Of all the countless myriads of mortals who have been developed here, and for a little season have seemed to be of importance in the world, only the shadow of their memory remains. What matters it now whether their days were spent upon an earthly throne, or with the homeless beggar? They were, and they are no more.

This is the history of the children of men. With all our imaginary importance, we who are now drawing the measured air assigned to us, can have no other record in the account of temporal existence. Well may David ask, "What is man, that thou art mindful of him? and the son of man, that thou visitest him?"—Psalm viii. 4. Alike to mortal joy and grief time must bring an end. At the touch of death the mighty conqueror is as helpless as the infant. This is the true measure of the strength of man whose breath is in his nostrils. There is deep significance in the declaration in our text that the strength of nature "is soon cut off." It is not declared that it shall be soon cut off, but it is already cut off. No created mind can trace the unknown course in which we go when "we fly away." Not until our strength is cut off do we leave this bondage of mortality; for so long as we remain in the body we are adapted to earth and earthly attractions draw our affections. But, for the consolation of the afflicted and poor disciples of Jesus, our Lord has given assurance that the time is short; the labor and sorrow cannot pursue them beyond the little space of their earthly pilgrimage. In vain does carnal curiosity seek to discover more than God has revealed of the mystery of that change which awaits all who dwell in this earthly state of existence. All that can be grasped by finite intelligence is embraced in this expression, "We fly away."

"Who knoweth the power of thine anger? even according to thy fear, so is thy wrath." It must be remembered that God is not subject to the changes of varying emotions of love and hatred, joy and grief, pleasure and pain, such as would be understood of creatures, to whom such expressions as this might be applied. While the wrath of God is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men, there is no change in the immutable perfection of God. There never was a period in time or eternity when that wrath did not condemn sin. Nor does this almighty wrath forbid the free course of that eternal love which was the cause of the display of infinite grace in the salvation of his people from their sins. The wonderful power of that anger which consigns to death every one who is polluted by sin, transcends the little powers of creature comprehension. Not even the tears and agony of the sinless Son of God could turn away that righteous anger under which he suffered as he bore the sins of all his people in his own body. How utterly vain are all our efforts to understand the power of that anger of God, which could not spare his beloved Son! All the perfections of our God are equal and infinite. His love is not superior to his holiness; nor is his mercy more powerful than his truth. "The fear of the Lord is to hate evil." It is also the beginning of wisdom.—Prov. viii. 13; ix.

10. This fear is not that terror which results from selfish dread of punishment; for all such fear is cast out by perfect love. It is that filial fear which is inseparable from perfect love, which identifies those who are led by the Spirit of God, and who are the sons of God. According to this fear, so is the appreciation of the wrath of God in the experience of the subjects of his grace. It is not by the fear of hell that the saints are led to hunger and thirst after righteousness. That fear hath torment; but it is not moved by love. True love is inseparable from that filial fear which can be satisfied with nothing but perfect conformity to the glorious holiness revealed in the face of Jesus Christ. The infinite holiness of God is perpetual condemnation of all unrighteousness, and at the same time it is the divine approval of everything which is according to the commandment and example of our Lord. The very same revelation of God condemns sin, and justifies every sinner who is redeemed by the blood and righteousness of Jesus. Thus the wrath of God is revealed exactly according to his fear.

"So teach us to number our days, that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom." This prayer can never arise from the heart of one who is not led by the Spirit of God. It is important to observe that it is not for such instruction as shall enable us to get to heaven and escape hell, that this inspired petition seeks. It is for present guidance and direction that the cry goes up to God. The very fact that this desire is in the heart is conclusive evidence that the suppliant has no other hope but in the love and grace of God. If there had been any confidence in the flesh, to which the writer could look, there would have been no occasion for this prayer to God. This prayer is never felt in the heart of any but such as are led by the Spirit of God, and are the sons of God. Carnal covetousness sees in the grace of God a reason for indulging in sin, since the salvation of God is by his own will exclusively; but the subject of divine life longs to be free from sin now, because sin is to him exceeding sinful; and he loves holiness for itself without requiring to be driven by the fear of punishment, or attracted by the hope of a reward. All those in whose heart this prayer is indited by the Spirit of truth are joint heirs with Christ to an incorruptible inheritance; and to them applies the truth declared by the inspired Preacher, "Wisdom is good with an inheritance; and by it there is profit to them that see the sun. For wisdom is a defence, and money is a defence; but the excellency of knowledge is, that wisdom giveth life to them that have it."—Eccl. vii. 11, 12.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

George R. Ringo was born in Henry Co., Ky., Dec. 19th, 1819, and moved to Illinois with his parents in April, 1833. He was married to Amanda Beaty, April 15th, 1841, from which union were born eight children, four boys and four girls. He was married to his last wife Oct. 22d, 1857. He united with the Baptist Church in 1884, in which connection he had lived a faithful member until his death, which occurred May 6th, 1891, he being then 71 years, 4 months and 16 days of age.

DIED—In North Jay, Maine, May 6th, 1891, brother Azel Macomber, aged 86 years.

His last sickness was of only one week. "Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright: for the end of that man is peace."—Psalm xxxvii. 37. He and his companion were married more than sixty-six years ago. His lonely wife is in her ninetieth year, and O how sadly does she feel her loss. Besides his wife, he leaves nine children, a large number of grandchildren, and more than twenty great-grandchildren. He was loved and highly esteemed by all who knew him, both old and young. It is many years since he first knew and loved the truth, and has lived the life of a meek and humble child of God from first to last. It was a great joy and delight to him to mingle with and entertain the people of God. His funeral was largely attended by his relatives, friends and neighbors.

H. CAMPBELL.

SISTER Mary Winchell died Feb. 24th, 1890, aged 73 years and 3 months.

She died at her home in West Shokan, N. Y. She was a member of the Old School Baptist Church of Olive & Hurley, and a firm believer in the doctrine of salvation by grace, and grace alone. The last time she attended church meeting she exhorted the church to be steadfast, unmovable, to press forward toward the mark, and not to shun to declare the whole counsel of God, as if she were going to leave.

She leaves two brothers, two daughters and several grandchildren, with the church, to mourn their loss, which we trust is her eternal gain. Her funeral was largely attended, and an able discourse was delivered by Elder Earl.

ALSO,

Ephraim Burgher died Feb. 20th, 1890, aged 81 years.

He was a member of the Olive & Hurley Church, and a firm believer in the predestination of God. His sickness was short, and he seemed reconciled to the will of God. He thought to die was going home. He leaves two sons, two brothers and the church to mourn their loss.

His funeral was largely attended, and a very appropriate sermon was delivered by Elder Thomas Swartout, of Michigan, who was here on a visit.

MRS. J. M. BURGHER.
WEST SHOKAN, N. Y., May 18, 1891.

DIED—On Saturday, May 9th, 1891, at Petersburg, Kent Co., Del., Mrs. Sallie R. Green, in the 41st year of her age.

Sister Green was a daughter of brother Peter Meredith, and was received by baptism in the church at Bryn Zion in April, 1875, and continued a humble, consistent and faithful member to the end of her pilgrimage. In regard to this life and its prospects, her story has been among the saddest that I have ever had to record. She was married in 1878 to a worthy man, Mr. Charles W. Green, and has had six children, four of whom have preceded her to the tomb. A few months ago her husband was called away, and now she has been called to follow, making the sixth funeral in this one family in such a short time. She always, through all the afflictive events following each other in rapid succession, seemed not only patient and resigned, but cheerful; and after losing her husband she seemed rather desirous to go than otherwise. In a spiritual sense she seemed to walk in the light continuously from the day that she left a long-felt burden at the water-side. Two orphan children remain, it may be to partially fill up the breach. Brother Meredith has no doubt seen much satisfaction in his affectionate and dutiful family, but the strokes of affliction have been severe and oft repeated. They will receive the sincere and heartfelt sympathy of the many brethren and friends who have shared their hospitality and enjoyed their fellowship.

E. RITTENHOUSE.

ENTERED into rest April 4th, 1891, our dearly beloved mother, Mrs. Amanda M. Bowen, aged 61 years.

She was taken with "La Grippe," and had a stroke of paralysis. She was reconciled to go, saying to a sister that visited us, "The Lord knows best." She requested me to sing hymn No. 311, Beebe's Collection. We feel that our great loss is her eternal gain; but O it is so sad to live without mother, to see her sweet face no more. I realize more and more every day what home is without a mother; but, blessed thought, we hope to meet again, where no farewell tear is shed. O that our last hours may be as peaceful as hers. Often during Friday night there would a sweet smile come over her face. All that loving children and kind neighbors could do for her was done. She united with the Old School Baptist Church in 1851, at Bethel, near Ft. Ancient, Warren Co., Ohio.

A very comforting discourse was delivered by Elder J. C. Reed, from 2 Thess. iv. 17, 18. Elder Curry also being present, spoke in prayer. She leaves three daughters, one brother, two sisters, the church and many friends to mourn. O may we be enabled to say, Thy will, O Lord, be done.

"Dearest mother, thou hast left us,
And our loss we deeply feel;
But 'tis God that has bereft us,
He can all our sorrows heal."

BRETHREN BEEBE:—By request of Mr. J. L. James, I now send you the obituary notice of his wife to be published in the SIGNS.

Sister James was born in Franklin Co., Va., near Rocky Mount, Oct. 11th, 1830, and died at the home of her husband, near Rocheport, Mo., Jan. 11th, 1890. Her maiden name was Carter. She was married to Mr. J. L. James Nov. 14th, 1850.

She joined the Old School Baptists at the Little Creek Church in the year 1856, and was baptized by Elder J. C. Hall, father of the writer of this notice. In the year 1868 she with her husband and family moved to Boone Co., Ind., and to Boone Co., Mo., in 1878, where she lived until the time of her death. Sister James was a devoted christian, a loving companion and a kind mother. She never removed her membership from the Little Creek Church; but while in Indiana she attended meetings at Pisgah and other churches, and was a firm believer in salvation by grace. She was well established in the doctrine of God our Savior, and trusted not to an arm of flesh. She was always ready to give the reason for the hope that she had of life beyond this vale of tears. It was her delight to be with her brethren and sisters, and to converse on things pertaining to Christ and his kingdom. She had many friends, but not an enemy known to her in the world. To know her was to love and esteem her. After she moved to Missouri she was deprived of hearing any preaching for thirteen years, until last fall, when she visited her son in Kansas, and heard the writer try to proclaim Jesus Christ, the way, which seemed to build up and strengthen her. She said, "Brother Hall, your sermon built me up. O how it fed me." She clasped her hands in ecstatic joy, and I thought I could see a heavenly expression on her countenance. Truly we shall miss her; but we believe that she is now at rest, yes, sweet rest, where the wicked cease from troubling, and the weary are at rest.

Her disease was pneumonia. She was sick only eight days, when she fell asleep without a struggle. She was buried in the Midway cemetery, at the Locust Grove Church, Boone Co., Mo. She leaves an aged husband, ten children and twenty grandchildren, besides a host of friends, to mourn their loss, which is her eternal gain. May the God of all grace prepare us all for the trying hour of death, and save us to praise him in that kingdom where parting is no more.

ASSOCIATIONAL.

THE Delaware River Old School Baptist Association is appointed to be held with the church at Southampton, Bucks Co., Pa., to begin on Wednesday before the first Sunday in June (3d), 1891, and continue three days.

Those coming to the Delaware River Association from the east will take train on the Bound Brook route, leaving New York, foot of Liberty St., at 2 p. m., on Tuesday, June 2d, changing for a way train at Bound Brook, and reaching Bethayres at 4:58, where they will be met.

Those coming from other directions will take the train leaving Third and Berks Sts. station, Philadelphia, at 4 p. m., on same day, and come to Southampton, where they will be met. The train leaving Philadelphia at 9:04 Wednesday morning will also be met.

A cordial invitation is extended to all brethren and friends.

SILAS H. DURAND.

THE Warwick Old School Baptist Association is appointed to be held with the church at Warwick, Orange Co., N. Y., to begin on Wednesday before the second Sunday in June (10th), 1891, and continue three days.

Those coming by railroad from the east or west will take N. Y., L. E. & W. trains to Greycourt, and thence (ten miles) to Warwick, by the Lehigh & Hudson River R. R. Tickets for Warwick are sold at all stations on the Erie R. R. Those coming by the Erie and Lehigh & Hudson River Railroads will be returned to the stations from which they came for one-third fare, on presenting a certificate of their having paid full fare coming; which certificates will be furnished by the Clerk of the association.

Passengers can leave Port Jervis or Middletown by the early train on Wednesday morning and arrive in time for preaching; but it is desirable that as many as can do so should come by Tuesday afternoon trains. All friends will be cordially welcomed.

WM. L. BEEBE, Pastor.

THE Chemung Old School Baptist Association is appointed to be held with the Abington Church, at Justus, Lackawanna Co., Pa., to begin on Wednesday before the third Sunday in June (17th), 1891, and continue three days.

THE Siloam Association of Regular Predestinarian Baptists will be held with the Fellowship Church, at Buel's Chapel, near Mill Creek, in Polk Co., Oregon, beginning on Friday before the fourth Sunday in June, 1891.

Brethren and sisters coming by rail from Portland or elsewhere will be met with teams for conveyance at McCoy, Polk Co., on Thursday evening. We extend an invitation to all of our faith to meet with us.

V. J. TURNIDGE.

THE Turkey River Association was appointed at the last session to be held at Oelwein, Fayette Co., Iowa, on Saturday before the first Sunday in June, 1891; but through the all-wise providence of God some of the members there have been removed by death, and some are lying on beds of sickness and pain caused by railroad accidents. Therefore, after consultation with the churches composing the association, we came to the conclusion not to hold a session this year, and submit ourselves for the future to the will of our God. This resolution was passed at our yesterday's regular meeting.

PAUL SOHNER.

YEARLY MEETINGS.

A YEARLY meeting is appointed to be held with the Clovesville Old School Baptist Church (of the Lexington Association), near Griffin's Corners, Delaware Co., N. Y., on the first Saturday and Sunday in June (6th and 7th), 1891.

A cordial invitation is extended to all lovers of the truth as it is in Jesus, and especially to ministers of the gospel of our faith and order. Those coming by rail will be met at Griffin's Corners station, on the Ulster & Delaware R. R.

O. F. BALLARD, Clerk.

THREE DAYS MEETINGS.

THE Old Regular Predestinarian Baptist Church at Little Flock, Cass Co., Mo., six miles south of Pleasant Hill and four miles north of Harrisonville, will hold a three days meeting, beginning at four o'clock on Friday evening, May 29th, and continuing until four o'clock Sunday evening, May 31st. Elders R. M. Ogle and John Barnes, of Henry Co., Mo., have promised to be with us. Brethren who love the truth are cordially invited to attend this meeting. We are Predestinarians at Little Flock. There are not very many of us, but we are a unit in the doctrine of salvation by grace alone.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Our subscribers will confer a favor on us, and enable us to keep their accounts with more accuracy, by observing the following instructions:

HOW TO REMIT.

The most convenient and safest way of sending remittances is by post-office money orders, which should invariably be made payable to G. BEEBE'S SONS, at Middletown, N. Y., and not at the New York City Post-office, and always inclose the order in the same envelope with the letter containing the information how it is to be applied. When it is not convenient to procure a post-office order, the money can be inclosed in the letter, and registered, and it may then be considered safe. We request that bank checks on distant banks be not sent, as they are subject to quite heavy discounts.

LOOK TO YOUR DATES.

Opposite the name on the slip pasted either on the margin of your paper or on the wrapper will be observed a date, this date denotes the time at which your subscription expires, and when a remittance is made to renew the subscription the date should be watched to see that it is forwarded to such time as the remittance pays to, and if neglected, by informing us, it will be corrected. By this method each subscriber has his own account, and can see that the proper credits are given for his remittances.

RULES FOR ORDERING.

In making remittances be sure to give the post-office and state of each name to be credited. In ordering an address changed always give the post-office and state at which the paper has been formerly received, as well as the post-office and state to which it is to be changed. When ordering the discontinuance of a subscription, give us the post-office and state as well as the name to be discontinued.

THE EVERLASTING TASK FOR ARMINIANS.

CONFLICT AND DELIVERANCE.

WHEN with merciless fury the enemy presses,
Assisted by foes from within,
We mourn and lament 'neath our grievous distresses,
And mountains of indwelling sin.
'Tis hard when the tempest so fiercely is raging,
And billows almost overwhelm,
To feel that the Master our frail bark is guiding,
That he alone governs the helm.
Cast down and just ready all hope to relinquish,
Like Peter, beginning to sink,
We cry from the depths, "Lord, save us; we perish!"
For faith knows he stands by the brink.
He speaks, and the waves and the billows obeying, Recede at his word, "Peace; be still!"
The tempest is hushed, all our mourning and sighing
Subside, and we rest in his will.
But alas! for the flesh soon again we are doubting,
For the Canaanite dwells in the land;
Within there are fears and without there is fighting,
Till we fear we shall fall by his hand.
But again o'er the tempest we hear his voice saying,
O faithless ones, why do ye doubt?
My sheep are a gift of my Father's own giving;
None can from my hand pluck them out.
ABBIE G. CLARK.

CORRESPONDENCE.

WOODSONVILLE, Ky., May 9, 1891.

DEAR BRETHREN:—I do not write at this time that my name may appear in the SIGNS. I fully realize my inability to write to edify, as others who write for the SIGNS; but this morning there are some portions of Scripture on my mind which I think are worthy of all consideration. Forty-seven years have I been a student of the Holy Scriptures. Many of those years I have spent in riding hobbies, and trying to get knowledge that I might fight and war and triumph over others for party purposes, being caught and carried into most of the doctrines that have divided our people. I think I have felt to realize in myself to answer as the apostle does when he asks, "From whence come wars and fightings among you? come they not hence, even of your lusts that war in your members?"—James iv. 1. There are muddy waters, fouled by the feet of unfaithful teachers, feeding the carnal mind, and not the flock.—Ezekiel xxxiv. There is no comfort of the Scriptures nor growth in grace in such waters. Add these forty-seven years to the thirty years that I rolled sin under my tongue as a sweet morsel, the vilest of the vile, a leader in the kingdom of Satan; but when the gracious Lord found me, or I found him, it was when I was not looking nor asking for him. The law entered that sin might abound. O what a fountain of filth and iniquity was revealed in my poor heart then! and what sorrow! Tongue cannot express it. I went immediately to work; and when the whole work and power of man was exhausted, then a complete surrender was made. Then a calm, and (as I trust) the peace of Jesus was given, and the love of God was shed abroad in my heart by the Holy Ghost, with joy unspeakable and full of glory. At this time all nature seemed to praise God. Then for a short space I thought I would never sin again, that Satan's strongholds were broken up, and that Pharaoh and his mighty host were drowned in the Red Sea, never to be seen any more forever. I felt as free as the children of Israel when they entered the land of Canaan, the glorious land that God promised to Abraham and his seed with its inhabitants.—Gen. xv. 18-21. If we be Christ's, then are we Abraham's seed, and heirs of the inheritance. If the children of Israel were to cultivate that land and subject the inhabitants, and that land be a figure of the church, and the inhabitants represent the passions of the flesh, O what a failure have I made in subjecting those passions to the glory of God! Thus I have been an unprofitable servant all these years, not worthy to partake of the precious milk and honey of that antitypical, glorious land. Through my disobedience I have fully realized that "it is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God," and to fear (not servile) that God, and to have knowledge of his righteous judgments against sin; and also that "all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose." When I get a glimpse of the wisdom and knowledge contained in the holy Scriptures I feel as a wayside hearer, and know nothing as I ought to know; yet the gracious Lord has been wonderfully merciful to me, undeserving as I am. I have not been exercised much about the absolute predestination of all things until recently. It has not been in former times a favorite theme with me. It has seemed to be too strong a doctrine for such weaklings as myself; yet I have not felt any disposition to fight or nonfellowship the brethren who held the doctrine. The doctrine ought not to divide the children of God; and when it does it is only a manifestation that some one is walking in the flesh. "And God saw everything that he had made, and, behold, it was very good."—Gen. i. 31. Then man was very good; and no evil can be in that which is very good. I suppose, as lust is evil, there was no lust in Adam and Eve in their primeval state, and therefore no progeny could proceed from them, and they in that condition could not multiply as commanded; but if any one should dispute that fact, and hold that the family of man could have proceeded from them in that pure state, then their offspring must be pure like themselves, as a pure fountain cannot send forth an impure stream. In that case God's purpose before the world began to send his Son into the world to save his people from their sins would have been vain. Now, as God is a God of purpose, and will do all his pleasure, being omnipotent, he declared all things from the beginning to the end, saying, "My counsel shall stand;" and his counsel in eternity was that he would send his Son into this world, and by his determinate counsel and foreknowledge he should be delivered into the wicked hands of a self-righteous people, that they might crucify him, that he might die for the sins of his people, and by the mighty power of the Spirit of God rise again from the dead for their justification. That this might take place it was necessary that man should violate the law, and the sentence of death be passed upon him; that by the one man sin should enter into this world, that death should pass upon all men, for that all have sinned.—Rom. v. 12. Then it was not only necessary, but according to the purpose of God before Adam was created, that the serpent should beguile our mother Eve, that she might lust after the fruit of the forbidden tree, for which she had no desire previously. "When lust hath conceived it bringeth forth sin; and sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death." So when Eve partook of that fruit, and gave it to Adam, death passed upon Adam and all his posterity. It is evident that the serpent did beguile Eve of his own wicked desire, but was ignorant of the consequences; for in so doing he was carrying out the purpose of the omnipresent God, and which was to end in Satan's destruction, the salvation of God's chosen people, and the glory of God. So it seems in reality that the wicked are God's sword; and that Behemoth is the chief of God's ways. "Look now toward heaven, and tell the stars, if thou be able to number them: and he said unto him, So shall thy seed be."—Gen. xv. 5. Esau threatens to kill his brother Jacob, and therefore Isaac sends Jacob down to Padan-aram to escape the vengeance of Esau; and in that country Jacob obtained his four wives, from whom sprang the twelve tribes of Israel, the seed of Abraham. "And he said unto Abram, Know of a surety that thy seed shall be a stranger in a land that is not theirs, and shall serve them; and they shall afflict thee four hundred years."—Gen. xv. 13. Joseph dreamed two dreams, and told them to his two brothers; and they hated him. Jacob sends the ten brothers to pasture his cattle in a distant land, and after awhile he sends Joseph to know how they were; and when they saw Joseph coming they plotted to kill him, and threw him into a pit. Afterward some Midianites come along, and they sell Joseph to the Midianites for twenty pieces of silver. Then the Midianites sold him into Egypt, unto Potiphar, an officer of Pharaoh, and captain of the guard.—Genesis xxxvii. The Lord prospered Joseph, and his master made him ruler over all that he had; but the wickedness of his master's wife caused his master to throw him into prison, where the Lord gave him favor, and he interpreted the dreams of two of the prisoners. When Pharaoh dreamed, and found that the magicians could not interpret his dream, he sent for Joseph, who interpreted his dream; and Pharaoh made Joseph ruler over all Egypt. Joseph sends and brings Jacob and all his family into Egypt. After awhile Joseph died, and a wicked king arose and oppressed the children of Israel, and they cried unto God; and God sent a deliverer, and delivered them out of bondage, and brought them into the land of Canaan, the promised land. Thus God's promise to Abraham was fulfilled through the willful wickedness of Joseph's ten brethren; and the wickedness of his master's wife; and yet Joseph said to his brethren, "Now therefore be not grieved, nor angry with yourselves, that ye sold me hither: for God did send me before you to preserve life." "But when the husbandmen saw the son, they said among themselves, This is the heir; come, let us kill him, and let us seize on his inheritance."—Matt. xxi. 38. "And [he] said unto them, What will ye give me, and I will deliver him unto you? And they covenanted with him for thirty pieces of silver."—Matt. xxvi. 15. "Then came they, and laid hands on Jesus, and took him."—Matt. xxvi. 50. "And they that had laid hold on Jesus led him away to Caiaphas the high priest, where the scribes and the elders were assembled."—Matt. xxvi. 57. "Then did they spit in his face, and buffeted him; and others smote him with the palms of their hands." "When the morning was come, all the chief priests and elders of the people took counsel against Jesus to put him to death: and when they had bound him, they led him away, and delivered him to Pontius Pilate the governor." "Pilate saith unto them, What shall I do then with Jesus which is called Christ? They all say unto him, Let him be crucified." "Then answered all the people, and said, His blood be on us, and on our children." "And after that they had mocked him, they took the robe off from him, and put his own raiment on him, and led him away to crucify him."—Matt. xxvii. "And when they were come to the place, which is called Calvary, there they crucified him, and the malefactors, one on the right hand, and the other on the left. Then said Jesus, Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do."—Luke xxiii. 33, 34. Truly they did not know that they were doing that which was written in the prophets that they should do, because they hated God and truth. They did it, though ignorantly; yet it was the purpose of God, as it is said, "Him, being delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God, ye have taken, and by wicked hands have crucified and slain." They did not know that by crucifying the Lord the way was open for the Judge to sit upon the throne, who would cast the devil and his angels into the lake of fire and brimstone, that burns with unquenchable fire forever. When Stephen was stoned to death, at that time there was a great persecution against the church which was at Jerusalem; and they were all scattered abroad throughout the regions of Judah and Samaria, except the apostles. Philip preached the gospel in Samaria, and there was great joy in that city, and many were added to the Lord. "Now they which were scattered abroad upon the persecution that arose about Stephen traveled as far as Phenice, and Cyprus, and Antioch." "And some of them were men of Cyprus and Cyrene, which, when they were come to Antioch, spake unto the Grecians, preaching the Lord Jesus. And the hand of the Lord was with them: and a great number believed, and turned unto the Lord."—Acts xi. 19-21. So the wicked rage of the Jews, prompted by Satan, drove the servants of God to carry out the purpose of God in the salvation of Samaritans and Gentiles. "When Israel was a child, then I loved him, and called my son out of Egypt."—Hosea xi. 1. When the child Jesus was forty days old they brought him to Jerusalem, to present him to the Lord, "and to offer a sacrifice according to that which is said in the law of the Lord, A pair of turtle-doves, or two young pigeons."—Luke ii. 24. When they had performed all things according to the law of the Lord they returned into Galilee, to their own city, Nazareth. Herod being ignorant of this fact, though the child Jesus had been publicly exhibited in the temple, directed the wise men of the east to go to Bethlehem; and because the wise men did not return and tell him where the child Jesus was he slew all the children in Bethlehem, and in all the coast thereof, from two years old and under. But the Lord had sent an angel, saying, "Take the young child and his mother, and flee into Egypt;" "for Herod will seek the young child to destroy him." He was there until the death of Herod, that it might be fulfilled which was spoken of the Lord by the prophet, saying, "Out of Egypt have I called my son."—Matt. ii. 15. Paul went up to Jerusalem to carry alms to the poor. The Jews saw him in the temple and arrested him, and were about to kill him; but the chief captain delivered him out of their hands, and threw him into prison. That night the Lord stood by him, and said, "Be of good cheer, Paul; for as thou hast testified of me in Jerusalem, so must thou be a witness also at Rome." When it was day certain of the Jews banded together, and bound themselves under a curse, saying that they would neither eat nor drink till they had killed Paul; and they were more than forty which had made this conspiracy. Then the chief captain, hearing of that oath, sent Paul under a strong guard down to Cesarea; and when Festus came down to Cesarea he sat upon the judgment-seat, and asked Paul if he would go up to Jerusalem and be tried before him there. Then Paul appealed to Caesar, knowing that the forty men would kill him if he were taken back to Jerusalem.

I am not pleased with this communication, but it is the best I can do; for I cannot put on paper what is in my mind, neither can I speak it. I will say that from these Scriptures, and others, my mind conceived the idea that Jehovah rules all things, angels, men and devils, to accomplish his purposes, and none can hinder him. As it has turned out that I do not know it all, you are at liberty to accept or reject anything I write.

Yours in affliction and much imperfection,

A. L. WOODSON.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN IN THE LORD:—Many times since becoming a member of the Primitive Baptist Church I have been impressed with the desire to write some thoughts for the SIGNS; but I have always felt so weak and needy myself that it has kept me from trying to do so. Having been requested by a dear mother in Israel to write, I will try in my feeble, stammering way to comply. If what I may write be considered unprofitable, cast it aside; but if I should say only one word that would comfort some poor, distressed heart I should feel gratified. I have received much comfort and cheer from reading letters from the dear brethren in different parts of the country, so that I have been encouraged.

When a boy I was taught the traditions of my fathers, and to be zealous of the law. Having Lutheran parents, I was sent to Sunday School, and taught to avoid the company of what they called bad boys, and to be a morally good boy. Now this is all well and right in its place, but morality should not be mistaken for godliness; for while morality (the outward forms of it) may proceed from parental fear or restraint, godliness proceeds from a very different source, as God only is the fountain-head of all holiness, purity and goodness. The natural man is full of corruption, lying and deceit; and as is the fountain, so will that be which proceeds therefrom. The natural man (he who has not been born of the Spirit) cannot know the things of the Spirit; and he who is born of the Holy Spirit is not born for some one else, but for himself individually. There is no doubt in my mind but that Dives (the rich man) had more worldly instruction and teaching than Lazarus (the poor man) had; and yet God in his infinite goodness and mercy was pleased to take Lazarus to himself, as he will every one for whom Christ died. The subject about which I am speaking was very definitely and clearly illustrated in the case of Paul. He strived to keep the law, and also was very zealous of the traditions of his fathers; and we cannot doubt, from the account given in the sacred narrative, but that he was as perfectly taught as parents and instructors of this age of the world are able to instruct those over whom they are placed. But Paul was made to know that what the worldly minded people thought was serving God, was nothing short of persecution against Christ. Paul testified, after he had been born of the Holy Spirit, that "to him that worketh is the reward not reckoned of grace, but of debt." So then if we are still under the law we are yet in our sins; but God's people are not under the law, but under grace. The word of truth expressly declares that "where sin abounded, grace did much more abound." Then it is not of him that wills, nor of him that runs, but of God, that showeth mercy. Yet the world would fain overstep the bounds of God's eternal decrees, and make the fruit bear the tree, and the clay have power over the potter; and we verily believe that every child of God will bear testimony that such is not the order of God's house, for in all things God must have the pre-eminence. Not that he is dependent on his creatures, but that his creatures are dependent on him. Jacob wrestling with the angel is an example of this, though he wrestled till the morning. At the touch of the angel upon his thigh he was made ever afterward to lean on a staff. So are God's people made to lean on him for support. Not that by doing so they would exonerate themselves in the flesh, but that "the Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit," "with groanings which cannot be uttered." Paul says, "The law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death." Law means power; and the "Spirit of life" is the gift of God. So then the power of God has made his people free from the power of sin and death by his Spirit, which dwells in their hearts.

The drawings of my mind have led me thus away from the subject on which I intended to speak; so if now the Lord will give me liberty I will tell of some of his dealings with me. When a boy I used to have thoughts about death, and wondered what would become of me when I died. It caused me much uneasiness and distress; but when I saw the majority of those around me belonging to the church it seemed for a time to settle my mind, and for a time to give me security. That feeling of peace of mind would not last very long, until that feeling of security would be gone, when I would feel more anxiety than before. The reason of my feeling of security in seeing so many around me belonging to the church was that I thought all who belonged to the different churches were necessarily christians, and I thought the Lord would not destroy me for the sake of those christians around me; but this prop also was taken away, and I was no longer allowed to look for security in that direction. I then went to the Bible to try to find some hope or comfort. On going to my work I would slip a Testament into my pocket, and when I thought no one saw me I would read in different places, to try to find some passage that would apply to my case; but it all seemed to teach holiness and sinlessness to those who would seek the blessings promised in it. How to become sinless before God, my finite mind could not conceive; for I felt that I was the most sinful creature living, so that I found no relief there. I then thought I would try to keep the commandments. So confident was I in my ability to do so that I would scarcely allow myself to speak, for fear I would say something wrong. I began after a time to feel that I was getting really good, and that I would receive pardon for the good I was doing; but security from that source soon began to fail, and I felt worse than before. It seemed now there was no hope for me. My case seemed to be an outside one. I thought that surely there was no one like me, and that I would be forever banished from the presence of the Lord. O what anguish of soul then filled my heart! Gloom seemed to settle over me, downcast feelings seemed to be my only portion, and I wandered on, not knowing where; for I felt little concern as to what became of me in time, if I was to be banished from the Lord in eternity. After I had been in this state for a long time there came a morning which I thought was the brightest I had ever seen. I was singing and praising God, and the songs of the birds also seemed to be praising him. My gloomy feelings were all gone, and I knew not how my burden was removed; but it was the happiest time I had ever experienced. Some time after this, by request of my parents, I united with the Lutherans; but I never was satisfied. I never seemed at home with them. A number of years after this the Old School Baptists were holding meetings at the Turkey Run Church. I went one night to hear Elders Tusting and Lampton preach, and continued to attend, for I could not stay away. They set forth in their preaching the feelings of my heart much better than I could have done. Elder Lampton came to me one evening after preaching and asked me if I would like to have a home among that people. I told him I would, but felt too unworthy. He stated this to the church, when a vote was taken, which resulted in their unanimously receiving me as a subject for baptism, which took place the next day. My wife also was baptized at the same time.

This scribble has grown far beyond expected proportions. With love to all God's people, I am yours in much weakness,

T. S. SOLT.

BUCKSKIN, Ind., Dec. 27, 1890.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—The time is at hand when it becomes my duty to write you a few lines, in order to let you know what to do with my name, which is on your subscription list. For many years it has been impressed on my mind nearly all the time, when not asleep, to write for the SIGNS OF THE TIMES; but my sense of ignorance has kept me from doing so. I never had any chance to obtain an education. I was left an orphan when eight years old, my father dying; and my mother being very weakly all the time, I had to work in doors and out until I was about grown up. Dear brethren, it is written, "We love God because he first loved us." And I think I love you because you love the truth. Why do I believe you love the truth? Because you so earnestly contend for it. I might just as well try to keep from loving to breathe, as to keep from loving brethren and sisters who so ably defend the truth as do those who write for the SIGNS OF THE TIMES. O brethren, continue to write, that you may feed the church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood. He has proved to his children by his act that he loves them, by sending his Son, in whose mouth was no guile, that he might redeem them from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works. Yes, they are the only people who are qualified to do good works. We hear the apostle saying, "He that doeth righteousness is righteous, even as he [Christ] is righteous." So we see it is necessary for the poor sinner to be made righteous by the blood of our blessed Jesus before he is capable of or qualified to do good works. We hear Jesus also saying, "Either make the tree good, and his fruit good; or else make the tree corrupt, and his fruit corrupt: for the tree is known by his fruit."—Matt. xii. 33.

Dear brethren, I would like to get some new subscribers to the SIGNS, but have failed to get any up to this writing. The most of our Baptists here are afraid they will indorse or believe something that would make God the author of sin; but it seems to me that would be hard to do, because we understand that sin is the violation of the law. Then we might ask, Whose law is God under, that he might transgress the law and become a sinner? It seems to me that God's word is his law, and therefore he is above the law, and all created matter is under law to him. But I am ready and willing to admit that our carnal mind is enmity against God, is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be. God is the author of every good and perfect gift. Let him do what he will, he is just and holy, and does everything for good. The apostle says, "All things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose." Our carnal mind cannot see how the Lord could put a lying spirit in the mouth of Ahab's prophets, that they should entice Ahab.—2 Chron. xviii. 22. Now it seems to me that all our Lord did in putting a lying spirit in the mouth of those prophets was to give the wicked spirit power to go. Therefore it is said the Lord did it. "And the Lord said, Who shall entice Ahab, king of Israel, that he may go up and fall at Ramoth-gilead?" When the Lord wants anything done which our carnal mind says is sin, all he has to do is to give Satan power to do the thing which he purposed in his eternal mind should be done. The carnal mind says it was a terrible crime for Satan to afflict good old Job in the way he did. And so it would have been if we had done it. But the blessed Lord, who works all things for his own glory, and for the good of his people, did it. The old serpent was then, as he is now, strutting around with the sons of God when they met for worship; and the Lord gave him power to afflict Job and to destroy all he had; but it worked for Job's good in the end.

Again, the carnal mind cannot see how Joseph's brethren could lie unto and deceive their poor old father in the way they did, and then Joseph tell them that the Lord sent him into Egypt to be their savior. Nor can the carnal mind understand how the Lord could let "that fox" (Herod) send forth his armies and have the children slain that were two years old and under; yet it had been spoken of by the prophet hundreds of years before. Neither can the carnal mind understand why Eli's sons would not hearken to the voice of their father in their bad conduct, because the Lord would slay them.—1 Samuel ii. But time and space would fail to speak of all the Lord has done which the carnal mind would say is unjust.

Dear brethren, I consider the SIGNS OF THE TIMES the best Primitive Baptist paper now extant in the world, and I hope I shall not hear any of you calling the doctrine for which its editors contend heresy. Brethren, this would be wrong. I think it certainly does contend for the doctrine of God our Savior. I hope I shall not hear any of you talking about declaring nonfellowship for what some call "that dangerous doctrine." How is it dangerous? How can you object to the doctrine? Is it because it gives to our Lord too much power and wisdom? We ought to be very glad to have a God who can never be disappointed. Is it not a lovely theme that we can sing of?

"God moves in a mysterious way
His wonders to perform;
He plants his footsteps in the sea,
And rides upon the storm.

"Deep in unfathomable mines
Of never-failing skill
He treasures up his bright designs,
And works his sovereign will."

I feel like I could fall upon my sinful knees and implore the God of all grace to enable his Zion to live together in peace. I know we all would believe the truth if we could understand it. What is the meaning of the word absolute? Webster says its meaning is, "not limited, complete," &c. Brethren, how dare we limit God's predestination? How do we know what God needs for the salvation of the church? Poor, finite creatures? David says he maketh the wrath of the wicked to praise him, and the remainder of wrath he restrains. Do you not believe he restrains all, only that which he needs? Do you not believe he will have all he needs? I know I would if I had all power. Well, do you believe he will have any more than he needs? I know if I had all power I would not.

Now, dear brethren, it seems to me that no true Primitive Baptist can declare nonfellowship for the doctrine of absolute predestination without declaring nonfellowship for themselves; because I know you will believe it if you can only see it. What I say to you I say to all, Watch.

Brethren Beebe, if you can make anything of this poor scribble, all right; and if not, throw it away. I remain your much afflicted brother in Christ, I hope,

J. R. CRISWELL.

ARLINGTON, TEXAS, April 21, 1891.

DEAR BRETHREN:—We desire to submit a few thoughts to the readers and correspondents of the SIGNS. Brethren, if we have grace in your sight, hear us in your clemency a few words. Our highest aspirations should be for the glory of God, and the peace and welfare of Zion. In all ages of the church there has been a diversity of opinion respecting the mysteries connected with the attributes of God, his workings, &c., among the saints; and doubtless the seeming looseness in the discussions of the great fundamental truth of the Bible and its author has caused rents and untold sorrows. Now, should I make an assertion that would take me half an hour or more to explain, I have lost that much time, which should have been spent in giving out food to the lambs and sheep. It occurs to me that the lambs should first be fed, then the sheep.—John xxi. 15. If we would bear this in mind perhaps the results would be more satisfactory. There is such a thing as a growth in grace taught in the Bible; and it cannot be expected that the weak lambs, tender babes, can masticate and digest strong meat, and hard, crusty bread, especially should it be burned a little. An old sheep would have to be very hungry to relish scorched meats; in fact, the sickly ones could not eat it at all. There is no such thing as a man being born full grown (the full stature of a man); but infants are tiny people. The organism is complete, but not developed; and in order to the development into the strength of proper manhood much care should be taken in supplying the necessary food and raiment. These new-born infants are in a sense committed to the care of pastors and teachers, whose duty it is to feed them on spiritual food as they need it, that they may grow strong, going on from strength to strength until they are grown, in the meantime clothing them with the commands of Jesus. Some children are peevish and fretful, being sickly, and should be nursed very tenderly. Some are boisterous and tricky, and the rod should not be withheld. But they must all have proper food and clothing, and in due time, as they severally need. Then the family is more healthful, and the scenes about the household more delightful. We do not think it beneficial to either lambs or sheep that a brother should apply epithets or ugly names to any of God's children because of disagreements; and when such is published in our papers those who do not know the ins and outs of the case are more or less worried about it, and coldness toward one or the other is the result. Our papers should be mediums of brotherly correspondence, and so long as they are thus conducted by editors and contributors they are doubtless a blessing; but when they become vehicles of ambition, spleen and brain theology they are evidently a curse. The gifts of the church should at all times and on all occasions be concerned about the needs of the flock. Sometimes a very unruly sheep, who seems to feel the strength and dignity of his "butting" proclivities, begins to knock the weaker ones around and over; but about the time he thinks that he is master of the situation he meets with a match, a terrible battle ensues, the flock is disturbed and scattered, and but for the great Shepherd the lambs, weak and sickly, would freeze and starve to death.

Brethren, preachers, editors and contributors, let us look well to the welfare of the flock, and abstain from all appearance of evil, from dark sayings, abstruse questions, vain janglings, and doting about words to no profit, but to the worry of the saints. We do not know it all, neither by searching can we know it. We need not intimate that we are strong and others weak. That will always result in our own hurt, lessening the confidence of the spiritually minded in us. We have enough to bear without increasing the burden by boasted strength in the deep things of God. Any of us may be taught by a little child. Job boasted of his integrity, but was finally forced to repent in dust and ashes, confessing his sin. We are commanded to walk in Jesus as we received him. We as little children (helpless) received him. Then let us try to walk in him in that way. We cannot add one cubit to our stature. God has set the ministry and other gifts in the body as it has pleased him. Let each of us try to abide in our calling, and feed the church which Jesus purchased with his blood, having due regard for one another, and God will bless us. We should not quarrel about things which we do not know; but instead, let us speak that which we do know, and testify to what we have seen and handled of the word of life, avoiding questions which gender strife, and also ugly names and epithets, knowing that we have been in bondage under the elements of the world, but, thank God, are delivered by our precious Redeemer.

Brethren Beebe, this is submitted to your discretion as to its publication. I have, I trust, nothing in view but the honor of our King and the good of his subjects; and as such I submit it in love to all who love our Lord Jesus Christ.

REISTERSTOWN, Md., March 28, 1891.

G. BEEBE'S SONS—DEAR BRETHREN:—I send you the inclosed letter for publication in the SIGNS. It is from one who has suffered much. She is a member of the church at Black Rock, and was baptized there five years ago last month. On account of ill health she has never visited the church since, and has heard preaching but two or three times.

I remain your brother,
F. A. CHICK.

HARNEY, Md., Jan. 18, 1891.

MY DEAR PASTOR:—I am taking you at your word. You said I should write whenever I felt like it, and as a rule I always feel like answering as soon as the letter is received; but on account of my nerves I am often hindered. Don't say you can't find anything to say. Is not a letter from a friend gladly received, if it only says, We are all well? and from a spiritual friend it should be a great pleasure, and is to me. You would only be even with me if you were to write the same things over. Does not David often repeat? But I know you have a great many things to take up your time, and I will try to be satisfied if I do not hear from you often. I hope you have had nothing to prevent you from enjoying the full blessing in assembling to worship the true and living God. The day here has been bright since twelve o'clock. I was glad to hear that sister Lida and her friends had the consolation that her niece died trusting in the precious Savior. It must be very sad for parents to part with a child that is just at the age to enter into their sorrows as well as their joys. But God moves in a mysterious way; and how the sorrow must lighten when they feel that God has only recalled that which he gave, and the parting is only for a time. But how hard it is to be truly thankful for this great blessing. It is a sad but glorious privilege to visit the afflicted, and have strength to comfort them with spiritual food. Yes, and Paul says, "We know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose." I have noticed things in my life which at the time were unpleasant; but if it had been as I had purposed, what I would have had to bear would have been more than unpleasant. Yet with all this the murmuring voice still arises, and will, I fear, while this life remains.

It is now the 26th of the month. I have had too much to bear the past week to write, but am glad I can still write at times. Can I ever say, Most gladly will I rather glory in my infirmities, that the power of Christ may appear? When wishing for things to be different, fear has seized upon me, for that his dear presence might be taken from me, and the light become darkness; and

I have found myself asking for it to be left, if all else is taken; and today, if I know myself, I long for the power of Christ to rest upon me, and to become his humble follower. O won't I be happy when I come out as gold! I once dreamed I had to remain here to consume the dross. I feel to-night as if "the hem of his garment" might be touched, and am ready to say, Might I more and more of his beauty see! Though I must so often sorrow because I put him to open shame, I cannot, I dare not (for then he would be a changeable God), believe he will ever erase my name from the Lamb's book of life; and if not written there, why these joyous moments, something better than earth can give? O! it is such a glorious thought I must write it again, a Redeemer able to save to the uttermost. Wonderful words in the book of life I see; but the dearest one is, Jesus loves even me. Great is the mystery of godliness! But this one thing is plain, when we can say, Once I was blind, but now I see. It certainly is visible that the power of Christ rests upon our dear and afflicted sister Parker. When I come before my heavenly Father to ask for strength for the day and rest for the night, the thought has arisen that it is but presumption on my part to pray for one whose spiritual life is so far above mine; but yet I must do it. Are you not going to have her letter published? I was so glad that our Father put it in your heart to do what you could for her. Brother Chick, what do you think about anointing the sick? I would like to fill my sheet, but my arm hurts me too badly. I know the thought will arise, What a long letter to contain so little! Jesus says, "Feed my lambs;" and when you bear with my weakness is it not fulfilling the command? Love to all. To-night I can say, Your unworthy but trusting sister.

G. D. ENGLAND.

BLANCO, Texas, May 8, 1891.

BRETHREN BEEBE:—As many of your readers have written me encouraging or complimentary letters, requesting me to write oftener for your paper, I deem it nothing amiss (with your approval) to respond to such requests by making some statements of a general character. In the first place it may be thought by some that I seem a little crazy on the subject of the divine sovereignty. True, my mind is much impressed with the glorious character and works of the great and supreme Ruler and Governor of heaven and earth. As I hope my mind has been to some extent released and set at liberty from that state of thralldom or abject servitude in which it was so long involved, I feel it my duty and highest privilege to exalt my Deliverer and great Sovereign to the extent of the feeble abilities with which he has endowed me. As I believe that many of our religious errors arise from improper conceptions of the glorious character of him who inhabits eternity, I deem it of the utmost importance to acquire as correct knowledge of our God as possible, by considering, as directed by his Spirit and word, his glorious and exalted character, so wonderfully displayed in creation, providence, or preservation and salvation; and if a faithful and scriptural exhibition of the perfections of God and the glories of his kingdom honor him, so do they tend to the best interests of his believing children. If my manner or style seems harsh or unsocial, remember that I am not warring against persons, but against their supposed errors. As I do not recollect that I ever delivered a discourse or wrote an article but what upon deliberate thought I detected some errors, either as to force or impropriety of language, so I wish my brethren to feel free to deal with and expose any errors which they may detect in my writings; but let your inferences be fairly drawn from my language upon a Scripture basis, for I do not think it is fair to draw inferences from language of which its import will not admit, at least when such inferences involve the writer in an awkward or absurd dilemma. But of this brethren can judge.

Brethren Beebe, as the Lord has favored his church with a variety and diversity of ministerial gifts for its edification, and as this diversity doubtlessly exists throughout the entire body, so it may be that some brethren, having peculiar gifts, are fed, comforted and edified more with one portion of gospel truth (being adapted to their peculiar case) than with other portions, and others again with other portions of gospel truth to which they are adapted; yet as all those gifts were given for the edification of the body, they coincide and unite when put in exercise to their edification and religious comfort. So it seems that you pursue the proper course in giving to your readers such diversity and variety of religious matter through your columns as is suited to their varied cases and needs; and as some brethren seem to desire that I shall write for your paper I will say that, as I am so isolated and deprived of the privilege of much religious association with brethren, I will try to write as often as opportunity offers. I will say to my brethren who have sent me epistles of love and approval, or in commendation of my writings, that I feel grateful for such manifestations of their kindness and respect; and if I fail to reply privately to their welcome messages, be assured that it is not for want of due respect to the writers nor appreciation of the matter contained in such epistles, but for want of opportunity to answer privately so many letters, as I am a very sorry scribe at best.

Brethren Beebe, as I am anxious that my brethren should hear from me, please insert this at your earliest convenience, and oblige yours,

JAMES WAGNER.

CIRCULAR LETTERS.

The Baltimore Old School Baptist Association, convened with the Ebenezer Baptist Church, in the city of Baltimore, Md., on the 20th, 21st and 22d days of May, 1891, to the churches of which she is composed, sends greeting.

DEAR BRETHREN:—For nearly a century it has been the custom of this association at the time of its annual meetings to send to the churches of which it is composed a letter or epistle of love and fellowship, generally styled a Circular Letter. During that long period many have been the trials and sorrows of the followers of the dear Redeemer in their journeyings and pilgrimage in these low grounds of sin and sorrow. Many have been the times when they have had to endure bitter persecution from the enemies of their dear Lord and Master. Many have been the heart-rending sorrows on account of false brethren within, when, as in the days of the apostles of the dear Lamb of God, many had privily crept in, and had drawn away disciples after them; but far more heavy and heart-rending have been the sorrows and groanings on account of the corruptions of our own sinful nature, which causes the soul to cry out in bitterness, "O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" But, dearly beloved brethren, trials and sorrows are a part of our heritage here. Our blessed Redeemer has told us that in the world we shall have tribulation, but in him we shall have peace; and there alone are found all the peace and joy and comfort which the dear child of grace is enabled to experience while passing through this unfriendly world.

During the long time in which you have been associated together, for the purpose of christian correspondence, for mutual edification, many have been the themes dwelt upon in the letters to the churches. Many texts of holy writ have been taken up and discussed by those who could wield the pen of a ready writer; all of which, we trust, has been done by and through the guidance of the holy Spirit of God, and has been profitable in comforting and instructing the saints, and stirring up their pure minds by way of remembrance. While it is not our purpose at this time to treat upon any one particular portion of the word, by way of comment thereon, yet we know of nothing that would be more for the glory of God and the comfort of his people than to direct your attention to some things that have been written for our instruction by the pen of inspiration, to which, if we strictly adhere, we will not be likely to go astray, nor be led into error by the various views or notions of uninspired writers. We read that "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable," &c. Among the many things that are recorded in holy writ for our instruction and profit is that which relates to the walk and deportment of the saints in this life. Being strangers and pilgrims in an enemy's land, we should always be upon our guard, lest we be led by the promptings of the carnal mind to conform in the slightest degree to anything that would be likely to bring trouble or sorrow to the saints of our God, or in any way bring a reproach upon the cause we have espoused.

Perhaps none of the inspired writers have left more upon record for our comfort and instruction in righteousness than the apostle John. The walk and deportment of his "little children" seems to be one of the grand themes upon which he dwells, both in his epistles and in the "Revelation" which God gave unto him. In his first epistle, after speaking of that Word of life which "was manifested, and we have seen it, and bear witness, and show unto you that eternal life, which was with the Father, and was manifested unto us," he goes on to say, "That which we have seen and heard declare we unto you, that ye also may have fellowship with us: and truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ." Further on he says, "If we say that we have fellowship with him, and walk in darkness, we lie, and do not the truth: but if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin." Further on in this same epistle he speaks of that great love which "the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God." "Beloved," he says, "let us love one another: for love is of God; and every one that loveth is born of God." "Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that he loved us, and sent his Son to be the propitiation for our sins. Beloved, if God so loved us, we ought also to love one another." When this love is in lively exercise in us a brother appears very precious unto us, and we almost forget that hate is in our nature. He seems lovely unto us, as the loved of God, and we can draw near to him in this character, and fold him in our arms, as a token of love and esteem; but when offenses come to mar that brotherly feeling how soon a cloud arises of dislike, perhaps deepening into hatred. The light departs, and we are left in darkness; that is, left to ourselves. In ourselves considered there is no light at all, only as the rays of the Sun of righteousness penetrate our benighted souls; but when that light is withdrawn we are left as it were in midnight darkness and gloom. Then comes coldness, and a fleeing from those duties which were so pleasant to us when we were walking in the light of God's love. Then O how easy it is for us to forsake the assembling of ourselves together; so easy to find fault with our brother; so easy to forget the needs of our pastor and all others, to whom it had formerly been a pleasure to
